The morning of the 5th was cloudy and portended rain, but the bright sun soon dispelled the heavy mist that clung to the mountain’s side, and ere noon the heavens were as clear and bright as a lovely woman’s smile. Early in the forenoon the American ensign was displayed from the governor’s quarters and the Spanish flag from the residence of the Spanish consul nearly opposite. The five companies of Massachusetts volunteers were assembled, all but the guard, with the colors of the regiment presented them by the governor of their state. A little after 9 o’clock they formed and marched out towards Camp Taylor. An American flag borne by a citizen was carried near the regimental color. Colonel Wright and the members of the regimental staff and others preceded the regiment, and on the road received the marching salute. At Camp Taylor all was ready; under the widespread awning in front of General Taylor’s tent were the brave old hero and the members of his staff and the officers attached to the forces stationed at camp. On the right of the awning the soldiers of Major Bragg’s light artillery were drawn up in line, on the left the 2d dragoons, and in front the Massachusetts regiment.

SPEECH OF GEN. CUSHING.

As soon as the latter had formed into line Gen. Cushing made his appearance and Gen. Taylor and his officers all rose. Gen. Cushing then proceeded to address him as follows:

GENERAL: The veteran officers and soldiers whom you have so many times led on to victory and do fame; those yet untried in the field, who ardently long for the day when your voice shall bid them also tread triumphantly in the same noble path of honor and of duty; and others your fellow citizens present, who, though not called to fight the battles of their country, are not the less animated with the same devoted love towards which we feel, have desired on this anniversary of our separate existence as a sovereign people, to present their respectful salutations to you as the official representative here of the power and authority of the United States.

We come to rejoice with you on this day of glorious memories in the prosperity and greatness of our country, and to rekindle in our hearts the sacred fire of patriotism by remembering together the virtues and sacrifices of our wise and brave forefathers, who have transmitted to us the splendid heritage of the land hallowed by their blood, of the institutions they founded, of their own immortal names.

It is indeed a day never forgotten by an American; for, whether in the home of our affections and interests, surrounded by all that is dearest to the human hear, or on the broad expanse of the fathomless ocean, or wondering over some far distant land, on this anniversary, wherever we may be, our thoughts are turned spontaneously to the same pint as truly as the needle to the pole, as devoutly as the Moslem to his holy Mecca.

And well it is for us that it is so, since no warmth of gratitude is intense enough to be commensurate with the debt of thankfulness we owe to our patriot sires—no language of eloquence is powerful enough to express adequately the emotions of pride which our country’s career awakens—no homage of the soul is profound enough to render due adoration to that gracious providence which has continued to guide and to guard the destinies of the Union.

Meanwhile let us be just the memory of our fathers, and just to ourselves in the measure of regard which we bestow on this day.

Men who have but superficially studied the history of the United States are accustomed to speak of this day as the anniversary of our emancipation from bondage, and vague ideas of that vaguest of all things, called liberty, are attached to the very name of our national independence. But the people of the United States were never in a state of bondage. The war of the revolution was not a war for liberty. On the contrary, it was a struggle in arms to determine whether the two great subdivisions of the British race, one inhabiting Europe and the other inhabiting America and both equally free, should continue to constitute a single empire, or whether they should be reconstituted separately into two independent empires. The God of battles decided that we, the American colonies, were as competent for independent self-government as the mother country; and England, with that practical good sense which distinguished her from other nations, manfully acquiesced in the decision which split her power asunder, and gave to us separate dominion in America.

And the mysterious order of Providence seems to have predestined the American to surpass the European subdivision of the original empire, for, of that high minded, bold hearted, and strong hand British race, which, wheresoever it appears, appears but to command, the more numerous part will ever long be found in America; and the British Isles have already reached that fatal term in the history of nations when their native land can no longer feed its sons, while the people of the United States are still expanding with a rapidity and strength of possession which defies calculation, over the rich virgin soils of the New World.
This reflection acquires new force from the circumstances under which we this day meet, a conquering American army, here in the heart of the Mexican republic, in sight of the captured redoubts and heights of Monterey, amid the venerable trees, and by the side of the se living waters of the wood of San Domingo; which, occupied by you, general, and your victorious troops, has acquired a place in history as enduring as poetry ever gave to the fountain of Vaucluse, or eloquence to the grove of Academus.

Yes, millions of men will have assembled to day within the broad limits of the United States, to do honor to the traditions of the revolution, to ponder on the excellent beauty of the federal constitution, to congratulate one another on the happy condition of our country, and to look forward with inquisitive eye into the sublime future of the American republic. They will call to mind the names of the stricken fields of that first war of independence which vindicated our national rights on the land, of that second war of independence which vindicated our national rights on the sea; and of the heroes who illustrated each; but while Bunker Hill, and Saratoga, and Yorktown, and New Orleans will not be forgotten, Palo Alto, Resaca de la Plama, Monterey, Buena Vista, Vera Cruz, and Cerro Gordo will yet more and earth and sky will re-echo with shouts of enthusiasm at the mention of the names of Scott and Taylor, and of the brave men who under their lead have borne the banner of the Union in triumph over the wild plains and through the mountain passes of Mexico.

But we assembled in this grander than all human temples, the outspread sky of the bright firmament of heaven, treading with our own feet the conquered savannas of New Leon, surrounded by that lofty Sierra which rises on either hand as though placed by nature to be the boundary of empires, we, I say, can best appreciate, with the sober but strong conviction of the palpable reality, how vast are the strides which the United States have made in greatness since the day, not yet remote, when we were humble colonies, scattered in a narrow line along the shores of the Atlantic, until now, when we have swarmed across the great central valley of the continent, have struck over to the shores of the Pacific, and, unembarrassed by the burden of a war, which has already given to us the possession of two-thirds of Mexico, are yet able, from the superabundance of our overflowing prosperity, to nourish at will the starving nations of the Old World.

Honor then, to the bold hearts who, on the great day whose anniversary we celebrate, dared to comprehend their country's capabilities, and to proclaim it independent! Honor to the heroes and the sages who have conducted it so gloriously on to our times! Honor to the statesmen whose vigorous hand at this time so ably and successfully administer its government! Honor to the generous minded people of our country who freely send forth their sons to fight her battles in this foreign land! Honor to the brave soldiers who live to enjoy the renown they have so nobly earned in the battle field! Honor, above all, to the gallant men who feel in the hour of their country's triumph, whose blood was the sacrificial incense of victory, and who, though dead, yet live immortal in the affectionate memory of their countrymen!

We trust and believe that our brethren in arms, whom Scott has been leading in triumph from Vera Cruz to Puebla, will celebrate this day in the capital of the Mexican republic, and on the site of the great teocalli of the Aztecs; and, if Mexico shall then continue in the blind obstinacy of her fatal infatuation, and still refuse the proffers of peace which the President of the U. States, with honorable solicitude to terminate the evils of war, has at all times been ready to conclude, then we look to you, sir, in the unbounding confidence of perfect faith in your generalship, your wisdom, your courage, and your fortune, to conduct us in similar triumph along that lofty table land before our eyes, and to complete, on the plains of the Bajio, that which you so gloriously commenced on those of the Rio Grande, namely, the total subjugation of New Spain.

Once more, general, in the name and as the humble instrument of your fellow soldiers and fellow citizens whom you see before you, I tender to you their felicitations on occasion of this auspicious anniversary, with sentiments of admiration for the high achievements which have marked your life, or deep respect for you personally, and for the sincerest aspirations for your future happiness and honor, in whatever else of danger or duty you may hereafter be called to by the providence of an all wise God.

Gen. Taylor, who had listened with great attention to the remarks of Gen. C., and evidently powerfully affected by the mention of his name, briefly but feelingly responded as follows:

"GENERAL: In reply to your eloquent and complimentary allusions to the services of the army under my command, I can only briefly express my thanks and those of the brave men of my command, to whose exertions and gallantry alone our success are due. For myself I can claim no merit beyond that of sharing and encountering danger with them. You have traced up and depicted in most faithful colors the rapid progress of four country from the commencement to its present condition of greatness and prosperity—occupying the front rank in the nations of the world. The existing war may show the world that in great national enterprises and interests we are firm and united; and that the flower of our country, without distinction of party, is always ready to vindicate the national honor on the battle field. Should it be our lot to resume offensive operations on this line, I shall move with every confidence in the gallantry and success of the forces. I have but little doubt that those who have but recently come into the field, and have not been able to participate in active service as yet, will distinguish themselves as greatly as those who have gone before. That thousands of volunteers who have, many of them, been brought up in affluence, have left their pursuits and comfortable homes to encounter the hardships of an active campaign is a sufficient guaranty that the rights and honor of our country will always be maintained."

A general shaking of hands and congratulation here took place for some moments; after which Col. Wright, of the Massachusetts volunteers, by invitation, read the Declaration of Independence. The company then partook of a substantial lunch provided by the hospitable commander, who had a smile and a pleasant word for all, and seemed happy in being able to make others so. He was dressed in undress uniform, and he looked a little more like the brave old hero than he is, and a little less like the plain, unaffected gentleman—very little—than I have yet seen him. At 12 o'clock, while the company were yet at camp, a national salute was fired by Bragg's battery, and before the sound of the last gun had died away, the booming of cannon from the black fort seemed to echo back the salute.

About 3 o'clock Gen. Taylor and staff with an escort of dragoons came into town, and with General Cushing and the officers of the Massachusetts regiment proceeded to Arista's garden, or Arista's house I should say, where a table was spread in the broad corridor, opening into the garden, with its bright green shrubs, its crimson rose bushes covered with fragrant flowers, its well-kept walks, and the gurgling stream that meanders through it. Every one was surprised at the profusion of good things and the variety that was placed upon the table, &c.

When the substantials had been discussed and removed, Gen. Cushing, who presided at the head of the table, with Gen. Taylor on his right, and after some remarks complimentary to the committee of arrangements for the faithful manner in which they had cared for their guests, proceeded to announce the following regular toasts:

The day we celebrate— As dear to us in a strange clime and the midst of war as when welcomed at our peaceful homes.

The president of the United States.

The memory of Washington— Brightening with time, all nations will at last behold and admire its lustre.

The army and the volunteers of the United States

The navy of the United States— With amphibious facility, finding no enemy on the waters, it has constantly sought and successfully encountered him on the land.

The constitution— May it ever be administered in the spirit which controlled its first formation.

The surviving heroes of the revolution— Length of days has been vouchsafed to them that they might behold the marvellous results of their youthful toil—all honor to their venerable names.

Our brethren in arms at the south— They have lighted their paths with a blaze of victories.

Mexico— Blessed with a genial clime and the physical elements of greatness and power, she is a prey to civil strife and bad government: may the influence of wise rulers and fee institutions restore her to her proper rank among the nations of the earth.

The Spirit of '76— It burns as brightly among the mountains of Mexico as of old at Trenton. "Skies, not souls, they change who cross the sea."

The Mexican war— Waged to secure an honorable and a lasting peace, may such be its early consummation.

The illustrious dead— From Palo Alto to Cerro Gordo every field is consecrated by the sacrifice of gallant spirits; a sympathizing country yields spontaneous and grateful homage to their memory.

The American fair— Worthy descendants of the women of the revolution; their hearts and prayers are with those who uphold their country's cause in a foreign land.

These sentiments having been all drank with the strongest testimonials of admiration, volunteer toasts being called for, Lieut. Crowninshield, of the Massachusetts regiment, gave Andrew Jackson- Sacred be his memory. [Drank standing in silence]

Lieut. Fuller, of Massachusetts volunteers, gave-

"Gen. Taylor- We hail him as the next president; may his civil be as brilliant as his military career." [This sentiment was drunk with three times three.]

General Taylor rose and responded to this sentiment:

"Mr. President and Gentlemen- I have never had the vanity to aspire or to look for that elevated situation which has just been alluded to, but if my fellow countrymen think proper to elevate me to so distinguished and honorable a position, I certainly shall do my best to discharge the duties of that responsible position faithfully. But, if any other candidate is preferred by the people as more competent than my self, I need not say that I shall acquiesce most cheerfully in their decision, and shall rejoice that there is one more worthy to represent them in the highest office in their gift."

The general then gave as a toast:

"The state of Massachusetts and the city of Boston- The place where our liberties were cradled; whose sons have borne so conspicuous a part in the establishment and maintenance of the principles of our independence and the constitution, and have gallantly maintained the same by sea and land."

Col. Wright responded; he then gave

"The past and present- Palo Alto, Resaca, Monterey, and Buena Vista, the Bunker Hill, Princeton, and Yorktown of the present century."

By Captain Montgomery, U.S.A.- The orator of the day, scholar, statesman, and soldier- An ornament to his country at home and abroad. We doubt not that his sword will prove as irresistible as his eloquence.

Gen. Cushing responded. In conclusion he offered this sentiment:

"The United States- Baptized in the blood of the revolution, consecrated by the sacrifice of our fathers, rendered glorious by the courage and glory of their sons, may her future prosperity correspond with her present grandeur."

A number of other volunteer toasts were given.

By Capt. Montgomery, A.Q.M.U.S.A.- Henry Clay- He has devoted a life to his country and a son to his country’s glory.

By Capt. Hoyt, a commissary U.S.A. Mass. Reg. Peace- Whenever it comes may it be a permanent one, which shall result in the national prosperity of both the United States and Mexico; a peace which shall bring to the people of Mexico liberty and happiness- to the people of the United States union and all the blessings of a free and and united nation.

By Captain R. A. Arnold, 2d reg. dragoons- The square of the circle- The discovery of perpetual motion, and the "conquered peace."

By Lieut. Sturgis, 2d dragoons.- Henry Clay- He brought to the altar of his country the highest talents that ever adorned it, and sacrificed his son upon the plain of Buena Vista.

You will perceive that this dinner and celebration was got up entirely without distinction of party, and the prominent men of each of the two great political divisions were indiscriminately toasted, and the sentiments met with equal applause; a proof of the good feeling and harmony which prevailed, and that it was not intended to have and did not have any party purpose. [BRR]
The interment of the remains of Col. William R. McKee, Lieut. Col. H. Clay, Capt. Wm. T. Willis, Capt. W. H. Maxey, Adjut. Edward M. Vaughn, Lieut. Joseph Powell, W. W. Bayles, Wm. Thwaits, N. Ramey, Thomas Weigert, Alex. G. Morgan, C. Jones, Henry Carty, T. McH. Dozier, H. Trotter, C.B. Thomson, and W.C. Green, soldiers of Kentucky, who fell at Buena Vista, took place on the 20th ult., in the presence of a concourse of people whose numbers were variously estimated, from fifteen to thirty thousand. The notice given, was so short, that the citizens from distant parts of the state, were not able to attend; several of the companies belonging to the regiments to which the deceased belonged, were not advised of the day fixed for the ceremonies until it had passed. The intense and almost overpowering heat of the weather, prevented many from attending; notwithstanding these things, there came together on that day, the largest concourse of people ever assembled in Kentucky.

But little more than twelve months ago, in obedience to the requisition of the president of the U. States, Kentucky sent to the army near three thousand of her citizen soldiers- the pride and flower of the commonwealth. After moths of toil and privation, the little army to which it was the fortune of a part of them to be attached, met the enemy.- that little army, though fighting against fearful odds, was victorious. The courage, the devotion, and the noble bearing of Kentucky's sons in the dread conflict, has been the theme of many a Poet's song- is and will ever be, the pride and glory of the state. Kentucky's sons there laid the cap stone to the monument of her fame. The page on which the historian shall chronicle the events of that day, will be the brightest in the history of Kentucky.

But rich and luxuriant as were the laurels won at Buena Vista, it was the decree of the God of battles, that they should be closely intertwined with the cypress. Kentucky paid high toll on that memorable day. One fourth of her sons engaged in the battle were left dead upon the plain. The blood of the brave was the price of victory!

The survivors were unwilling that their brave officers and men, who fell on that day, should lie in the land of the enemy. The ashes of the gallant dead, were too dear to the living, to be subjected to the possibility of dishonor at the hands of a rude and semi-barbarous enemy. The regiment when about to return disinterred the ashes of their officers, brought them back to their native soil, to find a resting place in the land, to whose great name their deeds and death had added such undying honor. Several of the bodies of the privates have been brought back by the citizens of the counties to which they belonged. Others are now on the way in custody of trust-worthy messengers. The ashes of all who remain, will, we are sure, be reclaimed by the commonwealth. They were all equally distinguished in the hour of trial; their memories are equally dear to the people. They fell on the same field; met death in a common cause. A common grave should receive their ashes, and a common monument tell the story of their fall!

THE FRANKFORT CEMETERY

The Commonwealth says: "The Frankfort Cemetery Company have conveyed to the state, a beautiful spot near the centre of their wild romantic grounds, as a burying place of the illustrious dead of Kentucky's honored sons, who fell so nobly battling for their country, on the bloody field at Buena Vista!

"The cemetery is situated on a high and commanding eminence, about three hundred feet above the level of the plain on which the capital is built; and overlooking the Kentucky river, which winds around the bade of the bluff, and beautifully encircles the capital of the state. It is forever consecrated and set apart as a place to bury the dead. The remains of Daniel Boon and his wife are interred here, at a point overlooking the deep valley, immediately on the brow of the cliff. What place there more suitable to deposit the remains of those who have so nobly sustained the high name of Kentucky and Kentucky chivalry, than that which contains ashes of the first pioneer of "the dark and bloody land."

Mckee, Clay, Vaughn, Willis, and many of its noble soldiers, were citizens of the same commonwealth. Together, they shed their blood for their country and their chivalry has contributed to the high return of their native state. As Kentuckians they fought; as Kentuckians they met the same glorious death. A [ . . . ] people will express their gratitude, by erecting a monument to their memory. Let them sleep together in the land of their birth, on a spot dedicated for that purpose, that those who may come after us, many know here rest the mighty dead." "Let them rest together in a common grave, and let the monument which marks a resting place, tell the story of their fall!"

From the platform erected for the chaplain and or[ . . . ]of the day, Gen. Leslie Combs, invited the relatives of the dead soldiers, the volunteer officers [ . . . ]late and present war, and officers of the U. army and navy, to come forward and occupy a [ . . . ]on the portico which had been prepared for [ . . . ].

The surviving officers and the company of mourners filled the space. Amid the throng of mourners [ . . . ]present, we observed the form of Henry Clay, venerable and distinguished father, of the late [ . . . ]Col. Clay. Beside him sat the dear little [ . . . ]children of tat gallant soldier- may heaven [ . . . ]watch over them. Around this venerable man and those little orphans, stood the parents, the brothers, and sisters, and friends of the dead, a sad sorrowing company. On the stand we observed Richard M. Johnson- the guest of the McKee [ . . . ] a gallant soldier of the last war.

A prayer by the Rev. J.H. Brown, of Lexington, [ . . . ] of the day.

The orator of the day, John C. Breckenridge, of Lexington, then delivered the following

ADDRESS

We are assembled on a mission of gratitude, to honor the memory of those who evinced the loftiest [ . . . ] by giving their lives for their country. The place of sacrifice was Buena Vista- a name carved on every American heart. While our [ . . . ] country was represented there, to the lot of [ . . . ] fell an uncommon portion, both of glory [illegible...ereavement]. The mortal remains of a part of sons who perished in that battle, lie before us, will be consigned to the grave with every circumstance of honor. Other citizens fell there, whose [ . . . ] lie not beside these, their comrades; but the [ . . . ] is not eternal. The commonwealth will be careful to recover the ashes, as well as to cherish the memory of all her children; not one will be forgotten; to all belong a common grave, and a common [ . . . ].

These solemn obsequies are the offspring of emotion as universal as they are noble; confined to no land, clime, or people. The customs of preserving the remains of the dead, of honoring their memory, and perpetuation their remembrance, exist in every nation. The most savage tribes bear from the [ . . . ] bodies of their slain, and celebrate in rude [ . . . ] their virtues and exploits. In many countries [ . . . ] of the departed, at each return of spring, [ . . . ] flowers over their graves, and thus gave the [ . . . ] of life to the solitude of the tomb. The [ . . . ] is covered with memorials of the dead. The cherished relics of friends- their forms preserved in marble of the sculptor and the colors of the [ . . . ]- the public cemetery- the family graveyard every monument set up to human memory- the [ . . . ] of the great- the simple stone that marks the resting place of the humble and obscure- all, [ . . . ] the depth and extent of this common feeling about nature. In obedience to such sentiments, the remains of our heroes were recovered from the land of an enemy, and restored to the pro [ . . . ] of their country. Amidst these external [ . . . ] of respect and honor, it is proper to express a grateful sense of their courage, their services, their worth. Wherefore, on this occasion, I relate some particulars of their lives and cha[ . . . ], as an act of gratitude to them, and for the [ . . . ] of the living.

WILLIAM R. M'KEE

Born in the county of Garrard, on the 24th day of September, 1808, and at his death was in the [ . . . ] year of his age. He came of patriotic blood. [ . . . ] McKee, his grandfather, was one of the pioneers of Kentucky, and bore a conspicuous part [ . . . ] early battles. His father, the late Samuel McKee, was a distinguished citizen of the state, and [ . . . ] years a representative in congress. In the War of 1812, though still holding that trust, he [ . . . ] his musket as a private soldier, and served in the northwest, declaring that the times required every citizen to do his duty, and show his readiness to serve his country in any capacity.- The subject of this sketch was early imbued with similar sentiments of duty, which afterwards bore their proper fruit. His education was received at West Point, where he graduated with distinction in 1829, and immediately entered the army as lieutenant in a company of the third regiment of artillery. He continued in the service until 1836, when, the claims of his family demanding attention, and the army in time of peace opening no avenue to fortune or distinction, he resigned his commission and removed to Lexington. Here, for ten years, he was prominent station in society, and adorning that station with all the virtues of social life.

When the war was declared, and a requisition for volunteers made on Kentucky, McKee was among the first to offer his services. He volunteered, in his own modest language, "to serve in any capacity in which he could be useful." It was an offering of pure patriotism. The sacrifice was great, for it involved the abandonment of extensive and profitable pursuits, and separation from an affectionate family and devoted friends. It promised no other reward than the gratitude of his countrymen. He never had been in public life; his path led not towards political honors; his feelings were all domestic and social. He esteemed it a privilege to serve his country; and, in addition, a peculiar duty. Having been educated at a military academy of the union, with the highest sense of honor and obligation, he recognised the nation right to his services.

It was not reserved for him to serve in the ranks. With a proper estimate of his merit, the governor appointed him colonel of the second regiment of Kentucky infantry. His connection with his command continued, with reciprocal sentiments of love and confidence, until it was severed by his fall at Buena Vista. It is well known that the regiment possessed the high confidence of the commanding general. Afterwards, transferred to the centre of the field, it fought under the eye of the general.- When the enemy, in the last combined effort to force Gen. Taylors' position, poured his masses from the left and front upon the centre, the second Kentucky infantry formed a part of the handful who met the shock. It was here, while leading his regiment with gallantry above all praise, and contesting the ground against odds of more than four to one, McKee fell; fell in the right line of duty, full as became his name and life. His affectionate comrades bore his body from the field; his grateful country restores it, with the last honors, to is kindred dust.

Of such a man it is difficult for a friend to speak, except in the language of warmest eulogy; he won favorable opinions from all men; all who knew him loved him. His character inspired at the same time respect and affection. Nature had endowed him with a temper of uncommon firmness. His countenance wore an habitual expression of calm intrepidity; it sat on each feature- it spoke in each lineament. This native resolution was tempered by a kind and noble hear- his life was filled with good offices. Perhaps there is not one who knew him, with in whose memory is not recorded some act of his courtesy or kindness. He was prudent, without timidity-amiable, without weakness-firm, without austerity- generous, open and true. He is gone, but his memory remains to testify that he lived not in vain. To his country he left his glorious example, and to his bereaved widow and orphan children, the great inheritance of a spotless name.

HENRY CLAY JR.

On the same field, and at the same time, perished another son of Kentucky, who bore a name honored in this, and other lands- a name, for more than forty years identified with the history of the commonwealth and the union. Henry Clay, jr. was born at Ashland, on the 11th day of April 1811. His childhood received the double benefit of excellent precepts and high examples. His mind began to retain lasting impressions at a period propitious to the formation of elevated and patriotic sentiments.
At that day, the principles and events of the revolution yet engrossed the thoughts and conversation of the people; our nation anniversaries were celebrated with enthusiasm; the youthful heart of the country glowed with high and almost romantic patriotism. At the same time the nation was involved in war. Kentucky embarked with ardor in the cause of her country, and freely she her blood in its defence.
At the family hearth, young C., caught inspiration from the same spirit that infused it s power and temper into the councils of the union- and the flame, then kindled, burned until it was quenched in his own blood. He was educated at West Point. His father was his companion to the academy: and when they were about to separate, taking the boy by the hand, and pointing to the surrounding hills, made memorable by the events of the revolution he said: "Remember, my son, that form these heights the spirits of our revolutionary heroes are the witnesses of you conduct.: Thus nature and education combine to form the high bearing and honorable sentiments that marked his social intercourse. For several years Colonel Clay lived in his native county of Fayette, and represented her, with honor, in the general assembly. When he entered the service of his country he was a citizen of Louisville. At the first call to arms, he tendered his services, and was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the second Kentucky infantry. At Buena Vista, he was with the noble regimen- through all the vicissitudes of the day, he filled his station with distinguished courage, and fell at the moment of victory.*

*Mr. CLAY accedes to a request of his fellow citizens, in the state which has always delighted to honor him, honored as it is, by him,- in the following touching terms:

Ashland, April 12, 1847.

GENTLEMEN: I have received this day your official letter, addressed by you, as the organ of the people of Louisville, to me, in which after adverting to the resolutions adopted by them, at a public meeting, expressing their feelings arising out of "the mournful but glorious intelligence" of the battle of Buena Vista, and of their desire to have brought back to this state the remains of the brave officers and soldiers from Louisville who died on that day in the service of the nation, you conclude by requesting my permission to bring back to his native sate the body of my son, Lieut. Col. Henry Clay, Jr., " to administer the last sacred right of sepulture, and afterwards to erect a monument to commemorate his virtues and perpetuate his deeds."

I yield, gentlemen, readily, the permission requested. Louisville now contains the remains of his beloved wife, and was the place of his own residence at the time of his death. There is, therefore, a peculiar fitness that those who, in life, were united together by the strongest bonds of affection should sleep together in death.

For the kind and friendly interest which the people of Louisville have taken on an occasion so distressing to me, and for the generous sympathy manifested by you in your obliging letter, I tender an expression of my profound gratitude and thanks.

I am, gentlemen, with the highest respect, your friend and obedient servant,

H. CLAY.

The following letter from Mr. Clay to a citizen of Athens, Ga., we find in the Southern Whig:

Ashland, 13th April, 1847.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for your friendly letter of the 5th inst. It comes to me when I am suffering under one of the heaviest afflictions that has ever befallen me, deep as I have drunk out of the cup of domestic sorrow. Could the most tender and touching expressions of sympathy and condolence, which reach me from every quarter, and in every form, assuage my grief, it would be much alleviated. But alas! there are some wounds too deep and too painful to be healed by any other remedy, than one which flows from Him, by whose incomprehensible dispensations they have been
It is some consolation to me to know that my beloved son, if death were to come, preferred meeting it on the field of battle in the services of his country. With friendly recollections of our meeting in Augusta and Charleston, I am truly, your friend and obedient servant,

H.CLAY

The New York Express says: "A gentleman of this city has received a letter from Mr. Clay, which concludes with the following noble allusion to his recent affliction:

"My life has been full of domestic affliction, but this last is one of the severest among them. I derive some consolation from knowing that he died where he would have chosen, and where, if I must lose him, I should have preferred; on the battle field, in the service of his country."

A letter from Mr. Clay, dated Ashland, April 8th, to S. Schenick, of Auburn, N. York, in allusion to the Mexican war, says: "For our common country I do regret the issue of the contest. Had it been otherwise, we should have preserved the protective policy under which we had made such rapid and encouraging advances; the march of improvement in our rivers and harbors would not have been arrested; and, above all, we should have avoided this unnecessary war of aggressions. The brilliant achievements and the glorious laurels acquired during its prosecution, gratifying as they are to our national pride and character, can never was begun, the brave and patriotic lives which have been sacrificed, and the tearful issues which, I tremble in contemplating, may grow out of its termination. But I have not now a heart to dwell on this painful theme. I turn from it with hope and dutiful submission to Him, whose no doubt wise but inscrutable dispensation has permitted this awful calamity to visit our beloved country."

Col. Clay was a man of great nobleness and chivalry. To an impetuous and ardent nature ere united the kindred qualities of honor, generosity and truth. For every object of his affections he felt an enthusiastic devotion. One of these objects was his country; he served her with the alacrity of a devoted heart, and when he died in her defence, there remained not behind a braver man, or a better patriot.

CAPTAIN WILIS.

On that field, also, fell Captain William T. Willis, at the head of a company of infantry from the county of Jessamine. His eulogy may be best expressed in a few words of simple narrative. An eminent lawyer, and past the meridian of life, his position and age might have exempted him from the toils of war; but he sought no exemption. Three noble boys of war were his companions to the field; they shared his perils, followed his brave example, and happily survive to bear their fathers honors and their own. Captain Willis was ill at Monterey when the intelligence came of the Mexicans advance. He rose from his bed, hastened forward to the army, and gallantry commanded his company in the battle, until at the close of the day he fell wit McKee and Clay, in the last terrible onset. This was patriotism indeed- this was an act to reveal the governing motives of conduct. Oft times, inhuman life, some signal achievement performed at is close, reflects its character on the past, and discloses the true temper of the heart. Let all men judge William T. Willis in the light of these truths- that he loved his country and freely died in her cause.

EDWARD M. VAUGHN.

It remains to speak of one whose courage and fate excite mingled emotions of pride and sadness- Edward M. Vaughn, adjutant of the Kentucky cavalry, fell at Buena Vista, at the close of a successful charge. His early death, though crowned with honor, quenched high hopes and ended a bright career. He was young, but had known adversity and borne it well. His soul panted for distinction, and he purposed to achieve it. Solitary, but self relying, his noble resolution depended alone on its own strength. Having mastered the past, he looked with confidence to the future. NO borrowed light shone on his path- n avenue to fame was opened before him by power, patronage or wealth. When the moment of departure came, took by the hand his trusted friends- embraced his venerable parents, far descending in the vale of years- and then all ceremonies of separation were over. The public ear was filled with other names; yet he was followed by true hears that felt he would return with honor, or return not all. When the day of trail came, his gallant spirit responded to the call of duty; his chosen place was in advance, "on the perilous edge of battle," and there he fell, pierced with four and twenty wounds.

Thus perished young Vaughn, in the morning of life- a man gifted with noble and lovely qualities. His heart was full of tenderness and honor. His whole being was instinct with elevated sentiments. Among his associates, he stood conspicuous in the chivalry of his nature. In a great cause he would have dared whatever man might accomplish; for his country he would have encountered certain destruction; with Roman devotion, he would have held the bridge against a host, or leaped in the yawning gulf.
Beside the bodies of the officers lie those of the private soldiers. The spirit of our people is illustrated in the equal tribute paid to the memories of all these patriots. The distinctions of rank exist no longer. Upon them all, death had set the seal of equality. The limit of devotion was reached in a common death for a common country. They owned the same allegiance—shared the same perils—fell on the same field. It is most meet they should together find soldiers’ graves. The names of these brave men were W.W. BAYLES, WM. THWAITE, N. RAMEY, THOMAS WEIGERT, ALEX G. MORGAN, C. JONES, H. CARTY, T. MCH. DOZIER, H. TROTTER, C. B. THOMPSON, and W. T. GREEN; let them be remembered and recorded. Theirs was no reluctant service, but the free gift of citizens who felt that the public honor was their won. Some of them had filled other stations, and were qualified to command where they obeyed. Others were mere boys, transferred from the tenderness of home to the terrors of the battle field, and well they illustrated amidst its trying scenes the native heroism of their blood.

Such were the characters of these soldiers—such their actions. For the rest, theirs was a happy fate; to all concerned belongs congratulation rather than sympathy. Are there here any relatives or friends who mourn for these dead, and in the bitterness of their grief refuse to be comforted? If there be, let them consider the vicissitudes, the temptations, the sorrows of human life—and then rejoice that these were spared to the signal glory of such an end—that they escaped death in every other form, to meet it at a time and in a manner to fix their fame forever, and leave their names a precious legacy to the whole country.

The fate of Powell and Maxey may indeed excite emotions of sadness. It was not their fortune to reach the field, where honors might be won. Struck down by disease, they perished ere they had attained the mark of their honorable ambition, but they died on the path that led to glory, and that path they trod at the call of their country. Therefore, with equal gratitude, let them be interred beside their more fortunate comrades.

Amidst the recollections of that day, much must remain unsaid; yet one character commands the especial tribute or our praise; for who can image that battle to himself, and not pause to view the greatest figure in the scene? The spontaneous feeling of this people is to honor Zachary Taylor, the man, in whom, to the courage of the hero is united the heart of the philanthropist. The blaze of military glory cannot obscure the greater lustre of his moral qualities. In the storm of battle, hold him, stern, immovable, self-poised; but when the carnage is over, and to the excitement of strife succeed the wants and suffering of the soldier, see the noble exhibition of tenderness, compassion, humanity, to friend and foe; these things more adorn him than all the honors of the battle field. Four times has it been his peculiar fate to be lost to the sight, and almost the hopes of his countrymen, and as often has he emerged from apprehended disaster, covered with glory. Hence, his name has sunk into the hearts of the people; it has become a household word with every class, from the summit of society to its lowest foundations. Amidst these great events, how striking does he appear in his grand simplicity, a mode of true greatness, without ostentation. The simple narrative of his deeds will be his eulogy.

For all the dead, the limit of eulogy is to say they were present at Buena Vista, and performed their duty. The contemplation of that great engagement fills the mind with wonder. The resolution to meet the enemy there, presents an example of moral grandeur without a parallel. General Taylor, being at the head of less than five thousand men, learned that the Mexican army was advancing in force of over twenty thousand. Well do we remember the gloomy apprehensions that pervaded the Union, as rumors came thick and fast of the situation of our troops, and the numbers of the foe; the best hope was, that after a toilsome and bloody retreat the exhausted remnant of our army might he panting behind the fortifications of Monterey. Gen’l Taylor resolved to give battle; his purpose taken, he chose his position and calmly awaited the approach of the enemy. The odds were fearful, but nothing was desperate to the hero of Palo Alto, Resaca, and Monterey. On the 22d of February, (an auspicious day to the Americans,) the long lines of the Mexican army were seen advancing up the beautiful vale from which the field derives its name. They came confident, exulting, and already in imagination driving before them the handful of their enemies. At Buena Vista, the American army, drawn up in order of battle, was prepared to receive them. The Mexican chief, paused before that firm array, as doubting the reality of the purpose it indicated. An indecisive skirmish, proved the temper of our troops; and their resolve to greet him with bloody welcome. The valley was narrow, a range of mountains rose on either hand—the action must needs be face to face. The remainder of the far spent day sufficed not for the great struggle! Each army slept in position on the filed, and on the morning of the 23d, the terrible conflict began. With impetuous valor the vast columns of the enemy advanced to the onset; every element of war performed its dreadful part—lance and bayonet did their work—the earth shook beneath the rush of cavalry—the mountains trembled to the roar of artillery. The shock was met by spirits worthy to hold the honor of their country. Upon the right, the left, the centre, the conflict raged with unabated fury. The field was narrow, yet too large for its few defenders. From point to point they rushed with ardor, wherever danger threatened most.

"From rank to rank their volleyed thunder flew," and celerity, constancy and courage atoned for want of numbers: yet the combat deepens; can human valor, strength and skill combined, longer sustain the unequal contest—must not the brave perish, must not our flag go down? not on that field—not before that foe; for see! the freshening breeze throws aside the shroud of battle—behold! That spartan band with unbroken ranks, press back the routed masses of the foe—their standards full [. . .] advancing, and the voice of victory on their lips. Again and again followed the charge, the struggle [. . .] the repulse; as rooted to their position as the eternal hills around them, the diminished, exhausted but unconquered few, from sun to sun, sustained the ceaseless shock, and fought as if conscious that the genius of their country hovered over the scene, and pierced with anxious eyes the cloud of battle, discern the bearing of her children there. [ . . . ] strife is ended- the day is won- the American army is victor of the wondrous field! Honored-thrice honored be the living and the dead. To the memory of the fallen, we render the last honors due to exalted services; to the survivors we pay the willing tribute of admiration and gratitude.

The mind in vain attempts to think of that battle as an event of this generation; it grows on the imagination as some grand dream, or talk of conflict fought in the heroic ages, and transmitted by tradition. Far from their country, their communications cut off, encompassed by overwhelming numbers, and in the presence of a relentless foe- our little army stood like the ten thousand Greeks in the midst of the Persian empire, the history of whose retreat is classic story. That was retreat- this was victory.

In the deeds of her sons, our country possesses precious inheritance of glory. To illustrate the devotion, and her own renown, she may point [ . . . ] Trenton, Saratoga, and Yorktown; to the Thames with its memorable charge- to the vain valor of her sons at the Raisin- to the invaluable victory of New Orleans; these, with many others, form a galaxy whose splendor is not obscured by a comparison with the achievements of any other people. Conspicuous in the cluster, shines the great light of Buena Vista. Here, for the first time in history, a body of [ . . . ] citizen soldiers defeated, on an open field, [ . . . ] times their number of veteran troops. The [ . . . ] pauses before this great achievement, and seeks [ . . . ] cause. The arms were equal- the battle face to face. None of the accidents that sometimes decide the fate of fields, governed the result; it must be referred to the character of the troops- and their character, to the spirit of their government. America contains an army of three millions of men, ever ready for their country's service. Every soldier a citizen, every citizen, if need be, is a soldier. Political and social equality, and the great principal of popular supremacy, foster a spirit of personal independence and honor. Each citizen is a part of the state; his voice is heard in her councils, his influence is felt in all her acts. The general welfare is his won: the public glory is his glory- the public shame, his shame. In battle he raises a freeman arm, and strikes to execute his own will; then, more glorious than all the honors of the field, he converts the sword into the ploughshare, and in peace guides that country whose interests and honor he asserted in war.

Such armies are irresistible- such citizens give prosperity and renown to the republic. Thus the national history is illustrated by the noblest moments. For more than half a century it has presented to the world the spectacle of a happy people- their light a beacon to all who would be free- their path marked by beneficence- their charity [ . . . ] closing nations in its large embrace. It is the [ . . . ] prayer of every patriot, that this great career [ . . . ] not closed in darkness and dishonor, but that our beloved country may fulfil some destiny not unworthy of the past.

To these solemn ceremonies belong a two- [ . . . ] motive. While they honor the dead, and acknowledge the obligations of gratitude, they teach us, the living that his people will preserve the memory of heroic deeds. The nation that rewards the devotion of her sons will never want defenders. [ . . . ] the patriot, no consolation can be more precious than the assurance that he will be remembered by his country. On the bloody field it never his army and at the moment of dissolution soothes his parting spirit.

"Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother when she feels
For the first time her first born's breath;
Come in consumption's ghostly form,
The earthquake shock, the ocean storm,
Come when the heart beats high and warm
With banquet song, and dance, and wine
And thou art terrible.
But to the hero, when his sword
Has won the battle for the free,
Thy voice sounds like a prophet's word,
And in its hollow tones are heard
The thanks of millions yet to be."

We will bury our dead in that beautiful cemetery over looking the river of the state, and in view of the capital. The voice of their great example will [ . . . ] the public servants, and quell the tumults of [ . . . ] . Discord, ere she tears the vitals of the [ . . . ] will pause, rebuke by the silent eloquence of [ . . . ] place. In times of public peril, the ashes of these dead will better serve their country than a thousand bayonets. In the extremity of the commonwealth, though all else should be lost, the worth and patriotism of the state will rally to the great memories that cluster here, as around household gods and draw from them inspiration to redeem [ . . . ].

The field whereon our heroes fell, will remain their monument forever. Another is theirs, erected by the hearts of their countrymen. To mark the consecrated spot where their remains repose, the state will set up a column to their memory, and inscribe on it the narrative of their actions. When, hereafter, Kentuckians, as they muse amidst these memorials of the dead, shall look upon that column, pointing heavenward, and read the inscription on it, and remember the sacred dust beneath it, they will [ . . . ] their hearts in gratitude to Almighty God that he gave the commonwealth such children, and [ . . . ] from the sad but glorious spot, purer men and better citizens.

The Rev. Mr. Brown then addressed the assembly after which General Leslie Combs offered a [ . . . ] and resolutions, recommending to the next legislature of the state, to make a suitable but liberal appropriation for the erection of a monument for the remains of all the officers and soldiers who[ . . . ] be buried in the state grounds of the Frankfort cemetery. The preamble and resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Testimonies of respect were evinced at every [ . . . ] at which the remains of the deceased were [ . . . ] a moment deposited on their route from the dead where they fell. At New Orleans the ceremony was very impressive. The remains were re[ . . . ] at Louisville, Kentucky, on the 21st ultimo, the military companies and citizens, with every demonstration of public esteem and honor. Business was entirely suspended, and all the stores closed along the streets through which the funeral procession moved.

CAPTAIN LINCOLN

The funeral obsequies of this brave young officer, [ . . . ] at Buena Vista, were performed on Thursday. The remains were escorted from Boston to Worcester, the residence of his father, by a large military [ . . . ], and the interment took place in the afternoon. The occasion called out a large concourse of people, and the procession was unusually large. The rich [ . . . ] walnut coffin, covered with a pall over which [ . . . ] American ensign was thrown in graceful fold, [ . . . ] upon the funeral car, which was hung in black, and drawn by four white horses, each covered with a black pall and led by a soldier. The bearers, six in number, were officers of the army, of the same rank as the deceased, and marched three on each side of the car, accompanied by the customary attendants. Upon the coffin were laid two swords, the arms of the deceased- one of them bearing the [ . . . ] which he used at the battle of Resaca de la [ . . . ], Buena Vista, &c.; and the other one which was presented to him a few months since by the citizens of Worcester. Beside them, were his cap, plume, and belt; and upon the breast of the coffin, thin but rich silver plate, with this inscription:

"GEORGE LINCOLN
Capt. 8th reg’t inf’ty U.S.A.
FELL at Buena Vista, Mexico, Feb. 23, 1847
Aged 29 years."

Next came the white charger rode by Captain Lincoln, and from which he fell at Buena Vista. He was led by a corporal of the United States army, and was covered with a black pall decorated with carpet trimmings, and wore the saddle and holsters containing the pistols of the deceased own-

Over the sides of the saddle were suspended long military boots, spurred as if for battle. [New Haven Register. [BRR]

NNR 72.368, August 7, 1847 correction of account of attack on Gen. Franklin Pierce's division

A postscript inserted in our last just before going to press, gave in substance the first version of a telegraphic dispatch from Richmond, Va., of recent affairs in Mexico, which, when the mail arrived, was ascertained to be erroneous in one particular. No battle had taken place between Gen. Pierce's division and the guerrillas prior to the return of that officer to Vera Cruz for reinforcements. The killed and wounded attributed to an affair with his division, were the numbers killed and wounded in the affair between Col. De Russy and the Mexicans, of which an account is inserted in this number. [WFF]

NNR 72.368 August 7, 1847 intense anxiety for news about overtures for peace, rumors relating to mission of Nicholas Phillip Trist

NNR 72.368 Gen. Winfield Scott to march from Puebla to Mexico City, Gen Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna to give him battle

A postscript inserted in our last just before going to press, gave in substance the first version of a telegraphic dispatch from Richmond, Va., of recent affairs in Mexico, which, when the mail arrived, was ascertained to be erroneous in one particular. No battle had taken place between Gen. Pierce's division and the guerrillas prior to the return of that officer to Vera Cruz for reinforcements. The killed and wounded attributed to an affair with his division, were the numbers killed and wounded in the affair between Col. De Russy and the Mexicans, of which an account is inserted in this number.

During the week there has been intense anxiety for further intelligence from the seat of war, and especially as to the turn which the overtures to negotiate for peace would take. It seemed to be conceded that the account of the Mexicans having appointed commissioners to meet Mr. Trist was entitled to little credit. Letters from the city of Mexico, of two days later date than the one on which the
The tale was predicated, make no allusion whatever to such a circumstance.

In this state of anxiety, contradictory rumors followed each other almost every hour. At one time we had it settled to a certainty that a treaty would be made,—a few hours after it was just as certain that our proposals had been rejected. One had it that Santa Anna was only shamming the resistance whilst his real purpose was to finger those three millions. The next report was that he had met, repulsed, and wounded Gen. Scott!

LATEST. The prevailing rains have swelled the rivers of the south so as to interrupt the mails from N. Orleans, in consequence of which, we have but a very disjointed account of the latest intelligence received there on the 30th July, by the U.S. transport steamer Massachusetts, which left Vera Cruz on the 23d. The following is the substance of what has reached us:

No intelligence direct from the city of Mexico, or even from Puebla, traceable to any authentic source, had reached Vera Cruz since the date of our last advices. All was in a state of doubt and suspense.

The Vera Cruz Sol de Anahuac of the 22d, endeavors to account for the delay of negotiations on one hand, and on the other hand admits that rumors were in circulation quite unfavorable to the success of Mr. Trist's mission. Indeed, from letters which had come to hand from Puebla, it was certain that the commission had not been installed, and "consequently that the hopes of peace, which had been founded thereon, had completely vanished."

A letter dated Mexico, July 6th, gives the items of the Trist proposals which were said to have leaked out, and which were so favorable that great rejoicings were taking place at Mexico. The letter admits however that the three commissioners named to meet Mr. Trist, were self appointed. It was probably one of them who wrote the letter.

General Scott was still at Puebla when last heard from. "Indicator," the reliable correspondent of the N. O. Times writes on the 20th, "that all hopes of peace are entirely crushed, and that General Scott was to "march on the capital on the 15th instant. Santa Anna, at the head of a large army, supposed to be 22,000 strong, intended to give him battle at some point between Puebla and Mexico."

NNR 72.368 August 7, 1847 Gen. Pierce and the train from Vera Cruz

Gen. Pierce had again left with his train. During his advance as firing had been heard along the road. He must have met with some obstacles. His force, however, was so overwhelmingly strong—three thousand men with one hundred and fifty wagons Two hundred men, who set forth from Vera Cruz after the train were attacked a short distance from Santa Fe. The Mexicans had a strong force, but were defeated.

NNR 72.368, August 14, 1847 train of wagons and pack mules attacked between Camargo and Monterey

ARMY OF OCCUPATION
By the steamer Ohio, arrived on the 5th at N Orleans from Brazos Santiago, dates from thence to the 31st and from Galveston to the 2d, are received.
The Matamoros Flag, of the 27th ult., states that for more than a week they have had reports there of Gen. Scott having entered Mexico. The Flag appears to credit the report, but on tracing it, it appears to have reached Matamoros from Monterey, and to have arrived at Monterey on the 14th, at which time it is certain that Gen. Scott had not left Puebla.

The commandant at Matamoros, on the 36th July, received a letter from Gen. Hopping, stating that he had information of Gen. Urrea being on this side of the mountains at the head of 4,000 men, and requesting a squadron of dragoons. The Flag says, however, that their colonel chooses to remain here until he has received his complement of horses, in the mean time drilling his men as thoroughly as could be done elsewhere. A company of mounted men from Ohio, recently arrived, was sent up to Gen. Hopping.

Col. Carvajal. We understand from several sources that this worthy was on Friday last at Lavacaria, some twenty-five leagues distant, on the road to Linares, with 250 men, having been joined by Galan, another guerrilla chief. They were said to have detained a large number of mules loaded with corn, soap, sugar, and other produce, destined for this place, besides one hundred cargoes of goods which had been sent from here to Monterey.

Letters from camp Buena Vista to the 18th July; state that Gen. Cushing and suit reached Monterey on the 16th. The Mississippi and North Carolina troops were suffering by diarrheas, &c., average three deaths a day. Of the former, 100 sick, of the latter 150. The Virginia regiment had 150 sick, but no deaths.

NNR 72.368 August 7, 1847 financial pressure on the administration because of expenditures for the war

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, writes on the 5th August- "The administration have, I am certain, very strong reasons for wishing a speedy peace with Mexico. The war cannot be vigorously prosecuted, much longer, without a large addition to the means of the revenue. The expenditures on account of the army alone, for the last quarter, ending 30th June, were sixteen millions. The resource of the loans has been nearly exhausted. Active and extensive preparations for the continuance of the war are, at this moment, in progress. The eighteen million, treasury note loan, will be entirely exhausted during the present, or the next month. The war expenditures cannot be met by any estimated revenue that will accrue after the first of October next. This is a dark and gloomy side of the prospect. Peace is the more desirable on account of the embarrassments which a continuance of the war must bring upon the treasury. That the administration wish it, is to say that they wish well to themselves, and their individual and future popularity." [BRR]

NNR 72.369 August 7, 1847 tariff receipts at Tampico

THE MEXICAN TARIFF. A correspondent of the New Orleans Delta, writing from Tampico, says: "About seventy thousand dollars have been collected at this ort since the first of May. With a few modifications it will be a source of much benefit to our government."

We confess this statement disappoints us. Tampico has been the second port in Mexico, and lately has outstripped Vera Cruz itself. If, therefore, in two months and a half only $70,000 have been received there in duties, the annual receipt will not reach $350,000. Put Vera Cruz at as much more or even twice as much more, and the receipts at both ports will only reach $1,050,000. Yet the government has estimated that $15,000,000 can be derived from the tariff!

A correspondent of the N.O. Times writing from Vera Cruz, says on this same topic: "Five millions might have been secured by the establishment of a common-sense rate of duties, and reasonable facilities of payment and trade; but I can assure you, that under those adopted, not one million, including all dues received, and all bonded, will be realized within one year from the date of opening the ports.

The Times is a Whig paper, the Delta is a neutral one, with Democratic sympathies. When, therefore, journals of such opposite political sentiments corroborate each other on a matter of fact, their statements must be taken as correct. We fear that our own government has sadly deceived itself in relation to the [ . . . ] of this tariff as a source of revenue. [N.O. Bulletin [BRR]
GOVERNMENT FINANCES.

From the New York Courier and Enquirer.

The Banker’s Magazine for this month opens with a remarkable article on the National Finances, and the public revenues and public debt of 1847- of which we propose to offer some analysis to our readers.

Before doing so however, we must reiterate our testimony to the general value and excellence of this periodical,-which now amounts to a valuable volume.

The publication commenced in Baltimore a year ago last July, and the numbers are now gathered in handsome volume, of which the value is enhanced by a well digested general index.

To return to the number now before us for the present month of August.

The first article sets out with furnishing a condensed summary from official sources of the commerce of the Port of New York for seven months of the present and of the past year- as follows:

The average rate of duty under the new tariff is 48 per cent; under the old it was 24 per cent.

The following result appears from the above tables that with an increase of dutiable goods in seven months of 1847- of $7,036,587-the increase in duties was only $218,325.

The discouraging fact here is, that with such a very large addition to our debt to Europe, by the importation of such an excess over ordinary importations of foreign fabrics, we add so little comparatively to our revenue.
At the rate apparent from the above tables, an addition of fifteen millions of dollars of dutiable goods imported, has not produced an addition of half a million to the revenue.

This seems a startling statement, but the authority is said to be derived from official sources.

Now the difficulty in such a state of things is that the moment the temporary and accidental demand for breadstuffs for Europe is removed— as in a very considerable degree it will be; by the coming harvest— the mode of paying for their excessive imports—can only be by the re-exportation of that coin which the recent extent of our shipment of breadstuffs to Europe, has brought to our shores.

But a drain upon our banks for coin, couple with the operation of the sub treasury now in full force, and which, so long as the exchanges rather favor the importation than the exportation of coin, is comparatively inoperative—would then paralyse and derange all commerce and all the banks.

For these latter are now much expanded— secure in the state of the foreign exchanges.

A sudden revulsion would take them unawares.

The amount of debt actually owing to the United States is also brought into view in this paper, and is thus stated:

Abstract of the public debt of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1847. Showing first, the the amount of loans, and second, the amount of treasury notes issued and outstanding:

Total public debt existing July 1, 1847 $39,122,410.00

With such a debt existing among us; with a continued drain of coin at this period to Mexico; with a war that has already consumed upwards of thirty millions, and may call for thirty millions more; with a tariff which requires the importation of one hundred millions of goods to produce the same revenue which seventy-two millions produced in 1845-6; with the prospect of an abundant harvest in Europe, and the consequent decline in price of grain; with these facts and indications before us, prudence would dictate the husbanding of our resources and renewed caution in our importance from abroad. [BRR]

Lieut. Col. Fremont had been arrested for disobedience of orders by Gen. Kearny, and had been ordered home to the United States to take his trial before a court martial. This difficulty grew out of the feeling and contradictory movements of General Kearny and Commodore Stockton, and the question of authority which existed between them. It was announced some days ago by Colonel Russell, who came with dispatches that General Kearny was about to arrest Colonel Fremont, and have him hung as a rebel. No body, of course, believed the latter part of the statement; but the arrest of Fremont proves that quarrel between Gen. Kearny and Com. Stockton was more serious than was at first apprehended.

NNR 72.370 August 14, 1847 American fleet off Lower California

The American fleet was off Lower California engaged against Mazatlan, Acapulco, and other towns in that quarter. The troops had all been ordered to concentrate in the same direction. There is no detail given of contemplated movements, but it is doubtless to enforce the blockade proclaimed by Com. Biddle.

General Kearny was about to leave California, and expected to reach the states in the month of September.

The affairs of California generally appear to be in a very unsettled condition.

Messrs. Shaw and Thompson learned from Brannon additional details of the sufferings experienced by the parties of emigrants which failed to reach California before the last winter came upon them. They add to the horrors of the previous accounts; seventy-five perished from cold by exposure to snow and from starvation! The survivors were reduced to the dreadful alternative of subsisting upon the dead bodies of their companions!

The whole Reed family, in connection with that of Donnor, reached the sutler's settlement in safety, after enduring incredible sufferings.

Com. Drake of the British ship Modeste, is on his way to the United States, overland, with small party. He will probably be attacked by the Pawnees. [TNW]

TWO MONTHS LATER FROM OREGON AND CALIFORNIA

The Philadelphia Ledger of the 12th through the medium of the telegraph at Zanesville, Ohio, received and published the following:

Messrs. Shaw and Bolden arrived at St. Louis, on Thursday last, (the 5th) direct from Oregon, having left the frontier settlement on the 5th of May, and made the trip to ST. Joseph's in 83 days.

The party met but little difficulty on the route. The various parties of emigrants to Oregon and California were making rapid progress. Davidson and his company, were met at the Big Sandy, and two other companies at Green River.

The Mormons with their immense train of wagons were met near the Forks of Platte river on their rout to California, and their rulers, the "Twelve Apostles," as they are called, were met at Fort Bridges. It was understood that the Mormons would not proceed this season further than Salt Lake.

At Fort Hall, Messrs. Shaw and Thompson met Samuel Brannon, and from him they obtained news from California down to the 25th May.

Lieut. Col. Fremont had been arrested for disobedience of orders by Gen. Kearny, and had been ordered home to the United States to take his trial before a court martial. This difficulty grew out of the ill feeling and contradictory movements of General Kearny and Commodore Stockton, and they question of authority which existed between them. NAVAL JOURNAL.

The U.S. ship Albany, Capt. Breese, reached Hampton Roads on the 6th from Havana, where she [ . . . ] on the 26th ult, in 16 days from Anton Lizar[ . . . ]

The Albany has been actively employed since [ . . . ] New York on the 28th November last, on its first cruise, having partaken in most of the [ . . . ] enterprizes since that period on the Gulf coast.

The Albany brings home the remains of Midshipman Shubrick, who fell at the Navy Battery, while [ . . . ] doing his duty.

Captain Mayo, U.S.N. who is a passenger in the [ . . . ], will be greeted with enthusiasm by the cities of his native state. His bearing in the Gulf [ . . . ] the admiration of all.

Commodore G. W. Storer, will go out in the U. [ . . . ] frigate Brandywine (his flag-ship) as commander of the squadron on the Brazil station. Capt. Thom[ . . . ], who commands the Brandywine, arrived in Norfolk some days since.

Lieut. J.L. Parker, of the navy, died on the 12th on board the steam frigate Mississippi. Lieut. Parker was saved from the Somers, was severely wounded at Tuspan, was at the capture of Tabasco, [ . . . ] had been amongst the foremost in almost every surprise undertaken by the navy. He was noble [ . . . ] and generous, and beloved by all who knew him. The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin says:- "We understand that a meeting of the friends of this gallant deceased officer, will be held in this city shortly, [ . . . ] measures to erect a monument to his memory. He died of epidemic fever, the board of health will [ . . . ] object to his remains being brought hither; were it possible to do so, we could wish that his [ . . . ] might repose in this his native city."

U. S. steamer Col. Yell was totally lost on Aransas [ . . . ] on the 22d ult.- no lives lost.

[ . . . ] hauling the steamer Anson upon the new ways [ . . . ] Brazos, the outer end settled and let the [ . . . ] fall through, leaving her bow on the ways and in the water. Two steamboats had made an unsuccessful attempt to get her off.

The Water Witch. - The new machinery for this [ . . . ] which is destined for use in the Gulf, was completed at the navy yard Washington city, on Saturday last. The boat, having on board a number of [ . . . ] officers under the government, made a trial run on that day, and performed remarkably well. [ . . . ] engine is the cross head engine, with side rods, [ . . . ] at an inclination downwards, thus bringing the engine below the shafts. Cylinder 37 1-2 inch diameter: stroke 6 feet; wheels 17 feet diameter average pressure of steam 18 inches- with Sic[ . . . ] in "cut off," adjustable to any point of stroke. The vessel is 130 feet long; beam 20 feet, and draws[ . . . ] five inches aft, and six feet forward, having to hold 60 tons of coal and 35 of pig iron.

[ . . . ]. C.G. Hunter. A silver pitcher was last being presented to Lieut. Hunter, U.S.N., by a number of citizens of Trenton, of which city he is native. Lieut. H. was received at the ears yesterday noon by a military escort, and in the evening a civic and military, was formed, which to the court house, where the ceremony of presentation took place, the pitcher being presented Beasly Esq., who complimented him. The pitcher bears this inscription:

AROUND THE WAR

Reuben Davis, Esq. has resigned his commission as Colonel of the 2d regiment of Mississippi riflemen, in consequence of impaired health and the pressure of private affairs.

More Volunteers. A requisition has been made on the Governor of Missouri for another battalion of volunteers, to be employed in service on the Plains. The requisition is for three companies of mounted men, one company of infantry and one of artillery.

The Washington Union says:- We understand a large corps of Texas Rangers, headed by Jack Hays, has been ordered to Vera Cruz. They will assist in enabling Gen. Scott to keep open the communication between Vera Cruz and the capital. The General will also have the assistance of the fine corps to be despatched under Col. Hughes; for a similar purpose, if it should be directed on that service by the commanding general.

The Arkansas Regiment:- Eight companies of the Arkansas regiment of cavalry, returning from the war, arrived at New Orleans on the 3d instant.- They number but 233. A new company has been formed out of the regiment for and during the war, consisting of 103 men, rank and file, which is commanded by Capt. Means, formerly Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment.

Eight companies of the new volunteers from Indiana arrived at New Orleans on the 3d instant, on their way to the seat of war. They arrived in separate detachments of four companies each, one commanded by Col. Gormat, and the other by Lieut..Col. Dumont.

The remains of Col. Hardin and Capt. Zabrishie, of the Illinois volunteers, and of Col. Yell and Capt. Porter, of the Arkansas volunteers; all of whom were amongst the slain of Buena Vista, have been conveyed to New Orleans by late arrivals from the Rio Grande, on their way to the places of their former residence.
The N. Orleans Bulletin of the 4th August says: The steamship Galveston, Captain Haviland, left last evening for Tampico and Vera Cruz, having on board $520,000 in specie; for the quartermaster’s subsistence departments. Brevet Col. Miles of U.S. infantry; Capt. J.M. Wells and Lieut. O.D. Wynche, with 85 men of the 12th regiment U. S. infantry; Surgeon Finley and Assistant Surgeon Halstead; Capt. Jordon, U. S. quartermaster’s department; Drs. Summers Halsey, and Mcginnis, destined for hospital service at Vera Cruz, Messrs. H. Guher, N.Y. Lew and A.H. Hays went passengers. Seventy nine teamsters and fifty horses went down in her.

Enlisted Soldiers—Two men, named George Burnett and James Flemming, absconded from the schooner St. Mary's, Captain Black, a few days ago. Warrants were issued against them by Justice McAllister, and put into the hands of officer Graham for service, who found the parties at Fort McHenry, where they had enlisted and had received the United States bounty money. They were arrested and brought before the justice, who ordered the discharge of the men, deciding that they ease was not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and that parties enlisted in the service of the United States could only brought into court on a writ of habeas corpus.

We learn from the Indiana Democrat that Brig. Gen. Lane, having received a reappointment, will leave home in a few days for the seat of war. He will join the division of the army under Gen. Scott.

Capt. Bragg’s battery, to which belongs the honor of having saved the day at Buena Vista, was we understand, discharged, each gun, over two-hundred and fifty times during the battle. We are told by the one whose authority is unquestionable, that when the battery opened upon the Mexican cavalry, as they were making their last and seemingly overwhelming charge, the horsemen were so near that as the ramrods were drawn from the guns for the first fire they struck the enemy’s men and horses. The next discharge stayed the charge, and the next send them to the right about.

Capt. A.R. Heizel, of the army, died at Louisville on the 21st ult. He had arrived there but a few days previously from Vera Cruz, where he discharged the duties of assistant quartermaster.

Capt. Martin Moore, of the 11th U.S. infantry, a native of Pennsylvania, died on the 25th ultimo on board the schooner Velasco, on her passage from Tampico to New Orleans.

Lieut. Moore, of the 12th infantry, died at the hospital at San Francisco on the 17th ultimo.

A letter from Matamoros, announces the death of Sergeant Yates and private Buroughs, both of St. Mary’s county, Md.

Virginia Regiment. The Charleston Free Press learns by a letter from the army, that the Virginia regiment now number some 200 or 200 less than when it was mustered into service.

Colonel Doniphan is a native of Kentucky, but for the last twenty years he has been a citizen of Missouri. As to talented influence he is among the first lawyers of the state, and as a criminal lawyer, he has, perhaps, no equal in the state. His personal appearance is prepossessing and commanding; his stature is about six feet two inches, in weight, about two hundred and ten pounds; he is of the sanguineous, nervous temperament, and is about the meridian of his physical and mental vigor- being about forty-four years of age.

Captain Weightman. This young officer, who commanded the artillery at the battle of Sacramento and who accompanied Colonel Doniphan throughout his long march, has a fact upon which he may be congratulated almost as much as upon his gallantry in battle. An extract of a letter from Capt. Weightman, published in the Richmond Republican, says: "I have, as far as I am at this moment informed, to congratulate my self upon a circumstance peculiar to my company. In a campaign of one year, marching as we have, a distance of 5000 miles, I have not lost a man by sickness or from wounds received in battle. I will go home with my whole company, except the arm of one man, amputated in consequence of a wound received in battle."

Major Henry Bainbridge. The N. York Courier says that a number of the friends of Major Henry Bainbridge of the United States army, have determined to testify their appreciation of his gallantry and soldierly conduct, but presenting him with a sword bearing upon it the names of the hard fought fields of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo: The Courier adds: "We notice that of amount already subscribed, ninety five dollars are from ladies! What a tribute to the good conduct and gallantry of the army! Coming in fact from such a source, the compliment of a sword..."
Lieutenant Emory. Of the topographical engineers, left Washington on the 6th of June, 1846, and returned there about the 1st of May, 1847. During that time he traveled by steam 6,900 miles, by land 3,600, rode on horses and mules 2,500 miles, made 3,000 astronomical observations, laid out and assisted in laying out two forts, and was engaged personally in one skirmish and three pitched battles, with the enemy. It will be recollected that this officer went out as chief topographical engineer of Brig. Gen. Kearny, and was sent home by him as bearer of despatches from California. After crossing the continent, he was appointed Adjutant General to the combined naval and army forces that marched from San Diego to the Puebla de los Angelos, which force fought the battle of the 8th and 9th of January. He was in charge at San Pasqual, and one of the few who were not killed or wounded in that fierce little conflict which opened General Kearny’s road to the naval forces in San Diego. When lieutenant Emory was ordered to this service he was just from a two years’ campaign on the North Eastern Boundary survey. The scientific manner in which he executed his work amid the exposures of the north drew forth the praises of even the British commissioners, and caused him to be warmly recommended for a brevet to the American commissioner; Major Smith, and by Major James D. Graham, the head of the scientific corps of the survey.

The price of a Colonel’s commission. The commission of an officer in the British army has a state value, just as much as so as a pound of butter or a pint of beer. If an officer wished to leave the service, he sells his commission to the one next below him in rank, who, on his resignation, steps into his shoes. We learn from a Dublin paper that “Col. Persse, of the 16th Lanciers, who for 52 years served with some distinction in the Peninsula, America and India has retired from the army. Col. Persse received eleven thousand guineas by the sale of his commission.”

The Maryland Battalion. This fine corps which rendezvoused at Fort McHenry under Lieut. Col. Hughes, have nearly all embarked from thence, for Vera Cruz. The transport ship Alexandra [ . . . ]out of three companies, viz. the mechanical volunteers. Capt. Brown, of Baltimore, and the companies of Captains Henrie and Barry, of Washington. The whole are under the command of Major John Kenly. Three other companies, Capt. [ . . . ] Washington, the Watson Guards, Captain [ . . . ]Twiggs’ Riflemen, Captain Taylor, the detachment under the command of Captain Degges, embarked on board the transport ship Napier, Capt. [ . . . ]. The two vessels carry out about 420 men, a [ . . . ]able bodied set of troops.

The Washington Union says—”We learn that the battalion of volunteers, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hughes, raised mainly from the District of Colombia and state of Maryland, are under orders for immediate transportation to the [ . . . ]seat of war. It is intended that Col. H. shall [ . . . ] the road from Vera Cruz to Jalapa, and to [ . . . ]that important town for the purpose of securing Gen. Scott’s line of operation. With this view, the battalion will be greatly increased. At least one company will be taken from Carlisle, Pennsylvania; another, (if its organization should be speedily completed), from Wilmington, Delaware; besides a battery of field artillery from Baltimore. Other independent companies may, perhaps, be added to [ . . . ] last as they are ready. The addition of a squadron of mounted men would be very desirable—thus [ . . . ]in fact, a corps of what is called in European [ . . . ]"eclaireurs," admirable adapted to a guerrilla [ . . . ] fare; but we understand that there is some practical difficulty apprehended in the transportation of [ . . . ]at this season of the year, for so long a voyage, [ . . . ]may prevent such an organization. As it is, [ . . . ] from a beautiful and, we doubt not, a most [ . . . ] command, well calculated to do good service [ . . . ]the organization of this force, the president has [ . . . ]the beginning, taken a deep and almost paternal interest, and has a disposition to render it as useful as possible: and now shows his continued interest and confidence in the battalion, by assigning to it a distinguished and honored duty.

It is announced that Mr. John T. Hughes accompanied Colonel Domphan in his whole [ . . . ] through Mexico, designs publishing a full and accurate account of the expedition. It will be [ . . . ]by maps and ornamented with various [ . . . ]designs, representing the most important [ . . . ]of the present war. Mr. Hughes was the [ . . . ]of many interesting letters written during the campaign, and will, no doubt, make a very interesting book. [BRR]

REPORT THAT THE CITY OF MEXICO HAS SURRENDERD TO GENERAL SCOTT

By telegraphic despatch from Richmond Va., received on Sunday night last, and by the [ . . . ] subsequently arrived, bringing the New Orleans National, of the 31st ult., all were elated with the idea that General Scott was in possession of the capital of Mexico.

The National alluded to, announced that- [ . . . ] is news in the city from the city of Mexico [ . . . ] as July 17th. It came through by a [ . . . ] courier, who came by the way of Orizaba and [ . . . ]rado to Vera Cruz. General Scott entered [ . . . ] on the 17th of July. He met with no opposition [ . . . ] This way from Puebla until he arrived at [ . . . ] 8 miles from the city. Here a slight skirmish between his advance and the Mexicans, [ . . . ] latter fell back. The civil authorities [ . . . ] out to meet Gen. Scott. Stipulations were [ . . . ] into by which the persons and property of the citizens of Mexico were to be respected, this accomplished, our army marched quietly into the city of Montezumas.

This important news reached here in the Massachusetts, but has been withheld for purpose that we do not understand. The authority upon which we publish it seems to us undoubted. The courier that brought this news could come from the city of Mexico via Orizaba to Vera Cruz in five days if the weather was good, seven under any circumstances. The Massachusetts left Vera Cruz on the 23d. It will be perceived that this allows seven days for the news to reach Vera Cruz by the route we have stated.

We know upon the highest authority that there is a letter now in this city of the 17th of July from the city of Mexico. The gentleman who gave us the information has a letter of the 15th in which is mentioned the preparations of families about leaving from the approach of the Yankees.

Santa Anna and Canalizo had quarreled about the defence of the city. Canalizo did not want the city injured, as there was no hope of successful resistance. He preferred to meet our troops in the plain, and there decide the contest. Santa Anna would not agree to this, so no opposition was made.
The entrance of Gen. Scott in Mexico is a rumor, from the letter of the 15th we know positively of the preparation of the families in the city to move on the approach of Gen. Scott, and of the quarrel between Santa Anna and Canalizo as to the defence of the city, and we know that there is a letter in the city of the 17th from Mexico.

The courier that brought through the letter of the 15th brought news of Gen. Scott's entering the city. We have no doubt of the report.

Other papers from N. Orleans, of the day following, discredited the report, and assigned a number of reasons for doing so.

The Picayune concludes an article by saying: "we learn that a Spanish gentleman now in New Orleans, who arrived on the Massachusetts, saw Gen. Scott in Puebla on the 14th ult. If this be so, there is an end to the whole story at once."

The Delta of the same date copies the extra of the National and adds:

It seems strange that this news should come by the steamer Massachusetts, when arrived here on Thursday last, and that up to this time, those in official correspondence with Gen. Scott should not be apprised of it. Extraordinary, however, as it may appear, we have every reason to believe, from information confidently communicated to ourselves, that is substantially true- that the main fact of Gen. Scott's entrance into the city of Mexico is a fixed [. . . ] A few days and the statement will be either confirmed or authoritatively contradicted, till which time or readers must bide with what patience they [. . .] may.

The La Patria discredits the entire statement, and [ . . ]the last accounts from Puebla were to the [ . . ] and that tat the time General Scott had made [ . . ] preparations for a forward march; yet to reach the city of Mexico on the 17th ult., he must have [ . . ] about the 11th or 12th. Knowing that he had no idea of moving at the at time the Patria [ . . ] the whole account as preposterous and on [ . . ].

The Washington "Union" appeared at first to place but little credit in the report, but subsequently gave a shadow of countenance to it.

The Union of Wednesday says:

"A young lady at the city of Mexico is said to have written to a Mexican in New Orleans, on the 15th ult., that the families were quitting the city in consequence of the advance of the Yankees, and adds postscript on the 17th (by the courier,) that Gen. Scott was then entering the city. This letter was kept back by the Mexican, from a tender regard to the fair authoress.

"We understand, too today, that another letter has been received at the department from a high military officer, stating that the receipt of the letter from Mexico has been made known to him from the most authentic source."

The New York Journal of Commerce of Tuesday says, on the contrary:

"A gentleman worthy of all reliance, informs us that he has seen a gentleman just arrived by the steamer Southerner, from Charleston, who in New Orleans saw a gentleman who was in Puebla on the [ . . ] saw Scott then there."

El Penon, at which point General Scott is said to have met the Mexicans, is an extinct volcano eight miles from the city of Mexico. The road passes between it and the great Lake of Mexico.

Meantime the steamer Washington reached New Orleans with something like a confirmation of the account. She left Vera Cruz the 22d, Tampico the [illegible], and Brazos the 27th. The Bee says:

"We learn by passengers from Matamoros, on board the propeller Washington, that on the day they left Matamoros an express arrived from the city of Mexico with letters to Mexican merchants of that place stating that General Scott met the Mexican army at Rio Frio and had a battle, in which the enemy were defeated and totally routed, with a loss on the part of the Americans of 300 men; after which General Scott, with his victorious troops, entered and took possession of the city of the Montezumas.

"The news was publicly read to the troops at Matamoros, and although it savors somewhat of improbability, may, nevertheless be wholly true, for our readers will bear in mind that of all the battles fought and victories won on the fields of Mexico, our first news of them was received from the Mexican authority, and afterwards confirmed through American sources. We incline to the opinion, (though somewhat doubtful) that our army under General Scott has again been victorious, and were then as now in possession of the city of Mexico."

The New Orleans Times says- There was a vague report at the Brazos, when the Washington left, that a Mexican express had reached Matamoros, bearing the intelligence that Gen. Scott had entered the city of Mexico.

The National publishes the following, and claims that it fully sustains the account of its extra.

Brazos St. jago, july 27th.

Sir: I hasten to inform you that Mr. Fischer has just arrived here from Matamoras, and was informed that the Colonel Commanding had read on parade last evening, that General Scott had entered the city of Mexico with the loss of 300 men. The news was brought by express to Matamoros, from San Fernando; by a Mexican to the Alcalde, and was generally believed to be true. There is no doubt as to the information having been imparted to the troops at Matamoros. I would have given you more particulars, but Mr. Fischer has gone back tow miles, in hopes to get his baggage here in time for the Washington. I cannot give you more as the boat goes; and he has not returned in time to go to New Orleans in her.

The Vera Cruz correspondent of La Patria, after mentioning that no commission of peace has been appointed, states that Santa Anna is extremely anxious to prevent congress from assembling, in order that he may be enabled to create an assembly of notables., which shall take into consideration the proposition of Mr. Buchanan. Santa Anna is presumed to desire peace, and the assembly will of course be a mere puppet that will move in response to his controlling will. But before this can take place, the correspondent is of opinion that General Scott and his troops will hasten the negotiations for peace by frightening the Mexicans into forms. Recent letters from Puebla bring assurances that the commander in chief began his march towards the capital on the 15, leaving two fortified points at Vera Cruz, the writer had reached [illegible], situated only eight leagues from the city of Mexico. The correspondent of the Patria puts faith in the rumor.

The public have remained in suspense ever since the publication of the foregoing intelligence; each day rather weakening than strengthening confidence therein- Many entertained fond hopes that even if premature, a few hours more would realize such a result.

The following which, upon what authority we know not, we find attributed to Col. Wilson. Governor of Vera Cruz, is as late as anything we have from that place.

The Picayune of the 31st ult. Says:

We are permitted to make an extract of the latest date from Vera Cruz, written by a gentleman who certainly possesses more than ordinary facilities for getting at authentic news. It shows how meagre are the materials of the Vera Cruz editors for forming opinions of the course of events above. The later is dated:

Vera Cruz, July 22, 1848.

Gen. Pierce, with his brigade, is fairly off at last, with, I am told, some 3,000 men- a pretty good force, but not enough, however, to frighten off the guerrillas, who commenced firing on them by the time they were well out of the city. The place is very quiet now; all fear of an attack seems to have died off.

Pickett was ordered by the quartermaster last Sunday to divide off the quartermaster’s men- there are about five hundred of them all- into companies of 50 or 60 men each, and select a captain and two lieutenants to each, in order that they might receive arms. This was done, but the officers would not receipt for the arms, and the mater seems to be dropped.

There is no news here from headquarters that I know of; the last from Puebla was up to the 22d ult. It was stated that Gen. Scott would certainly leave there on the 15th of this month for the city of Mexico.

It is very difficult to get anything from the interior in an authentic shape; we have nothing but rumors and reports. Everything from Mr. Kendall goes through to his paper, of course, and whatever comes to Col. Wilson or is intended for the government does not transpire here. [BRR]
Vera Cruz, July 22, 1848.

Gen. Pierce, with his brigade, is fairly off at last, with, I am told, some 3,000 men—a pretty good force, but not enough, however, to frighten off the guerrillas, who commenced firing on them by the time they were well out of the city. The place is very quiet now; all fear of an attack seems to have died off. [ANP]

NNR 72.373-374  August 14, 1847 “Union’s statement of forces

TROOPS IN GEN. SCOTT’S ARMY. - We learn at the Adjutant General’s office (says the Union) that more than 7,000 troops (new regiments and reorganized companies of the old) have been sent to reinforce the army under M. J. Gen Scott, and that official reports have been received, which show that nearly 5,000 have arrived at Vera Cruz between the 24th of May and 26th of June, and which, we understand, have been pushed forward to join the advancing column of the army with all practicable expedition.

The entire force in advance of Vera Cruz, operating in the interior, and moving in the direction of the capital, exceeds 15,000. These are, of course, exclusive of the garrisons at Tampico and Vera Cruz. It is impossible to determine what deduction should be made on account of the sick; but, according to the best judgment of military men, it should be put down at not less than 2,600; which would make the efficient force in the heart of Mexico about 13,000, exclusive of staff corps. The army under Gen. Scott must soon be further increased, since more than 2,500 are known to be en route for Vera Cruz; among which are six companies of U.S. infantry, and several companies of marines, &c. In addition to these, a respectable number of troops, of an effective character are now raising, and will be promptly en route for Gen. Scott’s army.

We take the present as a fit occasion to say to our readers, that we shall henceforth forbear to make any corrections of the errors and oft repeated misstatements of our forces in the field, which appear in certain prints. But we will say, once for all, that the pay rolls that infallible test of numbers—will show that the forces in Mexico, under Major General Scott and Major General Taylor, in the month of July, will exceed 30,000. NNR 72.374 August 14, 1847 order for organization of the corps of American citizens in Veracruz

Headquarters, Vera Cruz, July 16, 1847.

1. Capt. Cozzens, the former authorized commander of American citizens, having left for the U. States, MR. William S. Tippetts is hereby appointed captain of the corps of American citizens in this city, which corps is to be raised and organized as follows, Viz: Every American citizen not in the employ of the quartermaster’s department in this city, will without delay report their names and residences to said Capt. W.S. Tippets, at the store of Humphreys, Gray & Co. for enrollment. All American citizens residing in Vera Cruz will on the first alarm immediately turn out and repair to the Governor’s quarters, and there await further orders. Any person failing to comply with this order, either as to organizing or turning out, shall, on conviction, (unless a good and sufficient excuse be offered) be sent out of the country by the first vessel going to the U. States.

2. In the event of an alarm, which will be known by the discharge of a single gun all Mexican men, women and children, (watchmen included) residing in town, will repair to the northern end of the city in rear of Fort Conception, where they will be secure from injury.

3. At a signal from the town, the guns of the castle will open a fire upon the city.

4. Captains of vessels in the harbor are requested, in case of an assault, to repair with a part of their crew to Forts Santiago and Conception, as they may be nearest.

5. Any inhabitant of the town found to be acting in concert with the enemy will be immediately arrested and dealt with either at the moment of afterwards, as the nature of the case may require.
NRR 72.372 August 14, 1847 Capt. John Holliway’s account of Maj. Edmonson at the battle of Grand Canon

MAJOR EDMONSON AT THE BATTLE OF GRAND CANON. A correspondent of the St. Louis, Missouri Republican, dated Camp near Santa Clara Spring New Mexico, June 16th, 1847, says- "Having heard that a garbled and incorrect version of the battle of the Grand Canon of Red River, of the 26th May last, had reached Santa Fe through persons ignorant of the affair; or, what is still worse, designing individuals, calculated to prejudice the public mind against the commanding officer on that occasion; and supposing that such reports might reach your city- as falsehood takes wings, whilst truth is the emblem of sloth- and knowing that the person referred to is a member of your community, I feel it my duty, as the officer second in command of that occasion, to disabuse the public mind in reference to the matter.

"I was the first man to enter the canon, being at the head of a small spy party, the Major taking the precaution to reconnoitre the canon before entering with his troops. I was near his side during the whole engagement, heard every order given, and executed them to the best of my ability- believing them then, as I do now, conceived in wisdom and calmness; and I positively assert, that he entered the canon at the head of his troops, (they marching necessarily in single file); that at the commencement of the battle although he ordered the troops to dismount and take advantage of the rocks, which was done, he himself disdained to take any such advantage, remaining on his horse during the fight, in the most exposed part of the field, closely noticing the movements of the enemy, and calmly directing the operations of our little army.

After fighting as long as we had daylight and ammunition, and it because necessary to leave the canon for the time, the Major brought up the rear; was amongst the last to cross the river, and the very last out of the canon, it being then dark.

On the day after the battle, the Major urged the propriety of returning into the canon, in which I concurred, but was overruled by a majority of the officers, who urged the want of sufficient ammunition.

After we re-entered the canon, we found that the enemy had abandoned it on the night after the battle, in great haste and confusion; and I am fully convinced that if we had returned to the canon next day, as Major Edmonson wished, that we would have overtaken the enemy in the plains, have completely vanquished them, and recovered all the animals. I feel it due to state that upon a second entrance into the canon, leaving time to examine the locality and circumstances which surround us, I am more than ever convinced of the prudence and wisdom of Major Edmonson’s orders; and concur fully in the opinion I have more than once heard expressed by Captain Robertson, who was third in command on that occasion, that the affair could not have been better managed, or possibly result more favorably to the American arms, under the circumstances.

Major Edmonson is justly entitled to the gratitude of his country, and the highest regard of his fellow citizens, for the coolness and wisdom displayed by him during the engagement, as also for the energy with which he pursued the enemy during their retreat.

In consequence of the want of time, the train having already left, I am under the necessity of making the foregoing statement rather in form of certificate than latter; and for the same reason, beg leave to refer you to the Major's official report for the particulars connected with the battle.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN HOLLIWAY,

NRR 72.374 August 14, 1847 affairs at Veracruz, spy arrested by the Mexicans with dispatches

The Vera Cruz Arco Iris of the 14th ult. copies several items from the Boletin de Noticias, a new Mexican paper published at Jalapa. The Boletín of the 6th says that a Mexican, acting as a spy for the Americans, was that day arrested in the vicinity of Jalapa, and was speedily to be tried.

The public of Jalapa were clamorous against the spy, charging him with having killed two Indians in that town just before he was taken. Upon the spy were found twenty five or thirty letters; among the various articles for the papers of the United States (newspaper correspondence we take it.) The letters generally were said to contain exaggerated accounts of the encounter at La Hoya, representing that guerrilla force was two thousand strong, and lost [ . . . ] killed, twice that number wounded, and a considerable number of prisoners; the Americans having only eight horses lost, and one soldier slightly wounded.

The Boletín of Jalapa says this is absolutely ridiculous that every body knows that the loss of - Americans exceeded thirty men; that the guerrillas lost only seven or eight, and that their whole force was about seven hundred only. The Boletín makes this statement to prevent people at a distance from being misled.

Among the letters found on the spy was one from Gen. Pillow, written in pencil twenty miles beyond Perote, with instructions for Gen. Price. It represented that the men were dying on an average - eight a day in Perote, and gives some other delay which the Boletín deems it imprudent to print. According to this authority, all the letters agree that the person arrested was a courier, and I so - made him a spy. The letter to Gen. Pierce represented that he was the same person who had previously taken a letter from Gen. Pillow to Perote and that he would return with letter from Vera Cruz to the garrison of Perote. [ANP]

NNR 72.374-375 August 14, 1847 Gen. Stephen Watts Kearny’s proclamation to the people of California

GEN. KEARNY’S PROCLAMATION.

To the People of California.

Translated from the Diario del Gobierno (city of Mexico) of the 25th of June.

The president of the United States having devoted upon the undersigned the civil government of California, he enters upon the discharge of his duties with an ardent desire to promote as far as posses the interests of the country and well being of its inhabitants.

The undersigned is instructed by the president to respect and to protect the religious institution of California, to take care that the religious rights of its inhabitants are secured in the most ample manner, since the constitution of the United States lows to every individual the privilege of worship his Creator in whatever manner his conscience [ . . . ]dictate.

The undersigned is also instructed to protect the persons and property of the quiet and peaceable inhabitants of the country, whether foreign or domestic; and now assuring the Californians that his [ . . . ]nations, no less than his duty, demand the fulfilment of these instructions, he invites them to use their efforts to preserve order and tranquility, to promote harmony and concord, and to maintain the authority and efficacy of the laws.

It is the desire and intention of the United States to procure for California as speedily as possible free government, like that of their own territory and they will very soon invite the inhabitants to exercise the rights of free citizens, in the choice of their own representatives, who may enact such laws as they deem best adapted to their interests and being. But until this takes place, the laws acting in existence, which are not repugnant to the constitution of the United States, will continue in [ . . . ] until they are revoked by competent authority; persons in the exercise of public employment for the present remain in them, provided they [ . . . ] to maintain the said constitution and faithfull discharge their duties.

The undersigned by these presents absolve the inhabitants of California of any further allegiance to the republic of Mexico, and regards them as citizens of the United States. Those who remain quiet and peaceable will be respected and protected in their rights; but should any take up arms against the government of this territory, or join such as do so, or instigate others to do so [ . . . ] these he will regard as enemies, and they will be treated as such.

When Mexico involved the United States in [ . . . ]the latter had not time to invite the Californians to join their standard as friends, but found themselves compelled to take possession of the country to prevent its falling into the hands of some European power. In doing this there is no doubt that some ex[ . . . ]some unauthorised acts were committed by people in the service of the United States, and that in consequence some of the inhabitants have sustained losses in their property. These losses shall be investigated, and those who are entitled to [ . . . ]shall receive it.
For many years California has suffered great domestic convulsions; from civil wars, like ... fountains, have flowed calamity and pestilence ... this beautiful region. These fountains are now dried up; the stars and stripes now float over California, and as long as the sun shall shed its light they will continue to wave over her, and over the natives of the country, and over those who shall seek a domicil in her bosom; and under the protection of this flag agriculture must advance, and the arts and sciences will flourish like seed in a rich and fertile soil.

Americans and Californians! from henceforth one people. Let us then indulge one desire, one hope; let that be for the peace and tranquility of our country. Let us unite like brothers, and mutually strive for the improvement and advancement of this our beautiful country, which within a short period cannot fail to be not only beautiful, but also prosperous and happy.

Given at Monterey, capital of California, this 1st day of March, in the year of our Lord 1847, and of the independence of the United States the 71st.

S.W. KEARNY, Brig. Gen. U.S.A.,

BLOCKADE ON THE PACIFIC.

Com. Biddle- As we expected, (says the New Orleans Bulletin,) Com. Biddle, on taking command on the Pacific, has at once commenced reforming some of the arrangements of the great governor and commander in chief, Capt. Stockton. His first act was to annul the paper blockade, and to establish such blockades as he could maintain by an actual force, agreeable to the system always advocated by the United States, they having invariable resisted these nominal blockades established by Great Britain in her former wars.

The following is a copy of Commodore Biddle’s order:

"The blockade ’of all the ports, harbors, bays, outlets, and inlets on the west coast of Mexico, south of San Diego,’ declared by com. Stockton, of the navy of the United States, on the 19th day of August last, is hereby annulled."

"In virtue of authority from the president of the United States, I do hereby declare the ports of Mazatlan and Guaymas, on the western coast of Mexico, to be in a state of blockade; and, with the view to the strict enforcement thereof, competent force will be stationed before the blockaded ports at as early a period as practicable.

"Neutral vessels lying in either of the blockaded ports will be permitted to retire twenty days from and after the commencement of the blockade.

"Given on board the United States ship Columbus, at Monterey, this 4th day of March, A.D. 1847.

"JAMES BIDDLE, Commanding the United States squadron in the Pacific."

FROM SANTA FE AND THE PLAINS. The Jefferson (Mo.) Enquirer, of the 3d ult. publishes a letter from Lieut. Eastin, of the Cole county infantry, dated at Independence, where he arrived on the 23d ult. He left Santa Fe on the 21st of June, and was thirty two days on the route. A portion of the company had been discharged; the remainder were yet in the service, and would be mustered out at Fort Leavenworth. Lieut. Eastin left the command at the Little Arkansas, two hundred and ten miles from Independence, all making very good progress.

Capt. Augney, who commanded company A, was left at Santa Fe. So, also, was Lieut. Irvine, who had not recovered from his wound. He had suffered much, and it was apprehended that he might Every thing was quiet at Santa Fe. The country was rile with rumors of revolution and rebellion, but no confidence was to be placed in them. The people of Taos were said to be discontented and restless, but Lieut. Col. Willock had returned from his expedition to the Red River Canon, and would soon quiet all dissentions. No news had been received of any troops being ordered to Santa Fe, and Col. Price was in perfect ignorance of what the Government intended doing in this matter. He was discharging his men, or sending them back as fast as their time expired. The other company of the infantry battalion was to be discharged on the 27th of June, and Cap. Dent’s and Capt. Fisner’s companies in tow or three days there after. They were to start for home on the 1st July, and Col. Price’s force in Santa Fe would then be very small. He intended to call Willock’s battalion from Taos, and the two companies of dragoons from Albuquerque, and to concentrate his whole force at Santa Fe.

Lieut. Eastin was attacked on the 4th of July by the Indians. They came on him in the middle of the day, when he least expected them, and succeeded in taking one mule and killing another. Judge Brown, at the same time, lost seventeen oxen. Mexicans were engaged in this party, and the second day thereafter a number of them came into the camp, who were recognised as being from Taos. They made profession of friendship, and said they were hunting buffalo.

The day before Lieut. E. arrived at Pawnee fork, a Government train of wagons was attacked, and the Indians captured twenty oxen, and killed a negro man belonging to Moses Payne, of Boon county, within 150 yards from the camp. A white man narrowly escaped with is life.

The Indians are congregated in large numbers on the Arkansas, and commit their depredations with impunity. It is high time, Lieut. Eastin thinks, that the Government was taking some steps to protect her citizens and herself from these repeated outrages. Mr. Hayden in charge of a Government train of wagons, had lost two hundred head of oxen.

Lieut. Love was met eight miles this side of the crossings of the Arkansas, going on, on the 10th of July. The infantry battalion under Col. Easton, and Capt. McNair’s dragoons were met, on the 20th, at Cotton wood Fork- Capt. Simmons’ and Smithson’s companies, a few miles beyond Council Grove, on the 21st. Capt Simonds was at the Grove very sick, through getting better. The Ralls county company was met at Council Grove; and next day met four companies of the Illinois regiment, eleven miles this side of the Grove. Soon after, three other companies of same regiment at Willow Springs. Some seven or eight of the company remained at Santa Fe. The others were expected to reach Jefferson City about the present time, after an absence of thirteen months. [BRR]

ARMY OF OCCUPATION.

By the steamer Ohio, arrived on the 5th at N. Orleans from Brazos Santiago, dates from thence to the 31st and from Galveston to the 21, are received.

The Matamoros Flag, of the 27th ult., states that for more than a week they had reports there of Gen. Scott having entered Mexico. The Flag appears to credit the report, but on tracing it, it appears to have reached Matamoros from Monterey, and to have arrived at Monterey on the 14th, at which time it is certain that Gen. Scott had not left Puebla

The commandant at Matamoros, on the 26th July, received a letter from Gen. Hopping, stating that he had information of Gen. Urrea being on this side of the mountains at the head of 4,000 men, and requesting a squadron of dragoons. The Flag says, however, that their colonel chooses to remain here until he as received his complement of horses, in the mean time drilling his men as thoroughly as could be done elsewhere. A company of mounted men from Ohio, recently arrived, was sent up to Gen. Hopping.

Col. Carvajal. We understand from several sources that this worthy was on Friday last at Lavacaria, some twenty- leagues distance, on the road to Linares, with 250 men, having been joined by Galan, another guerrilla chief. They were said to have detained a largeumber of mules loaded with corn, soap, sugar, and other produce, destined for this place besides one hundred cargoes of goods which had been sent from here to Monterey.”

Letters from camp Buena Vista to the 18th July; state that Gen. Cushing and suit reached Monterey on the 16th. The Mississippi and North Carolina troops were suffering by diarrheas, &c., average three deaths a day. Of the former, 100 sick, of the latter 150. The Virginia regiment had 150 sick, but no deaths.

Numerous reports are given in those letters, hardly worth detailing here.  [BRR]

GEN. WORTH. A letter in the New Orleans Picayune, from Mr. Kendall dated June 27, states that a court of inquiry, had been in session for a day or two. NNR 72.387 August 14, 1847 Washington’s “Union”

PEACE OR WAR? The Washington Union of the 12th, in relation to Mexico says:

If the enemy are not yet cured of their infatuation, they must ultimately see with all these evidences in all directions before their eyes, that they cannot cope with our troops, and that they must reap nothing but defeat and disgrace. We have beaten them everywhere, with inferior forces. They have men enough, but few soldiers. They are deficient in arms and in money. We overcome every disparity of numbers by the superiority of our discipline, steadiness and skill. Every hope upon which they relied will be dissipated. The vomito is disappearing. Troops (and a peculiar species) are about to assail and overwhelm the guerrillas, and restore the line of our communication between the capital and the coast. Should the Mexicans now incline the olive branch, we must strike the harder, and make them feel more sensibly the pressure of the war. We will then see men of some moral courage arise to brave all the consequences of public opinion—infact, to give it a new direction, and to smooth the way to pacification. Every intelligent Mexican will see— if he as not already seen— that they cannot withstand our arms; that they cannot resist the force that we will bring against them; that they can gain nothing by the war and that their wisest policy is peace. NNR 72.388 August 14, 1847 Washington “Union”

The Washington Union says:- "A letter has been received in Washington, from an officer of the army, as late as the 29th and 30th July. It states that General Scott would move upon the capital as soon as Gen. Pierce arrived with his reinforcements—about the 2d or 3d of August. Mr. Trist had been quite ill, but was then convalescent. We are happy to hear that Gen. Scott had waited upon him during his indisposition, to confer with him about the public concerns."

The Union also says: “We can find nothing to confirm the statement which some of the letter writers from Washington are giving, as if appears in the Baltimore Sun of this morning, viz: that “a letter to which I referred in my last, has been received from Mr. Bankhead, by the British legation here. in which he states, as I learn, the same thing, and adds, that the attempt, in which he assisted, to induce the Mexican government to listen to these proposals, utterly failed.” [BRR]

NNR 72.389-72.390 August 14, 1847 general orders on the recruiting service

[GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 26]

WAR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, July 23, 1843.

GENERAL RECRUITING SERVICE. The measures taken to fill the ranks of the army having been communicated from time to time by special instructions since the promulgation of "General Orders," Nos. 2, 8, and 17, it becomes necessary to publish these instructions to the army, and for the better information and guidance of the officers concerned.

1- Recruiting for the old Establishment.

Col. I. B. CRANE, (Superintendent, Eastern Division 1st Artillery,) - Head Quarters N. York.
Lt. Col. J. ERVING, (Superintendent, Western Division 2d Artillery,) - Head Qrt's Cincinnatti.

Officers of the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th regiments of infantry, who may be sent from the army in Mexico, with a view to the recruiting service, will, on their arrival at New Orleans, report in person to Brig. General Brooke, who will them orders according to the instructions he may receive from Washington.

2- Recruiting for Ten additional Regiments.

For the 9th and 10th Infantry,) Col. J. BANKHEAD, 2d Artillery, Superintend't, Head Quarters, New York.
For the 11th Infantry, and Voltigeurs,) Maj. E.W. MORGAN, 11th Regiment, Superintend't, Baltimore.
For the 12th, 13th and 14th Regiments,) Brig. Gen. G. M. Brooke, Com'dg West'n Division, (assisted by Maj. A. G. BLANCHARD, 12th Reg.) -Head Qrs., N. Orleans.
For the 15th and 16th Regiments- Lt. Col. J. ERVING, 2d Artillery, Cincinnatti.

3.- The men enlisted for the 1st and 2d Dragoons will be sent to Carlisle Barracks, to be under the command of an officer of one of the regiments. The recruits for the 3d Dragoons and Mounted Rifle Regiment, will be sent to Jefferson Barracks. The Commanding officers will enforce a strict system of discipline and instruction according to regulations.

4- Recruiting for the Volunteer Regiments.

For the Massachusetts, New York and New Jersey Volunteers- Col. J. B. BANKHEAD, 2d Artillery, New York.
For the Virginia Volunteers-Col. J.B. WABACH, 4th Artillery, Fort Monroe.
For the North and South Carolina Volunteers- Col. W. WHISTLER, 4th Infantry, Fort Moultrie.
For the Georgia; Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana Volunteers- Brig. General G.M. BROOKE, New York.
For the Illinois and Missouri Volunteers- Lt. Col. T. STANIFORD, 8th Infantry, Jefferson Barracks.
For the Indiana, and Ohio Volunteers- Lt. Col. J.ERVING, 2d Artillery, Cincinnati.

Volunteer officers selected for the recruiting service by their respective Colonels pursuant to the provisions of "GENERAL ORDERS," No. 17, of April 15, will report by letter to the field officers charged with the superintendence of recruiting for the their respective regiments, to who they will make all their reports and returns.

5- As soon as 50 or 60 recruits are enlisted for any one regiment, the superintendent will report for instructions to the Adjutant General's Office, when measures will be taken to concentrate and organize detachments for the field of not less than 250 men.- The officers sent to Mexico with recruits, (both regular and volunteer,) will not return to the United states, but replaced by other officers to be selected by the commanders of their regiments.

6- The public interest requires that the recruiting service be pushed with the greatest vigor, by every officer employed in it; and at the same time the strictest economy is enjoined in all expenditures and arrangements, &c. "Superintendents will report all commissioned or non-commissioned officers who may be incapable or negligent, or unsuccessful, in the discharge of their functions," &c. (See par 757 army regulations, 1847.)

7- Proceedings of courts martial in the trial of recruits on charges of alleged desertion from the rendezvous afforded strong grounds to believe that there are instances in which the recruiting party have contrived to make out the case of desertion for the sordid purpose of obtaining and dividing among themselves the authorized reward of $30. The records show that recruit * * enlisted on the 24th day May, that leave was granted him until 3 o'clock, that not returning at the hour he was seized before 6, at the house of the friend who had accompanied him to the rendezvous in the morning, that he was confined as a deserter by the Sergeant, and that on the certificate of the recruiting officer five of the party, received and divided the reward.

If the recruiting officer performs his duty of the service, these fraudulent schemes to obtain money at the expense of a recruit, not a deserter in fact, would rarely be successful. It is the special duty of the officer to examine thoroughly every case of absence without leave, and in no instance should be given the usual certificate of apprehension, until well assured that the recruit was really a deserter according to the articles of war and army regulations. If the rule prescribed in paragraph 764 had been observed, the short absence of the man on the 24th of May referred to above, could not have been regarded as a desertion.

The Secretary of War directs that the recruiting officers give strict attention to the subject. It is expected they will diligently watch the public interest, and protect the recruits against all imposition attempted to be practiced upon them.

8- All packages and letters relating to the recruiting service, will be endorsed on the upper right hand corner- "Recruiting Service."

9- Packages containing "Certificates of Disability," or "Certificates for Pensions," will be endorsed, accordingly, on the lower left hand corner of the envelope.

By order:

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

NNR 72.394 August 21, 1847 Receipt of Dispatches from Gen. Winfield Scott at Puebla, Gen. Franklin Pierce's Affairs with the Guerrillas, Gen. Persifor Frazer Smith's Brigade to Meet Pierce

"A respectable person of the city has informed us that a letter has been received yesterday morning by a citizen of this place, from a guerrilla chief, stating that the guerrilleros, about 600 in number, attacked the train commanded by General Pierce near the National Bridge. The letter says the Americans approached under the fire of the Mexicans until they arrived within a hundred yards of them, when the American infantry opened a deadly fire on them forcing them to retreat. While the Mexicans were retreating the American cavalry rushed on them sword in hand, and killed about one hundred Mexicans. The position of the Mexicans was one of the strongest that can be found in the country. The Americans passed the bridge after this successful engagement."

General Scott dispatched Gen. Smith's brigade to meet General Pierce at Perote, and accompany them up. As soon as joined by his reinforcement and replenished by the supply of which he had charged Gen. Scott would probably advance on the city of Mexico. No doubts is expressed in any of the accounts that we have seen, of his being able with the force he will then have (say 12 to 13,000 men.) to enter the "Halls of the Montezumas" in triumph.-- Whether he will meet with but a feeble, if any, resistance, -- or whether he will have to encounter a bloody contest, is a point in warm dispute, -- but in either case his success seems to be admitted. NNR 72.394 August 21, 1847 Gen. Valencia reaches Mexico with reinforcements

After our last was at press intelligence reached here by telegraph, the substance of which we inserted in a half a dozen lines of postscript. The reports with which the public had been tantalized for the preceding week,- of General Scott having entered the city of Mexico on the 17th July, like the reports which we had the week preceding, of Mexican commissioners having been appointed to treat with Mr. Trist, prove to be totally unfounded.

The steamer Fashion reached New Orleans on the 6th, with accounts from Gen. Scott to the 30th July, a month later than previous authentic accounts. He was still at Puebla, waiting for the arrival of the forces and supplies that Gen. Pierce was taking up. The latter had reached Perote in safety, once account says after a smart conflict with guerrillas, who attempted to defend the pass at Nation Bridge. Of this affair the Sun of Anahuac, (Vera Cruz) gives the following account. It is regarded only as rumour however.

"A respectable person of the city has informed us that a letter has been received yesterday morning by a citizen of this place, from a guerrilla chief, stating that the guerrilleros, about 600 in number, attacked the train commanded by General Pierce near the National Bridge. The letter says the Americans arrived within a hundred yards of them, when the American infantry opened a deadly fire on them, forcing them to retreat. General Valencia, at the head of 4,000 men, has reached the city of Mexico from San Louis Potosi all full of fight.

Lieut. Whipple who was supposed to have been killed, was taken prisoner, is treated well and expects soon to be exchanged.

Letters are received at New Orleans from the American officers, prisoners in Mexico, to the 15th July. They were all well.

A private letter dated 29th July, says “Mr. Trist’s health has improved.”

Mr. Kendall perseveres in sending couriers to Vera Cruz, though he has had three captured. One has been killed. He fought bravely for his life, and was faithful to the last. The Picayune says- “By singular good fortune the letters by this courier we have recovered. They are not of a late date, but it is rather singular that they should have reached their destination against the wishes of the Mexicans, when once in their possession.” [BRR]

Puebla, (Mexico,) July 30, 1847

We have a story, tolerably well authenticated, that more than a million of dollars recently arrived at Vera Cruz for the army. A day after the fair again; for how is this money to find its was up in season to relieve the great necessities of those who have so long been suffering? The straits to which our commissaries and quartermasters have been driven, as well as the army agent, Mr. Hargous, to raise the means for the absolute support of the men, has beat the kite flying and skinning days of ’37 all to pieces. A dollar is a dollar, and more than a dollar, here in Puebla.

In relation to the movements of the army, I can give you no other than the impression that General Scott will march immediately on the arrival of Gen. Pierce. The men composing the divisions of General Worth and Twiggs are probably better soldiers than any at present in the world. In the first place, the material is equal if not superior to any; they are equally well drilled; have the best officers to lead them; and what is of the greatest importance, a great portion of them have been in the front rank of battle in numerous fights. Nor is the division of General Quitman, who will doubtless take an active party in any operations yet to take place, much behind the others. The regiments composing it, the New York, South Carolina, and 1st and 2nd Pennsylvania, have been long enough in the field to become well drilled, while Steptoe’s admirable battery is attached to it. The army that will set down before Mexico will be the strongest and best appointed we have yet had in the field, and, let the Mexicans fight as they will, the result of any contest that may take place cannot be double.

I have seen a gentlemen who left the capital two days since. He says that the Mexicans were quietly awaiting the approach of General Scott, having all their works and fortifications completed. The story that the city was partially overflowed is confirmed, but the reports of the extent of the inundation, and of the sickness it had occasioned, have been exaggerated. There was a strong relief of among many of the foreigners that there was a perfect understanding between Gen. Scott and Santa Anna, and that a peace would grow out of it. The congress was still at loggerheads with the president, all business was completely at a stand, and the only law known was that of the military.

Copies of the Diario del Gobierno up to the 27th instant have been received here. It is the only paper now published at the capital, and contains little save government orders and deicides, or articles published under the express sanction of Santa Anna.-- In one of the latter the editor asks the people not to forget their great and glorious victory over "los Yankees" on the triumphant field of Buena Vista, nor the three pieces of cannon and the standard then and there taken from General Taylor! He himself has probably entirely forgotten the seven or eight hundred cannon captured from his countrymen within the last eighteen months, as well as the flags innumerable that have been sent on to Washington. [TNW]

I must close this letter with a few speculations of my own. There is now every indication that the army will move upon the capital in the course of the coming six days, and it is more than probably that the hardest fight will yet be at the city of Mexico- this is the opinion of the majority. Santa Anna, however much he may be averse to it, can hardly avoid a battle, although he will creep out of it if possible.

Gen. Shields is here and good health. The health of the army continues to improve, and a large portion of the soldiers may now be said to be acclimated.

G.W.K.

this opinion did not prevail. They determined that they would await tranquilly the enemy within the walls of the city, continuing to fortify themselves as strongly as possible. We know not, therefore, what will happen, or whether the Americans will commence their march forthwith. I doubt whether they will do it before the arrival of further reinforcements.

In the meantime affairs are going on here from bad to worse, and heavy contributions are levied, the collection of which is effected with extreme difficulty, so that the government has great trouble to provide the means for the subsistence of a large army. Santa Anna is at this moment sole dictator. Congress can do nothing because there is never a sufficient number of members present to form a quorum for business. They say that the government is seeking a closer union with European powers, and with this view has given orders for the liquidation of the claims of their subjects. [BRR]

NNR 72.396 August 21, 1847 Tabasco evacuated

TABASCO EVACUATED— The following, in relation to the evacuation of Tabasco, is from the Sun of Anahuac of the 27th ultimo:

"The U.S. steamship Mississippi, Com. Perry, arrived yesterday at Lizardo, bringing with him the steamers Scorpion, Spitfire, and Vixen.

"The forces have been withdrawn from the city of Tabasco, in consequence of the severe sickness which prevailed among them, till the sickly season shall have passed.

"Every thing was taken on board, and the evacuation was effected without molestation from the enemy, who was in considerable force outside. The defences were all destroyed when the place was first occupied six weeks since.

"Commander Van Brunt, with the bomb brig Emma, the steamer Scourge, and the gunboat Bonita, were left at Frontera, a few miles from the mouth of the river, (it being a healthy location) to take charge of the custom house there, and guard the passages leading to the capital."

It is due to the truth to say that the Sun of Anahuac, on its Spanish side, represents the evacuation of Tabasco in a less favorable light for our arms than the above account. It attributes our withdrawal to the overwhelming forces of the enemy. Our commandant feared he would be unable to resist an attack, and determined to evacuate the place rather than rise the issue. NNR 72.396-397 August 21, 1847 Col. Lewis Gustavus DeRussy’s report on his expedition to Huejutla

COL. DE RUSSY’S REPORT

Tampico, (Mexico), July 18, 1847

SIR In obedience to your special order, No. 41, Garay, of the Mexican army, stationed at Huejutla, and claim from him certain prisoners of war, who, in your judgement, and for reasons which you authorised me to suggest, should be entitled to liberation, and in case of his compliance, to bring back said prisoners to Tampico, I proceeded with an escort of one hundred and twenty six men in its execution. My force was composed of Wyse's company third artillery, 34 men, with one field piece; Boyd's company, cavalry, 35 men; a detachment of my own regiment of 44 men, commanded by Capt. Mace and Seguine, and eleven men of the volunteer company of Tampico rangers. The officers assigned to troops were Capts. Wyse, third artillery; Boyd, cavalry; Mace and Seguine, Louisiana volunteers; with Lieutenants Tanneyhill, cavalry, Lindberger, Campbell, and Hemberger, Louisiana volunteers. The first of these acting adjutant for the command, the two latter as company officers to Captains Mace and Seguine; and Lieutenant Wells, commanding the rangers. There was also with the party Sergeant Singleton of "La." company, acting Sergeant Major, and Mr. Pemberton, an amateur volunteer. I left this place with my command on the morning of the 8th instant, and reached the town of [ . . . ]on the 9th, which I learned was within the district commanded by Gen. Garay. Here I inquired for any military officer to whom I might communicate the purpose of my mission. I was informed by the alcalde; or chief magistrate that none were there. I applied to this functionary for corn and other necessaries, which were supplied cheerfully, and informed him that my tour, although accompanied by a military escort was not in hostility, but to claim of the commandant general some American prisoners in his custody, but the orders of Col. Gates, commanding in Tampico, and which I trusted would be turned over to me, for reasons which I should explain. Thence I continued my journey to the next town upon the route to General Garay’s head quarters, called Tantayuca, which we reached on the 11th. Here, also I was furnished by the alcalde with corn, and beef, &c. again communicated the character and purpose of my mission; and again inquired, to no purpose, for any military officer with whom I might communicate, and who might accompany me to the general’s headquarters at Huejutla, now distant about twenty five miles. While here, I perceived indications of uneasiness, producing some apprehension, that notwithstanding my assurance of the pacific nature of my visit, formal preparations of defence were being arranged before me; but I could not suspect to meet these short of the town occupied by the commanding general, at the approach to which I relied upon the white flag, (or sooner, should I meet any one to whom I might show it), to make all right and safe. On next morning, early, we moved towards Huejutla, Capt Boyd and his company being now the advance guard, with orders not to be more than two hundred yards before us. Having reached a point eight miles from our last camp at Tantayuca, and about one mile from the river Calaboso, we met with a Mexican Indian, whom we interrogated in reference to the road, &c. From this man we had learned that the Mexicans had made an ambuscade at the river; that General Garay was there himself with a large force, and that it was intended to attack us three. Immediately despatched the adjutant and the sergeant major to order Capt. Boyd to fall back to the main body; it was too late; they no sooner started to communicate the order than heavy discharge of musketry was heard and many single shouts after. We hastened to the river- Captain Boyd with six of his men had fallen, the remainder of his company had dispersed or fled back to us. As I reached the ground, I perceived the enemy had cleared away the ground of all bushes for the space of 150 yards, on either side of the road, leaving beyond that a dense hedge of chaparral, in rear of which had been constructed a fence to prevent charges of cavalry; in front upon the opposite back was heir main body, also protected by thick chaparral. A charge was instantly made upon the left. Capt. Seguince and his men, and the field piece, protected by Captain Wyse's campaign, was ordered forward to scour the ground upon the opposite bank. These moves were nearly simultaneous, and were gallantly performed. At the first discharge the enemy were driven from the left; two charges on the right also dislodged him from their right, and compelled him to unite in one mass upon the opposite bank.

In this position the battle continued for a full hour, Capt. Wyse gallantly serving his piece, and being during the whole of the engagement, exposed to the most destructive fire from the enemy directly to his front, so well concealed and protected by the thick undergrowth as but seldom to be sufficiently seen to be fired upon with any perfect precision. There were wounded during the service of this piece, six men of its squad. Finally, the enemy sounded their trumpet!- whether for retreat or a charge, I do not know; there was, at all events, a [ . . . ] of their fire. At that moment Capt. Wyse delivered a discharge of canister, so fortunately formed as for the time entirely to paralyze their further action. I took this opportunity to examine our condition. We had exhausted all our field piece cartridges but three. The road to Huejutla lay along the gorge between steep activities. The prisoners, we knew, had been removed from that town. Our fear and our flanks were now attacked by multitudes of men of the towns left behind us on our advance, who had already come so near us as to take from us all our mules, packed with everything we had, in provisions, money, and clothing. There seemed but one way to make our return possible, it was to [illegible], if possible, the position we had occupied in [illegible]. I immediately ordered a retrograde; we [ . . . ] and retraced our steps; immediately there fell upon our flanks and rear large bodies of the enemy, at such distance, however, as to make their efforts [ . . . ] slightly efficient. At every opportunity to reach them, our rear, commanded by Capt. Mace, delivered their discharges of musketry, generally most fatal to our pursuers. While ascending a hill in the road, about one mile from Tantyuca, a very spirited resistance was made by the enemy stationed on the summit, but they were soon driven forward and dispersed by as many of Capt. Wyse's men as could [ . . . ] spared from the piece, who were in the advance, getting as light infantry. At this critical moment, [ . . . ] piece was made again to play a very important part in the safety of our retreat; for it had scarcely reached the summit of this hill before the enemy [ . . . ] rushing on our rear, driving in the rear guard, pack mules, and everything else in confusion around the gun, but Captain Wyse promptly unlimbered, [illegible], and elevated his gun himself; and when within short musket shot, he touched her off, sending death and confusion into the column of the advancing enemy; and before they could recover from this shock, he gave them another well aimed discharge [ . . . ] canister, which effectually prevented further back from the rear. In this manner we advanced one miles back to Tantayuca- the whole round [ . . . ] one continued fight. When arrived at that town, we found an organised force there to oppose [ . . . ] Capt. Seguince, then in advance, was ordered to prepare his men for a charge; and Captain Wyse advanced his piece to a favorable position, discharged upon our opposers one of our last charges of canister, and immediately thereon the charge was made. The enemy fled and dispersed in all directions.

We gained the town, and immediately crossed it to a favorite mound overlooking and entirely commanding it. Thus, masters here, we had leisure to rest and restore our condition to better capabilities of defence. Men were despatched to the stores in the town, to procure powder and ball; from which a number of cartridges were prepared, using champagne bottles half filled with balls, with the remaining space packed with earth- a substitute for tin cylinders. Other munitions were also inspected and equally distributed. These preparations being complete, we had nine or ten good canister charges and an average of nine musket cartridges per man. During this afternoon I found the men were coming to camp, some of them richly laden with spoils of all kinds from the shops and private house; and although I had not authorised it, I didn't regret so just a retribution for the hypocrisy of people, who, after affecting kindness and hospitality as we left them in the morning, had subsequently fallen upon us, to annihilate us, and had despoiled us of about ninety mules, and all our private baggage and provisions.

While here, we perceived the enemy passing round us from all directions, and moving to some pint upon the road by which we had come from Aselhuama. We remembered a most favorable place we had passed for any purpose of ambuscade, called Monte Grande, at which Captian Wyse had been obliged to dismount his piece; and rightly conjectured it was determined to strike us there. We the night of the 14th. Lieutenant Tanneyhill bay possibly survive his wound. It is but justice to say that Tantayuca. Their exertions and services were constant and untiring, from the morning of the 12th until excellent soldiers. They charged the enemy most gallantly at the river engagement, and in entering Captains Mace and Seguine, of the Louisiana regiment of volunteers, are brave men and entitle him to the highest commendation.

two subsequent days of skirmishing by day and watching by night are also gratefully remembered by constantly under the most direct fire of the enemy. His indefatigable service and endurance, during the instances, however of extraordinary gallantry. Captain Wyse, during the engagement at Calabosa river, acted with that steady courage and gallantry, constitution the highest grade of military character, being mortally wounded, with a man as nurse were left at the house of the alcalde in Tanatyuca, with a letter Character of the enemy, many of whom were destroyed in their pursuit of us.

In the engagement at the river, which is called the Calaboso, we sustained the following loss, viz:

Boyd’s company. - Captain Boyd, killed; Lieutenant Tanneyhill, mortally wounded; Serg. Baker, killed, Corporal Bruner, killed; Private Tubifff, Brown, Mullican, and Burk, killed; and Privates Luxton, Wilson, and O’Hara, slightly wounded.

Wyse’s company. - Private Allen mortally wounded; and five privates slightly wounded.

Non commissioned stff. - Principal musician, Rose; missing.

Havineo surgeon or means of transportation, Lieutenant Tanneyhill and two privates, all mortally wounded, with a man as nurse were left at the house of the alcalde in Tanatyuca, with a letter to that functionary demanding for these unfortunate men the common rights of humanity; and in the conversation with the bearers of Gen. Garay’s flag the disposal made of these wounded was mentioned, and it was mentioned they should be cared for.

For the conduct of every man composing my command, I have praise to bestow. There were instances, however of extraordinary gallantry. Captain Wyse, during the engagement at Calabosa river, acted with that steady courage and gallantry, constitution the highest grade of military character, being constantly under the most direct fire of the enemy. His indefatigable service and endurance, during the two subsequent days of skirmishing by day and watching by night are also gratefully remembered by me, and entitle him to the highest commendation.

Captains Mace and Seguine, of the Louisiana regiment of volunteers, are brave men and excellent soldiers. They charged the enemy most gallantly at the river engagement, and in entering Tantayuca. Their exertions and services were constant and untiring, from the morning of the 12th until the night of the 14th. Lieutenant Tanneyhill bay possibly survive his wound. It is but justice to say that his conduct admirable, and deserving the highest compliments. Lieut. Heimburger is also entitled to our most complimentary notice. After being severely wounded, and suffering with consequent fever, he did not hesitate to report for duty when the enemy appeared, and when it was thought hard fighting was our only resource. Lientenants Lindenbruger and Campbell acted with gallantry and zeal whenever an opportunity presented. Mr. Aldridge, who, as proprietor of the mules engaged as packs, was with us, rendered most essential and gallant service, being forward and active in every charge made upon the enemy. Mr. Laller, one of the Tampico rangers, rendered very important service in coming with the express to Tampico by night when I thought my self so surrounded as to be in the greatest doubts whether there was any possibility of escape without succor. Mr. Pemberton, a gentleman who accompanied us as an ameteur, also rendered essential and gallant services. The small detachment of Tampico rangers, armed as they were merely as cavalry, could not be so advantageously employed as the other troops; they were, however, generally ready and willing to discharge such duties as they were called on for.

Among the non commissioned officers of my command, I have to notice the acting Sergeant Major Singleton, of the Louisiana regiment, who, on several occasions, distinguished himself as a brave and gallant soldier; he had a horse shot under him.

Another was the sergeant in charge of Captain Wyse’s gun, who, with as gallant a gun quad as ever served a piece, bore the brunt of the action upon the river bank. The names of these brave men have escaped my memory. I will procure and hand them to you.

There were also Sergeants Moore, Woody and Townsend, of the Louisiana regiment, all of whom are entitled to honorable mention.

I have omitted to state the force of the enemy engaged against us, and the probable number of their loss. Their strength must have near fifteen hundred; and although were not actually engaged at any one time against their whole force, yet we were compelled to meet them all in turn. I have learned from Mexican men, how saw the battle round at the Calaboso just before the engagement, that there were three hundred within the [ . . . ] upon this side of the river, and five hundred upon the opposite bank, commanded by General Garay himself; and there was probably as many more upon our flanks and rear the following days while in retreat. Their loss is estimated at two hundred, as well from statements of their own people as from what we saw.

In closing this report, which I fear may already be too long, I must beg to remark, that for our return were are indebted entirely to the field piece taken out by Capt. Wyse’s company and so well managed by that excellent officer and his brave men. It is an arm as yet but insufficiently appreciated, but of which the vast importance and usefulness must be developed by experience. In nay expedition such as that from which I have just returned, I estimate one field piece, well supplied and well managed, is equivalent to one hundred muskets, and perhaps more, in defence. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant;

NNR 72.398 August 21, 1847 Mexican committee of foreign relations on Nicholas Philip Trist’s propositions

MEXICAN CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS ON THE PROPOSED NEGOTIATION FOR PEACE.
Report of the committee on foreign relations.
Committee Room of the Sovereign Constituent Mexican Congress

SIR: The majority of the committee on foreign relations deem it not improper to present the report with the promptitude which the chamber has thought fit to allow, as well because the legal question involved appears to be perfectly clear, as because the same subject has for a long time been the object of their meditations, and also of the debates of the national representation.

In the judgement of the committee our fundamental code is perfectly clear in this part of it. The 110th article of the constitution places among the powers of the executive authority of the Union that of directing diplomatic negotiations and concluding treaties of peace, friendship, alliance, truce, federation, armed neutrality commerce and every other kind whatsoever; but it says that to grant or reissue the ratification of any one of these the approbation of the general congress must first be obtained. The executive power is also exclusive, according to the 15th number of the same article, to receive ministers and other agents of foreign powers.

These articles prove, in a manner incontrovertable, that by our constitutional laws, s among other civilized nations, the direction of foreign relations is entrusted exclusively to the executive; but without conferring on it the power to conclude anything definitively, or to bind the nation to anything without the consent of the legislative body. The same federal constitution places among the powers of congress, that of “approving treaties of peace, of alliance, of friendship, of federation, of armed neutrality, and every other kind whatsoever which the president of the United (Mexican) States may conclude with foreign powers.”

From all this we come to the conclusion that congress does not posses the power to entertain and cannot rightfully entertain the communication which the government of the United States has transmitted with a view to entering into negotiations for peace, and offering to name a minister for this purpose. And if this opinion appeared to us sound according to the federal constitution, when promulgated as a provisional code, and even since congress has acquired an augmentation of powers granted to it by the “Plan of he citadel” and the “convocatoria;” now that the nation is definitely constituted; or possesses a definite constitution- [esta definitivamente constituida] now that one of the articles of the act of amendments declares expressly that "the powers of the Union are all derived from the constitution, and are limited to the simple exercise of the faculties expressly designate in it;" now that all public powers must be measured by it in the most rigorous manner, we can find no possible objection to our opinion, for any other pact to which we have sworn.

Nevertheless we are not blind to the fact that instead of being a political theory, it has been a sentiment of the purest, noblest patriotism in its origin, which has interposed so many difficulties in order that upon a subject of so vast importance that course should be strictly followed which the commands of constitution so distinctly mark out. Congress as the faithful representative of the wishes of he people, who have been outraged by the most unjust of all aggressions, and are determined not t consent that an ignominious treaty should secure to our neighbors the possession of the territory usurped by theme, and wit it the dominion of this continent- terminating at the same time our political existence in a manner which would not even entitle us to the compassion of other people-[congress] has uniformly opposed every thing which should seem to open the way for a peace, which would at this day be every way ignominious, and it has exercised the most jealous care and precaution to prevent even the remotest danger of such a disaster.

The committee participates in these feelings, and would only observe that this constitution power conferred upon the executive cannot be sailed by us, nor does it afford occasion for well founded alarm, nor in fine is it possible that congress should itself discharge this duty. The management of diplomatic negotiations demands such reserve, so much discussion, an activity so well timed, a system of designs so well prosecuted, that it would be impossible to carry them on with certainty, if their management were entrusted to a numerous body. The policy of all nations confirms this truth, and there is no doubt that congress itself renounced the power of negotiation when in amending our original constitutional pact, it determined that there should be no alteration in the provisions we have cited, and left them to stand as they were.

On the other hand, in perfect consistency with these provisions, the executive can conclude nothing definitively; it possesses no authority to consummate any arrangement which shall be binding upon the republic; and congress very well knows that the executive, even in the exercise of its constitutional exclusive faculties, under a representative system, finds itself constrained to pursue such a course as may be designated by public opinion and the legislative body. In the position, truly strong and respectable, which our constitution gives to congress, it, it possesses abundant peaceful and legal resources, without exceeding it’s duties, to insure the interests of the nation in whatever manner it may be compromised. For these reasons, therefore, the majority of he committee cannon propose any other course than to return to the other government the dispatch, and if this report appears subscribed by only two members of the committee, it should be borne in mind that our associate Sr. Ceballos, who worthily presides over the committee, but who from his well known illness is unable to co operate with us, has authorized us to express his agreement with us, and even offered to subscribe the report which we should prepare expressive of our views, which we conclude with the following proposition:

With a copy of this report let the dispatch be returned to the government, because, in the present situation of the affair, it comes within its cognizance, with the restrictions which are established by the fundamental code of the republic.

OTERO.
LAFRINGUA.

Mexico, 13th July, 1847

The report being submitted to congress, underwent a discussion, and the vote being taken upon it, it was approved the same day. Ayes 52- nays 22.

"We need hardly say, remarks the Picayune of the 12th instant, that this report appears to us an authoritative, declaration on the part of the most intelligent political party in Mexico, in favor of the continuance of the war. It is the declaration of the majority of the present congress, and of the party, called Moderados, which would prevail in Mexico but for the interposition of the military. The same line of argument which is maintained in the report the Republicano has strenuously pursued hitherto.

We infer from this report, that the embarrassments which have purposely been thrown in the way of negotiations, are sanctioned by the intelligent liberal class in Mexico; that they were expressly designed to guard against the possible corruption of their leaders, who might be induced to entertain thoughts of peace." [BRR]
The Washington Union says:- "A letter has been received in Washington, from an officer of the army, as late as the 29th and 30th July. It states that General Scott would move upon the capital as soon as Gen. Pierce arrived with his reinforcements- about the 2d or 3d of August. Mr. Trist had been quite ill, but was then convalescent. We are happy to hear that Gen. Scott had waited upon him during his indisposition, to confer with him about the public concerns."

The Union also says:- "We can find nothing to confirm the statement which some of the letter writers from Washington are giving, as it appears in the Baltimore Sun of this morning, viz: that "a letter to which I referred in my last, has been received from Mr. Bankhead, by the British legation here in which he states, as I learn, the same thing and adds that the attempt, in which he assisted, to induce the Mexican government to listen to these proposals, utterly failed." NNR 72.399 August 21, 1847 Gen. John Ellis Wool ordered to advance on Encarnacion and San Luis
NNR 72.399 August 21, 1847 outrages committed by Mexicans on their countrywomen and countrymen

From the Rio Grande the most important item is the following article from the Matamoros Flag of the 4th inst.

ADVANCE UPON SAN LUIS- From Major Arthur, formerly quartermaster at Cerralvo, we learn that Gen. Wool ahs received orders to proceed with the advance of Gen. Taylos's column, on the 20th inst., in the direction of Encarnation, some twenty leagues from Buena Vista, where he will establish a depot, into which three months rations will be thrown.

The army will then advance upon San Luis and communication be opened with Tampico or Tuspan, from whence supplies will thereafter be received.- All the mules and other means of transportation have been ordered above and activity prevails throughout the whole department.

The Flag gives sad accounts of outrages perpetrated in the vicinity of Matamoros, by Mexicans upon their own countrywomen. The same paper mentions that the resident Mexicans near Parras lately applied to General Taylor to protect them from armed bands of their own countrymen, sent thither for the express purpose of ravaging the country and destroying the corps. NNR 72.399 August 21, 1847 Lt. Brown and party killed, Maj. Edmonson overtakes and chastises the murderers NNR 72.399 August 21, 1847 another conspiracy discovered, Lt. Larkin and four privates killed

"ARMY OF THE NORTH"

Arrival from Santa Fe

Lieut. Brown and his party killed- Major Edmondson overtakes and chastises the murderers- another conspiracy discovered part of the returning party massacred. From the St. Louis Republican of August 12 and 13.

Another party of volunteers has returned to Fort Leavenworth from Santa Fe. They arrived on the 6th inst., and left Santa Fe on the 6th of last month. From Mr. Isaac McCarty, of the firm of Bullard, Hook & Co., traders to Mexico and Chihuahua, the following interesting information is derived.

When Mr. McCarty arrived at Bagos, 75 miles this side of Santa Fe, he learned that information had been received there on the 5th, that Lt. Brown, attached to Capt. Horine's company of volunteers, with several of his men had been killed at a small place about 15 miles from Bagos. On receiving this intelligence, Maj. Edmondson, with a party of his men pursued the Mexicans, overtook them, fought with, and killed five or six of them and captured between 30 and 40, whom he threatened to hang.

By this energetic conduct, Major E. induced a confession from some of them, that there was another conspiracy on foot to bring about a massacre and revolution at Taos and Bagos. A letter was found upon one of the prisoners, purporting, though not signed, to come from the ringleader of the former conspiracy, in which he desired to be informed of the precise time when Fischer's company of artillery would leave Santa Fe, as that was necessary to the maturity of his plans. He declared, in this letter, his determination never to rest while there as an American alive in New Mexico. Of the disposition of the prisoners, we have no further information:

Mr. McCarty met the first train of government wagons about one hundred miles from Santa Fe. Lieut. Love, who has charge of the government money amounting to more than $3,000,000 was met at the upper Seminone strings, and Col. Easton's battalion of infantry on the Arkansas. A few days previous to his meeting Col. Easton's command, while some of his men were employed in getting wood..." on the opposite side of the river, they were completely surprised by a party of the Camanche Indians, by whom eight of the number were killed and three wounded.

One of the wounded was scalped alive, and was found in this situation by those who were sent to relieve them. He stated, that he was scalped by a white man, that he begged for his life, telling him that he had a family dependent upon him for support, but that the only reply received from his assailant was, that he did not care a d-n. We regret our not being able to state the names of the persons killed and wounded, or the company to which they belonged. It may be two or three days before we have the information.

Since the above was written, we have learned that J. McClenahan and C. Quisenberry were among the number of persons killed at the time of the attack upon Lieut. Brown. One account states the whole number killed at fourteen.

John Avery, Martin, and Douglass, of Capt. Dent’s company, were landed from the Mamerlane, at St. Charles yesterday.

An extract of the same paper of August 13, says, Mr. Coulter, arrived in the Berland, from the Missouri, furnished later and somewhat different details in regard to the death of Lieut. Brown and his men. That officer, with McClenahan and Quisenberry, and a Mexican guide, left camp in pursuit of persons who had stolen horses from them. They did not return, and on the 5th of July information was received from a Mexican woman, that they had been murdered, and their bodies burnt.

Maj. Edmondson, on receiving this news, took measures to avenge their death. He marched with some sixty men, and a howitzer, against the town where the enormities were committed, and discovered that the inhabitants were flying to the mountains. He commanded them to stop, but as they did not do so, he fired upon them, killing six, wounding several others, and taking forty or fifty prisoners, it was ascertained that the bodies of two Americans were burnt, but that the body of Lieut. Brown, who had the emblem of the cross on his neck, and was supposed, from the circumstance, to be a Catholic, was hid in the mountains, where it was afterwards found. All the houses of persons concerned in the murder were burned to the ground, by order of the Major. Some of the articles of property lost in the engagement, at the Red River Canon were found at this place, showing that some of the inhabitants at least, were participants in the affair.

Lieut. Larkin and four privates surprised and killed!

Killed—Lieut. Larkin, and privates Owens, Wright, Mason and Wilkinson, belonging to a grazing party of Lieut. Col. Willock’s battalion, were surprised about daylight on the morning of the 6th July, and killed. Lieut. Brown, was a son of Robert T. Brown, of Perry county in this state. Young McClenahan was from St. Genevieve; and young Quisenberry was a volunteer from this county, the son of Mr. J. T. Quisenberry.

The news will fail with a crushing weight upon his parents— for he was a young man of excellent qualities, and greatly beloved by those who knew him. His return had been looked for, for some time, and, trusting that he had escaped from all the dangers of the service in which he had been engaged, we learn that his mother, with all a mothers care for her children, had prepared his room for him, even in the most minute particulars necessary for his comfort. NNR 72.400 August 21, 1847 Col. Henry R. Jackson’s vindication against a charge of having plundered the hacienda of Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna

The Georgia Regiment.—Col. Henry R. Jackson, commanding this regiment, has addressed a letter to the Savannah Republican, vindicating his command from the charge of having plundered the hacienda of Santa Anna. He says:—

I was in command of the column to which the Georgia regiment was attached on its return march to Vera Cruz, and upon approaching Santa Anna’s hacienda, sent out (as was my custom) a special guard to protect it from molestation. This guard was indeed out before the regiments were dismissed. A highly reliable officer was in charge of it, who reported to me that the house had been completely stripped before our arrival, and that nothing valuable had been left un molested. Similar depredations had been committed upon all the ‘ranchos’ on the road. I heard at the time by whom and for what cause, but learning from experience how false many of these reports are, I am not disposed to give currency to what might have been a slander.

Upon my arrival at Vera Cruz, I made a report in person, of what I had seen, to Gen. Patterson, who informed me that he was already in possession of the facts, and likewise of some very valuable paintings taken from a portion of the soldiery preceding as, which had been violently torn from their frames in the hacienda of Santa Anna. The idea of General Scott’s having written the letter alluded to, is of course, supremely ridiculous. [BRR]

NNR 72.400 August 21, 1847 “National Intelligencer” on Gen. Winfield Scott’s probable course

A leading editorial in this morning’s National Intelligencer commences thus:

We are satisfied, upon a deliberate review of all the public and private accounts that have reached as from Puebla, that no news of a decisive character need be looked for from that quarter for several weeks; one reason for this impression being the want of likelihood that GENERAL SCOTT would undertake to march his force for an attack upon the city of Mexico, without urgent necessity, during the rainy season, which began on the 10th of June, and will not end before late in September. There are other reasons against the probability of an immediate movement by the main body of the army upon the city; but this one reason being sufficient, it was hardly necessary to state the others which have influenced upon our mind, especially as they reach us through private channels. NNR 72.401 August 28, 1847 shifting of specie from New York to New Orleans for war expenses

U.S. FUNDS. There is a report very current about town, that very lately, $2,000,000 in specie was sent from a bank in New York to New Orleans for war purposes. That the operation might not produce alarm in the money market, the money was taken from the bank at midnight. Can the report be true? [Boston Atlas]

It is true that $2,000,000 in specie were taken [ . . . ] from this city and sent to New Orleans, via Philadelphia, Pittsburg and the Mississippi river. It was not, however, taken from a bank, but from the subtreasury. It was sent to New Orleans in charge of a clerk belonging to the treasury department, and was, as stated, taken from the treasury a little after midnight to the Philadelphia line. This transaction took place within a day or two after the promulgation of the report that an arrangement had been made with the Rothschilds, by which it would [ . . . ] be necessary to move coin, and the day after, [ . . . ] who had been in the habit of transporting specie south for the department had been informed that [ . . . ] would be wanted. NNR 72.401 August 28, 1847 invalids brought to Pensacola from Veracruz

The U.S. steam frigate Mississippi, Sidney Smith e, Lieut. Com’g, arrived at Pensacola, on the 14th ult. in five days from Vera Cruz.

The Mississippi, brought over for the naval hospital 144 officers, seamen, nd marines, belonging to the home squadron. Of the number taken from the other vessels of the squadron, none had died on the passage, and none of the 144 were confined to their hammocks.

Though invalids, they were able to be about, and the sickness could not be considered dangerous.-

Among the sick are Surgeon Lewis Minor and Passed Assistant Surgeon John Thornley.

All communication between the Mississippi and the shore had been interdicted, so that little news transpired. Com. Perry had transferred his flag to the sloop of war Germantown.

The fever was prevailing to a considerable extent on board the sloop of war Decatur. Midshipman Carmichael had recently died of it.

It was supposed at Pensacola that the Mississippi would shortly return to Vera Cruz as her crew is intolerable health. Her arrival had led to some delay in despatching the schooner Flirt to Vera Cruz.

Surgeons Geo. Terrill and W. A. W. Spotswood have been ordered to report to Com. Perry for duty in the home squadron. It continues quite healthy in Pensacola.
From the Commercial Advertiser.

The Sub-Treasury.- It has been rumored, for a day or two, that arrangements were making for the transportation of one or two millions of specie to New Orleans, via the magnetic telegraph, or in some other mysterious way, by which the specie should remain in Wall street, and at the same time the government should have it in New Orleans. We can now say that the arrangement was yesterday consummated- one million of specie being taken out of the sub-treasury and placed in the State Bank, as the first step of its progress southward.

We cannot, of course, know what security is taken by the secretary of the treasury that the specie shall be delivered in New Orleans. It is probably an agreement of certain banks or individuals to pay the sum stipulated within a specified time, it being understood that they get it there in such manner as they may find convenient or profitable. When the government employs the express house to transport their funds, a bill of lading or receipt is given for certain boxes containing so much specie; and the delivery by them of any other boxes, or any alteration of the contents, would be a breach of contract. In such cases we are bound to suppose the government allows no tampering with its money. But the arrangement completed yesterday is for a different character. It does not require the delivery of the identical specie, but merely and equivalent amount of specie, and hence adds to the responsibility assumed by the secretary of the treasury, that of the parties with whom the arrangement is made- not merely that, as honest men, they will transport it safely, but that, as solvent men, they will be able to deliver it at the appointed time and place, because they are allowed the use of the money until the time specified for its repayment.

The Advertiser proceeds to comment on this as a violation of the sub-treasury law and to speak of the transaction as a loaning of the government funds, and as such, a felony in Mr. Walker.

On this the New York Courier remarks as follows: "There is, we believe, no doubt but the secretary of the treasury, in order to save to the government the expense of transporting the specie to New Orleans, and in order to guard against a further drain of two millions of specie from this city, has made an arrangement with a capitalist by which the wants of the treasury will be supplied, and, at the same time, the specie not be moved. Such, we learn, will be the effect of the arrangement; and right glad are we to learn it. But the secretary of the treasury, as we understand, simply turns over the specie here to Mr. A B, with orders to deliver the amount in New Orleans on a day named! This is doubtless in compliance with the letter of a bad law; and the single fact that it cannot be carried out in spirit, demonstrates that it should be rejected. The procedure, however, is one which cannot be otherwise than favorable to commerce, and will, at the same time, save a large sum to the country. If it also proves the folly of the sub-treasury, so much the better. We certainly shall not complain of it on that account."

The Union gives the following explanation of the transaction:

"Now the transfer made by the secretary is in exact conformity not only with the letter, but also with the spirit of the law. The power is not to transport specie from one depository to another, but to "transfer moneys."

Now, the simple question is, whether the same identical dollars in gold and silver must be transported from the depository in N. York to the depository in New Orleans, or whether the same amount of specie may not lawfully be transferred under the law. The secretary is to "transfer money’s from one depository to another" at his discretion,” “as the safety of the public moneys and the convenience of the public service shall seem to him to require.” The secretary is vested by law with full discretion to judge of the mode of transfer, and is to make the transfer in such mode or modes as he may deem most safe and convenient.

Well, what is the present case? The secretary of the treasury is called upon by the war department, a few weeks in advance, to place certain amounts in specie, at certain dates, at New Orleans, for the prosecution for the war. Based upon the requisitions, the secretary, under the law, contracts with a capitalist of undoubted solvency at New York, who receives the specie there, to deposit the amounts required in specie at New Orleans at the times designated by the secretary of war. To the secretary and the government it makes no difference whether same identical dollars be deposited in New Orleans, provided the amount in specie is the same, and that the deposit received in specie is made in specie. Nor does the law make, either in its letter or spirit, any such absurd requisition as to deposite the identical dollars; nor has it ever been so construe, but always otherwise.
In the present case, the transfer was made of two millions in specie, to be delivered in specie at New Orleans within an average period of thirty eight days from the actual receipt of the money in New York. Now, in the present stage of the water, it would take at least twenty days to transport the specie from New York To New Orleans, even if it were all sent at once in the same conveyance; but as this might probably be unsafe or impracticable, we submit whether an average period of thirty eight days is too long to allow for the transfer of two millions in specie from New York to New Orleans. The idea of a loan never entered into the head of the secretary, nor, considering the duty to be performed would such a thing be possible. The secretary, under the law, simply contracts for the delivery of so much specie in New Orleans; and, if the party making the contract already has the specie of his own in New Orleans, is it not much more safe and convenient for him to deposite that specie in New Orleans, which is already there, rather than incur the greater delay and hazard of sending from New York to New Orleans the identical dollars received at New York? The truth is, such as idea never occurred to any friend of the constitutional treasury; and it is only its enemies who desire to destroy it by rendering it unsafe or impracticable, that can give the law such a construction.” [BRR]

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF THOSE GALLANT OFFICERS OF THE 1ST DRAGOONS, WHO Fell IN DEFENCE OF THEIR COUNTRY IN THE PRESENT WAR

Death loves to strike
Where deepest he can wound:
And deepest loss his shafts inflict
Is not the numbers- but the men.

If, as the poet says, "death loves a shining mar," truly does the demon of war select for his victims the choicest spirits among the noble and the brave. How large and frequent have been his gleanings f this kind among the officers and men of our gallant, though little army, as if to neutralize the glory it has acquired in the present war, and as a tax upon the immortal fame of its unparalleled achievements! He has demanded, time and again, the flower and chivalry of the noble spirits that compose her gallant regiments and on the 1st dragoons his exactions have been painfully exorbitant.

This regiment had acquired under the command of Col. KEARNY, a high rank- a most enviable reputation for accomplished soldiership. The personel of this regiment, moral, intellectual and physical, was of the very highest order, and furnished a living and mighty demonstration, resistless as the omnipotency of truth, that moral and intellectual qualities are the strength, glory and efficiency of the soldier. And when the war began- when the first notes of the clarion came upon the breeze of the south- how ardent the enthusiasm, how uncontrollable the desire in every breast to hasten to the field of strife, to join their brother soldiers there. But what a change has one short year wrought among and upon that gallant band, that left here so full of hope- so replete with devotion to their country- so ambitious of fame.- Who can recall to remembrance without sad and mournful reflections, their gallant bearing- their proud and brilliant array, as they defiled from out the grove that shades the green parade of the fort, as the band poured forth the rich and soul-inspiring notes of our finest national airs! The very horses appeared to partake of the martial enthusiasm for the their riders, and to be impatient for the battle they seemed to smell afar off. But alas! how many of those stalwart arms are now paralyzed in death! How many of those gallant hearts, whose every pulsation was for honor, truth and chivalry, are cold and still as the dust of the valley that enshrouds their mouldering bodies! How many of those gallant and manly forms that were borne away on their proud and prancing steeds, now sleep the sleep that knows no waking, and year after year the lone minds of heave shall wail their sad requiem over their slumbering dust, while spring, unconscious of sorrow, wo and care, will hang her garlands of peace around, and autumn will shower his faded glories- sad emblems of mortality upon the lonely graves of the good, the generous, and the brave.

The first on the list of the gallant officers of the 1st dragoons, who fell in battle, is Capt. JOHN H. K. BURGWIN, than whom a better or braver man never yielded his life to the cause of his country. A brief notice of this wost estimable man and invaluable officer, is all we can present, for no communication, however extended and ably drawn, could do justice to his merits. He was a native of N. Carolina and descended from one of the first families in the state, where his father still resides to mourn his irreparable loss.

At an early age Captain BURGWIN entered West Point academy- an institution that is equaled by none in the world, and which has imparted that high moral and chivalrid character to our army, which renders its officers so invincible in war, and so distinguished for the gentler virtues in peace. He graduated with distinguished honors, and then entered the army, serving some years in the infantry, from which he was transferred to the 1st dragoons at its formation, in which he served until his death, which occurred on the 7th of February last, from a wound received on the 4th of that month, at the battle of Puebla De Taos in N.M. He fell in the 37th year of his age, lamented by all, for none knew him, but to love and esteem him.
The writer of this short biography, who was honored with his friendship and intimacy for several years, can say of him, that here is not a virtue which adorns and elevates human character, that Captain BURGWIN did not possess in its living and practical character, and the writer can as truly say, that if he possessed a single defect, he know it not. His mind was of the first order, and highly cultivated, not only in all that pertained to his profession, but also in all that constituted the general science and literature of the times; and with the firmness and inflexibility of the soldier were combined the choicest refinement of manners, purity of sentiment, integrity of principle, and gentleness of spirit. Nature seems in him to have furnished a living demonstration of an important truth, which many are slow in receiving- that every virtue which can beautify humanity, can enter into combination with the highest virtues and noblest excellencies of the soldier- and that the latter, are all the better, the brighter, and the nobler, when found in combination with the former.

In the language of the master poet and delineator of human character, we would say of our lamented friend,

"His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up
And say to all the world,
This was a man."

The next is Capt. BENJAMIN D. MOORE, who fell at San Pasqual, in California, the 6th of December, gallantly fighting the battle of his country against overwhelming numbers. Captain MOORE was born in Davis, Bourbon county, Kentucky. At the age of sixteen he received a midshipman's appointment to the United States navy, and was employed several years on many an active and remote cruise. In this service he acquired in a high degree the esteem and confidence of his superior officers and messmates, and passed his examination with great credit.

After several years absence on hard service, he returned on a visit to his family, who had removed to Illinois. This was at the commencement of the Black Hawk war. Capt. Moore entered into Capt. Mathew Duncans's company of mounted rangers and was elected first lieutenant of the company, and in that capacity served with great ability during the war; and when the rangers were consolidated into the 1st dragoon, his gallantry and good conduct gained him the appointment permitting him to change his commission from the navy as a [ . . . ] and merited favor.

From that time until his death, his character and conduct as an officer, gentleman, and soldier, were such as secured to him universal esteem. Time would fail to tell of his many and most estimable qualities- of his intrepid courage- his exalted sense of honor- his devotion to his profession, and to his country through his profession- his chivalry, his magnanimity, and his detestation of whatever was dishonorable and mean; and then his generosity and unerring hospitality, how many can testify to the qualities. His hear was alike full of true benevolence as patriotic devotion; and his hand was ever as ready to relieve the distress of others, as his arm was strong to strike for his country. And in all thoughts, feelings, calculations and actions, such never appeared to have a voice or a hearing. For others he alone seemed to exist, as for others he died. As a husband, none could be more affectionate, devoted and kind, and as a father, none could exceed him in paternal tenderness and care. Two children mourn their sad bereavement and early orphanage, their mother having died a few years previous.

In the action in which he lost his life, he was pierced with sixteen lance wounds; his sword was shivered to pieces, after he had cut down some of the Mexicans, and he fell dead, grasping the hilt in his hand.

The next in this distinguished list of heroes, is Capt. ABRAHAM JOHNSTON, who also fell at the same time and place with Capt. Moore.

Capt. JOHNSTON was a native of Ohio, and a graduate of West Point. He was an excellent officer, and a gentleman of most excellent character, and most moral and amiable in his conduct and manners. His mind was of the highest order, and was a most devoted worshipper in the temple of science; his scientific acquisitions were very great, and his love and pursuit of it were most ardent and unwearied. His scientific journal, which he was keeping in the expedition to California, would have been interesting and valuable had he lived to complete it.

The last on this list, is Lieut. THOS C HAMMOND, who was also a graduate of West Point, and had been a little more than three years in the service. But he gave early promise of becoming a valuable officer. Generous, noble, honorable and highminded, he was proud of his profession, and panted for distinction on the battle field, but his first battle was also his last. He fell beside Capt. Moore, who he endeavored to save. They were brothers in law- both having married daughters of Judge Hughes, a worthy citizen of Latte county, Mo. And thus those two gallant officers, most amiable in life, and united together by life's holiest and dearest ties, "in death were not divided."

Lieutenant HAMMOND leaves a young and amiable wife, and one child, to weep their loss; and his mother, now also a widow, (for his father is dead, Gen'l. Hammond, late paymaster in the U.S. army) resides in Milton, Pennsylvania, to mourn over her double bereavement.
Thus have fallen, in the flower of their days, some of the noblest of our country's chivalry. But we indulge the hope—the more than hope—that they rest from their labors with Him, who is the "resurrection and the life."

Chaplain U.S. Army.

NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847, expectation that guerrillas can be driven from the sand hills near Vera Cruz and the road opened to Jalapa

Two hundred mules, laden with sugar and other articles from Orizaba and above, had just arrived at Vera Cruz, which is the first opening that a trade with the interior has experienced. The writer feels confident that, as they have a body of 200 cavalry in the town, they can act on the offensive and drive the guerrillas back from the sand hills; and that as soon as Col. Hughes should arrive with his corps of cavalry, &c, they would have no difficulty opening the road at least to Jalapa. The idea of such an event was calculated to inspire everybody, and especially the foreign merchants, with the hope that foreign importations will increase and specie come down to the city. It was said there was six millions in money and bullion waiting for the opening of the road. The writer confirms the intelligence of 1,100 troops leaving on the 6th inst. to join the main army under the command of Col. Wilson, (of North Carolina) who had arrived there a day or two previous; but he was unable to join them in consequence of an attack of the fever. [LTR]

NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847, "Union's" denial of the "National Intelligencer's" statement on Gen. Winfield Scott's actions

In a postscript in our last, we inserted part of a leading editorial from the National Intelligencer of that morning, relative to the movements of General Scott.

The Washington Union of Monday thus notices the article:

"Wen do not know to what its [the National Intelligencer's] "private channels' of information may be but we doubt in one respect the accuracy of the information of the National Intelligencer. We know perfectly well that General Scott has received no instruction from the department to suspend his operations in consequence of the weather, or of want of reinforcements or of any other cause whatever, except the ratification of a treaty. We know, further, that the department has received no such notice of his intentions as stated by the National Intelligencer, from General Scott himself, or any other officer of the army. We know further, that a letter has been received by one of the principal bureaus of Washington, from a most intelligent officer of General Scott's army, and very much in his confidence, who states that the negotiation is said to have failed; and, therefore, as soon as General Pierce should join him with his detachment, the general would march on to occupy the capital. We are also almost sure that General Scott has every motive to strike at the capital, and that nothing but insurmountable difficulties or the most urgent necessity would induce him to risk his own military character and the glory of the service, and the chance of negotiation and of peace, by declining to take possession of the capital. For General Scott to postpone his advance until "late September," for fear of the rain, would be to put everything at hazard."

The Union then goes on to argue that the "rains" are not usually such as should prevent the advance of Gen. Scott, and though it does not say that he will not advance, yet it leaves an impression that he may fail to do so, and thus bring down upon him the severest censure. [LTR]

NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847 failure of efforts to exchange Midshipman Robert Clay Rodgers

From The Army.- Letters have been received in this city by the last arrivals from Vera Cruz.- Among them is an interesting letter, (which we have seen,) from Puebla, of the 28th of July. General Scott had sent on a flag of truce on the subject of prisoners. It went forward on the 13th, and with it Lieut. R. Semmes, of the navy, who had been sent on some time since to Gen. Scott's camp, for the purpose of effecting on exchange for Midshipmen Rodgers, of the navy, and, if necessary, threatening retaliation in case the Mexicans should treat him as a spy

This flag, however, was stopped by the Mexican authorities a couple of miles beyond the Rio Frio, and some thirty-five miles from the city of Mexico. They refused the flag any admission into the city, and the dispatches were necessarily sent on by the Mexicans themselves. A reply had been received from the Mexican government agreeing to exchange Mr. Rodgers, with the other prisoners; but the terms of exchange ha not yet been settled, but probably would be in a few weeks. In consequence of this reply. Lieutenant Semmes had deemed it most prudent to withhold Commodore Perry’s peremptory letter. [LTR]

NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847, Nicholas Phillip Trist despairs of negotiating at present

This letter from Puebla further states that Mr. Trist, who had been endeavoring for a month previously to open a negotiation with the Mexican government, had abandoned all hope of success—at least for the present. Mr. Buchanan’s letter had reached Santa Anna through the courteous offices of Mr. Bankhead, and, as we have seen it repeatedly stated in the papers, was referred by Santa Anna to the congress—a session of this body being called for that purpose. After many delays, and much apparent unwillingness to meet, the congress assembled with a quorum of 74 members on the 13th of July. It immediately took the subject into consideration, and, as we have seen it stated, adopted a report and resolution to the following effect, viz: that it belonged to the executive, under their constitution, to receive all ministers and other public agents, and to make treaties of peace, alliances, &c.; that the functions of congress were limited to the approving or disapproving of these treaties when made; and that, consequently, until a treaty should be submitted to it in form, it could take no constitutional action on the subject. Accordingly the congress returned Mr. Buchanan’s letter to Santa Anna, and adjourned on the same day it had met. The letter states there had been no meeting since most of the members having run off. It goes on to the state that, upon the receipt of this report and these resolutions, Santa Anna issued a proclamation, stating that congress, on the 20th of April last, had passed a decree declaring that any Mexican in authority, who should proposition for peace from the enemy, should be deemed a traitor and treated accordingly; and that, until this decree was repealed, his hands were tied, and he could do nothing; adding, at the same time, that as Mr. Buchanan’s letter was courteous, it was due to the character of the Mexican nation to give it at least a polite reception and consideration. Thus, says the letter, the matter stands—neither Santa Anna nor the congress daring to take the responsibility of treating with us, and leaving us no alternative but to march to the capital, subdue and occupy it. “It is barely possible when Santa Anna shall be again beaten and his troops dispersed, that he may be overthrown by a revolution, and that the new party may make peace with us.” The writer, however, thinks it quite likely, considering the dogged obstinacy of the race, that they will reject the olive branch for the present, and compel us to prosecute the war with a greater and a more sweeping vigor. NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847, refusal of the Mexican congress to consider overtures for peace

We have not yet sufficient data to calculate the chances of peace or war; but as Mexico is famous for her dilatory policy and her inconsistent counsels, and as from her character we should suppose that she may employ negotiation with the idle hope of gaining time, so we cannot doubt our military operations will not be seriously suspended until the ratification of a treaty of peace. We presume our propositions, if they should be submitted, are drawn so clearly and distinctly as not to admit of much evasion or delay. We date to venture another suggestion—that the administration is preparing for either fortune, and that additional preparations are making a vigorous prosecution of the war, if such necessity should be imposed upon us. NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847, Gen. Winfield Scott awaiting Gen. Franklin Pierce before advancing on to Mexico

The letter states that Gen. Scott was only awaiting the arrival of Gen. Pierce, who was expected in about ten days, to move forward. Many were expecting a greater battle on the plains of Mexico, as Santa Anna is said to have 25,000 troops, and has fortified the city and its approaches. [LTR]

NNR 72.409 August 28, 1847, various rumors about the Mexican peace party, gathering of Mexican troops at Mexico City

We have seen a later letter from Vera Cruz—viz: on the 7th of August. The writer then indulges more hope of peace—the dawning of which, as he states, the British minister speaks of in his letter to the British consul at Vera Cruz. And even some officers of distinction in Mexico had expressed to their Mexican friends in Vera Cruz the same opinion. This letter also states Col. Wilson had just received a letter from Gen. Soto, the Mexican governor of Orizaba, saying that he will exchange Lieutenant Whipple, recently taken by the guerrillas, for a lieutenant colonel, who is known in Vera Cruz, and will also give four other American prisoners into the bargain; but the colonel is rather scrupulous in undertaking the responsibility of the exchange. [LTR]

NNR 72.409-410 August 28, 1847, correspondence between Gen. Winfield Scott and Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna relative to peace intercepted by the Mexicans

The New Orleans La Patria, of the 15th, publishes letters from Tampico, from which we give some extracts below, stating that a private correspondence had been intercepted between Gen. Scott and Gen. Santa Anna, which had produced much excitement at the capital. It carries rather a treasonable appearance on the face of it, as regards to Santa Anna, but he explains it by saying he was endeavoring to lead Gen. Scott into a trap.

We have no opportunity of knowing how far the correspondence of La Patria may be depended on, but the tenor of the last advices from Puebla and Mexico, are of a nature, we think, to render the present information very probable. N.O. Bulletin. Tampico, Aug. 6th, 1847. In a letter dated the 9th August, published in La Patria, the information respecting the “intercepted correspondence” is confirmed. [LTR]

NNR 72.410 August 28, 1847, dispute between Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna and the Mexican Congress on entertaining peace overtures

Mexico- Santa Anna has made a new communication to congress, through the secretary of foreign affairs, in which he tells them, that if they area not willing to take the responsibility on the subject of Mr. Buchanan’s letter, neither is he. That he does not wish congress to take the initiative, further than to express its opinion, whether the proposals from the American government shall be listened to or not. If congress will express their opinion on this point, it will be followed by him. If it wishes him to listen to the proposals of the United States, he will do so, and he then knows what his duties are.

Congress has given no answer to this, as no quorum can be obtained. There is an existing law, declaring all those traitors, who propose a peace, and the executive would certainly come within the provisions of the law, if he opened negotiations for that object. As matters now stand, there appears but little prospect of any thing being done, as in the position that Santa Anna has assumed, with congress, it is very evident that he cannot enter into any negotiations until congress has acted on the subject and expressed their assent to the measure.

The result, probably will be the immediate advance of Gen. Scott. The capture of the capital, and then possibly, perhaps, even probably, congress may express its willingness that negotiations should be opened. Even however, if this was done the views fo the two governments, are so opposite, as regards terms, particularly as to territory, that we see but little chance of their agreeing.

The Mexicans, however, seem confident of being able to defend their city successfully. If they can do so, all hopes or probability of peace would vanish entirely. A repulse of General Scott, situated as he is, we should regard as equal to an actual defeat, as the whole country would rise like a swarm of bees upon his meeting with any serious reverse.

So confident are the enemy in their strength, that it is stated, they intend to dispatch a considerable force from the capital towards Vera Cruz, in order the more effectually to cut off all communications in the rear, and intercept supplies coming up. The force in and near the city, is estimated at 30,000 men. [LTR]

NNR 72.410 August 28, 1847, details of a letter from Tampico

Extract from a letter from Tampico, dated 7th of August:

“Our dates from the capital are to the 30th. Gen. Scott had moved. The letters are very barren of political news, as, since the expedition, writers are afraid to compromise themselves. Our regular mail from the city, is for the present, destroyed, owing as much to the late expedition, as to the order of Col. Gates that all letters should first be shown to him previous to distribution. They, however, find their way in, by private hands; owing to these late orders, the contents are only spoken of confidentially.

“You will find herewith, an order from the colonel of the 7th, in which citizens are forbid furnishing any article, that might find its way to the public press, under penalty of expulsion. I learned the order will be strictly enforced, without regard to the amount of sacrifice that might be incurred by the parties.

NNR 72.410 August 28, 1847, American comments on the leadership of Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna

Santa Anna-The Nashville “Union” coincides with the Richmond Enquirer, in considering it fortunate that Santa Anna was placed in command of the Mexican army. The paper says:

“We are not aware that any mischief has been done by Santa Anna to the advance of our arms-On the contrary, we think that if we can keep such cowards at the head of the Mexican army we shall have easy work of it, compared with what we should have if Paredes, or Arista, or Vega were at the head of the Mexican forces; and we have also supposed that he would make a peace as soon as he could though he has now to appear to be warlike to do away with the charge of cowardice.”

NNR 72.410 August 28, 1847, Brownson’s “Quarterly Review” on the war

Mr. Brownson, the late editor of the Democratic Review, who now publishes the Quarterly Review, in his last number, in reference to the Mexican war, says-

“For ourselves, we have regarded the Mexican war from the first as uncalled for, impolitic, and unjust. We have examined the documents published by order of the government; we have read the official defence of the war in the last annual message of the president to congress, and with every disposition to find our own government in the right; but we are bound to say, that our original impressions have been strengthened rather than weakened. The president undoubtedly, makes it clear that we had many just causes of complaint against Mexico, which at the time of their occurrence might have justified reprisals, perhaps even war, but he cannot plead these in justification of the present war, for they were not the ground on which we professed to engage in it. The official announcement of the president to congress was that the war already existed between the two republics, by the act of Mexico herself, and whatever use we may make of old grievances in adjusting the terms of peace, we can make no use of them in defending the war. We can plead in its defence only the fact on which we grounded it namely, war exists by the act of Mexico herself. But unhappily, at the time of the official announcement, war did not exist between the two republics at all, for neither republic had declared war against the other. There had been a collision of their forces, but this was not war, as the president would have conceded, had he known or recollected the distinction between war and hostilities. By placing the war on the ground that it existed by the act of Mexico, and that ground being false, he has left it wholly indefensible, whatever the old grievances we may have to allege against Mexico.

“The act of Mexico in crossing the Rio Grande, and engaging our troops on territory which she had possessed and still claimed as hers, but which we asserted had, by a recent act against which she had protested, become ours-the act which the president chose to inform congress and the world was war-may or may not have been a just cause for declaring war against her, but it assuredly was not war itself. We have no intention to justify Mexico. She may have been decidedly in the wrong; she may have had no valid title to the territory of which the president had just taken military occupation; that territory may have been rightfully ours, and it may even have been the duty of the president to occupy and defend it;--but it cannot be denied that she had once possessed it; that it was still apart of one of her states or provinces; that she still claimed it, and had continued to exercise jurisdiction over it, till driven from it by our army of occupation; that she invaded it with an armed force, if invasion it can be called, not as territory belonging to us, but as territory belonging to her; and that she attacked our troops, not for the reason that they were intruders, on her soil. The motive of her act was not war.

"No sophistry can make her act war,-certainly not without conceding that our act in taking military possession of that territory was also war; and if that was war, if it existed at all, it existed by our act and not by hers, for her act was consequent upon ours. The most that the president was at liberty to say, without condemning his own government, was that there had been a collision of the forces of the two republics on a territory claimed by each; but this collision he had no right to term war, for everybody knows that it takes something more than a collision of the respective forces on a disputed territory to constitute a war between two civilized nations. In no possible point of view was the announcement of the president that war existed between the two republics, and existed by the act of Mexico, correct. It did not exist at all; or if it did it existed not by act of Mexico, but by our act. In either case, the official announcement was false, and cannot be defended.

"The president may have been governed by patriotic motives; he may have felt that a prompt and energetic action was required; he may have believed that in great emergencies the chief magistrate of a powerful republic, having to deal with a weak and distracted state, should rise superior to mere technical forms, and the niceties of truth and honor; but it strikes us that he would have done better, proved himself more patriotic, and sufficiently prompt and energetic, if he had confined himself to the ordinary rules of morality, and the well defined principles of international law. By aspiring to rise above these and to appear original, he has placed his country in a false position, and debarred himself, whatever the just causes of war Mexico may have given us from pleading one of them in justification of the actual war. We must be permitted to regret that he did not reflect before-hand, that, if he placed the defence of the war on the ground that it already existed, and existed by the act of Mexico herself, and on that ground demanded of congress the means of prosecuting it, he would, in case that ground proved to be untenable, as he must have known it would, have nothing whatever to allege in its or his own justification. He should have been lawyer enough to have known that he could not plead anew, after having failed on his first issue. It is often hazardous in our pleadings to plead what is not true, and in doing so in the present case, the president has not only offended morality, which he may regard as a small matter, but has even committed a blunder.

"The course the president should have pursued is plain and obvious. On learning the state of things on the frontier, the critical condition of our army of occupation, he should have demanded of congress the reinforcements and supplies necessary to relieve and secure the purpose for which it was avowedly sent to the Rio Grande; and, if he believed it proper or necessary, to have in addition laid before congress a full and truthful statement of our retaliations with Mexico including all the unadjusted complaints past and present, we had against her, accompanied by the recommendation of a declaration of war. He would then have kept within the limits of his duty, proved himself a plain constitutional president, and left the responsibility of war or no war to congress the only war making power known to the laws.-Congress after mature deliberations, might or might not have so or not the responsibility would have resulted with it, and no blame would have attached to the president

"Unhappily, this course did not occur to the president, or was too plain and simple to meet his probation. As if fearful, if congress deliberated, it might refuse to declare war, and as if determined to have war a any rate, he presented to congress, not the true issue, whether the war should or should not be declared-but the false issue, whether congress would grant hi the means of prosecuting a war waged against us by a foreign power. In the true issue, congress might have hesitated-in the one actually presented there was no room to hesitate if the official announcement of the president was to be credited, and hesitation would have been criminal.

"By declaring the war already existed, and by the act of Mexico herself, the president relieved congress of the responsibility of the war, by throwing it on Mexico. But since he cannot fasten it on Mexico,-for war did not already exist, or if so, by our act and not hers,-it necessarily recoils upon himself, and he must bear the responsibility of doing what the constitution forbids him to do,-of making war without the intervention of congress. In effect, therefore, he has trampled the constitution under his feet set a dangerous precedent, and by the official publication of a palpable falsehood, sullied the national honor.

"It is with no pleasure that we speak thus of the chief magistrate of the Union, for whose elevation to his high and responsible office we ourselves voted. But whatever may be our attachment to party, or the respect we hold to be due from all good citizens to the civil magistrate, we cannot see the constitution violated; and the national honor sacrificed, whether by friend or foe, from good motives or bad, without entering, feeble though it be, our stern and indigenous protest.” [LTR]

NRR 72.410-411 August 28,1847, Washington "Union” on the Whig Party's policy toward the war with Mexico

The Washington Union charges the Whig party with inducing the Mexicans to continue the war. The following is from the paper:

"At this very moment Mexico holds out in the war exclusively on the arguments and pretenses which the opposition orators and presses among ourselves have framed for her, and instructed her to employ. She says we have “robbed” her of Texas. She has adopted both the idea and the phrase of it from the recognized organs of the creed of the opposition. She says we are fighting her to oppress and degrade her, and dismember her territory. She finds the very terms she uses, set down for her in the opposition speeches and journals, and beholds the opposition party of our country rallied upon them as a party motto. She proclaims that to her the question is a question of national existence: and for proof of her assertion, she points to such devices as the “lust of conquest” and the “destruction of a sister republic,” emblazoned on every flag. She calls her people to resistance and endurance, and such predatory battle is they have yet the power to make, avowedly on the hope that the administration her must soon abandon the war; and, as a reason for such faith, she cites the abased diatribes in which the leading organs of the opposition have again and again labored to demonstrate that our war has yet “conquered” nothing but the “spirit of our own constitution” and that its unpopularity with the people must soon eject from power the councils in which it has been waged. Her rulers tell her people that peace is dishonor; and find their warrant to say so in the federal invectives which denounce the war on our part as “ruthless rapine and murder,” and call upon the Mexicans to “welcome the invaders with bloody hands and a hospitable grave.” Her government journals announce to their deluded readers the approaching advent of “a better spirit towards Mexico” in our government, and for proof, they cite the stereotyped federal motto of “no more Mexican territory.”

Mainly—nay, almost solely—upon such federal paid and comfort, the war of Mexico holds out. She looks for help to her “allies” here. American action fights her battle for her, when she can no longer battle with hope of success in the field. The war has been full of victories. Thanks to the ability with which it has been planned and organized, and the high-souled valor with which it has been fought our conflicts have been victories. The military prowess of our people and of our institutions has excited the astonishment and won the admiration of the world. But the fury of faction has found, in the freedom of those same institutions, “room and verge” enough to rally a “peace party” with power to rob our victories, in large measure, of their moral effect upon our enemy, to inspire her new courage and so to protract her hostilities even when the sinews of her war are broken and withered.

NRR 72.411 August 28, 1847, New Hampshire “Statesman” on the Whig party and the Mexican war

The New Hampshire Statesman, inserts the above under the caption of “WHO PROTRACTS THE WAR” and says:—“The federalists are continually denouncing the government for not bringing the war to a close, while they themselves are doing more than any body else to prevent what they pretended so ardentely to desire. They in fact caused the war; for no one believes that the Mexicans would ever have committed the first act of hostility, if they had not been encouraged to do so by their allies in this country. It was the conduct of the Mexican sympathizers here that caused the war; and we have abundant evidence that it is their conduct—the encouragement, “aid and comfort” which they are daily affording the Mexicans—which is protracting the war.”

The Statesman concluded its editorial by saying:—“With these incontrovertible facts before them, the intelligent and patriotic people of this country will have no difficulty in determining where rests the responsibility of the continuance of war. They will see that but for federal “aid and comfort” the Mexicans would have accepted our offers of peace months ago; they will see that our country has been robbed of the fruits of her score of splendid victories, by “the base and selfish purpose of faction,” and seeing this, and these factionists still continue their base game, they will readily infer that before we can secure that peace which we desire and which we are fighting to obtain, we must conquer and disarm the foe from within our own borders.” [LTR]

“We are absolutely without news in this quarter and are anxiously looking towards Mexico, expecting to hear either of an armistice or the occupation of the capital by our troops. Should there be no peace, a forward movement will be made by this column, by 1st September. Gen. Taylor will probably be able to take with him about 6,000 men.

ATROCITIES—Robbery, rape, and hanging appear to be the order of the day among the rancheros in the neighborhood of Matamoros. A few days ago a party of robbers went to the house of a Mexican in the country, and while a few of them amused themselves by hanging the man, the rest perpetrated the two first named crimes. There are bands of lawless desperado Mexicans prowling about our vicinity, whom it would be well for our scouting parties to look out for. The hanged Mexican was not much hurt-the object of his tortures being more to divert his attention from what the others were doing, than any thing else. [LTR]

NNR 72.411 August 28, 1847 "the starving Mexicans at the battle of Buena Vista"

The starving Mexicans at the Battle of Buena Vista. After quoting paragraphs and letters that had been published here, stating that the Mexican army during the battle of Buena Vista were suffering from hunger and thirst, the Picket Guard says: "Unadulterated falsehood, every word of this. "Hunger and thirst!" Santa Anna’s camp at Encantada stretched for two miles along the banks of a plenteous stream of as good water as there is in Mexico-water enough to supply a million of men. And along this stream lay the heads and bones of 50 to 100 becves that had been slaughtered during the short stay at Encantada. This looks wondrously like starvation. Besides our men all know, that there was scarcely a Mexican found on the field of battle that had not at least a day’s provision in h his haversack. A likely story that men in starving condition would lug around with them provisions in their haversacks.” [ANP]

NNR 72.411 August 28, 1847, comments on the withdrawal of the second and third Indiana regiments from Mexico

THE HOOSIERS. The 2nd and 3rd Indiana regiments, the first under Col. Bowles, and the other under Col. Lane and his brave band, they will go home to meet the warm greetings and congratulations of their friends, for having nobly borne the hardships of the campaign and sustained the honor of their state and country by their brave and gallant conduct of the field. But while they are reaping this rich reward for their toils, let them not forget to do justice to their brethren of the 2nd. Does that once ardent friend, now by his cold greeting and inquisitive look seem to question their gallantry on the field? It is unjust let no man refer to the 2nd Indiana regiment as an exception to the uniform brave conduct of the volunteers. It may be true that if they kept their position in the morning it would have made a difference in the result of the day; but it was not the men that faltered before the enemy. The ill conceived and shockingly managed retreat, with all its calamities must rest on others shoulders. They obeyed orders; and who, after such a retreat can blame them for not being prompt to rally? To rally where?-Upon some other regiments indeed was their only alternative and most of them did so. Nay, if the men of the 2nd Indiana regiment are no cowards, then are all regiments such; for there cannot be collected a body of 500 men from any state in the Union who under like circumstances would not have been guilty of the same conduct. [LTR]

NNR 72.411 August 28, 1847, praise for Private Divers and Corporal Agnew

PRIVATE DIVERS I was pleased to see in your last number a communication awarding justice to a few privates that distinguished themselves in the battle of Buena Vista, and since it as so well met your own approbation. I will take the liberty to add a few more names to the list.

No man can deserve more praise for his general conduct during the battle at Buena Vista than private Divers, of company I 21 Illinois regiment-He was always in and in advance of the front rank, especially when on a charge and more than once during the day. I heard his officers calling him back. For his gallant bearing, he was complimented on the field in my hearing by the lamented Hardin. In the vast charge he captured the flag that had previously been captured and lost by Captain Raith, and, although it necessarily rendered him a conspicuous object he bore it in the retreat as far as the road having been twice attacked on the way. At the road he was attacked by four lancers turning to defend himself from whom he fell; and before he could recover himself, the flag and his gun having fallen some distance from him, his assailants recaptured the flag and were sending it to the rear. He shot the man that bore it and the imminent risk of his life retook it and bore it in triumph.

CORPORAL AGNEW, Again, the conduct of young Agnew, a corporal in the same company, merits all praise. He carried the banner out on the morning of the 23rd, and in our first retreat went no further than to the brow of the ravine into which he was ordered, where he planted his colors and declared that they should be wafted in sight of the enemy as long as he had the honor to bear them. He stood nobly by them all day and though rent by the enemy’s balls, they were never lowered and were borne in safe at the close of the day. [LTR]

NRR 72.411 August 28, 1847 Incident Involving Maj. Joseph K.F. Mansfield at the Battle of Monterey

An incident at the Battle of Monterey.—While Col. Davis, with his command, was hotly engaged with the enemy, exposed to their direct fire, a man in a long gray surtout suddenly rode up, and, dismounting, placed himself in the middle of the street. There, in face of the enemy, amidst the thickest of the fire, he coolly drew from a case, suspended about his person, a spy-glass, with which, having adjusted it to a proper focus, he proceeded to reconnoiter the Mexican battery. Having satisfied himself as to the information the sought, he shut up the glass, returned it to its case, and, approaching Col. Davis, said to him: "Sir, the enemy has but two pieces, and by making a detour to the right you can take them in flank?" "And who the devil are you?" "I, sir, am Major Mansfield, of the corps of engineers." "All right! come on boys!" responded the colonel. The battery was soon carried. [TNW]

NRR 72.411-412 August 28, 1847, comment of Sr. Pacheco’s circulars on conduct of war with the United States and establishment of peace

SIR: The nomination which his excellency the president has been pleased to make of the undersigned to the portfolio of the first secretaryship—in which post he tenders to your excellency his services both to aid in promoting the happiness of the state and to yourself individually—is a confirmation in every respect of the programme which has been proclaimed by every act of the administration. Drawn from the bosom of congress where he has constantly advocated and voted for the maintenance of the war until glorious peace and should be obtained; an influential actor in the glorious movement in August, which had for its object to restore to the nation its institutions, and to wash out the stain inflicted upon it by a general who abandoned the cause of our nationality; an original supporter of the federative system and well known as the author of various writings published by him as a private citizen; ever the exponent of the ideas of liberty and order—the president has thought favorably of his capacity to express his orders based on these views.

One of the weapons which is always employed in wars of invasion—especially when waged as is this upon Mexico, without a noble aim or from a just motive—is to sow dissention among the people which is invaded; for there is no people, however weak it may be, that it is not strong and invincible when united. Unfortunately our people is not united, and in good earnest this infernal policy has here found opportunity to show its efficacy. It had almost succeeded and would have completely succeeded, had it not been resisted by a few—so far as to deliver over, bound hand and foot, the chief of the nation into the power of its enemies, accused with connivance with them, to be sacrificed by them for having waged war in the name and for the service of the nation. Is this country destined to present to the world these examples of conduct towards its chiefs? Hurbide! Guerrero! Now Santa Anna! Must this nation shelter within its bosom men who are forever to bring upon it the imputation of artifice, perfidy, and ingratitude?

It cannot be that this nation should be more or less devoted to her own dignity than any other; and if an immense majority of her people are patriots, who would prefer death to the dishonor of the country of their birth, there not wanting, as in every other nation, individuals who either cowards or traitors, favor directly or indirectly the enemy.

With us, men of this stamp have not stopped half way. With a view to gain a shameful individual security, they have aimed to disarm Santa Anna by imputing to him designs the most improbable. The more absurd these pretenses the more popular are they. The antecedence of his whole life, the glory of his name indissolubly associated with the history of this war, and the position he has occupied in the battles he has fought in person—all these are here, with which a reasonable man should be satisfied.
Then consider the guerrillas of the state of Vera Cruz; many of these were early organized by this same Gen. Santa Anna, were formed from the servants upon his haciendas, and paid for from his own purse, and one of these is the leader who molested the enemy.

But party rancor, fear, and egotism do not reason; they continue to impute to the president an understanding with the enemy, and plans and preparations for making peace; whilst the president, listening only to the dictates of his heart, and the wishes of the legislatures and governors of the states, will be the first to encounter the enemy at the head of those who will share the honor, as he has before encountered him at La Angostura and Cerro Gordo, and he will so encounter him everywhere. If this nation is destined to lose her independence by the dissensions of her sons, the destiny of General Santa Anna is also fixed. Like another Guatimozin he will be the last Mexican who may fight for his country, let not his evil star disarm the government in the presence of the enemy; and in making use of the powers with which the national representation; has invested it, the executive will continue itself strictly and religiously to the terms to which its powers were confined.

