We anticipate no compromise on the subject. The House cannot give an inch, without yielding the whole question; which is a full and unconditional admission of the power of Congress to annex a Foreign State by joint Resolution – an absurdity, the discovery of which seems to have been reserved for this age of political empiricism and folly.

Keyword: Reasons for conquest of Mexico

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen: Is it not strange that our title to the Territory of Mexico, has been entirely overlooked in the zeal to acquire possession of Texas? I am at a loss how to account for such neglect on the part of an administration so distinguished for industry and acuteness in the discovery of nation claim, as the present; and especially when I remember that the great personification of Southern jealousies occupies the Department of State.

I shall not enter at large upon the subject of our claim – for that is altogether unnecessary. It will suffice to touch upon one or two prominent points, to refresh the memories of your readers in regard to it, and to stimulate our Legislators to immediate action upon a subject which has so long interested the American people. It seems to me important that some bill, to this effect, should be forthwith referred, with the necessary documents, to the Committee of Revolutionary Claims.

Nature has evidently marked out this continent as a unit, designed to constitute a single empire. Rivers and mountain lines are artificial creations. They are the fictions of mere convention, and violate the great law of nature which has indicated the true and just limits of sovereignties by great seas and narrow isthmuses, which are not subject to the mutations of time. It is obvious therefore that the Rio del Norte cannot constitute the limit of the United States any more than the Mississippi or the Sabine, without insulting Nature, and exposing ourselves constantly to mutilation by some foreign invader. These remarks may be applied hereafter, with justice, to the British and Russian possessions and to Central America; but we are only concerned now about the re-annexation of Mexico, and I must insist that the present is a most favorable juncture for its accomplishment, owing to the revolution now pending in that country. We must have Mexico at all hazards, and now is the time to secure it the least possible expense.

The records of history attest that that territory was improperly surrendered to Spain on the occasion of several treaties between Great Britain and that power, and subsequent treaties between the United States and the same government, when the weakness of the latter afforded ample opportunities for its acquisition. As those treaties were entered into by the aforesaid governments without the deliberate sanction of the Democracy, allow me to deny that they are of any binding force upon us, or should weigh a feather in our deliberations. Thus has been lost to us a noble empire, not mildly war merely, like Texas, but deliciously hot, producing perpetual crops of gold, and commanding from its geographical position, the sovereignty of the Seas. Shall we not immediately vindicate our title to this fair domain, so shamefully and repeatedly thrown away?

Should it be objected that we cannot entertain this proposition without violating our faith with Mexico, let it be answered that Mexico has been long indulged in her efforts to establish a right to self-government, and has signally failed. Her nation existence, like her war upon Texas, is merely nominal, and the United States have as much right to govern her mongrel races as Santa Ana or any other usurper. Indeed nothing is wanting but a bold military demonstration on her frontiers, to induce her whole confederacy to unite with us, and thus consolidate the continent.

Constitutional objections may be disposed of with equal facility. We have no sympathy with that narrow principle... usually called strict construction, which would forever confine us to the mere latter of the Constitution. But it is unnecessary to violate even the letter in the present case; for provision is made for the admission of new States; and surety Mexico cannot boast of age, when half a century has not yet passed since her independence. According to the laws of nations, three or four centuries seem to be necessary to bring them to maturity, and as many more to their decline, and we may therefore safely repose our consciences upon the express words of the sacred Charter under which we act. Admit her as a new State, and Mexico will occupy the same consistent position now held by Louisiana, Missouri and Arkansas.

It only remains to notice briefly the benefits which may be expected from this great enterprise. Among the first in importance is the indefinite extension of Slavery, not only of the African race, but also the seven millions of Mexican, Creoles, Mestizos, and Indians, whom we propose to conquer. Consequent upon this the Slave States must acquire a lasting ascendancy in the Government, and the principles of Free Trade become the settled policy of the country. The great champion of Southern rights will be elevated to the Presidential chair by the acclamations of millions, and the theory of Nullification will be taught in his messages to posterity and the world.

"Annexation – Col. Benton’s Project,"

The new bill of Col. Benton has evidently has the effect of a subterranean explosion on the ranks of the Democracy.
Fearing and hating him, and hating him because they fear him more than any other man, the Calhoun and Tyler "Chivalry", assuming as we must, the Madisonian to be their exponent, evidently view his scheme with the greatest distrust and alarm: And it is rather singular too that they should – for it indirectly proposes to make the United States the paymaster for Texas debts, which the joint resolution passed by the House declined to; and if we understand rightly, most of the bond, scrip and Texas Land mongers belong to the Calhoun Wing! So far those gentlemen exhibit the Phenomenon of a Texas Speculator being opposed to the interests of his own purse! – But the country must not too rapidly come to conclusion! They have, there is no question, substantial reasons for opposing col. Benton’s plan – interested reasons. 1. They distrust Benton, and fear the Greeks though they bear gifts! 2. They foresee that it may [if it was not as they allege, so designed] defeat annexation at this session, a circumstance fatal to the whole piratical design, for if defeated now, it is defeated eternally! The American People if they happen to be consulted, will never agree to it. 3. Their calculations as to the Texas debts which they own is this – let us get Texas in first, with, or without an assumption of her debts by the United States – when in, that act alone will greatly enhance Texas lands, bonds and scrip, and we have little doubt of ultimately prevailing on congress to pay off her obligations!

Let the people watch with close and jealous eye, what is now transacting at Washington! We firmly believe that all the corruptions of 60 years would kick the beam if placed in the scale against those of the last 18 months.

"Correspondence of the Whig,"

The day has brought forth in the Senate an impartial and an unexpected event, as to the Texas question, it is a change of position by Col. Benton, in the withdrawal of his bill of last year, and the substitution of it of another, directing, in effect, as negotiation through commission, with Texas alone, for the adjustment of the terms of Union between the two countries. Fro the expenses of such a commission, $100,000 are appropriated.  They are to settle all the terms of the incorporation of the two countries, as to boundaries, debts, and every thing else, except that the bill provides in advance that Texas is to be represented at once by two members in the House as well as in the Senate. When the conditions are settled they are to be submitted by the President to Congress, either in the form of a treaty or otherwise.

If, with the commentary of the Missourian’s speech, I understand the purposes of the plan, they are as above. I comprehend if as abandoning, in effect, the reservation in his previous bill for the consent of Mexico. I perceive not, as far as the details could be collected from merely hearing them read, that Mexico is to be consulted even about the boundaries to be established. If something did not escape me, the commissioners (plenipotentiaries in truth) would have no power to deal, or even consult with others on the part of Mexico; and if it were otherwise, that would matter nothing, for she is certain to refuse to take any part in the arrangements for her on spoliation. Thus it is with Texas alone, that the limits must perfice be arranged. It is true that Col. B. said, in his remarks, that it would be our part to treat with Mexico in the most conciliatory manner; but this, put into the English of two or three Polk or Tyler commissioners, may mean but just what Mr. Shannon means, when he tells Senor Rejon that the United States are practicing towards Mexico all sorts of delicacy and forbearance.
Col. B. further indicated his meaning to be that the responsibility of this government for the debts of Texas should not be excluded, as in the joint resolutions of the House. It was, he said, known every where that her public domain was all alienated already; so that the plan of the other House would leave her nothing wherewith to pay.

You will further see that this bill expunges from his former plan all the territorial limitations of slavery. It, in form, passes by all that question – thus meeting, in effect, one of the great objects for which so many caucuses of the other House were ineffectually holden, to procure, in the first place, action, annexation, and to leave the Slave question for another time, when Texas and her people might themselves lend a voice in resisting any exclusion of servitude. Such will, no doubt, be the effect of the new plan. Texas will claim to settle this for herself, as an internal question; and it will be yielded to her. Nay, it has already been yielded to her by Northern votes in the other House and why, after that, should Senators from a Slave State like Col. B., have any scruple?

In the last place, if I have correctly seized the phrase of the bill which I have conveyed by the italicized word otherwise B. thinks that the Union need not take – is not forced finally to take – the form of a Treaty. I conceive, therefore, that he has no longer constitutional objections, to the joint resolutionary mode of Annexation. He certainly suggests that there is an alternative, a succedaneum, for the sanction of the treaty-making power.

In a word, I consider this bill as one which the Southern Annexationists, and the scrip and land speculators must decidedly prefer to the Joint Resolutions. It has, further, to me, a feature monstrous in legislation – the alternative clause which suggest a more constitution form – Treaty – and yet provides, loosely, that some other unexpressed way of doing the thing shall be permitted.

I will not, till I have seen the thing in print, consider all this as certain. At times, we of the galleries must catch very imperfectly, things where the precise wording is so very material. I give you, of course, but present impressions. It would therefore, be premature to offer, as yet, any conjecture as to the influence which the new proposition may have on the fate of Annexation, or the part which Mr. B. and his followers mean now to play in the question.

Mr. Rives, at least, must have formed a judgment of the matter very different from mine; for though he voted to refer the plan, as they did who apparently are its opponents, he spoke of it, as the most conservative, conciliatory, and statesman-like, of all the projects offered. You will probably see it, in some of the morning papers, and thus be able to see who has best caught its character. I hope it may be he.

It is not, however, to be overlooked that, from the preceedings, the step took the Whigs by surprise. Several were absent, including Mr. Archer, who is sick; and none seem to have been prepared for the thing; while one voted with the Democrats. That, however, as to the mere reference, is not decisive, either as to him, or as to Democrats, whom, though acting in the same way, I have had reason thus far to consider as decided opponents of all Annexation thus clapped up, not only in disregard of all right, and all expediency, but in defiance of every constitutional obligation.

To a Southern man, accustomed to view the entire security of that weaker section of the Union as inseparable from the most determined resistance of all invasions of the main constitutional powers, there can be nothing more alarming than this Southern conspiracy, which, for a fancied good of the moment, soon to prove not merely illusory but calamitous, would break down our only protection, our last hope. I fear that the days which this Republic is yet to see, are few and will prove troubled.

This subject must excuse me from all others, except a single work of exultation a the death of the Land Graduation bill in the House.

“Later from Mexico,”

The brig R. de Zaldo, at New York, sailed from Vera Cruz on the 14th ult. We find in the New York Journal of Commerce the following summary in intelligence brought by her:

It is stated that Gen. Santa Ana had made five different attacks upon the city of Puebla, and had been repulsed each time, with some loss. At length despairing of success at that point, he withdrew, with all his forces, about 4000 men. An express arrived at Vera Cruz from Jalapa just before the Z. sailed stating that Santa Ana was besieging Perote, to which place it appears he retired after leaving Puebla. Generals Bravo and Paredes, the chiefs of the Revolution party, (which now wields the civil power) were still at Puebla on the 12th ult., with about 10,000 men. It was supposed he would march in pursuit of Santa Ana. Even should he be taken prisoner, it was thought at Vera Cruz that his enormous wealth, (he having, it is said, more than $12,000,000 in England) would avail to purchase his own life and the lives of his officers; although his conduct at Puebla is represented to have been exceedingly brutal, and to have raised the popular indignation against him to the highest pitch.

The people of Vera Cruz were expecting a visit from Santa Ana soon, either with a besieging army or as a fugitive. He would, however, be obliged to pass through a defile (about 15 miles from Jalapa) which was well fortified, and commanded by General Jose Rincon. At Vera Cruz there were also fortifications, which, although incomplete, were supposed to be sufficient to prevent his capturing the town.

Information brought by the express from Jalapa, mentioned above, excited apprehensions at Vera Cruz that an intrigue was going on, to save him and his officers, and that a fresh outbreak and much bloodshed would be the consequence.

Another report was that Santa Ana had sent in his submission to the new Government, and had placed himself and his troops at their disposal.

The officers commanding at Vera Cruz were Generals Moza and Hernandez; the Castle is under the command of Gen. Juan Lobo, and a sterling man, and an inveterate enemy of Santa Ana.

It was deemed probably that Santa Ana would soon find his fortunes desperate, and escape on board an English frigate stationed at Sacrificios, with orders, it was said, to receive him and protect his person.

The brig passed, as she was coming out of the harbor of Vera Cruz, the Mexican steam frigate Montezuma, going in with troops from Campeche.

The New York Herald adds the following:

Santa Ana, after having been defeated and driven into a small town near Puebla, has resorted to diplomacy, by sending three commissioners to the city of Mexico, to negotiate for the safety of his head, “In fact, he has virtually surrendered all his forces to the Supreme Government.”

We annex the official notice of the surrender:

From Diero de Vera Cruz, Jan. 13.
General in-Chief and Chief Secretary’s Office
Puebla, January 11, 1845

Bulletin no. 15, Army of Operation

His Excellency Don Antonio de Haro of Tamaniz, and Don Jose Maria Mendoza, yesterday took their departure for the capital of Mexico. On the same night, they were followed by Gen. Don Pedro Cortazar. These three officers are dispatched to treat with the Supreme government for the settlement of all difficulties now existing in the Republic, and for the prevention of further bloodshed.

I, therefore, order all the forces that cover the lines around this city, and now under my command, to suspend all acts of hostilities; to abandon the positions they now occupy; and to retire to the town of Amozoe, there to await the result of the negotiations of those officers.

In view of this commission, I doubt not that seconding the philanthropy by which I am animated, you will order the forces under your command to suspend, on their part, all hostilities, and avoid the effusion of blood, which should be carefully preserved to be shed only when necessary and against a foreign foe.

God and Liberty,
Head Quarters, Jan. 10, 7 P. M.
ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANA

To General Don Ignacio de Inclan.

It may be that this is only a ruse, on the part of Santa Ana to gain time, in order to strike a more decisive blow. He is too shrewd a tactician not to see a check mate in a brief delay. It is very evident, however, that thus far he has had the worse of the fight, and has been driven into diplomacy.

“New and important aspect of the Texas Question in the Senate”

On Wednesday last, Mr. Benton gave a new and important phase to the Texas question (the debate of which "A BILL to provide for the annexation of Texas to the United States.

" Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That a State to be formed out of the present republic of Texas, with suitable extent and boundaries, and with two representatives in congress until the next appointment of representation, shall be admitted into the Union by virtue of this act, on an equal footing with the existing States, as soon as the terms and conditions of such admission, and the cession of the remaining Texas territory to the United States, shall be agreed upon by the government of Texas and the United States.

"Sec2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to defray the expenses of missions and negotiations to agree upon the terms of said admission and cession, either by treaty, to be submitted to eh Senate, or by articles to be submitted to the two Houses of Congress, as the President may direct."

Mr. Benton entered into a very lucid explanation of the reasons of this movement, which we have not the space to quote at large. The following extract, however, will sufficiently possess the reader of the governing consideration which induced him to present this bill as an antagonist mode to that of joint resolution proposed by the House – the most atrocious departure from and violation of the Constitution, ever offered it, and which, if sanity ever again returns upon the minds of the American People, will be viewed, it and its aiders and abettors, with deeper abhorrence than ever was the Hartford Convention.

"Mr. BENTON said he would avail himself of the indulgence of the Senate to state the reasons which induced him to offer it. It was a copy, he said, substantially, of the bill which he had previously offered, with the omission of all the terms and conditions which that bill contained. He had been induced to omit all these conditions because of the difficulty of agreeing upon them, and because it was now clear that whatever bill was passed upon the subject of Texas, the execution of it must devolve upon the new president, who had been just elected by the people with a view to this object. He had confidence in Mr. Polk, and was willing to trust the question of terms and conditions to his untrammeled discretion, certain that he would do the best that he could for the success for the object, the harmony of the Union, and the peace and honor of the country. He had therefore, withdrawn all the terms and conditions which his previous bill contained, and only retained its cardinal features, namely, the admission of a Texas State by law, the cession of the remaining Texan territory to the United States, and the adjustment of the terms and conditions of this admission and cession by envoys, or commissioners, subject to the confirmation of the two governments. This seemed to him to be the natural, practical way of proceeding, and was certainly the most respectful to Texas.

The joint resolution sent up by the House of Representatives was noting but a proposal, and a proposal clogged with conditions, and limited as to time. If it passed both Houses of our congress, it might be rejected by Texas; and then the process of making proposals would have to commence again. Legislative propositions, interchanged by two legislative bodies, sitting in two different countries, at the distance of near two thousand miles apart, was a slow way of coming to conclusions; and, unless some more practicable method was adopted, the annexation of Texas might be looked upon as an event deferred for years. – Commissioners, or envoys, to discuss propositions face to face, with a right to give as well as to take – with power to yield as well as to demand, can alone be competent to the successful termination of such a business. He therefore adhered to that part of his former bill which proposed to send ministers to settle the terms of annexation.

The occasion [said Mr. B.] is an extraordinary one, and requires an extraordinary mission. The voluntary union of two independent nations is a rare occurrence, and is worthy to be attended by every circumstance, which lends it dignity, promotes its success, and makes it satisfactory. When England and Scotland were united, at the commencement of the last century, no less than thirty-one commissioners were employed to agree upon the terms; and the terms they agreed upon received the sanction of the Parliaments of the two kingdoms, and a completed union which had been in vain attempted for one hundred years. Extraordinary missions, nationality constituted, have several times been resorted to in our own country, and always with public approbations, whether successful or not. They first Mr. Adams sent Marshall, Gerry, and Pinckney to the French directly in 1798. Mr. Jefferson sent Ellsworth, Davin, and Murray to the French [ . . . ] government of 1800. Mr. Madison sent Adams, Bayard, Gallatin, Clay, and Russell to Ghent in 1814. All these missions; and others which might be named, were nationally constituted – composed of eminent citizens taken from each political party, and from different sections of the Union; and, of course, all favorable to the object for which they were employed. An occasion has recurred which in my opinion requires a mission similarly constituted – as numerous as the missions to Paris and to Ghent – and composed of citizens from both political parties, from the non-slaveholding as well as the slaveholding States. Such a commission could hardly fail to be successful not merely in agreeing upon terms which would be satisfactory to the people and the governments of the two countries. And here to avoid misapprehension and the appearance of disrespect where the contrary is felt, I would say that the gentleman now in Texas as the charge of the United States, is, in my opinion, eminently fit and proper to be one of the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary which my bill contemplates.

The bill which I now propose (said Mr. B.) is brief and plain, but comprehensive and effectual. It proposes to admit one Texan State – to obtain a cession of the remaining Texan territory – and to settle the terms and conditions of the admission and cession by the usual and practicable mode of negotiation.

The admission of the State, or rather its right to admission, is to be complete under the bill. It is to be admitted by virtue of the act! so that no future legislation will be necessary for that purpose, and possibility of a Missouri controvery will be entirely avoided. The admitted State to have all the rights of the existing States from the moment of her admission, not only theoretically but practically; for the bill fixes her representation in the federal Congress, and avoids all delay or debate upon that point. It says nothing about senators, for these the Constitution alone is sufficient: it both gives the right to senators, and fixes the number. To representatives it give the right, but leaves it to Congress to fix the number. This bill fixes it, and gives to the first Texan State two members – a number to which her present population will entitle her, and which will be sensibly increased before the process of admission can be accomplished, and doubled or trebled before the new apportionment under the census of 1840 can be extended to her."

A motion was made by Mr. Berrien to refer the bill to the Committee of foreign Relations, in which he as aided by Messrs. Morehead, Merrick, barrow, and fives, and opposed by Messrs. Allen, Walker, &c. the vote resulted as follows:

YEAS: Messrs. Barrow, Bayard, Berrien, Clayton, Crittenden, Dayton, Evans, Foster, Francis, Huntington, Johnson, Mangum, Merrick, Miller, Morehead, Pearce, Phelps, Porter, Rives, Simmons, Upham, White and Woodbridge – 22.

So the new bill was not referred.

What the secret spirit of this movement of Mr. Benton is, there is a contrariety of opinion. Some think it is not made in good faith, but intended to complicate the question, to spin out time, and to secure the defeat of Annexation at this session of Congress, now rapidly drawing to a close, and by this Congress, elected before the question was sprung upon the country, and without any reference to it. Were this Col. Benton’s end, it would be in our judgment, a most laudable, praiseworthy and patriotic one! But we do not believe it is; for the superiority of his mode to any yet suggested is so clear that it furnishes a kind of guarantie of its sincerity and good faith. Not that we think if good – far from it – be we think it, with Mr. Rives, the best plan yet devised to accomplish an unconstitutional (by any mode!) and execrable result, even it was constitutional!

Mr. Rives said of it:

He repeated, that if he believed this new proposition was in any manner affected or prejudice by the report which had come to the Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations; if he believed there was any intention on their part to smoother, or withdraw it from the consideration of the Senate when the general subject should come up. He would not favor the reference proposed; for he did not hesitate to say, without committing himself in regard to his future action, what the proposition itself was conceived in a far more cautious, and, in his humble judgment, considerate and provident spirit than any proposition which had yet been submitted to this body.”

The Globe is in extacies with Benton’s projet. The Madisonian, reflecting, we presume, the sentiments of the Calhoun and Tyler clique, expresses for it the most unqualified abhorrence. We quote a portion of its objurgations:

“COL. BENTON’S BILL”

At length the mountain has brought forth again, and the mouse is precisely similar to the one of which it was delivered last summer, with the exception of the tail. This mouse has been curtailed of its dimensions by some process or other; whether it was consumed by the fiery indignation of the Republican party against such an efficient breed, or whether its parent desired to exhibit a bob-tail to the Senate and the world, for the sake of greater diversion – and we presume the sequel will show that Col. Benton’s design is merely to ridicule the efforts of those in favor of immediate annexation, as a preliminary to the assumption of this “grand NEUTRAL position – of course his Whig allies who are laughing ostreperously in their sleeves, are the best qualified to decide.

Col. Benton has not, in reality, the presumption to believe that such a puerile and curtailed bantling as this proposition, which is brought forward after two months of grave, profound, and mysterious parturition, can be made to swallow up the measure which has passed with such difficulty through the House; no, he does not believe it; and if the popular branch of Congress were to revoke what has been done, retrace all the steps which have been taken, and bow in reverential submission to this curtailed mouse, as the god of their idolatry, we are sure no one would be more surprised that Col. Benton himself.

“The expressed purpose of Col. Benton’s [unclear unclear], is to defeat the immediate re acquisition of the territory of Texas – its ultimate design is to ignite a political volcano, which is to enable its authors to control the patronage of the new Administration; without ever considering, or even comprehending, what it is to do with it. Colonel Benton declared last May, (we have it on good authority,) he “would rather see the Democratic party sunk fifty fathoms in hell, than that any other man than Mr. Van Buren should be nominated.” During the campaign his weight was added, with other prominent anti-annexationists, to sink it; and since the triumph of the Democracy, on the strength of the Texas question, he has declared in the presence of a member of the Missouri legislature, that “if Col. Polk should dare to say immediate annexation once, he would make the Presidential chair too hot to hold him.” And now we see his plan developed; and although it is an insignificant affair in the estimation of others, it will serve him as a perrtext and a means to utter his predetermined anathemas.

"TEXAS PASSES THE SENATE!"

We refer to the letter of "Il Secretario" and the annexed slip from the National Intelligencer, for the particulars of the passage of the Texas Resolutions by the Senate, the form in which they passed, and the new attitude given the question by the annexation of Benton's project to the Resolutions of Mr. Brown as they passed the House.

Thus amended in the Senate, the measure must again pass under the revision of the House, and as but four days of the session remain, and one of them is Sunday, it is yet questionable what the final issue is to be. It occurs to us as most probable, that the Texas party in the House, frantic and unscrupulous as they have already proved themselves, will apply the gag, prohibit debate, deliberation or amendment, and by a call of the previous question, pass the undigested lump just in the form it came from the Senate. Nay, most probably this has already been done, and that this day's mail will bring the intelligence.

We regard this measure, this great and far-reaching measure, thus originating in the impurest motives of political intrigue and mercenary speculation,--thus hurried through and crammed down the throats of the People, - not only before the People themselves had spoken and approved, but almost avowedly, that they might be deprived of the opportunity of speaking as sinning against the Constitution, national honor, justice and principle, with the "high hand and an outstretched arm!" Many, we know, every way worthy of respect, differ from us in these sentiments. We can only wonder that they should do so, with the Constitution before their eyes, and the unchangeable principle of Justice and Right in their hearts: It makes us believe that there are times in a country's history, as philosophers allledge, - as in the South Sea bubble in England, or that of Law in France, - when madness is endemic among nations. Why we should want more territory, when we have forty times more already than we can people - why we should wish to annex another cotton and sugar country, when cotton and sugar, from over-production, are already almost drugs in the markets of the World - why we should above all, desire to go out of our way to make this acquisition, at the expense of violating the laws of nations, the rights of a friendly power, the prostration of our Constitution, the disregard of all the maxims of a wise moderation, at the imminent hazard of foreign war and above and [ . . . ] over all, of domestic CONVULSIONS and DISUNION - these problems we say, must puzzle every thinking mind.

Yet there is a solution and the solution is, that mercenary speculators and designing politicians made this an issue before the country to serve their own purposes, and that party management used it to accomplish the objects of power and office it had in view. The people have been shamelessly deceived and juggled, and have really had little to do with the matter.

It is the beginning of the "letting out of waters" and we proclaim that no one can foretell where or how it is to terminate. They who have forced it upon the country have a weight of responsibility to bear, which should not be ours for all the treasure Old Ocean hides in his bosom.

But in the conflict of excited passions and sectional interests, which is inevitably to ensure, let us all cling to the UNION, convinced that when that goes to pieces, this country is to become, uncontrolled by any public opinion, or the neighborhood of other nations, the most apt illustration of a Hell upon Earth.

From the National Intelligencer Extra, February 28

THE ACTION OF THE SENATE

The [ . . . ] of the Senate yesterday upon the Texas question requires a more formal notice than the ordinary current report of legislative proceedings.

The Joint Resolution which, having passed the House of Representatives, has been under discussion for some days in the Senate, is in the following words:

JOINT RESOLUTION FOR ANNEXING TEXAS TO THE UNITED STATES.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that Congress doth consent that the territory properly included within, and rightfully belonging to, the Republic of Texas, may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, with a republican form of Government, to be adopted by the people of said Republic, by deputies in convention assembled, with the consent of the existing Government, in order that the same may be admitted as one of the Sates of this Union.
Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That the foregoing consent of Congress is given upon the following conditions, and with the following guaranties, to wit:

First. Said State to be formed, subject to the adjustment by this Government of all questions of boundary that may arise with other Governments; and the Constitution thereof, with the proper evidence of its adoption by the people of said Republic of Texas, shall be transmitted to the President of the United States, to be laid before Congress for its final action, on or before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

Second. Said State, when admitted into the Union, after [ . . . ] to the United States all public edifices, fortifications, barracks, ports and harbors, navy and navy yards, docks, magazines, arms armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defence, belonging to said Republic of Texas, shall retain all the public funds, debts, taxes, and dues of every kind which may belong to or be due or owing said Republic; and shall also retain all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits, to be applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities of said Republic of Texas; and the residue of said lands, after discharging said debts and liabilities, to be disposed of as said State may direct; but in no event are said debts and liabilities to become a charge upon the Government of the United States.

Third. New States, of convenient size not exceeding four in number, in addition to said State of Texas, and having sufficient population, may hereafter, by the consent of said State, be formed out of the territory thereof, which shall be entitled to admission under the provisions of the Federal Constitution. And such States as may be formed out of that portion of said territory lying south of [ . . . ] thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude, commonly known as the Missouri compromise line, shall be admitted into the Union, with or without slavery, as the people of each State asking admission may desire. And in such State or States as shall be formed out of said territory north of said Missouri compromise line, slavery or involuntary servitude, (except for crime) shall be prohibited.

The debate upon this resolution was resumed yesterday, in a brilliant speech, by Mr. Crittenden, against the resolution, and was closed by a speech from Mr. Archer, in reply to the supporters of the measure, and in most earnest exhortation to the Senate against the surrender of its peculiar constitutional power to mere popular impulse.

When Mr. Archer concluded –

Mr. Walker moved to amend the joint resolution by adding thereto the following:

And be it further resolved, That if the President of the United States shall, in his judgment and discretion, deem it most advisable, instead of proceeding to submit the foregoing resolution to the Republic of Texas as an overture on the part of the United States for admission, to negotiate with that republic; then –

Be it resolved, That a States to be formed out of the present Republic of Texas, with suitable extent and boundaries, and with two Representatives in Congress, until the next apportionment of representation, shall be admitted into the Union, by virtue of this act, on an equal footing with the existing States, as soon as the terms and conditions of such admission, and the cession of the remaining Texas territory to the United States, shall be agreed upon by the Governments of Texas and the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be, and the same in hereby appropriated to defray the expenses of missions and negotiations, to agree upon the terms of said admission and cession, either by treaty to be submitted to the Senate, or by articles to be submitted to the two Houses of Congress, as the President may direct.

The pressing for an immediate vote upon this amendment [which is substantially Mr. Benton’s last proposition] gave rise to some feeling in the Senate, and, in the end, it was determined to take a recess before voting upon the question.

At six o’clock the Senate again assembled

We refrain from any attempt to give a particular account of proceedings at this evening session, fearing errors in the lateness of the night, contenting ourselves with announcing the decisive votes merely.

On the question to agree to the amendment of Mr. WALKER, above stated, the votes were as follows.

So the amendment was agreed to.
On the question of ordering the Joint Resolution to a third reading as thus amended, the vote was as follows:

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The bill was then read a third time, amidst profound silence, without the yeas and nays being called for, and passed.

Though the lobbies were crammed, and the galleries packed with an anxious and interested multitude of people, a perfect dignity and decorum characterized the whole proceeding of this memorable night.

The reader will learn, from the preceding statement of the Senate's proceedings of last night, that the Joint Resolution of the House of Representatives for the admission of Texas into the Union, having acquired the support of Mr. Benton and others by incorporating his last project as an alternative to the provision of the House resolution, has passed the Senate by a majority of two votes, in effect by one vote, as a change of one vote would have reversed the decision, by producing an equality of votes.

Our readers must not fall into the error of supposing that this decision by the Senate settles the Texas question. It unsettles it, on the contrary, apparently beyond the possibility of its being determined at the present session of Congress. It is hardly possible that the House of Representatives with one half of all the business of the session in its hands untouched, can again reach a question which, once taken up, will leave for other business no remainder of the session, But should the question be reached, it is still less within the compass of probability that the amendment made by the Senate will receive the sanction of the House. The Joint Resolution passed by chance: that chance can hardly again recur.

We could have wished indeed that the sanctity of the Constitution and the rights of the Senate, had been vindicated by that body itself; but there is consolation in the reflection that in the checks and balances of the Government and especially of each House of Congress upon the other a compensation is sometimes happily to be found and may be hoped to be found in this case for the confusion of the senses under which bodies even so elevated as the Senate of the United States sometimes stray from the path of right and duty.

It is finished, and we are an Annexed people! We have taken to ourselves the Commonwealth of cut-throats, the Republic of Rogues; the Land of Loafers! We have a broader freedom: it has taken a new and wider area: no “pent-up Utica confines our powers” any longer: our liberty, “cribb'd, cabined and confined” before, has got a little elbow-room at last. We shall now, for at least two years to come, have at worse, in this crowded country of ours, what they call in theatres “Standing-room” – that is, for such as it suits not to run away: though, really, this business of running away from the United States will presently, at this rate, become a very serious one; for the Union and accountability to its laws follows so fast, that it will be difficult for villains to get away from them.

The land of Washington has, among its founders, placed on high, in the pantheon of its demi-gods, along side of his image, that of the drunken brute and blackguard, who fled his own State as the abhorred traducer of his own wife's honour; who went forth, an expatriated ruffian, to herd with savages – to be, if he could, an Indian. Such proportion, [ . . . ] as he bears to Washington, in wisdom or virtue to found a States, does Texas bear to any thing which ought to be a part of this Union. Let the good old Thirteen veil their head in shame at such an associate! Let Mississippi, if she ever had a thought of blushing, abandon the idea. She will shine white and pure – INTIMANITIS FULGET IIONORIRUS – beside the new ally, the sweet, the maiden modesty and innocence of Texas! But let me not run over in shame, in bitter and indignant words: there is no time for it. At the late hour when the Senate came to a final decision (after 9) and after some time spent in collecting particular personal facts, I have no more space than is necessary to give a brief account of the main events of the day.

The House bill and Mr. Benton’s consolidated into one, were passed by a vote of 27 to 25 – a full Senate. In this vote, Bagby deserted back to his own party; Foster returned to his friends; poor Johnson copied the apostacy of miserable Merrick; and the latter stood faster to his baseness then he ever stuck to any thing else before in his life.

Of these four, Foster had always declared himself as favorable to the expediency of Annexation upon proper terms, and as entertaining little doubt about the question of constitutionality. He finally abandoned them, when by refusing to secure Slavery there and to provide for the Non Assumption of the debts of Texas, the plan was rendered such as met not his notions of policy and duty. Merrick, I need hardly say, discovered not a scruple of any sort, on any point. Johnson, as I have said, had thought any thing but the treaty form of Admission unconstitutional. He so voted, almost at the last state, on an amendment offered for the direct and avowed purpose of entangling him and Bagby. Yet both surmounted all their own specific scruples and plainly and unequivocally perjured themselves, upon their own deliberate and solemn declarations!

In a word, this whole operation was accomplished by the most palpable fraud and subterfuge of men who, a part of them, had opposed one form of the thing as against their consciences, and another part the other form: but by the simple device of putting the two together, these same men became satisfied to vote for that which they had denounced as unconstitutional!

To Bagby and Johnson both, as I have told you, the difficulty lay to acting by Legislation: both believed that a treaty only could constitutionally annex Texas. But what did they? Both voted against every effort but one to act through the Treaty power! And both finally voted for a set of resolutions, huddled up out of inconsistent – nay, hostile methods – which permit Texas, if she likes, to come in at once, merely upon the passage of this Act and even without its being formally communicated to her, by the Executive; secondly, to come in, more formally, through a mere Executive invitation to take advantage of this law: and, thirdly, to come in by negotiation, if the President should choose to offer to finish the business in [ . . . ] form.- You will thus see what the consciences of [ . . . ] are worth, even upon a public question the most [ . . . ] and high. They believe treaty alone legitimate, and [ . . . ] vote for what IN TWO OF THE MODES, includes it, and make THE THIRD dependant only upon the pleasure of the Executive! He MAY negotiate, if Texas will let him, he may, IF HE LIKES – that’s all. They commit their consciences, then, to Texas and the President – authorizing THEM, to pay some attention or none to the Constitution, just as suits them! Mark you: over Texas, they CAN exert no compulsion: and over the President they ATTEMPT none. – If the latter should have ever so many scruples about the power to act by treaty only, it matters not – for Texas can act, under this law, without his intervention: and he, too, in his turn, if they let him into the matter, may then choose to take the treaty made or not, as he fancies! Such are the vile, [ . . . ], infamous, rotten pretences of legality, that quiet the consciences of these men! Oh foul and monstrous fraud and dishonour! Why, the mere felon that hid not his turpitudes under a more decent fetch than this would be held as low a blockhead as knave! This is a case to quiet the consciences of these men! “TEXAS IN THE SENATE!”

We have no space for the final and very interesting proceedings in the Senate on the day of the passage of the Texas measure. The friends of the Constitution fought nobly and fought to the end, and but for Merrick’s unblushing treachery, [or rather, sale of his vote!] would have defeated the measure by a tie vote, notwithstanding the disregard of instructions, by Haywood of North Carolina, and Allen and Tappan of Ohio. [. . .] in sin, and instigated throughout by motives of party intrigue and mercenary cupidity, this measure was properly consummated at last by a disregard of the highest obligations. Corruption and venality finished what avarice, President-making, and disloyalty to the Union commenced. It will stand out on the page of history along side of the partition of Poland, surpassing even that in the unredeemed baseness of the motives which swayed the immediate agents in it. [LLS]

“TEXAS IN THE HOUSE!”

The Texas measure, as we predicted Saturday, was forced through the House on Friday. No debate, no amendment, no deliberation, was allowed. So great a measure was never so hurriedly dispatched. The final vote of the House adopting the Senate’s amendment was 132 to 76.

The National Intelligencer says:

“Our readers will perceive, by the above notice of yesterday’s transactions in Congress, that the Resolution for the annexation of Texas to these United States has passed both Houses, and that nothing now, but the veto of the President can prevent its becoming the law of the land. – Notwithstanding, however, his hailing from the school of strict constructionists, and his remarkable [. . .] in regard to other measures, approved of at one time and vetoed another, we do not pretend to anticipate that the President will negative this Joint resolution, utterly repugnant though it be, both in its object and in the mode of officiating it to the Constitution of the country. We must . . . [Three illegible lines] . . . the highest interests of the country, as well as at variance with the Constitution itself, we have exerted the utmost of our humble ability to avert its consummation. Our own efforts, and those of much abler and wiser men, having failed to arrest an act which a few years ago any man would have been deemed insane who had seriously proposed it, we must bow to the will of the majority. We could have wished, indeed, that a decision pregnant with consequences so vast, and so deeply affecting the testament of the country, had not depended on one man, and been carried by a single vote: had it received a more emphatic approval, we could have been better reconciled to its passage. [LLS]

The proceeding of Congress yesterday, though very limited in the number of subjects disposed of, were in some respects, of the highest importance. Not having space for a detailed account of the transaction of the day we [. . .] a summary statement.

In the Senate, after rejecting a motion to postpone the previous order and proceed to consider the bills for the admission of the Territories of Iowa and Florid as States of the Union the bill of the other House [unclear unclear unclear] for the civil and diplomatic service of the Government was taken up, and the Senate spent the remainder of the day’s sitting, until five o’clock, in discussing new items of appropriation, or changes of pre existing ones, proposed by the Committee on Finance or moved by individual members. Among the numerous amendments adopted was one reducing the appropriation for a Minister Plenipotentiary to Austria to the sum required only to maintain a Charge’d Affaires; another was the reduction of the appropriation for outfit and salary for a Minister to China to the sum of $5,000 for “a Commissioner to reside in China,” and another was inserting an appropriation of $275,000 to pay the April and July instalments of the Mexican indemnity due in 1844, provided it should be ascertained that the said instalments have been [as was ascertained in debate] paid by the Mexican Government to the agent appointed by the Government of the United States to receive them.

In the House of Representatives, the first transaction of importance was the passage and transmission to the Senate of the Harbor and River bill, making appropriations of some two millions of dollars for various objects of internal improvement. Then came up, in course, the report of a committee on the Dorr rebellion, and the delivery of two speeches of the subject, when the hour allotted to reports expired. Motions were then successively made to take up the Army and Navy appropriation bills, but the majority resisted these motions, and insisted on first “clearing the Speaker's table,” on which lay, the Senate’s amendment to the Resolution for the Annexation of Texas. Accordingly, that subject was soon reached, and the House having adopted an order virtually prohibiting debate, the amendment of the Senate was forced through a Committee of the Whole House, (careful to observe the format of the Constitution in small matters,) and "was then concurred in by a vote of 132 to 76. The House then took up the Navy appropriation bill, and at 8 o’clock [the latest period at which we heard from it] was quietly going through its details. [LLS]

"MR. NEWTON"

This gentleman (and all the Whigs who voted for Brown’s Texas Resolutions except Mr. Dellett of Alabama) voted in opposition to them when they returned from the Senate, encumbered with Mr. Benton’s proposition--. On the other hand, every Democrat who had voted against Mr. Brown’s resolutions, now voted for them (with Benton’s project annexed) except Mr. Hale of New Hampshire and Mr. Davis of New York.

These facts are highly significant. The accession of the recusant Northern Democracy [principally from New York] proves that the Van Buren and Wright influence had finally acquiesced in the Texas movement, and that Mr. Benton’s movement was in all probability concerted to afford them the opportunity of doing [ . . . ]. In few words the moral of the tale is, that Calhoun and Polk having stolen Tyler’s Texas thunder, and made capital from it, were in turn robbed by the Old Hunkers, who did not choose that they should make too much capital.

But we congratulate Mr. Newton, that circumstances, no mater how contrived, [ . . . ] whom, or for what purpose, so worked ultimately as to save him from the deep responsibility of a final approbation of the outrage and iniquity of annexing Texas in the mode it was annexed, and for the still viler motives which influenced the mass of active agents in that work of unconstitutionality and lawless aggression. His friends we are sure will rejoice, and his own conscience.

"JEREMIAH MORTON, ESQ."

This gentleman’s second address to the People of the 9th congressional District will appear to-morrow, having been received too late yesterday for this day’s Whig.

This gentleman is pleased to indulge himself in very unfounded complaints at our “throwing the power of the Press between him and the Whig party, before his first address reached them!” And that Mr. Pendleton’s address was issued before his own! What are the facts? We first published as soon as we received it, Mr. M.’s Card announcing himself a candidate. Then came Mr. Pendleton’s Card which was promptly published: then Mr. Morton’s first address which was as promptly published as Mr. Pendleton’s, but which did not reach the District as soon after publication as Mr. P.’s, because the Country edition was not so near when it was published in the Daily – What more could we do? What just ground of complaint has Mr. Morton? Nay had we declined publishing his address entirely, we are not aware that he could have had any cause of complaint, since we presume we have the discretion of rejecting or publishing what we please: But, instead of taking the course, and in pursuance of a rule from which we never deviate, to publish both sides, we at once and at the earliest practicable moment yielded to his application. Thus we shall to, too, again, in respect to Mr. Morton’s second address.

The truth is, that gentleman is irritated because we exercised our rightful liberty of commenting upon his extraordinary and (as we think it) unjustifiable course in hazarding the loss of the strongest Whig district in Virginia to gratify his ambitious aspirations – in appealing, in effect, to his and [unclear unclear unclear unclear} the Whigs for his own promotion and advancement; and in making all the measures of the Whig party bow to the immediate annexation of Texas where he is fortunate enough to hold territorial possessions. This is what irritates him, and he will scarcely deny that it is so.

To the majority of men, Mr. Morton’s course is the most natural in the world; but from him we confess we expected a more generous course and a loftier political bearing.
But Texas is now annexed: What next from him? This was the scaffolding upon which he sought to climb, and it has been kicked from under his feet by his own Texas allies: Will he still persist in dividing the Whig party, the single object of his aspiring to Congress being attained without his assistance? Time will show. Let us assure him what he knows well, that there is no personal pique in what we have said respecting his proclaiming himself a candidate for Congress under the circumstances; that scarcely one man in Virginia would have been personally more acceptable to us; but that we would feel justified in supporting no man who had placed himself in such an attitude to his own cause, his own principles and his own friends.

"CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WHIG"

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1845

As the end approaches, it becomes more worth my while to abandon the tracing of proceeding in Congress of events that lie open to every body's knowledge, and to attempt instead, to give you notice of the true internal state of things, so far as my somewhat practical observation detects, or seems to me to detect it. It is a very curious one.

To begin with the regular organization of the new power, I believe the Cabinet will be constituted just as I told you some ten days since: that is to say, Mr. Buchanan is to be Premier, Mr. Walker to occupy the next position in dignity (really the higher one for patronage and influence) the Treasury; Cave Johnson to be Post Master General; that inexpressible man of unmentionables and Spoils, Marcy, to be Secretary of War; Mr. Mason to remain in the Navy – the only part of the Tyler dynasty that has found favor in Mr. Polk’s eyes. They were old intimates – Congressional yoke fellows to the Jacksonian era. The Attorney-Generalship is less positive, but Mr. Bancroft, I still think, will get it. It is not supposed that the new Administration will encourage or therefore need much Law; so that even the little which he possesses may probably be put into very slender requisition.

As to the Premier, you see at once, either that the authentic edict, published through Mr. Polk’s confidential journal (the Union), just in time to arrive here with him, is put aside in Mr. Buchanan’s favor, or that he is the selected successor, or the HE ALONE, of the notorious Presidential aspirants, has been done the honor of being looked on as having no chance, or else that he has done himself the honor of entering by stipulation, into a regular renunciation of the future for the present. Now it is very true, that baffled so long in his weak ambition, he may have come to prefer "a bird in the hand to two in the bush:" or again he may have considered that, as Presidents now-a-days always promise to serve but one term – as the surest means of being able to arrive not only at one, but two – so secretaries may adopt with equal morality and like advantage the same system of pretended self denial. Or yet again, he may intend to use his present position (as it may be called) to secure a better one (now probably the ultimate object of his corrected aspirations) the retiring Pension (as they call such things in the British Ministry,) of a seat on the Supreme Bench, with the survivorship of Chief Justice.

Meantime, as the President’s following the example of the later Roman Emperors, and appointing what they called, a Caesar, (a successor,) that you must observe was never done by them except to secure their own power: none of them ever meant that the designated Caesar should reign, till they could reign no more themselves. I do not much suspect any of those who belong to this dynasty of the “old Roman” of knowing one word of Roman History: but still they may have been told, that the Caesars very often aspired to dethrone those who had lifted them to the second place in the Empire; and that they often supplanted their creators. At any event it is a common instinct of Princes to be jealous of their heirs. The Dukes of Orleans, in France, repeatedly led the party opposed to the Crown; and in England the Prince of Wales has many times headed the opposition. I take it for granted then, that Mr. Polk will, like every body else that has tasted the sweetness of supreme power, soon find himself utterly averse to giving it up; that if, therefore, he has entered into any compact, it was only with the momentary view of inducing a rival not to stand in his way; that such a compact, no matter how made, will not be kept, either by him or any other; nay, that he with whom it was made, will only, for its existence, become the strong object of jealousy. In a word, such an arrangement may be made at a President’s first, as well as second term; but it is never kept, except as to the latter. It was, no doubt, made between Jackson and Calhoun: but the latter saw, before the first term was far gone, not only that the "Hero" meant to be a candidate a second time, but probably preferred a different, suppler successor. But Jackson’s engagement, for his second term, was more faithfully kept, because he could reign no longer. In spite of this lesson, Calhoun clearly allowed himself to be a second time entrapped with this pie crust – first term promise, made to be broken, by Mr. Van Buren; coalesced with him – turned against him; and pulled him down, when he stood up to complete a second term. Now, partly because, as an older bird, he is not to be caught with such mere chaff, nor yet to be taken by having salt put upon his tail; and partly because his wretched mismanagement of this Texas business has so nearly been fatal to it; he cannot trust the Polk Administration, nor it him; so that he has been, in its arrangements or compacts displaced by the Buchanan interest.- Enough however of Mr. Buchanan. As Secretary of State, he cannot well make any but a very poor figure. Except the good temper of a man without much purpose, an amenity derived from a want of all will or courage or sincerity, he has exceedingly little in him. His reputation for abilities, so far as he possesses it, will soon appear – before the test of real difficulty, as a leading member in that which has to originate, to act, to guide, to manage high and often dangerous things – to be a mere imposture. I know scarcely any man whose capacity has been more utterly overrated.

Mr. Walker had, upon a man whose fortunes have been made by the Texas question, claims which it was impossible of Cave, what shall I tell you, or how fitly speak of a condition of public affairs, when an animal as worthless for any high public trust as he can mount to distinction? Among Demagogues themselves there is one sort narrower and baser than all the rest, the poverty of whose parts directs them to but one single mode of making themselves agreeable to the meanest of the many – those I mean who dedicate all their public zeal to prevent any man’s getting at the Treasure, right or wrong. Among this sort, Cave is one of the most inveterate. For God knows how many years, he has made that, and moving small and mean motions in Congress, his dearest and almost his only occupation. There is no wrong against any claim however equitable, nor any public interest however capital, which Cave would not at any moment commit, for the sake of seeming vigilant of the Treasury. In short, Cave is as thoroughly the dirty fellow, as any that is has been my fortune to look upon in public life. His abilities are in precise proportion to his favorite aim and the morality with which he pursues it. As to the capacity to manage a Department, the Post Office has been glorious under Wickliffe in comparison to what he will make it. As to a system, he is about as fit to direct one as a weasel would be to manage a great establishment for hatching chickens, or a man for a weaver that had never done any thing, all his life, but pick holes in every public sack that he could get at. He is one to make a great hammering and seem very intent on mending one hole in your pan, while he is making half a dozen new ones. That’s Cave; and depend upon it that the little ability that Heaven has given him will be, every atom of it, spent in contriving to make the Post Office service a still more abandoned machinery of party politics than even Charles Wickliffe has turned it into.

But this grows long, so I must finish my review of the coming Cabinet, on the last day of the old. I have also to touch on the present prospect of Calhoun, Benton, Blair, Ritchie et id omne genus. At present, if I may measure your feelings by my own, you are woefully tired.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen – I have seen with great pleasure the amends honorable made to Mr. SCOTT in your paper of this morning. In your article you speak of “one” who has done the greatest service to Polk, Dallas, and TEXAS in this section of the country: may a Democrat trespass so far upon your courtesy as to ask what “one” is the individual alluded to? Excuse the liberty taken in addressing you anonymously, and believe me to be most respectfully, etc.,

Yours,
A DEMOCRAT.

"MEXICO"

We are indebted to the Captain of the schr. Fanny, for Mexican papers up to the 8th instant.
Mr. Gomez [ . . . ] arrived at Vera Cruz on the 11th inst., on board the Spanish brig [ . . . ] O'Donnell, from Havana.

Don Fernando Calderon, a promising young poet, died in the flower of his age.

Nothing definite had yet transpired concerning Santa Ana's fate. The great Dictator has humbled himself, and begs to have his life spared, with the most contemptible cowardice, and under whatever condition they may I pose on him.

The Siecle of the 7th, announced that Santa Ana has given drafts to Mr. Perez Salver, being a restitution of one hundred thousand dollars which he had caused to be taken from the Mint in Guanajuato. He had also appointed as advocate to raise the embargo put on his property and settle all the damages his conduct has caused the nations to suffer.

The Courier Francais remarks that great difficulties exist in bringing a bill of accusation against Santa Ana. The question to solve, is whether he will be accused as President or as General, being at the time of the revolution Ex-President and commander in Chief. – N.O. Bee

DESPATCHES TO TEXAS.

The Madisonian says:- “Floyd Waggaman, Esq. will leave the city this afternoon to deliver to Major Donelson, temporarily at Nashville, the Joint Resolution for the admission of Texas into the Union, which was signed by the President of the United States on Saturday. Should it be found that our Charge has left Nashville the bearer of dispatches has been directed to proceed immediately himself to Texas.”

So that Mr. Tyler has acted as we supposed he would, upon the Resolution of the House, leaving those of the Senate a dead letter. – Balt. Pat.

TYLER!

The New York Courier & Enquirer gives the uncrowned monarch a parting broad-side, so just and retributive, that we transfer it below to our columns. King James II of England, after his exile from the throne and when he had taken refuge in France, overheard a French nobleman celebrated for his wit, say to a companion, “There is a fool who sold three Kingdoms for a mass”! But King James was honest! He thought Popery right, and that his duty to God bound him to attempt its restoration in England! He was a fool to be sure – but an honest fool – and if one is obliged to execrate his tyranny, as well as the objects for which it was exerted, he is still left at liberty to respect the sincerity which actuated him.

But, of our John, what can be said in extenuation! – Where is the sincerity that excuses his folly, or the single upright motive that offers any apology for his enormous treachery? His pernicious administration of public affairs has only been exceeded by the vile personal motives and ends in which it as engendered! Self! Self! Self has been throughout the controlling consideration. Upon the instant of his succeeding to the Presidency by the death of Gen. Harrison, he embraced the purpose of a second term, to which absurd and impossible dream – known to be impossible and absurd to every body but himself and a little coterie of moonstruck and interested dependents – he sacrificed his friends, his cause, his principles, his promises and the great and generous party who had snatched him from obscurity, and elevated him to a world observed prominence! As he did in the Virginia Legislature in 1839, when he sought and obtained a nomination from his opponents against his friends, so did this shallow dupe of his own egregious vanity seek to do again, when fate, not the People, had raised him to the highest office in the world! He intrigued for a Democratic nomination! He sacrificed without hesitation, or delay, or even the observance of a decent interval of time, all the Whig principles and measures which the victory of 1840 had consecrated! He babbled, he and all his clique, of Democracy, with the loudest of the Canting Crew! He even affected to be governed by principle, who did not regard it as unpriced to sacrifice a nation’s will and expectations to his own frivolous hopes and ridiculous expectations.

But why dwell upon a theme so revolting and disgusting! We only do dwell upon it at all, to lend our feeble aid to consign perfidy, the disregard of the most solemn obligations which can be imposed upon men, to the hatred and contempt of mankind. It is not to render John Tyler any more uncomfortable than his own consciousness already renders him. God forbid! That would be a cruelty of which we hope we are incapable. He is now out of power, and we are convinced that no one in all the annals of time, has ever been compelled to lay down power – not even King John or the Stuarts – se generally and cordially despised.
The Courier and Enquirer says:

"With the close of last night ceased the temporary Presidency of John Tyler – who goes back to Virginia without the respect, we sincerely believe, of a single man in the nation, and with the malediction of every patriot who can appreciate the degradation brought upon the institutions and morals of the country by the course of his administration.

Coming into power by a calamity which plunged the nation in gloom, he brought with him enough of character upon which to build hope in his capacity, and had so deeply pledged himself to Whig principle as to preclude doubt of his fidelity.

These hopes and doubts he made haste to dissipate.

Weak, presumptuous, showy and vain, he very soon became the mark for all the political sharpers in the land – who saw in him the precise qualities by means whereof knaves have ever played upon fools. They flattered him to the top of his bent, they talked Virginia Roman to him until he almost imagined himself a Roman indeed – they lauded his political consistency – then stimulated his narrow prejudices – they called – whose personal experience of men and things went not beyond Mason & Dixon’s line – a great statesman! And the qualities of a profound and accomplished Jurist were ascribed to this second rate lawyer of a Virginia County Court.

He heard and believed and swelled, while they who thus fooled him got offices, contracts, jobs – and the country saw with mingled scorn and indignation the scullion of the kitchen promoted to be ruler among men.

From the moment that he broke with General Harrison’s Cabinet – a breach not more remarkable for the mean equivocation with which on his side, incipient treachery was sought to be concealed, than for the manly disinterestedness with which his councilors threw up office – to the latest of the dirty acts of his jobbing, dirty administration, his downward career has been progressive.

Coming to power with professions of economy and reform, he has lavishly used the public monies in the multiplication of offices; and the revival of some, abolished before as unnecessary.

Declaiming in his first message against the interference of office holders in politics, and carrying his fastidiousness so far as to direct a circular to be written, threatening all such with loss of place for any violation of the prohibition, we have seen him appointing men solely because they were partisans and busy electioneers for him; and again turning out others of his own selection, because they would not become partisans themselves, nor permit their subordinates to be so.

Favored by circumstances, and the signal ability of his Secretary of State, he was fortunate in bringing to an honorable close the long-contested a menacing controversy with England, respecting the North eastern Boundary; and, as acting President, some portion of the honor will accrue to him.

The Annexation of Texas – the favorite hobby of Mr. Tyler – has succeeded in Congress, but at the expense of the Constitution; and we witness the spectacle of men trained in what has been called the school of strict construction, stretching that construction so as virtually to annihilate the Senate, quo ad hoc. and to extend a limited partnership formed for these United States and their dependencies, to any and every foreign State, whose possessions we may covet, and whose independence we may suborn.

In forming a judgment, therefore, of John Tyler’s, administration, we shall find its one virtue to be the treaty of Washington; and that solitary virtue, as in the case of Byron’s corsair, is linked to a thousand crimes.

Of the personal character of the acting President, we have expressed ourselves with sufficient distinctness, at the outset of these remarks; and without any assured views as to the course of the new administration, which this day commences its rule, we rejoice, and the country rejoices, that the mean, weak, ignoble and corrupt administration of John Tyler is closed."

Mr Waggaman, from the Madisonian of Monday evening

FLOYD WAGGAMAN, Esq. will leave the city this afternoon to deliver to major DONELSON, temporarily at Nashville, the Joint Resolution of the admission of Texas into the Union, which was signed by the President of the United States on Saturday. Should it be found that our Charge has left Nashville, the bearer of dispatches has been directed to proceed immediately himself to Texas.

This Mr. Waggaman is Tyler’s nephew. He is thus provided for on the last day of the term! Instead of leaving Mr. Polk, as in decency and dignity and propriety, he was bound to do, to exercise the discretion left to the President in the Texas Resolutions, honest John, on the very last day of his service, takes it all upon himself, and dispatches his ephew to Nashville and contingently to Texas, the sole motive no doubt being to provide for him! The Globe pours a heavy fire into the transaction, which is however entirely characteristic. It says:

"MR. TYLER’S HASTE. - We understand that Mr. Tyler mounted one of his relations [Mr. Waggaman} as an express to hasten to communicate to Texas that he, as President of the United States, had made his election as to the alternatives contained in the late act of Congress, looking to the admission of Texas into the Union; and that he had chosen that alternative which it is known could not have commanded a majority in the Senate, and had rejected that which carried the majority in the House up from twenty-two to fifty-six.

"Mr. Tyler knows well that Congress did not intend to entrust the discretionary power of the act to his hands. – He knows well that, if he had appointed to commissioners necessary under one of the alternatives of the act, they would not have been confirmed to carry out his instructions. He has therefore seized upon that portion of the legislative enactment which, if acceded to by Texas, may involve future difficulties in our own Congress, and mar the concord now existing among the friends of the measure, which can alone ensure it a happy consummation. He has taken the alternative, meant by the law to be conferred on the American President whose duty it will be to effect the measure, from him, and given it to the Texan Executive.

"But, apart from all considerations of public policy, what will the country think of the propriety and decorum of this attempt to forestall the action of the Chief Magistrate chosen by the People with an especial eye to this question, and to whom alone it is notorious the discretion confided in the act of Congress was intended to apply? It is clear, as Mr.
Tyler began his Presidential career in virtue of an accident, that he means to take the benefit of the whole chapter of accidents, to blend himself with results having their origin in the counsels of Generals Jackson and Houston, and which his inauspicious management has so far marred in their progress."

"TEXAS," From the N. O. Courier.

The schooner Lone Star from the river Sabine reports that some difficulty had arisen in the river on account of tonnage duties, claimed from American vessels by the authorities of Texas. The schr Louisiana, Capt. Eddy, of this port, was taking in cotton at some place on the Sabine, but the loading was stopped by the Texas custom house officers on the ground that she had paid no tonnage duty. The revenue cutter Woodbury arrived in the river during the dispute, and sent a boat with an armed crew, to insist that the loading of the Louisiana should proceed. In the mean time a Texan revenue cutter arrived, the captain of which declared that the orders of the custom house must be obeyed. The captain of the Woodbury persisted in a contrary view of the question – and there were mutual threatenings of blows. The dispute was not settled when the Lone Star sailed from the Sabine.

If the foregoing account of the affair be correct, it is very plain that the captain of the Woodbury is acting in an unauthorized manner within the jurisdiction of a friendly power.

The captain of the Lone Star paid his tonnage duties to avoid difficulty.

"FROM MEXICO."

The schooner Fanny arrived here last evening from Vera Cruz, and furnishes us with our files of papers from the city of Mexico to the 10th and from Vera Cruz to the 14th instant, both inclusive.

These papers contain nothing of a very interesting character. Santa Ana was still awaiting his trial, and was still detained in the prison of Perote. He had requested permission to appear before a grand jury to make his affidavit, but was refused. The excitement produced by his tyrannical acts, was gradually subsiding. It would not be surprising, should he be condemned to the mild punishment of banishment for life.

The venerable Gomez Farias, who spent some years of exile here in New Orleans, arrived with his family at Vera Cruz in the brig Leopold O'Donnell, from Havana. This gentleman will probably be called to some eminent post in Mexico, an elevation to which he is entitled by his virtues and high reputation.

The Hesperia announces that a conducta had left San Luis Potosi for Tampico on the 8th instant, with $2,370,000 in specie.

The following are further extracts:
In the Whig of the 25th instant, I find an address of J. S. Pendleton, Esq. to you, so replete with rank and gross proscription, I protest against. And if the Texas Whigs will guard against one device of their adversaries, viz: a by many: but in the keenness of disappointment, that I and Texas Whigs, should be made the victims of cause, I know! That the disastrous result in Virginia, showed the justness of my warnings, is felt by all, and avowed that canvass, I avowed myself in favour of annexation, and would not treat it as an issue or a party question, and they will have the nerve to speak out their sentiments. That I incurred the censure of some Whigs, because during the last years, although often solicited, have never consented to be a candidate for popular favour. I have been ambitious to do good – have devoted much of the prime of my life to the advancement of the morals of my country. In the Vineyard of the Temperance reform, I have been of the popular will of the District. According to the best of my judgment, I thought it necessary to take the position I of the horizon, covered the heavens. I state this as evidence that what my convictions are, I pursue, without reference to pointed at, as innovators and enthusiasts, I stood firm in that little band, until the speck, which was seen in the a laborer for the last fifteen years. I espoused it, if not the first, among the first in Virginia. When its friends were of my life to the advancement of the morals of my country. In the Vineyard of the Temperance reform, I have been a laborer for the last fifteen years. I espoused it, if not the first, among the first in Virginia. When its friends were pointed at, as innovators and enthusiasts, I stood firm in that little band, until the speck, which was seen in the horizon, covered the heavens. I state this as evidence that what my convictions are, I pursue, without reference to the number who think with me, and that I have an abiding confidence in the success of a just cause. What is my offence, brother Whigs?

That I think the annexation of Texas is a great and vital question, and that upon it there should be a fair expression of the popular will of the District. According to the best of my judgment, I thought it necessary to take the position I have, to obtain that expression. I know the responsibility of my position. I am ready and willing to meet it. I maintain now, as I did in the canvass of '44, that a majority of the Whigs are in favour of annexation, and I trust they will have the nerve to speak out their sentiments. That I incurred the censure of some Whigs, because during that canvass, I avowed myself in favour of annexation, and would not treat it as an issue or a party question, and reproached the course of those who threw their influence and talents against it, as unwise and injurious to the Whig cause, I know! That the disastrous result in Virginia, showed the justness of my warnings, is felt by all, and avowed by many: but in the keenness of disappointment, that I and Texas Whigs, should be made the victims of proscription, I protest against. And if the Texas Whigs will guard against one device of their adversaries, viz: a
I regard no man as the friend of annexation, who will object to the detail of every plan proposed. What is my offence, brother Whigs? That I stand on this rock of republican liberty, that a majority of the constitutional voters should rule. I say if this district be in favor of a Bank, it ought to be have a Bank Representative: if it be in favor of Distribution it ought to have a Distribution Representative: and if it be in favor of Annexation, it ought to have an Annexation Representative.

In what have I offended brother Whigs? That I object to a convention as unnecessary, when there is no Democratic candidate in the field. That the people should be left free to judge and select for themselves. But Mr. Pendleton thinks it strange I was for a convention two years ago, and against it now. The distinction is plain. – Then the Democrats had a candidate in the field, distinguished in his party for talents, energy and influence, and in the Whig party six individuals had their friends; a convention then with all its evils, was necessary to concentrate the Whig strength. If, with that necessity, such was the wide spread dissatisfaction as to the constitution and action of that convention, that a majority of 900 was reduced to 375 by Whigs absenting themselves from the polls: how can you have an harmonious action of the party when only Whigs are in the field, and the Democrats in two counties have pledged themselves to public meetings that they will leave the arena to the Whigs alone. The necessity of a convention ceases, and I concur most cordially in a resolution of the Loudoun meeting, that if there should be no Democrat in the field, the Whig party ought not to waive their individual preferences. The wider the range of selection the better. Why unnecessarily fetter and manacle the will of freemen. But the gentleman, with “no ambitious aspiration,” yielded his assent to the application of a friend, that he might place his name on the list of those who would be proposed as candidates to a Whig Convention, in the event there should be a convention, and in that event only. He refused, at various times and to many persons, to permit his name to be presented in any other form. Then Mr. Pendleton feels the necessity of a convention to endorse him – and so charmed with that mode of gliding into congress that he would not permit his name to be presented in any other form. Now, brother Whigs, hear what this convention gentleman, with “no ambitious aspiration,” thought upon the subject of conventions in 1836. In an address to the People of Rappahannock, Mr. Pendleton said: “Fellow citizens, in conformity with a custom of Virginia, coeval with the existence of her Government, I appear before you. As a candidate for a representative agency at your hands, I owe it to you, to myself, to the great crisis in our public affairs, which seems very properly to have excited the anxieties of all ages and conditions of the People of this Commonwealth, and of the Union, to give a full, free and unreserved expression of my views on these subjects – my opinions on which constitute the true test of my fitness to be your representative. The necessity of adopting this form of communication with you, would perhaps be LESS IMPERATIVE, if I CAME before you upon the RECOMMENDATION of a PARTY CAUCUS, or by the DICTATION OF PARTY LEADERS. Not expecting, however, any aid from these modern contrivances, I must even follow the ANCIENT fashion of Virginia, and SEEK my election upon my OWN RESPONSIBILITY, soliciting no support that is not FREE and VOLUNTARY, and sincerely desiring rather DECIDED opposition, than that support which is EXTORTED BY PARTY EXCOMMUNICATION, or the RIGOR OF PARTY DISCIPLINE.” Now, brother Whigs, try Mr. Pendleton by Mr. PENDLETON, and he condemns himself. In ’36, he spurned party caucuses, or the dictation of party leaders. He followed the ancient fashion of Virginia – he sought his election upon his own responsibility, and desired rather decided opposition, than that support, extorted by party communication or the rigour of party discipline.” In ’45, he is so in love with party caucuses and the dictation of party leaders, that in the event only of their embracing him, will he consent to be a candidate. In ’45, he may expect some aid from these “modem contrivances,” he abandons the “ancient fashion of Virginia” – he will no longer seek an election upon his “own responsibility,” and it may be he looks to support which is “extorted by party communication and the rigour of party discipline.” - But brother Whigs, you will no doubt thank Mr. Pendleton for informing you that which I did, when he was upon the shores of the Pacific, viz: that I was in favour of the Texas treaty. In my Texas letter I said, “I think the Treaty ought to have been ratified, although there were circumstances in connection with it I would have had otherwise.” He informs you I am in favour of the joint resolution mode of annexing Texas – and then comes this remarkable passage, “in a word, so far as I understand his position, is willing to annex Texas, and that if the constitution and action of the democratic party.” Mr. Pendleton understanding is more humble than I thought it, if he understood my position as willing to be, and to all practical purposes the Democratic candidate. If he understood me so, he did it, in the face of the most explicit declarations, when he had placed himself by my side: but in another party of his address he says, “he announced himself in the same breath a Whig candidate and opposed to a convention of the Whig party.” You see then, by Mr. Pendleton’s own declaration, that I declared myself a Whig candidate, but since he has discarded “the ancient fashion of Virginia,” it is treason in his pure eyes for Whig to be opposed to a convention. Col. McCarty and Dr. Thornton I understand are opposed to a convention when the Democrats have no candidate, and why did he not make them willing to be and to all intents and purposes democratic candidates. But brother Whigs, he informs you that the democrats, with few exceptions, will vote for me. The gentleman makes me much stronger than I supposed. Col. McCarty it is conjectured, by others, will take a large portion of those of Loudoun and Fairfax, Dr. Thornton his share of those of Rappahannock, and if report is correct, Mr. Pendleton is unwilling for me to have those of Culpeper. The gentleman claims credit to himself, that as soon as I presented myself, he took occasion, at the call of Whig friends, to express his disapprobation of my course. I wish brother Whigs, he had told you every thing that did occur, and I think you would concur with him, that his nomination “is now a position, in many respects, eminently undesirable.” The call of his Whig friends, was in a tone so low, that it never reached me, and his address is the first intimation I have had of it. I feel flattered that the gentleman is so alarmed, that he waives the responsibility of “the marshal’s truncheon,” and asks for “a musket to fight in the ranks.” He is pleased to call me a traitor in the ranks. I repel the foul charge and trample it in the dust. To every principle of the Whig party I claim an adhesion as long, as more unchanging than he.
Mr. Pendleton, I have shown you, has been an anticaucus man, when he loved “old Virginia fashions” and expected nothing from “modern contrivances” – now such a devotee of caucuses, that he will not present himself, unless endorsed and bolstered up by them. Once, twice, thrice, he voted for Gen. Jackson, and contributing as he did, to the generation of that storm, which went with such a desolating sweep through the country, he should feel a little moderation and humility, under a sense of his manifold transgressions. He harped for years over the slander of bargain and corruption. He was opposed to a National Bank and Tariff as unconstitutional and oppressive – and having denounced all of those opinions and standing not where I have always stood, he modestly calls me a traitor in the camp and invokes my excommunication, because I am in favor of the immediate annexation of Texas – and opposed to a convention, and the gratuitously assumes, that I shall get all the Democrats, with a few exceptions.

