or to his bravery in the fight. Yet all his have most of the letter writers done. Although many of them perhaps for the first time have had an opportunity of seeing a squadron marshalled in the field, they exhibit not the least hesitation in criticising and condemning the movements of some of their superiors, for the purpose of exalting the reputations of others, towards whom their feelings are of a more friendly kind. When Gen. Taylor, for example, sanctioned the terms of capitulation agreed upon by the respective commissioners of the hostile armies, not a few of these letter-writers promptly denounced the arrangement as one derogatory to the honor of our arms, and uncalled for by the exigency of the occasion. Assuming to be more qualified to decide that grave question, or affecting to be more sensitive in reference to our national reputation, than Worth, Henderson and Davis, by whom the terms of capitulation were arranged, and Taylor, by whom they were approved, these epistolary heroes [sic] forthwith proceeded to denounce the act with a warmth of indignation which might have been very naturally elicited had these officers been guilty of deliberate treachery or undoubted cowardice. But, the lapse of a few weeks has satisfied the judgement of the country, we are sure, in despite of these critics, that the terms of capitulation granted to the Mexican General, though liberal, as they ought to have been, were wise also in reference both to Gen. Taylor's own diminished strength and precarious position, and to the formidable capacity of defence, as well as the superior number of the enemy's forces as in the works of art by which they were protected, and to capture which, even if that had been certainly in our power, (as we admit that it was more than probable,) would have been attended with a loss of life or which the honor of compelling the enemy to retreat from his shelter at the point of the bayonet would have been a most inadequate remuneration. There is, however, we presume, no remedy for this writing and publishing mania; and the most we can venture to hope is that the public, taught by the past how improper it is to rely upon information derived from sources at best but partially informed, and which is generally infected with the antipathies and partialities of the mischievous spirit of clogueism which is a uniform concomitant of the camp. - particularly one constituted of bodies of men hastily collected together, and influenced by sectional jealousy as well as personal rivalry - will not hereafter prematurely condemn any one of our gallant officers upon authority entitled generally to so little respect.

Our remarks, however, are not designed to embrace all who write from the camp - and among the few whom we except is the well-known correspondent of the New York Spirit of the Times, - the gallant Captain Henry of the 3d Infantry, five of whose senior officers fell in the action at Monterey, leaving him, the only one unhurt, in command at the close of the engagement. His letters we always read with interest, and accomplished by a regret that the claims upon our columns have permitted us so rarely to republish them. In one of his latest letters, we find some excellent suggestions in regard to the course which ought to be pursued by our government, in the further prosecution of the campaign, it in truth its purpose is to "conquer a peace," and not to extend our territorial limits. After a glowing description of Monterey and its vicinity, he says:

"If the war is to be prosecuted, and peace, not territory, is the aim of the Government, nothing can be more foolish than its prosecution in this quarter. We are only slightly wounding the extremities of the body - have not touched the heart - nor can by this route - Until there is a Government established who will have the power to treat, I do not see that we are any nearer the settlement of this difficulty than before the battles of the 8th and 9th. We may go on and expend millions and sacrifice the lives of thousands, without any good result. It stikes me, that an advance from this point can have no effect upon the settlement--our better plan is to strongly fortify this point and retain possession of the valley of the Rio Grande, until they come to terms. Let them come and retake it if they can. If you please, let us assist in establishing a Republic of the people of this valley - foster and protect it, and place it as a barrier between us and the mother country. If the war is to be carried on nolens volens, let the invading force start from some point near Vera Cruz, and march straight to the city of Mexico, and batter its walls down about their ears, and my word for it, the people will find some way of establishing a Government that can settle the matter. The victories on this frontier, as honorable as they may be to our army, are mere flashes in the pan, as regards the question of peace. The humane and liberal policy pursued in the prosecution of the war has a tendency to keep it up. It is the first war of which I ever read being an actual benefit to the people. Wherever [sic] we go, we pay or what we get, at two or three times the prices of the country, and all their rights and property are sacredly protected. In God's name what more prosperous times can they desire? Their cry is, "Come along, gentlemen - very happy to see you. You have been a most inadequate remuneration. There is, however, we presume, no remedy for this writing and publishing mania; and the most we can venture to hope is that the public, taught by the past how improper it is to rely upon information derived from sources at best but partially informed, and which is generally infected with the antipathies and partialities of the mischievous spirit of clogueism which is a uniform concomitant of the camp. - particularly one constituted of bodies of men hastily collected together, and influenced by sectional jealousy as well as personal rivalry - will not hereafter prematurely condemn any one of our gallant officers upon authority entitled generally to so little respect.

Our remarks, however, are not designed to embrace all who write from the camp - and among the few whom we except is the well-known correspondent of the New York Spirit of the Times, - the gallant Captain Henry of the 3d Infantry, five of whose senior officers fell in the action at Monterey, leaving him, the only one unhurt, in command at the close of the engagement. His letters we always read with interest, and accomplished by a regret that the claims upon our columns have permitted us so rarely to republish them. In one of his latest letters, we find some excellent suggestions in regard to the course which ought to be pursued by our government, in the further prosecution of the campaign, it in truth its purpose is to "conquer a peace," and not to extend our territorial limits. After a glowing description of Monterey and its vicinity, he says:

"If the war is to be prosecuted, and peace, not territory, is the aim of the Government, nothing can be more foolish than its prosecution in this quarter. We are only slightly wounding the extremities of the body - have not touched the heart - nor can by this route - Until there is a Government established who will have the power to treat, I do not see that we are any nearer the settlement of this difficulty than before the battles of the 8th and 9th. We may go on and expend millions and sacrifice the lives of thousands, without any good result. It stikes me, that an advance from this point can have no effect upon the settlement--our better plan is to strongly fortify this point and retain possession of the valley of the Rio Grande, until they come to terms. Let them come and retake it if they can. If you please, let us assist in establishing a Republic of the people of this valley - foster and protect it, and place it as a barrier between us and the mother country. If the war is to be carried on nolens volens, let the invading force start from some point near Vera Cruz, and march straight to the city of Mexico, and batter its walls down about their ears, and my word for it, the people will find some way of establishing a Government that can settle the matter. The victories on this frontier, as honorable as they may be to our army, are mere flashes in the pan, as regards the question of peace. The humane and liberal policy pursued in the prosecution of the war has a tendency to keep it up. It is the first war of which I ever read being an actual benefit to the people. Wherever [sic] we go, we pay or what we get, at two or three times the prices of the country, and all their rights and property are sacredly protected. In God's name what more prosperous times can they desire? Their cry is, "Come along, gentlemen - very happy to see you. You have been a most inadequate remuneration. There is, however, we presume, no remedy for this writing and publishing mania; and the most we can venture to hope is that the public, taught by the past how improper it is to rely upon information derived from sources at best but partially informed, and which is generally infected with the antipathies and partialities of the mischievous spirit of clogueism which is a uniform concomitant of the camp. - particularly one constituted of bodies of men hastily collected together, and influenced by sectional jealousy as well as personal rivalry - will not hereafter prematurely condemn any one of our gallant officers upon authority entitled generally to so little respect.

And again, in a letter of later date, referring to the same subject, he remarks:

"I sincerely hope that the Government will order no advance beyond Saltillo. That, I think will fall into our hands without a fight. I do not predict this. I have done with predictions - for not one of my fighting ones have been correct. I am such an advocate for peace throughout the world, that my wishes have probably warped my judgement. My grounds for thinking there will be no fight at Saltillo are these - gen. Ampudia, in Council, decided upon fortifying the place. The citizens would not permit it. They very justly told him that he had spent much time and money in fortifying Monterey, a city whose natural defences were much superior to their's, and had failed to hold it, and that they had no idea of having their property destroyed. A very just conclusion, Mr. Judge. Taking Saltillo, we have the key to this whole valley. We are then some three hundred miles from San Luis Potosi, the march to which is difficult, and part of the way over a desert. Having Saltillo, taking Monclova, and Tampico, we can quietly settle down in as lovely a ountry as the sun ever shone upon a certain day. Then import your families, give them the land for a song, and mark my words, before you know it, this valley will be teaming with an American population. We do not want the valley, nor would i, if it can be prevented to any more expense than simply the holding of it, which, compared to an onward movement, would be nothing. Let Mexico come and take it, if she can. Nothing, I think, would have so strong a tendency to an immediate settlement, as the appearance of coolly settling down and taking possession of this valuable part of her domains. - Our forces has to be greatly augmented at any rate; but the augmentation would be much greater to continue the invasion."

These are the views of a highly intelligent officer, who has participated in all the perils of the campaign, and whose opportunities of observation have been as ample as his capacity to profit by them is unquestionable. They are entitled to great weight. At least we think so - perhaps because we, like him, deprecate a mere war of conquest -
With the exception of California - and we except that State because of its importance in a commercial point of view - we would not, if our will could decide the question, and if it could be had for the asking, ANNEX to the Union a foot of soil beyond the Rio Grande, nor a very large portion of it on this side of the river, inhabited as it is by an alien race, whose habits and customs, and religious and political faith are so different for our own, and who are as meapable of appreciating the privileges and rights as they are of comprehending the duties which appertain to American citizens - who, we take occasion to say, are not to be manufactured of such materials as are to be found in the border States of Mexico by the administration of oaths of allegiance whether voluntarily taken or extorted.

Friday, November 27, 1846, RW46v23i94p4c2 Important from Mexico - From Tampico

A commercial house in the city has received letters announcing that the whole of the Mexican garrison at Tampico had withdrawn, and marched to join Santa Anna in the interior.

Friday, November 27, 1846, RW46v23i94p4c2 Rumored Capture of Tabasco

It was rumored here yesterday Tabasco had been captured by the naval detachment commanded by Com. Perry. We have heard no particulars, except that no defense was made by the Mexicans, the citizens having fled on the approach of the attacking party.

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p4c1 Later from Santa Fe

The St. Louis Republican of the 18th inst. announces the arrival in that city of Maj. Fitzpatrick from Santa Fe, which he left on the 11th of October. He brings information that Gen. Kearney, when about 175 miles from Santa Fe, on his way to California, was met by an express from Col. Fremont, who informed him that Upper California was completely in possession of the American forces; and that Col. F. was acting as Provisional Governor. - Gen. K. therefore sent back to Santa Fe all the troops with which he had started, except 100 men, with whom he recommenced his march.

There was nothing new at Santa Fe, though much apprehension was felt of a scarcity of forage for the horses and mules.

Friday, November 27, 1846, RW46v23i94p4c3 Official Dispatches

HEADQUARTERS FIELD DIVISION VOLUNTEERS,
Monterey, September 30, 1846.

SIR: Pursuant to the instructions of the major-general commanding, on the 21st inst, at about 8 o'clock, a.m., I marched my division (with the exception of one company from each infantry regiment, left to guard the camp) and placed it in order of battle, under cover, immediately in rear of the mortar and howitzer battery, my left resting on the main road to Monterey. I had been in position but a short time when I received the general's further orders to move as speedily as he practicable, with the three regiments attempt to carry the enemy's first battery on our left.
To expedite this movement, I marched 3 nearest regiments, commanded respectively by Cos. Davis, Campbell, and Mitchell by the left flank, leaving Col. [...] to sustain the batteries. Finding the rifle regiments in front, that of Col.
Campbell was ordered to take its place. The two last mentioned regiments constituting Gen. Quitman's field brigade, he took the immediate command of them, and moved off with spirit and promptness in the direction indicated by the enemy's line of fire. Having seen Gen. Quitman's brigade fairly in motion, I turned my attention to that of General Hamer; now consisting of the Ohio regiment only. Pursuing the instructions of the major-general, I felt my way gradually, without any knowledge of the localities, into that part of the city bordering on the enemy's continuous line of batteries, assailed at every step by heavy fires in front and flank. After having traversed several squares, I met Major Mansfield, the engineer who had conducted the movement of Gen. Twiggs's division on the first battery. He informed me of the failure of that attack, and advised the withdrawal of my command, as there could no longer be any object in advancing further, warning me at the same time that if I advanced I must meet a fire that would sweep all before it. Knowing the major-general commanding to be but a short distance in the rear, I galloped back and communicated this information, in consequence of which he gave the order to [...] and the movement was commenced accordingly. In a short time, however, it was known that Gen. Quitman's brigade had not only stormed the battery in question, but had also carried a stone house of considerable strength connected with the first and occupied by the enemy's infantry. The direction of Gen. [...] brigade was at once changed, and the city re-entered by another route, which, after about a half hour's march under a destructive fire, brought it within, say one hundred yards of the enemy's second fort called El Diablo. A very slight reconnaissance sufficed to convince me that this was a position of no ordinary strenght. Still, feeling its importance, after consulting with part of my staff as to its practicability, I had resolved to attempt carrying it by storm, and was in the act of directing the advance, when I received a wound which compelled me to halt. Col. Mitchell was at the same time wounded at the head of his regiment, as was his adjutant. The men were falling fast under the converging fires of at least three distinct batteries, that continually swept the intervening space through which it was necessary to pass. The loss of blood, too, from my wound rendered it necessary that I should quit the field; and I had discovered at a second glance that the position was covered by a heavy fire of musketry from other works directly in its rear that I had not seen in the first hasty examination. Under all these discouragements I was most reluctantly compelled, on surrendering the command, to advise a withdrawal of the troops to a less exposed position. There is a possibility that the work might have been carried, but not without excessive loss; and if carried, I feel assured it would have been untenable.

Accordingly, the division, under Gen Hamer, on whom devolved the command, moved to a new position near the captured fort, and within sustaining distance of our field batteries on the left. The troops remained in and near this position, and under fire of the enemy's batteries until late in the day. For the details of the after proceeding of the day, I refer to Gen. Hamer's report.

It is with no little pride and gratification that I bear testimony of the gallantry and general good conduct of my command. Were proof wanting, a mournful one is to be found in the subjoined return of the casualties of the day. That part of my division properly in the field did not exceed 1100, of which number full one-fifth was killed or wounded. The fact that troops for the first time under fire should have suffered such loss, without striking, in a continuous and inaccessible foe, finds but few parallels, and is of itself an eulogium to which I need not add. That there were some more prominent for skill and gallantry than others, even in a contest where all were brave, there can be no doubt; and I leave to these better qualified from their situations than myself the pleasing though delicate task of reporting upon their respective merits.

Of my brigadiers, however, it is proper that I should myself speak. Gen. Hamer was placed in a situation where nothing brilliant could be achieved, but which at every moment imperatively demanded prudence and calm, unbending courage. It is but justice to him to say that I found him equal to the emergency.

Gen. Quitman had before him a field in which militery genius and skill were called into requisition and honors could be fairly won, and I but echo the general voice in saying that he nobly availed himself of the occasion.

My special thanks are due to Maj. L. Thomas, assistant adjutant general; Gen. A. Sidney Johnston, of Texas, acting inspector general, and Lieut. G. W. Lay, aid-de-camp, who not only displayed great gallantry and coolness, but by their professional skill, activity, and energy, rendered valuable service through the action. After my withdrawal, they remained with the troops in the field.

Surgeon R. P. Hunt, my volunteer aid-de-camp, also evinced great coolness, and conveyed promptly the orders confined to him.

On my way back to camp I found the Kentucky regiment, under command of Col. Ormsby, drawn up in fine order to repel a threatened charge from a large body of Mexican cavalry then in view. Though necessarily kept from the field of action proper, they occupied a most important position, and had two men wounded in defending it.

I make no mention of the movements of Capt Webster's howitzer battery, which was withdrawn from my division and placed under charge of the chief of artillery.

Enclosed are the reports of Brig Generals Hamer and Quitman of the operations of their respective brigades; also, a statement in detail of the loss sustained by the division.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

W. O. BUTLER,
Maj Gen Comd'g Field Div. Vol.

Maj W W S [...],
Asst Adjt General,
Headquarters Army of Occupation,
Monterey, Mexico.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION OF VOLUNTEERS,
Camp near Monterey, Sept. 28th, 1846.

SIR: I have transmitted to Major General Butler a report of the operations of the first brigade of this division on the 21st last; but it becomes my duty, as commandant of the division, to send you an account of the movements of both brigades during the remaining days of our attack upon Monterey.
For a full statement at the points occupied and the services rendered by the 2d brigade, I respectfully refer you to the report of Brig. Gen. Quitman, who accompanied the brigade, and whose communication to me is herewith sent. I was not with them to witness their gallantry; but from the general's report, they are entitled to great credit for the courage, energy and zeal displayed on the 23d, in pushing their attacks so far into the city, and sustaining themselves under the galling fires of the enemy, who had such decided advantages over them in their barricades and other defences.

On the morning of the 23d, the first brigade was ordered out in front of the city, and took a position near the infantry of Gen. Twigg's command, where we remained until late in the afternoon. Whilst on the plain we could distinctly hear the discharges of small arms, occasionally, between Gen. Quitman's and Gen. Hernderson's command and the forces of the enemy in the city. When they were ordered to retire from the city and return to camp, the first brigade was directed to march to the town and occupy the fort taken on the 21st, the one above it, "El Diablo," which had been abandoned by the enemy on the previous evening, and the tannery between them. We obeyed the order, approaching them under a fire of balls and shells, which fortunately did us no injury.

Capt. Webster's battery formed part of my command, and, after stationing the brigade, I directed him to throw a couple of shells from his 24-lb. howitzers into the plaza, where it was understood the principal force of the enemy was collected. He did so; and as far as we could discover, with great precision and effect. Subsequent informations confirmed our opinions in regard to the injury and alarm produced by these shells. During the night, Gen. Worth threw several in the same direction from batteries on the western side of the city, proving to the Mexicans that they were assailable in this form from both flanks.

Through the whole night the enemy threw up rockets from the plaza and from the citadel; no doubt expecting a night attack, and adopting this method to discover the approach of our troops.

Early on the morning of the 24th, we had made every preparation for renewing the attack upon the city, when we were suddenly arrested by a bugle with a flag of truce, approaching the forts. It was accompanied by Co. Marine, one of Gen. Ampudia's aids, bearing a letter to the general in chief. He was conducted to me by Lieut. Col. Rogers, from the upper fort, and I furnished him a horse and escort to Major General Taylor's quarters in camp. The firing on both sides was suspended until a conference could be held. This led to the capitulation by which the city was surrendered.

I have in my former report expressed my opinion in regard to the coolness and gallantry displayed by the officers and men under my command; and have only to add, that their conduct from the firing of the first to the last gun; was of the most meritorious character, [...] deserving the approbation of their superior officers, and the gratitude of their countrymen.

Herewith I send a statement of killed and wounded.

Very respectfully, your obedient serv't,

TH. L. HAMER,
Brig Gen Commanding 1st division volunteers.

Maj W W S [...],
Assistant Adjutant General.

CAMP BEFORE MONTEREY,
Sept 28, 1846.

GENERAL: In addition to my report to Maj Gen Butler of the action of the 21st instant, I have now the honor to report the transactions of my brigade on the 22d instant, followed up by the attack upon the city of Monterey on the 23d Setember, inst.

Being ordered on the morning of the 22d to relieve Col. Garland's command, which had during the proceeding night occupied the redoubt and fortifications taken on the 21st, my command marched from their encampment about 9 o'clock in the morning. Col. Campbell, of the Tennessee regiment, being indisposed from the fatigue and exposure of the preceding day, the command of his regiment devolved on Lieut. Col. Anderson's. Both regiments were much reduced by the casualties of the preceding day, and the necessary details for the care of the wounded. The march necessarily exposed the brigade for a short distance to a [...] of artillery from the works still in possession of the enemy on this side of the city, and from the crossfire of the citadel. We were not allowed to reach our post without some loss. Private Dubois, of Captain Crump's company of Mississippi riflemen, was killed and two men of the same company wounded before entering the works. The redoubt and adjacent works being occupied by my brigade and Lieut. Ridgely's battery, a portion of the troops were engaged under the direction of Lieut. J. M. Scarrett, of engineers, in strengthening our position on the [...] next to town.

At intervals during the whole day until 9 o'clock at night, the enemy kept up from their fortifications and from the citadel discharges of shell, round shot and grape. It was in the forenoon of this day that, by the aid of our glasses, we were presented with a full view of the storming of the Bishop's Palace by troops under General Worth on the heights beyond the city. The shout by which our brave volunteers greeted the display of the American flag on the palace, was returned by the enemy from their works near us by a tremendous fire of round shot and grape upon us without effect. During the day plans of assault on the adjacent Mexican works were considered of, but in the evening my attention was drawn to a line of about [...] Mexican infantry at some distance in rear of their works. The presence of this force, amounting to nearly three times our effective numbers, and which appeared to be posted for the protection of the works, induced me to give up all idea of forcing the works without reinforcements.-During the night several reconnoissances were made with details of Captain Whitfield’s company in the direction of the redoubt "El Diablo." Frequent signals between the different posts of the enemy during the night kept us on the alert; and at the first dawn of day on the 23d, it was discovered that the enemy had abandoned, or were abandoning, the strong works nearest to us. Colonel Davis, with a portion of his command, supported by Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, with two companies of the Tennessee regiment, were ordered to take possession of the works. This was promptly done. The enemy had withdrawn their artillery during the night, and nothing of value fell into our hands but some prisoners and ammunition. From this work, which commanded a view of the cathedral and a portion of the great plaza of the city, we perceived another half-moon or triangular redoubt in advance of us, and on our right, which appeared to be immediately connected with heavy stone buildings and walls adjoining the block of the city.-Having reported my observations to the commanding general, who had approached the field of our operations. I received permission to advance upon the defences of the city in this direction, and if deemed practicable, to occupy them. It was sufficiently apparent that all the approaches to the city on this side were strongly fortified. Wishing to proceed with caution, under the qualified permission of the commanding general, I sent out a party of riflemen, under Lieutenant Graves, to reconnoitre, supporting them at some distance by a company of Tennessee infantry, under Capt. McMurray. Some active movements of the enemy in the vicinity induced me to halt this party, and to order out Col. Davis, with 2 companies of his command and 2 companies of Tennessee troops, to advance on these works. As the troops advanced, armed men were sent flying at their approach. Upon reaching the redoubt which had attracted our attention, we perceived that it was open, and exposed to the fire of the enemy from the zone buildings and walls in the rear. It was therefore necessary to select another position less exposed.- Posting the two companies of infantry in a position to defend the lodgment we had effected, I directed Col. Davis to post his command as he might deem most advantageous for defence or active operations, intending here to await further orders or reinforcements. In reconnoitering the place several shots were fired at Col. Davis by the enemy, and several [...] of riflemen who had advanced to the slope of a breastwork (No. 1) which had been thrown across the street for the defence of the city. A volley from the enemy succeeded. Our party having been reinforced by additions from the riflemen and infantry, a brisk firing was soon opened on both sides, the enemy from the house tops and parapets attempting to drive us from the lodgment we had effected. A considerable body of the enemy, securely posted on the top of a large building on our left; which partially overlooked the breastwork No. 1, continued to pound.

Brig Gen. [...] L. Hamer

Names of the commissioned officers, killed and wounded during the operations before Monterey, Mexico from September 21st to September 23d, 1846, inclusive.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Rank</th>
<th>Regiment</th>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Remarks</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>J. S. Woods</td>
<td>1st. lt.</td>
<td>2d infantry,</td>
<td>Sept. 21</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L. N. Morris</td>
<td>captain</td>
<td>3d infantry,</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Goe. P. Field</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>P. N. Barbour</td>
<td>c'n &amp; bt mj.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D. S. Irwin</td>
<td>bt lt &amp; adjt.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>R. Hazlitt</td>
<td>2d Lieut</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C. Hoskins</td>
<td>1st lt. &amp; adjt.</td>
<td>4th infantry,</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>H. McKavett</td>
<td>captain</td>
<td>8th infantry,</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Hett</td>
<td>1st lieut.</td>
<td>1st Ohio reg.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>W. B. Allen</td>
<td>captain</td>
<td>1st Ten. reg.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. M. Putman</td>
<td>2d lieut.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>W.G. Williams</td>
<td>captain</td>
<td>top [...]</td>
<td>Sept 24</td>
<td>mortally</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J. H. F. Mansfield</td>
<td>bt major,</td>
<td>[...],</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>severely</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J. L. Abercrombie</td>
<td>bt. major</td>
<td>1st infantry,</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>slightly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>\ri-1800 J. H. Lamette</td>
<td>captain,</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>severely</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J. C. Terrett</td>
<td>1st lieut.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>mortally</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>R, Dilworth</td>
<td>2d lieut</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>mortally</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>W. W. Lear</td>
<td>major</td>
<td>3d infantry</td>
<td>do.</td>
<td>dangerously</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
H. Bambridge, captain do. do. do. slightly
R. H. Graham, 1st lieut. 4th infantry, do. do. dangerously
N. B. Bossell, 1st lieut. 5th infantry, do. do. slightly
R. C. Gatlin, captain 7th infantry, Sept. 23 severely
Goe. Wainwright, 2d lieut. 8th infantry do. do.
W. O. Butler, maj. vol. service, Sept. 21 do.
A. M. Mitchell, colonel, 1st Ohio reg. do. do.
A. W. Armstrong, adjutant, do. do. do.
Jas. [...], captain do. do. do.
Lewis Matter, 2 lieut. do. do. do.
A. McCarty, 2d lieut. do. do. do.
N. H. Niles, do. do. do. do.
R. B. Alexander, major, 1st Ten. reg. do. severely
J. L. [...], 1st lieut. do. do. do.
G. H. Nixon, do. do. do. slightly
J. C. Allen, 2d lieut. do. do. severely
R. N. Downing, captain do. do. do. slightly
H. F. Cook, 1st lieut. do. do. do.
L. S. Howard, do. do. Sept. 23 severely
R. A. Gillespie, captain 1st Texas, Sept 22 mortally
W. E. Reese, 1st lieut. do. do.

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p4c5 Late and Important from Mexico

(From the N. Orleans Times, Nov. 17.)

The brig. Hayne, Capt. Williams, arrived here yesterday from Havana, bringing us our usual files of papers from that port, to the 7th inst. On the previous day, the 6th, the British steamer Tay, arrived at Havana from Tampico and Vera Cruz, with $683,000 in specie. The Tay left the last named port on the 1st inst., and brought full files of papers from the city of Mexico to the 27th ult., and from Vera Cruz to the 31st. We have thus been put in possession of intelligence to the latest dates at which news were dispatched from those quarters. It is of an unusually important and interesting nature, and we shall, therefore, extract very largely from them, in order to place our readers in a position to judge correctly of the progress of affairs in Mexico, and the changes that still threaten that distracted country, from the ultra ambition of its leaders and the wretched character of its population: Although the date of the latest paper from the city of Mexico does not reach higher than the 27th ult., we have yet had an opportunity of seeing letters received in this city from that capital, of the 29th, which record certain items of interest. These we shall put serially.

SANTA ANNA. - Official information had been received at the city of Mexico from Santa Anna, that he was daily concentrating a larger force at San Luis de Potosi; were than announced as being about 20,000 men. In private letters to his friends in the capital, Santa Anna stated that, when all his measures were complete, he would forthwith march, at the head of his army, to meet Gen. Taylor and his troops, whom he had no doubt of crushing, annihilating. After the realization of this anticipated success, he would proceed to the city of Mexico, and unscrupulously put down the Federal party, of whom he was in some dread, once and for ever [sic]. It was his intention then to proclaim himself Dictator, and govern the country by his own despotic will, as the sole means of destroying the factions which had been preying on the Republic since the dawn of her independence, and thus establishing something like permanent tranquility amongst his countrymen.

TAMPICO. - We have received data from Tampico to the 24th ult. Letters announce that on the following day, the 25th, the whole of the troops in garrison there were to evacuate the place and take up the line of march for San Luis de Potosi, whither they were ordered, for the purpose of forming a junction with the main body of the Mexican forces under Santa Anna. The citizens of Tampico, in view of the defenceless state of the town, and the dread of a hostile visit from our land and sea forces, were leaving in great numbers. Entire families had removed into the interior, and the greatest consternation seemed to prevail there. Tampico will, therefore, most probably fall into our hands, without our striking a blow.
DIFFICULTY BETWEEN SANTA ANNA AND GEN. SALAS. - On the 26th ult., intelligence reached the city of Mexico, that the government of the Department of San Luis de Potosi had passed a decree on the 22d, acknowledging Santa Anna Dictator, or to be recognized Chief of the Republic, declaring the office of President ad interim vacant, or that no individual should be invested with that dignity, except under the orders or by the nomination of Santa Anna himself. - The people at San Luis de Potosi had become inveterate in their dislike to Salas, the President ad interim, who deemed himself the object of the particular enmity of Santa Anna and the authors of the Decree, fled from the capital, taking with him as an escort a detachment of troops from the garrison, and took refuge for a time in Tacubaya, Santa Anna's residence when at the seat of government. Here he published several proclamations, addressed to the whole nation, potesting [sic] that he had ever been cordial in his cooperations with Santa Anna, and sincerely approved of the latter's elevation to the supreme authority. Another version of this affair is given in the Havana paper the Diario dela Marina. A correspondent writes that a schism had broken out in the Mexican Cabinet, regarding the policy of banishing certain individuals for their political opinions, and the necessity of carrying into effect the laws recently formed regarding public worship and the property of the clergy. Gómez Farias, the Finance Minister, and Rejon, the Minister of Justice, both violent federalists, urged these two measures with great pertinacy. General Salas, sustained by Pacheco, the Minister of Justice, resisted, unwilling to have recourse to such severe and unpopular acts. Intrigues were then sent on foot to inspire Santa Anna with fears and suspicions of General Salas.

One or two attempts, it is said, were made to assassinate the latter, when he fled to Tacubaya. Alarmed at these dissensions in the Capital, Santa Anna addressed a communication to the Executive Government, recalling Salas to a sense of his duty, and disapproving strongly of his leaving the city. Salas then returned on the 29th, and having made his peace with Santa Anna, formally dismissed Rejon from office, appointing in his stead Senor Lufraga, a young man who is already distinguished by his talents and the moderation of his political character. Senor Cortina also has been displaced, in the Government of the Federal District of Mexico, by Don Jose L. Villamil. Senor Pacheco was superseded in his office of Minister of Justice by Don E. L. Guerrera.

While these miserable disputes, intrigues, and private animosities were raging in the bosom of the administration; while the waves of party federalists and moderatists - were agitating the ill-constructed bark of Government, almost to dissolution, the peace of the metropolis was endangered by discussions of government systems of policy, in two clubs recently established there, named the Puros and the Moderados. The former were for carrying things by the strong hand, forcing measures of fisc and reform on the people, notwithstanding the greatest antipathies experienced against them by the landholders and the clergy. The latter on the contrary, were for concentrating all their energies on the war question, levying supplies, sending forward reinforcements, etc., etc., acting, in short according to the exigences of the moment, and leaving all subjects of a general nature to the decision of Congress. From within the doors of the clubs, the excitement caused hereby, proceeded to agitate the masses. At this juncture, the Government issued a decree for the formation of a national guard, which the people interpreted into a pre-determination of their rulers to proclaim martial law. A few battalions were formed in the city, when a cry was raised that despotic rule, or a counter revolution was contemplated. One of these corps, composed chiefly of persons engaged in trade, numbering about 600 men, chose for their chief the Governor of the District of Mexico, Don Jose Gomez de la Cortina. It belonged to the Moderado party, and proceeded to disband another battalion, which was so much feared; the attempt, however, was so displeasing to general Lemus, the commanding General Lemus was replaced by General Jerrero. Cortina was succeeded as Governor of the district by Don J. L. Villamil, as we before stated.

SAN LUIS DE POTOSI. - Santa Anna has resolved on drawing the whole military strength of the country to one point. Not only are the regular soldiers, who are usually scattered over an immense extent of territory, ordered to march to that point - San Luis de Potosi - but all the volunteers and militia are enjoined [sic] to rendezvous there, with the view of thence marching, with an overwhelming force, in any direction where the invading army is most assailable. He has decided on abandoning Tampico without making any resistance; since he has not a disposable force, sufficiently numerous, to garrison it all points, and by evacuating it, he shall strengthen his own army and weaken Gen. Taylor's who will be obliged to detach a considerable body of troops to take possessions of it and hold it.

SECOND IN COMMAND. - Gen. Valencia has been appointed by Santa Anna his second in command, with his headquarters at Guanajuato, where a corps d'arme will be formed under his own personal supervision. Gen. Cortazar had organized a brigade of volunteers, numbering 3000, from the haciendas of Guanajuato and San Luis, and was marching from the city of San Luis ith a part of his force. These men were hardy peasants, lightly armed; a great many had two horses each with them, and were represented as full of enthusiasm.

SOLICITING THE YOKE. - The Governor of the free and sovereign state of San Luis Potosi, Don M. J. Othon, in a rather long decree, dated 22d ult., announces that his department acknowledges only Gen. Santa Anna as Chief of the Republic, prefacing it by an abusive tirade against the "infamous North Americans." The Republican, in noticing this strange document, states that the government of Queretaro has followed in the track of San Luis de Potosi, and that there is no doubt that Guanajuato will do the same. The editor implores Santa Anna not to be led astray by men who seek, whilst covering themselves with the mantle of his fame, the ruin of the country.

ROBBERY AND ASSASINATION. - According to the Republican of the 27th, the capital is in a most dreadful state of insecurity, both of life and property. Robberies are committed in the most open way; assassinations are becoming horribly frequent; vindictive feeling, arising from the heated spirit of party, being the cause of these sad proofs of demoralization.

VOLUNTEERS. - Immense numbers of men are said to be rallying around the national standard. The accounts received at the capital from all the Departments are said to be most encouraging to Santa Anna. Troops were being embodied rapidly. Several companies of volunteers, said to be composed of the principal citizens of the city of Mexico, had been organized to garrison it. Besides, upwards of one thousand artisans had volunteered for the same purpose.

GARRISON OF VERA CRUZ. - The soldiers here were engaged in completing the defences of the city. A ditch to surround the whole city had been commenced before the steamer left, and was rapidly advancing. Reinforcements were arriving daily. On the 27th a brigade, to reinforce Vera Cruz, arrived at Jalapa Puebla.

A rich merchant at the capital, named Mier[...]y Teran, had advanced $20,000 to pay the troops at San Juan de Ulloa, and $30,000 more to be forwarded to Vera Cruz to meet demands against the Government there.

ALVARADO - The intelligence of the unsuccessful attack made by your Squadron in the Gulf on Alvarado, immediately after its arrival at the seat of Government, was duty made known to the people, in the usual inflated-style. The inhabitants of the capital, almost intoxicated with joy, Don Thomas Marin, the officer who commanded the Mexicans on the untoward occasion states that he will [...] if we return, and that all his command are [...] an opportunity of again meeting us.

At Vera Cruz an attack was expected on the frontiers of San Juan de Ulloa. The garrison of the [...] about 4500 men, national guards and regulars, and about 2,000 more expected from the neighboring towns and villages.

We append the following letter from Vera Cruz dated the 31st ultimo:

VERA CRUZ, Oct. 31, 1846.

A conductor arrived at Mexico on the 20th instant, from Guanajuato with about $1,200,000, so that money was again abundant there. Another has left San Luis de Potosi on the 16th inst. for Tampico, with upwards of a million, and was to arrive at the end of the month. The British sloop Electra has sailed to Tampico, probably on purpose to receive on board the specie for shipment. Two private conductors arrived here from Mexico, with silver bars and about 200,000 hard dollars.

At the middle of this month private letters from Mexico stated that Mr. Bankhead had offered the mediation of England, and that the Ministers had been in session for two days, to deliberate on the subject, but nothing farther has transpired since.

Political intrigues have lately kept the city of Mexico much in ferment. A partial change of Ministry has taken place, Rejon (Minister of Foreign Affairs) having made room for Lafragua, and Pacheco (of Justice, etc) for Guerrara. In consequence of these intrigues, the respective Minister has issued a circular to the end of procuring the re-union of Congress, if possible, before the 6th December next. Gen. Salas, it is reported by to-day's mail, has repaired to Tacubaya. The state of affairs is again rather complicated.

The movements of the U.S. Gulf Squadron are confined to an attack attempted on the 15th instant, on Alvarado, by the steamers (including the Mississippi) and several gun-boats, which proved unsuccessful, they being obliged to retreat. Another expedition increased by some more gun-boats, left Anton Lizardo on the 17th inst., and the ships having yet not returned to their anchorage, it is surmised they may have gone to Laguna to procure fresh provisions, which they are much in want of. The reinforcement of the so long expected large ships has, as yet, not arrived.

Large bodies of national guards have been armed throughout the country, and more are being organized still. These preparations form the most important business of the day; there is much enthusiasm. We shall have a reinforcement here of such militia, from the other cities in this State, and from Puebla. Guaymy, it is reported from Mazatlan, has been taken by the Americans, but the report wants confirmation.

Yours, &c.

[AMB]

---

December
January-January 1847

Index - Volume/issue/page/column/date

January

RW47v24i2p1c3, January 5, 1847, Later from Tampico

RW47v24i2p1c3, January 5, 1847, Departure of the Troops

RW47v24i2p15e, January 5, 1847, To the Editors of the Richmond Whig

RW47v24i2p1c5, December 31, 1846, From the Lynchburg Virginian

RW47v24i2p1c5, January 5, 1847, Marriage of a Volunteer

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, Revolution in Campeachy—Revolution in Tabasco

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, From the N. O. Picayune

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, Desertions from the American Army

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, The Mexican General Valencia

RW47v24i2p2c2, January 5, 1847, Col. Baker, Gen. Waddy Thompson, Lt. Generalship

RW47v24i2p2c3, January 5, 1847, Too Late! Rockingham County volunteers, Tenth Legion

RW47v24i2p2c3, January 5, 1847, Volunteer drowned, Capt. Carrington’s company

RW47v24i2p2c4, January 5, 1847, THE WAR. The Last Campaign—Future Operations

RW47v24i2p2c5, January 5, 1847, Latest from the Army

RW47v24i2p2c5, January 5, 1847, Tampico Attacked!—Repulse of the Mexicans!

RW47v24i2p2c5, January 5, 1847, Correspondence of the Picayune

RW47v24i2p2c6, January 5, 1847, Government Map of Mexico, 4th ed.

RW47v24i2p4c1, January 5, 1847: The Virginia Regiment. The 10th Legion

RW47v24i2p4c1, January 5, 1847, Col. Matthew Mountjoy Payne

RW47v24i2p4c2, January 5, 1847, General Scott

RW47v24i2p4c2, January 5, 1847: Capt. Bankhead’s company
RW47v24i2p4c2, January 5, 1847, Berkeley Volunteers

RW47v24i2p4c2, January 5, 1847, Louisiana volunteers, Louis G. De Russy, Colonel, and Frances Degault, Major

RW47v24i2p4c3, January 5, 1847, A Singular Fact, Volunteers are Whigs

RW47v24i2p4c3, January 5, 1847, Col. John F. Hamtramck, Colonel of the Virginia Regiment

RW47v24i2p4c3, January 5, 1847: From the Boston Courier, Dec. 28, draft of 100 seamen, for the line ship Ohio

RW47v24i2p4c3, January 5, 1847, Army to fall back

RW47v24i2p4c4, January 5, 1847, Army News

RW47v24i2p4c4, January 5, 1847: Later from the Army. Arrival of the Massachusetts – Later from Tampico– Army Movements

RW47v24i3p1c2, January 8, 1847, Honor to the Volunteers

RW47v24i3p1c2, January 8, 1847, Arrival of the Volunteers

RW47v24i3p2c1, January 8, 1847, Massachusetts Volunteers

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847, Presentation of a Flag, Augusta Volunteers, Capt. Kenton Harper

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847, Reception of the Volunteers from Jefferson County

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847, Lieut. Colonel T.B. Randolph, of the Virginia regiment of Volunteers

RW47v24i3p2c3, January 8, 1847, Virginia Volunteers

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847, Two of the three field officers of the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers are Whigs

RW47v24i3p4c1, January 8, 1847, Santa Anna’s Return

RW47v24i3p4c3, January 8, 1847, President Polk requests to increase the regular army

RW47v24i3p4c4, January 8, 1847, Public Opinion

RW47v24i3p4c4, January 8, 1847, Portsmouth and Norfolk Volunteers

RW47v24i3p4c4, January 8, 1847, Arrival of Major Early

RW47v24i3p4c4, January 8, 1847, Recall of Gen. Kearney

RW47v24i3p4c4, January 8, 1847, Santa Fe, Prick’s Regiment, sickness prevailed

RW47v24i3p4c4, January 8, 1847, Col. Yell, Lieut. Col. Roane, and Maj. Boland under arrest for disobedience of orders

RW47v24i3p4c6, January 8, 1847: Rumors as to Santa Anna’s movements, causes for desertions, death of Lieut. Desment of the Macon company

RW47v24i3p4c7, January 8, 1847, Mexican Items, 1000 volunteers in Jalapa, hostility toward Americans, American deserters

RW47v24i3p4c7, January 8, 1847, Tampico– Martial Law

RW47v24i3p4c7, January 8, 1847: Tampico– proximity of a large body of Mexicans

RW47v24i4p1c1, January 12, 1847, The Slavery Question

RW47v24i4p1c2, January 12, 1847, Petersburg Volunteers
January 12, 1847, Robert Greenhow presented copies of his History of Oregon and California

January 12, 1847, Lt. James Lawrence Parker, noble conduct in refusing to leave the Somers

January 12, 1847, Capt. Walker, Texas Rangers, procured 1000 Revolving Pistols

January 12, 1847, Important from the Army, Santa Anna advancing

January 12, 1847, Volunteers, Franklin and Bedford counties, Montgomery, Governor declined services of Norfolk company

January 12, 1847, Important from Mexico, Mexican Congress will not think of peace until every hostile foot has cleared Mexican soil

January 12, 1847, Death of Gen. Thomas L. Hamer, of Ohio

January 12, 1847, Murderer of Gen. Leslie Combs's son dead in Matamoros

January 12, 1847, From the Seat of the War; Mexican troops concentrating at Monterey– Saltillo; police regulations in Tampico

January 12, 1847, Further News from New Mexico. Rumored Defeat of the Dragoons

January 12, 1847, General Taylor assailed by Mr. Fricklin

January 12, 1847, Military Appropriations

January 12, 1847, Saltillo, Santa Anna should attack

January 12, 1847, The Tenth Legion, no volunteers raised in Rockingham County

January 12, 1847, Gen. Charles Sterret Ridgely, the father of deceased Capt. Randolph Ridgely, died at Elk Ridge, Maryland

January 12, 1847, Anti–Slavery movements in the House of Representatives

January 12, 1847, Lt. Thomas P. August, Richmond Rangers, appointed Adjutant of the Virginia regiment of Volunteers

January 12, 1847, Letter from Washington, Locofoco press, Santa Anna, bill to create ten additional regiments of a standing army

January 12, 1847, Lieutenant General, bill authorizing post

January 12, 1847, Address of Judge Baldwin, and Reply of Capt. Harper, flag for volunteers of Augusta

January 12, 1847, What does this mean? Secret negotiations before the war

January 12, 1847, Appointments by the President, By and with the advice and consent of the Senate

January 15, 1847, Massachusetts– The War, Cushing resolution for Massachusetts Volunteers

January 15, 1847, The Southern Mail, not received

January 15, 1847, The Norfolk Volunteers

January 15, 1847, North Carolina to field a full regiment of volunteers

January 15, 1847, The Marshall Guards
RW47v24i5p1c3, January 15, 1847, Pennsylvania Legislature thanks Gen. Taylor

RW47v24i5p1c3, January 15, 1847, The Army, arrival of steamer Edith, advance of Santa Anna

RW47v24i5p2c1, January 15, 1847, To Correspondents, articles declined

RW47v24i5p2c1, January 15, 1847, The Virginia Regiment

RW47v24i5p2c2, January 15, 1847, News from the South

RW47v24i5p2c2, January 15, 1847, Letter to the Editor, Lieut. Thomas S. Garnett is son of H.T. Garnett of Westmoreland

RW47v24i5p2c5, January 15, 1847, Late and Important Intelligence from the Seat of War! Santa Anna’s advance contradicted. Return of Gen’l Taylor toward Victoria. Junction of Forces under Generals Worth and Wool, &c. &c.

RW47v24i5p2c5, January 15, 1847, Further from Mexico, Mexican Congress, citizens of Los Angeles resist, loss of Somers, Santa Anna

RW47v24i5p2c6, January 15, 1847, Latest from Tampico, arrival of steamers and sloop, Mr. Chase appointed collector of the customs at Tampico

RW47v24i5p4c1, January 15, 1847, From the Seat of War, advance of a large Mexican force towards Saltillo

RW47v24i5p4c1, January 15, 1847, Bearer of dispatches from the Army on his way to Washington

RW47v24i5p4c1, January 15, 1847, Generals Scott and Taylor, attitudes in Washington

RW47v24i5p4c2, January 15, 1847, Lieut. [Fayette] Maynard, tribute by city council, shipwreck of Steamer Atlantic

RW47v24i5p4c2, January 15, 1847, Majority of the men comprising the regiment of Virginia Volunteers are Democrats

RW47v24i5p4c3, January 15, 1847, Col. James Gadsden of South Carolina not appointed Brigadier General of the Volunteers

RW47v24i5p4c3, January 15, 1847, Rumors! American forces at Saltillo cut to pieces

RW47v24i5p4c3, January 15, 1847, Massachusetts Regiment of Volunteers complete

RW47v24i5p4c3, January 15, 1847, The Army Bill, ten additional regiments

RW47v24i5p4c5, January 15, 1847, News From Santa Fe

RW47v24i5p4c6, January 15, 1847, Highly Important News!! Advance of Santa Anna upon Saltillo confirmed– Probability of a Battle having been Fought– Despatch of Troops to Saltillo and Monterey– Anticipated Attack upon Camargo and Matamoros

RW47v24i5p4c6, January 15, 1847, The News from Saltillo

RW47v24i5p4c7, January 15, 1847, From Campeachy, pronunciamiento to maintain neutrality

RW47v24i6p1c1, January 19, 1847, Extension of Area. [Tampico, Annexation and Slavery Issue]

RW47v24i6p1c3, January 19, 1847, Duration of the War

RW47v24i6p1c3, January 19, 1847, Col. Hamtramk, Virginia Regiment of Volunteers, in Petersburg

RW47v24i6p1c3, January 19, 1847, Rumors, Major Walter Gwynn as Brigadier General for Volunteers

RW47v24i6p1c3, January 19, 1847, Revolution in Yucatan

RW47v24i6p1c6, January 19, 1847, From the Gulf Squadron, A Mexican Proclamation! [Chihuahua]
RW47v24i7p4c2, January 22, 1847, Interesting. [Santa Anna at San Luis Potosí, opposition of clergy, Veracruz]

RW47v24i9p1c3, January 29, 1847, Whig press denounced Polk’s order that Taylor march to the Rio Grande

RW47v24i9p1c3, January 29, 1847, Gen. Taylor

RW47v24i9p1c6, January 29, 1847, Later from Mexico
Mexican politics, budget shortages, court martials of Mexican officers, reinforcements, Veracruz

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847: Southern Brigade of Volunteers

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847, Volunteers from Orange County, North Carolina

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847, Barnard and Jewell of New Orleans establish the Sentinel at Tampico

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847, Wm. B. Warren, of that place appointed Governor of Coahuila

RW47v24i9p2c6, January 29, 1847, Locofocos in Missouri reject guns in honor of the victories of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma and Monterey

RW47v24i9p4c1, January 29, 1847, From the Army [attack on Saltillo, Mexican dispatches captured, Taylor]

RW47v24i9p4c1, January 29, 1847, Departure of Troops, Louisiana and Pennsylvania regiments

RW47v24i9p4c2, January 29, 1847, Mails for Mexico, postage to be paid in advance

RW47v24i9p4c2, January 29, 1847, The Virginia Regiment

RW47v24i9p4c2, January 29, 1847, Late from the Army [Scott at Brazos, battle near Victoria, news from Saltillo]

RW47v24i9p4c4, January 29, 1847, Later from Mexico [Midshipman Rogers still a prisoner, Mexican elections, arms shortage in Mexico]

February

RW47v24i10p1c2, February 2, 1847, Gen. Kearny’s Proclamation.

RW47v24i10p1c5, February 2, 1847, Gen. La Vega on his return to Veracruz

RW47v24i10p1c7, February 2, 1847, Later from the Army. Important from Tampico – Arrival of Col. Kinney a that place– Later news from Genl. Taylor– Engagement of Col. May with the Mexicans– Disposition of the American forces along the line of operations, &c. &c.

RW47v24i10p1c7, February 2, 1847, War Department, General Orders no. 3, forbidding publication of private letters

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Santa Anna’s Plans

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Decription of Victoria

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Tenth Legion under a cloud

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Captain Voorhees restored to former rank

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Gen. Gaines justifies publishing letter from Gen. Taylor

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847: Indiana and Alabama sailed from New York for Brazos Santiago

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Volunteers for Mexico

RW47v24i10p4c2, February 2, 1847, General Kearney Again, New Mexico declared a territory of US by express authority of President

RW47v24i10p4c2, February 2, 1847, North Carolina Volunteers
Court martial of Bt. Second Lt. Sturges, evidence given by Col. May

The Difficulties of the Mexican War and Prospects of its End, editorial by PACIFICUS

Supper for Col. Jno. F. Hamtramck, of the Virginia Volunteers

Com. Kearney in Boston

Col. Whistler met with a severe accident

Rumor that Com. Warrington to take command of the Gulf Squadron

Letter from Washington, BRUTUS, the Three Million Bill little truth to rumored assassination of Santa Anna

Rumor that Polk may take a trip to Mexico

Court Martial for the trial of Col. Harney, U.S. Dragoons, for disobedience of orders

Gen. Worth is confined to bed

Santa Anna president, La Vega now a general, attack on Col. May's rear guard, American forces attacked

Report from Anton Lizardo, sale of Mexican church property approved, rumor of Santa Anna's assassination, fortification of passage between Vera Cruz and Mexico, shipwrecked sailors exchanged, Rogers still held

From the Seat of War. [Scott, Taylor, rumor of Santa Anna's death]

Simmons committed suicide at Vicksburg

The Brigadier General to be either Cadwallader or Gwynn

Col. Webb on Army Bill

Three Million Bill

Gen. Worth at the Brazos—Gen. Wool left near Saltillo

Alabama arrived from Brazos Santiago

Highly Important! News from Anton Lizardo

From Anton Lizardo

Correspondence of the Whig, funereal rites of Col. Watson and Capt. Ridgely, railroad route

Arrival of the Steamship McKim—Gen. Worth at the Brazos—Gen. Wool left near Saltillo

U.S. steamship Alabama arrived from Brazos Santiago

Highly Important! News from Anton Lizardo

Mr. McPherson's Resolution.
Another Commissioner dispatched to Com. Conner

General Taylor.

Letter from Washington, Correspondence of the Whig, BRUTUS

To the Editor of the Washington Union, from Victoria, Tamaulipas, Mexico, Jefferson Davis

Memoranda of the transactions in connexion with the capitulation of Monterey, capital of Nueva Leon, Mexico.

Mexican Privateers at Sea

To the Editors of the Baltimore American

Senator Wallace criticized Gen'l Taylor’s military character

"the McPherson resolutions," on the Mexican War

More Money and Troops asked for– Duty on Tea and Coffee Again Urged.

Gen. Taylor’s Letter.

Santa Anna’s letter accepting the Provisional Presidency of Mexico

Awful Predicament of Poor old “Rough and Ready!”

Death of Volunteer.

Arrival of Governor Smith at Old Point to present Virginia regiment’s flag

Sword was presented to Capt. O.E. Edwards

Gen. Wallace's criticism of Taylor

The Wilmot Proviso.

Ten Regiment Act

Virginia Regiment of Volunteers is full

Letter from Washington, Correspondence of the Whig, BRUTUS.

Officers for the ten new regiments are fast being created

Americans driven back by Californians at San Pedro

Polk selected captains under Ten Regiment Act

Mexican Privateers.

New Hampshire.– Whig Cause advancing.

Swords ordered by the City Council for officers

"McPherson resolutions” amendment

The Wilmot Proviso.

Mr. Webster’s Views.
February 19, 1847, Latest from Tampico.

Lieut. General Benton, letter to the Whig, A COUNTRYMAN.

From Santa Fe

A Three Million Dollar Bill

Senator Moore’s speech

Lieutenant General Benton.

From the Volunteers.

Ten Regiment Act

President Santa Anna

Mr. Calhoun

Mr. Polk’s annual message

Senator Moore’s remarks

February 22, 1847: Interesting from Tampico and the Army

From Yucatan

Very Interesting from Mexico– Latest

From Havana– Latest Mexican News

Ten Regiment Act

March

ARMY NEWS
Barbarities of the Mexicans

Correspondence of the Charleston Mercury
MOUTH OF THE RIO GRANDE, Feb 4th. Gen. Worth’s troops to the Isle of Lobos

THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS
Over–reaction of all parties involved in the expulsion of the editor of the Union from the Senate. Includes correspondence.

LETTERS FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, Events in the Senate concerning the Three Million Bill. Signed, BRUTUS.

Upset his letters have not been received in time for publication. Tea and coffee tax struck out.

NAVAL
Sailing orders for a sloop to the Gulf of Mexico

AN IMPORTANT “SIGN”
Senate yesterday authorized the president to renew diplomatic relations with Mexico at anytime.

GENERAL TAYLOR
Extract of a letter from a soldier ordered to leave Gen. Taylor and go with Gen. Scott

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
HOUSE OF DELEGATES. Mr. Scott presented bills.

For the Whig, THE GOVERNMENT EDITOR vs. THE SENATE. Parturiunt montes.
Response to the "Republican" press concerning Calhoun and expulsion of the editor of the union from the Senate.

RW47v24i18p2c1, March 2, 1847, THE "LITTLE TARIFF BILL".
Expenses of the war.

RW47v24i18p2c1, March 2, 1847, COST OF THE WAR
Reports on the running total cost, how will the Mexican ‘indemnity’ cover it?

RW47v24i18p2c2, March 2, 1847, THE LIEUTENANT GENERALSHIP
Idea of appointing one general to command Gen. Taylor and Gen. Scott

RW47v24i18p2c2, March 2, 1847, LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, events in the Senate concerning striking out the tax on tea and coffee. Signed BRUTUS

RW47v24i18p2c3, March 2, 1847, APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT AND SENATE
List of newly formed officers.

RW47v24i18p2c3, March 2, 1847, To Colonel Goodson, of the House of Delegates, Supports Gov. Smith.

RW47v24i18p2c4, March 2, 1847, LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA
HOUSE OF DELEGATES, Feb. 27th Reports of Committees

RW47v24i18p2c5, March 2, 1847, LATER FROM TAMPICO
From the N.O. Picayune, Louisiana Volunteers from the Ondiaka are safe, health of the troops.

RW47v24i18p2c5, March 2, 1847, MEXICAN AFFAIRS
Revolution in Tabasco put down, Mexican congress declared 1824 constitution still valid.

RW47v24i18p2c5, March 2, 1847, LATER FROM TEXAS
Man seized for violation of revenue laws, Indians tolerably quiet.

RW47v24i18p2c5, March 2, 1847, STILL LATER FROM THE BRAZOS AND VERA CRUZ.
All the troops in motion, Gen. Scott still at Brazos.

RW47v24i18p2c5, March 2, 1847, LATER FROM VERA CRUZ
Gen. Valencia relieved of his command.

RW47v24i18p2c6, March 2, 1847, Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce
Steamer Polk will go to Vera Cruz in time for the end of the battle and will probably bring back news of victory.

RW47v24i18p4c1, March 2, 1847, ORIGIN OF THE WAR
Refutes congressional expression that the war is popular.

RW47v24i18p4c2, March 2, 1847, Even Mr. Benton censored Mr. Polk in congress

RW47v24i18p4c2, March 2, 1847, No doubt an attack will be made on Vera Cruz shortly

RW47v24i18p4c2, March 2, 1847, Letter very angry at the remarks of Gov. Marcy on the war. Signed FIAT JUSTITIA.

RW47v24i18p4c4, March 2, 1847, To the Editors of the Whig
Congrats to the Senate for expressing thanks to Gen. Taylor signed. J.R.C

RW47v24i18p4c4, March 2, 1847, Proceeding of the West Point Dialectic Society
Regret the Loss of Senator Botts

RW47v24i18p4c5, March 2, 1847, From the New Orleans Picayune, MEXICAN AFFAIRS
Cannot find any evidence in the Mexican papers that the Mexican congress is interested in Peace.

RW47v24i19p1c1, March 5, 1847, Mr. Calhoun
Administration determined in prosecution of the war on that gentleman.

RW47v24i19p1c1, March 5, 1847, Mr. Corwin of Ohio not going for the presidency

RW47v24i19p1c1, March 5, 1847, Sarcastic body of the Legislature of Virginia

RW47v24i19p1c2, March 5, 1847, CONDITION OF MEXICO
Growing disention in that distracted country.
New York Sun declares Senor Rejon re-appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, events in the Senate regarding the Lieut. Gen. Scheme, signed BRUTUS

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
Senate, House of Delegates, March 2nd

Mr. BENTON'S SPEECH
Concluded. Copy of Mr. Benton's Speech.

For the Whig,
Soldiers at Old Point about to depart for Tampico

New from the Army.
Gen. Scott on his way to Vera Cruz, Mexican forces heading to Saltillo

The Lieutenant Generalship
Opposition in the senate of the appointment of one of the Maj. Generals commander-in-chief.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, events in the Senate concerning the Three Million Bill, signed BRUTUS.

Manufacture of Opinion.
Editors of the Union have published many letters from its own party against the expulsion from the Senate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
Senate, House of Delegates, March 4th.

To Colonel Goodson, of the House of Delegates
Sarcastic support of the war.

Loss of the U.S. Propeller Ocean.
All hands saved, vessel a total loss.

From the N.O. Picayune, The Latest from the Brazos.
Santa Anna's address to the troops, March toward Saltillo. Troop movements.

From the New Orleans Picayune. Further from the Brazos.
Gen. Taylor prepares for attack on Saltillo, Mexican losses at El Paso.

Mr. Benton's Speech
Continued.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, Events in the Senate concerning appropriations bills, signed BRUTUS

Three million bill passed without the Wilmot Proviso

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
House of Delegates, March 1

SPEECH OF MR.BENTON
In reply to Mr. Calhoun on the Three Million Bill

A Visit to San Juan de Ullos
Castle at Vera Cruz can be shelled.

Late from Santa Fe
Capt. Cook arranging for capture of troops

Calhoun's Reply to Benton.
Summary of Mr. Calhoun's speech.

Locofoco Meeting in Powhatan.
Resolutions to select a democratic candidate even though one has already been selected.
March 9, 1847, Volunteers refusing to serve under generals selected by the governor of North Carolina.

March 9, 1847, Appointments.
Officers appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate.

March 9, 1847, MR. CALHOUN'S REPLY TO MR. BENTON,
On the three million Bill

March 9, 1847, From the Seat of War.
Gen. Scott en route to Vera Cruz but the whole of his force not yet embarked.

March 9, 1847, General Orders.
Organization of staff, punishment of crimes committed against the people of Mexico

March 9, 1847, The new Generals
Remarks on an article in the N.Y. Courier by Col. Webb who had hoped of getting an appointment and didn't.

March 9, 1847, Company of Volunteers raised too late to join the Virginia regiments will become part of the regular force.

March 9, 1847, Baltimore American reports Col. Benton may not accept the appointment.

March 9, 1847, Gen. Benton will leave Washington; will not supersede Scott and Taylor.

March 9, 1847, GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
Senate, House of Delegates, March 8th

March 9, 1847, To Colonel Goodson, of the House of Delegates.
Col. McPherson is the man for a crisis.

March 9, 1847, Ratification Meeting in Fredericksburg.
Enthusiastic Whig Meeting, Resolutions passed approving course in the senate of sending supplies to Mexico.

March 9, 1847, Late and Important from Tampico. From the N.O. Bulletin
Two letters report the arrival of Gen. Scott.

March 9, 1847, From the Brazos.
Gen. Worth would leave in a few days from Tampico, Capture of Americans by Gen. Minon. STILL LATER, Reports of the number of Santa Anna's troops

March 9, 1847, Maj. John M. Allen died suddenly at Galveston.

March 9, 1847, Matamoros Flag reports Mexican criminals broke out of the prison, shots fired, troops mustered for battle. Now confident prepared in an emergency.

March 9, 1847, Capt. Morris died with the Regiment of Illinois Volunteers

March 9, 1847, To the Editors of the Charleston Courier
NEW ORLEANS Feb.28th Prisoner escaped

March 9, 1847, NAVAL Ships bound for Gulf of Mexico

March 9, 1847, LATER FROM NEW MEXICO
From the St. Louis Republicans, extra Battle at El Paso between Col. Doniphan and Mexicans.

March 9, 1847, Mr. Ingersoll's Report.
Report from the Committee of Foreign relations, shows the true boundary of Texas is the Rio Grande

March 9, 1847, LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, Signed BRUTUS, Events in the Senate concerning expulsion of the editor of the Union.

March 9, 1847, Mexican Views
New York Journal of Commerce reports a letter from Mexico describing a war of conquest.
Describing a man sent out as a spy, pretending to be French.

Senators voted for the Three Million Bill because they had confidence in the president.

Appointment by the president
Portion of the list.

Genealogical Assembly of Virginia
Senate, House of Delegates, March 5th

Mr. Calhoun
Very well received by the people of Charleston, No matter how assailed by the rest of the Union South Carolina always supports him.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, signed, BRUTUS, Events in the Senate concerning, Col. Benton may not accept his appointment.

FROM THE ARMY
Rumor circulating of a battle between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna

Gen. Butler's Views
Recently arrived because of a wound, reports of evacuation of Vera Cruz ordered by Santa Anna.

Genealogical Assembly of Virginia
Senate, House of Delegates, March 10th

General Benton Declines appointment

The Rumored Battle
Between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna at Saltillo. Gen. Taylor fallen back. Force almost entirely of Volunteers

Rumors that General Benton declines appointment

Gen. Butler hoping return to Kentucky will help his wound.

Genealogical Assembly of Virginia
Senate, Message from the house read, House of Delegates, March 11th

For the Whig, Mr. Seddon
Reports that Mr. Seddon did not vote on the resolution censuring Gen. Taylor for the terms of capitulation at Monterey. Signed, Hampden

From the N.O. Picayune
Capture of Majors Gaines and Borland. Detailed account of their capture, signed, John J. Hardin. Col.

Ch. J. Ingersoll
Nominated to be Ambassador to France. Commentary on his worthiness.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON
Correspondence of the Whig, VALEDICTORY, signed, BRUTUS. Concerns congress, which has just concluded will be remembered for its evil.

General Benton and the Cabinet
From the Alexandria Gazette on rumors of Gen. Benton's possible refusal of appointment

Genealogical Assembly of Virginia
Senate, House of Delegates, March 8th

The Virginia Volunteers
Troops arrived at Brazos Santiago

Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune
Three letters from the Picayune on rumors of a battle between Taylor and Santa Anna

From the Picayune, Loss of the Steamer Tweed, sixty lives lost.
Complete list of many appointments to the military with the consent of the Senate.

Correspondence of the Delta, Great losses on both sides, long battle. Gen. Arista wounded.

Arrogance of his letter to the President includes correspondence of the Virginian.

Effective speech will be printed on the McPherson resolutions relative to the Mexican War.

General Assembly of Virginia
Senate, House of Delegates. March 13th

SUBSTANCE OF THE REMARKS OF Mr. Stanard
On the McPherson resolutions

Comments on the Democratic press's reaction to the expulsion of the editor of the union from the senate. Signed, Charles City Additional Military Appointments.

Mr. Calhoun's Home reception
South Carolina Supports him.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
Senate, House of Delegates, March 15th

For the Whig, To the General Assembly of Virginia
Signed, VIRGINIUS. Assembly should appropriate more to Capt. Carrington's volunteers.

The Dilemma
Country in eminent danger, will she be rewarded by indemnity from Mexico?

Pledge was that if the Three Million bill was passed without the Wilmot proviso then we should have a speedy peace.

Mr. Benton's arrogance

Gen. Worth may inherit Col. Benton's position

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA
Senate, House of Delegates, March 12th

Important Correspondence
From the National Intelligencer, March 12th Includes letter of Mr. Benton to the President and the President's reply

List of deaths among Volunteers at Old Point
From disease not of a local character, 14 names.

Summary of the speech that detailed outstanding claims against Mexico.

Col. Jacks Hays reached New Orleans from Galveston

From the Seat of War
Mr. Slidell obnoxious to the Mexicans, speedy peace not so speedy.

Fincastle Valley Whig, preference for Gen. Taylor as the next president.

Signed, L.B. Swift. Santa Anna reports army in desperate condition, beautiful women; do not have seats in their churches.

To the memory of Maj. Charles H. Hyde
Mr. Polk's Ambassador
N.O. correspondent reports Mexicans particularly dislike their ambassador.

N.O. Tropic reports ship tried to run blockade but was intercepted.

Mr. Polk's Ambassador
N.O. correspondent reports Mexicans particularly dislike their ambassador.

N.O. Tropic reports ship tried to run blockade but was intercepted.

Discussion in King & Queen
To the Editors of the Whi

April

Eight Days Later from Saltillo!
More details of the battle Buena Vista; arrival of Dr. Turner; despatches from Col. Curtis

Affairs in Mexico
Report on the condition of Santa Anna's army; predictions of the battle of Vera Cruz; information on the mode of warfare; report on the affairs of the peace process

Investment of Vera Cruz!
Landing of troops near Vera Cruz; capture of Mexican outworks; skirmishing with the enemy; Captain Alburtis killed; Lieut. Colonel Dickenson wounded; position of the army; continued canonade

Memorandum furnished by Captain Powers
Weather report; information on forces activities–building trenches; Us army gained possession of all the fortifications of the enemy; water to the city cut–off

Special correspondence of the Picayune
Weather report; information on troop arrival–those of Gen. Worth, Gen. Twiggs; Gen. Scott entering the harbor

Information on vessel arrival; report of battle between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna; information on troop movement around Vera Cruz; ships fired upon

Weather report; information on troop arrival–those of Gen. Worth, Gen. Twiggs; Gen. Scott entering the harbor

Information on vessel arrival; report of battle between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna; information on troop movement around Vera Cruz; ships fired upon

Sacrificios, near Vera Cruz
Alabama leaving for New Orleans; information on troop movement and equipment movement–landing on Vera Cruz; battle with the enemy and Mexican retreat; report of more skirmishes

Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune
Information on the battle at Vera Cruz and death of Captain Alburtis

Camp near Vera Cruz
More details of the battle at Vera Cruz–information on troop movement, hostilities, land of troops

U.S. Sloop of War Albany
Rumor that Scott is not going to accept the surrender of the city; information on troop and ship movement; story being told with relation to the last revolution, which has been termed pronunciamento de los mugenes

US Sloop of War Albany
Weather report; enemy opening fire; US forces not striking back

From the City of Mexico
Letters about Mexican affairs have arrived; letters that give accounts of California to the 18th of January–US now has upper California; Santa Anna's report of the battle of Buena Vista

Later from the Brazos
Arrival of new vessels; rumors of action between Col. Curtis and Gen. Urrea; other volunteers arriving; praises for army already present; report of movement of Santa Anna

The Great Victory!
Report of the victory at Buena Vista; praises of the army and Taylor Substances of the Remarks of Mr. Lee of Hardy Remarks made in response to the debate which arose in the house of delegates on the resolution of Messers, Leake and McPherson–resolution to thank the president for his performance in conducting the war against Mexico–speech seems to portray that Mr. Lee does not think highly of the president’s performance.

RW47v24i27p5c6, April 2, 1847, Glorious New from the Army
Santa Anna’s army defeated by General Taylor; Loss of Cols. Yell, McKee and Hardin, Henry Clay Jr. etc; defeated handed to the Mexicans at Buena Vista—details given

RW47v24i27p5c6, April 2, 1847, Additional Particulars
List of American officers killed and wounded; Gen. Taylor maintains his position; capture of US wagons by the Mexicans; escape of a lady; safe arrival of Col. Morgan at Monterey

RW47v24i27p5c7, April 2, 1847, Further from Tampico and the Brazos
Article printed in a Mexican paper giving praises to Santa Anna; commissioners arrived from Taylor demanding the surrender of Santa Anna; letter expressing the sad condition of Mexican troops

RW47v24i27p2c1, April 2, 1847
Comments about the prospects of with a win at Vera Cruz that Mexico will surrender

RW47v24i27p2c2, April 2, 1847, For the War
Report that Captain John Eager Howard’s and his company of volunteers have left for the war by train

RW47v24i27p2c2, April 2, 1847, Excitement in Houston Texas
Debate over who owned the city—Pierpont or Allen—and who then had the right to sell it

RW47v24i27p2c2, April 2, 1847
National salute was fired yesterday by the Fayette Artillery in honor of the great victory of Taylor at Buena Vista

RW47v24i27p2c2, April 2, 1847
Col. Alphonse Duperu arrived last night with other men from Tampico—Duperu has received a commission as captain; Col. Morgan and his men arrived safe in Monterey

RW47v24i27p2c1, April 2, 1847, News from Mexico
Scott has succeeded in the landing at Anton Lizardo and making preparations for an assault on the city; not surprised if heard that the city and castle were to fall within two or three days

RW47v24i27p2c2, April 2, 1847, Expenses of the War
100 million dollars will be needed for the war if it continued on top of the other expenses of the war

RW47v24i27p2c2, April 2, 1847, A Prediction Verified
Letter from Monterey written by a Kentucky Volunteer to the editor of the Louisville Courier—shows the confidence with which a victory was anticipated as well ad the opinion in the Army of the injustice with which Taylor has been treated by the Administration

RW47v24i27p1c2, April 2, 1847, Virginia Volunteers
Letter from Lieut. Portefield of the Virginia Regiment—gives information about Taylor who has driven back Santa Anna; first battalion of Virginia Volunteers has reached the Camargo

RW47v24i27p1c2, April 2, 1847
Statement in the New York Herald that our naval armament in the Gulf is the largest ever put forth by the US; lists off what the navy consists of

RW47v24i27p1c3, April 2, 1847, The Insurrection in New Mexico
Letter from Fort Bent about the insurrection in Taos; might be another popular outbreak which extends throughout all of New Mexico; can’t believe the advancement the Mexicans have been able to make in Santa Fe but if got help from the Indians might be able to do serious damage RW47v24i28p2c1, April 6, 1847, Rumored Capture of Vera Cruz—the city and the castle!

Information brought that Scott had succeeded in taking Vera Cruz and the castle of San Juan; numerical loss of Americans; Scott has not been able to land his heavy ordnance; Scott sent word to the citizens to leave town; most foreign residents have left Vera Cruz; many citizens are in favor of capitulation which has been opposed by the military

RW47v24i28p2c1, April 6, 1847, A Coincidence
The day the battle of Buena Vista began the bill authorizing Mr. Polk to appoint Mr. Benton to the chief command was before the Senate; Taylor has been decided by the people to be placed as president of the US

RW47v24i28p2c1, April 6, 1847, Narrow Escape
Assistant Adjutant Bliss mentions that Taylor received two balls during the battle at Buena Vista

RW47v24i28p2c1, April 6, 1847
Union published a number of extracts from Mexican papers, which show that civil war and anarchy are raging within the capital and the country is without a government
RW47v24i28p1c1, April 6, 1847, Substance of Remarks of Mr. Stanard Opinions of Mr. Stanard on the resolutions relative to the War in Mexico–speech quoted in full

RW47v24i29p2c3, April 9, 1847, General Taylor's Despatches
Quote from the Charleston Mercury about Taylor's despatches–simple, reserved

RW47v24i29p1c1, April 9, 1847, The New Mexican Tariff
Comments on the adoption of the Mexican tariff

RW47v24i29p1c2, April 9, 1847, More Incidents
Report from Buena Vista about General Taylor–point of article is to show how Taylor inspires his men

RW47v24i29p1c2, April 9, 1847, Meeting in New Orleans
People gathered at the Commercial Exchange in New Orleans to celebrate the victory at Buena Vista; lists off resolutions that were adopted by the people

RW47v24i29p2c4, April 9, 1847: Aristides and Mr. Newton
Mr. Newton given the honor of writing the annexation of Texas

RW47v24i29p2c5, April 9, 1847, To the Whigs of the Metropolitan Congressional District
Comments on the President's calculations of war

RW47v24i29p2c5, April 9, 1847
Comments on General Taylor–giving praise, condemning the misrepresentation of him that has been printed in other papers

RW47v24i29p1c4, April 9, 1847, To the Whigs of the Metropolitan Congressional District
Response to the President's comment that the US was going to conquer peace; information on the land that US holds in their possession–hard to maintain order in those lands

RW47v24i29p1c5, April 9, 1847, From Our Army at Vera Cruz
Two despatches from Vera Cruz by Scott–gives information on troop actions, supplies, continued firing from the enemy, giving safe papers to the consuls of France and Spain within the city

RW47v24i29p1c5, April 9, 1847: Later from Vera Cruz
Information on the loss or horses, placement of vessels, loss of men–drowning

RW47v24i29p1c5, April 9, 1847, Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune
Mexican messenger shot lost night–escaped but lost his bag–found documents dealing with Governor of Jalapa asking for men and supplies; report on hostilities

RW47v24i29p1c5, April 9, 1847, Camp Before Vera Cruz
Report on Gen. Quitman's volunteers–what they are doing; Col. Harney arrived with his dragoons; several vessels leaving; reports of skirmishing with the enemy

RW47v24i29p1c6, April 9, 1847, Official Correspondence of the Picayune
Report on loss of horses by Cap. Ker and Thorton and Col. Duncan–all lost due to weather that ships encountered; information on the victory of Taylor over Santa Anna

RW47v24i29p1c6, April 9, 1847, Latest from Vera Cruz
Arrival of the Mississippi with Com. Perry; probable opening of US fire on Vera Cruz; continued revolution in Mexico City

RW47v24i29p1c6, April 9, 1847, New from the Army in New Mexico
Another great victory in New Mexico by American forces who overwhelmed and defeated 2,000 Mexicans in Santa Fe; details of the battle including men there; news of assassination of Gov. Bent

RW47v24i30p4c4, April 13, 1847: From the Camp
Taylor's orders from the field of battle to his division that has been victorious over the Mexican forces at Buena Vista

RW47v24i29p2c3, April 9, 1847
Letter from New Orleans to the Charleston Courier about Taylor and how much everyone now seems to like him

RW47v24i29p2c3, April 9, 1847, Col. Cushing
Report of a night of entertainment for Col. Cushing; quotes from toasts giving compliments to Taylor

RW47v24i29p4c5, April 9, 1847, A Noble Recruit
Report on barn Van Winckler and his enlistment and despatch to Texas

RW47v24i30p4c4, April 13, 1847, Battle of Buena Vista
Letter written by Lieutenant Colonel Mansfield to a brother officer—gives description of the battles that took place on the 22nd, 23rd of February

RW47v24i30p4c4, April 13, 1847, A Party of Mr. Polk's Tactics
Report on the number of deserters, who happen to tend to be foreigners–Irish and German

RW47v24i30p4c4, April 13, 1847, The New Project for Bombarding St. Juan d'Ulloa Appointment of Major General Berton by the President for the purpose of blowing up the castle

RW47v24i30p4c5, April 13, 1847, Gen. Taylor's Family
Information on Gen. Taylor's family—who he is related to and what they did

RW47v24i30p4c5, April 13, 1847, Horrors of War
Letter to a St. Louis Republican about the violence taken by some volunteers against Mexicans

RW47v24i30p4c1, April 13, 1847, A Noble Tribute
Tribute by the editor of the Augusta Constitutionalist to those who died in Buena Vista

RW47v24i30p4c2, April 13, 1847
Rough and Ready clubs forming in Philadelphia

RW47v24i30p4c2, April 13, 1847
Report from the Lexington Observer about the deaths from the Battle of Buena Vista which effected those in Lexington Kentucky

RW47v24i30p3c1, April 13, 1847
Information on troop movement using steamers and trains

RW47v24i30p3c1, April 13, 1847, From Santa Fe—Highly Important Particulars
Report on the massacre at Taos—information on how and when it happened and US force response to it RW47v24i30p2c1, April 13, 1847, War News!

Report on actions of Gen. Scott, position of Santa Anna; list of ammunitions used during the bombardment of Vera Cruz

RW47v24i30p2c1, April 13, 1847
Leake in an electioneering speech gave praise to Taylor; question of Leake's stance on the President

RW47v24i30p2c1, April 13, 1847: The Wilmot Proviso
Response to an article in the Enquirer dealing with Mr. Leake's pledge to not support a candidate who does not favor the Wilmot Provison; comments on the Wilmot Proviso

RW47v24i30p2c1, April 13, 1847
Leake gave praise to Calhoun for his course while Secretary of State dealing with the annexation question

RW47v24i30p2c2, April 13, 1847
Leake defends the President for sending Santa Anna back to Mexico—comments on this stance

RW47v24i30p1c4, April 13, 1847, "Aid and Comfort"
Comments about a speech made by Governor Ramon Adame after the Battle of Buena Vista where the Governor says that Santa Anna was given by God to fight for Mexico.

RW47v24i30p1c4, April 13, 1847, Requisition for Troops
Probable movement of Gen. Taylor and information on exchange of prisoners

RW47v24i30p1c4, April 13, 1847, Claims against Texas and the United States
Report on claims by US citizens arising from the annexation of Texas

RW47v24i30p1c4, April 13, 1847
Article on the report of the Committee on the Judiciary to which was given the case of the memorial of Leslie Combs "praying for the payment by the U. States of certain securities issued by the late Republic of Texas"

RW47v24i30p1c5, April 13, 1847, Later from the Brazos
Letters from Santa Anna—gives details about battle of the 23rd, and the state of the Mexican troops; report that Massachusetts regiment arrived at Matamoros; Two NC companies left Matamoros for Camargo; three VA regiments went to Camargo RW47v24i30p1c1, April 13, 1847, Vera Cruz and the Castle taken!

Surrender of Vera Cruz and the castle; hopes that this will bring peace; however Mexican government now seems to want to fight more; Santa Anna advancing to capital
RW47v24i30p1c1, April 13, 1847, Gen. Taylor's Despatches
Report of Taylor's successful defense against an Indian attack

RW47v24i30p1c1, April 13, 1847, Our Officers in Mexico
Extract from a Washington letter—shows how our officers do not have the jealously and envy which the Mexican officers have between each other

RW47v24i30p1c2, April 13, 1847, The Discussion
Discussion between Leake, Messer and Bott (opposing candidates for Congress) about various issues—war, tariff, Oregon question, slavery

RW47v24i30p2c3, April 13, 1847, From Our Army at Vera Cruz
Details of the Battle at Vera Cruz from Scott, Morales, Landero; gives information on the battle including troop movement and actions, requests for innocent families being able to leave the city; instructions given to the commissioners appointed by the US; propositions from the Mexican Commissioners to the General—in—chief; response by the Americans to the Mexican propositions; articles of capitulation of the city of Vera Cruz and the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa

RW47v24i30p2c5, April 13, 1847, From our Navy before Vera Cruz
Transfer of the squadron from Commodore Conner to Perry; information on the placement of ships in agreement with Gen. Scott; list of those killed; details of naval fighting and ship movement; weather reports; report of the surrender of the city; list of vessels anchored at Sacrificios

RW47v24i30p2c7, April 13, 1847, Editorial Correspondence of the N.O. Picayune
Information on the battle at Vera Cruz

RW47v24i30p2c7, April 13, 1847, The Dragoon Fight at Medelin
Report on Col. Harney—details on a battle fought by his men—information on troop movement on both sides, hostilities etc

RW47v24i30p2c7, April 13, 1847, From the Brazos
Report on Santa Anna's army; report of General Taylor's position and what troops are with him

RW47v24i31p2c6, April 16, 1847, From Vera Cruz to Mexico
Calculated distance from Vera Cruz to Mexico City

RW47v24i31p2c6, April 16, 1847, Latest from Mexico
Letter, which states, Santa Anna arrived at San Luis Potosi, report that revolution in the capital of Mexico has been ended; report of heads of the opposition rebels were shot

RW47v24i31p2c3, April 16, 1847, General Taylor
Opinion on the despatches sent by Taylor; opinion on Taylor's character;

RW47v24i31p2c3, April 16, 1847, From the Houston, More Indian Difficulties
Report of Indian hostilities; called Capt. T. Smith and his company to help

RW47v24i31p2c1, April 16, 1847
Opinion about even though Whigs opposed the war, now that the US was in the war success is what is important; remarks made by Mr. Botts about the war

RW47v24i31p2c1, April 16, 1847
Quote from the Picayune's discussing the naming Taylor as a presidential candidate in the upcoming election

RW47v24i31p4c1, April 16, 1847, The 21st Rule—The Wilmont Provision—The Principles embodied in the Oregon Bill
Debate on the war, the question of slavery afterwards; gives opinions of others on the same topics; speaks of the Wilmont Provision

RW47v24i31p4c2, April 16, 1847, Mr. Polk and Santa Anna
Quote from Polk justifying the restoration of Santa Anna to Mexico

RW47v24i31p4c2, April 16, 1847, Mr. Calhoun—Gen. Taylor
Mr. Calhoun written a letter to his friends about being the next presidential candidate—says won't take the nomination and that his friends should back Taylor

RW47v24i31p4c2, April 16, 1847
Mr. Diamond, late American Consul at Vera Cruz has been appointed Collector of the Vera Cruz port

RW47v24i31p4c3, April 16, 1847, To the Whigs of the Metropolitan Congressional District
Discussion on the fall of Vera Cruz—author gives his opinion about the Mexican people and the US as conquerors (civilized vs. uncivilized)

RW47v24i31p1c5, April 16, 1847, Col. McClung
Reprint of a letter from McClung—speaks of Santa Anna's army, praises of Taylor

RW47v24i31p1c5, April 16, 1847, General Orders of Major General Scott Speaks of surrender of Vera Cruz and the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa—gives orders to men not to approach either place, gives orders on where forces will be stationed, gives order on the treatment of the citizens of the city; names Gen. Worth as temporary governor and gives him orders as governor

RW47v24i31p1c1, April 16, 1847, Mt. W. D. Leake and Gen. Taylor
Opinion of Leake on the opinion of the administration's opinion of Taylor

RW47v24i31p1c2, April 16, 1847, Lieut. Col. Clay
Brief bio on Lieut. Col. Clay who died while in service in the war

RW47v24i31p1c2, April 16, 1847
A letter from Matamoras, which informs that Gen. Taylor is preparing to advance on San Luis Potosi

RW47v24i31p1c3, April 16, 1847, Steamboat "Rough and Ready" on the Rio Grande
Death of Paul C. Bank a native of Lynchburg Va

RW47v24i31p1c3, April 16, 1847, Tribute to Valor
Resolutions passed at a court house about Capt. Graham—praises

RW47v24i31p1c3, April 16, 1847, The Gallant Mississippians
Information on those killed and wounded in the battle of Buena Vista from the Mississippian 1st Rifle

RW47v24i31p1c3, April 16, 1847
R.K. Arthur of Mississippi gives a detailed account of Buena Vista

RW47v24i31p2c2, April 16, 1847
Opinion on an article written in the Union about Polk and other Generals fighting in the war

RW47v24i31p2c3, April 16, 1847, To the Whigs of the Metropolitan Congressional District
Opinion on the Mexican personality; information on advancement of US forces; report on rumors of fighting in the capital

RW47v24i31p2c2, April 16, 1847
Brig. Gen. Cadwallader arrived in New Orleans on the 7

RW47v24i31p2c2, April 16, 1847
Gen. Tom Thumb will begin his Public Levees in the city this evening

RW47v24i31p2c5, April 16, 1847, Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot Complaining about the administration no ordering flags raised and shots fired for the victories in Mexico

RW47v24i31p2c5, April 16, 1847, Compliment to Gen. Wool
Common Council of Troy has given 600 dollars for the construction of a sword for Gen. Wool

RW47v24i31p4c4, April 16, 1847, Great Whig Meeting—Nomination of Gen. Taylor for the President
Whigs in the city and county of Philadelphia ratified the nomination of Gen. Taylor for President

RW47v24i31p4c4, April 16, 1847, General Taylor—Colonel Clay Letter to the father of Colonel Clay from General Taylor after the death of his son—praises Clay

RW47v24i31p4c4, April 16, 1847, From Tampico
Announcement of the arrival of more troops—under the command of Capts. Gardenier and Plummer, Capt. Marshall, Lieut. Wyse—information on the raising of the troops

RW47v24i31p4c5, April 16, 1847, Later from the City of Mexico
Information on the state of revolution in the capital; report of another US victory with the fall of Chihuahua; Santa Anna's progress to the capital; Mexican reports of their battles

RW47v24i31p4c5, April 16, 1847, The Effects of discipline—the Volunteers at Buena Vista Report that volunteers who had been trained with great discipline performed excellently at Buena Vista.

RW47v24i28p1c1, April 16, 1847, The Mexican Ports
Letter from the President to the Secretary of War telling him to open Mexican ports to commerce of all nations and have duties paid to our treasury

RW47v24i28p1c1, April 16, 1847, Mr. Polk and Santa Anna
Remarks by the President about Santa Anna's return to Mexico
Mr. Richard W. Heath has been elected first Lieutenant of the Tampico Volunteers

Quote from the Union that stated that ever since Congress adjourned there has been no peace negotiations with Mexico

General Taylor
Quote from the US Gazette about General Taylor—giving praise

Copied from the New Orleans Picayune; information on conspiracy in New Mexico

No mediation of the British Government has been recently tendered to Polk, in the adjustment of Mexico

Capt. George Lincoln was killed at the battle of Buena Vista

Said that after the first day of fighting at Buena Vista some of Taylor’s officers advised a fall back but Taylor said no

Santa Anna has forwarded a recommendation to the Mexican Congress to sue for peace; gives information on Mexican army conditions

Santa Anna on approaching Taylor asked him to let him pass—said had a pass from the President to allow; Taylor said that he would not let Santa Anna pass—not sure if true

Two companies from Missouri—volunteers were cut off by Mexicans near Santa Fe

A continuation of northers has prevented the operation of the landing stores and heavy ordnance

Report of slight skirmishing; Mexicans passing into the city at night and taking the beach north of Taylor; information on the wound of Lieut. Col. Dickenson; Capt. Vinton keeping up rounds of firing; spies have been captured; landing mortars from ships; reconnoitering parties going out

Weather report; notes received from French and Spanish consuls; information on the firing on the castle; vessels have arrived; as soon as weather clears up they will be landing more equipment

Weather improved; enemy occasionally firing

Weather report; information that Santa Anna has retired to Matehuala with his army; Gen. Taylor moved his camp to Agua Nueva; Massachusetts volunteers ordered to stay at Matmoros; ship arrivals

Taylor has returned to Monterey; information on Taylor’s movement and troops and position of troops in regards to Urrea; predictions on Taylor catching Urrea

VA regiment has arrived here and gone up the Rio Grande; Massachusetts regiment arrived a few days ago and left for Monterey via Camargo; rest of regiment expected to leave tomorrow for the mouth of the Rio Grande

Steamer Corvette
Despatches from Gen. Taylor; information on steamboats now loaded and ready to head for Camargo; report that Taylor ran into Urrea

Battle of Buena Vista
Description of Gen. Taylor’s position; cannonading on the 21st; Taylor’s exposed situation; his white horse; battle of the 22nd of February; death of Col. M’Kee, Col. Clay, Col. Hardin, Adj’t Gen. Lincoln, Col. Yell, Capt. Willis; Col. Marshall’s charge; report of the Mississipians good job; Gen. Taylor’s left flank turn; killed and wounded; Minon’s discomfiture

Report of an incident at the battle of Buena Vista involving the Kentucky regiment; details of the battle fought by the Kentucky
regiment

RW47v24i28p; Col. Marshall's charge; report of the Mississippians good job; Gen. Taylor's left flank turn; killed and wounded; Minon's discomfiture

RW47v24i28p2c7, April 16, 1847, The Kentucky Regiment
Report of an incident at the battle of Buena Vista involving the Kentucky regiment; details of the battle fought by the Kentucky regiment

RW47v24i28p4c5, April 16, 1847, The Latest from Gen. Taylor
Santa Anna retreat to San Luis Potosi possibly further; information on Santa Anna's retreat and the position of the Mexican army; comments on the condition of the Mexican army; wonder about how many Mexicans have been lost

RW47v24i28p4c6, April 16, 1847, Correspondence of the New Orleans Tropic Report on the landing of the troops at Vera Cruz; weather report; information on the role of the navy after the capture of the castle

RW47v24i28p4c6, April 16, 1847, Vera Cruz
Speech by Gen. Juan Morales to his troops—speaking of taking up arms and fighting the Americans; encouraging his men RW47v24i28p4c2, April 16, 1847, Hard Push!

Comments on the Union and Enquirer's interpretation of General Taylor's word; letter by Gen. Taylor; RW interpretation of what Taylor meant

RW47v24i28p4c2, April 16, 1847, The Battle of Buena Vista
Letter from the New Orleans Picayune regarding the Scourge and constancy displayed by US troops, skillfulness of Taylor during the Battle of Buena Vista—part of the letter is reprinted

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, Official despatches
Union contains Taylor's brief account of the battle of Buena Vista, also contains a letter from the President to the Secretary of War about the opening of Mexican ports—will be printed in the next issue

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, From General Taylor's Camp
Report on the position of the Mexican army; flag sent from Santa Anna demanding a surrender; enemy withdrew further; report that losses have been sever

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, Summons of Santa Anna to Gen. Taylor
Santa Anna asking Taylor to surrender

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, Headquarters Army of Occupation
Taylor saying no to the surrender

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, Headquarters Army of Occupation
Taylor's position maintained and Mexican army withdraw; plan for exchange of prisoners; number of the killed and wounded

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, Headquarters Army of Occupation
Mexican army leaving and Taylor holding original position; Mexican losses seem to be high; Mexicans have made arrangement for retreat

RW47v24i28p4c3, April 16, 1847, From our Squadron off Vera Cruz
Arrival of Scott at Anton Lizardo; information on naval activities—where ships are moving; weather report; information on arms about the ships; information on troop landing and formation of lines around the city

RW47v24i28p4c4, April 16, 1847, Military Appointments

RW47v24i29p3c1, April 19, 1847, Important from Santa Fe
Confirmation of the Mexican victory at Santa Fe; information on where US troops drove Mexicans during the war; report on the battle—how conducted, with how many soldiers, who was in charge

RW47v24i29p3c1, April 19, 1847
From a letter to the St. Louis Union; gives comments on the possible situation now in New Mexico; information on troop movement; rumor that US has taken Chihuahua

RW47v24i32p2c4, April 20, 1847, From New Mexico
Report on fighting in New Mexico, near Santa Fe; Captain killed—Capt Burguin; number of killed and wounded
RW47v24i32p2c2, April 20, 1847, Prospect of Peace
President calling for more troops, therefore believed that peace is not near; Mexicans conducting a guerilla war; information on the Mexican army; prediction of future events in the area–capture of the capital but cont’d war

RW47v24i32p2c2, April 20, 1847, Major General Pillow
Account of the promotion of Gen. Pillow by a correspondent of the New York Tribune

RW47v24i32p2c2, April 20, 1847, General Taylor
From a letter from Washington; giving compliments to Taylor for his behavior during conflict at Buena Vista

RW47v24i32p1c3, April 20, 1847:
Letter from Mr. Kendall, which gives a gloomy account of the situation in Mexico City

RW47v24i32p1c3, April 20, 1847, From the Brazos
Rumors about interactions between Taylor and Gen. Urrea's forces; report from the Flag about Taylor giving provisions to wounded Mexicans; announcement of the arrival of 8 companies of volunteers

RW47v24i32p1c4, April 20, 1847, Battle of Buena Vista–Santa Anna's Report
Details of the battle of Buena Vista from Santa Anna

RW47v24i32p2c5, April 20, 1847, Late from the Brazos
Information on troop movement; orders from Taylor; report of small hostile encounters between the enemy and US forces; brief story on the capture and death of a Mexican

RW47v24i32p2c5, April 20, 1847, From the N.O. Delta, April 11
Information on troops near Caperero, south of Cerralvo; road from Camargo to Monterey and from Brazos to Saltillo is open; rumor of Taylor planning to march to San Luis; arrival of Virginia regiment; meeting to honor Taylor in Matamoros RW47v24i32p2c5, April 20, 1847, Excerpts from the Flag of the 3d inst.

Massachusetts Regiment now in Matamoros; attempted revolution in Mexico City

RW47v24i32p2c5, April 20, 1847, From Vera Cruz
Newspaper started in Vera Cruz; Scott had a resolution of Congress presenting to thank Taylor; report on an attack by the Mexicans on some US forces who had left camp; condemnation by Scott of actions taken by some US forces; citizens of Vera Cruz to give up their arms;

RW47v24i32p2c6, April 20, 1847, Arrival of Troops
Announcement of the arrival of troops from Pittsburgh

RW47v24i32p2c6, April 20, 1847, The Mississippi Regiment
Report on how the Mississippi Regiment was beaten battle at Buena Vista but kept fighting RW47v24i32p1c1, April 20, 1847, To the Polls!

Urging voters to vote on Tuesday–come out and vote against those who would expand/continue the war with Mexico

RW47v24i32p1c2, April 20, 1847
Letter from Mr. Kendall states that nothing has been heard from the expedition to Alvarado even though it was believed that the town would surrender without a fight

RW47v24i32p1c2, April 20, 1847, Mr. Polk's Terms
Excerpt from a Mexican newspaper on the US government’s recent terms of peace given to the Mexicans

RW47v24i32p1c2, April 20, 1847, Mexican Official Papers
Report on the Mexican loss at the battle of Sacramento–numbers of those dead on both dies, when the battle took place, names of commanders, number of forces there on both sides

RW47v24i32p2c3, April 20, 1847, To the Whigs of the Metropolitan Congressional District
Explanation of what the war has to do with the upcoming election and comparing the merits of the different candidates

RW47v24i32p3c1, April 20, 1847, Further Call Upon Volunteers
President as called for more volunteers

RW47v24i32p3c1, April 20, 1847
From an extra published by the Government Press in Santa Fe–information on the massacre at Taos, battles fought at Canada, El Emboda, and Taos, report of more US victories

RW47v24i32p4c2, April 20, 1847
Comments on an article published in the Enquirer warning young men of joining with the Whigs in condemnation of the war
When will the end of the war come? What will it entail?

Information brought by Mr. Haile including a memorandum written on one of the last days he was in Vera Cruz; information on the establishment of a government in Vera Cruz; information received about Santa Anna being inducted as president; list of passengers on board the Alabama

Quitman's brigade set out for Alvarado; no information from Mexico city; information on Mexican troops stations between Vera Cruz and the capital

General Order No. 80–congratulations to the army for the capture of Vera Cruz

Santa Anna's address to his army; Santa Anna's arrival in the capital and his inauguration, inaugural address and the policy of his new administration

Forces manage to keep continually on quivipe in expectation of a combined attack and revolt

Letter will be published tomorrow

General Taylor returned to Saltillo

Article published in the St. Louis Reveille about the Illinois Troops–some new, some veterans etc.

Common Council of Troy has given 600 dollars to make a sword for Wool

Most of those who have fallen in the war have been Whigs

Correspondence from New Mexico; gives detail of two battles; confirmation of murders at Taos; troop movement

Article on events in New Mexico; what to do with those who have been caught trying to start a revolution against the US?, can the US punish them?; what would happen if the Mexican government gives up New Mexico?

Rumor that authorities in Jalapa have made overtures to Scott for the surrender of the city; and another rumor that Gen. Twiggs had taken the National Bridge without resistance

Report that a messenger of peace was sent to Mexico by the US government; President has sworn not to give any land to Mexico where US soldiers have been killed

Governor of Missouri called upon to give another regiment of volunteers to serve in Mexico; the regiment is to serve establishing forts on the route to Oregon

General Taylor's detailed report of the Battle of Buena Vista

Report on the recent revolution in the territory from Sterling Price the Col. Commanding the army in New Mexico

Administration want money in order to gain peace with Mexico but now that they got the money reports from the administration say that peace does not look good
Information on movement of troops, US positions; rumors constantly from the capital; information on Santa Anna's position

Letter from Taylor to Gen. Butler giving a detailed description of the Battle of Buena Vista; comments from Taylor about his nomination for president

Report that General La Vega left Puente Nacional and is now fortifying a position at Cerro Gordo

Letter from Waddy Thompson Esq. Comments by the former Minister to Mexico about the war and US actions/use of force and call for peace

Letter from Taylor to Gen. Butler about the battle of Buena Vista and also containing comments about his nomination for the presidency

Report that General La Vega left Puente Nacional and is now fortifying a position at Cerro Gordo

Nothing interesting has occurred on the Rio Grande; depot has been established at China and on just below Camargo at Santa Anna; Capt. Arnold has reached Camargo; Lieut. Leslie Chase has gained an appointment to judge advocate for the western division of the US army; Maj. Gorman, Lieut. J. A. Picket and J. A. Buckmaster have been wounded; post office at Point Isabel has been moved to the Brazos

Gen. Houston of Texas in a speech stated that the commission of Major General was given to him and a colleague and both declined because they held different opinions with the officers who would have been their seniors in rank

Negotiations with Mexico Triste left for Vera Cruz; no new proposals will be given to Mexico; Mexico will now probably acknowledge the Rio Grande as border; if Mexico wont go for peace then Scott and Taylor have been order to fight for more victories; Triste will stay in Mexico until a document is signed

Mr. Poinsett, Mr. Calhoun and the Mexican War Report on the difference of opinion between Mr. Poinsett and Mr. Calhoun on the Mexican War

New Requisition for Volunteers Request by the President to the Governor of Virginia for two more regiments of volunteers

Announcement of the arrival of troops from Louisville; report that the steamer James L. Day has been ordered to Vera Cruz

From the Capital Report of the ceasing of arms hostilities in the Mexican Capital; Santa Anna now president; wealthy want peace and willing to give the Upper California and the left bank of the Rio Grande; popular masses in favor of continued hostilities; information about US troop positions

The Company of Voltigeurs Company leaving for war; under command of James D. Blair and William S. Walker and Washington Terret

General Taylor Article about Taylor's nomination as Whig candidate for president; reports that Taylor is anti-Whig; responses to articles written in other papers about Taylor's opinion on the nomination

Later from California Documents received from California; report that the war has ended in California, Californians want to join the United States; report of the probable loss of the Launch—a ship belonging to the US sloop–of–war Warren; result of an engagement near the Pueblo of los angeles; congratulations to men of the Southern Division by Stockton

Gen. Taylor–Mexican Banditti Letter from General Taylor about the depredations committed by a Mexican banditti on public and private property on the route from Camargo to Monterey; Taylor explains what he is going to do about the actions of the Mexican banditti

From Vera Cruz Information on orders given by General Scott; report of sending prizes from the castle and city to home; announces the arrival of animals

Two orders from Scott (No.80 and No. 87); congratulations on the victory at San Juan d'Ulloa; condemnation of atrocities committed at Vera Cruz by the army, gives strict orders to soldiers about where to stay/be at all times

RW47v24i34p1c3, April 27, 1847, Details of operations before Vera Cruz
Information about operations before the battle of Vera Cruz including a list of those killed and wounded

RW47v24i34p1c3, April 27, 1847, Artillery Headquarters
Information about a small skirmish including a numbers of those killed and wounded, details about the hostilities

RW47v24i34p1c3, April 27, 1847, Artillery Headquarters
Report of firing on the city; loss of Captain Vinton; information on ammunition used

RW47v24i34p1c3, April 27, 1847, Artillery Headquarters
More information about the firing at the city

RW47v24i34p1c3, April 27, 1847, Artillery Headquarters
Information on the firing of the city; report on the movement of the troops

RW47v24i34p1c4, April 27, 1847, Headquarters, Regiment MD. Riflemen
Information on Mexican troops near the bridge and on the road leading to it

RW47v24i34p4c1, April 27, 1847, General Taylor
Response by a correspondent at a Whig meeting in New York; comments about Taylor’s nomination to the Presidency

RW47v24i34p4c1, April 27, 1847, Nomination of Gen. Taylor
Citizens of York County called together to nominate Taylor for President; prints the resolutions made at the meeting

RW47v24i34p4c2, April 27, 1847, Who is Senor Atocha?
Extract from the New Orleans Delta about Mr. Polk’s late ambassador to Mexico–disagreement with the appointment of Senor Atocha for various reasons one being that he is a Mexican.

RW47v24i34p4c2, April 27, 1847, Letter from Vera Cruz
Letter from a Virginian in Mexico; information on those killed, description of ceremonies of surrender that took place, information on troop activity; details about hostilities

RW47v24i34p4c2, April 27, 1847, From the Pacific Squadron
Report from Com. Stockton–number of men, details on meeting with the enemy; information on the fighting–including numbers of those lost on both sides; Stockton refused to negotiate with Flores; Flores surrendered

RW47v24i34p2c3, April 27, 1847, Official Despatches
Despatches from Com. Stockton; Lieut Gray has left San Diego; information on the movement of officers. Information about fighting, movement of troops, numbers of those killed and wounded; arrival of Lieut. Col. Fremont; Flores sending men to camp to work out a peace

RW47v24i34p3c3, April 27, 1847
Terms of the peace between the forces in California–lists the articles of the agreement

RW47v24i34p3c3, April 27, 1847, Civil and military government of the Department of California
Document from Flores expressing his desire for peace

RW47v24i34p3c3, April 27, 1847, Late from Mexico
Report from a Mexican paper about the situation in the country–loss of Vera Cruz and an address by Santa Anna (reprinted), information on the build up of troops outside the capital at the National Bridge, report that the Mexican army from the North has returned

RW47v24i34p1c4, April 27, 1847, Camp Washington, Before Vera Cruz
Praising about the officers of the engineers who were engaged in the battle

RW47v24i35p1c2, April 30, 1847, Remains of Lt. Botts
Report that the remains of an officer have been escorted to the city; information about the funeral–who was there, when, where.

RW47v24i35p2c2, April 30, 1847, Father Rey
Reverend accompanied the army into Mexico as Roman Catholic chaplain; feared that he has been killed or taken prisoner; Freeman’s Journal said fear was unfounded and reverend with a Mexican family in Matamoros.

RW47v24i35p4c4, April 30, 1847, General Scott at Church
Letter from Vera Cruz speaking of Easter Sunday; Scott at church; opinion about US and Mexico being religious enemies

RW47v24i35p4c4, April 30, 1847, Gen'l Lamar Captured
Gen. Lamar with his company tried to join Gen. Taylor; was attacked and eventually had to surrendered
Announcement of Steamer Mountaineer arriving; gives number of troops and where they are to go in Mexico; tells of who is in command and where the troops came from

Colonel Bankhead arrived in New Orleans from Vera Cruz bringing despatches and trophies from Scott; information on Bankhead's position in Vera Cruz

Washington Union contradicts the rumor that Taylor and Scott are to be delayed until the volunteers arrive

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Atlas nominates Scott for President and John J. Crittenden as VP

A Baltimore Sun correspondent has called for a speedy peace; however information has been received that states that Santa Anna will resist as long and has hard as possible

Despatches giving different scenes of the battle at Vera Cruz

Information of the actions of the 2nd Brigade of the army–names officers involved, reaction of the enemy

More information on the actions of the division–troop movements, names of officers involved, reaction of the enemy to the hostilities,

Report on the movement of the second regiment dragoons–their fighting with the Mexican

Doubt of more fighting with the Mexicans because many have been called to the capital city; enemy forces fell back to Jalapa, which is after the National Bridge; rumors that Santa Anna is set on war

Brevets given to officers of the 3rd or 4th regiments; information on officer status in both regiments; belief that there was some oversight in the promotions–some left out that should not have been

Report that Stockton has assumed a power in suspending Kearny from the position of civil Governor, which Stockton had given Kearny after his arrival in California

Report of the new arriving about the victory at Buena Vista; more volunteers leaving for Mexico; comments about Taylor nomination for President

Predictions based on information from Mexico about the future prospects of peace; unfavorably comments about Triste's ability to be helpful; disagreements on border; extract from the Baltimore American about annexation

Report that the body of Botts, who died in Mexico, reached the city yesterday

Letter from the city of Taos–requests for medical supplies, comments about the battle of Puebla, rumor about an American fighting against the US and killing most of those who died and he was eventually killed by American forces

Ad requesting soldiers
Report of Gen. Twiggs and Gen. Quitman moving with their command upon Jalapa; report of the American crew of a Vermont schooner being taken prisoner by Mexicans; report of location of US bomb vessels; US sloop of war arrived at Sacrificios

Information about forces at Vera Cruz; details on the battle-size or armies, opinion about Mexican language in papers dealing with Americans, information on fleet movement and the capture of Alvarado, Twiggs moving towards the capital; Santa Anna issuing an order about continuing the war

May

Editors ask how Whigs can say war was unjustly waged yet rejoice in victories.

The Washington Union’s commentary on General Taylor’s possible candidacy.

Reports of conflicts between territorial governors from the N.O. Picayune and Charleston Mercury.

Reports the dramatic weight loss of a Capt. McManus just returned from the War.

An unsigned poem from the New York Herald.

State of Mexico’s internal affairs.

Courrier des Etats Unis of New York. Dated April 9. Santa Anna’s heart is inclined to peace.

From New Orleans Picayune, April 24. Latest news carried by the Trumbull.

Reports of lack of Mexican Support.

Their organization and sacrifice.

Extracts from a letter of Capt. Hughes of the Corps of Topographical Engineers dated April 14th. Recently arrived from Vera Cruz published in the Washington Union May 1st.

Summary of his feelings regarding General Taylor.

Picayune remarks on the promotions of Generals Quitman, Pillow, and Cashing.

From the Picayune April 23rd, regarding intelligence, advances, and Santa Anna’s defense preparations.

A proclamation of Winfield Scott. Mexican people should rest easy and go about their daily lives.

CORRESPONDENCE OF NEW ORLEANS DELTA
Various reports from Mexico between March 29th and April 13th.

RW24i36p4c5, May 4, 1847, NOTICE TO COMMERCE
From the Mexican consulate at Havana. Regarding confiscation of goods. April 12th. Faro Industrial.

RW24i37p1c5, May 7, 1847, GENERAL TAYLOR’S PERSONAL APPEARANCE
A "true" picture by a correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger to replace "abominable caricatures."

RW24i37p1c5, May 7, 1847, THE VICTORY TO COME
Prentice says "We have before us maps of the battle grounds upon which General Taylor won his four great victories in Mexico. We have also before us a map of the battle ground upon which he win his great battle of 1848 – that is to say, a map of the United States"

RW24i37p2c1, May 7, 1847, OFFICIAL DISPATCHES
Dispatches from Col. Doniphan and General Kearny fighting in places which get little attention.

RW24i37p2c1, May 7, 1847, UNTITLED
Picayune comments on Taylor’s writing style.

RW24i37p2c2, May 7, 1847, UNTITLED
San Antonio raises four companies of volunteers as others arrive there with enthusiasm.

RW24i37p2c3, May 7, 1847, CAUSE AND CONSEQUENCE
Mass Peace Society offers five–hundred dollar prize for an essay on war.

RW24i37p2c4, May 7, 1847, OFFICIAL: CALIFORNIA
General Kearny's letter between December 12, 1846 and January 14, 1847.

RW24i37p2c5, May 7, 1847, CHIHUAHUA
Col. Doniphan's letters between March 4th and March 20th.

RW24i37p2c6, May 7, 1847, YUCATAN
Extract of a letter from Merida, March 31, 1847.

RW24i37p4c1, May 7, 1847, UNTITLED
Baltimore Sun explains Mexican defenses between Vera Cruz and Jalapa.

RW24i37p4c2, May 7, 1847, THE VOLUNTEERS
Picayune comments on volunteers.

RW24i37p4c4, May 7, 1847, LATER FROM BRAZOS
Papers from Brazos Santiago delivered by steamship telegraph and published in New Orleans Bee April 27th.

RW24i37p4c5, May 7, 1847, GENERAL TAYLOR ON THE FIELD OF BATTLE
Lieut. Corwin writes to Cincinnati Chronicle sketching Taylor at Buena Vista.

RW24i37p4c4, May 7, 1847, A NOBLE VOLUNTEER AT BUENA VISTA
The story of an Illinois Volunteer.

RW24i37p4c4, May 7, 1847, CAPT. BURGWIN.
A deserved tribute to Capt. Burgwin for his efforts in putting down the Taos insurrection. Published in the Charleston Mercury.

RW24i38p1c1, May 11, 1847, THE "TERRITORIES" OF NEW MEXICO
The consequences of occupation.

RW24i38p1c2, May 11, 1847, GENERAL TAYLOR AND THE LOCOS
Locofocos in SW may support his candidacy.

RW24i38p1c3, May 11, 1847, UNTITLED
Coming soon. Scott's official account of Cerro Gordo.

RW24i38p1c3, May 11, 1847, ORGANIZATION OF THE GOVERNMENT IN NEW MEXICO

RW24i38p1c4, May 11, 1847, UNTITLED
From Picayune May 1st. An editorial regarding what happens to wounded by George Wilkins Kendall.

RW24i38p1c4, May 11, 1847, FURTHER DETAILS OF THE BATTLE
American Eagle published at Vera Cruz. Provides great detail of the battle of Cerro Gordo.

RW24i38p1c4, May 11, 1847, FROM THE CITY OF MEXICO
Printed in Picayune May 1st. Papers recently arrived from Tampico dated to April 9th.

RW24i38p1c4, May 11, 1847, CORRESPONDENCE OF THE BALTIMORE SUN
Discussion of Mr. Parish and the possible contents of the dispatches he is to carry to Mexico.

RW24i38p2c3, May 11, 1847, THE PROSPECT OF PEACE
Latest papers breathe fierce spirit.

RW24i38p2c3, May 11, 1847, THE NEW ORLEANS PICAYUNE GIVES THE FOLLOWING INCIDENT OF THE BATTLE OF CERRO GORDO
Particular mention of the bravery of Tennessee.

RW24i38p2c4, May 11, 1847, OFFICIAL: GENERAL SCOTT'S LATEST DISPATCH
Printed in the Washington Union, dated April 19th.

RW24i38p2c5, May 11, 1847, MEXICO
State of internal affairs from New Orleans Times. May 3rd.

RW24i38p2c6, May 11, 1847, LATER FROM VERA CRUZ
Coverage from New Orleans Times and Picayune regarding victories, the capture of Tuspan an the triumph of the Navy.

RW24i38p2c6, May 11, 1847, FROM MATAMOROS
Regarding indemnification.

RW24i38p4c1, May 11, 1847, IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE!
After Santa Anna escaped, warring factions make country weaker with their rallying man gone.

RW24i38p4c1, May 11, 1847, UNTITLED
Volunteers in New Mexico reluctant to reenlist.

RW24i38p4c2, May 11, 1847, THE VIRGINIA REGIMENT

RW24i38p4c2, May 11, 1847, GENERAL TAYLOR
Washington Union believes Whigs are just using the General for his popularity and really intend to elect Mr. Clay.

RW24i38p4c2, May 11, 1847, UNTITLED
Rumor that General Lamar has been cut to pieces by Mexicans is discredited by Houston Telegraph.

RW24i38p4c3, May 11, 1847, IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE!
Another Glorious Victory!! Battle of Cerro Gordo! From Picayune Extra, April 30th.

RW24i38p4c4, May 11, 1847, LATE FROM MONTEREY
A letter dated April 4th from Monterey arrived at New Orleans from the Brazos. Printed in Mobile Register and Journal, May 1st.

RW24i38p4c4, May 11, 1847, LATER FROM SANTA FE
Reports the trials of Mexican Rebels are progressing.

RW24i39p1c2, May 14, 1847, WHAT NEXT?
Does occupation mean peace?

RW24i39p1c3, May 14, 1847, GENERAL TAYLOR'S MOVEMENTS
Determined to advance his current position. National Intelligencer.

RW24i39p1c3, May 14, 1847, OFFICIAL
Brief and only dispatch to the Navy department concerning capture of Tuspan.

RW24i39p1c4, May 14, 1847, MR. BOTT'S POSITION ON THE WILMONT PROVISO
Because Mr. Bott's has been elected we should give his proposal the proper consideration. editorial signed ONE OF THE PEOPLE.
RW24i39p1c6, May 14, 1847, CHARGES AND SPECIFICATIONS
Detailed description of the charges against Lieut. Charles G. Hunter by Commodore Matthew C. Perry. Includes Lieut.'s reference, findings, and reprimand.

RW24i39p1c7, May 14, 1847, FROM SANTA FE
Reports include: finding of Col. Burns' body and a half million dollars remitted.

RW24i39p1c7, May 14, 1847, CORRESPONDENCE FROM BALTIMORE SUN
Commissioners soon to be sent.

RW24i39p2c1, May 14, 1847, EVENTS IN MEXICO
Results of the Mexican Congress extraordinary session called after Santa Anna's defeat at Cerro Gordo.

RW24i39p2c2, May 14, 1847, THE TEHUANTEPEC CANAL
Strict constructionists will require ship canal across Isthmus of Tehuantepec as part of peace terms.

RW24i39p2c3, May 14, 1847, UNTITLED
Whig reaction to the Washington Union's position that Church Property in Mexico be sequestered.

RW24i39p2c3, May 14, 1847, FROM TAMPOCO
Letter from correspondent dated April 15, 1847 about Mexican police conspiracy.

RW24i39p2c3, May 14, 1847, UNTITLED
Discusses a proposition made to Scott by Lieut. Maynard of the Navy to arm sailors with revolvers instead of muskets.

RW24i39p2c4, May 14, 1847, HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO
Latest papers arriving from Vera Cruz on steamship New Orleans, regarding Jalapa, Tuspan, Santa Anna, and the merging of Scott and Taylor's armies.

RW24i39p4c2, May 14, 1847, NEW MEXICO AND CHIHUAHUA
Possession cannot be maintained without fresh troops.

RW24i39p4c2, May 14, 1847, PEACE OR WAR
As discussed by the Eagle, a recently established newspaper by Americans in Vera Cruz.

RW24i40p1c1, May 18, 1847, OBJECT OF WAR
Comments on the administrations unwillingness to speak on the wars causes and objectives. Commentary by a knowledgeable Washington correspondent to the New York Herald.

RW24i40p1c4, May 18, 1847, UNTITLED
Union contradicts rumor that Gen. Scott had been ordered to halt at Jalapa.

RW24i40p1c4, May 18, 1847, UNTITLED
Account of Buena Vista from an Arkansas officer appearing in the Little Rock Gazette.

RW24i40p1c4, May 18, 1847, THE VALLEY OF EL PASO
Washington Union describes the fruitful valley and its importance to the U.S.

RW24i40p1c4, May 18, 1847, GEN. LA VEGA
Thoughts on the distinguished Mexican General.

RW24i40p2c1, May 18, 1847, THE NEWS FROM MEXICO
Picayune reports "cessation of hostilities" likely.

RW24i40p2c2, May 18, 1847, UNTITLED
The gallantry at Cerro Gordo by Capt. Magruder of Caroline County, Virginia, as told by Mr. Kendall of the Picayune.

RW24i40p2c2, May 18, 1847, UNTITLED.
List of killed and wounded at Cerro Gordo. From the Picayune.

RW24i40p2c3, May 18, 1847, LATER FROM THE BRAZOS
All is quiet in Brazos.

RW24i40p2c4, May 18, 1847, OFFICIAL.
Matthew Perry's reports from Flag Ship Mississippi off Vera Cruz. Dated April 19–24.
RW24i40p2c5, May 18, 1847, LATER FROM MEXICO
From Picayune May 11. Topics include: Guerilla War, Santa Anna, and end of hostilities. From Vera Cruz on Steamship James L. Day.

RW24i40p2c5, May 18, 1847, SCRAPS FROM THE AMERICAN STAR
Excerpts from the American paper begun in Jalapa soon after April 19th.

RW24i40p4c1, May 18, 1847, CONFISCATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY IN MEXICO
Should U.S. punish the Church for its financial support of the war?

RW24i40p4c2, May 18, 1847, THE MEXICAN TARIFF
Discussion of the affects it will have on the economy.

RW24i40p4c2, May 18, 1847, UNTITLED
Volunteers committed from Maryland.

RW24i40p4c2, May 18, 1847, KILLED AND WOUNDED
Casualties from Gen. Twigg and Shield’s divisions at Cerro Gordo. From Picayune.

RW24i40p4c4, May 18, 1847, WAR ITEMS: MEXICAN INCIDENTS

RW24i41p1c1, May 21, 1847, A NEW AND BOLD SUGGESTION
The New York Sun suggests ways in which the United States could be indemnified for the expenses incurred in war.

RW24i41p1c2, May 21, 1847, CAPT. STEVENS T. MASON
Severely wounded at the battle of Cerro Gordo, a native of Loudoun country, Virginia.

RW24i41p1c3, May 21, 1847, UNTITLED
New Orleans Times has letter from Mexico City dated April 30th. Writer seems to be unaware of the deputation proceeding to Scott’s head–quarters.

RW24i41p1c3, May 21, 1847, UNTITLED.
New Orleans reports arrival of troops being sent to Mexico.

RW24i41p1c4, May 21, 1847, FROM THE CITY OF MEXICO
From the New Orleans Picayune, May 12. Covers internal state of Mexican affairs as well as the treatment of American prisoners.

RW24i41p1c4, May 21, 1847, THE SEAT OF WAR
From the New Orleans Bulletin, May 12. Discussion of how General Scott is going about reinforcing his army before taking Mexico City.

RW24i41p1c5, May 21, 1847, SANTA ANNA’S DISPATCH FROM CERRO GORDO
Dated April 17th, Santa Anna gives a rich account of the engagement of the first day to the Minister of War and Marine.

RW24i41p2c1, May 21, 1847, JEFFERSON IN 1805, VERSUS POLK IN 1846
A comparison, with Texas being an important consideration for Polk.

RW24i41p2c2, May 21, 1847, CHURCH PROPERTY IN MEXICO
Washington Union reemphasizes that it's suggestion that the United States confiscate Church property as party of the indemnifications was purely their own unauthorized speculation.

RW24i41p2c2, May 21, 1847, UNTITLED
Washington Union says that accounts of possible peace agreements may not be correct.

RW24i41p2c2, May 21, 1847, UNTITLED.
French reaction to General Taylor’s reply to Santa Anna’s surrender summons.

RW24i41p2c2, May 21, 1847, UNTITLED.
Distances from Vera Cruz to other places of note in Mexico, as reported by the Charleston Courier.

RW24i41p2c3, May 21, 1847, LETTER FROM THE ARMY
A letter from a young Virginia officer attached to Gen. Scott’s army. Dated April 25th, 1847 from Jalapa. Signed W.B.B.

RW24i41p2c5, May 21, 1847, AMERICAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO
From the New Orleans Picayune, May 13. Regarding the Letter from Major Gaines, the Encarnacion Prisoners, Mexican Gratitude, and the Route from Saltille to Mexico.
A letter from Monterey dated April 15th, 1847. Carried by the transport steamer Telegraph. Signed J.E.D.

General Scott's report from Jalapa dated April 23, 1847.

Dated May 6, 1847 from Brassos. Reports that Brig. Gen. Cadwallader has just arrived. Gives the opinion that General Taylor should advance on San Louis once he has 10,000 men.

New Orleans Bulletin confirms that the Mexican Government has abandoned the capital and it is now under the protection of General Scott.

General Taylor's army is not on the move to San Louis de Potosi, but is forced to remain due to the expiration of many volunteer's terms of service.

General Taylor's popularity surpasses party lines.

The knowledgeable Washington correspondent to the Philadelphia Ledger speaks despairingly about the capture of Santa Anna, believing that the best hopes for peace rested on his shoulders.

Lieut. Col. Anderson of Tennessee left his hospital bed to join the boys despite opposition from his surgeon. From the N. O. Picayune.

The heroics of young Lieut. French.

From the Philadelphia American. The role of the Marine Corps in the war.

From the N. O. Picayune, May 11. The latest from General Taylor's camp as they face expiration of volunteer terms and the low water of the Rio Grande.

A report from the American Flag, published in Matamoros, containing the depredations of the Camanche Indians. From the N.O. Bee.

From the N.O. Picayune, May 11. Reports the arrival of Major Campbell of Springfield, M.O.

Extracts from a letter written by a young Virginia officer, W. B. B.

Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune. Includes: Three reports from Jalapa: April 29, May 1, May 4, 1847. All signed G.W.K; A proclamation from Jose Mariana Salas; and an article from the American Eagle dated May 5th.

A letter from the Jalapa American Star of April 29.

What action shall the United States take if Mexico continues to refuse peace?

Follow up on the censure of the General and his actions towards certain American prisoners. A letter to the Picayune by one of his aids, Enrique Mejia, attempting to exonerate him. Not found acceptable by the editors.

No army reports from Vera Cruz, only reports of sickness, says Picayune of the 15th.

Report from the Washington correspondent that one of Mr. Polk's dear friends was killed in the battle of Buena Vista. Mr. Polk has adopted Col. Yell of Arkansas's son.

N. O. Bulletin says that if Gen. Taylor has had another clash with the Mexicans it must have been on a very small scale.

FROM THE JALAPA AMERICAN STAR OF APRIL 29.
Mexican officer reports recent losses to be 980, a figure that was supposed much higher. Writers believe hundreds have been shaved off the actual number.

From the Picayune, May 14. Reports of Guerilla activity all along the valley, and warnings that such activities should be of primary consideration.

A letter dated April 4, 1847 from Monterey. Published in the Cincinnati Chronicle.

Many lies have been told to persuade the people that it is in their best interest to go to war. From Jefferson’s Virginia, page 290.

Summary of comments made recently by a Mr. Benton on the nature of Gen. Scott's capture of San Juan de Ulua.

Commentary regarding a speech by Senator Benton at St. Louis praising the Polk administration for its stance on the Oregon question in light of the developments in Mexico at the time.

Commentary on an editorial in the Washington Union that forgets Santa Anna is only in Mexico because of Mr. Polk.

Courrier des Etats Unis encourages optimism.

Latest dispatch from Taylor’s camp at Monterey. Dated April 21, 1847.

More commentary on the Senator’s speech regarding the administration.

The United States’ goal has always been to conquer a peace, but although Mexico cannot defend itself, she is no more willing to settle for peace now than after Palo Alto.

The Baltimore Patriot comments on the Union’s coverage of the issue of taking church property as indemnification.

A letter from Castle of Perote, dated April 25, 1847.

Includes the following reports: April 19 from Gen. Twigs, April 24 from Jalapa by Gen Twigs, April 23 from Jalapa by R. Patterson, April 22 from Perote by W.J. Worth, April 18 from Plan del Rio by G.J. Pillow, and April 21 from Jalapa by W.M. Sharney.

Discussion of the volunteer problems for Gen. Scott. Illegible.

Intelligence from Santa Fe confirms hangings of Mexicans as traitors, but suggests Indians are the biggest problem.

Dated May 1. Unsigned. Describes the geography of the land.

The mystery of Mr. N.P. Trist’s departure from Washington appears to be solved as he has reportedly arrived in Vera Cruz.

The St. Louis Republican reports nothing new in Santa Fe. Only continuing Union repudiates opinions of the Philadelphia Ledger and New York Sun regarding the administration as "atrociously false". Reports the New York Commercial.

From the Picayune May 19. Nothing new to report from Vera Cruz, only the rumors spreading about Santa Anna and that sickness does not appear to be on the rise. Contains editorial by G.W.K regarding Scott’s movements, as well as a summary of letters from the Mexican capital covering various subjects.
RW47v24n43p1c5, May 28, 1847, DEPARTURE OF TROOPS.
Steamship New Orleans leaves Vera Cruz. From Picayune, May 19.

RW47v24n43p1c5, May 28, 1847, AMERICAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO.
From the Picayune, May 19. A report that Majors Gaines and Borland were allowed the freedom of the city of Mexico. This is not believed due to reports only a short time before that they were in close confinement in the felons’ castle of Santiago.

RW47v24n43p1c5, May 28, 1847, FROM THE VERA CRUZ EAGLE OF MAY 12.
Activities of Com. Perry.

RW47v24n43p2c1, May 28, 1847, LETTER FROM GENERAL TAYLOR.
New Orleans Bulletin publishes extracts of a letter from Gen. Taylor to a distinguished citizen of Louisiana regarding his candidacy. He does not deny his willingness to serve, but states he has no aspirations for the position.

RW47v24n43p2c2, May 28, 1847, THE WHOLE OR NONE.
a letter writer to the Baltimore Sun says this should be the war cry in regard to Mexico as it was in Oregon. Whig editors warn of this sentiment.

RW47v24n42p2c2, May 28, 1847, UNTITLED.
Major John P. Gaines, although a prisoner in Mexico, is the Whig candidate for Congress in the Marysville district in Kentucky.

RW47v24n42p2c2, May 28, 1847, UNTITLED.

RW47v24n42p2c2, May 28, 1847, LIEUT. WILLIE P. HALE.
From the Picayune. The story of a young Virginian who lost his life at Cerro Gordo.

RW47v24n42p2c4, May 28, 1847, LATER FROM GEN. SCOTT’S ARMY.
From the Picayune, May 20. Correspondence from Vera Cruz, May 13 and from Jalapa, May 11. As well as a Proclamation to the Mexican people from Scott and reports from the Flag.

RW47v24n42p2c6, May 28, 1847, THIRD DRAGOON.
Troops previously ordered to join Gen. Taylor have been redirected. This seems to indicate that the Rio Grande Army will not move towards San Louis Potosi at this time.

RW47v24n42p4c1, May 28,1847: THE PEACE RUMORS.
Santa Anna appears to be raising up another army to defend the city, while Scott faces loss of volunteers.

RW47v24n42p4c1, May 28, 1847, UNTITLED.
Col. Butler, who commands the regiment of South Carolina Volunteers, writes to his governor that peace would be welcome.

RW47v24n42p4c2, May 28, 1847, THE NEW TARIFF FOR MEXICO.
Discussion on which country would benefit more from a proposed tariff.

RW47v24n42p4c2, May 28, 1847, GENERAL TAYLOR.
Compares his wild popularity in the army with the opinions of him in Europe.

RW47v24n42p4c2, May 28, 1847, A PROMPT RESPONSE.
Illinois quickly sends more regiments.

RW47v24n42p4c2, May 28, 1847, UNTITLED.
New York Sun publishes outrageous letter supposedly written in England to further their cause of “the whole or none” of Mexico. Similar articles were published in 1844 regarding the annexation of Texas.

RW47v24n42p4c4, May 28, 1847, FROM TEXAS.
Steamship Yacht arrived from Galveston on the 16th with the latest news including fears of the Camanches and movements of volunteers.

RW47v24n42p4c5, May 28, 1847, LATER FROM GEN. SCOTT’S ARMY.
From the Picayune May 18. Includes correspondence on the March on Puebla, Arrival of the Volunteers, and the return of Gen. Patterson, dated May 11 from Jalapa, May 8 from Vera Cruz as well as a proclamation from Santa Anna dated April 22 from Orizaba.

RW47v24n42p4c6, May 28, 1847, LATEST FROM SANTA FE AND CALIFORNIA.
From the St. Louis Republican, May 17. Reactions of the natives to the American occupation as well as reports of troops joining Gen. Kearny.

June
The Train From Vera Cruz
-War munitions

The Army
-About men serving only 12 months

Washington Letter Writers
-About General Scott’s Proclamation

Major General Pillow
-Should not have been promoted

Ole Rough and Ready
-Speech given to new boys

Second Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers

To the Public
-About General Pillow

British Opinions
-About the war with Mexico

Peace or War

General Taylor

Likeness of Rough and Ready

Later from Santa Fe
-Ill health of soldiers

War’s Ravages
-Disease and deaths due to war

From the Army of General Taylor
-Article about no news

From Santa Fe
-Heroes from town

News from the Steamer Palmetto

Colonel Harney
-About his good looks and charm

British Opinions
-US doesn’t care about them

Mexican Territory
-Slavery issues

The Mexican Pirates
-US out to capture them

Further from Mexico

Mexico

From the Brazos

Texas
-Indians there causing trouble
The New Orleans Picayune of the 26th ultimo contains further news from Tampico. A private letter says:

"I can hear of nothing of interest from the interior. The general impression is that Herrera will be elected President of Mexico upon the opening of Congress, and that overtures of peace will be immediately made to our Government. This I conceive very probable, as the citizens are disposed for peace; but as soon as Santa Anna hears of such an occurrence his steps will be turned towards the capital, and whoever is elected President will enjoy his functions but for a short time."

The Picayune has no faith in the opinion above expressed, of the good disposition of the Mexicans, never having met with a trace of such feeling in any of their papers.

The El Echo de Tampico, of the 12th inst. contains a further correspondence between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna, only one passage of which is important. General Taylor writes from Saltillo, on the 20th of November, acknowledging the courtesy of Santa Anna in releasing seven American prisoners. He then quotes from the terms of the armistice of Monterey, to justify our Government in putting an end to it; and concludes by expressing the hope that the Mexican Congress will accept the offer of the U. States, and enter into negotiations for the termination of hostilities and the establishment of a permanent peace. Santa Anna replied on the 24th, and concludes his letter as follows:

"I will conclude this note by assuring you that I entertain the hope that the sovereign National Congress, which is immediately to be installed, will act as shall be most conducive to the interests of the Republic; but I believe that I do not deceive myself in assuring you, that neither the Congress, nor any Mexican, will ever be able to listen to overtures of peace unless the national territory be first evacuated by the forces of the United States, and the hostile attitude of their vessels of war be withdrawn. This must be without a doubt the preliminary of whatever negotiation may be opened; and it may be permitted to me to declare to you, that the nation, moved by a sentiment of patriotism, and determined to defend at every hazard and inch by inch its territory, will never cease to qualify as it deserves, and as the world has already qualified it, the conduct of the United States; and it will do whatever it can and ought honorably to deserve the title which it bears of independent and free.”

The Picayune says that no other part of the correspondence is important; but here we have expressed the determination of the Mexican people in the energetic words of their ablest leader.

Com. Conner left Tampico on the 11th ult. for Anton Lizardo. Upon his arrival there an expedition will sail for Laguna, and it is believed to be his intention to occupy Tabasco permanently.

The Picayune says that no other part of the correspondence is important; but here we have expressed the determination of the Mexican people in the energetic words of their ablest leader.

Com. Conner left Tampico on the 11th ult. for Anton Lizardo. Upon his arrival there an expedition will sail for Laguna, and it is believed to be his intention to occupy Tabasco permanently.

RW47v24i2p1c3, January 5, 1847 Departure of the Troops.

Four companies of the first battalion if Virginia Volunteers left this city yesterday morning for Old Point:

The Richmond Grays, Capt. Robert G. Scott, jr.;
The Richmond Rangers, Capt. E. C. Carrington, jr.;
The Alexandria Volunteers, Capt. J. H. Corse;
The Carolina Volunteers, Capt. Smith P. Bankhead.
The fifth company, the Petersburg Volunteers, commanded by Capt. Fletcher H. Archer, we understand, were to meet their comrades at City Point.
The Staunton Volunteers, Capt. Kenton Harper, we understand, will go down to Old Point on Wednesday.

On Saturday, the Volunteers were addressed, we learn, in an impressive and eloquent manner by the Rev. Dr. Plumer.

RW47v24i2p1c5, January 5, 1847

Richmond, January 2d, 1847.

To the Editors of the Richmond Whig:

Gentlemen– An article (Editorial) in your paper of this morning relative to the Volunteers, is well calculated to produce and has produced an erroneous impression in regard to my company. You speak of it as one of the companies to compose the 2nd Battalion of the Virginia Regiment, if I shall succeed in making out my roll– (I do not quote your language, not having the paper before me.) I have already a sufficient number of men to muster into the service, but they are scattered over the State, and cannot get here for several days. My company has been accepted by the Governor, and will constitute part of the Virginia Regiment.

You will oblige me by correcting the erroneous impression you have created.

Respectfully, &c.
WM. B. ARCHER.

RW47v24i2p1c5, January 5, 1847:

From the Lynchburg Virginian, Dec. 31

A note from Major Jubal A. Early, of the Virginia Regiment, informs us that he has failed to raise a full company in Franklin and the adjoining counties, fifty–five being the highest number enrolled. The great obstacle has been the want of a place of rendezvous, and the means sustaining the Volunteers while the company is filling up– it being as difficult nearly to re–assemble the men as to recruit them in the first instance.

Major Early expects to be in Lynchburg, on Saturday, and to bring with him as many as possible of those whose names have been enrolled in Franklin, Henry & Bedford. He hopes here to be joined by patriotic young men of the Town and surrounding counties, and that a Company, to represent this quarter of the State, may yet be organized, and, should this be impossible, he will conduct all who may meet him to Richmond where they can join some of the Companies whose ranks are not yet full. Major Early asks if Lynchburg will not follow the patriotic example set her by other Towns in the State and provide quarters and sustenance for the Volunteers whilst here. We think we may safely answer in the affirmative for our citizens.
We sincerely hope Major Early may take to Richmond a full Company, in whose Welfare, though not its immediate commander, he would feel a particular interest.

RW47v24i2p1c5, January 5, 1847, Marriage of a Volunteer.

Yesterday afternoon, at East Boston, Henry Carney, one of Capt. Webster's company, was married to Miss Alvira Bent. Lieut. Kelley, officer of the day, allowed an escort of thirteen men in uniform, with side arms, under Sergeant Stearns, to accompany the bridegroom from the quarters in Pitt Street to East Boston, and witness the wedding. A furlough of forty eight hours was also allowed the bridegroom.

In the forenoon twenty men of this company, in uniform, attended the Rev. Mr. Taylor's church.

The reverend gentleman availed himself of the circumstances to discourse eloquently upon the duties of patriotism, and at the close of the service he prayed that the young defenders of their country present, and their brethren in arms, might go forth to battle armed with the breast plate of righteousness, and be sustained in the hour of utmost danger by a sure hope in Christ.—Boston Post.

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, Revolution in Campeachy– Revolution in Tabasco.

We have received, through a respectable commercial house of this city, accounts from Campeachy to the 9th inst., and from Tabasco to the 18th of November. The documents before us are not complete, but we infer from them there was another pronunciamento made at Campeachy on the 8th of December.

We have an address dated the 8th by Domingo Barret in which he alludes to the formal pronunciamento and yields a reluctant acquiescence the wishes of his fellow citizens, and presents himself as the chief of the glorious revolution which was that day commenced, and swears to discharge his duty with loyalty and purity. We would give the whole of this address, but that these convulsions in Yucatan are of very little moment of themselves, and that the address of Senor Barret does not very clearly point out the wrongs which by the revolution are sought to be redressed.

As the revolution broke out on the 8th and our advices are only to the 9th inst. we are unable to say how far Senor Barret has succeeded.

We come now to the pronunciamento of the garrison of Tabasco. This is dated the 19th of Nov., in the city of San Juan Bautista de Tabasco, so recently blockaded by Com. Perry. The officers assembled at the quarters of the commandant general, Juan Bautista Traconis, allege that full representations had been made to the Supreme Government of the defenceless state of their department, and of the recent invasion of it by the Americans; and that the Government had in substance denied all their prayers for aid. They allege that the Central Government only uses Tabasco for its convenience—drawing a revenue from it and appointing to office therein; but taking no heed to its internal welfare or protection from foreign enemies. They complain that General Salas and his ministers are exclusively occupied in domestic quarrels, and in accruing their own places; that the independence and security of the country are of secondary importance with them. In proof of this the abandonment of Tampico is cited and the indifference manifested towards the protection of Tabasco, threatened by the American squadron. By all these considerations, and others—really "too numerous to mention"—they are induced to declare as follows: First. The State of Tabasco disavows the Government of the Republic, whilst no effort is made to preserve the integrity of the national territory. Second. The same State being compelled by conduct of the said Government to provide for her own security and defence, will regulate her internal administration upon basis more liberal and adequate to the circumstances of the existing war.

These two articles were approved by acclamation, and a third was then adopted, appointing Senor Traconis, named above, as the head of the revolution, in consideration of his heroic defence of the State from the invasion of the American squadron in the month of October. Private letters would lead us to suppose that a design is entertained of uniting with Yucatan in throwing off the Central Government; but the "lights before us" are quite too faint to authorize us to assert this positively. We note that in the document before us there is little of that bitterness evinced towards the United States, when they are mentioned, which we are accustomed to find in all public papers from other parts of the Republic. At the same time, there is nothing in the least conciliatory in the language employed.

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847

From the N. O. Picayune, Dec. 26

From Galveston.—The steamship Palmetto, Captain Smith arrived last evening from Galveston, whence she sailed on Tuesday, the 22nd inst.
The Palmetto encountered a heavy gale on her last passage to Galveston. In the midst of it she took fire, and there was for some time the utmost possible alarm among the passengers. The fire was ultimately subdued and found to have proceeded from some spirits of turpentine which was upset in the steward’s pantry, and set on fire by a lamp placed there.

There is a story in the Galveston News, told by a teamster recently from Mexico to the effect that Col. Riley was recently surrounded, at Morelos, by 5000 Mexicans under Gen. Urrea, and that there was no hope of Col. R.’s escape. We do not believe a word of it.

We find a few items of local news in our Texas files of interest. There was some talk that the Indians on the frontiers were making hostile demonstrations, but no actual depredations had been committed.

______________________________

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, Desertions from the American Army.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Tropic, writing from Monterey, on the 27th ultimo, says:

This morning three Mexicans were arrested on a charge of trying to induce some of our men to desert—One of them is the son of the Alcalde, and I think it will go hard with them. Gen. Taylor was in town, and told them that unless some three or four men, who had been seduced off, were brought back in a given time, he would hang them in the Plaza. This business induced me to make inquiry as to the number of men who had deserted from our ranks, and was told that not less than fifty had gone over to the enemy since the capitulation of Monterey; but I am proud to state that none of them were native-born Americans.”

______________________________

RW47v24i2p1c6, January 5, 1847, The Mexican General Valencia.

The recent advices from Mexico, mention the arrival in the vicinity of San Luis, of General Valencia, at the head of eight thousand men. This force will be a valuable addition to Santa Anna’s army, inasmuch as a portion of it has been raised in the mining districts of Guanajuato, which are inhabited by a bold and hardy class of men. That Don Gabriel Valencia the commander of these 8000 men, is one of the best generals in Mexico cannot be doubted. Santa Anna has lately appointed him his second in command; and he would not have done this, had he not entertained the highest opinion of Valencia’s abilities.—[N.Y. Courier.

______________________________

RW47v24i2p2c2, January 5, 1847

Washington, Jan. 3 1847 — midnight.

Col. Baker, of Illinois, left the city for the West this morning, by the Ohio river. He will visit his wife at Springfield, in Illinois, and then proceed to join his regiment in Mexico.

Among the strangers now in town I notice Gen. Waddy Thompson of S. C. who arrived by the Southern boat this evening. Lieut. Potter, who was wounded at Monterey, arrived last night. He is moving about on crutches.

It is said that there will be an explanation tomorrow or next day between Messrs. Davis and Bayly. It is also again said that we are to have a Message on the Lt. Generalship to-morrow from the President.

There is not much news of importance here to-day. Some people expect that Mr. Walker will resign, from the vote of the House yesterday. I do not think he will.

I presume Congress will take hold of business in earnest to-morrow. Is it not time?

The "Colombia Typographical Society" celebrated their Thirty-Second Anniversary, by a supper at Congress Hall, last evening. Among the speakers were Messrs. Ritchis of the Union, and Isaac Hall if New Hampshire. The speeches, toasts, songs, sentiments, &c. were excellent. There were two or three odes, songs, &c. The party did not break up 'til a late, or rather early, hour.

______________________________

RW47v24i2p2c3, January 5, 1847, Too Late!

The Rockingham Register of the 2d. inst. informs us that two companies of volunteers are now in the process of formation in that county—(the Tenth Legion.) One company, it says, is nearly full, and expected to proceed to the election of officers last Saturday. The town and forces, or followed on their rear in retreat and eventually have captured or massacred Ampudia’s entire army.
Taylor, we would have been before Monterey eight weeks sooner, when it might have been taken without firing a gun. And why was

Had not the Chihuahua expedition been planned, and had the force and supplies of that army been promptly concentrated on Gen.

would have had with his army before Monterey one month’s supplies, when he could have enforced an unconditional surrender of the capitulation,) and had during the engagement to dispatch his train back to Cerralvo. Had this concentration been effected, Gen. Taylor Cerralvo in his rear, to transport with his Army of 6000 men a supply to subsist it longer than two days after the 24th, (the day of the

having to leave behind him his battery train on that account? Gen. Taylor had not sufficient transportation, with a depot as near as marched on Monterey with on 6000 men, not having more than enough transportation to carry subsistence for that number, and with his force and enormous supply of transportation and subsistence, had been concentrated on Gen. Taylor, would the latter have operations growing out of it are necessarily directly opposed to it. Had we met an enterprising enemy, this defect in the present plan of offensive. Unfortunately for our Government this principle did not enter as an element in the present plan of campaign, and all operations of the Army. Such letters are read with deep regret, for they are disparaging to the reputation and good name of the American soldiery. I suppose the people are, and indeed ought to be satisfied with the achievements of the Army. We have accomplished a great deal under many difficulties and trammels, and having done so much we must claim the privilege of pointing out

those difficulties and trammels, of showing cause why they never should have existed, and proving that had they not existed we

accomplished a great deal under many difficulties and trammels, and having done so much we must claim the privilege of pointing out

those difficulties and trammels, of showing cause why they never should have existed, and proving that had they not existed we should be much further advanced in attaining our object– as advantageous peace.

The fundamental principle in war it “to operate, with superior forces, a combined movement on a decisive point,” and no plan of campaign can be promptly successful unless framed on this principle, particularly where it is the intention to act entirely on the offensive. Unfortunately for our Government this principle did not enter as an element in the present plan of campaign, and all operations growing out of it are necessarily directly opposed to it. Had we met an enterprising enemy, this defect in the present plan of campaign would have been rendered much more apparent, and its failure much more signal by defeat in detail. Suppose Gen. Wool, with his force and enormous supply of transportation and subsistence, had been concentrated on Gen. Taylor, would the latter have marched on Monterey with on 6000 men, not having more than enough transportation to carry subsistence for that number, and

having to leave behind him his battery train on that account? Gen. Taylor had not sufficient transportation, with a depot as near as

Cerralvo in his rear, to transport with his Army of 6000 men a supply to subsist it longer than two days after the 24th, (the day of the capitulation,) and had during the engagement to dispatch his train back to Cerralvo. Had this concentration been effected, Gen. Taylor

would have had with his army before Monterey one month’s supplies, when he could have enforced an unconditional surrender of the town and forces, or followed on their rear in retreat and eventually have captured or massacred Ampudia’s entire army.

Had not the Chihuahua expedition been planned, and had the force and supplies of that army been promptly concentrated on Gen.

Taylor, we would have been before Monterey eight weeks sooner, when it might have been taken without firing a gun. And why was this Chihuahua expedition a portion of the plan of campaign? Was it not reasonable to suppose that after our victories before Matamoros, our enemy would occupy and hold, as strategic points, Monterey and Saltillo, covering the strongest passes in the Sierra Madre and having San Luis Potosi as a base of operations? San Luis should then have been in the plan of campaign, the objective point, and all of our energies should have been exerted on this line. As it turns out, Gen. Kearney takes New Mexico without firing a gun, and after the battle of Monterey Gen. Wool arrives at Monclova, and reports his advance on Chihuahua as useless, whilst our enemy, whipped at Monterey, abandons Saltillo and concentrates at San Luis, which he never could have done had Gen. Wool's army been promptly united with Gen. Taylor's. Owing to this error in the plan of campaign our enemy not only gained time to fortify and fight at Monterey, but as a natural consequence from it, he also gained time to concentrate at San Luis. With the combined material of the two armies the objective point, San Luis, might have been gained, and, by a decisive action with Ampudia's forces alone, at that point, the campaign might have ended, and probably the war. These are some of the difficulties under which we have labored, and but for which our Army could have done much more for the country. By these Gen. Taylor has been trammelled in his operations, and has not had an opportunity to display to the world what he could have done, had the plan of campaign been framed on military principles.

But let us look a little further into the difficulties growing out of and caused by the present plan of campaign. What is the relative position of our own and the enemy's forces at this time? Santa Anna has beyond doubt concentrated at San Luis 37,000 men; he holds a central position which, with his force, cannot be approached from this direction even by superior forces, owing to the scarcity of water, which, on a large portion of the route, is held in tanks, and entirely at the disposal of the enemy. He holds himself invincible at that point, relying on the strength of Vera Cruz to resist attack, which must be taken before we can approach him by gaining his rear.

The number of Gen. Taylor's army is very far overrated, even by the Union, which seems to estimate it at the actual volunteer force sent into the field and the regular force prescribed by law, without any allowance for the diminution of his force from casualties and sickness, which has far exceeded what might have been reasonably anticipated under the most unfavorable circumstances. Whatever may be thought of the strength of our force in Mexico at this date, I assert, and without fear of contradiction, that not more than fourteen thousand effective men could be brought into action to-morrow morning out of the whole army in the field. Now, what disposition of this inferior force necessarily results from the plan of the campaign? San Luis cannot be approached from this direction, and to go at our enemy we must approach him on another line. But the all important passes in the Sierra Madre must be held, to prevent our enemy from gaining our rear; and our forces, although inferior to the enemy in numbers, are necessarily scattered, whilst Santa Anna can operate en masse on any point. Thus we find ourselves compelled to operate on multiple lines, on an extended front, with an inferior force, whilst our enemy holds a single line of operations, and an interior one. This immense advantage to the enemy results entirely from the defective plans of campaign, and the only remedy is to form a new one, by which an increased force of 30,000 men must be concentrated on some decisive point. Vera Cruz and San Juan de Ulloa must be taken; then, and not till then, will Mexican generals and soldiers begin to think that their arms are not invincible, and not till then will the Mexican people mistrust the prowess of their army. The fall of Vera Cruz and San Juan de Ulloa may be a strong inducement to cause them to sue for peace, but I confidently believe that we will even then have to advance and fight the enemy at whatever point he may select. The Mexicans have no idea of making peace– even the private families in this town teach their children to hate Americans, and to lisp the name of Santa Anna as the saviour of their country, who is to whip the Americans whenever he meets them. It is absurd to think of peace unless our Government will take prompt and efficient measure to strike some decisive blow. Our force must be increased, the necessary subordination of military operations to the measure of supplies must be better considered, and the plans of campaign must be in strict accordance with military science. Then will our general in the field show to the world that he is not the man to win a battle and lose its advantages.

Yours truly, N.

[MPR]

RW47v24i2p2c5, January 5, 1847, Latest from the Army.

From the New Orleans Times, Dec. 28.

The U.S. Steamer Fashion, Capt. Fullerton, from Brazos, which place she left on the 24th inst, via. Matagorda Bar and Galveston, arrived here late last night. She brought up a very large mail from the interior of Mexico, and Capt. Yeatman bearer of dispatches from Washington. The letters will not be distributed until this morning. The following items, however, have been kindly communicated to us, by Col. J.G. Langdon, of New Orleans, who came passenger by the Fashion.

General Wool’s Division.– General Wool was encamped within two miles of the cit of Parras, his force amounting, by the field reports, to 2,900 mean. He is ordered there to establish a depot, and to levy upon all supplies belonging to the Mexican Government. He has already taken large quantities of flour wheat and corn.

The first and second Regiments of Indiana Volunteers were on their march from Camargo to join Gen. Wool.

Gen. Worth was at Saltillo, in command of 1500 men, and the command of Monterey has been assigned to Gen. Butler with 2000 men to garrison it.

Gen. Twiggs and Gen. P.H. Smith, with their respective commands, were at Victoria, and Gen. Quitman with his Brigade, left Monterey for Victoria on the 14th inst.

Gen. Taylor with a squadron of Dragoons, also left for Victoria on the 15th inst.
Gen. Patterson was to have left on the 22nd inst., accompanied by the Tennessee Regiment of Cavalry, for Tampico via Victoria.

The Alabama Regiment of Volunteers, and the 2nd Regiment of U. States Artillery, had arrived there already. The city was in command of Gen. Shields.

Lieut. Col. Henry Clay, with six companies of the 2d Regiment of Kentucky volunteers, was at Ceralvo. Capt. Willis was at Mier with two companies of the same regiment, and Capt. (Gen. M.B. Lamar) with a company, is stationed at Laredo.

The U.S. Steamer Major Brown, Capt. Sterling, was at Laredo, the stage of the river being such that she could not navigate it. Lieut. Tilden is about to remove the obstructions in the river, which, if successful, will enable the steamer Major Brown to go up to Camargo.

Col. Marshall is confined in consequence of injuries received in falling from his horse, but was fast recovering.

An express had reached Gen. Patterson to the effect that Santa Anna was advancing upon San Luis Potosi and Saltillo, for the purpose of cutting off Gen. Worth.

About 450 regulars were to have left Camargo on the 20th for Monterey; among them were Captains Keer’s and Hunter’s commands of the second regiment of dragoons.

The Mexican Government Recruiting in the Valley of the Rio Grande.– The Mexicans are making great exertions to raise troops in all the small Mexican towns on the Rio Grande, and with some success. About the 15th inst. Capt. Stone, with a detachment of 70 men, proceeded to a rancho up the Rio San Juan, a distance of thirty seven miles, where he found about 200 Mexicans collected, and among them Capt. Cantooa, who was the particular object of his search. Capt. C. was captured, and the muster-roll of his company, and letters of instruction from Gens. Ampudia and Paredes, with a quantity of blankets, 50 stands of arms, ammunition, &c. were secured. Capt. Cantooa was carried to Camargo, and put in prison.

On the evening of the 16th inst. a Mexican was taken by the guards at Camargo, having made an entry into the powder magazine with a design, it is supposed, of blowing it up.

Passengers.– The Fashion has brought hither, form the Brazos, nineteen cabin passengers, among whom is Captain Yeatman, aide-de-camp to General Wool, and it is understood he is bearer of dispatches to Washington. There are also on board, eighty discharged volunteers, together with the remains of young Allison, from Nashville, Tenn. who was shot at Monterey.

John Christick, one of the Indiana Volunteers, dies at sea, on the 24th inst. thirteen miles north of Brazos Island; and was buried in the mighty deep.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i2p2c5, January 5, 1847, Tampico Attacked! --- Repulse of the Mexicans!

We learn from a passenger just arrived from Tampico, on the schooner H.M. Johnson, and who came up to the city from the Southwest Pass, on the steamer Fashion, that on the 16th inst. Tampico had been attacked by 7000 Mexican cavalry, thinking to carry the place by a coup de main: our troops, however, were on the alert, and on their approach, opened on them a brisk fire of artillery, when they broke and fled.

[MPR]

RW47v24i2p2c5, January 5, 1847

[Correspondence of the Picayune.]

Tampico, December 9, 1946.

Gentlemen– This little town has shaken of the lethargy incident to blockade, and already presents a very lively and bustling appearance. We not only have the usual activity attendant upon a military and naval depot, but arrivals of vessels from your port, bringing provisions and dry good for the Mexicans, are daily occurring. Much disappointment has been occasioned to the adventurers, as for the present nothing is needed in the way of provisions except for the immediate consumption of such of the inhabitants of the town as have not been frightened off by the advent of los Americanos.

All communication with the interior has been interdicted by the Mexican authorities, and the country immediately in the neighborhood of Tampico is so thinly inhabited that for the present there exists no demand for the cargoes arriving. The cargo of the schooner Home, from New Orleans, was sold at auction on the 5th inst. Flour, 55 bbls., at $7.50; potatoes, 60 bbls., at $1.50, and other articles in proportion. Another, per schooner Velasco, consisting principally of dry goods, has been placed in store.

The state of things will continue until communication with the interior is opened by the American troops, and should San Luis Potosi be taken possession of, doubtless the business of this place will be of some importance, as the Mexicans are willing and ready enough to trade with us, but are restrained by fear of their own authorities, and without their license have no facilities for transporting goods into the interior. But Tampico, although of immense importance to our government as a naval and military depot, will not possess as great advantages for commerce as Matamoros during the existence of the war.

I find the foreign residents here very much embittered against the Americans, and are greatly annoyed by our possession of the port. We have not only effectually closed their business during the blockade, but now we run in our domestic manufactures at prices that annihilate any competition from their stocks, that have been entered under the exorbitant Mexican tariff. They deny our right to open the port for our exclusive use. This is a question I will leave diplomatists to settle, but I believe it would be policy in our government to establish a custom house here, and admit all foreign vessels and merchandise upon the same terms as if entered at any port in the United States. Then we can claim the same privilege with foreign powers when they get by the ears, which happens more frequently than with ourselves, by which means we will eventually reap more benefits than can accrue to us from the exclusive entrance of all the Mexican seaports.

Tampico, Dec. 12, 1846

Gentlemen– Commodore Conner left yesterday for Anton Lizardo in the Princeton. Upon his arrival there an expedition will sail for Laguna, and I believe it is his intention to occupy Tabasco permanently. At the capture of this place three Mexican gun-boats, among other crafts, fell into the hands of the Americans. These schooners were built by Brown & Bell, in New York, and are the twin sisters of the Reefer, Bonita, and Petrel; so there are now 5 vessels in the Gulf squadron precisely alike, all of them beauties to look at but rather rum tuns to go, their draft of water being too light to make them crack sailors; however, the efficiency of the fleet for the shoal waters of this coast has been enhanced by their acquisition.

The troops here are enjoying the benefit of excellent quarters and a fine climate, and although some cases of intermittent fever were prevalent the general health of the place is good. I hear this town spoken of by the officers as being preferable to any in Mexico where they have yet been. This I can very readily believe– it is sufficiently large to enable one to procure good accommodations and fish, flesh, and fowl abound, and in quality the very best– game of all kinds, with the delicate palm cabbage of the country, and fruit superior to that of Havana should satisfy the fastidiousness of any epicure.

Although there are at present only some 700 regulars stationed here, a considerable additional force could be organized in case of any attack upon the town.

[MPR]

RW47v24i2, January 5, 1847, Government Map of Mexico.

FOURTH EDITION,

Is just published and for sale at the Exchange Bookstore.

A plan of the harbor of Vera Cruz, with the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, &c., have been added to this edition, which now affords a most complete view of the Hest of War. Texas, the Californias, &c., &c.

As this map has been adopted by the Army, the publisher complains that several imitations of it have been issued, and palmed upon the public as original Maps. Among these is one disguised under a Spanish title, which is a copy of the old edition of the Government map, made without the consent of the Publisher, several years ago, and now imposed upon the public as a new map.

C.F. Fisher, Agent,
Under the Exchange Hotel.
[MPR]

RW47v24i2p4c1, January 5, 1847, The Virginia Regiment. The 10th Legion.

As we mentioned yesterday, the first battalion of the Virginia regiment of Volunteers will leave this city next Sunday morning. The second battalion will, we presume, be soon ready for the field– consisting of one company from Caroline, under Capt. Bankhead; one from Montgomery, under Capt. Preston; one from Berkley, under Capt. Alburtis; one from Richmond, under Capt. Wm. B. Archer, (provided its organization be effected in time;) and one from Jefferson county, of the organization of which we were not apprized, until we received the Charlestown Free Press of the 31st ultimo– and which we have not heretofore “failed to notice,” as that paper gratuitously insinuates– with what motives its editor best knows– for the purpose of “disparaging the services” of volunteers from the other side of the Blue Ridge. Whence the editor could have imbibed an impression so ridiculous and improbable, we confess we are at a loss to conjecture. The officers in the Jefferson company are: John W. Rowan, Captain; John Avis, 1st Lieutenant; Lawrence B. Washington, 1st Second Lieutenant; and Wm. McCormick, 2d. Second Lieutenant.

We regret that the companies now forming in Pittsylvania, under the lead of J. Roy Cabell, and in Franklin and Bedford under the lead of Early, Talisferro and others, as well as those in the course of organization in other sections of the Commonwealth, must necessarily be disappointed.
En passant: The Enquirer of yesterday says, "the Richmond Whig continues its work of defaming the Tenth Legion," and charges us with "endeavoring to blacken its patriotism in time of war." How have we "defamed" the Tenth Legion? Will the Enquirer be good enough to tell us in what consists the slander we have uttered? We have said the Tenth Legion has sent no soldiers to the field. Is this not true? We have intimated pretty broadly that she ought to have been more active in sustaining by her services in the field the policy of an Administration which, by her vote, she has contributed to inflict upon this country. Is this defamation? If it be, then her own people have defamed her— for the Rockingham Register, a Locofoco oracle in that region, has, on more than one occasion, declared that the "Old Tenth" ought to send at least one company to the field, to stand by the side in battle of the fine corps furnished by her "federal" sister Augusta! Did we "defame" the Tenth Legion, or "blacken its patriotism," when, a day or two ago, we admitted that "no Whig county in the State can furnish braver men or better patriots, than that section of the Commonwealth— as we verily believed them, and still believe? This, surely, will not be pretended. In what, then, we ask the Enquirer, does the "defamation" with which it charges us consist? We think that it will puzzle the editors of the paper to say, unless they give to the word a definition very different from its received import.

In answer to the Enquirer's catechism, we reply, that it is not "a reproach to any county not to have raised a company" for the war—certainly not to any Whig county, upon which rests no peculiar obligation to furnish soldiers for a war of invasion, brought on, as they believe, without necessity, and by an act of usurpation on the part of the President; and especially while other counties, which assisted by almost an unanimous vote in elevating that President to office, and which, by equal unanimity, it is presumed, still approve of his policy, war and all, stand aloof from the contest, when the bugle calls them, no "To the polls!" but "To arms!" We do think that a peculiar obligation rested upon the counties comprising the district known as the "Tenth Legion," as well upon the Southwestern tier known as "Little Tennesse," to furnish at least one company each, in compliance with the requisition of the President. Their failure to do so is unquestionably a fair subject of comment and criticism— even, if you please, for "sneers." But we have not "defamed," nor have we "blackened the patriotism" of the "sturdy Democracy" of Shenandoah, Page and Rockingham. We have stated a fact in regard to them. If that is defamation, we have defamed them. We have left this fact to speak for itself. If the "patriotism" of those to whom it refers has been "blackened," it has not been by any remark of ours, but by the naked fact itself.

We do not doubt, and never have doubter, that in that fine portion of Virginia, which we have never "defamed," in peace or at war—unless, we repeat, the statement of a fact be defamation—there is as much true courage and ardent patriotism as in any other section of the Commonwealth. We do not attribute its failure to send a corps of volunteers to the field to any deficiency in either of these qualities. But this admission does not in the least conflict with the opinion that the Tenth Legion has, from some cause or other, been strangely derelict in having failed to perform a duty, which, from its past and present relations to the author of the war in which we are engaged, it ought to have eagerly discharged. It ought not certainly to have permitted "federal Augusta," lying upon its very borders, to shame, by her zeal in the prosecution of a war entered into by an Administration not at all to her liking, the apathy and indifference of communities which ought to have felt a livelier interest in the triumph of the Administration of their choice.

RW47v24i2p4c1, January 5, 1847, Col. Matthew Mountjoy Payne

During the recent visit of this veteran officer to Goochland, the county of his nativity, he was invited to partake of a public dinner, but his anxiety to rejoin immediately the army in Mexico, the wound received at Palo Alto having sufficiently healed to enable him to resume active service, compelled him to decline the honor. The correspondence will appear to-morrow.

The Augusta Volunteers, on leaving Staunton, were accompanied some distance on the way by a large number of citizens of that town; and when about to bid them a final adieu, Littleton Waddell, Esq. addressed them in a very feeling and appropriate manner, and Capt. Harper briefly responded on behalf of the company.

The County Court of Augusta ordered a Flag, with suitable devices, to be procured for the company, and Judge Briscoe G. Baldwin consented, as the organ of the court, to present it. In his reply to the application, Judge B., after remarking on the feelings which bind him to the county of Augusta, says: "I am proud to be the bearer of her flag on any occasion, and it is with deep emotion that I undertake to place it in hands by which it can never be dishonored."

[MPS]

RW47v24i2p4c2, January 5, 1847, General Scott.

This officer left New Orleans on the 23d ultimo, in the steamship Alabama, for the seat of war. The correspondent in that city of the Charleston Courier relates the following incident, which occurred prior to his departure.

"Gen. Scott found it necessary to have one in his staff familiar with the Spanish language, and a Mr. Gomes, who was I understand strongly recommended by one or two high government officers, was the one selected. He received yesterday a commission as Lieut. Col. of Dragoons from Gen. Scott, and was formally mustered into the U. States service. Immediately upon this, the strongest representations were made to the General about this man, who is pretty well known as the Editor of a Spanish paper La Patria, which has taken strong ground against our government in the present war, and in which some articles thoroughly Mexican (i.e. almost treasonable,) have appeared and been severely commented on. He was spoken of as a Mexican at heart, and the very last man who should occupy a confidential station about the person of the Commander— in-Chief. These statements, which came from men of both political parties, had their effect, and to—day the commission has been revoked, to the satisfaction of every one."

[MPS]
The following gentlemen are officers in Capt. Bankhead's company of volunteers: Smith P. Bankhead of Caroline, Captain; Thomas Garnett of Essex, 1st; Robert F. Coleman of Fredericksburg, 2d, and [ ... ] Mahan of Philadelphia, 3d. Lieutenant.

[MPR]

The Berkeley Volunteers yesterday paid their respects to Gov. Smith, and were welcomed by an appropriate speech.

[MPR]

Louis G. De Russy, a graduate of West Point, has been chosen Colonel of the new regiment of volunteers from Louisiana, and Frances Degault, Major. The Lieut. Colonel is yet to be appointed.

[MPR]

A Singular Fact.

[Communicated.

The Democracy brought the present war upon the country in spite of all the efforts of the Whigs to prevent it. But, after the war was declared, the parties seem to have changed places. The Whigs are for coming to the rescue and fighting it out, whilst the Democracy hang back!

As a proof of this singular state of things, I refer to the very extraordinary fact, that every company of volunteers which have yet been raised in Virginia, was raised in a Whig county or city. Not one has been raised in a Democratic county or city, (unless Montgomery, in which parties are about equally divided, may be so regarded.) Richmond, Petersburg, Norfolk, and Alexandria are all Whig cities. Berkeley, Jefferson, and Augusta are all Whig counties. Where is the company from the Tenth Legion, or Halifax, or Isle of Wight, or Little Tennessee? Echo answers, where? This is a pretty commentary on the President's Message and the diatribes of his cuckoo of the Union! The Whigs of 1846 are very much like their ancestors of 1776– they go for their country.

A Whig Son of a Whig Father.

[MPR]

Col. John F. Hamtramck.

From the Charleston Free Press, Dec. 31.

It will be seen, in another column, that Major John F. Hamtramck, of Sheperdstown, has received the appointment of Colonel of the Virginia Regiment. This is a most distinguished compliment, as we understand there were upwards of fifty applicants for this post of honor, embracing in their number some of the choicest spirits and most gallant souls in the Old Dominion.

This honor is not confined alone to the officer on whom it is conferred, but may justly be considered as one in which Jefferson county has a right to partake.

Col. Hamtramck is an old and experienced officer, being engaged in various capacities during the late war. He served with Gen. Taylor at the time when that officer "fleshed his maiden sword," and culled the first laurels that entwine his brow.

He served under Gen. Taylor (then Major) as a Sergeant during the war of 1814, in the spring of which year, they were together in an attack on a body of Indians on the North Western frontier. In the spring of 1814, the startling news reached St. Louis, of the capture of Prairie du Chien, (a fort on the upper Mississippi river,) and of the repulse of Capt. Campbell, who had gone up in a boat, with his company of U. States troops, for the relief of the place. This gave the British and Indians command of the upper Mississippi, and fears were entertained for the safety of St. Louis. Fort Madison had been evacuated, Chicago, Green Bay, Prairie du Chien, and the whole of the upper country was in possession of the enemy, and nothing then, apparently, could oppose their descent of the river, and the fall of St. Louis.

But, under the gallant and intrepid Taylor, an attack was made on the foe, and a complete route of the Indians effected which tended to the disbandment of their forces, as was afterwards learned by Col. Hamtramck, many years subsequently, in a conversation with Koecock, the head chief now of the Sauke tribe.

A thrilling incident connected with this service, at which Col. Hamtramck was present may not prove uninteresting. The American forces had landed at a small island a little above River Rock, and lying close to the western side of the Mississippi, and placed sentinels to guard the camp;– the night waned without disturbance or alarm, but just about daylight, as the Corporal of the guard by direction of the Sergeant (now Col. Hamtramck) was looking at his watch, to see if it was not time to relieve the guard, and stooping for that purpose with the watch in his hand, to the light of a small camp fire, the crack of a rifle was heard, and the watch dropped from the Corporal's hand, and he ran to the boat with his wrist broken.

This is only one of the many narrow escapes, through which Col. H. passed untouched and unhurt; and we trust that the hand of an overruling Providence may again be extended to protect him from those dangers incident to his service, and that he may return to his family, his brow encircled with wreaths of glory, won in defence of the rights of his country.

[MPR]

RW47v24i2p4c3, January 5, 1847

From the Boston Courier, Dec. 28.

A draft of 100 seamen, for the line ship Ohio, arrived at Charlestown navy yard on Saturday from New York. It is said that her complement is now completed, and that she will soon depart for Norfolk, to await there the orders of the government.

We looked in yesterday, says the Newburyport Herald, to see the new boat building for government by Messrs. Picket & Ladd. It is a 24 oared barge, 40 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 4 feet 4 inches deep, and will cost about $500. One hundred of these boats are building, from Baltimore northward, all to be delivered the first of January, and the contracts for none of which were entered into until the first week of December. They are ordered by General Scott, and are intended to be amply sufficient, in case of emergency, to land 20,000 men on any point on the coast of Mexico.

[MPR]

RW47v24i2p4c3, January 5, 1847, How is this?

The Washington correspondent of the U.S. Gazette says:–

You need not be very much astonished should you hear, in the course of a few weeks, that the administration have determined to order our army to fall back and take position on the north side of the Rio Grande, instead of attempting to reach, and dictate a peace in, the Halls of Moctezuma.

[MPR]

RW47v24i2p4c4, January 5, 1847 Army News

The New Orleans papers contain a number of interesting letters from Monterey, the latest being down to the 1st inst. They were received by the steamer McKim. A correspondent of the Picayune, under date of the 25th ult., writes as follows:

"Gen. Taylor arrived at Saltillo day before yesterday, (23rd instant,) escorted by one squadron of Col. May's horse, having left one squadron in Saltillo. The general succeeded in capturing one hundred pack mules, with their cargoes, consisting of subsistence stores intended for Santa Anna's army at San Luis Potosi. The squadron left are said to be in pursuit of four hundred mules, loaded also with the same cargoes.

Col. May had a very severe fall at Saltillo, by his horse tripping on the pavement which inclines towards the centre from each side. He is doing well, and will be ready for duty in a few days."

A correspondent of the Delta, under date of the 30th, says:

"There is much excitement in the city this morning, arising from a murder committed last night at Armstrong's Hotel. A party of Tennesseans from the camp came into town to take supper at the hotel, and whilst eating and drinking, a table was turned over, breaking a number of plates and glasses. Armstrong came into the room much excited, ann commenced a tirade of abuse, at the end of which pay was offered him double for all that was destroyed; but, not content with that, he called in the guard, and, after pointing out a very estimable young man, by the name of Forrest, said: "There's the d-d rascal who broke my dishes;" but before the sergeant of the guard could reach him, Armstrong pulled out a pistol and shot him dead, and escaped before his companions or the guard could put their hands on him. He was, however, subsequently arrested.

"Two Frenchman, in addition to the "big bug" Mexicans, have been arrested on a charge of tampering with out soldiers, and offering them inducements to desert. There will be a pretty hanging match here some of these days. A volunteer Lieut. Colonel dressed himself in a private’s clothes, and was readily accepted as a voluntario, and given an order on a man about 10 leagues distant for the money and horse promised him. The one who gave the order was immediately arrested, and the Colonel started for his reward, but not alone—he took twenty good men with him, and will doubtless return in the course of a day, with several of those who preferred the Mexican to the American service, and also with the individuals who pay out the Mexican dollars.

“The tables have been turned on the Mexicans, and for those who have been assassinated of the volunteers, a double number of the enemy have suffered within a day or two. It is reported this morning, that Gen. Taylor has ordered the 1st Kentuckians to Cerralvo to prevent this killing.”

The correspondent of the Delta, under the date of the 1st instant, writes a lengthy letter, from which we take the following extracts:

“The war between the Kentuckians and the Mexicans, as it is familiarly termed, has created no little excitement both in town and in the camp. It is thought that not less than 40 Mexicans have been killed within the last five days, fifteen of whom, it is said, were killed in one day, and within the scope of one mile. From this you will see that the boys are determined to have and to take revenge for the assassination of their comrades.

The trial of the alcalde’s son, and others engaged in tampering with our men, is set for to–morrow. I should not exactly say trial, for it will be more in the shape of a court of inquiry at first. I saw this young alcalde this morning in prison. He is a young and very interesting man, and was weighed down to the ground with irons, not that they fear his escape, but to deter others from following in his footsteps. At first, it was thought that but few men were engaged in the business; but it is now clearly ascertained that many of the principal men in the place have had a finger in the pie; and since the first arrests, many of the first families of Monterey have left, and the population of the place has decreased in that time nearly 1,000. The 7th regiment has lost many men by desertion, and I have since ascertained that the number I spoke of before—forty— as having departed, may be safely trebled; and all since the 25th September. The regulars have invariably gone to the enemy; but what few of the volunteers that have left us sans ceremonie, have made tracks for a Christmas dinner in the white settlements. The friends of those arrested—particularly of the alcalde—fear the worst; and if they were hung in the plazas as Taylor threatened, they would not be much surprised.”

“The weather is lovely at this time, and forcibly reminds one of the spring time of the year. It is a great climate, and blossoms half–grown, and ripe fruit can be found on the same tree.”

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i2p4c4, January 5, 1847, Later from the Army. Arrival of the Massachusetts– Later from Tampico– Army Movements, &c. &c.

By the arrival of the U.S. auxiliary steamship Massachusetts, Capt. D. Wood, we have received Tampico dates to the 15th and Brazos to the 18th inst. We acknowledge our indebtedness to Capt. W. for his kindness in forwarding the latest information, and also to Mr. A. J. Clifton, late mate of the Neptune, for a list of vessels in the harbor of Tampico.

There had been quite an excitement at Tampico, caused by a report that a large body of Mexican cavalry had been seen in the neighborhood. Of the truth or falsity of the report we have no means of knowing.

The British sloop of war Alarm, Lieut. Mays commanding, had arrived at Tampico from Vera Cruz. Her captain was left sick at the former place.

The U.S. steamer Fashion, with Gen. Jessup on board, arrived at Brazos on the 18th inst.

Gen. Pillow left Matamoros on the 14th inst. He was to go 25 miles, and then wait for Gen. Patterson with the rest of his division and train.

Through Mr. Beard, one of the passengers by the Massachusetts, we learn that Gen Taylor was to leave Monterey on the 10th inst. for Victoria, with Gen. Twigg’s division and a portion of Gen. Smith’s brigade. It is also reported that Gen. Urrea, of whom we have not heard of late was at Victoria with 6000 cavalry. Gen. Wool remained at Parras and Gen. Worth at Saltillo. It was positively reported and believed in camp, that Santa Anna had 28,000 men at San Luis.

The following items we copy from the Matamoros Flag of the 16th instant:

“Mexican Reports.– A Mexican just arrived from Tampico, informs us that Santa Anna is purging his army of all officers whom the remotest suspicion of cowardice can be attached; and retaining only such as he has the most implicit confidence in their bravery and skill. Gen. Ampudia, Col. Carasco, and several others, he states have been imprisoned, charged with cowardice, and an order has been issued dooming to instant death any officer who shall disgrace his flag by cowardly or unofficer like conduct in battle. Santa Anna he represents as having the unlimited confidence of the soldiery; and to such a pitch has he raised their ardor by eloquent appeals to their passions that is would be impossible to conceive the enthusiasm that prevails among them. A general desire is expressed to be led against the invaders.”

The following paragraph, in relation to the hospital at Matamoros, we copy from the same paper:
"About two hundred sick have been received into the hospital since Sunday. One hundred and thirty arrived from Camargo, and the remainder were left by the 3d and 4th Illinois Regiments in breaking up their encampments to commence the march for Tampico. Dr. Wright has had his hands full for the last four months—the number in hospital averaging from three to six hundred during this period, and it shows him possessed of more than common energy and industry to have managed so successively the complicated duties of his department. Deaths are much less frequent now than during the fall and summer months, and patients are all doing well."

The editor of the Flag holds the following language in relation to the movement of troops:

"The 3d and the 4th Illinois Regiments broke up their encampments at this place on Monday last, and commenced the march for Tampico. It is the intention we understand, to form an encampment at Moquete, a rancho about six leagues distant, and await the coming supplies, which we hear it stated will take some eight or ten days to send forward. A part of the Tennessee cavalry regiment marched with them and the remainder will follow in due time. The combined strength of the three regiments is not more than 1800 mean— the two Illinois regiments furnishing little over half of the number, sickness and death having reduced them one-third their original strength. Gen. Patterson still has his quarters in the city, and we cannot venture a statement as to any fixed day for his departure, such information not being easily come at—the best way to state it is, to say that he will be off when he gets ready. It is given out that the expedition proceeds first to Victoria, which will lengthen the march to Tampico one-fourth and make it a journey of near five hundred miles. But we shall see what we shall see. We cannot conceive what everybody is to be sent to Tampico for. "What do they in the south when they should be"—somewhere else."

Murders continue to be committed in the interior of the country. The Flag of the 10th inst. says:

"Within the last week three persons are reported to us as having been killed on the road between Camargo and Monterey, but the name of only on we have ascertained—Mr. Wm. J. Downing, clerk for Mr. Mann, butler at Monterey. Mr. Downing left Monterey in company with Mr. Mann, Col. L.P. Cook, and others, for Camargo, and with a Mexican servant of Mr. Mann, was riding some distance in the rear of the party, when he was attacked by Mexicans or Indians and killed, and the servant either killed or made prisoner and carried off. Mr. D. was personally known to us, as also to a large number of the citizens of this city, who will receive the news of his death with the deepest sorrow. He was native of Baltimore, Md. But has resided in Texas for a number of years—Corpus Christi being his home for the last four years, where he was universally known and esteemed." [MPR]

---

RW47v24i3p1c2, January 8, 1847, Honor to the Volunteers.

The Petersburg Republican contains an interesting account, for the whole of which we regret that we have not room, of the presentations on Saturday evening last, by Judge Gholson, as the [...] to the ladies of that town, of a beautiful Flag to the Petersburg Volunteers. Mr. Wm. Robertson, as the organ of the members of the Bar, also presented a splendid Sword Belt and Sash to Capt. Archer; and Mr. J.W. Syme, on behalf of Messrs. R.B. Belling, B Jones, Robert Leslie, Jos. Bragg, J.V. Wilcox, John Rowlett, A.G. Mcllwaine, W.E. Hinton, David Dunlop, D.W. Bragg, J. Branch, Goodman Davis, B.H. May, John L. Mertens & Co., James Orr, Moses Paul and A.L. Smith, presented to Lieutenants Pegram, Weisiger and Paterson, each, a beautiful Sword Belt, Sash and Epaulettes.

In Lynchburg, a public meeting was held Thursday evening last, to make arrangements for the reception and accommodation of the Montgomery, Bedford and Franklin volunteers, on their way to Richmond. Judge Wilson presided and eloquent speeches were delivered by that gentleman, and by Messrs. Wm. M. Blackford, James Garland and John M. Speed. [MPR]

---

RW47v24i3p1c2, January 8, 1847, Arrival of the Volunteers.

A company of volunteers from Jefferson county, under command of Capt. Rowan, reached the city in the cars yesterday. We have not seen a finer looking body of men—generally young, healthy and athletic. [MPR]

---

RW47v24i3p2c1, January 8, 1847, Massachusetts Volunteers.

Eight companies of the Massachusetts regiment of Volunteers have been mustered into service. [MPR]

---

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847, Presentation of a Flag.

In the midst of a heavy rain yesterday afternoon, the Augusta Volunteers marched to the Powhatan House to receive the elegant Flag, painted by Mrs. Brown, of this city, from the hand of Judge B.G. Baldwin, as the organ of the county court of Augusta, by whose order it has been prepared. In performing the duty assigned to him, Judge B. delivered a truly impressive and affecting address to the volunteers, exhorting them to sustain the honor of their beautiful flag in the perils of the battle, and to return it unsullied to its donors. Capt. Kenton Harper replied, briefly but most eloquently—pledging himself, on behalf of his company, that the flag entrusted to their
We hope to be able to procure copies of both addresses for publication.

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847, Reception of the Volunteers.

We omitted to mention yesterday that the Jefferson County Volunteers, on reaching the City, paid their respects to the Chief Magistrate, to whom they were introduced, in an appropriate speech, by John S. Gallagher, Esq. the Senator from that District. The Governor responded, we are told, (for we were not present,) in an impressive manner. The company then repaired to the quarters provided for them. The officers of this company are Capt. John W. Rowan, and Lieuts. John Alvis, jr. Lawrence B. Washington, and ------ McCormick, and Orderly Sergeant Fairfax. Lt. Washington is a descendant of the father of his country, and we are told by the Enquirer, wears the sword of his great ancestor. Orderly Fairfax, the Times says, is a lineal descendant of Lord Fairfax.

Yesterday, the second company from Petersburg, commanded by Capt. Wm. M Robinson, on its arrival, proceeded to the mansion of the Governor, to whom they were introduced by Mr. Drinkard of the Petersburg Republican. The Governor addressed them in an eloquent and appropriate manner; and they then marched to their quarters at the Union Hotel.

RW47v24i3p2c2, January 8, 1847

Lieut. Colonel T.B. Randolph, of the Virginia regiment of Volunteers, has reached the city.

RW47v24i3p2c3, January 8, 1847, The Virginia Volunteers.

In addition to the five companies, constituting the first battalion of Virginia Volunteers, now at Old Point, we understand that there are now six companies in this city or expected soon to arrive, which have been received by the Executive, to wit:

The Staunton company, Capt. Harper;
The Berkeley company, Capt. Alburtis;
The (3d) Richmond company, Capt. Archer;
The Jefferson company, Capt. Rowan;
The Portsmouth company, Capt. Young; and
The (2d) Petersburg company, Capt. Robinson, which reached the city yesterday morning– and seems to be composed of fine materials.

We had understood that the Montgomery volunteers, under Capt. Preston had also been received by the Governor; but if it has been determined to muster the forgoing companies into service, it would seem that the Virginia regiment will be already more than full without them– that is to say, it will consist of one more company than the requisition of the General Government called for. We hope, however, should this be the fact, that the Secretary of War may be induced at least to receive such of the fully organized corps, as, under the belief that they would be received, may reach the rendezvous in time to proceed to the seat of war.

We understand that eighteen companies have tendered their services to the Executive; and we regret that several of them, after having gone to the trouble and expense of organizing– and more especially those from the Tenth Legion, within the limits of which, we are glad to learn, two companies have been enrolled– must be disappointed.

RW47v24i3p4c1, January 8, 1847, Santa Anna’s Return.

The Enquirer calls our attention to the fact, that two of the three field officers of the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers are Whigs. We were aware of this circumstance; and we take this occasion to say that it is highly honorable to the board of appointment– the majority of whom are attached to the Administration party. We presume, however, that Col. Hamtramck and Major Early were not appointed because they were Whigs, but because the board believed, the among the number of distinguished applicants, they were peculiarly qualified for the performance of the duties of their respective stations. All of them, we feel assured, will show, by their conduct in the field, that their fitness for the stations has not been overrated.

RW47v24i3p4c1, January 8, 1847
A writer in the National Intelligencer has found a parallel case— and but one— to the kind of "aid and comfort" afforded to the Mexicans, by President Polk, in the instructions given to the commander of the Gulf Squadron no to obstruct the passage of Santa Anna to Vera Cruz. He says:

"In a naval fight between the English and the Dutch the Englishman suddenly stopped firing, yet kept his flag flying and his men all standing to their guns. The Dutchman, seeing this, and not wishing to waste his fire upon a non–resisting adversary, also ceased firing, and hailed his foe, "why he did not either fight or strike?" The Englishman answered that, as to striking the flag— never, as long as there remained a plank beneath his feet; as to firing his guns, he would cheerfully do so if his adversary would have the generosity to supply him with powder, his own magazine being exhausted; that if he would not comply with his request, the fight must go on, and be determined hand to hand by boarding, which would lead to a great loss of life on both sides. The Dutchman, being a man of feeling as well as valor, and believing that "in any event it was certain that no change whatever in the circumstances of the English ship which would deprive her commander of the excuse of boarding could be for the worse, so far as the Dutchman was concerned, while it was highly probable that any change must be for the better," agreed to comply with the request of his gallant foe, provided he would pay him for a fair consideration for the article garnished. The sum being agreed upon at something less, than two million of dollars, I think, the Dutchman directed his own boats to place the powder safely on board the enemy's ship. Thus provided with means to renew the fight, The Englishman soon taught the Dutchman that he had been guilty of the folly of furnishing his adversary with a club to beat his own brains out."

Mr. Linder, a member of the Illinois Legislature, seems to have a taken a somewhat similar view of this enigmatical affair. We say enigmatical– for, we confess, the President's message has rather excited than gratified our curiosity, touching the extent and nature of the information possessed by him, and the source through which it was obtained, first, in regard to Santa Anna's intention to return to Mexico at all; and secondly, in reference to his mediated designs, should he effect a landing, and be able to overpower the Paredes Administration and tobanish Paredes himself. On the 21st ultimo, Mr. Linder submitted to the House of Representatives of that State, amidst a general laugh, the following resolutions, which, under the guise of playfulness, give some home thrusts to the President:

Whereas, as appears from the message of President Polk to the Congress of the United States, that Santa Anna has been guilty of the most black–hearted treachery, in failing to perform and make certain promises made to President Polk, (the consideration of said promise being a passport to Mexico,) one of which was that, on his arrival at Mexico he would get up a fight with Paredes and thereby bring the war between the United States and Mexico to a close; therefore–

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois, the Senate concurring herein, That we deeply sympathise with President Polk, inasmuch as his reasonable expectations have not been realized in consequence of the treachery of the aforesaid Santa Anna.

And be it further resolved, That Santa Anna is unworthy the further confidence of President Polk, and that we most respectfully recommend to the President to place no further reliance upon the promises of Santa Anna to bring the war to a close.

And be it further resolved, That inasmuch as Santa Anna had heretofore on all occasions, been governed by a strict regard to truth, fidelity, and honor in his conduct, that President Polk had good reason to believe that he would hold sacred his word, thus solemnly pledged, and which we still believe he would have done had he received the two millions of dollars as per contract with the President. [MPR]

RW47v24i3p4c3, January 8, 1847

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

In order to prosecute the war against Mexico with vigor and success, it is necessary that authority should be promptly given to Congress to increase the regular army, and to remedy existing defects in its organization. With this view, your favorable attention is invited to the annual report of the Secretary of War, which accompanied my message of the 8th inst, in which he recommends that ten additional regiments of regular troops shall be raised to serve during the war.

Of additional regiments of volunteers which have been called for from several of the States, some have been promptly raised; but this has not been the case in regards to all. This existing law requiring that they should be organized by the independent action of the State governments, has, in some instances, occasioned considerable delay; and it is yet uncertain when the troops required can be ready for service in the field.

It is our settled policy to maintain in time of peace as small a regular army as the exigencies of the public service will permit. In a state of war, notwithstanding the great advantage with which our volunteer citizen soldiers can be brought into the field, this small regular army must be increased in its numbers in order to render the whole force more efficient.

Additional officers as well as men, then, become indispensable. Under the circumstances of our service a peculiar propriety exists for increasing the officers, especially in the higher grades. The number of such officers who, from age and other causes, are rendered incapable of active service in the field, has seriously impaired the efficiency of the army.

From the report of the Secretary of War, it appears that about two–thirds of the while number of regimental field officers are either permanently disabled or are necessarily detached from their commands on other duties. The long enjoyment of peace has prevented us from experiencing much embarrassment from this cause; but now in a state of was conducted in a foreign country, it has produced a serious injury to the public service.
An efficient organization of the army composed of regulars and volunteers, whilst prosecuting the war in it is believed would require the appointment of a general officer to take command of all our military forces in the field.

Upon conclusion of the war, the services of such an officer would no longer be necessary, and should be dispensed with upon the reduction of the army to a peace establishment.

I recommend that provision be made by law for the appointment of such s general officer to serve during the war.

It is respectfully recommended that early action should be had by Congress upon suggestions submitted for their consideration, as necessary to insure active and efficient service in prosecuting the war before present favorable season for military operations in the enemy’s country shall have passed away.

JAMES K. POLK.

[MPR]
orders can be carried into effect, probably not until sometime in May or June next.

Santa Fe– A letter written at Santa Fe on the 19th of November states that Col Prick's Regiment is stationed at that place for the winter, and that great sickness prevailed among the troops. There had been as many as seven deaths a day.

A letter dated Parris, Mexico, Dec. 9 says—

(Correspondence of the New Orleans Bee.)

Head--Quarters U.S. Army,
Monterey, Dec. 4, 1846.

Gentlemen:– The mail came in yesterday from Saltillo, and with it an unusual number of rumors as to Santa Anna's movements. The Mexicans to--day report that lie is eight days on the march to Saltillo, with 27,000 men, and that he assures them that he will be here before Christmas. They seem to think that he will fulfill his promise, but our people attach no more importance whatever to his vauntings. If he wants to come, they say let him come, and we'll give him as good a reception as we can get up. The American soldiers are of opinion situated as the army is at this moment, all Mexico cannot recapture this place. You have no idea how high the boys hold their heads here. Having met the enemy three times, and whipped him against great odds each time, they think the word defeat, so far as applicable to the American army, out of the question, and I begin to believe with the Mexicans, that to whip us they have to kill us all off.

A half an hour's conversation with an intelligent private in the 7th Infantry, a few evenings since, put me in possession of many facts relative to the cause of desertion, the character of the men, &c. He says that for the last two or three years, 4–5ths of the recruits for the regular army have been made up from the foreigners who hang about the large cities of the Union, some of whom have no affinity of feeling with America or any other nation. That immediately after the cessation of hostilities, emissaries from the enemy's camp, began tampering with them and they became lax in their duty; some would go off immediately, others get drunk and fear to return to their quarters after an absence of a few days, and to avoid the punishment consequent on such absence, take "French leave" altogether. He still raises on the number of deserters from his regiment, and says that they will not fall short of seventy-five since the 24th Sept. and this, too, in a regiment embracing only seven companies. I remarked that I presumed two-thirds of them were Foreigners, when he answered quickly and which much feeling, "yes, sir, three-thirds, for although Americans do occasionally desert the service at home and in time of peace, whilst in an enemy's country the most worthless will stick by his colors." He does not think that all who desert go into the enemy's ranks, but that an affinity of religious feeling with the enemy operates so strongly upon them, that they leave us to evade a conflict with the enemy. An English physician who is now in towns peaks of meeting a couple of sons of Erin between Saltillo and San Louis Potosi, one with his belts and gun, ant the other with nothing but his uniform, The doctor who is a considerable wag, and who had some hand in whipping the Mexicans out of Texas, stopped them in the road and asked their reasons for desertion. The man with the musket told him that he had fought too much against his religion already, and that he wouldn't fight for the U.S. again until she "got into a war with England," when he "would go for a volunteer." The other one had thrown away his musket, and would never pick up another one whilst he lived. They had both passports from the Mexican commander, and an order for 25 cts per day until they could get to some port, where they could take shipping to the old country, or could get employment in the country. A horse, $25 in money and an order from $25 more on San Louis Potosi is the inducements held out there.

Monterey, Dec. 5th.

In my letter yesterday I forgot to mention to you the death of Lieut. Desment, of the Macon company, in the Georgia volunteers. He dies of a fever, something on the bilious order, first beginning with the chills and fever. Many soldiers are prostrated with disease now, and from all regiments that expect to remove in a short time, the debilitated are being discharged.

I find something worthy of a man, to record in the conduct of Santa Anna. The first deserters from the American ranks arrived in San Louis whilst these Americans were there. They presented their several orders for money to Santa Anna, when he informed them that he had not enough funds to feed his own soldiers. They were worn down by travel, hungry and without the means of getting a living, so they concluded as a last resort they would join his army. When they applied to him for permission to go into the ranks, he replied... that they would leave him should he get into a tight place. They affirmed to the contrary, when Santa Anna plainly told them that any man that would desert one army would desert another, and he wanted nothing to do with such men. And so they left him—men who had been seduced off under the bright promises of command and money, denied even the privilege of earning their bread in the ranks of the enemy. The beauty of it is, that neither the French nor English residents will give them work or food, and they would no doubt give their right hands to be back into Uncle Sam’s ranks. No less than 46 were met on the road from San Luis to Saltillo. Nothing new about Monterey to-day.

[MPR]

RW47v24i3p4c7, January 8, 1847, Mexican Items.

From the N.O. Picayune, Dec. 20.

We yesterday saw and conversed with Mr. Phillip Honch, brother of the well-known Santa Fe trader, who left the city of Orizava late in November. From Mr. H. we have learned many particulars in relation to the state of feeling of the Mexicans, in different part of the country, which may be uninteresting to our readers.

At Orizava, which is a city of considerable size to the southward of Jalapa, there were 1000 volunteers already recruited for the Mexican army—miserable wretches collected by promises, force and threats— and to arm this force they have only 300 parts of old, worn out muskets. They all talk right valiantly, however, exceeding great bravery and prowess, and of the perfect ease with which they are to drive los Americanos from the sacred soil of Mexico.

Our informant further assures us that there is really a feeling of deep vengeance aroused in the interior of the country against the United States, and that the farther we advance the greater will be the hostility against us. The few Americans in the country entertain fears that the Mexicans from their superior knowledge of the mountain passes, will lay ambuscades and cut off the advanced detachments of our army in the operations that are to ensue. From his position Santa Anna can at any time throw a heavy force upon almost any point of our extended line of operations, and by taking advantages of ground annoy Gens. Taylor or Scott excessively.

As late as the 27th of November there were no regular troops stationed at the city of Mexico, a few civics—untrained militia—being the entire force to defend it. Arista was there, living in retirement. It is said that Santa Anna was anxious that he should accompany him to San Luis, and offered him an important command; but Arista said he had been arrested for his conduct to Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, and until he had had a full trial would not return to the army.

All kinds of business were dull in Mexico, while a general stagnation of trade pervaded every portion of the country. The only artisans or mechanics who had any work were the gunsmith—they were busy, night and day, in every town and city. Old machetes—short, straight swords with which the Indians under Hidalgo fought the Spaniards during the revolution—were being sharpened, and every old musket was undergoing repairs.

American deserters are scattered through the country and are represented as in most deplorable condition. No less than twenty-five had reached the city of Mexico in most wretched plight, were begging from door to door, and were received and treated with contempt by all. Eight had reached as far south as Orizava and a little work had been given them at a factory to keep them from actual starvation.

Of the Mexican Congress we can learn nothing. Another arrival will give us the particulars of its organization, and for this we are looking with anxiety.

[MPR]

RW47v24i3p4c7, January 8, 1847, Tampico—Martial Law.

By arrival here yesterday of the schr. Henry M. Johnson, Capt. Hardy, from Tampico, which port she left on the 18th inst., we learn that Col. Gates, commanding at that place, declared martial law on the 15th inst, when all the American citizens in the city and in shipboard were put under arms. On the 16th, a search was made in the city, when about 600 stands of arms, and a quantity of ammunition were discovered; about 300 of the guns were found to be loaded. The whole force of troops at Tampico on the 16th amounted to nearly 900 men.

The steam propeller Virginia arrived at Tampico on the 17th from Brazos Santiago, with 300 men, belonging to the Alabama regiment. The steam propeller Tennessee and Jas. Cage with troops and horses from Brazos, were going up the river when the schr. H.M. Johnson was coming out.–N.O. Times.

[MPR]

RW47v24i3p4c7, January 8, 1847

Tampico— The schooner Henry M. Johnson came up to town yesterday from Tampico, having sailed the 18th inst. The captain reports that there was great excitement in the town, arising from the supposed proximity of a large body of Mexicans. All the Americans in the
One of the fearful consequences of the War of Conquest in which we are engaged— for it is in vain to deny that the acquisition of territory, if not the instigating motive, was anticipated as an inevitable incidental result of the contest— is beginning already to manifest itself. While yet we are in the midst of the war, our statesmen, instead of devoting all their energies to its speedy and honorable termination, are wrangling over the disposition to be made of the anticipated “spoils of victory.” The North, through its accredited organs on the floor of Congress, is in imagination defining the metes and bounds of new non-slaveholding States to be formed of the Mexican provinces over which the stars and stripes wave, or which may hereafter be wrested from that Republic. Already they claim that from all the conquered territory which may, at the close of the war, fall into our possession, regardless of its geographical position, whether on the borders of Texas, in the Valley of the Rio Grande, or on the Pacific, the “foul plague—spot” of Slavery, which is so offensive to them, must be unconditionally excluded. Nor is this position assumed by the insignificant handful of Abolitionists alone, or confined to either of the two great political parties to the North. It is the unanimous voice of the representatives of the entire non-slaveholding region, with perhaps the exception of two or three individuals, who, it is naturally presumed, in dissenting from the remainder, misrepresent the feelings and sentiments of the constituent body. The remarks of Preston King, of New York, deliberately written out before they were read in the House, in which the inflexible determination of the non-slaveholding States require, as a preliminary condition to the extension of our boundaries, that Slavery shall not be tolerated within the limits of the territory that may be acquired, wear more the appearance of a Manifesto of the North, especially when the prominence of that member and the nature of his political conexions are considered, than of any ordinary speech, for which the individual alone, who delivered it, is to be held responsible. Hence, the importance attached to it in the House— as evinced by the fact, that, almost abandoning, since that remarkable document was read, the discussion of the origin and conduct of the Mexican war, as well as of the means proposed for prosecuting it with more efficiency than heretofore, the debate has degenerated into an angry controversy between the North and the South, upon the vital question of slavery, to which our anticipated Mexican conquests has imparted momentous importance. Better far would it have been, had Mr. Polk, following the example of his “illustrious predecessors,” Jackson and Van Buren, consented to keep the sword still unsheathed, however numerous and aggravated the causes of war with Mexico, until every avenue of hope had been closed to a peaceful and honorable termination of the various points in dispute between the two governments, rather than to have precipitated, as he has done, a War, which, if it is not to be terminated, as we are told it shall not be, until Mexico pays to the last farthing in territory, what we know she can pay in no other mode, will, in the final disposition of our conquests, lead to violent dissensions among ourselves, and possibly to a dissolution of the Union! Mr. Dargin, of Alabama, who participated in the debate last Thursday, in a speech characterized equally by ability and good temper, gave utterance to what will hereafter become a general sentiment, at least in the South, when he said that “we regretted that the Army of the United States had ever crossed the Rio Grande, after the battles of the 8th and 9th;” since in doing so, the war, whatever may have been original intention of its authors, has been converted, ex necessitate, into one of conquest— and since that conquest must inevitably bring into discussion the great question of the “BALANCE OF POWER” between the North and South, which, rather than hostility to the “sin of slavery,” lies at the bottom of this premature agitation of that topic— this bold attempt to adjust the terms and conditions of the contemplated “ANNEXATION,” even while the war, with all its attendant uncertainties, is in progress, and without the slightest probability, so far as the uninitiated can discern, of its early termination!

We annex a fuller sketch of the Thursday’s debate than we had room for in Saturday’s paper:

Mr. DARGIN said, in regard to the Missouri Compromise, he held it as most sacred, and would abide by it. But would the North— would Northern men— upon this floor say they were ready to abide by this Compromise?— Not one of them.

Mr. VINTON of Ohio asked the gentleman to allow him to explain. He denied that the North had violated the Missouri compromise. There had been no free territory made South of the 36 30, since the Missouri Compromise, and much of the territory beyond was not now in the Union. Moreover, the Missouri Compromise applied to the country then in the Union, and not to the country which had been acquired from foreign countries.

Mr. DARGIN went on and said the country did not understand the Compromise, and he repeated that the Northern men were ready to abandon it. Even more than this— They would violate this compromise which had now been preserved for twenty—seven years, and never violated by the South. And there was not one Southern man who would violate it or suffer it to be violated.

Mr. DOUGLAS— I am not willing to be misunderstood by my silence. I am willing to abide by the Missouri Compromise. I recognized it in the Texas resolutions. I recognize it now, and shall always recognize it.

Several voices of Southern members. “Good. That’s good.”

Mr. DOUGLAS thought also that there were many others who would agree with him, and Mr. Dargin hoped there were.

Mr. DARGIN, coming to the war question, said that he regretted that the army had ever crossed the Rio Grande after the battles of the 8th and 9th . If his hand could have controlled the action of other men, they should never have crossed. And having crossed, he did not think it necessary that the army should go to the Halls of the Moctezumas. He would rather mark out a line and defend it, and [...] show to the world that we had gone to war for the sake of securing peace.