His excellency, the provisional president is also determined to sustain at all hazards the established system and the will of the nation, expecting that their excellencies, the governors of the states, by their zealous co-operation with him will prove in this crisis-the greatest which can ever befall a nation-that the Federal system is that best calculated for the great end proposed by all systems-that it may stand up with all the elements of its strength around it, and be united as one man, in the defence of its independence and dignity.

The secondary measures of the administration to consummate these purposes will be dictated by the law and in spirit eminently democratic. Individual guaranties will be respected so far as the forms of law shall prevail should he survive the combat, like that hero he will be able to exclaim; "kill me if you would enjoy in peace your conquest. A man like me can only be followed by Mexicans and when he raised to their view the standard of honor, it may not disturb your dreams."

Such are the principles by which his excellency, the provisional president aims to justify the confidence in his country, and the hopes of those enlightened nations friendly to her; such are the principles he has expressed to the undersigned, in conferring on him the highest honor a Mexican can receive, by associating the undersigned with himself in this work in the hour of danger; and such, too, are the views with which the undersigned has entered the ministry relying henceforth upon the officers co-operation of your excellency and the state you so worthily govern: which co-operation he solicits in the name of the country which has been outraged.

All which by the order of his excellency, I have the honor to communicate for myself the assurance of my distinguished consideration. [LTR]

NNR 72.412 August 28, 1847, plans to enforce a government on Mexico

EXCELLENT SIR: As you are aware the papers which arrived at Vera Cruz transmitted by the packets do no reach the capital. So far as, can be judged by the correspondence which has arrived this day, the opinion of civilized people is generally favorable to the side of Mexico in the war of defence against the United States. How could it be otherwise in so just a cause? The opinion is equally general that the U. States cannot triumph, except by relying upon the internal dissensions of our republic. Governments and people express unanimous wishes to see us united and strong, in order that we may chastise that abuse of circumstances which an enemy takes who thinks all the advantages are on his side. The documents which are today published in he Diario Official are a proof that these opinions are entertained by foreign nations.

By one of them you will perceive that he government of her BritanniC majesty, loyal to its friendly relations with our republic, has engaged not to recognize any revolutionary government which may ostensibly be set up in the republic, but only that legitimately established, whatever its resistance may be should the chances of war compel the government to leave the capital.

In the other document you will perceive the hopes and plans of the enemy, and in another the multiplied solicitations to our agents in foreign countries to be allowed to come and take part in the war in favor of our just cause. The provisional president desires me to communicate all this to your excellency, that in like manner you may communicate it to the worthy people over whom you preside; and he desires to conjure the people through me in the name of the country for their future destinies and for their character among the civilized nations, that they redouble their efforts and contribute all the resources which the state can raise, and arouse the spirit of their independence and true federation among their patriotic inhabitants so as to confer credit on the system by which we are governed, even in the midst of a crisis such as will probably never again present itself.

I have the honor to repeat the assurance of my consideration.

God and Liberty!
Pacheo.

NNR 72.416 August 28, 1847, Gen. Winfield Scott issues orders to his several divisions to advance on NNR 72.416 August 28, 1847 Maj. Folliot Thornton Lally's Affair at the National Bridge (guerrillas)

Latest. The steamer Galveston arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 16th, bringing dates from Vera Cruz to the 12th, and Tampico to the 15th August, with advices from Gen. Scott's headquarters, Puebla, to the 6th inst.

Gen. Scott had issued positive orders to march upon the city of Mexico on the following day, the 7th inst.-- The several divisions were to march in order, leaving during the three following days, 7th, 8th, and 9th.

Gen. Pierce reached Puebla, with his army, on the 6th, and was to go in advance. He had encountered numerous skirmishes with the guerrillas on his march, but in every instance beat them off without losing a man.

Letters in the Picayune from Mr. Kendall, dated Puebla, 3rd and 6th inst., state that the orders of Gen. Scott to march upon the capital, at the time stated above, were positive, and that the army would certainly be moving on the 7th inst., for the Halls of the Montezumas.

These letters further state that Major Gaines and Midshipmen Rogers had escaped from imprisonment in Mexico, and arrived at Puebla on the 4th. They report Santa Anna's forces, in all, comprising his regular army, to number 15,000 men. A Mexican runner, at Puebla, confirms this statement, and says that Santa Anna, at last accounts, was moving to meet the American forces, determined to give battle. He had fifty cannon.

It is further stated in Mr. Kendall's letters that Major Laly's division was attacked near the bridge, on the 10th inst. by the guerrillas. He had a severe skirmish, being attacked front and rear, and unfortunately suffered severely, losing many of his men in killed and wounded. Capt. Caldwell, of the voltiguers, and Capt. Cummings, of the infantry, were severely wounded. Finally, Major L. succeeded in routing the enemy, causing them to lose many lives. Strong reinforcements have been ordered to his assistance. [TNW]

An engagement had taken place between Captain Ruff's cavalry and the guerrillas, in which he was eminently victorious, not losing a man.

There was considerable apprehension of a night attack being made on Tampico. Active preparations were making to meet the emergency. [TNW] were making to meet the emergency.

We further learn that much sickness is now prevailing in the squadron at Vera Cruz. The fever among the soldiery was decreasing, but at Tampico, and other places along the coast, we regret to learn, it was still on the increase. Many were dying, and suffering of the sick was painful to think of. [TNW]

NNR 72.416 August 28, 1847, troops at Puebla in want of funds, American and Mexican troop movements

Contrary to all expectations the raid which came up today did not bring any money, and hence the poor providers for the absolute wants of the army are worse off than ever. As high as fifteen per cent; has been paid today for money to defray the expenses of the short march from this to Mexico, and some of the holders here are even chaffering for eighteen! Such are the strains to which our quartermaster and commissaries abandoned as they have been by the government at home are driven. Nor is clothing brought, nor are any of the necessaries for the well-being of the army, to say nothing of the comfort; and hence all has to be purchased at rates which amount to ruinous extortion. I give you facts which every man here knows—comments may suggest themselves.

I finish this letter in haste and late at night. Tomorrow morning Gen. Twiggs moves with his division, as I have already stated. Reports continue to come in that large bodies of the enemy are moving in the neighborhood and just now we hear that from 800 to 1,000 guerilleros, who have been dogging Gen. Pierce, were seen this afternoon at El Pinal. The coming fortnight will come to us burdened with news and whether it be of peace or war to the knife, I shall give you fine intelligence as early as possible. [LTR]

NNR 72.416 August 28, 1847, “Old Europe and Young America”

An article translated from a French paper for the New York Spirit of the Times, after dilating at some length upon the accounts which the monarchial journals continue to impose upon the credulity of their readers in regard to the war between the United States and Mexico, and a rather florid parade of the onward progress of our young republic with a just tribute to the achievement of our armies in the short space of one year,—concludes by thus characterizing the doings, during the same period of the great monarchies of Europe.

"During all this time, whilst a few thousand Americans in a few months conquer a country of greater extent than France, richer in mines than the whole continent of Europe—whilst a company of scientific engineers explore the vast deserts of Oregon in every direction, countries hitherto unknown—whilst they describe with the greater talent the course of their rivers, measure the altitude of their mountains, give descriptions of even the new plants they meet with, discover immense and fertile territories, which they prepare for the colonist which follows them—whilst they are doing all this, what is old Europe about?

The three grand Pharaohs of the north, having one hundred millions of subjects or slaves, fifteen hundred thousand regular soldiers, and fifteen hundred millions of revenue, conspire together mysteriously for 6 months, and accomplish the conquest of Croacow—a defenceless town, a country of heroes, the saviors in former times of their states, a sainted and sacred city, into which these sovereigns ought not to have entered save with feelings of awe and respect. The take from the Poles their laws, their language, their God, and cause them to submit to a shameful servitude. These princes absolutely phrenzied by the absolute power in their hands act over again the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar, and Belshazzar, and forget the predictions of Daniel, for the fulfillment of which the oppressed daily put up the most fervent prayers.

Yong American on the contrary, hospitable and generous as she is, offers to the proscribed of all nations, land without taxes, and a free share in all the blessing and liberties which Providence has vouchsafed to the human race.

Young America will enter into a treaty of peace with Mexico, and will receive as indemnity California, New Mexico, and Tampico. * * * The American shipping from the ports in California will monopolize the commerce with China, the East Indies, &c. &c.

America will generously allow Europe to partake of her conquest, emigration will progressively increase, and there will arise in the interior of the Union flourishing countries, under the names of New France, New Poland, and New Ireland. In twenty years America will have doubled her population, commerce, riches, and her fleets will be much more numerous than those of England and the Old World.

During the same period the people of Old Europe, victims of a sickly civilization, ruined by monopolies and imposts exposed to famine, suffering under a hard servitude, will be without energy sufficient to resist the invasions of the Muscovite barbarians.

France only can save Europe from an interruption of the northern hordes and from the increasing and proud domination of her neighbors on the other side of the channel; but she must be freed from the exorbitant taxation, partial laws, ruinous monopolies, and an absolute and brutalizing administration; she must have an inflexible will to regain the institutions of '89 the re establishment of the national militia, the government of the country by the country itself, the liberty of teaching the press, &c. Had she even an international administration similar to that in existence at the commencement of the 16th century, as described by Machiavelli we might say in the words of that great writer, "France this country of heroes, has nothing to fear from Spain, England, or Germany, &c. She has only to fear the sacrilegious usurpation of her sacred liberties. [LTR]

OFFICIAL - New call for troops, The war department has first called for five new regiments, explosive of the regiment from Ohio, which is already reported to be raised, and is now in progress of being mustered into the public service, and will in a few days be en route for Vera Cruz.

The five new regiments from Kentucky are to rendezvous, one at Louisville, and the other at Smithland, at the mouth of the Cumberland river.

The regiments from Tennessee are to rendezvous, one at Nashville, and the other at Memphis.

The Indiana regiment is to rendezvous at such convenient point on the river Ohio as the Governor of the state may designate.

These five regiments are expected to be rapidly raised and promptly placed in the public service. Officers have already been made, which induced the executive to designate these states, and to make the necessary arrangements for embodying these troops without delay. [LTR]

NNR 73.001 September 4, 1847, general order no. 44 organizing troops in and around Vera Cruz

Headquarters, Department of Vera Cruz, Mexico, August 11, 1847

I. Lieut. Col. D.S. Miles, U.S. army, is placed in he immediate command of the troops of this city, and the cavalry and infantry outside the walls, ate the gate of Mercy and Bergard.

II. Lieut. Col. Miles will see that the proper guards are mounted, and give such orders as he may deem necessary for the protection of the city-communicating them to the colonel commanding whenever they differ with the orders now in existence.

III. The cavalry will be actively employed in scouring the country about Vera Cruz for about a circuit of 6 or 8 miles, further if necessary. The captains of cavalry are cautioned to take the very best care of their horses. The company of infantry stationed at Bergard, is especially to protect the mules and horses penned there.

IV. No Scouts or armed parties will go from the city or outposts, but by express orders of the commanding officer, or Lieut. Col. Miles; in the latter case, the lieutenant colonel will communicate with the commanding officer.

V. Second Lieutenant W.L. Crittenden is appointed adjutant of the post, and will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

VI. Officers of the day will report to Lt. Col. Miles for orders

NNR 73.001 September 4, 1847, election of officers of the Maryland light artillery, company to depart for Vera Cruz

Maryland light artillery.-Some informality having occurred in the first election of officers for this company, another election has been held, which resulted in the choice of the following gentlemen:-Captain, L. Tilghmen; First Lieutenant, Dr. Frisby Tilghman; Second do. Isaac Morrow; Second do. Arnold Tensfield. The company now numbers over 100 choice men, and will embark for Vera Cruz, on the 3rd of September, on the barque Paoli Capt. Welsh, which has been chartered by the government to transport them. There is also at Fort McHenry a company of volunteers from Washington city, which together with about 76 regular recruits, will also sail for the seat of war, on one of the several vessels about to start from this Besides the Poali, the transport brigs G.M. Randall, Capt. Pinkham, and Pecard. Capt. Buck, and the new transport schooner Mayer Vinton, are now here and will carry troops, horses, provisions, &c. to Vera Cruz and other ports on the Gulf of Mexico. [LTR]

NNR 73.001 September 4, 1847, movements of troops and volunteers

Georgia volunteers. The Columbus Enquirer of the 17th says:-The three companies that will compose the mounted battalion, we are informed, have been accepted by the executive, and we suppose may be looked for in this place in some eight or ten days. The companies are:

  - Fulton’s, Chattooga county.
  - Hamilton’s, Cass county
  - Wofford’s do.

It is, we believe, generally understood that our fellow citizen, Capt. James S. Calhoun, will receive the appointment of Lieut. Colonel of this battalion.

The infantry battalion is as yet far from complete. Only two full companies, Captain Nelson, of Columbus, and Capt. Gaulden’s of Stewart, are yet organized.

The departure of volunteers. Capt. Latham’s time company of volunteers, of the 2nd Ohio regiment, are, as we write this article, just leaving the city for the encampment at Cincinnati, where they will remain until regularly mustered into the service, and then be off for the seat of war. We return them, in this manner, our most grateful acknowledgements for their expression of friendly feeling, and hope their campaign may be both an agreeable and a glorious one. May health and success attend them wherever destiny may lead them. [Ohio Statesman Aug. 25th.]

Departure of troops.

The following vessel were to leave New Orleans on the 23rd ult. for the seat of war.

- The Steamship New Orleans for Tampico, with five companies of the 3rd regiment Illinois volunteers, under the command of Lieut. Col. Hicks. The steamship Mary Kingsland, for Vera Cruz, with one company 2nd regiment Illinois volunteers, and Capt. Connolly’s company of Louisiana mounted volunteers. The steamship Massachusetts was also to leave for the same destination, with the remaining four companies of the 2nd Illinois volunteers, under the command of Col. Collins.

- The Telegraph was to leave on the 24th ult. for the Brazos, with a detachment of 12th infantry, under Capt. Clinck. [LTR]

NNR 73.001-002 September 4, 1847, troops to defend the line of communication between Vera Cruz and Perote

The line of communication between Vera Cruz and Perote.-A letter has just been received from Lieut. Col. Hughes of this city. He arrived by the river route at New Orleans on the 7th August, and left that place in the Mary Kingsland on the 23rd. He expects to reach Vera Cruz in advance of his command, unless they should have made and extraordinary run from the capes of Virginia. Lieut. Col. Hughes will have under his command the six companies which sailed from Baltimore some time since for Vera Cruz: and also one artillery company that has been raised in Baltimore, one company that is know raising in Washington, and perhaps two others that may be completed, the Colonel will have under him a regiment. It is destined for the line of communication from Vera Cruz to Jalapa and Perote.

Besides these, there are five companies of mounted volunteers from Louisiana, some of whom have already arrived at Vera Cruz, and the others were en route-the whole, in all probability, have arrived b this time. In addition to these, there are five companies of horse from Georgia, and three from Illinois. These are all en route for Vera Cruz.
Then, there is the regiment of Texas Rangers under Hayes, or such part of them as General Taylor can spare for service—at least five companies.

All these mounted volunteers have been called out to operate principally against the guerrillas; and when the line of communication is opened, they will join Gen. Scott. Gen. Patterson, who left Washington on Monday on his way to Norfolk—there to deliver some baggage, which is to round to Pensacola in the Water Witch—will go thence to Pensacola where he is to embark in the same vessel with other officers, for his point of destination. It is said that he is to take charge of this military force, unless order should have been received from Gen. Scott to change these arrangements; and after he had opened the line of communication, he will join the General’s camp. [LTR]

72.002 September 4, 1847, Gen. Robert Patterson to assume command of his division in Mexico

Major General Patterson—The Pennsylvanian says, “he will assume the command of his division in Mexico, which, it will be recollected, he was deprived of on the disbanding of the seven regiments of volunteers by General Scott, after the battle of Cerro Gordo.” [LTR]

NNR 73.004 September 4, 1847, James Buchanan’s letter on his sentiments on the Wilmot Provost

WILMONT PROVISO. The following letter from Mr. Buchanan on the Wilmot proviso, is from the Pennsylvanian. Washington, 25th August 1847.

GENTLEMEN: I have been honored by the receipt of your kind invitation to unite with the democracy of Old Berks in their Harvest Home Celebration, to be held at Reading, on Saturday, the 28th inst. I should esteem it both a pleasure and a privilege to be present on that interesting occasion: it is, therefore, with regret I have to inform you, that my public duties will render this impossible.

I rejoice to observe that glorious democracy of “Old Berks” are buckling on their armor, and preparing for the approaching contest. It is long since any state election has involved such important consequences for the democracy of the Union, as the approaching election for the governor of Pennsylvania. On its result may probably depend the ascendancy of the democracy of the Union for years to come. Hence our democratic brethren of other states are witnessing the contest with intense anxiety. The field is a fair one; our candidate well tried and honest; and he has been regularly nominated by the party. Should he be defeated, at the attempt will be vain to explain the decision of the ballot boxes in any other manner than by admitting that the whigs have the majority. Our candidate for canal commissioner is, also, above all reproach, both personally and politically, and is eminently qualified for the duties of that important office. If, under the circumstances, the democratic Keystone should give way, there is great danger that the arch may tumble into pieces. I do not apprehend defeat, unless our wily foe should first lull us into security by making no extraordinary public efforts; and then, at the eleventh hour, quietly steal a march upon us as they have done in some other states. Our vigilance ought to be constantly on the alert, until the moment of victory.

The question of slavery, in one of its ancient aspects, has been recently revived and threatens to convulse the country. The democratic party of the Union ought prepare themselves in time for the approaching storm. Their best security, in the hour of danger, is to cling fast to their time-honored principles. A sacred regard for the federal constitution, and for the reserved rights of the states, is the immovable basis on which the party can alone safely rest. This has saved us from the inroads of abolition. Northern democrats are not expected to approve slavery in the abstract; but they owe it to themselves, as they value the Union, and all the political blessings which bountifully flow from it, to abide by the compromises of the constitution, and leave the question, where that instrument has left it, to the states wherein slavery exists. Our fathers have made this agreement with their brethren of the south; and it is not for the descendants of either party, in the present generations, to cancel this solemn compact. The abolitionists, by their efforts to annul it, have arrested the natural progress of emancipation, and done great injury to the slaves themselves.

After Louisiana was acquired from France by Mr. Jefferson, and when the state of Missouri, which constituted a part of it, was about to be admitted into the Union, the Missouri question arose, and in its progress threatened the dissolution of the Union. This was settled, in a spirit of mutual concession. Under the Missouri compromise, slavery was “forever prohibited” north of 36 deg. 30 min.; and south of this parallel the question was left to be decided by the people. Congress, in the admission of Texas following in the footsteps of their predecessors, adopted the same rule; and, in my opinion, the harmony of the states, and even the security of the Union itself, require that the line of the Missouri compromise should be extended to any new territory which we may acquire from Mexico.

I should entertain the same opinion, even if it were certain that this would become a serious practical question; but that it never can be thus considered, must be evident to all who have attentively examined the subject.

Neither the soil, the climate, nor the productions of the portion of California south of 36 deg. 30min. nor indeed any portion of it, north or south, is adapted to slave labor; and, beside, every facility would be there afforded to the slave escape from his master. Such property would be utterly insecure in any part of California. It is morally impossible, therefore, that a majority of the emigrants to that portion of the territory south of 36 deg. 30 min. which will be chiefly composed of our fellow citizens from the eastern, middle, and western states, will every re-establish slavery within its limits. In regard to New Mexico, east of the Rio Grande, the question has been already settled by the admission of Texas into the Union.

Should we acquire territory beyond the Rio Grande, and east of the Rocky Mountains, it is still more improbable that a majority of the people of that region would consent to re-established slavery. They are themselves, in a large proportion, a colored population; and among them the negro does not socially belong to a degraded race.

The question is, therefore, not one of practical importance. Its agitation, however honestly intended, can produce no effect but to alienate the people of different portions fo the Union from each other, to excite sectional divisions and jealousies; and to distract and possibly destroy the democratic party, on the ascendancy of whose principles and measures depends, as I firmly believe, the success of our grand experiment of self-government.

Such have been my individually opinions, openly and freely expressed, ever since the commencement of the present unfortunate agitation; and of all places in the world, I prefer to put them on record before the incorruptible democracy of Old Berks. I, therefor, be leave to offer you the following statement:

The Missouri Compromise -Its adoption in 1820 saved the Union from threatened convulsions. Its extension in1848 to any new territory which we may acquire, will secure the like happy results. Yours, very respectfully, JAMES BUCHANAN. [LTR]

NNR 73.004 September 4, 1847, October 2, 1847, Col. Louis D. Wilson, obituary

Headquarters, Vera Cruz, Aug. 12, 1847

It is announced to this command, the melancholy intelligence of death of Col. Lewis D. Wilson of the 12th Regiment U.S. infantry, who died on this date.

The escort for his funeral will be commanded by the Lieutenant Colonel commanding, and consist the 1st U.S. infantry, stationed in the city. The funeral will take place at 5 o’clock, P.M. on tomorrow, to which all the U.S. navy, citizens and strangers are respectfully invited to attend.

By order of Lieut. Col. Miles.

Col. Wilson, Commandant and Governor of Vera Cruz, was laboring under attack of yellow fever and life was considered in great danger; at the time intelligence of the death of Col. Wilson, of NC., was received. On the announcement of the death of Col Wilson, the impression became general that it was the Governor of Vera Cruz, and the journals reported.

His friends will be gratified to learn that he has recovered.
Col. Wilson, of North Carolina—The Washington Union says—We learn that, by his will, the late Col. Louis D. Wilson, of the twentieth infantry, bequeathed to the “chairman of the county court of Edgecomb, in North Carolina, and to his successors in office, forty thousand dollars, to be applied to the support of the poor of said county.” This act of charity is touchingly beautiful. Col. Wilson had for years represented the county of Edgecomb in the senate of his native state. When it appeared probable that the requisition for volunteers made by the president on the Governor of North Carolina would not be met, he resigned his seat in the senate, volunteered, and was elected a captain, the highest post to which the voice of men could elevate him—and in that humble rank marched into Mexico. Before marching he made his will, and evinced his gratitude to the constituency which had so long honored him with their confidence, and his charitable regard for his poor neighbors, by this munificent bequest.—There has not fallen in the service of his country a braver or a better man.

NRR 73.004 September 4, 1847, movements of troops

The company of Capt. Halle, of the 14th infantry reached Vera Cruz on the 12th inst. was immediately armed and left the same evening for the scene of action. There had been no further arrival from the train, which was deemed a good omen. No further courier has arrived at Vera Cruz from Puebla. One came through on the 12th instant. He left Puebla on the 7th. He reported that the army commenced its march that day agreeably to announcement.

NRR 73.004, 005 September 4, 1847, Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arrillaga’s return to Mexico

The Washington Union of Saturday night says: We have seen letters from Vera Cruz, which we received by this evening’s Southern mail. To relate to the two interesting topics of Paredes’ leaving, and of Major Lally’s detachment.

As to Paredes, we regret to state that the Capt. of the British steamer must have been acquainted with his true name and character, as Paredes’ not hesitate to speak freely on board the vessel. He spoke freely about Santa Anna’s want of energy, ability, and principles, and declared that unfortunate Mexico would have to throw herself into the arms of America, or of some European power. (This last statement is suspicious, and confirms what the president stated in his message to congress:)

In any event, it was certain that no change whatever in the Government of Mexico which would deprive Paredes of power could be for the worse, so far as the United States were concerned, while it was highly probable that any change must be for the better."

Paredes is a monarchist—a friend of a foreign monarch, there is some reason to believe; and his presence in Mexico, if it looks to any change of her rulers. It will remain for the British captain to explain how and why he as a neutral introduced so decided an enemy into our ports at all, and without acquainting us with his character.

It appears from the Vera Cruz letter, that when Paredes entered that city, he was recognized by two or three persons—an inspector at the gate and by Senor Atocha, who attempt justification for his silence upon the lame excuse, that though he was an American citizen, yet he was no spy! The fact is, that Paredes scarcely remained ten minutes in the city, and went off without the knowledge of Col. Wilson, or any of the military officers.

As to Major Lilly, he is reported to have been attacked by about 1,500 guerrillas, whom he bravely resisted. A reinforcement had been dispatched to him about four hundred troops, including a corps of cavalry, with munitions, &c. &c. No later account had been received of him or from him.

NRR 73.005 Sept. 4, 1847 guerrilla war

From the Rio Grande. AN arrival at N. Orleans brings advices from Brazos to the 17th ult.

It appears that the roads between Monterey and Camargo are becoming more and more infested with irregular activity and guerrilla bands, and several trials have been attacked.

La Patria published at New Orleans, contains a letter from Havana, which states that four British officers accompanied Parades, but it does not appear whether they had landed at Vera Cruz.

The New Orleans papers brings us accounts from Matamoros of the 18th ultimo, by which it appears that a most lamentable state of things exists along the route to Monterey, for want of a proper force on the road, and that the Mexicans are robbing and slaughtering without restraint everything and everybody that it not strongly protected by a suitable escort.

It also appears that the heavy trains have been halted by order of General Taylor, which the Matamoros Flag attributes to the fact that all idea has been abandoned of that army advancing towards San Luis. The following is the Flag's paragraph on the subject:

"Halting the trains-by an arrival from Camargo, we are informed that an order had been received there from General Taylor, directing a halt of the heavy wagon trains which were being got ready for Monterey, and which it was supposed were intended for the march upon San Luis. We cannot learn whether the dangers of the road or a final resolve not to make any further advance with the army has induced this order; but, from other circumstances, we judge the latter cause to have dictated it."

The subjoined paragraph, from the Picayune, confirms the view of the Flag that the advance upon San Luis is to be abandoned:

"Diversion of Troops-We have a letter from the Brazos, dated the 19th ultimo, mentioning the rumor as current that Gen. Hopping might shortly be expected there, with a considerable body of troops, to embark for Vera Cruz. It is altogether probable that several general officers will be detached from Gen. Taylor's column to repair to the line from Vera Cruz. But a little time will elapse, we trust, before communications will be entirely re-established between Vera Cruz and the capital."

The Matamoros Flag notices several recent attacks upon Government trains by the guerrillas bands, the most serious of which are this abridged by the New Orleans Bee:

A scouting party of twenty seven Texans, commanded by Capt. Baylor, and ordered out by Col. Abbot, commander at Ceralvo, to scout the country between the post and Monterey, fell in with a large body of Mexicans, and were all killed but three. It appears that the Texans visited several ranchos in the neighborhood of the place where the recent attacks had been made upon the trains. They found goods and property captured from the trains, and, the guilt of the Mexican residents being clearly proved, the property was retaken, the dwellings of the guilty burnt and several known desperate characters killed. Captain Baylor was returning with three prisoners, when he was surrounded by some three prisoners, when he was surrounded by some three hundred Mexicans and completely hemmed in. The Mexicans charged upon his little band, killing many of them at the first fire. Three of the party escaped through the chaparral, having been dreadfully lacerated by thorns. When Captain Baylor was last seen he was wounded and unhorsed, but still fighting, and only three of this men were in their saddles-Letters were found among the property in the ranchos, establishing already a connivance between the Alcabe of Cerralvo and Canales. The Alcalde has been therefore arrested. Letters from Cerralvo state that the Mexicans are lying in wait to cut off every train between that place and Monterey. A gentlemen writes that hardly a day passes without some person being murdered on the road, and that the Americans know that the enemy are in large force in their immediate vicinity, without the means of acting, except on the defensive. We have, adds the correspondent, no mounted force at the post, not the means of mounting a single man of our own, should an extreme case of necessity require it. It is much to be desired that the Government will soon clearly see the great folly of placing troops along this line with their hands tied, to be made a laughing stock of, with an enemy so contemptible as the Mexicans. MORE NEWS FROM VERA CRUZ.

Particulars of the attack on Major Lally's Train--Reported defeat of our troops by the Guerrillas.

We are also indebted to the Patria for some particulars regarding Major Lally's train, published in the extra of that paper yesterday. A correspondent from Vera Cruz, who signs himself El Jaroch, under date 15th instant, says that Padre Jarauta had returned to that vicinity at the head of 400 guerrillas, and, having effected a junction with two other bands, commanded by Munez and Alberto, attacked Major Lally's train at Tolome.

After killing and wounding a few of our troops, and capturing some wagons, they had taken post at a spot called Puente Chica, near the Puente Nacional. Major Lally, having divided his command into six columns, attacked the position occupied by the guerrillas, with his whole force, but after a sanguinary fight, he was driven back, leaving the ground covered with killed and wounded.

The guerrillas, through want of ammunition, were obliged to abandon their position, which was the occupied by the Americans on the morning of the 13th. This is the key to the truth in this strange story, which is, we believe, nothing but Mexican gasconade; for if our troops still advanced, the account of their defeat cannot be true.

The Patria's correspondent adds that, on the same day, negotiations were opened with the chiefs of the guerrillas for a capitulation of the whole convoy.--The number of wagons lost is said to be very great, and the killed and wounded of our men exceeds 250, reducing the whole command to 400 and odd effective troops. The guerrillas were in great force on this occasion; and it is said that, as they are persuaded that there is a large amount of specie with the train, it will be attacked throughout the whole of its long route, as long as the enemy can bring an effective man into the field.

El Jaroch, at the close of his letter, says information has just arrived that "The Yankees have capitulated." The whole tale is grossly exaggerated, we have no doubt, though we believe that Major Lally's train has had to fight its way onward, against disadvantages with which other preceding trains have not had the contend--such as vastly increased numbers on the part of the assailants, &c. The necessity of forwarding reinforcements from Vera Cruz, sufficiently proves the fact of the command having been vigorously attacked. [JNA]

NNR 73.005 September 4, 1847, September 11, 1847, Col. Lewis Gustavus DeRussy's regiment

A Tampico letter of the 17th August says that the Louisiana regiment in that place, under command of Col. De Russy, left their homes a few months ago one thousand strong; and of this number not more than two hundred appeared on parade on the 16th. The diseases of the climate had brought about this sad change in the regiment.

NNR 73.005 Sept. 4, 1847 arrival of Gen. Stephen Watts Kearny and Col. John Charles Fremont at Saint Louis

Gen. Kearney and suite arrived at St. Louis on Wednesday, the 25th July. Col Fremont and his party were left at the Kansas, and will arrive in the next boat that comes down.

Gen. Kearney left California on his homeward route on the 18th June. He was accompanied by his personal staff and several discharged volunteers, formerly belonging to the Morman battalion, so that his whole party numbered from fifty to fifty-five persons.

Col Fremont, being under arrest, and ordered home for trial under charges of disobedience of orders, left California with his party about the same time that General Kearney did, and was but a short distance in his rear during his entire journey, and reached Fort Leavenworth before the General’s departure for St Louis. General K. arrived at the fort on Sunday the 22d ultimo, having made the entire trip in the very short space of sixty-five days. He chose the south pass for his route, and had many obstacles to encounter, as the snow on the mountains was on the mountains was very deep, and the track in places almost impassable.

Neither party experienced any difficulty from the Indians: on the contrary they were very quiet, and evinced no hostile disposition whatever.

Major Cook and Judge Bryant, who were of the returned party, state that all the trains of emigrants now on the way to Oregon, were severally met. They were progressing finely; stood the fatigues of the journey well, and had abundance of provisions.

When Gen. Kearney and his party left California every thing was in a peaceful and prosperous condition.

Col. Mason was left in command, as military Governor of the Territory.

There was quite a fleet off the coast of California, consisting of the 74 gun ship Columbus, bearing the broad pennant of Com. Biddle; the frigate Congress; the three sloops of war, Portsmouth 20, the Warren 20, and Dale 16, and the storeships Lexington 8 and Erie 8. The latter was to leave in a few days with about 500 men.

The rest of the troops were divided into parties under separate commands, and stationed at different posts throughout the country, where it was deemed most advisable either from precautionary or defensive views.

Nothing has yet transpired as to the specific nature of charges against Lieut. Col. Fremont, but as both the commanding officer and the arrested subordinate have now returned, we shall soon have our curiosities satisfied on this head.

There seems at least, for the present to be no further feeling of resistance towards our army in California. The civil officers elected under the provisional government are executing their duties with Anglo Saxon honesty and directness, and present so new a phase of justice to the native inhabitants that they are delighted. NR 73.006 September 4, 1847, party from California reports General Steven Watts Kearney in supreme command. Lt. Col John Charles Fremont not under arrest, Com Robert Field Stockton’s flagship at Monterey, ships at San Francisco, affairs of Santa Fe

FROM SANTA FE. The St. Louis Republican of 23d inst. says: “Capt. Fischer’s company of light artillery, consisting of about forty men, and Lieut. Gratiot, of Capt. Weightman’s company, arrived yesterday on the steamer J. J. Hardin. They left Santa Fe on the 29th of June, and met with no obstacles in coming in.”

We are indebted to the same paper for an extra, dated August 23, 12 M., in which we find the following interesting intelligence:

Arrival from Oregon and California. On Saturday evening, Captain T. G. Drake, of the British ship Modeste, (not, however, a bearer of dispatches, as has been stated,) and Mr. John G. Campbell, arrived in this city from Oregon. They left Oregon on the 6th of May, and traveled to Fort Hall in company with a brigade of the Hudson Bay Company. They left Fort Hall with only four men, but overtook another party of seven, and arrived in the settlements with a party of fourteen.

They bring us but little information in addition to that already received from Oregon. Every thing was quite when they left, and the prospect for the season favorable. The Columbia had been so high as to require them to take the southern route. This we presume, they were induce to do from the pleasure and facility of traveling afforded by the force of the Hudson Bay Company.

The British ship Modeste left Fort Vancouver on the 3d, and dropped down the river, on her way to England. She was to proceed, by the Sandwich Islands, home. There were no American ships in the river. The British squadron in the Pacific had not been heard from for nearly eight months prior to their leaving.

Between Fort Hall and Soda Spring, they were overtaken by a party of four men from California. This party left California on the 4th of June. They reported all things quiet when they left. Gen. Kearny was in supreme command, and this party understood to state, most positively, that Col. Fremont was not under arrest up to the time of their leaving. Com. Stockton’s flag ship was at Monterey, and several ships of the United States squadron were at St. Francisco. This party arrived at St. Joseph with Capt. D and Mr. C and may be expected in this city shortly.

Capt. D. and Mr. C. met a great many emigrants and their wagons. They were progressing rapidly and very comfortably, but Mr. Campbell thinks that those for Oregon, because of their number, may suffer a great deal from the want of grass for their stock, on the other side of the mountains. They met the advance party of the Mormon emigrants, and subsequently the main body of about five hundred wagons. The advanced party were hastening on by forced marches, to select a place for a winter encampment somewhere in the vicinity of the Great Salt Lake. A few days previous to their meeting with the main body, the Mormons and a large party of Pawnees, going out on a hunting expedition, to the Little Blue River, met and held a festival together. Our informants passed the ground where the festival was held, but were fortunate enough (from Mr. Campbell’s long and intimate knowledge of the country) to escape falling in with the Indian party. The Mormons represented themselves as being supplied with at least eighteen months’ provisions. They had with them pigs, poultry, and cattle, and appeared to have an abundance of every thing. They seemed to be harmonious among themselves, but it was understood that those of he church who had reached California, had split, and there was a strong quarrel going on between them. The Californians, and most of the emigrants from the United States, were very decidedly opposed to the settling of Mormons there. It was thought they would resort to force to resist their settlement.

From Fort Hall Capt. Drake and Mr. Campbell met with no incident, except the loss of a favorite mare of the captain’s, which was stolen whilst they were encamped at Soux village. Captain Drake returns to England by the earliest steamer to Liverpool. Mr. Campbell will return to Oregon this fall, by some of the southern routes. [LTR]

NRR 73.010, Col. 2 Sept. 4, 1847 Central America: Efforts in Honduras to Assist Mexico to Resist the United States

The Spanish paper La Patria, published at New Orleans, says that the state of Honduras has, through its president and two of its conspicuous generals, invited the other states of Central America to combine to aid Mexico in her present struggle with the United States.

This confederacy of states consists of Guatemala, Quesaltenango, Honduras, Nicaragua, San Salvador, Costa Rica, and the Federal District, a small space laid aside for a federal capital. They have separate territorial governments and legislatures. The population of the confederacy is little more than two millions, and its area about one hundred and ninety-six thousand square miles.

PROCLAMATION.

Compatriots! Fortune now rules the destinies of Mexico, and menaces her sons with desolation and extermination. The North Americans have destroyed the interesting population of Vera Cruz-have possessed themselves of their effects, and are now marching upon the capital. We cannot yet know what either calamities will afflict that nation.

They are our brethren; their dangers are ours and their fate awaits us. We should not maintain neutrality, if we can in any manner aid them in their honorable struggle.

The Entire world should know that the Hondurenos are ready to fulfil their duties, of whatever nature they may be.
I will sustain in the state all honorable peace, at all hazards; but I will not do it with the sacrifice of Hondurenian honor, of a disgraced people are fit to but to bear chains, and to suffer with humility the threats and injuries which the stronger impose.

I address myself to day to the governments of the republic, making these observations in order that if it shall be deemed expedient, we may, if it is possible, afford aid, or at least manifest our favorable disposition to their cause and to liberty.

Divisions and internal feuds have ruined our Mexican brothers. Eight millions of inhabitants, of whom that nation is composed, have been unable to defend themselves against a handful of men, who have seized upon their territory and their property, and annulled their right. What may be the fate of the Central Americans, if we continue divided?

The Honduranians always appear extraordinarily great; they adopted the most effectual means to secure their independence; but nothing has been sufficient to estrange them; respect to the government, and submission to law, they consider as their power, their glory, and their honor.

What happiness does he experience, who rules the destinies of a people adorned by these virtues!!!

JUAN LINDO.

Comayagua, June 1st, 1847.
The undersigned, generals of division, to the army of Honduras.

Compatriots! Notorious is the anguish of Mexico, and evident is our obligation to co-operate in the defense of that country. Her sons are our brothers, and the cause which they sustain is also ours, that of liberty against conquest.

In compliance with a sacred duty, the proclamation addressed by the president to the Central Americans, was yesterday published, and we wish to express our deference and our desire to co-operate at any time that he may call upon us to aid our neighbor.

Forgotten forever are all those ideas which could divide us. Our interests and our passions are secured to our country. Her triumph is our glory and our honor. She demands our union, and that suffices to cause us to cordially offer it. Union and liberty is our motto! Eternal opprobrium to him who would promote and assist dissensions and conquests.

NRR 73.017 Sept. 11, 1847 BATTLE OF SAN ANGEL-MEXICO INVESTED-PEACE PROPOSED-ARMISTICE CONCLUDED

The arrival at New Orleans on the 21instant, of the steamer Fashion, with Vera Cruz dates to the 7th of August, brings tidings to relieve the anxiety of the public. Our army have as usual, been victorious, and have the "Halls of the Montezums," within their grasp.

Owing to the late hour at which this intelligence reaches us, we have neither time nor space for more than a brief synopsis.

It appears probable from the account, that Gen. Scott met with no opposition on his march until arriving within eight or nine miles of the capital. At El Peñon, a position fortified by Santa Anna, according to the account in the El Sol de Anahuac, the hostile arms first came into conflict. A division of the American army made an onset on the enemy. The main body passing through Guadeloupe, and to their surprise of the Mexicans, appeared suddenly in their rear, and the contest ended.

A regular fight next occurred at a place called San Angel, situated six or eight miles south west of the capital. Gen. Valencia's division of the Mexican army was here totally routed on the 20th. Whereupon the division under the immediate command of Santa Anna retired to the capital where of course the utmost confusion prevailed. It was decided by them and his government to send a flag of truce to Gen. Scott, proposing to treat for peace, offering to receive Mr. Trist's proposals and asking for an armistice until congress could be assembled for that subject. They city of Mexico was now surrounded by the American army. Gen. Worth's division was in near of the city, ready to cut off all supplies from that quarter.

Gen. Scott deciding not to drive the Mexicans to separation, accepting their proposition. An armistice was concluded. The minister of foreign affairs immediately wrote circulars, which are published in the Mexican Diario Official, calling an immediate session of congress for the purpose of taking the propositions for peace into consideration.

The express which brought the intelligence to Vera Cruz came by the way of Orizaba. The dispatch which he brought reached New Orleans on the opening of the 26th ult.

Since placing the above in type, we find the following copy of it in the N. Orleans Picayune of the September:

Orizaba, August 25th, 1847.

My dear friend-The Mexican mail, which has at last come in, brings the following intelligence, which the copy from the Diario Official del Gobierno. Being of so great importance, I send you this express, courier, who will be with you to morrow about 12 o'clock.

On the 20th two brigades commanded by General Valencia and Santa Anna, went out to attack the Americans near San Angel. Valencia's division has been completely defeated, and Santa Anna after the first recontre, fell back also in disorder to the city.

They immediately after this asked for a suppression of hostilities, and offered to hear the propositions of peace from Mr. Trist.

The next day the minister of foreign relations invited the congress, through the newspapers to meet for that purpose.

These are the great facts which no doubt will bring after them peace. Your, truly. F.M. Dimond, Eq.

Another express arrived in Vera Cruz on the 26th with letters containing the same news in substance and the following:

[Translated from the Diario Official del Gobierno ]

On the 20th August Scott's troops, who intended marching on Penon, turned [away from] it and arrived near Tacubaya. As soon as the news was known at Mexico Valencia's division went out to attack the Americans at Los Llanos de San Angel, and was completely routed. Next came Santa Anna with another division, which shared the same fate after some fighting. The Mexicans retreated to the capital in great disorder, and such was the panic created by their defeat that the minister of foreign relations immediately convoked the congress to take into consideration Mr. Trist's proposition. A suspension of arms was demanded by the Mexicans and granted. The Americans are around Mexico, but had not entered the city on the 21st.

Intelligence reached Vera Cruz on the 27th, that Lieut. David Henderson, of Captain Fairchild's company of dragoons and his party, who were sent out by Captain Wells, on the 15th of August, to apprise Mr. Lally of the approach of reinforcements, were all shot by the guerrillas. There is little or no doubt of the correctness of this sad intelligence.

It is now very generally believed that Captain Besancon's company went up with the train under Maj. Lally.

Maj. Clark, commanding the Castle at Vera Cruz has died of the vomito.

Lieut. Meads, of the 11th infantry, U. States army, died on the 26th at Tampico. [KAS]
Two of the leading prominent party journals of New York, The Tribune and Courier and Enquirer, are chalking out the course which according to their dictation, the Whig party should pursue in the ensuing congress.

The following article from The Tribune will show their position on the subject:

The subject above discussed (in the Courier and Enquirer of Wednesday), is so immensely important, while the necessity of action thereon is so imminent, that we desire to place it in every practicable light before our readers. Having already submitted to them the views of a leading locofoco journal thereon, we repay the Courier's courtesy in copying one of our paragraphs by placing its entire article conspicuously before our readers. The Courier's past and present attitude with regard to annexation and the war, to say nothing of the ability and moderation which characterize the above article, incline us to weight its words thoughtfully. But

1. The National Intelligencer and the Albany Evening Journal had severally set fourth that the whigs in congress should or would not pursue the course with regard to the war which the Courier also recommends. Their suggestion had been copied and commented on by the Evening Post as the whig doctrine with regard to the war. Now our doctrine (which is surely that of some whigs) being radically different, we felt constrained to say so, and to vindicate those whigs who think with us from the railing accusation of the Post. Thereupon the Courier talks of the Tribune's "beginning in season to instruct the whigs as to the course they are to pursue in the next congress," concealing the fact that these who hold with the Courier had begun still earlier than we to "instruct the whigs in congress," if that is the correct phraseology, and that we had spoken only when we must to correct the statement that the whigs were going in bodily for the prosecution of the war in Mexico. Was this candid and fair? If anybody should be reproached for a premature attempt to instruct the whigs in congress, is it The Tribune?

2. We have never said nor intimated that we would have the whigs in congress resist all appropriations of men and money to carry on the war "unless our army shall first be withdrawn to the line of Nueces." We have said nothing in this connection as to the line to be maintained by our troops. We said expressly that we would vote supplies for our army in Mexico so far as their comfortable subsistence and reasonable safety should seem to require, though not to strengthen them for and stimulate them to farther aggressions and conquests. Instead of refusing all supplies so long as our army shall remain in Mexico, we would readily vote five millions if necessary to bring them all safety and comfortably home out of Mexico. We would have them well fed, well armed, well supplied with everything necessary to repel attack and facilitate their marches. But not Mr. Polk wants the means of bombarding more cities to ruins, and tearing their women and children to pieces, we do trust they may not be accorded him by whig votes.

3. As to the conflicting views of offensive and defensive wars entertained by the Courier and The Tribune respectively, we really do not feel that much need be said. According to the Courier's logic, either the expedition of the French to Moscow in 1812 was defensive, or that of the Russians to Paris in 1814 must have been so. But this we never imagined before, nor recollect that a single historian has so represented. When Napoleon invaded Russia he acted on the offensive; when he bravely resisted the allied invasion of France, he acted on the defensive, no matter how the war began or who provoked it. If this be not so, the world's history should be rewritten. What either party may have claimed or pretended in manifestoes and bulletins is of infinitely less moment than the uniform languages of eminent and impartial historians.

4. Whether the Courier really wishes to affirm to a sober fact that Mexico invaded this country when her troops undertook to drive ours from the left bank of the Rio Grande, where, until the last month, her flag had waved unrivaled and her jurisdiction been maintained undisputed from the very dawn of her national existence, we do not clearly apprehend. We know well, however, that our officers and soldiers considered themselves in a foreign country from the moment they crossed the Sal Colorado creek and wrote home to their friends. How could they doubt it when, after being met by Canales and his force this side of the Rio Grande, they saw the custom house at San Isabel fired and the whole population flee at their approach—and this weeks before the commencement of actual hostilities? The officers surely knew well that our flag had not before waved within cannon shot of Matamoros, and that the deserted houses and fields all around them were the property of Mexicans, who had never pretended nor desired to be other than Mexicans. To assert, therefore, that the Mexicans invaded this country when they crossed the Rio Grande from Matamoros, is to lie too audaciously for anything more respectable than the Polk message. We are sure the Courier does not mean to assert anything of the kind, but why should it seek to befog the matter? Is not the fabric of imposture and fraud behind which the authors of this war would fain conceal themselves large enough already? Is it the business of a whig journal to be propping and patching it?

5. What the whigs in congress will generally do we will farther discuss at present; we have been concerned rather with what they ought to do as in part the legislators and rulers of a humane and Christian People. We have not much considered what would be the probable obedience to the divine mandate which thunders "Thou shalt not kill!"—We should gladly try the experiment of such obedience, even with a certainty of losing a presidential election by it, but we by no means concede that such loss would result. On the contrary, in the firm and living conviction that God Reigns, we believe that to do absolutely right for the love of right, and in utter disregard of consequences, is the way to secure even that kind of success which the Courier would seem to make the touchstone of party wisdom and the sole end of party effort. And we regret to see a while it manifests so great repugnance to course deemed "suicidal to the party" and calculated to "make us the laughing stock of every civilized nation," seem to have no word or thought for the consideration—What course does our Maker require of us in the premises? What course is enjoined by the Prince of Peace, whose disciples we profess to be? When the matter in hand probably involves the killing or saving alive of some thousands of innocent human beings, are not these of so to account, as well as the sheers of Europe and the chances of an election? As to Mr. Polk and his responsibility, was not the whole concern bankrupt long ago? Can we hope to idle the guilt of blood shed virtually by us upon him, who has more than he can answer for already? The president's position is bad enough, but is his responsibility so absorbing as to relieve us from any?

6. As to voting men and money to the extent of any one's demands, it does seem to us that if congress have no real discretion in the premises the constitution is a juggle and a farce. Why not say at once, "In war, the president shall contract loans lay taxes, raise armies, and in short, do whatever he thinks best?" the part that congress is required to act in the premises implies that each House has a real not merely a nominal discretion. But more: If the money is to be raised for another year of warfare in Mexico, it must be raised in great part by loans or measured taxation. Shall a whig house concur in borrowing twenty or thirty millions more for this purpose? By what moral right shall this burden be saddled upon the American People of 1860 or '80? What will be the nature of their obligation to pay, it no real necessity prompted, and no benefit acnerned from this in position? These are questions we should probably answer with the Courier, yet all must see that the number who answer differently is daily increasing; all must feel that there is somewhere a limit to the right of one generation to impose burthens on its successors. (See the last Democratic Review of what we may expect by and by from those who are now pushing the nation deeper and deeper into debt.) If Messrs. Polk and Walker will frankly recommended the direct taxation professed to love so well when out of power, we hope congress will accommodate them; not for more loans, and especially loans on mortgage on the public lands, we have slender appetite.

Now as to "conquering a peace" How are we at war? By means of our armies in Mexico. Suppose they were at home again, what would the war amount to? Let the last five or six years of nominal war between Texas and Mexico give answer. Mexico wants nothing, expects nothing of us but that we let her alone. And even if she would not make her forces at long cannon shot these past ten years. Now suppose some stout bully were seen in one of the streets holding down and pummeling a feeble, colic child of ten or a dozen years, and, being remonstrated with by the bystanders, should explain "I am trying to conquer a peace! If I stop pounding and get off him, he will fly in my face and do me serious damage,—what would be the response of true manhood, to say nothing of Christianity?

The following extract from the N.Y. Courier and Enquirer will give their position on the subject.
The Whigs and the War—The Tribune reiterates its instructions to the whigs in congress, as to their duty in regard to the war with Mexico. We publish its article at length this morning, and have but little to say in reply to its positions. The Tribune is wrong, (if our memory serves us,) in saying that the National Intelligencer and Albany Evening Journal took to the lead in discussing the subject, and should therefore screen the Tribune from the charge of dictation. We remember articles in the Tribune as long ago as June setting forth the positions which it now repeats, and on the 4th of August, before it was known that the whigs would have a majority in the house, the Tribune declared in the most emphatic language, that “the whigs generally whom it was acquainted,” would not contribute to prolong or prosecute, in any way, the existing war. Up to that time none of the papers mentioned, so far as we are aware, had set forth their views upon this subject.

This point, however, is of slight importance. The only question of interest is, what ground shall the whigs take in the approaching session? The Tribune insists that they should vote for withdrawing our army instantly from Mexico, and that the only supplies which they grant, should be those necessary for doing this safely and comfortably. To what line they should be withdrawn, the Tribune at present declines to say: but the ground it has uniformly taken that we ought not to occupy any portion of disputed territory, would require them to retreat beyond the Sabine, since Texas is still claimed as one of its provinces by Mexico. But for active operations, for a further prosecution of the war against Mexico, the Tribune insists that the whigs should not vote a single dollar.

Now as far as the Tribune stands upon its ultra peace theories, we have nothing to say, if it believes that the divine commandment against murder, forbids the infliction of death upon any human beings, by any human authority, and under any circumstances, consistency of course, requires it to oppose all grants of men and money for any war, offensive or defensive: and so far as we can understand its argument upon this point, it proves this, if it proves anything. And yet the Tribune professes a willingness to “shed blood” in the defence of our soil, and concedes the necessity of driving the Mexicans from our territory in case of its invasion. Now where does the Tribune find warrant for disregarding the divine mandate, “thou shalt not kill,” in this case, more than in others, that may at least be conceived? If “prompt and through obedience” to the Tribune’s understanding of this command is to be yielded in every case, how dare the Tribune assume the guilt of shedding blood, even to keep the Mexicans at “long cannon shot distance: from the rightful boundary?

Our belief upon this subject is that armies are the Police of Nations; and that war is the harsh, but necessary process of enforcing the demands of justice and of law, upon these who rebel against them. If a constable or a sheriff may rightfully enforce the law against a recusant individual, then may the executive rightfully send and army to coerce a nation, into the performance of acts which she wrongfully and unjustly refuses to do. War is justifiable. And the divine command against under no more prohibits war, than its prohibits killing in self defence or as a penalty for the prohibited crime. Upon this point, certainly, argument cannot be needed.

The Tribune renews its assertion that we are waging upon Mexico an offensive war, simply because it is waged on Mexican soil. The position seems o us absurd. According to this, if the fortunes of war had been different,—if success had rested with Mexico instead of the U. States, and their armies had penetrated our territory as we have penetrated theirs the character of the war would have been changed. In that case, although we were the first aggressors, as the Tribune contends, we should have been fighting a defensive war; and for such a war the Tribune would vote both men and money. According to this logic, nothing is needed but defeat, to render the war just an defensive! If we had been beaten, we should have been in the right: but our victories have put us in the wrong. This is reversing the maxim that “might makes right,” and establishing the equally untrue and still more absurd maxim, that "might makes wrong,"-that the defeated party is always in the right. If this be the Tribune’s theory, we do not wonder at its former declarations , that our victories have been our disgrace. Nothing seems to us more clearly true than the position, that the character of a war does not depend at all upon its seat, but entirely upon its origin.

The Courier then proceeds a some length to show that this is a defensive and not an offensive war. [LTR]

NNR 73.022 September 11, 1847, tranquility and in California, no war among rival governors, no resistance by the Creoles to Americanization
The news from California and the letters our Monterey correspondent, of which we publish second package to day, represent that remote conquest the present Dorado of the American imagination, in a state of tranquility comparative tranquility. There is no actual civil war raging between the numerous rival governors, naval and military, whom the wisdom of the administration dispatched thither to reign over the new acquisition; and the Mexican creoles, after a various experiment of resistance, seem to have settled down pacified and reconciled to their fate, which is that a speedy denationalization, if not extinction. Their lands are mortgaged to the foreigner; they are too indolent and powerless to redeem them either with the gold of labor or the iron of war; and everyday almost, witnesses the increase of Americans by a new horde of adventurers landing from ships, or descending the precipices of the Sierra Nevada. [LTR]

NNR 73.033 September 11, 1847, comment on European interference in the war

“The Boston Journal says it is the intention of our government at once to resend the order by which the British steamer has hitherto allowed to enter the port of Vera Cruz.” We doubt their doing any such thing, whilst availing of the friendly agency of the British Minister at the city of Mexico towards bringing about a treaty of peace. The Washington correspondent of the Phia. Ledger, who is considered semi-official authority, says:

“I can assure you to-day that all fears and apprehensions of a European intervention, other than the kind of Mr. Bankhead, British minister in Mexico, to bring about reconciliation and a treaty of peace, have completely vanished. Our government has received the most positive assurance from all the powers of Europe that they will leave us to settle our quarrel with Mexico in our own way, though they are all most anxious that our negotiations may be brought to a successful issue. Their commerce, of course, suffers greatly by the war, and by the state of anarchy and uncertainty which is its immediate consequence.” [LTR]

NNR 73.034 September 18, 1847, the pay of the regiment of Col. Alexander William Doniphan

Col. Doniphan’s regiment consisted of 1000 men. When they returned home each of them received $650 for his pay, horses, &c., and his land scrip besides, so that the expedition cost in these particulars $750,000, three-fourths of a million of money. [LTR]

NRR 73.034, Col. 1 Sept. 18, 1847 War With Mexico: Comments On the Armistice

During the week we have received ample confirmation of the brilliant victories achieved in the immediate vicinity of the city of Mexico, by the army under Gen. Scott and of the subsequent conclusion of an armistice, with a view to a treaty of peace, so desirable to all parties. Deeply is it to be lamented that these achievements had to be purchased by the loss of so many brave men. The conflict has been one of the bloodiest of the war. The enemy appear to have been completely outgeneralled in every direction. According to the American accounts received, our forces were outnumbered four to one. The Mexican loss is represented to be in about the same proportion, four to one. The Mexican account varies widely from those figures however. Without stopping to recapitulate, we proceed to place the intelligence before our readers somewhat in the order in which the same reached us during the week.

“As to the result of the negotiations, the Washington Union of the 14th says:-It is useless to speculate, but we cannot forbear adding, that this decisive victory places the capital of the Mexicans at the mercy of our army. The consternation caused by the rout of their army, has induced the enemy to enter into negotiation for peace. The issue of this negotiation is not to be counted on with confidence. The firmness with which the war has been prosecuted has brought the infatuated Mexicans to enter on the discussion of peace. After the panic of the moment is passed, they may again manifest their insane obstinacy in prolonging the war. There should be no relaxation of our efforts, no pause in our preparations, until a peace is conquered, and a ratified treaty shall secure its continuance."

The Union of the 16th, referring to what Mr. Kendall writes to the Picayune on the 25th relative to the disaffection produced in the army by the armistice, says:—"We are unwilling, until we receive fuller and official accounts, to discuss the question, or to cast any slur upon the General, whose military services are receiving the thanks of the people. But this we undertake to say, in relation to the whole subject—that it would be most unfortunate if Mr. Trist should permit the negotiation to be spun out beyond the shortest possible time—say two or three days; for, as we now advise, that course is the very policy which the wily politician Santa Anna would himself prefer for rallying and organizing his means; and, under the same reservation, we may add, it is to be regretted that as long a period as forty eight hours after the negotiation had terminated has been allowed for the resumption of hostilities." From the letters of Indicador, the correspondent of the New Orleans Times, we extract the following:

Collector's office, Vera Cruz, August 25th, 1847.

NOTICE. Passengers arriving at this port without passports from the American consul resident at the port they embark from, will not be allowed to leave the vessel, and the master of any vessel permitting such passengers to land, will be fined $500 for each and every passenger so landed, and the vessel held responsible for the same.

NRR 73.034 September 18, 1847, Com. Matthew Calbraith Perry’s orders for visiting foreign vessels in Mexican ports

GENERAL ORDER, NO 11.

All vessels except army steamers and transports arriving at ports in Mexico held by the U.S. forces are to be visited by a boat from the general ship of the day, or any single vessel of the squadron, that may be in port, for the purpose of tendering the usual compliment of services to foreign vessels of war, and of detecting any irregularities in foreign mail steamers or merchant steamers, whether foreign or American.

It is desirable, when it be practicable, that the boarding officers should be a lieutenant. M. C. Perry, Commanding Home Squadron.

The Effects of these two intimations is exemplified in the following:

"The Spanish brig Martin, Capt. Escalza, arrived her yesterday, from Havana, brings several passengers, some of whom were permitted to land. We are glad to see such measure taken. This is the only way to stop the guerrillas from daily increasing in gangs of robbers that infest the country." [LTR]

NRR 73.034, Col. 2, Sept. 18, 1847 Death of a guerrilla chief

DEATH OF A guerrilla CHIEF. El Arco Iris, of the 26th ult., says that Don Juan Aburto, the most active of the guerrilla chiefs, after Jarauta, died on the night of the 24th ult., of a fever, at Paso de Ovejas. He had been recently engaged with Major NRR 73.034 September 18, 1847, difficulty of reinforcements in reaching Maj. Folliot Thornton Lally

GENTLEMEN: The reinforcements, mentioned in a late letter as having been dispatched from this place, in compliance with the urgent call of Major Lally, whose road was blocked up by the guerrillas, returned yesterday afternoon, after having suffered the loss of all their wagons, (except one) and five or six men killed. The guerrillas began to harass them near San Juan, a short distance from Santa Fe; but they pushed their way through without loss, until they arrived in sight of the National Bridge. Here they found an eminence fortified and furnished with a piece of artillery, effectually commanding the road, and from which they received a rapid fire of grape.

Defense is said to have been useless or impossible, and after sustaining the fire for some time and losing several mules, which were in their harness, the officers decided upon a retreat, abandoning nine of their wagons to the enemy. These wagons were loaded chiefly with ammunition, and form a most valuable prize to the guerrillas. They also contained a good deal of money, and private baggage belonging to officers and others; but perhaps the most important item of our loss is that of the government dispatches brought here by Col. Wilson, and unfortunately forwarded by this party.

Poor Col. Wilson was very low when the reinforcements started, and feeling that he could no longer indulge the hope which he had at first entertained, of overtaking his command, he insisted, against the advice of his friends, upon sending these dispatches by Capt. Wells to Major Lally. They are supposed to be very important; but whether they are or not, Gen. Scott must await the pleasure of Santa Anna for the enjoyment of reading them. By the way, is it possible that our departments have no cipher by which these important communications could be made without giving their secrets this constant liability to betrayal? But to return to our subject.

As the guerrillas were evidently too well acquainted with each other to suffer a distribution of the spoils to take place without their individual participation, the retreat of our routed party was made without additional loss or molestation. The fellows seemed to want plunder more than blood, and the wagons proved a golden apple to them.

Blame is attached by many to Major Lally for moving forward, after having sent for reinforcements, before they could have reached him. How far his circumstances free him from blame, we cannot tell, but the act seems really censurable a seen from this place. He is supposed to have pressed Captain Besancon’s company into the command, as they have been heard from definitely since the left the city several days ago on a scouting excursion. It was probably by their appearance that the train was enabled to pass the bridge, as the enemy would be apt to mistake his company for the van of a large reinforcement, and under that impression to retire. NRR 73.036 September 18, 1847, advances of Gen. Winfield Scott on Mexico City, battles of Contreras and Churubusco

The U. States steamship Mary Kingland, Capt. John Davis, arrived at an early hour this morning.-By her we have received our letters from Mr. Kendall from the 22nd to the 28th of August, all dated from Tacubaua. A courier dispatched by him on the 29th with the first account of the battle fought on that day, was cut off.

From a map and plan of the battle fields before us, we note that they are called the battles of Contreras and Churubusco-so called from field works of the enemy of those names. The victories were decisive, but as far as we can judge from a hasty perusal of a portion of our letters, the proposition for an armistice was made by Gen. Scott-probably at the suggestion of the British Embassy. The report we have hitherto given that the city of Mexico was at our mercy, appears to have been unfounded.

Should peace not follow from the negotiations now pending, another battle must ensue, the enemy having a force of from fifteen to twenty thousand men yet left.
But the road appears to be completely open to us, and the city is only two and a half miles from our encampment.

Our entire loss in killed and wounded is short of eleven hundred; that of the enemy is not well known. His loss in killed alone is believed to be fully equal to our entire loss, and it is estimated that at least 3,000 prisoners were taken. The number of his wounded was not ascertained, but is supposed to be very large. Gen. Scott himself received a wound in the leg below the knee, but from the manner in which Mr. Kendall speaks of it, we are led to hope the injury a slight one.

THE BATTLE OF CHURBUSCO. We have at length received account of the great battle which has been fought before the capital of Mexico, from the pens of our own friends. The dispatches, which were expressed from New Orleans, were received by the mail of this evening by the Secretaries of State and of War, and we are enabled to lay some very interesting details of the bloodiest, and perhaps the most decisive and brilliant battle of the war, before our readers.

We have not heard whether any dispatches have been received from Gen. Scott, nor, indeed, that any letters have been received by the Secretary from the camp. But instead of these, we have been favored with the following letters, received at the war department from an officer at Vera Cruz—the first written by himself, and the other addressed to him by two officers of the army—one a highly distinguished general, who “bore the brunt and battle of the day,” and the other from a captain in the service. These letters give to the whole account the stamp and authenticity of official intelligence. In addition to these, we give copious extracts “from the Sun of Anahuac” (Vera Cruz) of the 1st Sept. derived, also, no doubt, from the most authentic sources.

These events are glorious to the arms of our country. The most important, and perhaps most correct letter which we publish—certainly from an officer of the highest distinction—represents the disparity of the number of troops engaged, and the losses of the respective armies, in the most imposing form—7,000 only of our men actually engaged at the main battle of Churubusco—only 7,000 with two light batteries of eight pieces, in the conflict with 32,000 of the enemy, with heavy artillerie and strongly fortified. After two hours of bloody conflict, mainly with the bayonet, we carried everything—the enemy were pursued to the gates of the city—Our loss (heavy, indeed!) short of 1,000, “the enemy’s 5,000 including many distinguished men.”—This is indeed, a brilliant victory. We congratulate the whole country upon the glory which our arms have attained, and the prospect it promises of peace. An armistice had been concluded for forty eight hours—the particulars of which we give full—in order to open negotiations. We give the names of the Mexican commissioners, at the head of whom stand Herrera himself. Mr. Trist writes, that they had already had two meetings and were to have a third, and perhaps a last interview, on Monday, the 30th August. It would be idle for us to speculate on the ultimate results. Indeed, we have no time to night for that purpose, even if we had all the elements of calculation before us.

But we cannot forbear adding that this decisive victory places the capital of the Mexican at the mercy of our army. The consternation caused by the route of their army has induced the enemy to enter into negotiations for peace. The issue of this negotiation is not to be counted on with confidence. The firmness with which the war has been prosecuted has brought the infatuated Mexicans to enter on the discussion of peace. After the panic of the moment is passed, they may again manifest their insane obstinacy in prolonging the war. There should be no relaxation of our efforts, no pause in our preparations, until a peace is conquered and a ratified treaty shall secure its continuance. [LTR]

ART. 1. Hostilities shall instantly and absolutely cease between the armies of the United States and Mexico.
United States of America and the United Mexican States, within 30 leagues of the capital of the latter states, to allow time to the commissioners appointed by the Mexican republic, to negotiate.

2. This armistice shall continue as long as the commissioners of the two governments may be engaged on negotiations, or until the commander of either of the said armies shall give formal notice to the other of the cessation of the armistice, and for 48 hours after such notice.

3. In the mean time, neither army shall, within thirty leagues of the city of Mexico, commence any new fortification, or military work of offence or defence, or do anything to enlarge or strengthen any existing work or fortification of that character, within the said limits.

4. Neither army shall be reinforced within the same. Any reinforcements in troops or munitions of war, other than subsistence now approaching either army, shall be stopped at the distance of twenty-eight leagues from the city of Mexico.

5. Neither army, nor any detachment from it, shall advance beyond the line it at present occupies.

6. Neither army, nor any detachment or individual of either, shall pass the neutral limits established by the last article, except under flags of truce bearing the correspondence between the two armies, or on the business authorized by the next article; and individuals of either army who may chance to straggle within the neutral limits, shall by the opposite party be kindly warned off or sent back to their own armies under flags of truce.

7. The American army shall not by violence obstruct the passage from the open country into the city of Mexico, of the ordinary supplies of food necessary to the consumption of its inhabitants, or the Mexican army within the city; nor shall the Mexican authorities, civil or military, do any act to obstruct the passage of supplies from the city, or the country needed by the American army.

8. All American prisoners of war remaining in the hands of the Mexican army, and not to heretofore exchanged, shall immediately, or as soon as practicable, be restored to the American army against a like number, having regard to rank, of Mexican prisoners captured by the American army.

9. All American citizens who were established in the city of Mexico prior to the existing war, and who have since been expelled from that city, shall be allowed to return to their respective business or families therein, without delay or molestation.

10. The better to enable the belligerent armies to execute these articles, and to favor the great object of peace, it is further agreed between the parties that any courier with dispatches that either army shall desire to send along the line from the city of Mexico or its vicinity, to and from Vera Cruz, shall receive a safe conduct from the commander of the opposing army.

11. The administration of justice between Mexicans, according to the general and state constitutions and laws, by the local authorities of the towns and places occupied by the American forces, shall not be obstructed in any manner.

12. Persons and property shall be respected in the towns and places occupied by the American forces. No person shall be molested in the exercise of his profession; nor the services of any one be required without his consent. In all cases where services are voluntarily rendered, a just price shall be paid, and trade remain unmolested.

13. Those wounded prisoners who may desire to remove to some more convenient place for the purpose of being cured of their wounds shall be allowed to do so without molestation, they still remaining prisoners.

14. Those Mexican medical officers who may wish to attend the wounded shall have the privilege of doing so, if their services be required.

15. For the more perfect execution of this agreement two commissioners shall be appointed, one by each party; who in case of disagreement shall appoint a third.

16. This is convention shall have no force or effect unless approved by their excellencies the commanders respectively of the two armies within 24 hours, reckoning from the sixth hour of the 23rd day of August, 1847.

NNR 73.039-73.040 September 18, 1847, letters of George Wilkins Kendell about the armistice

Mr. Kendell writes on the 25th. “The armistice has finally been settled and signed—and I do not tell half the story when I say that it has produced universal dissatisfaction in the army—in the entire army. Let me give you an idea as to the mode by which it was brought about.

"On the night of the 20th inst., after the great Mexican army was thoroughly beaten, broken to pieces and routed, Mr. Thornton, of the English legation, accompanied by the British consul, Mr. Mackintosh, a man who regards Santa Anna, hates the Yankees, and never moves unless his own ends are to be gained—came out of the city post haste, on a visit to Gen. Scott."

"The next morning, Gen. Mora, accompanied by Mr. Arrangoiz, who was formerly Mexican consul in New Orleans, came out, also on a visit to Gen. Scott, and on the same day the latter wrote to the Mexican authorities, hinting at an armistice between the two armies, with a view of opening negotiations for peace. The proposition was eagerly jumped at by the Mexican minister of war, at the instigation of Santa Anna, of course, and the result has been a treaty of armistice in which, according to rumor, nearly everything the Mexicans asked for was conceded. I know nothing of the proceedings of this commission, except from hearsay.

There are many who believe that Gen. Scott has been compelled to adopt this policy, at the threshold of the Mexican capital, by Mr. Trist and his instructions, but there are few, and I must acknowledge myself among the number, who think that a peace honorable and satisfactory to the U. States is to grow out of this matter. The whole affair, on the face of it, looks like one of Santa Anna’s old tricks, to gain time and plan some new scheme of trickery and destimulation, and as he has British influence to back him, he will be likely to carry out what he undertakes."

"I have always said and always believed that Santa Anna was favorable to peace—to peace from policy only—and still believe he may endeavor to bring it about; but great as is his power, like a sail vessel, he can only go with the wind and current, and has too many and too powerful enemies to carry out his present schemes, at least without strong assistance from the United States."

On the 27th he wrote, "The prospects for a peace look brighter, strong peace feeling pervades the better class of citizens, as well as those of the middling order. I may be mistaken, but my humble opinion is that there are three influences now at work in the city of Mexico to bring about a peace. The first and foremost is Santa Anna himself, sick and tired of the war, and seeing nothing in its continuance but his own utter and irretrievable ruin. The second is Mackintosh, Thornton, & Co., the later gentlemen secretary of legation to the English minister, and both representing English interests. -The third, and all powerful interest is, American gold of which Santa Anna and some of his friends are known to be exceedingly fond, and to handle which they will stop at nothing. Thornton, during the illness of Mr. Bankhead, does the talking on the English side-Mackintosh acts as banker and general agent. Not one of these men care any more for the credit or honor of Mexico than they do for that of the Tongo islands—self is at the bottom of all, and Santa Anna is the most selfish man of the lot. -On our own side we have two influences at work; the first is Gen’l Scott, hampered and bound down by his own government, and anxious to bring about a peace, because he believes a majority of his countrymen are warmly in favor of it; and the second is Mr. Trist, covetous as any man in his position would be, of the distinction so important a deed as making a peace must give him.

Opposed to these influences is a proud but cowardly set of Mexican military demagogues—a band of leeches who have lost all caste but still retain a species of hold upon the people—and then there is the great body of the people themselves, who know not themselves what they want, but who are hoodwinked and led by the demagogues. Santa Anna has no friends; but he has power, and that suits him just as well—perhaps better. Now all the influences enumerated above are to be used to bring about a peace, but how they succeed is a matter of conjecture. I suppose that the means should not be rejected so that the ends are gained. [JCS]

Tacubaya, August 23, 1847.

Considered, approved, and ratified, with the express understanding that the word "supplies," as used the second time, without qualification, in the seventh article of this, military convention-American copy—shall be taken to mean (as in both the British and American armies) arms, munitions, clothing, equipments, subsistence (for men,) forage, money, and in general all the wants of an army. That word "supplies" in the Mexican copy, is erroneously translated "rivers" instead of "recursos."

[NNA]
Ratified, suppressing the 9th article, and explaining the 4th, to the effect that the temporary peace of this armistice shall be observed in the capital and 28 leagues around it; and agreeing that the word supplies shall be translated recursos; and that it comprehends everything which the army may have need of, except arms and ammunition.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

Headquarters Army U.S. of America,
Tacubaya, Aug. 24, 1847.

To His Excellency the President and General-in-chief of the Mexican Republic:

Sir: Under a flag of truce I sent Lieut. Semmes, of the United States navy, who will have the honor to exchange with such officer as may be appointed for the purpose, the ratification of the military convention that was signed yesterday by commissioners from the American and Mexican armies.

I particularly invite the attention of your excellency to the terms of my ratification, and have the honor to remain, with high consideration and respect, your excellency's most obedient servant.

WINFIELD SCOTT,
General in chief of the U.S. army.

August 23d, 1847.

I have the note of your excellency of this date, in which you are pleased to say that Lieut. Semmes, of the navy of the U. States, will exchange with another officer named for that purpose, the ratification of the military convention which was signed yesterday by commissioners of the Mexican and American armies, and calls particular attention to the terms of the ratification.

The most excellent president orders the undersigned to say to your excellency, as he has the honor to do, that he orders his ratification within the time agreed in the armistice; and he is also charged to direct the attention of your excellency to the terms of the ratification by his excellency the president.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

LINO JOSE ALCORTA,
Minister of state, and of war and marine.

To his excellency the general in chief of the United States of America.

NRR 73.40 Sept. 18, 1847 pronunciamentos

A Vera Cruz letter of the latest date says: "Already there are two pronunciamentos promulgated, one by Valencia at Toluco, where he fled the day of his defeat. Another by Paredes, who has gathered a few hundreds of the discontented around him at Atlisco, and a third by Francisco Rebaud, commandant of the port of Mazatlan, who has declared himself independent of the whole republic." [KAS]

NRR 73.040 Sept. 18, 1847 Concern for Lt. Henderson's detachment

Lieut. Henderson, the Vera Cruz Sun of Anahuac of the 27th ult. says:
"Nothing has yet been heard of Lieut. Henderson and the detachment under his command, who were, it is supposed, taken by the Mexicans near Puente National a few days ago."

The Jalapa Boletin of the 20th says, "that Aburto, the chief who commanded the guerrillas at the Bridge, had made his report, but nothing is said of his detachment.

Postscript—Since the above was put in type, we have seen a Mexican who told us that he was present when the detachment was taken in the chaparral, after surrendering to twenty times their number, and shot! [KAS]

The Washington Union received after our last was at press, contained an article so strongly implying that it was not the government that had ordered the two regiments and sundry companies from the Rio Grande to Vera Cruz, that we prepared an article to correct the statement in our last number saying that government had given such orders. The inference we drew from the remarks of the Union was inference we drew from the remarks of the Union was, that Gen. Taylor had of his own accord, given the orders, as they were stated to be in accordance with "General Taylor's recommendations which Gen. Taylor was known to have made that the Rio Grande should be held by competent garrisons and that the active operations should be carried on from Vera Cruz or Tampico—and to carry out which recommendation he was rapidly advancing at the head of his old regulars when he received General Scott's orders, (given probably in accordance with an undertaking from the department) to leave his said forces and return to Monterey. Gen. Taylor probably did not contemplate when he made the suggestion alluded to, that he would be deprived of a participation in the active operations he recommended, and by himself be laid up in garrison. Fate decreed that active operations should take a turn in the direction to which General Taylor was thus ordered, and the battle of Buena Vista left but a mere wreck of the Mexican army to oppose Gen. Scott's division. Gen. Taylor was manifestly making demonstrations indicating his design recently to move on towards San Luis Potosi.

The Union of Tuesday however, distinctly says that General Taylor "in compliance with instructions," had ordered certain portions of his present forces "to join General Scott's column" and repeats the idea that these instructions were in accordance with the advice of Gen. Taylor. [JCS]

The arrival of Mr. Aubry, direct from Santa Fe, puts into my hands some news that will be interesting to your readers, and which I hasten to communicate. Mr. Aubry left Santa Fe on the 28th of July, accompanied by Mr. Barnum of Baltimore (direct from Chihuahua,) Captain McCinney's company of volunteers from Monroe county, and a train of 65 United States wagons, under the charge of Mr. King.

Through Mr. Barnum, Mr. Aubry has news from Chihuahua to the 3d of July. On the 23d of June Mr. James Aull, the partner of the late Colonel S.C. Owens, in an extensive mercantile business, was killed by four Mexicans. They entered his store at Chihuahua, killed him, and took away $5000. The authorities of the city, and the friends of the deceased immediately had three of the murderers arrested, and put in prison, to await their trial. Mr. Aull's death was not occasioned by any rising of the mob, but chiefly for plunder. Mr. Aull is a gentleman well known in this community, and highly respected. His death spread gloom and consternation over everyone, and more particularly at this crisis, in the midst of large commercial transactions, and so soon after the death of Col. Owens.

The person and property of American citizens generally, were respected at Chihuahua, though none were permitted to leave the city, except neutrals, who could bring away their means by paying a duty of 6 per cent. Mr. Barnum obtained his passport by pretending to be an Irishman.

Gov. Armijo, on his way to Albuquerque, to visit his family, was arrested at Chihuahua, and kept within the limits of that city. He is said to have expressed great satisfaction at the result of the battle of Sacramento.

No merchandize of any description was suffered to come into Mexico by the southern route.

In New Mexico, the territorial election was to have taken place on the 1st or 2d Monday of August. Consul Alvarez, Capt. Angney, and Mr., Kirkland, of St. Louis, were candidates for the legislature.

The murderers of Brown and others, were on trial, and seven of them would certainly be convicted.

Col. Willock's battalion of volunteers, their time having expired, were ordered to leave Taos and return to Santa Fe. Twenty five citizens remained, and were determined to follow our army, and not to return to their homes until their husbands would consent to become friendly to the United States.

An insurrection had, a short time previous, commenced, but it was nipped in the bud, and the leaders, terrified at the numbers sent out in opposition to them fled precipitately to the mountains.

On this route, Mr. Aubry met a number of troops, traders, government trains, &c., who were getting on easily and safely. On the 1st of August, when three days out from Santa Fe, he met at the Wagon Mound, a company of U.S. dragoons, under charge of Lieut. Love, with a large sum of money for the payment of the troops, and a train of government wagons, in care of Fagan, of Platte city. Messrs. Fitzpatrick, Wetherhead, Turlay, Wally and Dewitt were also accompanying him. [JCS]

NRR 73.041 Sept. 18, 1847 Death of General Hopping

Later.- A telegraphic dispatch from Richmond, Va., states that Gen'l Hopping died at Mier on the 1st inst.

General Lane's command embarked at Brazos on the 8th for Vera Cruz.

General Cushing was concentrating his brigade at Palmo Alto.

NRR 73.041 Sept. 18, 1847 THE MEXICAN ACCOUNT BY THE MEXICANS THEMSELVES

We are indebted for the following letters to a gentlemen in this city. They were forwarded by an officer of distinction at Tampico, who obtained the Spanish copies at that place.

[Union City of Mexico, August 21]

My dear friend-I am in the blackest of humors; I am overpowered by the most profound melancholy; the whole has gone to the devil. The Yankees-the hateful Yankees- have triumphed, because our efficient generals cannot even command four soldiers. Generals Valencia and Santa Anna have been routed successfully at the stone quarry of San Angel, and at the Churubusco bridge, and Scott with his army occupies the hacienda of Portales, distant five miles from here.

That gang of miscreants would have occupied the capital to day, but Gen. Santa Anna, in order, as is reported, to prevent such ignominy to the nation as to have the hateful flag of the stars waving over the palace of Montezuma's, has decided on hearing the proposals for peace from the Untied States commissioner; and as a preliminary, to morrow they will discuss the terms of the armistice. The commissioners on the part of our government are Generals Mora, Villamil ad Quijano.

Malediction and eternal hatred to the preserved, who have usurped the title of leaders of the nation only to head revolutions they promoted for their own aggrandizement, and to demoralize all classes of society. A most shameful condition to us; without an army or public spirit, which, has been demanded by civil distensions, and in the face of the treasonable selfishness shown by the authorities of some of the states, what advantages is it possible to obtain from a proud enemy who is conscious of his power.

I will not continue discussing this point, because I feel my soul is burning in the mire
by those. [KAS]

NRR 73.042 September 18, 1847, manifesto of Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna

MANIFESTO OF SANTA ANNA.

[Translated for the "Union," from the second and corrected edition published in the "Diario."]

Manifesto of the president ad interim of the republic, and general in chief of its army, to the nations:

On critical and solemn occasions, it is a duty, on the part of him who presides over the republic, to give publicity to events; and I discharge this duty with pleasure, because frankness has at all times been the characteristic of my administration. The occurrences of the 19th and 20th are too well known, for they were unfortunate; but it is proper for me to review them, in order that they may not be misrepresented, as well from a spirit of detraction and malevolence, as from errors resulting from a want of analysis in subjects of grave and transcendent importance.

The nation has witnessed the great-the extraordinary efforts with which, during the space of three months, I have labored for the defence of the capital, which was about to be surrendered defenceless to the enemy. I have organized, armed, and equipped an army of more than 20,000 men; I have collected an immense material for this army; I have fortified various lines in order to keep at a distance from Mexico the ravages of war; I have created resources in the midst of the state of abandonment in which the government was left; and no fatigue, no labor, have I omitted, in order that my country might present herself with dignity and firmness in the struggle to which she has been so unjustly provoked.

In war, an accident-a circumstance apparently the most insignificant-may frustrate the most skilfully devised combinations. A glance at the defences which I caused to be constructed around the city is sufficient to discover the plan which I had proposed to myself.

The troops which I had advanced, by one of the flanks, supported by others posted en echelon at convenient distances, were to have made a concerted retrograde movement, which I commanded at the proper moment. A general who commanded a strong division of 5,000 men and 24 pieces of artillery, whose headquarters were at the town of San Angel, was ordered by me on the 18th, and 11 o’clock in the morning, to fall back on the village of Coyoacan, in order to effect the concentration of forces, in consequence of demonstration already made by the enemy, and for the purpose of exactly carrying out my plan of operations. But this general, forgetting that there cannot be two commanders on the field of battle, and that the execution of a plan will not admit of comments which annul or retard it, suffered himself to himself to object to the orders which he had received; and obedience and discipline, so indispensable in military movements, having been banished from among us, thus rendering it necessary, in order to avoid greater and imminent evils, to tolerate what it would be absurd to approve of, I suffered him, in spite of myself, to persevere in his purpose, and charge himself with the whole responsibility of the consequences.
They were not less disastrous than they had been obvious. He advanced, motu proprio, [of his own accord,] more than a league to choose a position from which to meet the enemy, without acquainting me either with his movement or his intentions. His refusal to obey the order sent him was the first notice which I had of this temerity; and soon afterwards the report of cannon enabled me to ascertain the position he had taken, and apprized me that an action had commenced. Although weighed down with the presentiment of what was to follow, I instantly placed myself at the head of a splendid brigade of four thousand men and five pieces of artillery. I arrived at the moment when the enemy had cut off the rear of the position of the ill-fated general by a considerable force, whose operations I was then hardly able to check, for it was now nearly night.

But I observed, with the greatest grief, that the position in question was isolated-that a large ravine intervened, and a neighboring wood was occupied by the enemy; the troops under my immediate command could not advance by the only road which existed, without being exposed to the same fate as the others; and a single battery, which arrived late, was my only means of attack. The firing having ceased, our brigade took up their quarters in the town of San Angel; for the rain fell in torrents, and to keep the troops in the field would have been equivalent to their being routed.

Previous to this, I ordered that my aid-de camp, Col. Ramiro, should, taking as a guide the deputy, Don Jose Maria del Rio, who was acquainted with the ground, proceed to the head of the terrible ravine in front of us, and along the skirt of a distant hill, and, making all haste to the camp of the general referred to, order him to retire that night, without fail, with his infantry and cavalry, to San Angel, by the only road which was left him, firing spiking his cannon, if it already impossible to save them. This my aid accomplished, and communicated my order between 10 and 11 at night; but instead of punctually obeying the order, the general hardly suffered my aid to speak, interrupting him by saying that what he wanted was 6,000 men and munitions, and sent him off, after giving him two official letters, which he had signed and sealed, one of them containing a report of the action of the evening, in which he stated that he had beaten the enemy, and put him to shameful flight, and that he had, in consequence, granted promotions of the generals, field officers, and others.

The following day, at dawn, I repaired again to the same field, reinforced by the brigade which I had ordered to be brought from the capital, and determined to effect the enemy made his attack, which lasted about ten minutes, and I witnessed, in the midst of despair, the rout of those troops, worthy of a better fate, and unfortunately commanded by a general who was himself the cause of their being cut off.

The consequences of this affair were, in my view, terrible. The enemy could, by a rapid movement, reach the capital before it would be possible for me to succor it; he could, by a flank movement, cut off my detached forces; he could, by a flank movement, cut off my despatched forces; he had obtained, as the result of his victory, the power of falling with the main body of his troops upon a part of mine;
the enemy, in fine, through the unskilfulness and insubordination of a general, converted to his own benefit all the advantages of my situation.

The advanced fort of San Antonio could not sustain itself; for our time had been intersected, and I ordered its garrison to retire, while I covered the fort and tete depont of Churubusco. The enemy advanced, cutting off a portion of the troops as they were retiring, and presented himself in front of our nearest defences. I there placed myself again in front of our soldiers, and my efforts cost the enemy not a little bloodshed. The losses ensued, although lamentable, were the natural result of the retreat, which was sudden, unexpected; and embarrassed by the trains, marching along a narrow causeway flanked throughout its whole extent. -The defence was from line to line, until the third was reached, where I personally opposed the enemy, and a saved the capital, which was suddenly placed in danger.

While I was engaged, on the 22d in reorganizing the forces and covering the batteries, and again in person at the head of a column, which would have continued the defence to the last extremity, I received a communication from the enemy’s general-in-chief, proposing to me to conclude an armistice, which would afford time to consider the propositions which may be made by the commissioners of the United States, for ending the struggle between the two nations. I consented to the armistice; and, after consulting the ministers in cabinet, I determined that the propositions referred to shall be taken into consideration.

The suspension of hostilities is always a good thing, because war is always an evil; and much more so, after great combinations have been frustrated. To save the capital from the horrors of war, or at least defer them, was a consideration which I could not overlook, more particularly when viewed as a means of arriving at an honorable peace.

When two nations find themselves in a state of war, they have the reciprocal right to make propositions. A perpetual war is an absurdity, because it is a calamity; and the instinct of self-preservation, which is even stronger and more powerful in nations than in individuals, counsels that no means shall be disregarded which may lead to an advantageous adjustment. The constitution gives me full authority to adopt this course.

Devoted to interests so great and of such pre-eminent importance, I must maintain at all risks the respect and consideration due to the supreme authority which I exercise—now especially, when, if factions beset and harass the government, they will deprive it of the power of deliberating, and it will become contemptible in the presence of the enemies of the nation, I will be still more explicit—commotion and sedition shall be exemplarily punished.

I have preserved a considerable body of troops, and the nation will support me in maintaining its honor and vindicating its reputation. I consider myself as free as if I had just obtained a signal victory, and there is no fear that I shall be imposed on by the enemy’s negotiators, when his troops and a cannon have failed to alarm me. We shall adjust our differences, provided honor, above all, is saved; and we shall renew the combat, if the sword is thrust between our justice and acknowledgment of the rights of the nation.

[JCS]

NNR 73.044-73.047 September 18, 1847, the question of more territory and of the Wilmot Proviso

The Washington Union strenuously advises, that these questions should be postponed, deeming the present agitation of them as calculated to embarrass rather than settle existing difficulties. Meantime however the Union hesitates not to recommend very warmly, the course suggested by Mr. Buchanan in his letter to the “democrats” of Berks County, Pa., (inserted page 4, this vol.) in other words, -the extension of the line of the Missouri compromise to the Pacific ocean. The frequency and earnestness with which the Union recurs to and recommends that letter induces the belief that the policy therein indicated is at present the adopted views of the Administration of which that paper is the organ.

The contrarieties of opinion entertained in the several sections of the Union or adopted by the several parties into which the people of the Union are divided, the pertinacity with which those opinions are asserted, and the earnest disposition manifested of maintaining them, even to desperate extremities, very soon have to be met and determined one way or another, renders its consideration a matter of the gravest interest.

To record the proceedings now taking place, and to give an abstract of the opinion expressed by the leading authorities on the subject is our task.

The principle embodied in the Wilmot proviso has received the sanction of ten states, through their respective legislatures. The following are the states referred to: New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Vermont, Ohio, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Michigan.

Three of these states-Ohio, New Hampshire and Vermont-go beyond the stipulation of the proviso, and insist that no new state shall, in any case, be admitted into the Union, unless slavery be prohibited therein.

The resolution of the legislature of Ohio requests the senators and representatives of that state in congress “to procure the passage of measures in that body, providing for the exclusion of slavery from the territory of Oregon, and also from any other territory that now is, or hereafter may be, annexed to the U. States.”

The senators and representatives from N. Hampshire are requested “to urge the passage of measures for the extinction of slavery in the District of Colombia, for its exclusion from Oregon, and other territories, that now or at any time hereafter may belong to the United States.”

The legislature of Vermont declares that it “will not give its countenance, aid or assent to the admission into the federal union of any new state whose constitution tolerates slavery.”

The language of the south, protesting against the proviso, is, in its way, as emphatic and as decided as that of the states, quoted above, in favor of the proviso.

In view of an issue so directly formed, says the Baltimore American, it is evident that a compromise of some kind must be agreed upon. It was by a compromise that the Missouri question was settled; and, indeed, the action of the general government, whenever it relates to slavery, must always involve a compromise. Clearly nothing is to be gained by the urging of extremes on either side—nothing is aggravating the tendency to exasperation which is already manifest both at the north and at the south, and which is so easily quickened when prejudices and passions only are addressed. Politicians of limited range, sectional and selfish, may find their account in stirring up and inflaming the sectional and selfish feelings of the people and their respective localities—knowing no higher ends than the success thus aimed at. It belongs, however, to a better order of men to evoke better feelings, to embody them in sound principles, to give them efficiency in the shape of wise and patriotic measures. That this will be done we are as well assured as that there are sanative elements in the country sufficient for its redemption from worse ills than any which are likely to trouble it now."

Amongst the most prominent of the proceedings, is probably the following, which has just occurred in the State of Ohio.

WHIG MEETING IN OHIO—CORWIN ON THE STUMP.

From the Cincinnati Atlas, Aug. 30th.

In pursuance to previous notice, a large assemblage of whigs took place at Lebanon on Saturday, the 28th inst. The specific object of the meeting was to receive from the Hon. R.C. Schenck, a report of his stewardship; the country of Warren, which he represented in the last congress being struck out of the district which he now represents.

The meeting was organized by the election of the following officers:

President—Hon. Jeremiah Morrow, of Warren.

Vice Presidents—Governor William Bebb, Hon. John Woods and John M Millikin, of

Committee on Resolutions—Lewis D. Campbell, of Butler, Hon. David Fisher, of Clinton, Thomas B. Stevenson, of Cincinnati, Wm. Crossley, of Montgomery, and A.
H. Dunlevy, J. J. Janny, E. Baily, Colonel John Hopkins, and Gideon D. Hart of Warren.

During the absence of the committee on resolutions, Mr. T. B. Stevenson addressed the meeting. A committee having returned and reported resolutions for consideration, the meeting adjourned before dinner, after which they were resumed and unanimously adopted as copied below. Mr. Schenck then delivered a powerful discourse on the origin and objects of the war, as well as the means of terminating it honorably, and embracing, besides a masterly, manly, and conclusive defence of himself, for his own course in congress on that subject. He was listened to with deep attention, and frequently responded to from the audience by expressive bursts of approbation, as period after period of indignantly lack of triumphant self defence rolled eloquently upon his tongue. Mr. Corwin followed. We had never heard him before. We have heard some good speaking in our time, having grown up among people where oratory and eloquence seemed to the “manor born;” but we must say, (for sober conviction extorts it) that Mr. Corwin’s speech at Lebanon last Saturday was the noblest, whether considered with reference to its matter or manner, or both, that we ever heard from mortal lips. It was directed to a defence of his vote against war supplies; to the maintenance of the fundamental principle of free government, that the representatives of the people must judge of the propriety or objects for the attainment of which they are called on to furnish means—a principle for which he solemnly declared, he was ready to lay down his life, as did our forefathers of the revolution; and to the consideration of the practical means of preserving the Union from the overthrow threatened by the acquisition of new territory and the prosecution of the Mexican war. On this last point, he concurred with Mr. Schenck and the resolutions of the meeting, that no safe plan of redemption remained, but that of refusing to take any portion of Mexican territory. On the blessings of the Union, on the duty to preserve it, and on the means of its preservation, his elocution seemed super-human. Never before was assembled an audience so solemn, so rapt, so deeply moved; and, on the cheeks of the old, the middle-aged and the young rolled down torrents of tears as the eloquent and patriotic truths of the noble orator of the people fell from lips that seemed almost inspired.

But we feel how vain and presumptuous the attempt to describe such a speech.
Some idea of its eloquence and power and effect may be inferred, though not realized, by the fact that everyone who heard it, declared the ablest speech he ever delivered; and to say that Mr. Corwin far surpassed himself is the highest eulogium that can be pronounced upon his effort. It was certainly superior in ability to his great speech in the senate; and it would be worth more to this country than the expenses of this Mexican war, could it be printed verbatim and given to every man, woman and child in the land. It should be put in the hands of school boys for all time to come, and it would be appropriate both to the Sunday school and the pulpit.

The whigs of Warren county have made a renowned declaration of the faith that is in them—the faith by which they have directed their political course hitherto, and by which they will be guided hereafter. We have no doubt that this expression will be responded to throughout the Union, and we think we assume nothing in saying that the whigs of Warren have expressed the sense of the entire whig party of the great and growing state of Ohio.

The resolutions of the meeting are in the words following:

1. Resolved, That the usurpation of power by the president of the United States, and the wanton abuse by his administration of sound moral and political principles, have involved the country in an alarming crisis, which threatens the permanency of our National Union, and the perpetuity of our republic institutions.

2. Resolved, In the language of HENRY CLAY, is his letter on the annexation of Texas, "That regard all wars as great calamities, to be avoided if possible, and honorable peace as the wisest and truest peace of the country. What the United States most need, are union peace and patience."

3. Resolved, That we view the existing war with Mexico as the result of a most flagrant violation of the constitution by the executive-uncalled for by the true interest or honor of the country-disastrous by in its immediately and ultimate consequences, to the best interests of the nation, and if not arrested terminating in a question which must distract and dissever the Union.

4. Resolved, That we regard the annexation of Texas as the primary cause of the war, and the march of the army from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande, as its immediate cause, and adopting the language of Senator Benton, "we denounce it, 1st. As an unjust war. 2nd. That it is a war unconstitutionally made. 3d. That it is a war upon a weak and groundless pretext."

5. Resolved, That the predictions of Whig statesmen, that the annexation of Texas would involve us in war, and would be the precursor of further attempt for the acquisition of further territory, are fully veiled by the war, and the efforts of the party in power to acquire a conquest apart, if not the whole of the Mexican empire.

6. Resolved, That we solemnly declare to the world that from high moral principles, as well as from our views of sound national policy, we are unchangeably disposed to the annexation of any territory in this union, either directly by conquest, or indirectly as payment of the expenses of the war; but, if additional territory be forced upon us, we will demand that there shall neither be slavery nor involuntary servitude therein, otherwise than for the punishment of crimes.

7. Resolved, That we are opposed to an improper interference with the question of slavery, where it constitutionally exists, yet we solemnly protest against its further extension.

8. Resolved, That inasmuch as the war with Mexico was commenced in violation of law—without any adequate cause, is conducted at a vast sacrifice of human life and an enormous expenditure of the national treasure, and promises nothing favorable to our country's true glory and prosperity, we regard it as the imperative duty of the next congress to adopt summary measures to restore peace, by requiring the president "to call home our armies and bring them all once within our acknowledged limits."—"Conquer your insane love of false glory and you will conquer and peace.

9. Resolved, That we have abiding faith in the cardinal principles and measures contended for the whig party in the contests of 1840 and 1844—protection to American industry—a sound and uniform currency—internal improvements—opposition to the treasury scheme, and eternal resistance to executive usurpations.

10. Resolved, That as whigs of Ohio—we contend for the success of our PRINCIPLES, and that no man who is not a thorough whig, approved by a whig national convention, can receive our support for the presidency now or hereafter.
11. Resolved, "That the congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and amongst the states"—that the lakes and rivers of the mighty west are fit objects for the exercise of this power, and that her people have already too long endured the parsimonious appropriations of congress and the insulting vetoes of the president.

12. Resolved, That we must cordially approve of the course pursued by our senator in congress, the Hon. THOMAS CORWIN, and especially in opposing the war with Mexico, and that we have entire confidence in his talents, patriotism and enlightened statesmanship.

13. Resolved, that the fidelity with which our principles have been represented and our interests advocated by the Hon. ROBERT C. SCHENCK, in congress entitles him to our gratitude. That his acknowledged talents and unflinching integrity have secured to him an enviable renowned, and are sure guarantees of his future usefulness.

The Cincinnati Gazette thus alludes to the subject: THE UNION—MR. BUCHANAN. - The Washington Union endorses Mr. Buchanan's letter. Mr. Ritchie says: "It is written with the distinguished author's usual clearness and force, and it is marked by that high moral courage which the occasion demand,"—that Mr. B has stepped "boldly into the field" to "discharge a great duty at a critical period of public affairs"—that he comes forward in the "spirit of union," of "conciliation," of "compromise to pour oil upon the troubled waves." What "critical period of public affairs" is referred to by the official? —Does it connect itself with the Pennsylvania election? Where are found "the troubled waves" accept in the locofoco in that state? True the "old Jackson doctrine" was that "federal officers should not interfere with state elections;" but that doctrine is among the things of the past—the party has progressed beyond that point! The "troubled waves" roll high and threaten defeat to the party. The necessity is great and urgent—something must be done-done immediately—and in such emergencies laws and rules give way.

Mr. Buchanan opposes the Wilmot proviso, and advocates the "Missouri compromise to settle the agitating question and he is right" says the Union, and for thus throwing himself into the breach, by his warning voice to lull the storm, he deserves the "sincerest gratitude." The doctrine of compromise which he advocates—the compromises of the constitution, the compromises "which prevailed over the destinies of Missouri and Texas," in the opinion of the Union, must "stand, for it is built upon a rock." But has it stood firm in time past? Did it stand when the limits of Missouri were extended, and slavery admitted within the limits from which the compromise excluded it? Has it ever stood, or will it ever stand when it suits the slave power to disregard it?

The state of "democracy" in the Key Stone, required extraordinary exertions to prevent its overthrow—Mr. Buchanan, the second officer in the administration, was detailed on that service and entered upon it, in a wily and artful way, with a palaver about compromises. He says nothing about the tariff, to which Pennsylvania is wedded, nothing about the Kane letter, nothing about the publication of Mr. Clay's tariff speeches with Mr. Polk's name prefixed as the speaker, nothing of any of the frauds practiced to deceive the honest German voters into the support of Mr. Polk. Nothing of thins-these frauds have produced their effect, have had their day, and the sooner they have forgotten the better. —But Pennsylvania is anti-slavery—has been so from the days of William Penn. The Wilmot proviso was gaining popularity in the State. It received the entire vote of her delegation in the house. It asserts the precise doctrine of the ordinance of 1787 against slavery—the precise doctrine under which all the world has witnessed the astounding growth, and the equally astounding advance in prosperity, of the whole north-west; of the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin. Pennsylvania is as firmly wedded to the prohibition of slavery, contained in the ordinance of '87, and reiterated in the Wilmot proviso, as she is to the tariff or to any thing else. The cabinet at Washington oppose the principle of the ordinance and oppose all restrictions upon the South, and all efforts to restrict slavery south of the 36º 30 north latitude, and the secretary is to enter Pennsylvania, and quiet the free spirit of her people, allay this hostility to slavery, and put at rest all effort to advance the great cause of freedom in his native State. He is to "pour oil on the troubled waves," which agitate all parties there on that question. He has made the effort, and made it in a way to win the unqualified approbation of the government organ. We know the "honest Germans" are credulous, easily deceived by those in whom they confide, but in this instance the Washington interference, is too barefaced—to manifestly an effort to cheat Pennsylvania into the support of slave extending doctrines, to be effectual. We should suppose the people of Pennsylvania would spurn the doctrine and the instrument, yet we may find ourselves mistaken. Time will show.
The Charleston Mercury says: -

Now—what does the proviso in question propose?—Nothing less than to impose on a large extent of country, about to become the territory of the United States, for the purposes of future states, a restriction or disability, which is to be the fundamental law, as well of the future states as of the territory in the meantime, to which all other states of the Union are not subjected. The very object of it is to abridge such new states of certain political power possessed by the old states and thus create the inequality which we have contended is inconsistent not only with the whole structure of our government, but with the provisions of the constitution itself. It is to say beforehand to the new states to be carved out of the proposed territory, though New York and Virginia may possess this power, you shall not possess it, and this shall be the condition of your admission into the Union. We are aware that countenance is sought for this usurpation in the ordinance of 1787, and in what is called the Missouri compromise; we are, as it were, upbraided with the sacrifices made by the south at the shrine of peace and harmony, and these sacrifices are held up as the covenant and sanction of all future encroachment. It would be out of place to enter into the history of that memorable controversy; the action of the southern states, on that occasion, has always been regarded by them as a concession; and even supposing it binding and giving it the fullest operation, we deny that such concession in relation to a particular case can be regarded as a surrender of right and relation to any other. As well contend that the southern states, by consenting to such concession, have abandoned all their rights under the constitution, and now enjoy them only at the mercy of the majority of congress.

From the Albany Argus.

THE WILMOT PROVISO—ITS ‘CAUSES AND CONSEQUENCES.’—If there is one sentiment more prevalent than another, touching the relations between Mexico and the United States, it is the claim which the latter has in justice and right, upon the former, to indemnity for aggression and spoliation, and the obvious certainty that we must receive such indemnity alone through an acquisition of territory. Without just acquisition, peace is unattainable, with honor or justice. As Mexico can offer, or at least can furnish, indemnity in no other form; those who insist upon trammeling the acquisition of conditions, impracticable in themselves, virtually refuse a peace, and protract the war, or invite or promote a surrender of our interests and character, at once humiliating and dishonorable. A peace without indemnity, is inadmissible. Indemnity can only come in the shape of territory—territory already conquered and held by us. A treaty, recognizing the principle or proposition resisted by one entire section of the union, and the national representatives thereof, could never receive their ascent, and hence, would fail in receiving the constitutional sanction. We should therefore have either no peace or no indemnity—and probably neither. The advocates of the Wilmot proviso, in urging and insisting upon a “fundamental article,” repugnant as they know to a large section of the union, and in admissible because certain to receive the negative votes of that section, in whatever form the question may be presented, become responsible for the duration of the war, or for the rejection of terms on which peace can alone be honorable and advantageous to our country.

Again: In reviving the anti-slavery discussion, —for the intended benefit of any body or any party, an absolute and positive good should be effected, as a counterpoise to the certain evil which, in many respects, the agitation of the question will produce. If sectional divisions and alienations, so much deplore by the father of his country, are to be renewed, with embittered force—if the Union and the constitution are to be invaded—if parties are to be reorganised, and new forms of political association invited—the northern democrat in conjunction with the whig abolitionist—something more than the adoption of an abstract declaration would seem to be demanded as the supposed positive good for so much positive evil. But the Wilmot proviso is simply an abstraction—inoperative in itself—occupying with it not the least legislative or practical force the moment the new territory become a state—and in short, performing little other service than to array the south compactly against the north, and to divide the north with itself.

Again: In the last congress, its effect was to divide and paralyze the friends of the administration—to postpone action upon the measures early reported to congress, and demanded by the exigencies of the country—and to withhold the material for a vigorous prosecution of the war, then and still regarded as the most effectual means of peace. What its effect will be at the approaching session—with a probably whig majority in the house of representatives, and with every disposition in that quarter to embarrass and annoy the administration, it is easy enough to foresee.

There is yet another view of the question. It is politically adverse to the democratic party—that great patriotic and dominant party, which has ever great patriotic and dominant party, which has ever maintained the compromises of the constitution, and all its cherished features of equality, union, and the recognition of the state sovereignties. That party has ever sought to prevent the intestine agitation of this question. While it feels that slavery is a great evil, it has ever recognized the sanctions and guaranties of the constitution, and the clear rights of the southern states under it. It has invariably set its face against the incendiary or fanatical efforts which, at different stages of our history, have been made by excited zealots or at the instigation of designing partisans—and has successfully resisted them, as repugnant to the constitution, fatal to the public tranquility, and calculated to rend the Union asunder. In these high aims, acting as a party, and as the friends of the constitution and of the union, they have been sustained by the American people.
The democracy, North and South, in cordial association, have resisted and checked the abolition designs, through all the phases of incendiarism. On the other hand, the “anti-slavery agitation” in some forms, the reception of petitions, congressional reports and speeches, newspaper paragraphs and appeals, and finally Wilmot provisos, has been a favorite element of opposition electioneering. It has formed invariably a staple party commodity, through which they have sought power, and sought also the defeat of the democratic party. The course of the two parties has been as distinctive, as any of the principles or action by which they have been characterized. Hitherto the democracy have successfully resisted all these efforts at agitation—all the attempts to array one section of the union against the other—and maintaining the integrity of the democratic party, and the guarantees of the constitution, have contributed to preserve the union inviolate, and have carried forward the government to its present high and auspicious state.

At this juncture, however; we are called to witness another and a more remarkable phase in these efforts to revive or produce sectional agitation and falling back upon the whig or federal course upon this question, have started the game afresh, and attempt to set up their candidates upon whig capital. Why they have done so, and with what ulterior views—with what certain defeat to themselves, and what prejudice and disadvantage to the democracy—will be the subject of farther remarks tomorrow. Meanwhile, we copy from the Buffalo Daily Courier, a very forcible article in relation to this Wilmot proviso question, presenting other and cogent objections to this new form of semi-abolition agitation.

The Buffalo Courier, under the same caption has the following—

Ill was it for the democratic party of the Union, at the north, as well as the south, when the Wilmot proviso was inopportunity brought forward in the house of representatives. It is one of those measures of useless agitation, ineffectual for good in itself, introduced at a time and under circumstances not only calculated to embarrass the government in the prosecution of the war, but to cast distrust upon the motives and purposes of those who threw it as a firebrand into our national councils, when there was the most urgent necessity for union and concert of action—firmness of purpose and promptness of execution, to meet the machinations of an eternal political enemy, and to provide the sinews of war for our army, which was fighting to vindicate the honor and rights of the nation and to chastise the insults and aggressions of a faithless foe, whom no treaty could bind.

Let us examine this question abstractly—that is, disconnected with any irrelevant matter. It provides that slavery shall not exist in any territory which may hereafter be acquired by the U. States, either by conquest or purchase. What would be the result on the acquisition of territory? So long as it remained under the jurisdiction or congress, the proviso could be enforced. But the moment state governments are formed, the power of Congress ceases—and the people, acting in their sovereign capacities, can establish slavery at any moment. Congress has no longer power or jurisdiction over them. The Wilmot proviso becomes null and void. It is in vain to contend that its provisions would be binding upon States. Such a doctrine would lead to the worst kind of consolidation, and the establishing of central power which would be gradual and constant encroachments, swallow up all rights, and become a monster more to be feared than an absolute monarchy. Against such a consummation, every democrat, whether at the north or the south, will raise his voice, and exert the utmost of his energies. And yet there are those who advocate this doctrine under the disguise of the Wilmot proviso. There are those who contend that it will be binding in all coming time upon any territory which may be acquired by the U. States. Such as these, either do not understand the true relation between the State and General Governments, or have imbibed the federal notions upon this point, which would go to destroy the former and build up the latter in increased strength. Restrictions similar to those of the Wilmot proviso were laid upon the northwestern territory. But who supposes that it is not competent for the people of Illinois, or Indiana, or any other state, formed of this territory, to establish slavery?
All it requires is an amendment to that effect, in their organic law, and there is no power on earth to prevent it. Congress cannot interfere, for the States are sovereign above Congress. It is a mistaken notion that the General Government is the superior Government of the country. It had its being and continues it existence only at the will of the States-two-thirds of which can control its destiny-while it exercises only powers which it has acquired of the States, and which are enumerated in a written instrument.

If there are any who honestly suppose that the Wilmot proviso will prevent the existence of slavery in States which may be formed of acquired territory, an examination of the question will convince them of the falacy of their hopes. If any territory should be acquired favorable to the existence of slavery, the Proviso, would or could be no bar to its existence there. It might be excluded in form previous to the formation of State Governments, but beyond this, its power and effect would cease. But the territory which it is proposed to acquire, if any, is so situated in regard to climate, soil, and productions, that slavery could not exist. Its very first principle, avarice, would be opposed to it establishment, as free labor would be most profitable. Therefore, the Wilmot Proviso would be useless for these two reasons: the first, it would be unnecessary to accomplish the professed objects of its agitators; and second, it would be powerless for good as affecting states.

But there is another aspect of this question which is worthy of the serious consideration of the democracy. That is, its effect upon party relations. The democratic party has ever been recognized as standing up firmly and consistently to the compromises of the constitution upon all questions, including of course, that of slavery. Who does not remember the opprobrious epithets heaped upon our public men-the public men of our own State, Messrs. Van Buren, Wright, and others, for the stand they have heretofore taken in relation to the agitations of the abolitionists, and particularly in the matter of the "right of petition," so called? They have been foremost in vindicating the rights of our southern brethren, and so far have they gone, as to have been denounced as "dough faces," for, what was termed their obsequiousness to southern dictation. This has been the position heretofore, of all the prominent democrats of the north. They have stood up manfully to the spirit of the constitution, regardless of the clamor of the abolitionists and whigs. But the springing of the Wilmot Proviso, has caused a "fusion of parties"-a sudden and to superficial observed, an unaccountable abandonment of position by a portion of the democracy which, has, in time past; gone as far as the farthest in opposing a mischievous agitation of the slavery question. Of objects and motives we shall have nothing to say. -They are transparent. But we have to do with effects-with results-with consequences. We have shown-and all may see it, by a candid investigation of the question in all its bearings-then the proviso, if enacted, will be inoperative and void. The consequence of its agitation has been-disconnected with the war measures-to create sectional animosities-to strengthen prejudices-to widen the breach between the north and south-to create ill feeling, and to engender a spirit which may grow and increase until it will threaten the integrity of the Union. Upon the democracy of the north, its effects have been most disastrous. These we may behold most emphatically exemplified in New Hampshire. In that state, the democrats from being the most firm and steadfast in their adherence to the compromises of the constitution, abandoned the safe ground, and went in for the Wilmot Proviso. The whigs and abolitionists, notwithstanding, united against them, and they were defeated.

The Angelica Reporter, New York (Administration) paper, says-We this week lay before our readers in another column, a number of extracts of public sentiments upon the principle of the Wilmot Proviso. We are induced to do this that our readers may judge of their merits, and as to whether its advocates are confined in a "few meddling politicians of this state, or whether the principle is sustained by almost the entire people of the north. We shall continue these extracts from time to time as we may have room and leisure.

We agree with the New York Evening Post, that these extracts contain expressions of a principle which we fully believe is destined to prevail in the future domestic policy of our country. On this point the minds of men throughout the populous north and the fertile and flourishing west are in perfect agreement, and nothing short of the absolute penalty of Congress—a venality too monstrous and barefaced to be thought of—can prevent it from being embodied in our territories, whether already in possession or hereafter to be acquired.

That the south will insist very strongly upon giving us the next president, and will adopt almost any candidate who is a slaveholder, without looking very narrowly at his political opinions, in the hope of preventing the recognition of this principle by Congress, is now pretty clear; but even if the south should succeed in this, the most difficult part of its task will remain to be accomplished. No influence which any administration may exercise will be strong enough to overcome the strength of popular opinion diffused through a large majority of the American people. -Whenever Oregon received a territorial government, the prohibition of slavery is to be incorporated into her institutions. If California is to be added to our territories, it must come in as a domain the air of which cannot be breathed by a slave. The majority has made up its mind, if any faith is to be placed in the signs of the times, and every day adds to its determination. The minority may be able to protect somewhat the struggle; the minority will be angry, vehement, and loud, but it will submit to the inevitable decision, without any attempt to read asunder the Union.

The Patriot, the leading Administration paper in New Hampshire, in which state the "democrats" are for the proviso, has the following:

The Federalists abandoning the Wilmot Proviso.

We have always believed and frequently declared that there was not a particle of sincerity in the abolition professions of the federal leaders; and we have always maintained that they were dishonest, insincere and treacherous in their professions of detachment to the Wilmot Proviso. We have become more and more confirmed in this belief; every week that has passed since the subject was first agitated. We have never doubted that as soon as they had made all the capital possible out of it, they would throw it aside for some more available issues. What was more opinion then has now become evident to all. As long as there was the least prospect of gaining anything by sustaining this proviso, they were continually proclaiming their attachment, and swearing eternal fidelity to it. But what do we now see? The elections in this state are over; they have gained all that was to be secured by hypocritical professions and base bargaining; and now we see their base hypocrisy fast developing itself. We now see them openly repudiating this same Wilmot Proviso, to which they so openly proclaimed their attachment and swear eternal fidelity!

The Boston Atlas, which all along pretended that this very Wilmot Proviso was the very ark of our national salvation, and which but a few weeks ago denounced every opponent of that proviso as a "doughface" and an "apologist of slavery-this very consistent and honest print is now laboring to show that same proviso, in the words of the paper it was originally written on." In its zealous effort to write down that measure, it argues that so far from its preventing the extension of slavery—we may have a virtual and actual spread of slavery, and increase of slave territory, by the very means of, and under cover of the Wilmot Proviso itself.

Not content with turning this their hobby out to grass, as a favorite broken down horse, unfit for further use; not content with drumming this "issue out of their camp as a disturber of the peace, they sit down and coolly charge that it will cause the very evils for which they have always heretofore declared it to be the sole cure! And this denunciation of the Wilmot Proviso, let it be remembered, as been copied and approved by all the leading federal papers in New England! It is true that in thus repudiating the Wilmot Proviso they urge the adoption of another issue in its place; they raise the cry of "no more territory," and insist that the immense regions of New Mexico and Upper California, which must be free territory, shall not be added to our country. -But this does not in the least palliate their baseness and hypocrisy in repudiating the Wilmot Proviso; for this latter issue—this cry of "no more territory comes from the south; it is the slaveholder's cry and is raised for the express purpose of "heading off" the supporters of the Wilmot Proviso. Mr. Berrien, of Georgia, and Johnson, of Maryland, both slaveholders, both declared in the senate that they would oppose the acquisition of any territory, because they were satisfied that every acre of territory acquired must be free from slavery! And now we see the federal party of New England going over that very issue, thus raised to defeat the Wilmot Proviso and to prevent the acquisition of free territory!

Another writer in the Boston Atlas goes further than its editors; he talk the very language of Mr. Calhoun upon the subject; he declares that the Wilmot Proviso, if adhered to, will finally destroy our Government, and bring upon us, "the fate of former Republics!" Hear him rant and rave like a Southern nullifier:

"AWAY, THEN, WITH THE WILMOT PROVISO!"

Such is the frightful picture which a federal abolition draws as surely to result from "the spirit of the Wilmot Proviso! Has Southern slaveholder predicted more dire results? No; Mr. Calhoun himself has not predicted such fatal consequences, as the great oracle of New England federalism declared will surely follow the carrying out the spirit of the measure which that same paper has a thousand times represented to be the only salvation of the Republic. And here we have the union of the extreme advocates of slavery with the ultra abolitionist; both uttering the same cries of "away with the Wilmot Proviso," and "no more territory." Here we see New England federal abolitionism openly uniting with S. Carolina and Georgia slavery advocates, in opposing the acquisition of free territory!

This is a picture for the honest anti slavery people of New Hampshire to look upon, and to consider seriously. Those who have heretofore given the federalists the least credit for sincerity in their professions of attachment of the Wilmot Proviso-those who have ever believed that they cared the value of straw for the poor slave, will now see that they have been grossly deceived. They will now see that the abolition of slavery is a thing to be thought of and cared for, by the federal leaders, only when votes are thus to be gained, and they will thus know how to estimate their professions upon this subject, at their true value. In reflecting upon this subject, let them bear in mind the authoritative promulgation of the Boston Atlas—"AWAY WITH THE WILMOT PROVISO!" and compare it with the late talk of that and other federal papers before our election, upon the same subject. And let them watch well the course of the federal papers for this state, for they are now preparing to follow the Atlas; they already copy and approve the slaveholder's method of getting rid of the Wilmot Proviso; and ere long they will openly join in the cry of "AWAY WITH THE WILMOT PROVISO!"

The Richmond (Va.) Whig in conclusion of a long article upon the Wilmot Proviso, says: "It is for every lover of the Union, and to submit to receive no gift which will bring its continuance into danger. Like the Trojan horse, this fatal gift of Mexican territory is fraught with danger and death; like the unwary Trojans let us not break down the walls and admit into the citadel. Let us repel it and those who offer it to us. Then and then only can we be safe; then and then only will we have done our duty to the Union, to ourselves, and to mankind in general, whose hopes are wrapped up in the success of our great experiments."

The Baltimore American of the 14th has the following as a leading editorial.

The question of more territory -The question is, just now, very extensively discussed in the newspapers; and the main consideration, on the part of those who object to further territorial acquisitions, seems to resolve itself into a desire to avert the issue presented by the Wilmot Proviso.

We here leave out of view, as not connected necessarily with the subject, all questions as to the manner of acquisition-taking it for granted that the violence of injustice is contemplated; but that an acceptable and an ample equivalent is to be proffered for any new region that may be added to our domains.

The question, then, is concentrated into one of the geographical affinities, and of national interests and national unity.

Excluding all ideas of violence and injustice, as against other nations, the subject also excludes all ideas of mere aggrandizement on our part, spring from a lust of dominion or a passion for conquest.

A philosopher of no mean note has declared that with the geography of a country given him he will deduce the general features of its character and civilization. This is a generalized expression to be understood according to its spirit-in which view it has a great deal of meaning. In like manner, military men who study the natural features of a country, in the way of their profession, come to ascribe to the facts of geography an importance, which, to less observant persons, might seem exaggerated-the possession of a particular point, for example, being made essential to the security of some other point, not a series of points, with other relations of dependence or affinity so controlling in their influence as to determine the most momentous questions of policy and generalship.

It is to geography, then, that we are to look, mainly in order to determine the extent of our territory and to fix its boundaries.

In this view we find one central fact which gives shape and color to all other facts pertaining to the matter. The characteristic feature of our country is the Mississippi Valley-a grand characteristic. To this great valley all other parts of our country are adjunct, appurtenant-dependencies merely. -This magnificent valley, a unit in itself and a pledge of unity to all the elements it embraces, must draw to itself and bring within its sphere such territories as are really dependent on it. Thus with regard to California advocates of the acquisition of that region believe that it is as much dependency of the Mississippi Valley as Oregon is, or as our own strip of territory between the Alleghanies and the Atlantic.
The Mississippi river, indeed, draining the great valley, disembogues into the Gulf of Mexico and has New Orleans as an emporium of its commerce. But it also stretches out its arms, east and west to lay hold of both oceans. That vast alluvial region, the garden of the civilized world, extending from the Alleghanies to the Rocky Mountains and forming the heart of the North American continent, is to be, and that before many generations shall have passed, the centre of the world’s commerce and its most prolific source. It must have access to the sea coast on both shores, and along the whole extent, communicating freely with Atlantic sea board, which we already possess, entire, and with the Pacific which we must possess, entire. We could not permit a foreign power to occupy on this side of the Alleghanies, any where, between those mountains and the Atlantic. Neither can we permit any foreign power to hold between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific, intercepting our communications with that coast.

Besides, it is clear that California must have its connections with the Mississippi Valley. It will have them by two routes: the upper route, by Fremont’s Pass communicates with the head waters of the Platte and the Missouri; the lower route, by El Passo, reaches the waters of the Rio Grande. Without these connections California would be insulated. Confined to her own resources, which are not believed to be great, she would maintain only an insignificant existence; her fine harbors without the materials of commerce would not avail her much. But once drawn into the embrace of the great valley and suffused with the rich currents of its ample products, California, from her position alone, becomes important, and her commercial greatness stands revealed.

Holding, then, the Mississippi Valley, we must hold its avenues and outlets. In view of our commercial interests, present and prospective, it would not do to let a rival power possess the harbor of San Francisco. In the hands of Mexico it would be of no account. But it is evident that Mexico cannot long retain it. The country must soon pass from her hand—nay, it has passed already. The inhabitants are Americanized by immigration, and the country is ours really, as it will soon be, we doubt not, formally and by treaty.

The Washington Union on one side and the New York Evening Post on the other, are disputing at great length the point whether the Missouri compromise was or was not sustained and carried out in the annexation of Texas. The Union argues that the express provisions of said compromise were incorporated as the 3rd section of the law of congress authorising the admission of Texas, and also into all the enactments and formalities observed by Texas, in assenting to and confirming said annexation, which several provisions the Union proceeds to quote. To their argument and these quotations the Post thus replies:

The next position of the Union is, that we are wrong in affirming that the Missouri compromise was disregarded in the admission of Texas, and that Mr. Buchanan is right in saying that Texas was admitted “under the rule” of that compromise. To settle this point, it will be necessary to consider the words of the Missouri compromise. Here it is-forming the eighth and concluding section of the act of 1820, by which provision was made for admitting the state of Missouri into the Union.

“That in all the territory ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of thirty-six degrees and thirty minutes lies north latitude, not included within the limits of the state contemplated by this act, slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishments of crimes, whereof the parties shall have been duly convicted, shall be, and is hereby, for ever prohibited; Provided always. That any person escaping into he same, from whom labor or service is lawfully claimed, in any state or territory of the U. States, such fugitive may be lawfully reclaimed and conveyed to the person claiming his or her labor or service as aforesaid.”

This is a sweeping, entire, immediate and perpetual prohibition of the existence of slavery throughout every part of the region north of the line of latitude mentioned. If this same prohibition has been applied, in the same manner and with the same strictness, to any part of Texas, then, we are in the wrong, and Mr. Buchanan in the right. On turning to the constitution of the state of Texas, we find the following provisions:

Those provisions form a part of the constitution under which Texas was admitted into the Union, and they received on that occasion the sanction of congress. They are in force in every part of Texas, as well that portion which lies north of the compromise line as of that portion which lies south of it. They allow the owners of slaves to enter that northern portion with their bondsmen, and forbid the legislature to emancipate them unless by the consent and act of the owners. Slavery therefore is legalized, protected, enforced over every foot of soil every handful of dust that forms a part of the domain of Texas. Will Mr. Buchanan or will the Union, on comparing the Missouri compromise with the constitution of Texas, again seriously affirm that Texas has been admitted into the Union under the terms of that compromise?

The Union, however, cites the resolution by which provision was made for admitting Texas into the Union, and insists that the terms of this resolution, including as it affirms, an extension of the Missouri compromise to the soil of Texas, were strictly fulfilled. To this we reply in the outset—that if they resolution did, in fact, apply the conditions of the Missouri compromise to Texas, then that condition has been since repealed by congress, in admitting of Texas with a constitution enforcing slavery throughout its limits; but, if, on the other hand, the resolution does not include that condition, then the north has been cheated. In either case, faith has been violated. The following are the terms of the resolution in question:

“Third. New States, of convenient size, not exceeding four in number, in addition to said state of Texas, and having sufficient population may hereafter, by the consent of said states, be formed out of the territory thereof, which shall be entitled to admission under the provisions of the federal constitution. And such states as may be formed out of that portion of said territory lying south of the thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude, commonly known as the Missouri compromise line, shall be admitted into the Union with or without slavery, as the people of each state asking admission may desire. And in such state or states as shall be formed out of said territory north and said Missouri compromise line, slavery, or involuntary servitude, (except for crime,) shall be prohibited.”

This is not exactly the Missouri compromise, we confess, but there is no doubt that, at the time, the people of the north supposed that some part of Texas would be exempted from the evil of slavery, when that republic should be admitted into our Union. That was not done, however; the expectation, which the tenor of the Union’s whole argument admits to have been reasonable, was disappointed, and a state, lying partly north and partly south of the line of the Missouri compromise, was admitted into the Union with a constitution extending slavery over every part of it. If the south remains in the same temper as now, no free state will ever be carved out of Texas. It is only when a new state lying above the line of the compromise is erected, that the prohibition of slavery will begin to prevail. Texas may always refuse to give the free states the advantage of an addition to their number. She may consent only to the formation of a state lying partly north and partly south of the compromise line; in which case, the example of Texas herself will be pleaded forgiving it a constitution perpetuating, protecting, and enforcing the existence of slavery. The more we look at this pretended compromise, the more it strikes us as a trick, and a trick of the lowest surf—a stratagem to extend slavery over the whole domain of Texas, while we were amused with a hollow promise to give us a free state in the north of Texas, whenever it might suit the southern politicians to allow one to be erected north of the latitude so much talked of.

The Union dwells a good deal upon the reference made to this resolution and to the Missouri compromise, by name, in the constitution of Texas and in the various official proceedings by which Texas was incorporated into the Union. All these things make the trick the more gross, and the breach of faith the more profligate. It is no matter what mockery of words and phrases is used, as long as we are defrauded of the substance of what we were made to expect. We all know that the Missouri compromise has not been extended to any part of Texas, nor is it likely to be in our day; we know that slavery is allowed in every part of her domain and is likely to remain so in our time, and that is enough. A minister is a dilemma. A squad of Capt. Fairchild’s company of rangers happening to be in a scout, espied a body of Mexican lancers in a valley, advancing along a road from the city of Mexico. The men had not forgotten the fate of some of their companions who accompanied Captain Wells to the Natural Bridge. Thirsting for vengeance, they were soon charging down the hill with sabres drawn. As they approached the Mexicans, a gentleman was to spring from a litter borne by a pair of mules endeavoring by gesticulations and speech to keep the squad off. Some few of the boys who understood Spanish, learned that the gentlemen who was making such a liberal use of arms and tongue, was no less a personage than the Spanish minister, and that the lancers were sent with him from the city of Mexico. The squad mistrusted there might be some trickery in the matter, and escorted the party to the gate of the city, where his excellency, followed by numerous trains of mules, entered; and the lancers wheeled about and made their way back. Dr. Cooper and the Dragoons.-The N.Y. Herald says that "a letter received in New York from Lieut. Sears, of the second artillery, dated 24th Aug., states that Dr. Cooper and the twelve dragoons who left Capt. Well’s command, for the purpose of joining Major Lally, and informing him of the approach of reinforcements, and who was supposed to have fallen into the hands of the Mexicans, reached the train at Cerro Gordo in safety on the 23d ult. This letter is the only one received that mentions this intelligence.” We fervently hope the account may be confirmed. [DCK]

Illinois regiment.—The steamboat Eudora brought down yesterday four companies of the 6th regiment of Illinois volunteers, (being the second under the new requisition,)—348 men in all—under command of Maj. Livingston. They landed at Carrollton. Three companies, commanded by Capts. Bowman Burnes, and Ewing, embarked at St. Louis on the 13th, on the Buena Vusta, under the charge of Lieut. Col. Hicks; and the three remaining companies were to embark on the 15th, on the Ne Plus Ultra. They will shortly be expected here. [DCK]

NRR 73.049 September 25, 1847, letter from Gen. Gideon Johnson Pillow, comments by S.W. Oakley

GEN. PILLOW—The New Orleans Delta of the 22d ult., contains the following letter from Gen. Pillow.

Puebla, Mexico, Aug. 6, 1847.

EDS. DELTA: My attention has been called to a letter dated, "St. Charles, May 9, 1847,” and purporting to have been signed by myself, in reply to an invitation to the festivities given in honor of the returning volunteers, first published in some paper in New Orleans, (I do not know which) and republished in the Politician, in Nashville Tenn.

I know nothing of this letter, or of its author, further than that, from its being address to Col. Oakey, he would seem to have (no doubt from kind and friendly motives to me) had some agency in it.

I was invited to attend the dinner by several gentlemen of the committee, but it was one the eve of my departure for the army, and I gave none but verbal replies that I could not attend in consequence of my public duties in the army requiring my immediate departure for the seat of war.

I neither wrote that letter nor authorized it to be written, nor in any way sanctioned it; nor do I adopt or approve the sentiments or opinion therein expressed, and cannot allow such liberties to be taken with my name, no matter what the motive.

Papers that have published that letter will please insert this.

With great respect, I am your ob’t serv’t.
GID. J. PILLOW.

Editorial Commercial Bulletin: Being the member in behalf of the committee, to invite Major General Pillow, I was bearer of the invitation, verbally; so, also was made the reply; but with the express request to me that his reply should be published with the proceedings, and that I should send him a copy of the paper containing it.

Perceiving that Gen. Pillow’s whole thoughts and feelings were most concentrated in the desire to embark that day, and push forward to the command of his division in Mexico, I yielded to this request, promised performance, and redeemed my pledge.

Maj. Gen. Pillow has only been reminded of these circumstances, to do justice to himself as well as to the individually and as a member of the committee. I may have been mistaken in the subject of our conversation, as what he did, or did not, wish to appear in the reply; but, in making the request to me it was his risk as the phraseology: but he knew he incurred no risk of anything appearing, while I was his amanucent is, but those correct, honorable and patriotic sentiments in unison with those on which he can so eloquently converse, and which he did then so fervently express.

I regret that Maj. Gen. Pillow regards so sensitively the fire of ridicule from his enemies in the rear. -He has before him an example in his present senior Major General, who left behind him an almost overwhelming tirade of ridicule. But his onward movements through the enemy’s fire in front, had changed those sneers and laughter into applause, universally bestowed on his generalship and military science, never excelled, if equalled, by any general in any quarter of the globe, excepting only those of our own country.

NRR 73.049, Col. 3 Sept. 25, 1847 The National Revenue: Revenue Derived from tariff on Mexico

The National Revenue-Official Statement.

Treasury Department, Sept. 16, 1847

Sir: The enclosed statement, prepared in the office of the register of the treasury, is transmitted in compliance with the request contained in your communication of the 26th ultimo.

The new tariff went into operation on the 1st December last; and the nett proceeds under it (after deducting all expenses of collection) actually paid into the treasury during the first nine months of its operation, is, as you perceive, $22,961,333 28- being greater by the sum of $3,176,018 57, than the sum paid into the treasury during the same period of nine months under the tariff of 1842; and exhibiting a gain, at the same ratio of increase, of $4,234,691 42 of the first twelve months under the tariff of 1846 as compared with the tariff of 1842.

The gross proceeds received by the collectors is much greater, as the expenses of collection are deducted before the money is paid into the treasury and recorded by the register. Most respectfully your obedient servant,
R. J. Walker,

Secretary of the Treasury.

NRR 73.053 Sept. 25, 1847 War with Mexico

When the daily journals which are now filled with interesting details of the progress of the war, shall have taken the usual course of such passing publications, and a few or none of them are to be found, it has been our purpose that the pages of the national Register shall preserve the best and most comprehensive of those details in such a form as to render them accessible to its readers as well as future historians. We remarked at the commencement of this war, that all its incidents and the transactions of those who were embarked in it, would be more thoroughly known by mankind, than those of any war that he ever taken place:-because the persons who were actors as well as those who observed, were far better qualified to furnish correct accounts of what transpired on one hand, and the faculties for diffusing their statements never have been equaled-heretofore the world learned of such events mainly through the partial statements of the commanders.

In our last we furnished, along with others, the graphic letters of Mr. Kendall, the talented corespondent of the New Orleans Picayune, giving his first version of the affairs which transpired in the vicinity of the city of Mexico. In this number we furnish the statements of other officers engaged in those brilliant transactions, and amongst them, those of "Mustang," the no less talented correspondent of the New Orleans Delta. It is from the accounts of such writers that a vast deal is ascertained, and often a truer picture is given, of events, than could ever be known from the mere perusal of official statements, which come however, very properly, to correct the errors into which such writers are liable to fall, from writing under hasty impulses and with but partial view often ground.

The list of our killed and wounded is given by "Mustang," and is inserted in the Delta, the Washington Union, and the National Intelligencer. After some hesitation between a desire to gratify the impatience of our readers to see the melancholy record, and the uncertainty whether the list would correspond with the more deliberately prepared official list, which will be included in the report of the commander, we have finally concluded to defer the publication of the list for the arrival of the later, as ours is intended to be of the highest authority, for future reference.

The "Union" states that no idea of a relaxation of the measures to reinforce out army in Mexico is entertained by government; on the contrary, every effort is being made to reinforce Gen. Scott with such bodies of men as will "be able to control the Mexicans, to coerce peace, or, of a treaty be already made, to secure its execution." [KAS]

NRR 73.053 September 25, 1847, British courier from Mexico proceeds through United States to London, our government without dispatches, rumors of peace, negotiations

When the daily journals which are now filled with interesting details of the progress of the war, shall have taken the usual course of such a passing publications, and few or none of them are to be found, it has been our purpose that the pages of the National Register shall preserve the best and most comprehensive of those details in such, a form as to render them accessible to its readers as well at future historians.

We remarked at the commencement of this war, that all its incidents and the transactions of those who were embarked in it, would be more thoroughly known by mankind, than those of any war that has ever take place: -because the persons who were actors as well as those who observed, were far better qualified to furnish correct accounts of what transpired on one hand, and the faculties for diffusing their statements never have been equalled. -Heretofore the world learned of such events mainly through the (partial) statements of the commanders.

In our last we furnished, along with others, the graphic letters of Mr. Kendall, the talented correspondent of then New Orleans Picayune, giving his first version of the affairs which transpired in the vicinity of the city of Mexico. In this number we furnish the statements of other officers engaged in those brilliant transactions, and amongst them, those of "Mustang," the no less talented correspondent of the New Orleans Delta. It is from the accounts of such writers that a vast deal is "ascertained, and often a truer picture is given, of events, than could ever be known from the mere perusal of official statements, which come however, very properly, to correct the errors into which such writers are liable to fall, from writing under hasty impulses and with but partial view of the ground.

The list of our killed and wounded is given by "Mustang," and is inserted in the Delta, the Washington Union, and the National Intelligencer. After some hesitation between a desire to gratify the impatience of our readers to see the melancholy record, and the uncertainty whether the list would correspond, with the more deliberately prepared official list, which will be included in the report of the commander, we have finally concluded to defer the publication of the list for the arrival of the latter, as ours is intended to be of the highest authority, for future reference.

The "Union" states that no idea of a relaxation of measures to reinforce our army in Mexico is entertained by government; on the contrary, every effort is being made to reinforce Gen. Scott with such bodies of men as will "be able to control the Mexicans, to coerce a peace, or, if a treaty be already made, to secure its execution.

The week has passed without government having received any despatches from Gen. Scott's army. They have no letter from our commanders since the battle. The Union says, that a steamer was kept in readiness at Vera Cruz to receive the general's official and bring them on to government. IT is to the British couriers we are indebted for most of the information lately received from our army. The New Orleans Picayune of the 8th says: "We learn that an English courier arrived here on the Col. Stanton, who had been despatched by the house of Manning & Macintosh from the city but a few moments. It is conjectured by those with whom he transacted business here, that he was despatched to England with a view to some operation in Mexican bonds. He left here in hopes to hit the Boston steamer of the 16th inst."

This courier will probably be in London by the time our government receive their official despatches from Gen. Scott.

One reason for this delay, is the difficulty experienced in communicating between Gen. Scott's headquarters and Vera Cruz. A letter from Vera Cruz written a few days after the battle of Churubusco, states that the governor of that place would not allow any body of men less than 1,500 to start from thence to General Scott's headquarters. This precaution was induced by the repeated embarrassments experienced already. Gen. Cadwallader had to fight all his way up to Puebla. -Gen.
Pierce had to fall back for reinforcements, and had with him 2,500 men. Major Lally had to send back for reinforcements, and barely escaped with his forces. Capt.
Wells, the last that started, was compelled to return, with the loss of his train and a number of his men. The distance to be traversed to connect this depot with headquarters is now greater and the danger undiminished. We see no intimation from Vera Cruz to reinforce Gen. Scott. A considerable body of men must have concentrated there by the 1st September, whether a sufficient force will be collected to advent on the route before the arrival of the two brigades from the Rio Grande, is questionable.

The Washington Union speaks of the six additional regiments which have been called for, and which is now organizing with all practicable despatch, and put them en route to embark to reinforce Gen. Scott. It is fervently hoped that Gen. Scott may not have to await till they arrive, to commence further active operations, should a treaty no be concluded.

Gen. Pierce writes, after the late battles, to his friend, "Our loss has been heavy. - RUMORS RESPECTING A TREATY OF PEACE. The Spanish paper La Patria, published at New Orleans in an extra, gives a letter from their correspondent at Tampico, dated the 6th September, which we had so little faith in as to conclude not to insert—but as our compositors call for “more copy” we give it, “for what it worth,” as the Picayune has done adding “It is no later from the city of Mexico than has been received by way of Vera Cruz. Nobody we take it, believes the United States are going to restore California.

There may be some diplomatic arrangement by which we may exchange the title by conquest which we now have for one by purchase—we suppose the three millions are intended for some such purpose. -But the United States will never give up California, and this part of the letter must be all fudge. The statement about the canal and Matamoros is simply unintelligible.

But this letter, which we give solely to gratify the gaping curiosity of the town for every word or news from Mexico, is important in one view of it. It confirms the fact that Mexicans generally do sincerely believe that an immediate peace is to grow out of the late victories and the negotiations founded upon them.”

The letterwriters with our army show themselves by no means as sanguine of this as do the Mexicans.

But the letter of the La Patria-Here it is-

Tampico, Sept. 5th, 1847.

My friends -I have just received a letter from Mexico, which arrived here by special express, via Huejutla, and I take advantage of the departure, almost at this very moment, of a vessel bound to your port, to transmit a copy of it. It is to this effect:

Mexico, August 29th, 1847 -Esteemed friends; I have already informed you that Gen. Scott proposed a suspension of arms on the 21st, and that is was followed by an armistice agreed to on the 22d inst. A negotiation was forthwith opened with Mr. Trist, and I have just been assured that up to yesterday it had progressed very satisfactorily. Very shortly, a treaty of peace, it is expected will be concluded. The principal articles re the following:

"The United States shall restore Mexico to California, together with all the ports, cities and towns which the Americans forces occupy in our territory."

"The United States shall for ever retain the State of Texas whose limits shall extend to the left bank of the Rio Bravo del Norte, comprising Matamoros, by means of a canal which shall be cut for that purpose."

In respect to this latter point, it appears that nothing definitive has been agreed on.

It has been found impossible to assemble congress, consequently, a junta of "notables" will be formed, for the express purpose of revising the treaty. There are other articles, but as they are of secondary importance, they are not given.

General Valencia marched to Toluca where he publicly declared that he would not recognize Santa Anna as president of the republic, not as commander in chief; -and the proposed to assemble troops for the purpose of attacking the capital. Subsequently, however, appears he surrendered himself to the government, by whom he had been sent prisoner to Guadalupe, where he is to be brought before a court martial.

Gen. Alvarez is announced as intending to reassemble his troops for the purpose of attacking the Americans, on the first favorable opportunity.

General Paredes, it is stated, is marching on the capital, with a respectable force, which he has succeeded in bringing together, with a view to assist his countrymen. Then he persists in doing notwithstanding the order that has been transmitted to him from Santa Anna to quit the country—to return again to the place of his exile.

General Salas. I have just seen a communication from General Salas, dated Coyuncan, where he remained a prisoner. In this, he declares that it was by the unskilfulness of Valencia, and the cowardice of Torrejon that the battle of Contreras was lost.

Torrejon, instead of obeying the orders of Salas, which directed him to charge the Americans with his cavalry, pusillanimously fled, and in this manner brought ruin and destruction on our infantry.

This is positively the latest news from the capital, but I expect at every moment the receipt of more, of still greater interest, which will enter more into details. [JCS]

NRR 73.053, Col. 3, 1 Sept. 25, 1847 Gen. Jose Mariano de Salas' Accusations Against Gen. Anastasio Torrejon at Contreras

General Salas. I have just seen a communication from General Salas, dated Coyoacan, where he remained a prisoner. In this, he declares that it was by the unskilfulness of Valencia, and the cowardice of Torrejon that the battle of Contreras was lost.

Torrejon, instead of obeying the orders of Salas, which directed him to charge the Americans with his cavalry, pusillanimously fled, and in this manner brought ruin and destruction on our infantry.

This is positively the latest news from the capital, but I expect at every moment the receipt of more, of still greater interest, which will enter more into details.

Department of War and Navy--Section of Operations
Army of the North--Second General in Chief.

Most excellent sir: On the 19th inst., about 12 or 1 o'clock, p.m., the enemy appeared, as if with the intention of attacking the position occupied by this army on the heights of Contreras. In the moment we began a very steady fire of artillery and musketry, a successively, as the enemy presented himself in the various points sustained by our troops, and we succeeded in stopping him in several places, until night put an end to the fighting, in which all the classes of his army gave proofs of their gallantry and the decision with which they sacrificed their lives in the defence of our nationality; but on the morning of the 20th - thanks to the bad position we occupied, and the carelessness paid the movements of the enemy to surround us - we were routed in all directions by more than 6,000 men - the 3,000 infantry being placed in one point, which was surrounded. When we observed the dispersion of our forces, I tried all I could to stop it, and, crying "Victory for Mexico," at the same time that the bugle sounded for slaughter, I succeeded in stopping it for a moment, and ordered General Don Anastasio Torrejon to charge with his command; but this chief, instead of obeying my order, fled cowardly, and the cavalry following his example, trampled on the infantry, and contributed to the complete rout of it.

It would appear ridiculous to make any recommendations of those who have been present in an unfortunate battle; however, I cannot help mentioning to your excellency that I am perfectly satisfied with the gallantry and tenacity with which the chiefs and officers of the several corps tried, even in the midst of disorder, to reunite their forces to resist the enemy, who was hotly pursuing us. This conduct, observed by them, preferring to be made prisoners before abandoning their soldiers, will always do them honor; and for this, I, think, they are entitled to the consideration of the supreme government, and the gratitude of their fellow citizens.

His excellency the commander-in-chief, Don Gabriel Valencia, disappeared from amongst us at the commencement of the action of the 20th; and I, not knowing his whereabouts, have thought it my duty to address your excellency, accompanying a list of the chiefs and officers who are prisoners in this city; another of those who were wounded in San Angel, and of those known to have been killed; another list of those made prisoners in the action of Churubusco - all of which I have the honor of manifesting to your excellency for your intelligence, praying that, on communicating the above to his excellency the president, you will please manifest to him the total indigence in which the prisoners find themselves, as having lost everything, and the American general having given orders that they be maintained by the inhabitants of this city, which is destroyed, they must perish in misery, if their government does not supply them with what they are entitled to, and which their actual situation and the well-deserving conduct that has distinguished them, energetically claim.

I reiterated to your excellency my respects and particular esteem. God and liberty.

JOSE MARIANO SALAS.

NRR 73.054 September 25, 1847, Detail of Gen. Winfield Scott’s march from Puebla to Mexico City, movements prior to the battles

The army left Puebla on the 8th of this month, and after a few days’ march, reached Avolta, immediately on the margin of the valley of Mexico. Between this place and the city, about 4 miles distant, we knew there was a strongly fortified position, called St. Pinon; it is a small isolated mountain, surrounded by water, on one side of the principal causeways leading to the city. After spending a day or two in reconnoitering this place, and which would have caused a great loss of life to have taken, it was ascertained that there was a practical road south of Lake Chalco. The general determined to take this route, and put the army in motion, leaving out division to watch the enemy in our rear. The march was a dreadful one, being the rainy season. The road was in many places, where it passes at the foot of the mountains, and on the margin of the lake or narrow causeway, nearly covered with water, and excessively muddy; at others it was over rocky spaces of the mountains, and in places entirely obstructed by huge rocks rolled down by the enemy; but nothing seems to damp the ardor of the army - all obstacles vanished before them.
In two or three days when the whole army was in motion, they could be seen from the front stretched out over a distance of seven or eight miles. On the 18th the general reached small town called San Augustin, about twelve miles south of the city, the leading division having arrived there the day before. General Worth had placed his pickets in advance for the arrival of the general; he ordered the whole division to advance and take possession of the hacienda within striking distance of a strongly fortified place called San Antonio and also that reconnoitering parties should be pressed forward still in advance; the party was supported by a squadron of cavalry and a battalion of infantry. In passing to the front, I found that a troops which had been placed as a pickets had gone forward; and as I came up with it, it made a turn in the road which opened upon them. The first tire killed Capt.
During the afternoon we watched the different movements of our troops with the most fearful anxiety, and could plainly see one of our columns resist a charge of a large body of cavalry, and the enemy falling from their saddles, and taking to their heels. During the whole of the night, we could see on the right a body of at least ten thousand infantry, and cavalry in reserve, towards the city; but they had not the courage to advance, although Santa Anna himself was said to be there. The attack was ordered to be renewed at 3o'clock next morning, and the general returned to San Augustin. He left at an early hour, taking with him General Worth's and one half of his division as a reinforcement; but en route he was met by an officer, who reported that the batteries had been carried by our troops in a most gallant style, Colonel Riley leading the assault. As he approached the scene of action, it seemed most incredible how our men got over the ground to the attack. It was over immense masses of lava thrown up in the roughest, sharpest, possible shapes, and covered with dense brushwood. Streams had to be crossed and deep ravines; and most of them having passed the night in a pelting rain without shelter, it appears almost incredible that they should be able to drive double their numbers from a battery of 23 heavy guns. The scene of the arrival of the general was most exciting. The cheering of the troops left to protect the property taken, and their delight was very gratifying. Many of the guns taken have been added to our siege train. The amount of ammunition taken exceeded by three times the whole which we brought from Vera Cruz, so that we are well provided. But the greatest cause of exultation was the recapture of two of our own guns, brought from Buena Vista, the last battle of General Taylor. When I saw the U.S. on them, I felt like dismounting and embracing them. What is remarkable about their recapture; it was made by the 4th artillery, to which regiment they formerly belonged. They, with other small capture pieces, were immediately fitted up as a light battery, and the captain (Dunn) who took them, in command of it. The general, when he received the intelligence of this victory, sent General Worth back to make a demonstration on San Antonio, whilst he, with the portion of the army which was pressing the enemy, should get in its rear. I will not stop to describe the scene on the field of battle. On leaving it, the road was literally strewed with dead Mexicans, arms, broken carriages, &c. In passing a bridge, I looked over, and saw the bodies of at least twenty, piled one on the other, and the bank of the stream was strewed with them, and it was some distance before we out of sight. Going on, we came to a church, in which were confined 700 prisoners. The general halted a few minutes, and addressed the officers very kindly. Amongst them were four generals. He then hurried out to join the pursuing army. We came put with them at San Angel, where they halted. As the general passed along the line, it was one continued shout. After a few moments we passed on to a village called Coyoacan, where we heard firing on our right, about two miles off, in the direction of San Antonio. The general immediately sent me, with Capt. Kearny's troop, to ascertain the state of affairs. We galloped on; and on approaching the place, I found that Worth had turned the place by both flanks, and driven the enemy from it, and was in hot pursuit of them. I returned to the general as quickly as I had gone, and as I galloped among I heard a brisk firing in the front. When I reached him I found that he was fiercely engaged with the enemy at another strongly entrenched position—San Pablo. This action lasted more than two hours, and the firing was more general and more continued than any I had heard yet. The enemy's grape and canister flew like hail, and the fire of our infantry was one continued volley. The battery was obliged to retire, being most sadly crippled —lost two officers, a great many men, and left the field with only two horses to a gun; but the enemy, although behind entrenchments, with heavy guns, could not withstand the impetuosity and valor of our troops. The place was carried by assault, and the whole armament and a great number of prisoners were taken. In the mean time, Worth having hotly pursued the enemy, came up with them at another fortified place in advance of San Pablo, called Churubasco, and, after an obstinate resistance carried it, made many prisoners, and drove the enemy before him. The dragoons pursued and followed him to the very gates of the city.
Thus ended the day; and I think you will agree with me that it was a TOLERABLY active one-four distinct battles having been fought and won, and the enemy outnumbering us in each at least three to four times. They acknowledge to have had thirty thousand men in the field on that day; and yet we drove them on every occasion, and, in the end, made more than twenty three hundred prisoners, among them seven of their principal generals, and about forty pieces of cannon. Our loss, I am sorry to say, as may be expected, has been very great. It may possibly reach one thousand killed and wounded—but the returns are not yet in; but enough is known to satisfy us that we have lost many very valuable officers. Among the prisoners taken, I was mortified to see between 50 and 70 deserters from our army, with the Mexican uniform on. A court is in session to try them, and I trust that many of them will be published. It is pretty well known from their position in the battle of San Pablo, that a volley from them killed and wounded sixteen out of the second infantry, including an officer, and leaving one officer (the adjutant of the regiment) standing.

There are many of our friends, I am sorry to say, among the killed and wounded; but I can hardly enumerate them now. Young Captain Hanson, of Washington, was killed. Colonel Butler, of S. Carolina regiment, was killed; Smith, badly wounded in the arm and thigh; hopes are entertained that his arm may be saved. Lieut. Irons shot through the windpipe, slight hopes of his recovery. Captain Philip Kearney lost his arm in the charge towards the gate of the city; he is doing well. There are others, no doubt, which I cannot recollect at this moment; but many that we equally interested in are safe. Hagner and Galt are both safe. [JCS]

Vol 73.055 Sept. 25, 1847 From General Wool's command

From General Wool's command.- We have a series of very interesting letters coming down to the 16th of August. We are unable to give any portion before our next regular issue.

Captain Fairfax, of the Virginia regiment died at Satillo on the 14th ult., of fever.

The steamer Ogden arrived at N. Orleans on the 11th with Brazos dates on the 7th, Gen. Lane's brigade was there, and expected to embark for Vera Cruz on the 8th, to which place Gen. Marshall had also been ordered.

General Cushing and Lieut. Col. Abbott reached Matamoros from Monterey on the 3d. en route for Vera Cruz. Gen. C. is concentrating his brigade as the several detachments come down at El Sabinito, near Palo Alto. Deas' battery, which was to have accompanied General Cushing, has been ordered to remain with General Wool at the express request of the latter. Captain Shover passed down the river with Gen. Cushing on his way to Washington.

Captain Clark, of the 2d. Mississippi rifles, was at Matamoros on the 3d. instant, with a detachment of recruits on his way to his regiment at Buena Vista.

Captain Clinch was at the mouth of the river on the 16th instant, with a detachments of recruits for the 13th infantry, and would leave the next day for Gen. Cushing's camp at Sabmito.

Col. R.E. Temple arrived at Matamoros on the 1st instant, with four companies of his regiment, the 10th infantry.

The "Flag" says that col. Tibbatts, who was proceeding from Mier to Monterey with six companies of the 16th infantry, escorting a train, was attacked by a large party of Mexicans near Ramos, and succeeded in driving them off, with a loss of two wounded. Col. Tibbatts and his men were under fire for some time, and conducted themselves with great intrepidity. Intelligence was received at Buena Vista on the 20th of August, in a letter from San Luis Potosi, by the way of Parras, that Gen. Scott's column had marched from Puebla, and two days afterwards a rumor reached there of the capitulation of the city of Mexico. This illustrates the rapidity with which intelligence travels in Mexico by verbal report.

The same paper says that Mr. E. B. Lundy and Mons. Monthly, who were taken prisoners some 4 weeks since by Carvajal, have been set at liberty, and arrived at Matamoros on the 3d. instant. They state that they were liberated by representing that they were not Americans. They were taken as far as Tula. Mr. L. says that General Urrea left that place a few days since, with 1,200 men, for the purpose of taking trains or goods between Camargo and Monterey.

The Union says that letter have been received from the camp of General Taylor, who was then near Monterey. The general had made the necessary arrangements for carrying out his late general order for sending the troops he could spare to Vera Cruz, to join the column of General Scott. In addition to the troops which he kept upon his line of defense, he had detained the light battery of Capt. Deas, to strengthen his line. A mixed force of dragoons and Texans was employed in clearing the country between Camargo and Monterey of the roving guerrillas.

Reports are renewed of the general’s intention to visit the United States; but he does not yet mention such an intention in his recent dispatches. [KAS]

NRR 73.055 Sept. 25, 1847 a letter from Buena Vista

North Carolina Regiment- A letter from Buena Vista, dated Aug. 19, to the Picayune says: "The mutiny in the North Carolina regiment has been effectually quelled. On the morning after it broke out a number of the officers if the regiment signed a petition to the colonel to resign, which he very properly refused to, but laid it before Generals Cushing and Wool. It was considered by the commanding general that there was a participation in the mutiny and two of the signers were dishonorably discharged from the service. As soon as this was known seventeen officers, I think, tendered their resignation, but after twenty-four hours had elapsed they thought better of it and begged leave to withdraw, expressing all due contrition, and leave was granted. Thus quiet subordination has been restored. The three regiments have all been separated-the North Carolina ordered to the rear, and the Virginians to the front. The soldier who was wounded by Colonel Paine at the time he shot at the mutineers, was a Virginian and has been dishonorably discharged from the service."

A letter of the 21st says: "Since my last, two companies of the North Carolina regiment have been ordered to the support of Captain Prentiss' battery on the hill above Saltillo. One of these companies, commanded by Capt. Henry, is the crack corps of the regiment, and has been stationed in town ever since their arrival. It had no participation whatever in the late mutinous outbreak. Mr. Buck, formerly adjutant to the regiment, but recently appointed aid de camp to gen. Cushing, has been elected captain in the regiment to fill a vacancy, and will not go to Vera Cruz. The express sent to the reported advance upon this quarter, has not yet returned." [KAS]

Editors Delta-The late brilliant achievement of the arms of the United States over the superior numbers of the enemy, and in front of the capital of the country, cannot but excite the admiration and pride of our people, from one end of the land to the other; but those who were not here to witness and participate in the desperation of the conflict-the great and apparently insurmountable obstacles-the privations and hardships endured—never can properly appreciate the brilliancy of the victory, the gallantry and good conduct, and the scientific attainments of our noble little army. Our comparative loss of those engaged, exceeds that of any battle of which we have any recollection; being about one out of six. To attempt to enumerate, in a proper manner, the individual instances of heroism—of determined and deliberate courage—of the perseverance and interpidity with which great and powerful obstacles were surmounted—would be but commencing an endless task. I trust when the details of these brilliant affairs are given by the respective commanders, that our country will testify its admiration and respect of some substantial reward—a reward that will live in memory and history when the actors in these stirring scenes shall have mouldered in the dust.

About the 15th instant it was determined that we should not attack El Penon, where the enemy had made every preparation to receive us, and where, no doubt, we would have been compelled to sacrifice many more lives than we have already done. Accordingly, the engineers having discovered a road by which we could turn it, we took our route to Lake Chalco. At this movement the enemy were seriously nonplussed, as they were not aware themselves of any practicable route we could take that would so effectually turn their position, and in order to delay our

He appeared determined to maintain his position in front of his fortifications, suing his artillery for a mile over a broken and confused mass of lava, apparently impassable even for footmen. The enemy opened his heavy batteries from Contreras, and the advancing troops of General Smith's brigade hotly engaged the enemy's infantry which he had thrown out across a deep ravine and creek in front of his fortifications. He appeared determined to maintain his position in front of his fortifications, suing his artillery for a time against the rear brigades of our army as they came up; but he was not able to stand the severity of the conflict, and was compelled to retire with heavy loss. On the 19th, the enemy fired from the works of San Antonio on the hacienda of San Juan de Dios, supposing a part of our forces were still there. About 10 o'clock, the sappers and miners, under Lieutenant Smith, and the section of mounted howitzers, under Lieut. Callender, returned to San Augustin, and joined Gen. Pillow's division, which was then taking up its march in the direction of Contreras. Gen. Pillow continued his march, opening the road as he went, until he reached a high point, from whence we had the enemy and his fortifications in full view. Between one and two o'clock the division of Gen. Twiggs came up with the advance and moved forward Gen. Smith's brigade advancing to the left, and Col. Riley's to the right. Gen. Pillow placed at the disposal of Gen. Twiggs, Capt. Magruder's battery, and Lieut. Cadwallader's howitzers—both of which belonged to the proper division of Gen. Pillow.

With the great difficulty, the two batteries moved forward, having to travel half a mile over a broken and confused mass of lava, apparently impassable even for the engineers in a reconnaissance of the fortifications of San Antonio. Capt. Thornton had been very unwell for some time, and went out in command of his squadron against the advice of his physician and his senior officers; but his energy and gallantry would not allow him to remain inactive when there was the least possibility. The fire was soon as the dragoons were withdrawn, Col. Danean's battery and the sappers and miners moved down the road, and took a position that would enable them to operate in any direction, incase of an emergency. Col. Smith's light battalion was thrown out on the left front, to watch the movements of the enemy, and to hold him in check in case of his advancing his flank. Immediately after Col. Garland's brigade made a diversion to the right, and took position in line, resting his right at the hacienda of San Juan de Dios, about 400 yards to the right of the road. As soon as this movement was completed, the 24 brigade under Colonel Clarke, moved down the road until the head of his column rested on the left wing of Col. Garland. Once section of the mountain was brought forward, and thus they remained until sundown, when the brigade of cavalry withdrew, leaving the infantry and military on the ground. About 2o'clock a heavy rain came on, which completely drenched the troops, and they were also exposed during the night to a slow drizzling rain without tents or blankets. Gen. Worth, with a part of the 1st brigade, occupied the hacienda of San Juan de Dios during the night, and the enemy amused themselves by firing a few random shot at it about sundown, from San Antonio, but without any other effect than to riddle the house completely with balls, and to besprinkle the officers with the mortar and dust of the old hacienda. During the day Major Graham was sent out from San Augustin, (Gen. Scott's headquarters), towards Contreras, to protect the engineers in a reconnaissance of the route in that direction, where, during the forenoon, he engaged a force of the enemy's cavalry and infantry, which he drove back, with a loss of eight killed, two wounded, and five prisoners—Maj. Graham's command sustaining no loss.
the death of Lieut. Johnson: Lieut. Callender was also severely wounded.

Gen. Pillow had ordered Gen. Pierce's brigade to the support of Gen. Smith, and Gen. Cadwallader's to the support of Col. Riley. At this state of the battle, while it was raging with extreme severity, the enemy appeared on the left of the fort at Contreras, and in rear of the village of Ensaldo where Col. Riley had arrived, with a force of 12,000 men, (which we afterwards learned was under the command of Santa Anna himself,) apparently threatening the safety of Col. Riley and Gen. Cadwallader. Gen. Pillow ordered the 15th infantry, under Col. Morgan, to the support of Gen. Cadwallader. Gen. Scott came upon the ground about this time, bringing with Gen. Shields's brigade of volunteers (South Carolina and New York) whom he advanced to the support of the forces under Gen. Cadwallader.

Gen. Twiggs, finding his command so separated, and that it was utterly impossible, from the nature of the ground, for him to reach the point he intended to occupy, as night approached, fell back with a portion of his staff to the place where Gen. Scott was passing the night, exposed to a severe rain, without shelter or anything more than his usual uniform, to protect him from the inclemency of the weather.

Magruder's and the howitzer battery being disabled, and it being evident that our left was advancing on a route prepared for us by the enemy—he having cleared away all the brush and other obstacles that obstructed his view, thereby exposing our infantry to a destructive fire as they approached, and it being doubtful whether they could cross the ravine after they reached it, Gen. Smith directed Captain Magruder and the howitzer battery to open, in order to attract the attention of the enemy, while he made a movement to the right, which he had determined on, in order to try one of the enemy's flanks. Leaving three companies of the 3d infantry to support the battery, and about 20 men of Maj. Dunick's command to reinforce the loss sustained by the battery, Gen. Smith moved off with the sappers and miners. Lieut. Smith, 1st artillery, Maj. Dunick, and 31 artillery, Capt. Alexander, and as many of the regiments as could be got together, they having been detached during the day as skirmishers, and to cover the engineers in their reconnaissance. After passing over the broken and irregular surface of the land, and crossing the deep ravines, he succeeded in reaching the village of Ensaldo. Gen. Smith being the ranking officer present, Gen. Cadwallader reported to him with four regiments of Gen. Pillow's division. Col. Riley's brigade had crossed the ravine, and gone up towards Contreras, after a strong body of the enemy, which he drove off. The enemy was now drawn up into two lines, above the village, on the right of the fort—the front infantry, the rear cavalry. The village of Ensaldo is protected on one side by a deep ravine—on the road between it and the stream is a house and garden, surrounded by a high and rather strong stone wall; the village is intersected by narrow lanes, between high dikes, enclosing gardens full of fruit trees and shrubbery, affording protection and concealment for the men. The church, standing in the centre; also afforded protection, if necessary—Gen. Smith now directed Gen. Cadwallader's force to be drawn up on the outer edge of the village facing the enemy's heavy force on the left of the force—formed the 3d infantry and rifles in column of company, left in front on the right flank, and placed Lieut. Smith's sappers and miners, and Captain Irwin's company of the 11th infantry, in the church, and Maj. Dimick's regiment in the garden on the road, in order to secure that avenue and his rear.

Gen. Smith now determined to attack the large force on the enemy's right; with Col. Riley on the left, Gen. Cadwallader on the right of the former retired in echelon, but before the movement could be completed night approached and the enemy's line could be seen—therefore the order was countermanded, and Gen. Cadwallader resumed his position on the edge of the village; Col. Riley's brigade was formed in a long land inside parallel to it, the rides on his left, and the 3d infantry in the churchyard. Thus they remained exposed to a severe rain all over without fire of shelter—the officers from generals down sharing the severity of the weather—but perhaps it only whetted their appetites for a more glorious and determined engagement in the morning. But now imagine the position of this portion of the army, numbering 3500 at the outside, without artillery or cavalry, while the enemy in front and on the left had 19,000 troops—those in the fort said to be the best of Mexico—with 22 pieces of artillery, and among his troops about 7000 cavalry. It was evident that some decisive action had to be taken—and Gen. Smith and Col. Riley, seconded as they were, were just the men competent to the task. An attack on the main work was determined upon, and the movement to take place at three o'clock the following morning. However, here another obstacle presented itself—the force of Gen. Smith was not strong enough to attack the main work and hold the village at the same time, and it was of the utmost importance he should do so—for if he drove the enemy from this main work, and in his retreat he secured possession of the village, he could hold it long enough to allow his troops to get away, and in all probability seriously embarrass any further movements of our army until he was safely fixed somewhere else. It is said that fortune favors the brave—and in this instance it most truly did—fort while Gen. Smith was preparing for his attack, Gen. Shields reported his near approach with his brigade of South Carolina and New York volunteers—and here was an exhibition of magnanimity on the part of a high minded soldier to a brother officer. When Gen. S. arrived he was the ranking officer and could have assumed the command, but he was not the man to pluck the bright laurels about to be gathered by a brother soldier in carrying one of the strong works of the enemy—accordingly he moved subject to the command of Gen. Smith, and his brigade was placed in the village of Ensaldo, as circumstances might require, either to cut off the reserve of the enemy in flank, if it should change its front and attempt to attack our force towards Contreras.

At 3 o’clock, on the morning of the 20th, our troops commenced their movement towards the front of attack—the night was so dark that the men could not go out of reach of one another for fear of losing their way. This caused the movement to be slow that day-break approached before the head of Gen. Cadwallader’s brigade commenced descending into the ravine at the village. As soon as Col. Riley got out of the deep ravine, and at a point where it was the head of the column halted and closed—at the same time drawing the loads out of the guns supposed to be wet. Col. Riley then formed his brigades, together with the sappers and miners, under the command of Major Dimick, closed up the rear—leaving Gen. Shields at the village. Col. Riley continued up the ravine bearing a little to his left, and as he raised over the bank he stood facing the rear of the enemy’s work, but he was protected from the severity of its fire by the favorable position of the ground. As soon as Col. Riley ascended the hill and came in full view of the enemy, they immediately opened a warm fire upon him. Col. Riley threw out his two advanced divisions as skirmishers, and said forward: “Now, boys, give them hell close in with them, and let the bayouet do its work”—and his command rushed down the slope with a desperation and enthusiasm enough to strike terror to the heart of the boldest—while the rear of his command moved steadily forward in solid block with the most mechanical precision.

The sappers and miners, and the rifle regiment, which had been thrown across a ravine intervening between the one they had passed up and under the brow of the slope which Col. Riley came down from, that position poured in a fire which swept in front of Col. Riley’s column, then inclining towards their left, joined in the attack on the troops outside of the left flank of the fort. Gen. Cadwallader followed the route taken by Colonel Riley, and as soon as his troops were formed, moved on to his support. The first brigade, which was bringing up the rear, had been ordered to follow the same route, but while it was on its march by the right flank up the ravine and nearly opposite the fort, General Smith ordered the brigade to face to the left and advance in line to attack the enemy’s force in flank—this movement was executed in less time than it takes me to write it—they met the enemy outside of the fort, just as Col. Riley’s brigade rushed into it—they were completely routed and commenced a precipitate retreat—their cavalry and infantry and been formed to receive the charge, but both were compelled to give way to the bayonet—the rout was mostly complete, and the victory most decided—but while Riley’s brigade took possession of the works and plated their colors upon it, the other force continued the pursuit down the road. The retreating force had to pass near where Gen. Shields’s brigade was placed to intercept them. They however, were not aware of it until they received the well directed fire of S. Carolina regiment, which mowed them down like grass before the scythe.

The enemy had been completely deceived in the reference to the position of Gen. Shield’s brigade and the balance of the force, by the sagacity of the Generals. After General Smith moved off to attack the work, General Shields caused his men to build fires over the ground occupied by the troops during the night, as if the men were preparing their breakfast, which led the enemy to believe our troops still in force in the village. This led them to believe that we were going to carry into execution the attack we were meditating the night before—accordingly the night before he placed his batteries along his line, and in the morning moved detachments forward to take in flank of the attack he supposed we would make at daylight, and how great his surprise must have been when the first thing he saw in the morning was Col. Riley moving down the slope, having already turned his strong—hold—but all doubts were soon dispelled by the capture of his works and the dispersion of his army—they were met at every point by the skilful management and energy of General Shields, whose command compelled them to fly in every direction—some taking to the broken and craggy rocks—some to the ravine—while others depended upon their heels and made most excellent time in a race across the fields. One of the most sagacious movements made by a Mexican officer was made at this place. After a large portion of the Mexican army had passed through a very narrow pass and our troops after them, he formed a squadron of lancers in the pass, laid down their arms and surrendered, thus effecting the escape of those who had already passed through, those of our troops who were nearest having to take possession of the prisoners and guard them back, and before another force could go in pursuit they were out of reach.
In this fort there were captured 22 pieces of artillery, mostly large size, a great number of packmules, a large quantity of ammunition and munitions of war, and upwards of 1500 prisoners, among them were several officers of high rank. The enemy left dead upon the field, which we have buried, upwards of 700—but his loss was certainly much heavier—is the Mexicans were still burying their friends when I passed over the battleground two days ago; there were many more killed when the rifles engaged on the 19th than we had any idea of—their unerring aim told with powerful effect. The troops in the fort were commanded by Valencia, those outside by Santa Anna.

Among the highest achievements of the morning's engagement was the re-capture of the two Buena Vista six-pounders, belonging to the Captain Washington's battery, by one of the light companies of the same regiment. They now stand before the door of General Twiggs, and I hope when he shall meet his old friend General Taylor he will have present these beautiful trophies to claim the congratulations. —All the same arms taken were immediately destroyed.

The arms were secured, and a detachment left to protect the ordinance, ammunition and prisoners; the column formed for the purpose of pursuing the enemy, who had been met by a force from San Angel, when Gen. Twiggs arrived, and ordered a speedy and most vigorous pursuit of the enemy, which was immediately done, Gen. Shields's brigade to advance, next Gen. Twiggs's division, and the rear Gen. Pillow's division, the rifles and sappers and miners in advance as skirmishers. There are now ensued a sort of running flight all the way to San Angel, the enemy endeavoring to make a stand at every point on the road, the unerring fire of the rifle made every place too hot for them, and they were compelled to take refuge in Churubusco.

At San Angel General Pillow arrived and took the command, when the whole column moved down to Cluicon, when Gen. Scott came up, and immediately took the command of the whole.

THE BATTLE OF CHURUBUSCO

As soon as the enemy's forces perceived that Contreras carried, and that we should be able to turn his position and attack him in reverse, he evacuated the fortifications and fell back on Churubusco with his artillery and whole force. This was also reinforced by the troops from Contreras, and some from the city; they apparently determined to make their final stand at this point.

The work and position were exceedingly strong and completely masked by a high growth of corn and an orchard, which very much precluded our officers getting a proper view of the position of the strength of the work, which proved to be a regular fortification, and had been erected in the incredible short time of 38 hours. The church buildings formed a large square—the lower front, at the north end, was chiefly a wall, scaffolded for infantry; behind it was a higher building, also covered with infantry, and in the rear of this, the church itself was also covered with infantry, and a high steeple on its right flank was filled with infantry; in front of the first wall was a curtain connecting two salient angles, which flanked it, and were continued back to the side walls of the church, garrisoned heavily with infantry, and mounting seven pieces of artillery. This was the point at which General Smith's brigade opened the action, and soon followed, a little further to the left, by Col. Riley's brigade—these two composing the Cerro Gordo division, Gen. Twiggs. Captain Taylor's battery of light artillery also took position near this work, on the right of Gen. Smith's brigade; it drew up it a heavy fire from the fort, which he sustained for an hour and a half, losing 23 of his company, among who were Lieuts. Martin, Boynton and Sims, and 3 sergeants; he also lost during this time 15 horses. The conduct of Captain Taylor and his company throughout, was such as to excite the admiration of all who witness it, as well as his superior officers.

At the opposite side the work, the breastwork extended across the road from the church, presenting a similar front, excepting the buildings of the church, —the work on the road was also strengthened by a bridge over a creed, behind which was a body of infantry, and the work itself mounting 3 or 4 guns. —General Pillow, with part of his division, was sent round by General Scott to assault this part of the work, but as he, with his command emerged from the mud and mire of the corn fields (having waded, some of them, waist deep) into the road, he met Gen. Worth coming up from San Antonio, with his division; they had a hearty welcome, and one of them proposed that their commands should go hand in hand in carrying the work, which was readily agreed to.

At the same time that the other commands were despatched, General Scott ordered General Shields to attack the enemy’s extreme left, where he was heavily entrenched; at the same time reinforcing his command with the 9th part of the 12th and 15th infantry, under General Pierce. This movement was executed as soon as the nature of the ground would admit—the whole command having to pass through corn fields of high growth, intercepted by ditches running through them in every direction.

The action now became general, and the severity of the conflict never equalled within the recollection of our oldest soldiers—the enemy was more than three times our number, besides his advantage of artillery and position—added to this, he was stimulated by the fact that it was the last effort of resistance he could make before we could enter the capital—his troops knew that they were fighting for the last remnant of the Republic, and they stood their ground with as much firmness and resolution as any troops could stand, before the army we at present have here. The roar of musketry was so great, that it was almost impossible for the soldiers to hear the orders of their officers. There was no point at which the action did not rage with severity for more than two hours, which is proved by the fact that our loss at this point was nearly 1000 men.

After the contest had lasted about two hours, our troops had got into such a position as to be able to close with them at the point of the bayonet, which decided the affair in our favor—General Pillow and Gen. Worth carrying the work on the road, by an officer of Gen. Pillow’s division taking down on flag, and one of Gen. Worth’s taking down the other, and the 8th infantry planting their colors, Gen. Rineon, together with 104 officers and upwards of 1100 noncommissioned officers and privates, surrendered as prisoners of war. Gen. Shields had his work more to himself, and he fully sustained that high reputation hitherto acquired on the field of battle. When the contest raged highest, and his men falling around him in every direction, he preserved that even temperament of mind for which he is so characteristic—his countenance wearing his bland and affable appearance throughout the whole engagement. His volunteers stood and moved under the fire with the regularity of veteran troops. South Carolina has sustained a heavy loss. Col. Butler was wounded twice before he received the fatal shot. Two color bearers were successively shot down, when Lieut. Colonel Dickinson took the colors, and he was beating the Palmetto proudly amidst the storm, when he also received a severe wound. About the same time that the three division at the fort were enabled to close, General Shields succeeded in driving from their position the large force with which he was contending.

The dragoons were now brought forward, and drove the enemy to the gates of the capital, thus closing, for the present, the most brilliant victory achieved by our arms during the war, and one which will vie with any achievement of our arms in times past.

Louisiana had two brilliant representatives, who participated largely throughout the whole affair, viz: Gen. P.F. Smith, of the first brigade, second division, and Lieutenant Beauuregard, of the engineers; both of which gentlemen signally distinguished themselves, both by their superior military knowledge and their personal courage. The engineer corps throughout has borne a large share of the labors and exposure of the battle.

From intercepted letters which we have in our possession, written on the evening of the battle, we learn the Mexican loss to be five thousand killed and wounded, and by them we also learn, that out of thirty thousand men, they had but between six thousand or eight thousand men left, and they in confusion, without leaders—the balance killed, wounded, prisoners, or totally dispersed.

After the troops had arrived at this place, all the former Texan prisoners who were present assembled just below the National palace, on a fine paved road, made by the labor of their hands, while they remained in this country. On the side of the road stood a beautiful monument, with the following inscriptions—"Erected to the memory of General Santa Anna in consideration of his having constructed this road by the labor of he prisoners of Texas." It was not long after the assemblage of the crowd, until down came the monument, and not satisfied with tearing it down, they broke the stone into small pieces, and scattered them to the four winds.

On the evening of the 20th, a white flag came out from the city, and on the morning of the 21st, we learned that propositions for an armistice had been made, which were agreed to, and commissioners appointed, who arranged and agreed on the terms.
The attack on the mule train near Papagallas, no the 31st of July, of which mention was made in the Flag of the 11th instant, was incorrectly reported to us, as we are informed by one of the party present at the time; and we make the following correction from his statement:

The train consisted of thirty-eight mules, and one wagon loaded with merchandise belonging to individuals, two of them proceeding with the train. The escort consisted of only four persons - C.R. Bartlett, the last named later members of Captain Gray's disbanded company. In company, at the time of the attack, were Br. Dickenson and two French gentlemen, sent out by the authorities of New Orleans to take the bust of General Taylor the Frenchmen traveling in an ambulance. About 1 o'clock on the 31st ult., the day being excessively hot, and the escort wearied, a halt was called at a shady spot near the road, and the party dismounted to refresh themselves. They had remained in this situation a half hour or more, when they were alarmed by the Mexican Bugle Charge sounding from different directions. As soon as the charge was sounded, Mr. Gleason ordered all to mount, and they did so with the exception of Mr. Dickenson, whose horse took fright and ran off. Mr. Gleason, who is an old Texan and one of the Mier Prisoners, immediately ascertained that the attacking party numbered several hundred, and remarking that the only hope was in flight, dashed off into the chaparral, followed by the remainder of the escort. The Frenchman sprang into the ambulance, and the driver put his horses to their speed on the Monterey road. Mr. Dickenson was unable to follow, and before he could secrete himself in the chaparral, the Mexicans were in sight. As soon as he was discovered, they commenced firing and advancing upon him. Having a six shooter, the doctor determined to sell his life as dearly as possible. Allowing four of them to come close up, he was able to kill two, mortally wound a third, and after a hand-to-hand engagement with the fourth, finally effected his escape.