The Editors of the Whig, in the paper publishing Mr. Pendleton’s address, and acknowledging the receipt of mine, (but not publishing it) have thrown the power of the press between you and me, and invoked my condemnation unheard. They are pleased to say, “we could not have expected this course from Mr. Morton, although we knew his Texas sympathies and his Texas personal interests.” It has been the systematic effort of that press to arouse all possible prejudices against annexation, inculcating the idea that personal interests, were the powerful and controlling influences of the advocated of annexation. The Editors ought to be satisfied by this, that the broad, wide and deep current of popular opinion in favor of annexation, is because of the powerful and overwhelming reasons enforcing it, and that they can no more stop its hourly gathering force than they can Mississippi’s current, by throwing a bulrush on its bosom. During the recent canvass, and at all times when I have addressed the people, I felt it due to them, and myself, that I should avow the fact, that I have a personal interest in the destiny of Texas, that my opinion might be received with as many grains of allowance, as in the estimation of my fellow citizens, that interest might dictate. - I will tell you the interest I have in Texas. I have not one foot of land in all her wide and rich domain. In her struggle for liberty, in the darkest hour of her fortunes, I loaned her my money to carry on as righteous a war as was ever directed by the God of battles – I had confidence in her cause – in the nerved arm of the Anglo-Saxon race, that had raised that flag of independence, and shortly afterwards planted it in imperishable glory on the plains of San Jacinto – I had the privilege, under the loan to take it out in land or receive my principal and interest. I visited Texas in ’40, and determined then not to locate lands, but demanded my money. I still hold her securities, my claims are for money, and not a cent’s interest have I acquired since the year 1840. Texas has never repudiated and I believe never will; although unable to pay, it has been her misfortune and not her crime. If the Tyler treaty had been ratified, I might have obtained the whole or part of my just dues, and then my action run in the same current with my interest; but how stands it now under the joint resolution. I submit to the judgment of candid men if now I do not struggle against my personal interest. Is not one reason urged by the opponents of the joint resolution, that it is injustice to the creditors of Texas; that it is striping her of her custom houses, and her sources of revenue, and throwing her creditors upon the public lands alone? The destiny of Texas is onward, whether a portion of this Union or not. She will grow up, under foreign alliances, a great competitor in the markets of the world, and a powerful neighbour, if we do not admit the Lone Star in the bright constellation of American States. Do I support the annexation of Texas by joint resolution, although palpably against my pecuniary interest, with less ardour than I did the treaty? No. I am more anxious for its final adjustment this session than I have ever been. National interests invoke it, southern interests and southern peace call for it, the national will demands it, and would that there was not one discordant note in all the Southern States against it. I look upon it as the “pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night,” which will guide the Israelites in a long lone journey through the wilderness – that it will guide them in safety and peace to that land of promise beyond the sunny clime of Texas. Narrow is the heart and [ . . . ] the spirit, that, in such a great question, involving perhaps the destiny of States, and the gate of nations, can see no reason for annexation but in the selfish ends of “Texas speculations.”

The Editors farther say, that “the course of Mr. Morton, if he is any longer a Whig, and we have always known him for as true a Whig as ever fluttered, is wholly unjustifiable.” I have quite as much confidence in my own judgment as I have in that of the Editors, and I feel fully justified in my own conscience, trusting that notwithstanding the systematic efforts, which seem to be making to prostrate me in your estimation, that I shall stand justified before you. Do the Editors mean to say I am no Whig, because I am a Texas Whig, and opposed to a convention? They insinuate as much – I like directness of purpose and open warfare, if such is unhappily to exist. Not that I shall recognize their right, and that of Mr. Pendleton’s – to mount as a self-constituted High Priest into the papal chair, and issue against me the bull of party excommunication. Let Texas Whigs resolve upon this, not to be divided and split up as to the mode of annexation; it is playing into the hands of the adversary – and to go for no eleventh hour Texas man, but one who has shown in good and evil report, that he heart is in the cause. If such an one as that can be found, gathering more strength upon this vital question than I can, - I would cheerfully, and at once, give place to him, and like Mr. Pendleton, turn my back upon “the truncheon of the marshal” an call for “the musket” and a place “in the ranks.” I avow myself the foe of tyranny, whether it manifests itself in the Executive head, the legislative halls, in party leaders, or in political presses.

JEREMIAH MORTON.

“THE CORRECTION – AT LAST.” From the National Intelligencer.
A Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce makes the following explanation concerning the extraordinary news which was manufactured in this city during the pendency of the Texas question in the Senate, of a treaty for the cession of California to Great Britain having been found upon the person of Santa Ana at the time of his recent capture – a story that was reiterated, notwithstanding the total silence of the Mexican press and people on the subject, and which was avouched by the Journal of Commerce as being founded on information received by our Government. One of its correspondents now says:

"The Texans here tell me that the proposition was made by Great Britain in 1840, and was accompanied with an offer to assume the debt of Mexico to British subjects.- They say the Mexicans were jealous of British power, and would not entertain it; but that Santa Ana, as the papers lately found in his possession show, entertained and promoted it. It may be a charge got up against Santa Ana to help the manifold accusations against him. The nature of the case itself excludes the idea that our Government can have any official and authentic information of it. Whatever was done, was done in secret, and never approached consummation. Mr. Packenham was Minister in Mexico, and the proposition, if made, was through him."

The New York Courier and Enquirer contradicts the concluding part of the foregoing extract. It says:

"THE CALIFORNIA FALSEHOOD. – The Journal of Commerce, which originated the statement that England has been negotiating with Mexico for California, now says that the proposition, if made at all, “was made through Mr. Packenham, who was then Minister to Mexico.” Now, we have the most reliable authority for saying that Mr. Packenham has denied, in the most explicit language possible, that any such proposition was ever made, or any such design entertained.

"Thus is this very exciting rumor refuted by the Journal itself, the very paper with which it had its origin. It is possible (we wish it were probable) that the editors of the Journal have been simply imposed upon by some designing persons in this affair; but in repeating, as they have done, assurances of its truth, they have made themselves responsible for it. No man of ordinary conscience can regard as a light or trifling matter the invention and circulation of a story calculated and intended to induce national action which may plunge us into war. [LLS]

Correspondence of the Whig.

WASHINGTON, March 9, 1845.

The fact may, I believe, be relied on, that the Mexican Minister yesterday communicated to the Corps diplomatique here a protest, addressed to the President against the Act of Annexation. It appears that he law was not published, with the President’ assent, until the preceding evening, in the Madisonian; which fact alone accounts for the Mexican’s delay of the step to which his nation was so deeply pledged, and which (pledged or not) she was certain to take. Gen Almonte, I presume, could not act, in a matter of such high formality, on any thing short of the regular publication of the law, and has held back for that the proceeding which, however calm and corteous in its character, certainly places the two nations in an attitude of any thing but peace. The document, as far as I can learn its tenor, is to the following effect:

"That he has the honour to address himself to the Hon. Secretary of State of the U. States, in order to manifest the deep concern with which he has seen that the President has given his signature to a law admitting into this confederacy the Mexican province of Texas.

"He had flattered himself that the right counsels urged by so many distinguished citizens of this country, thoroughly versed in its public principles and the wise and right policy that has directed its conduct abroad, would have led to a better event. Unhappily, it has not been so; - and, in contradiction to his hopes and to his sincerest vows, he sees carried on the part of this Government, to its legal consummation, and act of aggression the most unjust that modern history can record - the despoiling a friendly nation of a considerable part of its territory.

"For these reasons, as bound to do by his instructions, he protests, in the most solemn manner, in the name of his Government, against the law in question. He also protests that the Act can in no manner invalidate the right of Mexico to recover her province, so unjustly wrested from her: and that she will sustain and give effect to that right by all the means in her power.

"He also begs that the Secretary will make known to the President that, in view of these facts, his Mission near this Government is, from to-day, at an end: and he, therefore, asks that the honorable Secretary will send him his passports – it being his purpose to leave this city as soon as possible for New York."

I do not, of course, vouch for the precise forms of the matter; but deriving my information from a very accurate person, who has seen the document, can venture to say that this is faithfully the substance in general, and nearly the terms of the most material sentences.
Here, then, is, beyond question, the final adoption, on the part of Mexico, of that remedy which she has long and steadily announced to us as the only resort left her. It has pleased the Annexationists to argue, in the face of every inevitable cause given her, and of all those solemn declarations which she has made, that her pledges were all but shams – the shocking reason for which incredulity was evidently, at last, her supposed incapacity to harm us, or even do defend herself. They forgot that the very worm, when trod on, turns upon the heel that crushes it. Mexico, fouly treated as she has been from the beginning of this Texan struggle, has yielded all that she could to prudence: but the matter has now come to a pass at which all her people must be roused to a resentment and an alarm, at the present outrage and the still more fatal ones sure to be close at its heels, when all calculations of strength must be given to the winds and she must fight, as one that fights for life. The very humblest of her citizens is aware that, after this proceeding, to submit is but to invite a new dismemberment, already avowed – that of California; and that the next [ . . . ] certain to follow in a few years, is a blow at her great city itself, her rich mines, and her very churches of god, themselves, as much as the mines, the objects of an impious, utterly Unchristian cupidity.

I have always said that Mexico, however overmatched, must make battle. Inferior as she is, she was bound to avoid it, as long as she could; and she has done so: but she now knows that she can do so no longer. It is no more a question of temporizing, but of the most abject and fatal submission, that will sacrifice every thing and make any future resistance impossible. She sees, she cannot but see, that she has only the choice of defending herself against us while yet at a distance, or of waiting until, firmly seated in one of her own plundered territories, we assail her, from that vantage, in her very centre. If pride and prudence thus far concur to drive her to arms, she is well aware, besides, that the present conjuncture promises better for what is her main hope, of not being worsted – foreign aid – than any future contingency is likely to offer. English interference in the quarrel has been singularly provoked by its [ . . . ] and foolish management on our part; and the difficulties of the Oregon question come most opportunely to the (Mexico’s) cause.

Were it, however, far more probable that in the contest thus forced upon her, Mexico must stand alone, nothing, I must insist, was ever more abandoned, in the way of ill counsels, of utter improvidence joined with infamous wrong, than to proceed as the party conducting this business, every way shameful, are doing. Who ever before saw men march to deeds of pillage, when resistance had been announced in advance, just as easy, as secure, as gay, as if they were going to a wedding feast or other holiday junketing? It is as if house breakers who have sent notice of intended burglary and received warning in return that the master and his family would fire upon them, should set about their enterprise by flinging away all their own weapons.

Have they, under not only all the pretended designs of England, but her real relations to this question and her actual position in regard to us elsewhere [Oregon and Canada,] and right to take it for granted, by their miserable neglect of all preparation, that she will not profit by this occasion and join arms with Mexico? To suppose that she will not is only to confess that all the alleged grounds of setting on foot this scheme of rapine were utter falsehoods known by their authors to be such. Nor is this all: it is likewise to suppose that England may not, by the provocations given her in this business, by sympathy with a nation largely involved with her by [unclear unclear unclear], or by considerations of policy forced on her by our own avowed designs, he led to take part, either directly or indirectly? Is she not likely at least to give Mexico secret encouragement and indirect assistance? Would she not at least rejoice to see our trade ruined and our pride humbled in a privateer war? And need she [ . . . ] to Mexico than we were as to Texas and Canada?

Grant, however, that her rivalry, her resentment, her policy might all be with prudence put out of view: let it, if you will, have been all an infamous pretence that she meant us anything but what was most friendly, and that she bas indeed, an unbounded complaisance towards us – still Mexico is left – not alone, since she will have the warm sympathy of all nations; not unaided, since their citizens will flock to her banner of land and at sea: not unencouraged, since our own total omission of [ . . . ] will leave her the power to inflict a terrible blow upon our myriads of helpless merchantmen, before we can retort upon her. I see not how we can injure her much, while upon our trade she can let slip the havoc of privateers by the thousand! What has been done to guard against such a mischief by sea? Nothing but demagogue efforts to cheapen our Navy! And what to repay any such ravage by land? Nothing but to attempt reductions of our poor little Army, the mere nucleus of a public force! To Texas, the very object of seizure, not a company of U. States Infantry has been ordered. Not a dollar is at the President's disposal for any hostile contingency; not a step for defence against any sudden movement is left legally in his power! It would seem that the authors of what has been done were determined that they would not only shock the world by their violence of iniquity, but astonish it by their utter contempt of all precedence.

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen – 'SIMON' is by no means surprised at the caricature of his remarks in the Whig of Monday, since it is so common a thing for one who speaks, independently, his sentiments, to be branded with the charge of misrepresentation, and even falsehood! Mr. Lyons is surely, not the man to require the efforts of such a scribbler as “Richmond” to defend him in a matter like that now is issue in this city, and "Simon" will not permit "Richmond," or any other man, to entertain higher respect for, or profounder gratitude to, Mr. Lyons, for past services, than himself! "Simon," however badly expressed the sentiment might have been, did not mean to say more than, that, in the canvass now progressing in the City, Mr. Lyons had placed himself upon Texas and Texas alone! He did not plead the interests of the city, the cause of education throughout the Commonwealth, or the general prosperity of our people; but, if "Simon" read correctly, (and he has not his piece now before him,) his card was to prove that the great interests of the Confederacy would be promoted by the annexation of Texas. "Simon" considered this an offence to this part of the Whig Dominion, not that Mr. Lyons did not have as much right to go for Texas as any other man to go against it, for "Simon" is just one of those who would tolerate freedom of opinion even in his satanic majesty, with the obscurest freeman in the Land. He is far from entertaining hostility to any man because of this, and consequently "driving him from the party," – but when a candidate for public suffrage stands up before such a community as this and pleads an issue so odious as the Texas humbug, that by which the honour, integrity and perhaps peace of the country have been sacrificed upon the altar of political knavery and malignity against Mr. Clay and the great Whig party, those who thus regard this subject, may surely venture to dissent from such pretensions. It was in this view and this alone that "Simon" ventured to speak of the city canvass, and the isolated quotations by "Richmond" does him, to say the least, great injustice. No man, laying aside this matter of Texas, would sooner vote for Mr. Lyons, than "Simon," notwithstanding his objections to lawyer. But Mr. L. is not of that class of Lawyers who seek notoriety by aspiring to a seat in the Legislature. He has won for himself on another and more honorable arena a fame which might be tarnished, not brightened, by contact with such a body of leatherheads as usually, in these corrupt times succeed in getting a seat there. "Simon" knows perhaps, as well as this valiant, this fine Richmond, “in the field” that Mr. L. would be a working man; but like the "expunge" Texas is an offence, that ten thousand rivers of the purest water that ever flowed can never wash out, and no results that can succeed, will ever obliterate the foulness of the treachery in which it was conceived, and the ignoble purposes for which it was perverted by the Loco-Foco party. So far therefore as Mr. Lyons in concerned, "Simon" can only regret that so good, so able so decent a man as James Lyons, and some few others that he has the honor of an acquaintance with, should be found supporting a measure, condemned by every letter of the Constitution, and at utter variance with all the experience of our Government.

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen – Now that the all absorbing and grand question of Annexation has been ludicrously disposed of, and the speculating jockeys of our once fair, but now degenerate country, are smiling through their sleeves at the unexpected thousands lying at their feet, together with our sacred Constitution; allow one who deeply sympathizes with all those who look with regret and mortification upon this state of things, to address a few lines in your columns to the Whig Voters, whose suffrages are so loudly called for, in tones of thunder, in the Sixth Congressional District of Virginia, particularly to the Whigs of Chesterfield.

The recent battle, fellow Whigs, which we fought so gallantly, has passed by, and the measures for which we so boldly contended, have been trampled beneath the feet of our opponents. Are we, fellow citizens, placidly to submit to this? Are we to relax those efforts which have ever characterized patriots, Whigs? Are we to stand, awestruck by the numerous vices of the minority, and allow such depredations as have recently been practiced, to stare us in the face, when we have it in our power, with proper organization, to reap the reward which should await true patriots in the field of battle – Victory! No; gird on your armour, and swear by the God who reigns over all, that every muscle shall be exerted, every nerve roused, to perform its proper function, and victory awaits us.

Union is all that we wish, all that is necessary to ensure success; and cannot Union be obtained? I answer the interrogatory – Yes. There is not a Whig in this district who, with mature deliberation, will not lend his influence, however humble, to the election of our indefatigable and able Statesman, JNO. M. BOTTS, to the Congress of the U. States.

In perusing the Whig, some two or three days since, I was much surprised, and at the same time distressed, to see that any other than Mr. Botts should have been spoken of as our candidate in this district; and still greater was my surprise to learn that the Texas question, of minor importance as it is, comparatively speaking, was the point on which many differed with Mr. Botts. I will not, however, enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of Texas at this late hour, but would only say that Texas is ours, and I supposed Mr. Botts would, with as much zeal, defend this as any other acquisition we have made in years past; therefore, I am sure Mr. Botts will enjoy the support of every Whig in the District.

A word to the Whigs of Chesterfield and I have done. Chesterfield having long trodden the path unknown to wisdom, I am happy now to think, is retracing the steps of her digression, and should the Whigs adopt proper means of canvassing the country, I will guarantee that we give Jno. Mr. Botts 50 votes more than he received in '43, thereby greatly increasing the chance of our talented candidate for a seat in the next Legislature of Virginia: I would, therefore, suggest that the county be divided into Districts, appointing a committee of five to each district, whose duty it shall be to procure means by which the disabled and revolutionary patriots may get to the polls. I suggest this, knowing as I do that there are many, very many, whose silvery locks would forcibly evince proof of their being destitute of physical power sufficient to use much exertion to enjoy this great prerogative. Will not some active Whig carry this plan out?
"THE LATE ACTING PRESIDENT,"

From the Democratic Review for March, 1845

We must be indulged in the harmless anachronism which this anticipates, by a few days, the period when this agreeable form of expression may be employed, with a more strict accuracy than at the moment at which it is now written. — For even though the hour has not yet quite arrived, which is to be brightened by the reflection that Tylerism has ceased to exist, in any other than the past tense, yet, by the time this page shall reach the eyes of most of its readers, they will have ceased to blush for the government of their country.

"It will take the country a long time before the morals of our politics can recover from the bad influence which has been exerted over them by the regime of Tylerism" — was the recent remark of a very eminent statesman, occupying a position entirely aloof from it, and disinterested in regard to it; and who neither in his own person nor that of any friend, had been injured or assailed by it, but who had rather been on the contrary, an object of its good-will and flattering attentions. And the remark was true — so true that we scarcely know when and how to expect the curative influence or recuperative power which shall wholly undo the mischief, wholly atone for the disgrace, so deeply wrought by the events of the last four years.

Of late, indeed, towards the conclusion of Mr. Tyler's term, certain events have conduced to produce the effect of raising a little faint show of factitious popularity — not his own but another's — which attaches not to his general administration, but partly to a particular measure — and which prevents the full manifestation of that common contempt, which both Whig and Democratic parties vie with each other in entertaining for that nondescript tertium quid which he and an insignificant band of mercenary adherents have constituted, as a hybrid novelty unimagined before in our political experience. The strong arm of the great Statesman of the South so far upholds him, as to let him down with a decent show of dignity, in his descent from the high place to which accident alone raised him; and the blaze of the "Lone Star" streaming up over our south western horizon, alone sheds a certain degree of feebly reflected light on his retiring person, to redeem it from the entire darkness in which it would otherwise have gone down.

Men rarely love a treason so well as to forget to despise the traitor. Nor indeed is it by any means clear, that in his defection from the Whigs who had placed him in the position which gave him his power to harm, Mr. Tyler is entitled even to the usual good treatment which the policy of war accords to deserters. To desert voluntarily is one thing; to be fairly scourged out of the ranks and out of the camp and then driven over to the enemy as the only place of refuge, is another, and a very different thing. And when the person thus expelled was himself already a deserter in the enemy's camp from the side to which he is thus again ignominiously driven back — when his prolonged continuance there up to the time of that expulsion, has involved in itself the grossest treachery to the side from which he again supplicates a refuge — it cannot be pretended that any very strong ease is made out for a very cordial welcome. This is no overcharged picture of Mr. Tyler's position.

In the year 1840, what Whig out Whigged the renegade "Virginia Republican?" Nay, not only was he a Whig of the intensest sort but he was peculiarly, and par excellence, a Henry Clay Whig. To be a Harrison Whig, or a Scott Whig at that time, means comparatively little or nothing. To be a Clay Whig was full of the deepest and strongest meaning. There was no non committalism about the bold Kentuckian. His name alone, constituted as distinct an announcement of a system of political doctrine — and political doctrine of the worst sort — as could have been conveyed in any form of creed or catechism. And in the convention of 1840, Mr. Tyler was so furiously a friend to the selection of Mr. Clay, to be the Presidential candidate and national representative of the Whig party, that as has been subsequently proved, it was to the bitterness of his lamentations for Clay's failure of nomination, that he partly owed his own selection for the Vice Presidency.

We should not have made this fact alone, "per se," the foundation of the charge against Mr. Tyler, of having been a "renegade Virginia Republican," if he had not, by the palpable corruption of his subsequent course, reflected back upon his position at that time the clearest of lights by which to read his character and conduct. In his zealous Clayism of that day, there was no honesty of conversion, from what he had of old professed. He was sinning against a great light, and he knew it. He has subsequently, when ambitious interest prompted a different course, thrown himself back again, with an ardor of Republicanism reinvigorated by its long intermission of repose, upon the old principles, and the old party, which he was then betraying. — With no disposition to withhold from Mr. Tyler a charitable judgment over, ever, nevertheless the undisguised and unblushing excess of the political corruption which has rioted through his administration — now, happily, exalting its very last breath — has been such as to compel justice, in the interpretation of former equivocal conduct, to accept in all cases the worse construction as the more probable truth.

The history of Mr. Tyler's administration may be briefly summed up. Becoming Acting President by accident, his polar star was a second term. Wit this view he first, in conjunction with Webster, aimed at an amalgamation of parties, until it became evident that neither Whigs nor Democrats would have anything to do with such a scheme. The former fairly encouraged him forth from the place among them; which the latter as sternly and contumulously denied him admittance even within the uttermost verge of their gates. Then and not till then did Mr. Tyler adopt as the text trick of his policy, the effort to force or buy his way into the Democratic party by patronage of Texas, * * * * * and hoping to throw us into such confusion as to create at least a probability, if not necessity, of rallying upon him for re-election, as the only means of averting the worse evil of the election of Clay. Hence his convention at the same place and day with that of the Democratic party. To this hope he clung long and desperately, till the ridicule of his position became intolerable, even to the proverbial fatuity of himself and his family, and the [. . . ] after the nomination of Mr. Polk, he at last withdrew, only after an absurdly transparent attempt to make, by implied understanding with some of our party, the best terms of capitulation in his power for his officeholder. This is the naked outline of Mr. Tyler's administration.

Does any reader doubt its truth? Let it be remembered – the most supplicant tenacity with which Mr. Tyler during his first year clung to the Whig party. - At this time, be it borne in mind, the Whigs were fresh from the then last contest, which had placed them in the attitude of an overwhelming ascendancy; while the Democrats were apparently a broken down party, not only comparatively feeble in force, but containing within themselves many elements of confusion and disorganization. * * * Mr. Tyler's game then was, clearly, to shake off Clay, retain the great bulk of the masses whose rush had borne Harrison and himself into power, trusting afterwards gradually so far to disintegrate the Republican party, as to bring in at least a considerable proportion of them around his administration. Hence, although he vetoed Mr. Clay's Bank Bill, he offered at the same time a much worse one, and actually clung to the profession and name of a Whig, pleading with them impiously in one of his Messages on the ground of the number of other Whig bills he had signed, until all hope of success vanished, and Clay's controlling ascendancy in the party succeeding in flinging him forcibly and scornfully off into a position in which it became acknowledged treason for any Whig to maintain any sort of party communion with him.

Let it be remembered – the manner in which he then proceeded to address himself to his next aim, that of courting the democratic party. Then was witnessed a spectacle of the corrupt abuse of the patronage power of the Executive, unprecedented, unimagined before. One of Mr. Tyler's first acts after his entrance into power had been to promulgate a special declaration against the interference of the federal office holders in politics. On former occasions, also, Mr. Tyler had in peculiar manner identified himself with this principle. And yet, as soon as he began the working of this policy, that of worming his way into a position in the Democratic party by means of his office, systematically and universally throughout the country they were held up as the bribes for adhesion to him and his, interest, and activity in his cause.

Every man then is the Democratic party occupying any sort of position capable of being represented as one of influence, had office at his disposal for the mere acceptance of it. Democratic Representatives in Congress had almost unlimited command over the Federal patronage of their districts. Anything to prove himself a Democrat – to get admission as such – recognition as such. In all directions were to be seen Whigs removed from office who had scarcely had time to get adjusted in the seats to which they had been appointed either by General Harrison or by Mr.
Tyler himself – Whigs of unimpeached personal worth and capability – for no other even pretended reason than to confer their offices on Democrats. It was a positive public scandal – undisguised, undissembled.- We need not dwell on details – a single prominent fact will suffice to illustrate it. The whole system adopted is typified in Mr. Tyler's Baltimore convention, of which body nearly all were already his office-holders when they went there, while all the rest, with scarcely an exception, have been made so since!

The direct application of the vast machinery of the Federal patronage to the object of buying a deserter's way into some kind of welcome or reception by a party on which he seeks to fasten himself, presented a novelty in our politics. It certainly wrought a vast amount of mischief. It scattered broadcast through the land, seeds of demoralization, which could scarcely fail, almost everywhere, to find at least a little soil adapted to their to ready germination. Everywhere a certain number of persons were to be found, urged perhaps by their necessities, or little disposed to be scrupulous in such matters, whom a little judicious dangling of these baits before their eyes could scarcely fail to attract, with an eagerness little disposed to quarrel with the hand from which they were to drop.
Unprincipled men were also at many places to be found, who had little difficulty in palming themselves off upon the facile and foolish confidence of Mr. Tyler and his family, as their special friends, and as persons of astonishing zeal, activity and local importance, in whose hands the local management of their interests might safely be reposed. In general, able to get only the lowest and worst to fraternize with them in their loud mouthed partisanship of Mr.
Tyler, this class of persons, at many points, and especially in the cities, succeeding in getting together miserable little knots of persons, rarely more that sufficient to fill the far room of some mean haunt which constituted their head quarters, and these, in connection with the higher incumbents of the lucrative offices, constituted the "party" worthy of their creation and creator – the Tyler Party!

With the aid of a few newspapers, supported by the public patronage, and by a heavy system of assessed taxation upon the holders of office, these little pot-house knots of "the friends of John Tyler," were constantly astonihing the country with "mass meetings," and "great popular demonstrations," of which it is needless to say that they rarely in numbers much exceeded that of the officers reported to have presided over them. To what extent this system of humbug, the most impudent, succeeded in imposing upon Mr. Tyler, so as to make him actually believe in the existence and growth of a great popular sentiment in his behalf, we have no means of knowing. It is, at any rate, very certain, that even if deceived in regard to the imaginary popular sentiment in his favor, manufactured by these persons, he could not have been ignorant of the great fact which constituted [. . . ] the chief characteristic and the worst evil and disgrace of his administration, that it was mainly, if not wholly by the active plying of the power of his patronage, that the organization of his friends as a "party" was constituted, and sustained to the point of real or fictitious zeal. And this is the leading feature of his term, the employment of office and every manner of patronage to create a party, and keep it up to the due point of stimulus. We fear that a deeper mischief has been thus wrought to the political morality of the country, than would have attended the signing of fifty charters of banks or banking exchequers.

These people have in general been exceedingly clamorous in behalf of “Polk and Dallas,” since Mr. Tyler’s withdrawal – an event which did not take place till nearly three months after the nomination of the Democratic candidate. We believe they even so far surpass themselves in all those attributes which are the opposites of modesty and veracity, as to claim a large share, if not the whole of the glory of the Democratic victory. In truth, we have from the commencement felt satisfied that they did more harm than good. Their numbers were utterly insignificant. In point of moral force they added only a weakness and a weight hard and heavy to be borne. – It was felt that they were introducing into the Democratic party, and into a position of self-assumed clamorous prominence, frothing on the surface, a class of persons felt generally to be equally unworthy of personal respect or of political confidence. While it cannot but be a matter of regret, that the country has lost the moral benefit of witnessing that just retribution of rebuke which awaited this weakest and worst of our Presidents, in the utterly insignificant number of popular votes he had the slightest chance of obtaining.

We by no means design to include the whole body of Mr. Tyler’s office holders within the application of the above remarks. A considerable number of gentlemen of the highest political and personal merit, are indeed to be found among them – either selected through the agency of friends – or by happy chance – or by the way of good leaven to leaven the lump, as respectable endorsers to the bankrupt worthlessness of so many of the rest. Still less, of course, will any portion of them be received as applicable to Mr. Tyler’s Cabinet – the members of which have had little – most of them nothing – to do with the meaner matters of party making management. Mr. Calhoun’s position in it, in particular, is known to all to have been one far aloft from and above any thing and everything of this kind. He accepted the State Department at the call of the country for a specific object of the greatest public importance, with personal reluctance and entire independence of controle, and full understanding of his purpose of retiring as soon as he should have completed the Texas & Oregon negotiations.

"MEXICO"

By brig Abiano, we have received Mexican papers up to 12th February.

Santa Ana was to be tried on the 24th February, by the Congress erected as jury. If Santa Ana does not present himself before the grand jury, but sends his written defence, the trial is to come off sooner.

It appears that Santa Ana has full liberty to communicate by letter with whoever he pleases. It is reported that several letters have been intercepted, which were addressed to several houses in Vera Cruz, recommending them not to denounce the several sums deposited in their hands. A remarkable fact is, that whilst Santa Ana declared to Congress he had no other fortune than his landed property, he drawn exchange for $90,000, thereby proving the contempt with which he treats the Mexicans. – N. Question to Henry Brooke

To Henry L. Brooke, Esq.

Your frankness and prompt decision in your card of this morning, lead me to believe that you will, with equal candour and promptness, give an immediate reply to the following queries, which, as one of the voters in the city, I am desirous of having answered, and therefore feel bold to put them to you in this public manner:

1st. Are you in favour of the ultimate annexation of Texas?

2d. Are you of opinion that the Joint Resolutions are Constitutional?

3d. Do you think the present crisis such as to render Annexation expedient?

My reason for putting to you these questions, is this: that I think each candidate ought to avow his sentiments fully upon every issue which may be brought into the canvass; and, if street rumor is to be credited, your opinions are differently understood by different persons. – For instance, it is said confidently that you hold the affirmative of the 1st and 2d questions, and the negative of the latter; whilst it is known that you have been electioneering against one of your opponents upon the ground that he holds the affirmative of all three!

"WILLIAM C. RIVES."

We had intended to mark the retirement of several able and upright Statesmen from the United States Senate, with some comments on their services and worth, but other duties have prevented. We cannot, however, in justice to our feelings, longer withhold the expression of our high appreciation of, and gratitude to, William C. Rives of Virginia. Through the last two Sessions, especially, Mr. Rives has evinced a liberality and justness of sentiment, a soundness and firmness of principle, a largeness of perception and loftiness of aim, which have commended him more and more to the affections of the Whigs throughout the Union. His upright, manly, truly National course on the Tariff and Texas questions, and his unanswerable demonstration of the unconstitutionality of Annexation by the mode which Congress has adopted; will not be forgotten. Mr. Rives is the living embodiment of the best traits and best days of James Madison. He may for the present be driven from the national councils by the cupidity of Virginia slave-breeding stimulated by the prospect of a vast and lucrative market in Texas, but such a man cannot be kept down. His talent and virtues must soon cause him to be summoned again to the service of his Country. It is an evil day for her when such men as Rives are lost to her halls of Legislation, even for a brief season.- N. Y. TRIBUNE.

"MR. WILLOUGHBY NEWTON."

This gentleman finds himself in no enviable position: He has mortified his true and steadfast friends, or a very large portion of them; they who had stood by him at the crisis and placed him upon the summit he desired to reach, without conciliating his opponents! He went too far for the first, and not far enough for the last! He in his rabid support of the extremest Texas movement, without consulting the opinions of the vast and incalculable majority of the party with which he acted, from the Arostook to the Sabine, sinned against the first canons of party propriety, for in doing so, he made the great interests of this country, indissolubly united with the success of Whig principles, as he himself said a thousand times, and measures, subsidiary and subordinate to the immediate annexation of Texas, a measure which could be accomplished at any time whatever! He displayed in this course, an arrogant and conceited self reliance and self sufficiency over the assembled wisdom of the Whig party at Washington, and Whig opinion throughout the Union, which mark him for an unsafe politician – for one upon whose judgment little reliance can be placed in contingent and collateral questions, and who on such questions, is like a dollar pitched up, as likely to fall heads as fall tails.

Thus by his thorough paced and inscrutable Texas, immediate, not a moment's delay notions, he justly offended the bulk of the Whig party, who in so immense a question, could see no harm in a little delay, in a little reflection, and that the People might be permitted to reflect THEIR sentiments, NOT through a Presidential election governed by twenty other issues, but calmly at the Polls, and through the medium of a new congress! Without, that we have heard, any consultation with his District, or with the great body of the Whigs in it at least, Mr. Newton undertook to give THEIR vote for a measure of unconstitutional violence – we mean annexation of a foreign empire by joint resolutions of Congress, the very lowest grade of Legislation. That IT IS a measure of lawless and unconstitutional VIOLENCE we affirm, and we appeal to the CONSTITUTION itself, to sustain us in the assertion: We appeal particularly, to STATE RIGHT MEN! We ask them to show us and the People, the power of annexing old and foreign empires! As our neighbors of the Enquirer are wont to say, let them put their finger on the CLAUSE! And it is a sad reflection that this stab at the heart of the Constitution – this abrogation of all Constitution – is the work of vaunting, self proclaimed, exclusive, State Right men!

But to proceed – While Mr. Newton pulled kindly in the Texas, Tyler, Polk and Calhoun traces, he was applauded to the echo by that whole interest. The Enquirer, day after day, was eloquent in his praise! His independence – his Statesmanship, his Patriotism – his superiority to the shackles of party – were celebrated, if not in heroic and Homeric verse, yet in "prose run mad!" The Whigs the while, looked on and said little! They were chagrined and almost disgusted but they forebore all reproaches and all commentary.

Suddenly the scene changed – Brown's Texas resolutions passé the House, and as Mr. Newton almost boasts, by the prowess of his persistent arm! They went to the Senate, and there they were amended by Benton's bill. They came back to the House thus amended harmlessly at least, and there this furious annexationist Mr. Willoughby Newton, who would before give the People no time for thought or reflection, voted against them! He says he did so, because Benton's measure contained an insidious attack upon Slavery and the Southern States! The Enquirer intimates pretty broadly, that his vote was governed by other considerations, and that he proposed by it, to reinstate himself in the confidence and trust of the Whig party, annoyed and disgusted by his frantic Texas course! Where doctors of such eminence differ, we presume not to come in as a consultative Physician! Let them settle it as they will: It is all one to us, and we presume to the Whig party.

But, Mr. Willoughby Newton had no sooner given his final anti-Texas vote, than he was fired upon by the Enquirer and its associates. They evidently had received him as a deserter from the Whigs in his Texas votes, and regarded his last vote with the most vehement indignation, as an attempt to desert back again! They tried to shoot him, as John Randolph said he shot John Holmes, as he crossed the line!

The Enquirer without delay, poured a broad side into Mr. Newton’s in the following terms.

"Is it not melancholy to reflect upon the cursed consequences of this party spirit? Wonderful to tell, there was but one Whig who voted in favor of the amended resolutions, (Dellet of Alabama,) whilst six of the others, (Stephens of Georgia, not in the House,) who originally voted for Brown’s resolutions in the House, were made enough, party mad, to vote against them in their amended form – a form, certainly, which neither affected their constitutional nor practical character. And among these six who ultimately turned their back upon Texas, were Milton Brown himself, of Tennessee, General Clinch of Georgia, and Willoughby Newton of Virginia. They voted against it, and three others. Newton! Aye, our old friend Newton, whose forcible letter was, but the other day, so much admired by the Democrats, and condemned by the Whigs. These men, it appears, could not withstand the screws of party operation, or the last of the Whig press: and, after a brilliant effort, they have returned to the vile affinities of party spirit."

To this denunciation of the Enquirer, Mr. Newton replies through a letter published in that paper of Saturday from which we make the following extracts:

"But what is the extent of our offence? Not that we voted against the proposition as amended, but that we did not vote for the amendment which was distasteful to us, and must be exceptionable to every true friend of the South.- Notwithstanding my objections to the amendment, I am free to say, that if the question had been on the resolutions as amended, I should have voted in the affirmative, rather than a measure I had so much at heart should have failed. I knew full well, however, that the Democrats of the House had been whipped in by the last of party and that, the amendment would be carried by a large majority; and even if rejected by the House, I had no fear that the measure would thereby be defeated; for either the Senate would have recoiled from the amendment and fallen back on the original resolutions: or, if the amendment was adhered to by the Senate, the House would have receded. So that our votes against the amendment, which we disapproved: could in no event endanger the [. . .] proposition.

I had hoped that my course in public life had satisfied all who have deemed it worthy of their attention – that I always endeavored to be governed by principle, and that I am not to be turned from the path of duty by the denunciations of a reckless press of my own party, or by the seductive influence of the flattery of my political opponents. I did not advocate the admission of Texas from any selfish considerations. I was well aware that I should incur the displeasure of some of my party friends, by doing what I deemed a duty; and on that account, if no other have a right to claim justice, at least, at your hands. I ask no more. And as that is denied to myself and my associates, by the men who, by our aid, have been enabled to achieve a great measure, I may be pardoned the seeming vanity of declaring, that without us, and, indeed, I may say, without my own humble efforts in the cause, the measure could not have been accomplished, at least, during the late session of Congress. In proof of this assertion, I might cite the evidence of distinguished and liberal men of your party, who are to magnanimous to deny their obligations to Whigs, in the accomplishment of a great national object, merely because it may serve to lessen the apparent triumph of their own party.

I do not deem it necessary or proper to reply to ordinary newspaper articles, but your notice of me upon this measure is so pointed: and your views so mistaken, if not designed to do me injustice, that my declining to notice them might be improperly construed. I have, therefore, to request, that you will do me the justice to publish in your next paper these hasty lines, by which I mean to assure you and the public, that my support of the proposition to admit Texas had its origin in a spirit of pure patriotism which is not likely to be influenced by a desire to conciliate the apparent triumph of their own party.

"But what is the extent of our offence? Not that we voted against the proposition as amended, but that we did not vote for the amendment which was distasteful to us, and must be exceptionable to every true friend of the South.- Notwithstanding my objections to the amendment, I am free to say, that if the question had been on the resolutions as amended, I should have voted in the affirmative, rather than a measure I had so much at heart should have failed. I knew full well, however, that the Democrats of the House had been whipped in by the last of party and that, the amendment would be carried by a large majority; and even if rejected by the House, I had no fear that the measure would thereby be defeated; for either the Senate would have recoiled from the amendment and fallen back on the original resolutions: or, if the amendment was adhered to by the Senate, the House would have receded. So that our votes against the amendment, which we disapproved: could in no event endanger the [. . .] proposition.

I do not deem it necessary or proper to reply to ordinary newspaper articles, but your notice of me upon this measure is so pointed: and your views so mistaken, if not designed to do me injustice, that my declining to notice them might be improperly construed. I have, therefore, to request, that you will do me the justice to publish in your next paper these hasty lines, by which I mean to assure you and the public, that my support of the proposition to admit Texas had its origin in a spirit of pure patriotism which is not likely to be influenced by a desire to conciliate the favor of party hacks, on the one side, or to deprecate their wrath, on the other.

Yours, very respectfully,

WILLOUGHBY NEWTON."

The commentary of the Enquirer upon this cringing appeal, is such as it deserved. It by no means pardons the offender against Texas, and shows off, with force, the weakness of voting against Benton’s amendment, after Mr. Newton and the Texas Whigs had swallowed Brown’s resolutions. Its reasoning upon this point, is conclusive: It gives Mr. Newton no credit for changing his voted, on the score of principle, but intimates that it was quite as probably caused by a disposition to attend to his own interest in returning to his party.

This letter of Mr. Newton we never read until yesterday (Monday): We read it under PROMISE to a friend, and with the sincere wish of being pleased with it. We lay it down with feelings of entire disgust, and with the conviction of the truth of what a distinguished, a most distinguished Virginian said, a year ago – he “will not be a Whig a year hence!” His allusion (for so we cannot but understand it) to this Press, either as a “reckless press” or as a “party hack” we fling in his face with defiance. He himself is deeply indebted to us for our liberality and forebearance in 1844, as he knows well – or if perchance he does not now; some of his Texas friends can inform him: No seat in Congress – no accidental elevation, either entitles him or any other man in this country, to hold language of such assumed superiority over other, nor shall we for one, permit it to him or any other, without at least repelling the haughty and insolent vaporing!
To the Whigs of the District we address an earnest invocation: suffer not yourselves to be driven from you moorings by these fatal Texas feuds, so much nourished by your Whig Representatives in Congress. ATTEND TO THE LEGISLATIVE SPRING ELECTIONS. – That is the great and essential point. Organize for that! Organize for the United States! Organize for Virginia! Organize for Whig Principles! Let not Texas once cross your mind, much less influence your votes! Congress is comparatively little this year: The House of Delegates is all in all!

– JNO. BOTTS.

The Convention held on the 20th ult., on the part of the Whigs, with perfect unanimity, selected the above named gentleman to represent this District in the next Congress. The battle between Whigs and Democrats begins this day at Goochland Ct. House, where Messrs. Botts and Seddon will measure arms.

WHIGS OF EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND FORTY AND FORTY FOUR, are you ready for the contest? Are you ready to draw the sword and throw away the scabbard in support of your principles? Do you bear in mind the duplicity and fraud by which your opponents cheated you out of the benefit of your principles, and the election of your own Henry Clay? Surely every motive that could impel you to action exists (at least in this undoubted Whig District.) can there be a doubt of success, if you will but do your duty. No! no!! no!!! must be the answer; but we sometimes hear a "Democrat" say that there are a few Whigs (very few, I imagine) who do not like Mr. B. personally. Can it be possible that any Whig would let go his principles for the sake of any man? Look to the political history of your nominee, ever a Tariff man, a Bank man, A distribution man, battling for those measures from the hour that he entered public life to this moment.- Look to the times when he spurned the documents of the traitor Capt. Tyler – when treachery would have met its reward, and fidelity was so rare, that even the "union of the Whigs for the sake of the Union,” “every inch a wig,” and the Minister to China, caught at the bait, and deserted their principles and their party! Who was it that stood firm in this trying hour? Whose voice was it that was loudest in the defence of your liberties and the Constitution? The answer is ready: Botts was the man! But Texas, Texas, Texas! Mr. Tyler said, was the question – not what was best to be done for our household, as it was, but that the family should be increased; and, upon the propriety of this, a President was to be elected! Come, brother Whigs, one and all, and let us show to the "Hunkers" and the "Chivalry," that, like the Greek, though you cut off both arms, we will hold on with our teeth. And, with this determination, we will as certainly elect our candidate, as life and liberty last. POWHATAN.

MR. WILLOUGHBY NEWTON.

The Alexandria Gazette says—

"Mr. Willoughby Newton, the Whig candidate for the Northern Neck District has written a letter to the Richmond Enquirer, concerning his votes with regard to Texas, and the comments that have been made on his course. This letter is severely handled in the Richmond Whig. Without pretending to interfere in a matter, which, probably, does not concern us, we may be permitted to say, that, although we certainly should never think of looking into a man's views in favor of Texas, as a recommendation for a seat in Congress, we should, on the other hand, as in the case of Mr. Newton, and in the circumstances in which he is placed, not look upon these views, as throwing him out of the Whig party, or in a contest between him and a Loco Foco, as a reason for refusing him a hearty support. Mr. Newton is the Whig Candidate. He avows and maintains Whig principles, and he is in favor of the Annexation of Texas. Mr. Hunter is a sublimated Loco Foco, (the worst kind, we think) is the candidate of the Loco Foco party, and is also in favor of the Annexation of Texas. Now, this is the exact state of the case. Can any Whig, in the Northern Neck, therefore, let him be for or against Texas, hesitate one instant in this matter?: We trust not. It is the bounden duty of the Whigs to give Mr. Newton a cordial support. As for Mr. Newton's flings at the press, because he has been galled in some quarters, that is neither here or there. He is not the first public man, and will not be the last, who will assume a kind of superiority to that which, as a public man, has contributed to make him, and has made many who have kicked down the ladder by which they have mounted. We, though younger in years, than our senior friend of the Whig, have already acquired by experience, philosophy enough to regard these things with a stoicism which befits the times. But we must insist that let him write what letters he may, about the press, Mr. Newton (this Texasism included) is the Whig upon whom the good people of the Northern Neck out to rally, and return to Congress."

"We have not acquired the Stoicism vaunted (and only, we suspect, vaunted, and not possessed,) by our friend of the Alexandria Gazette. We hope, moreover, that we shall never acquire a frame of mind which implies, as a condition precedent to obtaining it, the abnegation of all sensitive and manly feeling. The time has not yet come with us, and it shall never come if we can prevent it, when we are prepared to surrender the feelings and rights of the man to the claims of the party. For Party we go, legitimately, as par as he who goes farthest. Party is inevitable—party is right;--without party, we can sustain and carry, through nothing in this country, were all is dependent upon, and regulated by party! But, even here, there must be limits—the limits of reason and sound sense. He who flies from the obligations—takes a course of his own, in opposition to the mass of opinion of the party with which he acts—prefers his own judgment to theirs, without consultation, or conference, or communing, and that upon matters of the very highest, most vital, and most far-reaching moment, has no right to complain if he is regarded as presumptuous and officious. That he has been trusted—that is in Congress—gives him no right to constitute himself the thinker of the Party with which he acts, and to stifle, in his representative course, their opinions and convictions.

Such has been Mr. Newton's course—a course wild, and disregardful of the opinions of his friends. Had the Whigs of his District who elected him, been consulted, would they ever have advised him to vote to annex a foreign empire to this, by joint resolution, the very lowest form of parliamentary proceeding? They never would. We think we can vouch for the whole party in the District. Mr. Newton never could have obtained from them, the privilege of making them say, it is constitution to annex foreign empires to this, buy the simplest and cheapest form of legislation, and without consulting the people! So great and incalculable a question, was never intended by the framers of the Government, to be thus lightly and unceremoniously disposed of, not even the form of consulting the American People being observed! Mr. Newton can not, ought not, to feel surprised, at finding arrayed against his self-willed and hard headed and self sufficient course, the most strenuous and even indignant opposition from his own party friends! They will and they do ask themselves—why, what worse could any Locofoco do than this? In a great and overwhelming matter, affecting the very liberty and existence of the country, he has not deigned to consult us his constituents! He has thrown himself in opposition to their wishes, and the solemn judgment of the Whig Party!

But we are constrained to cut short what farther we wished to have said. We shall continue and complete our address to the Whig Party of the Westmoreland District, by Tuesday.

[JS-LLS]
We moreover believe, that the most direct and positive—the clearest as well as the harshest—mode of making this separation, is by making any opinion on the "annexation" question, a test of eligibility to such offices of trust or honour, as may be at the disposal of the Whig Party. We, therefore, earnestly protest against the application of this est; and, differing greatly amongst ourselves upon the "Annexation" question, but agreeing in preferring Mr. Lyons, as the representative of this city in the next Legislature, to any gentleman hitherto named, we deeply regret to have seen his opinions upon that subject, treated, by many Whigs opposed to his election, in a manner tending to produce incurable discord in the Whig party. We are also satisfied, that the whole question of "Annexation," as well as Mr. Lyon's opinion upon every b=ranch of that question, and his more of treating it during the late Presidential canvas, is by many wholly misunderstood.

For the purpose, therefore, of promoting harmony in the Whig party, in Richmond—the want of which, we are convinced, arises in a great measure, from misunderstanding each other,—we have joined in the above invitation to a public meeting on Wednesday night.

"MANY WHIG VOTERS"—ANNEXATION—AND MR. LYONS.

We publish the call of "Many Whig Voters" upon the Whigs of Richmond, to meet Wednesday evening at the "Odd Fellows' Hall" as requested. How many authorize this call of "Many Whig Voters," we do not know, that part of the secret being kept secret.

If we understand the position of things correctly, it is very different from that which the author of this communication seems willing to imply. No Whig that we know of, objects to any other Whig that he is in favor of annexing Texas—at the right time—in a Constitutional manner—and by the consent of the American, the Mexican and the Texan People! Present it in that shape, and few would be found comparatively, (though some still would) to dissent from it. The vehemence and indignant opposition to the immediate annexation of Texas, which animates the bosoms of thousands and hundreds of the purest patriots in the land—springs from the loftiest motives! They spurn the idea of bullying Mexico, as this Government would not attempt to bully England! They want not a rich acquisition, did its rivers flow with gold and previous stones, at the expense of national honor, and by driving a plough share through the Constitution! Admitting Texas to be fertile and desirable in the abstract, they distain, or would distain, to receive it from the unclean hands of Tyler, and the Texas jobbers in land, bonds, and scrip! These are the feelings of the great Whig party—of nearly the whole party—throughout the U. States; and they are feelings which, in our poor judgment, reflect the highest honour upon their elevated patriotism and principles. It is not Texas that, in the main, they are opposed to obtaining, but they are opposed to obtaining her unconstitutionally, unjustly, and by a contemptuous regard of national honor and faith!

This writer intimates that immediate and Joint Resolution Annexation Whigs are unacceptable to the Whig party, and opposed by them because they ARE such! Can it be at all wonderful that it should be so? Here is by far the most immense American question of the age—a question which, before it is ended may well change the whole frame work of American Society, and stain American soil with civil gore-decided against the solemn judgment of the Whig party, by the aid of a few self-willed Whigs, numbering among them Tyler and Merrick, and every other Whig traitor of the day! Can it, we ask, be wonderful, that the Whig masses look with coldness and distrust, upon these "immediate Annexation, Joint Resolution" Whigs, who, whether they intended it or not (as we know many of them did not) helped by that detestable question and the support they gave it, to overthrow Henry Clay and prostrate the Whig party in November? IS IT WONDERFULL—that smarting under the effects of this odious Tyler and Speculator invention to ruin them—defeated by it, and deprived of that command of the Government to which they were entitled from their numbers, and defeated too by the indirect assistance of Whigs—the masses of the Whig party should for the present feel extremely lukewarm towards such Whigs, as in this great national and vital question, took part against them, and Henry Clay, and with 'Polk, Dallas, and Texas!' We for our part, think that nothing can be more natural, reasonable, and proper! Let Polk, Dallas, and Texas elect them if they can, to the offices they want: Let them, like our friend Jeremiah Morton, appeal at once to that "Democracy" with whom they concur on this great Constitutional question!

The Whigs as a party, we trust will take no part in the proposed meeting, which is obviously called to the heal any dissention, but to enable one of the Candidates to make a Texas speech! If that gentleman chooses to make that question the issue—to separate himself upon it from the Whig party, and the assembled wisdom of the Whig parting Congress, he will find no doubt strong Democratic sympathy, but we most sincerely hope no Whig sympathy! Let him go and speak his speech, but the other Whig Candidates will scarcely feel called upon, we trust, to go over arguments which the Rives', Choates, Berriens, Archers and Crittenders have made familiar to all! [JS-LLS]
ANNEXATION!

Our neighbors of the Enquirer are alarmed, and we have no doubt that the whole Holy Brotherhood of Texas Landholders, bond holders and Scrip holders with them, at the unfavorable manner in which Brown's Resolution for immediate Annexation have been received in Texas itself! It really would look, from the language of the Galveston Civilian, and the Texas National Register—the leading and most influential Journals of that Republic—as if Annexation on the terms proposed, was going to the scorned and spurned by Texas!

How ardently, we hope this may prove true, we need not say, for it would in a great measure correct the dire mischief of the ranks and unconstitutional legislation of the late Congress—a Congress destined to be opproboriously remembered in the annals of this country.

But we confess that we depend but little upon these demonstrations from Texas. As far as we can understand, they are induced, but the fact that the U. States did not assume to pay the Texas national debt—estimated, by many, to exceed twenty millions of dollars! When the Texans learn what the hope and calculation of the Texas jobbers in this country in this country is—namely, that although not assumed in form, the Texas debt will yet be paid, and the aforesaid jobbers, in the end, realize all their golden visions—we say, that when this idea, not implausibly supported, is duly circulated in Texas, and backed b the secret assurances of Mr. Ro. J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury, "Randolph of Roanoke," (Seth Barton,) our venerable neighbor, and the Texas authorities generally, the People of Texas will jump into the Union like sheep into a pen! So we fear, at least! We devoutly wish them the sagacity to perceive their true interest as well as that of the U. States—that is, to keep themselves to themselves!

But the country may rely upon it, that monied speculation is at the bottom on the part of Texas to make this country pay her debt on the part of Speculators here, to make the U. States pay them scrip and bonds at par, which cost only a few cents in the dollar; and Texas, moved by this mercenary consideration will be whipped in!

We give two articles of interest, from Texas papers:

FROM THE GALESTON CIVILIAN

"The article which we copy today from the National Register affords gratifying evidence f a return, on the part of the friends of annexation in this country to a proper sense of self-respect, and an understanding of the position which Texas may and ought to assume in relation to the question. Our friends beyond the Sabine have lost sight of the homely adage that it takes two to make a bargain; and only studied how to shape measures so as to make the "reciprocity all on one side," until at length their utter selfishness and disregard of the respect due to Texas as an independent nation, which has thus far maintained her nationality, rights, and liberties, begins to produce the natural fruits of disappointment and aversion in those of our citizens who ha looked to that quarter for magnanimous and disinterested regard for our welfare and happiness.—The helpless and perishing beggar may without hesitation accept the most humiliating conditions for, and agree to become the menial of, him from whom he receives the means of averting famine and death; but the sturdy yeoman, whose honest industry and strong arm afford him all the means of subsistence and protection requisite to his condition and habits in life, may well shun the banquet and the association if invited into the society of the more wealthy and presuming, when his acceptance is to be coupled with acknowledgments of vassalage and inferiority.

[from the Texas National Register]

THE PROPOSED ANNEXATION.—The Congress of the United States "doth consent that the territory included within and rightfully belonging to the Republic of Texas may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, with a republican form of government, to be adopted by the people of said Republic, by deputies in Convention, assembled with the consent of the existing Government in order that the same may be admitted as one of the States of the Union." Such is the language of the first section of the resolution which has passed the lower House of the American Congress. What is its import?

The answer is, that we must lay aside our national name, abandon our preset Constitution, erect ourselves into a new State, adopt the appellative of "State of Texas" organize a new Government of a republican form, by mean of deputies assembled in convention, and, after we have passed through this prescribed revolution; after we have thus voluntarily deprived ourselves of every feature and lineament of that nationality under which we have our independence has been recognized by foreign Powers; after we have, in fact annihilated our identity as a community, and repudiated even our name, so that we can neither know nor be known in the rank and seat among the nations which we have hitherto occupied, at least without dishonour, and without the consent of the old world and the new; after all the sacrifices and all this degradation, what shall we have gained? What [sic] shall we have accomplished? Annexation to the American Union? No; not even the promise of it. Under such circumstances, all our connexions with foreign nations would be dissolved, our relations toward them changed; all advantages accruing from past negotiations cease; for no one can pretend that the great European Powers will continue their amicable intercourse with our Government as the REPUBLIC OF TEXAS, under the name of "STATE OF TEXAS," habited in the garb of a supplicant for admission into the family of American States, the very cut and fashion of which have been PRESCRIBED by their Congress. Why, in such a guise we should not even know ourselves! In such a state of national abeyance and limbo, we could neither assert a separate independence for ourselves, nor claim any species of alliance or connexion ever known by any name "given under heaven or among men," with any other Government. In such an attitude of morafying [ . . . ] and humiliating indefiniteness, we may well be disavowed as a distinct nation.

"By all our kind and skin, [ . . . ] when they "Compare our [ . . . ] day and [ . . . ] day."

And, having assumed this ?eal posture, by the consent of the American Congress, "in order," as the resolution declares, "that we may be admitted as one of the States of the Union," that we are bound unto them, but they are not bound unto us. We are again and for the fourth time, to knock at their door for admission, "on or before the first day of January next," with out new Constitution in our hand, when that Congress will take their final action (for or against, as the case may be) on the subject of our application.

This is the substance and extent of their "guaranties," paraded, as the expression is in the resolution, under imposing grammatical form of the plural number ?. Have we any pledge that we shall then be annexed? No; they only promise that they will once consider the proposition, and take what they are pleased to denominate their "final action" upon it. And, judging from the language they now hold, we have nothing more nor less to expect than that they will then "spurn" us as before—for they can do so without violating any pledge.

But, if we adopt the course indicated by the resolution, we do so under the formal sanction and color of their express consent. This would be a tacit admission on the part of the Government and the people of Texas of the authority of that consent, and would imply at least that we could not lawfully act in the prescribed mode without it. No doubt we should be forced to borrow largely from the efficacy of that same consent, to carry us through the conspicuous [ . . . ] part assigned to us in the ridiculous farce thus prepared for exhibition.

If the people of Texas choose to revolutionize their Government, and institute some new and different republic organization, they may do so without the leave of a foreign Government "first had and obtained." But the United States have acknowledged our title to be recognized as an independent nation, both de facto and de jure. Should we adopt the course designated by their resolutions, we at once lose the benefit of that acknowledgment. We pass into a state of imbecile and hopeless dependence upon that Power. To be annexed? Certainly, never—until their aspiring partisans shall cease to need the materials we now furnish them for manufacture of political capital. Our relations with other Governments dissolved, and our own nationality renounced, the United States, may consent to hold—as we are required to give to the United States a lien upon our country's sovereignty—this worthless consent, as it is conferred on Texas, is eked out to her at a miser's usury, and is shackled with what lawyer's call "conditions precedent." Passing by the required sacrifice of our right to adjust the boundaries of our territory, the consent of that Congress even once more to entertain the Texas question is coupled with the cold assurance that if we are, ever admitted into the Union at all, we must cede to the United States "all our mines, minerals, salt lakes, and springs; also, all our Public Edifices, Fortifications, Barracks, Ports and Harbors, Navy, and Navy Yards, docks, Magazines, Arms, Armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defence [sic]. [sic]" We must also yield up our revenue and our capacity to raise one: which single item, under the financial regulations of our fostering stepmother, will bring into her Treasury at least three hundred thousand dollars per annum, for which we have her kind permission to retain our public debt; and keep our public domain; subject, however to the payment of the debt, and circumscribed without such limits as she may hereafter be pleased to assign to our territory, in the exercise of her characteristic and far-fetching diplomacy, which once reached even to the Western banks of the Sabine! We must, however, truckle to her pet abolitionists by obligating ourselves to prohibit slavery north of the parallel of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes, known as the Missou [sic] compromise line.

But even this consent of the American Congress, meager and valueless as it is to the people of Texas, but for which we are required to give to the United States a lien upon our country's sovereignty—this worthless consent, as it is begrudged to Texas, is eked out to her at a miser's usury, and is shackled with what lawyer's call "conditions precedent." Passing by the required sacrifice of our right to adjust the boundaries of our territory, the consent of that Congress even once more to entertain the Texas question is coupled with the cold assurance that if we are, ever admitted into the Union at all, we must cede to the United States "all our mines, minerals, salt lakes, and springs; also, all our Public Edifices, Fortifications, Barracks, Ports and Harbors, Navy, and Navy Yards, Docks, Magazines, Arms, Armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defence [sic]. [sic]" We must also yield up our revenue and our capacity to raise one: which single item, under the financial regulations of our fostering stepmother, will bring into her Treasury at least three hundred thousand dollars per annum, for which we have her kind permission to retain our public debt, and keep our public domain; subject, however to the payment of the debt , and circumscribed without such limits as she may hereafter be pleased to assign to our territory, in the exercise of her characteristic and far-fetching diplomacy, which once reached even to the Western banks of the Sabine! We must, however, truckle to her pet abolitionists by obligating ourselves to prohibit slavery north of the parallel of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes, known as the Missouri [sic] compromise line.

We have always been a warm and hearty advocate for the cause of annexation; but never did we dream that the approval of the people of Texas would be required to a proposition so absurd, so degrading, as the one propounded by this resolution. Our space does not now admit of further detail. Suffice it that we contrast our present elevated position as a people—secure in the respect and amity of the great enlightened nations of the earth; secure in the enjoyment of peace, and in the speedy acquisition of acknowledged independence; secure in the wealth which the commerce of Europe is about to pour into our lap, and the increasing value of our lands, arising from the extended occupation and the investment of foreign capital; secure of becoming "the most favored" by those powerful and wealthy sovereignties whom both interest and policy impel to cherish our prosperity and growth, that their markets may be supplied with our staples; and secure that the increase of commerce will speedily render no less consistent than desirable a great diminution of our present tariff—with the alternative present by this resolution, of Texas divested of all these high privileges and advantages, shorn of her attributes as a nation, crippled in her commerce, in her prosperity, in her domestic resources, depressed in the burdens of public debt and direct taxation, her land in consequence depreciated in value; and, in the event of final annexation upon the proposed basis, our public domain not only razed and mortgaged to secure the payment of our debt, but even eviscerated of its mineral wealth to swell the federal treasury.

This is, indeed but a dim and totally inadequate view of the actual pit and grave of insignificance and infamy into which the House of Representatives of the American Congress have proposed to plunge this nation.

Wednesday Morning, March 28, 1845

CITY CANVASS – "DICTATION," &c., &c.

We ask the reader's attention to the judicious card of HENRY L. BROOKE, Esq., excusing himself from attending the meeting which the Texas Immediate Joint Resolution Annexation friends of one of the candidates have called, to [. . . ] it they cannot put the fire out by pouting [. . . ] oil upon the fire.

We are authorized to say for Mr. Lancaster, that he too, entirely disapproves of that meeting, as calculated to do harm [. . . ] and not good. Mr. James we feel convinced, and indeed we know, is of the same opinion; and in sincerity we have not seen or heard of the first Whig (except the little [. . . ] clique who got the whole thing up) who did not unqualifiedly reprehend the course proposed, of a TEXAS [. . . ] among the Whigs, in order to settle differences and promote peace, as entirely absurd and farcical! These discussions when they take place between hostile parties, and [. . . ] the collective People being auditory and the judges, [. . . ] are well enough; but when they are invoked to steal [. . . ] family jars, are ridiculous. It is not by such means—means calculated to exasperate and not conciliate—that the desired harmony can be restored, and we feel [. . . ], as in point of fact the Whigs of Richmond knew that they have been appealed to as a dernter and desperate resort by those, who, having detached themselves from the rest of the Whig host, hope something where they can loose [. . . ]!

To the communication addressed to "the Citizens of Richmond," we ask attention, although that communication is a most illiberal attack upon us! The authors of it and the little [. . . ] clique who act with them, were very indignant last year, when the Richmond Whig was denounced as attempting to "dictate" because it opposed the election of Mr. Brooke! Now forsooth, the same three or four denounce us as Dictators because it enters into their wise ?? to suppose that we are friendly to the election of Mr. Brooke!