By this remark he did not mean to censure the Administration, but only to express his own opinion. And now he would ask, shall we take any territory from Mexico if the north will not divide it with us? Shall our sons from Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and elsewhere fight battles to make free states?

I desire, said Mr. D. to see this question settled here, and that we may now know for what we fight, and whether for the North and South or for the North alone. Give us the territory south of 36 30 for a Slave country. This he said to Northern men. If they refuse to do this, this Union at once must sink. There could be no doubt of this whatever. The Union was instituted for our good and our common good. If the Missouri compromise was to be violated, from the day it was done we might date the downfall of the American Union.

Take this as the admonition of a man who may not address you again or represent his constituents hereafter upon this floor. His honest conviction was that the Union could not last one day after the Compromise was violated. He, therefore, beseeched all men to act up to this compromise, and to preserve the Union. But there were real dangers hanging over the country at this time, and it was time for men, without regard to party, to rally as one man to remove the difficulties.

Mr. SEDDON, of Va. Continued the debate, and thanked the member for the cool, temperate and timely remarks he had made. He concurred in all that had been said. For himself he was a Southern man in birth, in feeling and in education, and when he heard some of the remarks which had been made upon this floor, he found it difficult to restrain himself.

His first impulse upon a previous occasion had been to rise and demand a hearing, but when he saw older and abler men remaining silent, he could not venture to speak. Mr. S. then went on to speak of the Slave questions as a momentous woe, and as one which the North had no right to interfere with.

The North had no right to say all this territory shall be free, and the country could not carry on a war upon this aspect of the question.

Mr. GROVER, of N.Y. continued the debate in a speech in reply to the two which had gone before. He thought there was no danger in dissolving the Union, and he believed the Union would last– that even these Southern men would rally under it and enjoy it for ages to come. Mr. G. argued this question with such earnestness and independence as to call up

Mr. BOYD of Ky., Mr. CHAPMAN of Ala. and Mr. SEDDON of Va. All of whom were disposed to put most pointed questions to him, but all of which were answered by declaring that he was in favor of the war– in favor of the acquisition of territory, but that he would demand as he believed the whole Democracy of the North would, that all territory hereafter annexed should be free territory.

He would vote to put Slavery upon no soil where it did not now exist. The Compromise did not require that foreign country, now free, should be converted into Slave territory, and it was selfish to ask it. He had voted for the admission of Texas with Slavery, because the Institution already existed there; but there was no Slavery in Mexico, barbarous as that Nation was.

Robert Greenhow, Esq. of Washington, has presented a copy of his History of Oregon and California to each of the Field Officers and to the Adjutant of the Virginia regiment of volunteers.

The Petersburg Republican furnishes us with the adjoined list of the officers of the "Petersburg Union Volunteers," the second company organized in that patriotic town:

William Murray Robinson, Captain.
James Laurenson Bryan, 1st Lieutenant.
Aurelius Rives Shands, 2d do. (1)
William Johnston McGowan, 2d do. (2)
Benjamin Wyche Collier, 1st Sergeant.
Benjamin Franklin Winfield, 2d do.
James Washington Baldwin, 3d do.
James William Rivers, 4th do.
Nathaniel Pedworth, 1st Corporal.
William Francis Rives, 2d do.
Harmon Thomas Burns, 3d do.
John William Fisher, 4th do.

Robert Greenhow, Esq. of Washington, has presented a copy of his History of Oregon and California to each of the Field Officers and to the Adjutant of the Virginia regiment of volunteers.

[MPR]
The citizens of Philadelphia have determined to present to Lieut. James Lawrence Parker a handsome Naval Sword, a pair of Epaulettes and a full suit Uniform, for his daring exploit in burning the Mexican brig Creole, while moored to the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, and for his noble conduct in refusing to leave the unfortunate brig Somers, until she had sunk into the depths of the ocean.

The New York Express states that Capt. Walker, of the Texas Rangers, had procured in that city 1000 Revolving Pistols for the new regiment of Mounted Riflemen.

The intelligence from the Army is calculated to excite serious apprehensions for the fate of the small detachment in garrison at Saltillo, under command of the intrepid Worth. If it be true, as reported, and is certainly not at all improbable, that Santa Anna was advancing upon that city with an overwhelming force, it is presumed almost too much even upon the tried courage of our soldiers to suppose that they would be able successfully to resist the mediated attack. We await further intelligence with deep anxiety.

A detachment of Volunteers from Franklin and Bedford counties reached the city on Saturday afternoon, about 20 in number, and attached themselves to Capt. Wm. B. Archer’s company.

The Governor was compelled to decline the services of the Norfolk company, commanded by Capt. O.E. Edwards, the regiment being already full to the overflowing. The company has consequently instructed its commander to tender its services to the Executive of North Carolina.

A letter from Tampico, to the New Orleans Picayune, dated December 17, states that advices from Vera Cruz had been received there of the action of the Mexican Congress. “They declare that they will not think or treat of peace until every hostile foot has cleared the Mexican soil, and every vessel that lines their coast is withdrawn.” The writer adds, “I consider the war now commenced in real earnest.”

The death of Gen. Thomas L. Hamer has created a universal feeling of regret in Ohio, of which State he was one of the ablest and most distinguished citizens. The Legislature, now in session, has taken measures for the removal of his remains, at the expense of the State, to the soil of Ohio.

Gen. Leslie Combs has lately received a letter announcing that O’Blenis, who murdered his son two years ago, has at length met his deserts, having been shot by some Mexicans at Matamoros, where he had settled himself as a trader. Just before his death, he had murdered a gentleman of the name Townsend, who had a claim against him.
From the New Orleans Picayune, Jan. 2.

The steamer Virginia, Capt. Smith, arrived last evening from Tampico, via Brazos Santiago, having left the Brazos on the 27th inst. The brig Empressario, Capt. Collins, which sailed from Tampico on the 26th, also arrived last night. By these vessels we have received letters from Mr. Lumsden, at Tampico, some of which we give below. They contain all the intelligence brought from Tampico, and clear up some points in the accounts previously received which appeared obscure.

We have conversed with a gentleman who came passenger in the Virginia from Brazos, and who is direct from Monterey. He has kindly furnished us with the following information, which is highly important, if there be no error in the accounts. They were fully credited at eh Brazos, and are confirmed by Capt. Brower, of the schooner Robert Mills, who arrived last evening from that port.

An express from Gen. Worth at Saltillo, arrived at Monterey on Wednesday, the 16th of Dec. It brought the news that Gen. Worth had learned through his spies that Santa Anna was within three days march of Saltillo, at the head of an army of twenty or thirty thousand men. The express bore a call upon Gen. Taylor for reinforcements. General Taylor and his staff had left Monterey on the 15th ult.— the day before the express arrived— fro Victoria, to join his command, which was two days march in advance of him.

Gen. Butler, in command at Monterey, immediately sent of dispatches to Gen. Marshall, at Camargo, and to Gen. Patterson, at Matamoros, to send forward without delay all the troops they could spare from their commands.

Gen. Patterson had left Matamoros only the day before the news reached that place. It was at once forwarded to him, and upon learning its purport our informant states that he immediately started on his return with the view to proceed to Monterey.

It was reported at Tampico on the 25th, as will be seen from the postscript to Mr. Lumsden’s last letter, that a portion of Gen. Patterson’s command had entered Victoria, but it is not mentioned that the General himself had arrived, so that we cannot judge how far the news from the two sources may conflict.

The express reported at Matamoros that the road from Moterey to Camargo was lined with troops— regulars and volunteers— on their march to Monterey, having been previously ordered up. Our informant says there were four regiments upon the road. The route from Monterey is infested by predatory bands of rancheros, by which the traveling is rendered insecure. Our train had been attacked a few days before our informant passed over the road, as had also several small parties, and some few men had been killed and wounded.

We need not say that this news possesses the highest interest. As we write we have only verbal reports in regard to it, but hope to receive this morning our correspondence from the army. There is no intrinsic improbability in the news of Santa Anna’s movements, and if he possesses the energy and skill claimed for him, nothing appears more likely than that he should fall like a thunderbolt upon some point in our extended line and hope to crush us. But we have every confidence in the vigilance of General Worth, and his ability to hold the enemy in check until Gen. Wool and Gen. Taylor arrive to his support. We await further intelligence with the utmost interest.

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune.]

Tampico, December 19, 1847.

Gen. Shields takes formal command here to-day. He is energetic, thoughtful, and intelligent, and is in every respect fitted for his station. One of the last acts of Col. Gates, previously in command of this post, was to remove a fellow named Labruere from his office as auctioneer, for refusing to take up arms and turn out with the citizens the other day when they had the alarm of which I informed you yesterday “Served him right.”

Lieut. R.P. Hammond, 3d Artillery, aide-de-camp to Gen. Shields, is appointed Acting Assistant Adjutant General of the Command at Tampico.

In obedience to instructions from Maj. Gen. Patterson, Capt. Hunt, 4th Artillery, with his company now here, is ordered to Camargo to relieve the garrison there.

We have various rumors of the movements of the Mexicans in the interior, but nothing of apparent correctness enough to tell you of.

Tampico, December 23, 1846.

The British mail steamer Dee, Capt. Griffith, which has been some days off the entrance to this place, sailed yesterday morning for Vera Cruz. I learned she carried a considerable amount of specie. The officers of the Dee, with one or two of whom I became acquainted here, are very polite and pleasing, free, frank and gentlemanly in their bearing.

The brig Hallowell arrived here three nights ago from Brazos Santiago, with all the remaining Alabama troops but one company. These are the only volunteer troops here. They are, for the most part, a hardy set of men, orderly and quiet in their deportment, and will, no doubt, if an opportunity occurs, show that they are made of good metal.
Except the Ewing, the vessels belong to the U.S. Squadron, mentioned in my last as being here, have not yet sailed, but they will soon be off. What is to be their point of destination I do not certainly know; but I have gathered enough to assure me that Tuspan is to be looked in upon. The steamer Spitfire, [...] Tattnall, is certainly to run in by way of a reconnaissance, if nothing more. The officers are all most anxious for something to turn up, giving them a fair chance to do something, and I sincerely wish they may have a chance.

Tampico is a fine little place. I am becoming more and more pleased with it. It is being Americanized very rapidly. At present there are but few of the better classes of the former citizens here; but those few are becoming, apparently, quite satisfied with the new régime. The police regulations are excellent, and every thing goes on quiet. But of this more anon.

I visited, a day or two since, the line of works building by our forces, under the superintendence of Capt. Barnard, of the U.S. Engineers, and I must say it is most beautiful, so far as it is progressed. More substantial defensive works I have seldom seen. They are superlatively grand, in comparison with those constructed by the Mexicans heretofore, and most indubitably must they command all the approaches to the city by land, however large the number of troops advancing. The greatest scientific skill appears to have been displayed in the strength and construction, as well as proper locations of these works. In a word, they will, when completed, be impregnable—at least to Santa Anna's whole army!

Hart has taken a very nice house here, which he is fixing up as a theatre. In the meantime he gives a series of concerts, Mrs. H., Miss Christian and others appearing in songs, and Wells executing dances, &c. The idea of an American theatre in Tampico is rather novel, but nevertheless we are to have one, and I almost venture to prophecy its success.

I could write you pages about Mrs. Chase, the excellent lady of our worthy consul here; but you have been furnished with the details of her unshrinking, noble and daring conduct, as well as in defending herself and home while her husband was in exile, as in furnishing the most important information to our squadron in the Gulf—information which saved Tampico and made it an American possession! I need, therefore, say no more than this— which I must say— that Ann Chase is a great woman! I have had the honor of being presented to the lady, and confess that I lack words to express my admiration of those attributes in her which make woman great, and render her the heroine of a glorious incident in the history of America!

I have nothing to add, but shall keep you informed by every opportunity of what may be interesting.

Yours, &c. F. A. L.

Tampico, Dec. 25, 1846.

I wish you all a merry Christmas. There is every appearance of there being a merry one here—such as Tampico never saw before. Eggs are very plenty and very cheap, and lots of egg nog to be drunk, The "boys" are bound to do it.

The vessels of the squadron mentioned in my last are still here. The prize schooner "Belle," under command of Acting Master Perry, (of the Cumberland,) will sail tomorrow for Anton Lizardo. The steamer Spitfire, schrs. Reefer and Nonato (prize) will remain here until the forces are reinforced—then look out for something in the shape of a fight at Tuspan. I have a little information—authentic—about Tuspan, which I will give you. Gen. Cos, commander of the place, has refused to obey the order of Santa Anna to evacuate the town. He has a force under him of from four to five hundred troops of the line, and a large body of Indians whom he has called in from the mountains of Mazantla and Papantle—two or three thousand in number—but indifferently armed. At Tuspan there are three conical hills—the town lying in the valley. These heights are all fortified with six pieces of artillery each, besides having a strong picketing formed of heavy chijal posts. There is no defence at the Mouth of the river, but about half way from the bar to the town—six miles—there is a battery of 24-pounders. The water in the bar is now about five feet only. Some of the guns are the Truxton's, captured by the unfortunate loss of that vessel under Captain Carpender.

It is thought here by the most intelligent persons, that the only way to successfully attack Tuspan would be by troops, as the town is so situated that a vessel in the river can only bring her guns to bear on two different points, while the guns on the heights not only command the town entirely, but the river also. The most feasible way to attack the place would be to send a force to be landed at the south of the bar [Tuspan being on the north,] abreast of the town, and distant about twelve miles, and proceed to bombard the place at once, when no doubt the third or fourth shell falling in their midst would cause the Mexicans to display a white flag in a very short time.

Now a little bit about Tula, or Tamaulipas. The garrison of this place, [Tampico,] when it evacuated the city, went to Tula. This garrison consisted of the battalion of Tampico, 12th Regiment of Infantry, Permanentes de Tampico, Veteranos de Tampico, a small company of artillery, the remnant of the 6th Regiment, left from the memorable actions of Palo Alto and Resaca, and a small force of cavalry. At present there are in Tula, distant about 180 miles from this place, on the route to San Luis Potosi, some three or four thousand men of various arms, under Gens. Valencia, Carvajal and a half dozen others, who are fortifying the place against an apprehended attack from the American forces at this place.

Private letters from the city of Mexico are in this city, stating that it is expected there will soon be a revolution there against the ministers, who the people say have proved themselves incompetent to manage the affairs of the nation in a proper manner. In fact it is said that everything is in confusion—no money, no credit, and plenty of dissatisfaction.

The people here in Tampico—except those who formerly held office—look upon us as their deliverers, not as enemies. It is well known that the Governor of this State [Tamaulipas] is ready, on the first approach of the United States forces towards Victoria its capital, to surrender, in the name of its Congress, the whole territory to us.
The police regulations here are most excellent. By the following orders you will see that certain classes of people needn't come here:

Headquarters Tampico Troops,
Orders No. 3,
Tampico, Mexico, Dec. 22.

I. All persons occupying houses in Tampico or in its vicinity are hereby strictly prohibited from allowing any species of public gambling within the same.

II. All houses or other places kept for the purpose of public gambling will be closed, the persons found gambling in them arrested, those attached to the Army punished, and those who are not, banished.

III. All personal property found in any house or place kept for gambling, and all money or property employed in gambling will be confiscated, and the proceeds thereof appropriated as a hospital fund for the relief of the poor and indigent in Tampico.

IV. Major N. Williams, 4th Artillery, is specially assigned to the superintendence of the police and good order of the town. He will charge himself particularly with carrying the provisions of this order into immediate execution, and with the prevention and suppression of any species of riot, disturbance and disorder whatsoever. And the better to effect this, he is authorized to call upon the commander of the troops in town for any assistance which may be necessary. By order of Brig. Gen. Shields:

R.P. Hammond, A.A. Adj't Gen.

This is about all I have for you at the present writing.

Yours, &c. F.A.L.

P.S. I have just heard that a portion of the troops under Gen. Patterson have reached Victoria, and there was no fighting.

F.A.L.

[MPR]

RW47v24i4p1c6, January 12, 1847, Further News from New Mexico. Rumored Defeat of the Dragoons.

We copy the following from the St. Louis Republican of Wednesday, 30th ult.:

A gentleman of this city, connected with the army, has furnished us with the following extract of a letter received from Ft. Leavenworth, by the last mail. It true, the news is painfully important. The letter says:

"WE have dates from Santa Fe to November 15. Capt. Burgwin, with the dragoons, and also three companies of Col. Doniphan's regiment, have gone below to the assistance of the traders. There is a rumor that sixty dragoons have been defeated by the Navajo Indians. Lieut. Noble, of the dragoons, writes that 'he fears and believes the rumor is true.'"

[MPR]

RW47v24i4p2c1, January 12, 1847, General Taylor.

Mr. Fricklin, a member of the House of Representatives from Illinois, took occasion on Saturday last, to assail this gallant officer in the most virulent and acrimonious manner– attributing to his want of skill and energy the escape of the Mexican forces after the glorious battles of the 8th and 9th of May, and complaining of the tardiness of his movements since that event. It is scarcely worth while to say that, after the battles of the 8th and 9th, the glorious result of which electrified the whole country, General Taylor's shattered little army was not in a condition to pursue the retreating foe; and that even when, five months afterwards, he reached Monterey, he was but inadequately provided with the material necessary for a successful attack upon a fortified town, from which nevertheless, against fearful odds, he succeeded in expelling the enemy. The annals of war, we venture to say, do not furnish a parallel to the extraordinary triumphs of our armies, on the several occasions referred to, under circumstances so unpropitious and discouraging. Why, then, this assault, by one of the leading champions of the Administration, upon the gallant General, who has thus far triumphed over a superior force, with such inadequate means? Is the disgrace of the intrepid old hero deemed essential to a vindication of the Executive? If this be the motive of the member from Illinois, he ought to perceive that he will not accomplish his object by such a line of defence. If it be true, as he asserts, Gen. Taylor failed to meet responsibilities of his position with the sagacity and energy which the country had a right to expect, does he not see that the Administration is not less to blame than if, in his movements, he has obeyed implicitly instructions from Washington? Why, if he has thus betrayed his signal incompetency, has he been retained at the head of the army? For, why if he has exhibited the want of judgment or the criminal sloth now imputed to him, was he not long ago recalled, and the command–in–chief given to a better soldier? The Administration, it is obvious, cannot make Gen. Taylor the scapegoat of its flagrant errors. Yet we can see no other motive for this cruel assault upon the gallant General, by the sagacious military critic from the wilds of Illinois, who has been quietly sitting by his fireside, while the man he slanders has been patiently enduring the hardships of the camp, and fearlessly encountering the perils of the battle–field– unless, indeed, it be that he hopes by blighting his well–earned laurels, to remove him from the field of competition for the next Presidency– or perhaps to secure the appointment of “Lieutenant General” Benton, or some other court favorite, to supersede the veterans who have heretofore surmounted the most formidable obstacles and achieved a series of the most splendid triumphs.

We are not surprised at this attack upon Gen. Taylor; nor, so far as he is concerned, do we regret it– since it may have the effect of eliciting, in his defence, facts, yet unknown to the country, which, when they shall be divulged, will show that, while the seeming tardiness of his movements is ascribable exclusively to the inadequacy of his means, consequent upon the imbecility of the authorities at Washington, (and probably to so nothing worse than the imbecility of some of their agents,) his defeat of the Mexicans, under the circumstances, entitles him to rank with the first military commanders of the age. It is not our purpose, however, to anticipate that defence, which this attack upon him, bye a friend of the Administration, in Congress,– and we fear speaking its sentiments,– may render expedient. When it shall be made, we predict that it will fall with a crushing effect upon his assailants, open and concealed.

[MPR]

The Committee of Ways and Means last Saturday reported to the House of Representatives bills making the following appropriations– from which some faint idea may be formed of the amount of expenditure contemplated:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Category</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Army proper</td>
<td>$6,813,732.25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Volunteers</td>
<td>$22,725,310.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Navy</td>
<td>$8,920,044.91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Indians</td>
<td>$1,179,240.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>$39,638,327.41</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

[MPR]

The Southern mail failed yesterday and the day before– and we have no later news from the army than we published yesterday. The tenor of the last advices from the seat of war naturally creates some anxiety in regard to the probability of the successful defence of Saltillo by Gen. Worth, should an attack be made upon it by Santa Anna. A letter from Saltillo, dated on the 20th of November, anticipating the possibility of an attack upon Gen. Worth, says in that event, “we must fall back upon the Pass de los Muertos, or as far as Monterey. Saltillo we cannot retain with less than 5 or 6000 men and plenty of artillery, as we shold have to fortify several heights which overlook the town, and which, if in possession of an enemy, we could be driven out in an hour’s firing. The place itself is not defensible, being surrounded by eminences on all sides. The Muertos (or Death’s Passage,) we could defend with our present force for a season against a host in arms; and Monterey with a much smaller force then we could Saltillo, and much more effectually.” * * * “If he (Santa Anna) advances upon us, we must fall back, even if reinforced by Gen. Wool, unless we get on some heavy guns, of which we are destitute here. Could we have some 18’s or […], we might make a stand. With our present means, it would be the height of folly to remain, in the face of certain starvation, capture or destruction.”

[MPR]

We have done all in our power to goad the Tenth Legion into action; but our kind offices have been looked upon with suspicion and repelled with some of asperity. Nevertheless we were gratified when we announced the fact, to which our attention was especially called by the Enquirer, that, although too late for service, two companies of volunteers had been organized in Rockingham, (one of the tier of counties upon which the appellation of Caesar’s invincible cohorts have been conferred, for the Mexican war. But we are now informed by the Harrisonburg Republican, that no such companies were raised. It is true (says that paper) that some 30 men had volunteered on Mr. Kenney’s muster–roll, but they had despaired of raising even a single company and disbanded– and […] of their numbers only, William Smith and Calvin Smith, both Whigs, determined to join Capt. Wm. B. Archer’s company in Richmond. SO that, in truth, the Tenth Legion will contribute but two men to the Virginia regiment; and both of them are Whigs! We state the fact without comment. If the Tenth Legion is "defamed by it, surely it is not our fault!

The Republican informs us that the citizens of Harrisonburg gave a dinner to the two gallant Whig volunteers, and presented to each of them a six–barrel revolver. To each of them a Bowie knife was also given– one by Mr. Isaac Aiken, and the other by Mr. Jos. S. Effinger.

[MPR]
RW47v24i4p2c2, January 12, 1847

Gen. Charles Sterret Ridgely, the father of Capt. Randolph Ridgely, who so highly distinguished himself in the Mexican campaign, and who was subsequently killed by a fall from his horse, died at Elk Ridge, Maryland on the 5th inst. in the 65th year of his age.

[MPR]

RW47v24i4p2c2, January 12, 1847

The Anti–Slavery movements in the House of Representatives, in connection with the Mexican War, are virtually admitted, by the N.Y. Evening Post, an organ of Northern Democracy, to have special reference to the next Presidential election, and are designed to aid Silas Wright, whose immediate representative, Preston King, threw the firebrand into the House. What think the Southern Locos of their "natural allies"?

[MPR]

RW47v24i4p2c2, January 12, 1847

Lieut. Thomas P. August, of the Richmond Rangers, has been appointed Adjutant of the Virginia regiment of Volunteers.

[MPR]

RW47v24i4p2c2, January 12, 1847, Letter from Washington.

Correspondence of the Whig.
Washington, Jan. 9th, 1847.

What does the Locofoco press say to the last news from Mexico, received this evening? Gen. Santa Anna, to whom Mr. Polk took care to give a free pass through our blockade, was on his march to Saltillo, to meet Gen. Worth and Gen. Taylor in open battle. This Lieutenant General of Polk’s choice, who was sent to Mexico to assume the command of the army of our enemies, to slaughter our brave troops, and, if possible, annihilate our army– what have they to say of him? They are “as dumb as oysters” about that! If the Whigs had sent him there it would have been wrong– but Mr. Polk sent him there, and it is right! Verily, in these days of modern “Democracy,” whatever the Executive may do is right, while it would not be right for one of the people to do the same. Had Mr. Webster, or any other Whig, sent a friend to Mexico on any business, and had that friend put himself at the head of the Mexican army, we would never have heard the end of it! Mr. Polk sends a man to Mexico, and takes the trouble to order Commodore Conner to let him pass the blockade. If Mr. Polk had put himself at the head of the army of Mexico, we could have easily beaten him, for he does not love the smell of powder! but he sends the treacherous and bloody Tyrant, Santa Anna, to Mexico. Everything Santa Anna does there, Mr. Polk does. Quod factit per alium, factit per se – what a man does through another it the same as if he had done it himself. It almost amounts to a moral certainty that Santa Anna could not have passed our blockade, without Mr. Polk’s order to that effect. Indeed, if Mr. Polk did not suppose it impossible for him to pass our blockade, why did he take the trouble to order Commodore Conner to pass him? Mr. Polk chose to intrigue with Santa Anna. He was exiled by his own people. Mr. Polk chooses him as his instrument in an intrigue, to come the “green game” over the Mexicans, and he is as much responsible for Santa Anna’s doings there, as he is for John Slidell’s. This tool of Mr. Polk, or rather the crafty Tyrant who made Mr. Polk his tool, is now leading a large army to the field to slaughter our men and to squander our money, and ten new regiments are required not to fight against this very chosen friend of Mr. Polk! yet where is the talk of “aid and comfort” of this? These flatterers of power, who cry lustily “The King can do no wrong,” as “silent as oysters” on this affair. It is “Democratic” to praise the Executive for what would be treason in any of the people!

“Aid and comfort,” cry these sycophants, if any one breathes a word against the President! The President is carrying on the war, and if you insinuate any thing about his ability to conduct it, you “aid and comfort” the enemy. No sirs. It is not the President who is conducting the war. It is Gen. Taylor and Gen. Scott, to both of whom the President has entrusted the conduct of the war. Yet here we have, to–day, two Locofocos, one of them looked upon as the especial mouth–piece of the President, who abuse old Gen. Taylor and Gen. Scott; charging them with incompetency! Is not this the worst kind of “aid and comfort” to Mexico, to say to the world and to Mexico, that the men to whom we have entrusted the conduct of the war, are incompetent to discharge their duty! Mr. Ficklin of Illinois, to–day, blamed Gen. Taylor for not following the Mexicans across the Rio Grande, after the battle of Resaca de la Palma, when he must have known, if he knew anything, that Gen. Taylor had not been supplied with any means for crossing rivers. This Mr. Ficklin scolded the brave American army for not plunging into the river, after they had been fighting for about 36 hours. He said they should have eaten before the battle commenced! Yes; there are men at a distance to blame Gen. Taylor for not crossing the river, who would never have crossed it themselves, unless an enemy was behind them! And Jacob Thompson of Mississippi thought fit to ridicule Gen. Taylor, as knowing how to “mark time,” but not fit to conduct a campaign as a chief. Nor was Gen. Scott capable of conducting the campaign, if we take his Florida campaign as a specimen. Now, these slurs cast upon our brave Generals, are the very worst kind of “aid and comfort” to Mexico. Of course these men will escape unscathed in the Locofoco papers. It is wrong only for Whigs to claim the freedom of speech!

The bill before the House to–day, was amended in several particulars; then a substitute offered by Mr. Rathbun, was adopted, by a majority of 8, and immediately afterwards rejected by a majority of one! The question for Monday morning will be the passage of the original bill, which gives the President the disposal of about 400 offices with which he could purchase the votes of men enough of his own party in Congress to carry any measure almost eh might choose. And this is what he wants the bill passed for. Mr. Rathbun’s amendment, leaving the choice of officers with the men themselves, was rejected to give the President political power. If not they would have taken Mr. Rathbun’s amendment.

If the bill pass in its original form, it will create ten additional regiments of a standing army, which will not be disbanded at the close of war, whilst the regiments now in the field are not full by as many men as will compose these ten new regiments.

It will create a great array of office holders, colonels, &c, who will have to be fed forever at the public crib.

It will be a direct insult to the volunteers, whose patriotism and efficiency are doubted and libelled by Mr. Polk and his Locofoco advisers. It will be a direct and cruel insult to the men who may enlist, inasmuch as they may not have the proper privilege of choosing the officer under whom they have to fight and fall.

For these and other reasons, I presume the Whigs will generally vote against it in the House. I think it will be defeated in the Senate.
There will be an attempt, on Monday morning, to reconsider the vote rejecting Mr. Rathbun’s substitute– on of the New York delegation has consented to move to reconsider– but I presume that it will be lost and the original bill will pass; all amendments being cut off by the previous question.

You will see that the House have taken a decided stand against the Lt. General, (120 to 90.) Will they be whipped into the traces hereafter? Wait and see.

Mr. Webster arrived here this evening, from the North, with his lady. Mr. Robert Tyler also arrived this evening from the South. Mr.
Lover, the celebrated Irish novelist and poet, is expected here to-morrow.

Mr. Cabell of Florida, who has been here for several days, receiving the congratulations of his numerous friends, returns to Richmond this evening.

BRUTUS.

[MPR]

---

Although the House of Representatives refused, on Saturday, by a vote of 90 to 120, to amend Mr. Rathbun’s substitute, by the insertion of a clause authorizing the appointment of a Lieut. General, yet the House, in committee of the whole, had previously, by a vote of 84 to 67, incorporated a provision to that effect in the bill for which Mr. Rathbun’s was a substitute, and which we presume passed the body yesterday. In that event, the appointment of a Lieutenant General will have been authorized by the House, notwithstanding it is clearly in opposition to the opinion of a majority of the members, upon a fuller vote. It is to be hoped, however, that the Senate will strike out this feature of the bill.

Should it pass both Houses, however, Senator Benton cannot receive the appointment– a provision having been inserted, declaring that “it shall not be lawful to appoint to any of the offices authorized by this act any member of the present Congress.” Rumor says that Caleb Cushing is to be the man!!!

Of the Virginia Delegation, Messrs. Brown, Johnson, Leake, McDowell and Tredway, voted for the creation of the office of Lieutenant General, and Messrs. Atkinson, Bayly, Bedinger, Chapman, Hopkins, Hubbard, Hunter, Pendleton and Seddon, against it.

[MPR]

---

We briefly noticed yesterday the interesting ceremony of the previous afternoon– the presentation of Judge B.G. Baldwin, at the request of the County Court of Augusta, of a Flag to the fine company of Volunteers which she has given to the service of her country.

Every spectator was struck with the beauty of the Flag, both the design and the execution of which attest the genius and skill of the artist. One one side is our national emblem, the Eagle, with the words, “E Pluribus Unum”;– on the other the Virginia coat of arms, with its appropriate and glorious motto: “Sic simper Tyrannis”

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, quite a crowd assembled to witness the interesting ceremony.

We have the pleasure of laying before our readers this morning the admirable address of Judge Baldwin and the not less felicitous reply of Capt. Harper.

Judge Baldwin’s Address.

Volunteers of Augusta!– At the call of your country, you have left the comforts of civil life and the endearments of domestic ties, to devote your whole energies to her service, and peril your lives in her cause. You have witnessed the deep feeling occasioned by this movement in the community from which you come. You have observed the generous sympathy in your behalf which pervaded the county of Augusta, during your brief preparations for an enterprise of such thrilling interest. You could not mistake the manifestations of kind regard, which attended your departure. You cannot forget the affecting evidences of anxiety for your welfare, exhibited by the associates and fellow-citizens from whom you have separated.

I speak of no casual and transient excitement—no sudden and momentary burst of emotion. The best wishes, the anxious care of Augusta, follow you still. Since you left us, the public sentiment has been concentrated by the constituted authorities, who have resolved that you shall bear with you a mark of her attachment, best suited to the occasion, and most grateful to the hearts of our citizen-soldiers.

Behold, then, the gift of Augusta to her sons!—who go forth to sustain her ancient honor and renown—to meet the enemies of our country, and do battle in her cause! It is intended as a memorial of affectionate regard—of intense solicitude—of abiding trust. It is intended as an emblem of what she expects, and of what you have resolved. It is intended to stimulate you in times of difficulty, and cheer you in moments of gloom. It is intended as a bond of inseparable union between your hearts and your home. It is intended to remind you, at every step of your advance, of your duty to yourselves, your country, and your friends.

I have no commission to urge you to courage in the field—towards deeds of daring in the assault—to unyielding firmness in defence. No!
Soldiers of Augusta, no! We leave such topics to your own thoughts—we hold them needless and unprofitable in speech, to the descendants of the sturdy and dauntless settlers of our land, the pioneers of the wilderness, the conquerors of the merciless savage foe—to the grandsons of the men who fought at Guilford, at King’s Mountain, at the Cowpens, at York—to the sons of the men who drew back from no duty in our last conflict with a mighty foe—to the men who were lately represented at Palo Alto, at Resaca de la Palma, on the heights and steeps of bloody Monterey. We address no direction of words to the spirit which swells in the bosoms, and bums in the veins, of our bold and hardy mountainiers!

Let me turn from what we know, to what we hope and believe—that this banner will never be degraded by those over whom it is to wave, by any stain of cruelty, of disorder, of rapine, of devastation—you that you will return it to its donor, however stained with blood, however torn in battle, unsullied by any crime to be received with joyful acclamations, and placed amongst the archives of your country, as a proud monument of your worth, as a precious legacy to future generations. And here you will not deem it presumptuous in an early friend of your fathers, one who has known them long and well, who has been honored by their confidence, who retains a grateful recollection of their kindness and encouragement, that he should suggest to you a few hints for your guidance, amidst the difficulties and dangers of the new career upon which you are about to enter.

Learn, then, what you cannot fully know without experience, that the first duty of a soldier is perfect subordination: a cheerful obedience to the commands of his superiors; a faithful observance of the martial law. Without this subjection, there can be no safety, no honor, no glory. Let not your pride be hurt but this inevitable necessity—deem it no degradation—consider it no hardship: it is the common lot of all who leave the mild and gentle pursuits of civic life for the stern and rigid profession of arms. A military authority is especially despotic, whatever may be the form of government from which it springs. Its sway is indispensable for the citizens of a Republic as for the subjects of a Prince. Nay more; the armies of the freest nations that ever existed have been most distinguished for a rigid discipline; and it is the very subjection of a proud and independent spirit to the uncompromising authority of military command, which has covered them with glory and immortalized their fame.

But bear in mind that though your duties as soldiers are stern, and arduous, and rigid, they are not to divest you of the virtues which adorn the civic life. Far from it. On the contrary, they often call forth the noblest feelings of the heart, and give scope to the highest qualities of the soul. But, I can only glance at this fruitful theme. A single example must suffice. The enemy is to be subdued, not to be torn to pieces, or trampled in the dust. So soon as resistance ceases, forbearance and mercy should resume their sway. At that moment the fierceness of the Christian soldier is disarmed—he binds up the wounds of his prostrate foe, extends to him a helping hand, relieves his distress, contributes to his wants, consoles him in his grief and shame.

To the non-combatant of the hostile nation all unnecessary violence is a crime; and what goes unpunished amidst the din of arms, as appeal still lies to a high and mighty Judge. And what shall I say, if that violence be offered to the weaker sex? Oh, deep disgrace! Oh, burning shame! Oh, damning thought! Is there a man amongst you, who deserves the name, that could be tempted to such a deed?
None, not one! If he could, one cry for mercy, one shriek of despair, would send back his thoughts to his native land, and summon his memory to the mother who bore and nursed him—to the sister who loved and cheered him.

But the topics of admonition and counsel spring up around me as I progress, and warn me not to advance too far. I must compress what I may yet venture to say into a few brief words.

Look again upon your flag! Does it sit, as it waves, your inmost hearts—does it fan the fire of your veins—does it swell your soul with thoughts of gallant deeds? I tell you it is nothing—worse than nothing—it if only moves your passions, and subjects your reason to their sway. Know, that the first victory you have to gain is over yourselves—that you must acquire self-control—that you must temper enthusiasm with discretion—that you must seek the guidance of a calm and sober judgment. Learn that you have much to learn. Bear in mind that you have to gain the art of war—the discipline of the soldier—the dexterous use of arms—the wakeful vigilance of the veteran, his care of his supplies, his capacity to bear fatigues, his sagacious forecast of his wants. And remember, never to forget that the same industry and prudence, sobriety and frugality, patience and skill, that crown with success the pursuits of civil life, are quite as essential—nay, still more essential—to encounter and overcome the far greater difficulties of a career in arms.

A few more words and I have done. Non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the company: You are volunteers, not enlisted soldiers.
You enter the army not as a matter of necessity, but choice. You aspire to usefulness: you thirst for fame; you cherish the thought of returning to your friends and your homes, with established reputations, to resume the pursuits of civic life, with energies increased, with knowledge enlarged, with hopes encouraged. You have associated as a band of volunteers: I trust you will prove a band of brothers: with mutual confidence and esteem, respect and good will; inspired with a generous emulation; discarding all petty jealousies and distrusts. You have chosen your own officers; yield them a cheerful and respectful obedience; guard their reputations as you would your own; sustain them by your confidence and zeal.

Subaltern officers of the company: You have been called to duties of much responsibility and trust; you have the capacity and inclination to perform them; lead no temptations lead you astray from the path of usefulness and honor; scorn all vulgar arts and sordid aims; aspire to high distinction; gain it by the cultivation of your talents, and the application of all your energies to the faithful and enthusiastic discharge of all your duties. Let none be nearer your hearts than a parental care over the health, the safety, the good repute, the comforts of your men. Aid them by your friendly counsel, instruct them by your good example.

Kenton Harper, commandant of this corps: To you it would not become me to utter a single word upon the subject of your trust. No one understands it better than yourself. Augusta commits her sons to you with confidence, unbounded confidence.

Volunteers of Augusta: Receive this gift of the mother to her sons. Farewell—fare—well!

To this address, Capt. Harper responded, as follows:

Sir— It is with feelings which no language can adequately express, that I receive, at your hands, this proud testimonial of the confidence of old Augusta that her sons will do their duty, in the perilous service upon which they are about to enter, in a far distant land. Much as I knew we shared of her sympathy—anxiously I believed we should be followed by her prayers—yet I was not prepared to see the honor of the county thus formally committed to our keeping. To you, sir, you know me well, I need not say, how much I am overwhelmed by this act of generous confidence. Still I have a trust, and abiding trust, in the stout hearts and strong arms of the gallant men with whom I am associated, and that they will honorably sustain every just expectation of their friends and the country.

Augusta Volunteers! Behold your Banner, presented to you by your county! Can you ever allow it to be dishonored in your service? What say you?

[No, no,–Never, never;–was responded from all parts of the line.]

Sir—You have our answer! Bear it back, I pray you, to our fellow citizens. Say to them, that, with hearts glowing with affection for our firesides and our friends, we still go forward, cheerfully and confidently, to the discharge of our duty. And may the God of Battles arm us for the fight!

The Addresses elicited loud bursts of applause—and at their conclusion, the Company, with its flag borne in front, returned to its quarters. It left Richmond yesterday morning, for Old Point, whither, as our readers are aware, it had been already proceeded by five companies of the Virginia regiment. It is expected that the first battalion will embark for the seat of war in about ten days.

RW47v24i4p4c4, January 12, 1847, What does this mean?

"Independent," the well-informed Washington Correspondent of the Philadelphia North American hints at some important revelations, hereafter to be made, in connection with the origin and progress of the Mexican war. "Give us but light." Let the "secrets of the prison house" be brought forth. He says:

"A large portion of the written history of the war—of the correspondence between Gen. Taylor and the War Department, and of the other matters connected with secret negotiations just before the war opened, which Mr. Polk and Mr. Marcy will understand, have never been disclosed to the public. There is now ever reason why they should be, and I intend to contribute an humble part in bringing it about.

"I now say, there are facts in the archives of the Government, connected with the advance of the army from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande that disgrace the Administration, and that place this whole war question in an attitude which it has never before assumed. In due season I will present the details, and a Resolution in either House can test their accuracy."

RW47v24i4p4c4, January 12, 1847, Appointments by the President.

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Samuel H Montgomery, of Pennsylvania, to be Assistant Quartermaster, with the rank of Captain.
Benjamin S. Muhlenberg, of Pennsylvania, to be Surgeon.
George Dock, of Pennsylvania, to be Assistant Surgeon.
Samuel McGowan, of South Carolina, to be Assistant Quartermaster, with the rank of Captain.
James D. Blaiding, of South Carolina, to be Assistant Commissary, with the rank of Captain.
James Davis, of South Carolina, to be Surgeon.
Elbert Bland, of South Carolina, to be Assistant Surgeon.
Mr. Caleb Cushing has introduced a resolution to the Legislature of Massachusetts now in session, proposing an appropriation of $20,000, to aid in providing for the expense incurred in the support and equipment of the Massachusetts regiment of Volunteers, prior to its being mustered into the service of the General Government. To this resolution we regret to see decided symptoms of hostility. The grounds on which it is opposed are, first, that the government, in raising troops to carry on the war, ought to have made ample provision for their sustenance from the moment that they enrolled their names; secondly, that to the war in which we are now engaged a large majority of the people of that State are opposed, as unnecessary in its commencement, and as being prosecuted not for the purpose of redressing national injuries and wrongs, but exclusively with a view of territorial aggrandizement; and thirdly, that the General Government is still largely indebted to Massachusetts for money advanced during the war of 1812, and which, heretofore, although the justice of her claim has been repeatedly recognized, it has failed to reimburse.

The first and third of these grounds of objection are unquestionably not without force; but we nevertheless hope that Massachusetts, recollecting her ancient fame, will disdain to be influenced by such consideration— and above all, that she will not lose sight of the obligation which rests upon every State, as well upon every citizen, to sustain the country, while it is engaged in a foreign war, whatever may be the opinion entertained, either of the criminality of those by whose rashness or folly it has been precipitated, or of the object which its authors designed to accomplish, but which, fortunately, it will not be in their power to effect without the concurrence of the Legislative Department of the Government. That object, we have no doubt, was the acquisition of a large portion of Mexican territory. But recent indications of the determination of the members of Congress from the non-slaveholding States to exclude slavery from all the territory that may be so acquired, has already exorted the declaration from Southern friends of the Administration in that body, that, with this unfair restriction, they are opposed to any further extension of the "area of freedom." And as it is perfectly apparent that this restriction will be insisted upon, and with the numerical ascendancy of the North in Congress, will be enforced, it is not at all unlikely that the very men who have been most eager to reach the halls of Moctezumas, and who, with the extension of our boundaries mainly in view, have brought about this war, will be quite easily induced to compromise with Mexico for the Rio Grande, as the boundary, a few miles beyond its mouth, leaving to her the undisturbed possession of the territory at and near its source, in New Mexico and Chihuahua, which all our statutes, as well since as before the annexation of Texas, have recognized as Mexican soil.

We rejoiced to hear that Massachusetts had contributed her quota of soldiers to the service of the country— that she was not behind her sister States in this practical proof of her patriotism. We sincerely hope that she may not now discredit her Revolutionary renown, by refusing to follow the example of other States in appropriating a small amount of money to meet exigencies for which the General Government has strangely failed to provide, as it was its duty to have done.

We received no papers by the Southern Mail, which is indeed becoming to be almost and every day occurrence. Since Saturday morning last, we have but once received papers as far South as Raleigh— on Tuesday morning— the mail having failed on Sunday, Monday and Wednesday mornings. There is "a screw loose somewhere?"

The Norfolk Herald, it seems, was misinformed as to the determination of Gov. Smith, to decline accepting the services of the Norfolk Volunteers. Capt. Edwards, the commander of the company, was informed by the Governor that he could not determine certainly whether their services would be accepted or not; but authorized him to keep his company enrolled and ready for further orders, the expense of their subsistence, &c. in the interim, being paid by the State. The Herald expresses the opinion that they will be accepted.

We are glad to hear that North Carolina, thought somewhat slow in her movements, Rip Van Winkle like, will soon be in the field with a full regiment of volunteers.

The Washington Union is preparing for an assault upon Gen. Taylor, should our army unfortunately meet with a disaster, as it did before the battles of the 8th and 9th of May were fought, by hinting in advance, that his arrangements are defective. It says:—"We cannot suppose it possible that General Taylor would have advanced to Saltillo and scattered his troops so far from each other— with Gen’l Worth at Saltillo, with Gen. Wool at Parras, with Gen. Butler at Monterey, and the forces under himself and Gen. Patterson, so as to incur any serious danger from a concentrated attack by Santa Anna upon any of his divisions." But let General Taylor achieve another splendid victory— and then the Union will extol the Administration for the wisdom of its plans, and the efficiency of its arrangements, precisely as it did after the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. If disaster and defeat ensue, General Taylor will have to bear the brunt— if victory, then the Administration will appropriate to itself the glory of the achievement!

The 3rd company of Volunteers organized in this City, (though many of its members came from other parts of the State,) has been organized by the appointment of

Wm. B. Archer, of Richmond, as Captain.
L.M. Shumaker, of Franklin, 1st Lieutenant.
R.H. Keeling, of Richmond, 1st 2d do.
Jas. M. Blakely, Jr. do. 2d 2d do.

The non–commissioned officers are not yet appointed.

The Marshall Guard yesterday paid their respects to the Governor, and were received with the usual ceremonies.

RW47v24i5p1c3, January 15, 1847

The Legislature of Pennsylvania has adopted, by a unanimous vote, resolutions of thanks to Gen. Taylor, and the officers and men of the U.S. army in Mexico, volunteers and regulars, for their gallantry and good conduct since the commencement of the war. Those astute military critics, Orlando Ficklin of Illinois, and Jacob Thompson of Mississippi, think that censure, instead of thanks, as the hero’s appropriate reward— especially if that hero be a Whig General!

RW47v24i5p2c1, January 15, 1847, To Correspondents.

Several communications have been received, the publication of which we are compelled to defer. They shall appear as soon as possible.

"Scottsville, Jr, " must excuse us. We have already declined two or three articles on the same subject, to which we have already devoted more room than we could well spare.

RW47v24i5p2c1, January 15, 1847, The Virginia Regiment.

We understand that it is expected that the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers will embark at Old Point, for the seat of war, on the 20th inst.
RW47v24i5p2c2, January 15, 1847, News from the South.

Our readers will be gratified to learn, by the intelligence received yesterday morning, from the Seat of War, that the previous advices, exciting our apprehensions for the fate of Gen. Worth’s division of the army, were although not wholly groundless, greatly exaggerated.

A letter from Matamoros to the New Orleans Picayune, expresses the opinion that Gen. Taylor will return home as soon as Gen. Scott takes command of the army.

RW47v24i5p2c2, January 15, 1847

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen– I noticed in your paper, a few days since, a slight mistake which I have not seen corrected; and as it is a matter of some interest to me, you will pardon me for calling your attention to it. The mistake was this: In mentioning the names of the officers of Capt. Bankhead’s company, you had it Thomas Garnett, of Essex, 1st Lieutenant. It should have been, Thomas Stuart Garnett of Westmoreland. It is more necessary that this correction should be made, because there is a Lieut. Garnett now in Mexico from Essex. It may not be improper to add, that Lieut. Thomas S. Garnett is a son of H.T. Garnett of Westmoreland. If you will make this correction, you will greatly oblige your humble servant.

Jan. 11th, 1847. WESTMORELAND.

From the New Orleans Times, Jan. 7.

By the arrival here yesterday of the U.S. Transport Steamer Alabama, Capt. Windle, which left Brasos on the 3d instant, we have received intelligence from the several divisions of the army up to a late date.

It appears that the reports which have been in circulation regarding the advance of Santa Anna on Saltillo have been entirely premature, and the statement that was published of his being, at the date of our last advices from that place, within three days’ march of it, is entirely without foundation. There was, however, some cause for the rumor, of which the following are the particulars:

General Worth on the 16th ultimo received information from two scouts that the Mexican General—in-chief had left San Luis Potosi, at the head of a body of 15,000 cavalry, with the intention to fall on the American division at Saltillo, which he imagined he could easily crush. After this, he proposed attacking General Wool, and if similar success attended him, to repair to Monterey and capture or destroy the magazines and public stores which lay there. General Worth, without attaching more importance to the report than it seemed to merit, forthwith dispatched expresses to Generals Taylor, Wool and Butler, acquainting them with what he had heard, leaving it entirely to them to act in the premises. The express overtook Gen’l Taylor a short distance from Monterey, on the rout to Victoria. He immediately returned to his old encamping ground near Monterey, with the whole of his division, and then awaited further advices. After remaining three days, during which he received information of the improbability of the report of Santa Anna’s advance on Saltillo, he again took up the line of march, and proceeded onward to Victoria. Meanwhile, General Wool, who had been informed of the rumor current at Saltillo, called in all his detached commands, and at the head of his division, 3000 strong, quitted Parras on the 18th ultimo, and by arrangements previously made, was to enter Saltillo on the 23d at farthest, pushing forward with all practicable speed. General Butler had previously reached Saltillo from Monterey. During this time the intelligence of the reported advance of Santa Anna had reached other more distant points of the line of occupation; and troops, already under orders to march toward Monterey, hastened their progress onward.

It appears that Generals Taylor and Worth, on mature reflection, readily discovered the improbability of the report of Santa Anna’s advance on, and near proximity to, Saltillo, from the following facts: 1st. The distance between San Luis de Potosi and Saltillo was too great to admit of the possibility of the march of so large a body as 15,000 men, without timely notice being afforded to the American General to prepare for his reception. 2dly. The ground between the two cities is extremely bare of verdure or other means of sustenance for man and beast–90 miles of which, as is well known, being an arid desert, divest of fountain, running stream, or any other source of water, besides affording not the least chance of getting food or fodder, being almost uninhabited, throughout its wide extent. The report of the Mexican scouts, however, is said to have been corroborated, by information received at Saltillo, in a letter from an English merchant at San Louis de Potosi, who stated that Santa Anna had positively left that city, at the head of a numerous body of cavalry. Even now, in those parts of Mexico, occupied by our troops, it is admitted that Santa Anna is out with a considerable mounted force, but with objects far different from those attributed to him, by scouts. It was stated in the letter above alluded to, that the Mexicans’ intention were to hurry forward, and occupy the only practicable pass in the mountains lying between the divisions of...
Generals Worth and Wool, thus intercepting their communications. After realizing his anticipated success against them, by cutting them up in detail, he was then to advance on Monterey, &c. These announcement are now proved to be premature, and things are proceeding in their former train, accelerated a little by the alarm which has just subsided.

For much of the above information we are indebted to Major Butler, [a passenger by the Alabama,] Paymaster U.S. Army, attached to the division of Gen. Wool, who visits this city on business, which will detain him here about a week, when he returns to head quarters. Major Butler left Parras on the 17th ultimo, where General Wool’s division then lay. He states that the troops were in excellent health and spirits, no casualty of moment having occurred for some time. The inhabitants of the country which the troops had traversed from San Antonio, had manifested the greatest good feeling towards the Americans; not a symptom of that hostility which the population of the valley of the Rio Grande had so frequently exhibited, had been observed.

Brasos.– We are under many obligations to Gen. Jessup for his politeness in communicating some interesting particulars regarding the feelings observable amongst the Mexican population, at different points on the Rio Grande. It seems that a species of moral barometer exists there, if we take the trouble to study their character. On the eve of any great event, (the battle of Monterey, for example,) a considerable falling off in the numbers of Mexicans seeking employment takes place. At each new success of the American arms, the applications for service redouble. With the denunciation of the Mexican government staring them in the face, they are afraid to work for the invaders; but as time rolls on, and our conquests seem to be consolidated, their confidence returns, and they are anxious to join us heart and hand.

Monterey.– Major Butler was in Monterey on the 23d ult, at the time Gen Taylor was encamped there. Col Harney was in that city, on his way to Saltillo. Everything seemed satisfactory, regarding the conduct of the inhabitants, as to peace and tranquility. One regiment, it is presumed, will be sufficient to form its garrison.

March of Troops, &c– On his way from Monterey to Camargo, Maj Butler met the Kentucky mounted riflemen, with Gen Marshall at their head, and on of the Ohio regiments– both corps on their way to the former place.

General Scott– On the 1st inst, on his way down the Rio Grande, a days’ distance from Camargo, Gen Scott was met proceeding upward, on the steamboat Corvette.

At Matamoros, Point Isabell and Brazos, things were in statu quo.

The remains of the following officers were brought over on the Alabama:

Col. Watson, Baltimore Regiment.
Capt. Isaac Holmes, Georgia Regiment.
Capt. Ridgely, Flying Artillery.
Capt. Gillespie, Texas Regiment.
Lieut. Graham, Infantry.
Mr. Thomas, Texas Rangers.
Mr. Pierson, Texas Rangers.

Passengers– General Jessup, Quarter Master General and suite; Majors Butler, Boyd and Comstock; Captains Long, Hoyle; Lieut Armstrong; Messrs H McQueen, Mills, Clark and Robinson, and 240 sick and discharged soldiers. Messrs Mills and Robinson are the committee from Baltimore to conduct thither the remains of Col Watson, Capt Ridgely, and Lieut Graham. Lieut Boyle, of the Baltimore battalion, died on the morning of the 6th inst, on board the Alabama, while coming up the river.

Tampico– Who are very much indebted to the gentleman who has so kindly placed at our disposal the following items of intelligence from Tampico. In a letter dated Tampico, the 26th ult., the writer states that a report was current that a body of 500 American troops had taken quiet possession of Victoria, the capital of the department. Indeed the whole of the inhabitants of Tamaulipas are prepared to throw off the yoke of the central Government, provided the United States will guarantee them permanent protection. A letter has been received there, dated San Luis de Potosi, the 23d November, which stated Santa Anna’s force at that time did not exceed 7,000 men– this was from a most reliable source, but the date of the letter is rather distant. Col. Riley, and Gens. Quitman and Pillow, were rapidly advancing on Victoria. The 500 men above alluded to, are no doubt part of the force of Col. Riley.

Saltillo– Major Butler passed through Saltillo on his way hither. Here he found Generale Butler, whose severe wound in the leg was slowly healing. It will be a satisfaction to his numerous friends to learn that he is again able to mount his horse, and in a very short time, will be, in all respects, “himself again.” The two Generals, Butler and Worth, were of opinion that Santa Anna was too astute to risk himself in a field fight; he would patiently await the unfolding chapter of accidents, behind the fortifications of San Luis de Potosi, confessedly, even by our own topographical engineer officers, the strongest place in Mexico, after San Juan de Ulloa.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p2c5, January 15, 1847, Further from Mexico.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Jan. 6.

Since our last we have received files of papers from Vera Cruz from the latter part of November up to the 17th of December. We have reviewed the reports in the papers of the proceedings of the Mexican Congress and do not find a word to add to the statement which we gave yesterday. NO direct action appears to have been had upon the subject of the war with the United States. We cannot find the Reefer, Lieut. Com'g Rowan, sailed on the 28th ult. for Anton Lizardo, but Lieut. Commanding Sterrett, and Tatnall; schrs. Nonata sailed from Tampico on Wednesday last. There was but little news of public interest. The U.S. steamer Spitfire, Com'r Arispe, returned to the bar on the following day, owing to contrary winds and the prospect of bad weather. The two former got under way again on the 30th, and when the Nonata was inside the bar, and probably did not sail for a day or two.

The papers of the city of Mexico have been much occupied with reports touching Santa Anna’s designs upon the government. The official journal denounces every whisper of an ambitious purpose as slanderous and traitorous. It is evidently deemed most important to keep the public free from all expectations on this score.

The papers of the city of Mexico have been much occupied with reports touching Santa Anna’s designs upon the government. The official journal denounces every whisper of an ambitious purpose as slanderous and traitorous. It is evidently deemed most important to keep the public free from all expectations on this score.

We have already mentioned that the Commodore has supplied them with clothes and money. Our correspondent tells us they are treated with kindness, but yet as close prisoners.

We hear from Santa Anna in another communication. On the 4th of December, he addressed a letter to the Secretary of State, which was published to allay the apprehension excited by rumors in circulation that the General had quarreled with the acting government and was about to return to the city of Mexico and enter into negotiations for peace with the United States. He attributes the reports in circulation, injurious to his character, to certain papers in the United States. His appeals to Gen. Salas and Gen. Almonte as witnesses in his behalf, both of whom he says made the campaign of 1835 with him in Texas, in the endeavor to prevent the dismemberment of that portion of the national territory. He touches upon other events, in the lives of Salas and himself, in which they were associates in misfortune; he expresses his reluctance thus to appear before his country in his own justification. He would rather have trusted to his past services and his wounds for his defence, and concludes with a flourish, which we may faintly render thus: “But I had another reply in reserve, which my cannon and musketry should make upon the invading hosts in the day of national vengeance.”

The locomotor gives a vivid account of the loss of the Somers, and of the exertions of the boats of the different nations to save the drowning sailors. It does not, however, add much to the information which we had previously received. The seven sailors who drifted ashore and were saved, were treated, it says, with great kindness and humanity in Vera Cruz. As they floated ashore, they were so near to the castle of San Juan that they could distinctly hear the beating of the drums within the walls. A correspondent, whose attentions we cannot adequately acknowledge, has furnished us with the names of the men saved, who are now held as prisoners of war in Vera Cruz. They are as follows– Wm. W. Cardy, Wm. W. Powers, John Boyce, Lewis Johnson, James Fennel, Matthias Gravel and Dennis Kelly.

We do not recognise in the tone of this letter any marks of earnest sincerity, nor do we find anything in the papers to throw light upon the military designs of Santa Anna. A letter written by him as feedback as the 21st of November, to justify his abandonment of Tampico, contains one paragraph saying that he had anticipated any operations which Gen. Taylor might mediate by the way of Monterey, and taken the proper measure to repel an invasion from that quarter.

The papers of the city of Mexico have been much occupied with reports touching Santa Anna’s designs upon the government. The official journal denounces every whisper of an ambitious purpose as slanderous and traitorous. It is evidently deemed most important to keep the public free from all expectations on this score.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p2c6, January 15, 1847, Latest from Tampico.

From the Picayune, Jan. 6.

By the arrival this morning at 3 o’clock, of the schr. Arispe, Capt. Gates, from Tampico, in five days, we have news as late as the 30th ult., which will be fond detailed below:

The Arispe sailed from Tampico on Wednesday last. There was but little news of public interest. The U.S. steamer Spitfire, Com’r Tatnall; schrs. Reefer, Lieut. Commanding Sterrett, and Nonata, Lieut. Com’r Rowan, sailed on the 28th ult. for Anton Lizardo, but returned to the bar on the following day, owing to contrary winds and the prospect of bad weather. The two former got under way again on the 30th, and when the Arispe left, at 3 P.M., were three or four miles to the eastward– the schr. in tow of the steamer. The Nonata was inside the bar, and probably did not sail for a day or two.

The sloop of war St. Mary’s arrived off Tampico bar on the evening of the 28th ult., but sailed again the following day. Her destination was not known. A grand flag–staff, ninety–five feet high, was raised on the morning of the 30th ult. in the principal plaza, directly in the centre of an extensive marble pedestal originally designed for the base of a monument to Santa Anna.

Mr. Chase, our former consul, is appointed collector of the customs at Tampico– a post he eminently deserves.

Occasional rumors reach the city of an intended attack upon it by the Mexicans; but they are only viewed as Mexican tales. A man may eat every Mexican that will attack Tampico while our troops are there for supper, and still follow Dr. Franklin’s recipe for a good appetite for breakfast.
The city remains perfectly quiet and orderly, being under the best possible police regulations. There is no fighting, rowdyism or disturbance of any kind, and it is not possible that the people of Tampico— the former inhabitants— ever saw so still and peaceable a place before.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p4c1, January 15, 1847, From the Seat of War.

The intelligence, in another column, from the seat of war, confirms the previous rumor of the advance of a large Mexican force towards Saltillo, and rectifies our previous information in reference to the position of Gen. Taylor, who, it seems, when he heard of this new and important movement, had left Monterey but a few hours, and immediately retraced his steps, for the purpose of proceeding as rapidly as possible, and with as large reinforcements as he could command, to the aid of Gen. Worth.

Some doubt is expressed by the New Orleans papers whether Santa Anna was in command of the Mexican army. A Mexican, who arrived at Saltillo on the 12th of December, from San Luis Potosi, (says a letter from the former place to the editors of the New Orleans Picayune, ) reported that Santa Anna had gone to the city of Mexico; and a similar statement is made in a letter from one of the officers of the squadron, writing from Anton Lizardo. From the silence of the Mexican papers in regard to Santa Anna’s movements, recently received at New Orleans, (a summary of the most important contents of which may be found in another column,) a like inference is drawn. But, without regarding it as of much importance whether Santa Anna is in command of the advancing Mexican army, or not, since we take it for granted that it is under the command of a capable chief, it is our impression that he is at its head, and that the statement of the Mexican at Saltillo was intended to mislead Gen. Worth; while the silence of the Mexican papers, in regard to the military movements in progress or contemplated, furnish to our minds the strongest reason for believing that a sudden and decisive blow was about to be struck by that cunning commander, the first intimation of which, to our own forces should be, if possible, the roar of his artillery. Fortunately, however, his approach towards Saltillo, unexpected as it seems to have been– for we have not yet learned, we apprehend, to correct the fatal error of our underrating the resources and the prowess of our enemy— was ascertained in time to make preparations for his warm reception. But the comparatively small force at the disposable of Gen. Taylor, after garrisoning the captured cities, and leaving in his rear a sufficient number of men to guard his depots and to keep open the line of communication between his supplies and the advanced posts, justifies, with all our strong confidence in the skill and courage of our officers and in the firmness and intrepidity of our soldiers, the apprehension that they may not be able to maintain the positions hitherto wrested from the enemy. Their splendid achievements heretofore— partaking of they do almost of the miraculous, when the superior numbers of the foe and the great advantages of his position are considered— are, we admit, well calculated to inspire unusual confidence in their ability to re-enact the prodigies of valor which have already signalized their triumphal march into the heart of the Mexican Republic. And most devoutly do we hope that the next arrival from the scene of conflict may bring the tidings of the retreat of the enemy, or of another brilliant victory over his powerful force— the more devoutly, because, should our army sustain any serious discomfiture, the immediate consequences may be most disastrous, by producing a general insurrectionary movement in the valley of the Rio Grande, where, we are told, a feverish excitement already prevails, consequent upon the withdrawal of the main body of our forces from Matamoros, Camargo and their vicinities, which will manifest itself in open and deadly hostility should our army unfortunately be too weak to maintain its present position.

The most intense solicitude prevails to hear the result of the conflict, which is supposed to have occurred about the 25th of December. In the meanwhile, we know that our gallant army has done all that men could do to sustain the honor of their country’s flag, and to win for themselves an additional claim to her gratitude and admiration.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p4c1, January 15, 1847

We understand that a bearer of dispatches, from the Army, passed through this city yesterday morning oh his way to Washington.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p4c1, January 15, 1847, Generals Scott and Taylor.

We adverted yesterday to the first open manifestation of hostility to Gen. Taylor, on the part of leading friends of the Administration in Congress. Cotemporaneously with the disclosure of this feeling, by Mr. Ficklin of Illinois, who had been preceded, by the avowal of similar sentiment in rather more guarded language, by Mr. Thompson of Mississippi, who also assailed Gen. Scott, we received the New Orleans Times, containing a letter from Washington, in which we find this paragraph— “It is said that Mr. Polk has no confidence in Genl. Taylor, and is constantly complaining of him, and that he is loth to commit the command of all the forces and the chief conduct of the war to Gen. Scott. Hence, his desire, which has become strong, to have the office of Lieut. General created, and to fill it by the appointment of Mr. Benton.”

If it be true, that Mr. Polk— differing, as we unhesitatingly assert that he does, with almost the entire country, and what is of more importance far, with the army— believes Gen. Taylor to be incompetent to the discharge of the highly important duties resulting from the position in which Mr. Polk placed him, he ought, as the “Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the U.S.,” to have superseded him; and, if he is “loth” to trust Gen. Scott, he ought not to have sent him to assume the “chief conduct of the war. But if the true reason be here assigned for the power asked of Congress by the President, to appoint a “General Officer,” to supersede both Gen. Scott and Gen. Taylor, why, we ask, did not the President himself have the candor and the courage to say so in his Message, recommending the creation of this new office? Why did he not say that Gen. Taylor had displayed too little skill in his combinations, or too little energy in his movements, and that he was reluctant to trust Gen. Scott, if such was in truth the reason upon which that application was based? It was, indeed, a fair inference, from the omission of Gen. Taylor’s name in his Annual Message, that the brilliant victories achieved by the forces under his command had excited rather the envy than the admiration of the President. But we could not suppose that, responsible as Mr. Polk is for the energetic prosecution of the war into which he has plunged the country, and naturally desirous to make some atonement for the rashness of that act by the splendor of its results, he would permit it to be inefficiently conducted by an incompetent commander, while he held in his own hands the power of displacing him from the responsible and arduous position. Besides, if, as is now asserted by the President’s friends on the floor of Congress, Gen. Taylor failed from want of nerve or want of energy, in reaping the legitimate fruits of the victories of the 8th and 9th of May, by permitting the Mexican army to escape, why did Mr. Polk, as a token of his satisfaction with the conduct of the commanding officer on that occasion, ask the Senate to promote his from brevet Brigadier to a full Major General? Either the alleged delinquencies of Gen. Taylor on that occasion had then escaped the observation of the Executive, or this tribute to his conduct in those battles was an act of hypocritical homage to public sentiment, which the President dared not brook, in order to gratify his personal resentments.

The only reason which the President gives, in support of his application for the creation of the new office of “Lieutenant General,” for the obvious purpose of placing over the head of Generals Scott and Taylor some favorite of the court, who has yet to show his capacity to discharge the duties of that post, is, in substance, that the army consisting of both regulars and volunteers, it is important that the commander–in-chief should, in the language of the Washington Union, “be acquainted with the qualities of both species of force, and calculated to give the combination the greatest degree of efficiency.” A most ridiculous reason truly! Who, of all the persons named in connection with the high office, can be better, or half as well acquainted with the qualities of either the regulars, or the volunteers, as men who have grown grey in the camp and in the field, in association with both descriptions of force? Where is the evidence that Benton or any other court favorite possesses this [...] qualification in an extraordinary degree, or indeed that he is competent to command even a regiment? The accompaniment of the recommendation with [...] so flimsy upon its face, shows conclusively there was another motive which the President was afraid to avow. That motive is made manifest by the recent malignant attacks upon Scott and Taylor, to get rid of whom, for reasons which the people will instinctively understand, was the sole object of the suggestion.

Yet what would be the result, were Congress to give its consent to the proposed innovation, and, removing men of tried skill and courage, place at the head of the army a man who never led a squadron into fight, and who is to make his maiden effort, not as a subaltern, but as the leader of our forces? What confidence could the army repose in such a commander? Would they follow him to the “imminent deadly breach” with the same reliance upon his knowledge of the art of war, and with the same confidence in his firmness as well in his sagacity, which they would evince if led by a veteran, whose fame had been established in other fields, and who, they would feel assured, would neither lead them heedlessly into danger, nor be unable, in a sudden emergency, to extricate them from a perilous position? We do not hesitate to express the belief, that, if Taylor especially were superseded by a civilian, even if the outrage did not induce most of the officers to throw up their commissions in disgust, as, in the face of an enemy, they might not do, the army would be from the moment half disbanded, and the spirit by which it has been animated would at once be extinguished. Fortunate for the country—fortunate for the President himself—will it be, if Congress shall continue to turn a deaf ear to a suggestion, the offspring of a weak and envious mind, and which, were it adopted, would paralyze the army at the very moment when it most requires to be encouraged and invigorated. Next, indeed, to the permission given to Santa Anna to return to Mexico, we can imagine no more certain or efficient mode than this of giving “aid and comfort” to the enemy.

RW47v24i5p4c2, January 15, 1847, Lieut. Maynard.

We publish the following proceedings of the City Council with unfeigned pleasure. It is a worthy tribute, worthily conferred:

As a meeting of the City Council, on the 11th inst., the following preamble and resolution were submitted by Dr. Chamberlayne, and unanimously adopted—

The Council of the City of Richmond have regarded with high admiration, the heroic valor and disinterested humanity displayed by their townsman, Lieut. Fayette Maynard of the U.S. Navy, on the late melancholy occasion of the shipwreck of the Steamer Atlantic, on the Long Island Sound; and being desirous that so noble an example of self–devotion, fortitude and courage shall be held up for future imitation;

Resolved, That the President of the Council be and he is hereby instructed, in the name, and on behalf of the City of Richmond, to present to Lieut. Maynard a sword with appropriate devices and inscriptions, as commemorative of the exalted estimate in which his native city holds his generous and intrepid conduct, on the occasion referred to.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p4c2, January 15, 1847

The Enquirer states that it has been "credibly informed that a majority of the men comprising the regiment of Virginia Volunteers are Democrats." Has the regiment been polled? If so, who took the vote? If not, by what means have the political affinities of the men been ascertained? For our own part, we have never doubted that one party is as just as patriotic and just as brave, in the mass as the other. Yet we shall take the liberty of expressing the opinion that the Enquirer’s informant may be mistaken, until he informs us by what means he has arrived at his knowledge upon the subject.

[MPR]
The rumor that Col. James Gadsden of South Carolina, has been appointed Brigadier General of the Volunteers, and that he would command the Virginia, South Carolina and North Carolina regiments, turns out to be unfounded. A writer in the Enquirer of yesterday, strongly urges the claims of Virginia to this honor. While we are not aware that there is anything peculiar in those claims, we shall be highly gratified if the suggestion of that paper shall secure this result– and especially if it shall lead to the appointment of a citizen of this place, whose name has been mentioned in connection with it, and whose qualifications are surpassed by those of no other individual.

There was a rumor in New Orleans, on the 4th instant, that the American forces at Saltillo had been cut to pieces. There was no foundation, however, for the report, though it created for awhile a great sensation.

The Massachusetts Regiment of Volunteers is complete.

The bill authorising ten additional regiments of regular troops, passed the House of Representatives Monday, as reported by the Committee, by a vote of 165 to 45. Subsequently, on motion of Mr. Boyd of Ky., the vote by which it passed was reconsidered, and two or three amendments made to it, when it again passed but the more decisive vote of 176 to 34– every member of the Virginia delegation voting for it.

From Santa Fe.– The St. Louis Republican of the 31st ult. says–

At a late hour last night we received a budget of letters from several correspondents in New Mexico. Those from Santa Fe bear date as late as the 15th of November, and give us in detail all the events of interest which had transpired in that quarter for several weeks previous.

In no part of our correspondence have we been able to find any allusion to the reported defeat of the sixty dragoons, mention of which was made in our paper of yesterday.

A letter from Moro, dated on the 21st of November, announces the arrival there of Mr. N. Colburn, in advance of the wagons belonging to the last company of the traders which left Independence. On the 17th the experienced a severe storm of snow, which killed many of the oxen, but they were able to supply themselves at Moro, and would get safely into Santa Fe. The United States trains could not, it is said, move a wagon on account of snow and the loss of animals, and they were then buying oxen to get the wagon along.

A wealthy Mexican citizen, seeing the embarrassments of the Government’s agent for the want of money, had generously proffered to loan Major Walker, paymaster, one hundred thousand dollars at an interest of only three per cent a month.

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. 3.

By the arrival at a late hour last night of the U.S. steamer Edith, Capt. Couillard, we have three days’ later dates from Brazos Santiago.
She left Brazos on the 30th ult and brings confirmation of the reported advance of Santa Anna with a large force upon Saltillo. It was reported that the Mexican army was nearly 30,000 strong.

When Gen. Worth’s express reached Monterey, General Taylor had only gone six or eight miles on his march to Victoria, and the troops under Generals Twiggs and Quitman were but 12 miles in advance. Orders were immediately issued to this division to retrace its steps and proceed to Saltillo.

Gen. Butler, who was left in command of Monterey, had already marched with all the troops he could collect to join Gen. Worth at Saltillo.

Before the express reached Camargo Gen. Lane had started from Saltillo with his command—this was the 20th—Gen. Marshall set out next morning, taking with him the remainder of the forces, with the exception of Capts. Hunter and Swartwout’s commands which were left to protect that point. The troops from Camargo were on a forced march, to reach Saltillo in time for a battle, reports having prevailed for several days before positive advices were received of the movements of Santa Anna.

Gen. Wool was ninety miles from Saltillo at the last advices from him, and it was supposed he would join Gen. Worth in season to assist in repelling the enemy.

There was a rumor that Santa Anna had thrown a body of 17,000 men between Gen. Worth and Gen. Taylor, to prevent a junction of the American forces. This report was not credited, nor does it seem probable that it is true, as the main road to Monterey passes through Saltillo. There is a circuitous mountain road which avoids Saltillo, but it is not favorable to the march of an army, and is impracticable for ordnance.

It was the impression of gentlemen who came passengers in the Edith, and with whom we have conversed, that a battle was fought about the 25 ult. It was thought, however, that Gen. Taylor had reached Saltillo before that time, and also Gen. Twigg’s, Gen. Quitman’s, Gen. Butler’s and Gen. Wool’s commands. It was likewise hoped that the troops from Camargo would also arrive at Saltillo in good season. If these expectations were realized, Gen. Taylor had about 7000 men to oppose Santa Anna. Our informants think Santa Anna’s army was overrated; but no positive knowledge was had of his exact numbers.

The whole valley of the Rio Grande was in a state of great ferment. Apprehensions of an attack were entertained at Camargo, Matamoros and other points, from the rancheros under Canales. The withdrawal of so many troops from the river left the valley exposed to danger. At Matamoros, Col. Clark had called upon the citizens to enroll themselves for service, and at the Brazos Gen. Jessup had done the same thing. Both these points were sadly deficient in both men and arms. It was thought Canales had 2000 men under him, and that the large supply of goods at Matamoros, and the exposed condition of that city, might quicken his courage.

Gen. Scott arrived at the Brazos in the 28th ult. The following day he preceded to the mouth of the Rio Grande and was yet at the point when the Edith left, waiting the arrival of the horses belonging to the regiment of mounted riflemen, when it was understood he would proceed immediately up the river to Camargo.

Capt. Wayne has been transferred from the staff of Maj. Gen. Jessup to that of Gen. Scott, and was to accompany him on his tour of observation.

The news leaves a painful anxiety to learn the progress of events. The impression amongst the passengers that a battle had been fought was so strong that we have almost imbibed the belief.

[MPR]
It strikes me that if Santa Anna has the force which is reported, that it would not be policy to bring on a decisive action not at Monterey, but by surrounding the place cutting off supplies and communication, and detaching a portion of his force to attack the depots and connecting links with the Gulf— which must be left weak by the drawing off of supports for Monterey and Saltillo— that such would be his best chance for success. This depot, for instance, which is one from which Gen. Taylor’s army draws its supplies, is without defences, and I am told it to be left with one company of artillery, one company of dragoons (not mounted,) and one regiment of Indiana volunteers; and there are “sinews of war” enough here to make “the game worth the candle.”

From last reports Gen. Wool had not yet formed a junction with Gen. Worth; and it is thought by some problematical whether he would be able to form one, in consequence of the advance of the enemy placing themselves in a position between the two forces. I am not advised of the route Gen. Wool’s column will take from Parras, and therefore can give no opinion as to the accuracy of this reasoning; but one thing is certain— we are on the even of important events, and I think by the next arrival I shall chronicle to you matters of stirring interest. We will see what we will see. Yours truly, &c.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Jan. 5.

By the arrival of the U.S. frigate Potomac at Pensacola from Vera Cruz, we have received letters and papers from that city nearly three weeks later than our advices by way of Havana. The brig Oneco arrived at this port yesterday, having left Anton Lizardo on the 21st December. The Potomac sailed on the 23d. Among the passengers on the Oneco was Lieut. Bowers, of the Navy.

Com. Perry had gone on an expedition, the ultimate destination of which was Laguna. Com. Conner is said to contemplate another expedition against Alvarado, or at least a reconnoizance of that port. The steamer Princeton was maintaining that blockade of Vera Cruz at last accounts.

Through the kindness of our correspondent we have copies of El Locomotor of Vera Cruz of the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th of December. Unfortunately, they are much less prolific of intelligence than usual. One of the first items we noticed in them was the loss of the U.S. gunboat Union. She was wrecked on the night of the 16th ult, in endeavoring the reach the anchorage at Anton Lizardo, by running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew were all saved by the assistance of the John Adams, which was near at hand. The Union was one of the gun boats taken at Tampico, and was in charge of Lt. Winslow at the time of her misfortune. A violent running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew were all saved by the assistance of the John Adams, which was near at hand. The Union was one of the gun boats taken at Tampico, and was in charge of Lt. Winslow at the time of her misfortune. A violent running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew were all saved by the assistance of the John Adams, which was near at hand. The Union was one of the gun boats taken at Tampico, and was in charge of Lt. Winslow at the time of her misfortune. A violent running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew were all saved by the assistance of the John Adams, which was near at hand. The Union was one of the gun boats taken at Tampico, and was in charge of Lt. Winslow at the time of her misfortune. A violent running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew were all saved by the assistance of the John Adams, which was near at hand. The Union was one of the gun boats taken at Tampico, and was in charge of Lt. Winslow at the time of her misfortune. A violent running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew were all saved by the assistance of the John Adams, which was near at hand. The Union was one of the gun boats taken at Tampico, and was in charge of Lt. Winslow at the time of her misfortune.

Gen. La Vega arrived at Vera Cruz on the 14th ult. on the English steamer Dee. The Locomotor announces the fact in a warm tribute to the character and services of the General.

The afternoon of the 13th ult. one of our frigates entered the harbor of Vera Cruz under a flag of truce. The purpose of the visit was to supply some of our shipwrecked sailors, who are now prisoners, with money and clothing. The case of Passed Midshipman Rogers, too, was probably the subject of discussion, for we learn that he is now treated as a prisoner of war instead of a spy. In making the reconnaissance in where he was captured, it was proved that he was in the undress uniform of his rank.

In regard to the action of the Mexican Congress, the accounts which the papers give us are not complete, but they do not confirm what has been generally said and believed of the rejection of our overtures for peace. They do not, however, contradict our former reports. The belief in the squadron appears to have been that Congress had not settled upon the subject at all. Preparatory sessions of the members elected were held as far back as the 30th of November, but we have a dispatch of Senor Lafragua, the Secretary of State, stating that Congress was duly installed at half-past 11, P.M., of the 5th of December. The proceedings of the 11th ult. are the latest we find in the papers.

We have before us, copied from the Monitor Republicano of the 8th December, the constitution of the committee of the Chamber of Deputies. These appointments are important to those who are familiar with the politics of the leading men of Mexico. The committee on Puntos Constitucionales, on the formation of a new constitution for the country, Senors Rejon, Gomez Farias and Otero. The first is the lately dismissed Secretary of State, who has quarreled with Salas and Santa Anna. The second is the leader of the pure republicans and the friend of Rejon. Senor Otero, if we recollect aright, was a former proprietor of El Siglo XX, since become El Monitor Republicano, a liberal journal conducted with ability. Otero was the gentleman so grossly affronted by the Baron Alleaye de Cyprey in the theatre.

The Committee on Gobernacion, or Government, consists of ex–President Herrera, Godoy, and Riva Palacio—all well–known names. That on Foreign Relations consists of Rejon, Ceballo and Otero. The second of these gentlemen we are unable to recall to mind.

Gomez Farias is chairman of the committee on Finance, and Herrera of that on War and the Navy. We have given enough of the names to indicate that the liberal statesmen appear to be in the ascendant in the new Congress. The other committees are given, but as they are upon subjects of less importance, so the names of the members are less known to fame.

The appointment of committees appears to have been the work of the 7th of December. On the 8th a report was made from the Secretary of the Treasury, with a project for the conversion of the foreign debt. Two resolutions were submitted, are referred to
The people of Campeachy have elected Don Domingo Barret Provisional Governor. He addressed, on the 11th ult., a long
United States and Mexico, and put down the government, which they say has wed the country to Santa Anna.

The object of the pronunciamento and of this movement, is declared to be to maintain the neutrality of the peninsula as between the another occasion.

departure of these troops, and Governor Trias issued a proclamation on the occasion, for which we will endeavor to find room on with a small force at Cobra, nearly two hundred miles north of that point. All classes of the citizens took part in celebrating the at El Paso 600 men, previously raised, and the whole were to proceed and make an attempt to surprise Gen. Kearney, who was then
he announces that on the day previous, a body of 480 troops, part infantry and part cavalry, with four light pieces of artillery, left Chihuahua for El Paso del Norte under the command of Lieut. Col. Cuilty; with provision, &c. for one month. These forces were to join

From Chihuahua we have some later news. A dispatch is published from Governor Angel Trias, dated the 20th of November, in which he announces that on the day previous, a body of 480 troops, part infantry and part cavalry, with four light pieces of artillery, left Chihuahua for El Paso del Norte under the command of Lieut. Col. Cuilty; with provision, &c. for one month. These forces were to join at El Paso 600 men, previously raised, and the whole were to proceed and make an attempt to surprise Gen. Kearney, who was then with a small force at Cobra, nearly two hundred miles north of that point. All classes of the citizens took part in celebrating the departure of these troops, and Governor Trias issued a proclamation on the occasion, for which we will endeavor to find room on another occasion.

[MPR]

RW47v24i5p4c7, January 15, 1847

From the N.O. Evening Mercury, Jan. 4.

Interesting from Campeachy.– An arrival this morning puts us in possession of accounts to the 22d. ult. A letter of that date states that Campeachy has positively dispatched a force of 2500 men, which was joined by five hundred on the road, with 12 pieces artillery, all well equipped, with a view to compel the government of Merida to succumb to the pronunciamento of Campeachy of 8th December.

The object of the pronunciamento and of this movement, is declared to be to maintain the neutrality of the peninsula as between the United States and Mexico, and put down the government, which they say has wed the country to Santa Anna.

The people of Campeachy have elected Don Domingo Barret Provisional Governor. He addressed, on the 11th ult., a long communication to the government of Merida, setting forth the causes of the insurrection in Campeachy. We received this document at too late an hour to examine it to-day.

[MPR]

RW47v24i6p1c1, January 19, 1847, Extension of Area.

A letter from Tampico to the editors of the New Orleans Picayune, written, as that paper informs us, by “a foreigner of the highest respectability,” after glancing at the transformation already effected at Tampico since its occupation by the American forces, which, in his opinion, has had the effect of opening the eyes of the Mexican population to the misgovernment of which they have so long been the victims, and of inducing them to desire to be “annexed” to the United States, proceeds to make the following suggestions and remarks:

“This the Government at Washington should do at once: declare that the territory occupied by the American troops belongs to the American nation, and implant inasmuch as it can safely be done for the present, the laws and institutions of the United States, and so prepare the Mexican population to become American citizens. Is it not in the human destiny that at some future period Mexico will be invaded by the Anglo-Saxon race? Why, then, since a proper conjecture offers, not avail ourselves of it, and anticipate the work of posterity, sparing further bloodshed and heavy expenditures, to attain an object which is just at the point of their bayonets? Now that the war has been pushed so far, the Sierra Madre should be the limits of the two Republics—Tampico, in the Gulf of Mexico, Mazatlan, on the Pacific, must be the bulwarks of American dominion. Let the rest of the country belong to Mexico. Let its government be ever so obstinate, let it be ever so vain or boasting, it must call for peace, deprived of its richest provinces and of all pecuniary resource; but let it be at once curtailed of the northern part of the country, as far as the line we have just described, and let that part be from this very moment and integral one of the American Union. I have gone far from my previous object; any intention was solely to speak of Tamaulipas, and more particularly of the city of Tampico.

“This State of Tamaulipas, bordering upon Texas, is, of all the Mexican territory, that which most deserves the attention of the American statesman. Its possession will complete that of Texas, and to say the truth, Tamaulipas cannot exist unless annexed to the United States. Its greater extent is on the sea shore, or little in the interior; its ground is [...] and easy to cultivate. At both of its extremities is a beautiful river, the River Bravo and the Panuco, which American industry would render navigable to a great distance. It might, perhaps, contain two millions of inhabitants, although in our days it is reduced to fifty or sixty thousand. The different produce that might be cultivated in its fertile soil—such as tobacco, cotton, sugar cane, coffee, &c.—would render it one of the richest States of the Confederation, and under all circumstances it is a possession worthy of envy.

“Tampico is its principal port and principal city. This is where all foreign goods consumed in the interior of the country must arrive, and with a liberal law of customs this place would in a few years count ten times the number of its present inhabitants. Its population is mostly foreign, and of all Mexican cities this is the most ready to receive American institutions. It would be desirable that from this very moment the United States should not be satisfied with its military possession; doubtless there is an anomaly in the existence of two such different powers—hostile, we may say, one to the other. Authority, under all its shapes, should be American—municipal and judicial, as well as military—and it is only then that the benefits of the invasion will be felt by all parties. All this bears a wonderful interest. Tampico, during the war, is destined by its position to be the depot and general quarters of aggression; in peace, let its solution be what it may, it is a key to Mexico, and a security which it might be imprudent to give away—it is, or might become, the Gibraltar of the Gulf of Mexico! Let the people and the Government of the United States reflect over this.

While the question of the annexation of Texas was pending, its opponents urged, as not the least important objective [...] measure, that, so far from “rounding off our frontier” in that direction, and constituting an impregnable barrier to foreign assault, it would only give an uncontrollable impulse to the spirit of territorial aggrandizement, which would, sooner or later, result in a war with Mexico, ostensibly to avenge injuries and insults, but in truth to extend still farther the boundaries of our Republic. The events of the last twelve months have fully vindicated the sagacity of those who assumed this position. It remains for the future to disclose the consequences, immediate and remote, of this ambitious and grasping policy.

Forbearing, at this time, all discussion of the popular, but in our opinion, erroneous assumption, that the peculiar character of our form of government admits of the indefinite expansion of our territorial limits, without danger to the unity of the Republic of to the efficient administration of its laws, we have already afforded, in the character of the debates now in progress in the House of Representatives, a striking illustration of the present danger to be apprehended from that policy, in the addition of new and fearful elements of discord to those which have heretofore agitated our public councils and shaken the Union itself to its foundation. The acquisition of additional territory carries with it another question of transcendent importance, as we have already seen, at the last session of Congress, by the introduction of the Wilmot proviso, interdicting slaver in our new possessions, even before they had been secured b conquest, much less by treaty, and at the present session by the strenuous persistence of the members from the non-slaveholding States, without regard to party divisions, in the same untenable and insulting condition of any further “extension of the area of freedom.” On almost every question which now arrives in Congress, this great issue, like the ghost of Banquo, stares us in the face. And Southern men are forced to enquire, whether if it be the fixed determination of the Northern majority to require, as a condition precedent, the exclusion of slavery from ALL territory hereafter annexed— as well that, which, from its proximity to the slaveholding States and the character of its productions, belongs, by geographical position and by natural alliances, to the slaveholding region, as that lying in a colder latitude—it does not behove them to set their as a [...] against the extension of our boundaries in any direction, and more especially in that portion of Mexico, now in possession of our army, which lies contiguous to the Mississippi valley, and which, if this rule of apportioning the spoils be inflexibly adhered to, must result in the establishment of “a cordon of non-slaveholding States” on our Southwestern frontier? The question cannot be linked or evaded. There is but one mode of meeting it, unless we abandon all idea of future annexation, to which the South cannot give its assent; and that mode is indicated by the principle embodied in the Missouri Compromise. To this mode, however, the Northern men, so far as we may infer their views from the well considered manifesto of Preston King, and the speeches of Messrs. Grover, [...] and others, are almost unanimously hostile. They go for “the whole, or none.” They demand that the territory conquered, [...] conquered it shall be, by the efforts mainly of Southern men— for much the larger portion of the forces in Mexico are from the Southern States— shall be erected into non-slaveholding States exclusively, not from philanthropic motives so much as from a determination to secure forever to the North the political ascendancy in the federal government, which she now wields. To this proposition, which, though prematurely urged, we are glad to see brought forward before the question of annexation has been decided, the South has but one answer to give the North— and that is: If you demand “the whole,” you shall, without consent, have “none.” The question of indemnity from Mexico for spoliations upon our commerce, magnified as those spoliations have been for other purposes, sinks into utter insignificance, when compared with the grave question which the ultimate disposition of the conquered Province brings up with it. It may, indeed, well be doubted whether the acquisition of Mexican territory could, in any fair sense of the word, be regarded as “indemnity” at all for the unliquidated claims of our citizens upon the Mexican government, and for the expenses of the President’s war. That would depend upon the fact whether the soil thus acquired is owned exclusively by the individuals, or whether Mexico has “public lands,” from the sale of which, as in the United States, an annual revenue may be drawn. But, even if the acquisition of such of her Provinces as we most covet, for their imagined wealth or for facilities which it is supposed they would give to the extension of our commercial enterprise, would realize all the dreams of avarice and ambition; still, if the South is to be denied an equal participation in the benefits in the acquisition, to effect which she is called upon to pay at least her equal share of the cost of the struggle, while her sons with as much alacrity as those of the North, peril their lives upon the battle field, she can, we re-assert, give but one answer to the North— and that will be, “we will have none of it!”

RW47v24i6p1c2, January 19, 1847, Duration of the War.

Friday evening’s Washington Union contains a brief synopsis of the proceedings of the Mexican Congress, received through Havana papers, brought b Com. Perry. Gen. Santa Anna had been elected President of the Republic, and Gomez Farías, Vice President. “The Message of Gen. Salas, the acting President, to Congress, expatiated upon the war with the United States, and professes a stern determination to carry it on with vigor, and declared that it was only just begun, and might be expected to continue for twenty years! ” If Mr. Polk had only foreseen this when he determined to bring on the war, he would have hesitated long before he took that step. What, we ask, should it be so long protracted, will be the amount of the National Debt at its termination? Will the whole of Mexico indemnify us for the cost of the contest, even if the whole of it should be subjugated by our arms?

[MPR]
Col. Hamtramck, the commandant of the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers, visited Petersburg on Wednesday last, accompanied by Maj. Gwynn, Mr. Thompson, one of the delegates from Jefferson, and Mr. Syme, the delegate from Petersburg. Mr. S. introduced the Colonel to Thos. S. Gholson, Esq. the representative of the Common Council, who tendered to Col. H. the hospitalities of the town. The guests were then conducted to the Bolingbrook Hotel, where, in company with a few citizens, they partook of a splendid dinner—at which addresses were delivered by Col. Hamtramck, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Syme, and others. Capt. Robinson's fine company was reviewed in the afternoon; after which they were conducted to the hospitable mansion of Geo. W. Bolling, esq. who entertained them in his usual soldierly–like and handsome style. At 9 o'clock, a large company sat down to a Supper; and during the evening addresses were elicited from Col. Hamtramck, Gen. Butts, Col. Swan, Col. Bolling, Maj. Rosser, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Syme and others.

We observe, in several papers, rumors of the probable appointment of Major Walter Gwynn, of this City, to the office of Brigadier General, to command the Volunteers from Virginia, South Carolina and North Carolina. Believing that no better selection can be made, we hope that these rumors may be true, though we shall regret the loss of the services of Major G. in the office which he now so ably fills, as President of the James River and Kanawha Company.

The last New York papers contain accounts of "another revolution," in Yucatan— the city of Campeachy having declared in favor of the United States, and Merida in favor of Mexico. It is said there had been some fighting, and that several lives had been lost.

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. 9.

By the arrival of the prize schooner Amalio, taken off Alvarado on the 27th ult. by the U.S. steamer Mississippi, our neighbors of the Mercury yesterday received later news from the squadron and an account of the taking of Laguna by Com. Perry.

It seems that Com. P. arrived off that place on the 20th ult. with the steamers Mississippi, Petrel, Vixen and Bonita, and the same day took possession of the place without opposition. Fifteen cannon were destroyed, some 900 lbs of powder taken, and fifty soldiers disarmed, although the latter affected to be favorably disposed to the cause of the Campeachians. The latter had declared themselves entirely independent of Mexico, and had sent their commissioners on the schooner Sisainto to Com. Conner, at Anton Lizardo, to request him to desist from any hostile measures against Yucatan, until commissioners could be sent to the Government of the United States to obtain the recognition of the independence of the State. These commissioners left Anton Lizardo on the 20th, to return, but the result of their conference with Com. Conner is not known. We happen to be among those who do not altogether believe in the sincerity of these Yucatanes. A double game has been played on that coast all summer and the inhabitants require the closest kind of watching.

Our readers may recollect that we mentioned, a few days since, that a boat from the John Adams had made a thorough night examination of the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa. The officer who had charge of the boat, as we learn from the Mercury, was Passed Midshipman Fitzgerald. He had eight men in his boat, with muffled oars, and in the darkness of the night rowed round and round the castle, went under the drawbridge, entered the water battery, and made a thorough reconnaissance of every part. This gallant exploit has proved that men may be landed from boats at night, and that the water batteries may easily be taken.

Com. Perry, on his return to Anton Lizardo from Laguna, looked in at Alvarado and Tabasco, and found that the fortifications of both places have been repaired and much strengthened since they were attacked by the squadron. At Tabasco there were about 3000 troops, and at Alvarado about 4000. Notwithstanding these formidable preparations, the general impression is the Com. Conner will soon attack these places.

On the arrival of Gen. La Vega at Vera Cruz on the 15th, all the prisoners from the squadron in the hands of the enemy were released. It is now ascertained that but eleven of the crew of the Somers drifted to the main land when she was wrecked, and not sixteen, as was first stated. Midshipman Rogers was at Vera Cruz. He had been tried by the civil and military tribunals as a spy, and had been acquitted by the former, but found guilty by the latter. It was believed, however, that the more favorable verdict would prevail, and that he would be liberated.

A Mexican Proclamation!
The following gasconading proclamation of the Governor of Chihuahua, the passant Senor General Don Angel Trias, is the same of which we made mention two or three days since, but for which, until now, we could not find room. This fellow Trias, however much he pretend to burn, and however eager his zeal to encounter the "iniquitous invaders" of his sacred soil, is one of the greatest braggarts in all Mexico, a country that produces rare specimens. Gregg, who wrote that interesting work the "Commerce of the Prairies," had an adventure with him, in 1839, at his own hacienda, and with a force not one–tenth as large as that of his illustrious excellency frightened him entirely out of the little wit that has been vouchsafed him. It may be looked upon as a little singular that all these Mexican generals start out burning and boiling over to meet barbarian invaders, yet never get within even cannon shot of them; we can only account for it on the plea that they fire up so strongly that their zeal burns out entirely before they get in harm’s way. The very last man in all Mexico that cares about seeing Gen. Kearney is Senor General Don Angel Trias, however much desire he may manifest, on paper, to come to bullets when afar off. We give his proclamation entire— not for any importance it may possess, but as an admirable illustration of Mexican character generally, and of that of the Governor of Chihuahua in particular:

The Governor of Chihuahua to the Vanguard which is marching to the Frontier of the North of the State:

Soldiers— The iniquitous invaders of Mexico are approaching the town of El Paso, an important portion of this State, where the enemy designs to establish his quarters for the winter, or till such time as may best subserve his ulterior designs. It is necessary that you should go forward, defenders of the glories of Mexico, to give a lesson to these pirates.

The State had relied with confidence upon the valiant and hardy inhabitants about El Paso; but treason has succeeded in diffusing distrust among them, and the patriotic peasantry, dismayed by a contemptible revolt, threw down their arms when they were within thirty leagues of the enemy, who were in small force, and thus, beyond all question, the opportunity was lost of compelling Gen. Kearny to surrender at discretion. Subordination and discipline were alone wanting to our troops.

It is for you to advance and re–establish confidence among these Mexicans, and to chastise the enemy if he should have the audacity to set foot upon the soil of this State, ennobled as it is by the blood of the fathers of our independence. I confide in your valor, and I have only to impress upon you the necessity of obedience to your officers and the most perfect discipline.

All the people of Chihuahua burn with eager desire to accompany you, because they are all good Mexicans and are animated by the highest enthusiasm and the purest patriotism. Like you, they are eager to march at the first signal. Should the circumstances of the war demand it be assured that you will be supported, at whatever cost, by great reinforcements. For the people of Chihuahua no sacrifice is felt as costly when demanded by the honor of the Republic.

The enthusiasm with which you march and the sanctity of our noble cause are the sure presages of victory. Yes! under the guidance of the God of battles, your arms shall be crowned with success. Thus hopes your friend and companion. ANGEL TRIAS.

Chihuahua, Nov. 19, 1846.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i6p1c7, January 19, 1847

From the Washington Union, Friday night.

We have obtained the various Mexican papers at too late an hour to–day to furnish extracts.

The subjoined paragraph would seem to authorities to authorize an apprehension that the reported advance of Santa Anna with a large army towards Saltillo was in reality a movement towards Tampico, were it not that we have ourselves received letters from Tampico of as late date as the 23d of December, when everything was quiet; which could hardly have been the case had the movement of the body of 5,000 men been in the direction stated in the following paragraph:

From the Vera Cruz Locomotor of the 14th.

"We learn by the express of last night that a division, consisting of 5,000 men of all arms, moved from San Luis in the direction of Tula, with a view to intercept the passage of the enemy who will march their forces by his route in order to place themselves in communication with Tampico."

A file of the "Diaro" of Mexico from the 1st to the 25th of December, inclusive, has been placed in our hands too late to enable our translator to furnish us with any extracts for this evening’s paper.

In the address of Gen. Salas at the opening of the Congress on the 6th of December, he refers to the proceedings of Santa Anna at San Luis Potosi, where, in a few weeks, he says he had assembled and organized an army of more than 22,000 men, a part of whom had already advanced to meet the enemy, so that the armies of the two nations would soon encounter each other; but whatever the result may be, "never shall there be a final or decisive action." He states the reason why he had refused to listen to any overtures of peace; he says that the war is not one of an ordinary character; that it is a war of races, that the causes of it exist in the nature of things; and that the invasion would have occurred as well under the auspices of peace as during war. The president of the congress, in his reply, does not allude directly to war, but says "Mexico shall not be less than France, who was able to conquer principles and establish a constitution at the very time when she was invaded by the legions of all Europe."
The vice president Gomez Farias, took the oath of office before Congress, on the 24th of December, and delivered an address, in the course of which he says "the war which the republic finds itself compelled to sustain against the North American republic, shall be prosecuted with courage and constancy, until the justice of our cause is acknowledged and our territory evacuated."

On the second day of the session of the Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury (Almonte) presented an exhibit of the lamentable state of the treasury, to which the president replied, that the Congress would provide the means "to enable the executive to carry on a war in which the dignity and honor of the nation are concerned."

Later from Mexico.

We learn from a gentleman who has recently arrived in this city from Havana in the steamer Mississippi, that the British mail steamer had reached that port a few days before the Mississippi left. Santa Anna has been elected President of the Mexican republic. His majority is said to have been very small—only one or two votes.

He reports that the first business transacted by the Mexican Congress was to lay on the table the American overture for peace. They then passed a resolution declaring their determination to prosecute the war to the last extremities— in the words of our informant, to make it a war to the hilt. An act was also passed to raise half a million of dollars a month, as required by the Executive estimates for the support of the army—though how the money was to be raised does not yet appear.

There is little doubt, we think, that in the capital and its vicinity a very exasperated state of feeling prevails among the Mexican population. In the remoter provinces all accounts would indicate that there is greater apathy.

The Washington Union of Saturday night contains a number of interesting translations from Mexican papers recently received at the State Department. We regret that we have not room to copy them at length. The subjoined extract from the address of the Acting President Salas, on the opening of the Mexican Congress, is too important, however, to be omitted. It breathes a temper such as the authors of the war believed the Mexican people incapable of exhibiting, and shows that there is too much reason to apprehend, as Mr. Sevier, the chairman of the committee on foreign relations in the Senate remarked a few days since, that "the war has just begun." We confess that we do not see any prospect of its speedy termination. The difficulty of conquering a nation, the population of which amounts to eight millions, scattered over a territory of such vast extent, and animated by a spirit of intense hatred towards their invaders, in whom they recognize not only aggressors upon their soil, but a people of a different race and religion, from whose success they fear not only the subversion of their social and civil institutions, but of the altars at which they and their fathers have worshipped, cannot be over-estimated, though they have been heretofore strangely overlooked. They begin now to force themselves upon the serious attention even of those who provoked the war, under the impression, which very generally prevailed, that the conquest of Mexico could be achieved in a single brief campaign, and with a comparatively insignificant force. It is apparent, however, that unless our Government is prepared to recede from the position to which it unfortunately stands publicly pledged, by the official declarations of the Executive, the war must be indefinitely protracted. If we are to compel Mexico to indemnify us, by the cession of one-half or two-thirds of her territory, for the expenses of the war, as well as for the long-adj usted spoliations upon our commerce, her obligations to pay which she has herself admitted, the "thirty years war" of Europe will be re-enacted upon this continent. But does it not behove us, of the South, to enquire, especially in the new domestic aspect of this subject of territorial indemnity, whether the price to be paid will not be worth infinitely more than the territory to be acquired? Shall the South expend its treasure and spill its blood to ass new provinces to our already overgrown Republic, for the purpose of establishing on the slaveholding frontier of the southwest a cordon of non-slaveholding States, such as environ us now in ever other section of the Union in which slavery exists? Shall we acquire additional territory at such a cost, for the purpose of more rapidly diminishing our already waning influence in the national councils, and thus dooming the South to perpetual inferiority in the national councils, if not of unending vassalage to Northern policy and politicians? For one, we should prefer forgiving Mexico the debt, rather than to seek such "indemnity," by such means, for such objects. It is, at the same time, apparent, however, that we cannot now withdraw our forces from Mexico without dishonor. Involved in the contest by the most bungling statesmanship, and by the most criminal disregard of the prohibitions of the constitution, the national honor is nevertheless concerned in its triumphant termination. It must be prosecuted energetically— but at the same time, we should at once declare, that, whatever may have been the original designs of Mr. Polk, we no longer wage it as a war of conquest, and that we are prepared to put an end to the struggle whenever Mexico herself shall be willing to meet us in a spirit of conciliation and equity. Such, we are sure, will be the universal voice of the South at least, in view of the scenes now enacting in Washington.

But we are detaining our readers too long from Gen. Salas address:

Extract from the address of General Salas on the opening of the Mexican Congress, December [...].

"During the short interval which has elapsed since August, when, overcoming my natural repugnance to the exercise of power, I found myself at the head of the nation, my first obligation has been to sustain with energy the war in which we are engaged, and upon the result of which depends nothing less than the very independence of the nation. The army which, in union with the people, rose for the purpose of overthrowing the domination of those who outraged their sovereignty, and who were threatening us with the establishment of a foreign throne, as soon as the national movement was concluded, marched to the place where danger called it, and is now [...] of the enemy, under the command of the illustrious soldier whom the republic summoned to the defence of its nationality. A considerable body of the troops was immediately sent to reinforce the remains of the old army of the north, and awaited the invading troops in the city of Monterey. The Congress is informed of the fatal result of that encounter, in which American blood flowed in abundance. When the generals who then commanded our troops are brought to trial, the nation will be satisfied, and it is not my part to forestall now the decision of the judicial power."
"The result, however, of this unfortunate affair was to place under foreign power one of the capitals of our States and a vast extent of territory, and transport the theatre of war into the interior of the republic. The [...] General Santa Anna, by a trait in his life which will do him lasting honor, refused the reins of power, and marched to San Luis, where, in a few weeks, he has assembled and organized an army of more than 22,000 men, some bodies of which have already been advanced to meet the enemy. The government of the United States, on its part, compelled, as it is, to hasten the operations of the war in order to bring it to a close, has ordered General Taylor to advance. Thus, a meeting must soon take place between the armies of the two nations. From the number and valor of our troops, the enthusiasm and skill of their chief, and the justice of our cause, we have a right to expect a favorable result. Nevertheless, this shall never be a final or decisive action. Invaded and occupied as is not the only territory in question, but a large portion of what never belonged to Texas, entire States in which the sovereignty of Mexico has never been disputed, involved in a war of races, and aggrieved in the most unjust and atrocious manner that can be conceived, our honor and the future condition of our children— that sacred interest which nations cannot be unmindful of— requires us to sustain a prolonged and obstinate strife, until, respected for our valor and constancy, we can raise a barrier against the immortal ambition of our neighbors, and secure the fortune of our race upon this continent, the greatest portion of which is peopled by it, and which, at some not distant day, will be illustrated by the civilization of the ardent and generous sons of the south.

"If this strife exacts great sacrifices, it would be dishonorable to lose every thing, for the sake of the deceitful advantages of a temporary and illusive peace: in a great crisis, nations should exhibit proofs of great energy and virtue. Our fathers combated eleven years for independence, in a struggle constantly attended with disadvantages, prodigal of their blood at every moment, and never disheartened; thanks to that energy, they raised us from an humble country to the rank of an independent nation. To preserve that task it will be sufficient, without placing ourselves on an equality with them, not to be unworthy of their name. If Mexico combats with constancy and intrepidity, hers will be the triumph, and the respect which she will acquire among the other nations of the earth, deserved.

"On these grounds the government was unwilling to listen to any proposition for peace: the question of the war is submitted to your decision, and the government only recommend is to the Congress the urgent necessity of assisting the army with the necessary supplies for the campaign. The people of Mexico, who know and feel the magnitude of the interests at stake in the war, cannot raise the necessary resources for it.

"This struggle is not one of those wars which pride is every day giving rise to. It is simply a phenomenon attending a fact still more important and transcendent, whose causes exist in the very nature of things, and whose consequences it is difficult to calculate in their whole extent. The northern race is developing itself on our continent with a celebrity and force, of which, until now, there has been no example in any age; and in its progress it threatens to spread over our whole territory, extinguishing in it our race, and establishing the predominance of its own. This invasion takes place as well under the auspices of peace, as in time of war; and therefore, in order to permanently secure our race, we need institutions which will give it our solid increase and prosperity. This truth, which the man of foresight easily discovered long since, has now been trite by danger, and you, gentlemen deputies, are about to solve the difficult problem in giving institutions to the people."

[MPR]

RW47v24i6p2c1, January 19, 1847

The Rockingham Register warns us that a day of reckoning is coming, when the people of the Tenth Legion will "at the ballot box," wreak their revenge upon the "Whig scribblers," who have endeavored to arouse them to the duty of taking some part in the war, the existence of which is in some measure attributable to their votes. We think such threats are in very bad taste just now. However, de gustibus, &c.
[MPR]

RW47v24i6p2c2, January 19, 1847

The New York Herald suggests that Mr. Polk shall send Orlando Ficklin, of Illinois, and Jacob Thompson, of Mississippi, to head our army in Mexico, in place of "old Rough and Ready" and Gen. Scott! The general impression is that these accomplished military critics would be much more active than either of the "Whig Generals," whose conduct they so harshly criticize— but the fear is that it would be in making retrograde rather than advance movements.
[MPR]

RW47v24i6p2c2, January 19, 1847:

We assure the Rockingham Register that we have a very high respect for the "sterling integrity and sturdy virtues which characterize the excellent population" of the Tenth Legion, and doubt neither their patriotism nor their courage— but then it must confess that, though prompt enough on election days, they are entirely too slow for warriors! Indeed, we have heard a very good story of the editor of the Register himself, who was under a pledge to exchange the pen for the sword, if Capt. Harper, the Whig editor of the Staunton Spectator, who is now on his way to the seat of war, would set him the example— and his failure to redeem which pledge has earned for him no very enviable reputation in the Valley— as the following paragraphs, (the first from a Locofoco paper,) will show:

The Martinsburg Gazette suggests that the editor of the Rockingham Register be appointed Lieut. General of Volunteers— and the editor of the Sentinel of the Valley the Professor and Unraveller of Enigmas. Good suggestion. We second the motion, and hope their claims will not be overlooked– Augusta Democrat.

The office of Lieut. General not yet being created, we would respectfully suggest that our friend of the Register be appointed Brigadier General of the Polk–berry stained heroes of the "Tenth Legion."– Staunton Spectator.

Caleb Cushing has been elected Colonel of the Massachusetts regiment of volunteers; Isaac H. Wright, Lieutenant Colonel; and J.A. Abbott, Major. Mr. C. has not yet determined to accept.

U.S. Frigate Raritan, Dec. 29, 1846.

"I have no doubt you are looking, with great interest at Washington, for the action of the Mexican Congress on our proposition for a renewal of negotiations. You will, of course, be surprised that, after two or three weeks session, the subject has not yet been brought up, and there is not the slightest indication that it will receive any favorable consideration. The Congress has hitherto been engrossed in the business of organizing, appointing committees, determining upon the mode of electing President and Vice President, and lastly the vote for these officers, which took place on the 22d instant, and resulted in the election of Santa Anna for President, and Gomez Farias for Vice President. It is supposed that Santa Anna will continue at the head of the army, and will not commit himself by giving any advice on the subject of peace or war. He will be merely the soldier of the republic, and the servant of the people, and will leave all questions of war or peace to Congress. Farias will probably be left in Mexico, to administrate the government. Santa Anna has been writing to the government, that arms and munitions of war are indispensable for his troops at San Luis Potosi. He will doubtless continue to make similar demands upon the administration, which can only be partially complied with. In the event of the loss of battle, the whole blame will be thrown upon the government in Mexico. I think one may hazard the conjecture that Santa Anna may, at some future time, march on Mexico, and overturn his own administration.

"Some of the reports of the ministers are already published. The subject of a loan for the special purpose of purchasing arms, is already discussed. It is represented that of the corps of the national guard of Mexico, not one–third armed; and a sad picture is drawn of the necessities of the country.

"Some of the journals are down on Mr. Poinsett, and ascribe all the misfortunes all the misfortunes of the country to his intrigues! They say our government sent him to Mexico to commence the work of subjugating the country, by creating secret societies, &c., &c.!

"The officers of the foreign men–of–war believe that Vera Cruz can be taken with a force of five thousand men. From the best information I have received, there are not more than 2,000 regulars in the city. There is, of course, a body of militia besides, but they are badly armed, and would probably be found to have but little efficiency. From an actual reconnaissance, I can say that the approaches to Vera Cruz are not at present very well guarded.

--From Honduras-- The Revolution in Yucatan.– We have a file of the Honduras Gazette to Dec. 19, brought by the brig Mensurado, Capt. Grey, which left Belize Dec. 22d.

The last paper mentions that recent gales had caused great destruction of property, and it was feared of life also, to the Southward of that place. The rivers had been unusually high. At sites the river rose thirty feet, covering the plantations and drowning cattle.

Houses, trees, &c., were swept away by the torrent. So sudden was the rise of the water that many persons had difficulty in escaping to high lands.

The intelligence from Yucatan, though not so late is confirmatory of the advices received by way of New Orleans, and comprises some details not heretofore published:

Revolution in Yucatan.

We have received letters from Bacalar under date of Dec. 3d, from an attentive friend there, furnishing us with the following interesting intelligence:– A war has broken out between Merida and Campeachy, in consequence of the former proclaiming in favor of Mexico, and the latter for the United States. The people of Campeachy wish to depose the Governor of Merida and establish the seat of government in their own city. Active hostilities have commenced in the vicinity of Sisal and several lives lost, but the particulars have not yet reached here. Campeachy had raised 2000 men and the army is daily increasing; 800 soldiers are marching to join them, from Peto, (an Indian village thirty leagues from Bacalar,) under the command of Gen. Benito Pacheco, a most desperate man, and outlaw. The towns of Tisimin, Valladolid, Tyesuco and Peto have also proclaimed in favor of the U.S.; and Tiscobl, Txeas, Paduke and Saban in favor of Mexico.

Bacalar remains neutral at present, but the people are making great preparations, mounting cannon on the old fort, enrolling volunteers, &c. Having made no demonstration as yet, they will in all probability join whichever appears to be the strongest party.

From the Washington Fountain.

We read in the La Patria of the 31st ult. a Spanish paper published in New Orleans, by Aleman & Gomez, the following extraordinary revelation of the new plan of operations in the war with Mexico:

"The government appears to confide much in Gen. Scott, who has just gone to the field of operations, and from whose diplomatic and military tactics, it hopes to gain great advantages. The plan of operations, we learn, is as follows: General Taylor, instead of moving upon San Luis Potosi, will repair to Saltillo, where he will remain for a short period. Gen. Scott, after having made some arrangements on the Rio Grande, will hasten to Tampico, where he will assume the command of the 7000 volunteers recently called out and ordered to assemble at that point. From Tampico Gen. Scott will march towards Vera Cruz, and Gen. Taylor will make a simultaneous movement towards Tampico with all the troops he can muster, after leaving sufficient force to garrison Saltillo, Monterey, Victoria, &c. and in union with Gen. Worth's division, will join Gen. Scott, who will have at his command the new military are of rocketeers and howitzers. At the proper moment, fifteen or sixteen vessels of the American squadron, with a force of from 230 to 300 guns of all sizes and calibres, will appear off San Juan de Ulloa, and begin the attack upon the castle. According to the new plan of operations the land forces will rendezvous at the mouth of the river at Antigua, which empties into the Gulf a short distance to the North of Vera Cruz, and ascend the same to where the main road to Jalapa crosses it. If this plan be speedily put into execution, there can be no doubt but that Vera Cruz and the Castle will as speedily fall into the power of the American forces; but if any faith be put in Santa Anna's declaration, it is plain he will be able to cut off the advance of Gen. Taylor from Saltillo."

Mr. Gomez, the editor of La Patria, and the author of the above, is the same person who was appointed b Gen. Scott, while tarrying in New Orleans, to be one of his staff, and whose commission was afterwards revoked by the General on the grounds that he was not a friend of the American cause. Did Gomez obtain the above information while he was General Scott's aid?

It may be remembered that we copied, some days ago, a brief extract from a letter of the Washington Correspondent of the Philadelphia North American in which it was stated that an important part of the history of the Mexican War, though written, is et to be revealed. We do not know whether the subjoined curious letter written by our former Consul at Matamoros, to Gen. Taylor, while the General was posted at Corpus Christi, and soon afterwards communicated to Secretary Buchanan, constitutes a part of that unrevealed history:

(Copy.)

Village of China on the River San Juan, Sept. 23d, 1845.

To Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding the U. States troops,
At Corpus Christi, (Texas):

Sir– I have the honor to inform you, that I have had several conferences at Monterey with Gen. Mariano Arista, Commander–in–Chief of the Mexican forces on the frontier of the Rio Grande, in relation to the differences at present existing, between the United States and Mexico, and I am pleased to state to you that from the opinions and views he made known to me, the Cabinet of Mexico is disposed to enter into an amicable arrangement with the United States, in relation to the boundary and all other questions. Although I was not clothed with any official authority, I took upon myself as a citizen of the United States, desiring to see the two countries in harmony of friendship, to say, that is has ever been and it is the policy and sincere wish of the government and people of the United States to cultivate the good will and friendship of the sister republics of the American continent, and most especially Mexico, and that I was confident the United States would make a liberal settlement with Mexico relative to the boundary question.
As General Arista was under the impression that I was a secret agent of the United States, though I declared to him quite contrary, and that I was only acting as a private individual, endeavoring to avoid a recourse to arms between the two countries, he nevertheless thought it advisable to send a minute of our conferences to his government, and assured me that there would be no declaration of war on the part of Mexico, until I can proceed on to Washington and lay before the President the views of Mexico, of which I am possessed.

General Arista pledged his honor to me that no large body of Mexican troops should cross the left bank of the Rio Grande; that only small parties not to exceed 200 men should be permitted to go as far as the Arroyo Colorado (20 leagues from the Rio Grande) and that they would be strictly ordered only to prevent Indian depredations and illicit trade. I then had no hesitation in assuring him that you would not commit any aggressive act against Mexico or her citizens, and that you would solely maintain the position you at present occupy at or near the Nueces River. I trust in having made this assurance to him, though, I again repeat I did it as a private citizen of the United States, it will meet with your approbation and be adhered to, as in great measure peace depends on your prudent movements in this particular. General Arista spoke also of Indian incursions on the frontier of the Rio Grande, and is under the impression that they could be prevented by the troops under our command, as the Indians always come from the Nueces River. I expressed my profound regret at the frequent atrocious acts of the Indians, and said that you would no doubt in the future use all endeavors to prevent them, as the United States was bound by the treaty of April, 1831, to prevent them as far as possible. He suggested that if you would station a body of cavalry at the pass of San Salas (headquarters of the Nueces) through which mountain pass they invariably proceed to the Rio Grande, it would effectually check them.

I shall leave this village to–morrow for Matamoros, at which port I shall arrive in three days, from thence I will embark in the first vessel for the U.S., proceeding immediately on to Washington, to lay before the President the information and views of Mexico, which I am possessed of. In the meantime, should you deem this note of sufficient importance, I trust that you will transmit a copy of it by express to the Government, as by timely information much good may result therefrom.

I beg to congratulate you that the door is opened to an amicable adjustment of the vexatious questions between the U.S. and Mexico, and feel happy in having been instrumental in this great and good object.

I am, with great respect, Sir,
Your ob’t. servant,
(Signed) Isaac D. Marks.

(Copy.)

New Orleans, Oct. 29th, 1845.
To the Hon. James Buchanan,
Secretary of State:

Sir,— I have the honor to transmit here with "Copy" of a letter I addressed to Gen. Z. Taylor at Corpus Christi, from the village of China, (Mexico,) I dispatched it by special courier to him, but was subsequently informed that the express was detained at the town of Camargo, (on the Rio Grande,) up to the 7th instant, by reason of the continual and heavy rains. I beg leave to add that I arrived in this city yesterday from Matamoros, and will leave to–morrow for Washington.

I am, with great respect, &c.,
(Signed) I.D. Marks.

The foregoing letters disclose nothing of which we were not before thoroughly satisfied. They confirm, however, what was before only surmised– and that is that the Mexican government, as far as Gen. Arista, the commander of its forces on that frontier, had been informed of its wishes, entertained a strong and sincere desire for the preservation of peace between the two Republics, and for the satisfactory adjustment of all pending questions of controversy, including that of boundary. Had General Taylor been permitted to remain at Corpus Christi, there cannot be any upon the mind of any man who will examine for himself the documentary history of the events that transpired upon that frontier from the day that his army encamped upon the banks of the Nueces, until, in pursuance of orders from Washington, it took up the line of march for the Rio Grande, that the then existing pacific relations between the two countries would have been undisturbed, and that if we were not now in possession of the lower valley of the Rio Grande, negotiations looking to its speedy transfer in perpetuity to the United States would have been in progress, in connection with all other points of difference, and at a cost comparatively insignificant– and when we say comparatively insignificant, we have reference of course to the immense expenditure which must necessarily result from the war into which the country has been so recklessly precipitated by the President. We repeat, that no man, whose mind is free from the influence of preconceived opinion, can read the documentary history of the period referred to, without coming to the conclusion that the war in which we are engaged could have been, and therefore ought to have been avoided, not only without any sacrifice of national rights or honor, but with a certainty that we should by negotiation have secured from the Mexican government both indemnity for the past and security for the future.

But if any doubt previously existed, this foregoing letter of our Consul at Matamoros to Gen. Taylor, (or rather, to Mr. Buchanan,) must dispel it, and induce us the more deeply to regret, that, misled by a paltry ambition to signalize his Administration by a brief and brilliant campaign, resulting in territorial acquisitions vaster in extent than those which we could rightfully claim, in the adjustment of the boundary question, or hope to obtain by way of recompense for the unadjusted claims of our citizens upon the Mexican government, the President disdaining even to consult Congress, the war–making power, though it was in session, ordered Gen. Taylor to make an aggressive movement, which, at the time the order was given, he knew would lead to war.

What, we ask, was the avowed and exclusive object of posting Gen. Taylor at Corpus Christi in the summer of 1845? It was to protect the frontier of Texas, then just admitted into the Union, from an apprehended invasion. But for that apprehension, the troops of the United States would not have been withdrawn from the various posts and garrisons which they had previously occupied on the Atlantic Seaboard and on the borders of the territory occupied by the Indian tribes, and concentrated on the banks of the Nueces. The instructions given to General Taylor are conclusive upon this point. And we see, by the subjoined letter, that our Consul at Matamoros assured the Secretary of State that the commander of the Mexican forces upon the Rio Grande had pledged his honor that no large body of Mexican troops should cross that river— the Consul, relying upon the supposed pacific intentions of our Government and the known pacific sentiments of our people, assuring the Mexican commander in reply, that no aggressive movement would be made by Gen. Taylor, who, while the Mexicans remained quiet, would not advance beyond the position then occupied by him at or near the Nueces. It is evident, by the unofficial and of course unauthorized arrangement between out Consul and Gen. Arista, that the Mexicans were not disposed to resent the occupation of "the Texas" which had succeeded in throwing off the Mexican yoke, and in establishing its independence, and which subsequently became annexed to the American Confederacy— "the Texas" which formed one of the "Departments" of the Mexican Republic, and which had no more right to extend her boundaries beyond the limits defined by the law of her existence as a member of that Republic, than Virginia, which formerly embraced an immense region beyond her present limits, were she now to secede from the American Union, would have to assert, in the organic law of her new political organization, a right to all that magnificent country which she had solemnly relinquished after the formation of that Union, and out of which other states have since been formed, as Coahuila was in part formed of the ancient Texas. We repeat, that it is evident from the letter of Mr. Marks, the American Consul at Matamoros, that, while Gen. Taylor’s troops remained in the frontier of "the Texas" which had thrown off the Mexican yoke and taken shelter under the wings of the American Eagle,— the only Texas which, by the terms of the resolution of annexation, our Government had a right to occupy with an armed force— the Mexican Government, though dissatisfied with the annexation of her former Province to the Union, had indicated no purpose of resenting it by acts of hostility— none whatever. Not only was this the fact, but our Executive knew it to be the fact, as well from unofficial, but credible sources, such as Mr. Marks, as from the official letters of its own officers and agents. The President and his Cabinet knew more than this. They knew not only that "the Texas" we had acquired did not extend to the Rio Grande, and that no part of that valley, "from its source to its mouth," had ever acknowledged allegiance to the Department or the Republic of Texas, or submitted to the jurisdiction of its laws, or been occupied by its armies; by they knew that its occupation by our troops would be deemed an act of war, and that, at all hazards, the attempt would be resisted by force of arms. Knowing this, as they did, with what force can they now affect surprise that Mexico should have been incensed at the invasion of territory not only "claimed" by her, in virtue of a line defined by the framers of the constitution, but which had been occupied by her citizens, and governed by her laws and officers, without an hour’s interruption, from the first settlement of the country until the flight of those citizens at the approach of the American Army? With what truth can they assert that a war thus brought on by the seizure of territory which, although in debate, unquestionably belonged to Mexico, "exists by the act of Mexico" who had "shed American blood upon American soil"? The President and his defenders may succeed possibly, by the skillful perversion of facts with which so many thousands of our countrymen must needs be unfamiliar, and by the false glosses which they skillfully put upon other more notorious, in deceiving the American people— and, so potent is the influence of all appeals to the patriotic feeling of the country, which, "right or wrong," when war breaks out, every one feels instinctively eager to defend, that they may for awhile be no less successful in covering with odium those who feel it up to their duty to expose the iniquity of the motive in which the war was originated, and the unconstitutionality of the act by which, without the consent of the war-making power, it has been commenced. But they cannot deceive themselves. They know, and the Message of the President as well as the line of argument adopted by his friends satisfy us of it, that they are guilty "before God and their country," of a willful aggression upon a weak neighbor, in order to effect which they have been guilty of a still more criminal usurpation of power, not only granted to them by the constitution, but expressly denied to them but that desecrated instrument.

But we have extended these remarks to a length wholly unexpected when we took up the pen for the purpose of introducing to our readers the foregoing letters, written, as their dates show, long since, but now for the first time published by the Charleston Mercury. [MPR]

RW47v24i6p4c2, January 19, 1847, Presentation of a Sword.

We publish with pleasure the subjoined correspondence between Hugh W. Sheffey, Esq. and Capt. Kenton Harper— the former acting as the organ of the citizens of Staunton, by whom a sword had been directed to be presented to the commander of the company of Volunteers from the patriotic county of Augusta. The sword, which is said to be a very handsome one, bears upon its guard this appropriate inscription— "Presented by the citizens of Staunton, Va., to Kenton Harper, Captain of the Augusta Volunteers, as a testimonial of their respect and affection for you as a soldier and a Gentleman."

Correspondence.

Sir— You have been summoned by the gallant corps of Augusta Volunteers to command them during the existing War with Mexico. You sought not the position; yet you shunned not its perils and its sacrifices, when called to assume it. Inspired by a chivalric feeling, a high [...] sense of duty, and a generous love of country,— fully appreciated by those, and those only, who know you— you have abandoned the peaceful pursuits of civil life, the comforts of our highly favored Valley, the affectionate intercourse of long cherished friends, and all the tender endearments of domestic life, to bear “the flag of Augusta” to the battle-fields of Mexico.

Augusta has already confirmed that flag to your care. Her eyes will watch it glittering folds in whatever clime unfurled,— in whatever storm of conflict it may wave. Around it she knows her gallant sons will rally in solid ranks, to roll back the threatening tide of war, and bear it aloft amid the shocks of battle. Augusta expects you, sir, to bring back that banner— to return it to her, untouched by the hand of a Mexican in arms, unsullied by a spot that might cause her a blush of shame.

That you may be armed to fulfill this sacred trust and “as a testimonial of their respect and affection for you as a soldier and a gentleman,” your friends in Augusta have requested me to present to you the Sword which accompanies this note. It is the weapon which Brothers place in your hands, to defend the honor of a Mother— to guard the flag of “old Augusta.” That it will leap from its scabbard only in a righteous strife— that no stain but that of a foeman’s blood, shed in an honorable war, will ever mar its lustre— that it will be sheathed at the cry of mercy or the voice of peace, with more pleasure than it will be drawn upon the battle-field, they are well assured. Gird it on, then, Sir, and as its belt encircles your form, remember that a thousand prayers for your safety, breathed from warm and anxious hearts in Augusta, will encompanion you amid all your perils. May God ever bless you!
Your friend,
Hugh W. Sheffy

Capt. Kenton Harper, Augusta Volunteers.

Richmond, January 13, 1847.

Sir– The Sword, which you have been made the medium of presentation to me, in the name of the Citizens of Staunton, has been received, in the midst of active preparations for immediate embarkation with my command, for Mexico.

While I can but regard the compliments as the prompting of personal friendship, you will believe me, Sir, when I say, it is not the less grateful to me on that account. As the soldier’s meed for deeds of valor already done, make no claim to it; yet I am proud to possess it, as the evidence of a generous confidence on the part of my fellow citizens, and a pleasing remembrance of those to whom I am so strongly attached, and whose friendship I so highly value.

I thank you, Sir, for the flattering manner in which you have executed your commission, and devoutly pray that God may enable me to meet all the expectations of my generous friends.

Yours, truly,
Kenton Harper.

H.W. Sheffey, Esq.

RW47v24i6p4c2, January 19, 1847, More Volunteers.

We learn from the Abingdon Virginian that a full company of volunteers has been organized in that county, by the appointment of the following officers: Arthur [...] Cummings, Captain; James T. Preston, 1st Lieutenant; Jacob Lynch, jr. 2d do; Robert C. Boyd, 3d do. The Virginian states that 7 of the 12 commissioned and non–commissioned officers and a majority of the privates are Whigs– a fact which we mention only because, in Little Tennessee, as our readers are aware, the Whigs are outnumbered my their opponents, at the polls, about 5 to 1.

This company, we apprehend, however, will be too late, as well as the company in Pittsylvania, which we learn is also nearly full. The Danville Herald, by the way, informs us that an effort was made to procure a few recruits at last Halifax court, for the purpose of completing the muster–roll of the Pittsylvania company; but, notwithstanding the strong preponderance of Locofocoism in that county, particularly South of Dan, only five recruits could be obtained!

The fact is, the Locofoco counties have been so much accustomed to have the tocsin sounding “To arms! To arms!” on the even of an election, that it is possible they may be under the impression, after all, that the present appeal to them only means that they shall be ready to go to the polls next April– where we have no doubt they will be, as heretofore, overflowing with patriotism!

[MPR]

RW47v24i6p4c3, January 19, 1847, Letter from Washington.

Correspondence of the Whig.

Washington, Jan’y 14, 1846.

Commodore Perry arrived here to–day, on the steamboat Osceola, from Norfolk. He came by the steamship Mississippi to Norfolk, from the Gulf. He brings later news from the city of Mexico. John L. O’Sullivan, formerly editor of the “Democratic Review,” arrived here also to–day, bringing, I believe, by another route, the same news. I have not learned the exact amount of the information they bring. But, as I presume, they have dispatched from the Government, the Union will probably contain an abstract to–morrow. I learn, however, that Santa Anna has been elected President by Congress, by a majority of one or two votes, and that Almonte has been left out of the Cabinet. As Santa Anna, however, was not in the city of Mexico, I don’t see how he could have called around him his advisers, or how it was known that Almonte was not to be in the Government.

I believe Com. Perry also bring word that a proposition was made to the Mexican Congress to negotiate for a peace, and that it was promptly laid on the table. Supplies have been voted, and efforts are being made to negotiate a loan. Thus, both Governments are urging on the war spirit; both are squandering money and blood, and both are trying to borrow money to carry on the war. Both Governments intend to make the other pay the expenses of this war, while neither can very easily raise the money to prosecute it on their own account. Both nations will probably go for their “Country, right or wrong;” for a sentiment like that works as well in Mexico as in this country– while neither is fairly in the right– and so it will go on for some time, ‘till both get tired of spilling blood, and then negotiation must come– which might have done the business at first, without the aid of war.
The ten Regiments bill was taken up and discussed to–day in the Senate, several amendments were proposed, and the bill was finally laid over for further discussion.

The Senate then took up the bill for the creation of a “Vice King,” or, as it is sometimes called, a “Lieutenant General.” Mr. Dix, of New York, made a long speech in favor of this measure, after which, Mr. Badger of N.C., obtained the floor, and the Senate adjourned. Mr. Badger has a great reputation as an able and eloquent man, and there will be a large audience present to hear his maiden effort. I dare hardly predict what will be done in this case. If the Whigs had a majority, the public could tell pretty nearly what would be done; but the Locofoocos change so quick on what they call principles, that it is difficult to tell exactly what they may do. They are in the situation of the Pennsylvanian Locofocoo who said he did not know for whom he was going, as the man that usually told him how to vote, had not been round yet! So with Locofocoo Legislators: Mr. Walker and Mr. Polk’s Whitehouse agents have not had time yet to go through both Houses, and flatter or threaten the members. As things now stand, the opinion prevails that the measure will not pass the Senate. It is also supposed that if it does pass the Senate, it will likewise pass the House, notwithstanding the majority of 30 against it on Saturday last.

The action of the House on this measure is very characteristic of Locofoocosim. The very next day after it was proposed to the House, they laid it on the table. It had so few friends that they could not muster courage to call for the yeas and nays. That vote, through deference to the Executive, was reconsidered. The Military Committee was opposed to it by a majority of eight–ninths. When the yeas and nays were called upon it in Saturday last, it was voted down by a vote of 120 to 90, and now we are told that if it passes the Senate, it will pass the House. I do hope, independently, altogether, of my own opinions on the measure, that this House, which has shown itself capable of descending to the lowest depths of servility to Executive dictation, may not give the world an illustration of what Milton mentions as a lower deep opening in the lowest depth. If the Legislative branch of our Government is but a mere instrument in the hands of the Executive, we pay too dearly for keeping it in session, and it might as well be abolished altogether.

Mr. Dix, while he gave several reasons for the creation of such an office bestowed full praise on Gen. Scott and Gen. Taylor. Then why make the office?

In the House to–day the Oregon Territory bill was taken up and discussed. The debate was limited, by a vote of the House, to 3 o’clock. Mr. Burt of S.C., and other spoke upon the measure, generally on the question of excluding slavery from the territory.

Mr. Pettit, a Locofocoo member from Indiana, delivered himself of a long lecture on matters and things in general, particularly on slavery. His remarks gave great offence to the South. He spoke till 3 o’clock, and then there was a movement made to prolong the time, so as to give some one an opportunity of replying. In the midst of the confusion created by this the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

There were several communications laid before the House to–day from the several Departments. Among them was one from Mr. Walker, in reply to an inquiry from the House, why the Monthly Financial statement was not published for December. His reply was that, he was waiting for some returns to make it more complete. The real design was to make it appear different from what it really was.

Mr. Seaman of New York, introduced a bill to–day, to prevent the landing of paupers and criminals from foreign countries, into the United States. The bill provides that U.S. Consuls, Vice Consuls, &c., shall examine on oath concerning emigrants bound to the United States, from the ports whence they emigrate. If satisfied that these emigrants are or were not paupers or criminals, each emigrant shall receive a certificate under the Consular Seal. If it appears that any one is a criminal or a pauper the certificate is to be refused. A duplicate of this certificate is to be sent to the authorities of the city to which the ship is bound with the emigrants. The captains or owners of vessels to be held responsible, under a penalty of $250, in each case, to transport back every emigrant who is found without such certificate.

Mr. Davis finished his speech to–day before the Supreme Court, in favor of the Massachusetts License Law. Mr. Webster replied in a very able constitutional argument against the law. Mr. Davis contended for the constitutionality of the law as a police law, regulating the internal affairs of State, over which Congress has no authority. Mr. Webster contended that it was an infringement of the Revenue laws, over which Congress alone has power. A similar case from Rhode Island also comes up under the same head. Mr. Ames, of Providence, opened against the Law. Mr. Hazzard, of the same city, replies in favor of the Law, and Mr. Whipple, also of the same city, replies to him against the law. It will then be submitted to the Bench for decision. It is supposed the decision will be made by only about on majority either way. It is of great importance to several of the Northern States, which have passed these laws. Mr. Choate was engaged in the case two years ago, but will not speak now. It is merely a rehearing of the case which the Bench declined to decide till all vacancies were filled.

I understand that Commodore Perry tells Government that they cannot expect any Peace measures from Mexico. I understand that his representations to Government have made a deep sensation on the Cabinet. He has shown them how difficult it is to conquer Mexico. That our men die under the influence of the climate, and that even the food which can be obtained in Mexico kills our troops. There is one thing certain, that this Administration have not the nerve to get us out of the difficulties into which they so heedlessly plunged us.

Santa Anna is a lucky fellow. He has the good will of both governments. James K. Polk and Locofoocosism have appointed him commander–in–chief of the Mexican Army, and the Mexican Congress have made him President of the Republic! It is difficult to tell whether Locofoocosim or the Mexicans treat him with the greater consideration. Now that he is advanced he ought to appoint Mr. Polk to the office which the latter so generously conferred on him.

And now a word in reply to the Enquirer, and I have done for to–night. The reply is easy and may be brief. I ask any fair minded man to look at the article, published in the Enquirer on Thursday last, and let him say whether the impression left, in reading it, is not that the Hagerstown News is a Whig paper? I happened to know that it is not a Whig paper, and so stated in my letter of Saturday last. "Brutus" does not "want to make" anything of it. He simply appeals to that high sense of fairness so characteristic of the Virginia people, to say whether it is fair to found an attack upon the Whig party upon a paragraph from a paper which is not, and never was Whig? If your readers, of either party, say that it is, I give in. The Enquirer says: "Many of the Whig press and politicians denounce it (the war) as 'unjust, unnecessary, atrocious, damnable.'" Let me call upon the Enquirer for proof of this assertion. What are the names of two or three presses, not to say "many," known as Whig presses, which have used the language the Enquirer puts in quotation marks? The strongest language I have yet heard used against this war, was that used by John C. Calhoun, when, in his place in the Senate, he said that rather than vote for the bill, recognizing this war, hw would have a dagger thrust in his heart. Is John C. Calhoun a Whig politician? The Enquirer's article conveyed the impression that the News is a Whig paper. I denied the charge. The Enquirer will hear from me again about the politics of the News.

Mr. Lover, who is now in your city, gives an entertainment here on Monday evening next. BRUTUS [MPR]

RW47v24i6p4c4, January 19, 1847, Santa Anna.

By the Mississippi we learn the important intelligence that Santa Anna has been declared by the Congress to be the duly elected President of the Mexican Republic. As it is to be presumed that a good understanding exists between Santa Anna and our President, the further presumption follows, that the official announcement of this event will be followed, in due time, by preliminaries of peace— all indications to the contrary, notwithstanding. If we are disappointed in this— we shall weep for our country. [MPR]

RW47v24i6p4c4, January 19, 1847

Correspondence of the New Orleans Picayune.

Tampico, Dec. 26, 1846.

I am beginning to think that Tampico is not so very bad a place after all. It is true the climate is rather tropical just now for comfort, and we have no ice; but the city is picturesque, clean, and regularly laid out in streets, while its location affords rich and beautiful country from every point. The soil of the adjacent country is more productive— vegetables of all kinds abounding in profusion. Sugar cane, such as I never saw in Louisiana— large, tall and juicy— grow all around the city. Plantains, bananas, pine-apples, oranges, tomatoes, &c. &c., flood the market every morning. Game of all kinds— deer, turkeys, duck and snipe— is plenty. The most delicious fish are taken in great quantities from the river, lakes and bayous, and the best of all is, these things sell at very cheap prices; a fine grouper or snapper, weighing from eight to five pounds, may be bought for three Picayunes, and turkeys, chickens, eggs, &c., equally cheap. The teal duck— the blue-winged teal— is to be found here in astonishing quantities; it is certainly sweeter and more delicate, from some peculiar cause, than our teal at home, and they have been sold in the market for twelve and a half cents a dozen! This I have on the best authority, and I know that half a dozen may be bought any morning for twenty-five cents. You may take my word for it this is "a great country." But more anon. [MPR]

RW47v24i7p1c2, January 22, 1847

The Enquirer of yesterday, commenting upon a paragraph in the Whig of Tuesday, says:

"Without stopping to answer its unjust flings at the causes of the Mexican was, we would remind the Whig, that, throughout, the President has shown the most cordial desire to negotiate with Mexico "in a spirit of conciliation and equity." Minister after minister has been despatched, overtures of peace have been liberally offered; but have invariably been repulsed. What more could the President have done to bring about a pacific settlement? He is now and always has been ready to negotiate "whenever Mexico herself shall be willing to meet us in a spirit of conciliation and equity." He has made no "war of conquest"— but, as in duty bound, has passed the Mexican frontier, to punish her aggression and secure a compensation for the wrongs done to us. Such, we are sure, is the view of the country, "of the South at least."

If Mr. Polk ordered our troops on the Rio Grande to pass the Mexican frontier in no spirit of conquest, but merely to punish an "aggression" (which he designedly, in our opinion, provoked, in order that he might have a pretext for dismembering the Republic of Mexico, and extending the "area of freedom," ) why did he organize that famous California regiment of hybrids— half-soldiers and half-settlers, with the sword in one hand an the plough-share in the other,— and send them on a voyage of circumnavigation around the globe? Is it not obvious that he intended, from the start, not only to conquer but to hold California, at all hazards? And what is that but a war of conquest?

It is our misfortune, too, to differ with the Enquirer in regard to the cordial desire exhibited by the President to negotiate with Mexico "in a spirit of conciliation and equity." Had he been really desirous of preserving peace, he would have sent a Commissioner to Mexico, such as she had agreed to receive, to adjust the single question of boundary,— and not have insisted upon sending a Minister Plenipotentiary, whom she had at no time consented to receive, for the purpose of setting all the questions in dispute between the two Governments. And in regard to the overtures of peace since made, we are constrained to say that the very fact that one of the conditions has uniformly been that the war was to go on even while the Ministers of the two countries were deliberating upon the terms of peace, evinced any thing but a spirit of "conciliation and equity," and was, in our estimation, calculated to exasperate rather than to soothe the already chafed temper of a weak but haughty people. The proposition to smite one cheek with the sword, while we imprinted on the other the kiss of peace, could only have been tendered to a nation for which we felt profound contempt, and was well calculated, however intended, to gall their pride. It evinces, to our mind, a spirit of offensive dictation, rather than of "conciliation and equity;" and it could not have been made with any hope of its acceptance, unless Mr. Polk thinks as meanly of the spirit if the Mexican Government as he did of the courage and obstinacy of the Mexican troops, when he provoked the war under the delusive idea that in six months our victorious flag would float over the Capitol of Mexico, and our brave troops would be reveling in the Halls of Montezuma.

We are told by the New York Courier & Enquirer that the London Times copies Mr. Webster's speech, delivered some weeks ago at Boston, and comments upon it at some length. The Times, offended at Mr. Webster's hostility to the tariff of 1846, so favorable to the interests of British capitalists and laborers, sneers at him as another Rip Van Winkle, who, having been asleep some fifty years, is unconscious of the change that has been wrought in public opinion while he slumbered. It calls him an arrant "political huckster," and congratulates itself that the American people will be too wise to listen to his counsel, by re-enacting those laws, by which, from the foundation of the government, American labor has been protected. The Times advises Brother Johnathan to listen to English wisdom [for the benefit of the English manufacturers!] instead of giving heed to that "British Whig, " Daniel Webster– and ridicules the idea, [which shows that it has been no inattentive observer of Locofoco "progress.""] that the American Constitution should be a rallying point of any party!

Will the Washington Union copy this article from the Times– as it has heretofore done similar compliments to the free trade party, from the same quarter?

The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald gives the following as the outline of the resolutions, which, it is rumored, Mr.
Calhoun will soon submit to the Senate:

1. We want peace.
2. We can acquire it by withdrawing our forces, military and naval, from the lands and waters of Mexico.
3. We can gain nothing by the continued prosecution of the war.
4. The question of slave or free territory puts a ban to any acquisitions of land south of the Rio Bravo.
5. And Mexico has no money, and the longer the war is continued, the poorer she will become.
6. We have therefore nothing to gain from the prosecution of the war but peace, which we may as easily obtain at once by the withdrawal of our forces.

It is stated that Mr. Owen of Indiana, a prominent Locofoco, will offer similar resolutions in the House. The Union protests vehemently against such a purpose, if it be entertained, which it says it will not believe! This is the best evidence we have seen that the rumor is not without foundation.

We copied yesterday from the Enquirer a list of the Captains in this regiment, with the dates of their respective commissions, agreed upon by the Governor and the Council; but we inadvertently omitted to accompany it, as we intended, with a commentary on the apparent injustice of their decision. This we find done in yesterday's Times– whose article we copy and adopt:

"What rule the Governor and Council prescribed to themselves in fixing the rank of the Captains, we do not pretend to comprehend.
Seniority of commissions or election is the general standard; but this has, manifestly, not been observed; for some officers who were elected and mustered into service before others had half formed their companies, are yet placed lower in the list. Nor does it seem that qualification or previous military education, has been the test of preference. Propriety would seem to demand that those who have shewn most energy, most alacrity, most enthusiasm, in answering the call of Government, should be entitled to be placed at the right of the regiment, in the position where they would be most likely to encounter danger and reap honorable laurels. But the Governor and Council have been influenced by no such considerations.

"Capt. Carrington, who formed the first and largest company under the requisition of last spring, and who came forward at the first moment after the last call upon the Governor, to reorganize that company, and was the first Capt. elected in Virginia under that call, is assigned the tenth rank in the list. We deem it our duty, where, under other circumstances, we should say much more, simply to call public attention to the measure, as one of the most extraordinary and the harshest injustice.”

Deserters.– By the last news from Monterey, the Louisville Courier has information that a man named Robert Hawley, and another named Smith, both belonging to the Montgomery Guards, of that city, deserted, but were pursued, Smith was caught about one hundred miles distant on the road to Camargo. The court martial was trying him and one John Cassaday, of the Washington Blues, for the same offence. It was thought both would be ordered to be shot.

Though tardy in her movements, the Old North State has at length completed her regiment of Volunteers for the Mexican service. Gov. Graham has appointed the following field officers: Robert T. Payne, of [...] County, Colonel; John Fagg of Buncombe county, Lieutenant Colonel; and Sydney Stokes of Wilkes county, Major.

The Washington Fountain says– with how much truth we know not– that our government is in possession of the ultimate conditions on which Mexico will consent to make peace– and that Mr. Polk has determined to accede to them, if Congress will enable him to meet the views of Mexico. This rumor is rendered [...] by the introduction into both Houses of Congress of bill placing three millions of dollars at the disposal of the President.

The same paper gives circulation to a rumor that the Government has recalled Gen. Taylor from the command of the army in Mexico, and ordered him to repair to the city of Washington. We doubt it.

The Mobile Tribune has received a letter from which we make the following extract;–

The Mexicans have at last performed one feat to challenge surprise and praise. They have cut out and burnt our prize schr. "Confederatione," ashore on Green Island. On the night of the 18th a party approached the schooner in boats, and as there was nobody on board to resist, they fired her and escaped back to Vera Cruz without [...]. The John Adams was anchored at the time about one and a half or two miles distant, and the first notice received of a hostile attempt, was the blaze of the burning vessel.

On the 19th ult the prize schooner Charles Morris arrived from Tabasco. She brought intelligence that in one hour after Commodore Perry had left the place, the Tabasquinos had drawn the spikes from their guns and planted them in a defensive state. They say they are quite ready for another fight from the Commodore, and will give him a more military reception than he received before.

Despatches have been received from General Taylor, dated the 22d of December, near Monterey, representing that he had left that place on the 15th, for Victoria, having previously put in motion the troops destined for that point. At Montemorelos a junction was effected on the 17th with the 2d infantry and the 2d Tennessee regiment of foot from Camargo; and it was intended, with the whole force (3,500 men) to march, on the 19th, for Victoria. But, on the evening of his arrival at Montemorelos, a dispatch arrived from Gen. Worth, commanding at Saltillo, with the intelligence that Santa Anna designed to take advantage of the division of force towards Victoria, and, by a rapid movement to strike a heavy blow at Saltillo; and, if successful, then at Gen. Wool’s force at Parras. Under these circumstances, and with no means of judging how far this information might be well founded, the General returned to Monterey with the regular force in order to be in a position to reinforce Saltillo if necessary. The volunteers under Gen. Quitman, reinforced by a field battery, were ordered to continue their march and effect a junction with Gen. Patterson at Victoria, while Gen. Taylor returned to Monterey with Gen. Twigg’s division, now increased by the 2nd infantry.

In the meantime General Butler and General Wool, being advised by Gen. Worth of a probable attack upon his position, moved rapidly to join him with all the available force at Parras and Monterey, while orders were despatched by General Butler, to hasten up troops from the rear. The latter General proceeded in person to Saltillo, and assumed the command, agreeably to instructions which had been given by General Taylor before his departure, to meet a case like this.

Gen. Taylor had proceeded beyond Monterey on his way to Saltillo, when he was met on the 20th by a despatch from the post, announcing the early arrival of Gen. Wool’s column, and also that the expected concentration and movement of the Mexican troops upon that position had not taken place—indeed that their advanced posts had rather been withdrawn. Deeming the force there and soon to be at Saltillo quite sufficient to repel any demonstration at this season from San Luis Potosi, Gen. Taylor did not think it worth while to throw forward Gen. Twigg’s division to that place, and after resting it a day, designed putting it again in march for Victoria, to which point he was to proceed himself.

Gen. Patterson was supposed to be then well on his march from Matamoros to Victoria, when his division except the Alabama rangers (in garrison at Tampico) will be brought together. With a force holding in observation the passes from Tula, the garrison at Tampico may be reduced with advantage to the service.– Union.

The new Mississippi Regiment of Volunteers nearly 1000 strong, has been mustered into the United States service. Reuben Davis, Esq. formerly a member of Congress from that State, has been elected Colonel commander.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 12th inst. contains later accounts from the Gulf squadron and from Mexico. The John Adams was blockading Vera Cruz, and the rest of the squadron were to the leeward on a cruise. From Mexico the news is unimportant. The election of Santa Anna to the Presidency, and of Gomez Farias to the Vice Presidency of the Republic, is confirmed. The Mexican Congress is endeavoring to make provisions for foreign loan.

The Picayune has also a long letter in reference to the affairs of Yucatan–the writer of which represents the Yucatanese as at heart with Mexico in the pending struggle, but as affecting to be friendly to the U. States in consequence of the exposed situation of their seaport to [...], and the great advantage to them, in a commercial point of view, of maintaining, as far as practicable, a position of neutrality. The writer thinks the U. States can well afford to let Yucatan alone.

Alexander E. Birchett, a private in the Petersburg Volunteers, Capt. Archer, died at Fortress Monroe on the 15th inst., of Congestive Fever, after a few days illness. The Petersburg Republican believes that Mr. B., who was little more than 21 years of age, was a native of Prince George county. His remains were carried to Petersburg for internment.

The Pennsylvania Volunteers continue to be very turbulent in New Orleans. Twenty of the most disorderly were marched to the watchhouse on the 13th with a request from the Colonel that the evil power would take charge of them. They were put in prison. One the same day one of them was dangerously shot in the head by a bar keeper, from whom he demanded liquor, refusing at the same time to pay for it.

The President and Senate have made the following appointments: Henry P. Robinson, Isaac N. Brown, R. Delancey Izard, Napoleon Collins and John L. Warden, to be Lieutenants in the Navy, to supply vacancies occasioned by deaths and resignations. Randolph F. Mason, of Va. and Joshua Huntington are appointed Assistant Surgeons, and Robert Woodworth, Surgeon in the Navy; Edward D.
Rumors are in circulation that Mr. Calhoun will in a few days bring forward resolutions having for their object the restoration of peace with Mexico.

From the Washington Union, of Jan. 18.

Of all the accounts which have been received by the Mississippi steamer, the following extracts of a letter addressed to a gentleman in this city by an intelligent observer at the Havana are among the most interesting. We hasten to lay it before our readers:

Havana, Jan. 7, 1847.

"Sir– I had the honor to address you on the 6th inst, acquainting you with the arrival of the steamer Mississippi from off Vera Cruz, and that Santa Anna had been elected by Congress, with only two majority; that Campeachy had again declared her neutrality, and was marching on the capital (Merida) with six thousand troops, in order to bring her into measure; and that Guatemala had claimed the State of Tabasco, and, in fact, up to the isthumus of Darien, and was supporting her claim with four thousand troops, under General Carrera.

The British steamer is just in, bringing us dates from Vera Cruz to the 2d instant, and from the city of Mexico to the 31st ultimo; and from sources that can be relied on, I have gathered the following information: That General Santa Anna was at San Luis on the 25th ultimo, with, report said, twenty thousand troops, but in fact only about fifteen thousand, and that he talked of marching on to Saltillo; that the Congress was made up of anything but the better part of the community, and, in fact, were composed of what is called in Mexico sans culottes, who had nothing to lose; and of course they were for war; that Congress had agreed to a loan of one million dollars. The clergy were opposed to it, and it was thought even that amount could not be obtained. If they succeed in obtaining this loan, it was to last the war for 6 months. Almonte had retired from the war chair, and Canalizo had taken his seat, who was thought to be pacific. The wealthy citizens of Mexico, and those who have means of living, are for peace, but, for the moment, are compelled to close their lips. Nevertheless they, by voting for Herrera, showed their feelings on the subject. The stepping aside of Almonte at this moment means something that we have yet to learn.

"The troops in Vera Cruz are badly paid and worse fee, numbering three thousand five hundred, and the castle about eleven hundred, with provisions only for a month at a time.

"The information from Tampico, received at Vera Cruz by the last packet, in relation to the conduct of our troops, had calmed the feelings before felt towards the volunteers by the Vera Cruzanos, and they speak in the highest terms of the American General for the measures he took to secure private property and persons, and that the excitement against the Americans at Vera Cruz was daily subsiding. Vera Cruz was indignant against Santa Anna and his government, which was manifested by their late unanimous vote for Herrera.

"All the extra defence that has been made about the walls of Vera Cruz are, that holes have been dug near together along the wall, and pikes put into them and covered over with prickly pears, so that in marching up out troops would fall into them; but we could soon lay plank over them."

The Enquirer makes a strange assertion, when it says that "when Gen. Taylor marched his army to the Rio Grande, not a murmur of disapprobation was heard." It was the President that ordered the army to march to the Rio Grande, and there were murmurs of disapprobation heard. I know of no Whig press that did not denounce it. But I have already taken up too much time in replying to this article at present. BRUTUS.
disposed to doubt. The Union prefaces the letter with these paragraphs:

"In justice to General Taylor, we will not suppose that this letter was ever intended for publication, because its effect will be to place Santa Anna in possession of information which cannot fail to prove most injurious to us and advantageous to the enemy. Santa Anna will thus be encouraged, by the high and authoritative source from which it proceeds, to direct portions of the large force collected at San Luis Potosi to other points where it is clearly indicated by the letter that a blow may be expected, and in this manner it may seriously endanger the success of our arms. We make these remarks on the supposition that the letter truly represents the plan of the campaign, of which, however, we are entirely ignorant.

"It is only in view of the public mischief resulting, we regret that this letter has ever been written or published. We have no fears but that the administration, whose course towards General Taylor is known to the world, will be able to show that there is no just foundation for the complaints made against them in this publication."

As the Washington correspondent of the N.Y. Journal of Commerce, (a quasi Administration paper) well remarks: "Gen. Taylor stands now on impregnable ground. Without efficient supplies, and with a small force, he has gained victories the fame of which will endure as long as the waters of the Rio Grande flow into the Gulf. His movement to Monterey was made with so little of requisite means that, had he failed in the enterprize, as he remarks in his letter, he would have incurred a reprimand, or something worse. He did it, he says, 'to serve the Administration.' They have met the service with a poor requital."

In Mexico they punish Generals for sustaining defeats: Arista is now in durance, and Ampudia on trial. But in the United States, the Administration and its friends are incensed against their General, and slander and persecute him because he has gained a series of splendid victories!

As the Washington correspondent of the N.Y. Journal of Commerce, (a quasi Administration paper) well remarks: "Gen. Taylor stands now on impregnable ground. Without efficient supplies, and with a small force, he has gained victories the fame of which will endure as long as the waters of the Rio Grande flow into the Gulf. His movement to Monterey was made with so little of requisite means that, had he failed in the enterprize, as he remarks in his letter, he would have incurred a reprimand, or something worse. He did it, he says, 'to serve the Administration.' They have met the service with a poor requital."

In Mexico they punish Generals for sustaining defeats: Arista is now in durance, and Ampudia on trial. But in the United States, the Administration and its friends are incensed against their General, and slander and persecute him because he has gained a series of splendid victories!

[MPR]

RW47v24i9p1c6, January 29, 1847, Later from Mexico.

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. 20.

The British steamer Dee arrived at Havana on the 6th inst. and brings us files of Vera Cruz papers to the 31st December- four days later than we received by the Pensacola. The Dee brought over $171,000 in specie.

Quite the most important intelligence by this arrival touches the action of the Mexican Congress. It is now certain that up to the last accounts they had not acted upon the propositions for peace proffered by the United States, and laid before Congress early in the session by the Government of Gen. Salas.

Gomez Farias was sworn into office on the 24th of December, and that day assumed the functions of the chief executive in the absence of Santa Anna, the President. He pronounced a short discourse on the occasion, in which he pledged himself that he would prosecute the war with valor and constancy "until the justice of our cause shall be acknowledged and our territory evacuated."

Gen. Canazalo was at once appointed Minister of War and took the necessary oaths; Senor Zubieta has accepted the Ministry of Finance, and Senor Ramirez that of Foreign Affairs. Senor Ortiz, a young churchman of Guadalajara, has been invited to accept the portfolio of Justice and Public Instruction.

On the 24th ult., Congress approved a law of the self–denying order, by which it is provided that no member shall accept office under the Government during his term of office and one year thereafter. This law passed by a vote of 73 to 2, and is plainly designed to secure the independence of that body against executive influence.

A Vera Cruz paper on the 31st ult. announces that in response to the urgent call from that city, the Governor of Puebla had engaged to remit them $25,000 very shortly. The troops at Vera Cruz are sadly […] for supplies.

The monthly expenses of the army at San Luis Potosi exceed $377,000.

Gen. La Vega arrived at Puebla on the 22d ult. and at the capital on the 25th. He is called the "illustrious prisoner of La Resaca," and is hailed almost as a conqueror. This is honorable. The general's representations as to the United States were greedily swallowed. He spoke of the very burdensome nature of the war to the United States and encouraged hopes of peace on this ground. He advocated the policy of remaining steady upon the defensive, and thus prolonging the embarrassments of the United States. If we may judge from the Mexican papers, they will find this a very difficult game to play. All accounts agree that so far from paying their troops, the Mexicans have infinite difficulty in procuring for them their daily supplies of provisions.

A court martial has been ordered upon Gen. Parrodi for his abandonment of the city of Tampico, and Ampudia and other officers who served at Monterey were undergoing their trials at San Luis Potosi at last accounts.

We are often asked who is Senor Elorriaga, who disputed the residency with Santa Anna. At the time of the late revolution, which commenced at Jalisco, he was Governor of Durango. His enemies charge him with being opposed to the late revolution, and his friends reply that he was equally opposed to the prior revolution effected by Paredes. He has been in his Government the steady friend of law and order, and he is suspected of being in favor of making prompt peace with the United States.
The Mexicans have their eyes now turned to the State of Durango, which they look upon as the point most seriously menaced by our arms. The Governor has sent to Santa Anna for reinforcements, but declares his determination to make a desperate resistance whatever may be his means.

The intelligence previously received here that Gen. Carrera, President of Central America, is advancing upon the State of Chiapas, is fully confirmed. Gen. Cardona was making preparations to repel the invasion.

A division of 5000 troops, of all arms, had been detached from the main body of the enemy to occupy the pass of Tula. The movement is announced in a paper of Guanajuato as early as the 15th ult. and the composition of the force is given particularly. There is little room to doubt the movement, therefore. It betrays apprehension lest the American General should seek to penetrate immediately to San Luis.

[Correspondence of the Picayune.]

Havana, Jan. 9, 1847.

Everything relative to Santa Anna is, as usual, shrouded in mystery. Rumor even is silent; her voice does not reach this place, and his intentions are not to be guessed at, He won't disband his army, and if Congress don't find means, he will become "the Congress," and do as he pleases. Loperana, in London, has been named as agent to raise a loan of $20,000,000.

I am told that the garrison at San Juan de Ulloa has been several times on the point of “pronouncing” for want of provisions. There are about 1500 mouths in the castle, and of these about 1000 are soldiers. In Vera Cruz the garrison, about 1200, are often on short commons.

[MPR]

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847, Southern Brigade of Volunteers.

Messrs. Editors:– Among the names of those who have been mentioned as suitable persons to take the command of the Virginia and North and South Carolina Volunteers, permit me, through your paper, to commend to the favorable notice of the Executive at Washington, Col. Robert Taylor Preston Montgomery. The commandant of the 75th regiment of Virginia Militia– the son of an illustrious patriot and hero, the late Gov. Preston– constitutionally a soldier,– in the prime and vigor of manhood,— he is a man of genius, highly cultivated, of noble and elevated sentiments, and in every way qualified to make an able and efficient officer. Virginina.

[We beg leave to say to the author of the foregoing article that his previous communication was not published, as we stated at the time, in a notice to correspondents, which he must have overlooked, because the appointment of the Colonel of the Virginia regiment had been made before we received it.– Eds .]

[MPR]

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847

The company of Volunteers from Orange County, North Carolina, carry with them (says the Raleigh Register, ) a sacred relic, which it says, will never be dishonored while in their keeping. It is their stand of colors, being the identical flag borne by the American forces at the memorable battle of Guilford, during our Revolutionary struggle.

[MPR]

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847

Messrs. Barnard and Jewell, of New Orleans, are about to establish a paper, to be called the Sentinel, at Tampico.

[MPR]

RW47v24i9p2c2, January 29, 1847

The Jacksonville (Illinois) Journal says that Wm. B. Warren, of that place, had been appointed Governor of Coahuila! By whom?

[MPR]

RW47v24i9p2c6, January 29, 1847
More "Aid and Comfort."– A resolution was offered in the Missouri Senate on the 8th instant for firing twenty-nine guns in honor of the victories of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma and Monterey– and rejected by the unanimous vote of the Locofocos! Will Mr. Polk have these negative voters tried under the second section? [MPR]

We make copious selections from the New Orleans Picayune of the latest intelligence from the army, which, though not destitute of interest, is not very important.

In the New Orleans Bee we find the Diary of its correspondent at Monterey, which we wish we had room to copy at length. From it we learn the manner in which Gen. Worth was induced to apprehend an attack upon Saltillo. One of his scouting parties had captured a Mexican courier, with despatches, among which was a paper informing the authorities at Saltillo that Santa Anna would leave San Luis on a certain day, which had then passed eight days. It is probably that the courier fell intentionally into the way of the scouting party, for the purpose of deceiving Gen. Worth, and of masking some other movement.

The writer speaks in high terms of the energy and activity of Gen. Taylor. Writing on the [...] of December, while on his way from Monterey to Victoria, (whence he returned, however, on the receipt of General Worth’s dispatches by express,) he says:

"About 6 o’clock, the sound of a bugle admonished us that a company of dragoons were approaching, and when they hove in sight, we could easily distinguish the figure of Gen. Taylor at their head. He left Monterey on Tuesdaym and had overtaken during the day the provision train of Capt. Sibly, which also came up with him.

"17th. The brigade was in motion long before sun up, and early as it was, Gen. Taylor had crossed the river, and was out of sight on the road."

On the 20th, he says: "Gen. Taylor stayed ahead of us at Monte–Morelos and reached Monterey about noon on the 19th. His stay was very brief, and before 4 o’clock P.M. he was on the road to Saltillo.”

And again on the 21st: “Capt. May left Saltillo on Saturday and met Gen. Taylor Sunday.” [...] “General Taylor returned to town this morning about 10 o’clock from Santa Catarino. The heavy riding he has done for the last week, shows upon him, and I thought this morning he had better go to his tent and leave others to attend to the business he was superintending.” [MPR]

The New Orleans Picayune of the 17th states that the Louisiana regiment of volunteers, under the command of Col. De Russy, and the 1st and 2d Pennsylvania and the Mississippi regiments were to follow in a few days. The South Carolina regiment is to sail from Mobile. Pennsylvania regiment under Col. Wynkoop, sailed the day before for Mexico.

The N.O. Atlas infers that some important movement is on foot, from the fact that the volunteers sailed with ninety days provisions, and under sealed orders. [MPR]

Capt. Wm. Claiborne, more familiarly known as the "Old Commodore," has requested us, in behalf of Capt. Kenton Harper, to ascertain whether any arrangement had been made for forwarding letters and papers to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia Regiment, while in Mexico. We have made enquiry of our Postmaster, who informs us that in all cases it will be necessary that the postage be paid in advance,— which, being done, letters and papers will be transmitted by the regular mail to New Orleans, and thence to their ultimate destination. Great care should of course be taken, in the direction of letters, &c. to state the regiment and company to which the individual written to is attached. [MPR]

Captains Scott’s, Archer’s and Bankhead’s companies embarked, on Saturday morning last, at Old Point, for the seat of war. Captain Harper’s, Corse’s and Carrington’s were expected to embark yesterday.

Capt. Preston’s company reached Old Point in Sunday evening.
About 20 or 30 men formerly attached to the company of Capt. Edwards, of Norfolk, organized too late to be received, have determined to attach themselves to the flanking company under Capt. Rowan’s command.

The U.S. Howitzer company, under Capt. Talcott, is to leave Old Point, for Mexico, this week.

RW47v24i9p4c2, January 29, 1847, Late from the Army

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. [...].

By the U.S. steamer Eudora, Capt. Wilcox, which arrived in Sunday night, we have dates from Brazos Santiago to the 12th inst., her day of sailing. Gen. Scott was at Brazos Santiago, and it was said had dispatched an express to Gen. Taylor announcing his intention of departing in a few days to join him either at Tampico or Victoria.

A report had been brought to Mier, by a Mexican, as we learn from the Matamoros Flag, in a correspondence from Camargo to that paper, dated the 3d inst., that Gen. Quitman, with 2000 volunteers, had given battle the preceding day to 1300 Mexicans under Gen. Urrea, two leagues north of Victoria. The report was not credited by the officers of the army at Camargo. The letter also states that Gen. Taylor is about six days march in the rear of Gen. Q., with 3000 regulars. Gen. Worth was still at Saltillo, and had been reinforced by three regiments of Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana volunteers. Gen. Wool was in camp fifteen miles from Saltillo on the San Luis road, with 1500 Mexican lancers hovering around in his immediate vicinity.

Our own correspondence, which will be found below, furnishes the latest intelligence from Saltillo.

Gen. Patterson and his division had arrived at San Fernando on his way to Victoria. The Flag’s correspondent writes that the ayuntamiento came out from the town to meet and welcome him. The 1st Indiana Regiment, Col. Drake, had arrived at Matamoros from Camargo to relieve the 3d Ohio Regiment, Col. Curtis, who were awaiting orders from Gen. Scott.

The U.S. steamer Giraffe was wrecked anout forty miles south of the mouth of the Rio Grande, on the 7th inst., and four lives lost.

Correspondence of the Picayune.)
Saltilllo, Mexico, Dec. 20, 1846.

Since I wrote to you last the aspect of things has taken a different course, and now there is but little doubt in the mind of every one connected with the army, that before another month has passed, another terrible battle will be fought in the neighborhood of this place.

An express was sent last Tuesday to Monterey, and another to Gen. Wool, for reinforcements. Three companies of Col. Marshall’s Kentucky Mounted riflemen arrived here by a forced march from Monterey on Thursday night last, and yesterday evening the Kentucky and Ohio regiments came in and encamped below town. An express which came in from Parris yesterday evening reports that Gen. Wool, with his command, may be expected in the neighborhood to–morrow evening.

Of the orders which have been issued since the excitement commenced one is, that three days’ cooked provisions shall be kept on hand. A drummer is to be attached to the different guards, ready to beat the long roll and give the alarm; that the accoutrements and arms of the sick shall all be taken to the hospital, and that every man shall hold himself in readiness to be called out at a moment’s warning. Gen. Butler came up with the Ohio and Kentucky troops.

A mail from this place, containing important documents of the future movements of the Mexican army and plans for the recapture of this place, was captured on its way to San Luis by a scouting party of dragoons a few days since. A large body of lancers are known to be scouting the country between here and San Luis, and not far from us at that, and they are almost known to be the advance guard of the main army of the enemy. Of the various accounts of the troops at she disposal of Santa Anna at San Luis, none fall short of 32000 men.

Our officers and men are in fine spirits, and eager to meet the self–styled Napoleon, to administer to him the same kind of dose they have given his predecessors. A portion of our forces, probably Gen. Wool’s command, is to take immediate possession of the Linares pass, which is about 35 miles from here. The three companies of Kentucky mounted men here are to leave early to–morrow morning on a scouting expedition. I pity any Mexican force that crosses their path, for they appear to be a second edition of the Texas Rangers, and any one of them is good for three Mexicans. They have not smelt gunpowder yet, but this only renders them more anxious for a chance to show what the Kentucky boys are made of.

Gen. Worth, who has been sick for the last two weeks, is out again today. The weather is a little too cold here to be pleasant, and the night before last we had ice half and inch thick. I forgot to mention that Webster’s battery [two 24–pound howitzers] is here.

Yours, &c., ALTO.
By the arrival of the U.S. store-ship Relief at Pensacola, in 14 days from Anton Lizardo, we have advices from Mexico, only a little later, but full of interest and importance.

Passed Midshipman Rogers was still a prisoner at Vera Cruz.

Correspondence of the Picayune.

U.S. Squadron, Anton Lizardo, Dec. 30th, 1846.

My Dear Sir– I send you herewith an abstract of the vote of the Mexican Congress for the President and Vice President of the Republic, which took place on the 23d inst., and was received at Vera Cruz by the mail of to–day. The vote was taken by States or Departments (deputaciones) each State having one vote, determined by the majority of its deputies. The only candidates who received the vote of a State were Santa Anna and Francisco Elorriaga. Seventy States voted including the district of Mexico and two territories. Santa Anna received the votes of eight States and the district of Mexico and two territories, being eleven in all. His opponent was the choice of nine States. Of course the election fell in Santa Anna for President. Ninety–nine deputies voted, fifty for Santa Anna, forty for Eliorriaga and nine for other candidates. Gomez Farias was elected Vice President, having the vote of eight States and two territories. Melchor Ocampo received the vote of eight states. Durango cast its vote for Eliorriaga. Of the votes of the deputies 94 in number, Farias had 35, Ocampo 44, Anaya 10, all others 5. It thus appears that Santa Anna is elected by a majority of one of the Representatives, and that Farias has a majority of 9. The election does not appear to have been satisfactory. Neither the Departments of Mexico nor Vera Cruz cast their votes for Santa Anna.

The want of arms is complained of from ever quarter of Mexico. Santa Anna calls the attention of the Government to his destitution of arms and munitions of war. The corps of the National Guard are not half supplied. It appears that arms cannot be obtained from any quarter if the money could be procured, wherewith to purchase them. A proposition has been submitted to Congress to raise a fund for this purpose. It is calculated that 125,000 men may be armed out of the 300,000 fighting men of Mexico, and that from one to two millions of dollars will be ample for this purpose. It is proposed to introduce the arms from sea–ward, by land from Yucatan, and finally to establish foundries and armories.

The day before the election of President the various ministers of State threw up their portfolios.

February

In another column the reader will find the Proclamation of Gen. Kearny, upon which we briefly commented yesterday, declaring, “by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by the Government of the United States,” that the [...] Mexican province of New Mexico is now, without the consent, or even the action of Congress, “the territory of New Mexico, in the United States of America,” and organizing a permanent government, such as Congress, in which body it has been understood this power exclusively resides, has heretofore done, whenever a new territory has been created, and as it is now attempting to do for Oregon. This extraordinary document carries upon its face a more forcible commentary than we can write. If it shall however, fail, as we fear it may, still–born on the public [...], stunned as it has been by so many violations both of the spirit and letter of the Constitution as to be no longer capable of being excited by any shock, however rude we shall not be surprised. Indeed, we expect to see these most extraordinary proceedings defended, if need be, by the champions of the Resolutions of ‘98–‘99, and the exclusive guardians of State Rights– by those who have for so many years affected to dread the “Gulph of Consolidation,” but who, by long standing upon its verge, can now gaze into the dark profound with steady nerves and with unblanched cheeks. Else, why are those warders upon the watch–towers silent now? Have they been all “bought up,” that we hear no note of alarm from those who once scented danger in the tainted gate? Alas for :modern degeneracy”– when, in the midst of the most dangerous innovations, even the most distant allusion to that green era0 “98 and ‘99”– which once fell so trippingly from their tongues, is carefully avoided, or uttered with bated breath!

Let the reader turn to Gen. Kearny’s proclamation– which, by the way, we have not seen re–published in any Administration paper, doubtless from a consciousness of its indefensibility– and ask himself how it is that this flagrant usurpation has been perpetrated in the very infancy of our free government? If it is to pass unrebuked by the representatives of the people– and by the people themselves– all we have to say is, that a written Constitution is the most flimsy defence by which a free people has ever yet hoped to limit the powers of their Rulers, or to protect their own liberties. It is a delusion, a mockery and a cheat, of which we had just as well at once make a bonfire.

[MPR]
From a correspondent at Tampico we learn that on the 1st of January General Taylor sent forward Col. May, of the dragoons, to be recollected that our last accounts from the city of Mexico represented Valencia as on his march to Tula.

Dates, all under command of Gen. Valencia. Gens. Urrea, Romero, Fernandez and others are also reported to be in the vicinity. It may

There is little doubt, as we learn from private letters, that there was a large Mexican force, probably mostly cavalry, at Tula at last
dates, all under command of Gen. Valencia. Gens. Urrea, Romero, Fernandez and others are also reported to be in the vicinity. It may already reached here b way of Matamoros. Col. K. heard the rumor at Monte Morales, probably, and had no opportunity to learn the

by Col. Kinney to Tampico, to the effect that 15,000 Mexicans were to attack Saltillo on the 27th ult., is but the same rumor which has whose opinions are perhaps equally entitled to respect, regard the movement of the enemy in a more serious light. The report brought

Saltillo are scouting parties of this corps of observation is confidently believed by officers of experience and discretion– though others, supplies of water as far south as the operations of our army may make it advisable to do so. That the troops spoken of as threatening the object of the Mexicans only being to keep a watch upon the American forces, to retreat before any advance, and cut off the position on this side if the desert, between Saltillo and San Luis, to destroy the water tanks in case the American army should move in any favorable opportunity which circumstances may afford. It may be, and this opinion is entertained by officers of the army high in

Col. Kinney parted from Gen. Taylor at Monte Morales and pushed on with Gen. Quitman to Victoria. From thence he made his way, almost alone, to Tampico, taking Soto la Marina in his route, accomplishing a distance of nearly 250 miles in three days, and narrowly escaping from the advanced parties of the Mexicans on several occasions. He spent a part of a night at the old rancho of Croix, where

Sanchez was stationed with twenty dragoons; yet in the morning he contrived to give him the slip. He also succeeded in evading

Romano Falcon, the man who is reputed to have killed Col. Cross. At Soto la Marina he found a company of sixty rancheros. He rode at once to the alcade, boldly told him that Gen. Taylor had sent him on a few hours in advance to prepare supplies, and by this ruse made t out to come off safely– the rancheros at once dispersing.

We have no reason to suppose that Generals Butler and Worth have moved from Saltillo, as was reported in town yesterday morning. We believe them, together with Gen. Wool, to have been still there or in the vicinity as late as the 1st inst., with at least 6000 troops, and we farther believe that a division of the Mexican army was not far off, watching our movements and ready to take advantage of any favorable opportunity which circumstances may afford. It may be, and this opinion is entertained by officers of the army high in rank, that the Mexican soldiers seen in the neighborhood of Saltillo are advanced parties of a force of some 1500 to 2000 men, kept in position on this side if the desert, between Saltillo and San Luis, to destroy the water tanks in case the American army should move in force in the direction of the latter city. This view of the case precludes the idea of a serious attack upon General Worth or Gen. Wool, the object of the Mexicans only being to keep a watch upon the American forces, to retreat before any advance, and cut off the supplies of water as far south as the operations of our army may make it advisable to do so. That the troops spoken of as threatening

Saltillo are scouting parties of this corps of observation is confidently believed by officers of experience and discretion– though others, whose opinions are perhaps equally entitled to respect, regard the movement of the enemy in a more serious light. The report brought by Col. Kinney to Tampico, to the effect that 15,000 Mexicans were to attack Saltillo on the 27th ult., is but the same rumor which has already reached here b way of Matamoros. Col. K. heard the rumor at Monte Morales, probably, and had no opportunity to learn the sequel of the anticipated attack.

There is little doubt, as we learn from private letters, that there was a large Mexican force, probably mostly cavalry, at Tula at last dates, all under command of Gen. Valencia. Gens. Urrea, Romero, Fernandez and others are also reported to be in the vicinity. It may be recollected that our last accounts from the city of Mexico represented Valencia as on his march to Tula.

From a correspondent at Tampico we learn that on the 1st of January General Taylor sent forward Col. May, of the dragoons, to examine the mountain pass between Monte Morales and Labradores. On his return from Labradores he took another pass leading to and was attacked by a large body of the enemy and his rear guard cut off. This was effect by rolling stones into the pass, which was scarcely wide enough for a single horseman. May managed to get through with the main body and reached a spot where he was enabled to dismount and return to the succor of the rear guard, but it was too late, as the enemy had retreated with their prize. At one time during the passage of the gorge the dragoons would have charged their pieces without any accuracy, for the position they occupied was directly over the heads of our troops. We cannot ascertain Col. May's loss, or whether he had any men killed or not.

At the present time, there can be no doubt Gens. Taylor, Twiggs, Patterson and Pillow are at Victoria, and with a large force. Had Gen. Taylor but a party of 500 Texan rangers with him, their services, with the enemy's cavalry hanging about him in almost every direction, would be invaluable.

Special Correspondence of the Picayune.

Tampico, Jan. 11, 1847.

I wrote you yesterday that an expedition would leave that day for Tuspan, but I was very confidently misled. The rumor for the past few days was allowed to spread, that the force was destined for that place, and the Mexicans despatched couriers carrying the intelligence. Reinforcements were called in from the surrounding country, and we hear now that there are 2000 men on the qui [...] for an attack. The Government steamers commenced firing up yesterday at noon, and every preparation appeared to be making to cross over to Pueblo Viejo, en route for Tuspan, when the commanding officer at the lines received orders to march his men towards Altamira. It was a perfect surprise to every one, and whether any good results from it or not, Gen. Shields deserves credit for the ruse.

I am assured from headquarters that the object is to open a communication with Gen. Taylor at Victoria, and it is deemed expedient to send the present force to meet this advance. From 2000 to 3000 Mexican troops are known to be between here and there, and very possibly General Shields will have an opportunity to cope with them. But few of the regulars posted here have yet been in action in this war, and all are desirous of sharing the honors of their companions in arms who have heretofore been more fortunate.

Tampico, Jan. 12, 1847– Afternoon.

Gentlemen– Orders and counterorders. Col. Kinney, of Corpus Christi, arrived this morning with despatches from Gen. Taylor– he left Victoria on the evening of the 19th inst, having ridden over 200 miles in 3 days. He was attended a portion of the way by four dragoons, and came through with only two attendants. Gen. Shields receives orders from Gen. Taylor to suspend operations for the present.

The news from both armies, brought by Col. K., is of great interest. He says that the Mexican force at San Luis Potosi amounts to 20,000 men– he estimates their entire force in the field at 50,000.

The capture of Tampico, according to Col. K. has created the greatest excitement throughout the country. Gen. Butler, with Gens. Worth and Wool and 8000 men– considered the flower of the army– were at Saltillo. A Mexican force of 15,000 was reported on its way to attack them, and our men had taken position outside in anticipation, as the town was incapable of fortification. The engagement should have taken place on the 27th ult., and Col. Kinney spoke confidently of our success. The war seems to be commencing in earnest. You may rely upon the accuracy of Col. K.'s opinion of the strength of the enemy. He is perfectly informed, by Mexicans throughout the country in his pay, and I believe is better acquainted with them than any other person in the country. His account of his ride from Victoria is rich in hair breadth escapes and masterly stratagems. He says that he knows the Mexicans better than they know themselves, and I think has given proof of it.

Gens. Taylor and Patterson are at Victoria with 6000 men awaiting orders from Gen. Scott. It is not supposed that any movement will be made against San Luis Potosi. It is pronounced the strongest fortified post in all Mexico, and Santa Anna has said that the man that takes it is welcome to the capital. I believe that a change of warfare will take place on Gen. Scott's assuming the command. The mountains will be retained and Vera Cruz subjected by a land attack– then ho! for Mexico! But you are doubtless better informed of the plans of our Government than ourselves. At all events there yet remains every thing to be done.

I have given you Col. Kinney's ideas of the state of the war and force of the enemy; your readers know the man and I have the information from him direct. 50,000 men looks like a large number, but it is not asserted that they are all regular troops. An army of such a nature as theirs is quickly raised upon its own soil, and frequently as quickly falls to pieces, but it is very evident that the utmost energy of which the nation is capable is aroused to the necessity of checking our advance.

I believe I have not growled about the mail for 24 hours, the fact is that we are becoming resigned to our fate. In haste yours. B.M.

We have received letters from Tampico to the 13th inst., one day later than above, but they contain no later intelligence of importance. [MPR]

RW47v24i10p1c7, February 2, 1847, Official

General Orders, War Department,
Adjutant General's Office,
No. 3 Washington, Jan. 28, 1847.

The following regulation has been received from the War Department:

War Department
Washington, Jan. 28, 1847.

The President of the United States directs that paragraph 650 of the General Regulations for the Army established on the 1st of March, 1825, and not included among those published January 25, 184x, be now republished and that its observance as a part of the general regulations be strictly enjoined upon the army.

By order of the President.
Wm. L. Marcy,
Secretary of War.

The following is a paragraph of the General Regulations for the army established on the 1st of March, 1825, referred to above:

"650. Private letters or reports, relative to military marches and operations, are frequently mischievous in design, and always disgraceful to the army. They are, therefore, strictly forbidden; and any officer found guilty of making such reports for publication, without special permission, or of placing the writing beyond his control, so that it finds its way to the press, within one month after the termination of the campaign to which it relates, shall be dismissed from the service." By order:

W.G. Freeman,
Assistant Adjutant General.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847, Santa Anna’s Plans.

La Patria, the Spanish paper published at N. Orleans, and which is generally well posted up in Mexican intelligence, states, on authority of a letter from a well informed source in the city of Mexico, that Santa Anna will not leave San Luis de Potosi, but will retain there constantly about 25,000 men. His plan is “to take all the means and precautions to fortify well a single point (San Luis,) with all the reinforcements and appliances necessary, within a radius small but well defined; distracting as much as possible the enemy, and dividing his attention by insignificant movements.” It is calculated (says the New Orleans Atlas,) that by this means he will cause loss of time and vast expense to the American army, will scatter their forces, and put off any decisive operation until the hot weather has decimated our ranks, when “los valientes” will pounce upon us in every direction, from “the point in the small radius,” as spiders from the centre of a web upon unsuspecting flies, and utterly destroy our army. This the Atlas thinks a capital plan—original and Mexican. It is not impossible, however, that this fortified point may be passed altogether, and that a blow will be struck in another quarter while Santa Anna is amusing himself with the idea of catching our army in his net. The last accounts from the seat of war, showing that small detachments of the Mexican army are scattered in various directions, seem to confirm the idea, however, that the plans of the Mexican leader are accurately set forth in the letter from Mexico.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847

The town of Victoria, the capital of Tamaulipas, is not laid down on any map of Mexico which we have seen. In a letter to the St. Louis Union it is thus described: “Victoria is situated about 22deg. 50 min. north latitude, 63 miles south of Santander or Ximines, 250 from Matamoros, lying at the base of the mountains that form the high table lands of Mexico. The river runs near the town.” This location, (says the New Orleans Mercury) will place it about where Llesa is marked on the maps.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847

We hope the Shenandoah Sentinel will report what success the recruiting officer at Woodstock has met with in obtaining soldiers for war. We are anxious to vindicate the patriotism of the Tenth Legion, which is now somewhat under a cloud. Let us hear from you, Mr. Sentinel, at your earliest convenience.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847

The New York Herald states that Captain Voorhees, of the Navy, who was suspended some years since, has been restored to his former rank.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847

The Washington Union correspondent of the Baltimore American writes, on the 31st ult. that it was rumored that Gen. Gaines has written to the War Department, avowing himself to be the friend to whom Gen. Taylor addressed his letter, and by whom it was published. He gives his reasons for so doing.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i10p2c2, February 2, 1847

The ships Indiana and Alabama sailed from New York on the 30th ult. with the U.S. troops for Brazos Santiago.

[MPR]
From the Norfolk Herald, Jan. 30.

The following officers, with their respective commands have sailed from Fort Monroe, for Mexico

On Board Barque Mayflower.

Lt Col Randolph, Commanding Detachment.
Capt. Scott,
1st Lt. Garnett,
2d Lt. Fry,
2d do Coleman,
2d 2d Donnan,
2d 2d do Mahan,
Capt. Archer,
Capt. Harper,
1st Lt. Pegram,
1st Lt. Kenney,
2d do Weisiger, Act Commissary,
2d 2d do Peterson,
2d Lt Geiger,
Capt Bankhead,
2d 2d do Harman.

On Board Barque Victory.

Capt Corse, Commanding Detachment.
1st Lt. Ashby,
Capt. Carrington,
2d Lt. Waters,
1st Lt. Potterfield,
2d Lt. Douglass,
2d Lt. Munford, Act. Commissary,
2d do Williamson.

[MPR]

The late Missouri papers furnish us with another proclamation of the Commander of the U.S. forces in Santa Fe, which we regret to say is well calculated to discredit the affirmation of the President of the U. States, in his recent Special Message to Congress, in which he disclaimed all responsibility for certain measures adopted by that officer, by which the province of New Mexico was absolutely and unconditionally annexed to the U. States, and a territorial government, fully organized therein! This last proclamation of Gen. Kearney, (for which we have not room this morning,) proceeds to declare by what officers, Legislative, Executive and Judicial, the territory shall be governed– defines their powers, the tenure of office, &c. &c.– lays off the new territory into election districts– declares that each "free male citizen" (it would not do there, we suppose, to insert the word "white," ) shall be entitled to the right of suffrage– in one word, establishes the entire machinery of a regular and permanent government, and declares that New Mexico is, not a conquered Mexican province, held temporarily by the conqueror, under the laws of nations, subject to the contingencies of war, but "a territory of the United States," to the government of which its ignorant and motley population owe allegiance and duty! And Gen. Kearney declares that all this is done, not upon his individual responsibility, but by virtue of express authority conferred upon him by the Government (meaning, of course, the President) of the United States!

In the special message, above referred to, Mr. Polk assured Congress that the instructions given to Gen. Kearney did not authorize him to annex the province of New Mexico to the American Union, or to establish therein a permanent government. Yet Gen. Kearney has unquestionably exercised these sovereign powers; and he affirms that he has done so in exact conformity to his instructions. It follows either that the General has strangely misconstrued these instructions, or that the President, discovering too late his error, and that he has exercised a high power not delegated to him by the Constitution, now seeks to escape from the fearful responsibility of that act by throwing it upon his subaltern.

For our own part, however painful it may be to call into question the candor of the Chief Magistrate, we are constrained to believe, especially when we see that in California the course of proceeding by Com. Stockton is so similar to that of Gen. Kearney in New Mexico, that the instructions under which the latter officer has acted are fairly susceptible of the interpretation that he has given to them. We cannot believe that Gen. Kearney would have proceeded to annex, by formal proclamation, a foreign territory to the Union– a power, which, according to Mr. Jefferson, the Constitution has not conferred upon the Government itself, by the concurrent action of all its branches– unless he had believed that he was authorized to exercise this kingly attribute, by our Chief Magistrate– who seems to imagine that a state of war releases him from all constitutional and legal restraints, and clothes him with unlimited and despotic authority.

We take it for granted that this new development will lead to farther action on the part of Congress-- unless, indeed, that body shall be deterred from the discharge of its duty by the cowardly apprehension that every attempt to preserve the Constitution from the Executive encroachment, is to be frowned down as a species of “moral treason” against “our Sovereign Lord, the King!”

..................................................................................................................

RW47v24i10p4c2, February 2, 1847, North Carolina Volunteers.

The regiment of Volunteers, from North Carolina, has been mustered into the service of the United States, and consists of the following companies:

   “ B,” Louis D. Wilson, Edgecombe.
   “ E,” Tilmor Blalock, Yancy.
   “ F,” W.E. Kirkpatrick, Cumberland.
   “ G,” G.W. Caldwell, Mecklenburg.
   “ H,” Wm. S. Duggan, Edgecombe.
   “ I,” John Cameron, Orange.

Edgecombe, which furnishes two companies, is one of the strongest Locofoco counties in the old North State, and it affords is pleasure to see that its people are as willing to fight as to vote. The Tenth Legion, in this State, as well as some other counties, will we hope profit by the example, should another requisition be made upon Virginia.

Besides the foregoing, a full company has been organized in Rockingham, Stokes and Guilford, of which Patrick M. Henry is Captain, and another, nearly full, in Wilmington, and a third, also nearly full, in Salisbury.

..................................................................................................................

RW47v24i10p4c2, February 2, 1847, Gen. Taylor.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore American, writing on the 28th inst. says:– “The rumor has come to be a very current one that Gen. Taylor will be recalled. The partisans of the Administration wish it, and may succeed in mustering courage equal to the purpose designed. It cannot have escaped your notice that there is a systematic attack made and to be made upon old ‘Rough and Ready.’”

Why should Gen. Taylor be recalled? Is it because, under his command, (in the language of the Washington Union, on the 14th inst.) “the success of our arms, viewed in comparison with the extent of means employed, IS ALMOST WITHOUT PARALLEL IN MILITARY HISTORY?” If this be true, who but the commanding General deserves the credit for results so brilliant? And is he be recalled for his extraordinary triumphs, the people will be apt to suspect the envious motive which prompts the act, and will sustain the victim of a petty and malignant jealousy against the President and all the train–bands of Power.

..................................................................................................................

RW47v24i10p4c5, February 2, 1847, General Wool’s Division.

Extract of a letter from an officer of General Wool’s command.

Camp at Agua Nueva, (Mexico,) Dec. 27, 1846.

Sir: Since my hasty note to you from Parras, we have all been in the midst tumult and excitement, caused by intelligence from Gen. Worth that Santa Anna was on the march to attack him with an overwhelming force. This caused our division to move by forced marches— our infantry marching in one day nearly forty miles to this place— when the rumor was found to be premature. It is believed, however, that the enemy mediated an attack upon our forces in detail, but was deterred from striking the blow by the rapid concentration of our troops— Gen. Butler having, in the mean time, moved up from Monterey, making our army full four thousand strong at this point and its vicinity.

"When our column left Parras I was absent on a reconnaissance towards San Luis, Zacatecas and Durango, with an escort of 38 men,
"My whole party has been so constantly and laboriously occupied since we left Monclova, that while we have collected a good deal of data, we cannot, as yet, give you any additional results. This, however, we shall proceed to do as fast as possible, when we are settled for a short time. I see that our column is to remain in camp, which will enable us to work to great advantage.

"Gen. Wool is an able officer. His command is in excellent order, and well provided; which last was a great convenience to our friends when we joined them. I had a table of latitudes and longitudes, which will do something to a better knowledge of the geography of this country." [Wash. Union.]

RW47v24i10p1c3, February 5, 1847, The Morals of War

While we would not say a word in disparagement of the Volunteers to Mexican as a whole, it is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact that the conduct of a large portion of them, as well before they reach the seat of war as afterwards, has been most disgraceful to themselves and dishonoring to the character of the nation; and, for one, we heartily rejoice that a majority of Congress has determined to augment the Regular army rather than to make another call for Volunteers, among whom the elements of insubordination are always rife, ready to be called into action upon the slightest pretexts. A rare instance of this tendency has just occurred in North Carolina. The company from Rowan county, which was the first to report itself and be received, has disbanded, and cannot be again brought together and another, composed it seems altogether of Locofocons, from Mecklenburg, has unanimously refused to be mustered into service, because, of the three field officers appointed by the Governor, two of them are Whigs; and it has indignantly sent back to the Governor of the State its portion of the fund voted by the Legislature for their equipment and subsistence until mustered into the U.S. service, because the preamble to the resolution asserted the historical fact that the war was brought on by the President’s order to march our forces from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande! Such men may make good soldiers— but it is evident that they will always be an unsafe reliance, unless the Government and its commanding officers shall have every thing in "apple-pie order," according to their own notions. The officers must be all to their own taste, and they must be especially careful to adapt their phrases to the political creed of these sensitive gentlemen!

The last New Orleans Courier brings us the following account of flagrant outrages perpetrated by some of the volunteers now in that city:

"On Friday evening one of the volunteers fired a pistol–ball at the conductor of the Mexican Railcars, which came near giving him a fatal wound. Some of the volunteers had taken possession, according to their custom, of two or three of the cars, answering the demand for payment with a pistol–ball, as we have stated.

"On Saturday, a more dismal affair took place. About 6 o’clock, in the evening of that day, several volunteers went to the cabaret and grocery of Mr. Claude Martin, within the parish of St. Bernard, near the line of that of New Orleans. Martin, who is upwards of 50 years of age, was behind his counter, and asked if they wanted any thing. On their saying no, he commenced passing into an adjacent room, where his wife lay sick; but he was struck with a pistol–ball and fell to the ground, shot through the heart. There were three or four negroes present, who declare that the man who fired the shot instantly fled."

But, outrageous as these scenes are, they are thrown into the shade by these described in the following letter from the Correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, writing from the camp at Cerralvo, in Mexico, on the 4th of January:

"I must devote one paragraph to a subject that I have too long neglected to allude to, and one that has given me great pain during my whole stay in Mexico; I mean the disreputable conduct of some of the volunteer troops. Below Mier, we met the 2d Regiment of Indiana troops, commanded, I believe, by Col. Drake. They encamped near our camp, and a portion of them were exceedingly irregular in their behaviour, firing away their cartridges, and persecuting the Mexican families at a rancho near by. They were on their return from near Monterey, where they had gone contrary to order, and where they had received positive orders to go back to the mouth of the Rio Grande. A large portion of their officers were behind, and the men were left to do pretty much as they pleased. On arriving at Mier, we heard from indisputable authority that this same regiment had committed, the day before, outrages against the citizens, of the most disgraceful character—stealing, or rather, robbing, insulting the women, breaking into houses, and other feats of similar character! We have heard of them at almost every rancho, up to this place. At Cerralvo, are two Companies of an Ohio regiment, (Col. Morgan’s regiment) to garrison the place. Gen. Taylor has issued proclamations, assuring the inhabitants of the towns in the conquered territory that they should be protected and well treated by our troops. Since this place has been Garrisoned by Volunteers the families have been subjected to all kinds of outrages. At Punta Aguda it has been the same; and most of those who could go, have left their houses. Some have fallen into the hands of the Camanches, whilst flying from the persecutions of our volunteer troops. Recently the people here have received treatment from men stationed here, (I do not know who “commands” them,) that negroes in a state of insurrection would hardly be guilty of. The women have been repeatedly violated—(almost an every-day affair,) houses broken open and insults of every kind have been offered to those whom we are bound, by honor, to protect. This is nothing more than a statement of facts. I have no time to make comments, but I desire to have this published, and I have written it under the approval of Capt. Thorton, Maj. Dixon, Capt. De Hart, Col. Bohlen, Lt. Thor, Mr. Blanchard and my own sense of duty, and I am determined, hereafter, to notice every serious offence of the above mentioned nature. The American arms shall not be disgraced without the stigma falling on the guilty parties, if I can be instrumental in exposing them. It would be criminal in me to overlook these outrages, and, for the sake of our national honor, as well as for that of the U.S. Army, I shall not do."

No American can read these statements, of the truth of which there can be no doubt, without an emotion of mingled shame and indignation. But such are “the morals of war,” and not the least, certainly, of its calamitous effects.

[MPR]
Death of Lieut. Botts.— We regret to learn that Lieut. Archibald [...] Botts, of the 4th Infantry, son of the Hon. John M. Botts of Virginia, died on the 1st of January, at Camargo, of a fever.— N.O. Picayune, Jan. 27.

_____

From Mexico.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Jan'y 26.

Later from Gens. Worth and Wool— By the arrival of the U.S. steamship Edith, Capt. Crouilard, from the Brazos, we have later accounts from the Rio Grande, and also from Saltillo. Our latest dates from the latter place is to the 3d instant, as may be seen from the letter of our correspondent below.

We learn that Gen. Scott was at the Brazos when the Edith sailed, and it was thought would shortly leave Tampico.

Among the passengers on the E. was Mr. J.W. Weed, who has been for some time living at the city of Durango— the only American in the place save one. He says that after Gen. Wool had taken Parras, which is on the immediate frontier of the State of Durango, it became impossible for him to live longer in the place, so great was the excitement against the Americans. On returning from the theatre he was stoned by some of the lower orders, and the next day some Mexican gentlemen advised him to leave the place at once, fearing acts of greater violence. The authorities would not give him a passport to proceed to Parras, but gave him one to Zacatecas; with this he made a forced ride, and arrived in safety at Gen. Wool’s camp at Parras.

Mr. W. says that at Durango there were about 1000 militia when he left, and they were talking right valiantly of driving the iniquitous and usurping invaders of their soil completely out of their country. Don Francisco Eliorriago, who recently made so close a run for the Presidency against Santa Anna, resides at Durango, is inspector of the troops, and is described as a man of great probity of character and friendly towards Americans. He was Governor of Durango during the administration of Paredes, but was dropped by Salas when that general was driven from power.

Gen. Wool’s column was at Agua Nueva, nineteen miles from Saltillo, when Mr. W. left— officers and men in good health. He says that the best discipline prevails in this column of the army, among volunteers as well as regulars, and farther that all are anxious to signalize themselves.

The weather continued cold at Saltillo at last dates, yet the troops were in good health. At Monterey it was much warmer.

In a letter from Camargo, dated on the 8th inst., we have an account of Col. May’s affair with the Mexicans in the pass between Monte Morales and Linares, but it is no fuller than the statement we received by way of Tampico, nor than that given by the correspondent of the Delta. Our Camargo letter confirms that report that May’s rear guard was either killed or captured, that the pack mules were also driven off, but the writer thinks the Mexicans got but little plunder, as May only had a squadron with him. It is also thought the enemy had a large force at the time. The names of the lieutenant and sergeant with the rear guard at the time, and who escaped, are not given, but that they were arrested is confirmed. Our next news from Mexico will probably give full particulars of this singular affair.

It was reported at Camargo at last dates that Gen. Taylor was to proceed to Tula with the intention of attacking Valencia; but this was only given as a rumor, and is not entitled to credit.

The news by this arrival is extremely barren of interest. The following letter from our correspondent at Saltillo is the latest we have seen:

Saltillo, Jan. 3, 1847.

The 1st Regiment Ohio and the 1st Regiment Kentucky volunteers have returned to Monterey. Gen. Butler is still here, but I presume will return to that city before many days.

We have no further rumors of the movements of the enemy. A fortification is being erected on a hill north of this city, completely commanding the town and country around, particularly the San Luis road. We are now ready for anything that comes along.

Gen. Wool’s column came within four miles of this city. It is now in position some 15 or 18 miles distant on the San Luis road, with the exception of the Arkansas regiment, which I understand has returned to Parras.

You shall hear from me whenever anything of interest transpires. ALTO.
By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

First Regiment of Artillery.

First Lieut. John B Magruder, to be captain, June 18, 1846, vice Irwin, assistant quartermaster, who, under the 7th section of the act of June 18, 1846, elects to vacate his regimental commission.