A few pursued the ambulance, but the main force was drawn towards the train; and as soon as possession of it was obtained, the bugle sounded a recall and the pursuers all returned without having overtaken the ambulance, which had not proceeded far before a train was met coming down from Monterey escorted by a detachment of dragoons.

The two teamsters were killed, one receiving six balls in his body, and the other had his skull smashed with the butt of a musket, and a sabre cut across the abdomen nearly severing him in two. All the mules and packs were captured, also the baggage wagon containing much valuable clothing, and about $1,500 in money.

Ex-President and Gen. M. B. Lamar (now Capt. Lamar, commanding a company of Texan rangers) was in Mier a few days ago, with a detachment of his command, on his way from Laredo to General Taylor's camp. Captain Lamar, we understand, is anxious to be relieved from his post at Laredo, and will apply to General Taylor for this purpose. We are happy to hear that he is in excellent health.

Captain Fairfax, of the Virginia regiment, died at Saltillo on the 14th ult. of fever. The steamer Ogden arrived at N. Orleans on the 11th with Brazos dates to the 7th, Gen. Lane's brigade was there, and expected to embark for Vera Cruz on the 8th, to which place Gen. Marshall had also been ordered.

General Cushing and Lieut. Col. Abbot reached Matamoros from Monterey on the 3d, en route for Vera Cruz. Gen. C. is concentrating his brigade as the reverie detachments come down at El Sabinito, near Palo Alto. Deas' battery, which was to have accompanied General Cushing, has been ordered to remain with General Wool at the Express request of the latter. Captain shover passed down the river with Gen.
Cushing on his way to Washington.

Captain Clark, of the 2d Mississippi rifles was at Matamoros on the 3d instant, with a detachment of recruits on his way to his regiment at Buena Vista.

Captain Clinch was at the mouth of the river on the 16th instant, with a detachment of recruits for the 13th infantry, and would leave the next day for Gen Cushing’s camp at Sabinito.

Col. R. E. Temple arrived at Matamoros on the 1st instant, with four companies of his regiment, the 10th infantry. [DCK]

NRR 73.058, Col. 2 Sept. 25, 1847  Attack on A Train From Mier to Monterey.

The 'Flag' says that Col. Tibbatts, Who was proceeding from Mier to Monterey with six companies of the 16th infantry, escorting a train, was attacked by a large party of Mexicans near Ramos, and succeeded in driving them off, with a loss of two wounded. Col. Tibbatts and his men were under fire for some time, and conducted themselves with great intrepidity. Intelligence was received at Buena Vista on the 20th of August, in a letter from San Luis Potosi, by the way of Parras, that Gen.
Scott's column had marched from puebla, and tow days afterwards a rumor reached there of the capitulation of the city of Mexico. This Illustrates the rapidity with which intelligence travels in Mexico by verbal report. [DCK]

NRR 73.058, Col. 58 Sept. 25, 1847 Released American Prisoners Arrive at Matamoros

The same paper says that Mr. E. B. Lundy and Moris. Montilly, who were taken prisoners some 4 weeks since by Carvaja, have been set at liberty, and arrived at Matamoros on the 3d instant. They state that they were liberated by representing that they were not Americans. They were taken as far as Tula. Mr. L. says that General Urrea left that place a few days since, with 1,200 men, for the purpose of taking trains or goods between Camargo and Monterey. [DCK]

NRR 73.058, Col. 2 Sept. 25, 1847 Troops leaving Gen. Zachary Taylor for Vera Cruz, his intention to visit the United States.

The Union says that letters have been received from the camp of General Taylor, who was then near Monterey. The general had made the necessary arrangements for carrying out his late general order for sending the troops he could spare to Vera Cruz, to join the column of General Scott. In addition to the troops which he kept upon his line of defence, he had detained the light battery of Capt. Deas, to strengthen his line. A mixed force of dragoons and Texans was employed in cleaning the country between Camargo and Monterey of the roving guerrillas.

Reports are renewed of the general’s intention to visit the United States; but he does not yet mention such an intention in his recent despatches. [DCK]

NRR 73.058, Col. 2 Sept. 25, 1847 Account of the Mutiny Among The North Carolina Troops.

North Carolina Regiment.-A letter from Buena Vista, dated Aug. 19, to the Picayunesays: "The mutiny in the North Carolina regiment has been effectually quelled. On the morning after it broke out a number of the officers of the regiment signed a petition to the colonel to resign, which he very properly refused to, but laid it before Generals and Wool. It was considered by the commanding general that there was a participation in the mutiny and two of the signers were dishonorably discharged from the service. As soon as this was known seventeen officers, I think, tendered their resignation, but after twenty four hours had elapsed they thought better of it and begged leave to withdraw, expressing all due contrition, and leave was granted. Thus quiet subordination has been restored. The three regiments have all been separated—the North Carolina ordered to the rear, and the Virginians to the front. The soldier who was wounded by Colonel Paine at the time he shot at the mutineers, was a Virginian and has been dishonorably discharged from the service.

A letter of the 21st says: "Since my last, two companies of the North Caroline regiment have been ordered to the support of Captain Prentiss' battery on the hill above Saltillo. One of these companies, commanded by Capt Henry, is the crack corps of the regiment and has been stationed in town ever since their arrival. It had no participation whatever in the late mutinous outbreak. Mr. Buck, formerly adjutant to the regiment, but recently appointed aid decamp to Gen. Cuching, has been elected captain in the regiment to fill a vacancy, and will not go to Vera Cruz. The express sent to General Taylor on the morning of the 19th, relative to the reported advances upon his quarter, has not yet returned." [DCK]

NRR 73.058 Sept. 25, 1847 Yellow fever at New Orleans

The Yellow Fever—At New Orleans, the number of deaths, daily have diminished, owing not to any diminution of virulence in the disease, but to a diminution of subjects in which to act, the city being so nearly deserted. A gentleman writes from thence, that he sat down to dinner at the St. Charles hotel, with but one other person at the table.

During the week ending the 11th September, 402 victims by fever in the city, and 115 in Lafayette.—The previous week 427 in New Orleans and 111 at Lafayette. At the Charity hospital during the week 350 admissions and 100 deaths by fever. During the twenty-four hours ending the 13th, 51 deaths, 21 of them by fever; 15th, 43 deaths, 31 by fever. [KAS]

NRR 73.064 September 25, 1847, arrangements for letters to and from the Army

LETTERS FROM THE ARMY. -A private letter from the seat of war says: - "The only way of sending letters is to hire a Mexican express and pay him one hundred dollars. Fifty officers club together, and each only are allowed to write half a sheet of thin letter paper, so that the express rider can secrete them, to avoid detection, which would be certain death in case he should fall into the hands of the guerrillas."

The last letter of the army correspondent of the N.O. Delta: - "For the purpose of being always ready with me four horses for my own use and eight extras, and four Mexicans, faithful and good riders, who accompany me and are always on hand to ride expresses.” [JCS]

NRR 73.064 Sept. 25, 1847 letter from Colonel Butler to General Worth

Letter from Colonel Butler to General Worth.

San Augustin, August 19, 1847

Dear general: We are here in tribulation. I can but hope, however, it is but temporary. It is ordered that this division remain as protection to the train. There is gloom on us all: while I am one who believes there will be fighting enough for all. The moral effect is withering. The regiment, though weak in numbers, is up to the full point, and I trust S. Carolina may have a place in the picture. We have been watching you and your division for the last two days with fraternal affection; but the entire voice of the army, where I have been, or heard, is unbounded confidence in "Worth." "So not it be." But I have strayed from the principal point of purpose of my note, which is to say, our friend, Col. Dickinson, more impatient, and not so long a soldier as myself, desires a place nearer the flashing of the guns; and with good taste, wishes to get nearer you. If you can make him useful, he will feel much gratified. I am aware you are surrounded with a talented staff, but a little more of a good thing will render it not the less complete or effectual. I am, my dear General, yours sincerely. P.M. BUTLER, S.C.V. General W.J. Worth, comad’g &c. [KAS] NRR 73.065 October 2, 1847, failure of negotiations for peace, Gen. Winfield Scott accused Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, and he accuses Scott, of violating the armistice, hostilities recommended, a battle ensues, contradictory accounts of its result.

TERMINATION OF THE ARMISTICE—WAR RENEWED. The Vera Cruz Sun of Anahuac, of the 16th, contains the following letter from their correspondent, which says it "is so interesting to the public that we hasten to give it to our subscribers. It contains all the news that we received yesterday from Mexico."

As we had already announced, hostilities recommenced on the 8th, in the evening, and Gen. Scott's troops on that very evening had a brush to the best of the Mexican troops.

This letter came by the way of Orizaba, and was sent there by our "wide awake" correspondent, -through a private friend, who himself addressed us a few lines to tell us that an express had arrived at Mexico, on his way to Oajaca—that the express had been sent by General Leon, of the Mexican army, who commanded the Mexican forces in the action spoken of in the letter which follows:

Puebla, September 11, 1847

My dear San--I did not think that you ever arrived among us, but to my great astonishment I saw you in the hands of your mutual friend W*

I promised you before I left Vera Cruz, two months ago, that I would, from time to time, if I was fortunate enough to get news, to drop you a few words on a sheet of bad paper, and the occasion has never offered itself with more encouragement than at present, and I hope these few lines will be victoriously passed through the chaparral, mosquitoes, &c, and what is worse (through not so bold) the guerrillas of Cerro Gordo, Paente National, and all the Montes and hiding places of these desperate men.*

Letters arrived here from Atlixio, stating that an express arrived there on his way to Oajaca, sent by Gen. Leon, and that the said express had brought letters from Mexico dated the 9th inst.

These letters state that the propositions made by Mr. Trist were rejected, or, at least, one portion of them, and that hostilities had recommenced in the afternoon, and that a battle had been fought on that evening by a few hundred men of Scott's army against four of the picked out regiments of the Mexican army- (the 11th regiment of the

Mr. Trist then asked 45 days, as he said he was not authorised to accept such a proposition, but the Mexicans replied they would give but five days, and no more.

On the fifth day (the 7th) a letter was written by Santa Anna to Gen. Scott accusing him of breaking the armistice, on some trifling pretext.

Gen. Scott answered making similar charges.

On the 8th, in the afternoon, a body of few hundred men of General Scott's were sent to attack Chapultepec.

They encountered a large force of the enemy's best troops there, and a terrible fight ensued, in which the Mexicans got, as usual, a sound thrashing.

Gen. Leon, who commanded the Mexicans, was wounded, and Gen. Balderas, of the National guards, was killed.

The small number of the Americans, who, the Mexican letter say, (to use their own expressions,) "have fought like devils," retired to Tacubaya, leaving five wagons behind them. Some of these had no wheels, while others no horses.

The loss on the part of the Americans is said to be very small comparatively.
A proclamation (or manifesto, as they call it,) was issued by Gen. Gerrera, governor of the city of Mexico, recommending to the citizens, men, women and children, to collect stones and carry them to the roofs of houses, and from there throw them at the Americans if they entered the city.

Since placing the above in type the southern mail has arrived with N. Orleans papers to the 24th, and Mobile to the 25th. At New Orleans they had no late intelligence from the army, - and the above contains all that the Mobile papers afford, except a verbal report, that there had been a revolt at Puebla, and that Gen. Scott's loss since leaving Puebla was about three thousand men.

It is difficult to comprehend or reconcile the above account of the victory obtained over Gen. Leon, in the attack on Chapultepec, with the statement that the little detachment of Americans that achieved it, instead of occupying Chapultepec, had retired, with the loss of their wagons, to Tacubaya.

The Pensacola correspondent of the Mobile Herald says:

It seems that hostilities were renewed on the 8th inst., Santa Anna and Gen. Scott mutuality charging each other with a violation of the armistice, and by the last accounts our troops had possession of two streets, and had driven the principal part of the Mexican force in or towards the plaza.

Our troops had suffered greatly from the fire of the enemy placed in windows and on the roofs of the houses, and Gen. Worth was badly but not mortally wounded. Our loss since leaving Puebla was three thousand men. Mr. Trist's proposition for a cession of a portion of California, for a consideration of 20,000,000 had been agreed to by the Mexican commissioners-but another proposition, fixing the Rio Grande the boundary on this side, was peremptorily refused. Paredes was said to be on the road between Vera Cruz and Mexico, with a large force of guerrillas.

These accounts are derived from the Sun of Anahuac of the 16th instant, and brought by the Osceola, and verbal communication from Mr. Diamond to the captain, at the moment of leaving. I have no doubt they may be relied upon essentially.

The sun of Anahuac of the 16th says, “Troops have been arriving in great numbers from the Brazos for the last five or six days, and we do not doubt that within five or six days more, there will be from two to three thousand men ready to march to the interior.”

The battle of Churubusco was fought on the 20th of August, and up to the 16th of September no despatches from Gen. Scott had been received at Vera Cruz, nor by the government, up to the 21 of October, since the period of his leaving Puebla for the capital.

Some journals express surprise at the reception of official reports of the battles from Gen. Shields and Maj. Dickinson (inserted in this No) when no reports have been received from the commanding General. This is easily accounted for. The Commander in chief would not be disposed to entrust his official despatches to such hands and chance as it is well known these came through, nor would he be justifiable in so doing, even if they had been prepared, which it is certain they could not have been. The reports received of Gen. S. and Maj. D. are no doubt copies of their reports, he must receive, and carefully examine and collect the whole of the reports from his several officers. This requires time and caution.

An announcement of the general events, and of the state of affairs, generally and properly precedes a detailed report in such cases. It is not at all impossible that such an announcement was forwarded by Gen. Scott, and has been intercepted by the Mexican guerrillas.

Anxiety, instead of being allayed by the intelligence given above, is yet more intensely awakened.

That Gen. Scott had sufficient reasons for proposing an armistice when he did, and for needing to acceding to the terms of that armistice we have no doubts. From all that is known here of the state of affairs at the moment, it would be rank injustice to our commander to judge otherwise. Gen. Taylor was loudly censured for agreeing to an armistice at Monterey, although, that was upon condition of a surrender and evacuation of the place. -Gen. Scott agreed to an armistice without such conditions and maintained the armistice from the 23d of August to the 8th of Sept, when a renewal of the conflict instead of a treaty of peace was the unhappy result.

So far as we have seen accounts from Pensacola, the 9th is the latest date from the city of Mexico, but an editorial in this morning’s National Intelligencer states, that on the 9th hostilities recommenced and a portion of Gen. Worth’s division encountered and routed a large Mexican force near the city, our loss being comparatively trifling, while that of the Mexicans was very great. On the 10th there was other engagements in all of which our forces proved victories. On the 11th, which is the latest accounts we have, Gen. Scott had got into the city occupying only two streets, which commanded the Plaza, and the two armies were contending for victory."

Several letters from Vera Cruz, all dated at the moment the Oceola was leaving, (16th of Sept.,) are published, some of which contain brief accounts of affairs pending the negotiations. One of them mentions the loss of the Americans in the battle of the 9th, according to the Mexican account. [JCS]

NRR 73.067, Col. 1 Oct. 2, 1847 Assistant Surgeon Prevost: Tribute to Assistant Surgeon Prevost's Efforts During the Battle of Buena Vista

Camp Buena Vista. General:-In my report of the battle of Buena Vista, 4th March, I intended to report all the surgeons and assistant surgeons, who were on the field of battle during the two eventful days of the 22d and 23d February last. It appears, that I omitted the name of Assist. Surgeon Prevost. I was not personally acquainted with him at the time, and he was, and supposed during the battle, in Saltillo, as he was stationed there. From statements recently received, it appears that Dr. Prevost was not only on the field attending the wounded, but that he rendered me important and gallant services during the battle. Seeing me alone, my staff being absent in endeavoring to rally the flying troops from the field, he came to me, when I made use of him on several occasions to carry my orders to bring up the troops to attack a heavy column of Mexican lancers and infantry, who had succeeded in getting to our left and rear. He also carried my orders to the Mississippi and Indiana regiments to charge the enemy, under the most trying circumstances, a fire in front and a flank fire from the battery on the plain in front of the centre of our position. At this time I supposed he was an officer who had just arrived, and belonged to Gen. Taylor’s staff, and without knowing who he was, called him captain. It is, therefore, I would recommend him to the special notice of the secretary of war for his daring courage and gallant bearing at the battle of Buena Vista. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obed’t. serv’t.

NRR 73.067, Col. 2 Oct. 2, 1847 Georgia Mounted Battalion and a Battalion of Infantry Forming for Mexico

To Brig. General R. Jones, Adj’t General Washington, D.C.

General Mounted Battalion - Monday last the Georgia mounted battalion passed through our city on their way to the seat of war. The battalion consists of six companies, about 500 men in all, likely to prove rough customers in a campaign. They were under command of James S. Calhoun, who ranks as colonel. There is also a battalion of infantry now being completed at Columbus, four companies are already enrolled, and the fifth nearly filled up. The Georgia boys seem determined to have some share in the fighting. We have no doubt that they will not be found wanting when the hour of trial comes, and we hope they will come out of every fight with success, as we know they will with honor. NRR 73.067, Col. 2  Oct. 2, 1847  Movement of Troops: Movements of Troops for Mexico

Movement of Troops-The steamer Alabama left New Orleans for Brazos and Vera Cruz on the 9th instant, carrying $100,000 in specie, for the quarter-masters department at Brazos, and $100,000 for the same department at Vera Cruz. She had also a number of passengers, including several officers of the army, 141 teamsters for the quartermasters department at Vera Cruz. Captain Stapp's company of Illinois mounted volunteers of 95 officers and men, and some recruits for the 1st regiment Louisiana volunteers.

The U.S. steamer Fashion, Capt. Thomas I. Ivy, and the U.S. steam propeller Major Tompkins, left New Orleans on the 9th, for Baton Rouge, there to receive on board Capt. Lawler's company of mounted Illinois volunteers, 115 men and horses to proceed to Vera Cruz. Capt. Leslie Chase, assistant quartermaster U.S.A, went up to Baton Rouge on the Fashion. [DCK]

NRR 73.067, Col. 2  Oct. 2, 1847  Organization of Two New Kentucky Regiments

The two new Kentucky regiments, recently called out by the war department, have been fully organized, and are to rendezvous at Louisville by the 4th of October next. The field officers of one of these regiments, the third, were appointed some weeks since. The officers of the fourth are:-John S. Williams, colonel; William C. Preston, of Louisville, lieutenant colonel, and William T. Ward, major.

Lieut. Irons, aid de-camp of General Cadwallader, and who was wounded in the battles before Mexico, is dead. [DCK]

Midshipman Rogers respecting whose fate so much anxiety has been experienced, made his escape from the Mexicans and reached Gen. Scott's headquarters at Puebla on the 2d of Aug. and accompanied the army in their march upon the capital. [DCK]

NRR 73.067 Oct. 2, 1847 Naval Journal, yellow fever

Yellow fever-An officer of the U.S. ship Germantown writes to purser W. H. Kennon, of the Mississippi, at Pensacola, dated Anton Lizardo, Aug. 27. "Dr. John A. Kearney, fleet surgeon, died this morning. Dr. Clenahan is sick on the island. You have not the slightest idea of the extension of fever since you left. A sloop has just arrived from Tuspan with the intelligence that every officer on board the Decatur is sick. Several men have died. The Stromboli arrived last night from Huascualco with only six well men; is that not horrid?

The correspondence has just arrived: no news from Alvarado."

Dr. P.B. Delany of the U.S. navy, died at Laguna Yucatan, on the 10th of August of yellow fever. The deceased had recently entered the navy as an assistant surgeon, and died on his first cruise.
The new U.S. steamship Alleghany, has left N. Orleans and anchored off Ship Island. Five cases of yellow fever had occurred on board. [KAS]

NRR 73.071 October 2, 1847, resolutions of the New Jersey Whig convention on annexation of new territory

NEW JERSEY- The "democratic" state convention, assembled at Trenton on the 22d Sept., Gen. Garret Wall, presided.

The first ballot for a candidate for governor stood, for D. HAINES, of Essex, 252; G. Sykes, of Burlington, 73; J. Cassady, of Bergen, 50; scattering 15. -Mr. Haines is therefore the candidate.

The whig state convention, assembled on the 22d and on the first ballot for a candidate for governor P. Robinson, of Warren, 114; J. Rank, of Huntington 37. Mr. Wright is of course the candidate.

The first resolution adopted by the convention, strongly denounced the present national administration for violations of the liberties of the people and interests of the Union, especially in having made war without consulting the people or their representatives, and that too, for party purposes. The second resolution applauded the senate and house of representatives for interposing to prevent the administration from sending Col. Benton "a man who has spent all his life in politics" to supercede the veterans of the army, Scott, Taylor, &c. The third returns thanks to General Taylor for having faithfully and bravely performed, in spite of difficulties, what he has. The following are three last resolutions-

-As to additional territory-"That the people of the state of New Jersey, are opposed to the annexation of more territory to for the purpose of giving undue preponderance to the south; that we will abide faithfully by the Union cur fathers made-but that the addition of new southern partners to the firm without our consent, and for the purpose of destroying our weight in it, the calling in of "the unknown and half civilized states of Mexico and the investing them with privileges equal to or superior to our own is an infamous and almost intolerable insult and outrage.

-Tariff- "That the people of New Jersey are as much in favor of the whig tariff of 1842 as ever; that the temporary foreign demand for our breadstuffs caused by the European famine has never deceived us; that there is no permanent market for the produce of our farmers but the home market; and that time will soon demonstrate again, as it has often done before, the necessity of the wig tariff policy.

-"That all we ask of the opposite party in respect to the tariff is that, that they will always honestly confess their opposition to it, and never here-after assert, as they did falsely in 1844, that they ware the tariff party and the whigs are not." [JCS]

NRR 73.073 October 2, 1847, officers noted

GEN. PERSIFER F. SMITH - The heart of every Louisianian will throb with emotions of pride and joy as he reads of the brilliant and conspicuous part which our gallant fellow citizen, Gen. Persifor F. Smith, took in the late severe and bloody battles before the city of Mexico. His cool and masterly maneuvers and intrepid demeanor in action are the them of universal praise.

CAPTAIN SETH B. THRONTON- This intrepid dragoon officer, who was the first to begin this war, was alas! the first to sacrifice his life in the late march of our army from Puebla. The circumstances of his death will be found fully detailed in the letters of our correspondents. Like Col. Butler, he left a bed of sickness to meet the foe, upon who he warmly desired to avenge the treachery by which he had been betrayed in the commencement of this war. He was killed by a cannon ball, in a reconnaissance, several days before the battle.

We knew Seth Thornton well. He was a companion and schoolmate of our early days, and a braver and more warm hearted soul never animated a human frame. He was born in Caroline county, Virginia. Young as he was, his life had been a checkered and eventful one. We doubt whether there is any man now living who has passed safely through so many and such imminent perils and trials as have marked the life of Capt. Thornton.

Some years ago he was a passenger, when quite a youth, on the ill-fated Pulaski; and when that steamer took fire, he was nearly the last to leave her.--When others thought only of saving their own lives, he thought only of saving the lives of the fair women and children on board. When all the passengers had been sent off in boats and on spars, Capt. Thornton, having first securely tied his body to a hen-coop, threw himself into the sea. Whilst in the water, he picked up several men, whom he also succeeded in fastening to the coop, and thus they floated for many a long and weary hour, exposed to a burning sun, and without a particle of food. One by one his companions’ dropped off, and perished in the sea.--with his face to the foe.
Peace to his manes—immortality to his memory.

COL. PIERCE M. BUTLER. -The death of this gallant South Carolinian—the representative on the bloody field of Churubusco of as noble a race of heroes as any country has produced—will create a profound and extended sorrow in this country.
He has been for a long time a conspicuous and prominent citizen of South Carolina, and was noted for his great resolution and indomitable courage. He possessed military qualities of the highest order, and gave promise of great success and distinction in a career which, alas! terminated at its very commencement. Col.
Butler had been very ill for several days previous to the battle; but when we heard that the Palmetto flag was going into the fight, unaccompanied by him to whose special charge is had been committed, he broke loose from his physicians, abandoned his sick couch, and, weak, ghastly, and almost fainting, mounted his charger, and placed himself at the head of his regiment. With such an example, men far less ardent and gallant than the South Carolinians would have been prompted to deeds of superhuman daring. But there was no such incitement necessary to impel the sons of the “Hardy Hotspur of the Union,” as Prentiss once styled the gallant Palmetto state, to the most brilliant and conspicuous display of military qualities. Their services are fully noted in another part of our paper.
Colonel Butler, though twice badly wounded, and weighed down by faintness and loss of blood, maintained his position until a third wound caused his death.

Lieutenant Colonel Dickinson, who was the first officer wounded at Vera Cruz, also signalized his valor on this occasion, and was again badly wounded.

COL. MORGAN.—We notice with much pain that this gallant officer, who lately commanded with so much distinction the 2d regiment of Ohio volunteers, was badly wounded in the late battle. Col. Morgan is quite a young man, but is one of the most fearless and daring men in our army. He was the officer who, in command of a small body of volunteers, last winter, defeated Urra at the head of a large force of Mexican horse. He had great military talents. -He was lately appointed by the president to the command of one of the new ten regiments; and it was at the head of his regiment that he was severely wounded in the last battle.

LIEUT. JONES—This gallant officer, who acted as aid-de-camp of General Cadwallader, died of the wounds received in the engagements of the 19th and 20th of August.

THE CERRO GORDO DIVISION—The heroes of Cerro Gordo, led by their noble old genewal, the white-haired veteran Twiggs, won fresh laurels in both the battles of Contreros and Churubusco. The never-failing judgement of this experienced and tried officer continued largely to our success on these occasions. The division when he commanded is one of the bravest which ever went into battle, and victory has never failed to perch on it.

CAPT. CHARLES HANSON—Among the gallant officers who fell in the late battles we observe, with deep regret, the name of Captain CHARLES HANSON, of the 7th infantry. At the beginning of the Mexican contest we were favored with several interest ing and well written sketches from his hand, but discovering the existence of the army order prohibiting correspondence by officers of the army before it was announced by the secretary, he apprized us of the fact, and with the nice sense of honor and a soldier’s duty, which ever marked the man, laid aside his pen. At the bombardment of Fort Brown his coolness and intrepidity were conspicuous. His gallantry in the storming-division of Worth at Monterey won for him a captaincy.
At Vera Cruz, he fully shared the glories and dangers of his brethren in arms; and at Cerro Gordo his daring valor won the highest encomiums from his commanding officers—the colonel stating in his report that he was one of the first who placed his feet within the frowning Gibraltar which rested on the summit of that almost inaccessible mountain. A braver, a truer, and more generous spirit never breathed.
In one of his last letters to his relatives, instead of dwelling upon his own participation in the recent battle of Cerro Gordo, his mind seem4ed occupied with the sufferings of his wounded men, and the pleasure which he derived from seeing their happiness at some extra comforts which he had been enabled to provide for them.

Capt. Hanson was one of the most accomplished gentlemen as well as one of the most chivalrous officers in the service; and, better than this, amid the temptations of the camp and the excitement of the field, maintained to the last an exalted Christian character, which commanded the love and respect even of those who usually regard religion with aversion and ridicule. Most sincerely do we sympathize with his afflicted father, Mr. I. K. Hanson, of Washington, who has lost in him one of the remaining props of his old age—having already given another gallant son to his country, (Capt. W. K. Hanson,) who died from disease contracted in the glorious career in the Florida war.

Thus pass away, in the morning of their youth, the good, the generous, and the brave. These are the victims of war; these, and broken hearts, and desolated homes, its wretched trophies. [JCS]

NRR 73.073 October 2, 1847, further particulars of the mutiny among the North Carolina troops

THE MUTINY IN THE N.C. REGIMENT. - The Picayune furnishes some particulars of the affair, furnished win a letter from Buena Vista, dated August 16, which says-

Col. Paine, of the N.C. regiment, from the rigid system of discipline which he has pursued, became very unpopular in his own regiment and the Mississippi and Virginia regiments, with which he has been thrown in connexion as officer of the day. Many insults have been offered him by members of the two latter; and this feeling has gradually been ripening, till it came to a head last night. A crowd assembled about different tents of about thirty men—some his own, and some privates of the Virginia regiment—and subsequently stones were thrown at his tent.
A number of men also assembled in front of his Lieut. Colonel’s tent, who was sick and vomiting, and indulged in brutal laughter at his illness. These crowds were dispersed, and two men ordered to be taken to the provost guard. The men of one company ordered to perform the duty refused, but were compelled to obedience by the Colonel. One of them, however, refused to take his arms until the Colonel held his sword over him and threatened to cut him down if he refused. That company having evinced a determination not to obey, were ordered to the rear of the Colonel’s tent, and obeyed, contrary to his expectations, and were dismissed after answering to their names. Subsequently, quite late in the evening, another posse assembled in front of the Colonel’s tent; but as he came in sight, they began to disperse in different directions. He ordered them to halt, out they refused. The Colonel then cried that he would fire if they did not halt, and ordered them into the crowd, bringing down two men, wounding one of them mortally. This prompt and decisive step quelled the mutiny, and the Colonel reported to Gen. Cushing and Gen.
Wool, who approved of his conduct. They both repaired to the camp, but everything was quiet. I regret to say that the Colonel did not receive any very unanimous support from his officers on the occasion. The man who was so badly shot died last night. [JCS]

NRR 73.073-73.074 October 2, 1847, letter from the Massachusetts regiment in Mexico

THE MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT.--The Boston Bee, publishes a letter dated “Camp Cerralvo, Mexico, Aug. 8th, 1847,” which says the Mexicans are in great numbers near the roads, are attacking every small party they meet with. The largest portion of company “were under the arrest, the cause of which is said to be the refusal of the men to wear “regular caps and boots.” The company had bought some palm leaf hats at Matamoros, with Col. Abbott’s consent, and as they are good and comfortable, the men refused the others. Col. Abbott said they had been bought for them, and they should wear them. They still persisted in their refusal. The men were ordered to get their blankets and three and a half days provision ready, and prepare to start for Monterey. The order was obeyed. They were ordered to march without their arms. Col. Abbott is much blamed by the writer. Private Blake, of Company “D” was buried on the 29th of July. [JCS]
LETTER FROM GEN. PIERCE, to a friend published in the Boston Post.

Headquarters 1st Brigade, 3d div. U.S.A.
Mexsoque, Mexico, Aug. 27, 1847.

Since I left Vera Cruz to this hour I have had no means of communicated with the states. Although but a few months in the service, I know what are fatigue, anxiety, and exposure. Contrary to my expectations, and contrary to my orders from the department at Washington, I was compelled, for the want to the requisite provisions for transportation, to remain for more than three weeks at Vera Cruz, and for more than four in Terra Caliente, (the vomito region, as it is called.) I left the dreaded city on the 10th of July with 2,500 men of all arms, and a train of wagons, which, when closed up, extended more than two miles.

On the 6th of August I reached Puebla, without the loss of a single wagon, with my command in fine condition. My command was attacked six time of the march, but the enemy's force in each instance was easily dispersed, with trifling loss on our side. The National Bridge afforded the enemy great natural advantages, to which they had added breastworks on a high bluff which commanded the bridge perfectly; across the main bridge they had also thrown a barricade. I soon discovered that there was no way in which his position could be turned, and that my artillery was ineffective from the most commanding point where it could be placed. I determined, of course, to cross under the plunging fire of the enemy's escopetas. My order to advance was admirably executed. At the moment Lt. Col. Bonham's battalion rushed forward with a shout the enemy poured down a heavy fire, by which several of my men were severely wounded. Col. Bonham's horse was shot near me, and a ball passed through the run of my hat in very disagreeable proximity to my face. Our men leaped the barricade, followed by Capt. Dueru's company of cavalry, and in less than ten minutes the enemy were in flight in every direction, and the American flag waved upon the high bluff which they had occupied.

The Mexican force, as they said afterward, consisted of 500 men. Had they possessed courage and skill in the use of arms our loss much have been very great. You can hardly conceive the strength of the natural defences of the road over which we passed. Rumors came to me almost every night that we would be attacked by large forces the next day, but they made no where anything like a brave and stern resistance. The official reports of the great battle of Mexico will probably reach you as soon as this letter, and I shall therefore not attempt to give the minute details. It was fierce and bloody beyond anything that has occurred in this war. The battle differed in many respects from that of Buena Vista. There Gen. Taylor received the enemy in a strong position selected by himself. Our force on the 20th consisted of less than 9,000 men; the Mexican force within supporting distance and engaged, undoubtedly exceeded 30,000. We attacked him in position upon ground of his own selection, admirably fortified. -You will distinguish, so far as numbers are concerned, between the battle of the morning and that of the afternoon, although spoken of in official reports as one engagement under the designation of "the battle of Mexico." We took, during the day, 35 pieces of artillery-an immense quantity of ammunition-800 mules and horses, and more than 2,000 prisoners-among them eight generals and any number of colonels.

The Mexican loss in killed and wounded must have been immense. Our troops buried 500 Mexicans upon the field of battle commenced in the morning at Contreras, and the loss in the afternoon was much greater. Our loss has been heavy. With this small army we could not afford to purchase many such victories at such a price; one of the regiments of my brigade (the 13th) lost in killed and wounded one third of its entire force. In killed and wounded we number not less than 1,000, and amongst them I lament to say an unusual proportion of valuable officers. My horse at full speed on the evening of the 19th, when leading my brigade through a perfect shower of round shot and shells, fell under me upon a ledge of rocks, by which I sustained a server injury by the shock and bruises, but especially by a sever sprain in my left knee, which came under him.

At first I was not conscious of any serious injury, but soon became exceedingly faint, when Dr. Ritchie, surgeon of the 12th, (a portion of my command,) who was following the advancing columns closely, administered to me as well as he could, under the circumstances. In a few moments I was able to walk with difficulty, and pressed forward to Capt. Magrudr's battery, where I found the horse of poor gallant Lt. Johnson, who had just received a mortal wound, of which he died that evening. I was permitted to take him (my own having been totally disabled,) and helped into the saddle, and continued in it until 11 o’clock that night.

It was exceedingly dark, the rain poured in torrents, and being separated from my servants and baggage, I was without tent or covering; add to this, that during the afternoon of the 19th we have gained no advantages over the enemy, who remained firmly entrenched with 7,000 men opposed to a bout 4,000 on our side, without the possibility of bringing our artillery to bear, and you will readily conceive that our situation was not the most agreeable. The morning of the 20th was, however, as brilliant as the night of the 19th was dark and gloomy. Soon after daylight the enemy’s works were carried with the bayonet, and of their 7,000 men, regular troops, under the command of Valencia, probably 5,000 cannot be found to-day. As we passed this field in pursuit of the fugitives, the scene was awful, the road and adjacent fields every where strewn with mangled bodies of the dead and dying. We continued the pursuit until 1 o’clock, when our front came up with the enemy’s strong works of Churubusco and San Antonio, where the great conflict of the afternoon commenced.

At San Angel, dispositions having been made to attack in reverse the enemy’s works on the San Augustine road, Gen. Scott ordered me to march my brigade in concert with that of the intrepid Gen. Shields, across the open country between Santa Catarina and the above named road, in order to cut off the enemy’s retreat. We gained the position sought, and although the enemy’s line was perfectly formed, and extended as far as the eye could reach in either direction, they were attacked vigorously and successfully. Arriving at a ditch which it was impossible for my horse to leap, I dismounted and hurried forward without thinking of my injury, at the head of my brigade, for 200 or 300 yards, when turning suddenly upon my knee; the cartilage of which had been seriously injured, I fainted and fell upon the bank in the direct rang and within perfect reach of the enemy’s fire. That I escaped seems to me now providential. The rout and overthrow of the whole Mexican force soon became complete, and we could easily have taken the city; but Gen. Scott was met with a proposition for an armistice, (after demanding the surrender of the city,) with a view to open negotiations for peace.

In my judgment the army, full of ardor and confidence, was humanely and wisely restrained. Major Gen. Quitman, Gen. Persifer F. Smith, and myself were appointed commissioners to meet the Mexican commissioners to settle the terms of the armistice. I had not taken off my spurs or slept an hour for two nights, in consequence of my engagements and the pain of my knee. I obeyed the summons, was helped into my saddle, and rode two and a half miles Tacubaya, where the commission assembled at the house of Mr. McIntosh, the British consult general.
Our conference commenced late in the afternoon, and at 4 o’clock the next morning, the articles were signed.

That I was thoroughly exhausted you will readily imagine. I slept an hour or two that morning at Gen. Worth’s quarters, and my sprained knee, which was by far my most serious injury, has been daily improving, and to-day I ride without much inconvenience. I have lost several dear friends, although our acquaintance had been of short duration. I visited the hospital yesterday, and saw officers and men with shots in all parts of their persons. Although all who were not really dying seemed cheerful, and many who had lost limbs in high spirits, still I sickened at the sight.

My general health has been good. I have been either in my saddle or on my feet every rod since I left Vera Cruz, which can be said by few officers in my command; for almost all were obliged at some point of the march, in consequence of the change of climate, water, exposure, &c., to avail themselves of corps, accompanied me, and has been uniformly well. He is an excellent, agreeable gentleman, and admirable officer, and I regret that, having been left with Gen. Quitman’s division of San. Augustine, he had no opportunity to participate in the battles of the 19th and 20th.

Now a word with regard to the great object of this war-peace. There is no doubt that Santa Anna is sincerely desirous of peace. Commissioners to treat have been appointed, and met Mr. Trist this afternoon at 4. My belief is that piece will be the result, although no man can speak with confidence. [JCS]
First regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. Our readers will recollect that in the publications and letter writing that grew out of the difficulty between Gen. Pillow and the officers of the Tennessee regiment under Col. Haskell, that some severe reflections were made on the conduct of the Pennsylvania regiment under Col. Wynkoop, at the battle of Cerro Gordo.

Duly sensible of the honor of our native state, we wrote Col. W. on the subject, and forwarded him some of the publications alluded to, and now give his reply below.

This letter was left a few days since at our office, during our absence, with the seal violated, the letter foiled, and the contends partially mutilated, and in consequence it have given us some difficulty to decipher it. Some of the words are entirely gone, but these we have supplied to the best of our judgement, in order to complete the sense, and in each instance that we have done so, we have included those words in parentheses.

The letter, it will be perceived, is dated two months back, and ought to have been received some time since. We are unable to ascertain who was the careful, prompt, and trustworthy messenger to whom Col. Wynkoop intrusted it. We make no comments on the letter, as it speaks for itself in plain, unvarnished statement of facts, and is a full indication of the gallant men under the command of Col. W. The italics are underscored in the original.

Castle of Perote, Mexico, July 6

I perceive through the medium of the numerous papers which you had the kindness to send me, that an altercation has occurred between Gen. Pillow and his Tennessee volunteers. (2d regiment,) relative to the battle of Cerro Gordo, and I regret that the correspondence has made it necessary to explain my own position, action, and instructions, during that fight.

I have a rooted distaste for this kind of controversy, and am aware that the pen of a commander is not always the best evidence of the chivalry of his command. I commanded the 1st regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers—a body of men equal, I think, to any in the service, and which possesses at least, the admirable characteristic of always obeying orders.

Upon the field at Cerro Gordo, my men acted strict and steady obedience to every order given by me—consequently, if their conduct was improper, it was through my imbecility or cowardice, or the fault of the officers controlling me.

My orders were received directly from Gen. Pillow, and were given to me in presence of my lieut. Colonel and the general's personal staff. A strict obedience to these orders, brought me before the batteries left in front, and when I arrived in position, I was compelled to about face my party, and manoeuvre for the charge by the rear rank.

This, although an error, would not have been fatal to the result, because my men had been drilled to the movement, and did not find themselves embarrassed by it.

I was ordered by Gen. Pillow to take a position designated (to me by) his fingers, and was directed to reach that position by a countermarch from the right flank (which was an error, (as we) came on the ground left in front.*) Two hundred yards before (we reached) the position the fired opened, and we walked through it (and halted) where directed.—Gen. Pillow, when I received these instructions, told me to hold the position until he gave me orders to (move.) The first signal agreed upon was a bugle, but (as that) instrument could not be found, he promised to send me an officer with the order.

The order never came. I sent my adjutant three times to request permission to make the attack, and another officer once. General Pillow could not be found. My command was tanding in full view and at short bearing distance from these batteries, and kept there until a private came to me with instructions from Gen. P. to withdraw my command. I refused to move unless the order was conveyed by an officer, and remained until an officer carried the instructions.

I had twelve men shot down in attained the position, and during the whole of the work my men behaved bravely and steadily. They have since that time given me ample evidence of their quality, and I have never doubted them.

I have merely stated simple facts relative to the conduct and control of my own command. I do not criticise even Gen. Pillow's plans or arrangements, and would not have written thus far had not the correspondence or controversy involved, in some degree, the reputation of my command.

Very Respectfully, your ob't. serv't.,
Francis M. Wynkoop,

To Wm. L. Hodge, Esq., editor New Orleans Commercial Bulletin.

NRR 73.075, Col. 2  October 2, 1847  Letter From an Officer About the Recent Battles in Mexico

From a private letter, written by a gentleman of the army after the battles near Mexico of the 19th and 20th August, the Missouri Republican has been permitted to make the following interesting extracts. The letter is dated at San Augustine on the 25th of August.

“Our arms are again victorious, but at a fearful cost of life and blood. We have lost one thousand in killed and wounded, and among the killed are the best officers of the army. Capt. Capron and Capt. Burke are with the buried, having been killed dead at the storming of Churubusco, where we lost in three hour seven hundred officers and men.

“On the 19th our division advanced upon the enemy in position at Contreros, their first work, defended by then thousand men, with twenty-two pieces of artillery, and admirably entrenched.

“The advanced guard was commanded by Captain Robers and Capt. Porter and by them the attack was commenced. Capt. Robers deployed in front of their battery, about one thousand yards from their lines, and advanced steadily under the fire of shells, round, grape, and canister shot, driving in all their pickets and skirmishers, and took his position under shelter of a cover of rocks and a deep ravine, about two hundred yards from their first line of batteries and breastworks, where he remained until the rest of the division and General Quitman’s supporting command had come up to join the attack. It was found impossible, in consequence of the nature of the ground, considered impassable by the Mexicans, to form the order of battle and assault the works until morning, our men having made a long march, and having labored for hours in making roads and hauling artillery and ammunitions. The whole army took cover within musket range of the enemy, who poured upon us all the time their fire from ten thousand muskets, and slept on our arms during the night.

“At two o’clock in the morning, under cover of darkness and rain, our positions were taken, and at seven the assault was made. The works were all carried by the bayonet in less than an hour, and the ten thousand Mexicans put to perfect route. The scene cannot be described; eight hundred and fifty Mexicans were dead upon the field, between three and four hundred were wounded, and fifteen hundred taken prisoners: and their twenty-two pieces of a artillery, and great quantities ammunition and other material of war, captured. Our loss in killed and wounded here was less than two hundred. Capt. Hanson of the 7th infantry, and Lieut.
Johnston of the 1st artillery, were the only officers killed. We pushed forward to this place in pursuit of the retreating enemy, when the lancers made a stand, and continued to fire upon us through the roads and field up to Churubusco, where the most terrible battle ever fought on this continent took place. This assault by the bayonet has redeemed the impeached valor of the Mexican army Gen. Twiggs’, Gen.
Worth’s, and Gen. Pillow’s divisions were all concentrated here, and for two hours and a half every man was brought under the fire of the works. The strength of this position can hardly be conceived. We had but one approach, water surrounding it on all sides but one. This approach was defended by twenty-five thousand men, behind the most approved field works, of great strength, and seemingly impregnable. Of course they were carried, but the field and works, covered with between three and four thousand killed and wounded on both sides, showed the terrible cost. Fifty of our officers were killed and wounded.

“Before Gen. Worth had joined our division in this attack, he had stormed and carried the works at San Antonio, with no little loss. You may well imagine that our division was too much exhausted and cut to pieces to push on further. We had been fighting some eight hours, and had marched nearly eight miles; all were worn out with hunger, thirst and fatigue. As for myself, I had eaten nothing but the half of a hard biscuit for forty-eight hours. Gen. Worth's division, more fresh, pushed on, and stormed and carried another strong fort before dark, within one mile of the city gates. Capt. Phil Kearny lost an arm here, but he is doing well, and is in no danger. He was greatly distinguished, and has covered himself with glory.

"The 20th of August, 1847, will be a day never to be forgotten. Its history is written blond, and the halo of glory that it wreathes upon the arms of our country is too deeply ensanguined with the blood of Americans, to rejoice the army that has covered itself with imperishable renown. Our camp is filled with mourning, and the reflection that the greater grief is yet to be carried to the hearths and homes of those who have fallen is too sad for utterance. What a carnage for a single day! The sun that rose on the 20th shed its glad light upon seven thousand men, full of life and hope, who worried the battle field with their scattered limbs and corpses when night closed in! The day was tumultuous, revengeful, and bloody: the night gloomy, fearful, and dark-the stillness only broken by the groans of the wounded and dying.

"Of course, all the ordnance of the four positions that were assaulted were captured, and with them ammunition and stores of every kind. We have three thousand prisoners-among them ex-President Annaya-the commanding general of the army, (Rincon,) and ten other general officers. We hardly know what to do with our prisoners and stores. Some forty deserters from our army are among the prisoners, who will be hanged, so soon as we can have a military commission convened for their trial. Several Mexican officers, paroled at Cerro Gordo, are also prisoners-they will swing with the deserters.

"You will now ask, what is to be the result of all this? A question I am not able to answer. The Mexicains agreed to a truce, with a view to appoint commissioners to negotiate a peace. An armistice was yesterday agreed upon for that purpose, and I trust in God that peace will follow immediately. Having destroyed the main approaches and defences of the city, it will be an easy matter to march into it, should hostility be renewed.

"Major Mills was killed, his horse having run off with him and carried him into the enemy's works, where he was lanced after he had surrendered his sword."

Under date of the 27th, it is said: "The prospect of peace brightens; I shall be at home in January, I believe." [DCK]

NRR 73.076 Oct. 2, 1847 letter from Palmetto regiment

Private letter from an officer of the Palmetto regiment to his relatives.

San Augstin, Mexico, Aug. 28, 1847

It is with no small degree of pleasure that I have just learned that a bearer of despatches is to leave to night at 10 o'clock, for the states, and write in haste merely to say that I am alive and well. We arrived here on the 19th, (10 miles from the city of Mexico) and our regiment, with the New York volunteers engaged the enemy on the morning of the 20th, some three miles from this place, killing about 150 and taking 217 prisoners. We had only one man wounded. We again engaged the enemy on the evening of the same day, and would to God I could say that we had been as fortunate as in the morning. In this last engagement we lost our noble, gallant, and much beloved colonel; he was shot through the head, and never breathed after he fell. He was in conversation with me at the time of receiving his death wound. A braver man never lived; and in his death the regiment has lost a father, and I a best friend. There was hardly an officer or man who was not hit in some way or other. I was struck twice without receiving any injury, once on my cap and once on my thigh, cutting a hole in my pants, and leaving the mark of the ball on my thigh. Lt. Col. Dickinson received a severe wound through the ankle-joint, just after the death of Col. Butler. (The command of the regiment, of course, then devolved on Major A.H. Gladden, for the balance of the engagement.) In company H, Captain De Saussure was slightly wounded in two places, his coat receiving evidence of having been in battle without being hurt, all being struck by spent balls. Sergeant Beggs was severely wounded while bearing the regimental colors. James B. Kennerly, Mooney, Corley, Purse, W.S. Johnson, and E. Price, were severely wounded-all doing well. Killed; Tim Kelley and S. Wiggins, on the field. Wm. Devlin since died of this wounds. Of this company 26 were killed and wounded-all but those mentioned were slightly. T. Price, J.P. Cantwell, R. Wadell, J.T. Watts and W.
Barkelow have all received flesh wounds, but are doing well. This company went into action with forty-nine, all told. I am proud to say, that the Palmetto regiment behaved nobly and gallantly; they stood for one hour and a half, the most galling fire that was ever poured on troops, and that they never once faltered. Our brigade was engaged with at least nine thousand men. At one time we were nearly surrounded, the enemy firing from the front, right, left, and in the rear, and we had at last to charge, when the Mexicans were made to flee before our bayonets. We went into the fight with two hundred and fifty-two privates and had killed and wounded, officers and men, one hundred and thirty-seven. Carolina may well be proud of the Palmetto boys. Well did they sustain the honor and chivalry of the state. We would have been in the city had it not been that propositions of peace having been made by the Mexicans. The commissioners are now sitting. It is thought that peace will be made.

NRR 73.076, Col. 2, Oct. 2, 1847 Notice of the Difficulties Among the Mexicans in Treating for Terms

The private correspondence of the Diario de la Marina represents that the Mexican government had some difficulty in inducing any one to accept the office of commissioners but the commissioners we have before named. Gen. Herrera, Gen. Mora y Villamil and Senores Couto, and Atristain were engaged on the 28th of August in negotiating. According to some accounts, if Gen. Santa Anna did not obtain fair terms, and such as would save the national honor, the war would be continued.

Others said that peace would be made at all hazards. In regard to this, however, the editor of the Diario says that there are two notable letters from Mexico touching on the matter. One of them declared that congress would not consent to convene in the capital, but offered to meet in Querataro, from which fears were entertained that it was their design to disapprove of any treaty which might be made.

This view of their probable action was confirmed by the face that the executive by his own confession, did not possess the power to make a peace. And furthermore, says the Diario, there were many general officers in Mexico at the last dates who declared that they would resign, or which is the same thing, abandon Santa Anna if a treaty should be concluded. From all which it would follow that the position of the president was extremely critical.

On the other hand, accounts from Queretaro and other states agree that there is a league among eight of the states to resist to the last extremity; that even should the city of Mexico succumb, not an inch of the territory sought by the United States should be conceded. The editor of the Diario then draws the conclusion from all he can learn that it was altogether probable that even should a peace be concluded it would not put an end to the hostilities, and that Paredes would not fail to sustain hostilities.

However this may be, we are not the less solicitous that Gen. Scott should succeed in forming some kind of treaty with Santa Anna's government, which treaty will be the more valuable should it receive the sanction of congress. Give us but this treaty, and the Mexicans may well be allowed to wrangle among themselves as to the propriety of it. It will be quite an easy matter for the United States to hold their own under it.

The Diario remarks: Notwithstanding, we do not think it improbable that the commissioners will bring their labors to a successful conclusion, and that for the ratification of their work, and to supply in a measure the absence of their work, and to supply in a measure the absence of congress, that an assembly of notables will be formed in Mexico. At the same time we foresee, by the general tenor of the correspondence from Mexico. That the end of hostilities has not yet arrived, and that assuredly the treaty which may be concluded will not terminate them. [DCK]

NRR 73.076, Col. 2 Oct. 2, 1847, Forces Under Gen. Winfield Scott as He Marched on Mexico City

The amount of effective force under Gen. Scott, before Mexico, is variously stated. Accounts from our officers of the numbers engaged is the late battles estimate them at but little over 7,000 men. Our own calculation was, that he left Puebla with about 10,000 men. The Mexican paper now published in the city of Puebla makes the following staement of Gen. Scott's force:

Brought by Scott to Puebla 7,500
Volunteers arrived with Pillow                      2,000
   Do do Cadwallader           2,500
   Do do Pierce                2,500
   Total number arrived       14,000
Sick, deserters, &c.         -1,000
Garrison left in Puebla      -1,000 [total not accompanying   -2,000 force]
Force which marched upon
   Mexico                     11,200

NRR 73.076 Oct. 2, 1847 Santa Fe, murder of Lieut. Brown; Indian attack, disease

SANTA FE- We learn from a letter from a volunteer, that Major Edmonson, with the companies under the command of Captain Horine, Holloway, McMilan, and McKinney, and three companies of the battalion under command of Major Williack, arrived at Fort Leavenworth on the 11inst. All the troops destined for New Mexico were met between Santa Fe and the Arkansas Bend. Matter appeared to be in a peaceable and settled condition in New Mexico, at the time of the departure of the volunteers from Santa Fe.

Six of the prisoners charged with the murder of Lieut. Brown, Jas. McClenalian, and Chas. Quisenberry, were hung in the 3d. of Aug., under the sentence of drum head court martial.

Major Edmonson is bringing home with him the remains of the late Lieuts. B.F. and G.E. Lackland, for interment in St. Louis county. Capt. Horine has likewise with him the ashes of Charles Quisenberry and James McClenahan.

Captain Smithson, of the third regiment of Missouri volunteers, was attacked on the 1st of August, near Pawnee Fort, by about four hundred Indians, in which the latter lost some six or eight killed, and as of twenty-four horses which broke loose at the time of the attack. Two of the volunteers had died of the measles, which were very prevalent; their names were Paul Haney and George Nowland. [KAS]

NRR 73.077 October 2, 1847, Gen. Sterling Price's journey to Fort Leavenworth

ARRIVAL OF THE GEN. PRICE, DR DECAMP. U.S.A., AND OTHER AT FORT LEAVENWORTH-PROGRESS OF THE TROOPS MARCHING TO SANTA FE.

We learn from Fort Leavenworth, that General Price, Dr. De Camp, U. States army, and others, in advance of the volunteers whose term of service in New Mexico had expired, arrived at the post on the 17th from Santa Fe. They left Santa Fe on the 11th of August, proceeding by easy marches to Moro. When they took their departure, all was quiet in New Mexico, which was then held by three companies of U. States dragoons and three companies of volunteers who had re-enlisted under Major Walker.

On the 15th of August they met Lieut. Allen, with Captain McNair’s company of mounted men, and they encamped together on the Moro. Next day, Colonel Easton, with this battalion of infantry, reached the same point; he had with him a large train of government wagons, and a large drove of beef cattle. On the 17th two companies, commanded by Captains Shepard and Jones, passed the camp at the Moro, where Dr. De Camp and others were waiting for the arrival of Col. Price and Mr. Rich, sutler to Price’s regiment. They did not come up on this day. Mr. Rich had his team, wagon, and contents swept away and everything destroyed, by a sudden and terrible mountain storm, while on his way from Santa Fe. He was so fortunate, however, as to recover his trunk, which contained a large amount of gold dust, four miles down the mountain cannon. On the 18th, the company moved the camp three miles, still waiting for the volunteers to arrive, and at night they were robbed of three animals. Next day the volunteers having arrived, they all took up their march for the United States.

On the 20th—we copy from memoranda kept by one of the company—we encountered one of those terrible storms which occasionally visit the plains, and had to half and hold our teams, to keep them from running away. Aug. 21—It rained all night, and we awoke wet and comfortless, with such bleating, braying, and swearing around us, as it seldom heard here, or any where else. Aug. 22—Met Capt. Murphy and Wm. McKnight, traders, with a train of thirty wagons. Aug. 23—Met Capt. Korponay, with his company of mounted men, and forty government wagons.

Aug. 24—Met this morning two companies Missouri mounted men, and I P M, encamped with another, on Rabbit ear creek. August 26—it rained hard all night; the morning is cold and rainy, and duplicate overcoats are absolutely necessary—met one company of mounted men with 60 government wagons. August 26—Met Capt. Hook’s company of Illinois volunteer infantry, with a large wagon train. We almost met Colonel Newby and Lieutenant Col. Boyakin.

August 28—Met Capt. Kinney’s company of Illinois volunteers, at the upper crossing of the Cimarone—a large government train with them. Aug. 29—Met four companies of Illinois volunteers, under command of Major Donaldson, with a government train of wagons, and four hundred government cattle. September 3—Reached the crossing of the Arkansas, after spending a comfortless night in the rain.

Sept. 6—Met Mr. Moldstein, a trader, with his wagons. He informed us, that Col. Ralls, with two companies of mounted volunteers, and a large government rain was on the lower Cook Creek road, a few miles distant. Sept. 7—Col. Price, Maj. Walker and Mr. Rich, with a small escort, turned to the right, to intercept Col. Ralls, for the purpose of getting the mail. The day proved rainy, and they reached our camp late much fatigued.

General Price, Mr. Rich, and Dr. De Camp, and a small escort, left this day, with provisions and blankets only, for Fort Leavenworth, where they arrived on the 17th, having marched more than forty miles a day for more than seven days, and that with tired animals, and at the end of an eight hundred miles journey. Vera Cruz In Its Palmy Days

In these days of capture by another nation of the great commercial port of the enemy, it may not be uninteresting to go back upon its history and note what by general consent has been considered its palmy days. Much of this information was obtained directly from the official records at Havana, which contain a full detail of the commercial transactions of the different dependencies of old Spain. The subjoined sketch of the commerce of Vera Cruz, may be depended upon as authentic, up to the date given—viz. The year 1810.

The exports of specie from Vera Cruz, that year amounted to a total of $46,775,240! Of which $21,774,240 was by individuals and 25,000,000 by the government authorities; and the coinage for the same year amounted to the enormous sum of $26,000,000.

That same year there were on the road between Mexico and Vera Cruz the vast number of over 54,000 mules engaged in the transport of the different products of the country, of which specie formed the principal item. There is one article of export, however, particularly worth of note, viz: that to Havana alone 27,000 barrels of Mexican ground flour found its way, and was there used in preference to that received from the mother country, and it appears that had not the course of trade been changed by the troubles of the two nations, that Cuba to within the last two years would have drawn her main supply of breadstuffs from Vera Cruz.

The imports for 1810 amounted to the value of $20,430,406 and the exports to $28,277,533. This trade, exclusive of government vessels, was carried on in the arrivals of 291 square rigged craft, and in the clearances of 239 of the same kind. The amount and value of goods entered and cleared on the government arrivals are not included in this statement, but they of course would swell this aggregate to a very considerable degree. [DCK]
GULF STEAMERS. A Pensacola letter of the 18th in the Norfolk Beacon, says; "There are five steamers in the Gulf of Mexico at this time. The Scorpion, Spitfire, Vixen, Scourge, and Petrita, besides three sloops of war, three bomb vessels, and of gun-boats and store ships. I know not how many. The U.S. steamer Mississippi, now at Pensacola has been ordered to the Gosport navy yard for repairs." [JCS]

Gen. Scott and Mr. Trist.-The Union says:-"As to Gen. Scott and Mr. Trist, the last letters received represent them, we understand, to be on confiding and confidential terms. [DCK]

The additional regiments of volunteers, called for by the last requisition of the president, are rapidly organizing and preparing for the service. The west has responded to the call with great spirits. East Tennessee, called on for only five companies, has offered fifteen, and the ten that have not been accepted, asked to formed into a new regiment. In Indiana the requisition had been more than met, and in Kentucky thirty two full companies offered their services to the governor. He had been called upon for twenty companies, and of course had to refuse twelve. Orders have been directed by the governor to the field officers and companies which have been accepted and commissioned to rendezvous at Louisville on Monday, the 4th of October next, to be inspected and mustered into the service of the U. States.

The requisition made just before upon Maryland and the District of Columbia, for an additional battalion has been complied with. The battalion under Col. Hughes are by this time at Vera Cruz.

The Illinois regiment was hardly fairly called for, before we had accounts of their being en route for N. Orleans, from whence they embarked for Vera Cruz. [DCK]

The New Jersey Battalion of volunteers recently mustered into the service of the United States, by Captain M. Knowlton, United States army, sailed from N. York for Vera Cruz on the 29th Sept., in the ship Senator. It consists of four companies, and an aggregate of 343 men.

The Trenton News says: -"We understand that a portion of the men of the New Jersey battalion, when required to go on board yesterday to sail for the seat of war, mutinied and stoned the officers. -This was owing to the treatment that Captain Napton was received from the Colonel. When our informant left the riot had been quelled." [JCS]

Court martial-Cerro Gordo-A court martial was at Puebla, on the 28th July, at the request of Riley, whose conduct in some reports of the battle of Cerro Gordo is represented as improper-the verdict was this-Col. Riley's conduct was deserving of the highest praise, which verdict was appointed by Gen. Scott. [DCK]
NRR 73.083 October 9, 1847, Gen. Sterling Price to return to Santa Fe

Gen. Price -The Jefferson Enquirer says, that General Price intends returning to Santa Fe this fall to resume his command of the forces in New Mexico. [JCS]

NRR 73.083, Col. 2 October 9, 1847 Six Companies of Mounted Georgia Troops at Mobile en Route to Mexico

Georgia troops.-Six companies of mounted men, comprising the Georgia battalion of cavalry, under command of Lieut. James S. Calhoun, of Columbia, arrived at Mobile on the 26th alt., en route for Mexico. Four companies of infantry from Georgia were daily expected at Mobile. [DCK]

NRR 73.083 October 9, 1847, the Encarnacion prisoners released

Release of the Incarnation prisoners.

At length we have the pleasure (says the New Orleans Picayune of the 28th ult.) of announcing the release of our brave countrymen who were taken prisoners at Encarnation and other places by the Mexicans. It will be recollected that Col. De Russy, with his command, was dispatched from Tampico some months since to effect the release of American prisoners. Yesterday the United States steamship McKim arrived in the river from Vera Cruz, having on board a number of these men. About thirty five of the released prisoners (teamsters) remained at Tampico in the employ of the United States Quartermaster at that place. [JCS]

NRR 73.084 October 9, 1847, the Massachusetts Whig convention on the war with Mexico and annexation of territory

The Massachusetts whig state convention, held a meeting at Springfield on the 29th Sept.-GEORGE ASHMUN, esq., of Springfield was chosen to preside, assisted by vice presidents and four secretaries. The convention being organized, proceeded to ballot.

For candidate for governor -GEO. N. BRIGGS received 571 votes, 22 scattering votes. Mr. B. was then declared to be unanimously selected as the whig candidate.

For lieut. governor -JOHN REED, esq., received 572, the whole of the votes taken and was declared unanimously nominated.

On the motion of Mr. Bell, of Boston, Messrs. Bell, Simmons of Norfolk, Pierce of Essex, Sprague, of Plymouth, Bacon, of Barnstable, Adams, of Bristol, Davenport, of Worchester, Conkey, of Hampden, Calhoun, of Hampden, Dewey, of Baltimore, and Osborn, of Dukes, were appointed a committee to prepare and report resolutions for the consideration of the convention.

Mr. Phillips, of Salem, moved that it is inexpedient to nominate a candidate for president by this convention. Mr. Curtis, of Boston, moved that the motion be laid upon the table, which was carried. -The convention then took a recess till 2 ½ o’clock.

In the afternoon, Mr. Webster spoke an hour and 20 minutes, and, the Boston Atlas says, made one of the best speeches he ever made.

The following are the resolutions of the committee which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is matter of heartfelt congratulation to the members of this convention, and to the state at large, that the long established and well known conservative policy of the whigs of Massachusetts has been able hitherto to sustain in healthful action the general industry and varied interests of the old commonwealth, notwithstanding the manifold embarrassments created and the dangers apprehended and realized from the disorganizing tendencies of the leading measures of the national government.

-That whenever the democracy of Massachusetts shall be able to set before us a model of their radial doctrines in actual practice, in any of our sister states, where justice is more fully and more ably administered, where legislation is more pure, and more fairly applied to all interests and classes; where the execution of the laws is more impartial and just; where the equality of persons and the security of their rights are practically greater; and where the acquisition of wealth, of knowledge, and of power is more open to all; where education in all its branches is more fully imparted to all classes, or the institutions of benevolence more fully sustained; where the necessaries, the comforts, and the conveniences of life are more universally and more equally diffused; and where the function of government-leading to these results-have been fulfilled and sustained at less expense than in Massachusetts give heed to their complaints, regard their denunciations, believe in their professions, and trust in the recently selected head and embodiment of their principles.

-That, on a careful examination and review of the administration of George N. Briggs and John Reed, they have eminently fulfilled the requisitions of the constitution, have been distinguished for their zeal and fidelity, uprightness and ability, in the discharge of their duties to the state; that they are, in the judgment of the convention, entitled to the confidence and approbation of their constituents, and are therefore unanimously recommended to the electors of this commonwealth as the whig candidates for re-election to the respective offices of governor and lieutenant governor of the commonwealth.

-That it is a matter of regret that the examination and review of the acts of our national rulers is so much less satisfactory than those of the state. -While the bounties of heaven have been profusely showered over our land, and have enabled us as individuals to become "ministering angels" to the wretchedness and suffering of less favored climes-as a nation, our rulers have been shredding our blood and exhausting our treasures, in carrying the calamities, the desolations, and all the nameless horrors of war, through the length and breadth of the land of our neighbors.

-That the annexation of Texas gave the first strong impulse to the desire the acquisition of foreign lands, and created a national appetite, which, if not seasonably corrected, may lead to the destruction of our most cherished rights and the overthrow of our civil institutions, in the engulfing vortex of military despotism.

-That the war with Mexico-the predicted result, if not the legitimate offspring, of the annexation of Texas-began in a palpable violation of the constitution, and the usurpation of the powers of congress by the president, and carried on in reckless indifference and disregard of the blood and treasure of the nation-can have no object which can be effected but the acquisition of Mexican territory, under the circumstances of the country, unless under adequate securities for the protection of human liberty-can have no other probable result than the ultimate advancement of the sectional supremacy of the slave power.

-That the whigs of Massachusetts are not prepared for this result; they see, therefore, no rational or justifiable objects in the protracted prosecution of the war, and rejoice in every manifestation of the return of peace; for, although sanctioned by a portion of the whigs in its earliest movements, as a measure for the preservation of the army-then no peril by the unauthorized act of the president, yet the war itself, while prosecuted to secure the sectional supremacy of the slave power, or the conquest and dismemberment of the Mexican republic, has never had, and never can have, the sanction and approbation of the whigs of Massachusetts.

-That the great and permanent interests of the American Union as it is, and the highest and brightest hopes of the liberties and the rights of our race on the American continent, require of the great North American republic to stay her hands, already too deeply stained in the blood shed in the unnatural war between the two great republics of this continent, and inscribe on her standard, now waiving victoriously over the halls of the Montezumas, and deeply on the hearts of her ruler, as her well considered and unchangeable purpose, "Peace with Mexico without dismemberment, No addition of Mexican territory to the American Union."

-That, in the judgment of this convention, this course of policy and action would form a basis on which the whole of the country might honestly rally and securely stand, while it would place our country eminently in the right, and show to the world that we are, as a nation, as invincible in moral principle as in military power, and that we can conquer a peace with Mexico by first conquering in ourselves the raging thirst of military glory and the mad ambition of foreign conquest.

-That if this course of policy shall be rejected, and the war shall be prosecuted to the final subjugation or dismemberment of Mexico, the whigs of Massachusetts now declare, and put this declaration of their purpose on record, that Massachusetts will never consent that Mexican territory, however acquired, shall become a part of the American Union unless on the unalterable condition that "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude therein, otherwise than in the punishment of crime."

-That, in making this declaration of her purpose, Massachusetts announces no new principle of action in regard to her sister states, and makes no new application of principles already acknowledged. -She merely states the great American principle embodied in our Declaration of Independence—the political equality of persons in the civil states; the principle adopted in the legislation of the states under the confederation, and sanctioned by the constitution, in the admission of new states formed from the only territory belonging to the Union at the adoption of the constitution—it is, in short, the imperishable principle set forth in the ever memorable ordinance of 1787, which has for more than a century been the fundamental law of human liberty in the great valley of the lakes, the Ohio and Mississippi, with what unparalleled results, let the great and growing states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin answer and declare.

-That the whigs of Massachusetts regard the great interests of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures as so inseparably connected that national measures injurious to either are injurious to all; that the increased and rapidly increasing agricultural products of the great west require great and increasing facilities of commercial transport; that the regulation of commerce, both internal and external, is placed by the constitution among the clearly expressed and undoubted powers of congress; and that the improvement of the great lakes and rivers of the west by the construction among the clearly expressed and undoubted powers of congress; and that the improvement of the great lakes and rivers of the west by the construction of harbors on the lakes, and the removal of obstructions from the rivers is among the most obviously just and necessary uses of this important power, and would greatly tend, by the increase of internal trade and commerce to the rapid advancement of these great interests of the country.

-That the veto by the president of the river and harbor bill of the last congress was an act of wanton injury to the great interests, not only of the west but of all interests connected with them, and of unmitigated wrong and insult to the congress that passed it, and ought not to be forgotten until this veto is annihilated by a two thirds vote, or by the election of a president who will execute the constitutional power as it was made to be executed by every president from George Washington down to but not including, James K. Polk

-That the great whig doctrines of protection to American industry, capital, and labors; a sound uniform currency for the people as well as the government, a well regulated system of the internal improvement, especially in reference to the internal commerce of the great lakes and rivers of the west; uncompromising hostility to the subtreasury, to executive usurpations of the powers of congress, and to all wars for conquest; and to all acquisitions of the permanency of the Slave power, are now, as they have been, cardinal principles in the policy of the whigs of Massachusetts, and form, in their judgment, the broad and deep foundations on which rest, and ever must rest, the prospective hopes and the true and enduring interests of the whole country.

-That in a period like the present, when a war of no common character, and to be followed by no common results, actually exists, and is threatening the integrity, if not the existence, of one of the parties, the whigs of Massachusetts, in looking over the catalogue of distinguished names that adorn the ranks of whig statesmen, for the one most competent, under the circumstances, to bear the whig standard, inscribed with their principles, onward to assured victory in the approaching campaign of 1848, see with patriotic pride and pleasure many illustrious statesmen in all sections of our Union, under whose enlightened guidance and discretion success, if not commanded, would at least be deserved; but they can never forget that they have in their midst a statesman who, if he be not "first among equals," has long been by general acknowledgement, equal to this first in any age or country—a statesman who has ever been found equal to any emergency of the country, who clamed the troubled waters of the Oregon controversy, adjusted the long standing and much vexed questions of the Caroline and the boundary at the northeast, and settled the maritime law of the national flag on principles as durable as the ocean on which it floats—a statesman whose longable, and devoted service in the councils of... the nation has rendered his name, his transcendent talents and unequaled attainments in everything that related to the great interests of the country, in peace or in war, at home or abroad, as familiar as household words in every cottage and ham et in the land; and has pointed him out as eminently qualified, whether it shall be brought to a close, to meet the great questions of national policy and constitutional law that may and must arise in its progress and termination; and as most worthy to receive, what the whigs of Massachusetts are most anxious to give, the highest reward which an enlightened and grateful people can ever bestow on their most deserving and most distinguished son.

-That the whigs of Massachusetts earnestly and unanimously recommend Daniel Webster, of Massachusetts, to the favorable consideration of the whig national convention, as a candidate for the office of president of the United States.

Mr. Palfrey introduced an amendment, which was discussed by Messrs. Winthrop, Adams, Sumner, and Dimon, of Boston, Allen, of Worcester, Phillips, of Salem, Dwight, of Springfield, and Palfrey, of Cambridge. It was lost.

At 7 ½ o’clock the convention dissolved. The Atlas says, “it was one of the largest and most respectable conventions ever held in this commonwealth.” [JCS]

NRR 73.087-73.088 October 9, 1847, Dr. Cooper and Lt. David Henderson safe

LIEUT. HENDERSON AND DR. COOPER SAFE. -The New Orleans Picayune of the 29th ult. says: -A private letter addressed to us from Vera Cruz, dated 2d instant, says: “I am happy to able to inform you of the safe arrival at the headquarters of Major Lally (at Jalapa) of the detachment of mounted men belonging to Captain Fairchild’s company under Lieut. Henderson, accompanied by Dr. Cooper, of the army, and three mounted Georgians, all of whom were supposed to have been captured at the National Bridge. [JCS]

NRR 73.088 October 9, 1847, deficiency of transports

TRANSPORTS-The New Orleans National publishes a letter dated Brazos Santiago, September 3, in which it is stated that three is not a vessel at that place adapted to the transportation of the troop-ordered from Gen. Taylor’s army to Vera Cruz.

The writer adds—“Of course nobody is to blame for sending troops into camp on a barren desert of burning sand, where there is neither wood nor water; the stormy season at hand, and not even adhesiveness enough in the drifting and patching sands to hold a tent pin or give permanency to a tent pole. The consequence will be alternate parchings and drenchings whilst awaiting transports, which will admirably prepare the troops for the graveyards of Vera Cruz.”

At the last dates from Vera Cruz there were several large vessels discharging cargo with great haste, and as soon as they were unladen they were to be despatched to Brazos Santiago to bring the troops from there ordered to Vera Cruz.

The city was filled with supplies recently sent to the army, and with the goods imported on private account. This accumulation was owing to the long time that has transpired since a train was sent into the interior.

There was still some sickness at Vera Cruz, but it was not increasing.

A large number of troops were in and about Vera Cruz, and the garrison is now larger than it has been since Gen. Scott left.

The wound of Gen. Scott is said to be in the calf of the leg, and slight. [JCS]

NRR 73.088 October 9, 1847, news about Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga in the vicinity of Puebla

NRR 73.088 train to leave Veracruz under command of Gen. Joseph Lane
PUEBLA-PAREDES. -The New Orleans Patria of the 27th publishes a letter from its correspondent El Jarocha, in which it is stated that Paredes had been nominated inspector general of the National Guard of Puebla, by the governor of the state. He is said to be with Gen. Rea, on the road between Vera Cruz and Puebla, with 6,000 men, waiting for the train which was supposed to leave the former city, under the command of Gen. Lane, which was to be escorted by 2,500 men, including the troops that were to join at Jalapa. Paredes would not take command of Rea’s troops, alleging as his reason that he came to serve his country, and that he would “not afford a pretext to Santa Anna to denounced him as creating a revolution.

El Jarocha say that it was rumored that General Rea had entered Puebla, and that the American garrison there had capitulated without much resistance. All fudge! He adds that letters from the interior state that the Mexicans were more than ever averse to peace, but if Gen. Scott had 30,000 troops with him their opposition would speedily give way. [JCS]

Capt. Besancon’s Company.

The Picayune of the 29th say: “with the exception of Lieut. John Hawkins and some fifteen or eighteen men who were left to guard camp inside of Vera Cruz, had been attacked by guerrillas within about a mile of the National Bridge, this side, and it was supposed that every man of them had been killed.”

We have seen two private letters; one dated the 15th and the other 19th inst., written by a member of Capt. Besancon’s company from Vera Cruz, the one to his sister and the other to his brother residing in this city.

In the letter of the 15th the writer says: -- "Sixteen of our men have come from Jalapa. One man lost- Ralph Depass, of our city. He was shot through the head while making a charge on the National Bridge. He was a brave and good soldier. Mr. Wilkinson the orderly, was wounded in the leg, but not badly, and Lieutenant Waters was grazed on the face by a ball. The captain and two lieutenants are still at Jalapa, and we do not know when they will be here.”

In the letter of the 19th the writer says: “No further news from the balance of the company than what I stated in my last.” [WFF]

Maj. Lally’s detachment, death of Lieut. Twiggs, guerrilla attack

Maj. Lally’s Detachment- In the Vera Cruz Sun of Anahuac, of the 3d. It is stated that the train under the command of Major Lally had left Jalapa at the latest dates. He sustained but very little loss in the engagements which he had with the enemy, by whom he had been much annoyed all the way through. Lieut. Twiggs was the only officer killed in his command. account of Sergeant Riley the desperer SERGEANT RLEY, the desperer, was well known by many in this community. He was recruiting sergeant for some time and kept the rendezvous next to the corner of Cedar, in Washington street. Rley was a man of very large frame, more than six feet high. He was formerly a sergeant in the 66th regiment of the British army, stationed in Canada, from which he deserted and came to this city. Shortly after he joined the U. States army, and, being well skilled in his profession, was sent to West Point, where he acted as drill sergeant for some time. [JCS]

Battle At Mill El Rey, (King’s Mill)

From the Boletin extra, of Sept. 9

At half past 5 o’clock this morning (the 8th ) the fire commenced on the two flanks of Chapultepec.- The left was resting on the miss El Rey, close to the forest of Chapultepec. This point was commanded by Gen. Leon, and under his order were the battalion of Mina, whose colonel was the patriotic and gallant Balderas, and the battalions Union and La Patria, of Oajaca, in on of which were included the companies of Puebla, also a body from Queretaro and some others-all composing the National Guard. The right flank rested on the hose of Mata, at the distance of a quarter of a league from Chapultepec, and occupied by 1,5000 of the regular army, commanded by Gen. Perez. The enemy, in two columns, with his usual daring attacked these points-first with artillery, and at a quarter to 6 with a rapid fire of musketry.

Gen. Perez sustained the fire very well for about half an hour, when, for causes at present unknown, he retired with his forces, although he had not lost ten men. The retreat must have been fatal for Mexico, if, fortunately, Gen. Leon and his brigade had not shown prodigies of valor. Twice his repulsed the column that attacked him, and in the second he sallied from his position to recover the artillery Gen. Perez had lost; but then he received a mortal wound, and few moments afterwards the valiant Balderas was also wounded, and died on the field. They enemy with additional forces again charged and took possession of the mill. Twice he was dislodged, but on his retaking it the third time, it was found impossible to bring our troops to the charge.

In spite of these two advantages which they had gained in their endeavors to attack Chapultepec they could not effect a further advance, which may be owing to there being intimidated by the resistance of our forces and the considerable loss they had suffered. The result was that at 9 o'clock in the morning the fire of small arms had nearly ceased, and they were seen employed in collecting their killed and wounded. At 11 o'clock the enemy announced a retrograde movement, and by 2 in the afternoon he withdrew all forces to Tacubaya, abandoning the two points he had occupied and blowing up the house of Mata, although some say it was set on fire by a bomb fired from Chapultepec. It is believed that Gens. Twiggs and pierce directed the attack, and that they put in motion about 8000 men.

It is certain that the fire was more intense and brisk than at Churubusco. It is impossible to ascertain the loss on either side. Ours does not amount to 100 killed and 250 wounded. There are few missing-nearly all not killed or wounded retiring to Chapultepec. The enemy, according to the confession of an Irishman who came over to us in the evening, carried off 400 dead and 600 to 700 wounded.

We have to lament the loss of Gen. Leon, since dead; that of Col. Balderas, of the valiant Colonels Huerta and Gelati, and of the determined Captain Mateos, of Puebla, who conducted himself like a hero, telling his soldiers, on the point of death, that they must never forget they were Pueblanos, and to fight valiant to the death. We will take care that he shall be buried in the Pantheon, and that his unfortunate widow shall receive a pension.

If the cavalry had taken the position assigned to them at 4 o'clock in the morning, by order of Gen. Santa Anna, and if above all they had made the charge which was ordered at the moment that the enemy attacked the miss of El Rey, instead of flying precipitately, the action would have terminated early and the triumph would have been complete. But they did not take the position to which they were ordered, much less make the charge, because his subordinate officers refused an account of the ground being too uneven and broken for cavalry, as if it were not the same for the cavalry of the enemy.

It is believed that the enemy will renew the attack to-morrow by another route-either by that of La Picdad or by that of San Antonion. May God protect our cause on this occasion!

One of the enemy's guerrillas, who came with Scott, was made a prisoner and shot on the spot. [KAS]
Mexican of the city of Mexico to a Spanish house in this city. The letter came via Orizaba, under cover to Mr. Dimond, American collector of the port of Vera Cruz. The news it gives is more full than we have received from any other quarter, but it bears a Mexican face, for which allowance must be made. It however sufficiently proves that Mexico is reduced to the last extremity. [KAS]

THE NEGOTIATION.

COMMISSION OF MR. TRIST

James K. Polk, President of the United States of America, to all those to whom these presents may come, greeting:

Know ye, that, desirous of re-establishing peace, harmony, and good relations between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, and to remove all grounds of complaint, having especial confidence in the integrity, prudence, and talent of Senior Don NICHOLAS P. TRIST, we have named him in the commissioner of the United States to the Mexican republic, and invest him, in the fullest and most complete manner, with ample power and authority, in the name of the United States, to meet and confer with any person or persons who shall have similar authority from the republic of Mexico, and between them to negotiate and conclude an arrangement of the differences which exist between the two countries—a treaty of peace, amity, and lasting boundaries between the United States against the government of that nation, and of all reclamations of that government and its citizens against the United States; and in like manner to determine the limits and boundaries between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, and all other matters and things suitable for negotiation, and bearing up the interests of both nations, transmitting and delivering said convention, when it shall be concluded, for ratification, to the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the senate.

In testimony whereof, this document is sealed with the seal of the United States.

Done and executed under my hand, in the city of Washington, on this fifteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, and in the seventy-first year of the independence of the United States.

JAMES K. POLK, President of the U. States.

JAMES BUCHANAN, secretary of state.

THE AMERICAN PROJECT OF A TREATY

Project of a treaty presented by the American commissioner, on the 27th of Alzcopozalco.

Art. 1. There shall be a firm and universal peace between the United States of America and the United Mexican States and between their respective countries, territories, cities, towns, and villages, without exception of places or persons. All hostilities by sea and land shall definitively cease as soon as the ratifications of this treaty shall be made and exchanged by both parties.

Art. 2. All the prisoners of war made by both parties, as well by sea as land, shall be returned as soon as practicable after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty. And, further, if there be at present any Mexican citizens held captive by the Camanches or any other savage tribe of Indians within the limits of the United States, as the same are defined by this treaty, the government of the United States will require the restoration of such captives, and their liberty to return to their homes in Mexico.

Art. 3. So soon as this treaty shall have been duly ratified by the United Mexican States, it shall be made known with the least delay to the commanders of the forces by sea and by land, of both parties; and in consequence there shall be a suspension of hostilities as well by seas as by land, as well on the part of the military and naval forces of the United States as on those of the United Mexican States; and the said suspension of hostilities shall be inviolably observed by both parties. Immediately after the exchange of ratification of the present treaty, all the forts, territories, places, and possessions, whatsoever they may be, which have been taken by the United States from the United Mexican States during the war, except much as are comprehended within the limits of the United States, as the same remain defined by article 4 of this treaty, shall be returned without delay and without causing any destruction or extraction or artillery, or of any public property whatever, originally captured in said forts or places, and which remain in them when said forts or places, and which remain in them when the ratification or this treaty shall be exchanged; and in the same manner all the forts, territories, &c.

Art. 4: The dividing line between the two republics will commence in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land in front of the mouth of the Rio Grande; thence along the middle of said river to a point where it touches the southern line of New Mexico, to the southwest angle of the same; thence northward along the western line of New Mexico to where the same is cut by the first branch of the river Gila; if it be not cut by any branch and of the said river, then to a point in said line nearest the said branch; and thence in a direct line to the same, and downward by the middle of said branch of the said river Gila, until it empties into the Rio Colorado and by the middle of the Gulf of California to the Pacific Ocean.

Art. 5: In consideration of the extension of the limits of the United States, as they are defined by the preceding article, and by the stipulations which are further contained in article 8, the United States abandon forever against the United Mexican States all reclamation on account of the costs of this war; and, besides, agree to pay to the United Mexican States, in the city of Mexico, the sum-

Art. 6: In full consideration of the stipulations contained in article 4 and 8 of this treaty, the U. States agree to assume and pay all sums at present due to claimants, and those which may be hereafter established, according to the convention concluded between the two republics in the city of Mexico, on the 30th January, 1843, to provide for the payment of what shall be decided, to an amount not exceeding three million dollars, which have arisen prior to the 13th of May, 1846, and which shall be adjudged to be due by a commission established by the government of the United States, whose decisions shall be definitive and conclusive; provided always, that in deciding on the validity of the said demands, the commissioners or claimants shall be guided and governed by the principles and rules prescribed by the first and firth articles of the ungratified convention, concluded in the city of Mexico on the 20th of November, 1843, and in no case shall they give judgment in favor of any claim not embraced by those principles and rules. And the United States for the present and the future exonerate the Mexican States from any of the said demands whatsoever, which may be admitted or rejected by said board of commissioners.

Art. 7: If, in the opinion of the said board of commissioners, or of the claimants, it shall be considered necessary for the decision of any of the said claims that any books, registers, or documents which may be in the possession or power of the United Mexican States should be examined, the commissioners or claimants shall make, within a period to be fixed by congress, a petition to that effect to the Mexican secretary of foreign affairs, which shall be forwarded to him by the secretary of state of the United States; and the Mexican government agrees to remit, with as little delay as possible after the receipt of said petition, whatever of the said books, registers, or documents may be in its possession or power, which any have been asked for from said secretary of state, who shall immediately lay them before said board of commissioners: Provided, always, That when said petition shall be made by any of the claimants, the facts which they expect to prove by such books, registers, or documents shall have been stated under oath or affirmation.

Art. 8: The government of the United Mexican States hereby forever concedes and guaranties to the government and citizens of the United States the right to transport across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, from sea to sea, by whatever means of communication may at the time exist, whether by land or by water, free from all tolls or charge, all articles whatsoever the natural produces of the United States, or the products of its manufactures, or the products and manufactures of any country wherever belonging to the government or citizens of the United States, as well as the free right of passage to all citizens of the United States. The government of the United Mexican States equally concedes and guaranties to the government and citizens of the United States the same right of passage for their merchandise and the articles aforesaid, as it grant to its own citizens, by any railroad or canal which may hereafter be constructed across said Isthmus, whether by the government of the United Mexican States, or by its authorization, paying only such tolls as may be established; and no other or more onerous tolls shall be imposed or collected upon the articles or merchandise mentioned belonging to the government and citizens of the United States, or on the persons of said citizens, for passage over said railroad or canal, than shall be charged or collected for the same articles and merchandise belonging to the government or citizens of Mexico, or whatsoever foreign country, or the persons of its citizens. None of the said articles, be they what they may, which may pass over said isthmus from sea to sea, in either direction, where by the present communications or by any railroad or canal which may hereafter be made, with the object of being transported to any port of the United States, or of any foreign country, shall be subject to the payment of any duty whatever, whether of importation or exportation. The two governments by this article promise, wit has little delay as possible, mutually to agree upon and establish such regulations as may be deemed necessary to avoid fraud and smuggling in consequence of the right of way hereby granted and perpetually guarantied to the government and citizens of the United States.

Art 9: All the effects, commodities, or merchandise which have been introduced during the war, by whatsoever port or place of either party, by the citizens of either party, or by the citizens or subjects of any neutral power, while the same has been in the military occupation of the other, shall be permitted to remain free from confiscation or any charge or duty which there may be on the sale or exchange of them, or on the exportation of the said property from the country; and the properties are hereby permitted to see or dispose of said property in the same manner in every respect as if they importation of the same had been made in time of peace, and had paid the duties according to the laws of each country respectively.

Art. 10: The treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation, concluded in the city of Mexico, on the 4th of April, in the year of our Lord 1831, between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, and each of its articles, with the exception of the additional articles, are hereby renewed for the term of eight years, from the day of exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, with the same effect and virtue as if the formed part thereof; being understood that each of the contracting parties reserves to itself the right, at any time after the mid term of eight years, to terminate the same, giving one year’s prevision notice to the other party.

Art.11: This treaty shall be approved and ratified by the President of the United States of America, with the approbation and consent of the senate, and by the President of the Mexican States, with the previous approbation of the general congress; and the ratification shall be exchanged in the city of Washington within the period of-months from the date of the signing of the same, or sooner if practicable.

STATEMENT OF THE MEXICAN PRESIDENT.

Statement of the most excellent president in a ministerial council

"AUGUST 25, 1847. The armistice which the general of the enemy asked being agreed to, and it being necessary to appoint upon the part of the Mexican government commissioners of the United States might wish to make in the name of his government, Don Joe Baquin de Herrara, deputy general; D. Antonio Honjardin, magistrate of the supreme court, and D. Antonio Garay, were appointed; sending them at the same time the notification of their appointment, in which they were notified to meet to-morrow at 11 o’clock at the ministry of relations, to proceed with the minister to the residence of the president, in order to receive their instructions agreed to in ministerial council.

“The minister of relations will form a memorandum, which the commissioners will take with them, and which the president will place in their hands. They shall be restricted to their true mission; which, for the present, is no other than to hear the oppositions of peace which the government of the United States pretend to make to the Mexican government, immediately making known to it (the Mexican government) the contents of the propositions, that they may be duly examined, and that the president and his ministers may set upon them. The governments will reserve to itself to give the commissioners sufficient instructions to enter upon the preliminaries of the negotiation, consulting the minister of relations as far as may be necessary to the discharge of their commission, and certainly not agreeing to anything without the previous approbation of the government.”

INSTRUCTIONS OF THE MINISTERIAL COUNCIL TO THE MEXICAN COMMISSIONERS.

Conditions (or points) on which the commissioner of the United States ought to be negotiated with, and which should serve as a basis to those of Mexico, proposed to Provided, That the place of conference ought to be intermediate between the two armies.

Provided, equally, That, before entering up negotiations, the American commissioner should acknowledge the right of deliberation on the part of Mexico—that is, whether the intention of the United States has been to aggrandize is territory—why they not remain contented with that which they already occupy? If that which he has come to seek in the capital is our consent and sanction to their demands, they ought to desist from what cannot be conceded. In any other event, they can proceed as they have begun, and the war will continue.

1. The independence of Texas shall be acknowledged upon consideration of an indemnification.

2. It is understood by Texas that territory known by this name after the treaties of 1819, and when it formed part of the states of Coahuila and Texas; and by no means the territory comprehended between the Nueces and Bravo rivers, which the congress of the pretended Texas declared belong to it.

3. The evacuation of all the Mexican republic of which they are in occupation, and the raising the blockade, leaving free our ports, shall be a condition of treating upon any other position of territory.

4. Upper California can be a subject of negotiation.

5. In no event shall the parallel of 26° be made the boundary, which would cause the republic to lose all New Mexico, almost all of Durango, all of Sonora, part of Sinaloa, and almost all of Upper California; the concession of a part, should it be San Francisco, shall be yielded as a factory, never as a boundary.

6. A settled indemnification for the apart of San Francisco, and a way of communication to Oregon.

7. The same for the injurious prejudices, and extraordinary expenses of this war, made in the territory of the republic, as it is that for which they come to negotiate, and which has brought them to the capital.

8. The same for that which the families of Matamoros, Monterey, Vera Cruz, and other cities, towns, and villages of the republic have suffered in consequence of the war.

9. The same for the depredations committed by their troops

10. The same for those committed by their bands of foragers, whose licentious conduct has violated the laws of nations.

11. There shall be presented for payment as well the cost of liquidation as that of the reclamations which have been made.

12. The United States shall recognize the legitimacy of the titles of owners of lands in Texas, under grants given anterior to its declaration of independence, as well by the general government as by that of the state, and shall leave to them their free use and profit.

13. The United States shall engage not to permit slavery in any part of the territory acquired from Mexico.

14. The negotiations shall be upon the basis of reciprocity, and due regard shall be paid to the respective conditions of the people of the two nations.

15. Less than a year for carrying into effect the definitive treaty cannot be agreed to.

16. The guaranty of its observance must by agreement be sought in a European power or in a continental congress.
17. The basis of this will be the republican system upon the whole continent, excepting Brazil and French Guinea.

18. The treaty which may be formed shall not prejudice in any manner the principle of "the most favored nations," which the republic has conceded to the most of the nations with which it has treated.

19. The restoration of the foreign prisoners shall be demanded, and none for the American army shall enter the city.

20. The return of the ships and trophies.

21. And, as a general basis, to treat of peace as if we have triumphed, and as if the war could be prosecuted with advantages.

ALCORTA.
HONDERO.

Mexico, August 24, 1847.

MR. TRIST’S project of a treaty having been submitted to the council of ministers, they issue on the 29th of August another set of instructions to the commissioners, which are in general a repetition of those already given, except the two following articles:

"7. In relation to the privileges solicited by the government of the United States to navigate the river of Tehuantepec, or to traffic by whatever road or way that may be established between the two seas, the Mexican government refused absolutely all concession in this particular, and in the last resort can offer, at most, that the Mexican government will take into consideration the friendly relations which may be maintained by the United States with the Mexican government; and, with reference to the confidence which its conduct may inspire, it ought not to doubt of the reciprocity of the Mexicans on the same terms as other nations.

"8. The Mexican government can in no manner consent to except from the payment of duties all the effects introduced into its ports proceeding from the United States or any other nation since the occupation of the said ports by the said United States; and it shall be a necessary condition to their transportation into the interior that the duties be paid according to the actual tariffs of the nation. In case the United States are compromised with the importers, the United States shall pay all the duties of importation according to the tariff, and the merchants those of internal transport, consumption, &c.”

These additional instructions, on being transmitted to the commissioners, with instructions that in no case were they to treat contrary to their express tenor, they returned the following answer:

To the Minister of Foreign Affairs

Excellent sir: Having examined the bases and instructions transmitted to us by your excellency on the morning of to-day, for the purpose of prosecuting the negotiation which has been opened with the minister of the United States, we deem it our duty to manifest to the supreme government, with the frankness of honest men, that upon those bases and instructions it is impossible to take upon ourselves the negotiation, and we shall find ourselves without the capacity to discharge the duty as we ought.

We beg, the, that the supreme government will hold as not accepted on our part the powers with which its favor wold honor us. God and liberty!

NRR 73.092 October 9, 1847, Gen. Gabriel Valencia’s proclamation as governor of the city of Mexico

GABRIEL VALENCIA’S PROCLAMATION TO THE CITIZENS OF MEXICO.

We publish, on the side of our paper printed in Spanish, the whole proclamation of Valencia; but it is of so little interest to he public that it indeed does not deserve translation.  IF anyone has read Santa Anna’s proclamation, he already knows the contents of Valencia’s.  It amounts to he same thing, except that, instead of taking any blame to himself, he accuses Santa Anna.  He says that on the first day he was victorious, but was left destitute of all that was necessary to continue his course; that he disobeyed cause Santa Anna had ordered him to leave a position which protected the city; and that, if the latter had join him, victory was certain fore the Mexicans; that Santa Anna was only four miles from him, but that he remained still; that, if he had left the position which he had taken, the only alternative left to the Mexican army would have been to retreat on the capital.

On the morning of the 19th, Valencia says that he left San Angle, and march to Padierna, where he too, a strong position, and waited for the American forces, who arrived in front of him at 12 o’clock that he immediately sent on of his adjutants to General Santa Anna to advice him of it; at one o’clock the Americans advanced in front of his ambuscades, and the action commenced.  He then sent an express to General Francisco Peres, who was at a short distance from his position with 4,000 men, and who had been instructed to come and his assistance when needed, but he was answered by G. P. that he could not act with Santa Anna’s order.  The action was now vigorous in front, (continues he,) and we succeeded in repulsing the enemy from an entrenchment which was in their power, immediately in front of our works.

The action was now well engaged, and the enemy commenced moving towards our rear, taking at the same time Tiplan, the ranche of Anzaldo, and the small town of San Geronimo.  I immediately directed a battery of six pieces of artillery in that direction; the 1st battalion was also directed to harass them in flank.  I again sent another adjutant (Don Leandro Mosso) to Santa Anna; but he, like the adjutants I had before despatched, (Rodriguez Miranda and Arrietta,) could not return, because the enemy had taken the town of San Geronimo and the ranche of Anzaldo.

Valencia then says that he ordered General Torrejon to charge the Americans, with three regiments of cavalry and four pieces of artillery, but so desperate was the fire of the American infantry that the Mexican were obliged to retreat, leaving Gen. Frontera dead on the field.  That at four o’clock, Santa Anna was 6,000 men made his appearance in the rear of the Americans.  That thinking this general would attack the enemy in the rear, he ordered General Torrejon to attack them in front with one piece of artillery and 400 cavalry, accompanied by Colonel Gerro with one battalion; but it seems that this extraordinary movements was not crowned with the success which Valencia expected it would be, and this he again says was Santa Anna’s fault, because if he had attack the Americans, the Mexican arms would certainly have been triumphant, and the extermination of the 8,000 men who attacked him necessarily followed.

He further adds that, instead of doing what patriotism and honor ought to have dictated to his heart, Santa Anna remained a cold spectator to the destruction of his valiant army of the north.  Night then came on, and Santa Anna retired from the mountain where he had taken a position, and sent adjutant Ramico to him (Valencia) to advise him of Santa Anna’s wish to hold a conference with him.  But his answer was that no conference could be held until Santa Anna had attacked the Americans, as he ought to do, in the rear.  At 9 o’clock the same night another adjutant from Santa Anna arrived, bringing an order from him (Santa Anna) to retreat during the night, and abandon the artillery, (said he) the Mexican army would be certainly defeated the next day if the order was not obeyed.  During that night Valencia continued receiving information that reinforcements were coming to the aid of the Americans, by roads almost impracticable; and he says that Santa Anna remained instead of retiring to San Angel, he would certainly have cut the enemy to pieces; that after consulting with other generals, he (Valencia) came to the conclusion to remain where he was, as, even if defeated, it would be more honorable to him than to retreat; and, in the first case, the responsibility and ignominy would fall upon the
On the morning of the 20th of August, which, according to Valencia, ought to have been one of the most glorious to the Mexican arms, the American columns were seen moving in several directions, so as to attack him on all sides. He sent General Mendoza, with a strong force, to stop their progress; but he was repulsed, and then rejoined the main body. The whole line was then attacked, and so much loss sustained that he was obliged to order a retreat; but to effect this it was necessary to pass through San Geronimo and Anzaldo, which he did, but with immense loss. He the remained at a distance with Generals Salas, Torrejon, Blanco, and Jauregui, to protect the fugitives. The latter general was wounded in the head. He then retired to join the majority of his forces, who had now joined those of Santa Anna; and, while passing near these forces, he states that he can have the satisfaction of saying that two regiments received him with loud cheers; but, wishing to avoid a disagreeable interview with Santa Anna, he went to Cuatimalpa, where he found this battalion of Guanajuato and that of San Luis, under the command of Gen. Romero. He says it was his wish that these two battalions would go to the city of Mexico; but only one (that of Guanajuato) marched to that place, as the other refused to be commanded by Santa Anna.

He then concludes by stating that what he has said can be proved by the testimony of the adjutants whom he sent to Santa Anna, and that or more than twenty thousand friends and enemies. [JCS]

NRR 73.092 October 9, 1847, protest of Mexicans against any treaty made under the guns of invaders, proclamation of the governors of the states of Mexico and Puebla same effect

Protest from the representatives of the States of Mexico, Jalisco, and Zacatecas to this excellency the president ad interim of the republic.

Most excellent Sir: The deputies who assembled on the 10th of this month had agreed to suspend their meeting in the capital. Under these circumstances, the undersigned have to day learned that the minister of foreign affairs yesterday summoned the deputies for the purpose of discussing an arrangement with the invading army, and that there was a meeting, but not enough to constitute a quorum.

The undersigned deem it their duty to declare that existing circumstances in the city of Mexico would not allow the legislative body the necessary freedom in its discussions and deliberations if it should assemble in that city; and that it would not comport with the dignity of their republic that its representatives should deliberate there on this matter. This opinion existing under less pressing circumstances, it passed a decree for removing its sessions to Queretaro—a decree which was not fulfilled in its other provisions owing to unlawful proceedings, which are not a secret, and which resulted in a determination not to repair that city.

But as it is absolutely beyond doubt that any arrangement which may be made with regard to external relations, without the ratification of congress, will, besides being indecent under existing circumstance, be entirely null, as being unconstitutional, and will bring him by whom it may be made without the case of treason declared by article 5th of the law of April; the undersigned are willing to repair to the city of Queretaro as soon as your excellency shall issue the necessary summons to them for that place.

The undersigned protest before the whole nation, and particularly before the states of Mexico, Jalisco, and Zacatecas, their constituents, that resolution on their part, which, as the proceedings of congress referred to show, is concurred in by a majority of their fellow deputies, does not now exist in the federal city, and of saving the republic from the ignominy which would inevitably attach to a treaty concluded and ratified under the guns of the enemy, and on the day succeeding unlooked for reverses.

All which we have the honor to communicate to your excellency, availing ourselves to the occasion to offer the assurances of our respect and consideration.

NRR 73.096 October 9, 1847, drain of specie to pay for the Army in Mexico

SPECIE. -The amount imported into Boston during the month of Sept. 1847, was $322,712: exported $11,585.

The amount brought by the Hibernia, so far ascertained, does not exceed $12,000.

A letter from N. Orleans published in the Nat. Int. says: "The steamer New Orleans took out to Vera Cruz $400,000 in gold for the arm; $200,000 more went last week; and now that the flow of specie has ceased from Europe this contents drain of specie for the army will be seriously felt. The above, with previous shipments make $1,800,000 that the public prints have announced as having been sent from this port since 1st of last month, exclusive of a large amount of bills drawn on Mexico by the quartermaster here." NRR 73.099, Col. 1 October 16, 1847 Letter About Thomas Corwin's Views on the Acquisition of Territory and the Extension of Slavery

Letter From Senator Corwin.

Presentation corrected-New territory-Wilmot proviso.
Lebanon, 23d September, 1847.

To the editor of the Cincinnati Atlas-

Dear Sir: The various and contradictory versions published by the papers of Cincinnati, of my remarks at touching the Wilmot proviso and another related topics, oblige me to state distinctly what I think on those subjects on the occasion referred to. I am represented, by some, as having opposed the proposition of the Wilmot proviso to any territory that may be ceded to the United States by Mexico. This not true. I state more than once, that I am opposed to any further extension of our territory limits at this time; but if territory should be added, either by conquest or treaty, then slavery should be forever prohibited in such territory-or, in other words, the Wilmot proviso should be extended to it. I gave my reasons for this at length, I think cannot fail to be remembered by every one who chose to give the slightest attention to what I then said.

I did urge the propriety of rejecting all territory at this time; as this was, in my judgement, a ground on which the various sections of the Union would be more likely to unite, than on the Wilmot proviso. I did pronounce the Wilmot proviso a dangerous question, and as emphatically as I was able, I did also declare the farther acquisition of territory at this time dangerous to the peace of the Union. The reasons for these positions were given at the time. In the event of a cession of territory by Mexico to the United States, the question of the farther extension of slavery must arise in a form which would necessarily array the north and south against each other. All question having this tendency I consider, in a certain sense, dangerous, since they weaken the bonds of union which bind together the several parts of the republic, and, if pushed to extremes, will lead to dissolution. It was in this view, only, that I pronounced the Wilmot proviso a dangerous question. On the contrary, I stated, again and again, that if, contrary to my judgement of true policy, territory should be forced upon us, that then the Wilmot proviso must be applied to it.

I did prefer the ground of "no territory," because, among other reasons for that preference, I thought on that ground we might succeed, and if we relied on the Wilmot proviso alone, in the senate at least, as now constituted we must fail. I think I referred to the vote on Mr. Uphmu's motion in the senate, at the last session, to introduce the Wilmot proviso into the "three million" bill. The vote stood-for the proviso, 21; against it, 31. I voted for the proviso then. I shall vote for it again whenever it can be made applicable to territory hereafter acquired, whether it come by compact or the sword. These, I understand to be the doctrines of the people of Ohio of all parties: the same in substance embodied in resolutions of instruction which passed both branches of the Ohio legislature with unexampled unanimity at its last session.

I should not now trouble you with this communication, had the papers of your city given an undue importance to the subject by connecting my remarks with the whig party in Ohio, and drawing inferences, from what I said, equally unjust to them and myself.

Your obedient servant,

Thos. Corwin

an Puente del Rosario, when the fire of the enemy cause him to hait and wait the arrival of more troops. After pursuing the enemy for some distance, the main body of the regiment was halted and then advanced along the main causeway towards the fort at Puente del Rosario. When about to advance into the cornfield in front to storm the work, the command of the regiment devolved on Brevet Lt. Col. M. Scott in consequence of my being ordered to assume command of the brigade—the wound you there received having temporarily disabled you from command. My thanks are due to Brevet Lieut. Col. M. Scott, second in command for his valuable assistance, cheerfully tendered me on all occasions. His gallantry is too well known to need commendation from me. My staff, Lieut. and Adjt. P. Eugenbeel and Lt. S.H. Fowler, acting regimental quartermaster, will accept my thanks for their gallantry, activity, and good conduct. Assist. Surg. Wm. Roberts accompanied the regiment during the march. His talents and zeal were not only confined to his profession, but were displayed in a more military capacity in aiding, assisting, and urging on the men to the contest.

Capt. M.E. Merrill and D. Ruggles with their companies, were with the advance and the first to be came engaged with the enemy. I noticed with great pleasure the activity displayed by Capt. Merrill at all times. Capt. Wm. Chapman was slightly wounded early in the action, while gallantly doing his duty, which deprived me of his services for a short time. Captain McPhail, Lieut. Rossell, Rosencrants, and Hamilton, commanding companies, displayed coolness, courage, and activity worthy of their profession. Lieuts. Dent. Strong, and J.P. Smith manifested equal zeal, promptness and bravery.

I cannot speak too highly o the gallantry and activity of Capt. James L. Mason, of the corps of engineers, who conducted the regiment into action, and by his skill and knowledge of the country materially lessened our loss. My attention has been called by their company commanders to their gallantry displayed by Sergt. John Gollinger, of "A"; Sergts. Dudley Johnson, and Augustus Whitman, Corporal George Wootten, and privates Walter Slingeland, Daniel Mahony, Michael McGarvey, and James Boyle of "B"; private Isaac Jacobsen, of "C"; Sergt. James O'Brian, Corporal Francis Smith, privates Thos. Hardy, Jas. Cox, and Walter Crawford, of "E"; and Corporal Geo. Morley and privates Walter McCormick and George Scott, of "I." Companies 4th infantry. The regiment went into action with 14 officers and 337 non-commissioned officers and privates.

Our total loss during the day was Capt. Wm. Chapman and first Lieut. and Adjut. P. Lugeneel sightly wounded, six privates killed, forty one non-commissioned officers and privates wounded, and two privates missing. Respectfully submitted,

Lieut. Col. Scott’s Official Report

Tacubaya, (Mexico), August 22, 1847.

Sir: On the afternoon of the 20th of August, while in pursuit of the retreating enemy, in the village of Sotopingo, Brevet Col. McIntosh, being ordered to take command of the 2nd brigade, 1st division, in consequence of Colonel N.S. Clark, commanding of the 5th infantry devolved on myself.

In obedience to orders received from Major General Worth, I immediately ordered the regiment into the cornfields on the right of the road and directly in front of the fort at Puente del Rosario, passed rapidly towards the works of the enemy, and with a portion of the regiment was among the first to storm them, and drive the enemy’s troops towards the city. Brevet Major George Wright, with a small portion of the 8th infantry, gained the works before me.

In consequence of the thickness of the corn and difficulty of crossing the intervening ditches, Capt. Merrill and Lieuts. Rosencrants and Hamilton, in command of companies K, F, and I, were separated from the regiment and passes more towards the right, where they also became warmly engaged.
It affords me great satisfaction to speak of the gallantry and coolness of Lieut. N.B. Rossell, commanding company E, who was brought under my immediate observation during the whole of this affair, and who was among the first at the fort. Captain D. H. McPhail, in command of company B, came also under my immediate notice, and assisted in bringing one of the captured guns to bear on the enemy. Lieut. (and Adjt.) P Lugenbeel passed with me far into the cornfields in front of the fort, and it gives me great pleasure to testify to his zeal, gallantry, and good conduct during the whole affair. In conveying orders to the regiment from me he received a slight wound in the shoulder. In the hottest of the fire I met Capt. Martin Burk, of 3rd and Lieut. Shakelford, of the 2nd artillery, gallantly doing their duty.

I would recommend to your notice the gallant and soldier like conduct of Sergeant Samuell Archer, of H company, 5th infantry, who, I am told, was the first man to enter the enemy's works. Respectfully submitted:

MARTIN SCOTT

NNR 73.102 16 OCT 1847 Gen. Jose Mariano de Salas' official report about the fighting at Contreras

Official Report of the Mexican General Salas

Department of War and Navy—Section of Operations.

Most excellent sir: On the 19th inst., about 12 or 1 o'clock, p.m., the enemy appeared as if with the intention of attacking the position occupied by this army on the heights of Contreras. In the moment we began a very steady fire of artillery and musketry, successfully, as the enemy presented himself in the various points sustained by our troops, and we succeeded in stopping him in several places, until night put an end to the fighting; in which all the classes of this army gave proofs of their gallantry and the decision with which they sacrificed their lives in the defense of our nationality; but on the morning of the 20th—thanks to the bad position we occupied, and the carelessness paid the movements of the enemy to surround us—we were routed in all directions by more than 6,000 men— the 3000 infantry, being placed in one point, which was surrounded—When we observed the dispersion of our forces, I tried all I could to stop it, and, crying “Victory for Mexico,” at he same time that the bugle sounded for slaughter, I succeeded in stopping it for a moment, and ordered General Don Anastasio Torrejon to charge with his command; but this chief, instead of obeying my order, trampled on the infantry, and contributed to the complete rout of it.

It would appear ridiculous to make any recommendation of those who have been present in an unfortunate battle; however, I cannot help mentioning to your excellency that I am perfectly satisfied of the gallantry and tenacity with which the chiefs and officers of the several corps tried, even in the midst of disorder, to reunite their forces to resist the enemy, who was hotly pursuing us. This conduct, observed by them, preferring to be made prisoners before abandoning their soldiers, will always do them honor; and for this, I think they are entitled to the consideration of the supreme government, and the gratitude of their fellow citizens.

His excellency the commander-in-chief, Don Gabriel Valencia disappeared from amongst us at he commencement of the action of the 20th; and I, not knowing his whereabouts have thought it my duty to address your excellency, accompanying a list of the chiefs and officers who are prisoners in this city; another of those who were wounded in San Angel, and of those known to have been killed; another list of those made prisoners in the action of Churubusco;—all of which I have the honor of manifesting to your excellency for your intelligence, praying that, on communicating the above to is excellency the president, you will please manifest to him the total indigence in which the prisoners find themselves, as having given orders that they be maintained by the inhabitants of this city, which is destroyed, they must perish in misery, if their government does not supply them with what they are entitled to, and which their actual situation and the well-deserving conduct that has distinguished them, energetically claim.

I reiterated to your Excellency my respects and particular esteem. God and liberty.

Jose Mariano Salas.

NNR 73.103 16 OCT 1847 Maj. Folliot Thornton Lally’s official report from Jalapa, the line of communication, Mexicans take Puebla, Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna’s address on resuming hostilities, tone of the Mexican press

Maj. Lally’s Train

A letter from Maj. Lally, rated Jalapa, ......, says that all is quiet there. The wound that he received in the neck came near killing him, but he was then doing well.

We see no very late accounts from this detachment. They at the last dates were at Jalapa, preparing to march for Perota. The Washington Union publishes an official report of Maj. L. as follows:

Headquarters, Jalapa, Aug. 26, 1847.

To Gov. Wilson, Vera Cruz:

My command reached this place on the morning of the 20th isnt. We have fought our way triumphantly every inch of the route, but have had severe contests--nay battles--with the guerrillas: on the 10th at Paso Overjas, (as before reported) on the 12th August at the National Bridge, on the 15th of August at Cerro Gordo, and on the 19th at Las Animas, only a mile and a half from this city. Not a wagon has fallen into the hands of the enemy.

We have been opposed by atleast 1200 or 1500 guerrillas on these occasions--perhaps less at the last, for they were badly whipped at Cerro Gordo, where their loss was so large that they could not reorganize. Father Jarauta commanded them. Our loss is great. During the entire march--7 officers wounded;12 of rank and file killed; 5 mortally wounded; 66 wounded. Of this number, 4 killed and 4 wounded were at places elsewhere than the four actions named above.

I regret to say, that at the National Bridge Mr. Geo. D Twiggs (expecting a commission and to be A.D.C. of G.T.) was killed while gallantly serving in my staff; Capt. J.H. Calwell, of voltigeurs, and Capt. A.C. Cummings, 11th infantry were wounded on the 10th, (as before reported,) but are doing well now. --At National Bridge, Lieut. James A. Winner, of voltigeurs, and Lieut. George A Adams of marine corps, were dangerously wounded, also on the same day, Capt. W.J. Clark, 12th infantry, in the thigh; 2nd Lieut. Charles M. Crearor, 12th infantry, not severely, in the leg.

At Las Animas, on the 19th, Major F.T. Lilly, 9th infantry, commanding officer, was wounded in the neck, not severely; but has, for a few days, been disabled from command. A large number of sick have accumulated, besides our wounded, and we shall be compelled to remain here many days to recruit. I cannot too much praise the gallantry of the officers--the men, raw and uninstructed, have gradually acquired confidence. Col. Wynkoop arrived from Perote on the 24th, having heard we were in danger at Cerro Gordo.

We waited three days for your reinforcement. And hearing of it at Plan del Rio sent back a body of dragoons to the National Bridge, who, finding it in possession of the enemy, we concluded that it was repulsed. I am pained at the rumor we heard of the loss of some of its wagons. Dr. Cooper and 13 wagons reached us.
I cannot too earnestly recommend that you assume the authority to order the re-occupation of this city. Even if Gen. Scott was not before the city of Mexico, and beyond the reach of reinforcements, you perceive that trains are constantly endangered by guerrillas, and I am satisfied that this city has been their headquarters, and that their chief supplies have been forwarded from here. Their spirits have been raised by the absence of the troops. I am certain that Gen. Scott, on the spot, would order its re-occupation. Col. Wynkoop concurs in its importance.
Very truly yours,

F.T. Lilly

Major 9th Infantry, commanding. [MDT]

Opening The Line of Communication Between Vera Cruz and Gen’l Scott.-We learn that the views of Major Lilly, respecting the re-occupation of Jalapa, have been long since anticipated by the war department. And that, as early as August 12, instructions were dispatched by the adjutant general to Col. Wilson, commanding at Vera Cruz, to organize and send forward, with all expedition, a competent force for the re-occupation of that city. The instructions also suggested the holding of the National Bridge and Cerro Gordo. The measures thus taken by the war department to open the communication from this end of the line, will, we have no doubt, prove successful. (As has been already stated, a letter has been received from Lieut. Col.
Hughes, stating that he has occupied the National Bridge)

It was reported that the yellow fever had made its appearance in General Lane’s command; that there was some scarcity of provisions, and that the guerrillas had fortified Cerro Gordo.

Colonel Wilson reports that a sufficient force left Vera Cruz, September 6, to take possession of San Juan and the National Bridge, and that other forces would soon follow to open the remainder of the line to Jalapa. The taking and holding these points are the first points necessary to keep open the communication with our army in Mexico Union [MDT]

Of Puebla, we have two or three reports. La Patria has it that “General Rea has got full possession of Puebla, but that the Americans were pouring a deadly fire upon his troops from the surrounding heights containing the town.”

Address of Santa Anna on Resuming Hostilities After the Armistice Terminated:

The president provisional of the republic and commander in chief of the army to the nation

Countrymen-The enemy, availing himself of idle pretexts, has determined to commence hostilities upon your beautiful city. Presuming us to be dis-heartened and humiliated by the reverses of fortune, he expected that I should subscribe a treaty by which the territory of the republic would have been essentially reduced and the republic covered with shame and ignominy. Mexicans do not deserve a ....so ignominious, and having been called upon spontaneously to direct their destiness, I have felt it my duty to respond with loyalty to go signal a mark of confidence, preserving those precious rights which cannot be alienated, and thus affording an example of energy and firmness which are the glory of nations.

The enemy had proclaimed that they would propose to us a peace honorable for both nations, and it became our duty to listen to them, that their treachery might be made known. Their propositions and the sequel of the negotiations are to be published, so that the civilized world may see that we were ready to sacrifice all that our honor would permit us to sacrifice; and that on the other hand our enemies st up measureless pretensions, which would have destroyed the republic and converted it into a miserable colony of the United States. TO such audacity we could oppose nothing but our firmness and our valor.

Mexicans! You will find me, as ever, leading in your defence, striving to free you from a heavy yoke, and to preserve your altars from infamous violation, and your daughters and your wives from the extremity of insult. The enemy raises the sword to wound your noble fronts; do you draw it likewise to chastise the rancorous pride of the invader.

Mexicans! Forever live the independence of the country.
ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.
The Mexican papers are filled with articles written in the most earnest spirit. The following is a translation of the leader in the Diario del Gobierno after the battle of the King’s mill.

Questions for Scott, for Polk, for that part of the people of the United States in favor of the war, for all that nation and for the world.

What is the cause, what the impelling motive that the United States of America have brought pillage, desolation and death upon the Mexican republic?

What offences has this republic committed?

What reasonable or just aim does that government enterlain, to gain which it has adopted measures so barbarous and unworthy of Christian and civilized people?

Does it suppose that by such conduct, worthy of freebooters and savage, it can vindicate right which can only be legally asserted by means of pacific negotiations?

From the conduct pursued by the American Government, what can possibly ensue but a war at once interminable and of extermination, inasmuch as the Mexican republic is determined to disappear from the catalogue of nations, rather than consent to humiliation and disgrace?

From the state of Jalisco, the tone is to the same effect. The official proclamations, which were issued upon the receipt of the news of the battle of Churubusco, or San Angel as the Mexicans term it, breathe war to the knife. They must never lay down their arms so long as a single American pollutes the soil of the country; their remains must be consigned to the same earth in which repose the victims of Palo Alto, Resaca, Monterey, Augustura, Cerro Cordo and San Angel. Providence has reserved for Jalisco the honor of humiliating the American pride. Let us says the governor give the world occasion to say, “Jalisco was the cradle of the liberty of the Mexican republic, and the tomb of the conquerors of the north.” But in case the issue of the struggle should be unpropitious, it only remains for the Jaliscans to find a common grave with their enemies, and an admiring posterity will exclaim “Jalisco lost her independence, but linked her honor with her tomb.”

From Tamaulipas, too, we have addresses of the same character, encouraging the citizens to rally once more to the contest and make another desperate effort.

From no part of the country are we able to find any unwavering on the part of the Mexicans, no indications of a desire to treat upon the terms which have been offered.

A supplementary number of the Diario del Gobierno of the 10th alt., has an address of the Mexican people without any signature, but evidently partaking of an official character. It will be read of course as a Mexican production.

Mexicans! Among the European volunteers whom the American army has hired to kill us, there are many unfortunate men who are convinced of the injustice of this war, who profess the same Roman Catholic religion which we profess, but who being harassed by the misery which prevails in Europe from the want of employment and the failure of crops, have consented to enlist. Some of these men, abjuring their errors and following the noble impulses of their hearts, have passed over to our army to defend our just causes. From these, his excellency the president formed the foreign legion, known under the name of the company of St. Patrick. At La Angostura and at Churubusco they bore themselves with the highest intrepidity, and after the enemy had gained possession of this last point, which was only after its defenders had exhausted their last cartridges, they were made prisoners.

The generals of the American army, who cannot count upon their soldiers in a war so iniquitous save though the influence of acts of ferocity, were determined to shoot these Irishmen. Scarcely was this known of the city, before every breast was filled with horror at the thought. His excellency, the minister of relations, in a touching letter to the English consul, the estimable lady of her Britanic majesty’s minister, various private individuals, both Mexicans and foreigners, we ourselves, and even the ladies of families residing at Tacubaya, interceded for these brave men; and we expected that if they could not be pardoned, they would at least be spared capital punishment.
It would have been deemed base and repugnant in the laws of [. . . ] modern wars, offer the bloody spectacle of the execution of these men, which to defense of Churubusco; but they had no share whatever in the slaughter which was made the day before yesterday upon the heights of the King's mill. Well, then, will you believe it, my countrymen? This day, in cold blood, these Caribs, from an impulse of superstition, and after the manner of savages and as practiced in the days of Homer, have hung up these men as a holocaust- they have themselves said it- to the manes of the general or generals who there fell! And in what manner did they hand them?-Noosing them by the neck as they stood upon the ground, and so suspending them that they died " by inches," strangled by their own weight, the mode adopted being such that their horrible agony lasted more than one hour. A spectacle worthy of such men, or rather of demony escaped from hell! This they did with eighteen of these unhappy men, and among them the brave Captain Reilli, whose head they stuck upon a pike and planted at Churubusco. To six others, who proved that they had not volunteered but been impressed, they gave two hundred lashes each, and compelled them to dig the graves of their companion.

Mexicans: These are the same men who call us barbarians and say they come to civilize us: these are the men who have plundered the houses of the surrounding villages, who have stolen children from their families, who have slept in the niches devoted to the sacred dead, who have, with blasphemous revelry, clothed themselves in the ornaments of the altars, who have thrown upon the ground the body of Jesus Christ and have made themselves drunk in drinking out of the sacred vessels. Accursed may they be of all Christians, as they are of God!

Countrymen! The supreme government commanded its commissioners, as you have seen it already published, that they should inquire of their commissioners first of all, why they had brought war upon our republic with blood and fire? What injuries we have done to them that they should thus seek to revenge themselves? Their mode of concealing their confusion at not being able to reply to these inquiries and of satisfying their displeasure because we would not consent to an ignominious peace, has been to light up anew the flames of war, to send us from the King's mill day before yesterday our assassinated countrymen who had in no manner offended them, and to glut their diabolical range upon the defenseless men whom they had in their power.

Mexicans: The supreme government conjures us in the name of the honor of our race, in the name of our dignity as men and of God himself, that we should all unite by one unanimous and continued effort to revenge these great outrages, to yield never to dismay and to wage this war without truce and without relenting. May remorse seize upon every selfish or cowardly Mexican who cannot say to himself that he has fulfilled every duty as a public officer and a good citizen; who has not contributed by every means in his power towards the war-with his person, with the influence of his position, with a part of his fortune, with his labor, by maintaining a number of soldiers, by aiding every way those who fight, and who has not so employed the means which God has given him for his service and that of the country in which God has placed him, that His images shall not be cast down, nor His holy name blasphemed.

Mexico, September 10, 1846.

[MDT]
I suppose, Mr. President, that so far those of us who belong to congress were expected to take any part in the deliberations of this assembly, it was only looked at that we might express our opinions upon the present state of national affairs in the crisis, (I think somewhat of an imminent one,) to which we have arrived. I could have desired, sir, that some of my colleagues, of better health and more ability, had chosen to precede me in submitting remarks to the meeting; but as it is, sir, apparently called upon, I am here, ready to express my opinions, humble as they are, frankly on any subject and every subject that is interesting to the people of this commonwealth. There is nothing I wish to put forward; thank God, there is nothing I shrink from.

We are, in my opinion, in a most unnecessary and therefore most unjustifiable war. I hope we are near the close of it. I attend carefully and anxiously to every rumor and every breeze that brings to us any report that the effusion of blood, caused, in my judgment, by a rash and unjustifiable proceeding on the part of the government, may cease. In this state of public affairs, in this state of excitement of public feeling, which we know, upon this subject of war, pervades all classes and all ranks, I have first to say, sir, that any counseling which this body would receive from me, will not entrench upon the loyalty which we owe to the constitution of the country, and the obedience which we are bound to pay to the laws.

We are bound, sir, to consider the nature of the government under which we live. There must be in every government some supreme power, some ultimate will, from which there is no peaceable appeal. In mixed monarchies, like that of England, the sovereign will resides with the king and the parliament. In despotic governments it responds in the breast of the sovereign, as in Russia, Austria, and elsewhere. But with us, under our free republican and representative government, this public will, which we all agree must in the end prevail, unless from peace we resort to force, consists in the expressed opinion of the majority, ascertained according to the principles of the constitution. Within the limits prescribed by the constitution and pronounced agreeably to its forms, we must submit to this, or we give up all government and surrender ourselves to a state of anarchy. The law of majority, according to our forms, a majority ascertained in agreement with the principles of the constitution, is the law which you and I and all of us are bound to obey.

Sir, I should hardly advert to this, if I did not see afloat in the community, signs somewhat of a dangerous tendency. I agree that all powers may be so abused as to require resistance, whether it be the power of an autocrat, of a king and parliament, or of a majority; for all power in human hands may be so far abused, may make so flagrant a case as to render it necessary in the quorum of conscience to resist its demands. That is not the exercise of our political rights under the constitution of our country, and not in the exercise of our national rights against the constitution. Sir, there is not one of us here who has had the honor of bearing any office, high or low, in the United States government or in the state government, who has not sworn that he will support the constitution of the United States. There is no man ignorant of the fact that the constitution of the United States confers on congress the power of making war, and therefore there is no man so ignorant as not to know that when that power has been exercised according to the forms of the constitution, the will of congress expressed, is the law of the land; and it is binding upon every man’s conscience, in my humble opinion.

While in the course of debate we may oppose the action of congress, and I hope I have not been behind in that respect; but when those councils assume the form of law we may not disregard it. We are not called upon to supply any voluntary aid, succor or support; our duties as good citizens terminate in conformity to the law.

I think, therefore, that the present crisis call once not only for the most serious and energetic, but for the most constitutional and considerate action of all whigs over the whole country. There are those who think that violence is strength. That I hold to be a great mistake. Violent counsels are weak counsels; violent conduct is weak conduct, and violent language is always weak language. Our highest purpose, I may say, our boldest resolves, then, most recommend themselves to the acceptance of the community, when they are announced, certainly with clearness and force, but also with decorum and dignity, with a just respect for others. The great dramatist instructs those who would excel in the power of moving men, not always to be ready to tear a passion to rags and tatters, but in the torrent and whirlwind of their emotions to observe a just temporance- that sobriety of sentiment, that sobriety of language which proves men in earnest. Allow me to say it is not the noisiest water that are generally the deepest; no has it always been found that spirit which is most inclined to vapor when danger and disaster are at a distance, is the firmest in breasting them on their near approach.
With these remarks, sir, upon the tone and temper, which in my opinion, belongs to all constitutional whigs, here and elsewhere. I shall proceed to make a few remarks upon the topics of the day.

I have said, sir, that we are engaged in a war, in my opinion unnecessary, and therefore unjustifiable. I hold it to be a war unconstitutional in its origin-I hold it to be a war founded upon pretexts. Sir, the law of nations, embodying the general sense of mankind, instructs us that the motives of war are good or vicious. Where they are founded in conviction of necessity. In a sole desire to promote the public good and defend the national interest, it is a good motive. Where they are founded in any oblique purpose, or any unjust purpose, when war is waged for conquest, for acquisition, for gain, for renown, for the purpose of gratifying private ambition, or for party purposes the motive is vicious. An sir, they go further, and maintain this distinction, that there may be causes for a war which would justify the war so far as the opposity nation is concerned, and yet not furnish a good motive for a war, because good motives for a war, require always a good cause for a war, require something else. They require that the war should not be waged excepting from necessity, and for its utility to the interests of the country.

Now, sir, the law of nations instructs us that there are wars of pretext. The history of the world proves that there have been, and we are not without proof that there are, wars waged on pretext, that is, on pretenses where the cause assigned is not the true cause. That I believe, it to be a war of pretext, a war in which the true motive is not distinctly avowed, but in which pretenses, afterthoughts, evasions, and other methods are employed to put a case before the community which is not the true case.

I upon think sir there are three pretexts, all unfounded, upon which this war has been justified, in various modes and on various occasions. The president of the united States in his war message of May, 1846, puts the war upon the fact that the Mexican government have invaded the territory of the United States and shed American blood upon American soil. Now in my judgment, this is not the case. The president of the United States as early as January, 1846, to move beyond what Mexico acknowledged to be the boundary of Texas and place itself upon the Rio Grande. Arrived there, blood was shed upon the left bank of the Rio Grande. Was that American soil? That was soil claimed by the United States, but which congress had never recognized. It was territory claimed by Mexico itself, and was, at the time, in the actual possession of Mexico. The most favorable presentment, therefore is this: that we, having a claim to territory of which the other party was in possession, marched an army into it to take possession. Is not that war upon our side? I am of opinion, therefore, that the declaration in the message of the 11th of May 1846, upon which the act of congress, of the 13th, was based, the declaration that war existed “by the act of Mexico,” cannot be made out correctly by any evidence in point of fact. If so it was a pretext.

Then again, although this was the main point upon which the recognition of war was placed by the president, no sooner was the war declared, than other causes were resorted to. One was the refusal of the Mexican government to receive our minister, but where was that ever made a cause of war, and especially of Executive war? Because the government chooses not to have intercourse with us, it is for the president to say that that is just cause for war? It is no just cause of war, and even where it just and proper, it is no sudden emergency authorizing the executive to plunge the government into a war, and especially when congress is in session, ready, at any moment, to receive advices, and to act upon them. I look upon it, therefore, that is this ground is a pretext.

Well then, sir, what was the object of this war? So far as we can now scrutinize the motives of men, so far as we can look into the objects and designs of our rulers, what was the motive, the purpose, the impulses of the heart, which led to the measures that brought on this war? Why sir, I have a very poor opinion of my own sagacity, I do not pretend to see so far into such matters as other men, but to me it is as plain as a turnpike, as visible as the sun that now shines upon us.

Sir, an eminent person belonging to the party in administration, most eminent certainly of all that do belong to it, so eminent that it strikes one rather oddly that the administration should not belong to him rather than he to it, I mean Mr. Calhoun, one of the most practical politicians and debaters in this country—a gentleman that is not apt to concede away his case, declared, in the last session of congress that if there had been annexation of Texas, there would have been no war; and he went further and said that the immediate cause of war was the order for the march of our officers from Corpus Cristi to the Rio Grande.

But how did the war grow out of annexation? This is a case in which we must adopt proper distinctions and follow the light of ascertained facts. Mr. P. I am not now, nor at any time, an apologist for Mexico. I have a very poor opinion of her government in all its states, and at all times. I pity the people of Mexico from my heart, and I should pity them more if they appeared to me to have sense enough to understand the misery of their own position. I believe it to be very worst government in the world pretending to regard the rights of the people. This republic, which, by the way, is no republic at all, but a military anarchy, has been, I am sorry to say, for years and years the prey of every miserable military upstart that could find money enough to sustain a miserable army. I have no sympathy, therefore, with any form of government, or any of the men connected with the government of Mexico, for the last twenty years. And I go further; I say that in my judgment, that after the events of 1836, and the battle of San Jancinto, Mexico had no reason to regard Texas as one of her provinces. She had no power in Texas, but it was entirely at the disposition of those whose who lived in it. They made a government for themselves. This country acknowledged that government; and I think, in fairness, and honesty, we must admit that in 1840, 41, 42 and 43, Texas was an independent state among the states of the union. I do not admit, therefore, that it was any just ground of complaint on the part of Mexico, that the United States annexed Texas to themselves.

But then, sir, the fact was, that Mexico did take offense at the annexation of Texas. Long as Texas had been independent, notorious as was the fact, that the governments of Europe, as well as our own, had admitted the nationality of Texas, Mexico persisted in saying that it was her province, and she would not live on terms of amity with the United States, although she did not go to war. Her minister, Almonte, went home; she would not receive our minister, she remained gloomy and discontented; and that was the condition of things immediately after the annexation of Texas, and at the commencement of Mr. Polk’s administration.

I think that the object of the war was simply this: Mr. Polk became president of the United States in March, 1845. In June, 1845, Santa Anna was banished from Mexico to Cuba, on what is called half pay. HE seems to have been discontented with his situation at Cuba, and I am strongly suspicious that his half pay was never paid. Through 1845, the condition of things between us and Mexico was thus angry and unsatisfactory.

Not to trouble you, sir, with many dates, allow me to approach a period of some interest. It was in January, 1846, that the army of the United States, which, the summer preceding, had been ordered to take a position at Corpus Cristi, was now ordered to advance to the Rio Grande. The reason given by Mr. Buchanan, among other things, was, that it might be at hand, in case Mr. Slidell was rejected by Mexico, to act as congress should authorize. Now, there had been an opinion I believe very far back, from the time of Santa Anna’s release from imprisonment, that he was rather more favorable to the knowledge of Texan independence than other ministers in Mexico. At any rate, after his banishment by Paredes, there cam a sentiment, that he was more favorable to peace with the United states than the government then existing.

The president of the United States, sent his war message to congress on the 11th day of May, 1846, placing the existence of the war upon the fact that Mexico had invaded our territory and shed the blood of our people. On that very day he dispatched orders to Commodore Conner at Vera Cruz that if Mr. Santa Anna came that way, he should let him in. How came it into Mr. Polk’s head that Santa Anna was likely to come that way? At about the same time, the brother of our minister to Mexico, was dispatched to Cuba. It appears from the correspondence that the United States had an agent in Cuba.

It’s notorious that it was a matter of public conversation in Cuba, that Santa Anna was to return to Mexico upon the invitation of the president of the United States. Mark the coincidence of time and purpose. The president said in his communication at he opening of the session of the last congress, that he did not see any prospect of putting an end to our difficulties while Paredes was in power. What were our differences? Our chief difficulty was that Mexico would not assent to the annexation of Texas.

Now sir, I draw the attention of this meeting to a matter well enough known, but which, it seems to me, has not received the weight, the scrutiny, which it deserves. I again repeat that the war message of the 11th of May, placed the war upon the ground of actual invasion by Mexican troops, and the murder of American citizens upon American ground. Before the 1st of June a proclamation was drawn up, which on the 6th of June was dispatched to Gen. Taylor, to be by him distributed through all Mexico, and that purported to set forth to the people of Mexico the causes of the war.

I have it, and I hope the gentlemen of the press will publish it. What did that declaration say to them? Anything about invasion of American territory and murder of American troops? Now a word like it—not one word. The proclamation goes upon the old matter of the debts, and upon the refusal to receive Mr. Slidell as our minister, and upon a supposed declaration by Perades, which I cannot find anywhere, that war did actually exist. But the fact alleged in the war message of May 11th, and the fact enacted, if a fact can be enacted by legislative power, that war existed by Mexican invasion, is not alluded to, stated, or intimidated in the proclamation to the Mexican people. On the contrary, the proclamation, speaking from the mouth of Gen. Taylor, says, "we come as friends. WE have great causes of complaint, but we come to relieve you from the tyranny of your own government.
We come to put down that despotism which lords it over you." Well, what was that tyranny, that despotism? Why, it was Perades, a military chieftain, who had succeeded Santa Anna, another military chieftain, according to the order of Mexican succession for the last twenty years. IT is to put down those tyrants, and to put down those who would establish a monarchy over you.

Where was Santa Anna at this time? Why, he was in Cuba. At some time in June he left Cuba and made his way to Vera Cruz, and was there admitted by Com. Conner according to order. Before he reached Mexico he had sent his proclamation to be distributed there. He had, by a pronunciamento, set forth his purpose, to put down the tyrants and to prevent the establishment of a monarchy. Either Santa Anna borrowed from our executive or they from him, or it was the jumping judgment of two great geniuses, I don't know which; but the sentiments were the same, they were pronounced at the same time, and when General Taylor was invading Mexico at the North, Santa Anna's agents were possessed of his plan of pronouncement to the same effect, with the same ideas, and in the same language. This terminated in July or August in deposing Parades.

Now then, the president of the United States acknowledges, and he could not deny it, in his elaborate commentary on these transactions in the message of last year, that he did wish to overthrow the government of Paredes, and saw no other way of getting rid of our difficulty with Mexico. I confess, sir, that when I first read that message, I was struck with equal mortification and astonishment. We, of the United States, citizens living together under this constitution, an twenty millions of us, while we have a just cause of war against Mexico, cannot get rid of the difficulty without attempting to subvert the temporary existing government of that miserable nation!
Aside from the want of dignity, which it appeared to me almost covered the country with some degree of disgrace, in formatting a revolution in the country of an enemy, it appears to me to have been extremely weak, ill judged and inexpedient.

Santa Anna got to Mexico. Gen. Taylor distributed his proclamation. The president admits in the message of last December that he hoped for councils more peaceful to the United States from the authority of Santa Anna, than from the authority of Paredes. How far he has been disappointed the events will tell. How far this military chieftain entered into an agreement, I am not to say; that there was a general understanding is evident; whether he was unable or unwilling to carry out that understanding, or whether he found the sentiment of the nation too strong him, I leave you to judge; but the fact is, we find him, soon after, at the head of an army, and in direful and bloody conflicts with the army of the United States. He had put himself at the head of the Mexican armies; but instead of moving towards peace, he moved only towards war, and conflict and battle. Whatever else may be said of the circumstances, ordinary or extraordinary, that have attended the elevation of the fortunes of the president of the U. States, it will be admitted that at least in one respect his case is somewhat singular. He has seen armies of vast numbers and amount, fighting various battles in tented fields, and it so happens that he has had the selection of commanders on both sides!

The precise object of this war is proved by facts and circumstances, sufficient, I think to satisfy any reasonable man. The precise object of this was to establish a government in Mexico, by the restoration of Santa Anna, which should yield the question of Texan independence and give us no more trouble on that account. How grievously that calculation has been disappointed, let subsequent even's show. This then is the real ground and origin of the war, and all the rest, so far as appears to me, is more pretex; and I hope those whose business it is to spread information upon these important subjects will look at that proclamation of the 6th of May, will compare what the President said in his message of the 11th of May, and what congress enacted in conformity with that message, the hypothesis that war arose from invasion by the Mexican forces of our soil, and the murder of our citizens.

Sir, I have alluded to the declaration of Mr. Calhoun that if there had been no annexation of Texas, there would have been no war. I now choose to say sir, that I agree in your sentiment, expressed in your own forcible way in your place in the house of representatives, that the direct consequences of the act of iniquity in the annexation of Texas, is the war in which we are now engaged. I have endeavored to show that it was to avoid this consequence, to pacify Mexico, or subdue the spirit of resistance by changing her government, that these operations, military and diplomatic, were undertaken by the present government of the United States. Now sir, the proposition is too plain that this war grows out of annexation. MR. Calhoun is right. IF there had been no annexation, there would have been no war. Does any one suppose that we should have gone to war with Mexico, depopulated her, and exhausted her resources to collect our debts? Or that we should have gone to war with Mexico, because she did not choose to receive, either as a commissioner, or as an envoy extraordinary, Mr. Slidell? Would congress have declared a war upon any such pretences? Never. It did grow out of annexation, and as you see was not an unnatural consequence. But what is remarkable, sir, is that the grievence is one the part of Mexico and we make the war. She has the prominent complaint and we strike the first blow.

Sir, nothing in the history of a person, no more important than I am, can be of any great consequence to this great people. But it is of some consequence to myself, and it is among m consolations, that from the very first intimation of any design or desire to annex Texas to this country, I have opposed it with all my ability, in all places and at all times. It is now ten years, sir, since at a meeting of our political friends in New York, where that question was one upon which the opinions of those friends were a good deal divided, in which I received many admonitious not to commit myself, I did commit myself; and there it stands, and I am thankful for it. I was then, and I have been at all times since, down to the period when the bill had its last reading and my vote was against it, thoroughly, out and out, under all circumstances, against it. And my opposition was founded upon this ground: that I never would and never should, and I say now I never will and never shall, vote any further annexation to this country with a slave representation.

We hear a great deal, now-a-days about a new panacea, called the Wimot proviso, a very just sentiment but not a sentiment certainly to form any new party or sect of a party upon. For allow me to say that there is not a man in this assembly who does not hold to the sentiment of the Wilmot proviso as firmly as myself, or any other man in this assembly. It is not an opinion upon which Massachusetts whiges differ. Sir, I feel something of a political interest in this. I take the sentiment of the Wilmot proviso to be that there shall be no annexation of slave territory to this union. Did not I commit myself upon that in the year 1838, fully, entirely? And have I ever departed from it in the slightest degree? I must be permitted, sir, to say that I do not now consent that more recent discoverers should take out a patent for the discovery. I do not quite consent that they should undertake to appropriate to themselves al the benefit and honor of it. I deny the priority of their invention. Allow me to say sir, it is not their thunder.

Mr. President, even if new acquired territory should be free territory, I should deprecate any great extension of our dominions. I think we have a very large and ample domain. I think that thus far we have a sort of identity or similarity of character, that holds us together pretty well, from the Penobscot to the Gulf of Mexico. I do not know how far we can preserve that feeling of common country, if we extend it to California and for aught I know the south pole. I apprehend that in a republican government you must have a great similarity of character. It may not be so with despotic governments.

The Emperor of Russia may govern his European dominions by one code of laws and his Asiatic dominions by another code. They have no common acquaintance, no common bond of association. But in a republic, where the laws must all be similar, this cannot be. It does appear to me a very dangerous experiment to extend the territory of the United States over a new unknown tract of land, larger than the old thirteen, and run the chance of amalgamation. More enterprising spirits may choose to undertake it, but I hesitate. Who does not see the total derangement which it creates? Suppose ten states, or even five states, to be admitted; they will have one representative in each state, and two senators; and here come in ten new senators, (shall I say southern senators) with only five representatives. Does not every one see that that breaks up all the proportion, all the regularity connected with the government, and its perpetuity?

Sir, there are those who think that it is an act of great benevolence to extend our free institutions. I have hope that the principles of liberty as we have experienced them with so much advantage will spread over the world, but I am not sure that it is best for every body to receive our forms. Nor am I a desirous to impose our forms by force upon any people. Where they are fit for them they will receive them in some form; and until they are fit for them, depend upon it, you cannot make freemen out of persons unaccustomed to self government and not knowing in what true freedom consists.

I had the honor for a short time to be connected with the government of the United States and charged with the duty of protecting the commercial interests of the country. I felt that it was all important to the United States, if it could be done with propriety and without danger, to obtain from Mexico, a port upon the Pacific; to wit: the port of St. Francisco, either by session of the port itself, or to obtain power to resort there as a United States place. I looked for nothing but commercial arrangements and commercial advantage. I thought it a matter of some importance but it never entered into my imagination that to accomplish that end, useful so far it went, I should run the risk of attaching a large extent of territory to the United States, whichever in one or the other for man which states are recognized under the constitution.

Now sir, this is our position. Peace may come I hope to hear it before the dawn of another morning; but then I cannot conceal it from myself that peace itself may bring a crisis more dangerous than war. It may bring with it a season of controversy, strife and danger. Heaven knows what will be the terms of that peace. Nor can I see what course it will be the duty of honest men to take, when that treaty shall make its appearance. I hope to be directed to the performance of my duty when that important era shall arrive.

Sir, there has been a proposition, which received the vote of every Whig member in the senate last year, (every one but one certainty) to reject all territory with power to hold slaves. The party which calls itself the northern democracy, (and I may use the term as they have adopted it themselves) adopted the policy to admit territory, to maintain the war for territory, to acquire all we could and then let it in, relying upon the principle of the Wilmot proviso to keep out slavery. The southern portion of the party were for admitting territory. In one respect they agreed. They would let it in and have the contest for spoils after it was admitted. It should be settled afterwards whether it should be free or slave territory.

Allow me to say, sir, that I have not seen one intelligent man of the south who objects to the fair exercise of all the power of the north in preventing the further increase of slave representation in congress. I do not know the man of m. acquaintance who says to me that it is unreasonable in us, or that it is not to be expected from us, or that it may not be rightly performed by us. There is no one who can complain of the north for resisting the increase of slave representation, because it gives power to the minority in a manner inconsistent with the principles of our government. What is past, must stand; what is established must stand; and with the same firmness with which I shall resist every pain to augment the slave representation, or to bring the constitution into any hazards by attempting to extend our dominions, shall: I contend to allow existing rights to remain.

But there is one thing of which southern gentlemen do complain. They complain of this provision of the Wilmot proviso, "because," say they, "it is unequal. You of the north can settle it, because you can go without slaves. W of the south cannot settle it, because we have slaves. It established a derogatory distinction and tends to establish an inequality." Let us consider the force of this argument. I am always happy to meet southern gentlemen of character, honor, talents, and ability upon this question. How is it with the privilege which they now have of a representation desproportioned to ours? They admit this to be an inequality, and if new territory is admitted, open to slaves, is not that plainly an augmentation of that inequality?

Now I am no prophet, nor am I the son of a prophet; but if I was to prophecy, I will say here that the last subject upon which I should venture a prediction would be the course which our friends, called the southern democracy, will take upon this or any other subject. The prediction of the weather in the almanac will hit the truth just as well as I can. I hope that there are many men, and I believe there are, in the other party, that will help us. That is, when it comes to the vote, they will not vote to admit a state with slave representation. It seems to me that what occurred here at Worcester a few days ago, will shed a little light upon that subject. I do not understand that by that convention, any purpose of adhering to the Wilmot proviso was manifested. I understand, on the contrary, that the whole subject was scouted out of the deliberations of the assembly. And there are loco foci or democratic members in Maine, and New Hampshire. It is quite certain that they will depart from the present administration, and vote for the Wilmot proviso?

Sir, I can only say, that, in my judgment, we are to use the first, and the last, and every occasion which occurs, in maintaining our sentiments against the extension of the slave power. I speak of it now here, as in my seat in congress, as a political question—as a question for statesmen to discuss, and entertain, and act upon. I do not mean to say that the moral part of the question is less important, or not vastly more important, in other points of view; but I speak of it thus, because this is the only point of view in which I, officially, have any thing to do with it. I am aware, sir, that I am using too much of this sun light, and I hasten to end what I have to say by a few remarks.

If peace comes, it will bring with it some terms. This is a matter upon which all decision must be deferred until we can know what they are. But now suppose that no peace is made; that the armistice is broken off and the armies prepare for new combat. Our armies remain in the country or the city of Mexico, and that is the state of things when congress next assemble. It is natural to ask what shall be there done? I would not anticipate what the exigency of the case may suggest. My opinion is clear, perfectly clear. I hold the war-making power to be given by the constitution to congress. I believe that congress was surprised into the act of the 13th day of May, 1846. I believe that if the question had been put to congress before the march of the armies and their actual conflict, not ten voters could have been obtained in either house for the war with Mexico under the existing state of things.

The war exists. Suppose it to continue till the next meeting of congress. What is it the duty of a good citizen and a good whig to do? Well, I say for one, that I suppose it to be true that the next house of representatives in congress may be composed of a Whig majority. I think we have had tones of denunciation from the north and the south, from east to west, sufficient to insure us that result, although it will be a very great change. Suppose that to be the case. I say at once, unless the president of the United States shall make out a case, which shall show to congress that the war is prosecuted for no purpose of acquisition of dominion, for no purpose ot connected directly with the safety of this union, then they ought not to grant any further supplies. If we depart from that, if we says that on the propriety of a war, for on the necessity of a war, begun or to be begun, congress has no voice, no constitutional power, we obliterate the constitution.

What was done in the administration of Mr. Madison just before the close of the last war with England? He placed his terms for peace before congress; I will not advert to them, but they where such as were strongly calculated to create this disposition in congress; that upon these terms now offered, if Great Britain does not make peace, we will not vote to refuse supplies, but we will prosecute the war to the end. It so happened that Great Britain did make peace, and we were not called upon for further supplies. Certainly it is essential to the liberty of a representative government that the representative bodies which have the power and not only power to make war, should ......... cognizance over the objects for which war is prosecuted, and if they think that the war originated in the mischievous purpose which I have been discussing, it is their business, their sole duty to put an end to it. That is my judgment.

I have as much respect for distinguished military achievements, I hope, as any man need to have. I honor those who, being called upon by the course of professional duty, to bear arms in the cause of their country, perform that duty well. I would not see any of their laurels withered; but I am bound to say here, and even o them, that the solemn adjudication of the law of nations, and the sentiment of the world is, that a war waged for vicious motives tarnished even the lustre of arms, and darkens, sadly darkens, if it does not blot, what would otherwise be a bright and glorious page in national history.

I am sorry, sir, to perform what may have been expected of me on this occasion so imperfectly; but I say to the Whigs of Massachusetts, let us stand by our principles. There is hope, there is confidence, and there is trust, and we—everyone who honestly and sincerely does his duty as a good citizen. In regard to public questions, will assuredly save himself, and may help to save the country. It is no moment for shrinking or faltering. It is no moment for going to extremes on the right or on the left. Let us stand on our established principles and opinions. Let us maintain our allegiance to the constitution under which we live. Let us regard those great names
To the Whigs of the State of New York

Fellow Citizens: Hitherto when we have assembled in convention, there were well known and well recognized bounds for our country; but now that the spirit of conquest has been let loose, who can tell where is his country, whether on the Rio Grande, the Sierra Madre, the Rio Gila or the Gulf of California, or whether part of Spanish, much Indian, and some Negro, Santa Fean or Californian may not be as good as an American citizen as himself? Our flag is borne, with fixed bayonets to surround it, and unmuzzled grape shot to clear its way, in the conquering footsteps from the tierra caliente of Vera Cruz—by the base of the snowy peaks of Popocatepetl, to the eternal city of the Aztecs—and Mexicans of every color, and every breed, sprung from combining Moor and straight haired African, as well as from Castile and Leon, are made American citizens, or prepared for being made so by the gentle logic of red mounted artillery, thundering from the heights of Cerro Gordo to the bloody plains of Contreias and Churubusco. Wherever that flag is, being by fixed barriers, the landmarks of civil and religious liberty. Nothing can afford a more admirable illustration of the character of our institutions and the enlightened patriotism of our people.

"There is no feature in our new constitution which has created more serious apprehensions in intelligent minds, than that of the plan of an elective judiciary. But those apprehensions, so honestly entrained by many, seem to have been gradually distilled. It is believed that the people have shown themselves competent to the safe exercise of this delicate responsibility. We have seen our old courts displaced by new tribunals by a process so easy as to be scarcely perceptible, without the slightest shock to established interests, leaving all our rights of person and property in full and undisturbed security. It may be affirmed that our new judiciary possesses the confidence and respect of the community in as full a degree as the system, which it superseded. It now remains for us to lend our new constitution, which restores to the people the choice of that large class of administrative officers who have been therefore appointed through the intermediate agency of the executive or legislative department."

Adverting to the duties of the Whig party in the premises he next touched, but lightly, upon the condition of national affairs, which could not but command the attention of the delegates.

A resolution was then adopted directing the appointment, by the president, of a committee of two from each judicial district, to report an address and resolutions, and the convention adjourned till 2 p.m. On reassembling in the afternoon, Hamilton Fish was unanimously and by acclamation nominated for lieutenant governor.

The president then announced the committee on the address and resolutions as follows:

3rd district, Messrs. Tracy and Jones; 1st Greely and Brooks; 2nd Hasbrouck and McArdie; 4th Dodd and Clark; 5th Barber and Merriman; 6th Bill and ond; 7th Barber and Rose; 8th Cole and Hall.

The convention proceeded to an informal ballot or comptroller, which resulted as follows: Millard Fillmore 99, scattering 10, whereupon MR. Fillmore was unanimously nominated.

For secretary of state, Christopher Morgan received 67 votes, D.D. Spencer 46 and scattering 1, Mr. Morgan was then unanimously nominated.

For treasurer- Alvin Hunt 67, Epenetus Crosby12, and Levi Beardsley 1.
For attorney general—Ambrose L. Jordan had 67 votes, J.A. Spencer 26, scattering 9.

Mr. Hasbrouck and r. Greely read letters from Mr. Jordan declining a nomination, if tendered to him, but Mr. Patterson expressed his belief that under all the circumstances, Mr. Jordan would accept the nomination, and moved that he be unanimously nominated. This motion was adopted.

Mr. C. B. Stuart was then nominated state engineer by the following vote: For Stuart 72, John Lathrop 21, scattering 7.

For canal commissioners—Jacob Hinds, of Orleans, 76, Nelson J. Lewis 93, Charles Cook of Chemung, 62 who were then unanimously nominated. The principal opposing candidates were Thomas Clowes, Thomas Smith, Ebenezer Blackely, and Thomas Spence.

For inspectors of state prisons, John B. Gedney, of Westchester, Issac Comstock of Albany and David Spencer of Tompkins.

Mr. Brooks, from the committee appointed for that purpose, then reported the subjoined address, the reading of which was repeatedly interrupted by applause, and when concluded was unanimously with its stars and stripes, the emblem of our nationality, there our hearts are. But wo! Wo! To the men, we cry, who have dispatched it upon its mission of conquest, and what is yet worse, the conversion of a free into a slaveholding territory.

Fellow citizens—Disguise the Mexican War as sophistry may, the great truth cannot be put down nor lied down—that it exists because of the annexation of Texas, that from such a cause we predicted such a consequence would follow, and that but for that cause no war would have existed at all. Disguise its intents, purposes and consequences as sophistry may struggle to do, the further great truth cannot be hidden, that is main object is the conquest of a market for slaves, and that the flag our victorious legions may rally around, fight under and fall for, is to be desecrated from its holy character of liberty and emancipation into an errand of bondage and slavery. IN obedience to the laws, and in a due and faithful submission to the regularly constituted government of our constitution, we will rally by and defend our flag, on whatever soil or whatever sea it is unfurled- but before high Heaven we protest against the mission on which it is sent: and we demand its recall to the true and proper bounds of our country, as soon as in honor it can be brought home.

We protest, too, in the name of the rights of man and of liberty, against the further extension of slavery in North America. The curse which our mother country inflicted upon us, in spite of our fathers remonstrances, we demand shall never light the virgin soil of the North Pacific. We feel that it would be a horrible mockery for the columns of Anglo-Saxony immigration to be approaching, and looking down upon the dark benighted race of Asiatic despotism, with Africans enslaved under the banners that led their march, as "westward to the Star Empire takes its way." We have no desire to infringe upon any one of the compromises of the constitution. The constitution as it is, and the country as it is, for us.

The Whigs of the north are conservatives of the constitution, in its essence, and its every word in letter. The fell and mischievous results of abolitionism are no where better understood, or more contemned than in New York. But we will not pour out the blood of our countrymen, if we can help it, to turn a free into a slave soil. We will not spend from fifty to a hundred millions of dollars per year, to make a slave market for any portion of our countrymen. W e will never for such a purpose consent to run up an untold national debt, and saddle our posterity with fund managers, tax brokers, tax gatherers, laying an excise or an impost upon every thing they taste, touch, or live by. The Union as it is, the whole Union, and nothing but the Union we will stand by to the last- but no more territory is our watchword—Unless it be free.

Powerless as we are at present, the commander in chief of the army and navy, who created the war, alone having the power to initiate the treaty or take the steps that can end it, we cannot and we would not if we could withhold from our forces, in Mexico all necessary reinforcements and all our sympathy, but we hold up to the condemnation of mankind, to the reprehensions of a Christian world, and to the admonition of freedom every where in its struggles for constitutional liberty, this alarming unitarian power of our republic, that in spite of congress and in defiance of the popular will, thus starts and carries on a sanguinary war, if justifiable, yet unnecessary and uncalled for and in every way detrimental to the true glory and interest of our country.
the peaceful tents of Corpus Cristi and planted them frowning upon Matamoros, a populous Mexican city—no matter what millions of us humble citizens may think—can alone start a treaty, or alone recall a column of our troops now in a foreign country; and thus, as long as one man pleases, the mothers, the sisters, and the wives of all who have relatives in the heart of Mexico, must quiver and tremble in apprehension over every newspaper of the day; and we who deprecate his measures are reduced to the painful alternative of abandoning and sacrificing our brethren in their perils, or to giving to our civic chiefton (safe enough in the marble halls at Washington) the means of realizing vain and ambition dreams through the blood and sacrifice of his countrymen.

Now, fellow citizens of all parties, in vindication of these important principles, and in the time of such a war as this, is it not, your duty, one and all, to act in the forthcoming state election? The voice of New York is powerful in this Union, and when she speaks emphatically, that voice is significant, and makes the one man power tremble at Washington. We have striven faithfully to present good sound men, to personate our principles. WE feel sure such as we have presented will do justice to the state, and at the same time express to the country what think of the measures of the administration. Upon these measure and their consequences we have mainly dwelt, because they are the overruling topics of the day, and because New York will be presumed to approve or censure according to the tone in which she speaks, and the best way to speak our opinion is in an energetic and united support of the Whig ticket this day presented to the Whigs of the state.

Mr. Greely, from the committee, presented the following resolutions, which together with the address, were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That the whigs of New York have sufficiently proved, and need not reaffirm, their unchanging devotion to the cardinal principles of whig faith and action throughout the Union, among which are embraced the policy of fostering and encouraging the diversification of industrial pursuits, and the creation and extension of home markets, by wisely adjusting discriminating duties on the importation of foreign products. The creation and preservation by government of a sound and uniform currency alike for itself and the people; the promotion and prosecution of internal improvements; the studious cultivation of peace and good understanding with other nations; and in fine, whatsoever tends to diffuse morality, intelligence and prosperity among the whole people.

Resolved, That this convention recommend and approve a national Whig convention for nomination of candidates for president and vice president, and that we trust the Whig members of congress will seasonably designate the time and place of holding such convention.

Resolved, That while the Whig freemen of New York represented in this convention, will faithfully adhere to all the compromises of the constitution, and jealously maintain all the reserved rights of the states, they declare, since the crisis has arrived when the question must be met—their uncompromising hostility to the extension of slavery into territory now fee, or which day be thereafter acquired by any action of the government of our Union.

A resolution pledging unanimous support to the nominees of the convention, and another authorizing their president to appoint a state central committee, were unanimously adopted.

Speeches were made by Mr. Morgan and Mr. Robinson,—and after the usual vote of thanks, the convention adjourned. [MDT]

Correspondence in Relation to the Propostitions Submitted to the Consideration of the Mexican Government by Mr. Trist

The most excellent president has considered your note of this morning, in which you decline the commission which he has been pleased to confer upon you to treat with the commissioner of the United States, under the basis and instructions which accompanied my communication of yesterday. After the conference which he has had with yourselves and with the council of ministers, he has resolved that the instructions may be somewhat amplified, with the understanding that you are to conform to them as far as may be possible, adding some modifications which the circumstances of the country may demand, and which may comprise points to which the discussion may give rise. In a word, the supreme government have chosen you, as you have many times been selected by the nation, on account of the knowledge it possesses of your distinction and patriotism, and he places in your hands the honor and the interests of our country.

God and liberty!

NNR 73.110-73.111 16 OCT 1847 account of the revolution undertaken by settlers in California before the acts of United States officers

The revolution in California

So much dispute has taken place amongst the United States officers, both military and naval, in relation to the credit of achieving the conquest or effecting a revolution in California, that the prior claims of humbler men have been kept out of view. We had iniminations repeatedly and from different directions of the progress of a revolution in California, before either of our officers undertook officially to intermeddle. In our tile of the Polynesian published at the Sandwich Islands, during the summer of 1846, we found a statement that a revolution had been effected in California, at the head of which was William B. Ide, before any United States agents had acted, and that subsequently Mr. I and the revolutionists had agreed to recognize the United States officers, and to merge their revolution into the national project. We have been looking since with no little curiously for further accounts of this primary movement. The first that reaches us is the following interesting details.

From the Sangamo (Ill.) Journal.

There has not yet been published in the states as connected and succinct account of the late revolution in California. The acts of American Officers, have been sufficiently emblazoned; but the deeds of those gallant men who first raised the standard of freedom, in opposition to a tyrannical and cowardly government in California, have scarcely ever been heard of in the United States.

There has been put into our hands within a few days, a manuscript report with an appendix, by a committee of citizens of California, giving a history of the origin, and completion of the revolution in that late department of Mexico. It differs materially from the detached and disjointed accounts already published; and for that reason we regret that we cannot, at this time publish it at full length. Justice, however, to all parties concerned, requires its publication, and that copies of it should go into the hands of our public functionaries- that they may be able to value the services, and appreciate the worth and character of those men, who, alone, unaided, accomplished the revolution, and had taken all the incipient measures to establish a free government in California, before there was any active interference of the part of the United States' officers and the forces under their command. We shall give a brief summary of the contents of this report:

The American and other foreign portion of the people of Upper California. Learned in May, 1846, that the government had determined upon their expulsion from the country, and were making preparations to seize or kill all foreigners, and send such as should be made prisoners to the city of Mexico. A large body of horses were collected and some five or six hundred were ordered under arms by General Castro for that purpose. Information was received by Mr. W.B. Ide, living on the Sacramento, on the 8th of June, by letter, brought by an Indian runner, that 200 mounted Mexicans were on their march up the Sacramento river, with the design of destroying the crops, burning the houses, and driving off the cattle belonging to the foreigners. Mr. Ide immediately visited the settlements on the Sacramento, and finding most of the men of the valley with Captain Fremont, repaired to his camp. He there conversed with Captain Fremont on the subject of the revolution, who advised immediate organization and resistance on the part of the foreigners; but declined any action on his part or that of the men under his command. Captain Fremont informed him that he then expected to leave for the States in two weeks. In the meantime, a party of Americans had gone in pursuit of some Mexicans, who were collecting horses, had taken them prisoners, and secured 200 of their animals-which were to have been mounted by Mexican soldiers, and employed in expelling the foreigners, as well as Capt. Fremont from the country. It was quite apparent, that further, and more decisive action was necessary to secure the lives and property of the immigrants; and it was determined to seize the fort of Sonoma, where many of the government officers were quartered, and munitions of war were stored. A party was raised and upon the 14th June, arrived at, and seized Sonoma by surprise, and without resistance; and directly thereafter, William B. Ide was elected commander of the party. Dr. Semple immediately called a meeting, with the view of taking some action for forming a provisional government. The prisoners were sent to the Sacramento, and placed under the protection of Captain Fremont, and the property of the fort secured, and a garrison established for its further protection. Captain Ide was empowered by the troops to provide provisions for their subsistence, and to draw orders, in behalf of the republic, which were to be thereafter paid. Berryessa, the Mexican alcalde, was sent for, dismissed from that office, and reappointed to the same by the new government. Berryessa pledged himself that the Mexican population of the district of Sonoma, should not interfere in the revolution. Some further measures were adopted—limiting duties on foreign importations to one fourth of the existing rates. Horace Saunders was appointed commissionary. A national flag was agreed upon—its base a brown stripe, next above a wide stripe of green, cut so as to represent growing Tula; the upper part white, to represent the clear horizon, on the end of the flag staff, a rising star, and in the brown stripe the words in capitals, "California Republic." Capt. Ide was made captain general; measures were taken to secure public and private property; and in case private property was used by the government, to adopt measures for compensating the owners therefor, &c, &c. The preparation of the national flag was committed to Mr. Wm. L. Todd, which, when completed, was raised under a discharge of cannon, with other appropriate ceremonies.

The general in chief on the 16th, dispatched Mr. Todd on a mission to Capt. Montgomery of the U.S. ship Portsmouth, for the purpose of obtaining a quantity of powder for the use of the garrison. He declined furnishing it, on the ground that so far as he knew the United States were at peace with the Mexican government. AT the same time, measures were adopted by Gen. Ide in relation to the national domain-making arrangements for establishing a land office, surveying the country, and reserving to those who served the state "ranchos" of some leagues in extent.

In the evening Mr. Todd returned, accompanied by Lieut. Mesroon, of the Portsmouth; who stated that Capt. Montgomery was in expectation of important news from Mexico, and that in the event of war, he would place all the resources of his ship and half of his men under General Ide's command. The lieutenant visited the Mexican population, who expressed themselves satisfied with the change in government, and then returned to his ship. A proclamation by the general announcing the objects of the revolution, was forthwith prepared and sent into circulation. Mr. Fowler and Thomas Cowey, were sent for a supply of powder, about thirty-five miles northwest; and taken prisoners and inhumanely murdered by the Mexicans by cutting their flesh from them while alive. ON the 19th an express arrived from Captain Fremont, with a letter which he wished sent to a man living on the coast, sixty miles distant. Mr. Todd was dispatched with the letter—was taken prisoner—but subsequently escaped.

On the 21st, Capt. Grisby returned from the Sacramento Valley, and was elected captain of the 1st company of riflemen, and the fort placed under command. Lieut. L. H. Ford was dispatched in pursuit of a company of Mexicans, and found them; they proved to be two hundred in number; gave then a fight, killed eight and wounded thirteen; after which they fled. This victory gave a decided character to the revolution, and convinced the Spaniards that it was not prudent to attempt the capture of any more prisoners.

On the 25th of June, Capt. Fremont and the men under his command arrived at Sonoma, and were received with joy by the garrison, which was composed of about one hundred men, exclusive of Capt. F's command, and of some twenty, who were absent on other duty. In the mean time as report said, Gen Castro was busy in crossing men, from the other side of the bay, to San Solito. Capt. Fremont invited Lieut. Ford to accompany him, with the same men he had commanded in the engagement before spoken of, in an expedition against Jose Castro. "Three or four days were spent in endeavoring to bring the Mexicans to an engagement, but without success. Castro had succeeded in landing about 200 en on the north side of the bay, and, finding the ground untenable, was desirous of diverting Capt. Fremont from his object of pursuit, while his men with papers, calculated to deceive Captain Fremont into the idea that Sonoma was, on a certain time, to be attached by a large force and ordered them to discover themselves to his command. The stratagem had the desired effect, although the spics lost their lives. Captain F. repaired to Sonoma with all possible despatch, where he arrived at the early dawn of day, and was pleased to find his friends still in the possession of the post, and at the guns, with lighted matches in their hands. Captain F's courier had not arrived to inform of his coming, and the two long 18 pounders loaded with grape and canister, were brought to bear directly upon the head of his column. At the same instant, by a sudden involvement to the left in order to cover his men by a block of buildings, he was recognized by the commander of the republican forces. Some little excitement prevailed for a moment, when Capt. F. and his men were distinctly seen, each at the full speed of his horse, in full charge, with rifles erect. They were immediately at the post. After partaking of refreshments, Capt F. and his party returned in pursuit of Castro, and arrived at the bay just in time to see that the last of Castro's men had reembarked with all their baggage.

Castro took quarters at Santa Clara, from whence he issued two proclamations—one was addressed to the foreigners, promising protection to such as remained neutral; the other informed his fellow citizens and adherents of the true religion that the low policy of the agents of the U.S. had gathered up a company of adventurers, who regarded less of the rights of men, had invaded the country, surprising and taking prisoners the military forces of Sonoma; and their religion and independence, the true religion professed by their fathers, obliged both him and then, if necessary, for sacrifice their lives for their country.

The friends of the revolution in the meantime were assembling at Sonoma; whither Capt. Fremont returned on the 3rd July. The fourth was celebrated by reading the Declaration of Independence of the thirteen states, firing of cannon, &c.

On the morning of the 6th, the companies were formed, and marched into the large hall. The men, were called to order by Gen. Ide. There were one hundred and eighty men present, exclusive of Capt. F's command.

Capt. Fremont addressed the troops. HE said that he had visited this country in accordance with per mission previously obtained from the government of California; and, while he was quietly refreshing and resting his men from the long journey which he had taken across the mountains, preparatory to his return to the States, Jose Castro had taken the opportunity to heap upon him the most outrageous epithets and slanderous calumny; and also threatened and menaced him by sending an armed force against him, all without the slightest degree of provocation; that he had determined to pursue and take said Jose Castro, whom he considered but an usurper in California, being unauthorized by the government of Mexico. HE further said he would make a proposition to the men then before him, that although he could not, and would not, intermeddle in the internal affairs of California, yet, if the men present would pledge themselves to abstain from all acts of violence against peaceful families, and to obey afforders of offices of their own choice, in their endeavors to effect the declared purposes of the revolution, he would not only assist them in the internal affairs of California, yet, if the men present would pledge themselves to abstain from all acts of violence against peaceful families, and to obey afforders of offices of their own choice, in their endeavors to effect the declared purposes of the revolution, he would not only assist them by his advice, but that he would volunteer his whole force against Castro, and that he would stand by them at least until Castro shall have been subdued. HE concepted his remarks by saying: IF there has then present, am who was not yet determined to carry on the revolt in an honorable and preserving manner, even at he cost of his life and property, he would advise them to make his peace with Castro as soon as possible and flee to the mountains.

Mr. Ide replied, and said-He was unwilling to interrupt that silent, attentive and considerative respect, which was so justly due to their friend who had just closed his propositions and remark; yet he would like to be permitted to express his opinion, that there was not a man present who had not already freely volunteered his life, his property, and his reputation in an honorable support of the revolution; and that he verily believed there was not a man who would shrink in the least possible degree from the responsibilities he had so honorably assumed. Mr. Ide concluded his remarks by urging the signing of an appropriate pledge.

A pledge, conforming to Capt. Fremont's views, was prepared and signed by the volunteers; they were afterwards organized into three companies under Captains Grigsby, Ford and Swift, leaving a small artillery company to take charge of the fort. These three companies with Captain Fremont's company, concentrated at Sutter's fort on the 10th and made preparations for entering upon an active campaign.

On the 10th an express was received from Yerba Buena, announcing the raising of the United States flag there, the war between Mexico and the U.S. and the capture of Vera Cruz. The events caused a general and heart felt rejoicing. A small party had been sent to Yerba Buena, captured the place, some cannon, military stores and prisoners. News was also received that San Rafel and other places east of the Bay of San Francisco were in possession of the revolutionists. Near Santa Clara, a considerable party of Americans had assembled expecting the arrival of assistance from Sonoma, being encour aged by the promise of an express from that place on his way to Monterey, of such assistance. In the meantime, Castro was strengthening his position in Santa Clara—endeavoring to collect men and provisions. On the 5th July, he evacuated that place, and took post at St. John’s, leaving the cannon and other property to fall into the hands of the revolutionists.

On the 11th, the flag of the U.S. was raised on the right of the California troops; Capt. Fremont’s company occupying the extreme right, and on the 12th, the army marched for St. John’s; small parties having been detached to other points, to gather in and concentrate the forces; on reaching that fort, Castro had fled, leaving all is cannon and supplies. The army pushed on, gathering strength as it proceeded until it reached Monterey in triumph, when the full success of the revolution was consumated.

From a Correspondent in California

Since the disasters which have befallen the company of emigrants in the mountains of California last winter, we have felt little disposition, by any act of our own, to encourage emigration to that region. We did what we could to induce the Donner family to change their destination from California to Oregon; but Hastings Journal had so inflated their view of the country, that they could not forgo their determination to visit it. Ut we apprehend no further rush of emigration to California for the present.

In the following extract from our correspondent’s communication, he presents a comparison of the advantages of Oregon and California to emigrants. If we were to remark at all upon the claim he assumes for California, we should say, that according to his own showing, settlements must be sparse—families must live distant from their friends—and although they might have thousands upon thousands of cattle—might be rich as the writer fancies they will be still, they can enjoy but few of those advantages which give to life its zest. IN Oregon there is a settled government, dense population, and more industrial and moral people—and if the inhabitants can put up with its advantages and disadvantages—if they will, for the sake of land and better health—got to the west, by all means we would say, go to Oregon. But probably, in the aggregate, it would be better for them if there had been an impassable wall in the dividing ridge of the Rocky mountains that the present fields of sage. But this Anglo-Saxon race will be on the motion—it is natural to them—and we have no idat that even the Pacific will be barrier to their migration. But as emigration to Japan and Kaschatka will e after our time, we shall give ourselves no great deal or trouble on that account.

I cannot say which is preferable, Oregon or California. I have seen may men who have lived in Oregon. If I may judge between the concurring and dissenting testimony of others, my judgment is that the principal difference in the two is that Oregon now has the most salutary government; society more congenial tot he happiness of Americans; it is better provided with mills, stores, mechanic, and has timber more convenient for fence, building, etc, is extremely wet, for six or seven months; ground takes bery hard; cannot plow until after the rains set in, and then it is very wet and muddy plowing; yields an unfailing crop of wheat when sowed in due time; streams very rapid, unfit for navigation can be improved by canals; no mistake about its capacity to fatten cattle the whole year around, even east of the mountains; regulations prevent a man from owning more than one section of land, the hills produce more grass to the acre that the hills in California; the country is in a measure destitute of cattle; plenty of good land yet for emigrants; dampness of the season produces rheomnants, and consumptions, some argue on the river—generally healthy.

The California hills and mountains on the coast from 50 to 150 miles, produce spontaneously grass equal tot he best land in Oregon, oats equal to those cultivated in Illionois, and every vegetable cultivated in the eastern states can be grown with success in the valleys and on the hills lying on the coast of California. Late sown wheat is sometimes affected by the rust, but is never winter killed. Wheat is generally sown in Feb and March. The rivers of California are navigable to the mountain, three to 400 miles. The side streams, like those of Oregon are good mill streams. Land is generally granted by government in farms of 20,000 to 15000 acres. A league is 4938. These ranches are not sold, but are given by the government and are entailed to he donee’s heirs. The rainy season commences in Nov. with occasional showers or rainy days, increasing in the quantity of rain till the middle of Jan. when the showers are lighter and farther between until June and July. The winters are pleasant—never saw the first drop of water frozen where the air could circulate about it. Have not seen the mercury lower than 38 degrees—usually from 44 to 62 in Dec, Jan, and Feb; IN March, April and May from 58-78. The warmest days are 60 at sun rise, and 80 fat 2 o’clock P.M. I prefer California to Oregon, because I can easily obtain 50000 acres of first rate land, that will feed 20000 head of cattle, with no other trouble than to send an Indian to gather in those that range furthest off once a week.

From the Illinois Journal

The revolution in California. We conclude our extracts from the report in relation to the revolution, sent to us by a committee of citizens in California:

Our notice of the revolution left the revolutionary forces in Monterey. Mr. Ide was everywhere received as the governor of California. Commodore Sloat said, if "California, should be hereafter released by the U.S., it should be restored to Gen. Ide as it was the only government he had found in California."

Thus was the whole of California, north and east of Monterey, conquered by the American emigrants of that country, embracing a tract of country of more than five hundred miles in extent on the coast of California, St. Francisco Bay, the valleys of the rivers San Joaquin, Sacramento and the Pueblo, comprising the most valuable portions of the country and also they were in possession of a vast amount of cannon and other public property. Castro was making his way for Mexico, and Com. Stockton took the Californian forces on board the ships with the view to intercept him: but the expedition failed, and Castro escaped. The forces returned to the Pueblo and were divided into small parties with the view of making prisoners of staggling parties of the enemy, on the 1st of Sept., it was not known that there was a man in arms against liberty in California and the country, by proclamation of Com. Stockton, was declared to be in a state of quietable and peace. All those who had not volunteered in the service of the U.S., returned to their homes. Com. Stockton called upon the inhabitants, to elect their civil magistrates according to the custom of the country.

On the 31st October, newd arrived of the rising of the Mexicans at Pueblo. An effort was made to procure the men who had belonged to Capt. Grigsby's battalion to volunteer for the service. It did not succeed. The men thought in the first campaign they had not been treated fairly. After various negotiations and pledges on the part of Com. Stockton, the battalion enlisted for 6 months. Mr. Ide was one of the volunteers; but the commodore required him to return to Sonoma, to look after the general interests of the government in that quarter. The battalion served faithfully there period of enlistment, at great personal sacrifice and suffering almost incredible privations. Their crops were left to rot in the fields. Their services and sacrifices were indeed great, and their country should remunerate them.

"We have labored to extend the influence of those principles which are the basis of American liberty, and we hope that our brethren, who cannot appreciate the excellent worth of that security which they enjoy in its fullness, while reclining in the quietude of their dwellings, will enquire whether the people of the U.S. will so far forget the perils and glory of their fathers, as not to reward the patriots who fought under the independence flag of the "Bear and the Star", by assuming and paying their prudent expenses; by awarding to those, who solemnly laid their lives and all upon the altar of liberty, their stipulated land premium of one league and, also, on their behalf, in remembrance of their; patriotic virtues, to grant to California a soil worthy the generosity of the American people, for the support of education, that the "Bear Men" may not always be held in derision by those proud Spaniards, who still seek to accomplish their ....."

NRR 73.112 16 OCT 1847 October 16, 1847 yellow fever

DEATHS—Yellow fever at N. O., there occurred only 7 deaths by yellow fever during the 24 hours ending 25th September-26th five deaths by the fever, on the 27th twelve, the 28th ten.

On the 4th 22 deaths of which 9 by the fever. On the 5th only 3 deaths by the fever. Total number of deaths during the week ending the 4th 145, of which 58 were by yellow fever.

The yellow fever was on the increase at Mobile on the 4th inst., and the papers of that city warn absentees not to return until a good frost has driven the epidemic entirely away.