The truth is, we have taken no part, and wished to take no part, in the election—in the adjustment of a difficulty where all were friends and where to be for one, was to appear at least to be against another. We have felt like the good [. . . ] natured voter in Goochland, who, being bothered be??? predilections, said—"Gentlemen, I wish I could [. . . ] vote for you all!"

These gentlemen, it seems, who in the face of public opinion, as all but themselves think, are attempting to force the election of Mr. Lyons—denounce us for what? For opposing him—for taking even any part? No—but for simply opposing a meeting to hear Whig denounce Whig, and a Texas Whig allow up another Whig who has [. . . ] opposed to annexing the U. States to Texas !

This is dictation in us ! It is dreadfully wrong! But when these same persons day after day, electioneer through the streets for Mr. Lyons—THAT is no [. . . ] O! by no means! They may steal a horse, but me must not look over the hedge!

Had we supported Mr. Lyons, no matter how warmly and zealously—were we to do it now,—it would be no [. . . ] then ! It is only dictation when we happen to think differently from those who would themselves [. . . ], if they could! We agree fully with the authors of this Card in one thing at least, and it is that the enlightened population of this city are not to be dictated to by any man or any set of men!—not are they such fools as to think that we attempt to dictate to them, because, like every other citizen, we express, as we have a right to express, our simple opinions. They have known us for twenty years, and they have never known us in that long tract of years, to try to dictate; NOR HAVE THEY EVER KNOWN US TO TRY TO PREFER AND PROMOTE OURSELVES AT THE EXPENSE OF THE PUBLIC CAUSE! If they trust us at all, as we hope they do, it is because they know that we are candid and plain sailing, and have no private schemes [. . . ] to serve by party !

This is our shield and defence, and here we know we are impregnable, and defy the assaults of all .The People—the Whigs of Richmond—must and will stand by us because we have stood by them!

[JS-LLS]
WHIG FEUDS IN THE CITY

These feuds are just nothing! They are formented, if not produced, by Locofoco cunning and address, acting upon Whig vanity and gullibility! The state of things now existing, has been projected, in our opinion, by those who have not made their purposes known even to their instruments, to overthrow the Whig party, in this Congressional district, and Botts’ Election. We are greatly mistaken, or we can put our finger on the one or two men, who, acting behind the curtain and playing upon personal irritability, and that vanity which is the besetting sin of the time, have produced our troubles!

But it all will avail the plotters nothing! The Whigs of Richmond are not thus to be circumvented! He who has been abusing them, and warring upon their interests for twenty years, is not now going to succeed in pinioning their strength by Texas anodynes, or by accusing us falsely of dictation! The trick is stale and will not succeed! The Whigs of Richmond constitute the most enlightened community in North America, and they will prosecute their ends, regardless of the attempt of the enemy to humbug them!

It is rumored in Washington that M. Bodisco, the Russian Ambassador, has formally entered a protest with our Government on behalf of the Emperor of Russia against the Annexation of Texas. It was supposed, however, to be entirely untrue.—Balt. Pat.

[JS-LLS]

THE MEETING WEDNESDAY NIGHT

There was, we hear, quite a crowd at the Odd Fellows’ Hall, Wednesday night, to hear Mr. Lyons. His on clique was there of course—a number of Whigs from curiosity, and the Sweat House in full force! The latter were very much delighted with the course and drift of than argument, which, not bearing upon them, bore only upon the Whigs. Their satisfaction was entirely natural. Had it borne still harder upon the Whigs, that audience, or the mass of them would have clapped still more loudly.

Mr. Lyons attacked Mr. Brooke and attacked us, but we did not hear of his attacking any Loco Foco!

He spoke, we are told, of a piece which appeared in the Whig some weeks ago, with much severity, which piece he ascribe to the senior editor of the Whig. [It was a piece simply calling on the candidates to say what were their views on the subject of immediate Joint Resolution, Texas Annexation!] That Editor did write the piece! He has never denied it, and is proud now to proclaim it and avouch it. It merely called upon the candidates to state their opinions upon this most grave constitutional question. There was no attack, direct or indirect, upon any one; and yet Mr. Lyons, the next day, demanded to know the name of the author—a demand which he had no right to make unless he meant to exact personal responsibility. He was told politely, that he had no right to make such a call, as there was nothing personal in the article—that there was not the least objection to his knowing who the author was, but that there was an objection to the principle he assumed, which would give him or any man, the privilege of making himself acquainted with matters which are universally regarded where the Press is free, as entitled to protection from inquisitiveness.

But the author of the article alluded to, was so far from desiring to conceal this authorship, or from fearing any sort of responsibility for it, that he stated to a friend of Mr. Lyons the next day, that we was the author, not doubting that that friend would communicate it.

So much for this matter! Let that article be published again—we ourselves will publish it—if it is desired by any—

But let us quite this theme altogether! The Locos were excessively delighted—in a broad grin—the Whigs, with few exceptions, chagrined and mortified! That is in a few words, the history of the matter. The Patriarch of the Enquirer will gloat over it, and the fact that his friend Lyons, helped to "row Whigs up Salt River!"—as in fact he has been gloating, and chuckling, and smacking his lips for several days, at the prospect!

Let these gentlemen all, however, take notice, that the Whig party of Richmond is not yet Vanquished! We shall all see what we shall see! The Whigs mean to ACT, not to jower! The fourth Thursday in April is not now distant, and they reserve their response to those proceedings, for that day!
More we shall have to say, but not now.

THOMAS RICHIE!

Both Mr. Merrick and the Senators from Ohio, in their votes upon the Texas question, violated the known and expressed will of their constituents. Not only our Senators, but the Legislature of Virginia have been violently assailed by Mr. Ritchie; the former, for acting in opposition (as the Enquirer contends) to the public sentiment of Virginia; and the latter, for not instructing our Senators to conform to this popular will. But, what says the pure and consistent Democrat, [who claims the honor of senior Editor of the Richmond Enquirer,] touching the conduct of the Ohio Senators and Mr. Merrick? Not only has he bottled up the thunder of his indignation against their palpable dereliction from Democratic principles; but he has proclaimed that Mr. Merrick, in acting in contradiction to the expressed will of his constituents, (through the Maryland Legislature,) has entitled himself to the thanks of the Democracy, [which he, I presume, as the organ of the party in Virginia, freely bestows upon him.] Yet, this same Mr. Ritchie has the effrontery to propose as one of the issues of the Spring Elections, the refusal of the Legislature of Virginia to instruct their Senators upon the Texas question. Why instruct Senators, if they merit the thanks of the Democracy for acting in open defiance of the wishes of their constituents, when they happen to represent a Whig constituency? And is not this the unavoidable inference we must draw from a comparison of Mr. Ritchie's practice with his professions? In Virginia, instructions are imperiously demanded, and our recent legislators of last winter, are to be hauled over the coals this spring, for not obeying this Democratic behest of the Richmond Enquirer. But in Maryland it was the Whig ox which was gored; and the case being altered, alters the case. The Maryland votes decided the Texas question; and according to the political ethics of the Enquirer, this outrage of the Maryland Senators, against the expressed wishes of his constituents, entitles him to Democratic gratitude. Verily, these Democrats must have very India rubber kind of consciences, if Mr. Ritchie is a true exponent of their political morality; and we are at a loss which most to admire, the effrontery of the declaration alluded to in regard to the thanks due to Mr. Merrick, or the impudence and the consistency of the Enquirer, in assailing our Legislature for refusing last winter to instruct our Senators upon the Texas question. Instructions, forsooth!! What boot instructions to the Democracy of the Ritchie School, if party purposes are to be subserved by disregarding them; or, what amounts to the same thing (according to Democratic professions, but not Democratic practice, if party ends are to be gained by opposing the expressed will of the constituents? Let me caution Mr. Ritchie, that in relation to his threats to bring our Legislature, of last winter, to the bar of public opinion, for refusing to instruct on the Texas question, discretion will be the better part of valor. The less he excites public attention to the political morality he has displayed, in regard to Mr. Merrick's vote, the better for him; he may gain credit with Democrats of the Empire Club School, by the avowal of such principles, but with the honest yeomanry he must infallibly lose caste, as he deserves to do with honest politicians.

ONE WHO KNOWS

MR. WILLOUGHBY NEWTON.

We resume the theme of this gentleman's recent course with, we confess, other feelings than those which actuated us a week ago. We then felt naturally mortified and resentful at his personal course towards us. We had stood by him for 13 years, in every political fortune, and if we had rendered him no service, it certainly had not bee for the want of trying to do so. We were unconscious of the slightest offending personally, or even politically, towards Mr. Newton. True—we could not think with him, that the Constitution gave Congress the power to annex foreign empires to the Union, by joint resolution, the lowest and least solemn form of legislation! We thought it, as we think it still, the grossest and most violent invasion of the Constitution ever yet attempted; and if the deliberate reflection of the People does not bring them to the same conclusion, then we shall be of the mind of Mr. Burke of New Hampshire, that a Constitution is an evil, and like a Custom House oath, only made to be broken!

But, thus thinking we said not a word in opposition to Mr. Newtown's Texas course. We regretted it as a Whig: We regretted it as a personal friend: But still we said nothing, for it was no affair of ours: We had fought for him, trusted him, valued him, respected him, loved him; and however much we censured his Texas Immediate Joint Resolution Annexation course, we had no wish to assail him for it.

All we said was comprised in the two following paragraphs:

From the Richmond Whig of February 20th.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF WESTMORELAN.
"Notwithstanding Mr. Willoughby Newtown's entire conformity to the wishes of the Texas party, and his abandonment in his course upon that subject in Congress of the immense majority of his own—notwithstanding the delicious flattery addressed to him by the Texans, when his vote was deemed necessary in the House to pass Brown's resolutions, and construct the fortunes of Texas Speculators, and the gross and fulsome adulation which that party have paid him since—notwithstanding, we say, all these things, the Democratic party of his district has assembled in Convention at Tappahannock and nominated Mr. Hunter [another great Texas man, but not greater than Mr. Newton !] and Mr. Hunter has accepted the call!

So Mr. Newton will get no wing from the Democracy for all his compliances! They have played the old game upon him—used him to help their schemes and break down his friends---plied him ad interim with sugar plums and caresses—but when they have no longer any use for him, unceremoniously laid him aside! Why, as the Democracy say, Texas is all in all—the absorbing, the great, the only question—as by and through it they accomplished the defeat of the Whigs in 1844, surely they might have been complaisant and grateful enough to so valuable an ally as Mr. Newton has proved to them, as to give him their nomination!

Mr. Newton must now rely upon the Whigs again, to may of whom his course has been given great pain, not to say unqualified disgust. We hope his reliance will not be in vain."

From the Richmond Whig of March 4:

"MR. NEWTON

This gentleman [and all the Whigs who voted for Brown's Texas Resolution except Mr. Dellett of Alabama] voted in opposition to them when they returned from the Senate, encumbered with Mr. Benton's proposition. On the other hand, every Democrat who had voted against Mr. Brown's resolutions, now voted for them (with Benton's project annexed) except Mr. Hale of New Hampshire and Mr. Davis of New York.

"These facts are highly significant. The accession of the recusant Northern Democracy [principally from New York] proves that the Van Buren and Wright influence had finally acquiesced in the Texas movement, and that Mr. Benton's movement was in all probability concerted to afford them the opportunity of doing so, in few words the moral of the tale is, that Calhoun and Polk having stolen Tyler's Texas thunder, and made capital from it, were in turn robbed by the Old Hunters, who did not choose that they should make [unclear much capital]."

But we congratulate Mr. Newton, that circumstances, no matter how contrived, or by whom, or for what purpose, so worked ultimately as to save him from the deep responsibility of a final approbation of the outrage and iniquity of annexing Texas in the mode it was annexed, and for the still viler motives which influenced the mass of active agents [distorted section ends] in that work of unconstitutionality and lawless aggression. His friends we are sure will rejoice, and his own conscience.

That was all! And being all, we appeal to Mr. Newton himself, and to his and our friends to say, if it justified him in denouncing us as he did—as a "party hack"—as a "reckless press"—and going into the Enquirer to do it—attempting as we thought, to appease and mollify and propitiate the conductors of that journal, by censuring and vilipending us! What! Are we to have no feelings—are we to crouch—are we to forget the feelings which belong to men and gentlemen because we are not in Congress!

But—after this expression of proper feeling, which is due to our self-respect—let us add, that we very much regret the matter. We did not seek it most certainly. WE have warmly esteemed Mr. Newton, personally, intellectually, and politically. And we are most willing and shall be most rejoiced, to "let by gones be by gones" and that we shall unite with him, if he will with us, upon the old 1840 platform, to sustain the good old cause of the party and the country!

We are not at all afraid of misconception: A man who knows the rectitude of his own intentions never is.

[JS-LLS]
The route across the isthmus at Panama is the shortest and the most direct; that by the Lake Nicaragua would require perhaps the least work so far as the mere forming of a navigable communication is concerned; the third route, that of Tehuantepec, although the longest, has peculiar advantages which, in the estimation of many, entitle it to the preference over all others, The want of good harbours wither on the Atlantic or the Pacific side, or on both, is urged against the two first named routes; and it is a formidable objection. The [insalubrity] of the climate moreover, is said to be much that the construction of a canal by either of those points would involve a lamentable loss of human life.

An article in a late number of the London Quarterly argues strongly in favour of the Tehuantepec route. The following description of that portion of the isthmus will show some of the chief advantages which it offers for the construction of the great work.

The Breadth of the isthmus is a straight line from the mouth of the Coatzacoalcos is 220 kilometres (130 miles,) but the greater part of this space is occupied on the south by lagoons and extensive plains, and on the Atlantic side by the course of the Coatzacoalcos, which can easily be rendered navigable up to the confluence of the Malatengo. The principle works, therefore, to be executed would be comprised between latitude 16 degrees 36 minutes and 17 degrees 3 minutes N, including a space less than 31 miles in extent, wherein no excavation whatever exceeding the usual limits would be required. The highest point to be surmounted is at the Portello de Tarifa, a pass between the mountains only 200 metres (656 feet) above the level of the Pacific and 160 metres above the mouth of the Malatengo. There is a abundance of water, which may be applied with great facility so the service of the canal being derived from the Chicapa of Chimalapa and its confluent the Monetza, and from a more considerable river, the [Oaiota], which like the former, flows into the lagoons not far from the town of Tehuantepec. The grand condition of the good harbour at either extremity of the line seems capable of being simply fulfilled in this case. The mouth of the Conizacoalcos, 700 metres wide, and with never less than twenty-one feet of water on the bar, quite enough to float a frigate, is according to Balbi, "the finest port formed by any one of the rivers that discharges themselves into the Gulf of Mexico, not even excepting the Mississippi" – Hitherto it had been very generally supposed that no harbor could be established on the Pacific side; but Signor [Moro] has cleared up this difficulty. The lagoons near Tehuantepec have a depth seldom less than five or six metres, and this could easily be increased by dredging, the bottom being nothing but mud and shingle. The Bocca Barre, by which they empty them selves into the ocean, is not obstructed by a [true] bar, but a little way within it there is an accumulation of sand which might be destroyed with extreme facility whilst the cause of its deposit mighty be effectually removed.

A survey of the Tehuantepec route has been completed by Don Jose de Garay, by the authority of the Mexican Government and the report is favorable. M. de Garay is now in England inviting the attention of British capitalists to the work.

Gentlemen: you will not object now a days with a little political grist for your mill. On Monday the [21st] [ . . . ]time Mr. Newton and Mr. Hunter met in the King William Court House in the Congressional [ ] for the Westmoreland District. It is due to both gentlemen to say that they conducted themselves as gallant knights should – though their lances were [ ] and their [ ] battered in the [ ], (to use the warlike language of the Enquirer and its correspondents.) [ ] and that honorable self respect which makes the well-bred gentleman shun the dishonour of inflicting pain upon the feelings of others, as he would a wound, were conspicuous throughout.
Mr. Hunter lead of in a speech of about an hour and a half. This gentleman is not a very fine popular speaker, certainly. He has many of the leading peculiarities of the eccentric school to which he belongs – is sometimes wrapt in his political reveries – and soars aloft into the [subliment] heaven of water colored theories upon government perfectibility, Southern interest in particular, and a hard money currency in general. He saws the air with quite a sweep of limb – laughs hysterically at his own efforts at wit – wears a loose, badly tied cravat – and looks quite as noon struck as the Prince of the Mystics, or the Founder of the Transcendentalists himself. Bur for nervous energy of expression – for that practical, homely vigor of thought, which rouses and agitates the mind – and for that fervor of feeling and sweep of sympathy, which warm and gladden the heart, - we must look elsewhere, than to the 'bright particular star of the Rappahannock.'" The raus thereof rather resemble the mild and gentle influence of the minor luminaries of Heaven, than the meridian sun himself. The farmers of his district will hardly, as Homer's shepherds did, "Eye the blue vault and bless the useful light" -

And our Calhoun friend waged, too, a singular warfare; he occupied his hour and a half mainly in fortifying his camp, and beseeching his Democratic soldiers not to desert him; he feared that Newton would endeavor to entice them into his own ranks, and by a sort of coup-de-man, turn his flanks and carry the day. He therefore aimed to heed him: he told the Democrats that Mr. Newton would claim credit for having bareing his breast to parry detraction – but that he had done only what he was bound as a good citizen to do - and that Texas would have been annexed had Mr. Newton never been born.

Perhaps the Ex Speaker had found that the under-currents of feeling in Newton's favor were settling rather too strong; and thought it judicious to dam up the torrent of he could. "Twas a strange spectacle indeed, and well illustrated the truth, that politics as well as travelling, make strange bed fellows. Texas Thunder, Mr. Hunter and his compatriots had always regarded as their own especial munition of war; and that an imprudent Whig should have stolen it, was as bad as Salmoneus, of Classic repute, who imitated Jove's thunder by rattling a chariot over a brazen bridge! 'Twas "brazen" indeed, beyond endurance – To have nursed this banting; to have fathered him through good and evil report; to have employed Tyler as the Accoucheur, old Ritehie as the Wet Nurse, and entices poor Merrick to act as Sponsor ans Godfather – and then, that an inventor of "Whig Humbugs" should claim the paternity! "Oh, most monstrous tale in the book of Time!" "Tis enough to throw an abstraction into a political Dyspepsia, which Adam Smith, nor Tracy, nor Say, nor Ricardo, could cure. After dinner, Mr. Newton, from feebleness of health and voice, thought proper to address the people in the Court House.

It has rarely been my lot to see any public speaker listened to with more deference and respect. Mr. N's frank, manly bearing - his manifest honesty of conviction and purity of intention, are such as to produce a feeling of personal friendship in the hearer. You feel that you are listening to a gentleman of the Old School, who will not palter with his conscience, of barter his principles for power and place – who will do what he deems right, in defiance of all party considerations, and will never sacrifice the "honest" at the shrine of the "useful." However much you may doubt the judgment of his political revealings, the conviction cannot be resisted, that lofty honor, and pure virtue, beat higher in no man's heart. He declared that the question of independent representation was directly involved in his re-election. – That he had used his best endeavours to procure the Annexation of Texas, because, as a Southern man and Patriot, he believed the best interests of the South were involved in the issue – he averred in the most solemn manner, that political life had no charms for him – that before God and his conscience, he believed it no fit employment for an honest man – that its corroding disquietitudes and hollow professions produced in a pure mind loathing and disgust ineffable – but that self respect, and a regard for his children, the inheritors of his good name, would not allow him to shrink like a coward, and cower like a poltroon, under the lash of party denunciation. He then administered a most wholesome rebuke to Mr. Hunter for his continual harping upon Southern interest and Southern rights, and his constant endeavor to chafe and irritate the public mind into phrenzy by inflammatory diatribes against Northern oppression and pampered manufacturers – that such a course was grossly unpatriotic, as it tended to poison public feeling at the fountain and to pour out the waters of bitterness upon a contented and happy people, and that such fixed ideas were utterly unworthy a Statesman and a Patriot.

He then declared himself a Whig upon the old issues – Bank, Tariff, and Distribution – and this all knew full well. Did not Mr. Newton by his bold and manly avowal of his principles in his District; by the fearlessness with which he made these issues throughout its length and breadth, succeed in carrying a District which had been regarded as doomed to look for light only to that "Star of the Rappahannock!" and did he not by the ability and research with which he discussed and demonstrated his propositions, extort the admiration of his foes, and wring from the most prejudiced, expressions of esteem and regard.

Mr. Hunter in a reply of an hour and a half, much more remarkable for good feeling and temper than for force of views or strength of expression, took occasion to laugh at Mr. Newton for his inconsistency in declaring that he regarded Texas as necessary to the safety of the South, and yet he would not have voted for it had it been certain that the measure could have been accomplished, without his aid – and thus have ruptured party ties. This position many agreed with Mr. Hunter was an awkward one, but to my mind it only proved that Mr, Newton, in volunteering this remark, had the candor and magnanimity to avow what others would have supposed – others would have intended it, but like Fouché, would consider that the admission of a designed but not accomplished measure, is worse than a crime, and amounts to a blunder.

How many men would have themselves spurred the odium of such a design? It serves only to elevate Mr. Newton in my poor estimation.

The two gentlemen then parted in good feeling with the promise of meeting each other at Phillippi, a very [ . . . ] allusion, but supposed to refer to a place called [Mangonick] in the upper part of King William, whither they were to go on the morrow.
If the Whigs of Mr. Newton's District fail to testify their confidence in his integrity, and high souled independence they will grieve a noble heart, and will look in vain hereafter for his superior in all those qualities which make ambition virtue, and which gild with a softened charm the cheerless waste of party strife.

He may have committed errors of judgment (and let him who has not, cast the first stone) he may in moments of too generous warmth, have inadvertently given the enemy an insight into our camp – but to degrade a long tried and faithful soldier for one doubtful step, is to turn our weapons suicidally against our friends, and to damp the free and untrammed action of bold and honest men.

Let the Whig party bury the tomahawk. Let not a drum head court martial be offered for all who fail to comply with a strict party drill. If you do, you will hurry to speedy execution, no nobler soul than Willoughby Newton, who deserves and will win the increased confidence of his District.

NOT A CONSTITUENT.

RWv22i26 p2c5 April 1, 1845

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen—As the Texas question is still open, allow one who has already occupied your columns upon the subject, to submit to your readers a few considerations, which, in my humble judgment ought to be decisive.

It will not be denied that the constitutional requisition of a long citizenship, in order to eligibility to the Congress of the United States, was founded in the reasonable presumption that foreigners recently naturalized would be too ignorant of our principles of government, and too unfamiliar with our institutions, to be safe depositories of so important a trust.

It must also be conceded that the clause of the Constitution which empowers Congress to admit new States into the Union, has no geographical limit, if the existing boundaries of the United States be not a limit; and that Canada may become a member of the confederacy as constitutionally as Texas.

If this be true, and the Constitution is consistent with itself, how can Congress, or the "treaty power" extend to [...] what Constitutional right can a Canadian take his seat in the Congress of the United States within one year after his citizenship commences, while the Frenchman, who has been six years a citizen, is positively, and for wise purposes, debarred for the same privileges?

Is it less dangerous to the public liberty that the one should legislate for us than the other? If not, where is the constitutional power to confer privileges upon many foreigners, which it is plainly unconstitutional to confer upon one. It is impossible to believe that such an absurd inconsistency exists in the Constitution of the United States.

It is said that the citizens of Texas will not be foreigners, after her admission, any more than the citizens of Virginia, or Vermont, were foreigners immediately after the present Constitution was adopted. But the meaning of that instrument must be learned from the meaning of those who made it. Now it is evident from the nature of things that, on the minds of those wise and patriotic men who framed the Constitution, the prohibitory clause, which we are considering, was designed to apply, not to themselves, nor to any citizen in the territory pervaded by the revolution, but to the citizens of foreign nations generally recognized as foreign nations. This is the plain, common sense construction, and the first departure from it involves us in amazing inconsistency. The prohibitory clause, beyond a doubt, was intended to apply both to Spaniards and Canadians, en masse as will as individually. Where then is the right to make thousands of them eligible at once to the Congress of the United States?

[LLS]

Admit Texas or Canada, and you must admit them without distinctions among their citizens, and the Canadian or the Mexican must be as fully entitled to the representative office as the renegade from the United States. But were this not true, let me conclude by saying that that is a monstrous, no less than an absurd construction of our great charter, which denies to the foreigner who has become one of us, for the sake of liberty and its advantages, those privileges which it concedes so freely to the reckless and unpatriotic adventurer, who has abandoned this, the country of his birth, weary of the restraints of a well regulated freedom, to seek lucre and danger in another land.

UNION.
The New York Tribune contends that if Texas shall decline the proffer of annexation said to have been already made to her by the Executive under the Joint Resolution of Congress, then the whole forces of that resolution is exhausted. The Tribune quoted from the resolution as follows, (directly following the House proposition:)

"And be it further resolved, That if the President of the United States shall, in his judgment and discretion, deem it most advisable, instead of proceeding to submit the foregoing resolution to the republic of Texas as an overture on the part of the United States for admission, decide to negotiate with that republic, then –"

"Is it not plain," asks the Tribune, "that the President is not authorized to try one alternative first, then the other? He is first to decide under which proposition he will proceed; but having chosen and failed with that, he has no right afterward to resort to the other. The House proposition has been officially transmitted to Texas; if she rejects it, Mr. Polk must wait until Congress gives him new power. The House Resolutions will be dead."

"GENERAL ORDERS!"

From the Enquirer of yesterday.

"An important question is now presented to the consideration of the Democrats of Richmond. We have no candidate in the field – the Whigs make up for our deficiency by starting four of five of their own. The question now is shall the Democrats fold their arms and vote for none, or will they vote for Mr. Lyons, who, though a Whig, is the friend of Texas, and for that reason is to be hunted down by the Richmond Whigs and the Botte Whigs. For one, I venture to say, that the greater portion of the Democrats will vote for James Lyons, and that they ought to do so. We owe nothing to the others, but to him we owe respect for his independence, gratitude to his noble efforts for Texas, and sympathy for the unrelenting persecution which his devotion to that cause has brought down upon his head. TEXAS."

So we have the cat out of the bag at last, and the general orders published by the Enquirer to its Democratic host to support and vote for Mr. Lyons! And for what reason is he preferred over all other Whigs? Two are assigned: 1. He is for Texas, and the Democracy owe "gratitude to his noble efforts for Texas!" Why had not the author of the article gone a little farther in the confession and stated that Texas broke down Henry Clay and the Whig party, and that the chief "gratitude" is felt for that towards all who contributed their help! Mr. Lyons, we know, zealously and ably laboured for Mr. Clay, but unhappily taking the side of the "Democratic" on that question which they insisted upon making, and did make, the absorbing and controlling issue – to wit, immediate annexation – the necessary effect was (though not the intended effect) to weaken his own friends.

2. The second reason assigned is that Mr. Lyons is persecuted! How? Why there are Whigs who prefer other Whigs over him! That is all, so far as we know.

From the Philadelphia Morning Post

HON. CALEB CUSHING'S LETTER ON TEXAS TO THE JOURNAL OF COMMERCE.

This production, one of the most singular of a time abounding in specimens of the marvellous, will be found in
Of all the men who have appeared in our day, Mr. Cushing appears to be the most determined to keep himself always before the public. His vanity and thirst for notoriety appears to be fully as great as his ambitions, and all three of them are beyond the reach of satisfaction. If he can find a public journal willing to gratify his ruling passion, it is for him so much clear gain: if he cannot, he sets to work in good earnest and blows his own trumpet, until the country rings again. We first hear of him, about 1841, as a prominent candidate for the mission to Spain, his claims being founded, (according to an article suppose to have been written by himself, but which turned out to have been the work of a near connexion,) on his profound erudition – his vast acquirements, [unrivalled since the days of the admirable Crichton] in almost every species of human learning – his fascinating manners – and last, but not least, his thorough acquaintance with the Castilian tongue, which he was said to have as much at command as Quevedo – his intimate and critical knowledge of Spanish literature, and a variety of other accomplishments, which combined, tendered him the most finished cavalier of which history makes any mention. Contemporaries, however, are rarely just to transcendent merit, and are in general too much disposed to assign its reward to posterity. It happened so with the highly accomplished person in question. The age was dull to his merits and he did not get the position.

We next hear of him in the House, as the principal friend of the late Dynasty, and a sort of auctioneer general of Executive favor. Rejected from one embassy, the President took care to furnish him with another, at a time when the formidable Senate could not interpose between him and his favorite. Residing some five or six months in China, he saw more than man ever saw, heard more than man ever heard, and has told more than man ever told before. – Conforming to that wise precept of our Saviour, which forbids the hiding of a man’s “light under a bushel” he has let his shine out, through all the highways of the land. – Traveling post through Mexico without (so far as we know) understanding a word of the language, in the course of a few weeks he formed an acquaintance with the habits – manners – customs – political institutions, and even the sentiments of the whole people, numbering some nine million, which appears absolutely marvellous. Johnson taunts Milton with his short stay in Italy (nine months) and though he perfectly understood the language, and was thoroughly acquainted with the literature of the country, says he could, in that time, have learned very little of the manners, customs, and institutions of the Italians, but what was the author of “Comus” and “Paradise Lost” compared to the negotiator of the Chinese Treaty? The trip to China appears to have had an effect, which very much resembles inspiration. It has not only made the voyageur intimately acquainted with Islands and countries which he saw from the deck of his vessel, but it has opened the gates of all knowledge to him, and has laid every species of mystery, natural, national and diplomatic perfectly level to his comprehension. He speaks upon all, from a Chinese dictionary to the secrets of the Mexican government, as though there were no appeal from his judgment, his claims are to the full as good as those of “Hadji Baba,” who was esteemed a valuable adjunct to the English Mission, because he had been in Constantinople, and was perfectly acquainted with the “Franks”; that is to say had seen some half dozen of them, in the course of his sojourn. Mr. Cushing can allege a claim of a similar nature; was he not three weeks in Mexico, and who shall presume to contest the palm of acquaintance with Mexican politics with a man thus thoroughly qualified to understand them?

This much we think is necessary to say, upon introducing his letter to the public. Now for the letter itself.

"With regard," says he, "to the withdrawal of the present Mexican Minister, that, it seems to me, is by no means so grave a fact as many may imagine." We shall call upon our readers to say, whether they have ever seen more impudence and presumption compressed within so short a sentence.—The Government of Mexico has repeatedly declared, that it would consider the annexation of Texas a declaration of war – as soon as it is done, the minister, as his first step, asks for his passport – he leaves the country after delivering a protest as pointed and as energetic as language can make it, and after all, Mr. Caleb Cushing, ex-minister to China, and post rider through the Republic of Mexico, cannot see that it is “by any means so grave a fact as many may imagine!” it is a matter of some importance to know what Mr. Cushing considers a “grave fact.” Finding little to sustain him in his incredulity, in the actual state of things, he launches at once into the wide ocean of suppositions and imagines a variety of things. “Mexico was, doubtless, reluctant to see Texas annexed;” “it was quite in the ordinary course of things” that “she should manifest her opposition by threats of war;” “it was equally supposable, by way of argument that she should instruct her minister to demand his passport;” “that the minister should public his instructions to this effect;” “and thus, on the case occurring, he should prepare to leave the United States, and return to Mexico!!” and thus by stringing together a miserable set of imaginations and suppositions, he thinks to meet and stave off, the inference open to all, and upon which, after the repeated assertions of the Mexican Government, there cannot be a shadow of doubt in the mind of any intelligent human being, unless one should arise from the weakness of Mexico herself.

But to go on with our extracts. "The departure of General Almonta does not of itself interrupt even the diplomatic relations of the two Governments." But when that withdrawal is connected with the declarations of the Mexican Government, what can be make of it, but a determination to interrupt them as soon as possible? What does all the half-learned twaddle that follows in the same paragraph, about other cases of withdrawal, signify? What possible connection has it with the subject under consideration? No cause of war had arisen in any of these instances, neither Government had said to the other, “if you do this thing of that, we shall consider you at war with us.” If such had been the fact, would any man at that day have had the folly to say there will be no war? Every thing we take it depends on the manner in which the withdrawal is make; whether it be from personal pique, or from the improbability of bringing certain matters under consideration, to an amicable termination or from a variety of other causes, not sufficiently great to authorize war. But did any man ever hear of a Minister's demanding a passport after his Government had declared this a particular act, which had already been consummated, would be considered a declaration of war without meaning something serious?

The writer goes on to insist upon the position so often refuted, that the acknowledgment by a nation, of the independence of another, gives her the right to annex, &c. -- This is a cheap, and easy method devised of late to acquire territory. We have according to this idea, nothing more to do than to send forward a band of adventurers into the territory of a weak neighbor, let them settle themselves, quarrel with the authorities, proclaim their independence, procure its acknowledgment, and then annex them to the United States. It is a principle, moreover, at war with the law of Nations. By this law, a nation wishing to form a treaty with another, addresses itself to the Government it finds, it treats with the Government de Facto, and does not enquire into the rights of that Government. It is not in fact authorized to do so. Hence the supposition, that if Mexico had cause of complaint, it was against our acknowledging the Independence of Texas, is absurd to the last degree. -- That proceeding was perfectly regular, and just. The U. States found the colonists in possession of the Government, it treated with the power it found, and had no right to enquire by what title it was in existence. It is altogether another affair when annexation comes up. There the right should clearly be ascertained.

But the most absurd part of this whole letter is that in which the author threatens to hang the foreign sailors who shall be taken on letters of marque commissioned by the Mexican Government. Two can play at that game, Mexico has in her dominions fully as many Americans as we have of her subjects, and if we hang her foreign sailors, she can hang our citizens. But does not any man at once see the monstrous iniquity of this proposition? Thousands of American citizens fought against Mexico; hundreds of them are at this day citizens of the United States. Yet when Fannin and his men were butchered in cold blood, the resentment of this country was, very properly roused to the highest pitch. It was for Mr. Cushing to suggest a line of policy to the Government, cruel in itself, and which the whole American people united in condemning as worthy of barbarians.

LATER FROM ENGLAND

By the packetship Queen of the West, Capt. Woodhouse, we have Liverpool papers of March 7th, and London to the eventing of the 6th. Also an Extra of the 7th from the office of Willmer & Smith’s European Times, containing the latest intelligence.

The Queen of the West brings seven cabin passengers and four hundred and fifty six in steerage.

Cotton continued firm at the advance reported by the steamer of the 4th.

The accounts from Switzerland are no later than the advices before received. The state of affairs in that country is extremely critical.

England has resolved to interfere, in a friendly way, for the termination of the war between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video.

CALIFORNIA. – The Paris “Presse” contains the following paragraph, which confirms a piece of intelligence first given to the public through our columns, and which some of our cotemporaries were pleased to regard as moonshine. – The same paragraph, is copied into the London papers without comment.

“The great fall of Santa Ana has exposed one of the vastest projects which the undermining ambition of Great Britain ever conceived. It appears from the correspondence of the Ex-President of Mexico with the British Minister, that the former for a sum of 25,000,000 piastres, of which he had reserved for himself a considerable portion, was on the eve of ceding absolutely to Great Britain the magnificent province of California, considered so valuable both by Great Britain and the United Stated, that the latter, in the year 1837, offered $5,000,000 for the harbor of San Francisco alone.”

LONDON, March 6, 1 o’clock. – The English securities are steady, with a small amount of business, and prices, though not exhibiting much alteration, are tolerably well supported by the jobbers, who will not accept lower values than those currently quoted within the last few days. Consols for money are 99 1/8 to 100, for the account 100 1/8 to 1/4, and Exchequer Bills 63[ . . . ] to 65[ . . . ] prem.

Railway shares attract considerable attention, with an improved demand and less speculation. We find the market supports a good appearance.

Three o’clock. – consols 99 7/8 to 100 for money, and 100 1/4 for the account.

LIVERPOOL, March 7. – The Income Tax. – This tax, “with all its imperfections on its head,” passed through committee on Wednesday evening, with hardly a show of opposition, in a thin House, only mustering 119 at the division.
The income tax, then is to be continued for three years certain, and he who believes that it will be taken off at the end of that period, voluntarily at least, must be endowed with an amazing fund of superstition, The vague promises of Sir Robert Peel and the Chancellor of the Exchequer are all so much moonshine.

The Peel Tariff has made but slow progress since our last, and, marred as it is by the omission of all reference to corn, provisions, and tea, by a most absurd and mischievous arrangement of the sugar duties, and by the retention of all the iniquities of the income tax, it would matter very little if its progress in future should continue to be as dilatory as it has hitherto been.

LOUISANA SUGAR – On the 5th ult., in the House of Commons, --

Mr. Thornley said, I wish to repeat the question which I put to the right Hon. Gentleman, First Lord of the Treasury. I yesterday stated that a quantity of Sugar had reached this country from the United States, which was notoriously the produce of slave labor. The question which I then put has become of more importance, because today I find that samples have arrived of cargoes of two or three shipments from New Orleans. The question I wish to put is this, whether this Sugar, the produce of Louisiana, and therefore the produce of slave labor, will be admitted at the same rate of duty as Sugar from China, Java, and Manila, which is considered the produce of free labor?

Sir Robert Peel – There are certain countries – the United States being one of them – where Sugar is produced by the labor of slaves. The United States, and one or two other countries, have concluded reciprocity treaties with this country, which treaties stipulate that the produce of such countries shall be admitted into this country on the footing of the most favored nation. That, I apprehend, is the state of the case. But up to this hour, there has been no official information received by her Majesty’s Government, from the Custon house, with respect to the arrival of this shipment, nor has any communication been made to the Treasury Board upon the subject, nor any applicatin for an orfer in Council, which would be necessary before the Sugar could be admitted. At present, I apprehend that the Sugar could not be admissible, for no order in Council has been issued for its admission form the United Stated. At the same time, I have no hesitation in saying that my construction of the treaty is, that Sugar from the United Stated would, under the reciprocity treaties, be admissible on the same terms and footing as Sugar from Java, Manilla, and China., -- [Loud cheers from the Opposition benches.]

Mr. Thornley had heard the answer of the right hon. Gentleman with great satisfaction. He begged simply to state that the produce of Sugar in Louisiana was such as would give great profit on its exportation to this country, and that there was every reason to believe the new trade would be carried on to a very considerable extent,

Mr. Edwards said there was another question connected with this subject, which he was anxious to have answered. He wished to know whether the right hon. baronet was aware that all the sugar coming from Louisiana was brown Muscovado sugar, and, therefore, would come into this country at the duty of 23[s], and not at 28[s]? So that, in fact, this slave grown sugar of the United States would be imported at a lower duty than the free-labor sugar of Java, Siam, and Manilla.

Sir R. Peel declined entering into any argument upon the subject at present.

COMETS. – In addition to the comet recently seen at Berlin, Paris, and London, M. Colla, the astronomer of Parma, announces that he has discovered another; and in the log of Captin Hilare Gautier, who has arrived lately at Marscilles, a third is mentioned. The latter is said to be placed between the two stars No 11 of Eridnaus and 16 of the Atlas of Harling. This comet disappeared at the moment when Captin Gautier approached the equator. -- [Liverpool Mercury, 7th.

KING WILLIAM

I ask permission, gentlemen of the Whig, to occupy sufficient space in your columns to give my brother Whigs of the Congressional District, an account of the discussion which took place at our Court House on Monday last, between Messrs. Newton and Hunter. I will be as brief as circumstances will permit: -- Mr. Hunter opened the debate in a speech which, in my humble judgment, fell immeasurably below his usual standard. Heretofore this gentleman has over [adressed] himself to the reason of his hearers, but alas! Argument seemed entirely to have escaped his memory on this occasion. Never before, in our county at least, has he ever condescended to quit the lofty pedestal on which he has ever abod as a public speaker, to step upon the platform, hitherto deemed, and not by a very "strict [co ]" as belonging exclusively to the low and despicable demagogue – I will do him the justice to say, it was an excellent speech for a man in his apprenticeship – But only think, Hunter training to play the demagogue wonder what upon earth, Mr. Calhoun and the proud and haughty Rhett would have said could they have seen him, fussing about, clapping his hands and evidently so completely out of his proper element, For Heaven’s sake friend Hunter, haul up, at this thy first bound, in a career so unworthy of you, else, a "long farewell” to all thy greatness.

The speech of Mr. Newton in reply, was one of great force and point – bold, frank and manly, telling the Democrats it was unworthy of a proud and high-minded people to take advantage of a schism in his party, to foist in their candidate, which they knew it would be impossible for them to succeed, but from the position, he occupied in regard to Texas – a measure which he supported, not because he was a Whig, not because be was a Democrat; but because he was a Southern man. It was a question upon which the South was about to be driven to the wall, and he went to the rescue. 'Twas a bold, high-minded and noble speech, carrying the conviction irresistibly to the mind, that though he may err, the error will never spring from the heart – carrying the conviction also, that the best interest of his constituents has been, and ever will be. his ruling star in the discharge of his representative duty. He may err, possibly has done so, in the opinion of many of his constituents – he is not infaillible. But where is the man who does not sometimes err? If he exist upon the face of the earth, would to Heaven I could be so fortunate as to set my eyes on him.

For one, I frankly confess, that although as a party man I wish to Heaven John Tyler had been at the bottom of the Red Sea and Texas upon the top of him, before we had ever heard of either of them, yet as a Southern man, with this Texas issue made for and in spite of us, I think Mr. Newton acted right, under existing circumstances; his course meets with my hearty approbation; and in this canvass he shall, God willing, receive my candid support. Judging from my own impressions, I believe Mr. Newton is greatly misunderstood in regard to his position on this vital question; and the main object of this communication is to submit to your consideration a synopsis of his speech on this subject, delivered on Monday last. I once thought him wrong, but now I honestly admit, with his explanation before me, I consider him a "good and faithful servant." – When you shall have read his remarks, brother Whigs, ask yourselves this question, in cool, calm and deliberate moment: "How would I have acted in similar circumstances?"

Observe – Mr. Newton did not raise this question; the Whig party did not originate it: and you will remember, we could not prevent its being lugged into the late Presidential election. We objected, demurred, implored that it might not be made a party question; that it might be considered and treated as a general or national question, upon which, at the proper time and in a proper way, every man of both the great parties could act as should seem to him right and just. Upon the mode and manner of admission some of our wiser heads have differed. About twelve months since Mr. Archer, our Whig Senator, in a speech in the Senate, opposed the annexation of Texas by treaty, as unconstitutional, and maintained that she could only be admitted by "Joint Resolutions." Mr. Archer was, and is now, in fact, our representative; and it is true, I believe, that he has since advocated the admission of Texas by treaty, and now condemns the mode by Joint Resolution, as unconstitutional. Well, be it so; I for one so not object; believing Mr. Archer to be an honorable man, and that he has changed his opinion upon proper investigation, I mean mature reflection – still it proves to my mind, that the admission of Texas by joint resolution is not so clearly and palpably unconstitutional that we should kick Mr. Newton over, because he happens to think as Mr. Archer once thought. Besides, Mr. Newton was and is certainly entitled to his opinion upon this subject. And after all, what has Mr. Newton done? Simply this – he settled the terms upon which Texas is to be admitted into the Union, that is the length and breadth it seems to me of his offending. And is it nothing to have this question settled upon terms, which every man of you must approve, I am sure, if Texas is to come? Hardly any man doubts, but the democratic party will have Texas, and if she comes in under these resolutions, we have her upon Whig terms – aye Newton's terms – as I think the subjoined synopsis of his speech must convince every one. For this, and this alone, so help me Heaven, I think Mr. Newton deserves the thanks, the approbation, the vote, of every Whig in his District. Well might every one of us, believe the admission of Texas by Joint Resolution, unconstitutional, and yet, honestly and consistently, I opinie, approve of Mr. Newton's vote; understand me if you please, Mr. Newton's views, of the condition of the question, as stated in his remarks, being indisputable, I say emphatically, I honestly think we could approve of his vote. What was that question? Not that Texas should be admitted or not admitted, -- but whether she should be annexed, upon terms satisfactory to the South or upon terms objectionable to the South. Can there be two opinions, brother Whigs, upon the subject? Mr. Newton believed Texas could be admitted constitutionally, by Joint Resolution. The question arises, shall Texas be admitted by Joint Resolution, mainly as a Slave holding State, or vice versa. The crisis is upon him, he must act and act energetically, not only to give his own vote, but to exert himself to obtain the votes of others, to decide the question in favor of the South. He came to the rescue, like a true blooded Virginian, and for one I thank him. – Recur to the question above, and I ask where is the Southern man in the name of Heaven, who would permit Texas to come into the Union mainly as a non Slave-holding State, when it was in his power to prevent it, without violating his conscience or his oath? I sincerely hope and believe, he does not reside in the County of King William – here a Whig is a Whig indeed, the arts and blandishments of the so-called Democracy, have lost their [. . .] influences, and we are now a band of brothers – to have seen the glowing, the animated countenances of the Whigs, as they listened to the noble and triumphant speech of the bold and gallant Newton, on Wednesday last, you would require no other assurance that we mean to march to the battle-field, "one and inseparable.” Yes, brother Whigs, we have our county candidate in the field, also as an earnest of what we mean to do in the county struggle; and, although we cannot even hope to elect Dr. Power, we man to give him a warm and cordial support – if for no other reason, (and there are hundreds) – because he a King William Whig!

Here is the synopsis of Mr. Newton's speech, delivered at King William Court House, on Monday, 24th March:

The whole Democratic party of the House (said Mr. Newton) was pledged to Texas, and it must and would have been brought by them, in some form, before the adjournment; but it could not be done by them, upon terms satisfactory to Mr. N.'s constituents of the South. The Democrats had been in caucus, repeatedly, upon the subject – their councils were divided on the subject of slavery, and the Southern portion of the party entirely dispaired of carrying the measure, with the line of the Missouri Compromise or any equivalent proposition. In this state of things, Mr. Rhett of South Carolina, and other Southern members, stated frankly, to Mr. Newton, the distraction of their party, and appealed to him as a representative of a slaveholding District, to aid them by his vote, and to endeavour to procure the co operation of other Southern Whig members, in support of the Southern, against the Northern, plan of annexation. Mr. Rhett assured Mr. N. that no more than 98 Democratic members could by any means, be procured for the Southern scheme. Mr. N. replied that, if that fact was ascertained with certainty, he had no doubt but that the co-operation of a sufficient number of Southern Whig members might be procured; but, to make certain, the House must be filled, and the fact ascertained in the most authentic manner! Three Southern Democrats took listsof the members, carefully polled the House, and reported the result to Mr. N. Mr. Rhett still maintained, that no more than 98 could be relied on – the other gentlemen thought that 100 might be got; and possibly one or two more, but certainly not enough to carry the Southern Scheme! It was then said to Mr. N., by those gentlemen, we cannot carry this measure without the aid of the Whigs, and if you will come to the rescue of the South on this vital question, you shall be permitted to shape the measure to suit yourselves. Many of the Whigs had never been opposed to the admission of Texas, and the 8 who voted for it, thought a crisis had now arrived which enabled them to carry out their own views and those of their constituents. The terms were arranged among them, and the resolution proposed, under their auspices, by Mr. Brown of Tennessee, and submitted, contemporaneously, in the House and Senate. The question came up in Committee of the Whole – all the plans proposed were severally rejected by a majority, ranging from 8 to 12. When Brown’s plan came up in order, 9 Whigs voted for it, carrying it by 109 to 99. – This was the test vote – the trial of strength between the North and South. One hundred Democrats only voted in the affirmative, and no force could have compelled another to vote for it, if his vote had been necessary to carry it. if nine Whigs had voted in the negative, the Southern plan would have lost by 100 to 108. But Texas would not have been defeated – the Democrats would have again rallied, and compromising on Benton’s Bill, or Oville Robinson’s New York scheme, carried the measure in a manner entirely unacceptable to the South.

In the House, on the final passage of the Resolutions, the vote in the affirmative, was 122. But no one believing that one over 109 voting in the Committee on the test question, could have been obtained if their votes had been necessary to carry the question. Their unwillingness to stand out against their party, when no practical effect would be the result, brought 13 of them to vote for it in the House. There were yet 29 recreants who were so bitterly opposed to Slavery, that they could not be induced to vote for the Resolution. Chiefly for the benefit of the “tender consciences” of these gentlemen, the Senate’s amendment was introduced, that was regarded as a nullity, a “[mare surplusage]” of the Southern wing, and by the Northerns, it was looked upon as leaving open the question of Slavery. The whole party was rallied in the House, on the amendment, with two exceptions, and perfect harmony restored, – though not one of the 29 recreants, although voting for the amendment, could be found to vote for the original resolutions, or for them as amended. The vote on the amendment was indeed but the political roll call of the Democracy, after their great battle on the slavery questions ans it was well known, that all their forces would be enrolled as the amendment was mainly designed for that object. Mr. Newton did not choose to answer such a call and therefore voted against the amendment, and not against the amended resolutions as so often falsely stated, but declared at the time in the House, that if the vote were in the resolutions as amended, he would vote for them, though he did not approve of the amendment. It was perfectly well known in the house, before the vote on the amendment was taken that nearly the whole Democratic party would unite on it, and that it would prevail, by a large majority, which the result proved, it having been carried by 152. Mr. Newton deemed it his duty to aid, in good faith, in carrying out the Southern plan, which he did to the last, and no considerations, that could have been addressed to him, would have induced him to abandon what he deemed the path of duty.

The question now being settled, Mr. Newton did not desire to raise an issue with his friends who differed with him on this question, but he deemed the explanation necessary to his own vindication. [LLS]

THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

The Baltimore American adds:

“"The United States and Great Britain. – The extracts which we published from some of the London journals received by the Great Western, relative to the annexation of Texas and Mr. Polk’s Inaugural Address, showed the deep interest excited in England by the political events on this side of the water. The language of other journals, besides those recently quoted, indicates a strong feeling of excitement.

The declaration in Mr. Polk’s Address that our title to the Oregon “is clear and unquestionable” seems to have caused especial irritation. The official character of the announcement intimates that Mr. Polk fully expects the British Government to yield – that her pretensions are considered frivolous and unfounded – not worthy even to be listened to. The Morning chronicle remarks that is was not prepared to find the English lion treated so very like a puppy dog! It adds that "what has been all along feared will take place – that Great Britain will be compelled to go to the extremity and expense of war merely for the sake of showing that she dare still do such a thing under grievous provocation."

The manner in which the movement of our Government upon Texas was carried to a conclusion has indicated pretty clearly to Great Britain that if she intends to maintain her claims to the Oregon she will be obliged to do it by arms and that speedily. Hence the annexation of Texas to the United States has a significance beyond its immediate and particular bearing. If they cry of Texas was found to be so available here for political purposes,
The London correspondent of the Boston Atlas, whose letter gives a full exposition of the state of public feeling in England on this subject, says: - "No news has been received from the United States for a long time that has claimed more serious attention, or has been considered so alarming to the interests of both England and the United States."

The Standard, an administration journal expresses the belief that war may grow out of Texas and Oregon questions, but rejoices that Great Britain will have time to prepare for it. After quoting numerous paragraphs of an exciting character, the Atlas correspondent says:

It is unnecessary to write further upon this subject; from the opinions which are here briefly given, it will be at once see that the Polk Address has created an intense excitement – even a war fever. In commercial circles in the city, and, indeed, amongst all classes in the metropolis, nothing else had been the topic of general conversation, but war with the United States. Yesterday the excitement was great, and today it had not abated. Tomorrow the weekly journals will appear, and their leading articles will of course be devoted to American affairs – their language will be bold, and it will have a tendency to continue the present excitement. On Monday next, in the House of Commons, the Texas question will be brought before Parliament, and a warm debate is anticipated upon the subject. The news, therefore, which the Royal Mail Steamer Caledonia will take to the United States, may be expected to prove of a most important character, as affecting deeply the great interests at stake between two of the most powerful nations of the world.

The language of the public journals, expressive and doubt of the state of popular feeling in England, is scarcely to be taken as portending the course of the Government. WE have no reason to suppose that the British Cabinet has been insincere in its frequent demonstrations for the preservation of peace between the two countries, nor is it probable that it has any wish to go to war with the United States at this time. But it must be granted that the alternative is now before the Government – the alternative of war this year or a year or two later – unless all British preconditions to the Oregon are given up. And it is this consideration which gives great interest to the annexion of Texas in Great Britain since the idea may present itself that if a collision must take place with the United States, the best time to meet it is now, when Mexico may be used as an ally, and when the pretext of resisting the progress of slavery will give a certain prestige which would be wanting in a quarrel about territorial lines in the Oregon.

When Mr. Polk too the responsibility of announcing officially, that the British claims to the Oregon were not to be regarded by this Government, on would think that prudence might have suggested to him the propriety of taking some measure to make good such an announcement. Congress had already adjourned when the inaugural made known this declaration – it had adjourned leaving our relations with Mexico involved in doubt and danger, yet without the least preparation for difficulties, and on the top of this confusion, the new President, before he had seated himself in the chair of office, threw another element of discord more pregnant with strife than all the rest together. And thus the country stands in a sort of stupid bewilderment, with a vague idea that some explosion is at hand, yet hardly conscious of any thing differently, and in a state to be surprised at nothing. A strange indifference is the common feeling. There is no confidence in the government – for it shows itself listless and [...]ed. The sentiment of patriotism – the throbbing pulsations of national life and energy – where shall one turn to find them? If war should come, then indeed the elements would be aroused, and the people, in spite of their [...]of a Government, would vindicate the national spirit and honor – but how much suffering would be the prelude to final victory!

The United States Gazette, whose information is always good, and judgment sound, thus speculates:

"WAR WITH MEXICO. – The news from Mexico, which we publish this morning, is of a character to arrest the attention of the people of the United States, and to lead them to inquire whether the nation has of late been, or is now, in the hands of men, who understand its genious and wants, and are able to administer its government for the good of the people. The answer to such an inquire must be, that our country needs a new policy, a new set of men, a new set of measures. Economy defence, in all that concerned public good, had been practiced, until we have nothing to present to our enemy, that would not excite the smile of any considerable power. Not a sea port in the Union is in a state of defence, not a “company” of soldiers could be mustered under a Unites States commander. Meantime, the public purse has been emptied into the pockets of favorites, and what should have gone to maintain the defences and honor of the nation, has been lavished upon unworthy partisans, who have cried economy, economy, whenever a ship was to be built, a fortification repaired, a harbor defended, or a company raised, while they have drawn like horse leeches the life blood of the Treasury.

War with Mexico is now likely. The danger is imminent. We mean what we say – the danger is imminent Western Congressmen, who are out of the way of risk, may bluster in their seats in Congress, and southern gentlemen may talk of chivalry, and nominate their Quattlebumps; but in a war, the middle and eastern States will have to sustain the cause of the nation, and suffer the losses that result from the contest.

We are told that Mexico will be passive in a war – that is the language of a Locofoco paper upon the news now before us – passive, because she has no ships. Cannot the same sources that supple vessels for the slave trade of South America, yield ships for the producers of Mexico?

Is it likely that the people of Europe, alive to all the advantages to be derived from a “right” to intercept the rich scattered commercial ships of the United States, will not hasten to the spoils? And will Mexico remain passive in a war which she will declare herself, and which, at small risk, may be made twice as profitable as her mines have ever been?

But the United States will declare, by act of Congress, that persons engaged in war upon the commerce of this country, and not natives of Mexico, shall be regarded as pirates, and treated as such, when taken in the act. That sounds very well – it looks well upon paper. But will France and England stand quietly by, and see their citizens strut up like fish, for accepting place in the Mexican service? England and France have both had too much to do with the quarrels of weak nations, to admit of such a course.

In a war with the United States; Mexico would be more active than any power we know of – active, we mean, against the commerce of our country; and no law which the Congress at Washington could pass, would materially interfere with the commissioning of privateers, for any persons who would accept them. We say nothing now of the swarms of picaroons which would infest the West India Islands, and sweep the Gulf of Mexico. People may sit down and smile at the idea of a war, but a war with any nation is an evil, which our government should avert, and which every many who has hope of honest gain, or relish for the enjoyment of what he has acquired, should earnestly deprecate.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNITED STATES AND ENGLAND – WAR OR PEACE!

We quote from the Globe of Monday an article on the subject of our relations with England in their new phase, which must be regarded as semi-official, and, as such, of much importance.

While the temper of the article is displayed in milder and less minatory language than is usual with that organ, its willingness to provoke the collision which it affects so much to undervalue, by taunting English sincerity and good faith, and by assailing her lust of conquest, as well as by stimulating the prejudices and exasperating the inherent suspicions of the American People towards Great Britain, as clearly as in previous and fiercer instances, indicate a wish for hostilities.

Entire and unshrinking firmness in the maintenance of all their just rights, at the hazard of all consequences, the American People expect from this and all other Administrations: But they don not expect of desire, we imagine, that their National dignity should be lowered by an official bullying and menacing tone of language, or the Government of a friendly Power insulted by the repeated disclaimer of belief in its declarations, and by the insinuation of charges against its good faith and pacific purposes, both in the teeth of those declarations and in the absence of all proof to invalidate them!

This was the taste of the Tylerian and Calhoun Dynasty and of the Gloke, until we find in this its article of Monday, which we are reviewing, rather less of gasconade and rather more of moderation.

But it is replete still with statements calculated, if not intended, to mislead, to exasperate bad feeling in both Countries, and to multiply the chances of War, an evil which every good citizen and man aught to reject until national honor imperiously demands it. Let us look at some of the statements:

1. The Globe says –

"ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES! – The President of the United States, in whose hands the Constitution reposes the treaty making power, having, in his inaugural address to his constituents, designated the course which he should pursue in the negotiations respecting Oregon, is met on the part of the British Government by a declaration in Parliament that they are prepared for hostilities. The pledge of the American President that the faith of treaties shall be preserved, is replied to by a menace of war. The nations, at the time of this debate, are in the security of peace; their relations in the northwestern wilderness are defined by treaties, which America at least declares must be sacredly observed: the negotiations between the countries for the adjustment of difficulties are not suspended; and in the midst of this state of the diplomatic intercourse, Great Britain attempts to throw the sword into the scale, and decide the balance by the weight of its arms."

Now what is the use of negotiations after Mr. Polk in his Inaugural, announces officially that the British claims to the Oregon were not to be regarded! The British Ministry can look no farther than Mr. Polk, and he says in advance, he tells them, when the negotiations are yet going on, that England has no claim, or, if any, that it will be disregarded, and that thus the negotiations are a mere farce and mockery! The respect due to the Chief Magistrate of the United States, could not permit England to place any other construction upon his official language than that she has placed, or allow the British Government to suppose that he was simply indulging the taste of some of his countrymen for gasconade! And viewing Mr. Polk’s declaration as substantially terminating pending negotiations, could Great Britain, for self respect, do less than resent that treatment so unusual and cavalier among Nations?

2. It is as the Globe says, “no new doctrine,” that the United States claim Oregon as their own: But, what is meant by Oregon? That is the question! Within certain boundaries, England puts in no claim to Oregon, and expressly conceded that of the United States by the treaty of Ghent. But North of a certain parallel of latitude there lies a vast region which is the true subject of dispute between the two countries, Russia also advancing a claim to a portion. The negotiations related to that and not to the Valley of the Columbia River: those negotiations which the President, as England has good right to conclude from his own official language, means either to break off or to disregard their result.

It seems to use that the Globe is uncandid and seeks to mislead public judgment in not discriminating between Oregon proper and Oregon unknown and unexplored, which is the subject of controversy between the two powers.

3. The charge of intending to "menace" the People of the U. States against the British Ministry by the debate held the other day, and the ridiculous proof brought to sustain it is really unworthy of the official. Sir Robert Peel spoke in such a strain, and Lord John Russell the leader of opposition spoke by concert with the Premier in such another strain! And the Steamer (no doubt the voluntary act of the Captain adopted for commercial purposes) the steamer is kept back a whole day to help Sir Robert and Lord John bully the U. States! This is really "prodigious" and shames Bobadil!

But we are compelled to stop. If war comes however wantonly and unnecessarily all will stand up to it who love their country, as the only mode of carving out an honorable peace: But we do hope that a fair chance will be allowed to cultivate still the friendly relations of the two countries.

TEXAS-MISSION TO ENGLAND.

We quote the following article from the New York News of Tuesday, and agree with that Texas print, in the opinion that, if it has guessed truly the object of the Texas Minister’s mission to England, (in [...] it to be ascertain if England will not outbid the U. States,) it is a shabby affair:

"TEXAN SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. Ashbel Smith, the Texan Secretary of State, arrived in this city yesterday, and proceeds on to Boston this morning, to embark on Thursday in the steamer for England. It is difficult to imagine any other than one object of such a post haste speed on the part of this functionary, on the way to London – namely to ascertain from England what terms they can get in the way of money for their debt, as the condition of refusing Annexation to the United States. If this is so, according to the general rumor, it is certainly a very indecorous and indecent proceeding, worthy perhaps of some [...] politicians about the Government of Texas, anxious mainly about scrip and place; but it is not one likely to find favor with the people of that country, whom all account concur in representing as enthusiastic in favor of their long cherished hope of coming into our Union. If such is the object of Mr. Ashbel Smith’s extraordinary [...] we have little faith, either in the idea that the English Government would like to venture so far as to irritate the people of the United States, by bribing Texas to defeat a favorite measure of our public policy; or that, if she should do it, the people of Texas would ever tolerate such a transaction."

hostile. The pledge of the American President that the faith of treaties shall be preserved, is replied to by a menace of war. The nations, at the time of this debate, are in the security of peace; their relations in the northwestern wilderness are defined by treaties, which America at least declares must be sacredly observed: the negotiations between the countries for the adjustment of difficulties are not suspended; and in the midst of this state of the diplomatic intercourse, Great Britain attempts to throw the sword into the scale, and decide the balance by the weight of its arms.

There is nothing in what has transpired to call for, or palliate, at this time, the excitement in the British Parliament. That America holds the country of the Oregon to be her own, is no new doctrine. She first discovered the Columbia at its mouth, and first discovered its source; Spain relinquished its claim to her; her citizens took possession of it; Great Britain itself, in the hour of returning peace, restored American jurisdiction on its bank; American statesmen have never breathed a doubt of the justice of our claim; successive administrations have asserted it; the people have confirmed it; the American Senate has passed upon it; the House of National Representatives has maintained it; and now, of a sudden, the British government assumes to be angry, seeks to insulate the new administration from Congress and from the people, and to overawe the President in the discharge of his constitutional powers, by a threat of resorting to war.

The theatrical preparations by which the menace was attended – the evidently concerted speeches – the distribution of parts between the rashness of Lord John Russell and the greater caution of the Premier – the keeping back of the steamer a day for the purpose of taking over the debate – all seem to show that the scene was designed as an experiment on the nerves of the administration. In this point of view it is ludicrous. The day had gone by when a menace of war on the part of England could away a negotiation with the United States.

But England cannot be serious in her menace. Her manufacturers must leave their mills idle, unless America supplies them with cotton. Her merchants know their ships must fall a prey to American privateers, that would not leave a sea unvisited. Her success, too, would be fruitless; for if she took Oregon as a wilderness, she would conquer but rocks and forests, and the privilege of garrisoning a solitude; and if she should attempt to form a colony there, the colonists, whosoever they come, will insist on governing themselves. Nor is this all. The oppressed [...] in England would not tolerate war with America. A war between Great Britain and the United States would be the signal of a strife throughout Christendom of the old aristocracies with the millions. Neither Sir Robert Peel, nor France, nor Russia, nor any of the monarchies or aristocracies of Europe, can wish to see that war begun. America does not wish it; for, having faith in the principles of freedom, she has never been a propagandist, but is willing to await the quiet influence of truth, and the amelioration of society by the gradual and certain progress of civilization.

If the menace is designed to produce an effect on the re annexation of Texas, by intimidating its people, the duty of American government is too obvious to be mistaken. Texas must be more and more earnestly welcomed to a participation in our confederacy; and her citizens must be made to feel that they are invited on terms the most liberal, not so much to common danger as to the boundless benefits that are to spring perennially from union.

Or is the menace of Great Britain seriously intended? – The United States of America, under the blessed influence of democratic institutions, are rapidly developing their resources, and exciting the envy of powers whose laws and constitution are less favorable to freedom. Would Great Britain seek, by force of arms, to arrest that progress which is the admiration of the world, ought to be a source of delight to every friend to his race? The attempt would prove a vain one. The expansive power of popular freedom cannot be restrained. The tides of the Pacific might as well be arrested, as the progress of American principles beyond the mountains. Nothing can stay their advance but the waters of the great ocean. If England is serious in her menaces, we are well warranted in believing that the administration will assert, and inflexibly maintain, the position assumed by the President in his inaugural address to his constituents.

If England looks to war as one of the means of attaining the gratification of her ambition, how admirable is the contrast afforded by America! Our policy is peace. We seek no government over men but through their free consent. The genius of our institutions forbids conquests – If provinces were to be reduced, our system provides no method of governing the unwilling. Thus the contrast between America and England becomes here, as everywhere, a contrast of principles. The menace of arms on the one side is met by the irresistible elements of peaceful progress on the other.