Second Lieut. Samuel K. Dawson, to be first lieutenant, June 18, 1846, vice Magruder promoted.

Brevet Second Lieut. Henry Coppee, of the second regiment of artillery, to be second lieutenant, June 18, 1846, vice Dawson, promoted.

Adjutant General's Department.

First Lieut. Wm. W. Mackall, of the first regiment of artillery, to be assistant adjutant general, with the brevet rank of captain, December 29th, 1846, vice Prentiss, assistant adjutant general, who vacates his staff commission.

First Lieut. George Deas, of the fifth regiment of infantry, to be assistant adjutant general, with the brevet rank of capt., December 29, 1846, vice Ridgely, deceased.

Appointments in accordance with the provisions of "an act supplemental to an act entitled ‘an act providing for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and the republic of Mexico, and for other purposes,’" approved June 18, 1846, agreeably to their nominations respectively, viz:

William S. Kemper, of Va., to be assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain.

Henry Erakin, of Va., to be assistant commissary, with the rank captain.

John Miller Bell, of Va., to be assistant surgeon.

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. 27.

The Yucatan schr. Campeacheana, Capt. Puente, arrived yesterday morning from Campeachy, whence she sailed on the 10th inst.

A commissioner, named Jose Robira, came passenger on this schooner, on his way to Washington, to negotiate with our Government for an acknowledgement of the independence of the peninsula, or a portion of it. He will leave in a day or two for the Capital.

We have a paper from Campeachy of the date of the 5th inst. In it we find as official report of the capture of the city of Texas by the forces of Campeachy. The city was summoned in the most formal manner, and the invading hosts drawn up in the most formidable array to await the answer. Upon receiving the refusal to surrender, the signal to lay on was given, and straightway a tremendous onslaught was commenced. We have not time to describe it, but it was altogether successful. As we read the details, we trembled at approaching the lists of the slain, but they proved less terrific than we had apprehended. Of the attacking party two were killed and three wounded, including one drummer. The defenders of the town fled like frightened sheep, unable to resist the impetuosity of the assailants. No doubt was entertained on the part of the commander of the Campeachy troops that the slaughter among their adversaries was great. Many are reported to have gone halting off. This action occurred on the 29th of December. An Havana paper received yesterday gives the report of this action made by the opposite aide, from which you would infer that the days of Leonidas had returned– with this difference, that rather a large number survived the assault of Tekax than returned to tell of the deeds enacted in the straits of Thermopyle. It is ludicrous to compare the two accounts, which we presume to be about equally veracious.

Hostilities have spread over the peninsula, the different cities taking different sides in the contest going on. We judge that the advocates of an entire separation from Mexico are in [...] upon the profession of the inhabitants of Yucatan, of whatever party– more especially when they act under the immediate pressure of the presence of the U. States squadron.

While the resolution calling on the President for such [...] of General Taylor's correspondence as he may think proper to lay before the
The slight manner in which the President, in his annual message, referred to an event in itself so extraordinary as the order given to the commander of our blockading squadron, to permit Santa Anna and his suite to return to Mexico, satisfied us that there were circumstances connected with it, which he was anxious to conceal from Congress and the country. This impression, fortified as it has been by the reluctance with which the presses friendly to the Administration, and enjoying its confidence, have always evinced to speak of the great stroke of policy by which Mr. Polk gave a commander to the Mexican army and a President to the Republic, has been confirmed by the rejection of the foregoing resolutions by the Administration party in the House. Why is information withheld from the country, in regard to an act, which, if it had been done by the commander of our squadron, without express orders from the President, would have subjected him, if not to the pains and the penalties of the "second section," to the imputation of having "given aid and comfort to the enemy" in the most tangible and efficient form? Why is the President excused and justified, in the absence of this information, upon the ridiculous pretense that Santa Anna might have evaded the blockading squadron, had the permission to return to Mexico been withheld from him— a pretence so shallow and absurd, that if it had been urged by the commander of the squadron in his own defence, had he permitted Santa Anna’s return to Vera Cruz, without orders, it would have subjected him to inexpressible scorn for a weakness scarcely less worthy of punishment than the act it is designed to extenuate.

But the remarks of Mr. Sevier, the Chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations, in the Senate, last Tuesday, in opening the discussion upon the bill proposing to place in the hands of the President three millions of dollars, for the purpose of enabling him to negotiate (buy?) a peace with Mexico, throws new light on the subject and satisfies us that Santa Anna returned to Mexico, in pursuance of an arrangement with Mr. Polk, by which, for a stipulated sum— then two millions of dollars, but now three, which leads us to suppose that the Mexican President has raised his price— peace shall be restored, and certain provinces of Mexico shall be ceded to the U. States, as an indemnity for the spoliations upon our commerce, and for the expenses of the war. Mr. Sevier, for example, stated that the President was of opinion, from communications he had received from Mexico, that peace could be had,” (that is to say, bought,) “and he was willing to assent to it, provided that Mexico would cede to us New Mexico and Upper California.” This remark, in connection with all the antecedent circumstances, has whetted our curiosity to ascertain the precise characteristics of the negotiations between the President of the U. States and the Mexican President, during the exile of the latter at Havana. Was the sum of two millions then the price of Santa Anna’s treachery to his own country— and does he now, in consideration of the greater advantages of his present position, require the addition of another million, to induce him to consummate his Havana arrangement? But the country will not be permitted to know anything on this subject at this time. The “secrets of the prison-house” are too valuable, doubtless, to be disclosed to the constituent body. We must, therefore, be satisfied with the results now– and bide our time for the future development of the curious means by which they may be effected.

We alluded, a few days since, to a letter from a high source in Mexico, published in the New York Journal of Commerce, in which a declaration, heretofore made by Santa Anna in his correspondence with Gen. Taylor— to wit, that Mexico would never consent to resume negotiations for peace while a hostile foot was upon her soil or an American ship of war was seen upon her coast— was emphatically reiterated. And the writer declared that from this position Mexico would never recede, unless it should be through the agency of some “Benedict Arnold.” Is it not probable that he had some suspicion of the secret treaty by which Santa Anna was so generously permitted to return to Mexico, by the President of the nation with which Mexico was at war— and that he was already denouncing in advance an arrangement, which, if it shall be consummated by placing in the President’s hands the three millions of dollars for which he asks, we believe will prove futile in the end? Suppose Santa Anna shall negotiate a treaty of peace with the United States, for the pricey little douceur of three millions— what guarantee have we that the people of Mexico will ratify an arrangement by which that Republic is to be dismembered of two of its Departments? Have we yet to learn the facility with which Governments are overthrown in that country? the ease with which its Presidents are deposed and banished? and the consequent probability that a peace purchased of Santa Anna would be rendered void by his own immediate overthrow, and the transfer of the powers of the State to one less inclined than he to barter away a portion of the national soil? A peace thus obtained must be necessarily precarious— and the probability is that the ink upon the treaty would scarcely be dry before we should be again compelled to take up arms in defence of our newly acquired territory.

Even if, however, despairing at last of conquering a peace,” we resort to the humiliating alternative of buying it, and succeed— how are we to dispose of the territory thus acquired? Is there to be a condition precedent that in all such territory the existence of slavery shall be absolutely interdicted? Or is it to be obtained without the previous condition, but with an understanding that that restriction is hereafter to be enforced? If this be the fact, the outrage and insult to the South will be far greater than those wrongs and indignities, which, even if Mr. Polk’s dark catalogue is to be regarded as a fair and unexaggerated exposition of them, we had so long and so meekly submitted to from Mexico herself. And are we of the South to consent to take, as an indemnity for the past offences of Mexico, and for the expenses of the war waged as it is said to avenge them, large bodies of territory, which, so far from ensuring to our benefit, are to be made the means of our sectional humiliation— which are to be used for the political aggrandizement of the Northern section of the Confederacy, by augmenting its already preponderating and overshadowing influence in the national councils? For one, we beg leave to say that we vastly prefer circumscribing the "area of freedom"—and such, we imagine, will be the united voice of the South— if its enlargement is to lead to a result so prejudicial to Southern rights—so wantonly insulting to Southern feelings. On this subject, however, we desire not be misunderstood. We do not ask, not does the South, that, in the event of the future acquisition of territory from Mexico, it shall be subjected to slave labor. All we ask is that slavery shall not be absolutely interdicted, and that it may be left as all other sections of the country prior to the Missouri Compromise, were left, to decide this question for itself. If it be adapted to slave labor, leave it to its natural destiny; if otherwise, no restriction will be necessary. But this question is too grave and important to be thus incidentally discussed—and it is only now alluded to for the purpose of showing that even a purchased peace may prove too dear a bargain for the Southern States—and indeed that a peace without territorial indemnity, and which can be more easily obtained or course than one based upon the dismemberment of Mexico, will be to us far preferable to one which should annex half or two-thirds of the soil of Mexico to the Union, with this insulting prohibition attached to it.

RW47v24i11p2c2, February 5, 1847, Official Despatches.

The Union publishes an abstract of official despatches from the Army, which adds, however, nothing to the information previously published. The American force at Victoria is about 5000 men, under command of Genl. Taylor, who would remain there until he should hear from General Scott, and determine upon his future movements. It appears that ten men, belonging to Col. May's rear guard, were recently cut off. No blame is attached to Col. May; but the officer and sergeant, who had command of the rear guard, and escaped, have been put under arrest.

The Union states that newspapers have been received from the city of Mexico to the 19th of December, at which time the Mexican Congress had taken no action in regard to the war.

A letter from Tampico states that a Mexican force, amounting to about 8000 men, is at Tula, between which and Victoria there is almost an impassable range of mountains, under the command of Generals Valencia, Urrea, Fernandez, Romero, Lorbarre and Monte Negro.

RW47v24i11p2c2, February 5, 1847, General Taylor's Letters.

From the New York Express, in which the letter of Gen. Taylor, so much commented on, first appeared, we make the following extract:

"The few Whig presses which have spoken of the publication of the only letter of Gen. Taylor now likely to see the light, as indiscreet little know of the machinations and intrigues which have been going on in Washington. That letter drew their fire, and was, therefore, a necessary publication—just as Ridgey found it necessary to draw the fire of Gen. La Vega's artillery, before the gallant May dashed in upon it with his troop of cavalry. These intrigues were crippling, not only Gen. Taylor, but all the army operations upon the Rio Grande. The war, got up especially and solely to give glory to Mr. Polk & Co., was all redounding to the glory of Gen. Taylor—'a Whig General'—as Mr. Ficklin called him—and to his brave army. To get rid of him, and of this, as we have before stated, Gen. Scott was sent out to prepare to supersede Gen. Taylor, by Lieutenant General Benton, while a fire in the rear of Gen. Taylor was to be kept up by all the partizans of the administration. The carpe knights in Washington were lavish of their abuse, in all the social circles, of Gen. Taylor, the main charge being, that (without magazines, without artillery, without pontoon trains, or any field equipments, nay, without authority from his Government,) he did not, on the instant, cross the Rio Grande, and that subsequently he let the force of Gen. Ampudia escape at Monterey. The reasons why he did not cross the Rio Grande, he unfolds in letters which the gag law suppresses."

RW47v24i11p2c4, February 5, 1847, Tom Benton and Tom Moore.– Old Bullion growing poetic from preferment, has furnished Yankee Doodle with the following amended copy of Moore’s best songs:

The Legacy.

[As sung by the Hon. Thos. H. Benton, in the dress of a Lieutenant General Commanding in Mexico.]

When in the "halls" I shall calmly dine,
Oh bear this word to President Jim:
Tell him, though spoken o'er walnuts and wine,
Tis full of the soundest advice for him.
Bid him not trouble his head in this vile age,
To plant the school house and the ballot-box here,
But leave me alone to gather my mile-age
From Mier to Mazatlan, from Maine to Mier.

Take this barrel of salt from Campeachy,
Which oft I’ve said should be duty free,
And tell, oh tell Calhoun, I beseech ye,
To have it admitted now from me!
From me who here in my sovereign humor,
Won't envy his rival hopes again,
Content in the Halls of Montezuma,
Whoever may now in the White House reign.

To General Cass I bequeath my great measure
For leaguing the whole squatter vote of the west,
The Oregon "do" having left him full leisure
For studying his cardinal principle best.
If he works it well from Rio del Norte
Up to Superior's copper edged brim,
He will find it better than fifty four forty
To raise the political wind for him.

Take this goblet, 'tis now o'erflowing
With mint drops fresh from Potosi's mine,
And tell the people (who ar'n't too knowing)
Such under the Mississippi shine;
And should you meet one who e'er has grumbled
Because they will not to the surface swim,
Tell him the ball on which hither I tumbled
Was just the ball to roll over him.

The Baltimore Sun of yesterday publishes a letter from Saltillo, dated on the 21st December, stating that the Mexican Congress has agreed to accept a Minister from the United States, to treat for peace. The writer adds:—"Gen. Worth yesterday received, through a runner from Gen. Santa Anna, a letter, which is said to be of a very pacific character. An individual is in Saltillo, who says he has seen the bill passed by the Mexican Congress, authorizing the appointment of a Commissioner to meet on from us to treat for peace, an that he saw it printed in the form of a handbill, and posted up in the streets of Mexico and at San Luis de Potosi. From the confidence with which some of my Mexican friends speak of the matter, I am disposed to believe it true."

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore American, advertizing to this subject, writes as follows:

The city is rife with rumors of propositions of Peace from Mexico, but I can trace them to no more reliable source than a reported Express arrival from Mexico. It would seem, too, from certain givings out in high places, that the Executive may consent to play the Oregon game over again, and while claiming "fifty–four forty," content himself with a sort of forty–nine compromise. This intent has been charged upon him from the first by some of the fifty–four forty men in Congress, but the design may grow out of a weariness with this war, or what is likely to be true, the state of the Slavery question upon the banks of the Rio Grande.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, writing on the same day, says:

"The rumors that the Mexican Congress has sent a message to Gen. Taylor, that they will receive a minister from the United States, and that a distinct proposition for peace has been made, seems to be correct; but I doubt whether in the present state of affairs it will lead to anything. At all events, the friends of the administration treat the proposal with great disdain, and the partizans of the Lieut. General have a perfect contempt for it. They believe that nothing but action can secure peace, and that the Mexican government only seeks to gain time, now that they perceive that earnest preparations are making for investing Vera Cruz."

The Washington Union of Monday night, speaking of these rumors, says:

"We are not advised of any such report having been officially seen at Washington. If it had come to General Worth from San Luis de Potosi, it would most probably have reached Gen. Taylor at Victoria. But despatches are received from him as late as the 7th of January from Victoria. He is not only silent about any such report, but states that the last account from Mexico had taken no action in regard to the war. In fact, our previous advices from Mexico are later than those which he had received."

The Petersburg Union Volunteers, commanded by Capt. William M. Robinson, took their departure last Friday for Old Point. They were escorted by the volunteer companies of the town to the City Point Depot. On the evening previous a beautiful Flag was presented to the company by Wm. R. Drinkard, Esq. as the organ of the Ladies of Petersburg– and Swords were presented to the Captain and three Lieutenants, Bryan, Shands and McGowan.

The New Orleans papers speak in terms of just indignation of the sufferings of the Mississippi Volunteers, encamped on the Battle Ground, near that city— the ground being submerged, and the men up to their knees in mud and water. The consequence has been an unusual number of causes of sickness and death. The offices of the government are vehemently denounced for failing to provide the volunteers with comfortable and healthy quarters during their sojourn in the city. Perhaps if the Government would pay some little attention to these details, instead of making war upon General Taylor, the men who have so promptly obeyed its call would not be subjected to privations and sufferings compared with which the perils of the battle field are trifling.

The Union of Monday night contradicts the rumor that Santa Anna had thrown a force of 35,000 men between Generals Taylor and Worth, on the authority of a letter from Gen. Jesup.

Head Quarters of the U.S. Army of Invasion, Victoria, Mexico, Jan. 5, 1847.

Gentlemen,— I wrote you a hasty note from Monterey, on the evening of the 22d ult., and intended to have written again the next day, as an express came in the evening from Saltillo, but the hurry of preparation for the march down here prevented me, and I put it off with the view of sending it from Monte Morales, at which place, unfortunately, General Taylor sent off his express before I got in.

Gen. Taylor and all his officers feeling perfect confidence in the ability of Gen. Butler to maintain his position at Saltillo against any force, and judging that the Black Fort at Monterey would keep all safe in that quarter, the bugle was sounded early on the morning of the 23d, to take up the line of march again for this place, and between 7 and 8 o'clock the columns were in motion, all being assured that nothing but the defeat of our forces would again cause them to retrace their steps. The rest, on Monday and Tuesday, was of great advantage both to men and horses, but the effect of the forced march from Morales was quite apparent.

Col. Harney, of the dragoons, did not start with us. He was ordered on the morning of the march to proceed to Saltillo, and take command of all the mounted men, including dragoons and Arkansas and Kentucky cavalry.

At Monte Morales, we overtook the supply train of Capt. Sibleig, and a train of wagons just from Camargo, with provisions. From this place Col. May, with a topographical engineer and two companies of dragoons, left us on the road, proceeded along the foot of the mountains to ascertain of there were any passes that were not advised of. A pass was found between Linares and Morales, and with great difficulty the command got through it, by leading their horses, as it is reported so narrow, that but a single horse could make any head way. Some of those who were with the expedition represent the scenery as being the most magnificent that was ever beheld. On one side of the pass there is said to be a perpendicular ascent of 600 or 700 feet, with a rock jutting out a foot or more all the way up, and the opposite side of it runs up to the same height, though with a gradual slope. The scenery all around looked wild in the extremest sense of the term, and to use the language of one of the dragoons, some of the peaks of the mountain looked so high, that the Mexican eagle has no the courage to build its nest there. After examining the pass and the nature of the country beyond it, the command began to retrace their steps, and the main body by pursuing the same course they did at first, got safely back on this side of the mountains. The rear guard however, were not so fortunate, and none but the Lieut. and Sergeant got through. What misfortune befell them, and how it happened, had best be given publicity to over the signature of Capt. May, as he has promised to hand it to me before closing my letter. He has placed the Lieutenant under arrest, and is very much mortified at the loss of his men.

At Linares we found out the government of Mexico had $3800 in funds there, and it was demanded from the Alcalde by General Taylor. That functionary stated that the money had been taken away by a government officer, but he was still ordered to produce, and he complied by paying $1000 himself, and matching the merchants of the town out of the residue. We had paid very near $1000 to the people for forage, mules and horses, and little et ceteras, most of which I presume came back in the $3800. Every night of the march, immediately opposite our encampment, a fire was lighted in the mountains, and I have no doubt at all but that they were intended as signals to show our whereabouts on the road.
Victoria is, altogether, a very pretty place, and larger than any town I have seen except Monterey. General Quitman’s command have been here since the 29th, and were the first Americans to enter the town. The Baltimore battalion were in advance, and their flag, which was christened in Monterey, now waves from a two-story house in the plaza. The Mexican cavalry were moving before Gen. Quitman for two days before he got in. They were at the hacienda of Sanlen Gracia in the morning, and our troops there in the evening. It was the same way at the Caballero rancho. There were about two hundred here in all, and some of them left the town on the evening of the 28th, and the remainder the next morning, but they were seen on the mountains by our men after they had encamped, and all the little “tackies” were saddled up to pursue them, but night came on, and it was of no avail. They knew very well that there was no cavalry along, and hence their daring in showing themselves.

The rear of Gen. Twiggs’ division had not got out of town yesterday, en route to the river, before the advance guard of Gen. Patterson had entered the plaza. He left twenty miles this side of Matamoros on the 24th, and must have marched very near as fast as we did to get in so soon. He was not aware that the place was occupied by our troops, and desired to plant the first American standard in Mexico. His command consists of the Tennessee cavalry, the 3d and 4th Illinois infantry, two companies of artillery, and one of sappers and miners. The division was accompanied by a supply train, which with the company wagons made near three hundred.

The simultaneous arrival of the two divisions made quite a show, and everything around wore a martial appearance. The people of the town, loss reserved, or less timid than usual, came into the streets, and to their windows, in great numbers, and looked as though they thought the thing was up with Mexico, as our columns marched through the square. Neither division knew the whereabouts of the other, and their arrival at the same time was not anticipated.

To feed all the horses and men that are now here, it will require untiring exertions on the part of the Quartermasters, and their assistants. The greatest difficulty will be in providing for the horses, although up to this time we have had no difficulty in obtaining forage from the enemy, for which we now pay them one price, 60 cts for corn, and at a proportionate rate for fodder. This is the price we paid on the rout from Monterey, and thus far we have continued it here. But the demand will soon swallow up what is in the vicinity, and then we will have to look for it from some of the depots on the Gulf. Should we remain here for any considerable length of time, it would be advisable to land supplies at Soto La Marina, a port at the mouth of the river of the same name, 65 or 70 miles from this place. But it is not probable that we shall remain here, for the Mexicans will not come to us, and if we are not going after them just now, convenience as well as economy demands that we should be nearer the sea board.

Gen. Scott has signified to Gen. Taylor his intention of taking command of this wing of the army, and I think he will move on to Tampico, when he gets ready, and from there, the only prominent place presented in “my mind’s eye” is Vera Cruz. It has been talked of very much by Gen. Taylor lately, and some of his officers say he dreams of it. I believe I told you before, that he said to the General Government, that if they would send him 6000 troops to Tampico, he would march to that place with 4000 of those now in the field, and would, after adding them together move on to and attack the city of Vera Cruz. If our troops do not go there, where will they go now, last on the result, I have confidence enough in the man to wish him to undertake it, alone, or as the right or left bower with Gen. Scott.

Gen. Scott’s arrival in this country does not give, by any manner of means, general satisfaction, not that the man is unpopular with the army, but that a desire prevails to see the man who commenced the war and who has fortunately carried it on thus far, make a finish of it. I should have been pleased to have seen him at the head of affairs at the start, for I believe he would have had the army better appointed than it was, but since it has succeeded so admirably, with all the inconveniences attendant, I am willing now to trust it to the end under the same guidance. In the first place, Gen. Scott would have demanded and received more men before leaving the Rio Grande, well provisioned and equipped in every particular. He would have made the government furnish such things as were necessary, nor would he have moved until he received the General Taylor, on the other hand, knowing that his troops could not be whipped, and not wishing to get at loggerheads with the powers at Washington, preferred the use of leaden to the paper bullets, moved on when time arrived, to do the best he could. Gen. Scott would have been less obedient to the dictates of the soothing and conciliatory system pointed out by President Polk, and would have taken the responsibility of discriminating. Having the means he would have followed up his victories, and following them up, would have caused the enemy to cry quarter long ere this. I would not for the world be understood as saying or hinting anything prejudicial to Gen. Taylor by the comparison, for he has not only whipped the enemy wherever he found them, but has attempted to do a far more difficult task— that of carrying out the views of the Administration, and I only think Gen. Scott would have done better because I believe he would have acted as his own ideas of policy dictated.

January 6th, 1847.

As I failed to obtain from Capt. May the account of his adventure he had signified his intention of furnishing me, I am forced to the necessity of giving it as I heard it from the officers and his men. After he had retraced his steps through the pass with the main body and proceeded several hundred yards, he heard a rumbling sound behind him as if large stones were being rolled down the mountain. He immediately went back in the direction, and shortly met the Lieut. and Sergeant of the rear guard of whom he demanded “where is your guard?” the Lieutenant answered that they were near, but on turning to look for them none but the Sergeant was to be found. The whole command then proceeded towards the pass again, and came up to it without finding anything of the men; but they found a large number of loose stones that they say had been hurled down from the perpendicular side of the mountain, and traces of blood in several places. They then went through the pass, and travelled several miles, but could not discover any traces of the men, although they heard that a party of Americans had gone through a little village, but it was not said whether as prisoners or not. A few shots were fired from their carbines at persons on the mountains, but they did not reach. Capt. May seems undecided whether these men have been carried off or not.
Two mails will leave here to–morrow, and Heaven knows when another one will start. One will go by the way of Monterey, and the other to Tampico. The latter will be only and express mail if– I can get my letters in I will.

I feel very certain to–day that Vera Cruz is the aim of the commanding General, and I should not be surprised if we were to march to Tampico in a few days. In counting up the number of horses to–day, for which forage is required the number was 3528, and it takes to feed them daily 882 bushels of corn besides fodder, and this of itself will be of great inducement to get nearer shipping, ad we will soon eat out every thing in this vicinity.

The Corporal.

The future course of this gentleman in the Mexican War question continues to be a subject of speculation. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says that he will define his position in a few days on the Three Million Bill; and the correspondent of the New York Courier states that he does not hesitate to avow his intention to introduce some measure before the close of the session for the purpose of bringing the war to a close, which he says can be done with honor to both Republics, and without the farther effusion of blood. “He so expressed himself last night (says the writer, on the 2d instant,) and only refused to explain his plan because the details were not fully matured.” Unless he has recently modified his views, the writer thinks he will propose to establish our boundary at the Rio Grande, and to negotiate for so much of California as may be required for our future commerce in the East, and to keep up a chain of communication with our possessions in Oregon.

The last New Orleans papers contain numerous accounts of the flagrant outrages perpetrated in that city by the volunteers. On the night of the 30th, the whole city was in a state of alarm– people armed themselves, and turned out in vast numbers, and the troops were called out and mustered as if the place were beleagured by a foreign force! It turned out, however, to be a false alarm. On that night, however, most of the volunteers were embarked, and had sailed for Mexico; and universal joy was expressed that they were off. The Picayune says: “We hope when we next hear of them that they will have done such valorous things as will purge the memories of the past of their bitterness.”

The Alexandria Gazette informs us that “curses not loud but deep,” are muttered against Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Butler, his colleague, in Washington, in consequence of their course on the resolution of thanks to Gen. Taylor.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 30th ult. has a letter from Tampico of the 16th. All was quiet. The corps of engineers are busily engaged in extending the lines of fortifications from the high ground upon which the city stands to the water’s edge. When these are completed, (the writer says,) the place, with a garrison of 2000 Americans, may be considered impregnable to any army the Mexicans could send against it. Gen. Scott, it was said, had gone to Camargo for the purpose of having a personal interview with Gen. Taylor, who is to join him there. Numerous rumors were afloat of movements in contemplation, but nothing certain was known.

We lay before our readers this morning a highly interesting letter on the Mexican War, addressed by General Waddy Thompson, late Minister to Mexico, to the Editors of the National Intelligencer. Whatever may have been originally the temper of the public mind in regard to the conquest and permanent retention of a portion of the States of Mexico, for the purpose (to use one of the cent phrases of the day, by which the public mind has been so corrupted and misled,) of “extending the area of freedom,” or under the equally deceptive pretence of procuring from Mexico “indemnity” for past insults and injuries,— we say, whatever may have been the temper of the public mind, in the beginning of this unfortunate contest, it cannot be doubted that a decided reaction has taken place, and is new in progress, in the South at least, in regard to the policy of enlarging our territorial limits, by the sword. The unanticipated difficulties and obstacles in the career of conquest, which the authors of the war had flattered themselves with the belief would be both brief and brilliant, have not been without their effect in producing this salutary change in public opinion. Men are beginning to count the cost, both in blood and treasure, of a conflict to which they can see no end; and they naturally ask themselves whether, if we even secure New Mexico and California, on the restoration of peace, we shall not in expenditure alone, pay too dearly for the whistle. The enquiry, too, is heard on all sides, will not the addition of Mexican territory—particularly that portion of it in the upper Valley of the Rio Grande, and on the western side of that river, prove to be a curse rather than a benefit and a source of additional expense instead of an "indemnity"—and whether it will not introduce into our limits a population unfit for free government, and which we cannot admit to the rights, as they are incapable of performing the duties of citizenship, in a representative government? This view of the question, and others not less imposing, are powerfully presented by Mr. Berrien, the distinguished Senator from Georgia, in his admirable speech on the Three Million Dollar speech distinguished alike by its profound ability and elevated patriotism. We beg attention to the considerations embodied in the subjoined extract:

"Sir, if there be any one thing of national interest to be preserved at the expense of national honor, I know not; but looking to this question solely as one of interest, I ask you, is it consistent with the national interest to acquire such territory? Consider it as already acquired, either by the use of the money which it is proposed to appropriate by this bill, or by the force of our arms; consider that territory as acquired, and I hope senators are now ready to answer the question, how will dispose of this territory? When you get these provinces what will you do with them? Will you remove the existing population and settle the west, which will have been left by emigrants from the United States? That may not be. You cannot do it without violating every principle of the law of nation—every principle which has been recognised by your own courts of peace. Whether these territories be acquired by conquest or purchase, the moment they pass under your domination their inhabitants become the object of, and are entitled to, your protection. What next, then? If you must protect this people and the territory which they inhabit, will you govern them as provinces? Will you send your governors of provinces to superintend and protect theirs? Or what principle will you govern them by? What next? If you may not depopulate them—if you must not govern them as provinces—will you exercise no power given you under the constitution, and obviously given while the view of the framers of it was confined within the territorial limits of the United States! Will you exercise the power of governing them as territories, and, of course, entitle them to the privilege of being incorporated as States of the Union, when they shall have attained the requisite number of inhabitants? Are you willing to put your birthright in the keeping of the mongrel races who inhabit these territories by incorporating them into the federal Union? For myself, I am free to declare non [...] in fadera, and I believe that declaration will be responded to from the remotest extremities of this widely extended Union. Then, what is it for which we are contending? What is the position to which this lust for the acquisition of territory is about to lead us? When we shall have acquired these territories, how are we to surmount the difficulties which will necessarily attend their possession? We cannot, consistently with the constitution, govern it as an independent province. We cannot, consistently with what we owe to ourselves, put it into a condition to be incorporated with the American Union. But, suppose you could. Do not you bring with it that question which more than any other menaces the duration and permanence of this Union? Do you believe that any treaty which may be negotiated with Mexico can receive the constitutional sanction of this body leaving the question of slavery open? Do you believe it can receive the constitutional sanction of this body excluding slavery? Do you believe it can receive the constitutional sanction of this body permitting grant that I am wrong in the opinion which would seem to be indicated by the President— that it would be practicable to obtain the constitutional majority of this Senate which would leave open the question of slavery? And I ask American senators whether they would not slumber upon their posts if their assent were given to a treaty leaving that question open? I ask American senators if it is not their imperative duty to the States which they represent when any acquisition shall be made by treaty to take care that the domestic institutions and interests of the States which they represent are protected by the express stipulations of that treaty? Suppose those overlooked— suppose American senators, under the influence of whatever motive, should acquiescence in the acquisition of territory without such a stipulation as would protect their provinces, what follows? Inevitably, with the certainty of fate, the exclusion of their constituents from their senatorial rights to a participation in the benefits of the territory acquired by common effort. Sir, the process is easy—it is simple—it is obvious—it is undeniable. On the question of the admission of this territory— if you were to govern it as a territory, with a view to its subsequent admission, when the number of its population would satisfy the constitution permitting— on the question of its admission as a State, the numerical superiority of the free States would hold us in chains. We may not hope to secure to our constituents any right to participate in the benefits of such an acquisition unless we agree to surrender, in advance, that portion of our property over which we have the guarantee of the constitution. I say, then, it especially behooves southern senators to oppose themselves to the acquisition of territory in any form, because as it is quite certain that no territory will be acquired by treaty in which the right to exercise their domestic institution will be stipulated, and inasmuch as the territory acquired by a treaty which would leave that an open question, will inevitably result in their exclusion— I say, in my humble judgment, and speaking as a southern senator representing a southern State, that the duty of the south—the interests of the south—the safety of the south—demand that we should oppose ourselves to any and to every acquisition of territory. But the appeal is not merely to southern senators, but to American senators from whatever quarter of this Union they may come. The appeal is to them to exclude from the national councils this direful question. The acquisition of territory must bring before us, with accumulated force, a question which now menaces the permanence of this Union. It cannot be that southern men can silently acquiesce in the denial to them of a common right insured in the constitution of the United States. If we have a right to the acquisition of territory—if that acquisition is made by the common effort of all the States, then all the States are alike entitled to participate in the benefits which result from such as acquisition. But if the inevitable tendency of such an acquisition be as I have described it, then we must be excluded from such a participation in the benefits of the acquisition. In that case, one of two things remains— to assert, at whatever hazard, our rights, and the rights of our constituents, or to give a renewed unexampled manifestation of our devotion to the bond of our federal Union, by submitting to this inequality of distribution in the acquisitions of our common government. I do most anxiously desire that the fearful crisis may not be brought about. It menaces us now, even in the existing state of things; but, in all human probability it may, and I confidently trust it will be averted by the intelligence and by the patriotism of the American people. But if you are to introduce into this Union the vast territories which you contemplate to acquire by occasion from Mexico, it will be a trial of the disinterestedness and patriotism of the south, if they shall be called upon to decide that they are willing to acquiesce in their utter exclusion from all participation in this rich and boundless territory.”

These views address themselves with irresistible force to the people in every section of the Union, but more especially to people of the South, who, under existing circumstances, cannot but perceive, that, if the acquisition of the territory from Mexico, as the condition of peace, may be, in every just sense of that term, regarded as "indemnity" at all, it can be no indemnity to them; but rather a source of sectional humiliation and injury, to which, unless they are utterly insensible to their rights, and recreant to their duty, they never can and never will submit.

We rejoice to see leading Southern men—such men as Waddy Thompson, John Macpherson Berrien and Reverdy Johnson—assuming, at this crisis, the attitude which its importance demands, and with a boldness equal to this emergency. We hope to see other
The Washington Union of Saturday night last contains a long account of the bombardment of Guaymas, (on the Pacific coast,) and the cutting of the Mexican brig Condor, from under the artillery and musketry of the enemy, by the U.S. sloop–of–war Cyane, Commander S.F. DuPont, on the 7th of October last. There were several hundred troops in the town, to the commander of which Capt. DuPont sent a message, demanding the surrender of the Mexican gun–boats in the harbor, with their equipments. This the Mexican commander refused, and it was determined at once to cut out them. The Mexicans then set fire to the gun–boats, which were consumed before the attempt to capture them could be made. The Captain of the Cyane then determined to cut out the Mexican brig Condor, which was anchored within pistol–shot of the town and within short musket range of the troops, concentrated behind a hill. A launch, with a 12 pound cannonade, and a third cutter, under command of Lt. G.W. Harrison, with Lieut. Ed Higgins, Midshipmen H.N. Crab and R.F.R. Lean, started on the enterprise. The ship at once opened a fire upon the town, with round and shell shot concentrating the fire upon the government buildings which unfortunately formed a space between the hill, behind which the military lay, and the spot where the Condor was lying. The troops were compelled to withdraw a little for better security, the shot and shells doing fearful execution. As the boats approached the Condor, they were received with a hot fire of musketry– but the gallant crew succeeded in cutting the iron cable of the ship and towing her off, amid a shower of balls– and, what seems extraordinary, without a man being killed or wounded. The writer says, “I believe you ma search naval records in vain for a better planned or a more completely executed expedition.” A captain of a neutral vessel informed the officers of the Cyane that one of the Paixham shells had exploded inside a house, and turned it inside out, and that so great was the force of the 32 pound shot, that one has gone through five house walls and buried itself in the sixth. As far as the captain could ascertain, six Mexicans were wounded, but none killed– though some neutral sailors reported that a number had been killed. On the morning of the 9th, the Cyane left, without any demonstration on the part of the enemy.

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer:

In the debate, a few days since, in the Senate, upon the bill to appropriate three millions of dollars to be used by the President of the United States in negotiating a peace with Mexico, Mr. Sevier, the chairman of the committee on Foreign Relations, said, in substance, that the people of this country would never consent to a peace without the cession by Mexico of the departments of California and New Mexico. This declaration is all the more important from the close personal and political relations of the distinguished speaker with the President of the United States, and his position at the head of the committee of Foreign Relations; which justify the inference that he knows and expresses the opinion of the Executive department of our Government.

The President, in his Message at the commencement of the Session, declared that the acquisition of Mexican territory by conquest was not our object. There is certainly some difficulty in reconciling this declaration with that made by Mr. Sevier in the Senate. The only mode of doing so is to suppose that the purposes of the Executive have changed since the time when his message was written. If the purpose was not acquisition two months since, what is there that has since occurred to change it? Is it that the war has been protracted two months longer, although without active operation on either side? If this gives us a right to demand so large a portion of the territory of Mexico, to how much more shall we be entitled at the end of the year? Certainly the extreme southern boundary of Mexico will not satisfy this just and more reasonable demand of ours.

The alleged ground of war at the time of its commencement, and the only ground upon which the war was waged, was our right to the country between the Nueces and the Rio Grande. All that has since been said about Mexican spoliations upon the property of American citizens is an after–thought; and, if this latter case was a just one for the war, the right so to decide rested with the Congress of the United States, not the President. That body had for years refused to declare war against Mexico on this account, when Mexico refused to recognise the justice of the claims of our citizens, or even to promise indemnity. Treaties have since been made for the settlement of those claims, and the payments had been punctually made until Mexico was thrown into a state of disorder and temporary insolvency by one of those almost periodical revolutions which have so much afflicted and impoverished that country. Would it not have been harsh justice, (to say the least of it,) under such circumstances, and for this delay of a few months, resulting from absolute inability, to have resorted to war to enforce payment? If other motives had not existed, will it be pretended by any one that Congress would have resorted to war on account of the claims of our citizens alone? If the purpose of our Government be that which was stated by Mr. Sevier, it is difficult to see any necessity for the appropriation asked for. If we have a perfect right to California and New Mexico, why should we pay for it? If we have no such right, shall we continue the war to force Mexico to sell those departments? The assertion of such a principle as that a war for such a purpose would be legitimate or justifiable, would certainly be an interpolation in the code of international law. Is this the century or is our the nation in which and by which such a principle is for the first time to be asserted?

If we are to disregard all higher and more honorable considerations, it becomes us to calculate at least the cost of such a conquest– its cost in money and in blood, as well as all the other consequences which will result from it. We have no right to suppose that this will be the last in which we shall be engaged; and, if ever involved in another, there is much reason to fear that it will be with more than one of the most powerful nations of the earth. In such an event, would it not be well for us to have a conterminous Republic both powerful and friendly to us? It has been truly said that, as our sole enemy, Mexico is not formidable. But, as an ally of a powerful European nation, the case would be very different. She would furnish a border of great extent from which to invade the weakest and most sparsely populated of our States– soldiers to any extent, and supplies to a very great extent. It is not Mexico alone, however, which will be alienated from us by a protracted war of spoliation and dismemberment, but all the South American States. They are all peopled by the same race. They all offer to our cupidity the same broad and fertile plains and rich mines, and the same great temptation of inability to defend them. They will all think, and certainly not without reason, that the only boon which will be offered to them will be that of the giant– that of being the last devoured.

But what will the World say of this now openly–confessed war of conquest– a war to force a feeble Sister Republic to sell us a portion of her territory, or to dismember that Republic on the ground of indemnity for the expenses of that war? Surely no such right will be conceded to us unless we are clearly in the right and Mexico as clearly in the wrong in the origin of the war.

Is such the opinion of the world? I do not believe that out of the United States that opinion is held by a single enlightened and impartial man. Many such in our own country, I know, think the war a just war; but such is not the opinion of the world; and we cannot hope to change that opinion by a hundred battles and a hundred victories. On the contrary, the more signal those victories, the stronger and more general will be the sympathy for our more feeble adversaries. Let it not be said that we are indifferent to the undivided opinion of all Christendom. It is true of nations, as of individuals, that the most priceless jewel “is spotless reputation. It is no empty bauble, but is in itself power.”

If we disregard all considerations of this character, is it really practicable to humble Mexico to such an extent as to bring her to these terms? I confess that I do not think so. I am sure that it cannot be done but at a cost in money infinitely transcending the value of the acquisition; to say nothing of the sacrifice of human life, of thousands and tens of thousands of American lives, and the making of an equal number of widows and orphans; to say nothing of the horrible consequences of such a war to our enemies; for, to be successful, it must be conducted in a manner and carried to extremities at which the heart sickens and humanity recoils. Let us at least calmly and dispassionately ask ourselves, first of all, Is it just, is it right, is it honorable? What, after all, is the right of conquest, if any such right exists, but the right of the strongest? It is the right of the bandit. He is stronger and better armed than the traveller, and he takes his purse and keeps it.

Is there any instance in all history of a nation, and a nation thoroughly united as Mexico, with a population of eight millions, and abundantly supplied with all the munitions of war, having been conquered? Why should we expect such a result? Is our enemy the least warlike of nations? Are her people less proud, less pertinacious, less revengeful than others? No; but precisely the reverse— the descendants of the heroes of Saguntum, Numantia, and Saragossa. It is remarked by Napier, in his history of the Peninsular War, that “no country in Europe is so easy to overrun as Spain— none so difficult to retain.” The ultimate fate of the legions of Bonaparte confirms this truth. Where else, in history, do we find a war to have continued for eight hundred years, as did that between the Goths and the Moors? Let us not forget that it is the Spanish race, brave, proud, ardent, melancholy, which is thus to be subdued to our purposes— to be forced to surrender to another race a country discovered and conquered by their arms, and which contains a thousand memorials of their heroic valor and constancy. The constitution of Mexico contains a clause which forbids, under any pretext whatever, the alienation of any portion of the national domain. Not satisfied with this, the same thing forms a part of the oath of office. This difficulty would of itself seem insuperable. But there is another even stronger in the undivided public opinion of Mexico. What Administration of that Government will dare to defy this public opinion, or could successfully combat it?

Is it not known to all that they are not few nor undistinguished amongst ourselves who think the war not only inexpedient, but unjust, yet have not hitherto ventured to breast the torrent of public opinion which they suppose to exist in favor of the war? I do not believe that such is the public opinion of this country. Yet that is the impression which has gone forth, and it has contracted the action of more than one of our public men. Will this influence be less in Mexico, where the opinion is universal that the war is flagrantly and criminally unjust on our part? What ground, then, have we to hope for a speedy peace? None, certainly, unless from the extremity of defencelessness and suffering to which we shall reduce our enemy. How is this to be accomplished? The answer usually of men is, “By a vigorous prosecution of the war.” If any thing is meant by this, it is by advancing to the city of Mexico. We have already penetrated far into the interior of the Mexican Republic. What evil have we thereby inflicted upon her, to say nothing of that extremity of suffering which is to reduce her to sue for peace? The inhabitants of the towns which we have taken are just as secure in their persons and property— as free from molestation in all pursuits and occupations— as they were before the war commenced; and the profits of their occupations greatly increased by the presence of a large additional population, ready and able to pay for all their products, and doing so at extraordinary prices. Will it be otherwise when we advance to the city of Mexico? That is only one of their cities— the principal one, it is true, but not the only one. Are we to march to the city of Mexico, and then march back? How long must our army remain there? It is very clear that to abandon the place as soon as taken would accomplish nothing, but, on the contrary, would protract the war. How long must our army remain there, and how long will it be possible for us— yes, I say possible— to provision the army? To do so for a month will involve a cost little dreamed of by most persons. Of what number must that army consist? Garrisons must be left at Tampico, at Vera Cruz, Jalapa, and Perote, of two thousand men at each place. How many at Puebla— a city of ninety thousand inhabitants, and in the centre of the most dense and warlike population of Mexico— in the neighborhood of the renowned and warlike Tlascalans? I should say that the garrison at Puebla should not be less that six or eight thousand men. The garrisons at Tampico and Vera Cruz will have to be reinforced, or rather renewed, every three months, from the ravages of more than one pestilential disease in those modern Golgothas. If any resistance is offered to the progress of our army, who can say how many men we shall lose in the thousand natural and artificial defiles which the route presents, with more than one walled town to be stormed, and, added to these, the ravages of pestilence. If this enterprise is attempted with fifty thousand men, with a reasonable estimate of loss of life from thousands and tens of thousands of American lives, and the making of an equal number of widows and orphans; to say nothing of the horrible consequences of such a war to our enemies; for, to be successful, it must be conducted in a manner and carried to extremities at which the heart sickens and humanity recoils. Let us at least calmly and dispassionately ask ourselves, first of all, Is it just, is it right, is it honorable? What, after all, is the right of conquest, if any such right exists, but the right of the strongest? It is the right of the bandit. He is stronger and better armed than the traveller, and he takes his purse and keeps it.

I do not believe that, when all the charges of the war, up to this time, come to be settled, in the shape of bounty, land, pensions, losses of property, and the thousand after–claps of a war, that it will be found to be short of sixty or seventy millions. The late Florida war cost us forty–two millions, with never more than one–fifth of the Army now in Mexico, nor one–tenth of that which it is proposed to send there; and supplied, too, at so much less cost. Could not this money be better spent? It would cobweb our whole country with the ravages of pestilence. If this enterprise is attempted with fifty thousand men, with a reasonable estimate of loss of life from thousands and tens of thousands of American lives, and the making of an equal number of widows and orphans; to say nothing of the horrible consequences of such a war to our enemies; for, to be successful, it must be conducted in a manner and carried to extremities at which the heart sickens and humanity recoils. Let us at least calmly and dispassionately ask ourselves, first of all, Is it just, is it right, is it honorable? What, after all, is the right of conquest, if any such right exists, but the right of the strongest? It is the right of the bandit. He is stronger and better armed than the traveller, and he takes his purse and keeps it.
I could extend this article, already too long, by many proofs of the power of the Mexicans to submit to privations, and their readiness to do so. Let one suffice: A most terrific civil war has for many years been raging in Sonora—a State bordering on the Pacific ocean. Houses burnt to ashes, flocks exterminated, and one-third of their men butchered. You will scarcely go five miles without seeing human carcasses hanging from the limbs of trees, for "no quarter" has been the law of that war. Yet it never entered into the minds of these fierce and unappeasable combatants to make peace until this war with us commenced. Can we reduce all Mexico to such an extremity as this? Would we do so if we could? Have we any reason to expect peace from any thing short of it? We may destroy her commerce, it is true. But she has very little of it, and that little not indispensable. Besides all the grains, Mexico supplies itself with salt, sugar, coffee cotton—in short, with every thing that is necessary to man, and then there is the frontier with Guatemala, through which she may supply herself, at very little greater cost, and in spite of us. We may also cut off the revenues from her custom houses. But of those revenues all is hypothecated but about ten percent for the payment of the interest of her public debt. The payment of that interest is now suspended, which relieves the Government much more than the deprivation of ten percent of those customs embarrasses it. Besides this, less than one-twentieth of the income of Mexico is derived from foreign commerce; and, therefore, the same income which would pay for foreign merchandise, and duties upon it, is still in the country, and subject to other and not less efficacious forms of taxation.

Santa Anna is now at San Luis Potosi with not less than twenty five thousand men. If we leave garrisons of not more then 5,000 men at Vera Cruz and Tampico, he can march his whole force upon either of them in two weeks. In the summer, when our army is weakened by the ravages of disease, dejected and broken—spirited by hourly burials of their comrades, who will say with certainty that events will not occur which will shroud our whole land in mourning?

I have thrown together these suggestions, which are the results of much reflection and some personal knowledge of the facts upon which they are based. No evil, certainly, can result from a fair presentation of the difficulties which lie before us. It is better that those difficulties should even be exaggerated that that they should be over looked or underrated.

Am I asked, is the war then interminable? I confess, with such demands on our part as have been indicated, I can see little prospect of its conclusion. With wise and firm men at the head of affairs in Mexico, it seems to me clear that she may protract it until we shall not be able to prosecute it further. Of such men such a crisis as is the present in Mexico has, in all times and countries, been prolific. Sooner or later, we shall be forced to cease active operations. We can never do so more gracefully or advantageously than now. The country between the Nueces and the Rio Grande was the professed object of war. We have undisputed possession of that; and justice and policy both dictate that we should press a gallant but feeble and beaten enemy no further. Let us say how much of the territory now in our possession we intend to retain, and let us be generous and forbearing in fixing the time: and I confess that, if we could even get it for nothing, as a matter of national honor I would prefer to pay for all of it which we have no better title than the right of conquest. If Mexico would then not make peace— as probably for a time she would not— active operations would cease, even to the extent of border forays, if we kept up a line of posts on the frontier: and, if peace was not restored, all the expense of the war would thus be avoided, and all the waste of human life and the unnumbered and indescribable calamities which always follow in its train.

Such is the advice of the gallant and good Taylor, as wise in council and as humane and merciful after victory, as he is skillful and heroic in the conflict on battle. T.

---

RW47v24i12p2c6, February 9, 1847, From the Army.

[From the Charleston Mercury, Feb'y 6]

Dr. Holland, of the Army, bearer of despatches from the seat of war in Mexico to the General Government, left in the steamer yesterday afternoon for Washington.

We are indebted to his very polite attention for the following items of intelligence.

Dr. H. left Gen. Wool’s camp on the 8th ult. The camp is situated nine miles beyond Saltillo in a mountain pass called Encantrata. Col. Harney is posted with his dragoons, eleven miles beyond, on another mountain pass on the St. Louis road called Augua Nueva. Col. Yell of Arkansas, with his mounted men stationed at Pathos, in order to keep open the channel of communication with Parras, which is the great granary of Mexico.

Previous to the departure of our Infantry, arrangements had been made for a six months supply of grain for the forces.

The report of Santa Anna’s advance was contradicted at the time of his departure.

Gen. Wool’s army had never been beset by straggling parties of Mexicans, as had been reported, though there had been several false alarms.

Enough was known to justify the belief that the Mexican Congress were strongly disposed to peace.

[MPR]
Mr. Sevier, the Chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations in the Senate, expresses confidently the opinion, founded upon the correspondence between the President and certain persons in Mexico, exhibited to him by the former, that peace may be speedily concluded between Mexico and the United States, if Congress shall place in the hands of the Executive the sum of three millions of dollars, for which it asks. Yet, in the midst of these pacific indications from the official organ of communication between the President and the Senate, the most clamorous appeals are made, by the "Union," to Congress, to supply the President with men and money, in order to ensure a vigorous prosecution of the war! What is the need of this "fork–tongued talk," as the Indians would call it? Why amuse the country with the hope of a speedy peace, if no such hope can be seriously indulged? And if there be good reason to anticipate its speedy restoration, where is the need of such expensive and costly military and naval armaments? For one, we place no reliance on the opinion, founded upon a correspondence with Mexicans, who are evidently traitors to their own country, and cannot be expected to be faithful to their present employers, that peace can be bought for three millions of dollars, coupled with the cession to the United States of New Mexico and Upper California. And in this want of confidence we are justified, by the contents of a letter which we have recently seen from Genl. Scott, written to a friend-- and which we may, we presume, without impropriety, be permitted to say, holds out no reason to hope for the return of peace before, at least, another decisive blow, the echo of which we may soon hear, shall have been struck.

Mr. Wentworth of Illinois and Mr. Johnson of Tennessee-- heretofore regarded as wheel–horses in the Democratic team-- declare their unalterable purpose to oppose a duty upon tea and coffee, which they say has always been deemed undemocratic since Mr. Clay recommended it in 1841. Mr. Polk and Secretary Walker, they declare, were especially opposed to this tax, and they therefore rather accuse those two gentlemen of deserting the democratic ranks by raking up a Whig "measure," in order to carry out a Democratic "principle"-- a circumstance, by the way, of no rare occurrence. On the other hand, Mr. Wick of Indiana, who boldly affirms that he knows of but one standard of Democracy, (so far as measures are concerned,) and that is obedience to "Executive recommendations," (Wick is honest, at least,) goes for the tea and coffee tax, and thinks Mr. Wentworth but "leetle better than a Whig" for daring to be consistent with himself, in opposing it instead of yielding, as Wick thinks all true Democrats ought to do, to Executive dictation. The Union goes a step further. It thinks that although it may be federalism to levy a tax on tea and coffee in time of peace, it is genuine democracy to do so in time of war-- and regards those, who, like Messrs. Wentworth and Johnson, cannot see the distinction, as rather more of a "demagogue" than a "statesman." In this state of most admired disorder, we shall be very much obliged to the gentleman who are about to unfurl the flag in Virginia, if they will tell us what is Democracy?

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 4th inst. says: "We have seen letters of the 7th of January, from the city of Mexico, and from parties having access to high sources of information, which express, in decided terms, a belief that the difference between the two nations will very speedily be amicably and honorably settled." So mote it be!

The gentleman has defined his position on the Mexican War-- and it will be seen that he fully endorses Gen. Taylor's views-- that he is conservative and anti–Administration. Indeed, in the present aspect of the question, what Southern man can occupy any other ground?

We have received the following letter from our correspondent.

Brazos Santiago, Jan. 29.

Great activity prevails here night and day, in sending off supplies for the Army above, as also in loading and preparing transports for the operations below.

Gen. Worth, with his Division, arrived at the mouth of the river on the 23d, from Saltillo. The next day, he removed his encampment up to the field of Palo Alto, where they will remain until they embark for below. He rode over, accompanied by his suite, to the Island... to pay his respects to Gen. Scott, shortly after his arrival.

We have had a succession of fresh gales here for the last ten days past, preventing the lighters and boats from being employed to as great an advantage as the wants of the service required. The elements favor the Mexicans greatly, inasmuch as it is found utterly impossible to throw forward supplies and operate with the dispatch that would otherwise be done.

A large party of Mexicans followed up the rear of Gen. Worth’s command, doubtless to observe his movements. Several persons have been murdered recently on the road leading from Camargo to Monterey. Gen. Scott is here arranging and organizing an expedition, the result of which will bring additional laurels to his already honorable fame.

Col. Harney is again in limbo. It appears he was ordered to proceed to Monterey with four companies, whilst Maj. Torrens of the regiment was ordered to take command of the remaining six companies and march for the mouth of the river to join Worth’s division. Col. Harney said he was not to be disagreed, though they might arrest him, and, he accordingly marched with the largest portion of his regiment.

A Court Martial is ordered to convene for the trial of Col. Harney, on the 30th inst. It is probable that a few other officers will be brought before it.

It is generally believed that Col. Harney will plead guilty of the charge, and leave it with the court to decide the offence. None has more character and standing to test the principle than himself.

 Movement of Troops.– Gen. Worth’s division arrived here on Friday morning last, on its way to Brasos. It is composed of the 4th Infantry, under Col. Whistler; 5th Infantry, Maj. Martin Scott; 8th Infantry, Maj. Wright; 2d Dragoons, Col. Harney; Col. Child’s Artillery Battalion; Lt. Col. Duncan’s Flying Artillery; with Lt. P. Kearney’s company of Dragoons, and Capt. Blanchard’s company of Louisiana Volunteers– the latter acting with the 5th Infantry.

The Division left Saltillo, under orders from the Commander-in-Chief, and will probably soon arrive at the theatre of active operations in the vicinity of Vera Cruz. The Dragoons, with Duncan’s and Taylor’s batteries were encamped at this place, from Thursday until Saturday, having arrived one day previous to the infantry regiments, which passed down on steamboats; but yesterday the dragoons were crossing the river, on their way to camp.

Gen. Worth passed down on the Corvette, without making a passing visit. The boat, however, stopped a short time at our landing, during which a salute was fired, and many persons from the town visited the boat, anxious to pay their respects to the hero of Monterey.

The whole command appear to be in fine health and spirits, and the horses in excellent condition– in fact, a more hardy, or efficient body of men than this command, cannot be produced in any country, and we look forward with much interest to their future operations, being satisfied that they “go where glory waits them.”

Gen. Butler was at Saltillo on the 17th, when Worth’s Division left, but it was understood that he would fall back on Monterey with his troops. Gen. Wool was still at Parras, but it is said that he will also march for Monterey– thus abandoning Saltillo, Parras, and the Rinconada Pass to the possession of the enemy. This step is supposed to be taken on account of the indefensible state of those places with their diminished forces. The severity of the climate and the scarcity of wood, forage, &c., combine to render them unpleasant quarters for this season of the year.

Gen. Taylor has established his head quarters at Monterey, and the place is being put in such a state of defence that all the troops of Mexico, with Santa Anna at their head, will not be able to disturb him. We suppose that Gen. Taylor will be left in command of all the forces above, while the invading army of Gen. Scott, consisting of nearly all the regulars now in Mexico, some seven thousand strong, and nearly twice that number of volunteers, will act in conjunction with the Navy in attacking Vera Cruz.

There are two companies of Dragoons with Gen. Taylor, Capt. May’s and Capt. Graham’s; Capt. Washington and Webster’s batteries are at Saltillo, and one company of Artillery at Camargo, which comprises nearly all the regulars above. At Camargo are the Second Ohio Volunteers, and a few others are stationed at Punta Agunda and Cerralvo, comprising nearly all the force between this and Monterey.

The Ohioans are under orders for Tampico, leaving the Third Indiana Regiment at this place, with a company or two of regulars in Fort Brown.

[MPR]
Head Quarters U.S. Army of Invasion,
Cuidad, Victoria, Jan. 13th, 1847.

Gentlemen:— To-morrow morning the First Division [Gen. Twigg’s command.] will take up the line of march for Tampico, which, considering the season, looks more to me like carrying the war in Africa, than any move that has been made lately. Many feared that from the lateness of the season, we would again move in the direction of Monterey, but I believe the order communicating the intelligence of an advance in the direction of the coast, has given universal satisfaction, and for then once left the grumblers without ought to complain of.

On the 11th, a general Court Martial was convened, and the charges and specifications preferred against Bt. Second Lieut. Sturges, of the dragoons, [mentioned in my last as having lost his rear guard in the mountain,] Lieut. Col. May, was laid before it. As the facts set forth by witnesses, differ some from those I sent you, I will now endeavor to narrate, as near as possible, what Col. May give in as evidence on the occasion.

He said he had been ordered by the Commander–on–Chief to take a squadron of dragoons and protect Capt. Menard, a topographical engineer, in a reconnaissance. He left Monte Morales on the 25th of Dec., and reached Labador the next evening, where he remained during that night. The next morning the command halted for some time to shoe horses, but the Mexicans threw so many obstacles in their way that it was impossible to accomplish their object. This and other indications induced him to believe that he should meet the enemy before getting out of the mountain passes. After leaving Labador, and proceeding 4 miles in the direction of San Pedro, a large number of fresh horse tracks were discovered in the road, and a few minutes after, a Mexican was seen on the mountain side watching their movements. Him they took for a spy, and not long after they observed another. At sunset they arrived and remained during the night at San Pedro. On the 29th, they left San Pedro, and in a short time, entered the pass of Santa Rosa, leaving a Sergeant and 10 men to follow 200 yards after them, and to protect the pack mules. After a march of 7 or 8 miles the pass was found to be a succession of defiles, and believing still that they should be attacked, he ordered Lieut. Sturges, through the Adjutant, to stop and take command of the rear guard when it came up. After giving this order, the command marched 4 or 5 miles, the trail become so rugged that it was impossible to ride along, and the men dismounted and led their horses. As they were passing the most difficult defile yet encountered, and the greater part of the command had succeeded in getting through it, the enemy made an attack upon them. He was in the advance and the first he heard of it, “was an explosion like that of a mine.” The bugle was then sounded from the squadron, and answered by that of the rear guard, whilst his bugler sounded the ‘assembly.’ He supposed he was 150 yards from the mouth of the defile, and immediately hurried back to it and urged the men through it. He called to Lieut. Sturges “where is your guard,” and received for an answer, “here, sir.” He then ordered Lieut. S. to mount and get them out of the defile as quick as possible. He then rode up to where I was, and not seeing his guard, asked him where the packs were, “in there,” pointing to the defile, was the answer. “Is it possible, sir, that you have abandoned your packs?” said May, and finding that the body of the rear guard was not with Lieut. S. he said, “rejoin your guard, immediately sir, recover the pack, protect and defend them, until I can come to you with assistance, and if possible urge them through the defile.” On again returning from the squadron, he met Lieut. S. a second time coming from the defile, and he said, “Col. I have been further than where I left my guard and cannot find them, shall I take some men from the squadron and return?” When they arrived once more at the defile, they found it impossible to pass it without great loss to the command, as the enemy were constantly throwing rocks from the right, and occasionally firing small arms from the left. It was necessary then to endeavor to turn the defile, which they ultimately did by sealing the rocks. After remaining near the defile for ten or fifteen minutes, and returning the fire of the enemy, he sent an order to Lieut. Campbell to bring 20 men to the defile on foot, and to hold it until they returned; they proceeded a mile and a half to the rear, in hopes of recovering the packs and rear guard, but could not find them, and returned to the command and resumed their march, not deeming it proper to remain longer in the pass.

Sergeant Beach, who commanded the rear guard, in his evidence, thus alludes to the attack on the rear guard. The attack commenced by throwing rocks from the high cliffs, the first of which fell between him and the man in his rear. It was very large, and the sergeant seeing it descending in the direction of his horse, urged him forward and escaped. These rocks breaking up as they fell, and the pieces flying amongst the horses frightened, jerked him down, and when he recovered himself and rose up, he saw the rear guard retreating, and the enemy on the cliffs directing the stones at them.

I think it a very curious piece of business, this court marshalling the Lieutenant for losing a command which he proved on his trial he never saw after being detailed or ordered to it. It is certain, however, that although the proceedings of the court have not been made public, yet that he will come off in flying colors. His defence was very good, and he has raised in the estimation of the officers rather than fallen. He was rather sarcastic, but considering the circumstances, I suppose you must excuse him for it.

The Corporal.

*The Lieutenant says the Col. May did not understand him correctly— that he said he had been further that “where the attack was”— and I think he is correct, as no evidence proves him ever to have seen the rear guard after he started for it, as the attack commenced before he had time to reach it. Sergeant Beach, who commanded the guard, never saw Lieut. Sturges after starting in the morning. [MPR]

RW47v24i13p1c6, February 12, 1847

[5 leagues on the road to Tampico.]

Santa Rosa, Jan. 14th, 1847.
This morning, shortly after sun–rise the first division, took up the line of march for Tampico, and after proceeding in that direction 14 or 15 miles encamped for the night at this place. A few hours after night an express reached us from Gen. Taylor, who remained behind this morning— ordering Bragg’s Battery, which has up to this time been acting with the First, to return to Victoria. Gen. Taylor received an express after we left from Gen. Scott, who was at Matamoros, but who will leave there in time to reach Tampico by the 1st of February. It is thought that by this movement Gen. Taylor will take all the mounted men— dragoons and Tennessee cavalry— and this Battery, and return to Monterey, for the purpose of commanding that wing of the army, whilst the other General will operate with this. The remainder of the troops at Victoria, and those now here will proceed to Tampico. Those who return would be of no benefit whatever to Gen. Scott, in reducing Vera Cruz. The guns of Bragg’s battery are small, and only calculated for quick manoeuvring.

With Gen. Scott at the head of affairs on the coast, and Old “Zack” in the very bowels of the land, I think the Mexicans will be put to their trumps to keep us from their capital. General Scott, no doubt, understands his position well, and his measures have been taken accordingly. I understand he has plans of the city of Vera Cruz ad Castle of San Juan D’Ulloa, drawn by an experienced officer, and with a well appointed army, which he will not move without, he will straighten affairs in that direction. In the meantime, Gen. Taylor’s operations above Saltillo will keep the enemy busy, and advantage Gen. S. by demonstrations in that quarter. I believe Gen. Taylor, since he cannot neigh alone, will be well pleased with this arrangement, as it will give him a chance to do something more alone, and you may be sure his exertion will be great, and if he is not reined in by the President, the idea of competing with Scott will induce him to strain every nerve.

Yesterday, in Victoria, Gen. Taylor received a voluntary visit, from a Mexican, who reported himself as being direct from San Luis de Potosi. The Mexican army he stated were almost in a state of mutiny, caused by the scarcity of provisions, and lack of clothing and money. Santa Anna had gone to the city of Mexico, on a political speculation, having been advised by special messenger that all was not going on right there for the interest of his party. The Mexican Congress he said, had a flare up after taking the vote on the peace propositions of our government— which were negatived by a majority of over a fourth— and many of the members were on the eve leaving for their homes, fearing an out–break in the City.

The Corporal.

We relinquish our editorial column this morning to the intelligent and able correspondent, to whom we are indebted for the subjoined highly interesting article. Its length, we hope, will not deter our readers from undertaking its perusal. No one, we are sure, who commences it, will lay down the paper without reading it to the end.

For the Whig.

The Mexican War has been attended with difficulties foreseen by very few at the onset. It was expected to be a San Jacinto fight, and the Mexico would sue humbly for peace. After the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, the war was supposed to many to be near its end. So little was known of the topography of Mexico, that we were promised an easy march to its capital; and “to revel in the Halls of Montezuma,” and “to conquer a peace,” were the watch words of the officials. It is proper that the People, who have had no will in its conception, should know something of its difficulties, that they may do justice to those who have involved us in them, and may appreciate aright the arduous service of our Army and Navy, upon whom the disposition has manifested itself in the Halls of Congress to cast the balance of its procrastination. It will, [...], soon be seen, that if the wise injunction, “with good advice, make war,” had been observed, we should not now be asking, why was this war begun? How is it to terminate?

It is proposed to enumerate briefly the difficulties of a war with Mexico— some of which have already been encountered, others are yet to be met. The chief obstacles in the prosecution of such a war arises from the immensity of the Mexican territory, and its conformation. Nature furnishes the most formidable bulwarks for its defence. Its coast upon the Gulf of Mexico has no harbors. From the Nueces to Tabasco river, (near 900 miles,) a vessel drawing over 9 feet water, can find no safe anchorage. The rivers which admit small vessels, have shifting bars, at all times dangerous, which can be crossed in good weather only. It is believed, that from Tabasco river to Cape Catoche, about 600 miles, there are only open roads, unless we may except the Lake of Terminos, which admits vessels of shallow draught. The formidable winds, known by the names of Los Nortes (the Northers), prevail on this coast from October to March. The Hornet sloop–pf–war was lost some years ago in one of these gales off the Bar of Tampico, where she was lying at anchor. The Somers is a later victim. The shores near the Rio Grande are strewed with wrecks of vessels and steamers stranded during the last few months. The Neptune perished on the Bar of Tampico, in her effort to regain the harbor she had just left. Numerous reefs beguile other victims of destruction. The bones of the Truxton lie on one of them. These are the perils besetting our Navy. Thence have resulted the losses we have sustained, and the abortive attempts to cross the bar of Alvarado river. Our gallant and skilful seamen cannot conquer nature. They have been censured most unjustly for the little which they have done. This would not be, if the public were well informed of the obstacles encountered by them. From April to October, a pestilential plague pervades the greater part of this extensive coast. “The port of Vera Cruz is regarded as the principle seat to the yellow fever (vomito prieto orrenego.) Thousands of Europeans residing on the coasts of Mexico during the warm season, fall victims to this cruel epidemic. Vessels prefer arriving at Vera Cruz during the winter, whilst the tempestuous Northers (los nortes) rage, rather than being exposed, during the summer, to the loss of the larger part of their crew from the effects of the vomito,” &c. “The unhealthiness of the coasts, which restrains the trade, facilitates, moreover, the military defence of the country against invasion from an European enemy.” This is the testimony of Humboldt, who furnishes much valuable information concerning this disease. It has prevailed at Tampico, Alvarado, and other ports, with like mortality as at Vera Cruz; but, like New Orleans, they escape its infliction some years, with the exception of Vera Cruz, where it is an annual scourge, as constant and as regular as its rainy season.
We will now advert to the difficulties encountered by our Army—particularly that division of it commanded by General Taylor. The war began with the invasion of Mexico on its Northern frontier. Our want of preparation (arising, doubtless, from a belief that the internal dissensions of the country, or its want of courage, or the fear of waging with it more powerful antagonist a disastrous war, would restrain Mexican hostility,) prevented our gallant soldiers from reaping the advantages won on the hard fought fields of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. The enemy abandoned Matamoros at their leisure, retiring unmolested, because our General had not a sufficiency of troops, munitions, provisions, or means of transportation, to pursue the retreating enemy, who retired to Monterey, three hundred miles distant from Matamoros. It would seem an easy matter to march an army from Fredericksburg, in Virginia, to the city of New York, thro' a thickly settled country, with good roads and waggon transportation. But our General had a harder task than this. He must be reinforced with troops and supplied with munitions of war and provisions from New Orleans—a distance of a thousand miles.

Steamboats of shallow draught, suitable for navigating the Rio Grande, must be procured. The rainy season had then set in, and the shores of that river were inundated—even the encampments were overflowed—and the roads (if they merited this name) were impassable. Three or four months were occupied in overcoming these obstacles. Gen. Taylor was at length enabled to advance with a portion of his force to Monterey, and in September, won that important city from the enemy, after a struggle, in which our arms reaped fresh glory. For a victory such as this, the Romans would have granted a triumph to the General, and voted mural crowns to all engaged in such a gallant fight. "That they [the Mexicans] should have surrendered a place nearly as strong as Quebec, well fortified under the direction of skillful engineers—their works garnished with forty—two pieces of artillery, abundantly supplied with ammunition, garrisoned by 7000 regulars and 2000 irregular troops in addition to some thousand citizens capable of [and no doubt actually] bearing arms, and aiding in its defence—to an opposing force of half their number, scantily supplied with provisions, and with a light train of artillery— is among the unaccountable occurrences of the times." The skill and courage of our officers and men overcame these obstacles. The public will award to the gallant General and his troops the merit they deserve for this "unaccountable occurrence," notwithstanding the direct censure inflicted by the President upon General Taylor for granting liberal terms of capitulation to the Mexican troops—followed by the order to terminate the armistice, which would have been terminated in a few days by its own limitation, and the more recent vote of the House of Representatives Saltillio, about 70 miles from Monterey, is also in our possession. Beyond this point, Gen. Taylor regards it next to impracticable to advance. It is 300 miles from thence to San Luis Potosi—near 600 to the city of Mexico—rather a long march by this route to attain the promised reward of "revealing in the Halls of Montezuma." It would be needless to enumerate other difficulties in the prosecution of the war through the Northern States of Mexico.

Let us now view them from Tampico. The distance thence to San Luis Potosi is about 150 miles. If it were even desirable to reach the enemy at that point, it is wholly impracticable, as this route admits the transportation of nothing but what can be carried on the backs of mules. If artillery could be dispensed with, how many of these would be required to convey the munitions, provisions, &c. of the 20,000 men, who, say Gen. Taylor, "would be necessary to insure success, if we move on that place?" Where can they be procured? From Tampico to the city of Mexico is nearly 300 miles, which can be travelled by mules only, and is, if possible, more impracticable than the route to San Luis. It traverses a desolate, thinly settled country, and presents obstacles so numerous that the diligent traveller, with ordinary luggage, can average only three miles an hour. There is an abundance of water after the first day's journey from Tampico Viejo, where, for 25 miles, none is to be procured, and this scarcely potable. But an army would be compelled to carry its provisions, for nothing could be obtained except plantains and sugar cane, which are sometimes met with. It is hard to convey a just idea of the difficulties of this route. One portion of it leads, for 25 or 30 miles, along the rugged bed of a stream, with high mountains on either hand, amidst a most luxuriant tropical growth, the path crossing the stream, it is said, one hundred and twenty times. At another point, the traveller sleeps in a town the elevation of which gives it a temperature so cold as to require fire;—he then descends to the tierra caliente (the hot country)—crosses a mountain stream—ascends again to a considerable height— and a second time descends to the warm country, and takes his dinner surrounded by tropical fruits. He then ascends to a height exceeding 1500 feet by a steep and rugged path, and sleeps enveloped in his blanket. Here a small body of troops might prevent the advance of thousands. In view of these insurmountable obstacles, Tampico, as a military station, is of no value whatever. To the Navy, it affords a harbor for small steamers and vessels of light draught.

Let us now suppose Vera Cruz to be in our possession. The town may readily be carried by storm. After it is acquired, of what value is it to us? The Castle might, in course of time, be starved out, and forced to surrender. If it be well supplied with provisions, the sickly season may arrive before this stock be exhausted, and out troops would fall victims to an enemy more fat than the Mexicans. The town does not (as has been stated in some newspapers) command the Castle, and the inconsiderable heights in the rear are shifting sand--the latter, which are always shifting, offer for strong resistance by the Mexicans, who would, doubtless, abandon San Luis Potosi for the defence of their capital, and Tampico, is 4334 feet above the sea. Its climate is delightful—like that, probably, of Monterey. The contiguous slopes seem very fertile, and abound in tropical fruits. Our gallant army might readily gain this place, and retain it at pleasure. Nor would it be difficult to maintain its communications with Vera Cruz, though at hazard of great loss by disease during 7 or 8 months of the year. Hence to Mexico, many points offer for strong resistance by the Mexicans, who would, doubtless, abandon San Luis Potosi for the defence of their capital, and take advantage of every mountain pass. From Jalapa, the plains of Perote, of Puebla, and of Mexico must be crossed. Each is more impassable. Three or four months were occupied in overcoming these obstacles. One hundred and sixty miles from Vera Cruz, is Puebla, a large, well built city, with a population of about 50,000 or 60,000. Its elevation is 7181 feet above the sea. Portions of the plain produce excellent wheat; but like the preceding plain of Perote, it is generally sterile where facilities for irrigating it at pleasure do not exist. Fifty miles onward, from the lofty heights which must now be reached, with mountains of eternal snow near at hand, the eye ranges over the plain of Mexico to the city at its farther edge, 3000 feet below.
A Complimentary Supper was given to Col. Jno. F. Hamtramck, of the Virginia Volunteers, by his neighbors and friends in Charlestown, Jefferson county, on the 30th ult.

[MPR]

RW47v24i13p2c2, February 12, 1847

A Complimentary Supper was given to Col. Jno. F. Hamtramck, of the Virginia Volunteers, by his neighbors and friends in Charlestown, Jefferson county, on the 30th ult.

[MPR]
The Boston Whig of the 7th inst. informs us that Com. Kearney was in that city negotiating for the purpose of two schooners now running as packets. Two others have been bought in New York, and two more are to be added, each of which is to be armed with one of Alger’s new guns, of the heaviest calibre.

Col. Whistler, of the U.S. Army, met with a severe accident while leaving a boat at the mouth of the Rio Grande, his arm having been broken.

It is rumored that Com. Warrington is to take command of the Gulf Squadron, which is to co-operate with the army in the attack on the Vera Cruz and the Castle of St. Juan de Uloa.

Washington, Feb. 9, 1847.

The Senate was the great attraction to-day. After some unimportant business, the special order came up in the shape of the “Three Million Bill.” Mr. Calhoun having the floor, made a great speech on the War. He was in favor of withdrawing the troops from Mexico, to this side of the Rio del Norte. He said that five Regiments and a few small vessels could protect the whole line of boundary which he advocated, which was, to adopt the Rio Grande from its source to the Pass del Norte, thence West to the Pacific, which would give us Upper California. He deprecated the idea of passing any “Wilmot provisos,” and advocated a moderate course of policy, which would make the North refrain from urging its Anti-Slavery measures, while it would secure to the South all that it could reasonably expect. But I do not intend to make a report of his speech. I hope you will find room for it in full. It was listened to attentively by a crowded Senate, and fashionably attended galleries. It was one of his greatest efforts, and will be eagerly and attentively read by the great mass of people. It was clearly anti-Polk in all its positions.

In the House, a movement was made to expel the Reporters of the Washington Union, for the report in the House of Saturday’s proceedings. As a committee has been appointed to consider this subject, the motion was rejected by a very large majority.

The Three Million Bill was then taken up, and speeches were made by several members. Mr. Rathbun and other Locofocons made strong speeches against Slavery. Mr. Dixon of Connecticut made a very able speech against the Three Million Bill. It is supposed that this bill will pass the House, but fail in the Senate.

An important Bill was introduced to the notice of the House of Representatives to-day. It was moved by Mr. Washington Hunt of New York. It is entitled “A Bill for the Relief of Ireland.” It appropriated half a million of dollars to make purchases of flour and provisions to be sent to Ireland. I believe Mr. Webster and Mr. Calhoun are in favor of the measure. I think it will pass Congress without any opposition of much account.

We had a great meeting to-night, in Odd Fellows’ Saloon. The Vice President of the United States presided among the Vice Presidents–a member of Congress from every State and Territory in the United States–were Hon. Messrs. John C. Calhoun of South Carolina, J.J. Crittenden of Kentucky, J.M. Clayton of Delaware, D.R. Atkinson of Missouri, &c. Mr. Webster drew up the resolutions with his own pen, and made some remarks in introducing them to the meeting. Rev. Orville Dewey, D.D. read a very eloquent address to the people of the United States. Speeches were also made by Mr. Maclay of New York, Mr. Owen of Indiana, and Mr. Crittenden of Kentucky. Mr. Hannegan of Indiana and Mr. Corwin of Ohio were expected to address the meeting, but were prevented by sickness from attending.

Committees were appointed to receive subscriptions to transmit to Ireland the proceeds. The cities of New Orleans, Charleston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston were made general depots for the reception of contributions to be forwarded to Ireland. The meeting was attended by large numbers of ladies, and by a crowd of gentlemen. The resolutions submitted by Mr. Webster, and the address by Dr. Dewey were received with acclamation. The remarks of Mr. Crittenden were received with great applause. I shall probably send you a fuller account in my next letter.
The New Orleans Bulletin places little reliance in the reported assassination of Santa Anna. It is improbable for every reason, that paper thinks, and particularly for the one assigned for the act on the part of the soldiers.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun (Locofoco) makes a revelation—which is "important, if true." He says: "After the close of the present session of Congress, President Polk may himself take a trip to Mexico, with Col. Benton, Gen. Cass and Mr. Crittenden as his staff, and if an opportunity should offer, as Commissioners." Not very probable.

A letter from the Camp on the Rio Grande, of the 27th ult. states that "Gen. Worth is confined to his bed, and is quite ill. He looks pale and thin, but issues his orders as minutely and as regularly as when he was able to sit his horse." Fears are expressed that he will have to suffer much before he can walk. His illness is ascribed to the effect of wounds received during the war of 1812, which have been rendered acutely painful by recent exposure and active exercise.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Feb. 3.

By the arrival yesterday of the schooner Mitis, Capt. Thompson, from Anton Lizardo, we have late intelligence of a very exciting nature from Mexico. We have a letter from our attentive correspondent, dated on the 20th ult., containing news of a most startling nature, as well as files of Vera Cruz papers up to the latest date received. The news of the death of Santa Anna, at the hands of his soldiers, needs confirmation; but that there is and has been great excitement against him there can be no doubt.

We see no account, in our files, of the Mexican Congress having touched the matter of a peace with the United States in any way. In all debates, on the contrary, the most hostile feeling appears to have been exhibited.

Santa Anna, in answer to the committee who proceeded to San Luis to congratulate him on his election to the Presidency, said that he had resources sufficient, out of his private means, to support the war for six months, and dismissed his audience highly gratified with the information.

The Mexican Government has raised La Vega from the rank of Colonel with the title of General, to that of Brigadier General, in recompense for his bravery in the action of Resaca de la Palma. A motion has also been made in Congress, by Senor Godoy, which was carried, to present Gen. La Vega with a gold medal bearing the following inscription: on one side, "The National Representation of 1846;" on the reverse, "To Gen. La Vega for his conduct at the Resaca de Guerrero."

By the way of San Luis we have the Mexican accounts, undoubtedly, of the recent attack upon the rear guard of Col. May, in the mountain pass between Monte Morelos and Linares. In a communication of Santa Anna to the Secretary War, he says that he has received the following dispatch from Don Francisco Paula de Morelos, Governor of New Leon, under date of the 28th December, 1846. We copy it entire:

"In my official communication of yesterday I informed your Excellency that one hundred and seven Americans had proceeded through the defiles of Morelos, and occupied Galeana on the 27th. I have now to inform your Excellency, that at 8 o'clock on the morning of the following day they resumed their march in the direction of Linares, through the defile of Santa Rosa. The inhabitants of San Pedro, however, irritated, at the boldness of the invaders, prepared to attack them on the march at one of those points which I am informed are calculated to repel, with success, any enemy. Accordingly, they attacked them today, at 11 o’clock, A.M., a short distance from the village of San Pedro, having only a force of 25 men and boys. With hardly any arms but stones they succeeded in destroying the whole party, as I am informed. I have not yet received full particulars, but 11 of the enemy, who retreated towards the town, were apprehended by inhabitants, and these I forward, under proper guard, to headquarters."

One of the writers at San Luis describes a general review of the troops at that city on the 2d ult. He says: “they were well armed, equipped and uniformed, it was a pleasure to gaze upon them, and they appeared as though it were impossible to vanquish them.: It can be done, however.

---

U.S. Squadron, Anton Lizardo, Jan. 20.

There is a report at Vera Cruz that the opposition of Santa Anna to the recent decree of Congress, for the sale of church property, has provoked the vengeance of the soldiers, and that he has been shot. I have heard none of the circumstances attending this alleged outbreak, which of course requires confirmation to be implicitly relied upon. There are many circumstances, however, which render it quite likely that such has been the fate of Santa Anna.

Congress, after a long and stormy session on the 9th inst., approved the first section of a bill which had been introduced on the 7th authorizing the Government to raise $15,000,000 by the hypothecation or sale of certain goods of the church. This project was violently opposed in Congress and out of Congress, and was represented to be nothing less than a scheme to close the churches, suspend divine worship, and starve the priesthood and the inmates of the convents. It was defended on the score of imperious necessity, as being the only means by which money could be raised to save the country from denationalization, the race from extinction, and the very churches from being desecrated. It is said that unless the army at San Luis Potosi could be guaranteed speedy relief and succor by the passing of this measure on that night, that they would disband in the face of the enemy and march on Mexico to subvert the Government. The first article was passed by a vote of 55 to 31. The question upon selling the church property appears to have been taken separately, and to have encountered a stronger opposition, as the vote was 44 to 35. The project emanated from the Government, and the bill was supported by the ministers.

The passage of the law has created the greatest excitement throughout Mexico. The churches are closed, and every indication of mourning and of resistance has been evinced by those who support the religious establishments. The Government have addressed to the soldiers a circular, in which the most stringent measures are authorized for preserving order and enforcing the decree.

Santa Anna declared his opposition to the bill.

If he has been assassinated, as report has it, I am inclined to think there is little prospect of peace, except with the subjugation of the whole country. The Mexican Congress and Mexican press every where make this the [...]– "Ser o no ser." The administration of the country is in the hands of men who have nothing to loss by the misfortune of their country, and the army is conducted by generals who even hail defeat as affording them the best opportunity of filling their pockets with the public funds.

It has been proposed by Gen. Gambos in Congress, to prohibit entirely the exportation of gold and silver without the express permission of Congress during the war with the United States.

It is stated that provision has been made for fortifying the passage between Vera Cruz and Mexico, viz: Puente Nacional, Plan del Rio and Cerro Gordo.

Lt. Rains arrived here a few days ago in charge of 17 prisoners who were exchanged for the "naufrajios" of the Somers, then held in Vera Cruz. Mr. Rogers is still held in confinement, but is I learn from himself treated with great kindness. Gen. La Vega called on him before he left Vera Cruz for Mexico and promised to obtain for him his liberty. It is now said in Vera Cruz that he will be released in a few days.

---

From the Seat of War.

It will be seen by the intelligence of another column that Gen’l Scott is rapidly concentrating his force, with the intention, now no longer questionable, of taking up a line of march for Vera Cruz– taking Gen’l Worth with him, and leaving “Old Rough and Ready” in command at Monterey.

The rumor of the violent death of Santa Anna, in one of those civil brawls of which Mexico seems fated to be the theatre, is by no means improbable. What will be its effect, if it be true, upon the question of peace or war, it is difficult to conjecture. Indeed, no reliable opinion can be formed as to the future policy of a people so factious and turbulent, and of a government so unstable, that we scarcely hear of the installation of its officers before the tidings reach us of their banishment or their violent death. We shall perhaps receive further and more authentic news by this morning’s mail.

[MPR]
Col. Sterne Simmons, of Madison County, Mississippi, committed suicide, while laboring under an aberration of mind, at Vicksburg, on the 30th ult.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says, the Three Million Bill, if not defeated, will have a narrow escape. The two Texas Senators are against it. They go for "conquering a peace," not buying it.

It is understood here that the President will give the appointment of Brigadier General, to command the Southern Volunteers, either to Gen. Cadwallader of Philadelphia, or to Major Gwynn of this city. Independent of the manifest propriety of appointing a Southern man to command the Southern volunteers, it is sufficient, without comparing the qualifications of the two gentlemen, that Pennsylvania has already been honored by the appointment of a Major General, who is no in the field, to incline the scale in favor of Virginia. We hope that the representatives from this State will urge the claims of Virginia, in the person of one of her sons, every way qualified to adorn the station, by pressing the appointment of Maj. Gwynn upon the Executive.

Col. Webb, in a letter to the N.Y. Courier, from Washington, says:— "When the Army Bill will become a law, I dare not venture to predict; but I hope and trust that it will be very shortly, as I stand pledged to the Executive to remain here until it does, to learn whether he intends to send me to Mexico."

The New York Express aptly says:— "We never before heard of a people spending a hundred millions of dollars in war to punish a nation accused of robbing us, and of invading our soil, and then giving it three millions to make peace! Among all the originalities of the United States, Europe, we venture to say, will look upon this as the oddest. If any body pays, surely Mexico ought to pay us three millions!"

The last N.Y. Spirit of the Times contains a long and highly interesting Diary, from the pen of its accomplished correspondent [Capt. Henry, of the 3d Infantry,] attached to the army in Mexico, for the whole of which we regret that we have not room. We copy from it the following picture of old Rough and Ready:

"Winding down a hill, our column was halted to let a troop of horse pass. Do you see at their head a plain looking gentleman, mounted upon a brown horse, having upon his head a Mexican sombrero, dressed in a brown olive-colored loose frock coat, grey pants, wool socks and shoes; from under the frock appears the scabbard of a sword; he has the eye of an eagle, and every lineament of his countenance is expressive of honesty, and a calm, determined mind. Reader, do you know who this plain looking gentleman is? No? Is it Major Gen'l Zachary Taylor, who, with his military family, and a squadron of Dragoons as an escort, is on his way to Victoria. He never has around him any of the 'pomp and circumstance of the glorious war;' but when the battle rages, when the victory hangs upon a thread, when the bravest even dread the galling fire, you will find, foremost among them all, the brave and gallant General, whose presence alone insures a victory."
If, as the Enquirer says, the adoption, by the unanimous vote of the “Democratic” House of Delegates of Virginia, of resolutions of thanks to Gen. Taylor, argues an absence of all “malignity” on their part towards that distinguished officer, what does the refusal to pass similar resolutions by the House of Representatives at Washington imply? And what inference are we to draw from the more than half-expressed approbation of the course of that House by the Executive Organ, speaking doubtless organically on the subject?

From Anton Lizardo.—The schooner Loredo, Capt. Thomas, arrived yesterday from Anton Lizardo, having sailed on the 19th ult. The news by her is unimportant, but we learn that on the day the Loredo came away the U.S. steamer Princeton went into Vera Cruz, with Lieut. Raines on board as bearer of despatches, as sixteen Mexican prisoners who had been taken at the mouth of the Rio Grande.

The frigate Raritan was lying at Anton Lizardo; the rest of the U.S. Squadron were at Sacrificios.—N.O. Picayune.

Col. Mitchell, who commanded a regiment of Ohio volunteers at Monterey and who was badly wounded there, has almost entirely recovered. His friends will be pleased to learn that this gallant officer is now here, on his way to rejoin his regiment.—Ib. [MPR]

Correspondence of the Whig.

Baltimore, Feb. 8, 1847–10 P.M.

The last sad funereal rites of the gallant Col. Watson and Capt. Ridgely, were performed to-day. It was an occasion imposingly grand and solemn. The Military, Odd Fellows and Firemen turned out in strong numbers. The bodies of the honored dead were borne upon two magnificent hearses, drawn each by six richly caparisoned horses. The coffins, covered with black velvet, and beautifully ornamented with gold bullion fringe, plated with silver, &c, were on the top of the hearse. Following immediately in the rear of Col. Watson was the celebrated old soldier, Albert Hart, who lost his arm in the battle of Monterey while fighting under his lamented Colonel. He carried in the remaining left hand the proud banner of his beloved country. The brave Captain Walker, so notorious as a Texas Ranger, was also conspicuous in the solemn train. The entire procession was over a mile in length, and displayed at every point splendid banners, flags, &c. It marched to solemn and appropriate music, which fell in impressive tones upon the ear. The streets and avenue through which the pageant passed, were thronged by thousands, who came out to honor the gallant dead. It was truly an impressive and solemn occasion, and at the silent sepulchre, where the dead patriots now sleep, unheeding the world’s rude strife, many a tear dropped to their memory.

At a meeting of the Stockholders and Directors of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, this morning, it was agreed to postpone action in regard to extending the road until the 22d inst. when another meeting will take place, and something definite, in all probability, be accomplished. A committee was appointed, who will report to the next meeting. The friends of the Southern Route had great hopes that Virginia would grant the right of way, but the action of your Legislature has destroyed these hopes. This great internal improvement must be extended to the Ohio, but to do so by awaiting further Virginia legislation would be out of the question.

From the N.O. Picayune, Feb. 2.

By the arrival last evening of the steamship McKim, Capt. Philsburry, from Brazos via Galveston, we have dates from the former place up to the 24th January and from the latter up to the 29th. The McKim remained at Galveston long enough for the editors there to make up the intelligences, and from the News we make up the following summary.

By far the most important news is the arrival at the Brazos of Gen. Wool with his command. He arrived there on the 23d ult. by way of Camargo. The news says that Gens. Scott and Worth are to have command of the main and regular army which is now concentrating at Tampico or at some place in the neighborhood. The new recruits have there place of rendezvous at the new island of Lobos, about sixty miles to the south of Tampico. The opinion is almost universal that a movement is now to be made against Vera Cruz. It is understood that that place is to be invested both by land and water. Col. Harney, with five companies of the 2d dragoons, was expected in Matamoros on the 21st ult, on which day Col. Duncan arrived there, and his battery was hourly expected. Lieut. Kearney had arrived with his company the day before.
From the News we also learn that Gen. Taylor has returned from Victoria to Monterey with a small escort. He is to remain at the latter place in command of the volunteers. His orders to this effect proceed from Gen. Scott, who now holds the chief command.

Gen. Wool was in command at Saltillo or in the neighborhood, retaining his original force, 3000 men. He was encamped on an elevated and commanding position ten miles to the south of Saltillo on the road to San Luis Potosi. This place is called Buena Vista, and gives General Wool, with a battery of twelve pieces of ordnance, command of the only passable route to and from San Luis. His orders are to maintain this position.

Col. Hardin and his regiment from Illinois– a part of Gen. Wool’s command– are spoken of in the highest terms. The discipline of this regiment is said to have been carried to an almost incredible degree of perfection. In fact, the whole of Gen. Wool’s army is represented as composed of excellent troops, in whose valor and good conduct every confidence may be placed.

The kindness and hospitality of the Mexican ladies at Parras are highly eulogised. At the time of Gen. Wool’s departure from that place there were thirteen invalid soldiers too much worn by sickness to accompany the army. On this occasion some fifty or sixty Mexican ladies, favorable to the American cause, visited the hospital, every one of whom sought it as a favor that she might be able to take home one of those suffering soldiers, where she might be able to nurse and restore him to health. All, of course, could not be gratified in this benevolent desire, and great was the disappointment of those who had to return without an American soldier. Another similar case is given of the two daughters of Don Lorenzo Yarto, a citizen of Parras, who took a sick soldier in their charge, and after several days in succession they kept a constant watch over him, the one sitting by his bedside by day, and the other performing the same service by night. These instances of kindness and humanity are related by Dr. Woodworth, who is direct from Parras, and should be recorded. They will certainly not be soon forgotten by those who have thus had their sufferings alleviated.

A Mr. Laing, who has been engaged in the wine trade between Parras and Chihuahua, recently returned from the later city, and reports that Gen. Cuyllt, late Governor of Chihuahua, was posted at San Rosalia as early as the 10th of December, with a force of 2000 citizen soldiers or rancheros, with a view to intercept Gen. Wool, who was expected to march upon Chihuahua from Monclova.

The above is all the intelligence of importance we can find. The arrival of Gen. Worth, with his division, at the Brazos, is of moment, as it would prove almost conclusively that an immediate attack upon Vera Cruz, by land is contemplated. We shall soon hear of stirring events.

Postscript– Still Later.

At 1 o’clock this morning the U.S. steamship Alabama, Capt. Windle, arrived from Brazos Santiago, which place she left on Saturday evening last, the 31st ult., making the run to the Balize in forty-eight and to the city in fifty-six hours– the quickest trip ever made.

Among the passengers by the Alabama were Maj. Morris, Captains Irwin and Fulton, Lieut. Hamilton, Dr. W.R. Smith, and Mr. Smith. Besides these were Messrs. J.A. Banks and Dr. Vanvolra, with the remains of Lieut. Woods, Capt. Johnson with the remains of Gen. Hamer, and Mr. C.G. Miller with those of Capt. Williams.

We have received several letters from Mr. Lumsden, who sailed for Tampico on the 30th ult. in the schooner Eliza S. Leper. We have not room for them to-day, but can state that they mention the arrival of the ships Sharon, Archillaus and Ondiaka, with Louisiana volunteers, and their departure for either Lobos Island or Tampico; also that the regiment of “Rifles” have been dismounted; and further, that Col. Harney has been arrested by Gen. Scott for disobedience of orders, and was to be tried immediately by court martial. More full particulars to-morrow.

We have also received letters from Mr. Haile, who is with Gen. Worth’s division, but which the lateness of the hour prevents our giving this morning. His last letter is dated “On the Rio Grande, near Palo Alto,” on the 27th ult, in which he states that Gen. Worth is quite unwell, but still able to give orders. He has between two and three thousand men with him– the pick of the army.

Gen. Scott and staff still remained at Brazos, but it was thought would sail in a few days for Tampico. The news brought by the McKim that Gen. Taylor had returned to Monterey is confirmed.

The vessels with the 1st Regiment Pennsylvania volunteers on board had arrived off the Brazos– all well. They had been ordered, it is said, to Lobos.

From Tampico we have dates to the 26th ult, brought by Maj. Morris. He informs us that Gen. Patterson arrived there on the 23d with 4500 men. Gens. Twigg, Quitman and Pillow were along– troops all in good health.

The steamer Cincinnati was lost on the night of the 22d ult, about 25 miles to the northward of Tampico. She had on board two companies of troops and two 9 pounders, and was bound on an expedition against Soto la Marina. Two soldiers and the two pieces of cannon were lost. The vessel was sold as she lay high and dry for $50.
One of the letters states that Congress, on the 9th ult., after a stormy session, approved the first section of a bill authorising the Government of Mexico to raise $15,000,000 by the hypothecation or sale of certain goods of the church. Santa Anna opposed this, and it is rumored that his opposition so exasperated his soldiers that they had shot him! Our correspondent says that this report required confirmation, but there are many circumstances which still render it not impossible such has been the fate of Santa Anna. The army was in great distress.

The passage of the above law has certainly created the greatest excitement in Mexico. The churches are closed, and every indication of mourning and of resistance has been evinced by those who support the religious establishments.

The Mexican Congress, and the Mexican press everywhere, appear to be thoroughly aroused. The issue they make is “Ser o no ser”—to be or not to be.

Mr. Rogers was still in confinement at Vera Cruz, but was well treated.

We have files of papers, but have no time to look at them before the mail closes. To–morrow we shall give a full summary of the news.

[MPR]

---

RW47v24i14p1c1, February 16, 1847, Mr. McPherson’s Resolution.

On Friday last, Mr. McPherson, one of the delegates from the Tenth Legion, submitted, in the House of Delegates, a preamble and resolutions, which we have been for some time past anticipating, touching the origin and prosecution of the Mexican War, which we cannot permit to pass without that “full and free expression of opinion,” which, in the words of the preamble, “is demanded by the public […]”–though, according to the modern doctrine of “moral treason,” interpolated into the political code by the party of which the member from Page is so distinguished a leader, we may incur the pains and penalties of “the second section,” for presuming to dissent from such high authority.

We have heard it surmised that the authors of this movement had a purpose in view, in the introduction of these resolutions, which does not appear upon the surface—and that was to compel the Calhoun men to show their hands—either to commit them to the propositions therein set forth, or to throw them in an attitude of open opposition to the Hunkerism on this vital question of public policy. We have scanned the list of delegates for the purpose of ascertaining the course of those who are understood to be the friends of Mr. Calhoun; and we find that about a moiety of them did not vote at all, while only six of them voted for the first resolution, in relation to the origin of the war. On the second, extolling the “eminent ability” with which the President has conducted the war, the number of absentees was dismissed by one, six voted for it, and one against it. Whether the suggesters and mover of the resolutions accomplished their alleged principle object of entrapping the “twenty–three,” therefore, is a problem as difficult as ever (regarding them as a party,) of solution—especially if it be true, as conjectured, that a portion of those who voted in the affirmative did so with decided repugnance, and not without certain mental reservations. Perhaps they had not read Mr. Calhoun’s great speech— or, if they had given it a slight perusal, they had not “learned and inwardly digested” that condensed and masculine argument. But to the resolutions themselves. The first reads as follows:

Resolved, That the present war with the Republic of Mexico, most unrighteously provoked on her part by a long series of outrages towards the United States, presents such an occasion as requires the united action of all true friends of the country in enforcing a speedy and honorable termination of this war, by a vigorous prosecution of hostilities.

We submit to the authors and supporters of this resolution that they have involved themselves and their party in a “predicament,” by not being more careful in their phraseology. They should have studied Senator Cass’ speech, in order to learn how to turn a corner adroitly, and to show two fronts at the same moment. What is the fact asserted in the foregoing resolution? It is, that “the present war with the Republic of Mexico” has been “most unrighteously provoked on her part” by a long series of outrages towards the United States. And what, then, is the inference which the member from Page and the majority in the House of Delegates would have the country to draw from this assertion? Is any man ass enough to believe that Mexico began the war upon us, as is alleged by Mr. Polk and the party generally, because she had been guilty of “this long series of outrages” against us? What had she to complain of, or to avenge? Why should she strike at us because she had thus wronged us? The language of the resolution is an express admission that the existing war, “provoked on her part” by the outrages referred to, running back, according to Gen. Cass, as far as 1817, and which for thirty years had been patiently submitted to by Monroe, Adams, Jackson and Tyler, was commenced by our own act, and not “by the act of Mexico.” And if this be so, by what authority, we ask, was the war waged? Congress, although in session at the time, had issued no declaration on the subject; and the very first act of that body, the exclusive war–making power, was to recognise its existence, announced to them by the President, at whose instigation they inserted in the preamble of the act providing means for its prosecution, the memorable declaration, the falsehood of which is shown by the foregoing resolution, that this war “exists by the act of Mexico.”

Now, we care not how flagrant were the wrongs and injuries we had sustained at the hands of Mexico, or how long they had been continued— which we admit now, as we have heretofore done, might long ago have justified Congress in taking up arms for their redress, and doubtless would have done so but for the peculiar position of that country, in which they can scarcely be said to have been a government at all since she threw off the yoke of Spain. That she has done enough to have “provoked a war,” we admit. But has the Constitution confided to the President the high prerogative of avenging national wrongs and injuries by an appeal to the sword, whenever he may think fit to unsheathe it? This, we beg to say, is the gist of the controversy—the great point in issue between the two
The second resolution is in the following words:

“Resolved, That the thanks of the General Assembly are due and are hereby cordially tendered to the President of the United States, for the justice, firmness, and eminent ability with which he has conducted the war with Mexico.”

This resolution comes with great propriety from a delegate representing a county in the famous "Tenth Legion." The zeal displayed in that quarter of the State in support of the war, ad the alacrity with which the citizen of those counties rushed to the field, at the sound of the bugle, authorize them peculiarly, through their representatives, to thank even the President for the “firmness” and the “eminent ability” with which he has “conducted the war.” A writer in the Washington Union of Thursday last, proceeding, upon an assumption, so flattering to Mr. Polk’s vanity, [...] so false in fact, and so unjust to Gen. Taylor and his gallant associates, has the cool impudence to ascribe to the wise plans of the President the rapidity with which “our victorious eagle had crossed the rivers and the mountains of Mexico, and planted our standard on many of her strongholds.” Do the majority in the House of Delegates intend to unite with the servile courtiers and venal parasites who surround the President, in robbing our gallant Generals and their subalterns of the fame they have won, in order to gratify to ever craving appetite of Power for the flattery and adulation which constitute its hourly food? The President’s “firmness and eminent ability,” forsooth! Where shall the evidence that he possesses either quality be found? We might point to the instances in which he betrayed a consciousness of the flimsiness of this assumption. He felt that it was necessary to expiate upon the outrages perpetuated by Mexico, in order to arouse the passions of the people, and to escape from the consequences of his own rash and unconstitutional action, to which alone the origin of the war is to be traced. He has indeed incurred a fearful responsibility, and we are not surprised that he seeks to escape from it, by an effort to induce the people to trace the war to causes which had nothing whatever to do with it, and which, even if they had been of a character to justify hostilities, it was the [...] of Congress, and not of the President, to make the declaration to the world. We doubt, therefore, whether the Administration will be more obliged to Mr. McPherson for his good intentions, or dissatisfied with the bungling manner in which he has essayed its vindication and defence.

It will be seen by our interesting Washington correspondent, that Mr. Calhoun has at length been openly attacked by a member of the Senate from Tennessee, and thrown upon his defence; and right valiantly has he repelled the assault. We rejoice that from a source it once so distinguished, and so exempt from those party feelings by which the Whigs may be supposed to be biased, the country is emphatically told, that the War in which we are engaged is the President’s War– made by him in violation of the Constitution– that its true origin was the march of the troops from the Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande– and that, when that order was given, by which the President assumed to himself the right to settle a disputed question of boundary, he knew, by information then in the Department of State, that, if our troops were allowed to remain where they were originally stationed, at Corpus Christi, “the Western frontier of Texas,” the Mexican forces would not cross the Rio Grande, and consequently there would have been no rupture. We thank Mr. Calhoun for this development– though we could have desired, for his and the country’s sake, that it had been made long ago. This development accounts for Mr. Calhoun’s refusal to vote for the war bill at the last session, when he declared that he would not make war upon Mexico! We commend these facts to the consideration of Mr. McPherson and the dominant party in the Legislature.

[MPR]
The New Orleans Picayune of the 7th inst. learns by a passenger in the schr. Petrel from Yucatan, that another Commissioner has been dispatched to Com. Conner, upon whose representations, the Commodore had determined to raise the blockade of Laguna.

[MPR]

We insert this morning the lucid statement of Col. Jefferson Davis, and the Generals Worth and Henderson, the commissioners who negotiated the terms of the capitulation of Monterey, which have been made the occasion recently of such harsh reflections upon Gen. Taylor. It will be seen that Gen. T. did not require the commissioners to subscribe to these terms, as has been heretofore stated with so much confidence, but that they were agreed to by those gentlemen— who still avow their willingness to defend their wisdom and expediency against all assailants— and afterwards approved by the Commanding General. Will Mr. Thompson of Mississippi enter the lists against his late colleague, Jefferson Davis? Will Orlando Fickin take up the gauntlet thrown down to him by General Worth? Nous verrons.

[MPR]

Washington, Feb. 12, 1847.

The Senators were all day, to-day, engaged in the discussion of the conduct of the Union. But there were saying and doings worthy of particular attention. There is an old saying which assures us that when rogues fall out, honest men will likely get their own; and when a band of political traitors quarrel, truth may triumph over political falsehood.

The question before the Senate was the expulsion of the Editors and reporters of the Union from the Senate. The principal speakers were Messrs. Allen, Sevier, Yulee, Turney, […] and Mr. Calhoun, and his colleague, Mr. Butler, were drawn in on a side issue. This was the most important part of the discussion. It is worth more than the whole expense of a week’s legislation to have truth laid down with such firmness as Mr. Calhoun stated it to-day. The most remarkable statement was the bold avowal of Mr. Calhoun, to-day, that this war was brought on by the act of the President of the United States. Yes! here we have it acknowledged, by a great Statesman, a leading member of the dominant party, the idol of the Southern Locofocons, that notwithstanding the statement contained in the preamble of the bill recognizing the war, that notwithstanding the reiteration of this statement by Executive flatterers and nonpartizans, and by the Executive himself, the truth is […] avowed by this independent Statesman, who fully endorsed the Whig ground, long maintained, that this was now […] by the daring usurpations of the Executive. Mr. Turney, having made very pointed allusions to the career of Mr. Calhoun, having referred to him as the leader of the ”Balance of Power faction,” and having charged that Mr. Calhoun got the country into the war, by urging the Annexation of Texas, which was the cause of the war:

Mr. Calhoun rose to reply. He said he had been accused of aspiring to be President. He said he aspired higher. He aspired to be an independent Senator; which he would rather be, than be President, as Presidents had been chosen for many years past.

Mr. Turney said Mr. Calhoun had been on both sides of every question before the country for a long time. He prophesied that Mr. Calhoun’s friends would support him for the Presidency against the caucus candidate. He said he admired Mr. Calhoun very much, and would support him is he could; but he had made up his mind, hereafter, to ask as politician from principle. This assertion, involving the acknowledgement, that hitherto he had not acted from principle, caused great laughter.

Mr. Calhoun said that his acts, in the Senate, were not the result of obedience to party. They were done from a sense of […] The only thing he had opposed the Administration on this session, was the Lieutenant Generalship, and in this he but agreed with the great mass of people. Never was a measure so much condemned as this was. He showed that in the Treaty of the Annexation of Texas, which he had sanctioned, the Rio Grande was not the boundary. The Senator from Tennessee contended that Annexation brought on war, and yet the great staple of Mr. Polk’s late Message was that the cause of this war were the acts of Mexico against our citizens long prior to the Annexation. The cause of the war was marching our troops from the Nueces to the Rio Grande. He charged that the Administration knew that if we did not invade the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande from the East, Mexico would not invade it from the West. The President may have though the Rio Grande the boundary, but what business had he to think any thing about it? Congress alone had any business to say any thing about boundaries. The marching of our army from Corpus Christi— that was the cause of the war. South Carolina did not do that. The Senator from Tennessee could tell what State the man belonged to that did it.

Mr. Calhoun contended that war could have been easily avoided. The march of Gen. Taylor ought to have been arrested. When he heard that the President had ordered our troops to march to the Rio Grande, he was utterly astonished; and had it not been that the Senate was so eagerly engaged in the discussion of the Oregon question, he would have moved, in the Senate, that the troops should be recalled. But he would not say more about the origin of the war, though the bottom of that business was not yet discovered.

Mr. Yulee made an eloquent defence of Mr. Calhoun. This called to Mr. Turney again, who descended so low as to refer to a conversation between two gentlemen which he had overheard.
Mr. Calhoun said he would relieve Mr. Yulee from the delicacy of replying to this, and said that when Mr. Yulee asked him his opinion of the article in the Union, he said it was utterly disgraceful and that the Editors should be expelled.

But the plainest speech was made by Mr. Butler of South Carolina, who was greatly excited by the attack upon his colleague. He denounced the conduct of a Senator who could overhear and take advantage of a private conversation. He said that he would rather belong to the Balance of Power party than to those who "go it blind" for Party rather than for the Constitution.

He was glad, however, to know that for the balance of his (Mr. Turney’s) life he intended to act from principle! He hoped decency would go with it. Upon this occasion he had made himself the vehicle of the vulgar newspaper slang of the day against his (Mr. Butler’s) colleague. He was sorry that the President did not restrain this licentiousness. He concluded by comparing the conduct of the gentleman from Tennessee to that of the silly Crow, who, seeing an eagle carry off a lamb, stuck his claws in the wool of the ram of the flock, but was soon caught and cooped, and laughed at by the rest of the [...] .

Mr. Turney rose to reply. He said that the gentleman had advised him to continue to act decently. Mr. Butler replied no– but to begin to be decent. And so this ought continue until the Senate adjourned, having been engaged with this business for five hours, without coming to any conclusion thereon. I presume they will finish it to–morrow.

The House was occupied with the debate on the Three Million Bill, upon which they have agreed to vote on Monday.

I understand that ed–Senator Haywood, of North Carolina, will pass through your city in a day or two, on his way North. His numerous friends will be glad to meet him here.

BRUTUS.

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p1c6, February 16, 1847

To the Editor of the Washington Union.

Victoria, Tamaulipas, Mexico,
January 6, 1847.

Dear Sir: After much speculation and no little misrepresentation about the capitulation of Monterey, I perceive by our recent newspapers, that a discussion has arisen as to who is responsible for that transaction. As one of the commissioners who were entrusted by General Taylor with the arrangement of the terms upon which the city of Monterey and its fortifications should be delivered to our forces, I have had frequent occasion to recur to the course then adopted, and the considerations which led to it. My judgment after the fact has fully sustained my decisions at the date of the occurrence; and feeling myself responsible for the instrument as we prepared and presented it to our commanding general, I have the satisfaction, after all subsequent events, to believe that the terms we offered were expedient, and honorable, and wise. A distinguished gentleman with whom I acted on that commission, Governor Henderson, says, in a recently published letter, "I did not at the time, nor do I still like the terms, but acted as one of the commissioners, together with Gen. Worth and Col. Davis, to carry out Gen. Taylor's instructions. We ought and could have made them surrender at discretion," &c. &c.

From each position taken in the above paragraph I dissent. The instructions given by Gen. Taylor only presented his object, and fixed a limit to the powers of his commissioners; hence, when points were raised which exceeded our discretion, they were referred to the commander; but minor points were acted on, and finally submitted as part of our negotiation. We fixed the time within which the Mexican forces should retire from Monterey. We agreed upon the time we would wait for the decision of the respective governments, which I recollect was less by 34 days than the Mexican commissioners asked— the period adopted being that which, according to our estimate, was required to bring up the rear of our army with the ordnance and supplies necessary for further operations.

I did not then, nor do I now, believe we could have made the enemy surrender at discretion. Had I entertained the opinion it would have been given to the commission, and to the commanding general, and would have precluded me from signing and agreement which permitted the garrison to retire with the honors of war. It is demonstrable, from the position and known prowess of the two armies, that we could drive the enemy from the town; but the town was untenable whilst the main fort (called the new citadel) remained in the hands of the enemy. Being without siege artillery or entrenching tools, we could only hope to carry this fort by storm, after a heavy loss from our army, now numbered less than half the forces of the enemy. When all this had been achieved, what more would we have gained than by capitulation?

Gen. Taylor’s force was too small to invest the town. It was, therefore, always in the power of the enemy to retreat, bearing his light arms. Our army— poorly provided, and with very insufficient transportation— could not have overtaken, if they had pursued the flying enemy. Hence the conclusion that, as it was not in our power to capture the main body of the Mexican army, it is unreasonable to suppose their General would have surrendered at discretion. The moral effect of retiring under the capitulation was certainly greater than if the enemy had retreated without our consent. By this course we secured the large supply of ammunition he had collected at Monterey— which, had the assault been continued, must have been exploded by our shells, as it was principally stored in “the Cathedral,” which, being supposed to be filled with troops, was the especial aim of our pieces. The destruction which the explosion would have produced must have involved the advance of both divisions of our troops; and I commend this to the consideration of those whose arguments have been drawn from the facts learned since the commissioners closed their negotiations. With these introductory we had parted from the Mexican commissioners; they were tardy in joining us, and slow in executing the instrument of capitulation. Commission reassembled, and the points of capitulation were agreed upon. After a short recess we again repaired to the room in which the negotiations were conducted. Gen. W. G. Worth asked permission of Gen. Taylor, and addressed some remarks to Gen. Ampudia, the spirit of which was that he manifested throughout the negotiation, viz: generosity and leniency, and a desire to spare the further effusion of blood. The terms of the demand were refused by the Mexican commissioners, who drew up a counter proposition, of which I only recollect the following:

Copy of demand by United States Commissioners.

"I. As the legitimate result of the operations before this place, and the present position of the contending armies, we demand the surrender of the town, the arms and munitions of war, and all other public property within the place.

"II. That the Mexican armed force retire beyond the Rinconada, Linares, and San Fernando, on the coast.

"III. The commanding general of the army of the United States agrees that the Mexican officers reserve their side arms and private baggage; and the troops be allowed to retire under their officers without parole, a reasonable time being allowed to withdraw their forces.

"IV. The immediate delivery of the main work, no occupied, to the army of the United States.

"V. To avoid collisions, and for mutual convenience, that the troops of the United States shall not occupy the town until the Mexican forces have been withdrawn except for hospital purposes, storehouses, &c.

"VI. The commanding general of the United States agrees not to advance beyond the line specified in the second section before the expiration of eight weeks, or until the respective governments can be heard from."

The terms of the demand were refused by the Mexican commissioners, who drew up a counter proposition, of which I only recollect that it contained a permission to the Mexican forces to retire with their arms. This was urged as a matter of soldierly pride, and as an ordinary courtesy. We had reached the limit of our instructions, and the commission rose to report the disagreement.

Upon returning to the reception room, after the fact had been announced that the commissioners could not agree upon the terms, Gen. Ampudia entered at length upon the question, treating the point of disagreement as one which involved the honor of his country, spoke of his desire for a settlement without further bloodshed, and said he did not care about the pieces of artillery which he had at that place. Gen. Taylor responded to the wish to avoid unnecessary bloodshed. It was agreed the commission should reassemble, and we were instructed to concede the small arms; and I supposed there would be no question about the artillery. The Mexican commissioners now urged that, as all other arms had been recognised, it would be discreditable to the artillery if required to march without anything to represent their arm, and stated, in answer to an inquiry, that they had a battery of light artillery, maneuvered and equipped as such. The commission again rose, and reported the disagreement on the point of artillery.

Gen. Taylor hearing that more was demanded than the middle ground, upon which, in a spirit of generosity, he has agreed to place the capitulation, announced the conference at an end; and rose in a manner which showed his determination to talk no more. As he crossed the room to leave it, one of the Mexican commissioners addressed him, and some conversation, which I did not hear, ensued. Gen. Worth asked permission of Gen. Taylor, and addressed some remarks to Gen. Ampudia, the spirit of which was that which he manifested throughout the negotiation, viz: generosity and leniency, and a desire to spare the further effusion of blood. The commission reassembled, and the points of capitulation were agreed upon. After a short recess we again repaired to the room in which we had parted from the Mexican commissioners; they were tardy in joining us, and slow in executing the instrument of capitulation.

Jefferson Davis.
Camp Near Monterey, October 7th, 1846.

yielded my individual views and wishes; and, under that conviction, I shall never be ready to defend the terms of the capitulation. I am satisfied that our government would be pleased with the terms given by the capitulation; and being myself persuaded of that fact, I replied, that he would run no risk where it could be avoided— that he wished to avoid the further shedding of blood, and that he was Ampudia; and, at the same time, gave it as my opinion that they would be accepted by him before we left the town. General Taylor, ought to have been given, and so I said to General Taylor when I found him disposed to yield to the request of General.

The above is a correct statement of the leading facts connected with the transactions referred to, according to my recollection. It is, however proper, that I should further state, that my first impression was, that no better terms than those first proposed, on the part of Gen. Taylor, ought to have been given, and so I said to General Taylor when I found him disposed to yield to the request of General Ampudia; and, at the same time, gave it as my opinion that they would be accepted by him before we left the town.

Much has been said about the construction of article 2 of the capitulation, a copy of which is hereto appended. Whatever ambiguity there may be in the language used, there was a perfect understanding by the commissioners upon both sides, as to the intent of the parties. The distinction we made between light artillery equipped and maneuvered as such, designed for and used in the field, and pieces being the armament of a fort, was clearly stated on our side; and it was comprehended on their’s, appeared in the fact, that repeatedly they asserted their possession of light artillery, and said they had one battery of light pieces. Such conformity of opinion existed among our commissioners upon every measure which was finally adopted, that I consider them, in their sphere, jointly and severally responsible for each and every article of the capitulation. If, as originally viewed by Gen. Worth, our conduct has been in accordance with the peaceful policy of our government, and shall in any degree tend to consummate that policy, we may congratulate ourselves upon the part we have taken. If otherwise, it will remain to me as a deliberate opinion, that the terms of the capitulation gave all which could have followed, of desirable result, from a further assault. It was in the power of the enemy to retreat, and to bear with him his small arms, and such a battery as was contemplated in the capitulation. The other grants were such as it was honorable in a conquering army to bestow, and which it cost magnanimity nothing to give.

The above recollections are submitted to Generals Henderson and Worth for correction and addition that the misrepresentation of this transaction may be presented by a statement made whilst the events are recent and the memory fresh.

Jefferson Davis,
Colonel Mississippi Riflemen.

Camp Near Monterey, October 7th, 1846.

The above is a correct statement of the leading facts connected with the transactions referred to, according to my recollection. It is, however proper, that I should further state, that my first impression was, that no better terms than those first proposed, on the part of Gen. Taylor, ought to have been given, and so I said to General Taylor when I found him disposed to yield to the request of General Ampudia; and, at the same time, gave it as my opinion that they would be accepted by him before we left the town. General Taylor replied, that he would run no risk where it could be avoided— that he wished to avoid the further shedding of blood, and that he was satisfied that our government would be pleased with the terms given by the capitulation; and being myself persuaded of that fact, I yielded my individual views and wishes; and, under that conviction, I shall never be ready to defend the terms of the capitulation.

J. Pickney Henderson,
Major General Commanding the Texan Volunteers.

I not only counselled and advised, the opportunity being offered the general—in-chief, the first proposition; but cordially assented and approved the decision taken by Gen. Taylor in respect to the latter, as did every member of the commission, and for good and sufficient military and national reasons— and stand ready, at all times and proper places, to defend and sustain the action of the commanding general, and participation of the commissioners. Knowing that malignants, the tremer being off, are at work to discredit and misrepresent the case, (as I had anticipated,) I feel obliged to Col. Davis for having thrown together the material and the facts.

W.J. Worth,

Brig. Gen. commanding 2d division.

Monterey, Oct. 12th, 1846.

[Here follow the articles of capitulation agreed upon by the parties, which we deem it unnecessary to republish.] [MPR]

RW47v24i14p1c7, February 16, 1847

Mexican Privateers at Sea.– The New York Commercial Advertiser has received the following important notification, from its London Correspondent of the Daily Commercial List. It is dated London, Jan. 19, 1847.

Three privateers sailed from the port of London on the 9th of Jan., 1847. They are British ships but have been renamed according to Spanish regulations, and they carry letters of marque. The names are as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Captain</th>
<th>Tons</th>
<th>Men</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Reino de Castilla</td>
<td>Moody</td>
<td>214</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sebastian del Cano</td>
<td>Smith</td>
<td>153</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magallances</td>
<td>Lash</td>
<td>153</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

These three vessels cleared out at the port of London for Mantilla, but are really for privateering on the broad Atlantic.

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p1c7, February 16, 1847

U.S. Ship Ohio,
Hampton Roads, Feb. 10th, 1847.

To the Editors of the Baltimore American–

Gentlemen:– Will you be kind enough to give the following a place in our valuable paper, and oblige many officers of this ship:

The U.S. ship of the line "Ohio," Captain S.H. Stringham, from Boston, arrived in Hampton Roads on the 10th inst. The Ohio has taken Norfolk in her passage to the Gulf of Mexico for the purpose of completing her crew from the Receiving Ship "Pennsylvania." She will take on board 100 men in a few days, by which time orders are expected from the Navy Department for her to proceed to the Gulf of Mexico and join our Squadron off Vera Cruz.

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p2c1, February 16, 1847

Senator Wallace, we understand, indulged in some very severe criticisms, in the debate last Saturday, upon Gen'l Taylor's military character. The Senator has some pretensions himself as a military man, having graduated at West Point, and being now, we believe, a Militia General, and his opinions are therefore entitled to some weight. Nevertheless, we doubt whether the country will condemn General Taylor, upon the judgment of one, however well versed in the theory of war, who has yet to win his spurs on the field. It is easier to play the critic than the soldier. Indeed, it is no uncommon thing for book makers to sit in judgment upon the campaigns of Napoleon and Wellington, and to point out the blunders of those great Captains. Gen. Taylor's will therefore probably survive Gen. Wallace's attack, as Gen. Harrison's has done that of Gen. Crary's! The criticism of the Senator, too, it strikes us, is not altogether in keeping with the unanimous vote of thanks to Gen. Taylor, tendered by the Legislature last week. Did the Senator thank him for his blunders?

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p2c1, February 16, 1847

We said yesterday, that it was surmised that "the McPherson resolutions," on the Mexican War, had a purpose in view which does not appear upon the surface. We were not then aware that this purpose was openly avowed, in the Senate, last Saturday, by Mr. Cox, who, we are informed, stated that they were intended to force the Calhoun men to show their hands. As most of them, however, were absent, the design was measurably frustrated.

[MPR]

On Saturday last, the following important communication was addressed by the President to both Houses of Congress:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Congress by the act of the 13th of May last declared that by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that government and the United States, and "for the purpose of enabling the government of the United States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination," authority was vested in the President to employ "the naval and military forces of the United States."

It has been my unalterable purpose, since the commencement of the hostilities by Mexico, and the declaration of the existence of war by Congress, to prosecute the war in which the country was unavoidably involved with the utmost energy, with a view to its "speedy and successful termination" by an honorable peace.

Accordingly all the operations of our naval and military forces have been directed with this view. While the sword has been held in one hand, and our military movements pressed forward into the enemy's country, and its coasts invested by our navy, the tender of an honorable peace has been constantly presented to Mexico in the other.

Hitherto the overtures of peace which have been made by this government have not been accepted by Mexico. With a view to avoid a protracted war, which hesitancy and delay on our part would be so well calculated to produce, I informed you, in my annual message of the 8th of December last, that the war would "continue to be prosecuted with vigor as the best means of securing peace, and recommended to your early and favorable consideration the measures proposed by the Secretary of War, in his report accompanying that message.

In my message of the 4th January last, these and other measures deemed to be essential to the "speedy and successful termination" of the war, and the attainment of a just and honorable peace, were recommended to your early and favorable consideration.

The worst state of things which could exist in a war with such a power as Mexico, would be a course of indecision and inactivity on our part. Being charged by the constitution and the laws with the conduct of war, I have availed myself of all the means at my command to prosecute it energy and vigor.

The act "to raise for a limited time an additional military force, and for other purposes," and which authorizes the raising of ten additional regiments to the regular army, to serve during the war, and to be disbanded at its termination, which was presented to me on the 11th instant, and approved on that day, will constitute an important part of our military force. These regiments will be raised and moved to the seat of war with the least practicable delay.

It will be perceived that this act makes no provision for the organization into brigades and divisions of the increased force which it authorizes, nor for the appointment of general officers to command it. It will be proper that authority be given by law to make such organization, and to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, such number of major generals and brigadier generals as the efficiency of the service may demand. The number of officers of these grades now in service are not more than are required for their respective commands; but further legislative action during your present session will, in my judgment, be required, and to which it is my duty respectfully to invite your attention.

Should the war, contrary to my earnest desire, be protracted to the close of the term of service of the volunteers now in Mexico, who engaged for 12 months, an additional volunteer force will probably become necessary to supply their place. Many of the volunteers now serving in Mexico, it is not doubted, would cheerfully engage, at the conclusion of their present term, to serve during the war. They would constitute a more efficient force than could be speedily obtained by accepting the services of any new corps who might offer their services. They would have the advantage of the experience and discipline of a year's service and will have become accustomed to the climate, and be in less danger then new levies of suffering from the diseases of the country. I recommend, therefore, that authority be given to accept the services of such of the volunteers now in Mexico as the state of the public service may require, and who may, at the termination of their present term, voluntarily engage to serve during the war with Mexico, and that provision be made for commissioning the officers. Should this measure receive the favorable consideration of Congress, it is recommended that a bounty be granted to them upon their voluntarily extending their term of service. This would not only be due to these gallant men, but it would be economy to the government; because, if discharged at the end of the twelve months, the government would be bound to incur a heavy expense in bringing them back to their homes, and in sending to the seat of war new corps of fresh troops to supply their place.

By the act of the thirteenth of May last, the President was authorized to accept the services of volunteers, "in companies, battalions, squadrons, and regiments" but no provision was made for the filling of vacancies which might occur by death, or discharges from the service, on account of sickness or other casualties. In consequence of this omission, many of the corps now in service have been reduced much in numbers. Now was any provision made for filling vacancies of regimental or company officers who might die or resign. Information has been received at the War Department of the resignation of more than one hundred of these officers.

They were appointed by the State authorities, and no information had been received, except in a few instances, that their places have been filled; and the efficiency of the service has been impaired from this cause. To remedy these defects, I recommend that authority be given to accept the services of individual volunteers, to fill up the places of such as may die, or become unfit for the service and be discharged; and that provision be also made for filling the places of regimental and company officers who may die or resign. By such provisions, the volunteer corps may be constantly kept full, or may approximate the maximum number authorized and called into service in the first instance.

While it is deemed to be out true policy to prosecute the war in the manner indicated, and this make the enemy feel its pressure and its evils, I shall be at all times ready, with the authority conferred on me by the constitution, and with all the means which may be places at my command by Congress, to conclude a just and honorable peace.

Of equal importance with an energetic and vigorous prosecution of the war are the means required to defray its expenses, and to uphold and maintain the public credit.

In my annual message of the 8th December last, I submitted for the consideration of Congress the propriety of imposing as a war measure, revenue duties on some of the articles now embraced in the free list. The principal articles now exempt from duty, from which any considerable revenue could be derived, are tea and coffee. A moderate revenue duty on these articles, it is estimated, would produce annually an amount exceeding two and a half million of dollars. Though in a period of peace, when ample means could be derived from duties on other articles for the support of the government, it may have been deemed proper not to resort to a duty on these articles; yet; when the country is engaged in a foreign war, and all our resources are demanded to meet the unavoidable increased expenditure in maintaining our armies in the field, no sound reason is perceived why we should not avail ourselves of the revenues which may be derived from this source. The objections which have heretofore existed to the imposition of these duties were applicable to a state of peace, when they were not needed. We are now, however, engaged in a foreign war. We need money to prosecute it, and to maintain the public honor and credit. It cannot be doubted that the patriotic people of the United States would cheerfully, and without complaint, submit to the payment of this additional duty or any other that may be necessary to maintain the honor of the country, provide for the unavoidable expenses of the government, and to uphold the public credit. It is recommended that any duties which may be imposed on these articles be limited in their duration to the period of the war.

An additional annual revenue it is estimated, of between half a million and a million dollars, would be derived from the graduation and reduction of the price of such of the public lands as have been long offered in the market at the minimum price established by the existing laws, and have remained unsold. And, in addition to other reasons commending the measure to favorable consideration, it is recommended as a financial measure. The duty suggested on tea and coffee, and the graduation and reduction of the price of the public land, would secure an additional annual revenue to the treasure of not less than three millions of dollars, and would thereby prevent the necessity of incurring a public debt annually to that amount, the interest on which must be paid semi-annually, and ultimately the debt itself, by a tax on the people.

It is a sound policy, and one which has long been approved by the government and people of the United States, never to resort to loans unless in cases of great public emergency, and then only for the smallest amount which the public necessities will permit.

The increased revenues which the measure now recommended would produce, would, moreover, enable the government to negotiate a loan, for any additional sum which may be found to be needed, with more facility, and at cheaper rates than can be [...] without them.

Under the injunction of the constitution which makes it my duty “from time to time to give to Congress information of the state of the Union, and to recommend to their consideration such measures” as shall be judged “necessary and expedient,” I respectfully and earnestly invite the action of Congress on the measures herein presented for their consideration. The public good, as well as a sense of my responsibility to our common constituents, in my judgment, imperiously demand that it should present them for your enlightened consideration and invoke favorable action upon them before the close of your present session.

James K. Polk.
Washington, Feb. [...] , 1847.

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p2c3, February 16, 1847, Gen. Taylor’s Letter.

Dr. D.F. Bacon, the medical advisor and friend of Gen. Gaines, details at length in the New York Express, the circumstances that led to the publication of Gen. Taylor’s letter. The letter was addressed to Gen. Gaines, who it seems is a second cousin of Gen. Taylor. He read it to Dr. Bacon, and they mutually agreed that it ought to be published, in order to counteract the violent assaults made upon “old Rough and Ready” by certain carpet–knights, who, although they know nothing of the art of war, to which he has been all his life accustomed, feel no delicacy in criticising and condemning his conduct, notwithstanding he has achieved a series of brilliant victories, unparalleled, when the disparity between his forces and that of the enemy, and his inadequate means are considered, in the annals of war. Dr. Bacon therefore, with the consent of General Gaines, published the letter. Gen. Gaines appends a note to Dr. Bacon’s article declaring that “in no possible contingency could its publication do any injury to the U. States or any service to Mexico.”

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p2c3, February 16, 1847

The New Orleans Picayune publishes Santa Anna’s letter accepting the Provisional Presidency of Mexico– for which we have not room. It is written in his usual strain of self–abnegation. He assumes the high station with reluctance, and will lay down and retire to private life, as soon as “the audacious foreigner” who has invaded Mexico, shall be expelled from her soil. He professes to be anxious only to vindicate his patriotic solicitude for the establishment of public freedom, and to leave an untarnished name to posterity. To accomplish this, however, he must efface the history of the past.

[MPR]

RW47v24i14p2c5, February 16, 1847, Awful Predicament of Poor old “Rough and Ready!”

For the Whig.

Mr. Shelton F. Leake voted, a few days since, in Congress, in favor of a proviso virtually censuring Gen. Taylor for permitting the Mexican army at Monterey to enter into terms of capitulation.

It is greatly to be feared that this censure from our very distinguished representative, will entirely destroy General Taylor’s military
Mr. Leake’s generosity will surely come to the General’s aid upon so momentous a question. He will not, it is trusted, permit “Rough and Ready” to agonize under the heavy weight of the censure of so great a military genius as that of the member from the Fifth Congressional District of Virginia! The amendment of the Senate to the House resolutions will give Mr. L. an opportunity to retract his vote, and affords some ground to hope that he will yet save General Taylor from the extreme mortification of classing HIM among his enemies! Whilst, however, the General’s friends may hope for the best, the momentous importance of Mr. Leake’s views, founded upon his deservedly exalted military reputation, fills them with alarm– aye, with terror; for high as is Taylor’s military standing, Leake’s is to his as Napoleon’s to Terrenne’s.

RINGGOLD.
Albemarle, Feb’y 5, 1847.

Extract of a letter to the Editors of the Whig:

Old Point, 9th Feb’y, 1847.

Messrs. Editors:– To–day is a solemn time in our “Barracks.” We have just paid the last last sad duties of respect to a fellow soldier! Poor young Black of our core has just gone to his fathers: he was seized two days since with that most fatal disease, Conjunction of the brain, and expired in a very short time. The tear which is stealing its way down my cheek at present renders me wholly unable to describe the feeling that pervades our quarters.

Mr. Black was quite young, and promised much future usefulness. He sacrificed private interest, as most of us did– cut the tender ties that bound to home and friends, and started for the field of honor– but alas! he has been taken off. Owing to the change of climate, (from the Mountains to the Seashore) there is now about sixty of our core upon the sick list– most of whom, however, I am happy to say are no ways dangerous; but it is a source of much distress to all of us, that in the face of all these facts, the Government sees fit to keep us at this Point, and to plunge us on that doleful stream the Rio Grande, right in the warm season. But I do not wish to hold out the idea for a moment, that any of our core regrets our lot, not at all: WE are composed of better material, and old Montgomery is the county to send the right stuff; but I have merely mentioned this, hoping that it may be noticed at Head–Quarters, and that it may have the salutary effect to have our transports forwarded to us immediately, and thereby we will be enabled to leave for the “Tented Field,” without delay. Yours, &c., R* of Montgomery Volunteers.

The Norfolk papers announce the arrival of Governor Smith at Old Point. The principal object of his visit, we learn, is to present to that portion of the Virginia regiment remaining at that place, the Flag prepared for it, by order of the Legislature.

A Sword was presented to Capt. O.E. Edwards, of the Norfolk corps of Mexican Volunteers, by a few of his friends, in the 3d inst.

We did not hear the speech of Gen. Wallace in the Senate; but we do not understand the Enquirer as denying that he criticized and censured some portion of Gen. Taylor’s military conduct. The Enquirer, however, states that Gen. W.’s review of Gen. Taylor’s conduct was made with a declaration of the high opinion he entertained of that officer, and that “he would no pluck a leaf from the chaplet which encircled his brow.” But the question is, did he not attempt to pluck that leaf? That, we regret, is not denied. We are also told by the Enquirer that Gen. W. was not in the Senate on the day the resolutions of thanks were passed– a fact of which we were not cognizant, and which of course relieves him from the imputation of inconsistency founded on his supposed vote in favor of those resolutions.
We do not deem it necessary to publish the yeas and nays on the Wilmot Proviso. The vote was, with the exception of a few Northern men, a sectional one—every Southern member of both parties voting against it, except Mr. Houston of Delaware, who can scarcely be regarded as belonging to that category—Delaware being nominally only a slaveholding State.

The Senate will unquestionably reject the Bill with the Proviso. Indeed, its passage in that body without it, is exceedingly doubtful.

But the fact is now known that Slavery is to be interdicted in any territory that may be acquired from Mexico; and that fact being fixed, another, just as certainly follows, and that is, that the South will never consent to the acquisition of any territory; and with her voice unanimous against it, that purpose—the original purpose, as we verily believe, of Mr. Polk, in making the war, of which, if he had possessed even ordinary sagacity, he ought to have foreseen that this would be one of the legitimate and necessary fruits—will be frustrated; unless, indeed, that expedient, which we of the South unfortunately invented, of annexing territory by joint resolution, in our hot haste to bring Texan into the Union, shall "return to plague the inventors."

We shall indulge in no bluster or bravado on the subject. Of this, however, the North may be assured, that, whenever the South shall be called upon to act, it will present an undivided, stern, inflexible front to its fantastical assailants.

A Washington letter in the New York Herald says—

I have been informed that the war department, under the Ten Regiment Act, will accept seven companies from New York and three from New Jersey, making one regiment for these two States. From Rhode Island, one company; Maine, three; New Hampshire, two; Connecticut, two, and Vermont, two; or one regiment for New England. From Maryland, four companies, Delaware, one. It is said that Pennsylvania and Ohio will each furnish a regiment; and that North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, conjointly, will furnish one. Three companies will be accepted from Illinois. The mounted regiment will probably be raised in Tennessee and Kentucky. I have not been able to ascertain the proportion from other states.

The Virginia Regiment of Volunteers is full—twelve companies. Six companies are at sea, on their way to Point Isabel, under Lieut. Col. Randolph, and six more are at Fort Monroe awaiting transports, to leave, as soon as Government furnishes them, under Major Early. Col. Hamtramck, Colonel of the Regiment, goes by orders by land to New Orleans on business, and thence to Point Isabel.

The House of Representatives, to-day, have tried to offer another insult to Gen. Taylor. Their former vote of censure was corrected in the Senate, by substituting for that censure a vote of thanks, and voting a Medal to Gen. Taylor. Well, to-day they have modified the Senate's amendment, so as to have medals struck for a lot of Locofoco Generals, and they insert the other Generals' names in the resolutions before the name of General Taylor! If the resolutions should ever descend to posterity, it would seem as if Gen. Taylor was but a star of the 7th or 8th magnitude in that brilliant affair. Surely this insult to General Taylor has been carried far enough, for even Locofoco malignity, and might now be properly discontinued.

The House was engaged all day to-day on Reports from committees. Among other bills passed, was one for the admission of the State of Washington.

The Senate were engaged during the morning hour on miscellaneous business; after which, Mr. Badger of N.C. made a very able speech on the Mexican war. He believed that we were got into it unnecessarily and unconstitutionally; but being in it, we were bound to prosecute it to an honorable close. Mr. Colquitt of Ga. has the floor for to-morrow.

The city is full of office-seekers, looking for high military appointments. I believe Mr. Pearce, formerly Senator from New Hampshire, is to be one of the Colonels.
Capt. Walker, of Texas, returned to town to-night.

Mr. Collins, the celebrated Irish actor, leaves to-night for Richmond, where he performs a short engagement. Since the death of the lamented Power, we have had no such Irish actor as he. He sings some of Lover’s songs in such a style as the Richmond people never heard before. He is on his way to New Orleans, and will remain with you but two or three evenings.

I do not see the Enquirer of Monday will this evening. Whenever I have seen any criticism upon my letters, I think I have been able to meet them. If I do not answer, it is because I do not see, the attacks. It quotes an extract from my letter, which it says is a specimen of my extravagant style of endorsing Mr. Corwin’s speech. Unfortunately for the Enquirer, there is not a sentence in my whole letter endorsing Mr. Corwin. If the Enquirer be very anxious about it, I will tell it what parts of the speech I endorse. Nor shall I be afraid to endorse what I approve. It was not because I did not approve of the speech, on the contrary, that I refrained from endorsing it. Nor would I cavil at the assertion now— but to show that the Enquirer represents me as doing what I did not do.

Now, I will refer to what I said about the speech, including what the Enquirer prints in italics— I said the audience was kept spell-bound; that the speech was sarcastic, witty, eloquent; that it was one of the greatest efforts ever made before the Senate. Now I ask is this endorsing the speech? I might show that the Enquirer’s attacks on Gen. Jackson; Mr. Buchanan’s denunciations of Democracy; Mr. Polk’s and Mr. Walker’s denunciations of a tax in tea and coffee; Mr. Bancroft’s tirades against slavery; were eloquent, witty and sarcastic, without endorsing the Enquirer’s anti-Jacksonism, Buchanan’s old Federalism, Bancroft’s Abolitionism, or Polk’s and Walker’s demagoguism. The extracts which the Enquirer makes were given by me as specimens of the sarcasm and eloquence of the speech. If it please the Enquirer, I shall now say that though I differ in some points from Mr. Corwin, yet, there are very few sentences in that long address which I might not endorse. The references to the menials gaping for fly-blown meat around the Executive chamber— the inconsistency of a nation which ran from a strong enemy in Oregon, to rob and plunder a poor crippled nation in the most senseless limb, (California) and then boasting of heroic deeds, by 20 millions, which a few thousand Texans excelled some time ago— the profligacy of the pirate chaplains, who insult Heaven by pretending to pray, while they are plundering the weak and studying revolvers instead of Revelations— the infernal scenes to follow upon this Abolition storm, which Locofoco policy has evoked from its slumbers, are more easily sneered at, then proved untrue or unpatriotic.

Does the Editor of the Enquirer deny that there are such creatures as Mr. Corwin describes, who gorge themselves on the offals of the Locofoco shambles? Read Mr. Westscott’s (Locofoco) speech in the Senate on Saturday last.

Does he doubt the weak character of the Mexican enemy? Read the sneering remarks of the Locofoco presses and Locofoco orators on the insignificance of a war with Mexico, when we prophesied that war in 1844.

Does it doubt the danger of this Wilmot Proviso, and its consequent influence upon our institutions? Read the Southern Locofoco speeches on this subject, during this session, taken in connection with the proceedings yesterday.

Does it doubt that Mr. Polk deliberately demagogued in his Message, and falsified history? Read Mr. Benton’s speech showing that Mexico had territory this side of the Rio Grande. Read Mr. Ingersoll’s speech (Locofoco chairman of the committee on Foreign Relations,) which says that the first nation crossing the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande would be the aggressor. Read Mr. Calhoun’s speech on Friday last, that the marching of our troops from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande was the cause of the war. Read these and other Locofoco declarations, and then see Mr. Polk’s “atrocious misrepresentation” that Mexico commenced the war! Will the Enquirer go further, or is it satisfied?

BRUTUS.

[MPR]

RW47v24i15p1c4, February 19, 1847

[ Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun. ]

Washington, Feb. 17, 1847.

The officers for the ten new regiments are fast being created. The names of the officers of troops which were already organized, waiting to be received, have been sent in by the President, and some confirmations I understand have been made. Among the nominations, is paymaster Andrews, of this city, to be Colonel of the dragoon regiment; John P. Moore, clerk in the Quartermaster’s department, to be Assistant Quartermaster of the same regiment; and another gentleman named Moore, clerk in the comptroller’s office, to be a Captain in the same Dragoons.

[MPR]

RW47v24i15p1c4, February 19, 1847

The National Intelligencer has translations from Vera Cruz papers to the 15th ult.

The city of Mexico Diario del Gobierno of the 30th December gives a letter from Acapulco, on the 15th December; which says they have their intelligence direct from Monterey de California and the Port of San Francisco to the following effect: That, since the late expulsion of the Americans from Ciudad de los Angeles, they rallied a force of 400 men, and returned to attack it; but that at San Pedro, three leagues from Los Angeles, they were encountered by the Californians and driven back to the coast with considerable loss. It is probable that the news of this unexpected resistance of the Californians has led to a proposal of about the same sate, in the Mexican Congress, to raise a special loan of half a million to aid the New Mexicans and Californians in their efforts to expel the invaders from those territories.

RW47v24i15p2c7, February 19, 1847

According to a paragraph in the Baltimore Clipper, President Polk has selected the following captains of companies to be taken from Maryland under the Ten Regiment Act: Capt. Oden Bowie, of Prince George's county, now a Lieutenant in Capt. Kenly's company in Mexico; Capt. John Eager Howard, jr. of Baltimore; Capt. Richard Merrick, [son of Ex–Senator Merrick,] of Frederick county; and Capt. James P. Archer, of Baltimore city.

RW47v24i15p2c7, February 19, 1847

The Mexican Privateers.– The Salem Register thinks that the Mexican privateers, reported as having sailed from the Thames, will turn out to be nothing more than vessels destined for the opium trade. A gentleman from Manilla, now in that city, states it as a fact within his knowledge, that before he left there, an agent was on his was to England fort he purpose of procuring such vessels, and these are probably the fruits of his mission.

RW47v24i15p4c2, February 19, 1847

We have received glorious tidings from New Hampshire. We have, among other evidences of the rising sentiment of the people, before us the proceedings of a great meeting at Concord, in which Gen. Joseph Low came forward in a manly speech, declaring his separation from the Federal party, and his support of the administration and the country in this war with Mexico. Gen. Low is one of the ablest and most influential Whigs in New Hampshire.—Washington Union.

We know nothing of General Low, whose accession to the Administration party is deemed so very important. We may congratulate the Union, however, that the Republican measures of the Administration has won over on more "Federalist “ to its support!

It may be well to enquire, too, whether Gen. Low may not have been induced to sustain the Administration in its war against Mexico, by the prospect of aiding an immense territory, to the non–slaveholding section of the Union?

RW47v24i15p4c2, February 19, 1847

Yesterday's Republican states that the Handsome swords ordered by the City Council for Captains Scottland Carrington, for Lieutenants August, Fry and Donnan of the Greys, commanded by the former gentleman, and for Lieutenants Porterfield, Munford and Williamson, commanded by the latter, have been received, and are now at the store of Messrs. Mitchell & Tyler. The Swords were manufactured by Ames of Massachusetts, and each bears the inscription, "Presented by the city of Richmond," to the several officers named.

RW47v24i15p4c2, February 19, 1847

The following is the amendment offered by Mr. Stanard, on Saturday last, in the Senate, while the "McPherson resolutions" were pending in that body. It was not palatable to the dominant party, and was of course rejected—though we should be glad to know to what sentiment in it they objected:

"That the present war with Mexico, however provoked on her part, could be constitutionally commenced, on the part of the United States, only by Congress, the war–making power, and not by the act of the President; and while this General Assembly is prepared by the use of all proper means, and to the full extent of its ability, to sustain the Government and the Country in the prosecution of the existing war, it can never subscribe to the doctrine (abhorrent to freedom in all ages) that a government which once succeeds in involving the country in war is thenceforth safe from censure, and that an act of oblivion is passed for its misconduct."
We are glad to hear that Mr. Stanard and Mr. Moore intend to prepare for publication the able speeches delivered by them in the progress of the discussion. Of both of them we have heard the highest commendation.

The proviso, interdicting absolutely the existence of Slavery in any territory to be acquired from Mexico, has been engrafted, in the House of Representatives, on the Three Million bill. With this evidence both of the power and intention of the representatives of the non-slaveholding States to monopolize all such territory as may be obtained by conquest or purchase, from Mexico, will Southern men consent to the annexation of an acre of her soil. For one, we say, "we'd non of it"– and such, we undertake to say, will be the unanimous sentiment of the Southern people.

On Monday, Mr. Webster submitted the following resolutions, which, on his own suggestion, were laid upon the table.

Resolved, That the war now existing with Mexico ought not to be prosecuted for the acquisition of territory to form new States to be added to the Union.

Resolved, That is ought to be signified to the government of Mexico, that the government of the U.S. does not desire to dismember the Republic of Mexico, and is ready to [...] with the government of that Republic for peace, for a liberal adjustment of boundaries, and for just indemnification due by either government to the citizens of the other.

We received no New Orleans papers yesterday. By the way of Baltimore, we have the following paragraph from the New Orleans Jeffersonian of the 8th inst.:

Latest from Tampico.– The schr. Rob Roy arrived yesterday afternoon, from Tampico, reports having left on the 28th ult. Capt. Harkness states that four days previous to his sailing, the master of the U.S. steamer Cincinnati arrived at Tampico, having lost his vessel in a tremendous storm on the coast of Mexico. During the gale the steamer Fashion was seen a few miles distant, and serious fears were entertained for her safety, she having not arrived when the Rob Roy sailed. It was supposed that General Scott was on board the Fashion at the time. This, however, was not the case, as recent advices from the Brazos assure us that Gen. Scott was still at that post, concentrating the troops, as was supposed, for Tampico.

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen– The late attempt of the President, to fasten upon the country, in the person of the Military Senator whose name stands at the head of this article, an officer designed by the Constitution to exist only in days of extreme danger– such as in Rome was supposed to justify the appointment of a Dictator, whose business it was to provide ne quid detrimenti capat Respublica – calls to mind certain occurrences which took place many years ago. In the winter of '34-'35, while the question of a French war was agitating the country to its very foundation, a letter, said to have been from a gentleman of high distinction in Washington, in which Col. Benton was charged with a disposition to exasperate the angry feelings already existing, in order that a war might ensue, and he receive the office of Lieut. General, was published in the Richmond Compiler. Many persons ascribed the authorship to Gen. Duff Green, but of the justice of their surmises it is not my intention to speak. Certain it is, that he took up the subject in the Telegraph, and produced many, and as I thought at the time, unanswerable proofs of the justice of the charge. He went further than I presume was reasonable; for he did not hesitate to ascribe to Benton a thirst for, and a determination to secure, absolute power. The whole imputation was indignantly repelled by the entire Locofoco press. Do not recent events prove that there might have been some justice in the charge?

I have been surprised that these facts have not been noticed in Congress or the Newspapers.

A COUNTRYMAN.
Mr. Merritt, one of a company of thirty, who started from New Mexico on the 2d of last November, has recently arrived at Booneville, Missouri. He says several of their company were badly frostbitten, and three perished. The names of the men frozen to death were Bartlett, Long and Thomasson, from Buchan county.

The company came in on foot, and were fifty-seven days on the route—about four hundred miles of the journey through snow eight inches deep.

The volunteers were selling their Government checks in Santa Fe at 25 per cent discount.

The Washington Correspondent of the Charleston Courier makes a statement, which, if it be not true, ought at once to receive an authentic contradiction—and which, if it be true, ought, in the emphatic language of the Charleston Mercury, to consign Mr. Polk to the unmitigated condemnation of the people of the South. The statement follows:

"I have learned, to–day, that the President and his friends have given assurances to the Northern Democratic members, that if they will suffer the Three Million Bill to pass, without amendment, the North shall have no occasion to complain of the treaty that will be made with Mexico. That is to say, the President promises that he will take no cession of territory to the south of the parallel of 36 deg. 30 m., and that, therefore, the slavery question will be avoided. This is said to be the reason for the determination of many of the Northern Democratic members to vote against Wilmot's proviso. The proposition for a boundary made by Mr. Sevier, comes very near to this line, and is probably intended to hit it. The line of 36 deg. 30 m., leaves Santa Fe 20 m. to the north of it, and every point on the Pacific that is desirable to the non–slaveholding States."

The Charleston Mercury, which says a similar statement has reached its editor "from high authority," declares, that if it be in accordance with facts, "the treason to them (the slave States,) their institutions, their character, and their very existence, would be so deep and unnatural a [...], that language would be wanting to give expression to the universal indignation which would consume the author. It is impossible (the Mercury thinks) that a Son of the South would sign a treaty which would be a libel on the people and institutions of fifteen states, and which would deprive them, for reasons the most humiliating to their feelings and degrading to their self–respect, of any share in the lands they had aided by their best blood and their best treasure to win." Nous verrons! We confess that we are not so incredulous— not in regards to Mr. Polk's purpose, but as to the fact that he has given the assurances referred to. If he has not, he owes it to himself and to the South to nail the rumor to the counter.

We invite attention to the eloquent and scathing speech of Senator Moore, of Rockbridge, on the Mexican war.

The declaration of the Missouri Senator, that in 1812, he outranked every General now in service, and had a right to command the whole of them they had met in the same field, has led to some investigations and curious developments. A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, for example, divulges the following rather discreditable facts:

"Some doubts having been expressed whether Mr. Benton ever was a Lieutenant Colonel in the Regular army, an examination of the records of the United States Court in [...] placed the matter at rest. After the peace, an action was commenced by the United States against Lieutenant Colonel Thomas H. Benton, for the recovery of a considerable sum of money, placed in his hands during the war, as superintendent of the recruiting service, which money he had appropriated to his private use; a judgment was rendered against him for several thousand dollars, as any one may see who chooses to examine the records. Mr. Benton stated the truth, then, when he says he was a Lieutenant Colonel in the U.S. army. At a period, too, when those small fry, Gaines, Scott and Taylor, were fighting at Erie Niagara, he was recruiting somewhere in Tennessee, and had plenty of Uncle Sam's money in his hands."

And a writer in the New York Courier and Enquirer invalidates the accuracy of the would–be Lieutenant General's statement, by the subjoined citations from the records:

[From the N.Y.Courier & Enquirer]
"Col. Benton in his speech in the Senate on the 25th inst in vindication of the President, and of his own fitness for the office of Lieut. General, is reported in the National Intelligencer (usually very accurate) to have said— "Even in the Regular Army, in 1813, I was Lieut. Colonel, while most of the present Generals, were company officers, and only one of them of the rank of Colonel." He had previously said, in the same speech— "In 1812 I was the Military Superior of every General now in the service, and had a right to have commanded the whole of them, if we had chanced to serve together. I was then Colonel in the service of the United States, commissioned by President Madison under a law of Congress, and led a regiment of my own raising from Tennessee, to the lower Mississippi, &c. &c."

Since the famous "East–Room Letter" of Col. Benton, we presume no one questions the veracity of that gentleman, or at least no one accuses him of intentional misrepresentation; for habit, is oft-times more controlling than intention.

Now what says "the Record?"— The 12th vol. of the American State Papers, from page 384 to page 424 contains "a corrected list of all the officers in the army of the United States, transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Senate of the United States, in Dec. 29th 1813, in pursuance of a resolution of that body. An official document.

From this list it appears that Thomas H. Benton was Lieut. Colonel of the 39th Regiment of Infantry, with rank of 18th July 1813, and that this regiment was one of 14, raised for one year.

The same list, shows that at the same time, the following officers, whose names appear in the Army Register of 1845, as General Officers (we have no later Register at hand) held rank in "the Regular Army in 1813" as follows.

- Hugh Brady, Col. 22d Reg. Inf., 6th July 1813,
- E P Gaines, do 25th do do 12 March 1813,
- Winfield Scott, do 2d Art do 1813,
- W K Armstead, Lt Col Engineers, 31st July, 1812,
- G. Gibson, Lt. Col. 5th Reg. Inf. 15th Aug. 1813,
- M. Arbuckle, Major, 3d do. do. do. do. 1812,
- T. S. Jessup, Major, 19th Inf. 6th April, 1813.
- J. E. Wool, do. 29th do. 13 do do.

As all of the foregoing were above the rank of company Officers in the Regular Army in 1813— will the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, inform the public, how many General Officers we now have in the Regular Army, if his assertion be true, that "most of the present Generals, were Company Officers" in 1813? Or must this declaration be classed with the "East Room Letter?"

If the document sent to the Senate in 1813 told the truth, at that time, the Senator from Missouri, misstates it now.

As to the other statement of Col. Benton, viz:– that "in 1812 he was the Military Superior of every General now in the service, and had a right to have commanded the whole of them, if they had chanced to serve together," he does not give us the date of commission as Colonel, nor the laws under which he 'raised regiment'– but it was probably a regiment of Volunteers. The same document of the Army, with which the Chairman of the Senate's Committee on Military Affairs accustomed, in that character, to communicate on military subjects with all Administrations, for about a quarter of a century last passed, who was also in 1812 the Military Superior of every General now in the service, must have been familiar.

Among these 'rules and regulations, we find the following "Officers of the Regular Army of the same grade with those of Volunteers and Militia, have precedence of missions." Would then Col. Benton of a Volunteer regiment of his 'own raising' have commanded Col. Brady of the Regular Army?

But the gallant Missourian certainly has had great experience. He says that in 1812, he was Col. of a Regiment of his own raising,— if so the record shows that in 1813 he was promoted, possibly on account of his great skill and experience, to be a Lieutenant Colonel— in a regiments of 12 months-men. Can any one doubt his claims to be Lieutenant General?

---

RW47v24i16p1c2, February 22, 1847, From the Volunteers.

The Times of yesterday says— "We learn from a letter received from a young officer in Capt. Scott's company, that the May–Flower, with Captains Scott's and Harper's companies on board, arrived at Havana on the 4th instant, nine days from Old Point. They had very rough weather the first three of four days, but pleasant afterwards. They were all pretty well, and put in to get a supply of medicines. Expected to be off the next day for the seat of war."

---

RW47v24i16p1c2, February 22, 1847, A Wasington Letter

A Washington letter in the New York Herald says—

I have been informed that the war department, under the Ten Regiment Act, will accept seven companies from New York and three from New Jersey, making one regiment for these two States. From Rhode Island, one company; Maine, three; New Hampshire, two; Connecticut, two, and Vermont, two; or one regiment for New England. From Maryland, four companies, Delaware, one. It is said that Pennsylvania and Ohio will each furnish a regiment; and that North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, conjointly, will furnish one. Three companies will be accepted from Illinois. The mounted regiment will probably be raised in Tennessee and Kentucky. I have not been able to ascertain the proportion from other States.
We find in the New Orleans "Picayune" a translation of the letter from Gen. Santa Anna to the Congress of the Republic of Mexico, announcing his acceptance of the Provisional Presidency, to which he has been recently called. This letter professes sincere reluctance to accept the office, which circumstances yet do not allow him to refuse, but declares his unchangeable determination to retire to and remain in private life, as soon as he has "put a happy conclusion to the war" which exists between the United States and Mexico, "by one or more feats of arms" which "may show him on the pages of history entitled to the applause of posterity!"

A very brief extract or two from this reply of his will enable the reader to judge, as far as professions go, what probability there is of the realization of the expectations from Santa Anna which induced the Executive of the United States to assist him to return from his exile and place himself at the head of the Armies of Mexico:<

"Since lately I set my foot upon the soil of my country, as I had not returned to obtain the Presidency of the country, but only to fight the audacious foreigner who professes with his presence the sacred soil of the country--I have reflected much whether I should accept the situation which for the fifth time in the course of my life has been conferred upon me, but at last, overcoming my natural repugnance, stifling within my breast considerations of a private nature which influenced me, and, more than all, convinced that my fellow citizens will not do me the injustice to believe that I resolved upon the sacrifice, for this is nothing which I am not prepared to do in obedience to my dear country."

"My ambition is for glory and a posthumous fame. The only thing to which I aspire--I will repeat it a thousand times--is to put a happy conclusion to the war which we are raging against the neighboring Republic, by one or more feats of arms which may conclude the story of my services--by some signal actions which may show me on the pages of history entitled to the applause of posterity.

"May Heaven grant that soon, very soon, I may have the happiness to present, with the most profound respect, to the august Congress, trophies conquered from the enemy by the brave men whom I have had the honor to command, and who clamor with eagerness for the arrival of the hour of combat."

[MPR]

Occupying the position which Mr. Calhoun does on the vital question of Slavery, which must of necessity intrude itself upon us, whether we will or no, when the spoils won from Mexico, or to be won, are to be disposed of, we need scarcely say to his friends, that, in an emergency not at all unlikely to happen, the eyes of the WHOLE SOUTH will be turned to him as to one of its leaders in the conflict that must ensue. From this position the political managers, however artful, cannot dislodge him. Prejudice, artfully fomented, and the powerful influence of past associations, may for a while alienate a few of his friends temporarily--but the instincts of self-preservation will dispel this prejudice and destroy this influence. Mr. Calhoun stands upon the Southern platform in regard to the Mexican War; and, though he may now seem to stand almost alone, the entire South will eventually be with him. We pray him to be nothing daunted!

[MPR]

For the Whig.

In reading the President’s Annual Message of December 8th, 1846, I was much struck with the following passage:

"If the war should be continued until the 30th of June, 1848--being the end of the next fiscal year--it is intimated that an additional loan of twenty-three millions of dollars will be required. This estimate is made upon the assumption that it will be necessary to […] the treasury four millions of dollars, to guard against contingencies. If such surplus were not required to be retained, than a loan of nineteen millions of dollars would be sufficient."

Here we find, that the President, having all the facts and documents before him, about two months ago, said that if the war continued a year and a half longer, it would be necessary to borrow twenty-three millions of dollars. Not having the data before me, I would be obliged to you to inform me how much money the Government has been authorized to borrow directly by loan, and indirectly by issuing Treasury Notes? I don’t know, but I think the answer will expose still farther the stupidity and incompetency of the President and his “constitutional advisers,” and will lay before the country the short-sighted policy by which Polk has temporarily succeeded in blinding his party to the consequences of his measures. I wonder that this admirable financial calculation has not received more attention; and can only account for it on the supposition, that through its invincible dullness and inordinate length, the Message defied a searching criticism; and by its innumerable follies, sickened all persons before they came to the extract quoted above. Albemarle, Feb. 15th, 1847.

A WHIG.
RW47v24i16p2c7, February 22, 1847: Interesting from Tampico and the Army.

The correspondent of the New Orleans Delta, writing from Tampico on the 27th January, details the movements of Gen. Twiggs's pioneer force, and the arrival of Gen. Patterson's division. We copy a few paragraphs from his journal.

28th—I learned last night that Lieut. Ritchie, of the 4th Infantry, was assassinated at Villa Grande, by a Mexican. He was on his way to Victoria, escorted by a company of Kentucky Cavalry. General Taylor encamped there for the night, and the Lieutenant was sauntering about the town when it happened. The next morning the General had arrested the alcalde, but I have not learned whether the perpetrator of the outrage had been taken.

One of the officers of Gen. Quitman's division stated to me yesterday, that the Mexican cavalry were in sight of them for more than half the march from Victoria. On some clear place on the mountain side, they would arrange themselves for a charge, and then start pell-mell in the direction of the column. But I need not sat to you that they never came within musket-shot. Several of the men who lagged behind were killed by them. One, a member of the Baltimore battalion, was killed close to the rear guard—being first shot, and then lanced in the breast. I have not ascertained to what corps the other missing ones belonged.

We hear nothing of an early movement from this place, and from the preparations that are being made, it would be difficult to say when one would be made. At the encampment of Gen. Twiggs, they are clearing off ground and building wharves, as though they contemplated a six weeks' rest, and I understand Gen. Pillow will move nearer to the town then he now is.

Tampico, Mexico, Jan. 30, 1847.

Gentlemen—Yesterday was quite a busy day in Tampico, and every thing in the military line wore an active appearance. Besides the numerous wagons that were moving to and fro about the forage and commissary departments, the hundreds of Mexican carts that were hauling the public stores from the wharves, the division of Gen. Pillow moved through town, on their march to their new encampment, and taking all things together, it was with great difficulty that either horseman or pedestrian could make headway against the moving mass. I was on the Plaza, when the head of Pillow's column was passing it, and I do not believe my anxiety to cross the street caused me to exaggerate, when I estimated the time of their passing an hour and a half. The Tennessee cavalry were in front, numbering over 700 men, and they seemed to stretch out to the length of two miles; then the two regiments of infantry from the same State, and in the rear, the third regiment of Illinois Volunteers. The natives were out in large numbers, and many were the speculations, as to whether the mounted men were sure enough Rangers from Texas, or merely Voluntario caballeros. The place selected for the encampment of the division is about two miles from the town, on the edge of a lake, and near a conspicuous white house, which can be seen from all parts of the town. Gen. Quitman has also moved in from the 10 miles encampment, and is now about ten miles in the rear of General Twiggs.

There are rumors here that Gen. Taylor's rear-guard had been attacked, near Linares, and that he had lost a number of wagons and mules, but I will not believe it until I hear something more, although it is a section of country where an attack of that sort is most likely to be made. Besides the numerous hiding places about there for Mexican soldiers, and the large settlements, the Mexicans would like to trouble old Taylor, for that money transaction in Linares. You may kick a Mexican, and he will probably forget it, but touch his pocket, and he'll remember you the longest day he lives.

Bigelow, the beef contractor, who was shot by the Mexicans a day or two since, has been brought into Tampico, and will get well without a resort to amputation. I learned last night, that an Illinois volunteer was killed on the first days march of Quitman's division, this side of [...]. He had lagged behind the rear-guard, and a party of lancers rushed upon him, shot and lanced him. He was found during the day, and at night his company returned and buried him.

Gen. Worth, with the 8th and 4th infantry, has been some time on the road to this place, and may be looked for here in a very short time. When he arrives all the regular force, as Scott desired, will be on the sea board.

[MPR]

RW47v24i16p3c1, February 22, 1847, From Yucatan.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Feb. 13.

By the way of Havana we have accounts from Merida to the 16th January.

At that date, the forces of the insurgents of Campeachy were in the immediate vicinity of Merida in hostile array. To avoid the effusion of blood they summoned the city to surrender, giving it twenty-four hours for consultation. [...] commissioners to settle all their difficulties amicably. This suggestion was promptly rejected and the surrender insisted upon. To this the government would not accede, and there matters rested at 11 o'clock on the 16th, immediate hostilities being expected on both sides.

In another quarter we have accounts of hostilities. The Faro Industrial gives an official report of the taking of the village of Tabi by the forces of the government of Merida. The action took place on the 11th of January. The Government troops amounted to 400 infantry and 29 dragoons. They had also one piece of artillery. The force of the rebels is not given, but they fought for two hours with unheard of fury, but the valor of the Government troops far surpassed any of which we have any record, and in the end prevailed. They gained possession of the village and the rebels fled most shamefully. The loss of the rebels was between forty and fifty men killed and seventeen prisoners. How many were wounded was not ascertained, but the number of “missing” must have been very large, judging from the manner in which they are said to have fled.

Tabi is a village situated far to the east of Merida and a little South, and on no direct route between any two points of the least note, so far as we can judge by the map. The commander of the Government troops remarks that he does not consider its possession important to his ulterior operations, and he has accordingly withdrawn his troops from it. Why it should have been the scene of so sanguinary a strife, we do not well understand.

The rebels of Campeachy have seized all the letters intended for Merida received from Havana by the brig Martin. The simplest commercial letters were not allowed to go through.

From Havana– The brig P. Soule, Capt. Thompson, arrived last evening from Havana, having sailed on the 1st inst. The only news of any interest by this arrival is from Yucatan. We give the details in another column.

The papers mention the death of his Excellency Senor D. Santiago de la Cueta y Manzanar, Conde de la Reunion de Cuba and Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Isabella the Catholic; also, of Don Francisco Javier Blanchie y Palms, a young author and poet very much esteemed.

The local news of Havana is totally uninteresting. Not a word more has been received there from the city of Mexico.

The brig Adela, Capt. Watson, arrived here yesterday, from Havana, in 8 days passage.

Capt. Watson has furnished us with the following intelligence from Mexico, communicated to him by Mr. Campbell, our Consul at Havana. It was received by the packet from Vera Cruz, arrived at Havanna 6th inst.:
Mr. M. said he could not vote for either the preamble or the resolutions. He would not vote for the preamble, because it asserted that sentence of condemnation being pronounced against him there? If all these conjectures were wide of the mark, he wished someone by members of Congress, with a gross impropriety of conduct– that he may, by a display of the extent of his power here, avert a

his Administration, here, in Virginia? Or were the resolutions brought forward, by order of the editor of the Union, who stands charged against Mr. Polk, for a fraud practiced upon them by him, in relation to his opinion on the Tariff, to make a show of great confidence in

was it deemed necessary, since sentence of condemnation had been pronounced by the great States of Pennsylvania and New York judging of the propriety of his acts, and that it was therefore necessary to dictate to them what sentence they must pass upon him? Or reached the Senate. That could not, therefore, be the reason for bringing them forward. Was it because the friends of the

the session? Was it because all the important and appropriate business of the session had been acted on, and nothing else remained to

Mr. M. said he desired to be informed in the first place, why the resolutions were brought forward at all, especially at this late period of

States, to which they referred.

Mr. Moore rose and said, that, before proceeding to submit the remarks which he desired to offer, in support of the motion he had just say one word calculated to give personal offence to any member of that body– that the relations of friendship subsisting between all

Mr. M. said he desired to be informed in the first place, why the resolutions were brought forward at all, especially at this late period of went off once, for a second attempt to enter.

"The May Flower arrived in Havana on the 6th inst with Lieut. Col. Randolph’s command of 318 men. The object is to supply medicines, which it appears had not been furnished in sufficient quantities previous to her leaving Norfolk. The men are fine looking, zealous and anxious to meet the Mexicans in the field of battle, or to plant the standard presented to them, on the walls of St. Juan de Ulloa. The standard is a beautiful one, having on one side the arms of the United States, and the arms of their idolized State of Virginia on the reverse side.

"Col. Randolph’s command are in fine health, except some 18 men. It was for these men that additional medicines were needed. The May Flower will sail 7th inst., (to–morrow,) for Point Isabel, that being the original destination of the vessel.“

RW47v24i16p4c2, February 22, 1847, A Washington Letter

A Washington letter in the Philadelphia Ledger says that the companies accepted from Pennsylvania under the Ten Regiment Act are

Captain Butler’s dragoons, Capt. Biddle’s infantry, Syberg’s and Barnard’s, Thurster’s, from Carlisle; Guthria’s from Pittsburgh; Irving’s, Juniata; Moore’s, Bedford and Franklin, making eight companies from Pennsylvania. The field officers will probably be– Colonel Gen.

Ramsay, of York county, an experienced military man; Lieut. Colonel, Col. Johnson, of Maryland, an officer of the regular army in Mexico; Major, Major Morgan, of Bradford, a graduate of West Point, who served through the Florida war; Surgeon, Professor Gibson, of Baltimore. [MPR]

RW47v24i16p4c3, February 22, 1847: Substance of Remarks.

Made in the Senate of Virginia, on Saturday, the 13th of February, 1847, by Mr. Moore, of Rockbridge, upon his motion to postpone indefinitely the Resolutions from the House of Delegates, relating to the Mexican War.

Mr. Moore rose and said, that, before proceeding to submit the remarks which he desired to offer, in support of the motion he had just made, he deemed it proper to say, that in submitting his vies upon the important subject before the Senate, he would not designedly say one word calculated to give personal offence to any member of that body– that the relations of friendship subsisting between all the members of the Senate and himself, if no other consideration, would prevent his saying anything to which any member would have a right to take exception. The duty, however, which he owed to his constituents, and to his country, required that he should express his opinions frankly and unreservedly in reference to the resolutions themselves, and to the conduct of the President of the United States, to which they referred.

Mr. M. said he desired to be informed in the first place, why the resolutions were brought forward at all, especially at this late period of the session? Was it because all the important and appropriate business of the session had been acted on, and nothing else remained to be done? No– Scarcely a single bill of importance (of which a great many were pending in the other branch of the Assembly,) had reached the Senate. That could not, therefore, be the reason for bringing them forward. Was it because the friends of the Administration believed that the people, by whom Mr. Polk was elected, and to whom he was responsible for his acts, were incapable of judging of the propriety of his acts, and that it was therefore necessary to dictate to them what sentence they must pass upon him? Or

was it deemed necessary, since sentence of condemnation had been pronounced by the great States of Pennsylvania and New York

against Mr. Polk, for a fraud practiced upon them by him, in relation to his opinion on the Tariff, to make a show of great confidence in his Administration, here, in Virginia? Or were the resolutions brought forward, by order of the editor of the Union, who stands charged

by members of Congress, with a gross impropriety of conduct– that he may, by a display of the extent of his power here, avert a sentence of condemnation being pronounced against him there? If all these conjectures were wide of the mark, he wished someone who designed voting for the resolutions, to state why they were brought forward, and what purpose they were intended to accomplish?

Mr. M. said he could not vote for either the preamble or the resolutions. He would not vote for the preamble, because it asserted that which every member of the General Assembly knew to be palpably untrue. He spoke of the resolutions now pending, as a “free and full expression of opinion on the great question of peace and war which now agitates the Union.” It was notorious that this was not designed to be a free, full, or candid expression of opinion. The previous question had been called in the House, in which the resolutions were offered, in the very outset, so as to cut off all debate and everything like a free and full expression of opinion, and strong indications were given of a disposition to pursue the same course in the Senate. No time for consideration or reflecting had been allowed after the resolutions were brought forward. With what show of propriety, then, could it be said that this was a free and full expression of opinion by the General Assembly? And yet it was the obvious design to impose this preamble and these resolutions upon the public, as a free expression of opinion, given after due deliberation, on an important subject, by the Representatives of the people of Virginia!

The same objection applied to the first resolution, and in a still stronger degree— that is, it asserted that to be true, which every man knew to be the very reverse of the fact. [Here Mr. M. read the first resolution.] The evident design of the resolution, if it did not say so in so many words, was to convey the idea, that the war grew entirely out of aggressions on the part of Mexico; whilst it was perfectly clear, that the immediate and obvious cause of the war was an unnecessary, unwise, and unauthorized act of the President of the United States. The immediate cause of the war unquestionably was the order given by President Polk to General Taylor, to march from Corpus Christi into the disputed territory, and to station his army opposite to Matamoros. The outrages on the part of Mexico, alluded to in the resolution, could not have been the true cause of the war. They had transpired years before— they had been considered by Congress, which had refused to declare war on that account— and cannot, with any show of propriety or truth, be said to have brought on the war. The order given to General Taylor, not only did in fact bring on the war, but it was the natural, if not the inevitable effect of the order, that it should do so, and Mr. M. confidently appealed to the candor of gentlemen on the other side, to say, if they did not believe, that no war would have broken out between Mexico and the United States up to this time, if the order referred to had not been given by the President.

The territory beyond the Nueces had never been in the possession of the United States, or of Texas, though claimed by the latter; but had been always, and was then, in the actual occupation of the Mexicans, who claimed it as their own; and the invasion of that territory, by an armed force, under those circumstances, was upon every principle acknowledged by the laws of nations, an act of war. But even if that did not amount to war in itself, the erection of a fortification, or stationing of an army, so as to overlook a large and important town, situated on territory acknowledged to belong to Mexico, was a flagrant insult, to which no nation having the slightest regard for its honor could submit. If any foreign nation had offered a similar insult to the United States, the whole nation would have been unanimous and clamorous for war. Suppose, for example, [said Mr. M.,] that Virginia had a town situated like the town of Matamoros, and the State of Maryland to be a foreign state; and even if the ground on the opposite side of the river actually belonged to her, and she should station an army so as to overlook the Virginia town, and command it by their guns, does any one believe there is a man in Virginia who is so very a dart that he would not be willing to go to war to resent the insult? Such a man cannot be found in the Old Dominion.

The war, then, was actually commenced by the President of the United States. And it was done without constitutional authority or necessity for so doing. If it be said, that Mr. Polk did not intend to bring on a war by his order to invade the disputed territory, and that he did not know that the invasion of the territory claimed by Mexico, and in her actual possession, amounted to an act of war, it only shows a want of common sense, and a degree of ignorance, utterly incompatible with any idea of his fitness for the station which he holds as President of the United States. It is only necessary for any man to reflect for a moment what this country or England would have done under similar circumstances, to satisfy him that war was the natural and almost inevitable consequence of the order given by Mr. Polk to Gen. Taylor, even if the taking possession of the territory in dispute had not, under the circumstances attending it, amounted to war in itself.

The second resolution tenders to the President of the United States, the cordial thanks of this General Assembly “for the justice, firmness and eminent ability with which he has conducted the war with Mexico.”

Mr. M desired to be informed, in what the evidence of the justice and ability with which Mr. Polk conducted the war consisted? Was it, said Mr. M. wise or prudent in the President, to order Gen. Taylor to advance with out Army, of less than three thousand men, into a country in the possession of Mexico, inhabited by her citizens, and claimed as her own, and to offer a flagrant insult to the nation, by fixing his cannon in a position to command and overawe the city of Matamoros, when he knew, or ought to have known, that the Mexicans would have a right to regard the act as a commencement of open hostilities— and that they had a well disciplined army of from seven to fifteen thousand men, in the immediate vicinity? Was it just to the Army to expose it to such imminent danger of being overpowered by superior numbers— and that, too, in a position so distant from our own borders as to preclude the possibility of its receiving timely assistance from the United States? Was it just, or magnanimous, or fair, in the President, to cause or permit his Organ, a newspaper set up by himself, and paid out of the public treasury, (in the shape of contracts for public printing,) for the purpose of libeling all who may dare to differ with the Administration, to make an insidious attempt to throw the whole blame of anticipated defeat on the Commander of the Army, when he knew the Gen. Taylor acted in obedience to his own orders in all that he did? Neither the serious apprehension which prevailed throughout the country for Gen. Taylor and his army, from the time the Mexicans crossed the Rio Grande up to the time that the glorious victories of the 8th and 9th of May were achieved— nor the effort to throw the whole blame of his situation on the Commander of the army, by the Union— can be forgotten. But no sooner than those victories, which covered the army and its leader with glory, and redounded to the credit of the nation, been achieved, than this same Organ claimed the whole credit of our success for the Administration! A success he (Mr. M.) would venture to say, obtained in spite of the failure of the Government to furnish Gen. Taylor with a sufficient force, or with necessary supplies. Was this an evidence of the President’s justice towards our own brave army? Was the act of recalling the volunteers, called out by Gen. Gaines, (with the approbation of all parties in the State of Louisiana, and of others who had the best opportunity of judging of the imminent peril in which the army had been placed by the order of the President)— and of turning them loose in a strange country, without the means of subsistence or of reaching their homes, an act of justice to those patriotic citizens? Was it wise to dismiss them at all, and then call for thousands of others to supply their places, this incurring double cost? Was it just to drag Gen. Gaines a distance of a thousand miles to fix his cannon in a position to command and overawe the city of Matamoros, when he knew, or ought to have known, that the country in the possession of Mexico, inhabited by her citizens, and claimed as her own, and to offer a flagrant insult to the nation, by by the Mexicans? Did the President display his justice, or his ability, or his humanity, when, after the victories of Palo Alto and Resaca de Palma, he induced thousands of our patriotic citizens to volunteers, and sent them to encamp on the shores of the Rio Grande on the wet ground, and at an unhealthy season of the year, without tents to shield them from the drenching rains of the season, until two thousand of them fell victims to the diseases of the climate? Did the President display great ability in suffering the army to lay for months at Matamoros for want of boats to convey them up the river? Or was it when he ordered the army forward to attack the strongly fortified city of Monterey, defended by twice its own numbers, and failed to supply it with wagons to convey provisions for the support of the men, that he displayed his skill and ability in conducting the war? The fact that a large portion of the army were without any food for days, during the attack upon Monterey, except raw corn, and surrendered, was one which could not be controverted. Did the friends of the Administration rely on these facts as evidencing the eminent ability with which Mr. Polk had conducted the war?

Mr. M. would bring to the attention of the Senate one or two other matters proper to be considered, as tending to show Mr. Polk's justice and ability, displayed in conducting the war. Col. Twiggs had been promoted over the heads of all the other officer of the Army, after the battles on the Rio Grande; and why? If he had been rightly informed, Col. Twiggs had been perhaps less conspicuous for courage and good conduct than any other officer in the field, in the estimation of the whole army; and his promotion could only be accounted for on the ground of his political opinions.

Mr. M. would state a singular circumstance, said the have occurred about the time that the army were stationed on the Rio Grande. A Lieutenant had been sent on from Washington, having no other claims to the office than his being a brawling partizan of the Administration; and after remaining three weeks in the army, it was discovered that he had managed to draw, within the three weeks, pay for seven weeks. Finding that the fraud had been detected, he wrote to the President or some of the officers at Washington, and before a Court Martial was detailed to try him for the offence, an order arrived from Washington directing Gen. Taylor not to convene a Court Martial trial of the guilty officer, if one had not been convened, and if it had, to dismiss it at once. Mr. M. said he could not speak in reference to this matter as of his own knowledge; but if any friend of the Administration desired it, he would put him in possession of the names of the means of ascertaining whether the story was well founded or not. He believed if the matter were enquired into, the story would be found to be strictly correct.

Perhaps (said Mr. M.) it was in the conduct of the President towards Gen. Taylor, that he displayed his great regard for justice. The President, had, in his letter to Gen'l T. after the capture of Monterey, expressed, or strongly insinuated, his disapprobation of the terms of capitulation. It was known that the partizans of the Administration had become alarmed at the rapidly growing popularity of "Old Rough and Ready," and a servile press had begun, almost openly, to censure him– the fire on his back (like that apprehended by Gen. Scott) had actually commenced: Under these circumstances, Taylor, probably actuated by a desire to place the means of defending his reputation in the hands of a friend, if he should fall on the field of battle, wrote to a relative a letter, evidently not intended for publication, in which he set forth the facts in relation to the capitulation of Monterey. That relative, finding that a base and insidious attempt was being made, by the partizans of the Government, to blast the reputation of the old General, whilst absent fighting the battles of his country, thought proper, without the knowledge or consent of Gen. Taylor, to publish a part of his letter. The President of the United States, seeing that his own criminal neglect to supply the Army with provisions and the means of conveying their artillery to Monterey, was exposed by the letter, although he knew it had not been written for publication, determined to make its publication a ground of serious complaint against its author. Actuated by a spirit of malignity and meanness, peculiar to men of inferior intellect, and not daring to assail him openly, he raked up an old Army regulation of 1825, forbidding the writing and publication of letters giving an account of the movements and plans of our armies by officers, and orders it to be published; intending thereby to subject Gen'l Taylor to the imputation of a gross dereliction or breach of duty, in the public estimation. It would not suit his purpose to censure Taylor openly for the letter he had written. It was only necessary for men of intelligence to examine the regulation of 1825, to perceive that its object was to prevent the future movements of the armies and plans of the Government becoming known to the enemy, by means of letters written or published by the officers of the Army, and that it could have no application to such a letter as that of Gen. Taylor to Gen'l Gaines, which only spoke of the past, and which would not have been of any value to the enemy had it fallen into their hands. But still, the terms of the regulation or order of 1825 were very broad; and with the aid of a servile and corrupt press, it might serve to fix in the minds of the multitude, an impression that Taylor had been guilty of a great impropriety, and afford some sort of justification for superseding him in the command of the Army; and therefore the President ordered it to be published.

The fire on his back was now fairly commenced, and was soon followed up with a proposition to appoint a Lieutenant General, avowedly designed to place the command of the army in the hands of Col. Benton. One word, said Mr. M., as to Col. Benton: that modest, meek and humble man, who was to have received the appointment of Lieutenant General had the bill passed creating the office. He [Mr. Benton] told the Senate of the United States that he has been an officer in the war of 1812, higher in command than any of the officers now in the Army. He had, however, it seemed, omitted to tell us "where he buried his dead," during the time he was in office. Mr. M. had never heard of his having been in any battle at all. Yes, he must retract that; he had heard of his being engaged in one battle, but not against the enemies of this country. He [Mr. M.] had happened, many years ago, to be on the field or locality of the battle, in the city of Nashville, and had the particulars of the fight detailed to him, by a citizen of the place, professing to know all about them. It seemed that when Col. Hays, (a friend of Gen. Jackson,) entered the tavern in which the fight took place, the old General had received a shot fired at him by Jesse Benton, and lay weltering in his blood on the floor, whilst this Lieutenant General had pointed a pistol at him and was pulling the trigger, when the old man, pointing at him, remarked to Hays, "look at the d-- coward– he has forgotten to cock the pistol." Whether this account of the affray was correct or not, Mr. M. could not undertake to pronounce; "he told it as it was told to him."

Mr. M. thought the experiment of appointing men to the command of an army, upon the ground that they had held the office at a remote period, had been sufficiently tried in the war of 1812, when the command of an army in Canada was conferred on Gen. Hull. And he did not think it exactly fair, that a man who had abandoned the army to pursue other objects of ambition, should be placed over the heads of those who had stuck to the flag of their country through thick and thin, from 1812 to the present moment. Such a policy on the part of the government was not very well calculated to prompt the officers of the army to acts of noble daring. Nor did it furnish strong evidence of the "justice, wisdom and ability" of the President who recommended it.

Mr. M. expressed an earnest desire to be informed whether the partizans of the President meant to claim any especial credit for him, for the sagacity, wisdom and ability displayed by him when he permitted Santa Anna and the able officers who were with him, a pass through our fleet, on their way to the city of Mexico? It was notorious that up to that time, Mexico was directed by the contests of contending factions. She had no acknowledged head, in whose ability to conduct the war all the people had confidence. She had but one man in the world in whose ability and courage all parties could confide, and him they had expelled on account of his alleged tyranny, but not from any want of confidence in his capacity. And that man was Santa Anna. And that was the man whom our wise President gave orders to our fleet to permit to enter Vera Cruz, together with all his officers. He did enter. He was immediately placed at the head of the Government; and from that hour, the dissensions which had previously existed among the Mexicans have almost ceased. New energy and confidence have been infused into the Government and its Armies; and our Government has been compelled to change all its plans, and it is probable will soon have to abandon the idea of "conquering the country." Did Mr. Polk display his eminently able in thus giving to the enemy a head, and thus uniting their whole power and strength against us? Will any friend of the Administration have the courage to get up and say that he approves of that act? No, not one; and yet we are called on, said Mr. M., to declare, in general terms, that the President has conducted the war with "eminence ability!!"

Mr. M. desired to know whether the policy displayed by Mr. Polk in directing the commanders of our armies to cause all supplies for their support procured in Mexico, to be paid for, instead of levying contributions on the enemy, and quartering upon them, as was customary in all the wars of Europe, was considered as evidence of his wisdom and ability? Mr. M. believed that Bonaparte was reputed to have possessed some little military skill, and some ability in conducting a war; and it had been his invariable practice, and that of every other great General, except Mr. Polk, he had ever heard of, to support their armies, as far as practicable, by contributions levied upon the enemy. It was only by pursuing such a policy that any motive for desiring to make peace could be created in the minds of the Mexicans. By Mr. Polk’s policy, not only the whole burden of supporting our armies fell upon the people of the U. States, but we actually contributed the means by which Mexico could support her armies and her Government. Mr. M. insisted that if Mexico could only be able to hold San Luis Potosi and her other posts, it would be to their interest to protract the war as long as possible, since the money received by her citizens in payment for provisions and other supplies for our army would be worth five times as much as all she would lose by the interruption of her commerce. We had already incurred a debt of from fifty to an hundred millions of dollars.– thousands upon thousands of the lives of our patriotic citizens had fallen a sacrifice to the climate, owing to the criminal neglect of the President to furnish them with tents, clothing and other necessary supplies– the enemy had been furnished by Mr. Polk with an able leader, who had healed all their dissertations, and little or no progress was being made in "conquering a peace." And yet we were called on to assert that the President had conducted the war with "eminence ability"!!

Mr. M. could not undertake to say what the National Debt, already incurred by this war, would amount to; but he confidently believed that when all the sums advanced by the different States and territories to clothe and equip the volunteers called out by the President, were taken into account, as undoubtedly they would and must be, the debt of the nation would scarcely fall short of a hundred millions of dollars. Mr. M. said, the sums thus advanced by the States and Corporations for the use of the volunteers ought in the first instance to have been paid by the General Government. They would have been so paid, but for the pitiful policy on the part of the President, in attempting to conceal the enormous amount of debt in which he had involved the country, by rashly, unwisely and without authority, pushing us into a war, by an act of folly, to say the best of it.

The wisdom and propriety of the policy of the President, in pretending to make a distinction between the great body of the People of Mexico and their Rulers, admitted of very great doubt– especially when attempted by the head of a nation situated as we are. The condition of Mexico was, to some extent, like our own. The descendants of the Indians, constituting the great mass of the people, enjoyed but little if any more liberty, than the Slaves in the Southern States; and an attempt to array them against their own government was but little better than an attempt to excite a servile war, the most horrible of all wars;– a policy condemned by all civilized nations, and universally denounced in this country as cruel, monstrous, and inhuman.

There appeared to be a total want of magnanimity in a great Republic, pursuing such a policy in waging war against a sister Republic of less than half her own strength. The attempt, however, had proved eminently successful; and the whole Mexican nation are timely informed of the policy of the President, in pretending to make a distinction between the great body of the People of Mexico and their Rulers, admitted of very great doubt– especially when attempted by the head of a nation situated as we are. The condition of Mexico was, to some extent, like our own. The descendants of the Indians, constituting the great mass of the people, enjoyed but little if any more liberty, than the Slaves in the Southern States; and an attempt to array them against their own government was but little better than an attempt to excite a servile war, the most horrible of all wars;– a policy condemned by all civilized nations, and universally denounced in this country as cruel, monstrous, and inhuman.

Mr. M. believed that President Polk had withheld from the public, under circumstances which could furnish no justification for such conduct, information which they had a right to receive; and that he had, from improper motives, suppressed evidence which, if known, would convict him of having involved the Nation in a useless and expensive war, without and against the consent of Congress– of having been criminally negligent in supplying the Army with wagons, provisions and other necessary means of subsistence– of having sought to destroy the reputation of General Taylor, by means of false, covert, underhanded, and dishonorable means,– and of a degree of folly and criminality, in reference to the whole conduct of the war, which, so far from entitling him to a vote of thanks, would, when all the facts come to be known, call down upon his head a sentence of universal condemnations.

Note– Mr. Woofolk was understood, in his reply to Mr. Moore, to admit, though he did not say so in so many words, that there had been an understanding between President Polk and Santa Anna, at the time of his return to Mexico; that Santa Anna was to bring about a treaty of peace between the two nations as speedily as practicable; but that such was the state of excitement among the Mexican people against the U. States, that his purpose could not then be effected; and that the feeling against this country was still too strong for him to succeed in bringing them to agree to a peace. And it was inferred from his remarks, that the President still expected that the understanding between Santa Anna and himself would ultimately be carried into effect. Whether Mr. W. spoke from any knowledge of the facts come to be known, call down upon his head a sentence of universal condemnations.
A LOCOFOCO PUZZLE

The Locofoco papers affect to be exceedingly surprised at what appears to them to be the inconsistency of the Whigs, who, while they express the opinion that the war with Mexico has been both unconstitutionally and unnecessarily waged, yet rejoice over the victories of our arms, and even intimate the desire and the purpose to confer upon the heroic commander of our forces on the Rio Grande the highest reward which a grateful people can bestow upon a faithful public servant. There is, however, in truth, nothing inconsistent in condemning the authors of the war and the war itself, and at the same time uniting, heart and hand in its vigorous prosecution. It is, in fact, a beautiful illustration of the trite sentiment of Decatur, "Our country: may she always be right; but our country, right or wrong." We may denounce the authors of a war which we believe to have been declared without just and sufficient cause, and for purposes and objects in themselves unworthy and improper – a war which neither the outraged rights of the nation nor its wounded honor required to be waged, in defence of the one or in vindication of the other. And yet, the war being begun, we may not only consistently, but we are bound by our allegiance to our country and by our obligation to obey the powers that be, to aid in its efficient and successful prosecution. Influenced by motives of this sort, we have seen that while Whig Legislators have promptly united with their political opponents in placing under the control of the President large bodies of men and millions of dollars, to the full extent of his own estimates of the wants of the public serve, Whig Soldiers have been equally prompt in rushing to the field of battle, and sealing with their blood their devotion to their country, and attesting their determination, under all circumstances, to sustain the honor of its flag, whenever and wherever their Government may cause it to be unfurled. They separate the Administration, [fold] and denounce, from the Country, to which they owe undivided allegiance. They proclaim their opposition to the one, therefore, while they obey, as good citizens, the laws of the other. They regret that unwise or vicious Rulers have unsheathed the sword; but they regret and censure the futility which brought on the war, yet, once involved in strife, they urge and aid in a vigorous prosecution of hostilities as the most effective mode of restoring peace. As the Baltimore American, commenting on an article in the Union, in which the Whigs are denounced for applauding Taylor, while they condemn Polk, well asks;

"For what other purpose are we now striking such fearful blows in Mexico? Who is pleased with this war on its own account? Is there any one who professes to be delighted with it and does not wish to see it ended? Nay, the public anxiety to see it satisfactorily ended is every day growing stronger and stronger – so much so that the Administration will not be sustained in any exorbitant demands which may drive Mexico to desperation, and defeat the hope of a peace within a reasonable time. With all the martial enthusiasm of our people, they are not blind to justice and reason, nor steeled against the dictates of humanity – whatever may be the reckonings of those who calculate every thing for political effect.

As for Gen. Taylor, he is now fighting in Mexico upon the same principles which animated the Whigs to unite in supporting measures, in Congress for the efficient prosecution of the war. He obeys the government in whose service his is; they obeyed the requisitions of duty to their country to whose honor and welfare they are devoted. Yet both are anxious to see the war ended; and both are in the habit of believing that it might have been avoided, if wise and prudent counsels had prevailed.

But the idea of 'stealing all the honors of a war' which the Administration got up for its own especial behead – this is the crying enormity. If this be not Hat burglary, then Dogberry, like necessity, knows no law. But the truth is, this Texas business, from first to last, has proved a bad speculation. Mr. Tyler went into it, and suffered. Mr. Polk is following in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor. Both accumulated capital for others to use."

[MSH]
claims, which it adds, it "shall weigh in the best spirit," being entirely uncommitted to any candidate. Whereupon the Baltimore American well remarks:

"Here is an indication of some promise. Approving of Gen. Taylor’s views of the constitution, and of the policy in which the government should be administered, what will the Union do? Support Gen. Taylor? No. It will merely be able to appreciate his claims to the Presidency.’ – Unlike the player queen, the Union does not promise too much.

"Speaking however of 'claims to the Presidency,' the political paper should know that Gen. Taylor makes none. The people make claims upon him.”

Tuesday, May 4, 1847: RW24i36p1c2  284 words.

CALIFORNIA

The exploits of Cortez have been a favorite source of illustration during the Mexican war. We have concluded that what he did, we may do. It happened to this famous hero once, that a successor was appointed to him, and that instead of relinquishing his authority, he turned his arms against his rival, took him prisoner and sent him back from whence he came. The nature of man seems not to have essentially changed since that, as the last news from California indicates that there is some chance of a civil war between two of Mr. Polk’s Governors. The N. O. Picayune says:

"We are much concerned to learn that a serious difficulty has arisen between Gen. Kearney and Com. Stockton, touching the civil government of California. Our information is to the effect that Com. Stockton refused to acknowledge Gen. Kearney’s right to assume the civil magistracy of the province and that Col. Fremont joined with him in resisting the orders of the General Government conferring the office of governor upon Gen. Kearney. This misunderstanding, it was feared would be of serious disadvantage to the American interests in that distant region.”

There is a terrible amount of mystification about this matter. Com. Stockton’s despatches imply that he was at the head of all operations, and especially that he commanded the forces in the battles of the 8th and 9th of January. Lieut. Emory, who is Gen. Kearny’s bearer of despatches, states positively that the latter commanded in both of those battles. We shall hear soon of the establishment of a new empire, with Com. Stockton, by the grace of God, King of California. The days of Cortez’ and the Pizarros have come back. – Charleston Mercury.

Tuesday, May 4, 1847, RW24i36p1c2  59 words.

COMING FROM THE WAR

Capt. McManus, the commander of the State Fencibles, has just returned from the seat of war, to Jackson, (Miss.) He left the city weighing about one hundred and eighty pounds; but come back reduced to ninety. Though unable to command his company at Buena Vista, he was furnished a horse and remained with it all day on horse back.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 4, 1847, RW24i36p1c4  981 words.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE BATTLE OF BUENA VISTA, IN SCRIPTURAL STYLE.

1. And it came to pass in those days when the war between the children of brother Jonathan and the children of Ishmael, known as the Mexicans, was prosecuted with rigor.

2. With the object of conquering a piece of Mexico.

3. That the army of the Mexicans crossed over the wilderness which stretches from Matehuala and Agua Nueva, some forty leguas, headed by their chief captain Antonio, whose surname was Lopez de Santa Anna.

4. And Zachary, one of the mightiest of Brother Jonathan, was the chief capitain of the host of the Americans at Agua Nueva, or the New Water, in the heart of the enemy’s country.

5. Howbeit, the chief captain over all the American armies in Mexico was Winfield, a mighty man of valor, who stood like Soul, the first king of Israel, a head and shoulders above has peers.

6. Who after supping a “hasty plate of soup” in the chief city of Washington, put on all the panoply of the war, and with ships and transports, a great fleet and huge engines, and twelve thousand men of war, set sail to Vera Cruz, the chief seaport of the Mexicans.

7. Where, also, there was a prodigious (illegible) black as thunder, and grim as death, settling out like a huge prison in the midst of the sea.

8. And Antonio, the chief captain of the Mexicans, had a wooden leg.

9. For the Gauls had bombarded the castle, once upon a time, when Antonio was its defender, and a stray shot from the enemy wounded him (illegible).

10. And Winfield, when he repaired to Vera Cruz with his mighty host, hearing that Antonio was at San Luis Potosi, midway between Vera Cruz and Agua Nueva.

11. And Hearing that the Mexican armies were fast for provisions, and could not budge a peg from the want thereof;

12. And thinking that Antonio would be utterly unable to cross the desert to the discomfiture of Zachary;

13. And called upon Zachary, and took from him the mail body of the regular soldiers, and told him to "lay low and keep dark," and in order to be perfectly safe, to fall into Monterey, under the shadow of the mountains, where the enemy could not reach him, if peradventure they should cross the desert.

14. But Zachary was exceeding wroth, and determined to have a crack at 'em any how.

15. Moreover, the water at Agua Nueva was wholesome to the men; and as it was on the edge of the desert, he could see further that under the mountains of Monterey.

16. And though left with but 5,000 young men, he resolved to stand the racket.

17. And hearing from the spies which were sent out to sour the country that Antonio was approaching with a mighty host of cannoneers, rancheros, lancers, horse, foot and dragoons.

18. And furthermore, that the chief captain of the Mexicans was anxious to immortalize himself in a great battle with the Americans.

19. Old Zachary put both hands in his pockets, and said he would give him a chance.

20. And Santa Anna, which is Antonio, drew nigh unto Agua Nueva, with 17,000 men.

21. And Zachary fell back to the hacienda of Buena Vista, of Good Prospect, where he could have a Good Prospect, of the enemy.

22. Where he planted his men by regiments, battalions, squadrons, and companies, among the hills and ravines, flanked by the barren and sun burnt mountains.

23. And in the second month, and on the 221 day of the month, and on the eleventh hour of the day, the two armies were pitched for the battle.

24. And the Mexicans were spread around just like a host of starving wolves, while the army of Brother Jonathan mustered like a small herd of tigers among hills.

25. And Antonio, sent to Zachary a messenger asking him respectfully to surrender, as it would be a great accommodation.

26. And Zachary respectfully declined.

And the Battle began with some heavy cannonading in the afternoon of the day on which the great Washington was born.

27. So that the Mexicans unwittingly joined the Americans in the celebration.

28. And again on the next day, the battle war renewed and sustained all the day with great slaughter on both sides.

29. And the enemy being starved, fought over dead bodies of the Americans for the meat and drink which was in their knapsacks.

30. An Antonio had to drive others at the (illegible) of the lance into battle, so exceeding hot was the fire of the American Volunteers.
31. And there tell of the enemy near two thousand men. And at night the Chief Captain of the Mexicans, with his shattered army, fell back upon Agua Nueva.

32. And carried with him three of the great guns of the Americans which were taken by reason that their defenders were shot down.

33. And issued a proclamation, that on the morrow, when his men had eaten a mouthful of provisions, he would finish the work.

34. But instead thereof, he precipitately retreated across the desert to San Luis Potosi, on the pretence that Gen. Patterson was coming to town.

35. And Zachary resumed his position at Agua Nueva, for his men were dry.

36. An he sent a messenger to Washington with dispatches of all that had been done, and exhibited his loss to be near eight hundred men in killed and wounded.

37. And told the Adjutant General to tell the Secretary of War, surnamed old leather breeches that it was, perhaps, as well to keep the desert between humans the enemy as to admit them down to Monterey.