The Mobile Register of the 2d. instant says that the yellow fever us fast disappearing from that city.

At Boston, during the month of Sept. 1846, 336; Sept. 1847, 504. the number of deaths for the 9 first months of 1847 exceed those of the same months of 1846 by 525.

At Baltimore, last week 72, of which 35 were under two years-12 were free colored, 5 slaves.

At N. York, during the week ending 2d. instant., 289, of which 37 were of consumption.

Surgeon McGinnis, of the 14th infantry, died at Vera Cruz on the 1st of September of vomito.

At Tampico, eight deaths in the US hospital from the 1st to 30th August. Letter received at New Orleans dated Sept. 16th says:

"The town, is very sickly. Yellow fever abounds here-most of the deaths that occur are from that dreadful disease. The fact is, there is not other kind of sickness known here, at present, but yellow fever, and no matter what a man dies of, it is put down yellow jack."

E.H. Lawrence, esq. Of N.Y. has collected from merchants and other in that city $3,151 in aid of the Howard Association of Louisiana for the relief of indigent sick.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Power, Roman Catholic Bishop of Toronto, Canada West, died in that city on the morning of the 1st inst. His disease was typhus fever, contracted during his ministration among the sick and dying immigrants. The Bishop was about fort two years of age; he was native of Halifax, Nova Scotia. [KAS]

NRR 73.113, Col. 3 Oct. 16, 1847 Forces Under Gen. Winfield Scott

Forces under Gen. Scott-Mr. Kendall of the N. Orleans Picayyune who was wounded in the last engagement before the city of Mexico, in a letter from that city, dated Sept. 20th says:

Do the people of the United States known the real force which has achieved the recent glorious triumphs here, in the valley of this proud republic? I have not seen the paper, but I have been told that a recent number of the Union states that when Gen. Scott would reach the vicinity of Mexico his army would be 22,000 effective men. If such a statement has been made, one more false or ungenerous could not have been promulgated. Gen. Scott arrived on this side the mountains with a fraction over 10,000 men, of the mountains with a fraction over 10,000 men, of which number at least 4,000 were new recruits.-Of this force, so insignificant when compared with the magnitude of the enterprise, at least 1,000 were on the sick list before a blow was struck. With a disposable army, then, of 9,000—not a man more—the bold attempt was made to reduce a popular and well fortified city, and, after a succession of hard fought battles, the result is known. The 12,00 paper men, then, manufactured at Washington, must remain where they have been during all the recent struggles—either unenlisted, in hospitals, in camp, or in transitu—and not detract from such merit as has been gained by the 10,00 true men who have borne the battle’s brunt and won such laurels for their country. To them all honor and credit is due; and I will procure the muster-roll of every regiment that passed the Vente de Cordova, if it should be necessary to prove my statement as to their actual number. Territorial Extension

From the Baltimore American

There are indications, of some significance, that the idea of occupying the whole of Mexico, with a view to its incorporation into the body of this republic, is entertained in high official quarters. The thing is intimated, with more or less distinctness, in letters from Washington; it is said that the president and his cabinet are, in fact, discussing the subject at this time; and that Mr. Walker is known to favor the plan of wholesale occupancy and annexation.

The incredulity which, as we must suppose, generally prevails as to the reality of a serious design of this sort, may be somewhat shaken, if one will consider the probable sequence of events in connection with the further prosecution of the war, as it is henceforth to be waged. It is given out that we are to pour fresh troops into Mexico; that the commanding points everywhere are to be put down. In short we hear now not of “conquering a peace,” if the reader will pardon the use of that affected jargon—but of subjugation. Mexico is to be conquered.

What is the end? Our armies are not now to chase a flying government, to catch it first and make it negotiate afterwards. We are to trust no more to the infatuation of Mexican councils—to the duplicity of Mexican truces. What must follow from this but an armed occupancy of the whole territory of Mexico—an armed occupancy, with the enforcement of military government, bringing in its train confiscation of property and the banishment or destruction of malcontents. Once held in this way, and governed in this way, the tenacity of the Anglo-Saxon grasp upon a most beautiful and productive region might not be easily relaxed. Consider too, how desirable would be these military governorships in the provinces of Mexico, and what a vast amount of patronage the disposal of them would concentrate in the hands of the executive.

A war of indefinite duration may lead to such a consummation as we have indicated—if, indeed, the American people are prepared to admit this idea of conquest and annexation. The mind is startled at the contemplation of it. To the apprehension of many the trumpet call which should summon the invading host of our armed countrymen to this crusade, would sound like the signal of the Union's dissolution.

Nevertheless, to the imagination of multitudes the picture will be made attractive; and to daring spirits, fond of adventure, of enterprise and of danger, a scene may be opened more alluring than that which drew the followers of Cortez through blood and battles to the plunder of Mexican treasures. The reader will observe, in the following extract from the New York Sun, a specimen of those inducements, which in various quarters, are now held out to the American people, to excite in them the last of spoil and conquest. The Sun copies from the Washington Union a glowing description of Mexico, and adds:

Though late in the season, we are happy to welcome the government organ to share in the administration of a beautiful country, which we expressed five months ago, when the freshest flowers were blooming over the Mexican hills and vallies. God has not made a more magnificent land than Mexico. It is a paradise blessed with every variety of climate, every capacity of soil, and almost every species of fruit and flower on the face of the earth. Perpetual summer or perpetual winter, or if you choose, a mid-way between the extremes is found here.

The Cactus and Lily, the Rose and Agave, and the rich odor of the golden orange greet you in Mexico. And if you look beyond her Sierras and vine covered valleys—if you look beyond her beauty to her wealth, behold the cotton, wheat, maize, indigo and cochineal fields, a source of wealth inexhaustible. Look, too, at her forests of mahogany, rose, zebra, and satin woods—at her dye woods richer than the treasures of India. Or if the Union will penetrate still farther, let it look down into those mines of Potosi, Zacatecas and Durango. Look at the gold and silver glittering there in masses that wait for the pick of the saxon.

Look at the gold and silver, and say if this Mexico is not a rich, as well as a beautiful country. Cortez carried away ship loads of gold from the Aztecs, and England is carrying ship loads from the Mexican, still thousands of mines groan with their golden burden. Mexico is truly a magnificent country, over and under the soil bursting with everything the heart can desire. We have seen this for years, and the Union now sees it. Four years ago, too, we saw and urged the advantages of a ship canal or railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and five months ago we saw and urged the necessity of occupying that beautiful country of Mexico.

The Union now sees and urges all this. Better late than never, we welcome the Union and the whole press of the Union to share our admiration. Let them repeat it until it becomes a common theme, and we shall soon see the Aztec and American Eagle clasping wings, and our Yankee boys swapping nicknacks with Americanized Mexican Rancheros for gold. NRR 73.114 Oct. 23, 1847 Death of Lt. Twiggs

LIEUT. GEO. D. TWIGGS, U.S.A.
Letter addressed to his mourning mother dated- "Jalapa, Mexico, August 22d. 1847.

My Dear madam: it is my painful duty to inform you of the death of your son, Lieutenant George D. Twiggs, who was killed at the battle of the national bridges on the 12th instant. I had the honor to command a battery, and while returning from the bridge where my junior lieutenant had been mortally wounded, I met your son, who, on being informed of my situation, volunteered at assist me. While engaged in drawing one of the pieces up the hill under a very heavy fire, I turned to address a direction to him; he replied "Yes," in the same breath exclaiming, "Oh my God! Same me!" at the same time, before I could catch him, falling to the ground. I caused him to be laid beside the road, and as soon as the piece was carried up the hill I descended myself to bring him up, but alas! He was dead-shot through the body. A cross, a miniature, and prayer book were found in his breast. Permit me, madam, to sympathize with you, most sincerely in the loss of so esteemed a son. Never has it been my good fortune to meet gentlemen possessed of so many good qualities of heart and mind. To every accomplishment which beautifies and adorns man's noblest character, was added a bravery and high souled chivalry unequalled. He was a noble scion of the noble stock from which he sprung. It may in some manner assuage the grief of a soldier's mother, to know that her son died nobly fighting for his country.- Again, madam, permit me to tender my sincerest sympathies, and remain, very truly, your most obedient servant.

HENRY B. SEARS,
Lt. 2d artillery.

NRR 73.115 23 OCT 1847 letter describing the expedition of the Baltimore battalion from Veracruz

Extract of a letter from one of the "Baltimore battalion dated, "Puente Nacionel, 15th September, 1847.

"On the 6th, we left Vera Cruz, with five companies of our battalion, one company of the 11th and one of the 12th infantry; two pieces of artillery and about one hundred mounted men, under Colonel Hughes, with nothing but four days ration. We reached Santa Fe in the middle of the first day, and reached the bridge of San Juan that night, where we bivouacked in a torrent of rain, without a tent to cover us.

"About 5 p.m., the next day, we reached the celebrated pass, called "The Robber's den," upon the heights around which, the enemy were seen in large numbers. But we crossed the bridge and entered the town without molestation. As we started next morning, just as the rearguard left the town, several shots were fired at us, without effect, and a few shots we returned made them cease. On this day's march the heat was so intense, that many of the men gave out, and we had determined to halt, when we perceived the heights covered with the enemy, who commenced firing. We advanced upon them and they fled, and we then encamped upon the heights, about two miles from this place. The next day, the 9th, we started and soon saw the fort and the men's bands above the ramparts. We planted our guns within 6 hundred yards of the fort, but soon found them too high for our artillery. So we determined to carry the fort by the bayonet. Col. Hughes then ordered Major Kenly to turn to the left of the hill and take the enemy in the reverse. He took Barry’s, Dolan’s, and Brown’s companies, with 50 dismounted dragoons; and having thrown off jackets, knapsacks and all but cartridge boxes and canteens, we started to climb the hill. After three hours of great physical effort, climbing up the precipices by holding on to the roots of trees and hanging vines, we reached the crest. Here we breathed a little, and dashed into the fort. But the enemy, who had perceived us, had fled, and three cheers announced to those below our possession of the place.”  [MDT]

NRR 73.115 23 OCT 1847 gloomy letter from a volunteer in the California expedition

California-We learn from the Northampton (Mass.) Gazette, that a young gentlemen of Worthington, in this state, who connected himself with the 7th regiment of New York volunteers, under Col. Slovenson, writes from San Francisco, under date of May last, as follows:

"The land here is very poor; not a vegetable is raised. All it is fit for is grass, and that all dries up in summer and blows away. There is no rain from May to September. Not a tree grows within twenty miles of this. A few scrub bushes are seen, and they hardly furnish wood enough to cook with. All I can say about the land here, and I mean within a circuit of twenty miles, is, that it is one large sand sink, where vegetation starts up in the spring then dries up and blows away. If there is any with you that wish to emigrate, let them go to any other place in the world than California. Never was any taken so bad as was the 7th regiment of New York volunteers. We expected to find it almost a paradise, and here we are, poor dogs, living on sea biscuit, pork, beans, in face of an enemy, exposed to weather, and bullets rattling among us, and for dollars a month. Blue coats, red patches, stripes and death perhaps-a gloomy prospect indeed.”  [MDT]

NRR 73.115, Col. 1 Oct. 23, 1847  Operations of the Texas Rangers

The Texan Rangers - These men appear to have dreadful reputation even in our own armies, while the Mexicans they must seem the very incarnation of cruelty. The following extract from a Buena Vista letter, which we find in the National Inteneer, gives a shocking idea of their habitual proceedings. A lansiere's (lancer's) fear of a ranger is most remarkable-remarkable even to ludicrousness, as we run from the Mexicans about here. I would not be surprised to see a dozen rangers, with their rough mouth, broad brimmed, but shapeless and slouched wool hats, (peculiar to themselves,) the fronts pressed and fastened full up and aside, to permit the seemingly reckless but really quick and observant eye beneath to have full scope, their red or fancy colored shirts, their equally fanciful pantaloons, from the handsome Mexican buckskin of green, black, yellow, or blue, to the common American domestic, their rifles (that most valuale of all their property) hanging by the side of as good horses and as fast ones as the service can produce and their huge bowie knives in their sheaths, in close company with rifle and pistols-I say, I would not be surprised to see a dozen such fellows charge down, and after a crack of their rifles, race with each a coupole of hundred of the yellow skins, with their lances as long as a small mast. Indeed, all Mexicans, whether friendly or in arms, are dreadfully afraid of them.-A few words that will explain why, and as it is very immediate neighborhood of the army, or of a town, it may be well to give you some idea of what is horrid fact.

In their capacity of rangers, the Texans of course, have an almost boundless field of movements. If sent out from a city or a camp they are never expected to return before or until after night, or the next day. If attached to a train, they are only expected to show themselves occasionally, to signify that they are on the alert. Now, it has frequently happened that a stray ranger has been cut off while on one or the other kind of duty, by perhaps depending too much on his own prowess and strength in a gang of Mexicans with whom he may have fallen in. NRR 73.118 23 OCT 1847 officers killed and wounded, execution of deserters, Gen. Winfield Scott's general orders on occupying the capital, Washington "Union's" account and compliment

The American Star of the 20th September in speaking of the execution of the deserters, says that 16 of them were hung at San Angel of the 9th; and immediately after some ten or twelve where whipped and branded on the cheek with the letter D. Riley, the chief of the crowd, came in for a share of the whipping and branding.

The next morning four others were executed at Mixcoac; and on the 13th, 30 more were hung upon the gallows at the same place. It appears that Riley, according to our military laws, could not be hung, he having deserted from our army before the commencement of hostilities.

Rumors were rife in Vera Cruz of Santa Anna being in Puebla at the head of some three hundred men. Speaking on this subject, the American Star of Sept 23rd, published in the city of Mexico, says that Gen. Rea with a guerrilla force had entered Puebla a few days previous, and the force under Colonel Childs being so small, he withdrew them to the heights commanding the place where he was quite secure, and from whence he could bombard the city at will.

New Orleans, October 1847.

Headquarters army, Mexico, Sept 14 1847.

Under the favor of God, the valor of this army, after many glorious victories, has hoisted the colors of our country in the capital of Mexico, 2nd on the palace of their government; but the war is not ended.

The Mexican army and government have fled only to watch an opportunity to return upon us in vengeance. We must then be upon our guard. Companies and regiments will be kept together, and all stand on the alert. Our safety is in military discipline. Let there be no drunkeness- no disorder- and no straggling. Stragglers will be in great danger of assassination, and marauders shall be punished by courts martial.

All of these rules, so honorably observed by this glorious army in Puebla, must be observed here.

The honor of the army and the honor of our country call for the best behavior on the part of the valiant, thus to win the approbation of all the good of their country. Be sober and mereiful. His noble brethren in arms will not be deaf to this hearty appeal from their commander and friend.

GENERAL SCOTT.

Major General Quitman is appointed civil and military governor of Mexico by command of Major General Scott. Two days after he issued the following order:

The Washington Union states that there are no official despatches received at the department from Gen. Scott’s camp, but it nevertheless furnishes interesting intelligence in the shape of private letters, received from an officer at Vera Cruz, extracts from which are given below. The Union adds-

A letter has also been received in the city by this evenings mail, from one of the most distinguished officers of our army now in the city of mExico. HE gives very rapid sketch of the events which took place from the 8th to the 14th September. HE describes the storming of the palace of Chapultepac, in which our gallant troops covered themselves with glory. It was a contest of 3000 against 14000 mostly an affair of bayonets- in which General Worth’s brave division lost about 700 men. The Mexican forces were literally cut to pieces, and (to use the phrase of the came) utterly ”demoralized.” Gen. Worth was not wounded, contrary tot the Mexican table of the day.

On the night of the 13th his troops slept in the city. The next morning at 6, Gen Quitman’s troops marched in, and advanced to the palace. Then commenced the firing, from the houses which did some damage to our men; but upon every house that fired in this manner, Gen. Worth directed six and eight inch howitzers to be discharged for the purpose of arresting the house firing. The contest continued some hours, when the victory became complete and all resistance was at an end.

Never did nobler spirits appear on the military theatre than our commander, his officers and his troops. An expression for man English house in one of the following letters, crowds into one sentence the noble compliment which they deserve. These letters leave the desolution of Santa Anna in profound mystery. The reinforcements which are marching to Gen. Scott must astonish and deeply impress, if they do not intimidate the enemy. We have lost many precious lives- many brave and accomplished officers. We wait to hear the rest of their names in trembling solitude; but no army has ever covered itself with more brilliant glory. We see no reason to fear for any of our detachments. Lally must be safe in Jalapa until joined by General Lane, and Childs must be safe in Jalapa until he is joined by Lane and Lally. Other reinforcements are pouring in at Vera Cruz, and marching on the aid of our countrymen. In fact, when we calculate the strength with which we are rolling on torrent upon torrent, and when we see the shattered forces and the broken spirits of the enemy, we confess that we can anticipate nothing still but an honorable war, which we trust will lead eventually to an honorable peace. [MDT]

NNR 73.119-120 23 OCT 1847 the battles of Molino del Rey and Chapultepec, and the capture of Mexico City (from the New Orleans "Delta")

Battle of Mill Del Rey.
Correspondence of the New Orleans Delta
City of Mexico, Sept 25, 1847.

The general-in-chief received information that at Molino del Rey, where stood several buildings, the Mexicans were at work casting cannon, shells, shot, etc. Desiring to stop their military operations, he directed Worth, with his division, supported by Ge. Cadwallader’s brigade to attack and destroy the place, on the morning of the 8th, and then retire. The buildings, which the Mexicans call Casa Mata, are situated fon the west side of Chapultepec; and within 6 pound range of the guns of the fort. On the west side of the buildings and the breastworks around them is a large open plain, gradually descending to the position occupied by the Mexicans; a deep ravine inclines round this plain, or open space, until it arrives within about 200 yards of the buildings, upon which rested the enemy’s right flank. Two 24 pounders belonging to Capt. Huger’s siege train, were placed in position to batter down the breastworks and buildings, if they were found to be occupied by a heavy force, but they did not fire but a very few shot before Gen. Worth advanced his infantry down the plain and attacked the enemy’s works in the front and centre. The Mexicans opened upon them a most murderous fire from the point attacked and both their flanks, which moved down our troops like grass before the scythe. Many of the best officers of the division were cut down, and the heavy loss in the ranks caused that advance to waver for a moment until the supporting force came up, which also sustained a severe loss. A column of lancers, numbering four to five thousand, which were stationed on the enemy’s right, perceiving the effect of this deadly fire on our infantry, came charging down, in the hope of being able to take advantage of circumstances and put our troops to route, but they were soon checked in their onward career. Col. Duncan brought 2 pieces of his battery to bear upon them and Capt. Drum, with two recaptured Buena Vista pieces, also opened his fire on them, while at the same moment, Major Sumner, with 2 squadrons of dragoons, and Capt. Rutl’s company of mounted rifles, which, until then had been held in reserve, passed down under the fire from the enemy’s works, and charged the head of their columns, which they could not stand for a moment, and commenced a confused and precipitous retreat. After that they rallied twice, and attempted to return, but at each time our little handful of dragoons made them leave without exchanging cards, while the calvary and the infantry, rallying, succeeded in carrying the buildings and breastworks which the enemy held, and compelled them to retreat-capturing seven pieces of artillery, a large quantity of ammunition, small arms, etc. and about 600 prisoners. As soon as they were driven from the buildings, capt. Drum and Col.
Duncan advanced their light batteries, and Lieut. Stone brought forward one of the 24 pounders, the whole of which opened a most destructive fire upon them, as they retreated across a low plain to the rear of the position they at first occupied. Our loss was very heavy, and I regret to say that some of the very best officers of our army killed or wounded, while the Mexicans loss was very slight, until they commenced their retreat. While the cavalry were passing in front of the enemy, in order to charge the column of lancers, they were not under fire more than ten seconds, and during that time they sustained a loss of six officers wounded, 32 privates killed and wounded, and a loss of 105 horses. There were but 2 officers that did not have their horses shot under them.

We were deceived in reference to the character of the buildings, as there was no foundry, or even as semblance of one-and after blowing up some of the buildings, and bringing off our killed and wounded, we evacuated the place, as the occupation of it would give us no advantage. Our loss was 8 hundred killed, wounded and missing.

The result of this engagement taught us one lesson, which was, that the Mexicans use their arms well, and fight well, when they are in position; and although the superiority of our arms and the valor of the troops will eventually triumph, yet still we must call into requisition all our military science and skill, or we purchase our victories at too dear a price. A list of the killed and wounded you will find in the general recapitulation which I send you. Many a tear will be shed on its perusal, and many a heart will bleed for the noble souls’ and the old and firm veterans which fell in the assault. [MDT]

NNR 73.120 23 OCT 1847 number of shot and shells fired, letters from Veracruz, troops arrive, “Union’s” statement of forces under Gen. Winfield Scott

The following memoranda will show you the number of shot and shell fired by the siege batteries. The small number fired at Chapultepec, and the manner in which the castle and fort were completely torn to pieces, is one of the best evidence of the power of that arm of our service, and the superior abilities of the officers commanding it.

Battery No. 1- On the Tacubaya road-served by Capt. Drum, company G. 4th artillery—216 pounders and 1 8 inch howitzer—fired 300 round shot, 100 shells, and 50 round of canister.

Battery No. 2- On the ridge south of Molino del Rey—served by Lieut. Hagner and company of ordnance—124 pounder and 1 8 inch howitzer—fired 146 round shot and 74 shells.

Battery No. 3- On the same ridge, the nearer the Molino del Rey—served at first by Capt. H. Brooks 2d artillery, and afterwards by Lieut. S.S. Anderson, 2d artillery, on the 12th of September- 1 16 pounder and 1 8 inch howitzer. (The carriage of the 16 pounder gun) fired 70 rounds 16 pound shot, 37 24 pound, do., and 30 shells.

Battery No.4- 10 inch mortar—served by Lieut. Store and company of ordnance—Fired 84 shells. From the Garita San Cosme, a few 24 pound shot and 5 10 inch mortar shells were thrown into the city after dark on the 13, and a few 8 inch shells into houses from which the firing came, on the 14th.

Extracts of letters received this evening in Washington from an officer of the government at Vera Cruz.

Vera Cruz October 2, 1847.

As to the truth of the report from Mexico that the leperos or lazarams had sacked the city, and that the troops of General Scott could not have prevented it, I certainly cannot believe that.

That General Santa Anna has come down with 2000 cavalry, and was at a small town near Puebla, there is now not a shadow of a doubt. What his intention is, no one can tell. By the small force he has, it cannot be to prevent our reinforcements from going up; for, with the 1000 men under Major Lally at Jalapa, they could march over any force that Santa Anna could get, provided he had the means of which neither he nor his government, if he has any, has a dollar.

September 30, the British courier has just arrived bringing dates from the city of Mexico to the 27th.

Pena y Pena, as I before informed you, with two associate judges, compose the government, and were at Queretaro, and that they had called the congress together on the 5th of next month.

I have seen a letter from one of the most respected English houses, who speaks of the taking of the different forts and of the city in the most glowing terms; that these victories of the Americans will compare with Cortes’s. In fact, there is, (he says) nothing like them on record.

The British courier informs me that he left Santa Anna in Puebla yesterday; that he conversed with him for an hour; that he deeply regretted not making peace; that he (Santa Anna) arrived at Puebla with a few hundred horse, and that it was his opinion he intended to make for the coast.

Gen. Patterson. I am glad to say, reached here to day in good health.

Brig. Gen. Cushing has also arrived.

Gen. Lane arrived in Jalapa today. Major Lally is still there with his 1000 men.

Colonel Childs had, the day before yesterday, 12 days’ provision, but the reinforcements will reach him in season.

Vera Cruz, October 2, 1847.

Since I had this pleasure, several transports with troops from the Brazos have arrived and are daily coming in.

Gen. Wilson is sick and today delivered over the command for the present to Col. Miles.

I have been told this morning that Santa Anna had ordered a friend of his to inform him at once when Gen. Lane moves from Jalapa. He (Santa Anna) will no doubt start immediately for Oajaca, and thence to Guatemala. This is told me by a friend of Santa Anna. The country appears to be used up; no government-no money-no credit, and no moral courage.

Oct. 4-Since I had the honor to address you by tis steamer, (which has been detained by a norther) I have obtained the following information, to wit: Filisola, general of division, with 4000 men, and Gen Corteyal, with 3000 men, and with all the leperos they can raise, and the national guard, are to make a demonstration on the city of Mexico. Gen. Santa Anna, with Gen. Quijana, and 2000 horse and 1000 foot are to obstruct the reinforcements going to Gen. Scott. He is to be assisted by Gen. Rhea, with the forces under his command, supposed to be about 1500 or 2000. Should Santa Anna he unsuccessful, it is presumed he will make his way to the coast and leave the country.

The war is hereafter to be carried on by the different departments or states; each state to operate with its own forces. The lieutenant governor of the department of Vera Cruz (Guiterrez Villanueva) is to organize a national guard, consisting of 1500 men, to which is to be added the 2d regiment of regulars, under the command of the lieutenant governor named above. Governor Soto (late governor) having lost the confidence heretofore reposed in him, on account of receiving part of the spoils captured by the guerrillas.

The legislature of this state will meet soon at Orizaba. Gen. Santa Anna captured an express from Gen. Scott to Col. Childs at Puebla, directing him to hold out as long as possible, and, if obliged to abandon his position, to fall back on him. This express also directed Col. Childs to hurry up to General Scott any reinforcements that might be on the way from Vera Cruz.

This information can be relied on, and I have felt it my duty to give it to Gen.
Nearly all the troops have arrived from the Brazos, and Gen. Patterson will move up in the course of a few days.

Gen. Lane, with Major Lally, ought to be, and no doubt will be, in Puebla in all this week.

These fresh reinforcements will astonish the Mexicans, and will have a most favorable effect in making them cry out for opening negotiations; they begin to feel as if we had done them all the harm we could.

The Washington Union, in the following article, is giving Gen. Scott large reinforcements. We hope that the sum total which is here set down may not turn out to be a mistake in the figures:

We have seen some late speculations in the public prints about the reinforcements which have been sent or are en route for Gen. Scott's column. Without undertaking to be very precise as to the numbers, we think we may venture to state, from the data which we have seen, that, without counting General Pierce's detachment, which has actually joined Gen. Scott, but counting in Major Lally's corps, the reinforcements destined to join him can scarcely fall short of 1600 troops; and this too, independent of the two new regiments which have just been called into service. The whole column of Gen. Scott in the field, when collected together and this operation was rapidly advancing to its full maturity - will give him from 25000 to 30000 - and nearer the last number than the first, and perhaps even exceeding it.

The N. Orleans Picayune has letters from Kendall, describing the hard fought battle of the 8th September, as follows:

Gen. Worth commenced the attack at early daylight, and in less than two hours every point was carried, all the cannon of the enemy were in our possession, an immense quantity of ammunition captured, and nearly 1,000 men, among them 53 officers, taken prisoners.

For more than an hour the battle raged with a violence not surpassed since the Mexican war commenced, and so great the odds opposed, that for some time the result was doubtful. The force of the enemy has been estimated at from 12,000 to 15,000, them our small force of scarcely 3,000 was obliged to approach to an open plain and without the least cover; but their dauntless courage carried them over every obstacle, and notwithstanding the Mexicans fought with a valor rare for them, they were finally routed from one point or another until all were driven and dispersed. The defeat was total.

But to gain this victory out own loss has been uncommonly severe - if has been purchased with the blood of some of the most gallant spirits of the army. The 5th infantry has suffered the most. That regiment, along with the 6th and 8th, was engaged in the attack upon a strong work on the enemy's right, and was opposed to such superior numbers that it was compelled to retire along with the others. - The celebrated Col. Martin Scott was killed in this attack, along with Lieuts. Burwell and Strong, while Col. McIntosh and many other officers were badly wounded. The worse than savage miscreants in the fort, after our men retired, set up a yell and came out and massacred such of our wounded as were unable to get off. In this way poor Burwell lost his life. Fully were they avenged, however; for within half an hour Duncan's battery, aided by the fall of another of their works, drove the dastardly wretches in full flight across the fields. No one knew or even surmised the strength of the place; it was an old fort, constructed long since, and was one of the main defenses of the line of works.

On the enemy's left, and nearer Chapultepec our loss was also great, although not as severe. it was here that Col. Wm. M. Graham, as brave a spirit as ever lived, was killed; Captains Merrill and Ayres also fell in this part of the field. The wonder now is how any one could come out safe under such a terrible fire as the enemy poured from his entire line of works. Nothing but the daring and impetuosity were falling thick around them, gaining the victory - has they once faltered all would have been lost.
The broken ground on the right of the enemy, cut up by deep ravines, saved many of Santa Anna's troops in their flight; yet, as it was, our dragoons killed and captured many of the fugitives. Large bodies of the Mexican cavalry approached the scene of strife several times, but they were driven like sheep by Duncan's battery.

The Mexican loss has been even more severe than our own. Gen. Balderas, General Leon, and many other officers are numbered among the dead, while the interior of their works, the tops of the houses from which they fled are strewn with lifeless bodies. Such was the panic that many of our officers say that a few fresh troops might have taken Chapultepec itself almost without a struggle; but other than a few shots fired at that point from some of the captured cannon, no demonstration was made.

A letter of the 9th Sept. contains the following full list of all the killed and wounded officers in Gen. Worth's division in the great battle of the Molino Del Rey, as also of those in Major Sumner's command of dragoons, and in Gen. Calwallader's brigade. Its correctness, the writer says, may be relied on:

Gen. Worth's Division—killed—Col. Martin Scott, 5th inf; Captain Merrill, 5th inf, Captain G. W. Ayres, 3d. artillery; Lieut. E. B. Strong, 5th inf; Lieutenants W. Armstrong, 3d artillery; Lieutenat W. T. Burwell, 5th infantry Lieutenant Farry, 3d artillery.

Wounded—Col. McIntosh, 5th inf, severely; Maj. C. A. Waite, 8th inf, badly; Major G. Wright, 8th inf, slightly; Capt. E. Smith, 5th inf, severely; Capt. Cady, 6th inf, slightly; Capt. Larkin Smith, 8th inf, severely; Capt. Walker, 6th inf, severely; Capt. R. Anderson, 3d. art'y, severely; Assistant Surgeon W. Roberts, dangerously; Captain J. L. Mason, corps of engineers, severely; Lieut. C. S. Hamilton, 5th infantry, severely; Lieut. C. B. Daniels, 2d. art, severely; Lieut. Ernest, 6th inf, severely-lost right hand; Lieut. J. G. Burbank, 8th infantry, mortally; Lieut. J. D. Clark, 8th inf, badly; Lieut. C. F. Morris, 8th inf, badly; Lieut. Wainwright, 8th inf, severely; Lieut. H. J. Hunt, 2d art., slightly; Lieut. J. G. S. Snelling, 8th inf, severely; Lieut. H. F. Clarke, 2d. art, slightly; Lieut. W. Hayes, 2d art, lightly; Lieut. J. G. Fogster, corps of engineers, severely; Assist. Surgeon J. Simmons, slightly; Lieut. Dent, 5th inf, severely; Lt. H. Prince, 4th inf, severely; Lieut. A. B. Lincoln, 4th inf., severely; Lt. Herman Thorne, 3d. dragoons, -aid to Col. Garland, severely; Lieut. Montgomery, 8th inf, slightly; Lieutenant Andrews, 3d. artillery, slightly. [KAS]

City of Mexico, Sept 14, 1847.

Another victory, glorious in its results and which has thrown additional lustre upon the American arms, has been achieved today by the army under Gen. Scott—the proud capital of Mexico has fallen into the power of a mere handful of men compared with the immense odds arrayed against them, and Santa Anna, instead of shedding his blood as he had promised, is wandering with the remnant of his army no one know whither.

The apparently impregnable works on Chapultepec, after, a desperate struggle, were triumphantly carried—Generals Bravo and Mouterde, besides a host of officers of different grades, taken prisoners; over 1000 non commissioned officers and privates, all their cannon and ammunition, are in our hands; the fugitives were soon in full flight towards the different works which command the entrances to the city, and our men at once were in hot pursuit.

Gen. Quitman, supported by Gen. Smith’s brigade, took the road by the Chapultepec acqueduct towards the Belen gate and the Ciudadela; General Worth, supported by General Cadwallader’s brigade advanced by the San Cosme acqueduct towards the garita of that name. Both routes were cut up by ditches and defended by breastworks, barricades, and strong works of every description known to military science; yet the daring and impetuosity of our men overcome one defense after another, and by nightfall every work to the city’s edge was carried. General Quitman’s command, after the rout at Chapultepec, was the first to encounter the enemy in force.
Midway between the former and the Belen gate, Santa Anna had constructed a strong work; but this was at once vigorously assaulted by General Quitman, and aided by a flank fire from two of Duncan’s guns, which General Worth had ordered to approach as near as possible from San Cosme road, the enemy was again routed and in full flight. They again made a stand from their strong fortifications at and near the Belen garita, opening a tremendous fire not only of round shot, grape, and shell, but of musketry; but boldly General Quitman advanced, stormed and carried the works, although at great loss, and then every point on this side the city was in our possession. IN this onslaught two of our bravest officers were killed-Captain Drum and Lieut. Benjamin.

Meanwhile Gen. Worth was rapidly advancing upon San Cosme. At the English burying ground the enemy had constructed a strong work. It was defended by infantry for a short time, but could not resist the assault of our men—the affrighted Mexicans soon fled to another line of works nearer the city, and thus General Worth was in possession of the entrance to San Cosme. As his men advanced towards the garita, the enemy opened a heavy fire of musketry from the housetops, as well as of grape, canister, and shell from their batteries, thus sweeping the street completely. At this juncture the old Monterey game, of borrowing and digging through the houses, was adopted. ON the right, as our men faced the enemy, the aqueduct afforded a partial shelter; on the left, the houses gave some protection; but many were still killed or wounded by the grape which swept every part, as well as by the shells which were continually bursting in every direction. About 3 o’clock the work of the pick-ax and the crowbar, under the direction of Lieut. G.W. Smith, of sappers and miners, had fairly commenced and every minute brought our men nearer the enemy’s last stronghold. IN the meantime two mountain howitzers were fairly lifted to the top of one of the houses and into the cupola of the church, from which they opened a plunging and most effective fire, while on Dunce’s guns, in charge of Lieut. Hunt, was run up under a galling fire to a deserted breastwork, and at once opened upon the garret. In this latter daring feat, four men out of eight were either killed or wounded, but still the piece was most effectively served. The work of the miners was still going on. In one house, which they had entered, by the pick-ace, a favorite aid of Santa Anna’s was found. That great man had just fled, but had left his friend and his supper! Both wearier well cared for = the latter was devoured by our hungry officers; the former, after doing the honors of the table, was mad a close prisoner. Just as dark was setting in, our men had dug and mined their ways almost up to three very guns of the enemy, and now, after a short struggle, they were completely routed and driven with the loss of everything. The command of the city by the San Cosme route was attained.

During the night Gen. Quitman commenced the work of throwing up breastworks and erecting batteries, with the intention of opening a heavy cannonade upon the Ciudadela with the first light this morning. At 10 o’clock at night General Worth, ordered Captain Hugar to bring up a 24 pounder, and a 10 inch mortar to the garita or gate of San Cosme, and having ascertained the bearing and distance of the grand plaza and palace, at once opened upon those points. The heavy shells were heard to explode in the very heart of the city. At a little after midnight Major Palacious, accompanied by two or three members of the municipal council of the city, arrived at Gen. Worth’s headquarters and in great trepidation informed him that Santa Anna and his grand army had fled and that they wished at once to surrender the capital! They were referred to the commander in chief, and immediately started for Tacubaya; but in the meantime the firing upon the town ceased.

At 7 this morning, General Scott, with his staff, rode in and took quarters in the national palace, on the top of which the regiment flag of the gallant rifles and the starts and striped were already flying, and an immense crowd of blanketed leperos, the scum of the capital, were congregated in the plaza as the commander in chief entered it. They pressed upon our soldiers, and eyed them as thought hey were beings of another world. So much were they in the way, and with such earnestness did they press around, that Gen. Scott was compelled to order our dragoons to clear the plaza. They were told, however, not to injure or harm a man in the mob—they were all our friends.

About five minutes after this, and while General Worth was returning to his division near the Alameda, he was fired upon from a house near the convent of San Francisco. Some of the cowardly Polkas, who had fled the day previous without discharging their guns, now commenced the assassin game of shooting at every one of our men they saw, from windows, as well as behind the parapets on the azoteas or tops of the houses. In half an hour’s time our good friends, the leperos, in the neighborhood of the hospital of San Andres and the church of Santa Clara, also commenced discharging muskets and throwing rocks from the azoteas. I have neglected to mention that just previous to this Cpl. Garland had been severely wounded by a musket, fire by some miscreant from a window.
For several hours this cowardly war upon our men continued, and during this time many were killed and wounded. It was in this species of fighting that Lieut. Sidney Smith received his death wound. The division of Gen. Twiggs in one part of the city, and Gen. Worth in another, were soon actively engaged in putting down the insurrection. Orders were given to shoot every man in all the houses from which the firing came, while the guns of the different light batteries swept the streets in all directions. As the assassins were driven from one house they would take refuge in another; but by the middle of the afternoon they were all forced back to the barrios and suburbs. Many innocent persons have doubtless been killed during the day, but his could not be avoided. Had orders been given at the outset to blow up and demolish every house or church from which one man was fired upon, the disturbances would have been at once quelled. As it is, I trust that the lessons the rabble and their mischievous leader have received today may deter them from future outrages.

On entering the palace Gen. Scott at once named Gen. Quitman governor of Mexico—a most excellent appointment. Some wag immediately proclaimed aloud in the plaza as follows: "Gen. John A. Quitman of Mississippi has been appointed governor of Mexico, vice Gen. Jose Maria Tornell, resigned very suddenly!" It seems that the valiant Tornel ran off at an early hour, and his magnificent house had been converted into a hospital for our wounded officers.

NNR 73.122 23 OCT 1847 Col. John W. Tibbatts' proclamation on assuming governorship of Monterey

We are indebted to our friend, John W. Tibbatts, Col. 16th infantry, who is now civil and military governor of Monterey, for a copy of the proclamation issued by him, upon his assuming the duties of that office, on the 1st of September, 1847. The proclamation declares that the governor found the city "virtually without law or order, and infested with robbers, murderers, gamblers, vagrants, and other evil disposed persons—the worst of criminals going free, unscathed of justice; even rapine and murder stalking abroad in open day without fear of punishment, insomuch that the peaceable inhabitants of the of have no protection either of person or property." The Colonel gives every dark picture of the morals of his "province," but it there is any virtue in stringent laws and avowals of a determination to enforce them, he will soon have a respectable city of it. HE makes a clean sweep of the gamblers, hells, drinking shops, and rowdies, and invites the Mexican citizens who have been compelled to glee from their homes through fear or other cause to return, with the assurance that they will be protected in all their honest avocations. NNR 73.122 23 OCT 1847 items from California

California—By the way of Mexico and New Orleans we have been favored with the following letter from Mazatlan, of the date of 27th June. Most of the news is of a later date than previously received.

Commodore Stockton and suite, Capt. Gillespie, U.S.M.C. and J. Parker Norris, Esq. Of Philadelphia, were to leave San Francisco for home, overland by the 25th of June.

Col. R.B. Mason, 1st dragoons, took command of California as military and civil governor, 1st June. Col. J.D. Stevenson, 7th Regt. N. York volunteers, commands the Southern Department of Upper California, headquarters at "Puebla de los Angelos."

At Monterey, June 12th, U.S. ship of the line Columbus, Commodore Biddle; sloop Warren, Capt. Hull; transports Erie, Lt. Watson, and Lexington, Lt. Bailey- latter to sail in five days from La Paz, with Lt. Col. Burton’s command, who would be embarked at Santa Barbara.

Sailed from Monterey, June 11th, frigate United States, Com. Stockton, for San Beauties of the war. The barque Agnes, Capt. Cutter, cleared at Baltimore on the 1st May last, for Vera Cruz, with a cargo of 250 tons Cumberland coal. She arrived in safety at her port of destination, where it was found that the coal was not wanted. The vessel was, however, suffered to remain 60 days in the harbor of Vera Cruz, on demurrage, at the end of which time she was ordered to Baltimore with her cargo. On reaching Baltimore, she was ordered to this port, where she arrived on Thursday last, with her entire cargo, not having broken bulk since she left Baltimore in May 1st. Here the cargo was sold for the most it would bring, probably not over 9 dollars per ton, landed at this port, thus making a loss through the gross mismanagement and ignorance of its officials, of not far from $18,000. This is but one among the many instances of a similar character, which exhibit the manner in which the money of the people is squandered.

Boston Journal. [MDT]

There was a meeting of the people at Dahlonega, Ga., on the 9th, which was attended by Mr. J. M. Berrien. This veteran senator delivered an eloquent speech on the occasion. Mr. Berrien said, our democratic friends appear to be extremely solicitous of making an issue with us upon the subject of national politics, and insist with much earnestness upon a definition of whig principles. Principles which had been often defined to their knowledge, and of which we were neither afraid nor ashamed—he would give them a full and frank avowal of them. So far as time would permit and his understanding of them justify. He and these principles were embodied in one word, and that word conservatism—that conservatism would guard the constitution as a sacred casket—which would look to it as the ark of the covenant of our political, civil and religious liberties—that conservatism which would preserve the coordinate branches of the government, and limit each to its respectively defined powers, and a strict accountability of public officers—that would see to it that there was a clear grant of power for each governmental act—of that conservatism which formed our constitution and had preserved us as a people, and which as aptly expressed in the homely phrase of “let well enough alone,” But as these general principles might not be considered satisfactory, he said he would go more into detail. He referred to the much hexed question of a tariff; he said a whig principle consisted in levying duties upon imports to raise revenue for the support of the government, and such duties only as would be necessary to defray the expenses of the government, economically administered, and to make such reasonable discriminations within the limits of revenue as would protect American manufactures; or in other words, a revenue tariff with discriminations within the revenue standard, or the purposes of protection. Mr. B said the democratic tariff of 1846, and Mr. Polk’s kane letter admitted this principle; that there was no difference between the two parties on this subject, nor a necessity longer for a conflict in reference to a tariff, except as to the amount of revenue which the tariff of 46 would raise. If it yielded enough, he made no war upon it— if it did, it ought to be repealed or changed. He said extremes had met upon this question: that the men of ultra principles he said the alternative question presented to the people were a tariff and direct taxation. The whigs this year as not a test in his opinion, in the amount of income from the customs, on account of the great demand of breadstuffs on the other side of the Atlantic, and the large imports consequent upon the state of affairs created by the failure of the grain crops in Europe; if he was found to be wrong, he should not complain. HE next alluded to a National Bank, and said it had been a question of whig policy, and they still maintained that congress had the constitutional power to charter a bank, and if it were required by the people, and circumstances justified the exercise of the power, the whig party would still be in favor of it.

HE said, however, that in the present state of the country, when upon the breaking up and reorganization of the state banking system, and since men of substantial capital had invested their funds in the state banks, rendering their issues... at all times convertible into special, and producing a sound currency, which was a result anxiously sought by the whig party, he saw no pressing public necessity for the establishment of such an institution, and he considered that question in abeyance. He said the whig party were still in favor of the principle of distribution of public lands among the states; these lands were the common property of all the states; they had always been in favor of these proceeds going towards the discharge of the public debt; however he thought this question might be considered the debt which this democratic administration had saddled on the country, it was not at all likely that there would be any necessity for such a law, at least during the present generation.

MR. Berrien next spoke of the Mexican war, and characterized it as the offspring of misdirected ambition, and said it commenced, first, in a violation of the constitution, in which the president had assumed the war making power, and justified by no public necessary. Secondly, It has been conducted, so far as the administration was concerned, without wisdom and without energy. Thirdly, It looked to no great and patriotic result; it was a war of conquest, not contemplated by the constitution; a measure at once pregnant with consequence dangerous to the well being of the union, and destructive of the harmony of the people. All of the provisions of the constitution were peaceful in their character, so far as conquest was concerned. It provided for no standing army—its army was the militia, and that belonged to the states, and could only be called out to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. It provided for the common defence only of the good people of these U. States. It was peaceful in all its frame work, as to all the machinery for acquiring territory by the sword. He next spoke of the firebrand which the acquisition of territory would throw into the legislation of the country, and said the northern democracy were determined to engrat "the Wilmont provoso" upon all measures for acquiring territory; as proof of which he referred to the action of the last congress and the introduction of this proviso by a democrat, and to a controversy now pending between the editor of the Union, and the New York Evening Post, which latter paper, professing to express the will of the party at the North, makes adherence to the Wilmot proviso one of the tests of democratic faith. He said our whig brethren at the north were with us in opposition to the acquisition of territory, because it violated the constitution, and to avoid the dangerous questions which would be made by it. He appealed to southern men upon this question, and asked them if they would consent to acquire this territory by our common sufferings, blood and treasure, and have it, except upon terms of perfect equality with our northern territory and exclude slavery from it? The constitution gave us the right to take our slaves there if we wished—were we prepared to dissolve the Union, or let our northern brethren erect a tier of free states around us greatly outnumbering us in numerical strength in the halls of congress, and placing us at their mercy? Far better go with our whig brethren at the north, leave our weak and distracted sister republic to the possession of her territory, and save the constitution and the country.

Mr. Berrien closed his speech with a most powerful appeal to the aged, middle aged and young, to stand by the constitution and the advice of the fathers of the country— to preserve them in ther letter and spirit at all and every hazard. He spoke of himself as soon to pass away in the ordinary allotments of providence—as being in his sear and yellow leaf; as having little personal interest in these questions, save a deep devotion to his welfare of his country. He told the men of middle life, that upon them rested the mighty responsibility the rich heritage bequeathed them by a patriotic ancestry. HE exhorted the young to grid on the harness and be ready to receive the high and solemn trust, when the cycles of time should invest them with the prerogatives of doing battle in favor of the rights of man. NNR 73.125 23 OCT 1847 Senator Berrien’s Amendment to the three million bill

Senator Berrien’s Amendment to the three million bill.

The Washington Union is vehement against the doctrine embraced in Mr. Berrien’s amendment, which as it is appropriate to the subject in hand, we insert. It was—

"Provided, always and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of congress in making this appropriation, that the war with Mexico ought not to be prosecuted by this government with any view to the dismemberment of that republic, or to the acquisition, by conquest, of any portion of her territory: that this government, ever desirous to maintain and preserve, peaceful and friendly relations with all nations, and particularly with the neighboring republic of Mexico, will always be ready to enter upon negotiations with a view to terminate the present unhappy conflict on terms which shall secure the just rights and preserve inviolate the national honor of the United states and of Mexico; that it is especially desirable, in order to maintain and preserve those amicable relations which ought always to exist between neighboring republics that the boundary of the state of Texas should be definitely settled, and that provism be made by the republic of Mexico for the prompt and equitable adjustment of the just claims of our citizens on that republic."

The following were the yeas and nays on the above amendment.

Yeas-Messrs, Archer, Badger, Berrien, Cilley, Thomas Clayton, John M. Clayton, Corwin, Crittenden, Davis, Dayton, Evans, Greene, Huntington, Jarnagin, Johnson, of Maryland, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Pearce, Phelps, Simmons, Upham, Webster, Woodbridge.-24

NNR 73.129 30 OCT 1847 rumor of Gen. Jose Urrea advancing towards the Rio Grande and of Gen. Zachary Taylor visiting the United States, both discredited by the "Union"

Official.-The Washington Union of the 26th says-

Rumors are rife in the city, many of which have no foundation. For instance, we received this morning a telegraphic bulletin from a Philadelphia editor inquiring when we should publish General Scott's despatches? This curiosity was probably produced by the blunder of a scribbler in this city, who writes to New York that a large budget of despatches had arrived from the camp. But the fact is, that no despatches have been received from the General descriptive of the late stirring events; and, indeed, no letter, as we have understood, from Gen. Scott, since the 4th of June. Either they have been intercepted, or they have been withheld, from the apprehension of their falling into the hands of the guerrillas. This state of things cannot continue much longer, as the advancing reinforcements, and the positions which they mean to occupy upon the route, must soon open the communication. Indeed, we understand that Gen. Scott has been expressly instructed to open the road, or the purpose of transmitting his despatches.

Another report was current in the streets of Washington today, viz: that an express had arrived from the Rio Grande, with information that Urrea was crossing the mountains with 20000 troops, for the purpose of sweeping our posts in that direction. But we have ascertained that no express has arrived with any such information. Letters have been received from General Taylor's camp, but they say nothing of Urrea's invasion.

A late New Orleans paper states that Gen. Taylor intends to visit the United States, and expects to be in New Orleans some time in the month of November. We doubt the information, as we presume the General will not leave the army until he has communicated his wishes to the department: and we understand that no such notice has yet been received.

NNR 73.130 30 OCT 1847 Tribute to Colonel Scott

Tribute to Colonel Scott

The correspondence of the Delta, in describing the appearance of the field before Molino del Rey after the action, relates the following exhibition of affection on the part of an old soldier.
After going over a portion of ground, and finding here and there a valued acquaintance, my attention was attracted to a gray-haired veteran, who was standing by the side of one who had fallen. He leisurely took his blanket from his back and spread it over the corpse with great care. I rode up to him and asked him whether that was an officer. He looked up, and every lineament of his face betokening the greatest grief, replied, "you never asked a question sir, more easily answered, is it an officer." I then asked him who he was. He again replied, "The best soldier of the 5th infantry sir." I then alighted from my horse and uncovered the face, found it was Col. Martin Scott. As I again covered the face, the soldier continued, without apparently addressing himself to any person in particular--"They have killed him-they will be paid for this-if it only had been me-I have served with him almost four enlistments but what will his poor family say?" And as he concluded thus the tears coursed down his furrowed cheeks, and the swelling of his bosom showed how deeply he was affected by the death of his veteran and gallant commander. [MDT]

NNR 73.130 30 OCT 1847 official statement of the troops under Gen. Winfield Scott

General Scott’s Column-Official

Much curiosity having been expressed about the force of General Scott’s army, and several speculations having appeared in the newspapers upon this subject, we have applied for information to the office of the adjacent general, who has been polite enough to furnish us with the following schedule. Let us add to this list of reinforcements the troops which Genera Scott carried with him from Puebla—estimated at 13 to 14000 men. It cannot be precisely calculated, m for no regular return of number have been received from the camp for more than five months. The rumors received this day state his whole loss, in the late memorable action near and in Mexico, at 1600 men (since leaving Puebla 3000 men,) including killed, wounded and missing who did not appear in their respective companies immediately after the actions. But many of these are supposed to have returned to their respective commands in a few days after.

Making every allowance, therefore, for the missing, the whole force of General Scott’s column may in a few weeks be estimated at near 30000.

Reinforcements of the army under Major General Scott, since July 14, including troops now en route, and volunteers being enrolled.

1. Troops detached from army under Major Gen. Taylor’s command, exclusive of Col. Hay’s Texas mounted volunteers, of which the strength is not known——2937

2. Troops reported by Colonel Wilson to have arrived at Vera Cruz subsequently to the departure thence of Brigadier General Pierce’s brigade, (July 14th) and exclusive of Sept. 9 the date of Colonel Wilson’s last report.——3838

3. Troops which it is calculated, have arrived at Vera Cruz since Colonel Wilson’s last report, (Sept. 9,) or now en route for that point, [ ]

NCR 73.131 30 OCT 1847 notice of Virginia officers killed or wounded

Virginia Officers Killed or Wounded

Of the gallant officers killed or wounded in the late battles near the city of Mexico, we know that the following were natives of Virginia, viz: in the battle of the “Mill,” Lieut. Wm. M. Graham, 11th infantry, killed; Captain Larkin Smith, 8th infantry severely wounded. In the storming of Chapultepec and advance upon the city, Lieut. Col. Garland, commanding 1st brigade Worth’s division, wounded severely, but doing well, Lieut. Col. Johnson, Voltigeurs, wounded slightly; Capt. Magruder, 1st artillery. Wounded slightly; and Lieut. Joseph Selden, 8th infantry, wounded severely but doing well.

We are by no means sure that these are all the officers from Virginia who shed their blood in the service of the country, at these hard fought battles: but, when it is recollected that our state was not represented by any corps drawn exclusively from her citizens, the names we have mentioned may well be conceded to fill up her proper proportion.

Of the brave Lieut. Colonel Graham, who fell in the most sanguinary of all the battles, that of “El Molino Del Rey” we find the following interesting obituary memoir in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin:

Lieut. Col. Graham. Among the officers who it appears, were lost to their country in the recent assault upon the city of Mexico, was the gallant Lieut. Col. William Montrose Graham, of the 11th regiment, U.S. Infantry. Col. Graham was about 47 years of age, and was a brave soldier. He entered at the West Point Military Academy in 1813, and graduated in 1817, as 3rd Lieut, of artillery. Another brother, James D. Graham of the topographical engineers, one of the most scientific, accomplished and valuable officers in the service, entered and graduated the same year. They were the sons of Doctor William Graham, of Prince William county, VA., who served as did others of the family, with distinction, as officers in the revolutionary struggle. Col Graham whose fall we are now noticing was, soon after he graduated at West Point, selected by his commander, Gen. Jackson to perform some arduous and responsible duties among the southwestern Indians, which he did so satisfactorily that he was highly complimented by the General. Having been transferred to the 4th infantry, under Colonel Clinch, which was in Florida, he joined it, and was placed in command of Fort King, for a long time in the very heart of the troublesome Miccosakies.

The writer of this notice knew him well during the period, and can bear full testimony to his possession of all qualities that ennoble a gentleman and a soldier. He was in Florida in 1835, when the Seminole war broke out, and bore the brunt of the first battle at the Withlacoochee, where his galling final charge upon the Indians with the bayonet, dispersed the savages and aided greatly in securing the victory. Gov. Clinch in his official report, spoke in the highest terms of the conduct of Colonel then Capt. Graham. HE fell in the charge with 2 severe wounds from the Indian rifles, (one received early in the fight) and his brother, Lieut. Campbell Graham of the artillery, (now Capt. Of topographical engineers,) also received at the same time two severe wounds, at first believed to be mortal, but from which he recovered after a long time. Throughout the whole of the Florida war “the Grahams” were distinguished for their intrepidity and soldierly like conduct. Col. G. was in every battle on the Peninsula of much note, and at Okechubbee he gallantly led one wing of his regiment, and was complimented in the dispatches of his Colonel.

His brother, Brevet Major Lawrence Pike Graham, of the 2d dragoons, also served in Florida with great credit as a young lieutenant in Twiggs’ regiment, and was severely wounded in 1840, while scouting in the night, being fired upon by a party of militia by mistake. He is the same officer who was breveted by the president and senate a major for the gallant charge at Resaca de la Palma, with May, Inge and others of the dragoons. Lieutenant Colonel G. was distinguished at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Pahna, where he was with the 4th regiment of infantry, ot which he then belonged. At Monterey, he was selected by Gen. Taylor to lead his regiment to the assault; and it was for his daring and chivalrous gallantry on those occasions and especially that so signally displayed at Monterey that he was selected as Lieut. Colonel of the 11th, one of the new regiments by the president and senate. HE was not at Buena Vista, having been ordered to join General Scott, but at Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras and Churubusco, he bore a prominent part in the conflicts and won his share of the glory of those brilliant achievements.

The particulars of his fall are not yet known. But hat he fell as became a soldier, his past career furnishes sure testimony to all who knew him. HE is mourned by numerous friends who appreciated his worth, and in whose hearts his memory is embalmed. A grateful country will not forget his services. Among all his fine military qualities none were more conspicuous than the generosity of his heart and his kind devotion to the comfort of those under his command. These endeared him to his soldiers, and many a tear will be shed for his loss by men of the stoutest hearts who served in the ranks under him, and experienced his kindness and benevolence.  [MDT]

NNR 73.136 30 OCT 1847 movements on the city of Mexico (New Orleans "Courier")

My dear friend: At last were in possession of the capital of Mexico, and snugly quartered in the far famed “Halls of Montezumas.”

Believing that it will interest you to understand the principal movements of our army since it left Puebla, as I am conversant with them all, I will relate them, and you will find them among the most interesting operations of war that have occurred during the nineteenth century.

When gen. Scott had completed his arrangements and concentrated his forces at Puebla in the early part of August, and when he saw the sudden disappearance of the speck of peace which had been held out to him and MR, Frist, he at once determined to move his whole available force upon the capital, to which demonstration he hoped to compel the Mexicans to accept our offer of peace.
Accordingly little or no resistance until we reached the valley of Mexico, nor did we meet any. We encountered strong natural fortifications at and in the vicinity of Rio Frio. But the enemy seemed to hold himself in reserve for the determined resistance our army met with after passing that region, midway between Puebla and this city, and after we had entered the valley of Mexico.

The reconnaissance of our engineers and information derived from other sources induced Gen. Scott to make his first demonstration upon the Pinon, so called-a height very strong by nature and doubly so by the science of the Mexicans, who left nothing undone to make the position impregnable. A further reconnaissance satisfied Gen. Scott and induced him to believe that the Penon could be turned by the flank; which was accordingly done, and after innumerable difficulties, reached San Augustin, ten miles from the capital on the 18th August.

Worth’s division was thrown forward a league to San Antonio on our right, and Gen. Pillow, with Cadawalder’s and Shields brigades, and Twiggs’ division on our left.

Worth’s division was much annoyed by the enemy’s guns at San Antonio as we were trying to turn that position, while a brisk cannonade was carried on by the troops under Gen. Pillow against the enemy’s batteries at Contreras. In the morning of the 20th August, Riley’s brigade of regulars, supported by Cadwallader’s brigade, assaulted the strong works; while the rifles stood ready to flank, and at a signal one rush was made, the works carried, twenty two guns (some eighteen pounders and O’Brien’s guns taken at Buena Vista) captured, and also eleven hundred prisoners, sixty wagon loads of ammunition, three hundred pack mules, and eighteen thousand dollars in money, besides killing more than 700 men; all this was done in seventeen minutes by the watch, with a loss on our part of only forty seven men killed and wounded.

Leaving our prizes, Shield’s brigade pursued the enemy to Tlalpan, followed by all the troops under Pillow, when Gen. Scott ordered Twiggs by one road, Pillow by another, and Worth by a third, to advance upon the enemy, then in large force and strong position (18000) men at churubusco, and the tete du pont near by.

Worth drove the enemy from San Augustine, who fled to the tete du pont. At these places an obstinate resistance was made for two hours and more, when the enemy fled to the city, followed by the dragoons and light troops to the very gates, leaving upwards of 300 dead and 1000 prisoners, besides a dozen guns and large quantities of fixed ammunition. Our loss was about 1000 and forty killed and wounded. Here we captured about sixty of our deserters, fifty of whom we hanged last week.

In the three fights we lost many of our best and noblest officers in the service.

Gen. Scott wisely recalled the troops, as, by entering the city, (which could most readily have been done,) the authorities would have been dispersed, and all chances of peace dispelled forever.

On the 21st Gen. Mora, chief engineer of Mexico, came out, and, meeting Gen. Scott at Colucan, made propositions for a truce. The advance of the army moved to Misquaka and Tacabaya, and on the 24th a truce was signed, and Mr. Trist met the four Mexican commissioners, when negotiations were commenced.

During the first four days of the truce there were so many palpable violations of it, in stonning our teamsters, murdering our men, receiving reinforcements, laboring on their forts, that, finally on the 6th September, Gen. Scott demanded explanation, apology, and redress, or the reopening of hostilities. Santa Anna having sent an undignified and impertinent answer to Gen. Scott on the 7th, Gen. Worth, with 2200 regulars, assaulted the mill of San Salvador, defended by the Mexican army, 16000 men, commanded by Santa Anna in person, drove the whole of them from the field, blowing up the foundry at the mill, taking 6 guns, a good supply of ammunition, seven hundred prisoners, and killing and wounding two thousand five hundred Mexicans. Our loss was above seven hundred killed and wounded.

By the morning of the 12th September, our engineers had a thorough reconnaissance of every position; and while Twiggs division was making a strong demonstration at the San Antonio. Gen scott had matured his plans to make the strong castle of Chapultepec by assault.

The 12th was occupied in bombarding this castle, and in the morning of the 13th five hundred picked men, supported by Quitman on our right, Pillow in the centre, and Worth on our left, carried Chapultepec at the point of the bayonet. At this place we killed some three or four hundred, and took above three hundred prisoners and an immense quantity of ammunition. A Mexican was killed in the act of setting fire to three mines, with the intention of blowing up the castle and killing every soul in it. Gen. Smith's brigade joined Quitman's division in this fight. Riley's brigade was ordered up from the San Antonio gates.

Having secured our prizes, Quitman's division and Smith's brigade took the Tacubaya road, while Pillow's and Worth's divisions took the San Cosme road, and pursued the enemy to the gates of the city, which after some fighting were carried. At these places our loss was very great, but it is not yet ascertained. Worth's division dug their way half a mile through stone walls, took to the house tops, and carried every thing before them. Santa Anna, knowing that next morning we would drive him out, evacuated the city with all his army, and on the 14th we took position of the palace.

On the morning of the 14th Sept. Gen. Scott and staff entered the city, and after reviewing the troops were escorted to the palace.

As the troops were about to move to then quarters, a large body of lopers commenced firing on our men from the house tops, and a general street fight ensued which was kept up for two days and nights, when their priests and authorities, finding the lopers worsted, called on Gen. Scott, who stopped the further effusion of blood by recalled the troops and everything is now as quiet as if no hostilities existed. We killed nearly 1000 lopers and lost in killed and wounded about 100 men.

History cannot point to more brilliant actions nor to a more successful campaign. Every effort of our arms had been crowned with success and every officer and soldier had rendered himself worthy of his country's everlasting gratitude. [MDT]
At daylight on the 13th all were expectation. At 6 the order came for Smith's storm the next morning at daylight.

In the afternoon a call was made for 250 picked men from the fortress hope, to while then fire was scarcely less hot. It lasted all day and only ceased with daylight.

Every ball went crushing through the building and every sheel tore up the ramparts, we could see the whole of it from where we were, and a most splended sight it was.

Into position at Tacubay, for bambarding Chapeltepc, commenced firing at daylight.

Arrived at Piedad, where we bivonacked. The next day the batteries having been got into position at Tacubay, for bambarding Chapeltepc, commenced firing at daylight.

We could see the whole of it from where we were, and a most splended sight it was.
Every ball went crushing through the building and every sheel tore up the ramparts,

In the afternoon a call was made for 250 picked men from the fortress hope, to storm the next morning at daylight.

At daylight on the 13th all were expectation. At 6 the order came for Smith's brigade to march to Tacabaya. In ten minutes we were on the road and in a hurry for fear we might be too late. We got into the village and marched down to support Gen. Quitman in the road. The firing from the Castle was very heavy as our column passed in the rear of our own batteries but luckily it fell a few yards short. One by one, we crept through a ditch, which partially sheltered us until the two leading companies were ordered to deploy as many skirmishers, when off we started across the open field and drove the enemy from behind a row of mangy plant; and took their place. We were then formed nearly as follows:

The stormers were in the road at the foot of the hill, on the right looking toward the city; on the right of the road in a ditch, partially sheltered from the enemy's fire was Gen. Smith's brigade while tow of our companies were deployed in a ditch perpendicular to the road, and about one hundred and fifty yards from the enemy's batteries. Gen. Pillow division attacked on the left of the hill opposite us. After about an hour's hard firing, the enemies began to stacken, and the word was given to charge. We rushed forward and in three minutes carried the entire battery. The rifles entered the battery with the storming party, which was commanded by one of the captains. We followed the fugitives close up to the aqueduct, and turning tot he left clambered up the steep path to the castle. The enemy running down the crowds, and the slaughter was tremendous in the road and orchard. Our men were infuriated by the conduct of the Mexicans at Molino del Rey, and took but few prisoners. The castle was completely torn to pieces. Nearly every part was reded by our shot while the pavement and fortifications were completely torn up by the shells. I am afraid the prosperity of the Mexican Military Academy has been seriously checked. In it were crowds of prisoners of every rank and color among them fifty general officers and about an hundred cadets. The latter were pretty little fellows, from ten to sixteen years of age. Several of them were killed fighting like demons and indeed they showed an example of courage worthy of imitation by some of their superiors in rank.

Leaving this captured fortress with the starts and stripes waving over in a hundred places, we prepared for the pursuit. The road leading from Chapultepec to the capital is a perfect strait and broad carriage way, in the centre of which runs the aqueduct that supplies the city with water. It is supported upon stone arches of about 8 feet span and height. The bottom of which are about a foot higher than the road. Smith's brigade was intended as a support to Quitman's but it formed so quickly that it became the attacking party, instead of the reserve and dashed up the road in full pursuit. The enemy soon commenced a heavy fire upon us from a strong battery across the road and death again found us., after it seemed tot have left us for tttheay. At last we crawled up close to the battery and our death dealing rigles told with fearful effect. Closer and closer, from arch to arch, we crept, until forward rifles throughout every man with a yell, and the battery was ours. Again commenced our slow and deadly march as we gradually approached the garrilla or gate of the city, the enemy retreating slowly before us. As soon as they crossed the gate a tremendous fire of artillery opened upon us on both sides of the aqueduct as well as from two flanking batteries on both sides of the road. Here our loss was very great, slowly creeping from arch to arch we lost many men by the batterieise in front while the fire from flanking batteries coming through the arches kelled many who were safe from that in front. About noon we got close up to the garritat and the enemy's fire being partly silenced by our artillery in the road, and thus being driven out of the cross battery on the left, we once more gave the rifle yell and charged the garrita. Again we were first and at 20 minutes past one, on the 14th of September the regiment again went forward and assisted by some other s we occupied a house and some of the arches and not only kept off but repelled four attempts at charges which they made. Meanwhile we had constructed a battery of sand bags at the garrita and kept up a sharp fire in front. Towards dark those in front were recalled and retired behind the battery. That night the battery was completed and the men slept on therearms in the arches of the aqueduct.

SO much for column of army. Immediately after the fall of Chapultepec, Gen. Worth's division filed round to the left and took the road to the gate of San Cosmo. Thus he soon reached with but little resistance to his progress, and establishing his batteries, he fired upon the rear of the citadel, and thus partially diverted their fire from us. HE entered the city late in the afternoon, some time after us. All night we lay there, cold and hungry, but ready for the next day's work. During the night two commissioners came in, who said that Santa Anna and his army had evacuated the city; that it was at our mercy, and that no further resistance would be offered to our entrance. The next morning at daylight we formed at the garrita and marched into the main plaza in front of the cathedral and the palace. And at 7 on the 15th of September the starts and stripes floated over the Halls of the Montezumas. General Worth's division arrived about an hour later and took possession of the Alameda.

About 8 a tremendous hurrah broke from a corner of the plaza, and in a few minutes were seen the towering plumes and commanding from of our gallant old hero Gen. Scott, escorted by the second dragoons. The heartfelt welcome that came from our little band, was men as Montezumah's Hall had never heard, and must have deeply affect the Gen. Well they might, for of the ten thousand gallant spirits that welcomed him at Puebla nearly 7000 were left. Contreras, Churebusco, San Antonio, El Mundo del Rey, Chapultepec and the Garrita had laid low 3000 of our gallant army, and filled with grief and sorrow the hearts of all the rest.

Gen. Scott enterd the palace. But some random firing began to be heard in different parts of the city, and the whistling balls became the must of the day. The mob of the city had risen, and from behind walls and windows the cowardly leperos fired upon our men in revenge. The firing soon became sharper, and many of our men were wounded in the plaza. Some of them were sent out as skirmishers, and the firing became general; cannon were placed at the corners of the streets leading into the plaza, and we soon cleared them with grape and canister. Many houses were broken open to get at the house tops, and a great many were plundered by the very men who were firing upon us, and of course it was laisd to us. Some fifty or sixty of thiere men were killed in a single house and though they wounded a good many of our we killed 5 for one. This lasted till dark. When we were matched into the yard and quartered there for the night, leaving the artilllery to guard the plaza.

The firing commenced again the next morning, but ws stopped before night by killingsome 200 leperos, and from Gen. Scott's threat of blowing up every house from which firing proceeded. The next day we werer un arched into tolerable quarters and once more made ourselves as comfortable as we could. But ah we were weary men! For 5days wehad not changed our clothes or taken off or arms. WE had not slept in a bed or had a comfortable meal; for three days and nights we had been under constant fire and for two nights we had not slept. I rejoice in the glorious laurels which the rifles have won. It is as all at knowledge the fighting regiment of the army. It entered Chapultepec simultaneously with the storming party. It was first in all the enemy's works from Chapultepec tot he citadel. It was the first to plant its triumphant banner on the palace of the Montezumas. Where bloody work work was tob e done, the rifles ws ithe cry, and there they were. All speak of them in terms of praise and admiration. Let me give you but a single instance. Some of their officers and men were standing together when Ge Scott happened to ride by. Checking his horse he returned their salute saying with greatd energy and emphasis "brave rifles gentlemen" you have been baptised in fire and blood and have ocme out steel! Had you seen the unbidden tear stealing to the eyes of these rough but gallant spirits whose hearts knew no fear, and who had never yet in their long trial, faltered or gallen ack, while their dashing eyes and upright forms bespoke its truth, you would havefelt with me that such words as those wiped out long months of hardship and suffering. But what todl still more the tale of suffering and death, were the deserien reanks and scanty numbers of that gallant regiment. 500 sturdy men left Jefferson Barracks for the plains of Mexico: one hundred and fifty nine have ment us here and now one hundred and seventy alone are left to tell the tale! The fate of the rest you know already. Chapultepec's bloody hill, Mexico's capital have cost us an 100 noble fellows, while seven officers have felt that the rifles were doomed. Our gallant Mahjor lost his arm early in the day. Palmer has a greape shot in is thigh. One of our captains saved his fate by half and inch, while therest whose slighter wounds permit them to be about, attend to duty from necessity.
News still sad have I to tell. Lieut. Morris of the 8th is dead. He was shot through the ankle at Molino del Rey while acting most bravely, and died in the hospital beloved by his regiment lamented by all. He was buried with the honors of war, together with three officers of his regiment. Of 17 officers in his regiment 9 were wounded and 4 died in the battle. Worthy son of a worthy sire! He died with his harness on an the tears of soldiers lament his fate. Rodgers fell at Chapultepec: he was a noble fellow and is bewailed by all who knew him. He died on the spot and his face wore an expression of most beautiful expression imaginable. Foster badly wounded in the leg on the 8th. Palmer wound is not severe, the shot was spent and struck him on the arm and hip bone. The ball was taken out of his boot, and he is now walking about though lame. He behaved admirably. Schuvier Hamilton is nearly recovered I met him in the street yesterday looking thin and pale, but much better and in another week he intends to return to his staff duties. He is in excellent spirits.

Lieut. Graham of the dragoons, is getting better fast, as also, Lieut. Thorn, who was slightly wounded in the action of the 8th. Since we entered the valley of Mexico, we have lost upwards of 25 killed.

Since our communications were cut off with Vera Cruz about the 1st of June, there has been the greatest difficulty in getting letters forward. The only way in which it could be done was by paying a Mexican a couple of hundred dollars to carry a few down in his saddle. This letter I send you by the courier of the British minister, and trust it will reach you safely. We are quartered in a college nearer the palace, with good quarters for men and officers and are quite comfortable. The other regiments were quartered about in the public buildings of the city. They have good accommodations for the sick and wounded, and as the rainy season is nearly over, the surgeon says the climate is very favorable.

We have now whipped the nation thoroughly and if they will only stay whipped we shall be home soon. Santa Anna has resigned the presidency the whole army is disbanded and broken up, and Santa Anna it is generally believed has gone to Guatemala and thence to Cuba. Pena Y Pena is president, and people talk again of peace. Yours as ever, &c.

NNR 73.138-140 30 OCT 1847 March from Puebla, the battles at Contreras and Churubusco

March From Puebla and the Battle of Contreras and Churubusco

We left Puebla on the morning of the 7th, and entered upon a beautiful rolling country of great fertility, supplying with its gardens the inhabitants of Puebla with food, and surrounded by lofty mountains, some of which were covered with snow. Our road was gradually ascending, and so good that on looking back from the head of the head of the column our train could be seen for miles in rear, dotting with its snow-white tops the maguey-covered plain. On our left was Popocatapetl, and Izcatapetl, the snow on their not distant tops rendering the air quite chilly. Gen. Scott did not leave with us, but came on the next day with Capt. Kearney’s dragoons.

The second day’s march was like the first, gradually ascending, passing through defiles, narrow passes, and over damp chasms, where a more determined enemy might have seriously annoyed us by merely making use of the obstacles. Nature everywhere presented. Thick woods of the finest forest trees were abundant, and the rugged nature of the country would readily carry one back to the northern parts of New England, or the passes of the “Notch” Here and there beautiful little lakes were interspersed in the deep valleys, and the clearness and coldness of their waters were almost incredible.

The third day we were to encounter the much vaunted pass of “Rio Frio” and also the passage of the mountain which was to lead us to the El Dorado of our hopes, the great plan of Mexico. Our march was to be long and difficult, and three o’clock saw us underway, with heart and hopes full of the prospect before us. The much dreaded pass is reached and passed. The mountains which skirt the road on the left here close upon it for about a mile, overhanging and enfolding it completely, and affording with their crests most excellent coverings for enemy marksmen. The newly cut trees and long range of breastworks thrown up on the crest, showed us that preparations had been made, while numerous parapets with embrasures in the logs taught us what might have been done. But no men were there; the muskets and cannon were gone. Valencia, with 6000 Mexicans was full a days march ahead, making for Mexico with a speed which betrayed homesickness. Rio Frio was found to be a little stream pouring down from the snow mountain, of icy coldness and crystal purity. After a slight pause for refreshments, we commenced our assent of the ridge which seperates the plains of Puebla, and Mexico, the former of which it had hitherto skirted. For several long miles we toiled up the hill, only recompensed for our labor by what we hoped to attain at last. When all were pretty worn out, a sudden turn in the road brought to our view a sight which none can ever forget. The whole vast plain of Mexico was before us. The coldness of the air, was most sensibly felt at that great height, our fatigue and danger were forgotten, and our eyes were the only sense that thought of enjoyment. Mexico, with its lofty steeples and its chequered domes, its bright reality, and its former fame, its modern splender and its ancient magnificense, was before us; while around on every site its thousands of lakes seemed like silver stars on a velvet mantle.

We encamped that night at the base of the mountain, with the enemy’s scouts on every side of us. The next day we reached Ayetta, only fifteen miles from Mexico by the National road, which we had hitherto been following. Here we halted until Generals Quitan, Pillow, and Worth, with their divisions, should come up. We were separated from the city by the marshes which surrounded Lake Tezcuco, and by the lake itself. The real is a causeway running through the marsh, and is commanded by a steep and lofty hill called El Pesol. This hill completely entilades and commands the National Road, and had been fortified and repaired with the greatest care by Santa Anna. One side was inaccessible by nature; the rest had been made so by art. Batteries, in all mounting fifty guns of different calibers, had been placed on its sides, and a deep ditch, 24 feet wide and 10 feet deep filled with water, had been cut, connecting the parts already surrounded by marshes. On this side Santa Anna had 25000 men against our force of a little over 9000 all told.

On the 23rd we made a reconnaissance of the work, which was pronounced impracticable, as the lives of 5000 men would be lost before the ditch could be crossed. We continued our search, and found another road, which went around on the left, but when within 5 miles of the city were halted by roaming suddenly among 5 batteries on the hill which commanded this road, at a place called Mexicalcango. We soon countermarched and then saw our danger. With one regiment and three companies of cavalry, in all about 400 men, we saw that El Panol lay directly between us and our camp, distant about 15 miles. Every eye was fixed on the hill with expectation of an approaching column which should drive us back into a Mexican prison, while we sped off with the speed and endurance of 400 Capt. Barelays! At about midnight we arrived safely at camp, and Gen. Scott did us the honor of calling it the “boldest reconnaissance of the war.” Gen Worth was encamped about 5 miles off—that is, in a straight line-across the Lake Chalco, at a place of the same name, but about ten miles by the road. The Mexicans had a foundry in the mountains, at which we were getting some shells made, and on returning from which Lieut. Schuyler Hamilton was badly wounded.

By means of his scouts, Gen. Worth had found a path round the left of Lake Chalco, which led us to the western gate of the city, and which up to that time, had not been fortified. On the 14th the other divisions commenced their march, while we brought up the train and the rear. In the morning, the train was sent in advance, while South’s brigade acted as rear guard. It was composed of the rifles, 1st artillery on the 3rd infantry with Taylor’s battery. As the rear guard, marched slowly along, came up with the train, word came to Gen. Twiggs that a force of about 5000 men were trying to cross the road between them and the train in order to cut it off. We were then passing through a small village which, by a curious coincidence, ws called Buena Vista. On our left were large fields of half-grown barley, through which ws seen advancing in splended order the enemy’s column. It was the most splended sight I have ever seen. The yellow cloaks, red caps, and jackets of the lancers, and the bright blue and white uniforms of the infantry, were most beautifully contrasted with the green of the barley field. Our line of battle was soon formed, and we deployed through the grain to turn their left and cut them off from the mountains. A few shots, however, from the battery soon showed them that they were observed and countermarching in haste they left their dead on the field. Thus ended our fight of Buena Vista. That night we staid at Chaleo. The next day we made along and toilsome march over a horrible road, through which with the utmost difficulty, we dragged our wagons by the assistance of both men and mules. The next was nearly the same, except that the road was, it possible, worse than before as the Mexicans had blocked it up with large stones, rolled down from the neighboring hills. This night we encamped at a most beautiful olive grove, of immense size and accommodating at once both divisions. In the town as well as in Chalco, there are still standing the churches of the Indians where the fire worshippers assembled before Cortez had introduced a new religion. They are large and somber edifices, differing but little from the churches on this country, and, being near the city, are said to have been formerly resorted to by the ancient kings.
The next day we arrived in sight of the rest of the army, and heard the guns which Worth was breaching the walls of San Antonio. That night the news of the death of Capt. Thornton, of the second dragoons, reached us. He was a brave officer and thorough gentlemen, but was always unfortunate in his military career.

On the morning of the 19th we left the little village where we had heard this sad news, and took the road to San Juan, about 7 miles to the west and only about 10 miles from the city. When we arrived here we heard the sound of Gen. Worth’s guns, who was said to have attacked San Augustine, a village three miles nearer the capital, where Santa Anna was said to be with 20000 men. When we arrived at San Juan the men were told to string their blankets across their shoulders, put their knapsacks into their wagons, and to put two days bread and beef in their haversacks. When this order came all knew that the time had come. The officers arranged their effects put on their old coats, and filled their haversacks and flasks. Soon we were ready for any thing but a thrashing. We here heard the position of the enemy which was nearly as follows: Santa Anna with 20000 men at San Augustine, Valencia, with 10000 was at a hill called Conteros, which commanded another road parallel to San Augustine but which led into it between the city and Santa Anna. Now, by cutting a road across it we could whip Valencia, we could follow the road up and get in between Santa Anna and Mexico, and whip him too. Gen. Worth was to keep Anna Santa in check, while Twiggs was to try and astonish Valencia which you will see he did very effectually. Pillow, with some of the ten regiments was to cut the road.

We left San Juan about 1 o’clock not particularly desiring a tight so late in the day, but still not shunning it in case we could have a respectable chance. About 2 p.m. as we had crawled to the top of a hill, whether we had been ourselves pulling Magruder’s battery and the mountain howitzers, we suddenly espied Valencia fortified on a hill about two hundred yard off, and strongly reinforced by a column which had just come out of the city. We laid down close to avoid drawn their fire, while the battery moved past at a full gallop. Just then General Smith manly voice rung out “Forward the rifles to support the battery.” On they went till we got about eight hundred yards from the work, when the enemy opened upon them with his ling guns, which were afterwards found to be sixteen and eight inch howitzers: The sound was the worst possible for artillery, covered with rocks large and small, pricky pear and cactus, intersected by ditches filled with water and lived with mangy plant, itself impermeable to cavalry, and with patches of corn which concealed the enemy’s skirmishes while it impeded our own passage. The artillery advanced but slowly under a most tremendous fire, which greatly injured it before it could be got in range, and the thickness of the undergrowth caused the skirmishes thrown forward to be their relative position as well as the column. About 4 the battery got in position under a most murderous fire of grape, canister, and round shot. Here the superiority of the enemy’s pieces rendered our fire nugatory. We could get but three pieces in battery, while they had 27, all them three times the caliber of ours. For two hours our troops stood the storm of iron and lead they hailed upon them unmoved. At every discharge they laid flat down to avoid the storm and then sprung up to serve the guns. At the end of that time two of the guns were were dismantled and we badly hurt: thirteen of the horses were killed and disabled and fifteen of the commoniers killed and wounded. The regiment was then recalled. The lancers had been repelled in three successive charges. The 2d infantry and 1st artillery had also engaged and successfully repelled the enemy’s skirmishes without loss of either officers or men. The greatest loss had been at the batteries. Officers looked gloomy for the first days fight, but the brigade was formed, and Gen. Smith in person took command. All felt revived and followed him with a yell as, creeping low to avoid the grape, which was coming very fast, we made a circuit in rear of the batteries and passing off to the right we were soon lost to the view in the chaparral and cactus.

Passing over the path that we scrambled through, behold us at almost 6 o’clock in the evening, tired, hungry, and sorrowful emerging from the chaparral and crossing the road between it an Valencia. Here we found Cadwallader and his brigade skirmishing in rear of the enemy’s works: Valencia was ignorant of our approach and we were as yet safe. Valencia was strongly entrenched and surrounded by a regular field work, concealed for us by an orchard in our rear. Mendoza with a column of 6000 was in the road but thinking us to be friends. On our right was a large range of hills whose continued crest was paralleled to the road, and in which we formed in time of battle 5000 of the best Mexican troops. On our left we were sperated for our own forces by an almost impassable wilderness, and it was not twilight. Even Smith looked round for help. Suddenly a thousand vivas came across the hill side like the yells of prairie wolves in the dead of night, and the squadrons on our right formed for charging. Smith is himself again! “Face to the rear!” What till see their red caps, and then give it to them. Furiosly they came on a few yards then changed their minds and disgusted at our cool redemption, retired to their coaches.
On the edge of the road, between us and Valencia, a Mexican hamlet spread out with its mud huts, large orchards, deep cut roads, and a strong church, and through the centre of this hamlet ran a path parallel to the main road, but concealed from us is nearly a mile long. In this road Smith's and Riley's brigade spent the night. Shields who came up in th night, lay in the orchard, while Cadwallader was nearest the enemy works. As we were within range of then batteries, which could enfilade the road in which we lay, we built a stone breastwork at either end to conceal ourselves from their view and grape. There wer completely surrounded by the enemy, cut off from our communincations, ignorant of the ground, without artilllery, wear, dispirited, and dejected. WE were a disheartened st, With Santa Anna and Salas's promise of no quarter a force of four to one against us, and one half defeated already, no succor from Puebla, and no news from Gen. Scott, all seemed dark. Suddenly the words came whispered along "we storm at midnight." Now we are ourselves again! But what a horrible night! There we lay, too tired to eat, toowet to sleep, in the middle of a muddy road in which men side by side with a heavy rain pouring down upon us, the officers with out blankets or overcoats, and the men worn out with fatigue. About midnight the rain was so heavy that the streams in the road flooded us, and there we stood crowded together, drenched and bunumbed, waiting till daylight.

At half past three the welcome word “fall in” was passed down, and we commenced our march. The enemy works were on a hill side, behind which rose other and slightly higher hills, seperated by deep ravines and gullies, and intersected by streams. The whole face of the country was a stiff clay, which rendered it almost impossible to advance. We formed our line about a quarter of a mile from the enemy’s works, Riley’s brigade on our right. At about 4 we started, winding through a thick orchard which effectually concealed us, even had it not been dark, debaughing into a deep ravine which ran within about 500 yards of the work, and which carried us directly in rear and out of sight of their batteries. At dawn of day we reached our place after incredible exertions, and got ready for our charge. The men threw off their we blankets and looked to there pieces, while the officers got ready for a rush, and the first smile that lit up our faces from twelve hours boded but little good for the Mexicans. On the right and opposite the right of their works was Riley brigade of the 2d and 1st infantry and 4th artillery next was rifles, then the 1st and 3rd artillery. In rear of our left was Cadwallader’s brigade, as a support with Shields’ brigade in rear as a reserve-the whole division under command of Gen. Smith, in the absence of Gen. Twiggs. They had a smooth place to rush down on the enemy works, with the brow of the thill to keep under until the word was given.

At last just at dayulight Gen. Smith slo wyly walking up, asked if all was ready. A look answered him. "Men Forward." And wedid. Springing up at once Riley’s brigade opened, when the crack of a undred rifles started the Mexincans from their astonishment, and they opened fire. Useless fired for they were so close that they overshot us, nd before they could turn their pieces on us we were on them. Then such cheers arose as you never heard. The men rushed forward like demons, yelling and firing the while. The carnage ws frightful and though they fired sharply it was of no use. The earthen parapet was cleared in an instant, and the blows of the stocks could be plainly heard mingled with the yells and groans around. Just before the charge was made, a large body of lancers came winding up the road looking most splendidly in their brilliant uniforms. They never got to the work but turned and fled. In an instant all was one mass of confusion, each rying to be foremost in the flight. The road was literally blocked up and while many perished by their own guns, it was almost impossible to fire on the mass from the danger of killing our own men. Some fled up the favine on the left or on the right, and many of these were slain by turning their own guns on them. Forwards the city the rifles and 2d infantry led off the pursuit. Seeing that a large crowd of the fugitives jammed up in a pass in the road, some of our men rean througnthe cornfield and by thus heading them off and firing down upon them about thirty men took over 500 prisoners nearly a hundred of them officers. After disarming the prisoners as the pursuit had ceased, we went back to the fort, where we found our troops in full possession and the rout complete.

We found that the enemy’s position was much stronger than we had supposed, and their artillery much larger and more abundant. Our own loss was small, which may be accounted for by their perfect surprise at our charge, as to them we appeared as if rising out of the earth, so unperceived ws our approach. Our loss ws one officer killed, Captain Hatison of the 7th Infantry and Lieut. Van Buren of the rifles shot through the leg, and about fifty men killed or wounded. Their force consisted of 8000 men under Valencia with a reserve which had not yet arrived under Santa Anna. Their loss as since ascertained was follows: killed and burried since the fight, 750; wounded 1000, and 1500 prisoners, exclusive of officers including four generals-Salas, Mendoza, Garera, and Guadalupe-in addition to dozens of colonels, majors, captains, etc. WE captured in all on the hill 22 pieces of cannon, including five 8 inch howitzers two long 18, three long 16, and several of 12 and 8 inches, and also the two identical 6 pounders captured by the Mexicans at Buena Vista taken from Captain Washington's battery of the 4th infantry. The first officer who saw them happened to be the officer of the 4th selected by General Scott to command the new battery of that regiment, Captain Drum. In addition were taken immense quantities of ammunition and muskets; in fact, the road was streamed with muskets, escopets, lances and flags. Large quantities of horses and mules were captured though large numbers were killed.

At 8 a.m. we formed again, and Gen. Twiggs having taken command we started on the road to Mexico. We had hardly matched a mile before we were sharply fired upon on the side of the road, and our right was deployed to drive the enemy in- We soon found that we had caught up with the retreating party, for the very brink firing in front. And we drove them through the little town of San Angelo, where they had been halting in force. About half a mile from this town we entered the suburbs of another called San Katherina, when a large party in the church yard fired and the head of the column and the balls came right amongst us-Our men kept rushing on ther tear and cutting them down, until a discharge of grape shot from a large piece in front drove them back to the column. In this short space another 5 men where killed, 10 taken prisoner and a small color captured, which was carried the rest of the day.

Meanwhile Gen. Worth had made a demonstration in San Antonio, where the enemy was fortified in a strong something, but they retired on his approach to Churubusco, where the works were deemed impregnabel. They consisted of a terrified his chichaad, which was surrounded by a high and thick wall on all sides. Inside the all was a stone building, the road of which was flat and higher than the walls. Above all this was a stone church, still higher than the rest and havign a large steeple. The wall was pierced with loop holes and so arranged that there were two tiers of men firing at the same time. They had four different ranges of men firing at once, and four ranks where formed on each range, and placed at such a height that they could not only overlook at the surrounding country, but at the same time they had plunging fire upon us. Outside the hacienda, and completely commanding the avenue of approach was a field work and protected by a deep wet ditch, and armed with seven large pieces. This hacienda is at he commencement of the causeway leading to the western gate of the city, and had to be passed before getting on the road. About three hundred yards in rear of this work another field work had been built where a cross road meets the causeway at a point where in crosses arrived, huts forming a bridge head, or tete de pont. This was also a very strong , and armed with three very large pieces of cannon. The workks were surrounded on every side by large cornfield , which were filed with the enemy’s skirmishers so that it was difficult to make a reconnaissance. It was therefore coerced to make an attack immediately s they were out of men and extended for nearly a mile on the road to the city, completely covering the causeway. The attack commenced about 1 p.m. Gen Twiggs’s division attacked on the side towards which they approached the fort; that is, opposite the city. Gen. Worth’s attacked the bridge head, which he took in about 5th hour and a half; while generals Pillow and Quitman were on the extreme left, between the causeway and Twiggs division. The rifles were on the head and in the rear of the work, entrusted by General Scott with eh tasd of charging the work in case General Pierce gave away. The firing was most tremendous-in fact, one continued roll wihile the combat lasted. The enemy, from their elevated position, could readily see our men, who were unable to get a clear view from their position. Three of the pieces were manned by the deserters, a body of about one hundred, who had deserted from the ranks of our army during the war. They were intold on to companies, commanded by a deserter., and were better uniformed and desiplined that the rest of the army. These men fought desperately, and are said only to have shot down several of our officers whom they knew, but to have pulled down the white flag o surrender no less than 3 times.

The battle raged most furiously for about three hours, when both sides having lost a great many, the enemy began to give way. As soon as they commenced retreating, Kearny’s squadron passed through the tete de pont, and charging through the retreating column, pursued them to the very gate of the city. As they got within about 5 hundred yards of the gate they were opened upon with grape and canister, and several officers wounded. Amongst the number was Captain Kearney, first dragoons, who lost his left arm above the elbow. Our loss in the second battle was large. We lost in seven officers; Captains Capron, Burke, 1st artilllery; Lieuts. Iron, Johnston, Hoffman. Captain Anderson, Lieut. Easely, 21 infantry; Captain Hanson, 7th infantry. Leuit. Irons, died on the 28th. Col. Cutler of South Carolina, and about thirty officers wounded, exclusive of the volunteers. The official returns give our loss in killed and wounded at 1150, besides officers. The Mexican loss is 500 killed in the second battle, 1000 wounded, and 1100 prisoners, exclusive of officers. Three more generals were taken, among then Gen. Rincon and Anaya, the provisional president; also, ten pieces of cannon and an immense amount of ammunition and stores. Santa Anna, in his report. States his loss in killed, wounded,
Thus ended the battle of Churubusco, one of the most furious and deadly for its length, in the war. For reasons which he deemed conclusive, General Scott did no enter the city that night, but encamped on the battlefield, about four miles from the western gate of the city. The next day a flag of truce came out, and propositions were made which resulted in an armistice.

Meanwhile, the army in encamped in the villages around the city, recruiting from their fatigue and nursing the sick and wounded. There are but few sick, and the wounded are getting along comfortably in their hospital. [MDT]

The American Star says that General Bravo and staff were taken prisoners by a portion of the New York regiment, in Gen. Quitman’s division. Circumstances preventing their delivered by Gen. Quitman, they were taken to Chapultepec by Capt. Davis, aid to Gen. Q. On reading there, and finding the general in chief still at the castle, he reported to General Scott that he had General Bravo and staff prisoners of war. The general ordered Capt. Davis to bring the prisoners forward to where he was, when the general in chief and addressed Gen. Bravo as follows:

“I deeply regret meeting the valiant Gen. Bravo in misfortune. I have long and favorably know him, by fame. I trust we may soon be friends. I honor and respect him as an enemy.”

Gen. Bravo expressing his thanks for the courtesy extended to him by the general in chief, the latter directed that the former be taken into the citadel and furnished with as comfortable quarters as the convenience of the building would admit of.

On the 17th of September Gen. Scott republished his general orders, proclaiming martial law in places occupied by our troops, with important additions. We copy that portion by which contributors are levied upon the capital.

14. For the ease and safety of both parties, In all cities and towns occupied by the American army, a Mexican police shall be established and duty harmonized with the military police of the said forces.

15. This splendid capital, its churches and religious worship, its convents and monasteries, its inhabitants and property are moreover placed under the special safeguard of the faith and honor of the American army.

16. IN consideration of the foregoing protection a contribution of 150000 is imposed on the capital. To be paid in four weekly installments of thirty seven thousand five hundred dollars each, beginning on Monday next, the 20th inst, and terminating on Monday the 11th of October.

17. The Ayuntamento, or corporate authority of the city, is specially charged with the collection and payment of the several installments.

18. OF the whole contribution to be paid over to this army twenty thousand dollars shall be appropriated to the purchase of extra comforts from the wounded and sick in the hospital; twenty thousand dollars to the purchase of blankets and shoes for gratuitous distribution among the rank and file of the army, and forty thousand dollars reserved for other necessary military purposes.

The next order I dated the 18th, and assigns to the troops their different quarters in the city. The following are the paragraphs:

7. NO private house shall be occupied by any corps or officer until all suitable public buildings within the above ranges shall be first fully occupied, and all officers attached to troops shall be quartered with or near their troops respectively.

8. No rent shall be paid by the U.S. for any building occupation by troops or officers without a special direction from general headquarters; nor shall any private house be occupied as quarters without the free consent of the owner, or orders from general headquarters.

9. The collection of customs or duties at the several gates of the city, by the civil authority of the same, will be continued as heretofore until modified by the civil and military governor, according to the views of the general in chief; but supplies belonging to all quartermaster's and commissary's departments will at once be exempted from all duties.

Gen. Quitman's orders dated the 17th, allow unarmed persons, in the pursuit of their private affairs, to pass and repass the city gates and outposts, but none with arms without special leave. He also prohibits arms, ammunition, tobacco, or public property of any kind to be taken from the city.

Another order of Gen. Q allows the collections of customs and duties at the gates of the city as usual, save on supplies for the quartermaster's and commissary's departments. The proceeds are to be appropriated in the first instance to city expenses, and the residue as the general may direct.

According to the Monitor Republico of the 27th ultimo it was intimated by the civic authorities to Gen. Scott on the 25th that the contribution of 150000 levied upon the population, is ready for him. The amount was raised by a loan, so as not further to distress the inhabitants.[MDT]

NNR 73.140 30 OCT 1847 Gen. Winfield Scott's order concerning a conspiracy to surprise his forces

The following orders of Gen. Scott point to a danger by which he is beset

The general in chief has received through many kind sources, Mexican and others, undoubted information that an extensive conspiracy is on foot about us, to surprise by means of an insurrection our guards and quarters, and to murder our officers and men.

Mexican officers and soldiers, in disguise, who had not the courage to defend their capital are the leaders of the conspiracy, aided by some fifteen hundred thieves and murderers, who were turned loose for that purpose, and to prey upon the peaceful inhabitants, the night before the triumphal entered the American army into this city.

The conspirators have also services of several false priests, who dishonor the holy religion which they only profess for special occasion.

Until ready for the insurrection the disguised villains hope to do us much harm in detail. Their plan is to assassinate stragglers, particularly drunken men; to enlure individuals of small parties into shops to drink, and to stab them when in their cups; to entice our gallant Roman Catholic soldiers, who have done so much honor to our colors, to desert, under a promise of land in California, when our arms have already conquered, and which forever will remain part of the United States.

Let all our soldiers, Protestant and Catholic, remember the fate of the deserters taken at Churubusco. These deluded wretches were also promised money and land; but the Mexican government, by every sort of usage, drove them to take up arms against the country and flag they had voluntarily sworn to support, and next place them in front of battle—in positions from which they could not possibly escape the conquering valor of or glorious ranks. After every effort of the general in chief to save by judicious descrimination, as many of those miserable convicts as possible, fifty of them have paid for their treachery by an ignominious death on the gallows.

Again, the general in chief calls on his brethren in arms, of all grades, to be constantly on the alert, by day as by night; never to appear in the streets without side arms; to walk out only in parties of twos, threes, or more; and to avoid all obscure places, particularly treacherous drain shops and liquor stores. By command of Major Gen. Scott.

H.L. Scott, A.A.A.G.

Toluca, September 18, 1847
Circular by Dr. Jose Ramon Pacheco, secretary of state, to the governors of the different states:

Your excellency: After having sent to your excellency from the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo the manuscript decree issued from that city under yesterday’s date, by his excellency the president ad interim, have now the honor of sending you (blank) copies printed in this city, in order that your excellency may circulate them in the state which you so worthily govern, and that the nation may be informed that it is not left without a head, as his excellency, Gen. Don Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, previous to his march to commence his military movements against the base of the enemy’s operations, as developed by the constitution.

Impartial history will some day record whether fate or Providence may have decreed the causes which brought about the events which have just occurred in the capital, in consequence of which it is known to thousands of witnesses, and well understood by those only who truly feel its immense loss to their country. The fact is that one of the points which defended the entries to the city having been abandoned without any orders, and another point having been taken at the end of the day on the 13th, after a combat of fifteen hours, it was decided by a meeting of the general held that night in the citadel, that a continued resistance would only expose the city to pillage, and to all the acts of immortality to which a savage enemy abandons himself. This latter was a misfortune which his excellency wished to avoid at all hazards, and with a view to which he had at the very commencement caused the fortifications to be made at far advanced points. In order to retain on the other hand all his armament and the necessary means to continue the war, without owing them to a humiliating capitulation, it was resolved to evacuate the city that very night, conducting the whole army to the city of Guadalupe de Hidalgo, in order to take the next day, according to the intentions of his excellency, the road to Puebla, to redeem that city out of the power of the enemy, cutting off at the same time all communication with Vera Cruz.

The troops having already commenced that march, and having made some progress on the road, it became known, as much to our satisfaction as surprise, that the people, who the day before, although supported by the army and the valiant national guards, had taken no part in the struggle, had undertaken on their own account the extermination of the invaders. Immediately the army was countermarched, and two columns, one under the command of his excellency, and the other under Gen, Don Juan Alvarez, penetrated as far as the streets of Santo Domingo and La Cerea, handing some of the Americans. Subsequently, after some measures and other circumstances which it is unnecessary to mention, the heroic people of the capital were disarmed.
In undertaking to carry out his first intent, the most terrible obstacle to be encountered was the want of means. The troops had been five days without support. His excellency the president had exhausted all his personal resources. From the 19th of August, the date of the misfortune at Padierna, to which our present situation is to be ascribed, up to that day—that is twenty six days—not a man nor a dollar had been sent from any part. How could it be exacted, or even expected, that the city of Mexico, which had already made so many sacrifices, should alone carry on the war and bear the weight of the burdens which are destroyed the nation. To the evils of the war, caused by the invaders, it would not have become the government to add those of making the army live at the expense of the people; and yet to disband the troops, in order that they might devastate the roads and villages, would have been a still greater evil. The difficulty was insuperable, as there was no food on that day for the soldiers, and the situation was dreadful. His excellency, the president, since his return to the republic, has above all had to contend with difficulties of his nature, and to them is to be attributed the greater part of our misfortunes; but rather than destroy a force which, after being purified and organized in a different manner, could still be rendered serviceable to the nation, he embraced the middle course, of dividing the army into sections, under the command of tried officers, giving them instructions as to the roads they were to take, his excellency reserving for himself a part of the cavalry. In this manner were obviated the great evils of a desbandment of the army: the burden was distributed so as not to weigh on as single district, and above all it furnishes to the states of the interior a nucleus which they could increase or shape as they might like, in order to carry on the war, which they have all demanded, without listening to any propositions of peace from the enemy.

The government has not taken a step, nor has it had a single communication with the enemy but what is within the reach of all his compatriots, nor has it been bound by any compromise past, present, or future. If in the publications which have been made it may have excited surprise, and not without reason, not to have found the discussions which were expected. From the general and the commissioner of the government of the United States, it was that the contempt with which they treat us, and the unblushing determination which they have taken to carry on a war the most infamous and sanguinary for their simple diversion and pleasure, no other answer could be given, except through the cannon's mouth and death.

His excellency the president ad interim orders the undersigned to communicate to your excellency the preceding exposition, at the same time transmitting to you the decree of his resignation, reserving to himself to give at a proper time to his fellow citizens a circumstantial manifesto; he has also enjoined him particularly to state it, his name to the new constitutional government, that he will not lay down his arms against the enemy of his country until this government, or whatever government may be nominated by the nation or congress, shall order him to lay them down; that he will be its firmest support against any revolution, as also in every matter which may be determined as to the American question, be it peace or war; that he will comply in his quality of subject with national will legitimately expressed as he always has done in his capacity of first magistrate, and that his excellency wishes to be the first to give an example of submission to the laws of God and liberty!

I have the honor to be, with distinguished consideration,

PACHECO.

NNR 73.141 30 OCT 1847 communication to the "National Intelligencer"

To the editors: I have seen in the last Intelligencer the proclamation of the governor of Mexico to its inhabitants, You truly say of it that for its lofty and unterrified tone it would do honor to any page of Roman annals. IF you had known Mr. Oraguibel, the governor, as I do, you might have aided that these annals would be searched in vain for a nobler example of lofty and disinterested patriotism. If there is one man alive who is capable of enacting the parted Curtius it is Francisco Olagüibel. HE is a distinguished and hard working lawyer, and has always been opposed to Santa Anna, and never would take office under him in the palmy days of his power. He published, some five years since, at his own expense, a small newspaper called El Diablo Caguelo, dedicated entirely to the unmeasured denunciation, ridicule, and exposure of Santa Anna, then at the height of his power. There was no office which he could not have commanded as the price of his adhesion, but there was none which he would accept, preferring to live in humble and virtuous poverty upon his professional earnings. He was at the head of the party called Exaltados, or those devoted to this country and its institutions. The object of his idolatry is Washington, and he always wears a miniature likeness of him in his bosom-unlike almost every other Mexican gentleman who wears a costly jewel. ON the 4th of July and other festivities of the Americans in Mexico he was always an invited guest, and the only Mexican who was. I venture the assertion that no American ever applied to him for an act of a friendship an was released. How idle to talk of a peace party in Mexico when such a man as he breathes nothing but eternal war-war to the knife! Since Kosciusko the world has seen no sublimer spectacle of "A brave man struggling with the storms of fate, and nobly failing a failing state." IF there were but one such man in Mexico I would not break that one great heart for all the hands of the republic.

The note of the Mexican secretary of state to the commissioners, and also their note to MR. Trist, are touchingly pathetic. Courteous, even to kindness, subdued, despairing, yet firmly resolved, they say we cannot cede New Mexico. Sentiments of honor and delicacy, more than a calculation of merit, forbid it. "NO portion of our people are more devoted, in the nationality of their feelings, or have made so many sacrifices on that account. WE cannot consent to sell them, like cattle, for money.
Never! Let the nationality of the rest of the republic perish with them. Let us perish together!"

Noble sentiments! Which must find a response in every patriotic heart. Would we, under a like or under any extremity of suffering, transfer to a foreign power one of the states of this Union? Is it not urged as one of the strongest of our claim which would, even without the initial signature, disclose to most of our readers its authorship. For the information of those, however, who may not recognize it, we state that the position, social, geographical, and political, of this writer, and the opportunities which he has had of acquiring knowledge on the subject, entitle every word that he utters concerning it to the grave attention both of the government and the people of the United States.

NRR 73.144 30 OCT 1847 Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna summons Col. Thomas Childs to surrender at Puebla, is refused

Postscript-By the steam ships Fanny and James L Day, Vera Cruz dates to the 19th are received. No dispatches, "not even a well authenticated rumor" from Gen. Scott’s army had reached Vera Cruz.

On the 25th Sept., Santa Anna summoned Col. Childs to surrender at Puebla, assuring him that 8000 men would assault his post in case of refusal. The reply of the Col was of course a refusal. On the 28th heavy cannonading between the parties, which gradually subsiding, was nearly discontinued by the 2d Oct. On the 1st Oct. Santa Anna at the head of 2000 cavalry and infantry, and three pieces of artillery sallied out of Puebla with the design of attacking the train which left Jalapa on the 1st and entered Perota on the 4th. On arriving at Tepeyahualco, however Santa Anna's whole force, except 130 hussars of his personal guard, "pronounced" against him and left him. At the same time he received an order from the government at Quaretaro, to march at once with all his forces to that place. Instead of obeying, he set out immediately for Oaxaca, he declared for the purpose of raising another army. It was believed that his object was to escape to Guatemala.[MDT]

NRR 73.144, Col. 1 Oct. 30, 1847  Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna is Deserted by His troops, Defies Orders and Marches for Oaxaca to Raise a New Army

By the steam ships Fanny and James L. Day, Vera Cruz dates to the 19th are received. No despatches, "not even a well authenticated rumor" from Gen. Scatt's army had reached Vera Cruz.

On the 25th Sept., Santa Anna summoned Col. Childs to surrender at Puebla, assuring him that 8,000 men would assault his post in case of refusal. The replay of the Col. Was of course a refusal. On the 28th heavy cannonading between the parties, which gradually subsiding, was nearly discontinued by the 20 Oct.

On the 1st Oct. Santa Anna at the head of 2,000 cavalry and infantry, and three pieces of artillery sallied out of Puebla with the design of attacking the train which left Jalapa on the 1st, and entered Perota on the 4th. Smuggling powder to Vera Cruz- Jose Maria Carabajal, the Mexican who was arrested at New Orleans on the 4th inst. for shipping powder, invoiced as "cigaritos." to Vera Cruz, has been discharged from a criminal prosecution, the case not being embraced in the statute. He was required to give bail, however in the sum of $3200, for violating the city municipality, which, not being able to give, he was committed to jail. [KAS]

NNR 73.147 6 NOV 1847 example of expenditure in the war

War Expenditures- The secretary of the treasury, since the first of January 1st, has sent upwards of twelve million of dollars to N. Orleans, on account of army disbursements.

A letter to the New Orleans Bee, from the Rio Grande, says: "Two hundred government horses were sold at auction, a few days ago, at an awful sacrifice, not averaging more that ten dollars a head. They probably cost each ten times the same."

This reminds us of the transaction of the Florida war, when steamboat wood was furnished to the government at fifty dollars per cord, and bacon which cost the government twelve cents a pound was sold at two and three cents, and bought up by contractors to be again sold to Uncle Sam. When we see the items in the account of this Mexican war, this sale of horses will, by comparison, prove to be a mere circumstance. Many large fortunes will be made by government favorites at the expense of the people of the United States. There are a class of men in this country who, if consulted, would never have the country in a state of peace; not that they fight the battles of the country, or are inspired by the ambition to win a name. NO such idea enters into their heads. They stay at home and make money. Jobs and contracts are the fields of their ambition, and the greater the expense incurred by the country the wider is the field of their exploits. [Petersburg Int. [MDT]

NNR 73.148 6 NOV 1847 resolution of Whigs of New Hampshire, Whig state convention of Vermont, Gov. Horace Eaton's message
New Hampshire- The Whigs have nominated Nathaniel S. Berry for governor- Gov. Colby having declined a nomination for re-election.

A whig county convention lately held in the state of N.H. lately adopted the following resolution:

That, as citizens of a free country, we claim and shall exercise the right at all times in a candid but fearless manner, of expressing our opinions of the acts whether of the state or national administration, and whether those acts relate to peace or war; and that we regard the attempt of the president of the United States in his last message to brand as traitors all those citizens of the republic who do not yield a blind obedience to his will, and approve his conduct in the unconstitutional commencement of the present war with Mexico, as an insult to freemen, and fit only to emanate from one who rules over slaves.

The war is to be avoided at all times as a great calamity, especially by this country, as not congenial to the spirit of our institutions, or the feelings that should animate us in our intercourse with the nations of the earth; but that we regard the present war with Mexico as doubly hateful, inasmuch as it was unconstitutionally commenced by the act of the president, in disregard of the rights of congress, and as it is waged for the dismemberment of a sister republic, upon pretexts that are false, and for a purpose that is abhorrent to all feelings of humanity and justice; and that, although we award to the officers and men engaged in that war all the praise that is due to skill, energy, and courage, yet we regard the glory acquired by our arms as an inadequate compensation for the blood that has been shed, the treasure that has been wasted, and the indelible stain that has been cast upon our national character by the prosecution of a war of conquest and ambition, the first, as we hope it may be that last, in the history of the republic.

That is the duty of the whigs of the country, by all exertion in their power, to extricate the country from the condition into which it has been plunged by the madness of its rulers, and to procure a peace with Mexico as soon as it can be done consistently with the true honor and dignity of the American name, and, by the termination of the war, set an example of justice and magnanimity that shall reflect as much honor upon the character of the American people for exercise of the moral virtues as they have acquired by the display of those of a military and heroic kind.

Vermont- Gov. Eaton’s message, transmitted to the legislature of the 16th ult., is brief and in good taste. HE recommends a good law for the protection of the property of married women, similar to that which has been enacted in other states. The public schools are in a flourishing condition. The geological survey of the state is nearly completed. Ex governor Paine and MR. Marsh have been appointed to correspond with Hiram Powers respecting the statue of Ethan Allen and T. Crittenden, to be placed in the capital.

On national affairs, the governor says:

“I believe that the position of Vermont is distinctly understood in regard to all these great questions of national policy which are from time to time agitating the national councils, and in which Vermont, in common with other states of the Union, has so deep an interest, it affords occasion for the most profound regret that the unhappy war with a neighboring republic has not yet been terminated, but on the contrary, is making still greater and greater demands upon the blood and treasure of the nation. It is believed that Vermont has seen nothing in the progress of the contest: to change her sentiment, either in regard to the insufficiency of the grounds on which the war was commenced, or the unworthiness of the purposes for which it has been waged. She cannot recognize the general government as committed to any career of conquest, nor will she regard any unaccomplished schemes of territorial aggrandizement as presenting an obstacle to the speedy adjustment of existing difficulties. Peace she unequivocally and earnestly desires, and asks for no territory, whether slave or free, as a condition of its establishment and security.”

A Whig state convention was held at Montpelier on the 21 ult., Hon. Carlos Coolidge, presiding. Hons. Solomon Foote and Horace Everett were appointed delegates at large to the national convention to nominate a president, and A.P. Lyman, H. Cutts, H.E. Royce and Portus Baxter, delegates from the several districts.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing the war, approving of the Wilmot proviso, objecting to the acquisition of territory by conquest.

NNR 73.150 6 NOV 1847 Protest of the city council of Mexico City
The city council of Mexico, in the most solemn manner, in the name of their constituents, and in the face of the world, and of the commander in chief of the army of the United States, protest.-That though the chances of war have reduced the city of Mexico under the forces of the United States, is has never entered their mind to submit voluntary to any chief, person or authority, unless such as are recognized by the federal constitution, and sanctioned by the government of the republic of Mexico, whatever be the length of time for which the foreign power may continue its existence de facto. Resolved in the deliberation hall of the city council of Mexico, September 13th, 1847, at 11 o’clock, P.M. Signed by Manuel R. Veramendi and sixteen other members.

Next we have the propositions submitted by them to Gen. Scott, on his entrance into the city, which the general good naturedly told them he would take into consideration, and would assure them all the protection which the welfare of his command and the requirements of the war would permit. The propositions, considering the source whence they come, leave one in doubt whether to laugh at their folly or grow angry at their insolence.

First proposition-The churches and monasteries of both sexes, hospitals, and archives, colleges, and schools, private dwellings, and in general every species of property, movable and immovable, whether belonging to the commonwealth, to corporations or to individuals, shall be individually respected; nor shall the desecration, violation or occupation of any of them, by the forces of the United states, or by the chiefs and privates who compose them, be in any case allowed.

Second- The city shall be governed by the existing laws, and it will enjoy, as theretofore, its privileges; nor shall the forces of the United States, and their respective chiefs, in any case, enjoin upon it the observance of any enactment; which , in its nature, should belong to the legislative order.

Third- The administration of justice, in civil and criminal matters, shall be strictly carried on by the respective authorities of the country, and in accordance with the provisions of the federal constitution of the republic of Mexico.

Fourth- Should a vacancy occur in the government of the district, the members of the council will fill it up according to the requirements of law, without the direct or indirect interference of the armed forces in the designation of the individual who may be selected to fill such vacancy.

Fifth-Any vacancies or absences, among the judges of first, second, and third instance, shall be temporarily supplied, by the district governor, upon due submission by the municipal body.

Sixth- the forces of the United States shall not affect the municipal rents, nor the manner of their collection; but they will allow the free administration thereof and of the direct taxes, paid to the municipal body, whose duty it will be to apply them to the branches with which they are charged, and to the speedy and full dispensation of justice.

Seventh-The city council shall be permitted to keep up such armed force as may be necessary to maintain the security of the jails and the domestic peace of the community, upon agreement, with the general in chief of the forces of the United States, as to the number of said force,and the nature of the arms to be used for the objects in view.

Eighth- The national standard shall be kept flying over the municipal buildings.

Ninth- The forces of the United States shall be quartered in such places as may, on agreement with the general in chief, be assigned to them. Said officers will be pleased to forbid them any unnecessary rambling through the streets of the city, particularly at night; especially are they to be cautioned against entering into any political discussions, or indulging in any mention of the campaign, with the inhabitants of the city.

Tenth- The general and chief of the army of the United States will be pleased not to allow counter guerrillas or the rangers to enter the city.

Eleventh- The council will retain, for public purposes under its direction, the timbers, materials, and other appliances, which were used to maintain the war.

Twelfth- This agreement shall be religiously observed on the part of both the general in chief and the council of the city.
Hall of deliberation, of the city council of Mexico,
September 13, 1847.
(signed) Manuel R. Veramendi and sixteen others.

NBR 73.151 6 NOV 1847 resolution of synod of New School Presbyterians

Preamble and Resolutions just adopted by the Synod of the New School Presbyterian Church of New York and New Jersey

The synod of New York and New Jersey, considering the tendency of war to impede the progress of the gospel, by putting the innings of men in a state unfavorable to the influence of truth and the Holy Scripture, deem it proper and seasonable, in view of the fact that our country is now engaged in war with a neighboring nation, which, as far as it has proceeded, has been unusually sanguinary and disastrous, to express their solemn convictions in the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the synod regard this war both as an exhibition of human wickedness and as a dreadful scourge from the hand of God, which should lead the Church of Christ to great searching of heart, to deep humiliation and [prosination] of spirit, and to earnest supplication before the Thorne of Mercy.

Resolved, That it be recommended to all the ministers of the word belonging to this synod to labor, by prayer, preaching, and all other appropriate means, to impress the minds of men with a sense of the sinfulness and the evils of war, and especially of the existing war with Mexico.

Resolved, That the synod express the earnest desire that all the people, see eye to eye in reference to the present and prospective evils of the existing war, and the desirableness of its speedy termination.

NBR 73.151 6 NOV 1847 practical view of war

Practical View of the War- If there is any subject of the present day on which it is unnecessary to do more than give a plain statement of facts, in such a manner as may carry it home practically, to the minds of our readers it is the war in which this country is now engaged. The method by which the president and his party have secured to themselves an immense amount of patronage and pecuniary benefits, by virtually mortgaging their country, is a fearful instance of power wrongfully usurped. The cost so far as it can be calculated in dollars and cents is a very small portion of the evils incurred. Nothing of this kind can convey an idea of the value of the twenty thousand American lives already said to have been expended during this war. Men of all parties are tired of the war. The bloody triumphs of the battle field are heard now rather as alleviations of anxiety that as gratifying from their glory. Men are inclined to count their cost. Up to the third day of this month the expenses were more than one hundred and sixty seven millions of dollars. The calculations given below, are based upon the supposition that 120000000 are all that have been thus expended. Buffalonians are congratulating themselves upon the intended expenditure of 150000 in improving our harbor. Let us see what a portion only of the debt so recently contracted in war would have done for the country it invested in peaceable objects:

With $120000000 a school house and church might crown every hill top from the Penobscot to the Rio Grande, and teachers of knowledge and righteousness might do their mission of good without money or price for any one.

With $120000000, we might connect every town in our land by railroad; and the magnetic telegraph might be made to stretch its magic wires alone every thoroughfare, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

With $120000000, we might build such a navy as the world never saw, and carry on such a commerce as Venice, in the palmiest days, never dreamed of; our flag might float on every breeze, our sails whiten every sea, and our name be heard and feared in every house between the poles.

With $120000000, we might feed every poor man, clothe every beggar, and relieve every distress, not only once, but always, as long as the population of the globe did not exceed 950000000. Starvation, poverty and famine need never find a foothold on earth.

And more, with $120000000 we might give the Bible and tell the tidings of our holy faith to Heathen lands, to every foreign nation and to every human soul.

The government complains that the post office department is a heavy tax upon the treasury, on account of the low rates of postage. Devote four months interest of the Mexican war debt to this end, and our people would never hear the word "postage."

The government doles out with a miser’s hand, and a miser’s spirit, trifling, pitiful sums, for harbors in our western rivers and lakes. Devote two months interest of the Mexican war debt to this end, and no more petitions for appropriations would come from the people of the west.

This is the way to calculate the cost of the war; and these are not idle fancies. Let no reader be satisfied, until he works, with his pencil, each one of these statements. Figures will verify them all. Is our country able to squander money in this wise? Is gold a matter of such little concern, as to be disposed of in this summary manner? What says the farmer, whose taxed lands help to heap up these hoards of wasted money? What says the mechanic, whose taxed "occupation" aids in amassing this squandered treasure? What say the people, who pay for it, in their clothes, food, books, houses, furniture, and property? Can we afford it? We might be doing good with it, such as no country has ever done.

Is this, then, the much boasted destiny of our great country-to tax her people, collect and borrow an immense sum, and spend it in shedding blood and killing men. [North American [MDT]

NRR 73.151 6 NOV 1847 Gen. Winfield Scott's general order No. 287 declaring martial law

The general in chief republishes his order No. 2 of 19th February 1847, declaring martial law, with important additions.

1. It is to be feared that many grave offenses may be committed by or against the persons composing the armies engaged in the present war between the two republics, which are not provided for in the act of congress "establishing rules and regulations for the government of the armies of the United States," approved the 10th April, 1806. Those offences are here alluded to, which, it committed in the United States, or in their organized territories, would be tried and severely punished by the ordinary civil tribunals of the country.

2. The following offences are meant: assassination, murder, poisoning, rape, or the attempt to commit either of these crimes; violent assaults, theft or robbery, the profanation of temples, cemeteries or other sacred places; the interruption of religious ceremonies, or the destruction of public or private property without the express order or a superior officer.

3. For the welfare of the military service, for the interest of humanity, and for the honor of the United states, it is absolutely essential that all the crimes above mentioned should be severely punished.

4. But the code commonly called the "rules and articles of war," does not provide any punishment for he said crimes, not even in case they are perpetrated by individuals in the army against the persons and property of the same, except in the very restricted case in Apr. 9; and they are only partially referred to in Arts. 51, 52, and 55, when committed by individuals of the army against the person and property of a hostile people; and the said code does not refer to the injuries which may be committed by individuals of a hostile country in violation of the laws of war upon the person and property composing the army.

5. It is evident that Article 99, independent of any reference to the restriction in Art. 87, is entirely nugatory and does not reach these capital crimes.

6. Therefore, a supplementary code, covering the crimes mentioned in the second paragraph of this order, whether committed on, by, or against the army, is absolutely necessary.

7. This unwritten code is simply martial law, and is an addition to the military code prescribed by congress in the "rules and articles of war," and all armies in a hostile country should adopt the martial law, not only for their own security, but for the protection of the peaceful inhabitants and their property from detriment on the part of the army in violation of
8. In consequence of this overpowering necessity, martial law is declared as a supplemental code, and it will be observed in and about all posts, cities, villages, camps, hospitals, and other places which may be occupied by portions of the army of the United States in Mexico; and it will be equally observed in the columns, escorts, convoys, guards, and detachments of said army, during the present war with that republic, and while it shall remain in the same.

9. Consequently all the crimes mentioned in the second paragraph, whether perpetrated, 1st. By a Mexican citizen, inhabitant of or sojourner in this republic, against the persons or property of those belonging to or following said army of the United States of America; or 2nd. By any individual belonging to or following said army, against the persons or property of the citizens or inhabitants of, or sojourners in this country; or 3rd. By any individual belonging to or following said army, against the persons or property of any persons appertaining to the same shall be judged and punished under the supplemental code.

10. For this purpose it is ordered, that every delinquent in the above mentioned cases shall be promptly arrested, and notice thereof given, that he may be tried before a military commission, which shall be convoked in conformity with that fellow.

11. Every military commission under this order shall be named, governed, and conducted, as far as practicable, in accordance with articles 65, 66 and 67 or the rules and articles of war, and the proceeding of the said commission shall be duly recorded in writing, revised, and corrected, approved or disapproved, and the sentences executed, so far as practicable, in conformity with the proceeding and sentences of court martial, under the following limitations: NO military commission shall have jurisdiction in any case that may be properly tried by a court martial, and no sentence of any military commission shall be executed against any person belonging to the American army, unless the nature and grade of his offence be established by evidence, and then he shall be punished in the same manner that similar cases are punished in any state of the United States.

12. The sale, waste, and loss of warlike stores, horses, arms, clothing, and provisions of soldiers, shall be punished by law under the Nos. 37 and 38 of the articles of war, and whatever Mexican, whether a resident or a transient person, who shall buy from any soldier, arms, ammunition, provisions, or clothing, horses, or their trappings, shall be tried and severely chastised by a military commission.

13. The administration of justice, both civil and criminal, shall be meted out in all the established courts throughout the country, without the slightest interruption or hindrance from the officers or soldiers of the American army, excepting the following cases: 1st. In case the person be an officer, soldier, agent, servant, or other person following the North American army. 2d. In political cases, that is to say, suits against other individuals, in which it is alleged that friendly information, protection or kind reception, has been given to American army.

14. For the convenience and protection of both parties, in all cities and towns occupied by the American army, a body of Mexican police shall be established and organized to act in concert with the military police of the said army.

15. This beautiful capital, its churches and its religion, its convents, and monasteries, its inhabitants and their property, are placed under the especial safeguard of the good faith and honor of the American army.

16. As a consideration for the aforesaid protection, a contribution of $150000 is levied on the capitals, payable in four payments, at the rate of $37500 per week, commencing on Monday next the 20th instant, and terminating on Monday, the 11th of October.

17. The ayuntamiento, or municipal council, of this city, is especially charged with the collection and payment of these sums.

18. From the entire contribution which is to be paid to this army, $ 20000 shall be appropriated for the purchase of some very necessary supplies for the wounded and sick in the hospital; $90000 to purchase blankets and shoes, which shall be distributed gratuitously amongst the soldiers of the army, and $40000 shall be retained for other military wants.

19. This order shall be read to and circulated amongst all the companies of the American army now in service in Mexico, and shall be translated into Spanish for the information of the Mexicans.

By order of the commander in chief,
Revolt of the Massachusetts regiment over uniforms

The Massachusetts Regiment- The other day it became necessary to clothe the Massachusetts regiment anew; their old grey uniform having become seriously dilapidated. Grey clothing could not, of course be produced here, and the United States blue (the best soldier’s clothing in the world) was substituted for it. The regiment accepted the clothing, with the exception of one company, the members of which positively refused, on the ground that it was disgraceful for them to wear the national uniform! They could not clothe themselves in any thing else; they were becoming ragged, and were on the point of marching to the interior, where there is no clothing at all. General Cushing ordered them out of ranks and sent them to the castle to perform laborer’s duty.

Yesterday the prisoners were marched from the camp to the castle, under charge of Captain Carr’s company, 11th infantry. On reaching the mote some fifteen of them endeavored to beg off, saying that if they were permitted to return to duties they would wear the blue cloth, but it was too late.

Major Webster arrived at N. Orleans on the 25th, on his way to join his regiment, the Massachusetts, in route from Vera Cruz to the interior, with the train under Gen. Patterson.

Gen. Lane’s Advance without Adequate Ammunition

The fact that Gen. Lane had to halt his command on reaching the Governor’s Bridge, and send Capt. Cook for ammunition for his forces, has been already noticed. In reference to this, the writer quoted above says: “I have previously stated that Gen. Lane’s command left here with forty rounds of ammunition. All the facts of the case are not yet known. ON his arrival at the National Bridge, he had an average of eight rounds. The amount that he started with from here is not known. If he started with less than forty rounds, the usual quantity, then the general is responsible, for the act was neglectful; but if he started with the full complement, then his men are also inexcusable, they for divesting themselves, he for allowing it.

Lieut. Morris’ appeal to the Marines

Lieut. Morris of the rifles- It happened soon after Maj. Twiggs, of the marines, was killed, that Lt. Morris, of the rifles, was ordered to make a charge in order to attain a certain point. Deeming his own men too few for the undertaking, and seeing the marines without an officer, he ordered them to help him. They replied, that he was no officer of theirs, and refused—he remonstrated, and they still refused. Finding authority and remonstrance of no avail, he shouted to them—“Marines, I am the son of Commodore Morris—if you have any veneration for his memory, follow me.” This appeal was irresistible; their sailor hearts were touched, and with a cry, as of joy, they pounded forward, and shared his dangers and his perils, until success was obtained.

Capt. Tilghman’s company of light artillery. Amongst the late arrivals of troops at Vera Cruz, is Captain Tilghman's company of Baltimore light artillery. They are a fine looking set of men, and their uniform remarkably tasteful and neat, though almost too fine for the rough usage it will be subject to in a campaign. They have been supplied with excellent horses, and six beautiful pieces of cannon, forges, caissons, &c., in proposition. [KAS]

NNR 73.152 Nov. 6, 1847 expedition against guerrillas

The Genius of Liberty of the 15th inst., gives an account of an expedition against the guerrillas, sent out by Gen. Patterson, in which several parties of bandits were encountered and destroyed, and a large amount of arms of all kinds were captured.

Some excitement was occasioned at Vera Cruz on the 18th by the arrival of an express from a company of Texas Rangers, announcing that they had been attacked about twelve miles from Vera Cruz by a large guerrilla force, that they had lost one man killed and about eighteen were missing. The report was current that the whole command, excepting two had been cut off and the immediate departure of the rangers at full speed induced the citizens to believe that the report was true.

NNR 73.152 Nov. 6, 1847 Burning of Santa Ann’s Hacienda

A Vera Cruz correspondent of the New Orleans National insists that Captain Lewis of the Louisiana volunteers was justifiable in destroying the seat of the Mexican commander, as it had been made the headquarters of a band that were infesting the line of communication between Vera Cruz and Gen. Scott's army.

The latest dates received here from the National Bridge, by a letter from Major Kenly, informed us that Santa Anna's hacienda was permanently occupied by Col. Hughes and his staff, and how it could have been the resort of guerrillas, we are at a loss to conceive.

NNR 73.152 6 NOV 1847 account of the camp at Veracruz, difficulties of soldiers at the hospital

Correspondence of the New Orleans Picayune
Vera Cruz, October 16, 1847

This city and camp Bajara present the most interesting scenes at this time. At the latter place are some 35000 troops encamped—say the 13th infantry, Massachusetts regiment, new Ohio regiment, two Florida companies, Captain Stapp’s Illinois mounted men, ninety recruits for the 1st dragoons, two companies of the 11th infantry, sixty voltigeur recruits, and last (though by no means the least) Capt. Tilghman's magnificent light artillery battery. About half a mile beyond this camp are four companies of Texan Rangers.

Gen. Patterson has put his shoulder to the wheel in earnest, first, to put an end to certain abuses that have been too long overlooked here, and practiced by officers going up in the several columns that have left for the interior. For instance, a large number of men, belonging to both regular and volunteer forces, have been sent into the general hospital here by their officers without descriptive rolls. Numbers of these poor fellows have remained in hospital six and eight months, some have died, and many are still suffering, who, for want of this light duty on the part of their officers, cannot by honorably discharged or paid. To send them off sick, without pay, and with no papers by which they can claim their land bounty, or perhaps pension, would by treating them badly indeed, and the surgeons will not do it. The pay and board of those who die in hospital are lost to their heirs, if the officers under whom they have served have been so criminal as to neglect to furnish the hospital surgeon with their descriptive rolls and clothing accounts. To prevent a recurrence of this evil Gen. Patterson has issued orders that every officer who shall send men to the hospital without the proper papers shall be arrested and tried. Other healthy orders have been issued and are stringently executed, and the general is determined that the guerrillas, as well in this vicinity as on the road, shall feel the weight of our power.

Day before yesterday he dispatched two companies of Texas rangers and some other mounted men to scour the country between the Jalapa and Orizaba roads, where guerrillas were known to be quartered and arms and ammunitions to be stored. A few miles about Santa Fe a party of rangers came upon a ranch, and then discovered, by the numerous explosions, that loaded firearms were concealed there. In the vicinity of Medellin, another party discovered large quantities of arms and ammunition, and killed some sixty guerrillas.

Whilst, however, the mounted men are employed in ferreting out and destroying guerrillas and guerrilla depots, the general does not forget to protect the innocent and defenseless. The following general order will show his policy in this respect.

NR 73.152 6 NOV 1847 general order for opening the line of communication from Veracruz to the interior

Headquarters Volunteer Division
Vera Cruz, Mexico, October 12, 1846

Orders, No. 5.- The commanding General of the division being charged with the duty of opening the line of communication with the main army in the interior of Mexico, directs that:

1. The commanders of all corps, detachments, and posts under his command, or left by him on the line from Vera Cruz to the headquarters of the army, shall protect from injury and insult all unarmed and peaceable inhabitants.

2. NO private property shall be taken, except by the order of the commanding officer of the corps, detachment, or post, and then only for the use of the troops, for which, in all cases when the owner can be found, a reasonable compensation shall be paid.

3. The frequent robberies and murders committed by guerrillas and other banditti, who live by plundering Mexican as well as Americans, thereby rendering life and property insecure, and interrupting trade and intercourse with the interior, requiring a prompt remedy, no Mexican will be allowed to bear arms, except by the written permission of the commander of a department of war.

4. Commanders of all armed parties will apprehend armed Mexicans found without proper authority, and should they resist they will be shot.

By orders of Maj. Gen. Patterson:

J.J.Abercrombie, Lt. Col. And A.A.A.g.

Among the other arrangements a depot is to be immediately established at the National Bridge. This is certainly a most judicious measure. The army will probably move to the interior in about a week.

NR 73.152-73.153 6 NOV 1847 Mexican official reports on termination of the armistice

The Matamoros Flag, furnishes the following translation of Mexico officials, issued upon the termination of the armistice and the renewal of hostilities. The first is the Mexican secretary's letter to Gen. Urrea-the second is Urrea's announcement to the governor of the province of Tamaulipas.

Excellent sir-It is probable that tomorrow at 12 pm. the enemy will commence hostilities, in consequence of the refusal of the supreme government to precede to advise you of this event. The first magistrate of the nation has never had the power, nor has he wished to make concessions derogatory to the rights, and honor of the republic-and he has therefore, during the time the negotiations were pending, fanned the flame of national spirit and reorganized the army. HE is therefore, to day, in an attitude to rebel force by force, which seems to be the only title of the enemy to acquisitions which the supreme government never could concede, much less admit stipulations which has their origin in the law of force. Your excellency may rest assured, that whatever may be the success of arms, the government will always sustain at all costs, the independence and honor of he republic. God and liberty!

Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna's summons to Col. Thomas Childs, reply, the siege, Santa Anna deserted by his troops

Santa Anna’s Demonstration At Puebla.

Summons to surrender, dated

Headquarters- Mexican Army I have taken possession of this city with the army under my command, for the purpose of operating upon the several points fortified and occupied by your excellency, and also with the view of liberating its inhabitants from the dominion of the forces of the United States, from whom they have already suffered too much. But before commencing any operations of a military character, I have considered it my duty to act in obedience to the impulses of humanity, and consequently request that your excellency will please evacuate this city within a certain and peremptory space of time, it being known to you at the same time that you can depart with all the honors of war, either to form a junction with General Scott, or the forces of your country at Perote, according as it best suits your pleasure. But should this courteous request of mine be unheeded by your excellency, then, although to me it is a painful alternative, I shall commence to assault your positions the consequences of which act will be felt by your garrison, because there exists in the vicinity of your excellency 8000 men who are determined that the rights of their nation shall be maintained and respected.

God and liberty, headquarters in Puebla, September 25th 1847.
ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

To Senior Col. D. Thomas Childs, commander of the United States army, situated in Loreto.

Col. Childs Reply.

Headquarters, City of Puebla, Mexico
September 25, 1847.

TO his excellency, D Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, General in chief of the Mexican army in front of this city.

Sir- I had the honor of receiving, at 2 o’clock this afternoon, your excellency’s letter of this date. In it you were pleased to notify me of the fact that you had taken possession of this city, for the purpose as you declare, of restoring to the full enjoyment of their liberty its citizens who have hitherto suffered so much from the U.S. army. You likewise were pleased to offer certain stipulations to this garrison, provided that it would, within a fixed time, abandon the point of defense which it now occupies. With regard to the assertion of your Excellency, which implies that the inhabitants of Puebla have been maltreated by the US troops, I wholly deny it. On the contrary, I assure you that the property and privileges of all have been maintained and respected with the greatest scrupulosity, indeed, so much so has it been done, that its parallel cannot be found in the annals of war. And I would most willingly leave it to the most intelligent and impartial portion of the population of the city to decide, from which of the two contending parties they have received the most injury and molestation; whether it is from their own countrymen or the troops of the United States.

With regard to that particular part of your excellency’s letter which demands the surrender, within a fixed time, of all the positions now occupied by the troops under my command, I can only say in reply, that having been honored with the duty of guarding and protecting them, it is equally my greatest wish and paramount obligation to preserve them to the last; and I am fully satisfied that I shall be able to defend all the resources essential to its full and complete accomplishment.

With considerations in the highest degree respectful, I have the honor to be your excellency’s most obedient servant,

Thomas Childs, Col. U.S. Army
Civil and military governor.

The Genius of Liberty furnishes the following sequel to the above correspondence Puebla, 28th—At 5 in the evening of yesterday the point of San Juan de Dios, Santa Rosa and Santa Monica commenced a heavy cannonade upon the American works. The letter immediately began to throw cannon shot, bombs and grenades into the centre of the city, which suffered in consequence some considerable injury.

Don Mariano del Rio, was standing with his wife on the back balcony of his house was struck dead by a cannon ball. About 8 P.M. the cannonade deceased, but command again at the dawn of the following day.

Puebla 29th—By order of Santa Anna a body of troops was yesterday posted in the convent of Santa Teresa, at one of the corners of which a breastwork of cotton bales was erected. Four hundred cotton bales have already been demanded of the house of Velasco for the defense of the city. To prevent the completion of this work the Americans from the fork of San Jose kept up a continual fire upon the workmen, which being stoutly returned by the Mexicans, the discharge of bombs and grenades from the American lines greatly increased. At this moment a considerable number of private citizens went to Santa Anna, who was at Carmen, and requested of him a piece of artillery, which being granted, together with a small body of men for its management, they quickly marched for the Convent Santa Rosa and opened a will directed fire upon the American works. We were in the greatest construction, but night at last supervening, everything became quiet.

Puebla, Sept. 30—Today partial tranquility reigns in the city. Now and then can be heard the report of a cannon, and the explosion of some grenades thrown in the direction of San Juan del Rio, in the rear of whose church Gen. Rea last night concluded a battery, with which he intends to open on San Jose. Our soldiers are complaining very much, and say they are ready die of hunger, not having received anything in the shape of provisions for some considerable time. The greatest enthusiasm against the Americans prevails throughout the entire city.

Puebla, Oct. 2—Since Santa Anna’s departure the cannonading has totally slackened off. The cotton store house of Velasco took fire last night, and was burned down to the ground—and 200 bales of the same article were totally consumed in the convent of Santo Domingo, without any one’s being able to account for the mode in which they were fired. The inhabitants hearing the ringing of bells which announced the incendiarium, were very much alarmed, believing that the Americans had left their entrenchments, and were storming the city.

From the same source we derive the following narrative of events subsequent to those above detailed. Santa Anna is evidently reduced to great straits:

On the 1st of the present month Gen. Santa Anna, at the head of 2000 cavalry and infantry and three pieces of artillery, sailed out of Puebla, intending to attack the American train which left Jalapa on the 1st, and reached Perote on the 4th. But before arriving at Tepeyahualeo the designs of the commander in chief of the Mexican forces where wholly frustrated, all his men, with the exemption of 130 hussars of his personal guard, having pronounced against him. As an excuse for this proceeding the officers and privates alleged that they were firmly convinced that their further continuance at the disposal and under the orders of the ex president would only be followed by their complete sacrifice; and that withal, their country would not derive the slightest benefit for it.

They attributed the unfortunate events of the war, and their want of success in their battles against the invaders, to his incapacity and unskilfulness. Even some of them fondly declared him to be a traitor, and consequently to be unworthy of holding any command in the Mexican army. The greater part of these transactions took place at Nopalucan.

Santa Anna having got to Tepeyahualea with his 130 hussars, he received an order from the government at Queretaro directing him to proceed thither at once with all the troops under his orders. But the general did not deem it convenient to comply with the mandate of his government and took up his line of march for Oaxaca, whither by the latest account he was wending his way. He publicly declared that his intentions in going to Oaxaca were to see whether he could raise there another army, with which he might return to renew the combat.
with the enemies of his republic.

All the letters from the interior coincide in saying that Gen Santa Anna, conscious of his impotency to effect anything more either in carrying on of the war, or of adjusting the terms of peace, is making his way towards Guatemala, for the purpose of leaving the republic of Mexico forever, and that his march to Oaxaca is only a pretext to the quiet accomplishment of his designs.

The reports that Gen Santa Anna was endeavoring to reach Guatemala, and that Gen Scott had given him a passport to embark free from Vera Cruz if he should think it best, is denied by La Voz de la Patria, a Mexican newspaper which we find extensively copied in the Arco Iris. He is resolved, say La Voz, not to abandon the cause of the country, and to continue the war without respite upon the enemies of Mexican independence and religion.

The genius of Liberty says that Senor Pena y Pena is discharging the duties of recognize as his associate in power, the individuals nominated and appointed by Santa Anna. He proposes that congress shall take upon itself the office of selecting men to that important and high office.

NNR 73.154 Nov. 6, 1847 Guerrilla Warfare

A letter from the army, dated Buena Vista, Aug. 20, says:

"A ranger is missed; search is made for him by his comrades; his body is perhaps found, perhaps not. The nearest Mexicans to the vicinity of his disappearance are required to account for him; they will not, or cannot. The bowie knife is called upon, and deliberately every male Mexican in that rancho is speedily done for, guilty or not guilty. But this is not enough to make an effort for the life of a Texan. Another rancho receives the fearful visit, and again blood flows. The number killed on some occasions in this way has been fearfully great, and has been gathered from what fell from the Texas, but no one but themselves knew about it, as a report of any such doings to the nearest commanding officer, would only be followed by a ten-fold retaliation on the nearest 'customers.' This is all horrid, it is true, but it has had the salutary tendency of causing the well disposed and honest Mexicans to ferret out and inform of those who practice murder and robbery. Going about at some distance from camp is considered much more safe."

NNR 73.155 6 NOV 1847 comment on the "slanders" against Gen. Sterling Price

General Price.- The Glasgow News says, that Gen. Price has applied to the war department for permission to raise a company of mounted men, to act as an escort for him across the plains to Santa Fe.

The same paper says, that "the slanderers of this officer are very quiet since his return from Santa Fe." We do not know who are meant by this term "slanderers" but if reference be had to the truths which have been published in regard to his military command in New Mexico, the want of subordination and discipline in his camp, and the dissolute conduct of those whom he ought to have controlled, and over whom he had full authority, we must says that his presence has not prevented the publication of the facts. Gen. Price proposes, it is said, a visit to Washington. If he feels himself aggrieved, let him ask a court of inquiry, with full power to investigate his military conduct in New Mexico, and witnesses will not be wanting to prove his total unfitness for the station which he occupied, his failure to preserve anything like military subordination in his camp, and the licentiousness which he encouraged, by suffering his men to do very much as they pleased. Gen. Price is now a military man, and if he has anything of the chivalry of an officer about him, he will not willingly rest under accusations which are ringing against him from one end of the state to the other. NRR 73.155 6 NOV 1847 seizure of a British ship freighted with merchandise for a merchant in California

Affairs in the Pacific.- Capture and condemnation of a British merchantman.-Despatches have been received in Washington from Com. Biddle, dated on aboard the line of battle ship Columbus, on the 10th of April last, giving an account of the seizure by the squadron, of a British merchant vessel, of light tonnage, freighted with merchandise of an English merchant resident in Mexico.

There had been organized in California by Gen. Kearney, at the instance of Com. Biddle, a court of admiralty to adjudicate in such cases. This court took cognizance of this seizure, and condemned the vessel as a lawful prize, on the principle that a merchant permanently residing in Mexico, no matter of what power he may be a subject, is to be treated in time of war as a citizen of the country in which he resides and done business.

This decision is sustained by the practice of the British admiralty courts during the war between France and England, and also during the war of 1812 and '15, between the U. States and Great Britain.

NRR 73.156 Nov. 6, 1847 letter from a participant in actions against the Mexicans in California

Events in California – A Late Springfield Journal contains a long letter from California, written by Wm. S. Todd, Formerly of Springfield, from which we make the following extract.

When I wrote to you in January last, I expected to leave this country this spring, but I was so long detained in the army, under Fremont, that I am compelled to alter my intention, and even if I had got off in time, seeing the opportunities I now do of making something to repay me for coming to the country, I doubt whether I should leave. The country has just passed through a war of then months, and is beginning to recover from the evil effects of that war, although military despotism still governs it. General Kearney is the governor of the country, and governs it with martial law.

In January, 1847, the foreign residents here became disgusted with the tyrannical and unprincipled acts of the men in power in this country, and raised a revolution against them. The authorities has commenced by declaring that all Americans should leave the country, or "their bones should bleach upon the plains of California," and were preparing a force to carry out the threat, but the Americans took the start and seized the fortress of Sonoma, with several pieces of cannon, small arms, ammunition, &c; and at the same time General Vallejo, Salvador Vallejo, and Captain De la Torre crossed the bay of San Francisco with near one hundred men.—We whipped them and drove them back over the bay, and then prepared to march against General Castro.

On our march down, an express overtook us, stating that Com. Sloat, Had taken position of Monterey and San Francisco, and had hoisted the American flag. Fremont (who had joined us a few days before we left Sonoma,) ... our leader, hoisted the starts and stripes over out camp. From that time until the retaking of Pueblo, in the month of January last, I have been in the service of the United States, I may say, until the 6th of March last, when I was discharged. There were many others, who, like myself served during the whole war, and were discharged at that same time. In November last, Commodore Stockton came to San Diego, and there told us that we must enlist as common soldiers or remain as prisoners on board the Congress until he could send us home. After the retaking of Pueblo we were promised our immediate discharge, and our pay, by Commodore Stockton; but we obtained neither of them. Some two or three weeks after out term of service has expired, Col. Fremont consented to discharge us, and did so on the 6th of March - paying us but twenty dollars each to purchase horses, saddles and provisions, to take us home – a distance of 800 miles!

THE NEW YORK CALIFORNIA REGIMENT AT HOME

The Northampton Gazette, says: A young gentleman of Worthington, in this county, who became enamored of them western regions, by the representations which he gathered from this reading, and who connected himself with the 7th regiment of New York volunteers, under the famous Colonel Stevenson, and sailed fro California last autumn, writes to his friends from San Francisco, under date of May, in which he gives rather an unfavorable color to the destinies of that command, and of the country, so much eulogized by hose desires of a… our national domain. A few extracts will show pretty clearly the disappointed feelings of those who were looking for a western paradise. He says:

"The land here is very poor, not a vegetable is raised. All it is fit for is grass, and that all dries up in summer and blows away. There is no rain from May to September. Not a tree grows within twenty miles of this. A few scrub bushes are seen, and they hardly furnish wood enough to cook with. All I can say about the land here, .. make within a circuit of twenty miles, is, that it is one large sand bank, where vegetation starts-up in the spring then dries up and blows away. If there is any with you that wish to emigrate, let them go to any other place in the world than California. Never way any taken in so bad as was the 7th regiment of New York volunteers. We expected to find it almost a paradise, and here we are, poor dogs, living on sea biscuit, pork and beans, in face of an enemy, exposed to wind, weather, and bullets rattling among us, and all for seven dollars a month. Blue coasts, red patches, stripes and death, perhaps – a gloomy prospect, indeed."

These are the deluded men, who consented, upon the representation of the government adventurers, to be discharged at the expiration of the war, where-ever they may be, and find their way home as they may, or spend their lives in California. Not a very enviable condition truly.

Another member of the regiment, a correspondent of the Troy N. York Whig, writes as follows:

Santa Barbara, Alta California, May 19, 1847.

Entertaining an idea that there are doubtless many who would like to know the whereabouts of one, who in former days "danced and sang a …song," and who was most familiarly known to the good citizens of his birth place; who, perhaps, think him in another world, as he doubtless would have had not fortune smiled most favorably upon him. I am alive and well, never more so, and may if I meet with no pull-backs, see you again some time in the course of then years if we can satisfy these cursed Mexicans, and make them come to terms. Ere this you must have heard of our arrival and the distribution of our regiment if you have not, Major Harde is stationed with three companies, G, H & K. at the Presidio at St. Francisco; Lieut. Col. Barton with three companies at this place, having arrived here on 7th April; and Col. Stevenson at Monterey with four companies, C. D. E. & … within the last week. Col. C. has been ordered to the "Pueblo des los Angelos" with two companies G & E., 90 miles below this, where there are some 400 Mormon soldiers, and once company U.S. dragoons, engaged in throwing up a breast work preparatory not having occasion to use it, as they expect to have hot work soon. Lieut. C. Burton with two companies A. & B. is ordered down the coast, (place unknown) out a short distance this side of Mazatlan, to take position of the country. We sail next week. We may possibly meet General Wool's division and join him; what's next will for low is all speculation. Capt. Naglee from Philadelphia in command of company D has mounted his company, and is out in the mountains scouting. Capt. Brackett of company C is stationed at Sonoma, 60 miles up the Sacramento from St. Francisco, the balance being in quarters, ready at a moments notice for any emergency. We have had two alarms here, … calling every man to his post in less than a minute. Never did I see men obey a call quicker than on those occasions, it was remarkable by Col. Barton, an old campaigner, that during all his fighting in the Florida war he never saw much promptness in falling into ranks before. Some were without shoes, some without caps, and some without coats, but every man had his musket and his 20 rounds of cartridge in his cartridge box. The alarm was caused by some Indians lurking around the camp, and one of them coming too near the sentry, and not obeying his orders to "stand," he fired upon and killed him – of late things have worn a more peaceful appearance.

The men are contented, having provided for them most comfortable quarters, and a braver set of men I do not believe ever went into the field; they are composed of those careless, reckless d-Is, (yet of good heart) from the Bowery and East River side, that are the terror of the N. York police. They are in good discipline, always respectful and obedient, and the only thing they want is to have a chance of fighting. They occasionally get a fight up on a small scale; pounding an Indian or Californian who does not exactly think as they do, most unmercifully. They love their commander (Col. B.) and well they may, for he is very attentive to their wants, and they in return try to please him in every thing. Santa Barbara is a pleasant little town with a population if some 1,000 inhabitants, and a jurisdiction extending to over 3,000; it is built upon a beautiful piece of table land, situated between lofty ranges of mountains on its side and rear, with its front opening to the sea. Fruits during the summer season may be had in abundance, and out table of late groans under the weight of delicious dishes, fruits and wine, sent us as presents from the fair hands of the many beautiful Senoritas; while we in return guard and protect them from the hostile Indian depredations. Fandangos' we have almost nightly, rich treats they are. The waltz is the same as out own; but the other dances wholly different. A native stands a poor chance for a partner, when there are enough "Americanos" present. I'm worst feature in the whole case is my morality to reply to their beautiful lingo, I never felt the disagreeable reality before of wanting to talk, and not being able to. Ideas rush in from all sources, but I have to check them or only utter them in most miserable Spanish.

The horsemen of the Californians cannot be surpassed; children from 6 to 8 years of age, rise with much ease and grace as out grown people do at home, and it is not uncommon, occurrence to see them strapped on, riding as the races. Visiting, business, and every thing else is done on horseback, they being to lazy to walk. Daily may be seen from six to a dozen at different corners of the streets seated on their horses all day long, and it they are fortunate enough to get any thing to eat, it is devoured while seated on their horses. The length of the race never exceeds is a quarter of a mile, and the time is never made as we can make it home, an American betting $50 on a race is looked at with surprise, that amount being too large for the Californian's pocket. Their betting is from $5 to $10, and side betting from $4 upwards is not that heavy. Horses that we would willing pay from $100 to $150, you can purchase here for $15, $20 and $25, once more I am again the owner of a horse! Each part of the command which was left in New York when we sailed have arrived, and joined their respective companies; the... belonging to the companies stationed here joined yesterday. We have received news from the states as late as the 24th No. files of the New York Herald and Courier and Enquirer. Eagerly do we scan the proceedings and doings of those at home, and trust provision may be... rising of troops for five years... and those men who wish to remain in the service belonging to the 7th regiment may not be forgotten. It is a general feeling among the officers and as we are already here, would it not be much easier and cheaper fir the United States to muster us for that time. I hope that Congress and the secretary of war will have an eye open favorably for us. – General Kearney, Col. Fremont, and one or two others whose names I forget, leave during this month for the states. Col. F must feel very much chagrined in being obliged to return to the states with Gen. K. after having stood out against him so long, disobeying all orders which have been given him before you will before this reaches you have learned after consequently unnecessary to repeat here. Cornel Mason will be in command of the forces as soon as the general leaves, which will much dampen the spirits of our gallant. French leaving taking colonel From the others on board his ship I learn that he had made all his appointments from secretary of state down, and intended carrying them out upon arrival, but on his arrival, he having learned that Col. Mason was here, never did man's... hopes change more suddenly than was duplicated in the countenance and bearing of Col. Stevenson. Hard stories are told of the colonel during the passage, and many a time and oft' does he catch a drubbing from some luckless wight who has been most shamefully wronged. It is the prevailing wish that he may be dislodged from command, recalled home, and the command given to Lieut. Col. Barton, a gentleman and soldier, and a man beloved by all officers and men. On the 22nd we give a grand ball, now it will terminate if I have time, I will let you now in another letter My remembrance to the good people, and oblige. Frank [ATT]

NMR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 "what is to be done with Mexico? her voice is still for war!", subjugation contemplated

“What’s to be done with Mexico?”

Whilst the British government are embarrassed with the difficult questions of “What is to be done with Ireland,” our own government is occupied with a no less perplexing question as to what is to be done with out southern neighbor. The views of the cabinet being but imperfectly and unofficially shadowed forth by the official organ, leaves the scores of "letter writers" full latitude for their occupation, which is improved accordingly. The decided tone of such of those as are well known to occupy stations that afford opportunities for being well informed, is scarcely to be misunderstood.

"X." the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, on the 31st wrote: “The papers, as you will perceive, hint at the revolution in public sentiment which has been effected in Mexico since our seizure of the capital – private letters confirm the same, and there is no doubt but that the true friends of peace, who always consider the continuation in power of Santa Anna worse to the state than the loss of half a dozen provinces, will make a vigorous effort to bring about some kind of an arrangement, especially if they learn that henceforth they must pay for all the expenses of the war, instead of getting money from us, and that in lieu of pay they must lose other provinces in proportion to the duration of the war. Should there be any such revolution in public sentiment, Mr. Trist, I opine, may yet figure as commissioner; but he will listen, not make propositions on his part.

"The Mexican tariff, as soon as Gen. Patterson and Col. Jack Hays shall have established a permanent safe communications with the interior, will yield a handsome revenue, especially if a few slight alterations in its present rates of duty shall be ordered, such as experience has shown to be beneficial to out merchants, producers, and manufacturers. Such alterations, I believe, are in progress of preparation."

"Ion," another correspondent of the same paper, writes of the same date: "In my letter of the 26th inst., I said "sufficient intimation had been thrown out in regard to the orders recently sent to General Scott, to convince me" that those orders were so and so. I have had ample reason since, to believe that I have fallen into no error in regard to the policy of the government on this subject. Others may have arrived at different conclusions as to the course which the executive will pursue, and no one assumes to speak upon authority in relation to it – not even the editor of the Union.

"What are the "intimations thrown out" by the "Union" in the article of the 27th, and in previous articles? They fully confirm my own convictions, as forced upon me by information derived from other sources. "What now remains?" says the Unions – "Subjugation and occupation." If others have not been able to foresee, or, it seeing, do not choose to state, the means by which the end in view is to be accomplished, it does not follow that my references, and those, I may ass, of the most intelligent and judicious observers here, are imaginary.

"I do not suppose that the cabinet is unanimous in their views, either as to these ends or these means. We shall know something about both, five weeks hence. In regard to Gen. Scott’s future relations towards the fluttering shadow of the supreme government, lately supposed to be at Queretaro, I stated that his orders were “to leave it undisturbed.” – That I am correct in this suggestion has been made apparent. It is the hope of some – I do not say of every one of the cabinet – that the government at Queretaro will sue for peace. It is a vain hope, in my opinion. But I was perfectly aware, and so stated in, my second, that Gen, Scott was to deal tenderly with Santa Anna’s multitude at Queretaro and with the fugitive congress, which may or may not assemble there. I said that Gen Scott was to “leave that shadow of a government undisturbed.” Am I not correct in this? Is it not confirmed by your own correspondent, “X?” and I need go no further for evidence of its correctness.

"AS to the first proposition, every one knows that I was correct, for the “Union” has repeatedly announced that the late armistice was unauthorized, and I know that the rumored movements of General Scott in favor of peace, since the capture of Mexico, were met with disappointment by this government. Gen. Scott, I repeat, is to enter into no more armistices, nor truces, until Mexico has ratified a treaty.

"Next comes the proposition that Gen. Scott is to occupy and pacificate the country. It is the sole object of the reinforcements lately sent to him to enable him to do this. The thirty thousand troops are there for that purpose, and no other; and, for the same purpose, twenty thousand more are to be asked for from congress, at the next session, if need be.

"There remain but two more propositions, to with that Gen. Scott is to disarm the Mexicans found in arms; and that he is to levy contributions on the Mexican states, cities, and people. Here again I have an authority, representing at least a portion of the cabinet, for this assertion. But all this is no more than Gen. Scott is now actually doing under previous discretionary orders, and from necessity.

"I dismiss the matter by asserting that my five propositions have not been and cannot be denied by authority, nor disproved by facts."

"I stated them, the other day, only as my own convictions. I now repeat them as well known, authentic, and indisputable facts – startling as they may be to those who are yet unprepared to meet the responsibility for the state of things which they have contributed to produce."

A letter to the N. Orleans National, from Vera Cruz. Dated October 11, says:

The Mexican “voice is still for war.” Let our people no longer flatter themselves with the hope of an early peace; but let the next congress prepare for a long war; for Mexican obstinacy and false pride is aroused, and so long as they can resist they will do it – even unto their own destruction. There is but one course left to attain a speedy peace, and that is by virtue of fear.
The Washington correspondent of the Charleston Mercury wrote on the 7th ult: "There is no good reason to believe that congress will be disposed to limit the appropriations for war, still less to withhold them. Besides, the government will take at once, or before congress shall act, such measures as will lead to vast expenses, and congress cannot undertake to repudiate them. It is a matter of doubt, too, how far congress can exercise any supervision over the conduct of the war. If the war be carried on at all it must be by the executive."

On the 15th October, the correspondence of the Baltimore Sun wrote:

I have ascertained, since my last, that there remains as yet uncalled for, the sum of six millions and one hundred thousand dollars for the last loan. This sum will, together with the accruing revenue from customs and lands, be ample to carry on the operations of the war, and to meet the ordinary expenses of the government till next spring. There is no danger that the war will lag for the want of means. Whatever may be the delay of action in congress, the operations of the war will go on, and after expenses have been incurred, we shall see how many members will vote their repudiation."

On the 30th August, before the late renewal of hostilities, the "trusted friend and organ of the administration," the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger wrote:

"I alluded, in one of my letters to the Ledger, the fact that the programme of the administration is now completed, and that, through the "union" as yet forbears to save a word, it is intended to prosecute the war, if need be, to the entire subjugation of Mexico, if she persists in rejecting our offers of peace. Connected with this resolution is the determination to oppose the Wilmot proviso, ex officio, as utterly useless and impractical, and only calculated to distract parties."

Another letter to the Charleston Mercury says:

The result of the late election in Pennsylvania is hailed as an administration triumph, and as a strong evidence that Pennsylvania is in favor of acquiring, by war, the whole territory of Mexico. As Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Dallas are rivals, in that state, for the support of the democracy, in the next presidential contest, their respective friends now vie with each other in claiming for them all the advantages to result from their advocacy of territorial extension. It is therefore rumored, and indeed asserted, that Mr. Trist's treaty project was not Mr. Buchanan's ultimatum; and that Mr. B. had sent to Mr. Trist instructions which he has not received at the date of the armistice, to demand the 26th parallel of latitude as the boundary.

The Augusta Constitutionalist has the following paragraph:

"The rights of the Mexican republic exist now only in the sic volo, sic jubeo of the American people. Their will is the law of the case.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y Journal of Commerce writes on the 25th ult:

The Government sends frequent messages to General Scott. A messenger left this morning these dispatches for him. I learn, from various sources, that the administration has given such orders to General Schott as will prevent him from again offering to accepting an armistice, or inviting the Mexican government to make peace. The day has gone by, too, for offering any pecuniary inducements to the Mexican rulers, or compensation for territory. [ATT]

NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 heavy northerers

Mexico – Latest – The steamer Alabama, at New Orleans, left Vera Cruz on the 20th, Tampico on 22nd off Brazos the 24th, and Galveston the 25th. Experienced a heavy northern all the way, which prevented her from communicating with Brazos. She brings from Galveston fifteen cabin passengers and fifty discharged soldiers that had reached Galveston in... in the U. S. propeller Ashland, which put in there in distress. The Alabama brings dispatches from General Scott for government.

Gen. Patterson was expected to start with reinforcements from Vera Cruz, on the 24th.

City of Mexico dates to the 7th October left all quiet.

Congress had met at Queretaro on the 5th. Santa Anna is reinvested with executive power and the command of the Army.
NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 operations of Gen. Joseph Lane's division

Gen. Lane’s division, advancing on the 11th October so suddenly entered the town of Huamantla, situated half way between Perote and Puebla, that Santa Anna has barely time to escape, leaving two pieces of artillery which were taken by Gen. Lane. La Vega, and a son of Iturbide were made prisoners.

NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 - General Taylor’s camp, all quiet

From Gen. Taylor’s and Gen Wool’s headquarters we have dates to the 4th Oct. All quiet-troops healthy.

NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna at Huamantla

Santa Anna left Huamantla at the head of 1,000 horses, and was joined soon after by 1,500 men, Under command of Gen. Reyes, and together they re-entered Huamantla as soon as General Lane left it, and following the Americans, killed seventy men and took twenty prisoners. They had two pieces of artillery with them, and contrived to be very annoying. A considerable force that left Puebla under Reyes was waiting Lane’s approach at El Pinal, a few miles south of Huamantla.

NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 Capt. Jack Hays’ rangers and the guerrillas

A dozen of Hays’ Texan rangers, on the 18th, had quite and affair with about 200 guerrillas that charged twice upon them between Vera Cruz and Santa Fe. Rifles first, and then Colt’s revolvers were used, with effect. The Texans arrived all safe.

NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 yellow fever in Vera Cruz

Yellow fever still claims its victories. Lieut. Jenkins, 1st dragoons, died of it at Vera Cruz on the 19th. Capt. Wm. H. Churchill, 31 artillery died at Point Isabel on the same day, also of the fever which was prevailing at Matamoros.

NNR 73.160 Nov. 6, 1847 Mariano Paredes y Arrillaga at Tulancingo, preaching monarchy

Paredes is in Tulancingo, still preaching monarchy – Valencia is rusticking at his hacienda. Bravo is on parole at Mexico. The other leading men and generals have gone for the most part to Cuernavaca, in the terra caliente, a town seventeen leagues south of the city of Mexico, on the road to Acapulco.

Peace is as far off as ever; the feelings of the people are still said to be most strenuously opposed to any compromise with the North Americans; in fact the hostility which exists against us in the interior towns, cites and villages, is reported to be of the most bitter kind.

Army Court Martial. Trail of Col. Fremont.

Second Day

It being ascertained that Major McCall was detained from attending the court by indisposition, the president of the court applied to the war department to detail another officer to serve in his place, and suspended the proceedings until, about midday, Col. Hunt of the quartermaster's department, appeared as a substitute for Maj. McCall.

The court was then organized by the members taking the prescribed oaths, &c.

The accused was then called upon to object, as of the right he might, to any member of the court. He signified that he has no objection to make.

The judge advocate (Capt. J. F. Lee) then proceeded to read the charges.

Charges against Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army.

Charge I.-Mutiny.

Specification 1. – In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers, organized in California for the United States service, having received the lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier General S.W. Kearney, in the following words, to wit:

"Headquarters Army of the West,

Cuidad de los Angeles, January 16, 1847.

"By direction of Brigadier General Kearney, I send you a copy of a communication to him from the secretary of war, dated June 18, 1846, in which is the following" 'These troops, and such as many be made in the organized in California, will be under your command.' The general directs that no charge will be made in the organization of your battalion of volunteers, or officers appointed to it, without his sanction or approval being first obtained.

"Very respectably,    WM. H. Emory, Lieut. And Acting Assistant Adj. Gen.

"To Lieut. Col. J. C. Fremont, mounted riflemen, commanding battalion California volunteers."

And having received with this order a copy of instructions from the war department to Gen. Kearney, in the following words, to wit:

"War department Washington, June 19, 1846.

"Sir * I have nothing if importance to add to the dispatches which have been already forwarded to you.

"Since my last letter it has been determined to send a small force around Cape Horn to California.

"The arms, cannon, and previsions to be sent to the Pacific will be accompanied by one company of artillery of the regular army. Arrangements are not on foot to send a regiment of volunteers by sea.

"These troops and such as may be organized in California will be under your command.

More than common solicitude will be felt here in regard to the expedition committed to you, and it is desired that you should avail yourself of all occasions to inform the government of your progress and prospects.

"The president desires your opinion, as early as you are in a situation to give it, of the practicability of your reaching California in the course of this autumn or in the early part of the next winter. I need no repeat the expression of his wishes that you should take military possession of that country as soon as it can be safely done.

"I am, with great respect, your ob’t serv’t,
W.L. Marcy, Secretary of war.

"To Col. S. W. Kearney"

Did reply to General Kearney and his order aforesaid in a written answer, in the following words, to wit"

"Ciudad de los Angeles, Jan. 17, 1847.

"Sir: I have the honor to be in receipt of your favor of last night, in which I am directed to suspend the execution of orders which, in my capacity of commandant of this territory, I had received from Commodore Stockton, governor and commander–in-chief in California.

"I avail myself of an early hour this morning to make such a reply as the brief time allowed for reflection will enable me.

"I found Commodore Stockton in possession of the country, exercising the functions of military commandant and civil governor, as early as July of last year; and shortly thereafter I received from him the commission of military commandant, the duties of which I immediately entered upon, and have continued to exercise to the present moment. I found also on my arrival at this place, some three or four days since, Commodore Stockton still exercising the functions of civil and military governor, with the same apparent deference to his rank on the part of all officers (including yourself) as he maintained and required when he assumed in July last.

"I learned also in conversation with you that, on the march from San Diego recently to this place, you entered upon and discharged duties implying an acknowledgement of your part of supremacy to Commodore Stockton.

"I fell myself therefore, with great deference to your professional and personal character, constrained to say that, until you and Commodore Stockton adjust between yourself the question of rank, where I respectfully thin the difficulty belongs, I shall have to report an receive orders as heretofore from the commodore.

"With considerations of high regard, I am, sir, your ob’t serv’t, J.C. Fremont
"Lt. Col. U.S. army, and military commandant of the territory of California.

"To Brig. Gen S.W. Kearney, U.S. Army."

And did thereby refuse to obey the aforesaid lawful command of his superior officer Gen Kearney, or to receive and obey any other order from him; but did declare himself to be the military commandant of the territory of California; thereby resisting and throwing off the authority of his superior officer. This at Ciudad de los Angeles, California, on the seventeenth of January, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, officially reported his battalion to Brigadier General Kearney, by writing, in words following, to wit"

"On the March, January 13, 1848.

Dir Sir: I have the honor to report to you my arrival at this place with 400 mounted riflemen and six pieces of artillery, including among the latter two pieces lately in the possession of the Californians. Their entire force, under the command of Don Andre Pico, Have this day laid down their arms and surrendered to my command.

"Very respectfully, your ob’t serv’t,
J.C. Fremont,
"Lt. Col. U.S. army, and military commandant of the territory of California.

"To Brig. Gen S.W. Kearney, Commanding U.S. forces, Pueblo de los Angeles."

Specification 2.–In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers, organized in California, which were placed by the aforesaid orders of the secretary of war of June eighteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-six, under command of Brigadier General Kearney, did issue an order to Captain J. K. Wilson, at Angeles, January twenty-five eighteen hundred and forty-seven, in the following words, to wit:

"Angles, January 25, 1847.

"To Capt. J. K. Wilson, light artillery.

"Sir: You are hereby authorized and directed to raise a company of men to constitute the second company of artillery in the California service, and for that purpose are detached from your present command.

"You will please report the number you may be able to enlist with as little delay as possible. You are authorized to enlist the men for three months and to promise them as compensation twenty-five dollars per month.

"Respectfully, J.C. Fremont
"Lt. Col. Commanding California forces in the U.S. Service."

Thereby raising and attempting to raise troops in violation and contempt of the lawful command aforementioned of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, of date January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, and thereby acting openly in defiance of and in mutiny against the authority of his superior officer aforesaid, by raising and attempting to raise troops, and by proclaiming himself to be and assuming to act as the commander of the United States forces in California.

Specification 3. – In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of mounted riflemen organized in California for the United States service, which was placed by orders aforesaid from the secretary of war of June eighteenth, hundred and forty-six, under command of Brigadier General Kearney, did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, California, on the fifth day of February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, issue an order to Louis McLane, a passed midshipman in the United States navy, in the following words, to wit:

Ciudad de los Angeles, February 5, 1847.

"Sir, I feel it my duty, as the representative of the United States government in California, to instruct you to proceed forthwith north, as far as in your discretion may seem necessary, and exercise your best efforts in enlisting troops for the term of six months, compensation to be $- per month, to be employed in the service of the United States and at such points in the territory of California as in my judgment they are most required. Your are further more instructed to proceed as far as the town of Yerba Buena, on the San Francisco Bay, and examine diligently into the state of the navel or military defense of that town, and particularly to inquire into the best means of fortifying the mouth of the bay, against the ingress of all enemies, and I particularly recommend to you to cause to be forthwith commenced the erection of a fort or battery on White Island, calculated when completed to prevent the entrance of any ship or vessel that may be forbidden to do so by the United States.

"To enable you to carry into effect the foregoing instructions, you are hereby authorized and required to call on all officers under my command to extend to you any assistance of money, men, or property that in your judgment may be necessary fully to accomplished the same.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal, at the capital of California, this date before written

"J.C. Fremont,
Governor of California.

"Attest: Wm H Russell, Secretary of State.

"To Major Louis McLane,
U.S. Army, California regiment."

Thereby raising and attempting to raise troops in violation and contempt of the aforesaid lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier Gen. Kearney, dated January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-seven; and thereby acting in defiance of the authority and in mutiny against his superior office aforesaid, in raising and attempting to raise these troops, and in proclaiming himself to be and in assuming to act as the governor of California.

Specification 4.-In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of mounted riflemen organized in California for the United States service, and which was placed by orders aforesaid from the secretary of war of June eighteenth, hundred and forty-six, under command of Brigadier General Kearney, did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, California, on the seventh day of February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, write to Commodore Shubrick, commanding the United States naval forces in the Pacific, a letter in words following, to wit:

"Ciudad de los Angeles, February 7, 1847.

"Sir: I had the honor, at a late hour last night, to receive your favor of the 25th ultimo, and, fully coinciding with your opinion that you express, that a co-operation of our respective commands, as a precautionary measure at least, is of primary importance, I hasten to acknowledge its receipt, and signify to you my earnest desire to see you and consult on the measures calculated in our judgments to be most certain of making out labors conduce the interest of our government.

"Not having had, as you remarked, and communication since your arrival on this coast with Commodore Stockton, you seem not to have been made acquainted with the fact that, by a commission from the commodore, I have been placed in command of the territory as the civil governor, which I beg leave herewith to communicate to you.

"It is also proper to advise you that Gen. Kearney, who comes to California with instructions from the secretary of war, dated as early as June last – designed for a state of affairs which he by no means found, to wit, the country still unconquered, and which of course being intended for very different circumstances, cannot have application here – claims himself to have supreme command in California; which position I felt it is my duty to deny him, and, in language respectful but decisive of my purpose, communicated to him.

"The subjoined reasons led me to the conclusion I adopted: The conquest of California was under taken and completed by the joint efforts of Commodore Stockton and myself, in obedience to what we regarded paramount duties from us to our government. That done, the next necessary step in order was the organization of a civil government, designed to maintain the conquest, by the exercise of mild and wholesome civil restraints over the people rather than by the iron rule of a military force.

"The result of our labors - which were precisely what were contemplated by the instructions of Gen. Kearney - were promptly communicated to the executive of the Union by an express, which has not yet brought back the approval or disapproval of the government.
General Kearney's instructions being, therefore, to the letter fully anticipated by others, I did not feel myself at liberty to yield a position so important to the interests of my country until after a full understanding of all the grounds, it would be the pleasure of my government that I should do so.

"I trust the foregoing explanation will fully satisfy you that position I take is an incident to the extraordinary circumstances surrounding me, and is borne out by rigid adherence to the line of duty.

"The insurrection which broke out here in September last, and which required a considerable force and large expenditure of money to put down, has left me in rather an embarrassed condition for funds to redeem my men, and to cancel the necessary obligations created by the quartermaster and commissariat department of the command. If, therefore, you can at and early day advance me a considerable sum of money it will tend greatly to subserve the interests of the country and relieve an embarrassment which, as an officer of the government, heavily presses me.

"I start, simultaneously with this, a courier to the United States with important dispatches, but thinking that perhaps you might wish to avail yourself of so good an opportunity of forwarding dispatches, I have ordered him to remain on the border of the settlements until the return of my courier from you. The precise point where my courier will remain recruiting his animals being at this time unknown to me, you will please send your dispatches by the return courier to me, and I will forward them to the party homeward bound.

"With considerations of high respect, I am, sir, your ob't ser'y, J.C. Fremont
Governor of California

"To Commodore W. Branford Shubrick, Commanding U.S. naval forces in the Pacific ocean, Bay of Monterey."

Thereby continuing and reasserting his resistance of the lawful authority of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, assuming to be governor of California, and endeavoring to persuade the said naval commander to support and countenance him in his mutiny against his said superior and commanding officer.

Speciation 5. – In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of mounted riflemen organized in California for the United States service, and under command of Brigadier General Kearney by aforesaid orders from the war department, dated June 18, 1846, did, at Angeles, on the 11th of February, 1847, write to Willard O. Hall, in the following words, to wit:

"Government house, Angeles, Feb. 11, 1847.

"To Hon. Willard P. Hall.

"Sir: The position I occupy as the chief representative of the United States government in California renders it an imperative duty on me that I should prudently but with energy exert all the power with which I am clothed to retain the conquest with have made, and strengthen it all by all means possible.

"The executive office of California, which I understand, centers supreme, civil and military command in the territory, was actually assigned me as early as September last, and my entering on the duties of the same was postponed only in consequences of an insurrection that broke out in this portion of the territory, which it took some months to quell; that done, I assumed the office of governor, as had been previously arranged.

"I learn with surprise and mortification that Gen. Kearney, in obedience to what I cannot but regard as obsolete instructions from the secretary of war, means to question my right, and , viewing my position and claim clear and indisputable, I cannot, without considering myself derelict to my trust, and unworthy the station of an American officer, yield or permit myself to be interfered with by an other, until directed to do so by the proper authorities at predicated on full and ample dispatches that I forwarded to Washington as early as August of last year.

"I require the co-operation, with a view to the important object of preserving the peace and tranquility of California, of every American citizen and solider in the territory, and must expressly inhibit from all quarters all arguments and intimidations that may trend to weaken my authority, by inducing the belief that my weaken my authority, by inducting the belief that my present position is an act of usurpation, unjust and will no be sanctioned by my government.

"Intimidations, not perhaps susceptible of positive proof, have reached me that you were using your talents and high character as a member of the American congress, in your intercourse with the citizens of this place and the troops under my immediate command, to raise doubts, if not questioning altogether the legitimacy of validity of my tenure of office.

"I feel myself constrained therefore, in obedience to the behest and high interests of my government, as well as respects I cherish for the position you occupy, to inquire of you in frankness whether the intimations alluded to have any foundations in fact or truth.

"Cherishing a confident belief that you must, on reflection, concur with me in thinking that at this juncture any move calculated to weaken me, or embarrass, must be inexpedient and improper, I trust a negative answer from you will dissipate my doubts, and admonish me that the inquiry I have made was altogether unnecessary.

"With considerations of high respect, I am your obedient servant, J.C. Fremont
Governor of California

Thereby avowing and justifying his resistance and mutiny against his superior officer, Brigadier Gen. Kearney, and endeavoring to persuade and... the said Hall a person of influence in California, to aid and abet him therein, and to prevent said Hall from supporting the lawful authority of Brigadier Gen. Kearney

Speciation 6. –In this, that the, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the second of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, in contempt of the lawful authority of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, assume to be and to act as governor of California, in executing a deed or instrument of writing in the following words, to wit:

"In consideration of Francis Temple having conveyed to the United States of North America a certain island, commonly called White or Bird island situated near the mouth of San Francisco Bay, J.C. Fremont, governor of California, and in virtue of as the legal representative of the United States, and my successors in office, to pay the said Francis Temple, his heirs, or assigns, the sum five thousand dollars, ($5,000) to be paid as early a day as possible after the receipt of funds from the United States.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and have caused the seal of the territory of California to be affixed, at the Ciudad de los Angeles, the capital of California, the 2nd day of March, A. D. 1847.

J.C. Fremont, Governor of California.

"Attest: Wm H, Russell, secretary of state"

Specification 7. – In this, that he Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California for the United States service, which by aforesaid orders from the war department, dated June eighteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-six, were placed under command of Brigadier General Kearney, and having been officially informed by W. Branford Shubrick, as commander-in-chief of the naval forces in the Pacific, in a letter dated U.S. ship Independence, Monterey, February twenty-three, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, in the following words, to wit: "General Kearney, I am instructed, is the commanding military officer in California, and invested by the president with the administrative functions of government over the people and territory;" and having received, on the eleventh of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, from Gen. Kearney, by the hands of Capt. H. S. Turner, U.S. army, a circular proclamation, in the following words, to wit:

Circular.