It is common to say that England is well prepared for war, and that America is not. It is no doubt true that the immediately disposable naval and military force of Great Britain is far greater than our own. But this by no means proves relative weakness. England has gained her greatness by scattered conquests in every party of the world, and holds it by the power of arms: America is compact; its territory all contiguous; its greatness the result of a system, which sprang from the free choice of the people, and which is maintained by the consent. It has no acquisitions to make by arms, and none to defend by arms. Her States are bound together by their own choice. She has no motive to injure others; she has no desire to ravage the coast of England, or burn its commercial towns, or deface its [...], or with semi-barbarous passion, destroy its public buildings. Governing herself by free consent, and having no motive to restrain, or limit, or impair, the prosperity of other nations, she has no need of a vast standing army, or of a navy like that of England. But when the question comes as to which has the most considerable disposable force to occupy the country of the Oregon, we think the Great West must be summoned to connect. The people of the Mississippi valley must make answer. The bands of emigrants bearing the axe and rifle, the men trained in republican feeling, and made still more impatient of authority by their [...] on the frontier, - these form the strength of America. They are indomitable in spirit, and unapproachable by their distance. Against them the fleets and armies of England are powerless. Let Sir Robert Peel attempt to plant himself in the gaps of the Rocky mountains, and intercept them in the passes. He might as well attempt to stop the Columbia itself. The combined Powers of all Europe would tail in an attempt to set bounds to their progress. That progress is to be self-circumscribed by the respect for right and the sacred regard of America for the inviolability of treaties.

The Administration may, then, safely assume that England cannot permanently occupy any part of the American wilderness, but by the consent of America itself. If England chooses to interrupt negotiations, the crisis must be met; if negotiations continue, the Administration can know but one rule—“TO DEMAND NOTHING BUT WHAT IS RIGHT, AND TO SUBMIT TO NOTHING THAT IS WRONG!” Let the people support the President with union, and a sentiment of nationality, and no foreign Power will adventure an aggression.

"RE-ANNEXATION?"

The following broadly satirical article from the London Punch. We ask those who are so clamorous for "immediate annexation" to read and ponder upon it, and then tell us candidly whether there is not more in it than "meets the eye." Whether it does not comport with the facts in relation to this Texas movement—a movement conceived in political corruption, prosecuted for gain, and consummated by an outrage of the Constitution. It is worthy also of the perusal of those Whigs, who, knowing that this Texas plot has succeeded in blasting the hopes of the patriot by robbing our country of the services of one of the greatest Statesmen the world ever saw, still give their countenance to the advocates of Annexation by Joint Resolution.

"John Polk was put to the bar changed with robbing the Mexican minister of a favorite dog, named Texas. The circumstances of the case Don Bernardo Murphy stated to be simply these:—

Some months since, John Polk sold his Excellency the dog, (a very large animal, spotted black and white, that used to run under his carriage,) subsequently a fellow, by the name of Houston, a countryman of Polk’s, who had been in his Excellency’s service, absconded with the dog, and he had that day seen it at Greenwich Fair, whither he had gone in company with Chevalier Bunsen. The animal was tied to a wan, belonging to the prisoner, and from which he was [...] to the company at the fair.

Policeman, X.21 said—Please your Worship, there has been more picking of pockets around that ere psalm-singing wan, than in any part of the fair.

Mr. Aberdeen. — Silence, Policeman. What has that to do with the complaint?

The Mexican Minister continued, in a very agitated manner, "I instantly recognized my dog, and gave the scoundrel yonder in charge to a policeman."

"Scoundrel!" the prisoner cried, (a very sanctimonious looking fellow, who held the dog in his arms) — "Am I in a Christian land, to hear myself called by such names? Are we men? Are we brethren? Have we blessings and privileges, or have we not? I come of a country the most enlightened, the most religious, the most freest, honestest, punctuallest, on this airth, I do."

Mr. Aberdeen (with a profound bow.) You are an American, I suppose?

Polk. — I thank a gracious mussay I am! I can appeal to every thing that is holy, and, laying my hand on my heart, declare I am an honest man. I acorn the accusation that I stole the complainant’s dog. The dog is my dog—mine by the laws of heaven, airth, right, mature, and possession.

Don Bernardo Murphy, very much agitated, here cried out—How yours? I can swear to the animal. I bought him of you.

Polk — You did. It’s as true as I’m a free-born man.

Don Bernardo — A man who has an old servant of yours comes into my service and steals the dog.

Polk — A blesseder truth you never told.

Don Bernardo — And I find the animal now again in your possession.

Polk (cuddling the dog.) — Yes, my old dog – yes, my old Texas, it did like to come back to its old master, it did!

Don Bernardo (in a fury) — I ask your worship isn’t this too monstrous?

Mr. Aberdeen. — Your Excellency will permit me to observe that we have not yet heard of Mr. Polk’s defence.
- In a British court justice must be shown, and no favour.

Polk. – I scorn a defence. The dog returned to me by alor of nature. If I sold the dog, and by the irresistible attraction of cohesion, and the eternal order of things, he comes back to me – am I to blame? It’s monstrous, heinous, regular blasphemy to say so.

Mr. Aberdeen appeared deeply struck by the latter observation.

Polk (continued) – I didn’t steal the animal. Steal! – Is a man of my character to be called a thief? I re-annexed him – that’s all. Besides, what jurisdiction has there here court? What authority has any court on airth in a question purely American? My bargain with Don Bernardo Murphy took place our of this country – the dog came back to me thousands of miles away herefrom.

Mr. Aberdeen. – In that case, I really must dismiss the complaint. Allow me to state my opinion, Mr. Polk, that the dog is yours; I have no business to inquire into questions of annexation as you call it, or of robbery as his Excellency here (very rudely, I must think,) entitles your bargain. I entreat rather that gentlemen so respectable should live together in harmony; and – and, I wish you both a very good morning.

Mr. Polk then left the office whistling to his dog, and making signs of contempt at Don Bernardo Murphy, who slunk away in a cab. He had not been gone an hour when Policeman X 21 came into the office and said, "Please your Worship, the Yankee annexed your Worship’s Canadian walking-stick in the passage."

Mr. Aberdeen [sternly] – Mind your own business, fellow. Mr. Polk is perfectly welcome to that stick.

Presently another member of the force [O’Ragan by name] entered and swore the incorrigible Polk had stolen his beaver had.

Mr. Aberdeen [good humoredly.] – Well, well, I dare say the hat wasn’t worth twopence halfpenny: and it’s better to lose it than to squabble about it at law.

O’Ragan left the court grumbling, and said it wasn’t so in Temple’s time.

UNTITLED.

If the paragraphs in the Mexican Diarie [government journal] which we referred to yesterday, intimating that certain "warlike governments" were on foot, not predent to disclose, but the successful issue of which was speedily expected to transpire, have any significancy at all – are not mere gammon for amusement and edification of the belligerent spirit rampant in Mexico – they must forbo de either reprisals on American citizens resident in Mexico, after the fashion suggested by the Courrier des Etats Unis, or a demonstration to be attempted on some exposed quarter of Texas. If the former, of course Mexico will have it, for the time being, all her own way; but she will be guilty of an unprecedented and unwarranted outrage on private individuals, which will call for and bring upon her summary and signal retribution from the government. If it is against Texas that a movement is proposed to be made, the Mexican arms will not probably achieve so complete a triumph as in the other case; but they will still be committing an offence against the United States, that will call, not perhaps for reprisals, but certainly for resistance. The United States have assumed towards Texas a position that will not permit an attack to me made on her from any quarter, without regarding it as an attempt on their territories absolutely in possession, and more especially if the attack were made, as in the present instance would be the case, in consequence of measures which this country had taken. We could not of course, first provoke an assault against Texas and then leave her to battle it out herself. Moreover, good policy as well as good faith would require us to protect her.

We are inclined to the opinion, however, that the Mexican journalist, in his mysterious giving out, though he chooses to employ the phraseology of war, is rather foreshadowing some great feat which he expects to be accomplished in the diplomatic way, than any actual demonstration of force. We come to this conclusion the more readily from noticing the alacrity of movement continued to be displayed by Her Britanic Majesty’s naval express between Galveston and Vera Cruz. It is impossible that those dispatches are coming to and fro without some object; and we cannot imagine any sufficient object, unless the Mexican Government, through the intervention of the British Minister, is making final a final effort to forestall the action of the United States, by negotiations with Texas; and, of course, to such a purpose, any warlike movements against either Texas or this country would be fatal. We take it, therefore, what it was with an account of the successful result of some trick of diplomacy that the DIARIE hoped to electrify its readers, rather than with any remarkable achievement of Mexican valor. In either case, however, the course of this country is plain. Whether the assault on Texas, during our present relations with her, be by predatory bands of Mexicans, or by the diplomatic chance of Great Britain, in either case, good faith, second policy, self respect and self preservation, would all require the prompt intervention of the United States. In either case, indeed, though Texas were made the field, the United States would be the real object of the attack. – N. O. Com. Bulletin. [MSH]

A rumour is in circulation, that it is the intention of the Administration to send a special Embassador to England to negotiate the Oregon difficulty. The "U.S. Journal," the organ of one wing of the Democracy, strongly urges the appointment of Mr. Calhoun, pledging its "word for it, that he would not refuse to serve his country at the hour of her need."

But the New York papers have rumour of the probably appointment of a very different personage – ex. President Van Buren. This latter report, on every account, we take to be the most more probable one.

We copy from the N.Y. Commercial:

"A BIG RUMOR. – It has been whispered in Wall street this (Wednesday) morning and yesterday, that the result of the President’s deliberations with his Cabinet, on the Oregon question was a determination to follow the example of the British Government on the Maine boundary affair, and send a special Minister to London. Even the Minister has been named – Mr. Van Buren – and we have heard also, in this connexion, the name of another distinguished leader in the Democratic party. We have not been able to trace the rumor to any authentic source, and it is very possible that I has no other foundation than the sources [...] which are always generated in the preeinetos of political gossip, when the [...] of men are strongly fastened upon any public questions of importance.

There are some considerations, indeed, which bear against it – foremost among which may be mentioned the belief prevalent among all discreet, judicious, and well-informed men, that there is no probability of war, as a result of the Oregon dispute – that the question, in fact, is not one very difficult to adjust by the ordinary means of negotiation. As we have said before, there is a vast deal of foolish and ill-considered talk afloat on this subject, as there was in reference to the Maine boundary, which will also be remembered hereafter as talk, and nothing more.

But, on the other hand, there are some considerations which have a bearing the other way. Mr. Polk may justifiable desire to gain for his administration the renown of bringing this vexed question a settlement – although he may not care or wish to have, if the only glory of his four years in power, as the adjustment of the Maine boundary was of Mr. Tyler’s. It would not be ungraceful, either, to reciprocate the compliment paid to the Union by the British Government in making the preffer of a special mission; and we can imagine a variety of reasons which might influence the President to make a tender of the honorable task to Mr. Van Buren.

For instance the selection of an ex-President would be though very complimentary in England – of a man who had filled the highest office knows in our political system, who is looked upon by the mass of the English people as a sort of retired King. Moreover, Mr. Van Buren was personally very popular among the English aristocracy, and especially among the Conservatives, who were in power when he was there, as they are now; and his position of ex-President may be supposed to place him beyond the ordinary influences of party, and entitle him to act and be considered as the representative of the whole country.

Whether he would accept such a mission may be doubted: but that doubt would not probably have much influence toward withholding the offer of it by Mr. Polk. On the whole, therefore, we are of the opinion that much stranger things have happened than the ultimate verification of the rumor.

Touching the other distinguished gentleman whose name has been mentioned, we presume that there are insuperable difficulties in the way of his present appointment to such a mission; but those difficulties may cease to exist before the times comes when it would be necessary to consummate the arrangement."

"YOUNG AMERICA!"

The Washington "U.S. Journal", edited by Messrs. Dow & Fisk, which says that no political journal was ever commenced under more favorable circumstances, and that in six months it will have the largest circulation of any paper in this country, manifests a spirit, which threatens to disturb the calm which Old Huckerdom fancies is to brood for year over parties in this Republic. To possess our readers of the temper of this party, which promises to
THE GREAT QUESTION OF THE DAY

The new organ of the Administration comes freighted with dissertations on the vexed and momentous question, which has arisen between this country and England, touching the Oregon Territory. The leading article, evidently not from the pen of the editor, but, in all probability, from the State Department, breathes a better spirit, than has been wont to animate the editorials in the same paper on our Foreign Relations. The most important feature in it, is the assertion that Mr. Polk’s declaration that “the claim of the United States to Oregon is unquestionable,” does not close the door to negotiation, as interpreted, and very naturally, by the members of the British Parliament, and was not so designed. Such a declaration, it is argued, is mere brutum fulmn, coming from an American President, who holds not in his hands the power of peace or war; but the case would be very different, if the same assertion were made by the British sovereign, who can, without the intervention of another branch of the Government, declare and wage war.

The “Union” says:

A British sovereign possessed himself ample powers to protect his subjects in such a case, without reference to another branch of the government, much less to the people. He can terminate the existing convention with regard to Oregon, by a letter from his foreign office to his minister at Washington; and can cause the country to be occupied, and forts to be erected in it, by another letter from his admiralty to the commander of his naval forces in the Pacific, or from his colonial secretary to his governor general in Canada. He has therefore no need, and certainly no desire, to introduce the subject in a message to Parliament; and when legislative action becomes necessary, his ministers are in both Houses to make the necessary arrangements and procure the requisite number of votes in their own way. A President of the United States is in a different position; he can take none of these steps until authorized to do so by Congress, which is itself dependent upon the popular voice. His assertion “that the claim of the United States to Oregon is unquestionable,” means only that he will exert his influence in maintaining and establishing it. From a British sovereign, the same assertion would announce to the world his determination to employ his power for the benefit of his kingdom. It demands the immediate annexation of Texas at any and every hazard. It will plant its right foot upon the northern verge of Oregon, and its left upon the Atlantic crag, and waving the stars and stripes in the face of the once proud Mistress of the Ocean, bid her, if she dare, "Cry havoc, And let slip the dogs of war.”

Already the mountains and vallies, the towns and cities of this great nation, have caught the glad tidings from every breeze. The depressed and the rejected have been called from exile. The dry bones of the valley have been breathed upon as with fire, and the old skeleton’s have gone forth clothed in beauty of youth, and filled with the spirit of manhood. It is destined to expose false theories and extend the principles of truth and virtue. It will change the moral condition of man and the physical aspect of things. God save Young America.

their sense of it. He does so openly; and if he enlightens other parties as to his views, they have no right to complain of it. Offensive language is of course not to be employed by a public functionary on any occasion; but the President may assert what he conceives to be the right if his nation in terms of strength proportioned to the importance of the subject and the profundity of his conviction.

The President of the United States emanates from the bosom of the people. He is their trustee. He has no hereditary pretensions to the seat which he occupies. He has no powers which the constitution does not confer upon him. He must administer those powers, not for this own benefit, nor his own honor, but for the good of his country, to which he is responsible. It becomes his duty therefore, at all times, whilst communicating with the people themselves, in his inaugural address, or in his messages to their representatives in Congress, to speak in frank, clear language, in relation to the common rights and interests of a free people. Whilst he takes care, in performing this duty, to give no unnecessary offence to foreign States, he is bound to speak, plainly, and to assert, in the clearest and strongest terms, the rights of his nation. In his diplomatic intercourse with foreign nations, he will seek to guide his course by his conceptions of the rights of his country, and to carry out, as far as possible, the views which he has formed. It depends upon his own discretion to decide what course he shall pursue in the conduct of foreign negotiation. It will remain for Great Britain to decide how far she will assume the responsibility of defeating a wise and amicable negotiation, by making demands which are extrava ggant in themselves, and well calculated to prevent a most desirable adjustment of our differences.

It is also a problem worthy of Sir Ro. Peel’s and Lord Aberdeen’s consideration, whether they, who profess to object to Mr. Polk’s declarations to his countrymen in his inaugural address, should, in their places in Parliament, adopt a style of speaking which is equally exclusive, and strongly marked with a “blustering” spirit of intimidation. In other words, whether it is respectful to the Government of the United States for Sir Robert Peel to declare, in the House of Commons, “That we consider we have rights in respect of the territory of Oregon which are clear and unquestionable; that we trust still to effect an amicable adjustment of these claims; that we desire to effect that adjustment; but, having exhausted every effort to effect that arrangement, if our rights are invaded, we are resolved, and are prepared to maintain them.”

And it well becomes Lord Aberdeen to consider whether he can fairly reconcile his criticism on our President’s language with the spirit of his own declaration in the House of Lords: “Should it be otherwise, I can only say that we possess rights which, in our opinion, are clear and unquestionable; and, by the blessing of God, and with your support, those rights we are fully prepared to maintain.”

Mr. Polk has thrown out no threat. He asserts the rights of his own country without any blustering or bravado. We leave it to an impartial world to decide which conduct best becomes the executive agents of a great country.

In conclusion, we must repeat our opinion that this debate in Parliament is to be regarded only as the result of a pre-arranged attempt by Lord Palmerston and his friends to embarrass the ministry. Lord Aberdeen doubtless anticipated it, and being uncertain how it might end, he retained the steamer one day, in order that he might fashion his instructions to Mr. Pakenham according to circumstances. A close examination of the principal London newspapers, we moreover repeat, leads us to the belief that very little real excitement was produced in the House of Commons, (among the lords non is ever expected;) and that the whole matter has been, are this, dropped for the season. At the same time, however, it would be unwise to suppose the existence of anything like apathy on the part of a government so watchful and energetic as that of Great Britain; of that silence in London is incompatible with activity in Canada and on the north Pacific.”

It is in our view of very little consequence whether the distinction here sought to be drawn between the executives of the two countries, be well founded or not. The important matter is the concession, that Mr. Polk’s blustering speech from the Throne was not intended to arrest the progress of the negotiation. We have no idea that War could be the result of such a question between two countries so strongly allied by blood and by interest, unless by the most bungling diplomacy. We know the vast numbers, which war per se enlists at all times and in all countries. – All who are connected with the army and navy are prima facie its advocates – because it opens the grand road to promotion; and all those, who are as badly off as they can be, and cannot be worsted – a mighty host in every densely populated country – are the natural supporters of war, convulsion and change. But in spite of this great phalanx in both countries, eager for the conflict, we cannot doubt, that the cause of humanity, civilization and liberty – so intimately dependant on Britain and this Republic, will triumph, and the great curse of war will be postponed to a day far distant!

Our belief, that the braggart tone of Mr. Polk had been assumed to subserve the ends of the Demagogue and to impress his Democratic supporters with the idea that he is a fire-eater, is strengthened by the tone of other articles in the Executive organ. One of them, the authorship of which cannot be mistaken by any one who ever heard the original remark touching the incapacity of the Bourbons for learning of forgetting anything, or the not less characteristic one in regard to the number of swallows which it takes to make a summer, proves that the design of the Administration is to agitate the Oregon question, just as the Texas question was agitated, for the purpose of playing upon the popular popularity, and profiting by the passion for territorial aggrandizement, which pervades the entire Anglo-Saxon race. – War is not the object of these interested patriots – but party – party capital and the spoils – and to retain these they would not scruple to sport with the highest interests of the Republic and subject it to the direct calamities which can afflict nations.

We subjoin the article from the “Union” – which by substituting Texas for Oregon, may be found in the Richmond Enquirer of last year:
A CAUTION TO THE WHIG PARTY.

We appeal to the whigs, by their regard to their own party interests, and by the still higher motives of country, not to convert this rising question of Oregon into a party measure. They must see now – or, like the Bourbons, "they learn nothing and forget nothing" – that the unfortunate blunder of Mr. Clay and his friends about Texas has contributed more to their defeat, than any error of his whole life. Will they remain blind in spite of experience? or will they again attempt to make party capital out of a miserable opposition to the true interests of their country? They were shipwrecked on the question of Texas. Will they expose themselves to similar destruction on the great measure of Oregon? If they commit a second egregious blunder of this description, they would be better fitted to fill a cell in bedlam, than the executive chair of this great republic.

But if we had the pleasure of expressing our sentiments freely to Mr. Pakenham, we would advise him not to mistake every idle expression of a Whig journal for even the voice of the Whig party, much less for the voice of the nation. It is not every swallow that makes the summer. We make this suggestion in consequence of the idle clamor of a few of the Whig presses, such as the following from the "Portland Advertiser:"

"Whatever may come out of other questions, there will be no war about Oregon. Mr. Polk will not fight for Oregon. He has no idea of any such thing. He could not be kicked into a war with England, about Oregon, or any other issue now between us. What he said in his inaugural was mere clap trap. It is upon the inferior level of a common partisan letter, such as Mr. Polk wrote in April last about Texas. 'Let Texas be re-annexed,' 'Oregon is ours' – these are the phrases, not of a Statesman, impelled by a public necessity to raise critical and vital issues, but of a mere partisan leader, who is flush of his talk, but will take good care to keep the peace. How can it be supposed that the Polk party going to war for Oregon, when the Polk majority of the Legislature of Maine, under the auspices of Mr. Ebenezer Otis and Mr. Elbridge Gerry, undertake to pass and have passed very warlike resolutions about Oregon, while, by their own showing, they are totally ignorant of the latitude of the American claim?"

Such was the language which was employed in 1811 by the federal party. They then said that Mr. Madison "could not be kicked into a war," and England was misled and encouraged to continue her aggressions upon our commerce and our seamen. And what was the result? That Mr. Madison, amiable as he was in all his relations, and as great a "friend of peace" as the Indian Logan himself, was impelled by the wrongs of his country into a recommendation of war. We are sure we need not remind the British Minister of the results of that war. The whole transaction is written in lines of glory for our country. We will not say in what manner it terminated for the British arms. The same blunder at the present time, will terminate in the same results.

The "Portland Advertiser" is more ignorant of Mr. Polk's disposition than the federalists of 1811 were unacquainted with Mr. Madison's character. Mr. Polk, as a wise statesman ought to be, is "the friend of peace" but still more the friend of the rights and honor of his country. The republican party sympathize with his sentiments, and it is to be hoped the great body of the whigs will see their true interest in the same spirit. The President is, withal, a firm man. He was called the "Little Hickory" during the late campaign; and he deserves the distinction, for he has the spirit of "Old Hickory" in him. He will never sacrifice the honor of his country to any idle apprehensions of war or, we beg leave to say, the still more idle declarations of the statesmen of England, in the midst of the imperial Parliament! Let not, then, the peace of two great people like those of England and the United States, be disturbed by any factions declarations of any of the Whigs present."

MINISTER TO ENGLAND

It is announced in the Washington Union, that the Mission to England had been tendered to Mr. Pickens of S. C.

The same paper discredits the report of Mr. Van Buren's appointment, as a Special Ambassador.

F. H. ELMORE

We learn (says the Columbia Chronicle) that Col. Elmore has declined the appointment of Minister to England, tendered him by President Polk. In these selfish days, when corruption and intrigue are restored for the purpose of obtaining place and power – and by those too who consider themselves the magistrates of the land – it is quite refreshing to meet one man who is unambitious enough to decline office and employment. – [Charleston Courier].

DEVELOPMENTAL DEMONSTRATIONS

The Philadelphia papers teem with accounts of a meeting of meetings held in that city last week, to adopt resolutions in favor of warlike measures in support of our claim to the Oregon Territory. It appears that the meeting was disturbed by factions, and by rival competitors for notoriety and effective favor, and after much hubbub, and sundry fist-fights, it was resolved into two separate meetings, with separate officers – each of which, amidst tumult and confusion, adopted resolutions strongly asserting our rights to the Oregon Territory, and very valiantly defying the British lion. That the reader may be able the better to decide how much weight should be attached to such popular demonstrations in favor of war, we subjoin sketches of the proceedings of the meeting from both Whig and Democratic papers.

We are not at all surprised at the warlike outgivings of the fierce Democracies. “The cankers of a calm world and a long peace,” that now so greatly abound in all our large cities, and in a manner hang upon the skies of the Locofoco party every where where are, as a matter of course, the advocates of confusion, change and revolution. They cannot be worsted: They bear not the burnt of battle, and supply not the sinews of war. They are therefore the willing and eager aiders and abettors in all measure and systems of policy which tend to unsettle the existing order of things and produce convulsions. In this they but exhibit the same spirit, which has ever animated men similarly situated. They envy the good, and abhor all who, by a life of industry and virtue, have amassed fortunes, and obeyed the Scriptural injunction of providing for their households. Like their predecessors of the Jacobin Club in France, they crave change, and they are indifferent about the means of gratifying their wishes. Indeed, we have witnessed in American Locofocoism, [in a form to be sure somewhat modified by circumstances,] the same spirit of restlessness and of envy at the ascendency of superior merit, and the same fell purpose of leveling all above them, which characterized the largest French liberty party during the “reign of Terror.” In Paris, it was accounted monstrous and intolerable that one set of men should fare sumptuously every day, while the patriots of the Fauxbourg St. Antoine were perishing of hunger. The rich were consequently condemned to the guillotine, and their property disturbed among the “virtuous poor”! In New York, we have seen flour stores mobbed, on the same high and holy principle of justice and equality, and their contents scattered among the suffering patriots of the “Five Points”! In Paris, to wear fresh linens or ride in a carriage was tantamount to a confession of aristocracy and incivility, and consigned the unfortunate man guilty of it to a prison, where he was speedily septembrised. Here, a like indiscretion and violation of the cardinal principles of Locofoco cleanliness and equality, incurs an equal odium in the forum of Locofoco public opinion; and, time and opportunity concurring, would subject the delinquent to a like penalty. It is recorded, that the “largest liberty” men in Paris waited impatiently, without food or refreshment of any kind, from sunrise to sunset, to see the venerable Marquis de Favas led to execution. He was the first noble who was brought to the guillotine, and while his death established their great principle of equality in all things – in life and in death – it soothed their vanity and appeased their envy to see one of illustrious birth reduced to the same ignominious punishment which was accorded to the vilest malefactor; and they accompanied him to the scaffold with wild howlings and shouts of joy. The same species of savage exultation. Unrivalled excellence – the greatest and most meritorious man of the age had been humbled! Their self-love was thereby saved from a wound – their envy and malice, and hatred of everything great, was gratified and soothed!

As we are not surprised, neither do we regret to see these disorganizing demonstrations by the Democrats of Philadelphia. They are premature, and they will recoil upon the heads of those who have conceived them: They will tend to excite a timely apprehension in the bosom of all conservatives in the Union, under whatever party designation they may be found; and lead them to band together to preserve order and public liberty. The Destructive and levelers as yet constitute but a small portion of our population. A large portion of the Democratic party are essentially conservative – i.e. they are content with the regulated freedom which the patriots of the Revolution achieved for us, and are only desirous of preserving, in their purity, the institutions which those great men bequeathed us! All who are of this way of thinking will take the alarm at the leveling, disorganizing, and destructive projects which American Jacobinism is attempting to introduce into this country, and they, as wise men and patriots, will co-operate with those who think with them, and will rally cordially to the support of the institutions derived from our revolutionary fathers. In this way, and by this means, conservatism and destructiveness will become the test and the dividing lines of party.

But, to the warlike demonstrations, and the grave deliberation, which characterized them:

From the Philadelphia Post.

THE "WAR MEETING!"

THE BATTLE FOUGHT! – VICTORY WON!! – PEACE RESTORED!!

Who will now dare to dispute the claim of the U.S. to Oregon, Texas, or indeed, (if we may judge from the boasts of the speakers at the meeting yesterday afternoon,) to the whole of this continent, should the Administration demand it? But our present object is not to interrogate – it is to terrify the Britons and Mexicans by recording the proceedings of the meeting alluded to, and in doing so, we shall speak only of what was really done and said. Would that our memory would enable us to tell the whole truth on this occasion; but it will not, and we are of opinion that those even who conducted the meeting, will find it impossible to tell half that was done.

Most of our readers are probably aware that for several days a call for a "war meeting" (as it may be denominated,) had appeared in all the locofoco papers of this city: but doubtless very few have heard that at a preliminary gathering on Wednesday evening, after a row characteristic of the "harmonious democracy," the old Hunkers retired and the "Young Democracy" elected officers for the meeting to be held on the following (yesterday) afternoon, in Independence Square. The "Hon. Thomas M'Cully" was to be chairman. The old Hunkers who retired, were in favor of placing in the chair the Hon. Charles Jared Ingersoll.

Well at four o'clock, P.M., on the 1st day of May, A.D. 1845, the drizzling rain with which our city was visited at that hour did not prevent several hundreds of both factions of the "unterrified Democracy" from wending their way to Independence Square, for the purpose of veining with each other in their manifestations of patriotism, and of hurling defiance at Great Britain.

Many Whigs were present to enjoy the anticipated sport. At the appointed hour a rush was made for the stand, which was soon taken possession of by the representatives of both the "Old Hunkers" and the "Young Democracy" – the former led on by the valiant Col. Lee, and the latter by Benjamin H. Brewster, Esq., Attorney at Law, etc, etc. Immediately, amid huzzas, hisses, and groans, some sort of a motion was made by somebody; but whether or not it was carried, we were unable to decide! Soon some person on the stand moved Benjamin H. Brewster, Esq., off of it! – He, however, regained his position [...] and commenced talking, (at least so we inferred from the movement of his lips and hands, for the confusion prevented us from hearing him.) Col. Lee, who had been for some time jostled about by the crowd on the stand while he was attempting to make his voice heard, now mounted a chair or bench and shouted louder than before – the gamblers and bullied on the stand, who considered it their duty to back their respective friends swore outrageously – Mr. Brewer, assisted by Mr. M'Cully, attempted to read some resolutions, or something else, and at last Col. Lee was very suddenly removed from the stand to the ground! He, also soon regained his position, and a disgraceful conflict ensued, [which to the credit of the audience be it said, was confined exclusively to those on the stand.]

After this scene, Judge Barton made his appearance, but the belligerents would not be quieted. Their voices were "still for war!" Fight they must – if for nothing else than to show the subjects of Queen Victoria if any of them were present, how they would be treated should the British Government persist in asserting her claims to Oregon – and fight they did! The only serious injury observable after the battle was the destruction of the steps and other conveniences attached to the rostrum.

At about five o'clock, peace was partially restored by the division of the audience – the old Hunkers taking a position west of the rostrum, and the young Democracy, east. A meeting of those on the west side was then organized – resolutions were adopted, and addresses were delivered by Col. Page, Col. Lee, Wm. D. Kelly, Esq., and another individual whom very few seemed to know or care anything else.

All the speeches were made and resolutions adopted amidst alternate cheers, hisses, and groans and therefore we were not able to hear much that was said. What we did hear, however, was sufficient to convince us that although the speakers – including the two Colonels – were bravely defying Great Britain to maintain vi et armis her asserted rights, they would prefer an office under the present Administration to a commission in the Army, should a war ensue. The meeting finally adjourned – those on the stand jumped off, and all departed, leaving the owner of the stand to decide the question, which he considered most important, who broke the steps?

To be serious, this was the most disgraceful scene we ever witness in this city. We doubt whether the walls of Tammany Hall could, were they possessed of vocal power, speak of transactions so disgusting and outrageous as were witness by un in Independence Square yesterday afternoon. We looked with indifference upon the quarrel, because it was a family affair altogether, and it was of little consequence to us which faction should triumph; but aside from politics, we must regret that any thing of the kind should have occurred in the city of "Brotherly Love," and in the vicinity of old Independence Hall. However, we are certain that those who are acquainted with the facts, will exonerate the respectable of all parties, by whom the conduct of those who call and conducted the meeting, was condemned. Should England accept the invitation which some of the valiant speakers yesterday seemed disposed to tender her, they would certainly run away! They can talk of war, but they have no idea of risking their precious lives by a conflict in which bullets and bayonets must be introduced!

We said in the outset that we should not attempt to tell the whole truth. Our memory will not serve us, and if it would, we have not space for all the details. One of the speakers took occasion to say, we believe, that the spectacle which had been presented to the audience was humiliating – he felt it to be so – and we think we have said enough to convince our readers that it must be so to all order loving citizens.

Some of the speakers boasted yesterday that they belonged to the truly Democratic, patriotic war party, and were ready at a moment's warning, to march to the battle field and meet the troops of Great Britain face to face. And who, distant reader, do you suppose these very gentlemen wished to preside over their meeting? For whom did they fight so valiantly yesterday? Why, Charles Jared Ingersoll, the man who says he would have been a tory had he lived in the days of the revolution! Who will hereafter doubt their patriotism – who question their motives – or who assert that they are not entitled to the confidence of James K. Polk and Thomas Ritchie?
THE UNITED STATES, TEXAS, AND MEXICO

The Journal of Commerce of Wednesday contains an article, apparently founded on authentic information, in contradiction of some of the statements that have recently been disseminated through the New Orleans press, concerning the movements of Texas on the subject of the pending proposition to incorporate that Republic with the United States.

In regard to the mission to England of Mr. Ashbel Smith, the present Secretary of State for Texas, the Journal argues that it may have in view objects in every way proper and expedient, an entirely distinct from any design to embarrass the measure of annexation; because, even if the Texan Government sincerely desired annexation, and entertained the fall expectation that such would be the issue of the overtures now pending, it would be no more than due to the courtesy heretofore manifested towards Texas by England and France, in the early acknowledgement of her independence, and in many subsequent acts of kindness, to explain to them, in the most respectful manner, the present posture of affairs, the general sentiment of the people, and the probably result; and the Journal maintains that such an explanation would be doubly due, if those Governments procure the acknowledgement of her independence by Mexico, and if they had generously and faithfully exerted themselves for that end.

The Journal then proceeds, on the authority of an intelligent gentleman just from Texas, who has taken a deep interest in the affairs of that country, and in ever practicable way informed himself as to the present state of opinions and acts, to deny that Mr. Smith’s mission is in pursuance of any plan of operations agreed on by the Texan Cabinet, in consultation with the British Minister in Texas, having for is object to put off all action on the Joint Resolution for Annexation until further advices can be hand from England. The present being an important moment for Texas, whatever coarse she may determined to pursue, there is at least a propriety in her having an accredited Minister at the Courts of England and France: and no new man could be so well qualified as Mr. Smith, who has resided at those Courts nearly three years, and been an instrument in all that transpired between those Governments and his own during that period. This is the whole reason why the “Chief Officer of State in Texas” was appointed to the mission in question. There is no evidence that Mr. Smith or the Texan President and Cabinet are opposed to annexation – they having deemed it proper, in the present crisis, to avoid any public declaration of their views on this subject.

The Journal also says it is not true that President Jones has been tampered with by the English and French Ministers, or that he has promised them any delay in submitting the propositions of the United States Government to the Congress of People of Texas. On the contrary, it was well understood that as soon as the President should be formally in possession of the overtures of the Unites States Government, he would submit them directly to the people for their adoption or rejection. Besides the expense of an extra session of Congress, his mind was doubtless influenced by the further consideration that the members were not elected with any special reference to the question of annexation, and that, even if referred to them in the first instance, it must after all go back to the people for final decision.

The Journal further says, it is true that Mexico has offered to acknowledge the independence of Texas, if the latter will renounce forever the idea of annexation to the Unites States. It may, however, be presumed that in proffering such an acknowledgement, Mexico would seek to place the dividing line as far east as possible, and perhaps also require a certain amount of indemnity as a salve for her honor. On each of these points the Texan Government must have a definite understanding with Mexico, before it will be able to judge whether the propositions of the latter is worthy of serious consideration. Such an understanding may possibly be gained through the instrumentality of the British and French Ministers, both of whom decidedly prefer independence to annexation. Should a direct offer of a satisfactory character be made by Mexico, before the question of annexation is submitted to the people, the President may deem it his duty to present both propositions to them simultaneously – viz: Annexation or Independence – that they may choose between them. There is, however, no reasonable doubt of the result. Almost all the Americans, who constitute the great majority of the population, are favorable to annexation.

It is denied that Mr. Donelson, our Charge d’Affaires, was treated with discourtesy or neglect on his recent arrival at the seat of the Texan Government. He arrived on Sunday, and was courteously received by President Jones on the next day, to the entire satisfaction of Mr. D.

It is not true (the Journal continues) that Messrs. Elliot and Saligny, the British and French Ministers, left Texas for the purpose of visiting Washington. [this city] Mr. Elliot had no special object in going to the U. States, other than recreation. Mr. Saligny went only to New Orleans, where he is accustomed to spend the greater part of his time, making occasional visits to Texas as circumstances require.

It is not true that Messrs. Elliot and Saligny visited Texan capital (Washington) immediately on the arrival of the British frigate Euridice with despatches from Vera Cruz. The despatches which induced them to visit Washington were not brought by the Euridice, but came from England and France by way of the west Indies. The despatches by the Euridice met them on their return from Washington to Galveston; and, after opening them and partially reading them, they continued their course to Galveston, and had not again visited Washington.

In conclusion, the Journal expresses its belief that the Texan Government is pursuing an honest, patriotic, and judicious course; and adds, on the authority before cited, that ten percent duty on imports is sufficient to raise all the revenue necessary to meet the ordinary expenses of Government, and that fifteen per cent would leave a considerable surplus. The actual public debt is between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000; the country is extremely prosperous; business good; the products of the earth abundant; and the currency unquestionable, consisting of gold and silver. – Nat. NEWS FROM MEXICO

The Mexican Congress talk in a bellicose strain. But talking won't do. They must fight, or they must give up all claim to be ranked among nations.

THE GREAT QUESTION

The Washington Union in commenting on an article in the Intelligencer, signifies more distinctly than it had one, that the Administration back out from the position, which it was understood, Mr. Polk had assumed in his inaugural, touching Oregon. The negotiations is to go on!

The Union says:

"We certainly do not understand that the negotiation about Oregon is at an end; or that our administration is determined or willing to terminate it; or that there is no prospect of amicably adjusting the dispute; or that it must necessarily end in breaking up the peace of two great countries. We see no necessity, therefore, of analyzing the triple alternative, which the National Intelligencer is please to make out in its elaborate article of near one column and a half. We yet trust that "this case may go forward to its peaceful and reason decision;" in spite of all the unnecessary menaces of the British ministers and all the blustering of the London Journals."

UNTITLED

It is said, that if Mr. Pickens does not accept the mission to England, it will be offered to Mr. Homes of Charleston. Some of Mr. Calhoun's friends is to have it, if any one can be prevailed upon to take it. There may be in this repeated offer of the same post to Mr. Calhoun's friends, and their continued refusal, something more than meets the eye. Is it that the acceptance of it will be construed into a pledge of indiscriminate support of Mr. Polk, by Mr. Calhoun and is Mr. Calhoun shy of giving such a pledge?

It is suggested, that Mr. Pickens is of late more an ostensible than a real friend of Mr. Calhoun. If that be so, it would not be fair to tax Mr. Calhoun for the mission to England bestowed upon Mr. Pickens.

LATER FROM MEXICO

From the N. O. Tropic

By the arrival, last evening of the schooner Yucatan, from Vera Cruz, we learn that General Almonte had arrived at that port, where he still remained when the Y. left. We also learn that four American, two Spanish, one English, and on French men of war were lying at Vera Cruz. We did not receive any letters or papers by this arrival, but thanks to the courtesy of our neighbors of the “Bee,” who received full files of Vera Cruz papers to the 21st and city of Mexico papers to the 17th instant, we are enabled to lay before our readers the following particulars.

The Joint Committee of the Mexican Congress, to which had been referred the subject of Texas, reported at length on the 7th instant. We have no space to devote to a description of the bombastic phraseology of the document, but at once proceed to give the concluding part, as furnished to us by the "Bee." It recommends two projects, as follows:

THE FIRST is preceded by a preamble, declaring that, whereas the United States have resolved to annex the territory of Texas; and, whereas, such a mode of appropriating foreign territory to which other nations lay claim, is a monstrous innovation upon the peace of the world and the sovereignty of other powers; and, whereas, this act had long been in preparation, even while the United States were professing peace and friendship for Mexico, and while the latter respected and observed scrupulously the terms of existing treaties between the two countries; and whereas, the said annexation is a violation of every conservative principle of society, an assault upon the rights of Mexico, an insult to her dignity as a sovereign nation, and menaces her independence and political existence; therefore, the Congress of the Mexican Republic solemnly declares, that the law of the United States for the annexation of Texas to the American Union, in no respect impairs the rights which Mexico possesses, and will maintain to that department.

Furthermore, that the United States having disregarded the principles upon which are based treaties of amity, commerce and navigation, and more especially of boundary, Congress considers them violated by the United States.

The second project, consists of four articles, as follows:

First – The Mexican nation calls upon her sons to defend their national independence, threatened by the usurpation of the territory of Texas, which is sought to be consummated by a decree passed by Congress and sanctioned by the President of the United States.

Second – Therefore the Government will consider itself at liberty to call forth its entire, permanent and active military force, agreeably to the authority given to it by existing laws.

Third – For the preservation of public order, and the maintenance of her institutions, and if necessary, as a reserve for the army, the Government, in virtue of the power granted to it on the 8th of December, 1844, may levy the troops to which said decree refers, under the name of defenders of independence and the laws.

Fourth – With a view to the efficient maintenance of the rights of the republic, the Government, is authorized to procure all extraordinary resources which may be deemed necessary, making known to Congress the necessary steps to be taken, conformably to the constitution.

We do not find any account of any action by the Mexican Congress on the foregoing projects. They have been laid before that body, and that is all we learn respecting them. It is clearly evident that the government and people of Mexico are decidedly disposed to surrender Texas, and the tone of the public journals is exceedingly warlike; still, as long as the Mexicans confine themselves to making reports in Congress and firing broadsides in their newspapers, there does not seem any immediate prospect of hard knocks. To be sure, it had been suggested that Mexico may undertake to annoy us by crippling our commerce in the Gulf, but while there are some of our floating batteries well manned and equipped, in the immediate vicinity of Vera Cruz, there appears to be but a slender chance for the Mexican flag to become distinguished on the high seas.

The agency for the payment of the Mexican debt to Great Britain has been taken from the house of Lizardi, in London, and given to Schneider & Co.

There is not a particle of intelligence about Santa Ana. He appears to be quite forgotten in the prevailing excitement.

We copy from the slip furnished to use by the "Bee," the following account of another earthquake in the city of Mexico on the 10th inst, three days after the former one, and which appears to have been very destructive.

ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE. – Our readers doubtlessly remember the details we published a few days since, of a frightful destructive earthquake which was experienced at Mexico on the 7th inst. We have not to add a reputation of this awful disaster in the Capital on the 10th inst. An examination of the papers has failed to enable us to discover many details of the amount of ruin and desolation occasioned by the convulsion; but from the fact that the journals quite in describing its effects as terrific, we presume the destruction must have been great. The Diario the 11th states that the earthquake occurred about 10 o’clock, A.M., and lasted forty seconds; that it overthrew many new buildings, and many other that had escaped the former violation; that most of the inhabitants, stricken with terror, left their houses, and took refuge in the open fields and public squares, passing the night without shelter and in the utmost consternation. The "Veracruzano" of the 14th instant, states that private letters furnish a gloomy picture of the destruction that has fallen upon Mexico. The "Hesperia" of the 12th states that the earthquake of the 10th complete the destruction of the cupola of Santa Teress, and increased the damage done to the church of Santo Domingo and San Francisco. But for the shortness of its duration, the entire city could have been laid in ruins. Mexico did not suffer alone. The shock was felt in a number of towns and villages within a radius of several hundred miles. At Puebla, the earthquake was experienced on the 7th about 4 o'clock P.M., but its effects were comparatively light. Several churches were injured, and many private edifices were greatly damaged; though none were absolutely destroyed.

At Acountillo and Talaco the effects of the shocker were more considerable. At Gualalojaro, Morella and Vera Cruz, the earthquake was experienced both on the 7th and 10th; the earthquake was experienced both on the 7th and 10th, but on neither occasion was the business very serious.

TEXAS ANNEXATION

It would seem from the tone of public sentiment in Texas, that this grand project is on the point of consummation, on the terms and conditions of the joint resolutions of our Congress. Well, if it must come, the sooner the better! We only pray, that the evils we dread from it, may never be realized; that no visitations from on High may overtake our hitherto favored land, on account of the rapacious and unjust spirit which prompted the act; that the bands of our glorious Union may not be weakened, but be made more strong, and that rich blessings may be multiplied and showered down upon every portion of our wide spread confederacy.

The New Orleans Bee publishes the following letter from "one of the most influential and respectable citizens of Galveston – the statements of which may be relied upon."

"I am most happy to assure you that the demonstrations throughout the country, have been most unanimous, warm and decided in favor of closing at once with the propositions now before the country without further delay, and apprehensive as many men in different countries were, that our Executive and most of his immediate partisans would do everything they dared to do, to postpone and ultimately defeat the measure, meetings were held in several countries proposing that the people should at once move in the matter, by requesting their respective members of Congress to assemble about the middle of May, to advise and deliberate on the matter. Our President, however, at length issued his proclamation to convene the Congress in June, with which we are content. Although most of us believe it was made so late in order to give the British intriguers time to mature all their plans for its defeat. But as public sentiment is so entirely overwhelming, we are satisfied that there was no chance for the success of their machinations, and consequently acquiesce in the late day fixed by the President rather than throw the country in a state of anarchy and confusion. If there had been the least fear that the enemies of annexation could have succeeded, we should have gotten up a revolution instanter."

FOREIGN NEWS

See the details by the Hibernia. The news is of little interest – and the only feature worthy of notice is the fact, that the apprehension of difficulties in respect to the Oregon question, appears to have subsided. The money and produce markets – which were agitated for a few days pending and after the debate in Parliament, have become quiet and gone up or settled down to the peace establishment.

SANTA FE AND CHIHUAHUA

The Independence (Jackson co.,) Expositor of the 19th says on Wednesday and Thursday we note the arrival at Hansford's Independence House, of Messrs Leitenadorfer, Branham, and twelve or fourteen companions from New Mexico.

In the way of news we have little to communicate. The governmental affairs had remained perfectly quiet up to the 1st of March, the date of their departure. They had not yet received the intelligence of the final defeat and captivity of Santa Anna.

Business had been dull all winter. The non retail law in full force. This law it will be remembered, prohibited the retailing of goods by any, except Mexican subjects.
Mr. Speyre it is said met with further loss between Santa Fe and Chihuahua. One hundred and sixty-five of his mules were run off by the Apache Indians in that portion of the road known as the Jornada del Muerto.

Mr. Owens was expected to reach Santa Fe by the 1st April, and may be looked for here in three or four weeks.

Richard McCarty, Esq., of this place died in Santa Fe in February Ist.

The news of the slaughter of the traders among them by the Yute Indians is verified. It is supposed Antoine Robiboux must have perished, as nothing had been heard from him during the winter.

The yield from the Gold Mines in New Mexico this winter, had been small, owing to dry weather and scarcity of winter. Forty of fifty thousand dollars is the supposed yield. – St. Louis Republican.

TEXAS, IOWA, AND FLORIDA IN THE UNITED STATES

IN THE U.S. SENATE.

It would appear from the following, that the friends of Texas, Iowa, and Florida, are determined to have them in the United States, whether they are willing or not:

“Mr. Dallas’s late visit to Washington was, it appears, to make room in the Senate Chamber, for Texas, Iowa, and Florida. He decide to add another row of seats to the inner circle, in front of the chair. Texas, Iowa, and Florida are there to be accommodated. The sofas outside of the bar, it is further said, will afford room, hereafter, for Wisconsin, Nebraska, and the States hereafter to be carved out of Texas and Oregon”

It will be see that Oregon, when she does come into the confederacy, together with Wisconsin, Nebraska, and perhaps Canada, will all have to take back seats.

June 3, 1845, RWv22i44p1c6, From Texas

We are indebted to Captain Hoffman, of the Barque ‘William Ivy,’ from the Matagorda, for the Weekly Dispatch, of that place, of May 3.

It is filled with animated expressions of the public voice in favor of Annexation.

It contains the proceedings of a meeting of the inhabitants of Matagorda county – Seth, lagram, in the chairman and Thomas Harvey, Secretary.

In pursuance of resolutions adopted at a previous meeting, the Representative and Senator in Congress from the county of Matagorda, were appointed Delegates to meet the delegates from the other counties, in convention at the seat of Government, on the 31 Monday in May, in order to adopt such plans as they may deem most proper to obtain the action of the people throughout the Republic on the question of annexation. Among the resolutions adopted by the meeting are the following.

“Resolved. That we have heard with astonishment and indignation of the appointment and embarkation of a Minister from this government to England and France, which, in conjugation with the delay used by they executive, in calling together the Congress is well calculated to excite out distrust in the action of the President.

“Resolved, That delay is useless, as we wish to see no overtures from any government save that of the United States.”

The columns of the Despatch are full of severe but justly merited invective against the president Hones for his unreasonable delay in convoking Congress for the purpose of deliberating on the propositions of out government relative to the admission of Texas into the Union. Mr. Jones received those propositions on the 20th March; his proclamation for the meeting of Congress was only on the 15th April, and he has fixed the day of assembling on the 16th June. The Despatch says: - “The public feeling is forced into its utmost tension to tolerate this delay. This distasteful and nauseating duty has been wrung from him by the united voice of all Texas – he discharged it amid the murmurs of public discontent – we are indebted for it to no lofty impulse nor noble sentiment of patriotism – it is
The Despatch contains also a letter from Mr. Richard Roman, Senator from the Matagorda district, to the Annexation Corresponding Committee, which expresses, says the Despatch, the sentiments of nineteen-twentieths of the people of Western Texas. In this letter Mr. Roman declares that ever since the commencement of the Texan revolution he had "an abiding hope that annexation to the United States was the ultimate destiny of Texas. Such was then, and has over since been the general conviction of the people." He goes on to state that the hope of its consummation was so strong in 1836, that the existing government at that time submitted the question to the people simultaneously with the constitution. The people were unanimously in favor of the plan. He says the present government of Texas was instituted for temporary purposes only. Mr. Roman concludes with expressing a firm resolution to promote the measure of annexation on every occasion – and if it fail, he will think that Texas has struck a blow for liberty in vain, and he will feel the humiliation of defeat.

It is plain that the PEOPLE of Texas, the real people, are full of enthusiasm for the consummation of a measure which they contemplated ever since the battle of San Jacinto, as the reward of their toils in the settlement and defence of the Territory against the Mexicans. It will be an exceedingly dangerous experiment for Mr. Hones and his advisors to undertake by open violence or secret intrigue to disappoint the wishes of the public. Not only will the experiment be dangerous, but it cannot succeed. Its success is impossible. The moment Mr. Hones and his co-intriguers attempt by an open act to counteract the measure, the whole republic will be in a flame – there will be a simultaneous rising of the people from Nacogdoches to the Rio del Norte. Nothing will be able to withstand them – they will demand annexation, rifle in hand – the present government will be abolished, and they will call a convention, who will order the measure to be carried into effect without a moments delay.

The people of Texas were indignant when they heard that president Hones had despatched Ashbel Smith as minister at the courts of Paris and London, for the purpose of completing his private, secret, dirty negotiation, to prevent, if possible, the republic of Texas from joining our confederation. --It turns out that Smith, instead of going to Europe, went to Vera Cruz, and is now in the city of Mexico, with Elliott, the British minister to the republic of Texas. This face is positively asserted by the Picayuno of this morning, and the assertions is based on information undoubtedly authentic, transmitted to the editors of that paper by their correspondents in Mexico. These two individuals, it was, unquestionably, who made the proposal to the Mexican government which induced it to acknowledge the independence of Texas. This recognition, as the Picayune justly observes, is conducted “under the auspices of England, its object being to check the progress of this country, cripple her influence, and baffle the will of the American people.”

Whatever may be the determination of our government under the state of things that now presents itself, we have no apprehension but that they are prepared and ready to defeat by force of arms any conspiracy of foreign enemies with domestic traitors, that has for its object to disappoint the wishes of the people of the United States and of Texas for the junction of the latter to our confederacy. We entirely coincide with the Picayune that our government is bound by a regard to the honor and safety of the country and by the sacred obligation of good faith to the people of Texas, to interpose its whole power in order to save them from falling under the domain of traitors whom they abhor or of England, which from their infancy they have been taught to look upon as the sworn enemy of those free and liberal institutions, under which they desire to live or not to live at all.

We copy the following from the Picayune of this morning:

" The bill allowing the Minister of Foreign Affairs the power to negotiate a Treaty with Texas for her Independence, with the provision that she shall not be annexed to the United States, passed the Mexican House of Representative on the 3rd time by a vote of 41 for and 13 against it, after a strong debate of 3 days. It was immediately sent to the Senate, where it was believed it would be concurred in unanimously. A report to that effect reached Vera Cruz some days before I sailed, but the last mail, of the 16th, brought no confirmation of it."

The Picayune also contains interesting accounts respecting the condition of Mexico. Distraction and discontent everywhere prevail. The states of Pueblo and Tabasco have already declared in favor of the federal constitution, and a general meeting was held at Vera Cruz, but active measures were suspended at the request of the governor who is not averse to the object of the meeting.

Santa Ann was still confined in the Castle of Perote – but it was thought he would soon be liberated – and probably would be at the head of the government in a few months.

The present army of Mexico is said to consist of 21,000 officers, and 20,000 private soldiers.

There was no declaration of war against this country and no prospect of such an event.

In regard to the presence of the American squadron at Vera Cruz, the correspondent of the Picayune gives the following information:
“The arrival of our squadron at Vera Cruz created a great excitement, and also at the city of Mexico, where it was represented to consist of twenty-on sail of men of war! The unexpected presence of this squadron had no doubt, a salutary influence, and possibly might have caused the mission so privately determined upon to the United States.”

Mr. Shannon, the Minister of President Tyler to Mexico, is not the man for such a state of uncertainty and turmoil as now prevails in that country. It is said he has been living in the utmost obscurity, without knowing or caring what was doing on. We are glad to hear that he is on his way homewards.

June 3, 1845, RWv22i44p2c3, Texas will accept bid to the union

By late arrivals at New Orleans from Texas, it would appear that there is no longer any doubt, as to the probability of the People of Texas acceding to the proposition for annexing that Republic to the United States. President Jones has, accordingly, issued a Proclamation calling upon the People of Texas to hold a Convention, to form a new Constitution as a State about being numbered among the States of this Union. We publish below, the Proclamation, which has been put forth in anticipation of the Congress of Texas acceding to the proposition from the United States:

June 3, 1845, RWv22i44p2c3, A PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS, the People of Texas have evinced a decided wish that prompt and definite action should be had upon the proposition for annexation, recently submitted by the Government of the United States to this Government, and that a Convention should be assembled for this purpose, and,

WHEREAS, it is competent for the people alone to decide finally upon the proposition for annexation, and “by deputies in convention assembled.” To adopt a Constitution with a view to the admission of Texas as one of the States of the American Union, and,

WHEREAS, no authority is given by the Constitution of this Republic, to any branch of the Government to call a Convention, and to change the organic law, this being a right reserved to the people themselves, and which they alone can properly exercise,

THEREFORE, be it known, that I, ANSON JONES, President of the Republic of Texas, desirous of giving direction and effect to the public will, already so fully expressed, do recommend to the citizens of Texas, that an election for "Deputies" to a Convention to be held in the different counties of the Republic, on Wednesday the fourth day of June next, upon the following basis, viz: Each county in the Republic to elect one Deputy, irrespective of the number of voters it contained at the last annual elections. Each county voting at that time three hundred, and less than six hundred to elect two Deputies. Each county voting at that time six hundred and less than nine hundred and upwards, to elect four Deputies: and that the said Deputies so elected, do assemble in Convention at the city of Austin, on the “Fourth of July” next, for the purpose of considering the proposition for the annexation of Texas to the United States, and any other proposition which may be made concerning the nationality of the Republic, and should they judge it expedient and proper, to adopt, provisionally, a Constitution to be submitted to the people for their ratification, with a view to the admission of Texas as a State, into the North American Union, in accordance with (illegible)

June 3, 1845, RWv22i44p2c4, The Texans

The Texans in this country are in a great bother about the negotiations said to be in progress between the President of Texas,(Jones) and Mexico, through the agency of the British Minister, Capt. Elliott. General Ashbel Smith’s movements, too, seem greatly to annoy them. When it was reported that that individual reached New York on his way to England for the unavowed purpose of defeating annexation, in some way or other, he was roundly berated by these same gentlemen. But now, when it is announced, that instead of going to England he took shipping to Vera Cruz, and is now in Mexico with the British Ambassador, their indignation knows no bounds. We agree with the gentlemen, that his movements are certainly circumbendious – to coin a word for the occasion; and it looks highly probable, that he and President Jones, in conjunction with Captain Elliott, are making strenuous efforts to defeat annexation. But the Texan prints in this country assure us, that all their efforts will prove in vain. We will rely upon that assurance, and haughty negotiators to the tender mercies of the aforesaid prints. They will do them enough!

June 3, 1845, RWv22i44p2c5, Later From Texas
The fine steamship New York, Captain Wright, arrived home on Saturday, in 33 hours from Galveston, bringing papers to the (illegible)

President Jones has issues a proclamation dated "Washington, May 5, 1845, in which, after reciting that “the people of Texas have...[illegible]...a decided wish that prompt and definite actions...[illegible]...be bad upon the proposition for annexation.” And that a Convention should be assembled for that purpose also, that “it is (illegible) for the people alone to decide finally upon the proposition for annexation and by Deputies in Convention assembled to adopt Constitution with a view to the admission of Texas as one of the States of the American Union,” and that no authority is given by the Constitution of the Republic to any (illegible) of the Government to call a Convention, and to change the organic law, that being a right reserved to the people themselves, and stating that he is “desirous of giving directions and effect to the public will,” he recommends to the citizens “that an election for Deputies (illegible) Convention by held in the different counties of the Republic on Wednesday, the 4th of June next; and that the said Deputies so elected, do assemble in convention at the city of Austin, on the Fourth of July next. “For the purpose of considering the proposition for the annexation of Texas to the United States, and any other promotion which may be made concerning the nationality of the Republic; and should they judge it expedient and proper, to adopt provisionally, a Constitution to be submitted to the people for their ratification, with a view to the admission of Texas as a State into the North American Union, in accordance with the terms of the proposition for annexation already submitted to this Government by that of the United States.”

Speaking of the business which Congress, at the extra session will have to transact, the Houston Telegraph says:

The Convention, not being a body recognized by the Constitution, can pass no law requiring the Treasurer to pay on any money, and this officer would be compelled by his oath of office to refuse to pay any portions of the expense of the Convention, unless Congress should make the necessary appropriation for this purpose. One of the main objects therefore of Congress will be to provide the necessary means to enable the Convention to proceed to business. Another object will be for Congress to express its assent to the resolutions submitted by President Polk. Those resolutions provide that the assent of the existing Government of Texas shall be obtained before they shall go into effect. The terms “assent of their existing Government” is rather indefinite: but it was the opinion of President Polk, and of the American Charge here, that the term implied the assent of the Executive and Legislative Department of our Government. For this reason the American Charge was exceedingly desirous that Congress should be called at an early period to give its assent to the resolutions passed by the American Congress. We understand that the President and several of the members of his Cabinet entertained the opinion that Congress had no right to act upon this question until it had first been submitted to the people, and they had instructed their Representatives to adopt or reject the terms proposed by the American Government. Hence the delay of the President in calling the extra session of Congress. He was willing to call it at an earlier period, if he had been able to ascertain that the people were willing to accept the terms as submitted by President Polk. The people having met in their primary assemblies in all or nearly all the counties of the Republic, and expressed their approbation of the terms for annexation, the members of Congress doubtless considered themselves as being specially instructed to express their assent to these terms, and it is probable that a joint resolution, testifying the assent of the Government to the terms submitted by President Polk, will be passed by our Congress. There is another subject that will engage the attention of Congress. A question may arise whether it will be expedient that an election shall be held in September next for members of Congress, or whether the election shall be deferred until the American Congress has acted upon our Constitution. If that Constitution is adopted in January it will be necessary for an election to be held immediately after its adoption for the members of a State Legislature, and it will probably be advisable that the election of the members of the next Congress should be deferred until it is ascertained whether that Congress shall give place to the State Legislature. These and perhaps one other question, relative to the extension of the boundaries of the Northern and Western counties to the Northern limits of the Congress. They can all be disposed of in a very short time, and it is not improbable that the extra session will no continue more than six or eight days.

The National Register says that the proposed Convention will, according to the basis proposed in the President’s proclamation consist of 61 deputies as follows: the 12 western counties will have 14 deputies, the 5 northern counties 11 deputies, the 8 eastern counties 13 deputies; and the 11 middle counties 23 deputies.

The Houston Telegraph expresses the opinion that the people will assent to the President’s recommendation with great unanimity. In Milam, Robertson, Brazos, Washington, Montgomery, Harris and Austin counties, the people, it is stated to have already agreed to elect delegates.

The Civilian of the 17th, has the following paragraph:

A gentleman from Washington informs us that a party of Commanche Indians, numbering between three and four thousand, are encamped near Mr. Torry’s trading house on Little River, and have sent two of their number, accompanied by a white man, to inform the President that they (the whole body of Indians) are on their way to the Mexican frontier, to make reprisals for some losses they have recently sustained in that quarter, that they will strictly abstain from any act of aggression upon Texas, and to request the President to give notice to our citizens that such are their designs, in hope that their intentions may not be mistaken, and war made upon them by Texas. We have not understood what answer has been returned my the President, but presume that the Indians will neither be encouraged to make war upon the feeble frontier of Mexico, or permitted to come within the vicinity of our own settlements. – Had Texas been disposed to imitate the examples of some older nations in the employment on Indians as soldiers, many calamities might have been inflicted upon Mexico which have been prevented.
The Houston Telegraph of the 14th says: -

We learn from the LaGrange Intelligence that a party of Indians appeared near Corpus Charieti on the 15th ult. Killed two Mexicans, wounded a third, and drove off a large number of horses belonging to Col. Kinney. A company of marauders has been ranging between the Rio Grande and Nneces for several weeks and cut off all communication with the Mexican settlements. Trade is therefore very dull. Scarcely any traders have visited the port for the last three weeks. We learn from other sources that a large number of troops have been sent to Matamoroe and to different points on the Rio Grande, by order of General Arista. It appears that the Mexican government fears that an attack will soon be made upon that frontier by American troops. It does not appear, however, that the number of troops on the Rio Grande has been much increased. –The whole force along the line of the Rio Grande does not probably exceed one thousand men.

The steamboat Lady Byron, while crossing the bar at the mouth of the Brazos, a few days ago, sunk and is a total loss.

June 13, 1845, RWv22i47p1c1, Violence of the Texas Presses

A crisis is approaching in the affairs of Texas, which seems to excite much uneasiness in the minds of the friends of annexation. They profess indeed not to be in the least apprehensive of the result, but the profession is not sustained by their conduct.

We have heard all along and did not ourselves doubt it to be so, that the Anglo-American population of Texas, constituting the cast majority, were nearly of quite unanimous in favor of annexation. . . . [illegible] . . . ow certain that the President of Texas, (Jones) has secretly negotiated a Treaty with Mexico, at the city Mexico, (as alleged under British auspices,) the leading feature of which is that Mexico agrees to recognize the independence of Texas, on condition that the latter declines annexation and remains independent.

If the fact be so, and it seems well avouched, the reader will in the first place find himself puzzled to account for the conduct of President Hones. If the people of Texas be so unanimous for annexation, why should their President negotiate a Treaty which he cannot but know will be as unanimously rejected by the Congress of Texas? –Why should he so unnecessarily and gratuitously forfeit his popularity and expose himself to legislative censure and popular indignation? Or why should England desire so vain a thing to be done as the formation of a Treaty which, she knew would be rejected by the people and Congress of Texas.

Theses are points which appear to us difficult of solution, if it is possible to solve them except by the supposition either that a change is expected to be wrought in the popular inclination of Texas, that that change has already been wrought, or that there has all along existed more opposition to annexation in that country than was admitted in the U. States.

We quote the following bitter Philippie from the New Orleans Courier of the 2nd, a leading Texas print for the purpose of exhibiting the rage into which this Treaty of President Jones has thrown those who could find no fault in a similar proceeding by President Tyler.

June 13, 1845, RWv22i47p1c1, Mexico and Texas

We have received dates from Vera Cruz of the 22nd ult. By the British frigate Eurydice, and of the 28th from Galveston by the steamer McKim.

The Eurydice is off the mouth of the river, and several of her officers, with Capt. Elliott, the notorious charge d’affaires of England to Texas, came up to the city, and lodge at the St. Charles Hotel. The face of Elliott’s arrival here with dispatches from Mexico for the agent of his government, gives us ground to presume that the treaty has been concluded between Mexico and Jones of Texas. To the eternal disgrace of that person and every Texan who approves of his treason, that treaty was negotiated under the superintendance of Elliott; the Texas agent was protected in the Mexican capital by the same British missary, where neither his nor any other citizen of the republic would have dared to place his foot with no other guarantee of safety than that of Texan citizenship –he was introduced to the Mexican Secretary of Satate by the same enemy of his country –who (illegable) Mexican government, as a favour to Great Britain, the acceptance of the proposals from President Jones. We heard some days ago that the treaty was concluded, where by Mexican acknowledges the Independence of Texas, and the latter republic is pledged to refuse the offer made by our government to receive her into the confedearcy. The lapse of a few weeks will make known the consummation of this dark intrigue, or its utter defeat. It will be a phenomenon of human Independence, should Jones dare to lay before the Congress of Texas this fruit of his “coquetry with a foreign nation,” as General Houston calls it. If he should have the hardihood to do so, we have little doubt it will be accounted and hooted by the members –but that for any consideration the citizens of Texas will tolerate its June 17, 1845, RWv22i48p1c2, Texas and the Treaty

The N. Orleans Courier, next to the Washington Union and the Richmond Enquirer, is the most indefatigable and intolerant Texas print in the Union. It has teemed for 18 months with the most inflammatory appeals in favor of annexation, addressing them to the worst passions of the multitude, and it ever ascribes the worst motives to those who think proper to oppose that hazardous measure.

That such a paper, so near to the scene, hitherto so confident of the adoption of the Joint Resolutions by Texas, and so exultant, should now betray alarm, proves the existence of danger to the project, and that that danger is greater than is admitted.

The last Courier says:

"Well –the treaty being concluded, what is to prevent President Jones from laying it before Congress, which is to assemble on the 16th of the present month, and what security have we that if will not be ratified in proper and constitutional forme?