38. And there was great joy among the Americans albeit may hearts were grieved, by reason of the slain.

39. And Old Zachary was pronounced by acclamations as one of the b'hoys.

Tuesday, May 4, 1847, RW24i36p1c5

OFFICIAL

Letters have just been received at the War Department from General Taylor. The last bears date on the 28th of March. A previous letter runs as follows: and it pays the proper tribute to the gallant conduct of Col. Morgan, of the Ohio volunteers:

See: Niles National Register, /Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#DATE72.151TaylorCAMARGO

The last letter from General Taylor, of the 28th March, reports that our communications with the rear are now measurably secure, no interruption having taken place since that reported on the 20th ult. A train arrived on the 24th, under escort of the 1st Indiana regiment, and another was daily expected. It is understood, that the regular cavalry of Urrea had retired from that quarter across the mountains; a natural result of the retreat of the main army towards San Luis and of our precautions to secure the trains. All was quiet at Saltillo. The troops in good health and the wounded rapidly recovering. The inhabitant, both at Saltillo and Monterey, were generally returning to their homes, and, in the country, are engaged in planting their crops.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 4, 1847, RW24i36p2c2

GENERAL TAYLOR IN KENTUCKY. Illegible.

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p2c2 664 words.

INTERESTING FROM MEXICO.

The fact that Santa Anna, on saving enough of Mexico, carried with him his cabinet to the scene of action has given rise to the very plausible surmise that his object is to negotiate and not fight.

A letter from “a highly respectable and reliable source” in the city of Mexico, [fold], the Spanish paper in New Orleans, gives a very gloomy account of the state of affairs at the rapid consequent upon the dissentious and discords of the […] factions into which the Mexican people are divided. The writer says:
“There is the war party, who are not only in favor of war, but of one conducted with decision, energy and real earnest. There is the peace party, which is desirous of effecting an accommodation with the United States, even at the sacrifice of a large portion of their territory. Another party – that of the clergy – hate the Americans as heretica and Jews, but they are unwilling to open the purses of the church to contribute to prosecute the war against the ‘enemies of their religion.’ Gomez Farias has a party which is in favor of hypothecating the property of the church to raise funds to carry on the war. This party is weak, for Santa Anna publicly repudiates it, though it is said he secretly encourages their design. Lastly, there is a party which has always existed to a considerable extent in Mexico, intent upon selfish purposes, disregarding the circumstances of the State – in peace or in war, regarding nothing but the promotion of their own self-interest and ambitious. This party has seized the present occasion as affording an opportunity of promoting their interests, entirely oblivious of the calls of patriotism.”

The writer adds the following interesting facts and speculations:

“Santa Anna leaves to–day [April 1] for Jalapa, where he will unite his force with that of Gen La Vega, who is now at the defences of the National Bridge. Santa Anna says that he goes to conquer or die; but this he has said so often, that we cannot put much reliance in the threat. He takes with him about 20,000 men of all arms, the greater part of them being taken from [jarochada] the lowest class of the people, who are very good for fighting. They will, however, have no other advantage over the army which marched from San Louis, except that they will not be compelled to the same dreary march through vast wildernesses, and exposed to continual cold and rain. But they are equally destitute of resources and means, having no provisions and no money with which to buy any. We have, therefore, no reasons for expecting any other results than have characterized the former enterprises. It is said that if the Americans pass the National Bridge, and march towards the capital, the whole people of Mexico will rise en masse against the invaders. But we do not doubt that a force of 10,000 or 12,000 Americans will not encounter on the march, a Mexican army sufficiently large or determined to resist their onward progress.

“What do the Mexicans hope for when, during a whole year they are permitted so many favorable opportunities of repelling the invaders to pass buy unimproved? Witness the battles of Monterey and Buena Vista – the debarkation of the American troops in the very face of Vera Cruz, and when the expedition had become so universally known and so generally expected.

“Santa Anna says there shall never be peace as long as there is on American in Mexico. But Santa Anna is, in truth, most desirous of all other persons for peace, and will be the first to recommend it, when it is safe to do so. – There are many persons in Mexico who have learned to understand an appreciate the Americans, their laws, government and institutions – but there are many Mexicans who thoroughly despise the Yankees, their manners and customs. [fold] yet they call themselves freemen, and mockingly call their nation a republic!”

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p2c2, 325 words.

A LETTER FROM VERA CRUZ.

The Courrier des Etats Unis, of New York, of the 1st instant, contains a letter from Vera Cruz, dated the 9th of April, said to be from a reliable source, which expresses the opinion that Santa Anna is at hear inclined for peace, and that “an arrangement is not beyond the reach of probability.” The Courrier’s correspondent states that he has seen an authentic copy of a letter written by Senor Atocha (Mr. Polk’s messenger) to Senor Rejon, in which the proposition of the United States Government to that of Mexico is thus stated:

“The adoption of the Rio Grande as the boundary between the two republics, from its mouth to the parallel of California. This parallel strikes the Rio Gila between the 33rd and 34th degrees of latitude; the line, therefore, would by no means come down as low as the 25th of 26th degree, as has been pretended. Such a line would take from Mexico a third of their territory, whereas Senor Antocha’s would cut off only New Mexico and California.

“The United States would pay for this acquisition from fifteen to twenty millions of dollars, besides taking upon themselves the settlement of the old claims, amounting to eleven millions. Adding the expenses of the war, which Senor Atocha estimates at sixty millions, the whole amount thus paid for New Mexico and California would be from 86 to 91 millions; a large price, and perhaps even more than the territory can be worth.

“A treaty of commerce and of alliance, offensive and defensive, to be established, by which the United States should engage to protect Mexico, by force of arms if necessary against any European attempt to introduce a monarchical system. And the Cabinet of Washington would bind itself not to recognize the independence of any Mexican confederation, as also to defend the frontier of both republics against Indian hostilities, keeping up for this purpose a force of give or six thousand men.”

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p2c5  716 words.

LATER FROM THE BRAZOS.

From the New Orleans Picayune, April 24.

The U.S. propeller Trumbull, Capt Stotesbury, arrived yesterday from the Brazos, having sailed on the 18th inst. She brings no news of importance.

Gen Taylor was at Monterey on the 5th inst., while the army remained at its old position under Gen Wool. Gen Taylor was pushing up supplies from Camargo to Saltillo with all rapidity, and with a view to a forward movement upon San Luis. Men only will be wanting for that purpose.

The volunteers are returning towards the mouth of the Rio Grande as their terms of service are expiring. The right wing of the Kentucky Legion had reached the Brazos, and was awaiting there the arrival of the other wing, prior to sailing for this port. We learn that none of the volunteers scarcely are re-enlisting.

In the total absence of letters from our correspondent, we copy a number of items from the Matamoros Flag of the 14th inst.

ROBBERY. – The sum of fifteen hundred dollars was abstracted by some scoundrel from the money of the Subsistence Department in this place on Friday night last. One thousand dollars was done up in a box constructed to hold that amount of money, and the balance was contained in a small bag, and both deposited into a large wooden box, the lock of which was torn off. There was no relaxation of vigilance on the part of those whose duty it was to watch over the funds at the time of the theft. The robbery must elude the keenest watchfulness.

The North Carolina regiment, as we learn from one of its very clever lieutenants, Staton, is at San Francisco, nine miles this side of Camargo. On the 8th inst. they were joined by their commander, Col. Paine. Capt. Wilson, our readers will recollect, has been appointed colonel of infantry, but prefers remaining with the Edgecombe boys, whose mothers constituted him their guardian during the war.

Lieut. Staton, of the North Carolina regiment, came down the river on Friday last in charge of a number of sick volunteers belonging to his regiment. On the passage down two of the died, viz: Geo. W. Barnes, 1st sergeant, company A; J.J.F. Stokes, 3rd corporal, company E.

MURDER – Wm. C. Gladman, a free mulatto who owns a barber shop in Galveston, but who has been tarrying in our city for the last month or two, was missed from his employment for three of four days. On Saturday morning last his body was discovered by our carrier boys floating in the lake back of our office. It bore the marks of violence, and as he was known to have had a considerable sum of money in his possession, it is supposed avarice prompted the deed.

MORE VIOLENCE – A Mexican was horribly mangled by cuts with a knife, in a fight near the Plaza, on Monday night last. The unfortunate man is not expected to live. On Tuesday night, as we have been informed, another one was shot at a fandango, and it is thought will not survive the wound.

Col. Cushing has issued the following stringent order, with a view to put an end to the disturbances which have prevailed so long in Matamoros:

ORDER – No. 71.

HEADQUARTERS, MATAMOROS, April 13, 1847

For the better maintenance of safety and good morals at this post, and in special regard to the well being of the troops stationed here, also in execution of previous orders emanating from the commanding general, and from officers in immediate command at the post, It is ordered:

1. All houses or other places of gambling of whatever name or nature, or of public dancing, at this post are hereby closed.

2. All sale or traffic in distilled spirits at this post is prohibited.

3. The proprietors of all buildings or other places in which gambling or public dancing occurs, or distilled spirits are sold, as well as the occupants or other persons engaged or employed in an about the same, will be held severally responsible after the present date for any infraction of this order, and will be summarily dealt with according to martial law.

4. Maj. Abbott is charged with the execution of this order.

By order of C. Cushing, Col. Comd’g.

W. W. H. DAVIS, Adj’t.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p2c5 247 words.

THE CHANCES OF PEACE.
We saw a private letter from a very intelligent officer at Vera Cruz, dated the 10th inst., in which he says that several of the States of the Mexican confederacy have denounced the war with the United States, and threaten to secede unless peace should be made. Many Mexicans predicted a peace within sixty days, but our correspondent puts little faith in auguries so favorable. He thinks the great difficulty in the way of peace is the fact that Santa Anna is so nearly crushed that he dare not make a treaty. – Nor does there appear to be any one else in Mexico strong enough to incur the great responsibility. None of the old politicians will venture upon the step. Our correspondent adds: “Some man now unknown to fame, with nothing to lose, and every thing to gain, may arise and advocate a peace policy successfully. His want of ambition or the little chance of his obtaining power may prevent him from becoming obnoxious to the jealousies of parties, and gain for him adherents generally. He may succeed in making a peace which everybody will be glad of; but how long before it will be used as an element of political warfare?”

The Legislature of the State of Vera Cruz, sitting at Jalapa, was said to be deliberating at last accounts upon the propriety of making peace, independent of the General Government.

The State of Zacatecas has declared itself independent – so writes us an intelligent correspondent!

Tuesday, May 4, 1847, RW24i36p2c5  166 words.

THE MARINES OF THE GULF SQUADRON

During the late events at Vera Cruz, the marines of the Gulf Squadron were formed into three companies under the command of Capt. Edson, a popular and gallant officer, assisted by Lieuts Garland, Slack, Simms, Adams and Mayson, of the Marine Corps, and placed at the disposition of Gen. Scott by Com. Conner. They were attached to the 3d Artillery under Col. Belton, and constituted about a half of his command. They landed on the 9th March with the line of the army, and were very actively employed during the investment, and were the first to open and the last to leave the trenches. The first man killed in the trenches was a marine. They were detached by Gen. Scott when the city had surrendered, and after marching into the city returned to their respective vessels. Their services have been warmly acknowledged both by Gen. Scott and Gen Worth in their respective general orders, and elsewhere, and also to Capt. Edson on the occasion of detachment.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p2c7  465 words.

FROM THE ARMY.

From the Washington Union, Saturday 1st.

Letters were received by the Department of the War and Navy, by last evening’s mail, from Vera Cruz, in the Massachusetts steamer; arrived at New Orleans. General Scott’s last letter bear date on the 11th April. It states the arrangements he was making for the advance towards the capital. It contains no intelligence that is as late or more interesting than what was received at New Orleans by the Picayune and the Delta. The General states that Gen. Twiggs had passed the National Bridge, and was on the road to Jalapa. The first report was that Santa Anna had only 4,000 troops – then the account increased them to 6,000 – and, finally, Gen Twiggs’ despatch augmented them to about 15,000 entrenched at the pass of Cero Gordo. Another letter, written on the 14th, has been received at the War Office, stating that Gen. Scott had left Vera Cruz on the 12th, and Gen Worth on the 13th. They refer to the same rumors that were published last night in the “Union” with this variation, that only two members of the Mexican Congress were reported to be with Santa Anna, for the purpose of making overtures for peace. But nothing has been positively ascertained about it.

Com. Perry’s despatches to the Navy contain nothing that we can, at this time, lay before our readers.

Extract from a letter of Capt. Hughes, of the Corpus Topographical Engineers.

Vera Cruz, April 14, 1847

“Yesterday despatches were received here from Gen Twiggs, at Plano del Rio, dated 12th instant, stating that Santa Anna, with about 15,000 men, had occupied the strong pass of Cerro Gordo, (five miles in his advance) about fifteen miles from Jalapa, where he had an additional force of 7,000 or 8,000 men. Gen. Patterson being ill, Gen. Twiggs proposed to attack the enemy to-day, [14th instant,] but I presume orders have been sent him to defend it until the arrival of the commander-in-chief, who will reach the place to-day. It is now believed that a great battle will be fought at Jalapa, or a few miles the other side, at a formidable pass, called La Hoya, which is gained, opens to us the road to Perotec and to Puebla.

“It is not thought that anything serious will occur at Cerro Gordo, as it is represented that the position may be turned. I am sorry to tell you that Capt. Johnson, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, [recently appointed lieutenant colonel of voltigeurs,) was very dangerously wounded in two places, while [illegible] on the 12th instant. His wounds had been dressed, most of the balls extracted, and the wounds pronounced not to be mortal. God grant his valuable life may be spared to his family, his friends, and his country!”

[MSH]
A LETTER FROM CAPT. HARPER OF STAUNTON.

A letter from Capt. Harper of Staunton, dated near Monterey, on the 18th of March, after complimenting the Virginia Regiment, speaks thus of old Rough 'n Ready: – "Gen. Taylor has just returned to this place from Catarreta. The General is a remarkably hale, hearty looking man, of medium height, thick set and stoop shoulder'd, and would weigh, I suppose, about 175. In dress, &c. he might be readily taken for a wagon master. The Army, I find, are enthusiastic in his praise."

THE LATE APPOINTMENTS.

The New Orleans Picayune makes the following very just remarks, upon the recent promotion of Generals Quitman, Pillow and Cushing:

"The task of a fault finder is an ungracious one always, yet we may be permitted to say that those promotions, (with one exception) were not indicated by the confidence of the army in the persons selected, nor suggested by any display of great military abilities on the part of the appointees. – Gen Quitman distinguished himself, it is true, at Monterey, and on this account his promotion will be more acceptable to the army; but for the other two we look in vain for services entitling them to exalted rank. Gen Pillow's defences of Camargo were the laughter of the service. In throwing up intrenchments he actually made the ditch on the wrong side – converting a breast work designed for the protection of the city into a convenient cover for an assailing party. Now that he is a major general, it is reasonable to suppose that the next time he tries his hand at the business he will dig his ditches on both sides.

"Gen. Cushing has yet to smell gunpowder. He is a man of talents and distinguished above his compeers as a tactician in civil matters. If his strategy in the war prove equal to his manoeuvring in politics he will make a very extensive general. Yet there is great doubt whether his civil instincts qualify him for command in a service where the majority is with the enemy.

"There were at Monterey men whom a crowd would spontaneously look to as leaders in a crisis of difficulty. – Such men as Gen A S Johnson, of Texas; Col Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi; Col Campbell, of Tennessee, & c., who disting dished themselves in battle, and who possess the military knowledge and actual experience necessary for high command. They enjoy also the confidence of the soldiery. If gallant deeds, as in the case of Gen. Quitman, are regarded as claims to promotion, these gentlemen were equally conspicuous at Monterey. Colonel Davis has since then freshened his laurels at Buena Vista, and Col Campbell was before Vera Cruz with his regiment. The country will acknowledge the right of these brave officers to complain of neglect, and the service will suffer from a species of favoritism calculated to drive the best men out of it. There is that in every Southern mind, or Northern, or either, which rebels at the idea of making the gallant and distinguished Davis subordinate to an untried officer Gen. Cushing. We would not disparage Gen. Cushing, but his sword has not yet tested the dint of the battle, whilst Col. Davis has fleshed his sabre in fields all reeking with carnage. Gen. Cushing has gone to join Gen. Taylor, where he will rank officers whose prowess decided the issues of combat. This is all wrong to our thinking, and we would not be surprised if the twelve months' enlistments refused to a man to prolong their stay in Mexico. It is a hard service that in which chivalry and successful valor are not rewarded by rank and command."

LATER FROM VERA CRUZ.

From the N. O. Picayune, April 23rd

Important Intelligence – Advance of the American Army – Santa Anna's Preparations for Defence – Battle Supposed to have been Fought on the 15th inst., &c.

The U.S. steamship Massachusetts arrived here last evening from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the evening of the 14th. Our correspondence is down to the latest hours. The news is of the most stirring interest. The best advices lead to the impression that a battle was fought at Cerro Gordo, nearly midway between the Puente Nacional and Jalapa, on Thursday or Friday last. We have heretofore announced the advance of Gen. Twigg's division into the interior. When last heard from he was beyond the Puente Nacional and in close proximity to the Mexican army. Gen Scott was expected to arrive at Gen. Twigg's headquarters on the night of the 14th inst. Gen. Worth left Vera Cruz with the last division of the army on the 13th, and bivouacked that night at San Juan – about 12 miles in the interior. He probably joined the advance on the 15th. Santa Anna was said to be at Cerro Gordo, where La Vega and Canalizo were posted with a considerable command. The Mexican force at that point, when joined by Santa Anna, was estimated at fifteen thousand strong – consisting of two thousand regular infantry, there thousand cavalry, and the remainder irregulars. The pass of Cerro Gordo is forty-four miles from Vera Cruz and is naturally a very strong one. Some difficulty is anticipated in forcing it. – Rumors state that Santa Anna can obtain any amount of irregular force he may desire. Reconnoitering parties from the American army had been fired upon and several wounded – amongst who was Capt. (now Lieut. Col.) Johnson, of the Topographical Engineers, who was shot in the arm and hip whilst examining the Mexican works at Cerro Gordo. Intelligent officers who arrived in the Massachusetts, entertain very little doubt that a general engagement has taken place.

A number of soldiers have been shot in passing the road to and fro. All accounts represent the Americans as confident of victory, and the Mexicans burning for vengeance. Our next advices from Vera Cruz will, we doubt not bring us the details of an important engagement.

We subjoin the news from the Vera Cruz papers and our correspondence. The letter from Mr. Kendall of the 14th, written at camp San Juan, is the very latest from the army. The soldiers were suffering at Vera Cruz from sickness, but the vomito had not appeared.

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune]

So many vessels are leaving almost every day that it is hard keeping the run of them. I send a line by every one I hear of.

A German gentleman has just told me – it is now 10 o’clock, A.M. – that Santa Anna was at his old hacienda of Errcerro day before yesterday. This place is close by Jalapa. Canalizo and La Vega are at Cerro Gordo, where no less than three heights have been fortified. Gen. Scott went out last night; Gen. Worth, with his division, marched this morning, and will bivouac to night at San Juan, on the other side of Santa Fe. Gen. Twiggs is at Plau del Rio, close by the Mexicans, and there are those who think it more than probable that he has already has a brush with them. It is thought the position at Cerro Gordo can be turned, and in case La Vega and Canalizo make good their retreat that they will make another stand at Los Dios. Time will show.

The hospitals are full, and the sickness is said to be on the increase. I still cannot learn that there has been any well authenticated case of vomito, although many have died of fever. I am off to-day for the headquarters of the army.

Yours, &c.
G.W.K.

---------------

Vera Cruz, April 14, 1847

The Massachusetts sails in half an hour, and I hasten to send you the latest intelligence received from the advance of our army on its march towards Jalapa. Despatches were received here yesterday evening from Gen. Twiggs, stating that the enemy had been discovered, and that in a reconnaissance some eighteen miles beyond the National Bridge, at a point called the Black Forrest Pass, Capt. J.E. Johnson, of the Topographical Engineers – now Lieut. Col. of voltiguers – was severely wounded with a shot through the arm and another through the thigh. It is more than probable that Gens. Twiggs and Pillow have had something of a “brush with the enemy.” Santa Anna is known to have arrived at this pass with a force said to be 15,000 strong, consisting of 2,000 regulars and the balance of irregular troops – of whom 3,000 are cavalry. The point above named is a very strong one, and naturally affords great advantages to the enemy, but my word for it, they will not hold it long after our troops assail it.

Shut up as I am in my room I cannot know much of what is going on. Mr. Kendall started last evening on the way to the advance of the army; he will probably be in the camp sometime to-day. He wrote you a letter before starting, which goes with this. It is becoming quite sickly here, but as yet I hear nothing of the vomito amongst the soldiers [fold] excepting those who stay to garrison this city, will soon be beyond the influence of the impure and sickly air of the coast.

I am still slowly recovering from my accident, and hope to be with you ere many days. It is entirely out of the question to think of following the army in my condition, and I wouldn’t stay in Vera Cruz a month for it. I learn that the steamship New Orleans, now here, is to make one more trip to Tampico for mules, which are much wanted here, and after that she goes to your city.

Yours, &c.,
F. A. L.

P.S. – When Capt. Johnson was wounded in his reconnaissance, he was with an escort of the 2d Dragoons, under Capt. Hardie.

F. A. L.

Camp at San Juan, April 14, 1847.

I arrived at this camp at 11 o’clock last night, the road from Vera Cruz running for the most part through heavy sand. The division of Gen Worth, from the excessive heat and weari some road, suffered incredibly.

The news in camp is stirring. An express has come down from Gen. Twiggs to the effect that Santa Anna was before him, at Cerro Gordo, with 15,000 men, as near as could be judged from reconnaissance made by Capt. Hardie and other officers of dragoons. Lieut. Col. J.E. Johnson has been severely but not mortally wounded while examining Santa Anna’s works, which appear to be a succession of breast works on the eminences in the vicinity of Cerro Gordo. Everything would now go to show that Santa Anna is determined to make a bold stand.

A dragoon, who had been sent down express by Gen. Twiggs, was yesterday found shot by the roadside just beyond this. His papers had not been touched. The Mexicans are playing a bloody and at the same time bolder game than is usual for them, as it is thought they have killed no less than fifty of our men within the last three days on the road.

Gen. Scott stopped last night nine miles from this – to–night he will reach Gen’l. Twiggs’s position. If Santa Anna is as strong as he is represented, he probably will not be attacked for two or three days.

I write in great haste.

G. W. K.

--------------

On the 11th inst. Gen. Scott issued the following proclamation, which no one will doubt was written by him:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, VERA CRUZ,
April 11, 1847

To the Good People of Mexico.

PROCLAMATION.

Mexicans! At the head of a powerful army, soon to be doubled – a part of which is now advancing on your capital – and with another army under Maj. Gen. Taylor in march from Saltillo towards San Luis Potosi – I think myself called upon to address you.

Mexicans! Americans are not your enemies; but the enemies for a time, of the men, who, a year ago, misgoverned you and brought about this unnatural war between two great Republics. We are the friends of the peaceful inhabitants of the country we occupy, and the friends of your holy religion, its hierarchy and its priesthood. The same with devout Catholics, and respected by our Government, laws and people.

For the church of Mexico, the unoffending inhabitants of the country and their property, I have from the first done every thing in my power to place them under the safeguard of martial law against the few bad men in this army.

My orders, to that effect, known to all, are precise and rigorous. Under them several Americans have already been punished, by fine, for the benefit of Mexicans, besides imprisonment; and one, for a rape, has been hung by the neck.

Is this not a proof of good faith and energetic discipline? Other proofs shall be given as often as injuries to Mexicans may be detected.

On the other hand, injuries committed by individuals, or parties of Mexico, not belonging to the public forces, upon individuals, small parties, trains of wagons and teams, or of pack mules, or on any other person or property belonging to this army, contrary to the laws of war, shall be punished with rigor – or if the particular offender be not delivered up by Mexican authorities, the punishment shall fall upon entire cities, towns or neighborhoods.

Let then, all good Mexicans remain at home, or at their peaceful occupations; but they are invited to bring in, for sale, horses, mules, beef, cattle, corn, barley, wheat, flour for bread, and vegetables. Cash will be paid for everything this army may take or purchase, and protection will be given to sellers. The Americans are strong enough to offer these assurances which, should Mexicans wisely accept, this war may soon be happily ended, to the honor and advantage of both belligerents. Then the Americans, having converted enemies into friends, will be happy to take leave of Mexico, and return to their own country.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p4c4  1,048 words.

CORRESPONDENCE OF NEW ORLEANS DELTA.

Mexico, 29th March, 1847

Eds. Delta – The city of Montezuma is in a most extraordinary situation at the present writing. Farias and the "Constitutionalists" had a civil war of twenty–three days duration, in which nobody was killed, and neither party lost or gained an inch of ground. That is, no one was killed of the fighters, unless we count some accidental deaths; but a great number of harmless citizens lost their lives by the incessant firing up and down the streets, with which the belligerents amused themselves instead of going within reach of each other. Santa Anna wrote lovingly so both parties, and did his best to urge them to each other up, but as soon as he could reach the city with some force, he threw them all overboard. He is playing for the Dictatorship; and is in fact, clothed with absolute power at this moment. He has induced the clergy to aid him with money to meets and, as he says, to exterminate Scott and “the perfidious invaders.” But his plan undoubtedly is to make peace, and while he is yet entrenched behind American bayonets, and perhaps with the help of American gold, he will put his enemies where they cannot interfere with him. As soon as he has a clear field, he will [...] his army to seize the possessions of the church, to maintain and increase it as the foundation of a throne. Whatever he pretends, he has his eye on the church property, and has twice put forward Gomez Farias as a cats’-paw to grasp it, but when he found the clergy too strong for him, he made no scruple to sacrifice his tool and come out of the other side.

---

Vera Cruz, April 14, 1847:

EDS. DELTA – There has been a skirmish at Puente Nacional, and we hourly look for the intelligence of the capture of Cerro Gordo, a strong mountain fort, twenty–two miles from Jalapa. A decisive battle is expected at this point, for it is the best vantage ground this side of Perote. General Santa Anna was at or near Jalapa, at the last accounts, but by this time there is scarcely a doubt that Cerro Gordo is carried by assult, and the army in snug quarters at the healthful and delightful city of Jalapa.

Vera Cruz is as quiet and well governed as any city in the United States. It would improve the health some to throw down the walls, and let in the fresh air, as the commandant thinks of doing.

If the army takes any more of those beautiful brass 24's, I hope they will be sent home as trophies. There are in the town and castle nearly one hundred of them. They are of splendid workmanship, and superior to any the U. States has of the same caliber. They are worth about 5000 dollars a–piece, and would look extremely well in the "white settlements."

---

Vera Cruz Anchorage, April 12, 1847.

Eds. Delta – A large detachment of the squadron leaves to–day for Tuspan, commanded by the Commodore in person.

The officers anticipate something of a fight at the place. It is believed that there are upwards of 2000 troops at that place, under the command of Gen. Cos, with some sixty pieces of cannon.

The squadron captured at Alvarado sixty pieces of heavy cannon, all serviceable and in fine order with the exception of three.

The greater portion of the army is now on the road to Jalapa; rumor has it that Santa Anna is there with a large force and intends to dispute the pass near that place. The vomito has not yet made its appearance.

---

From the Vera Cruz Eagle of the 13th April

A PILOT DISCOVERED – Some day last week a number of Mexicans were discovered in the act of inciting the citizens in Tampico to revolt and drive the Americans from the place. We are not advised of the particulars, but learn that Col. Gates banished them from the city, forbidding their return under penalty of death.

THE CASTLE – The castle of San Juan de Ulua has undergone a thorough cleansing throughout, making it approach much nearer a place in which an American soldier ought to reside. We are informed that a more filthy place could scarcely be imagined, at the time our troops took possession.

TROOPS– The steamship New Orleans arrived yesterday from Tampico, having on board a company or irregular infantry, from Fort Snelling. Moses Y. Beach, of the N.Y. Sun, who is very recently from the city of Mexico, via Tampico, was a passenger on the New Orleans.

[Mr. Beach came aa a passenger on board the Massachusetts to this city yesterday. – Eds. Delta.]

EXECUTION – The execution of the colored man, Kirk, a citizen of the United States, convicted of committing a rape upon a person of a Mexican woman, and theft, took place on Saturday evening last. A large concourse of people were present, to witness the first execution under American authority, which has ever taken place since our occupation of this country. It will, no doubt, prove a salutary lesson to many who would destroy the safeties guarantied to good citizens, were not such punishments sometimes inflicted.

THE HOSPITAL – Many of our gallant soldiers are now prostrated by disease, and the hospitals are filled to overflowing with them. The disease most prevalent is diarrhea, which in many cases has proved fatal.

---

From the Vera Cruz Eagle of the 10th inst.

MILITARY COMMISSION – Besides that of rape, two other cases have been adjudged before the Military Commission. They were for theft committed by two privates of the 1st Pennsylvania Regiment of Volunteers. They were sentenced to one moth’s imprisonment in the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, and a fine of one moth’s pay.

DEATHS – It is with feelings of deep regret we feel ourselves compelled to announce the death of T.J. Lott, late of Covington, Miss. Also on the 7th inst., private Henry Dickson, of company F, Charleston, S.C., Division Volunteers. The deceased was the son of one of the most respectable Professors in the Medical College of his State, and will be long remembered for this urbanity of manners and kindness of department towards his fellow soldiers, one of whom pays this passing tribute to his memory.

Tuesday, May 4, 1847 RW24i36p4c5  151 words.

NOTICE TO COMMERCE.

The following Notice from the Mexican Consul at Havana, we translate from the Faro Industrial of the 17th.

I have the honor to give notice to Commerce that the supreme government of the Mexican Republic has instructed me, that goods and merchandise which may be carried from this port to Vera Cruz, and which do not appear to have be cleared (despatchados) at this Consulate, by the invoice which according to the existing revenue laws, is to be sent to the Minister of Finance, will be confiscated on their passage from Vera Cruz to any party of the Republic.

The Supreme Government also commands me to announce, that passengers coming to the Republic, whose [...] have not been examined by this Consulate, will not be permitted to either the country, but will be compelled to return to the place or places where they embarked.

BUENAVENTURA VIVO

Friday, May 7, 1847 RW24i37p1c5  344 words.

GENERAL TAYLOR’S PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

A Correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, who says that he has seen the old General in all conditions – on foot, horseback, sitting, standing, and snoring – on and off parade, and that all the likeness of him yet published are abominable caricatures. He adds: –

The General is not over 5 feet 7 or 8 inches high, is stout, and inclines to corpulency, would weigh, I should think, near 200 lbs., and the most prominent thing about him is an unusual shortness of legs. When he is sitting, he looks like a tall man – not so when standing. His face is intelligent, and it is usually lit up with a benevolent smile. He is in the habit, when speaking to any one, of partially closing his left eye. His hair is grey and grizzly. In one word, gentlemen, if you can imagine a plain, old Pennsylvania farmer, who has a farm paid for worth $5000, and nothing else in the world – an independent, jovial, don’t care a–fig kind of an old coon – you have “old Zack” before you. One word now as to the Presidency.

When the army last summer was at Matamoros, a Mr. Reeder, (I think), from Baltimore, came there to distribute medals to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers who had distinguished themselves at Palo Alto, &c. It is reported that while there, Mr. R. informed “old Zack” that he had been nominated by some persons in New York for the Presidency. The old General’s reply was characteristic. “Mr. Reeder, I don’t want it – I have no other or higher ambition than to remain at the head of my noble little army. I have always considered myself an honest man – my neighbors so considered me – but were I to accept a nomination, there are persons who would call me every thing that is bad, and others who would say of me, as they said of General Harrison, that I never was within two miles of a field of battle. No! no! – I don’t want it! I don’t want it!”

Friday, May 7, 1847 RW24i37p1c5  52 words.

THE VICTORY TO COME

Prentice says “We have before us maps of the battle grounds upon which General Taylor won his four great victories in Mexico. We have also before us a map of the battle ground upon which he win his great battle of 1848 – that is to say, a map of the United States.”

[MSH]
OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

We lay before our readers this morning official despatches from Col. Doniphan, whose march, at the head of a single regiment, to the capital of a populous Province, which, after a sanguinary engagement, in which he triumphed over thrice his own force, fell quietly into his possession, deserves to be ranked among the most adventurous and brilliant exploits of the Mexican War. It appears, however, from his letter to the Adjutant General, that the movement to Chihuahua formed no part of a well digested plan of operations, but that, with the small force under his command, beyond the reach of aid from any quarter, he was left exposed to all the hazards of defeat and massacre from the superior force which it might have been foreseen he would encounter, and which fortunately he overthrew. – That he was not cut off is ascribable not to the “eminent ability” of those by whose orders he undertook this fruitless expedition, but to the skill and courage of himself and of the men he commanded. Left unsupported as he is, too, when he expected to have been sustained by the whole force under Gen. Wool, and in command of troops whose term of service expires on the 1st of May, the expedition [...] to have been undertaken without any object – as the conquered territory will be necessarily abandoned, after remaining some weeks in possession of the conqueror. Whether the “glory” won by Col. Doniphan and his men is deemed sufficient recompense for the hardships and perils they have successfully encountered, must be left for wiser heads than our’s to determine.

We also publish official despatches from Gen. Kearny, the military commander in our remote “territory” of California, of which Commodore Stockton (as Gen. Kearny writes) has “assumed the title of Governor,” as the General himself had formerly done in New Mexico. The date of those despatches will give the reader some idea of the remoteness of this Pro–Consulate from the seat of government, and of the vast extent of our already “ocean–bound Republic.” The battles of our countrymen there, as at all other points of the extended line of military operations, though on a small scale, have been characterized by an indomitable spirit, and resulted in the most decisive triumphs. The Californians, too, have evinced more bravery and determination, in resisting the invader, than have been elsewhere displayed – but they have been forced to succumb to their “manifest destiny.”

What is to be the end of these things? Fortunately, perhaps, we cannot lift the curtain which hides the future from our sight. But it needs no prophet’s vision to see that they bode no good to the cause of free government – or at all events, none to the Union, as it was formed by the men of ’76, and to the Constitution which has been aptly called its Palladium. Our Pro–Consul [or self–constituted “Governing”] Commodore Stockton, is already “playing King” in California, with a “pomp and circumstance” commensurate rather with the extent of his empire than with the number of his legions or the magnificence of his Court. We have before us, for example, a programme of the arrangements made at San Francisco for the public reception at that place of the “conquering hero.” As a cotemporary remarks, it is certainly one of the richest things, in its way, ever seen. We publish it, in order that our readers may catch a glimpse of the Fernando Cortez–like style in which an American Commodore can enact the monarch in the new “territory” which he has “annexed” by proclamation to the American Union, and over which he has “assumed,” unrebuked, if indeed it be not authorized by the Administration, the title and functions of Governor! The following is the programme referred to:

PUBLIC RECEPTION OF HIS EXCELLENCY
ROBERT F. STOCKTON,
Governor and Commander–in–Chief of CALIFORNIA, &c., &c.

The Citizens of the District of San Francisco and vicinity, having united for the purpose of giving a public reception to His Excellency, Robert F. Stockton, on the occasion of his landing, on Monday, Oct. 5th, 1846; the following is the ORDER OF THE DAY:

1st. The citizens will assemble in ‘Portsmouth Square’ at 8, A.M., and form in procession in the following order:

CHIEF MARSHALL.
AID. AID.
MUSIC.

Military Escorts, under command of Capt. J. Zetlin, U. S. M. C.
Capt. John B. Montgomery, U. S. N.
(Commanding the Northern District of California,) and Surte.
Officers, U. S. N.
Captain John Party,
Senior Captain of the Hawaiian Navy.
Lieut. Commanding Bonnet – French Navy.
The Magistracy of the District, and the Orator of the Day.
FOREIGN CONSULS.
Thomas O’Larkin, and Win. A. Leidendorff, Esqs., (Late U. S. Consuls for California.)
U. S. Navy Agent, and the
U. S. Collector of the District.
Gentlemen who hold Civil or Military Commissions under the late Government.
STRANGERS OF DISTINCTION.
COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.
MASTERS OF SHIPS IN PORT.
CITIZENS GENERALLY.

2. The procession will move at half–past eight o’clock, to take up a position to receive His Excellency at the point of landing.

3d. The Governor and Suite will land at 9, A. M., under a salute of seventeen guns

4th. The Governor will be received by His Honor, Washington A Bartlett, Magistrate of the District, attended by the Corporation.

5th. The Governor will be addressed by Col. William H. Russell, Orator of the day.

6. The procession will then move through the principal streets to the residence of Wm. A. Leidendorff, Esq. where the Ladies will be presented to His Excellency, after which a cavalende will be formed to escort him on his tour of inspection.

7th. On returning from the tour a collation will be served up at the residence of W. A. Ceidesdorff, Esq.

8th. The following gentlemen will be known as Aids to the Marshal, viz. C. E. Pickett, Wm. H. Davis, Frederick Teschmaket, and J. K. Wilson, Esq.; the Aids will appear in uniform.

FRANK WARD, Marshal.
Yerba Buena, October 5th, 1846.

Tuesday, May 4, 1847, RW24i37p2c1 108 words.

UNTITLED

The New Orleans Picayune, on publishing General Taylor’s official account of the battle of Buena Vista, remarks, that like all the others from his pen, this document “is written in the clear and forcible style which has obtained for his compositions a celebrity but little short of the fame of his military operations. It is couched in the severe language of history – elegant from its simplicity, and eloquent in truth. No one can arise from its perusal without feeling his admiration for the brave old General increasing within him by participators in the action, that the first element of the victory of that bloody day was Zachary Taylor.”

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p2c2 95 words.

UNTITLED

Late Texas papers have been received in New Orleans, from which we learn that four companies of Volunteers were to leave San Antonio for Camargo about the 8th of this month. Other companies and detachments of companies were fast arriving at San Antonio, full of enthusiasm for the service. There has been a rumor at Houston, that Gen. Lamar and his company, formerly stationed at Laredo, had been surrounded by a large company of Mexicans and cut to pieces. The Texans have it in contemplation to open a direct trade between San Antonio and Chihuahua.

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p2c3 91 words.

CAUSE AND CONSEQUENCE
The Massachusetts Peace Society some months ago offered a premium of $500 for the best essay on the origin and result of the Mexican war. The New York Express gives the following, and claims the premium for its author. It is brief and comprehensive:

AN ESSAY

Upon the

WAR WITH MEXICO,

Its Origin, and its Results;

Carefully Considered, and Methodically Digested,

BY

An Odd Sort of Fellow.

---

Chapter I.

On the Origin of the War.

1. Texas

---

Chapter II.

On the Result of the War.

1. Texas

---

FINIS.

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p2c4

See: Niles National Register, /Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#72.170171May151847Lettersfrom

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p2c5  2,779 words.

CHIHUAHUA – Col. Doniphan’s Letters.

See: Niles National Register, /Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#72.172–172May151847LettersofCol

SIR:-- The forces under my command are a portion of the Missouri volunteers, called into service for the purpose of invading New Mexico, under the command of Brigadier General (then Colonel) Kearney. After the conquest of New Mexico, and before General Kearney's departure for California, information was received that another regiment and an extra battalion of Missouri volunteers would follow us to Santa Fe. The service of so large a force being wholly unnecessary in that state, I prevailed on Gen. Kearney to order my regiment to report to you at this city. The order was given on the 23rd September, 1846; but after the general arrived at La Joya, in the southern part of the State, he issued an order requiring my regiment to make a campaign into the country inhabited the Navajo Indians, lying between the waters of the Rio del Notre and the Rio Colorado of the west. This campaign detained me until the 14th of December, before our return to Del Notre. We immediately commenced our march for El Paso del Notre with about 800 riflemen. All
My position here is exceedingly embarrassing. In the first place, most of the men under my command have been in service since the 1st of June, and have never received one cent of pay. Their marches have been hard, especially in the Navajo country, and no forage; so that they are literally without horses, clothes or money, nothing but arms and a disposition to use them. They are all volunteers, officers and men; and, although ready for any hardships or danger, are wholly unfit to garrison a town or city. "It is confusion worse confounded." Having performed a march of over 2,000 miles, and their terms of service rapidly expiring, they are restless to join the army under your command. Still, we cannot leave this point safely for some days--the American merchants here, oppose it violently, and have several thousand dollars at stake. They have sent me a memorial, and my determination has been made known to them. A copy of both they will send to you. Of one thing it is necessary to inform you: the merchants admit that their goods could not be sold here in five years; if they go south they will be as near to the markets of Durango and Zacatecas as they now are. I am anxious and willing to protect the merchants as far as practicable; but I protest against remaining here as a mere wagon guard; garrisoning a city with troops wholly unfit for it, and who will be wholly ruined by improper indulgencies. Having been originally ordered to this point, you know the wishes of the government in relation to it, and of course your orders will be promptly and cheerfully obeyed. I fear there is ample use for us with you, and we would greatly prefer joining you before our term of service expires.

All information relative to my previous operations, present condition, &c., will be given you by Mr. J. Collins, the bearer of these dispatches. He is a highly honorable gentleman, and was an amateur soldier at Sacramento.

The Mexicans report your late battle as having been entirely favorable to themselves; but taking it for granted they never report the truth, we have fired a salute for our victory in honor of yourself and General Taylor, presuming from report, you were both present.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A.W. DONIPHAN,
Comd’g 1st reg. Missouri Mounted Vols.

Should the horses or mules of those bearing this express fail, or prove unfit to return upon, I have to request that they may be supplied by the government with the proper means of returning,

A.W. DONIPHAN.
Colonel 1st Reg. Missouri Vols.

Brig. Gen. Wool, U.S.A.

--------------------

Battle of Sacramento – Defeat of the Enemy – Capture of Chihuahua

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY IN CHIHUAHUA,
City of Chihuahua, March 4, 1847.

I have the honor to report to you the movements of the army under my command since my last official report.

On the evening of the 8th of February, 1847, we left the town of El Paso del Notre, escorting the merchant train or caravan of about 315 wagons for the city of Chihuahua. Our force consisted of 924 effective men, 117 officers and privates of the artillery, 93 of Lieut. Colonel Mitchell’s escort, and the remainder the 1st regiment Missouri mounted volunteers. We progressed in the direction of this place until the 25th, when we were informed by our spies that the enemy, to the number of 1,500 men, were at Inseneas, the country seat of Gov. Trias, about 25 miles in advance.

When we arrived, on the evening of the 26th, near that point, we found that the forces had retreated in the direction of this city. On the evening if the 27th we arrived at Sans, and learned from our spies that the enemy, in great force, had fortified the pass of the Sacramento river, about fifteen miles in advance, and about the same distance from this city. We were also informed that there was no water between the point that we were at and that occupied by the enemy; we therefore determined to halt until morning. At sunrise on the 28th, the last day of February, we took up the line of march and formed the whole train, consisting of 315 heavy traders’ wagons and our whole commissary and company wagons, into four columns, this shortening our line so as to make it more easily protected. We placed the artillery and all the command, except 200 cavalry proper, in the intervals between the columns of wagons. We this fully concealed our force and its position, by masking our force with the cavalry. When we arrived within three miles of the enemy, we made a reconnaissance of his position and the arrangement of his forces. This we could easily do--the road leading through an open prairie valley between the sterile mountains. The pass of the Sacramento is formed by a point of the mountains on our right, their left extending into the valley or plain, so as to narrow the valley to about one and a half miles. On our left was a deep, dry, sandy channel of a creek, and between these points the plain rises to sixty feet abruptly. This rise in the form of a crescent, the convex part being to the north of our forces. On the right, from the point of the mountains, a narrow part of the plain extends north one and a half miles further than on the left. The main road passes down the centre of the valley and across the crescent, near the left or dry branch, The Sacramento rises in the mountains on the right, and the road falls on to it about one mile below the battle field or entrenchment of the enemy. We ascertained that the enemy had one battery of four guns, two nine and 6 pounders, on the point of the mountain on our left, (their left,), at a good elevation to sweep the plain, and at the point where the mountains extended furthest into the plain. On our left (their right) they had another battery on an elevation commanding the road, and three entrenchments of two six pounders, and on the brow of the crescent, near the centre, another two 6 and two 4 and 6 culverins, or rampart pieces, mounted on carriages; and on the crest of the hill or ascent between the batteries and the right and left they had 27 redoubts dug and thrown up, extending at short intervals across the whole ground. In these their infantry were placed and were entirely protected. Their cavalry were drawn up in front in the intervals four deep, and in front of the redoubts two deep, so as to mask them as far as practicable. When we had arrived within one and a half miles of the entrenchments along the main road, we advanced the cavalry still further, and suddenly diverged with the columns to the right, so as to gain the narrow part of the ascent on our right, which the enemy discovering, endeavored to prevent, by moving forward with 1,000 cavalry and four pieces of cannon in their rear masked by them. Our movements were so rapid that we gained the elevation with our forces and the advance of our wagons in time to form before they arrived within reach of our guns. The enemy halted, and we advanced the head of our column within twelve hundred yards of them, so as to let our wagons attain the highlands and form as before.

We now commenced the action by a brisk fire from our battery, and the enemy unmasked and commenced also. Our fires proved effective at this distance, killing fifteen men, wounding and disabling one of the enemy’s guns. We had two men slightly wounded, and several horses and mules killed. The enemy then slowly retreated behind their works in some confusion, and we resumed our march in our former order, still diverging more to the right to avoid their battery on our left, (their right) and their strongest redoubts, which were on the left near where the road passes. After marching as far as we safely could without coming within range of their heavy battery on our right, Capt. Weightman, of the artillery, was ordered to charge with two 12-pound howitzers, to be supported by the cavalry, under Captains Reid, Parsons, and Hudson. The howitzers charged at speed, and were gallantly sustained by Capt. Reid; but, by some misunderstanding, my order was not given to the other two companies.— Captain Hudson, anticipating my orders, charged in time to give ample support to the howitzers. Capt. Parsons at the same moment came to me and asked permission for his company to charge the redoubts immediately to the left of Capt. Weightman, which he did very gallantly. The remainder of the two battalions of the first regiment were dismounted during the cavalry charge, and, following rapidly on foot, and Major Clarke advancing as fast as practicable with the remainder of battery, we charged their redoubts from right to left with a brisk and deadly fire of riflemen, while Major Clarke opened a rapid and well-directed fire on a column of cavalry attempting to pass to our left so to attack the wagons and our rear. The fire was so well directed as to force them to fall back; and our riflemen, with the cavalry and howitzers cleared after an obstinate resistance. Our forces advanced to the very brink of their redoubts and attacked them with their sabers. When the redoubts were cleared, and the batteries in the centre were silenced, the main battery on our right still continued to pour in a constant and heavy fire, as it had done during the heat of the engagement; but as it had done during the heat of the engagement; but as the whole fate of the battle depended upon carrying the redoubts and centre battery, this one on the right remained unattacked, and the enemy had rallied there five hundred strong.

Major Clark was directed to commence a heavy fire upon it, while Lieut. Cols. Mitchell and Jackson, commanding the 1st battalion, were ordered to remount and charge the battery on the left, while Major Gilpin was directed to pass the 2nd battalion on foot up the rough ascent of the mountain on the opposite side. The fire of our battery was so effective as to completely silence theirs, and the rapid advance of our column put them to flight over the mountains in great confusion.

Capt. Thompson, of the 1st dragoons, acted as my aid and advisor on the field during the whole engagement, and was on the field during the whole engagement, and was of the most essential service to me.— Also, Lieut. Wooster, of the United States army who acted very coolly and gallantly. Major Campbell, of Springfield, Missouri, also acted as a volunteer during part of the time, but left me and joined Captain Reid in his gallant charge. Thus ended the battle of Sacramento.

The force of the enemy was 1,200 cavalry from Durango and Chihuahua, with the Vera Cruz dragoons, 1,200 infantry from Chihuahua, 300 artilerists, and 1,420 rancheros badly armed with lassos, lances, and macheteos or corn knives, ten pieces of artillery, two nine, two eight, four six and two four pounders, and six culverins or rampart pieces.— Their forces were commanded by Major General Heredia, General of Durango, Chihuahua, Senora, and New Mexico; Brigadier General Garcia Conde, formerly minister of defence; General Uguert, and Governor Trias, who acted as brigadier general on the field, and colonels and other officers without number.

Our force was nine hundred and twenty-four effective me, at least one hundred of whom were engaged in holding horses and driving teams.

The loss of the enemy was his entire artillery, ten wagons, masses of beans and pinola, and other Mexican provisions, about three hundred killed and about the same number wounded, many of whom have since died, and forty prisoners.

The field was literally covered with the dead and wounded from our artillery and the unerring fire of our riflemen. Night put a stop to the carnage, the battle having commenced about three o’clock. Our loss was one killed, one mortally wounded, and seven so wounded as to recover without any loss of limbs. I cannot speak too highly of the coolness, gallantry, and bravery of the officers and men under my command.

I was ably sustained by the field officers, Lieut. Colonels Mitchell and Jackson, of the first battalion; and Maj. Gilpin of the second battalion; and Maj. Clarke and his artillery acted nobly, and did the most effective service in every part of the field. It is abundantly shown, in the charge made by captain Weightman with the section of howitzers, that they can be used in any charge of cavalry with great effect. Much has been said, and justly said, of the gallantry of our artillery, unlimbering within two hundred and fifty yards of the enemy at Palo Alto; but how much more daring was the charge of Capt. Weightman, when he unlimbered within fifty yards of the redoubts of the enemy!
On the 1st day of March we took formal possession of the capital of Chihuahua in the name of our government.

We were ordered by General Kearny to report to General Wool at this place. Since our arrival, we hear that he is at Saltillo, surrounded by the enemy. Our present purpose is either to force our way to him, or return by Bexar, as our team of service expires on the last day of May next.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

A. W. DONIPHAN,

Brigadier Gen. R. Jones, Adjutant General U.S.A

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p2c6  253 words.

YUCATAN

[Extract of a letter dated Merida, March 31, 1847.]

“This ill–fated country is in a most deplorable situation – a general opinion is prevailing, even among those who brought on the last revolution at Campeachy; that the only remaining chance of permanent peace is that the war between the United States and Mexico be shortly brought to an end, so that the latter be able to intervene and stop the anarchy, and kill the hydra of civil war. Valladolid and Titzimel have witnessed the most dreadful murders. In the former city, the whole white population, male, female, and children, have been murdered or burned alive. This wholesale murder lasted three days. The future is pregnant with storms.

The whole government can be said to be vested in one man – Don St. Jago Mendez – who, without any official appointment, plays about the same game as did Dr. Francia in Paraguay. He assumed upon himself a most dangerous responsibility. His chief political measure consists in expelling from the country every one he is suspicious of. – Those already amount to a formidable number. Many who had concealed themselves, relying on a promise of amnesty, came out, and how they have to choose between a prison at Campeachy or exile. All prefer the latter alternative, fearing to be made victims of a horrible massacre, such as took place in February 1843, of dreadful memory. – Many rich persons, such as Don Fabricio Lopez and Don Esteman Quijaria, are disposing of their property and preparing to embark for foreign countries.”

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p4c1  231 words.

UNTITLED.

The Baltimore Sun, though it can of course have received nothing later from the seat of war than had already reached us through other channels, contains some interesting particulars which we have not elsewhere seen. The Mexicans, (it states,) had erected a series of fortifications, between the city of Vera Cruz and Jalapa, extending, with occasional intervals, several miles, which were occupied by squads of men, who, instead of defending them, however, fled like scared sheep, when some 300 dragons, dismounting, scrambled up the mountains for the purpose of attacking them.

The Sun has also private advices from Gen. Twiggs’ camp, near Cerro Gordo, as late as the 13th ult. Gen. T. had moved forward to take the pass of Cerro Gordo on the 12th, but found it so strongly fortified that he was compelled to talk back: General Patterson afterwards joined him with 3,000 men, making their combined force 6,000, and the pars was to be attacked by them on the 14th. Lt. Col. Johnson, on the 13th, made a daring reconnaissance of the Mexican works at Cerro Gordo, where Santa Anna is said to be at the head of 12,000 men, well posted. Col. J. examined the works within musket range, and was shot in the right leg and right arm at the moment he was raising a spy–glass to his eye. His wounds, though severe, are not dangerous.;

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p4c2 615 words.

THE VOLUNTEERS

The Washington Union, on the 17th inst. accompanied the annunciation of the President’s determination to call out 6000 additional volunteers, to supply the places of those whose term of service is about to expire, exposed the opinion, that many of the latter class would renew their engagements and agree to remain in Mexico. But our last accounts from the seat of war show that in this expectation the Executive will be disappointed. Large numbers of the twelve months volunteers are already on their way home, and others would follow as the periods of their enlistment should expire. The New Orleans Picayune says, it is not supposed that a single
The Picayune says:

“The volunteers who won the glorious battle of Buena Vista are on their way home. One of the Kentucky regiments is already at the Brazos. Col. Jefferson Davis’s regiment will soon be there, and the Illinois and Indiana troops will follow. We learn from officers and men that there is no disposition to re-enlist. The accounts from Gen. Scott’s column is no more satisfactory. The determination to return home, as soon as their enlistments expire, is universal. The officers are as little desirous as the men of remaining in the service; so that the whole of General Taylor’s Buena Vista army, with the exception of a few regulars, and a large portion of Gen. Scott’s, will shortly leave the field.

We hope our citizens will make some preparations to welcome these brave soldiers back to their country. The 2d Kentucky Regiment will return without its colonel or lieutenant colonel, the 1st Mississippi will bring home its colonel and lieutenant colonel upon litters, the Illinois troops leave the gallant Hardin where he fell, and Col. Yell comes back no more at the head of the men from Arkansas. These noble regiments have melted away under the severities of a campaign in which, if they have not won the lasting gratitude of their countrymen, they have won nothing.”

[MSH]

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p4c4 1,402 words.

LATER FROM BRAZOS.

From the N. O. Bee, April 27.

By the arrival of the U.S. steamship Telegraph, Capt. Auld, we have received papers from Brazos Santiago to the 18th inst. They contain intelligence of special interest.

Gen. Taylor has his headquarters at the Walnut Springs, a few miles outside of Monterey. The old hero has but a meager force under his immediate command, the main body of his army being with Gen. Wool at Agua Nueva. – The 1st Mississippi Regiment (“Gen. Taylor’s Own,” as it is called,) forms what may be considered his body guard, and is with him at the springs. In and around Monterey, are the Kentucky cavalry, 2nd and 3d Ohioans, 3d Indianians, six companies of Virginians, and a few companies of Texan rangers. Six companies of Virginians are occupying China and Cadreita, which places are being fortified. – The 2d Ohio regiment is probably by this time on its way down to Camargo – its term of service is nearly up and the boys are homeward bound. Five companies of Kentucky cavalry were in Camargo a few days ago, but were to return to Monterrey as an escort to a train – this regiment has also but a brief time on its way down to Camargo – its term of service is nearly up and the boys are homeward bound. Five companies of Kentucky cavalry were in Camargo a few days ago, but were to return to Monterrey as an escort to a train – this regiment has also but a brief time to remain in service and will soon be returning.

It is pleasing, remarks the Flag, to hear the returning volunteers, those who have battled under him, speak of old Rough and Ready. With one accord they all unite in his praise, and his bravery and military skill, as displayed in the battles and brilliant victories to which he has led them, have stirred up feelings within their breasts which can never be effaced. Napoleon never had more the love and confidence of his troops than has Gen. Taylor – we have heard volunteers say, not in a spirit of barggadocia, but in cool, sober earnest, that under him they would cheerfully go into battle, with odds against them six to one, and feel assured of victory. Many with whom we have spoken, disclaim ever having looked to the possibility of a defeat at Buena Vista – victory, nothing but victory was thought of. The countenance of Gen. Taylor during the long engagement wore, throughout, the appearance of triumph, and all who noticed him augured victory from his look.

The Rio Grande rose several feet a few days ago, leading to the belief that the tiny season had set in; but its waters are again receding, and are so shallow as greatly to retard the operations on the Quarter Master’s Department – only a few of the boats being able to reach Camargo, and they not freighted. Should the river continue to fall Reynosa will be the highest point to which they can ascend.

A most fiendish murder has been committed on the road between Camargo and Monterey. Father Ray, long and favorably known as Chaplain to the Army, was killed by a party of Lancers while in the exercise of his divine vocation. Truly, remarks the Flag, these children of the Montezumas are treasuring up a dreadful punishment that ere long will descend upon their heads with the fury of a tornado.
The country watered by the Rio Grande, between Matamoros and Camargo has suffered greatly from the long continued drought. So long an absence of rain has never before been known, and the destitution among the inhabitants is already considerable. The Mexicans are proverbially improvident, and seldom raise more than sufficient corn for their own consumption, and the demands of the army have exhausted their stress. Distress may follow, but not starvation, since the forest and prairie yield food too abundantly to allow of such apprehensions.

A private in one of the companies of the 2nd Mississippi regiment at Walnut Springs, named Carson, formerly a member of the Mississippi Legislature, was recently waylaid by two Mexicans and inhumanly murdered. The Flag says:

"His mutilated body was discovered in the chapparal a few feet from the road, by Capt. Jack Everitt and Mr. John Hays, who were journeying up to Mier – the warm blood was yet trickling from him, which induced them to think his assassins were still near, and they commenced a search in the thicket and came in sight of the two Mexicans, not more than two hundred yards from where the murdered man lay. Chase was given and they were soon overtaken and their guilt sufficiently proved by their blood stained hands and garments and the property of the murdered man found upon their persons. The first impulse was to kill them upon the spot, but reflecting induced their being taken forward and turned over to Col. Davis, who, with his regiment, was not many miles in advance. The fate of the assassins, after being given over to the Mississippians, we have no learned, but infer their punishment to have been as severe as could be devised by the exasperated companions of the butchered man.

The transport ship America, from this port arrived at Brazos, Santiago, on the 22d inst. all well, and commenced landing her troops when the Telegraph sailed.

List of the passengers names who came with the Telegraph: Col. R. Davis, of the 21 Regiment Mississippi volunteers; Col. Rogers, of the Kentucky Legion; Capt. J. G. Tod, of Texas; Capt. Kent, of the U.S.A.; Lieut. Fisher, do.; Lieut. Wilson, do., Lieut. Stone, of the Louisville Legion; Lieut. White, do.; and 50 discharged volunteers.

ACCIDENT – Robert White, of Capt. Bulhos's company, Louisville Legion, lost his hand by the explosion of one of the rockets, found during the fire on Friday morning. The hand was so much shattered by the shock, that amputation above the wrist became necessary,

ACCIDENT – Robert White, of Capt. Bulhos's company, Louisville Legion, lost his hand by the explosion of one of the rockets, found during the fire on Friday morning. The hand was so much shattered by the shock, that amputation above the wrist became necessary,

We learn, with pleasure, that the rank and file of the 1st Ohio Regiment have taken measures to present Major L. Giddings with a sword, to cost $500, as a token of their respect and thanks. This token of approbation could not be bestowed on a more worthy person, or one in whom the characters of a soldier and a gentleman are more truly combined. – Ib.

A few days since, the 2nd Regiment of Mississippi Volunteers arrived in this city. They are as fine a body of men as we have seen lately, numbering about seven hundred effectives. They are all armed with rifles, of the same make as those of the 1st Regiment. – Ib.

We would respectfully call the attention of the Governor of this city to an outrage which has ever since the American army came to the city of Monterey, been allowed to pass unnoticed – it is the assessing and levying a tax by the Alcade, on all merchants in the city. We hope that the authorities will look into the master and see with what justice and propriety such a thing can be tolerated – a revenue of from three to four thousand dollars is, we believe, procured every month, which, in the present state of affairs, is far too much to be appropriated for the Mexican government of the city. We firmly believe that one half of this revenue is sent to the central government, in order to assist in prosecuting the war. We deem it improper for the Americans to be compelled to assist and enhance the prospectus of our enemy, in order that they may prosecute their aggressive war. – Ib.

SHAMEFUL. – Persons recently from Monterey, informs us that in coming down, they believe strewn along the roadside, where had been massacred, he teamsters who fell into the hands of Urra's assassins in that attack on the wagon train, the decayed and mutilated remains of upwards of fifty of these unfortunate men. Where they fell, there still they are suffered to remain, their flesh made the food of vultures and wolves, and their ones scattered about by these beasts and birds of prey. Then after train has passed them by, with no more notice than a passing commentary upon their sad face – none have stepped forth to give them burial. Humanity sickens at mass indifference to man – death parts friend from friend, and brother from brother, and in one brief hour all the ties which bound them together are forgotten. Such is a consequence of war – it deadens the sensibility and brings man to a level with the unreasoning brute. – Ibid.

[MSH]

Friday, May 7, 1847, RW24i37p4c5 450 words

GENERAL TAYLOR ON THE FIELD OF BATTLE

Lieut. Corwin writes to the Cincinnati Chronicle, and gives the following interesting sketch of Gen. Taylor on the battle-field of Buena Vista:

"By way of illustrating an important characteristic of Gen. Taylor, to wit, determination, I will briefly relate a scene that occurred on the battle ground of Buena Vista, during the action of the 23rd. At a time when the fortunes of the day seemed extremely problematical – when many on our side even despair of success – old Rough & Ready, as he is inaptly styled, whom you must know, by the bye, is short, fat, and dumpy in person, with remarkably short legs – took his proposition a commanding height overlooking the two armies. This was about three or, perhaps, four o'clock in the afternoon. The enemy, who had succeeded in gaining an advantageous position, made a fierce charge upon our column, and fought with a desperation that seemed for a time to ensure success to their arms. The Capt. Burgwin, of the Dragoons, who fell at Taos, was a native of North Carolina; he graduated at West Point in 1830, and at the time of the letter, the following deserved tribute is paid to the gallant Burgwin, of the 1st Dragoons:

The Charleston Mercury has an excellent original account of events in New Mexico, in putting down the Taos insurrection. In the course of the letter, the following deserved tribute is paid to the gallant Burgwin, of the 1st Dragoons:

Capt. Burgwin, of the Dragoons, who fell at Taos, was a native of North Carolina; he graduated at West Point in 1830, and at the time of his death was high up on the list of captains. He was one of the most popular officers in the army, from his high–toned, gentlemanly character. – His conduct and courage in the late battles are the theme of universal praise. After being wounded, Col. Price rode up to him and told him that, whether he recovered or not, he should bear testimony of his gallantry. Capt. B. replied, “I hope, colonel, you will also bear witness that my company did its duty.” Lieut. Van Valkenburg, of the Infantry, died of his wounds in a few days: he had both jaws broken.

Captains Burgwin and Henley were buried a few days since, with military honors. Their graves occupy a picturesque spot under the guns of Fort Marcy.

[MSH]
THE “TERRITORIES” OF NEW MEXICO AND CALIFORNIA.

Illegible.

GENERAL TAYLOR AND THE LOCOS.

The New Orleans Bulletin, among other reasons for hosting the Taylor flag, stated the fact that various influential Locofocos in the Southwest were talking measures for a demonstration in his behalf as their candidate, and were anxious to adopt him without regard to principles or politics. The intelligent and reliable correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, after advertising to this statement, goes on to make this further curious development:

"It is within my power to vindicate the statement of the Bulletin. Such a movement was in contemplation; and the preliminaries had progressed to a very considerable extent. Neither was it hatched yesterday, nor within the last fortnight. It commenced during the last session of Congress and was headed by that remarkable individual, rendered somewhat notorious as the projector of the war, and more particularly as the manager of the Plaquemine frauds, by which Louisiana was carried in the Presidential election for Mr. Polk, – upon which he had wagers of a large amount depending, and which were won by that proceeding – I mean Mr. John Slidell, Envoy Extraordinary, &c. Through his agency, and that of others, a private correspondence was opened all over the Union towards the close of the winter, for the purpose of bringing forward Gen. Taylor. Whether this was the information upon which the Bulletin acted, I am no proposed to say, but the facts as now sated, are unquestionable and can be substantiated.

Mr. Slidell, like other keen sighted politicians, saw that the days of locofocoism were numbered, and that the work of regeneration which had extended over other quarters of the Union, must go on in Louisiana, unless some successful diversion could be made. Indifferent to any consideration but the immediate one of triumph, he and his compatriots resolved to appropriate Gen Taylor's services and popularity to accommodate their own selfish designs. Mr. Slidell has used Mr. Polk as long as he was profitable, and seeing the current of public opinion settling him, had abandoned him at the first opportunity. This fraudulent scheme to seize upon the name and character of a Whig General for locofoco purposes, is consistent with the whole policy of our opponents and shows that they are utterly regardless of the means they employ, so long as they can ensure success and command the spoils. It is the threatening aspect of political affairs that makes the editor of the Union howl as he does at the prospect of losing the fat patronage upon which he and his party is fed. Give them the spoils and they care not who is President, or upon what policy the government is administered."

ORGANIZATION OF THE GOVERNMENT IN NEW MEXICO – POWER OF THE COURTS – TREASON – WHAT DOES IT ALL TEND TO?

Correspondence of the Missouri Republican.

SANTA FE, NEW MEXICO, March 18, 1847

Gentlemen: When Gen. Kearney, under Mr. Polk's orders, established the hermaphrodite government – half military and half civil – in this country, (a province taken from Mexico,) and called it a territory of the United States, he did not foresee many of the events which have since occurred. Together with many others who came here with him, the General was mistaken in regard to this character of this people. Accustomed at home to a population who can appreciate human liberty and human progress, he did not anticipate internal difficulties, nor suppose that the boon of free and just government, which he seemed at least to proffer, would be rejected by any portion of the New Mexicans. Still, as to all his strictly military arrangements, they were made (if not for the purpose) capable of the effect of suppressing domestic insurrection; though it may have been that this capability arose, not so much from an expectation that the troops would ever be called to such a duty, as from the necessity of posting them in the positions assigned, in order to sustain the animals, and also to protect the Mexicans, while peaceable, against their Indian enemies.

It is important, in writing of things here, that we treat all with justice. A false estimate of the value of New Mexico had prevailed in the United States, and so extensively, too, as to deceive statesman of even the general and accurate information of Col. Benton, for the resources of this province were greatly overrated. As was the case in Texas before the expedition in 1841, the character of this people, their feelings, and views, were misunderstood in the United States; for it was supposed that they were at least willing, if not desirous, to come under our government. And another error existed in regard to the amount of military force which it was supposed Mexico could draw from this province, during the war.

For these reasons, the military as well as political and economical ones, being all unfounded, it is believed that Con. Benton advised, and Mr. Polk ordered, an army to be marched to this province. WE CAME (may we be forgiven) – WE SAW – WE CONQUERED!

Possession was taken by the General, in the name of the United States. It was but a military possession, and was only expected to be such. But the solemn farce was enacted of administering the oath of allegiance to the United States, with nearly two thousand American soldiers, with loaded arms, around each village, and 16 pieces of ordnance ready to fire into it. No wonder the Alcaldes, under such a duress, would swear by the whole calendar of saints! The Governor had fled when we reached the capital, or he too, with a row of cannon fronting his palacio, would have been made "a citizen of the United States, can, during the war, become a citizen. He would have been metamorphosed, by a speech from the General, (and an oath, probably taken with a mental reservation what it should be broken as soon as convenient,) into an AMERICAN CITIZEN, by virtue of Mr. Polk’s orders, and here, on foreign soil, himself an alien enemy, would have been entitled to the protection of the United States government, as fully as any native-born or duly naturalized citizen and patriot in the States! Such was the doctrine implied in all the General’s acts; but as it did not lead at once to its practical consequences, we suffered it pass.

There was a sort of interregnum in the government here when we reached the capital. Some civil government was necessary for the convenience of the people, and, a very good one was, in fact, established. It was right enough that crimes against natural laws and good morals should be punished; that rights civil and social rather than political, should be protected; and laws for this purpose were promulgated by the conquering general. We saw the necessity for this arrangement, during the war, or until our doings here could be examined by the people’s representatives at home. The move, by the General, was a bold one, but, under the circumstances, it had to be made or the conquest abandoned; and we did not think it worthy of very serious animadversion.

There was an “Attorney of the United States for the district of New Mexico” appointed, and a marshal, &c. But we only regarded the attorney as a very agreeable young gentleman with a very high sounding title, and never expected to see him in the position he has since occupied. – We may have thought that if the United States should have any pecuniary claims against any delinquent officers here, he might be useful enough in enforcing them, using for that purpose the machinery of the courts, which we knew to be necessary for other purposes. It was plain enough that the process of the United States Court for Missouri, could not run into New Mexico, nor even that of Texas and it might do no harm, some may have thought, to have a process for some such purposes, when there was no very very serious principle involved, except that no authority, in constitution or law, appeared for the proceeding!

But we did not then regard as hardly possible, what is now history; for since the departure of Gen. Kearney, the aspect of affairs has changed very materially; and the District Attorney, who was regarded as only an item of the Territorial appendages of no great public consequence, is now acting a part of no little interest in the farcical, though still important, proceedings here. He prosecutes, in the courts here, individuals who were never citizens of the United States – who owe a national and local allegiance to Mexico – for the crime of treason against the United States!

The consummation of the “annexation” of this province to the Union, by Mr. Polk, is already before us. One Mexican has already been convicted of "TREASON." He was indicted before the court here a few days ago, was found guilty of counseling the late attempt at revolution; and on the 16th, sentenced to be hung! Trae, en the petition of the Judge and others, the execution of the sentence has been postponed by the acting Governor, until the whole case can be referred to President Polk – the real father of the Government here for His consideration. The ultimate decision of the case involves important principles.

The name or this TRAITOR is Antonio Maria Trogillo. – His counsel contended strongly that the whole proceedings were without law to support them, but in vain. The Judges thought it his duty to go on.

Thus, under the orders of Mr. Polk – so far as the machinery here can do it – the political relations of this people towards the United States are changed. If this conviction is legal, then "annexation" is complete; and the people of New Mexico must now be recognized as "fellow citizens." A country which, with but few exceptions, is inhabited by ignorant, dishonest, treacherous men; and by women who are believe scarcely to know what virtue is, beyond its name, is now part of the American Union!

You, who have voices in the States, may do well, perhaps, to think and speak of these things. Reconcile them, if you can, with your regard for law – the constitution – liberty. And ask yourself if Mr. Polk is not advancing rapidly, not as a component part of the law-making power, but as that power itself.

Carry out the propositions and see where they will lead you. This people, if citizens must be represented in Congress. If they elect a delegate – and we have now here candidates feeling their way – will you give him a seat? Will you let him speak? Nous Verruns. Perhaps, under the new order of things established by Mr. Polk. (and for which, as the instrument, Gen. Kearney has been rather too severely blamed, having been bound, as a military man, to obey orders,) the delegate may even claim a VOTE! – What say you? The doctrine which sustains a prosecution for TREASON against the United States, would at least entitle him to a seat and oblige you to have him; or, otherwise, you will not eustain the already consummated “annexation.”

Again, we wish you to be prepared to protect the property and lives of all MEXICANS, born and reared in this Province, or domiciliated here, who may chance to be imprisoned or otherwise improperly dealt with by any foreign power. Almost the entire population in New Mexico hate us a little worse than they do the devil; yet, according to Mr. Polk’s court, if a single one of these “CITIZENS” gets into any unpleasant dilemma in the hands of any foreign power – he must be rescued by the United States. This is a consequence of the positions taken here. The relations of “citizens” towards their government impose duties on the former, but obligations on the latter also; and every government owes protection to its “citizens.” But we are doing that now, said, in court, the District Attorney – towards whom I mean not the slightest personal disrespect – for we defend the New Mexicans against the Nabajo Indians!

The attorney, however, was a little inconsistent, I thought, in one part of his ingenious argument. First having claimed this barren tract as a TERRITORY, he next claimed it, if not as a territory of the United States, as part of Texas! Now, I was in favor of annexing Texas, because the people had established their independence voluntarily first, and being mostly emigrants from the U. States, wished to be annexed – a very different case from that of the mongrel and motley population of New Mexico – but I did not dream, when I wrote a brief article for your paper some years ago, in favor of annexation, that I was urging the annexation of this province of Mexico! Till this day I never can understand how New Mexico became part of Texas – New Mexico has been regarded as ONE province by the Mexican government – Texas as ANOTHER. But how the latter swallowed up this worthless part of the globe, I never can understand.

Or, if this is really part of Texas, I beg of some enlightened friend of Mr. Polk to tell me why Gen. Kearney, under the orders of Mr. Polk, established a separate government here? Or, to go back a little, why did the free voters of Texas establish their government so near the Gulf, adopt a constitution, and organise even to the distribution of all officers, without asking a participation by the “citizens” of Texas here? And why did not the General give back to Texas her own, after we came here and conquered it? – When Armijo ran, and the General took the reins, he became the trustee of Texas, and should have rendered to his eestut qui trust an account of the property. Why did he appoint a Governor, make up courts, create attorneys, judges, &c., under the government of the United States, instead of referring all these matters to Texas? As an independent State, Texas owes sovereignty over her own territory: then what right had the agent of Mr. Polk to appoint a Governor over this portion of the “free and enlightened” – this extremely well–read and republican portion of the “citizens” of Texas? And then these courts, why they claim to be territorial courts, but are within the limits of a State! Are they not anomalies? But we have ? by things here which seem to be sui generis. Let me ask – is there a U. S. Court for the district of Texas? If so, let its sphere be extended, and drive out these usurpers! Even our “District Attorney of the United States for the Territory of New Mexico” would, in that event, find himself somewhat superfluous.

But, if this is now a State or Territory, how unfortunate for us that there are no orders here to draft the ?. – We might in this way, soon have the army filled up from these “citizens,” and then go home to our wives and children – those who have not yet fallen victims to the rigor and unhealthiness of the winter climate here, operating on constitutions from the climate of the old States, to say nothing of the other causes of disease and death – causes which still sustain a most distressing mortality among the troops.

It is difficult to treat with due gravity, all the ridiculous propositions advanced regarding this “Territory,” yet they are of no little consequence. If Mr. Polk, by the act of his Presidential volition, can create territories, and make citizens thus, by a dash of his pen adding to the population as well as extending our boundaries, we must be careful to frame some new question for the part Presidential candidates.

I would suggest the following among the number absolutely necessary: 1. ?, how many new territories do you think ought to be admitted to the Union? 2. How much, and what part of Canada would you annex? 3. What say you to Nova Scotia? 4. With you extend the boundaries of Oregon to Behring’s Staits, and if so, how much and what part of Kamsohatka will you send a General to conquer? 5. And will you, or will you not, convict the Kamschaikadas of TREASON against the United States, if they speak of revolt against the authority which you have forced upon them? These questions might do; but I have still one or two more: What do you say in regard to Cuba? and what Do you think of the annexation of HATTI?

Let me not be misunderstood. Let murders here be hung; let rogues and thieves be imprisoned, or as is sometimes done, take the lash in the public square. All this is well enough, and may prevail under the present Government very properly, in order that we may hold conquest until the war is over. But if the conquered do not relish our Government; let us not violate its laws – its constitution – its principles – by attempting illegal and unconstitutional punishment. I have no sympathy with those who are opposed to the American Government here; but I love my country, and it is painful to reflect how rapidly the one many power is advancing. Let it be checked.

These thoughts are hastily thrown together, to turn the attention of able minds to the subject, rather than with a design of attempting its full and due elucidation; and all reflecting Americans here, of whatever party at home, concur in these views with

A VOLUNTEER.

[MSH]
In this connection all will read with pleasure that Capt. Johnson is doing so well. This gentleman, captain of the Topographical Engineers, and appointed lieutenant colonel of the Voltigeurs, was so desperately wounded that little hope was felt for him. He has a strong constitution and is in fine spirits, and Capt. Hughes thinks he will recover.

The health of the troops at Vera Cruz is absolutely improving. Great ameliorations are making the city, but above all things it has been undergoing a thorough purification. There is no yellow fever nor other malignant epidemic. This is good news.

Ampudia was in the battle of Cerro Gordo, but neither he nor Santa Anna ventured within the lines which their countrymen so strenuously defended. They were prepared to run the moment the day should seem to go against them, and run they did. Ampudia came near being taken close to Jalapa, and to save himself had to take to the fields! But we will not longer detain the reader from our correspondence.

Meeting Lt. McLane of the navy this afternoon, at Puente Nacional and on his way here, I joined his party and rode over. Maj. Beall, with a small squad of dragoons, was also along with us. On the road, some six miles back, we came up with a forage party of the 2nd Dragoons under Lieut Anderson, and also Capt Caswell's company of Tennessee volunteers which had been out after beef. The latter had had a brisk skirmish with a party of rancheros, in which Capt. C. had two men wounded, one of them, a young man of great promise, named J L Roberson, badly. His thigh bone was completely shattered, and the poor fellow's sufferings were most acute as they bore him along in a wagon over the rough road. The Mexicans stood their ground in the chaparral with some little bravery at first, but were finally routed in every direction.

I find all excitement and bustle here. The Mexicans, under Santa Anna, are occupying a chain of works along the road, the nearest of which is about a mile and a quarter from Gen. Scott's headquarters in a direct line. The road this side is cut up and barricaded, and every possible means of defence and annoyance has been resorted to. Beyond the first work there are there or four others, completely commanding the gorge through which the road to Jalapa runs – these fortifications on hills, and rising so as to defend one another. It is thought that Santa Anna has 20,000 men with him – the lowest estimate gives him 15,000 – and with these he has 24 pieces of field artillery, besides some 14 heavy cannon in position. Some of the prisoners and deserters from the enemy's camp even place higher estimates, both as to the number of men, and guns.

To turn these different works a road has been partially cut through the rough ground and chaparros to the right; and although the reconnaissance is as yet imperfect, it is still thought that a point near the enemy's farthest work can be reached. Gen. Twiggs, with his division, is to march at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning by the new road, and on the following morning it is thought the attack will commence on the words on this side. If Gen. Twiggs succeeds in reaching the rear of Santa Anna, and he will use every exertions, I do not see what is to save him. He is generally fox enough to have plenty of holes out of which to escape, however, and from the great difficulty of reconnoitering his position fully he may have some means of escape here. The general impression now in camp is, that this is to be the great battle of the war; and the immense natural strength of Santa Anna's works would justify the belief.

The Mexicans are more on the alert than they have ever been before, and more bold in throwing out their pickets. Not a party can go near their works without being fired upon, and yesterday a soldier of the 7th Infantry fell with no less than seven bullets in his body. It is said that Almonte is with Santa Anna, as also the principal generals of the country.

Gen. Worth left Puente Nacional this afternoon with his division, and will be up during tonight. He started a little after 1 o'clock this morning, with nearly 2000 picked men, determined to make a forced march through; but learning on the road that the attack upon the Mexican works was not to commence as soon as anticipated, he returned to Puente Nacional after marching a mile and a half. Capt. Pemberton, one of his aids, rode over here last evening after dark, and returned with the information that the attack had been postponed.

The wounds of Capt. Johnson are doing well. I regret to state that Gen. P.F. Smith is confined to his bed – utterly unable either to ride or walk. He has a violent inflammation of the right ankle and knee, resembling erysipelas, which from neglecting several days when he should have remained in his cot, has finally compelled him to lay up. I will write again tomorrow.

G.W.K.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE BATTLE

The "American Eagle," published at Vera Cruz, issued an extra on the 29th ult., from which we extract copiously, though there are many repetitions in it:
On the 18th, Lieut Jarvia, of the 2d Infantry, was wounded in ascending the first hill. Shot off. Severely wounded, having lost his left leg. Lieut Ewell, of the 7th, Infantry, was severely wounded. Capt. Patten, of the 2d, left hand them. The generals will be sent to New Orleans; among them you will have the second appearance of La Vega, he having refused again and with their soldiers are being sent about their business – our commander being of opinion that he can whip them easier than feed them. The force of the Mexicans, at the lowest, is set down at 12,000. The officers of the Mexican army are being paroled whilst I write this, and the volunteers had time to renew the attack, the enemy had surrendered – driven, as they had been, from their favorite position on Cerro Gordo.

Taking all things into consideration, this has been a great fight, and a great victory, on calculated to shine brilliantly in the chapter of those achieved in Mexico by our arms.

The Mexican forces on the height of Cerro Gordo were the 3d and 4th Light Infantry, the 3rd and 5th Regiments of the line, and 6 pieces of artillery, with the requisite number of cavalry. Col. Obando, chief of artillery, was killed, and Gen. Vasques, general of division. Many of our officers were of opinion that this general was no other than Gov. Morales.

Our force consisted of the 2d, 3d and 7th Infantry and Mounted Riflemen, and Steptoe’s battery. Capt Mason, of the Rifles, was severely wounded, having lost his left leg. Lieut Ewell, of the 7th, Infantry, was severely wounded. Capt. Patten, of the 2d, left hand shot off.

On the 18th, Lieut Jarvia, of the 2d Infantry, was wounded in ascending the first hill.

On the top of Cerro Gordo, the scene was truly horrible. From the Jalapa road, dead bodies of the enemy could be seen on every spot where the eye was directed, until they literally covered the ascent to the height. There is about half an acre of level ground on the top of the mountain, and here was collected together the wounded of both armies, and the dead of our own. Side by side were lying the disabled American and the Mexican, and our surgeons were busy amputating and dressing the wounded of each – lotting them in turns, unless the acute pain of some sufferer was further along caused him to cry out, when he would be immediately attended to.

The pioneer parties of our men were picking up the wounded and bringing them in from every part of the ascent to the height. From the side towards the river, where the storming party of Gen. Twiggs’s division made the charge, most of our men suffered, and many of the enemy, also, for they made a desperate stand; but when they gave way, and started in confession down the hill, was the time they most suffered, many of them received the balls of our men in their backs.

The charge on Cerro Gordo was one of those cool yet determined ones so characteristic of the American soldier. From the time that our troops left the hill nearest that prominent height the fire was inconsistent, and they had to fight their way foot by foot, til they gained the summit, from which place the enemy gave way after a very short resistance.

Our victory is complete. Those of the enemy who escaped were driven in all directions by their pursuers, and many of them cut down on the road.

Gen. Twiggs, who followed them after taking Cerro Gordo, approached within three miles of Jalapa, and finding no force of the enemy, encamped for the night. He is in the town before this time.

Capt. Merrill, of the 2d Dragoons, returned from Twiggs’s camp last night, and is of opinion that nothing but a small body guard is with Santa Anna.

Santa Anna’s private carriage was captured, and amongst his effects was found the sum of $18,000, which is now in the bands of the quartermaster and an additional leg of cork for his Excellency’s use in case of emergency.

I noticed one officer of the enemy shot through the head on Cerro Gordo who was a conspicuous man at Vera Cruz.

Gen. La Vega, who is again in our clutches, looked as dashing and fine as ever. He did not seem the least disconcerted, but rode in from the battle field, by the side of Gen. Scott, laughing and talking as though he was once more on his way to New Orleans.

Gen. Shields was mortally wounded, and I hear this morning that he is dead. He behaved most gallantly and his mishap is deeply deplored.

Gen. Pillow was wounded in the arm, but slightly.

The force of the Mexicans, at the lowest, is set down at 12,000. The officers of the Mexican army are being paroled whilst I write this, and with their soldiers are being sent about their business – our commander being of opinion that he can whip them easier than feed them. The generals will be sent to New Orleans; among them you will have the second appearance of La Vega, he having refused again
Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p1c4  955 words.

FROM THE CITY OF MEXICO

From the N. O. Picayune, May 1.

By the arrivals yesterday from Tampico and Vera Cruz we are in possession of files of papers from the city of Mexico to the 9th of April. We have only been able to bestow upon them a cursory examination, but will recur to them hereafter.

The following is a translation of the most interesting document which has met our eye – the translation and original have been sent to us by Mr. Kendall. Our readers are requested to contrast the magnificent promises of this address of Santa Anna to his countrymen with “the lame and impotent conclusion” presented by his personal prowess at Cero Gordo.

Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, President ad interim of the Mexican Republic, to his compatriots:

Mexicans: Vera Cruz is already in the power of the enemy. It has succumbed – not under the influence of American valor, nor can it even be said that it has fallen under the impulses of their good fortune. To our shame be it said, we ourselves have produce this deplorable misfortune by our own interminable discords.

The truth is due to you from the Government – you are the arbiters of the fate of our country. If our country is to be defended, it will be you who will stop the triumphant march of the enemy who now occupies Vera Cruz. If the enemy advance one step more, the national independence will be buried in the abyss of our past.

I am resolved to go out and encounter the enemy. What is life worth, ennobled by the rational gratitude, if the country suffers under a censure that stain of which will rebound upon the forehead of every Mexican!

My duty is to sacrifice myself, and I will know how to fulfil it! Perhaps the American hosts may proudly tread the imperial capital of Aztecs. I will never witness such an opprobrium, for I am decided first to die fighting!

The momentous crisis has at length arrived to the Mexican Republic. It is as glorious to die fighting as it is infamous to declare ourself conquered without a struggle, and by an enemy whose rapacity is as far removed from valor as from generosity.

Mexicans! you have a religion – protect it! You have honor – then free yourselves from infamy! You love your wives, your children – then liberate them from American brutality! But it must be by action – not by vain entreaty nor barren desires with which the enemy must be opposed. The national cause is infinitely just, although God appears to have deserted us; but His ire will be appeased when we present, as an expiation of our errors, the sentiments of true patriotism and of sincere union. Thus the Almighty will bless our efforts, and we will be invincible! for against the decision of eight millions of Mexicans, of what avail are the efforts of eight or ten millions of Americans when opposed by the fiat of Divine Justice.

Perhaps I speak to you for the last time! I pray you listen to me. Do not vacillate between death and bravery; and if the enemy conquer you, at least they will respect the heroism of your resistance. It is now time that the common defence, should alone occupy your thoughts! The hour of sacrifice has sounded its approach! Awaken! A tomb opens at your feet! Conquer a laurel to repose on it!

The nation has not yet lost its vitality – I swear to you I will answer for the triumph of Mexico, if unanimous and sincere desire on your part second my desires. Happy will have been, a thousand times happy the unfortunate event at Vera Cruz, if the destruction of that city may have served to infuse into the Mexican breast the dignity and the generous ardor of a true patriotism! Thus will the country have been indubitably saved: but if the country succumb, she will bequeath her opprobrium and her censure to those egotists who were not ready to defend her – to those who traitorously pursued their private turmoils to trample upon the national banner!

Mexicans! your fate is the fate of the nation! Not the Americans, but you, will decide her destiny! Vera Cruz calls for vengeance – follow me, and wash out the stain of her dishonor.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

MEXICO, March 31, 1847.

We learn that Gen. Morales, who so gallantly defended Vera Cruz, and Gen Landero, who signed the capitulation, were both immediately put under arrest by Santa Anna and ordered to Guanajuato.
In the city of Mexico civil order appears to reign, but the tone of the papers breathes nothing but vengeance towards the United States. The exploits of Gens Urrea and Romero in cutting off our mule trains between Cerralvo and Monterey afford occasion for congratulation to the Mexicans, which is eagerly embraced. It is about all the consolation they have left them. They counted with all confidence, both in the city of Mexico and in Vera Cruz, upon whipping us at Cerro Gordo. Their confidence has begun to waver ere this.

The papers announce the death of the widow of the illustrious Guerrero at an advanced age. She died on the 7th of April.

The Government organ denies that Gen Paredes is seeking in Paris the interposition of the French Government.

The clergy of the archbishopric of Mexico have bound themselves to the Government for a million and a half of dollars, payable monthly. The clergy of the different bishoprics are to do the same.

The subject is again agitated of removing the seat of Government from the city of Mexico. But our limits will not allow us to go further today into the examination of the paper before us.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1847.

Mr. Parish, who has left this morning with despatches for the army in Mexico, had, on yesterday, long interviews with the Secretaries of War and State, and with the President. It is supposed that he may also carry some verbal message to Gen. Taylor, which, infested as the roads in Mexico are with banditti and robbers, it would, perhaps, have been imprudent to entrust to his care in writing.

All sorts of speculations are, of course, afloat in regard to the probable contents of the despatches sent down to Mexico; but it may safely be guessed that they relate to the disbanding of the militia, whose term of service is about to expire, and the re-enlisting of those who may choose to serve again. And it may also be presumed that orders have gone out to pursue the war with a little additional vigor.

Mr. Buchanan was suddenly taken ill, last evening, so much so that Dr. Thomas had to be called in, and prescribe for him. He is still confined to his bed; though evidently doing better.

Mr. Walker is still unable to speak, though otherwise doing better.
should happen— if we should consent to such a surrender without the strongest resistance— the whole world would forever refer to us as an example of the vilest, most cowardly, and contemptible place on earth, and we should not deserve from any nation the slightest regard or compassion. I will not propose what I would wish to see— that ism that the Mexicans should imitate the Numidians and Carthaginians, when attacked by the Romans in ancient times; or should follow the example of the memorable Saragossa, which, under the command of that great hero Palafox, was reduced to a pile of ruins, burying 100,000 combatants beneath them; but I do wish to see that we should do what has been done throughout the world on similar occasions— that is, we that shall resist the enemy to the last possible extreme.

"Paris, in 1814, did not capitulate against the whole forces of Russia, Prussia, England, and Austria, until it had suffered considerable losses under generals Marmont and Mortier. That same city, Paris, after the battle of Waterloo, where the immortal Napoleon lost forever his glory, endeavored to defend herself against the immense torrent that threatened to destroy her, and, organizing an army with the divisions of General Davoust and Grouchy, they still fought hard battles at Serves and Izly.— Even Madrid, the capital of the nation to which we were once united, did, by herself, resist the powerful army that France sent against her; and, notwithstanding her oppression, a popular movement was formed against the French, and there Murat exercised his most bloody vengeance.

"And can it be imagined that the Mexicans will be frightened and quail at the sight of a handful of adventurers? Such a conquest would surprise the world more than that which Cortez obtained over the Empire of Montezuma; for at the time it was necessary, in order to cause this city to surrender, that it should be besieged by more than 200,000 Fascaltecs, united with the Spaniards, and that very resources of subsistence should have been exhausted. And at the time the natives had not the incomparable means of defence which we now possess— means which I will not mention here—as by so doing I suppose it would be an insult to persons of common sense.

"In accordance with what I have here manifested, I am of opinion that the city should be immediately put in a state of defence, and this is the object of my first proposition.

"I also beg that congress should not be removed, unless the extreme case should arrive of the occupation of the city by the enemy. My object is not a request of the representatives of Mexico to repeat before the world the pathetic scene of the Romans, when Brennus, general of the Gauls, attacked Rome when sitting in open ground in their council chairs, they awaited the enemy and challenged the death which they received. I repeat that this is not my desire, but I wish that we may not act on the opposite extreme— deserting this place with a shameful fury— that we may remain here until the moment when prudence and necessity should dictate that we must move elsewhere, as in similar cases has been done by the civilized assemblies.

"When the Spaniards, had nearly lost all their peninsula, a regency was established at Cadiz, which provoked the Cortes of the kingdom, and immediately promulgated the political constitution of the Spanish monarchy. These events took place in the midst of the bombs and shells which the French army was throwing into the city, and then they were (unsuccessfully) besieged by Gen. Victor.

"In France, when the allies conquered for the first time, the senate did not change its residence, and instead constituted a provisional government. The like happened after the fall of Napoleon, and the chamber of representatives appointed a commissioner of government, of which Fouche was the president.

"All foreign nations have their eyes fixed on our war. – And what judgment can we expect them to form of our valor and our cause, if we are thrown into dismay and disquietude? It is utterly necessary, for this very reason, that we should by our extraordinary efforts prove the justice our rights; and lastly, we must show that we come from the unconquerable Spanish race, and we have in our veins the blood of Guatimozin, Hidalgo, Morelos, and thousands of others, who shed the last drop of it in honor and defence of their country, and who taught us by their examples the course we are to pursue." [MSH & KAM]

All the speeches and addresses are said to be in the same vein. Not a single voice is raised for peace; and we may expect that the course now generally recommended of a guerilla war, and one of posts, will be resorted to,— in which event, it will be almost interminable. Such, too, it is said, is the opinion of Maj. Gen. Jesup, who has recently returned from the seat of war to the City of Washington.

We await with great anxiety further intelligence from the city of Mexico. It is barely possible that the recent signal route of the Mexican army and the flight of Santa Anna may conflict— though we confess, reasoning from the past, and judging from the temper evinced by her people, in and out of power, we have but a faint hope of a result so much to be desired.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p2c3  228 words.

THE NEW ORLEANS PICAYUNE GIVES THE FOLLOWING INCIDENT OF THE BATTLE OF CERRO GORDO:

"We may be permitted to make particular mention of the check which the brave Tennesseans met in their assault upon one of the Mexican positions. That they were checked, if not temporarily repulsed, appears undoubted. – A letter which we publish in another column upon the death of a young officer from Memphis shows this. The explanation we understand to be briefly this. In leading his brigade into action, Gen. Pillow. It opened a terrific fire upon the regiment, which the men encountered with the most manly hearts and rushed upon the foe. Gen. Pillow distinguished himself by his personal gallantry upon the occasion, being in the thickest for the fight. Finding his force inadequate to seize the position, he drew off his men, but not until a fourth of them had been killed or wounded. The rest of the brigade was immediately ordered up, and the whole formed with the brave Tennesseans in the midst, and the attack was upon the very point of being renewed, when the Mexicans ran up the white flag. We have endeavored to give the facts as we believe them to have occurred, and shall willingly modify this statement if it be in any degree erroneous. The hardhood and daring of the Tennesseans were proved and applauded at Cerro Gordo, as were the like qualities in another regiment from that State.
Cerro Gordo was carried, and before Twigg's division reached the national road above. President Santa Anna, with Generals Canalizo and Almonte, and some six or eight thousand men escaped towards Xalapa just before success, they contributed much to distract and dismay their immediate opponent's. Brigadier General Pillow and his brigade twice assaulted with great daring the enemy's line of batteries on our left; and though without command the advanced forces towards Xalapa. Major General Patterson left a sick bed to share in the dangers and fatigues of the day; and after the surrender went forward to an hour or two. Nearest portion of the enemy towards the batteries below, sent out Cols Harney and Childs to hold a parley. The surrender followed in assault, but not in time. The General, reaching the tower a few minutes before me, and observing a white flag displayed from the breast works, drover the enemy from them, planted the colors of the bayonet. 1st artillery, 3d and 7th infantry – the enemy's flag still flying – and, after some minutes of sharp firing, finished the conquest with the execution, which I had the pleasure to witness, was most brilliant and decisive. The brigade ascended the long and the tremendous fire of artillery and musketry with the utmost steadiness, reached the breast works, drover the enemy from them, planted the colors of the bayonet. It is a most pleasing duty to say that the highest praise is due to Harney, Childs, Plymton, Losing, Alexander, their gallant officers and men, for this brilliant service, independent of the great results which soon followed. In this hurried and imperfect report I must not omit to say that Brigadier Gen. Twiggs, in passing the mountain range beyond Cerro Gordo, crowned with the tower, detached from his division, as I suggested the day before, a strong force to carry that height, which commanded the Xalapa road at the foot, and could not fall, if carried, to cut off the whole, or any part of the enemy's force from a retreat in any direction. A portion of the 1st artillery, under the often distinguished Brevet Col. Childs, the 3d infantry, under Captain Alexander, the 7th infantry, under Lieut Col Plymton, and the rifles, under Major Loring, all under the temporary command of Col Harney, 2d dragoons, during the confinement to his bed of Brevet Brigadier Gen P F Smith, composed that detachment. The style of execution, which I had the pleasure to witness, was most brilliant and decisive. The brigade ascended the long and the tremendous fire of artillery and musketry with the utmost steadiness, reached the breast works, drover the enemy from them, planted the colors of the 1st artillery, 3d and 7th infantry – the enemy's flag still flying – and, after some minutes of sharp firing, finished the conquest with the bayonet. It is a most pleasing duty to say that the highest praise is due to Harney, Childs, Plymton, Losing, Alexander, their gallant officers and men, for this brilliant service, independent of the great results which soon followed.

Worth's division of regulars coming up at this time he detached Brevet Lieut Col C F Smith, with his light battalion, to support the assault, but not in time. The General, reaching the tower a few minutes before me, and observing a white flag displayed from the nearest portion of the enemy towards the batteries below, sent out Cols Harney and Childs to hold a parley. The surrender followed in an hour or two.

Major General Patterson left a sick bed to share in the dangers and fatigues of the day; and after the surrender went forward to command the advanced forces towards Xalapa.

Brigadier General Pillow and his brigade twice assaulted with great daring the enemy's line of batteries on our left; and though without success, they contributed much to distract and dismay their immediate opponent's.

President Santa Anna, with Generals Canalizo and Almonte, and some six or eight thousand men escaped towards Xalapa just before Cerro Gordo was carried, and before Twigg's division reached the national road above.
I have determined to parole the prisoners – officers and men – as I have not the means of feeding them here, beyond today, and cannot afford to detach a heavy body of horse and foot, with wagons, to accompany them to Vera Cruz. Our baggage train, though increasing, is not yet half large enough to give an assured progress to this army. Besides, a greater number of prisoners would probably escape from the escow in the long and deep sandy road, without subsistence – ten to one – that we shall find again, out of the same body of men, in the ranks opposed to us. Not one of the Vera Cruz prisoners is believed to have been in the lines of Cerro Gordo. Some six of the officers, highest in rank, refuse to give their paroles, except to go to Vera Cruz, and then perhaps to the United States.

The small arms and their accoutrements, being of no value to our army here or at home, I have ordered them to be destroyed; for we have not the means of transporting them. I am, also, somewhat embarrassed with the – places of artillery – all bronze – which we have captured. It would take a brigade, and half the mules of this army, to transport them fifty miles. A field battery I shall take for service with the army; but the heavy metal must be collected, and left here for the present. We have our own selgetrain and the proper carriages with us.

Being much occupied with the prisoners, and all the details of a forward movement, besides looking to the supplies which are to follow from Vera Cruz, I have time to add no more – intending to be at Xalapa early tomorrow. We shall not, probably, again meet with serious opposition this side of Perote – certainly not, unless delayed by the want of the means of transportation.

I have the honor to remain, sir, with high respect, your most obedient servant.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

P.S. I invite attention to the accompanying letter to President Santa Anna, taken in his carriage yesterday; also to his proclamation, issued on hearing that we had captured Vera Cruz, &c., in which he says: “If the enemy advance one step more, the national independence will be buried in the abyss of the past.” We have taken that step. W.S.

I make a second postscript to say that there is some hope, I am happy to learn, that Gen Shields may survive his wounds.

One of the principal motives for paroling the prisoners of war is, to diminish the assistances of other garrisons in our march.

W.S

Hon. Wm. L. Marcy, Secretary of War.

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p2c5 2,453 words.

MEXICO

From the N. O. Times, May 3

Important changes in the Government – Retirement of Gomez Farias, and election of a President substitute – Choice of Senor Anaya – His Inaugural Address – Santa Anna’s Address to Congress – Project for Fortifying the Capital, &c., &c.

In the last news from the interior of Mexico which we gave, derived from late Havana papers, we announced that Santa Anna had left the Capitol, to assume the chief command of the troops concentrated in the mountain passes of the Jalapa Road, to oppose the advance of Gen. Scott and his army; and that he had left Senor Anaya at the head of affairs during his absence. Gomez Farias, the Vice President, had entirely disappeared from the scene; he had been swept away, as if by magic; in fact, no authentic statement of the means by which that unquiet spirit had been so summarily disposed of, had reached this country. Simultaneous, however, with the arrival of the news of the battle of Sierra Gordo, came intelligence from the city of Mexico, which has cleared up the whole mystery. Gomez Farias, although a man of enlarged views, and undoubted patriotism, was, perhaps, one of the most unpopular public men in Mexico. His ultra reform projects brought him into collision with the powerful hierarchy of the country, whose influence, principally, united with other circumstances, at length succeeded in hurling him from power. Santa Anna found, on his arrival at the capitol, from San Louis, whither he had been brought for the ostensible purpose of putting an end to the species of civil war which was raging within its walls, that Gomez Farias must retire. How was this to be effected? Some proposed one plan, some another, but Santa Anna would hear of no departure from regular constitutional action. As Santa Anna was to leave for the army, it would not do to let things remain in statuo quo, as the moment Gomez Farias again became President, ad interim, a renewal of the divisions, conflicts, & c., & c. which had just ceased, would inevitably take place. In this dilemma, the Congress were induced to pass a bill, suppressing the office of Vice President. This occurred on the 31st of May, and in the debate which followed the introduction of the bill, Gomez Farias seems to have been well supported by his friends. The division for and against, 38 to 35, shows how close are party positions in that assembly. On the 1st of April, a decree was promulgated to this effect:

1. Permission is granted to the actual President of the Republic, to take command in person of the forces which the Government may place under his command, to resist the foreign army.
2. The Vice Presidency of the Republic, established by the law of the 21st December last, is suppressed.

3. The place of the provisional President shall be filled by a substitute named by Congress, according to the terms of the law just cited.

4. If in this election the vote of the deputations should be tied, in place of determining the choice by lot, Congress shall decide voting by person.

5. The functions of the substitute shall cease when the provisional President shall return to the exercise of power. States shall proceed to the election of a President of the

6. On the 15th day of May next, the Legislatures of the Republic, according to the form prescribed by the Constitution of 1824, and with no other difference save voting for one individual only.

7. The same Legislature shall at once transmit to the Sovereign Congress the result of the election in a certified despatch.

PRESIDENT SUBSTITUTE. – SENOR ANAYA. – Gomez Farias having thus been confined to private life, it was necessary to provide a provisional successor to Santa Anna, who had announced his intention to proceed to Vera Cruz and its vicinity to make head against the victorious foe. An election was therefore held by Congress, on the disposition of the Vice President for a President Substitute, as the novel term is. There were two candidates, Senor Don Pedro Anaya and Gen. Almonte. The former received 60 votes, and the latter 11, voting by person; or 18 votes against 3, count by deputation.

Senor Anaya being thus elected, was sworn into office on the 1st of April, and entered on the duties of President the next day; Santa Anna setting forth for the North and East to join the army, at 2 P.M.

Senor Anaya is a man of high character and considerable talent. The Mexican papers state that the selection is a good one; since under him, all grades of Mexicans can harmonize, and thus show a firm, united, and imposing front to the enemy. He had done good service to his country at a variety or epochs, beginning with the days of her struggle for independence; and was a rare example of disinterestedness, never having been a candidate for office.

THE PRESS AT THE CAPITAL. – Notwithstanding all the reverses attending the Mexican arms, the papers breathe nothing but a spirit of determined hostility to us. They announce that they much henceforth conquer or perish; that nothing can preserve their nationality save concentrating their energies and readily sacrificing all on the altar of their country. The struggle, they emphatically state, is for "independence.” The following is from the Republican:

In the front of an enemy conquering and menacing we conjure all Mexicans who love the honor and even the existence of their country, that henceforth they have but one party – that of Independence; and but one device – VENGEANCE AND WAR.

The Diario del Gobierno urges the different States to send in their contributions, &c, to the General Government to sustain the war, instead of doing as they do now, which is, to be each looking after its own protection and preservation exclusively. No effectual resistance can be made to the Americans unless they concentrate their means and strength.

SANTA ANNA. – At the moment of his departure for the army, Santa Anna submitted a very long address to the Supreme Constituent Congress, in which he reviews his personal career since he was recalled from exile to assume the reins of Government. He says, on the moment when he first heard of the commencement of hostilities between Mexico and the United States, he felt a strong desire to return to his native country to assist in her defence. He returned, and without any feeling of personal ambition, he devoted himself to organize an army to make head against the victorious Americans. He traces his course of conduct at San Luis – points to the raising, as if by enchantment, of the "brilliant and numerous army” collected there. He inveighs against the Government for leaving the soldiers without the first necessaries of life. He then narrates the march across the desert, to attack Gen. Taylor at Angostura or Buena Vista. Here:

The daring of the soldiers during the combat can only compare with their endurance while crossing the desert, with their resignation under the want of food and raiment and with their patience when suffering by the wounds of ball and knife inflicted by the Americans, without any medical attendance. If it be true, as has been asserted by Napoleon, that the quality of soldiers is to support fatigue and privations, and that valor is only the second quality, then the Mexican army has proved, in the memorable expedition of the month of February, that it is not deficient in either.

RETREAT FROM ANGOSTURA. – He offers the following as an excuse for not continuing in front of General Taylor:

Although for the reasons which I gave in my official despatch, I could not purpose the enemy, I had concentrated my forces in such places as offered some prospect of subsisting the troops, in the hope that the moment would shortly arrive when we could consummate our triumph. Such were my intentions, which I should have carried into effect had it not been for the news which I received of two important events: First, the danger with which Vera Cruz was threatened; and, the secondly, revolution which had broken out in the capital, and which obliged me to change my plans. The first showed me the necessity of sending assistance to Vera Cruz, one of the keys of the Republic, and its garrison having nothing to sustain it but their heroism, could not hold out any length of time. The second, informing me of a pronunciamento by which, to the scandal of all the world, Mexicans were going to destroy each other, when the foreign enemy was threatening its independence from all sides, forced me to fly to the rescue to establish public order and tranquility. To meet these two evils, of equal importance, it became necessary to return with the army to San Luis, whence I ordered a respectable division to proceed to Vera Cruz, while I proceed in person to put a stop to civil war.
NO PEACE – He renews, for the hundredth time, perhaps, his determination to listen to no terms with us, while our troops occupy any portion of Mexico.

In the face of the nation and of the whole world, I have stated that I am determined to fight the usurpers of our soil as long as there is the print of their foot left on our sacred soil. My sentiments, in conformity in every respect with my pledges, separate me from the Government, and call me to the army, and in obedience to both I have determined to march this week to Vera Cruz to take charge of the military operations.

The State of Vera Cruz, of which I know every inch, and which I love with intense favor, as it is the place of my nativity, is invaded by the force of the foreigners, its sufferings cannot be indifferent to me, because, as a Mexican, I feel the misfortunes of every State, and doubly of that State were I first saw the light.

DENUNCIATION OF OUR TROOPS. – In concluding his address, Santa Anna incidentally alludes to the barbarity and vandalism displayed by our soldiers. This is amusing enough, when we reflect on the mutilations of our Teamsters, the assassination of our stray soldiers, and the bestial ferocity which seem innate to the Mexican, who, as on the field of Buena Vista, and Urrea’s attack on our wagon trains, only see in the wounded and unarmed, a fresh incentive to vindictive cruelty. But Santa Anna speaks to his countrymen, and not to the world at large; the former, in their ignorance, still believe in the magnanimy of the great Mexican nations, and in the valor, honor and humanity of their redoubtable chief.

Before concluding, I think it my duty to state clearly and openly my opinion respecting the war which we are maintaining. To no man it is given to life the veil of futurity, and no one can say what will be the result of the events which will pass under our eyes, but favorable or fatal, they must not influence our opinion, which must be based on other considerations. If Divine Providence should have in store for us more trials – if again our fields should be devastated, our cities bombarded, our villages destroyed; our brave soldiers should die on the field of battle, and, even if fortune should be propitious, the calamities inseparable from war be terrible, particularly when conducted with the barbarity and vandalism displayed by the Americans, without any mitigation of civilization, and to the disgrace of their arms: but fatal as all these evils might be, far more pernicious beyond comparison would be a peace forced upon us at this moment. Peace, yes, peace is what that nation wants, but a peace that must be won by our valor and constancy, bought by victories obtained by a people that detests oppression. A peace of this kind will save us, and make us respected by the powers that observe us, and give us the place due to the Mexican nation. If we cannot give us the place due to the Mexican nation. If we cannot obtain such a peace it is better to bury ourselves under the ruins of our cities, and better to die than live without honor.

As to myself, I am determined to breast the dangers of the campaign, confident that my conduct will gain the approbation of my fellow citizens. If I am crowned by victory, and succeed in driving the enemy from our soil, I shall retire to private life, satisfied that I have rendered my country some service; or if the lead of steel shall cut the thread of my life, I shall die contented, as I shall leave to my country an honorable memory, and to my children a name at which they need never blush.

Here he concludes, dating his address, Mexico, 2d April, 1847.

Fortifying the Capital – The President Anaya, immediately after taking the reins of Government, called together the principal military officers in the city, with a view to consult on the best manner of putting it into a state of defence. They were unanimous in recommending fortifications to be constructed, and the work to be begun forthwith. In the Republican, it is stated, that the Chief of the Engineer Corps present, had been instructed to prepare a plan for presentation to the Government immediately. Senor Gamboa, a public man of some weight in Mexico, has presented an address to Congress calling on them to remain stationary in the capital, and advising prompt measures towards preparing for a victorious defence. These facts prove the little confidence entertained in the efficiency of the means provided by Santa Anna, on the Jalapa road, to arrest the further progress of our arms. The populace were still very restive, although the insurgents had laid down their arms for the supercession of Gomez Farias.

Preparations. – The cannon foundary of Chapultepec was in full blast. There were two Paixhan guns of large caliber, and two eight pounder field pieces cast there on the 4th ultimo.

A robbery was committed on the passengers in a stage coach, close to the capital, on the 2d ultimo, by two men who were supposed to be disbanded soldiers.

For the above news from the capital of Mexico, we have drawn largely from our friends of the Picayune and the Patria of yesterday.

THE MEXICAN TARIFF. – We learn that up to the departure of the steamer M’Kim from Vera Cruz, the 20th ult. goods were entered at the rate of duties prescribed by Gen. Scott, no official notification having been received, at that date, of the new Tariff prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p2c6  581 words.

LATER FROM VERA CRUZ.

From the N. O. Times.

ANOTHER VICTORY – CAPTURE OF TUSPAN – TRIUMPH OF THE NAVY.
The U.S. transport schr Gen. Patterson arrived at New Orleans Monday morning from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 24th.

By this conveyance (says the Delta,) we have to gratifying intelligence of the capture of Tuspan, by the gallant Com. Perry and the equally gallant squadron under his command; thus showing that our Navy wants but the opportunities which have been presented to the Army, to be like them wherever they triumphed.

The Gen. Patterson fell in with Com. Perry and his squadron, on their return from the Tuspan Expedition, on 24th ult, 25 miles north of Vera Cruz. Se was boarded by an officer from the U.S. steamer Scorpion, who put letters on board, and who reported to Capt. Jackson, that on the 19th Tuspan had been taken, after a fierce and determined resistance by the Mexican troops. We lost some four men killed and some fourteen wounded, among whom were four officers – Capt. Tatnall, (slightly,) Lieut. Parker, (severely,) Lieut. Harstein and Passed Midshipman Lowndes, (slightly.)

The Mexicans, finding further resistance unavailing, spiked all their guns, raised the defences of the place, and then abandoned it.

From the Picayune.

Gen Shields was still alive at last accounts, but it was thought he could not survive – Capt. Johnston, of the topographical engineers, remained in a very critical state. Gen. Pillows’ wound is not serious.

The Mexican officers, on their way to the United States, were sent over to the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, on the 21st ult. They were in fine spirits.

Sergeant Tucker, of the 2d dragoons, was shot at and wounded in the hand while riding an express from Gen. Scott to Vera Cruz on the 19th ult. On the 21st a teamster was picked up on the road, having been killed by some cowardly Mexican.

We annex a letter from a correspondent at Vera Cruz, which is the latest we have from that city:

VERA CRUZ, (Mexico,) April 23d, 1847.

Gentlemen – We are now four days without a word concerning the movements above, and are beginning to think it possible that an express has been cut off – particularly as the last express which came through received a volley of about fifty muskets. It only wounded one of the five dragoons, (the sergeant,) a musket ball having passed through his hand. An express left here with a mail on the 21st and after proceeding twenty-five miles overtook our provision train under a strong escort, the commander of which deemed it prudent to take charge of the mail himself – feeling confident that nothing but a strong body of well armed men would be at all safe in trying to make their way through to Jalapa.

This city appears to be filling up every day with both Mexicans and Americans. The former are gaining confidence in the Americans, and the latter are flooding the market with Yankee merchandise. Uncle Sam’s warehouses are chock full of provisions, and his magazines full of combustibles. As yet the business is confined to the city and suburbs, but as soon as the communication has been well opened between this and Jalapa, we may expect to see Vera Cruz the most active business place of its size on the continent. The weather is very warm, and all we want to cool ourselves is ice. There has been a little brought on shore and retailed at 25 cents per pound.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p2c6 172 words.

FROM MATAMOROS

We have a copy of the American Flag, of the 21st ult. The following is the most important paragraph we find in it:

DOWN UPON THEM. – We stated not long ago that Gen. Taylor had resolved on a requisition upon the States of New Leon, Coahuila and Tamaulipas, for indemnification for the destruction of the public property of the United States by Mexican robbers in these departments of Mexico. Since then Col. Cushing has received an order directing him to call upon the Alcades of this place, and will accordingly pay his respects to their honors this morning. The proportion of this department is $47,500, and can be liquidated in mules at twenty dollars a head, beef cattle at ten, or corn at three per fanega, (three bushels.) The Alcades here will confer with the authorities of other towns as to the amount of taxable property in their several districts, to serve as data in fixing the proportion of each. The quartermaster here will receipt for all that may be “forked over.”

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p4c1 989 words.

ANOTHER GLORIOUS VICTORY!

Santa Anna has been again signally defeated, and his army scattered like chaff before the wind – escaping himself from the fate which befall so many of his Generals and other distinguished officers, by the precipitancy of his flights from the field of battle – a precipitancy perhaps not altogether inexcusable, inasmuch as, being a "lame bird," it was expedient that he should have a fair start in the general stampede. Besides, he is not without illustrious predecessors. The Napoleon of the old Continent, as Santa Anna claims to be of the new, fled post haste from Waterloo, as soon he perceived that Victory, in earlier life the inseparable companion of his Eagles, had forever deserted his standards. But, for one, we are not disposed to impute to cowardice an act which in truth have been dictated by policy rather than by fear. Santa Anna is the rallying point of all the factions in Mexico, which, warring upon each other in his absence with the most unmitigable ferocity, are fused, temporarily at least, into compactness, by his name, which, though it coupled with epithets of derision very naturally in the United States, unquestionable? a magic influence in Mexico. With his death or captivity, so far as we can judge from the events that have transpired since his return from exile, the national spirit, embodied in his person, would find no leader of sufficient influence and capacity to awaken its enthusiasm and to concentrate and give direction to its energies. He is, besides, the Government of Mexico – and he knew that as the probable if not the inevitable consequence of his capacity, Anarchy and Discord in the capital would be superadded to the perils and calamities of War. It was important, therefore, less to himself personally than to his country, that he should not be taken prisoner; and doubtless this consideration did more to accelerate his flight, if it be true that he fled while the battle still raged, than the promptings of cowardice, to which it is attributed.

Santa Anna’s escape may be important in another respect. If he be now inclined to terminate the hopeless struggle against the invaders of his country, and to put a stop to these scenes of “blood and carnage,” he, and he alone, it is supposed, possesses sufficient influence with the Mexican people to secure their assent to a consummation so devoutly to be desired. What may be his purposes, after this additional and most signal proof of the inability of the Mexican troops, to cope with the Anglo-Saxon in combat, even with all the advantages possessed by an invaded people over the invader, and with all the motives to exertion inspired by the consideration that they are fighting near their own hearth–stones and altars, we cannot surmise. We had, supposed that the "bloody instructions" he had heretofore, we are at a loss now to determine whether the disastrous result of this last brilliant battle, fought under circumstances more favorable to the Mexicans, who had selected their own position, than any perhaps which has taken place since the campaign opened, except those at Monterey and at Buena Vista, will have the effect of subduing their proverbial pride and obstinacy. If such should be its effect, however, it is obviously fortunate that Santa Anna, who alone can bind the antagonist factions into one, and important some thing like organization to the dismembered Government; has been enabled to return to the city of Mexico – thought, on the other hand, if he should be still for war, his escape will be not less unfortunate than was his return to Mexico, with a passport from Mr. Polk in his pocket. It is scarcely worth while, however, to speculate upon future contingencies, when all conjecture founded on the usual motives of human action must be baffled, as it has been heretofore, so frequently, by the extraordinary character of the Mexican people.

The Hero of Lundy’s Lane, who, like General Taylor, has been for many months past, a target for the shafts of malicious writings, has vindicated anew his claim to the gratitude and admiration of his countrymen. As the Charleston Courier remarks, "It gives us pleasure to know that the name of SCOTT is associated with this brilliant victory. The hero of 182 has not degenerated, but has proved that the laurels that then encircled his youthful brow are held in fond remembrance, and that the sword that then gleamed amid the battle’s storm is yet wielded by one who can strike as truly, and perhaps with more efficiency, than in former years, when life’s purple current flowed more freely and rapidly through his excited veins. The names of SCOTT and TAYLOR, as military chieftains, now stand pre-eminent among modern heroes. They have no competitors for military fame."

This victory, however, is not unaccompanied by the usual causes for mourning over the gallant dead by whose heroism it has been achieved, but who shall never hear the applauding shouts of their countrymen, as the tidings are heralded through the land. The voice of praise, though grateful to the survivors of the conflict, cannot "pierce the dull, cold ear of death." Their friends, indeed, may cherish the memory of the slain, and feel an emotion of pride when their deeds of valor are rehearsed; but the wall of anguish from widowed and orphaned hearts will drown even the shout of triumph with which it will be mingled in unnatural union. We cannot forget, even in the memory of the slain, and feel an emotion of pride when their deeds of valor are rehearsed; but the wall of anguish from widowed and orphaned hearts will drown even the shout of triumph with which it will be mingled in unnatural union. We cannot forget, even in the first glow of exulting pride, that this brilliant triumph with which it will be mingled in unnatural union. We cannot forget, even in the first glow of exulting pride, that this brilliant triumph will carry desolation to many scattered households and pain and sorrow to many bereaved hearts. Such is the costly sacrifice, however, which the Mouth of War exacts as the price of the crimson wreath by which his brow is encircled.

[MSH]

---

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p4c1 100 words.

UNTITLED

The St. Louis Reveille has been informed by Mr. Sublette, recently from Santa Fe, that very few, if any, of the volunteers now in our “territory” of New Mexico, can be induced to re-enlist. The desire to return home is general; and if troops do not arrive, (as it is now certain none will,) to relieve them at the expiration of their term in the country – and, as a necessary consequence, New Mexico will re-assume its former relations to the Mexican Republic! What, that event, will have been gained by this expensive, and worse than profitless expedition to Santa Fe?

[MSH]

---

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p4c2 673 words.

THE VIRGINIA REGIMENT

The following letter, which we copy from the Staunton Spectator, and which we presume is from the pen of its Editor, Capt. Kenton Harper of the Augusta company, though not as late as other advices from that part of the theatre of warlike operations in Mexico,
CAMARGO, Mexico, March 27, 1847

Dear -----: We of the Virginia detachment, comprising the four companies heretofore mentioned by me as having proceeded to Monterey, with the Ohio regiment under Col. Curtis, arrived here last evening, having been ordered by Gen. Taylor to take charge of a return train of about one hundred waggons. No incident of much interest occurred on the route back. We had several demonstrations, indicating a disposition to attack us, but no actual fight. The parties were all small that were seen, and I doubt whether the enemy now is in any great force on the road. We had expected to return by a different route, and such were our orders up to the evening before we left. It was designed by Gen. Taylor that we should open a new communication by Catarela and China – an enterprise at some hazard, in the opinion of all military men at Monterey with whom I conversed – particularly with our small force, namely the four Virginia companies, Capt. Marshall's dragoons, and one six pounder of Bragg's battery under Lieutenant Kilburn, a young officer of merit, who did good service in the late battle of Buena Vista. Our next move from this, however, will be on that route. The entire Virginia regiment, where is now here, with all its field and staff officers, it is understood, will take up the line of march for China during the present week – six companies to remain there and garrison the place, and the remainder to proceed to Monterey under Col. Hamtramck and Major Early. The Augusta Volunteers are to be armed with rifles, and form a part of the detachment stationed at China, which, report says, is one of the pleasantest places in Mexico. Capt. Preston's company is made grenadiers, and goes with Colonel Hamtramck.

Our company have had a good deal of diarrhea among them, but no case of much seriousness. We left one man ill with it (Jacob Long) at the hospital in Monterey – another (John Peer) with the effects of an injury received on ship-board, not serious I hope – and another, Lieutenant Geiger, ill of mumps. I saw all of them before I left, and think there is little doubt that they are able to be about by this time.

While at Monterey, I visited Arista's gardens. They are on a grand scale, but too new to possess very great beauty. The trees and shrubbery are small; but the fine baths and ducts for irrigating the grounds, all of solid masonry, give indication that the proprietor intended to spare no expense to make it one of the loveliest spots on earth. The flowers were generally in pots, and to the credit of our army be it said, that, although, the gardens are much visited, not the slightest injury has been done to any thing. I also visited several other gardens, filled with orange trees loaded with ripe fruit, blossoms, &c. The perfume was delicious. Also with the lime, lemon, and fig, the latter, however, had no fruit.

Camargo is a miserably dirty place, and although at rest, we see little comfort. But for the momentary fueling, it is hardly worth while to think of putting on a clean shirt. While on the march we do no pretend to make an effort to keep clean. All complexions are confounded by the dust, and it is often difficult to tell even the color of our clothes. Our Virginia blue makes a pretty good grey mixed to think of putting on a clean shirt. While on the march we do no pretend to make an effort to keep clean. All complexions are confounded by the dust, and it is often difficult to tell even the color of our clothes. Our Virginia blue makes a pretty good grey mixed.
Resolved, That the Legislature cannot refrain from expressing the hope and the belief, that seems so rapidly laying hold of public opinion, that the services the distinguished chief of this gallant little army may lead to his being called, by the acclamation of the WHOLE PEOPLE, to the highest office in their gift.

Resolved, That the Governor of the State be and he is hereby authorized and requested to have struck, by a competent artist, a gold medal, with suitable devices, to be presented in the name of the State to Gen. Z. Taylor.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to forward to Gen. Taylor a copy of these resolutions.

These resolutions were made the order of the day for the 30th, said the vote upon them, we presume, will be received in a few days. [MSH]

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p4c2  52 words.

UNTITLED

The rumor that Gen. Lamar and his small command had been surrounded and cut to pieces by the Mexicans, is discredited by the Houston Telegraph of the 5th ult. That paper thinks it is but a new edition of the old story that Ben McCulloch and his command had been cut off. [MSH]

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p4c3  3,450 words.

IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE! ANOTHER GLORIOUS VICTORY!!  BATTLE OF CERRO GORDO!

Santa Anna again Defeated in a Pitched Battle by General Scott – Six Thousand Mexicans taken Prisoners – Five Hundred Americans killed and Wounded – Gen. La Vega again a Prisoner.

DAILY PICAYUNE OFFICE.

Friday Evening, April 30 – 5 o'clock.

By the steamship McKim, Capt. Phillipsbury, which left Vera Cruz on the 20th inst., we have glorious news from the army under Gen. Scott. Mr. Bugbee, who was sent from the scene of action by Mr. Kendall, with despatches for this office, left the McKim 20 miles below the city, and came up to the city, express, with the glorious tidings.

On the afternoon of the 17th, the advance under Gen. Twiggs encountered the enemy, when a severe but indecisive conflict ensued. As the general orders, which we give below, show that it was Gen. Scott's intention to give battle only on the 18th, it may be that this engagement was brought on by the Mexicans. The main battle occurred on the 18th, and resulted in the complete triumph of the American arms.

Santa Anna made his escape after his army was routed. Gen. La Vega is again among the prisoners. Besides him there were five generals taken and a long list of colonels and subordinate officers as are coming to this place. They were to leave Vera Cruz about the 25th.

We will give further particulars tomorrow morning in our regular edition.

PLAN DEL RIO, April 17 – 11 A. M.

The division of General Twiggs started two hours since, and a heavy cannonade has already commenced upon his line from the farthest of the Mexican works. At intervals, too, the rattling of small arms can be heard distinctly from the dragon camp where I am writing this. I am going out, withCols. Duncan and Bohlan and Capt. Pemberton, to the seat of action, and will return here at night to report the progress of the fight.–it was not intended, I believe, that General Twiggs should opened the fight to-day, at least to bring on a general action, and it is therefore presumable the Mexicans have commenced upon him. I write in great haste. GWK

5 P.M.–I have just returned from the scene of conflict, and a bloody one it has been considering the number engaged. A hill this side of the farthest Mexican work; and on which there was no one seen last evening, was found occupied by the enemy's light troops this morning, and to force it was at once deemed indispensable. For this purpose the rifles under Maj. Sumner, besides detachments of artillery and infantry, were ordered to charge up the rugged ascent. This they did in gallant style, driving the Mexicans, after a resistance which may be put down as most obstinate. Great numbers of the enemy were killed, while on our side the loss was also severe. Major Sumner was shot in the head by a musket ball–severely but not mortally: Lieutenants Maury and Gibbs, of the rifles, were also wounded, but not severely, as was also Lieutenant Jarvis of the 2nd infantry. I could not learn that any of our officers were killed. The entire loss on our side, in killed nd wounded, is estimated at about one hundred; but from the nature of the ground–broken,
The loss on both sides has been heavy—how could it have been otherwise? The rough and rocky road, cut through rugged defiles and wooden leg, have fallen into our hands, together with all the money of his army. No one anticipated, when they arose from their hard the want of dragoons on the other side of their lines. As it is, his traveling coach, together with all his papers, valuables, and even his Pinson, Manuel Uruaga, and Jose Obando. The names of the colonels I have not been able to gather. Nothing saved Santa Anna but Among the prisoners is our old friend LaVega, who fought with his accustomed gallantry. The other generals are Jose Maria Jarero, Luis Pinson, Manuel Uruaga, and Jose Obando. The names of the colonels I have not been able to gather. Nothing saved Santa Anna but the impossibility, of finding a road of the dragoons to the rear of the enemy's works saved any part of Santa Anna's grand army, including his own illustrious person.

The American arms have achieved another glorious and most brilliant victory. Out numbering General Scott's force materially, and occupying positions which looked impregnable as Gibraltar, one after another of their works have been taken to–day, five generals, colonels enough to command ten such armies as ours, and other officers innumerable, have been taken prisoners, together with 6000 men, and the rest of their army driven and routed with the loss of every thing, ammunition, cannon, baggage train, all. Nothing but the impossibility, of finding a road of the dragoons to the rear of the enemy's works saved any part of Santa Anna's grand army, including his own illustrious person.

Among the prisoners is our old friend LaVega, who fought with his accustomed gallantry. The other generals are Jose Maria Jarero, Luis Pinson, Manuel Uruaga, and Jose Obando. The names of the colonels I have not been able to gather. Nothing saved Santa Anna but the want of dragoons on the other side of their lines. As it is, his traveling coach, together with all his papers, valuables, and even his wooden leg, have fallen into our hands, together with all the money of his army. No one anticipated, when they arose from their hard barric this morning, such a complete victory.

The loss on both sides has been heavy—how could it have been otherwise? The rough and rocky road, cut through rugged defiles and dense chaparral by our troops, is now lined with our wounded. The rifles, Col. Haskell's Tennessee volunteers, the 1st artillery, the 7th infantry, and Captain William's company of Kentucky volunteers, have perhaps suffered most. Gen. Shields was severely, and I am fearful, mortally wounded, while gallantly leading his brigade to storm one of the enemy's farthest works. General Pillow was also wounded, although slightly, while storming a fort on this side, commanded by La Vega. All the field officers of Col. Haskell's regiment were wounded at the same time, save himself. Of the rifles, Capt. Mason has lost a leg, Lieut. Ewell has been badly wounded, Lieut. McLane slightly. I have already mentioned the gallant Maj. Sumner and other officers wounded yesterday.

I have specified some regiments above which signalized themselves: it happened to be their fortune, in the disposition of the battle, to fall upon what all good soldiers may term pleasant places—the most difficult works to storm—and bravely and without faltering did they execute the perilous duties assigned them. At 1 o'clock this afternoon General Twiggs, whose division has been in the hardest of it, was pursuing the flying enemy towards Jalapa. Pinson, who commanded the forts nearest Plan del Rio, asked of Gen. Worth time to consider before the capitulated. Desirous to come to terms, Gen. Worth gave him fifteen minutes, and he surrendered unconditionally. Had he not done so, the slaughter would have been terrible.

I write in great haste, and have no time for particulars. The names of the killed and wounded I will ascertain as soon as possible. I think that five hundred will cover our entire loss. Had it not have been for the positive cowardice of Santa Anna and Canalizo, who ran, before the battle – at least in brave men's hands – was [?] lost, it would have been far greater. No one, at present, can estimate the loss of the Mexicans – they are scattered on the hills, in the roads, every where.

What disposition Gen. Scott is to make of the prisoners is yet unknown. He may get them all at liberty on their paroles, from the difficulty of feeding them; and to accelerate his own advanced movements. We shall hear by tomorrow. I wish he could send the officers at least to the U. States, for there is a fine string of them.

It is now impossible to name officers who have distinguished themselves. I cannot, however, omit to mention Colonels Harney, Riley and Childs, of the regulars; Colonels Baker, Forman and Haskell, of the volunteers, as every one is talking of them.

I write this in great haste, and with noise, confusion and every thing else around me. You cannot appreciate the victory. To describe the ground and fortifications of the enemy, and the difficulty of training their outer works, and the toil and peril undergone by the... troops were impossible.

No time to say another word. I send this off by an express. It is Gen. Scott’s intention, I know, to push on towards the city of Mexico with all haste. To-morrow I will write more fully, and send by Gen. Scott’s express.

Yours,
GWK

CAMP AT PLAN DEL RIO,
April 19, 1847 – Forenoon.

The rout of the Mexicans last evening was complete. They were pursued within 4 miles of Jalapa by Gen. Twiggs, at which point there were none to follow. Santa Anna himself, instead of entombing himself as he threatened, escaped by cutting the saddle mule of his team from the harness of his magnificent evach, mounting him, and then taking to the chaparral. His service of massive silver, nearly all his papers, his money—every thing in his carriage, even his dinner, was captured. I have a capital story to tell about this dinner when I have a moment to spare.

The Mexican loss upon the heights was awful—the ground in places is covered with the dead! Among the bodies found was that of General Vasquez, and near him was Colonel Palacio, mortally wounded. Their loss in the retreat was terribly severe—every by-path was strewn with the dead. Had our dragoons been enabled to reach them in season, all would have been killed or captured—Santa Anna among them. Canalizo, with his noted lancers, had the prudence to "vamos" early.

Even up to this time it is impossible to give any thing like a full or correct list of our wounded officers—it is surprising that many of them were not killed. Lieut. Darby, a gallant young officer of the topographical engineers, was badly but not mortally wounded while storming one of the heights. Lieut. Ewell, of the rifles, is supposed to be mortally wounded. This regiment has suffered terribly. Lieut. Dana, of the 7th Infantry, was badly wounded; Capt. Patten, of the 2d, slightly. Lieut. Davis, of the rifles, was very badly wounded in the hip. Major Sumner, of the 2nd Dragoons, but commanding Rifles, is improving.

The list of killed and wounded officers in Col Haskell’s command yesterday I have been able to obtain. It should here be stated that Capt. William’s company of Kentucky and Capt. Chas. Naylor’s company of Pennsylvania volunteers were attached temporarily to this regiment. Here is the list:

KILLED – 1st Lieut Fred B Nelson, commanding company; 2d Lieut C G Gill, company E. Both these officers were from Memphis.

WOUNDED – Lieut. Col. D H Cumming, slightly; Maj Robert Farquharson, (of the 1st Texas volunteers, assigned to this regiment for the day) severely, 1st Lieut Wiley P Halie, adjutant severely; 1st Lieut Wm Yearwood, mortally; 2d Lieut George T Sutherland, Kentucky volunteers, severely. The regiment, when in action, numbered less than 400 men, and its loss was 79 in killed and wounded.

La Vega was in command of the Cerro Gordo on the first day of the fight, but a deserter from our dragoons, a German, going into their camp at night, and informing them that the main attack was to be on the right of their line—the work so fiercely attacked by Gen. Pillow, he changed places with Gen. Vasquez. The latter, as I have already stated, was killed—La Vega defended his post until the lines of the enemy were completely turned. Several Mexican colonels have been killed, but their names I have been unable to learn. A brother of Gen. La Vega, a colonel of artillery, was severely, and, as is supposed, mortally wounded.

Hundreds of cases of Individual gallantry, in storming the different heights, are mentioned. Col. Childs led on his command on the first day until he had only some forty or fifty men with him. It is also said that Capt. Magruddez followed up a change until he had but nine soldiers left. I cannot now recollect one-tenth part of the instances of almost reckless daring displayed, but shall endeavor to pick them up. I shall also send you on a full return of the killed and wounded if I can obtain it, but at present it is almost impossible to get hold of anything. The wounded are still along the roads for miles, although they are bringing them in as fast as possible.

The army is to advance towards Mexico immediately. Gen. Worth’s division marched this morning—Gen. Scott is to march at noon. Santa Anna’s coach is to be harnessed up for the purpose of carrying on Major Sumner—better use than it was ever put to before.

The officers and men of the Mexican army—I mean such as are prisoners—are to be turned loose on their parole not again to take up arms during the war. Perhaps it is the best disposition that could be made of them, as any other course would delay Gen. Scott’s forward movement. Fifteen of their officers have refused to sign, but have given their parole of honor to report themselves, without delay, to Col. Wilson at Vera Cruz, as prisoners of war. Among these are Gens. La Vega and Jarero, the latter Governor of Perote during the time the Texan prisoners were there, and I believe distinguished for his good treatment of them. There officers will either be kept in the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, or else proceed to the United States.

Gen. Shields is still alive, but it is considered impossible for him to survive. The ball went through his lungs as he was leading his men to storm the farthest work of the enemy.

I write this amid confusion of all kinds, and with no other table than knees. A hundred Mexican officers are around me, making out their paroles, while our own dead are being carried by and consigned to their long resting place by the road-side.

I shall start for Jalapa this afternoon, and will write by every opportunity. I send you some Mexican papers, as also Santa Anna’s last proclamation. It is rich.

GWK
PS – I have just learned that there is some hopes for Gen’l Shields. God grant he may live.

Col. Baker, who charged on the last fort, lost 45 men in killed and wounded out of only a portion of his regiment. Lieut. Cowardin, killed; Lieut. Murphy supposed to be mortally wounded; Lieut. Johnson wounded in three places, and thigh amputated; Lieuts. Scott, Froman and Maltby, wounded.

GWK

The following general orders were issued by Gen. Scott the evening before the battle of the 18th:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Plan del Rio, April 17, 1847

General Orders, No. 111

The enemy’s whole line of entrenchments and batteries will be attacked in front, and at the same time turned, early in the day to–morrow – probably before 10 o’clock am.

The second [Twiggs’s] division of regulars is already advanced within easy turning distance towards the enemy’s left. That division has instructions to move forward before daylight to–morrow, and take up position across the National Road in the enemy’s rear, so as to cut off a retreat towards Xalapa. It may be reinforced to–day, if unexpectedly attacked in force, by regiments – one or two taken from Shield’s brigade of volunteers. If not, the two volunteer regiments will march for that purpose at daylight to–morrow morning, under Brig. Gen. Shields, who will report to Brig. Gen. Twiggs on getting up with him, or the general–in–chief, if he be in advance.

The remaining regiment of that volunteer brigade will receive instructions in the course of this day.

The first division of regulars (Worth’s) will follow the movement against the enemy’s left at sunrise to–morrow morning.

As already arranged, Brig Gen Pillow’s brigade will march at 6 o’clock to–morrow morning along the route he has carefully recommended, and stand ready as soon as he hears the report of arms on our right, or sooner, if circumstances should favor him – to prepare the enemy’s line of batteries at such point – the nearer the river the better – as he may select. Once in the rear of that line, he will turn to the right or left, or both, and attack the batteries in reverse, or it abandoned, he will pursue the enemy with vigor until further orders.

Wall’s field battery and the cavalry will be held in reserve on the National Road, a little out of view and range of the enemy’s batteries. They will take up that position at 9 o’clock in the morning.

The enemy’s batteries being carried or abandoned, all our divisions and corps will pursue with vigor.

This pursuit may be continued many miles, until stopped by darkness or fortified positions towards Xalapa. Consequently, the body of the army will not return to this encampment; but he followed to–morrow afternoon, or early the next morning, by the baggage trains of the several corps. For this purpose, the officers and men of each corps will be left to guard its camp and effects, and to load up the latter in the wagons of the corps. A commander of the present encampment will be designated in the course of this day.

As soon as it shall be known that the enemy’s works have been carried [?] that the general pursuit has been commenced, one wagon for each regiment and one for the cavalry, will follow the movement, to receive, under the directions of medical officers, the wounded and disabled, who will be brought back to the place for treatment, in general hospital.

The Surgeon General will organize this important service and designate that hospital, as well as the medical officers to be left at it.

Every man who marches out to attack or pursue the enemy, will take the usual allowance of ammunition, and subsistence for at least two days.

By command of Maj. Gen. Scott:
H.L. SCOTT, AAA General.

Prisoners

List of Mexican Officers captured at Cerro Gordo, on the 18th April, who have ? their parole of honor to report themselves without delay to the Commandant of the American forces at Vera Cruz as prisoners of War:

Jose Ma Jarero, Brigadier General
Romulo de la Vega
The above prisoners under the charge of Captian George W Hughes, Corps of Topographical Engineers, arrived at Vera Cruz on the 21st inst. about one hour previous to the departure of the McKim.

It has been left to their election by Gen. Scott whether they should remain close prisoners in the castle of San Juan de Ulua or proceed to New Orleans, where they should be allowed such personal liberty as their condition and conduct might seem to require of the commandant at that post. It is understood that all the foregoing captured officers have expressed a desire to be transferred to the United States, and that Col Wilaoa, Governor of Vera Cruz, has acceded to their wished and had directed that a vessel should be held in readiness to sail, for their accommodation, about the 25th of April.

Tuesday, May 11, 1847 RW24i38p4c4 705 words.

LATE FROM MONTEREY

[From the Mobile Register and Journal, May 1]

The schr. Heroine arrived at New Orleans on Thursday from the Brazos. The Delta contains a letter dated Monterey, April 4, from which we make the following extracts:

Three days ago the Alcalde and Priest of a small town some 20 miles distant, on the road to China, came in and reported to Gen. Taylor the murder of 24 Mexicans, at Gualopa, a small ranch about six miles from Ramus. The murder was committed, they say, by a party of Americans numbering about 20, and was done in the night. The murdered men were first made prisoners, tied, and afterwards all shot, through their heads. The murder is said to have been committed on the 28th ult. On that night a train of loaded wagons, escorted by 200 infantry, and about the same number of horse, under the command of Col. Mitchell, of the 1st Ohio Regiment, encamped at Marin, which is about five miles from the scene of the murder. The mounted men were composed of the U.S. Dragoons and Texas Rangers, under the command of Maj. Graham, of the 2d Dragoons. Suspicion rests upon some part of this corps, though no clue has yet been found to discover the guilty. The officers in command – gentlemen, and rigid disciplinarians – are using every means in their power to investigate the matter:

Gen. Taylor has got his team up on the subject, and is determined to have hung everyone who, it can be proved, had taken part in the murder. The town where these men were killed is but a few miles from the place where the large train was captured, and so many wagoners massacred on the 22d of February. Some 15 or 20 of the wagoners who escaped from that massacre came up in the last train, yet there is no evidence that they were engaged in the Gualopa murder.

I passed over the place of the massacre of the 22d February a few days ago, and the scene is truly the most horrid and revolting that I have ever witnessed. The remains of the murdered men, yet unburied, stripped of every particle of clothing, lay upon the plains, their flesh devoured by Mexican wolves and buzzards, and their bones bleached in the sun.

The train was a very large and valuable one, and stretched out from three to four miles in length. The attack was made upon the escort, who were in the advance, by a large body of Lancers. The escort, forty men, under Lieutenant Barbour of the Kentucky Legion, were all taken prisoners, and are now in the possession of Urrea. The Lancers charged down the train and lanced without mercy the wagoners as they ran for their lives to the chapparal. More than three-fourths of them, it is thought, were killed – and their bodies shockingly mutilated and disfigured.

Those who passed the scene a few days after say that some had their hearts cut out and suspended upon the bushes, or thrust into their mouths; the eyes of others were dug from their sockets, and inserted in the wounds made in other parts of their bodies; and other mutilations were performed that would make even a North American savage blush to look at. Yet these were committed by Gen. Urrea’s men – the regular soldiers of the Mexican army!

Urrea, by last accounts, was at Lipares, expecting reinforcements. It is rumored that he had four pieces of artillery with him. Marin, Carrelvo, Mier and China will all be garrisoned by our troops, which will render our communication with Camargo entirely safe. The troops here are in excellent health and condition.
I have this moment landed from the West, and hasten to send you an item of news that I have selected from the St. Louis Republican crying in justice has excited universal disgust in the Army, all the accounts from the camp concur in declaring. What incentive is there such as Hopping of New York, and Caleb Cushing of Massachusetts, who have never yet seen the face of an enemy. That this rank and consummate skill on the field of battle, and who bear in their persons the bullets of the enemy, in order to reward political favorites, such men as Jefferson Davis and Campbell and Miller and Smith and a host of others, who have exhibited both undaunted courage and taken away by the suicidal course of the Administration, in passing by contemptuously the claims (we use the word emphatically) of them.” And what inducement have men to encounter these hardships and perils for the miserable pittance of seven dollars a month, the lasso – bacon and corn bread – pebble stones or drifting sands for a bed, and the sky for a roof – with hard knocks, and plenty of golden ‘Halls of Montezuma’ in the distance. It has come down to sober realities – to rough roads and narrow defiles – the knife and editors of the National Intelligencer,) cannot be recruited to its full complement, and the day of volunteering is rapidly coming to an in the field, will soon return home. How are their places even to be supplied? “The Army proper (says a letter from New Orleans to the heard no response to the call. And this is but a sample of the feeling now every where prevalent. Some ten thousand volunteers, now weeks, for example, have elapsed, since a requisition was made upon Virginia for two companies of Infantry – and we have as yet heard no response to the call. And this is but a sample of the feeling now every where prevalent. Some ten thousand volunteers, now in the field, will soon return home. How are their places even to be supplied? "The Army proper (says a letter from New Orleans to the editors of the National Intelligencer from New Orleaus: "I dread the result to our army of an advance on the capital, even not withstanding the recent victory. I do not mean as to any actual open resistance; for in all fighting we shall drive them before us but the certain effect of the constant wear and tear, from disease, battle, guerillas, hardships, and exposure, which the army has to encounter; so that, if Santa Anna knew the best policy, it would be to let us advance without opposition, to and into the capital, and let the army waste away there, as the best informed men say it would do, like a ball of snow in July, whilst the Mexicans combined their operations to cutting off or harassing convoys, curtailing our supplies, picking up stragglers, and obliging us to keep compact and in large bodies, without the ability to send out even a foraging party. When in the city of Mexico, we could not keep open the communications with Vera Cruz, or received supplies or reinforcements, except by large detachments which could fight their way; and if posts are garrisoned at intervals on the route, they must all be with a force that can resist a heavy attack, or they would be carried in detail. In the march that Gen. Scott has now undertaken, he must go in close and compact columns, as the Mexican cavalry will hover round them like Cossacks, driving in their foraging parties and small detachments, and wasting their strength and resources by this petty warfare. At present, however, it is, I believe, understood that he will not go beyond Jalapa.” Should Mexico still refuse to negotiate – and that she will do so unless the terms which it is understood the Administration has determined to insist upon dictating to her shall be greatly modified, is seriously apprehended – there is but one course left open to our Government, and that is the military occupation of the country, as suggested by the Vera Cruz Eagle. But, leaving out of view the expanse of that system, whence are we to obtain men enough to supply the annual decimation of our forces by disease and the casualties of a guerilla war? Can it be believed that we can keep an army of forty of fifty thousand men in foreign service, should the war be protracted for a series of years? – Already we see that enlistments for the regular service languish, while the enthusiasm, which, at, the commencement of the war, enable the Washington Union to proclaim that 350,000 soldiers had tendered their services to the War Department, has so far subsided, that it is now difficult to muster, in any State, a single additional regiment. – Some weeks, for example, have elapsed, since a requisition was made upon Virginia for two companies of Infantry – and we have as yet heard no response to the call. And this is but a sample of the feeling now every where prevalent. Some ten thousand volunteers, now in the field, will soon return home. How are their places even to be supplied? "The Army proper (says a letter from New Orleans to the editors of the National Intelligencer,) cannot be recruited to its full complement, and the day of volunteering is rapidly coming to an end. It is no longer considered a fine summer’s frolic, through a garden of Eden, with gold and silver images all along the road, and the golden ‘Halls of Montezuma’ in the distance. It has come down to sober realities – to rough roads and narrow defiles – the knife and the lasso – bacon and corn bread – pebble stones or drifting sands for a bed, and the sky for a roof – with hard knocks, and plenty of them.” And what inducement have men to encounter these hardships and perils for the miserable pittance of seven dollars a month, with all the "glory" thrown in? Military promotion might tempt some ambitious spirits – but that, the most powerful stimulant, has been taken away by the suicidal course of the Administration, in passing by contemptuously the claims (we use the word emphatically) of such men as Jefferson Davis and Campbell and Miller and Smith and a host of others, who have exhibited both undaunted courage and consummate skill on the field of battle, and who bear in their persons the bullets of the enemy, in order to reward political favorites, such as Hopping of New York, and Caleb Cushing of Massachusetts, who have never yet seen the face of an enemy. That this rank and crying in justice has excited universal disgust in the Army, all the accounts from the camp concur in declaring. What incentive is there... for other to take the place of these gallant men, when they may expect to meet a like fate – to win their country’s applause by their gallantry, but, when rewards are to be bestowed, to see themselves neglected by their Government, and men taken from the pursuits of civil life – more political favorites – and placed over them in the field?

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p1c3 92 words.

GENERAL TAYLOR’S MOVEMENTS

The National Intelligencer publishes an extract of a letter from New Orleans, which states that “General Taylor is determined, (though opposed to the plan,) to advance from his present position. Two thousand iron-bound 18 gallon kegs are now (says the letter) making for him here, and many of them have gone forward, intended for carrying water across the desert, between San Luis and Saltillo. A mule, with a pack-saddle, will carry two of them, one slung on each side. A thousand horses are also being bought for him, with other large supplies.”

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p1c3 118 words.

OFFICIAL.

The following brief despatch is the only one which has been received at the Navy Department concerning the capture of Tuspan:

UNITED STATES FLAG SHIP MISSISSIPPI,
At sea, 20 miles north of Vera Cruz.
April 24, 1847.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the department that I am now on my return from an expedition against Tuspan which has resulted in a complete success – the forts and town having been carried with trifling loss, and the guns either destroyed or brought away.

Further particulars will be transmitted by the first opportunity.

With great respect, I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

M. C. PERRY,
Commanding Home Squadron,

Hon. JOHN Y. MASON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D.C.

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p1c4 3,299 words.

MR. BOTT’S POSITION ON THE WILMONT PROVISO

For the Whig

Messrs. Editors – Previous to the recent election in this District for Congress, there was a continued and studied effort made, by the Democratic party and press, to convince the people that Mr. Botts occupied a false and dangerous position upon the Wilmont Proviso question. Repeated efforts were made, by essay writers and editorial phillippines, both in the Washington Union and Richmond Enquirer, to induce the Whig party of this Congressional district to reject Mr. Botts as an enemy to the peculiar and cherished institutions of the South.

The election is now over. Mr. Botts is the member elect, and destined to occupy a deservedly high and influential position in the next Congress. There can now be no occasion to abuse public confidence or mislead public credulity; all excitement has passed away, and the conflict of pasty prejudice may well give place to calm and enlightened judgment.

I propose, with all possible frankness, to consider and review the position which Mr. Botts really occupies on the Wilmont Proviso question; as also his position on the delicate and vexed question of slavery, as it stands affected by past legislation, and is likely to be influenced by the future action of our national government.

It seems to my mind (and I can discover in my own bosom no latent motive for deliberate self delusion) that if there is any one public man who, more than another, occupies the vantage ground of true principle, fortified by enlightened judgment and sound practical statesmanship, on the slave question, that man is John Minor Botts. A candid review of the history of the rise and progress of this agitated question, connected with the peculiar circumstances attending the development (political) of the Wilmont Proviso question, will result in the honest conviction, on every unbiased mind, that Mr. Botts has chosen for himself, and will maintain for his country, the precise position suggested by sound wisdom and designated by the plain doctrines of the constitution.

We live in an age of rapid developments, and characterized by feverish popular excitement. The onward march of American greatness, in the path of national power and political strength, unless guided by the sure and steady lights of the constitution, may result in the ultimate overthrow of our chartered liberties – to be followed by the uncontrolled influences of wild political faction, and an unbridled lust for national aggrandizement. In the political and party tendencies of the day, the cautious and reflecting statesman can easily descry the elements of future discord, which, if left to themselves, will, sooner or later, involve the structure of our national government in inevitable ruin. The unhealthy influence of sectional and geographical prejudices, heightened and expanded by the not less dangerous manifestations of partisan fealty, betoken the rapid approach of a fearful sectional conflict, in our national councils, between the North and the South. There are not wanting those in each grand division of this approaching contest between the slaveholding and the non-slaveholding influence, who seek to nourish the feuds in their respective sections, for the most sinister purposes. In the view of such a conflict, it behoves the nation to estimate and rightly appreciate the chief actors in this, perhaps the last drama in our national career. To those who are honest and true to the constitution, in so trying a conflict, it is proper, in advance, to accord the merit due to their elevated patriotism. The bitterness of mere party strife should cease to exist at the bidding of our country – when every supporter of the constitution should be at his post.

The sectional and geographical distinctions which characterize the peculiar sentiments between the North and South – on the slave question – denote the outlines of a fearful and dangerous conflict, in our national Government, irrespective of all other party considerations. The elements which constitute the controversy rise above and reach beyond the influence of party organization; they spring, unbidden, from the moral structure of society, and fasten their baneful influences on the mind and heart of each citizen, from the cradle to the grave. Habit, education, paternal instruction, with maternal sympathies, all combine to cherish in the hearts of the people of the non-slaveholding States, those feelings, that moral tone of character, bordering on religious conviction, which has hitherto slept in restless anxiety – restrained only by a sense of political and national duty under the constitution. More than once has the concentrated influence of this individual feeling in the non-slaveholding communities, developed itself, in Congress, as a grand sectional move, antagonistical to the institution of domestic slavery as it existed in the South. – At each successive period, heretofore, has the voice of patriotism silenced the clamors of sectional discord. Mutual concessions and reciprocal compromises, between the North and South, have hitherto stayed the spirit of national discord and preserved the Union, by maintaining the constitution. It is still in the power of the friends of the Union to pursue the same course, and yet longer quell the factious disturbers of public peace, by rigidly adhering to the strict construction of constitutional provisions, and abiding by the compromises made under it.

I will now endeavor to show that Mr. Botts is one of those firm supporters of the constitution, on whose patriotic exertions both the North and South are to rely for the further maintenance of our institutions under the constitution.

The Wilmont Proviso question dates its parentage from the present war with the Republic of Mexico. Since the first commencement of this unfortunate and ill-advised war, there have been those, high in authority, and supposed to speak the sentiments of our Government, who claim, as one of [fold] made, on the part of the South, than we again hear the distinct annunciation of the sectional prejudices of the North, on the slave question. In the particular case under consideration, that anti-slavery feeling exhibited itself, in the Wilmont Proviso resolution, as an accompanying qualification, to be attached to any money advanced by Congress, as a means of procuring a peace with Mexico.

Here there are two distinct and independent questions presented. The first, as to whether any of the MEXICAN TERRITORY shall, as a consequence of peace with Mexico, be annexed to the American territory, subject to the jurisdiction and occupancy of American citizens, under the Constitution. To this proposition, Mr. Botts, with a sagacity characterized of his enlarged public views, has anticipated the recurrence of the past controversies in Congress, on the slave question, and seeks to ward off the approaching danger, by arresting its cause in its incipient development. Here, at least, he manifests no enmity to Southern institutions, while he, with the firmness and the integrity of a pure Statesman, cognizant of the source of our true national greatness, assures that the North is avers, as a Southern man, to the acquisition of any portion of the Mexican soul. He desires to adhere to our present territorial limits, and to maintain inviolate THERE, the Constitution and laws of our Government. There is certainly, in this position, no evidence of enmity to Southern institutions, as they exits and are protected under the Constitution.

Those who seek to avail him, and thus weaken his influence, assert an entirely different DOCTRINE. They, the Washington Union at their head, are using every exertion to force the public mind to the conviction, in the face of the Wilmont Proviso question, that the people of the United States are destined to receive and possess a large territorial accession, and to be enriched by the occupancy of Mexican territory, under American jurisdiction. Mr. Botts occupies the safe and conservative ground – while his political enemies occupy the dangerous and untried ground, of forcing, by national legislation, on the American people, FOREIGN TERRITORY. If we are to have enacted another joint resolution annexation, where the will of a majority, under the constitution, is to be supreme, how are the Southern institutions to subsist, when they are in a decided minority?

The proposition contained in the Wilmont proviso is a resulting consequence from the first, though in its nature independent of it. It distinctly announces that should any additional territory, to be derived by purchase or conquest from Mexico, be annexed by treaty or otherwise, then, and in that event, the North will contend for the legislative suppression of slavery, or involuntary servitude, in all such territory. Here arise the true and serious difficulty, involved in this whole question. If it ever becomes a practical one, by the actual acquisition of Mexican territory, as a part and parcel of a foreign territory, all the considerations attached to the first proposition will have ceased to exist, and a now and original question be presented to the American people. We shall then be called on to decide how far and under what restrictions the United States have the constitutional right to acquire, by treaty stipulations, resulting from a state of actual war, any portion of the territory of the conquered party to such treaty. This will be a new question, unprovided for by express grants in the constitution, and must be controlled by the sound exercise of powers derived, by necessary implication, from the granted powers in that instrument. If we consider the position occupied by Mr. Botts on this point, we shall readily perceive that he occupies safe and reliable ground – under the constitution. His position is distinctly announced in his letter before referred to:
Mr. Botts expressly denies to Congress any and all right to legislate over the subject, and occupies precisely the same ground assumed and announced by Mr. Calhoun, in his celebrated resolutions, offered in the Senate of the United States last winter. While Mr. Botts utterly denies to Congress the power to legislate over the subject of slavery, he expressly refers this question, as to each State, to be carved out of any new territory, to the people occupying such territory. Under the constitution, the only allowable condition which Congress has the power to affirm to any portion of the people of the United States, occupying the territory of the United States, is, that when they seek to be admitted into the Union, as an independent State, they shall guarantee a "Republican Constitution." This condition Congress has the express power of expressing. Any and all other conditions, touching the internal social or political institutions of the citizens of such new States, would be an assumption of power not granted by and in derogation of the constitution.

This position of Mr. Botts is in strict keeping with the constitutions, and assures to the States a perfect guarantee of their rights, political and social, reserved to them in the original compact.

Here then we discovered in Mr. Botts, not only an OPPONENT OF THE WILMONT PROVISO RESOLUTIONS, BUT AN ADVOCATE, UNDER THE CONSTITUTION OF TRUE PRACTICAL STATES RIGHTS. Is the position if his political adversaries as well fortified? It would seem not. They have derided the Missouri compromise – characterized it as a fraud upon the South – asserted the right of annexing, by joint resolution, slave territory – avowed the right, and threatened its utter execution, of establishing slave territory north of 36 30 north latitude – and denied the power to Congress, in any manner, to adjust the scale of politcalequality, resulting as a consequence from the EXTENSION OF NEW SLAVE TERRITORY. – Be it remembered that the Missouri compromise has, up to the present moment, served to shield Southern institutions from every aggression on the part of the North – and Texas received its admission into the Union as a slave State by Northern voices, thus acknowledging the right to preserve our institutions in the territory which belonged, or was even supposed to belong to the United States, AS OF RIGHT, IN 1819.

Now that a new era has dawned upon our destinies as a nation, and new and foreign territory is to be acquired – when we find the Vice President of the United States asserting the right to PURCHASE AND ANNEX CUBA – the loading Democratic men of the South assert the RIGHT OF CONGRESS TO LEGISLATE OVER THE SUBJECT OF SLAVERY, AND TO ANNEX NEW AND FOREIGN TERRITORY AS SLAVE TERRITORY, the morale of this proposition is too obvious. The Missouri compromise has effected its holy purposes, and our Southern territory is nearly exhausted – more is desired, and we seek to dismember a sister Republic, that we possess ourselves of a part her territory. In this territory there gentlemen desire Congress, by legislation, to allow the existence of Slavery. Mr. Botts denies the right entirely, and refers this domestic question to the people who may hereafter occupy such territory. Is there any thing unsafe, unsound or dangerous in all this?

If we consider Mr. Botts’ position on the general question of Slavery, it is not less sound and reliable. In his recent letter, before referred to, he uses this express and emphatic language. He refuses to support or countenance any man for the Presidency or Vice Presidency who is “JUSTLY LIABLE TO THE SUSPICION EVEN OF A DISPOSITION TO INTERFERE WITH THE INSTITUTION OF SLAVERY IN ANY MANNER AS IT EXISTS UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.” Nothing could be more explicit and candid. Here we again find Mr. Botts the fearless advocate of the chartered rights and constitutional liberties of the people.

In the one case, we find him opposed to the dismemberment of the Mexican Republic, for the purpose of annexing any part of her territory to the United States – as the source of present discord and future difficulties. In the other, he assumes the high constitutional ground, that should such territory be acquired, the question as to whether Slavery shall or shall not be allowed within its borders must be referred back to the people who occupy this territory, when they seek admission into the Union. As slavery now exists, in the Union and under the Constitution. Mr. Botts is its unflinching friend, and will sustain it in every manner, and refuse to put in power any man who “is justly liable to the suspicion even of a disposition to interfere with it.” In every aspect, then, of this vexed question, it does seem to me that Mr. Botts is not only a friend to the Union, but a fearless champion of Southern rights and institutions, as they “EXIST UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.” To require him to do more, would be to violate every rule of right and unsettle every principle of sound legislation. If properly cherished and steadily pursued, the line of political action, indicated by Mr. Botts, in his recent letter, seems to afford the only safe refuge from the impending storm. Those who differ with him, in policy, on this question, may well ponder over the consequences attending their course, before they seek to poison the public mind, North and South, by a studied perversion of his conduct and principles. In the dark hour of our history as a nation – when the unadvised haste of the South or the ill-fated zeal of the North, shall have drawn around our closing existence, as a great and united people, the last struggle for constitutional liberty – there will be found at least one champion, bold to declare and mighty to defend the only safe reliance in such a crisis – the Constitution; and that champion will be JOHN MINOR BOTTS.

There is, in our system of national legislation, two fixed and reliable sources, from which the minority can even derive an adequate protection from the over–legislation of the majority. These are –

1st. The Constitution, as it is written.

2d. That system of social and political equity which results, as a necessary consequence, from the social and political compact, which gave birth to the Constitution.

In call cases, where the powers granted or withheld are expressly given or denied, the rule of legislative action is fixed, and cannot be denied, the rule of legislative action is fixed, and cannot be deviated from, on any occasion or under any circumstances, without “a deliberate, palpable and dangerous exercise of powers not granted by the constitutions.” Where, then, the constitution expressly and provides for the existence and maintenance of any one class of vested rights, necessarily attached to a portion of the American people, however few, or in whatever section of the country they may reside, Congress has no power, by subsequent legislation, to divest, impair and endanger such vested rights. Characterized and acknowledged in the constitution as being legal vested rights, with all the qualifications of property attached to their existence, no majority in Congress, however great, can assume to itself the power to disturb or destroy them. In such case, the minority will ever discover a safe and certain indemnity under the constitution, so long as the spirit of republicanism remains the chief feature in our government, or the law of the land holds sway over the passion of the multitude. Slavery “as it exists under the constitution,” is one of this class of vested rights, and will ever find a safeguard in the legislation of Congress, so long as the constitution stands. To this standard, Mr. Botts refers this question.

In a government like ours, held together by mutual “checks and balances,” which are cemented by MORAL AFFINITIES, and strengthened by reciprocal compromises, there must be some common LEGAL MEDIUM, by which each and every antagonistical interest must be graduated; otherwise, the local and geographical interests of the different sections of the country would be in active conflict, and eventually result in the overthrow of the constitution. This legal medium happily exists, in that NATURAL POLITICAL EQUITY which flows, as a consequence, from the spirit and genius of our institutions. From this source are derived those mutual concessions, thitherto so often resorted to, in the hour of danger, by one greatest and surreal statesman as the chief palladium of our constitution. This SPIRIT of the constitution, forms around our institutions a protection and gives to them an energy. It acts on the body polite, like the pericardum to the heart, shielding its vital functions, while it deserves its own powers of action from the healthful action of that which it contains and covers.

To this spirit of mutual concessions and reciprocal compromises was the preservation of the Union indebted in the Missouri compromise. By it was the Union saved in the darkest hours of its existence. The principles of that compromise shall remain inviolate. The rights established under it shall continue protected — the institutions of the South, guarantied by it, have gradually progressed and widely extended. Then let it not be disturbed. Permit not the unhallowed spirit of local discord to sever the ties of social brotherhood, which in that celebrated compromise were wound round the columns of the Union. There are those in the South who rashly seek to disturb its principles and repudiate its validity, on the ground that it was but a NUDE PACT, giving ever thing to the North and reserving nothing to the South. Such politicians are dangerous, and are not the men to assail Mr. Botts. They are pursuing the course which is most likely to endanger the Union, jeopard Southern institutions, and sacrifice on the altar of local pride the future safeguard of our nearest and best interests.

In conclusion, permit me to add, that the write of this communication has never held any conversation with Mr. Botts on this or any other political subject — is very slightly acquainted with him — and has been induced, in the hurried moments of his daily employment, to prepare the defence of that great and distinguished friend of the constitution, simply by a desire to see him properly and honest represented before the public on this truly delicate and dangerous question. ONE OF THE PEOPLE

Richmond, May 7th, 1847.

[MSH]

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p1c6

CHARGES AND SPECIFICATIONS.

See: Niles National Register, /Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#72.189–72.190May221847LIEUT

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p1c7  111 words.

FROM SANTA FE

We have St. Louis papers of last Monday, with news from Santa Fe, received by a trader, who left eight days after Mr. Soblette, and came by the way of Fort Leavenworth. The body of Colonel Burns was found in a ravine, where it had doubtless been concealed after the perpetration of a horrid murder. He had been missed for some time. Generally speaking all was quiet at Santa Fe, and the inhabitants exhibit a more pacific feeling. Nothing had been received from Col. Doniphan and his command in Chihuahua of a later date than has already reached the United States. Another half million dollars have been remitted to Santa Fe.

[MSH]

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p1c7  175 words.

CORRESPONDENCE FROM BALTIMORE SUN

WASHINGTON, May 11, 1847.

I learn that commissioners are soon to be sent, by our government, to Mexico, with a view to ascertain the dispositions of the Mexican government in regard to peace, and to conclude a peace, if Mexico should accept our terms. – The preliminaries, thus settled, will be submitted to the Mexican constituent Congress, for ratification, and will, of course, await the sanction of our treaty making power.

Senator Benton will be one of the commissioners; Senator Soule may be another. I do not think Mr. Buchman will consent to be one of them, unless, in the meantime, Mexico should make some positive advances towards peace. He would not go to Mexico, I think, upon any uncertainty.
EVENTS IN MEXICO

A mass of highly interesting intelligence, which reached us by yesterday's Southern mail, is laid before our readers this morning. Gen. Scott is in possession of Jalapa, and of the famous Castle of Perote, both of which, as had been anticipated, surrendered without a blow. But the great question is, are the Mexican authorities and people staggered in their resolution to maintain the integrity of that Republic inviolate? This question is answered by the action of the Mexican Congress which, on the receipt of the news of Santa Anna's defeat at Cerro Gordo, held an extraordinary session, and adopted the following preamble and articles:

"The sovereign constituent Mexican Congress, in use of the full powers with which the inhabitants of the Republic, have invested it for the sacred object of saving its nationality; and as a faithful interpreter of the firm determination with which its constituents are decided to carry on the war which the United States are now making on the nation, without desisting on account of any kind of reverses; and considering that under these circumstances the first public necessity is that of preserving a centre of union to direct the national defence with all the energy that circumstances demand, and to avoid even the danger of a revolutionary power arising which might dissolve the National Union, destroy its institutions, or consent to the dismemberment of its territory, has determined to decree as follows:

ART. 1 – The Supreme Government of the Union is authorized to dictate all necessary measures for the purpose of carrying on the war, defending the nationality of the Republic, and saving the federal republican form of government under which the nation is constituted.

ART. 2 – The preceding article does not authorize the Executive to make a peace with the United States, conclude a negotiation with foreign powers, nor dispose, in whole or in part, of the territory of the Republic.

ART. 3 – Neither does it authorize him to make contracts of colonization, impose punishments, nor confer any civil or military employments other than those whose appointments are expressly entrusted to him by the constitution.

ART. 4. – Every agreement or treaty shall be null and void which may be made between the Government of the United States and any authority whatever, which, subverting the actual order of affairs, should set aside or take the plate of the legally established supreme powers of the Union.

ART. 5 – Every individual is declared a traitor, let him be a private person or public functionary, who, either in his private capacity of invested with any authority, incompetent or of revolutionary origin, may enter into treaties with the United States of America.

ART. 6 – In the event that the actual Congress finds it impossible to continue its sessions, a permanent committee shall be immediately installed, to be composed of the oldest individuals then found present of each deputation.

ART. 7 – This committee, in the absence of Congress, shall perform the duties of a Government Council; shall appoint, in case of vacancy, the person who is to take charge temporarily of the Executive powers of the Republic, shall regulate the counting and taking of the votes in the election of a new President; shall give possession to the elected person, and shall call together the national representation.

ART. 8 – The powers which the present decree confers on the Government shall cease as soon as the war is concluded."

Such (says the New Orleans Picayune) is the amount of the proceedings of the Mexican Congress, held immediately after the news reached the capital of the disastrous defeat of Cerro Gordo. The editor of El Republicano, in speaking of this extraordinary session in his paper of the 21st of April, says that "to the honor of the Legislative body, it ought to be observed, that yesterday more than eighty members assembled, and that no other than sentiments of patriotism were heard expressed. May the common danger thus unite all Mexicans, and cause to disappear even the names of our sad dissensions!"

It appears, however, that the spirit of jealousy, distrust and discord is still widely prevalent among the leading men of Mexico. One of the Mexican papers, for example, openly charges Gomez Farias, the deposed Vice President, Rejon, and others, who, it is supposed, are the leaders of a party in favor of peace, with treasonable designs; while the late defeats of Santa Anna, both at Buena Vista and at Cerro Gordo, are ascribed some to his cowardice, and by others, with more plausibility, to corruption. The Mexicans are beginning to express doubts of Santa Anna's fidelity to their cause; and they refer to the passport given to him by Mr. Polk on his return from Havana, and to the appropriation of three millions of dollars by our congress at its last session, to be used in negotiating a peace, as strongly corroborative of their freshly awakened suspicions that Santa Anna has all along had a secret understanding with Mr. Polk, to which they attribute his long inaction at San Luis Potosi, and the reverses which have since befallen the Mexican armies under his command. Whether these suspicions are so generally entertained as to lead the Mexican Government to transfer the command of the Mexican forces to some other General, it is not possible, with the imperfect information in our possession, to determine – more especially as these statements are derived from sources not altogether reliable – we mean those Mexican soldiers and citizens who have fallen into our power, and who may be influenced, in their denunciations of Santa Anna, by a design either to conciliate or to deceive their captors.

One thing only is certain – and that is, that the recent victory of Cerro Gordo, like all that have preceded it, has failed to produce the slightest change of tone of the Mexican authorities. Their spirit, indeed, so far as it may be inferred from the action of their Congress, seems to raise with each successive disaster; and, though we have no doubt the Halls of the Montezumas will soon be, if they are not already, in our possession, we see but little reason to hope that even the subjection of their magnificent capital will induce them to hasten for a moment to a proposition for a renewal of negotiations, coupled as that proposition will in all probability be, with such terms as they have repeatedly heretofore declared to be wholly inadmissible.

What, then, are they to do, it may asked? It is reasonable to suppose that they will risk no more pitched battles – unless, indeed, they shall make one more desperate effort at Puebla, and another, should that result, as it will, disastrously, in defence of the ancient metropolis of the Republic – though perhaps Gen. Taylor, who is by this time on this march towards San Luis, with a view of forming a junction with Gen. Scott, preparatory to the attack, should resistance be offered, upon the city of Mexico, may be compelled to take the former city by storm. But, the city of Mexico in our possession, the Guerilla system of wartime, in which there is less to be lost by the invaded nation, and which, if energetically and skillfully conducted, must prove so harrowing and so destructive to the invaders, will, we presume, be resorted to. There will be no longer fields in which glory can be won, to compensate for the toils and dangers of an active campaign, but an incessant series of attacks will [fold], who will find behind every rock and bush an armed assassín, prepared to take advantage of the inferiority of numbers or of a momentary relaxation of vigilance – a species of warfare, of the sanguinary character of which some idea may be formed by those who have read the details of the Peninsular campaigns, when every city of town of note in Spain being garrisoned by French troops, the mountains swarmed with this armed banditti, ever ready to pounce upon and destroy every accounting and foraging party, which the necessities of the garrisons compelled them frequently to send into the country, and every detachment moving from one part of the line of communication to another.

We will not relinquish the hope, however, that Mexico may be induced, by the persuasion of neutral powers, if not by her own conviction of the impolicy of father protracting a contest so unequal, to consent to its termination though this can scarcely be anticipated if the invitation to do so, which it is said Mr. Polk is about to renew, shall be accompanied, as heretofore, by the annunciation, as a sine qua non on our part, of those harsh and rigorous terms, which, with a spirit that even her enemies must admire, in whatever contempt they may hold the feebleness of her efforts in the field, she has hitherto so promptly and indignantly rejected. For our own part, as we have heretofore had occasion to say, we believe that the acquisition of Mexican territory is in no manner desirable to the United States, except perhaps it may be a port upon the Pacific – and even the advantages of that, we have no doubt have been greatly exaggerated. Even, indeed, could we be satisfied, that it would indemnify us for the expenses of the war, we should depurate its acquisition, if we must necessarily take with it its degraded and turbulent population, to keep whom in subjection would require an immense standing army for years but more especially, because in the final disposition of it must arise that agitating question that has already more than once shaken the pillars of the Union, the existence of which must be more than ever, as the signs of the times clearly indicate, endangered by its renewal, in connection with our Mexican conquests. We believe that it will be safe and wiser ourselves to pay the expenses of the war, thrice multiplied, rather than bring into the Union a race of people so different in all respects from our own – and especially rather than endanger its existence, by giving occasion for the revival of the discussion of the Slavery question, in connection with the territory that may be acquired, and upon which it is impossible that the North and the South can ever agree.

But we are going much farther into these speculations, perhaps, than the occasion justifies – certainly much farther than we intended when we took up the pen. The drama may be perhaps soon brought to a close by the submission of Mexico, to the terms dictated by our Government – or, if not, we must prepare for an interminable “war of races,” unless our people shall determine, as we think they will, that the cost of the game promises infinitely to exceed the advantages of playing it out. We may soon expect to receive from Mexico such information as will enable us to judge more accurately than we can now do of her final determination; and of the duties which that determination will impose upon our Government, and in default of its own proper action, upon the People who it has so rashly and recklessly involved in this unnecessary and bloody strife.

[MSH]

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p2c2  262 words.

THE TEHUANTEPEC CANAL

We fear that Mr. Benjamin H. Wright, of New York, ha clapped an extinguisher upon the determination of the Strict Constructionists to dig a Ship Canal across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, as soon as the “right of way” can be coerced from Mexico, as one of the conditions of peace. In a note to the editors of the New York Courier & Enquirer, that gentleman states that a charter for this purpose has been already granted by the Mexican Government to Don Jose Garay, who has transferred his privileges to a Company in London, who are only awaiting the subsidence of faction in Mexico and the restoration of complete tranquility, in order to proceed with the enterprise. Mr. Wright goes on to say

"Mexico having thus formally, for a term at least, conveyed away her right over this channel, and this having become vested in neutrals ANTERIOR to the commencement of hostilities with the United States, it will, I suppose, become a question how far the United States Government may interfere in respect to rights and privileges legitimately held, and each as custom hitherto has recognized in all international intercourse. If the work was already executed and legally in the possession of foreigners, though a regularly chartered privilege, no one would think of disturbing the latter. The right is as perfect now, although the work is not thus advanced, unless it has reverted to Mexico and been taken advantage of by the latter on account of noncompliance with some of the conditions, working thereby a forfeiture. Of this I am not aware."

[MSH]
The Washington Union recommends the sequestration of the "Church Property" in Mexico. The pretext for this semi–official foreshadowing for a forthcoming Executive edict, is that the Church has loaned the Mexican Government money, to enable it to prosecute the war! – Would the Union confiscate the property of Mexican citizens who should evince the same loyalty to their native land? If not, why shall the loyalty of the Church, to the Government which protects it, subject its property to sequestration?

---

FROM TAMPICO

The New Orleans Times has the following letter from a correspondent, dated April 15, 1847:

"In my last I alluded to the discovery of a conspiracy among the Mexican police of this place, and of the arrest and imprisonment of a number of the conspirators. Since which time all their plans have been made known to the American commandant of this post, and the consequence is, that seven of the ringleaders, including the Alcade, have been banished and given to understand if they return to this city, on any pretext whatever, they will be treated as spies and shot. The "Policia de Tampico" have been abolished, with the exception of three, who have been detained in office to assist in the collection of market and other revenues, and a detail from the military, composing the City Guard, substituted in their place.

A private of company C. named Rufus Parker, was shot by the guard on the night of the 3d instant. He was under arrest and in the guard house, and seized one of the muskets of the guard and threatened to shoot any man who attempted to lay their hands on him. After being repeatedly ordered to put down the musket and deliver himself up, and being in the act of firing on the guard, the officer in command ordered the guard to fire, which order was instantly obeyed, and he fell dead on the spot, a ball piercing his heart."

---

A proposition was made to Gen. Scott before he started from Vera Cruz by Lieut. Maynard of the Navy, that he should be permitted to organize a company of 50 sailors, armed with revolvers and boarding pikes a block or so, and a little rope, to make a whip or pulleys, with which he would pledge himself to scale a height and whip up a field piece while a soldier would be looking at it. He proposed taking boarding pikes because he said, a sailor could not shoot a musket to hit the broadside of a house, and a pike being light, would answer the double purpose of charging and assisting to climb the side of any hill or mountain; he maintained that they would be more useful than soldiers, for such purposes, because more active and more enthusiastic. There was something so perfectly novel and original in the proposition, that the General was halt inclined at first to accede to it, but finally declined it; after complimenting him very highly for the originality and boldness of the project.

---

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

From the N. O. Delta, May 6.

Continued triumphant progress of the American Areas – Jalapa takes without a struggle – Perote, the powerful Perote, delivered up to Gen’l Worth, with all its Armament, without a shot from the Enemy – Reported Removal of Gen. Santa Anna from the command of the Mexican Army – Particulars of the taking of Tuspan – Probable junction contemplated between Gen’ls Scott and Taylor.

The U.S. transport steam–ship New Orleans, Captain Wright, from Vera Cruz, arrived last evening. She left on the evening of the 29th ult., and brought us our correspondence and the latest papers to the day of her sailing. – We proceed to lay their interesting contents before our readers.

We would, in the meantime, state that we have conversed with an intelligent passenger, who came over on the New Orleans. He says, that he understood Gen’l Taylor had succeeded in communicating with General Scott, and that the object of his despatch was the formation of a mutual understanding between them, with a view of joining their forces preparatory to a descent upon the city of Mexico.

Santa Anna boasts that there is still another Thermopylae on the road between Puebla and Mexico.

Scott pushes on without stop or falter; the destructive storm at Cerro Gordo delays not a day or an hour his onward march; with a boldness, an energy, and a masterly activity beyond all parallel, he has passed through the considerable town of Jalapa, traversed the dangerous and difficult road thirty miles beyond, and appears with the old vanguard of the army, under the gallant Worth, before the far–famed castle of Perote. This Bastile, so renowned in Mexican history as the gloomy asylum of disgraced and unfortunate Revolutionists, of the unhappy victims of anarchy and table rage, but still more familiar to all Americans as the dungeons of those brave men whose cruel wrongs gave the first impulse to the spirit whence this war sprung – this strong prison castle, with its battery of enormous guns and powerful defences, surrenders to our arms without a blow. If one stone still stands upon another of this gloomy monument of Mexican servility and imbecility, the flag of the "stars and stripes" waves over it, and American cannon and American bayonets bristle around its now invincible walls. Not here does Scott’s army rest its wearied limbs. A three days’ march will precipitate our victorious columns into the warlike town of the ancient Tlascalana, Puebla – whence marched the valiant warriors with whose bodies, slain in hand–to–hand combat. Cortez made his famous "Bridge of Corpses" – with its 60,000 inhabitants, will yield to our little army. And then – but let us look no further – let us await until the event will justify it, before we raise the cry of exultation and rejoicing over the last great achievement left to American valor – the capture of the city of the Montezumas!

[Correspondence of the Delta]

Letters from Chaparral.

JALAPA, Mexico, April 21, 1847

Eds Delta – I arrived at this lovely place yesterday, and found that Gen. Twiggs had hoisted the American flag in the city the day before. He followed the retreating heroes of Cerro Gordo to within a few miles of Jalapa, when all traces of them, as a body, disappeared, and he encamped for the night within three miles of the town that evening, and entered and took possession of it early the next morning.

Santa Anna did not pass through Jalapa, but, in company with Ampudia and Torrejon, turned off to the left at his hacienda, and halted for the night at the "nine mile pass," which was being fortified, but which, on second consideration, it was deemed prudent to evacuate. This evacuation took place yesterday morning, and in the evening Col. Harney’s dragoons took possession of the Pass. – Gen. Worth following in their footsteps. A number of small arms was taken at the Pass, but they are all of little or no value.

Gen. Worth, it is said, will move on to Perote, at which place many think he will have a fight, as it is reported here that additional defences are being made.

All along the road between Perote and Puebla, the Mexicans here say we will be opposed, and contrary, to the general belief, it is said the commander–in–chief will shortly move in that direction.

The list of killed and wounded, on our side, is much larger than was at first reported – it is over 350. Colonel Childs is the military governor of Jalapa.  [JLM]

I send you a Mexican paper. There are two days later dates here, but this contains all the important information.

CHAPARRAL.

JALAPA, April 22, 1847.

Gen. Worth approached last evening within four or five leagues of Perote, and entered the city today. We had accounts last night that it had been evacuated by the soldiery, who spiked all the guns before leaving.

I am extremely glad to have it in my power to state to you that Gen. Shields has improved much since my last, and Lieut. Hammond, who came from him this evening, thinks there is probability of his recovery.

Most of the wagons here will leave for Vera Cruz in the morning, and if it is the intention to remove early, it will retard it for ten or twelve days. [JLM]

The number killed our wounded, on our side, will not fall far short of 400. I have collected about two–thirds of the names and will send you a copy when it is complete. The alteration in some of the reports plays the devil even with what I have, but in two days, all will be right.

CHAPARRAL.

JALAPA, April 23 – 10 A.M.
Eds. Delta – An express has just got in from Perote. General Worth reached that town yesterday, at 11 o’clock, A.M. He found it completely evacuated by the soldiers of the enemy, and a Col. Vasquez left behind to surrender it with decency. An immense number of small arms, the big guns of the castle and city, and ammunition were taken possession of. It was unfounded, the report that the guns had been spiked in the castle; they were found in excellent order. Gen. Ampudia, with about 3,000 cavalry, in a wretched condition, was near the town when our troops entered it, when he put off.

Santa Anna had not been in Perote since the fight at Sierra Gordo, and he is supposed to be somewhere in the mountains.

    In haste,          CHAPARRAL

[From the Vera Cruz Eagle for the 28th ult.]

We understood yesterday that information had been received at Jalapa, that Gen. Worth had thrown his outposts towards Puebla, and would March immediately in that direction himself. We are somewhat doubtful as to its truth, however, not being able to trace it to any positive source. The latest information received from Perote, which might be relied on, (we think) is that issued by us in an extra on Monday last, and republished in this day’s paper. Genls. Scott, Patterson, Twiggs, Pillow and Quitman were in Jalapa. Genl. Shields is still in a very doubtful state in an hospital on the battle-field of Cerro Gordo. Rumor says that Puebla will yield without discharging a gun; if so, they will show more wisdom that has been evidenced by several other Mexican cities, with hardly a hope of success against us.

It is now certain that Santa Anna is at Orizaba, a little town at the lost of the mountain of that name, with about 1,000 troops around his standard. He was seen at that place on Sunday morning last, and was heard to express his desire of remaining there until he could insure a sufficient force to make another stand. In regard to the sincerity of his assertion much doubt is entertained, as it is supposed that he is exceedingly desirous to leave the country, but fears to attempt a movement of this kind openly, lest he should be assassinated immediately, which will no doubt be his fate ultimately, however long he may prolong it. –He will not dare return to the city of Mexico, is the universal opinion, until some success should crown his efforts to redeem his thousand promises to the deluded people and the clergy, the latter being now his only backers.

JUAN MORALES, General of brigade of the Mexican Republic – To the Nation and her Allies –It having arrived to my knowledge that some chiefs and officers of the invading army of the United States, which has operated against Vera Cruz, say that Gen Scott had previously advised me that the families could leave to avoid the evils attendant on a bombardment and consequently, those which have happened are chargeable upon me.

In order that neither now, nor at any future time, any accusation of justice may stigmatize the defence of Vera Cruz, I declare that it is false that any such advice was given – that the only communication I have received from Gen Scott in general terms, to surrender; that even the ? prevented from leaving the place; and that if the Mexican families could have left, the enemy would not have occupied the place without first burying its defenders in the ruins.

    Jalapa, April 4, 1847.
    JUAN MORALES.

COMMAND OF THE MEXICAN ARMY –It is generally reported that the Mexican government have removed Gen. Santa Anna from the chief command of the army, and appointed Gen. Valentine Canalizo as his successor.

Vera Cruz Chronicle, 28th ult.

By a person just arrived from Orizaba, we know that Gen Santa Anna arrived there with about 200 dragoons, and immediately commenced recruiting, having under his command about 6,000 men of the fugitives from Cerro Gordo. He also assures us that a correspondence had been seized by the authorities at Mexico, addressed by a great personage to Senor Rejon, offering a certain sum of he would bring about an early peace, and to place all the requisite means at his disposal.

In Puebla Gen. Inclan is commanding –They are fortifying the town for resistance. – Ibid.

--------------------------
[Correspondence of the Commercial Times]

VERA CRUZ, April 27.

A letter from Mr. Black, American Consul at the city of Mexico, was received today; by a friend of his, in this city, from Tampico, at which place he had taken refuge after being harshly driven from the capital, and prevented from taking the road to Vera Cruz. He will probably be in the U. States before this letter is received; it is, therefore, unnecessary to enter into particulars regarding his ?. It is a matter that give me no surprise: I have only wondered that he was not sent off months ago. During the whole of the war, Mr. Black has kept up a regular correspondence with the Government of the U. States, keeping it well informed of the facts occurring about him, and, in fact, pretty such throughout Mexico; for his correspondence has been extensive, and his acquaintance with the people and States, thorough. Perhaps there is no other man who could have been so serviceable, and no other people who would have permitted him to hold the ground which he has too long occupied.
April 28 – Our news today, from the interior, is of but little importance. Reports of more murders on the road, and the confirmation of some, of yesterday’s rumors, regarding the movements of Gen Scott and Santa Anna, are the only ones worthy of notice. It is said, that Gen. Worth has penetrated 18 leagues beyond Perote, but I cannot find any one who knows it to be so.

Gen Scott is said to have despatched a messenger to Mexico, or to the point occupied by the legislative Juncto, with the old song, and the olive branch. No go, of course.

Yours, very respectfully,
INDICATOR.

April 29 – At express is in this morning, bringing intelligence of the continued advance of Gen. Worth, and some disconnected rumors from the city of Mexico.

The citizens are throwing up walls – of ?, I fancy – around the place, and expect the soldiers to defend them. How far their expectations will be realized, we may judge by the past.

The public voices is openly heard in opposition to the late Mexicans demigod, Santa Anna. ”Down with the coward!” “Down with the traitor!” are the cries that are now heard in the capital.

I am very happy to learn by this express that General Shields is not dead; he is improving. The steamer is expected to move every moment, and I must close.

Yours,
INDICATOR.

From the Picayune, May 6

The vomito had not broken out in Vera Cruz.

The New Orleans brought over Lieut. Col. Don Jose Maria Mata, Lieuts. Ant. Piedras, Henry Mejia, and Bartolome Amable, Mexican prisoners, under charge of Major H. G. Beanett, Paymaster U.S.A., and W P Clements. These officers were taken prisoners at Cerro Gordo. Gen. La Vega and others were shortly to leave Vera Cruz for the United States.

Lieut. Andrew Ross, late of the Westmooreland Guards, 2d Pennsylvania Regiment New York, died on the voyage.

[Editorial Correspondence of the N. O. Picayune.]

JALAPA, Mexico, April 25, 1847.

The Mexicans here, one and all, denounce Santa Anna as a coward, a traitor, and everything else that is bad; and I verily believe that a majority of them would rejoice exceedingly had General Scott captured him the other day and hung him upon the first limb strong enough to bear his weight. That he is playing them false you cannot beat out of their heads– that he has sold the battles of Buena Vista and Sierra Gordo for a consideration they are equally confident, and in proof they are internally talking about the $300,000,000. They do not understand why it was that President Polk allowed him to pass freely into Vera Cruz from Havana, unless there was bribery and corruption at the bottom – the idea that our troops are a whit better than theirs, or that they can whip them, even two to one, when posted behind batteries, has never entered their heads – and hence, as a better excuse than none, there are many of them who say that they have been sold by the “Hero of Tampico.” Again, there are doubtless many – perhaps the larger portion – who have lost all confidence, either in his honesty or bravery; and although they may not desire a peace with us, they are still anxious to get rid of the tyrant on any terms. Such is the state of feelings here in Jalapa.

The diligencia or stage coach is just in from the city of Mexico, from whence they have received papers up to the 22d. inst. The news of the terrible defeat at Cerro Gordo had reached the capital, and which astonished and overwhelmed all classes; the tone of the papers, of the public men, and of the Congress itself, would also shoe that it had served to inflame the people still more against the United States. Anaya has been appointed provisional President. I believe, and has been gifted with full powers on every point except that in relation to making peace with the United States –this no one thinks of Congress in extraordinary session, has even declared any one a traitor who talks of peace. The editor of El Republicano says that we may take Puebla, that we may even capture the city of Mexico, but there must be no peace. The duty of the people is to see their cities sacked and destroyed, and themselves immolated, before they talk of peace. The guerrilla system of warfare appears to be recommended on all sides as their only salvation: by this means they drove out the Spaniards, and in the same way they say they must expel the inquisitors, usurping and grasping North Americans from their sacred soil. Better all die, and be blotted from the seals of nations, than come to any terms an long as single hostile front is on their soil of a hostile vessel is on their coast – such in the language of the papers, of the civil bodies, and the military.
From a passenger, a Spaniard, who arrived in the diligencia, we learn that is yet they have done little to nothing towards fortifying Mexico. He also says that there is a strong party in favor of peace, although the members hardly care above themselves. There are no regular troops of consequence on the route, and all those who escape at Cerro Gordo, with the exception of a portion of cavalry, have dispersed in every direction. On the 20th April immediately after the receipt of Santa Anna’s defeat, Gen. Mariano Salas called a meeting of officers to devise some measure by which to preserve the nation from other obliteration. No one here thinks that the Mexicans can ever make another stand, and give another great battle, but the impression is prevalent that small parties will be organized to annoy the roads, cut off the supplies, and kill and stragglers. How great, in this case, is the necessity for two or three, of ever one regiment of Texans.

G.W.K

----------------------------------

JALAPA, Mexico, April 25, 1847 – Afternoon.

I have borrowed the copies of El Republicano for an hour. They are dated at the city of Mexico, April 21 and 22, and the latter gives a full account of the battle of Cerro Gordo.

The Mexican particulars of the combat as usual, are peculiarly rich. They say that Santa Anna sustained the combat with 6000 men against 14,000, and fought valiantly to the very last. When, finally, he found himself entirely surrounded by enemies, he forced himself entirely surrounded by enemies, he forced a passage through “los Yankees” with a column of the 4th Regiment of Infantry of line! The fact, as every one knows, is that Santa Anna left early – all the cutting he did was to cut the saddle mule from his coach, and then cut and run.

The Mexicans admit that they had two Generals killed, but give no name save that of Vasquez.Cols Cosio and Calatayud are also named as among the killed. Gen Scott’s loss, on the 17th and 18th, is put down at over 4000, while the loss of the Mexicans is admitted to be 2000 men in killed and wounded. They say that the Americans fought like hordes of savages, killing all that presented themselves, whether wagoners, old me or women.

Don Pedro Maria Anaya has been appointed temporary President [presidente sustituto]. One of his first acts was to concede full pardon to all prisoners who have been confined for political offences since 1821, and entire forgetfulness of the past.

Gen. Salas, who was President ad interim before the arrival of Santa Anna from exile, has issued a proclamation announcing that he is empowered to raise a guerilla corps, and calls upon all good Mexicans to join his standard. In his concluding sentence he says that “war to death, without pity, shall be the devise of the guerilla warfare of vengeance!”

President Anaya has issued a grand proclamation to the Mexican nation, calling upon one and all to turn out to the rescue. He dwells particularly upon the achievements of their fathers – the fathers of the present generation – and earnestly petitions their sons to do likewise.

----------------------------------

JALAPA, Mexico, April 28, 1847.

The diligencia came this morning from Perote but from no pint on the other side, as the Governor of Puebla has ordered it to cease running this way. Passengers came through however, bringing papers and verbal news and in as concise a form as possible I will give you the amount of the intelligence.

Among other rumors brought by passengers is one to the effect that Mr. Bankhead, the British Minister, has renewed his offers of meditation between Mexico and the United States, and that when the last diligencia left the city of Mexico the Congress was acting upon his propositions, whatever they may have been. Not withstanding the fixed and denunciatory tones of the public press, there is certainly a peace party in Mexico, and there may be something in this report of English intervention in the distracted affairs of Mexico.

Col Garland’s brigade left the Castle of Perote yesterday morning at daylight for Tepe Aguaca, and will reach that place tonight. –Major Smith’s light battalion, a troop of dragoons, and Colonel Duncan’s battery accompanied Col. G. We learn here that General Worth has been very successful in collecting supplies.

An intelligent man with whom I have conversed, says that the Mexicans neither will of can make any opposition at Puebla. The population is one the worst in Mexico, and the most inimical to strangers; yet the dreadful defeat at Cerro Gordo has completely paralized them. At the city of Mexico, a few light breast–works have been thrown up not only as you enter the place by the Vera Cruz road, but on the road leading to the Convent of our Lady of Guadaloupe, but nothing like a regular system of defense has been as yet undertake. –Not only the Government but the citizens appear, with all their vaunting, to have come stupid at the succession of defeats which have be taken their country, and know not which way to turn nor what to do. Santa Anna has written to the Government from Orizaba, stating that he has 1500 men, and wants reinforcements and money; but his demands have been unheeded. At the city of Mexico, as well as in other places, the people appear to have lost much of their confidence in the “Hero of Tampico,” and many have openly accused him of cowardice at Cerro Gordo, as well as of having solid the battle to the Americans. I am living at the Casa de Dilligencias, or General Stage House, and at breakfast this morning some of the foreigners were peaking of a body of men, under Gen. Leon, who were on the march from Oajaca to join Santa Anna, and they also said that Leon had shot two muleteers on the plea that they had aided the Americans.
Majors Borland and Gaines, Capt. Clay with the other prisoners taken at Incarnacion some months since, are said to be at liberty in the city of Mexico. No less than six of the party, as it is reported, have already been assassinated by the Mexicans.

Senor Atocha, who came out from the United States with some propositions of peace; or something of the kind – it turned out to be a species of tools errand, at all events – catches it severely in El Republicano of the 19th inst.

The sending of such a person as Atocha to this country – a man universally hated and despised by all save a few Government stock jobbers – was certainly most humiliating to the people here and say thing but calculated to open a door for a peaceful settlement of difficulties; and hence no one can blame the editor of El Republicano, or any other editor, for openly speaking their minds in relation to such an agent. But the writer in El Republicano has neglected to inform us on one important point.

It is difficult sending to Vera Cruz since the outrages commenced upon the roads. I think I shall spend you a package of letters and papers tomorrow by stage, however, although I may wait for a regular wagon train.

Yours, &c.
G.W.K.

[Special Correspondence of the Picayune.]

VERA CRUZ, April 29, 1847.

GENTLEMEN – An express arrived last evening from Lieut. Dixon in command of 102 convalescent soldiers from the hospitals in this city on their road to join their respective regiments at and near Jalapa, stating that the party has been attacked by about 300 Mexicans. The express rider met, two miles this side of where he left Lieut. D., a train of about forty wagons, in charge of Capt. Croghan Ker. – Some fears are entertained for a train that was some five or six hours ahead of them. In fact, the Mexicans had great rejoicing amongst themselves last evening in consequence of the capture of one of our wagon trains by the enemy. Their accounts had it that our men (the guard) has been literally cut in pieces; but we have little faith in anything that comes from such sources.

The Mexicans have a fine chance now to work upon our trains if they could only raise courage enough to do it. Col. Wilson’s force at this place it too weak to spore many from it, and if the enemy should, go to work with determination they might trap a handsome reward almost without opposition. The scarcity of cavalry is severely felt – The New Orleans on her last trip from Tampico found it necessary to throw overboard about thirty of the best horses belonging to the Tennessee cavalry during a severe northern. A few cases of vomito are said to have occurred, but is a very mild form. [MUL] & [MSH]

From the Vera Cruz Flag, 28th ult.
Capture of Tuspan.

See Niles National Register, /Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#72.194May291847TheCaptureof

From the N. O. Delta, 6th inst.

Later from Gen. Taylor’s Army.

We yesterday conversed with an officer direct from Saltillo. He left there on the 14th ult. The force stationed there and at Buena Vista, under command of Gen. Wool, was composed of the 1st and 2d Illinois regiments, the 2d Kentucky regiment, the 2d and 3d Indians, and the Arkansas cavalry. The 1st and 2d Illinois were about to leave; the term of enlistment of the whole of them will have expired between the 1st and 20th proximo.

The artillery force that was in the battle of Buena Vista, are still stationed there as are also Col. May’s dragoons. A squadron of the latter, numbering some 200, under Lt. Rucker, made a scout in the adjoining country. They found Gen. Minon in the neighborhood of Encarnacion, at the head of a thousand of fifteen hundred lancers. They thought to draw a fight from Minon, but were unsuccessful. Three of the party, who separated themselves from the main body, got killed before they returned to the camp by some prowling Mexicans who hung about their lines.

The troops at Buena Vista and Saltillo were in excellent health; and the wounded, who were daily visited by Gen. Wool, and who saw that all their wants were attended to, were rapidly improving. With the wounded Mexicans, who are in a separate hospital, attended by their own surgeons, it is different. The place is in a most filthy condition; the American governor of the town had to compel the alcalde to pay more attention to their wants and to the cleanliness of the place.

Gen. Taylor is still at the Walnut Springs. He has heard of his nomination for the Presidency by several presses and persons in the United States, but avoids referring to it or saying aught about it. He evidently appears chagrined, but at or about what he does not communicate to those about him. Our informant left his camp on the 18th ult.

The Kentucky Rifles, who were then at the Walnut Springs, were to start for Camargo, on their way home, with the next down train.

The headquarters of Humphrey Marshall’s Kentucky cavalry was Cerralvo. Tom Marshall’s Company was at Camargo. But few or none
Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24\(\text{p}4\)c2 910 words.

NEW MEXICO AND CHIHUAHUA.

Unless fresh bodies of troops have been already sent to both these point – and we have heard of nothing of the kind – it will be impossible to retain possession of wither of them – the term of service of the volunteers already there having expired, or being on the eve of expiration, meet if not all of whom will refuse to re–enlist. Indeed, we take it for granted, form Col. Doniphan’s last official letter to the War Department, that Chihuahua has been already abandoned, and is again in quiet possession of the Mexicans – a fact, if it be so, which may well suggest the enquiry, why was it captured at all, at so much hazard to the small body of troops by which that adventurous enterprise was accomplished? We should be glad to have this question answered by those who boast of the “eminent ability” with which “Mr. Polk has conducted the war.”

So far as the “territory” of New Mexico is concerned, its abandonment can be no cause of regret, if its worthless be considered, notwithstanding it appears to be conceded on all hands that its “re–annexation” to the United States is to be a sine qua non of peace. A letter from an officer in our army at Santa Fe, to the editors of the St. Louis Republican, speaks in anything but flattering terms of that “beautiful but unfortunate” portion of the State of Texas, which Mr. Polk permitted to remain in the hands of the Mexicans so long after the admission of Texas into the Union, and to which, after taking possession of it, in utter contempt of “State Rights,” he gave a separate territorial organization. He says:

"It is to be hoped that the Province of New Mexico will not be retained by the United States, on any mistaken estimate of the value of the country. It is supposed that this is one of the finest grazing countries known; yet we are told that the reason why we cannot procure fresh meat is, that our animals have destroyed all the grass. Now, there have not been, in all, more than eight or nine thousand horses, mules and oxen, brought here from the United States, and we have since consumed a considerable number of the Mexican stock; besides which, nearly all of our animals have starved to death. If the animals brought by us have consumed all the grass, is it not manifest that there could have been but little of it to depend on? Mr. Gregg, usually so correct in his ‘Commerce of the Prairies,’ overrates entirely the resources of the province in respect to its facilities for supporting flocks and herds. It is truly almost worthless country.