"To all whom it may concern: Be it known, that the president of the United States, desirous to give secure to the people of California a share of the good government and happy civil organization enjoyed by the people of the United States, and to protect them at the same time from the attack of foreign foes and from internal commotions, has invested the undersigned with separate and distinct powers, civil and military, a cordial co-operation in the exercise of which, it is hoped and believed, will have the happy results desired.

"To the commander-in-chief of the naval forces the president has assigned the regulation of the import trade; the conditions on which vessels of all nations, our as well as foreign, may be admitted into ports of the territory; and the establishment of all port regulations

"To the commanding military officer the president has assigned the direction of the operations on land, and has invested him with administrative functions of government over the people and territory occupied by the forces of the United States.

"Done at Monterey, capital of California, this first day of March, A.D. 1847.

"W. Banford Shubrick, Commander in chief of the navel forces,

"S. W. Kearney, Brigadier General U. States Army, And Governor of California

And having at the same time, on the eleventh day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, received from Brigadier General Kearney, by the hands of Captain H.S. Turner, the following order, in terms to wit:

"Orders, No. 2.

Headquarters 10th Mil. Department, Monterey, March 1, 1847.

"I. With a view to regular payment, it is necessary that the battalion of California volunteers, now under the command of Lieut. Colonel Fremont, of the army, and stationed at Ciudad de los Angeles, if not originally mustered under the law of May 13th, and the supplement law of June 18th, 1846, should now be mustered into service under those laws. This must be made at once by Lieutenant Colonel Fremont. Should any men of that battalion be unwilling to continue in service under the above named laws, they will be conducted by Lieut. Colonel Fremont to Yerba Buena, via Monterey, and be there discharged.
"III. Lieutenant Colonel P. St. G. Cooke, now in the command of the Mormon battalion, is entrusted with the supervision of the southern military district, for the protection and defense of which he will make the necessary provision, posting his command (to consist of company C, first dragoons, the Mormon battalion, and the California volunteers) at such places as he may deem most eligible.

"By order of Brig. Gen. S.W. Kearney,

"H.S. Turner,
Captain, A.A.A. General."

Did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the fifteenth day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, issue orders to Captain Richard Owens, in the words following, to wit:

"Ciudad de los Angeles, March 15, 1847.

"Sir: In the performance of a portion of my official duties it becomes necessary that I should visit in person the northern district of the territory, where I shall probably be detained some fifteen or twenty days, and the better to possess you of my views in my absence, and to render your authority in the mean time undoubted, I have considered it proper to issue the following orders:

"1st. You will continue with the entire battalion as San Gabriel, observing order, valiance, and exercising as much discipline as in your discretion can be prudently enforced.

2d. You will make no move whatever from San Gabriel in my absence unless to repel an actual invasion, or obey the order of any officer that does no emanate from me.

3d. You will take the best possible care of the public arms and munitions belonging to the command, and turn them over to no corps without my special order.

4th. The general police of the garrison and strict regard to the public interest will of course, as commandant ad interim, constantly engage your best efforts.

"Very respectfully, your obedient serv’t.,

"J.C. Fremont
Lieutenant Colonel U.S. Army, and Commander of California battalion"

To Capt. Richards Owens,
Acting commandant of California battalion.

Thereby himself resisting the authority and disobeying the orders of Brigadier General Kearney, as conveyed to him in the aforesaid order No. 2 of the 10th military department, by continuing in service the entire California battalion contrary to said orders; and by ordering the battalion to remain at San Gabriel, contrary to the said orders from Brigadier General Kearney to march them to Yerba Buena. – Thereby further inciting and ordering said Captain Owens, with the force of this battalion which he had placed under said Owen’s command, to disobey the order and resist the authority of any officer but himself, and specially ordering him not to surrender the arms and munitions of the battalion. In obedience to which order from Lieutenant Colonel J.C. Fremont, said Owens did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 24th of March, 1847, refuse to submit to the authority of Lieut. Col. P. St. G. Cooke, appointed in the aforesaid department orders by Brigadier Gen. Kearney to command the district in which his battalion was stationed; did refuse to surrender to said Lieutenant Col. Cooke, or to permit Lieut. Col. Cooke to take possession of two howitzers, brought by the 1st dragoons from Fort Leavenworth and then at San Gabriel; which said mutiny and resistance of lawful authority by said Capt. Owens was the incitement and positive order as aforesaid of Lieutenant Colonel J. C. Fremont; not withstanding he, Lieutenant Colonel J.C. Fremont, had officially informed Captain Turner, at Pueblo de los Angeles, on the 12th day of March, 1847, that he would obey and execute the said orders of Brigadier General Kearney, to wit: 10th military department order No. 2, dated March 1, 1847.

Specification 8. - In this, that he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California for the United States service, having on the 11th day of March, 1847, received the lawful order of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, to wit, the aforesaid orders No. 2, dated headquarters 0th military department, Monterey, March 1, 1847, whereby he was ordered to march such part of said battalion as refused to be mustered into service to Yerba Buena, there to be discharged, did refuse to obey said order, and did make known his refusal to Lieutenant Colonel Cooke, commanding the district in which his battalion was serving by a written communication in terms to wit:

"Ciudad de los Angeles, March 16, 1847.

"Sir: I am directed by Gov. Fremont to acknowledge a few moments since the receipt of your communication of the 14th instant, and in reply to say that the volunteers constituting the California battalion decline, without and individual exception, to be mustered into the United States service conformable to order No. 2 of the 10th military department referred to by you.

"The Governor considers it unsafe at this time when rumor is rife with a threatened insurrection, to discharge the battalion, and will decline doing so; and, whilst they remain in service, he regards its forces quite sufficient for the protection of the artillery and ordnance stores of the mission at San Gabriel. "I am, with considerations of respect, your obedient servant,

WM H. Russell,
Secretary of State.

"To P. St. George Cooke, Lt. Col. Commanding mission San Louis Reg."

Therein still assuming to be and act as governor of California, retaining in service an armed force contrary to the order of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, and refusing to march them according to his orders.

Specification 9. – In this, that he, Lieutenant Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California for the United States service, and under the lawful command of Brigadier General Kearney; and, having received, on the 11th of March, 1847, at Ciudad de los Angeles, as set out in the seventh specification to this charge, due and official notification from Brigadier General Kearney, and Commodore Shubrick that the president of the United States had invested General Kearney with the military command in California, and with the administration functions of government over the people and territory occupied by the forces of the United States, did, nevertheless, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 21st day of March, 1847, issue the following order to the collector of the port of San Pedro, in terms, to wit:

"Ciudad de los Angeles, March 21, 1847.

Sir: Your are hereby ordered and permitted, in the case of F. Huttman, to receive government paper in payment of his customs house dues, Very Respectfully,

J.C. Fremont
Governor of California

By William H Russell
Secretary of State

To David W. Alexander,
"Collector of the Port of San Pedro."

Thereby assuming to be and to act as governor of California, in contempt of the authority and in usurpation of the power of his superior officer; whereby the collector aforesaid did receive payment of customs the certificates of the staff officers of his battalion of Californian volunteers, to the amount of seventeen hundred and thirty-one dollars forty-one and a half cents, which paper was purchased by the holder from whom the collector was ordered to receive it at a discount of thirty per cent.

Specification 10.- In this, the he, Lieutenant Col. John C Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U. States army, after he had been duly informed by his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, that he, General Kearney, had been invested by the president of the United States with the command of the troops in California, by exhibiting to him, Lieutenant Colonel Fremont, on the 16th day of January, 1847, at Ciudad de los Angeles, the aforesaid orders from the war department, dated June 18th, 1846, did, notwithstanding, disregard and set aside the lawful authority of said superior officer, and did himself usurp and exercise the functions of said superior officer in the following official acts and matters, to wit:

First. In ordering a general court martial at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 24th of January, 1847, by his own authority, and in the order proclaiming himself to be and assuming to act as "the military commander in-chief of California.
Second. In publishing a general order at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 25th day of January, 1847, in which he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, is styled "the military commander-in-chief of California."

Third. In approving, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 27th of January, 1847, the proceedings of a general court martial, called as aforesaid by his order of January 24, 1847, by which court martial private George Smith, of the California volunteers, was sustenance to twenty-two months at hard labor, and Lieut. Roch sentenced to be cashiered; and in declaring himself to be, and in assuming said proceedings, as "the governor of California."

Fourth. In accepting, by a general order published at Angeles, on the 13th of February, 1847, the resignation of the following commissioned officers of the California battalion of volunteers, to wit: Capt. H. L. Ford, Captain Samuel Gibson, Capt. Winham Findlay, Lieutenants W. Baldrigern Rhensaw, W. Blackburn, J. Scott, J. R. Barton, and J. M. Hadspeth, in contempt and violation of the aforesaid order, dated 16th of January, 1847, which he had received from Brig. Gen. Kearney, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 16th day of January, 1847.

Specification 11. – In this, that he, Lieutenant Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, did fail to obey the order of Brig. General Kearney, to repair to Monterey, as communicated to him verbally by Brig. Gen. Kearney, on the 26th day of March, 1847, and repealed to him in writing on the 28th of March, 1847, in the words following, to wit:

"Headquarters 10th Military Department,
Monterey, California, March 28th, 1847.

"Sir: This will be handed to you by Col. Mason, 1st dragoons, who goes to the southern district clothed by me, with full authority to give such orders and instructions in that section of country as he may deem proper and necessary. Any instructions he may give to you will be considered as coming from myself.

"I deem it proper to suggest to you that, should there be at Pueblo any unsettled accounts or demands against the government, incurred by your orders or approval, which you may not have already authenticated and completed for the action of the disbursing officers, you at once do so, as it may be necessary for you to proceed from here to Washington city; and should there be any of the party which accompanied you from Missouri still with you, and under pay from the Topographical department, you will cause them to come to... place, that they may be returned, and discharged, and be of no further expense to the United States, unless they prefer being discharged at once in the country.

"In twelve days ... volunteers at San Pedro... you in this place.

"Very respectfully, your obedient serv’t
S.W. Kearney,
Brig. Gen. and Governor of California

"Lieut. Col. J.C. Fremont, Regiment of mounted riflemen,
Commanding battalion of California volunteers."

But did remain at Ciudad de los Angeles, until after the arrival there of Brig. Gen. Kearney, on the 9th of May, 1849, and till the order was then there verbally repeated to him.

Charge II. – Disobedience of the Lawful Commands of His Superior Officer.

Specification 1. – In this, that he, Lieut. Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers, organized in California for the United Stated service, having received the lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier General S. W. Kearney, in the following words, to wit:

Headquarters Army of the West,

Ciudad de los Angeles, January 16, 1846.

"By direction of Brigadier General Kearney, I send you a copy of a communication to him from the secretary of war, dated June 18, 1846, in which is the following: "These troops, and such as many be organized in California, will be under your command.” The general directs that no change will be made in the organized in your battalion of volunteers, or officers appointed in it, without his sanction or approval being first obtained.

Very respectfully, WM. H. Emory
Lieut. And acting assistant Adjt. General.

“To Lieut. Col J. C. Fremont,
Commanding battalion of California volunteers.”

And having received with this order a copy of instructions from the war department to Gen. Kearney, in the following words, to wit:

War Department Washington, June 18, 1846.

“Sir:  I have nothing of importance to ass to the dispatches which have been already forwarded to you.

“Since my last letter it has been determined to send a small force around Cape Horn to California.

“The arms, cannon, and previsions to be sent to the Pacific will be accompanied by one company of artillery of the regular army. Arrangements are not on foot to send a regiment of volunteers by sea.

“These troops and such as may be organized in California will be under your command.

More than common solicitude will be felt here in regard to the expedition committed to you, and it is desired that you should avail yourself of all occasions to inform the government of your progress and prospects.

“The president desires your opinion, as early as you are in a situation to give it, of the practicability of your reaching California in the course of this autumn or in the early part of the next winter. I need no repeat the expression of his wishes that you should take military possession of that country as soon as it can be safely done.

“I am, with great respect, your ob’t sev’t,
“W.L. Marcy, Secretary of war.

“To Col. S. W. Kearney”

Did reply to General Kearney, and his order aforesaid, in a written answer, in the following words, to wit:-

Ciudad de los Angeles. January 17, 1847.

“Sir: I have the honor to be in receipt of your favor of last night, in which I am directed to suspend the execution of orders which, in my capacity of military commandant of this territory, I have received from Com. Stockton, governor and commander in chief of California.

“I found Commodore Stockton in possession of the country, exercising the functions of military commandant and civil governor, as early as July of last year; and shortly thereafter I received from him the commission of military commandant, the duties of which I immediately entered upon, and have continued to exercise to the present moment. I found also on my arrival at this place, some three or four days since, Commodore Stockton still exercising the functions of civil and military governor, with the same apparent deference to his rank on the part of all officers (including yourself) as he maintained and required when he assumed in July last.

“I learned also in conversation with you that, on the march from San Diego recently to this place, you entered upon and discharged duties implying an acknowledgement of your part of supremacy to Commodore Stockton.

“I fell myself therefore, with great deference to your professional and personal character, constrained to say that, until you and Commodore Stockton adjust between yourself the question of rank, where I respectfully thin the difficulty belongs, I shall have to report an receive orders as heretofore from the commodore.
"With consideration of high regard,

I am sir your obedient servant,

"J.C. Fremont, Lieut. Col.
U.S. Army, and military commandant of the territory of California

"To Brigadier General S.W. Kearney, U. States Army."

And did thereby refuse to obey the aforesaid lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, and did thereby refuse to receive and obey any other order from him. This at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 17th day of January, 1847, notwithstanding he had on the 13th January, 1847, officially reported his battalion Brig, General Kearney, by writing, in words following in wit:

"On the march, January 13, 1846.

"Dear Sir: - I have the honor to report to you my arrival at this place with four hundred mounted riflemen and six pieces of artillery, including among the latter two pieces formally in the possession of the Californians.

"Their entire force, under the command of D Andre Pico, have this day laid down their arms, and surrendered to my command.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servaunt,

J.C. Fremont

"Brig. Gen S.W. Kearney com’g, U.S. forces Pueblo de los Angeles."

Specification 2.- In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California, which were placed by the aforesaid orders of the secretary of war, of June 18, 1846, under the command of Brigadier General Kearney, did issue and order to Capt. J.K. Wilson, at Angeles, January 25, 1847, in the following words, to wit:

"Angeles, January 25, 1847.

"Capt. J.K. Wilson, light artillery:

Sir:- Your are hereby authorized and directed to raise a company of men to constitute the second company of artillery in the California service, and for that purpose are detached from your present command.

"You will please report the number you may be able to enlist with as little delay as possible.

"You are authorized to enlist the men for three months, and to promise them as compensation twenty-five dollars per month. Respectfully,

"J.C. Fremont,

Lieut. Col. Commanding California forces in the U.S. service."

And did thereby disobey the aforesaid lawful command of his superior officer, Brig. General Kearney, dated January 16, 1847.

Specification 3.- In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California, which were placed by the aforesaid orders of the secretary of war, of June 18, 1846, under the command of Brigadier General Kearney, did at Ciudad de los Angeles, California, on the 5th day of February, 1847, issue an order to Louis McLane, a passed midshipman in the United States navy, in the following words, to wit.

Ciudad de los Angeles, February 5, 1847.
Sir, I feel it my duty, as the representative of the United States government in California, to instruct you to proceed forthwith north, as far as in your discretion may seem necessary, and exercise your best efforts in enlisting troops for the term of six months, compensation to be $- per month, to be employed in the service of the United States and at such points in the territory of California as in my judgment they are most required. Your are further more instructed to proceed as far as the town of Yerba Buena, on the San Francisco Bay, and examine diligently into the state of the naval or military defense of that town, and particularly to inquire into the best means of fortifying the mouth of the bay, against the ingress of all enemies, and I particularly recommend to you to cause to be forthwith commenced the erection of a fort or battery on White Island, calculated when completed to prevent the entrance of any ship or vessel that may be forbidden to do so by the United States.

"To enable you to carry into effect the foregoing instructions, you are hereby authorized and required to call on all officers under my command to extend to you any assistance of money, men, or property that in your judgment may be necessary fully to accomplished the same.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal, at the capital of California, this date before written

"J. C. Fremont,
Governor of California.

"Attest: Wm H Russell, Secretary of State.

"To Major Louis McLane,
U.S. Army, California regiment."

And did thereby disobey the aforesaid lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, dated January 16, 1847.

Specification 4.- In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California, which by aforesaid orders, from the war department, dated June 18, 1846, were placed under the command of Brigadier General Kearney, and having been officially informed by W. Branford Shubrick, as commander-in-chief of the navel forces in the Pacific, in a letter dated U.S. ship Independence, Monterey, February 23, 1847, in the following words, to wit:

"General Kearney, I am instructed, is the commanding military officer in California, and invested by the president with the administrative functions of government over the people and territory;” and having received, on the 11th March, 1847, from Gen. Kearney, by the hands of Captain H.S. Turner, U.S. army, a circular proclamation in the following words, to wit:

"Circular.

"To all whom it may concern: Be it known, that the president of the United States, desirous to give secure to the people of California a share of the good government and happy civil organization enjoyed by the people of the United States, and to protect them at the same time from the attack of foreign foes and from internal commotions, has invested the undersigned with separate and distinct powers, civil and military, a cordial co-operation in the exercise of which, it is hoped and believed, will have the happy results desired.

"To the commander-in-chief of the naval forces the president has assigned the regulation of the import trade; the conditions on which vessels of all nations, our as well as foreign, may be admitted into ports of the territory; and the establishment of all port regulations

"To the commanding military officer the president has assigned the direction of the operations on land, and has invested him with administrative functions of government over the people and territory occupied by the forces of the United States.

"Done at Monterey, capital of California, this first day of March, A.D. 1847.

"W. Banford Shubrick,
Commander in chief of the navel forces,

"S. W. Kearney,
Brigadier General U. States Army,
And Governor of California

And having at the same time, on the eleventh day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-
Orders, No. 2.

Headquarters 10th Mil. Department, Monterey, March 1, 1847.

"I. With a view to regular payment, it is necessary that the battalion of California volunteers, now under the command of Lieut. Colonel Fremont Of the army; and stationed at the Ciudad-de los Angeles, if not originally mustered under the law of May 13, and the supplemental law of June 18, 1846, should be now mustered into service under those laws. This muster will be made at once by Lieut. Col. Fremont. Should any men of the battalion be unwilling to continue in service under the above named laws, they will be conducted by Lieut. Col. Fremont to Yerba Buena, via Monterey, and be there discharged.

"III. Lieut. Col. P. St. G. Cooke, no in command of the Mormon battalion, is entrusted with the supervision of the southern military district, for the protection and defense of which he will make the necessary provision, posting his command (to consist of company C 1st dragoons, the Mormon battalion, and the California volunteers) at such places as he may deem for eligible.

“By of Brig. Gen. S. W. Kearney,

“H.S. Turner,

Captain A. A. A. General”

Did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 15th day of March, 1847, issue orders to Captain Richard Owens, in the words following, to wit: "Ciudad de los Angeles, March 10, 1847

”Sir: “In the performance of a portion of my official duties, it becomes necessary that I should visit in person the northern district of the territory, where I shall probably be detained some fifteen to twenty days; and the better to possess you of my views in my absence, and to render you authority in the mean time undoubted, I have considered it proper to issue the following orders:

“1st. You will continue, with the entire battalion at San Gabriel, observing order, vigilance, and exercising as much discipline as in your discretion can be prudently enforces.

“2d. You will make no move whatever from San Gabriel in my absence, unless to repel an actual invasion, or obey the order of any officer that does not emanate from me.

“3d. You will take the best possible care of the public arms and munitions belonging to the command, and turn them over to no corps without my special order.

“Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. FREMONT,

Lieut. Col. U.S. army and Commandant of California battalion.

“To: Capt. RICHARD OWENS,

Acting Commandant California Battalion.”

And did, thereby disobey the lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, as conveyed to him in the aforesaid order No. 2, of the 10th military department, by continuing in service the whole California battalion contrary to said orders, and by ordering the battalion to remain at San Gabriel, contrary to said orders from Brigadier Gen. Kearney to march them to Yerba Buena, notwithstanding he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, Had officially Captain Turner, at Pueblo de los Angeles on the twelfth of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, that he would obey and execute the said orders of Brig. Gen. Kearney, to wit: Order No. 2 of the 10th military department, dated March one, eighteen hundred and forty-seven.

Specification 5. -In this, that he, Lieut. Colonel J. C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California for the U. States service, having, on the eleventh day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, received the lawful order of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, to wit: the aforesaid orders, No. 2, dated headquarters 10 military department, Monterey, March first, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, whereby he was ordered to march such part of said battalion as refused to be mustered into service to Yerba Buena, there to be discharged, did refuse to obey said order, and did make known his refusal to Lieut. Colonel Cooke, commanding the district in which his battalion was serving by a written communication in terms, to wit:

“Ciudad de los Angeles, March 16, 1847

“Sir: I am instructed by Gov. Fremont to acknowledge a few moments since the receipt of your communication of the 14th instant, and to say, in reply, that the volunteers constituting the California battalion declining, without an individual exception, to be mustered into the U. States service conformed to Order No. 2 of the 10th military department, referred to by you. The governor considers it unsafe at this time, when rumor is rife with a threatened insurrection to discharge the battalion, and will decline doing so; and, whilst they remain in service, he regards his force quite sufficient for the protection of the artillery and ordnance stores at the mission of San Gabriel.

“I am, with considerations of respect, you obedient servant.

“WM. H. RUSSELL, Secretary of state.

Lieut. Col. Com’g Mission San Louis Reg.”

Specification 6. –In this, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, after he had been duly informed by his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, that he, Brigadier General Kearney, had been invested by the president of the United States with the command of the troops in California, by exhibiting to him, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, on the sixteenth of January, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, at Ciudad de los Angeles, the aforesaid orders from the war department dated June eighteen, eighteen hundred and forty-six; and after he had duly received, on the sixteenth of January, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, the aforesaid lawful command of his superior officer, Brigadier General Kearney, on that day, to make no changes in the organization of his battalion or officers appointed in it, except with the approval of said Brigadier General Kearney, did, notwithstanding, disobey said lawful command of his superior officer, by accepting, in a general order, published at Angeles, on the thirteenth of February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, the resignation of the following commissioned officers of the California battalion of volunteers, to wit: Captains H. L. Ford, Samuel Gibson, Wm. Findlay, and Lieutenants W. Baldridge Rhensaw, W. Blackburn, J. Scott, J. R. Barton, and J. M. Hudspeth.

Specification 7. –In this, that he, Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, U.S. army, did fail to obey the order of Brigadier General Kearney, to repair to Monterey, as communicated to him verbally by said Brigadier General Kearney, on the twenty-six of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, and repeated to him in writing on the twenty-eight of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, in words following, to wit:

“Headquarters, 10th Military Department

“Monterey, California, March 28, 1847.

“Sir: This will be handed to you by Col. Mason, 1st dragoons, who goes to the southern district clothed by me with full authority to give such orders and instructions upon all matters, both civil and military, in that section of country, as he may deem proper and necessary. Any instructions he may give to you will be considered as coming from myself.

“I deem it proper to suggest to you that should there be at the Pueblo any unsettled accounts or demands against the government, incurred by your orders or approval, which you may not have already authenticated and completed for the action of the disbursing officers,“ that you at once do so, as it may be necessary for you to proceed from here to Washington city, and should there be any of the party which accompanied you from Missouri still with you, and under pay from the topographical department, you will cause them to come to this place, that they may be returned home and discharged, and be of no further expense to the United States, unless they prefer being discharged at once in this country.
"In twelve days after you have embarked the volunteers at San Pedro, I desire to see you in this place.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"S. W. Kearney,

"Brig. Gen. and Governor of California,

"Lieut. J.C. Fremont, reg't of mounted riflemen, commanding battalion California volunteers, Ciudad los Angeles."

But did remain at the Ciudad de los Angeles, until after the arrival there of Brig. Gen. Kearney, on the 8th of May, 1847, and till the order was then and there verbally repeated to him.

CHARGE III---CONDUCT TO THE PREJUDICE OF GOOD ORDER AND MILITARY DISCIPLINE

Specification 1. – In this, that he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of mounted riflemen, organized in California for the United States service, and placed, by orders aforesaid from the secretary of war of June 8th, 1846, under command of Brig. Gen. Kearney, did at Ciudad de los Angeles, California, on the 7th February, 1847 write to Commodore Shubrick, commanding the United States naval forces in the Pacific, a letter in words as hereinbefore recited in the 4th specification to the 1st charge, thereby officially informing said naval commander that he had refused to acknowledge the lawful authority of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, and endeavoring to persuade said naval commander to support and countenance him therein. This to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Specification 2. – In this, that he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California for the U. States service, and placed under command of Brig. Gen. Kearney by aforesaid orders from the war department, dated June 18, 1846, did, at Angeles, on the 11th of February, 1847, write to W. P. Hall in words as hereinbefore recited in the 5th specification to the 1st charge, thereby avowing his resistance of the authority of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, and endeavoring to prevent said Hall from supporting the lawful authority of Brig. Gen. Kearney. This to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Specification 3. – In this, that he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, did, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 2d of March, 1847, in contempt of the lawful authority of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, assume to be and act as governor of California, in executing a deed or instrument of writing in words as hereinbefore recited in the 6th specification to the 1st charge, thereby assuming and exercising the functions and authority of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Specification 4. – In that, that he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army being in command of a battalion of volunteers organized in California for the U. States service, which, by aforesaid orders from the war department, dated June 18, 1846, were placed under command of Brig. Gen. Kearney, and having been officially informed by W. Branford Shubrick, and commander-in-chief of the naval forces in the Pacific, in a letter dated U.S. ship Independence, Monterey, February 23, 1847, in the following words, to wit: "Gen. Kearney, I am instructed, in the commanding military officer in California, in invested by the president with the administrative function of government over the people and territory." And having received on the 11th of March, 1847, from Gen. Kearney, by the hands of Capt. H. S. Turner, United States army, a circular proclamation in words as hereinbefore recited in the 7th specification to the 1st charge, did, notwithstanding, at Ciudad de los Angeles, on the 15th of March, 1847, issue written orders to Capt. Richard Owens, of the California battalion, in words as hereinbefore recited in the 7th specification to the 1st charge, thereby ordering said Owens not to obey the orders of any officer but himself. This to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Specification 5. – In this, that he, Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, of the regiment of mounted riflemen, United States army, after he had been duly informed by his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, that he, Gen. Kearney, had been invested by the President of the United States with the command of the troops in California, by exhibiting to him, Lieut. Col. Fremont, on the 6th of January, 1847, at Ciudad de los Angeles, the aforesaid orders from the war department, dated June 18, 1846, did notwithstanding, disregard the lawful authority of said superior officer, and did himself usurp and exercise the functions of said superior officer in the several official acts and matters, to wit, as heretofore recited in the 10th specification to the 1st charge; that is to say, in ordering a general court martial at Ciudad de los Angeles on the 24th of January, 1847, and approving at Ciudad de los Angeles, in the 27th of January, 1847, the proceedings of the court; and in accepting at Angeles, on the 13th of February, 1847, the resignations of officers in the California battalion: all this being in usurpation of the functions and authority of his superior officer, Brig. Gen. Kearney, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

The reading of the charges being finished, the accused was called upon to plead to them.

"Not guilty," was the response.

He was informed that it was his privilege to except any particular charge.

Col. Fremont then asked to read the court the following paper.

"Mr. President: In preferring the usual request to be allowed counsel in the case, I wish to state that it is no part of my intention or desire to make deference on any legal or technical point, but only to have friendly assistance in bringing out the merits of the case in lucid and proper order, and in obtaining a full trial on the merits, in the shortest time, and with the least amount of the trouble to the courts. With this view, no objection can be made to the relevancy or legality of any question proposed by the prosecution, the court, or any member of the court: not to any question which goes to show my motives, either by words or acts, in aggravation of the offences alleged against me; not to the authenticity of any evidence, written or printed, which I know or believe to be authentic; not will any question be proposed, or motion made, on my part, knowingly, of a nature to give just ground of objection on the part of the prosecution, or to cause delay in the trial, or give trouble to the court. But this waiver of proof to authenticity of papers is made on the express condition that all the persons brought from California by Gen. Kearney as witnesses, and listed as such, with the charges, and summoned, shall be sworn on the part of the prosecution, so as to save to me my right of cross-examination.

"In this way I hope to facilitate the progress of the trial, to get at once into the merits, to spare this court, the most unpleasant part of an unpleasant duty, and enable them the sooner to obey the feelings which call them to a very different duty.

"I was named as the counsel asked to be allowed me the two friends who accompany me, Thomas H. Benton and William Carey Jones, Esquires."

The Judge Advocate here brought forward for the decision of the court applications on the part of several reporters for the press to be allowed to take notes with a view to the publication of the proceedings in the trial. Whereupon the accused offered the subjoined paper:

"Mr. President: So far as a prohibition to publish the proceeding of the court is intended for the benefit of the accused, I do hereby renounce and waive all such benefit, and agree to the publication of everything."

The president now ordered the court-room to be cleared, with a view to consulting on the application submitted. This being done, the court remained with closed doors for about an hour. At it re-opening, a paper was ready by the judge advocate, in which the court, though declaring that its proceeding were open to the public, declined to take any such order as that asked for by the application, or in any matter to sanction or approve the publication of the evidence which might be disclosed in the course of the trial.

It being now too late (near 3 o’clock PM) to enter into examination of evidence, the court was adjourned until 10 o’clock A.M. next day.

Nothing has been heard directly from Capt. Howard himself, but a brother officer in the same regiment has written to his relatives in this state, from which the following short extracts have been kindly permitted to be taken. They are from a description of the storming of the Hill and Castle of Chapultepec, one of the most gallant and probably the most perilous and sanguinary contests in the whole war.

"We rose to the crest of the hill and, amid the most weathering fire of grape and canister and the musketry of near two thousand Mexicans, planted the ladders and, with a cheer, mounted. The first man who entered alive was Captain Howard – he was followed instanter," &c., &c.

"The first then or fifteen inside the works met some resistance, as they fell back into the building that in the center of the works, but we charged then and there, Captain Howard of Baltimore, with his own hand killed three, and by the time, the poor devils were calling for quarters," &.

Well may Maryland be proud of her sons. The name and fame of one of the most distinguished soldiers of the Revolution, Col. John E. Howard, have descended upon a grandson, if whom he might well be proud and who is able to uphold both. The laurels gathered by the ancestor at Cowpens, and at Entaw, will but bloom with fresh and renewed... by the side of those plucked by his chivalrous descendants at Chapultepec and Mexico.

The gallantry of Lieut. Tilton also of the Voltigeurs, was no less conspicuous. When about seizing the colors of his regiment, as they were falling from the hands of the mortally wounded standard bearer a partially spent ball struck him in the face, prostrating him instantly, so that all thought he was killed. In a moment, or two, however he recovered, and springing forward, after Howard, was the fifth man who entered the almost impregnable fortress alive.

General Pillow, who was in the van, but had just been wounded severely, at the distance of a few yards, was witness to the courage and conduct of both these daring young officers.

To those desirous of forming some idea of the nature of the fortress of Chapultepec, the Mexican West Point, and of the difficulties to be overcome in an assault upon it, we would mention that a small oil painting, taken in 1837, may be seen at the Patriot office.

Capt. John Magruder-The Charlottesville, (Va.) Advocate, publishes the subjoined extract of a letter from the gallant Capt. J.B. Magruder, who married in Baltimore, where his family now reside. Capt. M. is a native of Port Royal, Caroline County, (Va.) The Charlottesville Jeffersonian says, that Capt. Geo A. Magruder, of the U.S. Navy, a brother of an army officer, is now in that town on a visit to his relatives, having just returned from service in the Gulf of Mexico, where he has been in command of the bomb brig Vesuvius, and was stationed at Laguna as the governor of that Island. he was also engaged in the attack of Tuxpan and Tobasco, where he distinguished himself by his bravery and efficient services.

Extract of a letter from Capt. J.B. Magruder.

I was engaged in the 8th, 10th, 12th, and 13th of September, with the enemy. On the 13th, I was struck four times-knocked off my horse by a grape shot which struck me in the neck, but wounded me very slightly-otherwise, however, to make me faint-but I recovered in a few moments and went on in the action. I was afterwards wounded in the hand by a musket ball, but can now write. I had two horses shot, though not killed, under me, and my battery under my immediate command, repulsed five charges of the enemy's cavalry and infantry. My health is pretty good, though I am thinner than usual.

We want reinforcements dreadfully.
Let us regulate the tariff of this country here and we can support our army without costing the United States a cent. Every battle we have fought, from Palo Alto to the last, has been a forlorn hope. The Mexicans cannot make peace with a corporal guard. They are ashamed to do it, and hence them smallness of out army encourages the war; we will get no peace; less now than ever. I have not heard from home for two months. here we never part with our swords and pistols for a moment as assassinations are in every corner and in every house.

73.176 Nov. 13, 1847 Health of the Army

LATEST FROM MEXICO.

The steamship New Orleans, Capt. Auld, arrived at N. Orleans on the 4th inst. having left Vera Cruz on the 1st.

The British courier arrived at Vera Cruz on the 31st of October, having left Mexico on the 29th, to which date we have letters and papers.

Gen. Lane entered Puebla on the 13th Oct. with 3,000 men and six pieces of artillery--so says a dispatch of Santa Anna. The latter could effect nothing against him on the Pinal.

Gen. Patterson’s command was to leave Vera Cruz on the 2d inst. It will be composed of at least 5,000 men. The Texan Rangers go up with him.

Gen. Smith has been appointed governor of the city of Mexico. Gen. Quitman is about to return to the U. States. Gen. Shields, Capt. Philip Kearney, Captain Davis, Lieut. Kiger and other officers, will accompany him.

From the Durango Journal, of the 14th ult., is derived the information that the U.S. frigate Portsmouth arrived in the waters of Mazatlan on the 22d of September, from Monterey, in California.--The United States squadron, consisting of the frigates Congress, Deale, the Cyane, and a transport, left Monterey on the 1st of September, for Mazatlan and San Blas, and for those of Guaymas and Acapulco.

The health of the army is far from being good--The climate of the valley of Mexico is not, as it appears, congenial to the constitutions of the south. It is just as enervating and fatal to our southern, as is that of Vera Cruz to the northern constitutions. The effective force of the entire army is reduced ten or fifteen per cent.

The city of Mexico was filled with rumors of peace. It was said that a quorum had met at Queretaro, and that the majority decided in favor of an amicable adjustment of difficulties.

The train which is to come down will be under the command of Col. Harney. A great number of wounded officers are to accompany.

Major Gaines, Capt. Cassius M. Clay, Capt. Heady, Maj. Borland, Capt. Danley and Midshipman Rogers come home, and we are happy to add our associate, Mr. Kendall.

Mr. Bankhead, the British minister, arrived at Vera Cruz on the 30th ult., and was received with military honors.

NNR 73.176 Nov. 13, 1847 Deaths, death of Capt. Walker, Huamantla, guerrillas

Deaths-Lt. E.B. Daniels, 2d. art. of wounds; Lt. Steen, of South Carolina regiment, of wounds, Capt. Huddleston 11th inf. of a bowel complaint on the 11th; Col. Roberts, assist. surg. 5th inf. of wound received at King’s Mill died on 12th; sergeant Sutcliffe, of ruffles, assassinated on the 15th, assistant surgeon Treadwell, of vomito at Vera Cruz on 24th.

A long list of officers have received leave of absence and will shortly have returned to the U. States.

Death of Capt. Walker.-Gen. Lane having arrived at Perote was there joined by Capt. Walker and his command, and both advance together on the Puebla road until they reached the town.
At this place Capt. Walker, by order of the commanding General, took up his line of march to Huamantla. On his arrival at Huamantla a sanguinary engagement ensued in the streets, between the forces of Capt. Walker, consisting of 250 men, and that of the Mexicans numbering 1,600, the result of which was the total expulsion of the enemy from the town, and its occupation by our valiant little army.

But the gallant Walker, after performing prodigies of valor and feats of the most daring character, fell in a single combat, pierced by the spear of an enraged father, who, goaded to actual frenzy by the death of this son, whose fall beneath the arm of Capt. Walker he had just witnessed, rushed forward, heedless of all danger, to avenge his death, and attacking the captain with almost irresistible violence, plunged his spear into his body, and slew him almost instantly.

The Mexicans last two hundred men and three pieces of artillery. The latter were thrown into a gully in the rear of the town by the visitors, who, after the achievement of their object, the dispersion of the guerrillas, for which they were dispatched to Huamantla, evacuated the place, and directed their course towards Pinal, on the Puebla road, which they reached without any opposition, and there meeting with Gen. Lane again, the combined American force continued its march upon Puebla.

Into this city, which was in a state of insurrection, it entered in platoons, delivering at every step a constant and well directed fire of musketry, which ceased not until the enemy retreated and order was restored in every quarter.

Gen. Rea, of whom we have heard so much of late, fled with 400 guerrillas towards Atlixco. Gen. Santa Anna was, by last accounts, at Tehuacan de las Grandes, having been deserted by all his followers except about 200.

The Delta also says: "Our correspondent, writing at a later date than the 25th ult. gives the following account of the death of Capt. Walker: 'The death of Capt. Walker is fully confirmed by a later arrival. It is stated that he was shot by a cannon ball from a masked battery, about 12 miles from the main road, at a point 16 leagues from Puebla. The ball also killed Capt. Loyall, of the Georgia mounted company, and eleven men are also reported to have been killed in the same action.'"

Atlixco has been taken possession of by 1,000 of our forces. This large city has wisely yielded, without the least resistance. Orizaba is, also, by this time, in possession of the American forces.

The Mexican government has superceded Santa Anna in the command of the army. Gen. Rincon has been appointed to that office. Santa Anna loudly protested against the violation of his rights as the first magistrate of the nation, and, refusing obedience to the government, retires Tehuacan. Gen. Scott and staff have lately visited the city of Guadalupe. Gen. Almonte reached Queretaro on the 7th ult.

Deaths of various officers noted

NNR 73.176 Nov. 13, 1847 deaths of various officers noted
Deaths – Lt. E. B. Daniels, 2d art. Of wounds; Lt. Steen, of South Carolina regiment, of wounds, Capt. Huddleston 11th inf. Of a bowel complaint on the 11th; Col. Roberts, assit. Surg. 5th inf. Death of Captain Walker. – Gen. Lane having arrived at Perote was there joined by Capt. Walker and his command, and both advanced together on the Puebla road until they reached the town of Vreves.

At this place Capt. Walker, by order of the commanding General, took up his line of march to Huamantla, by way of the towns of San Francisco and Guapastla. On his arrival at Huamantla a sanguinary engagement ensued in the streets, between the forces of Capt. General Scott’s Official Dispatches. We commence in this number the publication of dispatches at length, received at Washington from the commander-in-chief of our armies in Mexico, detailing the operations before, and the final capture of the city of Mexico.

The Washington “Union” of the 13th, from which the first order of these dispatches are extracted, publishes a letter from Mr. Penn, the postmaster at New Orleans, which says: “The channel through which the dispatches arrived at New Orleans is not understood. No dispatches were received though the same mail by the other departments, nor have the other reports referred to by Gen. Scott in his letter, reached the adjutant general.”

The Union adds: “By this mail I forward you some public documents which I believe to be important from the army in Mexico. They were brought to this city by Mr. Hays, one of the editors of the Delta. It seems they were forwarded to Vera Cruz by some private conveyance, and brought by him from that place to New Orleans. The editors of the Delta deserve the thanks of the government.”

The Union of the 15th, in which the subsequent package of dispatches appears, appends the following editorial:

“The official dispatches. We lay before our readers the second budget of dispatches which have been forwarded by Gen. Scott, and received by the secretary of war, on Friday night, with the exception of four reports Cols. Harney and Riley, Maj. Summer, and Captain Huger, and the list killed and wounded. These we shall layover for the “Union” of to-morrow evening.

“In addition to these dispatches, a very late letter (being a duplicate sent the 29th of October) from Gen. Scott to the secretary of war, dated “Headquarters of the army, Mexico, October 27,” was received on Saturday evening. It is very brief. He states that he encloses two very interesting reports made to (him) from below: 1. From Col. Childs, governor and commander at Puebla, dated the 13th distant, detailing the defense of that place, which, though highly arduous, gallant, and triumphant, has not exceeded what was expected at the hands of that excellent commander, his officers and men. 2. from Brig. Gen. Lane, dated at Puebla, the 18th, giving a brief account of a brilliant and successful affair between him and a body of the enemy at Huamantla.” These reports, however, have not... on to the war department.

“The general adds: ‘After establishing the new... below, as indicated in my circular letter of instructions, (of October 13,) I hope to have the means of occupying Atlixco, some 18 miles from Puebla, and Toluca, the state capital of Mexico, 40 miles hence, and perhaps Orizaba; but probably shall not attempt anymore distant expedition without further reinforcements, or until I shall have received the views of the department of the plans submitted in my report.’

“The last reports in the newspapers are, that the general has taken the three places indicated above, and it is also certain that he has received further reinforcements.”

Nicholas Philip Trist said to have invited the Mexican government to a conference

A letter, said to be from a very respectable house in the city of Mexico, dated 29th October, 1847, says: Mr. Trist has again invited our government to new conferences. May God grant that the result of them may be peace, which we so much desire.” [We doubt Mr. Trist having so done. – Editor Nat. Reg.]

Re-capture of American deserters at Nassau DESERTERS. The Nassau (New Providence) Gazette, of the 3d November, says: "Several of the American soldiers recently wrecked have since their arrival here, made their escape to the shore and deserted. The police force have however been on the alert, and have succeeded in recapturing two of them, for which they have received sixty dollars, the amount made payable by the U.S. government, being $30 a head for each one who may be caught. We have no doubt, that those who are still on shore will be also captured by the now efficient and active police body."

NRR 73.177 Nov. 20, 1847 quiet at Santa Fe, reports of assembling of Mexicans, attacks by Indians

Santa Fe. Mr. McCoons, of St. Louis, brings Santa Fe dates to the 19th October, at which time all was quiet there, but numerous reports were in circulation of the forces assembling at El Paso and Chihuahua.

The Indians continue to attack parties on the route. Mr. McC. Furnished details of several skirmishes. There is a great scarcity of grass on the plains and prairies, which have been burnt over as far as the eye could reach. Fire was seen every night on the Semerone. He also experienced snow storms on the route. Great suffering on the part of the men and the teams on the route are apprehended.

NRR 73.177 Nov. 20, 1847 Gen. Zachary Taylor’s request for a leave of absence

It is understood that Gen. Taylor – who has been absent from his family and private business for more than two years and a half, and during the whole of that time has been engaged in the most important and arduous duties – has asked for leave of absence to return to the United States for six months.

His letter to that effect was received by the adjutant general yesterday evening; in the course of which, Gen Taylor states that he thinks, in consequence of the present character of the war, his services may not be wanted at this time. He purposes to remove to Matamoras early this month, where he awaits the answer of the government, and expresses a desire to be in New Orleans by the 1st of Dec.

We understand the leave of absence has been granted to him; and we have no doubt that, if events should arise to call for his services on that frontier, he will fly to place himself at the head of his gallant army.

NRR 73.178 Nov. 20, 1847 President James Knox Polk overrules Gen. John Ellis Wool and restores Lts. Singletary and Pender

The Lieutenants Reinstated. - Lieuts. Singletary and Pender, who were "dishonorably discharged" by General Wool for being concerned in the late mutinous occurrences in the North Carolina regiment at Buena Vista, have been restored to their commands by order of president Polk. The Standard quotes the words: "The order of the president in this case makes General Wool’s order of discharge null and void, and Lieut. Singletary is considered as never having been out of service." And a similar order has of course been given as to Lieut. Pender.

The Raleigh Register, after a testimony to the chivalrous personal qualifications of Lieut. Singletary has the following remarks:

"But certainly, the president has acted most improperly about this affair. We do not question his power in the premises, for as he can remove, we take it for granted that he can also restore. But would any other president have reversed the order of an officer, so high in rank as General Wool, who was on the spot at the time of the occurrences, which led to Lieut. Singletary’s discharge, and must therefore be presumed to have acted on information satisfactory to his own mind – would, we say, any other president have interfered in the matter without examining into the facts if the case, or consulting with Gen. Wool? Mr. Polk’s conduct in this business, is a second edition, "revised and enlarged," as we printers say, of his high handed assumption of power with regard to the mutiny in the Mecklenburg Rowan companies, last winter. It appears to us perfectly folly, to expect subordination in the army, when the president by his mere sic volo, sic jubeo, thus over rides all military rule and etiquette, and proclaims from the house tops- "I am the state!"

"We know not what steps Gen. Wool may deem it proper to take, to rebuke this interference by the executive, but we are confident Col. Paine will promptly resign his command, and return home."

[NRR] 73.178-179 Nov. 20, 1847 Com. Robert Field Stockton's return from California, his quarrel with Gen. Stephen Watts Kearney over authority

California. – Return home of Commodore Stockton. The squabble for authority – and for such laurels as the conquest of California has afforded, is likely to prove edifying to the people of this republic. A trial is progressing at the seat of government which every day develops incidents worthy of attention, and for which we regret not having room in our columns for a more detailed report. The path of what passes will be given. Meantime another Richmond enters the field. Commodore Stockton, and suite reached St. Louis Mo. On the 4th inst., by an over land route from California, having been one hundred days in performing the journey. He met with some detention owing to his men being attacked by measles, but finally they arrived all in good health. On their route the Indians were occasionally troublesome. – one occasion received a slight wound from an arrow, said to have been a poisoned arrow, but no serious injury resulted.

On arriving at St. Joseph, an invitation was given to the commodore to accept a public dinner which was declined. He embarked the day of his arrival at St. Louis, for his residence, Princeton, N. J.

The St. Louis Republican of the 5th says:

In a conversation with the commodore, we learned from him his determination to demand, on his arrival at Washington a full and complete investigation of all the occurrences in California, involving the conquest of that country, and the official regulations of Commodore Stockton, General Kearney, and other functionaries. As our readers are aware, many and very contradictory statements have been presented in relation to public affairs in California, and nothing but a full investigation, sifting error from misstatement, and giving to each officer the credit which his acts deserve, is likely now to satisfy the public. For this reason, we hope that the demand will be acceded to, at and early day. The conduct of our public officers in California has been strangely misrepresented and misconceived, at home, under wrong imputations of charges of official misconduct.

Com. Stockton speaks unreservedly of his public course in California. It will be seen, by a communication which he has addressed to us, and which we publish below, that he claimed for himself the office of “commander in chief of the forces,” taking issue, on this question, with a writer in the “Californian” newspaper, who had spoken of Gen. Kearney in this relation. In regard to this publication, and to the reply of Com. Stockton, it is explained to us, that the letter from Com. Stockton was sent to the press before Gen. Kearney’s departure from California – that it was withheld from the public by the editor on the representations of Gen. Kearney; that afterwards, and when that officer had left the country, it was proposed by the editor that the letter should appear in his columns, but that Com. Stockton would not yield to his suggestion, and that it was after he had left for the states, and in opposition to his desire, that the publication was actually made.

Com. Stockton, in the conquest of California, acted upon his own responsibility before the arrival of General Kearney, and this being the case, that the conditional powers vested in Gen. Kearney were inoperative, and that he had no authority to act as “commander in chief” in California. He assures, that Gen. Kearney, on his arrival at San Diego, did acknowledge him as commander in chief, and offered his services and aid. That after the arrival of Gen Kearney at San Diego, Com Stockton repeatedly proffered him the command of the expeditionary against Los Angeles, which Gen. Kearney declined – preferring to serve as second to Com. Stockton. That, during the expedition, in the battle of San Pasqual, and for several days after their arrival in the city of Los Angeles, General Kearney continued to recognize the commodore as commander in chief. It is even stated, that General Kearney, by letter, requested the permission of the commodore, as commander in chief, to employ a portion of the troops on a particular duty. Some days following this, Gen Kearney set up the claim of being himself the military and civil commander of the Californians. In the correspondence which followed, the commodore denied this authority, and suspended General Kearney. He asserts, that the government at Washington has sustained his view of his powers, in as much as he of major general, and that of General Kearney was only brigadier general.

Whatever may have been the origin of the difficulties which unquestionably have attended the exercise of power in California, it is due alike to each of the officers concerned that the full inquiry should be made into all their public acts in that region, and that the people should be made acquainted with them. The necessity is the more obvious, as differences of opinion exist now which cannot be reconciled, which justice to anybody, without explanations which can only be derived from a full investigation.

Steamboat Meteor, Nov. 3, 1847.

To the Editors of the Missouri Republican:

Gentlemen: I have not yet seen the papers, but I am informed that it has been stated in yours, as well as other newspapers in the United States, that I was not "commander-in-chief" of the United States forces in California, on their march from San Diego to the Ciudad de los Angeles, in January last.

The same attempt to deprive me of that responsibility was made in California. My reply to the editor of the Californian, whom it turned out was the mere cat's paw, with the accompanying letter, signed by all the staff officers then in California, settled the matter there.

I now send the same papers to you, and request that you publish them, in the hop that they will produce the same result here.

My respect for the government and the people of the United States, will not permit me to characterize such unworthy attempts in the manner they deserve; but those who have been guilty of misrepresentation, will not go unwhipped of justice.

I have been forced, quite unwillingly, before the public, in self defense; and if it should be that the misstatements by which the second in command has been converted into "commander in chief", have not arisen from any "malus animus", but simply from a confusion of ideas on the field of battle nevertheless, I will be excused for having written on this letter without further information on the subject, because I wish that the people of Missouri, who have treated me with so much consideration and kindness, should be informed that I have nailed one falsehood to the counter, and that I intend to back up all I have said or written, or that others have said or written by my authority.

Faithfully, your obedient servant

R.F. Stockton.

From the Californian, July 17, 1847.

U.S. Frigate Congress
Harbor of San Diego, March 10th, 1847
To the Editors of the Californian, Monterey:

Gentlemen: In an editorial article in the Californian of the 13th February, you may find the following paragraph:

"Commodore Stockton announced to the officers that the whole expedition was placed under the command of Gen. Kearney, himself holding his station as commander in chief of California, and the General Kearney did command the whole expedition."

I take the first opportunity to say to you, that the above paragraph is not true in any one of its important particulars. It is not true that I placed the whole expedition under the command of Gen. Kearney, nor did I so announce it.

On the request of Gen. Kearney, and with the consent of Lieut. Rowan,(to whom with the consent of Lieut. Minot, who had previously held it, I had given the command only the night before,) I appointed Gen. Kearney to command the troops, and so announced it; at the same time stating distinctly, that I still retained my position as commander in chief – the word California did not pass my lips upon that occasion.

Now Messrs. Editors, if you say that I delegated or intended to delegate my duty or authority as the director of the expedition or commander in chief of the forces, or that Gen. Kearney, or any other person but myself, exercised, or pretended to exercise, any such power or authority, from the time we left San Diego until we arrived at the Ciudad de los Angeles, there I must say to you that all such statements are false.

But, Messrs, Editors, it id quite true that "Com. Stockton did leave San Diego at the head of the forces of his command," and marched into the Ciudad de los Angeles in the same
There are other most glaring misstatements in the editorial referred to, which no doubt in due season will be corrected. In the meantime, go on.

"Sic itur ad astra."
Your obedient servant, R.F. Stockton

P.S. This communication has been delayed, in the hope that I could be at Monterey before this time.

San Diego, 9th March, 1847

Sir: In answer to your letter from the 8th inst, we the Ciudad de los Angeles, was conceived and fitted out by Commodore Stockton, and commanded by cogence from its conception, to its successful termination at the Ciudad de los Angeles.

Commodore Stockton gave all orders and directions during the march, compartting with dignity of commander in chief, and all flags of truce were referred to him (Commodore Stockton) as commander in Chief and Governor of California.

We considered Gen. Kearney as second in command of the time we left San Diego to the termination of the expedition, and we believe he was so considered by all of the officers of the expedition.

With the highest regard S.C Rowan, Lieut. U.S.N
and Major George Minor, Lieut U.S.N, and Q.M J. Zeilin, 1st Lieut. and Brevet Captain, and Adj’t of the battalion.

W. Speiden, Purser U.S.N. and com’y

I beg leave further to add that the tactics used in this expedition, were the same as those introduced and practiced on the first march from San Pedro for Gen. Castro’s camp, in August last, when California was conquered by the forces under the command of Commodore Stockton. J.Zeilin, 1st Lieut. and Brevet Captain, and Adj’t U.S. Forces.

We certify that the above is true copy of the original,
T.P. Green, Lieut.
S. Mosely, Surgeon

I fully concur in the above statement, as I know them all to be true from my own personal knowledge, having carried orders from commodore Stockton, as commander in chief, to Gen. Kearney, as second in command; besides, during our march from San Diego to the Ciudad de los Angeles, Gen. Kearny told me himself, that he considered Com. Stockton as commander in chief.

NNR 73.179 Nov. 20, 1847 California tranquil, activities and distribution of troops

A Letter to the editor of the Albany Argus, from and officer in Col. Stevenson’s regiment, dated Pueblo des los Angeles, California, June 22, 1847, represents the country as being tranquil, and that nothing of importance had transpired there if importance since Gen.
Kearny had left there for the U. States. Some of the Californians who had left there for Sonoria, were returning, with deplorable accounts of the condition of the country, in consequence of which, says the writer, many respectable families at Sonoria were making arrangements to remove to California, from a conviction that they will be sure of a permanent and good government under the American flag. The letter says:

"We have now at this post nearly completed a strong fortress. It has been erected by the troops on a hill that commands the town and the surrounding country. This, of course, will effectually suppress any attempt at insurrection, as every effort must inevitably involve all engaged in it, in a common calamity."
The Mormon force here and at San Diego, consists of about 360 men. Their term of service expirers on the 16th of July. They have been invited to re-enter the service for another year. But at present there is not much prospect of their doing so. – This is extremely to be regretted, for they are a... quiet and peaceable set of men, submitting without resistance or a murmur to the severest discipline, and altogether a most useful and efficient body of men.

The regiment of New York volunteers is now very much scattered – being distributed among different posts from Sutter’s Settlement, on the Sacramento, to La Paz, in lower California – a distance of 1509 miles. The regiment will never probably be together again while in service. They will dearly earn all they receive from the government. The... of American industry and enterprise is plainly to be seen wherever our troops are stationed. Brieks are burned, ovens chimneys erected, saw-mills put in operation, and comfortable houses constructed wherever timber can be had. Watchers and... too, are sent to these stations from a distance of 50 miles, to be repaired; cloths brought to be made into clothing, leather to be made into boots and shoes – and at one of the posts, a tannery has been established – and at Monterey two of the N.Y. volunteers, who are employed by the commissary, have opened a stall at which beef, lamb, veal, and mutton can be purchased, dressed in Fulton market style. – They are doing remarkably well, and even the inhabitants who have been in the habit of slaughtering a bullock in the streets for their own use are abandoning the habit and patronizing the New York brothers.

These are specimens of what is going forward here in the way of civilization and improvement under the sway of the United States government and its arms. ...do well here who choose to help themselves and become useful. But I have no more time to write.

Position of the troops &c.- We find the following statements as reported by those arrived overland with Commodore Stockton.

At Sonoma- Capt. Brackett’s company, Stevenson’s regiment.

At Santa Barbara, Capt. Lippe’s company N. York volunteers.

At the Crudad de los Angeles, Col. Stevenson and two companies of his regiment; company c, 1st dragoons, Lieut. Smith commanding, Lieuts. Davidson and Stevenson. And Asst’t. Surgeon John Griffin.

Four companies of Mormon volunteers were discharged July 16th. A considerable number then were passed by Com. Stockton’s party on their return to the United States for their families to take them to the new settlement at Salt Lake. At San Diego, one company of Mormon volunteers; since discharged.

One bastion of the fort at Monterey was early done, then guns were mounded, and on the 4th of July a salute was fired from it.

The country quiet. Few merchants were upon the coast with goods, a supply was much wanted, particularly coffee, tea, sugar, dry goods, and tools for agriculture.

The Louisville Journal says: “Com. Stockton arrived at St. Joseph, Mo., on the 26th ult., with and escort of 45 men, commanded by Major Gillespie; left Sacramento valley July 19th; journey across very pleasant, had but two days rain; saw many Indians upon the road from California to the Missouri; met large numbers of emigrants for Oregon and California; 1,172 wagons passed Fort Laramie for the west, 140 of which were Mormons on their road to the new Zion, at the Great Salt Lake.”

In the commodores’ suit we find named Lieut. Wm. H. Thompson, U.S.N., Major Arch’d. H. Gillespie, and Capt. Saml. J. Hensley, Mr. J. Parker Norris, and Mr. Wm. Simmons. They accompany the commodore on to the seat of government.

the war patriots to volunteer and fill up the five companies required of that state some six months ago. Only one company has yet been raised in that thorough loco-foco state, from which it seems that the locofocos greatly prefer to talk against Mexico to fighting against her. Where are the locofoco editors and demagogues of Alabama who have written and talked so much of the justice of this war, and of the duty of all patriots to volunteer their service in it? – There are enough of them to form a regiment, but these persons refuse to enlist, not withstanding it is their duty to do so according to their own doctrine.

NNR 73.180 Nov. 20, 1847 Skirmish at the National Bridge

WAR WITH MEXICO.

SKIRMISH AT THE NATIONAL BRIDGE, SPET. 9.

A letter from a member of the Maryland regiment, dated National Bridge, Oct. 19th says:

"When within four hundred yards of the fort, we at once commenced throwing round shot and shells. Just before our cannon made a break at them, the Mexicans could be seen waving their swords from the ramparts. They left, however, very suddenly the moment the first shell struck near him. Just at this time an order passed down the line for Captains Brown, Barry and Dolan's companies to take position upon the left. Headed by mjr Kenley, we soon entered the chaparral, and after tugging and climbing the rocks and grape vines for about three hours, we obtained our position, and were soon formed into line of battle. An order was then given to charge. Our men did so with a tremendous shout, and soon gained the ramparts, in time to see the enemy scampering over the hills with the utmost precipitancy. The hill upon which the fort is situated is about 600 feet from the base.

"I see it stated in one of the Baltimore papers that Gen. Lane took possession of this place. Such is not the fact. Gen. Lane did not arrive till we had been there three weeks. He reviewed us several times and then moved on."

Officers--In another part of his letter the writer remarks:--"The appointment of Lt. Col. Hughes as colonel of the regiment has just been read to us on parade. I presume Major John R. Kenly will be made lieut. Colonel. A more popular appointment with the regiment could not be made. The major is the most popular man out here, and the officers of the regiment all go in for him. It is thought that we will leave for Jalapa in the course of two weeks."

NNR 73.180-181 Nov. 20, 1847 Incidents and actors in the campaign

INCIDENTS AND ACTORS IN THE CAMPAIGN.A father's life saved by his son.--Among the deserters tried and sentenced to be hung at Mexico, was a man named Edward McHenry, of the 4th artillery. Gen. Scott, as commander-in-chief-, had the power to approve or disapprove the sentence of the court. In passing on that of McHenry, the general made these remarks: "A like remission [from hanging] is made in the case of Edward McHenry, company G, out of consideration for a son, a private in the same company, who has remained faithful to his colors."[JNA]

NNR 73.181 Nov. 20, 1847 voting for governor among Pennsylvania volunteers at Perote in Mexico

Pennsylvania election at Perote. - By a late act of the Pennsylvania legislature, the volunteers from that state, now serving in Mexico, are entitled to vote for state officers at the time of a general election. – On the 12th of October, a poll was opened at Perote, and the Pennsylvania volunteers, in garrison there, exercised the right to suffrage, at the close of the vote stood for governor: Francis R Shunk, 66; James Irwin, 20. For canal commissioner: Morris Longstreth, 66, G. W. Patton, 19; Robert H. Morton, 1. [ATT]
Sir: Leaving a competent garrison at Puebla, this army advanced upon the capital as follows: -Twiggs's division preceded by Harney's brigade of cavalry, the 7th; Quitman’s division of volunteers, with a small detachment of United States marines, the 8th; Worth's division, the 9th; and Pillow's division the 10th—all in the month. On the 8th I overtook and then continued with the leading division. The crops were at no time beyond five hour or supporting distance apart; and, on descending into the basin of the capital, (seventy-five miles from Puebla, (they became more closely approximated about the head of Lake Chalco, with Lake Tescueo a little in front and to the right. On the 12th and 13th we pushed reconnaissances upon the Penon, an isolated mound, (eight miles from Mexico) of great height, strongly fortified to the top, (three tiers of works,) and flooded around the base by season of rains and sluices from the lakes. This mound, close to the national road, commands the principal approach to the city from the east. No doubt it might have been carried, but at a great and disproportionate loss, and I was anxious to spare the lives of this gallant army for a general battle, which I knew we had to win before capturing the city or obtaining the great object of the campaign—a just and honorable peace.

Another reconnaissance was directed (the 13th) upon Mexicalcingo, to the left of the Penon, a village at a fortified bridge across the outlet or canal leading from Lake Jochimilco to the capital-five miles from the latter. It might have been easy (masking the Penon) to force the passage; but on the other side of the bridge, we should have found ourselves four miles from this road, on a narrow causeway, flanked to the right and left by water or boggy grounds. Those difficulties, closely viewed, threw me back upon the project, long entertained, of turning the strong eastern defenses of the city by passing around south of Lakes Chalco and Jocuimilo, at the foot of the hills and mountains, so as to reach this point, and hence to manoeuvre on hard ground, though much broken, to the south and southwest of the capital, which has been more or less under our view since the 10th instant.

Accordingly, by a sudden inversion—Worth’s division, with Harney’s cavalry brigade, leading—we marched on the 15th instant. Pillows and Quitman’s divisions followed closely and then Twiggs’s division which was left till the next day, at Ayotia, in order to threaten the Penon and Mexicalcingo, and to deceive the enemy as long as practicable.

Twiggs, on the 16th, marching from Ayotia towards Chalco, (six miles, met a corps of more than double his numbers—cavalry and infantry—under General Valencia. Twiggs halted, deploying into line, and by a few rounds from Captain Taylor’s field battery, dispersed the enemy, killing or wounding many men and horses. No other molestation has been experienced except a few random shots from guerrilleros on the heights; and the march of twenty-seven miles, over a route deemed impracticable by the enemy, is not accomplished by all the corps—thanks to their indomitable zeal and physical prowess.

Arriving here, the 18th, Worth’s division and Harney’s cavalry were pushed forward a league to reconnoitre and to carry or to mask San Antonio on the direct road to the capital. This village was found strongly defended by field works, heavy guns, and numerous garrison. It could only be turned by infantry, to the left, over a field of volcanic rocks and lava; for, to our right the ground was too boggy. It was soon ascertained by the daring engineers, Capt. Mason and Lieuts. Stevens and Tower, ‘that the point could only be approached by the front, over a narrow causeway, flanked with wet ditches of great depth. Worth was ordered not to attack, but to threaten and to mask the place.

The first shot fired from San Antonio (the 18th) killed Captain S. Thornton, 21 dragoons, a gallant officer, who was covering the operations with his company.

The same day a reconnaissance was commenced to the left of San Augustin, first over difficult mounds, and farther on, over the same field of volcanic rocks and lava which extends to the mountains, some five miles, from San Antonio, towards Magdalena. This reconnaissance was continued to-day by Captain Lee, assisted by Lieutenants Beauregard and Tower, all of the engineers; who were joined in the afternoon b Major Smith of the same corps. Other diversions coming up, Pillow’s was advanced to make a practicable road for heavy artillery, and Twiggs’s thrown farther in front, to cover that operation; for, by the partial reconnaissance of yesterday, Captain Lee discovered a large corps of observation in that direction, with a detachment of his supports of cavalry and foot, under Captain Kearny and Lieut. Col. Graham, respectively, has a successful skirmish.
By three o'clock this afternoon the advanced division came to a point where the new road could only be continued under the direct fire of 22 pieces of the enemy's artillery, (most of them of large caliber) placed in a strong entrenched camp to oppose our operations, and surrounded by every advantage of ground, besides immense bodies of cavalry and infantry, hourly reinforced from the city over an excellent road beyond the volcanic field, and consequently entirely beyond the reach of our cavalry and artillery.

Arriving on the ground an hour later, I found that Pillow's and Twigg's divisions ad advanced to dislodge the enemy, picking their way (all officers on foot) along his front, and extending themselves toward the road from the city and enemy's left. Captain Magruder's field battery of mounted howitzers and rockets, had also; with great difficulty, been advanced within range of the entrenched camp. These batteries, most gallantly served, suffered much in the course of the afternoon from the enemy's superior metal.

The battle, though mostly stationary, continued to rage with great violence until night fall. Brevet Brig. Gen. P.F. Smith's and Brevet Col. Riley's brigades, (Twiggs's division,) supported by Brig. Generals Pierce's and Cadwallader's brigades, (Pillow's division,) were more than three hours under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry, along the almost impassable ravine in front and to the left of the entrenched camp. Besides the 22 pieces of artillery, the camp and ravine were defended closely by masses of infantry, and these again supported by clouds of cavalry, at hand and hovering in view. –Consequently no decided impression could be made by day light on the enemy's most formidable position, because independent of the difficulty of the ravine, our infantry, unaccompanied by cavalry and artillery, could not advance in column without being mowed down by the grape and canister of the batteries, no advance in line without being ridden over by the enemy's numerous cavalry. All our troops, however, including Magruder's and Callender's last batteries, not only maintained the exposed positions early gained, but all attempted charges upon them respectively, particularly on Riley's, (twice closely engaged with cavalry in greatly superior numbers,) were repulsed and punished.

From an eminence, soon after arriving near the scene, I observed the church and hamlet of Contreras, (or Ansalda,) on the road leading up from the capital, through the entrenched camp, to Magdalena, and seeing at the same time the stream of reinforcements advancing by the road from the city, I ordered (through Maj. Gen. Pillow) Col. Morgan, with his regiment, the 15th, till then held in reserve by Pillow, to move forward and occupy Contreras (or Ansalda) being persuaded, if occupied, it would arrest the enemy's reinforcements and ultimately decide the battle.

Riley was already on the enemy's left, in advance of the hamlet. A few minutes later, Brig. Gen. Shields, with his volunteer brigade, (New York and South Carolina regiments, Quitman's division,) coming up under my orders from San Augustin, I directed Shields to follow and sustain Morgan. – These corps, over the extreme difficulties of ground, partially covered with a low forest, before described, reached Contreras, and found Cadwallader's brigade in position, observing the formidable movement from the capital and much needing the timely reinforcement.

It was already dark, and the cold rain has begun to fall in torrents upon our unsheltered troops; for the hamlet, though a strong defensive position, can only hold the wounded men, and, unfortunately, the new regiments have little or nothing to eat in their haversacks. Wet, hungry, and without the possibility of sleep, all our gallant corps, I learn, are full of confidence, and only wait for the last hour of darkness to gain the positions whence to storm and carry the enemy's works.

Of the seven officers dispatched, since about sun down, from my position opposite the enemy's centre, and on this side of the field of rocks and lava, to communicate instruction to the hamlet, no one has succeeded in getting through those difficulties, increased by darkness. They have all returned. But the gallant and indefatigable Capt. Lee, of the engineers, who has been constantly with the operating forces, just in from Shields, Smith, Cadwallader &t, to report as above, and to ask that a powerful diversion be made against the centre of the entrenched camp towards morning.

Brig. Gen. Twiggs, cut off, as above, from the part of his division beyond the impracticable ground, and Capt. Lee, are gone, under my orders, to collect the forces remaining on this side, with which to make that diversion about five o'clock in the morning.

And here I will end this report, commenced at its date; and, in another, continue the narrative of the great events which them impended.

I have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, your most obedient servant,

Winfield Scott
Sir: My report No. 31, commenced in the night of the 19th instant closed the operations of the army with that day.

The morning of the 20th opened with one of a series of unsurpassed achievements, all in view of the capital, and to which I shall give the general name—battle of Mexico.

In the night of the 19th, Brigadier Generals Shields, P.F. Smith, and Cadwallader, and Colonel Riley with their brigades, and the 15th regiment under Colonel Morgan, detached from Brigadier General Pierce, found themselves in and about the important position—the village, hamlet, or hacienda, called, indifferently, Contreras, Ansalda, San Geronimo, half a mile nearer to the city than the enemy's entrenched camp on the same road, towards the factory of Magdalena.

That camp has been, unexpectedly, our formidable point of attack the afternoon before, and we had not to take it, without the aid of cavalry or artillery, or to throw back our advanced corps upon the road from San Augustin to the city, and thence force a passage through San Antonio.

Accordingly, to meet contingencies, Major General Worth was ordered to leave, early in the morning of the 20th, one of his brigades to mask San Antonio, and to march, with the other, six miles, via San Augustin, upon Contreras. A like destination was given to Major General Quitman and his remaining brigade in San Augustin—replacing, for the moment, garrison of that important depot with Harney's brigade of cavalry, as horse could not pass over the intervening rocks, &c. to reach the field of battle.

A diversion for an earlier hour (daylight) had been arranged the night before, according to the suggestion of Brigadier General Smith, received through the engineer, Captain Lee, who conveyed my orders to our troops remaining on the ground opposite the enemy's centre—the point for the diversion or a real attack, as circumstances might allow.

Guided by Captain Lee, it proved the latter, under the command of Colonel Ransom, of the 9th, having with him that regiment and some companies of three others—the 3d, 12th, and rifles.

At 3 o'clock A.M. the great movement commenced on the rear of the enemy's camp, Riley leading, followed successively by Cadwallader's and Smith's brigades, the latter temporally under the order of Major Dimick, of the 1st artillery—the whole force being commanded by Smith, the senior in the general attack, and whose arrangements, skill, and gallantry always challenge the highest admiration.

The march was rendered tedious by the darkness, and mud; but about sunrise, Riley, conducted by Lieut. Tower, engineer, had reached an elevation behind the enemy, whence he precipitated his columns; stormed the entrenchments; planted his several colors upon them, and carried the work—all in seventeen minutes.

Conducted by Lieut. Beauregard, engineer, and Lieutenant Brooks, of Twiggs's staff—both of whom like Lieut. Tower, had, in the night, twice reconnoitered the ground—Cadwallader brought up to the general assault two of his regiments—the voltigeurs and the 11th and the appointed time, Col. Ransom, with this temporary brigade, conducted by Captain Lee, engineer, no only made the movement to divert and to distract the enemy, but, after crossing the deep raving in his front, advanced, and poured into the works and upon the fugitives many volleys from his destructive musketry.

In the mean time Smith's own brigade, under the temporary command of Major Dimick, following the movements of Riley and Cadwallader, discovered, opposite and outside of the works, a long line of Mexican cavalry, drawn up as a support. Dimick, having at the head of the brigade the company of sappers and miners, under Lieut. Smith, engineer, who had conducted the march, was ordered by Brigadier General Smith to form line faced to the enemy, and in a charge, against a flank, routed the cavalry.

Shields, too, by the wise disposition of his brigade and gallant activity, contributed much to the general results. He held masses of cavalry and infantry, supported by artillery, in check below him, and captured hundreds, with one General (Mendoza) of those who fled from above.

I doubt whether a more brilliant or decisive victory-taking into view ground, artificial deference, batteries, and the extreme disparity of numbers- without cavalry or artillery on our side-is to be found on record. Including all our corps directed against the entrenched camp, with Shield’s brigade at the hamlet, we positively did not number over 4500 rank and file; and we knew by sight, and since more certainly by many captured documents and letters, 7000 men, with at least 12,000 more hovering with sight and striking distance-both on the 19th and 20th. All, not killed or captured, now fled with precipitation.

Thus was the great victory of Contreras achieved: on road to the capital opened; 700 of the enemy killed; 813 prisoners, including, among 88 officers, 4 generals; besides many colors and standards; 22 pieces of brass ordnance-half of large caliber; thousand of small arms and accoutrements; and immense quantity of shot, shells, powder, and cartridges, 700 pack mules, many horses, &c.-all in our hands.

It is highly gratifying to find that, by skillful arrangement and rapidity of execution, our loss, in killed and wounded, did not exceed, on the spot, 60; among the fore the brave Captain Charles Hanson, of the 7th infantry-not more distinguished for gallantry than for modesty, morals and piety. Lieut J. P. Johnston, 1st artillery, serving with Magruder’s battery, a young officer of the highest promise, was killed the evening before.

One of the most pleasing incidents of the victory is the recapture, in the works, by Captain Drum, 4th artillery, under Major Gardner, of the two brass six pounders, taken from another company of the same regiment, though without loss of honor, at the glorious battle of Buena Vista-about which guns the whole regiment had mourned for so many long months! Coming up, a little later, I had the happiness to join in the protracted cheers of the gallant 4th on the joyous event; and, indeed, the whole army sympathizes in its just pride and exultation.

The battle being won before the advancing brigades of Worth’s and Quitman’s divisions were in sight, both were ordered back to their later positions-Worth to attack San Antonio in front with his whole force, as soon as approached in the rear by Pillow’s and Twiggs’s divisions, moving from Contreras through San Angel and Coyoacan. By carrying San Antonio we knew that we should open another-a shorter and better road to the capital for our siege and to other trains.

Accordingly, the two advanced divisions and Shield’s brigade marched from Contreras, under the immediate orders of Major Gen. Pillow, who was now joined by the gallant, Brig. Gen. Pierce, of his division, personally thrown out of activity late in the evening before by a severe hurt received from the fall of his horse.

After giving necessary orders on the field, in the midst of prisoners and trophies, and sending instructions to Harney’s brigade of cavalry, left at San Augustine, to join me. I personally followed Pillow’s movement.

Arriving at Coyoacan, two miles by a cross road, from the rear of San Antonio, I first detached Capt. Lee, engineer, with Cap. Kearney’s troop (1st dragoons,) supported by the rifle regiment under Major Loring, to reconnoitre that strong point; and next dispatched Major General Pillow, with one of his brigades, (Cadwallader’s) to make the attack upon it, in concert with major General Worth, on the opposite side.

At the same time, by another road to the left, Lieutenant Stevens, of the engineers, supported by Lieutenant G.W. Smith’s company of sappers and miners, of the same corps, was to reconnoitre the strongly fortified church or convent of San Pablo in the hamlet of Churubuseo-one mile off. -Twiggs, with one of brigades (Smith’s-less the rifles) and Captain Taylor’s field battery, were ordered to follow and to attack the convent. Major Smith, senior engineer, was dispatched to concert with Twiggs the mode and means of attack, and Twiggs’ other brigade (Riley’s) I soon ordered up to support him.

Next (but all n ten minutes) I sent Pierce (just able to keep the saddle) with his brigade (Pillow’s division) conducted by Captain Lee, engineer, by a third road, a little farther to our left, to attack the enemy’s right and rear, in order to favor the moment upon the convent, and cut off the retreat towards the capital. And, finally, Shields, senior brigadier to pierce, with the New York and South Caroline volunteers, (Quitman’s division,) was ordered to follow Pierce, closely, and to take the command of our left wing. All these movements were made with the utmost alacrity by our gallant troops and commanders.

Finding myself at Coyoaacan, from which so many roads conveniently branched, without escort or reserve, I had to advance, for safety, close upon Twiggs’ rear. The battle now raged from the right to the left of our whole line.

Learning, on the return of Captain Lee, that Shields, in the rear of Churubuseo, was hard pressed, and in danger of being out flanked, if not overwhelmed, by greatly superior numbers, I immediately sent, under Major Sumner, 24 dragoons, the rifles (Twiggs’ reserve) and Capt. Sibley’s troop, 24 dragons, then at hand, to support our left, guided by the same engineer.

About an hour earlier, Worth had by skillful and daring movements upon the front and right, turned and forced San Antonio-its garrison, no doubt, much shaken by out decisive victory at Contreras.

His second brigade (Colonel Clarke’s) conducted by Captain Mason, engineer, assisted by Lieutenant Hardcastle, topographical engineer, turned the right flank and by a wide sweep came out upon the high road to the capital. At this point the heavy garrison (3,000 men) in retreat was, by Clarke, cut in the centre, one portion, the rear, driven upon Dolores, off to the right; and the other upon Churubuseo, in the direct line of our operations. The first brigade (Colonel Garland’s) same division, consisting of the 2d artillery, under Major Galt, the 3d artillery, under Lieutenant Colonel Belton, and the 4th infantry, commanded by Major Lee, with Lieutenant Colonel Duncan’s field battery (temporarily) followed in pursuit through the town, taking one general prisoner, the abandoned guns, (five pieces,) much ammunition, and other public property.

The forcing of San Antonio was the second brilliant event of the day.

Worth’s division being soon reunited in hot pursuit, he was joined by Maj. Gen. Pillow, who marching, from Coyoaacan and discovering that San Antonio had been carried, immediately turned to the left, according to my instructions, and though much impeded by ditched and swamps, hastened to the attack of Churubuseo.

The hamlet of scattered houses, bearing this name, presented, besides the fortified convent, a strong field work (tete de pont) with regular bastions and curtains, at the head of a bridge over which the road passes from San Antonio to the capital.

The whole remaining forces of Mexico—some 27,000 men-cavalry, artillery, and infantry, collected from every quarter—were not in, on the flanks or within supporting distance of, those works, and seemed resolved to make a last and desperate stand; or if beaten here, the feeble defenses at the gates of the city—four miles off—could not, as was well known to both parties delay the victors an hour. -The capital of an ancient empire, now of a great republic; or an early peace, the assailants were resolved to win. Not an American—and we were less than a third of the enemy’s numbers—had a doubt as to the result.

The fortified church or convent, hotly pressed by Twiggs, had already held out about an hour, when Worth and Pillow—the latter having with him only Cadwallader’s brigade—began to manoeuvre closely upon the tete de pont, with the convent at half gunshot to their left. Garland’s brigade, (Worth’s division,) to which had been added the light battalion under Lieut. Col. Smith, continued to advance in front, and under the fire of a long line of infantry, off on the left of the bridge; and Clarke, of the same division, directed his brigade along the road or close by its side. Two of Pillow’s and Cadwallader’s regiments, the 11th and 14th, supported and participated in this direct movement: the other (the voltigeurs) was left in reserve. Most of these corps—particularly Clark’s brigade—advancing perpendicularly, were made to suffer much by the fire of the tete de pont, and they would have suffered greatly more by flank attacks from the convent, but for the pressure of Twiggs on the other side of that work.

This well combined and daring movement at length reached the principal point of attack, and the formidable tete de pont was, at once, assaulted and carried by the bayonet. Its deep wet ditch was first gallantly crossed by the 8th and 5th infantry, commanded, respectively, by Maj. Waite and Lieut. Colonel Scott followed closely by the 6th infantry (same brigade) which had been so much exposed in the road—the 11th regiment, under Lieut. Col. Graham, and 14th, commanded by Col. Trousdale, both of Cadwallader’s brigade, Pillow’s division. About the same time, the enemy, in front of Garland, and after a hot conflict of an hour and a half, gave way, in a retreat towards the capital.

The immediate results of this third signal triumph of the way were: three field pieces, 192.
prisoners, much ammunition and two colors, taken in the tete de pont.

Lieut. J. F. Irons, 1st artillery, aid-de-camp to Brigadier Gen. Cadwallader, a young officer of great merit and conspicuous in battle on several previous occasions, received in front of the work, a mortal wound. (Since dead.)

As the concurrent attack upon the convent favored, physically and morally, the assault, upon the tete de pont, so, reciprocally, no doubt, the fall of the latter contributed to the capture of the former. The two works were only some 450 yards apart; and as soon as we were in possession of the tete de pont, a captured four pounder was turned and fired-first by Captain Larkin Smith, and next by Lieutenant Snelling, both of the eighth infantry-several times upon the convent. In the same brief interval, Lieutenant Colonel Duncan, (also of Worth’s division,) gallantly brought two of his guns to bear, at a short range, from the San Antonio road, upon the principal face of the work, and on the tower of the church, which, in the obstinate contest, had been often refilled with some of the best sharp-shooters of the enemy.

Finally, twenty minutes after the tete de pont had been carried by Worth and Pillow, and at the end of a desperate conflict of two hours and a half, the church, or convent—the citadel of the strong line of defense along the rivulet of Churubuseo—yielded to Twiggs’ division, and threw out, on all sides, signals of surrender. The white flags, however, were not exhibited until the moment when the 3d infantry, under Captain Alexander, had cleared the way by fire and bayonet, and had entered the work. Captain J. M. Smith and Lieutenant O. L. Shephered, both of that regiment, with their companies, had the glory of leading the assault. The former received the surrender, and Captain Alexander instantly hung out, from the balcony, the colors of the gallant 3d. Major Dimick, with a part of the 1st artillery, serving as infantry, entered nearly abreast with the leading troops.

Captain Taylor’s field battery, attached to Twiggs’ division, opened its effective fire, at an early moment, upon the out works of the convent and the tower of its churches. Exposed to the severest fire of the enemy, the captain, his officers, and men, won universal admiration; but at length much disabled in men and horses the battery was by superior, orders, withdrawn from the action thirty minutes before the surrender of the convent.

Those corps, excepting Taylor’s battery, belonging to the brigade of Brig. Gen. Smith, who closely directed the whole attack in front, with his habitual coolness and ability; while Riley’s brigade—the 2d and 7th infantry, under Capt. T. Morris and Lieut. Col. Plympton, respectively—vigorously engaged the right of the work and part of its rear. At the moment, the rifles, belonging to Smith’s were detached in support of Brig. Gen. Shields’ on our extreme left; and the 4th artillery, acting as infantry, under Maj. Gardner, belonging to Riley’s brigade, had been left in charge of the camp, trophies, &c., at Contreras. Twiggs’ division, at Churubuseo, has thus been deprived of the services of two of its most gallant and effective regiments.

The immediate results of this victory were—the capture of 7 field pieces, some ammunition, one color, three generals, and 1,261 prisoners, including other officers.

Captains E.A. Capron and M.J. Burke, and Lieut. S. Hoffman, all of the 1st artillery, and Capt. J.W. Anderson and Lieut. Easley, both of the 2d infantry-five officers of great merit—fell gallantly before this work.

The capture of the enemy’s citadel was the fourth great achievement of our arms in the same day.

It has been stated that, some two hours and a half before, Pierce’s followed closely by the volunteer brigade—both under the command of Brigadier General Shields—-d been detached to our left to turn the enemy’s works;—to prevent the escape of the garrisons, and to oppose the extension of the enemy’s numerous corps, from the rear, upon and around our left.

Considering the inferior numbers of the two brigades, the objects of the movements were difficult to accomplish. Hence the reinforcements (the rifles, &c.,) sent forward a little later.

In a winding march of a mile around to the right, this temporary division found itself on the edge of an open wet meadow, near the road from San Antonio to the capital, and in the presence of some 4,000 of the enemy’s infantry, a little in the rear of Churubuseo, on that road. Establishing the right at a strong building, Shields extended his left, parallel to the road, to outflank the enemy towards the capital. But the enemy extending his right, supported by 3,000 cavalry, more rapidly (being favored by their ground) in the same direction, Shields concentrated the division about a hamlet, and determined to attack in front. The battle was long, hot, and varied; but, ultimately, success crowned the zeal and gallantry of our troops, ably directed by their distinguished commander, Brig. Gen. Shields. The 9th, 12th, and 15th
Brigadier General Pierce, from the hurt of the evening before—under pain and exhaustion—fainted in the action. Several other changes in command occurred on this field. Thus Colonel Morgan being severely wounded, the command of the 15th infantry devolved on Lieutenant Colonel Howard; Colonel Burnett receiving a like wound, the command of the New York volunteers fell to Lieutenant Colonel Baxter; and, on the fall of the lamented Colonel P. M. Butler—earlier badly wounded, but continuing to lead nobly in the hottest of the battle—the command of the South Carolina volunteers devolved—first of Lieutenant Colonel Dickenson, who being severely wound (as before in the siege of Vera Cruz) the regiment ultimately fell under the orders of Major Gladden.

Shields took 380 prisoners, including officers; and it cannot be doubted that the rage of the conflict between him and the enemy just in the rear of the tete de pont and the convent had some influence on the surrender of those formidable defenses.

As soon as the tete de pont was carried, the greater part of Worth’s and Pillow’s forces passed that bridge in rapid pursuit of the flying enemy. These distinguished generals, coming up with Brigadier General Shields, now also victorious, the three continued to press upon the fugitives to within a mile and a half of the capital. Here, Col. Harney, with a small part of his brigade of cavalry, rapidly passed to the front, and charged the enemy up to the nearest gate.

The cavalry charge was headed by Captain Kearney, of the 1st dragoons, having in squadron, with his own troop, that of Captain McReynolds, of the 3rd—making the usual escort to general headquarters; but being early in the day detached for general service, was now under Col. Harney’s orders. The gallant captain now hearing the recall that had been sounded, dashed up to the San Antonio gate, sabreing, in his way all that resisted. Of the seven officers of the squadron, Hearney lost his left arm, McReynolds and Lieut. Lorimer Graham were both severely wounded, Lieut. R.S. Ewell, who succeeded to the command of the escort, had two horses killed under him. Major F.D. Mills, of the 15th infantry, a volunteer in this charge, was killed at the gate.

So terminated the series of events which I have but feebly presented. My thanks were by freely poured out on the different fields—to the abilities and science of generals and other officers—to the gallantry and prowess of all—the rank and file included. But a reward infinitely higher—the applause of a grateful country and government—will, I cannot doubt, be accorded, in due time, to so much merit, of every sort, displayed by this glorious army, which has now overcome all difficulties—distance, climate, ground, fortifications, numbers.

If has a single day, in many battles, as often defeated 32,000 men; made about 3,000 prisoners, including eight generals (two of them ex-presidents) and 205 other officers; killed or wounded 4,000 of all ranks—besides entire corps dispersed and dissolved; captured 37 pieces of ordinance—more than trebling our siege train and field batteries with a large number of small arms, a full supply of ammunition of every kind, &t., &t.

These great results have overwhelmed the enemy.

Our loss amounts to 1,052—killed 139, including 16 officers; wounded 876, with 60 officers. The greater number of the dead and disabled were of the highest worth. Those under treatment, thanks to our very able medical officers, are generally doing well.

I regret having been obliged, on the 20th, to leave Major General Quitman, an able commander, with a part of a division—the fine 2d Pennsylvania volunteers and the veteran detachment of U. States marines—at our important depot, San Augustin. It was there that I had place our sick and wounded; the siege, supply, and baggage trains. If these had been lost, the army would have been driven almost to despair; and considering the enemy’s very great excess of numbers, and the many approaches to the depot, it might well have become, emphatically, the post of honor.

After so many victories, we might, with but a little additional loss, have occupied the capital the same evening. But Mr. Trist, commissioner, &c. as well as myself, had been admonished by the bet friends of peace—intelligent neutrals and some American residents—against precipitation; lest, by wantonly driving away the government and others—dishonored—we might scatter elements of peace, excite a spirit of national desperation, and thus indefinitely postpone the hope of accommodation. Deeply impressed with this danger, and remembering our mission to conquer a peace, the army very cheerfully sacrificed to patriotism - the great wish and want of our country, the _eclat_ that would have followed an entrance - sword in hand - into a great capital. Willing to have something to this republic - of no immediate value to us - on which to rest her pride, and to recover temper - I halted our victorious corps at the gates of the city, (at least for a time,) and have them now cantoned in the neighboring villages, where they are still sheltered and supplied with all necessaries.

On the morning of the 21st, being about to take up battering or assaulting positions, to authorize me to summon the city to surrender, or to sign an armistice with a pledge to enter at once into negotiations for a peace - a mission came out to propose a truce. Rejecting its terms, I dispatched my contemplated not to president Santa Anna - omitting the summons. The 22d commissioners were appointed by the commanders of the two armies; the armistice was signed the 23rd, and ratifications exchanged the 24th.

All matters in dispute between the two governments have been thus happily turned over to their plenipotentiaries, who have now had sever conferences, and, with I think, some hope of signing a treat of peace.

There will be transmitted to the adjutant general reports from divisions, brigades, &c., on the foregoing operations, to which I must refer, with my hearty concurrence in the just applause bestowed on corps and individuals by their respective commanders. I have been able - this report being necessarily a summary - to bring out, comparatively, but little of individual merit no lying directly in the way of the narrative. Thus I doubt whether I have, in express terms, give my approbation and applause, to the commanders of division and independent brigades; but left their fame upon higher grounds - the simple record of their great deeds and the brilliant results.

To the staff, both general and personal, attached to the general headquarters, I was again under high obligations for services on the field, as well as in the bureaux. I add their names, &c.; Lieut. Col. Hitchcock, acting inspector general; Major J.L. Smith, Captain R. E. Lee, (as distinguished for felicitous execution as for science and daring) Captain Mason, Lieuts. Stevens, Beauregard and Tower - all of the engineers; Major Turnbull, Capt. McClellan and Lieut. Hardcastle, topographical engineers; Captain Huger and Lieut. Hagner, of the ordinance; Captains Irwin and Wayne, of the quartermaster's department; Capt. Grayson, of the commissariat; Surgeon General Lawson, in his particular department: Captain H. L. Scott, acting assistant adjutant general; Lieut. Williams, aide de-camp, and Lieut. Lay, military secretary. Lieut. Schuyler Hamilton, another aid de-camp, had a week before, been thrown out of activity by a severe wound received in a successful charge of cavalry against cavalry, and four time times his numbers; but on the 20th, I have the valuable services, as volunteer aids, of Majors Kirby and Van Buren, of the pay department, always eager for activity and distinction; and of a third, the gallant Major J. P. Gaines, of the Kentucky volunteers.

I have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, your most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Reports of Major Generals Pillows and Worth

To the Commander-in-Chief

Headquarters third Division

Mixcoac

August, 24, 1847

Captain: In compliance with the order of the general in-chief, I moved with my division, consisting of the 9th, 11th, 12th, 14th, and 15th infantry, and the voltigeur regiment, and the field battery of Captain Magruder and the howitzer battery under Lieutenant Callender, early on the morning of the 13th instant, and, opened the road over the mountain on the route indicated by Captain Lee of the engineer corps, assisted by Lieutenants Beauregard, Stephens, Tower, Smith McClellan, and Foster. -Brigadier General Twiggs, with his division, reported to me for duty, under instructions from the general-in-chief, whilst my own division was moving over the mountain.

Perceiving that the enemy was in large force on the opposite side of the valley, with heavy batteries of artillery commanding the only roll, through a vast plain of broken volcanic lava, rent into deep chasms and fissures, effectually preventing any advance except under his direct fire, I resolved to give him battle. For this purpose I ordered General Twiggs to advance with his finely disciplined division, and with one brigade to assault the enemy’s works in front, and with the other to let in his left flank, and assail it in reverse. Captain Magruder’s fine field battery and Lieutenant Callender’s howitzer battery (both of which constitute part of my division) were placed at the disposal of Brig. Gen. Twiggs.

This officer, in executing my order of attack, directed Brevet Brig. General Smith to move with his brigade upon the enemy’s front, whilst Colonel Riley, with his, was ordered to turn to his left and assail him in rear. To sustain the movements, Brig. General Cadwallader was ordered to advance with his brigade and support Colonel Riley, and Brigadier General Pierce, with his command, to support the column moving upon the enemy’s front, under Brigadier Gen. Smith. This last command was soon closely engaged with the enemy, as were also the batteries of Captain Magruder and Lieutenant Callender.

Col. Riley’s command, having now crossed the case broken up plain of lava, passing the village on the right, and whilst in the act of turning the enemy’s left, was confronted by several thousand lancers who advanced to the charge, when a well directed fire from the brigade twice compelled them to fall back in disorder, under cover of their artillery. About this time, Brigadier General Cadwallader’s command has also crossed the plain, when some 5,000 or 6,000 troops of the enemy were observed moving rapidly from the direction of the capital to the field of action. Colonel Morgan, with his large and fine regiment, which I had caused to be detached from the rear of Pierce’s brigade, was now ordered to the support of Cadwallader by direction of the general-in-chief, who had now arrived upon the field.

This general, having discovered this large force moving upon his right flank and to the rear, with decided military tact and promptitude threw back his right wing and confronted the enemy, with the intention to give him battle, notwithstanding the overwhelming force.

This portion of the enemy’s force moved steadily forward until a conflict seemed inevitable, when Col. Morgan’s regiment having reached this part of the field. Presented a front so formidable as to induce the enemy to change his purpose, and draw off to the right and rear of his former position.

During all this time, the battle raged fiercely between the other portions of the two armies, with a constant and destructive fire of artillery. Magruder’s battery, from its prominent position, was much disabled by the heavy shot of the enemy, as were also Callender’s howitzers. A part of the enemy’s artillery has been turned upon Riley’s command, whilst actively engaged with large bodies of lancers; but even the combined attacks could only delay the purpose of the gallant old veteran and his noble brigade.

The general-in-chief having arrive upon the field with General Shields’s brigade of volunteers-consisting of the New York and S.Carrollina regiments-ordered them to move up to the support of the forces under Brigadier General Cadwallader; but it had now grown so late in the evening that Gen. Shields did not get into position until after dark. Night having come (*but not until entire dark.) this fierce conflict was suspended, to be renewed on the morrow.

The battle all this day was conducted under by immediate orders, and within my view; a short time before sunset, having previously engaged in the fight all the forces at my disposal, myself and staff started to cross the plain, to join in the terrible struggle on the immediate field of action.

On my way hither I was joined by Brig. General Twiggs and staff; but the darkness of the light, rendered by more obscure by a heavy rain, caused us to miss our way thought the broken up lava, and to wander to the close neighborhood of the hordes of the enemy; and it was not until the shrill blasts of his bugles apprized us of our position, that we became satisfied we could not reach, during the night. Report of Major General Scott

Headquarters of the Army

National Palace of Mexico
September 18, 1847

Sir: At the end of another series of arduous and brilliant operations of more than forty-eight hours continuance, this glorious army hoisted, on the morning of the 14th, the colors of the U. States on the walls of this palace.

The victory of the 8th, at he Molinos del Rey, was followed by daring reconnaissances on the part of our distinguished engineers—Capt. Lee, Lieuts. Beauregard, Stevens, and Tower, Major Smith, Sr., being sick, and Captain Mason, third in rank, wounded. —Their operations were directed principally to the south—towards the gates of the Piedad, San Angel, (Nino Perdido,) San Antonio, and Pasco de la Viga.

This city stands on a slight swell of ground, near the centre of an irregular basin, and is girdled with a ditch in its greater extent—a navigable canal of great breadth and depth—very difficult to bridge in the presence of an enemy, and serving at once for drainage, customhouse purposes, and military defenses; leaving eight entrances or grates, over arches—each of which we found defended by a system of strong works, that seemed to require nothing but some men and guns to be impregnable.

Outside and within the cross fires of those gates, we found to the south other obstacles but little less formidable. All the approaches near the city are over elevated causeways, cut in many places (to oppose us) and flanked, on both sides, by ditches, also of unusual dimensions. The numerous crossroads are flanked, in like manner, having bridges at the intersections, recently broken. The meadows thus checkered, are moreover, in many spots, under water or..., for, it will be remembered, we were in the midst of the wet season, though with less rain than usual, and we could not wait for the fall of the neighboring lake and the constant drainage of the wet grounds at the edge of the city—the lowest in the whole basin. After a close personal survey of the southern gates, covered by Pillow's division and Riley's brigade of Twigg's—with four times our number concentrated in our immediate front—I determined on the 11th, to avoid that network of obstacles, and to seek, by a sudden inversion, to the southwest and west, less unfavorable approaches.

To economize the lives of our gallant officers and men, as well as to insure success, it became indispensable that this resolution should be long, masked from the enemy; and again, that the new movement, when discovered should be mistaken for a feint, and the old as indicating our true and ultimate point of attack.

Accordingly, on the spot, the 11th, I ordered Quitman's division from Coyoacan, to join pillow, by day-light, before the southern gates, and then that the two major generals, with their divisions, should by night, proceed (two miles) to join me a Tacubaya, where I was quartered with Worth's division, Twigg's, with Riley's brigade and Captains Taylor's and Steptoe's field batteries—the latter of twelve pounders was left in front of those gates, to manoeuvre, to threaten, or to make false attacks, in order to occupy to deceive the enemy. Twigg's other brigade (Smith's) was left at supporting distance, in the rear, at San Angel, till the morning of the 13th, and also to support of general depot is Miscoac. The stratagem against the south was admirably executed throughout the 12th and down to the afternoon of the 13th, when it was too late for the enemy to recover from the effects of his decision.

The first step in the new movement was to carry Chapultepec, a natural and isolated mound, of great elevation, strongly fortified at its base, on it activities and heights. Besides a numerous garrison, here was the military college of the republic, with a large number of sub-lieutenants and other students. Those works were within direct gun-shot of the village of Tacubaya, and until carried, we could not approach the city on the west, without making a circuit too wide and too hazardous.

In the course of the same night (that of the 11th) heavy batteries within easy ranges were established. No.1, on our right, under the command of Capt. Drum, 4th artillery, (relieved later next day, for some hours, by Lieutenant Andrews, of the 3rd,) and No. 2 commanded by Lieutenant Hagner, ordinance—both supported by Quitman's division, Nos. 3 and 4, on the opposite side, supported by Pillow's division, were commanded, the former by Captain Brooks and Lieut. S.S. Anderson, 2d artillery, alternately; and the latter by Lieut. Stone, ordinance. The batteries was traced by Capt. Hagner, and Capt. Lee, engineer, and constructed by them, with the able assistance of the young officers of those corps and artillery.
To prepare for an assault, it was foreseen that the play of the batteries might run into the second day; but recent captures had not only trebled our siege pieces, but also our ammunition, and we knew that we should greatly augment both, by carrying the place. I was, therefore, in no haste in ordering an assault, before the works were well crippled by our missiles.

The bombardment and cannonade, under the direction of Captain Huger, were commenced early in the morning of the 12th. Before nightfall, which necessarily stopped our batteries, we had perceived that a good impression had been made on the castle and its outworks, and that a large body of the enemy had remained outside, towards the city, from an early hour, to avoid, our fire, and to be at hand on its cessation, in order to reinforce the garrison against an assault. The same outside force was discovered the next morning, after our batteries had re-opened upon the castle, by which we again reduced its garrison to the minimum needed for the guns.

Pillow and Quitman had been in position since early in the night of the 11th. Major Gen. Worth was now ordered to hold his division in reserve, near the foundry, to support Pillow; and Brig. General Smith, of Twiggs's division, had just arrived with his brigade from Piedad, (w miles) to support Quitman. Twiggs's guns, before the southern gates again reminded us, as the day before, that he, with Riley's brigade and Taylor's and Steptoe's batteries, was in activity, threatening the southern gates, and there holding a great part of the Mexican army on the defensive.

Worth's division furnished Pillow's attack with an assaulting party of some 250 volunteer officers and men, under Captain McKenzie, of the 2d artillery and Twiggs's division supplied a similar one, commanded by Capt. Casey, 2d infantry, to Quitman. Each of those little columns was furnished with scaling ladders.

The signal I had appointed for the attack was the momentary cessation of fire on the part of our heavy batteries. About 8 o'clock in the morning of the 13th, judging that the time had arrived, by the effect of the missiles we had thrown, I sent a aid-de-camp to Pillow, and another to Quitman, with notice that the concerted signal was about to be given. Both columns now advanced with an alacrity that gave assurance of prompt success. The batteries, seizing opportunities, threw shots and shells upon the enemy over the heads of our men, with good effect, particularly at every attempt to reinforce the works from without to meet our assault.

Major General Pillow's approach, on the west side, lay through an open grove, filled with sharp shooters, who were speedily dislodged; when, being up with the front of the attack, and emerging into open space, at the foot of a rocky acclivity, that gallant leader was struck down by an agonizing wound. The immediate command devolved on Brigadier General Cadwallader, in the absence of the senior brigadier (Pierce) of the same division-an invalid since the events of August 19. On a precious call of Pillow, Worth had just sent him a reinforcement-Col. Clark's brigade.

The broken acclivity was still to be ascended, and a strong redoubt midway, to be carried, before reaching the castle on the heights. The advance of our brace men, led by brace officers, though necessarily slow, was unwavering, over rocks, chasms, and mines, and under the hottest fire of cannon and musketry. The redoubt now yielded to resistless valor, and the shouts that followed announced to the castle the fate that impended. The enemy were steadily driven from shelter to shelter. The retreat allowed not time to fire a single mine, without the certainty of blowing up friend and foe. Those who at a distance attempted to apply matched to the long trains, were shot down by our men. There was death below, as well as, above the ground. At length the ditch and wall of the main work were reached, the scaling ladders were brought up and planted by the storming parties; some of the daring spirits first in the assault were cast down-killed or wounded, but a lodgment was soon made; streams of heroes followed; all opposition was overcome, and several of our regiment colors flung out from the upper walls, amidst long continued shouts and cheers, which sent dismay into the capital. No scene could have been more animating or glorious.

Major General Quitman noble supported by Brig. Generals Shields and Smith (P. F.) his officers and men, was up with the part assigned him. Simultaneously with the movement on the west, he had gallantly approached the southeast of the same works over a causeway with cuts and batteries, and defended by an army strongly posted outside, to the east of the work.

Those formidable obstacles Quitman had to face, with but little shelter for his troops or space for maneuvering. Deep ditches, flanking the causeway, made it difficult to cross in either side into the adjoining meadows, and these again were intersected by other ditches. Smith and his brigade had been early thrown out to make a sweep to the right, in order to present a front against the enemy's line, (outside) and to turn two intervening batteries near the foot of Chapultepec. This movement was also intended to support Quitman's storming parties, both on the causeway. The first of these furnished by Twiggs's division, was commanded by succession by Capt. Casey, 2d infantry, and Captain Paul, 7th infantry, after Casey had been severely wounded; and the second, originally under the gallant Major Twiggs, marine corps, killed, and then Capt. Miller, 2d Pennsylvania volunteers. The storming party now commanded by Capt. Paul. Seconded by Capt. Roberts of the rifles, Lieut. Stewart, and other of the same regiment, Smith's brigade, carried the two batteries in the road, took some guns, with many prisoners, and drove the enemy posed behind in support. The New York and South Carolina volunteers (Shield's brigade) and the 2d Pennsylvania volunteers, all on the left of Quitman's line, together with portions of his storming parties, crossed the meadows in front, under a heavy fire, and entered the outer enclosure of Chapultepec just in time to join in the final assault from the west.

Besides Major Generals Pillow and Quitman, Brigadier Generals Shields, Smith, and Cadwallader, the following are the officers and corps most distinguished in those brilliant operations: The voltigeur regiment, in two detachments, commanded respectively by Col. Andrews and Lieut. Colonel Johnstone—the latter mostly in the lead, accompanied by Major Caldwell, Captains Barnard and Biddle, of the same regiment—the former the first to land a regimental color, and the latter among the first in the assault; the storming party of Worth's division under Capt. McKenzie, 2d artillery, with Lieut. Seldon, 8th infantry, early on the ladder and badly wounded; Lieut. Armistead, 6th infantry, the first to leap into the ditch to play a ladder; Lieut. Rodgers of the 4th, and J. P. Smith of the 5th infantry—both mortally wounded; the 9 infantry, under Col. Ranson, who was killed while gallantly leading that gallant regiment; the 15th infantry under Lt. Col. Howard and Major Woods, with Capt. Chase, whose company gallantly carried the redoubt, midway up the acclivity; Col. Clarke's brigade, (Worth's division) consisting of the 5th, 8th, and part of the 6th regiment of infantry, commanded respectively, by Cap. Chapman, Major Montgomery, and Lieut. Edward Johnson—the latter specially noticed, with Liets. Longstreet (badly wounded—advancing—colors in hand) Picket and Merchant—the last three of the 8th infantry;—portions of the United States marines, New York, South Carolina, and 2d Pennsylvania volunteers, which delayed with their division (Quittman's) by the hot engagements below, arrived just in time to participate in the assault of the heights; particularly a detachment, under Lieut. Reid, New York volunteers, consisting of a company of the same, with one of the marines; and another detachment, a portion of the storming party (Twiggs' division serving with Quitman) under St. Steele, 2d infantry—after the fall of Lieut. Gantit, 7th infantry.

In this connexion, it is but just to recall the decisive effect of the heavy batteries, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, commanded by those excellent officers—Capt. Drum, 4th artillery, assisted by Lieuts. Benjamin and Porter of his own company; Capt. Brooks, and Lieut. Anderson, 2d artillery; assisted by Lieut. Russell, 4th infantry, a volunteer; Lieuts. Hagner and Stone, of the ordinance and Lieut. Andrews, 3d artillery—the whole superintended by Captain Huger, chief of ordinance with this army—an officer distinguished by every kind of merit. The mountain howitzer battery, under Lieut. Reno, of the ordinance, deserves, also, to be particularly mentioned. Attached to the voltigeurs, to follow the movements of that regiment, and again it won applause.

In adding to the list of individuals of conspicuous merit, I must limit myself to a few of the many names which might be enumerated: Capt. Hooker, assistant adjutant general, who won special applause, successively, in the staff of Pillow and Cadwallader; Lieut. Lovell, 4th artillery, (wounded,) chief of Quitman's staff; Capt. Page, assistant adjutant general, (wounded,) and Lieut. Hammond, 3d artillery, both of Shields' staff, and Lt. Van Dorn, (7th infantry,) aid-de-camp to Brig. Gen. Smith.

Those operations all occurred on the west, south-east, and heights of Chapultepec. To the north, and at the base of the mound, inaccessible on that side, the 11th infantry, under Lieut. Col. Herbert, the 14th, under Col. Trousdale, and Capt. Magruder's field battery, 1st artillery—one section advanced under Lieut. Jackson—all of Pillow's division—had, at the same time some spirited affairs against superior numbers, driving the enemy from a battery in the road and capturing a gun. In these, the officers and commander, though twice, wounded, continued on duty until the heights were carried.

Early in the morning of the 13th I repeated the orders of the night before to Major Gen. Worth, to be, with his division, at hand, to support the movement of Major Gen. Pillow from our left. The latter seems to have word for the entire division, standing, momentarily in reserve, and Worth sent him Col. Clark's brigade. The call, if not unnecessary, was a least, from the circumstances, unknown to me at the time; for, soon observing that the very large body of the enemy, in the road, in from of Major Gen. Quitman's right, was receiving a half to the east—I sent instructions to Worth, on our opposite flank, to turn Chapultepec with his decision, and to proceed, cautiously, by the road at it northern base, in order, of not met by very superior numbers, to threaten or attack, in rear, that body of the enemy. The movement, it was also believed, could not fail to distract and to intimidate the enemy generally.

Worth promptly advanced with his remaining brigade—Col. Garland's—Lieut. Col. C. F. Smith's light battalion, Lieut. Col. Duncan's field battery—under Major Sumner, which I had just ordered up to join in the movement.

Having turned the forest on the west, and arriving opposite to the north centre of Chapultepec, Worth came up with the troops in the road, under Colonel Trousdale, and aided by a flank movement of a part of Garland’s brigade in taking the one gun breastwork, then under the fire of Lieutenant Jackson’s section of Captain Magruder’s field battery. Continuing to advance, division passed Chapultepec attacking the right of the enemy’s line resting on that road, about the moment of the general retreat consequent upon the capture of the castle phrase and its outworks.

Arriving some minutes later, and ascending to the top of the castle, the whole field, to the east lay plainly under my view.

There are two routes from Chapultepec to the capital—the one on the right entering the same gate, Belen, with the road from the south, vie Piedad; and the other, obliquing to the left, to intersect the great western, or San Cosme road, in a suburb outside of the gate of San Cosme.

Each of the routes (an elevated causeway) presents a double roadway on the sides of an aqueduct of strong masonry, and great height, resting on open arches and massive pillars, which, together, afford fine points both for attack and defense. The side-ways of both aqueducts are, moreover, defended by many strong breastworks at the gates, and before reaching them. As we had expected, we found the four tracks unusually dry and solid for the season.

Worth and Quitman were prompt in pursuing the retreating enemy—the former by the San Cosme aqueduct, and the latter along that of Belen. Each had now advanced some hundred yards.

Deeming it all important to profit by our successes, and the consequent dismay of the enemy, which could not be otherwise than general, I hastened to dispatch from Chapultepec—for Clarke’s brigade, and then Cadwallader’s, to the support of Worth, and gave orders that the necessary heavy guns should follow. Pierce’s brigade was at the same time, sent to Quitman and in the course of the afternoon I cause some additional siege pieces to be; added to his train. Then, after designating the 15th infantry, under Lieutenant Colonel Howard-Morgan, the colonel, has been disabled by a wound at Churubuseo—as the garrison of Chapultepec, and giving directions for the care of the prisoners of war, the captured ordnance and ordinance stores, I proceeded to join the advance of Worth within the suburb, and beyond the turn at the junction of the aqueduct with the great highway from the west to the gate of San Cosme.

At this junction of roads, we first passed one of those formidable systems of city defenses, spoken of above, and it had not a gun!—a strong proof—1. That the enemy had expected us to fail in the attack upon Chapultepec, even if we meant any more than a feint; 2. That, in either case, we designed in his belief, to return and double our forces against the southern gates—a delusion dept up by the active demonstrations of Twiggs and the forces posted on that side, and 3. That advancing rapidly from the reduction of Chapultepec, the enemy had not time to shift gun—our previous capture had left him, comparatively, but few—from the southern gates.

With those distinguished works, I found our troops engaged in a street fight against the enemy posted in gardens, at windows, and on house tops—all flat, with parapets. Worth ordered forward the mountain howitzer of Cadwallader’s brigade, preceded by skirmishers and prisoners, with pick-axes and crowbars, to force windows and doors, or to burrow through walls. The assailants were soon in an equality of position fatal to the enemy. By I o’clock in the evening, Worth had carried two batteries in this suburb. According to my instructions, he here posted guards and sentinels, and places his troops under shelter for the night. There was but one more obstacle—the San Cosme gate (custom house) between him and the great square in front of the cathedral and palace—the heart of the city; and that barrier, it was known could not, by daylight, resist our siege guns thirty minutes.

I had gone back to the foot of Chapultepec, the point from which the two aqueducts begin to diverge, some hours earlier, in order to be near that new depot, and in east communication with Quitman and Twiggs as well as with Worth.

From this point I ordered all detachments and stragglers to their respective corps, then advance; sent to Quitman additional siege guns, ammunition, entrenching tools; directed Twiggs’ remaining brigade (Riley’s) from Piedad, to support Worth and Capt. Steptoe’s field battery, also at Piedad, to join Quitman’s division.

I had been, from the first, well aware that the western, or San Cosme, was the less difficult route to the centre and conquest of the capital, and therefore, intended that Quitman should only maneuver and threaten the Belen or southwestern gate, in order to favor the main attack by Worth—knowing that the strong defenses at the Belen were directly under the guns of the much stronger fortress, called the citadel, just within. Both of these defenses of the enemy were also withstanding easy supporting distance from the San Angel (or Nino Perdido) and San Antonio gates. Hence the greater support, in numbers, given to Worth's movement as the main attack.

Those views I repeatedly, in the course of the day, communicated to Maj. Gen. Quitman; but, being in hot pursuit-gallant himself, and ably supported by Brigadier Gens. Shields and Smith-Shields, badly wounded before Chapultepec, and refusing to retire-as well as by all the officers and men of the column-Quitman continued to press forward, under flank and direct fires; carried an intermediate battery of two guns, and then the gate, before two o'clock in the afternoon, but no without proportionate loss, increased by his steady maintenance of that position.

There, of the heavy battery-4th artillery-Capt. Drum and Lieut. Benjamin were mortally wounded and Lieut. Porter, its third in rank, slightly. The loss of those two most distinguished officers the army will mourn. Lieutenants J.B. Morange and Wm. Canty, of the South Carolina volunteers, also of high merit, fell on the same occasion—besides many of our bravest non-commissioned officers and men—particularly in Captain Drum's veteran company. I cannot, in this place, give names of numbers; but full returns of the killed and wounded of all corps, in their recent operations, will accompany this report.

Quitman, within the city—adding several defensible positions to the one he had won, and sheltering his corps as well as practicable—now awaited the return of daylight under the guns of the formidable citadel yet to be subdued.

At about 4 o'clock next morning (sept. 4) a deputation of the ayuntamiento (city council) waited upon me to report that the federal government and the army of Mexico had fled from the capital some three hours before, and to demand terms of capitulation in favor of the church, the citizens, and the municipal authorities. I promptly replied, that I would sign no capitulation; that the city had been virtually in our possession from the time of the lodgments effected by Worth and Quitman the day before; that I regretted the silent escape of the Mexican army; that I should levy upon the city a moderate contribution, for special purposes, and that the American army should come under no terms, not self-imposed—such only as its own honor, the dignity of the United States, and the spirit of the age, should, in my opinion, imperiously demand and impose.

For the terms so imposed I refer the department to subsequent general orders. Nos. 287, and 289, (paragraphs 7, 8, and 9 of the latter,) copies of which are herewith transmitted.

At the termination of the interview with the city deputation, I communicated, about daylight, order to Worth and Quitman to advance slowly and cautiously (to guard against treachery) towards the heard of the city and to occupy its stronger and more commanding points. Quitman proceeded to the great plaza or square, planted guards and hoisted the colors of the United States on the national palace, containing the halls of congress and executive apartments of federal Mexico. In this grateful service Quitman might have been anticipated by Worth, but for my express order halting the latter at the head of the Alameda—a green park—within three squares of that goal of general ambition. The capital, however, was not taken by any one or two corps, but by the talent, the science, the gallantry, the prowess of this entire army. In the glorious conquest, all had contributed—early and powerfully—the killed and wounded, and the fit for duty—at Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras, San Antonio, Churubusco—three battles—the Molinos del Rey and Chapultepec—as much as those who fought at the gates of Belen and San Cosme.

Soon after we entered, and were in the act of occupying the city, a fire was opened upon us from the flat roofs of the houses, from the windows and corners of the streets, by some 2,000 convicts, liberated the night before by the flying government, joined by perhaps as many Mexican soldiers, who has disbanded themselves and thrown off their uniforms. This unlawful war lasted more than twenty four hours, in spite of the exertions of the municipal authorities, and was not put down till we had lost many men, including several officers, killed or wounded, and punished the miscreants. Their objects were to gratify national hatred; and in the general alarm and confusion to plunder the wealthy inhabitants, particularly the deserted houses. But families are now generally returning; business of every kind had been resumed, and the city is already tranquil and cheerful under the admirable conduct—with exceptions very few and trifling—of our gallant troops.

This army has been more disgusted than surprised that, by some sinister purpose on the part of certain individuals at home, its numbers have bee, generally almost trebled our public papers—beginning at Washington.

Leaving, as we all feared, inadequate garrisons at Ver Cruz, Perote, and Puebla—with much larger hospitals; and being obliged most reluctantly from the same cause—general paucity of numbers—to abandon Jalapa, we march [August 7-10.] from Puebla, with only 10,738 tank and
At Contreras, Churubuseo, &c., [Aug. 20.] we had about 8,497 men engaged—after deducting the garrison of San Augustin, (our general depot) the intermediate sick and the dead; at the Molinos del Rey (Sept.*) but three brigades, with some cavalry and artillery, making in all 3,251 men—were in the battle; in the day days Sept 12 and 13—out whole operating force, after deducting, the recent killed, wounded, and sick, together with the garrison of Miscoae (the then general depot) and that of Tatucaya, was but 7,180; and finally, after deduction the new garrison of Chapultepec, with the killed and wounded of the two days, we took possession—Sept. 14—of this great capital with less than 6,000 men! And I reassert, upon accumulated and unquestionable evidence, that, in not one of those conflicts was this army opposed by fewer than three and a half times its numbers—in several of them, by yet greater excess.

I recapitulate our losses since we arrived in the basin of Mexico:

August 19, 20—Killed 137, including 14 officers. Wounded 877, including 62 officers. Missing (probably killed) 38 rank and file. Total 1,052.

Sept. 8—Killed 116, including 9 officers. Wounded 665, including 49 officers. Missing 18, rank and file. Total 780.

Sept. 12, 13, 14. —Killed 130, including 10 officers. Wounded 703, including 68 officers. Missing 20 rank and file. Total 862.

Grand total of losses, 2,703, including 383 officers.

On the other hand, this small force has beaten on the same occasions, in view of their capital, the whole Mexican arms, of (at the beginning) thirty odd thousand men—posted, always, in chosen position, behind entrenchments, or more formidable defenses of nature and art; killed or wounded of that number, more than 7,000 officers, and men, taken 3,730 prisoners, on—seventh officers, including 13 generals, of whom 3 had been presidents of this republic; captured more than 20 colors and standards, 75 pieces of ordnance, besides 57 wall –pieces, 20,000 small arms, an immense quantity of shot, shells, powder, &c., &c.

Of that enemy, once so formidable in numbers, appointments, artillery, &c., twenty odd thousand have disbanded themselves in despair, leaving, as is known, not more than three fragments—the largest about 2,500—now wandering in different directions, without magazines a military chest, and living at free quarters upon their own people.

Gen. Santa Anna, himself a fugitive, is believed to be on the point of resigning the chief magistracy and escaping to neutral Guatemala. A new president, no doubt, will soon be declared, and the federal congress is expected to re-assemble at Queretaro, 125 miles north of this on the Zacatecas road, some time in October. I have seen and given safe conduct through the city to several of its members. The government will find itself without resources, no army, no arsenals, no magazines, and but little revenue, internal or external. Still, such is the obstinacy, or rather infatuation, of this people, that it is very doubtful whether the new authorities will dare to sue for peace on the terms which in the recent negotiations, were made known by our minister...

In conclusion, I beg to enumerate, once more, with due commendation and thanks, the distinguished staff officers, general and personal, who, in our last operations in front of the enemy, accompanied me, and communicated orders to every point and through every danger. Lieut. Col. Hitchcock, acting inspector general; Major Turnbull and Lieut. Hardcastle, topographical engineers; Major Kirby, chief paymaster; Capt. Irwin, chief quartermaster; Capt. Grayson, chief commissary; Capt. H.L. Scott, chief in the adjutant general's department; Lieut. Williams, aid-de-camp; Lieut. Lay, military secretary, and Maj. J. P. Gaines, Kentucky cavalry, volunteer aide-de-camp. Captain Lee, engineer, so constantly distinguished, also bore important order from me (Sept. 13) until he fainted from a wound and the loss of two night's sleep at the batteries. Lieuts. Beauregard, Stevens, and Lower, all wounded, were employed with the division, and Lieuts. G.W. Smith and C. McClellan with the company of sappers and miners. Those five lieutenants of engineers, like their captain, won the admiration of all about them. The ordnance officers, Capt. Huger, Lieuts. Hagner, Stone, and Reno were highly effective and distinguished at the several batteries; and I must add that Capt. McKinstry, assistant quartermaster, at the close of the operations, executed several important commissions for me as a special volunteer.

Surgeon Gen. Lawson, and the medical staff generally, were skilful and untiring in and out of fire, in ministering to the numerous wounded.

To illustrate the operations in the basin, I enclose two beautiful drawing prepared under the direction of Major Turnbull, mostly from actual survey.

I have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, you most obedient servant.

NNR 73.186-188 Nov. 20, 1847 Gen. Gideon Johnson Pillow's official report on the actions of the forces in his command

Headquarters Third Division
Mixcoac
August, 24, 1847

Captain: In compliance with the order of the general-in-chief, I moved with my division, consisting of the 9th, 11th, 12th, 14th, and 15th infantry, and the voltigeur regiment, and the field battery of Captain Magruder and the howitzer battery under Lieutenant Callender, early on the morning of the 13th instant, and, opened the road over the mountain on the route indicated by Captain Lee of the engineer corps, assisted by Lieutenants Beauregard, Stephens, Tower, Smith McClellan, and Foster. -Brigadier General Twiggs, with his division, reported to me for duty, under instructions from the general-in-chief, whilst my own division was moving over the mountain.

Perceiving that the enemy was in large fore on the opposite side of the valley, with heavy batteries of artillery commanding the only roll, through a vast plain of broken volcanic lava, rent into deep chasms and fissures, effectually preventing any advance except under his direct fire, I resolved to give him battle. For this purpose I ordered General Twiggs to advance with his finely disciplined division, and with one brigade to assault the enemy’s works in front, and with the other to let in his left flank, and assail it in reverse. Captain Magruder’s fine field battery and Lieutenant Callender’s howitzer battery (both of which constitute part of my division) were placed at the disposal of Brig. Gen. Twiggs.

This officer, in executing my order of attack, directed Brevet Brig. General Smith to move with his brigade upon the enemy’s from, whilst Colonel Riley, with his, was ordered to turn to his left and assail him in rear. To sustain the movements, Brig. General Cadwallader was ordered to advance with his brigade and support Colonel Riley, and Brigadier General Pierce, with his command, to support the column moving upon the enemy’s front, under Brigadier Gen. Smith. This last command was soon closely engaged with the enemy, as were also the batteries of Captain Magruder and Lieutenant Callender.

Col. Riley’s command, having now crossed the case broken up plain of lava, passing the village on the right, and whilst in the act of turning the enemy’s left, was confronted by several thousand lancers who advanced to the charge, when a well directed fire from the brigade twice compelled them to fall back in disorder, under cover of their artillery. About this time, Brigadier General Cadwallader’s command has also crossed the plain, when some 5,000 or 6,000 troops of the enemy were observed moving rapidly from the direction of the capital to the field of action. Colonel Morgan, with his large and fine regiment, which I had caused to be detached from the rear of Pierce’s brigade, was now ordered to the support of Cadwallader by direction of the general-in-chief, who had now arrived upon the field.

This general, having discovered this large force moving upon his right flank and to the rear, with decided military tact and promptitude threw back his right wing and confronted the enemy, with the intention to give him battle, notwithstanding the overwhelming force.

This portion of the enemy’s force moved steadily forward until a conflict seemed inevitable, when Col. Morgan’s regiment having reached this part of the field. Presented a front so formidable as to induce the enemy to change his purpose, and draw off to the right and rear of his former position.

During all this time, the battle raged fiercely between the other portions of the two armies, with a constant and destructive fire of artillery. Magruder’s battery, from its prominent position, was much disabled by the heavy shot of the enemy, as were also Callender’s howitzers. A part of the enemy’s artillery has been turned upon Riley’s command, whilst actively engaged with large bodies of lancers; but even the combined attacks could only delay the purpose of the gallant old veteran and his noble brigade.

The general-in-chief having arrive upon the field with General Shields’s brigade of volunteers-consisting of the New York and S. Carolina regiments—ordered them to move up to the support of the forces under Brigadier General Cadwallader; but it had now grown so late in the evening that Gen. Shields did not get into position until after dark. Night having come on, (but not until entirely dark.) this fierce conflict was suspended, to be renewed on the morrow.

The battle all this day was conducted under by immediate orders, and within my view; a short time before sunset, having previously engaged in the fight all the forces at my disposal, myself and staff started to cross the plain, to join in the terrible struggle on the immediate field of action.

On my way hither I was joined by Brig. General Twiggs and staff; but the darkness of the light, rendered by more obscure by a heavy rain, caused us to miss our way through the broken up lava, and to wander to the close neighborhood of the works of the enemy; and it was not until the shrill blasts of his bugles apprized us of our position, that we became satisfied we could not reach, during the night, our destination. We then returned and reported to the general-in-chief.

During the night Brigadier Gen. Smith disposed the forces present to renew the action at daylight, and complete the original order of attack; before dark, however, the enemy had placed two pieces of artillery on a height nearly west of Cadwallader’s position which had opened with several discharges upon his forces. Brig. General Smith, just before daylight, moved a portion of the forces up the ravine to the rear of the enemy’s position, so as to be within easy turning distance of his left flank, leaving Col. Ransom with the 9th and 12th infantry to make a strong diversion in front. The day being sufficiently advanced, the order was given by Brig. Gen. Smith for the general assault; when, Gen. Smith’s command upon the left and Colonel Riley with his brigade upon the right, supported by General Cadwallader with his command, moved up with the utmost gallantry, under the furious fire from the enemy’s batteries, which were immediately carried; a large number of prisoners were taken, including four generals, with twenty-three out of the original twenty-eight original twenty-eight pieces of artillery, and a large amount of ammunition and public property.

The retreating enemy was compelled to pass through a severe fire, both from the assaulting forces and Cadwallader’s brigade as well as Shields’s Command, who had remained at the position occupied by the former General the previous night with the purpose of covering the movement upon the battery. -The forces of the enemy engaged at this place, including the reinforcements of the preceding evening constituted a force of about 126,000 men, 5,000 of whom were cavalry; the whole were under the immediate command of General Santa Anna in person, assisted by Gens. Valencia, Salas, Blanco, Mendoza, Garcia, and others; the last four mentioned were taken prisoners.

Our forces, consisting of my division, Generals Twiggs’ and Shields’ commands, amounted to about 4,500 men. The loss of the enemy, as nearly as I can ascertain, was between 21,500 and 2,000 killed and wounded, and eight hundred prisoners, including the four generals previously mentioned, four colonels, thirty captains, and many officers of inferior grades.

The reports of the different corps engaged in this part of the battle, which were temporarily under my command, being properly made to their respective chiefs, and not have come before me, I am unable to give our loss. Though many brave and gallant souls have fallen, it is believed, however, when the strength of the enemy’s position, his enormously heavy artillery, and his superior forces are considered, our loss is comparatively small. It is a matter of just pride and exultation that amount the guns captured in the batteries were the two pieces taken by the Mexican army at Buena Vista, belonging to Captain Washington’s battery, (at that battle under the immediate command of Capt. O’Brien,) and it is no less remarkable than gratifying that the good fortune and honor or recapturing them belong to the 4th regiment of artillery, of which Captain Washington’s company forms a part.

Throughout this engagement every corps engaged the enemy wherever he was met, with the most determined resolution, and behaved with a degree of gallantry rarely equaled, certainly never surpassed in any engagement known to the American arms—Brig. Gen. Twiggs, next in command to myself, and charged with the immediate execution of my order of battle, was distinguished by the judgment, promptitude, and courage displayed by him throughout the engagement.

Brigadier General Smith, the senior officer who remained across the plain, and disposed the forces for the final assault, deserved and will doubtless received the thanks of the army and the honor due to the constancy of purpose and daring which distinguished his conduct on this great occasion. Brig. Gen. Cadwallader displayed great judgment and high military skill and heroic courage in the manner in which he met the sudden and trying emergency, when all parties were in great anxiety for the safety of his comparatively small command, when about to be assailed by the overwhelming reinforcement of the enemy on the preceding evening; and also in the manner in which he brought up his command to the support of the gallant Riley. This veteran officer distinguished himself no less by the manner in which he contended almost single-handed with greatly superior numbers on the first day, then his gallant and successful
Brigadier General Pierce, though badly injured by the fall of his horse while gallantly leading his brigade into the thickest of the battle on the 19th, did not quit the field, but continued in command of his brigade, two regiments of which—the 9th and 12th, under the immediate command of the gallant Colonel Ransom and Lieut. Colonel Bonham on the 19th, and Captain Woods on the 20th—assailed the enemy’s works in front at daylight, with great intrepidity, and contributed much to the glorious consummation of the work so handsomely commenced on the preceding day.

The commanders of regiments and inferior officers all behaved with gallantry no less distinguished, though in subordinate positions to those named above as commanding divisions and brigades; but the space proper for this report will not admit of further details.

In justice, however, to officers of this class, I beg to call the attention of the commander-in-chief to the detailed reports of the officers of the several corps engaged in this action. It is due to Capt. Magruder and Lieut. Callender, who have no other organization than as parts of my division, to testify to their great gallantry and daring, the proof of which is found in their losses, and in the fact that both of their batteries were much cut up by the terrible fire of the enemy’s heavy guns. During the cannonade, Lieut. T. P. Johnston, whilst gallantly serving the advanced section of Magruder’s battery, fell mortally wounded; and Lieut. Callender, in command of the howitzer, at nearly the same time received so severe a wound as to disable him from commanding his pieces, which consequently devolved upon Lieut. Reno, of the ordnance corps, who for the remainder of the battle, conducted the service of his battery with equal gallantry and judgment.

I cannot in justice omit to notice the valuable services of Captain Lee, of the engineer corps, whose distinguished merit and gallantry deserve the highest praise, and who, in the execution of his duties, was ably assisted by his assistants previously mentioned. They were important aids in the combination of elements brought to bear with success, no less triumphant than glorious to our arms, upon the most powerful collection of artillery (supported by a forces of four to one of our forces) every successfully assailed in any battle upon this continent.

Having myself crossed the plain and reached this bloody theatre as the last scene of the conflict was closing, as soon as suitable dispositions were made to secure the fruits of the victory I resolved upon pursuing the discomfited enemy, in which I found that Brigadier Generals Twiggs and Smith had already anticipated by having commenced the movement. At the same time I appraised the general-in-chief of my advance, and requested his authority to proceed with all the forces still under my command, and sweep around the valley, and attack the strong works at San Antonio in the rear, and requested the cooperation of Gen. Worth’s division, on an assault of that work in front, which the general-in-chief readily granted and directed accordingly—having, as I learn, upon being advised of the victory, previously given the order. I had moved rapidly forward in execution of this purpose until I reached the town of Coyoacan, where the command was halted to await the arrival of the general-in-chief, who I was informed was close at hand. Upon his arrival the important fact was ascertained that the enemy’s forces at San Antonio, having perceived that the great battery had been last and the total defeat and rout of their forces at Contreras, by which their rear was opened to assault, had abandoned the work at San Antonio, and fallen back upon their strong entrenchments in rear at Churubuseo.

Upon the receipt of this information the general-in-chief immediately ordered Brig. General Twiggs’ division to move forward and attack the work on the enemy’s right, and directed me to move with Cadwallader’s brigade and assault the tete du pont on its left. Moving rapidly in execution of this order, I had great difficulty in passing the command over some marsh fields and wide and deep ditches, filled with mud and water. I was compelled to dismount in order to cross the obstacles, which were gallantly overcome by the troops, when the whole force gained the main causeway; at which place I met General Worth, with the advance of his division, moving upon the same work. It was then proposed our united divisions should move on to the assault of the strong tete du pont, which with its heavy artillery enfolded the causeway. This being determined upon, the troops of the two divisions moved rapidly to attack the work on its left flank, and notwithstanding the deadly fire of grape and roundshot from the work, which swept the roadway with furious violence, on and onward the gallant and noble troops moved with impetuous valor and terrible and long was the bloody conflict. But the result could not be doubted. At length the loud and enthusiastic cheer of the Angle Saxon soldier told that all was well and the American colors waved in triumph over the bloody scene.

The larger portion of General Worth’s veteran division was engaged in this fierce conflict, together with the 11th and 14th regiments of infantry, constituting a part of my division, under the commands respectively of Lieut. Colonel Graham and Colonel Trousdale. To the 14th infantry belongs the honor of capturing a flag on this fort, and taking a large number of prisoners in the fort, among whom was the body of deserters.
The voltigeur regiment, then under command of Lieutenant Colonel Johnston, had been leg on by my adjutant general, Captain Hooker, to the assault of the strong fortification on the right, with which General Twiggs’s division was hotly engaged; but finding the artillery of the enemy, as well as his small arms, bore directly on his advance, which was entirely uncovered, the regiment was placed in rear of a church, where it remained until it received an order from myself in person to move to the assault in conjunction with the lively play of Duncan’s battery. This fine regiment was rapidly executing this order now under Colonel Andrews, and led by General Cadwallader, when that work surrendered, and was taken possession of by General Twiggs’s division.

General Worth, (to whose great gallantry during the action it affords me pleasure to bear witness,) with his division, and myself with the 11th and 14th regiments of my command, pressed rapidly on in pursuit of the flying enemy, until we had arrived with our commands nearly under the fire of the guns of the enemy, planted in the suburbs of the capital, where we were overtaken by an order from the general-in-chief to call off our troops from further pursuit. During this movement I met with Colonels Ransom’s and Morgan’s regiments, 12th infantry under Captain Wood, and the howitzer battery under Lieutenant Reno, parts of my division, forming General Pierce’s brigade, which had been moved by order of the general-in-chief, under command of General Pierce, against a large body of the enemy to the right and rear of the main work, where they had been, in conjunction with Gen. Shields’s brigade, engaged in a fierce open field fight with a large force.

Brig. Gen. Pierce, though still suffering severely from his injury of the preceding day, had nevertheless been on duty, and in command of this brigade during the day, and until a few moments before, when he had fainted from pain and exhaustion, and had been carried from the field. In the last engagement, the gallant Col. Morgan was wounded severely, when the command of the 15th regiment devolved on Lieut. Col. Howard.

During this long-continued battle, which lasted nearly two days, every part of the army in the field participated in the engagement. The consequence was, that all share justly in the honor and glory of the brilliant victory. I cannot distinguish between the conduct of the commanders of regiments in my division: they all acted a distinguished part, as did their field and company officers; though the circumstances of battle caused Ransom’s, Morgan’s Graham’s and Trousdale’s regiments, and the 12th infantry, under command of Lieut. Colonel Bonham of the 19th and of Captain Wood on the 20th, to be selective engaged. My division was composed entirely of recruits whom the exigencies of the service had not allowed time to become well disciplined; but they emulated in the deeds of valor and constancy the veterans of the old divisions; and I am proud to testify to the general-in-chief my high appreciation of their good conduct.

I cannot withhold the expression of my sense of the deep obligations I am under for the success and honor due to my command and my two gallant brigadier generals, whose promptitude, skill, and daring were equal to every emergency, and who, in the absence of discipline in their commands, met and overcame every obstacle and led on their brigades to honor and distinction.

I will be pardoned, I trust, by the general-in-chief for travelling beyond the legitimate bounds of a report to notice becomingly the patriotic conduct of the pious chaplain of Col. Clarke’s brigade. Whilst the battle raged furiously, my column had great difficulty in crossing a deep ditch without damaging their ammunition. The worthy chaplain, besides encouraging the passing soldiers to their work, actively set the example of filling the excavations, so as to enable the troops to press onward to the assault. My medical staff (particularly Surgeon Jordan, though infirm and aged, and Surgeon Slade) distinguished themselves by their great activity and energy in keeping with the column throughout the action, and attending to the wounded and dying on the spot where they fell, as did also the entire medical staff of my division.

During the arduous duties of my command on the 19th, my personal staff being all engaged on duty, I was compelled to make use of the services of some of my friends my civil life among these, I am indebted to Mr. Kendall for his assistance in promptly bearing and delivering orders; also to Paymaster Burns I express my indebtedness for his valuable services; to Capt. O’Hara, chief of the quartermaster’s department of my division, I am especially under obligations for his assistance, as well as to Lieutenant Davis, of the 14th regiment, acting ordnance officer.

My personal staff-Captain Hooker, my adjutant general and chief of my staff; Lieutenant Rams, 4th artillery, and Lieutenant Ripley, 2nd artillery, aids-de-camp; and Passed Midshipmen Rott. C. Rodgers, volunteer aid-de-camp—greatly distinguished themselves by their fearless and gallant conduct, as well as by their judgment and skill in leading forward my different commands and placing them in position for effective service throughout these long and desperate conflicts. I trust the general-in-chief will deem their conduct worthy in his special notice.
I must also notice the extraordinary activity and gallant conduct of Lieutenant Irons, 1st artillery, aid-de-cam to Gen. Cadwallader, who received a wound, probably mortal, whilst in the discharge of his duties.

Lieutenant Caldwell, of the marines, on duty with my division as senior officer of the commissary department, rendered invaluable services in his department, as well on the long march to this place as during the long-continued action. Lieutenant Reno, in command of the howitzer battery on the 20th, rendered valuable services under the orders of Brigadier General Pierce in his engagements with the enemy.

Generals Pierce and Cadwallader speak in the highest terms of the good conduct and gallantry of the officers of their respective staffs; and, concurring fully in their expression of opinion, I beg to call them to the special notice of the general-in-chief.

Captain Mason, of the engineer corps, rendered me important services in indicating position for portions of my command, during the action of the 20th at Churubuseo. Lieut. Rams, my aid-de-camp, was stunned, by the fragments of stone thrown from a wall by a cannon shot at the same place.

Captain Kearney, of 1st dragoons, commanding a squadron composed of his own and Captain McReynolds's companies, was on duty with my division during the action, and made his way with great difficulty across the wide and marshy fields and deep ditches. Seeing no field for the action of his fine squadron until the tete do pont was carried, I held him in reserve. I them let him loose. Furious was his charge upon the retreating foe, dealing death with the unerring sabre until he reached the very suburbs of the city, and drew from the enemy's batteries at the garita a heavy and destructive fire, by which the gallant captain lost his left arm. Lieut. J.L. Graham, of 10th infantry, serving with Capt. Kearney, was wounded in the left arm; and Captain McReynolds, 3d dragoons, who nobly sustained the daring movements of his squadron commander, was also wounded in the left arm. Both of these find companies sustained severe losses in their rank and file also.

By detachments to secure prisoners taken in the first engagements at Contreras, and captured public property, my force was reduced to about 1,800 men. My total loss in killed, wounded, and missing, is 211 officers and privates. The loss of the enemy in this last section I have no means of ascertaining. The whole field and road for miles was covered with the dead and dying. In these engagements, constituting one continued battle, the enemy himself estimated his loss in killed, wounded, and missing, at about 7,000. This includes prisoners taken by our forces.

Among the many gallant officers whose loss we have to deplore is the brave Major Mills, of the 15th infantry, who, after having participated most actively in the fierce struggle in which that regiment had its colonel wounded and one-third of its force cut down, joined Capt. Kearney's squadron in pursuit of the enemy, and was killed by the fire of the enemy's artillery at the very garita of the city.

Attended is a list of killed and wounded of my division.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient serv't,

GID. J. PILLOW,
MAJOR GEN. UNITED STATES ARMY

[ATT]

NNR 73.188-189 Nov. 20, 1847 Gen. William Jenkins Worth's official report of action at Churubusco and before the gates of Mexico

Report of Major General Worth.
Headquarters First Division

Tacubaya, August 23, 1847

Sir: In obedience to the instructions of the General in chief, I have the honor to report that the first division took position on the 18th inst. On the cause way leading from San Antonio, distant fifteen hundred yards from its well fortified front, which by means of heavy guns, commanded the approach through the whole length and at various angles of the direct route.
A glance discovered the impracticability of assault in front without battering in breach, and the secondary means of scaling ladders, fascines, &c. Reconnaissance was immediately commenced, and continued on the 19th, to determine a route for turning the whole system of defence by the enemy’s right. This accomplished, with satisfactory results, acting under the general instructions and discretion granted by the general in chief, a movement, delayed by the necessary temporary withdrawal of one brigade to sustain the division occupied in the direction of Contreras, was commenced at 11 o'clock a.m., as follows: The 2d brigade, composed of the 5th, 6th, and 8th infantry, commanded by Colonel Clarke, 6th, supported by the light battalion, composed of two companies from the 2d artillery, and one from each of the 5th and 8th regiments of infantry, under Brevet Lieut. Col. Smith; the whole under the guidance of Captain Mason, corps of engineers, assisted by Lieut. Hardcastle, topographical engineers—moved to the left and divergent from the causeway, such a direction as to strike the high road from San Antonio, with the double object of enveloping the right of the enemy’s position, and at the same time cutting off his retreat towards the capital. Lieut. Col. Duncan’s artillery (light battery) and the 1st brigade, composed of the 2d and 3d artillery and 4th infantry, commanded by Brevet Colonel Gartland, was advanced to an angle in the causeway which partially marked it from the enemy’s direct fire, and held in readiness for a rapid direct movement when the 2d brigade should become engaged, and have attracted attention to that quarter. Subsequently the 4th infantry was placed on the left of the causeway, and instructed to move by a flank, under guidance of Assistant Adj’t General Mack H., between that route and the 2d brigade, either to sustain the latter, or, if opportunity offered, rush upon one of the batteries. Discovering these dispositions, and particularly the movement of the 2d brigade, and doubtless somewhat influenced by the operations going on in the direction of Contreras, the enemy sent troops to check the advance of our left, and commenced an evacuation of the works. After having brushed away the troops in the front, Col. Clarke’s command approached a point on the high road occupied by the enemy’s retreating column, and by a rapid movement, particularly of two companies of the 5th infantry, under Captains Morrill and M. Phail, commanded by Lieut. Colonel Scott, guarded by Captain Mason, cut this column nearly in the center; advanced portion of it moving upon Churubusco; (where we shortly afterwards discovered the enemy’s main array of battle,) and the remainder, about two thousand in number, under General Bravo, with four pieces of artillery, retreated upon Dolores. The instant Clarke’s fire opened, Garland was instructed to advance rapidly in column and attempt a direct assault, previously detaching a company in advance; which, by drawing the enemy’s fire, might discover the magnitude of his batteries in that quarter; but it appeared that the guns at that point had been hastily withdrawn, in the hope of getting them away. Garland’s column was soon in, unresisted, and rapidly passed through the works, and on the high road to the capital. Some six hundred yards beyond the works the division was reunited and, disregarding the force retreating upon Dolores, the whole moved rapidly and in good order to the higher object. Approaching Churubusco—that place being on the left and near the road—it was discovered to be strongly occupied with troops, and protected by batteries and infantry defences. Further in advance was discovered a regular field work, garnished with heavy guns, and crowded with troops. Between the two, a continuous line of infantry; and on the left and rear of the work. (tete de point,) a dense line of infantry as far as the eye could reach. On getting within cannon shot, and so of musketry, the enemy opened with effect upon the head of the battalion. Garland’s brigade was now thrown promptly to the right of, and in line of columns obliquely to the road; which order would, in its advance and deployment, strike the enemy’s line at a like angle; the light battalion on its right. The 2d brigade was ordered to move also to the right (except the 6th infantry,) and by a flank parallel to the road, while the 6th infantry was directed to advance by the high road and storm the tete de pont in front. The field to the right was filled with standing corn, while masked large bodies of th enemy, and from whose tire, in consequence, every command suffered greatly in the first instance. Running over these, Garland’s brigade was soon engaged with their more regular lines and masses. Clarke’s, as soon as it could be got in the position above described—and it came at double quick time—became engaged in like manner. The regiment of infantry moved with a steadiness worthy of its established reputation, to assault the work in front, as directed; but being exposed to a combined fire of grape, canister, and musketry, which raked the road, it was of necessity, momentarily checked.

Meantime, the 8th and 5th of Clarke’s brigade, more favorably situated to effect results, but under a terrible fire, dashed past the deep and wet ditch that entirely surrounded the work, carried it by the bayonet, and as quickly as thought, turned the captured cannon upon that portion of the enemy stationed in the town, and which was combating out troops approaching from the direction of Contreras—frequently reversing their fire upon our left flank. Previous to this period, and when in the act of giving direction to the battalions, I was joined by Major Gen. Pillow, who came in from the left with three regiments of his division—Cadwalladers brigade—having with great difficulty made his way through the marshes; thence, to the close of the day, I had the pleasure of his gallant association and assistance. Lieut. Col. Duncan’s battery of light artillery, which had been directed to be masked, being unable to counter batter the heavier metal in front, and the intersected character of the ground rendering it impossible to move it from the high road, was now rapidly advanced by its gallant commander, and opened at a point some two hundred yards distant from the work around the church of San Paolo, situated in and constituting the key of that portion of the enemy’s defences; seizing up the prolongation of a principal face, in a space of five minutes, by a fire of astonishing rapidity, the enemy was driven from his guns in that quarter, and the infantry from their entrenchments; the body taking refuge in the church and under cover of its yard walls. The fire was then turned upon the church, and, after a few rounds, several white flags were thrown out by the enemy, the fire ordered to cease, and an officer dispatched to accept the surrender of the place. To this period there had been no perceptible abatement from the fire from the town in the direction of our troops attacking the opposite face. Immediately there after, our troops in the vicinity pushed on to the point where portions of Garland’s and Clarke’s brigades were yet engaged in hand to hand conflicts with the masses of infantry on the left and rear of the captured field work first referred to; but, under the triple influence of our musketry, the capture of the tete de pont, and the silencing of the fire in the town, (directed upon the other division of our army,) the main body of the enemy was soon discovered to be in full and confused retreat. Pressing along the highway in pursuit of the enemy, the division was soon intersected by the brigade of Gen. Shields approaching from the left, with the remainder of his brave command, consisting of the South Carolina and New York regiments, and also by the arrival of Lieut. Col. Graham with the small remains of his battalion of the 11th regiment of infantry; these were a portion of the main army assaulting, in the opposite direction of the town, the right and reserve of the enemy, under the immediate direction of the general in chief. The pursuit of the enemy by the 1st division, acting in concert and cordial co-operation with these forces, was continued to within a mile and half of the gate of Mexico, (La Candelaria). At this point, ignorant first of the magnitude of the defences of the garita, and secondly with Major Gen. Pillow and Brig. General Shields.

Col. Harney coming up at this instant with two squadrons of cavalry, was permitted to make a dash at the rear of the enemy’s retiring forces. In the eager pursuit, the head of the column pressing on too closely, and disregarding or not hearing their commander’s recall, came under fire of the battery, and suffered severely. The ground on which the troops operated, off the high road, is remarkably intersected; loose soil, growing grain, and at brief intervals, deep ditches for the purpose of drainage and irrigation. These ditches vary from six to eight feet in depth, and about the same width, with from three to four feet of water—the reserve banks lined with the enemy’s light troops.

When I recur to the nature of the ground, and the fact that the division (2,600 strong of all arms) was engaged from two to two and a half hours in a hand to hand conflict with from 7,000 to 9,000 of the enemy, having the advantage of position and occupying regular works—which our engineers will say were most skillfully constructed—the mind is filled with wonder and the heart with gratitude to the brave officers and soldiers whose steady and indomitable valor has, under such circumstances, aided in achieving results so honorable to our country; results not accomplished, however, without the sacrifice of many valuable lives. The little professional skill the commander may have possessed was intensely exerted to spate the met; and yet, with the utmost care, we have to mourn the loss, in killed and wounded, of thirteen officers and three hundred and thirty six rank and file. Our country will lament the fate and honor he memory of these brave men! A list of captured ordinance has already been handed in, as also of prisoners, from generals down to privates.—Of prisoners we paused to make but few; although receiving the surrender of many, to disarm and pass them was decided sufficient. Among them, however are secured twenty seven deserters from our own army; arrayed in the most tawdry Mexican uniforms. These wretches served the guns, the use of which they had been taught in our own service and with fatal effect, upon the persons of their former comrades!

And now, in closing this report, hastily and inconveniently prepared, comes the pleasing and yet difficult task of bringing more particularly to the notice of the general in chief and government the behaviour of the officers and men under my command. Every officer of every grade, and every soldier, from chief of brigade, through rank and file, to the humblest, have bravely and nobly done their duty; and the delicacy is felt in full force of distinguishing, even by a separation of one from the other; and yet those in whose path fortune threw her special favors are entitled to the benefit.

As least exceptionable, corps will be referred to in order of formation, and persons in connexion with their corps.

1st. Brevet Lieut. Col. Duncan commanded and directed the light artillery, with the zeal and gallantry, judgment and effect which have so often distinguished and presented him to the notice of his general in chief and the government.

3d. Brevet Col. Garland (Lieutenant Colonel 4th infantry) commanded the 1st brigade, conspicuous in many fields in the present war; in this last great combat, by skill, conduct, and courage, he has greatly added to an already established reputation for patriotism and soldiership. Of his brigade, Maj. Galt commanded and gallantry led the 2d artillery, [acting as infantry;] Lieut. Col. Belton, the 3d artillery, [also acting as infantry;] and Major Lee, the 4th infantry. The chief of the brigade speaks in terms of commendation of each of these
A list of officers engaged, as also of non commissioned officers and privates in each regiment, will be found in the regimental reports, to which reference is respectfully made.

4th. Col. Clarke’s commanding the 2d brigade—a veteran of the war of 1812, and heretofore distinguished by zeal and intelligence in this war, was while gallantly leading his brigade into battle, struck from his saddle and disabled for several hours, wherupon the command devolved upon Brevet Col. McIntosh [Lt. Colonel 5th Infantry] who led on with the pressage of many well fought fields, and acquitted himself, as always, with high courage and devotion. The command of the 5th infantry devolved, in turn, upon Brevet Lieut. Col. Scott, and the mantle could not have fallen upon a better or braver soldier; he most gallantly led the regiment to its assigned work, and, in doing, came to the close support and joint action with the corps to whose lot it fell to carry with the bayonet the main work. One wing of the 6th infantry, a portion of which was under the gallant lead of Captain Hoffman, did all that it was in the power of men to do to carry the tete de pont, by direct attack on the main road. The 8th infantry, although from its position coming up last, but the zeal and energy of its commander, Major Waite, and by the circumstances of the ground, which impeded the advance of other and proximate corps, found itself in position to ... most gallant and effective service. The companies of Captain James Bomford and Larkin Smith, under the direction of Brevet Maj. Wright, preceded by Adjutant Longstreet, colors in hand, were led on most bravely to the assault of the tete de pont; crossing the ditch under a heavy fire of musketry, they mounted the rampart, and finished the work with the bayonet, closely supported by the 5th and detachments of other corps. The regimental reports of this brigade are also respectfully referred to. The medical corps, consisting of Surgeons Satterlee (senior) and Wright, Assistant Surgeons Simpson, DeLeon, Simons, Holden, Roberts, and Deyerle, presents claims to especial thanks and admiration—ever among the most fearless and indifferent to hazard during the conflict. It is after the battle, when others seek repose, that they are found skilfully and noiselessly fulfilling the duties of their high vocation, in administering comfort to the crushed and sorrowful soldier.

The division commander cannot forego the opportunity presented to acknowledge his obligations and express his admiration of the gallant bearing of Maj. Gen. Pillow and Brig. Generals Shields, Cadwallader and Pierce, with whom he had the gratification of concert and cooperation at various critical periods of the conflict. And it may now, in closing, be permitted to speak of the staff of the division, general and personal. The subordinate reports will be found to speak with one sentiment of Capt. Mason, of engineers; but these are not to debar my testimony and warm acknowledgements of the intelligent and gallant services of this accomplished officer; in the estimation of all, he has won higher rank. Lieut. Hardeastle, topographical engineers, has been distinguished by zeal, intelligence, and gallantry, in his particular department, as also in combat. To Surgeon Satterlee, senior medical officer, the highest praise is due. Capt. Myers, division quartermaster, has highly distinguished himself by energy and devotion in his particular department, and by gallantry in combat. Lieut. Armstrong, division commissary, is also highly distinguished for energy and devotion in his particular department, and by gallantry in combat. Of the gallantry and efficient assistance of Capt. Mackall, assistant adjutant general, (but in a different relation,) of Brevet Capt Pe...ton and Lieut. Wood, aids de camp, it has been my pleasing duty heretofore to speak under similar circumstances. On this occasion each member of the staff has fulfilled every duty of his station to the entire satisfaction of their chief, and established new claims to professional distinction and reward. To Lieut. Semmes, of the navy, volunteer aid decamp, the most cordial thanks of general in chief is respectfully requested to present the conduct of this accomplished and gallant officer to the special notice of the chief of his distinguished branch of the public service —our glorious navy.

I have the honor to present to the general a national standard, a trophy secured from the enemy by the 1st division.

Herewith are reports:

1st—Of commanders and brigades, regiments, and corps, lettered from A to N.

2d—Tabular report of killed and wounded.

3d—Report of killed and wounded by name.

4th—Map exhibiting the operations of the 1st division, executed by Lieut. Hardcastle from a survey jointly by Captain Mason and himself.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. J. WORTH
Brevet Major Gen. U. S. A.

NNR 73.189-190 Nov. 20, 1847 Henry Clay’s resolutions at Lexington

Mr. Clay’s Resolutions.

A grand whig mass meeting was held at Lexington, Ky., on Saturday the 13th November. It having been publicly announced that Mr. Clay would attend and address the meeting and submit resolutions for their consideration, the concourse was immense. The Lexington Observer and Reporter, of 13th, says:

“The anxiety to hear the Sage of Ashland was intense. Among those present were individuals who had travelled over a thousand miles. I never witnessed a deeper feeling. All ages participated—the father as well as the son—all classes and conditions of society. And no wonder. The announcement had gone forth that Henry Clay—the patriot—the statesman—the sage—was about to address his countrymen on the most important topic of the day—the war with Mexico, its origin and its objects! Surely such an announcement was calculated to excite the minds and move the hearts of men—and not only of immediate residents of Lexington and its vicinity, but of every American citizen—of all who love their country and feel pride in its honor and prosperity.

Precisely at the hour named, the distinguished orator mounted the platform amidst the shouts of the assembled thousands. It had rained all the morning, and every thing looked Novemberish. The fourth estate represented by a gentleman from Louisville, and the writer hereof had obtained comfortable seats at a table on the platform, with pens, ink, and paper, all ready, when Mr. Clay came forward, and stated that he was opposed to any report of his speech being taken, as he ad been so frequently misrepresented; and that he intended to have it printed under his own supervision, and would furnish copies then to all. In vain we remonstrated and offered to allow him to revise our notes. The fiat had gone forth, and he declared that if we persisted in reporting, he would not speak. I mention these circumstances in order that you ma account for the slight sketch only which I have deemed it proper to give.

Gen. Leslie Coombs called the meeting to order, and hoped that perfect silence might be observed as it was probably the last time that the illustrious individual now before them, would ever address a populous assembly, and he had resolved to do it on this occasion, from a high sense of duty to himself and the country. The momentous question now presented to the American people, of annexation by conquest or purchase, immense foreign territory inhabited by millions of people of different races and colors, and placing them on an equal footing with the free white citizens of this republic, permitted no man who loved his country to remain silent, and Henry Clay would have been unworthy of his past history, if he had allowed any selfish considerations to palsy his tongue. He had “rather be right than be president.”

On motion of Gen. Coombs, the hon. W. Robinson was appointed president, with a long array of vice presidents and secretaries.

Mr. Clay then rose and submitted the following resolutions. They are of the deepest interest and importance, as they imbody the text or principles of this great speech.

RESOLUTIONS

Submitted by the hon. Henry Clay at the public meeting held in Lexington, Ky., Nov. 13, 1847.

1st. Resolved, As the opinion of this meeting, that the primary cause of the present unhappy war existing between the United States of America, and the United States of the Republic of Mexico, was the annexation of Texas to the former, and the immediate occasion of hostilities between the two republics, arose out of the order of the President of the United States, for the removal of the army under the command of Gen. Taylor, from its position at Corpus Christi, to a point opposite to Matamoros, on the east bank of the Rio Bravo, within the territory, claimed by both republics, but then under the jurisdiction of Mexico, and inhabited by its citizens—that the order of the president for the removal of the army to that point, was improvident and unconstitutional, it being without the concurrence of congress, or any consultation with it, although it was in session; but that congress, having by subsequent acts recognized the war thus brought into existence with out its previous authority or consent, the prosecution of it became thereby national.

2d. Resolved. That in the absence of any formal and public declaration by congress of the objects for which the war ought to be prosecuted, the President of the United States, as chief magistrate, and as the commander in chief of the army and navy of the United States, is left to the guidance of his own judgement to prosecute it to such purposes and objects as he may deem the honor and interests of the nation to require.

3d. Resolved, That, by the constitution of the U. States, congress being invested with powers to declare war and grant letters of marque and reprisal, to make rules concerning captures on land and water, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces, has the fullest complete war-making power in the United States, and so possessing it has a right to determine upon the motives, causes, and objets of war, when once commenced, or at any time during the progress of its existence.

4th. Resolved. As the further opinion of the meeting, it is the duty of congress to declare by some authentic act to what purpose and object the existing war ought to be further prosecuted, that it is the duty of the president, in his official conduct to conform to such a declaration of congress; and if after such declaration the president should decline or refuse to endeavor, by all the means, civil, diplomatic, and military, in his power, to execute the announced will of congress, and in defiance of its authority should continue to prosecute the war for purposes and objects other than those declared by that body, it would become the right and duty of congress to adopt the most efficacious measures to arrest the further progress of the war, taking care to make ample provision for the honor, the safety, and the security of our arms in Mexico in every contingency; and if Mexico should decline or refuse to conclude a treaty with us, stipulating for the purposes and objects so declared by congress, it would be the duty of the government to prosecute the war, with the utmost vigilance, until they were attained by a treaty of peace.

5th. Resolved, That we view with serious alarm, and are utterly opposed to any purpose of annexation of Mexico to the United States, in any mode, and especially by conquest—that we believe the two nations could not be happily governed by one common authority, owing to their great difference of race, law, language, and religion, and the vast extent of their respective territories, and large amount of their respective populations—that such a union against the consent of the exasperated Mexican people, could only be effected and preserved by large standing armies, the constant application of military force, in other words, by despotic sway exercised over the Mexican people in the first instance, but which there would be just cause to apprehend might in process of time be extended over the whole people of the United States—that we deprecate, therefore, such a union as wholly incompatible with the genius of our government, and with the character of our free and liberal institutions, and we anxiously hope that each nation may be left in the undisturbed possession of its own labors, language, cherished religion, and territory, to pursue its own happiness according to what it may deem best for itself.

6th. Resolved, That considering the series of splendid and brilliant victories achieved by our brave armies and their gallant commanders during the war with Mexico, unattended by a single reverse, the United States, without any danger of their honor suffering the lightest tarnish, can practise the virtues of moderation and magnanimity toward their discomfitted foe; we have no desier for the dismemberment of the republic of Mexico, but only the just and proper fixation of the limits of Texas.
7th. Resolved, That we do positively and emphatically disclaim and disavow any wish or desire on our part to acquire any foreign territory whatever, for the purpose of propagating slavery, or of introducing slavery from the United States into such foreign territory.

8th. Resolved, That we invite our fellow citizens of the United States, who are anxious for the restoration of the blessings of peace, or if the existing war shall continue to be prosecuted, desirous that its purposes and objects shall be defined and known, who are anxious to avert present and further perils and dangers with which it may be fraught, and who are also anxious to produce contentment and satisfaction at home, and to elevate the national character abroad, to assemble together in their respective communities, and to express their views, feelings, and opinions.

We refrain from inserting the outlines of Mr. Clay’s speech as given by the reporter, preferring to wait for his own report. [ATT]

Money Matters

The current specie is now setting towards Europe on one hand and towards Mexico, for support of our armies, on the other, in such forces as to affect the money market. Boston, New York and Philadelphia papers mention the comparative rates for discounts as considerable higher and the difficulty of obtaining them as far greater within the last ten days.

That specie would be shipped to Europe in any considerable amount at the present rates for exchanges, was stoutly disputed by most of the commercial journals. Facts are stubborn things however.

The exports of specie from New York and Boston, within a few days past are thus stated—

<table>

<th>Steamer/Cargo</th>

$1,501,500

The agents of the steamer Washington had an application to carry out a further sum of $150,000, but were unable to agree with the proposed shippers on the terms.

The total exports of specie from the United States for the month of November, it is believed, will not fall short of two millions of dollars, and will, of course, produce a corresponding effect on the money markets and operations of the banks.

Besides the above we see notices are shipments by several of the other packet ships to a considerable amount.

Treasury notes, have fallen below par. Considerable amounts have been disposed of ...99.. The banks no longer receive them in payment except for the accommodation of such of their customers as have duties or other payments to make to the sub-treasurers. So long as treasury notes remains at or below par, they will of course be paid, instead of specie, for public dues. The amount of specie in sub treasury notes at New York, on Thursday last, was, it is said, about $1,500,000. The payments into the custom house about $40,000 per day,—of which from $5,000 to $7,000 was in treasury notes. Should treasury notes continue to decline, very little specie will be received as long as they are in the market. [ATT]

BATTLE OF HUAMANTLA--We have seen a letter from a member of the late Captain Walker's company to his wife in this city, from which we make a few extracts.--Speaking of the entrance of Captain Walker's command into the town of Huamantla, he says:

"We scoured the streets, and took several prisoners. Among them were Col. La Vega, brother to Gen. La Vega, and Major Iturbide, son of a former emperor of Mexico, and a nephew of General Herrera. The later conversed with us in very good English, and recognized several of our men, particularly Frederick Crey, with whom he had been associate at St. Mary's College."

The writer thus describes the manner in which the intrepid Walker was killed:

"Captain Walker moved out of the gateway of the church yard, in which we were drawn up in line, for the purpose of giving orders, when he was fired upon from the right of the street. One ball entered his back, and came out through his breast. He immediately fell, and some men ran out and carried him in. His last words were to this effect--"Boys, fight to the last; I am dying; do not lose time in attending to me; go and tell Capt. Lewis not to surrender this place as long as there is a man breathing." He expired in a few moments, the service losing an invaluable officer, and we a brave and good commander.

"The body of Capt. Walker was conveyed, after the fight, with military honors, to a carriage supposed to belong to Gen. Santa Anna, escorted by the Pennsylvania regiment, under the command of Col. W.F. Wynkoop. This officer, who had been at variance with Capt. W., burst into tears on looking at the body of the deceased, and exclaimed, "I would have given six years of my existence if I could have spoken to Capt. Walker before he died."

"Our dead and wounded were--Capt. Walker, killed; corporal J.E. Merriken, do.; privates B. Hughmen, do.; Tarbos, do.; sergeant Thos. Goslin, missing; privates Sam McClay, do.; R. Dement, do.; Darlington, Richards, do.; and John Collins; corporal Glanding, wounded severely, since dead; privates Raborg, wounded severely; Meacham, do. Wayne, do.; Scott, do.; slightly, Myers, do; McGill, do.; and the sergeant major of the battalion, severely wounded. David, Capt. Walker's servant, was killed."[JNA]

Santa Anna’s Whereabouts?

The Mexican child, puzzles alike politicians and generals. Romance and fiction are distanced—his movements are more in the style of eastern fable than of veritable history. First dexterously cajoling the invaders of his native country, we find him availing of a free pass through their close blockade, throwing himself upon the country from which a few months before he had narrowly escaped, denounced as a traitor and hunted as a fugitive. A few weeks only elapsed, and we find him received by that country, elevated to the chief executive power, and without either money or credit, raising as if by magic an army five and twenty thousand men—organizing and disciplining them, and what was more wonderful, without resources of any kind, without adequate munitions or even provisions, we see him marching this army over a desert region which has arrested the advance of our own armies—and precipitating apparently an overwhelming force upon the most exposed and vulnerable point of our whole time of approach. Miracles alone saved the army under Gen. Taylor. All the ingredients requisite for certain victory, even to that of desperation of circumstances which must follow defeat, were combined in Santa Anna’s enterprise upon that occasion. All was unavailing however, against General Taylor and his men. Santa Anna’s best generalship and his best troops were doomed to such an overwhelming defeat, as left him apparently in the most hopeless flight, beyond retrieve. His disciplined army was annihilated here.

The forces that he subsequently mustered in his conflicts with Gen. Scott, were hurriedly huddled together on the spur of the moment, without either organization or discipline. An effective scientific was is not the creation of a bugle blast. The difference between a disciplined army and an undisciplined crowd, is told in the issue of the campaign.

Santa Anna had the double task on his hands, of controlling contending and distracting factions and of defending, as well as he could, from invading armies. We find him by turns obliged to march his fragment of forces one day to the capital, to restore something like order, and the next day wheeling them about to encounter the approaching fires under Gen. Scott. Each movement is by turns denounced as being desperate as well as treasonable, both by his enemies and his countrymen.

The battle of Cerro Gordo again doomed Santa Anna to the severest fate to which a defeated general could well be subjected—the suspicion of treason—as well as the total loss of his army and munitions.

Once more we see him surmounting all difficulties making a most formidable defence of the capital. Whatever may be said of the superiority of his positions and numbers that he evinced courage and generalship seldom surpassed, is a fact that will be duly authenticated whenever the true history of the siege and capture of Mexico shall be written. Our armies and our generals had brave and able men to encounter and to overcome, in achieving their victories. It was no child’s play.

Once more defeated—expelled the capital—officially denounced by his own second officer as a coward and traitor, and by his own civil officers also, we find Santa Anna emerging from utter prostration, as if by magic. The accounts say that at the battle of Huamantla, in which the gallant Walker fell, Gen. Santa Anna himself charged the American forces in the place at the head of 2,500 cavalry.

Defeat seems to have been his destiny. Again he is said to have been deserted by his forces—even to his life-guard. After spending his last dollar, he is now, according to one of the latest letters from Vera Cruz, a prisoner of one of the opposing factions of his own countrymen and to be tried for his life. According to another letter, he has made his escape from Mexico and has got on board the British mail steamer which left Vera Cruz on the 1st of November, by means of a craft from near Tampico. The latter account we place little confidence in.

Santa Anna, fairly considering the difficulties he has had to contend with, has done more than it would seem possible for any one man to have accomplished. [ATT]

73.192 Nov. 20, 1847 letter describing the fighting at Huamantla and the death of Capt.
Samuel Hamilton Walker, list of killed and wounded

Battle of Huamantla

We have seen a letter from a member of the late Captain Walker’s company to his wife in the city, from which we make a few extracts—Speaking of the entrance of Captain Walker’s command into the town of Huamantla, he says:

[Br. Amer.

"We scoured the streets, and took several prisoners. Among them were Col. La Vega, brother to Gen. La Vega, and Major Iturbide son of a former emperor of Mexico, and a nephew of General Herrera. The latter conversed with us in very good English, and recognized several of our men, particularly Frederick Crey with whom he had been associated at St. Mary's College."

The writer thus describes the manner in which the intrepid Walker was killed:

"Captain Walker moved out of the gateway of the church yard, in which we were drawn up in line, for the purpose of giving orders, when he was fired upon from the right of the street. One ball entered his back, and came out through his breast. He immediately fell, and some of his men ran out and carried him in. His last words were to this effect—'Boys, fight to the last; I am dying; do not lose time in attending to me; go and tell Capt. Lewis no to surrender this place as long as there is a man breathing.' He expired in a few moments, the service losing an invaluable officer, and a brave and good commander.

"The body of Capt. Walker was conveyed, after the fight, with military honors, to a carriage supposed to belong to Gen. Santa Anna, escorted by the Pennsylvania regiment, under the command of Col. W. F. Wynkoop. This officer, who had been at variance with Capt. W. burst into tears on looking at the body of the deceased, and exclaimed, "I would have given six years of my existence if I could have spoken to Capt. Walker before he died."

"Our dead and wounded were—Capt. Walker, killed; corporal J. E. Merriken, do.; privates B, Hughmen, do.; Tarbox, do.; Sergeant Thos. Gosling, missing; privates Sam McClay, do.; R. Demert, do.; Darlington, Richards, do.; and John Collins; corporal Glancing, wounded severely, since dead; privates Raborg, wounded severely; Meacham, do. Wayne, do.; Scott, do.; slightly, Myers, do.; McGill, do.; and the sergeant major of the battalion, severely wounded. David, Capt. Walker's servant, was killed."

NRR 73.192 Nov. 27, 1847 delay in a quorum for the Congress at Queretaro, suggestion of monarchy

General Cushing, with his command, left Vera Cruz on the 30th, and General Patterson with the residue forces at Vera Cruz, marched for Puebla on the 31st October. Between that period and the 5th November, some 1200 to 1500 additional troops had arrived at Vera Cruz from the U. States.

The Mexican congress would not be able to form a quorum at Queretaro before the 29th Oct., if then. Senor Pena y Pena had invited the governors of all the states to assemble at Queretaro to consult on affairs.

Paredes is said to have made himself rather ridiculous by again suggesting his scheme of monarchy. - He has made a long proclamation that only his great desire of serving his country had brought him to it. Said general having received an intimation from the government to go and wait orders at Teloloapan, (or Orizaba,) he answered that it was impossible for him to go there, as he was stuck and without resources, promising that wherever he might remain, the government might rest assured that he had no intention of disturbing the public tranquility.

73.192 Nov. 20, 1847 Fight among the Mexican guerrillas

WAR WITH MEXICO

Our latest dates from Vera Cruz are to the 5th inst., brought to N. Orleans by the steamer James L. Day. Amongst the passengers of the Day were Maj. Iturbide, prisoner of war, and Lieut. Sears, bearer of dispatches from Gen. Scott to the department at Washington. These dispatches left the city of Mexico between the 12th and the 15th October, escorted by a company of 100 Mexican lancers, under command of Col. Dominguez. The company left Puebla on the 19th. On the same night they were attacked by a strong force under General Torrejon, and shortly after by a party under Col. Vamos. In the two engagements they lost fifteen of their men, but, fighting as may be said, with halters round their necks, they of course fought furiously, and killed and wounded far more of the Mexicans. They returned to Puebla, and General Lane placed the dispatches in the hands of his adjutant general, Lieut. Sears, who came down with his Mexican escort to Vera Cruz, accompanied as far as Plan del Rio by the 1st Pennsylvania regiment, under Col. Wynkoop, Capt. Loyall's mounted men, and three companies of artillery. The American portion of the escort halted at Plan del Rio, and were to return with Gen. Patterson.
The Mexican spy company is described as a rough looking set of men. They fight with ropes round their necks, as the saying is, and therefore fight gallantly. Col. Cominquez is thought to know the road intimately, from long experience upon the line in a different capacity. We understand that we have altogether about four hundred and fifty of this description of force in our pay.

Gen. Lane's command is quartered in the heart of Puebla, the general occupying the palace. He retains all the force he took up with him.

Gen. Scott orders a garrison of 750 men to be stationed at the National Bridge, 1200 at Jalapa, and 2000 at Puebla. Gen. Patterson assigns Gen. Cashing to the command of Jalapa. Gen. Patterson reached the National Bridge on the 4th, with the whole of the forces, unmolested on his route from Vera Cruz.

The guerrillas have had a fight between themselves, in which Jarauta's band killed some 20 or 30 of Cenobio's band, whom he has denounced as a traitor, aiding the Americans.

Santa Anna was at Tehuaca on the 26th Oct., having given up the idea of going to Orizaba.

From Mexico nothing material.

A report was in circulation on the 15th of Mexico, that another serious affair took place between a part of our troops and some Mexican inhabitants of Mexicalingo.

Congress had not met at Queretaro on the 13th October.

The remains of the lamented Captain Walker, and his faithful servant David were in the Castle of Perote on the 5th --having been brought from Huamantla by order of Col. Wynkoop, and will be forwarded to the United States. [JNA]

NNR 73.195 Nov. 27, 1847 Killed and wounded.

Siege of Puebla. List of killed and wounded at San Jose, between the commencement and termination of the siege of Puebla:

If the war with Mexico be procrastinated our government will probably require a considerable loan soon after congress assembles. [RLLW]

NNR 73.195 Nov. 27, 1847 account of the battle at Huamantla; operations and incident, affairs at Huamantla and death of Capt. Samuel Hamilton Walker

Battle of Huamantla. Death of the brave Captain Walker.

The "Flag of Freedom" published at Puebla, of the 24th, contains the following details of the affair in which the gallant Walker fell. We have an official account of it since.

On the evening of October 8th, the train halted at a hacienda two and a half leagues from Nopaluca. Gen. Lane sent out a spy to the town of Huamantla that night, having received information that Gen. Santa Anna had gone thither during the day before. The next morning he returned and reported that the cavalry of the enemy had left town, leaving behind six pieces of artillery. Orders were immediately issued for the cavalry under Captain Walker, Col. Gorman's regiment, Major Lally's battalion, Col. Wyonkoop's regiment, Capt. Taylor's battery and Capt. Heitzelman's battalion to be in readiness to march for the town, leaving the train with about eleven hundred men and two pieces of artillery, under the command of Col. Brough.

At 11 o'clock the whole moved off in fine style. - The cavalry were ordered to keep some distance in advance. We had gone about two miles when Capt. Walker determined to push on at a gallop and surprise the enemy. For five miles the cavalry moved at a very rapid pace until we reached the outskirts of the town, when Capt. Walker gave orders to form fours and close up. He then entered a very narrow lane, both sides of which were lined with thick maguey, so narrow in many places that the sets of fours had to be broken and the column moved by twos. - One we went at a trot, until the lane opened into the main street leading to the plaza, when, in column of four, the order was given to draw sabres and charge. Then rose a wild yell, and such a charge! The flashing of the sabres, the thundering of the horses' feet over the paved streets, were enough to strike terror into the hearts of the enemy. Two of their cannon were pointed up the street, another pointed down a cross street, and the fuse was burning in it. The terrified artillerymen moved merely to the sides of the houses, at whom our men made their thrusts and right and left cuts, killing many in this manner. - The cavalry rushed over their cannon, the lancers (how many we did not know, but supposed there were three or four hundred) fled, and our men separated into small parties, pursuing them beyond the town, on the outskirts of which a good many were killed. Capt. Walker went beyond the town for the purpose of overtaking the artillery which had left the place. Capt. Lewis went in another direction for the same purpose. Capt. Besancon was ordered to follow the road to see if the artillery could be overtaken. In the mean time, most of our men having gone in pursuit, Capt. Loyall with a few men, assisted by Adj. Claiborne, secured some fifty or sixty prisoners at their quarters, together with their arms, &c. Lieut. Claiborne then proceeded to secure and bring up the plaza the cannon (three pieces) we had captured. Capt. Walker returned about this ... [illegible]... brother of the general's,) and a lieutenant; these he delivered to Capt. Walker. Lieut. Claiborne, assisted by Corporal Hescock and private Myers and one or two others, limbered up the six pounder and brought it to the plaza; leaving it limbered up and the mules standing in it, and returning to get the four pounder, the lieutenant was in the act of bringing it up when he was forced to leave it by the appearance of all Santa Anna's cavalry, 2500 strong. Corporal Tilghman, of company C, (rifles,) brought up a small howitzer. Private Dusenbery, of company C, took a lieutenant of artillery prisoner and turned him over to Surgeon Reynolds. By this time a good many of our men had returned and were in the plaza in scattered groups, when the lancers charged them suddenly and unexpectedly. Our men received them with great bravery, and kept the plaza with the exception of a few under Capt. Walker, who retired by a street leading west from the plaza - the enemy close on them at a charge; he turned the next street to his left, while the enemy, seeing the 4 pounder, rushed to take it. It was fortunate for the few men with Capt. Walker they saw this piece, for at the very next corner a still larger force met him; he wheeled and dashing swiftly past the rear of those who had cut him off from the plaza, again entered it. Here the men dismounted and occupied the convent-yard, together with a large house on the corner of the square.

Capt. Lewis and Lieut. Waters, with some ten or twelve men, charged twice upon the enemy, who gave way, and were pursuing them, when they discovered they were being surrounded by a vast number of lancers. They gallantly forced their way to the plaza; Capt. Besancon barely returned in time to save himself.

Private Hugenen and Corporal Merrillen, of company C, rifles, being entirely surrounded, drove right into their midst, and fell covered with wounds.

Capt. Walker gave the orders promptly to form the men to receive the enemy, who now made their appearance on our right, front, and on our left. - They had also run up the four pounder to open on us.

Lieut. Claiborne, assisted by Corporal Tilghman, unlimbered the six pounder and pointed it at the column on our left. Having no port fire, he prepared to fire it with a horse pistol; the enemy came nearer and nearer, until at about sixty yards off, when they halted. At this moment the lieutenant fired the pistol, but the fuse of the cannon would not catch, and being left alone in the plaza he retired to the corner house, and posted some riflemen to keep the piece from recapture.