"It is a bad sign, a sign at least that is ominous of no good, that the National Intelligencer publishes the news concerning the treaty with so much satisfaction. The failure of annexation would be mortifying to the pride of this country and extremely detrimental to our best interests as a nation. It would, on the other hand, be very agreeable to Great Britain and to the British partisans in the United States. It would redound to the advantage of no power on earth except Great Britain –and hence, the pleasure with which the prospect of its accomplishment is regarded by the Intelligencer. Bet the Intelligencer and its patrons in England will be disappointed in the long run. Should the treaty be ratified by the Texan congress, annexation to the United States will be postponed for a while; and possibly war between this country and England may be the consequence. But admitting these things; admitting the treaty to be ratified by the congress of Texas and war to ensue –what then? Annexation will be delayed –that is all. England, France and Mexico combined have not the force to prevent the measure from being accomplished in the course of the present year. The people of Texas will trample on a treaty which sells them to the British, which was prompted by corruption and concluded by treason.

"But, after all, we have scarcely any apprehension that the treaty will be ratified by the Texan congress. We are informed on good authority that there are not in all Texas a sufficient number of citizens, formerly belonging to the United States, to make a quorum of either house of congress and who are opposed to annexation. Jones and his little band are under the influence of a peculiar kind of motives, which cannot reach the majority of either branch of the legislature; and in spite of the whishes and predictions of the National Intelligencer, we have hopes, amounting almost to conviction, that the congress will, in accordance with the indignant voice of their whole constituency, refuse even a reading to the infamous treaty with England and Mexico."

We point the reader's attention to the first paragraph. --"What security have we that the Treaty "President Jones’ with Mexico) will not be ratified by the Texas Congress!" Indeed! What! Is not security enough that the Anglo-Americans of Texas, constituting nearly the whole population, are, according to the Courier itself, within a cery small fraction of unanimity? Can there be any danger that the Treaty will be ratified when this is the case? Will the Congress of Texas so grossly misrepresent its constituency? Or is the object of the Courier to insinuate remotely, that they are purchaseable, and may yield to the temptation of British Gold? We can in no other way reconcile the first paragraph we quote from the Courier and the two which follow it; its assertion of the unanimous desire of the People of Texas for annexation, and its evident fright lest the Representatives of that unanimous people, may ratify Jones’ Treaty, defeat their will, and defeat the darling Scheme of Annexation.

Our persuasion is, that the Courier has secret information which does not disclose, and that the information renders the ratification of Jones’ Treaty, and the consequent defeat of Annexation, highly probable, by the Congress of Texas: We have little question either that a reaction has taken place against Annexation in Texas; for we cannot believe that, if the People were unanimous, as is represented, in favor of it, the People's Representatives would dare to oppose it. The supposition of the employment of bribery would not explain the Phenomenon. Bribery is for the few not for the many: Nobody ever heard of a whole Congress being bribed. It the Treaty is ratified and annexation rejected, we may feel quite confident that such is the will of the people of Texas, though certainly not the wish of the Courier of its Texas allies in this country. The recognition of Texan Independence by Mexico vitally changes the whole aspect of the question, and safely and Liberty secured, the warmest advocates of annexation in Texas might very consistently change their ground. The Congress of Texas meets the day after tomorrow, and we shall soon know the result. It appears certain from the language of Gov. Jones' Official, that a Treaty with Mexico has been negotiated, and that it will be laid before the Congress of Texas by the same message which communicates the Joint Resolutions from the United States.

The Cincinnati Gazette wisely says:

"Let us, on this question of peace or war, wave all minor matters. The Union need not fear the loyalty of any party, if conflict comes with any foreign nation. Americans will be Americans in that hour. Oppose its coming –regret it –dread it –all this may be with a portion of them. But there will be no fear –no division, when the hour is; we shall all move together no one man –as a party. –Nor should the Union trouble itself about the London Times. That Journal neither sways the British Public, nor speaks for the British Ministry. And if it did both, the Official misunderstands the real drift of its articles about Mexico, if we read them aright."

Yes, and many of the most forward and clamorous for war now, will then leave those to fight its battles whom they stigmatize now as the “British party,” because they will not consent to put rapacity and cupidity before national justice and national honor, while they remain home!

The western countries of Texas are opposed to the Convention, and consider the power of Congress ample and plenary on the subject of annexation. A meeting had been held at Bastrop, presided by General Burleson, and a series of resolutions adopted denouncing Jones; proclamation as dictatorial, and designed to frustrate the anticipated action of Congress.

The crops of Texas corn, cotton, sugar and tobacco are represented as flourishing. The cotton is, however, some what infested by the coco grass.

We regret to learn that on Saturday evening last, Mr. Wells, the splendid Dancer, and the principal Musician of the Theatre, while bathing in the Gulf, was attacked by some unknown species of fish, supposed to be a Shark, his side cut and much bruised and two ribs broken. He is now confined to his room under the attendance of Dr. Carper. This is to be more regretted, for not only the accident and the pecuniary loss, which will fall on his gentleman, but that the Theatre for a time, will be deprived of his valuable services. Mr. W., we learn, is mending.

The Mexican steamer Neptune, Captain Parkinson, arrived at Charleston on Thursday, it’s the short run of three days from Havana. This vessel is bound for New York but . . . [illegible] . . . into Charleston for a supply of fuel.

Capt. Parkinson states that British mail steamer Medway arrived at Havana on the 7th, instant from Vera Cruz, which
No particulars are given as to the course pursued by the Mexican Government in banishing Santa Ana, but Captain P. understood that the decree presented an absence of ten years, that his private property was respected; that he had with him a large amount of money and was in good personal health.

In one of the Havana papers it is recorded that the French Legation had been insulted in the streets of Vera Cruz just previous to the sailing of the Medway, and that the Minister had demanded from the Mexican Government immediate reparation for the indignity offered, or the alternative of furnishing him with his passports.

It is stated that all anticipations of war between the United States and Mexico had subsided; and a strong practical evidence that such was the case (says the Charleston Courier) is the fact that the Neptuna, the property of Mexicans, had been ordered to New York to refit, which would of course, not have been done if the owners were apprehensive of such an event.-Nat. June 27, 1845, RWv22i51p1c3, Banishment of Santa Anna

Banishment of Generals Santa Ana and Canalizo, and the ex-ministers arrival at Havana of Santa Ana and Bustamente—the French legation assaulted by Mexicans.

By the brig Tiri arrived at this port yesterday, we have received files of Mexican papers to the 27th, ult.

The English steamship Medway arrived at Havana in 4 days from Vera Cruz and Tampico, with Gen. Santa Ana on board; who had obtained permission to banish himself from Mexico. On the same day, and almost at the same hour of his arrival, Bustamente, another ex-president, who had been wandering for many years an exile in foreign lands, arrived at Havana, in another steamship from Kingston, Jamaica.

The meeting of these two men in this manner is extraordinary, one going into banishment with his wife and children—the other returning from exile and on his way to his native shore.

We give below the news received by this arrival, which we copy from the Courier of last evening:

The Spanish brig of war Habanero left Havana on the 28th.

These papers contain the amnesty, as follows:

Art. 1. Amnesty is accorded to all persons accused of political offences before the publication of this law with certain restrictions and exceptions.

Art. 2. Those who take the benefit of the amnesty will preserve their grades both civil and military—but they shall not exercise any power, nor discharge any functions conferred upon them in consequence of the national movement, 6th Dec. 1844.

Art. 3. General Santa Ana is excepted from the benefit of this amnesty, unless he shall embark, in compliance with his own request, within the delay fixed by the government and qui the territory of the republic, according to his abdication of the Presidency.

Art. 4. General Canalizo and the ex-Minister Bassadre are also excepted in this amnesty, unless they shall within three days from the publication of this law apply to the tribunal charged to try them and engage to absent themselves from the republic for ten years.

Art. 5. The preceding articles apply also to the ex-Ministers Crescentio Rejon, Manual Baronda, and Antonio de Haro Flamiriz; and if any of them have fled, the Government will point out the place where they shall reside.

Art. 6. To each of the persons mentions in the three preceding articles, the republic will grant a pension equal to one half their pay in their employ before the 29th November, 1844. Any one of them shall be deprived of his pension who may quit the place of residence pointed out by the governments, and if he shall return to the soil of the republic, he shall be liable to the penalties of the laws.

Art. 7. The foregoing six articles shall not dissolve (illegible) engagements before they quit the Republic, Generals Santa Anna and Canalizo and the four ex-ministers who signed the decree Nov. 29, 1844 shall establish their claims. and satisfy those which may be brought against them.

The papers are silent on the subject of Texas, Mr. Shannon had arrived at Vera Cruz from Mexico. He was robbed and ill-treated on the road by a banditti.

The Mexican Congress was engaged in modifying the tariff.

The powers of the Executive to great with Texas were published as follows:

"The Congress authorize the Executive to receive the proposals of Texas to proceed to a definite arrangement, and conclude a treaty, suitable to the interest and honor of the republic-the same be submitted to the examination and sanction of Congress."

Gen. Don Jose Juan Landero is appointed commander of the fortress of San Juan de Uloa.

A large manufactory of forged money was discovered at Mexico.

It was understood that the Department of California was restored to order. The troops sent by sea were not opposed in their landing.

The Vera Cruzano of the 18th ult., complains that there were hardly any merchant vessel in that port, and ascribes this circumstance to the expectation that the tariff will be amended, in consequence of which all orders were suspended. (N.O. Crescent City, June 18th.)

June 27, 1845, RWv22i51p1c3, Important from Texas

From the New Orleans Bee

IMPORTANT FROM TEXAS.

By the arrival of the steam packet New York, Captain Wright, we have been put in possession of our files of Texas papers, to the 14th instant inclusive. They contain information of importance and interest. President Jones, after months of tortuous duplicity and hypocritical double dealing has boldly thrown off the mask, and virtually . . . has disgraceful overtures to Great Britain and Mexico. And his deadly hostility to Annexation. We cannot in the crowded state of our columns, comment upon this intelligence at the length we could desire, and must content ourselves for the present with a synopsis of the (illegible).

The Galveston News Extra, publishes a third proclamation of President Jones, preceded by a prolix preable, in which that worthy attempts to gloss over his conduct with the usual of a spurious patriotism. He begins thus:-

The executive is now enabled to declare to the people of Texas, the actual state of affairs with respect to Mexico, to the end that they might direct and dispose of them as they shall judge best for the honor and permanent interest of the Republic.

He then goes on to say that last summer he learned from credible sources that the Government of Mexico, was disposed to acknowledge the Independence of Texas, upon the understanding that she would maintain her separate existence that in March last the representatives of G. Britain and France jointly renewed the offer of their intermediation with Mexico for this purpose; that as they were unaccompanied by any entangling conditions, he could not consent to reject them, and therefore placed in the hands of their representatives statement of conditions preliminary to a treaty of peace. These conditions having been accepted by the Government of Mexico, through the friendly interposition of England and France, he deems it his duty to issue the following proclamation:

Most of the papers that we have seen are excessively indignant at these developments, and even the most moderate, such as the Houston Telegraph, express and emphatic belief that the proposal of Nesico will be promptly rejected by Congress.

The election returns for the Convention were coming in fast. At Galveston, Col. Love and Richard Bache, were chosen. In Harris, (Houson) Messrs. Brashear, McGowan, and F. Moore are elected. In Montgomery, General Sam Houston, with four others, is chosen.

Captain Elliott is to remain at Galveston, to await the action of Congress on the proposals of the Mexican Government.

June 27, 1845, RWv22i51p2c1, The annexation of Texas

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE NORTHERN STATES, OR AMERICA.

My Friends, -I had lately occasion to write to you on the subject of slavery, and I, now feel a desire (talking so deep as interest as I do in your political welfare) to write to you again on another not less important subject, -I mean the annexation of Texas to your republic –a measure which will not only extend, but perpetuate the sufferings of the negro race. Perhaps you will immediately reply, “What necessity for this, when both our Legislatures have already passed a bill for this great measure, and when it has been signed by the President, and when, therefore, it can neither be altered nor undone?” I know all this; but I deny that it is yet a perfect bill, for it wants the acceptance of the Texas Government and people. There may be a considerable interval of time before all the necessary arrangements for the object can be completed. This interval may be of great importance to you who hate this measure, as you may use it much to your advantage.

How do you know, in the first place, that the Texans will accept your offer? There is a very strong party in Texas who prefer a connection with England rather than with America. Texas may no so easily come in the American Union as you may imagine. Will there then be difficulties in the way besides? –no disputes, which it will take time to settle, before the object can be accomplished? I have heard of one case already which will occasion discussion. Some people in America think that the Union will not be safe if it be based only on the Resolutions of both Houses of the Legislature and signature of the President. Others think that it will be secure only by a Treaty. But will there be no other subjects for dispute where the interests of so many thousand are concerned? It will take time on the part of Texas also to determine how many new States are to be created, what are to be their boundaries, of which Maps are to be made, -and which of them, after many consultations of the inhabitants of Texas, are to be the Slave States, and which of them are to be free. In fact, there will be plenty of work beside, to be done by the Texans themselves, before annexation can take place. Again, are you sure that then Indians in the neighborhood of the Texan provinces, who know, to their cost, that Americans under no other character than that of money making of land, will not put a spoke in the wheel of such a union, and appeal to arms, rather than have such enemies of mankind in their neighborhood? Again, are you sure that Mexico will be a quiet spectator, and see her former province wrested from her, and not proclaim ware either against Texas or the United States? If she proclaims war against Texas, with what face can the American states justify themselves in the eyes of the civilized world for the part they have taken in drawing off Texas from Mexico? Again, are you sure that the Powers of Europe will not, somehow, or other, be dragged into the contest, and particularly when they see that the effect of victory on one side will only be aggrandizement, without any other result than to entail unparalleled miseries for ever upon a vast portion of this unoffending human race? Again, and lastly, will you my friends on the northern states, take no part yourselves against annexation, -give your neighbors of the south no trouble, but let them have their own way without a constitutional resistance to the measure? No; I believe you will rise as one man against it. You have been too long in chains to the south ever to wear them again, if an opportunity should ever occur of getting rid of them. Such an opportunity for asserting your own liberty appears to me to be at hand; and, as there may be (as I have just shown,) in carrying the measure, many obstacles in the way, many contingencies to rise up, all of which it will take time to meet, a sufficient interval of time will be given you, before the final settlement of the contemplated change, in which to make successful efforts to extricate yourselves from your present bondage.

That the northern states have been in bondage to the unprincipled slaveholding people of the south is a notorious fact. They have been robbed of their rights by the latter. They cannot make laws for the whole American community, as the south do; but must submit to the laws which the people of the south may choose to impose upon them, however cruel, however unjust, however revolting to their consciences. They have not a fair representation in Congress. This every American knows; and of this every American of the north bitterly complains. But how did this hateful –this abominable distinction as to privilege, arise! I will not tell you myself, lest I should be thought partial; I had rather it should come from some person of authority such for instance, as from Judge Stroud, an American

But is it really true that this compromise has been attended with such vexatious effects? I repeat, that it is true. I assert, that the good people of the north cannot even now mention it but with some indignation, for they may be told to feel it daily. Some one circumstance or another is frequently rising up which puts them in mind of their degradation. In the first place, every sacrifice is made by Congress to uphold the Slave-holding interests of the South in preference to any other interest. If the People of the North have a point to carry, however beneficial to the country at large, yet, if it meddling in the least with Slavery, they are sure to be outvoted; and if the People of Planter of the South have in their turn a point to carry, however cruel and unjust, or however contrary it may be to their consciences, and even to the Laws of God, it is sure to pass into a law. But this superiority of the South over the North as it relates to the number of cotes, is often very vexatious and harassing to the subject in bills or acts of Congress, where personal liberty is concerned. A few years ago conversation in America was directed more than usually to the wickedness of Slavery, so that it could not escape observation as a common topic. Upon this the Planters were . . . [illegible] . . . and it was resolved that the evil taking was so vitally detrimental to the interests of the south that it should be immediately stopped; but how was this to be accomplished? And now I have to record an instance of audacity in the American Congress not paralleled in the representative history of the world. Congress resolved that the inhabitants of the whole of the United States should be tongue-tied. What did they forget their duty as representatives of a land of which they boasted as the more free in the whole world? Did they not as once think that they were invading by such a measure of the liberties of the people? No; no such thought ever once came over their minds. Whatever the outrage might be, a sacrifice must be made for the good of the south. The consequence was that they passed what were called the gagging bills. The people were denied the liberty of speech as to any censor upon slavery, and the postmasters in all the towns of the different states were enabled and commanded to open all suspected letters and parcels, and to make their contents known. And breach of this law was accompanied with censure, and as a source at times of considerable uneasiness, vexation, and even suffering. A this very hour a master has a cote for every three slaves out of five, and this was a part of the compromise.

Let me mention another instance where the people of the northern States had reason to be dissatisfied with the people of the south, and where they could not help themselves. Congress, at the instigation of the planters, made war upon certain of the Indians, whole tribes of whom were exterminated during the contest, merely upon the plea that their lands were too near to the American plantations of the south, and that these plantations might be disturbed ast some time or other, and, at any rate, that they might afford a hiding place of place of refuge for fugitive slaves. A great majority of the people of the north, as religious men, deprecated this war. It was founded on a mere supposition of injury. They contended that this proximity of the two lands was not the fault of the Indians.
Congress had sold land to those who would buy it. They who bought it were anxious to settle it as soon as they could. This one plantation after another rose up, and this so rapidly, that in a few years the new plantations of the settlers came near to the Indian frontier. The Indians, therefore, were not to be blamed for this, but they did not advance upon the settlers, but stayed at home, and the settlers advanced upon them. They contended, again, that as the war was not undertaken on their account, but wholly on account of the slaveholders of the south, they ought not to share in the burden of the expenses of it. –Now, what was the answer which the southern members in Congress gave to those remonstrances? An answer worthy of slaveholders, “that a civilized people, inhabiting any country, had a right to . . . [illegible] . . . of their land, if residing on it, or in the neighborhood, because soon people did no good to themselves or to others.” I should like to know which were the barbarians, the Congress or the Indians? We see in these two instances, as I have observed before, without mentioning others, that everything was to be sacrificed so the slaveholding interests, and that the compromise before mentioned, obtained originally in an evil hour, rendered the people of the north helpless as to any opposition to the south, however, unjust the measures of the latter might be. Is it not a gralling matter, a matter of constant irritation to the former, living under the same Government, and as good subjects as the latter, to feel as they are to obey laws which their conscience disapprove, and to feel, moreover, that they have no hope of an ameliorated system? –for slavery has been so firmly riveted and ramified into the customs of the state by the machinations of the Legislature, first suggested by the planters, that nothing but the abolition of slavery itself can give any hope of reformation. No man is chosen to take office under the Government (and how many hundred public offices are there in the United States) who does not pledge himself by an oath that he will take up and secure every fugitive slave he may meet with, that he may be returned to his master, even though such a return in prohibited by the law of God. The consequences of such a law has been, that some of the best magistrates in the land give up every year their offices, not being able to reconcile this injunction to their consciences, and the laws of God. Thus every thing is done by a slaveholding Government to uphold slavery. If a door is left open to public emolument, a man is thrust in who is made to change his views with respect to slavery, and to swell the suffrages of the southern free-holders.

But will the good people of the north consent to live under the chains of the south forever? Will they consent to have no will of their own in legislation? Will they be any longer the degraded gaolers of the south for all their fugitive slaves? Will they be pleased with any more gagging bills? If they submit to this, then they must be content with their present degraded constitution. But will they be better off if Texas should be annexed to their republic? No. If Texas should bring with her into the union a number of new slave states, and two representatives should be allowed to each, as is proposed, then the number of votes hostile to the north would be increased, so that the people of the northern states would have no hope whatever, from their votes, of a change in their political condition. Their chains would be only riveted the faster, for they would still have a slaveholding Cabinet, and a slaveholding Congress, and their enemies would be more numerous than before. Now what good is to be expected from such men as these, as to an upright administration of the affairs of state? Men of hardened hearts, men daily familiar with cruelty and injustice, men who act on the principle of expediency, instead of that of honor and honesty, and who appear to have no fear of God before their eyes. The people of the north have already seen such men in office to their cost; and will such men lose their habits the less because they are more in number than formerly? There is no hope then of an amelioration of the representation if Texas should be added to the union, and this is what the northern states what, and all they want.

And now, my friends of the North, suffer me from the love I bear to you, and as a long-tried and uncompromising enemy to slavery, to give you my advice at this particular crisis. I have already told you that a considerable interval of time must elapse before the negotiations to bring about the annexation of Texas can be finished, and I have told you also that you ought to use that interval with all your energies, in case the union of Texas with your republic should be resolve upon –I repeat, to use all your energies to shake off the yoke under which you have so long groaned. Well, then, an opportunity now occurs for your so using it, which will never occur again. You are going to have a change in your constitution; that is, you are going to have a newly-created Congress, constituting of Americans, as before, and Texans mixed, the latter of whom are foreigners. It will perhaps be said that there can be no violation of the Constitution in creating such a Congress. I have to say in reply, that, if I am properly informed, it is a violation of the present law of right to citizenship, which is a part of the present constitution. I have always understood that if a foreigner marries an American woman, he becomes an American citizen, and that residence for a certain length of time in the United States entitles him to the same right; but here are people clearly all foreigners, and no one of whom probably ever resided in the country for perhaps a day, made citizens at once. The old constitution never contemplated such a change, nor does any law now existing sanction it. The vote of Congress for annexation is therefore an innovation, as far as right to citizenship is concerned; and Congress, I apprehend, must make a new law for purpose, or annexation will not be valid.

I would advise you, then my friends, at every next meeting of the Congress, to prepare a petition to that body from the whole of the inhabitants of the northern states, stating first, that as they (the Congress) are going to make a change in the constitution of the United States, by receiving foreigners into the union, they would take the case of the north into consideration, and grant them an equal representation with the people of the south.

2. That some of the laws of the south now in force are so repugnant to the consciences of those in the north, that they cannot give their support.

3. That is was naturally expected that when the Convention came to deliberate on the great question of representation; the people of the north would have been allowed equal rights with the people of the south; but this expectation was defeated by a compromise begun and carried on by intrigue, and that the petitioners therefore beg leave to demand restoration of those rights which they were so unjustly deprived.

4. That any change or innovation of the constitution of the United States to suit the annexation of Texas would be less of an innovation than that of an alteration in the representative system, because such an alteration is only a restoration to a natural right.

Having now given you my idea of the sort of petition, leading you to use your own words and ideas, I recommend that this letter of mine should be extensively circulated in the northern states, and directed to such persons as are most esteemed by their fellow citizens for their judgement and the integrity of their character; and if it should appeal by their answers that a great majority are favorable to the views it contains, then take measures to get it signed, and to appoint a most respectable deputation to present it to Congress to introduce and argue the matter there.
I do not think at present that I should add anything more to the petition. After the petition has been read and commented upon, you will know the mind of Congress as well as who are your friends and who your opponents, and judge accordingly. It will be quite time after this to resolve what to do. If it be found that it is the will of a great majority of the people of the north that there should be a separation into the two states, you will act accordingly; but at any rate it will be more handsome to begin the amelioration you wish for in this than any other manner.

June 27, 1845, RWv22i51p4c2, Very late from Mexico

—The bark Anahuac, Capt. Wilson, arrived this morning in 22 days from Vera Cruz. Governor Shannon, our late Minister to Mexico, came passenger in her.

Capt. Wilson, with Mr. Shannon and his passengers and letter bag, came up this morning in the eight o’clock boat from Quarantine. The political condition of things was very unsettled. It was the general belief that there would be another revolution in Mexico. The Government was very poor, and unable to pay the Army or Navy with any degree of promptness. The general belief among all classes in Mexico, was that Texas would not accept the terms offered by the congress of the United States, and that consequently the country would not be annexed. There was a very hustle feeling against Americans, and the people believed that, should Texas be annexed, a declaration of war would follow. —N. Y. Express. [BJM]

July 1, 1845: Oregon Meeting In Illinois

A large meeting for Oregon has recently been held at Springfield, the seat of government for Illinois, at which, Governor Ford very indecently (it would be thought here) presided. These Illinois boys, are we imagine, the very choicest specimens of "Progressive Democracy" any where to be found. Carrying away the palm even from New Hampshire, and the Empire Club! They adopted at this meeting the following resolutions, which it will be observed, modestly claim all the Northwest, up to the 54th deg. of latitude; all that is in controversy, they decide by a scrape of the pen to be our own, or rather their own, for we hope no Virginian adopt their wise and enlightened resolutions as the course of the Government, would be to slam the door in the face of the all negotiation, an tantamount to an immediate declaration of war against England:

"Friday Evening, June 6. The meeting having again organized; Gov. Ford in the chair—Mr. Calhoun modified his resolutions to read as follows:

Resolved, That the title of the United States to the Oregon Territory, the north latitude of 54 degrees and 40 minutes, is clear and indisputable; and is so recognised by all the people of all parties in the United States. Resolved, That it is the duty of the United States Government to assert this right, without delay, by building forts, and placing troops on the route to the Pacific, for the protection of emigrants, and by extending our laws over the country.

Resolve, That the American right to the Oregon country being clear and indisputable, we unwilling to hazard our rights by submitting the dispute with England, to the arbitrament of any foreign power. Resolved, That independent of all questions of title by discovery or treaty, this republic ought not to permit any new colony to be established in any unsettled portion of this continent, by any foreign prince or potentate.

Resolve, That this principle requires that we should not permit Great Britain to possess any portion of the Oregon. And although we are adverse to war, if war can be honorably avoided, yet we are ready, willing, and anxious, if necessary, to maintain the American title to the whole country by an appeal to arms.

The question on the above was, on motion of Mr. McFarland taken on each separately; and they were unanimously adopted. The Hon. E.D. Baker the offered the following:

Resolved, That we are in favor of the termination of the joint occupation of the Oregon, and desire that necessary steps should be taken to accomplish that object, in accordance with existing treaty stipulations.

The question put on the above resolution it was unanimously adopted. On motion of Maj. Baker, the Secretaries of the meeting were instructed to furnish the President of the United States with a copy of the resolutions adopted by this meeting. It was then resolved, that the officers of the meeting sign the proceedings, and that the editors of all newspapers friendly to the objects of the meeting, be requested to publish the same.

We confess our astonishment that such wild and irrational views should have emanated from a Whig source of intelligence, and if we withdraw the adjuration to "save the country from such Whigs" so far as that the Wheeling Times is personally concerned (if we may so say) we renew it and reiterate it with fresh emphasis against opinions which we deem unlawful in principle and destructive in tendency. And upon what foundation does the Times place these erratic notions and from what source of Right derive the American claim to take summary possession of Oregon, regardless of Treaties, regardless of rival claims heretofore acknowledged by our government to be entitled to consideration, regardless of instant and prolonged war? Why if we understand it, which perhaps we do not, upon some vague and fanciful hypothesis, that if we have not the right of priority of discovery and occupancy, we ought to have it, because we should fit that country with better institutions than Europe could give her; that in short the superiority of our form of government gives us a title to extend it over all unoccupied countries. If we misinterpret our contemporary undesignedly we are sorry for it; if correctly, we feel confident that the enlightened Whigs of the northwest will concur with us in saying that these are not Whig doctrines, but the worst doctrines of the worst portion of the self-styled "Democracy."

The Times advances another and a yet more selfish reason for acquiescing in all the frantic designs of the ultra Democracy who propose the immediate occupation by force if necessary (as forces and a large force would be necessary) of all Oregon from the frontiers of California to the Russian Colony. That reason is that the Northwestern States desire it and will have it, and that is useless to incur the defeat and party injury which must ensue from a collision with the popular humor! Noble ethics these! Noble motives to address to a nation of enlightened freemen and Christians, to submit to and acquiesce in the perpetration of wrong, outrage and calamity, because forsooth a virtuous resistance might prove unavailing! As Whigs we denounce and reprobate such doctrines. For one we are ready to incur eternal party defeat, in preference to achieving success by means which would overwhelm the Whig party with self reproach, and justly forfeit the glory which none can take from it, of combating for principle and on principle.

Some of the Democratic prints represent Gen. Jackson's last words to have been, "no compromise (with England) but at the cannon's mouth!" When Jefferson died, some spluttering expression was put in his mouth too—we believe it was, "call the Committee on Public Safety together!" These in our opinion are pure inventions, one and all of them, or at best the ravings of distemper and therefore of no signification. They are pious frauds intended by the inventors to set off the dying Hero or Sage, and to represent him in the agonies of dissolution as still superior to the fear of Death, and as still absorbed in solicitude for his country's honour and welfare! We have no faith in this super-human fortitude, and reject all such statements as fabulous. He who is grappling with death thinks not beyond his immediate state or the dear friends whom he is about to resign, or that awful Being to whom he is about to account. He has not time for fine or Heroic speeches. We object to this last moribund Humbug concerning Gen. Jackson particularly, because it is calculated and was no intended to foster the war spirit which already prevails among the "Progressive Democracy."

RW45v22i53 July 4, 1845 Significant!

(From the Charleston Mercury—Calhoun) "We never dreamed that, under the circumstances which places Mr. Calhoun in the State Department—called by the voice of all parties to its high duties—he could be removed by Mr. Polk much less that he could be displaced in the midst of Oregon negotiation, and with the tender of a commercial treaty from England to us. But the same blindness that led to this result seems to have haunted Mr. Polk in regard to our foreign relations themselves. His inaugural declaration that our title to Oregon was "clear and unquestionable," was a terrible mistake. Construed as every plain man would construe if, it put an end to negotiation. "Clear and unquestionable," rights cannot be put into the compromising crucible of negotiation without dishonor. "Great Britain very naturally, I think, took the declaration as an assertion our completer right to the whole territory in dispute, and our determination to maintain it. She accordingly prepares for war. But did the President mean it as the announcement of war? Certainly not, for he goes on negotiating. Does he wish a war? I believe him to be a good man, therefore he cannot desire the desolations of such a conflict. I suppose the truth to be, that the President was only thinking very innocently of winning additional popularity in the Wes, and that I never occurred to him that he was erecting an almost insuperable barrier to the peaceful settlement, or even peacefully attempt to settle the question, unless by arbitration. It is indisputable that before this declaration Great Britain would have accepted terms of compromise that might well be considered satisfactory to this country. National pride and jealousy now fully aroused, and the unanimous pledges of all parties to sustain the British Minister may meet us in opposition to any concession of the extreme claims of England. Mr. Calhoun, it is understood, declined last winter the proposal of Great Britain to refer the matter to arbitration. If he had been retained in the State Department, we may be sure that all chance of settlement by negotiation would never thus have been impaired by the needless boast of the inaugural. And no, Mr. Editor, if we in South Carolina shall be dragged into a war for one of the most worthless countries in the world in proportion to its extent, and of no earthly present use but as an enormous drain from the United States Treasury into the West, what a glorious consummation will it be to our patriotic efforts in President making! It does seem to me that this game to us is very like the game of coppers among boys—"heads I win, and tails you lose"! I am sorry to confess it, but I feel much like—"A Humbugged Man."

RW45v22i53p3c4 July 4, 1845 Letters of Distinguished Men

The English Mission—The "Town" makes itself merry over the ludicrous way in which the honor of representing the Union at St. James's has been going a begging through the land’ and gives several of the replies received by Mr. Polk to his overtures to the different personages, who (the Town says) have had the offer made to them.—They are certainly very characteristic.

Chapel Hill, May—. My dear Mr. Polk:--I am perfectly aware that the party have driven you into a mighty narrow place; but you will get used to such things, as I have, before your next term. I have learnt by experience that there are always scrapes for green ones to get into.—You should not have suffered the party to get your nose to the grind stone, unless you meant to suffer some. AS to taking the mission to St. James's I'll see you d—d first.

Yours respectfully, Thomas H. Benton.

Lindenwold, May--. Most Excellent Sir:--Yours, offering me the place of Minister to England, is duly received. My opinions on this subject are, I trust, definitely understood. By the way, have noticed in the papers how sadly we want rain in the North? Garden vegetables, will, I fear, suffer immensely. The appointment of my son John as Attorney General of this State must, I think, have afforded you much pleasure, and have been perfectly satisfactory to General Jackson. I believe that the United States Bank was a curse to the this country, and that a proper regard for interest of the Union does not demand that a new name for the confederacy should be adopted; although I am free to confess that banks under proper regulations, may be very useful, and that, should the public sentiment require it, I should be the first to glory in the name of Alleghania.

Your, with great respect. Martin Van Buren

Washington May--, Sir:-- My engagements with Mr. Morse will not permit me to accept your very flattering offer of the mission to England. Another reason is that it has been a cardinal principle with me to accept only offices of profit, and as the mission alluded to would probably pay a loss of $10,000 per annum, it wouldn't answer my purpose at all. If the party will guarantee to make up the loss and pay me a bonus for breaking with Mr. Morse, I am open to propositions. Failing in this, I respectfully offer the use of the Magnetic Telegraph to government to communicate with Mr. McLane.

Very Respectfully,
Amos Kendall.

RW45v22i53p3c5 July 4, 1845 My Very Dear Sir

My arrival the seat of Government seems to have passed not altogether unnoticed, since it has been your Excellency's pleasure to prefer me, through your private and confidential Secretary, so distinguished an honor as that of representing this vast and growing country, as "Minister Plenipotentiary and Ambassador Extraordinary" at the Court of St. James. In your very kind not you have been pleased to bestow not a few unmerited compliments upon my ability to settle, in a diplomatic capacity, the serious difficulties growing out of the thoughtless expression in you Inaugural relative to Oregon. I cannot be confess to you my serious apprehensions upon reading that part of your address, which I thought at the time, would cause John Bull to bristle up. You say, too, in your kind favor of this morning, that you have been exceedingly at a loss for some proper person upon whom to throw the "Harness" of Embass, and that now I am "in town" that difficulty no longer exists. It would seem from this that you regard me as peculiarly fit to ring in upon the nobility of England. I am truly sensible of my capacity in that particular and must say without the fear of being thought egotistical, that the shape and talent, of which it has ever been my fortune to boast, ought to seem, in the eyes of the world, to point me out as the very person who could figure in the "Marble Halls" of Old England.

By the war, sir, speaking of marble halls; did you ever "dream" of dwelling in them until after had actually found yourself in the White House? I put not this question to you in any other sense than merely to mark the difference in the luck of distinguished men—like you and myself. I have "dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," so often that it at last puzzled me to believe my senses, upon waking up and finding myself still Red River Retreat. While you, I am led to believe, never in all your fancies "laid such a flattering union to your soul." But see the difference, there you are now occupying as "Young Hickory" the place of your illustrious predecessor "Old Hickory," whilst I, like a Rover as I am, enjoy the broad canopy of Heaven for a bedspread. You have intimated thought, if I mistake not, your (indecipherable). Beau Hickman P.S. Since writing the above it has occurred to me that with all my qualifications for flourishing as Ambassador Extraordinary. I would be become willing to preside over the Treasury Department which would put just in my element, among the Finances. The duties of such a post would not be strange to me, as many distinguished men upon whom I have in can testify.

As Above, Yours& C. Beau

RW45v22i53p4c2 July 4, 1845 To the Editors of the Union

Dear Sir: In your paper of the 5th inst., you have quoted largely from the N.O. Republican, and a letter from Gen. Jackson, the effect of which quotation is to identify your paper and the administration with Gen. Samuel Houston. You do not know Houston as I know him. And as the tendency of your remarks and of the extracts which you have quoted is to perpetrate a fraud upon the people of this country, a fraud deeply injurious to the interests of Texas. I claim the privilege of replying to them, and setting the public right as to Gen. Houston's character and purposes. The published letter of the British minister in Texas, proves that Gen. Houston and Dr. Jones pledged themselves to the British government that they were opposed is notorious in Texas: and if it had not been so before, the late developments of Jones' diplomatic intrigues with the British minister are conclusive. For it is folly to attempt to separate Jones and Houston. They are identical, as is further known by the fact that having reached Galveston on his way to the United States, he there ascertained that the public sentiment of Texas had reached a crisis which threatened destruction to him and his faction if he did not move with the current; and therefore he hastened to Washington, and induced Jones to issue his proclamation calling a convention to meet on the 4th of July. Finding that he could not arrest the torrent of public opinion, he resolved, if possible to put himself at the head of the movement.

But, Sir, that was not all. His policy has been to array Western Texas against Eastern Texas that he might put himself at the head of the stronger against the weaker interest, and he has gone so far as to induce Jones to usurp the right o apportion the representatives in the convention to meet on the 4th of July, because he feared to leave that question with Congress, because he hoped by this usurpation, to give to the eastern counties larger representation in the State Legislature than he could otherwise do, hoping thereby to increase his chances of getting to the Senate. He has not only refused to give that protection to the West which it was his duty, as the President of the Republic, to give, but he has done all that could do to arrest emigration to the Wes, and by dividing the Republic
By a contract made with Charles Fenton Mercer, without authority of law, he has endeavored to so locate the emigration coming into the republic, as to strengthen his personal and political influence, by fraudulently granting to Mr. Mercer and his British abolition associates, the right to colonise a large district of the finest and best lands in Texas, said to contain near twelve millions of acres. A grant made as I repeat, without authority of law, and closing the land office to those who had right claims and military bounty warrants, and which illegally deprived the old settlers who had conquered the country, of their just rights, and granting millions of their best lands to Mr. Mercer and British abolitionists. In this Gen. Houston has overdone his part. The fraud has excited a feeling of indignation against him, which manifest itself in the proceedings in every part of the republic, and gave a deeper feeling to the demand for annexation. One of the inducements to which was a desire to redeem the country from the corrupt men into whose hands the corrupt intrigues of Houston had betrayed it. We are at no loss for the object of his visit to the Hermitage. Houston sees in the annexation of Texas, an opportunity of transferring his intrigues to another theatre. He is (we are told) already a candidate for the Presidency of the United States; and we who know the excess of his vanity, and the former success of his duplicity and cunning, can easily credit the report. To attain this preferment, he seeks first to reach the Senate of the United States, and he wished to obtain the endorsement of General Jackson, and of the administration at Washington, that he is to be the channel through which the patronage at Washington is to be dispensed. Hence although it is notorious that he was drunk during the greater part of the time that he was at Washington, during the late session of the late Texan Congress, he now comes to New Orleans to make temperance speeches; and hence he has the indelicacy to drag in his wife’s name, and his wife’s religion as constituting one element of his claims to popular favor.

But above all, sir, permit me to call your attention to General Houston’s own confession, made to a late public meeting held in the city of New Orleans. Did he not there acknowledge that he had as President of the Republic of Texas, been guilty of insincerity and deception, duplicity and cunning, in treating with high minded honorable gentlemen representing two governments, (England and France) notorious for their strict honor and rigid observance of good faith in all matters in which they may have been concerned—two nations that had at an early period of Texan difficulties recognised the independence of her government, and in good faith sent accredited agents to conduct an honorable interchange of mutual obligations and duties between the parties.

What, may I ask, will be the feelings of the honorable gentlemen who have been duped by the infidelity and falsehood of General Houston? And what the indignation of their respective governments, when they find that they have treating with a nation confiding their national character to the keeping of such a man as General Samuel Houston? The government of Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli, or even Mexico, in their most reckless contempt of national obligation and good faith would not have made an acknowledgment so humiliating to their countries; and yet General Houston, later President of Texas, gives to his falsehoods the softer name of “coquetry.” What unblushing guilt has marked this man’s whole career! I will not trouble you with details, connected with the moral turpitude of his nature. Though, be assured, if there was one redeeming trait in his character, I would hail it as a green spot in the waste of morals. I deem it my duty, as a citizen of Texas, knowing Gen. Sam. Houston well, and that he has at all times been a withering blight upon her destinies to protest against your identifying your paper, or the administration, with him or his corrupt and hypocritical proceeding. I sign my own proper name to this letter, because its character is such as to require that I alone be held responsible for it.

Most respectfully, Your friend and servant. Branch T. Archer

The Acadia has arrived, bringing dates to June 19 from Liverpool. She arrived in Boston Wednesday night, after a passage of thirteen and a half days, although detained by icebergs and head winds. The Britannia went out in twelve days.

A most terrible revolution has broken out in the Holy Land between the Druses and Christians, who were slaughtering each other, the Turks encouraging these hostilities. Many thousands have been killed and many churches burnt. A crisis is about taking place in Syria.
Cotton was looking well—a great demand and large sales. In the Share market there is still much business doing, and speculation has been busy in the lines which still occupy the attention of Parliament. In the manufacturing districts there has been much activity apparent, and the superior descriptions of printing cloths have experienced a slight improvement.

The weather during the last week has been such as to raise the most sanguine expectations respecting the new crops. The cold and bleak winds gave way to heat and sunshine, and finer days have rarely beamed from the heavens than those of the past week. There has been an extensive demand for Cotton during the last week, the sales having reached the respectable quantity of 43,870 bales. Surats have declined 1/8 d per lb., but American closed with the quotations of the previous week.

The Iron trade has recovered from the temporary depression under which it labored. In Staffordshire forged pigs an improvement to the extent of 5s to 10s, per ton has taken place.

Nothing is said about Oregon or Texas, and the best feelings seem to be entertained towards this country.

Messrs. Bering have accepted the agency of New Granada, an arrangement which has thrown an increased respectability around its stock, as may be inferred from the fact of the bonds having improved to the extent of one percent.

The Diet of Sweden has closed, after having passed many important measures calculated to be beneficial to the mass of the people. Great efforts are being made to cultivate cotton in British India. The Bombay Chamber of Commerce has published a report on this subject, showing the rapid progress already made.

We will allude to it hereafter. The steam ship Great Britain is to spend a week at Dublin before coming to New York. She made fourteen miles an hour on a recent course. The screw principle, we hear, will shortly be adopted for a new line of steamers between Liverpool and Dublin.

Texas Annexed

The "long agony is over," and Texas has been annexed to the United States. As anything we might say could not undo what has been done, we copy from the Union of the 4th, the latest news from the no longer "lone" Star. Let those that can rejoice do so, but take care their rejoicings do no turn to sorrow.

Important and Glorious News (From the Washington Union)

On the eve of the great day which is consecrated to the independence of our country, we hail the re-union of Texas with the United States. We will now tread the road of freedom and greatness together. This news comes to us by the Princeton steamer, which arrived at Annapolis today at 2 o'clock. Dr. Wright brings the dispatches from Annapolis. He left Washington, Texas, on the 21st June, and arrived at Galveston on the 23rd —on which day the Princeton left that place. We are favored by the Doctor with following memoranda:

"The United States ship Princeton, Commodore Stockton arrived at Annapolis, from Galveston, Texas, after the short passage of nine days, having consumed only 93 tons coal. She steamed against head winds, with the exception of only 36 hour, when she was assisted by her sails. No atlantic steamer has ever made so good an hourly average, with the same economy of fuel; and considering all the circumstances, it may be regarded as an unprecedented passage.

The news brought by the Princeton is of the most interesting character. Both houses of the Texan Congress have unanimously consented to the terms of the joint resolution of the United States. The Senate had rejected the treaty with Mexican by a unanimous cote. Capt. Wagaman had arrived at Washington, Texas, to select posts to be occupied by the United States troops, and to provide for their subsistence. A resolution was introduced into both houses of Congress, requiring the Executive to surrender all posts, navy-yards, barracks, &c., to the proper authorities of the U. States. The joint resolutions were introduced into both houses of Congress on the same day, and were almost identical in their tenor. The resolutions passed the Senate on the 18th of June, and were sent to the House; the House laid them on the table, and passed their own resolutions unanimously, and sent them to the Senate on the next day. In the mean time, considerable jealously arose as to which branch should claim the honor of the paternity of the resolutions; and it was finally settled that the House should take up the resolutions of the Senate, and amend them in the third section, The House then passed them in their present form, and sent them back to the Senate, which body concurred in the amendment. The President is pledged to give full and immediate effect to the will of Congress, so far as depends upon himself."

This important intelligence has just reached the President of the United States, [this evening, half past 8] Dr. Wright brings copious dispatches from our able charge Major Donelson; but they are written prior to the adoption of resolutions of the Congress of Texas. He also brings newspapers, embracing the "National Register," printed at Washington, of the 19th June, three days after Congress assembled. We must confine ourselves principally to the contents of the Galveston "News Extra" of the 23rd June. The "Nation Register" contains the correspondence between Major Donelson and the Government of Texas, from March 31, 1845, down to June 11th, accompanying President Jones' message to Congress.

News Extra –President Jones’ Message &c.

We are indebted to Mr. Briggs for the following interesting documents, which we hasten to give our readers. Verbally we learn from Mr. Briggs, that the propositions for our independence have been submitted to the Senate. They are not yet made public; but it is understood that they are highly objectionable, and will be promptly rejected.

Executive Department. Washington, June 16, 1845.

Gentlemen of the Senate and of the House of Representatives: I am happy to meet you, on this interesting occasion, as the representatives of the people, again assembled in the discharge of your high and important duties. The call of an extraordinary session of Congress at the early day, but the Executive, was not made without the most mature, deliberation, and a due deference to the great crisis which has arisen since your late adjournment, in the affairs of Texas as well as the almost unanimous expression of public will which took place throughout the country in regard to the same.

The Executive has now the pleasure to transmit to the honorable Congress, for such action as the may deem suitable, the propositions which have been made on the part of the United States to this Government, for the annexation of Texas, and its incorporation, as a State, into that great and kindred Confederacy, together with the correspondence between the two Governments, which has arisen out of the same. This correspondence, entering, as it does, very fully into the views and sentiments of the Governments in question, renders it unnecessary for the Executive to add [for the information or consideration of Congress] but little thereto in reference to the proposed union, render those terms more much acceptable than they would otherwise have been. The state of public opinion, and the great anxiety of the people to act definitely upon the subject of annexation, by a convention of deputies, as prescribed in the resolutions of the United States Congress, induce the Executive to issue his proclamation on the 5th of May, ultimo recommending an election for sixty one deputies, to be held in the several counties throughout the republic, on the 4th of the present month, and to assemble in convention, at the city of Austin, on the 4th of July next.

This recommendation has met the sanction of the citizens of Texas generally, and the deputies in the several counties; so far as heard from, having been elected upon the basis proposed, it is confidently expected the convention will assemble at the time and place fixed upon. To this convention, the question of annexation, and the adoption of a State constitution, will probably belong; and they will determine the great question of annexation, and they will determine the great question of the nationality of Texas, as to them shall seem most conductive to the interest, happiness, and prosperity of the people whom they will represent.

It is important that the "consent of the existing Government" should be given to their exercising the powers which have been delegated to them, in order to comply with a requirement to that effect in the resolutions on the subject of annexation, passed by the American Congress. For this purpose, the present extraordinary session of the Congress of the Republic of Texas has been convoked, and to its wisdom, as a co-ordinate department, the Executive now submits the determination of the matter. The services to be performed by the Convention will be arduous and will probably engage it for a considerable period of time and the Executive would respectfully recommend to Congress the propriety of making a suitable appropriation for the payment of its members, as well as the officers it may find occasion to employ.

The Executive has the pleasure in addition to presenting Congress the proposition concerning annexation, to inform them that certain conditions, preliminary to a treaty of peace, upon the basis of a recognition of the independence of Texas by Mexico, were signed on the part of the latter, at the city of Mexico, on the 12th of May last, and were transmitted to this Government of the 2d instant, by the Baron Alleye de Cyprey, minister plenipotentiary of his Majesty the King of the French, at that court by the hands of Capt. Elliott, her Britannic Majesty's Charge d' Affaires near this Government. In consequence of the signing of these preliminaries, the Executive believing it to be his duty, in the recess of Congress, to make the fact known to the people of Texas, and to declare and proclaim a cessation of hostilities between Texas and Mexico, until the same could be communicated to, and acted upon, by Congress and the Convention about to assemble. A proclamation for this purpose was consequently issued on the 4th instant, a copy of which is herewith transmitted. The preliminaries being in the nature of a treaty, will, with all the correspondence in relation thereto, be forthwith communicated to the honorable Senate, for its constitutional advice, and such action as to its wisdom, the same shall seem to require.

The alternative of annexation or independence will thus be placed before the people of Texas, and their free, sovereign and unbiased voice will determine the all important issue and so far as it shall depend upon the Executive to act, he will give immediate and full effect to the expression of their will. His situation in regard to the important subjects now communicated to Congress, has, since their late adjournment, been one of great delicacy and embarrassment. Questions of much difficulty have been presented for this determination, upon which the fate and welfare of the country depended and. Without precedent or constitutional guide for his governance, he has been obliged to assume, in consequence, great and severe responsibilities. He trusts, however, that Congress will approve the course he has adopted, and, by their enlightened counsels, relieve and direct him in the course hereafter to be pursued in relation to those questions.

The Executive is happy to announce to Congress, that Texas is at peace with the world; that with all foreign powers with whom we have had intercourse, friendly relations are maintained. The different tribes on Indians on our borders, with whom treaties exist, have continued to observe the same with good faith; and within the last few days, information has been received, that the only band of Comanches within our limits, who had maintained until then a hostile attitude towards Texas, have sued for peace, and expressed a wish to be permitted come to Bexar celebrate a treaty of friendship, which, on the part of this Government has been complied with. The arrangement made your regular session, for additional companies of rangers to be mustered into service, have been carried into full effect, and have afforded adequate and very efficient protection to our frontiers. The receipts into the treasury have been sufficient to meet various expenditures of the government.

A specie currency has been maintained without difficulty; and all the exchequer bills which were in circulation at the period of your late adjournment, have been redeemed and withdrawn from circulation; and the Executive is happy to congratulate the Congress and the country upon a state of peace, happiness, and prosperity, never before experienced by Texas, and rarely, if ever, equaled by so young a nation. It only remains for the Executive to express an assured confidence in your individual wishes to sustain the best interest of Texas, and the fervent hope the He, who holds the destinies of me and nations in his hand, may crown your deliberations with his richest blessings.

Anson Jones
RW45v22i54p1c6 July 8, 1845 Joint Resolution

Giving the consent of the existing government to the annexation of Texas to the United States. Whereas, the government of the United States hath proposed the following terms, guarantees, and conditions, on which the people and territory of the Republic of Texas may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, and admitted as one of the States of the American Union, to wit: [Here follow the resolutions of the United States Congress] And, whereas, by said terms the consent of the existing government of Texas is required: Therefore,

Sec. 1. Be it Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Republic of Texas in Congress assembled. That the Government of Texas doth consent that the people and territory of the Republic of Texas may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, with a Republican form of Government, to be adopted by the people of said Republic, by deputies in convention assembled, order that the same may be admitted as one of the States of the American Union; and said consent is given on the terms, guarantees and conditions set forth in the preamble to this joint resolution.

Sec. 2. Be it further Resolved, That the proclamation of the President of the Republic of Texas, bearing date May 5th, 1845, and the election of deputies to sit in Convention at Austin on the 4th day of July next, for the adoption of a Constitution for the State of Texas, had in accordance therewith, hereby receive the consent of the existing Government of Texas.

Sec. 3. Be it further Resolved, That the President of Texas is hereby requested immediately to furnish the Government of the United States, through their accredited Minister near this Government, with a copy of this joint resolution; also to furnish the Convention to assemble at Austin of the 4th of July next, with a copy of the same; and the same shall take effect from and after its passage. The above is a copy of the resolutions as the passed the two Houses, and which will, we suppose, receive the sanction of the President.

They passed unanimously.

Tod Robinson.

We are favored by Dr. Wright with the following memoranda, in MS, takes by himself at Washington, Texas, just before he left it for Galveston:

Memoranda of the conditions preliminary to a treaty of peace, as agreed upon by Ashbel Smith, on the part of Texas, and Mr. Cuevas, on the part of Mexico, and the accompanying papers, as substituted to the Senate by President Jones.

I Message of President Jones, transmitting the treaty and papers to the Senate.

II Letter from Baron Alleye de Cyprey, transmitting to the Executive of Texas the conditions signed by Ashbel Smith, and the agreement on the part of Mexico to accede to them as the basis of a formal treaty.

III Conditions preliminary to a treaty of peace.

1. Mexico consents to acknowledge the independence of Texas.
2. Texas engages that she will stipulate in the treaty not to annex herself, or become subject to any country whatever.
3. Limits and other arrangements to be matters of agreement in the final treaty.
4. Texas to be willing to refer the disputed points with regard to territory, and other matter, to the arbitration of umpires.

Done at Washington, (on the Brazos,) on the 27th of March, 1845.

(Signed) Ashbel Smith, Secretary of State—Certified copy of the original, present by Captain Elliston (Signed) Alley De Cyprey, Bankhead. Mexico, 20th of May.

IV. Acknowledgement by Cuevas of the receipt of these preliminaries, through the intervention of Baron Alley de Cyprey; and declares that the national Congress having consented that Mexico will accede to the preliminaries proposed by Texas, as the basis of a formal Treaty, May 19th, 1845.

V. Addition declaration Cuevas. If this negotiation is not realized on account of circumstances, or because Texas, influenced by the law of the United States on annexation, consents thereto, either directly or indirectly, then the answer which is given under this date to Texas, shall be considered null and void. May 19th.

VI. Letter from President Jones to Baron Alley de Cyprey, acknowledging his kind offices in bringing about the negotiation, &c., &c. We also learn from Dr. S., that H.B.M. man-of-war vessel Eurydice, Captain Elliott, put into Pensacola for water the day before yesterday. She was received with all due courtesy by Com. Conner, and served with water from the city by the Commodore’s own boats. The Eurydice has been some time cruising in the gulf.
Another revolution broke out in the City of Mexico on the 7th inst. It was led on by a General whose name the Mexican papers do not mention. It commenced with one of the Regiments of Grenadiers, who entered the palace and made prisoners of the President and three of his Ministers. The rebellion, however, was soon quelled and order restored—the citizens, by rallying promptly to the rescue, evincing their firm adherence to the new Government. The General in command of the revokers made his escape; but the Colonel of the Regiment and forty of his men were instantly tried and shot.

In connection with this revolt, it is mentioned that previous to the departure of Santa Ana from Mexico, the troops stationed at Vera Cruz were marched several leagues below the city, in order to prevent all hampering between the friends of the fallen tyrant, and the officers and privates of the army. This was done in consequence of a rumor, that another revolution was in embryo in the city of Mexico, the object of which was to reinstate Santa Ana in power. The steamers that conveyed him away from his country, we also learn, took him on board at a place called Perote Landing, several leagues this side of Vera Cruz, and connected with Castle Perote by a separate road from that leading to Vera Cruz. Gomez Farias has been elected Senator in place of Don Sebastian Camacho

The Government of Mexico was raising an army of 2,000 men, ostensibly for the purpose of being sent to the Californias; but it is the belief of several intelligent American citizens that, that this force is destined to march secretly to the frontier of Texas. Mobile Advertiser, June 27.

Gov. Shannon appears to have freed himself from all blame in the strange matter of the Mexican indemnity—His official letter to the Secretary of State, follows;

Washington, July 2, 1845. Sir—Since my arrival in the United States, I have noticed that at least a portion of the public are laboring under incorrect views with regard to the payment of the fourth and fifth installments due our citizens from Mexico, under the treaty of the 31st January, 1843; and also that some unjust reflections have been cast upon me, as well as others, in reference to the manner in which the business had been transacted. I deem it not out of place for me to communicate to you the facts in relation to the two installments in question, so far as the are within my knowledge, with the view not only of putting you in possession of the true state of the case, but of acting myself right in this matter. This I should have done at an earlier period, had I been aware that there was any difficulty on the subject, or that there was any doubt in any quarter as is the facts to the case. The fourth installment fell due on the 30th April, 1844 and the fifth on the 30th of the following July; and I did not arrive in Mexico until the evening of the 26th of the following August. On my arrival in Mexico, the fourth installment had been due near four months, and the fifth near one month, and the date of Mr. Voss’s receipt, closing the matter with the Mexican government, I understand, is the 27th August.

It will be perceived from these dates that the agreement that was made with the Mexican government by Mr. Voss. Soon after my arrival in Mexico, on inquiry of Mr. Voss, our agent who had been appointed to receive the money, as to the payment of the two installments in question, he informed me he had in vain sought to obtain the money from the national treasury in Mexico: that he had failed on all his efforts to do so, for the reason, that, as fast as the money came into the national treasury, it was absorbed for the purpose of the army, and by Mexican claimants, whose influence with the government was such as to enable them to obtain the preference over the American claimants; that finding all efforts to obtain payment in Mexico had failed, he prevailed on the government to give him drafts on the local treasuries for an amount sufficiently large to cover the principle and interest due on the two installments, and the cost of collecting the same, and transmitting the money to Vera Cruz.

He also advised me that the English house of Tayleur, Jamison & Co., i.e. Mexico, had claims on the Mexican government and that they had taken drafts of a similar character, and were about to collect them; and that he had handed over the drafts which he had received to that house, for collection at the same time. We learn from the Union that the principal negotiation in relation the this country, is still to be confined the this side of the Atlantic, and will not therefore be put in change of Mr. McLane; “but (it says) collateral questions may incidentally arise in London, in the discussion of this important question, which may shed no inconsiderable influence on the final arrangement.” We do not perceive what these collateral questions are to be, nor how they are likely to arise, and wish sincerely the whole negotiation had been entrusted to Mr. McLane, in whose talents, experience and moderation all have confidence, and who deserves it more if possible for another quality not possessed by any member of the administration; superiority for popular clamor.

We greatly mistake the signs of the times, or there will be need of this quality to preserve the peace of the country, unless England makes a total surrender of her claims to Oregon, an event not very probable. There has been a rumor in circulation that the outlines of a treaty had been agreed upon at Washington, and the 49th parallel of latitude, which is an extension of the northern boundary of the United States on the east side of the Rocky Mountains, adopted as the boundary between Our Oregon and the English Oregon. This we had always hoped would be the basis of the compromise, and this Mr. Calhoun, while Secretary of State; was understood to have approved.

But no such moderation is agreeable to that rage for acquisition which has seized upon so many of the American People!

Although the territory north of 49º is barren and inhospitable; although we can have no possible use for it, until our population reaches there by the natural progress of population; and although when it does in this manner reach there the country must be ours—these views by no means suit the grasping cupidity and swollen vanity of our countrymen. They want Oregon now; they want it all; they want it in defiance of consequences, and in contempt of the claims of others! That there will be a strong attempt made to defeat any compromise, and to reject any treaty founded upon compromise, we do not in the least doubt, and that, as in the case of Texas, the sound sense of the country may be overpowered by mobocratic clamor, we hold to be full probable.

The truth is, there are immense and increasing multitudes in this country who desire war with England, and to whom (that event would be welcome with or without provoked.) Even the New York Sun, a neutral and an enlightened print gives partially into these lamentable sentiments. It requires England to recede to the parallel of $52^\circ$ (6º North of the mouth of Columbia) not upon any argument that our claim North of the Columbia is superior to hers, but simply because it is expedient we should have certain harbors, and that the country will be more profitable to us than to her!

We find some reflections which we advanced yesterday on the subject of Oregon, and the probable fate of the treaty said to have been agree upon at Washing, strongly confirmed by the correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, generally accurate and apparently having access to authentic sources of information. From the spirit of the West irrespective of party, and the time of the ultra Democratic press throughout the Union, there is great reason to fear the defeat of any Oregon compromise with England, and that affairs in that quarter will result in a national determination to exclude England from that quarter of the Continent.

A new and hateful spirit has manifested itself in the American People, and there need be no surprise at any pretensions it may act up (as it is already setting the pretension to all Oregon and California) or to any extravagance it may act. The feeble hand of Tyler set a stone rolling which it may defy the honesty and wisdom of the country to arrest.

The correspondent of the Mercury says: “There is, however, a rumor in circulation among a few persons here which is of very great importance, and if it be true, it may exercise a very material and important influence on the final consummation of the measure of annexation. I have not yet had time or opportunity to inform myself as satisfactorily as I could wish on the point of its, but I hear it in such a quarter and from such authority, that I am inclined to believe that there is some truth to it —if it be not true in all its parts. The report is a . . . to the effect that negotiations between Mr. Buchanan, the Secretary of State, and Mr. Packenham, the British Minister, are progressing upon the basis of the 49th degree of north latitude as the boundary between the two Governments. It is said that this line has been proposed by Mr. Packenham on the part of the British Government—that is has been accepted by Mr. Buchanan on the part of the American Government, and that the terms of the Treaty are now being canvassed and arranged between the two negotiators.

If these statements be true, some most important questions arise, which may not be very easily or satisfactorily answered. The first question is—will the Senate of the U. States ratify a treaty founded on such a basis? ON first thought and without consideration one would be tempted reply “yes.” There are, however, various reasons which would lead me to suppose the contrary. The 49th degree will not be satisfactory to the West. That is a settle question. The whole West goes for the Russian line as our boundary.

Mr. All and other Western Senators will not agree to the 49th degree. Will Mr. Benton? Has he forgotten his defeat of the Texas question? And his narrow escape from expulsion from the Democratic ranks? Has he gratified his hatred against the illustrious statesmen who framed, or reduced the shape the Treaty of annexation, and whose masterly arguments on that subject pronounced so great and effect? Or has he become reconciled to the manner in which he was compelled to vote for the passage of the annexation resolutions? Let the course of events show. And if a Treaty be negotiated on the basis of the 49th degree—see it Mr. Benton do not put himself at the head of an opposition to its ratification, and if the whole West will not go with him, and see if they do not couple with the acts for the completion of the annexation of Texas—a condition that the Southern Boundary of Russia shall be the Northern Boundary of the United States?

It will, however, perhaps be supposed by many that the Whig Senators will vote for the ratification of such a treaty. This may prove in the event to be so, but such a consummation cannot be relied upon. Distinguished Whig Legislators and Statesmen from the West have said that they hold themselves not bound to any such conclusion. True, they admit, that Mr. Adams offered the 49th degree as a boundary he was willing to accept, but that was refused, and they hold themselves now at perfect liberty to refuse it if offered or agreed to by Great Britain. From these and various other reasons I am induced to believe that if the 49th degree have been agreed upon—and if the Treaty be so framed and sent into the Senate for ratification, it will be a very doubtful matter whether it can be ratified.”

RWv22n55c3p4 July 11, 1845 Correspondence of the Whig

New York, July 5th, 1845. The Editor of the Union and a correspondent who lives in Washington (who no doubt is an office holder, and who may very well understand the measures and policy of J. K. Polk’s administration) are attempting, through the “Union” toward off the blow against the “powers that be,” from leaning to either the Northern or Southern flack of the Democracy, under the command of Maj. Generals Calhoun and Wright. They call on the New York correspondent of the Charleston Mercury and his friends of Mr. Calhoun, to “hold on a bit” and not to be quite so “fussy,” that Jim, won’t be President any more after his term has expired, will show all the segments of the great Democratic family, how sincere and fraternal his feeling and partialities are for their mutual welfare and harmony.

This will be a work much more difficult than the Editor of the Union, his correspondent and Mr. Polk himself are aware of, to show. The few persons alluded to, in the North, such as Rantoul and one or two others, the administration were forced to give office to. There was no escape from these appointments. And they would be turned out of office tomorrow, if it could be done without raising a regular row and riot, and bringing round the eyes and face of Mr. Polk a nest of hornets. Mr. Woodbury “lies in his throat” if he says he is satisfied with the appointments made by Mr. Polk, or with the removal of unoffending persons who, are subordinates in office have turned out, and the men they have appointed to fill their places.

I can tell Mr. Polk and Mr. Ritchie that more than one personal friend of Mr. Calhoun have authentic documents to be prove this statement untrue, and at the proper time will let him and Mr. Polk know it too. I say they have got documents, and I speak advisedly. The troubles in the White House from the ever varying blasts make Polk most earnest and diligent for harmony.---

“In this calling he is prompt and watchful more than ordinary men, Hence he has learned the meaning of all winds, Or blasts of ever tone; and ottenumes, When others heed not, he hears the South make subterraneous music.” But this Administration owes me nothing, and I shall ask it for nothing, but simply to be “host and true” and if it does not act so, I shall owe it uncompromising hostile and legitimate war to overthrow it. So far as I am personally concerned, I care not who it turns out of office or who it puts in. I am a small man with moderate pretensions in life, but I am too high and too independent, even on any condition, to hold office under such a soulless creature as James K. Polk. He unworthily obtained his high position, and unworthily conducts the treat confided to his hands. He deceived the South of the North in his letter to Kane, and if dares not now urge the reduction of the Tariff, he will betray the South, and if he odes, he will betray the North.

If he acts either way, the miserable creature of circumstance must have the scorn and contempt of the party deceived, for lying so notoriously to them. He pledged himself in this speech at Nashville, soon after his election, that no one should be proscribed for his opinions, and yet no sooner is he installed in office, than he attempts to wreak his vengeance right and left upon every officer whom God had endowed with a better soul, and who could not, without lying think as he did. No wonder Capt. Rynders and his band were at home in the White House and the new President of the Republic should give the President of the Empire Club a lucrative office in the New York Custom House.

We have had abundance of rain for a week past, and the crops begin to look up. The corn crops especially will be benefited by it. The weather, though has been unusually cold for this season of the year. The thermometer on Monday last down at 58. In fact, warm weather came in a hurry and went off so. Yesterday and today, however have been every way pleasant over head and under foot. The Fourth of July, yesterday, was celebrated with considerable life.

The steamboats in the Hudson and East River were paddling about all day with parties of pleasure visiting Hoboken, Staten Island, Long Island, &c. &c. The Military were out in full strength to march to the soul stirring chorus. They marched fro the Park to the Battery; where they were reviewed by Gen. Sanford, who by the bye is a time officer, and a good Whig. The American Museum was crowded all day, and at night it, with Theatres, was filled “jam up.”

The day’s recreation and amusement were concluded by a grand display of Fire Works in the Park, front of the City Hall. A good many youth were injured, and some badly so, by the firing off of pop crackers, pistols and guns. The least calculation there was consumed from 7 to $8000 worth of Powder by the Military, City and Council, and the many others who used it yesterday.