The troops now in New Mexico, have mostly been paid up to the last of December, and are nearly unanimously in favor of getting back to the States as soon as possible. You will get accounts of this El Dorado, when all get back, who do not die, that will perhaps open the eyes of the public. You may talk of a road to California, of ‘extending the area of freedom,’ or of any other object, for which it may be considered proper to retain this province; but you will find it difficult to convince many of the American soldiers who have been here, that New Mexico, for any purpose, is worth half the lives already lost in it.

It is a most miserable country, in my opinion, full of a most miserable population, as contrasted with the United States, or any other part of the globe that a man of taste and knowledge should desire to live in. About 1200 soldiers, even after a treaty of peace, will be necessary to preserve securely the conquest. This army must be brought from the United States, kept here all the time, and in a great measure subsisted on provisions brought from the States. There must also be a civil government supported. It will thus cost, in one way or another, about two millions of dollars, or nearly so, to the United States every year."
The quantity of duty-paying goods now consumed in this province, is not $100,000 in value per annum. The long trains of wagons for the 'Santa Fe trade,' as it is called, are NOT loaded for New Mexico, but for Chihuahua, Durango, and other departments south of this. But suppose one hundred thousand dollars worth of duty paying goods annually consumed in New Mexico, they would yield to the treasury at 20 percent ad valorem – the highest rate of the low tariff party – exactly twenty thousand dollars. This would be the annual revenue from a country costing two millions of dollars every year! I have given a high estimate of the duty paying goods to be consumed. This year they cannot, I think, amount to thirty thousand dollars in value.

What a magnificent acquisition to the Union we have made! But I regret that I cannot, at this time, go into other particulars to sustain my opinion of its utter worthlessness.

Ah! but, says some one, there are the minerals. Those, too, I suspect, most strongly, have been exaggerated. At present, I shall pass them by; but will endeavor, before my return to the States, to investigate the subject. Heretofore, the mines have certainly not been very productive. The specie which the Santa Fe traders carry to the States, is drawn from Chihuahua, Durango, Sonora, &c."

---

Friday, May 14, 1847 RW24i39p4c2  476 words.

PEACE OR WAR.

This question is briefly discussed by the "Eagle," a paper recently established at Vera Cruz by American citizens. – Its remarks are not without interest at this moment – particularly as it presents the question in a practical aspect, and in such a manner as will enable the people to form some idea of the probable cost of the war, if it be protracted, as many of the most sagacious minds fear it may be, indefinitely. The Eagle thus treats the subject:

"Will peace follow our most glorious success at Sierra Gordo? This is a reflection which occupied the thoughts of every rational man. Some, however, these are, who are well acquainted with Mexican politics, that believe otherwise; and that the people of this country, rather than enter into terms of peace, either honorable or dishonorable to it and the United States, would prefer a military occupation. Well, then, be it so – it behoves the Government of the U States to look around; let it sum up the force in time, if requisite, and see if that plan can be accomplished. We think, candidly speaking, the following force will be required only.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Tampico</th>
<th>Regiment</th>
<th>Guanajuato</th>
<th>Regiments</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Vera Cruz</td>
<td>1 do</td>
<td>Zacatedas 4</td>
<td>do</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jalapa</td>
<td>2 do</td>
<td>San Luis</td>
<td>3 do</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puebla</td>
<td>6 do</td>
<td>Durango</td>
<td>2 do</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mexico</td>
<td>10 do</td>
<td>Chihuahua 2</td>
<td>do</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Queretaro</td>
<td>3 do</td>
<td>Saltillo</td>
<td>1 do</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matamoros</td>
<td>1 do</td>
<td>Guadalajara</td>
<td>5 do</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oajaca</td>
<td>3 do</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Making in all 17 regiments, amounting, according to the present regulations of the United States, to 40,000 infantry, which to a certainty would be enough to carry out the military occupation of the country. The expenses of these 40,000 troops will amount to $15,000,000 per annum, which we shall have to pay."

The Eagle goes on to say that our Government can raise twenty millions of revenue by customs and direct taxes, besides the sales of the public lands in Mexico; and if this be so, it will of course be a money-making job, rather than a tax! But, as the New Orleans Bulletin well remarks, this estimate is about as wild as that of Secretary Walker, who expects a revenue of $15,000,000 from the "Mexican tariff," which, usurping the legislative power, the strict constructionists now wielding the Executive power in this country, have recently enacted.

But independently of the question of expense – itself one, it will be conceded, of no little magnitude – will the American people, losing sight of that just jealousy of large standing armies, which has always characterized them, sanction a policy which requires, for the occupation of our conquests in Mexico alone, fifty regiments of armed mercenaries, who, some ten or twenty years hence, under some military adventure, may return from foreign service to employ their parricidal arms against the institutions of their own country? [MSH]

---

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p1c1  676 words.

OBJECT OF WAR.

It has been impossible to obtain from the Administration or any of its champions an answer to the interrogatories, frequently propounded to them, how did the War commence? who began it? what is its object? At one moment, it is true, we are told that "war..."
exists by the act of Mexico;” but in the next, a long list of wrongs and injuries, inflicted upon us by that country, are detailed, for the purpose of showing our own obligation to strike in defence of our outraged rights and honor. These positions, it is manifest, are directly antagonistical, and cannot both be true – though each of them is urged as if neither was false. Just so it is in regard to the objects of the war. At one time we are told it is to secure “indemnity” for the capture and confiscation of the property of our citizens, and for the expenses of the war into which we have been forced; while at another, all ideas of “conquest” is repudiated. The facts of the case, we shrewdly suspect, have looked out, through the indiscretion perhaps of a Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, who has frequently shown a surprising knowledge of the movements and plans of the Administration, derived doubtless from his intimacy with some person who has access to official sources of information.

He says, "that the war may be assumed to have been commenced for the acquisition of California; and the march of Gen. Taylor to the Bravo, ostensibly for the protection of this frontier, may have looked to results far more comprehensive and magnificent.” * * * “The march of Gen. Taylor to the Rio Grande was designed to act as a persuasive to the reception of Mr. Slidell. It was thought his presence in front of Matamoros might be an inducement to the Mexicans to negotiate; as the only means of escaping a war with the United States, so powerful in all the elements of war. It was expected, that, in negotiations thus brought about, the cession of California, in quit-claim for indemnities, would be easily attainable. In December, 1845, the Administration did not dream of overrunning Mexico; but it was hopeful of intimidating the Mexicans into a treaty and the acquisition of California, without war, and without manufacturing Whig Generals to perplexy Father Ritchie with regard to the succession.”

That this development, whether derived from official sources or not, is the key which solves the whole mystery, we don not doubt. The march to the Rio Grande, of which the war is the result, was never intended, we believe, to lead to hostilities. It was not believed that Mexico would dare resist a nation which had more than once boasted of its ability to march to the Halls of Montezumas with a single regiment in six weeks. It was designed as a menace to induce Mexico to cede California to the United States, as "Indemnity" for the greatly exaggerated claims of our citizens against her, which it was evident she was unable, though she had manifested her willingness, to pay in cash. Had Mr. Polk anticipated the events that have occurred, we are entirely persuaded that Gen. Taylor would have been permitted to remain at Corpus Christi ("the Western frontier of Texas," by Mr. Polk’s own admission) until other means had been resorted to for the purpose of inducing the Mexican authorities to acquiesce in the cherished purpose of the Administration still farther to extend the "area of freedom.” It is unfortunate for both parties that he understood both the spirit and the prowess of the Mexican nation – and it is degrading to our national character that he resorted to the arts of a bully to alarm a week neighbor into a compliance with his designs. It is not the first time that the error, scarcely pardonable in a Government, of holding an adversary in contempt, has led to such grave and perilous consequences for which the President and his advisors will be held responsible by his constituents and by posterity.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p1c4  77 words

UNTITLED

The Union contradicts a prevalent rumor that Gen. Scott had been ordered to halt for the present at Jalapa. No one doubts, it says, that Gen. Scott will push on to the capital, and that he will take it. "By this time, in all probability, (exclaims the Organ,) he is treading the imperial capital of the Aztecs” – a new, and certainly not an improved version of the old song about "reveling in the halls of the Montezumas.”

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p1c4  244 words.

UNTITLED

A very long and deeply interesting account, in detail, of the great battle of Buena Vista, from the pen of one of the Arkansas officers appears in the Little Rock Gazette. The writer, after a vivid sketch of the scenes on the battlefield, during those two days of fearful carnage, says:

"No man living could have won the battle but General Taylor. His presence gave confidence to the men. While he sat there unconcernedly on his white horse, a target for the balls and yet unhurt, every man felt like May, when he said to his men at the gloomiest moment – ‘men, the day can be gained yet, and the dragoons have to do it.’ – The same confidence would not have been felt in any other man; and to Gen. Taylor it is owing that our arms are not disgraced, and this brave little army sacrificed. What punishment from an indignant people does not that administration deserve which, either from spite, malice, fear of a successful General’s popularity, or stupidity, voluntarily and without any necessity, leaves 5000 men hundreds of miles in an enemy’s country to be sacrificed! It is frightful to think of! Had we been defeated, not one man in ten would have reached the Rio Grande. How many homes and hearths would have been made desolate – how much misery and run, cause by its insane acts, would have drawn down legions of curses, loud and deep, on the Administration’s imbecile head!”

[MSH]
THE VALLEY OF EL PASO

The Washington Union publishes a letter addressed by John T. Hughes, a resident on the Del Norte, “for the consideration of the War Department,” giving a glowing description of the fruitful valley of El Paso, in Mexico, and showing “its importance to the United States.” Of course it must be annexed – especially as Mr. Hughes asserts that “it would be an act of charity to the people to rid them of their present Governors, and throw around them the shield of American protection.” It may, to be sure, be asked, whether Mr. Polk is a political Don Quixotte, charged with the charitable mission of ridding the world of bad Governors, and forcing “trial by jury” upon all the oppressed people of this Continent at the point of the sword. If so, some people might think that he had better begin at home!

[MSH]

---

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p1c4   230 words.

GEN. LA VEGA.

The Courier des Etats Unis contains a paragraph in relation to this distinguished Mexican General, which seems to verify the opinion of the

“The ancient philosopher,

Who had read Alexander Ross over,
And swore the world, as he could prove,
Was made of fighting and of love,”

For, according to this authority, it would appear, that the gallant Mexican, at the very time he was fighting our countrymen in Mexico, was himself subdued by one of our equally irresistible countrywomen.

Says the “Courrier,” speaking of the captured Mexican Generals, “among them was Gen. La Vega, who, who, doubtless calling to mind his previous captivity, appeared delighted to return to the United States, and chatted quite gaily with Gen. Scott the very evening of the battle.”

“If certain chronicle is to be believed, which we have reason to think is predicated on good information, General La Vega goes to New Orleans to recommence a pleasant, sweet romance, which his release and return to Mexico had interrupted, and the denouement of which seemed postponed to the conclusion of the war. This is the explanation of the resignation with which he meets his new captivity.”

Gen. La Vega, perhaps, may settle down in New Orleans, and, after having served a sufficiently long apprenticeship as citizen of the United States, represent Louisiana in Congress. Why not, as well as Gen. Houston, Texas? – NY Tribune.

[MSH]

---

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c1,   439 words.

THE NEWS FROM MEXICO.

We lay before our readers the intelligence from Mexico, received by yesterday’s Southern mail. The most important item of the news is a statement, which it appears was received at Vera Cruz by express, just as the steamer was about to sail, that a deputation from the city of Mexico had waited on Gen. Scott and requested him to take the capital under his protection. This statement is so vague and indefinite, that we are unable to form an opinion, satisfactory to ourselves, in regard to the probabilities for or against the conclusion to which it seems to have led the intelligent editor of the New Orleans Picayune, that a “cessation of hostilities” may be speedily anticipated. This would be a very legitimate inference is such a deputation has been sent to Gen. Scott by the existing Government of Mexico; while it would by no means be so, if, as we apprehend will turn out to be the fact, the capital had been abandoned by the Government functionaries, and the citizens, thus left without means of defence, and having more to fear from hostile factions in their midst than from its peaceable surrender to the [fold] to announce to him that no resistance would be made to its occupation by his forces. That this deputation, if any such has been really sent to Gen. Scott, is the organ of the citizens of the capital, and not of the Government, is, we think, inferrible, as well from the improbability that the civil functionaries would be willing to put themselves wherever they can with safety to do so, and murdering every straggler from the American camp, as well as those small bodies which occasionally adventure too far from the protection of our guns.

We have never been very sanquine in the hope of the restoration of peace founded upon the occupation of the Mexican capital. It is probably, indeed, that there may be no more forts stormed, nor cities bombarded, nor pitched battles in the open field; but we have seen nothing yet to induce us to relinquish the apprehension that the Guerilla system of warfare will be resorted to, and that this harassing mode of resistance may be protracted for many months, and probably many years. The next advices from the seat of war, however, will probably furnish us with fuller and more accurate information upon this point; and we shall be grafted if it shall be of a character to justify the conclusion to which the New Orleans editor has, we fear, prematurely arrived, that there is a probability of a speedy “cessation of hostilities” between the two countries.

[MSH]
Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c2  117 words.

UNTITLED

Mr. Kendall, of the N. O. Picayune, relates in one of his letters, the following case of individual gallantry, at the battle of Cerro Gordo, on the part of Capt. Magruder of Caroline county, Va. a son of Mr. Thomas Magruder of Charlottesville:

“Hundred of cases of individual gallantry, in storming the different heights, are mentioned. Col. Childs led on his command on the first day until he had only some forty of fifty men with him. It is also said that Capt. Magruder followed up a charge until he had but nine soldiers left. I cannot now recollect one tenth part of the instances of almost reckless daring displayed, but shall endeavor to pick them up.”  [MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c2  124 words.

UNTITLED

The total of killed and wounded in this brigaded is 103, which, added to 308, the list published by us a day or two since, gives 411. Besides these, 14 msn, belonging to Capt. Magruder’s company of 1st artillery, were killed or wounded, and from Company F, Illinois volunteers, no returns have been received. [MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c3, 1,334 words.

LATER FROM THE BRAZOS

The schr. Florida, Capt. Cammon, and schr. North Carolina, Capt. Farwell, arrived last evening from the Brazos, whence they sailed on the 1st inst. We are indebted to both of these attentive officers for late Matamoros papers. We received no letters by either of these arrivals and the verbal intelligence is Col. Davenport, U.S. Infantry, had arrived at Matamoros or Capt. Merchant, 2d U.S. Artillery, was in command of Fort Brown. Major Abbolt, of the Massachusetts regiment, was in garrison with nine companies. The Flag reports all the boats up the river aground. Capt. Webster, or the Massachusetts Regiment, had been ill for some time, but was convalescent and expected soon to resume duty. The Flag reports the schooners Mary and Emma and Virginia as having been stranded at the mouth of the river on the 24th ult. – N. O. Picayune. [MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c4,  1,334 words.

OFFICIAL

UNITED STATES FLAG SHIP MISSISSIPPI,

At sea off of Vera Cruz, April 24, 1847.

SIR: Tuxpan being the only fortified place of importance, situated on the gulf coast, not in our possession, and conceiving it to be a point of honor, as well as duty, to reclaim the guns taken by the enemy from the wreck of the Truxton, and mounted with others for the defence of the river and town, I determined on attacking it, and left Sacrificios in this ship for that purpose on the 12th instant, having in tow the steamers Spitfire, Vixen, and Scourge, and the gunboats Bonito, Petrel, and Reefer, with a detachment of three hundred officers, seamen, and marines from the Ohio, distributed in this and the smaller vessels. On the following day we arrived at Lobos, the appointed place of rendezvous. The Raritan, with a detachment of one hundred and eighty officers, seamen, and marines from the Potomac, added to her own complement. The Albany, John Adams, and Germantown, with the bomb-vessels Vesuvius, Etna, and Hecla, had been previously despatched for Lobos, where they arrived in good time, and were subsequently joined by the Decatur.

On the 15th, all the vessels left Lobos for the anchorage, under Tuxpan reef, but were separated during the night by a norther. Having again concentrated on the morning of the 17th, the whole of that day was employed in lightening the small vessels, in sounding and buoying the channel of the bar, and in other preparations for ascending the river.
The following morning (the 18th) the bar was safely crossed by the steamers and gun-boats, with about thirty barges filled with detachments from the different vessels at anchor outside, having with them four pieces of artillery.

After crossing the bar I hoisted my flag on board the Spitfire, and immediately led up the river to the attack; the steamers having the gun-boats and barges in tow, until we got into the range of fire of the enemy, when I ordered them to cast off; the gun-boats to follow up the river under sail, and the detachments in the barges to land with the artillery and storm the forts and town. These orders were executed with extraordinary rapidity while the Flortilla continued its course up the river, and driving by its well directed fire, the enemy from his defences.

The dispositions of the enemy for defence were judicious; they consisted of two forts on the right, and one of the left bank of the river, with positions well selected for commanding the reaches of the stream. They had seven guns mounted and detachments of infantry firing from the forts and the thick chapparal along the margin of the left bank.

Gen. Cos, chief of Winward military division of the Mexican army, was in command, and had with him, as is believe from the evidence of his order – book, about 650 rank and file.

But if the dispositions for defence were judicious, the defence itself was feeble; though, had been more obstinate, the results would have been the same, for I cannot exaggerate the intrepidity of our officers and men, or say too much of the spirit that animated them.

The Truxton’s guns were brought off, and the others destroyed; the forst were also destroyed.

Our loss in the attack has been small – fourteen killed and wounded. The enclosed papers, lettered A,B,C, and D, will furnish all necessary details.

The Albany and Reefer have been left to watch Tuxpan; the Hecla is ordered to blockade Soto de la Marina; the Etna to occupy the river Tabasco; and the Vesuvius and Porpoise the port of Laguna, while the Germantown is securing the coast of north of Lobos.

I am, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

M. C. PERRY,
Commanding Home Squadron.

The Hon. JOHN Y. MASON, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

---

UNITED STATES STEAMER MISSISSIPPI, Off Tuxpan Bar, April 22, 1847.

SIR – I have to report the following list of killed and wounded in the action of the 18th inst. viz:

KILLED – Lewis Clayton, seaman, of the United States ship Ohio; Antonio Francis, seaman, of the United States ship Decatur; John Griffin, seaman, of the United States ship Raritan, was murdered by the rancheros, on the 19th instant.

WOUNDED – Commander Tetnall, of the United States steamer Spitfire, flesh wound of right wrist; James McCann, seaman, United States steamer Spitfire, severe wound of right elbow joint; Flag Lieutenant James L. Parker, United States ship Ohio, flesh wound of right leg; Lieutenant Hartstine, United States B. brig Hecla, flesh wound of right thigh; Andrew Sweeney, seaman, United States ship Germantown, flesh wound of left shoulder; Henry O. Hart, boy, United States ship Germantown, slight wound of the right cheek; James McCullen, boy, United States steamer Mississippi, slight wound of right hand; Commander Mackenzie, United States steamer Mississippi, sever wound in left hand, with loss of thumb, white on duty at guard-house, on night of 21st.

It is with pleasure I inform you that the above wounded are doing well.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SOLOMON SHARP, Surgeon.

To Commodore M. C. PERRY,
Commanding Home Squadron.

---

TUXPAN, April 19, 1847.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, in obedience to your order of this morning, directing me to visit the enemy’s batteries, and remove the Truxton’s guns, and such others as might be worthy of removal, and to destroy the remainder, I proceeded first to La Pena, the enemy’s principal fort. – It was situated on the right bank of the river, a mile and a half below the town, on a bluff about 69 feet high projecting into the stream, and commanding the downward course of the river for two miles. In it I found two 32-pounder carronades, of 21 cwt, formerly of the Truxton, mounted in barbette on half circles, and between them one long 9 inch embrasure, behind a breastwork, faced within and without with sawed timber, and filled in with dirt. Between the guns was a barbette for the service of infantry. The Truxton’s guns and carnages have been embarked, and the 9-pounder destroyed. The breastwork and shed for the protection of the garrison were set on fire.

The next for in ascending the river, called La Palmasola, was a water battery, placed at the junction of the Tuxpan with one of its tributaries. This also looked down the stream. It had also a breastwork liced on both sides with sawed timber and filled in with dirt. It had three embrasures, and a banquette between them for infantry. — Only two of the embrasures had guns mounted on them. These were two long eights of iron, which have been destroyed. One of these guns had been struck by our shot, and the exterior facing of the for, particularly about the embrasures, was much cut, bearing testimony to the accuracy of our fire. The shed for the shelter of the garrison was burnt, and a fire set to the breastwork.

On the left bank of the river, near the centre of the town, and on the beach to defend the landing, was a 9-pounder carriage gun of iron, which has been destroyed.

On the centre of the steep bluff, in the centre of the town, was the fort called the Hospital surrounded by a ditch, and having a 32-pound chambered gun of 27 cwt., formerly of the Truxton, mounted on a pivot, and commanding the approach up the river to the extent of its range. This gun with its carriage has been embarked.

The launch’s gun of the Truxton, an iron six-pounder caronade, was found not mounted in a remote part of the town. It has been embarked with its carriage, together with a considerable quantity of the arms and munitions of the Truxton, a list of which is herewith enclosed.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully,
Your most obedient,
ALEX S. MACKENZIE,
Com’r and Asst’l Inspector Ord. U. S. N.

COMMODORE M. C. PERRY,
Commanding Home Squadron,
Headquarters, Tuxpan.

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c5, 836 words.

LATER FROM MEXICO

From New Orleans Picayune, May 11.

The steamship James L. Day arrived at the Levee early this morning from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 5th inst. By this vessel we have received our regular correspondence and files of Vera Cruz and Jalapa papers. Apart form the intelligence contained in our letters, we learn verbally that an express reached Vera Cruz a moment before the sailing of the James L. Day, with information that a deputation had come down from the city of Mexico to request Gen. Scott to take the capital under his protection. This news is almost incredible; but when it is remembered that the system of guerilla warfare has been adopted by Mexico, and that the banditti who engage in this service are as dangerous to their own countrymen as to the enemy, the report gains some probability.

The impression was gaining ground in the army that there would be no more fighting. It was not expected that there would be any opposition this side of or at Puebla; and it was even doubted if the Mexicans would defend their capital. Expectations of this nature have proved deceitful so often that we indulge them with much misgiving.

The Mexican papers continue their declamatory strictures upon the mission of Atocha. It would appear that the sending of this miserable fellow on any important mission to Mexico has given greater umbrage than all else that has been done by the United States. They regard him in the light of an official pimp, a treasonable pander, a perfidious miscreant, and indeed the concentration of baseness. They think he was sent there by the American cabinet in mockery and scorn.

We have already copied the article of El Republicano upon Atocha. That paper— the very best in all Mexico— the highest tone and the sturdiest defender of the republican institutions when the monarchical part was in the ascendant— after noticing the arrival of Atocha on a mission from this country, and recounting his past history in Mexico, exclaims:

"O, God! This is the greatest sign that thou hast forgotten us. Send upon us bombs, rifles, grape shot and every class of projectile and misfortune; burn us, reduce us to ashes, destroy us, annihilate, but do not dishonor us. Send the entire north to subjugate and rule over us, but do not let Atocha be the broker of a contract of piece, because that, devolving upon us the greatest scorn and the greatest
The proprietors we are glad to see, are highly pleased with their whereabouts. Of the goodly city of Jalapa they hold this discourse.

The whereabouts of Santa Anna is somewhat problematical. The last authentic intelligence located him at Orizaba with a miscellaneous command of 3000. Subsequent rumors report him as having gone South to recruit his ranks in Oajaca. It is certain that he has not shown himself at the capitol since his defeat. There is a report that he desires to leave the country; but Mr. Kendall thinks he may make a dash upon detached parties in the rear of the army, or upon wagon trains, with a view to reinstating himself in the good opinion of the nation.

It was the intention of Gen. Scott, upon the arrival of the wagon train that was to start from Vera Cruz, about the 6th inst. To cut off all connections with the sea coast, rely upon the country for sustenance, and push forward for the city. This general Order dated as Jalapa, 30th April, intimates as much. But Mr. Kendall’s letter of the 4th – the very latest news – throws some doubt upon the speedy adoption of this plan, in consequence of the determination of the twelve month’s volunteers, in a body, not to re-enlist. This may retard the advance of the army, unless indeed the reported readiness of the city to surrender be confirmed. If the rumor proves true, the guerilla troops are mere marauders – a band of pirates, and should be treated accordingly.

Gen. Worth was gathering up all the grain he could, and has all the [?] at work, as if in anticipation of breaking off communication with Vera Cruz.

It will be gratifying to all to learn that Gen. Shields was thought to be in a fair way to recover. We have always regarded him as about the best appointment from civil life yet made by the President.

Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, of the 1st Tennessee regiment, came over in the Day also. He has seen much service, both under Gen. Taylor and Gen. Scott, at Monterey and Cerro Gordo, and now returns on account of ill health.

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p2c5, 1,046 words.

SCRAPS FROM THE AMERICAN STAR

From the New Orleans Picayune, 9th inst.

The advanced division of the American army entered the city of Jalapa on the 19th of April, and during the following days the remainder of the force came up. Before the week ended a regular out and out American paper was established there, and on the 25th the first number was issued, abounding in interesting and important intelligence. The paper is owned by the enterprising publishers of the Vera Cruz Eagle, Messrs. Jewell, Peoples and Barnard. – It would seem, from the first article under the editorial head, that our adventurous contemporaries have adopted the military maxim of: foraging on the enemy,” as the types, preses, and material of the “Star” were part and parcel of a Jalapa paper, which, whilom, belabored the “Yankees” with grandiloquent objurgation. The Star makes its obeisance to the public in this wise:

"THE AMERICAN STAR. – Another glorious victory has been achieved, and we have followed up the army to chronicle it. Reader, you have before you the American Star. It is American in every sense of the word, and shall never disgrace the stars and stripes it advocates. It is printed on the same tyre that this day week spoke such bitter things against us: but we trust that they are civilized as well as naturalized . . . they are the same naughty characters that so much slandered us. Verily, “change makes change,” and those that were our bitterest enemies six days ago now speak to us in the most dulcet accents they are capable of.

We have known strange changes in the free press of this country ‘ere now. We have even whig papers converted to the democratic faith and democratic ones pass into the hands of foemen dire, but never was there such a revolution in type craft as those Spanish founts have undergone. They have changed sides and languages too, in a trice. – An American paper in Jalapa! Why the stones in the streets might prate round Castilian against such innovation. But to the Star.

The following observations upon the “rank and file” will awaken an echo in many bosoms:

"The Rank and File. – With what pride must ever American review the conduct and bearing of the rank and file of our army in battle. They go to work with heart and soul in the cause, and each private works for an exults in the glory of our arms as if he were the commander—in—chief and the responsibility of the action rested upon his shoulders. In the late fight this feeling was indulged into an unusual degree, and the manner in which they stormed and carried the principal height – opposed as they were by men apparently as determined as themselves – deserves the thanks and gratitude of the whole American nation. It is said that the strength of our army lies in the fact that every man is a hero and every one capable of being a commander. This is true, they are all heroes, because they are all actuated by the same proud feeling – that of seeing their arms victorious or freely shedding their blood in the attempt. The rank and file, as we said before, deserve the gratitude of the nation, and we would fain see them mentioned among the more fortunate of the army.”

The proprietors we are glad to see, are highly pleased with their whereabouts. Of the goodly city of Jalapa they hold this discourse.
"JALAPA. – If there is any one place in Mexico that we deem superior to all else we've seen combined, that place is Jalapa. It is the prettiest town, has the handsomest buildings, loveliest gardens and most delicious fruits of all others taken together, and what adds more than all this to the interest of the place is the fact that it seems to be peopled with a race distinct from those we have encountered elsewhere – possessing more ideas of refinement, more intelligence, more industry, and more neatness. The women are decidedly pretty, and there is not a man who will say aught to the contrary; and in their habits – we mean of course the "upper ten" – they approximate nearer to American refinement. Naught can be said of the men but what is to their advantage, and many a time, whilst passing up the principal street, we imagined ourself in some thriving Yankee city. Taking Jalapa, all in all, we are highly pleased with it and its people, and cannot conceive that there is any difference of opinion on that subject amongst us Americans."

The only account of military stores taken at Perote, which we have seen, is contained in the following paragraph:

"THE ADVANCE – On the 22nd inst, at 12 M., General Worth entered Perote, without opposition. The enemy's forces had all left that place, and our general took possession of the cattle, with its armament in perfect order. Col. Velasquez had been left behind to surrender all things in the name of the Government. Fifty cannons, 3 mortars, 4 stones mortars and 4 or 5 howitzers, together with a large number of round shot and shells (no particular quantity of other ammunition) and small arms were delivered up to us. Gens. Morales and Lander to, who had been imprisoned by Santa Anna for capitulating at Vera Cruz, were prisoners in the castle, and of course released by our troops. Ampudia was in the vicinity of Perote on the approach of Gen. Worth, but had not the politeness to visit him before taking his departure, which is said to have been hurried. Some two or three thousand infantry and cavalry of the enemy were also in the neighborhood, but they were disorganized and in a most pitiable condition.

On the road the inhabitant complained bitterly of outrages perpetrated by the retreating soldiers from Cerro Gordo, and many of them had left their homes.

Midshipman Rogers was removed from Perote to Puebla the same day the fight commenced at Cerro Gordo."

The last preceding sentence is all that has been heard of Midshipman Rogers since the army left Vera Cruz. It is sheer wanton cruelty to keep that gallant young officer in prison. We trust that the next time a batch of Mexican officers fall into our hands his release will be specially treated for.

[MSH]
cease until it had shaken the Imperial Throne of France into the dust.

And are we, with this example before our eyes – disregarding the warning of history – deaf to the voice of experience – are we expected, in these enlightened days, to imitate an example so recent – so memorable – and so disastrous in its results? Forbid it reason – forbid it justice – forbid it all the principles of man’s nature, which lead him to eschew strife, where strife can be avoided, and to cultivate peace, friendship, and good feeling with his fellow man.

We have thus far treated this proposition as on of “policy”. Is it sanctioned by “justice” – in whose name as many crimes have been committed as the celebrated Madam Roland once said had been perpetrated in the name of liberty. Why is the property of the Church alone to be sequestered? If the principle be a sound one; it ought to be made applicable alike to all; – and every Mexican citizen who may furnish his Government with “the fuel of war” should be subjected to the like summary punishment for his devotion to the country in which he was born and reared, and to which he owes, by a law stronger than human enactments, and especially in the hour of her extremity, his fortune and his life? Is patriotism, then, a crime, in the vocabulary of the Executive Organ? We are aware that strange readings have been given forth to the Constitution and to the Laws of Nations, in order to justify some of the remarkable incidents of this remarkable war; but we had not supposed that its authors were prepared to push their new doctrines quite so far as to require the citizens of Mexico to play the part of traitors to their own Government in order to secure them against the rapacity of our own. – And we confide too much in the integrity of the American people, and in those instinctive impulses which lead all men to love and to defend their own native land, above and against all others, to permit us to tolerate for a moment the idea that any considerations of expediency can induce them to give their sanctions to a proposition so repugnant to the feelings as well as to the convictions of mankind.

It is not irrelevant to add that the adoption of the measure suggested by the Washington Union would be in direct conflict with the solemn declaration made “to the good people of Mexico” by General Scott, in the proclamation addressed to them by that officer, and which was doubtless sent to him from Washington for that purpose, after the capitulation of Vera Cruz, and as he was about to take up his line of march for “the Halls of Montezumas.” In that extraordinary document, in which, in imitation of the Propagandists of the French Revolution, the people of Mexico were separated from their government – as if the one were in collision with the other, and we had sent thither our fleets and armies to aid the oppressed multitude in throwing off the yoke imposed upon their unwilling necks by despotic Rulers – in that singular document, the Mexicans are expressly told: “Americans are not your enemies; but the enemies, for a time, of the men, who, A YEAR AGO, misgoverned you, and brought on this unnatural war between two great Republics. We are the friends of the peaceful inhabitants of the country we occupy – AND THE FRIENDS OF YOUR HOLY RELIGION, ITS HIERARCHY AND ITS PRIESTHOOD.” With this solemn assurance staring us in the face, with semblance of policy can we now violate it, by the confiscation of the property of that Church to which this assurance has been given, in the face of the world?

*This, by the way, is an expression which exceedingly puzzles us. It seems, according to Gen. Scott’s proclamation, that we are not the enemies either of the Mexican people or of the men now in power, but that we are enemies, “FOR A TIME.” of the men, who, “A YEAR AGO,” were at the head of affairs in that Republic! But who are those men? Paredes and his counselors, who are now in exile – while Santa Anna, who entered Mexico by permission of Mr. Polk, is now the ruling spirit in her public councils! How this declaration is to be reconciled with daily transpiring events, however, we know not. Perhaps the Washington Union can enlighten us!

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p4c2, 320 words.

THE MEXICAN TARIFF

This “great measure,” – the conception and elaboration of the sagacious financier at the head of the Treasury Department, in open violation of the constitution, which carefully denies to the Executive the legislative power that it has boldly exercised – is received by the American merchants at Tampico with unqualified denunciation. We have before us the proceedings of a meeting of American merchants and others interested in the trade of the United States, held in that place on the 26th ult. in which this famous measure, so often eulogized by the admirers of Secretary Walker as the ne plus ultra of financial wisdom, is declared to be “unjust, illiberal, and unbecoming any American in heart or principle” – imposing “a duty of not less than 70 to 150 per cent on American products, while on British articles,” [the Secretary is remarkable for discriminating against his own country and in favor of the British,] “it is not over 40 per cent” – And, to cap the climax, they declare, that, “if it be carried into effect, it will GIVE AID AND COMFORT TO THE ENEMY, not in WORD but in DEED.” This, surely, is the unkindest cut of all. “Aid and comfort to the enemy”! Who could have expected that from the master–spirit of Mr. Polk’s Cabinet? At all events it is gratifying to see the Doctor thus dosed with his own physic!

Letters from Tampico, published in the New Orleans papers, speak similar language. One of them expresses the opinion that the importations under the former system, estimated to be of the value of $3,000,000 annually at that port, will be less that $100,000 under Mr. Walker’s scale of duties. And yet it is from this wise measure, the offspring of gross usurpation of power, that we have been flattered with the hope of obtaining money enough to defray at least a third of the expenses of the war! Most lame and impotent conclusion.

[MSH]

Tuesday, May 18, 1847 RW24i40p4c2, 173 words.

UNTITLED

The Annapolis Republican states that Maj. General John Spear Smith, of Baltimore, had tendered to the President the services of a brigade of volunteers from Maryland, to serve during the war with Mexico. Should the offer be accepted, no doubt is entertained that the requisite number of men can be secured within a very short time. This speaks well for the patriotism and public spirit of Maryland.

By the way, we would inform our patriotic friends in the Tenth Legion, who were disappointed last winter by the rapidity with which the requisition upon Virginia for a regiment was answered, that the two additional companies recently called for from this State have not yet been mustered into service, nor do we hear of any movement towards their organization. Will they not send at least one company to the field, for the honor for the Old Tenth? We call upon Col. McPherson, especially, who offered the warlike resolutions last winter, to gird on his sword and beat up for recruits in Page, Shenandoah and Rockingham.

KILLED AND WOUNDED

The New Orland Picayune furnishes us with a list of the killed and wounded, in Gen. Twigg’s and Gen. Shields’ divisions, in the battle of Cerro Gordo, of which the following is a recapitulation:

OFFICERS.

Regulars – None killed, 14 wounded.
Volunteers – 1 killed, 7 wounded.

RANK AND FILE.

Regulars – 39 killed, 195 wounded.
Volunteers – 3 killed, 48 wounded.

Total killed 43 – wounded, 264.

The name of the only officer killed is Lieut. G. M. Cowardin of the Illinois volunteers. Wounded: Brig. Gen. Shields, dangerously; Lt. Col. Joseph E. Johnston, very slightly; Major E. V. Sumner, severely; Captain Stevens T. Mason, severely; Geo. W. Patton, severely; Lieutenants Thomas Ewell, (since dead;) Thomas Davis, (since dead;) George McLane; Dabney H. Maury, severely; Alfred Gibbs, slightly; N. J. T. Dana, severely; Charles E. Jarvis, slightly; B. E. Bee, do; J. N. Ward, severely; George H. Gordon, slightly. All the foregoing belonged to the regular service. The following were attached to the volunteers: Capt. – Pearson of the New York regiment; and Lieut. Robert Murphy, (since dead;) Robert C. Scott, severely; S. J. Johnson, dangerously; Andrew Forman and Chas. Maltby, slightly, all of the 4th Illinois regiment. We do not publish the names of the privates, as none of them, we suspect, are known in this party of the country.

Reports from other divisions of the army will of course considerably augment the number of killed and wounded.

WAR ITEMS: MEXICAN INCIDENTS

From the N. O. Picayune, May 4.

We cull from our correspondence such items and incidents as have not altogether been anticipated, and which may be interesting to the public:

The Storming of Cerro Gordo.

Mr. Kendall, in one of his letters, gives the following account of the storming of Cerro Gordo. But for the illness of Gen. Smith the assault would have been lead by that gallant officer. In his stead Col. Harney has reaped the laurels of this glorious achievement, and long may he wear them. The mischance of one chivalrous spirit made way for the valor of another, who approved himself, upon this as upon other occasions, capable of the most daring feats of gallantry.

See: Niles National Register, /Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#72.183May221847thestormingand

Jalapa.

JALAPA, Mexico, April 20, 1847.
Here we are at last, in one of the most delightful places in all Mexico. As we came in this morning, along a road fringed on either side with the richest vegetation, the white crest of Orizaba, piercing the very vault of heaven, was plainly visible, and a busy hum of admiration ran along the line is the snow-clad mountain first broke upon the view. A spectacle of greater magnificence or grandeur is not to be seen the wide world over. Here we were, in a soft, bland ax, and with verdure and flowers of rarest beauty and fragrance all around – above us, as it were, towering to the very ?, yet in plain view, was old Orizaba, clad in his eternal rument of snow. But this has place been so often spoken and written about that I shall now dwell upon it.

Santa Anna.

Santa Anna entirely disapproved of the surrender of Vera Cruz of course, in proof of which he sent Morales and Landero to Perote for trial. They stand a most excellent chance of being liberated in a few days by Gen. Worth. What is to be done with Santa Anna himself? how is he to answer, after swearing he would shed the LAST drop of his blood at Cerro Gordo, for running off without shedding the FIRST drop? There is a question for somebody to answer.

I send you files of El Republicano. I also forward several copies of papers published at this place, (Jalapa,) previous to the great battle of Cerro Gordo. The exulting tone of the editors, and the perfect confidence they express in the ability of Santa Anna to arrest the progress of the "vandals," read funny enough now that the sequel is known. I cannot recollect anything more amusing than Santa Anna’s flowing proclamation announcing his victory over Gen’l Scott on the 17th April, unless it was his disgraceful flight on a mule on the 18th.

In the number published on the day of the great battle at Cerro Gordo, and under the head of "LONG LIVE THE MEXICAN NATION"!, the following account of the skirmishing on the 17th is given. It reads as follows, and is most decidedly fat:

"Yesterday, between 11 and 12 o’clock, a column of the enemy, composed of 5 of 6000 men, attacked our position at Cerro Gordo. They came commanded by General Scott, who, inflamed or puffed up (engrecido) with the assassinations he committed with impunity at Vera Cruz, hoped with the same impunity to penetrate our camp here. At the commencement of the firing, Gen. Santa Anna ordered our troops to retire, in order to attract the enemy to a point nearer our batteries. It had the effect. Scott advanced, and then our columns displayed in such manner as to facilitate the action of our cannon. Then commenced a vivid fire of both artillery and infantry, encircling the enemy, who was obliged to retire; and having twice afterwards attempted to force our positions, he was twice compelled to retire. These three changes have cost the enemy 1000 men in killed and wounded: we have lost 160, of whom we count 30 as killed and the rest wounded.

[MSH]

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p1c1  1,773 words.

A NEW AND BOLD SUGGESTION

The New York Sun – one of that numerous and by no means unimportant class of journals in the United States, which, wearing the mask of neutrality, render most efficient partisan service to the Administration, by sustaining its most objectionable measures, from the support of which even the regulars sometimes flinch – makes a suggestion, which is calculated to attract some attention by its novelty as well as its boldness.

It asks, "What are we to do with Mexico?" And it proceeds to develop its own notable plan of indemnifying the United States for the expense incurred in its subjugation. That paper does not seem to be disposed, any more than ourselves, to take Mexican territory as indemnity; but it rejects this mode of liquidating the obligations of Mexico and the cost of whipping her, for reasons very different from those that influence our judgment. Its proposition, indeed, gives a bow shot beyond anything which has yet been suggested – being nothing less than the subversion of the nationality of Mexico, for a period not very definite, but certainly very protracted, and it subjection to the dominion of the United States, not exactly as a permanent Province of the "Model Republic," or as a member of our Confederacy, but as a pro tempore dependency, in a state of pupilage, and required to pay its tutors a pretty high price for the "bloody instructions" it has received at our hands, and which, if they shall not return to "plague the inventors" in after times, we may well congratulate ourselves upon our fortunate escape from the fate which has befallen other conquerors from the beginning of the world, and which will be the destiny of all, we apprehend, to the "last syllable of recorded time." The Sun says:

"We believe there is but one course to pursue, and that is the entire occupation of the country, taking it revenues until the expenses of the war, including all losses sustained by our commerce and otherwise during the war, and our old debt, principal and interest, with all expense of collecting the same, are paid. No treaty should be made short of expecting all this, and insisting upon such a disposition of things for the future in Mexico, as will promote our interests without abridging hers."

"In the mean time we can institute such government in Mexico, as will better conserve the peace and prosperity in that country, than any likely to be devised by its present military rulers."

According to the mode indicated of estimating Mexican ?? to the United States – especially if the exaggerated claims preferred against her, now on file in the State Department, are to constitute items of our account current – the amount will be scarcely less than one hundred and fifty millions of dollars, even if the war shall be terminated within the next month or two. According to this scheme, then, our armies are to hold possession of Mexico during all the period that may be necessary, by the proportion of her revenues, after paying the necessary opponents of the new government, which, in our abundant charity, we are to ? for her, (like the Holy Alliance in Europe dictating a Monarch to France after the dethronement of Napoleon, at the point of the bayonet,) to his immense sum, together with all the accruing expenditure necessarily consequent upon the armed occupation of Mexico, while this process of liquidation is going on. Why, who does not see that this proposition amounts to the permanent conquest, not "of a piece," but of the whole of the Mexican Republic? The annual expense of an Army of Occupation large enough to keep the peace in Mexico, after we shall have conquered it, will in amount her annual revenues – unless indeed, the Church property, estimated to be worth $150,000,000, still, in conformity with the suggestion of the Washington Union, be sequestered, for the purpose of shortening this period of quasi war, and as a means of inflicting suitable punishment, at the same time, upon the hierarchy for being faithful to their Government at a period of imminent peril, when it might have been more profitable to sell themselves to the enemies! This latter proposition, however, we are glad to perceive, for the honor of our own country, has found so little favor, that the Executive mouthpiece has found it necessary to take the back track, by relieving the Administration of all responsibility for it, and by softening its own language in regard to it. – It was mere “speculation” on the part of the Executive paper, it seems, whose position ought to hold in check the prurient fancy of its conductor; and it does not know that its speculations on this subject: have the least shadow of support from a single member of the Government.” Leaving the Church property, then, untouched, has the New York Sun taken the pains to calculate the cost of the armed acquisition of Mexico, and to compare that cost with the profitable amount of its revenue, under that better system of Government, which, in imitation of the Holy Alliance of Europe depicts, an in violation of the principle of non-intervention, which springs from the great doctrine, so often asserted by ourselves, of the right of the people in all countries to organize such forms of government as to them may seem best calculated to protect their liberties and to promote either prosperity, we are to establish for them? How many years does the Sun suppose, will elapse before Mexico will be able, from her revenues, to pay the one or two hundred millions of dollars, expended by us in “constructing a peace” in addition to the annual sum of twenty or thirty millions more, during the existence of the armed occupation, necessary, after we shall have whipped her to ?, to keep down the rebellious spirit of her citizens, under the gallant sense of their new impositions, forever clanking in their ears, while their spirits will be perpetually chafed by the presence of the armed guards who have forged and riveted them upon their once free lands. The cost of holding the country would be double larger than the gross receipts of its treasury; and consequently, the conquest must be permanent of the mode of securing “indemnity for the past,” recommended by the ? should be resorted to.

But in order to show the wisdom and propriety of adopting its suggestions, the New York paper, remembering doubtless the effect produced by a similar outcry while the suggestion of Texas annexation was pending, endeavors to harm the country by reference to the supposed ambitious designs of Great Britain. We are gravely told by the Sun – and this as its reason for rejecting the idea of territorial indemnity – that “a powerful party is anxiously waiting for us to make peace with Mexico, – a party that wishes nothing as much as a treaty for territory – and the moment we return behind our boundary line, that party will step in and seize the balance of the country.” Alas for Mexico, if this be true? Escaping, mutated and dismembered from the fangs of one enemy, another, quite as powerful, and who, if she actually mediates such a thing, ought to find in the United States an ally of Mexico, to repel her encroachment upon American soil, stands ready to seize upon the ?ments that my be left! But who is this new enemy? “The English,” says the N.Y. Sun – the same grasping Government which we were assured intended to convert Texas into a colonial dependency, and she not have thwarted by its annexation to the American Union: “The English Minister,” the Sun tells us, (though we doubt whether that gentleman has made our New York contemporary, although an Editor was really in the city of Mexico, his confidante is so important a matter,) “has been instructed by his Government, the moment peace is declared, to make a demand on Mexico for the important a matter,) “has been instructed by his Government, the moment peace is declared, to make a demand on Mexico for the debt due to England; and, in case such a demand is not acceded to, to take forcible possession of all the territory unoccupied by us.” And, taking… illegible – that is, to take Mexican territory in payment of Mexicans debts?

If the design imputed to Great Britain be really entertained by her, which we do not for a moment believe, the position taken years ago by Mr. Monroe, when the Spanish American States began to assume their position in the family of nations, indicates our policy and our duty as the oldest born and the most powerful of the American Republics – a position since re-assumed by more than one of Mr. Monroe’s successors, under circumstances far less imposing than those by which that last of the race of Revolutionary Presidents was surrounded. That position, briefly stated, is this: EUROPEAN COLONIZATION HAS EASED UPON THE AMERICAN CONTINENT. Great Britain, powerful as she is, will scarcely be permitted by us to acquire permanent territorial possessions in Mexico – though we might, perhaps, find our mouths shut by our own arguments, if her claims against Mexico, valid as our own, can only be liquidated by the cession of territory, which our Government insists upon as not only legitimate and proper, but as indispensable to the vindication of our own rights and honor! Wish what propriety could we, for example, while urging such claims, and such a mode of satisfying them ourselves, object to their assertion by Great Britain and their liquidation by the same means – the only means, as is contended by our Stock conductor; and it does not know that its speculations on this subject: have the least shadow of support from a single member of the

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p1c2  117 words.

CAPT. STEVENS T. MASON

This gallant officer, a native of Loudoun county, Virginia, was severely wounded in the Battle of Cerro Gordo, whilst leading his men in the thickest and hottest of the fight. His fellow citizens of Loudoun have resolved, in public meeting, to present him a Sword with suitable insignia, commemorative of his valor, and as an evidence of their approbation of his gallant conduct in that hard fought action – and for this purpose, a subscription has been opened under the superintendence of Messrs. Robert P. Swann, Asa Rogers, Jamca D. McPherson, John Leslie, H.D. Magill, John Matthews, S.A. Buckner, Asher W. Gray, G. Cuthbert Powell, R. G. Saunders, Charles Douglass, Conrad R. Powell, and A. T. M. Rust.
We yesterday had the pleasure of a conversation with Mr. Black, late American Consul at the city of Mexico, who left there on the 3d of April and arrived yesterday morning on the brig E. F. Pierce; Capt. Carr, in nine days from Tampico. Mr. Black on the 31st March, shortly after the arrival of Santa Anna from Buena Vista – when no doubt the one-legged here was exceedingly annoyed at the immense labor he had been at to manufacture a victory out of the battle of Buena Vista, and felt in any thing but an amiable mood towards to barbarous North Americans – received an order through the Governor to quit the capital immediately. This preparatory order was given too in Passion Week – a time when no business, public or private, is transacted, and when it is almost an impossibility to obtain the assistance necessary to depart. Mr. Black, however, succeeding in getting ready to leave in a day or two, and in having the archives of the legation packed, which he brought with him, and demanded an escort, which was at first refused. A variety of petty artifices were resorted to entrap him into a position that would afford a pretext for his arrest and imprisonment, but finding them fruitless, he was granted an escort, and left the city on the evening the 3d of April. The order required him to embark from Tampico, and although he was promised and was according to the usages of civilized nations entitled to an escort the whole distance, he was furnished with one for only thirty leagues from the capital, to a place called Rio del Monte; from this place to Tampico he was obliged to employ escorts – and sorry escorts they were. One of them, consisting of two men, had a sword and a musket between them, the barrel of the musket being fastened to the stock with a cord; another, composed also of two men, had two old swords between them: both escorts traveling on foot. Notwithstanding all this he was not molested on the journey.

From Mr. Black we have learned much that is interesting and important in relation to the state of affairs in the capital. We have later dates than he brings, but his information is of a character that can only be obtained from an intelligent observer, who has had the advantage of a long residence among the people he speaks of. The sincere federalists, both moderate and ultra, are the most urgent for the prosecution of the war; not because of a feeling of hostility to the United States, for they desire, if there is no other means of establishing their system of government, an union with the United States; but because they wish the whole race of military tyrants exterminated, and to destroy thoroughly the basis of their power, they look to the continuance of the war and the annihilation of the army. Many men of property, not belonging to this party, and a number of the priesthood, seeing the utter hopelessness of success in contending with our armies, are also looking to the subjugation of the country as the only means of restoring tranquility and securing them in their possessions. Mr. Black confirms the report that many of the Mexicans suspect Santa Anna of treachery, and the clergy and the people, poor and rich, are murmuring against exactions to support a war which has resulted in nothing but disasters to the country. The country is without arms, there being scarcely any thing left to them, since their recent defeats, but old and almost useless small arms and very few cannon. Mr. Black, for this reason, holds the idea of resistance of consequence to General Scott's march upon the capital as preposterous. Santa Anna is already nearly reduced to the position the federalists wish him in, being left but a guerrilla party to operate with, and whether he ever sought peace or not, he cannot now be expected to make an attempt at bringing it about, while a hope remains to him of being able to recover the ground he has lost. Whether those who look to American rule for amelioration of their condition will endeavor to bring about peace, remains to be seen. When Mr. Black left, affairs were in such a state of confusion; that no idea could be formed of what might take place within 24 hours, but the Government had determined upon removing to Lagos, distant about 100 leagues from the capital, whenever our army reached its vicinity. There is but little means of resistance at the capital. When Mr. Black left there was not over half a dozen pieces of artillery there, and knowing of no source from whence sufficient ordinance can be obtained, he is of opinion that a defence will not be attempted.

We regret to learn that Majors Gaines and Borland and Capt. Clay, and the other prisoners taken at Encarnacion, notwithstanding...
Santa Anna’s engagement to release them when prisoners were exchanged after the battle of Buena Vista, are closely confined and their wants neglected. – Even La Vega, who was treated with so much respect and consideration in this city, turned a deaf ear to their complaints when military commandant of the city of Mexico.

[MSH]

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p1c4  601 words.

THE SEAT OF WAR

From the N. O. Bulletin, May 12.

We give below some further details from Mexico. We stated, yesterday, on the authority of Gen. Pillow, that Gen Scott had determined to advance without delay on the capital. This determination was probably made, with the intention of retaining for the march, all the volunteers whose time of service was about expiring, but which would not take place, until after the army could reach the capital, and they could be replaced by reinforcements, now on their way to Vera Cruz.

By letters, however, received from headquarters, dated several day after Gen. P. left there, it appears Gen. Scott had concluded to discharge at Jalapa, those volunteers, whose terms were nearly expired, consisting of the two Tennessee, and the Georgia and Alabama regiments, and though nothing positive is known, that this will alter his previous intentions, of marching without delay for the city of Mexico, the belief is, that he will not attempt going beyond Puebla until reinforcements shall join him.

Notwithstanding all that has been said, as to the disorganization and dispersion of the Mexican army, there would evidently be great risk for Gen. Scott, with his greatly reduced force, to advance so far into an enemy’s country, where, the whole population is known to be hostile, and where they would rise like bees and overwhelm him in case of his army meeting with any check or misfortune. – It is also very evident, and indeed so is stated, in his general orders, that the army will be principally dependent on the country for its supplies, and being thus cut loose from the sea coast, it will be highly requisite he should have a sufficient force for the enterprise, which, under any contingencies that may arise, will enable him to look down all opposition.

The whole force that landed at Vera Cruz did not exceed 13,000 men – of these the garrison and the sick left at Vera Cruz, are about 1500 – the loss at Cerro Gorda, 500; the sick and garrison of Jalapa, 1000; a garrison at Perote, 500; and the volunteer regiments now discharged, say 2500, makes an aggregate of 6000; leaving an effective force of only 7000 men for the march on Puebla. We have placed the garrisons at Jalapa and Perote at a very low, and in the disturbed state of the country, we think, in a very unsafe number. Less than 2000 would also be a safe unsafe garrison to leave at Puebla, which is a city of 80,000 inhabitants, who could even overpower a much larger force. This would still further reduce Gen. Scott’s force, and leave him only 5000 men, with which to proceed to the capital, without counting any further dedication for the casualties and losses on the march. Under such circumstances, we think there can be little doubt, that for the present he will not attempt going beyond Puebla.

If, however, Gen. Scott should continue in the intention of marching for the capital, with his present means, the bettes plan would be to push forward with his entire force, leaving 20 garrisons behind, and cutting himself entirely loose from his communications. The move would be a bold one, but probably safer than to weaken his main body, by attempting to leave garrisons in his rear, with a view to maintain his communications, which could be reopened by the reinforcements now on the way to join him.

We learn that the troops which have been and still are, constantly arriving here, and which were to have reinforced Gen. Taylor, have their destination changed, and will be sent forward, with all possible tastes, to Gen. Scott.

[MSH]

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p1c5

SANTA ANNA’S DISPATCH FROM CERRO GORDO

The following is a translation of the despatch addressed by Santa Anna to the Minister of War and Marine, from Cerro Gordo, on the 17th of April, giving a rather rich account of the engagement of the first day:

Your Excellency: – I have to inform you, in order that you may acquaint the President substitute there with, that we have thrown up fortifications hastily in these gorges, in order to arrest the march of the invader, whose intention it was to make his way to Jalapa, and thence continue his course towards the capital of the republic. In spite of the failure of provisions and innumerable difficulties, I have achieved this important result.

To–day, at noon, the enemy commenced an attack on one of my positions on Telegraph hill; and for four hours I sustained a struggle against the greater part of his forces, commanded by Gen. Scott, and repulsed them with great loss; for he has left on the field of battle a large number of killed and wounded. On my own side, I have lost one officer and 25 soldiers (killed) and 128 wounded, of all ranks. It is given out that the efforts of the invader will be resumed to–morrow, the contest will be likely, for the troops I command are determined to sacrifice themselves for the services of their country. I shall acquaint your excellency by express with what may transpire hereafter. It is indispensable that the government should come to the aid of this army, by sending it money and all possible aid, and that as promptly as in necessary in order to render available the sacrifice these brave men are going to assume.
As to myself, I have done all I could; but the efforts of one man alone will always amount to nothing, when they are not ... by the care of the supreme power and of the nation itself. In communicating these details to his excellency the President substitute, be pleased to congratulate him on the occasion of this, the first triumph, which our army has achieved, and receive the assurances of my consideration.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA

To this notable despatch of the Mexican generalissimo, we may as well append here, by way of contrast, the narrative of Canalizo, describing the result of the battle so "triumphantly" commenced by his superior the day before:

[MSH]

See: Niles National Register, /Niles/Niles1847MayJum.htm#72.186May221847Mexicanaccountof

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p2c1 1,678 words.

JEFFERSON IN 1805, VERSUS POLK IN 1846

A Case in Point

In the year 1805, the relations existing between Spain and the United States bore a remarkable resemblance, in all their leading features, to those existing between Mexico and the United States, poor to General Taylor's march to the Rio Grande. A question of boundary was in dispute between Spain and the United States in 1805, as between Mexico and the United States in 1846; and the first as well as the last was complicated with a long standing controversy growing out of unsatisfied claims for indemnity for spoliations committed by persons acting under the authority of Spain upon the commerce of the United States. A convention was entered into by the Envoy of the United States at Madrid and the Minister of that Government for Foreign Affairs, by which Spain agreed to pay for the spoliations committed by her subjects – as a similar agreement was some years since entered into between Mexico and the United States for the like purpose. But before the stipulations of the treaty with Spain could be fully complied with, the cession of Louisiana by France to the United States had taken place – as, before Mexico had fulfilled the provisions of her treaty, Texas had become, by her own act, one of the States of this Union. From the moment of the transfer of Louisiana, as Mr. Jefferson informs Congress, in his Confidential Message of the 9th of December, 1805, Spain "seemed to changer her conduct and disposition towards us," – as Mexico did after the annexation of Texas. Spain first "protested against the right of France to alienate Louisiana to us," as Mexico denied the right of Texas to become a member of the American Confederacy. "Then, (says Mr. Jefferson,) high offense was manifested (by the Spanish Government) at the act of Congress establishing a collection distinct on the Mobile," and she finally "refused to ratify the Convention signed by her own Minister, under the eye of his Sovereign, unless we would consent to alterations of its terms, which would have affected our claims against her for the applications by French subjects carried into her ports" – in this respect going much farther in her insulting and injurious policy than had ever been done by Mexico, who faithfully complied, even though compelled to raise the money by forced loans, with the stipulations of the treaty of indemnity into which she had entered, until the annexation of Texas disturbed the amicable relations of the two countries, and led to the cessation of all diplomatic intercourse between them, and in fact to a state of quasi hostilities.

What course did Mr. Jefferson pursue, under a state of facts so similar to those which existed between Mexico and the United States, when Mr. Polk, transcending the limits of his constitutional authority, made war upon Mexico, by ordering the invasion of territory, which, though claimed by Texas, (as Santa Fe even has always been,) was never for a moment occupied by Texan citizens or subject to the jurisdiction of her laws, but which, on the contrary, had been, as no one is bold enough to deny, but as Mr. Donnelson, our Minister to Texas during its separate existence. Mr. Marcy, Mr. Benton, and Mr. C.J. Ingersoll admit, and as the whole volume of testimony on the subject, official and unofficial, proves, in undisputed and uninterrupted possession of Mexican citizens and Mexican garrisons, until they fled at the approach of Gen. Taylor's columns? Did Mr. Jefferson undertake to settle the question of boundary by the military occupation of the territory in dispute between Spain and the United States? Did he claim, either in express terms or by inference, the power usurped by Mr. Polk, of summarily determining the controversy with Spain by the grand military demonstration, which, but for the delusion under which he and his adviser labored, that Mexico could not be "kicked into a war," Mr. Polk would have known must have resulted, as it has done, in a protracted and sanguinary conflict – a conflict thus brought on by the Executive, without the previous sanction of the war-making power? No: Mr. Jefferson did no such thing. He had a juster appreciation both of his constitutional and moral responsibility. He sent a Minister to Spain, – James Monroe, – "to endeavor to procure a ratification of the former Convention, and to come to an understanding with Spain as to the boundaries of Louisiana" – (Mexico, including Texas, to the Sabine, being then under the dominion of the Spanish Government.) How did Spain meet this pacific overture? Very much as Mexico met the overture made to her through Mr. Slidell. She did not, it is true, refuse to receive our Minister, as indeed she could not, but diplomatic relations not having been formally suspended between the U. States and herself, as they had been, previous to the appointment of Mr. Slidell, between and the United States and Mexico. But although she received, the trifled with him. "It appeared at once (says Mr. Jefferson) that her policy was to reserve herself for events, [illegible] circumstances so closely resembling those that existed in 1805 – Mr. Jefferson took the same view of his powers as Chief Magistrate, which the Whigs now insist, that Mr. Polk should have taken, and which, had they been adopted by him, for his guidance, would unquestionably have prevented the war in which we are now engaged; or, if not, would at least have given it the sanction of constitutional authority, the want of which is one of the principal grounds of attack upon its usurping authors. What is that reason? "Considering (said Mr. Jefferson) that CONGRESS ALONE is constitutionally invested with the power of changing our condition from Peace to War, I have thought it MY DUTY TO AWAIT THEIR AUTHORITY FOR USING FORCE in any degree which could be avoided. I have barely inducted the officers stationed in the neighborhood to protect our citizens from violence, to patrol within the borders actually delivered to us, and not to do out of them but when necessary to repel an inroad , or to rescue a citizen or his property." Such was the tone of policy adopted by the Apostle, whose disciple Mr. Polk professes to be – and that, too, although, as he stated to Congress, the circumstances then existing required prompt action – the crisis in Europe being, as he remarked, favorable for pressing a settlement, in making which no moment should be lost. But yet, although speedy action was necessary, he properly declined usurping a power expressly withheld from him by the Constitution to which he had solemnly sworn to conform his action. He declined, because, in his own words, "the course to be pursued will require the command of means which it belongs to Congress exclusively to yield or to deny. To them, (he continues,) I communicate every fact material for their information, and the documents necessary to enable them to judge for themselves. To their wisdom, then, I look for the course I am to pursue; and will pursue, which sincere zeal, that which they shall approve."

How refreshing to turn back to those times of ORIGINAL REPUBLICANS – to search out the “old parts” trod by the fathers of the Constitution, whose footsteps have been obliterated by the destructive march of MODERN PROGRESSIVE DEMOCRACY! What can be more striking than the contrast between JEFFERSON in 1805 and POLK in 1846? What can more forcibly exemplify the rapid “progress” which had been made in effacing the ancient landmarks of the Constitution – in subverting the legitimate and wholesome authority of the Legislative department of the Government, the responsible representatives of the People and of the States, and the pr?med exponents of public opinion – and in the creation of an irresponsible and omnipotent Executive, clothed with powers as comprehensive as those possessed and exercised by any Monarch in Christendom?

Were Mr. Jefferson now alive, he would be among the foremost in denouncing the infraction of the Constitution by which the country had been recklessly plunged into a war, involving an expenditure of uncounted millions of money, and the sacrifice of thousands of valuable lives, with all its contingent evils, and all the dangers involved in the new and delicate questions to which it must give rise. – Consistently with his principles, and with his proverbial veneration for that instrument, the provisions of which are now mere cobwebs, to be swept away by the breath of the President when they conflict with his designs, the Sage of Monticello would have been compelled to occupy the ground upon which the Whigs now stand. He would have recognized doubtless, as the Whigs do, their obligation to unite in all proper measures for the successful prosecution of the war while it shall last; but he could not hold him guiltless in whose assumption of power that war had its origin. Indignant as he might have felt at the obstinacy with which Mexico refused to renew pacific relations, and to adjust by negotiation the matters in controversy between the two Governments, much more intense would have been his indignation against those, who, in order to punish real or imaginary grievances, had usurped the war-making power, and thereby inflicted upon the Constitution, the bond of our Union and the charter of our rights, an immedicable wound. Against foreign foes we have always a sure, defence in the valor of our people; but against the assaults of those more dangerous usurpers at home, sustained as they are by the strength of party association, and the cohesive power of public plunder,” there is no defence but in the intelligence and virtue of the people. If that fail us, the days of the Republic are numbered. To them, therefore, in the name of the great Apostle of Republicanism, whose disciples these usurpers profess to be, and whose example we have cited in contrast with their course, we appeal, to rebuke and condemn, by their verdict, the men, who, in order to make war upon Mexico, have likewise made war upon the sacred charter of our liberties.

[MSH]

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p2c2  283 words.

CHURCH PROPERTY IN MEXICO

The Washington Union repeats, in still under emphatic terms than at first, as if the Administration were alarmed at the consequences of its indiscretion, that its suggestion in regard to the sequestration of the Church property in Mexico, was its own unauthorized “speculation,” and that “it was published not only without the knowledge of the President or any member of the Cabinet, but is opposed to the sentiment of one and all of them.” What a predicament for the Official Journal to be caught in!

"Certainly (as the National Intelligencer well remarks,) this explanation was necessary, to relive the Executive from the odium of so extraordinary a proposition as that of employing the army of the United States in the desecration of the churches of Mexico. The suggestion was, to say the least of it, as great a 'mistake,' as the thing itself would have been a crime.”

But, as it will, in the fact of this remarkable discrepancy between the views of the Executive and of its Official Organ, as to the best mode of conducting the war “vigorously,” and “with eminent ability,” be difficult hereafter to "understand what is official revelation and what the mere random dictates of the editorial brain," we unite in the admirable suggestion of the Intelligencer, that, to prevent mistake in future on so important a point, the Union shall have an official, a semi–official and an editorial column. It will save a world of trouble to all parties, and especially the Union itself from the mortification of again eating its own words, and of treating as a mere "speculation" what seemed to us to be put forth with all the gravity of a well–considered Executive edict.

[MSH]

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p2c2  279 words.

UNTITLED

The Washington Union of Tuesday night, after stating that the letters its editor has seen “do not exactly go so far as the articles in the New Orleans papers,” (we presume in reference to the rumored deputation from the city of Mexico to Gen. Scott, which from the first we regarded as somewhat apocryphal,) adds:

"We understand from a letter received from Vera Cruz as late as the 4th inst., that a gentleman had arrived on that morning in that city, who had left Santa Anna at St. Andreas, on the Orizaba road, about thirty–five or forty miles from Vera Cruz. Santa Anna had with him about 2,000 troops, half armed and badly equipped, and he threatened to make an attack upon Vera Cruz. The gentleman considered him crazy. The same gentleman had left Puebla a short time before, and he heard it confidently said that her citizens would send a deputation to Gen. Scott to put themselves under his protection – being, in fact, more afraid of the leperos than they were of our own people. We understand, indeed, from Capt. Hughes, who arrived in Washington last evening, that the liberal conduct of the Americans had made the most favorable impression upon the Mexicans, and that Morales and Landeros had advised the citizens of Jalapa to remain at their homes, and even the ladies of Vera Cruz to return to their houses.

The letter from Vera Cruz, which we have seen, also reports that the British agent at Mexico, Mr. Bankhead, had been requested to mediate, and open a communication with the Americans to treat of peace. It is not certain, however, that this account is correct.

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p2c2  153 words.

UNTITLED

It is stated that old Rough & Ready’s reply to Santa Anna’s summons to surrender, is greatly admired in Paris, for its noble simplicity. A letter from that city says: “I have heard several French gentlemen declare that it will live in history, like Napoleon’s appeal to his soldiers at the Pyramids, or like his spirit-stirring address on seeing the ant rise on the field of Austerlitz.” The Administration, it would seem, from the state of inaction to which General Taylor is condemned, does not intend to give the old Hero an opportunity to write any more such laconic and emphatic epistles, or to illustrate them by his achievements in the field. Very well. He has done enough to secure the affections of his countrymen and the administration of the world. – The people will do him justice, in despite of the open and secret machinations of his enemies, in and out of office.

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p2c2  82 words.

A correspondent of the Charleston Courier, writing from Jalapa, gives the following table of distances between points already noted or hereafter to become so:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location</th>
<th>Distance</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Vera Cruz to Rio de Media</td>
<td>6 miles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Santa Fe</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lopitota</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pass of Obejas</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puente Nacional</td>
<td>6 fortified place</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jalapa</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>La Solla, [a pass]</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Las Vegas</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cruz Blanco</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perote</td>
<td>10 fortification</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ojadi Aqua</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nopuluca</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinal</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puebla</td>
<td>29 city</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. Martin</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cordova</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ayolta</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mexico</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Friday, May 21, 1847 RW24i41p2c2  1,072 words.

LETTER FROM THE ARMY

We have been politely favored with the following interesting extracts from a letter just received from a young Virginia officer attached to Gen. Scott’s army:

JALAPA, Mexico, April 25, 1847.

I last wrote to you from Plan del Rio, near Cerro Gordo, on the day of an immediately after the victory of our troops over the Mexicans fortified at the pass of Cerro Gordo. – This last is a high hill, something in the shape of a sugarloaf, that rises alone from the surrounding hills, its base being nearly round, and its height being about 300 feet. – The highway passes immediately at the foot of his
The battle was won on the 18th. On the 19th, all the prisoners, men and officers, were released on parole. One of our divisions marched for this city the same day, leaving the ground about sunrise. The Mexicans left about 9 o'clock; but being without lead soon overtook our troops, and it was a curious spectacle to see two armies that had so lately been composed in deadly hostility, moving together, intermingled, the one in good order, armed and equipped, the other a rabble, unarmed and in disorder, outnumbering their conquerors two to one.

This city is certainly beautiful, independent of comparison, delightfully situated on the ascent to Mexico, well built, the streets paved, and enjoying a climate unsurpassed for comfort and healthfulness. The buildings are in the Spanish style, cold and forbidding on the exterior, with but one entrance through a massive door always kept locked. Enter this, however, and you are introduced into a little paradise of verdure and perfumes. To every house there is a court, generally surrounded with apartments, always with a wall, the whole space except a walk on each side planted with beautiful and variegated flowers, interspersed with shrubbery.

Frost being unknown, perpetual verdure reigns, and every nook and corner has its flower always blooming, while the walls and eaves of the piazza are hung with vines and air plants.

Fancy yourself entering Thorburn's hot-house in the depth of winter, from a snow covered street, and you will imagine the delight with which I saw one of those scenes after entering the cold walls that the dismal portals made colder still.

The people are of a different class from any I have seen. They are fairer, and have more retirement and more intelligence than those of the lower country.

There is in case hostility to us in all parts of the country. Here, just now, it is exasperated because of our victory at Cerro Gordo, and I cannot but respect the feeling towards the enemies and conquerors of their country.

W.B.B.

[MSH]

June

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p1c2, General Taylor

A New Orleans correspondent of the New York Tribune writes as follows:

"The Volunteers who were with Taylor are returning, full of the warmest admiration of his character as a soldier, and a humane and good man, but overflowing with wrath against the Administration that they believe did its best to sacrifice them. They cannot be convinced of the contrary. I am informed of this by an officer who is among them on the Rio Grande. The people of this country will be astonished and indignant when they know fully the manner in which the concern at Washington has treated Gen. Taylor. I know, from unquestionable authority, that for five months not a single despatch of his has been answered, (unless within the last few weeks,) and nothing sent him except an insulting letter enclosing the letter written by hi to Gen. Gaines, and demanding to know whether he wrote it. I am glad to say that Gen. Taylor's reply was in every way worth the spirit of a high–toned, free, American citizen, who has never learned to fawn that thrift may follow. He replied that he did write it, and as he did not intend it for publication, had not before examined it very carefully, but now, on a re-examination, he found not a word or expression that he wished to alter. He asked no favors—they might make the most of it. They took away all his regulars save a hand full, and left him none but raw volunteers. Had he retrenched on Monterey, as directed by the War Department, the whole country from Saltillo to Matamoros, in the opinion of all military men there, would have been lost. There is much more yet to be told on this subject at another time. Thank God, he has survived and broken down the base conspiracy, for conspiracy it is considered here by all good judged, military men and others."

"Of Gen. Taylor himself, I wish space would allow me to say all that we know. He unites so many excellences of character, that, opposed as I am to Military Presidents, and detesting War and everything pertaining to it, to a degree of disgust and hatred, yet I sincerely look upon Taylor as one providentially raised up in regenerate and reestablish the respectability of this Government. I go for him, not because he is a successful general, but in spite of it. A good Whig on every point—able and honest—opposed to the Annexation of Texas, and to this war, humane, unassuming and unaspiring—what more can any honest man, North or South, require?"

[BJM]

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p2c1, General Taylor

The lately published letter from Gen. Taylor to a distinguished gentleman in Louisiana, in which, although intimating his willingness to obey the call of his countrymen, with characteristic distrust of his own qualifications for the Chief Magistracy, he expressed a desire that some one of our distinguished Statesmen should be elevated to that high office, has elicited from the Washington Union the following paragraph, in almost every line of which, even when the writer affects to be most complimentary, hostility to the old Hero, who has thus far Providentially survived, as he defies the efforts of the Administration and its friends to destroy him, is (perhaps unconsciously) betrayed. The Union thus prefaces the letter;

"The following letter bears marks of the modesty which the New Orleans Bulletin attributes to Gen. Taylor. But we hazard the remark, that it might have been equally, if not more modest, if, ‘casting away all ambitions,’ he had stood aside for the present, and firmly passed over the honors of an election to one of the ‘eminent and deserving’ citizens, whom he considers better ‘qualified for so high and responsible a station.’ Whilst the gallant and distinguished General, however, removes ‘all the doubt (as the bulletin supposes) as to his acceptance of the nomination for the Presidency,’ we are free to state, with all respect, that this is not going far enough. The people ought to know—and a free people will never be satisfied without knowing—how far his principles suit them. Is he a Democrat, or is he a Whig? He goes for ‘a strict observance of the constitution’. What does the General mean by a strict observance? Is he of the school of Jefferson, or of Webster and Clay? Does he go for a national bank—for a national system of internal improvements—a protective or revenue tariff—the law of 1842, or of 1846? We have no idea that the old soldier affects any mystery upon these questions. He will scarcely pursue the advice of his ‘committee of secrecy’ at Philadelphia. But let some friend call upon him for another letter, and let the old General come out. This is what the country has a right to ask; and nothing short of this requisition ought to satisfy an enlighten people, who value ‘principles more than men.’"

We have no doubt the Union would have been greatly gratified, had Gen. Taylor peremptorily refused to permit the use of his name as a candidate for the Presidency. But “the gallant and distinguished General” does not so understand his duty—and that, we venture to say, he will perform, fearless alike of open and secret, official and unofficial assailants, should he be called upon, from a quarter entitled to such a respect, to exchange the military for the civil services of his country. Acting upon the maxim of the patriotic Lownder, while he does not seek the high position to which so large a portion of his countrymen have evinced a determination to elevate him he will not decline it should it be conferred upon him.

Nor need the slightest apprehension be entertained, should he become hereafter a candidate for the Presidency, that he will fill to give a clear and candid exposition of his views upon all questions of public interest, upon which, in the event of his election, he may be required to act. Reared in the camp, he has all the frankness of the soldier, and none of the arts of those who have been trained in schools of Jefferson, or of Webster and Clay? Does he go for a national bank—for a national system of internal improvements—a protective or revenue tariff—the law of 1842, or of 1846? We have no idea that the old soldier affects any mystery upon these questions. He will scarcely pursue the advice of his ‘committee of secrecy’ at Philadelphia. But let some friend call upon him for another letter, and let the old General come out. This is what the country has a right to ask; and nothing short of this requisition ought to satisfy an enlighten people, who value ‘principles more than men.’"

In its devotion to a literal interpretation of the constitution, which has been certainly signalized in a remarkable manner since it became the organ of the Executive author of the Mexican war, the Union seems not to be satisfied with the declaration of Gen. Taylor that he is in favor of a “strict observance” of the provisions of that instrument. The suspiciousness of the Union is not at all strange—since it has seen how little Gen. Jackson, Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Polk, all of whom went into office, pledged to a “strict construction” of the constitution, according to the straitlaid definition of the powers of the General Government, set forth in the Resolutions and Report of’98–’99, have been restrained by their pledge, whenever they had an object to accomplish by its violation. The Union, therefore, asks, “what does the General mean by a strict observance?” We cannot, of course, tell that paper, in detail, what he does mean; but we may venture to say what he does not mean. He does not mean, we are very sure, that the Executive, has the power, either to make war, or to render it inevitable, by invading in time of peace, a foreign territory, for the purpose of settling by force a question of boundary, which Congress has expressly declared was left open for future negotiation! He does not mean that the Executive has a right to annex conquered territory to the Union, by the proclamations of military and naval commanders, to form territorial governments therein, to appoint officers to administer them, and to punish Mexican citizens, from whom an oath of allegiance to the United States has been exacted at the point of the Bayonet, as Traitors, for acts of fidelity to their own Government, and for defending their own soil. He does not mean that the Executive has a right to usurp the essentially Legislative function of enacting laws for the collection of duties upon imports in Mexican any more than in American ports! He does not mean, that while the constitution prohibits the General Government from improving our own rivers and harbors, (according to the doctrine laid down in Polk’s veto message, or to build ship canals in any portion of the Union as it exists, it has a right to buy or to conquer from Mexico the “right of way,” and to construct afterwards, either by a direct appropriation, or through the agency of incorporated capital, such a canal through the Isthmus of Tehuantepee, in order to connect the Atlantic with the Pacific! He may, for aught we know, believe with Madison, the father of the Constitution and the author of the Resolutions and Reports of’98–’99, in the constitutionally and expediency of a Protective Tariff. But he does not belong, we are confident, to that school of pretenders and purists, who, shrinking with well–feigned horror from these measures, have no scruple of rendering the constitution a dead letter in its most essential and vital parts. He does not strain at a gnat, after having swallowed a camel. When he speaks of a strict observance of the constitution, he means, doubtless, to give it that interpretation, in regard to questions of domestic policy, which has the sanction of the fathers and founders of the Republican church—not that infinitely more latitudinous model of construction by which the acts of the Modern Democratic Administration, beginning with Jackson and to end, we hope with Polk, has been uniformly characterized—a mode of construction th uniform tendency of which has been to consolidate all the powers of the Federal Government, wrongfully or rightfully claimed and exercised, in the hands of THE EXECUTIVE—converting Congress into a mere registrar of the edicts of one man, who, by the unity of his will and the judicious use of his patronage, has, to all intents and purposes, become “The Government.”

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p2c2, The Battle of Buena Vista

Brilliant as was the victory achieved by Gen. Taylor’s army at Buena Vista, the consequences resulting from that victory stamp it with a degree of importance which has scarcely been fully appreciated by the country. As a feat of arms, the New York Journal of Commerce, (a paper friendly to the Administration,) truly remarks, it has never been surpassed in our history, and perhaps never will be. But who has reflected on the fearful consequences that would have resulted from the defeat of Gen. Taylor at the place? –The same paper, on this point, forcibly remarks:

"By maintaining his position, Gen. Taylor secured his whole line of operations from Buena Vista to the mouth of the Rio Grande, by failing to carry that position, Santa Anna, with the remains of his army of 20,000 men, was left in a most forlorn condition, with scarcely a day’s rations, and a desert between him and the means of subsistence. Bu making this attempt upon Gen. Taylor, Santa Anna in effect abandoned Vera Cruz to its fate; and the losses which he sustained in the battle and subsequently deprived him of the means of successful resistance, even in the difficult and seemingly impregnable defiles of Cerro Gordo. It is now evident, (indeed it was so at the time,) that the battle of Buena Vista was the key to the whole campaign. Upon that issue Santa Anna hazarded every thing; and he knew it well. Hence the intensity of the struggle. What has since followed, was the natural and almost necessary consequence of his defeat, (or want of success, if you choose to call it so,) at Buena Vista. For the almost superhuman efforts there made by the small army under General Taylor, they and he deserve the lasting gratitude of the country. –They will receive it.”

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p2c3, To his Excellency James K Polk

A majority of the people of the United States have placed you in the highest office within their gift. They have elevated you to one of the most august positions in the world. It is true that you are a tenant for years, and have no estate of inheritance in the potential office you hold; but you have therefore the more dignified positions—one supposed to result from some personal excellence, and not the accidental honor of being born to rule. That has grown to be a vulgar distinction, and has fallen upon the foolish and the wise, the virtuous and the viscous alike.

From one situated as you are, the thoughtful of all lands and ages will demand a high and lofty bearing—something above the common level of character—and they will be satisfied with nothing less. To attempt a different line of conduct is to condemn your friends, and destroy your page of history—to tear if from the record, or to blot it with a stain of most foul pollution.

When you entered upon the duties of your responsible office, two paths lay out–spread before you— the one leading to a high and enduring renown; the other to end in the execution of the present generation, and the scorn and contempt of future ages—the one not only to lead you to fame, but your country to a higher rank among the nations of the earth; the other to lead you not only to disgrace, but your country to a lower place that you found it occupying among the governments of the world. One of those paths you have trod midway its distance, and you can begin to understand its bearings. Wither, think you, it is tending? Do you feel in your own heart and conscience, that, with purity of purpose, you have been pressing forward, with manly strides, to Fame’s “proud mountain tops”? Or do you the secret monitions of your conscience convict you of having crept along the other path, with stealthy pace? If you are a high–toned Patriot and a wise and virtuous Statesman, will you explain to the American People how it comes to pass that you have stricken the Sword from the hand of the gallant and virtuous Taylor —striped him of soldiers, and left him inactive in the mountains about Monterey? Why have you drawn the teeth of that Lion, and left him to crouch idly beneath our proud Eagle, which looks the more proudly because it soars over so brave, generous, and wise a soldier? Did the shadow of his mane obscure your heart and conscience, that, with purity of purpose, you have been pressing forward, with manly strides, to Fame’s “proud mountain tops”? Or have you “read Humboldt”? I s the old soldier do "Rough and Ready" of speech for you –not supple enough in the "pliant hinges of the knee"? Is it true he is not courtely; not a fawning sycophant; not an automaton, to twist and turn, as one may like a thing to do, when one holds the wires –but then he is honest; he is brave; he is generous; he is modest; he is a Lion in battle, but merciful to the vanquished.

How comes it that you do not admire these qualities! –The Good Book says that "anger is fierce, and wrath is outrageous, but who can stand before envy?" A great man in this land had somewhat against Mr. Van Buren, and gave the casting cots against his nomination as Minister to England. If you will consult the Enquirer for 1831–2, you will find that that fact gave Mr. Van Buren the nomination (in Virginia) for Vice Presidency, whence he ascended to the Presidency. Thus you see it is possible for one’s enemies to help him on the honors they least desire to confer. So will it be in your case. You cannot destroy Taylor –Every blow you aim at him will elevate him. But what will it do for you? Will it "pluck up (your) drowning honor by the locks," or add a leaf to the wreath with which you would fain adorn your brow? No air, no! It may be that he will, in a great suit before the jury of the country, recover the Presidency from you, though "Snap, Quirk and Gammon" may be your counsel, and start you, a second Tottlebat Totmouse, to seek your own level amid the hisses and groans of a great multitude of people. No, sir; you are mistaken, if you think the people of the United States think the King can do no wrong. In this country, thank God! That is indeed an obsolete idea. And writes against you now, on the tablet of the public mind, is the fearful sentence, : "Thou hast been weighed in the balances and art found wanting."

I am, as ever, your loving friend.

NOUS VERRONS. [BJM]

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p2c4, Later From the Brazos

The U.S. steamship Trumbull, Capt. Stoteabury, arrived last evening from the Brazos, whence she sailed on the 19th inst. The following passengers came over on the Trumbull: Capt A B Lansing, Assistant Quartermaster, U.S.A.; Capt E Webster and servant, and Captain Crownsnield, Mase. Volunteers; Capt Claiborne, of the U.S. steamer Col Cross; Lieut Frost, of the Voltigeure; Father MecElroy, Chaplain U. S. Army; Mr. Coolidge, Mase. Volunteers; Mr. Field; Mrs. Reed, and 39 deck passengers mostly discharged volunteers. Capts Lansiag, Webster and Crowninshield return, to the States for a short time for the benefit of their health.

Quite the most importance intelligence by this arrival concerns the safety of Col Doniphan command. According to the letter of our correspondent, dated the 3d inst. from Monterey, the most grave apprehensions were entertained in regard to that command. The rumor was, as will be seen by that letter, to which we refer, that Col D. had been defeated by the Mexicans and lost all his artillery. We are greatly in hopes that this will prove to be a mere Mexican rumor, and we are encouraged in this hope by the fact that the Picket Guard, published at Saltillo on the 3d, makes no mention of the rumor, and anticipation the speedy arrival of Col. Doniphan and his command at that place.

By this arrival we learn that Brig. Gen. Calwalader is forthwith to proceed with his command (excepting the dragoons) now encamped at Palo Alto, to Vera Cruz to reinforce Gen. Scott. The transports were being prepared at the Brazos when the Trumbull left.

Major Cross, 3d Dragoons, had arrived at the Brazos and proceeded to take command of the three, companies of his regiment stationed for the present near Palo Ito.

Col. Humphrey Marshall’s regiment of Kentucky cavalry was at Camargo at last accounts, on their way home. –They will not be disbanded until they reach this city.

A rumor had prevailed in Matamoras of a duel between Capt. Montgomery, quartermaster at Monterey, and Capt. T. F. Marshall, of the Kentucky cavalry, in which one of the parties fell. The rumor was false. There had been a serious misunderstanding between the two gentlemen, but a reconciliation was brought about without a hostile meeting.

The 3d Ohio Regiment, under Col. Curtis, was expected at Monterey during the second week in May, on its way home; and the 1st Ohio Regiment, long stationed at Monterey, would leave about the same time.

At last accounts the most intense curiosity was felt at Monterey and Saltillo to learn news of Gen. Scott’s movements. They had not then heard of the victory of Cerro Gordo, but had innumerable false rumors of operations on the Vera Cruz road to Mexico.

The Picket Guard contains the result of a court martial in the cases of Gen. Lane and Col. Bowles. We make no apology for giving the proceedings in full in justice to those officers and to the Indians regiments. The proceedings will be read with great interest, especially in the West.

Inquiry in the Case of Gen. Lane.

Facts. –That at the battle of Buena Vista on the 22d of February, General Lane commanded the 2d and 3d Regiments of Indiana Volunteers; that on the 23d, he was in immediate command of the 2d Regiment of Indiana Volunteers and three pieces of artillery under the command of Lieut. O’Brien, and that the 2d Indiana Volunteers retreated from the field without any orders from Gen. Lane, on the 23d of February; but through the exertions of General Lane and other officers, from one hundred and fifty to two hundred men of the 2d Regiment Indiana Volunteers were rallied and attached to the Mississippi regiment and the 3d Indiana Regiment, and remained with them on the field of battle during the remainder of the day.

Opinion. –The court are of opinion, that during the whole period of the 22d and 23d of February, 1847, Brig. General Lane conducted himself as a brave an gallant officer; and that no censure attacked to him for the retreat of the 2d Regiment Indiana Volunteers. [BJM]

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p2c4, Inquiry in the case of Col. Bowles

Facts. –In reference to the first charge, in appears from the evidence that Col. Bowles is ignorant of the company, battalion an dbrigade drills and that the manoeuvre of the evening of the 22d February, indicated in the third specification of that charge, was indicative of an ignorance of the battalion drill.

In relation to the second charge, it appears from the evidence before the court that Col. Bowles gave the order, “Cease firing and retreat,” that Gen. Lane was present, and that he had no authority from Gen. Lane to give such order.

It also appears that Col. Bowles retreated after having given the aforsaid command; but that he did not shamefully run away from the enemy, nor did he hide himself in any ravine from the enemy or from his regiment.

It appears, too, that Col. Bowles dismounted from his house in rear of his regiment; but there is no evidence to show that he did so to protect himself from the enemy.

The court find that the fact of Col. Bowles having given the order above mentioned did induce the regiment to retreat in disorder.

Col. Bowles gave this order with the intention of making the regiment leave its position; but the court dies not find that he had been particularly ordered to maintain and defend it.

Opinion. –With reference to the first charge, the court is of opinion that Colonel Bowles is ignorant of the duties of colonel; but the court would remark that ill health, and absence on the account of ill health, have in some degree prevented him from fitting himself for the duties of that office.

The court is of opinion that at the time Col. Bowles gave the order “retreat,” he was under the impression that the artillery had retreated, when in fact the battery had gone to an advanced position under the orders of General Lane, which orders had not been communicated to Col. Bowles.

And in conclusion, the court find that throughout the engagement, and through the whole day, Colonel Bowles evinced no want of personal courage or bravery; but that he did manifest a want if capacity and judgement as a commander.

[There is in the Guard a very full discussion of the conduct of the Indiana regiments at Buena Vista, but we have not space to give more on the subject to day than the above official proceedings.]

The Guard says that several English gentlemen who arrived at Saltillo on the 3d inst., (illegible) Durango, report Col. Doniphan to have started from Chihuahua on the 1st April for Saltillo, by way of San Jose du Parral. This agrees with the report we have in the papers of the city of Mexico, but the later allege that the force returned to Chihuahua after having proceeded twenty odd leagues south. We have great hopes this is true, and that thereop already alluded retrograde movement. The guard thinks the whole command must be within a few days’ march of Saltillo, but it had not probably heard of the return to Chihuahua; or, hearing of it, did not credit it.

The same English gentlemen from Durango make the following report, which we copy from the Guard:

"On the route they saw Gen. Garcia Conde on his way to Durango, with 150 men, having as a prisoner Gen. Heredia, who commanded at the battle of Sacramento. He is accused of treason and of being fond of American gold. –All the rest of the troops had dispersed for their homes. –Durango was in a great state of alarm, dreading the arrival of Gen. Wool, who was expected by them daily. Mr. James Magoffin was a prisoner, with the city for his prison limits, but well treated by the Mexicans.

"Everything was quiet in California, the whole country in possession of the Americans, and a very great influx of families and settlers from Oregon."

The Monterey Pioneer thinks that an advance upon San Luis is designed by Gen. Taylor, as usual activity prevails in all the departments, and four trains loaded with subsistence stories, have recently arrived at that place.

A man named John Doss, confined in jail at Matamoras, charged with selling arms and ammunition to the Mexicans, recently affected his escape.

The Matamoras flag says that Gen. Urrea has issued a proclamation to the citizens of Cadareyte, very similar in tone to that of Santa Anna. He calls upon the town for a contribution towards supporting the war, and also orders under arms all able–bodied males between the ages of 16 and 45. Immediately after having issued this proclamation he set off for the city of Mexico.
The following interesting items are all from the Flag:

"Gen. Cadawalader and staff, are at the camp of instruction, Palo Alto, 14 miles below this place. Also, Col. Ramsay, Pennsylvania regiment, Lieut Col Fay, 10th Regiment; Maj. Morgan, 11th do; Maj. Talbott 16th do: Capts. Carr, Lyberg, Moore, Irwin, Waddell and Cummings, 11th Regiment. Two companies of dragoons, Capts. Bernard, Biddle, Howard, Edwards and Churchill. Tow companies of the 16th Regiment, Capts. Hendricks and Breman –three companies of the 10th and Capt. Pittman's company of the 9th. These troops will remain at Palo Alto under strict discipline, and from thence, it is rumored, be transferred to Vera Cruz.

"Romano Paz, a notorious Mexican robber and murderer, was captured in the vicinity of Old Reynosa, by Capt. Reid, of the steamer Corvette, and brought down to this city on Wednesday last, where he is now imprisoned. It appears that he holds the rank of captain under Canales, and visited the settlements near Reynosa for the purpose of inducing the rancheros to join his standard. The people were not disposed to join him, and sought an opportunity to place him in the hands of the Americans. This was effected by informing Capt. Reid of his whereabouts and designs, who collected a force from the boat and made him prisoner at a rancho where he had been quartered for several days.

"It is stated in the Monterey Pioneer, upon the authority of a gentleman from San Luis Potosi, that but a few rumored effective troops were in that city, and that the hospitals were filled with the sick and wounded, who were dying for want of attention. A report reached there, that General Taylor was within three days' march of the city, which caused hundreds of inhabitants to vamos with their property."

The Flag accompanies the following card with a warm tribute to the virtues and piety of Rev. Mr. McElroy.

A CARD –The undersigned, being about to return to the United States, takes this opportunity of expressing his gratitude to the citizens of Matamoras, with whom he had the pleasure of an acquaintance, for their marked regard to religious opinions. To the officers of the army he acknowledges continuous acts of controversy, during his sojourn with them –the recollection of which will be cherished by him through life, and will enable him to appreciate their noble deeds, accompanied, always, by traits still more glorious –the humane, kind, and truly Christian treatment of their vanquished enemy, whether as prisoners of war or wounded on the battle-field. My fervent wishes and prayers, though absent from the army, shall be elicited for its members, and of a speedy and honorable peace.

JOHN McELROY,

Chaplain U. S. Army.

[BJM]

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p2c5, Latest from Vera Cruz

The schooner Whig, Captain Rayner, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, having left there on the evening of Saturday, the 15th inst. Lieut. A. J. Brock and thirty-three privates being company F of the Tennessee cavalry, came passengers on the Whig. She brought no mail, that having been put aboard the schooner Allen Stevens, which has not yet arrived.

Verbally we learn that there had been no later arrival from the army of Gen. Scott. We have a copy of the American Eagle of the 15th inst., which has not a word of later news from above.

From the Eagle we learn that the U.S. sloop of war Germantown, Capt. F. Buchanan, arrived off the castle on the 13th inst., but sailed immediately for Anton Lizardo, to await the orders of the commodore. The U.S. steamer Spitfire, Lieut Com'g Lee was lying at Vera Cruz awaiting dispatches expected daily from the interior.

The Eagle is or opinion that Gen. Scott will remain at Puebla until the beginning of autumn, withouth marching upon the capital.

The Eagle gives a somewhat different version of the recent surprise and murder of dragoons at Santa Fe, near the city, from that we have published. We copy a greater portion of its article.

"It appears that a detachment of some seventy odd dragoons, belonging to the command of Col. Harney, left Jalapa some day since, in command of Lieut. Hill, with the intention of visiting this city, to procure a further supply of horses. On arriving at Santa Fe, nine of the men were left behind, in consequence of illness on their part, and fatigue on the part of their horses, Lieut Hill and his command continued on, feeling that those who were behind were perfectly safe, and soon after reached this city, where he has since been detained, although it was his expectation that he would return the next morning. Nothing further was heard form the men until Thursday morning, when news reached here informing us that a large party of Mexicans had attacked and liberally cut them to pieces in the most shocking manner. One of them was killed upon the spot, and five others mutilated in such a manner as to strike one with horror at sight.

"Means of transportation were furnished and the survivors brought to the city as soon as possible, but another of them died on Thursday night, and two others were last evening reported by the surgeons as unable to survive their wounds during the night. The hand of one is cut off above the wrist –the abdomen of another is cut in such a manner as to allow the bowels to protrude. Another has several several cuts on the head, penetrating the skull –and the arms and bodies of others are literally hacked and mangled so as to render description almost incredible.
“Captain Walker left the city on Thursday morning, accompanied by his mounted riflemen, in search of the murderers, and, we learn, encountered a large party of Mexicans, whom he attacked and succeeded in killing, four. —Yet, we believe there has not been anything received of a positive nature in regard to the number killed.”

The Eagle complains (illegible) good set terms of the dullness of Vera Cruz and the excessive heat, which threatens to become yet more intense. Nothing is said of the health of the city. From the report of the proceedings of the city council we perceive that our countrymen have brought a good deal of American energy to the task of cleansing the city, providing a police, supporting schools and the like. —Before we are done with Vera Cruz we hope it may become quite an attractive and health city.

There arrived at Vera Cruz on and after the 12th inst. the bark Adeline and Eliza and brig Tasso, of this port; the brig N. G. Browne, from Philadelphia, and sloop Wm. R. Creak, from Brazos Island, Among the clearances during the same time for this port were the shop Pharsalis, bark John Oalin, brigs Importer, Harriet. R. Tussell, Lincoln and Osceola, and schooners Oreends and Selim. (BJM)

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p3c1, Latest from Santa Fe

CRITICAL STATE OF THE COUNTRY —ANOTHER REVOLUTION (illegible) —We have five days later news from Santa Fe. The news was brought to St. Louis on the 22d inst, by Mr. J. McKnight, a trader from Santa Fe. He represents the country to be in a most critical state, and that a revolution was daily anticipated. The executions which had taken place, had caused a great sensation, particularly at . . . (illegible) . . . .

An Indian express had been received at Vegas, from . . . (illegible) . . . , for a large body of men to hold themselves in readiness to march there.

It was the general opinion that another and speedy effort would be made by the Mexicans to revolutionize the country from American sway.

The chief . . . (illegible) . . . and others at Vegas, who were peacefully disposed, were trying to prevent such a movement, which is evident that nothing can effect it except the presence of a strong force to overawe them.

The Camanche Indians are very troublesome, and have announced their intentions to attack every party.

The party of a Mr. Brown, a Sante Fe trader, who left the settlement not long ago, was attacked at the crossing of the Arkaneus, their horses and mules taken, with about half of their merchandise. (BJM)

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p4c2, Movements of Troops

The Raleigh Star of the 27th inst. announces the departure from that city, on the day before, of a fine company of troops for the regular service in Mexico, enlisted by Capt. William J. Clarke in that vicinity, numbering between 85 and 90 men. They are to be joined by 30 more at Wilmington. Prior to their departure, the Ladies of Raleigh presented Capt. Clarke with a handsome Sword, and a Bible was given to each of the numbers of the company, by the Rev. Mr. Cameron, as the organ of the citizens, accompanied with an impressive admonition and exhortation.

On the 22nd instant, a company of 83 recruits enlisted in North Alabama, commanded by Capt. H. C. Bradford, and Lieuts. H. L. Clay and Nicholas Davis, and 16 privates of the 3rd Dragoons under Lt. W. B. Cook, arrived at New Orleans, on their way to Mexico.

On the same day, Col. T. P. Andrews of the Voltiguers, accompanied by Capt. J. D. Blair, with 120 men of that corps, and Lt. Charles F. Vernon with 35 men, sailed from New Orleans for Vera Cruz, on board the steamer Massachusetts, on board of which were the rocket and howitzer batteries belonging to the Voltiguer regiment. Capt. Bethell, of the Infantry, with 60 men, also took passage on board the Massachusetts, to join Gen. Taylor.

The U. S. Steamer Telegraph sailed from New Orleans on the same day, having on board R. A. Parrish, Esq. Bearer of despatches to Gen. Taylor, Gen. Agur, and several officers, together with Capt. Gaither’s company, 3rd Dragoons, about 80 men.

The Fashion also sailed for Vera Cruz, with Lt. Col. E. W. Moore, Capt. Duperu’s company, and about 250 men of the 3rd Dragoons.

GENERAL TAYLOR

Resolutions were adopted by a public meeting in Trenton, (N.J.) some time ago, in which the conduct of the administration towards Gen. Taylor and his Army was strongly condemned. These resolutions were transmitted, by the Secretary of the meeting, to Gen. Taylor, who has replied as follows:
Camp near Monterey, Mexico, April 15 1847.

Sir: I have read with much gratification, and with feeling of warm respect and gratitude, the resolutions adopted by a meeting of the citizens of Trenton, enclosed in your letter of the 18th of February, and which express the approval of the operations of our army in the enemy’s country, and a desire to watch over and guard the rights of all engaged in the laborious and hazardous duty for sustaining the national honor in a war with a foreign enemy.

While thus braving danger and death for the common country, our troops will ever find an ample reward in such warm expressions of approbation and of real justice, while a greater stimulus to the endurance of privations and to renewed exertions in vindicating the honor of the country, is impressed upon all.

Be pleased, dear Sir, to accept for yourself and the citizens of Trenton the sincere thanks of all of us, who are thus honored by your sympathies, and warm interest, and be assured that beyond these we ask no more glorious reward. Your most obedient servant,

Z. Taylor,
Major General, U.S. Army.

Dr. John T. Clarke, Sec’y of Meeting of Trenton.

June 1, 1847, RWv24i44p4c2, U.S Army Recruiting

Wanted for the United States army able bodied men, between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five years, being above five feet three inches high, of good character, and of respectable standing among their fellow citizens. None need apply to enter the service, but those who are determined to serve—the period of their enlistment—honestly and faithfully “during the war” with Mexico.

A bounty of TWELVE DOLLARS will be paid to each recruit enlisted for the Artillery, Infantry, or Mounted Regiments—also, ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY ACRES OF LAND, or $100 on being honorably discharged.

Besides the monthly pay, as above stated, one ration per day is allowed every soldier, which is amply sufficient for his subsistence—also, a large supply of comfortable and genteel clothing. Good quarters and fuel are at all times furnished, and every attention will be paid to making those men who may enlist, and are determined to serve their country in good faith, comfortable and contented with their situation. The best medical attendance is always provided for the sick soldier, and no deduction of pay is made during the period he is unable to perform is duty. Should the soldier by disabled in the line of duty, the laws provide a pension for him.

By the above, it is seen that the pay and allowances are respectable and that, with prudence and economy, the monthly pay of the soldier may be laid up, as every thing requisite for his comfort and convenience is furnished by the Government, including his sugar and coffee.

The sum of TWO DOLLARS will be paid to any citizen noncommissioned officer or soldier, who shall bring to the rendezvous an able-bodied recruit, who shall be regularly enlisted. The citizen should present his recruit to the Lieutenant or Captain, and not to the Recruiting Sergeants.

CAPTAIN JOHN TYLER, JR.

Recruiting Officer.

June 4, 1847, RWv24i45p1c1, General Scott’s Proclamation

The Bugbear of European Intervention.

The style of Gen. Scott’s late proclamation to the Mexican people has been as severely criticized as its sentiments. But we submit that it is scarcely fair to hold either the signer of that paper, or its writer, (If they be, as we believe they are, different individuals) responsible for its verbally and grammatical inaccuracies—since, as we are informed, it is not the original version, but a translation of a translation, having been first rendered into Spanish, and afterwards again Anglicized. Its style, however, is altogether a matter of subordinate interest. The sentiments embodied in it impart to this document its chief importance.

Satisfied, as soon as we perused it, that Gen. Scott ought to be held no more responsible for its contents, than an Envoy at a foreign court, who faithfully carries out, as he is bound to do, however they may conflict with his individual opinions, in instructions of his Government, is for the character of the positions he is required to maintain, every additional development only serves to confirm our original conviction. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, a clerk in the State Department, and, as his letters show, having generally quite an intimate and accurate knowledge of the acts and purposes of the Cabinet, in his last letter, says: “The proclamation was substantially written by Gen. Scott, Mr. Trist having been, at the time, I Vera Cruz, and in communication with Gen. S. and no doubt approving of the matter contained in it. The text of the proclamation COINCIDES PERFECTLY WITH THE VIEWS OF THE
One of the most startling grounds assumed in General Scott’s proclamation, is the unequivocal admission, that, so far from “war existing by the act of Mexico,” as asserted in the preamble to the act of Congress recognizing a state of hostilities, and providing for their effectual prosecution—so far from its having resulted from the shedding of “American blood upon American soil,” as asserted by Mr. Polk—in his Message to that body—so far from its having been undertaken to enforce the payment of the long standing claims due from the Mexican Government to our citizens, whose property it had seized and confiscated, and whose persons it had subjected to indignity and outrage—THE WAR WAS BEGUN BY OURSELVES, AND FOR A CAUSE NEVER THERTOFOR EVEN HINTED AT BY THE PRESIDENT:—Reasons of high policy and of Continental American interest,” says the Proclamation, “precipitated events in spite of the circumstance of the Cabinet at Washington, which ardent desired to terminate its differences with Mexico.” The allusion in this remark, some what obscure, standing alone, is lucidly interpreted by a recent elaborate editorial in the Washington Union, though evidently not written by the editor, in which a design, founded upon the filmsiest possible testimony, is ascribed to the leading European Governments, to re-establish, with the connivance and assistance of Paredes, then at the head of the Mexican Government, monarchical institutions in that country, and to place a Spanish Prince upon the newly erected throne. This article—the leading assumption of which is disproved by one of the very extracts from the English papers of the time, cited by the Union for the purpose of imparting plausibility to this new version of an old romance, fixes with entire certainty the meaning of the following quotation from the remarkable Proclamation, addressed by the Administration, through Gen. Scott, to the Mexican people. (illegible) they always deem themselves safe, when driven from every other subterfuge, they can entrench themselves behind this—notwithstanding it has been worn almost threadbare by the frequency to which it has been resorted, under pretext the most absurd, and which, as after events clearly demonstrated, were INVENTED, as this is, for the occasion.

But, even suppose it to be true, that England, France and Spain really meditated the re-subjugation of Mexico to European dominion, and were preparing to place a Spanish Prince upon the throne, to be sustained by their bayonets, and that Paredes was the instrument through whom this revolution was to be effected—suppose this fable to be a fact, was curse did it become our Government to pursue? Was it our policy to overrun Mexico with fire and sword, because a new European Alliance meditated the subversion of its independence and its re-subjection to colonial bondage? It strikes us that instead of whipping our neighbor, we should have directed our resentment against the European authors of this new “Gunpowder plot.”—This view of the subject, we perceive, has naturally suggested itself to others also, upon whose reflections we pursue liberally to draw.

June 4, 1847, RWv24i45p1c2, From the City of Mexico

The New Orleans Picayune and Delta furnish us with (illegible) transfer them to our columns. Without furnishing any fact of special importance, it is sufficient to say, in the language of the Delta, that if their contents are to be considered a fair index to the popular mind, they would go to show that “the war spirit” is daily increasing, and that new measures are being constantly adopted to carry on the war with vigor and perseverance. Almost every number of the Mexican journals is filled with appeals to the people and to the authorities, urging action—prompt and incessant defensive actions. Individual subscriptions of money to furnish the government with means, numbering several thousand names, the amounts varying from 12 ½ cents to 1000 dollars, were in circulation; and we perceive that the Clergy of San Luis Potosi have issued an address to the people, announcing their intention “to preach three days in each week in order to incite the people to the proper religious enthusiasm,” which will doubtless be excited to the highest pitch when the number of the Washington Union, proposing the sequestration of the Church property, shall be received in Mexico, and read from their pulpits! At San Luis it is said there are 7000 muskets and 50 pieces of cannon, 26 of heavy caliber, with which to arm the expected recruits, who are to be placed under the command of Gen. Minon or Gen. Ureña. A letter from San Luis says: “We will have a large number of guerillas in about a month from this; and a base of 4500 men which we have now here will facilitate the defense of the State,” and assistance was promised by the adjoining States. The writer adds: “A general enlistment, to take place in 48 hours’ time, has been this day agreed upon by the government. Above all, there is a strong determination here to resist treaties of peace, which Mexico would wish to enter into, with the ‘hated Yankees,” as has been suggested in the letters of very late date from the capital.”

Gen. Bravo seems to be preparing for the defense of the capital. He issued two decrees on the 6th ult.; one ordering every person having two or more horses in his possession to deliver one of them to the commissary at or before the expiration of the sixth day, and the other ordering all citizens, from 15 to 60, to enlist at the shortest notice, and be prepared to present themselves armed and equipped, when they should be called out.

Santa Anna has been joined by considerable detachments of troops (doubtless a portion of those paroled at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo,) and has had a battery of artillery mounted, under command of Col. Aguado.

Gen. Guzman has taken charge of the works of fortification near the capital, and three strong positions leading to the city were being fortified. President Anaya had declared the city in a state of siege, and had completely silenced the press, forbidding it to engage in military and political discussions, while the siege continues. (It seems that even in Mexico the press has been heretofore free to criticize the conduct of the acts of their Rulers—though the “Union” would, without a Presidential decree, silence the Whig press in the United States! How fortunate it would be, if President Polk, like his Mexican contemporary, could spike the guns of the Intelligencer by a similar Executive prescripts. And why not? Is it not such now substantially the doctrine broached by the Washington Union? If not, what mean its learned lectures on moral treason?) El Republicano violently protests against this measure, and urges the President to retrace his steps. This paper likewise vehemently assails the military conduct of Santa Anna, which is as zealously vindicated by the Diario del Gobierno. El Republicano, however, is as decidedly in favor of prosecuting the war as the latter paper; and its chief complaint against Santa Anna is, that he has not conducted it with proper energy and skill.
June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p1c1, THE ARMY

Some weeks ago the Union stated, on the authority of the Adjutant General, that Gen. Scott would have received reinforcements, "more than sufficient to replace the twelve month's men before their term expired," and from the 'unusual rigidity" with which the new recruits were pushing forward to his camp, it estimated that he would have near 220,000 troops under his command. Upon this assumption, the Union declared that Gen. Scott was "under no necessity of lingering on his march to Jalapa, but he may proceed, if he sees fit, to the Capital." This official declaration is pronounced to be wholly untrue by a correspondent of the New Orleans Time(a neutral paper,) who writes from Vera Cruz, May 10, a follows:

"The man who penned that article, could not well have been so ignorant as to believe the facts which he asserts or to trust in the calculations of probabilities based upon them. He must have know, or the Adjutant General, whose authority was thus drawn into contempt, could or ought to have informed him, that General Scott had not probably at that moment one half of twenty thousand men under his command, in the sense intended, by the writer to be understood; and, at this time, 'let me assure you, upon authority better than that of the Adjutant General, that General Scott in this heart of Mexico, has not eight thousand efficient men in the fields, counting every soldier able to bear . . . [illegible] . . . , from Vera Cruz to Puebla. And where are those much–talked of reinforcements–those "recruits which are joining him with unusual rapidity." Very few pass this way; and I fancy Gen. Taylor is kept waiting for "the reinforcements which will be sent to him in time," entirely too long to enable him to open another passage for them."

[BJM]

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p1c2, Washington Letter Writers

WASHTON LETTER WRITERS – GENERAL SCOTT'S PROCLAMATION

We find in the Washington Union of Thursday night, the following paragraph, the principal object of which seems to be to discredit certain Washington letter writers, of its own party. It is due to a portion of the, however, to say, that, on many occasions, their statement have been shown to be much more accurate and reliable than those of the Organ itself, and that, by whatsoever means they obtain their information, they not infrequently foretell with remarkable precision, as after–results demonstrate, the purposes and designs of the Administration. Some of the, it must be confessed, however, occasionally reader themselves ridiculous by their oracular airs, and by the solemnity with which they utter their predictions, if one of which happen to be fulfilled, though ninety–nine turn out to be false, they never fail to glorify their own sagacity and prescience, and to cite if as proof that their relations with the chief Executive officers are of the most familiar and confidential nature, although the very fact of their betrayal of that confidence would seem to show that they are unworthy of it. Among the most stilted of this class is the correspondent of the Baltimore Sun–who, we learn, is not a clerk in the State Department, as we had supposed, and a few days ago said–who has predicted the speedy restoration of peace almost daily for months past, only to find his vaticinations as often falsified by the event–but who, we presume, will go on repeating the prophecy, until, sure enough, peace will be restored, (unless the war shall last till the "crack of doom,")–and then, with the self–complacency characteristic of his class, he will exclaim, "Ah! I told you so," Men would . . . [illegible] . . . he prophets as well as wits; but in both departments,

"A thousand fails, for one that hits."

The Union says:

"We are authorized to state, unequivocally, that no letter–writer in this city has any means of knowing the "views and purposes of the administration," in advance of the public. Such pretended revelations must be merely the conjectures of their authors from facts within the knowledge of every person. This is especially true in regard to the State Department; because, from its very nature, it is a confidential branch of the government. The discretion of the head of that department is well known to the public; and he never even converses with any person concerning diplomatic arrangements, either in embryo or in progress, except with those directly interested. After negotiations are brought to a conclusion, whether fortunate or adverse, Mr. Buchanan is always proud to submit his labors to the public, unless a just regard for foreign nations renders this improper. This is the rule by which he has been guided ever since he came into the Department. Whether, therefore, General Scott does, or does not, possess diplomatic powers, or what are the objects of Mr. Trist's visit to Mexico, are known to no persons in the United States, beyond the President and members of his cabinet; and one confidential clerk in the Department.

"It may be proper here to add, that it is highly unjust of Gen. Scott to assert, or to insinuate, that he is not the author of the proclamation which bears his name. It is very certain that neither the administration nor Mr. Trist had any agency whatever in its production."

We do not know why it was proper to add, in connection with the Union’s disclaimer, on the part of the Administration, of all responsibility for the statements of the Washington letter–writers, that neither the Administration nor Mr. Trist had any agency whatever in the production of Gen. Scott's proclamation; as to our mind there seems to be no sort of relationship between the two subjects. There is a motive for it, doubtless–but what that motive is, the future alone can disclose. Does the Union intend to say that the Administration disavows Gen. Scott's proclamation? Does it mean to say that the sentiments embodied in it are not in strict accordance with the instructions given to that officer? Or is it one of those diplomatic equinoxes, characteristic of Court Journals, in all
If sacrifice in the service of the country entitle patriotic and brave men to a hearing before the tribunal of public opinion, the 2nd
heads of detachments have been heard. That regiment now asks to be heard also, and this is all the recompense it seeks for the loss unsuccessful enterprise in the ambitious phraseology of a military despatch. The commander–in–chief, the general of divisions, and the
may be judged how far the commendation of official reports is deserving, and how far it has been attempted to smother up an
of the men and gallantry of its officers, the regiment is concerned that the public shall know the circumstances of the assault, that it only one of the battle of Cerro Gordo that failed; and although the general orders announcing this fact bear testimony to the courage through the principal cities of the Union. It is such appointments as these, and the willful oversight on the part of the Administration of butt of ridicule by the whole Army. As it is, he will doubtless hold on long enough to display an additional star upon his shoulders, and was not the most abject slave to vanity, self conceit and selfishness, would at once resign and save himself from being made the honorable men to a height seldom surpassed under any circumstances. Gen. Pillow, if he has the first particle of common sense left, Harney, the two latter of whom so greatly distinguished themselves in the battle of Cerro Gordo, aroused the indignation of all an emergency. And to see such a man’ appointed over such men as Worth, (only a Major General by brevet,) Gen. Twiggs, and Col.
Major Generals, in the place of Messrs. Benton and Cummings, declined and of Col. Cushing as Brigadier, in the place of Gen. Quitman, promoted. The appointment of Gen. Quitman gave general satisfaction; that of Gen. Pillow and Cushing excited the most unbounded indignation and contempt, especially that of Gen. Pillow. If ever I heard tall cursing, and from Locofoocos at that, it was at the appointment of Gen. Pillow. It was well known to the few persons he is allowed to designate by the title of "friends: that he is left here perfectly satisfied of his utter incompetency to discharge even the most ordinary and common place military duties, and by their advice, with the intention, on his arriving in the United States, to resign and return to civil pursuits for a livelihood. It was a subject also, of momentary conversation, that he was ridiculed and denounced by most of the brigade he commanded at the battle of Cerro Gordo. And that his command being repulsed, and Colonel Haskel’s regiment unnecessarily cut to pieces without receiving the slightest support from the residue of the Brigade, as promised him by General Pillow, when he led his brave and fearless little command to the very mouth of the enemy's cannon, was the result entirely of Gen. Pillow’s ignorance and total want of conception how to act in such an emergency. And to see such a man' appointed over such men as Worth, (only a Major General by brevet,) Gen. Twiggs, and Col.
Harney, the two latter of whom so greatly distinguished themselves in the battle of Cerro Gordo, aroused the indignation of all honorable men to a height seldom surpassed under any circumstances. Gen. Pillow, if he has the first particle of common sense left, and was not the most abject slave to vanity, self conceit and selfishness, would at once resign and save himself from being made the butt of ridicule by the whole Army. As it is, he will doubtless hold on long enough to display an additional star upon his shoulders, through the principal cities of the Union. It is such appointments as these, and the willful oversight on the part of the Administration of those officers who not only have merit, but have greatly distinguished themselves, that makes every man willing to quit the service as soon as possible. But as Mr. Polk has probably no more nephews or other connections to appoint to office in the Army, there may possibly be a chance for the meritorious hereafter.”

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p1c3, Ole Rough and Ready

"OLD ROUGH AND READY" AND THE VIRGINIA VOLUNTEERS

Taylor paid a visit to our officers yesterday morning. He looks like an old Virginia Farmer, and says we are a very good looking set of boys, but have got here too late to see any fun. He thinks there will not be much more hard fighting, but if there should be he will give

[BJM]

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p1c4, Second Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers

CERRO GORDO.

Address of the 2nd Regiment Tennessee Volunteers

If sacrifice in the service of the country entitle patriotic and brave men to a hearing before the tribunal of public opinion, the 2nd Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers may surely claim that privilege. The attack upon the enemy’s batteries by that regiment: was the only one of the battle of Cerro Gordo that failed; and although the general orders announcing this fact bear testimony to the courage of the men and gallantry of its officers, the regiment is concerned that the public shall know the circumstances of the assault, that it may be judged how far the commendation of official reports is deserving, and how far it has been attempted to smother up an unsuccessful enterprise in the ambitious phraseology of a military despatch. The commander–in–chief, the general of divisions, and the heads of detachments have been heard. That regiment now asks to be heard also, and this is all the recompense it seeks for the loss
Gen. Pillow’s plan of attack was arranged by himself, as follows; The command of Col. Haskell, supported by Col. Roberts, 2nd Twigg’s division, with Shield’s brigade, was assigned the duty of carrying the height of Cerro Gordo. The sympathies of the people were excited on account of a wound, which was reported to have nearly severed his sword arm in twain, whilst in fact he carried the ball that hurt him in his breeches pocket. And now the remnant of the only regiment of his brigade which was actively engaged in battle, and which was repulsed with terrific slaughter, without having accomplished anything, comes forward and asks the calm judgment of their fellow countrymen upon the facts as they transpired. The survivors of that fearful and needless slaughter have the reputation of being driven from the field, whilst from the blood of the slain incense is exalted to glorify an officer, who, in the language of the address, “neither led, nor followed in that assault.”

We have had before now, and from sources which left no room to doubt its truth, a narration of the events of the battle similar to that no made public. We have heard these same facts from parties, who were not interested in the unsuccessful assault, beyond the concern which was felt by soldiers and officers of different corps for brethren in arms. And we have no doubt that public opinion will settle down in the conviction that the 2nd Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers did all that men could do under the circumstances, and that the assault miscarried solely because they were commanded to do an impossible thing by an officer who enjoys the exclusive credit of having every order a regiment from that gallant State to make a charge which necessarily resulted in a repulse. The fact that this regiment immediately rallied for another assault, and was ready to repeat an attack over ground upon which in three minutes time, one-fourth of its members was shot down, is an evidence of courage of strongest signification. These brave men were prepared to sacrifice themselves for the honor of their State and the United States, and they will no be the less cherished by their fellow citizens for that, the most devoted chivalry, when misled, would only achieve an honorable martyrdom.

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p1c4, To the Public

Certain impressions which are abroad with the public in reference to the operations of the brigade of Gen. Pillow, at the battle of Cerro Gordo, seem to require of the undersigned officers of the 2nd Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, a simple statement of facts. It will be seen that the statement differs materially from the accounts which have heretofore reached the public ear, and that the idea it conveys to the military talents of Gen. Pillow is by no means complimentary to that officer. But the undersigned utterly disclaim any other motive in making this publication than such as arises from a desire to do justice to others and to have justice for themselves. They are unwilling to accord to the uncharitable the privilege of yielding to the brave men they commanded only that questionable sort of reputation which often attaches to men who have been engaged in an unsuccessful enterprise, unless it be shown that impossibilities were required of them.

On the evening of the 17th April late Gen. Scott promulgated to the army his orders for the action on the ensuing day. To General Twigg’s division, with Shield’s brigade, was assigned the duty of carrying the height of Cerro Gordo, of turning the enemy’s left wing and securing the Jalapa road, in his rear, to intercept his retreat: while Gen. Pillow was to make “along the route he had carefully reconnoitered, and stand ready, as soon as he heard the report of small arms of our right, or sooner if circumstances should favor him, to pierce the enemy’s line of batteries—the nearer the river the better, as he may select.”

Gen. Pillow’s plan of attack was arranged by himself, as follows; The command of Col. Haskell, supported by Col. Roberts, 2nd Pennsylvania Volunteers, was to assault No. @, the centre fieldwork on the enemy’s right; while at the same moment No. 1 on the extreme right of the enemy’s line, was to be attacked by Col. Wynkoop, 1st Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, supported by Col. Campbell, of the 1st Tennesseans.

The right of the enemy extended from the left of the Jalapa road to the gorge in the mountains through which the river flows. Along this line the enemy had established himself on three different heights, divided from each other by almost impassable ravines. Each of these three heights were strengthened by admirably constructed fieldworks, known to our engineers as No. 1, 2, and 3. These works were manned by upwards of 3000 men, 1500 of whom occupied the central field work.

There can be no doubt but that Gen. Santa Anna, relying on the great natural strength of Cerro Gordo, and the apparent impassability of the ground on his left, had not taught himself to believe that Gen. Scott should endeavor to turn his position there, but that he had strengthened his right under the impression that it was to be the great point of attack.

On the morning of the 18th the brigade of Gen. Pillow was moved by him from the camp in the following order—Col. Wynkoop in front, followed by Col. Haskell, behind whom came Col. Campbell, while Col. Roberts brought up the rear. Diverging from the Jalapa road to the left, nearest the fieldworks, the regiments moving in the same order, each by the right flank, entered a narrow path leading to a point near the centre of the enemy’s line of works. In this order the brigade was moved to the scene of action. Continuing along the path, the right of Col. Wynkoop’s regiment had reached a point of rising ground about 350 yards from the enemy when Gen. Pillow, fearful that the enemy had either discovered him or would do it, suddenly withdrew Col. Wynkoop by the left flank, filing him by the left flank square off to the left from the path, and directed him to cross the ravine which was immediately on the left of the path, and form his line of battle parallel with the enemy’s works, undercover of the hill and chaparral, and hold himself in readiness to assault No. 1.

While Col. Wynkoop was executing this order as rapidly as the ruggedness of the ground would allow him, the general commenced the work of placing the command of Col. Haskell in position. This he did by directing Col. Haskell to rest his right on the right of the path, extending his left square off the left so as to form his line of battle parallel with the centre fieldwork of the enemy. By this maneuver it will be perceived that the ranks of Col. Haskell’s command were reversed, the front rank becoming the rear and the right of the... while slaves furnish a practical satire upon their boated love of freedom; while their recent battles in India and China, to go correspondent with their professions, they might be justly cited as models for the imitation of all other people. But alas, their corruption, How charmingly British writers discourse on the loveliness of universal freedom and philanthropy! If their practice were at garrison, and the city of Vera Cruz with a redundancy of helpless population, he deliberately made his election to war upon women and

The London Spectator breaks out in this strain of bitter invective: “The Americans continue their triumphant progress, but without strength and preparation for defense.

One inquiry and we drop this painful subject: Why did Gen. Pillow assail No. 2 at all, and why did he do it with so small a force, and before he was ready? It cannot be said that Gen. Scott’s order directed him to do it. This is the language of that order: “Gen. Pillow’s brigade will march at 6 o’clock tomorrow morning along the route he has carefully reconnoitered,” and stand ready as soon as he hears the report of arms on our right—or sooner, if circumstances should favor him, to pierce the enemy’s line of batteries—the nearer the brigade will march at 6 o’clock tomorrow morning along the route he has carefully reconnoitered, and stand ready as soon as he hears

We have performed an unpleasant task. We are sorry that we had it to do; but justice to ourselves, to the great fame of the States represented by the command of Col. Haskell on that field, and to the memory of the dead who fell there, require that we should tell “the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.”

Here two inquiries naturally present themselves: Where was Col. Wynkoop that he was not assaulting No.?–Where was Col. Roberts that he was not supporting Col. Haskell? Col. Wynkoop, speaking for himself answers the first enquiry. He declares that he was ordered not to advance from his position until ordered to do so by Gen. Pillow, either through one of his aids or by a concerted signal. He states that he received no order, heard of saw no signal. If he had assailed No. 1 it would have been better for us. Then the guns there, instead of annoying our rank, would have been directed at him. No. 1 was in fact the real point of attack. If the whole brigade had assailed that work, it would have been easily carried. Then we could have turned his own guns on the enemy, and attacking him in reverse, have driven him from the field. This was really what Gen. Scott desired Gen. Pillow to do, if circumstances favored him, with a proper opportunity "to pierce the enemy’s line of batteries."

The second inquiry is answered by the orer in which the regiments were moved too the scene of action. Gen. Pillow had actually placed
Col. Haskell between Col. Wynkoop and Col. Campbell, who was to support Haskell! Moving a the regiments did by a flank toisomely along a narrow defile, often in single file, it will be readily perceived what a great distance there was between the assaulting and the supporting regiment. In fact when the command of Col. Haskell returned to the spot from whence it commenced the assault, Col.
Campbell’s regiment was in the act of filing past that point for the purpose of gaining its position in the rear of Col. Wynkoop, while Col. Roberts was still in rear of Col. Campbell, and of course had not reached that point.

It is generally believed that Gen. Pillow led the assault on No. 2. The General neither led nor followed in that assault. So far as we are advised, he did not advance any nearer to the enemy’s line that the point from whence the assault commenced. We do not make this statement because we deny to Gen. Pillow personal courage or gallant bearing in action—we are willing to yield him both: we simply correct the error.

One inquiry and we drop this painful subject: Why did Gen. Pillow assail No. 2 at all, and why did he do it with so small a force, and before he was ready? It cannot be said that Gen. Scott’s order directed him to do it. This is the language of that order: “Gen. Pillow’s brigade will march at 6 o’clock tomorrow morning along the route he has carefully reconnoitered, and stand ready as soon as he hears
the report of arms on our right—or sooner, if circumstances should favor him, to pierce the enemy’s line of batteries—the nearer the rider the better—as he may select.” The italicizing is our own. Gen. Pillow preferred to have “carefully reconnoitered” this line of batteries, and frequently spoke of his ability to carry them and of the fact that he was satisfied from his

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p2c1, British Opinions

The leading English Journals, without manifesting any sympathy for the Mexicans, whom they bitterly reproach for effeminacy and cowardice, speak, nevertheless, very harshly of our own proceedings in that county.

The London Morning Chronicle, after expressing its surprise at the fall of the Castle of San Juan, which, well victualled, and in ordinary hands, it says, should have been for months impregnable, adds: “We can scarcely lament over the calamities of Mexico; but still less can we rejoice in the success of the Unites States.”

The London Spectator breaks out in this strain of bitter invective: “The Americans continue their triumphant progress, but without glory. It appears to be fairly inferred from the despatches of Gen. Scott, that, having before him the fortress of San Juan d’Ulloa with a garrison, and the city of Vera Cruz with a redundancy of helpless population, he deliberately made his election to war upon women and children! Crimes like that can never be committed with impunity. The race that commits them bears within itself the curse of internal corruption,” How charmingly British writers discourse on the loveliness of universal freedom and philanthropy! If their practice were at all correspondent with their professions, they might be justly cited as models for the imitation of all other people. But alas, their wretched while slaves furnish a practical satire upon their boated love of freedom; while their recent battles in India and China, to go
June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p2c2, Peace or War

Several of the Washington letter–writers continue to repeat their prognostications of a speedy peace. Upon what facts they base these anticipations, however, we confess we are at a loss to conceive. Nothing that we have seen from the seat of war, justifies such an expectation. What may be the consequences of the next battle, which all seem to be apprehensive of, between General Scott and Santa Anna, between Puebla and the city of Mexico, we cannot foresee. Another victory may incline the people of that country to submit to such terms as may be dictated, though reasoning a priority, we have no right absolutely so to conclude. At present, we coincide with the generally well–informed Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce, who writes, under date of, June 3rd, the following interesting letter:

Washington, June 3rd

Mr. Black, late consul in Mexico, has arrived here; also Major Bohlen, the later with despatches. I do not learn that the despatches embrace any thing of importance unknown to the public.

But I do learn that information has been received here from the most intelligent sources in our army, all of which tends to convince men high in office here that we are not on the eve of peace with Mexico. So far as official facts go, there is nothing in them to warrant the belief that the Mexicans will make peace. So far as the inferences of individuals go, they are uniformly and strongly adverse to all hope of peace. Some of our most intelligent men in Mexico state that the question of peace or war is to be decided by the Mexican clergy, and that they are all practically hostile to peace.

One letter from Jalapa, which has been shown to me, states that Gen. Scott is in a state of extreme anxiety as his condition, in respect to the prospect of keeping up his supplies, and of obtaining, in time, adequate reinforcements. This letter does not confirm the impression that Gen. Scott is so willing, as has been stated, to cut off his communications, and throw himself, with a small force, upon his own resources, as did his type, the first conqueror of Mexico, Cortez—when he burnt his ships. The same letter, however, states that the citizens of the Mexican capital have determined that their property shall not be hazarded by a defense; but that the plains and passes will be defended.
June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p2c2, General Taylor

The New Orleans Bulletin has been authorized to state—we presume by Gen. Taylor himself—that the General never used the expression, which has obtained such general currency through the public press, that, "if there had been only regulars in the battle of Buena Vista, he would probably have lost the day, as the Mississippi volunteers were whipped three times without knowing it." This General Taylor considers is doing great injustice to the regular army.

The letter under which we make the above statement adds the Bulletin continues; "So far from entertaining such a sentiment, the General lamented nothing more strongly than his entire want of regular infantry, as a brigade or even a strong battalion would have enabled him to carry the enemy's artillery, and to have entirely destroyed his army.

The Bulletin is farther authorized to deny the report, that the officers next in rank to Gen. Taylor were opposed to giving battle, which is entirely untrue, and is calculated to injure those officers if allowed to circulate uncontradicted.

[BJM]

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p2c3, Likeness of Rough and Ready

We have been presented with a finely executed Portrait of Gen. Taylor, engraved by A. Huffy from an original portrait, taken at Camargo, by Capt. Eaton, one of his aids.

The fidelity of the likeness is attested by Com. Conner and other officers both of the Army and Navy; and purchasers may feel assured therefore that they will have a faithful delineation of the features of the old hero.

The portrait is for sale by Messrs. Yockney & Drenan, the latter of whom was with Gen. Taylor at Monterey.

[BJM]

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p3c1, Later from Santa Fe

The St. Louis Republican, of the 28th ultimo, contains later intelligence from Santa Fe. The Republican says: "About a dozen of volunteers, discharged from service in Col. Price's regiment at Santa Fe, on account of ill-health, arrived in the city yesterday on the John J. Hardin. They left Santa Fe in detached parties—the latest on the 21st of April, and reached Independence on Sunday last. They brought a mail with them; but as I was deposited in the Post Office at Independence, our letters have not yet reached us.

We learn, generally, from these volunteers that every ruling was in a tranquil state when they left Santa Fe. The natives of the country were deprived of the means of doing mischief, even if they were so disposed, having no arms upon which they could rely and no ammunition. The courts for the trails of the rebels had closed both at Taos, and Santa Fe. And the sanguinary executions, which had taken place under the adjudication, were at an end. The old man at Santa Fe, under sentence of death for the part which he had played in the drama of rebellion, was waiting the decision of the President of the United States in his case—a representation of all the facts, as contained in papers which passed through this place some weeks since.

Col. Price was in command at Santa Fe, which has provided the graveyard for many young and gallant men. Our informant states, that nearly four hundred persons were buried there; and I the company commanded by Capt. Horine, of St. Genevieve, eleven deaths had taken place. Thirteen others were discharged from the same company, on account of ill health. One hundred had been discharged from Col. Price's regiment, on the same account.

No intelligence of a late date had been received from Chihuahua—nothing so late as we have by the Mexican papers. The extra battalion, under the command of Major Willock, and two companies commanded by Captains Murphy and Angney, were all stationed at Texas.

In coming in, these parties met great numbers of Indians, whose principal object seemed to be the stealing of mules and horses. On the 12th inst. they were attacked at Pawnee Fork, by about one hundred Dumanche and Arrapahoe Indians, and in the fight one Indian, the leader of the bank, was killed, and several wounded—one or two of the Americans were slightly wounded. The Indians succeeded in driving off one hundred and five head of horses and mules, principally the property of a party of Mexican trades, travelling in company. The party, on their arrival at Independence, numbering sixty-five men, with eighteen wagons, and 865,000 in specie, belonging to Mexican traders.

The winter at Santa Fe had been excessively severe, and of great duration. A man by the name of Hicks was killed at a fandango in Santa Fe, shortly before the last of the company left.

Of the number of volunteers at Santa Fe, very few will enroll themselves for a new term of service.

The St. Louis New Era, of the 28th ult says: A party of Mexican traders arrived this morning from Santa Fe, bringing with them 865,000 in specie. They contemplate going back to purchase goods. Another party are on their way in, and bring with them also a large amount June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p4c1, War's Ravages

The New Orleans Delta draws a vivid contrast between the appearance of the Tennessee Regiments of Volunteers, as it passed through that city, twelve months ago, on its way to the scene of war, 900 strong, most of the men in the vigor of youthful manhood, and full of ambition and hope, and the spectacle it presented, a few days since on its return from the camp, reduced in number to 350—two thirds nearly of that gallant band having fallen victims to disease and to the sword. And of the comparatively few who have survived the disasters of a twelve month's campaign, how many will return to their homes decrepit from wounds or wasting away under incurable maladies? We hear much of the "glory" of the battle-field, but how rarely do we look at the reverse side of the medal, to see at what a costly sacrifice of life and health and comfort the blood-stained laurels that encircle the brows of the survivors have been won.

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p4c3, From the Army of General Taylor

The schr Sea, Capt. Flanders, arrived yesterday from the Brazos, whence she sailed on the 20th inst. Though no later from that port, she brought a mail through from Gen. Taylor's headquarter4s at Monterey. Among her passengers were Capt. J. M. Hill, of the Quartermaster's Department, and Dr. J. W. Russell, U. S. A.

There is almost no news from that quarter, but as little was expected, we were not disappointed. There has been no confirmation received of the rumored defeat of Col. Doniphan; we are therefore more than ever persuaded that there was no good foundation for the original report. When he learns at Chihuahua that the insurrection in New Mexico has been effectually put down, and the guilt of those concerned in its expiated on the gallows, he will probably resume his original purpose of joining Gen. Wool near Saltillo. This is but conjecture.

We have a copy of the American Pioneer of the 6th inst. It is published, it will be remembered at Monterey. From it we learn that the Kentucky Cavalry was to proceed homeward in a few days.

Maj. Chevallie had gone down to Cadereyte with a part of the Rangers to procure corn. The Pioneer says Carvajal was still lurking about that town at the head of a hundred men, robbing on the road and selling his plunder at a store he has in the vicinity. This lucrative business the Texans are very likely to break up.

The house of a Mr. Samuel Still, in Monterey, was burglariously entered and robbed of a large amount of money on the 3rd inst. while he was off at a fandango. We see no other local news in the Pioneer.

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p4c4, From Santa Fe

– The St. Louis Era of the 26th May says–

Messrs. Hartz and Steinbury, members of Capt. Fischer's company of artillery, now serving in Santa Fe, arrived this morning direct from the above place, which they left on the 12th of April. Everything was quiet up to the time of their leaving. We have no news by this arrival, nothing having transpired with our army since our last advices worthy of notice. Mr. Hartz represents the health of our forced in Santa Fe as being very bad, and many deaths occurred of late. The volunteers seem to be quite anxious to return home, and of the eight hundred men now with Col. Price, we are informed that not one hundred will re-enlist.

June 8, 1847, RWv24i46p4c5, News from the Steamer Palmetto

Jalapa, Mexico, May 19, 1847

There are occasional deaths among our wounded men, but the most of those injured at Cerro Gordo are doing well. Speaking of the wounded men, I will relate one little incident. When Gen. Shields was brought out from the spot where he was wounded, to a place where several others had already been taken, I happened to be present. After the wound of the gallant general had been dressed, the wants of the others—perhaps there some ten or fifteen of them—were attended to. Among them was one stout Illinois man, named Ford, the half of whose head at least appeared to have been carried away by a heavy cannon ball. One of our best surgeons, Dr. Wright went up to the poor fellow when his turn came, and to my astonishment commenced clipping the shattered portions of his face, jaw and ear which still hung to him and afterwards dressed the wound as well as circumstances wold admit. I say wound; it was worse than a wound, and a description of it would be too horrible. The battle was now over, and every moment they were bringing in some
Two or three days since, when nearly a month had passed away, I met Dr. Wright here in the streets of Jalapa, and asked him how long the man I question lived. If I was ever astonished in my life, it was when he told me that he was still alive, and what was more, that he was well and hearty! A portion of his face, his jaws on one side, and his ear are gone, but the man will soon be strong enough to shoulder his musket again, and is said to be more anxious than ever to have another turn with the Mexicans.

Four men belonging to the army are to undergo most severe punishment this afternoon: they are to receive thirty nine lashes each in the Plazs, are to have their heads shaved, and after the word “robber” is pasted on each of their backs they are to be drummed out of camp. This thing of publicly whipping a man is most degrading; but their crime was the premeditated robbery of the house of a Mexican, and under circumstances deserving of the most severe punishment. Three of them belonged to the 4th Artillery and one to the 2nd Pennsylvania regiment. Yours, G. W. K.

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p1c1, Colonel Harney

Colonel Harney, of the 6th Infantry, a gallant officer, who has fought in every battle, since the Mexican campaign opened, except that of Cerro Gordo, in a letter to the New York Spirit of the Times, gives a description of the personal appearance and qualities of the dashing and intrepid Harney, which we are satisfied our readers will be gratified to see. He says:

“Sandy hair, very light complexion, a frank, generous expression of countenance, form perfect in symmetry, without one particle of superfluous flesh, fit “to run for a man’s life,” in the prime of manhood, with a mild but determinate blue eye, and you have him standing before you. Mount him on his noble charger, excite that blue eye until it almost scintillates, and give animation to that form until it appears to expand, and you have one of the most gallant, dashing cavalry officers in any service. He is a man of an iron will, and if necessary of desperate courage. As a partisan officer he is conspicuous. I deem him the best in the service. Like all men of such temperament, he is a warm devoted friend and a bitter enemy. Think of his towering form carrying his Brigade to the storming of that terrible height. What a picture for an artist! Harney with arm outstretched and sword drawn, pointing to the height, with his gallant Brigade regardless of all obstacles, rushing into the enemy’s breast works! All accounts represent him as conspicuous, and that the clear shrill tones of his voice, calm almost to frigidity, could be distinctly heard all the way up the mountain side.”

We copied, a few days ago, a brief extract from a long article of the London Times, commenting, with its wonted asperity, upon the attitude of the United States in relation to Mexico, and upon certain incidents connected with the prosecution of the war and we took occasion to intimate, I order to prevent misconception, that while we conceived some of his remarks to be forcible and true, others we believed altogether unjust. The Enquirer professes to be surprised that an American paper should endorse any portion of such bitter vituperation upon our own country, accompanied by the expression of a “wish” that we “had been more explicit as to what portion” of this article we commended for its truth and force. We have no objection to gratify it now, but before we do so, we beg to cite, as somewhat of a coincidence, the fact, that the Norfolk Herald inserted the entire article from the London Times, the most vituperative part of which we omitted, accompanied by the remark that, it mingles strong prejudices, ill feeling and error with much truth and serious reflection.”

The conflict with Mexico, if it be, as we believe it is, unnecessary, because all the legitimate and proper objects sought to be effected by it might have been accomplished, with less money, and without the loss of life and other serious evils that result from the war, is, as the London Times remarks, “the opprobrium of the age we live in”—a remark true and forcible, in regard to all wars waged unnecessarily and with a view to conquest, whether on this or the other side of the Atlantic—but especially by this country, because, as the Times proceeds to say, truly and forcibly, we profess “to have planted our institutions on a higher basis than the loss of bloodshed and the aggrandizement which have so often desolated the elder Continent.” And the remark is both true and forcible, as the introduction of the Wilmot Proviso, in advance of its termination, abundantly proves, that “every hour of success in this fatal war will be expiated by years of trouble and embarrassment” to the people of the United States. No—less so is the declaration that although the “revenue of years” has been expended in its prosecution, “there is no reasonable prospect of terminating the war by a sound or stable peace;” and by the farther remark that our conquests, if they are to be permanently annexed to the Union, will give us a population which we “can neither govern nor abandon”—and the result is more than probably, that whatever may be the basis upon which a hollow truce may be patched up, between the two countries, growing out of the inability of the Mexicans now to fight us any longer, we shall be hereafter “continually entangled in the anarchy of the sister Republic”—for as the Times both truly and forcibly observes, “A foreign dependency, incapable of self-government, yet detesting its Northern rulers, will, under one form or another, be connected with the Union; for, whatever form of government it may be possible to re-establish in Mexico, will only exist in servile fear of Anglo–American ascendency.” These are the remarks of the Times in which we perceive much both of truth and force. As for the vituperative portions of its article, we have only to say that we are as little the habit of endorsing such things as our neighbors, and not a whit more backwards, on all suitable occasions, in repelling them.
June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p1c2, Mexican Territory

We are glad to see such articles as the following in the columns of a leading Locofoco paper, and especially of a Southern journal. When it is gravely contended that we cannot honorably make peace with Mexico without requiring her to cede a large portion of her territory, we ought to be at least satisfied that the coveted acquisition is of sufficient value to justify us in encountering the perils to our national tranquility and to the perpetuity of our Union, to which, it is apparent, its attempted annexation must expose us. But, for the possession of such a country as is describe below by an evidently intelligent correspondent of the Mississipian, who would think of hazarding the peace and the perpetuity of the Union? Indemnity! How can a country so barren and sterile—a country fit only for Mexicans to live in—indemnify us, in any proper sense of the word, for the outrages of which we complain, and for the expenses of the war which we are sometimes told has been undertaken to avenge and redress them?

It is our solemn conviction, that, independently of the agitating controversy upon the slavery question, to which its attempted annexation to the Union must of necessity give rise, its acquisition would be an evil of no little magnitude, especially if we are to take with it the wretched population which nature seems to have adapted to the soil they occupy; for, if they are too big expelled, what need have we for the uninhabited desert which it must in that event become? It were wiser, if the region described below were already ours to pay the Mexicans millions of dollars to take it back, rather than to force or purchase from them a title to the worse than worthless soil, the imaginary wealth and fertility of which, it is to be feared, have tempted our Rulers to hazard a war for its conquest.

But let us see what terms the correspondent of the Mississipian speaks of that portion of the Mexican paradise, which, lying alongside of Texas, must necessarily form a portion of our new territory, if we acquire any in the valley of the Rio Grande. He writes:

“...The country between Camargo and Monterey is a miserable desert waste, producing nothing but stunted thorny shrubs and vast beds of cactus in all varieties. The soil is absolutely worthless. No water is to be found, except in the single stream—the Sand Juan—which winds its way from the mountains unaided by brook or rivulet in its whole course from this point to its confluence with the Rio Grande del Norte. I pronounce the whole of the two States I have named, as utterly worthless, for not withstanding there are points from 6 to 20 miles apart, at which you will find a Mexican village or rancho, yet such is the climate of the country, and so incomparably vast is the desert compared to the few fertile spots, that no value is to be attached to the latter. I believe I utter the opinion of every well-informed man in the army when I say, that the whole of the Northern Mexican provinces west of the Californias, are not worth governing—not will they ever be to the Anglo-Saxon race. The politicians at home, who have been disputing about the annexation of slave States, about to be carved out of this portion of the conquered Mexican territory, may as well save their breath, or expend it on some other subject. The time never will be when an African slave population can subsist in any part of this country. The miserable Mexican serfs, who live without meat and almost without bread—feeding upon the dust, like the reptiles to which they seem nearer akin than the human species—can alone inhabit such a country.”

[BJM]

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p1c3, The Mexican Pirates

The Princeton to be sent to the Mediterranean!—The President has issued orders directing the steamship of war “Princeton” to be got ready for sea to proceed to the Mediterranean, in quest of the Mexican privateer “Unico,” and any other vessels that may be insulting our flag there. The Princeton is to be made ready to sail on or about the 15th of the present month.

[BJM]

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p1c4, Further from Mexico

We mentioned earlier the activity of our squadron union the Pacific coast of Mexico. We now insert a letter which we find in a paper of the 13th inst. It is dated.

San Blas, April 30, 1847.

At 7 o’clock this morning there arrived at this port in two days from Maxatlan, a boat dispatched by a commercial house, with the single object of advising the officers of two small vessels, which were about to sail from Maxatlan with provisions, that they should not go to sea. But at once place their vessels in safety by them or running them in into some unfrequented creek.

The occasion for the despatch of these instructions by the parties interested is, that the 25th inst two of the enemies vessels of war presented themselves Maxatlan, establishing a new blockade which had been interrupted by the departure of the cruisers. From the vessels which had arrived information was obtained that by the 29th eight other vessels would reach there with sufficient force to occupy the town by force of amiss, and then the town of San Blas. A like lamentable fate was preparing for Acapulco, whither a large naval force had already sailed from California.

I communicate this information with the vie that it may be laid before his Excellency, and Gen Bustamente, that he may take such measures as he may deem fitting for the critical circumstances in which our unhappy country is placed.

J. NERVO

To the administrator of the Customs at Tepic.
In the Iris, a Spanish paper published in Mexico. It was announced on the 7th ult, that a convention has been concluded by the Anays, It now opposes him. It has even compelled, by its influence, the recent change of Ministers.

They are threatened with official and popular displeasure.

Many, too, of the clergy made not acknowledgement of or reply to the circular of the Government calling upon them for liberal editors. Some bishoprics are highly commended for their liberality, while others are as strongly condemned as niggardly in their appropriations. The contributors of the clergy of the country by no means correspond to the demands and expectations of the government or the Spanish in Mexico, but the sons of those who were born in the Republic. The Republicano takes the alarm at this, and demands an explanation from the official organ. Subsequently we do not find the subject mentioned. The Republicano takes fire at every indication of European influence in the affairs of the country.

The proclamation of Gen Scott to the Mexican nation was produced in the Mexican Congress on the 14th of May. From the statement of the Minister, it would seem to have been found among some intercepted papers. The Republicano trests the document with little ceremony, and without attempting to reply to its reasoning’s, denounces it as impertinent and disrespectful. The Government has conceived suspicion that the document was concocted by some Mexican acting in conjunction with Scott, and "the fury of the nation and the severity of the law" are held up in terrorism against all who thus connive with the enemy.

The contributors of the clergy of the country by no means correspond to the demands and expectations of the government or the liberal editors. Some bishoprics are highly commended for their liberality, while others are as strongly condemned as niggardly in their appropriations. Many, too, of the clergy made not acknowledgement of or reply to the circular of the Government calling upon them for aid. They are threatened with official and popular displeasure.

The law suppressing the liberty of the press has been found futile. The press appears to us as bold as ever, and instead of supporting Anays, It now opposes him. It has even compelled, by its influence, the recent change of Ministers.

In the Iris, a Spanish paper published in Mexico. It was announced on the 7th ult, that a convention has been concluded by the Government with the Spanish Minister, by which it was agreed that the flag of her Catholic Majesty should protect not only naturalized
Spaniards in Mexico, but the sons of those who were born in the Republic, The Republicano takes the alarm at this, and demands an explanation from the official organ. Subsequently we do not find the subject mentioned. The Republicano takes fire at every indication of European influence in the affairs of the country.

We have before us the letter of Senior de la Rosa accepting a place in the Ministry. The only notable passage in it is a follows: " I am honored in taking part in the labors of a Cabinet which I am sure will devote all its energies to save the independence and nationality of the country, sustaining the war at every cost, until a peace honorable and useful for Mexico may be possible."

Another candidate for the presidency we perceive is Melchor Ocampo. He is now, we believe, Governor of the State of Michigan. He is a friend of the President substrate, Ansay and a strenuous advocate of the war. We find a long letter in the papers advocating his views. He called upon the people to join the guerrillas, and to abandon the large cities and to carry off their property to the mountains.
Souled Mexico content to make peace with the enemy who will fight, he says against the inhabitants of that State as well as foreign foe.
Such is his aversion to peace that were the country to consent to it—even were his own Michocan to do it—he declares he will rather expatriate himself than yield to it and live in a dishonored country.

We have no belief nor expectation of a treaty whilst Santa Anna remains in power. He dares not make peace, at least, on such terms as our government will expect and ask for. His military misfortunes, and his supposed understanding with Mr. Polk, whether true or false, render him unable to negotiate. Every thing he might say or do, towards such a result, would be rewarded with suspicion., if not with actual denunciation. Mr. Polk's official announcements, respecting him, have spread suspicion far and wide among his countrymen, and the impression, now, cannot be done away with.

The election of Herrera would not only indicate a desire of peace, but the mere choice of him, under present circumstances, would strengthen his hands towards making it. The selection would induce many influential parties, openly to avow specific views, but not who dare not to do so. And if the peace party once obtain sufficient confidence and power to publicly declare and promulgate their views, converts will flock rapidly around them.

The proclamation of Gen Scott to the Mexican nation was produced in the Mexican Congress on the 14th of May. From the statement of the Minister, it would seem to have been found among some intercepted papers. The Republicano trests the document with little ceremony, and without attempting to reply to its reasoning’s, denounces it as impertinent and disrespectful. The Government has conceived suspicion that the document was concocted by some Mexican acting in conjunction with Scott, and "the fury of the nation and the severity of the law" are held up in terrorism against all who thus connive with the enemy.

The contributors of the clergy of the country by no means correspond to the demands and expectations of the government or the liberal editors. Some bishoprics are highly commended for their liberality, while others are as strongly condemned as niggardly in their appropriations. Many, too, of the clergy made not acknowledgement of or reply to the circular of the Government calling upon them for aid. They are threatened with official and popular displeasure.

The law suppressing the liberty of the press has been found futile. The press appears to us as bold as ever, and instead of supporting Anays, It now opposes him. It has even compelled, by its influence, the recent change of Ministers.

In the Iris, a Spanish paper published in Mexico. It was announced on the 7th ult, that a convention has been concluded by the Government with the Spanish Minister, by which it was agreed that the flag of her Catholic Majesty should protect not only naturalized
Spaniards in Mexico, but the sons of those who were born in the Republic, The Republicano takes the alarm at this, and demands an explanation from the official organ. Subsequently we do not find the subject mentioned. The Republicano takes fire at every indication of European influence in the affairs of the country.

We have before us the letter of Senior de la Rosa accepting a place in the Ministry. The only notable passage in it is a follows: " I am honored in taking part in the labors of a Cabinet which I am sure will devote all its energies to save the independence and nationality of the country, sustaining the war at every cost, until a peace honorable and useful for Mexico may be possible."

Another candidate for the presidency we perceive is Melchor Ocampo. He is now, we believe, Governor of the State of Michigan. He is a friend of the President substrate, Ansay and a strenuous advocate of the war. We find a long letter in the papers advocating his views. He called upon the people to join the guerrillas, and to abandon the large cities and to carry off their property to the mountains.
Souled Mexico content to make peace with the enemy who will fight, he says against the inhabitants of that State as well as foreign foe.
Such is his aversion to peace that were the country to consent to it—even were his own Michocan to do it—he declares he will rather expatriate himself than yield to it and live in a dishonored country.

We have no belief nor expectation of a treaty whilst Santa Anna remains in power. He dares not make peace, at least, on such terms as our government will expect and ask for. His military misfortunes, and his supposed understanding with Mr. Polk, whether true or false, render him unable to negotiate. Every thing he might say or do, towards such a result, would be rewarded with suspicion., if not with actual denunciation. Mr. Polk's official announcements, respecting him, have spread suspicion far and wide among his countrymen, and the impression, now, cannot be done away with.

The election of Herrera would not only indicate a desire of peace, but the mere choice of him, under present circumstances, would strengthen his hands towards making it. The selection would induce many influential parties, openly to avow specific views, but not who dare not to do so. And if the peace party once obtain sufficient confidence and power to publicly declare and promulgate their views, converts will flock rapidly around them.

Mr. Trist will also be on the spot, with the views and intentions of our Government, and he, or Gen, Scott, will, no doubt, have been fully authorized to act, should occasion offer.

We perceive by El Republicano, that the citizens were abandoning the capitol, and many of them had removed to Tolaca, a large town to the westward of the city of Mexico. The citizens of tolaca, El Republicano says, had demanded extravagant prices for their houses, under the expectation of a large emigration from the city: but such government had issued a decree, forbidding any such extortion.
June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p1c4, From the Brazos

The schooner "Sovereign" Capt Peterson, arrived last evening from Brazos Santiago, whence she sailed on the 28th ults. Although no faster than the James L Day she brings copies of the Matamoros Flag of the 22nd and the 26th ult, which we had not before seen. Lieut Mehaffy, of the 11th Infantry, and Dr. Chaloner, of the amry came passengers.

The news [of] yesterday of the arrival of Col. Doniphan at Parras was communicated to Gen Cushing by a letter from Monterrey. Col Doniphan was shortly expected down the river with his command.

Mr. Parish, bearer of dispatches to Gen Taylor, from Washington passed through Matamoras on the 25th ult, so his destination.

Gen Cushing had received orders to join Gen Taylor immediately at Monterrey. Although he has not yet recovered from his recent injury, he had determined to set off in a few days. The Massesuses regiment would go up with him. The Flag mentions that Capt Edward Webster, now in this city, had been appointed aid to Gen C.

Brig. Gen. Cavallader had ordered an election in the Massachusetts regiment, to supply the vacancy in the colonelcy made by the promotion of Gen Chishing. It was to have taken place on the 27th. But we have not heard the result.

Three men of this regiment recently deserted and attempted to reach the Brazos. They crossed the river above Matamoros, and had not gone far before a party of Camanches came across them and murdered them all. The Flag says that a few days proto this, as the Kentucky cavalry were on the march from Camargo to Reynosa, they arrested another deserter from the same regiment. On being interrogayted he replied that he was going to Monterrey, to take a boat to go back to Massachusetts, whether he’s insanity was real, or only feigned, the Flag had not been informed.

The body of a white man has recently been discovered about seven miles below Reynosa, shot through the breast. No clue has been discovered to the circumstances of the murder or the name of the victim.

The news from Monetery is no later than we have already given. The 1st Ohio Regiment was to leave there on the 19th, and the 1st Indiana Regiment on the 20th ult on their way home. The last train coming down met 1500 pack mules near Cerralvo, going up with supplies.

The Government has been erecting a large hospital at Poing Isabel. 186 feet by 68 encircled by a 12 feet gallery. It is situated on the most elevated spot in the town and according to the Flag, which gives a glowing account of it, will compare favorably with similar structures in the United States.

There was a copious shower of rain on the 25th at Matamoros, which is mentioned by the Flag as if it were an occurrence deserving of a thanksgiving. Between the 19th and 22nd ult the Rio Grande rose ten feet and fell as much. It was low at last account.

A company of Tennesee calveary, which has been at Matamoros for the last eight months, is about to return home.

The steamer Telegraph arrived at the Brazos on the 24th ult and left again immediately for Vera Cruz.

The Indian among the settlements on the Rio Grande and the frontiers of Texas are attracting attention. It was supposed that Col. Hays would devote a little time to them, if Gen Taylor could spare him. [ . . . rest of article illegible . . . ]

[BJM]

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p1c5, Texas

The Indians in this state are still troublesome. Form the papers received by the steamship Galveston, we learn the Camanches had visited Austin three nights in succession and had killed or captured eight or ten horses. The Indians were pursued several miles by the Rangers, under command of Lieuts. Smith and Chandler, but they were too fleet for their pursuers and escaped unharmed. The treaty with these Indians is looked upon as of no benefit and a cessation of their aggressions, it is said, can only be obtained by summary chastisement. Several companies or Rangers for frontier defense have been organized, and when they get on the frontier we may expect to hear of the marauders being properly dealt with.

The town of Independence, in Washington county, was lately visited by a violent thunder storm. The rain fell in torrents and the wind blew with such violence that fences were blown down, several houses were unroofed, and we regret to add, a child, the daughter of Dr, Robinson, had a limb fractured by the falling of a piece of timber.

In relation to the great poisoning case at the wedding party at Mr. Wilkinson's in Sabing county, the Houston Telegraph says: "Among the numerous reports that are in circulation, there is one ascribing it to the stupidity and carelessness of a shopkeeper residing in the neighborhood. It is said that this shopkeeper residing in the neighborhood. It is said that the shopkeeper sold arsenic for separates, and this poison was mixed in the cake that was served to the guests."
A new settlement has been commenced directly at the head of Towaccarro creek, by Col. Boyd. He is making arrangements to enact a saw and grist mill, and the population is increasing rapidly. Twelve months ago this part of the country was in the undisturbed possession of the savages.

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p2c1, Letter from Santa Anna

The subjoined official letter from Santa Anna to the Mexican Minister of War and Marine is translated for the Mobile Tribune from the El Republicano of the 16th May:

Army of Operations—Excellent Sir—the commandant of the flying revenue guard of tobacco of Orizaba, the Col. D. Juan N Caraveo, whom I left with his command near the National Road, between Perote and Nopalucan, to observe the movements of the enemy and to harass him when the opportunity might offer, has remitted to me the accompanying documents which were taken from the enemy’s mail which left Jalapa for Col. Worths camp.

Among them you will find General Scott’s proclamation to the Mexican Nation, which from its style appears to have been written originally in Spanish and not translated from the English.

This proclamation of Scott is written with the most refined hypocrisy and with the most infamous perfidy. It is the greatest insult yet offered to the Mexican people, whom it has attempted to lull to make the victim if the　　　ambition of that nation which is the enemy of our race, with another place it feels no embarrassment in proclaiming, by the press in official documents, that it carries on against us a war or conquest and that this war must be made at the cost of blood and treasure of this unfortunate country.

Your Excellency will note in one of the accompanying intercepted letters, that Scott, the Inspector General of the United States Army, considers the above proclamation well adapted to aid the views of the invaders.

You will observe that this letter harmonizes with others which have been lately published in this capitol, and which with reason have been regarded by all well disposed Mexicans as more prejudicial for the venom which they conceal than the loss of a battle.

But in the midst of the malevolence which Gen Scott shows he has against me, he does me too much honor when he says that they had been deceived as to my real intention, and that on account of this mistake his Government permitted me to pass to my country. Indeed, most Excellent Sir, the United States did deceive when they dreamed that I was capable of betraying my country, Before this should happen, I would prefer to be consumed by fire, and that my ashes should be scattered that not a single atom be left.

Would to God the Mexicans would open their eyes to discover the poison in the Golden chalice that the perfidious Scott proffers to them, and that the reply to his proclamation may be one shout of universal indignation against the invaders of our soil. Let a war be made against them without period, that when we may no longer be able, because providence may have decreased the subjugation of this unfortunate country, there may remain to our children or grandchildren, when the wrath of the Omnipotent shall have passed, the noble war of revenging the outrage committed by the republic of the United States on Mexico.

“God and Liberty”
Santa Anna

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p2c2, Conditions of Peace

The leading article in the Democratic Review for the present month is upon the state of the country and has especial reference of course to the war with Mexico. This article is chiefly worthy of attention on account of its developments in regard to the views and purposes of the Administration as received by the writer at the latest moment, and as he affirms, from a course entitled to satire confidence. Whether the fact be so or not, the writer manifestly intends that he shall be understood as speaking, if not “by authority,” certainly with a fell and accurate knowledge of the truth of every thing he asserts. If he correctly declines the policy and purposes of the Administration, we must confess that the terms upon which it is willing to make peace with Mexico, though not at all to our liking, are less harsh and exacting than, from intimations proceeding from other high sources, we had previously supposed, The writer, for example says:

“We believe, in the first place, that the administration is willing to make to Mexico every possible concession in point form, and to allow the defeated party in the war to prescribe its own rule of diplomatic etiquette in settling the preliminaries of peace. It has for this purpose clothed Gen Scott, the commander in chief of the American army, with power to treat with the authorities he may find in Mexico, and sent Mr. Trist, the second officer in the state department, down to aid and instruct him in carrying out the views of the President. Nay, should the Mexicans desire or consider it a special mark of attention, Mr. Buchanon the distinguished secretary of State, will himself go down and negotiate in the city of the Aztecs.

“As to the cessation of territory demanded of the Mexicans, the administration will not claim it as a forfeit, but offer to pay for it, so as to acquire it by purchase, We want a clear title to it; and the administration considers purchase the very best of all titles.
"The expense of the war we will not claim from the Mexicans, and the indemnity which she owes our citizens will be assumed by the government of the United States. We shall then claim no money of Mexico in any shape and are willing to accept land in payment of our just demands.

"As to the territory to be ceded or sold to us by Mexico, we are of opinion that it will not comprise more than upper California and New Mexico, and that our government will not insist, as a condition of peace, on the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; but rather make this a subject (illegible)

If it be true that the Administration is really disposed to conclude a peace with Mexico upon the terms above stated, what stronger evidence can be required that the war itself was unnecessary and ought to have been avoided? If Mr. Polk is willing to permit Mexico to prescribe her own rule of diplomatic etiquette, for example at this time, why was he so indignant at her refusal to permit him to prescribe that rule when he sent her, in the person or Mr. Slidell, an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, to negotiate upon all the subjects in a dispute between the tow countries instead of the Commissioners, to address the question of boundary, to whom alone she had agreed to receive? Had the Administration exhibited the conciliatory and complying spirit at that time which is said to be prepared to display now, there can scarcely be a reasonable doubt that Mr. Slidell would have been recognized, that the question of boundary would have been settled by mutual agreement, and that the adjustment of all other points in dispute would naturally have followed, without an interruption of the pacific relations.

But if the Administration is not only willing to disregard the ordinary rule of diplomatic etiquette in the renewal of negotiations, but to renounce likewise all idea of claiming any party of the Mexican territory in virtue of the right of conquest, preferring to ply for whatever lands it may acquire, so as to hold "by purchase", the very best of all titles" is it not still more clearly apparent that the war was wholly unnecessary? If , after having conquered all that portion of Mexico which we want , we have nevertheless still intend to buy it, what have we been fighting for? Why did we not purchase it in the first instance. Had Mexico been conciliated by the exhibition of friendly feelings towards her, after the annexation of Texas had been consummated, instead of bring farther exasperated, as she was by the claim set up to the valley of the Rio Grande, which had never been for an instant in possession of the Texans, but which was Senator Benton Demonstrated, had been in undisputed possession of the Mexico Spanish race from the first settlement of the country until its inhabitants were driven from chief houses by the advance of Gen Taylors army, it cannot be reasonably doubted that, if she is willing to sell it now she would have been disposed, for a fair equivalent, to cede it to us then. Why , then conquer it first, in order to buy it afterwards? But suppose that she had refused to relinquish the valley of the Rio Grande for any pecuniary consideration which our Government might have been willing to offer her, and had insisted that we should confine ourselves to the limits of the Department of Texas as defined by the laws of Mexico, to which Texas prior to her successful revolution, belonged suppose she had told she could not consent to our crossing the Neues, which Mr. Benton demonstrates was the true boundary of Texas, and which both Mr. Domelson, our minister to Texas and Mr. Polk emphatically recognized as the western frontier of that state—or suppose she had been willing to permit us to extend the frontier of Texas to those stupendous deserts between the Neues and the Rio Grande, which Mr. Ingersoll affirms to be the natural boundary between the two republics, but no farther—What then? When was it claimed to be a just cause of war with a weaker neighbor, that she refuses either to cede or to sell a portion of her territory; the possession of which the stronger Power may deem necessary, either to roun off its frontier, or for nay other purpose? Such ethics are to be found in only one page of the history of the nineteenth century—and that has been well characterized as "The bloodiest picture in the Book of Time"

We refer to the partition of Poland, and the extinction of its national existence, by the unsurping triumvirate of Russia, Austria and Prussia.

But whatever may have been the ultimate determination of our Government on this subject, it is obvious that if, deeming a title by purchase better than a title by conquest, it now proposes to relinquish its claims as a conqueror, and go into the market as a buyer of that portion of the Mexican Territory, the possession of which it may deem desirable, sound policy as well as true wisdom should have induced it to exhaust every effort to effect its object by peaceable means before it unsheathed the sword. It would have been time enough to resort to force when the gold had been found inadequate to its accomplishment. The amount expended in the prosecution of the war, to say nothing of the lives that have been sacrificed, and of other evils scarecely less do be depreciated that have followed in the result, so far as territorial acquisition is concerned, but attended by irreparable mischief's to both countries, and leaving behind feelings of mutual bitterness and hate, the effects of which will endure as long as the tow races shall preserve the antagonistic features by which they are so strongly characterized.

After all, however, the Democratic Review may be really as unformed, or misinformed notwithstanding the ex cathedra tone in which it speaks, as are frequently those Washington letter –writers, who affect to be so thoroughly acquainted with the designs of that Administration, but who have been lately so decisively discredited by the Washington Union. The position of the Review as a recognized party organ, gives to what it says, however, more claim to credence, than is due generally to the disclosures of the correspondents of newspapers, most of whom are mere retailers of street rumors—the catchers up of the "unconsidered trifles" which may be always found floating in the atmosphere of Republican as well as of Royal Courts.

[BJM]

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p2c6, To Arms To Arms!

Young men who wish to serve their country can have an opportunity by calling at the Military Hall and enrolling their names in the Volunteer Company now being formed in this city. It is hoped that this company will be filled up immediately, as only a few men are wanted to enable us to go into quarters.

[BJM]
June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p4c4, Very Late from the City of Mexico

By the way of Tapamico we are placed in possession of a file of El Republicano from the city of Mexico down to and including the 19th of May—eleven days later than our previous advices.

The election of President for Mexico was to have taken place on the 15th of May. As the election was made by the Legislators from the different States, it is even yet quite too soon to know the result, which is likely to disappoint all expectations. In the State of Mexico, Angel Triss, the Governor of Chihushus, received the vote. Upon the first ballot Trias received 9 votes: Gen Alvarez, Gen Almonte, and Senor D Melchor Ocampo. Upon proceeding to elect between Trial and Alvarez, the former received 10 and the latter 9.

In the State of Queretaro there was a tie between Senor Almonte and Sewnor D.J. Joaquin Herrera. Lots were cast between the two and the chances favored Senor Herera, who thus secured the vote of that state. If we recollect aright this is the last President.

The state of Puebla gave its vote to Senor D Melchor Ocampo. The particulars of the voting are not given—Some time will elapse before we shall have the results of the election.

The Republicano of the 19th announces that Gen Santa Anna had left the command of the Army of the East to assume the duties of President of the Republic. He was to make his entry into the capital the evening of the 19th. He had issued a manifesto to the nation, but we regret to have no copy of it. It was published in the El Republicano of the 20th, which is a day later than we have received.

We have two letters from the valorous general, giving an account of his military conquests. The first is dated May 28th and in it he tells the Secretary of War that since his arrival at Orizava he had been organizing guerilla parties, both infantry and cavalry, in the vicinity of Orizava, of Cordova, and Vera Cruz; that he had collected the scattered remains of his Corro Gordo forces, improved the brigade from OsJaca, under Gen Leon; reinforced and remounted a cavalry force, which he has stationed at San Andres and lastly, fitted for service seven pieces of artillery, which are at Orzava and Cordova. The result of all these labors is, according to him, that guerilla parties are already at work between Japala and Vera Cruz. Three battalions, organized with 1470 men of those dispersed at Cerro Gordo; more than 200 horses collected a quantity of infantry equipments prepared; and finally 4500 men with seven pieces of artillery put in movement, who would enter Puebla on the 12th May.

He tells the Secretary that he had left in command in the Tierra Col Genobio; in the district of Cordova, D. Thomas Marili, who commended at Alvarado when Com Conner attacked it

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p4c5, From the Army of General Taylor

By the steamer James L. Day, Captain Wood, we have accounts from the Brazox to the 28th ult, and later mail from the army of Gen Taylor.

Col. Jeff Davis’s regiment of the 1st Mississippi Rifles and the 2nd Kentucky Infantry under the command of Major Fry; were at the Brazos on the 28th and to sail on the following day for this port. The Kentuckians have with them the remains of Col. McKee, Lieut. Col Clay, Capt Willis and Lieut. Powell of their regiment, and also those of Capt George Lincoln, all of whom fell gloriously at Buean Vista. Both regiments, Mississippi and Kentucky, were in fine healty.

In conversation with Lieut. Aken, of the 2nd Kentucky foot, we learn that a most deplorable duel occurred at China about the 21st ult., between two lieutenants in the Virginia regiment. The news was taken to Camargo by Mr Dowd, beef contractor at China, and was fully credited by all at Camargo. According to this report, the two lieutenants—one of whom named Mahan, and the name of the other not being recollected—fought with muskets loaded with ball and buckshot, and both parties were killed. Most sincerely do we hope that there may be some exaggeration in the statement but Lieut. Aken leaves little room for hope. He fully believes it and it was generally credited at Camargo.

June 11, 1847, RWv24i47p4c6, Later from Vera Cruz

The steamer James L day, Capt. Wood, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz via the Tampico and the Brazos. The Day left Vera Cruz on the 25th ult, and touched at Tampico on the 27th and Brazos on the 28th.

From Vera Cruz she brought over Midshipman Stewart, and eleven wounded privates from the hospitals of that city. From Tampico she
The steamer Fashion arrived at Vera Cruz on the 24th and the New Orleans on the 25th ult.

By this arrival we have no papers or letters from Vera Cruz or the army of Gen Scott. There had been no news received from Japala subsequent to the departure of the Palmetto. Such news as we have by this arrival from the city of Mexico and Santa Anna reaches us by way of Tampico and will be found in another column.

From the N. O. Delta, June 1.

Col Perry has returned to Saccrifios from his cruise during his absence, he touched at Laguna, Frontera, and other parts of the coast. At Laguna he raised the blockade, giving instructions to the officer in command to levy the new tariff on all imports, and a war tax of ten percent ad valerian on all exports.

He took possession of the fort at the mouth of the river Guasacualco, destroyed the guns of the enemy found there, raised the American flag on the fort, where it now floats and saluted it with a savvo of twenty one guns. He proceeded to a down, up the river some twenty miles of which he took peaceable possession, and where also with a national salute, he raised the American Flag. The alcedors of some neighboring village, while there, came in, offering him peaceful possession of their respective bailiwicks.

What may prove of importance to the Government and save it much trouble and expense, he succeeded in securing ad this place a map of chart of the line for the complicated canal across the isthmus of Tehauntepec, with accompanying topographical notes. He had it taken from the original. Drawn out for an English company, at whose instances the survey was made.

As soon as the vessels under Com; Perry taking in at Vera Cruz, the necessary coal, he means we understand to make a dash at Tabasco, where it is said the enemy is in force, numbering as many as 2000 of the regular army, waiting to give him resistance.

[BJM]

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p1c1, Affairs in Santa Fe

We adverted, in general terms, in an article of Federalism; in Saturdays Paper, to the unparalleled stretch of Executive Authority, since the present administration came into power, as evidenced both by the existence of hostilities between Mexico and the United States, without a previous declaration of war by either of them, and by many of the incidents that have occurred during its progress. That article had not been put to press before we saw, in the St Louis Republican, some very interesting letters from Santa Fe, furnishing at once a forcible elucidation of our remarks and striking commentary on the claim of the Locofoco party of the present day to be regarded as the successors of that school of politicians, which, contending for a strict and liberal construction of the Constitution, in all its provisions, exhibited a peculiar jealousy of the Executing department and an earnest desire to confine it rigidly within the limits of its chartered powers. We invite the particular attention of our readers to the facts stated by the writer, and to the reflections naturally suggested by them:

Santa Fe, April 22, 1847.

Gentlemen: The Mail, which arrived here a few days ago, brought us but few papers, but among them I observe that Gen, Kearny’s proceedings in annexing this country to the United States, continue to be discussed. It seems that Mr. Polk says that General Kearny went beyond his instructions. Not having seen the instructions, I cannot speak to the point; but it is certain that there is something wrong on the part of somebody, though I am still inclined to believe that the full extent to which his “Organic Law of the Territory of New Mexico” might be carried, was not forseen by the General. I am very sure that he did not anticipate trials and convictions for treason against the United States; though he should have gone the length of appointing a Marshall and U. S. District Attorney at all, seems a little incomprehensible. Mr Polk, I believe says he was only instructed to promise a Territorial Government but instead of that, has established one. Be this as it may, the whole proceeding, beyond the civil jurisdiction of the Territory itself—something of which was absolutely necessary—is not pretty generally condemned.

The “organic law” is very positive in its provisions—The first sentence is as follows: “The government of the United States of America ordains and establishes the following organic law for the Territory of said Government”

This was a bold position for the General to assume, unless he expected his acts to be sanctioned at once by the congress of the United States, which he probably did. For, when did Mr. Polk become “the government” so fully as to justify the following passage from the said organic law?

Article1—Sec. 1. The country heretofore known as New Mexico, shall be known hereafter as the Territory of New Mexico and the United States of America; and the temporary government of said territory shall be organized and administered in the manner hereinafter prescribed.

Now although this only speaks of a “temporary Government” not the body of the organic law provides for the appointment of a District Attorney of the United States, a Marshall, and the said attorney was actually appointed by Gen Kearney. Since then, we have had indictments for treason in a court here called a District Court of the United States, one of which indictments opened in these words; “Trinidad Barcelo, a citizen of the United States charging the said Barcelo with forgetting his “allegation to the United States”
Perhaps you will wonder how Mr Barcelo became your equal in citizenship, but you must ask Mr. Polk.

The "organic law" also provides for the election of a delegate to Congress in August 1847. Doubtless Gen Kearney supposed that his conquest would have been acted on by the congress of the Union before the period of election would arrive. Ad we believe here that such is not the case, we are curious to know whether the delegate, if elected, will be recognized; but many of us hope not.

The voters find their qualifications thus laid down in the organic law:

"All free male citizens of the Territory of New Mexico. Who then are, and for three months next preceding the election, shall have been residents of the county or district in which they shall appear to vote, shall be entitled to vote for a delegate to the Congress of the United States,"

Here is naturalization on a grand scale. But what a blessed collection of voters! Not one in five hundred of the will know any think of size, form, locality, arts, commerce, or interests generally of the United States. Such are our new fellow citizens. Very few, indeed can read or write, and the most intelligent have no clear or accurate ideas of our country.

Verily, "annexation" of such a horde of barbarians and slaves, is a novelty in our history. I say slaves, for a large proportion of the Mexicans population are actually slaves, though not in the same sense in which we use the term in the United States. Refer to Gregg’s Commerce of the Prairies for an accurate account of the kind of slavery, which prevails here, embracing many ignorant wretches whom we must hereafter hail as our fellow citizens. You cannot at a distance possibly appreciate the character of the people of New Mexico. A faithful picture would seem exaggeration. But I believe there is not American here who does not regard them in the same light. Even those who imagine that this province has resources to recommend it, entertain but a low opinion of the people.

We fear, however, that the province will remain part of the Union. I do not wish it because it can never be well peopled, unless by men born east of the great prairies and it is not such a country as to justify its settlement by industrious Americans. The present inhabitants, in that event, can only have the destiny of the Indian before them— to fade away. They cannot be made to assimilate to our. [ . . . Rest of article illegible . . . ]

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p1c2, Waste of Public Money

In one of its features, at lest, the Mexican war is likely to prove a second edition of that which was the opprobrium of Van Buren’s Administration—we refer to the protracted and costly contest with the Seminole Indians in Florida in which Uncle Sam’s pocket bled much more profusely than his veins, although blood enough in all conscience then flowed to satisfy even professed amateurs in the business of human slaughter.

The Vera Cruz correspondent of the New Orleans furnishes the following inklings of the recklessness with which public money is squandered in Mexico. When, after the restoration of peace, the bill shall be footed, we shall, we presume, have a second edition, "revised and improved" but we fear not” corrected” of the bills of expenditure in Florida, which amazed the nation by their enormity. That there is some ground for this apprehension, the reader will admit, when he reads the following extract from Vera Cruz letter to which we have referred:

" I fell that I can do my country no better service in my idle moments of garrison duty, than by calling the attention of the government the wanton and extraordinary waste of public money and property. It is a matter of comment wherever I go—everyone is talking about it—yet no one lifts up his voice to direct attention to it.—Since the surrender of Vera Cruz there has been anchored at this place, at Sacrificos, Lobos, and Anton Lixzardo, vessels varying in number from 50 to 80 in the government employ—all chartered by the day at prices varying from $40 to $100 per day. Some of them have been here three months, with stores—the original cost of which one month’s demurrage would pay for. You will see anchored which a pistol shot of each other, five and six vessels, with coal for the army, the quantity contained in the whole size not being sufficient to fill the hold of any one of them. The demurrage of not one of these vessels is less than $60 per day. It is not the duty of those who have charge of such matters here, to attend to these things? Could not the coal in the five vessels be transferred to the one and let the four be discharged? This Measures Editors is not an overdrawn picture. It would take more time than I can spare at this particular moment to give a faint idea of the immense waste, and I might add, barefaced plundering of the government property, as carried on here. The case of the coal vessels as given about is but the history of the coal in the five vessels be transferred to the one and let the four be discharged? This Measures Editors is not an overdrawn picture. It would take more time than I can spare at this particular moment to give a faint idea of the immense waste, and I might add, barefaced plundering of the government property, as carried on here. The case of the coal vessels as given about is but the history of the vast squandering of public money. I say squandering, for a large proportion of the Mexicans population are actually slaves, though not in the same sense in which we use the term in the United States. Refer to Gregg’s Commerce of the Prairies for an accurate account of the kind of slavery, which prevails here, embracing many ignorant wretches whom we must hereafter hail as our fellow citizens. You cannot at a distance possibly appreciate the character of the people of New Mexico. A faithful picture would seem exaggeration. But I believe there is not American here who does not regard them in the same light. Even those who imagine that this province has resources to recommend it, entertain but a low opinion of the people.

We fear, however, that the province will remain part of the Union. I do not wish it because it can never be well peopled, unless by men born east of the great prairies and it is not such a country as to justify its settlement by industrious Americans. The present inhabitants, in that event, can only have the destiny of the Indian before them— to fade away. They cannot be made to assimilate to our. [ . . . Rest of article illegible . . . ]

[BJM]
Intelligence up to May 3rd has been received here via Santa Fe.

On that day Col. Doniphan, Col. Mitchell and Major Clark, started on the route to Paretol with their entire command, except four companies left to guard the city.

The cause of Col. Doniphan's return to Chihuahua has been now definitely ascertained to have been a contemplated outbreak in that department.

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p2c1, The Mexican Tariff

The loud complaints of the injurious operation of the tariff of duties recently enacted by the Executive, by a glaring assumption of Legislative power, for the regulation of commerce in Mexican ports in possession of the American forces, have at length attracted the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the Union of Saturday night last appears an official notice from that Department, announcing several important modifications of that Executive Statute, to which, as to all other laws is affixed the approval of James K. Polk! The Secretary, it seems, enacts laws, and the President approves or vetoes them!—One advantage of the exercise of this power by the Executive rather than by Congress, is seen in the facility with which, if a system works badly, it may be amended, without the tedious and embarrassing process of legislation. An Executive edict, the work of a single mind, may correct on the instant any defects in the revenue system, while Congress might be engaged for weeks and months in a fruitless effort to remedy the evil! Who can tell but that the exemplification thus afforded of the advantages of Executive legislation, may lead to the transfer from Congress in that branch of the Government of the power to regulate our home tariff—if not by an amendment of the Constitution, by its unrebuked assumption. Indeed, we have yet to be informed whence the President and Secretary of the Treasury derive authority to make a tariff for Mexican ports in our possession, which will not justify them, in regulating the duties upon imports entered at the custom houses of New York and Boston. Essentially a Legislative power, its exercise by the Executive is not less a usurpation in the one case than it would be in the other. Doubtless, however, it can be shown to be in exact accordance with the Constitution, and in a strict conformity to the Resolutions of '98–'99!

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p2c3, General Taylor

The following is a copy of Gen. Taylor's letter acknowledging the reception of the resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Virginia at its late season:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,

Camp near Monterey, Mexico,
May 10th, 1847

Sir: Your communications of February 22nd transmitting a copy of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of Virginia on the 9th of that month, was delivered to me by Col. Hamtramck.

It is with deep sensibility that I receive this evidence of approbation from a State to which I am attached by many ties, and beg leave to return to the General Assembly for myself and in behalf of the troops of my command, our heartfelt thanks.

Allow me, Sir, to express to you, personally, my acknowledgments for the flattering terms in which you have communicated the resolutions of the General Assembly. I have the honor to be, Sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
Z. Taylor,

Hon. Williams Smith, Governor of Virginia, Richmond, Va

[BJM]

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p2c4, Later from Mexico

Arrival of the Steamship New Orleans

The Steamship New Orleans, Capt. Wright . . . [illegible] . . . from Vera Cruz, having left there on the . . . [illegible] . . . She touched on the 4th at the Brazos.

Gen. Shields is doing well, we are most happy to hear, and was shortly expected at Vera Cruz.
We regret to say that Maj. R. Hammond of Paymaster J. S. Army, died on board the New Orleans at sea on the 2nd inst. on his passage from Vera Cruz.

The following is a list of the passengers on the New Orleans:

Gen. Scott left Jalapa on the 23rd ult, for Puebla, at the head of nearly 6000 troops. Mr. Kendall’s letters have not yet come to hand, having been entrusted to private conveyance. We have, however, the following brief note from him:

PUEBLO, MEXICO, May 29, 1847

The division of Gen. Twiggs entered this city today, as well. There were rumors in the morning that Generals Bustamente and Leon were advancing to attack Gen. Scott with an immense force, but so far we have heard nothing confirming the reports. Almost every thing that the Americans are to have another grand battle, but where no one can divine.

The diligencia does not run between this and the city of Mexico, and so far I have found it impossible to lay hands upon any papers.

No one as yet knows that Gen. Scott’s intentions are as regards his future movements yet small as his force is many think he will advance upon the capital. We will know in a day or two.

The news from the city of Mexico by this arrival is most important. Our intelligent correspondent from Vera Cruz has furnished us with the annexed extracts from letters written at Mexico, and from the best sources of information. The resignation of Santa Anna is an important event in the history of the war.

The diligence, the easure of which has caused so much excitement, it appears, was robbed on its way from this place to Jalapa. It is said that no one was injured but that the vehicle was partially destroyed and plundered of every thing it contained.

Gen. Shields was doing well and may be expected here on his way home I the course of ten days.

Strong suspicions were entertained at Jalapa of an attempt to retake the place, but Col. Childs is always wide awake for any thing of that kind, and will do them up brown if the attempt is made.

Some Mexicans also came down yesterday from Jalapa, having been robbed on the road of ever thing they had of value, but the high . . . [illegible] . . . showed their generosity and kindness to the unfortunates afterwards, by returning them twenty–five cents each to pay their expenses to this place.

The force of the rancheros, robbers, etc. on the road, is estimated at 500 men disposed of as follows, 300 men near the road, and 100 on each side of it, ranging at a sufficient distance to prevent small parties from taking the bypaths.

Gen. Scott left Jalapa for Puebla on the 23rd inst. at the head of about 6,000 men.

I cannot hear of any later news than what has been forwarded to you, from Gen. Worth’s column at Puebla.

The train which came down was escorted by about sixty men, mostly discharged soldiers and some of the wounded at Cerro Gordo, in charge of Capt. Whiting. They saw frequently on the route men o the heights, and in the distance men on the look out. As for local news, I have none to give you. The rainy season has, it is thought, fully commenced, as we have had a sample of it during the last three days.

I have seen a private letter from Jalapa, which states that Col. Lawrence, bearer of despatches, and one of his escorts, were killed on the road, but no doubt the writer was mistaken in the name, and that the rumor emanated from the murder of Col. Sowers.

[BJM]

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p2c5, Later from the Army of General Taylor

By the steamship New Orleans we have later dates from the Rio Grande and the army of Gen. Taylor. The letter of our correspondent below announces the arrival of a portion of Col. Domphan’s command at Saltillo, after a sharp encounter with a body of hostile Indians.
We have a copy of the Matamoros flag of the 2nd inst. The individual found murdered below Reynoss, as before mentioned by us, turns out to have been a private in Capt. Paul’s company of Massachusetts volunteers. A company of Massachusetts men, under Capt. Walsh, escorting a train to Camargo, passed the spot a few days since, and identifies and buried the body. Capt. W. demanded of some Mexicans residing near the scene of murder to produce the murderers or he would burn down their ranches. The threat had the desired effect, and three incorrigible scoundrels were handed over to him—one of whom was killed in endeavoring to make his escape, and the other two are imprisoned at Reynoss. The clothes of the murdered man were upon the Mexican who was killed.

From the Flag we learn that Lieut. Col. Abbott, with four companies of Massachusetts volunteers, escorting a wagon train and a number of artillery horses, took up the line of march for Cerralvo on Saturday, the 29th ult. Col. Wright, with the remaining six companies was to proceed by boat to Camargo, thence to Monterey, as soon as transportation could be had.

The troops remaining at Matamoros after the departure of the Massachusetts Regimen will be three companies of the 3rd Dragoons–Hagan’s, Butler’s, and Merrick’s. These dragoon companies are not yet furnished with horses, and it is uncertain when they will be mounted—probably (says the Flag) not until they are called into active service, without affording an opportunity to drill.

We copy the following from the Flag:

"Murder—A Mexican, Joseph Marie Lara, a carpenter by trade, who has a shop near the lower end of Commercial street, was found about ten o’clock on Saturday last lying dead on the floor of his house, having been stabbed in the breast. It has not yet been ascertained by whose hands he was killed. His wife represents that she left him in the house in conversation with a volunteer, and when she returned he was found as described. Circumstances tend to a belief that she committed or instigated the murder herself, and we understand that she has been imprisoned until the matter can undergo investigation."

Col. Curtis of the 3rd Ohio Regiment has received the appointment of Assistant Adjutant General to General Wool.

At the election of officers in the Massachusetts regiment, Lieut. Col. Wright was chosen colonel; Major Abbott lieutenant colonel; and Capt. Webster chosen major.

SALTIMO, MEXICO. MAY 17 1847

A long tedious, eight days fever having partially left me, I am able to write you again with some little idea of what I am doing, and to furnish you with a few items of news. I mentioned that a squadron of dragoons had gone out in pursuit of the party of Indians who had committed a recent outrage, but it appears I was mistaken, and that their mission was pacific and merely intended to endeavor to get back from out excellent friends, the Camanches, some American horses and mules which had accidentally found their way into their possession. Justice, however, swift and terrible retributive justice has overtaken them, spoil laden as they were, and half their number have been sent to overtake their victims.

Lient. Col. Mitchell and a portion of the advance of Col. Doniphan’s command arrived here yesterday morning from Parras, having arrived at camp the day before. This morning, before breakfast, a number of men came in and announced that on Friday last a detachment of Col. Doniphan’s regiment, under command of Capt. Reed, consisting of fifteen men and accompanied by Don Manuel Ibarra, a very wealthy citizen of Parras, who owns an extensive vineyard, set out for the Rancho del Poco, about thirty miles from Parras, after the Indians. He furnished them all with fresh horses and they made a rapid march for del Poco. At the rancho they were joined by a party of some twenty men, an advance of Col. Doniphan’s main command, and before long the Indians came up. The conflict was quite desperate, for the Indians fought like devils. Capt. Reed was wounded in the chin and shoulder by arrows, and several horses were killed. On the side of the Indians the slaughter was more deadly. The all powerful rifle caused seventeen bold warriors to “bite the dust,” and the rest fled, leaving most of their plunder and the greater portion of their women and children. We also captured about 2000 head of horses and mules, which they had stolen. Don Manuel, who is spoken of as being as brave as he is generous and hospitable, fought desperately. Most of these Indians were Lippans and not Camanches, it is said. You will hardly believe that after this generosity on the part of out troops in riding an enemy’s country of a marauding party, some of the grateful Mexicans at Parras were detected in the act of stealing some of the horses belonging to the command.

The whole of Col Doniphan’s command will be here in a few days and after remaining a while to recruit their men and horses will proceed down towards the mouth of the river. They have now been in the service eleven months, and when they reach here will have marched two thousand eight hundred miles from Fort Leavenworth, Mo., their place of rendezvous. They have been constantly on the march for eight months and have been without tents since last (illegible); nor have they drawn a single dollar of pay since they have been in the service. We all look forward here to the prospect of a speedy movement upon San Luis with confidence and daily expect the arrival of fresh troops from below. It is thought that the Parras route will be selected and it is represented to me as a most delightful one. A train is about starting off and I have not time to write more. It is the 21 Ohio regiment that goes today. They are now entering town.

[BJM]
June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p4c3, From General Taylor’s Army

The following “orders,” issued by Gen. Taylor, have been transmitted by him to the War Department:

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, May 6, 1847.

Under the instructions of the Secretary of War, the commanding general has the gratification to publish to the troops of his command the following communication, received by him from the War Department:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, April 3, 1847.

"SIR –Your communications of the 24th and 25th of February, and the 1st of March, accounting the brilliant success of the troops under your command at Buena vista, against the forces of he enemy vastly superior in numbers, have been laid before the President; and I am instructed to convey to you his high appreciation of distinguished services rendered to the country by yourself and the officers and soldiers of your command on that occasion.

"The victory achieved at Buena Vista, while it adds now glory to our arms, and furnishes new proofs of the valor and brave daring of our officers and soldiers will excite the admiration and call forth the gratitude of the nation.

"The single fact that five thousand of out troops, nearly all volunteers, who, yielding to the impulse of patriotism, had rallied to their country’s standard for a temporary service, were brought into conflict with an army of twenty thousand, mostly veteran soldiers, and not only withstood and repulsed the assaults of this numerous hose, led by their most experienced general, but in a protracted battle of two days (illegible) a glorious victory, is the most (illegible) evidence of the (illegible) skill and gallant conduct of our officers, and the devoted heroism of the troops under their command. It will ever be a proud distinction to have been in the memorable battle of Buena Vista.

"The (Illegible) which the intelligence of this success of our arms has spread through the land is mingles with regret that it has been obtained at so great a price –that so many heroic men have fallen in that sanguinary conflict. –They died in the intrepid discharge of a patriotic duty, and will be honored and lamented by a grateful nation.

"You will cause this communication to be published to the troops under your command. "I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant, (Signed) "W.L. MARCY, “Secretary of War.” By order of Major General Taylor:

W.W.S. BLISS Assistant Adjutant General.

[BJM]

June 15, 1847, RWv24i48p4c5, Later from Vera Cruz

The steamship Fashion, Capt. Ivy, arrived at this port yesterday from Vera Cruz, having left there on Sunday forenoon, the 30th ult.

On Tuesday, the 1st inst. the Fashion saw the steamer Mary Kingsland running to the southward and westward, under a crowd of canvass and steam.

The following officers came passengers on the Fashion:

Lient W. Muryr, Company E, 2d Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; Lient L.H. Kane, Company D, 1st Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; Lieut W Gregg, 11th Regiment Regulars; Lieut Fellnagle 1st Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; James Johnson, quartermaster a sergeant, 2d Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and about forty discharged volunteers, many of them wounded and very sick.

The Fashion brought a small mail to Col. Hunt, and it is understood that the steamer New Orleans, to sail on the 31st (Monday last) would bring the principal (illegible). She is looked for every hour.

Verbally we learn that the Mexicans were busy fortifying the pass at Rio Frio, between Puebla and the City of Mexico.

Gen. Scott with the rear of the army, was to have left Jalapa on the 29th ult., and would arrive at Puebla on the 4th inst. where it is presumed he will await the arrival of the reinforvements being forwarded to him, before he advances further.

We have heard a rumor that Herrera has been elected President, but cannot trace it to a reliable source, and we think the result of the election could scarcely be known at the capital so soon.

From the American Eagle we learn that the diligence which left Vera Cruz for Jalapa on the 22d ult, without passengers, but with three trucks filled with very fine goods was stopped two miles beyond the National Bridge and robbed, and then burnt and destroyed. The driver and postillion who accompanied it were released and made their was to Jalapa. The diligence which should have come into Vera Cruz on the 24th ult. only came down to where the other had been destroyed and at once returned. This, it is feared, will put an end to the use of diligence on the road. The robbery was no doubt the work of Mexican banditti. We come now to a more atrocious act by the same (illegible) We copy the facts from the Eagle of the 29th:

"(illegible) –It is with pain mingled with a desire for revenge that we undertake to relate another massacre of our country (illegible) the most cruel and brutal manner. In our paper of last Saturday (only one week ago) we announced the fact that Col. Sowers was in the city as bearer of dispatches to Gen. Scott, and today we are called upon to inform the public of his horrid death –not with his enemy in front to oppose him, but cowardly shot by those who dared not show themselves.

"It appears that he left this city on Saturday last with an escort of five men and Lieut. McDonell of Capt. Wheat’s company, expecting to find the captain at Santa Fe, or at most a very short distance thee other side. They arrived at Santa Fe and Lodged there during the night, finding that Capt. Wheat had left ni the morning, anxious to push forward (although it was ascertained that Capt. W. was some thirty miles ahead) with an addition of two more to the escort Col. Sowers set out for Jalapa. The next that we know of this little party is by the arrival of onw of the men, who returned and reported its surprise and destruction. IN consequence of this falsity of the greater number of similar stories, Col. Wilson, our Governor, had the man arrested as a deserter. Thus matters stood until yesterday, when developments were made by an arrival from Jalapa –the first that has reached us for a week –tending to confirm our worst fears.

"We conversed yesterday with a gentleman who arrived in the morning and he informs us that at a point about two miles on the other side of Puenta National, he saw the ruins of the diligence, underneath which was a human body stripped with the exception of a pair of drawers, and mutilated in the most beastly manner. This is supposed to be the body of Col. Sowers. Near him lay another perfectly naked and likewise dreadfully mangled. Our informant was assured that five other bodies lay in some thick chaparral a short distance from the road. Now the number of killed, with the man who escaped, exactly corresponds with that of the party which accompanied the unfortunate Col. Sowers, and leaves no doubt in our minds of its destruction."

Our readers will recollect a party of Mexican robbers recently captured near Vera Cruz by a party of amateurs under Col. Banks. Ten of them have been tried for robbinf, secreting arms and ammunation, &c. Five have been acquitted and five convicted. The latter were sentenced to four and a half month’s work upon the public streets and through fares in chains. Two more yet remained to be tried. We always affords no pleasure to correct any errot into which we may have been betrayed, and to repair any act of injustice, when apprized fo it in a proper manner of which we may have been unintentionally guilty. We therefore hasten to lay before out readers the subjoined letter, from Capt. George P. Upshur, of the U.S. Navy, in regerence to the statement made by us, some days ago and of the truth of which we had not the slightest doubt at the time, that his brother, Judge Upshur, when, as Secretary of State, he arranged the preliminaries of the treaty of annexation with the Government of Texas, held a large proprietary interest in its soil. The correction of that statement will have a tendency to dispute the minds of others as well as ourselves, as we happen to know, that we were not alone in entertaining the opinion, no confidently, but, as it now appears, so erroneously expressed.

It is perhaps due to J.H. Gilmor, Esq, to say, that, when our first article on this subject appeared, believing it to be susceptible of a construction unfavorable to the personal honor of his deceased brother, (Gov. Gilmer,) he addressed us a note, inquiring whether we intended any imputation upon his integrity. Of course, having no such intention, we so said to him, and proffered so to say to the public, as we did in our explanatory remarks the next day. Or design, as we stated, was to meet an assertion of Ex–President Tyler by a fact which seemed to us to be in conflict with it, and not to deduce from that fact inferences unfavorable to the integrity of either of the gentlemen, named or unnamed, to whom it had reference:

U.S. NAVAL SCHOOL, Annapolis, Md., 12th, June, 1847.

[BJM]

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p1c3, General Pillow

We lay before our readers this morning the reply of General Pillow to the recent exposure, by the officers of the Tennessee regiment, of his unofficer–like conduct by which so many valuable lives are said to have been sacrificed, in the battle of Cerro Gordo. It will be seen that he attributes the assault upon him exclusively to the personal and political hostility of Col. Haskell, the commander or the Tennessee regiment; but it can scarcely be supposed that all the other officers who concurred in it could have been base enough to put their names to a statement which they knew to be false, or which they did not know to be true, under the influence of the paltry motive to which General Pillow ascribes their acquiescence in that exposition of his incompetency for the responsible station to which he has been elevated by the favor of the President. Besides, how happens it, that letters from the camp characterize General Pillow’s conduct in the battle of Cerro Gordo in terms even harsher than those employed by Col. Haskell and his (illegible) officers? There is, at all events, one mode, and bat one that we know of, by which the truth of the matter can be ascertained, and that is suggested by the New Orleans Bee. Let Gen. Pillow demand a court of inquiry, by which all the facts will be elected and a judgement pronounced in accordance with them. If an impartial tribunal of this kind decide in favor of the General, his triumph will be complete –if otherwise, it is not too much to say that the lives of our troops should not be again recklessly sacrificed by placing them under the command of an incompetent officer.

[BJM]

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p1c3, General Taylor

In the New Orleans National, which goes for Gen. Taylor, noleans colens, we find the following paragraph:

"We were much gratified recently by the visit to our office of the two officers of the army, well known to fame, when came to congratulate us upon the appearance of Gen. Taylor’s name at the head of our columns. They said they were unterrified Democrats, and did not intend to abandon their principles or party, but they were determined to support Gen. Taylor against any other man started in the next Presidential contest; alleging that they considered such a course demanded of them, by every principle of justice to themselves and to their country."

[BJM]

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p4c3, Prospect of Peace

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 8th inst. states positively that Herrera has been elected President of Mexico, and that the Clergy are in favor of peace; and says, that Herrera would immediately make a public declaration to that effect. The Bulletin adds, that a letter from an officer in Gen. Scott’s army, brought by the last arrival, and whose situation was highly favorable for obtaining correct information, said, “peace would shortly be made.”