At this juncture Capt. Walker, while examining the approach of the enemy, and looking at the four pounder on our right, was shot from behind, from a house that displayed a white flag. He sunk down immediately and was borne into the yard, the men bursting into tears as the cry spread among them, "Capt. Walker is killed." Capt. Walker directed that we should "never surrender," and died in about thirty minutes. Capt. Lewis made a detail of eight men, who sent out and brought the six pounder and placed it at the gate. The enemy menaced us a long time, and fired the four pounder six or eight times loaded with grape, one of which discharges shattered the leg of Frederick Raborg, Capt. W.'s interpreter, and a private of company C. Seeing the determination of our men they hesitated, faltered, and fell back. Capt. Lewis formed the men after Walker fell, and by his energy and address assisted materially to suppress disorder.

Lieut. Lilly distinguished himself by his daring. Surgeon Lamar was in the first charge by the side of Walker; was in the plaza when the charge was made, and was saved by the devoted act of Captain Walker's slave David, who caught at the lance aimed at him and received it himself. He died in a few minutes. He was honest and faithful, and a favorite of his noble master."; In death they were not divided." The infantry came up as the enemy were retiring - Col. Gorman's being the only portion of the infantry that got a shot at the enemy. There is much praise due them for the gallant manner in which they strove to be with the cavalry. They ran themselves out of breath, and then ran on. Never were men more anxious to reach an enemy. They had discovered the immense body of cavalry that was making its way in a gallop by a parallel road to the town, and both tried to reach town first. When they got to town we had possession. Surgeon Reynolds behaved very gallantly, and his whole energies after the fight were bestowed upon the wounded.

The whole force of Capt. Walker's command did not exceed 195. The enemy dispersed on five hundred, and in the subsequent fight they were two thousand five hundred strong. Company C lost its gallant captain, whose fame needs no eulogy, and whose loss is irreparable. His valor, often tried, is appreciated by the whole of his countrymen. Peace to the ashes of he noble and gallant captain!

The enemy lost over one hundred men, two pieces of artillery, and large quantities of ammunition. - Most of prisoners escaped during the charge.

The whole command behaved in the most gallant manner, and received the highest praises from the commanding general. The whole force under Gen. Lane returned to camp last night.
Proclamation of Col. Childs, Military Governor of Puebla, after the evacuation of that place by the guerrillas:

Office of the Civil and Military Governor.

Proclamation. Order having been restored in the city of Puebla, and a force put at the disposal of the chief of police, it is fondly hoped that no further acts of violence will occur.

The undersigned, in connection with his excellency the Prefect of Puebla, will use his best exertions to maintain the peace and quiet of the city.

The citizens are earnestly requested to open their stores and shops, under the positive assurance that they will be sent to their place of business, and every means taken to protect them.

Officers of the army are respectfully requested to assist in securing any person guilty of improper conduct that may come under their notice in passing through the streets.

THOMAS CHILDS, Col, U.S.A.,
Civil and Military Governor.

SIEGE OF PUEBLA - OFFICIAL ACCOUNT.

Report of Colonel Childs.

Headquarters military department of Puebla, Puebla, October 13, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to report, that, after twenty-eight days' close investment, the enemy yesterday raised the siege, and left Atlixco.

I will avail myself in command of Capt. Ford's company of cavalry, 46 strong; Capts. Kendrick's and Miller's companies of artillery, numbering 100; together with six companies of the first Pennsylvania volunteers, commanded by Lieut. Col. Black - his total effective strength being 247 - and hospitals filled with 1,800 sick.

With this command, San Jose, the grand depot in the city, Loreto, and Guadalupe, were to be garrisoned, and held against the combined efforts of the military and the populace.

The isolated position selected for the hospitals compelled me to remove them within their protection of San Jose, on the first demonstration of hostility. This was not long in exhibiting itself, when I put myself, with such means as I had at my disposal, in the best possible state for defence, continuing my efforts to the squares immediately around San Jose; and from those points the enemy during the entire siege were not able to force in (but for a single moment) the sentinel.

No open acts of hostility, other than the murdering of straggling soldiers, occurred until the night of the 13th of September, when a fire opened from some of the streets. On the night of the 14th it recommenced, and from every street, with a violence that knew of no cessation for twenty eight days and nights.

The enemy with their numerous cavalary, succeeded in cutting off, at once, every kind of supply, and vainly attempted to change the current of the stream of water, that we might become more easy prey. The night, however, before the cattle and sheep disappeared from the vicinity, two well directed parties obtained 30 of the former and 400 of the latter.
The various points to be defended for the preservation of San Jose, on which the safety of the other posts depended, demanded the untiring vigilance of every officer and man.

The enemy augmented in numbers daily, and daily the firing was increased; and finally, on the 22nd of September, General Santa Anna arrived with large reinforcements from Mexico, much to the delight of the besiegers, on which occasion a general ringing of bells took place, and was only stopped - as it had been several times before - by a discharge of shells and round shot from Loreto into the heart of the city.

On the 25th of September General Santa Anna demanded my surrender. A copy of his demand together with the reply, are herewith enclosed, marked A.

I here beg to pay a passing tribute to my gallant troops. So soon as I had dispatched my answer, I supposed not a moment would be lost by the general, who was to attack me at all points with his 8,000 troops. I rode to the different posts, and announced to the troops the demand, the force with which it was backed, and my reply. Their response convinced me that all was safe; that a hard and bloody battle must be fought ere the great captain of Mexico could overcome my little band.

The point of attack was San Jose, commanded by Lieut. Col. Black, with Captain Ford's company of cavalry, and Capt. Miller's company of 4th artillery, and four companies of his own regiment, and one hospital, the guard of which was in command of Capt. Rowe, of the 9th regiment of infantry.

The duty required of this command that I have before observed, in consequence of the various points to be defended, demanded an untiring effort on the part of every officer and soldier. A shower of bullets was constantly poured from the streets, the balconies, the house tops, and churches, upon their devoted heads.

Never did troops endure more fatigue by watching night after night, for more than thirty successive nights, nor exhibit more patience, spirit, and gallantry. Not a post of danger could present itself, but the gallant fellows were ready to fill it. Not a sentinel could be shot, but another was anxious and willing to take his place. Officers and soldiers vied with each other to be honored martyrs in their country's cause. This is the general character of the troops I had the honor to command, and I was confident the crown of victory would perch upon their standard when the last great effort should be made. Their bold and determined front deprived them of what they anxiously desired.

On the 30th ult. Gen. Santa Anna had established his battery bearing upon San Jose, and opened with much spirit. Having anticipated this movement, I had thrown up a traverse on the plaza, and withdrawn a 12-pounder from Loreto, by which means I was enabled to answer his shot. Towards night his battery ceased, and on the next morning was withdrawn, together with from 3,000 to 4,000 of the besieging force, to meet the reinforcements then daily expected at Pinal.

On the 2d inst. I availed myself of some reduction of the enemy's numbers to make a sortie against certain barricades and buildings, whose fire had become very annoying. One of the expeditions was confined to Captain Small, of the 1st Pennsylvania volunteers. Passing through the walls of an entire square with fifty men, he gained a position opposite the barricade, and drove the enemy with great loss, they leaving seventeen dead on the ground. The barricade, consisting of 150 bales of cotton, was consumed. In this affair, Capt. Small and his command behaved with great gallantry, and for twenty four hours were unceasing in their labors in accomplishing the object; when I saw Lieut. Laidley, of the ordnance corps, to blow up a prominent building, which was done by that excellent officer in good style; when the entire party was withdrawn, with few wounded.

At the same time Lieut. Morgan, of the 14th regiment, with a detachment of marines, and Lieut. Merrifield, of the 15th regiment, with a detachment of rifles, attempted to gain possession of certain buildings from which we were receiving a most galling fire. Lieut. Merrifield entered the building. Lieut. Morgan was not so fortunate. The enemy being present in great force, I directed him to fall back, with the loss of one man killed. On the 5th inst. Capt. Herron was detached with his company to take possession of a building, from which the enemy had been enfilading the plaza. He did in a very handsome manner, and to my entire satisfaction, with only a few men wounded.

Other minor sets of gallantry and good conduct were exhibited by officers and men at San Jose; and from Guadalupe one or two successful sorties were made upon the enemy, when engaged in their daily attacks on San Jose.

From Lieut. Col. Black, the immediate commander of San Jose, and his officers, I have received the most cordial support. Col. Black for more than thirty days was untiring in his efforts and zeal for the safety of that point. Officers and men were at their posts night and day, without regarding the pelting storm; and I cannot say too much in praise of the gallant colonel, his officers and men, before and during the siege.

Lieut. Laidley, of the ordnance corps, commanded the 12-pounder, the mountain howitzer, and four rocket batteries at the barricade, and there stationed himself night after night; and, as often as the batteries were opened, it was effect. Capt. Ford, commanding the cavalry, although no opportunity occurred, in consequence of the limited number of his troops, to engage the enemy, was at all times ready. Capt. Miller, of the 4th artillery, was particularly successful in managing the 12-pounder in one of the general attacks, and showed himself a good officer and skillful artillerist.

Major Gwynn, commanding Loreto, although not attacked, was vigilant, and his command was of great assistance to me. Several detachments from his post occupied exposed points, and received heavy fires from the enemy - especially detachments under Lieuts. Carroll and Moore, who for forty eight hours stood their guard, and were of essential service to me.

I cannot speak too highly of Capt. Kendrick and his management of his batteries. His shells and shot fell beautifully upon houses and churches, where the enemy were great in numbers. Wherever his shot took effect the firing soon ceased. The limited number of these missiles compelled us to use them with great caution. I am much, very much, indebted to Capt. Kendrick for his vigilance and exertions before and during the siege. I will take this occasion to mention Sergeant Owell, of company B 2d artillery, as a most skilful artillerist. I never saw shot thrown more accurately from his gun.

I take great pleasure in speaking of Capt. Morehead, commanding Guadalupe. The place and defences were in a most dilapidated condition. Capt. Morehead, with his base command, succeeded in placing himself in a perfect state of defence, by great and constant labor. The enemy several times left him, but, finding him always on the alert, made no serious attack. By sorties upon the enemy, when attacking San Jose, he was of essential service to us, and killed many of them. I consider him an excellent and gallant officer. Lieut. Edwards, 2d artillery, in charge of the mountain howitzer, threw his shells with great accuracy, and commanded a successful sortie.

To Captain Rowe, of the 9th infantry, who commanded the guard of one of the hospitals, (a constant point of attack, both day and night,) I am greatly indebted for able defence of that position, and his gallant bearing before the enemy.

To Surgeon Mills, chief of the medical department, and to his assistants, great praise is due for their unwearied and laborious services. Left with 1,800 sick, and limited supplies, with buy six assistants, their utmost exertions were necessary to administer timely remedies to so many patients. Their attention to the wounded deserves my notice and thanks. These gentlemen were not only occupied in their professional duties, but the want of officers and men compelled me to make large requisitions for the defence of the hospitals on surgeons and invalids, and they were nightly on guard marshalling their men upon the roots and other points. To them I am greatly indebted.

Capt. Webster, A. Q. M., and Lieut. Rhett, A. C. S., rendered valuable services in defending their premises with men in their employ; and with men in the quartermaster's department I was enabled to occupy a position that was all important, and to which I had neither officers nor soldiers to send. - Messrs. Spencer and Brown were particularly active and of good service.

I should be unjust to myself, and the spy company under Capt. Pedro Arria, if I did not call the attention of the general in chief to their invaluable services. From them I received the most accurate information of the movements of the enemy, and the designs of the citizens; through them I was enabled to apprehend several officers and citizens in their nightly meetings to consummate their plans for raising the populace. The spy company fought gallantly, and are now so compromised, that they must leave the country when our army retires.

I have now only to speak of my A.A.A. General, Mr. Waelder, of the 1st Pennsylvania volunteers, and my secretary, Mr. Wengierski. The gallant charge of Lieut. Waelder upon the enemy, although rash, exhibits him as an officer not to be intimidated by numbers. His duties have been arduous and dangerous, having daily to carry orders through the thickest fire. I take great pleasure in recommending him to the favorable notice of the general in chief.

To Mr. Wengierski, secretary and translator, I am much indebted for invaluable services. Mr. W., in addition to his appropriate duties, conducted the operations of the spy company, and through his suggestions and active exertions, I received much valuable information, and many successful expeditions of the spies into the city were made. Mr. W. commanded the detachment on the roof of my quarters, and was the first man wounded. From his efforts, his wound proved severe and painful; still he performed his various duties night and day, and is worthy of my approbation.

I regret that the health of Capt. De Hart, lieutenant governor, prevented him from taking an active part in the stirring scenes I have related, and in which he was anxious to participate. Until confined to his quarters by sickness, he was of great assistance to me in directing the defences of Guadalupe, and heading a command in the city to disperse the populace.

I herewith enclose a return of the killed and wounded, together with the sub reports.

Respectfully submitted,
Thomas Childs.
Col. U.S.A., civil and military governor.

NNR 73. 197 Nov. 27, 1847 Capt. Robert Bronaugh killed near Puebla.

Death of Capt. Bronaugh - We learn that Captain Bronaugh, formerly of the Baltimore battalion, was recently killed near Puebla, where he had been acting as postmaster. It appears that, before the siege of that place, 26 of them went on an expedition to retake a number of mules that had been capture by Mexicans. Soon after starting there were surrounded by a large body of lacers, and almost annihilated. Ten were killed on the spot, two or three severely wounded, and a few taken prisoners. A son of Captain Nones, of the U.S. revenue service, commanded the party, and was severely wounded, but has since recovered. [Balt. Clipper]

NNR 73.197-200 Nov. 27, 1847 Henry Clay’s speech at Lexington

SPEECH OF MR. CLAY

At the Mass Meeting in Lexington, KY, on Saturday November 13, 1847.

From the Lexington Observer .

After the organization of the meeting, Mr. Clay rose and addressed it substantially as follows: Ladies and Gentlemen:

The day is dark and gloomy, unsettled and uncertain like the condition of our country, in regard to the unnatural war with Mexico. The public mind is agitated and anxious, and is filled with serious apprehensions as to its indefinitely continuance, and especially as to the consequences which its termination may bring forth, menacing the harmony, if not the existence of the Union.

It is under these circumstances, I present myself before you. No ordinary occasion would have drawn me from the retirement in which I live; but whilst a single pulsation of the human heart remains, it should if necessary be dedicated to the services of one's country. And I have hoped that, although I am a private and humble citizen, an expression of the views and opinions I entertain, might form some little addition to the general stock of information, and afford a small assistance in delivering our country from the perils and dangers that surround it.

I have come here with no purpose to attempt to make a speech, or an ambitious oratorical display. I have brought with me no rhetorical bouquets to throw into this assemblage. In the circle of the year autumn has come, and the season of flowers has gone by, and I too am in the autumn of life, and feel the frost of age. My desire and aim are to address you, earnestly, calmly, seriously, and plainly, upon the grave and momentous subjects which have brought us together. And I am solicitous that not a solitary word may fall from me, offensive to any party or person in the whole extent of the Union.

War, pestilence, and famine, by the common consent of mankind, are the three greatest calamities which can befal our species; and war, as the most direful, justly stands foremost and in front. Pestilence and famine, no doubt for wise although inscrutable purposes, are inflections of Providence, to which it is our duty, therefore to bow with obedience, humble submission and resignation. Their duration is not long, and their ravages are limited. They How totally variant is this present war? This is no war of defence, but on unnecessary and of the public confidence. But has not an apprehension of a similar late, in a state of a case widely objects, bore the aspect of seeking a dissolution of the Union itself. They lost and justly lost the militia beyond our limits, and to hold a Hartford Convention, which, whatever the real considerations of policy.

The exceptionable conduct of the federal party, during the last British war, has excited an influence in the prosecution of the present war, and prevented a just discrimination between the two wars. That was a war of national defence, required for the vindication of the national rights and honor, and demanded by the indignant vote of the people. President Madison himself, I know, at first reluctantly and with great doubt and hesitation, brought himself to the conviction that it ought to be declared. A leading, and perhaps the most influential member of his cabinet, (Mr. Gallatin), was, up to the time of its declaration, opposed to it. But nothing could withstand the irresistible force of public sentiment. It was a just war, and its great object, as announced at the time, was, "Free Trade and Sailors Rights," against the intolerable and oppressive acts of British power on the ocean. The justice of the war, far from being dented or controverted, was admitted by the federal party, which only questioned it on a preamble was inserted falsely attributing the commencement of the war to the act of Mexico.
Thus the war commenced, and the president, after having produced it, appealed to congress. A bill was proposed to raise 50,000 volunteers, and in order to commit all who should vote for it, a preamble was inserted falsely attributing the commencement of the war to the act of Mexico.
I have no doubt of the patriotic motives of those who, after struggling to divest the bill of that flagrant error, found themselves constrained to vote for it. But I must say that no earthly consideration would have ever tempted or provoked me to vote for a bill, with a palpable falsehood stamped on its face. Almost idolizing truth, as I do, I never, never, could have voted for that bill.

How did we unhappily get involved in this war? - It was predicted as the consequence of the annexation of Texas to the United States. If we had not Texas, we should have no war. The people were told that if the event should happen, war would ensue. They were told that the war between Texas and Mexico had not been terminated by a treaty of peace; that Mexico still claimed Texas as a revolted province and that, if we received Texas in our Union, we too along with her, the war existing between her and Mexico. And the minister of Mexico formally announced to the government at Washington, that his nation would consider the annexation of Texas to the United States as producing a state of war. But all this was denied by the partisans of annexation. They insisted we should have no war, and even imputed to those who lore told it, sinister motives for their groundless prediction.

But, notwithstanding a state of virtual war necessary resulted from the fact of annexation of one of the belligerents to the United States, actual hostilities might have been probably averted prudence, moderation, and wise statesmanship. If General Taylor had been permitted to remain, at the point of Corpus Christi; and if a negotiation had been opened with Mexico, in a true spirit of amity and conciliation, war possibly might have been prevented. But, instead of this pacific and moderate course, whilst Mr. Slidell was bending his way to Mexico, with his diplomatic credentials, Gen. Taylor was ordered to transport his cannon, and to plant them, in a warlike attitude, opposite to Matamoros, on the east bank of the Rio Bravo, within the very disputed territory, the adjustment of which was to be the object of Mr. Slidell's mission. What else could have transpired but a conflict of arms?

The exceptionable conduct of the federal party, during the last British war, has excited an influence in the prosecution of the present war, and prevented a just discrimination between the two wars. That was a war of national defence, required for the vindication of the national rights and honor, and demanded by the indignant vote of the people. President Madison himself, I know, at first reluctantly and with great doubt and hesitation, brought himself to the conviction that it ought to be declared. A leading, and perhaps the most influential member of his cabinet, (Mr. Gallatin), was, up to the time of its declaration, opposed to it. But nothing could withstand the irresistible force of public sentiment. It was a just war, and its great object, as announced at the time, was, "Free Trade and Sailors Rights," against the intolerable and oppressive acts of British power on the ocean. The justice of the war, far from being dented or controverted, was admitted by the federal party, which only questioned it on considerations of policy.

Being deliberately and constitutionally declared, it as, I think, their duty to have given it to their hearty cooperation. But the mass of them did not. They continued to oppose and thwart it, to discourage loans and enlistments, to deny the power of the general government to march
the militia beyond our limits, and to hold a Hartford Convention, which, whatever the real objects, bore the aspect of seeking a dissolution of the Union itself. They lost and justly lost the public confidence. But has not an apprehension of a similar late, in a state of a case widely different, repressed a fearless expression of their real sentiments in some of our public men?

How totally variant is this present war? This is no war of defence, but on unnecessary and of
It is Mexico that is defending her firesides, her castles and her altars, not we. And how different also is the conduct of the whig party of the present day from that of the major part of the federal party during the war of 1812! Far from interposing any obstacles to the prosecution of the war, if the whigs in office are reproachable at all, it is for having lent too ready a facility to it, without careful examination into the objects of the war. - And, out of office, who have rushed to the prosecution of the war with more ardor and alacrity than the whigs? Whose hearts have bled more freely than those of the whigs? Who have more occasion to mourn the loss of sons, husbands, brothers, fathers, than whig parents, whig wives, and whig brothers in this deadly and unprofitable strife?

But the havoc of war is in progress, and the no less deplorable havoc of an inhospitable and pestilential climate. Without indulging in an unnecessary retrospect and useless reproaches on the past, all hearts and heads should unite in the patriotic endeavor to bring it to a satisfactory close. Is there no way that this can be done? Must we blindly continue the conflict, without any visible object, or any prospect of a definite termination? This is the important subject upon which I desire to consult and to commune with you. Who, in this free government, is to decide upon the objects of a war, at its commencement, or at any time during its existence? Does the power belong to the nation, in the collective wisdom of the nation in congress assembled, or is it vested solely in a single functionary of the government?

A declaration of war is the highest and most awful exercise of sovereignty. The convention, which framed our federal constitution, had learned from the pages of history that it had been often and greatly abused. It had seen the war had often been commenced upon the most trifling pretexts; that it had been frequently waged to establish or exclude a dynasty; to snatch a crown from the head of one potentate and place it upon the head of another; that it had often been prosecuted to promote alien and other interests than those of the nation whose chief had proclaimed it, as in the case of English wars for Hanoverian interests; and, in short, to be confided to the perilous exercise of one single man. The convention, therefore, resolved to guard the war making power against those great abuses, of which, in the lands of a monarch, it was so susceptible.

And the security against those abuses which its wisdom devised, was to vest the war making power in the congress of the United States, being the immediate representatives of the people and the states. So apprehensive and jealous was the convention of its abuse in any other hands, that it interdicted the exercise of power to any state in the Union, without the consent of congress. Congress, then, in our system of government, is the sole depository of that tremendous power.

The constitution provides that congress shall have power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces. Thus we perceive that the principal power, in regard to war, with all its auxiliary attendants, is granted to congress. Whenever called upon to determine upon the solemn question of peace or war, congress must consider and deliberate and decide upon the motives, objects, and causes of the war. And, if a war be commenced without any previous declaration of its objects, as in the case of the existing war with Mexico, congress must necessarily possess the authority, at any time, to declare for what purposes it shall be further prosecuted. If we suppose congress does not possess the controlling authority attributed to it; if it be contended that a war having been once commenced, the president of the United States may direct it to the accomplishment of any objects he pleases, without consulting and without any regard to the will of congress; the convention will have utterly failed in guarding the nation against the abuses and ambition of a single individual.

Either congress or the president, must have the right of determining upon the objects for which a war shall be prosecuted. There is no other alternative. If the president possesses it and prosecute it for objects against the will of congress, where is the difference between our free government and that of any other nations which may be governed by an absolute Czar, Emperor, of King.

Congress may omit, as it has omitted in the present war, to proclaim the object for which it was commenced or has been since prosecuted, and in cases of such omission the president, being charged with the employment and direction of the national force, is necessarily, left to his own judgment to decide upon the objects, to the attainment of which that force shall be applied. But, whenever congress shall think proper to declare, by some authentic act, for what purposes a war shall be commenced on continued, it is the duty of the president to apply the national force to the attainment of those purposes. In the instance of the last war with Great Britain, the act of congress by which it was declared was preceded by a message of President Madison enumerating the wrongs and injuries of which we complained against Great Britain. That message therefore, and without it the well known objects of the war, which was a war purely of defence, rendered it unnecessary that congress should particularize, in the act, the specific objects for which it was proclaimed. The whole world knew that it was a war waged for free trade and sailors' rights.
It may be argued that the president and senate possess the treaty making power, without any express limitation to its exercise; that the natural and ordinary termination of a war is by a treaty of peace; and therefore, that the president and senate must posses the power to decide what stipulations and conditions shall enter into such a treaty. But it is not more true that the president and senate possess the treaty making power, without limitation, than that congress possesses the war making power, without restriction. These two powers then ought to be so interpreted as to reconcile the one with the other; and, in expounding the constitution, we ought to keep constantly in view the nature and structure of our free government, and especially the great object of the convention in taking the war making power out of the hands of a single man and placing it in the safer custody of the representatives of the whole nation. The desirable reconciliation between the two powers is effected by attributing to congress the right to declare what shall be the objects of a war, and to the president the duty of endeavoring to obtain those objects by the direction of the national force and by diplomacy.

I am broaching no new and speculative theory. - The statute book of the United States is full of examples of prior declarations by congress of the objects to be attained by negotiations with foreign powers, and the archives of the executive department furnish abundant evidence of the accomplishmendment of those objects, or the attempt to accomplish them, by subsequent negotiations.

Prior to the declaration of the last war against Great Britain, in all the restrictive measures which congress adopted, against the two great belligerent powers of Europe, clauses were inserted in the several acts establishing them, tendering to both or either of the belligerents the abolition of those restrictions if they would repeal their hostile Berlin and Milan decrees and orders in council, operating against our commerce and navigation. And these acts of congress were invariably communicated, through the executive, by diplomatic notes to France and Great Britain, as the basis upon which it was proposed to restore friendly intercourse with them. So, after the termination of the war, various acts of congress were passed, from time to time, offering to foreign powers the principle of reciprocity in the commerce and navigation of the U. States with them. Out of these acts have sprung a class, and a large class, of treaties, (four or five of which were negotiated, whilst I was in the department of state,) commonly called reciprocity treaties concluded under all the presidents, from Mr. Madison to Mr. Van Buren, inclusive. And with regard to commercial treaties, negotiated with the sanction of prior acts of congress, where they contained either appropriations or were in conflict with unrepealed statutes, it has ever been held as the republican doctrine, from Mr. Jay's treaty down to the present time, that the passage of acts of congress was necessary to secure the execution of those treaties. If in the matter of foreign commerce, in respect to which the power vested in congress to regulate it and the treaty making power may be regarded as concurrent, congress can previously decide the objects to which negotiation shall be applied, how much stronger is the case of war, the power to declare which is confined exclusively to congress?

I conclude, therefore, Mr. President and fellow citizens, with entire confidence that congress has the right either at the beginning or during the prosecution of any war, to decide the objects and purposes for which it ought to be continued. And I think it is the duty of congress, by some deliberate and authentic act, to declare for what objects the present war shall be longer prosecuted. I suppose the president would not hesitate to regulate his conduct by the pronounced will of congress, and to employ the force and the diplomatic power of the nation to execute that will. But, if the president should decline or refuse to do so, and, in contempt of the supreme authority of congress, should preserve in waging war, for other objects than those proclaimed by congress, then it would be the imperative duty of that body to vindicate its authority by the most stringent and effectual and appropriate measures. And if, on the contrary, the enemy should refuse to conclude a treaty, containing stipulations securing the objects designated by congress, it would become the duty of the whole government to prosecute the war, with all the national energy, until those objects were attained by a treaty of peace. There can e no insuperable difficulty in congress making such an authoritative declaration. Let it resolved, simply, that the war shall, or shall not, be a war of conquest, and if a war of conquest, what is to be conquered. Should a resolution pass, disclaiming the design of peace would follow in less than sixty days, if the president would conform to the constitutional duty.

Here, fellow citizens, I might pause, having indicated a mode by which the nation, through its accredited and legitimate representatives in congress, can announce for what purposes and objects this war shall be longer prosecuted, and can thus let the whole people of the United States know for what and their blood is to be further shed, and their treasure further expended, instead of the knowledge of it being locked up and concealed in the bosom of one man. We should no longer perceive the objects of the war varying, from time to time, according to the changing opinions of the chief magistrate charged with its prosecution. But I do not think it right to stop here. It is the privilege of the people, in their primitive assemblies, and of every private man, however humble, to express an opinion in regard to the purposes for which the war should be continued; and such an expression will receive just as much consideration and consequence as it is entitled to, and no more.

Shall this war be prosecuted for the purpose of conquering and annexing Mexico, in all its States and Mexico, there are some points of striking resemblance between them. The differences between the condition of England and Ireland, as compared to that of the United Irishman hates, with a mortal hatred, his Saxon oppressor. Although there are great territorial feeling, affection and sympathy, toward the power which has so long borne her down. Every rebellion have been the order of the day; and yet, up to this time, Ireland remains alien in Rivers of Irish blood have flowed, during the long and arduous contest. Insurrection and subjugated the Emerald Isle.

Caesar, after conquering Gaul, returned with his triumphant legions to Rome, passed the Rubicon, won the battle of Pharsalia, trampled upon the liberties of his country, and expired by the patriot hand of Brutus. But Rome ceased to be free. War and conquest had enervated and corrupted the masses. The spirit of true liberty was extinguished, and a long line of emperors succeeded, some of whom were the most execrable monsters that ever existed in human form. And that most extraordinary man, perhaps in all history, after subjugating all continental Europe, occupying almost all its capitals, seriously threatening, according to Mr. Thiers, proud Albion itself, and decked the brows of various members of his family, with crowns torn from the heads of other monarchs, lived to behold his own dear France itself in the possession of his enemies, was made himself a wretched captive, and far removed from country, family, and friends, breathed his last on the distant and inhospitable rock of St. Helena. The Alps and Rhine had been claimed as the natural boundaries of France, but even these could not be secured in the treaties to which she was reduced to submit. Do you believe that the people of Macedon or Greece, of Rome, or of France, were benefitted, individually or collectively, by the triumphs of their great captains? Their sad lot was immense sacrifice of life, heavy and intolerable burdens, and the ultimate loss of liberty itself.

That the power of the United States is competent to the conquest of Mexico is quite probable. But it could not be achieved without frightful carnage, dreadful sacrifices of human life, and the creation of an onerous national debt; nor could it be completely effected, in all probability, until after the lapse of many years. It would be necessary to occupy all its strongholds, to disarm its inhabitants, and to keep them in constant fear and subjection. To consummate the work, I presume that standing armies, not less than a hundred thousand men, would be necessary, to be kept perhaps always in the bosom of their country. These standing armies, reveling in a foreign land, and accustomed to trample upon the liberties of foreign people, at some distant day might be fit and ready instruments, under the lead of some daring and unprincipled chieftain, to return to their country and prostrate the public liberty.

Supposing the conquest to be once made, what is to be done with it? Is it to be governed, like Roman Provinces, by Proconsuls? Would it be compatible with the genius, character, and safety of our free institutions, to keep such a great country as Mexico, with a population of not less than nine millions, in a state of constant subjection?

Shall it be annexed to the United States? Does any considerate man believe it possible that two such immense countries, with territories of nearly equal extent, with populations so incongruous, so different in race, in language, in religion and in laws, could be blended together in one harmonious mass, and happily governed by one common authority? Murmurs, discontent, insurrections, rebellion, would inevitably ensure, until the incompatible parts would be broken asunder, and possibly, in the frightful struggle, our present glorious union itself would be dismembered or dissolved.

We ought not so forget the warning voice of all history, which teaches the difficulty of combining and consolidating together, conquering and conquered notions. After the lapse of eight hundred years, during which the Moors held their conquest of Spain, the indomitable courage, perseverance, and obstinacy of the Spanish race finally triumphed, and expelled the African invaders from the Peninsula. And even with our own time, the colossal power of Napoleon, when at its loftiest height, was incompetent to subdue and subjugate the proud Castilian. And here with in our own neighborhood, Lower Canada, which near one hundred years ago, after the conclusion of the seven years war, was ceded by France to Great Britain, remains a foreign land in the midst of the British provinces, foreign in feelings and attachment, and foreign in laws, language and religion. And what has been the fact with poor gallant, generous and oppressed Ireland? Centuries have passed since the overbearing Saxon overrun and subjugged the Emerald Isle.

Rivers of Irish blood have flowed, during the long and arduous contest. Insurrection and rebellion have been the order of the day; and yet, up to this time, Ireland remains alien in feeling, affection and sympathy, toward the power which has so long borne her down. Every Irishman hates, with a mortal hatred, his Saxon oppressor. Although there are great territorial differences between the condition of England and Ireland, as compared to that of the United States and Mexico, there are some points of striking resemblance between them.
Both the Irish and the Mexicans are probably of the same Celtic race. Both the English and the Americans are of the same Saxon origin. The Catholic religion predominates in both the former, the Protestant among both the latter. Religion has been the fruitful cause of dissatisfaction and discontent between the Irish and the English nations. Is there no reason to apprehend that it would become so between the people of the United States and Mexico, if they were united together? Why should we seek to interfere with them in their mode of worship of a common Saviour? We believe that they are wrong especially in the exclusive character of their faith, and that we are right. They think that they are right and we are wrong. What other rule can there be than to leave the followers of each religion to their own solemn convictions of conscientious duty towards God? Who but the great Arbiter of the Universe, can judge in such a question? For my own part, I sincerely believe and hope that those who belong to all the departments of the great church of Christ, if, in truth and purity, they conform to the doctrines which they profess, will ultimately secure and abide in those regions of bliss, which all aim finally to reach. I think there is no potentate in Europe, whatever his religion may be, more enlightened or at this moment so interesting as the liberal head of the Papal See.

But I suppose it to be impossible that those who favor, if there be any who favor the annexation of Mexico to the United States, can think that it ought to be perpetually governed by the military sway. Certainly no votary of human liberty could deem it right that a violation should be perpetuated of the great principles of our own revolution, according to which, laws ought not to be enacted and taxes ought not to be levied, without representation on the part of those who are to obey the one, and pay the other. Then, Mexico is to participate in our councils and equally share in our legislation and government. But, suppose she would not voluntarily choose representatives to the national congress, is our soldiery to follow the electors to the ballot box, and by force to compel them, at the point of the bayonet, to deposit their ballots? And how are the nine millions of Mexican people to be represented in the congress of the United States of America and the congress of the United States of the Republic of Mexico combined? Is every Mexican, without regard to color or caste, per capita, to exercise the elective franchise? How is the quota of representation between the two republics, to be fixed? Where is their seat of common government to be established? And who can foresee or foretell, if Mexico, voluntarily or by force, were to share in the common government what would be the consequences to her or to us? Unprepared, as I fear her populations yet is, for the practical enjoyment of self government, and of habits, customs, language, laws and religion, so totally different from our own, we should present the revolting spectacle of a confused, distracted, and motley government.

We should have a Mexican party, a Pacific Ocean party, an Atlantic party, in addition to the other parties, which exist, or with which we are threatened, each striving to execute its own particular views and purposes, and reproaching the others with thwarting and disappointing them. The Mexican representation, in congress, would probably form a separate and impenetrable corps, always ready to throw itself into the scale of any other party, to advance and promote Mexican interests. Such a state of things could not long endure. Those, whom God and geography have pronounced should live asunder, could never be permanently and harmoniously united together.

Do we want for our own happiness or greatness the addition of Mexico to the existing Union of our states? If our population was too dense for our territory, and there was a difficulty in obtaining honorably the means of subsistence, there might be some excuse for an attempt to enlarge our dominions. But we have no such apology. We have already, in our glorious country, a vast and almost boundless territory. Beginning in the north, in the frozen regions of the British provinces, it stretches thousands of miles along the coasts of the Atlantic ocean and the Mexican gulf, until it almost reaches the tropics. It extends to the Pacific ocean, on those great inland seas, the lakes, which separate us from the possessions of Great Britain, and it embraces the great father of rivers, from its uppermost source to the Balize, and the still longer Missouri, from its mouth to the gorges of the Rocky Mountains.

It comprehends the greatest variety of the richest soils, capable of almost all the productions of the earth, except tea and coffee and the spices, and it includes every variety of climate, which the heart could wish or desire. We have more than ten thousand millions of acres of waste and unsettled lands, enough for the subsistence of ten or twenty times our present population. Ought we not to be satisfied with such a country? Ought we not be profoundly thankful to the Giver of all good things for such a vast and bountiful land? Is it not the height of ingratitude to Him to seek by war and conquest, indulging in a spirit of rapacity, to acquire other lands, the homes and habitations of a large portion of his common children? If we pursue the object of such a conquest, besides mortgaging the revenue and resources of this country for ages to come, in the form of an onerous national debt, we should have greatly to augment the debt, by an assumption of the sixty or seventy millions of the national debt of Mexico. For I take it that nothing is more certain than that, if we obtain voluntarily or by conquest, a foreign nation, we acquire it with all the incumbrances attached to it. In my humble opinion, we are now bound, in honor and morality, to pay the just debt of Texas. - And we should be equally bound by the same obligations, to pay the debt of Mexico if it were annexed by the United States.
Of the possessions which appertain to man, in his collective or individual condition, none should be preserved and cherished, with more sedulous and unremitting care than that of an unspilled character. It is impossible to estimate it too highly, in society, when attached to an individual, nor can it be exaggerated or too greatly magnified in a nation. Those who lose or are indifferent to it become just objects of scorn or contempt. Of all the abominable transactions which sully the pages of history, none exceed in enormity that of the dismemberment and partition of Poland, by the three great continental powers - Russia, Austria and Prussia. Ages may pass away, and centuries roll around, but as long as human records endure all mankind will unite in execrating the rapacious and detestable deed. That was accomplished by overwhelming force, and the unfortunate existence of fatal dissensions and divisions in the bosom of Poland. Let us avoid affixing to our name and national character a similar, if not worse stigma. I am afraid that we do not now stand well in the opinion of other parts of Christendom. - All the nations, I apprehend, look upon us in the prosecution of the present war, as being actuated by a spirit of rapacity and an inordinate desire for territorial aggrandizement. Let us not forget altogether their good opinions. Let us command their applause by a noble exercise of forbearance and justice. In the elevated station which we hold, we can safely afford to practise the godlike virtues of moderation and magnanimity. The long series of glorious triumphs, achieved by our gallant commanders and their brave armies, unattended by a single reverse, justify us, without the least danger of tarnishing the national honor, in disinterestedly holding out the olive branch of peace.

We do not want the mines, the mountains, the morasses and the sterile lands of Mexico. To her the loss of them would be humiliating, and be a perpetual source of regret and mortification. To us they might prove a fatal acquisition, producing distraction, dissension, division possibly disunion. Let therefore the integrity of the national existence and national territory of Mexico remain undisturbed. - For one, I desire to see no part of her territory torn from her by war. Some of our people have placed their hearts upon the acquisition of the Bay of San Francisco in Upper California. To us, as a great maritime power, it might prove to be, of advantage hereafter in respect, to our commercial and navigating interests. To Mexico which can never be a great maritime power, it can never be of much advantage. - If we obtain it by fair purchase with a just equivalent, I should be happy to see it so acquired. As, whenever the war ceases, Mexico ought to be required to pay the debts due to our citizens, perhaps an equivalent for that bay may be found in that debt, our government assuming to pay to our citizens whatever portion of it may be applied to that object. But it should form no motive in the prosecution of the war, which I would not continue a solitary hour for the sake of that harbor.

But what, it will be asked, shall we make peace without any indemnity for the expenses of war? If the published documents in relation to the late negotiations between Mr. Trist and the Mexican commissioners be true, and I have not seen them anywhere contradicted, the executive properly waived any demand of indemnity for the expenses of the war. And the rupture of that negotiation was produced, by our government insisting upon a session from Mexico, of the strip and mostly barren land between the Nueces and the Rio Bravo and New Mexico, which Mexico refused to make. So that we are now fighting, if not for the conquest of all Mexico as intimated in some quarters, for that narrow strip, and for the barren province of New Mexico, with its few miserable mines. We bought all the Louisiana Purchase for fifteen millions of dollars, and it is, in my opinion, worth more than all of Mexico together. We bought Florida, at five millions of dollars, and a hard bargain it was, since, besides that sum, we gave up the boundary of the Rio Bravo, to which I think we were entitled, as the western limit of the province of Louisiana, and were restricted to that part of the Sabine. And we are now, if not seeking the conquest of all Mexico, to continue this war indefinitely for the inconsiderable objects to which I have just referred.

But it will be repeated, are we to have no indemnity for the expenses of the war? Mexico is utterly unable to make us any pecuniary indemnity, if the justice of the war on our part entitled us to demand it. Her country has been laid waste, her cities burned or occupied by our troops, her means so exhausted that she is unable to pay even her own armies. And every day's prosecution of the war, whilst it would augment the amount of our indemnity, would lessen the ability of Mexico to pay it. We have seen, however, that there is another [illegible]...

Among the resolutions which it is my intention to present for your consideration at the conclusion of this address, one proposes, in your behalf and mine, to disavow, in the most positive manner, any desire, on our part, to acquire any foreign territory whatever for the purpose of introducing slavery into it. I do not know that any citizen of the U. States entertains such a wish. But such a motive has often been imputed to the slave states, and I therefore think it necessary to notice it on this occasion. My opinions on the subject of slavery are well known. - They have the merit, if it be one, of consistency, uniformity and long duration. I have ever regarded slavery as a great evil, a wrong, for the present I fear an irredeemable wrong to its unfortunate victims. - I should rejoice if not a single slave breathed the air or was within the limits of our country. But here they are, to be dealt with as well as we can, with a due consideration of all circumstances affecting the security, safety and happiness of both races. Every state has the supreme, uncontrolled and exclusive power to decide for itself whether slavery shall cease or continue within its limits, without any exterior intervention from any quarter. In states where the slaves outnumber the whites, as is the case with several, the blacks could not be emancipated and invested with all the rights of freemen, without becoming the governing race in those states. Collisions and conflicts between the two races, would be inevitable, and after shocking scenes of rape and carnage, the extinction or expulsion of the blacks would certainly take place.

In the state of Kentucky, near fifty years ago, I thought the proportion of slaves, in comparison with the whites, was so inconsiderable that we might safely adopt a system of gradual emancipation that would ultimately eradicate this evil in our state. That system was totally different from the immediate abolition of slavery for which the party of the abolitionists of the present day contend. Whether they have intended or not, it is my calm and deliberate belief, that they incalculable mischief even to the very cause which they espoused, to say nothing of the discord which has been produced between the different parts of the Union. According to the system, we attempted, near the close of the last century, all slaves in being were to remain such, but all who might be born subsequent to a specified day were to become free at the age of twenty-eight, and during their service were to be taught to read, write and cipher.
Thus, instead of being thrown upon the community, ignorant and unprepared, as would be the case by immediate emancipation, they would have entered upon the possession of their freedom, capable, in some degree, of enjoying it. After a hard struggle the system was defeated, and I regret it extremely, as, if it had been then adopted, our state would be now nearly rid of that reproach.

Since that epoch, a scheme or unmixed benevolence has sprung up, which, if it had existed at that time, would have obviated one of the greatest objections, which was made to gradual emancipation, which was the continuance of the emancipated slaves to abide among us. That scheme is the American colonization society. About twenty-eight years ago, a few individuals, myself among them, met together in the city of Washington, and laid the foundation of that society. It has gone on amidst extraordinary difficulties and trials, sustaining itself almost entirely by spontaneous and voluntary contributions, from individual benevolence, without scarcely any aid from government.

The colonies, planted under its auspices, are now well established communities, with churches, schools, and other institutions appertaining to the civilized state. They have made successful war in repelling attacks and invasions by their barbarous and savage neighbors. They have made treaties, annexed territories to their dominion, and are blessed with a free representative in government. I recently read a message, from one of their governors to their legislature, which, in point of composition, and in careful attention to the public affairs of their republic, would compare advantageously with the messages of the governors of our own states. I am not very superstitious, but I do solemnly believe that these colonies are blest with the smiles of Providence, and, if we may dare attempt penetrating the veil, by which he conceals his all-wise dispensations from mortal eyes, that he designs that Africa shall be the refuge and the home of the descendants of its sons and daughters, torn and dragged from their native land, by lawless violence.

It is a philanthropic and consoling reflection that the moral and physical condition of the African race in the United States, even in a state of slavery, is far better than it would have been if their ancestors had never been brought from their native land. And if it should be the decree of the great Ruler of the universe that their descendants shall be made instruments in his hands in the establishment of civilization and the christian religion throughout Africa, our regrets on account of the original wrong will be greatly mitigated.

It may be argued that, in admitting the injustice of slavery, I admit the necessity of an instantaneous reparation of that injustice. Unfortunately, however, it is not always safe, practicable, or possible, in the great movements of states and public affairs of nations, to remedy or repair the infliction of previous injustice. In the inception of it, we may oppose and denounce it, by our most strenuous exertions, but after its consummation, there is often no alternative left us but to deplore its perpetration, and to acquiesce as the only alternative, in its existence, as a less evil than the frightful consequences which might ensue from the vain endeavor to repair it. Slavery is one of those unfortunate instances. The evil of it was inflicted upon us, by the parent country of Great Britain against all the entreaties and remonstrances of the colonies. And here it is amongst and amidst us, and we must dispose of it as best we can under all the circumstances which surround us. It continued, by the importation of slaves from Africa, in spite of colonial resistance, for a period of more than a century and a half, and it may require an equal or a longer lapse of time before our country is entirely rid of the evil. And in the meantime, moderation, prudence, and discretion among ourselves, and the blessings of providence may be all necessary to accomplish our ultimate deliverance from it. Examples of similar infliction of irreparable national evil and injustice might be multiplied to an indefinite extent. The case of the annexation of Texas to the United States is a recent and an obvious one which, if it were wrong, it cannot now be repaired. Texas is now an integral part of our Union, with its own voluntary consent. Many of us oppose the annexation with honest zeal and most earnest exertions. But who would now think of perpetrating the folly of casting Texas out of the Confederacy and throwing her back upon her own independence, or into the arms of Mexico? Who would now divorce her from this Union? The Creeks and the Cherokee Indians were, by the most exceptionable means, driven from their country, and transported beyond the Mississippi River. Their lands have been fairly purchased and occupied by inhabitants of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee. Who would now conceive the flagrant injustice of expelling those inhabitants and restoring the Indian country to the Cherokees and Creeks, under color of repairing original injustice? During the war of our revolution, millions of paper money were issued by our ancestors, as the only currency with which they could achieve our liberties and independence. - Thousands and hundreds of thousands of families were stripped of their homes and all and brought to ruin, by giving credit and confidence to that spurious currency. Stern necessity has prevented the reparation of that great national injustice.

But I forbear, I will no longer trespass upon your patience or further tax my own voice, impaired by a speech of more than three hours' duration, which professional duty required me to make only a few days ago. If I have been at all successful in the exposition of the views and opinions I entertain, I have shown -

1st. That the present war was brought about by the annexation of Texas and the subsequent order of the president, without the previous consent and authority of congress.

2d. That the president, being unenlightened and uninstructed by any public declaration of congress, as to objects for which is ought to be prosecuted, in the conduct of it, is necessarily, left to his own sense of what the national interest and honor may require.

3d. That the whole war making power of the nation, as to motives, causes, and objects, is confided by the constitution to the discretion and judgment of congress.

4th. That it is, therefore, the right of congress, at the commencement or during the progress of any war, to declare for what objects and purposes the war ought to be waged and prosecuted.

5th. That it is the right and duty of congress to announce to the nation for what objects the war shall be longer continued; that it is the duty of the president, in the exercise of all his official functions, to conform to and carry out this declared will of congress by the exercise, if necessary, of all the high power with which he is clothed and that, if he fail or refuse to do so, it becomes the imperative duty of congress to arrest the further progress of the war by the most effectual means in its power.

Let congress announce to the nation the objects for which this war shall be further protracted, and public suspense and public inquietude will no longer remain. - If it is to be a war of conquest of all, or any part of Mexico, let the people know it, and they will be no longer agitated by a dark and uncertain future. But although I might of forborne to express any opinion whatever as to purposes and objects for which the war should be continued, I have not thought proper to conceal my opinions, whether worth anything or not, from the public examination. Accordingly I have stated

6th. That it seems to me that it is the duty of our county as well as the score of moderation and to magnanimity, as to the view of avoiding discord and discontent at home, to abstain from seeking to conquer and annex to the United States, Mexico or any part of it; and especially to disabuse the public mind in any corridor of the Union of the impression, if it any where exist, that a desire for conquest is cherished for the purpose of propagating and extending slavery.

I have embodied, Mr. President and fellow citizens, the sentiments and opinions which I have endeavored to explain and enforce in a series of resolutions, which I beg now to submit to your consideration and judgment.

After reading the resolutions and handing them to the secretary, Mr. Clay concluded by apologizing for the length of time which he had trespassed upon the meeting, and thanking the ladies and gentlemen most cordially, for the honor done him by their attendance on that occasion and the profound attention with which they had listened to him.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR. - The speech was often interrupted by bursts of applause, and both at its commencement and conclusion, there was tremendous cheering. [RLLW]
Sir: For the information of the general-in-chief of the United States army, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my division, and of those of other troops which came under my command on the 19th and 20th instant.

Agreeably to instructions from Gen. Scott, I left my train of wagons at San Augustin on the morning of the 19th, and proceeded with my division to cross the mountain route previously reconnoitered by Captain Lee, of the engineers, and cover a working party under the orders of Major General Pillow. Having proceeded about two miles, the enemy was discovered at the main roads to the city of Mexico, (and some nine miles from it,) distant one mile, in a naturally strong position made still more by breastworks which commanded the approach in every direction. Captain McLellan, of the topographical engineers, and Lieut. McClellan, of the engineer proper, were sent in advance to reconnoitre, with a view of placing our batteries. They were soon stopped by one of the enemy's pickets, and were compelled to return, each having had his horse shot. The rifle regiment, commanded by Major Loring, was then ordered forward as skirmishers to clear the ground. This duty was performed handsomely and with dispatch. Having driven in the enemy's pickets, to within 300 yards of his works, Capt. Magruder's battery and the mountain howitzer and rocket battery commanded by Lieut. Callender, of the ordnance, were placed in position by Capt. Lee, of the engineers.

These batteries at my disposal by the kindness of Major General Pillow, by whose magnanimity (he being my senior present) I had the control of my reinforcements, and every facility from his division, which I required. So soon as our batteries were established, the enemy opened a most destructive fire from several of his large guns. The connoémading was kept up on both sides for several hours, until compelled by loss of officers, men, and crippled pieces, our batteries were placed for the time under shelter. In this affair the very gallant and much lamented Lieut. J.P. Johnstone, of Magruder's battery, was mortally wounded; and Lieut. Callender, of the howitzer and rocket battery, severely wounded. The coolness and determination evinced by the officers and men while under this hot fire, gave sure indication of the result of the coming conflict, when all my command would get in position. General Smith's brigade was ordered to proceed in the direction of our batteries and Riley's, by inclining to the right, to get a position, if possible, in the enemy's rear. The route he was compelled to take was most difficult and tedious, passing over volcanic rocks and crossing large fissures barely narrow enough to permit the men to get over by leaping. - Accompanied by Lieut. Tower of the engineers, this brigade finally reached the main road and got in position in rear of the enemy (ten or twelve thousand) was discovered coming from the direction of the city, and closing on Riley's rear. At the same time from the field work at Contreras came out two or three thousand men on the road which the brigade had crossed, entirely cutting off Riley's from Smith's brigade. - Notwithstanding the very great disparity in numbers in favor of the enemy, this fine brigade kept its ground, occasionally driving from its vicinity, with loss, bodies of the enemy who had rashness enough to approach within musket range.

During this state of affairs, Smith's brigade was ordered to form a junction with Riley's, while Gen. Pierce's brigade occupied the left of the trail, and remained as a support to the batteries. Much credit is due to Col. Ransom, by whose untiring exertions an zeal the 9th and 12th infantry were placed in position near the batteries late in the night of the 19th. Late in the evening the two brigades joined near the road - Riley having manoeuvred in the face of the enemy so as to rejoin Smith's. Still later - Shields's and Cadwallader's brigades formed a junction with any division, then under the immediate command of General Smith. I being unable from a lame foot, to follow the route taken by my troops, returned to the vicinity of Taylor's battery, where I passed the night. General Smith made his arrangements to attack the enemy's works the next morning.

For the particulars of this affair I would respectfully refer the general-in-chief to the reports of Gen. Smith and Colonel Riley, to whom, and to the other officers engaged, is due all the credit that attaches - I was unable, for the reason given above, to come up to my division till the affair was over, and the road opened for my horse. In all the recommendations from brigade and regimental commanders I fully concur; and in addition, for gallant services on the 19th, would present the names of Capt. McLellan, topographical engineers, Lieutenants Beauregard, Tower, G.W. Smith, G.B. McClellan, Stevens and Foster, of the engineers, proper, (the last named officer was particularly active in the management of one of Captain Magruder's pieces after the lamented Johnstone lost his leg,) Magruder, Lieut. Jackson, Lieuts. Callender and Reno, serving with their respective batteries. Lieut. G. B. McClellan, after Lieut. Callender was wounded, took charge of and managed the howitzer battery (Lieut. Reno being detached with the rockets) with judgment and success, until it became so disabled as to require shelter. For Lieut. McClelland's efficiency and gallantry to this affair, I present his name for the favorable consideration of the general-in-chief.
The medical officers of the division, always ready to administer to the comfort of the sick and wounded, were particularly active on this occasion. With no conveniences for themselves, and but little shelter for the wounded, this admirable corps of officers spent the entire night exposed to the pitiless storm, in dressing the wounded and in alleviating their sufferings. I cannot do less than give their names a place in this report: Surgeons C. S. Tripler, B. Randall, H. H. Siemer, C. C. Kerney, and ---- Hammond, make up the number. My immediate staff --- Lieutenant Brooks, A. A. A. G., Lieutenant McDonald, A. D. C., Captain Allen, quartermaster, and Lieutenants Grafton, ordnance officer, and Sykes, A. C. S. to the division, were active and efficient in conveying orders, and, when necessary, in giving directions.

Having secured the prisoners and captured property at Contreras, [entrenched camp.] the 4th artillery, with other troops, was left as a guard, and to provide for the wounded and bury the dead. Pursuing a small retreating force through the villages of San Angel and Santa Catarina, giving them occasionally a running fire until we arrived in front o Churubusco, where the enemy were in strongly fortified position, with seven pieces of cannon and several thousand bayonets, a large body of lancers guarding the approach to the right of their work, which was incomplete, I came to a halt; by order of the general-in-chief, for the purposes of having a reconnaissance made. Lieut. Stevens, of the engineers, was sent forward to look at the enemy's position, supported by the company of sappers and miners. He reported a good position for Taylor's battery towards the left of the work, from which it was practicable to drive from the roof and walls of the church such of the enemy as, from their elevated position, could annoy my foot troops destined to storm the work surrounding the church.

The battery was accordingly ordered. It opened with great spirit, and remained under a most galling and destructive fire of grape, round shot, shell, and musketry for an hour and a half; by which time, having accomplished the desired object, it was withdrawn, much crippled in officers, men and horses. - In the meantime, Smith's brigade was ordered in the same direction the battery took, immediately in front of the work, and Riley's farther to the left, with a view of turning and gaining entrance to the open portion of the entrenchments on the enemy's right. After an uninterrupted and severe fire on both sides for two hours, my troops entered the work. All the regiments were close at hand, and shared equally in the dangers and honors of the day. Gen. Rincon, the commander of the place, and two other general officers, together with several others of rank, in all numbering 104, and 1155 non-commissioned officers and privates, prisoners of war, seven pieces of cannon, and a large number of small arms, and a great amount of ammunition of all kinds, together with 2655 prisoners of war.

To Captain Lee, of the engineers, I have again the pleasure of tendering my thanks for the exceedingly valuable services rendered throughout the whole of these operations; and to Lieut. G. W. Smith, of the engineers, who commanded the company of sappers and miners, I am under many obligations for his services on this and other occasions. Whenever his legitimate duties with the pick and spade were performed, he always solicited permission to join in the advance of the storming party with his muskets, to which position his gallantry, and that of his officers and men, was conspicuously displayed at Contreras as well as Cerro Gordo. His name I also present to the commanding general for discretion.

Finally, to Brevet Brigadier General Smith and Brevet Colonel Riley all the praise I can bestow is entitled, for their cordial and valuable support to me on all occasions and in every emergency. Their names, already conspicuous in the present campaign, have been rendered doubly so during the two recent battles.

My effective force on the morning of the 20th was one hundred and eleven officers and twenty-five hundred and thirty non commissioned officers and privates, and of the number were killed and wounded twenty-one officers, two hundred and forty-five men, killed, wounded and missing.

For more minute information, I will refer you to the accompanying reports of brigade and regimental commanders. A list of the killed and wounded, and missing, I have the honor to present with this report.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D.E. TWIGGS,

REPORT OF GENERAL QUITMAN

Headquarters Volunteer Division,
San Augustin, August 26 1847

SIR:--I have the honor to enclose the report of Brig. Gen. Shields of the operations of that portion of my division which was actively engaged in the recent battles before the city of Mexico.

Having been ordered by the general-in-chief to remain at this point in reserve with the remainder of my division, consisting of the 2d Pennsylvania regiment, under command of Col. Roberts, the battalion of marines, under Lieut. Col. Watson, Captain Steptoe’s battery, and Captain Gaither’s troop of dragons, I have nothing to add, the enclosed report of Brig. Gen. Shields, except the expression of my unqualified admiration of the distinguished conduct of that gallant officer, and my approbation of the good conduct and gallantry of the portion of my division which had the good fortune to be actively engaged under his command.

The troops which remained at this place in reserve, diligently performed the burdensome duties which fell to their lot during and after the sever conflicts which took place before the city. Col. Roberts, 2d Pennsylvania regiment, Lieut. Col. Watson, of the marines, and Captains Steptoe and Gaither assiduously shared the labors and cares which devolved upon me. My thanks are due to 1st Lieut. Lovell, acting assistant adjutant general, and Lieut. Wilcox, my aid, for their able and active performance of their duties. I also take this opportunity of noticing the energy, activity, and zeal with which Capt. Daniels, the division quartermaster, has performed his duties, both on the march and while in this position.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. QUITMAN, Major Gen.
Commanding volunteer divis.

NNR 73.201-202 Nov. 27, 1847 Gen. James Shields' report on operations of August 20

REPORT OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

Headquarters 1st Brigade Vol. Division,
San Augustin, Mexico, August 24, 1847.

Sir: -- On the 19th instant, about three o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the orders of the general commanding this division, I marched from this place with the New York and South Carolina regiments of volunteers towards the battle-field of Contreras. On reporting to the commander-in-chief, who occupied on my arrival a position which overlooked the field, he described to me in a few words, the position of the contending forces, pointed out the route of my command, and briefly instructed me as to the dispositions which would render my force the most serviceable.

Directing my march upon this village near Contreras, the troops had to pass over ground covered with rocks and crags, and filled with chasms, which rendered the road almost impassable. A deep ragged ravine, along the bed of which rolled a rapid stream, was passed after dark, with great diliouity and exertion; and rest to the wearied troops after crossing. I directed them to lie upon their arms until midnight. While occupying this position, two strong pickets, thrown out by my orders, discovered, fired upon and drove back a body of Mexican infantry moving towards the city. I have since learned that an attempt had in like manner been made by the enemy to pass the position on the main road occupied by the 1st regiment of artillery, and with a like want of success. About midnight I again resumed the march, and joined Brig. Gen. Smith in the village already referred to.

Gen. Smith, previous to my arrival, had made the most judictous of arrangements for turning and surprising the Mexican position at daybreak, and with which I could not wish to interfere. This cast upon my command the necessity of holding the position to be evacuated by General S., and which was threatened by the enemy's artillery and infantry on the right, and a large force of his cavalry on the left. - About daybreak the enemy opened a brisk fire of grape and round shot upon the church and village in which my brigade was posted, as also upon a part of our own troops displayed to divert him on his right and front - evidently unaware of the movement in progress to turn his position left and rear. - This continued until Col. Riley's bride opened its fire from the rear, which was delivered with such terrible effect, that the whole Mexican force was thrown into utmost consternation.

At this juncture, I ordered the two regiments of my command to throw themselves on the main road, by which the enemy must retire, to intercept and cut off his retreat; and, although officers and men had suffered severely during the march of the night, and from exposure without shelter or cover to the incessant rain until daybreak, this movement was executed in good order, and with rapidity. The Palmetto regiment, crossing a deep ravine, deployed on both sides of the road, and opened a most destructive fire upon the mingled masses of infantry and cavalry; and the New York regiment, brought into line lower down, and on the road side, delivered its fire with a like effect. At this point many of the enemy were killed add wounded, some 365 captured, of which 25 were officers, and amongst the latter was General Nicholas Mendoza.

In the meanwhile the enemy's cavalry, about 3000 strong, which had been threatening our position during the morning, moved down towards us in good order, and as if to attack. I immediately recalled the infantry, to place them in position to meet the threatened movement; but soon the cavalry changed direction and retreated towards the capital. I now received an order from Gen. Twiggs to advance by the main road towards Mexico; and having posted Capt. Marshal's company of S. Carolina volunteers, and Captain Taylor's New York volunteers in charge of the prisoners and wounded, I moved off with the remainder of my force, and joined the positions of the 2d and 3d divisions already en route on the main road. On this march we were joined by the general in chief, who assumed command of the whole, and the march continued uninterrupted until we arrived before Churubusco. Here the enemy was found strongly fortified, and posted with his main force - probably 25,000.

The engagement was commenced by the 2d division under Twiggs, soon joined by the first under Gen. Worth, and was becoming general, when I was detached by the commander-in-chief, with my two regiments and Pierce's brigade - the 9th, 12th, and 15th - and with the mountain howitzer battery, and ordered to gain position if possible, to attack the enemy's fear, and intercept his retreat.

Leaving Coyoacan by a left hand road and advancing about a mile upon it, I moved thence with my command toward the right, through a heavy cornfield, and gained an open but swampy field, in which is situated the hacienda de los Portales. On the edge of this field, beyond the hacienda, I discovered the road by which the enemy must retire from Churubusco, and found his reserve of about 4,000 infantry already occupied it, just in rear of the town. As my command arrived, I established the right upon a point recommended by Capt. Lee, engineer officer, to whose skill and judgment I had the utmost confidence, and commenced a movement to the left, to flank the enemy on his right, and throw my troops between him and the city; but finding his right supported by a heavy body of cavalry of some 3,000 strong, and seeing, too, that with his infantry he answered to my movements by a corresponding one towards his right, I ordered my command to form and deploy ground later than I could, owing to the heavy mud and swamp through which I had to operate, I withdrew the men to the cover of the hacienda, and determined to attack him upon his front. I selected the Palmetto regiment as the base of my line, and this gallant regiment moved forward firmly and rapidly under a fire of musketry as terrible, perhaps, as any which soldiers have ever faced; the New York, 12th, and 15th, deployed gallantly on the right, and the 9th on the left, and the whole advanced, spending their fire as they came up, and moving steadily forward the enemy began to waver, and when my order to charge was given, the men rushed upon ... his broken ranks. As we reached the road, the advance of Worth's command appeared, driving the enemy from his stronghold of Churubusco. I took command of the front, and continued in pursuit until passed by Harney with his cavalry, who followed the routed foe into the very gates of the city.

In this terrible battle, in which a strongly fortified enemy fought behind his works under the walls of his capital, ... loss is necessarily severe. The loss, I regret to say, has fallen most severely on my command. In the two regiments of my own brigade, numbering about 600 in the fight, the loss is reported 240 m killed and wounded.

In this last engagement my command captured 380 prisoners, including 6 officers. Of this number 42 had deserted from the American army during the war, and at their head was found the notorious O'Reilly, who had fought against troops at Monterey and elsewhere. A .... Report of the loss, as also of the prisoners captured by the command, accompanies this report.

Pierce's brigade, under my command in this action, lost a considerable number in killed and wounded. - Amongst the latter, the gallant Col. Morgah of the 15th. This command having rejoined its division, immediately after the action, I have, as yet, received no official report of its loss.

In closing this report I beg to offer my thanks to the many gallant officers of my command for their zealous and fearless support during the conflict. To Col. Burnett and Lieut. Col. Baxter, of the N. York volunteers; to Lieut. Colonel Dickinson and Major Gladden, South Carolina volunteers; as also to many of their gallant subordinates, every praise is due. - Col. Burnett was severely wounded at the head of his regiment; and Lieut. Col. Dickinson also severely wounded whilst in command of his regiment, and while bearing gallantly forward the colors of his corps. My thanks are due to the medical staff of the command - Doctors Halstead and McKeebin, of the New York, and Doctors Clark and Blann of the South Carolina regiments; as also to Doctor Swift, U. States Army, for their devoted attention to the wounded.

It affords me pleasure, and I but perform my duty, too, in acknowledging my great obligations to Capt. R. E. Lee, engineer corps; as also to my particular staff, Capt. F. N. Page, A. A. G. Lieut. R. P. Hammond, 3d artillery, aid de camp; and Lieut. G. T. M. Davis of Illinois, acting as aid, for their gallant services and fearless exposure in encouraging the troops, and conveying my orders during the different engagements. Lieut. Reno, commanding howitzer batter, deserves great credit for the handsome manner in which he brought his guns into action, and continued to serve them. I beg respectfully, through the general or division, to ask for these gentlemen the favorable notice of the commander in chief, and to commend them to the president. Lieut. Shubrick, of the navy, who accompanied me, attached himself to the Palmetto regiment of his native state, and fought in its ranks, and is spoken of handsomely in the report of its commander.

While thus enjoying the pleasure of bestowing my commendation upon the living, I turn with feelings of sorrow, though with pride, to recollect the gallant dead. Lieutenants Adams and Williams, of the S. Carolina regiment, and Lieutenant Chandler of the New York regiment, are of those who gallantly fell. Yielding their lives to achieve this glorious victory, they have won a soldier's fame with a soldier's death.

The noble and gallant colonel of the S. Carolina regiment, P. M. Butler, had risen from his sick bed to share the hardships of the field and the dangers of the combat with his devoted regiment. He survived the conflict of the morning to lead his command where victory again awaited it. Although wounded himself, and having lost his horse, shot under him, he still continued to press onwards near the colors of his regiment, until the fatal ball terminated his life.

A gallant soldier in his youth, he has won in his death, upon the field of battle, fame for himself and his regiment, and added another name to the roll of Carolina's departed heroes.

I am, very respectfully, your obd't serv't,

JAS SHIELDS,

To Lieut. M. Lovell, 4th art., A. A. A. G.

[RRLLW]

NNR 73.202 Nov. 27, 1847 Col. William Selby Harney's report on his operations at Mexico

Report of Colonel Harney.

Headquarters, Cavalry Brigade, Tocubaya, Mexico, August 24, 1847.

Sir - I have the honor to present the following report of the operations of the cavalry brigade under my command during the battle of Mexico.

The cavalry force being necessarily weakened by detachments to the different divisions on the army, I found myself, on the morning of the 19th, in the immediate command of nine companies only, consisting of six companies of the 2d dragoons, one company of mounted riflemen, and two companies of mounted volunteers. With this force I was ordered by the general in chief to report to Brigadier Gen. Twiggs, who was at this time covering Major General Pillow's division in an effort to make a road through the ridge of lava which forms the pass of San Antonio. Owing to the nature of the ground, I was compelled to halt within range of the enemy's shells, and to remain in this position for several hours - an idle spectator of the action which ensued. After night I returned with my command to San Augustin, and remained there until the enemy's position at Contreras was carried on the morning of the 20th.

As soon as the road was ascertained to be opened and practicable for cavalry, I was directed by the general in chief to proceed with two squadrons and Capt. McKinstry's company of volunteers to the field of battle, and to take charge of the prisoners which had been captured. While in the execution of this order, I received instructions from the general in chief to leave one squadron in charge of the prisoners, and to report to him in person with the other three companies. Captain Blake, with his squadron, was directed to perform this duty; while Maj. Sumner and myself, with Captain Kerr's squadron and Captain McKinstry's company of volunteers, joined the commanding general near the field of Churubusco, just after the engagement at the palace had commenced.

The reports of Major Sumner, commanding 1st battalion, and Lieut. Col. Moore, commanding 2nd battalion, which I have the honor to forward here with, will show in what manner the other troops and squadrons of my command were employed. The three troops of horse brought by me on the field, being ordered away in different directions, Major Sumner and myself soon found ourselves without commands. I then employed myself with my staff in rallying fugitives and encouraging our troops on the left of the main road. Major Sumney, towards the close of the engagement, was placed by the general in chief in charge of the last reserve, consisting of the rifle regiment and one company of horse, and was ordered to support the left. This force was moving rapidly to take its position in line of battle, when the enemy broke and fled to the city. At this moment perceiving the enemy were retreating in disorder on one of the causeways leading to the city of Mexico, I collected all of the cavalry within my reach, consisting of parts of Capt. Ker's company 2d dragoons, and Capt. McReynold's and Duperu's companies of the 3d dragoons, and pursued them vigorously until we were halted by the discharge of the batteries at their gates.

Many of the enemy were overtaken in the pursuit, and cut down by our sabres. I cannot speak in terms too complimentary to the manner in which this charge was executed. My only difficulty was in restraining the impetuosity of my men and officers, who seemed to vie with each other who should be foremost in the pursuit. Captain Kearney gallantly led his squadron into the very entrenchments of the enemy, and had the misfortune to lose an arm from grapeshot fired from a gun at one of the gates of the capital. Capt. McReynolds and Lieut. Graham were also wounded and Lieut. Ewell had two horses shot under him.

Great praise is due to Maj. Sumner, commanding 1st battalion, for his zeal, energy and promptitude, and for the gallant manner in which he led up the last reserve of the general in chief. It is much to be regretted that the 2d battalion, under the command of Lieut. Col. Moore, was so cut up by detachment as to materially weaken its efficiency, and to impair the usefulness of the officer, who was always at the post of danger and anxious to participate in the conflict. My warmest thanks are due to my brigade stall, consisting of Captain Wood, A Q M., Lieut. Steele, A. A. G., and Lieut. May, my aid-de-camp, who were actively employed on the morning of the 20th rallying our men, and who exhibited the utmost coolness and bravery under a heavy fire of the enemy. The two last named officers were foremost in the pursuit, and Lieut. Steele cut down three of the enemy with his own sabre.

In conclusion, I beg leave to state that the dragoons, from the commencement of the march from Puebla, have been engaged on the most active and laborious service. These duties have been the most arduous in consequence of the small force of cavalry, compared with the other arms of service. Small parties being constantly engaged in reconnoitering and on picket guards, the utmost vigilance and precaution have been required to prevent surprise and disaster.

The gallant Captain Thornton, while reconnoitering the enemy near San Antonio on the 18th instant, was shot through the body by a cannon shot and instantly killed. His death is much to be regretted. On the 20th, although I had but lost companies of my brigade with me on the field, the remainder were actively employed in the performance of important and indispensable duties. Capt. Hardee, while watching the enemy with his company near San Augustin, was attacked by guerrillas; but the enemy was promptly and handsomely repulsed, and a number of their horses, with arms and accoutrements, captured.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. S. HARNEY, Col. comd'g cavalry brigade.

[LLLW]

only maintain our position, which was of the utmost importance to the commanding general, had now in front, and on our left flank, eighteen thousand Mexicans with between twenty five enemy's work at Contreras, and thought it practicable for infantry though very difficult. We
At this time Lieut. Tower reported that he had been at the ravine towards the rear of the of Encelda, whose church was visible among the trees. - As we emerged from the rocks we saw an immense number of troops, cavalry and infantry, approaching from Mexico and forming on the slope on the opposite side of the village.

We crossed two small streams at the bottom of deep and difficult gullies, and found some of our troops in the village, they proving to be four regiments, chiefly of Gen. Pillow's division, and under command of Gen. Cadwallader, who immediately reported to me. The village lay entirely on the other side of the main road, and a small stream ran between them at the bottom of the ravine. On the road, and between it and the stream, was a garden and house surrounded by a high and tolerably strong stone wall. The village was intersected by narrow lanes lying between high dikes enclosing gardens full of trees and shrubbery - the lanes affording cover, the trees concealment for the men. In the center stood an old stone church. I drew Gen. Cadwallader's force up in the outer edge of the village, facing the enemy - placing the 3d infantry and rifles in column by company, left in front, on the right flank - occupied the church with Lieut. Smith's engineer company and Captain Irwin's company of the 11th regiment - placing Maj. Dimick's regiment in the garden on the road, to secure that avenue and our rear.

The enemy was now formed opposite to us in two lines - the infantry in front, and cavalry in the rear - about ten thousand strong. It was now after sunset when Colonel Riley's brigade arrived. It had crossed and gone up towards Contreras, [entrenched camp,] and driven off strong parties of the enemy. I now ordered an attack on the enemy's right, intending to attack in two columns - Col. Riley's on our left, and Gen. Cadwallader's on the right of the former - retired in echelon; but before the troops could be disengaged from the thickets, (the officers being without horses,) it was already so dark that the enemy's line could not be seen, and the order to attack was countermanded. Gen. Cadwallader took position again in the outer edge of the village; Riley's brigade parallel to it in a long line inside; the rifles under Major Loring on order to attack was countermanded. Gen. Cadwallader took position again in the outer edge of the works at Contreras, (the entrenched camp,) and by turning their rear before day; and Captain Lee, of the engineers, offered to return to Gen. Scott (a most difficult task) and inform him of our position, and that I would march out by 3 o'clock A. M., so that any diversion that he could make in our favor from that side might be prepared accordingly. The officers commanding brigades were informed of the plan and order of attack and directed to have their commands formed, and the heads resting on the path by which we were to march out by 2 ½ A. M.

I was at a loss of how to secure our rear; for it the enemy took possession of the village, he would not only secure the retreat of his force at Contreras, [his entrenchments,] but would greatly embarrass us; and I was not strong enough to detach largely for that purpose. At this juncture Gen. Shields' aid arrived and reported that the general was near, and on the other side of the ravine, with the South Carolina and New York volunteers. These two regiments were directed to hold Eucelda [the village] and cut off the the retreat of the troops from Contreras, [the camp,] or take his large reserve in flank, if it changed front to the right to attack us towards Contreras, [the camp]. At precisely 3 o'clock in the morning of the 20th, the troops commenced their march. It had rained all night, and the men had lain in the mud, without fire, and suffering from cold. It rained now, and was so dark that an object six feet off could not be seen. The men were ordered to keep within touch of each other, so that the rear could not go astray.

Lieut. Lower of the engineers, with Lieutenant Brooks, acting assistant adjutant general of the 2d division, now acting in my staff, had, during the night, again reconnoitered the pass, to assure the practicability of the march. Lieut. Tower accompanied the head of the column, to lead it, and Lieut. Beauregard, engineers went with me at the head of Gen. Cadwallader's brigade. Col. Riley's brigade led, Gen. Cadwallader's brigade was to follow, and Major Dimick, with my own brigade, at the head of which was Lieut. G. W. Smith, engineer company, closed the rear. The path was narrow, full or rocks and mud, and so difficult was the march that it was day break before the head of Cadwallader's brigade got out of the village, where the path descends to the ravine; and as the march was by the flank, the command was stretched out to thrice its length. - Having followed up the ravine to a point where it seemed possible to get at the rear of the work, the head was halted and the rear closed up; many loads that were wet were drawn, and Riley formed two columns by divisions.

He thus advanced farther up the ravine, turning to the left, and rising over the bank, stood fronting the rear of the work, but still sheltered from its fire by a slight acclivity before him. Having re-formed his ranks he ascended the top of the hill, and was in full view of the enemy, who immediately opened a warm fire, not only from the work, but on his right flank. Throwing out his two first divisions as skirmishers, he rushed down the slope to the work. The engineer company and rifles had been thrown across the intervening ravine, under the brow of the slope, and from that position swept it in front of his column, and then, inclining towards their company and rifles had been thrown across the intervening ravine, under the brow of the slope, and from that position swept it in front of his column, and then, inclining towards their left, joined in the attack on the troops outside of the left flank of the fort. In the meantime, Gen. Cadwallader followed the route taken by Riley, and, forming his columns as the troops came up, moved on to his (Riley's) support. The 1st brigade had been ordered to follow the same route; but, while it was still marching in that direction by its right flank, up the ravine, and nearly opposite the work, seeing a large body of the enemy on its flank, I ordered Maj. Dimick to face the brigade to the left, and, advancing in line, attack the force in flank.

This was done in the finest style, and the 1st artillery and 3d infantry mounted the bank of the ravine, rushing down the next and up its opposite bank, met the enemy outside of the work just as Riley's brigade poured into it, and the whole giving way. - Cavalry formed in line for the charge, yielding to the bayonets of our foot, the rout was complete, while Riley's brigade cleared the work and planted their colors on it. The two first pieces captured, which fell into the hands of the 4th artillery, proved to be the pieces lost (but without loss of honor) by a company of that very regiment at Buena Vista. Leaving a force to collect and guard the captured ordnance, the pursuit continued down the road.

This, it will be recollected, passed not more than half a mile off the garden and house occupied by a part of Gen. Shields' brigade, placed there to intercept the retreat of the enemy. This skilful and gallant officer, when we marched, had spread his men over the line we had occupied, and directed them to make fired toward daylight, as though preparing their breakfast. The enemy in front had, during the night, placed batteries along their line, and in the morning moved detachments forward to take in flank the attack he saw we were meditating the night before, which he was preparing to meet - supposing from the indications he found, that we were still in force in the village. When, after daylight, he saw a column moving on Contreras, [the entrenched camp,] and already prepared to turn it, he must have supposed we had been strongly reinforced: for his movements to and fro indicated great perplexity. His doubts were soon resolved, however, by the loss of Contreras, [the camp,] and he immediately commenced a hasty retreat along the top of the hill, inclining towards the San Angel road.

Shields' force (500 or 600 men) having, under his skilful direction, thus disposed of one enemy, he turned to the other, who, in the flight, found themselves intercepted at the garden, and under the sure fire of the S. Carolina regiment, and broke away over the opposite fields, and, taking shelter in the ditches and ravines, escaped to the rocks. Two squadrons of cavalry, either by chance or a wise design, in a narrow part of the road between the wall and dike, laid down their arms, and so choked by the way, that the pursuit was interrupted for upwards of 20 minutes; which sufficed (we having no cavalry) for the safety of many of the fugitives. A large body escaped upwards towards the mountains. I did not pursue them, being entirely out of our Accounts from Mexican officers, intercepted since the battle, inform us that there were seven thousand in and about Contreras, (the entrenched camp,) commanded by General Valencia, and upwards of twelve thousand in front of Encelda, (or hamlet of Contreras,) in reserve, commanded by Gen'l Santa Anna. We killed seven hundred and took fifteen hundred prisoners, among them several generals. - We captured 22 pieces of brass ordnance, viz: 4 Spanish 16-pounders, 4 eight inch howitzers, 2 5 ½ inch howitzers, 6 6-pounders, and 6 smaller pieces, with a large amount of shells and ammunition. We also took 700 pack mules and many horses, and an immense number of small arms, which we destroyed. After directing the prisoners and property to be collected, I directed the pursuit to be contained, and was forming the column when General Twigg arrived. He immediately ordered the most vigorous pursuit, and we moved forwards. As we approached San Angel, the rifles were again thrown forward as skirmishers, and entered the town at the heels of the enemy's lancers, capturing an ammunition wagon.

Here Gen. Pillow assumed command, and at Coyoacan the commander in chief came up. The first brigade was sent forward with the rest of the division towards Churubusco; the rifles were detached to the right, to cover a reconnoissence. Lieut. Stephens of the engineers, covered by Lieut. Smith's engineer company, went forward to reconnoitre the church of Churubusco, and reported a 1-gun battery across the road, which could be turned by its left. - The 1st artillery was directed to be detached for that purpose, and marched in that direction. A heavy fire opening there, I was ordered up with the 3d infantry, and shortly after Taylor's battery was placed in position, fronting the buildings about the church, the 3d infantry supporting it. At this time the tremendous fire from the neighborhood of the church showed clearly, not only that there was a strong force stationed there, but that there was also a more considerable work than what was at first supposed; but being all surrounded by very high corn, its form could not be discovered. It afterwards proved that the place was regularly fortified. The church buildings formed a large square; the lower front towards us was chiefly a wall scaffolded for infantry. It rose about 60 feet above the street, and was strengthened on the sides and corners by attached buildings. It was terminated by the corner of a large steeple on its right flank, also filled with men.

In front of the first was a curtain, connecting two salient angles which flanked it, and were continued back to the side walls of the church. It was garrisoned by about 2,000 men, and mounted 7 pieces. - What was supposed to be the 1-gun battery, was the right salient angle which enfiled the road from Coyoacan; so that when the 1st artillery attempted to turn it, mounted 7 pieces. - What was supposed to be the 1-gun battery, was the right salient angle continued back to the side walls of the church. It was garrisoned by about 2,000 men, and an immense number of small arms, which we destroyed. After directing the prisoners and property to be collected, I directed the pursuit to be contained, and was forming the column when General Twigg arrived. He immediately ordered the most vigorous pursuit, and we moved forwards. As we approached San Angel, the rifles were again thrown forward as skirmishers, and entered the town at the heels of the enemy's lancers, capturing an ammunition wagon.

In the meantime Taylor's battery had continued its fire uninterrupted by the severest shower of grape, canister, musketry, round shot, and shell, within short musket range, that was ever witnessed. The conduct of Capt. Taylor, Lieut. French, and the men who remained unhurt, was the admiration of all who witnessed it. The pieces were served as though on drill, while two of the officers - Lieuts. Martin and Boynton, and twenty men wounded, and fifteen horses crippled, laid around, and testified to the danger of their position. Hearing now the fire from the other corps, and finding that of the work to be less steady, I directed Captain Alexander (commanding 3d infantry) to advance to the position indicated and commence his work. After clearing the ramparts partially of their men, the 3d rushed over the bastion, led by Captain J. M. Smith and Lieutenant Shepherd, and their companies, and a part of the 1st artillery, over the curtain, when the garrison, and had gone up into the gallery of the front house, with General Rincon, from which he was displaying the colors of his regiment, a staff officer from another division who had seen the white flag still flying rode into the work to receive the surrender which had been made some time before to Capt. Alexander. Seven pieces of brass cannon, much ammunition and small arms, the prisoners before mentioned, and an important position were the fruits of this victory. I should have mentioned before that Capt. Craig had in the morning rejoined this regiment with the three companies of riflemen who had been left in the pedregal, (field of rocks and lava,) had also joined the regiment.

The troops in the actions of the pedregal, on the afternoon of the 19th, and at Contreras and Churubusco on the 20th, distinguished themselves far beyond my capacity to do them justice. The difficulties they overcame - opposed by the enemy to be insuperable - the hardships they endured, and the fatigue they suffered, contrasted with the manner in which they did their work, raises their character as soldiers highly towards perfection.

Brig. Gen. Cadwallader [in the morning] brought his corps up from his intricate bivouac in a good order, formed the head of the column to support Riley's, and led it forward in the most gallant style under the fire directed at the latter. The 1st brigade was conducted by Maj.
Dimick, who charged in line with it on the enemy's left, driving before the force formed there outside of the works, and putting to rout a far superior force, displaying the skill of the commander as well as the bravery of the soldier. - But the opportunity afforded by his position to Col. Riley was seized by that gallant veteran with all the skill and energy for which he is distinguished. The charge of his noble brigade down the slope, in full view of friend and foe, unchecked even for a moment, until he had planted all his colors upon their farthest works, was a spectacle that animated the army to the boldest deeds.

Majors Gardnes and Brown, 4th artillery, at the head of their regiment, setting an example of their own courage, carried the part of the work before, and Captain Drum, of that corps, had the good fortune to recover the trophies of Buena Vista. Col. Pryptom and Maj. Bainbridge with the 7th infantry, as that veteran regiment deserves to be led; and Captain Morris in command of the 2d infantry, brought it up to share equally with the others in the honors of the successful assault. Capt. Alexander's good conduct brought his regiment up most effectively. Major Loring, detached to Col. Riley's left showed not only a perfect knowledge of the value of his arm, but the courage and activity necessary to make it effective. Lieutenant G. W. Smith, in command of the engineer company, and Lieutenant M'Clellan, his subaltern, distinguished themselves throughout the whole of the three actions. Nothing seemed to them too bold to be undertaken, or too difficult to be executed; and their services as engineers were as valuable as those they rendered in battle at the head of their gallant men. Lieutenant Foster, being detached from his company during the action at Contreras, did not fall under my notice; but in the actions on the 19th, at Churubusco, he was equally conspicuous for his gallantry. In adverting to the conduct of the staff, I wish to record particularly my admiration of the conduct of Capt. Lee, of the engineers.

His reconnaissances, though pushed far beyond the bounds of prudence, were conducted with so much skill, that its fruits were of the utmost value - the soundness of his judgment and personal daring being equally conspicuous. Lieutenants Beauregard and Tower, of the same corps, rendered me the most important services in examining the ground, and displayed throughout the greatest personal gallantry. To the latter I am indebted for the knowledge of the route by which it was practicable to turn the enemy's works. The accident which separated the different parts of the division on the evening of the 19th, left its acting assistant adjutant general, Lieut. W. P. Brooks, with Col. Riley's brigade, and on its joining me he offered his services on my staff. I owe him my thanks for the very efficient aid he rendered me, and for his indefatigable energy and readiness to encounter any danger or difficulty; his personal courage and coolness were brilliantly displayed in the course of the day. The events of Fort Brown, Monterey, Vera Cruz, and Cerro Gordo, had already afforded to my aide de camp, Lieut. Early Van Dorn, opportunities for calling forth the commendations of his commanding officers.

He has not let pass the present one; but though his gallantry was again shown in a personal conflict with the enemy, it is far from being the highest quality of a soldier that he possesses. The names of officers who distinguished themselves in the corps of Gens. Cadwallader and Shields, will no doubt be found in the reports of those generals of the headquarters of divisions to which they properly belong. It would be impossible for me to enumerate the acts of all those in the 2d division ('Twiggs') who have entitled themselves to particular mention. I beg leave to make the brigade and regimental reports, which I herewith transmit a part of my own - merely repeating here the names of those officers mentioned therein as peculiarly deserving of praise. - Capt. Wessels and Capt. Canby, A. A. G., and Lieut. Benjamin and Lieut. Hayden, A. D. C., (mentioned in the 3d brigade report); Capts. Sanderson, Bakinstoe, Porter, and Crittenden, Lieut. Van Buren, McLane, Gibbs, and Palmer, and Asst Surgeon Suter, of the regiment of the mounted riflemen; Capts. Winder and Nanman, Lieuts. Brannon, Seymour, and Coppee, and Assistant Surg. H. H. Steiner, at the 1st artillery; Capt. Casey, J. R. Smith and Kingsbury, Lieut. Gardner, Lyons, Jones, Jarvis, Tilden, and Davis of the 2d infantry; Captains Craig, Van Horn and Chandler, Lieuts. Buel and Richardson, and Asst. Surgeon Keeney, of the 3d infantry; Capts. Ross and Paul, and Lieuts. Grant, Tyler and Henry, of the 7th infantry.

But as the battery of the Captain Taylor was at Churubusco, acting immediately under my own eye, and displaying, from its gallant commander down to the lowest noncommissioned officer, a coolness and activity under circumstances of the most extraordinary danger. I ask leave to record here, besides the names of Sergeants Thos. Wilson, Patrick Martin, Joe McGee, Chas. Kullineyes and Corporal M. Bigelow, John Jones, Wm. Barb...ed Captains Capron and Burke, 1st artillery, and Lieut. Hoffman, 1st artillery; and were wounded, Capt. Cr...g and Lieut. Buel, 3d infantry. In the pedregal were wounded, on the 19th, Captains Hathaway. 1st artillery, and Chandler, 3d infantry; Lieut. Collins, 4th artillery, and Tilden, 2d infantry, were wounded. But the victory there, important as it is, was dearly bought by the death of Captain Hanson, 7th infantry. A more perfect soldier never fell on a battle field - kind in all his affections - just in all his acts - pure in his life; and immoveable in his courage, he met the present with the boldness of a man, and the future with the pious confidence of a Christian.

The force present on our side of Contreras, including Gen'l Shields, was about 3,650 men; that of the enemy about the works, 7,000, under Valencia, and in their reserve, 12,000, under the
I transmit herewith a return of the killed and wounded, but leaving out all those wounded at Contreras who were not disabled.

Our loss in killed and wounded there did not exceed sixty.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your ob't servant,

PERSIFOR F. SMITH,
Brevet Brigadier General.

REPORT OF MAJOR GENERAL QUITMAN.

Headquarters of the Volunteer Division, National Palace, Mexico, Sept. 29, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit, for the information of the general-in-chief, a report of the movements and operations of that portion of the army under my command from the afternoon of the 11th instant to the 14th, when our flag was raised on the National Palace of Mexico.

The general-in-chief, having concluded to carry the strong fortress of Chapultepec, and through it advance upon the city, ordered me, on the 11th, to move my division after dark from its position at Coyoacan to Tacubaya. Steptoe's battery and Gaither's troop of horse having been directed to report to Gen. Twiggs, the remainder of the division, consisting of the battalion of marines, New York and South Carolina regiments, under Brig. Gen. Shields, and 2d Pennsylvania regiment, under command of Lieut. Col. Geary, moved during daylight to the village of Piedad, and at night proceeded thence to their position at Tacubaya, where the troops lay upon their arms until daylight.

Two batteries, Nos. 1 and 2 on the map - the former put up by Lieuts. Tower and Smith, of engineers, under direction of Captain Lee, of the same corps, on the road from Tacubaya to Chapultepec, about 800 yards from the fortress, the latter under direction of Capt. Huger, of ordinance, at some distance to the left of the former - had been erected during the night. My division being intended to support these batteries, and to advance to the attack from the direct road from Tacubaya to the fortress, was placed in position near battery No. 1, early on the morning of the 12th, detachments from its left extending to the support of battery No. 2. At 7 o'clock the guns (two 16-pounders and an 8-inch howitzer) were placed in battery No. 1 in position so as to rake the road, sweep the adjoining grounds, and have a direct fire upon the enemy's batteries and the fortress of Chapultepec.

Our fire was then opened and maintained with good effect throughout the day under the direction of that excellent lamented officer, Capt. Drum, of the 4th artillery, zealously aided by Lieutenants Benjamin and Porter, of his company. The fire was briskly returned from the castle with round shots, shell, and grape. During the day I succeeded under cover of our batteries, in making an important reconnaissance of the grounds and works immediately at the base of the castle, a rough sketch of which was made by my aide, Lieut. Lovel, on the ground. This disclosed to us two batteries of the enemy, one on the road in front of us mounting four guns, and the other a flanking work of one gun, capable also of sweeping the low grounds on the left of the road, and between it and the base of the hill.

The supporting party on this reconnaissance was commanded by the late Major Twiggs, of the marines, and sustained during the observation of a brisk fire from the batteries and small arms of the enemy, who, when the party were retiring, came out of the works in large numbers; and, although repeatedly checked by the fire of our troops, continued to advance as the supporting party retired, until they were dispersed, with considerable loss, by several discharges of canister from the guns of Capt. Drums battery, and a well directed fire from the right of the 2d Pennsylvania regiment, posted on the flank of the artery for its support. Our loss in this affair was seven men wounded; but the information gained was of incalculable advantage to the operations of the succeeding day. In the evening, Capt. Drums company was retrieved by Lieutenant Andrews company 3d artillery, by whom a study in well-directed fire was kept up from the battery until the fortress could no longer be seen in the darkness.

During the day, my command was reinforced by a select battalion from Gen. Twiggs division intended as a storming party, consisting of thirteen officers, and two hundred and fifty men and non-commissioned officers and privates, chosen for this service out the rifles, 1st and 4th regiments of artillery, and 2d, 3d, and 77th regiments of infantry - all under the command of Captain Silas Casev, 2d infantry.

Having received instructions from the general - n - chief to prevent, if possible, reinforcements from being thrown into Chapultepec, during the night, Captain Paul, of the 7th infantry, with the detachment of fifty men was directed to establish and advance picket on the road to Chapultepec. During the night a brisk skirmish occurred between the detachment and the advanced posts of the enemy, which resulted in driving back the enemy; but apprehensive that this demonstration was intended to cover the passage of reinforcements into Chapultepec, I ordered Lieut. Andrews to advance a piece of artillery and take the road with several discharges of canister. This was promptly executed; and, during the remainder of the night, there were no appearances of movements in the enemies lines. - During the night, the platforms of battery No. 1 were repaired, under the direction of Lieut. Tower of engineers, who had reported to me for duty, and a new battery of one gun established in advance of No. 1 a

The protection of battery No. 2, which was completed on the morning of the 12th, under direction of Captain Huger, was entrusted to Brig. General Shields. This battery, after the guns had been placed, opened and maintained a steady fire upon the castle, under the skilful direction of that experienced officer, Lieut. Hagner, of ordinance.

At dawn on the morning of the 13th, the batteries again opened upon the castle, which was returned by the enemy with spirit and some execution, disabling for a time the 18-pounder battery No. 1, and killing one of the men at the guns. During the cannonade active preparations were made for the assault upon the castle. Ladders, pick axes, and crows, were placed in the hands of a Pioneer storming party of select men from the volunteer division, under the commands of Capt. Reynolds of the marine corps, to accompany the storming party of 120 men which had been selected from all corps of the same division and placed under the command of Major Twiggs, of the marines. Capt. Drum had again relieved Lieut. Andres at the guns, retaining from the command of the latter Sergeant Davidson and eight to man an 8 pounder which it was intended to carry forward to operate on the enemies batteries in front of us; and, to relieve the command from all danger of attack on our right flank from reinforcements, which might come from the city, that well tried and accomplished officer, Brevet Brigadier General Smith, with his well-disciplined brigade, had reported to me for orders. He was instructed to move in reserve on the right flank of the assaulting column, protect it from skirmishers, or more serious attack in the quarter, and, if possible, on the assault, cross the aqueduct leading to the city, turn the enemy, and cut off his retreat. Those dispositions being made, the whole command, at the signal preconcerted by the general-in-chief, with enthusiasm and full of confidence advanced to the attack. At the base of the hill, constituting a part of the works of the fortress of Chapultepec, and directly across our line of advance, were the strong batteries before described, flanked on the right by some strong buildings, and by a heavy stone wall about fifteen feet high, which extended around the base of the hill towards the west. Within two hundred yards of these batteries were some dilapidated buildings, which afforded a partial cover to our advance. Between these and the wall extended a low meadow, the long grass of which concealed a number of wet ditches by which it was intersected. To this point the command, partially screened, advanced by a flank, the storming parties in front, under a heavy fire from the fortress, the batteries, and breastworks of the enemy. The advance was here halted under the partial cover of the ruins, and upon the arrival of the heads of the South Carolina and New York regiments, respectively.
General Shields was directed to move them obliquely to the left, across the low ground, to the wall at the base of the hill. Encouraged by the gallant general who had led them to victory at Churubusco, and in spite of the obstacles which they had to encounter in wading through several deep ditches, exposed to a severe and galling fire from the enemy, these tried regiments promptly executed the movement, and effected a lodgment at the wall. The same order was given to Lieut. Col. Geary, and executed by his regiment with equal alacrity and success. These dispositions, so necessary to the final assault up on the works, were not made without some loss. In directing the advance, Brig. Gen. Shields was severely wounded in the arm. No persuasions, however, could induce that officer to leave his command, or quit the field. The brave Capt. Van O'Linden, of the New York regiment, was killed at the head of his company. Lieut. Col. Baxter, of the same regiment, a valuable and esteemed officer, while gallantly leading his command, fell mortally wounded near the wall. And Lieut.Cols. Geary, 2d Pennsylvania regiment, was for a time disabled from command by a severe confusion from a spent ball. [RLLW]
Sir: For the information of the general in chief I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my division in the reduction of the city of Mexico and its contiguous workers.

On the 7th instant of Riley's brigade, composed of the 4th artillery, the 2d and 7th infantry, was, by the general's orders, thrown in advance of Pillow's division on the San Angel road, to watch and keep in check any force from the city in that direction. On the following day this brigade was the reserve at the battle of Molino del Rey; after which it assumed its post on the San Angel road, and was joined on the afternoon of the 11th, and by daylight in the morning was enabled to open on the enemy's batteries, situated at the garita in the San Antonio road; and between that and the San Angel road the firing was kept up briskly during the day on both sides, with but little loss to us, who were protected by a good temporary breastwork. On the morning of the 13th the firing was renewed with great spirit, which compelled the enemy to withdraw his guns from the garita, within the protection of the city walls.

Smith's brigade was now ordered to proceed in the directions of Chapultepec and support one of the columns of attack, commanded by Major General Quitman. With the stormers from my division in front of the road, the attacking column on the left and Smith's brigade on the right of it, the force advanced in the face of a well directed fire from a battery at the base of Chapultepec, near a point where the aqueduct leaves it, and also from musketry sheltered by the aqueduct, and by breastworks across and on each side of the road. When within charging distance, the stormers, with the assistance on the right of Smith's brigade, which had been thrown forward toward the aqueduct, rushed on the enemy's guns, drove off or killed, the cannoneers, and took possession of the strong point. Smith's brigade having advanced three companies of mounted riflemen considerably to its right, to protect the right of Quitman's division, they were found near the first battery when the stormers were about attacking, and were thus enabled to enter with the advance. The brigade pushed on an captured a second battery to the rear of the first when several guns and many pioneers were taken; after some brisk skirmishing, the enemy was finally driven from every point on the east of the hill, and were pursued on the San Cosme road some distance by the storming party, under the command of Capt. Paul, 7th infantry; this party having been overtaken by the 1st division and their specific duties as stormors having been accomplished, were ordered to return and rejoin their respective regiments.

Early in the action Captain Casey, 2d infantry, who commanded the storming party from my division, was severely wounded, and obliged to retire. The command devolving upon Captain Paul, 7th infantry, Lieut. Gantt, 7th infantry, with a portion of a party, was ordered to cross the ditch on the left of the road and proceed further to the left of the base of Chapultepec, and, by scaling the wall, gain admittance to the body of the work. This gallant officer was shot dead at the head of his men; the command of his party devolving upon Lieut. Steele, 2d infantry, who led his men on with intrepidity and success. Too much cannot be said in praise of the officers and men who composed this storming force, with Capt. Paul in command, ably and gallantly supported by a Capt. Dobbins, 3d infantry; Lieut. Steele, 3d infantry; Lieut. Steuart, mounted rifles; and Lieut. D. Rosey, 4th artillery, the party advanced without a falter or a check.

Smith's brigade - the riflemen leading, supported by a 8 inch howitzer, in charge of the late and gallant Capt. Drum, 4th artillery - carried a battery near the Casa Colorada, half way to the garita on the Chapultepec road. The command was here reorganized by the senior officer, Major General Quitman, with the mounted rifleman again in the advance, supported by the South Carolina regiment; the remainder of Smith's brigade being in reserve - and charged the battery at the garita; the reserve pushing up, arrived at the battery at the same moment with the advance, and entered the city at 20 minutes past 1 o'clock P.M. The brigade occupied buildings within the city during the night, and the enemy, having in the meantime abandoned the city, our forces took possession of it on the morning of the 14th. Our national colors were planted on the enemies palace by a non commissioned officer of the mounted rifles at 7 o'clock A.M.

Until late in the afternoon of the 13th, Riley's brigade with Steptoe's and Taylor's batteries, were kept in the Piedad road to watch the enemy in that quarter. It formed a junction with the 1st division on the San Cosme road early in the night of the 19th.

For more minute information adds to the operations themselves, and as to the officers and men particularly distinguished on these several occasions, I will respectfully refer the general in chief to the accompanying report of Brig. Gen. Smith, who so ably commanded the brigade in action.

Lists of the killed, wounded, and missing have already been furnished.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
To Capt. H.L. Scott, A. A. G. Headquarters of the army, City of Mexico.

Sir: I have the honor to report that, in compliance with the orders of Major Gen. Worth, I joined his division yesterday morning in the attack on the foundry near Chapultepec.

My command consisted of six troops of the 2d dragoons, under the command of Lieut. C. D. Williams, 3d dragoons, and Capt. Ruff's company of mounted riflemen - in all about 270 men. My orders were to take a positon of the left of our line, to hold in check the enemy's cavalry, and to give a blow to their horse or foot, if an opportunity should offer. In taking up my position, I was compelled to pass within pistol shot of a large body of the enemy, who were protected by a ditch and breastworks. This exposure of my command was entirely unavoidable, in consequence of a deep ditch on my left, which it was impossible to cross, until I got close to their line; and I could not pause at the moment, as a very large body of the enemy's cavalry was advancing toward the left of our line. After passing through this fire, and crossing a ravine, I formed my command in line facing the enemy's cavalry, on which they halted, and shortly afterward retired.

I continued to hold my command on the left flank of our line, until the enemy's infantry broke and retired - changing my position from time to time, in order to face their cavalry whenever they advanced. I should have joined in the pursuit of their infantry when they broke; but, in doing this, I should have uncovered our left, and their large cavalry force was still maintaining a menacing attitude, covered and protected as it was, by a large hacienda filled with troops.

My loss, in passing their line of fire, was very severe - viz: 5 officers and 33 soldiers wounded, and 6 soldiers killed; 27 horses killed, and 77 wounded. Capt. Ker, of the 2d dragoons, 1st Lieut. Walker, of the rifles, and 2d Lieuts. Smith and Tree, of the 2d dragoons, and 2d Lieut. C. D. Williams, of the 3d dragoons, were wounded; but I am happy to say not dangerously.

My officers and men maintained their character for steadiness and confidence throughout the action. They did well; but I must notice, in particular, the successful efforts of Captain Hardee in maintaining order in his squadron during the many evolutions that it was necessary to make with great rapidity. I have also to state that Assistant Surgeon Barnes was very assiduous in his duties, and took such measures that our wounded men received prompt attention. I have also the pleasure to report that I received effective aid from my adjutant, Lieut. Oakes.

Lieutenant Colonel Moore, of the 3d dragoons, joined me after the action commenced, and did me the great favor to abstain from assuming the command. His presence, however, was of great service to me, and his example, of the most perfect coolness under fire, had a favorable influence upon my command.

Col. Harney, who was quite unwell, also came upon the field during the action, and, after observing my measures for some time, expressed himself satisfied with them, and said to me that he would not assume the command; for which I am deeply obliged to him.

I enclose the list of killed and wounded.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your ob't servant,

E. V. SUMNER,
Major, 2d dragoons commanding regiment.

Capt. W. W. Mackall, assistant adjutant general 1st division.
Sir: In obedience your instructions, I moved at 3, A. M., on the 8th of September, with two 24 pounder siege guns supported by the light battalion of the 1st division, and was placed by Lieut. Col. Duncan on the plain, about 606 yards from the building called Modino del Rey, (supposed to be a foundry,) which I was directed to batter. At daylight we opened a fire from these two guns upon the building with good effect, and fired about ten rounds from each piece, when our infantry, having reached the front of the building, the firing of the 24 pounders was discontinued. After the infantry had captured the batteries of the enemy, and occupied the buildings, I received orders to advance to the left of our line, to drive off the enemy, who were in great force in that direction. On arriving at that point, I received your personal order to remove one gun to the foundry, which was immediately dispatched in charge of Lieut. Stone - the other piece remaining in its then position in charge of Lieut. Hagner, who fired with great precision and effect at the Mexican forces on our left, and caused them to retire. When his limited supply of ammunition was expended, his gun was withdrawn.

As Lieut. Stone got into position near the foundry, a large force of the enemy advanced from Chapultepec upon a small field piece Captain Drum had posted there, with only a small supporting force of infantry. A few rounds from the 24 pounder caused the advancing forces to retire; and Lieut. Stone maintained this position, and fixed his gun with great coolness and precision whenever the enemy appeared - the fort of Chapultepec firing upon him all the while. I now returned to camp, and brought out a fresh supply of ammunition, when I received your instructions not to fire at the fort of Chapultepec, but to withdraw the guns and remove the captured ones. I found on the ground 6 pounders, without limbers, (one of which had been used against the enemy by Lieut. Peck, of the 2d artillery.) As soon as the 24 pounders had been withdrawn from the ground, I sent Lieut. Hagner with their limbers, and removed the two captured 6 pounders.

By your direction, I furnished horses and drivers (from the siege train) to Capt. Drum, 4th artillery, for the two light, 6 pounder guns he recaptured from the enemy at Contreras, (those taken by them at Buena Vista,) and instructed him to report to Col. Garland. Capt. Drum will make a special report of his operations; but, as I was present with him part of the time, I must be allowed to say, that never were pieces served with better judgment and effect. Of Lieut. Hagner commanding the siege the train company who by his untiring industry and exertions, has kept the siege battery in the most perfect order and of Lieut. Stone and the non commissioned officers and men of the siege train, I cannot speak in too high terms; they performed their duty well.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BEN J. HUGER,
Captain, acting chief of ordnance.

To Maj. Gen. Worth, comd’g 1st division.

NNR 73.207 Nov. 27, 1847 Col. William Selby Harney's report about his operations against Chapultepec and the city of Mexico

[Without date]

Sir: I have the honor to submit the following report of the duties performed by my command, during the operations against Chapultepec and the City of Mexico, on the 13th and 14th inst.

On the 10th, I was ordered by the general-in-chief to proceed to Mixcoac with the 2d battalion of cavalry, to take command of the troops at that place, and to make such dispositions as would enable me to protect the depots and hospitals collected there against the large forces of the enemy, known to be outside of the city.

I found the post occupied by Lieut. Col. Bonham, 12 infantry, with four weak companies his regiment - one company of mounted rifles, one of the 3d, and one of the 7th infantry; in all less than 300 effective men - which, added to those I had brought with me, made a force of near 500 men, with which to guard a large body of Mexican prisoners, and protect the hospitals and depots of ordinance and provisions. I immediately put in requisition every means in my power that would increase the strength of the place - manning some of the captured pieces of artillery with such soldiers and teamsters as had any knowledge of artillery practice, and enrolling all camp follows not in government employ. These precautions were useless as the enemy did not see fit to give my small command an opportunity of competing with their companions in arms in gallant achievements.
The 1st battalion of cavalry, I have pleasure in stating, were actively employed under the command of Maj. Sumner; to whose report which is herewith transmitted, I beg leave to refer you for their operations. [RLLW]

NNR 73. 207 Nov. 27, 1847 Capt. P. B. Riley's report

Headquarters second brigade, Mexico, Sept. 23, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to report that, in accordance with the instructions of the brigadier general commanding the division, my brigade, under the immediate command of Lieut. Col. Plympton, 7th infantry, moved from Coyoacan on the evening of the 7th instant, and took up a position near the San Angel road, and about two miles south of the garita, at the junction of the Tacubaya and Piedad causeways. On the morning of the following day, in obedience to instructions from Major General Pillow, commanding the forces advanced in this direction, the brigade marched to the field of Molino del Rey, at which place I joined it, and was for several hours engaged in the covering of removal of the killed and wounded, and captured ammunition from the battle field.

While so occupied, the 2d infantry - temporarily under the orders of Brig. Gen. Pierce - became engaged with the enemy's skirmishers at the foot of Chapultepec. In the afternoon the position of the previous night was re-occupied. On the morning of the 9th, under instructions from Maj. Gen. Pillow, the brigade occupied a position in an to the right of the Piedad village, in observation of the enemy's works on the San Antonio and San Angel roads, which was retained under his orders until the brigadier general commanding the division arrived, on the evening of the 11th. On the morning of the 12th, the brigade supported Steptoe's battery in the demonstration made against the garita of Candelaria. In the afternoon of the day it furnished seven officers - Lieutenants Hill and DeRussy, 4th artillery, Captain Casey, Lieutenants Westcott and Steele, 2d infantry, Captain Paul, and Lieut, Gantt, 7th infantry - and 125 rank and file, for the storming of Chapultepec.

The stormers were actively engaged in the glorious assault upon the works of the castle of Chapultepec on the morning of the 13th, and lose more than one forth of that number in killed and wounded - among the former, Lieut. Gantt, a promising and gallant officer of the 7th infantry; and among the latter, Capt. Casey, of the 2d. In the afternoon of that day the 4th artillery was detached for the purpose of making a diversion on the Piedad causeway, but was recalled when the brigade war ordered to march for the garita of San Cosme. On reaching this point late in the evening, I reported to Major General Worth, commanding the attack in that quarter, and on the morning of the 14th marched with his division into the city of Mexico. Soon after entering the city, the 2d infantry was detached; and while absent, was actively engaged for several hours with a large Mexican force in the southern part of the city, suffering a considerable loss, and inflicting a very severe one on the enemy. With the remainder of my brigade, under instructions from Major General Worth, I occupied the Careel, near the Tacubaya garita, until late in the evening, when orders were received to report to the brigadier general commanding the division in the Plaza Mayor.

For the details of these operations, reference is respectfully made to the reports of subordinate commanders, copies of which are herewith submitted.

It gives me pleasure to repeat here the commendations bestowed in former reports, and to express to the officers and men of my command my warmest thanks for the zeal and gallantry and good conduct evinced by them in the different positions occupied by the brigade as a reserve, as supporting, and by a portion of it as an attacking piece.

My staff officers - aided by Captain McClellan, topographical engineers, and Lieut. Westcott, 2d infantry, as volunteer aids - were actively engaged in the performance of their appropriate duties.

I remain, sir, very respectfully, your ob't serv't,

P. B. RILEY,
Brevet Col. commanding 2d brigade.

To First Lieut. W. S. Brooks. A. A. A. General, 2d division. [RLLW]

NNR 73.209 Nov. 27, 1847 tariff of duties imposed on Mexico - R.J. Walker
MILITARY CONTRIBUTIONS. - OFFICIAL. - Treasury department, Nov. 5, 1847.

Sir: The military contributions, in the form of duties upon imports into Mexican ports, have been levied by the departments of war and of the navy during the last six months under your order of the 31st March last, and in view of the experience of the practical operation of the system I respectfully recommend the following modifications in some of its details, which will largely augment the revenue.

That the duty on silk, flax, hemp, or grass, cotton, wool, worsted, or any manufacturers thereof, including cigars and cigaritos; glass, china, and stone ware, iron and steel, and all manufactures of either, not prohibited, be thirty percent ad valorem. On copper, and all manufacturers thereof, tallow, tallow candles, soap, fish, beef, pork, hams, bacon, tongues, butter, lard, cheese, rice, Indian corn and meal, potatoes, wheat, rye, oats, and all other grain, rye meal and oat meal, flour, whale and sperm oil, clocks, boots and shoes, pumps, bootees, and slippers, bonnets, hats, caps, beer, ale, porter, cider, timber, boards, planks, scantling, shingles, laths, pitch, tar, rosin, turpentine, spirits of turpentine, vinegar, apples, ship-bread, hides, leather, and manufacturers thereof, and paper of all kinds, twenty per cent ad valorem; and these reduced rates shall also apply to all goods on which the duties are not paid, remaining not exceeding ninety days in deposit in the Mexican ports, introduced under previous regulations enforcing military contributions.

Yours, most respectfully,
R. J. WALKER, sect'y of the trea'y.

To The President.

NNR 73. 209 Nov.27, 1847 inspection by Gen. Zachary Taylor of forts from Monterey toward the Rio Grande

GEN. TAYLOR, accompanied by Gen. Wood, was at our last dates, making an inspection of the posts from Monterey towards the Rio Grande, and had reached Mier. Gen. Taylor was en route for home, and was expected at New Orleans hourly, at our last dates from thence. There were great preparations making for his reception at New Orleans. [RLLW]

NNR 73.213 Dec. 4, 1847 arrival of officers in the United States from the seat of the war

WAR WITH MEXICO

The steamer Alabama reached New Orleans on the 24th, with Vera Cruz dates tp the 18th and city of Mexico dates to the 8th of Nov. No less than 210 sick, disabled, and wounded soldiers embarked in the Alabama at Vera Cruz, three of whom died on the passage. Ried. McManus, 2d Pennsylvania volunteers, was buried at sea.

The steamship Galveston sailed from Vera Cruz with the Alabama, to touch at Tampico. The New Orleans was to leave on 19th, as was also the Gen. Butler. A number of officers, on their way from the army, as also a portion of the Encarnacion prisoners - among them Major Gaines, Captains Heady and Smith, Lieuts. Barbour and Churchill, will arrive by these vessels.

Amongst the many passengers on board the Alabama, was Major Gen. Quitman, Gen. Shields,Cols. Harney, Garland, Andrews, Morgan, Ramsay and Burnett; Majors Barland, Arkansas volunteers, Smith, engineers, Wade, 3d artillery, Bonneville, th infantry, Loring, rifles, Bennett and Dykeman; plymaster. A proportionate number of captains, amongst them Capt. C. M. Clay, Kentucky cavalry, and of Lieutenants, &c., Lieuts. Porter and Sweeney, of the New York volunteers, Passed Midshipman Rogers and Geo. W. Kendall. Gen. Quitman leaves Mexico under order of Gen. Scott, directing that he shall report personally, or by letter to the war department, as, since his promotion, he had not been permanently assigned to any division, the object of his return is to seek this. Gen. Shields returns to recover his health, impaired from his wounds received in battle. Col. Harney comes home to recruit. Some of the officers returned are ordered to ..in Bragg's battery immediately. [RLLW]

NNR 73.213 Dec. 4, 1847 captured documents from Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna
A Mexican courier had been captured with letters from Atlisco, Orizaba, and Tehuacan. Among them was a document from Santa Anna, in which he says that just as he had matured his plans for attacking Perote he received orders from the supreme government to turn over the command of the army. [RLLW]

NNR 73.213 Dec. 4, 1947 Mexican congress assembles at Queretaro

The city of Mexico Moniteur Republicano of 4th Nov. says that a sufficient number of members of congress had arrived at Queretaro on the 1st for the transaction of business. Later letters from Queretaro direct announce that the congress was organized on the 21 November; Senor De Jose Ma..rial, deputy, from Iranalauto, was elected president, and Jose Hernandez, deputy from Durango, vice-president. NNR 73.213 Dec. 4, 1847 question of the election of a Mexican president

A letter from an English gentleman in the city of Mexico, dated 8th November, says that although much confidence was felt in the acting president and vice president of congress, who are favorably disposed towards peace, it was much feared that Complidado, of Guadalaxara, will be elected president ad interim of the republic instead of Herrera, or Pena y Pena.

The health of Gen. Herrera is precarious, but improving. Some say that Elloriaga will receive a majority of votes for president ad interim. - Others are divided between Herrera, Almonte, Complidado[?] and Gonzales Rosio. [RLLW]

NNR 73.213 train from Mexico City arrives at Veracruz

It was reported at Vera Cruz that Gen. Lane had another brush with Rea, near Puebla, and routed him entirely. All was quiet at Perote when the train came through.

Gen. Patterson was still at Jalapa, suffering some what of a severe cold, but recovering.

Gen. Cushing's command was three miles beyond. The entire force was in the vicinity of about 3000.

Col. Hays left for Puebla on the 13th, escorting Major Polk and Mr. Smyth, bearer of dispatches.

Jarauta, the guerrilla chief, had sent a commissioner to Gen. Patterson. It is said that Jarauta has gone towards Queretaro, his forces having been completely broken up.

Gen. Butler and staff arrived at Vera Cruz on the 17th, and was received with all due honors.

From 2000 to 3000 troops, who had sailed about the same time from New Orleans, arrived at Vera Cruz on the 17th and 18th, and Gen. Butler would, in a fortnight, move forward for the capital with 6000 men, including what had been left behind of the former division.

Gen. Quitman's division at the capital had been incorporated with the divisions of Twiggs and Worth, as also the Pennsylvania and New York volunteers with the former.

The Vera Cruz Arco Iris of the 18th Nov. states that he had arrived at Orizaba with 1500 ragged followers.

Commodore Perry was to sail for Vera Cruz on the 19th ult. for Alvarado, Tobasco, Laguna and Campeachy.

The American Star, of the 3d November, published in the city of Mexico, states that the congress at Queretaro had received a communication from Mr. Trist, but the character of the contents had not transpired. [RLLW]
The papers from the Mexican capital contain a long communication from Señor Otero, a distinguished member of congress, invoking public opinion to induce congress to decline all peace overtures by which any territory but Texas shall be alienated. [RLLW]

Capt. Robert H. Taylor's Rangers sent to rectify a theft against a Mexican

A Mexican trader came into camp day before yesterday and complained to General Wool that while at La Ventura, a small hacienda or village on the route from here to San Luis, he was robbed of his cargas and mules to the value of five hundred dollars. In consequence of the promise to protect the property of Mexicans who remain neutral, and the assurances that robbers and those assisting them shall be punished, General Wool has ordered Capt. Taylor's company of Texas Rangers to repair to the rancho or hacienda, retake the goods if they are there, or if they are not, to seize a sufficient number of the cattle and horses belonging to the place to make up for the loss of the Mexican, and if those who had a hand in the robbery can be pointed out, to seize them and bring them in as prisoners. The expedition started this morning, and before the get back will probably go to the hacienda Potosí. [RLLW]

Squire Collins

Mr. Collins, better known in Missouri as Squire Collins who acted as interpreter to Doniphan's command, and has since been employed as interpreter to the quartermaster department, left here last week with a party of a dozen for Santa Fe, via Monclova and the Presidio, through the Indian country. It is expected that this party may meet guerrilla parties and Indians on their route, but though few in number they are prepared to make a stout resistance. [RLLW]

Another party left yesterday morning for San Antonio, Texas, via Monclova, about fifteen strong. - Among them was Mr. Thos. H. O'S. Addicks, Gen. Wool's interpreter, a most excellent, intelligent and talented follow. He has been in this country or Texas many years, and been an actor in many stirring scenes with the Mexicans and Indians, and among the latter, the Lipans, has spent a considerable time, and I believe has been made a chief by them. He holds the office of county clerk in San Antonio. This party, it is reported, is to be attacked by guerrillas between here and Monclova, by a band who are waiting for them. [RLLW]

Guerrilla attack

Lieut. Campbell of the 2d dragoons left here on the morning of the 1st for Monterey with Lieut. Clark of the Texas Rangers, together with twenty dragoons and two Texas rangers,-in all about 25. About six miles beyond Maria he was attacked by about 150 guerrillas. He fought them for nearly an hour, when they fled. They had him completely surrounded for some time. His loss was three killed, of the dragoons, two missing and sixteen wounded. Lieut. Clarke was shot through the leg and one of the rangers was among the wounded. The wounded are all in camp at Monterey. [JNA]

trial of Mexican prisoners accused of murder

The Mexicans who are charged with the murder of Raynes and Patterson have not been convicted. - The board was in session when I wrote you last had merely examining powers. A regular commission, ordered by General Taylor, commenced its session this morning for the trial. The accused stand a poor chance for their necks, for the evidence is very strong against them. I hear nothing new from Monterey and imagine they are quite as dull as we are here. [RLLW]
NNR 73.213 Dec. 4, 1847 unsuccessful revolution at Guadalajara

Vera Cruz, November 18.

In the city of Guadalajara a fresh revolution has burst forth in favor of the elevation to the presidency of Gomez Farias, the avowed antagonist of the sacerdotal party. His partisans, whilst attacking the churches and endeavoring to abstract therefrom the sacred utensils of gold, were suddenly assaulted by the mob, incited by the priests. A sanguinary engagement immediately ensued between the infuriated parties - the one endeavoring to pillage the sacred edifices, the other to protect them from the threatened desecration. In the action it is said that Gen. Ampudia, of Monterey and Sentmanat notoriety, was slain, together with many of the followers of Gomez Farias. The militant church party, which so well knows how to defend its privileges, has triumphed as usual. [RLLW]

72.213 Dec. 4, 1847 Mexican war spirit unalloyed

The spirit breathed forth in every paragraph of these papers, is the spirit of war and unquenchable hatred to the North Americans and their acts. 72.213 Dec. 4, 1847 Michael Leonard the teamster executed

EXECUTION. - Michael Leonard, a teamster, belonging to the train which arrived here on the 12th instant, was hung yesterday morning in the main plaza, in pursuance of his sentence, for the murder of another teamster, named William Hampton. The murder occurred on the road the day after the battle of Huamantla. Leonard had previously quarreled with a wagon master named Boulet, and intended to kill him alone. Boulet, however, escaped with the loss of an arm, while the same shot killed Hampton. An immense crowd assembled to witness the execution. Leonard expressed no regret dying, and said that his sentence was a just one, but that if he had the thing to do over again, he would avenge himself on Boulet.[Puebla Flag [RLLW]

72.214 Dec. 4, 1847 council of war at Puebla between Nicolas Trist and Gen. Winfield Scott

COUNCIL OF WAR - MR. TRIST AND GENERAL SCOTT
THE $3,000,000.

Extract of a letter to the St. Louis Republican dated

Puebla, Mexico, Aug. 6. 1847.

While at Jalapa, I announced to you the fact, that an estrangement, as well as some pretty sharp correspondence, had taken place between Gen. Scott and Mr. Negotiator Trist, arising from a no less singular than gentlemanly course pursued by the latter towards the former. That difficulty, I am happy to say, has long since ceased to exist, and Mr. Trist now regards Gen. Scott as the general in chief of the army of the United States, and in that capacity from time to time consults him in all diplomatic matters connected with the object of his mission - peace! I speak advisedly when I assure you, that Mr. Trist's bearing towards Gen. Scott when he first reached Jalapa, was not approved at Washington either by the president or secretary of war. And Major General Pillow, who arrived here on the 8th of last month, was invested not only with the power of making peace between these two high functionaries, but bore directions to Mr. Trist, that in the future progress of his negotiations he must, from time to time, consult with Majs. Gen. Scott and Pillow.
I observe, from the papers that an idea is prevalent among the more intelligent portions of the U. States, that General Scott is vested with high diplomatic powers. Whatever may have been the case, previous to the arrival of Mr. Trist, since then all such powers have been vested in Mr. Trist alone. He was sent here as the confidential political friend of the administration, as the disburser of some three million bribery fund, and with the expectation that by a judicious application of it, a peace could easily be purchased from a people over whom our standard had ... victorious in every engagement we had had with them. I mention this, because I believe that the administration, fearing the infamy that will attach to a peace procured upon such terms, have cunningly devised the plan to create, and allow the impression to become prevalent, that Gen. Scott possessed the diplomatic power, and that upon him must rest the responsibility of any such termination of the war.

A short time since things were in a fair way this to be ended. The application of this fund was to have been, upon certain contingencies, in bringing about the appointment of commissioners to treat with us for peace; and those who had secured this result were to have been the recipients of certain portions of the fund. To this, Mr. Trist was committed to fully and so far as consent went, Gen. Scott in part. A council of war was decided upon, and called. It convened at the headquarters of the army, on Saturday evening, the 17th of July last. Those who was present at this council, were, the general in chief Maj. Gens. Pillow and Quitman, Brigadier Generals Twiggs, Shields and Cadwallader. The justly distinguished General Worth was not present, in consequence of a most unfortunate disruption of the friendly relations that had existed for 35 years between him and Gen. Scott. But of this, more anon.

At this council of war, two propositions were presented for the action of its members. The first was whether the advance of the army upon the city of Mexico should bedealyed until the arrival of Gen. Piece's command, who was then known to have left Vera Cruz for his place. And the second was whether the application of a portion of the three millions in the manner above specified by me, would be justifiable under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

The first proposition was without much discussion, unanimously decided in the affirmative, all concurring in opinion that it was the part of both prudence and discretion to await the reinforcement of Col. Genral Pierce's column.

The second proposition presented in its consideration an entirely different spectacle. All evidently were sensibly impressed with the importance of the contemplated step and the idea of a great and victorious nation attempting to bribe the leaders of the government over whom they had triumphed, to make a peace upon almost any terms, was for the first time to a conflict between civilized nations, about to be resorted to.

The general-in-chief, with his usual bland, impressive, and, I may add eloquent manner, first went over the whole ground, bringing in support of his position in every argument to which tact, much reflection, and a strong mind could give birth. To these considerations, he added the great and pressing ... in all their ... by the administration to terminate by any means, if possible, this war. Upon his concluding, the opinions of the different generals present, were called for according to rank. General Pillow's was the first one given, and was favorable to the plan proposed. Gen. Quitman followed, but objected in tata to it, upon the ground that it would inflict a stain upon our national escutcheon, that centuries could not wipe out. Of the brigadier generals, Twiggs was the first to expose his views, and by regarding it to a great extent as a "political question," declined giving any opinion. - Gen. Shields was next required to give his views; he at once rose from his seat; his whole countenance lit up with animation, and in that bold, fearless, uncompromising manner that so strikingly illustrates his whole public careers, denounced the whole scheme in the most unqualifying terms. He insisted that the application of this fund for any such purpose, was not only immoral, but debasing. That, while for purposes of self defence it was, according to usages of modern warfare, justifiable in one nation, to employ as spies the subjects of the other belligerent power, for the sake of benefiting us, that belligerent power, for the sake of benefiting us, to cut the throats of their own subjects. And he boldly declared, that rather than see the country of his adoption thus disgraced, he would prefer by far to witness a continuation of the war for ten years, and in every battle we fought, lose five thousand men. The one would admit of a remedy; the other was an evil from the consequences of which, as a nation, we never could recover.

Gen. Cadwallader simply remarked, that Gen. Shields had exhausted the subject, and he fully concurred with him in the conclusions to which he had come. Thus terminated the council of the evening of the 17th July. What followed is soon related.

The next day, Gen. Shields had a long interview with Mr. Trist. What occurred at that interview, I have no means of ascertaining, but the subsequent note of Mr. Trist can leave but little doubt upon that subject. Two days afterwards, Mr. Trist withdrew all papers connected with this manner of terminating the war. And from that hour to this, an immediate march upon the capital, so soon as General Pierce came up, was determined upon, and all hopes of an early peace abandoned.
I have been particular in relating the proceedings of what I regarded by far the most important council of war that has convened since the existence of hostilities between the United States and Mexico, because I believe my country has been saved from being plunged into an abyss of infamy, from which there would be no extrication; and for the reason, that those who, regardless of consequences to themselves, have ... that blow, should receive credit for it. 72.214 Dec. 4, 1847 death of an American sailor

AN AMERICAN SAILOR. A letter published in the Harrisburg Argus, written by Lieut. James Elder, says: "When the transport ship Empire struck near ... Rey, not one man was lost, who Lieut. E says he was steering the ship when she struck, and attempted to save her by putting the helm hard down; but when nearly hard down the rudder struck; but when nearly hard down the rudder struck the rocks, which carried him over and under the wheel several times, the handles of the wheels tearing his thigh every revolution, the flesh was literally torn off from the knee to the hip. Lieut. E. asked him why he did not let go. He said 'four hundred lives are more valuable than one.'"

"This brave soldier's name should be known and remembered - he is beyond the reach of this world's recompense, for he did not survive his injuries."[RLLW]

NNR 73.214 Dec. 4, 1847 "reveling in the halls of Montezumas"

"REVELLING IN THE HALLS OF THE MONTEZUMAS."

An officer of the South Carolina volunteers writes from the National Palace of Mexico, under date of October 16th, as follows: Much has been said about reveling in the Halls of Montezumas, but we have seen little of it yet. If sleeping on two blankets on a hard table, and covered with one, then I can say, I do revel. But when one comes to try it, the romance of the thing vanishes."[RLLW]

NNR 73.214 Dec. 4, 1847 divisions among parties in Mexico, exactions on the clergy

PARTIES IN MEXICO. - EXACTIONS ON THE CLERGY.

The St. Louis Republican, of the 22d inst., contains an interesting letter from the city of Mexico, dated October 17th, from which we make the following extract:

"As to the prospects of peace, I have now no more confidence in so desirable a result being brought about, than I had at Jalapa. The country is so divided and unsettled a condition, that I do not see how peace could be made, even if the country was in favor of it. They are divided into three parties. The first is called Santa Anna's party, which constitutes the military and a portion of the clergy, who are in favor of that state of things that will best enable them to rob the public with the least trouble. A second party consists of a large number of respectable citizens, to which may be added the major part of the clergy, who are decidedly in favor of some European Prince being placed over them, and that every vestige of a republican form of government should be swept away from Mexico with the termination of this war. The third and last party, are those in favor of the constitution of 1924, and opposed to every thing like a monarchical form of government. The latter party is rapidly increasing in strength, and are determined to send a commissioner to Washington this winter to ask the U. States to occupy and hold the entire country. A few of the most influential members of this party have already had a confidential interests with Mr. Trist, who promised to represent their wishes favorable to our government."

He states that a Mexican newspaper has been established in the city, edited by an association of gentlemen of the liberal party, which boldly and ably, and with a good deal of effect in the public mind, advocate a restoration of the state of affairs that existed during the first three years of Mexican independence. He alludes as follows to the church interest:

"I have met with and conversed freely with several of the most distinguished clergy in this city, as to the present and future condition of Mexico. - Many of them partially admit that the interest of the church as well as their own, would be greatly enhanced by Mexico becoming a monarchy. But, they as freely asserted that if that could not be done, as they were then in favor of the United States occupying and governing the country as the next best means of preserving the church property from being consumed to sustain and carry on the war. Or, in the event of peace, it being a ... to feel like praetorian cohort of their officers, civil and military that cling like leeches on the body politic.

The cathedral, in addition to over two hundred thousand dollars previously contributed was compelled to give up some of its images, in order to enable Santa Anna to fortify the city. This was taken and disposed of to the English bankers, Manning A. McIntosh, for $300,000. The convent of St. Domingo, one of the most extensive, and heretofore wealthy institutions of the kind, has been greatly impoverished by the exorbitant contributions extorted from them for the support and maintenance of war, and the government together. The principal padre, or priest, in the institution, told me, a few days ago, that this convent alone, had been compelled to advance upwards of $400,000; and to accomplish it, they had been forced, in addition to giving up all their ready money, to dispose of some of the most valuable real estate of the city. Other religious institutions have suffered in proportion to their wealth, equally as much; and to check further encroachment upon their estates, and to guard against the rapacity of their own government, as well as to avoid the result that would follow the success of Gomez Farias party, who are violent in their opposition to the clergy, and in favor of a confiscation of the whole of the church property to relieve the government from its embarrassments - most of the intelligent and reflecting portion of the priesthood, in the event of no foreign prince reigning over them, prefer for these reasons, solely, that the United States should govern them. Do not think that this is an idle conjecture, or the mere ebullient of a distempered fancy. It is the result of calm investigation, and well authenticated information drawn from the most reliable sources."

Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna's manifesto to the Mexican nation

MANIFESTO OF SANTA ANNA.

Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, general of division, "Benemerito de la Patria," and provisional president of the republic, to his fellow citizens:

Since my return to the country I have upon various occasions addressed you, giving an account of my operations as chief of the army, and as first executive magistrate; but holding no longer those positions, I now address you with the most profound grief to complain for you of the cruel ingratitude of some, and of the perfidy of others, who, not content to have acted with the most criminal indifference during the period of the great conflict, are now striving to throw upon me alone the responsibility for those great public calamities to which they have so much contributed.

Such conduct does not surprise me, for a full year ago I discovered that I was again to be made the target of the factions which had torn out of the bowels of the country. Their audacity reached the pitch of holding me up as a TRAITOR before a community which had been witnesses of my repeated services in the cause of independence and liberty, and of the sacrifices I had made to save them from the yoke with which they are now threatened. But it was impossible for me to have anticipated my violent removal from the theatre of the war, in the mode in which it has been effected by him with whom I had deposited supreme power whilst I was fighting with our unjust invaders; and as this inexplicable conduct is calculated to confirm the malicious report which has so deeply wounded my heart, I find myself compelled to lay before the world a historical review of my conduct during the fourteen months which have elapsed since my return to the republic, to the end that my labors may be seen and a full exposure made of the injustice with which I was opposed by those whose duty it was to support me, and of the origin of that invention of "traitor" with which I am stigmatized, with a view to discredit me in public opinion, when I had done my best to serve the country; for I have sought to respond loyally to the call made upon me to save the country from the barbarous and iniquitous invasion it has suffered. But as this work will require time, and cannot be prepared as soon as I could wish, at the same time that slander loses not a moment in striking its venomous fangs into my reputation, I entreat all impartial men who have not been witnesses of the exertions I have made, to design to suspend their opinions until that publication, assuring them that therein they shall learn what has been my true conduct, and what that of my unjust detractors.

As the calamity which is iniquitously urged against me is so atrocious, I hurl it back with all the energy of my character, and with the force of innocence infamously outraged. I challenge and summon all my accusers to come forward with their proof, and if they fail to do so, I denounce them as vile calumniators and enemies of the nation.

I call upon Generals Scott and Taylor, and upon every individual in their armies, and I conjure them to declare upon their honor whether the Mexican general, who has fought them in the north and in the east and in the centre, too, of the republic, down to the 10th inst., has discharged all his duty to his country.

Fellow citizens: Misfortune has deprived me of the incomparable satisfaction of offering you a splendid victory; but misfortune has never been deemed treason. They insult you who endeavor to persuade you that such infamy can have fallen upon a veteran of independence, covered with honorable wounds received in defence of your rights, and who has grown gray serving his country with affection and loyalty. Remember that these same men have before abused your simplicity, misleading your judgment, and cast upon the pages of our history the bolt which stains it, in the record of the assassinations of Padilla and of Cuilapan; remember that by these men were sacrificed the two chiefs who at Iguala traced the plan of our independence; that they were found guilty of the act of removing from the sacred soil in which it was ... which your fellow citizen last in fighting a foreign foe, to make a public mockery of it under the pretext that it had belonged to one whom in that moment of delirium they called a TYRANT. - If my conduct during these fourteen months deserves reproach, it is required that it be subjected to examination because its results have not been fortunate, I am ready to meet any charges which may be legally and fairly brought against me; but in the meantime I believe myself to the considerations which the fundamental fact secures to me, which my services demand and which justice exacts.

If you will await events as I desire you in order to judge with certainty, you will perceive that those who form their clubs have managed to diffuse distrust and malignant reflections upon my conduct, taking advantage of our misfortunes, are the very ones who are hastening to treat with the enemy and to yield to him what I refused. NNR 73.216 Dec. 4, 1847 Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna's decree, Rosa orders Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna to trial and divests him of command

On the 7th of September Santa Anna issued a decree, in which, reciting the necessity of there being a permanent head to the government, now that neither congress nor the council of government are in session, he orders that, in case he should fall or be taken prisoner, the president of the supreme court of justice would assume his functions, aided by Gens. Herrera and Bravo. This substitution was ordered to continue until congress should assemble and name a president, or the states could elect one. After General Bravo had been taken prisoner, and Santa Anna had abandoned the capital, the latter issued another decree, bearing date September 16th. In this he premises that he designs to continue the campaign; that to do so and retain executive authority are quite incompatible, as the executive government should reside in the centre of the republic. Wishing to avoid this evil, and to provide for the permanency of the government let what may betide, he resigns the provisional presidency of the republic, and orders that the executive authority shall be vested in the president by the supreme court, (Senor Pena y Pena,) assisted by Gen. Herrera and Gen. Alcorta - that latter in place of Gen. Bravo. A second article of the decree fixes upon Queretaro as the seat of government for the nation.

ORDER FOR THE DISMISSION OF SANTA ANNA

Section of Wars

Most excellent sir: His excellency, the provisional president of the Republic, profoundly impressed with his duties to his country, convinced of the necessity of reestablishing public morals in the nation, and of giving more vigor to the discipline of the army, which has been for some time ... and almost extinguished by our civil dissensions; desirous also of manifesting to the people of the city of Mexico, and others in the possession of the city of Mexico, and others in the possession of the enemy, that their fate is not disregarded by his excellency; considering that in every well organized country that the generals of the army should answer before a tribunal for the faults which they have committed, and even the defeats which they have suffered in their campaigns, has resolved that you should deliver the command in chief of the army to his excellency, the commander of division, Don Manuel Rincon. The provisional president directs that you establish your residence in the place you should judge convenient, with the consent of the supreme government, and there await, under the guarantee of your word of honor the orders for a formation of a council of war composed of general officers, who shall judge you for the loss of the actions which you have directed as general-in-chief in the present war, and particularly for the loss of the capital of the republic. His excellency the president believes that your honor requires that your military conduct may be submitted to a decision, the result of which he hopes may be favorable and honorable to you. I have the grief to communicate to your excellency the supreme order, and the honor of offering my distinguished consideration. God and Liberty.

Toluca, Oct. 7, 1847. ROSA.
His excellency the general who deserves well of his country, D. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna.

The above order, it will be seen, is dated the 7th October. It was some days after its date that Santa Anna was engaged at the head of 2,500 cavalry, with Col. Lane's detachment in the battle in which Capt. Walker was killed at Huamantia. [RLLW]

NNR 73.216 Dec. 4, 1847 Atlixco taken, a Mexican Account

BATTLE OF ATLIXCO - MEXICAN ACCOUNT.

Entrance of the Americans with fire and blood into Atlixco.

My beloved Father and Sire, whom I venerate:

Surely your blessing has preserved me in this conjuncture, for the Americans, by their valor and discipline, are invincible, and without exaggeration the attack which they made appeared to me the day of judgment.

I write to you for the purpose of informing you that the army of the United States of America, yesterday afternoon, had a bloody engagement with his excellency, the senior commanding general, Don Joaquin Rea, who was at the head of two thousand infantry, well drilled, well equipped and paid, with all his valiant guerrilleros. But having found it impossible to maintain his position, notwithstanding the profound military knowledge possessed by this ancient soldier of Napoleon, and veteran of independence, he abandoned it with precipitation and retired to the city of Atlixco. And the American army pursuing, and resistance in the impregnable mountain of San Miguel, which, however, was carried by American valor, notwithstanding it was covered with two thousand more troops and one cannon. In this action we had much need of the valiant National Guards, of Huachamanga, who the day before yesterday were commanded by the governor to retire, and who slept at Cholula, and marched out at 1 o'clock in the morning, on their march, with much apprehension.

The American army possessed themselves of this hill, in which they encountered the most admirable firmness of the patriotic Mexicans, who retired to the centre of the city and discharged much musketry from the houses and churches, which served for strong walls of defence. These were attacked by fire, for the artillery was directed with great force against the plaza, into which they threw about 211 shots and shells. This superiority of arms compelled the Mexicans to ask a truce, which resulted in a capitulation, which was commenced at 7 o'clock, at which hour I have the satisfaction to take up my pen to write.

I know not the loss which the American army has suffered, but am assured that it has been very small, whilst we have had 219 Mexicans killed, 300 more wounded, and several guerrillas taken prisoners, of those who call themselves the "poisoned lancers."

I omitted to mention to you, that the Senor Gen. Rea, has departed with his most confidential adjutants, for the south, and on yesterday morning his excellency, the governor, took flight, attended with the most loyal employees. He intends to establish himself at Jalapa, a place very suitable to oppose the enemy with that valor which he has always exhibited and will continue to exhibit.

The Senor Deputy; in consequence of his accelerated flight to Matamoros, has omitted to pay me the draft, but I have had it protested, and in consequence thereof, you will take from the trunk the silver plate, which I consider ought to be sold to pay the expenses of your journey. Starting from your city you will await me at Tepeaca for which place I start this moment.

When I see you I will give you particulars, and now, business aside, I request you to avail yourself of the humble respect with which you are venerated by your affectionate son,

JOSE EDUARDO HERNANDEZ.

NNR 73.216-217 Dec. 4, 1847 manifesto of Gen. Mariano Paredes

MANIFESTO OF PAREDES.
We are persuaded that our readers will peruse with interest the following manifesto of General Paredes, an ex-president of Mexico, and, in view of those vested to judge, and honest man and a patriot.

Manifesto of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arrillaga to his fellow citizens.

Countrymen: - The force of circumstances and events constrained my to absent myself from my family and to leave my country. I sought in Europe an exile, where I devoured in silence the grief which I suffered as a father and a citizen - severe is the task of stifling the feelings so natural under such circumstances. Notwithstanding, nothing so depressed my spirits, nothing so preyed upon my heart, as the impossibility of giving to my country the same services which I rendered her in the happier days of her independence - fighting for her and pouring out my blood.

This exile, and the constrained inaction to which I was condemned, were to me a most costly sacrifice. But one single consideration could have brought me to submit to it, the necessity of depriving my enemies of the pretext that in my person an obstacle was presented to the defence of then national territory, the fate of which caused me the most painful disquietude, for I foresaw the consequences, and the danger was becoming constantly more imminent.

It is easy to conceive of agony of such a position; and the anxiety in which I lived. I sought, unceasingly to take part in the current of events, but the distance rendered this impossible; each day seemed to me an age. In the meanwhile the most sinister rumors were current in Europe, which are ever the precursors of the great calamities that nations endure; the republic was insulted, humiliated, abashed; its gratuitous enemies and those who were ill-disposed towards it, omitted nothing which could injure it. Unhappily the events of Monterey, the An..ra, Vera Cruz, and Cerro Gordo ensued to confirm those ominous portents, and they increased my anxiety and my distress. I saw with dread a large portion of the territory of the republic in the power of the enemy; the states of Chihuahua, Coahuila, New Leon, Tamaulipas, New Mexico and the Californias had been invaded; a like fate had befallen Vera Cruz; ... occupied, and the battle of Cerro Gordo laid open the road to the capital and exposed the nation to the gravest and most frightful consequences. On every side the republic was assaulted; she was hemmed in by a line of steel, and the cause of justice succumbed in every encounter. Difference of opinion did not disappear; civil war again presented itself, and the blood shed in the combats with the foreign foe was not sufficient to extinguish civil dissensions.

Such a state of affairs was terrible, for who could look with indifference upon calamities like these, following one after the other! Who could think upon the conflict and the difficulties in which the country was involved without feeling a vehement desire to sacrifice himself in her ...? Do you suppose that a citizen in whose breast had once burned the purest patriotism, could look with frigid egotism upon such calamities? Could a soldier, ... and cowardly though he were, remain an unconcerned spectator, far from the scene and the places where the conflict was going on for a cause so just and interests so sacred? Could he watch unmoved the audacious strides which the invader was making on his work of iniquity? Misfortune never has overwhelmed my soul, but my prostrate country could not survive calamities like these. I declare to you with all sincerity, I hesitated not a moment, and followed the impulses of my heart, inspired by a patriotism pure and free from personal speculations, I embraced the resolution of coming to join my efforts with yours in favor of our country. I reflected not that I had enemies among my countrymen, for I had been the enemy of none; I never considered that I should become the mark of poisonous shafts of ... for I was satisfied with the purity of my intentions; all within me was truth. I came to offer my services to a country which saw me in the ranks of her glorious independence, and if necessary to sacrifice myself for her. I harbored neither suspicion nor fears, neither resentments nor enmities. I sought to unite my efforts in those of her other .... began to present the country to the world in an attitude of dignity and to command respect. I came not to arouse nor to inflame the passions of Mexicans against Mexicans, nor to excite recollections painful for the country. But one though occupied me, and that was that there was still a foot hold left from which to fight, still a space where the war might yet be waged, and that the soil moistened with the blood of so many martyrs might again become the theatre of lofty prowess in which valor and patriotism could obtain their deserved reward.

Occupied exclusively with this idea, I gave notice to the government of my determination from Paris under date of the 17th June last. I made with all haste my preparations, for the voyage, and embarked at Southampton on the July ... I reached Vera Cruz on the 14th of August, and as I learned in Havana that the same packet would convey to the governor of Vera Cruz intelligence of my coming, was the first step to leap ashore, and changing my dress I had the good fortune to escape from he city, incognito, before the commandant of the enemy had time to take measures, consequent upon the betrayal of me by an unworthy man who had recognised me.

The precautions we had taken, and the promptitude with which I acted saved me, for five minutes had not elapsed before the gates of the city were closed, and an order given to the cavalry outside the walls, to give chase and pursue me; but all their measures were fruitless, for I fled with rapidity, taking the road of La Soledad, and thence I continued my journey through a multitude of dangers such as they encounter who travel through a country overrun with evil doers. I proceeded to Cordova and Orriba, and at last reached Palmer, from which point I again addressed his excellency the minister of war, notifying him of my arrival, and offering services. Little regard was paid my overtures; my proffered services were contemptuously rejected, and not only were the good wishes which animated me disregarded, but a surveillance was ordered upon me. And directions were given to the governor of Vera Cruz to seize and reship me, and to the governors of the other states, including the commandantes generales, to conduct me a prisoner to Acapulco.

Fortunately these orders, dictated by a hatred the most concentrated, by an ignoble thirst for vengeance, by the most profound resentment, and, what is more criminal that all, by prior engagements which the head of the Mexican government had entered into with the United States, were rendered ... who could have executed these orders, and by whose sentiments of justice not yet extinct among Mexicans, and by the horror excited by the idea of converting them into the instruments of ... unworthy passions. They refused with honest indignation to execute those orders, well knowing, the shameless tyranny in which they originated. It was notorious that the president of the republic had no authority to issue them, for it was expressly forbidden by the third article of April 20th of this year to impose penalties upon Mexicans, notwithstanding the design of the decree was to invest him with extraordinary powers. It was an outrage, for it violated the most sacred guarantees. I had not lost my position as a Mexican; I was entitled to return freely to my country; there was no legal resolution, no measure passed in regard to me promoting my return. I was under the protection of the laws, and these are the reasons why these orders were ... which commanded at my re-embarkation, my seizure and imprisonment, orders directed against a man who, oppressed with infirmities and with affliction at seeing his country destroyed, her independence and nationality threatened with extinction, sought to die on her soul, and solicited any place whatever amongst the ranks of his countrymen to accompany him to the combat.

During this unjust persecution by the man who ... depth of that abyss in which we now see her, I received repeated requests from military chiefs to place myself at the head of the troops which they commanded; but I constantly refused, so as not to afford to my enemy by a division of the army an excuse by which he could palliate or gloss over the disasters caused by his want of skill, and stupidity, by his total military incapacity. Now that he has detached himself from the direction of the government by abandoning it, I await employment from the government which has succeeded him, should it be deemed proper, and should it be thought that my services may be of any use. I will never accept any command unless it be by the order of the government.

Here, fellow-citizens, have I written in a few words my sincerity and good faith, the history of my return to the republic, the conduct which I observe upon my arrival therein, and of the position which I now maintain. Let calumny, hatred and malevolence invent reports against me as they please, my actions will constantly give the lie to them.

I desire that you would seriously fix your attention upon the situation in which the country is placed. - It demands vast efforts and sacrifices. Its prostration is the fruit of divisions and exacerbation of passions, of political hatred, of rivalries and distrust, pushed to the greatest extremes. Let us repudiate our errors, let us detest our irregularities, and let the school of misfortune make us cautious for the future. Let not the lessons of experience be lost upon us; let us not be blinded by illusions. Let us apply a remedy to the ills of the nation, and recognizing its true ... trepidly driving back the enemy who has penetrated to the heart of the country, that so we may prevent the humiliation and annihilation of our country.

MARIANO PAREDES Y ARRILLAGA.

Tulancingo, Sept. 29, 1847

[NRR 73.217 Dec. 4, 1847 Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna's farewell address, items, Mexican force in the field, affairs from the capital]

SANTA ANNA'S FAREWELL ADDRESS. Headquarters, Huamantla, Oct. 16, 1847.

The general-in-chief of the army to his companions in arms;

My Friends: When we anticipated obtaining a triumph for the country over our invaders, according to the [illegible] in which you are no strangers, and while I was exclusively occupied in carrying on hostilities against the enemy as you well know, which object alone brought us this way, I received surprising communication of Don Luis de la Rosa, minister of state and war, in which he informs me that by order of his excellency the president of the supreme court of justice, charged with the supreme executive power, by the appointment which I made to that effect in my decree of the 16th of last September, I am to deliver the command of this body of troops to this excellency, general of division, Don Manuel Rincon, or to Don Juan Alvarez, holding the same rank. Although against so strange a proceeding I could argue many objections, as I will do in due time before the nation, in order to preserve the dignity of the appointment which the sovereign constitutional congress made in my person as president ad interim, yet delicacy and patriotism induce me to obey without reply the individual who has just removed from my hands the power which the nation had confided to me, and when I merely relinquish in order to carry on the war against our unjust invaders. I do not wish to furnish a pretext to my implacable enemies to calummate me, nor to have it said that I avoided presenting myself to answer for my conduct as a public man.

From these motives I separate myself from you with the profoundest regret. You are my companions in misfortune, but you are the faithful servants of the nation. Your virtues are known to me, and you know that our intentions were to finish fighting for the most sacred of causes, or to snatch from fortune some important favor. I depart from you and the theatre of the war, perhaps to sacrifice myself to the vengeance of my enemies, or to effect an inglorious peace which I did not wish to grant, because it was repugnant to my conscience.

Soldiers! be faithful servants to your country! - Let me no misfortune intimidate you. Perhaps the moment is not far distant when conducted by another more fortunate chieftain, fortune will be propitious to you.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

NNR 73.218 Dec. 4, 1847 liberty of the press restored in Mexico City

The liberty of the press has been entirely restored in this city, and in addition to seven Mexican and French papers at present published, we have two American papers. Both of the latter are well supported, especially the American Star, by the pioneer printer, publisher and editor, J.H. Peoples. I will send your files of both, if an opportunity ever presents itself. [RLLW]

NNR 73.222 Dec. 4, 1847 official report on the actions of the first regiment of US volunteers of New York in the storming of Chapultepec and the advances on Mexico City

Headquarters, 1st regiment U.S. volunteers of N.Y., City of Mexico, Sept. 16, 1847.

To Capt. F. N. Page, A. A. Adj. Gen.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the 1st regiment U.S. volunteers of New York, in the affairs of the 12th and 13th instant.

In the absence of Col. Ward B. Burnett, who was still confined at the Hacienda Miquaque, from a wound received on the 20th ultimo, at Los Potalis, Lieutenant Col. Charles Baxter was in command of the regiment. The regiment after furnishing the different details that had been ordered for the storming party, light battalion and batteries, was reduced to 280 officers and men. We arrived at Tacubaya on the morning of the 12th instant, and were posted until about 8 o'clock on the morning of the 13th instant, on the right of the road from Tacubaya to the city, and near Capt. Drum's battery, to protect said battery.

About 8 A. M. on the 13th, as the division filed past the gate on the Tacubaya road, Col. Baxter received orders to advance and storm the castle. After proceeding about half a mile, he was ordered by the general to file to the left by a ranche through a corn field. Here we were received by a shower of grape, canister, and musket balls, when Col. Baxter fell severely wounded, gallantly leading the charge. I immediately took command, and in ascending the hill was struck by a spent ball, which disabled me for a few minutes, during which time I directed Captain Taylor to command the battalion.

Notwithstanding the difficult nature of the ground, intersected as it was by numerous ditches, and swept by a galling fire from the enemy, the regiment which I had the honor to command was the first at the ditch, the first in the enemy's works, and the first to place the national flag upon the conquered castle. Gen. Bravo, commanding the garrison, surrendered himself a prisoner of war to Charles B. Brower, commanding company F. The castle having surrendered, I was ordered by the general to proceed with my command on the Tacubaya road, and was halted at the aqueduct, where the men refilled their cartridge boxes. After a short rest, we advanced towards the Garita de Belen, where the skirmishing parties under command of Captains Hungerford and Taylor, were detailed by order of Gen. Quitman, and rendered essential service in driving the enemy from the batteries at the Garita. A working party was also detailed to carry sand bags, fill ditches, and make a road under the direction of Lieut. Pinto, of company D. Capt. Barclay was then ordered to superintend the building of a breast work, and rendered the efficient aid as second in command, throughout the day. The acting adjutant Lieutenant Charles Innes, having been wounded about this time, I appointed Lieut. [illegible] of company K in his place, and assigned Lieut. Francis G. Boyle to the command of company.

At dusk a large working party was detailed from the N. York and Pennsylvania regiments, and placed under the command of Capt. Fairchild, in order to erect a battery in front of the Garita, as well as to strengthen our position in other respects. At daylight the following morning we marched with the rest of the division into the capital.

I feel that it is due to Doctors Edwards and McSherry of the marine corps, to thank them for their kind attention to our wounded during the absence of our surgeon, Dr. M. B. Halstead, who was ordered to remain in charge of the hospital at Misquaque. - Capt. Hutton comissary to the regiment, was left in command at Misquaque, and was active in forwarding supplies. Capt. Van Olinda was killed, gallantly leading his company to the charge, and Lieut. Mayne Reid severely wounded at the head of his company on the hill.

In closing my report, I must do justice to those gallant officers, by particular notice, whose assistance to me, both in the attack on Chapultepec and the advance on the city, added greatly to the brilliant results of the day. They were Captains Barclay, Taylor, Hungerford, Fairchild, and Pearson; the latter fell early in the engagement, severely wounded, Lieuts. Henry, whose gallantry deserves special notice, Miller, McCabe, [illegible], Brower, Griffin, Green, Boyle, Scannel, Farmsworth, Dorning and Doremus.

A list of the killed, wounded, and missing in the storming of the castle, and the subsequent battles on the road to Mexico, is herewith enclosed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully yours, &c,

Signed] JAMES C. BURNHAM,
Lieut. Col. commanding U.S. regiment.

REPORTS OF THE BRIGADIER GENERAL LANE

Puebla, (Mexico,) October 13, 1847.

SIR: I have the honor to announce to you the arrival of my command at this place on yesterday at 1 o'clock. Before entering this city, I had learned satisfactorily that Col. Childs had been besieged forty days, and that his position was becoming a very critical one, principally for the want of proper supplies. For the particulars of this siege I respectfully refer you to the report of Col. Childs himself. As my command [illegible] the city firing was distinctly [illegible] and feeling confident that my force was sufficient to enter the city at once, I directed Col. Brough, with the Ohio and Captain Heitzleman's battalion, to [illegible] with the Indiana regiment, to proceed by a street further to the east and left. Upon our approach, I found an enemy upon the house-tops and in the streets, firing occasional shots. The troops moved up toward the main plaza, driving the scattering forces of the enemy before them, and completely clearing the streets and city, and killing a few of the enemy. Immediately all was quiet and order restored. I should remark, also, that I found ten or twelve of Col. Child's men who had been killed by the enemy that morning, and but a short time before our entering the city. Col. Childs and command are entitled to the highest consideration from his government for the gallant defence they have made against the repeated attacks of the enemy during the long and serious siege.

My thanks are due to the whole of my command for the gallant manner in which they obeyed my orders, and attacked and drove the enemy.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully your most obedient servant,
SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of an engagement between a part of me force and the enemy, under the command of General Santa Anna, at the city of Huamantla, on the 9th instant:

After my departure from Vera Cruz, and when near the San Jose river, a party of guerrillas was observed near the hacienda of Santa Anna. Capt. Lewis' company of [illegible] volunteers was detached to pursuit; a portion of the command, under Lieut. Lilly, came upon the enemy, and had a smart skirmish with them. Lieut. Lilly behaved in the most gallant manner, rallying and encouraging his men under a most severe fire. Upon leaving Paso de Orejas, the rear guard was fired upon by a small guerrilla force, and I regret to have to announce the death of Lieut. Cline, who was shot in the affair. He is reported to have been a most energetic and efficient young officer, belonging to Capt. Lewis' company of Louisiana mounted volunteers.

At various points on the road [illegible] reached me that a large force was concentrating between Perote and Puebla. These rumors were confirmed on my arrival at the former place, and I also received the additional intelligence that Santa Anna in person commanded them, having about four thousand men and six pieces of artillery. No molestation occurred until my arrival at the hacienda of San Antonio Tamaris, at which place, through the medium of my spies, I learned that the enemy were at the city of Huamantla. Leaving my train packed at the former place, guarded by Col. Brough's regiment Ohio volunteers, Captain Simmons' battalion of three companies, and Lieut. Pratt's battery, my force consisting of Col. Wynkoop's battalion of mounted men, under command of Captain Samuel H. Walker, mounted riflemen, and five pieces of artillery, assisted by Lieut. Field, artillery. On arriving near the city, at about one o'clock P.M., Capt. Walker, commanding the advanced guard, (of horsemen,) was ordered to move forward ahead of the column, (but within supporting distance,) to the entrance of the city, and if the enemy were in force to await the arrival of the infantry before entering. When within about three miles, parties of horsemen being seen making their way through the fields towards the city, and it the enemy were in force to await the arrival of the infantry before entering. When within about three miles, parties of horsemen being seen making their way through the fields towards the city, Captain Walker commenced a gallop. - Owing to the thick maguey bushes lining the sides of the road, it was impossible to distinguish his further movements. But a short time had elapsed when firing was heard from the city. The firing [illegible], the column was pressed forward as rapidly as possible. At this time a body of about 2,000 lancers was seen hurrying over the hills towards the city. I directed Col. Gorman, with his regiment, to advance towards and enter the west side of the city [illegible] Colonel Wynkoop's battalion, with the artillery, moved towards the east side, Capt. Heintzelman's moving on his right, and Major Lally's constituting the reserve.

Upon arriving at the entrance to the city, Captain Walker discovering the main body of the enemy in the plaza, (about 500 in number,) ordered a charge. [illegible] hand to hand conflict took place between the [illegible]; but so resolute was the charge, that the enemy were obliged to give way, being driven from their guns. They were pursued by our dragoons for some distance, but the pursuit was checked by the arrival of their reinforcements. Col. Gorman's [illegible] on arriving at the entrance to the city about the same time as the reinforcements of the enemy, opened a well directed fire, which succeeded in routing them. With the left wing of his regiment he proceeded in person towards the upper part of the town where the enemy still were, and succeeded in dispersing them. Col. Wynkoop's command, with the batteries, assumed their position; but before they were within range the enemy fled in haste. The same occurred with Capt. Heintzelman's command. The enemy entering the town and becoming somewhat scattered, Major Lally, with his regiment, proceeded across the holds to cut off his rear and intercept his retreat. This movement not being perceived, I ordered him to advance towards the town: thus depriving him, unintentionally, of an opportunity of doing good service. Captain Walker's force had been engaged some three quarters of an hour before the infantry arrived to his support. He succeeded in capturing two pieces of artillery from the enemy, but was not able to use them, owing to the want of priming tubes, although every effort was made. On this occasion every officer and soldier shaved with the utmost coolness, and my warmest thanks are due to them. Col. Gorman, Lieut. Col. Humont, and Major McCoy, of the Indiana regiment; Col. Wynkoop, Pennsylvania; volunteers; Major Lally and Captain Heintzleman, rendered me most efficient service by their promptness in carrying into execution my orders. To Surgeons Reynolds and Lamar the highest commendations are due joining us as they did in the charge of the cavalry. Surgeon Reynolds, side by side with Captain Walker, rushed on the enemy's lines, and, after the conflict was ended, rendered professional [illegible] of the wounded, promptly performing amputation and other surgical operations on the field of battle. Lieut. Claborne, mounted riflemen, captured a six pounder in a gallant manner; while Captain Fitzhuman, company C. mounted riflemen, captured a mounted howitzer. Corporal Tilman is highly spoken of by all. Lieut. Anderson, Georgia volunteers, succeeded in capturing Col. La Vega and Major Iturbide, narrowly escaping with his life. The cavalry were much exposed, and behaved with that daring which characterizes American soldiers on every occasion of danger. My thanks are due to the members of my staff present, for their promptness in serving me.

Capt. Besancon, with his command of (mounted) Louisiana volunteers, in following the command of Capt. Walker, was separated by a large body of lancers from the remainder of the squadron, but gallantly succeeded in cutting his way through them. Lieut. Henderson, Louisiana volunteers, was acting as one of my aids.

The colors of the Indiana regiment were planted on the arsenal the moment the enemy were routed. This victory is saddened by the loss of one of the most chivalric, noble hearted men that grace the profession of the arms - Captain Samuel H. Walker, of the mounted riflemen. Foremost in the advance he [illegible] the enemy when he fell mortally wounded. In his death the service has met with a loss which cannot easily be repaired. Our total loss is thirteen killed and eleven wounded. We succeeded in capturing one six pounder lance gun and one mountain howitzer, both mounted, together with a large quantity of ammunition and wagons, which I was compelled to destroy. The enemy's loss was about one hundred and fifty. I must beg leave to further mention Lieut. B.P. McDonald, 3d artillery, who was sent with an order into the town previous to my entry, accompanied by Mr. Bradley, of the quartermaster's department. He was surrounded by lancers, but succeeded in escaping.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

JOSEPH LANE, Brig. Gen.

NRR 73.223 Dec. 4, 1847 Gen. Joseph Lane's official account of the engagement at Huamantla

BATTLE OF ATLIXCO.

Headquarters Department Perote,

Perote, October 22, 1847.

SIR: On the evening of the 18th instant learning that Gen. Rhea was in command of a considerable force of the enemy at Atlixco, about ten leagues from this place, I ordered a movement for the net morning at 11 o'clock. My force consisted of the 4th Ohio and 4th Indian regiments, Major Lally and Captain Heintzleman's battalions, Col. Wynkoop's battalion of four companies, (1st Pennsylvania volunteers) Captain Taylor's and Lieut. Pratt's batteries of light artillery, and a squadron of dragoons, commanded by Captain Ford, 3d dragoons - About 4 o'clock P. M., when near Santa Isabella seven leagues from this place, the advance guard of the enemy was discovered. A halt was ordered into the cavalry, which had previously been detached to [illegible] a hacienda, should arrive. The enemy with his accustomed bravado, came to the foot of the hill in small parties, firing their escopetas and waving their lances. On the arrival of the cavalry forward movement was made by the column. A large ravine appearing on the left of the road Lieut. Col. Moore, with his Ohio regiment, was ordered to flank it, Major Lally with his battalion leading the advance. Our column had scarcely commenced its movement, when signs of confusion were visible among the enemy. In consequence of which the cavalry was ordered to charge, follow them up and engage them until the infantry could arrive. - Lieut. Pratt with his battery was ordered to follow in rear of the dragoons at a gallop. Had this movement been performed, the whole force would have been ours. But by an order from Maj. Lally, Lieut. Pratt was taken from the place assigned him by me and in consequence detained until a greater portion of the ground, it was impossible for his battery to proceed with rapidity.

The cavalry pursued the retreating enemy for about a mile and a half, skirmishing with them.
On arriving at a small hill, they made a stand and fought severely until our infantry appeared, when they took flight. Our artillery fired a few shots as soon as it came up, but without effect, as by their rapid retreat they had placed themselves at long range. The dragoons were again ordered to follow and keep them engaged. After a running fight of about four miles and when within a mile and a half of Atlixco, the whole body of the enemy was discovered on a hill side, covered with a chaparral, forming hedges, behind which they had posted themselves. Our cavalry dashed among them, cutting them down in great numbers. So think was the chaparral that the dragoons were ordered to dismount, and fight them on foot. A most bloody conflict ensued, fatal to the enemy. Our infantry for the last six miles had been straining themselves to the utmost to overtake the enemy, pressing forward most arduously, notwithstanding the forced march of sixteen miles since 11 o’clock. Owing to the nature of the road, almost entirely destroyed by gullies, the artillery could only advance at a walk. As soon as the infantry again appeared in sight, the enemy again retreated. So worn out were our horses (the sun having been broiling hot all day) that they could pursue the enemy no further. The column was pressed forward as rapidly as possible towards the town; but night had already shut in, giving us, however, the advantage of a full moonlight. As we approached several shots were fired at us, and, deeming it unsafe to risk a street fight in an unknown town at night, I ordered the artillery to be posted on a hill near to the town, and overlooking it, and open its fire. - Now ensued one of the most beautiful sights conceivable. Every gun was served with the utmost rapidity; and the crash of the walls and the roofs of the houses when struck by our shot and shell, was mangled with the roar of our artillery. The bright light of the town enabled us to direct our shots to the most thickly populated parts of the town.

After firing three quarters of an hour, and the firing from the town having ceased, I ordered Major Lally and Colonel Brough to advance cautiously with their commands into the town. On entering I was waited upon by the ayuntamiento, desiring that their town might be spared. After searching the next morning for arms and ammunition, and disposing of what was found, I commenced my return.

Gen. Rea had two pieces of artillery; but as soon as he was aware of our approach, he ordered them with haste to Matamoros, a small town eleven leagues beyond. The enemy state their own loss in this action to be 219 killed and 300 wounded. On our part, we had one man killed and one wounded. Scarcely ever has a more rapid forced march been made than this, and productive of better results. Atlixco had been the headquarters of guerrillas in this section of country, and of late the seat of government of this state. From hence all expeditions have been fitted out against our troops. So much terror has been impressed upon them, at thus having war brought to their own homes, that I am inclined to believe they will give us no more trouble.

The cavalry under Captain Ford deserves my very warmest thanks. The services performed by them was of a most arduous and dangerous character, and nobly did they sustain themselves. To Capt. Lewis, Lieuts. Waters and Lilly, it is but justice to recommend the particularly to the notice of the department for their gallantry. Also Lieut. Martin, 3d dragoons, commanding for the time Captain Ford's company, behaved in a [illegible]. To the commanders of regiment [illegible], to Captain Taylor, 3d artillery, and Lieut. [illegible], 2d artillery, commanding batteries of light artillery, I am under great indebtedness. To Lieut. Sears, 2d artillery, acting A. A. G., for his promptness and efficiency throughout the day in carrying my orders, also my highest thanks are due Lieut. Henderson, Louisiana regiment, Lieut. [illegible] regiment, and Lieut. McDonald, assistant quartermaster, deserve my thanks for efficient service during the day. To my secretary, Mr. A. Phelps, my thanks are due. To Doctors Reynolds, Newton, and Lamar, I must tender my thanks.

On my return, when at Cholula, learning that two pieces of artillery had just been finished at Guexocingo, I determined to proceed thither, and took with me a portion of Col. Brough's and Col. Wynkoop's regiments, and a part of Captain Heintzeleman's battalion, and Capt. Taylor's battery - [illegible], 450 men. I made a thorough search of the town; the pieces had been removed, but their carriages were found and destroyed.

On my entry into the town, a party of the enemy were seen, but retreating precipitately.

The next morning, without interruption, I returned to Puebla.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,
JOS. LANE, Brig. Gen.

Hon. W.L. Marcy, secretary of war.

[RRLL]
ADDRESS OF ALBERT GALLATIN.

To the People of the United States, On the subject of the War with Mexico.

I. – THE LAW OF NATIONS:

It seems certain that Mexico must ultimately submit to such terms of peace as the United States shall dictate. A heterogeneous population of seven millions, with very limited resources and no credit; distracted by internal dissensions and by the ambition of its chiefs; a prey by turns to anarchy and to military usurpers; occupying among the nations of the civilized world, either physically or mentally, whether in political education, social state, or any other respect, but an inferior position, cannot contend successfully with an energetic, intelligent, enlightened, and united nation of twenty millions, possessed of unlimited resources and credit, and enjoying all the benefits of a regular, strong, and free government. – All this was anticipated; but the extraordinary successes of the Americans have exceeded the most sanguine expectations. All the advanced posts of the enemy (New Mexico, California, the line of the lower Rio del Norte, and all the seaports which it was deemed necessary to occupy) have been subdued. And a small force, apparently incompetent to the object, has penetrated near three hundred miles into the interior, and is now in quiet possession of the far famed metropolis of the Mexican dominions. The superior skill and talents of our distinguished generals and the unparalleled bravery of our troops have surmounted all obstacles. By whomsoever commanded on either side, however strong positions and fortifications of the Mexicans, and with a tremendous numerical superiority, there has not been a single engagement in which they have not been completely defeated. The most remarkable and unexpected feature of that warfare is, that volunteers, wholly undisciplined in every sense of the word, have vied in devotedness and bravery with the regular forces, and have proved themselves in every instance superior in the open field to the best regular forces of Mexico. These forces are now annihilated or dispersed; and the Mexicans are reduced to a petty warfare of guerrillas, which, however annoying, cannot be productive of any important results.

It is true that these splendid successes have been purchased at a price far exceeding their value. It is true that neither the glory of these military deeds, nor the ultimate utility of our conquests, can compensate the lamentable loss of the many thousand valuable lives sacrificed on the field, or the still greater number who have met with an obscure death, or have been disabled by disease and fatigue. It is true that their relatives, their parents, their wives and children, find no consolation for the misery inflicted upon them in the still greater losses experienced by the Mexicans. But if, disregarding private calamities and all the evils of the general nature, the necessary consequences of this war, we revert solely to the relative position of the two countries, the impotence of the Mexicans and their total inability to continue the war, with any appearance of success are still manifest.

The question then occurs: What are the terms which the U. States have a right to impose on Mexico? All agree that it must be an "honorable peace;" but the true meaning of this word must in the first place be ascertained.

The notion that any thing can be truly honorable which is contrary to justice, will, as an abstract proposition, be repudiated by every citizen of the United States. Will any one dare to assert that a peace can be honorable which does not conform with justice?

There is no difficulty in discovering the principles by which the relations between civilized and Christian nations should be regulated, and the reciprocal duties which they owe one another. These principles, these duties, have long since been proclaimed, and the true law of nations is nothing else than the conformity to the sublime precepts of the gospel morality; precepts equally applicable to the relations between man and man, and to the intercourse between nation and nation."

The sanctity of these commands is acknowledged, without a single exception, by every denomination of Christians, or of men professing to be such. The skeptical philosopher admits and admires the precept. To this holy rule we should inflexibly adhere when dictating the terms of peace. The United States, though they have the power, have no right to impose terms inconsistent with justice. It would be a shameful dereliction of principle, on the part of those who were averse to the annexation of Texas, to countenance any attempt to claim an acquisition of territory, or other advantage, on account of the success of our arms.

But in judging the acts of our government, it must be admitted that statesmen think a conformity to these usages which constitute the law of nations, not as it should be, but as it is practically, sufficient to justify their conduct. And by that inferior standard those acts and our duties in relation to Mexico will be tested.

II. INDEMNITIES TO CITIZENS OF THE U. STATES.
The United States had, and continue to have, an indubitable right to demand a full indemnity for any wrongs inflicted on our citizens by the government of Mexico, in violation of treaties or of the acknowledged laws of nations. The negotiations for satisfying those just demands had been interrupted by the annexation of Texas. When an attempt was subsequently made to renew them, it was therefore just and proper that both subjects should be discussed at the same time; and it is now absolutely necessary that those just claims should be fully provided for in any treaty of peace that may be concluded, and that the payment should be secured against any possible contingency. I take it for granted that no claims have been or shall be sustained by our government but such as are founded on treaties or the acknowledged law of the nations.

Whenever a nation becomes involved in a war, the manifestos and every other public act issued for the purpose of justifying its conduct, always embrace every ground of complaint which can possibly be alleged. But, admitting that the refusal to satisfy the claims for indemnity of our citizens might have been a just cause of war, it is most certain that those claims were not the cause of that in which we are now involved.

It may be proper, in the first place, to observe that the refusal of doing justice, in cases of this kind, or the long delays in providing for them, have not generally produced an actual war. Almost always long protracted negotiations have been alone resorted to: This has strikingly always been the case with the United States. The claims of Great Britain for British debts, secured by the treaty of 1783, were not settled and paid till the year 1803; and it was only subsequent to that year that the claims of the United States, for depredations committed in 1793, were satisfied. The very plain question of slaves carried away by the British forces in 1815, in open violation of the treaty of 1814, was not settled and the indemnity paid till the year 1826. The claims against France for depredations committed in the years 1808 to 1813 were not paid for till the year 1834. In all those cases peace was preserved by patience and forbearance.

With respect to the Mexican indemnities, the subject had been laid more than once before congress, not without suggestions that strong measures should be resorted to. But congress, in whom alone vested the power of declaring war, uniformly declined doing it.

A convention was entered into on the 11th day of April, 1839, between the United States and Mexico, by virtue of which a joint commission was appointed for the examination and settlement of claims. The powers of the commissioners terminated, according to the convention, in February, 1842. The total amount of the American claims, presented to the commission, amounted to $6,291,605. Of these, $2,026,140 were allowed by the commissioners of the U. States, rejected by the Mexican commissioners, and left undecided by the umpire, and claims amounting to $3,336,837 had not been examined.

A new convention, dated January 30, 1843, granted to the Mexicans a further delay for the payment of the claims which had been admitted, by virtue of which the interest due to the claimants was made payable on the 30th of April, 1846, and the principal of the awards, and the interest accruing thereon, was stipulated to be paid in five years, in twenty equal installments every three months! The claimants received the interest due on the 30th of April, 1843, and the three instalments due in April and July, 1844, before they had been actually paid by Mexico, the payment has been assumed by the United States and discharged to the claimants.

A third convention was concluded at Mexico on the 20th of November, 1842, by the plenipotentiaries of the two governments, by which provision was made for ascertaining and paying the claims on which no final decisions had been made. In January, 1844, this convention was ratified by the senate of the United States, with two amendments, which were referred to the government of Mexico, but respecting which no answer has ever been made. On the 12th of April, 1844, a treaty was concluded by the president of Texas, for the annexation of that republic to the United States. This treaty, though not ratified by the senate, placed the two countries in a new position, and arrested for a while all negotiations. It was only on the 1st of March, 1845, that congress passed a joint resolution for the annexation.

It appears most clearly that the United States are justly entitled to a full indemnity for the injuries done to their citizens; that before the annexation of Texas, there was every prospect of securing that indemnity; and that those injuries, even if they had been a just cause of war, were in no shape whatever the cause of that in which we are now involved.

Are the United States, justly entitled to indemnity for any other cause? This question cannot be otherwise solved that by an inquiry into the facts, and ascertaining by whom, and how, the war was provoked.

III. ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.

At the time when the annexation of Texas took place, Texas had been recognized as an independent power, both by the United States and by several of the principal European powers; but its independence had not been recognized by Mexico. Nothing can be more clear and undeniable than that, whenever two nations are at war, if a third power shall enter a treaty of alliance, offensive of defensive, with either of the belligerents, and if such treaty is not contingent, and it to take effect immediately and pending the war, such a treaty is a declaration of war against the other party. The causes of the war between the two belligerents do not alter the fact. – Supposing that the third party, the interfering power, should have concluded the treaty of alliance with that belligerent, who was clearly engaged in a most just war, the treaty would not be the less a declaration of war against the other belligerent.

If Great Britain and France were at war, and the United States were to enter into such a treaty with either, can there be the slightest doubt that this would be actual war against the other party; that it would be considered as such, and that it must have been intended for that purpose? If, at this moment, either France or England were to make such a treaty with Mexico, thereby binding themselves to defend and protect it with all their forces against any other power whatever, would not the United States instantaneously view such a treaty as a declaration of war, and act accordingly?

But the annexation of Texas by the United States was ever more than a treaty of offensive or defensive alliance. It embraced all the conditions and all the duties of growing out of the alliance; and it imposed them forever. From the moment when Texas had been annexed, the United States became bound to protect and defend her, so far as her legitimate boundaries extended, against any invasion or attack on the part of Mexico; and they uniformly acted accordingly.

There is no impartial publicist who will not acknowledge the indubitable truth of these positions. – It appears to me impossible that they should be seriously denied by a single person.

It appears that Mexico was at the time disposed to acknowledge the independence of Texas, but on the express condition that it should not be annexed to the United States; and it has been suggested that this was done under the influence of some European powers. Whether this last assertion be true or not is not known to me. But the condition was remarkable and offensive.

Under an apprehension that Texas might be tempted to accept the terms proposed, the government of the United States may have deemed it expedient to defeat the plan, by offering that annexation which had been formerly declined, when the government of Texas was anxious for it.

It may be admitted that, whether independent or annexed to the United States, Texas must be a slaveholding state so long as slavery shall continue to exist in North America. Its whole population, with hardly any exception, consisted of citizens of the United States. Both for that reason and on account of its geographical position, it was much more natural that Texas should be a member of the United States than of the Mexican confederation. Viewed purely as a question of expediency, the annexation might be commenced as beneficial to both parties. –
But expediency is not justice. Mexico and Texas had a perfect right to adjust their differences and make peace on any terms they might deem proper. – The anxiety to prevent this result indicated a previous disposition ultimately to occupy Texas: and when the annexation was accomplished; when it was seen that the United States had appropriated to themselves all the advantages resulting from the American settlements in Texas and from their subsequent insurrection, the purity of the motives of our government became open to suspicion.