We have the news of Texas having annexed herself to this country this morning, and that Mexico would certainly declare war with the United States if she did. So I suppose will have to go to war and spill blood. Let Mr. Ritchie, who is so anxious to drive the young men of this country into a war, agree to go along and fight too. Any man can grow patriotic and daring out of danger. Let us see who has the most pluck. I see no necessity of my replying to the article in the New York Morning News. So long as it admitted that what I stated is true, I have gained my point and now quit the subject with no ill will to them. It was not my purpose to distort that statement or anything else, and do not wish to hear that character. Hudson

RWv22i56p1c1-2 July 15, 1845 Hear the Green Mountain Whigs

The good Whigs and true, of Vermont, held a State convention on the 2d of July, to make their nominations for Governor &c. As an evidence of the true American spirit, which animates the bosoms of the Vermonters, we here copy some of the resolutions, will be read with interest by the Whigs of this Union, and echoed back to the Green Mountains in one universal shout of approbation. Here they are;

"Resolved, That the Whigs of Vermont maintain, as their great principles, a Tariff for Revenue to defray the necessary expenditures of the Government, discriminating with special reference to the protection of the domestic enterprise and labor of our country—a well-regulated national currency—a Distribution of the Proceeds of the Sales of the Public Lands among the States—a Single Term for the Presidency—a Reform of Executive Usurpation—and, generally, an administration of the Federal Government that shall be national and constant in its politics, and efficient and Economical in its execution.

Resolved, That the unfortunate result of the last Presidential election gives no cause of despondency and inactivity to the Whigs, on the contrary, impels every patriotic citizen to firmer resolution and more watchful vigilance; and in reviewing the contest, we are proud of the principles we professed, and of the manner in which Vermont sustained them.

Resolved, That the threatened reduction of the Tariff, by the official organ of the administration, is a striking commentary on the hollow professions of attachment to the Tariff by the Loco Foco party, and should call forth the strong rebuke of the Northern States, at this repeated attempt to prevent any settled and permanent policy of our Government.

Resolved, That a Tariff with discrimination for revenue, is decidedly opposed to protection, and that all the pretenses of our political opponents, that they are in favor of discriminating duties, are calculate to deceive and mislead.

Resolved, That the joint resolutions passed by the Congress of the U.S. at its last session, providing for the annexation of Texas to the Union are a palpable violation of the Federal Constitution, and are not binding upon the country, and should meet the continued and united opposition of the Whig party throughout the Union.

Resolved, That we confidently recommend to the freemen of Vermont the State Ticket this day nominated, as composed of men of tried and eminent ability and faithfulness.

Resolved, That the Whigs of Vermont will ever hold in grateful remembrance the patriotic services of Henry Clay; that their confidence in his talents and virtues is unshaken by the assaults of his enemies, and should be again be presented by the Whig party for that office, which he is so well fitted to adorn, the Star that never sets shall shed around him its brightest beams."

RWv22i56p2c3 July 15, 1845 Oregon

The correspondent of the Charleston Mercury whom we quoted the other day as authority that the 48th degree of Latitude had been agreed upon at Washington as the boundary, now takes back that opinion and says:

"Washington City, July 8, 1845. I have ascertained from authority on which I can place the utmost reliance; that there is no truth whatever in the report which I informed you was in circulation in this City, repeating the 49th deg. Having been definitely settled as our Northern Boundary, with reference to the claims of G. Britain on the North Western Territory. No such arrangement has been made with Great Britain, and I have equally good authority for saying that no such proposition will be agreed upon by the present Administration.

I have a so good reasons for giving expression to the belief that the Cabinet do no intend to compromise this matter at all but mean to maintain our title to the whole territory up to the Southern Boundary of the Russian possessions. The leading Democrats in the City of all shades of party, were unanimous in their condemnation of the supposed basis upon which negotiations were said to be pending, and many of them I heard openly express the opinion that if such course were adopted by the Administration, it would prove the political damnation of the parties to it on the American side."
Per Contra—The correspondent of the N. Y. Herald 2 days later: "Washington, July 10, 1845, The 49th parallel—yes, sir, the 49th parallel has actually been under serious consideration by Mr. Buchanan as the Oregon compromise line. A compromise on Oregon, where they should be "no compromise but at the cannon’s mouth! Mr. Buchanan now says that he does not know that our title is so clear as might be beyond the 49th parallel; and this in the face of his speech in the senate during the session of '43 '4, that he held our title indisputably clear to the latitude of 50 40."

RWv22i57p1c2 July 18, 1845 Future Advantages

In an article yesterday, we alluded to the debt of Texas, and the promises of Mr. Polk. The subject is one which ought to attract more of the public attention. It may be deemed absurd, in this age of usurpation, to ask by what authority of law or Constitution, the President of the United States, through the "representative of the country" in Texas made "promises" of "future advantages" to be extended to the "Lone Star," if she consented to the proposed union with the United States. We find such offer gravely alluded to by President Jones in his Message to the Texan Congress, and actually made in one of Maj. Donelson's letters. We shall wait with no little degree of curiosity for an explanation of this matter by some of the '98 men—some of the sticklers for strict construction—especially the "Calvary."

In the Tyler Treaty, as it was called, the public lands of Texas, and all other property, were to be ceded to the United States—the latter agreeing to pay ten millions of the Texan debt. Everybody believed that this amount was far short of the real debt, and that the United States would be bound to shoulder all the responsibilities of the defunct Republic—whatever they might prove to be. In the act of Annexation passed by Congress it was stipulated that all the lands of Texas should be ceded to the United States and no provision was made for the payment of the debt of the "lone Star." This omission, doubtless, is what Maj. Donelson has undertaken to call an "accidental" affair—and he, therefore, under the authority of President Polk, undertakes to intimate that this little matter, of probably fifty millions of dollars, will all be provided for, if the Texans will only come into our embraces, without any further parley—and, accordingly, they submit most graciously, without a dissenting voice.

It will be a matter worth future observation, to watch how complacently the Anti-Assumption men will introduce and defend the payment of the Texas debt, in the course of the coming year. How plausibly they will present the difference between paying the debt of Pennsylvania and that of Texas! How conclusively they will show that this outrageous policy of State Assumption, a little while since pertinaciously attributed to the Whigs, and denounced as Federalism,—is perfectly within the powers of the Constitution, or at least of the doctrines of '98!

We invite the reader to note the progress of this affair, which has no higher claims than the interest the scrip-holders and land speculators, whose wishes first engendered the scheme, and for whom the straight-laced doctrines of the Democracy are to be outraged. Maryland may struggle on—Pennsylvania may wring from her people enough to pay the interest of her debts only—Illinois, Indiana, and Mississippi, may continue to hear the food stain of Repudiation, but the debt of Texas must be paid by the General Government! The patriots "who left their country for their country's good," and seized the territory of a country with whom we pretended to be at peace, must be "cared for," no matter what the Constitution may prohibit—and no matter how often the "Democracy" may be compelled to repudiate their own doctrines.[MSM]

RWv22i57p2c1 July 18, 1845 The Debt of Texas- Mr. Polk’s Position

Mr. Polk’s promises. We all know that one of the most striking features in the bill which was at first presented to Congress for the Annexation of Texas to the U. States, was that this Government should assume all the liabilities of the little Republic, and take the unappropriated Public Lands. These, it was thought, were the only grounds upon which Texas would be willing to annex herself to Uncle Sam and, from what was then said by the friends of annexation, we were somewhat certain that they never would consent to any other terms. Finding, however, that Uncle Sam, at that time, had so many public lands of his own, and as many branches of his family, whose debts were unpaid, as were desirable, that feature of the Texas bill was stricken out entirely. This, it was thought by those who suspected the motives of the Annexationists, would have forever quieted the application for the "lone Star" to be numbered among the 26 United States but, all at once.
We see Texas changing position, and at last adopting the views of Col. Johnson, of whom it was said, that if he couldn’t get the nomination for the highest office, he willing to take a nomination for anything. So it was with Texas: if she couldn’t be admitted on her own terms, she was willing to in any how! So it was with Texas: if she couldn’t be admitted on her own terms, she was willing to in any how! But to the sequel of this change in the notions of Texas. We recollect that just about the time the late bill for annexation was to ass we were conversing with a high functionary of Texas, and asked him if the people for his Republic would consent to be annexed without the United States would assume their debts? To this interrogatory, he gave us to understand he could say yea; and he has been sustained in that supposition by the late action of the Texan Congress.

We thought, and indeed remarked at the time to our friend, that we took it for granted, if Texas consented to be annexed at all, it would be with the expectation of some day having all her responsibilities saddled upon Uncle Sam; and so it would seem from what follows. President Polk, it appears, has had a finger in the pie; and has proved himself not only magnanimous to the little Republic, but faithful to his trust as the head of this Government: "President Jones's Message to the two houses of the Texas Congress, in calling their attention to the propositions from the Unites States, says—"The Executive has much satisfaction in observing, what no doubt will forcibly arrest the attention of the Congress, that, although the terms embraced in the resolutions of the United States Congress may at first have appeared less favorable than was desirable for Texas, the very liberal and magnanimous views entertained by the President of the United States towards Texas, and the promises made through the representative of that country, in regard to the future advantages to be extended to her if she consent to the proposed union, render those terms much more acceptable than they would otherwise have bee."

This is a paragraph pregnant with meaning, and is of a nature to arrest public attention in all the States, particularly in the no dividend paying States. It, no doubt, means that promises have been made to assume the debt of Texas! We are now prepared to hear the “democracy,” particularly the "democracy of '98 and of “the Jeffersonian school,” contend that it is quite "constitutional" to assume the debt of a foreign State, but quite as "unconstitutional" to assume the debt of Indiana or Illinois. As to promises, what right has any representative or any office of the Government to make such promises for, and in behalf of the people of the United States? These promises, however, will be converted by Texas, when a member of this Union, into claims; and upon them will be founded loud appeals to the people of the United States. Meanwhile, as the Texas Stock Jobbers are thus managing their cards, they are disposing of their public lands as fast as possible. When we get the $20,000,000 debt of Texas saddled as a fund to provide for it. If there be any simple minded of “the democracy” in the North, who have not foreseen all this jobbing and scheming, we can only pity their miserable gullibility."

By the Norfolk papers of yesterday, we find the arrival of the U.S. Mail Schr. Onkshyee announced. It seems, from the opinions of the Naval Offices, that we are certainly to have a war with Mexico. Here is what we glean from the Norfolk Herald:

"Naval. The U.S. mail schr. Onkshyee, Lieut. Com’t Sinclair, arrived at this port yesterday from Chagrev, via Carthagean, Vera Cruz and Havana, 6 days from the latter. Left Vera Cruz on the 21st June. All was anxiety there to hear from Texas; and in the meantime the public opinion was made up that a declaration war by Mexico would follow immediately on the announcement of annexation; and the U.S. Consul at Vera Cruz stated to Lieut. Sinclair, that such was his decided belief. So look out for a war with Mexico by the next advices. Business at Havana was uncommonly dull. There were very few American or other shipping in port, and commerce was almost at a stand. The Onkshyee has proved herself, in spite of the disadvantages under which she made the voyage, a superior sailor, having made under favorable circumstances between 11 and 12 knots an hour—and 9 knots when running within four points of the wind. Some necessary alteration to her spare (which are too heavy) and her trim, will make her the fleetest craft in the navy."

Port of Richmond. Arrived at Bermuda Hundreds, Barque Alabama, Merrit, from Baltimore, in ballast, to Chas. Palmer; Below, Ship Marathon, Brown, from Europe, to C. Palmer. Arrived, Stmr Curtis Peck, Davis, Norfolk; Schr Catherine Martha, Dazy, York river, corn to Jones & Winston; Schr Santa Maria, Keane, below, wheat to Gallego Mills.; Schr Heroine, Hollingshead, Havye de Grace, coal.; Schr May, Hubbard, Baltimore, sundries.; Sailed, Schr Rich’d Thompson, Townsend, West Point.; Schr Evelinia, Peterson, Sandwich.

Since the consummation of the annexation question, in Texas, we have been looking out for some news from that quarter, without knowing exactly what we were expecting. The latest accounts, however, bring us but little news of interest, and such as it is, we give below. It will be seen that some of the papers in the State of Texas, for we suppose we can call it nothing else, have been peppering the late President of the Republic pretty severely. Here is a specimen: From the N.O. Tropic:

Texas. The schooner Atlantis arrived yesterday from Galveston, bringing the Weekly News of the 5th. There is nothing particularly new or interesting. The News is filled with the correspondence between that Government and Mexico relative to the recognition of Texan Independence. The funeral solemnities in honor of General Jackson were celebrated on the 4th. The morning was ushered in by a National salute of 29 guns, and during the day the “Stars and Stripes” were seen floating from several Consular offices in the city. At 10 o’clock, a procession marched to the Episcopal Church, where an effective discourse was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Eaton. In the afternoon, an oration was delivered, appropriate to the Anniversary of American Independence.

The News publishes a list of 63 Delegates to the Convention which met at Austin on the 4th. Eight of the present members of Congress are members. Col. Samuel B. Marshall, who died at Galveston, on his way to this Government with dispatches, was attended to his grave by the Masonic Fraternity. The following, from the Houston Telegraph, is some what savage: “We did not receive a copy of the propositions made by our Secretary of State to the Mexican Government, until Thursday morning. We bitterly regret to say that they are more disgraceful and dishonorable to Texas than we had anticipated. Although they are dated at Washington on the Brazos, we still hope, for the credit of out Government, that they were concluded at Galveston, and that the Executive and Cabinet knew nothing of them until a copy was sent by Dr. Smith to Washington. Better would it have been if the band that signed them had been paralyzed, ere the disgraceful act was consummated.”

The following resolution was introduced in the Texan Congress on the last day of the session, but it seems that the House, after various motions, adjourned without acting upon the question:

Resolved by the House of Representatives. That the course of the Executive in relation to the question of Annexation, has been unpatriotic and unwise attempting to thwart the people in their well know wish, to reunite themselves to the great political family of the United States, and throw them afloat again upon the troubled sea of a separate existence, to be the sport of a policy hostile to Liberty in both Hemispheres; and that he may not be enabled to throw further obstacle in the way of this great measure, and ultimately effect its defeat, we recommend to the Convention of the people of Texas to establish a Government ad interim, until the Constitution of the State of Texas shall go into effect, as being the most certain, effectual and economical mode of securing our Annexation to the United States.
The schooner Sarah Ann, Capt. Davidson, left Tampico on the 1st of July and arrived at Philadelphia on Thursday. Such was the fear of so immediate embargo being laid on all the American shipping in the ports of Mexico, that the departure of the S. A. was hastened. By this arrival we have copies of the "Gegen," published at Tampico, in which are editorial articles, strongly urging the immediate declaration of war on the part of Mexico against the United States, as the last and only appeal to be made by that Government in the situation in which she is placed by the consummation of Texas Annexation. On the 26th of June a small vessel from New Orleans arrived at the Bar, below Tampico, and sent up to the city a sealed package, supposed to contain dispatches, which was immediately forwarded to General Arista. The vessel forthwith proceeded to Vera Cruz.-Balt. Pat.

The Government will in all probability never pay more than ten cents on the dollar on these bonds and bill, and that too for the reason that the Government and people never received even that mount for them. They are chiefly held by brokers and speculators in New Orleans, who wrung them from the oppressed Government and its poor people for the amount of from three to eight cents per dollar, and the Government will doubtless pay what they justly owe, and no more. Is it right or just they should? The brokers have tried many ways to secure their Texas claims to the full amount on the face of them, but they will never succeed. It is now a conceded point that some persons were bribed by certain persons by an offer of thirty per cent on the amount of the debt if they would cause it to be ratified. Persons then commence negotiations elsewhere, and thought they could lull the people upon whom this Annexation has been forced, should know what is likely to be the result in a financial point.

"Why, friend," remonstrates the creditor, "what did you mean by agreeing to pay a much larger sum in case you were ever able to pay anything?" "Mean," responds Texas. I "meant to get your money, which I wanted, wright badly; but I am out of my troubles now so take what I offer you and clear out." This may be a very nice boldness, but we do hope Uncle Sam will keep entirely clear of it. He has some character to lose in spite of his recent hankering after loose company.”

RWv22i60p4c3 July 28, 1845 Interesting From Texas (From the New Orleans Tropic)

By the arrival of the fast sailing brig Hope Howes, from Galveston, we received intelligence of the unanimous assent of the Convention, to the terms of Annexation, proposed by the U.S. Government.

The Convention assembled at Austin, on the 4th instant, and elected General Rusk as its President. A Committee was then appointed, who immediately afterwards reported an Ordinance, assenting on behalf of the people of Texas, to the terms of annexation, and it was adopted at one o'clock of the same day, with one dissenting votes, that of Major Bache of Galveston, who, it is reported afterwards signed the Ordinance.

We received Galveston papers to the 12th instant, but they contain very little news.

Our neighbors of the Picayune, received a very interesting letter from the Correspondent at Austin, from which we learn, that after assenting to the terms of annexation, a resolution was passed in Convention, "that the member wear crape on their left arms for one month, as a testimony of regret for the decease of Gen Jackson," and then adjourned for that day. On the next day Committees were appointed to report on the various subjects submitted, and at latest dates the Convention was busily engaged in the work of framing a State Constitution. The writer says that so anxious are the Texans to free the subject of annexation from further agitation, in the U.S. that [con] conditions whatever will be annexed to the Constitution, differing from the resolutions passed by the U.S. Congress.”

Despatches from our Government, in relation to the occupation of the Frontier by U.S. troops, were received, and Major Donelson, who had been detained by indisposition at Washington, arrived at Austin on the 5th.

A resolution was passed in Convention on the 7th, requesting the President, of the U.S., in behalf of the people of Texas, to send troops forthwith to the Frontier. This resolution was intended as a sanction by the Texans, of the movement noted above. The writer also states that Dr. Ashbel Smith has written home, that Lord Aberdeen has avowed to him that the British Government will not interfere any further in reference to annexation. Apprehensions were felt for the safety of General Tarrant, delegate from Fanin, and Mr. Howard, delegate from San Antonio, who had failed to arrive to attend the Convention. It was feared they might have fallen in with some of the Indians on the Frontier, who have committed several murders lately.
From our papers we learn that Ashbel Smith has been recalled from England, and that President Jones has appointed Hon. Ebenezer Allen, Secretary of State, Hon. W. B. Ochiltree, Attorney General, and Ho., J.A. Grear, Secretary of the Treasury. The Hon. K. L. Anderson, Vice President of the Republic died at Featheroe's, Montgomery county, on the 4th inst of fever. Col Wm. G. Cooke, Secretary of War, had gone to Bexar to effect a treaty with the portion of the tribe of Comanches known as the party of Santa Anna, a noted marauder, numbering about 50 Indians detached from the main tribe. Their depredations have chiefly been on the Rio Grande frontier.

It is stated by the National Register that a general council at the Comanche tribe will be held in September about Torrey's trading house, for the purpose of celebrating a general treaty of peace. The Register, in speaking of Dr. Ashbel Smith's arrival in England, and of the tenor of the advices from that country, says: If the more moderate tone held in England in regard to Annexation, be in any manner the result of this gentleman's mission, it has not been in vain. We believe its principal purpose was to set the British Government right in regard to the wishes and feelings of our people, and to induce the continuance of those friendly relations hitherto maintained. England is now fully informed of the desires and sentiments of the people of Texas, of the determination of this Government to give them full effect, and there can be no playing at cross purposes. We think Dr. Smith's mission was necessary in view of our existing relations with England, we believe it will contribute to the prevention of difficulties resulting from our Annexation the United States.

The Indians are still committing depredations in the vicinity of Corpus Christi. On the 21st ult. They killed a young man named Kinney, within a mile of the Ranch, and on the night following they stole sixty horses from an enclosure near the Ranch, and escaped without detection.

The Civilian of the 12th says the general health of Galveston was never better, and no apprehensions of sickness are entertained the present season. The accounts of the crops from every section of the country are said to be highly favorable. "Grain of every description is out of all danger, and has succeeded beyond all precedent. The prospect for Cotton has lost none of its promise." The British brig Persian had arrived at Galveston from Vera Cruz. She is said to have brought dispatches fro the Government. Of their tenor or from when they came, nothing was known.

Texas Twins!

The friends of Annexation, in the United States, were not aware, perhaps, that bringing Texas into the Union, they would be introducing two new States instead of one. It appears from the following, taken from the New York Tribune, that the people of Texas have fixed on a division of their state:

"Twins- We are assured that a private letter was received in this city yesterday from one of the most popular and influential members of the Texas Convention, stating that it is in actual contemplation among the leading spirits in that body to divide Texas into two States, making the Brazos the dividing line; the State west of that river to called Austin, and that on the east to retain the name of Texas.-N. Y. Tribune, Aug.6"

That's right, sister! You are altogether too delicious a morsel to be swallowed whole. True, your population may be thought too small by some to furnish four members of the U.S. Senate, but where the quality is so fine, it's not worth while to stand for trifles. Cut yourself in twain, by all means! Such blessings as you are, should never come single!-[Tribune.

If the result above alluded to is to be brought about, Vice President Dallas ought to know it, that he might have four new seats arranged in the Senate Chamber for Senators from Texas, instead of only two.

From Texas - The Washington Union contains official dispatches received by special messenger, from Major Donaldson, in which are included the authenticated documents relative to the proceedings of the Texas Convention. We published yesterday from New Orleans papers the news of the ratification by the annexation resolutions. This having been communicated to Major Donaldson, he replies as follows:-Balt. Pat.

A War Coming!

Those who are advocates of war, will see by the following indication, taken from the N. Orleans papers, that the United States is likely to be embroiled in a difficulty with Mexico, on account of the new member of Uncle Sam’s household, which he has consented to receive without the acquiescence of Mexico.

"Rumor had it yesterday (says the N. O. Picayune of Thursday) that the Mexican Consul, Señor Arrangoiz, was to leave for Vera Cruz in a day or two, and that his departure is to be the signal for the passages of a non intercourses act or law. Of truth of this we are not prepared to decide."

"The Bee, of the same date, says: 'We were informed yesterday that an importing house in our city had applied to the Mexican Consul to know whether he could clear a vessel for one of the Mexican ports on Thursday next, and that the reply of the Consul was that after Wednesday he would be unable to attend to any such businesses. As the duty of the Consul in such cases is to ....manifest, his refusal looks as if there were some truth in the rumors of war, now so prevalent.’"

In confirmation of the above, we take the following from the New Orleans Bee of a late date:

"Mexican Consulate-It has been...in the papers of yesterday, Mr. Arrangoiz, the Mexican Consul for the city, intended closing his official business here today. We can state positively, that such is the fact. Persons having business with the Consulate will therefore have to bring it to a close during the day."

War Come At Last!

Hostile Movements of the Mexicans-Preparations of the American Troops.

The Much talked of, and long expected, has come at last and the two nations which ought to be at peace, are to be arrayed against each other in all the forms of hostility. Mexico, as will be seen by the news of yesterday, from New Orleans, has declared war against the United States, and the intercourse between the two Governments is of course at an end.

How desirable such an event may be to some turbulent spirits, we do not undertake to say, but sure it is, our Government had no right to expect any other result to grow out of the annexation of Texas, after the manner and mode in which it was brought about. Now, that the country is to be embroiled in a difficulty with Mexico, and perchance, England, who should be the sufferers, but those who were instrumental in producing the difficulty? We will see now, how the advocates of Annexation will act, when the emergency stares them in the face—whether they will stand up to defend that little Republic, which has caused the difficulty, or whether they will skulk, and leave the fighting to be done by others. We shall certainly be able to find out, after the Mexicans and Americans have had a brush or two, whether these people who cried aloud for annexation, in violation of the treaty-making power, will show the stronger love for Texas or for themselves.

The Annexationist must undoubtedly expect to defend Texas, now that they have forced the people of the U. States to make the "Lone Star" under their wing; and however insignificant these gentlemen may have regarded the Mexicans heretofore, they will find them at least capable of resenting an insult.

This declaration on the part of Mexico, doubtless required a great deal of nice consideration, were the step was taken; and we can hardly think that government blind enough to suppose that, now, it has declared war, the Mexican people will be able to stand up against the forces of the United States, without the aid of some foreign power. What then are we suppose? That England will come to the aid of that weak nation, or that Mexico relies on France, to rescue her from the destruction which must sooner or later be visited upon her by the United States? While we are free to think that France will not interfere in this difficulty, yet we are not entirely sure that England will not give a helping hand to Mexico.

Where is the money—$12,000,000—to come from, that Mexico found it necessary to raise previous to making an open declaration of War? It is well known that negotiations were in contemplation, between Great Britain and Mexico, in regard to this very matter of Finance; and it is to be supposed, if the loan has been made, that England will look to the protection of her money, if she finds it endangered. We have here, then, not only the prospect of war with little Mexico, whose inability to contend with us should protect that Nation—but we have strong probabilities of having to encounter another Nation, which while it may not be able to conquer us, will, at least, annoy the United States very considerably. In anticipation of these things, we are glad to find that the Administration has been making some little preparation for the emergency, by ordering the United States soldiery in all quarters to hold themselves in readiness. The Flying Artillery, as the Northern papers have it, have already embarked for the Frontier, and the Troops formerly in that quarter are also in a state of preparation for a conflict when it comes.

But to the action of Mr. Polk in the further prosecution of this matter. Will he undertake himself, the whole management of the conflict, by heading an army of Annexationist; and meeting the enemy, or will he at once convene an extra Session of Congress? It is incumbent on His Excellency to do one or the other, and that quickly. However, as he will receive the official notice of hostilities, in a short time, we will expect him to do his duty—his whole duty, and nothing but his duty.

We must confess, that we are not a little anxious to see what game those very disinterested patriots will play, who went all for Texas, and nothing for themselves, in their untiring efforts to bring about annexation. Would we be expecting too much, if we were to call upon the Editor of the Union to convert his pen into a more dangerous instrument of warfare and head of an army of "Texas Men" to go and fight the Mexicans? Surely, any one who has made so many professions of sympathy for the citizens of Texas, ought to show by his actions and deeds that he was sincere. But "Nous Verrons."

Declaration of War!

The Schooner Relampago, which recently arrived at the Balize, from Vera Cruz, came up to the City in Tuesday evening. Our previous accounts by this vessel, were very limited, based as they were, upon verbal statements, and a short extract form one of the few letters which reached the city in company with the dispatches for the State Department. It was not until a late hour yesterday, that we received the letter, an extract from which follows, containing the official communications, a translation of which is subjoined. The letter is from a friend and correspondent in Vera Cruz, and enclosed the communications, which are from the Minister of War against this country, have assumed a positive and determined shape. No simple act of non-intercourse, it appears, will give sufficient vent to the pent-up indignation of our Mexican neighbors. Nothing short of a war—a war of invasion too—that contemplates among the least of its triumphs, the reconquest of Texas—will appease their belligerent feelings, and heal their wounded honor. Well, if it is to be, we must prepare ourselves for the struggle. We hope by this time, that our fleet is in the Gulf—we know that our little army is at its post. The Water Witch, which may be looked for everyday will bring us full particulars.

We have reason to believe that the dispatches to the Department of State at Washington, brought by the Relampago, communicated the fact of War having been declared by the Mexican Government.

In a still closer view of war with Mexico, we take occasion to repeat what we said the other day, as the course which should be pursed in such an event. If we are to be embroiled in a conflict with Mexico, we hope that the scale upon which the contest will be prosecuted by us will bear some relation to the power and dignity of this nation. Let the assertion of our might as well as of our right be so complete, that among the other results of a brilliant campaign, no vestige of European influence will remain in Mexico to tempt her into a repetition of the fatuity of going to war with us.

Vera Cruz, July 21, 1845

Dear Sir:
I have only one moment’s time to hand you the enclosed, to which I refer you. We are momentarily expecting to receive the declaration of war against the United States, from Mexico. Every one is making preparations to leave this place and move into the interior. The Water Witch will sail for your port on the 28th or 29th inst.

Office of War and Marine.
Section of operations.

Circular-The United States have consummated the perfidy against Mexico, by sanctioning the decree which declares the annexation of the department of Texas to that Republic. The injustice of that usurpation is apparent, and Mexico cannot tolerate such a grave injury without making an effort to prove to the United States, the possibility disposition, has been interpreted into an acknowledged impossibility on our part, to carry on a successful war.

Such an error on the part of the U. States, will be advantageous to Mexico, because, suddenly abandoning its pacific attitude, it will to­morrow communicate to Congress the declaration of war, and excite the patriotism of its citizens to sustain the dignity of the nation, and the integrity of its territory, now treacherously attacked, in utter disregard of all guarantees recognised in this enlightened age.

You will readily appreciate the importance of this subject and the necessity of preparing the troops under your command, to march towards any point which may require protection against these unjust aggressors. I am directed by the provincial President to enjoin upon you, as general­in­chief of your division, and as a citizen of this Republic, to hold yourself in readiness to repel those who seek the ruin of Mexico. The government is occupied in covering the different points in the frontiers, and in collecting those whose glory it will be to defend the sacred rights of their country.

I have the honor to communicate for your intelligence, and to direct your conduct.

God and Liberty-Mexico, July 16, 1845.

Garcia Conde.

Late and Important from Mexico

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter which is addressed to a gentleman of respectability, at present in the city of Washington, from a highly respectable source. We have politely authorized to make an extract form the same. The correspondent has recently returned from Tobasco, in Mexico, and gives us the following information, which may be relied on:

“Very little, if anything commercially, is now doing in Tobasco. The Mexicans have taken all the guns and soldiers from the fort at the mouth of the river, for safe keeping. But the captain of the steamboat, in attempting to land the same let all the cannon roll in the river, where I think they will remain. There is great excitement against the Americans, and they are going to whip us without much effort! General Ampudia has made all his plans for the campaign, by which, with ten thousand Mexican veterans he can subdue and effectually conquer the United States.”

Letter from secretary of Convention

Resolution relative to the introduction of the United States forces into Texas.

Be it resolved by the Deputies of the People in Convention assembled, That the President of the United States of America is hereby authorized and requested to occupy and establish posts without delay upon the frontier and exposed positions of this republic, and to introduce for such purpose and defence of the territory and people of Texas, such forces as my be necessary and advisable for the same. Adopted in Convention, at the city of Austin, Republic of Texas, July 7th , 1845.

Thos.J Rusk, President.
Texas and Mexico

About 11 o’clock yesterday forenoon business took us out of our office; and as we went down Camp, and on to the Post Office, we saw citizens grouped together at every corner, talking intently about—we then knew not what. They seemed...It was at the time we speak of, publicly and very generally known that the veteran, Gen. Gaines, commanding the Southern military division of the United States, had made a demand on Gov. Lewis, commanding the first division of the Louisiana militia, for the required force...two regiments of volunteers, of ten companies each one of them to consist of musketeers and one of riflemen, and tow companies of artillery with eight field...It was the knowledge of this fact that caused the excitement amongst the citizens which we have attempted to describe;—it was that made them seem as it...(highly illegible).

Caution to Merchant-Men

That American Commerce may dread Mexican depredation, or rather that of the pirates of all countries under the Mexican flag, is agreed on all hands. We observe the following in the New York Herald of Saturday.

"Symptoms of War-Preparations for Depredations from Havre, arrived at this port on Wednesday last during the voyage, a very extraordinary incident occurred, and the interests and importance of which our readers will easily judge when we recite the details.

When in latitude of forty-four and a half, and just as she was about to approach the south east bank off Newfoundland the captain of the St. Nicholas observed to windward two brigs sailing directly across his course, which was from east to west. These brigs were evidently new...The wind was from the south east, blowing moderately and as favorable as possible to any vessel bound either for Europe or any port on the American continent. But here were these brigs making due north, a course they be bound!"

"What were they?" these were the questions asked with no little interest on board the St. Nicholas, and the suspicions which had been awakened by the appearance of the brigs was not at all diminished when as the wind shifted towards the west of St .Nicholas diverged somewhat from her former course, the brigs came within hailing distance, crossed each other’s bows, evidently for the purpose of exchanging communications. Shortly after this, a large square rigged merchant vessel appeared in the western horizon, and bore down towards the St. Nicholas. Again the brigs came within speaking distance of each other, and now seriously alarmed, the St. Nicolas crowded on her canvass; and aided by the wind and the darkness of the night made her escape.

"The captain and intelligent passengers of St .Nicholas are firm in the belief that those suspicious looking brigs were Mexican cruisers carrying letters of marque and reprisal. Circumstances certainly justify in great degree such a conjecture. What object could such a vessel have had, close reefed and evidently cruising about, consistent with the character of peaceful merchant craft?
The Administration-The War-The Tariff

In the present aspect of affairs with the probability of a war with Mexico, and an avowed determination to make war upon the Tariff, we are rather inclined to think that the present Administration is in a quandary.

The President and his Cabinet must know, as every school-boy knows, that if the United States engage in a war with Mexico, insignificant as some may regard the latter Government, we shall need a certain means of supporting our Army and Navy. What then, are we to rely on as the resources of this Government, if the Polk Administration should see fit, by the aid of demagogues to repeal the Tariff?

Mr. Walker, the Secretary of the Treasury, has been tinkering away, for the last two or three months, upon some scheme of reducing the present Tariff to a “revenue standard.” Does he mean to reduce this wholesome measure, to a standard by which the mere expenses of the Government can be met? Or will that gentleman increase the height of his standard, by laying such duties on foreign imports, as will enable the people of the United States to keep off direct taxation? Here now, in the emergency of a war, we can give the Anti-Tariffites an opportunity of displaying their ingenuity, by calling upon them to know if they really intend to reduce the Tariff to such a low standard as to compel the Democracy to put their hands into breeches pockets and make good the deficit in the revenue, necessary to carry on a war which has been brought about by the Stock Jobbers and Land Speculators of the U.States

We should like really to see the first draught of Secretary Walker's in regard to his reduction to a revenue standard; and then ask his permission to look over his shoulder, when he finds it necessary to shape his ends differently. If we mistake not, the great Financier of the Treasury and Tariff department will yet it incumbent on this Government to keep up such a standard as will not only brace the manufacturing interests of this country, but also give strength to the soldiery of the United States. If this same little, “weak” and outraged Government of Mexico requires Twelve Millions of Dollars to sustain herself in a War, how much will the United States require to support her vast army and navy?

When the “revenue standard” men can answer this question, then perhaps, Mr. Walker will let this question, then perhaps, Mr. Walker will let the world know what he means when he says that the Tariff must be re-enacted, and suited to such a purpose as the Democracy demand.

But, we may be doing the Annexationists an...injury, when we undertake to say that Uncle Sam must rely on solely on the proceeds of the Tariffs to carry him through in this war?—We should have recollected that in annexing the little Republic, we also annexed a vast domain of Texas lands, which, we suppose, the owners will at once convert into available means, sufficient to carry on the war, without having to depend upon any resources so uncertain as the duties on foreign goods. Or, perhaps as we before have intimated, Mr.Polk and his army of Annexation men, or any of her allies, without the need of funds. We shall patiently await the movements of his excellency in this matter— supposing, of course, that none but Polk, Dallas, and Texas men, will be allowed to fire even one musket at the poor Mexicans.

War with Mexico

That Mexico would declare war against the U. States, if her power were adequate to the wrong she has received, or to her resentment of that wrong, we have not doubted from the beginning: That she will do so, regarding the relative strength and position of the two countries, is what we shall be slow to believe until it is done; and if it should be done, we shall be prepared more to it should be done, we shall be prepared more to admire her spirit, than approve of her wisdom.

Nothing can be imagined more entirely hopeless and unequal, than a contest between the U. States and Mexico: It would indeed be so much so, that the brave man would almost be ashamed to draw his sword against Mexico: He would feel as if he was attacking a woman, or a professed non-combatant, where victory if possible would be more disgraceful than defeat. Mexico in a contest with the United States, would have the same chance and no greater, than Montezuma and his subjects three hundred years ago, had against effeminacy; of knowledge against ignorance; of discipline against rabble; of energy against effeminacy; of knowledge against ignorance; of the Caucasian and Anglo Saxon, pure white blood, against a mixed and mongrel race, composed of Indians, negroes and Spaniards, all three degenerated by the admixture of blood and colors, debased by superstition, and enfeebled by faction and intestine feuds. No laurels can be gained in such a war. Plunder there might be, and to some this might prove an equally powerful incentive with Glory.

The Tariff and War

If a war with Mexico ensues, it will increase the annual expenses of the Government not less certainly, than 20 millions of dollars. Already we may anticipate an immense augmentation of expenditures, in preparation, in the creation and transmission of munitions of troops, and in the new direction given to the Naval operations.

What, under these new circumstances, will the Anti-Tariff party proposed to do? They profess to be willing to support a Revenue Tariff-one which shall provide for the wants of government, and nothing beyond-a principle, in which, on different principles, we perfectly coincide with them: But, if instead of 20 millions of Revenue, 30 millions are necessary, what will they propose then we to do? Increase the Tariff to the Revenue standard! We should be glad to hear from that party in the present prospects of the country.

Mexico and the United States

Several days have elapsed since the news of the Declaration of War, from belligerent Mexico, reached the American government at Washington, and yet, doubtless from some informality in the proceedings of the former, the latter, beyond the profiler of some preliminary advice, has manifested nothing definitive as to its ulterior designs. Our soldiery, in the meantime, as in crises past are instinctively burnishing their death-dispensing blades; and the...so much dreaded for their effective arms. While Texas, "the head and front of our offending"- the "beautiful but unfortunate" Texas, is eying with deep solicitude, the vapourings or the unnecessarily outraged... of her neighbor. We say unnecessarily outraged because, in the honest conviction of our minds, we have province to be superior to those of any other Nation acknowledging her in a like respective relation; or we have rather the more willingly, coincided with others better informed in the matter than ourselves, who have advocated the "let alone" policy, trusting to the rapid growth of her power and population as a means of establishing her importance in the scale of Nations, and by an affirmation of American policy so weaning herself, in place, Annexation in the bounds of honourable adjustment-such as should have characterized the diplomacy of a Nation with whom she had ever acted in good faith.

Texas

By the arrival of the Texan steamship McKim, we have received our files of Texas papers on the 5th inst; there is however nothing important in them. Of the proceedings of the convention we learn but little from the papers we have received, the only notice of it...the reports of two special committees-one on Finance and the other on Education.

The McKim reports the arrival at Galveston on the 7th instant, of the sloop Olive Branch, from Corpus Christi, which vessel reports the United States revenue cutter Woodbury, at Port Cavallo, awaiting the arrival of Major Donaldson, when she would proceed to New Orleans. The United States troops were on St. Joseph’s Island. The steamer Dayton left Galveston on the 6th under charter, for Corpus Christi, to convey the troops to the main land. The United States ship St. Mary's, arrived at Galveston on the 7th instant.

The N.O. Tropic of the 14th contains the following:

The only important intelligence brought by the French brig of war, Mercure, which sailed from Vera Cruz on the 27th. Mexico had not declared war, but that she probably would do so very soon. We understand that the Mercure brought no mail, and the only verbal information that could be gathered from her offices went to show a general belief among the citizens of Vera Cruz that war or non-intercourse was inevitable. We learn nothing from the Water Witch, though it is hardly probable that she sailed until some time in this month.

Mexico has not yet declared war against the United States although she received; by the British brig. of war Persian...Texas upon the propositions made to her for examinations made to her for annexation, and some rumors of active military movements on the part of the United States.

Not only had there been no declaration of war, or even of commercial non-intercourse, but we can find not one word in our ample files to show that any military operations have yet been resolved upon in Mexico. The story of 10,000 men moving towards Texas is just a rumor.

RW22n70p1c2, September 2, 1845: THE MEXICAN WAR AND INVASION OF TEXAS

The opinion is now strongly prevailing with all classes, as far as we can learn, that the manifestoes of Senor Garcia Conde, Secondary of War, were either apocryphal altogether, or unauthorized—that there will be no war, and no invasion of Texas--if there is— and that Gen. Gaines has acted both illegally and grannyishly in calling for Volunteers. Some men cannot resist any opportunity of rendering themselves conspicuous, though the temporary notoriety be purchased at the expense of the permanent discredit of their understandings.

The Alexandria Gazette of yesterday says:

“It appears that Gen. Gaines, is indeed, on his high horse. A letter from New Orleans states that in addition to his requisition upon the Governor of Louisiana, he called on the Governor of Arkansas, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky to hold their volunteers in readiness. He does not do all this under any direct authority or orders from Washington, but considers himself authorized under his general instructions, acting discretionary. No one knows what information he may possess, that, in his opinion, renders such a step necessary. From the published accounts, and from the tenor of numerous private letters both from Mexico and Texas, no sufficient cause exists for throwing that whole district of country into a high state of excitement, by calling young men and citizens from their ordinary avocations and business to unnecessary exposure under burning tropical sun, attended with consequent sickness and loss of life. Gen Gaines is an alarmist of the first water, and may “catch it” from, the War Department for the present proceeding. If his call be acceded to, Uncle Sam will have a pretty bill of expenses to foot, or, what is more probable, will refuse to have any thing to do with it, on the ground that the whole proceeding was unauthorized and unnecessary.”
The Baltimore Patriot of the same date says:

“MEXICO AND TEXAS.— We stated in our paper of yesterday, on the authority of a letter from Matamoras, that General Paredes was on his march to Monterey, with four or five thousand men. The New Orleans Courier says: “If it be true that Paredes is going to California with five thousand men, it is hardly possible that the Government of Mexico contemplates an invasion of Texas, for which object she would want every man and musket she could muster.” The National Intelligencer of this morning says, “it is evident that the Editor of the Courier has fallen into the error contained in the above remark, by supposing that the Monterey to which Gen. Paredes is advancing is the city of that name on the Pacific, in upper California, instead of being, as is undoubtedly the case, Monterey, in New Leon, and sixty miles directly west from Matamoras, and forty-five southwest from Mier, both of which latter places are on the Rio Grande. In fact, all the information we have, if we could rely upon its authenticity, would lead to the inference that the forces under Generals Arista, Paredes, Gaona, and Bustamente were marching to take up position on the Rio Grande—-we will not say preparatory to the passage of this river, but undoubtedly with a view to such a location as might render operation practicable, at more points than one, with the least possible delay and difficulty. We ought to add, however, that we have no reason to rely upon the late news from New Orleans press, the apparent absence of any information on the subject Gen. Taylor, and our New Orleans correspondence, all go to confirm the impression that the report of these warlike movements on the part of Mexico is most probably premature.”

[BRM]

RW22n70p1c5, September 2, 1845: DEPARTURE OF VOLUNTEERS

From the New Orleans Courier, Aug. 22.

DEPARTURE OF VOLUNTEERS

Yesterday afternoon, the company of artillery, who volunteered under Major Gally, marched from the Public Square, under a salute of twenty-eight guns, to the United States Barracks, three miles below the city. The fine, capacious steamship Alabama was lying in front of the barracks, with Captain Forno’s company on board. Notwithstanding the heat and dust, a vast crowd accompanied the march of the company from the square, increasing the great concourse of people already at the barracks; among the spectators was a considerable number of the fair sex, who had come to take a parting adieu and last look of brothers, husbands, and sons, leaving their homes to encounter the enemies of their country. There never was a nobler body of young men collected together for such a purpose. The greater part of them are under twenty-five years of age, and few are over thirty. The company, without halting, marched on board the steamer which is to convey them to Texas, the veteran Gally moving at their head. A little before ten o’clock in the night the steamer got under weigh with the companies above mentioned and five companies, comprising about 200 men and the 7th United States Infantry, the whole under the command of Major Gally.

The number of troops embarked is as follows:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Unit</th>
<th>Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Major Gally’s artillery</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Forno’s do</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seventh Infantry</td>
<td>214</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>403</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

The U.S. infantry that embarked are as fine, hardly, athletic fellows as we ever saw—-all young, at least under the middle age, and looking as if they could effect anything that can reasonable be required of human daring and physical strength. This is a very efficient reinforcement for General Taylor, if he should be found in a situation of difficulty. The two volunteer companies carry with them eight field pieces, with fixed ammunition and accoutrements complete, with officers of skill and bravery to direct the exertions of the gallant young soldiers who are to manage them. The detachment of infantry, as we just observed is as efficient as one could desire to be associated with on the field of fame. Four hundred of such men, so commanded, are sufficient to change the aspect of campaign where the numbers on either side are not more than a few thousand.

RW22n70p1c5, September 2, 1845: MEXICAN INDEMNITY

From a private letter, says the New York Express, dated Mexico, July 26th, 1845, received by a gentleman in New York, we derive information that on the 31st inst., a motion was made in Congress to call on the Secretary of the Treasury for written report on the subject of the payment of the two missing installments of indemnity, which produced a very animated and lengthy discussion. Mr. Trigueros, the late Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Vose, the Agent of the United States, were handled most unceremoniously; and the Ex-Minister of the United States, Mr. Shannon, was likewise subjected to some critical remark. The motion was finally carried by a vote of 27 to 26, and... we are now likely to get possession of all the leading facts in this mysterious affair. At copy of the report will be forwarded to us as soon as practicable after it is made public in Mexico.—Bal. Pat.

From the New York Express, Aug. 29.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

BUSTAMENTE, Commander of the Forces against Texas—The Fifteen Millions-Loss authorized.

The bark Ann Louisa, Captain Marshall, arrived last evening from Vera Cruz. She sailed on the 3d inst.

Previous and up to the departure of the bark Ann Louisa from Vera Cruz, the Mexican Government were making great preparations for war. They had taken all the guns and munitions of war out of the Castle of St. Juan de Ulloa, fearing, in the event of an attack, they would fall into the hands of the Americans.

A large number of troops had marched for the frontier of Texas. The whole force, when assembled, were to be under the command of Gen. Bustamente. The Mexicans, Capt M. states, say the United States are sending troops into Texas, and they, the Mexicans, will march through Texas on the road to the Capitol at Washington, without declaring War!

Congress have passed the bill permitting the Government to borrow $15,000,000 to carry on the War. This amount they confidently expect to raise in England.

RW22n70p1c6, September 2, 1845: FROM THE YUCATAN

The position of Yucatan towards Mexico is like to prove troublesome. The central Government demands men and money, to prosecute a war against the United States, and the response is, "not one cent." You may have both for the defence of Mexico, if invaded, but no aid, whatever, from us to prosecute a war against the United States. As Yucatan is one of the most independent of the Provinces of Mexico, and therefore, the least likely to be trampled upon, it is not probable that she will yield. Mexico has not the courage, or the means to enforce submission at her hands; and she is likely, therefore, to maintain her ground. Yucatan has before been in rebellion against those who now seek to burden her with taxes, to prosecute a war she is opposed to. She opposed centralism and Santa Ana together, and she once united with Texas to resist Mexico. The people of Yucatan are a better educated people that most of the subjects of Mexico, and will soon have a government of their own, and one wholly independent of Mexico.—N. Y. Express

RW22n70p2c1, September 2, 1845: RICHMOND FAYETTE ARTILLERY

MARCH TO MEXICO!

We find in the "Union,"(Mr. Polk’s organ) or Saturday, the following warlike correspondence.

The spirit thus manifested by the Artillery, we have little question would be that of the whole country was really considered in any danger by a singly human being. But as it is, we can scarcely believe that any rational man regards the ‘attitude’ of Mexico, whatever gasonade her Governors may employ, or the national habits of that people familiarly resort to, as implying the slightest danger to any Anglo American thing of life, from a man to a musquetoe! And talking of musquetoes, we regard them at present, and we believe the ladies of Richmond most heartily concur with us in opinion, as far more annoying and troublesome than the Mexicans, whom those ladies, if need were, flog themselves. They (the musquetoes) worry the children of nights, and the ladies themselves, terribly. We should look upon it as a most patriotic achievement, and quite as safe as the proposed onslaught against the Mexicans, if the Artillery would give this subtle and nocturnal for a, few broad sides before their departure for Mexico. We think it would be quite as easy to get the musquetoes to assemble on the Capitol Square, and consent to 'stand fire,' as to induce the Mexicans to stand the same operation. For the 'glory,' we feel satisfied that the ladies, whose bright smiles and brighter eyes are, in very truth, the only 'glory' that men care for, would pay more (at this particular time when they are 'slapping' all night to try to kill a stray musquetoe) for a musquetoe's scalp for a Mexican's.

The correspondence follows:

WAR OFFICE

We are favored with the following copy of the correspondence which has passed between the Richmond "Fayette Artillery" Company and the Secretary of War. It breathes the true spirit:

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA,

August 27, 1845.

SIR---In pursuance of a Resolution which I have now the honor to communicate to you, I beg leave to offer your department the services of the "Richmond Fayette Artillery" for any duty you may be pleased to assign to us.

This corps, being one of volunteers, has been in commission more than twenty-three years. It has now on its rolls fifty-two members. With the exception of three commissioned officers, and two company officers, it is composed exclusively of mechanics. We are well uniformed, well equipped with swords, pistols, and hour beautiful six pounder brass guns; and could assemble for duty upon short notice. The strength of the Company might, with readiness, be increased to the complement of a full company, according to regulation.

In making this offer, we are actuated, as our resolution expresses, by the threatening attitude of Mexico towards our country. We are not uninformed of many wrongs our fellow citizens have suffered at the hands of Mexico—her refusal to render justice in many yet unadjusted cases—and the violation of right which she would commit by now invading Texas. We do not desire war; but as volunteers, in view of the position she has assumed, we feel that we are in the proper discharge of our duty when we offer ourselves for war-service.

Should there be, in the opinion of your department, necessity for draught from the volunteers of Virginia, I beg to say, for myself and my corps, that I should feel greatly honored by being included among them.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

THOMAS H. ELLIS,
Captain Richmond Fayette Artillery.

Hon. William L. Marcy,
Secretary of War, Washington City.

--

At a meeting of the 'Richmond Fayette Artillery," at Military Hall, Tuesday night, August 26th, 1845, after drill--Captain Ellis in the chair, Lieutenant Nimmo offered the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, in the present state of affairs, a strong probability exists that Mexico will declare war against the United States; and feeling this to be an occasion when our volunteers should be prompt in tendering their services for the defence of their country.

"Be it therefore resolved, That the captain be, and is hereby, requested to offer the services of the 'Richmond Fayette Artillery' to the Secretary of War of the United States, for any duty he may think proper to assign us."

Lieutenant Rawlings seconded the same, with remarks.

After remarks from the captain, Lieut. Brown, Sergeant Hatcher, and Surgeon Brown, the preamble and resolution as proposed were adopted, with but one dissenting voice.--
SIR: Your letter of the 27th inst. Has been received, offering, by resolution the whole corps, the services of the Richmond Fayette Artillery volunteer company under your command, “for any service that may be required by this department, for the defence or their country, in case Mexico shall declare war against the United States.”

Should the President be authorized to take into the service of the United States volunteers, and should the public exigency warrant the acceptance of your offer, the President will most readily avail himself of it.

The President and this department fully appreciated the public spirited and patriotic motives which prompt your offer, which will be entered on the list of candidates for military service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed)

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War

CAPT. THOMAS H. ELLIS of Richmond Fayette Artillery,
Richmond Virginia.

RW22n70p2c1, September 2, 1845: REQUISTION FOR MEN

The “Union” Mr. Polk’s organ, of Friday evening, says:

“The New Orleans Bulletin,’ of the 22d instant, quotes an article from the ‘Vicksburg Whig,’ of the 12th, which states that ‘a gentleman, who has just arrived from Jackson, informs us that the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, has required Governor Brown to make a draught of men, and have them ready for further order.—Our informant did not know what number the Governor was required to call out.’ This is a mistake. No such requisition had been made. General Taylor is authorized, if necessary, to call for men from Mississippi, as well as from Louisiana, &c. But it is certain that no such call was made at the time specified, in any form whatsoever.”

The “Union” thus denies that the power of calling for militia by the Federal Executive, when there is no war, insurrection, or invasion, has been exercised by Mr. Polk; but it quite as distinctly affirm, that Mr. Polk has clothed Gen. Taylor with this unconstitutional power, to be exercised at his discretion. What is the difference? Why this simply, to plain understandings: the first would be a positive and overt infraction of law, (making requisitions without the authority of Congress;) the other is the intention, the readiness and determination to do it. There is a very shadowy line of moral and political demarcation between the two: Between a man’s doing a wrong thing, and his firm purpose of doing it the first opportunity, there is no difference at all in his moral accountability.

Mr. Polk’s errors committed, and in the way to be committed, have all grown out of his sensitive, repugnance to an extra session of Congress: Yet as Congress is the War-making and the War-providing power in our system, nothing is or can be clearer, than that Congress ought to be in session when war is to be denounced by this country, or against this country.

RW22n70p2c1, September 2, 1845: REPORTS

We have had in the last two or three days, very bloody reports form Texas, circulating in the streets, but not even the retailers able to tell from whom they received them. The principal of these was, that Gen. Taylor, with 2000 men, had been cut off by the Mexicans!
Such a report will be true when apples grow on oaks and figs on briars: And if it could be true—if 2000 Anglo Americans could allow themselves to be cut off by that effeminate race of Hybrids, not a tear ought to be shed for their fall, nor a funeral gun to illustrate the last ceremonies.

RW22n70p2c3, September 2, 1845: LATEST FROM TEXAS

The National Intelligencer of yesterday contains the following items, which are the latest of authenticity which met our eye from the seat of war! (Qu. Of humbug and putting up prices for Uncle Sam?)

The conduct of Gen. Gaines, in making requisitions for militia without the authority of the executive, which could itself have no such authority without that of Congress, is admitted to be illegal by the "Organ," the "Union": that paper while it concedes (as we do) the purity of his motives, says his motives "cannot exempt him from the censure of the Executive"!

"LATEST FROM TEXAS, &c.

Advice from an Officer of the Army, dated at Corpus Christi on the 15th August, communicate the important intelligence that so far there is no sign of hostilities on the part of the Mexicans. It is stated that a courier who had been despatched by Gen. Taylor to Matamoras, had returned and reported that there were only four hundred Mexican troops in our near that place. Our troops under the command of General Taylor, had all left St. Joseph's Island, and were encamped on the main land. They had a pleasant camping ground, with a delightful breeze continually prevailing, and were in fine health and spirits, with no enemy near them, and no sign of expectation of any.

A letter from an Officer of the Second Dragoons, dated at Nacogdoches on the 31st July, states that the seven companies of that regiment arrived there on that day, after a six days' march from Fort Jessup. They were to leave on the next day for the Trinity, and thence fro San Antonio. The writer says that the command stood the march very well.

A latter from Aransas Bay, dated on the 14th August, given an account of the loss of the schooner Swallow on the 12th, as she was going over the Aransas Bar. She was chartered by Government, and had on board a cargo of coal and a quantity of stores, and clothing belonging to the Third Infantry.

The New Orleans Bee of the 23d informs us that a company of one hundred and fifty volunteers, styling themselves the Mississippi Riflemen, were expected to arrive in New Orleans on the 24th, destined for the Mexican frontier. It was their intention to join the Louisiana volunteers.

The Pensacola correspondent of the Tropic writes as follows, under date of the 20th August:

"Presuming it would be interesting to hear a little bit of news about the doings of our squadron, I take the liberty to address you a few lines on the subject. As I am writing, the St. Mary's and Saratoga are coming in under heavy canvass, and no doubt we shall some exciting news, both from Texas and Mexico.

"The Princeton and the steamer Mississippi arrived here yesterday—the former Philadelphia, and the letter from Boston. The sloop John Adams and brig Porpoise anchored the day previous in front of the Navy Yard. So you will perceive that we have no a very decent show to make in the Gulf.

"To recapitulate, our squadron now consist of the following men of war: the sloop Falmouth mounting twenty guns; the brig Lawrence, ten guns—now in the Gulf, supposed to be at Vera Cruz; steamer Mississippi, ten 64 pound carronade; sloop John Adams, twenty guns; frigate Potomac, forty four guns.

"The above named vessels, with the exception of the two first ones, which are in Vera Cruz, are now all lying at anchor at the Navy Yard, under command Commodore Conner, and will leave for the Gulf [supposed to be for Vera Cruz] on Saturday; the leak on board the Potomac not having been discovered yet, it is presumed that Commodore will leave her here and shift his broad pennant on board of the Mississippi. Capt. Ingram arrived here by this day's mail to relieve Captain Gerry of the brig. Somers--I presume you are already aware of the troops now at Forte McRae and Pickens having been also ordered to Texas."

RW22n71p1c1, September 5, 1845: THE WAR WITH MEXICO

There is a great disposition on the part of the general public, to laugh the Mexican war machine attempt into contempt. We must confess that we consider the disposition natural and authorized. The battle of San Jacinto, which The Undine left Aransas Bay on the 21st inst. The schooner prevailed in the Camp.

Matamoras does not exceed 1,500—-that they are sadly supported, and not more efficient than Mexican soldiers.

Per contra the Civilian declares that from the best information, the number of troops at Matamoras is said to be 8,000 strong, and are engaged in fortifying that city.

The Galveston News states that the Mexican army at Matamoras is said to be 8,000 strong, and are engaged in fortifying that city.

The steamer which had been wrecked on the Bar, had been stripped on her masts, sails, rigging, &c. Some of her cargo was saved.

The steamer McKim, at Galveston, was to leave at 3 o’clock on the 23d inst.

The Galveston News states that the Mexican army at Matamoras is said to be 8,000 strong, and are engaged in fortifying that city.

Per contra the Civilian declares that from the best information, the number of troops at Matamoras does not exceed 1,500—-that they are sadly supported, and not more efficient than Mexican soldiers.

A Correspondent of the N. Y. Herald at Washington, writes that paper as follow:

“It surely cannot be the object of our government to commence the war. If war is to come, let Mexico begin it, and then let her look out for the blow that will follow. Gen Taylor is undoubtedly told that he must not be the aggressor. He has a difficult duty to perform. He is in a wild country, with Mexicans on one side and Texans on the other. He must make roads, establish posts, and build forts on our new frontier. While he is preparing to repel a blow from the one, it is equally his duty to see that there is no improper interference on the part of the other. If war is to come, it will not be proclaimed from the capital of Mexico; but it, will be commenced on the banks of the Rio Grande. It becomes the duty of the American General, then, to prevent all lawless depredation—-to restrain all lawless bands—-to allow no crossing of the line by unauthorized desperadoes, no burning of houses, no stealing of horses, no cutting of throats, no hanging. For the performance of so difficult a duty our government has, it is said, selected one of its ablest generals—-an officer of judgment, courage and experience. They are placing at his disposal the flower of our army, and are surrounding him by those choice spirits, which are every where to be found among our educated and gallant young officers. They are stripping our coast of troops, leaving only here and there, an old jogy with a few young officers and the skeleton of a company, to act as a sort of police guard about our fortification. Let them now authorize the General in the field, in case of emergency, to call for volunteers and militia from Texas, and all will be well. If volunteers and militia are required, let them come from Texas first, and, if necessary, from the Mississippi valley afterwards. Let them be called for by the General who conducts the campaign, and not by an old alarmist in the city of New Orleans. It will never do to trust to the discretion of General Gaines. He is too much like Father Ritchie, “ardent as a southern sun can make him.” He is one of your hair trigger old gentlemen, who, whenever there is the least excitement, goes off half cocked, as a matter of course! Like an old dragoon charger, he hears war in every bugle note—-he snuffs it in the breeze from afar—-pricking up his ears, gives a snort, and, with head and tail erect, sets out to join in the distant ranks, and hopes to make yet another charge! He has ever had the disposition to defend his country—he was once, no doubt, a gallant and valuable officer; but that was “a long time ago.” He ought now to seek that quiet and repose so necessary to age and the decline of life. It is now too late for him to mingle in the strife of contending armies, and to lead on those daring spirits, whose prowess must, in the last resort decide the fate of nations. Cannot the Executive hold him in check, and prevent his doing mischief? This is all that the people can expect. The country certainly will not look to him, at this late day, as the leader of its armies—it has younger men. Would it not be well for our legislators to provide something like a pension or retired list for our old and worn out officers who have done the state of good service? Would it not be well to provide some arrangement which would enable them to retire in comfort, leave their places to be filled by young efficient men. A single injudicious and unnecessary call for militia would cost the county more money than would support Gen. Gaines and all his old associates, on a retired list, during the remainder of their lives. Besides, it would do the country no good to have our young men drawn from their business pursuits by such ill­timed calls.”
The accounts from the Convention are meager and unsatisfactory. Nothing further had been done relative to the project of attempting to establish a Provisional Government and annulling the present Constitution, prior to the completion of the Constitution of the State. The plan had been strongly opposed by Messrs. Henderson, Van Zandt, and other leading members, and discountenanced by Major Donelson.

The following resolutions, introduced by Gov. Runnels, were adopted by the Convention on the 29th ult:

"Resolved. That the committee on the General Provisions of the Constitution be instructed to enquire into the expediency and propriety of incorporating in the Constitution, the following provisions:

SLAVES.

1st. The Legislature shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves; without the consent of their owners, or without paying their owners previous to such emancipation, a full equivalent for the slaves emancipated. They shall have no power to prevent immigrants to this State from bringing them such persons as are deemed slaves by the laws of any one of the United States so long as any person of the same age and description shall be continued in slavery by the laws of this State; provided that such person or slave be the bona fide property of such emigrants; and provided also, that laws may be passed to prohibit the introduction into this State of slaves who have committed high crimes in other States or Territories. They shall have full power to oblige the owners of slaves to treat them with humanity, to provide for them necessary food and clothing, to abstain from all cruelties to them; and in case of their neglect or refusal to comply with the requisitions of such laws, to provide, by law, for the sale of such slave or slaves, for the benefit of the owner or owners.

2d. In the prosecution of slaves for crimes of higher grade that petit larceny, the Legislature shall have no power to deprive them of an Impartial trial by a petit jury.

3d. Any person who shall maliciously dismember or deprive a slave of life, shall suffer such punishment as would be inflicted in case the like offence had been committed on a free white person, and on the like proof, except in case of insurrection of such slave."

On of the provisions passed by the Convention prohibits the creation, renewal or extension of any corporate body with banking or discounting power. Another section prohibits the Legislature from contracting debts above one hundred thousand dollars, except in case of war, or to repel invasion or insurrection.

The Houston Telegraph of the 21st instant, says that a party of about 70 Mexican soldiers approached within 16 miles of Castroville, about a fortnight ago. Captain Hays received information of their movements, and went out to attack them; but they were apprised of his approach by other of their spies, and hastily decamped. It is supposed that they intended to attack Castroville for the purpose of capturing a quantity of goods that had been deposited there by some Mexican traders. The traders reported that they were under the command of a man by the name of Platina; that they belonged to a detachment of Cartradores, that has recently been stationed at Presidio.

Our neighbours of the Enquirer go into a long editorial, in their paper of yesterday, to establish the inconsistency of the Whig on the war-question and the unkindness of what was intended as a mere piece of fun, our article on the bellicose demonstration of the Fayette Artillery. We do not think it worth our while to vindicate the Whig from the first charge, no is it all necessary that we should say anything with reference to the last. But the Enquirer (one of whose Editors is a gay Lieutenant of the veteran corps in question) seems determined to misinterpret our meaning and to draw from it an innuendo against their courage and patriotism. Now no such thing was intended. Nobody though of asserting that the Richmond Fayette Artillery was not spirited and gallant company. So far from it we are willing to consider that this recent emeule proves incontestably that they are the most determined and soldierly and intrepid body of volunteers that ever dragged cannon in the service of freedom.

In view of the (very) "threatening attitude of Mexico," they had a perfect right to offer their services to the Secretary of War, and if Gov. Marcy had thought proper to accept them, we should not have urged a single objection to their embarking, together with all who would accompany them, not even excluding the Chepachet Invincibles of Thomas W. Dorr.

It is certainly very amusing to see a company and a company of Virginians, as ardent as a southern sun can make them, so eager for a fray as to resolve themselves into a standing army of 56 men and pant to rush desperately (two thousand miles) upon a foe, composed of effeminate, half-fed, ill-clothed, disaffected Mexicans, not as yet in the field and little disposed for attack. It was this much ado about nothing that diverted us---this belligerent spirit with no occasion for its exercise---this over-hasty and premature intrepidity which snuffs the battle from afar, which would carry the Artillery to Mexico and bring them back unthinned but by fever, resembling nothing so much as those dreadful preparations, when

“The King of France with forty thousand men, Marched up the Hill and then marched down again.”

In this state of affairs and not wishing the Artillery’s patriotism to evaporate, we ventured to suggest that they might win domestic laurels by doing something to exterminate the mosquitoes, which always attend the exodus of summer. So great have become the ravages of these pests that we were about begging some public spirited city father to introduce a bill (we do not intend a pun) into the Common Council to grant us a riddance. But if the military (which is more potent than the civil force) would take it up and demonstrate that truth of the poet-philosopher, Peace has its’ victories as well as war, what blessings would not attend them! What abundant reward would they not reap in the smiles of the fair, to which we know the Artillery are not insensible! For to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, to follow industriously the ordinary avocations of life, to ride the community of insects that prey upon them during slumber, we submit,

Are ways to benefit mankind as true,
Perhaps, as shooting them at Waterloo.

RW22n71p2c3, September 5, 1845, MILITARY

We learn from the Pensacola Gazette of Saturday that the following named officers of the Staff have been ordered to report to General Taylor, in Texas:---Captain Ramsay, Ordinance department; Captain Crain, Topographical Engineers; Captain Sanders, Corps of Engineers; 1st Lieut. Scarrit, do; 2d Lieut. Kingsbury, Ordinance, and Bvt. Lieut. Word, Topographical Engineers.

The Gazette says---“We learn that three companies of the 7th Infantry now stationed at the Barancas, are to leave here in a day or two for Texas.”

The steamboat Creole arrived at Pensacola on Monday, took in military stores at Barancas, and left the same day for Aransas Bay.