In corroboration of this opinion, we find the following article in the New Orleans “National,” of the 8th inst.:

"PROSPECT OF PEACE WITH MEXICO.—We have had the pleasure of conversing with one of our gallant officers, just returned from the seat of war, and we have reason to believe that the prospect of peace with Mexico is not altogether chimerical. The British residents of Mexico begin to speak of such a thing as necessary, and they no doubt represent the feelings of their government; and the British nation, having great interests to look after in Mexico, can exert an influence that will greatly facilitate a peace, if it chooses to do so. Before the taking of Vera Cruz, the British residents of that city were very cedulous about our conquering Mexico. The battles of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo have forced them to acknowledge the thing as done, and they now speak of the Mexican nation as no longer competent to carry on a civilized warfare.

"Again, the most intelligent native citizens of Vera Cruz and Jalapa, and the intervening country, agree that the war should no longer be carried on. They acknowledge that the Mexican arms cannot prevail that the resources of the people are exhausted. The people are hourly becoming reconciled to the Americans. The destruction of the enormous tariffs, and annoying tolls upon the road, has facilitated internal commerce, and destroyed the monopolies that every where weighed down the laboring classes.

"Lastly, the Clergy of Jalapa, among whom are many of the most intelligent of Mexico, openly avow their desire for peace. They have learned that we are not making war upon religion, but upon the military despoties that have reduced Mexico to its present degradation; of course their sentiments will have an extended influence.

"Although our reasons for expecting a peace may appear at first sight somewhat superficial, still we find more substance on which to ground a hope that the war is nearer at an end than has heretofore been presented to us."

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p4c4, American Prisoners

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p4c4, Further from Mexico

We have had the pleasure of an interview with Mr. Trenwitt, a merchant who was taken prisoner on the 24th of February, in company with Lieut. Barbour and some thirty men composing the escort of the train that was attacked that day between Monterey and Camargo. Mr. Trenwitt informs us that Urrea had with him at the time of the attack about 2,000 men. The train was nearly two miles in length. When the enemy approach, Lieut. Barbour formed his men in a chaparral impracticable for Calvary. The lancers dashed by, made an onslaught upon the train, massacred the wagoners, and afterwards completely surrounded the small escort. Lieut. Barbour then surrendered upon terms and was taken prisoner. The party was marched off to Mexico, and on the route encountered hard usage, but was much better treated than the Encarnacion prisoners.

They arrived at Mexico on the 16th of April, and found Major Gaines and his companions yet closely confined in prison. Mr. Trenwitt was liberated through the interference of the British Minister. He reports to us that shortly after the arrival of Lieut. Barbour’s command, the American officers nine in number, were let out of jail on parole—the men were yet closely caged on the 12th of May—the day he left the city.

Whilst Mr. Trenwitt was at Jalapa, La Vega was in that city. He (La Vega) gave a similar excuse for his neglect of the America prisoners his friends did here. Mr. Trenwitt informs us that there was no foundation in truth in these excuses. He states that the revolution only lasted three weeks, and that Gen. La Vega was in the city of Mexico during five weeks of the incarceration of the Encarnacion prisoners in the penitentiary of Santiago. During this time Capt. Clay addressed him a letter in regard to the cruelties and privations they were suffering, contrary to the usages of war and the rights of capitulation, and that La Vega treated the letter with silent contempt. The prisoners did not even know their enlargement was arranged for. They were subjected to needless humiliation and cruelty on their march to Mexico, and when there subjected to cruel privations.

P.S.—Since writing the above the following letter from Capt. Heady was received by the New Orleans. Capt. H. is a personal friend of one of the editors of this paper and his word is worth more than the oaths of all the Mexican apologists of La Vega this side of Hades. When he wrote it he was under the impression, which was general at the time, that La Vega would again come to the United States. [BJM]

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p4c5, General Taylor’s Movements

Mexico, May 12th, 1847

We give place to the greater part of an interesting article upon the subject of Gen. Taylor’s movements from the American Flag of the 2nd inst. The belief has been assiduously propagated in various influential quarters for months that Gen. Taylor was to move upon San Luis Potosi. From various statements from time to time made in the Union the country has been led to believe that Gen. Taylor has had, or shortly would have, forces adequate to commence his march; while letters from Gen. Scott and his army for the army of Gen. Taylor are addressed, “Headquarters Gen. Taylor’s Army, San Luis Petosi,” It will not be long before we shall hear reproaches cast upon the hero of Buena Vista for his inactivity, while it is the purpose of the writer of the following article from the Flag to show that it is beyond the power of Gen. Taylor to move upon San Luis, even if the Government should divert no more of the troops ostensibly intended for him. The article will command itself to all fair–minded men: (N. O. Picayune)

FACTS AGAINST FICTION—Most of our readers have no doubt noticed, from the tone of the public prints in the United States that a vague impression seems to prevail that Gen. Taylor either already occupies San Luis Petosi, or is marching on that city. In connection with this state of public opinion, an article in the Washington Union should be considered, from which it will require but little ingenuity to discover a common origin for both the paragraph and the rumor, and no ingenuity at all to perceive that the injury of Gen. Taylor is the design of both.

The article alluded to states in substance that the twelve month volunteers would be replaced by fresh troops sufficient to swell the force of General Taylor’s division to near 10,000 men.
This information purports to come from the Adjutant General’s Office, and if so only proves that the Adjutant General's arithmetic is sadly at fault, or else our rulers at Washington have such an extraordinary opinion of General Taylor’s invincibility as to suppose him capable of crossing deserts and storming batteries with paper men, fresh from the manufactory of Roger, Jones, Marcy & Co.

Now the truth is, fortunately, very easy to arrive at, and we hope the fact and the fiction will at least be allowed to travel together, even to the Federal city, albeit at the risk of invading the sanctuary of the above firm.

But four regiments of the late ten have been allotted to Gen. Taylor and of the seven but a few companies have arrived, although the twelve months’ volunteers are being mustered at with the utmost celebrity. But supposing these four regiments to be complete, and here is all the force that is even promised to this division of the army:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Quantity</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The three and a half regiments above alluded to</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Four regiments consisting of North Carolina,</td>
<td>2,400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Virginia, Massachusetts and Mississippi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Six companies of artillery</td>
<td>420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Four companies of dragoons</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And of mounted Texans, about</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From this deduct for sickness and other casualties at least twenty per cent</td>
<td>1,100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And we have Genera Taylor’s real effective force</td>
<td>4,646</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From this small force garrisons are to be supplied for the longest line of communication known to modern times, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the confines of the desert beyond the Sierra Madre. By stripping this line almost to the verge of total abandonment, jeopardizing immense depots of provision and military stores, &c, &c, General Taylor would only be able to leave Saltillo at the head of about 2000 men.

This, with one deference to the later edition at Washington, is the Rio Grande arithmetic, where we count muskets in the field instead of parading unfilled muster rolls, or, in plain English, the fact as it really exists, instead of the round assertion of warrior–politicians.

By this as it may, figures speak for themselves, and I know with the facts before me assert that after receiving all the troops that are promised him, Gen. Taylor cannot defend his lines and march upon San Luis Potosi with an effective force of Two Thousand Men.

Knowing the foregoing facts as he certainly does, having stripped this line himself, we have no comments to make upon Gen. Scott for addressing Gen. Taylor at San Luis Potosi, nor will we pretend to determine the difference between affectation, ignorance, or promptings from Washington.

[BJM]

June 18, 1847, RWv24i49p4c5, From Texas

By the arrival of the steamship Yacht, Capt. Crane, we have Galveston papers to the 5th inst., and corresponding dates from other parts of the State.

By the last arrival we had accounts that timely falls on rain in Southern Texas had dissipated the apprehensions of short crops produced by the long drought, and now we find that almost every part of the State had been equally favored. As might be expected after so protracted a drought, in some sections it is said the crops have suffered severely, not, however, to any considerable extent.

The cousin Democrat contains the following abstract of a treaty by Maj. Neighbors, special agent of the Government Baron Meusebach, agent of the German Emigration and Railway Company:

"Friendly relations, in the form of a private treaty of peace, were entered into. The colonist, by this treaty, are allowed to survey their colony, established by the laws of the Republic without molestation, and to introduce sentiments between the Liano and San Salva—the Indians promising to refrain from all hostile acts towards the settlers, and to notify the colonists of the approach of any hostile bands of other tribes towards the settlement. Presents and provisions to the amount of $2,000 were quarantined to the Indians, most of which have already been distributed. The contract also stipulates, that all future intercourse, trade, etc, shall be carried on under the supervision of the United States’ Indian Agents. The Camanches and other tribes appear to be well satisfied with the treaty ratified by the United States Senate, on the 15th of February last, and seemed disposed, on their part to carry it into full effect.

"All the surveyors in the German settlements, some twelve of fifteen in number, are progressing rapidly with their work, in perfect friendship with the Indians."

In relation to the great poisoning case at San Augustin, the Houston Telegraph says that Wilkinson, at whose house the party was poisoned, confessed that he had given the arsenic to the cook purposely to be mixed in the cake, and he cautioned the bride and other members of the family not to eat the cake. He belonged to the moderator party of Sabine, and he stated that he took this opportunity to destroy as many regulators as possible, to avenge himself for the injuries they had inflicted upon him and his friends. He has made a fearful atonement for this horrid crime; but we fear others may be implicated, and the bloody feuds of the regulators and moderators may be renewed.

June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p2c1, Mexico

See, in another column, the latest news from the seat of war and from the city of Mexico. The intelligence from the capital authorizes the belief that disorder and confusion reign there, and that, I the language of a letter from that city, published I La Patria, of New Orleans, no one knows what is to be done. The letter to La Patria gives the following account of the reception or Santa Anna I Mexico, who it seems was roughly treated, on suspicion of having sold his country to "the Yankees"—not an unnatural suspicion, when Mr. Polk's "pass" and the three million bill, coupled with his inglorious defeats by inferior forces at Bueno Vista, and at Cerro Gordo, are remembered:

"It appears that on the 17th, the Republicano published a complete and triumphant vindication of Gen. Minon, in which Santa Anna's conduct was exhibited in a most odious light. The populace were furious against their lately idolized General, and when, two days after, Santa Anna entered the City, he was received by the rabble with the indignant cries of "Death to Santa Anna," "he sells us to the Yankees," and volleys of stones in all directions. The General–in–chief made his way to the National Palace with all convenient speed, and the guards were doubled to prevent more dangerous outbreaks. Thus far, observes the writer, the press has been prevented from making public these outrages."

The city of Mexico is represented by this writer as entirely defenseless, and he adds, that, with the exception of the military, almost all, the clergy included, are in favor of peace.

June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p2c6, Army of General Taylor

From the Brazos, by the arrival of the Telegraph, our news is later.

From the Flag of the 7th inst. we learn that Col. Doniphan, with a portion of his command, passed down the Rio Grande on the 5th inst. The Flag thus speaks of them:

"The unshorn beards and goat and deer skin clothes of many of them reminded us of descriptions we have read of the inhabitants of some of the countries of the . . . [illegible] . . . . They stopped in town a couple of hours, Col Doniphan is a stout, rough–featured, good–natured–looking sort of a man. He brought along with him Clark's battery, and ten pieces of cannon captured at Sacramento. The sick, etc, forty of fifty wagons, with . . . [illegible] . . .

"A private belonging to this command fell off the steam boat on the 5th inst. and was drowned."

June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p2c7, Important from the City of Mexico

We have received, by the way of Tampico, our files from the capital as late as the 29th of May. This is a week later than the papers received last week by the Oregon, and full as late as the private advices from the capital.

Santa Anna's letter of resignation, which we gave on Friday last, is published in the papers of the th ult, but we know nothing of the action taken by Congress on the subject. We find also a long manifesto addressed to the nation by him a few days earlier, which we have not time to translate before the mail goes, if it be worth a translation.

In the city of Mexico every thing is manifestly in a state of confusion and almost unlicensed anarchy. Gen. Bravo has resigned not only his command of general–in–chief but also his commission of general of division. Gen. . . . [illegible] . . . is said to have done the same thing. More of the . . . [illegible] . . . our next.

It is true that Gen. Almonte is under arrest, though the causes of his imprisonment are not avowed. He is confined in Santiago Tialtelolco.

Gen. Ampudia ha been directed to await further orders at Cuernavaca. What suspicious thing he has doe or contemplated we are not informed.

Gen. Valencia and Gen. Salas, were ordered to leave the city of Mexico on the 24th ult, for the city of San Luis Potosi, to take command of the army of the North.

The accounts we find in the Mexican papers of the disaffection in Zacatecas confirms those we published a few days since. The official
June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p4c1, General Scott and his proclamation

"Nil advisors" is our motto, or we could not but be surprised to witness the extreme solicitude of certain leading Administration journals to shield Gen. Scott from the criticism of his "ancient friends," Have the present champions of Gen. Scott—whom, it is easy enough to see, they intend to use as a foil to Gen. Taylor, at this time more an object of fear, as being more a popular favorite—have they forgotten their former illiberal and unjust treatment of the Hero of Lundy's Lane, when he was supposed to be the most formidable candidate for the Presidency? When the ... [illegible] ... of war first sounded, and when, Gen. Taylor being then comparatively unknown to the country, all eyes were turned to Gen. Scott as the commander—in-chief of our forces in Mexico, why was he deprived of the position to which his rank and his services entitled him, by the very men whose Organs are now his warmest eulogist, and its honors and responsibilities continued in Gen. Taylor's hands? We are well aware of the pretext by which that course was then justified. But what, we are curious to know, subsequently occurred to obliterate the recollection of the offensive language, which so exasperated his "Enemies in the Rear," filling "high places," and to induce them so suddenly to change their original determination? It is very certain that Gen. Scott was not permitted to go to Mexico until Gen. Taylor's increasing reputation and popularity had excited the jealousy and apprehensions of the Administration and its friends. Whether that was the motive by which they were impelled to place General Scott in command of the Vera Cruz expedition, and to ... [illegible] ... Gen. Taylor at Monterey, upon which he was offered to fall back, with a force too small for active operations, others can judge as well as we. We have an opinion upon the subject, to be sure; and that opinion is, that jealousy of Gen. Taylor, rather than love of Gen. Scott, prompted this sudden change in the tactics of the Administration, and it does the tone of admiration in which now, happily oblivious of the past, they generally speak of him who but yesterday was the subject both of their reproaches and their sneers.

We are confirmed in this impression by other circumstances. The attempt, avowed even before Gen. Scott reached his camp to supersede both himself and Gen. Taylor, by the creation of the new grade of Lieut. General, which was to be filled by that renowned Military Chief, Senator Benton, who was forthwith to proceed to Mexico as commander in chief, is, to our minds conclusive as to the fact, that, in the appointment of Gen. Scott, the Administration was influenced by the motive we have ascribed to it. For if it was unwilling to see General Taylor monopolizing the honors of the way, it was not less averse to their division with another Whig General. But, having no alternative, after the failure of its efforts to send Senator Benton to Mexico as Lieutenant General, it submitted with the best grace in its power to the necessity which induced it to change its original determination in regard to the active employment of Gen. Scott.
Nor is this the only circumstance that justifies this presumption. Why has Mr. Trist, a clerk in the State Department, been sent to Gen. Scott’s camp? In what capacity is he to act? What duties is he expected to perform? What authority is he to exercise? In one of his letters a few days ago to the New Orleans Picayune, Mr. Kendall says: “Mr. Trist is going on with the army, but in what capacity is best known to himself. He has certainly had no personal communication with Gen. Scott.” This fact seems to us to be both remarkable and significant. It is undeniable that Mr. Trist has gone to Mexico as the agent of the Government, with instructions in his pocket: How is it, that he thus keeps aloof from the commanding General? Why is General Scott, who seems to be such a favorite all at once at Washington, kept in the dark, both as to the character in which Mr. T. appears in his camp, and as to the instructions upon which he is to act? In what light this mysterious movement is regard in camp, may be inferred from the following extract of a letter from the camp to the editors of the St. Louis Republican, the writer of which thinks not without a show of plausibility, that Gen. Scott’s “enemies in the rear” are even now those who seem to have taken upon themselves the task of defending him against his “ancient friends.” He says:

“General Scott is laboring under embarrassments of which the public of the U. States entertain not the slights idea.—He ha emphatically ‘an enemy in his rear,’ as well as in his front. When he consented to come to Mexico and assume the chief command of our invading forces in their operations against the enemy, it was under the most solemn pledges on the part of Mr. Polk that he should have the countenance of the President and Secretary of War, and that his plans, which were fully laid before them, should not be interfered with until after Gen. Scott had had a fair opportunity to test them. Yet, how has this pledge been kept by the Chief Magistrate of the Union? No sooner is Gen. Scott’s back turned, and long before time was given him for the least trial of his skill as a General, than the most insidious attempts are made to supersede him in command, by the appointment of Col. Benton as Lieutenant General, a hackneyed and broken down politician. Failing in accomplishing the object of this exhibition of bad faith towards Gen. Scott, what is the next step taken? Why notwithstanding his brilliant achievement at Vera Cruz, and still more brilliant one at Cerro Gordo, the Administration [ . . . illegible . . . ]

June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p4c2, The resignation of Santa Anna

June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p4c5, Important from Mexico

---

IMORTHANT FROM MEXICO

Santa Anna’s Letter of Resignation

The schooner Zenobia, Capt. Brown, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 3rd inst. The steamer Telegraph was to sail from Vera Cruz in two or three days.

By this arrival a copy of the American Eagle of the 2nd inst. was received in town, and through the kindness of a friend we have obtained the use of it. It contains Santa Anna’s letter of resignation, which we give below, as translated by the editors of that paper, Congress had not acted upon it at last accounts.

The Eagle says that this resignation was followed up by that of Gen. Bravo, as Vice President. There is probably some confusion in this. As we understand it, the Vice Presidency was abolished to get rid of Gomez Farias, and has not been re-established. Gen. Bravo was recently in command at Puebla, and yet more recently was at the head of what is called the “Army of the Centre.” He may have resigned this post.

The Eagle says that the election for President will take place on the 15th inst. By this we presume is meant that the votes will then be officially counted and the result declared. We have no further returns by this arrival, but the Eagle thinks Gen. Herrera will be the President.

Gen. Scott reached Puebla on the 28th ult, the day before Gen. Twiggs arrived there. Every thing was quiet in the city, our soldiers and the inhabitants being apparently on the best terms.

A small reconnoitering party of our troops had been met some twenty miles beyond Puebla. They had encountered no enemy so far. The Mexicans are erecting works a short distance this side of the capital but the Eagle treats them as unimportant and not likely to be completed.

The Eagle gives it as a report that Gen. Almonte is a prisoner on an accusation of holding correspondence with Gen. Scott.

Benj. Thomas, sergeant major of the 1st Infantry, died on Sunday morning with military honors. The sergeant was a valuable officer, says the Eagle, and his demise was regretted by all who knew him.

It ha been ascertained that only the one man was killed with Col. Sowers. The imprudence of the colonel in venturing a head of his party cost these two lives.

A naval expedition against Tabasco, under the commodore in person, was talked of at Vera Cruz as about to start at once. The following vessels were mentioned as likely to compose it: The frigate Raritan, sloop of war John Adams, from Germantown, the . . . [illegible] . . . (now at Frontiers,) the Spitfire (illeg) the Scorpion, and the gun-boats Bonita and . . . [illegible] . . . Should the sloop of
The province of Texas, where the Spaniards have had settlements from the 17th century, bounds by the east with Louisiana, and Cevallos, the Spanish Minister, in one of his letters to Messrs. Monroe and Pinckney, in 1805, says:

The editor of the Nashville Whig cites other historical facts to show the correctness of Mr. Carey's map. According to that paper, Mexican departments.

Grande) from its mouth up, for many miles, and the "Province of Texas" did not touch the Rio Grande at all. In defining the boundaries other maps, the Neuces,) west of "Passo del Cabello," and considerably east of even the "Bay of Santiago," and much farther east is of "Mexico or New Spain," and he defines the boundaries of the "Provincia de Texas" as commencing at the mouth of the Sabine the following authorities:

The river Medina (says our Nashville contemporary) is considerably to the eastward of the Neuces. And the Whig then proceed to add abandoned," (See American State Papers, vol. 12, page 298)

The march of Gen. Taylor to the Rio Grande, in obedience to instructions from Washington, has begotten a political necessity for the extension of the jurisdiction of Texas beyond the Neuces, which Mr. Polk, before that necessity arose, officially designated as its "western frontier," and even beyond those "stupendous deserts" between the Neuces and the Rio Grande, which, according to Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll, constituted the "natural boundary" between Texas and Mexico, the crossing of which, by either party, when no such movement was anticipated as probable, at least on our part, he said could never be justified, and would never be att3mped until the "spirit of conquest," overruling all other considerations, should investigate the act of aggression. If Mr. Polk was right, as we have no doubt he was, when, adopting the language of Mr. Donnelson, our Envoy to that Republic, he spoke of the Neuces as "the western frontier of Texas," or even if we admit of the extension of that frontier to the natural boundary to which Mr. Ingersoll referred, the conclusion is undeniable that, in ordering Gen. Taylor to go beyond those points, Mr. Polk transcended his constitutional power, by invading and taking possession of a portion of the territory of Mexico, and thereby rendered himself responsible for all the consequences that have resulted from that act. For, although it be true that Mexico struck the first blow, she struck only after giving fair warning that she regarded the movements of Gen. Taylor as itself an act of war, as, if the territory invaded belongs to Mexico, it undeniably was, which she was compelled to resist by force, as the only means of averting that national humiliation and disgrace that would necessarily attach to a tame submission to an armed invasion of her soil.

It is now, however, boldly asserted that the Rio Grande, and not the Neuces, is the western frontier of Texas. We are of course not surprised at this assumption, on the part of the Administration and its defenders; because they cannot otherwise relive the President and his constitutional advisers from the serious charge of having usurped the war-making power, even while Congress, to which body the constitution has expressly and exclusively delegated it, was in session, as it was when the order to occupy the valley of the Rio Grande was prepared and transmitted to Gen. Taylor. This assumption, however, is wholly unsustainable, confronted as it is by the whole current of facts bearing, upon the question. The act of the Texan Congress, extending its jurisdiction to the Rio Grande, so much relied upon by the Administration as the foundation or our title, is destitute of the slightest claim to consideration—just as much so as if, instead of the Rio Grande, that act had claimed to the Sierra Madre. Texas never had possession, at any time, of the territory west of the Neuces, (except perhaps one or two isolated spots;) while the entire Valley, from the source to the mouth of the Rio Grande, which was populated at all, was held, as it had been from the first settlements of the country, by Mexican citizens, recognizing their allegiance to the Mexican government, and ruled by Mexican officers. This fact alone is sufficient to show that the claim of Texas, resting alone upon a law of he Congress, was unfounded and untenable—as much so as would be a claim, set up by the Congress of the United States, should it be silly enough to enact such a law, to the British provinces upon our borders.

A writer in the Nashville Whig, in discussing this question, refers to an edition of Mathew Carey's "General Map of the World," published by him in Philadelphia in the year 1814, "before there could be any political interest or influence to serve." The 29th map in that edition is of "Mexico or New Spain," and he defines the boundaries of the "Provincia de Texas" as commencing at the mouth of the Sabine river, and extending west, on the Gulf of Mexico, to the mouth of a river (which although not named, must be, from comparing it will other maps, the Neuces,) west of "Passo del Cabello," and considerably east of even the "Bay of Santiago," and much farther east (more than two degrees) of the "Rio Bravo del Norte." The province of Tamaulipas extended on both sides of the Del Norte, (or Rio Grande) from its mouth up, for many miles, and the "Province of Texas" did not touch the Rio Grande at all. In defining the boundaries of the several departments of Mexico in 1814, Mr. Carey had no motive, of course, to enlarge or curtail the limits of either of the Mexican departments.

The editor of the Nashville Whig cites other historical facts to show the correctness of Mr. Carey's map. According to that paper, Cevallos, the Spanish Minister, in one of his letters to Messrs. Monroe and Pinckney, in 1805, says:

"The province of Texas, where the Spaniards have had settlements from the 17th century, bounds by the east with Louisiana, and contains the extensive country which lies between the river Medina, where ends the government of Coaquila, to the post now abandoned," (See American State Papers, vol. 12, page 298)

The river Medina (says our Nashville contemporary) is considerably to the eastward of the Neuces. And the Whig then proceed to add the following authorities:
In 1844, Gen. Almonte, by commission of the government of Mexico, visited Texas and drew up a statistical report of the country. Texas and Coahuila at that time formed one State, and Gen. Almonte was informed by the State Government of Coahuila and Texas, that instead of the River de los Neuces, as was generally supposed, and as then appeared on the map, forming the boundary between Coahuila and Texas, this assumption was founded on a geographic error. The true limit ought, it was alleged, to commence "at the embouchure of the river Aransaso, and follow it to its source, continuing thence in a direct line, until it reached the junction of the Medina and San Antonio rivers; from which it ought to proceed along the eastern bank of the Medina towards its source, and terminate on the borders of Chihuahua. (Kennedy's Texas, page 4.)

Mrs. Holley, in her work on Texas states its western boundary to be the Nueces, separating it from Tamaulipas and Coahuila.

We have on our table a History of Texas, published in 1836 and written by David B. Edward, who describes himself on the title page as "formerly Principal of the Academy, Alexandria, Le. Late Preceptor of Gonzales Seminary, Texas." It is a volume of 336 pages. On the 14th page he says:

"It (Texas) is bounded on the North by Red river, which divides it from Arkansas, Ozark District and New Mexico, on the South by the Gulf of Mexico and the Rio de los Nueces, which divides it from the States of Coahuila and Tamaulipas, on the East by the Eastern branch of the river Sabine and the State of Louisiana, on the West, by the State of Coahuila and the territory of New Mexico."

Accompanying the work is a map of Texas with the boundaries, as given above, laid down. In a note on one corner of the map, speaking of the Rio Grande, he says: "If this river should ever become the western boundary of Texas (a desired by the inhabitants) it will add a hundred miles to its sea-coast and 50,000 square miles to its superficies; the southern section of their surface, sandy, barren prairie, almost destitute of water; and its northern, rocky, sterile mountains nearly as destitute of timber.

We have before us "the form of a proposed Constitution of Texas drawn up by the Texas Convention in 1832 and 1833." It begins thus:

"In the name of God, Omnipotent Author and Supreme Legislator of the Universe--

We, the people of Texas, being capable of figuring as a state, in the manner contemplated in the second article of the decree of the general Congress of the nation of the 7th of May, 1824,—do ordain the following Constitution; and do mutually agree with each other, to form ourselves into a full and independent state of the Mexican Confederacy, by the name of the STATE OF TEXAS." Art. 1 of the schedule is as follows;

"The State of Texas shall include all the country formerly known as the Province of Texas."

What the Convention regarded as the western boundary of "the province of Texas" they clearly make apparent I the 10th article of the schedule, where they proceed to divide the State into Senatorial districts. In this division, THEY GO NO FURTHER WEST THAN THE RIVER NUECES. THEY STOP THERE!

June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p1c3, General Scott and Mr. Trist

In the course of some observations, a day or two ago, on the peculiar relations existing between the commander–in–chief of the Army of Investon and the Diplomatist who has been sent to his camp for purposes and objects not very clearly comprehended by the country, we adverted to the striking resemblance between the apparent design of Mr. Trist’s mission and that of the agents of the French Revolutionary government who were sent to the camps of Dumouriez, Lafayette and others, to watch, and sometimes to direct their movements. The following extract of a letter from Jalapa to the St. Louis Republican satisfies us that if we were at all wrong in our surmise as to the duties devolved upon Mr. Trist, it was in underrating the extent of his powers, which it seems are not altogether of a supervisory character. Indeed, it would seem that it is intended that Mr. Trist, shall really occupy the position in which Congress refused to place Senator Benton—that of Lieutenant General, in order that he may control General Scott’s military movements, while, should it be found practicable to substitute negotiation for war, he is to snatch from that officer the credit of preparing and sanctioning a treaty of peace. Altogether, it is quite a curious spectacle, this thing of a Clerk in the State Department, leaving his duties at Washington, taking his position in the camp, and, although having no military rank, assuming to command the commander–in–chief. Is the President carrying out the Bentonian plan, through the agency of Mr. Trist, who is content, as Mr. Benton would not have been, with the substantial power attached to the position, without the title, of which the Missouri Senator was so tenacious? We shall see hereafter.

The correspondent of the St. Louis paper writes as follows:

"A warm and somewhat severe rupture has broken out between Gen. Scott and the Clerk of the State Department, Mr. Trist, who has been sent here as a sort of . . . [illegible] . . . of the American army.

"This Mr. Trist, in the exercise of his mongrel plenary, civil and military powers, addressed a letter to Gen. Scott, directing him as to what move he must make with his troops. A portion of those directions were such as Gen. Scott believed were at war with the best interests of our Government, and the tendency of which would be the protraction, rather than a termination of hostilities. It was the correspondence growing out of this difference of opinion that was the immediate result of this rupture. Copies of all the correspondence, I learn, have been transmitted by Gen. Scott to the War Department; and if at the next session of Congress, they are
Our columns are almost exclusively occupied this morning by the late, interesting intelligence from the seat of war. While we are gratified to learn that a train of invalids, with a small guard, has succeeded in fighting its way, with comparatively trivial loss, from Gen. Scott's rear, that officer, we are informed, is advancing from Puebla upon the city of Mexico, having marched as far as the famous pass of Rio Frio, without encountering opposition, and having been met at that place with propositions for peace, which however, from the inadmissibility of the terms, were rejected. We lay all the accounts that have reached us before our readers, leaving them to draw from them their own inferences. For ourselves, we rarely feel much confidence in any conclusion which we tenor of the advises from the seat of war seem occasionally to justify us in adopting. At this moment, for example, if we were to judge alone from Gen. Scott's forward movement, in connection with the civil dissensions said to be raging in the capital, and with the fact, (if it be true) that the existing Government had been induced to tender the olive branch, we should infer that the restoration of peace is not very remote—for, although the terms proposed are said to have been inadmissible, and were therefore promptly rejected by Gen. Scott, it shows that there has been a change of tone on the part of the Mexican leaders, who have heretofore evinced an inflexible purpose to refuse to listen even to proffers of reconciliation while their soil is pressed by a hostile foot. If they have been induced to relax this determination so far as themselves to propose a cessation of hostilities, it is not improbable, that, although the conditions with which their proposition was accompanied led to its prompt rejection, it may be succeeded by another, so modified as that Gen. Scott's instructions may justify its acceptance.

On the other hand, from the spirit with which the guerillas movements are characterized on the road between Vera Cruz and Jalapa, and the hostile movements in the vicinity of Tampico, the inference would at least seem to be plausible, that, even, should a treaty of peace be extorted from the central Government, unless its terms should be approved by the people of Mexico, it will not be acquiesced in by the military leaders remote from the seat of government, who seem to be fighting upon their own book, and who, like those of Spain, will refuse to be bound by the orders of their superiors, contending that, if not actually in duress, they have been overawed by the force they are unable to resist.

We shall indulge in no farther speculations, however, upon the confused and unsatisfactory state of facts now before us. The next news from the seat of war, which we may daily expect to receive, may enable us to form a more intelligent and satisfactory opinion in regard to the duration, and perhaps to the immediate results, of his unhappy contest.

OBERON EMIGRANTS—The St. Joseph Gazette, of the 11th, after stating that four hundred and thirty three wagons had passed through Independence this spring, with emigrant for Oregon and California, says that the number which have passed through that place will make the aggregate upward of thirteen hundred wagons—which, if they average five persons to each wagon, will swell the number of emigrants to six thousand five hundred, large and small. The emigrants, in small numbers, were still coming to St. Joseph.
The following highly important intelligence was communicated to us by Lieut. Floyd and M'Williams, of the 2nd Pennsylvania Volunteers, who came over on the steamship Galveston this morning, at 6 o'clock. On the 8th, a small recruiting party, together with some citizens, and disbanded soldiers, in number about 150, with 75 armed men, and 30 mounted, left Puebla for Vera Cruz. This party was under command of Capt. Bainbridge, of 3rd Artillery. On leaving Jalapa and getting near Cerro Gordo, this party was informed that it would not be prudent to go through the pass, as there were about 1000 Mexicans in the chaparral along the pass. Previous to this, two officers who had gone to the rear of the train were fired at from the chaparral. At the mouth of the pass the party was organized and marched through without meeting an enemy. Arrived at the Bridge that evening. Whilst they were bivouacked on the other side of the bridge, being so fatigued that they were unable to furnish a guard, they were informed that some persons were barricading the bridge. A guard was then stationed between the bridge and encampment, to prevent the party being surprised. At this time signal lights on the ridges and cliffs were distinctly seen.

Before daylight the sick and wounded of this little party were removed to Santa Anna's hacienda—a quarter of a mile from the bridge. A scouting party was then sent out, and also a party to clear the bridge, which was done without any opposition. The main body of the party then passed over the bridge. Every thing appearing then to be safe, and all danger being passed, Lieut. McWilliams and Mr. Frazer were sent back to bring on the train on the other side of the bridge. Just as they were entering the bridge, a party of twenty-five Mexicans appeared on the ridge, and fired several volleys on them. The wagon mater and four others, who were passing the bridge, were fired on and the whole five were killed, and a wagon was captured of no great value.

After the fire had ceased, a party lancers appeared on the bridge and seemed to be preparing to charge, but seeing that Captain Bainbridge's party were preparing to receive the, they wheeled their horses and galloped off.

Captain Bainbridge resumed his march in good order, followed by 400 or 500 of the lancers, who hung upon his rear and . . . [illegible] . . . for four or five miles, but at a respectable distance. Thus hemmed in, this little party pursued its way until it arrived at the Pass of La Voilta, where Colonel McIntosh had encamped with his large train. The Mexicans who had attacked Bainbridge's party were the same who had compelled Col. McIntosh to halt and wait for reinforcements. The arty remained that night in McIntosh's camp, and during the whole time the Mexicans kept a continual fire on the camp approaching, with the greatest boldness, very near to our sentinels.

On the next day Capt. Bainbridge's party resumed its march to Vera Cruz, being joined by Capt. Duperu's Dragoons, who were sent back to get their horses. This company, with its gallant Captain, had behaved very handsomely in the attack on McIntosh's camp. Its gallantry was the theme of universal praise and admiration in the army. Indeed, it was generally admitted that Col. McIntosh's command was saved by the gallantry of Duperu's party. Bainbridge's party continued their march to Vera Cruz, where they arrived in safety. In the meantime Duperu's party having a long return train to guard, and being threatened by a large body of lancers, halted at Santa Fe, where they were charged by a greatly superior force, which they gallantly repulsed, killing many of the enemy, and suffering no loss themselves. D It was said however, that some of our wagons were cut off and the drivers taken prisoners. Capt. Duperu arrived safely in Vera Cruz, having lost three killed and three wounded.

On the day Capt. Bainbridge's party left McIntosh's camp, Gen. KCadwallader had arrived, with a force of 800 men and two howitzers. The two commands were then joined making, in all, about 1600 men, with two howitzers, under command of Gen. Cadwallader, and pushed on towards the National Bridge.

On approaching the bridge Gen. Cadwallader occupied the heights commanding the bridge, from which the enemy had fired on Capt. Bainbridge's party, where he was attacked by a large force of the Mexicans, posted in the ridges and chaparral, and some hard fighting was carried on for several hours, the Mexicans losing some 15 killed and some thirty of forty wounded. The Mexicans were repulsed; the bridge was successfully passed by Gen. Cadwallader, who was on his way to Jalapa.

The estimated loss of Col. McIntosh's party is about $40,000. For miles the road is strewn with empty boxes and bacon sides, which had been captured by the enemy. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the army, respecting the conduct of the command, which had charge of this train. There will be a court of inquiry into the subject.

The garrison at Jalapa has been broken up, by order of Gen. Scott, and all the sick and Government stores have been sent to Perote Castle, so that this line of communication is entirely closed. Gen. Scott has had a road operated from Perote to Taxpan, from which, in future, all our stores and men will be sent, in preference to the old road. The Engineer corps have completed a fine road from Taxpan to Perote, the distance . . . [illegible] . . .

The success of the attack on McIntosh's command has given great confidence to the guerillas who are advancing in great numbers through the country, and attacking all our parties, large and small.

[BJM]
June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p2c6, Later from Mexico

The steamer James L. Day arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz on Monday morning. She left Vera Cruz on the afternoon of the 16th inst. touching at Tampico, on the morning of the 17th, and brazos St. Jago on the afternoon of the 18th.

Her news is one day latter, and we are indebted for it to the Delta office. The main interest excited by this arrival, (says our slip,) centres in the report communicated to the James L. Day, by Mr. Clinton, the pilot of Tampico, who boarded her on the 15th, off that city. He stated that they were in daily expectation of an attack from the Mexicans who were reported to be 1500 strong in the vicinity of the city. On the night of the 12th inst., a demonstration was made by the Mexicans in Tampico to rise. The American authorities, however, had timely information of the contemplated movement, and to suppress it, if attempted, called out the troops, who lay on their arms all night. There was then no demonstration of revolt made.

On the 15th inst. a party of Mexican lancers, attacked the outposts at Tampico and drove the sentinels into the city. On the 16th a party of rancheros attacked the pilot station and were greeted by a discharge from half a dozen muskets, when they retreated.

The Barque Mary, of Baltimore, put into Tampico on the 16th instant for supplies and repairs. She was bound for Vera Cruz with 200 volunteers, which she landed at Tampico.

The most important part of the intelligence brought by this arrival is the flattering prospect of peace. Capt. Wood, of the Jas. L. Day. Informs us that information had been received at Vera Cruz before the Day left, that Gen. Scott and Worth, with the main body of the army, had advanced as far as Rio Frio, without opposition, and were met at that place by a deputation from the capital, with propositions for peace. The exact tenor of the propositions were not known; they were, however, of such a nature, that Gen. Scott refused to accept the, and was determined to put on his forces to the capital. From the deep anxiety felt by the new government, if the term government can be applied to any party or power in Mexico, to stay the march of our forces on the capital, it was thought further concessions would be made to Gen. Scott before he took up his line of march from Rio Frio.

VERA CRUZ, June 14, 1847

Gentlemen—I have just seen Capt. Duperu, who came in this morning from the train, which he left about three miles this side of the bridge, at a stand.

It is his opinion that the train will not move forward for some days, if at all. The guerillas are gathering in great numbers and from all quarters, and the chief danger is the delay. Every hour readers its advance more difficult. Within the past three days a number of young Vera Cruz. . . . [illegible] . . . have gone out, and are now under arms against us, after enjoying our protection for the past two months, during which time their property and persons have been more respected than they have for any two months together since they were born. The city has several emissaries within its walls from Jaranta and Rebolledo, one of which, in a gray friar’s dress was just pointed out to me. Persons in the interest and pay—or promise of pay—of the Mexican authorities. Mexicans by birth as well as Spaniards, are also in the employ of our authorities in this city, some of them receiving large salaries and holding offices of trust connected with our Courts, and different departments in administrative and clerical capacities ready at any moment to turn over their files and books to parties with whom their natural sympathies lie; people openly rejoice in the recent success—for success it is—of the guerillas over our troops. The Spanish paper here daily teems with covert appeals to the sympathies of the foreigners, and the patriotism of the Mexicans; magnifies our losses and the Mexican gains, makes a great display of wrongs inflicted on our side, and patients suffering on the part of injured Mexico, and all passes unnoticed as far as I can see.

I am informed, and I know my authority too well to treat it will contempt, that six men, Spaniards, from Havana, have landed, or will today in Vera Cruz, and who will each in less than four days command a party of guerillas. I also learn from the same authority, that two hundred Spaniards, with six of eight small field pieces, are expected to land on the coast, within fifty miles of this city, during the next ten days, when they will at once organize into formidable and desperate guerilla bands. These men are to come from Cuba, but not, I believe, all from Havana.

All the leading men amongst the guerillas now are Spaniards, and also many of the rank and file. A Spaniard General, Saturnino de la Vega, has been in this city for some days, and has just left for the interior, where I learn he is to find a command, or an office giving him the control of several commands. It is doubtless to his influence that we own the departure of the young Mexicans to which I have before adverted, and he and others have inspired all the native classes with more hope than they have before enjoyed for a long time.

By an arrival, which gives us later intelligence than that brought by Duperu, from the train, we learn that it was again moving cautiously forward, and expected opposition at the Bridge. Jaranta was falling back upon Encerro, where he expects to be able to keep the Americans in check until reinforced by Rebolledo, and the rancheros from the surrounding country, who are drawn rapidly around by the prospect of sharing in the division of the specie—about half a million of dollars—in the train. Rebolledo is said to have fifteen hundred men that he can bring forward, and they hope to have a force, such as will enable them to take our fellows in front and rear, and route them completely. When this is done, a descent is to be made upon Vera Cruz!

Now in all this there is nothing ridiculous, although three men out of four laugh at such calculations. I would not guarantee a successful defense of Vera Cruz with our present force, particularly if the onset were made suddenly, and at night. I now, too, that there are hundreds in the city who would assist the assaulting forces.
The latest intelligence from the seat of war has not only put to flight the hope that had been faintly indulged, founded upon the apparent anarchy and apathy existing among the Mexicans, of the speedy restoration of peace, but has naturally excited serious apprehensions for the safety of our troops both upon the coast and in the interior—at Vera Cruz and at Tampico, as well as at Jalapa and Puebla. The reader will find very full, though as yet imperfect details in another column, together with some pertinent reflections from the New Orleans Picayune upon the present threatening aspect of affairs in that quarter. Nor is that paper alone in apprehensions, which we earnestly hope may not be realized. The Bulletin, while it has no serious fears for the safety of Col. McIntosh and his charge, considers the indications that are put forth by the attack upon his train, and the inferences that may be reasonably drawn from the facts of the case, as giving a sinister complexion to the advises. "It shows (says that paper) an organized system of resistance on a large scale, for it is no roving band of small marauding party that would have ventured to attack a force of 800 regulars, and which has succeeded in capturing a considerable portion of the train, and obliging our troops to entrench themselves until reinforced."

From Gen. Taylor's division of the Army the intelligence is only so far interesting, as that it shows the utter impossibility, in his weakened condition, of making a movement toward San Luis. The Washington Union has, within a few days past, reiterated a statement, founded upon information obtained from the War Department, that General Taylor would very soon be at the head of a force sufficiently formidable to enable him to resume active operations. A similar statement, which appeared in that paper a few weeks ago, was not without a prompt denial by letters from Gen. Taylor's camp, and by an article in the Matamoros Flag, which, by an enumeration of the actual force now occupying the several posts from that place to Saltillo inclusive, together with the new corps expected shortly to arrive, exhibited a remarkable deficiency, as compared with the official statement. These contradictions, however, only served to elicit another publication from the War Office, in which the Adjutant General's muster-rolls are for the second time adduced to impeach the testimony of the eye-witnesses of their variation from the actual state of facts, in regard to which it is impossible these eye-witnesses can be mistaken. The official muster-rolls, as well as we remember, place Gen. Taylor at the head of about 10,000 men; and yet passengers arrived at New Orleans, direct from the camp, state that the General has now with him only about 4000 effective troops, and will not have exceeding 5800 when all his expected reinforcements reach him! The Adjutant General must reckon his "men in buckram" after the Falstaff fashion. At all events, facts like these furnish a striking commentary on the alleged "eminent ability" with which this war is "conducted," so far as its management depends upon the Administration!

[BJM]
June 22, 1847, RWv24i50p4c3, From Vera Cruz

Arrival of the Mary Kingsland—Additional particulars of the late attack on Col. McIntosh's train—Slender Garrison at Vera Cruz—Yellow Fever.

The United States steamer Mary Kingsland, Captain Davis, arrived here yesterday, from Vera Cruz the 9th, and from Brazos, the 13th inst. Although the Mary Kingland left Vera Cruz two days previously to the departure of the Massachusetts, she brought us more details of the most important event that has lately happened in that part of Mexico, viz.: the attack on Col. McIntosh's train. We also received, by this arrival, letters from our correspondent, who resumes the thread of his narrative of daily occurrences, broken off at the receipt of the last full mail by the New Orleans.

ATTACK ON THE TRAIN.—We learn that the whole of the immense train, under the escort of Col. McIntosh and 800 men, proceeding onward to the head quarters of General Scott, were attacked by a guerilla party at a point just fifteen miles beyond Santa Fe, a village eight miles from Vera Cruz. The moment the attack was made on the head of the train, the dragoons charged on the enemy, and dispersed them. After the lapse of a very short time, the Mexicans again made their appearance in seemingly overwhelming numbers, at least 17,000 strong, and opened a fire on several points at once. Here a considerable number of pack mules fell into the hands of the foe, from the extended line which had to be kept up, on the march, owing to the narrow defiles through which the train was passing. Col. McIntosh, after a rather severe contest, got off the assailants, and then fortified himself behind his wagons, deeming it imprudent to continue on without a reinforcement, particularly requiring artillery. An express reached the city on Monday the 7th inst. in the evening, and on Tuesday morning, Gen. Cadwallader marched to his relief, with a section detailed from the Howitzer battery, 10 guns, attached to the Voltigeur regiment, under Lts. Bakeley and Cochrane; four companies of the 11th regiment, under Col. Ramsey; one company of the 8th and one of the 7th Infantry; and company K. of the 3rd Dragoons. Twenty wagons accompanied. The Mexicans are said to be posted in considerable strength in the vicinity of the National Bridge, (Puente Nacional,) close to which the train is entrenched. They are determined to dispute the passage with us. Gen. Cadwallader, on his junction with Col. McIntosh, will be at the head of about 1500 strong, and he has declared that he shall soon be able to clear the road of those desperadoes, the guerrillas.

Although the name is not given, there is little doubt of the Mexicans being under the command of Padre Jatuata, the Spaniard, of which exploits we have already spoken n these columns. The exact sum, in specie, conveyed by this train is $350,000. There is no authentic intelligence of the loss sustained by either party, in this encounter. Dr. Harney, brother of the Colonel, it is said, received a musket ball in the leg, which was, however, but a flesh wound.

HORSE ROBBERY—A daring robbery of some forty of fifty horses and mules is said to have been perpetrated by the Mexicans, on the 5th inst., close to the walls of the city. Company K., 3rd Dragoons, went in pursuit the next day, and after remaining out scouring the country, until the following morning, the 6th inst., returned, and reported that they saw no vestige of an enemy.

GARRISON OF VERA CRUZ—We have been informed that the number of troops at Vera Cruz, since the departure of Gen. Cadwallader, has been reduced to so low a figure as to give rise to some apprehensions for the safety of the city, in case of an attack by any thing like the number said to be under Pedro Jatuata. There were not more than forty men fit for duty in the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, when the Massachusetts left.

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p1c2, French Opinions

In one letter of his late letters from Paris, the editor of the N. York Herald commenced on the somewhat singular fact that in not one of the French Journals, except the Gazette de France, is it possible to procure the insertion of an article, at all complimentary to the U. States—a fact the more remarkable as the Gazette de France is the organ of the Legitimist (or ultra Royalist) party! In the Herald of the 21st inst. we find a long article translated from the "Gazette," in which a bold and vivid contrast is drawn between "Old Europe and Young America," highly flattering both to the institutions and to the people of this country. We regret that we have not room to copy it entire. Its general tenor, however, may be inferred from the tone in which it speaks of the progress of our arms in Mexico. It says:

"Open a map of the United States and Mexico, look at the line of operations by the sea and land forces of the Union, and one would be inclined to believe that the great genius of Carnot and Bonaparte, suggested the plans pursued by the American Generals in Mexico, and the brilliant successes of France during the invasions of Belgium, Germany and Italy had been translated across the Atlantic."

The Gazette then proceeds to give a detailed sketch of our land and naval operations; and after contrasting the vigor and energy of this Republic with the decrepitude and effeminacy of European Governments, the write concludes with a remark, which we hope future events may show to be prophetic, so far as this country is concerned: "Henceforward, (he says,) Young America is destined to enjoy a flourishing and permanent tranquility, whilst Old Europe will be exposed to perpetual and bloody convulsions."

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p1c3, General Taylor and The War

The New York Commercial Advertiser publishes the following extract of a letter from a Southern gentleman, who is said to be one of the most shrewd and far-seeing men in the country:

"It is now certain that Gen. Taylor will be our next President; that is, if Providence will continue its protection over his life as to this time it has done. His bright prospects are gall and wormwood to many a leading politician, and his advent to the Presidency will purify
The war with Mexico is becoming more and more serious; every victory we achieve defers the prospect of peace. The capture of the capital, which will soon be effected, will only add to the exasperation of that people. It is a strange infatuation with Mr. Polk and his Cabinet, which induces them to believe a peace possible. The Mexicans look upon it as a struggle for their national existence, and for their religion; and in this view they are not very wrong. They know that any peace they can make will be attended with a sacrifice of part of their country, and that the extent of our demands will be in a great measure regulated by our power to enforce them.

“They have constantly before them the French invasion of Spain and its consequences. It cost France 7000,000 men, and in the sequel Napoleon his throne and they think that similar policy on their part will ultimately lead to our abandonment of their country. We may capture all their cities, but the 8,000,000 people of Mexico will yet remain to be conquered. In my opinion the plan brought forward by Mr. Calhoun, in a speech on the Mexican war in the Senate, is the true one, and it will ultimately be adopted, but not until some 20,000 men and fifty millions of dollars have been sacrificed.”

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p2c1, Col. Doniphan’s Expedition

The expedition of Col. Doniphan, at the head of about a thousand men, from Santa Fe to Chihuahua, and thence, by the way of Monterey, to New Orleans, is perhaps the most remarkable incident of the enemy’s country, at the head of only one thousand men, who met in conflict and overthrew thrice their number, with all the advantages of position on their side, he possessed himself of the capital of one of the most flourishing Mexican States, in which, the authorities having fled, by exercised the governing power until the approaching expiration of the term of service of his gallant comrades compelled him to abandon his conquest. It the expedition has been productive of no permanent results, it possesses all the attractiveness of romance; and its slightest details cannot fail to inspire emotions of admiration and wonder—admiration at the intrepidity of this little band of heroes, adventuring fearlessly into the midst of a hostile people—and wonder that the population of the country, even though unarmed and abandoned by their leaders, had not annihilated them by mere weight of numbers.

Col. Doniphan is described, by the New Orleans National, as “a man of giant frame and of that loose carriage peculiar to the west that deceives the eye as to proportion and strength.” “His officers and men (that paper tells us) have a strange, uncouth appearance: Piece-meal, the ill-made clothing of the volunteers has fallen from them, and they have supplied its place with what chance and the wild beasts of New Mexico have thrown in their way. Their sunburnt faces, grizzly beards, and withal their devil—may—care air, is perfectly irresistible. Yet beneath those rough exteriors are concealed minds of educated and high-toned sentiments, full of lofty thoughts and love of liberty—minds that are destined to be felt in the councils of the nation, and to play a prominent part in the stirring events of the times.”

We have copied from the Picayune a brief sketch of the march of Col. Doniphan’s regiment. In the National we find another, not less interesting, from which, not having room for the whole, we propose to make several extracts.

When Gen. Kearny left Santa Fe for California, he ordered Col. Doniphan to make a campaign against the Navajo Indians, living in the Rocky Mountains between Del Norte and the Pacific Ocean, and who had been at war with the Mexicans for two hundred and fifty years, and lived entirely upon plunder taken from that people. The object of this expedition, which was attended with great toil and labor, was successfully accomplished. A treaty was concluded with the Indians, binding them to keep the peace towards both the Mexicans and Americans. The description given of the Navajoes, and likewise of another tribe, called the Sumai, living near them, possesses great interest, as giving information of the curious habits and customs of a race of people of whom little or nothing is known in the United States. The writer of the narrative says:

“The Navajo Indians are a warlike people, have no towns or houses, or lodges; they live in the open air or on horseback, and are remarkably wealthy, having immense herds of horses, cattle and sheep. They are celebrated for their intelligence and good order. They treat their women with great attention, consider them equals, and relieve them from the drudgery of menial work. They are handsome, well made and in every respect a highly civilized people, being, as a nation, of a higher order of beings than the mass of their neighbors, the Mexicans. About the time Col. Doniphan made his treaty, a division of his command was entirely out of provisions; the Navajoes supplied its wants with liberality. A portion of the command returned to Cuvano; Major Gilpin’s command, together with Col. Doniphan, went to the city of the Sumai Indians living on the Rio Piscow, which is supposed to be a branch of the Geyla, made a treaty of peace between the Sumai and Navajoes, and then returned to the Rio Del Norte.

“These Sumai, unlike the Navajoes, live in a city, containing, probably six thousand inhabitants, who support themselves entirely by agriculture.

“The city is one of the most extraordinary in the world. It is divided into four solid squares, having but two streets crossing its Centre at right angles. All the building are two story high, composed of sun-burnt brick. The first story presents a solid wall to the street; and is so constructed, that each house joins, until one fourth of the city may be said to be one building. The second stories rise from this vast solid structure, so as to designate each house, leaving room to walk upon the roof of the first story between each building. The inhabitants of Sumai enter the second story of their buildings by ladders, which they draw up at night, as a defense against any enemy that might be prowling about. In this city was seen some thirty Albino Indians, who have, no doubt, given rise to the story that there is an albino town in the Rocky Mountains a tribe of white aborigines. The discovery of this city of the Sumains might be prowling about. In this city was seen some thirty Albino Indians, who have, no doubt, given rise to the story that there is an albino town in the Rocky Mountains a tribe of white aborigines.
The city of Chihuahua, the capital of the State of that name, which for several months was the headquarters of Col. Doniphan, contains about 14,000 inhabitants, and is said to be of remarkable beauty. The narrator says:

"It is situated on a plain between two high mountains that rise in the east and west. At the north and south, the country, as far as the eye can see, is open and interspersed with farms. The buildings, many of which are very handsome, are composed of white porphyry, that is easily wrought when first taken from the quarry, but be exposure to the air becomes very hard. The old Spaniards, who originally built it, conveyed from a mountain four miles distant, through a stone canal, the waters of a spring. This abundant fountain rises in the centre of the grand plaza, overflows an octagonal basin, and then pursues its way over the whole city. The plaza is surrounded by seats, with backs carved out of the solid stone. At this place could nightly be seen the entire population of Chihuahua, indulging themselves in gossip and idleness.

"As an evidence of the richness of the mines of Chihuahua, under the Spaniards, it is stated that the magnificent church of that city, which is of immense proportions, and ornamented by three towers of solid stone was built at a cost of six hundred thousand dollars, and that this immense sum was raised by a tax of one bit on every eight dollars coined in the mines. These silver mines are as rich as they ever were, and inexhaustible; but the Indians have driven the Mexicans from the richest of them, and the people are too lazy to work those in their possession.

"When our army left Chihuahua, there was no organized government; the Mexican Governor, Trias, fled on Col. Doniphan’s approach, and left him sole arbiter of the country. Col. Doniphan departed, leaving the city and the State to take care of themselves, a prey to the first aspirant that wished for temporary power."

We alluded yesterday to the sterility of those portions of the Mexican Confederacy, which have been represented as peculiarly desirable, and the acquisition of which we have been told, is to be insisted upon as a sinc qua non, in the negotiation of a treaty of peace—we refer, of course, to New Mexico and the Californias. What sort of "indemnification" they will be for the long and dark catalogue of wrongs and injuries which it is alleged we have sustained at the hands of Mexico, to say nothing of the lives sacrificed and the millions of money expended in the prosecution of the war waged to secure it, maybe learned from the following brief but comprehensive description of the El Dorado which Mr. Polk is so obstinately bent upon embracing within the “area of freedom:

"The country of New Mexico, and the two Californias, are represented by our troops to be perfectly worthless, except for the harbors on the Pacific coast. No Americans will ever make a home in either of the States, and its possessions will be a curse to the country. The whole of it is an arid plain, almost destitute of water, with but here and there a green spot, and never would have been occupied by any civilized people, but for the rage of gold that inspired the early and adventurous Spaniards.

If this brief description give any thing like an accurate idea of the value of the three Mexican provinces, the “annexation” of which to the United States has already been decreed by the American commanders, acting under the orders of the President, we beg to know of any disciple of the “Manifest Destiny” school, what advantage do they promise the people of this Union by their acquisition? We are sometimes tauntingly asked, are we to close this war without being able to pint to our territorial acquisitions, Mexico having nothing else to give, s the remuneration for the blood that has been shed and the treasure that has been expended in its prosecution? We answer the question by another: Shall we prolong the war for the purpose of coercing the Mexican government into a relinquishment of such a country as New Mexico and the Californias, wholly unfit as it is for the habitations of a civilized people, and in which "no American will ever make a home?" If, it be true, as is asserted, and as we believe, that "its possession will be a curse to the country," why shall we continues to fight for it? And especially when, if we annex the barren waste, we re to bring into the Union, with it, the wretched and debased population who procure a precarious subsistence from its parched and sterile soil? In our judgment, were Mexico willing to transfer these provinces without striking another blow, we should act most wisely . . . [illegible] . . . [BJM]

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p2c5, Later From Vera Cruz

The U. S. ship Massachusetts, Capt. Wood, arrived last evening from Vera Cruz whence she sailed on the evening of the 11th inst. The Massachusetts brings over 155 sick and wounded soldiers, under charge of Dr. Tudor, besides the following passengers: Mr. Joseph Harrod, Dr. Tudor, U.S.A. Purser Bryan, of the navy, and Mr. Beeworth and two servants.

The vomita is represented as on the increase at Vera Cruz. We regret extremely to say that Paymaster Bosworth, who sailed from here only on the 18th ult, sickened and died in Vera Cruz of the vomita. His remains were brought back on the Massachusetts in charge of his brother.

Quite the most important intelligence brought by this arrival relates to an attack upon a large train by the Mexican guerrillas, which has been partially successful. By the Fanny we learned that a train was to leave Vera Cruz on the morning of the 5th inst., for Puebla, under command of Lieut. Col. McIntosh. The train had in charge $225,000 in specie, of which sum one hundred thousand belonged to the Paymaster’s Department, the remainder to the Quartermaster’s. One hundred and twenty-five wagons and six hundred pack mules were in the train, which was escorted by 800 troops.

The train left Vera Cruz on the night of the 4th inst., and on Sunday the 6th, when it had advanced about twenty-five miles, it was attacked by a large party of guerrillas.
The place was well selected for the purpose by the Mexican’s being represented as a defile broad enough for a single wagon only. It is said, too, that slight works had been thrown up by the Mexicans to obstruct our advance. The attack was made upon each extremity of the train and upon the centre at the same time, the principal point however being the wagons, which were supposed to contain the specie.

Private accounts represent that the attack was so far successful that forty of our wagons were destroyed—though not those containing the specie—two hundred mules loaded with subsistence were taken, and thirty of our men killed. The American Eagle of the 9th says our loss is variously estimated at from four to twenty, but private accounts, from responsible sources, give the loss as we have done, at thirty men. The check was so severe that Col. McIntosh determined not to hazard an advance without reinforcements. Our troops accordingly entrenched themselves behind their wagons, and despatches were sent off to Cadwalader at Vera Cruz. The General left on Monday evening, the 7th inst., with a force of about five hundred men and four howitzers. Private accounts say further that on the 10th a part of the voltigeurs also left, with four howitzers, to join the train.

The Eagle represents that our troops received the attack with the utmost coolness, and that the enemy, being repulsed, fell back towards the Puente Nacional, which some suppose they may attempt to defend. No later news from the train had been received the morning of the 11th, the day the Massachusetts left. On the 10th a large mail was despatched to this port on the propeller Washington, which may be hourly expected. Her letters may bring us further details.

No later news had been received from the army of Gen. Scott. The reason is obvious; for the present at least the communication has been entirely cut off. We do not regard this as at all alarming, for Gen. Cadwalader will no doubt open a passage to Jalapa at once; but it indicates a necessity for some cavalry force upon the line to clear away the brigands which infest it, and who must have mustered in greater force than had been anticipated to attack a train guarded by 800 troops.

But the audacity of these guerrillas does not stop here. They are entering Vera Cruz and stealing our horses. For several nights alarms had been created in the city by these predatory attempts. Private letters say “that sixty horses were stolen from one pen in the immediate vicinity of the town. A regiment of Texas Rangers, it seems to us, would find ample scope for employment in the vicinity of Vera Cruz.

The Steamers Palmetto and Edith arrived at Vera Cruz on the 8th inst. The schooner Gen. Worth had also arrived with one company of voltigeurs. On the Palmetto a lady is said to have arrived from New Orleans in search of a runaway slave. Her pursuit is represented as successful.

We await anxiously our letters by the Washington.

From the N. O. Bulletin, June 17

On the evening of the 10th, a body of 25 guerrillas made an attack on 14 Americans, and 2 Mexicans, who were in charge of horses, about five miles from the city. The Mexicans not answering to the challenge, were fired upon by the guard and six killed, but they succeeded in carrying off 10 horses. The next morning, the two Mexicans persuaded the second in command, to accompany them in search of the horses, and so soon as they were out of sight of the guard, they hung the officer, and mounting another Mexican on his horse, succeeded in driving off sixty of the best horses. A stronger force was sent from the city, but neither the Mexicans nor horses were to be found.

The route from Vera Cruz was infested, and completely blocked up, by the guerrillas—and communication with Gen. Scott’s army was cut off, and there had been no recent intelligence from him. The road could only be opened by escorts, as all messengers and small parties were wounded and murdered.

On the day the Massachusetts left, there was a report of a new revolution in the city of Mexico, but nothing positive was know, nor how far the report might be depended on.

It was fully believed at Vera Cruz, that there would be another Cerro Gordo battle, after Gen. Scott received his reinforcements, before he could reach the capital.

The vomito existed to a considerable extend, and was increasing; the daily deaths were about 20, chiefly Americans.

The Garrison was weak, but no fears are entertained of an attack, as the Mexicans, from the country, have a greater dread of the vomito, than the Americans.

[BJM]

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p4c1, March to the Rio Grande

If the armed occupation of the territory between the Neuces and the Rio Grande was an act obligatory upon the Administration, in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by the annexation of Texas to the United States, the President is entitled to commendation for ordering Gen. Taylor to take possession of it—although it must be obvious that, even were the obligation admitted, the Administration would not be exempt from censure for permitting so large a portion of the territory of the United States to be held by the Mexicans, from the Spring of 1845, when the act of annexation was consummated, until January 1846, when the order to General Taylor to move to the Rio Grande was given. If the territory belongs to the United States, in virtue of the act of annexation, General Taylor ought to have taken position on the Rio Grande at once, instead of on the Neuces; and doubtless if the former river, instead of the latter, had really been regarded as “the western frontier of Texas,” the order to proceed thither would not have been delayed until the winter of 1846, the Mexicans meanwhile holding quiet possession of our territory, having armed forces in some of the towns, and a custom-house, with its retinue of officers, at Point Isabel. If it be alleged, therefore, that Mr. Polk did no more than his duty in taking armed possession of this territory in January, 1846, it is obvious that he was grossly derelict in his performance for several months previously, while Gen. Taylor remained at Corpus Christi. From this dilemma, it seems to us, there is no escape.

But it is very obvious that the defenders of the Administration are, by no means satisfied that the responsibility of the order given to Gen. Taylor in January, 1846, shall attach to the President, notwithstanding they assert our “clear and unquestionable” title to the territory between the Neches and the Rio Grande quite as boldly as they formerly . . . [illegible] . . . which he performed, of directing the Army of Occupation to take post on the Neches, for the purpose of protecting “the western frontier of Texas,” and which, as late as December, 1845, he informed Congress had been efficiently executed by stationing our army on the Neches! Efforts are now made to transfer this responsibility from the shoulders of the Administration to those of Gen. Taylor, (which it is supposed are broad and strong enough to bear anything,) because, as it is gravely alleged, he recommended the march to the Rio Grande—an allegation than which nothing can be more untrue, or more easily disproved. The National Intelligencer, by a masterly analysis of the correspondence between the War Department and Gen. Taylor has effectually refuted this attempt to make the latter responsible for an act, which, if it were right in itself, and if the champions of the Administration felt no misgivings in regard to its wisdom and propriety, would be rather cited as an evidence of the sagacity of Mr. Polk, than attributed to his commanding officer, of whom, by this course of argument, Mr. Polk is made the mere puppet, instead of the superior!

Extracts from Gen. Taylor’s official letters to the War Department, from August 20, 1845, until the 7th of January, 1846,(the order for his march to the Rio Grande bearing date at Washington on the 13th day of the latter month,) show that throughout that whole period, there had not been the slightest demonstration of hostility on the part of the Mexican troops—indeed, he uniformly represents, as the result of constant inquiries and of information obtained from the most reliable sources, that so far from any reason existing to apprehend any attack from the Mexican forces, the inhabitants on the Rio Grande were peaceably disposed, and anxious for a treaty with the United States. So late as the 7th of January, only six days before the day of the order to advance to the Rio Grande, Gen. Taylor writes: “A recent scout of volunteers from San Antonio struck the rive Presidio Rio Grande, and the commander reports everything quiet in that quarter.” Indeed on the 4th of February, he says, “I have every reason to believe that the people residing on the river are well disposed towards our Government.”

After Gen. Taylor, in pursuance of the order from the War Department, took up his line of march, the whole scene underwent a sudden change, and the contents of his despatches consequently wear a different aspect. He was occasionally met by armed bands of Mexicans, who proclaimed that the advance “would be considered an act of hostility,” and that our troops would “in that case, be treated as enemies.” “The first occasion in which the Mexicans showed themselves in an . . . [illegible] . . . told by Gen. Taylor, was on the 3rd of March, when he had reached the Arroyo Colorado river, against his right to cross which the Adjutant General of the Mexican army, in the name of his nation, protested, as an act of aggression, (such as Mr. Benton, in his celebrated speech on the Tyler treaty, said it would be!) And these manifestations of hostility, now for the first time exhibited, continued until the war commenced by the bombardment of Fort Brown and the battle of Palo Alto.

It is manifest that the march to the Rio Grande, whether wise or unwise, proper or improper, is the true origin of the war. We are not surprised, therefore seeing the grave questions which must arise from the acknowledgment of this fact, at the willingness of the Administration to transfer all the credit of the movement from itself to Gen. Taylor, by an attempt to show that the order to make the movement was given in pursuance of the advice of Gen. Taylor himself. But let us look at the facts, which we condense from the National Intelligencer’s lucid exposition.

Gen. Taylor was ordered, on the 15th of, June 1845, to advance to a point convenient for an embarkation, at the proper time to the western frontier of Texas. Gen. Donelson, our Minister in Texas, had stated that “the most western point occupied by Texas was Corpus Christi. —To that point Gen. Taylor proceeded, and there he remained until the order of the 13th of January 1846, reached him. While he was at Corpus Christi, intimations were frequently given to him that the Rio del Norte was the point of his ultimate destination, our Government claiming that the river was the true boundary between Texas and Mexico, but no positive instructions were given to him to advance. Under these repeated declarations to him that the Executive regarded the Rio Grande as the western boundary of Texas, and that to be his “ultimate destination,” Gen. Taylor wrote the letter of the 4th of October, 1845, which, according to the organs of the Administration, contains the advice or recommendation, to which, three months afterwards, Mr. Polk is alleged to have conformed his action. Let us see whether this letter, taken in connection with the documents to which it refers, is fairly susceptible of the construction given to it.

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p4c2, Great Taylor Meeting

At a large and enthusiastic meeting, held in Knoxville, Tennessee, on the 14th inst. Gen. Taylor was nominated with entire unanimity, for the next Presidency. Judge . . . [illegible] . . . delivered an able speech in support of the nomination, and he was followed by . . . [illegible] . . . formerly a Democratic U. S. Senator from Tennessee, who (says the Knoxville Register) came out boldly in favor of Gen. Taylor, and gave his reasons for being desirous of seeing the old her elevated to the Presidency at the next election.”

Col. Humphrey Marshall, of the Kentucky Volunteers, in a letter to the New Orleans Picayune, states that a formal arrangement was entered into, after the battle of Buena Vista, for the exchange of Majors Gaines and Borland and the officers and men captured with them between Major Bliss and Capt. Fauaco, one of the aides-de-camp of Santa Anna. The Mexican prisoners were at once given up, and a pledge given that the American prisoners should be promptly released, and shipped to the most convenient port in the U. States. He complains of the failure as a flagrant breach of faith, justifying and requiring retaliatory measures.
The intelligence from Mexico leaves no reason to doubt that confusion and disorders are the order of the day in that capital. Among the prominent men arrested is Gen. Almonte, late Minister to the U. States. The Picayune says the cause of his arrest is unknown, but a letter from Vera Cruz to the New Orleans... [illegible]... says he is charged with holding a treasonable correspondence with General Scott.

Captain John Paynor, of Dinwiddie county, came to a sudden and painful death on Thursday last, in the following manner: Having just had a chill, or apprehending one, he went into the office of his brother-in-law, Dr. John H. Edwards, to take a dose of quinine. By a most unhappy accident, he mistook morphine for quinine, swallowed it, and was in a very few minutes numbered with the dead. He was in the bloom of manhood, and has left a widow, and three little children.

June 25, 1847, RWv24i51p4c5, From the City of Mexico

We have seen a letter from one of the American officers now a prisoner in Mexico. It was dated May 28th. He had been promised his liberty again and again, but expected to be released on the 30th beyond a doubt. He writes that Gen. Scott was expected to enter the capital within eight days and he did not anticipate that any formidable opposition would be made to him.

Gen. Worth found in Puebla a large amount of tobacco belonging to the Government. It might readily have been removed, and those by whose fault if fell into our hands are severely censured in the papers.

The papers give several extracts from despatches intercepted with that containing Gen. Scott’s proclamation. They are not all very intelligible and amount to very little.

Whilst exercising supreme power, Santa Anna, on the 22nd ult., directed that every prosecution against military persons should be discontinued, and all accused of offences be at once set at large. The services of such men are thought to be of sufficient importance to the Government to justify this clemency. It looks to us like an attempt of Santa Anna to strengthen himself with the soldiery.

Senor Pacheco was named Minister of Justice on the 27th ult.

In El Republicano of the 28th ult, there is an article upon the defence of the capital and the propriety of removing the seat of Government into the interior. The editor urges upon the authorities to defend the capital to extremities, and says that the work of erecting fortifications is going on actively. But this part of the article is not in his usual bold strain. From the tone of it, and from private letters from the capital which we have seen, we feel persuaded that little opposition to Gen. Scott’s entrance into the city will be made. El Republicano urges strenuously that the seat of Government should at once be transferred.

Then, should the capital fall, it urges, the Government will still exist, and form a centre of union and a rallying point. The editor urges the point with such force that we are persuaded he anticipated no formidable opposition to Gen. Scott’s advance.

In an earlier article upon the subject of the defence of the capital, El Republicano sets down the troops available for the purpose as follows: The garrison then I the capital (the 26th of May) was not far from 10,000 men, while there were to arrive, says the editor, from the State of... [illegible]... We infer from allusions to his article, in El Razonador that the latter paper ridicules the idea of making any defence of the city.

We see nothing in the papers about the formidable works said to... [illegible]... at Rio Frio. We are inclined to the opinion that the resistance anticipated at this point has been much exaggerated. The Mexican papers, which we have seen, say nothing about it, and speak only of the fortifications in the immediate vicinity of the capital. It is mentioned in the papers of the capital that an advance party of Gen. Worth had reconnoitered the road as far as Rio Frio.

The resignation of Gen. Bravo and Riucon were induced by an order of the Government bestowing their command upon Gen. Lombardini during their indisposition. The latter general is not celebrated for genius. Gen. Bravo’s letter to the Government breathes a fine spirit. The only title he retains is that which the people formerly thought him deserving. “Benemerito de la Patria.”

Five hundred infantry, perfectly armed and equipped, arrived in the city of Mexico on the 24th ult from Queretaro. They belonged to the National Guard of that State and were sent to aid in the defence of the capital.

The causes of the arrest of Almonte are not given. El Republicano says that various vague charges are made against him, but it does not name them. Subsequent to his arrest a correspondence between him and the Government was published. On the 21st May, Alcosta, the Minister of War, announced to Almonte that he has been appointed commandant general of the State of Vera Cruz, and directs him to start for Cordova within twenty-four hours.

This note was not delivered till the 22nd. Almonte replies to it by putting various questions to the Government as to the nature and extent of his powers, the forces to be put at his command, etc. He also demands that he may be accompanied by several officers whose names he gives—The Government in reply refers him to Gen. Bravo. This note Almonte answers on the 23rd and makes some new demands. If any reply was made to him we have not seen it, but the next we hear of him is that on the 24th he is placed under arrest and remained a prisoner on the 29th.

We find in the papers an address of the valiant Ampudia to the nation vindicating his conduct at Monterey. AS this worthy is quite well understood and appreciated in the United States, we shall not dwell upon his defence.

We are at a loss to understand these various movements among the military chieftains of Mexico. We have the resignation of Santa Anna, Bravo and Rincon and the arrest of Almonte all within the space of eight of ten days, and the departure of other generals to remote points, and Santa Anna during the time was exercising full away, and extending every indulgence to the soldiery. It looks as though parties were marshalling their forces for a struggle for power among themselves, rather than to defend their country against a foreign foe.

[BJM]
The Mexican-American War and the Media, 1845-1848

Newspapers Images Timelines Bibliographies Documents Project Teams Site Map Search

---

Richmond Whig and Advertiser

July-December

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>January-June 1845</th>
<th>July-December 1845</th>
<th>January-June 1846</th>
<th>July-December 1846</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Index

July

2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c2 Army of the General Taylor
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c2 correspondent at Monterey
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 Letter from General Taylor
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 One day later
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 General Taylor Superceded
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p4c2 Despatches from the Army
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 General Walter Jones
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 General Walter Jones
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 Proposed Treaty
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 Taylor defenses stripped
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 Kentucky Volunteers
2 July 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 attack on train
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p1c2 JQ Adams and the War
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p1c4 Later From the Army
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Intercepted Despatch
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Prospect of Peace
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c4 Correspondence
9 July 1847, RW47v24n55p1c3 LATER FROM THE ARMY
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Correspondence of the Picayune
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 News from Puebla
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 More from Puebla
6 July 1847, RW47v24n54p2c4 Still more from Puebla
23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p2c1 Buchanan and Mexican minister

23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p2c1 An Unwritten Constitution

23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p2c2 War or Peace

23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p2c3 Spy in Washington

23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p2c3 Council of War

23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p4c1 Origin of the War

23 July 1847, RW47v24n59p4c3 Important from Mexico

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p1c3 Americans leave Puebla

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p2c2 Latest from New Orleans

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p2c2 Interesting speculations

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p4c2 Volunteers in Mexico

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p4c3 Escape of Eight American Prisoners

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p4c3 Gleaning from Mexico Papers

27 July 1847, RW47v24n60p4c4 From Mexico City

30 July 1847, RW47v24n61p1c3 Latest from Army of Taylor

30 July 1847, RW47v24n61p1c3 From Chihuahua

30 July 1847, RW47v24n61p4c2 Our Army in Mexico

30 July 1847, RW47v24n61p4c3 From the Rio Grande

30 July 1847, RW47v24n61p4c4 American Prisoners in Mexico

30 July 1847, RW47v24n61p4c4 Santa Anna and Cerro Gordo

August

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p1c1 News from Mexico

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p1c3 Further particulars

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p1c3 Poisoning Americans in Mexico

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p1c4 News from Monterrey

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p4c1 Trist and DeRussy

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p4c2 From Army of Taylor

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p4c4 Important from Vera Cruz and Tampico

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p4c4 Colonel DeRussy

3 August 1847, RW47v24n62p4c4 News from Vera Cruz

6 August 1847, RW47v24n63p1c1 John Minor Botts
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 American prisoners
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 Mexicans defeat Americans at Atlixco
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p1c4 More news from Puebla
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p1c5 Kendall from Puebla
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 Later from Army of Taylor
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 News from General Wool
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 From Buena Vista
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 More from Saltillo
20 August 1847, RW47v24n67p1c1 The Union and the War
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 Atrocity
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c3 News from Vera Cruz and Matamoros
17 August 1847, RW47v24n66p4c3 Captain Aulick
20 August 1847, RW47v24n67p2c1 Security on the Frontier
20 August 1847, RW47v24n67p2c1 The Union and the War
24 August 1847, RW47v24n68p2c3 News from Vera Cruz and Tampico
20 August 1847, RW47v24n67p2p2c Mexican guerrillas
20 August 1847, RW47v24n67p2c4 From Army of Taylor
24 August 1847, RW47v24n68p4c1 Far from peace
24 August 1847, RW47v24n68p4c1 Editorial on War
24 August 1847, RW47v24n68p4c2 General Taylor and the justice of the war
24 August 1847, RW47v24n68p4c3 Mexican Congress and Peace
27 August 1847, RW47v24n69p1c1 Editorial continued
27 August 1847, RW47v24n69p1c3 Polk in Mexico
31 August 1847, RW47v24n70p1c3 Latest from Mexico
31 August 1847, RW47v24n70p2c2 The Union and the War

September
RW24n71p1c3 September 3, 1847, LATER FROM TEXAS
Information from Texas
RW24n71p2c1 September 3, 1847, THE ENQUIRER AND THE MEXICAN WAR
Argument with The Richmond Enquirer about the war with Mexico
RW24n71p4c1 September 3, 1847, A WAR OF CONQUEST
Descriptions of the war in Mexico
RW24n71p4c1 September 3, 1847, PAREDES AND MONARCHY
Discussion that parties in Mexico do not want to become a monarchy

RW24n72p1c1 September 7, 1847, THE CONQUEST OF MEXICO
An article from the New York Express about Mexico

RW24n72p1c3 September 7, 1847 MORE ABOUT CONQUERING MEXICO
Article from the Baltimore Patriot

RW47v24n72p2c3, Septmeber 7, 1847, FROM TEXAS

RW24n72p2c3 September 7, 1847, COL. BENTON AND MR. POLK
Letter to the editor by Col. Benton with a response

RW24n72p2c4 September 7, 1847, IMPORTANT FROM GEN. SCOTT’S ARMY
About a guerilla attack on General Scott’s forces

RW24n72p2c4 September 7, 1847, FROM THE PACIFIC SQUADRON
Information from the squadron off the coast of California

RW24n72p2c5 September 7, 1847, CALIFORNIA PAPERS
Papers from General Kearny and his army

RW24n72p4c2 September 7, 1847, PAREDES
Extract from The Union, a letter from the Secretary of War

RW24n72p4c4 September 7, 1847, LETTER FROM GENERAL TAYLOR
Information from General Taylor's army

RW24n73p1c4 September 10, 1847, FROM THE RIO GRANDE
Letters from the army headquarters at Matamoras

RW24n73p2c5 September 10, 1847, A GLANCE AT A MEXICAN PAPER
Information from the Boletín de las Noticias of Jalapa

RW24n74p1c1 September 14, 1847, THE MEXICAN NEWS
Information that General Scott has been declared president of Mexico

RW24n74p2c1 September 14, 1847, FROM THE SEAT OF WAR
More information on General Scott as president of Mexico

RW24n74p2c1 September 14, 1847, FROM THE VIRGINIA REGIMENT
Two letters from Capt. Robert G. Scott, tells of death of Capt. Fairfax

RW24n72p2c2 September 14, 1847 (no title)
Correspondence of Gen. Z Taylor published in The Raleigh Register

RW24n72p2c3 September 14, 1847, PORTRAITS OF HEROES
Mr. William G. Brown returned home from Mexico with paintings of officers

RW24n72p2c3 September 14, 1847, Death of Sergeant Pollard
DEATH OF SERGEANT POLLARD OF THE 1ST COMPANY OF PETERSBURG VOLUNTEERS
News that Sergeant Pollard died in New Orleans, from the Petersburg Intelligencer

RW24n72p2c4 September 14, 1847, LATER FROM THE ARMY OF GENERAL TAYLOR
Correspondence from The New Orleans Picayune, containing intelligence from Monterey

RW24n72p2c5 September 14, 1847, TEXAS
Various information of Texas, from the New Orleans Commercial Times

RW24n72p4c1 September 14, 1847, THE MEXICAN NEWS
Information that we have entered Mexico City

RW24n72p4c3 September 14, 1847, AMERICAN ARMS AGAIN VICTORIOUS
City of Mexico is at the mercy of the U.S. Forces. Containing letters and official reports from the field
Addressing a rumor that Gen. Paredes has reached Orizaba at the head of 300 men

Information from General Scott's army about a brilliant but bloody victory

About the decimation of South Carolina volunteer regiment

An account of the push towards Mexico City

Information from the Battles of Churubusco and Contreras, editorial correspondence from the New Orleans Picayune, and the stipulations of the armistice between the U.S. and Mexico

Discussion of the Armistice

Information from Vera Cruz

More information concerning Mexico's army, some from the New Orleans Picayune

Letter from an army officer on General Scott's staff, Tacubaya, Mexico

Letters from Tacubaya, Mexico

His manifesto as published in The New Orleans Picayune

About General Taylor's camp and guerrilla fighters

News of Mexico from the New Orleans Picayune

Commentary on the war with Mexico

Information of General Taylor from The New Orleans Picayune

Information of the battle for Mexico City, including a description by Mexicans

Correspondence from the Charleston Mercury concerning Mexico

Very interesting letter from a distinguished officer to his correspondent in Washington

Correspondence from The New Orleans Picayune, concerning Texas

Letter to the New Orleans Picayune from a resident of Tampico

More information on the armistice with Mexico

More information on the armistice with Mexico

Information of the battles for Mexico City, including a description by Mexicans

Correspondence from the Charleston Mercury concerning Mexico

Very interesting letter from a distinguished officer to his correspondent in Washington

Correspondence from The New Orleans Picayune, concerning Texas

Letter to the New Orleans Picayune from a resident of Tampico

More information on the armistice with Mexico
A narrative of the last battles with Mexico

Correspondence from The New Orleans Picayune about Vera Cruz

A letter received from Chihuahua

A letter received from Santa Fe

 Commentary on the War with Mexico and the J.K. Polk administration

About letters from General Taylor's camp in Monterey

Information about the armistice from La Patria

A long letter from a soldier in Mexico

October

Talks about peace treaty being aborted, letter from Triste and Herrera, other letters

Talk of Gen. Taylor being whig candidate for next presidency and other political ambition

Journalist extols virtues of Gen. Taylor

Says government will not offer any more overtures of peace to the Mexican government  too light to read

Letter denouncing the administration

[Washington Union]  brief paragraph about troop movements

[La Patria of NO] terms of the armistice

Says he's a Whig and not a Democrat

Reprint from a soldiers letter in Mexico

Mexican Gen. Salas report about Battle of Contreras

Mexican Gen. Rincon's account

Discusses the validity of claim by U.S., angry that Mexico doesn't acknowledge

Untitled
Short blurb about annexation

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p1c2  The Negotiation
[NY Herald]  letter about Trist and the boundary negotiation

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p1c3  Gen. Taylor’s Correspondence
Extract from Gen. Taylor’s letter

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p1c4  From the Rio Grande
[From N.O. Picayune Oct. 9]  war news and ship arrivals

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p1c4  Battle of Mill of El Rey– Its effects Letter about the battle

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p2c3  Letter from Capt. Bragg
Talks about an unsuccessful assassination attempt

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p2c4  5 days later from Vera Cruz
Letters and war news, mentions a lot of guerrillas attacks on U.S. troops

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p4c2  Speculations
[N.Y. Courier]  condemns Mexico for rejection of treaty proposal

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p4c2  From Gen. Taylor’s Camp
[N.O. Picayune] News from Gen. Taylor’s camp at Buena Vista about problems with deserters

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p4c3  Untitled
Letter describing Scott’s demeanor in battle

Tuesday October, 12 1847  RWv24i82p4c3  Official
Letter to a soldier in Vera Cruz, talks about battles and fights with guerrillas

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p1c2  Mexican Documents
[N.O. Picayune] copy from Diario del Gobierno, letters and information about troop activity and the Irish Regiment captured by the Americans

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p1c3  Untitled

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p1c3  Untitled
[Washington Union]  short remark about Santa Anna returning to Mexico

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p1c3  Mutiny on the Plains
Troops in route to Santa Fe are in open mutiny

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p2c2  Gen. James Hamilton, Jr.
Writing about the death of his brother

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p2c2  Upper California
Soldier talks about dreary conditions of lower California

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p2c2  Incentives to Desertion
[N.O. Picayune] says Santa Anna is offering money to American soldiers to desert

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p2c3  Col. Jefferson Davis
Letter to the President turning down a commission to become Brigadier General

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p2c4  The Late Col. Butler
[Charleston Mercury] letter lamenting the loss of a friend in battle

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p4c2  The Nueces
 Says Whigs gave up title of Nueces to Mexicans, this is rebuttal and condemnation of that

Friday October, 15, 1847  RWv24i83p4c2  Intelligence from Mexico
Says that the rumors of the deaths of Gen.’s Worth, Smith and Pillow were rumors
Friday October, 15, 1847   RWv24i83p4c5   The News from Mexico
[N.O. Picayune] news about the war copied from the N.O. Picayune

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p1c1   The Annexation of Mexico
Article saying that the president might consider taking all of Mexico into the United States, and condemns this possibility

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p1c2   Anecdote of Santa Anna
[Washington Union] story says Santa Anna felt compassion for an enemy officer and let him live even though he had tried to kill Santa Anna

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p1c3   Untitled
Letter to the editor about the safety of the Army

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p1c3   From Frontera and Tabasco
News and ship arrivals from Tabasco

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p1c3   Departure of Troops to Mexico
News of troop movement

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p1c4   From Gen. Wool's headquarters
[N.O. Picayune Oct. 9] arrival of ships and letters. Reporter talks about his expedition with the Army hunting for guerrillas. And other stories from his travels

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p2c2   Gen. Waddy Thompson's views
Opinions from the former Minister to Mexico about the Wilmot Proviso

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p2c2   The Whole or None
The U.S. should take Oregon and Mexico, also lists reasons why the paper disagrees with admitting them into the U.S.

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p2c3   From the South
News about Scott

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p2c4   From the Brazos
[N.O. Bulletin Oct. 11] News and troop movements from other papers

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p2c5   The Mexican Poet
Poem about the Battle of Churubusco

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p4c2   Bloodless Achievement
Polk announces Annexation of Texas is an achievement

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p4c3   The Virginia Regiment
Letters from Mexico, soldier complains about conditions

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p4c3   The Administration Views Opinion about how the war should be handled

Tuesday October, 19, 1847   RWv24i84p4c3   What will the Whigs Do?
What will they do in Congress about Mexican War [too light to read]

Friday October, 22, 1847   RWv24i85p1c1   The Country and the President
About the war and its costs

Friday October, 22, 1847   RWv24i85p1c1   Vigorous Prosecution of the War
Letter calling for a using all forces necessary to fight the war. Says war would be over if we used all our troops at once.

Friday October, 22, 1847   RWv24i85p1c3   A Rich Mexican Mine
Brief, U.S. could soon have a rich silver mine

Friday October, 22, 1847   RWv24i85p1c3   Late and important from Mexico
News from Mexico

Friday October, 22, 1847   RWv24i85p1c6   The Deserters
About Americans deserting

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p2c1   The News from Mexico
News and letters

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p2c1   Return of Gen. Taylor
Might be going back to the United States

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p2c2   Another letter from Gen. Taylor
Letter argues that Gen. Taylor is a Whig, and also might be considering a presidential nomination

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p2c3   Our Victories fully confirmed
[N.O. Picayune Oct 14] Battle reports and list of dead and wounded

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p2c6   Affairs of Vera Cruz and on the Road
Troops movements and battles around Vera Cruz and the National Bridge

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p4c2   The Natural Boundary
Says the problem with getting more territory into Union is bringing into it the Mexican people that lived there

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p4c3   From Texas
Reports of fever and sickness spreading through camp

Friday October, 22, 1847    RWv24i85p4c4   Interesting Mexican Documents
Mexican views about the war, says they should fight a guerrilla war, or even sell California to England to bring them into the war

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p1c1   An Erroneous View
Opinions about the war, debates whether or not parts of Mexico should be included in the United States

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p1c2   Important from Jalapa
News about Mexican War

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p1c3   Additional Mexican News
[N.O. Picayune] Gen. Scott placed Mexico City under martial law, also a list of some of the laws

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p1c5   Correspondence from the army [Washington Union] letter about how U.S. troops are battling guerrillas as they try to take possession of National Bridge

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p1c6   Extracts from a Letter
 {blacked out}

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p2c2   Gen. Pillow
A tribute to Gen. Pillow

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p2c2   Untitled
Eulogy for a soldier killed in battle

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p2c3   Capt. J.B. Magruder
Short tribute letter about a heroic soldier

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p2c3   From Havana
News and letters about Mexico [N.O. Picayune]  too light to read

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p2c3   Later from the Rio Grande
[N.O. Picayune Oct 10]

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p2c4   Letter from Gen. Shields [Union] About battles

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p4c1   Mexican Territory– Northern Sentiment
Opinions about what to do with Mexican territory taken in the war

Tuesday October, 26, 1847    RWv24i86p4c2   Santa Anna
Short blurb about Santa Anna
Tuesday October, 26, 1847  RWv24i86p4c2   Gen. Pillow and Shields
Tribute to two fallen officers

Tuesday October, 26, 1847  RWv24i86p4c2   Virginia Officers
Casualty report of Virginia Officers and battle reports

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p1c1   Views of Gen. Waddy Thompson Thompson was minister to the Mexican Republic. His thoughts on the war
 too light to read

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p1c3   Vigorous Prosecution of the War
Thinks war is too peaceful, it must be more “warlike”

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p1c3   Capt. Larkin Smith
Letter from soldier, talking about his condition

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p2c1   Congress and the War
Argues against taking all of Mexico and its inhabitants into the United States

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p2c2   Reveling in the Halls
Letter from Gen. Smith letting people know he is not dead as previously reported

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p2c3   Untitled
Eulogy of a fallen soldier

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p4c1   Mexican Whigs Mexico wants boundary at the Nueces, says territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande should be neutral ground

Friday October, 29, 1847  RWv24i87p4c1   Gen. Wool's Army
 too light to read

November

RWv24i88p1c1 Monday, November 1, 1847, The Herkimer Convention

RWv24i88p1c2 Monday, November 1, 1847, The Philadelphia Inquirer contains

RWv24i88p1c2 Monday, November 1, 1847, Official notice is given in the Washington papers

RWv24i88p1c2 Monday, November 1, 1847, An extract of a letter from Major Turnbull

RWv24i88p1c2 Monday, November 1, 1847, Official notice is given in the Washington papers

RWv24i88p1c2 Monday, November 1, 1847, A letter from Tampico to the Baltimore Sun

RWv24i88p1c2 Monday, November 1, 1847, Major Downing

RWv24i88p2c3 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, Letter from Capt. Harper

RWv24i88p2c3 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, We lay before our readers

RWv24i88p2c3 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, The New Orleans Delta gives the following

RWv24i88p2c3 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, Gen. Kearney has arrived

RWv24i88p2c4 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, A letter from Buena Vista

RWv24i88p2c5 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, Late from Vera Cruz

RWv24i88p2c5 Tuesday, November 2, 1847, Five Days Later News from Vera Cruz

RWv24i88p4c1 Saturday, October 30, 1847, The adroitness with the people
Saturday, October 30, 1847, Gen. Gaines and the War
Saturday, October 30, 1847, The Union and Gen. Scott
Saturday, October 30, 1847, The State of the War
Saturday, November 6, 1847, We have filled our columns
Saturday, November 6, 1847, We have later accounts from Texas Saturday, November 6, 1847, Trial of Col. Fremont
Saturday, November 6, 1847, Annexation and its Consequences
Saturday, November 6, 1847, From the Plains and Santa Fe
Saturday, November 6, 1847, Arrival of the Steamship Alabama
Saturday, November 6, 1847, Important Mexican Documents
Saturday, November 6, 1847, From the Rio Grande and Saltillo Monday, November 8, 1847, Effect of acquiring Territory on the South
Monday, November 8, 1847, The Spirit of Jefferson
Monday, November 8, 1847, Trial of Col. Fremont
Monday, November 8, 1847, Mr. Calhoun and his friends
Monday, November 8, 1847, General Taylor
Monday, November 8, 1847, Mexican Whigs
Monday, November 8, 1847, From Vera Cruz
Monday, November 8, 1847, Trial of Col. Fremont
Monday, November 8, 1847, From the Rio Grande
Monday, November 8, 1847, From Gen. Wool's Headquarters
Monday, November 8, 1847, Later from Santa Fe
Thursday, November 11, 1847, The Fremont Court Martial
Friday, November 12, 1847, Defensive Line – No Territory
Friday, November 12, 1847, Mr. Clay and Gen. Taylor
Friday, November 12, 1847, General Scott
Friday, November 12, 1847, The New York Sun publishes a letter
Friday, November 12, 1847, The third regiment of Tennessee Volunteers
Friday, November 12, 1847, The last Alabama papers inform us
Friday, November 12, 1847, Col. Fremont's Trial
Friday, November 12, 1847, The Fremont Court Martial
Friday, November 12, 1847, From Texas
Wednesday, November 10, 1847, Northern Sentiment
RWv24i91p4c4 Wednesday, November 10, 1847, Prosecute the War Vigorously RWv24i91p4c4 Wednesday, November 10, 1847, Latest from Santa Fe
RWv24i92p1c1 Monday, November 15, 1847, Executive Patronage
RWv24i92p1c2 Monday, November 15, 1847, We learn, by a letter
RWv24i92p1c2 Monday, November 15, 1847, The veteran Colonel Bankhead
RWv24i92p1c3 Monday, November 15, 1847, The Fremont Court Martial
RWv24i92p1c5 Monday, November 15, 1847, The News from Mexico
RWv24i92p2c1 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Gen. Scott's Despatches
RWv24i92p2c1 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Mr. Kendall's Letters
RWv24i92p2c1 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Trial of Col. Fremont RWv24i92p2c1 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, The Charleston Mercury states that RWv24i92p2c2 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Gen. Taylor
RWv24i92p2c2 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Com. Stockton and Gen. Kearny
RWv24i92p2c2 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Most of the new regiments
RWv24i92p2c2 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, From the Brazos
RWv24i92p2c3 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Later from Tampico
RWv24i92p2c4 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Mr. Kendall's Letters from the Army
RWv24i92p2c6 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Mexican Political Affairs
RWv24i92p2c6 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, From Vera Cruz
RWv24i92p2c6 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Santa Anna
RWv24i92p2c7 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, The Battle of Huamantia
RWv24i92p3c1 Tuesday, November 16, 1847, Mr. Clay's Lexington Speech
RWv24i92p4c1 Saturday, November 13, 1847, Mr. C. C. Cambreling's Speech
RWv24i92p4c2 Saturday, November 13, 1847, From the Seat of War
RWv24i92p4c2 Saturday, November 13, 1847, The President of the United States
RWv24i92p4c3 Saturday, November 13, 1847, The Fremont Court Martial
RWv24i92p4c3 Saturday, November 13, 1847, Later from Mexico
RWv24i92p4c4 Saturday, November 13, 1847, The Fremont Court Martial
RWv24i93p1c1 Thursday, November 18, 1847, Mr. Clay's Resolutions
RWv24i93p1c1 Thursday, November 18, 1847, Official Dispatches
RWv24i93p1c2 Thursday, November 18, 1847, Pena y Pena and Santa Anna
RWv24i93p1c3 Thursday, November 18, 1847, A letter from Vera Cruz
Wednesday, November 24, 1847, Policy of the Administration

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, The National Dept

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, The Syracuse (N.Y.) Journal publishes a letter

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, Annexation

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, Among the recent deaths

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, The second regiment of Tennessee Volunteers

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, Lieutenant Shackelford

Wednesday, November 24, 1847, Major Iturbide – Son of a former Mexican President

Monday, November 29, 1847, The Charleston Courier – a neutral paper

Monday, November 29, 1847, A Washington correspondent of the New York Herald

Monday, November 29, 1847, The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce

Monday, November 29, 1847, Cost of the War

Monday, November 29, 1847, Lieut. Sidney Smith

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, Mr. Clay's Speech

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, Referring to the vehemence

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, In February last, Mr. Calhoun

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, On Friday last, the examination

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, The New Orleans papers announce

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, Gen. Samuel Houston in out in

Tuesday, November 30, 1847, From Mexico

Saturday, November 27, 1847, Opinions of Mr. Clay's Speech

Saturday, November 27, 1847, South Carolina ––– "Signs!"

December

December 3, 1847, California
Difference of opinion about the value of California; might have cost 1/2 million to gain California; only portion of drafted men have been paid; delay of payments is cause of insurrections in California; Com. Stockton has offered to go to Lima to borrow the money but Col. Biddle will not allow him

December 3, 1847, Fremont's Trial
Lt. Col. Emory under examination; he has been showing strong hostility to questions; his testimony has not altered the previous aspect of the case

December 3, 1847, Resolutions have been adopted by NY to give thanks to Scott and the army, and inviting Taylor to visit the state during his leave of absence from Mexico

December 3, 1847, Lieut. John M. Gardner of the US Navy died; death caused by an attack which required him to return home from the Gulf Squadron

December 3, 1847, Mr. Clay and Gen. Taylor
Mr. Clay and Gen. Taylor are friends
Telegraphic despatch reports that D.R. Miller has been elected Governor of Texas.

The Philadelphian Pennsylvanian of yesterday says Hon. John Y Mason, Secretary of the Navy and Commodores Warrington and Smith arrived at the United States Hotel yesterday and left for NY on official business this morning.

Colonel Wynkoop the commander of the Pennsylvania Regiment in Mexico has written a letter in which the Whigs are violently assailed and accused of moral treason; object of the writer was to please the President.

Report to Adjutant General by Major Lally about the operations of his command on the march from Vera Cruz to Jalapa; comments on engagements with the enemy at Paso Ovejas, the national Bridge, Cerro Gordo, and Las Animas, near Jalapa; comments about troops under his command, number of dead and wounded.

At a meeting held in Cincinnati of men of all parties, Mr. Clay's resolution on the Mexican war was adopted by the majority of the Whig population that was present.

Swords created for Generals Taylor, Butler and Col. Barber; gives a description of the swords.

Comments about Clay's position on war in 1812; and on his position dealing with the War in Mexico; he was unfavorable to both wars from the beginning, he supported the war of 1812 once it began and he holds Mexico partly to blame for the current war.

Comments about the administrations and its supports stance on the war–what they blame the war on; comments on the administrations dealing with Taylor advancing to the Rio Grande–who's idea was it?

Statement issued by the Treasury Department about the cost of the war with Mexico; gives figures; comments about what the government plans to do about the growing expenses.

Letter from Lexington Ky. States that the Rev. Robert J. Breckenridge preached a thanksgiving sermon in the city with a very warlike tone towards Mexico; he looks to overthrow the catholic hierarchy after the US wins the war.

Com. Stockton and his arrival in the city; information on incidents in California–the Commodore's actions in Cali

Arrival of Col. Harney's train at Vera Cruz; return home of Gens. Quitman, Shields,Cols. Harney, Garland; organization of the Mexican Congress; removal of the Mexican government from Querataro Morelia; information on where troops are stationed; arrival of Gen. Butler at Vera Cruz; no positives on the whereabouts of Santa Anna; election of the president has been postponed in Mexico

Trial of Col. Fremont drags on; witness for the prosecution have all been examined by Fremont's counsel; comments about Lieut. Emory's hostility toward the Col.; Lt. Emory has been summoned by the defense.

Letter of Capt. Wm. H. Merrill from the army outside Mexico City; information on a young Virginian–tells a story about Burwell's murder.

Statement about Gen. Pillow; Pillow made untrue statements in his reports

Letter from Captain Wilkes who commanded the exploring expedition; comments on the Pacific harbors–that they are not as good as the ones in the East

Mr. Kendall's Letters from the Army
Comments about the weather; report that there aren't enough members in the Mexican Congress; member of Congress has come out denying Pena y Pena as President; earthquake in Guadalazars was violent; comments about a Mexican reporter's article on the daughter of a Mexican Officer–details on what happened to the report after the article; rumors that there is to be a meeting among the influential men about raising troops and supplies to fight the...
Americans; ends with more comments about the weather

RWv24i97p4c6, December 3, 1847, Later from Vera Cruz
Report of the capture of a suspicious vessel–US Steamer brought into port a Spanish topsail schooner; Taylor accompanied by Wool left for Monterey on the 8th of November

RWv24i97p4c6, December 3, 1847, Latest from Santa Fe
Col. Newby was about to move South because of the approaching winter; wagons at Los Vegos had skirmishes with Mexicans and Indians–Americans had no losses, but the attacking party lost several men, and horses

RWv24i98p1c1, December 7, 1847, Mr. Gallatin and the War
Comments about an essay Mr. Gallatin wrote about the war with Mexico; gives quotes which tell Mr. Gallatin's opinion about the war–seems to view the war as unfair and wrong

RWv24i98p1c1, December 7, 1847, Reception of General Taylor
Preparation for Taylor's arrival in New Orleans are underway; sword made for him will be presented when he arrives in New Orleans

RWv24i98p1c2, December 7, 1847,
Celebrated letter of "Leonidas" in which Major General Gideon J. Pillow is made the hero of the Mexican campaign has fallen into the hand of Gen. Scott

RWv24i98p1c2 December 7, 1847,
Rumored that Col. Burnett of the NY Regiment will be appointed Brigadier General; will Col. Wynkoop be disappointed?

RWv24i98p1c3, December 7, 1847,
New Orleans Bulletin has learned from officers who have just arrived from Mexico there thoughts on finding peace; there exists a great diversity of opinion

RWv24i98p1c3, December 7, 1847,
Sickness of Major Graham a member of the Fremont court Martial has suspended the proceedings

RWv24i98p1c5, December 7, 1847, Honor to the Brave! Serenade
Citizens in New Orleans gathered in front of the St. Charles Hotel and gave a serenade to the distinguished officers who had just arrived from Alabama, from the seat or war–Gen. Quitman, Shields and Col. Harney

RWv24i98p2c1, December 7, 1847, Governor's Message
Comments about letters received from Taylor about Resolutions adopted by the Virginia general assembly, giving honor to the gallant soldiers; gives congratulations about the success in Mexico; comments on the health and condition of the volunteers there; comments about what should happen with the Mexico–US policy towards it

RWv24i98p2c7, December 7, 1847,
News has arrived that Capt. Calwell died in September at Jalapa from a wound that he received soon after he reached Mexico

RWv24i98p2c7, December 7, 1847; From Washington (begins on 2nd page and ends on 3rd page)
Report that the administration might send a new commissioner to Mexico in place of Triste; suppose to be composed of four or five men, and Bishop Huges and Mr. Crittenden might be appointed; is not believed that this will be more successful than Triste.; Santa Anna was first Polk peace commissioner and that obviously didn't work

RWv24i98p3c2, December 7, 1847, From the Army of Gen. Taylor
Mail from Buena Vista, Monterey and Cerralvo; Lt. Col. Webb had a scouting party fall to guerrilla chief Elmojah Martinus and his party, but in the fight Martinus was killed; many guerrillas near Cerralvo under Ganales, Bosques, Mendez, Arispe, Col. Travinia and other; Gen. Taylor expected at Cerralvo on the 10th; Col. Hamtramck has been in command of the troops at Encantada, Buena Vista and Saltillo by Gen. Wool until further orders

RWv24i98p4c1, December 7,1847: Mexico and Slavery
Comments about the slavery of the Texas state; Africans if slavery is abolished can leave through Texas, into Mexico and down in Central America; if Texas is not a slavery holding state, then it will be a refuge for the Africans when it was really suppose to be their outlet

RWv24i98p4c1, December 7, 1847,
Rumored that Mr. Calhoun will not stick to his policy of withdrawing troops to a defensive line butwill bring forward some new way of ending the war and the boundary question.

RWv24i98p4c2, December 7, 1847,
Objection to the acquisition of Mexican territory applies to the diminished force to Upper California; the area can be taken without involving the issue of slavery–this can be done by allowing California to be its own independent
RWv24i98p4c2, December 7, 1847: A Prediction
If Mexico continues without a recognized government and refuses to adopt the peace terms given by the US then the Americans will take the defensive line policy; people think that at this Congress the war will be ended

RWv24i98p4c2, December 7, 1847,
Meeting of the Whig of the city and county of Philadelphia will be held to respond to the resolution of Mr. Clay on the Mexican War

RWv24i98p4c2, December 7, 1847, The 'Beautiful and Unfortunate!'
A letter from Texas describing the beauty of the area

RWv24i98p4c2, December 7, 1847, Gen. Kearny and Com. Stockton
The Fremont trial might cause personal conflict between Kearny and Stockton; letter have been written to friends to urge them to help prevent any conflict between Kearny and Stockton; comments about Fremont’s guilt

RWv24i99p1c1, December 10, 1847, The Governor’s Message
Not expecting the governor to comment on brining the war to an end; he is in favor of occupation and looks forward to a time when the US will extend to the Isthmus of Darien; anxious to annex part of Mexico; quotes of the governor's about the inhabitants of Mexico

RWv24i99p1c1, December 10, 1847, The Fremont Trial
Col. Fremont's counsel opened their defense; submitted a large mass of documents–some are letters showing that Fremont followed orders given by Com. Stockton

RWv24i99p1c2, December 10, 1847, Reported that the Whig had stated that Taylor might be nominated for president–denied, said that they never stated it

RWv24i99p1c2, December 10, 1847, General Taylor
Taylor arrived at Matamoros on the 18th and he will leave from there for New Orleans; preparations are underway in New Orleans for his arrival; comments about how Taylor might act or think about the New Orleans reception for him

RWv24i99p1c4, December 10, 1847, The Latest from the Rio Grande Reports on the movement of Gen. Taylor; what troops are going where, how many there are etc.

RWv24i99p1c3, December 10, 1847, From the City of Mexico
Rumors of peace in Mexico City; report that the majority are in favor of peace; earthquakes are present and frequent in Mexico; village of Octola was destroyed by an earthquake a few days ago

RWv24i99p1c3, December 10, 1847, Fighting the Mexicans with New Weapons
Religious men are trying to exert a new kind of influence in Mexico; American Tract Society have sent large quantities of instructive tracts to Mexico; Catholic Bishop so pleased with one of the tracts that he had it printed for the public; two liberal donations have allowed the Society to send a man to the country

RWv24i99p1c4, December 10, 1847, Later from Vera Cruz
Santa Ana to return to the government–problems with his previous resignation; Santa Ana said that he never did resign entirely; no separation between civil and military so Santa Ana wears his military uniform; Pena y Pena's removal of Santa Ana has been decided as being void; no one can land in Vera Cruz as a transport unless his belongs to the army or navy; reports on the movement of Gen. Butler and Gen. Patterson; much has been done about breaking up the guerrillas

RWv24i99p1c4, December 10, 1847, President's Message
Comments about the peace process with Mexico–Mexico having rejected the peace offer; Mexico began the war; comments about what Polk did after he learned of Mexican hostility; comments about the army–gives praise; comments about the affairs in California–why it would be good for the US to take Upper California; comments about the terms of peace presented by the Mexicans; comments about the official stance on the border is

RWv24i99p2c2, December 10, 1847, Clay Meeting in Philadelphia
Resolutions passed by the meeting in Philadelphia; resolutions deal with the war with Mexico–no in favor of it and what should be done to stop it

RWv24i99p2c1, December 10, 1847,
Believed by all that the march of Taylor to the Rio Grande caused the war with Mexico

RWv24i99p2c2, December 10, 1847, Mexican Political Speculation
Comments about the events within the Congress of Mexico; attacks on Paredes have been found in several papers; comments about positions that the army has been ordered to take; all papers attribute to Pena y Pena the design of getting rid of the old army
December 10, 1847, Arrival of Gen. Taylor at New Orleans
Report that Taylor has arrived in New Orleans; Taylor will enter the city tomorrow; more comments about the atmosphere of the city; a letter sent to Taylor invites him to be the guest of the city

December 14, 1847, Reception of Gen. Taylor in New Orleans
Description of Taylor as he arrived, what he did, his character etc. reception being postponed to the 3rd of December; comments about changes made to the reception of Taylor—where Taylor will ride his horse and in what order; Taylor's horse is sick, so Taylor might have to ride a brown horse instead; comments about how the 3rd of December must have been a joyous day

December 14, 1847, Troops for Mexico
Boat has been chartered to take troops now at Fort Monroe to Vera Cruz; wish these Virginians a pleasant voyage and victory on the field; hope that Virginians will conduct themselves in a manner worthy of the state

December 14, 1847, All misunderstanding between Gen. Kearney and Com. Stockton have been explained away

December 14, 1847, Oregon
Congress has not established a territorial government in Oregon; extension of mail into Oregon; US will not abandon the people of Oregon; believe that the US can profit from Oregon; President will direct US vessels of war to visit Oregon ports—letter to John M. Shively appointed Deputy Postmaster in Oregon

December 14, 1847, Gen. Worth and American Prisoners
Letter to Gen. Worth from American officers recently imprisoned by the Mexicans; writing because they had been offered up for release at the battle of Buena Vista but the US army said no;

December 14, 1847, The President's Message
Opinion about the President's statements on the Mexican War; comments on how the began

December 14, 1847, Fremont trial still in progress; Com. Stockton was examined today

December 14, 1847, New Orleans Delta is regarded as the favorite organ of Gen. Gid. Pillow

December 14, 1847, Sword made for Gen. Taylor was presented to him by Gov. Johnson and the Legislature of Louisiana; quote of the address given by Taylor after the presentation

December 14, 1847, General Taylor
Taylor left New Orleans yesterday; comments about Taylor's presence and how it effected the city

December 14, 1847, The Reception of General Taylor
Description of the reception of Taylor in New Orleans—very detailed—what things looked like, how things were decorated, when Taylor arrived (time), description of the vessels, address the Mayor gave to Taylor, who was there

December 14, 1847, The Dinner
Description of the dinner held in honor of Taylor; list of toasts given; activities that took place after dinner

December 14, 1847, Col. Henry T. Washington has been promoted to fill the office vacated by Brigadier General J. R. Wallace; comments about Washington's character

December 14, 1847, Gen. Taylor leaves New Orleans this morning headed towards his home in Baton Rouge; he asked for his leave while the situation in Mexico is quiet

December 14, 1847, Letter from Mexico talking about the extensive system of field fortification that exists around Mexico City

December 14, 1847, Report of the Secretary of War
Comments by the Secretary of War about the War with Mexico—gives details about battles, troops and movements of the army; gives suggestions for provisions for payment; suggestions made about raising troops, improving medical; comments about Indian affairs and what to do about them—very detailed (takes up all of page 4)
More remarks about the President's speech; comments about the boundary of Texas—what happened causing Taylor to advance to the Rio Grande.

Capt. E. C. Carrington Jr. of the Virginia Volunteers has been ordered to report to Fortress Monroe with the men he has enlisted.

New Orleans Delta gives a glowing account of Gen. Taylor's ascent up the river to his plantation.

Editor of the Boston Atlas contradicts the authority that stated that Adams was in favor of annexation of all of Mexico.

Quote for the Trenton State Gazette that says that Mexico caused the war—comments about how that is not true.

Comments about Taylor for president—why Taylor is worth the nomination; commitment of the paper to neither candidate; why Taylor could not be elected.

More comments about the President's remarks about Mexico beginning the war—how the President supports his claims and how they cannot possibly prove true; letters written by those who visited Texas stating that the Nueces is the boundary.

Give a table of figures; President ordered money to be raised in Mexico to be used to help support the war effort there—will enforce duties; is not known how large a sum can be gathered from these duties—gives reasons for why the duties might raise a lot of money; if money cannot be raised to fund the war a growing debt will occur; favor of establishing a port entry in Oregon.

Comments about Taylor being nominated for the Presidency.

Several recruiting officers arrived in Santa Fe to recruit 800 to fill up battalions from Illinois and St. Louis; fifteen hundred troops and twelve pieces of artillery were to be despatched against Chihuahua; American troops will meet with resistance; Col. Gilpin arrived with his battalion; Col. Price expected to started to Santa Fe by December 1st; arrival at St. Louis has suffered because of the cold.

Comments about political elections in Mexico; how the Congress feels about the elections; comments about the inaugural address of President Anaya; Scott has been issued the order to demand payment from the Mexicans for the cost of occupying their country until the Mexicans sue for peace.

Appears to be in god health but skinny and therefore conclude that our troops are having a hard time in Mexico.

Taylor expresses admiration and friendship for Mr. Clay, but they disagree on Mexico.

Santa Anna has issued another pronunciamento against the provisional government and called on the country to organize men and renew the war; reports on the Louisiana battalion of Mounted Men running in with some guerrillas; successful expedition of Capt. Kerr; comments on rumors and conditions of troops.

Indian population in the neighborhood of Huajtla has risen upon the troops; comments about the US steamer Gen. Butler; loss of the Barque Dunlap.

Santa Anna in charge of 18,000 men and threatening to overthrown the Congress; Gen. Worth sent to Queretaro to protect the Congress; Gen. Anaya elected President of Mexico, comments on who he kept in his cabinet; arrest of Gen. Worth, Gen. Pillow and Lieut. Col. Duncan by Gen. Scott; a letter from Mexico about the political activities there—Santa Ana's complaining; reports of guerrilla activity.

Train will leave for Vera Cruz; no officers can leave unless given permission, wound and sick who can travel can go. home; honorable discharges can leave on the first train as well; 1st Regiment of US Artillery will go to Vera Cruz to escort the wagon train and upon its arrival this regiment will relieve 1st Infantry at the garrison.

Orders that the army will raise money in Mexico to support the war until Mexico sues for peace; army will not pay rent, if rent is charged the army will just take buildings to house their men in; martial law order.

The Maria Burt has driven ashore north of Vera Cruz; two teamsters were executed in Jalapa for the murder of a young Mexican; Gen. Pena y Barragan has been appointed military commander of the State of Vera Cruz; trains left under the command of Gen. Butler; members of Congress unhappy with the election of the president in Mexico gave up their seats; pronunciamiento has been made by Santa Ana; Santa Ana leaving for Queretaro–expecting to hear news of the overthrow of the government; comments about guerrillas again.

Printed in the paper are views of Albert Gallatin on the Mexican war; cannot fit all so they will be concluded tomorrow.

Malek Adhet captured by the US was sold at auction; San Francisco intolerably warm; people of San Francisco elected a town Council–list of who was elected; passing of ordinance–desertion of seamen, enticing sailors from ships or aiding in their desertion, gets a labor penalty; emigration to California will not exceed ninety wagons this year; mountain snow might be difficult to pass; emigration to Oregon is still going.

Taylor gives up command because he received a leave of absence; Wool is now in charge.

Infamous and horrid massacre of Indians by American soldiers; description of the event.

More comments about Taylor and the nomination for president; what Taylor’s political affiliation is.

Democratic war meeting was said to have been a disaster; held in Philadelphia on Saturday.

Died from burns; fought at Palo Alto where he lost an arm.

Comments about Taylor and his interactions around women–proves to be timid.

Comments about conquering the Mexicans–what that would mean for them and for Americans; Americans have a false hope about conquering the Mexicans; comments about the Texas border will be the biggest problem for peace; what should be done to get peace.

Report of a fight between American troops and the Camanches.

All the papers give much attention to the Mexican war; congress has assembled at Queretaro, Anaya voted President; train expected in Puebla which is said to be escorting troops; all in favor of the continuation of hostilities save those of Puebla and Mexico; list of the ministers in the new administration.

Adopted that the Whig General Assembly finds Taylor an acceptable candidate for president.

Debate between Mr. Clay and other senators about the conquest of Mexico, and the annexation of territory – very detailed, is a dialogue between the men.
The opinion of Albert Gallatin about what is required for a peace with Mexico; problems with the US stance on the situation—such as the border of Texas; history of what has already taken place dealing with negotiations and the war in general; what the US should be doing.

He is in Richmond with his family; fought in the Mexican war.

Report on the meeting held about the war on Monday night—what was discussed, what happened, summary of Mr. Seldon’s speech; also the complete speech given by T M Bleakely.

Order of Col. Gates that state that ship stationed at Altamira use their best efforts to protect all traders, regardless of their nationality; escort ships—those both coming and going.

Comments on Mr. Botts resolution presented to the representatives of Congress—gives a list of the resolutions included in Mr. Botts resolution; there was also a resolution submitted by Mr. Toombs of Georgia—lists the one resolution; comments about Mr. Gaines vote in the Senate and opinion about the war.

More comments about the debate between Clay and Taylor for the presidential nomination; comments about Taylor’s political affiliation, character, ability etc.

Comment that most of the paper consists of war news.

Report of the arrests of Worth, Pillow and Duncan; Twiggs was to have come down by train from Mexico but because of the arrest of Worth was detained; occupation of our naval forces in Mazatlan and Guaymas; correspondent alludes to a protest by the English Government against forced loans from English resident in Mexico.

Report on the revolt Chiapas; newspaper called the Yankee Doodle appeared yesterday; all in favor of peace but the Governor of San Luis; Anaya has no line of policy; Gen. Busramente has been nominated by the Supreme Government general-in-chief of the army of reserve, and commandant general of the state; announcement of Santa Anna making himself head of an armed force to prevent negotiations of peace with the Americans; general orders given by Scott; other information about the conduct of American soldiers.

Difficulty of prominent officers appears to have been a quiet a problem; orders by Scott about the conduct—letters bad-mouthing the army are forbidden; false credit for achievements not honorable; Duncan replied with a letter stating he wrote the letter which has been described as scandalous and he calls for justice for Gen. Worth; after the publication of that letter Duncan was arrested and then Pillow the next day; Gen. Pillow might not have been arrested for the letter writing.

Weather report; Col. Wynkoop left town to find the head of the guerrilla forces; he returned with a group of men; Col. Rebolledo confesses that he was taken prisoner at Vera Cruz but then released, he was at Cerro Gordo but was taken prisoner there, the Capt did not go further than Jalapa because that was where his family was; Lieut. Ambrosia Alcaldo said he belonged to the 11th Mexican Infantry and was taken prisoner at Vera Cruz; Wynkoop’s scouting party learned that 800 troops were on their way from Orizabab to attack the train at Passo la Bejia.
Mr. F War bearer of despatches from Col. Mason passed through the city yesterday; the Columbus was to sail home and she may be expected in a month; at Panama Mr. war found Col. Barton with his family.

They passed through the city on the way to Washington; in a hurry and could not stay; they are going to return quickly so that the citizens can gives honors to them.

War offices have received trophies of war; two beautiful brass wall pieces sent by Scott; black flag of the guerrillas.

Number in navy will be reduced at end of the war; report that commerce is not begin disrupted; Ohio has orders to remain at the Rio until the 15th of November; men under Com. Stockton have entered Cuidad de los Angeles—squadron in the Gulf has captured a number of ships; have been collecting duties since the taking of Vera Cruz; strengthening of the army through transportation; comments about mail service between Ohio and the Atlantic states.

His recent essay about Mexico has brought him again prominently before the people.

Whigs in Georgia decided to hold a State Convention to determine their presidential candidate; meeting held by friends of Taylor.

Arrival of the British Steamer Teviot below New Orleans; Gen. Patterson and his large train in the City of Mexico; rumors of peace.

Col. John Garland, Lieut. Johnson of Chesterfield and Lieut. Worcester of Massachusetts were welcomed by the House of Delegates; address given by Mr. Floyd; all men had served in the Mexican War.

German settlers in Fayette county have divided into opposing faction, have armed and are preparing for combat; conflict broke out a few weeks ago and many have been killed and wounded all ready.

Report of a successful revolution in Oajaca; disturbances in Guanajuato continue; Gen. Ampudia arrived at San Luis Potosi; Gen. Urrea is in Tula de Tamulipas; Gen. Scott visited the archbishop; Paredes is looked upon with strong suspicion by the Mexican people; Cap. Sanderson discovered the whole apparatus and machinery which has been used in casting cannon near Molino del Rey; a greaser was whipped in the plaza; 4th, 5th, and 6th Infantry paraded in the principal plaza; three propositions have been passed to the first reading in Congress; Senor Anaya has nominated don Manuel Pena y Pena for Minister of Relations; wagon–master and teamster hung in plaza; Gen. Patterson has been implored by the population of the town to pardon a condemned man; El Monitor Republicano published the details of the bombardment and capture of Guaymas—details on the capture; on 22nd of February the last sacraments of the Catholic church were given to Gen. Herrera at Queretaro; conflict between Texan Rangers and a band of Camanches—details; Col. Gates has issued an order to the troops at Atamara to protect and escort any considerable number of traders; Governor of Tampaulpias has denounced Urrea; some of the dragoon companies have flanked out in the direction of Victoria; weather update.

July 1847

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c2 Army of the General Taylor

[From the N.O. Picayune, June 24]

From the Army of the General Taylor.

The fashion touched at Brazos Santiago on the 20th inst., on her voyage from Vera Cruz, and brought over thence the following gentlemen: Col. J P Taylor, of the Sub. Assistance Department; Capt. Chase, Adjutant Caldwell, 2d Kentucky Regiment; and Lieuts. Wooster, Montgomery, Allen and Mizner, of the army. The Fashion also brought over about forty discharged soldiers.

From the Flag of the 19th inst. We learn that Capt. Eaton relieves Col. Taylor in the charge of the Subsistence Department, and will make his head–quarters at Brazos Island. Major Colquhoun acts as subsistence agent at Matamoros. The Flag makes grateful mention of Col. Taylor’s services while stationed there.
Major Ben McCulloch has arrived at the Brazos with 150 horses for the service. Fifty of them, says the Flag, will be reserved for his own spy company, and the rest probably used in mounting Col. Butler’s dragoons. The Flag suggests that Col. B. should range the country between Matamoros and Victoria.

Capt. W. R. Andrews, of the 10th Infantry, has been ordered North on account of sickness, resulting from injuries received in the wreck of the Mobile on Orange Keys.

Two robberies are mentioned in the Flag as occurring within limits of the city.

The same paper also mentions the death of John Comegys, a man well known here as a printer and reporter. He was accidentally shot on board the steamer Whiteville, just below Reynoss, on the 16th inst., under the following circumstances:

Mr. Comegys, while resting upon a cot on the boat, amused himself playing with a Mexican boy about ten years of age. The boy, in a sporting mood, picked up an old horseman’s pistol that had been throwing about the boat, and which no one even dreamed was loaded, pointed it at Mr. C. and pulled the trigger. A ball issued from the muzzle and penetrated one of his temples, killing him instantly. He was buried at Reynosa. Mr. Comegys was a native of Pennsylvania, a printer by profession, and had worked in this office. He was for some time a clerk in the Quartermaster’s Department, and at the time of his decease officiated in that capacity on the Whiteville. His fate will be lamented by all who knew him, and furnishes another impressive lesson to show with what exceeding care firearms should be handled.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c2 Correspondent at Monterrey

We give below a letter from our correspondent now at Monterrey, thought it is not late as accounts received here several days since.

[Special Correspondence of the Picayune] Column B

Monterrey, Mexico, June 6, 1847

Once again I am enabled to resume my pen, which a severe relapse of fever under which I suffered so severely at Saltillo has prevented me from using for several days. I have had a tough time of it, but thank Fortune, am now on “the improvement Committee,” and hope soon regain my strength. At present no scales save an apothecary’s would weigh a sufficiently small quantity to make a correct estimate of my weight. I wrote you a letter on the 30th ult. And the 1st inst., but you will probably get this letter as soon. Since the 1st inst., until to-day I have been confined to my bed.

The Illinois volunteers and Capt. Pike’s quadroon of Arkansas cavalry have been here several days, but leave tomorrow for Camargo and home.

Since I left Saltillo has reached us of quite a successful scout of Lieut. Tobin, with a party of McCulloch’s Rangers, which I presume Col. BELKNAP WILL HAVE NO OBJECTION IN MENTIONING. When a long distance from Buena Vista (near what place I have been unable to learn) he discovered a party of ten or a dozen of armed persons, and gave chase. It proved to be a Mexican express rider form General Sanchez at Patos to the Governor of San Luis, with an escort, mostly deserters from our army. The bearer of dispatches and his horse and papers were captured, but the men escaped. The contents of the dispatches conveyed the information that there were very few American troops in the neighborhood of Saltillo, at that city, or along the line; people smarting under injuries and wrongs and, anxious to fight to the last for their country, but prevented from want of means from resenting their injuries, and recommending that troops be dispatched with all possible speed to re take Saltillo, an easy task! This information I derive from, I am induced to believe, an authentic source, and the above is the purport of the despatch. They would hardly come with any very large force, except perhaps cavalry, and they are of no account. They can scarcely have any artillery now to spare, and I am little afraid that Gen. Sanchez, if he it was who sent the despatch, would not realize his expectation of its being such “an easy task.” There is “a pretty smart chance” of artillery in that neighborhood.”

The horse which Mexican despatch bearer rode, singular to say, was one stolen from Lt. Sturgis some months since. Gen. Wool, I am told despatched some of the rangers and a company of dragoons after the residue of the party as soon as Capt. Tobin reported. If they are taken and are deserters they will have hard time of it.

I have alluded in my previous letter to the murders committed at Saltillo by Mexicans upon Americans. THEY KILLED ONE TOO MANY. On the 31st ult, a member of the Arkansas cavalry, while leading his horse in a grove near the Alameda, used as a race track, was accosted by two Mexicans, who extended their hands to him in a friendly manner; but, instead of the grasp of friendship, the assassin’s knife was plunged into his heart, and he was cast into a ditch, while his horse was made away with. Some of the companion of the deceased, who came to join him on the track soon after, discover traces of blood, and on pursuing them, found the wounded man breathing his last, with just life enough to tell them the cause of his situation. Not far from the place, two Mexicans were shortly afterwards discovered, whose conduct was suspicious and they were captured. It was afterwards deemed inadvisable to permit them to be regularly tried; a party of men demanded them; and they were taken out and shot. In the sleeve of one was found a bloody knife corresponding with the size of the wound. This was not enough! I regret to state that many Mexicans were killed that day—some say seventeen, and some say more. Comment is unnecessary.

We have had no more news of Urrea, and heard nothing of any guerrilla parties as yet. The 2d battalion of Virginia volunteers garrison this place, but will move on as soon as they can be relieved. There is still a good deal of sickness here, but of a mild character, and but few deaths. —For the last few days, we have had several showers during the day, and I imagine it is brewing up for the rainy season. You will probably have and opportunity of seeing the portrait of Gen. Taylor by Mr. Atwood in New Orleans—Mr. R G Brown, a portrait painter from Virginia, has also come out to take portraits of the General and the members of his staff.

It seems there is still a bare possibility of our going to San Luis at a more advance period than contemplated by Gen. Taylor at first, but all depends on whether troops can be had.

The despatches brought from Washington by Mr. Bradish, who left your city on the 21st ult., were of no importance, and their date was no so late by several days as Washington paper received by mail. I believe I have given you all the items of news that have reached me, farewell for the present. J. E. D.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 Letter from General Taylor.

The following letter from General Taylor is published in the Cincinnati Signal, to the editor of which paper it purports to be addressed. We imagine it was not designed by the writer for the public eye; but the editor of the Signal professes to think that the circumstances under which he received it warrant its publication. He says he felt it to be his duty, when the first demonstrations were made in favor of Gen. Taylor for the Presidency, to dwell upon the subject at considerable length. "We were desirous (he continues) that some of the suggestions contained in our article should meet the eye of the General Taylor, and therefore enclosed it to his address, with a few words of reference to our position as a journalist. In reply to the communication we have received the admirable and significant letter, which we take pleasure in laying before our readers."

We published this letter, without, for the present, any comment:

Headquarters Army of Occupation

Camp near Monterrey, May 18, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, with the enclosure of your editorial, extracted from the "Signal" of the 13th April.

At this time, my public duties command so fully my attention, that it is impossible to answer your letter in the terms demanded by its courtesy, and the importance of the sentiments to which it alludes; neither, indeed, have I the time, should I feel myself at liberty, to enter into the few and most general subjects of public policy suggested by the article in question. My own personal views were better withheld till the end of the war, when my usefulness as a military chief, serving in the field against the common enemy, shall no longer be compromised by their expression or discussion in any manner.

From many sources I have been addressed on the subject of the Presidency, and I do violence neither to myself nor to my positions as an officer of the army, by acknowledging to you, as I have done to all who have alluded to the use of my name in this exalted connexion, that my services are ever at the will and call of my country, and that I am not prepared to say that I shall refuse if the country calls me to the Presidential office, but that I can and shall yield to no call that does not come from the spontaneous action and free will of the nation at large, and void of the slightest agency of my own.

For the high honor and responsibilities of such an office, I take this occasion to say, that I have no the slightest aspiration; a much more tranquil and satisfactory life, after the termination of my present duties, awaits me, I trust, in the society of my family and particular friends and in the occupation most congenial to my wishes. In no case can I permit myself to be the candidate of any party, or yield myself to party schemes.

With the remarks, I trust you will pardon me for thus briefly replying to you, which I do with a high opinion and approval of the sentiments and views embraced in your editorial.

With many wises for your prosperity in life, and great usefulness in the sphere in which your talents and exertions are embarked, I beg to acknowledge myself most truly and respectfully your obedient servant, Z. TAYLOR. Major General U.S. Army.
July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 One day later.

The New Orleans paper of the 24th ult. Announce the arrival of the steamship Fashion, with one day’s later advices from Vera Cruz. The Picayune says, it has no letters from Gen. Scott’s army by this arrival or from the city of Vera Cruz, nor can it learn that there had been any later arrival in that city from the army above. The most contradictory rumors are said to prevail in Vera Cruz in regard to Gen. Scott’s movements, but the Picayune, having no faith in them, forbears to give them circulation. There is no confirmation of the truth of the report brought by the preceding arrival that Gen. Scott had marched from Puebla to the Rio Frio, or that the Mexicans had made overtures to Gen. Scott for peace, though such a rumor was prevalent in Vera Cruz. The Bulletin and Picayune both express the opinion that the story is without foundation.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 General Taylor Superceded

From the N.O. National, June 24.

General Taylor Superceded! –We have what we conceive to be undoubted authority for stating, that Gen. Taylor has been superceded in his command. An express passed through Matamoros some weeks since, with the credit of bearing such news to Gen. Taylor; in due course of time the rumor comes from Monterey that such is the fact, and that Gen. Taylor is hereafter, as a SUBORDINATED, to report to Gen. Scott, thro’ him to the War Department at Washington. This last act of an unhappy Administration will seal its fate with the American people. Its conduct towards Gen. Taylor from the commencement of actual hostilities, has been characterized by neglect, and not an opportunity has been permitted to pass, that could be taken advantage of, to annoy and harass him. The intention has been to force Gen. Taylor into some act of indiscretion that would render him unpopular before the people, and compel him to resign.

So far, the enemies of the old hero have been disappointed in their expectations, as they will ever be; but Mr. Polk has lost his judgment, and pursued precisely the course of conduct he should to elevate the man he wished to destroy. We cannot imagine a more total ignorance of the feelings that govern the people of this country, than has been shown in the treatment Gen. Taylor has received from the Administrations. Three time has he saved it on the battle field, when his defeat would have involved it in total ruin, without effecting his own military fame; and for such vast services so highly appreciated by the nation, he is without ceremony deprived of his troops, and finally has the insult put upon him of a nominally independent command. But this war on Gen. Taylor is all fruitless, for the old chief submits patiently, and looks to a higher tribunal than a sinking Administration for his defence.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p4c2 Despatches from the Army

From the Union of Monday night.

Despatches from the Army

Despatches were received on Saturday night by the War Office from General Scott’s camp. Several of the soldiers were sick in the hospital of Vera Cruz, Jalapa, Perote and Puebla; but, with the reinforcement that were en route form Vera Cruz, he would probably have troops sufficient by the 22d to march to the capital, perhaps without any serious opposition. He had ordered all our troops to evacuate Jalapa, in order to strengthen his active army. The last account by the steamer James L. Day are from Vera Cruz to the evening of the 16th instant, witch state that General Scott had advanced to Rio Frio, where a despatch is said to have met him with a proposition for peace. If this last report be true, it is probable that he will remain at Rio Frio, and not forthwith march to the capital but, according to the intimation in his own dispatches, waits till about the 22d both to give himself the opportunity of receiving reinforcements, and to allow the Mexicans more time to negotiate with the better grace.

Among the paper that were received on Saturday form Gen. Scott is the following interesting letter from Gen. Worth, witch we lay before our readers:

Headquarters, Puebla, May 15, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to report, for information of the general in chief, that the forces under my command, including the brigade of Major General Quitman, took military possession of this city at 10 o’clock to-day. Halting yesterday at Amosoque, to await the junction of General Quitman, (for which purpose I had shortened the marches of the leading brigades the two previous days) I found my position suddenly menaced, at 8 o’clock, a.m. by a large body of cavalry. This force approached somewhat stealthily by a road ou our right unknown to us. A rapid examination, as it unmasked itself, exhibited, as was supported, some 2000, but, from accurate information obtained here, 3000 cavalry of the line, unsupported either by infantry or artillery, and moving a mile on our right and toward the rear, lead to the conclusion that it was a RUSE to attract attention in that quarter, while the real attack was to be looked for on the high road in front, or a movement on Gen. Quitman who might have been supposed the usual day’s march in the rear. It was presently reported that a heavy column was actually approaching on the main road. Thus it became necessary, while directing a portion of the force against the visible enemy, to guard our large train, reserve ammunion, & c., packed in the square, against the invisible.

The 2d artillery, with a section of Duncan’s battery under the brigade commander, Col. Garland, the 6th infantry under Major Bonneville, with Steptoe’s battery, was promptly moved, and so directed as to take the enemy in flank. The head of his column having now reached a point opposite the center of the town, and distant about half a mile, the batteries soon opened a rapid and effective fire. After some twenty–five rounds, the entire column broke without attempting a charge or firing a shot, and hastily fled up the sides of the convenient hills. Only one company of infantry [of the 6th] was enabled, from distance, to deliver its fire. The broken column was seen to reunite and resume its march in the direction of Gen Quitman’s approach. The 2d artillery and the 8th infantry, with two sections of the light batteries, was put in its track, when the enemy again swerved to the left, and disappeared in the hills. Two miles distant Gen. Quitman was met by the last–named detachment. He had already discovered the enemy, of whose proximity the firing had admonished him, and promptly taken his order of battle. The discomfited enemy reached Puebla late at night, and evacuated the place at 4 in the morning. We took some prisoners, and found a few dead. The enemy acknowledge a loss of 89 killed and wounded. General Santa Anna conducted the enterprise.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c3 General Walter Jones, Military Disputes

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

Washington, June 25, 1847.

General Walter Jones has resigned his commission as Major General of the Militia of the District of Columbia, or rather of Washington county, for a part of the military district has gone back to Virginia. The vacancy cannot be filled till the President shall return. Gen. Jones has written a letter, said to be very severe, addressed to the Secretary of War, and commenting upon the refusal of the Executive to appoint Col. C.L. Jones to the command of the battalion which he himself raised here on his own expense, and with some encouragement from the government.

Explanations have been demanded by General Walter Jones, and perhaps also by Col. Jones, on this subject. – The correspondence going on will, I learn, be published in a few days, and it will no doubt be found quite piquant and interesting.

It is said that Capt. Hughes was personally requested and expected by the President and the Secretary of War, to take command of this battalion, and that if he had from any motive of delicacy declined it, some person other than Col. Jones would have been appointed to that command.

[NO]
Le Courrier Francais translates a powerful article from the Razonador. The greater part of it is written to show that the guerrillas system will be a thousand time more disastrous to good Mexican citizens than to the armies of the United States, that the inevitable tendency of the system will be to leave the honest, well-disposed and thriving inhabitants at the mercy of the lawless, needy desperadoes; and that such worthy inhabitants will inevitably apply to the Americans for protection, who are too sagacious not to grant it in full.

To prolong the war by a guerrilla system the writer deems, therefore, suicidal for Mexico. The only other practicable mode, he says, is the levee en masse of the inhabitants, attacking the Yankees in front, in rear, and upon their flanks. Such a rising, if executed with spirit, vigor and courage he thinks won be successful, although the Americans might gain advantages in the outset. Such a rising the editor fully approves of and still advocates, but it will never take place, he says; not because it is impossible in itself, but because the Mexicans do not heartily desire it and no intention of making it. Such being the case, he calls upon his countrymen not to solicit a peace, but to listen to the overtures which may be made to them. He writes with great clearness and force, and had we room we would reproduce the article. Such appeals must tell powerfully in Mexico for peace. The people are unused to them.

One of the last acts of Gen. Bravo while he remained in command, was to sanction a plan for the preservation of order in the city, which was adopted by the municipal council. We should give the plan at length had it not been ultimately rejected by the Government, but the design was to enroll the citizens, foreign as well as natives, for the single purpose of watching over the security of private persons and property, and maintaining public order. Of these citizens companies of thirty and forty were to be formed, who were to elected their own officers, & c, & c. The project was approved by Senor Anaya, by the Governor of the city, and finally by Gen. Bravo. When it was submitted to Senor Baranda, the Minister of the Interior, it was rejected by him summarily as being scandalous, imprudent and detestable in every respect. The council, nevertheless, promulgated the plan, when the Government arbitrarily interfered and suspended the operation of it. It receives no praise for this act from the Monitor; quite the reverse.

The resignation which Gen. Rincon tendered of his office, as second in command to Gen. Bravo, had not been accepted by the Government on the 29th ult.

In the Courrier Francais we find an extract from the Boletin de la Democracia, the organ of Farias. It is a witty, caustic review of the defence of Santa Ana at Cerro Gordo, made by Senor Jimenez. We can understand that Santa Ana finds his position uncomfortable with a few papers of this kind, as witty as remorseless, pouring hot shot in 'o him all the while, and he unable to defend himself by pointing to a single act successful gallantry in this war by which to deprecate the contempt excited against him.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 Proposed Treaty

The Proposed Treaty with Mexico.

The Washington Union says that any treaty of peace which may be concluded between the United States and Mexico, "must embrace, in some form, indemnity for past injuries, and for the war itself, together with due security for the future peace and good neighborhood of the two countries." It also says, "there is no reason to suppose that any treaty of peace which will be made, will undertake, in the slightest degree, to interfere with the internal polity of Mexico."– This last we are glad to hear. It would be the greatest folly in the world for us to undertake to guaranty ANY thing to Mexico– even a Republican form of government. – Should other nations attempt to FORCE a monarchical form of government upon her against her will, the United States might feel obligated to interfere to prevent it; but if the PEOPLE of Mexico want a monarchy, an aristocracy, or even a dog–ocracy, by all means let them be accommodated. The United States can find better business than attempting to force upon Mexico even a good thing. Some would take this opportunity to secure religious toleration in Mexico, the free circulation of the Scriptures, &c. But we say no –not by force. Let France propagate what she calls religion by force if she will, but not the United States. – Neither let us become security for every Mexican who may be elevated to the supreme power, nor for the tranquility of the country. If we become responsible for Mexico in any way, we shall have treble. – Journal of Com.

It is due to our officers serving in Mexico that the greatest caution should be observed by the press in giving publicity to complains against the manner in which they discharge the various and sometimes anomalous duties confided to them; and we know speak of certain imputations respecting the management of the interest of the United States at and about Vera Cruz, because they have become so general as to excite a belief that the service is suffering serious detriment, by reason of a lack of vigor and efficiency in the system of regulations enforced there. It is more from a sense of justice to the officers in command at that point than with a desire to prejudge them, that we say there is not an arrival from Vera Cruz which does not bring accounts of losses of United States property, which are attributed to neglect. It may be that the commandant at that depot has not the force necessary to keep up an effective police to protect the public property from depredators. It may be from very lack of material to prevent it that horses are stolen nightly, and the guerrillas are permitted to prowl hard by the depots of government property. If this be the case the fact should be stated, else the reputation of the officer in command will suffer a serious evil.

One of the last acts of Gen. Bravo while he remained in command, was to sanction a plan for the preservation of order in the city, which was adopted by the municipal council. We should give the plan at length had it not been ultimately rejected by the Government, but the design was to enroll the citizens, foreign as well as natives, for the single purpose of watching over the security of private persons and property, and maintaining public order. Of these citizens companies of thirty and forty were to be formed, who were to elected their own officers, & c, & c. The project was approved by Senor Anaya, by the Governor of the city, and finally by Gen. Bravo. When it was submitted to Senor Baranda, the Minister of the Interior, it was rejected by him summarily as being scandalous, imprudent and detestable in every respect. The council, nevertheless, promulgated the plan, when the Government arbitrarily interfered and suspended the operation of it. It receives no praise for this act from the Monitor; quite the reverse.
scattered through the country or skulking about the towns. Be this or other the cause of the loss of property, often accompanied with loss of life, a reformation is needed in the conduct of our officers in Mexican cities – either a change in the policy, or a more rigid and effective mode of enforcing that adopted.

In regard to the late attack upon the wagon train, we have heard the most deplorable accounts. The partial success of the Mexicans, before Gen. Cadwalader came to the rescue, should engage the attention of a court martial. They are charged to a remissness so gross that we forbear to state the circumstances as told as by passengers lately arrived here, and by a correspondent who was with the train at the time. The current reports of the Day and Galveston give no flattering picture of affairs in Mexico – We hope to have better things by the next arrivals. N.O. Picayune.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 Taylor defenses stripped

General Taylor

The Matamoros Flag, received by the latest arrival at New Orleans, mentions a few of the many rumors prevalent in that place. It is stated, that the last despatches sent to Gen. Taylor instruct him to strip his line to the very minimum point of defense, in order to reinforce Gen. Scott; but that, nevertheless, old Rough and Ready is concentrating provisions and transportation at Saltillo for a forward movement, in which case he launches forth into the enemy’s country, abandoning all dependences on his line of communication, which is to be broken up from Saltillo to Matamoros, which place and Fort Brown are to be strongly garrisoned.

We can scarcely credit the latter rumor, however, if the former be true, of which we apprehend there can be no doubt. Gen. Taylor is prudent as well as bold. He is always ready to encounter “fearful odds” when forced into a position where he must of necessity either fight or retreat; but it is not probable that he will voluntarily undertake, with his reduced force, a march across the “waterless desert” between Saltillo and San Luis, encountering in front probably a greatly superior force, and leaving his rear almost entirely undefended, and exposed to the assaults of the enemy. There is more truth, we suspect, in another rumor to which Matamoros paper alludes, to wit, that Gen. Taylor has asked the Government whether he is to be quartered upon a camp stool for the balance of the war – and if so, that he has applied for leave of absence to visit his family. This latter rumor, says the Flag, we fear is too true. And it will not be deemed remarkable, if for his past victories, he has been sentenced to future inactivity, that he should prefer to enjoy his enforced holiday in the bosom of his family, from whom he has been so long absent, rather than in the camp, where, the scene of active preparations having been transferred to another part of Mexico, his presence is no longer indispensably necessary.

The Union asserts that “the best results, as relates to the durable well-being of this Republic, have proceeded from the President policy in allowing the return of Santa Anna to Mexico.” This is news, which the people will be glad to hear! The Union has now but one thing to do, in order to silence all complaints on that score – and that is, to specify the “results” to which it alludes. We confess that they are not at all perceptible to us, nor have we yet seen the man, Whig or Locofoco, who has the remotest conception of what they are. The Union will render a most invaluable service, therefore, to the Administration, of which it is the organ, as well as gratify public curiosity, by ENUMERATING the results that have followed Santa Anna’s return to Mexico, and which it tell us are (XX) intimately connected with the “durable well-being of this Republic” The assertion may be true; but we should like to see some proof of it.

July 2, 1847, RW47v24n53p2c4 Kentucky Volunteers

Kentucky Volunteers

The remains of Colonel McKee, Lt. Col. Clay, Capt. Willis, Adjutant Vaughan and private H. Totter were received at Louisville, on the 21st inst. By the military companies and citizens, with every demonstration of public esteem and honor. Business was entirely suspended, and all the stores closed along the streets through which the funeral procession moved.

The two companies of Volunteers that went from Lexington, one commanded by Capt. Beard, and the other (Capt. C. M. Clay’s) by Lt. Woodruff, have reached that city, – or rather the remnant of them. Of Capt. Beard’s company, which mustered 78 when it left home, only 43 have returned – and of Capt. Clay’s, numbering 75 originally, the same number, 43, have come back – the remainder having been killed, or fallen victims to the diseases of the climate, or been discharged on account of sickness, except 11 of the latter company, who are prisoners in Mexico.

Though these companies reached Lexington unexpectedly, preparations were soon made to give then a cordial reception; and they were greeted with every demonstration of the respect and admiration of their fellow-citizens.

[NO]
Additional Particulars

The subjoined letter to the editors of the New Orleans Bee gives more minute particulars of the attack of the Mexicans upon the train under the command of Col. McIntosh than we have elsewhere seen:

Paso de Ovejas, Mexico, June 11, 1847.

The train of wagons and pack mules under the direction of Col. McIntosh, left Vera Cruz on the 4th inst., escorted by Capts. Duperu, Ford and McReynolds's companies of Dragoons— the two latter mounted— and three hundred Infantry commanded by Maj. Lee, and arrived in this village on the 7th inst., after a march of three days.

The train, consisting of 150 wagons laden with specie and ammunition, and 500 pack mules with provisions, &c., proceeded without molestation until about noon on Sunday last, 6th inst., when our advanced guard of Capt. Ford's Indiana Dragoons was suddenly attacked by a large body of Mexicans.

J.Q. Adams and the War.

From the Washington correspondence of the Baltimore Sun we copy the following paragraph:

"Mr. John Q. Adams, just before he left this city for Massachusetts, held a conversation with a friend of mine, on the subject of the Mexican war. He gave his views very friendly, and, in substance they were, that the war with Mexico would not end until the United States had conquered the whole of it. He believed that the matter had gone so far that it was no longer under the control of this government, and that our people would subjugate, acquire, appropriate, and annex the whole of Mexico. It was his opinion, moreover, that, from the war, would arise a military enthusiasm in this country, leading the people to prefer military man for all elective offices. He was quite certain that, for years to come, all successful candidate for the Presidency must be military men, connected with or grown out of the Mexican war.

Mr. Adams has but expressed opinions which many intelligent men in this country entertain, that Mexico is to be thoroughly renovated and regenerated, and ultimately brought within the influence of our institutions, whether annexed to or independent of this Union, If so, the war will not be regarded, hereafter, as unfortunate; and will be attributed less to policy than to Providence."

A very sage conclusion certainly, but one to which we beg leave to express our dissent. Whatever may be the results of the war, we believe that 'Providence' will have had nothing more to do with it than to "educate good from evil," by converting the bad passions of man into a means of his improvement and renovation: But, if one of the results of the war shall be the annexation of Mexico, or of any considerable part of it, to this Union, we shall doubt whether the agency has been even so far exerted—for, at all events, we shall look upon that as an irreparable misfortune to the United sates, however, beneficial it may prove to Mexico.

Later From the Army

[From the New Orleans Picayune, June 25] c4

Important from Mexico.

Later From the Army of Gen. Scott.

The steamship Palmetto, Capt. Smith, arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, having sailed thence on the 18th inst. She touched at Tampico on the 20th and Brazos Santiago on the 21st inst.

Although we are not in possession of letters from Mr. Kendall, we have advices upon which we place every reliance as to the movements of Gen. Scott. An express from Puebla, by the route of Cordova, had arrived at Vera Cruz, announcing that Gen. Scott commenced his march upon the city of Mexico on the 16th inst.
We hear not a word more in regard to the overtures for peace said to have been made to Gen. Scott. That he marched on the 16th we have no doubt.

Another express had arrived at Vera Cruz from Jalapa, which announces that all the sick had left there on the 15th inst. for Perote under a small escort. Col. Childs was to leave the following day with all the garrison. Gen. Shields would accompany him. The road between Jalapa and Puebla is represented as free from guerrilla parties os any kind.

About one thousand troops left Vera Cruz on the 17th inst., under the command of Maj. Gen. Pillow, to join the army of gen. Scott.

The Spanish renegade named La Vega, who lately repaired to Vera Cruz in company with the veracious Col. Mata from this city, is represented to us as already in command of a strong guerrilla party.

By the express from Jalapa we have no intelligence of Gen. Cadwalader, as the rider came by a circuitous route to avoid the predatory parties on the road.

By this arrival we have received paper from the city of Mexico of the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of June. Our previous files came down to the 29 of May. The intermediate dates we have not yet received, and presume they have been forwarded by some sailing vessel. We have only had time to glance hastily at the papers before us, from which we glean the following:

Santa Anna still remains in power. His resignation we presume was withdrawn; for it is intimidated that a majority of Congress was anxious to accept it. His administration, in consequence of this feeling in Congress, has entirely changed its policy and thrown itself into the arms of the puros. One great section of the puros, however, is not conciliated by this movement; the adherents of Gomez Farias and gen. Almonte still continue their oppositions to the Administration. Senor Rejon, the former friend of Farias, is said to be the main support of Santa Anna’s administration, although he holds no public office. He is denounced as a man without principle, a truckler, &c.

It is represented that opinions were never more divided in the capitol that at the present. No party seems to have decided upon what course to take. At one time the puros and the moderados appear inclined to unite upon a dissolution of Congress, and leave every thing in the hands of Santa Anna; and then again the puros talk of recalling the absent members of their party, and having a working majority to carry their measures. In the mean time a quorum of Congress cannot be collected. If we can give no intelligible account of the designs of the parties and the Government, it is because such confusion and anarchy never before existed in the city of Mexico, by the admission of all.

An important financial measure of Anayas’s administration has been summarily abrogated by Santa Anna, in deference, as he says, to public opinion. This has lead to the resignation of Senor Baranda, who was not consulted as to the repeal of the measure. Senor Lafragua was then nominated in his place as head of the State Department, but this appointment gave dissatisfaction to the puros, who demonstrated against it. The result was not known.

Gen. Almonte was still in prison, nor are we able to learn any thing more definite as to the nature of his offence, his trial not having yet come on.

The State of Chihuahua voted unanimously for Gen. Santa Anna for President. This is the only additional State the vote of which is given in papers before us. The votes were to be opened on the 15th of the present month. Our impression is that Congress will have to make choice between the two highest candidates, as no one will probably receive a majority of all the votes. On various occasions Congress has displayed great respect for Gen. Herrera, which leads to the opinion that he will be chosen.

We find no mention made of the measures taken for the defence of the capital. The papers said that gen. Scott pretended to his troops that they would march into Mexico on the 15th inst, but that this was a mere boast in order to keep up the spirits of his men; that he was in no condition to move, lacking reinforcements.

Letters from Puebla to the capital represent Gen's. Scott and Worth as saying that if Santa Anna has charge of the defence of the city of Mexico, they will be able to take it with the loss of two or three hundred men only; but that if Bravo or Valencia command, it will cost them more dear. The Republicano derides this gossip, though it sounds very natural ... (unintelligible)

The Government is urged by letters form Puebla and its vicinity to fall upon Scott, noe he is weak, and crush him. They say he has really but a little over 5000 men, though he pretends to have 7000. They seem to dread lest Gen. Taylor should proceed to join Gen. Scott.

The propositions which Mr. Trist is authorized to make are said by the Mexicans to be that each Republic shall name three commissioners to discuss the claims of the United States, and that if Mexico will not consent to this, then the war is to be prosecuted.

We find in the Republicano of the 7th inst. a long dispatch from the Secretary of War to gen. Scott, dated the 30th of April. It informs him that by the end of June the President supposes Gen. Scott will have twenty, and Gen. Taylor the thousand men under their respective commands. It ask for the views of Gen. Scott on various questions suggested; and gives him directions how to operate with disaffected Mexican States. The Republican regards this latter portion as very important, but pronounces the Secretary’s representations as to the number of troops to be in the field utterly false. How this letter was intercepted we are not informed.

The Mexicans appear to have intercepted a good number of private letters. Several to Col. Chidls are particularly referred to. One is from Mrs. Childs and contains much pleasant gossip as to the state of parties in the United States. Other letters of an entirely private nature are commented upon.

The success of some of the guerilla parties near Vera Cruz are duly chronicled and commended in the papers.

The afternoon of the 6th inst. Santa Anna reviewed at Tealpam the troops from the South of Mexico under Alvarez. This general’s command had not all arrived, but it was expected to reach 8000 men in a few days.

Senor Pedro de Castillo has been removed from the command of the regiment of Hidalgo in the National Guard. The act is strongly censured.

Gen. J. Gomez de la Cortina has resigned the command of the battalion of Victoria, of which he was colonel.

Three hundred troops from Morelia arrived in the capital on the 7th inst.

Diligences have been established between these two cities. One of them has already been robbed.

The Vice Governor of Oajaca has resigned his office, and his resignation has been accepted.

Gen. Scott appears to preserve perfect discipline among his troops at Puebla. The Mexicans admit this indirectly, though letters are published complaining of our excesses in general terms. The case of a New York volunteer is mentioned, who was tried by a court martial for assaulting a woman with the view of robbing her of a silver crucifix.

The casting of a piece of cannon at Toluca on the second inst. is formally mentioned.

We have thus glanced at the papers before us, but will recur to them again, and should they contain anything of importance, lay it before our readers.

From Tampico we learn little news by this arrival. – The only thing which gives animation to the town appears to be the false alarms which frequently occur. We are informed by an officer of Dragoons that he went out with a party on a scout on the 18th inst., and proceeded some 40 miles from the city in the direction of Altamira, but saw no armed Mexican. The country people appeared friendly, and like the rest of the inhabitants of Tamaulipas did not seem ill affected towards our Government.

The Louisiana regiment stationed at Tampico has suffered severely from sickness. Many have died and there are yet many sick – not less than 150 accounts say. Not more than 180 men are reported fit for service, and yet this is the only regiment doing duty. Reinforcements have been daily expected, but in vain.

Lieut. De Groote, of the Dragoons, who arrived on the Palmetto, has been ordered hither to recruit men to fill up his company to the full complement. It consists now of only fifty-four men. This is a company with which it is intended to open the road from Tampico to San Luis Potosi.

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Intercepted Despatch

The Intercepted Despatch.

The passage in the intercepted letter of Secretary Marcy to Gen. Scott which attracts most attention in Mexico is the concluding portion, which is substantially as follows:

"Intimations have been given to the Government that a portion of the people of the State of Veracruz, and also of some other states is disposed to refuse obedience to the Central Government. Should such be the case, you will adapt such measures as may encourage this spirit, using the utmost discretion, nevertheless, that the United States may not appear compromised; as it may occasion embarrassment to the Government when negotiations for peace are entered upon. Should you judge it proper you might offer aid or protection when the war terminates.”

Another portion of the Secretary’s letter announces that Gen. Taylor had made application to the war department, for two or three thousand regulars who had been in the service in case he should be expected to advance into the country. The Secretary says that much as the Government may be disposed to reinforce Gen. Taylor’s division, it hardly deems it prudent to do so at the expense of Gen. Scott's command, who appears more particularly to need troops of the description indicated by Gen. Taylor. He leaves it therefore to Gen. Scott to decide, as commander in-chief of the forces in Mexico, whether the suggestion of Gen. Taylor should be acceded to.

We do not attempt to translate the despatch, as from the two-fold process errors may well occur, and the original will no doubt surely be given to the country. – N.O. Picayune

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Prospect of Peace

(short news)

The Philadelphia ledger has the following paragraph – We sincerely hope that the rumored prospect of an early peace with Mexico may be speedily realized:

Important.– Prospect of Peace.– We learn from a reliable source at Washington that there is a prospect of a speedy peace with Mexico. The letter communicating the information says it might be in less than twenty days The Mexicans have had the whole text of the treaty, which Mr. Trist carried with him, communicated to them, and they are satisfied with it. The President will call an extra session of the Senate, and this news will probably shorten his visit to the North. This is an important fact, and we have no doubt from the source whence it came that it can be relied upon.

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c4 Correspondence

[From the National Intelligencer.]

Editor's correspondence

We were thrown quite into a flutter yesterday by receiving in our bag from the Post Office the following letter from the Public's old friend Major Jack Downing, who seems to have written it to us for the purpose of communicating to the Public in his plain way, some views of the President Polk – young hickory, as he delights to call him – which that distinguished functionary had not thought necessary to confide his most confidential friends before he met with the major.

On board the steamboat on Long Island Sound, bound to Connecticut and Down East, June 28, 1847.

MR. GALES & SKATON:

MY DEAR OLD FRIENDS: I and Mr. Buchanan and the rest of us overtook the President last night at York, where we found him pretty well tuckered out, having got true with all his birds-egging in that everlasting great city, and ready to push on this morning down East. I was going to write a line to friend Richie, as he is the Government Editor, as soon as I could catch up with the President, and let him know how the old gentleman stood the journey. But I happened to look into your paper, and I see brother Ingersoll, of Philadelphia, sends his letter to you. This puzzled me a little at first, because I knew he was a on Mr. Richie's side. But I looked along, and I see he called your paper a "powerful journal;" and then the thought struck me that I have read somewhere that "there is a power behind the throne greater than the throne itself". Well, thinks I that Ingersoll is a cunning feller, but he ain't a going to get ahead of me. If he writes to the power behind the throne, I will too. So, if Mr. Richie complains, and says I ought to wrote to him, I wish you would just smooth it over to him, and tell him the reason of it, and tell him when the old ship gets on 'tother tack, and his paper gets on behind, I'll write to him.

As I had come right on from Mexico the shortest cut, and had brought a letter from Gineral Scott to the President, as soon as we got to York I run right up to the tavern where he stopped to give him the letter. Folks told me he was at the Astor House – that great tavern made out of hewed stone. So I went up, and went in, and asked one of the waiters if Colonel Pok put up there?

"Is it Jemmy Polk ye mine; Young Hickory, the President?" say he.

"Sartain," says I.

"Yes," says he, "he's here; up stairs in his room."

Says I, "Show me his chamber as quick as you can; I must see him."
"You can't see him to-night," says he; "Young Hickory is tired out, and can't see nobody at all. Why wasn't ye on hand in the Governor's room if ye wanted to see him? All the boys had a chance there."

Says I, "That's nothing to the pint; I was on the road from Washington then, and I'm going to see the President to-night if I have to go through the stone walls of this house for it."

Then along come Mr. Stutson: and says he, "Patrick, what's the row here?"

"Here's a fellow getting wrathy," says Patrick, "because I won't let him go up to the President's room."

At that Mr. Stutson turned around to me, and, as soon as he see me, he ketched told of my hand, and, says he, "Major Downing, I'm very happy to see you. I'll show you right up to the President's room myself. I'm sorry you wasn't here before. We've had some very pleasant tea parties since the President's been here."

When I got in the President's chamber he was laying down on the bed to rest and looking as tired as a rat that had been drawed through forty knotholes. But as soon as he see me, he jumped up, looking rather wild, and says he, "Major Downing, how are ye? I didn't think of seeing you back from Mexico so soon as this. How does things go on there now?"

Says I, "Colonel, they don't go on hardly at all. They are waiting for more help. Scott and Taylor both are growing rather red and angry to think you should chuck them away into the middle of Mexico there and then not send 'em help to fight the way out again. And it seems to me, Colonel, you do hold back in this business a little too much. If you don't send 'em help pretty soon, them guerrillas will eat our little armies all up. Why, Colonel," says I, "if this war had come on in the time of the old Gineral, my old friend Hickory, he would a had them Mexicans half whipped to death by this time. But here's a letter from Scott, to tell ye what he thinks about the business. I come in post-haste to bring it. He says he won't stir from Puebla till you send on more men to take the place of all them that's coming home."

The President took the letter and read a few lines, and threw it down upon the table; and, says he, it's no use; Scott may grumble and growl as much as he's a mind to but it's no use. This war is a concern of my own getting up, for my own use, and I shall manage it jest as I please." Says he, "Major Downing, there's reason in all things. I don't want them Mexicans whipped too fast, especially them upstart Generals get all the glory of it. When I found Taylor as swelling up too large, I meant to a stopped him at Monterey and draw off a part of his glory onto Scott. But that Taylor is a headstrong chap a dangerous man. He overstepped is duty and blundered on that victory at Buena Vista that sent everything all in a blaze. I shan't overlook it in him very soon. If the selfish creature had only let Santa Anna give him a handsome licking there, we might have had peace in a little while, for I had things all arranged with Santa Anna to wind the business right up in such a way that we might each of us have made a handsome plume out of it. But that unpardonable Taylor must cut and slash round with his handful of men, untutored volunteers, that I thought were as harmless as a flock of sheep, and contrive by that awful blunder at Buena Vista, to pour all the fat into the fire."

"Well, then, Scott hasn't behaved much better." He licked the Mexicans too fast by a great sight, and is swelling himself up in the eyes of the people. I thought if I could a sent Col. Benton he would a squeezed the glory out of 'em in a little while, and settled 'em down so they wouldn't a been dangerous. But that vagabond Senate wouldn't let me do it. That was too bad, Major, when them two Generals were [unintelligible] all the glory that belonged to me, that the Senate wouldn't let me do any thing to offset them. But I'll let them know that Young Hickory isn't to be beat anymore than Old Hickory was. I've sent Mr. Trist on to look after matters, and to see that the armies don't go too fast; for I am determined Scott and Taylor shan't whip the Mexicans any faster than is prudent. All the glory that's to come out of this war fairly belongs to me, and I'll have it."

"But," says I, "Colonel you are a going to send on more men, ain't you? Or what are you going to do? How are you going to wind the business up?"

Says he, "I am too tired to talk over my plans to-night. But there's no need of you going right back to Mexico yet. Mr. Trist is there, and I can trust him to look after matters, and you better jump into the boat with us in the morning and take a trip down East, and we can talk the subject over at our leisure."

About five o'clock in the morning the President rattled away at my door and waked me out of a sound sleep; and, when he found I wasn't up, says he, "Major, you must be spry, or you'll be too late, for we're off at six."

I was up and dressed about the quickest, and went out, and fact, there was a quarter of a mile of soldiers, all ready to escort us to the boat. And down we went, through whole streets full of men and women, and boys and gals, of all sorts and sizes, some running and crowding, and some hollering and hurrahing, and in a few minutes we were aboard the steamboat, and the bell rung, and the steamer puffed, and off we went on the Sound towards Connecticut.

The President had a little room all to himself and he made me go right into it, and he sot down in an easy chair, and put his feet upon another, and says he, "Major, I'm glad to get out of the crowd again; we'll take a few hours to rest and comfort on this voyage. This being President Major is mighty hard work; but, after all, I like it. I've had a glorious time of it in New York. Every body was running after me, and it seems as though I have seen every thing. I feel as though I had lived through a whole year in these three days, and I don't believe any body ever received more honors in so short a space of time in this country.”

“Well,” says I, “Colonel, it seems to me a pity you told the folks at Baltimore the other day that you should retire when this term was up. You might go two terms, as Old Hickory did, jest as well as not, you are so popular.”

At that he give me a tuck in the ribs and a sly wink, and, says he, “Major, don’t you understand that telling of ‘em I shouldn’t stand another term is just the right way to make them the more fierce to have me. Don’t you know Anthony said Caesar refused the crown three times, jest so as to be more sure of having it placed on his head? And jest see how Santa Anna is working it now in Mexico. When he gets pretty near ran down, and shivering in the wind and nothing to stand upon, he sends in his resignation, with a long patriotic speech about shedding the last drop of his blood for his country, and all that, and the people refuse to receive his resignation, and cry out ‘long live Santa Anna” and away he goes again and drums up another army of soldiers.

“But, to tell the truth, Major,” says he, “when I made that remark at Baltimore I had some little notion of retiring. Our party was so cut up, things looked rather dark ahead; and I find this Mexican war something of a bother after all. Taylor and Scott commit so many blunders, I had really then some notion of retiring when this term is up. But, since I got along to New York, things seem to look brighter. I’m popular, Major: I know I am. I shouldn’t be surprised if the Whigs made a demonstration in my favor yet. They seemed very fond of me in New York; and so did everybody, everybody you could mention; even the market–woman took me by the hand and called me young Hickory, and gave me lots of fruit. There, do you see that pineapple on that table there?” says he. “That was given me at the Fulton market, as we were going over to Brooklyn on Saturday. Cut away, Major, and help yourself to it; it’s a nice one. And here’s a paper of the most excellent tobacco,” says he, “that was presented to me at the same time. You go into the pineapple and I’ll go into the tobacco, and then we’ll have a little more talk about the war.”

Jest as we got cleverly under way they sung out aboard the boat for the passengers to get ready for landing. So I musgt cut my yarn off here for the present; but likely as not you’ll here from me again. Your old friend, MAJOR JACK DOWNING

July 9, 1847, RW47v24n55p1c3 LATER FROM THE ARMY

[From the New Orleans Picayune, June 30]

Important from Mexico

LATER FROM THE ARMY OF GEN. SCOTT.

General Scott still at Puebla –His advance postponed till reinforcements arrive –Surprise of a Guerrilla party by General Cadwalader – General Pillow’s march and his repulse of Guerrillas –Preparations for the defence of Mexico – March of Alvarez towards Puebla, &c, &c, &c.

The schooner Iona, Capt. Stevens, arrived yesterday morning from Vera Cruz, and in a few hours afterwards the steamship New Orleans, Capt. Auld, came in. The latter left Vera Cruz on the 25th instant, and brings us letters of the 25th and papers of the 24th. One hundred and fifty–six discharged soldiers and teamsters came over on the New Orleans.

A rumor reached Vera Cruz on the night of the 24th inst. That Gen. Cadwallader’s command had fallen in with a guerilla party a few miles beyond Jalapa, and by a movement unperceived by the guerrilleros, succeeded in surprising them and killing about thirty of them, without losing a man. Our correspondent thinks there is some truth in the report.

There are a great many guerrilla parties upon the road, and a small body of our troops left San Juan on the 21st. Hoping to overtake Gen. Pillow, but after proceeding two or three miles they encountered some guerrilleros. These they charged upon and dispersed, but they saw so many others on the road in small parties that it was thought prudent to relinquish the design of coming up with Gen. Pillow.– As this officer is somewhat famous for exciting from his men long marches, it is well that no further attempt was made to overtake him.

We regret to learn by this arrival of the death of Mr. Thomas G. Banks. He died at Vera Cruz of the vomito. Mr. Banks was connected, we believe, with the Quartermaster’s department.

A Mexican named Lara, a carpenter by trade, has been found lying dead on the floor of his own house in Vera Cruz, having been stabbed. The author of the dead was not known.

A watchman, said to be a Dutchman named Charles, have been trapped by a guerrilla party just outside the walls and murdered, after having been cruelly whipped. His body was left in the road with an inscription affixed to it, “Whoever wishes may carry it off.” The police of the city are making an attempt to ferret out the guilty party.
The news by this arrival from the city of Mexico is important. We have received our accounts of it through an express despatched by Mr. Kendall from Puebla expressly for this office. His letters come down to the 14th inst. Though we see it noted in one Vera Cruz paper that advices to the 14th had been received, yet it gives none of the news; the sole statement made relates Gen. Scott’s departure from Puebla, and is erroneous. Other papers of Vera Cruz give the news copied from the press of the city as being the latest from the interior of Mexico.

The Arco–Iris of the 22d has letters from the capital which appear to be late, though the dates are not given.— The purport of them is that the work of fortifying the environs of the city is going on rapidly, and that seventy pieces of artillery had arrived from Acapulco and other points which they were mounting as fast as possible. They mention the arrival of Alvarez at the head of 8000 men, and they set down the entire force in the city as 20,000 armed militia and 16,000 troops of the line. These letters further say that the clergy are taking an active part in the business; that arms of all kinds were pouring into the capital and considerable sums of money. All these topics are touched upon in Mr. Kendall’s letters transmitted by express, and very full details are given of the extent of the preparations to defend the city.

Before entering upon Mr. Kendall’s letters we may remark that by the way of Orizaba, a letter has been received here which announces that “Santa Anna had been elected Dictator, provided he will not make peace,” and that he has 30,000 men with him. It appears from what follows below that Santa Anna has attained to all the power of a Dictator by the arrest or removal from command of such generals as are opposed to him, and by the more adroit maneuver of inducing Congress to postpone the counting the votes for President till the 15th of January next. The 15th of June was the day fixed by law for that purpose. By the postponement Santa Anna prolongs his own power indefinitely, and for the time being may be deemed Dictator in fact, if not in fame. He will plead in extenuation of this perpetuation of his power that it was hazardous to risk a change of Government at a moment when a foreign foe threatened the capital, and there is force in the idea.

A private note from Mr. Kendall says that Mr. Trist was at Puebla. Nothing further had transpired in regard to his mission. “The Mexican papers,” writes Mr. Kendall, “know as much about his mission as we do.”

---

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Correspondence of the Picayune

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune]

Puebla, Mexico, June 8, 1847.

The result of the election for President of this so–called Republic is not known, nor it will be until January. Congress has passed a decree to the effect that on the first day of the coming year the new Congress shall be installed, and that on the 15th of the same month the votes for the President shall be counted. This may be some new trick of Santa Anna’s getting up, as until that time he can have everything his own way. The refusal of the present Congress to accept his resignation as President INTERINO, gives him unlimited ways, and he will not be slow to exercise all power of a dictator. That there will be GRITOS and PRONUNCIAMIENTOS against him before January is as certain as that the intervening months will come and go; but he may be cat enough to fall upon his feet –[qu. foot?]– with every new revolution. An anarchist himself, his very element is anarchy, and the only peaceful moments he probably spends are passed amidst confusion.

Report now has it –we can learn nothing positive– report now has it that Santa Anna has between 30,000 and 40,000 men of all classes under arms at and near the city, and that this force is rapidly augmenting. The peace party dare do nothing, for the moment a main is even suspected he is sent off or thrown into prison. The American residents have all left, many of them in such haste that their business must suffer a most ruinous extent, while it is reported that all the American prisoners, contrary to the laws of nations as well as of humanity, have been cast into a more loathsome prison and treated more rigorously than ever. Such are the verbal reports we received from the capital.

Yours, &c. G. W. K.

[NO]

---

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 News from Puebla

Puebla, Mexico, June 11, ’47.

Full files of papers from the city of Mexico, up to the 8th inst. Inclusive, have just been received here. I have only had time to skim over their contents, and send you an abstract of such intelligence as may be interesting.

The Monitor Republicano of the 8th inst. Says that Alvarez, with his Indians, was to march on that day for Puebla, and was to be followed up by the regular cavalry.— The same paper intimates that the rest of the army is also immediately to take up that line of the march for Puebla, and the inference is that the enemy intends fighting the great battle of this neighborhood. In fact, the editor openly comes out and says that by this course they will avoid having the beautiful city of Mexico the scene of a grand battle. He hopes that by a well combined effort the glory of the Republic may be preserved, and that Santa Anna may wipe off some of the stain which at present sticks to his character. The editor does not exactly says this, but he means it. Every one here in Puebla hopes that the battle or a battle may be fought in this neighborhood –the Mexicans will not make another stand this side the capital in that case.

There was a rumor in Mexico, at last dates, to the effect that some of the officers of the regular troops were about to raise a PRONUNCIAMIENTO in favor a dictatorship. The editor of El Monitor ridicules the report –believes that there is no foundation for it, Santa Anna may be at this bottom of a movement of the kind. Quien sabe?

Yours, &c. G. W. K.

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 More from Puebla

Puebla, Mexico, June 12, 1847,

The city is to–day full of rumors and reports, some of these of a most startling nature if they could be relied upon.
The story is that the Mexican army is so advanced upon and surround this place entirely. Even the names of the leaders –Valencia, Gubero, Lombardini and Alvarez– are given. That Alvarez has started with his command there can be little doubt, but the impression is that he has gone in the rear of Puebla –somewhere in the neighborhood of Nopalucam or Acajate– with the hope that he may be enabled to cut off some of the wagon train known to be on their way up. The Mexicans are known to have seven or eight thousand cavalry, and their true policy would be to fight Gen. Scott in the open field; but he who judges of the Mexicans by the ordinary rules which govern mankind will find mistaken nine time out of ten –so there is no knowing what they will do.

A Frenchman who left the city of Mexico yesterday reports that he saw two thousand men busily at work upon the fortification at El Penon. This is a hill of no great size or elevation, about nine miles this side of the city and on the direct road, with a lake immediately in the rear of it and at its base. Another Frenchman, and one who appears to be intelligent, says that the Mexicans intend to make three or four stands –one between this city and San martin or Tlascala, where they can use their cavalry, another this side of Guadalupe, and the last at Guadalupe itself.– Amid such a multiplicity of reports it is hard to coming to the truth, and perhaps the only way to ascertain the real intentions of the Mexicans at the capital is to pay them a visit with the army.

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c4 Still more from Puebla

Puebla, Mexico, June 14, 1847,

For a wonder, yesterday we did not have anything even in the shape of a rumor from the city of Mexico, nor could we learn anything positive of the movements of the enemy in this neighborhood. I saw a man, who arrived from Atlixco in the morning, who said that 600 of the Indians of Alvarez were expected there immediately –this was the only report received, Atlixco is eighteen or twenty miles from Puebla, and not on the road to the capital.

As yet no one knows when the army is to make a forward movement. Gen. Scott certainly will not march until reinforcements arrive, which are now with out question on the way. A delay is certainly of more importance to our army than to that of the Mexicans, for even if the latter are enabled to augment their forces they will be beaten – that is certain: and then there is a strong probability that so straightened are the Mexicans for means that a delay of a month will find them despairing over the country for the very means of subsistence, or else cut up by internal disorders.

As regards the prospects of a peace, they appear just as distant as ever. A peace patched up as the city of Mexico at this time would hardly last until the ink is dry with which it may be signed; certainly not until the Americans are out of the country. Without doubt there is a large and influential party in favor of it, but they dare not [unintelligible] themselves for fear of after consequences. I know not how it may turn up, but as I said in a former latter, I do not at present see any other course then for the United States to hold and retain possessions of the country –and to govern it, too.

Yours, &c. G. W. K.
Virginia Volunteers

The two additional companies of Volunteers, some months ago asked for by the President from Virginia, not having yet been organized, –and hearing of no movement to obtain recruits in the patriotic tier of counties known as the Tenth Legion, –we are gratified to learn, from the last Lynchburg Virginian, that Major William A. Talbot, of that town, (a very accomplished officer,) has undertaken to raise one of them, and that, within a few days, he had succeeded in procuring 17 fine–looking soldiers. We hope the Major may be successful. Residing in a strong Whig county, and on the borders of two or three others, we presume he will find no difficulty in obtaining the requisite number of “Mexican Whigs,” to supply the lack of zeal which characterizes the flaming War Patriots of Shenandoah, Rockingham andp. They content themselves with extolling “the eminent ability of with which Mr. Polk has conducted the war;” leaving it for others, less patriotic than themselves, to endure the hardships of the camp, and to encounter the hazards of the battle-field.

July 6, 1847, RW47v24n54p2c3 Health of Vera Cruz

In a letter to Gov. Johnson of Louisiana, Dr. Barton of the Army says, there are few cases comparatively of yellow fever at Vera Cruz, and that the mortality would be much less than it is if he had “the appliances” they possess in New Orleans, So far, he says, there has been no epidemic, and the fatal cases have occurred mostly among men who would have died any where with fever of some kind. If he could regulate the habits and modes of living of our countrymen, the Doctor thinks very few would take the disease, and, still fewer would die.

Dr. B. furnishes the following statement of the deaths in Vera Cruz from the 1st of May to the 16th of June: From Vomito: Soldiers 20; Qr. Master’s Dep. 13; Mexicans 11; Others 7; Total 51. Other diseases: Soldiers 112; Qr. Master’s Dep. 49; Mexicans 84; Others 50; Total 295. Nation: American 178; Mexicans 106; Other Foreigners 47; Unknown 15; Total 346.

Taylor to Gaines

The following extract from a letter of Gen. Taylor to Gen. Gaines, written as long as November last, may furnish a clue to his opinions in regard to the policy (or rather the impolicy) of prosecuting a war of conquest in Mexico. That he was, in November last, opposed to the invasion of Mexico, by way of Vera Cruz, and indeed of carrying on farther offensive operations in any quarter, is unquestionable. We know of no “anti–war Whig” who has gone farther indeed than the General, in urging the termination of an offensive war; which, if it shall not result in the permanent occupation of the conquered territory, cannot compensate us for the blood and treasure expended in its prosecution – and which, if it shall lead to the acquisition of that territory, ought still more to be deprecated. But let Gen. Taylor speak for himself, He says:

"If we are, in the language of Mr. Polk and Gen. Scott, under the necessity of ‘conquering the peace’ –and that by taking the capital of the country –we must go to Vera Cruz, take that place, and then march on the city of Mexico. To do so in any other direction, I consider out of the question. But admitting that we conquer the peace by doing so, say at the end of the next twelve months, will the amount of blood and treasure which must be expended in doing so, be compensated by the same? I think not, especially if the country we subdue is to be given up; and I imagine there are but few individuals in our country who think of annexing Mexico to the United States.”

How does the Enquirer relish these sentiments?

Where are the Men?

The Union, some weeks ago, published elaborated statement from the War Department, showing, “as clear as mud,” that by the 1st of July, Gen. Scott would be at head of 20,000 men, and Gen. Taylor would be at the head of 10,000. The 1st of July has passed; and we ask, where are these men in buckram”? At the last dates form gen. Scott, his force did not exceed 8000 effective men, including the garrisons of Jalapa and Perote, while only about 3000 were on the march from Vera Cruz to reinforce him; and Gen. Taylor has only about 5000, including every man bearing arms, from Brazos to Buena Vista! The Adjutant General should correct his figures, which are so widely different from the facts.

July 13, 1847, RW47v24n56p4c3 LATER FROM MEXICO

LATER FROM MEXICO

Our "pony teams," notwithstanding the oppressive heat of the season, still continue to bestow their favors on our readers, bringing us New Orleans papers, by the overland route, in six days from that city.

They brought us last night copies of the New Orleans Delta and Picayune of the 2d instant, the main items of interest from Mexico and other points contained in which we annex:

The New Orleans Delta of the 2d inst, says:

We yesterday received files of Mexican papers from the Capital, to and of the 12th ult., dates three days later than any previously received. We make from them a series of extracts, which are given below. We find in them no evidences of that formidable, fearful supposition to the advance of Gen. Scott, the apprehensions of which, for the last day or two, so alarmed the nerves of some of the more sensitive of our contemporaries.

The War. –The files before us contain full reviews of the opinions of the different newspapers throughout the country, which number about twenty, and with but one single exception (in Durango) they are fully in favor of the war.

The Dictatorship. –El Monitor Republicano of the 12th ult. contains a lengthy article on the subject of the Dictatorship. Up to that date, Santa Anna was not proclaimed, nor did he proclaim himself, Dictator. Indeed, The Monitor ridiculed the idea that he designed to become one. The rumor to that effect which prevailed in the capital, is alleged to have originated with and been propagated by his enemies and the enemies of the country.

No Change of Policy. –The Monitor asserts that the new cabinet is not to be entirely formed of PUROS [Democrats] as stated in some of the journals, and that the new Ministers will carry in the policy of their predecessors. –Santa Anna thinks that without a full Ministry –with the Ministers of War and Finances together with the clerks in the Bureau of Foreign Relations– he will be able, for the time being, to carry on the government.

An article published in the same paper of the 10th, we find the following paragraph: “There is no doubt but that the majority of the nation is in favor of carrying on the war, and we are, consequently, convinced that it is impossible to enter into any arrangement for peace; war e it to be concluded, it would prove fatal to the nationality of Mexico. –The defenders of the nation are, therefore, encouraged with brilliant hopes of final success, notwithstanding our former disasters. All of us who sincerely wish the continuation of the war, look upon an equivocal policy as dangerous, and all overtures of peace a perilous means to secure it; for this reason we are opposed to any change in the politics which may give it pacific appearance.”

The Peace Party. –El Razonador, the peace paper, says that it has recommended peace only because it is convinced that the government would not or could not carry on the war; but at the same time it approves Santa Anna’s withdrawal of his resignation, and praises him very much saying that he is the only man in the country who can keep alive the war spirit.

Gen. Valencia. –Gen. Valencia has reported having arrived at San Luis Potosi on the 5th June, where he took immediate command of the army. General Salas had also arrived there, and taken charge of his post.

Gen. Bustamante. –Gen. Bustamante was at Irapuato on the 5th where he was to begin immediately to raise forces from the State of Guanajuato. It was thought that Gen. Alcorta had issued an order by which Bustamante would be obliged to go as far as Sinaloa, in order to take command of the forces there –which, according to El Monitor, are NONE.

Canalizo Pardoned. –It seems, from what we see in the Monitor of the 11th, that Santa Anna and Canalizo had “made friends” once more, and, consequently, the examination of the latter for his conduct at Cerro Gordo was dropped. Although it was reported that he had been appointed Governor of the State of Vera Cruz, he was to be employed in the defence of the capital.

Gen. Scott’s March to the Capital. –El Republicano of the 11th has accounts from Puebla, in which it is stated that the American forces would not move towards the capital before six weeks (from the 10th June) as they were awaiting reinforcements and heavy artillery from Vera Cruz. El Monitor of the same date, publishes a letter, in which the writer states that he has been informed that the whole forces will move towards the capital in all from the 15th to the 20th, as they had resolved and were determined to spend and CELEBRATE the 4th of July at the capital.
Movements of the American Troops. –A letter from Puebla, addressed to El Monitor, states that Gen. Worth went as far as Cholula with 200 men, and had returned alone with his stuff, without being troubled by any of the guerrillas.

Assistance Solicited from Gen. Scott. –A letter received at the Capital on the 10th, from Tlaxcala, says that the inhabitants of that place had addressed a petition of Gen. Scott, asking protection of him, as a chief of guerrillas, Portillo, was constantly annoying them. The Monitor says that it seems the Tlaxcaltecos wish to imitate their predecessors during the time when Spaniards went to conquer them.

Attack on Gen. Scott. –A correspondent from Puebla, writes on the 7th to a friend in the capital, that the American forces are scarcely 6,000 men, and as General Scott could not leave that place for some time, it would be good policy to have the Mexican forces marched to Puebla and there attack the Americans, who were not prepared for an effective defence.

July 13, 1847, RW47v24n56p4c4 From the Brazos

From the Brazos

The schooner H. L. Scranton, arrived at New Orleans on the 2d inst. From Brazos Santiago, having sailed thence on the 26th ult.

By this arrival the Picayune has the Matamoros Flag of the 23d ult.

It reports that four members of the 1st. Illinois regiment on the march from Camargo to Reynosa, unarmed and having fallen in the rear of the regiment, were attacked by a party of about 20 Mexicans and loosed and robbed of their money, without doing them further injury.

July 13, 1847, RW47v24n56p4c4 From Tampico

From Tampico

The schooner Sarah Elizabeth, Capt. Webb, arrived at New Orleans on the 1st inst. From Tampico, having left there on the 24th of June.

The Picayune learns from Mr. Mitchell that the English steamer Avon was lying of the bar, landing quicksilver. –She would shortly proceed on her voyage, touching at her several appointed ports, but she would take little or no specie with her, as in consequence of the guerrilla parties it is deemed unsafe to transport even merchandise in the interior without a large escort of troops. Tampico feels sensibly this state of things.

The accounts of the health of the city are at variance. –While Capt. Webb represents that the Louisiana regiment is suffering dreadfully from the fever –less than one–fourth fit for duty– the Sentinel, of the 20th ult, says the health of the town continues good, with the [unintelligible] of some cases of intermittent fever.

The U.S. bomb–brig Hecla. Lieut Com’g Fairfax is blockading the port of Soto la Matina.

–Another requisition. –The Secretary of War has made another requisition on Louisiana. The present one, just received by Gov. Johnson, is for two companies of mounted gunmen. The scene of their duty is to Vera Cruz and its environs.

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p1c4 Interesting from Tampico

Interesting from Tampico

By late arrivals at New Orleans, advices have been received from Tampico to the 27th ult. A letter to the Picayune, of the date, says:

*Cassins M. Clay, Major Borland and the American prisoners are expected in town to–morrow or next day. –The three companies of the 11th Regiment of Infantry, now awaiting transportation to Vera Cruz, have been ordered up
The Picayune has received information, from other sources, corroborating the foregoing statement, as to the release of the prisoners, and their being ordered to Tampico, guarded by a strong detachment; and adds, what is calculated to excite some uneasiness, that “the verbal reports are to the effect that when the prisoners had reached within 150 miles of Tampico, they were met by Urrea, who detained them as prisoners; and further, that Urrea had ordered out all the men of the country for the purpose of making an attack upon Tampico. It appears to be certain that three companies of the 11th Infantry, which were waiting at Tampico bar transportation for Vera Cruz, were ordered up into the city. Every man there was under arms, expecting the town to be attacked. The Picayune adds, however, that it has heard such frequent rumors of an immediate attack upon Tampico, that very little attention is paid to them, though the present alarm, it says, appears to be better founded than usual.

If it be true, as stated by the Washington correspondent of the Charleston Couriers, that the President, six weeks ago, in conversation with a military man, said that General Scott was at that moment in the city of Mexico, he must have been very much disappointed by the latest advices from that quarter. The officer, in reply, is said to have assured the President that he was mistaken, and farther, that Gen. Scott would do well to get to Mexico by the 1st of January next. For our own part, we think it very unimportant, so far as its capturo will influence the duration of the war, whether Gen. Scott be at this time in Puebla or in the Halls of the Montezumas; unless, indeed, it be true, as the Washington correspondent of the New York Courier, who speaks generally in an eracural vein, and in whose opinion therefore we have very little confidence, says "is suspected by some of our friends at Puebla, that is the determination of Santa Anna, when next defeated by Gen. Scott, to permit himself to be captured, and ask to be sent out of the country, under our protection, as the surest means of escaping death or expulsion." Should this surmise, however, be verified by the result, it is to be hoped that Mr. Polk will not again send Santa Anna back to Mexico, to aid him in "conquering a peace."

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p2c1 Rumors of Peace

From the Seat of War.
Rumors of Peace.

The intelligence from the seat of war, to which we devoted so much space this morning, is interesting, though not decisive in its character. Gen. Scott was still at Puebla on the last of June, and it is not at all probable therefore that he celebrated the 4th of July in “the imperial city of the Aztecs,” especially as it was understood that he was awaiting the arrival of the new levies on their way to reinforce him, about 2000 of which, under Generals Cadwallader and Pillow, were daily expected, while 2500 more, under General Pierce, would soon take up the line of march from Vera Cruz.

The reader will observe, from the interesting letters of Mr. Kendall to the Picayune, that it was the prevalent opinion at headquarters that peace would soon be restored, although the writer was not without misgivings as to the authenticity of the rumors upon which this opinion was founded, and the accuracy of which is rendered still farther questionable by accounts received by the editors of the Picayune, direct from the city of Mexico, of a contrary tenor. We shall look for the termination of hostilities not until a treaty shall have been signed; and even then, it will depend materially upon the character of its provisions and upon the circumstances connected with its negotiation whether we may feel justified in congratulating the country upon the actual cessation of hostilities.

What may be the nature of the ultimatum which Gen. Scott (or Mr. Trist, if he has been clothed exclusively with diplomatic authority) has been instructed to propose to the Mexican Government, it is of course impossible to conjecture; and yet it is obvious, that should the Mexican authorities and people de willing or even solicitous to terminate the war, it will materially depend upon the character of the terms offered to them whether that result is likely to be speedily attained. They may be anxious to discontinue a contest in which they cannot hope to be finally or even partially successful; but they may nevertheless, should the conditions exacted of them be in their judgment too onerous and humiliating, determine to protract the conflict, at the risk of their total subjugation, and the annihilation even of their national existence.

In a late editorial on this subject, in the Washington Union, which we supposed expresses the views and purposes of the Executive, we observe a paragraph, in which, after dwelling upon the desire of the Administration to secure a just and honorable peace, we are told, that “it is resolved now, as it has been from the first to accept no terms of peace from Mexico, save such as will do full justice to the rights of the country, to the claims of our injured fellow citizens, to the objects of the war, and to our nations honor.” Although these are phrases of vague import, with a single exception, perhaps no one will be disposed to demur to them. "The objects of the war” are of course locked up in the breast of the Executive, with whom it originated. We should indeed be very much gratified if we could be enlightened upon this point by the President’s Organ. What are “the objects of the war,” apart from the vindication of our rights and honor? Is the acquisition of territory by force, which the President knew he could not obtain by negotiation, one of them? If so, (and we believe that it was its main object,) most fortunate for the country will it be if the Administration shall be thwarted in its purpose, if not by the obstinacy of the enemy, by the voice of the people of the United Sates, a large majority of whom, we are satisfied, do not desire an extension, by such means, if by any means, of our territorial limits.

[NO]
Texas and Oregon

The passion for enlarging our boundaries has been already, we apprehend, fully gratified. The people begin to perceive that the bargain by which Texas was acquired will prove to have been a most disadvantageous one in the end, even in a pecuniary point of view; while the fallacy of the assumption, so boldly maintained while the question of annexation was pending, that its acquisition would increase the facilities of defence for our Southern frontier, is already clearly shown, as it would have been still more disastrously demonstrated had not the wisdom and moderation of the Senate, on the Oregon question, averted a war with Great Britain. For, with Mexico as her ally, she would have found a pathway through Texas, insusceptible in that event as it would have been of defence, into the very heart of the Southern portion of the Union. And yet had the settlement of that grave question been left to the "pre-eminent ability" of Mr. Polk, we should at this moment have been at war both with England and Mexico; and we leave it for his partizans to tell us what in that event would have been the probable condition of our Southern frontier, so greatly extended by annexation of Texas, and so much more exposed to the inroads of an enemy by its sparse population, and by its total destitution of artificial means of defence? Instead of overrunning Mexico and bombarding her towns and cities, we should have found full employment in defending our own. Justly censurable, therefore, as Mr. Polk is for unconstitutionality making war upon Mexico, he is far less worthy of indignation for the mischiefs that have resulted from the act of usurpation, than he is for the evils which he has only failed to bring upon the country by the firmness with which the Senate rebuked the ignorance which claimed a territory that did not belong to us, and the obstinacy with which that claim was pressed to the very verge of war.

Never we venture to say, when the Swedish Chancellor bade his son "behold with how little wisdom a nation may be governed," had he witnessed so wonderful a combination of folly and perverseness in the Rulers of a nation, as that exhibited by the present Administration in the conduct of our foreign relations –one of the results of which has been the war with Mexico, all the legitimate and proper "objects" of which could have been as certainly as attained, without it while a far more serious war with Great Britain would have been another of its necessary frits, had the President found in the Senate men equally as ignorant as himself of the grounds of the controversy between the two countries, and equally as reckless in maintaining a claim the justice of which he was unable to show, while he had not the magnanimity to withdraw it except on compulsion, when its injustice had been demonstrated by his own friends.

Gen. Scott and Mr. Trist

We copied, a few days ago, the emphatic contradiction, by the Washington Union, of the various statements, in relation to the controversy between Gen. Scott and Mr. Trist, growing out of an alleged interference by the latter with the proper authority of the former as commander in chief of our armies in Mexico. The Union stated "positively, that all these accusations against the Administration, of giving Mr. Trist any authority to interfere in any form, or in the slightest degree, with Gen. Scott's military command, are absolutely and totally without foundation."

The New York Courier and Enquirer, which had been prominent in making the accusations thus positively and officially denied, repeats them in the face of that denial, and reaffirms their essential truth. It says: "Mr. Trist did enclosed to Gen. Scott a despatch from the Department of War, giving him (Trist) power to conclude an armistice with the Mexican Government; and Gen. Scott, in reply, informed Mr. Trist, that, from the perusal of that despatch, it was evidently the intention of the Department of degrade him from the command of the army, and to make him subordinate to Mr. Trist. We assert this (says the Courier) as a fact within our own knowledge; and if the editor of the Union speaks the truth when he says he has inquired carefully into the matter, and if he has has had access to papers now on file in the War Department, the fact is within his knowledge also. Whether the Administration did actually give to Mr. Trist all the power he attempted to exercise or not, the Union may consider matter of opinion. Gen. Scott from a perusal of the Secretary's letter, had no doubt whatever of the intention of the Executive virtually to supersede him, by making him subordinate to Mr. Trist; and he at once informed that gentleman that he could not exercise the power which he had claimed, and which the instructions of the War Department conferred upon him, while he (Scott) remained at the head of the army."

We shall doubtless hear more of this action. [From the N. O. Picayune, July 8]

Important From Mexico
Latest from the Army of Gen. Scott.

The steamship Alabama arrived at an early hour yesterday from Vera Cruz, touching at the Brazos. She left the former port on the 2d of July and the latter on the 4th.

The following passengers come over Alabama from Vera Cruz: Capt. A.R. Hetzel, assistant quartermaster; Dr. A.H. Saunders, late bearer of the despatches from the Government to Gen. Scott; Messrs E.G. Elliot and C. Finley, of the army, and Messrs Fisher, Tobler, Folly, Richards, Carpenter, Tenbrick, Hardin, Tai, Moore, McCall, Mrs. Goates, and thirty discharged teamsters. The following passengers are from the Brazos: Capt. Carrington, Lieuts Kinney and Ashby, and Messrs J.T. Weisger and Wm C Hogg, of Virginia Regiment; and Capt. Chas Clarke and Acker, and Lieut Gouvenoux, of the 2d Mississipi Regiment.

By this arrival we have direct advices from Mexico to the morning of the 29th of June, and from Puebla to the 30th.

Gen. Scott had not then been able to leave Puebla. He was awaiting the reinforcements under Gen. Cadwalader and Gen. Pillow, who had not then arrived. [Some of the papers mention that Gen. Cadwalader arrived at Puebla on the 30th. Letter from Mr. Kendall of that date make no mention of it, though he was constantly expected. He was at Perote about the 20th, awaiting Gen. Pillow.]

The news from the city of Mexico is very indefinite. –Gen. Scott is said to have communicated to the Government that Mr. Trist was with him authorized to negotiate for a peace. Santa Anna had been in vain endeavoring to procure a quorum of Congress to lay Gen. Scott’s communication before it. Mr. Kendall’s letters rather encourage the prospects of an early peace; but we have had access to letter from a very responsible source in the city of Mexico which take a very different view of the subject. The writer thinks Gen. Scott will have to march into Mexico to secure a peace.

The censorship of the press existing in Mexico prevents us from knowing what measures to defence the city will be taken. Santa Anna was to leave the capital on the 30th ult. Intending to pass three days in the country for the benefit of his health. It is said that every avenue of entrance into the city is fortified, but the writer in Mexico, upon whom we very much rely, thinks the American army will easily overcome all such obstacles –that the defence of their fortifications will only embarrass the Mexicans.

We are unable to throw much light upon the movements of Gen. Cadwalader and Gen. Pillow. The latter is said to have been compelled to contest the road with the guerrilla parties, till he was beyond Cerro Gordo. Guerrilleros took advantage of every defile to resist his progress. His loss is said to have been severe.

We have by this arrival a file of the “American Star No 2,” published twice a week at Puebla, by Messrs. Peoples, Barnard & Callahan. The file extends from the 12th to the 27th June, and we glean from its columns several items of intelligence.

The Government of the city of Puebla has been entrusted to Lt. Col. Belton, of the 3d Artillery.

Gen Alvarex was at Atlixco on the 14th of June with 300 Mexican cavalry. The Star thinks his forces have been greatly overrated.

A long elaborated letter is published in the Star, in Spanish and English, addressed to the people of Mexico, by and officer of the American army. We have read but portions of it, but it appears a calm, familiar statement, aimed and well calculated to teach Mexicans how unfounded are their inveterate prejudices against the United States, and the futility on their part of a further prosecution of the war. We may recur to it.

A correspondent of El Monitor Republcanico, writing from Puebla, says: “Gen. Scott, with all his engineer corps and a number of other officers, proceeded to Cholula the other day, and, after ascending the pyramid, agreed at once to fortify the place.” He thinks it is only throwing salt to the fishes to fortify so out of the way a place. The truth of the business is, says the Star, that Gen. Scott never went there at all, but that Generals Quitman, Twiggs, Col. Harney and a party of officers, hearing of the pyramid and wishing to see the spot rendered so notorious by the massacre of Cholulans by Cortez, did go; but the idea of fortifying was farthest from the thought.

The Star says there is three months’ provisions in the city for the army, and that the fields around the city supply all the forage necessary.

A Mexican named Heredia has been detected by his countrymen on his way from the capital to Puebla with drawings of the different fortifications around the capital. –He was tried and condemned as a spy and a traitor, and was condemned to be shot on the 21st ult. The fellow made his escape the morning of the 21st.

The Mexicans are using every inducement to make our men desert, and with some success, but those who have
We were told yesterday by a person who had advices from Mexico as late as the 20th, that the American prisoners residents knocking about as usual. extended to them, and as far as I can see has had very limited effect, for I observe the well known American troubles them –I see Maj. Gaines and others daily. –The decree ordering the other Americans away was not is not the case. They have been at liberty for a long time past, and saunter about the streets like other people. No "I observe in the 'Star' you sent me, that it is said that the American prisoners are kept in confinement here, which does not credit this report.