Setting aside the justice of the proceeding, it is true that it had been anticipated by those who took an active part in the annexation that the weakness of Mexico would compel it to yield, or at least induce her not to resort to an actual war. This was verified by the fact; that had government remained in the hands with whom the plan originated, war might probably have been avoided. But, when no longer in power, they could neither regulate the impulse they had given nor control the reckless spirits they had evoked.

Mexico, sensible of her weakness, declined war, and only resorted to a suspension of diplomatic intercourse; but a profound sense of the injury inflicted by the United States has ever since rankled in their minds. It will be found, through all their diplomatic correspondence, through all their manifestoes, that the Mexicans, even to this day perpetually recur to this never forgotten offensive measure. And, on the other hand, the subsequent administration of our government seems to have altogether forgotten this primary act of injustice, and in their negotiations in have acted as if this was only an accomplished fact, and had been a matter of course.

IV. – NEGOTIATIONS AND WAR

In September, 1845, the president of the United States directed their consul in Mexico to ascertain from the Mexican government whether it would receive an envoy from the United States, entrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments.

The answer of Mr. De la Pena y Pena, minister of the foreign relations of Mexico, was; "That, although the Mexican nation was deeply injured by the United States, through the acts committed by them to the department of Texas, which belongs to his nation, his government was disposed to receive the commissioner of the United States who might climb to the capital, with full powers from his government to settle the dispute in a peaceful, reasonable, and honorable manner;" thus giving a new proof that, even in the midst of its injuries and of its firm decision to exact adequate reparation for them, the government of Mexico does not reply with contumely to the measures of reason and peace, to which it was invited by its adversary.

The Mexican minister at the same time intimated that the previous recall of the whole naval force of the United States, then lying in sight of the port of Vera Cruz, was indispensable; and this was accordingly done by our government.

But it is essential to observe that whilst Mr. Black had, according to his instructions, inquired whether the Mexican government would receive an envoy from the United States with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments, the Mexican minister had answered that his government was disposed to receive the commissioner of the United States who might come with full powers to settle the present dispute in a peaceful, reasonable, and honorable manner.

Mr. Slidell was, in November following, appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America near the government of the Mexican republic, and he arrived in Mexico on the sixth of December.

Mr. Herrera, the president of Mexico, was undoubtedly disposed to settle the disputes between the two countries; but, taking advantage of the irritation of the mass of the people, his political opponents were attempting to overset him for having made, as they said, unworthy concessions. The arrival of Mr. Slidell disturbed him extremely; and Mr. Pena y Pena declared to Mr. Black that his appearance in the capital at this time might prove destructive to the government, and thus detest the whole affair. Under these circumstances Gen. Herrera complained without any foundation, that Mr. Slidell had [illegible] that had been understood; he resorted to several frivolous objections against the tenor of his powers; and intimated that the difficulties inspecting Texas must be adjusted before any other subject of discussion should be taken into consideration.

But the main question was, whether Mexico should receive Mr. Slidell in the character of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to reside in the republic. It was insisted by the Mexican government that it had only agreed to receive a commissioner to treat on the questions which had arisen from the events in Texas, and that until this was done the suspended diplomatic intercourse could not be restored, and a residing minister plenipotentiary admitted.

Why our government should have insisted that the intended negotiation should be carried on by a residing envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary might have been discussed and settled as easily, fully, and satisfactorily by commissioners appointed for that special purpose, as by residing ministers or envoys. It is well known that, whenever diplomatic relations have been superseded by war, treaties of peace are always negotiated by commissioners appointed for that special purpose, who are personally amply protected by the law of nations, but who are never received as resident ministers till after the peace has restored the ordinary diplomatic intercourse. Thus the treaty of peace of 1783, between France and England, was negotiated and concluded at Paris by British commissioners, whom it would have deemed absurd to admit as resident envoys or ministers before peace had been made.

The only distinction which can possibly be made between the two cases is, that there was not as yet actual war between Mexico and the United States. But the annexation of Texas was no ordinary occurrence. It was a most clear act of unprovoked aggression; a deep and most offensive injury; in fact, a declaration of war, if Mexico had accepted it as such. In lieu of this, that country had only resorted to a suspension of the ordinary diplomatic relations. It would seems as if our government had considered this an act of unparalleled audacity; which Mexico must be compelled to retract before any negotiations for the arrangement of existing difficulties could take place; as an insult to the government and to the nation, which must compel it to assert its just rights and to avenge its injured honor.

General Herrera was not mistaken in his anticipations. His government was overset in the latter end of the month of December, 1845, and fell into the hands of those who had denounced him for having listened to overtures of an arrangement of the difficulties between the two nations.
When Mexico felt its inability to contend with the United States, and, instead of considering the annexation of Texas to be, as it really was, tantamount to a declaration of war, only suspended the ordinary diplomatic relations between the two countries, its government, if directed by wise counsels, and not impeded by popular irritation, should at once, since it had already agreed to recognise the independence of Texas, have entered into a negotiation with the United States. At that time there would have been no intrinsic difficulty in making, a final arrangement, founded on an unconditional recognition of the independence of Texas, within its legitimate boundaries. Popular feeling and the ambition of contending military leaders, prevented the peaceable termination of those unfortunate dissensions.

Yet, when Mexico refused to receive Mr. Slidell as an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, the United States should have remembered that we had been the aggressors, that we had committed an act acknowledged, as well by the practical law of nations as by common sense and common justice, to be tantamount to a declaration of war, and they should have waited with patience till the feelings excited by our own conduct had subsided.

Gen. Taylor had been instructed by the war department, as early as May 28, 1845, to cause the forces under his command to be put in a position where they might most promptly and efficiently act in defense of Texas, in the event that it should become necessary or proper to employ them for that purpose. By subsequent instructions, and after the people of Texas had accepted the proposition of annexation, he was directed to select and occupy a position adapted to repel invasion, as near the boundary line, the Rio Grande, as prudence would dictate; and that, with this view, a part of his forces should be west of the river Nueces. It was certainly to the duty of the president to protect Texas against invasion from the moment it had been annexed to the possession of Corpus Christi which, was the position selected by Gen. Taylor, there was nothing, in the position he had taken, indicative of any actual hostilities.

But our government seems to have considered the refusal, on the part of Mexico, to receive Mr. Slidell as a resident envoy of the United States, as necessarily leading to war. The secretary of state, in his letter to Mr. Slidell of January 28, 1846, says:

"Should the Mexican government finally refuse to receive you, the cup of forbearance will then have been exhausted. Nothing can remain but to take the redress of the injuries to our citizens and the insults to our government into our own hands."

And again:

"Should the Mexican government finally refuse to receive you, then demand passports from the proper authority and return to the United States. It will then become the duty of the president to submit the whole case to congress, and call upon the nation to assert its just rights and avenge its injured honor."

With the same object in view, the secretary of war did by his letter dated January 13, 1844, instruct Gen. Taylor –

"To advance and occupy, with the troops under his command, positions on or near the east bank of the Rio del Norte. * * * * It is presumed Point Isabel will be considered by you an eligible position. This point, or some one near it, and points opposite Matamoros and Mier, and in the vicinity of Loredo, are suggested for your consideration. - * * * * Should you attempt to exercise the right which the United States have, in common with Mexico, to the free navigation of this river, it is possible that Mexico would interpose resistance. You will not attempt to enforce this right without further instructions. * * * * It is not designed, in our present relations with Mexico that you should trust her as an enemy; but, should she assume that character by a declaration of war, or any open act of hostility towards us, you will not act merely on the defensive, if your relative means enable you to do otherwise.

The administration was therefore of opinion that this military occupation of the territory in question was not an act of hostility toward Mexico, or treating her as an enemy. Now, I do aver, without fear of contradiction, that whenever a territory claimed by two powers is and has been for a length of time in the possession of one of them, if the others should invade and take possession of one of it by military force, such an act is an open act of hostility according to the acknowledged law of nations only recognises a clear and positive fact.

The sequel is well known. General Taylor, with his troops, left Corpus Christi, March 8th to 11th, 1846, and entered the desert which separtates that place from the vicinity of the Del Norte. On the 21st he was encamped three miles south of the Arroyo, or Little Colorado, having by the route he took marched one hundred and thirty-five miles, and being nearly north of Matamoros, about 30 miles distant. – He had on the 19th met a party of irregular Mexican cavalry, who informed him that they had peremptory orders, if he passed the river, to fire upon his troops, and that it would be considered a declaration of war. The river was, however, crossed without a single shot having been fired.
In a proclamation issued on the 12th, Gen. [illegible] who commanded the forces of the department of Tamaulipas, asserts that the limits of Texas are certain and recognised, and never had extended beyond the river Nueces; that the cabinet of the United States coveted the regions on the left bank of the Rio Bravo, and that the American army was now advancing to take possession of a large part of Tamaulipas. On the 24th of March Gen. Taylor reached a point on the route from Matamoros to Point Isabel, eighteen miles from the former and ten from the latter place, where a deputation sent him a formal protest of the prefect of the northern district of the department of Tamaulipas, declaring, in behalf of the citizens of the district, that they never will consent to separate themselves from the Mexican republic, and to unite themselves with the United States.

On the 12th of April the Mexican General Ampudia required General Taylor to break up his camp within twenty-four hours, and to retire to the other bank of the Nueces river, and notified him that, if he insisted on remaining upon the soil of the department of Tamaulipas, it would clearly result that arms alone must decide the question, in which case he declared that the Mexicans would accept the war to which they had been provoked.

On the 24th of April General Arista arrived in Matamoros, and on the same day informed General Taylor that he considered hostilities commenced, and would prosecute them. On the same day a party of sixty-three American dragoons, who had been sent some distance up the left bank of the river, because engaged with a very large force of the enemy, and after a short engagement, in which about sixteen were killed or wounded, were surrounded and compelled to surrender. These facts were laid before congress by the president in his message of the 11th of May.

V. THE CLAIMS OF TEXAS ON THE [ILLEGIBLE]

From what precedes it appears that the government of the United States considered the refusal of Mexico to receive a resident enemy or minister as a sufficient cause for war, and the Rio del Norte as the legitimate boundary of Texas. The first opinion is now of not importance; but the question of boundary, which was the immediate cause of hostilities, has to this day been the greatest impediment to the restoration of the peace. I feel satisfied that if this was settled there would be no insuperable difficulty in arranging other pretensions.

The United States claim no other portion of the Mexican dominions, unless it be by right of conquest. The tract of country between the Rio Nueces and the del Norte is the only one which has been claimed by both parties as respectively belonging either to Texas or to Mexico. As regards every other part of the Mexican possessions, the United States has never claimed any portion of it. The iniquity of acquiring any portion of it otherwise than by fair compact, freely consented to by Mexico, is self-evident. It is in every respect most important to examine the ground on which the claim of the U. States to the only territory claimed by both nations is founded. It is the main question at issue.

The Republic of Texas did, by an act of Dec. 1836, declare the Rio del Norte to be its boundary. It will not be seriously contended that a nation has a right, a law of its own, to determine what is or shall be the boundary between it and another country. The act was nothing more than the expression of the wishes or pretensions of the government. Its only practical effect was, that, emanating from its congress or legislative body, it made imperative on the executive not to conclude a peace with Mexico unless that boundary was agreed to. As regards right, the act of Texas is a perfect nullity. We want the arguments and documents by which the claim is sustained.

On a first view the pretension is truly startling. – There is no exception: the Rio Norte from its source to its mouth, is declared to be the rightful boundary of Texas. That river has its source within the department, province, or state of New Mexico, traverses through its whole length from north to south, dividing it into two unequal parts. The largest and most populous, including Santa Fe, the capital lies on the east bank of the river, and is therefore embraced within the claim of Texas. Now this province of New Mexico was first visited and occupied by the Spaniards under Vasquez Coronado, in the years 1540 to 1543. It was at that time voluntarily evacuated, subsequently revisited, and some settlements made about the year 1583; finally conquered in 1595 by the Spaniards, under the command of Onate. An insurrection of the Indians re-entered it the ensuing year, and after a long resistance re-conquered it. This was an internal conflict with the Aborigines; but as related to foreign powers the sovereignty of the Spaniards over the territory was never called in question; and it was, in express terms, made the western boundary Louisiana and the royal charter of the French government.

The conquest of the province by Onate took place 5 and 20 years prior to the landing of the Pilgrims in New England, and 12 years before any permanent settlement had been made in North America, on the shores of the Atlantic, by either England, France, Holland, Sweden, or any other power, or that in Florida by any other than Spain herself.
I have in vain sought for any document, emanating from the Republic or state of Texas, for the purpose of sustaining its claim either in New Mexico or in the country bordering on the lower Del Norte. The only official paper within my reach, in which the claim of Texas is sustained by the president's messages of May 11 and December 3, 1846; and these refer only to the country bordering on the lower part of the Del Norte. The portion of the message of May 11, 1846, relating to that subject, is as follows:

"Meantime Texas; by the final action of our congress has become an integral part of our Union. – The congress of Texas, by its act of December 19, 1836, had declared the Rio del Norte to be the boundary of that republic. Its jurisdiction had been extended and exercised beyond the Nueces. The country beyond that river and the Del Norte had been represented in the congress and in the convention of Texas; had thus taken part in the act of annexation itself; and is now included within one of our congressional districts. Our own congress had, moreover, with great unanimity by the act approved December 31, 1845, recognized the country beyond the Nueces as a part of our territory, by including it within our revenue system; and a revenue officer, to reside within that district, has been appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the senate. It became, therefore, of urgent necessity to provide for the defense of that portion of our country. Accordingly, on the 13th of January last, instructions were issued to the general command of these troops to occupy the left bank of the Del Norte.

"The movement of the troops to the Del Norte was made by the commanding general, under positive instructions to abstain from all aggressive acts towards Mexico or Mexican citizens, and to regard the relations between that republic and the United States as peaceful, unless she should declare war or commit acts of hostility indicative of a state war. He was specially directed to protect private property and respect individual rights."

In his annual address of December 8, 1846, the president states that Texas, as ceded to the United States by France in 1803, has been always claimed as extending west to the Rio Grande; that this fact is established by declarations of our government during Mr. Jefferson’s and Mr. Monroe’s administrations; and that the Texas which was ceded to Spain by the Florida treaty of 1819 embraced all the country claimed by the state of Texas between the Nueces and the Rio Grande.

He then repeats the acts of Texas with reference to her boundaries, stating that –

"During the period of more than nine years, which intervened between the adoption of her constitution and her annexation as one of the states of our union, Texas asserted and exercised many acts of sovereignty and jurisdiction over the territory and inhabitants west of the Nueces – such as the organizing and defining limits of counties extending to the Rio Grande, establishing courts of justice, and extending her judicial system over the territory; establishing also a custom-house, post offices, a land officer, &c."

The president designates by the name of Texas the cession of Louisiana by France to the U. States; and he again calls the territory ceded to Spain by the Florida treaty of 1819 the Texas. He intimates that the claim of the United States to the territory between the Sabine and the Rio Norte was derived from the boundaries of Texas, and by claiming as far west as this river, the United States did recognize that it was the boundary of the Texas. I really do not understand what is meant by this assertion.

The United States claimed the Rio Norte as being the legitimate boundary of Louisiana, and not of Texas. Neither they nor France had ever been in possession of the country beyond the Sabine. Spain had always held possession, and had divided the territory into provinces as she pleased. One of these was called Texas, and its boundaries had been designated and altered at her will. With these the United States had no concern. If their claim could be sustained, it must be by proving that Louisiana extended the right thus far. This had no connexion with the boundaries which Spain might have assigned to her province of Texas. These might have extended beyond the Rio del Norte, or have been east of the Rio Nueces. There is not the slightest connexion between the legitimate boundaries of Louisiana extended the right thus far. The presumed identity is mere supposition.

It is not necessary to discuss the soundness of the pretensions to the Rio Norte, asserted by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Monroe, since they were yielded in exchange for Florida, and some other objects, by the treaty of 1819 – a treaty extremely popular at the time, and the execution of which was pressed with great zeal and perseverance.

Whenever ultimately ceded to Mexico, that Republic fixed it boundaries as it thought proper Texas and Coahuila were declared to form a state, and the Rio Nueces was made the boundary of Texas. When Texas declared itself independent, it was the insurrection of only part of a state, for Coahuila remained united to Mexico; but the Rio Nueces was the boundary between the department of Texas and the state of Tamaulipas. The whole contested territory lies within the limits of Tamaulipas, which never was, under the Mexican government, connected in any
The question now under consideration is only that between the United States and Mexico, and in that view of the subject it is quite immaterial whether the acts of the United States emanated from congress or from the executive. No act of either recognizing a country beyond the Nueces as a part of the territory of the United States, can be alleged against Mexico as a proof of their right to the country thus claimed. Any such act is only an assertion, a declaration, but not an argument sustaining the right. It is, however, proper to observe here that the port of delivery west of the Nueces, erected by the act of congress "to establish a collection district in the state of Texas," was at Corpus Christi, a place which was in the actual possession of that state.

It must also be premised that in the joint resolution for the annexation of Texas the question of the boundary between it and Mexico was expressly reserved as one which should be settled by treaty between the United States and Mexico.

The only arguments in the president’s message, which sustain the right of Texas to territory beyond the Nueces, are contained in those passages in which it is asserted that the jurisdiction of Texas had been extended and exercised beyond the Nueces; that the country between that river and the del Norte had been represented in the congress and convention of Texas, had taken part in the annexation of itself, and was now included within one of our congressional districts.

But it is not stated in the president’s message how far beyond the Nueces the jurisdiction of Texas had been extended, nor what part of the country between that river and the del Norte had been represented in the congress and convention of Texas; and was then included within one of our congressional districts.

Now the actual jurisdiction beyond the Nueces never extended further than the adjacent settlement of San Patricio, consisting of about twenty families. That small district, though beyond the Nueces, was [illegible] to, and in the actual possession of Texas: on this account it might be rightfully included within the limits which we were bound to protect against Mexican invasion.

But what was the country between the small settlement of San Patricio, or between Corpus Christi and the Rio del Norte, over which it might be supposed, from the message, that the jurisdiction of Texas had been extended, so as he included within one of our congressional districts? Here, again Texans had erected that small settlement into a county called San Patricio, and declared that this county [illegible] to the Rio del Norte. This, like all other declaratory acts of the same kind, was only an assertion, not affecting the question of right. The State of Texas might, with equal propriety, have declared that their boundary extended to the Sierra Madre or the Pacific. The true question of right to any territory beyond the Mexican limits of the department of Texas depends on the facts: by whom was the territory in question actually inhabited and occupied? and had the inhabitants united with Texas in the insurrection against Mexico?

The whole country between the settlement of San Patricio and Corpus Christi, till with a few miles of the del Norte, is a perfect desert, one hundred and sixty miles wide by the route pursued by General Taylor, as stated by himself, and near one hundred and twenty miles in a straight line.

The only settled part of it is along the left bank of the del Norte, and but a few miles in breadth. – This belt was settled, inhabited, and occupied exclusively by Mexicans. It included the town of Loredo, and Mexico had a custom house at Brasos, north of the mouth of the river. Till occupied by the American arms it had ever been, and was at the time when invaded by Gen. Taylor, a part of the department of Tamaulipas, and subject to the jurisdiction of the prefect of the northern district of that department.

In the course of the war between Mexico and Texas, incursions had been occasionally made by each party into the territories of the other. A Mexican officer had once or twice obtained temporary occupation of San Antonio, within the limits of Texas; and the Texas had on one occasion taken Loredo itself, and more than once had carried their arms, not only to the left bank of the del Norte, but even beyond that river. In both cases the aggressive parties had been repulsed and expelled. The last Texan expedition of that kind took place in December, 1842, and terminated in their defeat at Mier.

That the country adjacent to the left bank of the river was exclusively in the possession of the Mexicans, was well known to our government.

When Gen. Taylor marched into del Norte he issued and order, (No. 30,) translated into Spanish, ordering all under his command to observe with the most scrupulous respect the
In Jun, 1845, Gen. Taylor had been directed to select and occupy, on or near the Rio Grande del Norte, a site as would be best adapted to repel invasion and to protect our western border. But, on the 8th July following, the secretary of war (Mr. Marcy) addressed the following letter to him:

“This department is informed that Mexico has some military establishments on the east side of the Rio Grande, which are, and for some time have been, in the actual occupancy of her troops. In carrying out the instructions heretofore received you will be careful to avoid any acts of aggression, unless an actual state of war should exist. The Mexican forces at the posts in their possession, and which have been so, will not be disturbed as long as the relations of peace between the United States and Mexico continue.”

On the 30th July, 1845, the secretary again addressed Gen. Taylor as follows:

“You are expected to occupy, protect, and defend the territory of Texas, to the extent that it has been occupied by the people of Texas. The Rio Grande is claimed to be the boundary between the two countries; and up to this boundary you are to extend your protection; only excepting nay posts on the eastern side thereof which are in the actual occupancy of Mexican forces, or Mexican settlements over which the republic of Texas did not exercise jurisdiction at the period of annexation, or shortly before that event. It is expected, in selecting the establishment for your troops, you will approach as near the boundary line, the Rio Grande, as prudence will dictate. With this view, the president desires that your position, for a part of your forces at least, should be [illegible].

The Mexican settlements, thus [illegible], are not those over which Texas did not claim jurisdiction, but those on the east bank of the Rio Grande over which Texas did not exercise jurisdiction at the period mentioned. The president had no authority to give up the territory claimed by Texas; but it is clear that at that time, when war was not contemplated, the administration was of opinion that, till the question was definitively settled, the occupancy by the Mexicans of the territory adjacent to the left bank of the del Norte ought not to be disturbed. – Neither the subsequent refusal by Mexico to receive a residing envoy nor the successes of the American arms have affected the question of right. The claim of Texas, whether to New Mexico or to the lower portion of the Rio Norte, was identical the same; as invalid and groundless in one case as in the other. Why a distinction has been made by the executive has not been stated. The fact is, that he has established a temporary government for New Mexico, as a country conquered, and without any regard to the claim of Texas; while, on the other hand, he has permitted that state to extend its jurisdiction over the country lying on the left bank of the del Norte, which, like New Mexico, had been conquered by the arms of the United States. Not a shadow of proof has been adduced to sustain the pretensions of Texas to that district; and justice imperiously requires that it should, by the treaty of peace, be restored to Mexico.

It so happens that the boundary which may be traced in conformity with this principle is a neutral one, and that, as a measure of expediency, none more eligible could have been devised. A desert of one hundred and twenty miles separates the most southwesterly Texan settlements of Corpus Christi and San Patricio from those of the Mexicans on the left bank of the del Norte, than which no boundary could be devised better calculated to prevent collisions hereafter between the two nations. It will be sufficient for that purpose to draw nominal line through the desert, leaving all the waters that empty into the Rio Norte to Mexico, and all those that empty into the Rio Nueces to Texas, together with such other provisions respecting the fortifications and military posts as may be necessary for the preservation of peace.

The line of the Rio Norte is one from which Mexico would be perpetually threatened, and from which their adjacent town on the eastern bank may be bombarded. Such an intolerable nuisance would perpetuate hostile feelings. With such a narrow river as the Rio del Norte, and with a joint right of navigation, repeated collisions would be unavoidable.

Among these, when there was nothing but a fordable river to cross, slaves would perpetually escape from Texas; and where would be the remedy? Are the United States prepared to impose by a treaty on Mexico, where slavery is unknown, the obligation to surrender fugitive slaves?

Mexico is greatly the weaker power, and requires a boundary which will give her as much security as is practicable. It is not required, either for the preservation of peace or any other legitimate purpose, that the United States should occupy a threatening position. It cannot be rationally supposed that Mexico will ever make an aggressive war against them; and even in such a case the desert would protect them against an invasion. If a war should ever again take place between the two countries, the overwhelming superiority of the navy of the United States will enable them to carry on their operations as they please. They would within a month reoccupy the left bank of the Rio Norte, and within a short time effect a landing, and carry the war to any quarter they pleased.

Must the war be still prosecuted for an object of no intrinsic value, to which the United States have no legitimate right, which justice requires them to yield, and which even expediency does not require?

VI. RECAPITULATION

It is an indisputable fact that the annexation of Texas then at war with Mexico, was tantamount to a declaration of war, and that the comparative weakness of Mexico alone prevented its government from considering it as such. Under these circumstances, it was evidently the duty of the United States to use every mean to soothe and conciliate with Mexicans, and to wait with patience for an unconditional recognition of the independence of Texas, till the feelings excited by our aggression had subsided.

It has been shown that after Mexico had resorted, as a substitute for war, to the harmless suspension of the ordinary diplomatic intercourse, the attempt to make it retract that measure, before any negotiations for the restoration of harmony between the two countries could be entered into, was neither [illegible] by the acknowledged law of nations, nor necessary for any useful purpose, nor consistent with a proper and just sense of the relative position in which the aggressive measures of the U. States had placed the two countries. But that the refusal of Mexico to submit to that additional contumely should have been considered as an insult to the U. States betrays the pride of power rather than a just sense what is due to the true dignity and honor of this nation.

It has been demonstrated that the republic of Texas had not a shadow of right to the territory adjacent to the left bank of the lower portion of the Rio Norte; that, though she claimed, she never had actually exercised jurisdiction over any portion of it; that the Mexicans were sole inhabitants, and in actual possession of that district; that therefore its forcible occupation by the army of the U. States was, according to the acknowledged law of nations, as well as in fact, an act of open hostility and war; that the resistance of the Mexicans to that invasion was legitimate; and that therefore the war was unprovoked by them, and commenced by the United States.

If any doubt should remain of the correctness of these statements let them be tested by the divine and undeniable precept, "Do unto others as you would be done by."

If at this moment France was to contract a treaty of defensive and offensive alliance with Mexico, a treaty taking effect immediately, and pending the war between the United States and Mexico, and finding herself to defend it with all her forces against any and every other power, would not the United States at once consider such a treaty as a declaration of war against them?

If, in lieu declaring war against Great Britain in the year of 1812, the United States had only suspended the ordinary diplomatic relations between the two countries, and Great Britain had declared that she would not enter into any negotiation for the settlement of all the subjects of difference between the two countries, unless the United States should, as a preliminary condition, restore those relations, would not this have been considered as a most insolent demand, and to which the United States never would submit?

If the United States were, and had been for more than a century, in possession of a tract of country, exclusively inhabited and governed by them, disturbed only by the occasional forays of an enemy, would they not consider the forcible military invasion and occupation of such a district by a third power as open and unprovoked war commenced against them? And could their resistance to the invasion render them liable to the [illegible] of having themselves commenced the war?

Yet it would seem as if the splendid and almost romantic success of the American arms had, for a while, made the people of the United States deaf to any other consideration than an enthusiastic and exclusive hive of glory; as if, forgetting the origina of the war, and with an entire disregard for the dictates of justice, they thought that those successes gave the nation a right to dismember Mexico and to appropriate to themselves that which did not belong to them.

But I do not despair, for I have faith in our institutions and in the people; and I will now ask them whether this was their mission; and whether they were placed by Providence on this continent for the purpose of cultivating false glory, and of sinking to the level of those vulgar conquerors who have at all times desolate the earth?

VI. – THE MISSION OF THE UNITED STATES
The people of the United States have been placed by Providence in a position never before enjoyed by any other nation. They possessed of a most extensive territory, with a very fertile soil, a variety of climates and productions, and a capacity of sustaining a population greater, in proportion to its extent, than any other territory of the same size on the face of the globe.

By a concurrence of various circumstances, they found themselves, at the epoch of their independence in the full enjoyment of religions, civil, and political liberty, entirely free from any hereditary monopoly of wealth or power. The people at large were in full and quiet possession of all those natural rights for which the people of other countries have for a long time contended, and still do contend. They were, and you still are, the supreme sovereigns, acknowledged by all. For the proper exercise of these uncontrolled powers and privileges, you are responsible to posterity, to the world at large, and to the Almighty Being who had poured on you such unparalleled blessings.

You mission is to improve the state of the world; to be the "Model Republic;" to show that men are capable of governing themselves, and that this simple and natural form of government is that which confers most happiness on all, is productive of the greatest development of the intellectual faculties – above all, that which is attended with the highest standard of private and political virtue and morality.

Your forefathers, the founders of the Republic, imbued with a deep feeling of their rights and duties, did not deviate from these principles. The sound sense, the wisdom, the probity, the respect for public faith, with which the internal concerns of the nation were managed, made our institutions an object of general admiration. Here for the first time, was the experiment attempted with any prospect of success, and on a large scale, of a representative democratic republic. If it failed, the last hopes of the friends of mankind was lost or indefinitely postponed – and the eyes of the world were turned towards you. Whenever real or pretended apprehensions of the imminent danger of trusting the people at large with power were expressed, the answer ever was, "look at America!"

In their external relations the United States, before this unfortunate war, had, whilst sustaining their just rights, ever acted in strict conformity with the dictates of justice, and displayed the utmost moderation. They never had voluntarily injured another nation. Every acquisition of territory from foreign powers was honestly made the result of treaties, not imposed but freely assented to by the other party. The preservation of peace was ever a primary object. The preservation of peace was ever a primary object. The recourse to arms was always in defence. On its expediency there may have been a difference of opinion. That, in the only two instances of conflict with civilized nations which occurred during a period of 63 years, (1783 to 1846,) the just rights of the United States had been invaded by a long continued series of aggressions, is undeniable. In the first instance war was not declared; and there were only partial hostilities between France and England. The congress of the United States, the only legitimate organ for that purpose, did, in 1812, declare war against Great Britain. Independent of depredations on our commerce, she for twenty years carried on actual war against the United States. I say actual war, since there is now but one opinion on that subject; a renewal of that impressments of men sailing under the protection of our flag would be tantamount to a declaration of war. The partial opposition to the war of 1812 did not rest on a denial of the aggressions of England and of the justice of our cause, but on the fact that, with the exception of impressments, similar infractions of our just rights had been committed by France, and on the most erroneous belief that the administration was partial to that country and insincere in their apparent efforts to restore peace.

At present, all these principles would seem to have been abandoned. The most just, a purely defensive war, and no other is justifiable, is necessarily attended with a train of great and unavoidable evils. – What shall we say of one iniquitous in it origin, and provoked by ourselves – of a war of aggression, which is now publicly avowed to be one of intended conquest?

If persisted in, its necessary consequences will be a permanent increase of our military establishment and of executive patronage; its general tendency to make man hate man, to awaken his worst passions, to accustom him to the taste of blood. It has already demoralized no inconsiderable portion of the nation.

The general peace which has been preserved between the great European powers during the last thirty years may not be ascribed to the purest motives. Be these what they may, this long and unusual repose has been most beneficial to the cause of humanity. Nothing can be more injurious to it, more lamentable, more scandalous, than the war between two adjacent republics of North America.

Your mission was, to be a model for all governments and for all other less favored nations, to adhere to the most elevated principles of political morality, to apply all your faculties to the gradual improvement of your own institutions and social state, and by your example, to exert a moral influence most beneficial to mankind at large. Instead of this, an appeal has been made to your worst passions; to cupidity, to the thirst of unjust aggrandizement by brutal force; to the love of military fame and of false glory; and it has even been tried to pervert the noblest feelings of your nature. The attempt is made to make you abandon the lofty position which your fathers occupied, to substitute for it the political morality and heathen patriotism of the heroes and statesmen of antiquity.

I have said that it was attempted to pervert even your virtues. Devotedness to country, or patriotism, is a most essential virtue, since the national existence of any society depends upon it. Unfortunately, our most virtuous dispositions are perverted, not only by our vices and selfishness, but also by their own excess. Even the most holy of our attributes, the religious feeling, may be perverted from that cause, as war but too lamentably exhibited in the persecutions, even unto death, of those who were deemed heretics. It is not, therefore, astonishing that patriotism, carried to excess, should also be perverted. – In the entire devotedness to their country, the people, every where and at all times, have been too apt towards other nations. It is against this natural propensity that you should be specially on your guard. The blame does not attach to those who, led, by their patriotic feeling, though erroneous, flock around the national standard. On the contrary, no men are worthy of admiration, better entitled to the thanks of their country, than those who, after war has once taken place, actuated only by the purest motives, daily and with the utmost self-devotedness, brave death and stake their own lives in the conflict against the actual enemy. I must confess that I do not extend the same charity to those civilians who coolly and deliberately plunge the country into any unjust or unnecessary war.

We should have but one conscience – and most happy would it be for mankind were statesmen and politicians only as honest in their management of the internal of external national concerns as they are in private life. The irreproachable private character of the president and of the members of his administration is known and respected. There is not one of them who would spurn who would spurn with indignation the most remote hint that, on similar pretences to those alleged for dismembering Mexico, he might be capable of attempting to appropriate to himself his neighbor's arm.

In the total absence of any argument that can justify the war in which we are now involved, resort has been had to a most extraordinary assertion. It is said that the people of the United States have and hereditary superiority of race over the Mexicans, which gives them the right to subjugate and keep in bondage the inferior nation. This, it is also alleged, will be the means of enlightening the degraded Mexicans, of improving their social state, and of ultimately increasing the happiness of the masses.

Is it compatible with the principle of democracy, which rejects every hereditary claim of individuals to admit an hereditary claim of individuals to admit an hereditary claim of individuals very properly deny that the son can, independent of his own merit, derive any right or privilege whatever from the merit or any other social superiority of his father. Can you for a moment suppose that a very doubtful descent from men who lived one thousand years ago has transmitted to you a superiority over your fellow men? But the Anglo Saxons were inferior to the Goths, from whom the Spaniards claim to be descended; and they were in no respect superior to the Franks to the Burgundians.

It is not to their Anglo Saxon descent, but to a variety of causes, among which the subsequent mixture of Frenchified Normans, Augevians, and Gascons must not be forgotten, that the English are indebted for their superior institutions. In the progressive improvement of mankind much more has been due to religious and political institutions than to races. Whatever European nations, which from language are presumed to belong to the Latin or Belavonian race, shall have conquered institutions similar to those of England, there will be no trace felt of the pretended superiority of one of those races above the other. At this time the claim is but a pretext for covering and justifying unjust usurpation and unbounded ambition.

But admitting, with respect to Mexico, the superiority of race, this confers no superiority of rights. Among ourselves the most ignorant, the most inferior either in physical or mental facilities, is recognised as having equal rights, and he has an equal vote with any one, however superior to him in all those respects. This is founded on the immutable principle that no one man is born with the right of governing another man. He may indeed, acquire a moral influence over others, and no other is legitimate. The same principle will apply to nations. However, superior the Anglo American race may be to that of Mexico, this gives the Americans no right to infringe upon the rights of the inferior race. The people of the United States may rightfully, and will, if they use proper means, exercise a most beneficial moral influence over the Mexicans and other less enlightened nations of America. Beyond this they have no other right to go.

The allegation that the subjugation of Mexico could be the means of enlightening the Mexicans, of improving their social state, and of increasing their happiness, is but the shallow attempt to disguise unbounded the cupidity and ambition. Truth never was or can be propagated by fire and sword, or by any other than purely moral means; by these, and by these alone, the Christian religion was propagated, in less than three thousand years, to conquer idolatry.
During the whole of that period Christianity was tainted by no other blood than that of its martyrs.

The duties of the people of the United States towards other nations are obvious. Never losing sight of the divine precept, "Do to others as you would be done by," they have only to consult their own conscience; for our benevolent Creator has implanted in the hearts of men the moral sense of right and wrong, and that sympathy for other men the evidences of which are of daily occurrence.

It seems unnecessary to add any thing respecting that false glory which, from habit and the general tenor of our early education, we are taught to admire. The task has already been repeatedly performed in a far more able and impressive manner than any thing I could say on the subject. It is sufficient to say that at this time neither the dignity of the nation are inseparable from justice. Pride and vanity alone demand the sacrifice. Though so dearly purchased, the astonishing success of the American arms have at least put it in the power of the United States to grant any terms of peace without incurring the imputation of being actuated by any but the most elevated motives. It would seem that the most proud and vain must be satiated with glory, and that the most reckless and bellicose should be sufficiently glutted with human gore.

A more truly glorious termination of the war, a more splendid spectacle, an example more highly useful to mankind at large, cannot well be conceived than that of the victorious forces of the United State voluntarily abandoning all their conquests, without requiring any thing else than that which was strictly due to our citizens.

VIII. – TERMS OF PEACE.

I have said that the unfounded claims of Texas to the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Norte was the greatest impediment to peace. Of this there can be no doubt. For if, relinquishing the spirit of military conquest, nothing shall be required but the indemnities due to our citizens, the United States have only to accept the terms which have been offered by the Mexican government. It consents to yield a territory five degrees of latitude, or nearly three hundred and fifty miles in breadth, and extending from New Mexico to the Pacific. Although the greater part of this is quite worthless, yet the portion of California lying between the Sierra Nevada and the Pacific, and including the port of San Francisco, is certainly worth much more than the amount of indemnities justly due to our citizens. It is only in order to satisfy those claims that an accession of territory may become necessary.

It is not believed that the executive will favor the wild suggestions of a subjugation, or annexation of the whole of Mexico, or any of its interior provinces. And, if I understand the terms offered by Mr. Trist, there was no intention to include within the cessions required the province of New Mexico. But the demand of both Old and New California, or of a seacoast of more than thirteen hundred miles in length (latitude 23° to 42°) is extravagant and unnecessary. The peninsula is altogether worthless, and there is nothing worth contending for south of San Diego, or about latitude 32°.

In saying that, if conquest is not the object of the war, and if the pretended calm of Texas to the Rio del Norte shall be abandoned, there cannot be any insuperable obstacles to the restoration of peace, it is by no means intended to assert that the terms heretofore proposed by either party are at this time proper. And I apprehend that the different views of the subject entertained by those who sincerely desire a speedy and just peace may create some difficulty. There are some important considerations which may become the subject of subsequent arrangements. For the present nothing more is strictly required than to adopt the principle of status ante bellum, or in other words, to evacuate the Mexican territory, and to provide for the payment of indemnities due to our citizens. The scruples of those who object to any cession whatever of territory except on terms sufficient for the purpose, and leave it in the possession of the United States until the indemnities had been fully paid.

Were I to listen exclusively to my own feelings and opinions, I would say that, if the propositions which I have attempted to establish are correct – if I am not mistaken in my sincere conviction that the war was unprovoked by the Mexicans, and has been one of iniquitous aggression on our part – it necessarily follows that, according to the dictate of justice, the United States are bound to indemnify them for having invaded their territory, bombarded their towns, and inflicted all the miseries of war on a people who are fighting in defence of their own homes. If all this be true, the United States would give but an inadequate compensation for the injuries they have inflicted by assuming the payment of the indemnities justly due to their own citizens.

Even if a fair purchase of territory should be covenant to both parties, it would be far preferable to postpone it for the present, among other reasons, in order that it should not have the appearance of being imposed upon Mexico. There are also some important considerations to which it may not be improper to call at this time the public attention.
Our population may at this time be assumed as amounting to twenty millions. Although the ratio of national increase has already been lessened from thirty three to about thirty per cent, in ten years, the deficiency has been, an will probably continue for a while to be, compensated by the prodigious increase of immigration from foreign countries. An increase of thirty per cent would add to our population six millions within ten and nearly fourteen millions in twenty years. At the rate of only twenty five per cent, it will add five millions in ten and more than eleven millions in twenty years. – That the fertile uncultivated land within the limits of the states admitted or immediately admissible in the Union could sustain three times that is indubitable. But the indomitable energy, the locomotive propensities, and all the habits of the settlers of new countries are such that not even the united efforts of both governments can or will prevent their occupying within twenty if not within ten years ever district as far as the Pacific, and whether within the limits of the United States or of Mexico, which shall not have previously been actually and bona fide occupied and settled by others. It may be said that this is justifiable by natural law; that, for the same reason which sets aside the right of discovery, if not followed by actual occupation within a reasonable time, the rights of Spain and Mexico have been forfeited by their neglect and inability, during a period of three hundred years, to colonize a country which, during the whole of that period, they held, undisputed by any other foreign nation. And it may, perhaps, be observed that, had the government of the United States waited for the operation of natural and irresistible causes, these alone would have given them, without a war, more than they want at this moment.

However plausible all this may appear, it is nevertheless certain, that it will be an acquisition of territory for the benefit of the people of the United States and in violation of solemn treaties. Not only collisions must be avoided, and the renewal of another illicit annexation be prevented, but the two countries must coolly consider their relative position; and whatever portion of territory, not actually settled by the Mexicans, and of no real utility to them, they may be disposed to cede, must be acquired by a treaty freely assented to, and for a reasonable compensation. But this is not the time for the discussion of a proper final arrangement. We must wait till peace shall have been restored and angry feelings shall have subsided. At present the only object is peace, immediate peace, a just peace, and no acquisition of territory, but that which may be absolutely necessary for effecting the great object in view. The most simple terms, those which will only provide for the adjustment of the Texan boundary and for the payment of the indemnities due to our citizens, and in every respect, restore things as they stood before the beginning of hostilities, appear to me the most eligible. For that purpose I may be permitted to wish that the discussion of the terms should not be embarrassed by the introduction of any other matter. There are other considerations, highly important, and not foreign to the great questions of an extension of territory, but which may, without any inconvenience or commitment, be postponed, and should not be permitted to impede the immediate termination of this lamentable war.

I have gone further than I intended. It is said that a rallying point is wanted by the friends of peace. Let them united, boldly express their opinions, and use their utmost endeavors in promoting an immediate termination of the war. For the people no other banner is necessary. But their representatives in congress assembled are alone competent to ascertain, alone vested with the legitimate power of deciding what course should be pursued at this momentous crisis, what are the best means for carrying into effect their own views, whatever these may be. We may wait with hope and confidence the result of their deliberations.

I have tried in this essay to confine myself to the question of the issue between the United States and Mexico. – Whether the executive has in any respect exceeded his legitimate powers; whether he is for any of his acts liable to animadversion, are questions which do not concern Mexico.

There are certainly some doubtful assumptions of power, and some points which explanations are necessary. The most important is the reason which may have induced the president, when he considered the war as necessary and almost unavoidable, not to communicate to congress, which was all that time in session, the important steps he had taken, till after hostilities, and indeed actual war, had taken place. The substitution of war contributions of an arbitrary and varying tariff appears to me to be of a doubtful nature; and it is hoped that the subject will attract the early attention of congress. I am also clearly of opinion that the provisions of the law respecting volunteers, which authorizes their officers, is a direct violation of the constitution of the United States, which requires no other land force than the army and the militia, and which vests in the president and the senate the exclusive power of appointing all the officers of the United States whose appointments are not otherwise provided for in the constitution of itself. (With respect to precedents, refer to the act of July 6, 1812, chap. 461, cxxviii, enacted with due deliberation, and which repeals, in that respect, the act on the subject of February 6, 1812.) THE SECOND PENNSYLVANIA REGIMENT. Lieut. Rankin, of the 2d Pennsylvania regiment, in a letter to some friends at Pittsburg, mentions the ravages which war has made in that regiment. Of 900 men, who left Pittsburg but one year ago, 300 cannot now be mustered.

"REVELLING IN THE HALLS OF THE MONTEZUMAS."

A private, acting as clerk for General Pierce, writes:

"Our men are assassinated here in the city nightly by the Mexican renegades, who make a practice of killing all they come across who do not happen to have any arms about them. They do not always come out right, for last night one of our men was stabbed at the theatre, and the 2d dragoons turned out and killed about twenty Mexicans before they could be stopped. This is the state of things in the city at the present time.

"To let you know how battle and sickness have thinned the army now in Mexico city, I will state one instance of my own company, which consisted of ninety-five good men when we started from Toledo, but is now reduced to about sixteen men for duty, the remainder being either in the hospital or dead."

OFFICIAL - MILITARY CONTRIBUTIONS

Treasury department, November 16, 1847.

SIR: With a view to augment the military contributions now collected by the departments of war and of the navy, under your order of the 31st of March 1st, I recommend that the export duty exacted before the war by the government of Mexico be now collected at the port of exportation, by the same officers of the army or navy of the United States in the Mexican ports in our possession who are authorized to collect the import duties; abolishing, however, the prohibition of export established in certain cases by the Mexican government, as also all interior transit duties; dispensing also with the necessity of any certificate of having paid any duty to the Mexican government.

The export duty would then be as follows: on - Gold, coined or wrought, three percent.
Silver, coined, six per cent.
Silver, wrought, with or without certificate of having paid any duty to the Mexican government, seven per cent.
Silver, refined or pure, wrought or in ingots, with or without certificate of having paid the Mexican government duty, seven per cent.
Gold, unwrought, or in the state or ore or dust, three per cent.
Silver, unwrought, or in a state of ore, seven per cent.

Where gold or silver, in any form, is taken from any interior Mexican city in our military possession, the export duty must be paid there, to the officer of the United States commanding; and his certificate of such prepayment must be produced at the Mexican port of exportation, otherwise a double duty will be collected upon the arrival of such gold or silver at the Mexican port of exportation. Whenever it is practicable, all internal taxes, of every description, whether upon person or property, exacted by the government of Mexico, or by any department, town, or city thereof, should be collected by our military contribution towards defraying the expenses of the war; excluding, however, all duties on the transit of goods from one department to another, which duties, being prejudicial to revenue and restrictive of the exchange of imports for exports, were abolished, by your order of the 31st of March last.

Yours, most respectfully,
R.J. WALKER. Secretary of the treasury.

To the President.

NNR 73.256 Dec. 18, 1847 account of troops in and around Santa Fe

SANTA FE - A number of recruiting officers have reached St. Louis on the 16th bringing Santa Fe dates to the 20th October. They suffered severely from cold and hunger along their way in. Their object is to obtain 800 recruits, necessary to fill up the ranks of the Illinois and St. Louis battalions, deaths having been daily of occurrence.

Col. Gilpin has arrived with his battalion. Col. Price was at Walnut Hills, and expected to reach Santa Fe about the 1st of December.

NNR 73.256 Dec. 18, 1847 American troops moving against Chihuahua or Mexicans at El Paso

Fifteen hundred American troops and 12 pieces of artillery were to be dispatched against Chihuahua, and three companies were already on the road, but had halted below Albuquerque waiting reinforcements, as it was rumored that the Mexicans had been concentrated at El Paso. The American troops will undoubtedly meet with a stubborn resistance either there or at Chihuahua.

NNR 73.260 Dec. 25, 1847 resolution of New Hampshire legislature on the Wilmot Proviso

Mr. Hale of New Hampshire, presented the resolutions of instruction adopted by the legislature of the state, relative to the Wilmot Proviso.

[LLW]

NNR 73.272 Dec. 25, 1847 Pedro Maria Anaya elected provisional president, his cabinet.

Gen. Anaya was elected president of the republic of Mexico on the 11th November to serve until the 8th January next, when the present term will expire. He was once before provisional president, and is regarded as favorable to a peace. He has called Pena y Pena to the office of secretary of state, and Mora y Villamil to the war department. His inaugural address is received.

Santa Anna has issued a pronunciamento against the proceedings at Queretaro, but the story of his having under him ten or fifteen thousand men, is unfounded. He has scarcely a life guard with which he was to proceed for Queretaro on the 22d of November.

It is reported, that Generals Worth and Pillow and Lieut. Col. Duncan have been arrested by Gen. Scott.

Gen. Patterson's train left Jalapa, on the 25th ult.

Padre Martin (the second Jarauta) had been made prisoner while sleeping in one of the garitas of the city of Mexico.

Senor Otero brought forward his proposition in the Mexican congress for depriving the executive of the power to alienate any part of the territory of the republic by a treaty of peace. The proposition was rejected by a large majority, which is deemed a favorable omen.

WAR WITH MEXICO.

Arrivals from Vera Cruz bring dates to the 7th December.

Gen. Anaya, was elected president of the republic of Mexico on the 11th November to serve until the 8th of January next, when the present term will expire. He was once before provisional president, and is regarded as favorable to a peace. He had called Pena y Pena to the office of secretary of state, and Mora y Villamil to the war department. His inaugural address is received.

Santa Anna has issued a pronunciamento against the proceedings at Queretaro, but the story of his having under him ten or fifteen thousand men, is unfounded. He has scarcely a life guard with which he was to proceed for Queretaro on the 22d November.
It is reported, that Generals Worth and Pillow and Lieut. Col. Duncan have been arrested by Gen. Scott.

Gen Patterson's division left Jalapa, on the 25th ult. Before his departure he hung, on the 23d, two American teamsters, for having killed a Mexican by twelve years old. He caused also to be executed, the next day, the two Mexican officers, Garcia and Alcade (belonging to the 8th and the 11th regiments) who were taken prisoners commanding guerrillas, without having been exchanged. The people buried them in great pomp and ceremony, upon which Gen. Patterson sent to the alcade, who said that the funeral had been spontaneous with the people, and that he had not power to prevent it; besides he remarked that notwithstanding the great numbers who had attended the ceremony, order had not been disturbed in the slightest. THE EXECUTION AT JALAPA - Is thus detailed by a correspondent of the N. Orleans Picayune:

I sent off an unfinished letter to you last night, and when interrupted by the information that a courier was on the point of starting, I was going on to speak of the intense feeling manifested by the most influential people in town in favor of Lieut. Alcade, who, with Adj't. Garcia, is to be shot to-day, at noon, for a violation of their parole honor. So deeply were my feelings wrought upon by the scenes of last evening - the crowds of supplicating women - the solemn but animated countenances of Mexican generals, priests, and dignified citizens, as they plead for their lives of those who had so basely forfeited them, that I dreamed of nothing else last night but executions, priests and crying women. The degrading confession, on the part of the most respectable Mexican citizens that it is considered no disgrace, no crime for a Mexican officer to violate his parole of honor while an enlarged prisoner of war, or even for him to join a band of cut-throats while yet a prisoner, and lie in wait to kill those to whom he owes his life and freedom - to whom, in fact, his life belongs, is enough to excuse us from putting any faith in future in the promises of Mexican officers. It is time, too, to give these individuals a few salutary lessons in the school of honor, and to cause them to hold inviolate the almost only barrier against wars of extermination viz: the soldier's parole.

The two criminals spent the whole of last night in the church with priests, a strong guard being placed over them. Their coffins have already been conveyed to the place of execution, and in less than an hour the two wretched men will die, as they hardly deserve to die, a soldier's death, and they will appear before a higher judge, who will decide whether it be wrong to take the life of a professional soldier for a violation of the most sacred and humanizing feature in civilized warfare. Yesterday the citizens of Jalapa witnessed an act of American justice; to-day they will see another.

Half past 12 o'clock. - The execution is over. The prisoners marched blindfolded to the plaza, a priest attending them. They were in full uniform, and behaved with as much firmness as could be expected of men under such circumstances. Each was supported by a friend at either arm, and were led to the side of the plaza and seated upon their coffins, near the wall of the barracks. They continued their devotions aloud, after embracing a few friends, until the word "fire!" The troops under Gen. Patterson were all paraded again, and not only looked very well, but behaved as they did yesterday, with propriety. The bodies of the executed officers were given over to their friends, and soon conveyed away in near coffins. Thousands of Mexicans flocked towards the scene, but were prudently kept out of the plaza. The excitement which prevailed yesterday among the inhabitants seems in a measure to have subsided to-day - but whether it yielded to a sense of justice or to awe, remains to be seen.

Every thing in the solemn ceremonies of yesterday and to-day was conducted correctly - Capt. Taylor, of Col. Hughes regiment, acting as provost marshal. The military commission before which all four of the criminals were tried, was presided over by Major Kenly, of Hughes' regiment, Lieut. Burnside, of the 2d artillery, acting as judge advocate. The members of the court proceeded in all the trials with great care, and offered to the prisoners every facility in their power as judges, to prove their innocence and to bring up palliating facts. They performed their duty like just and intelligent men, and true soldiers. Lt. Burnside, the judge advocate, has conducted himself throughout all the proceedings in a manner to call forth praise from all parties. His duties were arduous, and of the most responsible and painful character; but, although young (a recent graduate of West Point academy) he has done his duty kindly, delicately and faithfully. Col. Hughes, whose duty it was to approve or disapprove of the sentences, met the painful subject in the same unbiassed, decided manner. - The prisoners were legally condemned on the most clear and positive evidence, and he had but one course to pursue.
The colonel and captain (guerrilla officers) were sent up this morning to Perote, in charge of the 1st Pennsylvania and Georgia regiments, there to await their trial. It is more than probably that they, too, have broken their parole, but I really hope, for human decency sake, that they have not been guilty of so inexcusable and disgusting and offence.

We are off tomorrow morning; so farewell, or rather, au revoir. B. [RLLW]

NNR 73.276 Jan. 1, 1848 comments on the increase of the Army

INCREASE OF THE ARMY. The military commitment of the senate reported a bill, a few days ago, for adding new regiments to the present day twenty-five regiments of the regular army; and yesterday the same committee reports a bill authorizing twenty new regiments of volunteers. - When all these regiments shall be raised, the army of the United States, regular and volunteer, will amount to some sixty or seventy thousand men, at a cost of [ . . . illegible . . . ] of money, which it is at present impossible to estimate and fail to vindicate the personal consistency of President Polk. The ruinous consequences of this ill-starved Mexican war are rapidly approaching a point which almost blind follower of party will be unable to extenuate or uphold. [Nat'l Intd] [RLLW]

NNR 73.276 Jan. 1, 1848 correspondence between Lts. S. P. Lee and Simon Fraser Blunt and Secretary of the Navy John Young Mason on allegations of claims for prize money submitted for the capture of Vera Cruz

NAVAL JOURNAL

Washington, Nov. 30, 1847

SIR: Since our return from the home squadron we learn that the belief is entertained by many, that after the capture of Vera Cruz, a claim was made on the part of the squadron for prize money on account of the enemy's property which was, on that occasion captured by the combined forces of the army and navy. Having heard of no such claim during our service in the squadron, we respectfully inquire if any such claim has been presented or made known to the navy department, and, as an act of justice to the officers and men of the squadron, we respectfully inquire if any such claim has been presented or made known to the navy department, and, as an act of justice to the officers and men of the squadron, who may be injuriously affected by such a rumor, we respectfully ask permission to make your response public.

We have the honor to be, sir, with the highest respect, your most obedient and humble servants,

S. P. LEE, Lt. U. S. N.
SIMON FRASER BLUNT, Lt. U. S. N.

To the Hon. John Y. Mason, L
Secretary of the navy, Washington City, D.C.

--

Navy Department Dec. 15, 1847

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter of the 30th ult., in which you enquire whether any claim has been presented or made known to the navy department, on the part of the officers of the navy, for prize money on account of enemy’s property “captured by the combined forces of the army and navy” at Vera Cruz.

No such claim has been presented; and there is not, in any communication with the department, a single expression which can be tortured into a justification for such a charge. The only prizes or captures for which a claim of prize money has been made on behalf of the officers and men of the squadron in the gulf, are of vessels afloat, seized as enemy’s property, and which are clearly subject to sale if condemned, and the proceeds subject to distribution under the laws of the United States.
I am entirely ignorant of any circumstance which would justify the rumor to which you refer.

I am, respectfully yours, JOHN Y. MASON,

These levies were made six months since and paid by the English residents under protest, since which they have appealed to their government for protection. [RLLW]

NNR 73.278 Jan 1, 1848 withdrawal of Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna’s party from the Congress
Rumors were current in the city of Mexico that the partisans of Santa Anna had withdrawn from congress in compliance with the instructions of their chief, for the purpose of forcing that body to dissolve; not having a quorum. These partisans of Santa Anna all belong to the Puro party, and are for war to the knife. All the Puros however, are not Santa Anna men, and there are some persons here who assert that the reason they oppose the peace propositions is that they desire to keep the American army in the country until they can establish the government upon a firm basis. In fact, I have been told that many of the Puro deputies have written to their friends here, stating that this was their only reason for opposing a treaty of peace. [RLLW]

NNR 73.278 Jan 1, 1848 Gen. Winfield Scott announces that the Army will raise supplies from the Mexicans, his general order no. 368, relative to train from Veracruz, no. 368, levying contributions

A general order of the 25th November, issued by Gen. Scott from his headquarters in the city of Mexico, announces that, under instructions from the government at home, the army will, as soon as practicable, begin to raise the means of its support from Mexico.

GENERAL ORDERS – NO. 357

Headquarters of the Army,
Mexico, November 24, 1847.

Notice is hereby given, That a small train will leave for Vera Cruz about the 28th instant. Officers and soldiers desirous of forwarding letters by this conveyance, will leave them at the army post office, up stairs, in the same building with the city post office, on the street leading from the palace to the Alameda.

The general principles which will govern the general in chief, in permitting officers and enlisted men to leave this country, are laid down in general orders No. 318 and 322, as follows:

"No officer can be permitted to leave any part of the army, except on application to general headquarters, through the usual channels, beginning with a medical officer’s certificate – setting forth distinctly, that the applicant is not likely, for the reason given to be fit for duty in the next three months.

All wounded and sick officers, not likely to be fit for duty in the next three months, but who are able to travel, and desire to return home, will, upon the proper medical certificates, receive orders accordingly.

On arriving at New Orleans, or other port of the United States, the officers returning under this order will report, by letter, to the adjutant general’s office, at Washington, for (if able) the recruiting service.

Sergeants and other enlisted men who have become subjects for honorable discharge by wounds or otherwise, and who are able to travel, will receive their discharges and be allowed to accompany to first train to Vera Cruz, and thence receive a free passage to the United States.

Under circumstances, as above, officers and men, at Puebla and the posts below, will receive like orders from the respective commanders of departments; but only in the clearest cases; and each commander will make a special report, to general headquarters, to show the grounds for the exercise of the authority, especially delegated to this occasion only.

The 1st regiment of U.S. artillery will proceed to Vera Cruz, as a portion of the escort to the wagon train. Upon its arrival at Vera Cruz, this regiment will relieve the 1st infantry, now in garrison at that place, and the latter regiment will return with the train to this capital.

By command of Major Gen. Scott,

H.L. SCOTT, A. A. A. G.
The same paper furnishes the following orders touching the military contributions which Mexico is to be called upon to make:

General Orders – NO. 358

Headquarters of the Army,
Mexico, November 25, 1847.

Under instructions from the government at home, requiring that this army shall, as soon as practicable, begin to raise within the country it occupies, the means in whole or in great part of maintaining the expenses of the occupation until the federal government of Mexico shall submit terms of peace which the United States may honorably accept, it is ordered that no uncoined bullion, bars or ingots, either of gold or silver, shall be shipped from any port of Mexico, until the further orders of the government at home shall be made known on the subject, so as to give time for said government to fix the rate of export duty on such bullion, and perhaps a smaller duty on gold and silver coins.

At the beginning of the change of system intimated above, all rents for houses or quarters occupied by officers or troops of the army, in any city or village in Mexico, will cease as soon as contracts may permit, and absolutely, from and after the end of this month, wherever this order shall be received in time, and in future necessary quarters both for officers and troops, where the public buildings are insufficient, will first be demanded, as required, of the civil authorities of the several places occupied by the troops, so as to equalise the inconvenience imposed upon the inhabitants, and diminish the same as much as possible.

If the authorities fail to put the troops promptly in possession of such quarters, then the commanding officer, in every such case, following out the same principle of giving the least distress practicable to the unoffending inhabitants, will cause the necessary buildings to be occupied.

Subsistence, forage and other necessaries, for the army, will be purchased and paid for as heretofore; and the injunctions and penalties of the martial law order, dated February 10, 1847, originally published at Tampico, and republished several times since, with additions, will, as from the first, be strictly enforced, as also, in general, all the obligations of good morals and the most exact discipline.

By command of Major Gen. Scott,

H.L. SCOTT, A. A. A. G.

NNR 73.278-279 Jan 1, 1848 Gen Winfield Scott’s order on "echoes from home"

GENERAL ORDERS – NO. 349.

Headquarters of the Army,
Mexico, November 12, 1847.

The attention of certain officers of this army is recalled to the foregoing regulation, which the general in chief is resolved to enforce so far as it may be in his power.

As yet but two echoes from home of the brilliant operations of our arms in this basin have reached us: the first in a New Orleans, and the second through a Tampico newspaper.

It requires not a little charity to believe that the principal heroes of the scandalous letters alluded to did not write them, or specially procure them to be written, and the intelligent can beat no loss in conjecturing the authors – chiefs, partisans, and pet familiars. To the honor of the service, the disease – proficiency of fame, not earned – cannot have seized upon half a dozen officers (present) all of whom, it is believed, belong to the same two coteries.

False credit may, no doubt, be obtained at home, by such despicable self puffings and malignant exclusion of others; but at the expense of the just esteem and consideration of all honorable officers who love their country, their profession, and the truth of history. The indignation of the great number of this latter class cannot fail, in the end, to bring down the conceited and the envious to their proper level.

By command of Maj. Gen. Scott;

NNR 73.279 Jan 1, 1848 Gen. Winfield Scott’s order no.329 for a court of inquiry on Gen. Gideon Johnson Pillow, proceedings and report of the court.

COURT OF INQUIRY IN THE CASE OF GEN. PILLOW.

GENERAL ORDERS – NO. 329

Headquarters of the Army,
Mexico, November 12, 1847.

Proceedings of a court of inquiry, of which Brevet Major Gen. W. J. Worth is president, convened at this place by the following order, viz:

GENERAL ORDERS NO. 219.

Headquarters of the Army,
Mexico, October 22, 1847.

At the instance of Major General G. J. Pillow, a court of inquiry will assemble at the palace, or such other place in this city, as may be designed by the president of the court, tomorrow morning, at nine o’clock.

The court will investigate and report the facts and circumstances connected with the removal of two small howitzers on the 14th of September, from Chapultepec – stating by whom removed, and whether with the knowledge of Major General Pillow, and also give their opinion upon the facts which may be developed.

Lt. R. P. Hammond, 3d artillery, is appointed the judge advocate of the court.

By command of Maj Gen. Scott,
H. L. SCOTT. A. A. A. G.

The said order being founded on the following communication from Maj. Gen. Pillow, viz:

1. Maj. Gen. Pillow to Capt. H. L. Scott, acting assistant adjutant general, as follows:

Mexico, Oct. 9, 1847.

Captain – On the night of the 13th I was instructed at Chapultepec that two small howitzers, which my command had captured in storming that place, had been taken from the carriages and were not to be found. Being myself unable from my wound to get out of bed I caused a strict inquiry to be instituted for them, and was informed late at night that they were found in my own baggage wagon, and found further that they had been placed there by Mr. Welch. This was done without my knowledge or authority. I immediately sent for Col. Howard and directed him to have them taken out, and directed them mounted and placed in battery for the defence of the place.

I never knew, until last night at 9 o’clock, that my order to take the pieces out of my wagon had not been obeyed. My aides-de-camp reported to me that night, that there was no ammunition for those pieces, and therefore they could not place them in battery. I now learn from inquiry, that they were brought to the city in my wagon, and were taken from the wagon by Lieut. Rogers and Mr. Welch, and that they probably have one each. Mr. Rogers has retired from my staff, and he is now at the 'Sociedad.' Mr. Welch is in the city, but I do not know where he resides.

Regarding the conduct of those gentlemen as improper, I feeling it my duty not to suffer any persons protection, I felt it to be my duty, as the earliest [illegible], to give this information to the general-in-chief, for such action as he may think proper to take. But for my having been so disabled by my wound, I would have seen personally to the execution ...[ . . . illegible . . . ]...

4. It appears from the evidence, that on the nights of the 14th, when the garrison of Chapultepec was about being reduced in numbers, and whilst conversing with the staff about the defences of the place, Gen. Pillow ordered two officers of his staff to have these howitzers taken out of the wagon and remounted, with some other orders relative to the general dispositions for the defence of the work.

It was ascertained by his staff officers that no suitable ammunition could be found for the howitzers, and that they were therefore not used, not mounted, not removed from the wagon, and other arrangements for defence were made without them, and reported to Gen. Pillow.

The impression is strong and almost conclusive, that this order of Major Gen. Pillow, to his staff and officers, could not have indicated a desire on his part for a full and final restoration of these howitzers to their proper places, as public property – otherwise the mere fact of failure to find suitable ammunition for their immediate use could not justify the staff officers in failing to obey the order to remount the pieces – and it does not appear that the staff officers were censured for the omission.

5. That the two howitzers were brought to town on the 15th of September, in Gen. Pillow's wagon; that one was claimed by Mr. Rogers, and carried to his quarters under his direction, whilst the other was carried to the residence of Welch, and for him.

It does not appear that Maj. Gen. Pillow had any information of the actual fact that the howitzers were in the city of Mexico, until the evening of October 8, subsequent to the order of the general-in-chief, in relation to trophies, etc., when, and subsequently, he seems to have used all proper measures to have them restored.

And the court is of opinion that further military proceedings may be dispensed with.

The general-in-chief approves of the proceedings and the opinions of the court in the foregoing case.

The court of inquiry, of which Brevet Major Gen. Worth is president is dissolved.

By command of Maj. Gen. Scott,
H. L. SCOTT, A. A. A. G.

NBR 73.279-280 Jan 1, 1848 President Pedro Maria Anaya’s inaugural

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT ANAYA.

After being sworn in as president and ad interim of the Republic of Mexico.

Sres Deputies: I come to fulfil your wishes, taking in charge the supreme executive power of the union, for the short space of time that will elapse until the next constitutional period arrives. If the days be few, the difficulties present themselves numerous and appalling. The great misfortune of our land, is the sentiment that exclusively occupies the minds of all who know the meaning of the sacred word country.
In such circumstances, without the powerful concurrence of the nation, no government can undertake its defence. It belongs alone to the executive power to unite all efforts, direct them according to the national will, and remove all obstacles, that disconfidence has hitherto thrown in the way.

With the decision of an ancient servant of the country, I have sworn not to omit a single effort, nor to spare the most costly sacrifices in endeavoring to prove myself worthy of the confidence reposed in me by the national representation. To doubt of the cooperation of the Mexican people would [ . . . illegible . . . ] doubt of that valor and those high virtues which emancipated the country, which although disheartened and led astray by twenty-five years of dissensions, are producing even yet so many and such sublime sacrifices.

I declare that in the fulfillment of my oath just taken "of respecting and causing to be respected the fundamental institutions," I will act in accordance both with my duty and my profound convictions. The federal system is the only one calculated to save a people in a situation so dangerous as ours. To seek now a remedy in new systems, or in new revolutions, would be to give up the republic without defence and without remorse to the enemy who tore down our national flag from the palace where the victorious Iturbide planted it with his own hands.

The government relies upon the co-operation of the states, their good sense, and tried love of liberty and order. It will keep in harmony with them, for their efforts (the heroic capital of the republic being loss) are those that now must save us.

In a situation such as ours, individual privations are inevitable; the government far from increasing will endeavor to lessen them as much as lays in its power. The security of persons and properties will be sacred, taxes will be exacted proportionally, and the amount thereof distributed with honesty and economy.

It is the duty of congress, who also knows our necessities, to promulgate such wise laws as the country requires, and to diffuse life and encouragement throughout the republic. I will be the first to comply with them striving above all to united all the private efforts in the grand object, the salvation of our independence. For me, all our domestic broils, foolish enmities and dissensions will be henceforth secondary matters of consideration. My administration will not persecute any class or party. I call upon all without distinction to assemble around the standard of their country.

Without being deluded as to our situation, on the contrary fully aware and overwhelmed with its difficulties and ready to face new misfortunes, of which be our destiny, I have come to this place, with the firm resolution never to seal the dishonor of our native land. God alone can look into the future; as to public men; it suffices, that they know their duty and fulfill it. The nation is aware that I never deceived her, that my oaths are always loyal; and that my blood, my life, and my reputation belong to all situations that most contrary to my inclinations. May God bless and cause to be fulfilled the ardent desires of the man who has not and is incapable of entertaining any other idea than that of the liberty and honor of his unfortunate country. [RLLW]

NNR 73.280 Jan 1, 1848 the demonstration on Guaymas

Guaymas – We stated, in a recent paragraph, that several ships of the American navy had entered the port of Guaymas, and demanded a surrender of the place. By late advices we learn that on the 20th ult, the place surrendered to the naval force under Lavellette, commanding the naval force of the U. States, and the port is now in possession of the Americans. The frigates under his command were the Portsmouth and the Congress, which fired upon the place for about an hour. The terms which the place was subjected are very much like those granted in other places occupied by our forces, and we need not give the articles at length. W. A. Robinson had been appointed collector of the customs, and the duties were as follows:

"The duties of importation, until otherwise ordered, will be five per cent, per ton, and ten per cent ad valorem, the value in port to be determined by persons appointed for that purpose."

Until quarters shall be provided for the troops who were to garrison the place, the United States flag would be hoisted in some point in the bay from the U.S.

NR 73.280 Jan. 1, 1848 Money discovered, and guerrilla activity

A discovery was made on Thursday in the convent of San Domingo, in this city. Some of the troops who arrived with General Patterson were quartered there, and turning over an old desk that was left in one of the rooms, found it contained some $15,000 in silver and gold. This led to a further search, and in one of the cells a large quantity of clothing and ammunition was found, which was removed to the quartermaster’s department.

About 6 o’clock, on Saturday night, Mr. Doyle, the English charge d’affairs, arrived from Vera Cruz in the diligence, escorted by Captain Fairchild, of the Louisiana rangers, and about 36 men. They brought neither letter or papers, but last night the English courier arrived with a full budget. Capt. F. informs me that there cannot be less than twelve thousand men on the road up here, and that General Butler would be in Puebla yesterday (Sunday) with seven thousand men.

The Ohio regiment are encamped at Rio Frio, under Colonel Irwin, together with one company of Illinois dragoons, under Captain Little, numbering in all about six hundred men. There are seven companies of the Ohio regiment there, the other four being at Puebla. This encampment is doubtless intended to be permanent, as the men were building themselves houses.

I inclose you an order from Gen. Scott, issued today, of the most sever character, about the guerrilla parties, who are said to be gather in considerable numbers through the country. The concluding paragraph appears to favor the idea that the post of Rio Frio will be permanent. There is absolutely no news from Queretaro. Congress does not meet, and there is a rumor in town that Santa Anna has been proclaimed dictator there, but I cannot trace it to any reliable source. Every thing her appears to favor the belief that a movement will be shortly made for the interior.

What division of the army will take the lead, or who is to command it, I cannot say, but madame rumor points to the gallant Smith, the hero of Contreras, as the commander. Without doubt he would be an excellent man, but I do not see how he can be spared from his post here. His moderation, firmness and strict attention to business have endeared him to all the citizens, native and foreign, and they would feel his loss more keenly. Nous verrons. [JNA]

NR 73.280 Jan 1, 1848 protest against seizing church property, Gen. Persifor Frazer Smith’s orders in reply.
The Monitor, of Dec. 9, publishes a decree from Senior Ross, the minster of justice and ecclesiastical affairs, protesting against the sale of church property in this city, except for the benefit of the Mexican government and the church. You will recollect that a short time ago the civil and military governor prohibited the sale of any of this property, except by permission of the government of the United States, the effect of this prohibition. He, Rosas, pronounced all such sales invalid and of no effect, and speaks warmly on the subject. The Mexican people, or those who administer the government, appears to think that the result of the recent battles in this valley has be on just nothing at all.

The following letter order of Gen. Smith was, perhaps, aimed at the order of Rosa, mentioned above by our correspondent:

Office of the Civil and Military Governor,
National Palace, Mexico, Dec. 10 1847.

1. Any decree of the Mexican general government, affecting or modifying the political rights of those living in the territory occupied by the American army, is null, and any attempt to promulgate such decree as effective or to enforce it, without the consent and approbation of the American authorities, will be considered and punished as a direct opposition to them.

2. The people of the city of Mexico have the right to make their municipal elections without any interruption.

PERSIFOR F. SMITH.
Brevet Brigadier General and Civil and Military Governor.

NNR 73.288 Jan 1, 1848 discussion of Gen. Winfield Scott with the Mexican archbishop on the release of Mexican prisoners

GEN. SCOTT AND THE MEXICAN ARCHIBISHOP

The correspondence between Gen. Scott and the archbishop of Mexico, on the subject of the release of the Mexican prisoners, is very interesting. The latter asks the favor for their liberation on the ground that their families are suffering in consequence of their confinement. He says the affection and respect which General Scott has always shown to the holy church, of which he is the head in this city, emboldens him to make this request, and instances the liberation of the French prisoners of [ . . . illegible . . . ] through the mediation of the archbishop of Argel.

The general replies at some length, citing the cases of the prisoners taken at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo, who were liberated on their parole, and had afterwards taken up arms against the Americans; that while at Puebla he asked the liberation of the American prisoners taken on the Rio Grande, who were to have been exchanged by an agreement between Santa Anna and Gen. Taylor, but that an evasive reply having been returned, another communication was sent on the 20th of July, the only response to which was found in the palace, after Gen. Scott had entered the city, folded, sealed, and directed to him under date of August.

Gen. Scott concludes by saying that if the archbishop will have the goodness to appoint some dignitary of the church to visit those men and explain to them that prisoners of war under their parole are always shot it found fighting against the same belligerent before being duly exchanged, and that if this dignitary gives also a solemn admonition of the church against the violation of their oaths, he will give them their liberty under its sacred authority.

The archbishop, in a subsequent personal interview with the commander in chief, [ . . . illegible . . . ] the decree of the Mexican government which prohibited all Mexicans from giving their paroles not to fight against the Americans, and the responsibility he would incur if the supreme government should disapprove the step, and thus the matter stands at present. [RLLW]
The message of Governor Smith of Virginia, sent to the legislature of that state, discusses at some length the question of what institutions shall be given to the new territory which may be acquired from Mexico. He regards the region to be opened to colonization from the present states of the union as a natural outlet for the superabundant slave population of Virginia and the other states of the south. He holds that in proportion as the population of a state grows dense, slave labor becomes less profitable, and that therefore room should be given in which it may diffuse itself so as to avoid that consequence; in short that it is a [illegible . . .] on which the south should insist, to open [illegible . . .] whether the planted may retire with his slaves when pressed by this potent and decreasing profits, and continue to make their labor productive. The following passage contains the [illegible . . .]:

"It is unquestionable true, that [illegible . . .] to be restricted to their present [illegible . . .] greatly diminish in value, and thus [illegible . . .] the fortunes of the owners, but [illegible . . .] humanity must mourn the [illegible . . .] toils and the regard for the health of the slave, which has characterized slavery in the south, and made it the most cheerful and happy [illegible . . .] to be found in the world. It is well known, that as the profits of labor diminish, so do [illegible . . .]. Many melancholy examples of this truth are to be found in the histories of the old world, and when the negro population multiplies in [illegible . . .] in value, whatever may be the humanity of the master, necessity will compel him to restrict the comforts of the slave, and reduce him to the smallest pittance upon which it is possible to live."
their instruments [ . . . illegible . . . ]... He asks:

[ . . . illegible . . . ] And if there be in his natural character the elements to make him a great and good man, it is hopeless to expect that they will ever be developed under our policy. The inhumanity then consists not in sending them from our state, but in retaining them among us. It is to me unaccountable how there should be a difference of opinion on this question. – Here the free negro is degraded by our policy – a policy which we cannot relax. And it is in our power to send him to other countries where education, society, and all the agencies that contribute to the advancement and improvement of mankind are within his reach, and we are to be deterred from this benevolent undertaking by the cries of those who affect and overwrought tenderness and humanity. I say to those who sympathize with the negro, who mourn his moral degradation, and look forward with hope to the day when he will be elevated in the scale of humanity, and placed on a footing of social equality with the white man, that their hopes, wishes and sympathies can never be gratified here. I consider, then, that it is cruel and in human not to send the free negro away. We are bound to do it as benevolent men, and as faithful guardians of the best interests of our good old commonwealth.”

It is therefore recommended in this message that a law be passed for sending the free negroes of Virginia out of the state, removing them by counties so that “no social or domestic tie may be broken,” and taking them in merchant vessels to countries where slavery does not exist, or to Liberia, if the authorities there will receive them.

We have given this abstract of that portion of the message which relates to the subject of slavery, in order that our readers may see what sort of destiny is contemplated for California, and to what consequences the peculiar institution of the south [ . . . illegible . . . ]. We make no comment now upon these plans of sending the negro slaves of Virginia, to a region where their labor will continue for a longer time to be productive, and the free negroes, degraded by the severe regulations which slavery is though to render necessary, to countries where no such [ . . . illegible . . . ] exists. They need no comment. Gov. Smith, although he faces the questions arising out of the subject without shirking, yet terms the views [ . . . illegible . . . ]. [RLLW]

NNR 73.293-295 Jan. 8, 1848 Lewis Cass’ letter on the acquisition of territory from Mexico and the Wilmot Proviso

LETTER OF MR. CASS

Washington, December 29, 1817

SIR: We have learned, through various channels, that a letter has been recently addressed by you to a distinguished citizen of Tennessee, declarative of your views on the subject of the Wilmot Proviso. – Having heretofore read with high satisfaction, what has emanated, in different forms, from [ . . . illegible . . . ] Bachman and Dallas in opposition to the Proviso, and believing that the promulgation of sound views from leading democratic statesmen cannot be without good effect at this time in facilitating the settlement of the momentous question alluded to, we take the liberty of requesting that you will if not disagreeable to yourself, allow your letter referred to, to be published in the “Union,”

We have the honor to be &c, &c,

J. THOMPSON,
W.S. FEATHERSTON, Mississippi
WILLIAM SAWYER, Ohio
THOMAS J. TURNER,
W. W. WICK, Indiana
JOHN L. ROBINSON, Illinois,
H. S. FOOTE, senator from Mississippi
HOWELL COBB, Georgia
ABRAHAM VENABLE, North Carolina
D. S. DICKINSON, senator from New York.

Honorable Lewis Cass.

Washington December 30, 1817
GENTLEMEN: Agreeably to your request, I place at your disposal a copy of the letter to which you refer.

With great respect, I am gentlemen, your obedient servant,

LEWIS CASS.

Hon. J. Thompson, W.S. Featherston, &c.

...[ . . . illegible . . . ]...It appears to me that the kind of metaphysical magnanimity, which would reject all indemnity at the close of a bloody and expensive war, brought on by a direct attack up in our troops by the enemy, and preceded by a succession of unjust acts for a series of years, is as unworthy of the age in which we live, as it is revolting to the common sense and practice of mankind. It would conduce but little to our future security or indeed, to our present reputation to declare that we repudiate all expectation of compensation from the Mexican government, and are fighting, not for any practical result, but for some vague, perhaps philanthropic object, which escapes my penetration, and must be defined by [ . . . illegible . . . ] assume this new principle of national intercommunication. All wars are to be deprecated, as well by the statesmen, as by the philanthropist. They are great [ . . . illegible . . . ]; but there are greater evils than these, and submission to injustice is among them. The nation, which should refuse to defend its rights and its honor when assailed, would soon have neither to defend; and when driven to war, it is not be professions of disinterestedness and declarations of magnanimity, that its rational objects can be best obtained or other nations taught a lesson of forbearance – the strongest security for permanent peace. We are at war with Mexico, and its vigorous prosecution is the surest means of the speedy termination, and ample indemnity the surest guaranty against the recurrences of such injustice a provoked it.

The Wilmot Proviso has been before the country some time. It has been repeatedly discussed in congress, and by the public press. "I am strongly impressed with the opinion, that a great change has been going on in the public mind upon this subject – in my own as well as others; and that doubts are resolving themselves into convictions, that the principle it involves should be kept out of the national legislature, and left to the people of the confederacy in their respective local governments.

...[ . . . illegible . . . ]...We may well repeat the existence of slavery in southern states, and wish they had been saved from its [ . . . illegible . . . ]. But there it is, and not by the act of the present generation, and we must deal with it as a great practical question involving the most momentous consequences. We have neither the right nor the power to touch it where it exists; and if we had both, their exercise, by any means in [ . . . illegible . . . ] might lead to results, which no wise man would will ugly encounter, and which no good man could contemplate [ . . . illegible . . . ] it anxiety.

The theory of our government presupposes, that its various members have reserved to themselves the regulation of all subjects relating to what, may be termed their internal police. They are sovereign within their boundaries, except in those cases where they have surrendered to the general government a portion of their rights, in order to give effect to the object of the Union, whether these concern foreign nations or the several states themselves. Local institutions, if I may so speak, whether they have reference to slavery or to any other relations, domestic or public, are left to local authority, either original or derivative. Congress has no right to say, that there shall be slavery in New York, or that there shall be no slavery in Georgia; nor is there any other human power, but the people of those states, respectively; which can change the relation existing therein; and they can say, if they will – We will have slavery in the former, and we will abolish it in the latter.

...[ . . . illegible . . . ]...and servant may be regulated or annihilated by its legislation, so may the relation of husband and wife, of parent and child, and of any other condition which our institutions and the habits of our society recognize. What would be though if congress should undertake to prescribe the terms of marriage in New York, or to regulate the authority of parents over their children in Pennsylvania! And yet it would be as vain to seek one justifying the interference of the national legislature in the cases referred to in the original states of the union. I speak here of the inherent power of congress, and do not touch the question of such contracts, as may be formed with the new states when admitted into the confederacy.

Of all the questions that can agitate us, those which are merely sectional in their character, are the most dangerous and the most to be deprecated. The warning voice of him who, from his character, and services and virtue, had the best right to warn us, proclaimed to his countrymen in his farewell address – that monument of wisdom for him, as I hope it will be of safety for them – how much we had to apprehend from measures peculiarly affecting geographical portions of our country. The grave circumstances in which we are now placed, make these words words of safety; for I am satisfied, from all I have seen and heard here, that a successful attempt to engrail the principles of the Wilmot proviso upon the legislation of this government and to apply them to new territory, should new territory be acquired, would seriously affect our tranquility. I do not suffer myself to foresee or to foretell the consequences that would ensue, for I trust and believe there is good sense and good feeling enough in the country to avoid them, by avoiding all occasions which might lead to them.

Briefly, then, I am opposed to the exercise of any jurisdiction by congress over this matter; and I am in favor of leaving to the people of any territory, which may be hereafter acquired, the right to regulate themselves, under the general principles of the constitution. Because –

1. "I do not see in the constitution any grant of the requisite power to congress; and I am not disposed to extend a doubtful precedent beyond its necessity – the establishment of territorial governments when needed – leaving to the inhabitants all the rights compatible with the relations they bear to the confederation."

2. "Because I believe this measure, if adopted, would weaken, if not impair, the union of they states and would sow the seeds of future discord, which would grow up and ripen into an abundant harvest of calamity."

3. "Because I believe a general conviction, that such a proposition to succeed, would lead to an immediate withholding of supplies, and thus to a dishonorable termination of the war. I think no dispassionate observer, at the seat of government can doubt this result."

4. "If, however, in this I am under a misapphension, I am [ . . . illegible . . . ] shall not turn aside to seek it."

In this aspect of the matter, the principle of the U. States must choose between this [ . . . illegible . . . ]

5. "But after all, it seems to be generally conceded, that this [ . . . illegible . . . ]. The well known attributes of sovereignty, recognized by us as belonging to the state governors, would sweep before them any such barrier and would leave the people to express and exert their will at [ . . . illegible . . . ]...As to the course, which has been intimated, rather than proposed, of engrafting such a restriction upon any treaty of acquisition, I persuade myself it would find but little favor in any portion of this country. – Such an arrangement would render Mexico a party, having a right to interfere in our internal institutions in questions left by the constitution to the state governments, and would inflict a serious blow upon our fundamental principles. Few indeed, I trust there are among us, who would thus grant a foreign power the right to inquire into the constitution and conduct of the sovereign states of this Union; and if there are any, I am not among them, and never shall be. To the people of this country, under God, now and hereafter, are its destinies committed, and we want no foreign power to interrogate us, treaty in hand, and to say: - Why have you done this, or why have you left that undone? Our own dignity and the principles of national independence unite to repel such a proposition."

But there is another important consideration which ought not to be lost sight of, in the investigation of this subject. The question that presents itself is not a question of the increase, but of the diffusion of slavery. Whether its sphere be stationary or progressive its amount will be the same. The rejection of this restriction will not add one to the class of servitude, nor will its adoption give freedom to a single being who is now placed therein. The same number will be spread over greater territory; and so far as compression, with less abundance of the necessaries of life, is an evil, be mitigated by transporting slaves to a new country, and giving them a larger space to occupy.

I say this in the event of the extension of slavery over any new acquisition. But can be it go there? This may well be doubted. All the descriptions which reach us of the condition of the Californians and of New Mexico, to the acquisition of which our efforts seem at present directed, unite in representing those countries agricultural regions, similar in their production of the great staples, which can alone render slave labor valuable. If we are not grossly deceived – and it is difficult to conceive how we can be – the inhabitants of those regions, whether they depend upon their ploughs or their herds, cannot be slaveholders. Involuntary labor, requiring the investment of large capital, can only be profitable when employed in the production of a few favored articles confined by nature to special districts, and paying larger returns from the usual agricultural products spread over more considerable portions of the earth.

In the able letter of Mr. Buchanan upon this subject, not long since given to the public, he presents similar considerations with great force. “Neither,” says the distinguished writer, “the soul, the climate nor the productions of California south or 36° 30’ [ . . . illegible . . . ] north or south, is adapted to slave labor, and besides every facility would be there afforded for the slave to escape from his master. Such property would be entirely insecure in any part of California. It is morally impossible, therefore, that a majority of the [ . . . illegible . . . ] rants to that portion of the territory south of 36° 30’, which will be chiefly composed of our citizens, will ever reestablish slavery within its limits.

“In regard to New Mexico, east of the Rio Grande, the question has already been settled by the admission of Texas into the Union.

“Should we acquire territory beyond the Rio Grande and east of the Rocky mountains, it is still more impossible that a majority of the people would consent to reestablish slavery. They are themselves a colored population, and among them the Negro [ . . . illegible . . . ] socially belong to a degraded race.”

With this remark Mr. Walker fully coincides [ . . . illegible . . . ] … “Beyond the Del Norte,” says Mr. Walker, “slavery will not pass; not only because it is forbidden by law, but because the colored races there [ . . . illegible . . . ] to the rationed ten to one over the whites; and holding as they do, the government and most of the offices in their possession, they will not permit the enslavement of any portion of the colored race, which makes and executes the laws of the country.”

The question, it will be therefore seen, on examination, does not regard to exclusion of slavery from a region where it now exists, but a prohibition against its introduction where it does not exist, and where, from the feeling of the inhabitants and the laws of nature, “it is morally impossible,” as Mr. Buchanan says, that it can ever re-establish itself.

It augurs well for the permanence of our confederation, that during more than half a century, which has elapsed since the establishment of this government, many serious questions, and some of the highest importance, have agitated the public mind, and more than once threatened the gravest consequences; but that they have all in succession passed away leaving our institutions unscathed, and our country advancing in numbers, power, and wealth, and in all the other elements of national prosperity, with a rapidity unknown in ancient or in modern days. In times of political excitement, when difficult and delicate questions present themselves for solution, there is one ark of safety for us; and that is an honest appeal to the fundamental principles of our Union, and a stern determination to abide their dictates. This course of proceeding has carried us in safety through many a trouble, and I trust will carry us safely through many more, should many more be destined to assail us. The Wilmot proviso seeks to take from its legitimate tribunal a question of domestic policy, having no relation to the Union, as such, and to transfer it to another created by the subject matter involved in this issue. By going back to our true principles, we go back to the road of peace and safety. Leave to the people, who will be affected by this question, to adjust it upon their own responsibility, and in their own manner, and we shall render another tribute to the original principles of our government, and furnish another guaranty for [ . . . illegible . . . ] permanence and prosperity.

I am, dear sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEWIS CASS,

A. O. P. NICHOLSON, esq., Nashville, Tennessee. [RLLW]
The orders issued by Col. Hughes upon being appointed military and civil governor of Jalapa.

PROCLAMATION:

Department of Jalapa.
Office military and civil governor, Nov. 30.

The undersigned, having been duly appointed by the authorities of the United States of the [ . . . illegible . . . ] civil and military governor of the department of Jalapa, assuming the duties of his office, addresses [ . . . illegible . . . ] the inhabitants thus placed under his jurisdiction, and following proclamation:

1. The undersigned offers a general and perfect amnesty for the past to all persons within his [ . . . illegible . . . ] who, having under any circumstances borne arms against the United States, may within twelve days from this date, (provided that they do not reside within twenty miles of this city, in which case they will be limited to six days,) report to him in person and give them parole of honor not [ . . . illegible . . . ] to take arms against the United States urging this present war, and to interfere in any manner in the existing difficulties between the United States and Mexico.

2. All persons residing within twenty miles of this city who have given their paroles, are required within five days from this date to report in person at the office. The same class of persons residing in the city of Jalapa are referred to the second paragraph. Gen. Patterson's orders recently printed.

3. All persons who have heretofore borne arms against the United States, or who may now, at some future time, (while American troops occupy this post,) be found within the municipal limits of [ . . . illegible . . . ] unless with safeguards, paroles, or having been [ . . . illegible . . . ] changed, and who do not immediately report to the officer, will be regarded as spies and treated accordingly.

4. All persons who have given their parole [ . . . illegible . . . ] serve against the United States during the war, [ . . . illegible . . . ] may again be taken in arms within the limits of this department, (unless especial permission has been granted to retain weapons simply for the defence of their horses,) or who may at any time [ . . . illegible . . . ] giving of their paroles have both the arms against the United States and do not avail themselves of the honesty hereby effected, will be tried by a military commission, and if convicted of the crime, will be [ . . . illegible . . . ] without regard to the orders of the Mexican government or any of its functionaries.

The American authorities of this department have recently given an example of the summary [ . . . illegible . . . ] in which they will punish their own citizens when guilty of atrocious crimes, and also of the manner in which, they punish those more serious crimes, which violate the law of nations.

Ignorant and depraved persons may commit social crimes against society, and yet their [ . . . illegible . . . ] meet with the sympathies of the society which they have offended and outraged, for their acts are generally limited to individuals. But what [ . . . illegible . . . ] though of educated and intelligent gentlemen, [ . . . illegible . . . ] the military commission of their country, [ . . . illegible . . . ] have been convicted on their own voluntary [ . . . illegible . . . ] of having broken their parole of honor, [ . . . illegible . . . ] the most sacred obligations which a gentleman and soldier can make.

In the truly melancholy occurrence which has recently taken place in this city, the only excuse given by those unfortunate victims of the [ . . . illegible . . . ] and duplicity of certain Mexican officials before the military commission, (which extended towards them every possible indulgence,) was the fact that their government had offered to them the sole alter native of either violating their parole or serving in the ranks as common soldiers; and that, after taking the infamous proposition of the so called Governor Soto into consideration, for twenty-four hours, they at last "preferred (to use their own language) to run the risk of consequences to the certainty of the degradation with which we (they) were threatened."

Mexicans! the blood of these unfortunate and misguided young men rests mainly upon your political authorities.

The wise and humane of all civilized nations, anxious to mitigate, as far as possible, the horrors of war, so revolting to the Christian and the true soldier, under the best of circumstances, have instituted the parole of honor – a chivalric code – by which the simply word of an officer may be taken that he will not again bear arms against the victors until legally exchanged; after giving which assurance he is permitted quietly to return to his family and friends.

Without this all wars must result either in the barbarous system of slavery or of ransoms of ancient times or the middle ages, or into one of utter extermination. With this view, and looking into the great interests of humanity, the civilized world has agreed to stigmatise a breach of the parole of honor as the most infamous crime that a soldier can commit, and to consign him to the most signal punishment, not from motives of vengeance, but because of the evils which his want of good faith is calculated to entail upon the human species.

Mexicans! in what light can you and the whole world regard the Mexican government, which thus imposes upon you such hard conditions, and which subjects its officers either to degradation at its own hands, or to the certainty of death if recaptured by their [ . . . illegible . . . ], for the perpetration of a grave crime against the laws of nations, in the preservation of which we are all alike most deeply concerned?

The government of the United States, anxious from the beginning to secure a lasting peace, based upon the true principles of mutual honor and interests, is throwing the immense force into your country, and you may rest assured that it will never submit to those gross violations of good faith which have so often occurred on the part of the Mexicans during the present war.

GEO. W. HUGHES, Colonel,
Civil and military governor of the city and Department of Jalapa.

NR 73.295 Jan. 8, 1848 the capture of Guaymas

THE CAPTURE OF GUAYMAS – El Monitor Republicano of the 27th ult. publishes the details of the [ . . . illegible . . . ] and capture of Guaymas. The frigate Congress, the sloop of war Portsmouth, and the brig Argo, belonging to Mr. John Robinson, U.S. consular agent there, composed our force. The Portsmouth anchored off the port the 16th October, and the Congress and the Argo the next day. On the 18th the Argo anchored between the islands of Almagre Gratide and Almagre Chico.

A mortar was planted during the day upon each Island. A small boat was then put off from the Argo, bearing Mr. Wm. Robinson, a relative of the consul, and came off to the town. Robinson was conducted to the governor and explained to him that the purpose of the Americans was to take the port, and he advised its surrender to prevent disastrous consequences. Mr. Robinson also explained that the had [ . . . illegible . . . ] in with the U.S. squadron, in the Argo. The next Mexican commandant replied that the surrender of the town was out of the question, being in [ . . . illegible . . . ] that of the aims of the republic. Mr. Robinson then returned to the Argo.

On the 19th the Congress and Portsmouth, took up their position to open their fire, the town was formally summoned to surrender, under pain of being fired into. The commandment still refused; the Americans did not open upon it until that day. The Mexicans allege that having no heavy artillery to annoy our squadron, the commandant evacuated the town during the night with his troops and took up a position at Boccachicampo, a league from the town, where he had previously placed a batter of fourteen guns to resist the Americans, should they attempt to penetrate the interior.

At 6 o’clock on the morning of the 20th, the Americans opened fire from both vessels of war and two mortars, and continued it for more than an hour. In this time they discharged upon a town 500 shot, among which were many shells. One English resident was killed, some houses were burnt and others ...[ . . . illegible . . . ]. [RLLW]
MEXICAN PRISONERS. – The effort made by the Archbishop of Mexico to obtain from Gen. Scott the release of his Mexican prisoners an General Scott’s reply, have effected something for them. – As soon as it became known that General Scott accused Mexican officers of violating their parole, and with the sanction of Santa Anna’s government, Senor Otero introduced into congress a bill to regulate the law of the country upon the whole subject. It provides that those only shall be regarded as prisoners of war who are taken by the enemy in the discharge of their military duty, either on the field of battle or in some place taken or surrendered on conditions.

It declares those to be deserters who voluntarily become prisoners of war, or in the same manner pledge themselves not to bear arms against the enemy, who shall lose their rights as citizens, be suspended from command from six to ten years, and shall not hold any public office. Another section is aimed at those who leave their residence for a town occupied by our troops, and thus surrender themselves as prisoners of war, and giver their parole, (as many have done at Monterey and Saltillo.) A like severe punishment is declared against them. And those who shall desert in the presence of the enemy, or leave the service on which they are ordered, are declared traitors.

The fifth article declares that in the case of capitulations, no stipulation for the liberty of the garrison shall be made upon the condition that they shall not again bear arms against the enemy, nor upon any other condition which excludes exchange or ransom; but in those cases where military rules permit the surrender of a place, an engagement may be entered into that the defenders of it will remain prisoners their world of honor. The sixth article provides that soldiers, having been made prisoners legitimately according to the first article, [ . . . illegible . . . ] pledge their parole, the first obtained upon a consideration of each case. The seventh and last article provides that the government itself shall take care that no prisoner, set at large on his parole, shall commit the offence of violating it. The bill was accompanied by a well written report by Otero. He defends the power of pledging one’s word of honor as a humane provision of national law which Mexicans should respect. The violation of it ought never to be tolerated and he thinks that Gen. Scott [ . . . illegible . . . ] have been misinformed in saying that any Mexican soldier had violated his parole. The bill was likely to become a law. [RLLW]

INDIANS IN MEXICO.--Our latest advices from Saltillo told of a conflict between the Texan Rangers and a band of Camanches. Upon looking over some late papers from the city of Mexico, we find several letters from San Luis Potosi describing actions between the Indians and Mexican troops. The savages had boldly approached within seventeen leagues of the city of San Luis. In one engagement the Mexicans had fifty infantry and thirty dragoons engaged. The party was completely cut to pieced, only eight of the dragoons escaping with their lives, and five of the being wounded.

Another engagement took place between the Indians and one hundred dragoons of the 4th regiment of cavalry, which were marching from Matehuala to join Gen. Avalos. The fight occurred at Mingole, and the dragoons were completely routed, seventy being killed, among whom were Col. Labastida and several other officer. The survivors of this fight at last joined Avalos. In a letter from this general, we have a report of an engagement in which the Mexican arms were more successful. With a force of about 400 cavalry, he writes on the 18th of November, that he that morning attacked a body of from 340 to 370 Indians in the hacienda of San Juan del Salada.

The action began at 5 in the morning and terminated at 2 in the afternoon, (the date of the general’s letter.) Only thirty or forty Indians were then left in the interior of the hacienda, who he says it will be necessary to destroy, as they refuse to surrender, and defend themselves savagely. All the rest, he says, perished, the very small number who fled, finding escape impossible on account of the difficulty of the country, the hills, &c.

The Mexicans recovered two thousand horses, and set at liberty over two hundred women and children who had been captured. The loss of the Mexicans was small, though several officers were wounded and General Avalos had his horse shot under him.
It is calculated that in their incursions into the state of San Luis over four hundred Mexicans have been killed, a great number of captives made, and numberless atrocities have been committed. [JNA]

NNR 73.296 January 8. 1848  Visit to the pyramid of Cholula
NNR 73.297 Domingo and his Mexico-Mexican Rangers

A trip to Cholula is one of the most agreeable jaunts around Puebla. By the road it is about 8 miles distant, and you may pass over a reasonably even road and cross a pretty little river, which is laid down in the map—but as the map is not here, I cannot recollect its name. This fashion we (ahem!) tourist have of nothing down names and incident plays hob with one’s memory in general.

About a week since General Scott, Twiggs and Shields, with an escort of dragoons and the 2nd and 7th infantry, made an excursion to the gate of the ancient Aztec city, and I joined it. About two miles from Puebla, a laughable incident occurred, though it well might needed in a tragedy. The infantry were ascending as easy slope, where two Mexicans came along with a powerful bull, which on of them held by a lasso over the house, while the other urged him along with a goad. The animal became resistive as the soldiers passed, and finally, breaking away from those who held him, charged and left flank, carving a soldier through the ranks on his horns, and landing him in the mud on the opposite side of the road. The two men finally got hold of the lasso again and were getting him along very well, when four of us civilians came along on horse. The he began to plunge and paw the ground, and one of the Mexicans who got in from t of the beast to bean him still, was tossed learn over the bulls. The infuriated creatures then pitched into the other, and throwing him in about two feet of mud and water, geared and ducked him for several seconds. All the horsemen rode up and succeeded in driving the animal from his prey, when he trued and put after us, more furious than ever. As we had no arms, and did not choose our horses ruined, there was some pretty "tall walking" for a short distance. The animal ran down the column till near the head of 7th regiment, and charred again, making a pretty wide breach in the ranks. After satisfying himself that the 7th was "no where" when he was about, he made a rush on the 2nd. The boys had time to fix their bayonets, whoever, and met our friend so coolly, that after receiving five or six bayonets wounds he hauled off and gave up the battle. In a few moments I saw him lassoed by a houseman and pulled along toward the city, bleeding profusely and looking quite crest fallen. He had evidently been deceived in his first charge, and seeing no bayonets, probably did not reckon on finding any on his second spurge. But he can (if the butchers have not killed him, which I strongly suspect,) console himself with the fact that he made more consternation among tow regiments of the U. S. infantry than a thousand two legged Mexicans could have done.

We met with no other interruption on our march. On both sides the land was well tilled and covered with corn in every stage, from the young sprout to the full ripe seed, tomatoes, peppers, etc. On one fine hacienda some men were ploughing, and I rode out to see them. The plough in use here is scarce a degree ahead of that used by the Arabians, and can only be of any effect in soft ground, being made entirely of wood. 1: is drawn by oxen, which ware goaded by a pike set in the end of a long pole. The Mexican holds his plough with one hand, and with the other stirs up the animals.

At the river the troops had stopped to wit for the generals and escort, and three friends, mind my self galloped on the pyramid, which we ascended mounted, and there had a fine view of the advancing column. All the Mexicans ran away to hear the drums. (a Mexicans will follow a single drum all day to hear the music.) and left us in possession of the pyramid, chapel, pulque, and all. We made the best of the room left us before the arrival of the troops, ascended the tower of the church, and examined the structure of the pyramid, &c. &c. In half an hour the whole parties were assembled in the little square fronting the church, the band playing music such as had never before echoed among the ruins of Cholula. Of all the tunes played., the inhabitants seemed most pleased with “Yankee Doodle,” probably from this lively nature. We were soon completely sun down by Indians, who brought fruit, bread, &c., from the market in the plaza below, and specimens of ancient pottery, broken idols, &c., &c. At first these curiosities were sold very cheap, but finding that we all wanted them, the rascals raided the price from on or two [. . . illegible . . .] to one and two rails, which very soon ruined the business, as they held on to their [. . . illegible . . .] and we go our money.

Cholula, at this day, presents little to attract the attention or claims the admiration of the traveler- its great pyramid sill stand, and it will stand a dozen centuries latter, inn as good preservation as now. Young trees have over grown its sides, and run dried brick on which it is con posed, have become a perfect solid. Its dimensions ([ . . . illegible . . . ]) are, "base 1440 feet, present height 179, area on the summit 45,210" Times and the heavy rains have considerable changed its general appearance, and it is difficult to discern the different stories or steps, of which there are three. The fist of these is a large bread platform, extending six or eight yards on either side further than the square eight-yard o either side than the square mass, which supported the temple of the Indians, and now the Catholic chapel. The second platform is hardly discernibly.

The history of this pyramid varies with every book on Mexico, believe Brantz Mayer's account to be as near to the truth as any that has been written before the flood, tradition has it, this valley was inhabited by giants. After the great drought and serve 1,400 years after the creation, one of these giants, called the Architect, caused a great number of breaks to be made, and commenced building a pyramid, placing men in files to pass along the bricks, in the same manner that fire buckets are passed at a conflagration in a small village.- He had progressed very well, until one find day the Great Spit sent down fire, killed the workmen, and put a veto on the pyramid. From this time we hear no more of the giant, and I suppose he was burned up with his workmen. Some time after this a great prophet came to Cholula, who, from being able to cause rains to fall and do other miraculous things, was chosen king of Anahuac. It is said that [ . . . illegible . . . ] corn grew so large that a man had trouble in carrying one ear, and other grain and all manner of fruit grew in similar enormous proportion. After several years resident this great and good prophet removed the south and died. The pyramid was then begun and completed, and coroneted to this great prophet, whose name I think was Quetzacooth, or the "Good of air." There was a temple on the top where Indians were sacrificed to the idols, and papas, or priests in great numbers gathered there.

It was here that the plot was forced against Cortez and all this followers by the orders of Montezuma and which was entry discovered by Donna Martina, the interpreter, and four or five Tlascalan friends of the conqueror. It is hardly necessary to detail this in extension. Montezuma sent 40,000 men to lay in want for Cortez, in ravines outside the city on the road to Mexico, and the caciques had deep ditches made in the streets, filled with sharp pointed sticks, and covered over so as to deceive the Spaniards. – They were also all armed and prepared with cords of hide to tie the Spaniards when they were defeated. The papas were induced to join the plot by a promise that twenty Spaniards should be given them to sacrifice. The sequel is well known. Cortez invited all the caciques and principal men into a large yard surrounded by a high wall, and after rebuking their treachery of signal of one gun was given and the whole were put to death–some were cut down, some shot, and some burned, to show the people that the gods of Cholulans could not aid them.
After some time two thousands Tlascalans entered the city, killed and made slaves of a great many of the Cholula, and the travelers now sees nothing of the former city except two mounds near the pyramid, and the streets, which are perfectly straight and cross each other at right angles like those of Philadelphia. Many of the first churches built by the Spaniards are in ruins and the remains of huts of sun dried bricks are seen to miles around. Many think that these ruins are the remains of Indian tenements, but I am of option that they are of recent origins, and of Spanish construction. The town now contains, in its two miles square, about 2000 inhabitants, most of whom raise truck and make pulque for the Puebla market.
There is one fine church in the town, and a large female convent besides numerous chapels. That on the pyramid is a very handsome one, with many rich ornaments, chandeliers, crosses, &c. It has an organ about as large as New England "seraphim," which was the only thing about the whole that I noticed as cut of proportion.

The view from the pyramid is one of the grandest in Mexico. On the west tower the high white peaks of Popocatapetl and Iztecuuhault; and on the southeast the gray head of San Enarras, often whitened with snow. On the south and northeast, as far as the eye can reach, lays the broad valley, dotted with villages and haciendas, and teeming with verdure, and fruits of homely honest labor. Puebla seems almost beneath one's feet, and a stranger looking on it for the first time from here, would not suppose it contained more than then thousand inhabitants.

After passing a very agreeable hour on and around the pyramid, I rode through the city and joined the advance of dragoons who were fast returning with the commander in-chief to Puebla. But they rode too fast for me, and I pulled up and drove on alone about a mile in advance of the main body. Presently a band of about they mounted Mexicans came dashing up, and as they approached I noticed two of our principal officers were with them. I joined the new comers, and learned that they are no other than the famous Domingo and his band of rangers. This popular captain, so notorious for his daring feats and bold adventures, out of gratitude to Gen. Scott for his delivery from a durance brought upon him by his political options, is now with his band engaged in scouting the country for guerrilla parties. He is a handsome man, rather large for his century, and just the last person I should desire to meet in the wilds of Mexico as an enemy. Many of his band are men of good lineage, and great personal courage, and they will, I am told, scatter an hundred guerrillas in a very short time. Domingo's name, alone is enough to frighten half a dozen muchachos out of the self possession.

About five miles from Puebla, four of Domingo's men gave their arms to their comrades and dashed off into a field where a large heard of cattle were grazing. In a short time they selected a large black bull from the heard and gave chase. Two would get the animal well under way when a third, perhaps five rods in the rear, would rush up, seize the bull’s tail in his right hand, and throw his right foot over it, outside the hand. Then, spurring his horse, he could turn him suddenly with the left hand, and the bull cover and over. This they repeated several times. Sometimes the horseman was unsuccessful, and got his hand pretty well skinned, but that was nothing so long as he kept his horse. One man, on a little bay horse that [. . . illegible . . .] over the ground like the kind, threw a bull three times in succession. The first time the poor animal changed end for end a little quicker and the had ever done before, I'll warrant. The Mexicans escorted us into the city, and left on a scouting expedition, the result of which was the engagement and diconfigure of a large party of San Juan de los Llanos, by Capt. Rull of the mounted rifles.

But I have already exceeded the bounds so of a small later- so, adios,

TORY.

NBR 73.297 January 8, 1848 operations of British capitalists in Mexico January 8, 1948
NBR 73.297 British method to obtain the specie we send to Mexico, pressure in the United States as a result of the actions of the capitalist of London

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore American writes-

The drafts which are now drawn into Mexico upon the government are calculated to have some effect upon the money market. Two are now on the way from Mexico for half a million each. The specie is furnished at Mexico by agencies of English houses, who sell the bills in Mexico. When presented here, the specie is received, and at once sent to Europe- It is hardly possible that these repeated drafts, and repeated shipments of specie should not have [. . . illegible . . .] influence upon the money market of the country; and these drafts will continue to the end of the war- This tact alone, and the speculation it gives rise to, is calculated to have some influence upon the money market.

The claims before congress are multiplying. I hear of one of $400,000, which will be in anon for drafts drawn by Col. Fremont upon the government here.

We copy the following extracts from the N. York Herald:-

"This terrible devastations has been brought about by the action of the capitalist of London and the bank of England. They are still engaged in the same purpose-of diminishing the prices of cotton, corn and other staples, and also of throwing vast quantities if goods into the U. States for the purpose of drawing off our specie. In London it is expected that fifteen or twenty millions of dollars in specie will yet be taken from the United States.

"With this extraordinary course of policy among the capitalist of London, the position of financial affects in this country, in connection with the government and the banks, becomes doubly interesting.- Immense loans will be required by the Americans government, to continue the war in Mexico-for there is no prospect of peace. These loans will come out of the money markets of large cities, in funds furnished by capitalist who own deposits in the banks, and of course the banks will have ultimately to pay, and take these loans, at the same time that the dram of specie is going on from this country into England. Between two such influences it will be a miracle, as we have already stated, if the baking institutions of this country can maintain their solvency, and pay their deposits in paper and specie, according to law. There must be some relaxation somewhere. Either the American government must abandon the treasure system, which deals entirely on the principle of specie– paying, or the banks must suspend. There is not alternative. We must look at it as two drains on the vaults of the banks- the one produced by the policy of the banks of England, and the other caused by the action of our government and the treasury department, to supply funds for the Mexican War."

WAR WITH MEXICO

By the arrival of the steamer New Orleans at N. Orleans on the 28th December, Vera Cruz dates to the 24th were received. She brought Gen. Pierce and a number of officers as passengers, and also the remains of Lieut. Cols. Dickinson and Graham, Cols. Butler, Martin Scott, and Ransom, Captts. Thompson and Taylor, Lieut. Williams, Clark, and Adams, Sergeant Madison, Dr. Slade, and privates [ . . . illegible . . . ] and Kennedy.

No later intelligence from the city of Mexico, than we had by any previous arrivals.

The barque Brail, Captain Bevand, which sailed from New Orleans come time since had not arrived nor been heard of at Vera Cruz up to the 24th. She is no doubt lost.

The train which left the city of Mexico on the 8th December, accompanied by Generals Twiggs and Pierce, reached Vera Cruz on the 23rd

Gen. Twiggs commenced his duties as governor of Vera Cruz on the 24th inst.

Col. Bank head was to leave immediately for the city of Mexico to join Gen. Scott.

Colonel Wilson was to leave on the 26th instant in the United States ship Germantown, for the north. During the skirmish of Gen. Lane with the Mexicans, Lieut. Ridgeley, of the artillery, and assistant adj. General to Gen. Lane, was killed.

The last sitting of the Mexican congress at Queretaro was held on the 25th ult, since which time no further sittings have taken place, in consequences of the absence of a quorum.

President Anaya has appointed Senor Cuevas, At instant and Co. to, as commissioner to go on to Washington to treat of peace, but it is not sure they will leave while Santa Anna is in the country

On December 6th, Maj. General Patterson arrived at Mexico with about 500 of Col. Hay's Texans regiment, one company of 2nd dragoons, and a small train. On the 8th, Gen. Cushing arrived with the Massachusetts regiment under Captain Webster, and 1st Pennsylvania regiment under Col Winkoop, and another detachment of recruits, and Maj. Gen Butler was on the way, as reported in Mexico, with 8000 more.

Col. Wright, of the Mass. Regiment, remains at Perote as its governor.

On Dec. 2nd, the guerrillas near Vera Cruz, wounded Lt. Gordon, of the rifle reg, and captured about 100 pack mules.
Lieut. O'Sullivan, promoted for gallantry at Palo Alto, and engaged in the late battles before Mexico, after throwing up his commission, has it said, accepted a colonelcy in the Mexican army.

On December 4th, the 1st artillery under Maj. Dinick relieved the 1stst infantry at Vera Cruz.

The U.S. frigate Cumberland, and sloop of war John Adams, were anchored under the castle of San Juan de Ulloa.

On the 27th ultimo, General Lane with detachment fought the Mexicans at a place named Matamoras, whipped them, and delivered several prisoners. [LVW]

NNR 73.304 January 8, 1848 letter from Mexico about fractions among the Mexicans, Special Correspondence of N. Orleans Picayune Mexico, Dec. 4, 1847.

The news from Queretaro since my last is extremely meager and uninteresting. The council of governors had at last broken up, and they have done nothing except pledging themselves to sustain the governments in providing the means to meet the expenditures in its branches. The question of peace or war was reserved for the notion of the general government. Well informed Mexicans do not hesitate to charge the [. . . illegible . . .] upon the partisans of Santa Anna, who have been unaccountably increased in Queretaro by the accession of nearly all of the Puros-Parias and one or tow others being the only exceptions.

This party (calling themselves Santanistas) are now said to be backing another revolution to place Santa Anna the head of the government and crush the hopes of the peace party, and this plot, it was believed would be indecision of the government. President Anaya issued a decree on the 25th that no election should be held to any part of the republic occupied by the Americans, but that they authorities now in power should continue to exercise the fractions. From present appearances this would be equivalent to giving the [. . . illegible . . .] of this and other place a life-lease of office a thing opposed to the democratic principle of "I don't know" and therefore not likely to be carried into effect.

The [. . . illegible . . .] notice appeared in the Star of Wednesday last-

"A call – The officers of the American army, the citizens attached thereto, Mexican citizens, foreigners and such other citizens as feel disposed, are invited to meet in to senate chamber, at the National Palace, Saturday afternoon next, December 4, at 4 o'clock P.M. for the purpose of settling the preliminaries and taking in a contemplated rail road between the city of Mexico and Vera Cruz and the intermediate points. Many of the citizens of the United States having indicated a determination to occupy the territory of Mexico, it is expected that the sprit of international improvement. Hitherto unknown in this country, will be called forth."

There were but few Mexicans present, but one of them stated that he was there to presented some four or five others, and pledged himself, should the security of the undertaking be manifested, to raise nine millions of subscription for the stock at once.

NNR 73.304 January 8, 1848 John Pollard Gaines’ speech on his return home, criticism of the conduct of the war

Major Gaines at home-

The hon. John P. Gaines, member of congress from Kentucky, arrived at Covington on the 16th, and was received with distinguished honors. In returning thanks, Major Gaines took occasion to present a narrative of his entrance to Mexico, his imprisonment, his sufferings, his escape, the stories of Gen. Scott &c. The Cincinnati Atlas reports a sketch of his remarks, and adds:

[LVW]
"He said very little of political matter, but that little was full of meaning. In regard to the war, he re-vowed the opinion declared by him before he joined the army, that it was wrongfully brought about by our government, and he now added that the administration were quite as censurable for the manner of its prosecution as for its unjust origin. The army, he knew, from personal observation, had suffered for want of provisions, munitions, and men that need of furnishings all of which had been placed in the hands of the president by congress. Not only had the gallant solders suffered great personal privations owing to this delectation of the executive, but the war had been actually prolonged, and rendered much more bloody and disastrous than it would otherwise have been. Had the president employed the means at his disposal in reinforcing Gen. Scott, the city of Mexico would have been captured earlier, and, in his opinion, with a far less loss of life than actually marred from the inefficiency of the administration. - In these opinions respecting the failure of the executive to furnish provisions, munitions, and men to the army, and the mournful results of such inefficiency. Major Gaines said every man in the army, whatever his political predictions, emphatically concurred with him.

"He avowed his intentions to vote in congress the amply supplies for the army as long as the war legally exists; but he also avowed, with great emphasis, his decisive determination to oppose the annexation of any Mexican territory to the United states, or the incorporation of any portion of the people of Mexico with ours.

"He remarked that he ever found a Mexican in Mexico in favor of peace with the United States, and he had no hope of any treaty thought the instrumentality of Mr. Trist." [LVW]

WAR WITH MEXICO

By the schooner Eleanor, Vera Cruz dates to the 29th December are received.

General Scott had issued orders directing the army to take positions in different portions of the Mexican republic, and occupy them until the government sues for peace on terms which will prove acceptable to the U. States.

Numerous other orders have been issued requiring the taxes of all kinds heretofore paid to the government of Mexico to be paid hereafter for the support of the American army. The orders enumerate the articles taxed, and prohibited lotteries.

Colonel Miles was about to leave Vera Cruz, and the regiment stationed there were making preparations to give him a sumptuous entertainment, as a mark of their respect for him as an officer and a man.

A Queretaro letter in the Moniteur, published in the city of Mexico, states that the present congress, in session at the place, will not come together again. Several deputies had left there, and the letter ads that new deputies an senators would soon be in the city. The government, in the letter further states, was silently taking measures for the suppression of intrigues in connection with the monarchial movement. In consequence of the governors of the different states not having fulfilled their promise to aid the government with such resources as they could command, it was much cramped for means.

Assistant surgeon Sutter died in the city of Mexico on the 15th ult. Full military honors were paid to his remains.

Lieutenant McDonald, of the 3rd artillery, and two other officers, with a small party, left Puebla on the 17th ult. For Jalapa, having in charge a considerable quantity of money, and were attacked by a band of fourteen robbers. Although only three of our countrymen were armed, they defeated the dragoons, and arrived safely at their destination.

The sloop of war Saratoga, arrived at Pensacola on the 6th instant, with Vera Cruz dates to the 27th ult. The accounts by her were not so late, but rather fuller. The new Mexican congress was to assemble at Queretaro early this month.

Most of the U. States troops in the city of Mexico, were, at the last accounts, about to depart for other portions of the republic, which are to be held until those who have the authority to act shall make satisfactory reparations to the U. S. government and enter upon negotiations for peace.

The New York Express, publishes the following extract of a letter which is mentioned as being from an intelligent officer that has been through all the campaign.

Mexico, December 2, 1848

" There is nothing new here since my last. Troops are daily arriving ; but not enough to effect much. - All those that are on the way here ought to have been on the ground before the last battles. We ought to have 75,000 men to-day, and proceed at once to take procession of the country. It is no merit of our government or infantry that we have not been destroyed before this. Our successes are all owing to the weakness of the enemy."  [LVW]
In these efforts he anticipates to be able to sustained by his troops, and especially his officers.

The people of the United States are anxiously looking in this direction for an honorable termination of the war. The victories so glorious to our arms at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, Buena Vista, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco and the city of Mexico, have failed to produce the desired results. Mexican armies, one after another, have been beaten and dispersed, and their capital taken; yet then Mexicans would continue the war. As peace, from all we can learn, appears far in the distance, we are called upon to prepare for coming events. Pleasure must give way to duty; our whole duty, and nothing but our duty, obedience, order, discipline an instruction must be rigidly enforced, which the interest, honor and glory of our country imperiously demand.

All orders hitherto issued by Major Gen Taylor, will be enforced until other wise directed.

The following officers are announced as chiefs of the staff attached t the army of occupation.

Bvt. Capt. Irving McDowell, assistant adjutant general at headquarters.
Capt. W. D. Fraiser, Chief of engineers, and aid-de-camp.
Maj. Lewis Cass, Jr., 3rd dragoons, acting inspector general.
Major P.M. Washington 31 artillery, chief of artillery, at Saltillo.
Capt. G. D. Ramsey, ordnance department, chief of ordnance at headquarters.
Col. Henry Whiting, assistant quartermaster general, chief of the quartermaster’s department at Matamoras.
Capt. E. S. Sibley, assistant quartermaster at headquarters.
Capt. T. B. Linnard, chief of the topographical corps at Saltillo.
Lt. L. Sitgreaves, corps of topographical engineers at headquarters.
Capt. A. B. Eaton, commissary of subsistence, chief of the commissary department at Brazos.
Captain J. C. Casey, co missionary of subsistence at headquarter.
Surgeon N. S. Jarvis, chief of the medical department at headquarters.
Major D. Hunter, chief of the pay department at Matamoras
Maj. W. A. Spark, payment master at headquarters.

NNR 73.305 January 15, 1848 Gen. Sterling Price’s arrival at Santa Fe

New Mexico—Santa Fe dates nineteen days later than previously give, are received.

Their legislator has assembled. Augrelly has been elected speaker of the house of representatives, and Sardival, president of the senate.

General Price arrived at Santa Fe on the 12th Dec., and constituted VIGIL governor of the territory, who sends a message according to usage, to the legislature. A bill has been passed authorizing the election of delegates to take into consideration the annexation of New Mexico to the United States.

Sixty-eight deaths have occurred in the fist battalion since they left Missouri. [LVW]

NNR 73.306 January 15, 1848 Rumors of the recall of Gen. Winfield Scott, other roomers of shifts in command

RUMORS OF THE RECALL OF GEN. SCOTT Without placing much reliance upon the rumors, the fact that it was quite current at Washington for some days, is undoubted. The Washi9ngton correspondent of the N. York Herald wrote on the 11th instant: "An important cabinet meeting was held to-day. The sitting was protracted until 4 o’clock this afternoon.- The discussion on the army were the principal subjects of deliberation. It as finally determined that Gen. Scott should be recalled, and a messenger will leave there on Thursday morning next, with orders to Gen. Scott from the war department, to return home as speedily as possible, and to report himself in Washington. The command of the army devolves on Major General Butler , as second in rank to Gen. Scott. The officers involved in the dissent ions in the camp, will as matter of course, return home.

The Washington correspondent for the New York Courier, writes that: "The question whether General Scott, Worth and Pillow are to be recalled, was at full length debated in the cabinet meeting yesterday, and I believe they will be called home, were it but to give the army a lesson of obedience to the instructions and law of their country. All the heavy service being done and the heart of Mexico fairly in our possession, our militant generals will answer quite well for garrisoning towns an clearing the high roads of robbers and vagabonds, as Scott himself. After the recall of Scott, Worth and Pillow the command will devolve on Major General Butler, of Kentucky, who stands in the most intimate relation to the president, and who would carry out his views without the aid of a lieutenant general. If Scott, Worth, Pillow and Duncar come home, they will undoubtedly be court marshaled."

Subsequent letter say that a messenger was actually dispatched, with the orders for Gen. Scott's recall, but that the messenger was overtaken at Richmond, Va., by another messenger with instructions to return to Washington, the cabinet having determined to delay the order until Gen. Pierce who was said to be hurrying on the Washington immediately from the army, should arrive and report.

Another rumor has been for some days in circulation, which may as well be mentioned here, that is that General Taylor is to be ordered to return to Mexico and take command of the army on the recall for the officers about referred to.

Another important rumor there is another report current at Washington, among military men, and generally believed, that Generals Jessup and Twiggs have exchanged commissions, and that the latter will return to the U. S. as quartermaster general. The former an old brigadier is senior to every general officer in the regular army, except Scott. Taylor and Gaines, and will, doubtless, be assigned to command with his brevet ran, dating, we believe from 1824. This, in case of accident to General Scott, or his recall, would place the command of the army in Mexico in the hands of Gen. Jessup instead of one of the temporary officers. [NY Globe] [LVW]
"I regret that the Whig members should have assumed the responsibility of the concern, by voting more men or money than was required to protect Taylor, and withdraw from the disputed territory. - What can be more demoralizing than for legislators to vote money and arms, and then claim that they are not responsible, because legally, the president has no right to use the arms as he please? Shame on such logic an crouching to expediency Well may the preside say 'come my new logic blood hounds, give me more cash and powder."  [LVW]

NNR 73.311-312 January 15, 1848 the unhappy difficulty between Gen. Winfield Scott and Gen. William Jenkins Worth

THE CASE OF GENERALS SCOTT AND WORTH

The following letter, which we find in the St. Louise Republic of Dec. 20, over the signature of "Gomez" contains interesting information concerning the origins of the unhappy difficulty between Gen. Scott and Gen. Worth, which has since led, as our readers are aware, to the arrest of t the latter. The facts set forth appear reliable, as they are embodied I the official documents:

"To a correct understanding of the merits of the controversy, it is proper to remark, that the first cause of the complaint on the part of Brevet Maj. Gen. Worth, against the general-in-chief, was the municipal authorities of the city of Puebla, in his advance upon, and occupation of, that city. General Worth, it will be recollected, was directed by General Scott to act with his division as the advance corps of the army, until reading and occupying Puebla. As a matter of history, and for the purpose of permitting every man to draw his won conclusions of the justness or unfairness of Gen. Scott's disapproval of the terms of that capitulation, I deem it due to all concerned, to insert a copy of the capitulation itself. It is in these words:

"General: if, as is to be supposed, you are possessed of a true and ardent love of your country, it will not appear strange the that first sentiment which the municipality of Puebla manifests in your addressing you, be that of proud grief for the inevitable necessity it finds itself under of regulating wit the enemy of its nation, the terms last opprobrious for occupying the capital of this state, by troops of the United States of the North. It consoles itself, however, with the idea that its immediate sacrifice has only object in view, of saving, if not the same national rights- which, is beyond the possibility of the attempting- at leas the very dear interest of the unarmed populations which the municipality presents. Compelled, therefore, to this duty, truly very painful but inevitable, and stimulated by the proposal which you thought proper to direct to it from Nopalucan, that before arriving too near the city, you might enter into a conference with the civil functionaries, in order to concert with them the best and most secure measures in relation to the inters mentioned; now withstanding that some have been adopted anomalous to the present case already ,the municipality, the only political authority which as remained, in view of the defenses tale of the city, and in virtue of your announcement of thing to occupy it in a military manner, and argued that the commission from its body, which as the honor of addressing you, accept the guarantees offered in the following terms:

"During the occupation of the capital of Puebla by the troops of the U. S., they will invaluably respect the Catholic religion, which the national professes, the public worship and morals, the personas and poverty of all the inhabitants.

" The civil local authorizes will continue in the free exercise of their functions conformably to the laws of the country. In consequence, if the Generals of said troupes should consider any other measures necessary, besides these dictated heretofore, especially the maintenance of public order and tranquility, he will communicate his wishes to said subject to the above mentioned authorities respectively, according to their nature, and sustain and protect such measures.
"The custody of the prisoners and officers in charge of the municipality, will continue in charge of the force which the civil authorities has allotted for it, composed of forty men of the battalion of the free (liber) allowed to go free from Vera Cruz as a convict guard, unit it be relieved by that of the U. S., when said prison guard, will be allowed to retire with their arms.

Headquarters, Chichapa, May 14th, 1847. Approved and granted, (signed) W. J. WORTH, Maj. Gen. Com’g True Copy J. C. Pemberton, Capt. & A. D. C.

The second cause of the complaint on the part of Gen. Worth against the general-in-chief, was the disapprobation by the latter, of a circular addressed by the former to his division alone at a period when the entire force of the army including the general-in-chief, was garrisoned in the city of Puebla, with the exception of a small force left at Jalapa, under Col Childs. The circular purported to convey information to the first division, of which, Gen. Worth was the commanding officer, that a design was contemplated by the citizens of Puebla to position the fountains from whence our army drew their daily supply of water, and in that was destroyed us; and placing them on their guard against such inhumane and nefarious designs, if in reality there was any gourd of apprehension water, that such threats had been made, or if made, whether there was the slightest possibility of their being put in execution.

To the exceptions taken by the generals-in-chief at these two official acts of Gen. Worth, the latter became greatly incensed, and permitting his feelings to pervert his better judgment, became most violently and bitterly inimically to the general-in-chief. The result was, that every reflecting officer in the army most deeply regretting, a rupture in those friendly relations which for upwards of their years had existed between these two gallant and justly distinguish military chieftains.

The following order, published to a very limited extent by the general-in-chief, after the finding of this court of inquiry demanded by Gen. Worth, contains sufficiently explicit, all other facts material to a correct understanding of the affair by your readers. And by simply setting it out in hace veraba, we shall close this communication.

[General orders no. 196] HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY
Puebla, June 30, 1847.

Abstract of the proceedings of the court of inquiry, which convened at this place, by virtue of general order No. 168, headquarters of the army, and of which Maj. Gen. J A Quitman is president.

I. the said court of inquiry proceeded in due form to investigate the subjects embraced in the two papers herein cited, viz; First the general order No 186 headquarters of the army Puebla Mexico June 24 1847 as follows:

"At the instance of Brevet Maj Gen Worth, a court of inquiry will meet in the building called the palace of this city, at then o'clock tomorrow morning, it investigate certain matters in which that general officer convinced himself to have been injured by the general-in-chief of his army, viz; in the matter of the terms granted by the said Brevet Major Gen to the functionaries of this city, in the way of capitulation, as guaranties, at or about the time (May 15, 1847) of this entrance the advanced corps of the army into the city; and in the matter of a circular, June 16, 1847, published by the said major General to the officers of his division."

If there be other matters in the conduct of the said Brevet Major General which he may especially desire to have investigated by the aid court of Inquiry, he will submit them to the general-in-chief, through the recorders, for father orders in the case.

Detail.

Lieut. R. P. Hammond is appointed special judge advocate.

The court will give an opinion of the merits of all the matters investigated by it.

[signed] H. L. Scott A A A G

Second. A brief statement by Brevet Major Gen. Worth, of the matters in which he conceived himself wronged by the general-in-chief, and to which the investigation extended under the order instituting the court, in the following terms, viz;

In the matter of an interview had May 15th, at Chicpa, Mexico between Brevet major Gen. Worth, commanding 1st division of the army, and the civil authorities of Puebla, at the instance of said Brevet Major General- the general in chief has improperly, in manner and matter, characterized the proceedings at said interview, to the prejudice and wrong of said Brevet Major General.

In the matter of a circular, which as addressed by Brevet Major General worth; to the 1st division on or about June 16th, 1847 the general in chief verbally and in writing, has harshly and injuriously characterized said circular, and in a matter uncalled for, and in the underserved reproach of said inferior officer.

After an investigation of the above matters, the court made the following decision in the case:

Opinion

"That, regarding the remarks of the General-in-chief, dated June 17th instant, endorsed upon the translated copy of a letter from the Mexican Judge Duran, to major general Scott, dated the 16th of June, instant, hypothetically and applicable only to claims urged by the Mexican authorities which the General-in-chief at this time of his remarks, supposed to be 'without authority" and which brevet Maj. General Worth insists were not conceded by any of his official acts-the court can perceive nothing in remarks of the General-in-chief to which Brevet Major could properly take exception.

The court is further of opinion, that the terms of stipulations granted by Brevet Maj. Gen. Worth, to the functionaries of the city of Puebla upon his entrance with the advanced corps of the army into that city on the 15th of may last were unnecessarily yielded, improvident, and in effect, detrimental to the public service. And that the grant of these privileges was in con traction of the ninth a tenth paragraph of general orders no. 20 published at Tampico on the 19th day of Feb. last and was not warranted by the letter of instructions of the General-in-chief Gen. Worth.

-----------------------------

The court as required further declares its opinion that the circular published by Brevet Maj Gen Worth to his division dated June 16, 1847m was highly improper and extremely objectionable in many respects as especially as it might extend exasperation in the whole Mexican nation, to thwart the well known pacific policy of the us, and in view of the high sources from which it emended, to disturbed the friendly relations of our government with Spain, or at least give occasion to the power, to call for explains or apologies. The barbarous offence, against which he circular warned the soldiers of the first division if it existed at all, equally affected the whole army. The information obtained by Worth if worth of notice should therefore have been communicated the General that might have exercised his discretion on the means to be adopted to correcting the evil.

With these views of the circular alluded to , the court is of opinion that is called for the emphatic admonition and rebuke of the General-in-chief.

In conclusion, this court deems it material to make case, to express the opinion, that it is the right and the duty of the General-in-chief, and indispensable to the preservation of proper discipline in the army, that he should at all times possess the privilege of freely commenting upon disapproving or sensor the official acts of his subordinate officers."

II the general in chief approves the processing and opinion of the forgoing case

These orders will not be exceeded beyond the commanders of division and brigades, and the chief of the general staff.

The court of inquire, of which Major Gen. Quitman is president, is dissolved. By command of Maj. Gen. Scott

NNR 73.320 January 15, 1848 rumor of issuance of treasury notes to finance the war

MONEY MATTERS- Species movements. - The New York Herald says that the steamship Caledonia, from Boston for Liverpool, will take out about three hundred thousand dollars in species. This with the shipments made from New York and Boston since the first of Jan. will make an aggregated of about one million of dollars exported with the past twelve days. The exports for Dec., from these two ports was two and a half millions making, from the first December to the sixteenth of January, a total of there and a half million dollars. The drain commenced previous to December in November the export from New York was one and a half million and from Boston about one million making two and a half million in that month. Since the 1st of October, when the exportation to any extent commenced, the total amount of shipments had been to at least seven million dollars equal to more than one quarter of the aggregate importation 1847.

The N. Y. Tribune says:

The committee of ways and means are in correspondence with the leading moneyed men of the country of the purpose of collecting information regarding the best method of obtaining the money which will be needed by the government. An issue of treasury notes will not do, as they are paid at once into the custom house and it is doubtful if a larger loan would be taken at a fair rate unless the specie clauses of the sub-treasury first suspended. The banks could furnish no facilities for such a loan when it will cosset an immediate and large drain upon their vaults it is understood that the secretary will want about a million and a half per month. Several leading capitalist, have it is stated, been called to Washington from Boston, Philadelphia, and New York to discuss this matter.

The Philadelphia American says:

Treasury Notes- According to the last rumor from Washington, the secretary of the treasury has devised a plan for raising the were withdraw for carrying on the war, constituting of an issue of ten million of treasury notes in sums of not less than $50 bearing interest, - and a second issue of treasury notes in sums of not less than $10, not bearing interest. [LVW]

"The president has this day ordered a court of the inquiry for the purpose of investigation the charges against Gen. Pillow and Col Duncan, which have been preferred by Gen. Scott. After that investigation has terminated, the court is further discrete to inquire into the charges preferred against Gen. Scott by Gen Worth. The charges against Gen. Worth submitted by the commanding General, have been dismissed by the president.

The court is directed to assemble at Perote, at as early a day as the members can convince. It is consists of Gen. Towson, paymaster general, as president, and Gen. Cushing and Col. Butler, of Louisiana. Towson will start for Mexico on Monday.

The selection of Gen. Towson is an anomaly in court martial, and will doubtless lead to difficulty. His office of paymaster general-is a civil one, which might be conferred upon any individual in private life, and he holds no rank in the regular line of the army.
The command of the army in Mexico will necessarily devolve on Gen. Butler, of Kentucky, he being the officer next in rank to Gen. Scott, whose presence will be required at the court of inquiry.

The idea of recalling Scott is abandoned for the present, but it may be renewed."

NNR 73.323 January 22, 1848 another publication from Col. James Duncan

COL. DUNCAN. – Another letter. The following letter from Col. Duncan, which originally appeared in the North American Star, published in the city of Mexico, after the arrest of that officer, indicates a highly exasperated state of feeling on his part towards the commander in chief. How far the tone and spirit of the letter may have been authorized by the article of which it is a reply, we know not, not having seen the article, or the "Tampico letter" referred to. [August Chron. & Sent.]

City of Mexico Nov. 17 1847.

To the editor of the North American Star:

Sir- An article that appeared in the Ameri. Star of this morning requires that my name should again most reluctantly appear in your paper:

Two considerations prompt me to notice the article referred to, firstly the semi-official character of the paper in which it appears; and secondly, the position of the writer, who is genially believed not to be the nominal editor.

The writer states, "in company with Mr. Kendall, of the Picayune, he saw the convent at Churubusco assaulted and carried by storm-carried while the guns of Col. Duncan's battery were playing upon the bridge-head.

"Mark how a plain tale shall set him down."

It is a fact susceptible of the most unequivocal proof, that Col Duncan's battery did not fire a shot at the bridge-head.

This battery was not put in position to fire at all, til from ten to fifteen minutes after the bridge-head fell.

Mr. Kendall stood by the side of Col. Duncan’s battery from the time it was put in position till the white flag was hung out from the convent.

Again the Star says: "The 6th and several other corps of infantry charged upon the enemy’s left, but before this charger could be productive of any beneficial results to our arms; the convent of Churubusco was carried, &c.

As before stated, the bridge-head had fallen from ten to fifteen minutes before Col. Duncan’s battery was put in position. Twenty-seven rounds were fired from one gun, which must have taken some time little time; the convent could not therefore have fall off the bridge instead of before as the Star states.

I do not wish the forgoing statement to be taken as mere random assertions. I am prepared to prove them by numerous disinterested eye witnesses of as higher standing as any officer in the army; indeed I entertain no doubt that I can ever convince the writer of the article in the Star, whose error of statement doubtless are only the result of mistaken impression.

The writer for the Star calls on general Pillow, Twigs, Shields, and Smith, as well as Cols. Ridgeley, Clark, and Garland to "testify" that "erroneous impressions were imbedded to be produced" by the Tampico letter. This is certainly appealing to high authority, and if these gentlemen sustain his appeal, it must be acknowledged that this part of his case is made out.

The Star further states that the Tampico letter tends to least discreet upon subsequent statesmen or other writers." It will be very likely to do so, if subsequent statements are written as incautiously as the article of this morning.

I refrain from making any comments on the tone and temper of the article in question; no good can come of it: it speaks for itself. The writer has followed an exceedingly bad example- and I trust, when he has occasion to assail any body else, he will be sure of his facts and is temper, they are of infinite value to great men as well a little men.

And it is to be hoped that good taste as well as good policy, will prevent him again quoting from order No. 394. The army will not soon forget this order, and last of all will it be forgotten by its illustrations authors.

Very Respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

Jas. Duncan, Bt. Lt. Col. USA

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have seen the Star of the 18th containing certificates from Mexican officers, (prisoners at the time they were given) in relation to the operations that produced the fall of the convent...Those prisoners are not released or doubtless a bundles of certificates might be produced from them, providing anything- even that they are brave and honest. The highest functionary of the men are little scrupulous about such small matters. The wonder is not that the Mexican officers gave certificates, but that they should have been asked or permitted to give them. Certificates from our own officers could be procured, telling quite a different story but I have no disposition to against this matter. So far as I am personally concerned, I care not a straw about it. Whether "my bow and arrow" killed "Cock Robin," or whether question for present discussion; that "Cock Robin" was killed by some body is quite clear.

COM. CONNER’S REPLY.

Princeton, Sacrificios, Aug. 16, 1846

Sir- The brig-of-war Daring, just about sailing from New Orleans, with dispatches from the English minister in Mexico, to Mr. Pakenham at Washington, allows me an opportunity, and sufficient time to inform you that Gen. Santa Anna and his friends have just now arrived at Vera Cruz in the English merchant steamer Arab, from Havana.
I have allowed him to enter without molestation, or even speaking the vessel, as here, Capt. Lambert, she carried no cargo, and would not be allowed to take any in return. In could easily have barded the Arab, but I deemed it most proper to not do so, allowing it to appear as if he had entered without my concurrence. It is now quite certain the whole country— that is, the garrison of every town and fortress— have declared in his favor. But unless he has learned something used in his adversity, and become another man, he will only add to the distractions of the country, and be hurled from power in less than three months. Respectfully yours, ob’t serv’t

NBR 73.324 January 22, 1848 Gen. Winfield Scott’s order no. 376 for further conquest, debate in Senate relative there to Conquest of Mexico- Execution of Tribute- Army of Invasion – General Orders No. 376.

Headquarters of the Army, Mexico Dec,15

This army is about to spend itself over and over to occupy this republic of Mexico, until the latter shall sue for peace in terms acceptable to the government of the United States.

On the occupation of the principal point or points in any states, the payment to the federal government of this republic of all taxes or dues will be demanded of the proper civil authorities for the support of the army of occupation.

The state and federal district of Mexico being already so occupied as well as the states of Vera Cruz, Puebla, and Tamaulipas, the usual taxes or dues, heretofore contributed by the same to the federal government will be considered a due and payable to this army from the beginning of the present month, and will early be demanded of the civil authorities of the states and districts, under lease and penalties which shall be duty announced and enforced.

Other states of the republic as the Californians. Now Mexico, Chihuahua, New Leon, &c, already occupied by the forces of the US through not under the immediate orders of the general in chief will conform to the prescription of this orders, except in which such states or states where a different system has been adopted with the sanction of the government at Washington.

The internal taxes or dues referred to are 1 direct taxes; 2 duties on the product of gold and silver; 3 melting and assaying dues; 3 rent of stamping paper; 6 the rest on the manufacture of playing cards; and 7 the rent of post offices.

The rest of national lotteries is abolished—lotteries being thereby prohibited.

Import and export duties at the ports of the republic will remain as fixed by the government of the US except that the exportations of gold and silver bars or igneous (plata y ono en pasta) is prohibited until the future intrusions of the government on the subject.

All imported articles, good or commodities which have once paid, or given sufficient security or the payment of duties to the US at any port of entry of the republic shall not again be burdened with any tax or duties in any part of this republic occupied by the forces of the United States.

The levying of duties on the transit of animals goods, or commodities whether of foreign or domestic growth, from one state of this republic to another or on entering or leaving the gate of any city within the republic will, from and after the beginning of the this year, be prohibited as far as the US forces may have the power to enforce the prohibition. Other and equitable means, to a moderate extent must be resorted by the several states and the authorities, for the necessities support of their respective governments.

The tobacco, playing cards, and stamped paper agents, will be placed for three, xi or twelve months under contract with the highest bidders, respectively, to the several states: the state and federal district of Mexico being considered as one. Accordingly offers or bids for those rents, within each state, or any one of them are invited. They will be sent in as early as possible sealed to the headquarters of commanders of departments, except of the federal district and state of Mexico. For the two latter, the offers or bids will be addressed to the general in chief.

Further details for the execution of the foregoing system of government and revenue will soon be given in general orders.

By command of Major Gen. Scott

NNR 73.324 affair at Cholula

Vera Cruz dates to the 4th inst. are received.

Col. Miles with from 1000 to 1500 men and a heavy train, left Vera Cruz on the 2d, for the city of Mexico accompanied by the first infantry, under the command of Maj. A.S. Miller and E. Bakus. Gen. Scott was anxiously waiting their arrival.

Gen. Marshall was at Jalapa waiting for the arrival of Col. Miles’s train. When it came up he was to move off for the capital.

John Reynolds, a private in company D, 8th infantry, was hung in the city of Mexico on the 20th ult. for murdering a Mexican woman.

The Mexican papers mention a report that Santa Anna had embarked at Acapulco for the port of San Blas.

The Mexican government was doing all in its power to get the new congress together.

Advices from Mazatlan, 30th Dec., state the guerrillas under Mijares made an attack upon a body of Americans, and were completely routed. Mijares and a number of his followers were killed.

Another engagement with guerrillas, further north, resulted in a victory to the Americans.

On the night of the 21st ult. an expedition was sent to Cholula to apprehend some Mexican officers. A fight took place, in which three Mexicans were killed and three wounded.

A number of American prisoners, who had been taken by the Mexicans at various times, were sent from Seatlan, by the Mexican governor of that place, to Puebla, asking that Col. Pavon might be exchanged for them. If that request could not be complied with, the Mexican governor desired the liberation of an equal number of Mexicans. In case neither of these requests could be complied with, the governor wished it to be understood that he voluntarily restored the Americans to their freedom.—Col. Childs told the governor of Zacatan that he could not comply with either of his requests, as the Mexicans were already indebted to the American army for a number of prisoners liberated by its officers. He thanked the governor for his for the treatment of Mexicans who might be taken prisoner by him. [JNA]
"MANIFEST DESTINY" DOCTRINES.

Amongst the many journals published in our country, that boldly advocate the doctrine that is the duty of the people of this country to conquer and retain the Mexican republic, in order to compel that people to submit to such institutions as we choose to impose, none is more explicit than the New York Evening Post. In an argument upon the subject the editor says:

"Now we ask," whether any man can coolly contemplate the idea of recalling our troops from the territory we at present occupy—from Mexico—from San Juan de &8230;from Monterey—from Puebla—and thus, by one stroke of a secretary's pen, resign this beautiful country to the custody of the ignorant cowards and puritans who have ruled it for the last twenty five years? Why, humanity cries out against it. Civilization and Christianity protests against this reflux of the tide of barbarism and anarchy."

And again, "the aborigines of this country have not attempted and cannot attempt, to exist independently alongside of us. Providence has so ordained it; and it is folly not to recognize the fact. The Mexicans are aboriginal Indians, and they must share the destiny of their race."

The "destiny of the race" of "aboriginal Indians along side of us" has been extinction—rapid extinction—not subjection, as we all know. They never have submitted to become slaves. Is it then seriously contemplated that the seven millions of Mexican Indians shall not "exist independently along side of us"—and pronounced to be "a folly not to recognize the fact, that Providence has so ordained it?"

Numerous articles of the same import are gracing journals published in this free, this enlightened, this Christian country—this model republic?

Besides the tone of public journals, we have numerous letter from various directions, and especially from Americans with the army in Mexico, loudly calling upon government to hurry on to fulfil the manifest destiny of humbling and subduing the devoted race and of taking upon ourselves or rather of handing over to the tender mercies of the army, the fulfillment of the "purposes of Providence" in regard to these our next neighbors.

Added to the public journals and letter writers, we have speeches from eloquent orators and from men high in station and command—to the same purpose.

According to reported congressional proceedings of Wednesday, Senator Dickenson, in his speech advocating his own resolutions and the "annexation of all Mexico," which he considers a thing of fate, declared, as an evidence of the "inevitable destiny of the matter," that "had we never gone to war, Mexico would have become a portion of the great empire we have founded."

The most striking and direct to the purpose of those speeches that has fallen under our notice, we find in following extracts from a speech of Com. Stockton, delivered by him at the public dinner with which he was complimented at Philadelphia on the 30th ult. He regards the "destiny" which he thinks the people of this country are called upon to fulfil a solemn religious obligation, from which they may not shrink without having to answer not only to posterity, but to high heaven. NNR 73.336 January 22, 1848 conflicting reports on the court of inquiry concerning the disputing officers in Mexico

GEN. SCOTT AND ARMY OFFICERS. If we may credit the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, who is considered to be minute with the process of the cabinet there have been several changes in the decision of that body, with in a few days, in relation to the course to be pursed with the dispatching officers of the army in Mexico. Last week the writer alluded to stated in substance, that the cabinet had taken to the course I indicated in the letter which will be found on a preceding page, extracted from a letter of the Washington correspondents of the North American. Subsequently the Ledger (on the 18th) positioned a telegraph dispatch from the correspondents, saying:

"Gen. Townson has not left for Mexico. The difficulties in the army have been reconsidered in cabinet considered and General Scott has this day been suspended and ordered to Washington. Gen. Worth is released from arrest, by order of the president, and restored to his command as major general to the army"

The National Intelligencer of the 2oth, in contradiction of the above says "Last evening we learned authentically that Gen Towson, paymaster general, did set out on Monday night last to Mexico, where he is, in conjunction with Gen [ . . . illegible . . . ] and Col. Butler of the volunteer forces to form a court of inquiry or [ . . . illegible . . . ] by the President of the United States, on Gen. Scott.

DIPLOMATIC JOURNAL.

GENERAL SCOTT SUSPENDED. The thousand and one rumors that unhappy disputes amongst the officers of the army in Mexico have given rise to, as to the course determined upon by the cabinet, were all settled four the day, by the announcement of Gen. Cass, chairman of the committee on military affairs of the senate, who on Tuesday last in reply to questions put to him by Mr. Crittenden, stated, that orders had gone on for the suspension of Gen. Scott, from the command of the army, for the assembling of a court of inquiry in his case of Perote, and for the discharge of Gen. Worth from arrest. VOL. XXIII SIG 22.

Gen. Butler will be commander of the army.

On the 15th inst. The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, wrote as follows:
"You will see by the last news from Mexico that Gen. Scott is faithfully carrying out the views of the administration, which are to obtain peace as quickly as possible by coercion, and not as Mr. Trist would imagine, by suing for it through an itinerant clerk in the state department. Mr. Trist has altogether transcended his orders, and it is probably for his reason that he is about to be dismissed from the state department, and Mr. Appleton, now chief clerk of the navy department, appointed in his place," &c.

The following paragraph in the same paper, was probably from the same pen.

"Gen. Scott- We learn from a respectfully source that Gen. Scott is not to be recalled as it is plain he carries out the views of the president. If he was to be recalled, it was for less for the quarrels of the generals than on account of his official correspondence with the war department. Now that he excludes orders there is no need for a change."

Amongst the rumors of the past week, one as given by a Washington letter writer, was that "In case the difficulties should increase on account of these feuds, it is said that General Scott, Worth, and Pillow, will be recalled and that a court martial will be held here, of which General Taylor will be president." NRR 73.337-338 January 29, 1848 rumors relative to the negotiation and signing of a treaty of peace with Mexico

Rumors relative to peace. The National Intelligencer of the 25th, under this head stated that, "There was a good deal of stir occasioned in the city yesterday, by sundry rumors received from the south by telegraphy, of a pacific turn to affairs in Mexico, even to an agreement to the basis of a treaty, on the conditions proposed last fall by Mr. Trist. The authority for the rumors was, however, too vague to inspire general confidence in it."

The next day the Intelligencer had following on the subject: "The rumors of peace, or rather of propositions for peace, which have floated in the atmosphere of our city for a day or tow past, yesterday assumed a more definite form. We ourselves receiver a letter from our respected correspondents at New Orleans, under date of the 16th instant, in which he says that he has received information from a source such as to leave little doubt on his mind of its correctness, that "Mr. Trist has signed a treaty, and that it will be received here (at New Orleans) by the next arrival."

Private letters from officers in Mexico mention rumors there which look to the result above indicated."

The Arco Iris, of the 7th Jan. published the following:

The treaty of the peace signed. - In a letter received by us yesterday from our correspondents at Jalapa, he informs us that an individual holdings a high position in the American Army, and whose assertions deserve entire credit, said publicly, and without the lease reserve, that from letters received from Jalapa from Puebla, on the 1st instant, it was positively known that a treaty of peace had been signed in Mexico. On being told that it was strange that this should be the case, as Mr. Trist had not power to give such treaty he answered that General Scott had taken it upon his own responsibility to sing the treaty; in consequences of which the treaty had been sent to Queretaro for the approbation of the Mexican government.

The Free American, putting no faith in the rumor goes on to reason on the subject as follows:

"It is very strange, indeed if this be true. Gen. Scott, if he is directed by his government not to be signing any treaty, would certainly not sign it. He is too well known for his obedience to superior orders to put himself in a post ion that his countrymen might not approve; he had to much at heart the friendlier feelings of those whom he serves.

The last annual message of the president assures us that Mr. Trist’s Power had been revoked, and that he was recalled. It is true that Mr. Trist has not yet left the city of Mexico; but this he may do to await further orders from his government relative to the propositions of peace lately made by the Mexican commissioner, to which he could certainly not have received any answer from Washington before the 1st of the present month. The Mexicans could not have been in such a hurry to make the peace, as they have always refused the proposition made by our envoy, and we are certain that Gen. Scott is not so anxious for it as to grasp at the first shadow of an opportunity. We wish to receive the news of peace from a better source before we give credit to it."

The Washington Union thus speaks on the subject:

Washington is full of rumors about peace. But we cannot understand that any official accounts have been received to justify these angina calculations.

The only thing which we have heard of any authentic character, is a letter from ma distinguished officer, who writes from Vera Cruz, on the 3rd inst to a member of congress reporting the arrival of the courier from the capital with rumors about negotiations, and the option of the commander in chief that we should have peace at no distant day.

We have no confirmation of these reports from official sources; though we should not be surprised if Mr. Trist, without any instructions or authority, was receiving proposals from the Mexican commissioners.

The tone of the foregoing paragraph would seem in some degree to countenance the [acieration] of the Washington correspo9ndent of the Baltimore Patriot, who writes on the 26th, that "The administration has sent some four or five special messengers, with dispatches after Mr. Trist but they cannot find him or at all events they cannot get him to come home."

The arrival at N. Orleans on the 18th, of the steamer N. Orleans, with Vera Cruz dates on the 14th, without bringing any confirmation of the above rumors of peace seems to terminate all hopes of there being any truth in the accounts. A letter from an intelligent American at Vera Cruz, speaking of the news from the interior of Mexico, says, "We find little said about a treaty of peace, but there were whispers at Queretaro of an armistice of three months being on the tapis."

And yet the Washington correspondent of Baltimore Sun, who is well known to have opportunities of acquiring information at headquarters writes:

Washington, Jan 26, 1848

"I have not time to write you a long letter, but will endeavor to make a few points.
First as to Mr. Trist, you may take it for granted, beyond cavil or dispute that Mr.
Trist has sent to Washington a project of treaty, (not treaty) and that the same has been submitted to the president and discussed in cabinet council.

2nd. You may take it for granted that Mr. Trist had not direct and positive authority to make a treaty, and that, consequently the whole thus far is a mere ex part arrangement between Mr. Trist on one part, and Mexican commissioners, acting without direct authority of congress, on the other.

3rd. That Mr. Trist and Gen. Scott co-operate with each other in these preliminary arrangements; and that both are sanguine that a treaty on the basis contained in the project may be ratified by the Mexican congress."

4th. That the administration will seriously consider the proposition, and that, in all probabilities, the president will communicate it to both houses of congress.

The Mobile Register publishes a letter from a gentleman of high standing, dated Vera Cruz, January 4, which says:-"An express got in yesterday from the city with the dispatches from General Scott. The officer who brought them told me that seven days since when he left every one in Mexico was talking of peace and that Gen. Scott said to him that he did not doubt that we should have such a peace by April next as would enable our government to withdraw the army. God grant it; but I do not think so. We of the army are, I presume, at this time the most anxious advocates for peace. The truth is, even the "Elephant" himself in disgust at being looking at for such a length of time has left for parts unknown." [LVW] Major Gen. Gains, reached Washington on the 17th instant from New York, where he is not stationed.

Brigadier General Pierce, reached Washington on the 16th instant, directed from the army in Mexico.

Maj. B. McCullough of the Texas Rangers, Capt. J. B. Magruder, and Capt. P. Kearny, (who has lost one arm in the war) have also reached Washington, as has also Major Bliss, assigned adjutant general, and chief of Gen. Taylor’s staff.

General Pillow, by an article in the American Star, published in the city of Mexico, denies all knowledge of the famous "Leonidas" letter, or of its author.

Troops for the war- The new packet ship Maid of Orleans was to sail from New York on Thursday last for Vera Cruz, with 400 US troops on board for the war in Mexico.

The fifth regiment of East Tennessee volunteers, numbering 684 privates, arrived at New Orleans on the 28th, and went on board the ships Tahmaroo and Mississippi, about to start for Vera Cruz.

Four companies of the Michigan volunteers (293 men) arrived at New Orleans on the 10th from Cincinnati, under the command of Col T B W Stockton, Capt. FW Curtennis, N Breasel, JS Rowland, and J Wittenmeyer.

Two more companies of the Michigan regiment, comprising of 251 men, under command of Maj. Buehl, arrived at New Orleans on the 11th instant, en route to Mexico.

The ninth regiment- A letter received by Ben. Wade, of Bangor, from his son who belongs to the 9th, which says that when they left Newport, R I, the regiment number 800 men, but that it has been reduced to 200..

The corps of sappers and miners- A correspondent of the Portland Advertiser, writing from Mexico, 24th November says: "the company now consists of less than their men on duty, out of seventy one that left West Point a year from last September. Three of that number have received a dishonorable discharge."

The Philadelphia Rangers one of the volunteer companies from Pennsylvania, now in Mexico, numbered on the 29th of October only 15 men. When they left Pittsburgh for the seat of war they munster 96 men. [JNA]

Honors- The senate of Pennsylvania has unanimously passed resolutions of thanks to General Scott and the army in Mexico; and a resolution directing the presentation of swords to Gens. Cadwallder and Patterson.

The New York papers contain descriptions of two magnificent gold mounted swords manufactured in that city. One of them was ordered by the common councils and citizens of Troy as a present to the General Wool; and the other is intended as a present from the citizens of Hudson and Kinderhook to Gen. Worth. The former cost $1000 and the latter $500. [LVW]
The senate. Thomas Hughes was elected president JB Russell clerk, and Mr. Rockwell assistant clerk. (all adm)

The house elected Gen. JB Brown (whig) clerk JS Palmer (adm) assistant clerk. Hawkins Taylor (whig) sergeant at arms Mr. Hedrick messenger.

Mr. Reynolds was the only member that was not in his seat on organizing the house.

A resolution was adopted appointing a committee to investigate the right of Mr. Kinsman to the seat he occupied. Other cases, it is probable, will be referred to the same committee.

The "democrats" have a majority of four in the senate, and the whigs had a majority of two in the house, when organized.

The administration party were confident that the result of the special election in Lee country would give them a majority in the house, and are uncertain of succeeding in electing US senators.

The democratic state convention was to assemble on the 8th January.

A whig state convention assembled on Iowa city on the 6th January. MD Browning of Burlington presided The convention was named as Delegates to the wig national presidential convention Gen RP Low JW Grimes AB Porter and Jas McManus. They also appointed four substitute delegates.

A resolution was passed instructing the delegates to express a preference for Gen. Taylor as the presidential candidate. HW Starr, of Burlington, delivered a brilliant speech on the Texans question.

Resolutions were also passed condemning the present administration, the sub-treasury, tariff of '46, &c. [LVW]

NRR 73.339-340 January 29, 1848 a Mexican letter on excesses of the Americans

ARMY OF INVASION

The American Star, published in Mexico, translates the following passage of a letter written In the city of Mexico, and published in the Republicano of the 16th of December.

"The American who have been expected have arrived after committing a thousand excesses in every place through which they have passed. In this city they have occupied by force the Covent de las Viscaines, and the houses of Echeverria and Teran, who they say are agents of the government. A body of Texans have arrived who flattered with the idea of avenging their brethren killed in 1836, are committing all kinds of evils and excess. This is no longer to be feared for that would be far better to have a legion of demons here than these criminal ferocious and atrocious men. For myself I intend to leave immediately with my father to go and live in the woods for it is much preferable living with wild beasts than with such fellows. The tiger Scott oppresses the proprietors because he supposes they will be influenced in bringing about a peace. I have neither time more temper to tell you that all illus...

NRR 73.340 Jan. 29, 1848 Proceedings at Queretaro, a guerrilla affair

GUERRILLA AFFAIR. On the 3d January Colonel Miles left Vera Cruz with a large train, for the city of Mexico.

The Vera Cruz American of the 5th, says, for some cause, not understood here, a portion of the train was unable to leave their encampment near this city until this morning. In dragging through the heavy sand the train and pack mules, of which there was a large number, became much scattered, so that the rear guard, which consisted of Capt. Ruff’s company of the regiment of mounted riflemen, under the command of 1st Lt. Walker, was thrown nearly seven miles in the rear of the main body of the wagon train. About 9 o’clock work was sent back that a guerrilla party at Santa Fe had captured some of the packs scattered along the road. Lt. Walker, leaving ten riflemen, with some wagons which had not been able to keep up, immediately moved up to Santa Fe, where he found the guerrillas drawn up. One statement makes them 400 string, another 250. They were immediately charged by the riflemen, and without attempting to stand or resist, they scattered keeping up a random and destructive fire upon Lt. Walker’s little party of 30 men; who, finding it impossible to send forward to the advance, sent a messenger to this city stating nearly as above. Subsequent messengers, two or three of whom are men of the company, and who were in the fight, state that Ruff’s company had been surrounded and nearly every man cut off; that Lt. Walker had been killed, and that some sixty mules had been driven off by the guerrillas. Another, who left still later, contradicts the death of Lt. Walker, but states clearly and positively that he was ordered in by Lt. W. to report to Gen. Twiggs--that the lieutenant had posted the company, or what remained of them, in a ravine, from which they continued to keep up a most destructive fire upon the Mexican lancers. A company of 1st dragoons, Lt.
Gardiner’s, has been sent out, and also a mounted company of Louisiana volunteers.

Seven o’clock, P.M. A few soldiers just arrived from Santa Fe with dispatches to Gen. Twiggs.--Some of them report that an engagement had taken place between the guerrillas and Lieut. Walker, in which the former lost some 25 men, and the latter 5 men killed and wounded. One of the men who came says that there was only one American killed.

Further from Lt. Walker’s command--By express.--Just as we were going to press we received the following letter, written after the engagement:

Santa Fe, jan. 4--9 o’clock.

Here we are--we have lost about 300 pack mules--one hundred thousand dollars worth of property!

The guerrillas attacked us about 4 o’clock; we have lost about ten men out of thirty under Lieut. Walker, of the rifles. He was obliged to dismount his men in an open prairie, for at the first fire 17 horses broke from under their riders. Thirty men were not enough to protect a million worth of property.

We understand that some of the merchants who suffered from this loss of the mules taken by the robbers left the city for Orizaba, or Cordova, (we suppose) to enter into an arrangement with them.--We wish them success.

The steamer New Orleans, which reached New Orleans on the 18th, with Vera Cruz dates to the 14th January, brings further particulars.

The account says that the portion of the train cut off had incautiously lagged behind. Col. Miles could not wait for them to come up, but left a guard of 25 men behind, which was totally inadequate against the sudden onset of 400 guerrillas.
The loss may have been exaggerated, and it will, moreover, fall principally upon foreign merchants, to whom the pack mules stolen belonged. One house is said to have lost property worth $54,000, and English firm. The French and Spanish merchants robbed were able to obtain the restoration of their goods by paying smartly, but no compromise could be made by English and American merchants. Their reliance now is upon Gen. Twiggs, who is expected to assess upon the district of Orizaba, whence the brigands came, the amount lost. In the skirmish it is supposed that three or four men of the mounted rifles were killed, and eight or ten of the Mexican muleteers. [JNA]

NRR 73.340-341 January 29, 1848 Gen. Winfield Scott’s orders no. 395, levying contributions on Mexican states

General Orders No, 395

To support in part the military occupation of the Republic of Mexico by the army of the United States, the several States of the republic, already occupied and others as they shall become occupied are, or will be assessed by the year in dollars
This assessment is the quadruple of the direct taxes paid by the several states to their lateral government in the year 1843 or 1844. But, on the other hand all transit duties, heretofore payable at gates of cities and on passing the lines between states, have been abolished together with national lotteries. The tobacco monopoly will be abolished from and after the present year. The cultivation and the sale of that plant shall here after be free- save any duty that the US may have imposed or shall hereafter impose on the import of tobacco though the customs houses at Mexican ports occupied by this army,

The governors and members of the legislatures in different stats, and the collecting officers now in commission and theretofore charged with the collection of the federal dues of any kind, will be individually held responsible in their persons and property for the collecting and full payment of this assessment of the twelfth monthly at the usual state capitals respectively or other places or places within the same, as maybe by appointed by the US commander within each state.

The assessment on each state that may hereafter [ . . . illegible . . . ]...the first day of the month within which the occupation may take place in wonder to avoid all calculations founded on days less than a money. Hence no credit will be allowed a state for any payment previously made to the federal governed, or its officers, for nay part of a month within which the state shall have been occupied by the American forces. In the sate already so occupied the assessments will be considered as having commenced with the present month, and be demanded accordingly.

In payment of the money assessment any state may substitute at a fair valuation with the consent of the US commanding earlier therein such articles of subsistence and for are as many may be found convenient to the two parties.

On the failure of any state to pay its assessment of [ . . . illegible . . . ]...and their property seized registered reported and converted to the use of occupation in strict accordance to the general regulations of this army. No [ . . . illegible . . . ] or abdication of office by any of the said Mexican [ . . . illegible . . . ] obligations or beastliest.

If the forgoing measures should fall to enforce the regular payment, as above from any state the commanding officer of the US forces with the same will immediately proceed to collect in money or kind form the earthier inhabitants other than [ . . . illegible . . . ] friends within his reach the amount of assessment due fro the state taking care always to make the collection as equitable as saving as practicable and to report the [ . . . illegible . . . ] officer this army. Any waste of wanton injury committed in these operations, as well as fraud and corruption shall be vigorously prosecuted before a tribal of the army.

With a view to a vigorous accountability to receipts in payment of assessments wither in a [ . . . illegible . . . ].....or in kind will be assigned by some quartermaster commissary or payment of this army, named by the commanding officer within a state and be duly assisted by the latter, who will also keep a register of all such payments. The amount of those payments and of forced levees will be reported only to general headquarters, as well as to Washington [ . . . illegible . . . ]... both b the receivers and the atesting and commanding officers within the several states

The usual dues heretofore levied on the precious metals in the interior by the federal government of Mexico will be continued and collected of the military chest of this army. Commanding officers [ . . . illegible . . . ] will inquire and report to general headquarters on the subject; but until further orders the following tale will be exacted.

On production of both gold and silver three percent; on melting [ . . . illegible . . . ]... the mark of the ounces, on assaying, $1 the bar for bars of silver at $150 each for bars of gold pr of gold and silver mixed, and on coinage the percentages on both metals heretofore paid by the rains respectively; according to contract with the Mexican government. Those contracts in every case will be particularly examined. The one real per mark on both gold and silver, heretofore paid to the college of [ . . . illegible . . . ]...societies institutions, and may collect as usual.

It is understood that the collection of the dues on production, melting and assaying may b made at the assay offices, and they will be demanded and received accordingly. The tree per centage on cowage will be collected for this army at the main. At both places officers of intelligence and accordance habits of inspection will be appointed from time to time to giver the necessary attendance.
respect to dues on the precious metals as are prescribed in respect to dues on the precious metals as are prescribed above for other contribution in money or in kind, and the former will continue also at the same period and under take circumstances that is in the Mexican states already occupied by the American forces from the first instant and in other states from the beginning of the months within which the states shall be prospectively entered and occupied.

The American troops in spreading themselves over this republic will take care to observe the strictest disciplining and morals in respect to the persons and property of the country- purchasing and paying for all necessaries and comports they may require and treating the unoffending inhabitants with forbearance and kindness. The high honor of our country as well as the particular honor of this army, must and shall be maintained amongst the few instances in our ranks. The [. . . illegible . . . ]...be permitted to dishonor the whole mass of our citizens and soldiers at home and abroad. The miscreants must therefore be watched, and for every good officer denounce and sent before the proper tribunals for exemplary punishment. This required of every good officer and soldier. Men [. . . illegible . . . ]... maintain the honor of freemen when abroad. If they forget that they will degrade themselves to the level of felons and slaves, and may be rightfully condemned and treated as such for felons according to the laws of God and man, are slaves.

The laws of war will also be strictly observed towards all Mexicans in arms who respect those laws. For the treatment of these atrocious bands of guerilleros and armed rancheros, see general order No. 327, dated the 12th inst.

NNR 73.341 Jan. 29, 1848 Guerrilla attacks in Lower California

Lower California. Advices from Mazatlan have been received to the 30th ult. The guerrillas under Mijates, made an attack upon the Cape, (Lower California,) and were completely routed--Majares and many other Mexicans being killed. Pa Paz, further north in the Peninsula, was also the scene of a sanguinary conflict between the guerrillas, under Captain Peneda, and the Americans. The place was reduced to ashes by the fire that took place between the combatants. The Mexicans were finally compelled to retire. There are rumors of other engagements, but nothing to be relied on.

The reported deaths of Mr. Cloud, paymaster, and Lieut. Miner, of the U.S. artillery, are confirmed. [JNA]

Brazos Santiago dates of Jan. 11, afford no recent intelligence from Monterey.

Col. Davenport left Matamoras on the 8th instant for the mouth of the river Brazos Santiago, on a tour of inspections.

The $90,000 in species which recently arrived at the Brazos, from Camargo was consigned to the SC Haiz II. U S consul. The duties amounted to $7,000 and the American collector was willing to receive a written promise from the consigned pledging himself to pay this sum on the demand. This the consigned would not consent to nor would be given information who where he had pleased the specie. Rumors had revealed Vera Cruz [ . . . illegible . . . ] last dates from thence, that a treaty had been concluded between Mr. Trist, and the Mexican commissioners. Vera Cruz papers placed no reliance upon the report but private letters from the city of Mexico have been received which contented such a result. On Wednesday the National Intelligencer announced that they had themselves received a letter from their correspondent at New Orleans, dated the 16th inst. NNR 73.353 February 5, 1848 insistence of California on being acquired by the United States

CALIFORNIA.- The N. York Journal of Commerce has a letter from Monterey, under date of Oct. 10, which says-

The advance party of the emigrant column for this season, is already in California. We have ceased counting their wagons-and as for the emigrants, you might was well attempt to number the trees which wave over them. These emigrants would have settled the fare of California without any declaration of war with Mexico. They might perhaps have had a little fighting here between themselves and the natives, but their triumphs was sure, not only in their courage and skill, but in heir overpowering numbers.

Some of your politicians talk of giving up California. Why you can no more giver her up, than you can the soil on which you tread. You may say she shall go back to Mexico, but we won’ t go there; she will be a territory, and then a state of the American Confederacy, and nothing else. We don’t care a fig how you figure it out on your political maps; we have figured it out for ourselves and our work will stand, whatever may become yours. [LVW]

NNR 73.354 February 5, 1848 Charleston "Mercury" on relations with Mexico

Our Mexican Relations- The Charleston Courier published a communication of considerable length signed, "Lorondes." The writer, probably General Waddy Thompson or Mr. Poinsett coincides mail with the views of Mr. Calhoun, as recently set forth in the senate. The subjugation quotation must limit our extracts for the present.

"It has been said that in offering his resolutions recently in the senate, deciding it inexpedient to subjugate and hold Mexico, Mr. Calhoun is denouncing a purpose which no one entertains. It is strange that this should be said, when most of the leading democratic papers openly advocate that policy and the official organ itself does not disclaim it. I should not be surprised before the expiration of three months to see those who doubt its expediency denounced as guilty of moral treason. He must be blind to the signs of the times, and greatly ignorance of the progress of popular opinion, and the tendency of measures now in progress, who does no see that "to the completion it must come at last." For what other purpose is the large additional force required? Less than ten thousand men have achieved the conquest and occupation of the capital- we have been told, over and over again, that the occupation of the capital would be followed by a [ . . . illegible . . . ] for peace. In less that three months from that ever an before its efficacy has been tested, and led is maid for more troops- surely a force of more than 30,000men which is not here is sufficient to retain the possession of the capital, and all the country to Vera Cruz, if then thousand could conquer it. More especially now, when the Mexican army has not only been dispersed by annihilated and nearly all their arms and mutations taken in them- why send so large an additional force, for any other purpose that additional and permanent conquest? We have no reason to suppose that it will have any great indulgence in conquering a peace- we have already possession of the half of the republic and its capital- of several departments on the northern frontier- of California, and most of the ports and to us on the Pacific. If these conquests have wholly failed of the end desires, the anticipated uncertain efforts of further conquests can scarcely be worth the blood and treasure which they will cost. Besides the dishonest of repeated and humiliating details in sight of their capital, it is difficult to point out any very substantial injury which has been caused to Mexico by our occupation of the country. As to security of persons an property, she has not known so good, and so little is to be hoped, understand to be continue to be. The people
A LETTER FROM THE HON. JOHN MCLEAN.

The following letter was written to a gentleman in the state, and has been furnished us for publication. The opinions of our distinguished men, upon the war and the means of ending it should be known, Judge McLean occupied a high official position, and had been named and has many friends in the social states for the presidency.

[Cincinnati Gazette]

My dear sir: To all human appearance the termination of this miserable war with Mexico is more remote than when the first blow was struck. In my judgment it was unnecessarily and unconstitutional commenced by marching our army into disputed territory in the possession of Mexico; and I think that congress, who may questionable have the power, should be put an end to the war on just and honorable possibilities.

After agreeing upon thee terms on which a territory should be made, they should call upon the Mexican resolution to offer a peace to Mexico upon that suspended. If the president shall refuse to do the military appropriation bill the army should be conquered to take such positions as shall carry on the views of congress. These bills will presented and veto, and he would be bound by their inquires. This may be done by the house.

I hope congress will refuse to issue any more treasury notes. The notes demanded in addition to those already in circulation would flood the country with that description of paper. Such an emission would constitute a government bank, controlled and managed by a part of a party administration. We have new authority to issue five million notes more. I would not increase this circulation, a dollar but reduce it as much as possible. Such a system would be [...] and the public liberty than any other system of baking that could be devised.

To meet any deficiency of the revenue to pay the current expense of the war, I would authorize a loan for part of pay not more than six percent means of loans cannot be made at this relate, let the administration resort to a system of taxation. Noting short of this can show in addition to the sacrifice of life, what we pay for military glory. This was policy in the better day s of the republic.

The late war with England was nobly sustained by the people, not only in the field out by the payment of taxes. And they will sustain every just war which our country shall be involved. But I risk to think in saying that an attempt to adopt such a system of taxation would wind up this Mexican war to sixty days. And this shows that the war should be put an end to. This may be done by congress in ninety days, and I pray God that they may do it.

Very truly, yours,
JOHN MCLEAN

NNR 73.357 Feb. 5, 1848 order no. 3 on a train for Mexico City
TRAIN FOR MEXICO

All persons not connected with the army (not including suters, but exclusive of persons referred to in the 2nd party of his orders,) desirous of placing themselves under the protection of the troops that will leave here with a train in a few days for the city of Mexico, must furnish their own transportation and subsistence, and report themselves to Capt. Gleason, for assignment to a place in the line of march, and obey such orders and regulations as may be authorized to give.

Merchants desirous of sending up to the city of Mexico wagons or pack mules, will immediately report to the lieutenant colonel commanding, the number of each, in order that he may assign to them a position in the line, and also appoint a conductor to take charge of the game.

It is recommended that the merchants appoint this conductor he reporting to the commanding officer for special instructions.

By order of Lieut. Col. Milers:
WL CRITTENDEN. 2nd Lieut.

February 5, 1848 dinner to Lt. Col. Dixon Stansbury Miles, Gen. David Emanuel Twiggs' toast

Col, Miles- A public dinner was given to col Miles prior to his having Vera Cruz for the interior.

General Twiggs toast- At dinner given to Col. Miles the following toast was given by General Twiggs:

"Honor to the citizen soldier, who steps forward to battle for his country! Shame to the knaves at home who give and comfort to our enemies."

A question arises whether this hit was aimed at President Polk, or at those of the people of the US that have ventured to utter doubts of the property of the present war- whichever the shaft may have been armed at, the sentiment from an officer in their service, was insulting in the highest degree.

Padre Caledonio Domeco Jarauta and Col. Jones Mitchell Withers

We being to suspect that Gen. Patterson hurt the feelings of their reverend caption of guerrilleros, when he refused to make a treaty with him accepting his submission on some fanciful terms dictated by the padre's caution or high sense of honor. It is news to hear of him in arms again at the head of eight hundred men, in the valley of Mexico and evening carrying his reconnaissance in person up to the gates of Guadalupe, almost a suburb of the capital. His presence there at the head of such a force his jaunt almost to headquarters, as in defiance and derision of the American army betoken the audacity and perhaps something more when we connect his movements with those Col. Withers and the rumors that prevailed in Mexico of disasters having appended to this detachment. - Col. Withers command left Mexico on the evening of the 26th December. Real del Monte lies northeast from Mexico on the Tampico road distant by a direct route only about forty-five miles, but by the ordinary road between sixty and seventy. We are told that on the 27th, Jarauta slept on San Juan de Teotihuacan, and on the 28th rode to Guadalupe, with an escort of only fifteen men, and thence continued on to Tlanepantla, on the Queretaro road.

New Teotihuacan— to shorten the name— is also northeast of Mexico but east of the Tampico or Real del Monte road which road, however is pursued from Mexico to San Cristobal by travelers going to Teotihuacan. San Cristobal is on the neck between the two lakes of Tezcuco and San Cristobal, and about twenty miles west of Teotihuacan. The rumor in Mexico was that Col. Withes command had been cut to pieces about 20 miles distant from Mexico, that is some five miles beyond San Cristobal, and as he started out on the evening of the 26th he may have made the twenty miles the next day. One the following day, the 28th Jarauta must have passed San Cristobal closed on his rear, and he must have been in a position to observe the colonel's march the preceding day from Teotihuacan.