The St. Augustine Herald publishes the following information in relation to the removal of the United States troops from the State:

The 8th Regiment, stationed at this post, Fort Brooks [Tampa Bay,] and Key West, received orders by the last mail to proceed to Aransas Bay, Texas Companies A---Gwynn’s; E---McKavitt’s; G---Worth’s and I----Hill’s are already embarked and sail to-day for their destination. Gen. Worth proceeds across the country to Tampa, at which point the Regiment is to rendezvous and embark in Transport ordered from the North.

The officers who embark at this post, are Capts. Worth, McKavitt and Hill; Lieut. Gates, Smith, Lee, Sheppard, Jordan, Longstreet and Wood.----N.O. Tropic.

RW22n72p1c1, September 9, 1845: DEBT OF TEXAS

It is stated in a New York paper that a proposition will be submitted at the next session of Congress to advance some millions to Texas, on condition that she transfer her public lands to the United States.

We never doubted, but that this annexation project—which originated in a speculating, gambling spirit, contemplated the saddling Uncle Sam with the debts of Texas. The zeal with which the scheme was supported by certain individuals could only be accounted for the supposition, that they were stimulated by interested considerations. The original scheme proposed in so many words the assumption of ten millions of debt; but this was so barefaced, that this feature was stricken out, and by the articles as finally agreed upon, Texas was left to pay her own debts. To get around this stipulation, and to return to the original plan, in effect, will now be the object to be accomplished. It is by this means only that the flaming patriots can realize to the full extent the immense profits anticipated from Texas scrip, &c.

We have seen no estimate to be relied upon of the amount of the Texas debt; but this is of no consequence. A matter of higher moment, is the principle involved. Is Texas the only State whose debts are to assumed by the Federal Government? Is she the only one worthy of this distinguished honour and signal favour? Why should not Indiana, Mississippi, Florida——and the rest of the States, whose credit has been tarnished, and who are embarrassed heavily, receive a like assistance from the Federal Treasury? Why, indeed, should not all the States come in for an equal and just distribution? On what principle of justice is it that Virginia, for instance, which contributed her millions of acres to the Union, shall be excluded, while this new State is to be overwhelmed by Federal bounty?

Can any other reason be assigned for such a proceeding, than the sinister influence, which the land jobbers and scrip speculators exert over the present Administration? If the Texas debt is assumed, several individuals, who are not overstocked with money to­day, may be millionaires to­morrow—­but no such partial and magical result would follow from Virginia’s receiving her just proportion of the Land Fund. Hence it is, that the noisy affairs at Washington, are so particularly intent on aggrandizing Texas—it is their own aggrandizement.

RW22n72p1c5, September 9, 1845: THE ARMY­PROMPT MOVEMENT

Observing several commendatory notices in the papers, of the promptness with which the Lexington was made ready for sea, after receiving orders from the Navy Department, it may not be improper to say that equal praise is due to the officers of the army, for promptly executing their orders to assemble and prepare for embarkation of troops sent out in the Lexington to Texas, which sailed on the 2d inst.

Orders were despatched from the War Department on the afternoon of the 23d of August, for the concentration of seven companies of artillery at Fort Columbus, New York harbor, thence to be embarked in the United States ship Lexington, for the army of Texas. Five of the companies were drawn from Frankford arsenal, Pennsylvania, Boston; Portsmouth, New Hampshire; and Portland, Maine. The detachment from the most distant station (Portland) reached New York on the morning of the 30th, when the whole command of 408 officers and men, under Major J. Erving, 2d regiment of artillery, with all their supplies and equipments for service, were in perfect readiness to embark.

The promptitude with which the orders of the War Department were executed, is highly creditable to the service.—Union.

RW22n72p2c1, September 9, 1845: FROM TEXAS

LIEUT. LAY, of the Army, mention in the New Orleans papers, passed through Richmond on Sunday, on his way to Washington, with despatches from Gen. Taylor. He considers, we understand, the prospect of a brush with the Mexicans as rather feeble. The latter were entrenching themselves, (not exceeding 3300 strong,) and seemed to be more in the attitude of defence than of attack. Their chance of doing mischief to Gen. Taylor’s command has passed by, probably forever.

RW22n72p2c3, September 9, 1845: FROM TEXAS LATE

The steamer Alabama, Capt. Windle, arrived this morning about 5 o’clock from Aransas bay, whence she departed Aug. 27. Yesterday wicked reports were circulated of an accident and disaster of the most dreadful kind having befallen the Alabama. It was said she was taken by Indians and 45 of the volunteers from New Orleans massacred—another rumor gave out she was sunk and all on board perished! The baseness of the motives in which these reports were invented may be imagined, when it is recollected that on board the Alabama were about 200 regular troops with their officers, and about the same number of volunteers raised in this city—many of them young men belonging to respectable families, a considerable number of them having wives and children of their own. Any one who could joke over the fancied loss in such a mode of such men as Major Gally, Captain Forno, their youthful and gallant volunteers, and so fine a detachment of American regulars must be lost to the feelings of humanity.—We can tell the author or authors of these reports that if we were now in a state of actual war, the laws would hold them responsible for circulating false intelligence, and they would pay dear for their miserable pleasantry.

We give the following details on the authority of letters from officers of the volunteers and the extra Picayune—one of the editors of which journal came passengers in the Alabama.

Lieutenant Lay of the army also arrived in the Alabama, with despatches from General Taylor.

The Alabama, after passing through some rough weather in the Gulf arrived safely at Aransas Bay on Sunday last, and the next day off St. Joseph’s Island, where the volunteers and regulars were landed without difficulty by means of the steamer Monmouth, which was on the spot waiting for the Alabama. On Tuesday the artillery embarked for Corpus Christ 35 miles distant, in the steamer Dayton, and joined General Taylor the same evening.
The volunteers enjoyed perfect health, and were impatient to come in contact with the Mexicans—but their wishes were not likely to be soon gratified. There was no movement on the other side of the Rio Grande that indicated any prospect of a fight, and Gen. Taylor anticipates no such event.

Arista, with 2000 men, was entrenching himself at Matamoras, and knows that Gen. Taylor is in his neighborhood. The army at corpus Christi numbers about 2000 men, and is constantly receiving reinforcements. It is equal to a much larger member of Mexicans. The country between Corpus Christi and the Rio Grande is almost wholly destitute of water, and otherwise is little better than a desert.

The Troops left on St. Joseph’s Island were preparing to move to Corpus Christi on the 27th when the Alabama departed. The Monmouth and Dayton were transporting the stores.

The brig William Ivy arrived hence at Aransas Bay on the 24th with two companies of the 4th infantry. On the passage out she was thrown on her beam ends by a squall, but righted in a few minutes with no damage. Before the squall a soldier jumped overboard in a fit of delirium tremens, but was picked up by a boat after some resistance, brought on board and tied. When the squall was struck to the brig he was released in order that he might swim—but he leaped into the sea and was lost.

The brig sailed on the 26th for Matagorda.

The Edward S. Lambden with stores arrived at St. Josephs in the morning of the 25th. The loss of the brig.
Swallow, mentioned some days ago in the Courier, is confirmed.

On the 26th U. States brig Lawrence, Com. Jones, arrived off St. Josephs, all well—was to sail on the 29th for Pensacola.

Schooner Mary Wilkes, hence, arrived at Aransas on the 27th with Col. Whistler, Major Stanniford, stores, horses, &c.

Mr. Ringold, who passed through this city some short time ago with despatches for Texas, arrived at Aransas from Galveston on the 24th with despatches from Gen. Taylor, and came passenger in the Alabama.

On the 25th news arrived of the 2d regiment of dragoons under Col. Twiggs being within four miles of Gen.
Taylor’s camp, which they were to join on the 28th. They lost not a single horse in their long and sultry march—there were two or three detentions. No sign of the Mexicans on the route.

Near San Antonio there were about 300 Comanche Indians, some of whom visited Col. Twiggs. They appeared delighted at they news of war between the United States and Mexico. They said they were going towards the border to carry on hostilities against the Mexicans. They admired the dragoon horses, and asked Col. Twiggs if they might steal some of them. The Col told them if they did so he would hang them. They then asked if they might steal horses from the Mexicans— to which the Col. Replied they might steal any thing from them, but if they stole from the Americans he would hand them.

Some days ago, a soldier went from the camp at St. Joseph’s to hunt, and was no more head of— supposed to have been bitten by a snake or to have lost his way in a cane brake—and he is said to be a very trusty man. A tent was struck by lightning at Corpus Christ, and a valuable servant belonging to Lieut. Bragg was killed, and some other persons were stunned.

The regulars and volunteers enjoyed perfect health and the finest spirits. Gen. Taylor intends to throw forward detachments of the dragoons towards the Rio Grande, so that no enemy can approach him without his being previously apprised of their intentions.

The cannon that went out with Major Gally, are of great utility in giving strength to the position of the army.
They are two twelves and six sixes. The defences set the Mexicans at defiance.

RW22n72p2c3, September 9, 1845: THE THEATRE OF ACTION

We learn from the Annapolis Republican that the Company of U.S. Artillery, which has been stationed at FORT SEVERN for several years past, under the command of Major Gardiner, took its departure in on of the Bay Steamers on Wednesday evening last for Fort Monroe, Old Point Comfort, Va.

The Theatre of Action
"General Taylor of the U.S. forces here, returned to the Ranche yesterday, from an excursion up the Nueces, whither he went for the purpose of seeing the country and meeting the Dragoons; now hourly expected at this place. He is much pleased with Corpus Christi, and the country he has seen adjacent to it. The camp is located immediately above town, on the bank of the bay, in a very pleasant, airy place, where a good supply of water is to be had by digging only some five or six feet deep. The steamer Dayton, from Galveston, is plying daily between this place and St. Joseph’s Island, together with some twelve or fifteen small sail vessels. The trade of our town continues to be lively, and it is to be hoped that the commanding officer here will continue to be, as he now is, disposed to sustain the people of the place in keeping it up. So far, through the influence of Col. K., and other residing here, the impression made upon the traders has been such as to establish perfect confidence in them, with regard to any thing of hostile nature on our part. As an evidence of this fact, within the last ten days three large parties have left here laden with goods for the West, and from these parties many of the officers have provided themselves with strong, fleet horses, which being natives of the country, and of a hardy nature, are much more valuable to them than other animals would be from abroad."

RW22n72p4c2, September 9, 1845: THE LATEST FROM TEXAS

The "New Orleans Tropic" of the 27th furnishes the following extracts from the Texas papers, which will be found of no inconsiderable interest to our readers:

"The 'Brasos Planter' says the conventions has fixed the seat of government at the city of Austin until the year 1850. Thirty-six votes were given in favor of Austin, and a scattering vote for other places.

"An important document from the land office at Austin has been laid before the convention. From it, we learn that the superficial extent of Texas, as comprised within the limits defined by statute of the 1st Texan Congress, comprises, is round numbers, 397,000 square miles, or 254,284,166 acres; that the total amount of land issued by the various boards of land commissioners is 43,543,970 acres; that the total amount of the above, recommended as good and lawful claims, is 19,212,206 acres; issued by the department of war, as bounty and donation claims, 6,300,000 acres; land scrip sold by the Texas government, three hundred and sixty-eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven acres; amount of legal claims to lands issued by Texas, 25,880,993 acres; amount issued, and supposed to be fraudulent, 24,331,760 acres; issued by the authorities of Mexico, a portion of which is supposed to be invalid, 22,000,000 acres, and that the total amount of the public domain subject to location and unsurveyed, is 181,991,403 acres. The officer of the land office, in communicating the above statement, says that he has no means of knowing the whole amount of scrip that has been issued by the Texan government, but thinks the amount yet out it about one-eighth of that shows to be in his office, and that the same is the case with reference to bounty lands."

Whilst we are printing this sheet, the United States dragoons, commanded by Col. Twiggs, are passing through town, amid the roar of artillery. Welcome visitors, indeed. God speed their march, and success attend their arms.--[Lugrange Intelligencer].

The last Galveston "Civilian" states, that the "United States troops under command of Gen. Taylor were busily engaged in fortifying their position near Corpus Christi west of the Nueces. The rest information from Matamoras is, that there were about 1,500 Mexican troops there, fortifying. They are represented to be badly supported, and not more efficient than Mexican soldiers usually are."

RW22n74p1c2, September 16, 1845: LATER FROM TEXAS

"Three companies of Mexican traders arrived at Corpus Christi [illegible] the 26th ult., and had purchased largely of goods. They reported that a regiment of Mexican troops had started from Tampico about six weeks ago, for Matamoras, about 700 in number, 400 of whom has deserted or died for want of food and water. They were also deserting from every post throughout Mexico. General PAREDES was at Monterey with from 800 to 1,400 men, and found it impossible to keep his men from deserting." [N.O. BEE]

From the N.O. Tropic Sep't 5.
The steamer Creole arrived at Mobile the morning of the 3d inst. From Aransas Bay. We receive by her our own correspondence from Corpus Christi, and are indebted to some gentleman who came passenger upon her for some verbal terms of information.

The [illegible] from Corpus Christi are up to the evening of the 31st ult., and from Aransas to that of the following day, when the [illegible] left for Mobile. Gen. Taylor still remained in his Camp, awaiting further developments of the designs of Mexicans, and orders from his own Government. The [illegible] Regiment of Dragoons, under Col. Twiggs, arrived at Corpus Christi on the 26th ult. All were in fine health and spirits. Every thing about the camp was perfectly quiet.

At about the same time as the Dragoons, three companies of Mexican traders arrived at Gen. Taylor’s camp with a goodly number of reports, but upon which little reliance could be placed. One of these reports was, that a regiment of Mexican troops, about 700 strong, left Tampico six weeks previous to Matamoras, but their numbers has been reduced to 300 [illegible] sickness and desertion on the march, induced by the war of food and water. At almost every military post in the North Eastern part of Mexico desertions were extremely frequent. Arista had been seriously all at Matamoras, but [illegible] so far recovered as to resume the duties of his command. Gen. Paredes was reported to be still at Monterey, but with less than 1500 troops, who were continually deserting. The reader must receives reports strictly as reporting Mexican news, received through Mexican trader, is proverbially uncertain.

The Creole left outside the bar at Aransas, the U.S. brig Lawrence;—all well on board. She also left, at anchor inside of the bar, the schooners Mary Wilkes, Enterprise, and E.L. Lamdin on the 2d inst., at o’clock, P.M., she met the steam propeller Augusta [illegible], as was supposed; for Aransas, loaded with horses, &c. The Creole made the passage from Aransas Bay to the [Illegible] Pass in 47 hours.

RW22n74p1c5, September 16, 1845: THE ARMY OF OBSERVATION

THE ARMY OF OBSERVATION----Its Position--its Officers--its Spirit,

The following sketch, from the New Orleans Picayune, gives a lively and interesting account of Gen. Taylor’s army and its prospects. It will be seen that it is composed of materials that have bee tried, and that are keen for another trial of their prowess. We think it probable the Mexican imbecility will scarcely furnish them “foemen worthy of their steel.”

CORPOR CHRISTI, August 30, 1845.

The position taken by Gen. Taylor is one of extreme beauty; and when the eye first rests upon his Camp, clustered with a thousand spotless white tents, along the shelly margin of the shore of Corpus Christi Bat, irresistible bursts of admiration follow! It is a position of security as well as beauty.

His tents are pitched on a piece of table land that reaches about a quarter of a mile to a range of hills; at has stationed, as an out­guard, a force of one hundred and twenty hardy and well tried Texans, to whose fidelity is entrusted this otherwise assailable point.---May. Gally, commanding the volunteers from New Orleans, is entrusted with guarding the extreme left, while the extreme right is safely guarded by Colonel Twiggs, commanding the 2d Dragoons. The center is composed of the 3d, 4th , and 7th Reg'ts of Infantry.

It is probably one of the healthiest and pleasantest spots in the world. From the earliest dawn refreshing breezes invigorate the body, dissipate the intensity of the heat, and nerve the system to a healthful action. The cool nights incite the weariness to repose, disturbed neither by the promenading flies, nor the buzzing musquito.

The only drawback to continuing this encampment is the scarcity of wood and water—the former, the troops haul three miles, and the latter is quite brackish—though I believe there are one or two small wells in camp which supply a very fair beverage.

The officers appear to enjoy themselves amazingly—considering they were supposed to be all cut up! They purchase Mexican ponies at from $10 to $30, and excellent nags they are to ride, too. The waters abound with fist and oysters, both of superior kind, and the prairies adjacent with rich flavored venison. Large and fat beeves are slaughtered daily for the use of troops, all which, with the liberal supplies of Uncle Sam, these occupiers of an independent nation’s soil can get along mighty well with.

There is a rumor in camp, to which the utmost credit is given, that fifteen hundred Mexicans have recently marched to Matamoras for its additional security. This is all the news about the movements of the enemy known here.

It is supposed Gen. Taylor will act [illegible phrase]. Wait for two months in his present position, to know what the Mexicans will do. If they do nothing, our government will send a Commissioner to Mexico to lay down the boundary of the two countries. If Mexico refuses to receive the Commissioner, and blindly turns away from a peaceable settlement, then our forces will immediately occupy the mouth and borders of the Rio Grande, and establish that as the boundary, whether or no.

Gen. Taylor is the very man the Government should have selected for the delicate and responsible duty of conducting an “Army of Occupation.” His judgment is ripened by a long life of military experience, and his clear, practical views, the result of a common sense way of looking at things. His courage is undoubted, as his patriotism is unsullied and pure. In a few words, he is a Soult for industry, and a Fabius for caution; but they do say he is a Jackson for stubbornness. With his excellent good sense, however, this is no deficit in his character. The honor of the country is safe in his hands.

Gen. Worth, the Ney of the army, will ere long join, with his Regiment (the 8th Infantry) the troops stationed here. He will be a great addition, and every officer feels a prouder glow at the prospect of being under his immediate command.

Col. Twiggs, with his stalwart frame and high military bearing, is the very beau ideal of a veteran cavalry officer. If an opportunity is offered, he will lead his gallant and well mounted corps, consisting of as bold a set of officers and men as can be found anywhere, to the thickest of the fight.

Col. Whistler is in command of the 4th Infantry. To give you a correct idea of the Colonel’s daring. I will tell you an anecdote of him, which occurred during the last war, on the Northern frontier. In sight of the American and English armies, prepared for battle, an Indian Chief committed a most insulting reproach to the former. Col. W., then a Lieutenant, rushed at him, out of his lines, and the two armies witnessed a terrible conflict. Both were in the flower of their youth, strength and courage, and fought for life—for honor! The Saxon blood gained the victory; he laid his savage foe low upon the ground, and, undisturbed by the enemy, returned to his lines, to receive a severe reprimand for such a reckless exposure of his life. Under such a leader, the officers and men of the Fourth may be sure of being led into the thickest of the fight.

Col. Hitchcock commands the 3d Infantry, a complete scholar, gentleman and soldier. In his valor end steady firmness and officers of his Regiment place the most implicit reliance. It would seem as if this Regiment was determined to win all the honor and trophies of war. However, the officers cannot have a higher estimate of their leader’s gallantry than the Government places on it.

Maj. Brown commands the 7th Infantry. This is the Regiment that distinguished itself at the battle of New Orleans. The Major is a matter of fact soldier, and says, though he likes his comfort as well as the next man, “there are two campaigns still in him.” With such a sentiment as this on his lips, does he not embody the idea of a true soldier? He has under him the most gallant, noble hearted fellows that ever seeing an sword on a soldier’s thigh!— From the next command down to the lat Brevet, there is not a heart but leaps with joy for the fray. They have come for war, and can’t bear disappointment any more than you can, that man with the “white hat” which you used to make yourself merry about. By the by there is a “white hat” in camp. Had your “white hat” a pair of boots under it? And such a pair, the God’s defend us! Why the Alabama chartered? Col. Hunt could never have seen those boots!

The army is now ready for action. It is well appointed in every respect—1900 strong—every man able to do duty, and every heart a tower of strength! Under the broad fields of the Stars and Stripes, that loveliest of flags, this little army will become Hotspurs all. They are prepared and eager for the fray.

I send you this by the Creole. Light blow the winds smooth be the seas, on her homeward track.

Adieu,

from the gigantic power, the enormous growth in population and resources, and as the conceive the unbounded and uncepsurable ambition of the American People than the Annexation of Texas! If his judgment revolts against these conclusions as unjust to the national character of his country, an American citizen may be pardoned for exulting in the changed tone of England especially towards his country! When speaking of the United States the press and Statesmen of England, no longer speak in terms on contemptuous derision of her "renegade and runaway" population of her few "fire built frigates, with a piece of striped bunting at the mast head!" They now salute us as a "great power!" When they speak of our navy they speak of fleets and not of single frigates! When they speak of the astounding advances if this country in production, in the development of new illimitable resources, in the cultivation of the arts, in all the elements of power and greatness, and above all when they speak of her far stretching Empire and of its probable still farther increase from "Democratic ambition," it is with ill suppressed dislike, but still with profound respect, may with something like admiration and awe!

And it well may be so- for the United States has but to keep banded 50 years longer to exhibit the greatest power the world ever witnessed! In truth, no imagination could ever supposition of the continued union of the States, pretend to assign a limit to their power or to their influence over the fortunes and destinies of the world!

The three articles are these: 1. A commentary from the London Times on "Annexation:" 2nd. A reply from an American citizen: 3rd. "A letter from the Mexican correspondent of the "Times."

As showing the state of feeling at present, and as foreshadowing the probable future, these articles will be read with unusual and even intense interest.

"The affairs of Mexico form the topic of a long and able Editorial in the Times of Sept. 10. The excessive folly of that country, in refusing to treat with Texas when it might have done so with good hope of success, and the complete failure of all attempts to prevent annexation are first, remarked: - and the disposition of Mexico for war, as demanded by the people and indeed by the very existence of the nation, next referred to. "The difficulty of raising money sufficient to carry on the war is held to amount almost to an impossibility. A loan to bring into the treasury $15,000,000, must create it is said more than $45,000,000 of stock even at its present low prices; and this, for a state without a Government, without a dollar in the Treasury, without military means of covering its frontier, of occupying its provinces and resisting the aggressions of its neighbors, and with its disposable revenue already pledged to pay former loans, is deemed impossible. Mexico is adjudged to be in a state of dissolution, and it is declared that her weakness alone has encouraged the United States to carry forward, with so much steadiness and determination, their project of annexation. War, therefore, is held to be improbable, and Mexico, unable to hold Texas as a province, is manifestly powerless, it is conceded, to "reconquer Texas", annexed to one of the most "powerful States in the world." The Times proceeds.

But if the termination of this affair be pacific, it establishes in the most patent and indubitable manner, the superiority of the Anglo American race, and of the United State Government over their neighbors. These advantages the Americans will as infallibly assert. It is not proved that no consideration of prudence, justice, or good faith can restrain them from seizing or acquiring the possessions of contiguous states. Thus much may be foreseen – that these excesses and encroachments will only be limited by opportunity and public caprice, until it become the interest of some great European Power to oppose them. But what is not foreseen either by the Americans or by ourselves, is the effect of these acts of violence or fraud, leading to immense extension of territory, upon their own political and social condition. Thus much only we do venture confidently to predict- that these changes involve the creation of such conflicting interests, the existence of such opposite characters and designs, the prevalence of such formidable passions, and the growth of such an enormous and incongruous people, that the feeble Federal Government of America will eventually forfeit its precarious authority, and the contests which the neighboring states to the south of the Union are too weak to wage, will at least break out in its own bosom. We, of our time, have seen the gigantic growth of the American democracy, as rapid and enormous it its internal corruption and its external crimes as in the progress of its population and its productive powers; but, unless the eternal laws of public morality and of history be suspended, these same phenomena announce the certain approach of a period of anarchy and retribution. It is not more possible that such a system should be carried on without leading to disastrous consequences, than that society should continue to subsist without government or law; and the reaction of the same principles which have now been allowed to assail Mexico and appropriate Texas will one day be felt in the heart of the Union.

The Times proceeds to say that the United States will undoubtedly insist upon the Rio Grand as the Southwestern boundary, inasmuch as "there is no rule to go by but greediness of one party and the feebleness of the other;" and says that, notwithstanding the undoubted willingness of the United States to include Upper California, they will probably be prevented by the physical difficulties of such an enterprise, inasmuch as California is divided even from Mexico by vast tracts of uninhabited country; and the difficulties which a detachment of troops would have to encounter in crossing the deserts and prairies that intervene between the Mississippi and the Pacific Ocean, will probably be insurmountable for the next half century. The Times concludes thus:

With reference to California, we adhere to the opinion we have had occasion to express with reference to the Oregon territory. Little is to be apprehended from invading land as long as the coast is open and the country protected by sea. The interests which may hereafter extend colonist enterprise to the shores of the Pacific are inseparable from the commerce of the east and the navigation of the ocean. Great Britain is for all practical purpose nearer to those coasts than the Atlantic states, and we have no apprehensions that the American Government will commit itself to sets of violence, which must lead to the total destruction of its fisheries and commerce in the South Seas. They will observe a certain discretion, even in their invasion of all rights, and however we may lament the deplorable state to which Mexico is found to be reduces in this emergency, we cannot but rejoice that the peace of the world is likely to be preserved.
In the Times on the 11th, is a communication signed "An American Citizen," in reply to these wholesale aspersions of the United States and in vindication of the policy of Annexation; not upon grounds of expediency, but as a question of "honor and good faith." The writer denies that there was ever any plans in the United States to wrest Texas from Mexico, - says that Texas was fairly settled by foreigners and invited thither by Mexico, that the land was subdued and many thousand families settled there under the guarantee of free institutions from Mexico, that a revolution established a despotism there, that the people rebelled; - as Englishmen would have done under similar circumstances, and secured their independence. Having maintained this independence for eight years, finding herself in debt, with an expensive machinery of government, regarding Mexico as for her defunct, Texas yielded to the policy of annexation. The writer concludes his article thus:

In the Times on the 19th, we find another very long and interesting letter from its Mexican correspondent. He gives - first a sketch of the proceedings of the Mexican Government on first receiving an intimation that annexation had been consummated, and represents the Ministry as constantly and arduously contending against the haste and impetuosity of the war party, and finally succeeding, by the measures already well known. He says that a demand of a loan of $15,000,000 as a condition, was of itself sufficient to destroy the whole war project, inasmuch as at least $50,000,000 would be required to bring that amount into the treasury. The Government receives but 13 percent on all the duties and customs, the remainder being mortgaged to various creditors. He says that the United States are playing a sure game of aggression on Mexico, and repeats what he said before, that "England must either interfere or be prepared to see the mining districts and California, before many years, under American rule." The following passage, from his letter, we transfer at length: it is worthy of attention:

Can the United States be allowed to send in settlers to the unoccupied lands of their neighbors, and then take possession of the departments by the voice of those settlers? And what chance has Upper California, which, in my opinion, is a vital point for British interests, when there are already 1,300 American settlers on the banks of the river Sacramento, discharging itself into the Bay of San Francisco, the finest port in the world, who may next year vote in favor of annexation? The plans of the United States are most insidious; by demanding the Rio Bravo as the Texas frontier, instead of the old limit of the Nueces, they cut immense slices from four departments of Mexico. They get the opposite bank of the river Matamoras, the Mexican port of the north, as it is called, they take in on half of Tamaulipas, the department of the Gulf, a good share of Coahuila, a good portion of Chihuahua, and nearly the whole of New Mexico, with the capital Santa Fe. The territory thus laid hold of is larger than Texas, and the northern part of it, Santa Fe, is most important, as already through it all the contraband of the United States is introduced; so much so, that the supply of the whole north of Mexico is in the hands of American smugglers. From all these points excursions are not difficult into the neighboring Mexican departments, and these states, languishing under a central government, without physical or moral force, will, one by one, submit to American influence, until the mining districts are laid hold of, and the secret object of Yankee policy be finally obtained. This result is evident, as Russian encroachment on the Turkish empire, to those who are on the spot and have an interest in studying the question; but I fear it will not be deemed equally clear by those in Europe who have so many other pressing on their attention. Let me, therefore, call your notice to the coast of the Pacific, and to those maritime stations whence, if Mexico can rival England in manufactures suited to the Chinese market, she can send supplies four weeks sooner than we can by our most expeditious conveyance. I allude more particularly to Upper California and to the Bay of San Francisco, as the soil of the former is fertile beyond expression, the climate excellent, and the harbor of the latter is capable of containing all the fleets of all the nations of the world. This province is much discontented with the central Government. It has been more than once in open revolt, and so powerless is the Government, that an expedition of 2000 men destined to secure it from United States aggression, though prepared several months back, is unable to move from want of money to buy soldiers rations. The Americans are assiduously getting possession of that territory; they already command the banks of the leading river, the Sacramento; they are buying titles from the hungry governors, and as I said before they have 1300 settlers in a district where only 40 British subjects are to be found. Mexico owes 5,000,000 dollars of unsettles claims, beside 1,000,000 of admitted claims, to the United States, and its is just possible that the enlarged Texan frontier and Upper California might be taken in payment of these claims if a sum of money be not added sufficient to relive the Government of its embarrassments. As the United States have shown us the example, and as they have discovered a new mode of conquest unknown to the old world, I do not see why England is to continue to be the dupe, and why we should not purchase from Mexico such portions of Upper California as may be necessary to protect our Indian trade. We let France take possession of Algiers, and she has now 300 leagues of the Mediterranean coasts. Let us suffer Jonathan to get footing in California, and we shall be left without a resting place on the coast north of Mazatlan. Recollect that the lands of California are mortgaged to the English bankholder; but so are those of Texas; and if the United States be suffered to eat up the latter without any remonstrance on our part, can they not pick and chose in California with the same impunity? I have heard persons complain, that while this Texas affair was going on we had no fleet in the Gulf of Mexico; but our interests in the Gulf are uncertain while those on the coast of the Pacific are notorious. In this writing I represent the opinion of all the British community in this quarter, and I do believe that an anti-United States demonstration in California will be most popular at home as well as in Mexico.

The same writer adds, that capitalists in Mexico, who get their pay, reap a fine harvest; as for about $1,500,000 advanced a few days since, the whole tobacco duties are abandoned, a quality of paper is received and the Contractors realize 43 percent in one year. The Government tried to raise $12,000,000 on Church property, but were entirely unsuccessful. It is still embarrassed by the departments of Zacatecas and Tamaulipas, asking for the reestablishment of Federalism, which is doing legally what Tabasco has done illegally. The writer says:

It is hoped that the Mexican Government will be dissuaded from declaring war, in order that the United States may have no right to conquer any part of their territory, and retain it by right or conquest. Mexico has been shamefully treated by the United States and by Texas, but she must put up with the loss. She may past a Non Intercourse Act, and remain on the defensive; but if she declare war or make one step in advance, the United States will take possession of California - I am told they have a large fleet in the Pacific - and improve its position with
He adds that the Mexican Government had resolved to issue no declaration of war, but to take up a defensive position on the Rio Grande. The writer says he hears that the United States are scarcely making offers of compensation, in order to prevent British interference. The English merchants are greatly alarmed lest the Gulf be blockaded. The writer adds the following:

One of the first houses here in connection with London capitalists has offered the Government to make a railroad from Vera Cruz to Mexico, with power to continue it to a port on the Pacific, near Acapulco. The arrangement is in a forward state, the privileges desired are to be granted, and the contractors are sanguine as to the result. The line embraces several considerable towns, and though the elevation of Mexico is considerable, it is imagined that on the atmosphere pressure principle, or by the stationary engines, as in the United States, all difficulties will be surmounted.

The Foreign News by the Cambria is of less interest than usual. The political items are scarce worth noticing. The most important are the speculations of the French and English Press upon American, Mexican and Texas Affairs. It cannot be conceded that the immense present and rapidly augmenting consequence of the United States in the eyes of Europe, is such as to gratify American vanity to the utmost, and to justify American Gasconade upon the subject, if anything can justify vaunting. It was supposed currently that war had actually ensued between the United States and Mexico, and in anticipation of it, that many European ships with Mexican letters of commission, would be let loose upon our commerce: But of this we believe not much.

The Queen’s progress of the Continent, had evidently excited disgust in England, and among the signs of the times as denoting the growth of Republican feeling, is the popular mooting of the question, “Shall Cromwell have a statue?”

We have never doubted that early and vigorous efforts would be made to induce the United States to assume the national debt of Texas- that they would be persevering, and that they would finally be successful. Nor did we ever question that to convert Texas liabilities, worth then, we believe, not ten dollars in the hundreds, into American Gold, was the grand but secret main spring of the whole Texas movement.

The Baltimore American says:

“The Texas Debt Assumption.- We alluded some time ago to the probability, which is almost a certainty, that some measure will be brought forward at the next session of Congress, to advance a sum of money to Texas, on condition that she transfer her public lands to the United States.

The Charleston Mercury objects, in advance, to any such measure. It argues that the assumption of the debt of Texas might have been made one of the conditions of annexation; for the power to annex new States to the Union must evidently include the power to fix and settle the terms of annexation. The agreement in such cases would bear some analogy to a treaty between independent Governments, by which either might stipulate to pay any specified sum to secure some valuable advantage. But when once a State is admitted into the Union without any condition precedent of an assumption of its debts, it is contended that the General Government has no power to undertake such an assumption. "It is clear," says the Mercury, "that if Congress can assume the debts of Texas under these circumstances, it can assume the debts of all the other States. It is indeed alleged that there is a difference in the case of Texas that places it by itself- inasmuch as she will pay for the assumption of her debts by an equivalent in her public lands. This may be admitted, as a question of value, but it does not alter the case. The value of lands, or anything else, is just what the buyer pleases to give for them. The power to make a bargain implies the power to make a bad as well as a good one, and the power to traffic with the States for their land, implies also the power to traffic them for all kinds of public property.”

The Alexandria Gazette of the 12th ult. contains a communication from Gen. C.F. Mercer purporting to be a vindication of the contract made with him by Gen. Samuel Houston, as President of the Republic of Texas, granting him the privilege of colonizing a large tract of country in Texas, which contract I sometime since declared to be fraudulent. He sets out by saying that the Union refused to publish my letter making that charge; thus attempting to array the influence and authority of your press in support of his own fraudulent contract, and in furtherance of the equally fraudulent, political machinations of his patron, Gen. Samuel Houston.

This makes it proper that I should desire to use your columns to expose both of their frauds; and first as to Gen. Samuel Houston. It is my misfortune to have borne a personal relation to him, and to his official acts that compelled me to know, and understand the motives. His misgovernment has been a withering blight upon the fairest portion of Texas. His conduct has been such as to create a strong current against him. Having done all that he could to defeat annexation, and finding that the procedure would be carried by an overwhelming majority, he fled from the public indignation of Texas, and come to the United States, hoping to get an endorsement from Gen. Jackson and the President, that would enable him to practice further frauds upon the people of Texas, and this Union. Himself, a disgusting drunkard, he gave the people of New Orleans a temperance harangue. Himself, opposed to annexation, he there made a speech in favor of it.

Knowing that his purpose was to recruit his political influence by creating an impression here, that he was the master spirit who controls the public will of Texas, and thus get up demonstrations to be paraded through the press, for the purpose of creating a belief in Texas that the best means of finding favor with President Polk is, to become a partisan of Sam Houston; believing that his purpose in visiting Gen. Jackson was to practice a political fraud upon him and the public, and that he would come on to Washington to consummate that fraud, thus getting up the show of confidence and friendly intercourse with the President to react on the people of Texas; I resolve to check his progress by a bold, unequivocal and authentic denunciation.

You had published letters written for the purpose of giving éclat to his progress, and I therefore addressed to you my letter denouncing the proceedings, and explaining their object.

Unwilling to open your paper, to what you were apprehensive might become a personal controversy, you declined to publish it. I then sent it to the New York Herald; this circumstance has been used by Houston's partisans in Texas, to show that he is so great a favorite with the Executive; that whilst you publish letters commending him to public favor, and attributing to him an influence which he does no possess; you will not permit me under my own name to expose his public character, or to comment on his official acts.

I knew the man, and as soon as I saw that the convention were to meet in Austin I foretold that he would not venture to attend it. I knew the man, and I foretold that my letter would arrest his progress; that instead of coming to Washington, or going to Austin, he would hide himself; and instead of playing out his game boldly by denying the truth of the charges I had made, and of others which I knew I am prepared to make and to prove, he would change his tactics, and to accomplish his objects, seek by subordinate agents, what he could not do in person. What I foretold has come to pass. He retreated to the interior of Tennessee- he put his machinery in motion, got up a public dinner and endeavored to throw himself into the popular current, by a speech manufactured for the purpose, and a laudatory letter published in the Union.

When he had thus paved the way he dispatched to Washington one of his instruments, a man whom he had himself disgraced as unworthy of a petty office, a salary of five hundred dollars per annum, and who was again taken into favor when he found that by appointing him to a subordinate clerkship he could prevent his disclosing to a committee of Congress the manner in which he had applied a large sum of money entrusted to him, for the public service. I learn that he gave letters commending this man to the confidence of the President. I learn also that this man boasted that he had obtained the confidence of the President and has gone back to Texas freighted with pledges, the purpose of which is to recruit an army of hungry office hunters and dependants, whose compensation is to depend on their activity in placing the new government of Texas in the hands of Houston and Jones, and sending such persons from Texas to the Senate and House of Representatives as will use their influence to sustain Sam Houston.

So far this game has been adroitly played. Unable to defeat annexation, Houston and Jones, and a few corrupt associates, now seek to make an impression that they are to control the federal patronage as a means of acting on the elections in Texas.

These remarks are made, by way of showing that your press has been used [without your knowledge of the fraud;] as one of the means of practicing a fraud upon the public; and to show that in what I have said, and what I am now about to say of Mr. Mercer's contract, relates to a public matter, proper to be discussed through the public press, and that the circumstances are such as to make it your duty to publish this as a comment intended to counteract the effect of the publications you have heretofore made.

I now come to speak of the contract. I have pronounced it fraudulent. It is due to the public, to Mr. Mercer, and to myself, to state why I have so pronounced it. I proceed to that statement. Not having the law before me I write from recollection. The facts are such that I am sure that I do not mistake them.

After the Mexican authorities had been driven from Texas, a controversy arose with certain Indians, residing within our limits; a war ensued and the frontier settlements were much annoyed. Persons residing in Texas at the declaration of Independence, and others having performed military service had grants for land which they could not locate in consequence of the hostility of the Indians. It therefore became a part of the defensive policy of the government to encourage the colonization of the frontier, and a law was passed authorizing Carroll, Peters, and others, to colonize that tract know as the Cross Timbers. But the act authorizing the contract expressly provides that the colony should be located above the existing settlements, and that one-third of the colonists should be introduced during the first year. By A subsequent act the President was authorized to make further modifications of the contract with Carroll, Peters, and their associates; but no authority whatever was given to relax the conditions of the contracts he was authorized to make with others.

Such was the law when Mr. Mercer appeared at the seat of the Texas government in the year '44 as the Representative [as I credibly informed the name of the gentlemen so informing, if desired will be giver] of Carroll, Peters, and their associates, asking further modifications of their contract— and as such he appeared before Congress. He was heard, and instead of granting his request, Congress repealed all laws authorizing the President to make colonization contracts. The President had the constitutional power to keep possession of the bill for five days, and during the time he had the bill in his possession, as is now alleged, he made this fraudulent contract with Mr. Mercer, and returned the bill with his Veto. Congress passed the bill by an almost unanimous vote. The right to make any contract was repealed in despite of the Veto.

Here was a flagrant disregard of the will of Congress, and shows that Sam Houston and Anson Jones, whose duty it was as Secretary of State, to prepare the contract, must have had a strong inducement to do so. It was made not only in defiance of the will of Congress, but without the knowledge as I believe, of every member of that body except one, and he, it seems, was taken into the contract as a partner, because he selected the tract, and gave the local information necessary to define the limits of the grant.

But it is not on this account alone that I denounce the contract as a fraud. I denounce it because Sam Houston had no authority to make such a contract. The law authorizing him to make colonization contracts, required that the colony should be located above the settlements; the object being to compensate the privations and risks by a grant of land on the extreme frontier to new settlers, who, by their position, would be exposed to Indian depredations. The chief inducement to the passage of the law was, that by thus giving protection to the frontier, the old settlers who had head rights, and bounty warrants, might locate them from danger, or disturbance by the Indians. Now Mr. Mercer's contract, instead of being above the settlements where, by the law, he could only locate, to give protection to the frontier, so as to enable the old settlers to locate their head rights and bounty warrants, has been made to embrace one of the finest and most valuable districts in Texas—BELOW, instead of above, the settlements, protected from, instead of being exposed to, Indian depredations, and covering the very district of country in which the old settlers wished, and intended to locate their head rights and bounty warrants. The first notice the public had of the contract was a notice issued after the adjournment of these head rights and bounty warrants, and reserving a tract of the country more that sufficient to pay the whole debt contracted by Texas for the benefit of Mr. Charles Fenton Mercer, and his associates. "He now denies that any of his associates are British Abolitionists." I cannot know who his associates are; but I do know that it was given out in Texas that he was associated with British Abolitionists, and that he had made arrangements for a large amount of British capital. And when we compare and combine the circumstances, and the parties of his contract, it serves to cast some light on the active efforts of Mr. Mercer to defeat the election of President Polk and the artful and diplomatic efforts of Houston and Jones to defeat annexation. It is know that Houston and Jones made the contract with Mercer.

But Mr. Mercer says that his contract was made solely with a view of providing for the debts of Texas. Who can believe this? Was it providing for the debts of Texas when Houston gave away, without money and without price, so many millions of public land? He, Mr. Mercer, also quotes the title of the Act smuggled thought the Congress during the winter cession of 1844 and 1845, which at the time, was represented to be a resolution, to defeat his contract, but which from the use now made of it, was intended as a legislative sanction of it. Showing that the parties implicated endeavored to legalize one fraud, by practicing a fraud upon the Legislature. I speak thus strongly because it is known that an effort to obtain a judicial examination of the contract was defeated by Executive influence action on the Senate at the last moment of the session.

In further proof of what I have said, I refer to the proceedings of the Convention held to organize a state government. One of the general provisions of the constitution, annuls and vacates all colonizing contracts made by President Houston; securing the right to actual settlers, and opening the courts to the contractors: who are to sure the State for the indemnity for the loss of their contracts. This general position indicates two clearly the impression of the Texas Convention in relation to Houston's contracts. And I have no doubt that the provision was adopted, as the shortest and best way to get ride of Mr. Mercer and his contract, and compel him and his associates to look to a Texas jury "instead of British abolitionists," for the consummation of their speculation.

I have been thus particular in stating the law, and facts, connected with Mr. Mercer and his contract, and I now appeal upon the law, and facts, to the good sense and moral sentiment of the public,— whether the transaction does not bare on its face and front, resistless evidence of fraudulent character.

Most respectfully

The steamship Cincinnati, from Arkansas, arrived yesterday. We are indebted to Captain Smith and a passenger on board, for Galveston papers on the 4th, Houston of the 30th ult., and Washington on the 30th ult. We also receive our regular files by mail.

The Houston Morning Star says that, among the items of news recently received from Mexico, is one that the Mexican Government has sent seven emissaries to Texas, to excite and insurrection among the slaves, and to induce them to act in concert with the Mexican troops, if war should be declared by Mexico against the United States. In one of the letters received from Mexico, it is mentioned that one of these emissaries had returned, and reported that he had been successful. To what extent he had succeeded does not appear, not from the Mexican journals. We copy the articles from the Star at length.

For some months past, the slaves at several points on the Colorado have discovered a very refractory disposition. Several have run away, and some have been engaged in thefts, and committed other outrages. In instances Mexicans have been seen with the runaway Negroes. About three months since, two Negroes ran away from a plantation near LeGrange, and stole several horses. They were subsequently recaptured, and they stated that they had been enticed away by two Mexicans, who promised that if they would steal some good horses, and accompany them to Mexico, that they should be made free, and be treated by the Mexicans as equals. The Mexicans however, when they found themselves pursued, took the horses and fled, leaving the poor Negroes on foot, and they consequently fell into the hands of the pursuers. Shortly after this event, a gang of Negroes, with (it is supposed,) some Mexican accomplices, broke open a store of Webber’s Prairie, near Austin, and stole a considerable quantity of goods. They also broke into the dwelling house of Mr. Glassock, about fifteen miles below Austin, and stole a few articles. These, or another gang, were soon after discovered near Columbus, but they retreated into the woods, and have not been captured. On the 18th September a small party of Negroes suddenly fired a volley of balls and buckshot upon three men who were sitting in the evening of the gallery of the house of Col. J. Caldwell, of Bastrop County. Each of these three men received several wounds from the buckshot, but none of the wounds is considered mortal. When the Negroes found that they had killed neither of their intended victims, they fled precipitately to the woods. Two of the persons thus wounded were Mr. Cooke, of Austin, and Mr. Upchurch. The name of them we have not ascertained. Col. Caldwell was absent with his family on a visit to a relation. The overseer of Col. C thought that he recognized a yellow boy belonging to the Colonel among the Negroes. It is supposed that the villains intended to murder the white men at the house, then plunder it. A party of citizens of Bastrop are now in pursuit of them. The people of that section have been long suspicious that some Mexicans were engaged in exciting sedition among the slaves, and they have made several efforts to detect them. Now that they have authentic evidence from the city of Mexico that emissaries have been sent to Texas for the express purpose of enticing the slaves to engage in an insurrection, some prompt and energetic measures should be adopted to prevent the impending evil. We have no fears that seven, or even seventy times seven Mexican emissaries could excite a general insurrection among the slaves of Texas; for the settlements are so disconnected, and the plantations are generally so distant from each other, that it would be impossible for the Negroes to form extensive combinations; but seditions may be excited in insulated settlements, or on a few plantations, and the lives of some of the most valuable citizens may pay the forfeit, if these emissaries are not ferreted out in due season.

LATER FROM TEXAS

The schooner Florinda, Capt. Arnet, arrived yesterday from Galveston, which place she left on the 10th inst. We are indebted to a passenger for the Civilian of the 8th.

The brig Galveston arrived there on the 6th, in 16 days from New York, with arms and ammunition belonging to the U.S. Government. They consist of ten 18 pounders with seacoast carriages complete; 18 truck carriages, seven hundred 18 pound balls, with boxes, barrels, and ordnance stores.

The splendid packet ship Star Republic, to have sailed from New York on the 1rst inst. as also the steamship New York, were expected soon. The big Empire, Baxter, was advertised as the first packet for New York, to sail in November.

The crops are favorable. We take the following from the Courier.

It is states that General Taylor arrested several Mexicans as spies, and although he had strong evidence against them yet he permitted them to go at large, under the impression that their reports of the condition of his camp would do no harm.

Since Mr. Polk's intemperate inaugural, and Sir Robert Peel's no less intemperate response, each having a tendency to exclude negotiations and cut off compromise, we have anticipated consequences from the Oregon Question: Both these representatives of their respective nations have been rebuked by the good sense and moderation of the two Countries. But we fear that the effect of their intemperance has been still to shut the door upon compromise, and to render a collision probable. If the United States claim the whole of Oregon, as the "progressive Democracy" insist as their right, from the frontiers of California to the Russian colonies, embracing all the English claims and settlements, it is hardly to be expected that the pride of that power will submit to the pretension. If the United States decline to accept the 49th parallel of latitude as a compromise, of which there is the strongest indication, there is just apprehension that England will refuse any further concession.

It appears from the following quotation from the Correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, that the negotiation at Washington is at a stand still:

"I learn that no progress whatsoever has been made by Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Packenham, in the adjustment of the Oregon Territorial question. Mr. Packenham has submitted a proposition to Mr. Buchanan, to refer the question to a third power to have it settled by arbitration. Mr. Calhoun, when secretary of state, had the same proposition made to him, but he rejected it, on the grounds which it is said will be sustained by the whole nation, whenever that are made public. Mr. Buchanan on the contrary, was desirous of acceding to this proposition, and advised President Polk to accept it, or at least to introduce the subject into his message to Congress, and to recommend that mode of settling the dispute. This the President has declined doing, on the grounds as I am informed, that it would not be satisfactory to the West. There the matter rests at present. I learn that Mr. Packenham is very desirous that the administration should accede to this proposition, and that Mr. Buchanan has used his best endeavors to that end."

In connection, we present an article of interest on this very important subject, from the Pennsylvania Inquirer of Monday:

"More of the Oregon Troubles—Our Relations with Great Britain: The Oregon question, we perceive, is exciting more and more attention. Everywhere throughout the country the journalists are expressing their views. The recent intelligence from Washington, to the effect that President Polk has rejected the offer of Mr. Packenham to refer the difficulty of the arbitration of a third power, will impact additional interest to the subject, and the more so, because of the rumored willingness of Mr. Buchanan to accept of the proposition referred to. The American Secretary of State enjoys in a high degree of confidence of his own political friends, especially in Pennsylvania. It is thought, moreover, that in the Oregon matter, he will go quite far enough, and that hence his views and suggestions should be treated with great respect. If, however, Mr. Buchanan be willing to refer the matter to a third party, he must feel satisfaction from a thorough examination of the subject, and from interviews with Mr. Packenham, that such a course, all the circumstances considered, would be judicious, proper, national, honorable, and patriotic. But, so the story goes, Mr. Polk, influenced by the opinions of the West, has rejected the arbitration. What next? What will he say in his Message to Congress? The Washington Union has given several articles upon the subject of late, to which we may refer with propriety. The official editor closes one thus:

"In another article, we may take occasion to say something of the "abstract right in the soil of Oregon," which the "Times" is inclined to set up against the rights of the inclinations of the population whose dwelling place it is hereafter to be. Let it be understood that it is on the "clear and unquestionable right" we have to the country that we rest our claim, and are prepared to assert it. England has in more than one respect, set us an example which it is time for us to imitate. She has now established laws for the British population there, and secured the means of administering them. We, too, must establish a territorial authority over our emigrants, and prepare to block-house at least to the Rocky Mountains, to protect our emigrants, and give them confidence to emigrate to Oregon, free from all unnecessary fears of interruption from the Indians of the intermediate country. John Bull has no right to complain of this movement, as the most material measure of the series has for several year been adopted by British policy."

The London Times also contains an article upon this vexed and important question, from which we copy this passage:

"Really, it is almost tedious to describe, in the way of an Oregon prophecy, what has already occurred in Texas. The monotony is, however, in the facts. There is the sameness of a deep and determined policy. There are vast territories, over some of which "we have rights," as the Premier said while Mexico retains, and is at present admitted, to have, still more absolute rights over other more southern and desirable regions. The Union condescends to dispute and negotiate with the more powerful of the two possessors; but that is not all. The negotiation lengthens, as if, to use the sailor's expression, its end has been cut off. The boundary line perpetually recedes. The pleas are continually amended. While the diplomatists are at work, crowds of settlers are encouraged, escorted, protected, and even deluded and entrapped, into the debatable land. Instinct with the indigenous policy of the Union, they from independent organizations. Of course, they know they are safe enough. As soon as they are many enough and strong enough to reduce the original inhabitants, the Mexican natives, or the British fellow colonists, to a minority in numbers and physical force, they will forthwith give vent to their noble aspiration for union with the States; and it will not be long before their spontaneous advances are gratefully acknowledged. Were it a walled town, and not half a continent, which was in question, there would be no dispute as to the character of the stratagem. The classical reader is acquainted with many such instances on a small scale. While the besiegers were parleying, or perhaps, in a time of profound peace, a group of peasants would straggle up to the city gate with faggots, or fruit, or wine. They casually muster, throw off their rustic guise, draw swords, disarm the guard, and admit the approaching body of their comrades. This was once a stale trick. Magnitude will now give it the appearance of novelty. The colonists of Oregon and California will muster and form, eventually draw their swords, to open a way for the main body of the Union."

The Union also contains a long letter from its London correspondent, in which the Oregon question is treated in detail. The writer is no doubt an individual of much ability, and quite familiar with European affairs. He contends that it is the interest of Great Britain to prevent a war between Mexico and the United States and adds:

"Neither need we apprehend that the British Government will assist Mexico with money. The very idea is preposterous. England has sufficient demands on her own treasury. SHE MUST PREPARE FOR THE DEATH OF LOUIS PHILLIPPE; for a change in dynasty, or a revolution in Europe, would inevitably lead to an interruption of the present relation between Great Britain and France. As to the bankers lending Mexico money for the purpose of carrying on a war, I can only say they are not quite so moonstruck as all that. The only chance of Mexico ever paying her old debt is the maintenance of peace. A new loan would increase the indebtedness of the state, and, at the same time, diminish her means of payment. As to the absurd notion that England will take a mortgage on California, it scarcely merits a serious refutation. England would, by that means, acquire no further title in California that she has, except that she might claim payment of that debt from any power which may afterwards take possession of it. Neither would it justify her assisting Mexico to maintain possession of that province further that she has already a right to do so, as her friend and ally. Any loan, therefore, which either the government or individuals might make to Mexico, on such a mortgage, would establish no new title, and only impugn the honesty of England- of which she is so particularly desirous of furnishing new proofs, since the world has shown itself dissatisfied with the old ones."

Turning then to the Oregon Question, he expresses the opinion, that the declaration of Sir Robert Peel about the Oregon Territory; followed as it was immediately by the disparagement of that territory in the ministered journals, "was intended mainly to obtain from America better commercial terms- perhaps an offer to settle the Oregon question by the new tariff. The British government is evidently prepared for it, and the influential portion of the community, still more so- as it conceded by all the respectable journals of the country. Sir Robert Peel’s political sins are only pardoned by the majority of his own party on account of the healthy financial condition to which his administration has restored the country, and which his measures thus far tend to secure in the future. It is therefore most probable the Sir Robert Peel will eagerly seize upon any propositions to settle the Oregon question, or any other question that may be pending between America and England by a compromise which shall benefit commerce, and by that means, at least indirectly, the British treasury."

In corroboration of this view, the correspondent of the Union quotes from the London Economist, an advocate of the Anti-Corn Law and free Trade League, which holds this language.

"Our present object, however, is more particularly to call attention to the commercial relations of the two countries, and to the means by which the best and permanent interests of both may be advanced. And this subject derives an additional importance at the present moment, as offering, by far, the most likely means of rendering practicable and easy settlement of all other questions in dispute. The commercial intercourse between Great Britain and the United States, even as it now is, but far more as it might be, involves the deepest and largest interests of both countries- greater than the settlement or occupation of Oregon, which, in a very few years, will be practically occupied and possessed by citizens of the United States."

To sum up the matter, therefore, we may briefly state that this country claims the whole of Oregon, while Great Britain is equally zealous in urging her claim to part of that Territory. The subject has been under negotiation for a long period, without arriving at any satisfactory conclusion. The intelligence from Washington is, that finding it impossible to agree upon the compromise, one of the parties has, through her Minister; proposed to refer the dispute to the arbitration of a third party; and that this proposition has been rejected by the President of the United States, because of the opinions of the West, the London letter writer above quoted.

Had we the privilege of wielding the power of two countries for a season, we would settle the Oregon Question thus, guided by the results which have already occurred there, and by this reasoning: Whether owned and settled by the United States or by England, the Oregon Country, and Empire in extent, will be independent of both in 20 years! It will be too powerful for a British dependency, and too remote to form an integral part of the American Union. Let each nation then abandon its spurious claims, for the claims of both are spurious; let those who will colonize the country, and let them set up for themselves!

Our columns are monopolized by this document. We cannot in justice to the public omit it, or in justice to ourselves, publish it, without the greatest inconvenience. There is no greater bore than these long documents, to editors and readers! Yet what can be done but to publish them? If the Press generally, would agree to publish no document greater than a column in length, it would teach public men better manners and better taste. We have space but to allude to the Message of the President. The two great topics of course, are the Tariff and Oregon: as to the Tariff, Mr. Polk's principals seem right enough but his inductions wrong: He recommends, if we understand him, a horizontal, ad valorem, discriminating Tariff – that is a protecting Tariff without Protection! In other words he has set his traps to catch the fish going up the river and coming down! All the Presidents since Mr. Adams, have as rank demagogues as ever harassed a country. The danger of the Oregon question will suggest itself from the Message, to every intelligent reader.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and of the House of Representatives:

It is to me a source of unaffected satisfaction to meet the representatives of the States and the people in Congress assembled, as it will be to receive the aid of their combined wisdom in the administration of public affairs. In performing for the first time the duty imposed on me by the Constitution of giving to you information of the state of the Union and recommending to your consideration such measures as in my judgment are necessary and expedient, I am happy that I can congratulate you on the continued prosperity of our country. Under the blessings of Divine Providence and the benign influence of our free institutions, it stands before the world a spectacle of national happiness.

With our unexampled advancement in all the elements of national greatness, the affection of the people is confirmed for the Union of the States and for the doctrines of popular liberty which lie at the foundation of our Government.

It becomes us in humility to make our devout acknowledgments to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe for the inestimable civil and religious blessings with which we are favored.

In calling the attention of Congress to our relations with foreign powers, I am gratified to be able to state that though with some of them there have existed since your last session serious causes of irritation and misunderstanding, yet no actual hostilities have taken place. Adopting the maxim in the conduct of our foreign affairs "to ask nothing that is not right and submit to nothing that is wrong," it has been my anxious desire to preserve peace with all nations, but at the same time to be prepared to resist aggression and maintain all our just rights.

In pursuance of the joint resolution of Congress "for annexing Texas to the United States," my predecessor, on the 3d day of March, 1845, elected to submit the first and second sections of that resolution to the Republic of Texas as an overture on the part of the United States for her admission as a State into our Union. This election I approved, and accordingly the charge' d'affaires of the United States in Texas, under instructions of the 10th of March, 1845, presented these sections of the resolution for the acceptance of that Republic. The executive government, the Congress, and the people of Texas in convention have successively complied with all the terms and conditions of the joint resolution. A constitution for the government of the State of Texas, formed by a convention of deputies, is herewith laid before Congress. It is well known, also, that the people of Texas at the polls have accepted the terms of annexation and ratified the constitution. I communicate to Congress the correspondence between the Secretary of State and our charge' d'affaires in Texas, and also the correspondence of the latter with the authorities of Texas, together with the official documents transmitted by him to his own Government. The terms of annexation which were offered by the United States having been accepted by Texas, the public faith of both parties is solemnly pledged to the compact of their union. Nothing remains to consummate the event but the passage of an act by Congress to admit the State of Texas into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States. Strong reasons exist why this should be done at an early period of the session. It will be observed that by the constitution of Texas the existing government is only continued temporarily till Congress can act, and that the third Monday of the present month is the day appointed for holding the first general election. On that day a governor, a lieutenant-governor, and both branches of the legislature will be chosen by the people. The President of Texas is required, immediately after the receipt of official information that the new State has been admitted into our Union by Congress, to convene the legislature, and upon its meeting the existing government will be superseded and the State government organized. Questions deeply interesting to Texas, in common with the other States, the extension of our revenue laws and judicial system over her people and territory, as well as measures of a local character, will claim the early attention of Congress, and therefore upon every principle of republican government she ought to be represented in that body without unnecessary delay. I can not too earnestly recommend prompt action on this important subject. As soon as the act to admit Texas as a State shall be passed the union of the two Republics will be consummated by their own voluntary consent.

This accession to our territory has been a bloodless achievement. No arm of force has been raised to produce the result. The sword has had no part in the victory. We have not sought to extend our territorial possessions by conquest, or our republican institutions over a reluctant people. It was the deliberate homage of each people to the great principle of our federative union. If we consider the extent of territory involved in the annexation, its prospective influence on America, the means by which it has been accomplished, springing purely from the choice of the people themselves to share the blessings of our union, the history of the world may be challenged to furnish a parallel. The jurisdiction of the United States, which at the formation of the Federal Constitution was bounded by the St. Marys on the Atlantic, has passed the capes of Florida and been peacefully extended to the Del Norte. In contemplating the grandeur of this event it is not to be forgotten that the result was achieved in despite of the diplomatic interference of European monarchies. Even France, the country which had been our ancient ally, the country which has a common interest with us in maintaining the freedom of the seas, the country which, by the cession of Louisiana, first opened to us access to the Gulf of Mexico, the country with which we have been every year drawing more and more closely the bonds of successful commerce, most unexpectedly, and to our unfeigned regret, took part in an effort to prevent annexation and to impose on Texas, as a condition of the recognition of her independence by Mexico, that she would never join herself to the United States. We may rejoice that the tranquil and pervading influence of the American principle of self-government was sufficient to defeat the purposes of British and French interference, and that the almost unanimous voice of the people of Texas has given to that interference a peaceful and effective rebuke. From this example European Governments may learn how vain diplomatic arts and intrigues must ever prove upon this continent against that system of self-government which seems natural to our soil, and which will ever resist foreign interference.

Toward Texas I do not doubt that a liberal and generous spirit will actuate Congress in all that concerns her interests and prosperity, and that she will never have cause to regret that she has united her "lone star" to our glorious constellation.

I regret to inform you that our relations with Mexico since your last session have not been of the amicable character which it is our desire to cultivate with all foreign nations. On the 6th day of March last the Mexican envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States made a formal protest in the name of his Government against the joint resolution passed by Congress "for the annexation of Texas to the United States," which he chose to regard as a violation of the rights of Mexico, and in consequence of it he demanded his passports.
He was informed that the Government of the United States did not consider this joint resolution as a violation of any of the rights of Mexico, or that it afforded any just cause of offense to his Government; that the Republic of Texas was an independent power, owing no allegiance to Mexico and constituting no part of her territory or rightful sovereignty and jurisdiction. He was also assured that it was the sincere desire of this Government to maintain with that of Mexico relations of peace and good understanding. That functionary, however, notwithstanding these representations and assurances, abruptly terminated his mission and shortly afterwards left the country. Our envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Mexico was refused all official intercourse with that Government, and, after remaining several months, by the permission of his own Government he returned to the United States. Thus, and, by the acts of Mexico, all diplomatic intercourse between the two countries was suspended.

Since that time Mexico has until recently occupied an attitude of hostility toward the United States—has been marshaling and organizing armies, issuing proclamations, and avowing the intention to make war on the United States, either by an open declaration or by invading Texas. Both the Congress and convention of the people of Texas invited this Government to send an army into that territory to protect and defend them against the menaced attack.
The moment the terms of annexation offered by the United States were accepted by Texas the latter became so far a part of our own country as to make it our duty to afford such protection and defense. I therefore deemed it proper, as a precautionary measure, to order a strong squadron to the coasts of Mexico and to concentrate an efficient military force on the western frontier of Texas. Our Army was ordered to take position in the country between the Nueces and the Del Norte, and to repel any invasion of the Texan territory which might be attempted by the Mexican forces. Our squadron in the Gulf was ordered to cooperate with the Army. But though our Army and Navy were placed in a position to defend our own and the rights of Texas, they were ordered to commit no act of hostility against Mexico unless she declared war or was herself the aggressor by striking the first blow. The result has been that Mexico has made no aggressive movement, and our military and naval commanders have executed their orders with such discretion that the peace of the two Republics has not been disturbed. Texas had declared her independence and maintained it by her arms for more than nine years. She has had an organized government in successful operation during that period. Her separate existence as an independent state had been recognized by the United States and the principal powers of Europe. Treaties of commerce and navigation had been concluded with her by different nations, and it had become manifest to the whole world that any further attempt on the part of Mexico to conquer her or overthrow her Government would be vain. Even Mexico herself had become satisfied of this fact, and whilst the question of annexation was pending before the people of Texas during the past summer the Government of Mexico, by a formal act, agreed to recognize the independence of Texas on condition that she would not annex herself to any other power. The agreement to acknowledge the independence of Texas, whether with or without this condition, is conclusive against Mexico. The independence of Texas is a fact conceded by Mexico herself, and she had no right or authority to prescribe restrictions as to the form of government which Texas might afeard choose to assume. But though Mexico can not complain of the United States on account of the annexation of Texas, it is to be regretted that serious causes of misunderstanding between the two countries continue to exist, growing out of unrepressed injuries inflicted by the Mexican authorities and people on the persons and property of citizens of the United States through a long series of years. Mexico has admitted these injuries, but has neglected and refused to repair them. Such was the character of the wrongs and such the insults repeatedly offered to American citizens and the American flag by Mexico, in palpable violation of the laws of nations and the treaty between the two countries of the 5th of April, 1831, that they have been repeatedly brought to the notice of Congress by my predecessors. As early as the 6th of February, 1837, the President of the United States declared in a message to Congress that—

The length of time since some of the injuries have been committed, the repeated and unavailing applications for redress, the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens, upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this Government and people by the late
He did not, however, recommend an immediate resort to this extreme measure, which, he declared, "should not be used by just and generous nations, confiding in their strength for injuries committed, if it can be honorably avoided," but, in a spirit of forbearance, proposed that another demand be made on Mexico for that redress which had been so long and unjustly withheld. In these views committees of the two Houses of Congress, in reports made to their respective bodies, concurred. Since these proceedings more than eight years have elapsed, during which, in addition to the wrongs then complained of, others of an aggravated character have been committed on the persons and property of our citizens. A special agent was sent to Mexico in the summer of 1838 with full authority to make another and final demand for redress. The demand was made; the Mexican Government promised to repair the wrongs of which we complained, and after much delay a treaty of indemnity with that view was concluded between the two powers on the 11th of April, 1839, and was duly ratified by both Governments. By this treaty a joint commission was created to adjudicate and decide on the claims of American citizens on the Government of Mexico. The commission was organized at Washington on the 25th day of August, 1840. Their time was limited to eighteen months, at the expiration of which they had adjudicated and decided claims amounting to $2,026,139.68 in favor of citizens of the United States against the Mexican Government, leaving a large amount of claims undecided. Of the latter the American commissioners had decided in favor of our citizens claims amounting to $928,627.88, which were left unacted on by the umpire authorized by the treaty. Still further claims, amounting to between three and four millions of dollars, were submitted to the board too late to be considered, and were left undisposed of. The sum of $2,026,139.68, decided by the board, was a liquidated and ascertained debt due by Mexico to the claimants, and there was no justifiable reason for delaying its payment according to the terms of the treaty. It was not, however, paid. Mexico applied for further indulgence, and, in that spirit of liberality and forbearance which has ever marked the policy of the United States toward Republic, the request was granted, and on the 30th of January, 1843, a new treaty was concluded. By this treaty it was provided that the interest due on the awards in favor of claimants under the convention of the 11th of April, 1839, should be paid out the 30th of April, 1843, and that—

The principal of the said awards and the interest accruing thereon shall be paid in five years, in equal installments every three months, the said term of five years to commence on the 30th day of April, 1843, aforesaid.