The following paragraph is extracted from a letter dated in Mexico on the 17th instant:

"On Sunday morning last, the 20th, a party of Americans, not connected with the army, left here for a hacienda on the road to Mexico –say about eighteen miles distant. The object in view by the party, eight in number, was the purchasing of mules for the Government; and after they have bargained for a number, to be brought in the next day to Puebla, they prepared to leave, but were prevailed on to defer their departure until after dinner. The repast was served up in good style, and after it was partaken of, the host refusing to receive any pay whatever, the horses were brought out and the party mounted. They were warned not to go too near a village on their left, as some five or six hundred soldiers were quartered there, and if we mistake not, a Mexican was preparing a horse to accompany them along a bye path in the mountains, when a party of lancers were discovered riding up to the hacienda. The little party of Americans started off in a slow gallop, their leader telling them to save the horses until it would be necessary to run. In this way they proceeded some distance, the soldiers continuing to decrease the distance between them, when it was proposed to go a little faster. A half a minute had not elapsed with the increased gait, before they came upon another party of the enemy, formed across the road. To attempt to pass them would have been foolishness; so they halted, and through their interpreter, informed the captain that they were Americans, but not connected with the army. The pursuing lancers were now close upon them, and before a proper answer had been returned, came charging down the hill in such manner as to leave the boys doubtful as their intentions; so they prepared themselves for an attack, which was soon commenced by the Mexican force, numbering near eighty men. After a brief engagement, during which the Mexicans crowded upon one another so fast that they could scarcely use their arms, Mr. Dickinson, who had been severely wounded in the thigh with a lance, touched his blood mare with the spur, and she made an opening in the enemy's ranks running down one or two horses, and showing the others aside so as to effect his escape. During this operation another of the party who had been unhorsed and wounded, slid off into a ditch, where he concealed himself until night, and got into the city next morning. Dickinson was chased by two lancers to the river, closed by, at which place he shot the foremost one, and then making his way to an Indian hut, concealed himself until next morning, when he started for and entered the city about 9 o'clock."

All the Americans in this affair were wounded, and one named John Kinsey is supposed to have been killed. Another man Wallbridge has written a letter back to Puebla from Atlixco. He had been ordered to Mexico. The rest of the party, not named, are supposed to be prisoners also, although there was a report that all had been shot. –The Star does not credit this report.

The following paragraph is extracted from a letter dated in Mexico on the 17th instant:

"I observe in the 'Star' you sent me, that it is said that the American prisoners are kept in confinement here, which is not the case. They have been at liberty for a long time past, and saunter about the streets like other people. No one troubles them –I see Maj. Gaines and others daily. –The decree ordering the other Americans away was not extended to them, and as far as I can see has had very limited effect, for I observe the well known American residents knocking about as usual."

We were told yesterday by a person who had advices from Mexico as late as the 20th, that the American prisoners were in confinement in Santiago. It may be that our friend on the 17th is not a strict observer of affairs, and that the reincarceration of our men was not known to him. It may even be that Major Gaines and Borland are at liberty, and none others.

We give this paragraph as we find it. The inference from it to our minds is that the prisoners were yet in Mexico as late as the 20th ult. If this were so, the report brought here on Tuesday from Tampico is likely to be unfounded. We regret that we have no means of clearing up the doubt.

The Star reports that the Prefect of Puebla recently ran off to Atlixco, taking with him all the city funds. He published and address to the people, giving an explanation of his conduct.

By this arrival we have the result of Com. Perry's second expedition against Tabasco. This time he was entirely successful. We have a letter from a gallant officer, enclosing to us a sketch of the river Tabasco from Devil's Bend, so called, to the city, showing the landing and march of Com. Perry's force, which consisted of eleven hundred seamen and marines and ten field pieces. An account of the expedition by an accomplished surgeon in the navy, which accompanied the map, has failed to reach us as yet. But the map almost tells the story. The town was taken on the 16th of June. The expedition anchored in a very sharp turn of the river called the Devil's bend, and was fired into from an ambuscade. A little higher up the landing of Com. Perry is marked upon the left or north bank of the river. The route from this point which the commodore pursued is traced on the map up to Fort Iturbide, which is a short distance below the city. The fort was manned by 200 regulars under Gen. Echagaray, commandant general of the State. The point is marked on the map where Bruno’s Civicos fired into the commodore's steamer from an ambuscade this is below the Devil’s Turn. The next point of interest is the breast work where Lieut. May was wounded. So far our map tells us the story; the rest requires but few words: the forts which defend the town yielded to the guns of the fleet, before the land expedition could get into action. The enemy stood but one discharge of artillery. Lieut. May, it is said, had his harm broken and one other officer was wounded. A sufficient force was left behind to hold the town, and the commodore returned to the station off Anton Lizardo on the 29th ult.

A rumor was current in Vera Cruz on the morning of the 1st instant, that Gen. Scott had entered the city of Mexico, and that Gen. Pillow had been captured by the guerrilla parties. We know the former report to be false, and believe the latter to be. Our Vera Cruz correspondent put no faith in either story.

Our letters from Mr. Kendall were dispatched by him, by a special courier, and reached Vera Cruz the evening of the 1st instant. We have a few Mexicans papers by the same conveyance.

We append two letters from Vera Cruz correspondent, for the local news contained in them, though not of the latest date.

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p2c4 Vera Cruz

[Special Correspondence of the Picayune]

Vera Cruz, June 28, 1847.

I wish I had something in the shape of interesting news to communicate, but although I have seen letters one day later than has been forwarded to New Orleans, they contain nothing of interest.

The expedition which left here on Saturday to try to recover some goods captured from the train under Col. McIntosh, which were said to be near Santa Fe, as well as for other purposes, returned last night without effecting anything.

So many reports have been started and published concerning the health of the castle that I beg leave to furnish you with the following facts, which I have been kindly permitted to extract from the reports and journals kept there.

Since the capitulation of the city and castle of San Juan de Ulua, the latter has been garrisoned permanently by company G of the 1st Infantry, under the command of Brevet Major Backus. The Phoenix company of Louisiana volunteers were on duty there for about two weeks, and there were also in the castle a number of American and Mexican prisoners undergoing sentence or awaiting trial, varying from ten to twenty.

The deaths at the castle from the commencement to the present time are as follows:

Month of April, Co. G, 1st Infantry 2

Month of May, Co. G, 1st Infantry 1

Month of May, Phoenix Co. 2

Month of May, Prisoners 3

Month of June, Prisoners 1

Total deaths 9.

There were also two or three prisoners carried to the city hospital for treatment who are said to have died at vomito, but there were but one or two of them who died at the castle which were pronounced vomito. Dr. Wickham was also carried to town and died several days after.

The proportion of sickness was greatest in the month of May, and least the 20th June, when it was reduced to one man. The sick report yesterday called for eight, but seven of these were able to walk. The most common disease is diarrhea but in so trifling a form that it is easily stopped.

One death from vomito has occurred on board the Potomac, as I have been informed by an officer of the ship, but there is but little sickness on board.
Vera Cruz, June 28, 1847

On Saturday last about 800 horses and mules escaped from the pen through either the carelessness of the man in charge, or, as some suppose, it may have been done intentionally, and although a considerable mounted force has been sent out to try and recover them, they returned last night without success. There is no doubt but that the guerrillas had a hand in it, and as soon as the horses and mules reached the point where they were prepared to receive them, they no doubt hurried them out of the reach of the party sent to recover them. The misfortune will be severely felt by the Quartermaster's Department here, as these horses and mules were intended particularly for the transportation of the baggage and provisions of the troops which are daily arriving, and who may be detained for the want of them. There may be sufficient number left to despatch the troops now here, who will doubtless leave the latter part of the week, but for the others who are expected I fear that we shall have to look to New Orleans for the means of transportation, and in the meantime our poor soldiers will have to lie here subject to all diseases of the climate.

June 29th. –Lieut. Merryfield, of Capt. Ford's company of 3d Dragoons, committed suicide this morning, in Capt. Duperu's tent, by blowing his brains out with a pistol. His appearance indicated a free use of opium, and it is generally supposed the he was laboring under its effects when he committed the horrid act.

The guerrillas have threatened a descent upon Tlacotalpan, and are said to be about 300 strong in the neighborhood.

Although there is a sufficient number of troops here to hold the city against an attack, there are not the means to keep in subjection the marauding parties which constantly hover about the city, and until we get about 300 Rangers here to scour the country daily, there will be no security for such Government property as it is impossible to keep within the wall of the city.

The vomito is rather on the decrease, which I think, is partially owing to the want of subjects of the city. The troops that have arrived are encamped three miles distant and few cases of yellow fever occur there, but those who are brought in with other complaints frequently turn into the vomito.

Yours, truly.

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p2c4 From Puebla

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune.]

Puebla, Mexico, June 29, 1847.

The ever–varying, ever–changing kaleidoscope of Mexican politics, which but few days since presented a phase all red, sanguinary and belligerent, by the single turn which the rising and going down of the sun has given it, presents a new and most pacific aspect this morning. As another revolution of the machine may bring another change, and that within the tolling of a few short hours on the city clock, I shall wait until the last moment before I give you what may be termed the prospects of a peace.

Within the last two days some twelve or fifteen prisoners, Mexicans, who have been confined for different periods from one to ten or more years, have been liberated by Gen. Scott. That some of them have been guilty of gross and most heinous crimes there can be no doubt, but that they are any worse than those who incarcerated them is questionable. So long have some of them been confined, that even the original charges against them have been lost—one of them says that all he ever did against the law was to strike an officer for insulting his wife. It was a study to watch the faces of the poor devils as they were brought from their dens to be questioned as to their past delinquencies, and again to see their eager looks as they once more stepped forth free and saw the face of the blessed sun of which they have been so long deprived. Their families, too, hearing that they were to be liberated, crowded around the threshold of the prison; and the different groupings fromed a picture which will not be forgotten by those who witnessed it. The hair of one prisoner, although his face denoted that he had not even yet reached middle life, was perfectly white. Another prisoner, a Frenchman, was one of the most noble specimens of humanity I have ever seen. He had been incarcerated several years, charged with aiding in some robbery on the road, but had never been brought to trial.

Our latest paper form the capital are to the 22d inst., from Atlixco we have El Nacional of the 26th. Santa Anna is striking boldly at the liberty of the press, and hence we are unable, through the papers, to come at the true state of affairs at the city of Mexico. Senor Sojo, the printer of the Bulletin of Democracy (Boletín de la Democracia) has been sent to Acapulco, whilst Senor Eufemio Romero, the principal writer of the la Calalvera, has been packed off to San Luis at a moment's warning. Torres, the editor of El Monitor Republicano has been repeatedly threatened by the authorities with imprisonment, but notwithstanding these threats keeps up a constant fire at Santa Anna and his ministers. Why he, too, is not sent off, it is hard to say.

Ibarra has been appointed Minister of Foreign Relations, and Vicente Romero, of Justice. Both are said to be ultra Puros, and with little or no character. It is asserted that no honest man will take office under the present Government, and a dishonest one does not appear to retain it more than eighty–and–forty hours.

The Mexican papers continue to brag about the successes of the guerrillas between Vera Cruz and Jalapa. We shall know with what reason when the train comes up.

A letter from Mazatlan, dated June 2d, states that that neighborhood has been declared under martial law. The U.S. ship Independence sailed from Mazatlan on the 1st instant, destination not intentioned, leaving Cyane only off the bar.

The only article I have seen in any of the Mexican journals, relating particularly to the action of the Congress on the question of peace, is the following in El Monitor Republicano of the 22inst. The editor says:

“A communication has been addressed to our Government form gen. Scott, at Puebla, in which the arrival there of a commissioner from the United States, fully empowered for the adjustment of a peace, is announced; but it has been sent to the Congress for that body to deliberate on so important affair. We think that a sufficient number of deputies will no assemble; and should this be the case, the absentees will appear in our columns, in order that the public being made acquainted with them may never return them again.”

This is the English of the entire article, but what the editor is driving at in the last clause it is difficult to make out. It may be that he threatens to expose the absent members because he wishes them to appear and vote against listening to any propositions of peace, and it may be exactly the reverse. He must be a shrewd observer who can tell from what a Mexican editor says one day what his feelings will be the next.

I wrote you a few days since, giving you a small specimen of the ravings of one the San Luis editors on the subject to coming with the vile North American vandals. He said that his State would never listen to propositions of peace until gen. Scott was on his knees kissing the hands of Santa Anna, and Gen. Taylor was chained in one of the Gen. Valencia's stables, but the man was evidently excited when he said all this. A wag of an officer at my side says that if they do chain old "Rough and Ready" in a stable, they will find him standing up to the rack. The writer form the same paper –El Estandarte de los Chinacates– handles Gen. Scott severely for his Jalapa proclamation. I shall endeavor to forward you the paper, with the hope that you may read and transfer his ravings for the benefit of those fond of tomahawking and scalping style.

We have a thousand and one conflicting rumors in relation to the upward bound train under Gens. Pillow and Cadwalader, and as many reports about the movements, who are said to be leagued in the attempt to cut it off. The train, maugre all the attempts of the Pintos, guerrillas and others, will be along in the course of a day or two.

Yours, G. W. K.
[NO]

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p2c4 More from Puebla

Puebla, Mexico, June 30, 1847

All the talk now is of peace, immediate peace, with the great Mexican nation, and those who talked but a short week since of revealing in the halls of the Montezumas, now appear to think they are just about as near the aforesaid halls as they ever will be. I hardly know what to think of the matter. The arrival of heavy reinforcements known to be on the way for Gen. Scott, combined with the loss of confidence the Mexicans leaders have in themselves and their followers, have turned their feelings to a degree, and the most belligerent among them may now really be in favor of coming to terms. Santa Anna himself, although he will be very far from starting the ball, will doubtless help to keep it in motion when it is once under way. His very salvation depends upon it. He knows that he will be defeated and lose all if he makes another stand; by making cat's–paws of some of the members of Congress, and getting them to look with an eye of favor upon propositions of peace, he thinks he may be able to second their movement's if everything looks favorable, and finally himself reap all the benefits that may grow out of it. What the propositions are that have been made to the Mexican Government few here know; but what with British interference, and the timidity of the Mexicans leaders, they have evidently been listened to.

Three days since and hardly a man in Gen. Scott's army thought that there was a hope of coming to terms with the enemy; now, the tune has changed, and many of the officers are even talking of the chances of avoiding and escaping the vomito on their way home. With all the cry of peace, I am not one of those who think that our affairs with Mexico are yet settled. A great deal depends upon circumstances. Should the upper train, containing as is supposed a large sum of money, meet with a reverse, the Mexicans would be emboldened to offer fresh resistance; should Santa Anna find, on counting noses, that a majority are against him in any committee appointed by Congress, he will be found among the first to scoff at any idea of terms with the perfidious Yankees; should in fact, anything turn up out of which the Dictator may make capital himself, no matter whether for or against the best interests of his dearly beloved (?) country, he will embrace it for his own aggrandizement. He wants time, he wants to procrastinate, he wants to delay the approach of Gen. Scott upon the capital —in short, he wants to do anything which may aid and further his own ambitious schemes.
I might run on for hours with speculations as to the present condition and future prospect of this war with Mexico; but as it would all end in speculation, I shall close with a few remarks which may be taken for what they are worth. Santa Anna, tired of fighting the Americans, is anxious to make peace with them, although fearful of openly to avowing it. The military are anxious to see the war continued, as the only means by which they can support themselves; the leperos, the ragamuffins of the country, care but little, one way or the other, how affairs go, so that they can steal enough to supply themselves of blankets, chinguirite, and frijoles and tortillas sufficient to support life. The Indians care for nothing and they are the most numerous class. The priest—perhaps I should have placed them at the top of the list—are anxious to preserve their position and their riches. All these feelings and interest—after taking into consideration that all hate and despise us—you may mix up and then make out the chances for a peace.

I do not know that any one has reflected much upon this subject, but to me it seems that this thing of making peace is to be a more difficult matter than making war upon the Mexicans, and will be surrounded with greater perplexities. Texas has to be brought into question, other boundaries taken into consideration. California is to be a bone of contention, indemnifications and cost of war are to be called into account, and a thousand other matters will be found in the catalogue of stumbling blocks in the way of an amicable arrangement of the difficulties. The “three millions,” after Santa Anna has helped himself—for the must be thought of first will not go far, in way of salve or cordial for the many wounds under which poor Mexico is suffering, and there will be other provisos than Willmot’s for increasing the sum.

Let me conclude this hasty scrawl. The talk, as I said at the outset, is now of peace; but it will all end in Santa Anna’s advancement or his utter downfall. In all his diplomatic arrangements—whenever he has been allowed to argue his point—he has invariably a winner; at this game, so no how or other, he always turns everything to his own advantage, or at least always has so far. How he will succeed in his present scheme remains to be seen, but he should, and probably will, be closely watched. A few days will bring us out of the doubt and uncertainty in which every thing is at present enveloped, and I shall make opportunities to keep you informed of every thing that transpires.

G. W. K.

[NO]

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p2c5 From Mexico City

From the City of Mexico

We have papers from the city of Mexico to the 22d of June, but not a perfect file. Santa Anna has again been tampering with the freedom of the press. One of his first acts upon resuming the reins of government on the 20th of May was to abrogate the decree of Anaya shackling the press. The press enjoyed their freedom thus obtained nearly one month. On the 18th of June Sr. Vicente G. Torres, the proprietor of El Monitor Republicano, was summoned to the presence of Gen. Gutierrez and informed that President Santa Anna had ordered that he should be sent off at once to Acapulco if he continued the publication of such articles as had hitherto appeared in the Monitor in opposition to the Government. He was expressly forbidden to speak of the generals, to say anything disrespectful of the army, or to discourage the war. Senor Torres replied in a very spirited manner to the governor, and his papers have not ceased its opposition to Santa Anna and his measures. The editors affect to believe that the verbal threat was merely intended to frighten to the proprietor.

A like message was communicated to the Republicano. Thereupon Senor Otero, who has been acting as editor of that able paper, in the absence of Senor Cumplido, at once withdrew from the paper. He refuses to write under the restrictions imposed upon him.

The editor of the Calavera, a satirical paper, was sent off by an order of the President to san Luis Potosi, and the paper discontinued by the proprietors. The editor of the Boletin de la Democracia, Senor Sojo, has been sent off to Acapulco. His paper was considered the organ of Gomez Farias. While such measures are taken to keep the press in subjection, our readers will not expect to derive much information from such papers as have reached us.

To test how far the laws will protect the citizens against the arbitrary edicts of Government, Senor Torres had determined to bring the acts of Gen. Gutierrez before the Supreme Court, and demand punishment upon him for his infractions of the constitutional rights of the citizens. This will probably lead to some yet more arbitrary act of the Government, and we shall perhaps hear that Torres has been packed off to some remote prison. He is accustomed to these things.

The papers contain accounts of the assaults of the guerrilla parties upon the trains from Vera Cruz. It was supposed that Gen. Alvarez would join Father Jarauta and continue to harass the trains. Several communications are published from Governor Soto in which he assures the Government that he will take the promptest measures to cut off all communication between Vera Cruz and Jalapa. He says that guerrilla parties were rapidly collecting upon the route, and he contemplated taking possession of Jalapa. He announces in one of his letters that the American sick and wounded at Jalapa were all to be left their “entrusted to the generosity and humanity of Mexicans.” We believe, on the contrary, that all our sick and wounded were removed early to Perote. The impression is that the command of Gen. Cadwalader awaited at Perote the arrival of Gen. Pillow, but in regard to the movements of these generals we are let almost entirely in the dark.

An official statement is given in the Mexican papers of the forces under the orders of Gen. Taylor on the 20th of May, with a minute account of the strength of each position from the mouth of the Rio Grande to Saltillo. The volunteers which have lately returned are included in this enumeration. The Mexicans were aware that they were to be disbanded and their places supplied by fresh troops.

The Monitor of the 22d ult. Says that our army at Puebla had lost from 250 to 300 men by sickness, death and desertion. It mentions, too, that four or five months’ pay was due to our troops, and that in consequence of this the 6th Infantry had refused on the 18th ult. to turn out when ordered for drill. This all gammon, of course.

The American army is twitted with having boasted that they would spend the 4th of July in the capital, while the truth is, say the Mexicans, that their reinforcements instead of reaching Puebla, have got stuck in the mud upon the route.

An opposition paper says that when Americans learned that Canalizo had been appointed to the command in the State of Puebla Gen. Scott was highly delighted; and that Worth and old Twiggs (thus irreverently are they named) declared that if these 8000 cavalry were under his command they were safer than in their own houses.

An official letter is published dated the 14th June from Sna Juan de los Llanos announcing that an American train had been attacked above Cerro Gordo, and forty wagons were taken. This probably refers to the attack upon the trains under Col. McIntosh, which is often alluded to.

In Mr. Kendall’s letter allusion is made to a loan called for by Santa Anna. The decree referred to is dated the 17th of June and imposes contribution of one million of dollars upon the Federal district, and the States and Territories not occupied by the enemy. The apportionment of the amount among the different States would not interest our readers. The contribution is to be enforced by the authorities of the different States, &c. respectively—no one to be compelled to pay over $2000, or less than $25. Ten days are allowed to apportion the contributions among individuals in the most equitable manner. Individuals are allowed just three days to pay their respective quotas; if they make default, they are condemned to pay twice the amount.

The entrance of Victor Romero into the ministry of Justice and Religious Affairs is scolded at by the Mexican papers. The Monitor Republicano pronounces it equivalent to another defeat by the enemy.

The pressure upon our time columns has been such that we have done little more than glance hastily at the Mexican papers before us. They do not, however, contain news of movement; yet we may recur to them another day.

---

July 16, 1847, RW47v24n57p2c5 From Vera Cruz

From Vera Cruz Sun

Late and Important Intelligence form the city of Mexico.

Letters were received in this city, yesterday afternoon, bearing date Mexico, 15th June, from which we gather the following intelligence:

The Presidential election did not take place as it was previously reported, and the Mexican Congress has adjourned after giving Gen. Santa Anna extraordinary powers, with the restriction that he shall not enter into negotiations for peace. Measures have been taken for the most vigorous defence of the capital. The election for President having been postponed until Sep. Next, General Santa Anna will act as such till then.

Gen. Lombardini, has been nominated General in-Chief of the Mexican army, which is gathering in the city of Mexico. It is very difficult to state the correct amount of the troops, the regiments not being all composed of the same number of men; some of them are only 150 strong.—One of the letters states that the forces in the city amounted to 20,000, and that they were daily increasing.

Gen. Alcorta has written a document recommending a plan of campaign in the guerrilla system: marching 10,000 men to the rear of Gen. Scott, to cut off his supplies and preventing him from being reinforced; and with the remainder of the forces, attack his front. This plan is the favorite of the Mexican people, but Santa Anna is opposed to it, and intends giving the Americans another general battle. —(A Cerro Gordo affair.)

---

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p1c1 This War and Its Generals
Once more to history and I am done: “When Presidents, Kings or Emperors confide armies to soldiers of common states. Now, may doctors suddenly turn judges; carpenters, saddlers; and cabinet-makers, statesmen and White House presided over the levees of the East room, or the merest pettifogger be Chief of Justice of the United Col. Haskell and others, would command the whole army in Mexico!! Far, far better had the door-keeper of the
Gen. Scott now from his command, Gen. Pillow, late of the Tennessee militia, now under the serious imputations of elevated from merited mediocrity over the heads of scientific, experienced and able Generals. Should any thing take
Mr. Jefferson, but reversed it –by which the soldiers are lead by untried and inexperienced civilians, suddenly them, rejoiced in being lead by tried and experienced men.” President Polk has not only disregarded the system of “Continental officers were substituted IN THE HIGHER COMMANDS, for those of the militia; which although not Administration have set at nought one of his bets examples When Governor of Virginia, he adopted a system by "Little minds,” says the author, “always, in difficulty, resort to cunning, miscalling it wisdom: this quality seems to have been predominant in the Cabinet of Great Britain, and was alike conspicuous in its efforts to coerce and its proffers to conciliate.”
What quality predominated in our Cabinet, when the miserable cunning was resorted to letting Santa Anna into Mexico, in hopes that he would prove traitor to his country? Or what, in the proffers of conciliation to the Mexicans, in the various proclamations issued, and the proposal to seize all their church property? Or what, in the various arrangements for "conquering a peace" by force of arms? The field of discussion is wide and inviting, but I shall only briefly survey it.
But again, if Col. Lee had been announcing the appointments and promotions in our army, or describing the various efforts to put Thomas H. Benton over it and its veterans officers, or giving an account of the battle of Cerro Gordo, how could he have closed more appropriately than in the following language?
"Thus it is,” says he, “that the lives of brave men a re exposed, and the public interest sacrificed. Yet, notwithstanding such severe admonitions, rarely does the Government honor with its confidence the man whose merit is his sole tittle to preference: the weight of powerful connections, or the art of intriguing courtiers too often bear down unsupported though transcendant worth.”
And how often has this war changed its face? First, volunteers for six months –then, for twelve, and many ardent ones offended by a violation of the terms of their enlistment; now they are called for the whole war. This should have been done sooner. Here comes in the wise voice of the :Father of his Country;” and how forcibly has the immortal hero of Buena Vista, –as his troops have daily melted away from him, leaving him on the borders of Mexico’s sultry deserts with a handful of men –felt the truth of Washington’s sentiments and the strength of his apposite and original figure. Washington to George Mason of Va., October 22, 1781, says: "We must have a permanent force; not a force that is continually fluctuating, and sliding from us, as a pedestal of ice would leave a statue in a summer’s day; involving us in expense that baffles all calculation.” Such expense will be the sad result of this mismanaged war.
President Jefferson is the Political stock from which the modern Democratic Party claims to have descended. Yet, this Administration have set at nought one of his bets examples When Governor of Virginia, he adopted a system by which "Continental officers were substituted IN THE HIGHER COMMANDS, for those of the militia; which although not very well relished by those who retired, was highly grateful to the soldiers; who perceiving the ( unintelligible) before them, rejoiced in being lead by tried and experienced men.” President Polk has not only disregarded the system of
Mr. Jefferson, but reversed it –by which the soldiers are lead by untried and inexperienced civilians, suddenly elevated from merited mediocrity over the heads of scientific, experienced and able Generals. Should any thing take
Gen. Scott now from his command. Gen. Pillow, late of the Tennessee militia, now under the serious imputations of Col. Haskell and others, would command the whole army in Mexico!! Far, far better had the door-keeper of the White House presided over the levees of the East room, or the merest petitfogger be Chief of Justice of the United States. Now, may doctors suddenly turn judges; carpenters, saddlers; and cabinet-makers, statesmen and philosophers!

Once more to history and I am done: –“When Presidents, Kings or Emperors confide armies to soldiers of common minds, they ought not to be surprised at the disasters which follow." This observation, too, is called forth by a review of the carrier of such men as Gage, Howe and Clinton, –British Generals bred and inured to arms. It is true that few disasters have befallen our arms; but their splendid success have been achieved by those whom the Administration endeavored to supplant and dishonor.

May its unworthy favorites never have an opportunity of verifying the evils of a system which has called them to such responsible stations –a system so unjust, impolite and imbecile, that it requires no disasters to cover it with opprobrium.

SUUM CUIQUE.

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c3 Arrival of McKim

[From the N.O Picayune, Extra, July 12 –A.M.J.]

Arrival of the Steamship McKim.

Later from Vera Cruz.

The steamship McKim arrived at this port on Sunday afternoon in charge of her first officer Capt. Pilsbury having died on that passage of yellow fever.

The McKim left Vera Cruz on the 3d inst. There had been nothing later received from the city of Mexico than was brought down the night of the 1st inst. but fuller accounts had transpired at Vera Cruz than were received by the Alabama.

We have no further information of the March of Gen. Pillow. Had any disaster occurred to him, the news of it could scarcely have failed to reach Vera Cruz promptly. –Our letters makes no mention whatever of him or his command.

By this arrival we have files of papers from the city of Mexico to the 29th ult. inclusive. In the Diario del Gobierno of the 26th June appeared an important diplomatic correspondence. The first note is from the Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Secretaries of Congress, referring to that body a communication from Mr. Buchanan, which announces Mr. Trist's appointment. We learn that this letter was communicated to Santa Anna by or through the British Minister at Mexico Mr. Banhead, who has exerted himself to bring about negotiation for peace between the two nations.

Mr. Buchanan's letter is dated April 15th. It acknowledges the receipt of the Mexican Minister's letter of the 22d February, declining to accede to our proposition to send commissioners to Jalapa, Havana or other point before the blockade of the Mexican ports should be raised and the Mexican territory evacuated by our troops.

Mr. Buchanan writes that the President holds such a condition absolutely inadmissible –neither demanded by national honor nor sanctioned by the practice of the nations. –He urges that such a preliminary condition would render war interminable, especially between contiguous nations, unless by the complete submission of one of the belligerents.

He shows how puerile a course it would be for a nation which had scarified men and money to gain a foothold in an enemy country, to abandon all the advantages it had won and withdraw its forces in order to induce negotiations, without any certainty or security that peace would ensue from such negotiations.

He then cites the case of our last war with Great Britain, to show that we never considered for a moment that our nation required us to insist upon the withdrawal of British troops before consenting to treat for peace. We sent commissioners to Ghent when portions of our territory were in the possession of British troops; and it was notorious that while negotiations were going on at Ghent, hostilities were carried on upon both sides with unwonted vigor; the most memorable action of the war taking pace after negotiations had been concluded. Such a preliminary condition to negotiation cannot be cited in modern times; at least Mr. Buchanan knows of none.

He then exposes the unusual conduct of Mexico under another aspect. The President, in his desire to avoid the war, had sent a minister to negotiate peace. Even after the war was commenced, by the attack of the Mexican troops upon Gen. Taylor, the President had retired propositions with a view of opening negotiations which should put an end to hostilities. He had declared to the world that he would exact no conditions that were not honorable to both parties; and yet the Mexican Government had refused to receive the minister sent to her, and after refusing to accede to the opening of negotiations, Mexico had never made known upon what basis she would consent to a settlement of the differences between the two Republics. –There will never be a termination of hostilities, Mr. Buchanan proceeds, if Mexico continues to [refuse to] listen to the overtures which have been proffered, and which tend to the establishment of peace.
The President will not, therefore, make further overtures for the opening of negotiations until he has reason to believe that such will be accepted by the Mexican Government; but nevertheless such is his desire for peace, that the evils of the war shall not be prolonged one day later than the Mexican Government makes it absolutely necessary. Accordingly, to carry his determination into effect, he had sent in the quality of Commissioner, to the head quarters of the army of Mexico, Mr. N.P. Trist, First Clerk in the State Department, with full power to conclude a definite treaty of peace with the United Mexican States. Mr. Trist is recommended as possessing the full confidence of the President, and worthy of that of the Mexican Government.

In conclusion, Mr. Buchanan forbears from commenting upon the closing passages of the last letter from the Mexican Minister, lest it should give to his present note a less conciliatory character than he desires for it. He recurs with pleasure to another passage in the same letter wherein is expressed the pain with which the Mexican Government has seen altered the cordial friendship which it had cultivated with this Republic, the continued advancement of which it had always admired, and whose institutions had served as a model of its own. Such sentiments, continues Mr. Buchanan, the President deeply feels; his strongest desires as prevails with us, may protect and secure the liberty of their citizens, and maintain an elevated position among the nations of the earth.

Such is an outline of Mr. Buchanan's letter of April 15th. We have not translated it, as the original will no doubt at once be made public. There is no indication in it of the basis upon which Mr. Trist is authorized to conclude a treaty.

This letter the Mexican Minister acknowledges on the 22d of April, saying that the President had instructed him to reply that the whole subject matter of it had been expressly reserved by the Sovereign Congress of the nation for its own control, and that the letter would be at once transmitted to it for its action.

We learn by the Mexican papers that Congress was at once convened to take the matter into consideration, but up to the 29th of June no quorum had been procured.

By a letter from a source entitled to great respect, we further learn that Gen. Scott gave the Mexican Government till the 30th ult. to act upon the letter, when, if nothing should be done he would march in.

The best opinion in Mexico, in our judgment, we have had an opportunity to learn by this arrival. That opinion gives but poor encouragement for peace, but does not entirely despair. Other gentlemen, with very ample opportunities for judging, write from the city of Mexico, that there is no hope of a settlement of the difficulties; that the Mexicans have not yet been sufficiently whipped; and that Gen. Scott will have to reach the city of Mexico. None of the letters we have seen mention any thing about the number or position of Mexicans troops.

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c3 General Order

From the Sun of Ananuac of the 2d inst., we copy the following order issued by Col. Perry upon returning to the mouth of the river from his Tabasco expedition:

General Order –No.3.

The commander in chief, in returning to his ship from the expedition undertaken to capture and occupy the city of Tabasco, seizes upon the earliest moment to offer his warmest thanks to the officers, seamen and marines composing the force engaged in the attack for the gratifying proofs of zeal and courage manifested by them on the occasion.

Notwithstanding the extensive and judicious arrangements made by the Mexicans for defence, they exhibited little gallantry in maintaining their well chose position.

M.C. Perry, Commanding Home Squadron.

The commodore arrived at Anton Lizardo on the 30th June, with the squadron.

We have no time to make use of our Mexican files, the mail closing at so early an hour.

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c3 Arrival of steamship

Arrival of the Steamship James L. Day
Later from the Brazos.

The steamer James L. Day, Capt. Wood, arrived this morning from Brazos Santiago. By her we have received the Matamoros Flag of the 7th inst. The news is without importance.

The steamboat Enterprize has been sunk in the Rio Grande, fifteen miles above Reynosa. Boat a total loss.

Capt. Dunlap's company of mounted men from Illinois had arrived at Matamoros, the men in fine health and the horses in tolerable condition.

McCulloch's company has returned from Camargo to Matamoros. We copy the following from the Flag:

From the Interior of the State. –Mr. Holliday, a gentleman well known in this city, returned on Tuesday evening last from a journey into the interior sixty miles beyond San Fernando. The object of his journey was to purchase mules for Government, which was frustrated on account of an irregular competition in the same business by the band of Carabajal, who were spread over the country taking forcible possession of all the mules and horses fit for service. The alcades of several different villages beyond San Fernando advised Mr. Holliday not to prosecute his journey further, assuring him that would be impossible to obtain mules, and he was running a great risk of being killed or made prisoner. He was informed that a part of Urrea's forces was in Victoria, and that the mules and horses which were being collected by the Mexican were intended for a force which was raising and was to rendezvous at Victoria for the purpose of making a descent upon Tampico. This he learned from many different sources, and he believes that an attack on that post is intended, the weakness of the garrison there strongly favoring such a design.

---

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c3 News from Tampico

[From The N.O. Times]

Tampico.

The brig Harriet, Capt. Brovn, arrived here on Saturday, from Tampico, the 29th ult., but brought no news.

The rainy season had set in at Tampico, but the health of the troops was satisfactory. Not a single case of yellow fever had occurred since the commencement of the occupation.

Papers from the capital had reached Tampico to the 19th ult, but they contain little of importance, except the reiteration of the forced contribution of a million of dollars, and stirring appeals on the part of the journalist, to the patriotism of the people, in view of the anticipated advance of Gen. Scott from Puebla.

Mrs. De Russy, the wife of Col. De Russy, and his two sons, had arrived there; also Mrs. Daily, the wife of Lt. Daily, of the Louisiana volunteers. There was to be a grande fete on the 4th inst, Capt. C.S. Hunt, being appointed orator of the day.

Col. Gates, on the 25th ult, issued an order prohibiting the importation of spirituous liquors.

---

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c4 New from Vera Cruz

Vera Cruz

By the arrival of the steamship M'Kim, Capt. Pillsbury, from Vera Cruz, the 3d instant; via Brazos; the 6th inst., we have accounts from both places up to respective dates of departure. No news had yet arrived from the interior since the receipt of the last advices; consequently nothing has transpired, in relation to the expected on ward movement of Gen. Scott's army.

We regret to announce the death of Capt. Pillsbury, of the M'kim, who caught the yellow fever at Vera Cruz, and died on the 7th instant, at sea. Capt. P was a son of the Hon. Timothy Pillsbury, a member of Congress form the State of Texas.

Left at Vera Cruz aon the 3d, the brig. Velasco, Capt. Bell, up for this port, about the 8th inst.
July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p4c2 California

Our Territory of California.

We have late accounts from our new territory of California, both from the North and the South. What has become of Com. Stockton we are not apprized, all the letters and papers being wholly silent in regard to that distinguished gentleman. Between Com. Schubrick, his successor, and Gen. Kearny there seems to be perfect harmony, the latter officer being nor the Governor of the territory, as will more fully appear by the following proclamation:

To the People of California.

The president of the United States having developed upon the undersigned the civil government of California, he enters upon the discharge of his duties with an ardent desire to promote as far as the interest of the country and well being of its inhabitants.

The undersigned is instructed by the President to respect and protect the religious institutions of California, to take care that the religious rights of its inhabitants are secured in the most ample manner, since the Constitution of the United States allows every individual the privilege of worshipping his Creator in whatever manner his conscience may dictate.

The undersigned is also instructed to protect the persons and property of the quiet and peaceable inhabitants of the country, against each and every enemy, whether foreign or domestic; and now, assuring the Californians that his inclinations no less that his duty demand the fulfillment of these instructions, he invites them to use their best efforts to preserve order and tranquility, to promote harmony and concord, and to maintain the authority and the efficacy of the laws.

It is the desire and intention of the United States to procure to California as speedily as possible a free Government like that of their own territories, and they will very soon invite their inhabitants to exercise the rights of free citizens in the choice of their own representatives, who may enact such laws as they deem best adapted to their interests and well being. But until this takes place, the laws actually in existence, which are not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, will continue in force until they are revoked by competent authority; and persons in the exercise of public employments will for the present remain in them, provided they swear to maintain the said Constitution and faithfully to discharge their duties.

The undersigned by these present absolves all the inhabitants of California of any further allegiance to the Republic of Mexico, and regards them as citizens of the United States. Those who remain quite and peaceable will be respected and protected in their rights; but should any one take up arms against the Government of this territory, or join such as do so, or instigate others to do so –all these he will regard as enemies, and they will be treated as such.

When Mexico involved the United states in war the latter had no time to invite the Californians to join their standard as friends, but found themselves compelled to take possession of the county to prevent its falling into the hands of some European power. In doing this there is no doubt that some excesses, some authorized acts were committed by persons in the service of the United States, and that in consequence some of the inhabitants have sustained losses in property. These losses shall be duly investigated, and those who are entitled to indemnification shall receive it.

For many years California has suffered great domestic convulsions; from civil wars, like poisoned fountains, have flowed calamity and pestilence over this beautiful region. These fountains are now dried up; the stars, and stripes now float over California, and as long as the sun shall shed its light they will continue to wave over her, and over the natives of the country, and over those who shall seek a domicil in her bosom, and under the protection of this flag agriculture must advance, and the arts and sciences will flourish like seed in a rich and fertile soil.

Americans and Californians! From henceforth one people. Let us them indulge one desire, one hope, let that be for the peace and tranquility of our country. Let us unite like brothers and mutually strive for the improvement and advancement of this our beautiful country, which with a short period cannot fail to be not only beautiful, but also prosperous and happy.

Given at Monterrey, capital of California, this 1st day of March, of the year of our Lord 1847, and of the Independence of the United States the 71st.

There can be no doubt, from the language of this document, that Mr. Polk considers California already annexed, even without a joint resolution, which was deemed to be a decent regard for the forms of the Constitution when Texas was made a member of the Confederacy. "I am the State," says the modern Louis; and really when one reads the accounts from our new regions –how Governors are made and Legislatures organized– and whole communities of foreigners absolved from allegiance to their own Government, and manufactured into citizens of the United States – he may, without any tax upon his imagination, well conceive that an absolute Sovereign is on the throne, that Congress exists by his mere sufferance, and the People are entitled to no voice in the decision of questions affecting the national weal! "If such things are done in the green tree, what may we not expect in the dry?"
In Pursuance of the plans of Mr. Polk, we perceive that elections are going on in California for members of the Territorial Legislature, which was about to assemble at Monterrey. We are "going ahead" rapidly to the consummation of our "manifest destiny." But what it is to be, requires a prophetic vision to foretell.

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c3 From San Francisco

We copy the following letter from the N.Y. Journal of Commerce:

Harbor of San Francisco,

On board U. U. transport ship T. H. Perkins,

March 7, 1847.

We arrived at this port yesterday, in 160 days from New York. Before we had dropped anchor, a boat from the U.S. ship Cyane came with despatches from Gen. Kearny from Col. Stevenson, ordering him, with his whole regiment down to Monterrey, about 80 or 90 miles from this by sea.

The captain having asked a most exorbitant price to carry us, an express was immediately sent to general, and we shall be obliged to wait here until a despatch comes, ordering the captain to proceed at once. The captain is an obstinate man, and is "out" with every one of our officers on board. We expect trouble from him, and an officer from the slopp–of–war will no doubt be sent down in command.

Gen. Kearny has been here three months, and has settled everything that we expected to do. Col. S. is a mere cypher, therefore; a governor having been sent out, who is here now.

We are all sorry for not having remained in New York and gone with the regiments direct for Mexico; for after the glorious news from our army in that quarter, we have no doubt that some of the regiments were ordered thither.

This vessel is the only one yet arrived, but we expect the others here every minute.

This is a magnificent harbor, about 60 to 70 miles to the farther end.

The town of Yerba Buena is small, only about 500 inhabitants. Our flag flies on shore, and there are six American vessels in port. In fact there are no others.

Col. Fremont has had a difficulty with the officers and men under his command. Seven captains and lieutenants resigned in one day! We could fill a column or two, if we had space to spare, with curious extracts from the California papers, but we are compelled to limit our selection to-day to the subjoined paragraphs from the Buena Yerba Star:

Jan. 23.–We noticed on the morning of the 19th instant, in the streets, ice nearly a quarter of an inch thick, the first that we have seen this season. It is said by those who have lived in the country several years that this is an unusually cold season. Our friends on the Atlantic coast in lat. 38º N, who are in snow to their knees for three months in the year will probably find difficult to account for this great difference in the temperature of the climate of the two oceans.

The Russian brig. Constantine, from Sitka, arrived on the morning of the 16th inst. She was 17 days out; ten days at the mouth of the bay, being prevented by unfavorable winds from getting in. She brought nothing but stone as ballast.

General Kearny has arrived there from Monterrey, where he spent a few days examining that point, with a view to the erection of permanent fortifications. He came up here in the U.S. sloop of war Cyane.

We received no important news from below, since the publication of our last number. At the last accounts Col. Cook, with five hundred United States dragoons, was encamped between San Diego and the town of the Angels. Col. Fremont had not left for Monterey.

The Star of the 27th says: –We learn from a gentleman who just arrived from the South, that all was quiet in that part of the country. There had been no indications of a disposition on the part of the Californians to renew hostilities since the treaty made with them by Col. J. C. Fremont. Col. Fremont was still acting as civil Governor.

February 27 –Gen. Kearny sailed from this port in the U.S. frigate Savannah, Capt. Mervine, on Tuesday last, for Monterrey, where it is understood, in conjunction with Com. Shubrick, he will immediately commence the important work of organizing a civil government for California.—Shubrick and General Kearny are, we understand, full in this point, and invest them with plenary powers to carry into effect the intentions of the Government.

The precise form of Government that will be established in California, and the mode by which it will be put in operation, until Congress shall have the necessary time and information to take charge of the subject, we do not suppose has yet been determined upon. This, we presume, has been left altogether to the discretion of the gentleman above named, who doubtless will be governed by what they shall deem most practicable, and most conducive to the general prosperity in the present crisis, after full and through observation and mature reflection.

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c3 General Scott

General Scott

The New Orleans Bulletin gives the following estimate of the Gen. Scott’s strength, when all the troops now on their march to join him, shall have reached this camp:

At Puebla, about 7,000 men; Col. Childs, from Jalapa, 1,400; Gen. Cadwallader’s column 1,400; Gen. Pillow 1,800; Gen. Pierce’s 2,500; making together 14,100.

Will the Union tell us what has become of the remainder of the 20,000 troops, which, it proved, by statistics from the War Department, would be under Gen. Scott’s command on the 1st. of July?

July 20, 1847, RW47v24n58p2c4 Johan Botts

Letter of Johan Botts

To the Whig Committee of Philadelphia. Richmond, June 26, 1847.

Gentlemen: – I have received your letter inviting me to a Whig festival to be held in the city of Philadelphia, in celebration of the anniversary of American Independence.

I regret that a prior engagement on that day will deprive me of the gratification I should derive from an association with my Whig friends and brethren of Philadelphia so interesting an occasion.

In your letter you say –“It is the duty of every true hearted Whig to unite with his brethren, on every proper opportunity, in a laudable effort, to harmonize, and impart union and strength to the general movement, and thus to secure an ultimate triumph, calculated to promote the national prosperity, and give harmony to our free institutions.”

It certainly is proper, and desirable, that on all suitable occasions, the member of a political party, having common interests at stake, common objects in view, and a common country to serve and save, should meet and confer together as to the most judicious mode of accomplish their common purposes –and as I could not be present to enjoy your society, and participate in your festivities, and interchange views, I have thought it might not be out of place or altogether unacceptable, if I were to commit to paper some views that may not have struck the minds of all our friends, in the same light, or with the same force that they have struck mine.

If the anniversary of the American Independence is a day for thanksgiving and rejoicing, it is also a day for sober and solemn reflection and the first subject that naturally presents itself to the mind, is our present condition as contrasted with that on the day, the anniversary of which you are just about to celebrate.

Happy would it be, if, in drawing this contrast, we could confine ourselves to wonderful advancement in population; extent of territorial space, (legitimately acquired,) power, greatness, improvement in science and art –in short in all that tends to make a people at once great, prosperous, and free: in all this, we have much to excite our admiration and our pride; but in other respects, how painful to the patriot’s mind, and how the good man’s heart grows sick, as he contemplates the change; when he reflects upon the mass of rottenness and corruption that has slyly crept into every branch and ramifications of our government “until increase of appetite has grown by what it fed on,” and now “the spoils of office” are used only as the sure reward of fealty to power in all its profligacy: when we look upon the degeneracy of our Politicians, who barter principles for spoils, and exchange their country’s interests and blessings for honors and wages, how the apprehension is excited, for the ultimate fate of the Republic, which can only be preserved, in the spirit it was conceived, by harmony and concession, high and dignified morality, pure and lofty virtue, sublime and unadulterated patriotism.

On the fourth of July, 1776, our fathers like us of the fourth day of July 1847, were surrounded with difficulties and troubles –and were involved in all the horrors of war: but theirs was a war demanded, and openly declared, by the voice of the people, a war for the establishment of the Independence, for the protection and preservation of great national inalienable rights, a war for a nation's deliverance, and a people's freedom; but how is it with the war in which we are engaged?

We have made a war made without the knowledge or sanction of the people, the responsibility for which no one will assume, and every one is anxious to shift from his own shoulders to those of his neighbor; a war, the conception of which is veiled in mystery and darkness; its progress only tolerated and reconciled by the unexampled success that has attended our arms; the object of which is left to fancy and speculation, and the end of which no man can foresee; a war instigated and provoked, from a meretricious lust of conquest, and acquisition of our neighbor's goods, by men spoiled and besotted with place and power, that nature never designed them to fill or wield. And when we, the conservative party of the country, and its constitution, propose to enquire the cause of the war, we are stigmatized as "federal Mexican Whigs" as "allies of Mexico," and "moral traitors to our country, giving aid and comfort to the enemy," and none are patriots and statesmen worthy to trust, but those who bow to the immaculate purity and infallible wisdom of Mr. Polk, the dispenser of power, and patronage, and spoils.

For one, whether a traitor or no traitor, whether in favor at court or out of it, as a friend of my country who never was yet muzzled, nor feared the frowns nor courted the smiles of men in power –I venture to lay down two political axiom as incontrovertible, and such as will be adopted by the whole nation, if they desire or deserve to be free. The first is, that this country ought not to be engaged in any war that can't stand the test of scrutiny and investigation – and the second is, that it can't be engaged in any war that ought not to be fully and searchingly enquired into, and fully understood by those who have to fight the battles and pay the cost, and whose national honor is at stake "in doing unto others, as you would do others should do unto you," –and I might add a third, that no man and no party, that were honest, upright, and innocent, conscious of the rectitude of their own conduct, and the integrity of their purpose, would labor under the awful and dainning responsibility of having needlessly and wantonly brought such a calamity upon the country, but would court and demand such an inquiry and investigation, as would wipe the bloody and damned stain from their guiltless hands. But how is it with Mr. Polk who stands charged with this terrible crime? –does he come forward like an innocent man and invite his country men into an examination of his conduct? –does he court enquiry? Does he demand a hearing? –does he claim a fair trial and a just verdict? No! but like the guilty man who was arraigned at the bar, and who was assured by the Judge that he should have a fair trial and full justice, at once replied –"May it please your Honor, that is the last favor I have ask of the court."

Starting events have transpired with such fearful rapidity within the last twelve months –one daring encroachment has followed so quick upon the heels of another, that our people seem upon each occasion to forget the first in wild and almost bewildered contemplation of the last.

Gen. Taylor and the American army have been ordered by the President to the banks of the Rio Grande, (which brought on the war;) but whether he transcended his authority, and whether this was Mexican territory, then, and at all times in their possession, invaded by the U. States, or whether it was American territory invaded by Mexico, must not be enquired into, for the Mexican will hear us, and we will prolong the war by "giving aid and comfort to the enemy" in whose halls HE promised to reveal in three months from its commencement. True, he withheld the information form Congress and the people, that he had done an act that he knew must lead to conflict until two bloody battles had been fought, and it was necessary to call for men and money to prosecute a war that he had provoked and brought upon the people –true, he was determined that his friend, Mr. Slidell, should be received by the obstinate and presumptuous Republic of Mexico, in the character in which it had pleased him to send him, (of full Minister,) although he had been notified, that, with due regard to the national honor, he could only be received in the more humble character of commissioner:–True, he sent Santa Anna back to the Mexicans, to head their armies and encourage their men, to give battle to our brave people, whose bones are mouldering in the charnel houses, and whose blood has made rich the barren plain of Mexico: True, he has dismembered the Mexican Empire, instructed his subordinates in command to declare by proclamation the provinces of California and New Mexico a part of this great Republic, to administer the oath of allegiance to their people and make them citizens of the United States: True, he has established civil governments, appointed Governors, Judges, Attorneys, and Legislative Councils; an if an insolent Mexican dares to raise his hand or voice in favor of his native land, or his own countrymen, the summary process has been adopted of trying him by a drum head court martial, and hanging him by the neck as a traitor and rebel: True, he has enacted laws for Mexico, and is now collecting customs, under tariff regulations, suggested by the wisdom of his profound financier, and free trade Secretary, Sir Robert Walker, as being better qualified for the discharge of that "high duty" (the only high duty he favors being those he exercise himself) than a Federal Mexican Whig Congress. We have seen a proclamation recently issued by the Commander–in–chief in Mexico, as explained by his organ, the Union, makes it manifest that it was under instructions from the seat of the Government, in which it is set forth that the war was the consequence of a design on the part of European Governments to destroy the Republic of Mexico and establish a monarchy on its ruins –which not only contradicts all his former declarations relative to the origin of the war, but convicts him of having committed a most egregious and unpardonable blunder, (if he was determined to have a finger in the pie, on his own authority and responsibility,) of taking the wrong side of the question by fighting against Republican Institutions instead of for them.

What has been his course in regard to the conduct of the war? In the first place we have seen him withhold the command of our gallant army, from the accomplished General–in–chief, who was entitled to claim it, and who did claim it, and he conferred it upon another, then almost unknown to the country –and no sooner did he find that gallant and invincible old soldier performing deeds of valor and achieving victories with vastly inferior numbers and under disadvantages, that exited the wonder and admiration of the world, than he attempted supersede and disgrace him by the appointment of a Lieutenant General from political life, in the ranks of his own party without experience and without skill –thus jeopardizing the honor of the nation and the safe of the army. Finding now, there was more perhaps to apprehend from the rapidly increasing popularity of Taylor than there was at first from Scott, and that he had jumped out of the frying pan into the fire, he endeavored to get back from the fire into the pan, by sending Scott to the field, and stripping Taylor of his command, and leaving him in the heart of the enemy's country.
with only 4000 men, to meet and conquer 20,000 under a general of his own selection. On the other hand, what have we seen of Scott? He reaches Vera Cruz, bombards the city, takes it, with the almost impregnable Castle of San Juan—marches on toward the Capital, exhibiting the highest military skill, performing prodigies of valor, overcoming all difficulties, surmounting all obstacles, achieving a victory at Cerro Gordo that vies in brilliancy with that at Buena Vista; and now not knowing which is the hottest place for him—the fire or the pan—in order to get rid of both he send off some thing of a Lieutenant General in the person of a clerk of the Department of State to watch over, if not control, the movements of Scott and his gallant band. Has his course not justified the suspicion that the brilliancy of our arms in Mexico has mortified and chagrined him, from an apprehension that the benefits of the war were not likely to enure to him and his political friends? We have seen him too tampering, and sporting with the honor and character of the Nation, by proclaiming that there was more virtue in Mexican dollars than in American powder and lead, and it was more desirable and manly to buy, than “conquer a peace,” and he gave assurance that with an appropriation of $3,000,000 to be placed at his disposal for secret purposes, peace should be restored; which could only be effected by a system of bribery for which every American check should blush; (for with the “indemnity” he claimed, there could be no need for purchase of territory;) and yet for all this high pretensions are set up for his disinterested patriotism, and for the pre-eminent ability with which he has conducted the war; and as if acknowledgements of his greatness did not pour in with abundance (unintelligible).

All this is true, but if we complain, or propose an enquiry into his conduct, if we do not speak "with of (unintelligible), if we discredit his infallibility, we are admonished that we shall be held us traitors to our country for "giving aid and comfort to the enemy," and we shall be denounced, and stigmatized by Executive sanction and endorsement, as "Mexican Allies" and "Federal Mexican Whigs."

Is not the recital of, and reflection upon, these high fantastic tricks enough, I ask, to pain to the patriot’s mind, and make the good’s man heart grow sick? And yet we are told, that the only remedy is to be found in the ballot box; and that impeachment is a dead letter of the law. Possibly it may be so, but if it be, and the Whig party shall adopt that creed, farewell I say to free institutions; farewell to limited powers; farewell to written constitution; for our president is a sovereign, with powers absolute and unlimited. What more is left for him to do, that he may not do, with impunity?

Let me ask—How can this war be brought to a close by this administration, or the party which sustains and justifies its position? The position taken by Mr. Polk and his party is, that he cannot bring the war to a close with honor, that he cannot negotiate for peace, without claiming and obtaining indemnity for the expenses of the war; that is to say, we may not look for peace unless be gets Mexican territory (and a pretty large slice too, I should think, if he should make a fair trade, and get land enough to compensate for all expenses incurred.)

If a man claims property in possession, and undertakes by force to put me off, and instead of that I putt him off, and follow him, and trash him to his heart’s content, and my own satisfaction—do I sacrifice my personal honor by returning him the world over, and beat him until there is no more of him left than there was of the Kilkenny cats? Yet such seems to be the view of our ruling men, who are fearful their patriotism or courage may be suspected unless they swallow the whole Mexican family at a gulp: it is a false notion of honor, and ought not to be endured.

We have at last direct accounts from the American prisoners in Mexico, which enable us to clear up the contradictory rumors we have had in relation to them. Letters were received here yesterday from Maj. Gaines by his brother A. L. Gaines, dated in the city of Mexico, the 26th of June, with the use of which we have been favored. It appears from them that the rank and file of the prisoners have been released and sent to Tampico. These were doubtless the individuals at Huejutla, as mentioned in our last. The officers had not been released on the 26th of June. We give the greater part of Maj. Gaines’s letters, which, it will be seen, throw great light on Gen. Scott’s movements as well as upon the fate of the American prisoners.

City of Mexico, June 26, 1847.
Dear Sir —I am very sorry that I have it not in my power to advise you of our release from bondage. This execrable Government in violation of repeated promises and a solemn engagement entered into with Gen. Taylor the day after the battle of Buena Vista, still retains us as prisoners of war.

On the 3d inst. I received a note from the Government to present myself at the Castle of Santiago, our late prison, and there receive the final determination of the authorities in our case. At the Castle we were informed that we were exchanged, and that we should depart the next day for Tampico —the officers only, without the men— and were directed to go the place, receive our instructions, expense money, &c, &c, preparatory to our departure. At the palace we were told to call the next day, and on the next day we were informed that they were without means to send us and that we could not go. This disappointment was the more galling because the reason assigned was known to be a mere subterfuge, and it turned out that four days afterwards our men, one hundred and seventy in number, were sent off to the same place without our knowledge, which required a much larger sum than it would have required to send the officers. By sending off the men without our knowledge, they were subjected to great suffering and inconvenience on a long road to Tampico, without the preparation necessary in the way of clothing, shoes, &c, which more then in fact being furnished them. The true reason why officers were not allowed to accompany them remains to be seen.

Since that time (the 4th) I have heard nothing from this infernal Government, if Government it may be called, but today I have received an assurance from Gen. Scott that immediately upon his arrival in the vicinity of the city, which will surely be within twelve days, be will make a peremptory demand for us. IT WILL BE COMPLIED WITH, AS I THINK. You may therefore look for me early in August.

Gen. Scott we are assured has made every possible effort to procure our enlargement, but to no purpose. His approach to this city will certainly take place in a very few days. His measures preparatory to moving are all taken, and preparations nearly complete. He comes with a force sufficient to accomplish his object eventually.

I have received no letters from the States except one from A. K. since my captivity, so that the world as to me may be said to be hermetically sealed up. [Here follows passages of a nature altogether private and domestic, and the letter concludes as follows.]

I have now the most positive information of Gen. Scott’s readiness to move on this capital within the next three or four days. He will have an easy conquest.

Your affectionate brother. JNO. P. Gaines.

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p1c4 State Department and Mexican Government

[From the Washington Union]

Correspondence between the Secretary of the State and the Mexican government, relative to the mission of Mr. Trist.

An extra of the Republicano of Mexico, of the 28th of June, has been received at the Department of State, containing copies of two notes from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico, dated the 2d of June last. We presented here translations of the two notes first mentioned, together with a copy the original of Mr. Buchanan’s letter; all of which (unintelligible) be read with interest in every part of the country.

Department of Internal and Foreign Relations.

God and Liberty —Mexico, June, 22, 1847.

Most excellents Sirs: by order of his excellency, the President ad interim of the republic, as resolved in a council of ministers, I have the (unintelligible) to place in the hand of your excellencies, that you may submit it to the sovereign Congress, at its first meeting, a copy of the official note, addressed by the Secretary of the State of the United States to this government, under date of the 15th of April last, in which he declares that the President of that republic intends to dispatch, as a commissioner, to the headquarters of the army operating in Mexico, Nicholas P. Trist, with full powers to conclude a definitive treaty of peace with the Mexican United States.

I likewise transmit to your Excellencies, for communication to the sovereign Congress, a copy of the answer which the most excellent President resolved, in a council of ministers, to have made to the above—mentioned note; his excellency feeling assured that the august assembly, to which is reserved the determination on the affair to which the present communication relates, will despatch it with the promptness and wisdom to be expected from its patriotism and its distinguished enlightenment.

Domingo Ibarra.
To his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Relations of the Mexican Republic.

Department of State, Washington, April 15, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency’s note, of the 22d February last, in answer to mine of the 18th January, proposing, on the part of the President of the United States, immediately to “dispatch either to Havana or Jalapa, as the Mexican government may prefer, one or more of our most distinguished citizens, as commissioners, clothed with full powers to conclude a treaty of peace with similar commissioners on the part of Mexicans, as soon as he shall be officially informed that the Mexican government will appoint such commissioners.”

The President deeply regrets the refusal of the Mexican government to accede to this friendly overture, unless the raising of the blockade of our (the Mexican) ports, and the complete evacuation of the territory of the republic by the invading forces, shall be previously accepted as a preliminary condition.

The President has instructed me to inform you that this “preliminary condition” is wholly inadmissible. Such a condition is neither required by the honor, nor sanctioned by the practice of nations. If it were, this would tend to prolong wars, especially between conterminous countries, until the one or the other power was entirely subdued. No nation which, at the expenditure of blood and treasure, has invaded its enemy territory could ever consent to withdraw its forces, as a preliminary condition to the opening of negotiations for peace. This would be at once to abandon all the advantages it had obtained in the prosecution of the war, without any certainty that peace would result from the sacrifice. Nay, more: should such a negotiation prove unsuccessful, the nation which had thus imprudently withdrawn its forces from the enemy’s territory, might not be able to recover, without a cost of blood and treasure equal to that first expended, the advantageous position which it had voluntarily abandoned.

Fortunately for the cause of peace and humanity, the history of nations at war affords no sanction to such a preliminary condition. The United States are as jealous of their national honor as any power on the face of the earth; and yet it never entered into the contemplation of the great statesman who administered our government during the period of our last war with Great Britain, to insist that the later should relinquish that part of our territory of which she was in actual possession before they would consent to open negotiations for peace. On the contrary, they took the initiative, and appointed commissioners to treat for peace, whilst portions of our country were held by the enemy; and it is a remarkable fact, that the treaty of Ghent was concluded by the plenipotentiaries of the two power whilst the war was ranging on both sides; and the most memorable of the conflicts to which it gave rise took place upon our own soil after the negotiators had happily terminated their labors. History is full of such examples. Indeed, so far as the undersigned is aware, there is not to be found, at least in modern times, a single case, except the present, in which it has been considered a necessary preliminary that an invading army should be withdrawn before negotiations for peace could commence between the parties of the war.

It would, also, be difficult to find a precedent for the course pursued by the Mexican government in another particular. The president, anxious to avoid the war now existing, sent a minister of peace to Mexico for this purpose. After the Mexican forces had stacked the army of Gen. Taylor on this side of the Rio Grande, and thus commenced the war, the President, actuated by the same pacific spirit, made repeated overtures to the government of Mexico to negotiate for its termination; and although he has, from the beginning, solemnly declared before the world that he desired no terms but such as were just and honorable to both parties, yet the Mexican government, by refusing to receive our minister in the first place, and afterwards by not acceding to our overtures to open negotiations of peace, has never afforded to this government even the opportunity of making known the terms on which we would be willing to settle all questions in dispute between the two republics. The war can never end whilst Mexico refuses even to hear the proposals which we have always been ready to make for peace.

For the purpose of carrying this determination into effect with the least possible delay, he will forthwith send to the headquarters of the army, in Mexico, Nicholas P. Trist, esq. The officer next in rank to the undersigned in our Department of Foreign Affairs, as commissioner invested with full powers to conclude a definitive treaty of peace with the United Mexican States. This gentleman possesses the entire confidence of the President, and is eminently worthy of that of the Mexican government.

This feeling is most cordially reciprocated by the President, whose earnest desire it is that the United States, under institutions similar to our own, may protect and secure the liberty of their people, and maintain an elevated standing among the nations of the earth.

James Buchanan.

[NO]

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p2c1 Buchanan and Mexican minister

The Correspondence

The attention of our readers will be attracted by the correspondence between Mr. Buchanan and the Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations. No satisfactory inference can be drawn from the language of the Mexican Minister, in regard to the final determination of the Government; the Executive of Mexico, even in the midst of a war of invasion, the exigencies of which might well warrant its assumption of extraordinary if not Dictatorial powers, absolutely paying decereference to the will of Congress, than the President of the United States is in the habit of exhibiting towards the Representatives of the American people; for, in the first place, he made war without consulting them, and ha has since prosecuted it in a manner which evinces an utter contempt for the constitutional functions of the Legislative department, some of the most important of which he has daringly usurped. We hope, however, that this effort to renew negotiations may be successful, and that it may result in the speedy restoration of peace, on terms satisfactory and honorable to both nations—for only such a peace can be a permanent one.

The correspondence furnishes no means of ascertaining the terms which Mr. Trist has been instructed to propose to Mexico, and upon the nature of which, of course, will materially depend her willingness to terminate the war. It is obvious, however, that the prospects of a speedy termination of hostilities is not very flattering—for, judging from the temper heretofore displayed by the Administration, and from the tone of its Organ, it may very reasonably be apprehended that its demands will be characterized by any thing but moderation.

The Secretary of State dwells with peculiar self–complacency upon the pacific dispositions exhibited by our Government in its unsuccessful efforts to induce the Mexican authorities to renew diplomatic intercourse, with a view to the restoration of peace. If this would be true, there would be immeasurable degradation, instead of generous magnanimity, in the pertinacity with which we have urged her to terminate the war. If she were the guilty aggressor, she ought to be compelled herself to sue for peace, instead of being so often asked to make it. The statement of the Secretary is contradicted by all the facts in the case, as well as by repeated official averments, which must be false if this be true.

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p2c1 An Unwritten Constitution

The Duke of Wellington is said to have remarked, on one occasion, that “there can be no such thing as a little war”— and, judged by the effects of national collisions up on the morals and the liberties of any people, the remark may be deemed axiomatic. When a war with Mexico was only apprehended as a possible event, it was likewise spoken of as a mere bagatelle, which would end in a blaze of glory, by the triumph of our arms, after a single brief and brilliant campaign, to be consummated by the occupation of the magnificent capital of the Aztecs, almost without fire a gun.
But the stubborn resistance we have every where met with, and, the immense loss of life, and expenditure of money that have already attended our efforts to "conquer a peace" which ought never to have been interrupted, have dispelled an illusion as remarkable as it was universal. While no one doubts any more now than at first, that, however long the contest may be (unintelligible), it must eventuate in the complete overthrow of the enemy and his submission to such terms of peace as the conqueror may dictate, it is already apparent, that, terminate as speedily as it may, it will not have been “a little war,” whether we regard its immediate results or its remote consequences.

To some of the results and consequences of this war, we have therefore occasionally adverted; but, perhaps among them all there is not one of more sinister aspect and import than the frequency and the boldness with which the Federal Constitution has been violated, by acts of usurpation on the part of the Executive. Infractions of the written Constitution, to which we allude, are clearly pointed out, and the gradual growth of an unwritten Constitution, like that of Great Britain, made up of precedents, is shown to be progressively superseding it. No one doubts—and very few did—the expediency of the purchase of Louisiana from France; but, on the other hand, no one, we believe, at the time of its acquisition, doubted that it was an unconstitutional act. Florida was never afterwards brought into the Union by a similar exercise of an ungranted power; and these cases were subsequently referred to as justifying the annexation of Texas by a wholly different process, as the three will hereafter be relied on to authorize the acquisition by conquest of California and such other portions of Mexico as may be ceded to us by that Republic. A new power has thus unquestionably been engraven upon the Constitution, by the precedent established in the acquisition of Louisiana. Mr Polk has enlarged the powers of the Executive department of the Government, under dangerous and delusive plea of “necessity” and, if the acts of his Administration in this regard shall be acquiesced in by other departments of the Government and by the people, they too will be thereafter quoted as precedents for similar outrages, and our written Constitution will be entirely superseded in several of its vital features.

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p2c2 War or Peace

(no title)

The Washington correspondent of the New York Courier & Enquirer, who professes to have access to sources of authentic information not open to others, makes the following revelations, which, if they be true, are not without interest:

Washington, July 17, 1847.

We must now be on the eve of the most important intelligence from Mexico; and the problem will soon be solved whether we are to have war or peace. My own opinion, formed upon the latest intelligence from Puebla, is still that it will be peace. It is quite certain there is a large party, even in the present Congress of Mexico, in favor of peace.
Notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, the mediation of Great Britain for peace has not been rejected by the Congress of Mexico, neither has it, as yet been accepted.

The terms proposed by Mr. Trist have not yet been rejected by the Congress of Mexico at the latest dates from the Capital. If they are rejected, or their acceptance delayed, Gen Scott will advance and take the city. But, if, on the other hand, as is extremely probable, these terms should be accepted and the treaty ratified at once by the Congress of Mexico, Gen. Scott, in that event, will not advance beyond Puebla, but will await orders from the Government immediately after the battle of Cerro Gordo, we should have had peace long before this period.

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p2c3 Spy in Washington

The Spy in Washington.

[From the N.O Picayune, July 15.]

Arrival of the Steamship Galveston.

One day Later from Vera Cruz.

The steamship Galveston, Capt. Haviland, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz touching at Tampico and the Brazos. She left Vera Cruz at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the 8th inst., Tampico on the afternoon of the 10th, and Brazos, Santiago on the evening of the 11th. She arrived at the S. W. Pass on the night of the 13th, having made a very fine run.

The Galveston brought no later news direct from the army of Gen. Scott, for there had been no further arrival of couriers at Vera Cruz. We learn nothing more of the march of Gen. Pillow, and remain still in the dark as to his position. The Palmetto left Vera Cruz shortly after the Galveston and arrived at Tampico on the 10th. She may shortly be expected, and possibly may bring later news.

From Tampico we have some verbal intelligence, not without interest. The American prisoners had not arrived there, but were at a place about forty leagues distant –probably Huejutla. On the 8th inst. Col. DeRussy, of the Louisiana regiment, left Tampico, at the head of about two hundred men, intending to proceed to the relief of the prisoners. He took with him a small force of the regular artillery, a portion of his own regiment and some of the mounted men of Tampico – serviceable description of force raised in the town. It is more than probable that the colonel will have a brush with the enemy before he gets back. There are said to be pretty strong parties of guerrillas on the route to be followed.

Our accounts of the health of Tampico, and especially at the Louisiana regiment, are more favorable. The number of the men on the sick list has rapidly decreased, but the remaining cases are somewhat more severe. They are mostly cases of intermittent fever; a few cases of bilious fever have occurred, some of them terminating fatally. –There is very little yellow fever in the town and the cases have been confined to the civil hospital. The fevers which prevail are becoming more malignant as the season advances.

From a file of the Sun of Anahuac, published at Vera Cruz, we have a few items of intelligence. The night of the 7th inst. a fight occurred in Vera Cruz between two Mexicans, in which one stabbed the other so severely that he died instantly. No names are given.

Capt. Mayo of the Navy and Governor of Alvarado having received intelligence that Father Jarauta was in the vicinity and designed to surprise and take Alvarado, went off in pursuit of him at the the head of one hundred and fifty men, proceeding up the river. At last dates the expedition had not returned to Alvarado, nor had any account been received from it.

The editor of the Sun of Anahuac has seen the Republicano of the 28th June, containing Mr. Buchanan’s letter, with which we are all familiar, and the pretended proceedings of an American council of war. Upon the information thus derived the editor founds an article which we give below.

From the Sun of Anahuac of the 8th inst.

What course will Gen. Scott pursue? – The late intelligence we have received from Mexico of the correspondence between Mr. Buchanan and the Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, treating of peace, has, it seems to us, altered the course which General Scott was to pursue.

We have deferred our remarks until now, because we were afraid to be hasty in our speculations.

It seems most likely to us that Gen Scott will not advance any further until he receives orders from Washington to do
It must have struck the mind of everyone who has read the correspondence above alluded to, that the tone of the Mexican Government has altered very much, if we should judge from the few lines addressed to Mr. Buchanan by the Mexican Premier in answer to his propositions of peace. —We do not see, in his letter, any of that arrogance which in every instance before has characterized the Mexican diplomatic correspondence — but on the contrary a pretty polite, thought short answer, in which he says that he declines answering to the arguments of Mr. Buchanan, until Congress, to whom he refers the matter and who have solely the power to decide, shall have acted upon them. In a note which he addresses to Congress, hepresses them to take immediate action upon them.

But in the meantime what is Gen. Scott to do? Will he take up his line of march for the capital while there are hopes entertained of peace? This is not at all probable. We therefore come to the conclusion that he will not make a step forward until all hopes for concluding a treaty of peace is lost.

By the way of Tampico, we yesterday received a copy of El Republicano, from the city of Mexico, of the 30th June; also the number of the 28th, which was missing from our previous file. Both papers contain matters of great interest.

A postscript in the paper of the 28th contains a report of the proceedings of a council of war said to have been held in Gen. Scott's camp on Thursday, the 24th, the business of which vastly determine whether or not to advance upon the capital. One General, whose name is not given, is said to have argued that it would be imprudent, nay, an act of madness to advance upon the city with less than twenty thousand men; that upon the supposition that every thing should work favorably for them, it was evident that they could no enter to the capital without resistance; and that supposing in their different engagements they should lose half of their force or more, they would be left with some four thousand men, with which number it was extremely hazardous to attempt to hold so populous a city.

Gen. Worth was of a different opinion. He maintained that every invader who hesitated was lost; that in their situation a single (unintelligible) movement involved the most disastrous consequences, and that this had already been proved. He added loudly that six or eight thousand Americans were sufficient to conquer twenty thousand Mexicans; that their triumph was certain and there was no reason for not pressing on Gen. Scott and others are said to have approved these sentiments, so that it was at last determined that they should commence the forward movement on the 28th, but upon the suggestion of some one that it might not be proper to act so promptly after having just despatched the communication from the Government of the United States with renewed offers of peace, Gen. Scott replied that he would wait some days at Rio Frio to receive the answer of the Mexican Government.

The American force at the time of this council was set down by the Mexicans at eight thousand five hundred men, thirty pieces of artillery and one mortar.

The Republicano remarks upon this information: "We believe that the Americans have compromised their situation beyond measure: and even in the event, certainly very difficult, that they win triumph upon triumph their very victories will cause their ruin."

The council above spoken of was held on the 25th. It is not alluded to in the Star of Puebla of the 26th or in Mr. Kendall's letters which came down to the 13th. Yet the facts are said to be derived for a responsible source and they look plausible —Gen. Worth's opinions particularly so. The Republicano of the 29th says nothing about the subject, but in that paper of the 30th is another postscript to which is prefixed in large letters "Very Important." This postscript mentions the receipt of letters announcing the debarkation of one 1800 men at Vera Cruz from Tampico, who had marched immediately for Puebla. The letters further say that General Scott had already ordered the march of the first brigade consisting of fifteen hundred troops with ten guns and a mortar, towards the city of Mexico, when he learned that the train was detained at Nopalucan (forty--two miles this side of Puebla) that he thereupon countermanded the march upon Mexico, and despatched a force to the assistance of the train coming up. The letters then speak of the review of the troops which took place on the 26th. The number of the troops is again set down at 8,500 men without including those who occupy the fortifications of San Juan Loreto &c. But the most important paragraph is that Gen. Scott with probably postpone his march upon the city until the 10th July, to allow this reinforcements to come up. We give this very pieces of news as we find them, but the reader will constantly bear in mind that our advices direct from Puebla are later than those by the city of Mexico.

The Republicano, in this same postscript, thinks it very probable that Gen. Taylor will abandon Saltillo, Matamoros, and other towns in the north of Mexico, and shortly proceed to Vera Cruz to insist in the taking of the capital, which is now, it adds, the object of the aspirations of the Americans. It is very anxious that the Government should direct Gens. Valencia and Salas, now at San Luis, that they harass the retreat of Gen. Taylor.

We see an order of Santa Anna issued on the 29th, admitting provisions of various kinds into the city free of duty. This is two last only as long as martial law prevails.

Another order has been issued modifying a previous one directing the closing of shops every afternoon. They are now to be closed only on Thursdays. They object of closing the shops was to compel every body to turn out for military drill.

On the 28th Gen. Santa Anna issued through the Secretary of War a brief stringent decree to this effect: --"The army of the enemy being upon the eve of moving upon this capital with a view to attack the same and the moment having arrived to act boldly, energetically and uniformly, to repel our common enemy in a manner decisive and happy for our arms, it is decreed that, martial law having been declared, it shall be strictly enforced, and that no one authority whatever shall be recognised then that of the general in command of the army of the East. This General is Lombardini. The decree is followed up by another greatly restricting the intercourse between the city and the country, and pointing out who may go and come. The details would be uninteresting here.

The Republicano urges the formation of a body of troops under the name of Columna de Honor – something like the Legion of Honor – in which officers of all grades not actually on duty in defence of the city shall serve as private soldiers. Quite an eloquent article is devoted to the support of this subject, but Santa Anna will look with the jealous eye upon every suggestion coming from this quarter.

The Republicano blames the Government for not communicating at once with Mr. Trist, without referring the subject matter of Mr. Buchanan's letter to Congress. However, it concludes its article by trusting that the Executive as well as the Congress will show themselves "extremely difficult" in relation to peace, and not consent to one unless the conclusion of it should protect in every particular the honor, the good name and the interests of the nation. We regard this as a concession on the part of the Republicano and of good omen for peace.

We hear not a word of the American officers, prisoners in Mexico. We fear their hopes of liberation are to be again for some days deferred.

The papers contain accounts of several outrages committed by Americans in Puebla. We do not believe a word of them. Some of the [unintelligible] are utterly preposterous.

One paper pretends that Gen. Scott is driven to make a desperate attempt upon the capital by the scantiness of his resources and the discontent of the volunteers! Mexicans are not unprepared for him, it adds.

We have the decree of Santa Anna, by which he endeavors to prevent the introduction into the country of goods entered at ports in our [unintelligible]. It declares such goods forfeited. We have not room for the [unintelligible] today.

Our readers may recollect that some time since our correspondent at Saltillo informed us of a great excitement occasioned there by the arrival of two Mexican officers from San Luis with despatches for Gen. Taylor. They were supposed to be propositions for peace, but turned out to be solemn enquiries whether it was the general's intention "to conduct the war according to the manner adopted by the Camanches." The wrath of Gen. Taylor at this preposterous insolence of the Mexicans was described as ludicrous, but we have never seen his reply till now. In the Mexican papers lately received the whole correspondence is in Spanish. The letter to Gen. Taylor was from Gen. Mora y Villamil, and dated the 10th May. The letter is long and we have no idea of translating it, and the impudence of it was not a whit exaggerated by our correspondent. The nature of it will be sufficiently disclosed by Gen. Taylor's reply, which we translate although we feel what injustice his terse and elegant style will suffer by the double translation. The letter is said to be dated.

[Letter omitted]

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p4c1 Origin of the War

The Mobile Advertiser informs us that Mr. John T. Taylor, the Locofoco candidate for Congress in that District, in his speeches before the people, endeavors to relieve Mr. Polk from all responsibility for the origin of the existing War, not by adopting Mr. Polk’s own declaration that the first aggressive movement was made by Mexico herself – which, if it were true, would destroy the force of his own labored argument to show that we were justified in waging it by the unredressed injuries and insults to which his less patriotic predecessors in the presidency so meekly submitted – but by throwing it upon the shoulders of Mr. Calhoun and Gen. Taylor! We are aware that Mr. Benton last winter, setting aside the antagonist and suicidal position previously assumed by Mr. Polk – first, that Mexico began the war, and secondly, that the United States Government stood justified before the world, by the untroubled catalogue of Mexican outrages, for seeking redress by the sword – endeavored to hold Mr. Calhoun responsible for the interruption of pacific relations, by tracing the war to the unwise precipitancy with which that gentleman sought to effect the annexation of Texas, and to the unstatesman-like manner in which that event was finally consummated.
But, what had General Taylor to do with Mr. Calhoun’s actions upon that question? We can not imagine by what fact Mr. Polk can in any manner identify General Taylor with the origin of the war, unless it be by ascribing it to his march from the Nueces to the Rio Grande – and for that movement assuredly Mr. Calhoun was in no manner responsible, either in advising or in executing. It is evident, indeed, that Gen. Taylor himself has no share in this responsibility. The Administration, which gave him the order to move, must be held entirely and exclusively accountable for the movement and all its consequences. If left to his own judgment, Gen. T. would never have crossed, in a "spirit of conquest," the “natural boundary” between the Anglo–Saxon and the Mauritanian races, pointed out by the sagacious chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations, Mr. Ch. J. Ingersoll, at least until an attempt had been made to adjust by negotiation the question of territorial jurisdiction between the two countries. He would have been as forbearing towards Mexico as we were towards Great Britain in ascertaining the boundary between the possessions of the two countries in Oregon. Gen. Taylor would not have consented to browbeat and trample upon the weak, after he had succumbed to “a foul man worthy of our steel.”

We believe that there are yet facts to be revealed, which will demonstrate the truth of these accusations beyond the shadow of a doubt. No one will hesitate to concur with him in the declaration that “the war was unnecessary even to accomplish the most grasping views of the administration relative to Mexican territory.” The National calls the special attention to the Union to its question, as it says there is not more behind them than the Union can know if it will examine all the papers of the Secretary of State relative to our relations with Mexico, received at Washington, just before the battles of the 8th and 9th of May, 1846.”

SERIOUS QUESTIONS FOR MR. BUCHANAN TO ANSWER.

1st. Were you not, as well as Mr. Polk, informed by letters, that if Gen. Taylor moved his forces, and took a position opposite Matamoros, a collision would take place?

2d. Were you not shown the correspondence of Gen’l Arista with a gentleman of high standing in the United States, one who had filled an important diplomatic office in Mexico, in which Gen. Arista stated that the Government of the United States could get by treaty or purchase to the line of the Rio Grande?

3d. Were you not shown a note of Gen. Arista’s in which he stated that if the Government of the United States acquired title by purchase or treaty to the Rio Grande, the provinces of Tamaulipas, St. Leon, and Zacatecas would unite themselves with Texas, and come into the Confederacy of the United States! Is not the letter alluded to above, on file in your department?

4th. Were you not informed by an express direct from the camp of Gen. Arista, that the Government of Mexico would receive a Commissioner to settle the boundary question, but would not receive a Minister, and was not Mr. Slidell sent off on his useless errand after you received the express from Arista’s camp?

5th. Did you not have several private interviews in Washington, with the gentleman who sent the express from Arista’s camp, in which you thanked him in behalf of the United States, for the services he had rendered the government, and did you not, as well as Mr. Polk, entirely approve of his views?

6th. Did you not, at a Cabinet Council, lay before the members the whole correspondence, and did you not conclude with Hon. R. J. Walker, and other members that the time for aggressive measures on the part of the United States had arrived: and did not the Hon. R. J. Walker, at that meeting, propose a plan to subjugate Mexico with a standing army of 5000 men?

7th. Have you not been urged by men in and out of power, to produce the letters alluded to above to relieve you of the charge of acting with duplicity towards Mr. Polk, and of pretending ignorance of the facts contained in the correspondence we have called for?

[NO]

July 23, 1847, RW47v24n59p4c3 Important from Mexico

[From the N.O. Picayune, July 13]

Important from the city of Mexico.

Our files of papers from the city of Mexico, by the way of Vera Cruz, come down to the 29th of June.

A summons for Congress to assemble we find in almost every paper we open. We presume it is summoned to take into consideration Mr. Buchanan’s letter announcing Mr. Trist appointment. It is certain that no quorum had been assembled up to the 29th ult. The Republicano publishes daily the list of members present and absent. They have several times come very near a quorum and there is doubtless a sufficient number of members in the city to form one.

On the 26th ult. rumors which the Republicano calls “very alarming” were in circulation in the capital. It was said that Mexican Government had acceded to the mediation of England; that the terms agreed upon between them would be the surrender of the Californians to the Americans, the recognition of the independence of Texas, and the acknowledge of the line 36˚ as the northern boundary between the United States and Mexico. (This line would give Santa Fe and over a third of New Mexico to the United States.) The Republicano has no faith in these rumors. The existence of these rumors confirms the information we derived from a distinct source in Vera Cruz that Mr.
Buchanan’s letter was transmitted through the English embassy.

The Independiente of San Louis Potosi announces the arrival there of fifty commissions from the Minister of War for officers who distinguished themselves at Angostura –our Buena Vista. These commissions are promotions to advanced grades.

The Republicano demands of Santa Anna the release of Gen. Arista from the fortress of Acapulco. He is sharply censured for sending him there without any trial.

On the 14th June, Santa Anna issued a decree of indemnity for all political offences of whatever kind up to that date.
All in confinement for such offences were ordered to be at once released.

The Republicano gives the result of the election for President made on the 15th May. The 81st article of the constitution provides that to make an election valid, three-fourths of the States entitled to vote must vote. As there were 23 States entitled to vote at the election, and only 15 votes were cast, being less than Three-fourths, the election has failed.

Our limits constrain us to break off here, but without having exhausted at all the contents of the paper we have received.

---

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p1c3 Americans leave Puebla

Mexico –In the Curier Des Etats Unis of Thursday last is published a letter from the city of Mexico of the 20th ult., written, as the editors states, “by a wholly disinterested spectator,” and therefore entitled to full belief.

Mexico, 29th June, 1847.

We are upon the point of seeing the Americans enter this city; they were to leave Puebla yesterday, according to some to-day according to others. Preparations are making to give them a warm reception; in the interior of the city the Alameda and Paseo have been fortified. I think those gentlemen will have occasion to regret not having availed themselves immediately of the stupefaction produced by the victory of Cerro Gordo, and the entry into Puebla.

It is said that Gen. Scott has not more than 8000 men. We have twice that number here and if the last advantage be obtained over him, be sure that more than 30,000 guerrillas will be ready to cut off the retreat of the Americans, who are represented as a bounding in gold.

[NO]

---

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p2c2 Latest from New Orleans

From the South

We have no later tidings from Gen. Scott’s army, intelligence from which in now looked for with intense interest and anxiety.

The last New Orleans Times insists upon the truth of the rumor to which it gave currency some days ago, to the effect that the Mexican Government had peremptorily rejected the proposals for peace recently made to them through Mr. Trist, and that Gen, Scott was on his march to the city of Mexico. We doubt is true, however.

The New Orleans Mercury of the evening of the 17th inst. has a letter from Mr. Chase, our former consul at Tampico, written on the 11th, in which it is stated that “on the 30th ult. Gen. Scott was within nine miles of the city of Mexico, and I presume has planted his flag there ere this.” But the Picayune of the 18th thinks there must be some error in this statement. Gen. Scott it says, was unquestionably at Puebla on the 30th ult., awaiting the arrival of Generals Cadwallader and Pillow.

[NO]

---

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p2c2 Interesting speculations.
In the absence of news from the seat of the war, we copy the following letter from the Washington correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, who claims to be behind the scenes, and who seems certainly to speak by the card.

[Correspondence of the Courier and Enquirer]

Washington, Thursday morning, July 22, 1847.

You will ere this have had time to reflect upon Mr. Buchanan’s despatch of the 15th April, containing full authority to Mr. Trist to conclude a definitive treaty of peace. Mr. Trist having such full authority to conclude a definitive treaty of peace, must have had, as I told you, that definite treaty with him, which I now again aver that he then had and now has; and that this treaty embraced California, subsequently extended to Lower California also, and in addition the Isthmus, or at least a perfect right of way over the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

What sum was to be given to Mexico I do not know; but I do know that Gen. Scott and the Mexican Government, and the British Minister were appraised that Mr. Trist was authorized to pay down the three million appropriation in cash upon the ratification by the Government of Mexico of the treaty which he took with him; and if the treaty is ratified by that government, that sum will be paid at once to it, by Mr. Trist, without waiting for its ratification by the Senate of the United States.

I think some further sum also, beyond the three millions, was to be paid, if essential to secure a peace; but of this I do not speak with certainty; but as to the three millions I do. We are all waiting here in anxious suspense the next arrival from Mexico, which certainly ought to bring decisive intelligence whether Mr. Trist’s terms will be accepted by Mexico. If they are not positively accepted, the present determination of Gen. Scott is to move on forthwith and take the city; for which purpose, with the reinforcements which have now joined him, he will probably have a force not exceeding eleven thousand effective men.

Gen. Scott himself, and the military men who are with him, are of opinion there will be no serious difficulty in taking the city. Gen. Scott was of the opinion that the best plan was for him to have moved immediately on, after breaking up the garrison at Jalapa and take the city, as a preliminary to the offer of any definitive terms of peace. Mr. Trist was of a different opinion and actually sent on his despatch at that critical moment, not through Gen. Scott, but through an attache to the British legation of Mexico.

It is certain that the British Minister is exerting himself to the utmost to induce the government of Mexico to accede to our proffered terms of peace, and that he has hopes of success even before the capture of the city, although he regards the prospect as better when the city shall have been taken, especially if there shall be another battle in which Santa Anna will be disgracefully beaten, and probably seek shelter by becoming a voluntary prisoner of General Scott. Under all the circumstances it is difficult to form any decided opinion whether the Government of Mexico will or will not accept these terms; but if rejected now, the capture of the City, and another defeat of Santa Anna, will in my judgment ensure a pacification. It is quite possible, however, that even when this shall be accomplished, Gen. Scott and his army may still be required to spend some short time in Mexico to prevent another of those political revolutions which is as much one of the staple productions of Mexico as the lava of their volcanoes.

There is one of my previous statements which I wish you to bear in mind, if there should now be further delay in accepting the terms offered by Mr. Trist, and that is this, which the papers and events, whenever laid before Congress, will clearly show, that if Mr. Trist, instead of waiting until the 22d of June, had sent on his despatch to the Mexican government shortly the battle of Cerro Gordo and before the return of Santa Anna to the city of Mexico, the treaty of peace would ere now have been ratified by that government.

The Spy in Washington.

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p4c2 Volunteers in Mexico

The Staunton Spectator of the 22 d inst. says:

We have received a letter from the editor, dated at Buena Vista on the 15th ult. in which states that there was a good deal of sickness in his company. His report of that morning told a melancholy tale—twenty-nine on the sick list, and but two officers, seven non-commissioned officers and thirty-one men fit for duty. He refrains to mentioning the names of the sick—thinking it probable that many of them will recover in a short time—to avoid giving undue alarm or uneasiness to their friends.

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p4c3 Escape of Eight American Prisoners
The schr Home, Capt. Kinney, arrived here yesterday morning from Tampico, bringing over eight of the American prisoners who have been so long and so unjustly detained in Mexico. The names of these men are A W Holeman, W P DeNormandie, Wm Funk, Jno Thomas, John A Scott, S Cockrill, John Swigert and Wm Russell.

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p4c3 Gleaning from Mexico Papers

We passed some hours yesterday in examining a file of Mexicans papers extending through the month of June. We found the labor fruitless, but we gleaned from them a variety of miscellaneous matter which we proceed to lay before our readers.

The Diario del Gobierno finds a text in that part of Mr. Marcy’s intercepted despatched which encourages Gen. Scott to foment domestic dissensions and promise aid and protection to disaffected States when the war terminates. –
From this text it denounces our Government as treacherous; declares that any peace with it must be eternal infamy, and concludes by declaring that Mexico can never be tranquil, until the nation of Yankees disappears from the face of the earth. This is terrible, but it is so written in the Mexican papers.

In reasoning upon the project for a Dictatorship, which some honest men among the Mexicans have supposed might be the most efficacious remedy for the anarchy existing in their country, and might concentrate the whole power of the nation, the Republicano takes strong grounds against it. The Republicano opposes the Dictatorship as unnecessary, in consideration of the immense power which the Government is already invested by a law of Congress, passed on the 20th of April last, which powers have been constructed with the utmost latitude.

In reading the Mexican papers it is very clear that the different States have ceased to anticipate a prolonged resistance on the part of the capital to the American arms. –in view of the speedy fall of the city they are congratulating themselves upon the wisdom of the Federal system. The federal system, they reason, has created new centers of action, and even if the capital succumbs the States, each one for itself, will resist the ascendancy of the American arms and refuse to recognize a treaty which may be forced upon the Central Government.

Out of views of this nature has grown a Coalition among the States of Jalisco, San Luis Potosi, Zacatecas, Mexico, Queretaro, and Aguascalientes –the later claiming to be a State, though not so recognized by the constitution of 1824.

This Coalition has been thought worthy of several able denunciatory articles in the Republicano, although in the principle end it has in view –the prevention of peace with the United States– it has had the Republicano for an ally.
This is but one piece of evidence we could present of the hostility of the different States to a peace, even should the Central Government enter into a treaty with us.

July 27, 1847, RW47v24n60p4c4 From Mexico City

[From the N.O Bulletin, July16.]

From the City of Mexico.

By the papers from the capital to the 30th June, received via Tampico, by the Galveston, we learn that though there was a quorum of the members of Congress actually in the city, they had not yet been able to get them together. It would, therefore, appear, that the report was not correct, that Congress had declined to treat for peace under the recent letter of Mr. Buchanan.

The probability is, that such will be the result so soon as they can get a quorum together, but up to the 30th ult. no action whatever had taken place on the subject. It was stated there were 86 members in the city, and that 71 was a quorum.

The force with Alvarez was said to be 5 to 6000 men. The same paper states that the force in the capital amounts to 23,000 men, and boasts that if Gen. Scott attempts to enter the city with his 8,500, they should be destroy his army with stones, witout using their arms!!!

They seem to forget that Gen. Scott has a battering and mortar train with him, that can knock down their city, without rendering it necessary to enter at all.
Arrival of the Steamship Jas. L. Day

Later from the Army of General Taylor.

The steamship James L. day, Capt. Woods, arrived at a late hour last night from the Brazos. We are indebted to Capt. Wood for the prompt deliver of papers.

We learn that the schr Equiv, bound out from the mouth of the Rio Grande for New Orleans with a cargo of hides, grounded on the bar, where the remained thumping for two days.

Papers from San Luis Potosi to the 6th inst. have been received by the Mexicans at Matamoros. It was reported that Gen. Scott had marched from Puebla and then countermarched, upon learning the resistance to be offered him twenty-five miles from the capital. [We have no faith in news thus half disclosed and half kept back.]

The Mexican forces at San Luis Potosi were variously reported at from four to fourteen thousand. They are commanded by Gen. Valencia. A march against Gen. Wool had been determined upon, but appears to have fallen through. Gen. Wool received (unintelligible) notice of it on the 26th ult. and made arrangements for a hearty welcome. (unintelligible) the brigade of Gen. Minon, (commanded now by another officer,) forming the advance (unintelligible) approached within sixty or eighty miles of Saltillo. Here the soldiers began to desert and dissensions arose, which induce a countermarch and rumor said that Gen. Valencia was en route from San Luis to join Gen. Santa Anna at the city of Mexico. [We can contradict this rumor upon the authority of San Luis papers received in this city within the last few days. –These papers state Gen. Valencia to be still in San Luis, making preparations for the reception of Gen. Taylor. –They mention that despatches ordering Gen. Taylor to form a junction with Gen. Scott, by the way of San Luis, had been captured, and they feel certain that Gen. Taylor will march upon that place. The regular troops of Valencia are stated at nine thousand, and strenuous appeals are made to the people to assist in the defence of the city.]

The troops at Buena Vista (2900) are in good health, and under Gen. Wool’s command progressing rapidly in the "school of a soldier."

Gen. Taylor is still at Walnut Springs, quietly awaiting the arrival of those reinforcements so often promised and always delayed.

It was rumored along the road that Urrea was on this side of the mountain, but it was not generally believed in Camargo or above there on the line; the country wore the appearance of perfect quiet, and there was no interest in either present or perspective operations. We have positive information of his being in Victoria five days ago, and of his having arrested the Governor of this State, and sent him under guard to the city of Mexico, charged with hatching treason against the Mexican Government. The Department of Tamaulipas is put under contribution for a large sum of money, and Urrea is deputed to enforce its collection with the bayonet.

[NO]
We are indebted to a gentlemen recently from Vera Cruz, for some accurate and interesting information. General Pierce was in command of full 4000 men, who were encamped upon the beach. It is probable, indeed, that but this time Gen. Pierce has joined the advance, and that the whole body of 4,000 men is now in full march to Puebla.

The entire number of American soldiers between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico is estimated at from fifteen to sixteen thousand men. About the last of June, gen. Scott had with him a force of 8,500. The detachment under Gen. Cadwallader numbered a little over 1500; when it left Vera Cruz, and must have entered Puebla in the early part of July. General Pillow was in command of 2,500 men, and at the last accounts was pushing forward as rapidly as circumstances would permit. Lastly, we have Gen. Pierce with 4,000 men, who will probably join the main army in the course of the present month.

The statement of the Government paper were therefore incorrect in point of time, as well as numbers. General Scott, instead of having 20,000 men under him, will be in command of about 15,000. Instead of receiving all the new levies, by the end of June, he will not receive them until the close of July. Gen. Scott did not expect to make a forward movement upon the capital, until an answer was received to Mr. Buchanan’s propositions of peace. If these overtures have been rejected, as is again asserted by a contemporary, we presume that he will hasten his departure for the city of the Aztecs with characteristic energy and decision.

July 30, 1847, RW47v24n61p4c3 From the Rio Grande

[From the N.O. Picayune, July 20.]

From the Rio Grande.

The steamship Mery Kingland, Capt. Davis, arrived yesterday morning from Brazos Santiago, having sailed on the 15th inst.

There was a rumor at the Brazos when Capt. Davis left that Urrea with a force of 3000 men was about to make a descent upon Reynosa. One company on the way to the camp of instruction have been landed at Reynosa, and the quartermaster was making every preparation to defend the place.

Several bodies of the enemy have lately been seen on the river and it is supposed to be Urrea’s object to attack some of the depots or wagon trains between Camargo and Monterrey.

A gang of desperadoes commanded by a man, named King, composed of Mexicans and people of other nations, has been found near Brazos. Some of the members of the gang have been taken prisoners and the rest dispersed. The rancho frequented by them was burnt to the ground.

[NO]

July 30, 1847, RW47v24n61p4c4 American Prisoners in Mexico

American Prisoners in Mexico

We have been allowed to make use of a letter from Lieut. Barbour, of the 1st Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers, who is now a prisoner in the city of Mexico. The letter will awaken new alarm for the fate of the handful of brave men now prisoners in the city Mexico. The perfidy of Santa Anna in the case of these prisoners is sufficient to justify every stigma which has ever been cast upon him. It is eminently cruel and contemptible, and far more shameless than most of his unworthy acts, for often the man endeavors to propitiate universal regard by traits of apparent magnanimity:

City of Mexico, June 29, 1847.

On the 4th of this month 190 of our prisoners left the Castle of Santiago in this city for Tampico, where we were told they were to be released, but it was with regret, that we learn through the city papers here that they wee stopped at an Indian village 150 miles from this by order of Gen. Santa Anna, and that they were starving.

We have suffered great hardships, particularly the men. They have been in state of nakedness, famine and disease for the last 5 months, and many of them would have died had it not been for the foreign here through whom aid was given them. This government, or rather Santa Anna, has no idea of releasing any of us. It is his wish to send us to Acapulco on the Pacific. The most rigid and compulsory measures on the part of our Government will [alone] do us any good.

Respectfully your friend and serv’t. WM.T. Barbour.
Santa Anna and Cerro Gordo.

We promised the other day to pay our respects to Santa Anna’s detailed report of the Battle of Cerro Gordo. It is in the nature of an autobiography, extending from the moment when the Army of the North was retiring to its former quarters, “covered with glory on the field of Angostura,” down to the 18th of April. The difficulties he had to encounter occupy much of the long narrative and do not require to be told. His minute description of the works at Cerro Gordo would hardly be intelligible without the plan accompanying the report. The most rapid and condensed portion of the narrative describes the fighting, but the events are not new, as he confines himself, principally to the storming of the height known as the Telegraph. –The dead of General Vasquez and the faltering of the Puebla brigade are the most notable of the events of the day in his story.

Such is the exact and genuine account of my operations at Cerro Gordo during the few days which elapsed from my arrival till the morning of the 18th. By this it will be seen by the Supreme Government, that surrounded by a thousand difficulties I spared no means or efforts to assure a triumph for the nation in the position selected; that there were no grave errors or faults committed, as malevolence or cowardice has whispered; and that as my interests and my glory were identified with those of the nation, so it is but justice to me confess that it was not my fault that the result did not correspond to my efforts and my most ardent desires. Grant, if you please, that there should have been somewhat more firmness and intrepidity shown by our soldiers; but they should be excused in consideration of the little experience of war which they had had during the few months that they have been enlisted. The fortifications, too, upon the hill known as the Telegraph, were deficient; but it should not be forgotten that they enemy did not allow time for the completion of the works designed and commenced, nor was it possible to complete them without sufficient laborers, without tools, and even without materials. The people did not afford the aid which was required of them, and some of them contiguous to the seat of the war deserve the denunciations which the Governor of the State did not spare them, notwithstanding his well known moderation.

Besides the deficiencies above indicated, more infantry of the line were wanting, which it was impossible to procure. You will have noticed that among the few bodies of permanent infantry which I enumerate, there were only a few more than 3000 men, and even of these some had just been recruited. The remainder, enough to bring up the number to a little over 6000 men, belonged to the National Guard, recently enlisted, and yet to burn their first cartridge in presence of the enemy. It is not true, therefore, that there were assembled there a force of from 12,000 to 14,000 men as has been hastily or maliciously circulated. But there is nothing strange in the victory won by the enemy, if it is considered that their number was almost double ours, that they possessed all those elements which we were in want of, and that their courage in the action was as desperate as would have been their situation if they had lost the battle. At some future day, when political passions and personal rivalries have passed away, entire justice will be done those Mexicans who, notwithstanding their disadvantages, opposed their generous breasts to the arrogant invader on the 17th and 18th of April, and sold dearly the victory which was won on the second day of combat.

A favorable moment gained the triumph, which was in a measure brought about by the want of time to fortify our position properly, by the scarcity of good troops, by the blameless inexperience of others newly enlisted, by the want of laborers and of the tools indispensable for fortifications erecting in haste, and the want of other materials and elements which are reasonably required to assure a successful result.

Nothing of all this was concealed from me, nor was my resolution shaken by it. When a great people is invade by an unjust enemy, which aims at wounding its rights and trampling on its dignity, it cannot excuse itself from a fight, even though it should be unprepared for the combat. It will suffer defeats, but weakening the enemy, even in its own disasters, it will acquire experiences, and sooner or later it will exterminate the invader or at least give him a positive defeat. In this conviction, which is deep rooted within me, I have sought the enemy in every direction, and inflicted heavy losses upon him in both the actions which I have thought. If Mexicans discover that we do not fight the enemy as often as an opportunity occurs, they will abandon themselves to despair, when there are abundant reasons for looking forward to a happy day in which the country may secure again unfading glory. My faith in her destinies has never abandoned me; and I leave to others the pleasure of exercising their malevolence or their envy, whilst I strive with all my powers to wrest victory from the hands of the enemy, or to meet death –the only possible term of my determination to serve with zeal and loyalty the nation which has so constantly honored me.
The New Orleans papers are alive with speculations upon the subject of the news lately received from Mexico, and its authenticity is canvassed with minute care. Being unable to insert all that is written, the public must be content with our views, derived from an attentive perusal of those journals.

The great question is, has the Mexican Government, in reality, appointed commissioners to meet Mr. Trist? We will merely state the facts, in order that the reader make up his own mind according to his estimate of them.

It is certain that no papers have been received from Mexico of a later date than 30th of June, up to which (unintelligible) there had neither been any commissioners announced, nor was, any thing publicly known about negotiations of peace, except that Congress had been summoned from day to day to receive Mr. Buchanan’s proposition, and that no quorum had attended.

(Unintelligible) have arrived at Vera Cruz form Puebla, which left on or about the 4th of July, bearing letters for several commercial houses in the former city. Upon the strength of these letters, and this verbal intelligence, two papers in Vera Cruz, both [says the Picayune] edited by Spaniards, announce to the public, that Mexico has appointed three commissioners to meet Mr. Trist at San Martin, and settle terms of peace. The information which these papers profess to have, is detailed with so much minuteness, descending even to the names of the commissioners, that but for the evidence of the other side, we should have no hesitation in yielding implicit faith to it. That evidence is contained in a letter from Tampico, to the editor of the La Patria, in New Orleans. The writer says he has conversed with a gentleman direct from Mexico, which city he left on the sixth, and that the information derived from him, “to contradict the news published in Vera Cruz” relative to the appointment of the commissioners. This is all we have to contradict the appointment, and unless we learn that the informant was a person conversant with public affairs, we shall be disposed to place very little hesitance on it. The appointment of commissioners would be on the part of Santa Anna, an act abhorrent to the feeling of a strong party in Mexico, and its first announcement might create an outbreak. There can be little doubt that an attempt might be made to force the Congress by threats of violence, to cancel the commission. It is probable, therefore, that the crafty Dictator, acting in connivance with Congress, might have sent off the commissioners, without announcing it, thereby rendering the act irrevocable. In that case the appointment of the commission would be known in Puebla before it was announced in Mexico.

Two of the objections enumerated by the other papers of New Orleans to this report, are disposed of very properly, we think, by the Picayune. The first is, that Santa Anna has no power to open negotiations, as he has himself acknowledge by referring the whole matter to Congress. But since he has been unable to get quorum of that body together, and since the emergency demands immediate action, as the acting Executive, would he not be justified in proceeding as if Congress had adjourned? Nay! Is it not his sworn duty to do so? Upon this point there may be doubts, Santa Anna however, is not a man to be restrained by any very nice scruples. The other objection is, that Mr. Trist is not authorized to conclude a treaty of peace. This is certainly a misapprehension of the extent of his powers, as the following extract from Mr. Buchanan letter, as translated from the Spanish, will clearly show.

"Desirous, nevertheless, that an honorable peace should be reestablished, he [the President] is resolved that the evils of war shall not be prolonged a day beyond what the government of Mexico may make absolutely necessary, and in order that this determination may be carried into effect, he has concluded to send to the headquarters of the Army of Occupation in Mexico, in the quality of commissioner, Mr. Nicholas P. Trist, second in rank to the undersigned in the administration of Foreign Affairs, who bears full powers to conclude a definitive treaty of peace with the United State. The gentleman possesses the entire confidence of the President, and is worthy of that of the Government of Mexico.

Four our part, we do not hesitate to express the belief that negotiations have been commenced —because as the Picayune observes, where there is so much smoke there must be some fire —because it is well known that the British Embassy is extremely anxious to produce an accommodation —because the British Ambassador has despatched his Secretary of Legation to Puebla with this avowed (unintelligible) —and because, in general, we know the interest of England is deeply pledged to bring about a peace if possible. The delay of General Scott at Puebla, which can hardly be accounted for otherwise, seems to confirm this view, as does the fact that the Republicanos has already said, more than once, that peace was desirable, and the Republicanos is latterly Anti–American. Santa Anna, even, (unintelligible) that his character as a general in the field cannot be retrieved in any contest with our troops, is said to be secretly inclined to an accommodation, and inasmuch as (unintelligible) gain neither glory nor influence by war, we are prepared to believe that such is the fact.

A very few days, however, will decide the question. As to the very important question of what are to be the terms, we have no lights to guide us.

[NO]

August 3, 1847, RW47v24n62p1c3 Further particulars

[From the New Orleans Picayune.]

Further Particulars by the N. Orleans.

The town of Huejutla, is spelled sometimes Guautla. It is thus on Ward’s map, it lies almost directly south of Tampico, and apparently seventy miles only distant, on the road to the city of Mexico. Tantoyuca is on the same road, about fifteen miles north of Huejutla—we follow this spelling, because we find it so in the Mexican papers. We now recur to another and more important part of the intelligence brought by the New Orleans.

On the Spanish side of the Sun the names of the commissioners are given as follows: D. Manuel Eduardo de Gorostiza, D. Manuel Baranda and D. Jose Maria Tornel. In further says that letters have been received by a commercial house from Mexico, which declare that Santa Anna is positively in favor of peace, but he was waiting until the peace party should acquire the undisputed ascendancy before declaring himself.

The same paper says further on its Spanish side that it was reported in Vera Curz that Alvarez had returned to the South, having had some difficulty with Gen. Canalizo.

The Sun of the 14th inst. has some speculations upon the subject of the negotiations for peace, but they are only speculations. It was unknown in Vera Cruz whether the three commissioners had been selected by Santa Anna or Congress, or whether Congress had assembled at all. It was understood that Congress would assembled, or had been summoned to assemble, on the 7th inst., but the Sun thinks it would be impossible to get quorum.

Of the commissioners the Sun says that Gorostiza represents the party of the moderados, while Baranda is a mere creature of Santa Anna. Of Tornel it says that although he was a partisan of the administration of Paredes and a monarchist, yet he could not have obtained a place in the commission unless he had previously become reconciled to Santa Anna. The Sun therefore regards the commissions as representing Santa Anna, and is decidedly of opinion that Santa Anna’s real views are favorable to peace.

The Arco Iris of the 13th speaks of letters received from Puebla on the day previous, and gives the substance of them in an article which we translate, regretting that no dates are given:

Mexico. –The Government has just named Senores Tornel, Gorostiza and Baranda as commissioners to repair at once to San Martin Tesmelucan (seven leagues of peace made by the Cabinet of Washington through its minister, Mr. Trist. They have accepted the appointment and departed to discharge their duties. This course was approved by a majority of the men of influence, who by their persuasions in a great degree contributed to its adoption. –Another letter mentions that the individuals appointed upon this commission were Senores Cuevas, Cortina and Zurutuza.

Gen. Santa Anna remained in power, the ministry has undergone no change, and a majority of it is in favor of an adjustment.

The same letters add that orders had been issued for withdrawing towards the capital the troops which had been stationed at Huamantla, and they conclude by saying that Mexico is a faithful picture of Babylon, (Babel?) inasmuch as opinions cannot be concentrated upon any one measure—society being composed of the most heterogeneous members, and divided into innumerable fractions, who continually cry out against every description of measure proposed, and in nothing united. The emigration of respectable families was increasing every day, and the military dictatorship which in fact prevailed was every way irksome and insupportable.

The American train, they say, was very near its entrance into Puebla, without having suffered any interruption or obstacle after skirmished near Jalapa.

The information contained in these letters is confirmed by what we learn verbally by an individual who arrived yesterday from Puebla. We therefore incline to put confidence in the facts mention in the letters, except in regard to the commissioners.

This is the substance of all the news we can extract from the Vera Cruz papers about the commissioners. The Sun’s articles are but speculation, and we do not give them.

Gen. Pillow’s division arrived at Puebla on the 8th, all well. The American army would march on the city of Mexico to a certainty of peace were not soon made. [We never supposed there was any doubt about this.] The postscript, dated the 11th inst., says that peace was the order of the day. The writer placed no faith in the prospect; he considered that Santa Anna’s sole object was to gain time, a principle of general policy with the Mexicans, especially with the great map.

Meager as this news is, it is later than any we can find in the Vera Cruz papers from the Gen. Scott’s army. It establishes Gen. Pillow’s arrival at Puebla on the 8th, and the pendency of peace negotiations in some form as late as the 11th at which time Gen. Scott had not moved towards Mexico. So far as we have been able to ascertain, this is the latest date received from Puebla.

The express rider was a Mexican. He lost what little money he had and his two horses, besides being severely wounded. When we reached Vera Cruz, he was still unable to get about without assistance. Owing to this unfortunate accident we have not a letter or paper from Mr. Kendall, save the brief note from him to our agents at Vera Cruz.

Our correspondent writes that a large part of the command of Gen. Pierce left on the 14th and 15th. The general was expected to get off the evening of the 16th. Our letters say nothing about the force collected at the National Bridge
The five companies composing the Louisiana battalion have arrived at Vera Cruz, and are said to be enjoying excellent health.

We are again favored by Dr. Barton, with a statement in regard to the health of Vera Cruz, which we annex.

An account of the Mortality of Vera Cruz from the 1st to the 18th of July: From Vomito: Soldiers 27; Qr. Master's Dep 17; Mexicans 5; Others 0; Total 49. Other Diseases: Soldiers 13; Qr. Master's Dep 9; Mexicans 29; Others 3; Total 54. Nation: Americans 66; Mexicans 34; Other For'rs 3; Unknown 0; Total 103.

The fate of Lieut. Whipple, of the 9th Infantry, is a very sad one. The following letter is the most minute account of the circumstances attending it that we have seen:

Camp Bogardo, Near Vera Cruz, July 12.

Gentleman –I am sorry to say to you that yesterday afternoon Lieut. Whipple, of New Hampshire, adjutant of the 9th or New England Regiment U.S. Infantry, was taken by a party of rancheros, and we fear foully murdered. Mr. Whipple rode into the city in the morning, and after transacting business there, took a ride to the cemetery, about a mile from the walls, accompanied by private Barnes. Fastening their horses, they walked over the burial-ground, and upon reaching the gate again were met by three rancheros, who, dismounting, presented their carbines and ordered them to mount. Lieutenant Wipple drew his sword, the only weapon he had, but was struck and prostrated by one of the rancheros. Barnes knocked aside the carbine aimed to him, and dodging under a horse, escaped into the cemetery, and thence through the chaparral into the city. The last he saw of Lieut. Whipple was as he was struck by the carbine.

Officers from the city were in pursuit within twenty five minutes after receiving intelligence of the capture of Lieut. Whipple. When the news reached the camp, Cap. Bowes's rifle company and the dragoons started in pursuit, but nothing has been heard of the lieutenant. Seven or eight Mexicans were taken and brought into camp, but whether any of them were concerned in this business is not known. It is to be hoped that they will be summarily dealt with. Major Seymour goes out this morning in pursuit, but I fear much that we have seen the last of Adj. Whipple. He was a gentleman of fine education and an accomplished officer. A lawyer in good practice in New Hampshire, he received a first lieutenant commission in April, repaired to Fort Adams, and on his passage to Vera Cruz was appointed by Col. Hanson adjutant of the 9th Regiment. He was ambition of distinction, and it is a matter of unusual regret that he should have been cut down in so cowardly manner, while just entering upon his career of honor and usefulness.

The Arco Iris of the 14th inst. copies several items from the Boletin de Noticias, a new paper published at Jalapa. The Boletin of the 6th says that a Mexican, acting as a spy for the Americans, was that day arrested in the vicinity of Jalapa, and was speedily to be tried. The public of Jalapa were clamorous against the spy, charging him with having killed two Indians in that town just before he was taken. Upon the spy, were found 25 or 30 letters –among them various articles for the paper of the United States [newspaper correspondence, we take it.] the letters generally were said to contain exaggerated accounts of the encounter at La Hoya, representing that the guerrilla force was 2000 strong and lost 70 killed, twice that number wounded and a considerable number of prisoners; the American only having eight horses lost and one soldier slightly wounded. The Boletin of Jalapa says this is absolutely ridiculous, that every body knows that the loss of the Americans exceeded thirty men; that their guerrillas lost only seven or eight, and that their whole forces was about 700 only. The Boletin makes the statement to prevent people at a distance from being misled.

Among the letters found on the spy was one from Gen. Pillow, written in pencil 20 miles beyond Perote, with instructions for Gen. Pierce. It represented that the men were dying on an average of eight a day in Perote, and gives some other details which the Boletin deems it imprudent to print. According to this authority all the letters agree that the person arrested was a courier, and some made him a spy. The letter to Gen. Pierce represented that he was the same person who had previously taken a letter from Gen Pillow to Perote, and that he would return with letters from Vera Cruz to the garrison of Perote. We treble for the poor fellow's life.

August 3, 1847, RW47v24n62p1c3 Poisoning Americans in Mexico

Poisoning Americans in Mexico

We mentioned some time since the rumor, not our own, that the Mexicans at Jalapa and elsewhere in Mexico, were reconstituted separately into two independent empires. The God of the Battle decided that we, the American determine whether the two great subdivisions of the British race, one inhabiting Europe and the other inhabiting of bondage. The war of the revolution was not a war for liberty. On the contrary it was a struggle in arms to attached to the very name of our national independence. But the people of the United States were never in at state anniversary of our emancipation from bondage, and vague ideas of that vaguest of all things, called liberty, are

Men who have but superficially studied the history of the United States are accustomed to speak of this day as the bestow on this day.

Meanwhile let us be just to the memory of our fathers, and just to ourselves in the measure of regard which we pride which our country's career awakens –no homage of the soul is profound enough to render due adoration to

And well it is for us that it is so, since no warmth of gratitude is intense enough to be commensurate with the debt of thankfulness we owe to our patriot sires, no language is powerful enough to express adequately the emotions of pride which our country's career awakens –no homage of the soul is profound enough to render due adoration to that gracious Providence which continue to guide and to guard the destinies of the Union.

We come to rejoice with you on this day of glorious memories, in the prosperity and greatness of our country, and to rekindle in our hearts the sacred fire of patriotism by remembering together the virtues and the sacrifices of our wise battles of their country, are not the less animated with the same devoted love toward her which we feel –have desired on this anniversary of our separate existence as a sovereign people, to present their respectful salutations to you as the official representative here of the power and authority of the United States.

General. –The veteran officers and soldiers whom you have so many times led on to victory and to fame –those yet untried in the field, who ardently long for the day when your voice shall bid them also tread triumphantly in the same noble path of honor and of duty– and others your fellow–citizens present, who, though not called to fight the companies of Massachusetts volunteers were assembled, all but the guard, with the colors of the regiment presented them by the Governor of their State, and a little after 9 o'clock they formed and marched out towards Camp Taylor.

An American flag born by a citizen was carried near the regimental colors. Colonel Wright and the members of the Regiment staff, and others, preceded the regiment, and on the road received the marching salute. At Camp Taylor all was ready; under the wide–spread awning in front of Gen. Taylor's tent were the brave old hero and the members of his staff and the officers attached to the forces stationed at camp. On the right of the awning the soldiers of Major Brag's Light Artillery were drawn up in line on the left the 2d Dragoons, and in the front the Massachusetts regiment.

As soon as the latter had formed into line, Gen. Cushing made his appearance, and Gen. Taylor and his officers all rose. Gen. Cushing then proceeded to address him as follows:

General. –The veteran officers and soldiers whom you have so many times led on to victory and to fame –those yet untried in the field, who ardently long for the day when your voice shall bid them also tread triumphantly in the same noble path of honor and of duty– and others your fellow–citizens present, who, though not called to fight the

battles of their country, are not the less animated with the same devoted love toward her which we feel -have desired on this anniversary of our separate existence as a sovereign people, to present their respectful salutations to you as the official representative here of the power and authority of the United States.

We come to rejoice with you on this day of glorious memories, in the prosperity and greatness of our country, and to rekindle in our hearts the sacred fire of patriotism by remembering together the virtues and the sacrifices of our wise and brave forefathers, who have transmitted to us the splendid heritage of the land hallowed by their blood; of the institutions they founded, of their own immortal names.

It is indeed a day never forgotten by an American; for, whether in the home of our affections and interests, surrounded by all that is dearest to the human heart, or on the broad expanse of the fathomless ocean, or wandering over some far distant land, on this anniversary, wherever we may be, our thoughts are turned spontaneously to the same point, as truly as the needle to the pole, as devoutly as the Moslem to his holy Mecca.

And well it is for us that it is so, since no warmth of gratitude is intense enough to be commensurate with the debt of thankfulness we owe to our patriot sires, no language is powerful enough to express adequately the emotions of pride which our country's career awakens –no homage of the soul is profound enough to render due adoration to that gracious Providence which continue to guide and to guard the destinies of the Union.

Meanwhile let us be just to the memory of our fathers, and just to ourselves in the measure of regard which we bestow on this day.

Men who have but superficially studied the history of the United States are accustomed to speak of this day as the anniversary of our emancipation from bondage, and vague ideas of that vaguest of all things, called liberty, are attached to the very name of our national independence. But the people of the United States were never in at state of bondage. The war of the revolution was not a war for liberty. On the contrary it was a struggle in arms to determine whether the two great subdivisions of the British race, one inhabiting Europe and the other inhabiting

America, and both equally free, should continue to constitute a single empire, or whether they should be reconstituted separately into two independent empires. The God of the Battle decided that we, the American in Europe and the other inhabiting world, and the bite of poisonous reptiles, by showing the weed and swallowing the extract. The extract is also used to put in the place of a bite of a poisonous reptile, and always with success. A Mexican never travels, if it can be, avoided, without a small package of the huaco weed, to be provided for against accidents.

{NO}
Colonies, were as competent for independent self-government as the mother country; and England, with that practical good sense which distinguished her from other nations, manfully acquiesced in the decision which split her power asunder, and gave to us separate dominion in America.

And the mysterious order of the Providence seems to have predestined the American to surpass the European subdivision of the original empire, for, of that high-minded, bold-hearted, and strong-handed British race, which, wheresoever it appears separate but to command; the more numerous part will ere long he found in America; and the British Isles have already reached that fatal term in the history of the nations when their native land can no longer feed its sons; while the people of the United States are still expanding with a rapidity and strength of possession which defies calculation, over the rich virgin soils of the New World.

This reflection acquires new force from the circumstances under which we this day we meet, a conquering American army, here, in the heart of the Mexican Republic, in sight of the captured redoubts and heights of Monterrey, amid the venerable trees, and by the side of these living waters of the wood of San Domingo; which, occupied by you, general, and your victorious troops, has acquired a place in history as enduring as poetry ever gave to the fountain of Vaucluse, or eloquence to the grove of Academus.

Yes, millions of men will have assembled to–day within the broad limits of the United States, to do honors to the traditions of the Revolution, to ponder on the excellent beauty of the Federal constitutions, to congratulate one another on the happy condition of our country, and to look forward with inquisitive eye into the sublime future of the American Republic. They will call to mind the names of the stricken fields of that first war of independence which vindicate our national rights on the land, and of that second war of independence which vindicate our national rights on the sea, and of the heroes who illustrated each; but while Bunker Hill, and Saratoga, and Yorktown, and New Orleans will not be forgotten, Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterry, Buena Vista, Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo, will yet more and earth and sky will re–echo with shouts of enthusiasm at the mention of the names of Scott and Taylor, and of the brave men who under their lead have borne the banner of the Union in triumph over the wild plains and through the mountain passes of Mexico.

"Be in their flowing cups freely remembered,"

But we assembled in this grander than all human templates, the outspread sky of the bright firmament of heaven, treading with our own feet the conquered savannahs of New Leon, surrounded by that lofty Sierra, which rises on either hand, as though placed by nature to be the boundary of the empires, we, I say, can best appreciate with the sober but strong conviction of the palpable reality, how vast are the strides which the United States have made in greatness, since the day, not yet remote, when we were humble colonies scattered in a narrow line along the shore of the Atlantic, until now; when we have swarmed across the great central valley of the continent, have struck over to the shores of the Pacific, and unembarrassed by the burden of a foreign war, which has already given to us the possession of the two–thirds of Mexico, are yet able, from the superabundance of our overflowing prosperity, to nourish at will the starving nations of the Old World.

Honor them to the bold hearts, who, on the great day whose anniversary we celebrate, dared to comprehend their country’s capabilities and to proclaim it independent! –Honor to the heroes and the sages who have conducted it so gloriously on to our times! Honor to the statesmen whose vigorous hands at this time so ably and successfully administered its Government! Honor to the generous minded people of our country who freely send forth their sons so fight her battles in this foreign land! Honor to the brave soldiers whose lives and to enjoy the renown, they have so nobly earned in the battle field! Honor above all to the gallant men who fell in the hour of their country’s triumph, whose blood was the sacrificial incense of victory, and who, tho’ dead, yet live immortal in the affectionate memory of their countrymen!

We trust and believe that our brethren in arms, whom Scott has been leading in triumph from Vera Cruz to Puebla, will celebrate this day in the capital of the Mexican Republic, and on the site of the great teocalli of the Aztec. And if Mexico shall then continue in the blind obstinacy of her fatal infatuation, and still refuse the proffers of peace which the President of the U. States, with honorable solicitude to terminate the evils of the war, has at all (unintelligible) been ready to conclude, –then we look to you, sir, m the undoubted confidence of perfect faith in your generalship, your wisdom, your courage, and your fortune, to conduct us in similar triumph along that lofty table land before our eyes, and to complete, on the plains of the Bajio, that which you so gloriously commenced on those of the Rio Grande, namely the total subjugation of New Spain.

Once more, general, in the name and as the humble instrument of your fellow–soldiers and fellow–citizens, whom you see before you, I tender to you their felicitations on occasion of this suspicious anniversary, with sentiments of admiration for the high achievements which have marked your life, of deep respect for your personally, and of the sincerest aspirations for your future happiness and honor in whatever else of danger or duty you may hereafter be called to by the providence of an all wise God.

Gen. Taylor, who had listened with great attention to the remarks of Gen. C. and evidently powerfully affected by the mention of his name, briefly but feelingly responded as follows:

General –In replay to your eloquent and complimentary allusions to the services of the army under my command, I can only briefly express my thanks and those of the brave men of my command, to whose exertions and gallantry alone our success are due. For myself I can claim to merit beyond that of sharing and encountering danger with them. You have traced up and depicted in most faithful colors the rapid progress of our country from the commencement to its present condition of greatness and prosperity –occupying the front rank in the nation of the world. The existing war may show the world that in great national enterprise and interests are firm and united –and that the flower of our country, without distinction of party, is always ready to vindicate the national honor on the battle-field. Should it be our lot to resume offensive operations on this line, I shall move with every confidence in the gallantry and success of the forces. I have but little doubt that those who have but recently come into the field, and have not been able to participate in active service as yet, will distinguish themselves as greatly as those who have gone before. That thousands of volunteers who have many of them, been brought up in affluence, have left their pursuits and comfortable homes, to encounter the hardships of an active campaign, is a sufficient guaranty that the rights and honor of our country will always be maintained.

A general shaking of hands and congratulations here took place for some moments, after which Col. Wright of the Massachusetts volunteers by invitation, read the Declaration of Independence. The company then partake of a substantial lunch provided by the hospitable commander, who had an smile and a pleasant word for all, and seemed happy in being able to make other so. –He was dressed in undress uniform, and looked a little more like the brave old hero that he is and a little less like the plain, unaffected country gentleman –a very little– than I have yet seem him. At 12 o'clock, while the company were yet at camp, a national salute of the last gun bad died away, the booming of cannon from the black fort seemed to echo back the salute.

About 3 o'clock Gen. Taylor and staff with an escort of dragoons came into town, and with Gen. Cushing and the officers of the Massachusetts Regiment proceeded to Arista's garden or Arista's house I should say, where a table was spread in the broad corridor opening into the garden with its bright green shrubs, its crimson rose bushes covered with fragrant flowers, its well kept walls, and the gurgling stream that meanders through it. The smell of the bright gems of nature's handiwork were not more pleasing than the odor which arose from the savory viands prepared for immediate consumption. Everyone was surprised at the profusion of good things and the variety that was placed upon the table, all owing to the exertions of Capt. Glover, a merchant residing here for some years, one of the committee of arrangements, whose peculiar providence it was to see that nothing should be wanting. He performed his duty to perfection. Claret, Madeira, and Champaigne in abundance served to give zest to the repast and aid in the sentimental expression of feeling.

When the substantials had been discussed and removed, Gen. Cushing, who presided at the head of the table, with Gen. Taylor on his right, arose and after some remarks complimentary to the committee of arrangements for the faithful manner in which they had cared for their guests, proceeded to announce the following regular toasts, which I think you will admit are better than regular set toasts generally are:

The Day we Celebrate –As dear to us in a strange clime and the midst of war as when welcomed at our peaceful homes.

The President of the United States.

The Memory of Washington –Brightening with time, all nations will at last behold and admire its lustre.

The Army and the Volunteers of the United States –They have conquered all but peace.

The Navy of the United States –With amphibious facility, finding no enemy on the waters, it has constantly sought and successfully encountered him on the land.

The Constitution –May it ever be administered in the spirit which controlled its first formation.

The Surviving Heroes of the Revolution –Length of days has been vouchsafed to them that they might behold the marvellous results of their youthful toil –all honor to their venerable names.

Our Brethren in Arms at the South –They have lighted their paths with a blaze of victories.

Mexico –Blessed with a genial clime and the physical elements of greatness and power, she is a prey to civil strife and bad government; may the influence of wise rulers and free institutions restore her to her proper rank among the nations of the earth.

The Spirit of '76 –It burns as brightly among the mountains of Mexico as of old at Trenton: "Skies, not souls, they change who cross the sea."

The Mexican War –Waged to secure a honorable and a lasting peace, may such be its early consummation.

The Illustrious Dead –From Palo Alto to Cerro Gordo every field is consecrated by the sacrifice of gallant spirits; a sympathising country yields spontaneous and grateful homage to their memory.

The American Fair –Worthy descendants of the women of the Revolution their hearts and prayers are with those who uphold their country’s cause in a foreign land.
These sentiments were all drank with the strongest testimonials of admiration, and all was harmony. About seventy persons, including a number of citizens, partook of the repast.

Volunteer toasts being called for, Lieut. Crowningahield of the Massachusetts Regiment gave:

Andrew Jackson –Sacred be his memory (Drank standing in silence.)

Lieut. Fuller, of the Massachusetts Volunteers, gave:

Gen. Taylor– We hail him as the next President; may his civil be as brilliant as his military career. (This sentiment was drunk with three times three.)

Gen. Taylor rose to respond to this sentiment and said: Mr. President and Gentlemen –I have never had the vanity to aspire to or look for that elevated situation which has just been alluded to, but if my fellow–countrymen think proper to elevate me to so distinguished and honorable a position, I certainly shall do my best to discharge the duties of that responsible position faithfully. But if any other candidate is preferred and offered who may be competent than myself, I need to say that I shall acquiesce most cheerfully in their decision, and shall rejoice that there is one more worthy to represent them in the highest office in their gift.

He then gave as a toast:

The State of Massachusetts and the city of Boston –The place where our liberties were cradled; whose sons have borne so conspicuous a part in the establishment and maintenance of the principles of our independence and the constitution, and have gallantly maintained the same by sea and land.

Col. Wright responded:

Massachusetts and the city of Boston; it is my native state and my native city, and the State where many of us who have been complimented this day were born. We have just received a compliment and a great one from the commanding general. Massachusetts has therefore done her part; her name reads well, her star shines brightly in the national galaxy. In former times, she was known well and did well. She then held, and does now, as her most sacred spot, what we call " the Cradle of Liberty" –old Faneuil Hall. We may all securely praise the past because it cannot be changed, and now may it be our lot to make the future as brilliant as the past has been, and perhaps more so. We are here with our arms in our hands, her colors, bearing the figure of that proud warrior and that good old shield with its lone star, a twin star to that of Texas. I do not believe, gentleman, Massachusetts has a son on this soil but who comes with the same feelings and sentiments that inspired their sired of old; whose whole heart is not in the cause and who will not do all he can in supporting the name and the honor of his country; in maintaining that bright chivalry of which she is so proud, and displaying courage and good conduct when the foe is in sight. I will give you, gentlemen–

The Past and Present –Palo Alto, Resaca, Monterrey and Buena Vista, the Bunker Hill, Princeton and Yorktown of the present century.

By Capt. Montgomery, USA. –The orator of the day, scholar, statesman and soldier. An ornament of his country at home and abroad. We doubt not that his sword will prove as irresistible as his eloquence.

Gen. Cushing rose and said:

Gentlemen –I beg to return you my heartfelt thanks for the sentiment just presented and the kindness with which you have received it. I know and see that those who are bravest in the battlefield are the most courteous in the saloon; that the best soldier is the best gentleman. I appreciate the kind feelings which dictated this sentiment, and when I look on them I am ready to say, as Marshal Bouriscault said in the face of the chivalry of France, “they are not only competent to sustain their country’s honor, but Heaven itself upon their lance points.” Let me repeat what has been said at home, a fact which has struck them with well founded admiration, that whereas in all the contests of the American and Mexican Armies the Mexican officers have followed, the American officers have lead. –Our officers not only made the plan of battle, ordered the contest, and planted themselves in the first rank, but placed themselves in the post of the danger, and where the cry of danger was loudest, the boom of cannon heaviest, and the iron hailstorm thickest, there were found the gallant general and his officers. It was not in the cathedral of Monterrey that the American commander was found, beneath the impervious walls of the city that our gallant officers sheltered themselves (unintelligible) in the deep ravines of Buena Vista that the general and his officers took repose; to Gen. Santa Anna and his staff was left that post of security. The men of America; they whom their country has selected to fight for her honor and who have given evidence that their confidence was not misplaced, need I say where they were found? When the blood of the brave streamed the fastest, the leaders were the first to be struck, and died on the bosom of honor sending up to Heaven that cry of glory which shall enkindle all the young souls of America. But gentlemen, we, the remote hearers of the stupendous events occurring here, we were forbidden to stop at the leaders in our admiration; for we saw, and were proud to see, that common soldiers, men in the ranks, regular soldiers, to whom the prospect of promotion is remote and casual, with nought to animate them but that love of liberty which is inherent, were worthy of their officers; and whatever Taylor would lead, there would the brave soldiers gallantly follow. Wherever that victorious foot was placed, there stood to back him the invincible legions of the army of the United States.
Gen. C. made some additional remarks, but the limits of my letter, already swelled to an extraordinary extent, will not permit me to give them any more at length. I could not refrain from giving these remarks so complimentary to the regular army. In conclusion, he offered his sentiment:

The United States –Baptised in the blood of the revolution, consecrated by the sacrifice of our fathers, rendered glorious by the courage and glory of their sons, may her future prosperity correspond with her present grandeur.

A number of volunteer toasts were given, but I have only time to give a very few.

By Capt. Montgomery, A.Q.M. U.S.A. –Henry Clay: Ha has devoted a life to his country and a son to his country’s glory.

By Capt. Hoyt, A Commissary U.S.A. Mass Reg. –Peace: Whenever it comes may it be a permanent one which shall result in the national prosperity of both the United States and Mexico; a peace which shall bring to the people of Mexico liberty and happiness –to the people of the United States union, and all the blessing of a free and united nation.

By Lieut. Sturgis, 2d Dragoons –Henry Clay: He brought to the altar of this country, the highest talents that ever adorned it and sacrificed his favorite son upon the plain of Buena Vista.

You will perceive that the dinner and the celebration was got up entirely without distinction of party, and the prominent men of each of the two great political divisions were indiscriminately toasted, and the sentiments net with equal applause, a proof of the good feeling and harmony which prevailed, and that it was not intended to have and did not have any party purpose.

Gen. Taylor and his staff and Gen. Cushing and his aid decamp are to start on a little excursion to-morrow morning to Arista’s plantation, about thirty five miles from here. It is a pleasure trip, strictly, I believe, and will only occupy three or four days. An escort of dragoons will accompany the party. As it may not be an uninteresting occurrence I think I shall accept an invitation, to make one of the party, so for the present adios senores.

J.E.D.

[NO]

August 3, 1847, RW47v24n62p4c1 Trist and DeRussy

The Mexican News

It will be a subject of congratulation to our readers, of all descriptions, that at last there is a prospect of peace. – They will find the details in the news which we publish from the New Orleans Picayune in another column. We know not what terms Mr. Trist, on the part of our Government, may propose, nor what concessions the enemy will be willing to make. Yet, tired as both parties evidently must be of the protracted war, a war full of disasters to Mexico, and thus far productive to us of nothing but barren laurels won at a great expense of blood, suffering and money, we should conceive it not very difficult to settle such preliminaries as would be acceptable to both.

The gallant conduct of Col. De Russy and his little band seems to meet with general admiration. We regard it as far from being the least brilliant feat of the war. Col. De R. is another of those “Mexican Whigs,” who after a very peculiar fashion have on so many occasions of late given “aid and comfort” to the enemy.

[NO]

August 3, 1847, RW47v24n62p4c2 From Army of Talyor

From Gen. Taylor’s Camp.

The N.O. Picayune has received the Matamoros Flag on the 17th instant, three days later than any it had before received. A letter is alluded to as not having come to hand containing an account of a splendid fourth of July dinner, at Monterrey, at which Old Zac being toasted in connexion with the presidency, made a speech which is said to have elicited great enthusiasm. It was said to be in the same spirit with his letters already published, the General saying that it he consented to allow his name to be used, it must be at the call of the country. A report of the speech was made by the correspondent of the Picayune, and will be published as soon as it comes to hand.
Gen. Taylor made an excursion to Arista’s hacienda, Mamalequi on the 7th, a full account of which is given in a letter from the Picayune’s correspondent. Gen. Cushing and his aid accompanied the party, which was escorted by a dozen dragoons. The following account is given of the hacienda:

"Arista’s hacienda is situated upon or near the Rio Pecacho, and at the foot of a spur of the Sierra, in a north easterly direction from Monterrey, about twelve miles from Salinas, and from a distance has quite the appearance of a baronial estate. His plantation is a very extensive one, comprising fourteen square leagues; but miles of it are useless, low chaparral, only relieved by the tall Spanish bayonet plant, which bristles up in every direction. Arista purchased the place about four years ago from a lady residing in the city of Mexico for $35,000, and has since expended about $40,000 in improving it. There is a very fine sugar and saw mill upon it, the motive power of which is water of course. The dam across the river forming the mill–pond is a very fine solid piece of mason work, and was estimated in the bill sale at $14,000. The state is managed by an administrator, who has under him an overseer. – There about ninety men and boys, peons, upon the place, and as many women and girls, all of whom are fixtures for life, as are all peons in ninety nine cases out of a hundred, and quite as bad off as slaves in your section of the country –worse even, as when they become past work their landlord (?) is not compelled to support them, and this duty devolving upon their relative, serves to bind them the firmer."

The correspondent thinks Arista does not find farming quite so profitable as arms, the state, according to the Administrator yielding little or nothing. The nominal wages of the peons (from two to ten dollars a month, out of which they are compelled to purchase every article of food clothing, and other necessaries of life,) being insufficient to support theirs, they are always in debt to the landlord, and as he is allowed a lien on their persons for payment, they slavery is as real as that of our negroes. Two crops of corn are raised, and twenty four fanegas are planted. The yield is an hundred fold! The bean crops is 800 fanegas 2200 lbs. There about 1000 head of cattle and a few sheep. A beef is killed every day; of course, few are sold off. Not more than 40 arobas (1000 lbs.) of sugar is raised.

The Administrator came out to meet Gen. Taylor. –The residence of Arista is spacious, very strongly built of sun–dried brick, with walls three feet thick, perced with loop–holes for musketry, &c. In the evening, the party, by the invitation of the Administrador, attended a fandango on the state. About sixty females were present, as brown as berries, and as ugly as sin. Some national dances, accompanied by wild and discordant singing and resembling the negro–dances of the South, were given, followed by waltzes and quadrilles, the music consisting of a guitar and two violins. The Administrador had received a letter from Arista, purely on business, dated Mexico, 16th June.

The next day the general and suite left for Villa Real, owned by a wealthy Mexican, Senor Don Jose Maria del Villa Real, who met them en route, and gave them a hearty welcome. Their entertainment here is highly lauded. As soon as they had gotten under his roof, the host had a cart load of melons (water and musk) and a bushel basket of ripe figs brought in for them. The Senor insisted, though it was early in the day, that the party should take “a little refreshment.” The little refreshment consisted of seven courses of meat and fowl, well cooked, served up on a waiter in massive silver dishes, the garniture of the table consisting of an enormous quantity of plate, of the richest description. While at Mamalequi, the alcalde of a small town applied to the General for a force to capture a band of robbers, headed by Mucho Martini, a one armed robber, who had committed many outrages, but the request was declined. The party arrived at Cam taylor the same day, where the correspondent learned that a private of the Massachusetts Regiment had been killed by robbers near Marin.

Gen Taylor will return to the U. States in November. He is said to have written to the War Department, to the effect that if he is to remain at Monterrey he has men enough and could even spare a regiment; but if he is to advance to San Luis, he require 10,000 men. There was a splendid review at Gen. Wool’s camp on the 4th –The discipline of the troops of 25 Illinoians from Alabama, is in the vicinity of Matamoros. Col. Gorman’s regiment (4th Indiana) had reached the Brazos, with regiments under Hardin and Bissell. High praise this, and just, not doubt. Captain M’Gee’s company of mounted men Virginia and North Carolina Regiments is spoken of in high terms. It is said to be quite equal to that of the Illinois San Luis, he require 10,000 men. There was a splendid review at Gen. Wool’s camp on the 4th –The discipline of the
August 3, 1847, RW47v24n62p4c4 Important from Vera Cruz and Tampico

[From the N.O Picayune, Extra July 20

Arrival of the Steamship New Orleans

Important from Vera Cruz and Tampico.

The steamship New Orleans, Capt. Auld, arrived at an early hour this morning from Vera Cruz, via Tampico and the Brazos. Her latest dates from Vera Cruz are to the 17th inst.

Her news is very important. First of all we give Capt. Alud's report, by which it will be seen that he left Vera Cruz for this port as early as the 14th and then returned thither, going no further than Tampico.

Report of the U.S. Steamship New Orleans, Edward Auld, commander, from Vera Cruz, via Tampico and Brazos:

On her departure from Vera Cruz on the morning of the 14th inst. Gen Pierce with his command of detachments, from the 3d Dragoons, 4th Artillery, 3d Infantry and the 7th, 8th, 9th, and 14th Infantry, a detachment of voltiguers and a large detachment of marines, amounting 2500 men and 150 wagons, had taken up their line of march towards Puebla.

We arrived in Tampico on the morning of the 15th inst. at 8 o'clock. Col. Gaines informed us the two hundred American prisoners who had been released from the city of Mexico had been ordered down to Tampico and recaptured by Gen. Garay at or near Huejutla, about ninety or one hundred miles up the river, and Col. DeRussy, with detachments of Louisiana volunteers, parts of Capt. Wyse's company of artillery and Capt. Boyd's (formerly of the Baltimore battalion) company of infantry, amounting to 115 or 120 men and officers; had left there by the way of the river on the steamers Undine and Mary Summers, on the morning of the 8th inst., for the purpose of releasing the American prisoners. They had landed sixty mile above unmolested, and the two steamers had returned to the city. At 2 o'clock P.M. an express arrived from Col. DeRussy stating they had been permitted to march up unmolested until they got in a narrow pass near Huejutla, where they were surrounded by twelve or fourteen hundred Mexicans under Gen. Garay. They had suffered considerable loss, but by the assistance of Capt. Wyse's artillery they had cut their way out and returned towards the river and wanted assistance. Col. Gates despatched the New Orleans back to Vera Cruz with a requisition on Col. Wilson for four companies of infantry, and also the steamers Undine and Mary Summers up the river with 150 men to the relief of Col. DeRussy. The New Orleans arrived at Vera Cruz on the 16th at 2 o'clock P.M., when we found the city in a great excitement.

Gen. Pierce had marched out and encamped about ten miles form the city, when the scouts or out guards came in and reported a large force of Mexicans at the National Bridge and marching toward the city. Everything was got ready for an attack. The shipping was removed from between the city and the castle. Gen. Pierce came in and took a reinforcement of seven hundred men making in all thirty two hundred. In consequence of the late difficulty the requisition of Col. Gates on Gov. Wilson could not be complied with. We received on board twenty-five marines from the U.S. sloop Saratoga, and on the morning of the 17th at 7 o'clock sailed for Tampico, at which time Gen. Pierce had marched out to meet the enemy. At 7 o'clock on the 18th inst. we arrived at Tampico, and heard that two detachments had returned; and the result, as near as we could ascertain, was as follows:

The detachment had marched up towards their place of destination, unmolested, until, they came in a narrow pass – several miles from Huejutla, when they were surrounded by 1200 or 1400 Mexicans, who cominenced a heavy fire on them from all directions. Capt. Wyse got his piece of artillery to bear on them, after giving them six or eight rounds of grape, which cut lanes through their lines, they gave away and fled through the chaparral, on each side of the road. This was in the morning of the 12th. They continued lightening their way back towards the river, at intervals, until the morning of the 16th inst., when they were released by the reinforcement of 150 men sent by Col. Gota. They returned to the city late on night of the 16th inst, with a loss of twenty killed, ten wounded and two missing, and fifteen or twenty horses and sixty pack mules. I regret to state that Capt. Boyd was the first who fell with three ball through his body. Also, his 1st lieutenant fell mortally wounded, and was left dying on the field. Col. De Russy had several balls through his clothes. Capt. Wyse had three horses shot from under him. The Mexican loss, by report of a Mexican was 150 killed and wounded. Their general fled and left the charges to the second in command. –The names of the officers who accompanied Col. De Russy are not recollected.

Lieut. Whipple, acting adjutant of the 9 h Infantry, was assaulted by a small party of guerrillas on the 10th inst., when returning from the cemetery, within four hundred yards of the walls of the city of Vera Cruz. They were pursued by the Americans who could not overtake them. The chaparral has been searched for miles around but his body could not be found.

Capt. William Duff, of the 3d of Dragoons, died of vomito at Vera Cruz, on the afternoon of the 16th inst.

The New Orleans sailed from Vera Cruz on the 17th inst. arrived at Tampico on the morning of the 18th, took in 1100 barrels of coal, 1000 gallons of water, and sailed on the same day at 6, P.M., arrived at the Brazos at 2, P.M., on the 19th; sailed for this port at 6, P.M., and arrived in the South West Pass at 3, P.M., on the 21st, making the passage from Brazos in 45 hours.

August 3, 1847, RW47v24n62p4c4 Colonel DeRussy

We give another report of Col. De Russy’s expedition from our own correspondent:

[Correspondence of the Picayune]

Tampico, July 18, 1847.

Dear Pic. –The expedition under Col. De Russy returned here on the 16th inst. at 9 P.M. John the express arrived here on the morning of the 15th. Col. Gates immediately ordered Lieut. Col. Marks, of La. to take command of the three companies of the 11th U.S. Infantry and a detachment of 3d Artillery with two field pieces and proceed at once to reinforce Col. De Russy. Col. M. with his command embarked on the Mary Summers at 3 o’clock the next morning. When the express left Col. De Russy he was fifteen miles of that place, his men being utterly exhausted by fatigue and want provision, having but three rounds of artillery cartridge and but a small stock of muskets. He succeeded in making his way, however, to Panuco where he was joined by his reinforcements. At the time of the arrival of the Mary Summers the people of the country were raising en masse armed with cane knives for the purpose of making a rush upon our men while asleep, and fortunate was it that Col. Marks arrived at the moment; every one seems to think that they would have been indiscriminately massacred.

On the night of the 11th inst Col De Russy encamped at Tantayuca, a village some twenty miles distant from Huejutla, where the Americans prisoners were detained. –He resumed his march at 6 o’clock the following morning nine miles to the Rio Calabosa. Capt. Boyd with his company of dragoons, being in the advance, was fired at immediately upon the bank of that river, the enemy lying in ambuscade in the chaparral, (the enemy estimated variously from 500 to 3000.) Captain B. charged across the stream, but was not supported by his men, Lieut. Tannyhill and five men only crossing with him. Finding the fire of the enemy too severe he started back to his command, and was about midway in the stream when he was struck by a musket ball in the body, and immediately afterwards two shots struck him in the head, killing him it is supposed instantly.

Lieut. Tannyhill at the same time was mortally wounded, two musket balls taking effect in his thigh. The men immediately fled back to the main party, as the Mexicans commenced firing on this side of the river from every direction. The colonel on hearing the firing had immediately advanced the main body to support of Boyd, and not knowing the nature of the ambuscade, the pack mules with all his provisions fell into the bands of the enemy, who were-quite numerous in his rear as in his front.

A retreat now became actually necessary, and was made fighting every foot of ground until we reached Tantayuca again. Here he entrenched himself and remained until midnight, when he started in the direction of Pamecho. –Daylight brought the enemy again, and until his arrival at that place he was continually harassed by the enemy.

Lieut. Tannyhill was left at Tantayuca, being unable to be carried any further. No hopes are entertained that he survived twelve hours.

The New Orleans is ringing its bell. I will give you the official report when published.

Yours in haste,

B.A.
From Vera Cruz the news are less satisfactory than we could wish. On the 13th, our correspondent writes that two expresses had arrived from Puebla. The news had not fully transpired, but the report had got into circulation that the Mexican Government had sent three commissioners to San Martin Tesmelucan, about nine leagues from Puebla, to meet Mr. Trist and hear through him the terms offered by the President. This was but a rumor, in which we place little confidence.

Our correspondent writes on the 16th from Vera Cruz that an express from Gen. Scott (a Mexican) while on his way from Puebla to Vera Cruz was murdered near Jalapa. The guerrillas report that he fought desperately, and before he fell killed two of their number. Our own express rider arrived at Vera Cruz on the morning of the 16th inst without his letter and severely wounded. He came by the route of Orizaba, and when six leagues from that place he was attacked by five guerrilleros and captured. They took from him his letters and inflicted seven severe wounds upon him with a poniard and left him for dead. Had he not played possum a little he thinks they would certainly have finished him. After they had left him he found a business letter to our agents in Vera Cruz torn into fragments, near him. He gathered up most of the pieces and took them safe to Vera Cruz. Our correspondent writes that after putting the pieces together as well as he could he could only make out the following items:

Gen. Pillow's division arrived at Puebla on the 8th all well. The American army would march on to the city of Mexico to a certainty if peace were not soon made. [We never supposed there was any doubt about this.] The postscript dated the 11th inst, says that place was the order of the day. The writer placed no faith in the prospect; he consider that Santa Anna's sole object was to gain time, a principle of general policy with the Mexicans, especially with the great man.

Our correspondent writes that a large part of the command of Gen. Pierce left on 15th. The general was expected to get off the evening of the 16th. Our letters said nothing about the force collected at the National Bridge to oppose our advance. Gen. Pierce had been ill but had recovered from his (unintelligible).

The Governor of Vera Cruz had received such information (unintelligible) to suppose an attack would be made upon the city as soon as Gen. Pierce left, and precautions had been taken to defend the place. General orders were issued for every citizen to enroll himself under Capt. Tibbits and hold himself in readiness for an emergency.

Lieut. J. L. Parker, of the navy, died on the 12th inst. on board the steam-frigate Mississippi. Lieut. Parker was saved from the Somers, was severely wounded at Tuspan, was at the capture of Tabasco and had been amongst the foremost in almost every enterprise undertaken by the navy. He was noble, brave and generous, and beloved by all who knew him.

We copy the following from the Sun of Anahuac of the 13th inst. it is not so late as the advices subsequently received, but contains some of the rumors afloat:

A private express arrived here night before last from Puebla, bringing interesting intelligence from that place, from Mexico and from Gens. Cadwallader and Pillow’s trains.

The express left Puebla on the 3d inst., and brought private letters dated the same day.

News have been received the day previous from Mexico, that commissioners had been appointed by the Mexican Government to confer with Mr. Trist at San Martin Tesmeluoan, eight leagues from Puebla, and it was supposed they would meet him on the 4th of July.

The express rider met with Gens Cadwallader and Pillow and their respective commands at Perote. They had been attacked at La Hoya and had completely route the enemy, having sustained but little loss. No property was lost, and both trains had arrived in Perote; which place, a correspondent says, they were to leave on the 9th inst.

We have seen a letter dated Mexico, July 2d. The writer says that he does not doubt that a treaty of peace would be concluded at once by the commissioners. He also says that the peace treaty has become so considerable in the capital that he thinks that Santa Anna, (who is always on the side of the strongest,) will soon pronounce himself in favor of peace.

A letter from Puebla, states that there had been some sickness among our troops. We do not give our readers the whole contents of this letter because it is full of rumors which had not been realized at the latest dates.

The Mexicans were still fortifying the city of Mexico, but the means of the Government are so limited, that we do not doubt that it will not be more than a day’s work for Gen. Scott to demolish, in case they should show resistance.
The letter of this gentleman to the Philadelphia Committee (unintelligible) of Invitation, having become a subject of animadversion in a late number of the Enquirer, he transmitted to the editors of that paper the following note, which was published on Tuesday morning last:

To the Editors of the Enquirer:

Richmond, July 29, 1847.

I submit to daily misconstructions and misrepresentation of my political view without complaint or correction, because I take it for granted that time will prove the best corrective to all errors and misstatements that have been, or may be, made respecting me. There is a statement of fact, and not of construction, however, in your paper of this morning, of a nature that if I were to permit it to pass in silence would be taken by your readers as acknowledgement of its truth. The statement I refer to is as follows:

"It will be also seen that Messrs. Wilson and Tuck, along with Messrs. Botts and Corwin, are pledged to vote against giving a dollar for the prosecution of the war."

Will you be so obliging as to state when, where and how I stand pledged to any such course? for if it can be shown that in my public speeches, or writings or private conversations, I have given any such pledge that I have not intended to fulfill, and that I have expressed a sentiment I never entertained. On the contrary, I have uniformly said, that whilst I thought the war ought to be brought to a close, by withdrawing our troops to the boundary line between Texas and Mexico, yet, while the army continued in Mexico, they were entitled to the protection of government and that they must be sustained; and I would therefore give all the men and money asked for necessary for that purpose. You surely, however, have not made this grave assertion without some authority, and you will oblige me by publishing it in connection with this note.

Respectfully JNO. M. Botts.

The following paragraph in the editorial comments of the Enquirer, explains the process by which the conclusion that Mr. B. stood on the same ground with Mr. Corwin is arrived at:

"But to the particular specification complained of by Mr. Botts. We said last Thursday, that "Messrs. Wilson and Tuck (of the New Hampshire) along with Messrs. Botts and Corwin, are pledge to vote against giving a dollar for the prosecution of the war." Mr. Botts denies the position and calls upon us for our authority. We meet the issue and refer him to his own letter to Philadelphia, which has been made so famous by its many bold assertions and false arguments. The particular passage of that letter we have cited over and over again. After denouncing the war was instigated and provoked from a meretricious lust of conquest, and acquisitions of our neighbor's goods, by men spoiled and besotted with place and power, Mr. Botts proceeds to avow his own opinion as to the proper means to "stay the hand of mischief." In his own language "It is to disclaim promptly all purpose and intention to take one foot of Mexican soil on any terms, either by conquest or negotiation; to ascertain the true boundary line of the beautiful but unfortunate Texas, withdraw our troops to that line, and defend it if assailed, (which would never be attempted) and thus bring the war at once to a speedy and honorable termination. Surely, neither the honor of the nation, nor the glory of our arms, calls for the prosecution of an offensive war."

Comment. –The Enquirer professes great admiration of and gratitude to, Gen. Taylor. It will not, of course, the willing to have him set down in the same category with (unintelligible) to whom it is wont to speak of as "moral traitor." The following paragraph fro his letter to Gen. Gaines, already widely known, may be compared by the reader with these sentiments of Mr. Boots. In order that the comparison may be the more easily made, we place them in parallel columns.

Mr. Botts. –(Unintelligible) promptly all purpose to take one foot of Mexican soil on any terms, either by conquest or negotiation; to ascertain the true boundary line of the beautiful but unfortunate Texas, withdraw our troops to that (unintelligible) and defend it, if assailed which would never be attempted,) and thus bring the war at once to a speedy and honorable termination. Surely, neither the honor of the Nation, nor the glory of (unintelligible), calls for the prosecution of an offensive war."

Gen. Taylor.–"If we are (in the language of Mr. Polk and Gen. Scott) under the necessity of 'conquering a peace,' – we must go to Vera Cruz, take that place, and then march on the city of Mexico. To do so in any other direction, I consider out of question. But, admitting that we conquer a peace by doing so, –say, at the end of the next twelve months– will the amount of blood and treasure, which must be expended in doing so, be compensated by the same? I think not, –especially, if the country we subdue is to be given up; and I imagine there but, few individuals in our country who think of annexing Mexico to the United States.

I do not intend to carry on my operation (as previously stated) beyond Saltillo, –deeming it next to impracticable to do so. It then becomes a question as to what is best to be done– It seems to me the most judicious course to be pursued on our part; would be to take possession, at once, of the line we would accept by negotiation, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, and occupy the same, or keep what we already have possession of."
That Mr. Boots, in common with the Whig party, and with many (aye, very many) too who formerly belonged to the Locofoco party, is opposed to this principle, we very well know. But we know, likewise, and every man who has conversed with him on the subject knows, that he always held it to be the solemn duty of Congress to sustain the Army, since it is already there, by every possible reinforcement both of men and money. He and the Whig party would have prevented the war if it had been in their power; but since that is now impossible, they would sustain it to the end, whatever that ends may be. If it be possible to bring it to a close in the manner proposed, they are in favor of doing so. If, on the contrary, their wishes be overruled, they are in favor of furnishing all necessary supplies render our forces efficient, and prevent them from suffering more than can be avoided. We think we have truly stated the position of Mr. B and the Whig Party.

It should be unknown to the Enquirer, that Mr. B. has already given practical proof that his sentiments are such as they are here represented. He has already lost in the service one gallant son, in the bloom of youth, who, but for this war, might have been still alive to cheer the declining years of his father, when he shall be sinking in the down (unintelligible) march of life. Nothing would have been easier than for him to have kept back that son from his country’s service. But he heard her voice, and he gave him up at her call, deprecating all the time, the measures from which had originated the necessity.

Our readers will see, at once, that the position of Mr. Boots is nearly identical with that of Gen. Taylor.

But if it be true that any man who may oppose this war is guilty of “moral treason,” what can be said of those who oppose the last? We presume that not even Locofoism itself will draw a comparison in favor of this war, with that in which we contended for our very independence –which is, in fact, called “the second war of independence” by Charles J. Ingersoll, himself a rabid Locofoco, and an unwavering supporter of the present Executive. And if the editor or the speaker who shall venture to question the property or morality of this war, be, in very truth, a “moral traitor,” what shall we say of him who not only denounced that, but proclaimed James Madison the “degenerate successor of Washington,” and stigmatized the peace as “bad and disgraceful?” Can such a man, you will ask, yet venture to show himself, with the evidence of “moral treason” so palpably staring him in the face?

The curious reader will no doubt, enquire, who is this “moral traitor?” Is it Clay, or Webster or Adams? No reader, it is none of these. It is a man filling the second office in this Nation. It is JAMES BUCHANAN, Mr. Polk’s PATENT DEMOCRATIC STATES RIGHT SECRETARY OF STATE.

In a speech delivered at Lancaster, Pa before the Washington Association, on the 4th day of July, 1815, that gentleman, after denouncing the Republican party of 1789, in the most unmeasured terms, and assailing the doctrine of the State rights as the invention of the Demagogues, who wished to keep the country divided into small States for their own advantage, because they could not hope to rise on so large a theatre as the Union presented, speaks as follows of the war then just concluded:

“Time will not allow me to enumerate all the other wild and wicked projects of the Democratic Administration. Suffice it to say, that after they had deprived us of the means of defence, by destroying our navy disbanding our army;
after they had taken away from us the power of re-creating them, by ruining commerce, the great source of our national and individual wealth; after they had, by refusing the Bank of the United States a continuation of their character, embarrassed the financial concerns of the Government, and withdrawn the only universal paper medium of the country from circulation; after the people had become accustomed to, and, of course, unwilling to bear taxation, and without money in the Treasury, they rashly plunged us not a war with a nation more able to do us injury than any other in the world. What was the dreadful necessity for this desperate measure? Was our country invaded? No. Was it to protect our little remaining commerce from the injuries it sustained by the orders in Council? No. Commerce was not such a favorite, and the merchants wished for no war account. Besides, if the existence of the orders in council had been its true cause, after their repel our country would have accepted the olive branch which was offered by England. What then was the cause? The one for which we professed to draw the sword, and risk our all, was to determine an abstract question of the law of the nations, concerning which, an opinion different from that of our administration was held by all Europe, --to decide whether a man can expatriate himself or not. In the decision of this questions our administration pretended to feel a deep interest. The greater part of those foreigners who would be affected by it, had long been warmest friends. They had been one of the great means to elevating the present ruling party, and it would have been ungrateful for that party to have abandoned them.

"Superficial observers may suppose this to have been the real source of the war; but whoever will carefully and impartially examine the history of our country will find its true origin to have been far different. It took its rise from the over weaning partiality which the Democratic Party have uniformly shown for France, and the consequent hatred which they felt against her great adversary, England. To keep this foreign feeling alive has been the labor of their leaders for more than twenty years, for it has been one of the principal causes of introducing and continuing them in power. Immediately before war, this foreign influence had completely embodied itself with every political feeling of a majority of people, particularly in the West. Its voice was heard so loud at the seat of government, that the President was obliged either to yield to its dictates, or retire from office. The choice in this alternative was easily made by a man, who preferred his private interest to the public good. We were therefore hurried into the war utterly unprepared.

"What has been its result? Exactly what every reasonable man expected at its commencement. We declared our intention of conquering Canada; whether for the purpose of annexing it to the United States, or of compelling our enemy to yield the doctrine of impressment, is immaterial to the present question. Instead of conquering it, we have ourselves invaded in every quarter, and the best blood of the country has streamed in defence of own soil. The very capitol of the United States, the lofty temple of liberty, which was reared and consecrated by Washington, has been abandoned to its fate by his DEGENERATE successor, who ought to have shed his last drop of blood in its defence.

After the Administration had entered upon the war, instead of coming forward with manly confidence, and taxing the people for its support, they basely shrunk from their duty, in order to maintain their popularity, and adopted the ruinous system of carrying on the contest by borrowing money. What were the effects of this policy? Does not every man in the country know, was it even disguised by the Administration, that the United States would, in a short time, have become bankrupt, had not peace been concluded? Thanks then to heaven, that we have obtained a peace, BAD AND DISGRACEFUL AS IT IS; other wise, the beautiful structure of the Federal Government, supported by the same feeble hands, might have sunk, like the capitol, into ruins.

"Instead of exempting seamen sailing under our flag from impressments by the war, we have altogether relinquished that principle; because it is a well established truth in the law of the nations, that if war be waged by one country against another for a specified claim, and the treaty which terminates the contest, is silent upon that subject, it is forever abandoned. Thus the Government have at last yielded the very point for the maintenance of which they professed to go war, after having expended nearly $200,000,000.

"We have not only not obtained by the war anything which we are taught to expect, but we have lost many valuable privileges. All the numerous rights and advantages guaranteed to by Jay’s treaty have been relinquished, nay, we have not only compelled to conclude a treaty which does not contain any solitary stipulation in our favor, except that there should be peace, but which unsettles the boundaries of our country, and leaves to the decision of commissioners whether we shall longer retain a part of our own territory, which we have held in quiet possession for more than 20 years.”

[NO]

August 6, 1847, RW47v24n63p1c3 Officers at Camargo

[From the N.O Picayune.]

The Officers at Camargo

We do not feel at liberty to deny the use of our columns to an officer who in the following letter vindicates the character of the service, which suffers under the aspersions cast upon those members of it who happen to be stationed at Camargo or on that line:

Camargo, July 13, 1847.

Gentlemen –In a newspaper recently started in your city and called, I believe, the National, there appeared on the 26th ult. a letter from this town dated June 9th, 1847, full of false statements of a nature most injurious to the character of many officers on this line –the writer going so far as even to single out one of these objects of his malignity by name. And not only have these been published to a world which, ignorant of the truth and unacquainted with the person thus assailed would be already sufficiently disposed to believe in the verity of the charges alleged against them, but they have been published, moreover, with the endorsement of the editor of this paper, since has taken the trouble to call his reader’s special attention to them by a long editorial encomium on their author. Now this being so, justice to an energetic and deserving officer, whose whole crime consists in the honest execution of an order imposed upon him by his superior, demands that these statements should meet with that flat and emphatic contradiction due to their egregious falsity. And, for this reason, I would respectfully beg for the use of a small space in the columns of the Picayune.

Taking these charges, then, in the order in which they occur, I, in the first place, deny that any merchant “has been prohibited from selling his goods, except at wholesale, under penalty of incarceration, street–sweeping, ball and chain, and finally transportation.” The only sales prohibited here have been those of liquors and of articles contraband of war; the later under the general authority of the law of the nations, the former by Gen. Taylor particular command. And this charge is therefore utterly false.

The story of “secret partnership between officers and their favorites, to whom they give the exclusive privilege of vending merchandise ad libitum, whom they protect and furnish with public transportation, together with every other facility, to the exclusion of all others,” is equally false, and the writer can point to no instance of it.

In the next place, the assertion that “Capt. Hunt, 4th Artillery, commanding Camargo, is a partner of any house enjoying such privileges” is another falsehood; and that “every one in Camargo believe this,” is certainly news to me who live here. It is false that “he has a favorite house,” false that “he dresses up his own men as citizens, others as Mexicans, and sends them spying and eaves–dropping about tents and stores, telling them to beg for a glass of wine, ale or cider, that they may impeach the giver.

The Capt. Hunt “broke into a ware–house here upon information that there was liquor to be found in it, and took thence three barrels of whiskey, and “put one of the partners in prison for a few hours,” is true; such was his duty, which admitted of no discrimination between “respectable merchants” and poor devils of teamsters or others, when engaged in the same prohibited traffic. Thus march, I say is true; all the rest of the paragraph is wholly false.

Finally, Capt. Hunt is a graduate of West Point, has served faithfully and well in the army for eighteen years, was in the Black Hwak, the Creek war, the Florida war, and will again do his duty, whenever the opportunity is afforded him, in this war against Mexico. He has always borne a high character, both as an officer and a man of honor, and those who know him will surely have felt only indignation and contempt on reading the scurrilous article in which it was sought to defame him, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant.

Julius P. Gareschi, 1st Lt. 4th Art’y.

[NO]

August 6, 1847, RW47v24n63p1c3 Spanish Gossip

Spanish Gossip.

In La Patria of Sunday last we find the latest invention of the day in the space of a letter from Havana, dated the 16th inst. This letter pretends that a report is current at Havana, especially in commercial circles, that the three millions voted by Congress for the use of the President in making a treaty are employed in subserving influential personages in Mexico. This reporter of the pretended little tattle of Havana has been unable to learn the names of the Mexicans bought by the money of the “Yankees,” but has heard the name of Arista, Ampudia, Almonte, Canalizo and Rejon mentioned, and other whom he does not recollect. The editors of the Patria here intervene to screen some of the individuals mentioned by declaring that they “do not believe that all these names deserve to be classed among those sold!” The letter writer goes further and insinuates that others have been tampered with, mentioning that he has heard that Basadre, Gomez de la Cortina, Lombardini and two or three more proved incorruptible.

What a precious mass of folly have we here! The editors of La Patria in introducing the letter to their readers disclaim giving credence to its infamous revelations, but by their intervention to save some of the Mexicans enumerated form the suspicions attached to them, they show themselves not totally incredulous. Passing by the preposterous nature of the charges thus brought against the United States Government, which no citizen will credit for an instant, however,, deep–rooted his opposition to the Administration, what a state of political ethics does this letter reveal among our Havana and Mexican neighbors, who may reasonably be supposed to know something of each others moral qualities.

Our readers may be curious to know how these Spaniards pretend that the purchase of these broken down Mexican generals is to be made available. “They are to use all their influence to bring about a peace, or at least see that the war is so conducted that the Americans, if they do not come therefrom” –[bien librados.] One cannot but be struck by the fatuity imputed to the Americans in buying up such rank of cowards as Ampudia and Canalizo, and two Mexicans like Arista and Almonte, both in complete disgrace at home and in no condition at present to exercise
August 6, 1847, RW47v24n63p1c4 A Battle

Highly Important Intelligence

A battle.

[Correspondence of the Commercial Times.]

Tampico, (Mexico,) July 18, 1847.

Gentlemen: Considerable excitement has existed in this city for the past two weeks, in relation to the detention by General Garay, at the town of Guautla (pronounced Wahoutla) 140 miles from here, of one hundred and eighty Americans, who were recently liberated in the city of Mexico, and sent towards this city with a small escort. They are those who were taken last February at Encarnacion. —The renowned General Garay, in true Mexican style, pretended that they passports were not correct, and that he would be under the necessity of detaining them at Guautla, until he could hear from his Government.

Six of them made their escape, and arrived in safety in this city, and immediately communicated the above facts to our Governor, Col. Gates.

An expedition was fitted out on the 8th instant (unintelligible) of Colonel Gates, and the command of it given to Colonel De Russy, of the Louisiana regiment. This expedition consisted of one hundred and twenty men, and (unintelligible) pound field piece —forty men third artillery (unintelligible) by Capt. Wyse —forty dragoons, mounted on (unintelligible) musting horses, and commanded by Capt. Boyd and Lieutenant Tannehill, late of the Baltimore battalion —and forty mounted men from Louisiana regiment, commanded by Captains Mace and Seguine —Lieutenants Linderburger, Campbell and Heimberger, of the Louisiana regiment, accompanied the expedition, to act in such capacities as might be required.

Their march for four days was uninterrupted, passing through the town of Puebla–Viejo, Tampico–Alto, Ozuania and Tantoyuca, in all of which the people made professions of friendship, and had got within seven miles of Guautla, eight miles, beyond the last mentioned town, and one mile from Rio Calabasas. Here the Col. Met an Indian, who informed him that a large force of Mexicans, under the command of Garay, had heard of his approach, and was in ambush on both sides of the river. Col. De Russy immediately despatched Lieut. Lidenburger, acting Adjutant, with an order to halt the column (advance guard) under command of Capt. Boyd. The Captain had halted at the river for the purpose of watering his horses, and while in that act, he received a destructive fire from an unseen enemy. As I said before, the horses were all mustangs, and at the report of the musketry they became unmanageable, threw most of the riders, and created great confusion. Capt. Boyd dashed across the river, followed by his Lieutenant and six men. In crossing the Captain was shot in the head, and of course died on reaching the opposite shore. Three of the men were also killed. All this took place before Lt. Lindenburger reached him. The remainder succeeded in recrossing the river, and joined the main body. Thus fell one of the bravest and finest men that ever lived.

On hearing the report of musketry from the opposite bank of the river, the Mexicans concealed on this side, commenced firing on the main body of the expedition from every side, when Capt. Wyse, came gallantly into action with his field piece, and opened a destructive fire on the enemy, with grape and canister. At the same time, Captains Mace and Seguine charged the enemy on the right and left, in the most spirited manner. The battle now raged with great fury on both sides for one hour, when the Mexicans sounded a retreat, at least that portion of them in front.

The Colonel now discovered a large body of lancers approaching him in the rear, but before he succeeded in getting within reach of them, they capture a portion of the pack mules and then took to their heels.

During the engagement, Lieut. Tannehill was mortally wounded, a ball passing through his thigh and breaking the bone. The six men at the cannon were all severely wounded; three bullets passed through Col. De Russy’s coat, and as many through Capt. Wyse’s. Capt. Mace was struck twice with apent balls, but not hurt.

After the engagement, to the astonishment of all, only one round shot and one charge of canister was left for the gun, when our troops, having fired away the greater part of their ammunition, it was deemed prudent to fall back on Tantayoca, which was accordingly done.

The road from the river Tantayoca lay through a narrow defile, the summits of the mountains nearly hanging over the heads of the men as they passed through it. The deep and precipitous sides were covered with a dense chaparral from base to top. Here the enemy rallied, and concealing themselves from view, poured a destructive fire down upon our gallant little band, which, from the nature of the ground, they were unable to return.
On approaching Tantoyoca, in which they had encamped the previous night, and from which they had started peaceably that morning, our men found, to their surprise, that the plaza, church and streets were crowded with lancers and other troops. They marched up boldly to the enemy, until they got within a few hundred yards of the plaza, when they opened to the right and left, and gave Capt. Wyse an opportunity to discharge his last round shot. It did some execution, killing and wounding some three or four, and also making a tremendous hole in the walls of the church. Col. De Russey, with Capt. Seguine, at the same time made a charge up the street, when the Mexicans, for the second time, took to their heels, returning only a few scattering shots. The lowest estimate I have heard made of the number of Mexicans engaged in this affair was 1000. Some say as many as 2000 and 3000. Our troops now took possession of the town, and encamped on the same ground they had occupied the previous night, (Sunday, the 11th inst.)

A detachment was now sent through that town to search for ammunition, and they succeeded in finding enough to make five rounds of canister, which at this moment was an invaluable prize.

A number of the men, contrary to orders, broke open both stores and houses, and helped themselves to everything valuable they could lay their hands on, and foremost among them were the Mexican muleteers who accompanied the Colonel. They appeared to be told hands at the business.

After our troops encamped, they could see large bodies of the enemy moving to the rear of them for the purpose of cutting off their farther retreat, but both men and horses were so exhausted, that it was determined to remain in their present position for a short time to retreat.

Near dark, Gen. Garay’s aid-camp and a Major of the staff, came near Col. De Russey’s camp with a flag of truce. The Colonel did not allow them to enter his camp, but met them at a short distance outside of it. The Colonel was accompanied by by Capt. Wyse. The aid handed the Colonel a letter. The Colonel told him, in substance, “that it was too dark to read it, and that he had no candles or light, probably he, the aid, could tell him the purport of it.” The aid, (who spoke English fluently) replied, “that it was a summons for an unconditional surrender, as Gen. Garay had sufficient men and means to conquer him, and he wished to spare an effusion of blood.” Col. De Russey immediately returned the letter, unopened, to the aid, and he told the aid to “tell Gen. Garay that the idea of surrender had never entered his mind, and he therefore declined any correspondence on that subject” –when the aid and Major, after the usual compliments, retired.

Col. De Russey now ordered camp fires to be made, and all the horses to be unsaddled, and every thing had the appearance, to the Mexicans, of his remaining there all night. In this, however, they were deceived; for the Colonel took up his line of march at 2 o’clock A.M., during one of the heaviest rain storms ever experienced, and passed silently through the city. They took the road for Penuca, passing in a country direction to the one he came by, and on which Garay was encamped, and was ten miles from Tantayoca when daylight overtook him.

At 10 o’clock A.M., the lancers and guerillas again came in sight, and hung in the rear of the detachment all day, spearing and shooting down, without mercy, such unfortunate persons as straggled off from the main body. On one occasion, a large body of lancers collected in a group, when Capt. Wyse gave them a salute with a charge of canister, and made great havoc among both horses and riders, killing and wounding about 30 men, and from that time they kept at a respectful distance.

The Mexicans followed our little detachment for two days, occasionally exchanging a few shots. Lieut. Heimberger was shot in the arm during the retreat the first day. When Col. De Russey got within 15 miles of Penuca, he dispatched Mr. Geo Lefler, an old citizen of this place, to Col. Gates, giving him an account of his position, and informing him of their being entirely out of ammunition, and a large body of the enemy in his rear.

Col. Gates immediately despatched Lieut. Col. Marks to his relief with 160 men, two pieces of cannon, and plenty of ammunition. Lieut. Col. Marks went to Penuca with his command per steamboat, where he met Col. De Russey and his command, completely tired out, and almost without a cartridge. As there was an attack anticipated, the following night, on this place, both parties returned.

Thus ended one of the most brilliant affairs, for the numbers engaged in it, (terminating with a masterly retreat,) which has taken place during this war. Col. De Russey was every where in the hottest of the fight, and pointed his solitary gun several times, while bullets were falling around him as thick as hail.

P.S. –I have this moment learned that official reports have been received in town, that the number of Mexican engaged in the late battle was 1850. So you may judge for yourselves, of the gallant defence of 120 men against such odds. I had nearly forgotten to mention that we lost thirty horses killed in the battle.

Yours in haste,

P.

[NO]
Funeral Honors to the Gallant Dead!

The notice given, was unfortunately so short, that the citizens from distant parts of the State, were not able to attend; indeed, we learn that several of the companies belonging to the regiments to which the deceased belonged, were not advised of the day fixed for the ceremonies until it had passed. The intense and almost overpowering heat or the weather, prevented many from attending; but notwithstanding these things, there came together on that day, the largest concourse of people ever assembled in Kentucky.

General Taylor and the Locos

It is amusing to watch the course of Locofocoism relative to this redoubtable champion of our country. When the news of his triumphant success at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma reached the United States, the politics of the conqueror became immediately a subject of most eager enquiry. It was soon found that he was a Whig --a Clav, Crittenden Whig-- and Locofoism ceased to talk about him as far as possible. Then came Monterrey, and the terms of the capitulation offered a theme for vituperation, which was not to be neglected. Accordingly, every (unintelligible) hero that could wield a pen, entered the arena against old Rough and Ready.

But this did not do for the people. They had taken a far more accurate measure of the man's stature than their rulers, and they know him to be a giant. His name was on every tongue, and his services had sunk deep into every heart. The famous letter to General Gaines, which gave an insight into his true situation and led the people into full view of the difficulties with which he had struggled and ever which he had triumphed, the genuine, unaffected modesty of the man, and his forbearance under provocation that must have severely tried his temper, raised enthusiasm in his favor above fever heat. To throw cold water upon this spirit, the little party leaders in Congress were induced to try their feeble laurels against the iron–cased form of the old hero, and they shivered in their hands up to the very grasp. The Administration was in despair. Its organ did not come out directly, but all that could be done by sly hint and innuendo, was attempted in vain. A bolder game was necessary. Withholding forces and supplies had been tried censure, indirect unmistakable, from the war office, had been tried, almost to an insult had been tried; but it was of no avail– Old Rough could neither be whipped by the Mexicans, nor disgusted by the Secretary of war, nor bullied by Benton, nor forced to resign by Congress. Onward, he kept the even tenor of his way –marching, fighting bivouacking, and conquering. It was important to stop his progress; indeed, it was absolutely necessary to do so. An attempt was made to put Lieut. General Benton over his head, but Congress had too much sense to do that, Locofoco as it was. In the very midst of their machinations, after they had left him without reinforcements, and while they were indulging the consoling reflection that now he must halt in his career, the astounding news but upon the country, that he had not only disobeyed the order to fall back, given by an ignorant Secretary two thousand miles off, but that he had advanced and gained a most unheard victory, over forces five times as numerous as his own! At that very moment his destruction was expected to be heard from, and the President had already begun to say "Shake not your gory backs at me," "thou canst not say I did it."

No, that was the simple truth. No matter what happened, the President was not to blame for the fight at Buena Vista, for he had ordered to fall back. But he was very anxious to come in for a share of the glory, and his followers even talk about the "eminent ability" &c.

After the battle of Buena Vista it was found impossible to restrain public sentiment, which broke through to the trammels of party and flowed irresistible towards General Taylor, Whig though he was. A new plan was then adopted. The democrats made haste to have themselves dubbed Taylor men, and strove to bias the old General's mind by declaring in his favor. But it was no go; and at last, with all the evidence before it, the Washington Union says:

"In no case, nor under any circumstances, will General Taylor agree to, or submit to, any one of the three, circumstances to which we referred –viz: that the Presidential candidate for the Republican party should be a Democrat in his principles –the he should avow his sentiments beforehand –and that he should be nominated by a Democratic Convention."

And again:

"is it to be believed that any of them (the Whigs) would support General Taylor, unless they believe him to be a Whig. Some of them cry him up as a no–party candidate; but, at the same time, they have reasons to them, as they think, that he is a Whig in his principles. The New York Courier, 'the North American,' even the 'Cincinnati Atlas,' &c. &c, affirm their conviction of his Whig principles. Do they not believe that he is a 'Whig –a Clay Whig?' Otherwise, who believes for one moment that they will support him for the Presidential chair?"

Certainly they will not. Spoken like an Oracle for once. In future let Locofocoism keep its hands clear from Gen. Taylor. They can neither rule him off nor steal him.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p1c2 Attack on a train

From the N.O. Picayune, July 30

Further from the Rio Grande.

Successful Attack upon a train.

The schooner Sarah Churchman, Captain Errikson, arrived yesterday from the Brazos, having sailed thence on the 23d inst. By her we have a Matamoros Flag of the 21st inst. –four days later than the number previously received.

The ship Edgar, Capt. Smith, also arrived yesterday from the Brazos, having sailed on the 24th inst. this vessel took out a detachment of two hundred and eighty regulars from New York to the Brazos.

Quite the most interesting news in the Flag is the following in relation to an attack upon a train, which was partially successful:

The last arrival from Camargo brings an account of a recent attack by the Mexicans, supposed to be a detached party of Urrea's troops, upon a train on its way to Monterrey. The wagon train was attended by a small escort, and following in the rear were some sixty or eighty pack mules, freighted with goods belonging to merchants of Matamoros. The train was attacked near Marin, and the assault was direct against the rear, with a view of cutting off the pack mules, in which the Mexicans were completely successful –all the mules with their packs were captured by them. –A considerable booty has thus fallen into their hands –some say about $30,000 worth of dry goods and a quantity of tobacco. The principle loss is sustained by Mr. Tarniver, one of the most respectable merchants of Matamoros, who loses upwards of $25,000 in dry goods, Mr. Kingsbury was the owner of the tobacco.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p1c2 From the Matamoros Flag

The following items are all from the Flag:

Tenth of Infantry. –This regiment left on Monday last in the steamers McKee, Col. Hunt and J E Roberts. They go to Mier, there to remain until called to a field of greater activity by Gen. Taylor as a portion of the detachment under Brig. Gen. Hopping, forming a school of instruction which has been established at place. Lieut. Edward Harte, formerly connected with the press in the United States, has been appointed regimental quartermaster and acting commissary of subsistence by Col. Temple, making the list of the staff officers complete. The regiment has been drilled regularly during its sojourn here, and it has conducted with more property and given less annoyance to citizens than any regiment that has been stationed here. We are sorry to lose them.

Fourth Ohio Volunteers. –This regiment has arrived here and is now encamped on the lake, taking the position recently occupied by the 10th Infantry. They are commanded by Col. Chas. H. Brough, formerly editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer. The other field and staff officers are, Mr. Wernet,of dayton, lieutenant colonel, Wm. B. Young, of Hamilton, major; Lieut. Kessler, adjutant. The Regiment numbers upwards of nine hundred men and is enjoying excellent health –but one death having occurred since its organization. Three companies of the regiment, with its lieutenant colonel and adjutant, are Germans, who have made the United States the country of their adoption.

Ms. M L Fulton, of this place, has shown us several letters from E B Lundy and E Montily, who were mentioned in our last paper as having been taken prisoners near San Carlos, by a party of Mexicans under Caravajal. These letters were dated "La Marina, July 4th," and state that they were taken prisoners on the day previous, by Col. Caravajal, who has treated them with great kindness, and assured them they would be released upon proper evidence being furnished that they were not in the employ of the United States Government. They were awaiting the order of Ge. Urrea, whose headquarters was at Tula. Mr. Lundy has sent a note to the British Consul at this place, stating that he is a Canadian by birth, and has never become a citizen of the United States. We understand from Mr. Fulton that he was engaged in connection with Mr. Lundy in the purchase of mules for the purpose of taking them to Louisiana, and that Mons Montilly and Don Carlos were employed by them to assist in "driving in" mules of ten from the interior, and the party proceeded beyond San Fernando on account of the high price which they were compelled to pay on this side of that town.
We take it back.– Lieut. Simon Doyle, Illinois cavalry sent us a communication denying positively that any lieutenant, or troop of the Illinois cavalry, made any such display of verdancy as we impute to them in our last paper. He says no officer or man of the company ever held such conversation with Col. Fitzpatrick, and furthermore, that on the day we state this conversation took place, (the 15th) no scouting party of his company was ordered out in any direction.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p1c3 News from Vera Cruz

From the N.O. Picayune, July 31

Letter from Vera Cruz.

We are permitted to make an extract from a letter of the latest date from Vera Cruz, written by a gentleman who certainly possesses more than ordinary facilities for getting at authentic news. It shows how meager are the materials of the Vera Cruz editors for forming opinions of the course of events about. The letter is dated:

Vera Cruz, July 22, 1847.

Gen. Pierce, with his brigade, is fairly off at last, with, I am told, some three thousand men – a pretty good force, but not enough, however, to frighten off the guerrillas, who commenced firing on them by the time they were well out of sight of the city. This place is quiet now; all fear of an attack seems to have died off. Pickett was ordered by the quartermaster last Sunday to divide off the quartermaster’s men – there are about five hundred of them in all – into companies of fifty or sixty men each, and select a captain and two lieutenants to each, in order that they might receive arms. This was done, but the officers would not receipt for the arms, and the matter seems to be dropped.

There is no news here from headquarters that I know of, the last from Puebla was up to the 22d ult. It was stated that Gen. Scott would certainly leave there on the 15th of this month for the city of Mexico. It is very difficult to get anything from the interior in an authentic shape; we have nothing but rumors and reports. Everything from Mr. Kendall goes through to his paper, of course, and whatever comes to Col. Wilson or is intended for the government does not transpire here.

The Quartermaster’s Office in a building [the Mexican Treasury Department] which is within a few feet of the waters of the Gulf, and directly fronting the castle. The building is, I suppose, 350 or 400 feet inland, very substantially built of this coral rock, and stucco or cement in and outside. The gateway, or “entrada” and “salida” – which are in large golden letters overhead – gives ingress and egress to the Mole and water and the city. The floors of this building are all of flag marble. The other end of the building is occupied by the Governor and by the collector of duties. The wide steps of the second story are of white marble. The windows are very large and defended by heavy cooper gratings which are, I am told, worth 200 dollars each. There could not be a house placed to be more comfortable than this in a hot climate. The sea breeze blows in the whole day, and frequently so strong that you must have a pound weight on every piece of paper you lie down or it is off. A man can wear clothing in this building all the time with comfort; in fact, if one keeps out of the sun there is no danger of being too warm. In may and the first part of June it was rather hot, but since the middle of the latter month the rain has fallen almost nightly, and the air has been much cooler than before. The quartermaster, Maj. Smith, is very sick, though as yet not considered in danger. I hope he will recover shortly, as he is much liked by all in the department. Captain Plummer, of the First Infantry, is acting at present in his place.

This is probably the most important quartermaster’s post in the campaign, and there is enough business for a half (unintelligible) of them, and yet there has been but one acting quartermaster here since the bombardment, and he of course liable to be sick, as in the present case, and not regularly authorized quartermaster to fill the post.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p1c3 From Tampico

From Tampico.

The U.S. schooner Velasco, Capt. Draker, arrived at this port yesterday from Tampico, whence she sailed on the 22d inst.

Capt. Martin M. Moore, of the 11 Infantry, died on board the Velasco on the 25th inst. of yellow fever. His remains were committed to the sea. Capt. More was from Pennsylvania, we believe.

The verbal news from Tampico is to the effect that the American prisoners at Huejutla have been sent further into the interior of the country.
We have a copy of the Tampico Sentinel of the 18th, but it does not contain a report of the expedition of Col. Russy, although one is promised the following day in a supplement. The fight is termed the battle of Tantenuca in the Sentinel.

This paper says that Tampico is healthier than it has been for years; that most the cases in the hospital arise from exposure and imprudence.

From the ship news of the Sentinel we copy a paragraph, though it may be no late:

The U.S. propeller Washington, Capt. Pratt, at Tampico on the 15th inst., two days from the Brazos, bound to Vera Cruz, reports that on the 13th inst., in lat 23º 15, lon. 96º 18, she spoke the U.S. bomb vessel Hecla ten days from Santander, in distress –her crew on half rations. She would try to get to Vera Cruz; had been expecting to be relieved from blockading the ports for two months; she was ten days in getting thirty miles to the southward. Supplied her with all the provisions that could be appeared.

Also spoke the U. S. sloop of war Germantown, in lat. 23º 40, lon. 27º 30, on a cruise. All well.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p2c1 Investigation of the conduct of the War

Investigation of the conduct of the War and the causes which led to it.

From the very commencement of this war with Mexico, the adherents of Mr. Polk have assumed the astounding position that no enquiry is to be made into its origin—that all investigation calculated to enlighten the people upon this subject is to be entirely stifle—that those who are called on to fight the battles and pay the expenses of the country, have no right to ask what they are fighting and paying for—and that he who shall express any curiosity upon a subject so well adapted to excite it, is no better than a “moral traitor.” It is, it seems, the business of the Executive to know what we are at war for, and his business alone, the duties of the people being confined to the very narrow circuit of seeing that it is successfully waged. –This new doctrine, which might well suit the latitude of Constantinople or St. Petersbug, seems strange enough in a country, (unintelligible) very existence of whose liberty depends upon the vigilance with which its public officers are watched—in which freedom of speech and of thought are among the rights most carefully guarded by the constitution—and where public opinion, only properly made up, when it is fully enlightened, has been held to be the only natural and legitimate basis of all Government.

These startling doctrines have been maintained, in spite of the fact, notorious to all the world, that in no country where Freedom exists can any subject, even the most unimportant, arise, upon which there will not be a contrariety of opinions; and that, of course, unanimity upon one of such magnitude as is implied in the existence and conduct of a war, is a sheer and literal impossibility. The men who formed the Constitution of the United States were well aware of these facts, which the present supporters of the war seem altogether to have overlooked. They knew that in times of trouble, differences of opinion, sometimes pushed to a degree of exaggeration very nearly approximating an open rupture, would unavoidable arise, and yet, that both sides might be perfectly honest, thoroughly loyal, equally zealous for the honor and interest of their common country. They made every possible allowance for the different lights in which the same subject would present itself to minds differently organized; and knowing that in the heat of party strife, those who entertain opposite views are but too apt to regard each other with more bitterness than a foreign enemy, they determined to deprive the strong of all power to proscribe and destroy the weak, unless upon such evidence of hostility to their native land, as it was impossible for the understanding to reject. In this view of the subject, founded on a deep knowledge of history, of man, and of the springs which regulate and control the action, of individuals, and of communities; the definition of treason by the constitution had its rise; a definition which, though founded in common sense, and amply sufficient to secure every object which could be obtained by the multiplication of treason to any extent; however indefinite, has not its like upon the statute book of any nation, even the freest in Europe. The proof of treason must be confined to the "over act;” speeches, writings, publications of every kind, be their nature what they may, are only evidence to prove the intention, where the act has been committed.

That the advocates of this war would most gladly (unintelligible) for the present law of treason one by which they could put a curb upon the tongues of those who oppose it, is evident, enough to all who have observed the course they have pursued since its commencement. A new phrase has been invented, sufficiently significant of the wishes of those who claim its paternity. "Moral treason” is the phrase—a species of offence, of the existence of which there can be no proof—for which the law has provided no punishment—the possibility of which it did not recognize, since it did not define its nature—which is referrible to the secret heart of the accused alone—and for which, since there is no punishment by law, it has been thought proper to substitute one in the shape of slander and detraction. The Revolutionary Government of France invented a description which it denominated incivism and which was wide enough to cover all offences no cognizable by any statutory provision previously in existence. This offence of "moral treason" seems to be precisely of the same nature, its meaning being "the crime of differing with the Executive.” There is some difference in the punishment, however, for which we are well assured that neither Mr. Polk nor those who take their cue from him are in the least to blame. Thy have indeed shown their zeal to the satisfaction of all who may be disposed to doubt, by substituting slander for the (unintelligible), that being the (unintelligible) hunt to which their power at present extends.

We should judge, however, that Democratic opinion was undergoing a change, and that the time was approaching when men might be allowed to investigate the origin and causes of the war, without danger of the "moral" guillotine. Our opinion is founded upon the following extract from an editorial in the Washington Union of Thursday last, upon a work which it says is forthcoming, and which is to be styled "a complete comprehensive history of the war between this country and Mexico."

"It is proper that all Governments and Nations should be seen in their true light by the people who live under their respective laws and constitutions, when engaged in enterprises so important as that which has called our brave and patriotic soldiers to the battle fields of Mexico; and the people of the United States have a peculiar right to see their Government in its true and undisguised position toward a country with which it is engaged in a sanguinary war; or rather, it is the peculiar duty of the people who live under a government like ours, to inquire carefully, (unintelligible) into the circumstances, motives, and principles which control their Government in the prosecution of a war against a foreign country. The incongruity of our institutions with military exploits, and the immediate relation of the American people with the machinery of their Government, make it peculiarly their right and their duty to become acquainted –familiarly acquainted– with the history of the cause and events which bring their country into belligerent contact with other Powers."

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p2c2 The Mexican News

The Mexican News

Our reader will see accounts from the seat of war in another (unintelligible) and will be able to form their own opinions. Opinion (unintelligible) divided in New Orleans at the latest dates. We are inclined to put confidence in the main incident, the entry of Gen. Scott into Mexico, for in opposition to the positive testimony of the National's Matamoros correspondent, we regard the various surmises and conjectures of the press, as of very little value.

Supposing Gen. Scott then to be, at this moment, in the Halls of the Montezumas, the question occurs, What is to be done next? Will Mexico be more disposed to treat for peace now than she was six months ago? We hope she may, but we confess it looks to us very much like "hoping against hope." If Buena Vista, which so utterly destroyed the morale of the Mexican army as to leave them almost helpless prey at Cerro Gordo, had not the effect of taming the pride of the enemy, we cannot be made to see how the capture of Mexico can. If the war were a combined national movement it might be different. But the very reverse of this appears to be the case. Every State, every town, every political division of every kind –every individual, in fact, seems to be fighting on its or his own hook, without any regard to the movements at the capital: So very many neighborhoods, all indeed in which the American Army, or any portion of it, is stationed, are thriving under the war, that we doubt whether they would not regret to see it ended. They are well paid for every thing saleable, and have learned better than some of our own citizens, to estimate the value of a Home Market.

If then the war is approaching its end, we can not believe that the capture of Mexico will have any part in hastening the result. The Washington Union scolds the Mexican furiously for not finding out that they are beaten; but the Mexican are an ignorant and conceited race, and will not listen to the Union. The war will, we presume, change its character. We shall have no more of (unintelligible) battles, in the open field, but the guerrillas system seems to be fully organized and to that there is literally no end.

Apart from the glory necessarily involved in the (unintelligible) the capital of an enemy in triumph, we do not see (unintelligible) much will have been gained by the capture of (unintelligible), it may be that the necessity of holding it may welcome somewhat of a drawback upon Gen. Scott's future operations, and that he may find himself in the condition of Sir. William Howe after the Battle of Brandywine, when Dr. Franklin said "Howe has not taken Philadelphia; Philadelphia has taken Howe!"

By the next post we shall doubtless receive full accounts (unintelligible) the news will be affirmed or contradicted.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p2c2 Expenses of the Government

Expenses of the Government

Are the public aware at what enormous expense this war is conducted, and what a bright prospect exists of a nice little National Debt to be paid off when we shall have gotten out of it? The official quarterly return of the Secretary, for the quarter ending on the 30th of June, estimates the war expenses alone at $16,572,594, and the whole expenses of the Government at $22,474,505. There are more troops employed now than were then, and consequently the expenses for the next quarter will be greater; but allowing them to remain in status quo, at the end of the year the Government will have spent $90,000,000! Pretty well for an economical Government! The receipts from customs, and other sources, for the same time, were scarcely eight million –so that, in the year, if there is no falling off, they will reach thirty two million. Take 32 from 90, and $68,000,000 are left of debt with which the country will be saddled, at the end of that time.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p2c4 Quarrel between Santa Anna y Canalizo

[From the New Orleans Bee, Aug.2.]

Gen. Scott in the city of Mexico

Quarrel between Santa Anna y Canalizo.

Such is the title of an extra issued from the office of the National on Saturday evening last. Our Sunday contemporaries of the Picayune and Delta appear to entertain opposite views on the subject. The one “fears the announcement is entirely premature,” the other “has every reason to believe it is substantially true,”–a third paper – the Patria– ridicules the entire statement and says that the last accounts from Puebla were to the 11th, and at that time General Scott had made no preparations for a forward march; yet to reach the city of Mexico on the 17th he must have started about the 11th or 12th. Knowing that he had no idea of moving at that time, the Patria stigmatizes the whole account as preposterous and untrue.

We shall not probably remain many hours longer in suspense, as later news from the army may be received before this paragraph meets the public eye.

There is news in the city of Mexico, as late as July 17th. It came through by a Mexican courier, who came by the way of Orizaba and Alvarado to Vera Cruz. General Scott entered Mexico on the 17th of July. He met with no opposition on his way from Puebla, until he arrived at Penon, about eight miles from the city. Here a slight skirmish ensued between his advance and the Mexicans, when the latter fell back. Stipulations were entered into, by which the persons and property of the citizens of Mexico were to be respected; this accomplish, our army marched quietly into the city of the Montezumas.

This important news reached here in the Massachusetts, but has been withheld for purposes that we do not understand. The authority upon which we publish it, seems to us undoubted. The courier that brought this news could come from the city of Mexico via Orizaba to Vera Cruz in 5 days, if the weather is good, seven under any circumstances. –the Massachusetts left Vera Cruz on the 23d. It will be perceived that this allows seven days for the news to reach Vera Cruz by the route he have stated.

We know upon the highest authority, that there is a letter now in the city, of the 17th of July, from the City of Mexico. The gentleman who gave us the information has a letter of the 15th, in which is mentioned the preparations of families about leaving, from the approach of the Yankees.

Santa Anna and Canalizo had quarreled about the defence of the city. Canalizo did not want the city injured, as there was no hope of successful resistance. He preferred to meet our troops in the plain and there decide the contest. Santa Anna would not agree to this, so no opposition was made.

The entrance of Gen. Scott into Mexico is a rumor –from the letter of the 15th we know positively of the preparation of the families in the city to move on the approach of Gen. Scott, and of the quarrel between Santa Anna and Canalizo, as to the defence of the city, and we know that there is a letter in the city, of the 17th from Mexico.

The courier that brought through the letter of the 17th, brought news of Gen. Scott entering the city. We have no doubt of the truth of the report.

P.S. –Since the above was in type, we learn by passengers from Matamoros, on board the propeller Washington, which arrived last night from Brazos, which place she left on the 27th, that on the day they left Matamorors an express arrived from the city of Mexico with letters to Mexican merchants of that place, stating that Gen. Scott met the Mexican army at Rio Frio and had a battle, in which the enemy were defeated and totally routed, with a loss on the part of the Americans of 300 men; after which Gen. Scott, with his victorious troops, entered and took possession of the city of the Motezumas.

The news was publicly read to the troops at Matamoros and although it savors somewhat of impossibility, may nevertheless, be wholly true, for our readers will bear in mind that of all the battles fought and victories won on the fields of Mexico, our first news of them was received from the Mexican authority and afterwards confirmed through American sources. Ve incline to the opinion (though somewhat doubtful) that our army under Scott has again been victorious, and we then, as now, in possession of the city of Mexico.
August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p2c4 Scott in Mexico City

From the N.O. National, August 8

Arrival of the Washington. Confirmation of General Scott’s entrance into the city of Mexico –Less of 300 men – Express from San Fernando to Matamoros.