From these facts several questions arise— Could Col. Withers have been so near to Jarauta, without knowing it? Would he have suffered such a force as threatening his flank or to get to San Cristobal on his ear? Would he not have taken steps immediate to rout and disperse it? Or finally supposing him ignorant of Jarauta's presence, pursing his way toward the miners is it not most probable that Jarauta, with his eight hundred men would rather have followed him dogged his march in the hope of finding some unguarded money to attach him with advantage than to ride in idle bravado towards the capital?

It does not seem easy to solve these riddles or explain the mystic and highly probable rumor of Wither's defeat. Only hypotheses we can venture on is to suppose that Jarauta did attack Withers or what is more likely was a sudden attack himself and his escort of fifteen cut off from the retreat to Teotihuacan, and obliged to escape by taking the former route to Mexico. It is certainly no the last obvious question if Jakarta had eight hundred followers at Teotihuacan, how did he happen to be rambling to Tanepantil west of the north task so far from his command. [N. NNR 73.357 February 5, 1848 California tranquil, rumors of Mexicans across the border

NNR 73.357-73.358 naval expedition to capture the western Mexican ports

Monterey, California, October 4th, 1847

The affairs of California continue tranquil. Now and then a report reaches us of Mexicans having crossed the southern line of the territory; but these are idle rumors. The Mexicans have enough to do at home. We apprehend no outbreak here, the sober portion of the community would regard such a step as one of frantic folly; and even that restless class which is found in every country would shrink from the idea of its fearful issue.

The wild Indians give us some trouble. They come down from the Tulares, steal our houses and drive them into the mountains, where they kill and eat them. The prefer horse flesh to the finest [. . . illegible . . .]. We want in California for a few years some four hundred men, well mounted. They would repress any possible tumult, and protect property in the settlements from the depredation of the wild Indians. You send us out huge guns, which are of no more use than so many hollow trees. No instruments of war is of use here, unless it is invented with locomotive qualities.

The Congress, Portsmouth, and Dale, are on the Mexican coast. The Preble leaves tomorrow for Panama, where she is to receive Commodore Jones, and then return here. Commodore Shubrick goes at once with the Independence and Cyane to join the Congress and Portsmouth, and will then capture Mazatlan, San Blas, Guaymas and Acapulco. It is likely there may be hard knocks at the latter place; indeed, nothing could prevent this but the fact that a considerable portion of the troops have been sent to the city of Mexico. The commodore, I believe, intends to garrison Mazatlan. This is by far the most important point on the Pacific. What a stride four our arms from the Atlantic to the Pacific—what treasures and blood it has cast. Now is the end yet. Think not of [illegible...]; it is an idle dream. There is no discharge in this war. There is no settled government or permanent party with which to make a peace. The leaders are all military chieftains, whose ascendancy depends on the continuance of hostilities. Peace would deprive them of their commands and of the subsistence.

Harvest this year are very abundant in California; wheat in the kernel is low, and the grinding commonly high. We want mills. Fortunes might be made by them here. The mustard however, but for by steam for we have but few water falls except in the north. We want also steam sawmills. We have fine forest trees for lumber and yet boards are fifty dollars a thousand and difficult to get at that much of the sawing is done by hand. Send us out a dozen good saw mills and men to manage them.

The Rev. Walter Colton is still with us exercising the functions of accolade. This gentleman has so far gained the confidence and esteem of the inhabitants that as soon as they heard he made application to be relieved from his accolade ship, the whole town of Monterey raised their voices demanding his reelection or appointment, when was accorded to the, and Mr. Colton has agreed to stay with us until the congress said for home.

Should Mr. Colton leave California before the war is over, we should be in but a sorry plight in Monterey. It will never due to let an ignorant man hold the accolade's staff in Monterey, after Mr. Colton—The lawyers now here would eat up both accolade and client. WG [Cor. N. NNR 73.369 February 12, 1848 Gen. Franklin Pierce’s compliment to the officers of West Point

WEST POINT VINDICATED—In some remarks made in reply to a complimentary address at Concord, New Hampshire, on the 27th ultimo, General Pierce paid the following very explicit and manly tribute to the eminent utility of the Military Academy at West Point:

"Gen. Pierce proceeded to say he had to retract opinions he had formerly entertained and expressed in relation to the Military Academy at West Point. He was now of opinion that the city of Mexico could not have been entered in the way it was but for the officers of the old army, mostly from West Point. Services were rendered by the officers of the topographical engineers and ordnance, which could not have been rendered but by men who had received the most complete military education. The force of the Americans had been overrated. Over 7,500 effective men left Puebla to attack a city of 250,000 inhabitants, defended by 35,000 of the best troupes ever raised in Mexico, one hundred pieces of cannon, and the finest fortifications ever raised, in addition to the natural defenses of marshes and lakes." NNR 73.370-371 February 12, 1848 rejection of a direct tax to finance the war with Mexico, comment on Whig reluctance to vote for the loan [Transcriber’s note: A section of this article is missing, but most words are deciphered. Some misinterpretations may prevail.]

UNITED STATES FINCACES. In references to the vies of the authorities upon this highly important [illegible...], Washington Union for the 4th says, under [illegible...]

The new pretence—Direct Taxation. The clear as the [illegible...]...yesterday in disclaiming against directed taxation as mode of sustain the war. Who proposes any such thing? Certainly not the administration [illegible...]. They have presented their plan of financial and frankly assumed the responsibility by the of and success, ill adopted and of their approval by the people. The plan endorses a particular form of loan a temporary war of tax on [illegible...] and [illegible...], and wish regulation of their price of the people. In its main [illegible...], has already been tried with complete and unprecedented success. The form of loan proposed placed at the last session of congress, more than fifty million of capital at the disposal of the government above par. Presented in a time of war it lifted the cried of the treasury higher perhaps than it ever stood before even in them of peace. [ . . . illegible . . . ] crated not the slight at embarrassment in the money wanted, on the most favorable terms, and it sent [ . . . illegible . . . ] . . . . It gave the treasury at once all the money it wanted on the most [ . . . illegible . . . ], away unaccepted. The government asks authorities to make a similar loan now for a similar purpose. The comment of ways and mean instead of granting the loan or recommending the small temporary duty [ . . . illegible . . . ] and tea and coffee, refuse both; present to the government a bill authorizing the issue of a naked six cent, such and then its entrapment gets up full of zeal to [ . . . illegible . . . ] direct taxation!

In this state of facts the case is plain. If the whigs [ . . . illegible . . . ] the house wish to finish supplies to the treasure [ . . . illegible . . . ] the country in the war they know how to do it- How to do it without embarrassment to the money [ . . .
illegible . . . ] without burdensome taxation upon the people [ . . . illegible . . . ] out the slightest disparagement of the public credit [ . . . illegible . . . ] they no mean to furnish the supplies they mean to break down the war, and with tit break down their rights of character of the country, by their holding money from the government-they lent them say soon openly and strictly. The ms do this sooner or later. So [ . . .
illegible . . . ] [ . . . illegible . . . ] will on leave them from [ . . . illegible . . . ] war. And that the chapter of accidents they are [ . . . illegible . . . ] vote. He government the facilities which it asks and deems required for the supply of the treasury and the [ . . . illegible . . . ] of the public credit in view of the expenditures necessary to save the illustate of our army from [ . . . illegible . . . ] and the cause of our country against her enemy [ . . .
illegible . . . ] failure and same?

They can by their votes answer the question [ . . . illegible . . . ] the negative, and then face their constituents on the responsibility upon the nomination and those [ . . . illegible . . . ] support it by passing this measure which the administration has already tried successfully and now [ . . . illegible . . . ] voting they take the responsibility away from the administration ,and assume it for themselves. In the [ . . . illegible . . . ] they will stain responsibility of it before the people. [ . . .
illegible . . . ] the treasury is embarrassed, or the money market [ . . . illegible . . . ]
...........The people will be tricked into a position of national failure and embarrassment it an discredit and dishonor- and they will see through the trick!

We put these vies on record now, because me men refer to them again, and keep them before the people. We warn the people that opinions whispers are already beginning to be heard among the whig leaders at Washington, to the effect that it will revere do it blew of the party [ . . . illegible . . . ]...loan measures, [ . . . illegible . . . ]...recommended by the [ . . . illegible . . . ]. That measure it is said in high who [ . . . illegible . . . ] ...of the country and far to favorable for the government to meet the views of our people [ . . . illegible . . . ]... Hence it is that the government plan of a loan is thus aside in committee to make way of the issue of once six per cent stock . hence it is that a monetary cry is up. Hence it is that the do-nothing policy reported on a larger scale, and ore than eight weeks to refer the president’s annual message. And once it is that the chairman of the committee of way and means gets up to thunder in the house against the react taxation which no one on behave o the administration has even suggested.

But none of these pretenses will avail the whigs before the country. The must meet the supply question boldly they must bear the mark. If they mean on principle and openly to refuse money of the war let them stand they can on that position before the people! But if indirection and [ . . . illegible . . . ] – by shame measures or half measures. Looking at once to the embarrassment of the treasury and of the country-they mean to prevail the measures of the war and prolong it nuances we pledge ourselves that on our part at least no effort shall be [ . . . illegible . . . ] to put their factories ours in [ . . . illegible . . . ] like be [ . . . illegible . . . ] and we invite our brethren of the democratic press through the country to co-operate with in our work of just and [ . . . illegible . . . ] exposure. [LVW]

NNR 73.371 February 12, 1848 "moral treason"

[Transcriber’s Note: A section of this article is missing but most words are deciphered. Some misinterpretations may have occurred.]

The Union said boldly, (he might use a stranger phrase) that the opposing were impossible" words like these feel from the lips of the celebrated Mr. John Bell, a senator from Tennessee, in which is speech of yesterday. We repeat it boldly, and before the country, at they are responsible for the [ . . . illegible . . . ] of this war.
Since we wrote our article of Tuesday night – since we heard the honorable senator's each yesterday, the following letter dressed to a gentleman has been put into our hands. This ledger is [. . . illegible . . .] in our possession. It is from the pen of a gentleman who was once a whig member of congress from Pennsylvania, and is now in command of a company of volunteers, and the governor of the natural palace in the city of Mexico. We call upon a free and enlightened people to read this letter. We call upon the whigs to read it, and answer at the bar of their country to the transgressions of which they have been guilty.- [. . . illegible . . .] readers will see the writer abjures the whig city and denounces the conduct of its leaders as the burst worst kind of treason. Such are the changes which is treasonable conducts the whig leaders is daily producing in the mind of the patriotic men of their own need. To such men the democratic party should [. . . illegible . . .] the warm grasp of welcome. Let patriots come our of ranks, whatever may have been their former party relations. These times of shameless directions, men occupy high places call for the efforts of man who loves his country to put them down—democracy welcomes all who will join in the patriotic. Thee mortal traitors must be put down, and branded with the shame which their revolting treachery to interests and honor of their country deserves. They [. . . illegible . . .] the fate of the opponents of the revolution, and mortal traitors of the war of 1812. Let their doom [. . . illegible . . .] let their doom [. . . illegible . . .] of the moral traitors of 1847.

It seems that he condition of which may man can carry or aspire to nomination for the presidency of the whig, is [. . . illegible . . .] that he should publish himself to the world as a moral traitor in his feelings to his country be the judge. The supreme court, who has thrown off the enemies understand it, and hence he has taken the [. . . illegible . . .] and passed the ordeal. His letter, it he were a private person; would be a disgraceful production, but occupying the official position which he does, it is more and deserves impeachment at the bar of public opinion. Are those which are thus disparaging and degrading their country before the world extravagant enough to for the suffrages of a patriotic people for the highest of their gift? So it seems. Alas! What a liberal upon American Character does such a speculate presented we forbear But to the letter:

"I believe that there can be no peace. I have always believed this and my belief is confirmed by the occurrences of every day. Let there be decision to the [. . . illegible . . .] and them let us have vigorous decisions in the world..  The whigs are mad. I hang my head in humiliates and same, when I think I have a number of their party. Mr. [. . . illegible . . .] (Webster’s) speech has been republished here by the Mexicans in every variety of form, as well as a synopsis of Mr. Clavis and they have been made the foundation of appeals to the faltering their hoes that one of the parties of our country will arrest the prosecution of the war, and put off forever, in my opinion all prospects of an amicable settlement of it. It seems to me that the whig leaders are guilty of the worst kind of treason I have discovered here that some on is the states who has had access to all the publics of the country has been in correspondence with the Mexicans and the Mexican cause I have in my possession nearly three hundred of these [. . . illegible . . .]. Many of theme are translated and republished here; and one of them an article from the "new Work Express." (an appeal to the Catholics of the US to opposes Mr. Polk’s administration, upon the ground that the war was a religious war- a crusader against the Catholic religion in Mexico) has not only been published in the Mexican papers, but published in the hand bills and thousands a at all the churches in the city of Mexico’s. Who can tell in views of facts like these who much of the blood that has been shed in their war is owing to the action of such publications [Union].

NNR 73.372 Gen. George Cadwalder’s march to Toluca

WAR WITH MEXICO

Gen. Cadwallader has arrived at Toluca. The following letter from a friend will give an account of the march, and their arrival at their place of destination.

Toluca, January 1848

My dear Mustang:--I promised to tell you what kind of a country we traversed in reaching this place. Hearing that the diligence is robbed every day, I have waited some other opportunity of writing, and now hear that the dragoons leave for Mexico in a few moments, which gives me little time.
After quitting Tacubaya, our road began to ascend the country continuing sterile and volcanic, like that around Contreras. Towards sunset we reached a hacienda, or inn, and encamped; the night closing upon us bitterly cold. The infantry encamped mostly around the brow of a hill adjacent, and few pleasant dreams, I ween, did the cold wind permit to them. Early on the 7th, we started again, the earth white with frost, and icicles hanging from the rocks, the road, if possible, harder and more finished than yesterday, and ascending always. Arriving at the highest point of the mountain ridge, we saw a number of crosses together, and were told that they commemorated a desperate conflict that cam off here some thirty years ago between the Spaniards and Mexicans. The first were attacked in position by the latter, and gained the day. One cross fastened into the solid rock marks the grave of the Mexican general.

At this point opened upon us one of the finest views I ever saw---the valley of Toluca. Stretched out in front and on either side it lay, studded with villages and haciendas, and just enough watered to give variety, while far away rose the snowy summit of Nevado de Toluca, with its wide crater. I thought to myself, had Tom Moore seen this, he had certainly written the "Sweet Vale of" Toluca, instead of that other.

The road now descended regularly, and we came upon Lerma, a small dirty village, every home filled with children, gaping women, and surmounted by a white flag--the only clean thing about the premises, and the prepared, no doubt, for this occasion only.

Before getting to Lerma, however, we passed a small bridge stream, the passage of which was defended by a sandbag fort, and the hills adjacent were also crowned by works--all made while we lay at Puebla and abandoned on the fall of the capital.--It is said that the fort at the bridge was carried by "Dutch Mary," certainly she was first there.

Capt. Thompson took his squadron on to Toluca this afternoon, in company with the alcalde, who had come out to meet the general.

At sunrise on the next day, (8th,) we started for Toluca, some ten miles distant, marching for some short distance on the edge of a marsh, where we perceived abundance of waterfowl, and promised ourselves some good sport &c&; The country on either side became more and more fertile: a superior cultivation to any we had seen in Mexico, obtained; fine haciendas, with American looking farm-yards and granaries; abundance of cattle, &c., &c.--all proclaiming a decidedly improved state of society.

We reached Toluca after a few hours march, and, as usual, were surrounded by a dense mass of wondering beings, and took our quarters--the soldiers in convents, &c., and many of the officers by billet. I have never seen a more pacific looking people in all our progress, not withstanding the preaching of father Jarauta, who was lately here. Some thousand troops, it is said, left here on our approach, with the government, for Morelia.

This town is capable of holding from 10,000 to 12,000 people, but at present has not so many. It is prettily built, is very clean, and is supplied with good water by an aqueduct. Nor have we felt the degree of cold for which it has a reputation.

Yesterday the 11th infantry were ordered to retrace their steps as far as Lerma, and occupy that place. Rumor says that the convention in which they were quartered suffered a few in the way of gold vessels, and the general thought it prudent to quarter the regiment where gold and silver are apparently unknown. [JNA, LVW]
Vera Cruz, Jan 20. An attempt has been made a insurrection in the city of Mexico, which failed.

Gen. Butler’s regiment is suffering with diseases.

A Guadalajara paper of the 17th ult. says that news had reached Mazatlan of an attack on the Americans at Lapane and San Jose, by 1500 California rangers, which resulted in the defeat of the Americans and the destruction of their houses. Three American vessels left Mazatlan on the 2nd ult. to render assistance to the Americans at the places named.

It was rumored in the city of Mexico that the Mexican commissioners had offered to enter into a treaty of peace based on the proposing made by Mr. Trist at Tacubaya, and that the treaty in question had been dispatched to Washington.

Col. Withers command concerning the safely of which there had been so much fear, arrived without any molestation at Real del Monte.

Col. Wynkoop, whilst in pursuit of Jarauta and Rea, captured generals Valencia and Arista. They are [ . . . illegible . . . ] subsequently set at liberty on parole.

Major Taliaferro had arrived at the Mexican capital fro Real Del Monte with one hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of silver bars, bring part of the assessment levied by gen. Scott on the sate and federal districts.

Cols. Torrejon and Minon and guard were captured by the Mexican Spy Company in the service of the American army.

Gen. Cadwallader’s command left the city of Mexico for Toluca; and reached Lunia without interruption. The troops under general C. were in fine sprits.

Indians war on the Texas frontier. Galveston dates of the 22d January state, that the consequences of some of the Delaware Indians encroaching on the hanging ground of the Camanches, a bloody fight took place, in which the Delaware were defeated with the loss of twenty five warriors. A fierce war between those tribes will probably ensure, as Delaware are eager for revenge.

A party of Camanches have stolen several horses from the camp of Captain Gillett. Lieut. Cuzzzenx and twelve men went in pursuit, and came up with them on the ninth day, when a skirmish took place, in which seven Indians were killed. The stolen horse were recaptured with a number of others belonging to the Indians.

It is rumored that several tribes of Indians have volunteered to assist the Mexicans in carrying on the war- Late accounts, with more probability, say they offer to carry on toward against Mexico. There would be less danger on that side, which the Indians have sagacity enough to see! [LVW]

NNR 73.380-383 February 12, 1848 Albert Gallatin on war expenses

I. There are in political economy many debatable, doubtful, and complex propositions, some which it may be impossible, most of which it would extremely difficult, to discuss a popular and generally intelligible manner. But there are some, which every member of the community may bring home to himself and clearly understand. Among these may be counted the acquisition and application of capital.

Every man who enjoys a certain income knows that he will grow poorer if he spends more, and richer if he spends less, than the amount of that annual income. In the first case, he loses part of his capital: in the other he acquires a new capital. Every man who earns his living be his industry and labor, whatever this may be, knows perfectly well that if he spends annually less than he earns, the difference is an acquisition of capital. The journeyman who in the course of the ([ . . . illegible . . . ])

In every instance capital is produced by labor, and is equal to the excess of that which is produced over and above the amount in which is consumed. It is obvious that, since this is true of every individual, it is equally true of the aggregate of individuals who compose the nation. The acquisition of capital, or increase of wealth, of the United States is, in any one year, equal to the excess of the value of the productive labor of the people, over and above the value of that which they have consumed during that year. The whole capital of the United States has been produced by the accumulated aggregate of that annual excess of value produced over the value consumed.

However great this may be, it is generally been inadequate to the demand. In order that land may be productive, labor must be applied to it. In the forest land, which constitutes probably nineteen-twentieths of that which has as yet been cultivated, it is in the first place necessary to clear the land of trees and to enclose it. The average price of this amounts to four or five dollars per acre. It is clear that this first outlay, the cost of the humblest dwelling, and of absolutely necessary agricultural buildings, as well as that of horses and cattle, require a town and village, but throughout the whole country. As a whole, the general result has been much less in proportion than in New York, since during that period, the population of the United States at large has only been quadrupled. It seems probable that the whole amount of capital absorbed in the United States in that way, during that period of fifty years, does not fall much short of fifteen hundred millions of dollars.

The whole of that capital, whatever its amount may be, has not been yet actually expended, since the houses do exist; but it has been applied to an unproductive object. It is clear that no man who lives in his own house derives any revenue from
it. It is a portion of that which he spends his own comfort, and which independent of wear and tear, is equal to the interest of the capital laid out in the building the house. If man lets a house, instead of enjoying it for his own use, he receives rent equivalent to the interest. But the person who occupies the house, or part of it, and who pays that rent does no derive any means of paying it from the house itself, but from his own income or labor. Thus in every instance, though forming and important and necessary portion of the fixed capital of the nation, dwelling houses are unproductive, and a portion of consumption, and not of the income of the nation.

Taking all these facts into consideration, it will be easily understood why the acquisition of circulating capital has been so slow in the United States, and why they were obliged to depend so long on the and afforded by foreign capital. At the time when independence was declared, and for more than thirty years after, America was in debt to Great Britain. Even now the amount of accumulated capital is comparatively small and inadequate to supply the ordinary demand for it. In almost every instance, the funds necessary to carry into effect extensive plans of improvement, whether rational or wild, have been borrowed abroad; and there is now a large debt due to foreigners, principally to British subjects, die not by individuals, but by several of the states. It is doubtful whether, pending the war with Mexico, the government of the United States could obtain any considerable loan at par for a six percent stock. Hence it is that the destruction of circulating capital, caused by the war expenses, is sensibly felt.

A merchant, having full confidence in the probity and skill of a man who has no property, sells him on credit merchandise worth five thousand; the goods are delivered, and on the same day are burnt, or otherwise destroyed, by some unforeseen accident. In this case there is no capital left which represents debt. There remains only a promise to pay, from a man who has no property whatever. In order to discharge the debt, he must, by his subsequent labor and frugality, acquire new capital.

The same result attends war expenses, and for the same reason: the capital thus expended has been destroyed.

The public debt of Great Britain may account to about eight hundred millions sterling; and there is no existing capital which represents that debt. The creditors hold only a promise to pay the interest of which they receive regularly. This payment of interest and general confidence in the good faith of government, give current value to the public stocks or promise to pay But the government has no capital where with to pay either the principal or interest. In order to do either taxes must be laid on the people at large. The people must by their own be industrious and create a new capital destroyed by those wars, there must be added to the line of debt [ . . .
illegible . . . ]..all the war taxes raised and expended for the same purpose.

I do not perceive that any deduction can be made from the aggregate, other than the profits of contractors, and in some cases those of persons employed in producing or manufacturing that part of the supplied which is drawn from home.

But whatever may be the case in other countries, it does not appear that any deduction should be made in the US on accounts of the moneys earned by mean who may have been employed in furnishing certain supplies. There is in the US a constant demand for capital and labor, to be applied to productive purpose. Ever able bodied man, where laborer of the soil or laborer, can, in the US, obtain remunerating wages; and therefore every many employed in preparing war supplies, for instance in building war steamers or there vessels has been diverted from some analogous employment which would have been applied to productive objectives.

But the causes which had produced that state of things have, at least for the present, ceased to operate.

II The preceding observations are of a general nature. The first subject of special inquiry is the amount of the actual receipts and expenditures since the commencement of the war.

All the receipts, whether arising from revenue, loans, or any other source, are paid into the treasury, and therefore known to the secretary of that department. He is also responsible for the disbursements by his own department, the most important of which are those which relate to the public debt. But with respect to the money expectedly by the other departments the statements of the secretary of the treasury only show the amount received by each from the treasury. FISCAL YEAR ENDING June 30TH, 1847.

As far, therefore, as may be inferred from the statements furnished it would appear that the total amount of expedited during the fiscal year ending June 30th 1847 for the army proper including both the regulars and volunteers.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1848.

It appears to me impossible that the expense for that year should not be equal to those for the year ndg 30th June 1848, The secretary estimates them at only l 31,856,758 50, to which adding for navy and ordinance my estimation of two millions they would still amount to less than thirty four million.

The great diminutions is in the quartermaster generals estimate, which is reduced to $13187000, instead of $17914000 expended in the year ending 30th June, 1848. On this subject the quartermaster general writes to the secretary of the war department, under date of Nov. 18, 1847:

"Sir: the estimates which I submitted for your consideration on the 4th instant, for the service of the next fiscal year were made out from date depliance with your suggestions I have carefully examined every item; and in all , depending in any degree upon my own action, it that of the officer of the department I have made considerable reeducations. Whether those reductions be judicious time must determine. I would not have ventured to make them but for the fact that two sessions of congress will have terminated before he expiration of the fiscal year for which the estimates now submitted have been made. The sums asked for arrangements for the present fiscal year for which the estimates now submitted have been made. The sums asked for arrangements for the present fiscal year are not more I am persuaded, than will be required. I am however, making every effort to reduce expenditures for every description of the lowest point possible."

It is therefore clear that the estimate was underrated, contrary to the quartermaster generals;’ optional that be would not have made the reduction had he to relied on congress making up the defiance before the hole of the money was wanted; and that the attempt is now deliberately made to underrate the expenses which must necessarily be incurred.

CIRCULATING CAPITAL OF THE COUNTRY

It has already been observed that the causes which had theretofore prevented the evils of the war from being left, had, at least for a while ceased to operate. A total derangement has taken place in England, which appears to have affected almost every brand of business connected with the commercial and manufacturing concerns of thee country.- The causes generally assigned are, the extraordinary imports of provision, and the magnitude of the investments in railroad, which have converted calculating into a fixed capital not immediately productive. There may b other more remote and recondite cause. Whatever these may be, the results are well known.
Most numerous are extensive failures have destroyed confidence, and caused a general pressure, followed by a fall of species affecting almost every species of commodity and by a great demand for specie.

The effects of that commercial catasophy were immediately felt in the US. There was and still is reciprocal want of confidence. Hence the usual mode of consigning produce to England, accompanied by bills drawn on the consigners for a large portion of its value had been considerable impeded. The low prices of cotton abroad influenced the planter to keep it back; and every arrival from England brought large parcels of American Stocks ordered to be sold for what they would fetch. The reaction took place in the early part of Nov. when it was manifested by its infallible index, a rise in the rat of exchange and the consequent exportation of specie.

The amount of specie in the vaults of the banks of the city of New York was lessened near two millions and a half of dollars during the moth of Nov. Yet it does to appear to me that there is any great danger to be apprehended from a long continued exportation. There was, in the course of the present crisis in Great Britain, in the first place, a large exportation of specie principally to the US in any payment for the articles of food she was obliged to purchase, and subsequently a great demand for specie. This has been an ample supported, and for the present at lease, England wants no more. If an continues to be exported there, this is principally die to the want of confidence, and those other causes which created a scarcity of bills of indubitable credit on Europe, and readied the price of these two per cent. Above the true part.

There is yet scattered in the interior a large portion of the specie imported during the proceeding year; and this naturally will always the case naturally flow to the place or places where it is most needed. In point of fact, this hash hardly taken place and notwithstanding the continued exportation, the amount of specie in the vaults of the banks during the last tree weeks; been increased to several hundred dollars.

As soon as the internal navigation shall be open large quantities of maxi, pork, and other articles of food will be exported to Europe; and cannot be held back much longer. Thus for every thing is yet soundly but the high relate at which money is borrowed on paper of [ illegible ] credit, would alone be sufficient to show that great caution is required on the part not only of the banks but of all those who are engaged to act business.

Notwithstanding the great increase of national wealth, there is still a perpetual demand for capital. The circulating capital of the country I clearly the found out of which the public revenues and loan must be raised; and the effects produced by a demand of thirty million \ next six months requires serous consideration.

Five eighths of the revenue derived from customs are collected in New York; and nine tenths is for or six Atlantic ports. These duties are payable the money the merchandize is landed, or draw from the public warehouses. This [ illegible ] tuition of immediate payment, of the former system of bonds and credit was as sacrifed away on commerce, the importance of which has not been sufficiently apperceived. It has amount other effects, thrown a considerable portion of the important business in the and of foreign to he prejudice of American house?
Still commerce, left to the operation of the natural laws of trade, knows how to adapt to sell to the existing circumstances; and not withstanding this change things went on s smoothly enough so long as peace continued.

The necessary effects of a war carried on in a foreign country, of our war with Mexico, is that the money thus collected in a few seaports, an in fact advanced by commerce, instead of being expended with some degree of uniformity in the country, must be immediately transferred by the treasury department of the US to the place where it is wanted an depended. The great mass goes to Mexico and New Orleans, whence it does not return to New York or to another Atlantic seaport since it is absorbed and destroyed by war expense.

In these transfers from the places where the revenue is collected. The secretary had done nothing more than that which was absolutely necessary;- and he has done it cautiously, skilled and with as much regard for local and is collected. But it has also become the center of the great moneyed operation of the country. It is accordingly to place also where a considerable share of the most disposable portion of the circulating capital of the country is concentrated. This most disposable is that which is deposited in the bank of the several states. And exclusively of the deposits due to individuals the banks out of this city have easily a large amount of deposed in the city banks. Including both items. It would seem fro the general returns from al the banks that the amount deposed in those of the city of new York does not exceed one farter part of the total amount deposed in all the banks of the US. But experts are shown that, wit the exception of S. Carolina and of Louisiana, the deposits in the banks of the southern and western states are available only for local purpose continue to but very little to the loans which may be wanted by the US-. The same observation is generally applicable to the deposits in the country banks of New England, N. York and Pennsylvania. Those Atlantic reports, in which nine tenth s of the revenue are collected are also the places which contribute in the same, proportion to the national loans. Although varying from yet to year, the amount of deposits in all the banks of the US which are truly available for general purpose may be estimated at twice that which id deposited in the city banks of New York.
According to the last official report.

The deposits in the city banks consist of two items, those due to individuals and those due to banks out of the city; that is to say, the difference between thee sums due and from those banks, which on the [ . . . illegible . . . ] Nov. last amounted to $8300000 and added to the deposits due to individuals more and aggregated of more than thirty four millions. But is must be observed that these times, [ . . .
illegible . . . ]...But n considering the US at large the amount due from all the banks, both items with disappear altogether, and do not constitute a real resource.

No official stamen of the situations of the banks subsequent to the month of Nov.
has as yet been published. Bt from accounts obtained from several of the most respectable of the city bank, it appears that during the moths of Nov. and the first weeks of Dec. the amounts of their deposits has lessened at least twenty percent.
This is in reference to the fiscal and commercial concerns of the national, the most important and pregnant tact which has taken place since the commencement of the war, to as much as it now [ . . . illegible . . . ]...manner to what extend to war expense and the circulating capital of the country.

That the deposits in banks are the most disposable circulation capital of the US is indivertible for the staple reason that they bear no interest.- the constitute, therefore, evidently the most likely to support the means of subscripting to the loans of the US. Is there any other [ . . . illegible . . . ]...any other amount of dormant unemployed extend continue to the public loans? [ . . . illegible . . . ]

[ . . . illegible . . . ] paragraph

[ . . . illegible . . . ] paragraph

Since both the sub-treasury act and the obligation to receive treasury notes in payment of debts due to the US cannot substitute together either of eh one or the other should be repealed. This cannot be done with respect to the notes already issued and outstanding, since it is privilege already granted a condition which the US are bound in fulfill. But although the secretary of the treasury has a right to re-issue an amount of notes equal to that which has been paid in for duties or their debts he is under no obligation to di to. The fact is that in order to extricate the treasure from the difficulties resulting from the incompatibility allude to it, is necessarily instead of extending in contract the amount of notes in circulation.

Treasury notes never can become a currency unless they be vested with that attribute. This could not be effected otherwise than by converting the treasury in a ban insuring notes, bearing no interest, but building to pay the demand in gold or silver. It is hoped that such a plan will not [ . . . illegible . . . ] a single advocate.

The attempts to borrow at a lower rate, by substituting treasury notes for stock is in every respect impracticable; any effort to conceal the truth is in the people will provide equally futile. The resort to any species of proper money, that is to say, the at attempt to convert into currency a simple promise to pay at a future date, is outrageous, liable to me grossly alludes wild calculated to datary confluence; for whenever issued to an amount much greater than the demand for it, a bout may arise where such promises to pay shall be actually discharged when they come to infarct. That which has happened both in the countries and at home ay happen against and immoderate issues have a tendency to endeavor a flood of redeemable paper money. [LVW]
That the administration have become dissatisfied with the course perused by Mr. Trist, as commissioner charged with negotiating with the government of Mexico, is not only officially announced by the message of the president to the U. States senate, of last week in reply to their call for his correspondence, but is unmistakably implied in his being superseded in the office he held in the states department. A rumor is mentioned in the N. Y. courier, of orders having been sent to Maj. Gen. Butler, to have Mr. Trist arrested and sent home for trial under the act of January 1799, for the punishment of persons guilty of carrying on a correspondence with a foreign government, in relation to disputes &c, without the authority or permission of the government of the US which declares such correspondence to be misdemeanor punished by fine and imprisonment.

The president in his communication to congress explicitly denies having received any intelligence of treaty being negotiated by Mr. Trist. The union in noticing the communication appears to insinuate that something probably something not recognizable by the government may have been received. Speculation of course is busy in guessing what this informal something is. On suggesting is that the British bearer of dispatches from the city of Mexico, brought a project submitted through or by the new British minister at Mexico, of terms that might be agreed upon.

Another, the latest from New Orleans, is that Maj. Van Buren, paymaster USA who came down with the last train from Mexico, was bearer of the project of a treaty.

The most knowing of the Washington correspondents of Philadelphia and N. York papers that are regarded as semi-official organs, continue to write in the most confident language, that a project of treaty has been received at Washington, and has been gravely considered in cabinet council. [LVW]

The steamer Elihu, left Vera Cruz on the 20th and reached New Orleans on the 29th January with large number of passengers, army officers, &c. amongst them Brevet Colonel J. S. McIntosh. She brought also forty sick and discharged soldiers, two died on the passage, and the remains of a number of officers who fell in the campaign.

GEN. Scott’s GENERAL ORDER, No. 14, dated Mexico, Jan. 11th, names 16 officers, "sick, wounded, or reported supernumerary" who will proceed home, and on arriving at New Orleans report themselves to the adjutant general.

His ORDER, No. 15, same date, appoints Major J. L. Gardner "superintendent of the direct and indirect taxes for the support of the army on that portion of Mexico called the federal district," which includes the capital,--and specifies his powers and duties.

A CONSPIRACY, had been apprehended at Mexico, and measures were promptly taken to suppress it.--It probably gave occasion for the following:

Office Civil and Military Governor,

National Palace, Mexico, Jan. 11, 1848.

It is ordered that all officers of the Mexican army, all retired officers, as also those of the corps of National Guards, including certain regiments known as those of Independence, Bravo, Victoria, Hidalgo, Galeana, Mina, and the corps of Zapadores, who may now be in the city of Mexico, not on parole, shall present themselves at the office of the inspector general of the American army, between the hours of 10 A.M. and 3 P.M. on the 12th, 13th, or 14th instant.

It is also ordered that all officers of the Mexican army and of the above named corps who may hereafter arrive in the city shall report themselves at the aforesaid office within twenty-four hours after reaching the city.

This order is rendered necessary by the highly improper conduct of certain officers of the Mexican army, known to be in the city; and any failure to comply with it will subject the offender to the most rigorous punishment known to the laws of war.

By the Governor:

R.P. Hammond, Secretary.

The steamer McKim left Vera Cruz on the 24th, and Tampico on the 31st. News from the city of Mexico to the 19th left all quiet.

A courier sent by Mr. Peoples, with copies of the president’s message for his paper in the city of Mexico,—the American Star,—was seized by guerrillas on his return, and taken into some bushes, by the roadside, where they first stripped and then shot him. This was done near Vera Cruz.

Col. McClelland, with three hundred infantry and two hundred mounted men, started up the Orizaba road to cut off robbers who were said to be on the main road to the National Bridge in large numbers.

It is positively asserted by merchants, who are usually well informed respecting affairs in the interior, that Gen. Lane was moving on Orizaba with five hundred cavalry.

There had been fifteen cases of small pox at Vera Cruz.

It was rumored that Mr. Trist had had frequent interviews with the Mexican commissioners, and that certain articles had been agreed upon, but nothing of an authentic nature transpired.

Col. Hays, with one hundred rangers, and a few Illinois volunteers, reached Teotihuacan on the 10th ult. In pursuit of Padre Jarauta. While reposing at an inn, with their horses unbridled and unsaddled, Jarauta and a party of Mexicans came suddenly upon Col. H. and his men, and a severe contest ensued. Eight Mexicans were killed. None of the Americans were injured. The horse of Jarauta was seen after the fight with blood running down his sides, and it is thought that his rider received several severe wounds.

Accounts from Gen. Cadwallader at Toluca, have been received to the 8th and 11th inst. He had dispatched the 11th infantry to Lerma, some five leagues this side of Toluca.

The rents.—A letter from Atlixco states that the citizens there—a meeting of the council and others having been held, to take the matter into consideration—had agreed to obey the order of Gen. Scott in regard to the payment of the public rents, in addition to those required for the support of their own government. A communication had been sent to Gov. Childs at Puebla, to make this representation to him.

Letters by this arrival are very contradictory as to the rumored treaty of peace.

The barque Archimedes arrived next, with Vera Cruz dates to the 26th. The Vera Cruz Free American of that date states, that Capt. Whipple had arrived from the city of Mexico, bringing news that Orizaba had been taken and was in possession of a body of troops dispatched from the capital for that purpose.

Next arrived that ships Napier and Danvers, with Vera Cruz dated to the 29th.

The train of 2000 wagons, with a strong detachment consisting of a squadron of cavalry, two companies of dragoons, a vol[[]]eur corps with 6 pieces, and some battalions of infantry, the whole under command of Major Cadwallader, of the vol[[]]eurs, left the city of Mexico on the 14th, and reached Vera Cruz on the 27th Jan. A number of the officers of the army came down with the train.
The train met Gen. Marshall and Col. Miles, with their respective commands, at Puebla, on the 17th ult.

The Vera Cruz American Star says that at the last accounts from Queretaro a quorum of congress was not in attendance. Gen. Anaya had been succeeded by Pena y Pena as president of the republic of Mexico, and a new one was to be chosen when congress assembled.

The brigade under Col. Riley, is at Tacubaya.

The brigade under Gen. Cushing is at San Angel.

No movement could be made for San Louis before the 1st February, for want of adequate clothing for the men, which Gen. Scott had sent twice to Vera Cruz after, without obtaining but a meagre supply, and had finally to set about a thousand men and women to work at the city of Mexico, at making them, and they could no be ready before the 1st of February. NNR 73.387 Feb. 19, 1848 the capture of Gen. Anastasio Torrejon

CAPTURE OF TORREJON The Morning Star gives the following account of the capture of Gen. Torrejon and his companions.

"A little towards the left of Santa Fe, Col. Dominguez ascertained that there were some fifty or sixty guerrillas, under Col. Zenobia, hovering in the vicinity. He charged upon them and they dispersed without firing a gun. On the 6th, on the plains of Salao, between Ojode Agua and Nopalucan the proprietors of the haciendas of St. Gertrude, Santa Clara, [][][[ requested aid of Col. Dominquez in their efforts to liberate themselves from the robberies of Torrejon and his party, composed of 150 cavalry and two American deserters. The Colonel, with his 70 men, charged upon them, and, after a slight brush, put them completely to route, taking Gen. Torrejon, Gen. Minon, Gen. Gauna and five other officers, prisoners, 50 Mexican cavalry, and the two American deserters--These were all placed at the disposal of Col. Childs at Puebla. It appears that Torrejon, when captured, was about proceeding to San Andres, to join the forces in that place, and march thence to Orizaba. Pursuing his course towards the city, the Colonel, upon entering the P[ ][][[][]][[], perceived a party of guerrillas on both sides of the road but was not attacked. On the 10th--that is the day before yesterday--near the Venta de Chalco, Padre Jarauta was seen with some 200 guerrillas.

A correspondent of the Delta, gives the particulars of the arrest of Gen. Valencia, as follows:

"ol. H. M. Wynkoap, of the 2d Pennsylvania volunteers, having learned by a Mexican friend, that Padre Jarauta and Gen. Rea were at Tlalnepanatla, about five leagues from the city of Mexico, applied to Gen. Scott for permission to take twenty men and capture them. Permission being granted, the Colonel set off on the 1st with thirty eight Texian Rangers, under command of Lieutenants Daggerts, Burkes and Jones. Upon arriving at and charging Tlalnepanatla, and finding no one there, they learned that Rea and Jarauta had left for Toluca a few hours previous to our arrival. Colonel Wynkoap here learned that Gen. Valencia and his staff were at a hacienda some six leagues distant. Admittance into the house was demanded by the gallant little party, but it was for a time refused, when Colonel Silea, a wounded Mexican officer on parole, opened the door and assured Col. Wynkoap that Gen. Valencia had departed that day for Toluca; but this was not credited, and lights were demanded to search the building. Colonel Silea then proposed to deliver Gen. Valencia the next day if the party would leave. To this the Colonel would not assent, and proposed to send an officer and eight men with him to await their return. This proposition completely non-plussed Col. Silea, and convinced Col. W. that Valencia was really in the house. Search was accordingly made, but nothing could be found of him--Col. W. declared that he would not leave the hacienda without him, and that if Valencia would give hive himself up he would be perfectly safe, but if he attempted to escape he would not answer for his life. At this moment a person stepped up and said, "I am Valencia." He then said that is was against the usages of civilized warfare to attack a man in the peace and quiet of his family in the dead hour of the night. The Colonel answered that it was the only way he could be captured. Col. A[[]reta was also captured in the same hacienda on that night.

NNR 73.387 Feb. 19, 1848 extracts from Mexican journals

The Delta makes the following extract from the Mexican journals:

The Noticioso, of January 12, contains the proclamation of President Anaya, dated at Queretaro, December 16, relative to the organization of the Mexican army.--The several levies amount to 16,000 men, exclusive of the troops already raised, whose ranks are to be filled up. The new levies are to serve for three years, unless sooner discharged. They are not to consist of malefactors or invalids, they must be at least five feet in height, and their age not to exceed forty years.

The disaffected population of Huasteca had made a pronunciamento against the Mexican army, laws and government, and valorously threatened to march against the city of Mexico in order to wrest it from the Americans.

Col. Gates, commanding at Tampico, has given notice that all gold and silver metals, or specie, must be left at the customhouse, when designed for exportation, where an exact account will be taken of it. The duty will be deducted therefrom and the balance returned to the owners for exportation.

A pronunciamento was put down at Queretaro, by President Anaya, on the 19th ult., by a display to military force which overawed the disaffected. They however, threatened to rise, after Anaya's term expires, which occurred on the 8th
The small sum allowed the Mexican officers and soldiers had disgusted many of them, according to the Noticioso, and a great many of the officers had petitioned for permission to resign.

The Anteojo, of Durango, hopes that peace will soon be concluded, or the war renewed with vigor.

The legislature of Durango had joined its vote to that of Jalisco, in favor of authorizing the Mexican congress to take measures to form a coalition between all the Hispano-American governments on the continent.

The Patriota of Aguascalientes, says it has received various communications on the existing state of the country. Some of the writers propose to call Santa Anna to the dictatorship, while others suggest a national convention, to deliberate whether peace shall be made or the war continued.

PROCLAMATION

Headquarters Dep't of Puebla

Puebla, Jan. 5th, 1848.

Whereas, a diabolical and bloody correspondence has been detected between Don Manuel Perez, and other (as yet unknown,) citizens of Puebla, with a person called Gen. Rea, a guerrilla chief, in which the said Perez and his confederates recommend the assassination of the person who styles himself the governor of the state of Puebla, as well as many of the peaceably disposed citizens, in order to "strike terror into the whole community," and then for the said Rea to pronounce against the state and general government, and declare himself dictator; this is to give notice to the inhabitants of the city of Puebla that so long as the troops of the United States of North America shall hold military possession of the city, any Mexican, or other person, not owing allegiance to the United States, corresponding with known guerrillas, or with any organised military body, in arms against the forces of the U. States, will be considered in the light of spies, and any attempt to furnish such armed bodies with supplies of any kind, will be deemed as a violation of good faith, and persons thus detected will be regarded as in open hostility against the forces of the United States, and treated accordingly. Citizens remaining in the city of Puebla during the military occupation by the U. States troops, enjoying protection of person and property, tacitly acknowledge such military authority, and any aid of theirs compromising their neutrality, is, by the laws of war, severely punished.

THOMAS CHILDS, Col. U. S. A.

Civil and military governor. [JNA, TBW]

Fellow-citizens, the war forced upon us by the aggression of Mexico is the war of our country.—He that will oppose it, or he that hesitates in the support of it, is not of the country. He is an alien in sentiment within it, and is unworthy of the association of Americans.

We are in favor of the acquisition of territory as compensation and indemnity. Those who profess to be in favor of the acquisition of territory, and insist upon the agitation of a subject which will prevent it, cannot very strongly commend themselves to the candid judgment of the intelligent. Those who openly advocate the no-territory doctrine are less to be feared, for they can be met in the open field of argument; the others are the more insidious and subtle foes, being in ambuscade.
Strongly as we are impressed with the propriety and justice of the acquisition of territory, we would despise ourselves if we were to avail ourselves of a conquest to secure that end, because the weakness of our enemy yielded to our strength. Such a motive is entirely repugnant to those principles of moral justice which are the life of the democratic faith and democratic practice. [TBW]

73.392 Feb. 19, 1848 letter of Vice-President George Mifflin Dallas on prosecution of the war with Mexico

Washington, January 25, 1848

Gentlemen:--I am honored by your invitation to be present at the mass meeting of democratic electors of the city of New York, held on Saturday evening next, "or the purpose of approving and sustaining the patriotic course of the administration of the general government in conducting the war with Mexico;" and I regret that my public engagements necessarily preclude its acceptance.

The war merits, at this moment, the almost exclusive attention of the American people. It is their present chief concern, and cannot too promptly nor too emphatically be made to receive a fresh impulse from their will. Heretofore embraced by them with enthusiasm, as necessary to their union, honor and interests, it has been characterized, at every stage of its progress, by their mingled traits of energy, courage, perseverance, and patriotism. Our armies rapidly emerged from our masses, and have been true to their representative mission. They have sought the enemy at every one of his posts; they have pursued him through wastes and deserts, in rocky gorges and marshy defiles, over mountains and rivers, within numberless forts, batteries and citadels; and they have achieved a triumph wherever they found him. They have finally planted our meteor flag on the highest turret of the Mexican capital; and, standing round that symbol of national strength, in the centre of seven millions of foes, they are prepared to proffer, serenely and sincerely, honorable peace of total subjugation.

Is there any other alternative reconcileable to the humanity, power, self-respect, conscious integrity, and superior institutions of the people of the United States? None is perceptible to me. This war, in my judgment, can have but one wise, natural and legitimate end--peace or subjugation.

Nor are we yet at liberty to consider peace--a firm, durable and cementing peace--altogether unattainable. Thus far we have sought in vain to elicit a just one from the central government of the Mexican confederacy, so long wielded by heartless military usurpers. But that is not the only government to which overtures of conciliation can be addressed. Out armies, indeed, in carrying out enlarged principles of beneficent reform, might be directed to overthrow and extinguish what has been so profligately perverted; and then, approaching a step nearer to the rightful sovereigns, the people themselves, we could treat separately with the respective states. The dissolution of the central authority, destroying nothing but a means of combined action, would at once give to each member of the confederacy the independent right of self-preservation, with the powers of peace and war. Nor should I feel averse to see as many treaties of amity as there are Mexican states, rather than be driven to the other branch of the alternative--subjugation. Such a course of proceeding, we have some reason to believe, would be acceptable to the best portion of the population: it must rekindle and invigorate the intercourse of trade, inspire the unknown sense of security as to person and property, diffuse correct sentiments of social liberty and order, and quietly as well as speechly prepare their several communities for the happy destiny of incorporation into our Union.

It, however, a moody obstinacy is everywhere to be substituted for political wisdom, and the forbearance of the American people, so strongly tempted by wonderful successes, is still to be outraged by gasconade and contempt, I do hope that, whenever and wherever multitudes of my countrymen shall assemble, they will manifest their usual and unabated spirit, their unshaken reliance upon the justice of their cause, and their manly faith in the capacity of their institutions to meet with safety all the emergencies and obligations of a national progress, which cannot be swayed without national disgrace. Let us not shrink from subjugating implacable enemies, when we know that by so doing we shall advance the great objects of civilization--when we know that we are sure to teach them the only true ways to liberty, self-government, prosperity and happiness.---Opposed as I am to receive permanently into the family of American freemen those who are unwilling to enter it,
I can yet discover in our noble constitution of government nothing not perfectly equal to the vast task which may be assigned to it by the resistless force of events--the guardianship of a crowded and confederated continent.

Thanking you for your obliging remembrance of me, I remain, very respectfully, your friend and fellow-citizen.

NNR 73.392 Feb. 19, 1848 Secretary of the Treasury Robert John Walker’s note about sustaining the war with Mexico

To Wm. S. Conley, Esq., and committee.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, R. J. WALKER, in a brief note, acknowledges the invitation "to unite with the patriotic democracy of the great city of New York, in sustaining this war--the just, the glorious and heaven-favored cause of our beloved country," which continued indisposition prevents him accepting. NNR 73.392 Feb. 19, 1848 letter of Sen. Daniel Stevens Dickinson on the war with Mexico and the coming election

Washington, January 27, 1848.

GENTLEMEN: I regret that indispensable engagements prevent my accepting your kind invitation to attend and address a meeting of the democratic republican electors of the city of New York, to be held at Tammany Hall, on Saturday evening next, for the purpose of approving and sustaining the patriotic course of the general administration in conducting the war with Mexico; for it would afford me high gratification to meet with and address those whose sympathies are with their country, and who believe the arm of the administration should be sustained and strengthened in the prosecution of a war provoked for years by robbery, spoliation, and every effort of insolence and disregard of faith, and finally commenced by shedding the blood of our people upon their own soil. I am aware that this war has been denounced as wicked, unconstitutional, and atrocious--as the war of the president, and not that of the people--as originating in base and ignoble motives, and prosecuted, not for any worthy or justifiable objects, but to minister to the cravings of a sordid ambition; that those who have periled their lives in the service of their country, and have displayed a bravery which has wrung unwilling admiration from an envious and invidious world, are classed, by some, with ruffians and Murderers. But the same malign spirit resisted the war of 1812, and then, as now, covered our gallant army with reproachful epithets, and shocked the moral sense of every true American by the declaration of their sentiments, which are now merely repeated, and have not the poor merit of originality.

A presidential campaign is approaching, and federalism has called together her magicians, astrologers, and soothsayers for the emergency. The country, too obstinate to submit to be ruined by a revenue tariff, is to make amends for the delay, and be thrice ruined by the prosecution of the war; and, least the picture should lack for sombre coloring, like the familiar spirit of Endor, she has raised from their political cemeteries her departed prophets, to mutter their antiquated solecisms over the injustice of the war.

But the American people are too wise to be betrayed by pretension, and too firm to be shaken in their purposes by these architects of ruin. They know, as the world knows; that on our part the war is eminently righteous--that it is not prosecuted against the Mexican people, but against their despoilers and aggressors, who, like Attila, the Hun, have been to that fair and fertile land the scourge of God. They know that, to these marauders, it is a mission of long deferred justice, and to the Mexican people an errand of humanity, civilization and peace. They demand that it be prosecuted with an energy and vigor becoming the American character, until an honorable peace, with adequate indemnity, shall be obtained, or until the last cowardly miscreant shall be dragged from his hiding place, and that deluded and oppressed people enjoy the protection of American citizens.
It has been left to the democracy to vindicate the integrity of their country against enemies abroad and monopolies at home, and the present moment demands, by all that is sound in their creed and endearing in their principles, one of their highest and noblest efforts. May they prove themselves equal to an emergency so interesting and fruitful of results, and by that devotion to their cherished faith, which has borne them through so many conflicts in triumph, and by harmonious counsels, achieve an abiding victory over foreign and domestic foes.

That such may be their happy destiny, is the sincere desire of none who regards with deep solicitude and lively sympathy all that concerns their interest and their welfare, and who has the honor to subscribe himself, with high consideration your fellow citizen,

D. S. DICKINSON. [TBW]

To WM. S. CONLY, esq. and committee.

U. S. SENATOR, JOHN A. DIX, in his letter, briefly acknowledges an invitation, which he says, "it would afford me great pleasure to accept, if I could with propriety absent myself from the city of Washington.--But my public duties require my constant attendance, and among them is that of sustaining in the senate the measures necessary to bring the war to a termination which shall be satisfactory and honorable to the country." [TBW]

THE HON. WM. B. MACLAY, in a long letter, reviews the whole history of the dispute with Mexico, and the annexation of Texas. The following is his concluding paragraph:

"am a believer in that destiny which contemplates the spread and success of free government over the face of this continent. There is a sympathy, a magnetic charm, in republican institutions, which, once kindled, spreads with the stride of electricity. Our revolution, more than any other cause, contributed to the events of '93 in France; and our onward march and miraculous achievements in the arts and sciences, in manufactures, and in all that makes a people happy and prosperous, have attracted to us the eyes of the civilized world, and made to tremble thrones that have stood the test of ages. Mexico, in making the election of this war, has hastened the work which inevitable destiny would some day have accomplished. It may be well for her--it cannot injure us. Her distinct idea of freedom may become enlightened under the wholesome restraints of our system, and may enable us to carry on the great work, until our standard shall wave in peaceful triumph over a free and happy people, with equal laws and equal rights.

Very respectfully,

W. B. MACLAY [TBW]

When we quoted some time ago the strong expressions of disapprobation used by the Charleston Mercury against Gen. Cass' views and those also of Mr. Buchanan and of Mr. Dickinson, on the subject of the Wilmot proviso, we intimated that there was difficulty in ascertaining precisely what ground the Mercury held on that point.
Gen. Cass has declared that he was opposed to any action by congress on the proviso question, and this announcement was regarded at the south, for a time, as very satisfactory indeed; Mr. Buchanan had said, in substance, the same thing; so had Mr. Dickinson. But these gentlemen had also said, in the way of a confidential whisper to the north, "the inhabitants of the territory that may be acquired will have the right to decide whether slavery shall have entrance upon the soil or not; and as the institution has now no existence there, and is regarded with great aversion by the people, there is no danger whatever that slavery will ever be permitted to advance beyond its present limits."

Upon consideration, our southern friends recalled the commendation which they had given quite lavishly to Messrs. Buchanan, Cass, &c. To leave to the territories themselves the absolute decision of the existence of slavery upon their soil, might do very well if slavery had been previously established there, as was the case when Louisiana was purchased, when Florida was acquired, and when Texas was annexed. But in the present case it would not do. The old formula must be changed. The long and fondly cherished doctrine of state sovereignty, so conveniently inchoate in a territory as the germ of a state--even that must be abandoned.

The legislature of Virginia had laid down the "platform of the south" according to the old recipe, when it declared by resolution, unanimously, "that the general government of the United States has no control, directly or indirectly, mediately or immediately, over the institution of slavery; and that, in taking any such control, it transcends the limits of its legitimate functions by destroying the internal organization of the sovereignties who created it."

This was the platform of the south less than a year ago--constructed according to the resolutions of '98. Surely those famous resolutions must afford a basis wide enough for all purposes. But it seems not. A case has arisen in which the south cannot find sovereign virtue in a denial of power to the general government. Strange, but true! A crisis has come at which state sovereignty itself must be disowned in order that no authority may be found in the embryo territory to shape its own internal system, preparatory to its entrance into the Union.

The south must have a new platform. The old one was scarcely demolished before another was put up, by the legislature of Alabama, in the form of resolutions declaring it "to be the natural and indefeasible right of each citizen of each and every state of the confederacy to reside, with his property, of every description, in any territory which may be acquired by the arms of the United States, or yielded by treaty with any foreign power."

"heir adoption," says the Charleston Mercury, speaking of the resolutions, which embody the foregoing proposition, "effects credit on the enlightened body by which they have been announced to the world; and because to Alabama belongs the credit of having, so far as the subject of these resolutions extend, constructed that platform on which all the slaveholding states will stand."

This platform, we take, is no better than the old one. What authority is to determine the meaning of the word "property," which forms so characteristic a feature in the new formula? Everything depends upon that. If the people of the territories are to decide they will say that "persons held to service" are not property. What decision would congress give? Whatever decision congress might give, it is plain that the new platform, instead of allowing no room for a discussion of the essential principle involved in the proviso, does in fact throw the door wide open to it.

This very question of personality and property--that is, how far slaves were persons and how far they were property--was thoroughly discussed in the convention of the United States; and the provisions of the constitution relating to slavery bear witness of the compromise made on that subject. The constitution does not designate slavery as property; it call them "persons," it provides that they shall be enumerated in the census and admitted, to a certain extent, in the basis of representation. In truth the constitution never uses the term "slave" or "slaves;" they are always designated as "persons," or "persons held to service." Nevertheless, with all this guarded phraseology, the constitution recognises the rights of property growing out of the institution of slavery, in those states in which it existed; and it protects those rights of property in the case of an absconding slave escaping into a state where slavery is not allowed.

We refer to these facts to show that the recently announced programme which designates, as the Mercury phrases it, "the platform of the south," does not really obviate a single difficulty pertaining to the question at issue.
To conclude upon this topic, we place before our readers another form which the proviso itself has recently taken. Certain resolution offered in the senate of the United States, last week, by Mr. Baldwin, of Connecticut, after announcing the proviso clause substantially went on to declare, "that in any extension of territory that may be acquired as the result of the war with Mexico, the desire of that republic, expressed by her commissioners, in their negotiation with Mr. Trist, to provide for the protection of the inhabitants of the system of human slavery therein, by a stipulation to that effect in any treaty that may be made, cannot, consistently with the rights of those inhabitants, or with the principles of justice and liberty which have been proclaimed to the world as the basis of our institutions, be disregarded or denied." NNR 73.394 Feb. 19, 1848 response from Philadelphia to Lexington

RESPONSE FROM PHILADELPHIA TO LEXINGTON.--The Philadelphia North American says: The thunders that broke from Lexington during the revolution, were echoed, peal for peal, from the heart of the entire land; and a fire was lighted up that no storm could extinguish until the country was saved. Another Lexington has spoken, in another crisis, and one almost as solemn; and its voice is given back from millions of sterling and patriotic hearts. Already we hear of preparations in various places to respond to the call made upon the people, in the Lexington resolutions, to meet, and speak and act upon the momentous question of the war. Philadelphia cannot be content to be second in the emulation of duty. We learn that a very considerable number of our first and best citizens, business men rather than politicians, but men whose intelligence, virtues, and patriotism are a guarantee of the sincere earnestness of their action, have already made arrangements for a great town meeting, to be held probably on Monday, for the expression of the sentiments of whig citizens of Philadelphia upon the great question, which forms the basis of the resolutions and speech of Mr. Clay at Lexington. NNR 73.394-395 Feb. 19, 1848 official correspondence about the transport of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga by a British mail steamer

MAIL PROTEST

Official instructions of the secretary of state to the minister at London.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, September 14, 1848.

Sir: I transmit you the copy of a letter, bearing date the 15th ultimo, from Colonel Henry Wilson, of the United States army, the acting governor of Vera Cruz, addressed to the war department. From this, as well as other information, it appears that Captain May, of the British steamer Teviot, although fully aware of the character of his passenger, brought General Paredes from Havana to Vera Cruz, and connived at, if he did not directly aid in his landing at that port in a clandestine manner, and contrary to the established regulations, requiring a visit from the proper inspecting officer before any passenger could be landed.

That the captain of the British steamer, by this conduct, has been guilty of a grave and serious violation of the duties of neutrality which Great Britain owes to the United States, can neither be doubted nor denied. It is known to the world that General Paredes, as president of Mexico, was the chief author of the existing war between that republic and the United States, and that he is the avowed and embittered enemy of our country. The British captain must have known that all his influence would be exerted to prolong and exasperate this war. It is, indeed, truly astonishing, that, with a knowledge of these facts, he should have brought this hostile Mexican general, under an assumed name, on board of a British mail steamer, to Vera Cruz, and aided or permitted him to land clandestinely, for the purpose of rushing into the war against the United States.--If any circumstance could aggravate this violation of neutrality, it would be the extraordinary privileges which this government has granted to British mail steamers ever since the commencement of the present war.

The president has not yet determined what course he will pursue in regard to British mail steamers.--The great law of self-defense would, under such circumstances, justify him in withdrawing the privilege altogether from these steamers of entering the port of Vera Cruz, and thus effectually prevent the landing of enemies in disguise. He will not, however, resort at present to this extreme measure; convinced, as he is, that the British government will at once, upon your representation, adopt efficient means to prevent such violations of their neutrality for the future. In the mean time Colonel Wilson will be instructed to adopt the necessary means, under the law of nations, for the purpose of preventing and punishing similar outrages on our belligerent rights. British mail steamers cannot be suffered to bring to Vera Cruz either Mexican citizens or the subjects of any other nation, for the purpose of engaging in the existing war on the part of Mexico against the United States. A neutral vessel which carries a Mexican officer of high military rank to Mexico, for the purpose of taking part in the hostilities against our country, is liable to confiscation, according to the opinion of Sir William Scott, in the case of the Orozimbo--(6 Robinson’s reports, 430;) and this, even although her captain and officers were ignorant that they had such a person on board. That is their lookout. Such ignorance is no excuse, because it is their duty to inquire into the character of their passengers. The consequence is the same to the belligerent as if they had acted with full knowledge--"Otherwise (in the language of that distinguished jurist) such opportunities of conveyance would be constantly used; and it would almost be impossible, in the greater number of cases, to prove the knowledge and p[i]vity of the immediate offender."

You are instructed to make Lord Palmerston fully acquainted with the conduct of Captain May. I do not know whether he or any of his officers who may be implicated in this serious charge are officers in the British service. Should this prove to be the case then you will ask for their dismissal, or such other punishment as may clearly manifest that the British government has disapproved their conduct.

I am, &c.,

JAMES BUCHANAN.

NRR 73.400 Feb. 19, 1848 comments on the defensive line of the Sierra Madre

THE LINE OF THE SIERRA MADRE. It is known that Gen. Taylor, in his letter to Gen. Gaines, advocated the holding of the Sierra Madre range of mountains, as a defensive line, which would give us the whole valley of the Rio Grande, and by extension to the Pacific would also include California. There is no reason to suppose, from any thing known to the public, that Gen. Taylor has changed his views on that subject. On the other hand the inference is fair that he still adheres to the policy of a defensive line, as indicated by him—a defensive line of easy defence, marking a palpable separation of distinct geographical systems, and involving the acquisition of a territory, as indemnity or by purchase, bound by strong affinities to the Mississippi valley, of which, in fact, it forms a part, and yet containing so sparse a population as to present no difficulties to its gradual settlement by our people.

We observe in the Washington correspondence of some of the New Orleans papers certain allusions to Gen. Taylor in this connection, in which his position is spoken of confidently, as one maturely considered and deliberately held. The correspondent of the Courier says:

"From information lately received, I am satisfied that, by the time the canvass fairly opens, Gen. Taylor will show his hand upon the indemnity question. In this, if keeping to his present mind, he will advocate, first, putting down all the military factions in Mexico; next, retiring to a line to be drawn from Tampico to the gulf of California—that is, the line of the Sierra Madre, which, according to Mr. Calhoun and himself, will require the guarding of five passes; next, again, the establishment of territorial government over Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, California, &c., with the declaration that hereafter they are to be the property of the U. States."

The Picayune correspondent, referring to the same subject, calls the Sierra Madre "Old Zack’s line," and says: "This Sierra Madre line is so much better than that which Mr. Trist has been bargaining and begging for ever since he went to Mexico, that the democrats themselves will have to go for it, as an improvement upon the plan of the administration, which was willing to purchase California and take the Rio Grande for a frontier."

The assumption of this line, with fifteen thousand men to guard it, or twenty thousand at the most, would secure virtually an immediate peace. Ever since the battle of Buena Vista, the force occupying it, under Gen. Taylor, and now under Gen. Wool, has not averaged probably more than six or seven thousand effective men. Yet the line has not been attacked. The trains from Camargo pass through to Monterey and Saltillo, without interruption; the whole valley of the Río Grande, from the mountain to the river, is quiet and undisturbed. The passes through the Sierra Madre are so few in number, and the positions which command them are so strong, that the business of defence becomes very simple, and is confined to definite and known points. The Mexican war, in all practical respects, need not last another month. It is hardly to be supposed, however, that Gen. Taylor's counsels will prevail, until he is placed in a position to enforce them himself.

NNR 73.401 Feb. 26, 1848 Remarks on the treaty

THE TREATY--So called.
The Union of the 24th, "respectfully suggests to (their) contemporaries the propriety of calmly waiting before expressing any conclusive opinions upon it" and refers to an editorial of the Baltimore Clipper and of the New York Herald, the latter of which intimated that the treaty is a sham-work a trick got up by the administration to aid in the negotation of the sixteen million loan. In this the Union says the Herald does great injustice to the president--[and so we should say.] The Clipper "cannot agree with the Herald,"--but goes on to infer that Mr. Trist's authority to treat could not have been withdrawn, or he would hardly have undertaken to negotiate. To this the Union replies.

"If the Clipper had only consulted the last message of the president, it would have seen at once the incorrectness of the supposition. Mr. Trist was recalled, and no additional conditions and no secret instructions were sent to him.

The Picayune of the 16th states, that a letter received by a mercantile house of high credit in that city, from its correspondent in Mexico, states that the Rothschilds had loaned to the Mexican government at Querataro, $2,000,000, to sustain itself till the ratification or rejection of the treaty could be ascertained. The writer concluded that Gen. Scott must have been consulted on the subject. The Picayune adds, "we see no reason to doubt that the United States government and senate will agree to the terms proposed. The government may feel chagrin at the result of Mr. Trist's pertinacious spirit of diplomacy, but will ultimately swallow its disappointment, and California and New Mexico, at the same time--this is our opinion."  [JNA]

NNR 74.002-003 February 26, 1848 transports for troops returning from Veracruz

New Orleans papers give a list of United States and chartered vessels which have been dispatched from that port by Maj. Tompkins, Q. M., to convey returning troops from Vera Cruz. The total number of vessels is 42, capable of conveying 16,175 men, of which 10 are U. S. vessels, and 92 chartered--16 steamers and 26 ships and barques.  [TBW]

NNR 74.003 February 26, 1848 proclamation of a treaty of peace with Mexico

By the President of the United States of America.

Whereas, a treaty of peace, friendship, limits and settlement between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, was concluded and signed at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo on the second day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, which treaty, as amended by the Senate of the United States, and being the English and Spanish languages, is word for word as follows:

And whereas the said treaty as amended, has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same were exchanged at Queretaro, on the thirtieth day of May last, by Ambrose H. Sevier and Nathan Clifford, Commissioners on the part of the Government of the United States, and by Senor Don Luis de la Rosa, Minister of Relations of the Mexican Republic, on the part of that Government.

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, James K. Polk, President of the United States of America, have caused the said treaty to be made public, to the end that the same, and every clause and article thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed Done at the city of Washington, this fourth day of July, on thousand eight [L. S.] hundred and forty eight, and of the independence of the United States the seventy-third.

JAMES K. POLK
By the President.

Agreeably to orders from the War Department, General Scott, on the 18th of February last, surrendered to General Butler the command of the army in Mexico, in a general order which reflects the highest honor on his discipline and soldier-like bearing:

Head Quarters of the Army,
Mexico, Feb. 18, 1848.
General Order, No. 39.

By instructions of the President of the United States, just received, Major General Scott turns over the command of the Army to Major General Butler, who will immediately enter upon duty accordingly. In taking official leave of the troops he has so long had the honor personally to command in an arduous campaign--a small part of whose glory has been, from position, reflected on the senior officer, Major General Scott is happy to be received by a General of established merit and distinction in the service of his country.

By command of Major General Scott,
H. L. SCOTT, A. A. A. G.

The following is the General Order issued by Major General Butler, upon assuming command:

Head Quarters, Army of Mexico,
Mexico, Feb. 19, 1848.
Order, No. 1.

Pursuant to the orders of the President of the United States, and the instructions of Major General Scott, communicated in his General Order, No. 29, of yesterday's date, Major General Butler hereby assumes command of the army of Mexico. On entering upon the duties assigned him, General Butler cannot be unmindful that he succeeds a General familiar alike with the science and the art of war, and who has but recently brought to a glorious termination one of the boldest campaigns to be found in its annals. He feels however less diffidence in assuming the important and responsible command assigned him, from the conviction that he is aided and sustained by many of the talented and experienced officers who contributed nobly to our recent success in arms, and by a gallant army who have learned too well the road to victory easily to mistake it. The orders and instructions issued by Major Genera Scott, for the government of this army, will be sustained in force.

By order of Major General Butler,
L. THOMAS, A. A. G. [TBW]

The following general orders have been issued by the Commander-in-Chief.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY MEXICO,
Mexico, May 29, 1948.
[ORDERS NO. 122.]

I. Under a deep sense of gratitude to the Almighty, Major General Butler announces to the army under his command that the Mexican war is ended.
The great object of the campaign has been accomplished. A treaty of peace, just and honorable to both nations, has been duly ratified. It now becomes the pleasing duty of the commanding General to restore to a grateful country the gallant army which has so nobly sustained her rights and added to her renown.

The homeward march will be at once commenced, and it is expected that the most perfect order and discipline will be observed. Ample supplies of all kinds will be furnished at convenient posts, and there will be no excuse for the slightest depredations, which will be totally at war with the existing relations between the two countries.

II. In accordance with the foregoing, the troops in the valley of Mexico and at the surrounding posts will move to the rear in the following order on Jalapa, and encamp at some favorable place in its vicinity, or at Encero, until suitable transportation can be procured to transport them to the United States. 1st. The siege train under Lieut. Rayner, Ordnance Department, and Capt. Rowland’s heavy battery with a company of the 3d Artillery as an additional escort--this train to proceed on to Vera Cruz. 2d. First division of volunteers, commanded by Major General Patterson. 3d. Second division of volunteers commanded by Brig. Gen. Marshall.--4th. Third division of regular troops, commanded by Col. Trousdale, the senior colonel on duty with it, except the 9th Infantry, at Pachuca, which with the detachments at that place, will march via Opan and Perote. 5th. Second division regular troops, commanded by Brig. Gen. Kearney. 6th. First division of regular troops, commanded by Brevet Maj. Gen. Worth. Each division will have assigned to it at least on company of horse. The dragoons not assigned to divisions will receive special orders for their march.

The chiefs of the several departments, when not otherwise specially instructed, will accompany the head quarters.

III. The volunteer divisions on the march will be joined by such troops as may belong to them, at the points intermediate between the city of Mexico and Jalapa, which will leave sufficient guards of regular troops at Rio Frio, Puebla and Perote, to protect the supplies until the rear division comes up, when these small garrisons will march with said division--all attached men, including recruits, will in like manner join their respective regiments on the march.

IV. Ample supplies of forage and subsistence have been place in Depot at Puebla, Perote, and Jalapa, forage at Rio Frio; tents and shoes, it is expected, will be at Puebla, from which the troops requiring such articles can be supplied.

V. All ordnance and ordnance stores, and other public property in the city of Mexico, Chapultepec, Perote, Vera Cruz and elsewhere, which reverts to the Mexican Government under the 4th article of the treaty of peace, will be delivered to agents of said Government, duly authorised to receive the same.

VI. Such ordnance and ordnance stores, quartermaster’s stores and subsistence, not required for the troops, and which cannot by transported, or which on other accounts it may be advisable to dispose of, will be sold under the orders of the chiefs of the ordnance, quartermasters and subsistence departments respectively.

VII. Should it become necessary to transport any surplus stores or specie, the wagon train for the purpose will proceed to Jalapa with the first division of regulars.

VIII. Prisoners under-sentence of death, or to be dishonorably discharged at the expiration of the war, will accompany their respective regiments.

IX. All the volunteer troops will be transported to New Orleans, there to be mustered out of the service, and paid by officers specially assigned to that duty--except the troops from Georgia and South Carolina, which will be sent to Mobile for the like purpose. Major General Patterson’s division will proceed to advance.--Should other instruction be not received from the war department, all the regular troops in the order laid down in paragraph 2, will be transported to New Orleans, there to receive further orders from Washington. No troops will leave the camp from Jalapa until notified by Brevet Brig. Gen. Smith, commanding at Vera Cruz, that vessels are prepared for them.

X. Owing to the lateness of the season, and the difficulty of speedily procuring transportation for a large army, it may be impossible to transport horses. Troops must first be embarked. Officers entitled to forage--except general officers, who are restricted to two horses--may take one horse each, if it can be done without incommoding the troops. Battery horses will next be transported, then dragoon horses will next be transported, if the number of vessels will admit of it.

XI. The commanding officer at Tampico will order the evacuation of that place, according to the principles laid down in this order.

By order of Major General BUTLER:

L. THOMAS
Assistant Adjutant General.

NBR 74.004 February 26, 1848 arrival of some troops at New Orleans, others awaiting transportation in Mexico

The United States steamer Portland has arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, which she left on the 9th ult. The Portland brought over about 350 of the 13th infantry, with some convalescents, discharged seamen, &c. The remainder of that regiment had embarked on the ship Rhode Island, and was ready for sea when the Portland left. Capt. Lee, engineers, and other distinguished members of Gen. Scott's staff, also came passengers on the Portland, and Dr. Vanderlinden, former Surgeon General of the Mexican army, who seeks America as an asylum.

The Orizaba garrison, about 1000 strong, under Col. Bankhead, and consisting of the 13th infantry and Alabama battalion, arrived at Vera Cruz on the morning of the 8th ult., and commenced embarking on the same day. The Alabama battalion sailed on the 9th, in the brigs or schooners Heroine, Mopang, and Massachusetts, for Mobile.

Gen. Patterson's division was expected in Vera Cruz on Monday, the 12th ult., and General Marshall's on the following day. A letter from Mexico, dated the 3d ult. Says, that General Kearney's division was ordered to leave Mexico on Tuesday, the 6th ult., and Gen. Worth's on Wednesday, the 7th ult. The Michigan regiment was shortly expected at Vera Cruz from Cordova.

Two thousand troops were encamped at Sierra Gordo, awaiting transportation, and the arrival of detachments from the capital. The health of Vera Cruz was improving.

The United States commissioners, Messrs. Sevier and Clifford, were expected in the city of Mexico on the 3d ult. Mr. Sevier returns home with Gen.
Butler. [TBW]

NBR 74.005-007 February 26, 1848 report on the Battle of Santa Cruz de Rosales

We are indebted to the war department for the following full and very interesting report of the military operations prior to and during the siege and capture of Santa Cruz de Rosales, in New Mexico. It is praise enough to state that these transactions are of a piece with the gallantry and the glory which have marked all the operations of this brilliant war. They redound, like all the rest, to the honor of the commanding general, officers and men of the army of New Mexico, and to the glory of our country.

Headquarters, Army of the West,
Chihuahua, March 31, 1848.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit a report of my operations from the period of adopting the intentions expressed in my communication to the war department, dated 6th February, 1848, to the present instant.

After making such arrangements both military and civil, as I deemed essential for the security and tranquility of New Mexico, I took up the line of march on the 8th of February, with one company of Missouri horse, for El Paso, where I had previously ordered a concentration of the following troops to operate against the State of Chihuahua, viz: three companies United States dragoons, commanded by Major B. L. Beal--one of which was acting as light artillery, under the command of Lieut. Love; six companies Missouri horse, under command of Col. Rolls; five companies Missouri infantry, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Easton; and Major Walker’s battalion of Santa Fe horse, three companies of horse and one of light artillery.

On the 23d I arrived at El Paso, distant from Santa Fe 340 miles, where measures were at once adopted for the intended operations; the peculiar characteristics and general features of the country, embracing the privations which must necessarily be endured on the road thus traveled, have been, I believe, already submitted to the department in former reports.

The additional information at El Paso confirming the many reports respecting the hostile intentions of the enemy supported by positive evidence as to the extended preparations in the fabrication of cannon and munitions of war, together with contributions of small arms from the adjoining states, induced me to change my original plan of operations, and adopt forced marches with my best mounted troops, for the purpose of striking a blow before the enemy could conceive my design. With this determination, I dispatched Major Walker with three companies of his battalion on the night of the 24th, to occupy the small town of Carrizal, distant from El Paso 90 miles, and so situated as to command all the passes leading to Chihuahua. This command has orders to reconnoitre the country: cut off all communication, by establishing strong pickets, and make every effort to obtain information respecting the designs and movements of the enemy.

On the 1st of March, after having been delayed by the non-arrival of my supply of trains, conducted as they were compelled to be by inexperienced officers, I resumed by march with four companies of Roll’s and two of Beale’s command, supplied with eight day’s subsistence, leaving orders for Love’s artillery, the remainder of Rall’s command, under Lieut. Col. Lane, and Easton’s infantry, with the exception of one company, which I designed as additional protection to the train, yet in the rear, to march on the 2d. Major Walker, at Carrizal, received no additional information, but succeeded in effectually stopping all communication with the enemy.

Thus far my march was successful, and continued so until the night of the 6th. When within sixty miles of Chihuahua, a small party of my advance unexpectedly came upon one of the enemy’s pickets, which, unfortunately, succeeded in escaping.

Aware, now, that my approach would be known on the following morning, I pushed forward my command until I arrived within six miles of the Sacramento, at a point termed Laguna, where I was met by a flag of truce from the general commanding the Mexican forces, protesting against the advance of my troops upon Chihuahua, upon the ground that instructions had been received from the Mexican government suspending hostilities, as a treaty of peace had been concluded and signed by commissioners on behalf of both governments. The evidence adduced on behalf of this assertion I did not then deem sufficiently satisfactory, and could not, therefore, comply with the proposition. Convinced of the uselessness of further conference, I was solicited to send in advance of my command two of my officers, to arrange the preliminaries of a capitulation. To this request I yielded, and immediately dispatched Capt. McKissick, of the quartermaster’s department, and Lieut. Prince, my assistant adjutant general, who were fully made acquainted with my views.--Fearful that dissimulation was the object of this interview, I determined to move my command upon Chihuahua that night, and accordingly proceeded with rapidity, when, in about an hour after the departure of my officers, I was met by some American citizens of Chihuahua, who informed me of the retreat, the morning previous, of the Mexican army, with their munitions of war. Anticipating events of this nature, I had, on the previous day, detached Beall’s dragoons, so that by a forced march over the mountains during the night, he would be able to intersect the Durango road, and possibly encounter the enemy in his rapid and confused fight. For his operations, I respectfully refer to the report herewith submitted. At 9 o’clock at night, my troops had possession of the city. On the following morning, (the 8th,) with portions of Rall’s, Beall’s, and Walker’s commands, (the majority mounted,) and numbering about 250 men, I pursued the enemy to the town of Santa Cruz de Rosales, where he had already strongly fortified himself—a distance of 60 miles from Chihuahua—where I arrived at sunrise the morning of the 9th. After a careful reconnaissance of the place, I determined to carry the town by storm, notwithstanding the immense fortified of the enemy in numbers, implements and munitions of war. Dismounting Rall’s (with the exception of McNain’s company) and Walker’s commands to operate as infantry, and posting Beall’s dragoons, now augmented by one company of Rall’s regiment, to act either as a reserve or to intercept the flight of the enemy, in the event of success, I determined the attack on the west side of the town, with Rall’s command, and on the southeast angle of the same, with Walker’s command. These arrangements perfected, I dispatched Lieut. Prince, with a flag of truce, demanding an unconditional surrender of the town and public property. An interview upon this summons was requested by General Trias, which I readily granted for the reason adduced—viz: that official notice from the Mexican government of a treaty of peace having been signed by commissioners, on behalf of both governments, had been received, and the solemn assurance by General Trias that he himself had no doubt of the existence of the treaty; moreover, that he felt assured that confirmation of the same from his government would reach him by a courier (express) expected in three days. This declaration was supported by the honor of the Mexican general, and, under the circumstances, was regarded important. I therefore made the proposition contained in the subsequent correspondence, which I have the honor to submit herewith. That success must inevitably follow any course I might decree, I had not the slightest doubt. I was expecting reinforcements of my artillery and horse, and was willing, if human life could be saved, to withdraw for a few days my forces; though, at the same time, I considered it my duty to besiege the town, as I maintained the right to dictate such terms as I deemed consistent with American honor.

It will thus be seen, that a small American force, not exceeding 300 men in the aggregate besieged with success a strongly fortified town, containing over 900 troops of the enemy. Without tents, a scarcity of provisions, and suffering from the effects of forced marches beyond a parallel, my troops cheerfully performed the onerous duties of the siege day and night, and are entitled to the highest considerations of their government.

From the 9th instant to the morning of the 16th, nothing of importance transpired for the subject of my report, save the correspondence before alluded to, and the arrival of small detachments of the several commands, together with two 12 pounder howitzers, of Major Walker’s battalion, under the command of Captain Hassendeubel, whom I left at Chihuahua on the morning of the 8th.

Expecting daily a sally from the enemy, my troops were constantly in the saddle ever vigilant and cautious, each appearing to possess the individual interest, which belongs more properly to the commander. That the enemy exhibited supineness—that his every effort became paralyzed by the vigilance of my troops, is sufficiently manifested by his total inaction, although numbering near four times my own. With a battery of eight pieces of artillery (several heavier than any of my guns,) and nine wall pieces, no attempt was made, designs executed, or pickets forced, to remedy the evils which were the subject of complaint in his official correspondence.

About daylight on the morning of the 16th, my expected reinforcements arrived; they consisted of part of three companies of Missouri horse, under the command of Lieut. Colonel Lane, and Love’s battery.

They reports of these officers, which I have the honor to submit, evince a zeal seldom displayed, a rapidity of movement yet to be surpassed, and an iron energy of will which recognizes no limit, and convey to the department a record of their own merits.

Convinced now of the necessity of terminating a siege peculiarly burdensome to my troops, I determined at once upon an act. From several reconnaissances, I felt sure the enemy believed my main force would be directed against that portion of the town fronting my camp, as new batteries had been established, and an unusual degree of activity became apparent throughout the siege in that quarter. At seven o’clock, A. M., I broke up my camp, and with my entire force, excepting Beall’s dragoons, augmented by Captain McNair’s company Missouri horse, who were left to cut off a retreat on the Durango road, I proceeded round the southern point of the town, where I placed in position Walker’s battalion, protected from the enemy’s artillery by walls and houses, for the meditated assault. Continuing to the western side of the town, I then detached Lieutenant Colonel Lane, with two companies of the Missouri regiment, to support Love’s battery, which I ordered to take position within 500 yards of the town, on the road leading to Chihuahua, and commanding the principal plaza church, around and in which the enemy were strongly posted, reserving Rall’s remaining four companies as my centre, and so disposes as to afford timely support to the artillery under Love and Hassendeubel.

My final disposition made, Hassendeubel’s two 12 pounders having been put in battery on the west side of the town, supported by Rall’s command, I, at 10 1/2 A.
M., ordered my batteries to open, which, for nearly an hour, maintained a spirited and destructive fire, clearing the houses and church of the enemy; which latter, from its flanking position and strength of construction, became the stronghold of the enemy.

The fire of the enemy, during this time, from all his heavy guns and wall pieces, was incessant, but, from their position, without effect.--Observing that large gun of the enemy, which I afterwards learned to be a 9 pounder, had been brought to bear upon Hassendeubel's battery, and evidently with a view to silence it, Lieut. Dyer, of the ordnance, belonging to my staff, but who volunteered for duty with Love's battery, was ordered to reinforce Hassendeubel with a 24 pounder howitzer and a 6 pounder gun. This movement having been perceived by the enemy, his battery was reinforced, and an incessant fire of canister, grape, and round shot was opened upon our batter, but without doing material injury. Lieut. Dyer was soon in position, where he continued a direct fire upon this battery, placed in embrasure in one of the principal streets leading to the main plaza, as well as the church and a large building, upon both of which were stationed a strong force. For the upwards of an hour this battery was served with great effect, clearing the houses and church during which time it was exposed to the fire of the enemy's batteries, which, throughout maintained a most rapid firing.

I now ordered Lieut. Love, with a 24 pounder howitzer and a 5 pounder gun, (the remainder of his battery having been disabled in firing,) to advance upon the position occupied by Lieut. Dyer. Dyer, determined if possible, to silence the enemy's 9 pounder, which contributed, by the efficient manner in which it was served, greatly to our annoyance. Immediately thereafter I received information that my rear was threatened by a large cavalry force of the enemy, supposed to be about 900 strong, and intended as a reinforcement for the enemy within the town. I immediately withdrew my artillery to a commanding position about three quarters of a mile from the town, and in the direction of the Chihuahua road; ordering, at the same time the remainder of my command to the same point, for the purpose of attacking this supposed reinforcement. This movement was evidently regarded by the enemy as a prelude to a signal defeat.--Loud cheers arose from the town, the houses were again covered by the soldiery, a flag was immediately run up from an angle of the church, and the fire of the enemy's heavy guns became unusually brisk. I soon discovered the report of a large reinforcement of the enemy in my rear to be incorrect, and that only a small body of cavalry had threatened it, which I soon dispersed with the command under Lieutenant Col. Lane.

I now determined to storm the town, agreeably to the dispositions made at the commencement of the attack; and therefore gave orders for Ralls, Lane, and Walker to resume their former positions, dismount their men, and charge the town at the points assigned them, as soon as my batteries should re-open.

Lieut. Love was ordered to take up his former position. About 3 1/2 P. M., the action was resumed, and the fire of our battery returned with unusual briskness. Lieut. Love's battery at this time consisted of one 24 pounder howitzer, one 6 pounder, and one 5 pounder. For a more detailed report of this battery, and the efficient aid contributed by the officers who kindly assisted at it, I respectfully refer to Lieutenant Love's report, which I take pleasure in endorsing, from my personal observations upon that day.

For the particulars of the several storming parties, I must also refer to the reports of their respective chiefs, which I desire to be identified as a portion of my own. The charge of Ralls was commenced under my own eye, and in a manner which foreboded success. So soon as time would permit, I witnessed the persevering efforts of Major Walker's command, and felt confident of the result.

I would also refer to Major Beall's report for the duty assigned the squadron of dragoons, under the command of Capt. Grier. In affording protection to my battery on the 16th, in the judgment and activity displayed to intercept any attempt by flight of the enemy, and in the discharge of the highly important duties of the siege, I discovered talent and ability.

I feel confident that I cannot add to the known reputation of this command; for the second time has it shared with me the honors of victory. Although the first was at the sacrifice of its gallant and accomplished leader, (the lamented Burgwin,) yet I cannot refrain from according that tribute of praise which is due the distinguished services they have performed since forming a portion of my command.

Shortly after sundown the enemy surrendered. Gen. Trias and forty-two (42) of his principal officers were made prisoners of war; and eleven pieces of Artillery, nine wall pieces, besides 577 stand of arms, fell into our hands. Our loss in the action was one lieutenant, two corporals, and one private killed; and nineteen privates wounded. The loss of the enemy—from the evidence of commanding officers herewith submitted—was two officers, and 236 non-commissioned officers and privates; the number wounded cannot be correctly ascertained.

In submitting to the consideration of the government the operations which have been performed by my troops, I feel anxious to exhibit that high degree of praise their conduct on this occasion so justly merits. The exceedingly onerous duties of forced marches, over a sterile and desert country of nearly 320 miles, without tents or transportation trains, with merely a few days' rations of subsistence, have been willingly, indeed cheerfully, endured by my gallant column. I feel a sense of pride in recording the distinguished bravery of all—regulars and volunteers; believing that feeling will be reciprocated by the war department, and cherished by the American people.

The distinguished conduct of Lieutenant Love—in the highly efficient manner in which his battery was served; in the rapidity of movement which characterized his conduct, when ordered to reinforce me, traveling night and day, going into battery four hours after his arrival, and his unceasing efforts during the entire day in working his battery—deserves especial notice; and I cannot refrain from expressing the strongest recommendation for that honorable gratitude from this country which the brave soldier acquires by his exploits.

To Colonel Ralls, to Lieutenant Colonel Lane, to Major Walker, and their brave officers and men, I must accord the highest honors; unflinching in the performance, they each and all vied, where duty called them, for the crowning result of success. Ralls, on the west, charged with animation and enthusiasm; Walker, on the southeast, stormed with daring and bold determination; Lane, on the northwest, with a small command, forces the enemy's barriers, gained the main plaza, but, overwhelmed by numbers, prudently withdrew, in good order, his small command. In this charge, the brave but lamented Lieutenant G. O. Hepburn, Missouri mounted horse, fell, leading the men gloriously, cheering and animating them to the last. His country has lost a valuable officer; his relatives and friends must look to his deeds, worthy of record upon the page of history, to console them for their loss.

From the officers of my personal staff, I have received the most important services and encouraging aid. Capt. McKissick, assistant quartermaster, Capt. Garrison, assistant commissary of subsistence, Maj. Spalding, pay department, and Lieutenant Prince, A. D. C. and A. A. General, served during the contest near my person, conveying my orders with promptness wherever necessity demanded.

Captain McKissick, suffering severely from sickness, resumed his position in the field, rendering valuable services throughout the action.

To the medical staff, conducted by Assistant Surgeon R. T. Simpson United States army, I have to express my acknowledgements. The attention and ability displayed by Assistant Surgeon Simpson to our wounded upon the field, as well as those of the enemy after the action, has won for him admiration and esteem from both armies.

I also mention, with pleasure, the services of Capt. Haley, Missouri horse, acting brigade inspector of my command, who voluntarily led his company at the storming of the town, under the immediate command of Colonel Ralls.

I also take great pleasure in recording the services of Messrs. James L. Collins, E. W. Pomeroy, and W. C. Skinner, American citizens, resident at Chihuahua, who volunteered their services as aids-de-camp upon that duty.

Of these gentlemen I must take particular mention. The valuable information received from the former upon my arrival at El Paso, as respects the condition of the enemy, a knowledge of the country and its language, together with his unremitting efforts to second my views in all that pertains to these occurrences, and the personal exertions of the two latter, in assisting me to remount my command at this place, with their services on the 16th, entitle them to my warmest thanks.

I respectfully transmit herewith a special field return of the forces engaged in the action of the 16th: a report of the killed and wounded; a list of officers paroled; a list of stores captured; a muster-roll of the enemy's forces, as furnished by Gen. Trias; and two topographical sketches of the town, showing the position of my several commands; prepared respectively by Captain Hassendeubel, of Maj. Walker's battalion, and Assistant Surgeon Horace R. Wirtz, United States army.

I think proper to state here, that every exertion was made by Lieut. Col. Easton, commanding battalion of infantry, Lieut. Webber, commanding two sections of Captain Hassendeubel's artillery, and those officers who were necessarily absent with the trains, including Major Bodine, pay department, in charge of the public funds, to share the honor of the attack.

I would also inform the department that Gen. Manuel Armijo, late governor of New Mexico, surrendered himself to me as a prisoner of war on the 21st inst., and is now on his parole of honor; a copy of which together with that of Gen. Trias, I have the honor herewith to submit.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

STERLING PRICE
Brig. Gen. U. S. A. Comd'g.

To Brig. Gen. R. JONES,

NNR 73.407 February 26, 1848 Gen. Joseph Lane’s expedition in pursuit of Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna

ARMY OF INVASION.

The New Orleans Picayune, of the 15th furnishes letters from their correspondent in Mexico, giving interesting details from the army, from which we derive the following:

His letter dated city of Mexico, January 17, 1848, is occupied in comments upon the papers received there from the U. States, and in giving his own speculations and opinions upon the policy which ought to be pursued. As it was written before the project of a treaty had been agreed upon, most of those speculations are superceded by certainties, and the opinions are no longer germane to the state of affairs. We confine our extracts to matter of fact.

Puebla, January 21.--I wrote on the 17th instant from Mexico, and informed you that I intended to accompany a secret expedition under the command of Gen. Lane, which, at the time, was supposed to be intended to scour the valley of Mexico in quest of guerrillas; and after giving it a thorough search, to march in the direction of Santa Anna’s residence for the time being. The expedition, consisting of two companies of the 3d dragoons, under the command of Capt. Duperu and Lieuts. Adde and Martin; company of mounted rifles, commanded by Lieut. Claiborne; and four companies of Texas rangers, commanded by Captains Roberts and Daggett and Lieuts. Tucker and Evans—numbering in all about 359 officers and men—left Mexico on the morning of the 18th, taking the Penon, or Vera Cruz road; Major Polk in chief command of the dragoons and rifles, and Colonel Hays in chief command of the rangers, accompanied the expedition, together with Major Chevalie, formerly of the rangers, Captain Crittenden of the rifles, and Lieutenant Butler, Dr. Hunt, of Kentucky, and Mr. Merriwether, of Indiana—the former aid, and the two latter volunteer aids of Gen. Butler, who followed the expedition as volunteers.

NNR 73.408 February 26, 1848 Orizaba occupied, description, revolt at La Paz

Orizaba, January 25, 1845.--We left Tehuacan for this city early on the morning of the 23d, after a rest of a day and a night; and a few miles from the town came to a hacienda of Santa Anna’s, at the base of a mountain, and at the entrance of a narrow valley.—The hacienda was thoroughly searched, but nothing subject to seizure was found; and the command proceeded for six or eight miles being rough and jagged, and over a naked lime-stone rock, as has been occasionally the case in the two preceding [ expand ] arc [ yes. It must not be inferred, however, that because the
This valley runs, say ten or twelve miles, in a northerly direction, and then, turning abruptly to the east, narrows into a mountain gorge, where there are numerous passes capable of successful defence by a small force against a larger superior one; but although we were warned to be cautious in marching through this gorge least the enemy should surprise us, we passed through it without meeting a combatant. The road is a continuous ascent. After traveling three or four miles through the gorge, we met, before us, and an occasional glimpse of Orizaba’s snow, much nearer than is pleasing to the imagination of a man accustomed to a warm climate, gave intimation that we were ascending a lofty mountain. At the top, governed by a single impulse, the whole column halts, and officers and men rush from the line to behold a scene, perhaps unequalled in the world for beauty and magnificence. Before us were two ranges of mountains, running parallel at a very short distance apart; the tops enveloped in clouds, as we were ourselves, were invisible, but the sun penetrating the mist gave to their barren sides an ashy whiteness; the numerous mule paths traversing them in every direction, appeared like so many fiery serpents; and beneath, the fields of grass, corn, and stubble, alternated with the regularity of squares of a checkerboard. The churches and haciendas on the plain, all white as snow, added, by the contrast with the green, in no small degree to the charm of the scene. I find myself guilty of the egotism of attempting a description of a scene that would baffle the most gifted pen or pencil, and can only offer as an excuse the unerasable impression it made upon my memory—an impression that would not brook neglect.

At the foot of the mountain the general was met by the curate and Ayuntamiento of the small village of Acalzingo, bearing a white flag. They accompanied us into the village, pointed out good quarters in the cleanest and best managed country inn I have seen in Mexico, and men and horses found a good night’s rest. The city was now but seventeen miles distant. From what had been heard on the road, it was expected a defence of it would be attempted; but, about 3 o’clock in the morning, a deputation came to the general from the Ayuntamiento, requesting to know what terms he would agree to, if the keys of the city were given up to him. The reply was, that they would know his terms when he had possession. With this the deputation returned; and at about five o’clock in the morning, the troops were on the last day’s march to Orizaba—350 men were on their way to take a city of 20,000 to 25,000 population. To cut the matter short, the Ayuntamiento, the principal clergyman, and many of the respectable inhabitants, met the command about three miles from the city, and after, at their own request, being informed of what the troops would want, a portion went ahead to provide for them, and the remainder, accompanying the general, on arriving at the gates gave up the keys of the city to him. On entering, we found a white flag displayed at every house, and the whole population seemed to have come out to witness our entry, and showed a degree of confidence that was decidedly complimentary. On conversing with some of the most friendly citizens, I found there were about 100 or 150 guerrillas here last night, who were ambitious of defending the city at the gate by which we entered, or who pretended they were. Whether they were sincere or not, is a matter of but little moment; but the citizens, desirous of avoiding those excesses which always will take place after a successful assault, wisely cleared the rascals out early in the morning.

Orizaba, Jan. 26, 1848.--We are now quietly and comfortably quartered here, and the inhabitants seem thus far to be satisfied with our presence. The general has appointed Major Polk, military and civil governor of the city; Co. Dumont, attorney general; and Col. Hays, commander of troops. Inquiries are about being instituted in relation to certain matters of importance, the nature of which will be revealed by the orders I enclose. As soon as these inquiries are concluded, you will be informed of the result. --You will find a correspondence between the Ayuntamiento of Cordova and the general, requesting him to occupy their city. The people in this part of the country are generally peaceable, and all that was wanting to put down the guerrillas who have rendezvoused in the neighborhood, was the presence of a sufficient force to countenance and support the well disposed. The good conduct of the troops on the march, and since their arrival here, has assisted much in conciliating the people, and the durability of first impressions is proverbial.

Col. Bankhead, we learn, is on his way here with 1,000 or 1,200 men and several pieces of artillery, and is expected to arrive at Cordova to-night. If he does, he will be here to-morrow. This amount of well-conducted troops in and about here will be of great service in protecting life and property from guerrilla depredations, and in encouraging our friends to speak their sentiments boldly, be they what they may, for peace and or for occupation. We shall remain here until Col. Bankhead arrives; how much longer, I do not know. From this point it is probable the general will take the direct road to Puebla, and thence as rapidly as possible to Mexico, where it is expected the San Luis expedition will be preparing about the time we arrive. Should Rea or any of the guerrilla parties lie on the road, you may depend they will not be allowed much rest.

I will conclude this letter by giving you a copy of a memorandum furnished by a person in Puebla, in relation to the character and disposition of the people in the towns and villages we have passed through from Puebla to this place, and in like places on the direct road from here to Puebla. D.S.

CALIFORNIA--Revolt at La Paz.--An account is given of the revolt at La Paz in the New York Globe, in a letter dated La Paz, October 29th, (latest prior date Oct. 10,) which says:

"The inhabitants have risen throughout the country against us, obliging every one who has shown any friendship for us to flee to La Paz for protection.--One American (Mathew Davis) was murdered at Muhje, not having time to escape. At this last place the marines and sailors of the "Dale" had a skirmish with the inhabitants, and drove them from their town into the mountains. They are now collecting at various points in the interior, with the intention of obliging us to evacuate this place; but, although we are small in numbers, we are well fortified, and it will be no easy matter. I can hardly believe they will make a direct attack on us; they will be more apt to annoy us, by hovering about the neighboring farms, cutting off supplies, &c. We are too few to act on the offensive. The sloop of war Dale Igely in the harbor.

"All this difficulty is the result of not having a single vessel in the gulf since the beginning of last July, to prevent the transportation of arms, ammunition, and men then Guayamas to this coast. The English cruisers have been there all the stormy season."

Referring the taking of Mazatlan and Guayamas, the letter says:

"How they are to be retained and garrisoned I cannot well imagine; we have not a thousand troops from the forty-ninth parallel to Cape St. Lucas.--They are trying to make nondescript soldiers out the sailors, but it will be found much easier to garrison a man-of-war with such material, than a captured city with a densely populated back country."

A series of small fights and skirmishes on the Pacific coast of Mexico is reported by Mazatlan letters of Dec. 1st to the Express--the U. S. vessels Independence, Captain Shubrick, Congress, Cyane, and Portsmouth being then at anchor there. The Congress and Portsmouth bombarded Guayamas in October, and took possession after driving out the troops--800 in number. Com. Sellridge, of the Dale, landed at Sinaloa with 88 officers and men 17th Nov. and unexpectedly encountered a force of 400 men, with the aid of shot and shell from the ship. Com. S. was slightly wounded.

A body of near 200 California troops, with two 6 pounders, attacked Lt. Haywood, who was posted at San Jose, near Cape Lucas, with about 100 men, including 30 California volunteers, led by Mr. G]le]p]e, and American merchant, and one 9 pounders.--The Mexican leader, Majores, was killed with 20 of his men. A few days after Lt. Col. Burton, with 40 New York volunteers was assaulted at La Paz, on the Gulf side of the peninsula, by 300 Mexicans under Peuanda--who lost 50 men. Burton lost 1 killed and 2 wounded. In two days after, 25th November, attack was renewed. Burton having sent to Lt. Haywood at San Jose, 70 leagues off, for aid. No fears are felt for the result.
In a brisk skirmish near Mazatlan between Lieut. Halleck and Rowan and 160 men, a band of Mexicans were routed, with the loss of 1 man and 13 wounded on our side. Col. Stevenson, 7th N. York volunteers, commands the southern department at Los Angelos. [TBW]

NNR 73.409 February 26, 1848 items, peace announced at Queretaro

LATER FROM MEXICO.--The English steamer Dee arrived at Ship Island, below New Orleans, on the 20th instant, with advices from Vera Cruz to the 16th instant, four day later than previous accounts, and from Tampico to the 13th instant.

The Dee had five passengers on board for England, and five for Havana.

She also had on board $100,000 in specie.

The courier of the English legation had arrives at Vera Cruz with advices from the city of Mexico to the 13th. The American Star of the 11th, published in the capital, contains an official announcement that the treaty of peace had been concluded. Attached to the document is the signature of Senor Rosa, Mexican minister of foreign relations.

Intelligence from Queretaro, up to the 10th inst., states that there was still no quorum of congress.

A meeting of deputies was held on the 7th, at which twenty four were present. A majority of these declared in favor in peace.

Gen. Lane reached the city of Mexico from Orizaba on the 10th instant, without having met with any further adventures than have already been noticed.

Lieut. Gaston, of the Kentucky volunteers, died at the city of Mexico a short time before the courier left that city.

Lieut. Clark, with his command, was at Cuernavaca on the 9th. Gen. Alvarez was making an effort to cut off his supplies, but Lieut. C. had adopted every means to thwart his designs.

The American Star of the 12th says that Santa Anna had asked for a passport that he might leave the republic, and that he recommends his friends to favor peace, and sustain the existing government.

Pena y Pena has published a letter, which states that the government in Queretaro has resolved, in agreement with Gen. Scott, upon the imprisonment of Santa Anna, as the best means of removing the only obstacle to the conclusion of a peace.

There was much animation of Queretaro; commerce was reviving; and the general opinion there was that a peace would soon be concluded.

The American Star of the 16th inst, says it has been officially announced by the Mexican minister of foreign relations, at Queretaro, that a treaty of peace was signed at Guadaloupe on the 2d inst. Between Mr. Trist, on the part of the United States, and Senors Corto Cuevas, commissioners on the part of the Mexican government. [TBW]

NNR 73.416 February 26, 1848 comments on the prospects of the treaty of peace apparently submitted to the Senate

THE TREATY. It is understood that a message from the president reached the senate chamber the moment after that body adjourned in consequence of Mr. Adam’s illness on Tuesday. It was communicated as soon as the senate organized on Wednesday. Nothing of less importance could have detained that body in session on that day. The message and the accompanying project of a treaty with Mexico, it is understood was, during the secret session, referred to the committee on foreign relations.
A faint glimpse of the sentiments of some of the prominent members in the senate in relation to the treaty, may be obtained by noticing the proceedings of the body whilst they were in open session.

Of the disposition of the president and his cabinet in respect to accepting the proposed terms, very contrary opinions have been expressed. For ourselves, we took it for granted, that if the executive, with whom exclusively the constitution has reposed the initiatory treaty making duties, recognized the project so far as to submit it to the senate, that they of course waived all objections as to the authority by which it had been negatived, however informal.

And (notwithstanding a recent instance to the contrary) we further concluded, that those informalities would not have been waived in this case, if the president and his cabinet were not in favor of accepting and ratifying the treaty, which he submitted.

Of course we looked to the government organ at Washington for the most authentic intimations upon the subject. No announcements could reasonably be expected from thence in the present posture of affairs, but something may be gathered from the tone of their remarks. These so far as they go, leave little room to doubt the president's approval of the terms. The Union of Friday night, the 25th, has between two and three columns under its leading article "The treaty," most of which are extracts from other papers with their own comments. From the whole we gather a distinct approval of the project, at least so far as the territory acquired, is at issue. Relying upon it also, as they do, as conclusive proof that the president has no design to conquer all Mexico, implies his acquiescence in the treaty as submitted.

What chance there is of two-thirds of the senate advising its ratification, is another question, and is likely to involve that of the terms on which additional territory shall be admitted into the Union.

On the other hand, the project is admitted to have originated from the executive of Mexico, and will have to be submitted to the ratification of the Mexican congress. The cash consideration of some twenty millions is relied upon to win them over.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Courier, writes that there will be serious opposition to ratify the treaty, by the Wilmot proviso senators of the north, and by the Calhoun men of the south, Butler, Yulee, and Johnson, of La. Some urge the necessity of a military frontier, and suggest the Sierra Madre line, others object to the treaty as informally negotiated; other do not like its stipulations; "a very small portion, if any, advocate openly, the whole of Mexico." The writer upon the whole, however, for various reasons assigned, concludes that the influence of the executive will carry the ratification. The last of his reasons is, that congress will refuse money and men to carry on the war.

The three millions are to be paid down on the exchange of ratification, and our troops are to leave Mexico within three months thereafter. [TBW]

NNR 74.016 February 26, 1848 plans for an independent Republic of the Sierra Madre

REPUBLIC OF SIERRA MADRE.--A New movement in New Mexico contemplated.--From the New Orleans Bulletin we learn the following piece of intelligence of the contemplated formation of an Independent Republic of the Northern States of Mexico. The idea has been broached before, but it seems now to be seriously entertained.

"A gentleman of this city, who has very lately been in Tampico, and who came passenger in the Tay, informs us that reliable persons living in that place stated to him, that if peace was declared between the United States and Mexico, they would get up a revolution against the latter country, and declare themselves independent. Their scheme is to unite with the States of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Zacatecas, and San Luis, and declare for a Republic--invite a few thousand Americans to join in with them, and by blocking up the mountain passes, beat off the foe at all points, and compel Mexico to acknowledge her as an independent nation. Their plan, though a wild one, has a host of supporters, who have even gone so far as to form a national flag, a fancy affair, with the letters of R. S. M., Republic of Sierra Madre, and to nominate General SHIELDS as President."
The New Orleans Delta of a late date, says: We learn from a gentleman who arrived yesterday in the steamship Portland from Vera Cruz--one who is well posted up in the matter--that a public declaration was to be made on the 13th June ult, by the leading Mexicans of Vera Cruz, in favor of separating that State from the present Mexican confederacy, in other words, declaring in favor of the contemplated Republic of Sierra Madre. NNR 74.017 July 12, 1848 Desereters

DESERTERS.--A writer in the New Orleans Delta states that since the commencement of the war there have been at least one thousand desertions from the American to the Mexican army; That numbers of them were recognized at Queretaro by their old comrades; and that they have been the main stay of the Mexican Government in repressing manifestations of mutiny and disaffection by the Mexicans against the administration of Pena y Pena. [JNA]

NNR 74.017-018 July 12, 1848 arrival of returning troops at New Orleans

RETURN OF THE VOLUNTEERS.--The Company of Sappers and Miners which went out to Mexico under Capt. Swift, has returned to New York, the first of the returned volunteers. There were a number of volunteers from Philadelphia in this company. When it left the United States it numbered 72 brave fellows. Twelve died from fevers and other diseases--two were killed in battle--one deserted to speculate in mining--two deserted and joined the enemy--twenty-four fell sick or were discharged at Vera Cruz, and thirty-three have returned in the steamship Crescent City. They bring with them a number of Mexican lances, side arms and accoutrements, as trophies of their bravery at Contreras, and other sanguinary battle-fields.--[Public Ledger.

The first arrival of troops from Mexico at New Orleans took place on the 16th ult., in the ship Russia, from Vera Cruz. She anchored off Slaughter-house Point, below the city, with the following companies on board:

Since our last announcement the U. S. Steamer Fashion, from Brazos Santiago, arrived at N. Orleans with Brevet Lieut. Col. Bragg and other officers.

The Schooners Creole and Athos from Vera Cruz, and the James L. Day, Steamship, from the same port, have also arrived, bringing troops--the Creole with companies B, H, and K, numbering 148 men, of the New York Volunteers, under command of Major G. Dykeman; the Athos, with companies D, H, and K,--180 men, of the Michigan Volunteers; and the James L. Day, with 125 men of the Baltimore and District of Columbia regiment, under Col. Hughes.

The U. S. Steamships Alabama, and Massachusetts, the ship Edgar, the bark Florida, and the brig Winthrop, have also arrived.

A large number of officers and soldiers came over on these vessels, among whom were Major General Patterson and staff.

The Ohio steamer was to leave immediately after the Alabama, with troops, she arrived there on the 22d inst.
Lieutenant Jenkins, of the 2d Illinois Volunteers, and a private soldier, died on the Massachusetts on the passage.

The ship Sabattis, was to sail on the 24th with the remainder of the Illinois troops.

The Alabama brought up the Georgia mounted men, and the New Jersey battalion--eleven companies, in all 629 men--with their officers, twenty-three bodies in coffins, from Gen. Patterson’s command, and ten horses; Lieut. Col. J. S. Calhoun and 316 non-commissioned officers and privates of the Georgia Mounted Volunteers; Lieut. G. Anderson, and 28 men. Independent Georgians; Captains McDowell, Harrison, and Mickle, and 244 non-commissioned officers and privates of the New Jersey Battalion.

Passengers by the Massachusetts--Major Gen. Patterson and staff--six companies of the 2d Illinois Volunteers--325 men--under command of Col. Hicks:--Capt. Powell and 52 men; Capt. Moore and 53 men; Capt. Burnes and 46 men; Capt. Monaghan and 47 men; Capt. Stapps and 47 men.

Passengers by the brig Winthrop.--1st Massachusetts Regiment, under command of Major B. K. Andrews--255 men, companies F, G and H.

NUMBER OF TROOPS SHIPPED FROM VERA CRUZ, AND THE DAYS ON WHICH THEY SAILED.

June 3--U. S. ship America, 290 troops from N. Orleans, and Capt. Howes' Co. 2d Dragoons. Ship Russia, troops from N. York per America, 369.

June 7--Ship America, sick from Jalapa, 500. Brig Helen, Engineer, 36; convalescents from Vera Cruz 41--76.

ALBERT GALLATIN ON PEACE AND TERRITORIAL EXPANSION.--The Paris (Kentucky) Citizen has the following excellent letter from the friend and counselor of Jefferson on the prospect of peace with Mexico. It is addressed to an eminent Kentucky member of the last congress.

New York, Feb. 16, 1848.

Dear Sir: I feel highly gratified by the favorable opinion you expressed of my attempt to promote the restoration of peace with Mexico, on principles consistent with justice. The war cannot last much longer; but with regret, I am compelled to say, that most of the friends of peace care not what the terms of peace may be, and that many even of those who think the war unjust, and was provoked by the United States, are imbued with the notion that our victories and conquests give us a right to extort from Mexico a part of its territory. Even Gen. Taylor, whose military talents I admire, and whose character I respect, expresses a similar opinion in his letter to Gen. Gaines. Have we then, they say, fought, conquered, covered ourselves with glory, and all for nothing? even so, if you will be just you have won the glory and nothing else. Yet I do not despair; for I have faith in our institutions, and in the ultimate prevalence of truth. Indeed, even my essay (seed thrown to the wind, some of which may fructify,) has had a far greater circulation, and has met with greater approbation than I expected; and no one has attempted a direct refutation.

The lessons of history may not altogether be lost. Great Britain came out triumphant at the end of her long war against France, or rather the French revolution. She was covered with glory, added Malta, the Ionian Islands, as many Dutch and French colonies as she pleased to her dominion, dictated the conditions of peace, with her victorious army within the walls of her enemy's metropolis; and, for the sake of France, restored to her the legitimate dynasty. In the meanwhile she completed the conquest of an empire, of India. And what has she in reality gained? An addition of five hundred millions sterling to her former debts, which imposes an enormous weight of oppressive taxation on the people, and has already crippled her resources and her power. And the result of her apparent extension of her commercial monopoly has been to enrich the few, to impoverish the poor, and occasionally to throw one million of people out of employment.

What shall be said of a nation, of an empire, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the north pole to the equator? of the destiny of the Anglo Saxon race, of its universal monarchy over the whole of North America? Now, I will ask, which is the portion of the globe that has attained the highest degree of civilization, and even of power? Asia, with its vast empire of Turkey, India and China, or Europe, divided into twenty independent sovereignties? Other powerful causes have undoubtedly largely contributed to that result, but this the great division into ten or twelve distinct languages, must not be neglected. But all these allegations of superiority of race and destiny, neither require or deserve any answer. They are but pretences under which to disguise ambition, cupidity, or silly vanity.

I would be much gratified by a personal acquaintance with one whose great merit is well known to me. As you express a hope to that effect, it must be by your visiting this city; for now in my 88th year, I travel no more. I would feel most happy to see you here, but it must not be deferred.

Please accept the assurances of my distinguished consideration and personal regard.

Your ob't and faithful servant,
ALBERT GALLATIN.

Hon. GARRET DAVIS, Paris, Ky. [TBW] occasion of consecrating the tri-colored banner, by the patriarch of that city, in front of St. Mark's, the American consul is said to have been the only foreign diplomat invited to be present, and in the course of the ceremonies, the commander of the troops on parade exclaimed: "Attention! Honor to the flag of the United States of America!"—on which the dense mass burst forth in shouts of applause, with cries of "long live our sister republic!" The people of all classes and conditions, soldiers and civilians, threw themselves into the arms of the consul, embraced him, and kissed the "star spangled banner," pressed it to their hearts; while many, with moistened eye, stretching their hands through the dense crowd merely to touch it, could just but articulate "viva il console!—viva gli Stati Uniti—viva la gran republica!" And in the evening, at the theatre, there was a repetition of the enthusiasm, on the consul's entering his box, with his wife. [TBW]

NNR 74.033 July 19, 1848 Amnesty for deserters during the war with Mexico

A GENERAL ORDER (No. 25) from the Adjutant General, is published with the President's proclamation, dated July 6. It concludes as follows:

9. All deserters, enlisted for the period of the war, in confinement, or under sentence of Courts Martial, will be dismissed the service, the work "honorably" being erased from the face of the discharge.

10. "The President directs it to be announced in "general orders" that deserters from the army at large may peaceably return to their homes without being subject to punishment or trial on account of such desertion. No reward or expenses will be allowed for apprehending any soldier who deserted prior to this order; nor will any deserter be allowed to enter the army.

11. "The hair to be short, or what is generally termed cropped; the whiskers not to extend below the lower tip of the ear, and a line thence with the curve of the mouth; moustaches will not be worn (except by cavalry regiments) by officers or men on any pretence whatever."—Army Regulations. Sept. 215.

12. The non observance of the above regulation (tolerated during the war with Mexico) is no longer permitted. It is enjoined upon all officers to observe and enforce the regulation.

By order of the Secretary of War. [JNA]

TREATY WITH MEXICO (February 2, 1848)

TREATY OF PEACE, FRIENDSHIP, LIMITS, AND SETTLEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE UNITED MEXICAN STATES CONCLUDED AT GUADALUPE HIDALGO, FEBRUARY 2, 1848; RATIFICATION ADVISED BY SENATE, WITH AMENDMENTS, MARCH 10, 1848; RATIFIED BY PRESIDENT, MARCH 16, 1848; RATIFICATIONS EXCHANGED AT QUERETARO, MAY 30, 1848; PROCLAIMED, JULY 4, 1848.
IN THE NAME OF ALMIGHTY GOD

The United States of America and the United Mexican States animated by a sincere desire to put an end to the calamities of the war which unhappily exists between the two Republics and to establish upon a solid basis relations of peace and friendship, which shall confer reciprocal benefits upon the citizens of both, and assure the concord, harmony, and mutual confidence wherein the two people should live, as good neighbors have for that purpose appointed their respective plenipotentiaries, that is to say: The President of the United States has appointed Nicholas P Trist, a citizen of the United States, and the President of the Mexican Republic has appointed Don Luis Gonzaga Cuevas, Don Bernardo Couto, and Don Miguel Atristain, citizens of the said Republic: Who, after a reciprocal communication of their respective full powers, have, under the protection of Almighty God, the author of peace, arranged, agreed upon, and signed the following:

ARTICLE I

There shall be firm and universal peace between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, and between their respective countries, territories, cities, towns, and people, without exception of places or persons.

ARTICLE II

Immediately upon the signature of this treaty, a convention shall be entered into between a commissioner or commissioners appointed by the General-in-chief of the forces of the United States, and such as may be appointed by the Mexican Government, to the end that a provisional suspension of hostilities shall take place, and that, in the places occupied by the said forces, constitutional order may be reestablished, as regards the political, administrative, and judicial branches, so far as this shall be permitted by the circumstances of military occupation.

ARTICLE III

Immediately upon the ratification of the present treaty by the Government of the United States, orders shall be transmitted to the commanders of their land and naval forces, requiring the latter (provided this treaty shall then have been ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic, and the ratifications exchanged) immediately to desist from blockading any Mexican ports and requiring the former (under the same condition) to commence, at the earliest moment practicable, withdrawing all troops of the United States then in the interior of the Mexican Republic, to points that shall be selected by common agreement, at a distance from the seaports not exceeding thirty leagues; and such evacuation of the interior of the Republic shall be completed with the least possible delay; the Mexican Government hereby binding itself to afford every facility in its power for rendering the same convenient to the troops, on their march and in their new positions, and for promoting a good understanding between them and the inhabitants. In like manner orders shall be despatched to the persons in charge of the custom houses at all ports occupied by the forces of the United States, requiring them (under the same condition) immediately to deliver possession of the same to the persons authorized by the Mexican Government to receive it, together with all bonds and evidences of debt for duties on importations and on exportations, not yet fallen due. Moreover, a faithful and exact account shall be made out, showing the entire amount of all duties on imports and on exports, collected at such custom-houses, or elsewhere in Mexico, by authority of the United States, from and after the day of ratification of this treaty by the Government of the Mexican Republic; and also an account of the cost of collection; and such entire amount, deducting only the cost of collection, shall be delivered to the Mexican Government, at the city of Mexico, within three months after the exchange of ratifications.

The evacuation of the capital of the Mexican Republic by the troops of the United States, in virtue of the above stipulation, shall be completed in one month after the orders there stipulated for shall have been received by the commander of said troops, or sooner if possible.

ARTICLE IV
Immediately after the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty all castles, forts, territories, places, and possessions, which have been taken or occupied by the forces of the United States during the present war, within the limits of the Mexican Republic, as about to be established by the following article, shall be definitely restored to the said Republic, together with all the artillery, arms, apparatus of war, munitions, and other public property, which were in the said castles and forts when captured, and which shall remain there at the time when this treaty shall be duly ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic. To this end, immediately upon the signature of this treaty, orders shall be despatched to the American officers commanding such castles and forts, securing against the removal or destruction of any such artillery, arms, apparatus of war, munitions, or other public property. The city of Mexico, within the inner line of intrenchments surrounding the said city, is comprehended in the above stipulation, as regards the restoration of artillery, apparatus of war, & c.

The final evacuation of the territory of the Mexican Republic, by the forces of the United States, shall be completed in three months -from the said exchange of ratifications, or sooner if possible; the Mexican Government hereby engaging, as in the foregoing article to use all means in its power for facilitating such evacuation, and rendering it convenient to the troops, and for promoting a good understanding between them and the inhabitants.

If, however, the ratification of this treaty by both parties should not take place in time to allow the embarcation of the troops of the United States to be completed before the commencement of the sickly season, at the Mexican ports on the Gulf of Mexico, in such case a friendly arrangement shall be entered into between the General-in-Chief of the said troops and the Mexican Government, whereby healthy and otherwise suitable places, at a distance from the ports not exceeding thirty leagues, shall be designated for the residence of such troops as may not yet have embarked, until the return of the healthy season. And the space of time here referred to as comprehending the sickly season shall be understood to extend from the first day of May to the first day of November.

All prisoners of war taken on either side, on land or on sea, shall be restored as soon as practicable after the exchange of ratifications of this treaty. It is also agreed that if any Mexicans should now be held as captives by any savage tribe within the limits of the United States, as about to be established by the following article, the Government of the said United States will exact the release of such captives and cause them to be restored to their country.

ARTICLE V

The boundary line between the two Republics shall commence in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande, otherwise called Rio Bravo del Norte, or Opposite the mouth of its deepest branch, if it should have more than one branch emptying directly into the sea; from thence up the middle of that river, following the deepest channel, where it has more than one, to the point where it strikes the southern boundary of New Mexico; thence, westwardly, along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico (which runs north of the town called Paso) to its western termination; thence, northward, along the western line of New Mexico, until it intersects the first branch of the river Gila; (or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said line nearest to such branch, and thence in a direct line to the same); thence down the middle of the said branch and of the said river, until it empties into the Rio Colorado; thence across the Rio Colorado, following the division line between Upper and Lower California, to the Pacific Ocean.

The southern and western limits of New Mexico, mentioned in the article, are those laid down in the map entitled "Map of the United Mexican States, as organized and defined by various acts of the Congress of said republic, and constructed according to the best authorities. Revised edition. Published at New York, in 1847, by J. Disturnell," of which map a copy is added to this treaty, bearing the signatures and seals of the undersigned Plenipotentiaries, And, in order to preclude all difficulty in tracing upon the ground the limit separating Upper from Lower California, it is agreed that the said limit shall consist of a straight line drawn from the middle of the Rio Gila, where it unites with the Colorado, to a point on the coast of the Pacific Ocean, distant one marine league due south of the southernmost point of the port of San Diego, according to the plan of said port made in the year 1782 by Don Juan Pantoja, second sailing-master of the Spanish fleet, and published at Madrid in the year 1802, in the atlas to the voyage of the schooners Sutil and Mexicana; of which plan a copy is hereunto added, signed and sealed by the respective Plenipotentiaries.

In order to designate the boundary line with due precision, upon authoritative
The boundary line established by this article shall be religiously respected by each of the two republics, and no change shall ever be made therein, except by the express and free consent of both nations, lawfully given by the General Government of each, in conformity with its own constitution.

ARTICLE VI

The vessels and citizens of the United States shall, in all time, have a free and uninterrupted passage by the Gulf of California, and by the river Colorado below its confluence with the Gila, to and from their possessions situated north of the boundary line defined in the preceding article; it being understood that this passage is to be by navigating the Gulf of California and the river Colorado, and not by land, without the express consent of the Mexican Government.

If, by the examinations which may be made, it should be ascertained to be practicable and advantageous to construct a road, canal, or railway, which should in whole or in part run upon the river Gila, or upon its right or its left bank, within the space of one marine league from either margin of the river, the Governments of both republics will form an agreement regarding its construction, in order that it may serve equally for the use and advantage of both countries.

ARTICLE VII

The river Gila, and the part of the Rio Bravo del Norte lying below the southern boundary of New Mexico, being, agreeably to the fifth article, divided in the middle between the two republics, the navigation of the Gila and of the Bravo below said boundary shall be free and common to the vessels and citizens of both countries; and neither shall, without the consent of the other, construct any work that may impede or interrupt, in whole or in part, the exercise of this right; not even for the purpose of favoring new methods of navigation. Nor shall any tax or contribution, under any denomination or title, be levied upon vessels or persons navigating the same or upon merchandise or effects transported thereon, except in the case of landing upon one of their shores. If, for the purpose of making the said rivers navigable, or for maintaining them in such state, it should be necessary or advantageous to establish any tax or contribution, this shall not be done without the consent of both Governments.

The stipulations contained in the present article shall not impair the territorial rights of either republic within its established limits.

ARTICLE VIII

Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of the United States, as defined by the present treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof, and removing the proceeds wherever they please, without their being subjected, on this account, to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

Those who shall prefer to remain in the said territories may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens, or acquire those of citizens of the United States. But they shall be under the obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty; and those who shall remain in the said territories after the expiration of that year, without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans, shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States.

In the said territories, property of every kind, now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of ARTICLE IX [modified by the Protocol of Queréretaro]

The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States. and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the mean time, shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without; restriction.

ARTICLE X  [Stricken out by the United States Amendments]

Article XI

Considering that a great part of the territories, which, by the present treaty, are to be comprehended for the future within the limits of the United States, is now occupied by savage tribes, who will hereafter be under the exclusive control of the Government of the United States, and whose incursions within the territory of Mexico would be prejudicial in the extreme, it is solemnly agreed that all such incursions shall be forcibly restrained by the Government of the United States whenever this may be necessary; and that when they cannot be prevented, they shall be punished by the said Government, and satisfaction for the same shall be exacted in the same way, and with equal diligence and energy, as if the same incursions were mediated or committed within its own territory, against its own citizens.

It shall not be lawful, under any pretext whatever, for any inhabitant of the United States to purchase or acquire any Mexican, or any foreigner residing in Mexico, who may have been captured by Indians inhabiting the territory of either of the two republics; nor to purchase or acquire horses, mules, cattle, or property of any kind, stolen within Mexican territory by such Indians.

And in the event of any person or persons, captured within Mexican territory by Indians, being carried into the territory of the United States, the Government of the latter engages and binds itself, in the most solemn manner, so soon as it shall know of such captives being within its territory, and shall be able so to do, through the faithful exercise of its influence and power, to rescue them and return them to their country, or deliver them to the agent or representative of the Mexican Government. The Mexican authorities will, as far as practicable, give to the Government of the United States notice of such captures; and its agents shall pay the expenses incurred in the maintenance and transmission of the rescued captives; who, in the mean time, shall be treated with the utmost hospitality by the American authorities at the place where they may be. But if the Government of the United States, before receiving such notice from Mexico, should obtain intelligence, through any other channel, of the existence of Mexican captives within its territory, it will proceed forthwith to effect their release and delivery to the Mexican agent, as above stipulated.

For the purpose of giving to these stipulations the fullest possible efficacy, thereby affording the security and redress demanded by their true spirit and intent, the Government of the United States will now and hereafter pass, without unnecessary delay, and always vigilantly enforce, such laws as the nature of the subject may require. And, finally, the sacredness of this obligation shall never be lost sight of by the said Government, when providing for the removal of the Indians from any portion of the said territories, or for its being settled by citizens of the United States; but, on the contrary, special care shall then be taken not to place its Indian occupants under the necessity of seeking new homes, by committing those invasions which the United States have solemnly obliged themselves to restrain.

ARTICLE XII

In consideration of the extension acquired by the boundaries of the United States, as defined in the fifth article of the present treaty, the Government of the United States engages to pay to that of the Mexican Republic the sum of fifteen millions of dollars.

Immediately after the treaty shall have been duly ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic, the sum of three millions of dollars shall be paid to the said Government by that of the United States, at the city of Mexico, in the gold or silver coin of Mexico. The remaining twelve millions of dollars shall be paid at the same place, and in the same coin, in annual installments of three millions of dollars each, together with interest on the same at the rate of six per centum per annum. This interest shall begin to run upon the whole sum of twelve millions from the day of the ratification of the present treaty by the Mexican Government, and the first of the installments shall be paid at the expiration of one year from the same day. Together with each annual installment, as it falls due, the whole interest accruing on such installment from the beginning shall also be paid.

ARTICLE XIII

The United States engage, moreover, to assume and pay to the claimants all the amounts now due them, and those hereafter to become due, by reason of the claims already liquidated and decided against the Mexican Republic, under the conventions between the two republics severally concluded on the eleventh day of April, eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, and on the thirtieth day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-three; so that the Mexican Republic shall be absolutely exempt, for the future, from all expense whatever on account of the said claims.

ARTICLE XIV

The United States do furthermore discharge the Mexican Republic from all claims of citizens of the United States, not heretofore decided against the Mexican Government, which may have arisen previously to the date of the signature of this treaty; which discharge shall be final and perpetual, whether the said claims be rejected or be allowed by the board of commissioners provided for in the following article, and whatever shall be the total amount of those allowed.

ARTICLE XV

The United States, exonerating Mexico from all demands on account of the claims of their citizens mentioned in the preceding article, and considering them entirely and forever canceled, whatever their amount may be, undertake to make satisfaction for the same, to an amount not exceeding three and one-quarter millions of dollars. To ascertain the validity and amount of those claims, a board of commissioners shall be established by the Government of the United States, whose awards shall be final and conclusive; provided that, in deciding upon the validity of each claim, the board shall be guided and governed by the principles and rules of decision prescribed by the first and fifth articles of the unratified convention, concluded at the city of Mexico on the twentieth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three; and in no case shall an award be made in favour of any claim not embraced by these principles and rules.

If, in the opinion of the said board of commissioners or of the claimants, any books, records, or documents, in the possession or power of the Government of the Mexican Republic, shall be deemed necessary to the just decision of any claim, the commissioners, or the claimants through them, shall, within such period as Congress may designate, make an application in writing for the same, addressed to the Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs, to be transmitted by the Secretary of State of the United States; and the Mexican Government engages, at the earliest possible moment after the receipt of such demand, to cause any of the books, records, or documents so specified, which shall be in their possession or power (or authenticated copies or extracts of the same), to be transmitted to the said Secretary of State, who shall immediately deliver them over to the said board of commissioners; provided that no such application shall be made by or at the instance of any claimant, until the facts which it is expected to prove by such books, records, or documents, shall have been stated under oath or affirmation.

ARTICLE XVI

Each of the contracting parties reserves to itself the entire right to fortify whatever point within its territory it may judge proper so to fortify for its security.

ARTICLE XVII

The treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, concluded at the city of Mexico, on the fifth day of April, A. D. 1831, between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, except the additional article, and except so far as the stipulations of the said treaty may be incompatible with any stipulation contained in the present treaty, is hereby revived for the period of eight years from the day of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, with the same force and virtue as if incorporated therein; it being understood that each of the contracting parties reserves to itself the right, at any time after the said period of eight years shall have expired, to terminate the same by giving one year’s notice of such intention to the other party.

ARTICLE XVIII

All supplies whatever for troops of the United States in Mexico, arriving at ports in the occupation of such troops previous to the final evacuation thereof, although subsequently to the restoration of the custom-houses at such ports, shall be entirely exempt from duties and charges of any kind; the Government of the United States hereby engaging and pledging its faith to establish and vigilantly to enforce, all possible guards for securing the revenue of Mexico, by preventing the importation, under cover of this stipulation, of any articles other than such, both in kind and in quantity, as shall really be wanted for the use and consumption of the forces of the United States during the time they may remain in Mexico. To this end it shall be the duty of all officers and agents of the United States to denounce to the Mexican authorities at the respective ports any attempts at a fraudulent abuse of this stipulation, which they may know of, or may have reason to suspect, and to give to such authorities all the aid in their power with regard thereto; and every such attempt, when duly proved and established by sentence of a competent tribunal, They shall be punished by the confiscation of the property so attempted to be fraudulently introduced.

ARTICLE XIX

With respect to all merchandise, effects, and property whatsoever, imported into ports of Mexico, whilst in the occupation of the forces of the United States, whether by citizens of either republic, or by citizens or subjects of any neutral nation, the following rules shall be observed:

(1) All such merchandise, effects, and property, if imported previously to the restoration of the custom-houses to the Mexican authorities, as stipulated for in the third article of this treaty, shall be exempt from confiscation, although the importation of the same be prohibited by the Mexican tariff.

(2) The same perfect exemption shall be enjoyed by all such merchandise, effects, and property, imported subsequently to the restoration of the custom-houses, and previously to the sixty days fixed in the following article for the coming into force of the Mexican tariff at such ports respectively; the said merchandise, effects, and property being, however, at the time of their importation, subject to the payment of duties, as provided for in the said following article.

(3) All merchandise, effects, and property described in the two rules foregoing shall, during their continuance at the place of importation, and upon their leaving such place for the interior, be exempt from all duty, tax, or imposts of every kind, under whatsoever title or denomination. Nor shall they be there subject to any charge whatsoever upon the sale thereof. (4) All merchandise, effects, and property, described in the first and second rules, which shall have been removed to any place in the interior, whilst such place was in the occupation of the forces of the United States, shall, during their continuance therein, be exempt from all tax upon the sale or consumption thereof, and from every kind of impost or contribution, under whatever title or denomination.

(5) But if any merchandise, effects, or property, described in the first and second rules, shall be removed to any place not occupied at the time by the forces of the United States, they shall, upon their introduction into such place, or upon their sale or consumption there, be subject to the same duties which, under the Mexican laws, they would be required to pay in such cases if they had been imported in time of peace, through the maritime custom-houses, and had there paid the duties conformably with the Mexican tariff.

(6) The owners of all merchandise, effects, or property, described in the first and second rules, and existing in any port of Mexico, shall have the right to reship the same, exempt from all tax, impost, or contribution whatever.

With respect to the metals, or other property, exported from any Mexican port whilst in the occupation of the forces of the United States, and previously to the restoration of the custom-house at such port, no person shall be required by the Mexican authorities, whether general or state, to pay any tax, duty, or contribution
ARTICLE XX

Through consideration for the interests of commerce generally, it is agreed, that if less than sixty days should elapse between the date of the signature of this treaty and the restoration of the custom houses, conformably with the stipulation in the third article, in such case all merchandise, effects and property whatsoever, arriving at the Mexican ports after the restoration of the said custom-houses, and previously to the expiration of sixty days after the day of signature of this treaty, shall be admitted to entry; and no other duties shall be levied thereon than the duties established by the tariff found in force at such custom-houses at the time of the restoration of the same. And to all such merchandise, effects, and property, the rules established by the preceding article shall apply.

ARTICLE XXI

If unhappily any disagreement should hereafter arise between the Governments of the two republics, whether with respect to the interpretation of any stipulation in this treaty, or with respect to any other particular concerning the political or commercial relations of the two nations, the said Governments, in the name of those nations, do promise to each other that they will endeavour, in the most sincere and earnest manner, to settle the differences so arising, and to preserve the state of peace and friendship in which the two countries are now placing themselves, using, for this end, mutual representations and pacific negotiations. And if, by these means, they should not be enabled to come to an agreement, a resort shall not, on this account, be had to reprisals, aggression, or hostility of any kind, by the one republic against the other, until the Government of that which deems itself aggrieved shall have maturely considered, in the spirit of peace and good neighbourship, whether it would not be better that such difference should be settled by the arbitration of commissioners appointed on each side, or by that of a friendly nation. And should such course be proposed by either party, it shall be acceded to by the other, unless deemed by it altogether incompatible with the nature of the difference, or the circumstances of the case.

ARTICLE XXII

If (which is not to be expected, and which God forbid) war should unhappily break out between the two republics, they do now, with a view to such calamity, solemnly pledge themselves to each other and to the world to observe the following rules; absolutely where the nature of the subject permits, and as closely as possible in all cases where such absolute observance shall be impossible:

(1) The merchants of either republic then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain twelve months (for those dwelling in the interior), and six months (for those dwelling at the seaports) to collect their debts and settle their affairs; during which periods they shall enjoy the same protection, and be on the same footing, in all respects, as the citizens or subjects of the most friendly nations; and, at the expiration thereof, or at any time before, they shall have full liberty to depart, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance, conforming therein to the same laws which the citizens or subjects of the most friendly nations are required to conform to. Upon the entrance of the armies of either nation into the territories of the other, women and children, ecclesiastics, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, merchants, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all persons whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments, unmolested in their persons. Nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their cattle taken, nor their fields wasted, by the armed force into whose power, by the events of war, they may happen to fall; but if the necessity arise to take anything from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at an equitable price. All churches, hospitals, schools, colleges, libraries, and other establishments for charitable and beneficent purposes, shall be respected, and all persons connected with the same protected in the discharge of their duties, and the pursuit of their vocations.

(2) In order that the fate of prisoners of war may be alleviated all such practices as those of sending them into distant, inclement or unwholesome districts, or crowding them into close and noxious places, shall be studiously avoided. They shall not be confined in dungeons, prison ships, or prisons; nor be put in irons, or bound or otherwise restrained in the use of their limbs. The officers shall enjoy liberty on their paroles, within convenient districts, and have comfortable quarters; and the common soldiers shall be dispose( in cantonments, open and extensive enough for air and exercise and lodged in barracks as roomy and good as are provided by the party in whose power they are for its own troops. But if any office shall break his parole by leaving the district so assigned him, o any other prisoner shall escape from the limits of his cantonment after they shall have been designated to him, such individual, officer, or other prisoner, shall forfeit so much of the benefit of this article as provides for his liberty on parole or in cantonment. And if any officer so breaking his parole or any common soldier so escaping from the limits assigned him, shall afterwards be found in arms previously to his being regularly exchanged, the person so offending shall be dealt with according to the established laws of war. The officers shall be daily furnished, by the party in whose power they are, with as many rations, and of the same articles, as are allowed either in kind or by commutation, to officers of equal rank in its own army; and all others shall be daily furnished with such ration as is allowed to a common soldier in its own service; the value of all which supplies shall, at the close of the war, or at periods to be agreed upon between the respective commanders, be paid by the other party, on a mutual adjustment of accounts for the subsistence of prisoners; and such accounts shall not be mingled with or set off against any others, nor the balance due on them withheld, as a compensation or reprisal for any cause whatever, real or pretended Each party shall be allowed to keep a commissary of prisoners, appointed by itself, with every cantonment of prisoners, in possession of the other; which commissary shall see the prisoners as often as he pleases; shall be allowed to receive, exempt from all duties a taxes, and to distribute, whatever comforts may be sent to them by their friends; and shall be free to transmit his reports in open letters to the party by whom he is employed.

And it is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending the solemn covenant contained in this article. On the contrary, the state of war is precisely that for which it is provided; and, during which, its stipulations are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged obligations under the law of nature or nations.

ARTICLE XXIII

This treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof; and by the President of the Mexican Republic, with the previous approbation of its general Congress; and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the City of Washington, or at the seat of Government of Mexico, in four months from the date of the signature hereof, or sooner if practicable.

In faith whereof we, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have signed this treaty of peace, friendship, limits, and settlement, and have hereunto affixed our seals respectively. Done in quintuplicate, at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the second day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight.

Article IX was modified and Article X were stricken by the US Congress. Here are the original articles.

In addition, there is an explanation or agreement of why the articles where stricken which is known as the protocol of Querétaro

ARTICLE IX

The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding Article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States. In the mean time, they shall be maintained and protected in the enjoyment of their liberty, their property, and the civil rights now vested in them according to the Mexican laws.
With respect to political rights, their condition shall be on an equality with that of the inhabitants of the other territories of the United States; and at least equally good as that of the inhabitants of Louisiana and the Floridas, when these provinces, by transfer from the French Republic and the Crown of Spain, became territories of the United States.

The same most ample guaranty shall be enjoyed by all ecclesiastics and religious corporations or communities, as well in the discharge of the offices of their ministry, as in the enjoyment of their property of every kind, whether individual or corporate. This guaranty shall embrace all temples, houses and edifices dedicated to the Roman Catholic worship; as well as all property destined to its [sic] support, or to that of schools, hospitals and other foundations for charitable or beneficent purposes. No property of this nature shall be considered as having become the property of the American Government, or as subject to be, by it, disposed of or diverted to other uses.

Finally, the relations and communication between the Catholics living in the territories aforesaid, and their respective ecclesiastical authorities, shall be open, free and exempt from all hindrance whatever, even although such authorities should reside within the limits of the Mexican Republic, as defined by this treaty; and this freedom shall continue, so long as a new demarcation of ecclesiastical districts shall not have been made, conformably with the laws of the Roman Catholic Church.

ARTICLE X

All grants of land made by the Mexican government or by the competent authorities, in territories previously appertaining to Mexico, and remaining for the future within the limits of the United States, shall be respected as valid, to the same extent that the same grants would be valid, to the said territories had remained within the limits of Mexico. But the grantees of lands in Texas, put in possession thereof, who, by reason of the circumstances of the country since the beginning of the troubles between Texas and the Mexican Government, may have been prevented from fulfilling all the conditions of their grants, shall be under the obligation to fulfill the said conditions within the periods limited in the same respectively; such periods to be now counted from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty: in default of which the said grants shall not be obligatory upon the State of Texas, in virtue of the stipulations contained in this Article.

The foregoing stipulation in regard to grantees of land in Texas, is extended to all grantees of land in the territories aforesaid, elsewhere than in Texas, put in possession under such grants; and, in default of the fulfillment of the conditions of any such grant, within the new period, which, as is above stipulated, begins with the day of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, the same shall be null and void.

THE PROTOCOL OF QUERÉTARO

In the city of Querétaro on the twenty sixth of the month of May eighteen hundred and forty-eight at a conference between Their Excellencies Nathan Clifford and Ambrose H. Sevier Commissioners of the United States of America, with full powers from their Government to make to the Mexican Republic suitable explanations in regard to the amendments which the Senate and Government of the said United States have made in the treaty of peace, friendship, limits and definitive settlement between the two Republics, signed in Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the second day of February of the present year, and His Excellency Don Luis de la Rosa, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Mexico, it was agreed, after adequate conversation respecting the changes alluded to, to record in the present protocol the following explanations which Their aforesaid Excellencies the Commissioners gave in the name of their Government and in fulfillment of the Commission conferred upon them near the Mexican Republic.

First.

The american Government by suppressing the IXth article of the Treaty of Guadalupe and substituting the III article of the Treaty of Louisiana did not intend to diminish in any way what was agreed upon by the aforesaid article IXth in favor of the inhabitants of the territories ceded by Mexico. Its understanding that all of that agreement is contained in the IIId article of the Treaty of Louisiana. In consequence, all the privileges and guarantees, civil, political and religious, which would have been possessed by the inhabitants of the ceded territories, if the IXth article of the Treaty had been retained, will be enjoyed by them without any difference under the article which has been substituted.

Second.

The American Government, by suppressing the Xth article of the Treaty of Guadalupe did not in any way intend to annul the grants of lands made by Mexico in the ceded territories. These grants, notwithstanding the suppression of the article of the Treaty, preserve the legal value which they may possess; and the grantees may cause their legitimate titles to be acknowledged before the american tribunals.

Conformably to the law of the United States, legitimate titles to every description of property personal and real, existing in the ceded territories, are those which were legitimate titles under the Mexican law in California and New Mexico up to the 13th of May 1846, and in Texas up to the 2d March 1836.

Third.

The Government of the United States by suppressing the concluding paragraph of article XIIth of the Treaty, did not intend to deprive the Mexican Republic of the free and unrestrained faculty of ceding, conveying or transferring at any time (as it may judge best) the sum of the twelve [sic] millions of dollars which the same Government of the United States is to deliver in the places designated by the amended article.

And these explanations having been accepted by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Mexican Republic, he declared in name of his Government that with the understanding conveyed by them, the same Government would proceed to ratify the Treaty of Guadalupe as modified by the Senate and Government of the United States. In testimony of which their Excellencies the aforesaid Commissioners and the Minister have signed and sealed in quintuplicate the present protocol.

NNR 74.049 July 26, 1848 act regulating position of officers and awarding extra pay to disbanded troops

The following is a copy of the Bill which passed both Houses of Congress on Tuesday, 18th inst., regulating the position of certain officers of the Army, and awarding three month’s extra pay to the disbanded troops:

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act supplemental to an act entitled 'An act providing for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico,'" and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proviso of the first section of an act approved the eighteenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, in the following words: "That when the war with Mexico shall be terminated by a definitive treaty of peace, duly concluded and ratified, the number of major generals in the army shall be reduced to one, and the number of brigadier generals shall be reduced to two; and the President of the United States is authorised and directed to select from the whole number which may then be in office, without regard to the date of their commissions, the number to be retained, and cause the remainder to be discharged from the service of the United States," be and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That no vacancy happening in the grade of general officer shall be filled up until the number is reduced to one major general and two brigadier generals.
SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much of the existing law as requires the discharge, at the close of the war, with Mexico, of one additional major to each of the regiments of dragoons, artillery, infantry, and riflemen in the army of the United States, who were appointed or promoted under the third section of the act passed on the eleventh day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, entitled "An act to raise for a limited time an additional military force, and for other purposes," be and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That so much of said act, passed on the eleventh of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, as requires the discharge, at the close of the war with Mexico, of two additional surgeons and twelve additional assistant surgeons, as authorised by the eighth section of said act: four quartermasters, and ten assistant quartermasters, as authorised by the tenth section of said act; and so much of the act of the third of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, as requires the discharge, at the close of the war with Mexico, of an assistant adjutant general, with the rank, pay, &c. of a lieutenant colonel of cavalry, and two assistant adjutants general, with the brevet rank, pay, &c. of a captain of cavalry, as authorised by the second section of the said act of the third of March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven; and the two deputy paymasters, as authorised by the twelfth section of the last mentioned act, and the two principal musicians allowed to each regiment of artillery by the eighteenth section of the said last mentioned act, be and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That no vacancy happening under the provisions so repealed shall be filled up until further authorised by law: And provided further, That the ten additional paymasters appointed in virtue of the said foregoing act of the 3d March, 1847, shall be retained in service until the 4th day of March, 1849.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all the officers of the old army who received appointments in any of the additional regiments raised for the war with Mexico shall be restored to their former regiments or corps and rank, as additional officers, of the respective grades to which they would have succeeded, and to which they shall now succeed, in virtue of their former commissions: Provided, That such officers so restored shall be reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: And provided, That the next vacancy happening in such grade of such regiment or corps to which they succeed shall not be filled.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates engaged in the military service of the United States in the war with Mexico, and who served out the term of their engagement, or have been or may be honorably discharged; and first to the widows, second to the children, third to the parents, and fourth to the brothers and sisters of such who have been killed in battle, or who died in service, or who, having been honorably discharged, have since died, or may hereafter die, without receiving the three months’ pay herein provided for, shall be entitled to receive three months’ pay: Provided, That this provision of this fifth section shall only apply to those who have been in actual service during the war. NRR 74.049-050 JJuly 26, 1848 arrival of troops from Veracruz at New Orleans

The N. O. Delta of the 6th inst., announces the arrival of the following:

Per ship Palestine, from Vera Cruz—4 companies of the 3d Kentucky Volunteers--300 men.

Per ship Suviah, from Vera Cruz—3 companies of Indiana Volunteers--285 men.

NNR 74.054 July 26, 1848 progress of American troops toward Veracruz for embarkation

By late arrivals from Mexico we learn that nearly all the Volunteers and the ten regiments had reached Vera Cruz, and were rapidly embarking on the transports bound for this and other ports of the United States.

The revolutionary attempt made by Paredes and Jarauta had not disconcerted the government, which appears confident of quelling the insurgents.

The Legislature of Tamaulipas had demanded two millions of dollars from the Federal Government as indemnity for the loss of territory beyond the Rio Grande by the Treaty of Guadaloupe.

The Mexican government has appropriated $300,000 to the relief of Yucatan. Paredes had addressed the States for aid to the 8000 Yucatanese who took refuge in Merida and Campeachy, to escape the Indians.

It is reported from Tampico, that the Mexican government had sent a force to take possession of Tampico, but that the citizens favor the revolutionary movement of Paredes and Jarauta. [TBW]

NNR 74.065 July 26, 1848 further arrival of returning troops at New Orleans

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.--The following vessels arrived at New Orleans, on the 18th ult., from Vera Cruz, with troops:

Ship Masconomo, with six Companies of the 3d regiment U. S. Infantry--17 officers and 577 men.

Brig Milaudon, with two Companies 7th U. S. Infantry.

Steamer A. R. Hetzel, with two Companies of the Voltigeurs.

Barque Leonora, with 160 Quartermaster’s men.
Ship Suffolk, with five Companies 7th U. S. Infantry.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.--The Brig Tasso, Capt. Gray, which arrived from Vera Cruz on the 9th ult., at New Orleans, brought over sixty-seven men, rank and file, of the Ordnance Department, under command of Lieut. Gorgus; and also one battery of mounted howitzers. The following passengers came over in her:

Lieut. Reno, Ordnance Department; Lieuts. Walker, Leigh and Fry, of the Voltigeurs; Capt. Heagh, Q. M. Department; Asst. Surgeon Van Ever, and Passed Midshipman Townsend.

The Barque Pario, having on board three companies U. S. Artillery, (180 in number,) arrived in Hampton Roads on Wednesday evening from Vera Cruz. Seven of the troops died on the passage.

The James L. Day has also arrived and brought the following:

The steamship Jas. L. Day left at Vera Cruz on the 7th, barks Judah Touro, Bruno, and Leonora, and brig Mount Vernon, for this port on the 8th inst. Propellers Gov. Marcy and H. R. Thompson, and Stanton, and Steamers A. R. Hetzel, and Somers, uncertain.

The Steamship Alabama arrived at New Orleans on the 19th ult., with Maj. Gen. Worth, and several officers, of the Inspection, Quartermaster’s, Commissary and Surgeon’s departments, and 430 non-commissioned officers and privates of the 6th Infantry.

The Alabama reports that the 2d and 3d Artillery, sailed for the North direct on the 15th: 4th and 5th Infantry on the 16th for Pass Christian; 8th Infantry on the 16th, for Jefferson Barracks, via New Orleans.

The Steamship Virginia, also arrived on the same day with the Voltigeur Regiment. Also, the Steamboat E. A. Ogden arrived with one company of Alabama Cavalry, [74 men] from the Brazos, and 87 discharged soldiers and Quartermaster’s men.

The brig Tally-Ho, Capt. Elliot, from Brazos Santiago, arrived at Hampton Roads, on Saturday, with a portion of the North Carolina Regiment. [TBW]

NBR 74.068 August 2, 1848 From the Rio Grande, evacuation of Mexican territory

From the Rio Grande- The Schooner Maj. Barbour arrived on the 4d. inst. At New Orleans, from the Brazos. From the Delta, we take the following items of news brought by her:

In obedience to General Orders already published, our army is rapidly evacuating the Mexican territory on this line. On Wednesday, the 14th inst., the depot and encampment as Saltillo were finally broken up. The troops halted at Monterey, but the wagon train with stores and ordnance reached Camargo on the 18th inst. Monterey will have been evacuated before this time.

Two companies of the 1st Dragoons, under the command of Capt. Rucker, have left Monterey for Santa Fe, by way of Chihuahua.

Five companies of the 3d. Dragoons, under Col. Butler, left Mier on the 20th inst. For Matamoras, and will encamp at Palo Alto. Capt. Wilder’s Company, 10th Infantry, will remain at Mier until all the public stores can be withdrawn. Three companies of the 10th Infantry left on the 19th inst. For Matamoras.

A Court Martial convened at Mier on the 16th inst., for the trial of Capt. Petigru, of the 3d. Dragoons, upon various charges. Lieut. Col. Norvell, 10th Infantry, President; Asst. Surgeon Abadie, Judge Advocate. The Court adjourned on the 16th. Result not known.

A Military Commission, for the trial of various offenders, met at Camargo on the 21st instant, Col. Norvell, President.

The Mexican authorities at Camargo have an order ready for promulgation, requiring all Americans intending to remain in the place to register their names and occupations. Several American merchants will remain permanently in Camargo, and several in Monterey.

It is said the 2d Dragoons will be stationed along the Rio Grande, at different points up to the Paso del Norte. Should Congress retain the 3d Dragoons in service, there may be a change of destination in different corps. [KAS]

NNR 74.096 Aug. 9, 1848 complaints of the company of Saint Patrick

MEXICO.--The New Orleans editors have received files of papers from the city of Mexico, to the 4th ult., inclusive. Nothing had been done by either Bustamente on one side, or Paredes on the other, to bring their respective forces in conflict, so as to decide the fate of the late revolutionary movement in Guanajuato.

Letters had been received by Herrera’s government from Bustamente, date the 29th ult., apprising the authorities that a junction had been effected between him and General Cortazar, which had raised the number of troops under his command to 3000 men. On the 27th, a messenger had arrived in Bustamente’s camp, from Paredes, making the former various propositions, tempting him, as it appears, from his loyalty.---The reply to them was, that Bustamente would not deviate an iota from the letter of his instructions, and that he was firm in his adherence to the government.

A private letter from Guanajuato, states that the movements of the rebels have been paralyzed by a tremendous fall of rain, which had deluged the roads, making them nearly impassable. They had not moved from the centre of the city, and Paredes had obtained no fresh accessions to his forces. The people of property at Guanajuato, feared that their houses would be pillaged by the leperos there, a considerable number of whom had been armed by the rebel officers. The letter adds that it is probable a collision had by that time, the 4th ult., taken place between the hostile forces, and expresses the hope, that he shall soon be able to announce the restoration of peace, order, and respect to the laws. Don Juan Cardenas, Deputy to the Legislature of Tamaulipas, has been appointed Governor of that State.

Lieutenant Tilden, who is in prison in the city of Mexico, for offences committed against the public peace, has attempted suicide twice---first by hanging himself, and after, by throwing himself out of the window. It is recommended that he be conducted to the nearest seaport and sent out of the country.

The Monitor says, we are aware that a resident Minister from the United States is in the capital, but has not presented his credentials; and it is inferred that they will not be verified until after an Envoy be nominated from Mexico to Washington.

The Company of St. Patrick have made grave complaints against their commanders, Schafino and Moreno, and as the Monitor observes, these men, deserving a thousand considerations at the hands of the nation, their grievances should be immediately redressed.

The Monitor expresses sanguine hopes that Paredes and Jarauta, between whom violent feuds exist, will soon be put down. The government is exhorted to punish them severely, in the event of their capture, and by the firmness and energy, thus strike a salutary terror into the breasts of all who meditate treason against the State. [TBW]

NNR 74.097 Aug. 16, 1848 Veracruz surrendered to Mexican authorities
New Orleans dates of the 6th and 8th inst., contain the following intelligence:

General Persifer F. Smith arrived on the 5th inst., in the Alabama, and was received on the 7th inst., by a grand demonstration of welcome.

The City of Vera Cruz was surrendered to the Mexican authorities on the 1st inst. Every thing passed off quietly.

The intelligence from Vera Cruz is to the 2d inst., and from Mexico to the 31st ult.

Paredes had still succeeded in eluding the pursuit of the officers of Government, who were endeavoring to arrest him.

The citizens of Mexico were urging Government to recal Gen. Bustamente, to institute inquiries as to why Paredes was suffered to escape.

The Cotton market was quiet, the Europa’s letters having been received--prices were full. Other articles remain unchanged. [TBW]

NRR 74.097 Aug. 16, 1848 number of troops departing Veracruz in six weeks

According to an official statement published in the N. O. Picayune, the number of U. S. troops, quartermaster’s men, &c., which left Vera Cruz from the 30th May to the 14th of July, was 26,500 men. [TBW]

NRR 74.112 Aug. 16, 1848 Veracruz surrendered to the Mexicans

FROM MEXICO.--Papers from New Orleans to the 2d, and telegraphic advices to the 6th, bring the following intelligence from Mexico.

The Steamer Alabama, from Vera Cruz, arrived on the 5th, bringing dates from the Capital to the 29th ult.

The city of Vera Cruz was fully surrendered to the Mexicans on the 1st inst. Gen. Smith and the rear guard of the army embarked on that day for the United States.

Gen. S. arrived at New Orleans in the Alabama, and a brilliant public reception was to be given to him on the 7th.

Official and private letters received in the city of Mexico by express from Guanajuato, announce that on the 18th ult. the troops of Bustamente gained an important triumph over the insurgents. Gen. Minon submitted a plan of attack, which was approved. The attack was made and the principal points, defended by the insurgents, carried.

Father Jarauta was made prisoner, and in obedience to orders of the War Department he was immediately shot. When he was apprised of his approaching execution, he demanded an interview with Gen. Minon, in which he represented to him that Paredes had in his hands several prisoners, all of whom would be shot were the life of his second in command to be taken. He tried other means of saving his life, but the orders of the Department were too positive, and were carried rigidly into execution. It is represented that this act of justice has entirely disconcerted Paredes and his followers, but this comes to us from a government source. The official dispatches mention that the scoundrel Jarauta partook of the last sacraments of the church prior to his death with extreme fervor. His remains were buried with the honors of war due to his rank.

Bustamente entered the city of Guanajuanto the evening of the 18th without encountering any resistance, as the forces of the insurgents were already dispersed, their leaders having concealed themselves as soon as they heard of the execution of Jarauta. A few prisoners were made but none of them of note, all the principals having escaped save Jarauta. The Government is urged to the most diligence to ferret out the fugitives, that they may be brought to strict account for their treason.
The latest dispatch from Bustamente is dated the 19th. In it he says that Paredes, with a few attendants, fled early in the action, and that he had dispatched troops in pursuit of him. A body of troops had been ordered to Lagos and another to Aguas Calientes, to arrest Paredes if possible, and to hold in check any who might be disposed still to assist his waning fortunes. Capt. Scott, of the Fanny, informs us that when he left Vera Cruz a report was current there that Paredes had been taken and would be shot.

We have before us Minon’s plan of attack and Bustamente’s dispatches, but our readers would derive little satisfaction from their perusal. They will be able to judge of the desperate nature of the conflict between the Government troops and the insurgents when we inform them that on the part of the former three men were killed and eight wounded.

The papers of San Luis give accounts of successes obtained over the insurgent Indians near the hacienda of Tapauco on the 12th ult. A body of 400 were defeated with a loss of of 30 killed in battle, and some prisoners were made who were immediately shot.

There is a letter in the Monitor from the Upper California, which represents that Territory as exceedingly flourishing, now that it has ceased to belong to Mexico.

The Number of Deputies to the Congress in Mexico not being sufficient to constitute a quorum, the Government had resolved upon the substitutes to take the oaths of office.

A letter from Durango, dated June 23d, says: “There are 800 soldiers here, and among them 300 or 400 American deserters. Gen. Urrea is commandant. There are 800 or 1000 Indians in the State who are inhabitants are much alarmed, the Indians having cut off communications by the road.”

The papers announce the death in the city of Mexico, on the 19th, of John Henderson, a British subject, who had resided there many years and accumulated a large fortune. [TBW]

NNR 74.114 Aug. 23, 1848 voltigeurs arrive at Fort McHenry

The Regiment of Voltigeurs arrived at Fort McHenry on Thursday last.

By the Palmetto, from Brazos at New Orleans, Capt. West, Capt. P. E. Connor, Lieut. Gardner, Dr. Talbot, all of the Watson Dragoons; C. Jenkins, Mr. Hughes, R. Watson, W. H. Gardner, Capt. Reed and lady, Messrs. Magee, T. Williams Colquhon, Eaton, Littleton, Staunouire, and 33 Watson dragoons, from Tampico, and 8 Quartermaster’s men. [TBW]

NNR 74.114 Aug. 23, 1848 arrivals of returning troops at New Orleans, at New York City

At New York.--The Maid of Orleans arrived yesterday from New Orleans, with companies A, D, F, G, and a part of company E, all of the Ninth Infantry, consisting of three hundred and nine men, rank and file. The M. of O. was bound to Newport, but owing to head winds, she put into this port to land the troops, who will be forwarded to Newport by steamboat.

The ship Rob Roy arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, having on board companies B, D, and K, of the 2d regiment of Artillery, numbering 226 men.--N. Y. Herald, 19th inst. [TBW]

NNR 74.115 Aug. 23, 1848 order respecting claims of volunteers

ORDER OF CLAIM
Where the letters testamentary or of administration are legally granted, such legal representative will have preference. Where the sum due exceeds one hundred dollars, it will be paid to the legal representative alone, no matter who may be distributee.

If the deceased died unmarried, payment will be made first to the father; second, to the mother; third to the brothers and sisters collectively, and lastly, to the heirs general; each class claiming where those preceding are dead.

If the deceased had been married, then following will be the order of claim--first, the widow; second, child or children, (if minors, the guardian;) third, the father; fourth, the mother; fifth, the brothers and sisters collectively; and lastly, their heirs general.

If there be more than one brother, or sister, or child, or heir general, should the money be due to one of those classes, letters of administration must in all cases be taken out.

NNR 74.142 Aug. 30, 1848 ceremony of the surrender of Veracruz

FROM MEXICO.--In the New Orleans papers of the 18th July, we find news from the capital of Mexico to the 6th, brought by the propeller Massachusetts, which left Vera Cruz on the 11th. We copy from the Picayune.

The papers give no news of the military operations of the parties contending for power except that the forces of Bustamente and Cortazar had formed a junction and amounted in all to about three thousand wherewith to attack the insurgents in Guanajuato. Down to the 6th, neither the papers of the capital nor the government had received late dispatches from the seat of operations, and the government had complained of Bustamente’s remissness in keeping it informed, as he had been charged to do.

Bustamente had been also censured for holding the least parley with Paredes. To this he answered that on the 27th June an envoy from Paredes had presented himself and submitted certain propositions. Bustamente’s reply was that he would depart in no particular from the literal tenor of the orders of his government, or in words to that effect. These orders are that the insurgents must submit unconditionally or the laws must take their course. This language is the proper one for a righteous government to hold with rebels, and looks dignified and confident on the part of President Herrera; but the silence of Bustamente is ill-boding. The latest dispatch from him is dated June 29, and five or six days later were due. There was a rumor in the city of Vera Cruz on the 11th that news had positively reached there that Paredes had overthrown the army of the government and was in full march upon the city of Mexico. This was the town talk in all quarters, our correspondent writes, and was so confidently repeated that he should feel himself constrained to believe it, did he not suppose that his own advices from the capital were as late as those of other people.

Moreover he writes that on the night of the 10th inst. there did reach Vera Cruz positive news that Paredes was within one league of the city of Guadalajara, and that little or no resistance to his entrance there was anticipated. This seems extremely probable and is totally inconsistent with the other rumors, for Guadalajara is as far west of Guanajuato--the headquarters of Paredes--as the city of Mexico is east; the latter being about a hundred miles farther south than either of the others. Guadalajara is the capital of the large state of Jalisco, and is a rich and populous city. It was the former home of Paredes, and here he nursed the revolution by which a few years ago he entirely prostrated the power of Santa Anna, when the latter’s was at its height. If Paredes found himself yet unable to march directly upon the capital, and give battle to the governmental troops, nothing seems more natural than this retrograde movement upon Guadalajara. He would thus gain time, other discontented spirits would join his standard, and his resources would be increased rather than diminished, for the government has too many difficulties to contend with in other quarters to give him vigorous pursuit.

The custom-house at Vera Cruz was turned over to the Mexican authorities on the 11th inst. at noon. An order from the Mexican treasury department is published in the last number of the Arco Iris, the substance of which is as follows: As the ports are restored to Mexico, her revenue laws of 1845 will go at once into effect, and all vessels and cargoes arriving be liable to their pains and penalties. But in consideration of the interests of commerce which may suffer by the sudden change, all vessels with lawful cargoes arriving at ports of Mexico with three months of the date of the order (June 14th) without proper manifests and other necessary documents, instead of being seized, shall be allowed to enter and discharge, giving bonds with sufficient security to Mexican commissioners, to pay all duties and charges and abide the decision of the department in each case. And further, all contraband goods arriving within said three months, instead of being confiscated, may be re-exported upon the same vessel, (or any other leaving sooner,) upon giving proper security that such exportation be actually made and no abuse committed.

The roads in Mexico, in every direction, seem to be swept by highwaymen. We open not a paper that does not record several scandalous robberies of coaches.

The famous contra guerrillero, Roque Miranda, is in prison in Mexico. The notorious robber, La Chince is also in the hands of the government.

The Titan sailed from Vera Cruz for Yucatan on the 17th inst. with $18,000, 500 guns, and 50,000 cartridges for the protection of the country from the Indians. The money was furnished by the Mexican government; the arms by a gentleman in Vera Cruz. [TBW]

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.--The bark Hahnemann, of this port, Hallett, arrived at Fortress Monroe, on Saturday morning last, 31 days from Brasos Santiago, with companies I and C infantry and artillery, under the command of Majors Webster and Scott, and Lieuts. Bowen and Pattison. Surgeon,--Seneca.--Norfolk Beacon. [TBW]

The transport-ship IOWA, arrived at New York on Saturday from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 1st inst., having on board a detachment of the First Regiment of U. S. Artillery, 246 men, commanded by Captain George Nauman. [TBW]

The National Intelligencer, in commenting upon the platform adopted by the Buffalo Convention, says:--“It cannot escape the observation of any attentive reader, that these resolution, very positive and dogmatical about abstractions of comparatively small or at least remote consequence, carefully avoid any commitment upon the actual practical issues between the two great parties of the country; making no allusion even to the Mexican war for the acquisition of foreign territory within which they contrive to build up their abstractions; to the Executive usurpations which have sprung out of it; to the lust of dominion which has engendered; to the untold millions of money which it will be necessary to raise to pay the debt which it has created; to the twenty thousand valuable lives which have thus been sacrificed to a bad ambition, &c. What shall we say of a political creed in which all these and many other equal enormities of mis-government count for nothing?” [TBW]

CALIFORNIA.--We have received information from a reliable source, that a large emigration from China may be expected here. The Chinese would be especially invaluable for the introduction and manufacture of silk in this country.

We are happy to be able to state that California continues to be perfectly quiet. Castro has returned and surrendered himself, promising to obey our laws. For more than a year no disorders have occurred. The native Californians are beginning to mingle with our people, and are gradually turning their attention to agriculture. [TBW]

Col. Mason, Governor of California, has issued a requisition for 1000 volunteers, to garrison Mazatlan and other Mexican ports in the South.

Rains have been abundant, and the prospect for good crops is cheering throughout the country.
One of the richest veins of silver are yet discovered, we are told, has been found in the valley of San Jose. [TBW]

NNR 74.208 Sept. 27, 1848 account of the soldiers of the disbanded Saint Patrick company

COMPANY OF ST. PATRICK.—Many of the soldiers of the disbanded company of St. Patrick are wandering about the country, and live by begging, or extortion, when the former does not avail. A certain number of them have been embodied with Mexicans in another corps, but they do not harmonize well together, from their mutual ignorance of each other's languages. It is suggested that another exclusively American corps be organized. [TBW]

NNR 74.240 Oct. 11, 1848 extreme destitution of the Saint Patrick deserters

We are informed that many of the San Patricio deserters are wandering about Vera Cruz in a state of extreme destitution, neither Americans nor Mexicans being willing to aid them. Lieut. Tilden was a passenger on the steamer. He had a passport for Havana from the Mexican Government, and took passage for that port, but refused to land there. He came on and landed at Pass Christian, and is supposed to have come to this city in the Mobile boat. [TBW]

NNR 74.243 Oct. 18, 1848 the record of the Cyane in the war against Mexico

THE CYANNE.--This sloop of-war, just arrived from Valparaiso, after a short passage of sixty-two days, has had an active and brilliant cruise. Her crew have been distinguished throughout the war. They assisted at the taking of Monterey, and were in the fights of Com. Stockton, at the Mesa and the Rio Gabriel. They destroyed the gun-boats of the enemy at Guaymas, cut up their shipping in the Gulf of California, blockaded the ports of San Blas and Mazatlan, and were with Com. Shubrick when he took that place. They were in several other engagements. Among the rest, it was the boats of the Cyane that cut out the enemy's brig Condor, in the port of Guaymas, under the fire of their musketry. They have been in seven fights on the shore, and their loss has been one officer and one man killed in battle, with a large number wounded. The Cyanne left the United States in August, 1845. [TBW]

NNR 74.259-260 Oct. 25, 1848 proceedings of citizens of Santa Fe in relation to duties on merchandise exacted

SANTA FE.--The Santa Fe Republican, of the 12th of August, contains the proceeding of merchants and citizens of Santa Fe, in relation to the illegal duties exacted on goods imported into New Mexico. Wm. S. Messervy acted as President, and Lewis D. Street, as Secretary. Samuel Weatherhead, jr., Sol. P. Sublette, Henry O'Neill, Robert Brent, and George H. Estes, were appointed a committee to report upon the subject before the meeting.

At this and subsequent meetings, a memorial was adopted, and signed by all the merchants and citizens of Santa Fe, in which they ask to be relieved from the payment of the onerous duty. The memorial embodies a resolution, in which the citizens declare "that since New Mexico is an integral portion of the United States, and was such at the time of the introduction of a portion of merchandise into said territory this year, that the recovery of six per centum ad valorem duty on such merchandise will be unjust, if not in violation of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States."

This duty was imposed by an order of General Price, in which an impost duty of six per cent. ad valorem was levied on all merchandise introduced into the territory of New Mexico from and after the 5th day of February, 1848. The memorialists, in their argument, claim that insomuch as there no longer exists a war to be supported, and the territory ceases to be an enemy's country, the duty cannot hold upon goods introduced into the Territory of New Mexico since May 26th, 1848, at which time it became an integral part of the United States. They ask, therefore, to be relieved from the payment of this unequal and unconstitutional tax.

To this communication, Brig. Gen. Price replies stating the circumstances under which the duty was imposed—that it was for the payment of the expenses of the civil government of the Territory—and subsequently submitted to, and approved by the President of the United States, with whom the matter now more properly belongs.

"With this view of the matter, the General is not dispose, however much his private feelings might wish it, to modify or abrogate the existing order; more particularly as it is at present a generally conceived opinion that arrangements have already been perfected by the Government of the United States creating a civil governor for the country, who doubtless is vested with plenary powers for the extension and administration of the Constitution and laws of the United States over a territory which is believed to be an integral part of the United States."

[The expectations of General Price, as well as the citizens of New Mexico, in relation to a civil government for that Territory are, it is know here, doomed to disappointment.]

On the reception of this letter, another meeting of the citizens was called, and the correspondence submitted to them. Thereupon, the following preamble and resolutions was adopted:

WHEREAS all bonds given to the present acting authorities of New Mexico, for the payment of the six per cent. ad valorem on merchandize introduced into the Territory of New Mexico from the United States, after said Territory had become an integral portion of the United States Territory, were given in ignorance of the fact that the said Territory of New Mexico was at the time of the execution of said bonds, a part of the United States territory, and subject to the general laws, and under the protection of the Constitution of the same:

Therefore resolved, That, as American citizens, and on American soil, proud of our birthright, and conscious of our privileges, we will use all fair, and honorable means to resist the payment of what we believe to be unequal and unconstitutional taxation.--St. Louis Rep. [TBW]

NNR 74.306 Nov. 15, 1848 arrival of several companies at New Orleans

Company E, second Artillery, under Captain Garesche, went, by request, up the Rio Grande on the Steamer Col. Hunt, to aid the civil authorities in arresting some gangs of desperadoes that have been infesting the upper counties, and committing serious depredations.

A company of the seventh Infantry, under the command of Major Gatlin, arrived at Baton Rouge, to be stationed there. Major Gatlin relieves Lieut. Dent from the command of that post--that latter going to Jefferson Barracks, Missouri.

The fifth Infantry, under command of Col Miles, encamped opposite Little Rock on the 19th ult. This regiment is en route to Fort Smith, where two of the companies will be stationed; the others are to be detailed to garrison the various military posts on that frontier.

The Fourth Regiment, Colonel Whistler commanding, is about to take post on our northern frontiers, head-quarters at Detroit. First Lieutenant Judah, with one company, will command at Oswego. We bespeak for the gallant Fourth, a warm welcome from all our citizens; they can inscribe on their colors the name of every battle field in Mexico, except Buena Vista, having been the first in and last out.

Late intelligence from Texas informs us that six companies of the third Infantry were encamped near Port Lavacca. The greatest trepidation prevailed at Lavacca previous to the arrival of the troops, lest the Indians should attack and fire the town. Twenty-six murders had been committed by the Indians to that time. [TBW]

NNR 74.316 Nov. 15, 1848 size of the force used by the United States in Mexico

OUR ARMY IN MEXICO.--Few persons have a correct idea of the enormous military force called out by our Government for the invasion of Mexico.
The number of Volunteers called into service in the years 1846 and 1847, were in round numbers seventy-one thousand. Of these there were twelve companies of Ohio Volunteers, which were not marched to Mexico, and several regiments of Texas and Louisiana three months' volunteers, which did not get into Mexico. But more than sixty thousand volunteers were actually marched into Mexico, and shared in the invasion of that country. But if the number of volunteers was great, the number of regulars in proportion to the regular army was greater yet. In May, 1846, the regular army of the United States amounted, in round numbers, to 8,000. Of these 3,540 composed the army of Gen. Taylor on the Rio Grande. But from May, 1836, to January, 1848, 29,000 recruits were added to the army. Of the old soldiers about 6,000 were marched into Mexico; and of the recruits to fill the ranks of the old regiments or the new ones, 26,000 were marched into Mexico by January, 1848. There were in the regular army, enlisted soldiers from May, 1846 to January, 1848, 37,000 men. Of these 32,000 were marched into Mexico.

The whole number of Regular soldiers enlisted, and Volunteers called out, amounted in two years to the number of 107,000. And of these ninety-two thousand were marched into Mexico. Such was the tremendous physical array of men, arms and skill, which the Government of the United States called into action to crush its neighbor in the South.---Atlas.

NNR 74.386 Dec. 20, 1848 awards to private soldiers for distinguished service

DISTINGUISHED PRIVATES.--The Adjutant General of the United States' army has published a list of private soldiers of the army, numbering 191, whose recommendations have been received since the publication of "General Orders" No. 32, of June 26, 1848, and on whom the President has been pleased to confer "certificates of merit," pursuant to the provisions of the 17th section of the act approved March 3, 1847, for distinguished services in Mexico, in the battles of Cerro Gordo, Chapultepec, Contreras, Molino del Rey, Churubusco, &c. The list includes privates of companies A, B, C, F, I, K, of 2d dragoons, company F of mounted riflemen, company H of 3d artillery, companies A, B, C, F, H, I, of 4th infantry, companies A, B, C, E, F, G, H, I, K, of 5th infantry, and Wendle Hull, Sap. and Miner engineers.

The extra pay of $2 per month, in virtue of the certificate of merit, will commence at the date of the battle or engagement in which the certificate was won, and continue while the soldier is in service, unless promoted to the rank of a commissioned officer. The certificates of deceased soldiers will be held for the benefit of their heirs, and of discharged soldiers, until claimed by them. A deserter forfeits all claim to certificate of merit. [TBW]

NNR 74.402 Dec. 27, 1848 regulars and volunteers in service at close of the war with Mexico

THE U. S. ARMY.--The official report of the Adjutant General of the United States, shows the authorized number of troops of the line, consisting of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, (fifteen regiments,) to be 8,787 non-commissioned officers and men. The actual force in service, non-commissioned officers, and men, is 8,458--leaving a deficiency of 329 to be recruited. The number of commissioned officers is 865, without including seventeen military storekeepers. The number of mechanics and laborers belonging to the ordnance department, and now in service, is 495. The accompanying returns show the number of regulars and volunteer troops in service at the termination of the late war, as follows:

| Commissioned officers | 1,338 |

---
Non-commissioned officers and men 22,695
Aggregate regulars 24,033

Volunteers.
Commissioned officers 1,527
Non-commissioned officers and men 21,590
Aggregate volunteers, 23,117
Aggregate regulars and volunteers, 47,150

Of the regular force in service at the close of the war, (enlisted men,) 9,418 were recruited for five years, and 13,277 for the period of the war.

Foreign Intelligence, Later From Mexico and China

Arrival of Mr. Cushing-Progress of the revolution-Santa Anna deposed as President-Gen. Herrera temporary President-A new Government organized, and Santa Anna at the head of the Army.

We learn, (say the New York Journal of Commerce) from Captain Briscoe of the marquee Hogenia, from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 12th instant, that the principal towns, and almost the whole country, have pronounced against Santa Anna, who with a small force was a Queretaro.