The steamship Washington, Capt. Pratt, arrived yesterday, (since the above was in type) from Vera Cruz, via Tampico and the Brazos. By her we have received the Sun of Anahuac of the 22d ult., the Tampico Sentinel of the 25 ultimo, and the Matamoros Flag of the 24th ult. These papers containing nothing of particular interest. But the following letter, received by a gentleman of this city, furnished us for publication, is of exciting interest, and fully confirms the news we gave in our extra of Saturday, that Gen. Taylor had entered the city of Mexico.

Brazos, Sr. Jaco, July 27th.

Sir: I hasten to inform you that MR. Fracher has just arrived here from Matamoros, and was informed that Col. Commanding had read on parade last evening, that Gen.. Scott had entered the city of Mexico, with a loss of 300 men. The news was brought by express to Matamoros from San Fernando by a Mexican to the Alcalde, and was generally believed to be true.

There is no doubt as to the information having been imparted to the troops at Matamoros. I would have given you more particulars, but Mr. Fracher has gone back two miles, in hopes to get his baggage here in time for the Washington. I cannot give you more, as the boat goes, and he has not returned in time to go to New Orleans in her.

In haste, yours, W.

[NO]

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p4c1 News from Mexico

The news from Mexico

Our readers will find from the news from Mexico, that not only is every prospect of peace banished for the present, but that active preparations are in progress for a renewal of the conflict.

A great battle is shortly expected, the result of which will doubtless be another triumph of the American arms, and another glorious (unintelligible) in the military history of our country. The dauntless valor of our troops—the irresistible impetuosity with which they surmount every obstacle, and carry all opposition before them at the point of the bayonet are subjects of just and lasting pride to every citizen of the United States. But at what a fearful sacrifice is this high distinction purchased! We are far from being among the number of those who affect an extraordinary horror at war, or surprise at the bloody and demoralizing scenes it presents.

We know that where there is a battle, there must be bloodshed—that where hostile armies are engaged, upon any theater of war, in doing each other all the mischief they can, that theatre must present a desolate and terrible appearance—that (unintelligible), burnt cities and trampled fields, are part and parcel of the "circumstance of glorious war." With this knowledge before our eyes, we yet believe that there are cases in which war is absolutely necessary—in which it is far better to encounter all its hazards than to submit to the (unintelligible) and injuries which are its moving causes—in which, whatever may be the suffering, it is better to endure it all, with a firm (unintelligible) and a cheerful countenance, than to take such an alternative as the continuance of peace would imply. Yet we do hold that war should be, in fact, as it has been somewhat improperly called, the last argument of Monarchs and nations—that the reasons which induced it should not only be strung but imperative—that it never should be resorted to until every other expedient of remonstrance and negotiation had been fairly exhausted without success.

In the most fortunate event, the triumphs of the field (unintelligible) A French lay once said to the Duke of Wellington, "a great victory must be a glorious affair," "Madam," replied he, "I conceive it to be the most deplorable catastrophe that can possibly happen, except a great defeat." The experience of our man, who had been witnessed to so much (unintelligible)

Deep, the, must be the responsibility of God, to mankind, and to History, of that Government; which, either upon slight provocation or for the sake of adding to his territories, or for any other than a most controlling reason, prunes a people into this fearful state.

How far the Executive of the United States is implicated in bringing the present war upon us—whether he was Strict Construction as it is understood by Mr. Polk

When the people of the Great West are prevented by Mr. (unintelligible) regard for the great doctrine of "Strict Construction" as he understands it, enjoying the benefits to be derived from any improvement of her great "Island (unintelligible)" and when the Lakes are every year strewed with wrecks in obedience to, and in consequence of the President's scrutinies, the doctrine is operating very singularly in other quarters. We allude of course to Mexico.

It is well known that the President through his Secretary, has established a tariff for the port of Vera Cruz, and that duties, to a considerable amount, have already been collected under it. This act is one of purely despotic power, neither recognized by the Constitution, nor the possibility of even so much as (unintelligible) to by that instrument. It places the President precisely in the position of Emperor in his own person al the attributes of Sovereignty, Legislative, Executive and Judicial, and renders him entirely superior to responsibility for all acts committed on his name, in that country, to Congress or to any power whatever. By assuming the power to impose and collect duties without the intervention of the Congress, he assumes, that from the circumstances, this is case of necessity, the power of Congress no extending to the laying a tariff for foreign ports. If then the necessity exists in this case, it exists also in that of establishing courts, trying causes, and every other accident belonging to or springing from sovereign in its largest and most irresponsible sense.

What is the President of these United States? Clearly a creature of the Constitution. From that he derives (unintelligible); by virtue of that he exercises his functions; by his words his action is limited, restricted and confined. By the grants of that instrument, the President is made entirely the Executive officer of Congress, to whom all Legislative functions are given. If, Then, the city of Vera Cruz belongs to (unintelligible) and it be advisable to levy duties upon vessels entering the harbor, it is the province of Congress to prescribe the tariff, which cannot exceed that laid upon other parts of the Union, and of the president to see that the duties are collected. If on the other hand, it belongs still to Mexico, then neither Congress, nor any other power recognized in the Union, has the authority to levy duties there.

Leaving out of view the fact that the duties there are higher that they are in the ports of the Union, and that they are (unintelligible) contrary to that express provision of the constitution which says that "taxes shall be equal and uniform" we maintain that in every aspect of the case, the President has acted in open violation of law. Even Congress itself, in the ports of the Union, cannot lay a tariff for one, and another tariff for another. It cannot compel our own vessels, cleared from our own ports, manned by our own sailors, and laden with our own merchandise, to pay duties upon entering any harbor of this Union. Yet if Vera Cruz be in truth an American port, this is precisely what the President has undertaken to do, without any regard to the powers vested in Congress, and utter contempt of that exposition, so much insisted on by strict constructionists, that the duties of the Legislative and Executive Departments are entirely separate, and that what belongs to one, cannot, without usurpation, be exercised by the other.

All these monstrous absurdities – this assumption of power to levy duties by the Executive, and to levy them in a foreign port – are justified by strict constructionists, under the "General Welfare" clause of the constitution! And yet complaints are made that the Whigs, because they wish to place it in the power of Congress to advance the commercial prosperity of the country, under the clause granting to that holy power to "regulate commerce, &c." are stretching the constitution until it is likely to tear.

It has well been asked by the National Intelligencer, since law implies the right of resorting to tribunals, and (unintelligible) by making laws to the port of Vera Cruz, the President has erected himself into a legislator, where any relief to be found for the wrongful administration of his enactments there! There is no Court there, and surely our Courts have no jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Union. Suppose the collector, appointed by virtue of this newly assumed Presidential power, should collect a sum of money, say a million of dollars, if you please – put it in his pocket, and refuse to pay it (unintelligible) How is it to be gotten out of him? – what court has cognisance of his case? – what process can be served on him? – and what Marshal or Deputy Marshal can serve it? Suppose even a bond be taken (unintelligible) large amount, with all due security – where (unintelligible)

All these are subjects of reflection for the serious, and doubly so for those among them who, professing to belong to the Strict Construction (unintelligible) dangerously in banks, railroads and canals, while the very Constitution is abolished under the general welfare clause.

[NO]
From the N.O. Commercial Times, July 30

Mexico. Late and Important Intelligence.

Failure of Peace Negotiations – Gen. Scott to march on the City of Mexico – Santa Anna prepared (damaged) of 22,000 men (this part of the newspaper is quite damaged) with the Guerrillas – (damaged) of Gov. W(unintelligible) Vera Cruz – Health (damaged).

(damaged) states that rumors were (unintelligible) quite unfavorable to the success of Mr. Trist’s mission. Indeed, from letters which had come by hand from (unintelligible), it was certain that the commission had not been installed and "consequently, that the hopes of peace which had been (unintelligible), had completely vanished." He adds, on the other hand, that (unintelligible) the continued inaction of Gen. Scott’s army, the duty (unintelligible) on which can possibly rest the probability of a commission for the (unintelligible) difficulties, and the total (unintelligible) of news for some time from the interior, it may be that the Commander–in–Chief is waiting the arrival of fresh instructions from Washington. The immediate nomination of commissioners, and the designation of the place of meeting, would seem to indicate a sincere desire on the part of the Mexicans, for some kind of a pacific arrangement.– Difficulties of an accidental nature, delays, etc. may have intervened to obstruct the consummation of the treaty – English mediation, it was stated, had been proffered and accepted, which had progressed as far as to have brought the Secretary of Legation to the British Embassy at the (unintelligible)–quarters of General Scott at Puebla in (unintelligible) to the last means to which the Mexicans (unintelligible) recourse, the Sol de Anahuac expresses its dissent from any foreign interference, as being always (unintelligible) and sometimes most fatal in its results. In (unintelligible) the news, however, which has reached us by this arrival, we are bound to contest that everything seems all status quo as (unintelligible) receipt of intelligence. Nothing (unintelligible) either of the sentiments of the Congress of whose meeting not a word is said or of the (unintelligible) acting of the Mexican Government. Gen. Scott had not (unintelligible) when the last accounts were received at Vera Cruz from that city.

Affronts in Battle – In opposition to the foregoing speculations, however, we find that a letter of the 17th, which has not come to hand as (unintelligible) circumstance we much regret is (unintelligible) by our regular corresponder "Indicator” and which, as we glean from his remarks on the 20th (unintelligible), thereto, he states that all hopes of peace are entirely crushed and that Gen. Scott was to march on the Capital on the 15th inst. Santa Anna, at the head of a large army, supposed to be 22,000 strong, intended to give (unintelligible) point between Puebla and Mexico.

Gen. Pierce – This officer (unintelligible) with his train on the day indicated in our last advices. During his advance, firing had been heard along the road, by which it seems he must have met with some obstacles from the guerrillas. His (unintelligible), however, was so overwhelmingly strong – three thousand men with one hundred and fifty wagon – that he no doubt brushed away these predatory birds with ease. In reference to that we learn that two hundred men (unintelligible) from Vera Cruz (unintelligible) the train which left a few days before were attacked a short distance from Santa Fe. The Mexicans had a strong force but were defeated.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p4c3 Burning of Santa Fe (in central Mexico)

Burning of Santa Fe – Lieut. Fitzgerald had been sent on an expedition with twenty–five men. They went to Santa Fe, took away some provisions belonging to the army, and set fire to that town, a place of refuge to guerrillas.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p4c3 Vomito

Vomito – This disease, the terror of foreigners at Vera Cruz, still continues its ravages, but it is quite certain that the health of the civilians immensely improved in comparison with that during past years, (unintelligible) the enlightened measures introduced by the Americans. The Board of Health are increasing in their labors to prevent and (unintelligible) the ravages of this horrid scourge.

August 10, 1847, RW47v24n64p4c3 Colonel De Russy and the Battle of Huajutla

We take the following from the Sol de Anahuac of the 22d instant.

Col. De Russy and The Battle of Huajutla – The following extract of a letter from Col. Gates, addressed to Gov. Wilson, who had the kindness to permit us to publish it, will show that Col De Russy’s loss was not so great as we have announced it:
August 13, 1847, RW47v24n65p1c1 General Scott

General Scott.

It has been a matter of considerable astonishment, not only in this country, but in Europe, and even in Mexico itself, that this officer did not take advantage of the panic occasioned by his overwhelming success at Cerro Gordo, and advance immediately upon the capital, before it had had time to recover from the blow. Such an advance, it is said, would not only have been consistent with the rules of war, but with the well known character of Gen. Scott, always terrible in attack, and seldom taking into consideration the possible necessity of a retreat. It would have been highly gratifying to his army, flushed as they were with victory, confident in the talents of their leader, exulting in their well ascertained superiority, and firmly impressed with the belief that no force of the enemy, nor any obstacle he might be able to oppose, could for a moment stop them in the career of conquest. The force which had conquered at Cerro Gordo was sufficient not only to have planted the stars and stripes on the towers of the Montezumas, but to have borne them triumphantly from one end of the Mexican Republic to the other, with as much ease as Wellington and Blucher penetrated to Paris, after the flower of Napoleon's army had been destroyed in the disastrous battle of Waterloo. The eyes of the whole world were turned upon the American General; the utmost terror existed in Mexico; where disorder reigned triumphant, and organised resistance was not even among the dreams of its inhabitants; the feelings of this country were wrought up to a pitch of excitement, only allayed, by an extraordinary degree of confidence both in our men and our officers; and Europe could ill disguise her chagrin at the prospect of our approaching success. Suddenly the whole world was taken aback in the career of victory — that the enemy had been allowed time to recover from the stupor of despair — that he was actively engaged in organizing new means of resistance to our victorious than which had just taken place, would probably be fought (unintelligible) our troops could arrive at the goal to which all their (unintelligible) pointed. This apparently strange neglect to make use of the success which he had obtained by his own skill, not less than by the valor of his troops, has subjected Gen. Scott to much, and in our opinion very undeserved censure. The cause of it is well known to be found in the discharge of a great number of volunteers who had assisted him to gain the victory of Cerro Gordo, and the loss of whose services entirely paralyzed his movement advance. It is well known, likewise, that these men were actually discharged six weeks before their terms of service expired, upon the absurd pretext that such time should be allowed them to return their homes. That General Scott was the author of such a interpretation of the law, an interpretation at variance with common sense, and calculated to produce incalculable mischief to the service, we have never for one moment been able to believe. He was the last person, in a word, to insist upon such an interpretation of the law, as would deprive him of a large portion of his men at the very moment when he wanted them most, and when he better knew their value than any other person could be supposed to do. We should not have been surprised to have heard, even that after their term had really not constructively expired, he had stretched his authority so far as to compel them to serve until he had reached the city of Mexico.

If a man enlist here, and his term of service expire in Mexico, upon the very day of the expiration of that term, and not one hour before, is he entitled to his discharge; and thus far the volunteer and the enlisted soldier stand on precisely the same ground. No man knows this fact better than General Scott himself, and to suppose that he would make an exception in favor of the volunteer, because he would return to the body of the people, and be enabled to exert a political influence in his favor, is to attribute to a most gallant officer a want of patriotism, the bare suspicion of which is put to shame by his many and valuable services.
With far greater appearance of justice, Secretary Marcy has been charged with inventing this interpretation of the law, and the date of the invention is fixed in February last. To him, then, be all the praise, honor and profit of the new invention; to him we are indebted for the delay of three months, and revival of Mexican spirit from the terrible overthrow of Cerro Gordo; to him should full credit be given for all the blood that may flow in a new battle, and for the necessity of doing now that which should have been done three months ago.

We hope all these things will be duly remembered to the praise and glory of the present administration, but more especially to the benefit of Secretary Marcy.

[NO]

---

August 13, 1847, RW47v24n65p2c2 Scott and the Union

General Scott and the Union

The Courier and the Enquirer asserts positively, that the policy of discharging the volunteers in Mexico, six weeks before their term of service expired, originated with Mr. Secretary Marcy. To this Union replies as follows:

"We have no disposition to censure Gen. Scott. We will not examine the force of the reasons which induced him to discharge the volunteers before the expiration of their service. We will not apply to him the language which the New York Courier hypothetically employs. We will not draw the inferences which that paper makes; nor will we animadvert upon the "folly" or "insanity" of which the Courier is mistaken; that Mr. Secretary Marcy expressed no such decision to Gen. Scott, in the month of February, or at any time before the General had issued his general orders of May 4th, for the discharge of the volunteers. Gen. Scott was no doubt at first anxious to retain them, and he threw cold water upon his wishes of the volunteers. But when he advanced to Jalapa, his views appear to have changes; and on the 4th of May he issued the following general orders, which we take from the print before us:

General Orders, № 135.

Headquarters of the Army, Jalapa, May 4, 1847.

Extracts of a recent act of Congress, published in the general orders, № 14, dated at the War Department, March 27, 1847, provide for and invite the tender of the "services of such of the volunteers now in Mexico, who may, at the termination of the present term, voluntarily engage to serve during the war with Mexico."

The general order containing these extracts reached the General–in–chief at this place some nine days ago, and was immediately sent to the headquarters of the volunteers for prompt circulation among the regiments present; and appealed to, viz: the Tennessee infantry, the Illinois Infantry, the 1st and 2d Tennessee infantry, the Georgia infantry and the Alabama infantry, whose several terms of service will, it is understood, expire in four, five or six weeks.

The General–in chief regrets to learn, through a great number of undoubted channels, that, in all probability, not one man in ten of those regiments will be inclined to volunteer for the war. This predetermination offers, in his opinion, no ground for reproach –considering the long, arduous, faithful and gallant services of those corps– however, deeply all will regret the consequent and unavoidable delay in the prosecution of this war to an early and honorable peace; for the General–in chief cannot, in humanity and good faith, cause regiments to advance further form the coast in the pursuit of the enemy, and thereby throw them upon the necessity of returning to embark at Vera Cruz at the season known to be, at that place, the most fatal to life.

Accordingly, the regiments of old volunteers, and the independent company of Kentucky volunteers, serving with this army, will stand ready, on the return of the large train from below, to march to Vera Cruz; and thence to embark for New Orleans, where they will be severally and honorably mustered out of the service of the United States, and paid off by the proper officers on duty there.

This order will be sent to these officers; and the government and commander of Vera Cruz, who has been instructed to have the necessary transports ready by the early arrival of the returning troops.

There is nothing in the foregoing intended to interfere with the invitation presented by Congress and the President to re–enlistments on the part of the old volunteers. –On the contrary, the General–in–chief ardently hopes that many new companies will be formed out of those old troops, and presented for continue service, according to that invitation. He will gladly accept them for the war, and cause them, if not embodied into battalions, to be temporarily attached to the weaker regiments of the regular army, as indicated in the President’s orders, №14, above recited.

Horses of the Tennessee cavalry, as well as officer’s horses generally, if desired by their owners, who may decline re–volunteering, will be paid for by the Quartermaster’s Department here, at a fair valuation. The same disposition may be made of saddles and bridles, if needed for the public service.

The four regiments of new volunteers, present, will be formed into a brigade under Brig. Gen. Quitman, who will designate one of the four for Jalapa, and another for Perote, to constitute parts for garrisons of those places. He will receive orders, for the commencement of his march, at general headquarters.

Major Gen. Patterson, rendered for the moment supernumerary with his army, will accompany the returning volunteers of his late gallant division, and render them (unintelligible) assistance on the way as he well knows how to give. He will report, in person at Washington, or by letter, from New Orleans, for future orders from the War Department.

This distinguished general officer will please accept the thanks of the General—in—chief for the gallant, able, and efficient support uniformly received from the second in rank of this army.

It will be seen that the Union merely "ventures to affirm," &c. It does not offer a decided and authoritative denial, such as should come from Mr. Secretary Marcy, were he speaking in his own behalf. There have been occasions enough, of late, to show that the "organ" is very moderately trusted by the Government it is understood to represent, for it has more than once, as if by authority contradicted statements made in other papers, which nevertheless turned out be perfectly true.

As for the general orders quoted above, we see nothing in them to weaken the force of the Courier's statement, or to controvert the truth of its assumption, that the policy in question originated with the Secretary of War. It is well known that the Executive sent to General Taylor his famous proclamation to the Mexican nation, already written, and it is believed that the proclamation of General Scott was dictated at Washington. When, therefore, gen. Scott says that humanity and good faith require him to carry the volunteers no further into the interior, there is nothing therein to show that the mandate did not come from Washington, any more than there was in the two proclamations above alluded to.

The Courier certainly has means of getting accurate information from Washington, and we should sooner trust to the statements of its correspondent than to those of the Union, for the simple reason that they have oftener been verified by the event. Besides, they are supported in this instance by every consideration that can possibly give plausibility to an assertion of fact. It is impossible to believe that General Scott would have so far reduced his army as not only to render it ineffective, but even to expose it to attack, at the very moment when the interest of the service and his own glory, alike required the most energetic measures on his part. He is known to be an officer of great ability; to suppose him voluntarily guilty of such an act as this, were to make him out a fool.

August 13, 1847, RW47v24n65p4 From the Army of Gen. Taylor

From the N.O. Picayune.

From the Army of Gen. Taylor.

The propeller Washington, from Vera Cruz and Tampico, touched at the Brazos on the 27th ult. and received a mail from the army of Gen. Taylor.

The American flag of the 24th ult contains not a word of any interest here.

Passengers from Matamoros, who came over on the Washington, tell us that the day they left that city news was received there by Mexican merchants that Gen. Scott had had an action with the Mexicans at Rio Frio and defeated them totally, with a loss on his part of 300 men. This news the Bee says was read at the head of the troops at Matamoros.. We presume this was done on the 26th – the day before the Washington left the Brazos. If Gen. Scott entered Mexico on the 17th ult, this would give nine days for the news to have reached Matamoros – a distance of nearly 250 leagues by the way of San Luis Potosi and the Tula pass. The time is amply sufficient for the transmission of the news. But we have dates to the 26th from Tampico also, which is several hundred miles nearer the capital, and yet not a word of Gen. Scott's victory.

Furthermore, our correspondent at Monterey, writing on the 13th, says they had then received a rumor there that Gen Scott had defeated a very large force under Santa Anna near the city of Mexico. This was a Mexican rumor, and very possibly was as authentic as the one which reached Matamoros a few days later.

We annex the latest letter we have received from Monterey. We have others on hand, some of which should have been received long ago.

[NO]
As I leave for Saltillo manana, as the Mexicans say, which, being translated into a respectable language, signifies early to-morrow morning, I will jot you down a few lines by way of bringing up matters here. In the first place, let me correct a blunder I made in my last about the direction in which Salinas lies from here. Instead of northeast, as I had it, it lies northwest from Monterey, and the Villa Real is a little south of west of Mamalequi, almost directly north from Monterey. The day we started for Mamalequi rather an interesting incident occurred at Gen. Taylor's camp. A Mexican lady residing in Monterey, drove up to the general's tent, accompanied by three young children, two girls and a boy, and solicited advice from him. She stated that she was extremely anxious that her children should be properly and thoroughly educated at some good institution in the United States, and particularly that they should be taught the English language, and she was desirous of taking them herself to the United States for that purpose, but being totally unacquainted there, wished the advice of some competent person as to what course she should pursue. The general gave her good advice, and promised her conveyance and escort to the Brazos by the next train that goes down. She appeared to be a very intelligent and lady-like person, and of very pleasing manners. A happy thing would it be for Mexico if she had a few more such mothers as this one – quickly would her destiny be changed.

The party of dragoons who started on a reconnaissance on the 7th inst. have not yet returned, but will be back in a few days, as they contemplated being gone about ten days.

The stamped train, which I alluded to in my last, arrived here the day before yesterday, and much to the satisfaction of everybody it appears that the train was ordered to return to Cerralvo from the best and most prudent motives. There was quite a force of mounted men forming part of the escort of the train, and Lieut. Col. Abbott recalled it that he might employ them to make a scout in different directions in that vicinity, to satisfy himself as to the reports of Urréa's presence which had come to him in such a shape that he felt it his duty to ascertain their truth. It was found that there was no foundation for them whatever. I understand that a Mexican robber was brought into Gen. Taylor's camp last night by two Mexicans, bound in something more substantial than "slumber's chains." – As a matter of course he will be turned over to the Mexican authorities, unless they have evidence that he has committed some offence against our people.

Everything is perfectly quiet here, but I suppose Dr Lushington will be on hand this afternoon, creating some little confusion, as the five companies of the Massachusetts regiment are to be paid off to-day. The unruly ones were taught a pretty severe lesson on Sunday last. Six or eight have been tried by court martial for drunkenness, disobedience of orders and offences of that character, and they received their sentences in the presence of the battalion. One surgeon was reduced to the ranks, and the rest were sentenced to do police duty and wear a ball and chain, for various periods of from one week to one month. It will do a world of good if followed up properly. Intelligence was received here a few days since from San Luis, via Saltillo, that Gen. Scott had met a very large force under Santa Anna near the City of Mexico and defeated them. It is reported here that Maj. Chevalie, of the Texas rangers, met with a very serious accident a few days since at Saltillo, from which it is feared he will not recover. He was about starting for Parras, and while on horseback was taken with a fit and fell to the ground, receiving severe and serious injuries thereby. This may perhaps delay the expedition to Parras for some days. Gen. Cushing proceeds to-morrow morning to Saltillo to take command of his brigade, or such portion of it as is in the field there.

The inhabitants of Monterey seem to be gradually returning to the city. At mass in the cathedral on Sunday morning, there was full four hundred able-bodied men upon their knees, and nearly as many women and children. As they were emerging from the church with the solemn tones of the organ reverberating through the arch of the cathedral, the drum and fife struck up a martial air in the center of the plaza for "guard mounting," telling them, in shrill tones, that "grimm-visaged war" prevailed in their midst.

I announced to you some time since that Mr. Brown an artist, was in Gen. Taylor's camp for the purpose of painting portraits of Gen. Taylor and staff. I have had an opportunity of examining the gentleman's performances as far as completed, and unhesitatingly pronounce them beautiful productions – such as would do credit to any artist in the country, not only from the faithfulness of the likenesses, but from the general excellence of their execution. He has already completed a splendid portrait of Gen. Taylor and of Maj. Bliss, both of which are most admirable likenesses – that of Gen. Taylor particularly. He has also finished a painting of Gen. Taylor and most of his officers in camp, on a canvas about four feet by three, representing the general standing under the awning in front of his tent, bare headed, about to leave for a ride; his orderly surgeon is standing near by, holding his old grey horse, and Maj. Bliss is in the act of calling his attention to a letter just received, which he holds in his hand. In various positions, seated and standing, and variously occupied, are Col. Mansfield, of the Topographical Engineers, Col. Monroe, of the Artillery, Col. Croghan, Inspector General, Maj. Eaton, 3d Infantry, Maj. Bragg, Light Artillery, Capt. Garnett, 7th Infantry, Capt. Ramsey, Ordnance Department, and Capt. Linnard, Topographical Engineers. The figures are all in miniature, and executed with a most life like faithfulness and exquisite finish. I cannot pay the artist a greater compliment than by saying that there is perceptible in all his faces that peculiar delicacy and exquisite softness of finish that was so distinguishing a feature in the production of the lamented Inman. Mr. B. is now engaged upon a battle piece, the scene of Buena Vista. It is contemplated by Mr. B. to exhibit these pictures all together in the States, and a very handsome and interesting collection they will be, too. A rumor is current here to-day, brought in by a Mexican, that a party which started from here day before yesterday morning, numbering something like 20, were attacked near Agua Frio, on their way down, by a party of rancheros, and near half their number killed. The party consisted of Col Reuben Davis, second Mississippi Regiment, Capt Davis, assistant quartermaster USA, and... others, and by Capt D. I sent you a package of letters. I place little confidence in the report, as it comes from a Mexican source, although the informant most positively avers that he saw six dead bodies himself. [This rumor was totally false; all the parties mentioned arrived here duly.] The health of this city is good – at Saltillo not so good as it has been, the North Carolina and Mississippi troops suffering severely from diarrhea. I shall write you again on my arrival at Saltillo.

J.E.D.

[NO]

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 Scott still at Puebla

From the N. Orleans Picayune, Aug. 7

Arrival of the steamship Fashion.

Gen. Scott Still at Puebla.

Thirty Days Later from Puebla and Mexico.

The U.S. steamer Fashion, Capt. Ivy, arrived late last evening from Vera Cruz, bringing us dates from that city to the 2d inst. her news is most important. She brings a large mail.

Capt. Ivy will accept our best thanks for his courtesy and prompt delivery of our packages.

Gen. Scott was still at Puebla on the 30th of July. The news of the National’s extra was totally unfounded, as we believed and have contended from the first.

Before going further we may mention that since the Fashion has been absent she has made one voyage from Vera Cruz to Tampico and back. The Mary Kingland had arrived at Vera Cruz from Mobile with troops, and the Telegraph and New Orleans from this port.

The courier of the British legation arrived at Vera Curz on the 31st ult., with correspondence from Mexico to the 29th of July and from Puebla to the 30th.

Our letters from Vera Cruz differ somewhat from Mr. Kendall’s regard to the probable movements of General Scott.
They represent the chances of peace in a more fashionable light than Mr. K., and think the resistance to our advance will be almost (unintelligible). Mr. Kendall thinks differently and gives (unintelligible).

In Mexico every thing was at sixes and sevens. Congress has referred Mr. Buchanan’s letters back to the Executive, and thrown upon him all the responsibilities of the war. About 26,000 men are collected for the defence of the city, but the peace party in the town is yet strong and increasing, and they have no faith in their generals.

Gen. Pierce, whit his train and convoy, had arrived safely at Perote. Gen. Scott, it will be seen, despatched Gen.
Smith’s brigade from Puebla to meet him. It will be seen that Mr. Kendall believes that Gen. Scott would advance the first week in August upon Mexico, and that there would be the severest battle of the war. The Mexicans fully prepared to receive him.

The Sun of Anahuac gives the following account of an encounter between Gen. Pierce’s train and the guerrillas. It must be regarded as rumor, says our correspondent, and so too says the Sun.

A respectable person of the city has informed us that a letter has been received yesterday morning by a citizen of this place, (unintelligible) stating that the guerrilleros, about 600 in number, attacked the train commanded by Gen.
Pierce, near the National Bridge. The letter says the Americans approached under the fire of the Mexicans until they arrived within a hundred yards of them, when the American infantry opened d deadly fire on them, forcing them to retreat. While the Mexicans were retreating the American cavalry rushed on them, sword in hand, and killed about one hundred Mexicans. The position of the Mexicans was one of the strongest that can be found in the country. The Americans passed the bridge after this successful engagement.

A gentleman who conversed with Santa Anna since the middle of July –we are told this on the best authority in Vera Cruz– found him in favor of negotiating, but dreading to assume the responsibility. Gen. Valencia had arrived at the capital with 4000 men from San Luis Potosi –all full of fight. This embarrassed Santa Anna. He left himself strong to give up without a fight.

Our letters mention the death of Lieut. Tipton, of the Ritles, and Liuet. Sturgeon, of one of the Pennsylvania regiments. The former was the son of the ex Senator Tipton, of Indiana –the latter of Senator Sturgeon, of Pennsylvania.
Gen. Shields’s health is nearly reestablished, as his many friends will be delighted to hear.

Two letters from Lieut. Whipple are published in the papers. He is treated kindly as a prisoner of war and expects shortly to be exchanged. He was on his way to Cordova at last accounts. The letters are too long for us to-day. Gov. Soto has him in charge, to whom Gov Wilson has written, thanking him for his civilities.

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 Evacuation of Tabasco

The following in relation to the evacuation of Tabasco is from the Sun of Anahuac of the 27th ult.

The U.S. steamer Mississippi, Com Perry, arrived yesterday at Lizardo, bringing with him the steamers Scorpion, Spitfire and Vixen.

The forces have been withdrawn from the city of Tabasco, in consequence of the severe sickness which prevailed among them, till the sickly season shall have passed.

Every thing was taken on board, and the evacuation was effected without molestation from the enemy, who was in considerable force outside. The defences were all destroyed when the place was first occupied six weeks since.

Com’r Van Brunt, with the bomb brig Emma, the steamer Scourge and the gunboat Bonita, were left at Frontera, a few miles from the mouth of the river, (it being a healthy location) to take charge of the custom house there, and guard the passages leading to the capital.

It is due to truth to say that the Sun of Anahuac on its Spanish side represents the evacuation of Tabasco in a less favorable light for our arms than the above account –It attributes our withdrawal to the overwhelming forces of the enemy. Our commandant feared he would be unable to resist an attack and determined to evacuate the place rather than risk the issue.

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 Orders from Perry

Com. Perry has issued the following notice and order:

U.S. Falgship Mississippi, Anton, Lizardo, July 28, 1847.

Notice is given that the war tax of 10 per ct. ad valorem hitherto imposed on exports from the ports of the Gulf of Mexico occupied by the naval forces of the U. States is hereby ordered to be discontinued.

All officers under my command having charge of the collection of duties under the war tariff of April 7th, 1847, will act accordingly.

M. C. Perry. Com’g Home Squadron.

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 Lieut. Kendall stabbed in Vera Cruz

A drunken Mexican the other day stabbed Lieut. Kendall, of the Vera Cruz police, and two other men. Some Mexican horses thieves have been caught outside the walls of Vera Cruz with ten of our horses in their possession.

The health of the city of Vera Cruz is improving, say the (unintelligible). We will give the official statement in our next but the (unintelligible) daily mortality is about nine. The vomito is decreasing.

The Sun tells of various exploits of Mexicans robbers near Vera Cruz, but they are (unintelligible) worth repeating, stealing horses being the greatest feat. The following paragraphs from the Sun of the 23d ult. touches Father Jarauta:

This priest and his band of robbers having robbed some of the property belonging to the U. S. Government, from Gen Cadwaller’ train, delivered it over to the Governor Orizaba, who sold it and pocketed the proceeds. It is said the August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 News from Puebla

We have a copy of the American Star of the 29th July. This paper it will be recollected and published at Puebla –It contains little news from the capital and is not as full as Mr. Kendall’s letters. We annex the last general order we see in it.

General Orders No 238.

Headquarters of the Army, Puebla, July 28, 1847.

Experience has shown that the safety of the persons and property of this army cause for a more regular system of a police and activity on the part of patrols, guards and sentinels.

In addition to the means heretofore prescribed, (see general order, No 206,) the commander of the cavalry brigade will detail daily for night duty, beginning at 12 o’clock in terminating at sunrise, a mounted patrol of a sergeant, a corporal and twelve men, for every two hours, to make the entire circuit of the environs of the city.

The cavalry patrols, like those of (unintelligible) interior, will receive the standing instructions to sees and to turn over to the nearest guard all suspicious and the disorderly persons for examination or trial.

The field officers of the day will see that the patrol duty, both exterior and interior, be duly perform, and distribute that duty between the foot patrols, so that every part of the city may be regularly patrolled several times in every night.

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 American prisoners

We have letters from the Americans officer prisoners in Mexico which we cannot find room for this morning. The latest date is the 15th July. The health of the party is good, but they see no prospect of release. They long for the arrival of the army. Gen. Scott has made another effort in their behalf, but we do not yet know the result.

Gen. Almonte has been sent to Tulancingo. The nature of the charges against him we have not yet been able to ascertain. More of him in our next.

Gen. Alvarez was in the capital the middle of July and had several long interviews with Santa Anna.

Mr. Kendall (unintelligible) in sending couriers to Vera Cruz, though he has had three captured. One has been killed. He fought bravely for his life and was faithful to the last. By singular good fortune the letters by this courier we have recovered. They are not of a late date, but it is rather singular that they should have reached their destination against the wishes of the Mexicans, when once in their possession. We have not yet had time since even to read them. Mr. K. will continue to despatch messengers to the coast.

Mr. Trist must have been indisposed., A private letter written on the 29th ult. says: “Mr. Trist’s health has improved.”

[NO]

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c3 Mexicans defeat American at Atlixco

We have a copy of the Nacional, of the 24th and 21st ult. this paper is published at Atlixco, the present capital of the State of Puebla. From it we learn that Gen. Garay has reported to the Government that he had defeated one hundred and fifty American riflemen at the river Calabozo. He sets down pur loss at one captain and fifteen soldiers killed, five drowned and fifteen made prisoners. –Besides he says he took forty horses and some mules and arms. His own loss is not mentioned.

We are unable to make further use of our papers and correspondence to–day. To–morrow we will present every thing to our readers which we can find of interest. Our correspondence from Puebla and the city of Mexico is
August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c4 More news from Puebla

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune]

Puebla, Mexico, July 25, 1847.

Since despatching my last courier, three days ago. I have not written you, for the simple reason that I had nothing to say. Even rumors have not been as abundant as they were a week since, the jade who circulated them with so prolific a hand on our first arrival having either tired herself down or worn herself out. Not ten days since, and we had twenty different stories in relation to Santa Anna in as many different hours—his stock, if I may be allow to use the term, was purely of a fancy description, rising and falling with every puff of wind form the capital. Now, we simple heard occasionally that he continues to lead Congress and the people by the nose—in short, that he is having everything in his own way. Dictator he was, at last accounts, two all intense and purposes, and his measures, whatever they may have been, he was carrying out with a high and most unscrupulous hand. The law of one day, if is stood the least in his way, was to abolish the next, and he who (unintelligible) a word of opposition of dissent was placed where his voice could not be heard, let him shout at his loudest—Such was the state of affairs at the capital four days ago—they may have altered since then.

In my last, I mentioned the capture of a Mexican mail by a part of dragoons. Since then another package has been taken, and the contents of one of the letters was outrageous beyond belief. The writer, a young men half crazy and two-thirds (unintelligible), spoke of women being daily outraged by not only our men, but the higher grades of our officers; says that the most gross excesses were perpetrated in open day; that females were not safe even in their own houses; that many good citizens of Puebla have already died of rage, and he himself could not possibly live much longer and witness such horrible crimes as were hourly committed by the savage and perfidious Yankees—he must die from an excess of cholor. He winds up his letter by swearing to the truth of all ha has written, and then seeks his friends in the city of Mexico to read and circulate the precious documents. He is now safely ledged in prison, and gives as an excuse that he only wrote the letter in joke! As he has been told that he must remain in prison until he proves one of the statements he has so solemnly sworn to his incarceration is likely to be a long one.

I have seen an order, issued at the city of Mexico on the 19th inst. Gen. Lombardini in which, after stating that it is now time for the great Mexican nation to show the world that her sons have not degenerated, the commander—in-chief goes on to decree as follows: That on the American’s first appearance in sight of the capital a gun shall be fired in the plexs; that instantly all the band shall stroke up the alarm; that all the military shall at once hurry to the appropriate stations; that all (unintelligible) save those where charcoal and provisions (unintelligible) shall be immediately closed; that no change shall be allowed in the streets, and that there shall be no assemblage of persons any part of the city. Such is the plan of giving the first alarm, and the after government of the city. The idea of showing to the world that her sons have not degenerated is purely Mexican, but what (unintelligible) a deal of hard fighting and bloodshed to place them where they stood previous to the battle of Palo Alto.

In one of my letters I noticed the death of Lieut. Tipton, of the Rifles—a son of Senator Tipton, of Indiana. Since then a son of Senator Stugeon of Pennsylvania, a lieutenant in one of the regiments from the State, has died, and he too, I have been told, was a young of much promise. I cannot learn that any of our officers are now seriously indisposed, and the health of the army generally is improving. To be sure there are 1500 or 2000 men still on the sick list, but a larger portion of them are convalescing.

I wrote you a short time since that I had despatched a man to Vera Cruz with letters, and that after his departure I was obliged, in virtue of a verbal contract, today all the expenses of his family during his absence, to keep a candle continually burning and have a function performed in one of the churches for his safety and buen viaje. I have just learned that the fellow was captured on the road by the guerrilleros, stripped, beat most unmercifully, his horse—I paid for the annual—taken from him, and was turned loose to make the best of his way back to Puebla. The story of his adventures and capture is most amusing, and I will gave it if (unintelligible)I live to get home; at present I will only say that I thought the family made too much fuss from the first.

Last evening, on the strength of a letter paid said to have been received from the Spanish Minister in Mexico, peace stock went up. It was rumored that the contents of his communication made peace inevitable—that the Congress and Santa Anna were disposed to agree to any thing is order to insure it now, while I am writing, intelligence has come in from which it would appear that there is no earthly chance for an amicable adjustment of our difficulties. From all accounts, it would appear that Santa Anna and Congress passed an act declaring any one traitor who would even entertain the idea of a peace with North America. So far so good. When Santa Anna received Mr. Buchanan’s last proposition, a few weeks ago, he at once submitted them to Congress for that body to act upon the matter in the (unintelligible); but what did Congress do but send the papers back with an answer that the initiatory steps belonged exclusively to the Executive. At this Santa Anna became enraged—said that he did not send the papers before Congress to ascertain what prerogatives were—he knew their full extent well— but he had laid the matter before that body in order that the members might rescind their former decree declating any one a traitor, &c., if they saw fit. That he thought they would do this, and thus give him all and every power, is highly probable; but Congress took a stubborn fit, and here the whole affair rests for the present. I do not even see who is to deign to offer an answer to Mr. Buchanan's propositions, which seem to have been transferred into a species of foot–ball to be kicked backwards and forwards by Santa Anna and the Congress –neither party, in the present distracted state of the country, daring to lay hands upon the unfortunate document– Bold and unscrupulous as even the tyrant is all matters of state policy, he dare not take a responsibility so heavy upon his shoulders as to come out alone and advocate a peace. The impression now is, that he has determined to hazard the defence of the capital, and this impression gains strength when it is known that he has Congress to lay the blame upon in case he suffers another defeat.

Another battle, in my humble opinion, will be of immense advantage to the United States; for if Gen. Scott moves upon the capital the Mexicans will certainly be defeated, and if he remains here, and there is no more fighting, the enemy will contrive to come out of the war conquerors. They will endeavor to make it appear that the Yankees, fearful of risking a battle at their principle city, (unintelligible) for peace, and in the eyes of the world they will be able to make a tolerably clear case.

Santa Anna has recently levied a contribution –a force loan it may be called– upon the inhabitants of the capital, in which he calls for $280, 875 to carry on the war. The churches and convents, as well as private individuals, are (unintelligible), and it is hinted that the tyrant has left the names of some of his few friends off of that tax list. The foreigners who have been called upon without (unintelligible), have made regular protests it is said against the unjust exaction, but Santa Anna does not stand trifles in his money transactions.

From every indication it would appear that Gen. Scott intends an immediate movement upon the city of Mexico –at least within a week or ten days. Hard bread is being baked for the march, the quartermasters have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness, and in every department all is bustle and activity. It being found impossible to receive clothing from the United States, hundreds of Mexicans are hard at work putting our men in uniform. Some even think that the army will move before Gen. Pierce comes up; but it is hardly probable that Gen. Scott will march before that officer gets within one or two day's march. At least 1500 hundred of the sick will be left behind, but a majority of them would be in a situation to take up arms in case the garrison was attacked.

Speaking of sickness, the South Carolina regiment has suffered more than any other in the service. This was not expected. It was thought that the Northern regiments would suffer most (unintelligible) in the tropics, but the New Yorkers and South Carolinians, out of 900 strong with first mustered, now turn out but about 400. –Of the other 500 some 140 have died, 200 have been left sick in the rear, and the rest are now in hospital here. The health of the regiment is improving, however, and many are convalescing.

Yours, &c. G. W. K.

[NO]

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p1c5 Kendall from Puebla

Puebla, Mexico, July 30, 1847

We have s story, tolerable well authenticated, that over a million of dollars has recently arrived at Vera Cruz for the army. A day after the (unintelligible), again, for how is this money to find its way up in season to relieve the great necessities of those who have so long suffering? The straits to which our commissaries and quartermasters have been driven, as well as the army agent, Mr. Hargous, to raise the means for the absolute support of the men, has beat the kite–flying and skinning days of '37 all to pieces. A dollar is a dollar, and more than a dollar, here in Puebla.

In relation to the movements of the army, I can give you no other than the impression that Gen. Scott intends immediately on the arrival of Gen. Pierce. The men composing the division of Gens. Worth and Twiggs are probably better soldiers than any at present in the world. In the first place, the material is equal if not superior to any they are equally well drilled; have the best of officers to lead them; and, what is of the greatest importance, a great portion of them; have been in the front rank of battle in numerous fights. Nor is the division of Gen. Quitman, which will doubtless take an active part in any operations yet to take place, much behind the others. The regiments composing it, the New York, South Carolina, and the 1st and the 2d Pennsylvania, have been long enough in the field to become well drilled, while Stetpee's admirable battery is attached to it. The army that will set down before Mexico will be the strongest and the best appointed we have yet had in the field, and let the Mexicans fight as they will the result of any contest that may take place cannot be doubted (unintelligible).

I have seen a gentleman who left the careful awaiting (unintelligible). The story that the city was partially overflowed is confirmed, but the report of the extent of the fundation, and of the (unintelligible) it had occasioned, have been exaggerated. There was a strong belief among many of the foreigners that there was a perfect understanding between Gen. Scott and Santa Anna, and that a peace would grow out of it. The Congress was still al leggerheads with the President, all business was completely at a stand and the only law known was that of the military.

The obstinacy of Congress, the deep hatted of the Mexicans to the Americans, and the slight hold Santa Anna has upon the people, may, probably will, prevent his own schemes and those of the English from being carried out –the coming fortnight will tell the story. No wonder the English are anxious to see this war brought to a close, for it has already proved most disastrous to their heavy mercantile interests in the country, and its continuance must hasten (unintelligible)

Difficult (unintelligible) it now is to get letter off to the case, I shall continue to attempt it, for the events of the coming month must be pregnant with interest.

Yours, &c. G. W.K.

P.S. –I might mention, as an item of interest to his numerous friends, that Gen. Shields is here and in good health. The health of the army continues to improve, and a large portion of the soldiers may now be said to be acclimated.

[NO]

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 Later from Army of Taylor

From the N. O. Picayune, Aug. 6

Later from Gen. Taylor's Army

The steamer Ohio, Capt. J. Swiler, Jr. arrived yesterday morning from Brazos Santiago, touching at Galveston. She left the Brazos on Saturday, the 31st ult, and Galveston on the 2d inst.

The Flag says that Col Gorman, with four companies of Indiana volunteers, passed up the river on the 24th ult, on the Big Hatche; Lt Col E Dumont, with two companies on the 25th, on the Col Hunt; and the remaining four were on the Col McKee, at the mouth of the river, all bound for the camp of instruction. the regiment is nearly 1000 strong, and has suffered a loss of but four men since leaving Indiana.

For the particulars of news from Monterey and Buena Vista we refer our readers to the interesting letters of our correspondent, who were glad to find in improved health writing from the battle field of Buena Vista. The following items are all from the Flag of the 28th ult:

The Third Dragoons. –A letter was received on Monday, by our commandant, form Gen. Hopping, stating that he had received information that Gen Urrea was on this side of the mountains whit some 4000 men, and requesting a squadron of dragoons –but we learn that their colonel chooses to remain here until he has received his complement of horses, in the meantime drilling his men as throughly as could be done elsewhere. A company of mounted men form Ohio, who had recently arrived here, was, therefore, sent up by the first boat, and will report to Gen Hopping immediately for duty.

Col. Caravajal. –We understand form several sources entitled to credit that this worthy was on Friday last at a rancho called La Vacaria, some twenty–five leagues distant, on the road to Linares, with a force numbering about 250 men, having been joined by Galan, another guerrilla chief. They are said to have detained a large number of mules loaded with corn, soap, sugar and other produce, destined for this place; beside one hundred cargoes of goods which had been sent from here to Monterey. They appear determined to spare neither friends nor foes, but confiscate all they can intercept as fair booty –looking upon those interested as given “aid and comfort” to the enemy. A party of sixty men are reported to have been, a few days since, within two or three leagues of this place, picking up deserters form the Mexican army, and impressing others into their service from the various ranchos in our neighborhood. A squadron of mounted men could soon open the way for the trader; and we understand that our commandant has an eye upon the proceedings of these commissioned parties, and we hope soon to hear that the roads are cleared and made safe for the transmission of merchandize of all descriptions.

Capt. E. A. Ogden has been relieved at his own request from the post of quartermaster at the mouth of the Rio Grande, and Major Anderson assigned to duty at tha place. The occasion of Capt. Ogden’s retirement demands of us a word in praise of the zeal and untiring industry he has displayed in the discharge of the duties which have devolved upon him since the commencement of the war. In taking charge of the affairs of the department at the mouth of the river, a world of obstacles had to be encountered and a vast of responsibility assumed. How he has discharged the trust reposed on him, the regularity and order with which every thing have been conducted gives sufficient evidence. An uninterrupted navigation of the Rio Grande form the mouth of the river to Camargo has been kept up throughout the whole year, against obstacles which by nearly every one were considered insurmountable. In the transportation of the troops and supplies there has been no delay; they have been forwarded with a despacth and safety deserving the highest commendation. At his immediate post the enry of the man shows more apparent. One year ago the post at the mouth of the Rio Grande was a barren sand–beach; and millions of dollar worth of public property was being landed there without any protection from weather, and immense losses were sustained in consequence. In a brief space of time commodious and secure storehouses were erected , and as we viewed the place a few days ago it has the appearance of a thriving commercial town, with an industrious population busted at the various avocations. A substantial long wharf, several hundred feet long, has been completed, a ship yard for the repair of steamboats and vessels is in operation, and nothing seems to have been left undone which it was in Capt. Ogden’s power to accomplish for the advancement of the Government interest. The zeal he has displayed in the discharge of his multifarious duties is the theme of universal praise, and as a memento of the esteem in which he is
August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 News from General Wool

[Special Correspondence of the Picayune]

Communications were received from General Wool last night by Gen. Taylor, transmitting papers from the city of Mexico to the 26th ult. they contain the intelligence of the offer of the United States Government to negotiate, made by Mr. Trist, which is stated as the Rio Grande to 36 degrees, and from thence to the Pacific ocean for a boundary, the Unites States to indemnify Mexico by money for the land thus ceded. The British Minister has expressed his opinion that this offer is highly favorable to Mexico, and such a one as she can accept in justice to herself without compromising her dignity or honor. The Mexican press, however, regard this offer as quite as outrageous as all former ones, and pronounces it out of the question to accept it, still (unintelligible) the most warlike language, denouncing the United States and striving to incite the people.

J. E. D.

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 From Buena Vista

Camp Buena Vista, July 18, 1847.

I arrived to Saltillo from Monterrey on Friday at noon, in company with Gen. Cushing and staff, and came out here to camp in the afternoon. The general comes to assume command of his brigade, consisting of the 2d Mississippi, Virginia and North Carolina regiments. The encampment really presents a most beautiful and picturesque appearance, spreading over a vast plain just sufficiently inclined to enable the water to run off rapidly. The volunteers brigade is encamped according to the regulation, and every tent and camp–dire is its appropriate place. The artillery and the dragoons are in the left of the field, Gen. Wool and staff in the center, and the infantry brigade on the right. The discipline of Gen. Wool is extremely strict; and enforced, and discipline is nine points in the game, especially where volunteers are concerned. Company drills take place every morning, battalion and regimental drills every afternoon, and brigade reviews every Sunday. As regards the climate, it suits me, being an Eastern man, to a degree --the air being delightful cool and bracing at all times, except during the middle of the day for a few hours; a shower lays the dust almost every afternoon. With respect to the health of the troops, I regret to say that the Mississippi and North Carolina regiments are suffering severely, and have been for some time, form chills and fevers and diarrheas, but principally the later. The average number of diarrheas in each regiment is about three a day for a fortnight; the sick list of the North Carolina regiment is now about 150 --that of the Mississippi regiment about 100. There are about 120 on the sick list of the Virginia regiment, not one death has occurred during the three weeks they have been up here. This sickness is manly attributed to the imprudence of the officers and men in eating too heartily of fruit, which abounds here now, and in keeping up the practice after they are attacked. Recently Gen. Wool has prohibited fruit from being brought into camp, and the beneficial effects to this proceeding have begun to felt, the sick list decreasing gradually every day. It seems rather a hard matter to deprive the men of fruit, which if eaten in moderation would prove beneficial, but as the men will not take care of themselves they must be taken care of. It does seems as if they required as much looking after as children.

Yours, truly, J. E.D.

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p4c2 More from Saltillo

Sunday Night, July 18, 1847.

Since writing my letter of this morning, Capt. Rucker has returned from his expedition to Mazapil, and confirms the report received from him. He found no troops there, but had every reason to believe that Minon's cavalry (under whose command is not know) were at or in the neighborhood of Matehuala. An express was despatched by the Mexicans at Mazapil, immediately upon the approach of Capt. R., to the enemy wherever he was, informing them of his approach that they might be cut off. Capt. R. saw nothing of them on his return, although I have no doubt it would have afforded him infinite satisfaction to do so. --Information has been received from Parras to--day to the effect that Don Manuel Ibarro had received an express two days since, announcing the approach of a body of upwards of 300 Indians, who had burned and destroyed three ranchos on their way and killed three hundred unjustice, and did not think of calling their rulers to account for involving them in them.

foreign wars, for believing them always inevitable, they troubles themselves very little about their justice or

The civil strife and turmoil with which the pages of her history are (unintelligible), was not connected with her

But why bring up the example of Rome? Rome was a nation of warriors; her descent was proudly claimed from Mars the God of Battle; with her, military genius comprised all that mankind admire of great and noble; the very term from which our word virtue is derived, with her signified valor. Trained to battle from his youth, the Roman was

But why bring up the example of Rome? Rome was a nation of warriors; her descent was proudly claimed from Mars the God of Battle; with her, military genius comprised all that mankind admire of great and noble; the very term from which our word virtue is derived, with her signified valor. Trained to battle from his youth, the Roman was

But why bring up the example of Rome? Rome was a nation of warriors; her descent was proudly claimed from Mars the God of Battle; with her, military genius comprised all that mankind admire of great and noble; the very term from which our word virtue is derived, with her signified valor. Trained to battle from his youth, the Roman was

But why bring up the example of Rome? Rome was a nation of warriors; her descent was proudly claimed from Mars the God of Battle; with her, military genius comprised all that mankind admire of great and noble; the very term from which our word virtue is derived, with her signified valor. Trained to battle from his youth, the Roman was

But why bring up the example of Rome? Rome was a nation of warriors; her descent was proudly claimed from Mars the God of Battle; with her, military genius comprised all that mankind admire of great and noble; the very term from which our word virtue is derived, with her signified valor. Trained to battle from his youth, the Roman was

But why bring up the example of Rome? Rome was a nation of warriors; her descent was proudly claimed from Mars the God of Battle; with her, military genius comprised all that mankind admire of great and noble; the very term from which our word virtue is derived, with her signified valor. Trained to battle from his youth, the Roman was
But the American people, we rejoice to say, are altogether a different nation from the Roman. Peace, honorable (unintelligible) is their true policy. In order that it might not be possible to disturb it upon every slight occasion – in order that a state of war might not be rashly entered by ambitious and designing rulers – in order that the full sense of the whole people might be brought to bear upon a question of such momentous importance – the power of declaring war was especially reserved to the Representatives of the people and of the States, by the Constitution. It is the privilege of freemen to watch the proceedings of their delegated rulers, to investigate their acts, to scan their motives, and to hold them to a strict accountability. The consequence is, that in this country, no war can be entered into without its exciting a spirit of eager inquiry among the people. If a President, by merely saying “we are at war,” and calling upon Congress to endorse his assertion, can put a padlock upon the lips of a whole nation – if it is, after such declaration on his part, no longer lawful for the people to enquire even whether it be true, that we are at war – (unintelligible) Congress, under pain of being denounced as moral traitors, dare do nothing more than register the rescript of the Executive officer – then we ask of what avail is the clause of the Constitution to which we have alluded? The President, undoubtedly, has it in his power to declare war at any moment he may think proper. He may march a hostile force into Canada, and do some act which may lead to a collision with British forces – he may then send a message to Congress declaring that we are at war – and Congress dare not make any inquiry into the fact, because by so doing they lay themselves liable to the charge of “moral treason.” The power of Congress to declare war, is thus entirely superseded – usurped by the Executive branch of the Government – and the right of questioning the act, let it have been as illegal as it may, is utterly forbidden to the people.

But let us proceed:

“The problem of such an opposition has been once worked out. Such was the opposition of the federal leaders to the war of 1812, and what was the result? A nation’s and a world’s contempt. Degraded and self-despised, the guilty men sought to avoid universal scorn by disavowing the name which their fathers had assumed, and under cover of which they had wrought treason against their country, in their frantic opposition to its constituted authorities. In discarding their once-cherished name, and adopting one not associated with crimes against their country, they abandoned no principle, and changed no feeling. On the contrary, having been joined by a few renegades from the old republican party, and assuming the name of the whig, they are now carrying on against their country, through its public authorities, a campaign which bids fair to exceed, in boldness and atrocity; that of the federal party during the war of 1812. By perfidy in her foreign relations, and the contempt Mexico has brought upon herself by her internal administration, she finds nothing in the wide world base enough to sympathize with her, and become her ally, except the whig leaders in the United States. If she does not receive from them men, money, and arms, she receives that which is more essential to her success in her system of robbery and murder – she receives assurances that she is right, and we are wrong; that it is a war of the Executive, and not of the people of the United States; that it is looked upon with abhorrence by the mass of our population, who would if they could, and will when they can, withdraw our armies from her territories, without exacting indemnity for the past or security for the future, and perchance will pay her all the damages and expenses she has sustained by the war! With this encouragement and those assurances before them, is it a wonder that the Mexican leaders will not listen to the voice of peace on any terms short of those the federal leaders propose – the entire withdrawal of our armies from Mexico? Is it a wonder that Jarauta and his robber band beset the roads for the purpose of shooting down not only our soldiers, but every American who may incautiously come in front of their coverts? Is it a wonder that Urrea's bandits murder our fellow-citizens in the highways, tear out their hearts and thrust them into their mouths, mutilate and hang them by their heels in the trees? Is it a wonder that the Mexican lancers feel at perfect liberty to ride over the field of battle, and murder our wounded officers and soldiers, who, their whig allies tell them, have invaded their country without justice or right, to rob and destroy them?”

Before proceeding any farther, it may be proper to remind the reader that one of these “degraded and self-despised” men, here spoken of, is at this moment Secretary of State – that another fills the seat left vacant by Marshall – and that t third is the Locofoco Chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations.

It cannot be denied that a part of these allegations at least is true. There has been sympathy and alliance between prominent Mexicans and prominent Americans; nay, the most prominent men of both nations. There is a small mistake, however, as to the party to which the American portion of them belonged. The Whigs had no hand in restoring Santa Anna to his country – they are not responsible for the sudden order brought out of disorder upon that officer’s return – their souls are not stained with the blood of their brethren shed in the bloody battles of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo. The man who permitted this author of all the mischief which has occurred upon these occasions to return to his country, there to reanimate the drooping spirits of the war party and to reorganise the broken forces of their army, was JAMES K. POLK – the party which has justified the proceeding, is the Locofoco party – the journal which has been foremost in applauding the policy, is the Washington Union. “With this encouragement before them,” it is not, indeed, a wonder that the “Mexican leaders will not listen to peace.” It is, indeed, no wonder that “Jarauta and his robber bands beset the roads for the purpose of shooting down, not only soldiers, but every American who may incautiously come in front of their coverts.” Under such circumstances, it is not, indeed, strange that “Urrea’s bands murder our fellow-citizens in the highway, and that the Mexican lancers feel at perfect liberty to ride over the field of battle and murder our wounded officers.” Under the encouragement afforded them by the only man who could encourage them thus far, all this was to have been expected, and everybody foresaw it but James K. Polk and the editor of the Government Journal.

[NO]
We publish the next paragraph for the sake of its peculiar atrocity:

“There is a fearful responsibility resting upon the Whig leaders. On their heads rests the blood not only of the Mexicans who are encouraged to persist and perish in a hopeless war, but of their own countrymen, of their own sons, brothers, and friends, whom they encourage those Mexicans to waylay and kill in their chapparals and among their mountains. The guilt of a double crime – of two crimes the most atrocious known to human laws – rests upon their souls – treason and murder; treason to their country, and the murder not only of Mexicans, but of their own countrymen, kindred, and friends.”

It appears, then, that if those 100,000 volunteers, from the Southern and Southwestern States, who the Union told us in three months would be revelling in the halls of the Montezumas, are not forthcoming – if General Taylor contrary to his own judgement was pushed forward without a force sufficient to advance as he wished, and left exposed to the attack of five times his number – if the ten Regiments, voted by Congress in February with all the money asked for, have not yet arrived in place – if in spite of the fact that he had a majority in both branches of the Legislature, the President’s conduct of the war has been marked by doubt, indecision, and inertness – the responsibility rests upon the Whig party, who had no power to restrain, and who have proved their devotion by shedding their choicest blood upon the field of battle.

The opposition of the Whig party to this war has been sustained – triumphantly sustained – by the people of these United States. There is no mistaking the voice in which they have just spoken. It is the majority of the people then – of that people to whom he owes the office that he fills – whose creature he is, and by whose breath his presidential life exists – that Mr. Polk, through his organ, charges with treason. Treason against whom? Against themselves? Or against the majesty of James K. Polk? And has it come to this? Has the President already assumed the substance, as he has heretofore done the forms of royalty, and is there such an offence as treason against majesty in the person of James K. Polk? Murder! The majority of this nation guilty of murder? Murder of whom? Of their own sons, and brothers, and kinsmen; for chiefly of Whigs have the armies been composed, and Whig States have contributed largely to its rank and file.

[To Be Continued]

August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p4c3 News from Vera Cruz and Matamoros

From the New Orleans Picayune, August 11.

Arrival of the Steamship Telegraph

The steamship Telegraph arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, having touched at the Brazos on the voyage.

We understand that she left Vera Cruz on the 4th inst., but brings no news whatever. We received no news or letters from that city.

Passengers by the Telegraph – Col. Randell; Capt. Ogden and lady; Maj. Arthur, Quartermaster U.S.A.; Miss Townsend; Capt. Walker; Lieut. Conch; Lieut J.J. Mun; Dr. Beard; L.A. Whitley; J.S. Holt; J. Lawrence; W.W. Enethro; J. Fatterson; Mr. Carr; Capt. Clendew; Downdsend, Clough and Wells.

We are indebted to the commander of the Telegraph for a copy of the Matamoros Flag of the 4th inst.

Quite the most important article in the Flag is the following:

Advance upon San Luis. – From Major Arthur, formerly quartermaster at Cerralvo, we learn that Gen. Wool has received orders to proceed with the advance of Gen. Taylor’s column, on the 20th inst., in the direction of Encarnacion, some twenty leagues from Buena Vista, where he will establish a depot, into which three months’ rations will be thrown. The army will then advance upon San Luis and communication be opened with Tampico or Tuspan, from whence supplies will thereafter be received. All the mules and other means of transportation have been ordered above and activity prevails throughout the whole department.

The Flag gives sad accounts of outrages perpetrated in the vicinity of Matamoros, by Mexicans upon their own countrymen and countrywomen. The same paper mentions that the resident Mexicans near Parrass, lately applied to Gen. Taylor to protect them from armed bands of their own countrymen, sent thither for the express purpose of ravaging the country and destroying the crops. The Flag thinks that aid should be furnished them.

The Flag has more rumors from Gen. Scott’s army, but this time we are happy to known that they are false, being entirely Mexican. We do not repeat them.

Col. Davenport inspected the Ohio regiment on the 31st ult. The result was very creditable to the appearance and discipline of the troops. They generally enjoy good health, there only being a few cases of diarrhea among them.
August 17, 1847, RW47v24n66p4c3 Captain Aulick

From the Washington Union, of Thursday

Capt. Aulick. – We lay the following correspondence between Capt. Aulick and the Secretary of the Navy, with great pleasure before our readers. It is calculated to put down an idle rumor from an anonymous source in a newspaper, which Capt. Aulick never would have condescended to make the basis of official action, if it had not also been suggested that this rumor had reached the department. It appears from the Secretary’s letter, that there was no foundation for any such supposition. We do not mistake Capt Aulick’s character when we say that he defies any one to produce the slightest evidence of the truth of such a rumor. Let it be submitted to the department, and Capt. A. is prepared to meet it, let it assume whatever phase it may.

Washington, 11th August, 1847.

Sir: Since my return to the United States in command of the United States ship Potomac, I learn, with a sensibility which you can readily appreciate, that reports are in circulation affecting my character as an officer of the Navy, and especially my conduct when I was in command of the navy battery during the bombardment of Vera Cruz. I respectfully inquire if any report has been made to the department by my commanding officers, or any others, (as rumor says there has been,) of conduct on that occasion unbecoming the honor of the service, or my own character.

After a service of more than thirty-seven years, and having in the last war, and since, been often placed in circumstances which would at least have evinced a want of personal courage, if it had been my misfortune to labor under such an infirmity, I feel very acutely such an accusation. If I had exhibited it on the occasion referred to, I presume that some of the officers who were on that service, or in the squadron, and whose duty it is to protect the honor of the navy, would have taken the steps necessary to an examination; and I therefore respectfully ask if any such report has been made to the department? If there be any such report, I may hope to be excused in asking that such measures may be taken as speedily as may be deemed proper, as will establish the charge, if true, or vindicate me from the aspersion.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, &c.

J.H. Aulick.

Hon. J.Y. Mason,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

Navy Department, Aug. 12. 1847

Sir: I have received your letter of the 12th instant, in which you state that reports are in circulation affecting your “character as an officer of the navy,” and especially your conduct when “in command of the navy battery during the bombardment of Vera Cruz,” and inquire whether any report has been made to the department by your commanding officers, or any others, of conduct, on the occasion referred to, unbecoming the honor of your service or your own character.

In reply to your inquiry, you are informed that no report of unbecoming conduct on your part, on the occasion which you mention, and no statement in which your “personal courage” is called into question, has been made to the department by your commanding officers, or any others.

In the despatch of your commanding officer, Com. Perry, dated at Vera Cruz, on the 25th of March last, your name is mentioned in the following terms: "Capt. Aulick, assisted by Commander Mackenzie and several lieutenants, had the direction of mounting the guns and opening the fire, and well and bravely was the duty performed;" and in the General Order of Commodore Perry, dated March 29, ’47, congratulating those under his command upon the surrender of Vera Cruz, he states that he "feels called upon, by a high sense of duty, to tender his warmest thanks to the commanders, officers, and men of the squadron, for the admirable zeal and courage with which they have executed their respective duties.”

There is nothing on the files of the department which would justify a belief that these terms of commendation employed by Com. Perry are, so far as respects yourself or others, undeserved.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J.Y. Mason.

August 20, 1847, RW47v24n67p2c1 Security on the Frontier

Mr. Brownson's Article

We republish and append this article at the suggestion of a friend, who seemed to think that the position assigned to it the other day was not sufficiently prominent. It should be read by every man in this country; nay, it should be gotten by heart. Never was there sterner, juster or more well–timed rebuke. At the very moment when the Whigs, those who voted against Mr. Polk are denounced by the organ in his pay as traitors and allies of Mexico for saying that this war was made in violation of the constitution, one of the most prominent men of the party, and the man who edits the Review which is supposed to represent Democratic feeling says the same thing. The myrmidons of government may thus see what the people think of them and their master.

From Brownson's Quarterly Review

The course the President should have pursued is plain and obvious. On learning the state of things on the frontier, the critical condition of our army of occupation, he should have demanded of Congress the reinforcement and supplies necessary to relieve it, AND SECURE THE PURPOSE FOR WHICH IT WAS AVOWEDLY SENT TO THE RIO GRANDE; and if he believed it proper or necessary, to have in addition laid before Congress, a full and truthful statement of our relations with Mexico, including all the unadjusted complaints, past and present, we had against her, ACCOMPANIED BY THE RECOMMENDATION OF A DECLARATION OF WAR. He would then have kept within the limits of his duty, proved himself a plain constitutional President, AND LEFT THE RESPONSIBILITY OF WAR OR NO WAR TO CONGRESS, THE ONLY WAR MAKING POWER KNOWN TO OUR LAWS. Congress, after mature deliberation might or might not have declared war – MOST LIKELY WOULD NOT, but whether so or not, the responsibility would have rested with it, and no blame would have attached to the President.

Unhappily, this course did not occur to the President, or was too plain and simple to meet his approbation. By declaring that the war already existed, and by the act of Mexico herself, the President relieved Congress of the responsibility of the war, by throwing it all on Mexico. But since he cannot fasten it on Mexico, – FOR WAR DID NOT ALREADY EXIST, OR IF SO, BY OUR ACT, AND NOT HERS, – it necessarily recoils upon himself, and he must bear the responsibility of doing WHAT THE CONSTITUTION FORBIDS HIM TO DO, – OF MAKING WAR WITHOUT THE INTERVENTION OF CONGRESS. IN EFFECT THEREFORE, HE HAS TRAMPLED THE CONSTITUTION UNDER HIS FEET; SET A DANGEROUS PRECEDENT, AND, BY THE OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF A PALPABLE FALSEHOOD, SULLIED THE NATIONAL HONOR. It is with no pleasure that we speak thus of the chief Magistrate of the Union, FOR WHOSE ELEVATION TO HIS HIGH AND RESPONSIBLE OFFICE WE OURSELVES VOTED. But whatever may be our attachment to party, or the respect we hold to be due from all good citizens to the civil magistrate, we cannot SEE THE CONSTITUTION VIOLATED, AND THE NATIONAL HONOR SACRIFICED, whether by friend or foe, from good motives or bad, without entering, feeble though it be, our stern and indignant protest.

[NO]

August 20, 1847, RW47v24n67p2c1 The Union and the War

[Concluded] (fromp1)

The more we examine the extraordinary article in the Union, upon which we commented yesterday, the more fully we are confirmed in an opinion adopted at first sight, that it was not written by the senior editor of that paper. The style is entirely unlike anything we have seen from that quarter. It is more vigorous, and less guarded – not, however, that the vigor is at all remarkable. We continue our extracts:

"Is it not so? What, in effect, is the language of the federal leaders to the Mexicans? "Mr Polk has made this war without cause, and in violation of the constitution, and our armies ought to be withdrawn from your territory – Fight on until we can turn him out, when those armies shall be withdrawn, and we will give you just such a peace as you want!" This, and nothing short of it, is the substance of the language held by the Whig leaders to the military chieftains of Mexico. The consequence is, a perfect concert between our Whig leaders and the Mexican chieftains. The Whig leaders say, our armies ought to be withdrawn from the Mexican territory; which is virtually a promise to withdraw them when they get the power. The Mexican chieftains say, "we will not even treat for peace until your armies are withdrawn" – in other words, "Until the Whig leaders are made the rulers of the United States." We do not say there is an express written compact between the Whig leaders and the Mexican chieftains, in which it is stipulated that they will make common cause against the democracy of the United States; but we do say there is a palpable practical concert, the effect of which is perfectly understood by both parties. The federal wolf, under the whig sheepskin, knows that he has no chance to acquire power but to put down the democracy of the U. States; and that he has no chance, amidst the flood of prosperity that rolls in upon the country, to effect that object, but by making the Mexican war unpopular. The Mexican chieftains know that the continuance of their power to plunder their own country and insult the United States, alike depends upon putting down our democracy, and siding men who publicly proclaim their intention to yield all that their country’s enemy demands. To put down the American democracy is, therefore, the common object of the Whig leaders and the Mexican chieftains – Both know that a
We will pass over the scurrility of this paragraph, leaving it to work its own destruction. We only regret that it cannot be read by every man in the United States, in order that it might be fully understood to what the President, speaking through his organ, can descend – in order that the people might learn what offence they have given to our high and mighty rulers in Washington, by their late demonstrations against them – in order that those who have heretofore considered themselves the sovereign power in the land, might be taught to exercise their privilege of voting for their representatives in such a manner as to give least possible umbrage to the royal personage at Washington. – There can be no doubt that the result of the late elections has sunk deep in the royal bosom, and that his majesty has taken this method to rebuke his liege subjects, and to remind them of the duty due to his sacred person. To doubt his power of making war when he may think proper – to dispute even the proclamation issuing from the palace that the country was at war – to pretend to scrutinise the acts of so high a personage – to criticise his military appointments, even to the point of asserting that royal favor cannot in one month make a great general out of an obscure attorney, and to give still higher color to the “treason” by voting down the men whom kit was his majesty’s express wish to see in his councils – what is all this but lese majestie – a direct insult to the sovereign in person?

But let us look in another direction. It has now been four months since the battle of Cerro Gordo destroyed the force of the Mexican generals. We were told by the Union, before this war broke out, that if Mexico dared to wag a finger in defiance of our repeated threats – if she did not do precisely what she was required to do by the United States – the western and south-western States would furnish 100,000 men for the invasion of her territory, who, in three months, would plant the stars and stripes, on the towers of the Montezumas! No fish-woman ever scolded longer, louder, and in a higher tone of exasperation, or in more wretched taste, than did the editor of that paper from one week’s end to the other. “The infatuated Mexicans” said he; “are they mad?” he exclaimed. “they are bent on their own ruin,” &c. These were common phrases, addressed, not to the Mexicans, for they could not hear them, but to his own partizans. Well! at last the war came. Instead of the 100,000 men, that were to be revelling in the halls of the Montezumas, at the end of three months, Gen. Taylor, after two splendid victories, found himself at the head of not a tenth part of that number; instead of being in Mexico, they were but a short distance, comparatively, from the Rio Grande; instead of being furnished with every thing necessary for an army of invasion, which was expected to terminate a war of such magnitude in six months, they were deficient in means to transport the little baggage which they had – To put the crowning stone upon all this – at the end of six months, after that gallant little army had made marches, endured hardships, fought battles, and gained victories, such as we read of in romance – while it was yet at an immense distance from its home, surrounded by enemies, with the greatest of all the Mexican generals let loose by the inconceivable folly of Mr. Polk, in their front – as if to offer up a sacrifice to confirm the new friendship struck up between them, and to bind the victim hand and foot, so that there could be no possibility of escape – all his regular forces were withdrawn from Gen. Taylor, and he was left with nothing but raw volunteers, who had never seen service before, to encounter Santa Anna with five times his number. So inconceivably stupid, was the whole affair of the withdrawal of these troops and the exposure of Gen. Taylor, that we have seen it stated, that Santa Anna, when first informed of it, said it was utterly impossible! In spite of all obstacles, interposed by executive jealousy, that glorious old man triumphed; but that jealousy, or something else has prevented him, thus far, from reaping the reward of his labors. It has now been six months since the glorious battle of Buena Vista put the seal to his fame; yet he is still inactive – still unable to advance – still crippled in his projected and ardently desired operations, for want of both men and money. Congress has furnished the Executive with all that it asked for of both, yet General Taylor is still inactive, notwithstanding his express wishes to pursue a different policy.

But let us look in another direction. It has now been four months since the battle of Cerro Gordo destroyed the force which Buena Vista had already seriously shaken. In that time Mexico has had an opportunity, under the skillful direction of Mr. Polk’s pet, to re-organize the war, and to present a front even more formidable than that which it showed at Cerro Gordo. We have been told, over and often by the Union, that Gen. Scott was to have 20,000 men in the field, ready to march on the capital by the 1st of July; yet on the thirtieth he was still at Puebla, unable or unwilling, from the inferiority of his force, to advance.

And does the Union, in the face of all this mismanagement, crippling, as it does, the operations, and marring the combinations of our most skilful generals, at the same time that it encourages the enemy, and enables their leaders to persuade the populace that we are afraid of them, pretend to ascribe the feeble and inefficient manner in which this war has been conducted, and the inordinate length to which it has been protracted to the speeches of Whig leaders, or to paragraphs in Whig newspapers? Are any of its readers so thoroughly stupid as to think, for a moment, that paragraphs published in the papers here, two thousand miles from the scene of action, are going to keep those in the ranks whom the utmost efforts of their own generals, aided by the example of hand and voice, can scarce induce to stand a volley from our troops?

“We do not say there is a written contract.” Indeed! that is very liberal; why not say so? it would be far more effective, and equally true, with the positive declaration that “there is a palpable practical concert” between the Whig leaders and the Mexican chieftains. Truly this is a modest accusation from the organ of James K. Polk, the man between whom and Santa Anna there was a “concert” so “palpable,” that he cannot venture to deny it, and so “practical,” that it has already cost us the lives of hundreds of brave soldiers, who might otherwise, at this moment, be alive and well.

The object of this paragraph is apparent enough. It is to induce the people of this country to believe that their honor is concerned in supporting James K Polk, the author of those feeble and inefficient measures, from the effect of which it required the combined genius of Scott and Taylor to extricate the country with credit – the man always ready to stand noun–substantive to any epithet won by the valor of these great generals and their invincible troops – the man who would gladly, were it possible, appropriate all the laurels which he has been unable to blast upon the brow of another – the man who would reap where he has not sown, and would claim credit for the great deeds his utmost efforts have been unable to mar.

Such articles as that we have been commenting on, can do serious injury only to those who write them. They bear with them their own condemnation – they require only to be read to be generally denounced. If the elections were to go over again, the Whig candidates would require no better text–book than this turgid mass of insane fury, to prove the utter incapacity of those who are placed at the head of affairs. We trust in Heaven the time may be far distant when the Whig cause shall stand in need of such a defender as the author of this article, or such excuses as he has offered, for the deplorable mismanagement of his superiors.

Judgement has already been pronounced upon this most feeble and most corrupt Administration, and all that the fury of politicians, parting with the spoils with as much complacency as a man would with the whole of his teeth may dictate; cannot alter the decree, or stay the execution. The great West – they who have had most to do with this war – whose sufferings have been greatest and whose glory has been chief – have just spoken in tones which cannot be mistaken. In the midst of all the pride, pomp and circumstance of war – with their sons in the midst of them bearing on their brows the laurels still green from the bloody fields of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo – they have pronounced upon James K. Polk, the author of this war and the man who expected to derive from it unfading glory and a new lease of power.

August 24, 1847, RW47v24n68p2c3 News from Vera Cruz and Tampico

Arrival of the Steamship New Orleans

Later from Vera Cruz and Tampico.

The steamship New Orleans, Capt. Auld, arrived yesterday afternoon, having sailed from Vera Cruz the evening of the 7th inst, and from Tampico the evening of the 10th. Capt. Auld reports the steamship Mary Kingland having left Tampico via the Brazos, for this port on the 6th inst.

The steamship Fanny arrived at Tampico on the 7th, and was to have left for Vera Cruz on the 10th inst.

The New Orleans brings mails from Vera Cruz and Tampico. We regret to learn that Tampico mail was stolen at an early hour yesterday morning and rifled of a portion of its contents. Some of the letters were subsequently recovered, though had supposed he disposed of them by casting them in a water closet. In the mail was a letter addressed to Wm wift, Esq, from the contents of which it would appear that three U.S. treasury notes, numbered 321, 322 and 323, for 500 each have been abstracted. They were dated Oct. 31, 1846. It is supposed that the other valuable letters have been stolen.

August 20, 1847, RW47v24n67p2 Mexican guerrillas

Lieutenant Waters, with a detachment of Capt. Besancon’s company, returned from a scout of the 6th inst. about 15 miles from the city while riding along the banks of the Medellin river, they were fired by some Mexicans concealed in the bushes on the opposite side of the river, but no harm was done. The (unintelligible) that one of the party, Mr. Wilkinson, being in advance, entered a house which had from all appearance, been abandoned with precipitation, and found in some papers, among which was the following pass;

2d Company of the East.

The chiefs of guerrillas all please let the bearer, Crespin Marin, pass unmolested with ten mules, as he goes to Vera Cruz to get provisions for the guerrillas.

God and Liberty!
To the Commanders of guerrillas.

A train left the evening of the 6th inst for the army above under the command of Col Wilson of the 12th Infantry. The trains was escorted about 1000 men. The following officers are enumerated by the Sun as commanding them: Capts. Clarke, Morris, Alord, Hoke, Hornsby, and Williams, of the Infantry; and Luis Jones, Cantwell, Waddell, Wheedeen, Wilkins, Dole, Sears and Creanor, of the artillery. Some accounts set down the number of troops in this train at from 1500 to 2000; our own correspondent says one thousand. Verbal reports say that Col Wilson was taken suddenly ill and could not proceed, and that the command devolved upon another officer whose name is not recollected. Our letters say nothing of this.

On the 3d inst. a mail arrived in Vera Cruz from Jalapa. The Boletin de las Noticias was received by it as late as the 30th of July. This is a little paper thoroughly Mexican, published in Jalapa. From it we learn more particulars of Gen. Pierce’s march through that town than had before been received. The Boletin says that the train which the general escorted passed by without halting, but he with 300 dragoons entered the city and addressed the following note to the corporation –(we give the Sun’s translation)

To the Corporation of Jalapa: a brigade of the Americans army, now encamped near Jalapa, are in want of provisions. I therefore ask this corporation of Jalapa to furnish, at a reasonable price, all this brigade is in need of. I will take the necessary steps to protect those who will furnish those provisions. If, at two o’clock this evening, precisely, the provisions demanded are not forwarded, all member of the corporation will be sent to Perote as prisoners.

F. Pierce.

W K Van Bonlin, Brigade Q.M.

The reply of the corporation is given on the Spanish side of the Sun. The members are very indignant at what they consider the harsh language of the general. They make no difficulty about the provisions; these could have been had at reasonable rates without any threat. They deplore their unfortunate position, being defenceless. –This they say should have protected them from insult. –Gen. Pierce is the first American officer, they say, who has thus had occasion to find fault with them. The reply is pretty "sharp" upon the general, but it is hardly worth translating.

We give from the Sun of Anahuac the following summary of news made from the Boletin:

The same paper says that a Mexican (‘traitor,” it says) was encountered by a party of guerrillas, and being suspicious, he was required to undergo an examination; but having offered resistance, he was killed. Three large packages, containing letters from the officers of the army, to their friends in the United States, were found in his possession.

The Boletin adds: “In said correspondence it is stated that great discord exists between the volunteers and regulars of the American army, and that this may cause them to fight among themselves.

That paper is delighted at this, and takes that opportunity to call the Americans "highway robbers,” and “Yankees,” &c. it also says that it appears from intercepted letters, that Gen. Pillow and other American chiefs are of opinion that the attack upon the capital will not be successful –that the commanding officers consider the capital to be in a very strong state of defence, as much for its fortifications as for the number of men who will be brought into action – and finally that the guerrillas had completely interrupted the correspondence between Puebla and Vera Cruz.

The letters after having been read were sent to the Government at Mexico.

Four Americans deserters arrived at Jalapa, on the 30th ult., three of whom were from Puebla and one form Gen. Pierce's train. They were to leave Jalapa for Coatepec. The Boletin says that the desertion was very great from the ranks of the American army, and that seventy-three deserters were advertised in one day, at Puebla. The one from Gen. Pierce's train, is said to report that waggons full of sick follow hum. We don't believe one words of this.

The Boletin further says that the inducements held out to Americans to desert are not enough; that if the government would promise them money or any other rewards, Scott's army would be destroyed. It counsels the Government of States to take measure to foment and encourage desertion.

The same papers says assassination are frequent in Jalapa, as well of Americans as Mexicans. A small garrison is required there for the protection of the inhabitants.

The Boletin of the 30th ult. says its paper of the 27th was so far from giving offence to the Americans that it was bought by many officer and soldiers. The Boletin expresses its surprise that the Americans had not rebuked its freedom with them, as Santa Anna would have done with the press of the capital.
We have received no letter from Tampico by this arrival. Can the following order of Col. Gates have anything to do with this? We hope, at all events, that Mexican papers will be allowed to come through. We underscore one paragraph in the orders.

Orders No. 67.
Headquarters, department of Tampico, August 7, 1847.

1. The following extract from the "Army Regulations" is published for the information of all concerned:

"Private letter or reports relative to military marches and operations are frequently mischievous in design and always disgraceful to the army. They are therefore strictly forbidden; and any officer found guilty of making such report for publication without special permission, or placing the writing beyond his control, so that it finds its way to the present within one month after the termination of the campaign to which it relates, shall be dismissed the service."

2. Any citizen of Tampico found guilty of making similar reports for publication without the sanction of the commanding officer, will be dealt with according to the nature of the case.

By order of Col. Gates: WM. H. Gray, A.A.A.G.

August 20, 1847, RW47v24n67p2c4 From Army of Taylor

From the Army of Gen. Taylor

The U. S. transport schooner Belle, Capt. Morgan, arrived yesterday from Brazos Santiago, having sailed thence on the 6th inst. the papers from Matamoros are no later than have been before received but we have a mail through from the army of Gen. Taylor. Below we give two letters from our correspondent at Buena Vista, first marking out several passages of Mexican rumors which our later advices from the city of Mexico, enable us to stamp with false hood in the outset.

[JSpecial Correspondence of the Picayune.]

Camp Buena Vista, July 24, 1847.

The town has been full of rumors for the last week relative to the movements of the enemy and the prospect of peace, and the camp has of course been fruitful and multiplied, bringing forth the most splendid improbabilities. – [We omit these rumors, as they were all unfounded.] The news supposed to have been brought by express from San Luis, of which I spoke in my last, was of no importance whatever. The dragoons who went on a reconnaissance under Capt. Arnold from Monterey on the 14th inst returned a few days since to that place, and without meeting any of Urrea’s band or hearing of them – everything was perfectly quite.

It pains me to say that the health of the troops here, the infantry brigade, continues to be very bad and the sick list very large. The deaths are principally confined to the North Carolina regiment, which has lost fourteen men within a week. The Virginia regiment has lost three only, old cases, and the Mississippian about the same number. There is very little of interest in this column now, but the other division furnishes enough to make up for it – our turn may come after a while – in the hope of which, adios.

J.E.D.

Camp Buena Vista, July 25, 1847.

As this is the last opportunity I shall have of communicating with you for some ten or twelve days probably, I will give you the only item of news there is afloat. This morning four Mexicans came to Encantada, about 12 miles from here, and stated that in the Zacatecas pass, so called, 25 or 26 miles from here, they had been attacked by a Mexican guerrilla band and robbed of everything about them of the slightest value; that they had been taken to a place near by, blindfolded, and tied and kept there for two days when they were released. The band of robbers they say consisted of 15 armed men. The prisoners were en route from San Luis Potosi for this place, and one of them, an agent of an English firm in Saltillo, had a letter from the city of Mexico postmarked the 7th inst written by a correspondent of the firm. The Mexicans arrived at Encantada this morning and reported their story to the commander of the Texan Rangers there who immediately despatched a party with one of the Mexicans in search of the robbers. This all the news I have for you until I return from an expedition upon which I start to–morrow morning in company with a party of dragoons. Where I am going I will tell you when I come back, as an Irishman would say, and what the purpose of the expedition is for, of neither the one or the other have I the remotest conception. It is sufficient for me to know that I shall have a chance of seeing something, and that it promises variety and adventure, so farewell for the present.
August 24, 1847, RW47v24n68p4c1 Far from peace

The News from Mexico.

It will be seen from the intelligence which we published this morning, that we are as far from peace as ever, and that if the Mexican Congress can have their way, the capture even of the Capital, will have little effect in producing that desirable result. The Enquirer is publishing long articles every morning, asking what the Whigs will do? –It had better tell us what the Executive will do, for beating the Mexicans does not seem to have the effect of inclining them to peace, the least in the world. Before plunging into war, it seems to us, the President should have brought him, how we were get out of it. He was well aware of the obstinate nature of the people he was about to come in contact with, or at least portions of their ante colonial history were often enough told him, in proof of their stubborn disposition.

The information relative to the British ambassador is important and interesting.

August 24, 1847, RW47v24n68p4c1 Editorial on War

Brownson on Polk,

We find, in the Philadelphia North America, a fuller extract from Brownson’s Quarterly Review, upon the subject of the war, which we append. The latter paragraph, it will be seen, is that published yesterday; but the reader will like to see the connection; and the truths there uttered cannot be too often repeated, not too strongly impressed. In the meantime, it is proper to call the reader’s attention to an error, into which we inadvertently fell in describing this article as an extract form the “Democratic” Review; an error into which we were led by the knowledge that Mr. Brownson was long editor of that periodical, to which he was likewise the ablest contributor. –His Quarterly Review is as much Democratic as the other, and is regarded by a large portion of the Democratic party as their organ.

From Brownson’s Quarterly Review.

"Four ourselves, we have regarded the Mexican war from the first as UNCALLED FOR, IMPOLITIC AND UNJUST. We have examined the documents published by order of the government; we have read the official defence of the war in the last annual Message of the President to Congress, and with every disposition to fund our own government in the right; BUT WE ARE BOUND TO SAY, THAT OUR ORIGINAL IMPRESSIONS HAVE BEEN STRENGTENED RATHER THAN WEAKENED. The president, undoubtedly, makes it clear that we have many just causes of complaint against Mexico, which at the time of their occurrence might have justified reprisals, perhaps even war, –but we cannot plead these in JUSTIFICATION OF THE PRESENT WAR; FOR THEY WERE NOT THE GORUND ON WHICH WE PROFESSED TO ENGAGE IN IT. The official announcement of the President to Congress was that war already existed between the two republics, by the act of Mexico herself, and whatever use we may make of old grievances in adjusting the terms of the peace, we can make no use of them in defending the war. We can plead in its defence only the fact on which we grounded it, namely, war exists by the act of Mexico herself. But unhappily, at the time of the official announcement, WAR DID NOT EXISTED BETWEEN THE TWO REPUBLICS AT ALL, for neither republic had declared war against the other. –There had been a collision of their forces, BUT THIS WAS NOT WAR, as the President would probably have conceded, bad he known or recollected the distinction between WAR AND HOSTILITIES. By placing the war on the ground that it existed by the act of Mexico, AND THAT GROUND BEING FALSE, he has left it wholly indefensible whatever the old grievances we may have to allege against Mexico.

'The act of Mexico in crossing the Rio Grande, and engaging our troops on territory which she had possessed and still claimed as hers, but which we asseted had, by a recent act against which she had presented, become ours, –that which the President chose to inform Congress and the world as war— may or may not have been A JUST CAUSE for declaring war against her, BUT IT ASSUREDLY WAS NOT WAR ITSELF. We have no intention to justify Mexico. She may have had no valid title to the territory of which the President.

[NO]

August 24, 1847, RW47v24n68p4c2 General Taylor and the justice of the war

General Taylor and the New Orleans Courier

While the Enquirer is laboring to prove General Taylor no Whig, its coadjutor in New Orleans seems to be be– laboring him with as much hearty good will as though the point were entirely concealed. Commenting upon the letter which appear in our columns on Thursday, and which we dis–cover was addressed, not to the editor of the Floridian, as the paper from which we took it said, but to Dr. Delony, a Locofoco of Clinton, La., the Courier (La.) says

“The General’s reply to the first question relative to "the justice and necessity of the Mexican War," sets froth that "being a soldier to inquire about its justice, or any thing else connected with it." One would suppose that a high–minded American soldier, like Gen. Taylor, commanding his country’s troops in presence of the enemy, would have formed an opinion on the justice of the war, and feel no repugnance or hesitation to express it in the face of the world. We venture to assert that no other general officer attached to our army in Mexico, would refrain from publicly avowing his sentiments on the justice of going into the war and continuing it.

August 24, 1847, RW47v24n68p4c3 Mexican Congress and Peace

From the N. O. Picayune, Aug. 12.

The Mexican Congress and Peace

We find room to lay before our readers this morning the report of the Committee on Foreign Relation of the Mexican Congress, to which had been referred Mr. Buchanan’s late latter to that Government. The document is full of importance as expressive of the feelings and views of the Mexican Congress and nation. In endeavoring to adhere closely to the original we are apprehensive lest the report should be deemed somewhat obscure to a hasty reader. Thoughtfully pondered, however, it will be found a lucid, condensed and most significant exposition of the views of a majority of the Mexican Congress and nation. The report is directed to the Secretary of Congress:

Committee Room of the Sovereign Constituent Mexican Congress.

Sir –The majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations deem it not improper to represent their report with the promptitude which the Chamber has thought fit to allow, as well because the legal question involved appears to be perfectly clear, as because the same subject has for a long time been the object of their mediations, and also of the debates of the national representation.

In the judgment of the committee our fundamental code is perfectly clear in this part of it. The 110th article of the constitution places among the powers of the executive authority of the Union that of the directing diplomatic negotiations and concluding treaties of peace, friendship, alliance, truce, federation, armed neutrality, commerce, and every other kind whatsoever; but it says that to a grant or refuse the ratification of any one of these the approbation of the General Congress must first be obtained. The executive power is also exclusive, according to the 15th number of the same article, to receive ministers and other agents of foreign powers.

These articles prove in a manner incontrovertible, that by our constitutional laws, as among other civilized nations, the direction of the foreign relations is entrusted exclusively to the executive; but without conferring on it the power to conclude any thing, definitively or to bind the nation to any thing, without the consent of the legislative body. – The same federal constitution places among the power of the Congress, that of “approving treaties of peace, of alliance, of friendship, of federation, or armed neutrality, and every other kind whatsoever which the President of the United [Mexican] States may conclude with foreign power.”

For these reasons, therefore, the majority of the committee cannot propose any other course than to return to the Government the despatch; and if this report appears subscribed by only two members of the committee, it should be borne in mind that our associates Sr. Ceballos, who worthy presides over the committee, but who from his well known illness is unable to co–operate with us, has authorized us to express his agreement with us, and he even offered to subscribe that report which we should prepare expressive of our views, which we conclude with the following proposition:

Mexico, 13th July, 1847

Otero, Lafragua.

[NO]

August 27, 1847, RW47v24n69p1c1 Editorial continued

The Enquirer and Mr. Brownson

Concluded.
We shall commence this article by the correction of an (unintelligible) that appeared near the conclusion of that of yesterday. We said "our troops had passed through 150 miles of (unintelligible) cultivated by persons who spoke the Spanish tongue." This is certainly not correct in its entire extent. They had passed through 150 miles of territory, but the latter part of it was barren waste. At the time of the (unintelligible), however, they certainly were in the midst of fields cultivated by persons who spoke the Spanish tongue –descendants of Spaniards who had settled the country more than one hundred years before – who had always owned (unintelligible) either to Spain or to Mexico – who had taken (unintelligible) part whatever in the revolutionary movement of Texas who felt not the least desire to become incorporated in the Union as the Texan did – whose habits and inclinations (unintelligible) them to favor the Mexican domination – whom the Republic of Texas had never conquered – who had conquered and made prisoners of the only party that had penetrated into the country – who, in fine, considered themselves, and were considered by the Mexican Government, portion of the province of Tamaulipas – a province over (unintelligible) the long arm of the Texan Republic had never existed.

If there ever was a time when a distinction, such as Mr. Brownson establishes between hostilities and actual war would have been taken, then certainly was the time. The President has already ordered the commission of a hostile act – he had marched into territory subject to adjustment, as all acknowledge, by treaty, thereby justifying war on the part of the enemy – and on that account he should have hesitated before he gave the name of war to an act of hostility, seeing that the whole blame must lie at his door. When therefore, the Enquirer admits that there may be hostilities without war, it is undoubtedly correct; but when it goes farther and claim this as the exception and not the rule, we beg leave to differ with it. The rule is, we conceive, that there is no war until war is formally declared, otherwise there would be no necessity for determining where he war-making power is to be lodged. It would in fact exist in the bosom of every officer who chanced to have a command on the frontier, and might be exercised by him at discretion to the great damage of his own country, and to the perpetual danger of the peace of the whole world. The circumstances upon which it relies to alter the case are, as we have already shown, decidedly against it; for the position of our army commencing in a tort, might allow it to repel an attack, but nothing more.

Does not the Enquirer perceive from this exhibition of dates, how futile its attempt is to justify the march to the Rio Grande, on the ground that Mexico had rejected our minister, when it shows conclusively that the order was issued at least ten days before the application was made, at least twenty-five before it was rejected, and just twenty-eight it was known at Washington? [NO]

August 27, 1847, RW47v24n69p1c3 Polk in Mexico

For the Whig.

Mr. Polk in Mexico.

The legality of the President’s "Orders in Council" has been defended by those whose interest it is to justify every act of the great Dispensed of Patronage, by quoting the laws of war, which in the regulation of belligerent rights, allow one belligerent to take and convert to his own use the property and possessions of whatever kind belonging to the other. It is lawful for either party in this way to reimburse himself the amount of his outlays, no augment his own resources and diminish those of the enemy. This unquestionable the law of nations.

No one, therefore, pretends that Mexico, standing in the attitude of the most determined hostility to our Government, ought to complain that her revenues, or a part of them, have been seized for the use of the enemy. It is one of the stern rights of war to which every nation, when she has assumed the helmet and shield, must submit, who cannot defend her property. It is the law on land and sea defend all nation of the earth.

But the question between Mr. Polk and the Whig party is not thus easily disposed of. When it comes to be discussed in the Senate at the next Congress, it will cause the feeble administration to totter on its base.

The true question appear to be, to whom does the property which the enemy has this lost belong? And if it belongs to the conquering nation, who has the authority under our government to take possession of it for the use and benefit of the nation? it will be seen that things taken from enemy neither belong to the commander, whose skill and conduct may have mainly contributed to the enterprise, nor yet to the soldier whose courage and strength may have achieved the success; but to the sovereign or nation under whose banners, by the aid of whose resources, and in whose cause he is doing battle.

"It is asked to whom the conquest belongs, – to the prince who has made it, or to the State? This question ought never to have been heard of. Can the prince, in his character of sovereign, act for any other end than the good of the State? Whose are the force he employs in this war?" All advantages which accrue for the war, of whatever kind and of whatever value, from the public treasure and rich provinces of the enemy, to ornaments stripped from the slain, all go to the nation whose arms have won them. Upon this part of the subject, the author is more full in the following extract – [The italics are the author's]: "As the towns and lands taken from the enemy are called conquests, and all moveable property taken from him comes under the denomination of booty. The booty naturally belongs to the sovereign making war, no less than the conquests; for he alone has such claims against the hostile nation as to warrant him to seize on her property and convert it to his own use. His soldiers and even auxiliaries, are only instruments which he employs in asserting his rights. He maintained and pay them. But the sovereign may grant to the troops any share of the booty he pleases. At present most nations allow them whatever they can make on certain occasions, when the general allows plundering, —such as the spoil of the enemies fallen in the field of battle, the pillage of the camp which has been found and sometimes that of a town taken by assault” Vattel, 366.

As soon as the duties are collected they become national property, and “belong to the nation making the war;” the they have been collected in virtue of Executive decreed does not alter the case. As the nation in its primordial capacity cannot exercise this right of acquisition without the intervention of agents to act for it in the premises, our constitution has delegated Congress to receive the public property and expend it for the benefit of the people. Hence Congress can sell publics land, and dispose of their proceeds, and receive and dispose of the national property in the shape of taxes, and is the guardian of the public treasury. Why, the, does not property acquired in war fall under the jurisdiction of the Congress, as the trustees for the nation?

When it is borne in mind that to Congress is entrusted the power to declare war, and that it is clothed by the Constitution with powers necessary to conduct it, —to raise and discipline armies and vote the necessary supplies, —no right admitted person can for a moment doubt that Congress in war, or in peace, is the legal representative of the sovereignty of the people and to whom the laws of nation declare belong all acquisitions of property made by our arms.

Had the Constitution been silent and Congress, as incidental to the power to declare war, would (unintelligible) had the appointment of the Commander–in–chief. But that (unintelligible) President might be the better enabled to discharge the duty of executing the laws of the Union and maintaining its internal peace, the Constitution committed to him likewise the duty of commanding our armies in war, and made him Commander–in–chief. But that it was ever designed by those simple words to give him the power of collecting revenues in the conquered province, and thus be enabled to carry on the war, in many cases, without the concurrence of Congress, no man in his senses can believe. If this claim be once admitted, all power of the people over the warlike operations of the government, is at end, and this boasted “government of the people’ becomes the government of one ma.

B.D.

[NO]
friend, Pepe Zamora, borrowed forty ounces, three horses, hat, coat and servant, and was past the gates in less than thirty minutes, with a fast horse and a clear track.

We are deeply pained to learn of the death of Colonel Wilson, of the 12th Infantry. He was represented to us by the last arrival as convalescent, but he died the evening of the 12th inst. He was to have commanded the train which left Vera Cruz on the 7th inst. He was buried on the 13th inst, the following orders having been issued for the occasion:

Orders No. 34.

Headquarters, Vera Cruz, Aug. 12, 1847.

It is announced to this command the melancholy intelligence of the death of Col. Lewis D. Wilson of the 12th Regiment U.S. Infantry, who died on this date.

The escort for his funeral will be commanded by Lieutenant Colonel, commanding, and consist of the 1st U.S. Infantry, stationoned in the city. The funeral will take place at 5 o’clock, P.M., on to–morrow, to which all the U.S. Navy, citizens and strangers are respectfully invited to attend.

By order of Lieut. Col. Miles.

Correspondence of the Picayune.

Vera Cruz, Aug 14, 1847.

It is with mortification and regret that I have to inform you that Gen. Paredes passed through our city this morning, about 7 o’clock, in disguise, and before it was ascertained that such was the case, he was far out of our reach on his way to the city of Mexico.

He arrived this morning on the royal mail steamer Teviot, under an assumed name, and entirely unknown to the captain of the vessel. As soon as the vessel came to anchor he immediately came to the Mole in a pilot boat, and proceeded to the heart of the city to the residence of a Mexican merchant, to whom he had made himself known, and obtained from him a round–jacket, a sombrero and horses for himself and servant and “vamosed the ranch” without ceremony. One hundred dollars reward was offered for his arrest as soon as information reached Col. Wilson that he was or had been in the city, and every effort was made to arrest him, but the “bird had flown” and given us a specimen of assurance and cunning that would do credit to the father of Yankee tricks.

The Mexican merchant who assisted in the escape is Pepe Zamora, and during the search for Paredes his house was surrounded. The officer entered and was assured by Sr. Zamora that Paredes was not in the house. ”Has he been here,” was the question asked. “Yes,” replied Sr. Zamora, very coolly. ”What did he want,” asked the American. ”He introduced himself to me as Gen. Paredes, and asked me to befriend him, and I told him that I would. He then asked me to let him have a jacket, hat and horses, which I furnished him immediately, and he has been gone from here two hours. You are welcome to search, but I can assure you that you will not find him here, and what I tell you is so. There are his coat and hat, which you can take along if you like.”

I forgot to mention that a letter was sent by the American Consul at Havanna informing the authorities here that Gen. Paredes was on board, but it came to hand too late to do any good.

There is hardly an American here but what felt that he could crawl through a gimlet hole when the astounding news that Paredes, the sworn enemy to Santa Anna, to Americans and to peace, and the only man who at the present situation of affairs can partially restore the confidence of the Mexican people and inspire them once more with a hope to conquer their enemies, had passed, unknown and unmolested, into and out of the gates of our city. He will no doubt make every effort to reach Mexico before Gen. Scott does. The consequence will no doubt be the overthrow of Santa Anna, and most likely he will take in hands the reins of Government, crush all attempts at negotiation, and head the army in person against Gen. Scott, should he think it expedient; but if not, fall back to some place beyond the city and prepare himself for another and perhaps better occasion. At all events he is just the man that the Mexicans have been wanting ever since the battle of Cerro Gordo, and now that he is with them once more, there is no telling what mighty events may be the result of his return from exile.

Last evening the remains of Col. L.D. Wilson were escorted to the grave by the 1st Infantry, and a large concourse of American and Mexican citizens. The coffin was placed in a vault in the cemetery, where it can be conveniently obtained by his friends.

P.S. Aug. 15 – Not even a rumor from above. I enclose a slip from the Sun of Anahuac office published yesterday.

[NO]
The official organ of the 25th instant says:

“It is nothing to the purpose to say that the Whig leaders will not all refuse to stand by their country. Nothing is more probable than that even some of those who have betrayed the cause of their own country in war, will then turn round and betray the public enemy whom they have chosen for their ally. The real question as to the responsibility of protracting war, is now what the Whig leaders will do, but what they say they will do – what they tell our public enemy they are resolved to do, or, rather, what effect will their present declarations have now upon the policy of the enemy. The Whigs dare not stop the war, nor the supplies for it. But Mexico will learn this too late. – Meantime peace will have been lost to our country; our victories will have been robbed of their moral force; and all the horrors of murderous war will have been multiplied and prolonged, because the Whig leaders, for the basest purposes of faction have dared to promise to the public enemy a moral treason, which yet they do not dare fully to perpetrate.”

We shall say nothing of the extremely dignified nature of these remarks, coming as they do from the official organ, which is always supposed to speak the language of the President, and certainly is not apt to make use of any which may chance to disapprove; we pass over the “aid and comfort” daily afforded by it in paragraphs intended to prove that one half of the nation are traitors, and that the Mexicans have firm allies in them; we shall not dwell upon the immense comfort such paragraphs must afford to Santa Anna, in his final struggle with the army of General Scott, when he finds, from the showing of the Official, what he would never believe upon the assertion of any other paper – that the President distrusts the people, and is in his turn distrusted by them. But when the Government editor tells the world that the Whig leaders have chosen the public enemy for their ally, it becomes us, and other Whigs to disclaim all such inferences as are to be drawn from the passage of Santa Anna into Mexico at a time when his presence was most needed, and the consequences which have already ensued, and the end of which is not even yet. No Whig leader would ever have been guilty of such folly as this – a folly which, though we acquit the President of evil intentions, is so very glaring that, where he a shade less weak, it would be mistaken by the whole world for downright treachery. Surely Gen. Arnold, when he signed the pass giving John Anderson permission “to go to White Plains, or lower down if necessary, he being engaged on the public service,” did not commit an act from which stronger conclusions could be drawn against his fidelity, than did Mr. Polk. We repeat, we acquit Mr. Polk of all treasonable designs, though a strong case could be made out against him; we believe him to have been guilty only of an indiscretion, sufficiently demonstrative, it is true of his utter incapacity to fill the station he occupies; but if he had been an English or a French minister, he would have run the most imminent risk of losing his head. Ill does it become him, then, for this reason, if none other were to be found, to charge others with consorting with the enemy, and giving them “aid and comfort”; and if he really intends to stand the hazard of the die in the game for another term, his first step should be to put a curb upon the tongue of his editor, already exasperated to a pitch of frenzy at the prospect of losing the spoils of his office. It ill becomes a man whose father has been hanged to talk of ropes, and no better does it behoove the President, whose conduct is, to say the least, vastly more suspicious than that of the men he accuses, to deal in accusations of so serious a nature.

September

The latest number of the Civilian copies from the victors advocate the following, at the same time indicating doubts of the authenticity of the intelligence contained in it:

We learn, from a friend recently from San Antonio, in whose sentiments the utmost reliance may be placed, that on the 24th of July Col. Hays, returned from the pursuit of a body of Lipan Indians who had been committing depredations upon the frontier. A fight took place on the Leon, one of the head waters of the Nueces river, in which six of the Lipans were killed. A Mexican girl, about fourteen years old, and a boy about ten, who had been prison are among the Indians, were brought in. The girl was first taken at Laredo, about a year since. She was afterwards released and sent home by the people of San Antonio---She has been a second time taken, and is now a second time released by them, Col Hays also took a number of horses and mules, which are said to have been stolen from the Americans. Our informant gathered the above information from the members of the company. He did not talk with Col. Hays. He left San Antonio on the evening of the 24th, via Corpus Christi. Twenty-five miles above San Patricio he passed a large body of Indians, which supposed to be Camanches, encamped on the Nueces. He thinks they numbers about one hundred and fifty, and had three hundreds head of horses in their procession.—They came from the Rio Grande region, and crossing the Nueces at their encampment, were traveling north.

Our informant also states that on the day before he left San Antonio an express arrived there, bearing despatches to Colonel Hays from Major Neighbors, Indian agent---The express stated that the Camanches had become hostile and had ordered all persons who were surveying lands to leave that part of the country. The express also states that five surveyors, under Mr. Robert Hays, a brother of Col. Hays, who were missing, had been certainly
The Enquirer of yesterday, in an article headed, “The Richmond Whig and the Mexican War,” says:

“We hardly know to whom the enemies of the Administration, we should give precedence for the thoughtlessness of their complaints of the war in which we are engaged. Really we are afraid to speak as we feel in the matter, least we should give offence; for harsh language alone could express our ideas of the groundless complaints and silly objections which some of the Whig papers which of all the anti-war advocates---are most to blame, we are utterly at a loss. A few days ago we thought that Mr. Brownson had gone as far as any. The absurd position which he had taken, we thought, could not be surpassed by any one.---He admitted that the causes which we had for a war against Mexico were entirely sufficient. This he entirely conceded; yet, said he, Congress has, under the Constitution, the power to declare war--the President, in fact, has declared war; therefore the United States is responsible for the war. This is absurd as well as ridiculous. But a few days ago we exposed the bald fallacy on which it was founded, and invited refutation of our reasoning. No refutation has come---none has been attempted; and we challenge either or both of the Whig papers of this city to take up the gauntlet. In making shit challenge thus confidently, we do not mean to intimate that we are superior to them in any respect, except that we have the vantage ground of right and justice; and, having that, we are ready to meet them. Let them leave declamation. Let them come down to the realm of sober argument. Let them bring their accusations and we will meet them.”

The first idea which any man, previously unacquainted with the facts, would entertain upon reading this paragraph, would be that Mr. Brownson was a Whig, and the editor of a Whig paper; a position which we are very certain he would be among the last of men to assume voluntarily. The editors very well know that he is, whatever else he may be, at least no Whig; that he was among the foremost in zeal as he was likewise in talent, of those who sustained the present Executive in the race for the Presidency; that he gave to the Democratic Review, the leading Locofoic Periodical of the day, all the character for ability so which it can lay claim. That he agreed, in one very remarkable point, with a party from whom he differed in every thing else, we regard as a strong piece of testimony in favor or the correctness of their views; for it has never been alleged, as far as we know, that his opinions had their origin in interest, or in any other motive that the most thorough conviction of their justice. That his arguments were overwhelming, the Enquirer itself has tacitly acknowledged, for while it affects to treat them as absurd, it takes very good care not to allow its readers to form their own opinions by publishing his article in its columns. True, as it says, it attempted a refutation, but it failed so signaly that we did not think it worth while to push the discussion farther, convinced that among all men, who understood both sides of the question, the position assumed by My. Brownson would be seen at a glance not to have been touched. As the whole of his argument is based upon facts and as these facts have not been refuted, to enter into additions, and the deductions he has drawn from them. To take up the gauntlet, therefore, which the Enquirer throws down to the Whig editors of city papers, would be an useless assumption of labor, unless the Enquirer will let its readers know what we are disputing about by publishing the article which forms the ground of the controversy, or at least so much of it as we have used already. If that shall be done, we shall not hesitate to accept the challenge made by that paper, and even to publish its articles, provided it will publish ours in return.

The Enquirer continues:

After quoting an extract from a speech delivered by the Hon. C. J. Ingersoll, relative to the power of the President in time of war, the Whig says:

‘Now admit that the President of the United States has, in fact, all these enormous powers--admit that, when once at war, like Napoleon, or Mahmoud, or Nicholas, he is no longer responsible to any but God alone--admit too, that at his pleasure he may say the country is at war, and no man dare dispute it---can any many any longer pretend that this government is a Republic? Is it not, to all intents and purposes, the government of a single individual? Is not James K. Polk, at this moment, the autocrat of all these States, just as decidedly as Nicholas is autocrat of all the Russias? To say that the war--making power is not lodged in his hands, is to trifle with the public understanding.--He can order his troops to march where he may wish them--he can compel them to commit any act of aggression he may think proper--he can even order them to assail the enemy, before they shall have given any provocation--and than if they resist, he can call it war, and call on Congress for men and money. It is vain to say that Congress, before declaring a state of war to exist, would first enquire into the circumstances, and if it found the original act unjustifiably aggressive would refuse to recognize it. The doctrine of Locofocism is entirely different: It holds that any enquiry into the President's motives of his acts, though in theories to be found the true origin of the war, is nothing less than treason!’

Now we ask our readers--nay, we ask the Editors of the Whig, if this is not superlatively ridiculous, when supplied as an argument against the justice of the present war? What, in fact, is this complaint, but a complaint against the Constitution, if, indeed, it is any thing more than the idle words of one who opposes the interests of his country,without being able to cite any thing which will tend to justify his unnatural conduct. For ourselves, we can find but one opinion to entertain. That we will elucidate more fully, when we comment at large and at leisure upon the unparalleled enormity of the Editorial of the Whig. We had hoped that when that paper had taken sides against
It will be seen that the Enquirer does not publish the extract from Mr. Ingersoll’s speech, to which we alluded, and which goes farther, much farther than even we have intimated; which declares that when once the war making power is entrusted to the hands of the President, “that all power was as great as the power of the autocrat of all Russias, of the Sultan Mahmoud, or of Napoleon in the utmost culmination of his authority—–that it was a great mistake to suppose that there was in that respect any difference between the sovereignty of the European despot and that of the United States—and that the Sultan Mahmoud the autocrat of all the Russias have no more sovereign power than that which was in full exercise for waging war with Mexico.” Such were the sentiments of Chas. J. Ingersoll, the Locofofo Chairman of the committee of Foreign Relations, and Mr. Polk’s nominee for the place of Ambassador to France, “who would have been a tory had he lived in the days of the Revolution.”—–We ask the reader to read these enormous assumptions with care, and then to say whether the remarks on which the Enquirer comments are either ill-founded, or overstressed. It is not clear, if they are just, and the Enquirer does not say a word against them, that the sovereignty of the States, the rights of the people, and the powers of Congress, are alike merged, during war, in the stupendous prerogative of the President? Congress, by the Constitution, has the power to lay taxes, and raise money, &c. If during war, the power of the President be as great as that of the Sultan Mahmoud, or the Emperor Nicholas, is not this clause, the most thoroughly conservative of the whole Constitution, entirely abolished? The Emperor Nicholas and the Sultan Mahmoud both have power to collect taxes, &c; and if, in a state of war, the President’s power to be equal to theirs, cannot he, too, lay taxes, &c. as they can? Far from being a complaint against the Constitution, our article was only a complaint against those who would thus construe it, and by thus construing, literally abolish it.

But the Enquirer charges us with having taken sides against the South! We should be sorry to leave the decision of what is Southern in the hands of the Enquirer, or its Natural Allies of the north. It is true, we oppose, and shall continue to oppose a war of conquest on the part of the Executive, and the addition of any more territory to the Union. True we deplore the recurrence of the sectional dispute which arose upon the introduction of the Missouri question, and which could not fail to recur, were any territory taken from Mexico. True, that in company with William Lowndes, we asserted and still maintain that the “constitution gives to Congress the power to admit States in the broadest terms.” But we have yet to learn how the maintenance of any one or all three doctrines can be construed into taking sides against the South. The Enquirer is not the South, nor as far as we can learn is it the exponent of Southern opinion; nor constitution, under the entire control of Congress, a sovereign State, does it speak Southern sentiment, which never construed any restriction proposed by Congress, into any thing but a dangerous abuse of a delegated power.

No! it is the Enquirer, and such as it, that are dealing the most fatal wounds to the interest of the South. It perfectly well knows, that the majority in Congress, is in favor of the Wilmot Proviso, and that by bringing more territory into the Union, it will give occasion for the question to arise. When it does come on, the Missouri compromise will be broken down, and the Wilmot Proviso will be carried. It is as certain as any future event can possibly be, and it will be a most disastrous day for the South when it shall have arrived. This day, the Enquirer and those who claim to be the peculiar guardians of the South desire to hasten. This day we desire, for the sake of the South and the Union, never see arrive. The Enquirer would most unnecessarily, place the South in a position where it must inevitably sustain a defeat; we desire so to arrange matters, that it can never be placed in that position. Which of us, we ask any candid man to say, is the truest and safest friend of the South?

The United States, the Southern portion more especially, can gain nothing by the dismemberment of Mexico. We learn that there are no public lands in that country worth the trouble of entering them, but that on the contrary, all lands of any value of long since been appropriated. The rich men of Mexico live in a semi–barbarous style of federal magnificence, one person sometimes owning several hundred thousand acres of land. Kendall speaks of one estate, somewhere in the Western States of Mexico, which was more than fifty miles (as well as we recollect) long, by nearly as many broad. In this way the whole country is private property, and the Government would get nothing, not even the mines, for they, in a great measure, are in the same category. What, then, does the United States, what does any body, but land speculators, want with it? Are all this blood and money lavished for their benefit, and are they the only persons whose interest it if worth while to take any care of?

[BRM]
And again—“The Autocrat of all the Russias—-the Sultan Mahmoud—have no more sovereign power, than that which was now in full exercise for waging the war with Mexico.

Now admit that the President of the United States has, in fact, all these enormous powers—admit that, when once at war, like Napoleon, or Mahmoud, or Nicholas, he is no longer responsible to any but God alone—-admit too, that at his pleasure, he may say the country is at war, and no man dare dispute it—-can any many any longer pretend that this government is a Republic? Is it not to all intents and purposes the government of a single individual? Is not James K. Polk, at this moment, the autocrat of all these States, just as decidedly as Nicholas is autocrat of all the Russias? To say that the war making power is not lodged in his hands is to trifile with the public understanding. He can order his troops to march where he may wish them—he can compel them to commit any act of aggression he may think proper—he can even order them to assail the enemy, before they shall have given any provocation—and then if they resist, he can call it war, and call on Congress for men and money. It is vain to say that Congress, before declaring a state of war to exist, would first enquire into the circumstance, and if it found the original act unjustifiably aggressive would refuse to recognize it. The doctrine of Loco-Focoism is entirely different: It holds that any enquiry into the President’s motives or his acts, though in itself is to be found the true origin of the war, is nothing less that treason.

By such a system has Mr. Polk succeeded in erecting, out of the shattered constitution, a stupendous despotism, while he is deluding the ears of his followers with the syren cries of “Democracy” and “equality!” he has stolen alike from the people, and the Congress, every privilege to which they were entitled either as a birth–right or by the grant of the Constitution. He may make war when he pleases, and no man dare say nay! When he is at war, none dare question his authority. He is as absolute, according to Mr. Ingersoll, as Mahmoud or Napoleon, and he may push his lust of conquest to any extreme, without either let or hindrance on the part of Congress or people.

The form of our government, essentially altered as it is in the eyes of the Democratic rulers, is far better adapted now for the purposes of conquest, than it was when the constitution still existed, and a formed the rule of all political action. The sinews of government, to use a phrase of Blackstone, are knit into one hand, and of course are more effective for action than when dispersed. The President may do any act which the Queen of England in council can do, He may order seizures at sea of vessels belonging to any power, at peace with us, and as soon as he shall have alleged that they, and not we committed the first act of aggression, every body is estopped to dispute his word, or to enquire even into the actual state of the case. He may speak the truth or he may be guilty of uttering a falsehood! It makes no difference whatever. No man must even ask is this true or is it false. If the nation, whose commerce has been thus assailed, should resist, why we are at war, at once, and then the more than dictatoral powers of the President come into full operation. Whenever he may covet a piece of territory belonging to one of our neighbors, he may pursue a similar policy. He may march his forces into it, and upon their meeting with resistance, may say, as he did in the case of Mexico, we are at war, and forthwith there is an end to all complaint or enquiry.

That such a power in the hands of a President, is far more effective for aggression and conquest, than the old distribution of powers allowed by the constitution, we presume there is no one who will deny. Republics, as long as they are worthy of the name, are not adapted to wars of conquest, and the passion for such has often proved their ruin. Thos who originally establish them are generally more eager to secure their own liberty and happiness, than to crush the freedom of others. Patrick Henry, when the present constitution was under consideration, said he did not want a splendid Government. What he wished for, was one which would ensure the happiness of the citizen. For that, or similar reasons, doubtless, the power of declaring war was confined by the constitution to Congress, the framers believing, no doubt, that they had effectually secured the country thereby against wars upon light and frivolous pretexts, or what are far more dangerous, wars of ambition and conquest.

It is for the people to say which of these two Governments they prefer; safe and happy one, founded by our fathers, and transmitted in all its purity to us, having for its object the preservation of freedom, which it attempted to secure by a system of checks and balances, recognized and established by the constitution, or the splendid and arbitrary one, which now, for the first time, has been boldly avowed to be in actual operation. We cannot doubt the virtue of our countrymen so far, as to believe that they will hesitate long. They have before them too many, and too fatal examples of the evils which follow in the train of conquest; they see the three principal powers of Europe, at this moment, each engaged in the most disastrous and destructive wars, for no other object that the acquisition of territory. They see France annually whitening the desert sands of Africa with the bones of tens of thousands of her brave soldiers, for no other object than the reduction of a few barbarians, who never did her any harm, and who, before she appeared as an enemy, knew not her existence as a nation. They see England moistening the fertile plains of India with the blood of her unoffending inhabitants, whose great crime is the richness of their lands, and the temptation it offers avarice. They see the same power murdering the helpless Chinese by myriads, for no better reason than that they do not wish to sacrifice their independence to foreigners whom they have been taught to abhor, and whom their own conduct has made appear to them in the most odious of all possibly lights. They see Russia, already possessing a territory, compared with which, in extent, the Empire of Rome, at the period if its greater extension, was but as a point upon the map of the world, sacrificing thousands of lives, every year, for the purpose of robbing a few daring mountaineers of the independence which they inherited from their fathers, and which they regard as far more valuable than life itself. When our people see all this, and reflect upon the waste of life and treasure with which it is done—when they remember, likewise, that they who are engaged in this crusade against the rights of man, are Kings, Queens, and Czars, they will hesitate before they will consent to follow such revolting examples. Even supposing the conquest effected, it must be kept up at the point of the sword. The whole theory of our Government will have been revolutionized, and like the ancient despotism of Europe, we shall, be found holding provinces, in times of dead peace, by means of a standing army, often more dangerous to the citizens that to the enemy. For it is impossible to suppose, that nine millions of people will ever submit to our domination,
It is well known to many of our readers, that an attempt has already been made to induce the belief that Mexico, (or a party in that country at least,) entertains a design to erect herself into a monarchy, for the benefit of some sprig of royalty in Europe. That the attempt to create such an impression, would be revived by those whose trade it is to humbug and deceive the people, we felt convinced from the moment we first heard of Paredes’ arrival in Mexico.---That we were not all wrong in our suspicions, the following feeler from the Union, thrown out to see how much the public will stand, sufficiently proves:

"In any event, it was certain that no change, whatever in the government of Mexico which would deprive Paredes of in the government of Mexico which would deprive Paredes of the power could be for the worse, so far as the United States, were concerned, while it was highly probable that any change must be for the better."

Paredes is a monarchist---a friend of a foreign monarch, there is some reason to believe; and his presence in Mexico, if it looks to any change, looks rather abroad than to America, for the change of her rulers. It will remain for the British Captain to explain how and why he, as a neutral, introduced so decided an enemy into our ports at all, and without acquainting us with his character.

As to Paredes, we regret to state that the Captain of the British steamer must have been acquainted with his true name and character, as Paredes did not hesitate to speak freely on board vessel. He spoke freely of Santa Anna’s want of energy, ability and principles, and declared that unfortunate Mexico would have to throw herself into the arms of America, or of some European power. (This last allusion is suspicious, and confirms what the President stated in his Message to Congress:)

We have marked the most conspicuous portion of this extract for italic. Those who have been accustomed to the ally, hinting, insinuating style of the editor of the Union, who [illegible] arrives at any conclusion save by indirection, will readily understand what is here meant.----It is meant, that Paredes has come to Mexico with the intention of engaging her to erect herself into a Monarchy, and to confer the crown upon one of the sons of the French King--for he is the monarch spoken of as the especial friend of Paredes. The public, then, is to be cheated with another tale in confirmation of the reputed foreign interference, and this is to be the apology for continuing this war of conquest!

Hardly has General Houston’s letter exposed the ridiculous tale of British designs on Mexico, when this still more ridiculous story is revived, for the purposes of a similar nature. We must confess, that if the people, with that example before their eyes, are so blind as to be cheated by such a monstrous story as this, they deserve to be--that is all.

Let the reader examine the extreme improbability of this tale. The monarchial party in Mexico is, according Co.l. Benton, very small, and entirely unimportant. The rest of Mexico, if it agrees nothing else, at least does on one subject; that of hating the very names of King and Spaniard. Upon these people, without their own consent, it is proposed to fasten a prince of the House of Orleans---of that very House, and that very Nation, which but a few years ago humbled the pride of Mexico, and forced her to pay an enormous indemnity for alleged spoliations on French property. This family of Orleans, French as it is, and therefore detestable in the eyes of all full–blooded Mexicans, is allied by marriage to the Crown of Spain, one of the sons having married the heiress apparent, and the children of that issue being the rightful heirs of the Crown. This operation, therefore, not only restores Monarchy in Mexico, but it brings in a French King, with the certainty of restoring the influence of the Spanish Crown, which Mexico detests even more than she does the French.

Really, this humbug is too bald, even in the hands of those who managed the Texas business.
The New York Express, in the course of an article of great vigor on this subject, says:

"THE CONQUEST OF MEXICO, it is daily becoming more and more clear, is the object of the administration of the Government is daily becoming as distinct as it dare to be. The longer the war lasts, we are told, the more territory we must have as a renumeration! Our destiny, we hear, often, is to conquer and annex, that is, to steal--!!-- No party, it is just given out, can, will, or dare recall our troops! The war must go on, till Mexico is humbled and subdued! That is, the United States must re-enact in America the scenes that for half a century, every man, woman and child have denounced as cruel and atrocious, in Europe, to wit the subjugation by a strong power of a weak neighbor, the exercise of the law of force against feebleness and imbecility. In short, our glorious old Eagle, that never knew what it was to be dishonored, is now to be sent out from its eyrie, to head the armies that are to dismember the Poland which is contiguous to us, and to degrade our country to a level with the despots and tyrannies of Europe! Peace is made impossible for Mexico, and by our Government, because, as a preliminary, it demands the dismemberment of Mexico; or its annihilation from the roll of nations. The grave, the awful question arises, and one that should startle every man to answer,—shall we, ought we, may we, will we, be led from our homes and our firesides thus to, crusade against a neighboring State? Are we ready with more men and more money? Shall thirty millions lives be sacrificed a year, (for that is the cost by disease and the sword) and a hundred millions of treasure?"

Such, it seems, is the fixed and unalterable determination of the Executive of free, happy, and independent America; of her who should shelter the oppressed, not become oppressor in her turn; of her who should regard a younger sister, struggling to free herself from the chains of a foreign tyrant for twenty years, and coming out of the conquest free but exhausted, with favor and compassion; of her, who is she determined to take part in her affairs, should close the door against her murderers "not bare the knife herself." The parallel between Poland and Mexico, is in this case, neither far-fetched nor unnatural. The wretched government of Poland, one of the cardinal principles of which was, that a measure must be unanimously carried in the diet before it could become a law, had made that unhappy country, for ages, the scene of everlasting strife. Those estimable philanthropists, Frederick of Prussia, Joseph of Austria, and Empress Catherine, offended with the ambitious rulers of that fine country, and taking compassion on its unfortunate people, determined to put an end to their sufferings, and very quietly took possession of them and enacted them thenceforth into Russian, Prussian, and Austrian subjects! It is true, the Poles were not so grateful for this favor as they might have been—true, their new allegiance sat upon them somewhat awkwardly at first—true, they had the folly to prefer a bad government of their own to their paternal scepters of their new monarchs! But what own good, and they were to be forced to adopt that which these wise and potent monarchs had found so beneficial to their old subjects. One of them (Frederic) was a great philosopher and had written a book (Examen du Prince) against tyranny, and if he did not know what was for their good who could possibly know?

Now our Executive is also philosophical; at least if he is all deficient, his short coming can be readily made by the genius who grinds the Organ. He has discovered a fact Which the Mexicans were rather slow in arriving at themselves, that the Government under which they have hitherto lived, and which they waded through blood to establish, is not at all adapted to their genius, capacity and taste; and in imitation of his Royal and Imperial predecessors, he has determined to give them a better. Hence the Proclamation, written at the War Office and transmitted to General Taylor, in which the tyranny of Mexican rulers is set forth in strong terms, and the people are assured that it is the design of this Government to relieve them of it. Hence, too, the proclamation of General Scott, in which they are invited to turn traitors to their own Government, and to throw themselves into the arms of those whom they might under other circumstances be disposed to regard as enemies. There is, however, one essential point of difference between the two cases. The great patrons of Poland were invited to mediate between her nobles and her people, and to settle the Government upon something like a stable foundation. Our Frederick waited for no such invitation. Like the Irishmen at the wedding, he invited himself. His good-natured officiousness did not, it appears, prove altogether so agreeable to his entertainers as it might have done, but that was a matter of small importance. Another slight difference is also to be found in the manner in which the difficulties of Poland were actually settled, and that in which it is proposed to arrange those of Mexico, arising out of the difference in the number of parties interested. There were three in the care of Poland, and it was found necessary to divide the spoils among them all. Our Frederick, on the contrary, "solitary and alone has set this ball in motion," and he proposes to take all under his protection. That is a matter, however, likewise, of small importance; the effect will be precisely the same; Poland ceased to exist, and Frederick means to blot out Mexico from among the nations.

In one point of view, we have the decided advantage of the great European confederates. Poland owed their subjects, as far as we have ascertained, nothing at all. Now Mexico did owe one of our citizens for fifty—six—dozen bottles of porter—it must have been prime, too, and no mistake, for it is set down at sixteen hundred and ninety—three dollars a dozen. We have said the article was prime; when we have explained to him that the best porter which we have ever heard may be bought all over the world for three dollars a dozen! No doubt it was a mortal of fence to three dollars a dozen. We have said the article was prime; when we have explained to him that the best porter which

It is true, the greater part of these claims existed during the administrations of Jackson and Var Buren, and... that if war was ever to be adopted as the best means of collecting them, then was the time. It is true likewise, that it is rather inconsistent in us, who have our confederacy, repudiating States to the number of four or five, and who were so lately thrown into a flame on account of Lord Palmerston’s threats, to offer any such apology as this. But what of that? Any excuse is better than none at all.

Serious as the subject is, we cannot but treat the pretexts for the conquest of Mexico with derision. Yet it presents considerations which are far better calculated to elicit sorrow than ridicule. The United States have for the first time, assumed that attitude so formidable to liberty in the Old World, and which has been so destructive of the interest of weaker powers. We are at this moment threatening the independence of a neighbor, and the ground we allege is, that she owes us money. To use the words of Sheridam, with slight paraphrase, “towns are to be besieged on a note of hand, and governments subverted for the balance of an account.” How much more manly would it be, to say at once to Mexico, we long for your rich lands and your inexhaustible mineral wealth—-we are stronger than you—we mean to take them and you may get them back as you can. There would be a certain degree of magnanimity in this, if one species of that virtue, as has been alleged, consists in boldly conceiving a bad plan and undauntedly pursuing it to its execution.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot, under date of the 2d. Sept. says:

"I wrote you the other day that I had been assured upon the most reliable authority, that the administration had resolved upon making conquest of the whole of Mexico.—This information has since been confirmed to the fullest extent. A military gentleman, who has recently held conversation with the President and the Secretary of War, says the determination now is to push on the war of conquest until the entire republic of Mexicanos shall be ours: and that, if Mexico wishes for peace upon honorable terms, she must henceforth come to us in the character of a supplicant."

This is one only of numerous proofs which we have, to some of which we already alluded, that it is the design of Mr. Polk to conquer Mexico. And for whose benefit? Not for that of the public, for there fare no public lands, and Mexico, is so poor that she cannot pay her own debts. Who then is to receive the benefit? That highly favored generation the land speculators. Them it will enrich, but no one else.

The same correspondent makes the following statement:

"Military gentlemen who talk with members of the administration, assure them that there must be more mounted men in the army to pursue and punish the guerillas——that there is already a sufficient infantry force in Mexico——and that the last call for five more regiments should have been accompanied with a direction for the whole force to be mounted. But Mr. Polk and Governor Marcy both cry out against the enormous expense, and say they can't do it!"

"The Ohio Regiment which has recently volunteered and been accepted, desired, and, I believe, stipulated to be mounted, and a gentleman from Cincinnati is her now, trying to beat into the brains of the administration the expediency, propriety and utility of mounting the Regiment in question——but all to no purpose! The expense would be too great! Mr. Polk and Governor Marcy can see great economy in sending the Regiment to Mexico in a condition to render no available service, and saddle the expense upon Uncle Sam with a clear conscience! But to add a little to the expense and thus render the Regiment really valuable, is a step which they could not think of doing! O No!"

This is precisely what we should have expected Secretary Marcy and this penny–wise pound foolish, save–at–the–spile–and–lose–at–the–bung–administration.

The following statement with regard to the President's present vies, from the same source, we can hardly believe just:

"I understand, from pretty good authority, that the President makes no count at all upon a speedy peace, and that, for the future, he is not going to be over anxious to bring peace about. The cost of the war troubles him some; but by degrees he hopes to get over that. He knows and partially feels that the people are saying, that if Mr. Clay had been elected President this war and its expense of blood and treasure would have been avoided, and we could have had California by treaty and the Rio Grande for a boundary——but he hopes to get over it all! He thinks the people, honest souls, will forget what might have been and get reconciled to what now exists!"

We feel sure that Potomac must be mistaken here. We have no doubt that Mr. Polk, if he had his own way, would gladly be rid of this war; but the fact is, he does not know how to get rid of it. The speculators and land-jobbers will not let him rest without the whole of Mexico, and as he was elected by them, he is in a great measure under their thumb.

[BRM]
The steamship Ohio, Capt. J. Swiler, Jr., arrived yesterday from Galveston. She left there on the 23d ult.

The following is from the News of the 21st inst.

The steamer Reliance, arrived this morning from Houston. She brings a few more bales of new cotton. Some gentlemen just from the interior represent the season as extremely favorable for picking cotton. The worm has every where disappeared, doing very little, if any, damage, and the cotton is opening rapidly and in the greatest abundance.—The prospect was never before so encouraging. Corn is so abundant that it is said contracts can to made for almost any amount at 20 cents per bushel.

---

From the St. Louis Republican, Aug. 27.

CALIFORNIA.—In the Californian, a paper printed at Monterey, on the 24th of April last, it is stated, that the “new mail arrangement has gone into effect,” and that the first arrival brought a number of letters and paper. The Quartermasters at the several military posts were constituted Postmasters, and it was expected, that where there was no military posts, the Alcaldes would perform the duties of the office.

Monterey is improving, [illegible] said, rapidly. Several American families have settled there. The houses are all occupied. The editor says, that, being compelled to give up the Government House, to make room for a portion of Col. Steveson’s regiment, he was obliged to us a slightly built shed, on the corner of Dr. Stokes’ yard. “A small paper, a small press, and a small house, but rather a lengthy editor.”

Among the advertisements, we notice a “great tale of city lots,” laid out upon a pretty extravagant scale. The lots are fifty yards front, running back ninety-six yards.—The city is called Francisca. In front of [illegible], there is said to be a commodious bay, in which two hundred ships can ride at anchor in safety. MC Vallego and R [illegible], late of Illinois, are the proprietors.

One man advertises that he is constantly supplied with “that precious beverage, sparkling cold water,” which he sells at the rate of two reals per week for each family.

Two proclamations of Gen. Kearny, ”by virtue of authority in him vested,” and issued April last, constitute John A Sutter ”sub–agent for the Indians of and near the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers,” and on the Mariana G Vallejo a similar agent in another direction.

The schooner William, “recently condemned in the Court of Admiralty,” with her cargo consisting of a hundred and eighty bales (about 26,000 pounds of Mexican sugar,) thirty packages panoche, and one bale of [illegible], assorted, was advertised to be sold at auction, on the 24th of April. Two or three of the papers are filled with the judicial decision of Judge Walter Colton, in this case.

Another sale of lots, in the town Francisco— not the one above named— is advertised by “Edwin Bryant, Alcalde and Chief Magistrate of the town and district of San Francisco.” The prologue of this sale is so curious, that we must give it in the words and figures of the advertiser:

By the following decree of his Excellency, Con. S. W. Kearny, Governor of California, all the right, title and interest of the united States and the Territory of California, to the beach and the water lots on the east front of the town of San Francisco, have been granted, conveyed and released to the people, or corporate authorities of said town.

DECREE OF GOV. KEARNY.

“I, Brig. Gen. S. W. Kearny, Governor of California, by virtue of authority in me vested by the President of the United States of America, do hereby grant, convey and release unto the ton of San Francisco, the people, or corporate authorities thereof, all the right, title and interest of the Government of the United States, and of the Territory of California, in and to the beach and water lots on the east front of said town of San Francisco, included between the points known as the Rincon and Fort Montgomery, excepting such lots as may be selected for the use of U. States Government by the Senior Officers of the army and navy now there; provided, the said ground hereby led shall be divided into lots, and sold by public auction to the highest bidder, after three months’ notice previously even—the proceeds of said sale to be for the benefit of the down of San Francisco.

“Given at Monterey, capital of California, this 10th day of March, 1847, and the seventy–first year of Independence of the united States.

S.W. KEARNY,
The sale is made in pursuance of this decree, and the site of the town is said to be the “most commanding commercial position on the entire western coast of the Pacific Ocean.”

Col Benton lately addressed the following note to the Editors of the National Whig:

To the Editors of the National Whig:

“Gentlemen—On seeing the article from the Louisville Journal, headed, ‘Mr. Benton and Mr. Polk’ in your paper of this day, I have to request that the papers be no longer left at my house.

Yours, respectfully,

Aug. 23, 1847.

THOS. H. BENTON.”

The article alluded to, is the same with that of which we spoke last week. It is as follows:

“Mr. Benton and Mr. Polk.----It is certain, says the Louisville Journal of the 17th instant, that Mr. Benton is preparing himself for a terrific attack upon the Administration next winter in the Senate chamber. At a town in the interior of Kentucky, a few days ago, he got into a conversation upon the subject of the Mexican war, and became immensely excited—perfectly infuriated. He stated that he should go to Washington and make one speech on the subject—only one—and that it would be the greatest speech of his life, and he was willing that it should be the last. In speaking of the administration, his language barely, if at all, fell short of downright cursing. His wrathful declamation lasted a full hour.”

It will be observed that Col. Benton does not say that he means to support Mr. Polk, nor does he deny having used very strong language in speaking of the present Administration. If all be true that the Journal states, he could not deny it. We have heard of his having done so, from more sources than one.

From the Charleston Courier, Sept. 4

FIGHT WITH THE MEXICAN GUERILLAS

By our exclusive Express we yesterday received the slip which follows from the office of the New Orleans Picayune, dated on Monday last, being one day in advance of the mail.

It will be perceived that General Scott has advanced to within a short distance of the Mexican Capital, and has already passed the Rio Frio, where it was anticipated that a severe battle would take place, without a gun being fired. This naturally leads us to hope that no resistance will be made to the entrance of the American army into the City of Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, AUG. 30–10 A.M.

LATER FROM VERA CRUZ

GEN. SCOTT’S ADVANCE TO AYOLTA.

SAFETY OF MAJOR LALLY’S TRAIN

REPULSE OF AMERICANS AT NATIONAL BRIDGE.

The schr Mississippi arrived from Vera Cruz on Sunday, having sailed thence on the evening of the 21st inst. At that time the Fashion had not arrived there, though constantly expected. She left here the evening of the 17th.
The most important news by this arrival concerns the movements of Gen. Scott. There had been various rumors on the subject in Vera Cruz, many of which our correspondent knew to be unfounded, but he writes us on the afternoon of Saturday, the 21st instant, on what he considers the "best authority," that the vanguard of Gen. Scott's army was at Ayotla on Friday, the 13th instant, and up to that date had not fired a gun. This news reached Vera Cruz by a gentleman whom left Ayotla on the 13th, coming down by the war of Orizaba. Ayotla is but twenty-one miles from the city of Mexico, being twenty miles beyond the pass of Rio Frio. We now turn for a moment to other subjects of great interest.

The expedition which left Vera Cruz about the 13th inst. To reinforce Major Lally's command was composed o Capt. Wells. They returned to Vera Cruz on the 17th, after having proceeded as far as the National Bridge; where they expected to overtake major Lally's command. Major Lally, however, had gone on, and by subsequent advices at Vera Cruz it is known that he had carried up his train in safety beyond Jalapa.

The command of Capt. Walls were compelled to fight their way to the Bridge; and they made the attempt to pass it, but found all the heights occupied by the guerrillas, who opened a heavy fire upon them, killing nearly all of the mules and forcing the whole party to retire. They left the whole of their wagons save only one in the possession of the enemy. All the baggage of the officers and knapsacks of the men, which were in the wagons, fell into the hands of the Mexicans, and little else besides the mail was saved. The loss of men in this affair have been five or six killed and two or three wounded, and several men have subsequently died from fatigue and exposure on the march.

About eight miles this side of the Bridge, Capt. Wells, on his advance detached twelve dragoons, accompanied by Dr. Cooper, with directions to go forward cautiously, and, if they found it prudent, to report to Maj Lally; but if they encountered any obstacle, to return and report that fact at once. Nothing has since been heard of this party, and it is supposed the whole have fallen into the hands of the Mexicans. These twelve dragoons we supposed to be a portion of Fairchild's company. Dr. Cooper was the surgeon who went up with the train.

Capt. Wells had five successive engagements with the enemy before the final affair at the Bridge. In this the Mexicans had one piece of artillery engaged, from which they fired grape, and were thus able to make their stand against the command of Capt. Wells.

Maj. Lally on going up with the train is said to have had a sharp skirmish with the guerrillas at Cerro Gordo, and to have expected another brush with them at La Hoya. No accounts of these affairs have been received, but our latest letters say there where is no doubt of the safety of the train. No news had been heard at Vera Cruz of Capt. Besancon's company for a fortnight. It was out on a scout when news reached there that Major Lally required reinforcements, and it is by many supposed that the company fell in with the train, and, crossing the National Bridge, continued up with it. Others again think differently, and suppose the whole company has been cut off by the Mexicans. Such is the tenor of our latest letters.

In regard to Gen. Scott's march, there were rumors at Vera Cruz that he had met the enemy and repulsed them after a sharp engagement, in which he lost 800 men. This the Mexicans regarded as a victory on their part, at their loss was insignificant. Notwithstanding these details, our correspondent writes that there is no truth in them whatever. He also considers the announcement of the Sun of Anahuac that Gen. Scott arrived at Ayotla on the 11th as a statement hazarded upon mere rumor. He has confidence in the veracity of a man who arrived on the 21st, and only states that the last divisions of the American army left on that day 4000 strong.

We have more minute accounts on board the ship Agnes of the various engagements with the guerrillas mentioned above. The Mississippi, being a fast sailer, has anticipated those accounts, but without supplying all the details.

We have no letter direct from the army. The Boletin de las Noticias, of Jalapa, says that more correspondence from the army has been intercepted by the guerrillas.——This paper appears to have advices from Pueble to the 10th inst., but only states that the last divisions of the American army left on that day 4000 strong.

Despatches have been received at the Navy Department from Commodore Biddle, of as late a date as May 3, 1847, at Monterey, from which we obtain the following intelligence of the movements of the squadron under his command. The "Independence," the "Cyane," and the "Portsmouth" were one the coast of Mexico, enforcing the blockade of Mazatlan and Guaymas. The frigate "Congress" was on her way from San Diego, and the "Dale" had sailed from Panama to Monterey. The "Warren" was at San Pedro. The "Preble" arrived at Monterey on the 33d April, with Mr. Norris, bearer of despatches from Washington. The store ship "Erie" was at Monterey.
You have before us files of California papers as last at the 5th of June, for which, we are indebted to a gentleman who returned with Gen. Kearny from his late expedition to California. They contain a good many matters of interest to our readers, and to the people of this country, which we shall briefly sketch.

Very marked discontent seems to have pervaded the "California Regiment," at the time of his discharge from service. This regiment had been enrolled by Col. Fremont, and promises of pay were held out, which, it seems, were not realized. We infer from what is stated, that a portion, only, of the pay was given to the men, and that they were compelled to receive certificates for the balance, and that the payment of this amount is made to depend on relief to be granted by Congress.

News of the battle of Buena Vista and the capture of Vera Cruz was received at Yerba Buena, or San Francisco, of the 29th of May, and occasionally great rejoicings. The town was illuminated.

The thieving propensities of the horse and mule stealers, is the subject of a long letter from Santa Barbara, and the new government is censured for not being able to check these depredations.

A letter from Sonoma, on the 8th of May, says that Gov. Boggs had received a letter from Gen. Kearney, appointing him Alcalde of that town. But Mr. Nash, the old incumbent, who was elected under Com Stockton's Proclamation, refused to surrender the books of the office; and that in consequence they had no civil magistrate. The writer says, that in consequence of this state of things a man who had stolen four horses, another accused of stealing a saddle and a bridle, and a third who was charged with breaking open a trunk, all went unpunished.

Two Sabbath Schools were in operation in San Francisco.

The California Star, in announcing the departure of Gen. Kearny and Col. Fremont for the United States, indulges in some pretty severe structures upon the conduct of the latter, while in California. It charges that his movements while in that territory have been ill–judged, and producing complete dissatisfaction. His proceedings are said to have been "in direct opposition to the best interests of his countrymen in California," and it is remarked, that "it will require an effort, and an immense one, to reinstate his lost fame in California."

Of Gen. Kearny, the editor speaks mincingly: he can neither "commend nor condemn." “It may be that he has need his best endeavors to promote the welfare of the people, and that he has been over regardful of their interest. We are not to determine.”

Almost every numbers of these papers has something to say in reference to the sufferings of the emigrants who died in the California mountains, last winter; and it is rightly argued, that the news of the horrible fate which befell them, will deter emigration from the States to that country. We have copied as complete a list as could be made out of the names of those who perished, as well as those who survived. One of the papers contains the journal of Capt. Fallon, who, with a party of six others, left the settlements last April to relieve the emigrants, and brought in all the property which they could find belonging to the company. Kiesberg, the monster whose cannibal propensities and him to delight in the living upon human flesh and drinking human blood, was the only person in the camp alive. Fallon’s account confirms, every thing we have herefore stand in regard to the villainous conduct of this man, and we shall not reiterate them.

The exportation of quicksilver from California, a strictly prohibited from an order of Com. Biddle.

----

FROM CHIHUAHUA.----Intelligence to about the 20th of June, has been received in this city from Chihuahua. Every thing was then quiet in that town. The citizens who fled on the approach of Col. Doniphan’s army, and remained away from during his stay there, were returning and resuming their accustomed pursuits. The American traders were employed in the sale of their goods, and it was observed that the Mexicans took unusual pains to testify their friendship for them and their determination to protect them from attacks from any quarter.

[BRM]

The return of this man from Europe, where he must have been known to thousands, through Havana, where he certainly was known to our Consul at Havana did not send on some one to arrest him at Vera Cruz, is unaccountable. Then, how he could have come ashore, without undergoing a strict scrutiny, is still more so. We can believe any thing of the folly of Mr. Polk, after his avowal of the part he took in the return of Santa Anna, and we are disposed to think this one of his wise schemes for distracting the enemy.

We take the following extract from a latter of Col. Wilson’s to the Secretary of War, from the Union:
"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VERA CRUZ, Aug. 15.

"I have the honor to report that on the 14th instant British steamer Tevoit, Captain May, arrived here from England and the Havana, having General Paredes on board, under the assumed name of M. Martinez; who in consequence of the tardiness of the boarding officer, (Capt. Clark,) landed at between 6 and 7 A.M., incognito, from a four-oared boat, apparently prepared for the occasion. In his transit through the gate of the mole, he was recognized by an inspector, who took no notice of him. Therefore, I immediately ordered the discharge of both him and Capt. Clark—the former for having lost sight of the main [illegible], notwithstanding my office is but a few yard from the mole.

"The General, having arrived at the house of a Mr. G. Zamora, a native merchant, he presented a letter of introduction from Paris, and requested that horses might be directly furnished for himself and servant—a request immediately compiled with; and but ten minutes after his landing he passed through one of the gates of the city on his way to the interior, without myself or any of my officers being able to avoid it, from the circumstances of his arrival and presence here being unknown, and the letters from the United States consul at the Havana, giving notice of his having left, not being delivered to me until after the General’s departure, owing to their being in possession of a lady passenger on board."

Dear Sir—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your esteemed letter of the 16th inst., which has just reached one, accompanied by certain resolutions entered into by a Democratic meeting of my fellow–citizens at Clarksville, Tenn., on the 7th of June last, in relation to certain important matters and principles connected with the management of our national affairs, desiring to know my views and opinions in regard to the same, as they might have an important bearing on their courses, should my name be before the country as a candidate for the Presidency at the coming election; which I must beg leave to decline doing, for even if disposed to do so, I cannot spare the time from my official duties to devote to the investigation of those subjects which their importance seem to require, to enable me to reply to them in a way that would be satisfactory to myself, much less so to your honorable committee. I must therefore say in this instance what I have stated to others on like occasions, which is, that I am no politician, near forty years of my life have been passed in the military of the Republic, most of which in the field, the camp on our western frontier or in the Indian territory, and I may say with great propriety, for the most port constantly on duty, the last two in Mexico, or on its immediate borders, during which time I have not passed on night under the roof of a house; you may therefore very readily suppose under such circumstances, I have had but little time to devote to the consideration or investigation of important political matter, or to their discussion, nor have I attempted to do so, or been mixed up with political men or matters in any way, not even having voted, for one of our chief magistrates or any one else since I have been in the public service, having been stationed or serving for the most part beyond the limits of the States.

I can say in all sincerity I have no aspirations for the Presidency, an if I am a candidate, or to be one, it must recollected I am or will be made so by others, and by no agency of mine in the matter; under this state of things should a majority of the good people of our country think proper to elevate me to the first office in their gift, or I may say the first in the world, I will feel bound to serve them, and will do so honestly, and faithfully to the best of my abilities, strictly in conformity to the provisions of the Constitution, as nearly as possibly in the way it was acted on and construed by our first Presidents, two of whom at least participated in creating and putting into operation that glorious instrument. But many important changes in our affairs at home and abroad may take place between this and the time for holding the election for filling said office, so much so, as to make it desirable for the general good, that some individual other than myself should be selected as a candidate for that station, and could he be elected, I will not say that I would yield my pretentious to that distinguished position, for I have not the vanity to believe I have any, but I would not only acquiesce with pleasure in such an arrangement, but would rejoice that the Republic had on citizen more worthy and better qualified than I am, and no doubt there are thousands, to discharge the arduous and important duties appertaining to that high office. Be this as it may, should I ever occupy the White House it must be by the spontaneous move of the people, and by no act of mine, so that I could enter on the duties appertaining to the Chief Magistrate of that country untrammeled and unpledged beyond what I have previously stated as regards to the Constitution, so that I could and would be the President of the nation and not a party.

For the interest you and other kind friends of the committee and those you an they represent take in my continued success against the enemy while this war continues, which I sincerely hope will soon be brought to an honorable close, as well as I fear for the too flattering manner you have been pleased to connect my name with the distinguished office in question, and especially for the handsome and complimentary terms in which they have been communicated, are duly appreciated, and I beg leave to tender to you and through you to the gentlemen of the committee, collectively and individually, my most cordially thanks for the same. With considerations of highest respect and esteem, I remain gentlemen,

Your ob't. and devoted Serv't.
To Dr. C. L. Wilcox and others of the Committee

Z. Taylor
Major General, U.S. Army.

RW47v24n73p1c4, September 10, 1847, FROM THE RIO GRANDE

The propeller Secretary Buchanan, Capt. Corser, arrived yesterday from Brazos Santiago, having sailed on the 24th inst. By her we have a copy of the Matamoros Flag of the 24th inst. It contains no news whatever of the army above. There seems to be some question of the jurisdiction between Col Davenport and the Texas, which has given occasion to the following notice by Col Davenport, which may be important to those engaged in trade on the Rio Grande:

HEADQUARTERS, MATAMOROS, Aug. 19, 1847.

Sir,—It was reported to my yesterday that the steamers Eagle and Lama are engaged in the business of transporting goods from the mouth of the river to points above this place, on the Texas side of the river. If this be so, you must, in the multiplicity of business, have overlooked my instructions to you, on the 5th of July last. There being so few consumers of goods above this, on the Texas side of the river, the object, it is almost certain, is to smuggle them into Mexico, and it is the duty of all custom house agents to prevent this by all lawful means. Being required to collect Mexican duties, in accordance with the late tariff, it becomes my duty to determine the boundary between Mexico and Texas. This I understand to be the left bank of the river, and consequently all good brought into the river are in Mexico, and subject to Mexican duty.—In the execution of your duty as deputy collector, I wish you to act according to this contraction. Should any departure from it be necessary, the cases may be referred to the collector for decision.

Respectfully, your obd’r serv’t
WM. Davenport,
Colonel 1st Infantry, Commanding.

Lieut. Thos. B. J. Weld,
2d Artillery, Mouth of the Rio Grande.

The following are the instructions of the 5th of July, referred to above:

HEADQUARTERS, LOWER RIO GRANDE DISTRICT,
Matamoros, Mexico, July 5, 1847.

Sir.—The Hon Secretary of War having decided that Mexican duties are not collectable on the east of the Rio Grande, I hereby appoint you deputy collector, for the collection of duties under the Mexican tariff, on all goods and other dutiable articles for the Mexican market coming into the Rio Grande. Tonnage duty, if not collected there, will but seldom be collected anywhere; I have, therefore, to desire that you give your attention, particularly to this branch of that service. You must decide what vessels are to pay this duty. My opinion is that Texas only claims to the river, and consequently all vessels not freighted for the public, entering its mouth, are liable to this duty.

When the importer desires to pay duty on his merchant, dize at this post, you may, after satisfying yourself that the packages or parcels agree with the bill of lading, allow him to bring it up, when he shows you the authority of the collector this post, or his agent for it. In every such case give immediate notice here, which the business may receive timely attention. If the goods are to go higher up the river than this post, as we have no collector above, the duties should be paid at the mouth of the river, for it may not be convenient to stop her for that purpose.

Respectfully, your obd’r serv’t
WM. Davenport
Colonel 1st Infantry, Commanding.

Lieut. Thos. B.J. Weld,
2d Artillery, Mouth of the Rio Grande.

[BRM]

RW47v24n73p2c5, September 10, 1847, A GLANCE AT A MEXICAN PAPER

[From the New Orleans Picayune, August 31.]
By the arrival of the ship Agnes we have received copies of the Boletin de las Noticias of Jalapa of the 13th and 15th inst. When the latter number was issued the train under Major Lally had not, so far as the editor knew, crossed the National Bridge, and he felt great hopes of over powering the train. Senor Aburto and Father Jarauta had been the leaders in the attacks made on the train. They are represented to have killed or wounded over 300. We have not a doubt that this is ridiculous exaggeration. Senor D. Juan Soto, the Governor of the State of Vera Cruz, was in the vicinity of the train, giving confidence to the guerrillas. The editor repeats the story that the train has in charge a million of dollars in specie, most of it concealed in bags of golf in the loads of forage.

The Boletin announces the arrival of Paredes in Vera Cruz and his escape thence. It does not extend to the ex-President a very cordial reception. It thinks his return very indiscreet, and doubts if his object be to take part in the defence of the country, as it asserted. We can get no clue to the whereabouts of Paredes by the article.

We have read all the editor of the Boletin has said of the last intercepted courier. He was taken at Cordova, and appears to have been formerly connected with the convent of San Francisco at Vera Cruz. The editor invokes justice upon him, from which we presume he is to be shot. The contents of some of the letters cut off the editor thinks would be imprudent in him to commit to paper, lest his sheet should fall into the hands of the Americans. The contents of the other letters make the editor blush for his countrypmen, he says. The American officers, according to the Boletin’s version of these letters, confess themselves astonished at the debasement of the Mexicans, especially of those of high position in society. The higher their rank the more indifferent do they show themselves to the conquest of the country. According to the Americans, the Indians upon the frontiers display a much greater share of love of country. We are sorry that we cannot discover from the general terms employed by the editor something more definite of the contents of the intercepted letters.—The editor is too crafty to reveal much, but he concludes as follows: “What chastisement shall an outraged nation, an indignant people inflict upon these despicable members, who have slandered and vilified the nation, degrading it in the eyes of its enemies?”

The Boletin has an article running into two numbers of the paper upon the general aspect of affairs. He mentions that the last division of General Scott’s army was to leave Puebla on the 10th inst. 4000 strong—he does not say it left that day. He then goes on to speculate about the chances of victory in the battle to be fought at the capital and its vicinity. He reasons that a victory gained by the Americans would not advance their cause substantially, while if it were won by the Mexicans it would be decisive of the whole question. Mexico by a victory would be in a situation to listen to terms of peace. The fruits of victory would be so immense that he sees not how the Mexicans can fall short of the vigorous and desperate and heroic efforts necessary to win it. He points out the disastrous position of Gen. Scott should he meet with the slightest reverse. Hitherto the Americans have owed their successes, he tells us, to their superiority in numbers of to accidental circumstances which do not now exist. If they now suffer any defeat it will be ruin for them, as there is no retreat. The editor then goes on to tell his countrypmen how they should follow up their victory. They should not be too exacting towards the Americans; they should not drive a hard bargain with them about the terms of a peace. In the editor’s opinion, they should at once give up the conquest of the country. According to the Americans, the Indians upon the frontiers display a much greater share of love of country. We are sorry that we cannot discover from the general terms employed by the editor something more definite of the contents of the intercepted letters.—The editor is too crafty to reveal much, but he concludes as follows: “What chastisement shall an outraged nation, an indignant people inflict upon these despicable members, who have slandered and vilified the nation, degrading it in the eyes of its enemies?”

We are utterly at a loss to know what is to be made out of this intelligence, so the reader must spell it out for himself. That it is true, is we think, beyond doubt. But the fact is of such a bewildering nature—so entirely unexpected—so singular and so anomalous, that we know not what to think. We presume the appointment must have been made by the Mexican Congress, and that the object is, to place the entire executive power in the hands of General Scott, in order that he may make such a treaty as may seem good to him. Under any circumstances, it is impossible for him, we take it, to accept the office in these terms, for it is expressly forbidden by the terms of the constitution. The 9th section of the 1st article says “no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall, without the consent of Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.” Thus far, therefore, the bestowal of the office is a mere nullity.

It is nevertheless a transaction of the highest importance, inasmuch as it demonstrates the hopeless condition of the Mexican people, as represented by their Congress, and their willingness to submit to any terms which our commissioners may think proper to dictate. We are induced, therefore, to hope that the day of final settlement of all our difficulties it at least near at hand, if it has not already arrived. We have triumphed signally; we have humbled Mexico, by the force of our arms, in spite of all the obstacles that could be thrown in the way of a feeble executive—a national honor has been vindicated, and the national arms have acquired a luster, which will
What now remains for us to do? To make a peace as honorable to ourselves as the course of the war has been, or to take advantage of our position, and thrust into the very earth, those who have been unable to resist us? We hope there are not many who will hesitate in their choice of alternatives. We went to war, so says the President, in order to punish certain aggressions on the part of Mexico, and to obtain redress for spoliations committed upon the citizens of the United States. So far as the punishment is involved, we have had ample satisfaction. The redress for spoliations is yet to be settled, and it is a matter of great importance to settle it in the proper manner. Those who have been despoiled, we presume, will only desire that they may be reimbursed, and the question then arises, how is this to be done?

We know that there is a class of persons, generally defenders of the President throughout this war, who look to the lands of Mexico as a remuneration for all losses on our side, as well as for the reimbursement of the expenses of the Government in this war. That such a source of revenue is vain and illusory, we think sufficiently evident from the fact often stated in the controversy arising out of the war, and as far as we know, not yet controverted nor even denied, that Mexico has no public lands, but that on the contrary the whole country, with the exception of certain barren regions in California and New Mexico, not worth having, have already been appropriated. There can, therefore, be no probability of settling the claims of the sufferers, or paying the expenses of the war, from this source, while it would open the door to speculation and fraud on a gigantic scale, resulting only in the enriching of that tribe, which is the bane of a new country, and which has in a very great measure, we doubt not, been at the bottom of the war. We allude of course to the tribe of land speculators.

The payment of the claims of the sufferers will at last devolve upon Congress, and Congress will have nothing, besides the ordinary sources of revenue, to pay them with.----In this view of the case, we can see no possible reason for dismembering the Mexican Republic, seeing that we will gain nothing by it, in a pecuniary point of view, and that we shall incur the everlasting hatred of the nation whose weakness we take advantage of. The whole of Mexico, we hope, will no longer enter into the dreams of Mr. Polk and his kitchen cabinet of land speculators, since Mexico seems to have surrendered at discretion, and to have thrown herself upon America mercy, appealing, in the most striking manner thereby, to American magnanimity.

We have left out of consideration the question upon which we have hitherto so much insisted, and with which is involved the ultimate destinies of this free and happy country. It will be a most disastrous day for the Union when the principles involved in the Wilmot proviso shall have been brought under discussion, not upon a prospective and probable case, but in actually practice. We conceive the man who would willfully provoke it, to be little better than an open enemy to the future happiness of his country, and if the odious doctrine of "moral treason" could ever fall, justly upon any set of men, we take them to be more fully entitled to all its benefits, than any other whom we have heard. The incendiary, who would throw the torch of civil war into the midst of such a land as this, deserves no mercy at the hands of the press of the people.

We should state that we are not aware what degree of our credit our correspondent attaches to the news which he was so kind as to send to us. He dates from Charleston, and says the steamboat is just in; whether at Charleston or at New Orleans, we cannot undertake to say.

[BRM]

The statement transmitted to us in a letter from Charleston, received on Saturday morning last, that Gen. Scott had been declared President of Mexico, is not confirmed by the last Southern advices. The improbability of such an event induced us at the time to entertain some doubt of its authenticity, and we should have treated it as a quiz, but for the fact that is purported to have been written by one of the editors of the New Orleans Picayune, who we were aware had passed through this city a few days previously, on his return from a visit to the North, and because w could not suppose that any individual would attempt to palm off upon us so sill a hoax.

There is no later intelligence from Gen. Scott’s army than that received some days ago, and which left Scott in front of the City of Mexico, negotiation with the Mexican authorities. The New Orleans Picayune is of the opinion that this negotiation has reference exclusively to the terms upon which the City should be surrendered, and not to the restoration of peace. We hope that this may not be the fact, although it must be admitted that the suggestion is not without plausibility. We have always believed that the occupation of the Mexican capital would exert but little, if any, influence on the duration of the war; for it certainly would be remarkable, if the Mexican Government is willing to terminate hostilities, on the terms proposed by our Government, and of the character of which it was doubtless fully apprized before Gen. Scott left Puebla, that it should not have acceded to them when they were tendered, rather than to have deferred its submission until it had been reduced to the signal humiliation of seeing it magnificent capital in the possession of the conqueror, and a foreign flag waving in triumph over its public edifices. We are strengthened in this impression, too, by the fact, some time since made public, that the Mexican Minister in London had been instructed by his Government, in evident anticipation of the occupation of the city of Mexico by the American army, to ascertain from the British Ministry what would be its course should that event occur, and the Mexican rulers be forced to take refuge in some other city. Lord Palmerston’s reply, it will be remembered, was that the British Ministry would acknowledge the existing Government of Mexico, and that the British Minister would consequently be instructed to follow that Government, whithersoever it might go. It may be, however, that the pacific councils have prevailed, and that, it dispirited by the unbroken series of disasters that have attended their efforts to repel the invader, and torn to pieces by the violent factions, which, even with a foreign enemy at their gates, have not ceased to make war upon each other, the Mexican Congress has determined to submit to the terms of reconciliation tendered them by Mr. Polk's ambassador. We sincerely hope that this may be the case and that we may very soon have it in our power to announce the termination of a war so unnecessary in its origin, notwithstanding its end threatens to be so pregnant with danger to ourselves, in the disposition of the new territory, the acquisition of which is unquestionably to be made a sine qua non of peace.

We have later accounts from General Taylor's division of the army, which it is now certain will not advance farther into the interior of Mexico in that direction——a large portion of his force, already inadequate for offensive operation, having been detached, and ordered to proceed immediately to Vera Cruz. Some of the New Orleans papers ascribe this change in the plan of operations to the determination of the President to doom Gen. Taylor to inactivity during the remainder of the war, old Rough and Ready having already rendered himself far too formidable as arrival to the next in line of succession of Locofoco Presidents. The New Orleans Delta, on the other hand, applauds the wisdom of this arrangement, which it says, is rendered necessary, in order to keep open the communication between Gen. Scott's army and his depot at Vera Cruz. The Delta thinks that the present aspect of affairs indicates very clearly that we shall be "under the necessity of occupying and holding Mexico after its conquest," the Government of that country having neither the will nor the power to make peace; and consequently, while a mere garrison force, sufficient to hold the principal points now in possession of the Rio Grande, will be entirely adequate in that quarter, Gen. Scott will require a much larger force than that with which he marched from Puebla. "The mere conquest of the capital, (says the Delta, and we concur with it in opinion,) will not be the great difficulty of this war. Our serious difficulties commence with its capture and occupation. A line of 350 miles, through thickly settled and inveterately hostile country, admirable adapted for partisan and guerrilla warfare. Will have to be fortified and garrisoned——and valuable trains will have to be continually guarded and escorted form the coast to the capital. To perform all these difficult duties it will require at least 30,000 men." But if this opinion shall be confirmed by events, when, in the name of heaven, is this war to terminate, and the incessant drain upon our treasury, rendered necessary by its prosecution, to cease? The expenditures for the army, navy, &c., for the past year, are about fifty millions of dollars, or nearly a million of dollars per week. At this rate, how long will it be before the departments of New Mexico and California, which we have been led to believe were at one time supposed to embrace a sufficient "area" to atone for all the wrongs that we have suffered at the hands of Mexico, as well as to pay all the cost of punishing her for their infliction, will be regarded as wholly in sufficient for that purpose? Nothing less, indeed, than the whole of Mexico, may be requisite finally to satisfy our claims, increasing as they do thus rapidly; and we presume the Delta has an eye to this result when it says, "we shall be under the necessity of holding and occupying Mexico, (referring to the entire Republic,) after its conquest!" Nous verrons! [BRM]

RW47v24n74p2c1, September 14, 1847, FROM THE VIRGINIA REGIMENT

The mail of yesterday morning, brought two letters form Captain Robert G. Scott, to his father. The one dated at Buena Vista, August 8th, and continued on the 9th, and the other from the same place, commenced on the 14th of August, and closed on the 15th of the same month. This last letter brings the intelligence of the death of Capt. Fairfax, expressed in the following terms:

"TUESDAY, MORNING, Aug 15.

"Capt. Fairfax, who has been sick for three or four weeks, died in Saltillo, last night, at 8 ½ o'clock, He was a most excellent man, and a good officer. We shall feel his loss most sensibly. Just before his attack, he boasted to me, that nothing could hurt him in this country——that he had not been sick for twenty years, and apprehended no danger form the climate.

"My Company enjoy good health. I have only two o three in the hospital, and they not seriously unwell. The routine of camp duty becomes so monotonous that men and officers complain a good deal. Yet an attentive and industrious officer will find enough to employ and engage him. Since coming here, I have not visited Saltillo, nor indeed been much from the camp. The drill of my company commands now my undivided attention. The North Carolina regiment has suffered much from sickness, and the effect has been to dispirit the men. Our regiment has but little sickness in it, and its condition for active service is at least respectable.

"When we shall move forward, I am unable to inform you, nor do I believe Gen. Taylor himself is informed on the subject. When we do, the Virginia regiment will be in the advance, and I fain hope will not disgrace the Old Dominion."

[BRM]

RW47v24n72p2c2, September 14, 1847: (no title)

The last Raleigh Register publishes the following correspondence:

Raleigh, July 5. 1847.
To Maj. General Z. Taylor:

Sir—In obedience to a Resolution, passed at a very large and respectable meeting held in this city on the 3d instant respecting the next occupancy of the Executive Chair of our Republic, I have the pleasure of enclosing a copy of the proceedings of that assemblage of the people, and sincerely hope their perusal will afford you as much pleasure, as their passage, without a dissenting voice, did your numerous of friends on that occasion. We all cordially esteem your many virtues, and great abilities, and well–tried patriotism, and desire, with your approbation, to manifest our sincerity, by voting for you to fill the highest office in the gift of a free people. We hold in grateful remembrance your services to our common country, and are enthusiastic in your cause; because we believe the true interest of the country will be promoted by your election to the Presidency.

With sentiments of high esteem and respect,
I am your obedient servant,
GEO. W. HAYWOOD.

HEADQUARTERS, AMRY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, Aug. 2, 1847.

SIR—The copy of the Resolutions, recently passed in the City of Raleigh, N.C., on the 3d of July, and which you were charged with communicating to me, has been with your letter, duly received.

Be pleased to convey to the voters of that District of N. C, my deep appreciation of the high honor they have conferred upon me in their nomination. While I am ever willing to yield to the popular will, and serve the country in any capacity to which I may be freely and unanimously called I may be permitted to say, that I have the assurance to believe, that my abilities are suited to the discharge of such responsible duties as rest upon the office Chief Magistracy. My best efforts, however, will always be exercised in the cause of the country, in whatever position may be my fortune to be placed.

Accept for yourself, sir, my best acknowledgements for the very courteous and flattering manner in which you were pleased to communicate these Resolutions, and my wishes for your continued prosperity and health.

I am, sir with high respect,
Your most obedient servant,
Z. Taylor
Maj. Gen. U.S.A.

Geo. W. Haywood, Esq.
Chairman late Public Meeting,
Raleigh, N.C.

RW47v24n72p2c3, September 14, 1847, PORTRAITS OF HEROES

Mr. Wm. G. Brown, who left this city on the 1st of May, for the purpose of transferring to canvass the lineaments of Gen. Taylor, the Hero of the Rio Grande, and his principal subaltern officers, reached home yesterday morning, having successfully, and we understand most admirably accomplished his undertaking. Gen. Taylor constitutes, of course, the principal figure of his attractive group—besides whom are the following: Majors Bliss, Eaton and Bragg, Colonels Mansfield, Monroe, Whiting and Belknap, Captains Garnett and Leonard, and Dr. Craig.

We understand that the Paintings will be open for public examination in a few days.

[BRM]

RW47v24n72p2c3, September 14, 1847, DEATH OF SERGEANT POLLARD OF THE 1ST COMPANY OF PETERSBURG VOLUNTEERS

The Southern mail of yesterday morning brought to this place the melancholy intelligence of the death of Orderly Sergeant Pollard, of Capt Archer’s company of Mexican Volunteers.

Sergeant P. was forced, by sickness, to get leave of absence from the army some weeks since, and had got as far as New Orleans, on his way home, where, being too weak to continue his journey, he stopped, in hope of recruiting his strength. The hope, however, proved to be vain—The hand of the fell destroyer was upon him, and he yielded to disease that life which he had nobly offered to the service of his country.
The deceased was a son of our worthy fellow–citizen, Capt. John Pollard. He took an active part in raising the 1st company of Volunteers from this place, was elected to the office of 1st Sergeant of the company, and while in Mexico won for himself the good opinion of all who knew him. It was not his destiny to fall upon the battlefield, but his life was not the less given to his country than if he had perished amidst the clash of arms and din of battle. To him may well be applied the lines of one of our own Poets:

"And they who for their country die,
    Shall fill an honored grave;
For glory lights the soldier's tomb,
    And beauty weeps the brave."

[BRM]

The steamship Telegraph, Capt Wilson, arrived here Sunday forenoon from Brazos Santiago, whence she sailed on the 1st inst.

The intelligence by this arrival is interesting and important. We have at last the execution of the design of the Government to withdraw from the column of Gen. Taylor all the troops which can be spared by the General with due consideration for the safety of the line of the Rio Grande and thence to Buena Vista. The General was also directed to detach to brigadier generals; by the following general orders it will be seen how he has directed the views of the Government to be carried out:

ORDER No. 96.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION
Camp near Monterey, August 16, 1847.

1. Five companies of the 10th Infantry, under the colonel will proceed to Matamoros and relieve the Ohio regiment of volunteers now in garrison there. The Ohio regiment will then proceed to Brazos Island and be held ready to embark fro Vera Cruz. The remaining companies of the 10th, under lieutenant colonel, with Capt Hunt's company of artillery and Capt Reed's company of Texas cavalry, will form the garrison of Camargo and its dependencies, relieving the other troops now on that duty.

2. The Indiana regiment of volunteers will proceed to Brazos Island and will then, with the Ohio regiment embark for Vera Cruz. Brigadier General Lane will take the command of these regiments at the Brazos and conduct them to their destination.

3. Six companies of the 16th Regiment, under the colonel, will take up the line of march for Monterey, when they will relieve the present garrison, composed of six companies of Massachusetts regiment. The remaining four companies, under the lieutenant colonel, will in the like manner relieve the battalion of the Massachusetts regiment at Cerralvo. The troops thus relieved will proceed to the Brazos and be there concentrated under the command of Col. Wright.

4. The 13th Regiment will proceed to the Brazos as soon as practicable after the companies of Massachusetts regiment, now at Cerralvo, shall have passed down the river.

5. Brig. Gen. Cushing will take up the line of march, no latter than 23d inst., with Capt. Deas' light battery, (company B, 4th Artillery.) He will proceed to the Brazos, when he will bring under his orders the 13th Regiment and Massachusetts regiment, and thence conduct his entire command (one battery and two regiments) to Vera Cruz.

6. Brig. Gen Hopping will remain in command of the district of the Upper Rio Grande, and will establish his headquarters where he may select. Should it be found necessary to retain the general hospital at Mier, a sufficient guard will be furnished for its protection, and also sufficient force of medical officers and attendants must be detailed from the regiments which leave their sick. Great care will be taken to furnish descriptive rolls of all attendants and patients thus detached. Col. Belknap is specially charged with the rigid enforcement of this order.

7. Col. Hays, with his command of Texas horse, will march for the Brazos, and there embark for Vera Cruz, in conformity with the instructions issued to him by the War Department.

8. The above movements will be executed with the least possible delay. The quartermasters and other staff departments will furnish the necessary transportation and other facilities for this purpose.

By order of Maj. General TAYLOR:

W. W. S. BLISS, Ass't Adj't Gen.
The Ohio and Indiana regiments under Gen. Lane, and the 13th Infantry and Massachusetts regiment, with Deas’s (late Washington’s) battery, under Gen Cushing, being ordered to Vera Cruz, and Hay's regiment being sent to the same point, let us see what troops are left on the Rio Grande line.

Gen Wool's command at Buena Vista and Saltillo will consist of the Virginia, North Carolina, and 2d Mississippi regiments of volunteers and Maj Chevalie’s three companies of Texas Rangers.

Gen Taylor at Valnut Springs will have only Lieut Col Fauntleroy’s squadron of dragoons and Maj Bragg’s battery.

The 16th Infantry, Col Tibbatts, and the 10th Infantry, Col Temple, will garrison the Monterey, Cerralvo, Camargo, Reynosa and Matamoros.

The squadron of the 3d Dragoons, Col Butler, and two companies of volunteer cavalry from Alabama and Illinois remain unassigned. A portion of the dragoons are at Mier, and it is conjectured that they will remain on the line for escort of trains and like duties. [A correspondent of the National thus sums up the troops who remain between Brazos Island and Buena Vista.]

Distribution of forces on the line of the Rio Grande, after the departure of the force now under marching orders for Vera Cruz:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location</th>
<th>Troops</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Brazos Island</td>
<td>1 Company 1st Artillery 111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Point Isabel</td>
<td>1 Company 4th Artillery 109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fort Brown</td>
<td>1 Company 2d Artillery 93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matamoros</td>
<td>6 companies, 5 of 10th Infantry 511</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Camargo, &amp;c.</td>
<td>12 companies, 5 of 10th Infantry, 5 of 3d Dragoons, 1 of 4th Artillery 1133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cerralvo</td>
<td>4 companies 16th Infantry 403</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monterey</td>
<td>6 companies 16th Infantry 604</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Camp near Monterey,</td>
<td>5 companies 3d Artillery, 2 2d Dragoons, 1 Mounted Volunteers 413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buena Vista, Saltillo, &amp;c.,</td>
<td>42 companies 2191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total number of troops</td>
<td>5568</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

A few weeks since it was supposed that Capt. Raylor and his command had been cut off. The Flag gives the following letter from its correspondent, which assures us of Capt. B.’s safety:

Editors Flag——My letter to you of a recent date gave information of an attack by a large body of Mexicans upon a detachment of twenty–seven Texas rangers, commanded by Capt. Baylor, and the probable destruction of the whole part save three, who had effected their escape and got back to this place. So positive were they in their statements that no more could have escaped, that I did not hesitate to express to you my belief that all the rest had been killed. Such was the opinion of ever one here until this morning. Greatly to our relief and much to our astonishment, composing part of an escort to a train which arrived this morning from Monterey, there came Capt. Baylor and all but four of his reported dead companions. There escape was truly miraculous, and knowing that you would like to have a history of it, I have obtained from Capt. B and Lieut. Lee the full particulars.

After visiting and searching several ranchos without finding anything in them which would convict the inhabitants of being concerned in the late robberies of the trains, Capt. B. left them unmolested and proceeded on to a rancho, called Las Tablos, situated on the river Salinas. Here a large quantity of good were found, and $500 in American money. The goods and money were taken and packed upon the mules, the rancho was burnt, and several Mexicans made prisoners. With the booty and prisoners, Capt. B started for the Monterey road, and had proceeded about a mile and a half from the burnt rancho, when he found himself in the presence of 300 Mexicans, who were ambushed in the chaparral skirting a plain over which the road ran. Between the road and the river was another chaparral thicket extending to the river. The lancers charged before Capt. B could gain the thicket next to the river, and in this charge four of his men were killed. The thicket gains, the rangers dismounted, and protected by the bushes twice repulsed the lancers, killing fifteen, and forced them to retire beyond the reach of their rifles. Taking advantage of this, the rangers left their horses, boot and prisoners, and descending an almost perpendicular bluff, fifty feet high, they crossed the river. Marching by circuitous routes and avoiding ranchos, the party at length reached Monterey, where they were again remounted for service and arrived here this morning as I have mentioned above. The three who made their way to this place and gave the account which I sent you, were separated from the main part by the first charge, and judged that they were all killed, by the firing having ceased, and seeing the enemy in possession of their horses.
Capt. Baylor leaves to day with the train for Camargo and on his return, if I am not misinformed, the Mexicans will hear from him again. Maj. Graham commands the escort going down with the train, and has with him upwards of one hundred dragoons and rangers. With this force he will return and go in search of the robbers who have been so bold of late.

The following is from the Flag of the 25th ult.:

Retaken.---The report which was noticed in last Wednesday's paper of the taking of some thirty or forty pack mules beyond Cerralvo, by a party of Mexicans, is confirmed. The attack was made between Ramos and Marine, and we regret to learn that a clerk of Mr. Taniere, of this city, by the name of Merchant, was killed. Gen. Lane, who was proceeding to headquarters, in company with the escort immediately collected ten men—his son among the number—who volunteered their services and made after the robbers. The general, being an old back woodsman, proceeded to headquarters, in company with the escort immediately collected ten men—his son among the number—who volunteered their services and made after the robbers. The general, being an old back woodsman, soon ascertained their "whereabouts," and his party no sooner appeared to the Mexicans, than the latter "vamoosed," leaving the pack mules and all the booty which they had taken, in the hands of the Americans, who delivered the property safely to Monterey. The goods belonged to Mr. Taniere.

[From the Flag of the 28th ult.]

The attack on the mule train near Papagallas, on the 31st of July, of which mention was made in the Flag of the 11th inst., was incorrectly reported to us, as we are informed by one of the party present at the time, and we make the following correction from his statement:

The train consisted of thirty-eight mules, and one wagon loaded with merchandise belonging to individuals; two of them were proceeding with the train. The escort consisted of only four persons, C. R. Gleason, John Brennan, Daniel Dowty and James Bartlett, the three last named late members of Capt. Gray's disbanded company. In company at the time of the attack were Dr. Dickenson and two French gentlemen sent out by the authorities of New Orleans to take the bust of Gen. Taylor—the Frenchmen traveling in an ambulance. About 1 o'clock on the 31st ult., the day being excessively hot and the escort wearied, a halt was called at a shady spot near the road, and the party dismounted to refresh themselves. They had remained in this situation a half hour or more when they were alarmed by the Mexican bugle charge sounding from different directions. As soon as the charge was sounded Mr. Gleason ordered all to mount, and they did so, with exception of Dr. Dickenson who horse took to fright and ran off. Mr. Gleason, who is an old Texan and one of the Mier prisoners, immediately ascertained that the attacking party numbered several hundred, and remarking that the only hope was in flight, dashed off into the chaparral, followed by the remainder of the escort. The Frenchman sprang to the ambulance and the driver put his horses to their speed on the Monterey road. Mr. Dickenson was unable to follow, and before he could secrete himself in the chaparral the Mexicans were in sight. As soon as he was discovered they commenced firing and advancing upon him. Having a six-shooter, the doctor determined to sell his life as dearly as possibly. Allowing four of them to come close up, he was enabled to kill two, mortally wound a third, and after a hand-to-hand encounter with the fourth, finally effected his escape.

A few pursued the ambulance, but the main force was drawn towards the train, and as soon as the possession of it was obtained, the bugle sounded a recall and the pursuers all returned without having overtaken the ambulance, which had not proceeded far before a train was met coming down from Monterey escorted by a detachment of dragoons.

The two teamsters were killed, one receiving six balls in his body, and the other had his skull crushed with the butt of a musket and a saber cut across his abdomen nearly severing him in two. All the mules and packs were captured, also the baggage wagon containing much valuable clothing and about $1500 in money.

Some ten or a dozen cases of yellow fever are reported at the Brazos, and several persons have died. The fever originated on board vessels from New Orleans, and is as yet confined to the crews of those vessels. There is no hospital on Brazos Island, and we understand objection has been made to yellow fever patients entering hospital at Point Isabel.

Ex. President and Gen. M. B. Lamar, (now Capt. Lamar, commanding a company of Texan rangers) was in Mier a few days ago, with a detachment of his command on his way from Laredo to Gen. Taylor's camp. Capt. Lamar, we understand, is anxious to be relieved from his post at Laredo, and will apply to Gen. Taylor for this purpose.--We are happy to hear that he is in excellent health.

FATAL AFFRAY.---On Saturday last two Mexicans having quarreled about the paltry sum of three rials, made a "affair of honor" out of the quarrel, and betook themselves to a convenient spot near Fort Paredes to settle the difficulty. With well sharpened knives the parties commenced stabbing and cutting one another, and continued to fight until both were severely wounded. One of them received a cut in the arm, which bled so profusely as to cause him to sink exhausted on the ground and the fight ended. He was conveyed home and received surgical aid, but died on Tuesday last.

PASSENGERS BY THE TELEGRAPH—P. Henley, lady and 2 children; Dr. Craig, U. S. A. Capt. L. H. Curtis, 3d regiment Ohio Volunteers; Mrs. M. Black; R. Schuyler, R. L. Ogden, Capt. Webster, Dr. Dickerson, Capt. C. Rains, W. G. Brown, A. Phelps, M.J. Ferris, A. Leader, Capt. Geo. W. McCerren and son, and 37 sick and discharged soldiers. [BRM]
By the arrival here, yesterday, of the steamship Yacht, Capt. Crane, from Galveston the 1st inst. We have received papers from that port to the date of our departure. We take the following from the Civilian of the 30th ult.:

A Wreck.—The brig Kimbal, Capt. Burpur, from East Thomaston, which left this port six days ago for Mobile with 500 bbls of lime, experienced a heavy gale on the Gulf, and on Friday last, the captain being apprehensive of fire, or rather thinking a fire had actually broken out from the smoke of the slaking lime, attempted to put back to this port; but in the storm of that night—a violent gale blowing all night—this vessel went ashore on the beach several miles below this city. On the next day (Saturday) the vessel having been abandoned, was sold with every thing belonging to her, by the wreck master, for the benefit of the underwriters. She sold for $700. By great exertions, we learn that the purchasers had been able to secure most of her tackle yesterday. But last night, about one o’clock, the fire broke out, and, as we learn consumed the hull to the water’s edge, with the exception of the anchors, rigging, &c. the whole it a total loss.

The following articles are from the Austin Democrat, of the 21st ultimo:

Five companies of Col. Hays’s new regiment left San Antonio, for Mier, on Friday the 13th inst. The companies of Captain Highsmith and Gillet, we believe, are the only ones of the regiment left on our frontier. The former is stationed, for the present, at Fredericksburg, and we are informed that the latter is placed at some point on or near the Nueces, not yet designated. Lieut. Colonel Bell is now in command of the remaining frontier forces.

Through the politeness of Capt. Highsmith, we have been favored with the perusal of a letter from San Antonio dated the 17th inst., in which it is stated that some person recently arrived in that place from Monterey, who brought the intelligence that Major Chevalle’s command had not long since been attacked by about eight hundred guerrillas and after a short skirmish, was compelled, from inferiority of numbers, to sound a retreat; though, as the writer of the letter from San Antonio says, “not without giving a good account of themselves.” It is also stated that there is a large increase of the guerrillas between Mier and Saltillo.

CROPS—The News of the 28th ult. Says: Our account of the Cotton crop from every part of the State continues extremely favorable. Every planter is now engaged with his whole force in picking. The weather could not be better for gathering the Cotton in the finest condition.”

Extract of a letter dated, Marshall, Harrison county Aug. 3d, 1847: “The crops here are of luxuriant perfection, and unprecedented abundance crowns the labors of the husbandman. Wealth and population are flowing in and the whole country bears the marks of prosperity.

“The election for Governor is exciting some degree of interest among us. Mr. Van Zandt has the popular strength throughout this region, and his popularity is advancing with rapid strides.”

THE INDIAN TRIBES.—Santa Anna, the principal chief of the Camanches, came into Fredericksburg on the 14th ultimo, and held a talk with Captain Grumbles, commanding the Ragern there. He stated that he had feared a hostile attack from the Americans, which induced him to move off and take the women and children of the tribe to a place of safety. He said he knew that the Americans suspected his tribe of having taken or killed the four men of Hay’s party sometime since, and though it prudent to take off the women and children, so that they would be safe in case that there should be any troubles with the whites. So soon as he had removed the women and children to a place of security, he hastened to Fredericksburg, in order to explain to Major Neighbors, if he should find him there, the cause of his sudden departure. He regretted very much that Major Neighbors had left before his arrival, and stated that he would hasten to the Trading House on the Brassos, where he was told Neighbors had gone. He informed Captain Grumbles that the four men of the surveying party were taken and subsequently killed by Wacoés and that he was present at a dance over their scalps. He intimated the great necessity of some step being taken forthwith by the Americans to put a stop to the depredations of the Wacoés; and stated his determination of causin them all to be killed by his own tribe, if the whites should fail to act in the matter immediately, inasmuch as the depredations committed by them were attributed to Camanches. He professed the sincerest friendship towards the Americans, and expressed a desire to continue friendly. He has recently been made Head Chief of all the bands of Camanches that are in the habit of hunting on our border, and says he will, as far as possible, preserve peace with our people.

He received a pass to enable him to go to San Antonio, whence he would repair to Torry's trading house to meet Maj. Neighbors.

THE NEXT LEGISLATURE.—At Austin, they were making preparation for the coming session of the Legislature, New dwellings are being erected by some; others are repairing, painting and whitewashing, and some of the merchants are enlarging their store houses in order to make ample room for the extensive stocks of fall and winter goods, provisions, &c., which they have ordered. The tavern keepers are also busy in fitting up their premises.
and moving their houses, so as to be fully prepared to accommodate those who may favor them with their patronage during the ensuing season, with all the comforts and conveniences that are necessary to give perfect satisfaction.

[BRM]

RW47v24n72p4c1, September 14, 1847, THE MEXICAN NEWS

Our city was thrown into as much excitement on yesterday, by the arrival of the long expected news from Mexico. Of it accuracy in the main, we do not entertain a doubt. We have never had the smallest doubt that our troops would disperse those of Mexico whenever they met them in the field, nor were our impressions at all weakened by the report that they had occupied in great force the almost impregnable pass of Pinon. Col. Napior pronounces these so called impregnable passes in ranges of mountains, a humbug after all, for he says they may in front, there is always some way to turn them, and get in their rear. No general would attack them, of course, in front when he could pass around them, and thus render their strength of no avail.—This, it appears, has been the course of Gen. Scott on the present occasion. While the enemy were looking out for him in front, he was amusing them with a feint in that direction, at the same time that he was quietly gaining their rear, with the main body of his army.

Various reasons have been assigned for general’s not having entered the city before the 21st. Apart from the wish which he might very naturally entertain to avoid wounding the feelings of a crushed enemy, any farther that he could possibly avoid, it is probable that he had deep reasons of a military nature for not taking his entrée at that time. The Spaniards in the Peninsular war, though they proved themselves to be what the French called them "lambs in the field," were nevertheless[illigible]ions behind walls. Napoleon blamed his generals for attacking them as they did at Saragossa, thus causing an immense waste of blood, and rendering the almost entire destruction of the city so absolutely necessary before they could be driven from their strongholds. The plan had pursued at Madrid, was essentially different. Had he entered that city before it was evacuated by the forces of the enemy, it is more than probable, that when the columns of his large army had become entangled in its long and narrow streets, they would have been attacked by the Spaniards, when the scenes of Saragossa might have been anticipated by several weeks. Knowing these facts, he encamped with fifty thousand men, and two hundred pieces of cannon, in such a position that he could burn the city to the ground in a few hours, and sent them word that he gave them twenty–four hours to evacuate it. Finding that he did not intend to give them the opportunity to attack him at a disadvantage, the Spanish soldiery, mingling with the populace, gave way to all the excesses of brutal and hopeless fury, quarreling with each other, and spending the night in mutual destruction. Napoleon himself compared the appearance of Madrid, to that huge beast caught in the toils, and venting its impotent fury in loud and terrific, but unavailing cries. However, his threat had its due effect, for on the morrow, Madrid was evacuated and the French army entered in triumph.

Some such reasons as this, may probable have induced Gen. Scott to delay en'ering the city, hereby exposing his troops to an attack—an exposure which, we take it, would have been entirely unnecessary, since he had the game in his own hands. We have no doubt that before shi day, he has already realized the long promised feat, of reveling in the Halls of Montezumas.

The question which every man most naturally will first ask is, are we now to have peace? We hope so with all our hearts, and we think we can see very evident signs of its near approach. It is true, we dread the return of peace on one account, and that is, the settlement of the terms—compromising, as it is but too apt to do, the surrender of territory on the part of Mexico, and the consequent introduction of the terrific sectional question with which it is so intimately connected. We say terrific, and we say so from the bottom of our hearts; for there has never been one in our time at least, nor do we believe there has never been one since the Revolution, involving consequences of such fearful, such absolutely awful moment. Still we want peace first—peace above all things—peace at the sacrifice of anything but the national honor. By a speedy peace, we hope the Executive may be induced to forego its cherished design of conquering the whole of Mexico, and destroying its national existence; a design, upon the execrable nature of which, it has been our duty more than once to express our opinion.

The character of the Spaniard has stood out most conspicuously throughout the whole of this Mexican war.—The same overweening arrogance—the same pompous pronunciamentos—the same spirit of gasconade and braggadocio—distinguish each era, and both people. It may be said too, that the Mexican proclamations, like the Spanish, have always been the prelude to defeat, and that loud professions of patriotism and resolutions to die in the last ditch, have always ushered in shameful flight or still more shameful capitulation.—The Mexican seems to be the true son of the Spaniard, with every trait of descent most distinctly preserved.

The next arrival from Vera Cruz will no doubt bring the official account of these proceedings. It is expected with intense anxiety by every body, but more especially by that very considerable class of persons who have friends and relatives in the army of Gen. Scott.

[BRM]

RW47v24n72p4c3, September 14, 1847, AMERICAN ARMS AGAIN VICTORIOUS
New Orlean’s Picayune, Sept. 3rd.

The Mexicans defeated by Gen. Scott in two distinct engagements.

THE CITY OF MEXICO IS AT OUR MERCY.

The steamship Fashion, Capt. O’Brady, arrived yesterday evening from Vera Cruz, by the way of Tampico. She left Vera Cruz on the 27th of August, and Tampico on the 29th.

The News of this arrival is the most important we have received in many months from Mexico. Our army has not only advanced to the city of Mexico, but it has had two engagements with the enemy close under the walls of the city and defeated them. The Mexicans have been brought to supplicate a suspension of arms, and General Scott has granted it. The Mexican Congress has been convoked to take into consideration Mr. Trist’s propositions.

The news was received in Vera Cruz on the evening of the 26th ult. By an express courier from Orizaba, who brought down the following letter to Mr. Dimond, the collector at Vera Cruz, to whose courtesy we are indebted for the use of the letter, which we proceed to give:

Orizaba, August 25th, 1847.

My dear friend—The Mexican mail, which has at last come in, brings the following intelligence, which the copy from the Diario Oficial del Gobierno. Being of so great importance, I send you this express, courier, who will be with you to morrow about 12 o’clock.

On the 20th two brigades commanded by General Valencia and Santa Anna, went out to attack the Americans near San Angel. Valencia’s division has been completely defeated, and Santa Anna after the first recontre, fell back also in disorder to the city.

They immediately after this asked for a suppression of hostilities, and offered to hear the propositions of peace from Mr. Trist.

The next day the minister of foreign relations invited the congress, through the newspapers to meet for that purpose.

These are the great facts which no doubt will bring after them peace. Your, truly.

F.M. Dimond, Eq.

*Another letter say Los Llales de San Angel.

Another express arrived in Vera Cruz on the 26 th with letters containing the same news in substance and the following:

[Translated from the Diario Oficial del Gobierno]

On the 20th August Scott’s troops, who intended marching on Penon, turned [away from] it and arrived near Tacubaya. As soon as the news was known at Mexico Valencia’s division went out to attack the Americans at Los Llanos de San Angel, and was completely routed. Next came Santa Anna with another division, which shared the same fate after some fighting. The Mexicans retreated to the capital in great disorder, and such was the panic created by their defeat that the minister of foreign relations immediately convoked the congress to take into consideration Mr. Trist’s proposition. A suspension of arms was demanded by the Mexicans and granted. The Americans are around Mexico, but had not entered the city on the 21st.

Such are the meager details which we have of these important events. No couriers from Gen. Scott’s army direct have been able to get through, so far as we can learn.—But from the foregoing statements it is manifest that Gen Scott holds the city of Mexico at his command. That Gen. Scott did not choose to enter the city is manifest. He was doubtless deterred from entering it by a desire to save the pride of the Mexicans when upon the even of important negotiations. It is now supposed that the extraordinary courier which left Vera Cruz for Mexico on the 12th ult, a day in advance of the regular English courier, was the bearer of instructions to the British minister to offer again his mediation; and we think we may safely say that he was instructed to do so if possible before Gen Scott entered the capital. We believe the instructions were positive, and no doubt they were obeyed. Having absolute confidence in this representation of the acts of the English Government we think it reasonable to suppose that Gen Scott was influenced by a knowledge of this mediation to trust again to the efforts of Mr Trist to negotiate a peace, and so spared the Mexicans the humiliation of the armed occupation of their capital. His characteristic humanity may also be presumed to have strongly influenced him to save Mexico from the violence of a hostile occupation. We may recur to this point and to the prospects of peace which some may now entertain.

We have given some of the rumors current in Vera Cruz as to the fall of Mexico. They are evidently founded on imperfect rumors of the real state of facts. The rumors circulated here that Santa Anna and Valencia were taken prisoners we believe are totally unfounded.

In regard to the train under Maj. Lally, the intelligence is favorable. We are informed from a very responsible source that he is known to have passed Perot and been on his way in safety to Puebla. He made some delay in Jalapa. Our readers may be interested in what is said of the movements of the train prior to its leaving Jalapa in the Sun on Anahuac.

The Boletin of Jalapa, says that the train, after having been attacked at Cerro Gordo, retired to the Plan, at the same time the guerrillas also retired. On the following day the train commenced marching for Jalapa, and on Thursday evening, had not yet entered that place. On the 19th it was reported at Jalapa that the Guerrillas would attack our troops near that place, and all the evening the road from near a mile was covered with men, women and children, whom curiosity had attracted there. This have rise to a firing of cannon and musketry from our troops, and the citizens succeeded in reaching their home without receiving any injury.

At 11 o'clock on the 19th Major Lally inquired of the alcalde whether the citizens of Jalapa would commit hostilities against the Americans if the entered, or not. To which the alcalde answered, that the population was unarmed; but that a number of guerrillas being in the neighborhood he could not take the responsibility of their actions. On the morning of the 20th the train of wagons and the troops entered the city. The Boletin says that the wagons are filled were sick and wounded.

Yesterday [the 24th. ult.] it was rumored in Vera Cruz that Father Jarauta had attacked the train a short distance the other side of Jalapa, but that he had been driven back by our troops, with loss on both sides.

In addition to the foregoing we have been favored with the two notes following, the first of which is a translation from the Spanish:

JALAPA, August 20, 1847.

The American army, after much suffering on the road, has been again attacked at Dos Rios by 700 guerillas, and badly enough treated. Even before the entrance into Jalapa there was some firing. Last night, at 9 o'clock, the Americans entered the city firing and retreated on minus. He was lassoed by one of the guerillas. This morning they sent a flag of truce to the Ayunta Miento (City Council) to ascertain whether they should enter as friends or foes, but without awaiting an answer they began to enter and continued up to 1, P.M., when all got in. There are 76 wagons and 895 men, among whom 317 are wounded and sick.—Major Lally is sick—the horses are worn out—for which reason it is supposed they will remain here some time.—It is said that Father Jarauta will attack them to-night but nothing positive.

The other note is as follows:

JALAPA, August 23, 1847.

Major Lally, with his command, is still here, and will probably remain here some time. The guerillas have all disappeared from this neighborhood, but to where they have gone I am unable to say. Aburto, the guerilla chief, died in Jalapa a few days since, some say of a wound received in one of the attacks on Major Lally’s command, and others by fever.

We do not entertain any doubt that the train, as mentioned above, has passed Perote and gone on in safety to Puebla.

Intelligence reached Col. Wilson on the morning of the 17th ult., that Lieut. David Henderson, of Capt. Fairchild’s company of dragoons, and his party, who were sent out by Capt. Wells, on the 15th of August, to apprise Major Lally of the approach of reinforcements, were all shot by the guerrillas. There is little or no doubt of the correctness of this sad intelligence. Lieut. Henderson was a resident of New Orleans, and but recently embarked as a volunteer in his country’s service. He was a printer by profession, a man of courage and enterprise, and his fate will be sincerely lamented by his numerous friends.