The interest due on the 30th day of April, 1843, and the three first of the twenty installments have been paid. Seventeen of these installments, remain unpaid, seven of which are now due.

The claims which were left undecided by the joint commission, amounting to more than $3,000,000, together with other claims for spoliations on the property of our citizens, were subsequently presented to the Mexican Government for payment, and were so far recognized that a treaty providing for their examination and settlement by a joint commission was concluded and signed at Mexico on the 20th of November, 1843. This treaty was ratified by the United States with certain amendments to which no just exception could have been taken, but it has not yet received the ratification of the Mexican Government. In the meantime our citizens, who suffered great losses—and some of whom have been reduced from affluence to bankruptcy—are without remedy unless their rights be enforced by their Government. Such a continued and unprovoked series of wrongs could never have been tolerated by the United States had they been committed by one of the principal nations of Europe. Mexico was, however, a neighboring sister republic, which, following our example, had achieved her independence, and for whose success and prosperity all the sympathies of the United States were early enlisted. The United States were the first to recognize her independence and to receive her into the family of nations, and have ever been desirous of cultivating with her a good understanding. We have therefore borne the repeated wrongs she has committed with great patience, in the hope that a returning sense of justice would ultimately guide her councils and that we might, if possible, honorably avoid any hostile collision with her. Without the previous authority of Congress the Executive possessed no power to adopt or enforce adequate remedies for the injuries we had suffered, or to do more than to be prepared to repel the threatened aggression on the part of Mexico. After our Army and Navy had remained on the frontier and coasts of Mexico for many weeks without any hostile movement on her part, though her menaces were continued, I deemed it important to put an end, if possible, to this state of things. With this view I caused steps to be taken in the month of September last to ascertain distinctly and in an authentic form what the designs of the Mexican Government were—whether it was their intention to declare war, or invade Texas, or whether they were disposed to adjust and settle in an amicable manner the pending differences between the two countries. On the 9th of November an official answer was received that the Mexican Government consented to renew the diplomatic relations which had been suspended in March last, and for that purpose were willing to accredit a minister from the United States. With a sincere desire to preserve peace and restore relations of good understanding between the two Republics, I waived all ceremony as to the manner of renewing diplomatic intercourse between them, and, assuming the initiative, on the 10th of November a distinguished citizen of Louisiana was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Mexico, clothed with full powers to adjust and definitively settle all pending differences between the two countries, including those of boundary between Mexico and the State of Texas. The minister appointed has set out on his mission and is probably by this time near the Mexican capital. He has been instructed to bring the negotiation with which he is charged to a result to Congress during the present session. Until that result is known I forbear to recommend to Congress such ulterior measures of redress for the wrongs and injuries we have so long borne as it would have been proper to make had no such negotiation been instituted.

Congress appropriated at the last session the sum of $275,000 for the payment of the April and July installments of the Mexican indemnities for the year 1844:

Provided it shall be ascertained to the satisfaction of the American Government that said installments have been paid by the Mexican Government to the agent appointed by the United States to receive the same in such manner as to discharge all claim on the Mexican Government, and said agent to be delinquent in remitting the money to the United States.

The unsettled state of our relations with Mexico has involved this subject in much mystery. The first information in an authentic form from the agent of the United States, appointed under the Administration of my predecessor, was received at the State Department on the 9th of November last. This is contained in a letter, dated the 17th of October, addressed by him to one of our citizens then in Mexico with a view of having it communicated to that Department. From this it appears that the agent on the 20th of September, 1844, gave a receipt to the treasury of Mexico for the amount of the April and July installments of the indemnity. In the same communication, however, he asserts that he had not received a single dollar in cash, but that he holds such securities as warranted him at the time in giving the receipt, and entertains no doubt but that he will eventually obtain the money. As these installments appear never to have been actually paid by the Government of Mexico to the agent, and as that Government has not, therefore, been released so as to discharge the claim, I do not feel myself warranted in directing payment to be made to the claimants out of the Treasury without further legislation. Their case is undoubtedly one of much hardship, and it remains for Congress to decide whether any, and what, relief ought to be granted to them. Our minister to Mexico has been instructed to ascertain the facts of the case from the Mexican Government in an authentic and official form and report the result with as little delay as possible.

My attention was early directed to the negotiation which on the 4th of March last I found pending at Washington between the United States and Great Britain on the subject of the Oregon Territory. Three several attempts had been previously made to settle the questions in dispute between the two countries by negotiation upon the principle of compromise, but each had proved unsuccessful. These negotiations took place at London in the years 1818, 1824, and 1826—the two first under the Administration of Mr. Monroe and the last under that of Mr. Adams. The negotiation of 1818, having failed to accomplish its object, resulted in the convention of the 20th of October of that year.

By the third article of that convention it was—Agreed that any country that may be claimed by either party on the northwest coast of America westward of the Stony Mountains shall, together with its harbors, bays, and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be free and open for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of the present convention to the vessels, citizens, and subjects of the two powers; it being well understood that this agreement is not to be construed to the prejudice of any claim which either of the two high contracting parties may have to any part of the said country, nor shall it be taken to affect the claims of any other power or state to any part of the said country, the only object of the high contracting parties in that respect being to prevent disputes and differences amongst themselves.

The negotiation of 1824 was productive of no result, and the convention of 1818 was left unchanged.

The negotiation of 1826, having also failed to effect an adjustment by compromise, resulted in the convention of August 6, 1827, by which it was agreed to continue in force for an indefinite period the provisions of the third article of the convention of the 20th of October, 1818; and it was further provided that—

It shall be competent, however, to either of the contracting parties, in case either should think fit, at any time after the 20th of October, 1828, on giving due notice of twelve months to the other contracting party, to annul and abrogate this convention; and it shall in such case be accordingly entirely annulled and abrogated after the expiration of the said term of notice.

In these attempts to adjust the controversy the parallel of the forty-ninth degree of north latitude had been offered by the United States to Great Britain, and in those of 1818 and 1826, with a further concession of the free navigation of the Columbia River south of that latitude. The parallel of the forty-ninth degree from the Rocky Mountains to its intersection with the north easternmost branch of the Columbia, and thence down the channel of that river to the sea, had been offered by Great Britain, with an addition of a small detached territory north of the Columbia. Each of these propositions had been rejected by the parties respectively. In October, 1843, the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States in London was authorized to make a similar offer to those made in 1818 and 1826. Thus stood the question when the negotiation was shortly afterwards transferred to Washington, and on the 23d of August, 1844, was formally opened under the direction of my immediate predecessor. Like all the previous negotiations, it was based upon principles of "compromise," and the avowed purpose of the parties was "to treat of the respective claims of the two countries to the Oregon Territory with the view to establish a permanent boundary between them westward of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean."

Accordingly, on the 26th of August, 1844, the British plenipotentiary offered to divide the Oregon Territory by the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude from the Rocky Mountains to the point of its intersection with the north easternmost branch of the Columbia and thence down that river to the sea, leaving the free navigation of the river to be enjoyed in common by both parties, the country south of this line to belong to the United States and that north of it to Great Britain. At the same time he proposed in addition to yield to the United States a detached territory north of the Columbia extending along the Pacific and the Straits of Fuca from Bullfinch's Harbor, inclusive, to Hood's Canal, and to make free to the United States any port or ports south of latitude 49° which they might desire, either on the mainland or on Quadra and Vancouver Island. With the exception of the free ports, this was the same offer which had been made by the British and rejected by the American Government in the negotiation of 1826. This proposition was properly rejected by the American plenipotentiary on the day it was submitted. This was the only proposition of compromise offered by the British plenipotentiary. The proposition on the part of Great Britain having been rejected, the British plenipotentiary requested that a proposal should be made by the United States for "an equitable adjustment of the question." When I came into office I found this to be the state of the negotiation.
Though entertaining the settled conviction that the British pretensions of title could not be maintained to any portion of the Oregon Territory upon any principle of public law recognized by nations, yet in deference to what had been done by my predecessors, and especially in consideration that propositions of compromise had been thrice made by two preceding Administrations to adjust the question on the parallel of 49°, and in two of them yielding to Great Britain the free navigation of the Columbia, and that the pending negotiation had been commenced on the basis of compromise, I deemed it to be my duty not abruptly to break it off. In consideration, too, that under the conventions of 1818 and 1827 the citizens and subjects of the two powers held a joint occupancy of the country, I was induced to make another effort to settle this long-pending controversy in the spirit of moderation which had given birth to the renewed discussion. A proposition was accordingly made, which was rejected by the British plenipotentiary, who, without submitting any other proposition, suffered the negotiation on his part to drop; expressing his trust that the United States would offer what he saw fit to call "some further proposal for the settlement of the Oregon question more consistent with fairness and equity and with the reasonable expectations of the British Government." The proposition thus offered and rejected repeated the offer of the parallel of 49° of north latitude, which had been made by two preceding Administrations, but without proposing to surrender to Great Britain, as they had done, the free navigation of the Columbia River. The right of any foreign power to the free navigation of any of our rivers through the heart of our country was one which I was unwilling to concede. It also embraced a provision to make free to Great Britain any port or ports on the cap of Quadra and Vancouvers Island south of this parallel. Had this been a new question, coming under discussion for the first time, this proposition would not have been made. The extraordinary and wholly inadmissible demands of the British Government and the rejection of the proposition made in deference alone to what had been done by my predecessors and the implied obligation which their acts seemed to impose afford satisfactory evidence that no compromise which the United States ought to accept can be effectuated. With this conviction the proposition of compromise which had been made and rejected was by my direction subsequently withdrawn and our title to the whole Oregon Territory asserted, and, as is believed, maintained by irrefrangible facts and arguments.

The civilized world will see in these proceedings a spirit of liberal concession on the part of the United States, and this Government will be relieved from all responsibility which may follow the failure to settle the controversy.

All attempts at compromise having failed, it becomes the duty of Congress to consider what measures it may be proper to adopt for the security and protection of our citizens now inhabiting or who may hereafter inhabit Oregon, and for the maintenance of our just title to that Territory. In adopting measures for this purpose care should be taken that nothing be done to violate the stipulations of the convention of 1827, which is still in force. The faith of treaties, in their letter and spirit, has ever been, and, I trust, will ever be, scrupulously observed by the United States. Under that convention a year's notice is required to be given by either party to the other before the joint occupancy shall terminate and before either can rightfully assert or exercise exclusive jurisdiction over any portion of the territory. This notice it would, in my judgment, be proper to give, and I recommend that provision be made by law for giving it accordingly, and terminating in this manner the convention of the 6th of August, 1827.

It will become proper for Congress to determine what legislation they can in the meantime adopt without violating this convention. Beyond all question the protection of our laws and our jurisdiction, civil and criminal, ought to be immediately extended over our citizens in Oregon. They have had just cause to complain of our long neglect in this particular, and have in consequence been compelled for their own security and protection to establish a provisional government for themselves. Strong in their allegiance and ardent in their attachment to the United States, they have been thus cast upon their own resources. They are anxious that our laws should be extended over them, and I recommend that this be done by Congress with as little delay as possible in the full extent to which the British Parliament have proceeded in regard to British subjects in that Territory by their act of July 2, 1821, "for regulating the fur trade and establishing a criminal and civil jurisdiction within certain parts of North America." By this act Great Britain extended her laws and jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over her subjects engaged in the fur trade in that Territory. By it the courts of the Province of Upper Canada were empowered to take cognizance of causes civil and criminal. Justices of the peace and other judicial officers were authorized to be appointed in Oregon with power to execute all process issuing from the courts of that Province, and to "sit and hold courts of record for the trial of criminal offenses and misdemeanors" not made the subject of capital punishment, and also of civil cases where the cause of action shall not "exceed in value the amount or sum of lbs. 200."

Subsequent to the date of this act of Parliament a grant was made from the "British Crown" to the Hudsons Bay Company of the exclusive trade with the Indian tribes in the Oregon Territory, subject to a reservation that it shall not operate to the exclusion "of the subjects of any foreign states who, under or by force of any convention for the time being between us and such foreign states, respectively, may be entitled to and shall be engaged in the said trade." It is much to be regretted that while under this act British subjects have enjoyed the protection of British laws and British judicial tribunals throughout the whole of Oregon, American citizens in the same Territory have enjoyed no such protection from their Government. At the same time, the result illustrates the character of our people and their institutions. In spite of this neglect they have multiplied, and their number is rapidly increasing in that Territory. They have made no appeal to arms, but have peacefully fortified themselves in their new homes by the adoption of republican institutions for themselves, furnishing another example of the truth that self-government is inherent in the American breast and must prevail. It is due to them that they should be embraced and protected by our laws. It is deemed important that our laws regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes east of the Rocky Mountains should be extended to such tribes as dwell beyond them. The increasing emigration to Oregon and the care and protection which is due from the Government to its citizens in that distant region make it our duty, as it is our interest, to cultivate amicable relations with the Indian tribes of that Territory. For this purpose I recommend that provision be made for establishing an Indian agency and such subagencies as may be deemed necessary beyond the Rocky Mountains.

For the protection of emigrants whilst on their way to Oregon against the attacks of the Indian tribes occupying the and reaffirm the principle avowed by Mr. Monroe and to state my cordial concurrence in its wisdom and sound policy.

It requires several months to perform the voyage by sea from the Atlantic States to Oregon, and although we have a large number of whale ships in the Pacific, but few of them afford an opportunity of interchanging intelligence without great delay between our settlements in that distant region and the United States. An overland mail is believed to be entirely practicable, and the importance of establishing such a mail at least once a month is submitted to the favorable consideration of Congress.

It is submitted to the wisdom of Congress to determine whether at their present session, and until after the expiration of the year’s notice, any other measures may be adopted consistently with the convention of 1827 for the security of our rights and the government and protection of our citizens in Oregon. That it will ultimately be wise and proper to make liberal grants of land to the patriotic pioneers who amidst privations and dangers lead the way through savage tribes inhabiting the vast wilderness intervening between our frontier settlements and Oregon, and who cultivate and are ever ready to defend the soil, I am fully satisfied. To doubt whether they will obtain such grants as soon as the convention between the United States and Great Britain shall have ceased to exist would be to doubt the justice of Congress; but, pending the year’s notice, it is worthy of consideration whether a stipulation to this effect may be made consistently with the spirit of that convention.

The recommendations which I have made as to the best manner of securing our rights in Oregon are submitted to Congress with great deference. Should they in their wisdom devise any other mode better calculated to accomplish the same object, it shall meet with my hearty concurrence.

At the end of the year’s notice, should Congress think it proper to make provision for giving that notice, we shall have reached a period when the national rights in Oregon must either be abandoned or firmly maintained. That they can not be abandoned without a sacrifice of both national honor and interest is too clear to admit of doubt.

Oregon is a part of the North American continent, to which, it is confidently affirmed, the title of the United States is the best now in existence. For the grounds on which that title rests I refer you to the correspondence of the late and present Secretary of State with the British plenipotentiary during the negotiation. The British proposition of compromise, which would make the Columbia the line south of 49°, with a trifling addition of detached territory to the United States north of that river, and would leave on the British side two-thirds of the whole Oregon Territory, including the free navigation of the Columbia and all the valuable harbors on the Pacific, can never for a moment be entertained by the United States without an abandonment of their just and dear territorial rights, their own self-respect, and the national honor. For the information of Congress, I communicate herewith the correspondence which took place between the two Governments during the late negotiation.

The rapid extension of our settlements over our territories heretofore unoccupied, the addition of new States to our Confederacy, the expansion of free principles, and our rising greatness as a nation are attracting the attention of the powers of Europe, and lately the doctrine has been broached in some of them of a "balance of power" on this continent to check our advancement. The United States, sincerely desirous of preserving relations of good understanding with all nations, can not in silence permit any European interference on the North American continent, and should any such interference be attempted will be ready to resist it at any and all hazards.

It is well known to the American people and to all nations that this Government has never interfered with the relations subsisting between other governments. We have never made ourselves parties to their wars or their alliances; we have not sought their territories by conquest; we have not mingled with parties in their domestic struggles; and believing our own form of government to be the best, we have never attempted to propagate it by intrigues, by diplomacy, or by force. We may claim on this continent a like exemption from European interference. The nations of America are equally sovereign and independent with those of Europe. They possess the same rights, independent of all foreign interposition, to make war, to conclude peace, and to regulate their internal affairs. The people of the United States can not, therefore, view with indifference attempts of European powers to interfere with the independent action of the nations on this continent. The American system of government is entirely different from that of Europe. Jealousy among the different sovereigns of Europe, lest any one of them might become too powerful for the rest, has caused them anxiously to desire the establishment of what they term the "balance of power." It can not be permitted to have any application on the North American continent, and especially to the United States. We must ever maintain the principle that the people of this continent alone have the right to decide their own destiny. Should any portion of them, constituting an independent state, propose to unite themselves with our Confederacy, this will be a question for them and us to determine without any foreign interposition. We can never consent that European powers shall interfere to prevent such a union because it might disturb the "balance of power" which they may desire to maintain upon this continent. Near a quarter of a century ago the principle was distinctly announced to the world, in the annual message of one of my predecessors, that—

The American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for colonization by any European powers.

This principle will apply with greatly increased force should any European power attempt to establish any new colony in North America. In the existing circumstances of the world the present is deemed a proper occasion to reiterate and reaffirm the principle avowed by Mr. Monroe and to state my cordial concurrence in its wisdom and sound policy.
The reassertion of this principle, especially in reference to North America, is at this day but the promulgation of a policy which no European power should cherish the disposition to resist. Existing rights of every European nation should be respected, but it is due alike to our safety and our interests that the efficient protection of our laws should be extended over our whole territorial limits, and that it should be distinctly announced to the world as our settled policy that no future European colony or dominion shall with our consent be planted or established on any part of the North American continent.

A question has recently arisen under the tenth article of the subsisting treaty between the United States and Prussia. By this article the consuls of the two countries have the right to sit as judges and arbitrators "in such differences as may arise between the captains and crews of the vessels belonging to the nation whose interests are committed to their charge without the interference of the local authorities, unless the conduct of the crews or of the captain should disturb the order or tranquility of the country, or the said consuls should require their assistance to cause their decisions to be carried into effect or supported."

The Prussian consul at New Bedford in June, 1844, applied to Mr. Justice Story to carry into effect a decision made by him between the captain and crew of the Prussian ship Borussia, but the request was refused on the ground that without previous legislation by Congress the judiciary did not possess the power to give effect to this article of the treaty. The Prussian Government, through their minister here, have complained of this violation of the treaty, and have asked the Government of the United States to adopt the necessary measures to prevent similar violations hereafter. Good faith to Prussia, as well as to other nations with whom we have similar treaty stipulations, requires that these should be faithfully observed. I have deemed it proper, therefore, to lay the subject before Congress and to recommend such legislation as may be necessary to give effect to these treaty obligations.

By virtue of an arrangement made between the Spanish Government and that of the United States in December, 1831, American vessels, since the 29th of April, 1832, have been admitted to entry in the ports of Spain, including those of the Balearic and Canary islands, on payment of the same tonnage duty of 5 cents per ton, as though they had been Spanish vessels; and this whether our vessels arrive in Spain directly from the United States or indirectly from any other country. When Congress, by the act of 13th July, 1832, gave effect to this arrangement between the two Governments, they confined the reduction of tonnage duty merely to Spanish vessels "coming from a port in Spain," leaving the former discriminating duty to remain against such vessels coming from a port in any other country. It is manifestly unjust that whilst American vessels arriving in the ports of Spain from other countries pay no more duty than Spanish vessels, Spanish vessels arriving in the ports of the United States from other countries should be subjected to heavy discriminating tonnage duties. This is neither equality nor reciprocity, and is in violation of the arrangement concluded in December, 1831, between the two countries. The Spanish Government have made repeated and earnest remonstrances against this inequality, and the favorable attention of Congress has been several times invoked to the subject by my predecessors. I recommend, as an act of justice to Spain, that this inequality be removed by Congress and that the discriminating duties which have been levied under the act of the 13th of July, 1832, on Spanish vessels coming to the United States from any other foreign country be refunded. This recommendation does not embrace Spanish vessels arriving in the United States from Cuba and Porto Rico, which now pay this rate of duty. The Government of the Netherlands complains that such a discriminating duty should have been imposed on coffee the production of one of its colonies, and which is chiefly brought from Java to the ports of that Kingdom and exported from thence to foreign countries. Our trade with the Netherlands is highly beneficial to both countries and our relations with them have ever been of the most friendly character. Under all the circumstances of the case, I recommend that this discrimination should be abolished and that the coffee of Java imported from the Netherlands be placed upon the same footing with that imported directly from Brazil and other countries where it is produced.

Under the eighth section of the tariff act of the 30th of August, 1842, a duty of 15 cents per gallon was imposed on port wine in casks, while on the red wines of several other countries, when imported in casks, a duty of only 6 cents per gallon was imposed. This discrimination, so far as regarded the port wine of Portugal, was deemed a violation of our treaty with that power, which provides that—

No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of America of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the Kingdom and possessions of Portugal than such as are or shall be payable on the like article being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country.

Accordingly, to give effect to the treaty as well as to the intention of Congress, expressed in a proviso to the tariff act itself, that nothing therein contained should be so construed as to interfere with subsisting treaties with foreign nations, a Treasury circular was issued on the 16th of July, 1844, which, among other things, declared the duty on the port wine of Portugal, in casks, under the existing laws and treaty to be 6 cents per gallon, and directed that the excess of duties which had been collected on such wine should be refunded. By virtue of another clause in the same section of the act it is provided that all imitations of port or any other wines "shall be subject to the duty provided for the genuine article." Imitations of port wine, the production of France, are imported to some extent into the United States, and the Government of that country now claims that under a correct construction of the act these imitations ought not to pay a higher duty than that imposed upon the original port wine of Portugal. It appears to me to be unequal and unjust that French imitations of port wine should be subjected to a duty of 15 cents, while the more
The late President, in his annual message of December last, recommended an appropriation to satisfy the claims of the Texan Government against the United States, which had been previously adjusted so far as the powers of the Executive extend. These claims arose out of the act of disarming a body of Texan troops under the command of Major Snively by an officer in the service of the United States, acting under the orders of our Government, and the forcible entry into the custom-house at Bryarlys Landing, on Red River, by certain citizens of the United States and taking away therefrom the goods seized by the collector of the customs as forfeited under the laws of Texas. This was a liquidated debt ascertained to be due to Texas when an independent state. Her acceptance of the terms of annexation proposed by the United States does not discharge or invalidate the claim. I recommend that provision be made for its payment.

The commissioner appointed to China during the special session of the Senate in March last shortly afterwards set out on his mission in the United States ship Columbus. On arriving at Rio de Janeiro on his passage the state of his health had become so critical that by the advice of his medical attendants he returned to the United States early in the month of October last. Commodore Biddle, commanding the East India Squadron, proceeded on his voyage in the Columbus, and was charged by the commissioner with the duty of exchanging with the proper authorities the ratifications of the treaty lately concluded with the Emperor of China. Since the return of the commissioner to the United States his health has been much improved, and he entertains the confident belief that he will soon be able to proceed on his mission.

Unfortunately, differences continue to exist among some of the nations of South America which, following our example, have established their independence, while in others internal dissensions prevail. It is natural that our sympathies should be warmly enlisted for their welfare; that we should desire that all controversies between them should be amicably adjusted and their Governments administered in a manner to protect the rights and promote the prosperity of their people. It is contrary, however, to our settled policy to interfere in their controversies, whether internal or external.

I have thus adverted to all the subjects connected with our foreign relations to which I deem it necessary to call your attention. Our policy is not only peace with all, but good will toward all the powers of the earth. While we are just to all, we require that all shall be just to us. Excepting the differences with Mexico and Great Britain, our relations with all civilized nations are of the most satisfactory character. It is hoped that in this enlightened age these differences may be amicably adjusted.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report to Congress will communicate a full statement of the condition of our finances. The imports for the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June last were of the value of $117,254,564, of which the amount exported was $15,346,830, leaving a balance of $101,907,734 for domestic consumption. The exports for the same year were of the value of $114,646,606, of which the amount of domestic articles was $99,299,776. The receipts into the Treasury during the same year were $29,769,133.56, of which there were derived from customs $27,528,122.70, from sales of public lands $2,077,022.30, and from incidental and miscellaneous sources $163,998.56. The expenditures for the same period were $29,968,206.98, of which $8,588,157.62 were applied to the payment of the public debt. The balance in the Treasury on the 1st of July last was $7,658,306.22. The amount of the public debt remaining unpaid on the 1st of October last was $17,075,445.52. Further payments of the public debt would have been made, in anticipation of the period of its reimbursement under the authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by the acts of July 21, 1841, and of April 15, 1842, and March 3, 1843, had not the unsettled state of our relations with Mexico menaced hostile collision with that power. In view of such a contingency it was deemed prudent to retain in the Treasury an amount unusually large for ordinary purposes.

A few years ago our whole national debt growing out of the Revolution and the War of 1812 with Great Britain was extinguished, and we presented to the world the rare and noble spectacle of a great and growing people who had fully discharged every obligation. Since that time the existing debt has been contracted, and, small as it is in comparison with the similar burdens of most other nations, it should be extinguished at the earliest practicable period. Should the state of the country permit, and especially if our foreign relations interpose no obstacle, it is contemplated to apply all the moneys in the Treasury as they accrue, beyond what is required for the appropriations by Congress, to its liquidation. I cherish the hope of soon being able to congratulate the country on its recovering once more the lofty position which it so recently occupied. Our country, which exhibits to the world the benefits of self-government, in developing all the sources of national prosperity owes to mankind the permanent example of a nation free from the blighting influence of a public debt.

The attention of Congress is invited to the importance of making suitable modifications and reductions of the rates of duty imposed by our present tariff laws. The object of imposing duties on imports should be to raise revenue to pay the necessary expenses of Government. Congress may undoubtedly, in the exercise of a sound discretion, discriminate in arranging the rates of duty on different articles, but the discriminations should be within the revenue standard and be made with the view to raise money for the support of Government.

It becomes important to understand distinctly what is meant by a revenue standard the maximum of which should not be exceeded in the rates of duty imposed. It is conceded, and experience proves, that duties may be laid so high as to diminish or prohibit altogether the importation of any given article, and thereby lessen or destroy the revenue which at lower rates would be derived from its importation. Such duties exceed the revenue rates and are not imposed to raise money for the support of Government. If Congress levy a duty for revenue of 1 per cent on a given
In recommending to Congress a reduction of the present rates of duty and a revision and modification of the act of

The Government in theory knows no distinction of persons or classes, and should not bestow upon some favors and privileges which all others may not enjoy. It was the purpose of its illustrious founders to base the institutions which they reared upon the great and unchanging principles of justice and equity, conscious that if administered in the spirit in which they were conceived they would be felt only by the benefits which they diffused, and would secure for themselves a defense in the hearts of the people more powerful than standing armies and all the means and appliances invented to sustain governments founded in injustice and oppression.

The well-known fact that the tariff act of 1842 was passed by a majority of one vote in the Senate and two in the House of Representatives, and that some of those who felt themselves constrained, under the peculiar circumstances existing at the time, to vote in its favor, proclaimed its defects and expressed their determination to aid in its modification on the first opportunity, affords strong and conclusive evidence that it was not intended to be permanent, and of the expediency and necessity of its thorough revision.

In recommending to Congress a reduction of the present rates of duty and a revision and modification of the act of 1842, I am far from entertaining opinions unfriendly to the manufacturers. On the contrary, I desire to see them prosperous as far as they can be so without imposing unequal burdens on other interests. The advantage under any system of indirect taxation, even within the revenue standard, must be in favor of the manufacturing interest, and of this no other interest will complain.

I recommend to Congress the abolition of the minimum principle, or assumed, arbitrary, and false values, and of specific duties, and the substitution in their place of ad valorem duties as the fairest and most equitable indirect tax which can be imposed. By the ad valorem principle all articles are taxed according to their cost or value, and those which are of inferior quality or of small cost bear only the just proportion of the tax with those which are of superior quality or greater cost. The articles consumed by all are taxed at the same rate. A system of ad valorem revenue duties, with proper discriminations and proper guards against frauds in collecting them, it is not doubted will afford ample incidental advantages to the manufacturers and enable them to derive as great profits as can be derived from any other regular business. It is believed that such a system strictly within the revenue standard will place the manufacturing interests on a stable footing and inure to their permanent advantage, while it will as nearly as may be practicable extend to all the great interests of the country the incidental protection which can be afforded by our revenue laws. Such a system, when once firmly established, would be permanent, and not be subject to the constant complaints, agitations, and changes which must ever occur when duties are not laid for revenue, but for the "protection merely" of a favored interest.

In the deliberations of Congress on this subject it is hoped that a spirit of mutual concession and compromise between conflicting interests may prevail, and that the result of their labors may be crowned with the happiest consequences.

By the Constitution of the United States it is provided that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." A public treasury was undoubtedly contemplated and intended to be created, in which the public money should be kept from the period of collection until needed for public uses. In the collection and disbursement of the public money no agencies have ever been employed by law except such as were appointed by the Government, directly responsible to it and under its control. The safe-keeping of the public money should be confided to a public treasury created by law and under like responsibility and control. It is not to be imagined that the framers of the Constitution could have intended that a treasury should be created as a place of deposit and safe-keeping of the public money which was irresponsible to the Government. The first Congress under the Constitution, by the act of the 2d of September, 1789, "to establish the Treasury Department," provided for the appointment of a Treasurer, and made it his duty "to receive and keep the moneys of the United States" and "at all times to submit to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller, or either of them, the inspection of the moneys in his hands."

That banks, national or State, could not have been intended to be used as a substitute for the Treasury spoken of in the Constitution as keepers of the public money is manifest from the fact that at that time there was no national bank, and but three or four State banks, of limited Capital, existed in the country. Their employment as depositories was at first resorted to to a limited extent, but with no avowed intention of continuing them permanently in place of the Treasury as the Constitution. When they were at first employed from time to time employed, it was from motives of supposed convenience. Our experience has shown that when banking corporations have been the keepers of the public money, and been thereby made in effect the Treasury, the Government can have no guaranty that it can command the use of its own money for public purposes. The late Bank of the United States proved to be faithless. The State banks which were at first employed were faithless. But a few years ago, with millions of public money in their keeping, the Government was brought almost to bankruptcy and the public credit seriously impaired because of their inability or indisposition to pay on demand to the public creditors in the only currency recognized by the Constitution. Their failure occurred in a period of peace, and great inconvenience and loss were suffered by the public from it. Had the country been involved in a foreign war, that inconvenience and loss would have been much greater, and might have resulted in extreme public calamity. The public money should not be mingled with the private funds of banks or individuals or be used for private purposes. When it is placed in banks for safe-keeping, it is in effect loaned to them without interest, and is loaned by them upon interest to the borrowers from them. The public money is converted into banking capital, and is used and loaned out for the private profit of bank stockholders, and when called for, as was the case in 1837, it may be in the pockets of the borrowers from the banks instead of being in the public Treasury contemplated by the Constitution. The framers of the Constitution could never have intended that the money paid into the Treasury should be thus converted to private use and placed beyond the control of the Government.

Banks which hold the public money are often tempted by a desire of gain to extend their loans, increase their circulation, and thus stimulate, if not produce, a spirit of speculation and extravagance which sooner or later must result in ruin to thousands. If the public money be not permitted to be thus used, but be kept in the Treasury and paid out to the public creditors in gold and silver, the temptation afforded by its deposit with banks to an undue expansion of their business would be checked, while the amount of the constitutional currency left in circulation would be enlarged by its employment in the public collections and disbursements, and the banks themselves would in consequence be found in a safer and sounder condition. At present State banks are employed as depositories, but without adequate regulation of law whereby the public money can be secured against the casualties and excesses, revulsions, suspensions, and defalcations to which from overissues, overtrading, an inordinate desire for gain, or other causes they are constantly exposed. The Secretary of the Treasury has in all cases when it was practicable taken collateral security for the amount which they hold, by the pledge of stocks of the United States or such of the States as were in good credit. Some of the deposit banks have given this description of security and others have declined to do so.

Entertaining the opinion that "the separation of the moneys of the Government from banking institutions is indispensable for the safety of the funds of the Government and the rights of the people," I recommend to Congress that provision be made by law for such separation, and that a constitutional treasury be created for the safe-keeping of the public money. The constitutional treasury recommended is designed as a secure depository for the public money, without any power to make loans or discounts or to issue any paper whatever as a currency or circulation. I can not doubt that such a treasury as was contemplated by the Constitution should be independent of all banking corporations. The money of the people should be kept in the Treasury of the people created by law, and be in the custody of agents of the people chosen by themselves according to the forms of the Constitution—agents who are directly responsible to the Government, who are under adequate bonds and oaths, and who are subject to severe punishments for any embezzlement, private use, or misapplication of the public funds, and for any failure in other respects to perform their duties. To say that the people or their Government are incompetent or not to be trusted with the custody of their own money in their own Treasury, provided by themselves, but must rely on the presidents, cashiers, and stockholders of banking corporations, not appointed by them nor responsible to them, would be to concede that they are incompetent for self-government.

In recommending the establishment of a constitutional treasury in which the public money shall be kept, I desire that adequate provision be made by law for its safety and that all Executive discretion or control over it shall be removed, except such as may be necessary in directing its disbursement in pursuance of appropriations made by law.

Under our present land system, limiting the minimum price at which the public lands can be entered to $1.25 per acre, large quantities of lands of inferior quality remain unsold because they will not command that price. From the records of the General Land Office it appears that of the public lands remaining unsold in the several States and Territories in which they are situated, 39,105,577 acres have been in the market subject to entry more than twenty years, 49,638,644 acres for more than fifteen years, 73,074,600 acres for more than ten years, and 106,176,961 acres for more than five years. Much the largest portion of these lands will continue to be unsalable at the minimum price at which they are permitted to be sold so long as large territories of lands from which the more valuable portions have not been selected are annually brought into market by the Government. With the view to the sale and settlement of these inferior lands, I recommend that the price be graduated and reduced below the present minimum rate, confining the sales at the reduced prices to settlers and cultivators, in limited quantities. If graduated and reduced in price for a limited term to $1 per acre, and after the expiration of that term to lower rates, a large portion of these lands would be purchased, and many worthy citizens who are unable to pay higher rates could purchase homes for themselves and their families. By adopting the policy of graduation and reduction of price these inferior lands will be sold for their real value, while the States in which they lie will be freed from the inconvenience, if not injustice, to which they are subjected in consequence of the United States continuing to own large quantities of the public lands within their borders not liable to taxation for the support of their local governments.

I recommend the continuance of the policy of granting preemptions in its most liberal extent to all those who have settled or may hereafter settle on the public lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, to which the Indian title may have been extinguished at the time of settlement. It has been found by experience that in consequence of combinations of purchasers and other causes a very small quantity of the public lands, when sold at public auction, commands a higher price than the minimum rates established by law. The settlers on the public lands are, however, but rarely able to secure their homes and improvements at the public sales at that rate, because these combinations, by means of the capital they command and their superior ability to purchase, render it impossible for the settler to compete with them in the market. By putting down all competition these combinations of capitalists and speculators are usually enabled to purchase the lands, including the improvements of the settlers, at the minimum price of the Government, and either turn them out of their homes or extort from them, according to their ability to pay, double or quadruple the amount paid for them to the Government. It is to the enterprise and perseverance of the hardy pioneers of the West, who penetrate the wilderness with their families, suffer the dangers, the privations, and hardships attending the settlement of a new country, and prepare the way for the body of emigrants who in the course of a few years usually follow them, that we are in a great degree indebted for the rapid extension and aggrandizement of our country.

Experience has proved that no portion of our population are more patriotic than the hardy and brave men of the frontier, or more ready to obey the call of their country and to defend her rights and her honor whenever and by whatever enemy assailed. They should be protected from the grasping speculator and secured, at the minimum price of the public lands, in the humble homes which they have improved by their labor. With this end in view, all vexatious or unnecessary restrictions imposed upon them by the existing preemption laws should be repealed or modified. It is the true policy of the Government to afford facilities to its citizens to become the owners of small portions of our vast public domain at low and moderate rates.

The present system of managing the mineral lands of the United States is believed to be radically defective. More than 1,000,000 acres of the public lands, supposed to contain lead and other minerals, have been reserved from sale, and numerous leases upon them have been granted to individuals upon a stipulated rent. The system of granting leases has proved to be not only unprofitable to the Government, but unsatisfactory to the citizens who have gone upon the lands, and must, if continued, lay the foundation of much future difficulty between the Government and the lessees. According to the official records, the amount of rents received by the Government for the years 1841, 1842, 1843, and 1844 was $6,354.74, while the expenses of the system during the same period, including salaries of superintendents, agents, clerks, and incidental expenses, were $26,111.11, the income being less than one-fourth of the expenses. To this pecuniary loss may be added the injury sustained by the public in consequence of the destruction of timber and the careless and wasteful manner of working the mines. The system has given rise to much litigation between the United States and individual citizens, producing irritation and excitement in the mineral region, and involving the Government in heavy additional expenditures. It is believed that similar losses and embarrassments will continue to occur while the present System of leasing these lands remains Naval forces. In peace our Navy performs the important duty of protecting our commerce, and in the event of war.

For more than thirty years appropriations have been made and annually expended for the gradual increase of these important interests. Protection with our ships of war distributed in the great highways of trade throughout the world. For more than thirty years appropriations have been made and annually expended for the gradual increase of the efficiency and economy in its management. During the past year the officers and men have performed their duty in a satisfactory manner. The suggestions contained in that report in relation to these prominent objects of national interest.

I refer you to the accompanying report of the Secretary of War for information respecting the present situation of the Army and its operations during the past year, the state of our defenses, the condition of the public works, and our relations with the various Indian tribes within our limits or upon our borders. I invite your attention to the suggestions contained in that report in relation to these prominent objects of national interest.

The commerce of the United States, and with it the navigating interests, have steadily and rapidly increased since the organization of our Government, until, it is believed, we are now second to but one power in the world, and at no distant day we shall probably be inferior to none. Exposed as they must be, it has been a wise policy to afford to these important interests protection with our ships of war distributed in the great highways of trade throughout the world. For more than thirty years appropriations have been made and annually expended for the gradual increase of our naval forces.
The successful use of steam navigation on the ocean has been followed by the introduction of war steamers in great and increasing numbers into the navies of the principal maritime powers of the world. A due regard to our own safety and to an efficient protection to our large and increasing commerce demands a corresponding increase on our part. No country has greater facilities for the construction of vessels of this description than ours, or can promise itself greater advantages from their employment. They are admirably adapted to the protection of our commerce, to the rapid transmission of intelligence, and to the coast defense. In pursuance of the wise policy of a gradual increase of our Navy, large supplies of live-oak timber and other materials for shipbuilding have been collected and are now under shelter and in a state of good preservation, while iron steamers can be built with great facility in various parts of the Union. The use of iron as a material, especially in the construction of steamers which can enter with safety many of the harbors along our coast now inaccessible to vessels of greater draft, and the practicability of constructing them in the interior, strongly recommend that liberal appropriations should be made for this important object. Whatever may have been our policy in the earlier stages of the Government, when the nation was in its infancy, our shipping interests and commerce comparatively small, our resources limited, our population sparse and scarcely extending beyond the limits of the original thirteen States, that policy must be essentially different now that we have grown from three to more than twenty millions of people, that our commerce, carried in our own ships, is found in every sea, and that our territorial boundaries and settlements have been so greatly expanded. Neither our commerce nor our long line of coast on the ocean and on the Lakes can be successfully defended against foreign aggression by means of fortifications alone. These are essential at important commercial and military points, but our chief reliance for this object must be on a well-organized, efficient navy. The benefits resulting from such a navy are not confined to the defense of our State. The productions of the interior which seek a market abroad are directly dependent on the safety and freedom of our commerce. The occupation of the Balize below New Orleans by a hostile force would embarrass, if not stagnate, the whole export trade of the Mississippi and affect the value of the agricultural products of the entire valley of that mighty river and its tributaries.

It has never been our policy to maintain large standing armies in time of peace. They are contrary to the genius of our free institutions, would impose heavy burdens on the people and be dangerous to public liberty. Our reliance for protection and defense on the land must be mainly on our citizen soldiers, who will be ever ready, as they have ever been ready in times past, to rush with alacrity, at the call of their country, to her defense. This description of force, however, can not defend our coast, harbors, and inland seas, nor protect our commerce on the ocean or the Lakes. These must be protected by our Navy.

Considering an increased naval force, and especially of steam vessels, corresponding with our growth and importance as a nation, and proportioned to the increased and increasing naval power of other nations, of vast importance as regards our safety, and the great and growing interests to be protected by it, I recommend the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress.

The report of the Postmaster-General herewith communicated contains a detailed statement of the operations of his Department during the pass year. It will be seen that the income from postages will fall short of the expenditures for the year between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000. This deficiency has been caused by the reduction of the rates of postage, which was made by the act of the 3d of March last. No principle has been more generally acquiesced in by the people than that this Department should sustain itself by limiting its expenditures to its income. Congress has never sought to make it a source of revenue for general purposes except for a short period during the last war with Great Britain, nor should it ever become a charge on the general Treasury. If Congress shall adhere to this principle, as I think they ought, it will be necessary either to curtail the present mail service so as to reduce the expenditures, or so to modify the act of the 3d of March last as to improve its revenues. The extension of the mail service and the additional facilities which will be demanded by the rapid extension and increase of population on our western frontier will not admit of such curtailment as will materially reduce the present expenditures. In the adjustment of the tariff of postages the interests of the people demand that the lowest rates be adopted which will produce the necessary revenue to meet the expenditures of the Department. I invite the attention of Congress to the suggestions of the Postmaster-General on this subject, under the belief that such a modification of the late law may be made as will yield sufficient revenue without further calls on the Treasury, and with very little change in the present rates of postage. Proper measures have been taken in pursuance of the act of the 3d of March last for the establishment of lines of mail steamers between this and foreign countries. The importance of this service commends itself strongly to favorable consideration.

With the growth of our country the public business which devolves on the heads of the several Executive Departments has greatly increased. In some respects the distribution of duties among them seems to be incongruous, and many of these might be transferred from one to another with advantage to the public interests. A more auspicious time for the consideration of this subject by Congress, with a view to system in the organization of the several Departments and a more appropriate division of the public business, will not probably occur.

The most important duties of the State Department relate to our foreign affairs. By the great enlargement of the family of nations, the increase of our commerce, and the corresponding extension of our consular system the business of this Department has been greatly increased. In its present organization many duties of a domestic nature and consisting of details are devolved on the Secretary of State, which do not appropriately belong to the foreign department of the Government and may properly be transferred to some other Department. One of these grows out of the present state of the law concerning the Patent Office, which a few years since was a subordinate clerkship, but has become a distinct bureau of great importance. With an excellent internal organization, it is still connected with the State Department. In the transaction of its business questions of much importance to inventors and to the community frequently arise, which by existing laws are referred for decision to a board of which the Secretary of State is a member. These questions are legal, and the connection which now exists between the State
In his last annual message to Congress Mr. Madison invited attention to a proper provision for the Attorney-General as "an important improvement in the executive establishment." This recommendation was repeated by some of his successors. The official duties of the Attorney-General have been much increased within a few years, and his office has become one of great importance. His duties may be still further increased with advantage to the public interests. As an executive officer his residence and constant attention at the seat of Government are required. Legal questions involving important principles and large amounts of public money are constantly referred to him by the President and Executive Departments for his examination and decision. The public business under his official management before the judiciary has been so augmented by the extension of our territory and the acts of Congress authorizing suits against the United States for large bodies of valuable public lands as greatly to increase his labors and responsibilities. I therefore recommend that the Attorney-General be placed on the same footing with the heads of the other Executive Departments, with such subordinate officers provided by law for his Department as may be required to discharge the additional duties which have been or may be devolved upon him.

Congress possess the power of exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia, and I commend the interests of its inhabitants to your favorable consideration. The people of this District have no legislative body of their own, and must confide their local as well as their general interests to representatives in whose election they have no voice and over whose official conduct they have no control. Each member of the National Legislature should consider himself as their immediate representative, and should be the more ready to give attention to their interests and wants because he is not responsible to them. I recommend that a liberal and generous spirit may characterize your measures in relation to them. I shall be ever disposed to show a proper regard for their wishes and, within constitutional limits, shall at all times cheerfully cooperate with you for the advancement of their welfare.

I trust it may not be deemed inappropriate to the occasion for me to dwell for a moment on the memory of the most eminent citizen of our country who during the summer that is gone by has descended to the tomb. The enjoyment of contemplating, at the advanced age of near fourscore years, the happy condition of his country cheered the last hours of Andrew Jackson, who departed this life in the tranquil hope of a blessed immortality. His death was happy, as his life had been eminently useful. He had an unaltering confidence in the virtue and capacity of the people and in the permanence of that free Government which he had largely contributed to establish and defend. His great deeds had secured to him the affections of his fellow-citizens, and it was his happiness to witness the growth and glory of his country, which he loved so well. He departed amidst the benedictions of millions of free-men. The nation paid its tribute to his memory at his tomb. Coming generations will learn from his example the love of country and glory of his country, which he loved so well. He departed amidst the benedictions of millions of free-men. JAMES K. POLK

[TCS]

RW Tuesday December 5, 1845 RW45v22n8p2 Commentary, The President’s Message

With the multifarious details and the minute reasoning of this document, it is neither our province or our inclination to have anything to do. Our task, as we think is limited to a survey of its general scope and policy, not either because the principles avowed and opinions expressed, are those of James K. Polk, intrinsically a very small man, but because circumstances have placed Mr. Polk at the head of affairs in this great nation, because he is the Official head of the dominant party in it, and because, from the existing rigor of party discipline, the will of a party President, is almost certain to be the will of the party which elected him! These things ought not to be so [there] ought to be more independence, more devotion to the public good and interests. But they are so, have always been so, and will continue to be so until the end of time, or until man's nature is radically modified by his creator.

To return, then, to the subject – a strict perusal of Mr. Polk's message satisfies us of its demagogic character and design, and we now predict, what before we really did not believe, that he will be a candidate for re-election in 1848.

With his views on the Oregon question we should be pleased, but for his proposition to give England the notice required by the treaty of 1827. That amounts, as things are, to very little short of a denunciation of war – that the practical enforcement of the idea would produce war, there can be no doubt at all.

We have been forced in thinking of these matters, to admire, to venerate, more and more, the wisdom of our old American Statesman[;] Was there ever a happier idea than that of “joint” occupation of Oregon! A more philosophic, a more humane, a more enlightened conception! It says in effect, this country, claimed by both, but belonging in truth to neither, shall be kept open to both for colonization, for settlement trade and commerce! And the article in the treaty might have added, “it is of no real value to either.” Let all go there who choose, and take up their habitation, and in the fullness of time, let them establish a Government for themselves and choose their own institutions!

There could not have been, as we think, a happier condition of affairs, and we blame Mr. Polk, and the deliberate thought of the country cannot fail to blame him, for terminating it, for slamming the door of compromise in the face of England, and for hazarding a war, millions of money, and rivers of blood, for that which, when it is obtained, is not of the smallest value. Show us cause to justify it to God and conscience, and we will shrunk as citizens, from no war with any Power, or with all Powers: But do let us have something tangible and intelligible to fight about, either in the shape of interest or honor.

Who can fail to see that Oregon is ours, is obliged to be ours, by waiting without shedding a drop of blood! In ten years our people will fill that country, an all the world cannot divest them of it.

We could have asked nothing better than the treaty of joint occupation.

[INC]
The negotiation was then removed to Washington, and in August 1844, was formerly opened between Mr. Calhoun, the Secretary of State, and Mr. Pakenham, the British Minister. On the 26th of that month Mr. Pakenham renewed a proposition which had before been offered by Great Britain, "to divide the Oregon territory by the 49th parallel of N. latitude, from the Rocky mountains to the point of its intersection with the north easternmost branch of the Columbia river, and thence down that river to the sea; leaving the free navigation of the river to be enjoyed in common by both parties the country south of this line to belong to the United States, and that north of it to Great Britain. – At the same time, he proposed, in addition, to yield to the United States detached territory north of the Columbia, extending along the Pacific and the Straits of Fuca, from Bulfinch’s harbor inclusive to Hood’s canal, and to make free to the United States and port or ports north of latitude forty nine degrees, which they might desire, entire on the main land, or on Quadra and Vancouver’s island." With the exception of the free ports, this was the same offer which had been made by the British, and rejected by the American government in the negotiation of 1826.

This proposition was rejected by Mr. Calhoun, on the very day it was made, and Mr. Pakenham then requested that the United States should make a proposal for an “equitable adjustment of the question.”

This was the state of the affair when Mr. Polk became President. He believed that Great Britain had no rightful claim to any portion of the territory, but in consideration of what was done b his predecessors, and that as the treasury of 1827 authorized a joint occupancy of the territory by citizens of both countries, Mr. Polk renewed the offer to divide the territory by the 49th parallel, without, however, conceding the free navigation of the Columbia river.

This offer was rejected by Mr. Pakenham, with the remark that he trusted “some further proposal for the settlement of the Oregon question, more consistent with the fairness and equity, and with the reasonable expectations of the British government, would be made.” The sharpness of this remark necessarily cut off the negotiation, inasmuch as Mr. Pakenham made no proposition for his government, and here the matter has rested ever since.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Polk who believes that our title to the whole of Oregon “is the best now in existence,” and who seems to have no hope that any attempt at compromise will succeed, recommends that the year’s notice required by the treaty of 1827, to put an end to the “joint occupancy,” shall be given by the United States, and that in the mean time Congress shall take such steps, as it may consistently with the treaty of 1827, to protect our citizens there – and for the end, that “our laws and jurisdiction, civil and criminal, ought to be immediately extended over them.” Our right to do this he supports by referring to the example of Great Britain in this respect. He also recommends, for the safety of emigrants going to Oregon, that “a line of block houses” be erected along the usual route to that, territory from our frontier settlements on the Missouri.

The matter of terminating the “joint occupancy” of Oregon, by giving the year’s notice required by the treaty, is one entirely in the discretion of Congress, and as its consequences may be fatal to the peace which now so happily prevails throughout the civilized world, it will not hastily or inconsiderately be adopted. That it will be determined upon by Congress, we have scarcely a doubt; and it may not be long before we shall hear something decisive as to the course of England in such a case.

RW Tuesday December 9, 1845 RW45v22n9p1 ENVOY TO MEXICO
The National Intelligencer of yesterday says:

“The Pensacola Gazette of the 22d states that the United States ship St. Mary’s, a day or two previous, was dispatched from the port of Mexico with a “person of some distinction” as a passenger.

The Message of the President solves the mystery in part, by stating that a "distinguished citizen of Louisiana” has already sailed for Mexico in the capacity of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary; and the Union of Wednesday finishes the revelation by informing us that “the distinguished citizen of Louisiana” is the Hon. John Slidell, a Member of the last Congress, and Representative elect to the present.

So far from the objecting to this mission, our readers already know we heartily approve it, and we see no reason to doubt that the gentlemen selected will discharge worthily the trust reposed on him. We cannot help thinking however, that after waiting until within two weeks of the meeting of Congress, it would have been no more than respectful to the Senate had the President taken time to obtain the advice and consent of the body to the appointment.”

RW45v22m12p1 Friday December 12, 1845 Polk and War

"Junius” – Polk – and WAR!
The article which we publish this morning thus signed, is worthy to be so signed. It is, in our judgment, the most powerfully reasoned, and pregnant article of the whole winter from any quarter.

No one can read it, who is capable of thought, and dares to think, without being deeply impressed with its views and reasoning. It is immensely powerful and comprehensive.

That the country is in danger of War from Polk's message, not only with England but with other powers; unnecessary, wanton war, a war provoked by demagogues, whose motives have no expansion beyond their own paltry and contemptible private and party interests, is admitted on all hands, by every man capable of taking an enlightened survey of the state of things.

And if we should have a war forced upon us by the bravadoes and national insults, and unreasonable, or if not unreasonable, the ill-timed and unnecessary territorial demands in the President's Message – Will it not be a little remarkable, that the bloody conclusion will have been brought about by the "Duck River Colonel," who in the former war, crossed Duck River from Maury, having lands in each, and went back over the River, when the draft was to be made in Williamson, and the venerable editor of the Union, of those exploits in the Chesapeake War and War of 1819, we have no where read?

But we have no space for commentary. JUNIUS, we again say, ought to [rivet] the attention of the whole country. [TCS]

Friday December 12, 1845 RW45v22n12p1 HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
The House met and the Journal was read.

On motion of Mr. Douglass, the rules were suspended, and he introduced the joint resolution to admit the State of Texas into the Union.

The resolution was ordered to be printed, and made the order of the day for Tuesday next.

Mr. Rockwell of Mass. Moved that Mr. Douglas's resolution be referred to the Committee of the whole House.

The Chair decide that the resolution of Mr. R. was proposed too late, and could not be entertained.

Mr. Hopkins’ resolution, to go into the election of Chaplains of both Houses, and that they be chosen from different denominations, was taken up.

Mr. Pettit, of Indiana, spoke at length against the resolution, and offered an amendment, which was rejected.

The resolution of Mr. Hopkins was then adopted.

Petitions now being in order –

Mr. J.Q. Adams presented a large number on various subjects, but chiefly against admitting Texas as a slave State into the Union.

Mr. Harmanson then rose and announced the death of Mr. Dawson, of Louisiana, and the House adjourned. [TCS]

Friday December 12, 1845 RW45v22n12p1 Letter
To the Editors of the Whig:
ORANGE Dec. 4, 1845.

Gentlemen: - I have been much pleased by a perusal of the Governor's Message. It is written with vigor and elegance, and inculcates maxims of duty and patriotism worthy of all praise and adoption. Thinking thus, I may be allowed to express my surprise and regret that its beauty should have been marred such "claptraps for the galleries" as the fight on Texas, and the [eulogium] on Jackson. The Hero of New Orleans, as his friends prefer to style him, has passed away, and Posterity may be allowed to undoubtedly be, that he was a brave general, but a bad President. But we are willing to strike a balance between his Sword and his Pen, and leave him to the silence which proves our charity. The Governor, in his glowing style, which marks all of his productions, dwells with favor on the acquisition of Texas, and the rich "dowry" she will bring. Something of folly may be excuse to the honeymoons, but to speak of dowry is too much. We may not forget in our first warm embrace, that we are to be made accountable for the debts of our blushing bride, - And that if past folly and extravagance be any earnest of the future, she may but prove a fit companion for those of her unfortunate sister, whose honour, fully equal to fighting for Oregon, is lamentably insensitive in the [p]ocket nerve. But enough of Texas: The Sabine is passed – Heaven grant that the
The Governor is much more at home and more eloquent on those subjects of vital importance to our State – Education and Internal Improvement. It would be ridiculous, if it were not deplorable, to hear the load [[f]launts of Virginia's greatness, which mediocrity, vain, ignorant and contented, daily puts forth; and that sickening pride of ancestry which boasts of Fathers who owe their brightness to a contrast of degenerate sons. We [[l]aud the "resolutions of '98 and '99" and forget the unlettered host within our borders, who cannot read them; enounce Webster for the Ashburton Treaty, to those who never looked upon a map; prate of a Constitution to such as never saw it; and claim our "clear and unquestionable right" to the fifty-fourth degree of North latitude, before a company that never heard of the Equator! We revolt at the subtle refinement of the tyrant Caligula in placing his law tables so high no one could read them; but are not those law givers more deserving of our condemnation, who with cruel mockery, publish their statute and yet withhold a knowledge of the characters which compose them. What stability can you hope for in a popular government, where the mass is uneducated; the passions, not the judgment must decide; the demagogue will send in the high place and Agrarianism rule the hour. The Legislature may revise, enlarge, amend its penal code, but its best provision would be a good Common School System. Teach the rising generation to read their Bible, and you will prevent more crime than by erecting a [gibet] as high as Harman’s! I can but admire the self-sacrificing patriotism which urges Locofocism foard in the cause of Education. I had supposed them fully in the cause of Education. I had only hope rested on ignorance, as did the Papal Supremacy on the suppression of the Bible. But I am glad to see that it is otherwise; and I trust that this winter they will leave federal politics to take care of themselves – add no more folly to that already embarked in the Oregon question – consider the Bank as settled – and turning their thoughts to their proper sphere, see to elevate the moral and social condition of our people.

I know how warmly you are attached to the cause of Internal Improvements, and I share your feelings. I acknowledge the claims of the West, and condemn that narrow minded and selfish policy which would deny to our brethren safe channels of communication with the East. But you must excuse me for saying that this is a subject which demands, and should receive, the fullest and calmest deliberation. We have just seen the wise and generally prudent community of Great Britain, misled by a Rail Road mania, only surpassed, if surpassed at all, by the South Sea Bubble, and the Mississippi Scheme. Let us recollect that our capital and credit could ill stand such a shock. We have not idle millions at our disposal, not that teeming population which swarms on every highway in England. We have debt resting on is to whose payment we are fully equal, and which every year of increasing wealth will make lighter and lighter. But let us beware how we in crease our debt. The past should not be a sealed book, nor the fate of many of our sister States forgotten. Our schemes so far, have proved utterly abortive. Our great Central Improvement seems only to raise a melancholy smile at the provision in its charter which forbids a dividend of more than fifteen percent. What we have most to fear is the introduction of that system styled, in homely, but expressive phrase, log rolling. We are precisely in the condition of Maryland, before her famous Eight Million Bill, which was passed by the mutual aid of a number of sectional interests. By this unfortunate system, she was plunged into inextricable difficulties, and now groans under a debt of $30 every man, woman and child, within her limits. Let our Legislators learn wisdom from her fate, and whilst they act for the welfare of the State, have nerve to lay such taxes as will prevent any increase in our debt.

Friday December 17, 1845 RW45v22n13p1 Increasing Probability of War

Monday’s Debate in the Senate – Increasing probability of War

We transfer to our columns from the Baltimore American yesterday, a sufficiently expanded account of the Debate in the Senate Monday, which will serve to impress the country with the conviction that WAR, if avoidable, is highly probable.

So senseless wanton and foolish a war, if it occur, or one more so never did occur. England and France were in the habit, for centuries, of going to war to gratify a minions pride, or to vindicate the beauty of a mistress’ eyebrow. But even that was more sensible than this threatened Oregon war, for a territory which neither has the shadow of a claim to, which neither wants, and which neither can retain, for its independence, in a short time, is certain.

Mr. Case’s diagnosis as to the War symptoms, and Mr. ARCHER’S full approval of Polk’s views, will strike the reader as being about of equal significance.

Friday December 17, 1845 RW45v22n13p1 War Message

To the Editors of the Whig

THE WAR MESSAGE

In our former communication we attempted, and we hope, successfully, to demonstrate that war with Great Britain is inevitable and our position with regard to France, to say the least, hazardous, unless the wisdom of Congress shall speedily rebuke the intemperate and unstatesmanlike course of our Executive. In the present state of the parties, there is good reason to apprehend, this body will not be governed by the experience of history, that “Never to act unjustly against equals, is a firmer [se]curity of power, than to be elevated by present plausibilities, and enlarge it through a series of dangers." It appears from the President's account of the negotiations, that unsuccessful attempts to establish a "permanent boundary," were made in 1818, 1824, 1826, 1827, 1843, 1844, and 1845, and that "awowed purpose of the parties, based upon principles of compromise, was to establish a permanent boundary between them, westward of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Oceans." And this principle of compromise is fully recognized by the President, for he says: "In consideration that propositions of compromise had been thrice made by two preceding administrations, to adjust the question on the question of 49 degrees, and in two of them, yielding to Great Britain the free navigation of the Columbia, and that the pending negotiation had been commenced on the basis of compromise, I deemed it to be my duty not to abruptly to break it off." Here then is ample proof that Mr. Polk considered this question a fair subject for compromise and that on this principle, he had made the same offer as his predecessors, with the exception of the free navigation of the Columbia.

Now if Mr. Polk wished the settlement of this difficulty, why did he offer worse terms than those which he knew had been rejected? He must have thought that he was making a horse trade with some West-Tennessean jockey. He thought proper to deny the free navigation of the Columbia (the only oasis, by the bye, in the barren desert of his intellect) — an important part, however, of this national bargain; but why did he not offer some equivalent? Is he so wedded to straight lines that he could not depart from Lat. 49 deg. at the point where it strikes the Northeast branch of the Columbia, and dropping down to 47 deg. 30m. — run[,] on that line, to the Pacific Ocean? In our [p]ast, we said that the real cause of the dispute is three degrees of Latitude, from 46th† to the 49th [. ] Now, the arrangement proposed would, in vulgar parlance, be "splitting the difference," and about a fair equivalent for exclusion from the River. Great Britain would thus have the whole of Vancouver's Island and the Strait of Fuca, and each nation would hold exclusive right to its own rivers, harbours and bays. Mr. Polk, however, will lift up his hands at the folly that would surrender an inch South of 49 deg., and with the cupiditv of a miserly land-pirate who fixes his affections on his neighbors farm, he exclaims:

Proximus accedat [ ] nunc deneriat agellum.

But this is a childish, silly ambition. What consequence.

* Thucidides
† By a typographical error it was printed 99[ ]

is it to the people of these United States, whether their boundary forms a straight line from the Lake of the Woods, to the Pacific; or whether, in approaching its western terminus, it deflects NINETY MILES? It is very evident from the various propositions, of the English Government and especially, from the last, that the possession of the Columbia is what they really desire; but as all who look an the map, must see, that this division would be unjust to the United States, they offer the "detached territory" North of the river, along the Pacific and Strait of Fuca. Here England virtually acknowledges she is asking too much, in demanding to come to the mouth of the River; and offers what she considers and equivalent. It must be confessed this is a clumsy attempt to make a bargain, and a fair offset to Mr. Polk's horse-trade. Away with such peddling! Lord Ashburton and Mr. Webster, or any other two liberal men, left to their own sense of right, would settle the question in an hour. Let the Senate of the United States - the great conservative branch of our government, advise the withdrawal of the implied threat of Mr. Polk, and advise, besides, the offer of some proposition equivalent to the suggested, and the peace of the world may yet be preserved. At all events, we shall show all the world that we are deficient neither in justice nor magnanimity. The assertion of Mr. Polk, that our claim to the whole territory is irrefragable, will not bear one moments examination. We have, ourselves, by permitting a joint occupation, for more than a quarter of a century, yielding a right, by prescription or [ ] caption, which no present claim can annul, or invalidate. The object of this communication is two-fold; first, to show that a compromise may still, and ought to be affected; and secondly, if the Government do not elect this mode, but prefer sustaining the belligerent attitude of the President, to offer some suggestions as to the probable action of Great Britain, and the means of counteraction. If the Government of our country, were yet actuated by the sole consideration of the public good, and that purity of purpose which influenced its earlier career, we might hope that views such as we have taken, would prevail; but alas! there is little to be expected of a party, whose slightest mandate in congressional caucus, dictated by the previously ascertained will of the President, must be obeyed implicitly as the command of a superior officer by a subaltern. Does a senator dare vote for a Secretary, or a Door Keeper, or Sergeant at Arms, against the nomination of a Caucus, he is punished on the same principle as that held by the Stoics, that it was as great a crime to steal a cabbage from a neighbors garden, as to commit sacrilege. It is most mortifying to acknowledge the fact, but this government is corrupt to the very marrow: Selfishness and self-aggrandisement are now the motive power that impale our public men. The calculation is not how the public good will best be subserved, but how the antagonistical interests of party aspirants can be harmonized, and their love of plunder gratified with the greatest prospect of the advantage to those who hold the purse strings.

But enough! Let us now consider what will be probable course of Great Britain, on receipt of the President's Message.

After adopting measures for pacifying Ireland, the next ca[s]e will be to place Canada and all her possessions in North America, in a posture of defense. This she can soon do, by increasing her standing army from the brave but starving population of Ireland. That country, out of a population of eight millions, can afford three hundred thousand brave men. Of these there may be sent to Canada fifty thousand; Natives 30,000; English and Scottish Soldiers 30,000 — making with the present forces some 125,000 men. Her Ship Canal and Ridean Canal will give her command of the waters of the St. Lawrence and the Lakes, and enable her to cover those Lakes with war steamers in an inconceivably short space of time. Simultaneously, she will divide her vast naval power, so, that leaving a large squadron to guard the coast of Ireland, transferring from that country to England eighty thousand men to watch the discontented, and replacing them by as many English and Scotch troops to control the Irish; moreover, having left in the Mediterranean a sufficient force to insure respect and safety in that quarter, she will be enabled to send to the Pacific, Caribbean Sea, and Gulf of Mexico, fleets, every one of which will equal our whole Navy. Having made these dispositions, and landed in Oregon a sufficient force to maintain possessions, her squadron will have orders to await the result, and the first blow that is struck, steamers will carry the news to the Pacific Squadron and to Acapulco; thence it will conveyed across the Isthmus to Vera Cruz, and without waiting for any formal declaration of war, a dash will be made at our commerce, before we have time to look around us, or concentrate our means of defense; and our defenseless sea-board will be attacked from the Rio del Norte to Passamquoddy Bay. These views are founded not upon the opinion if any military man, for we have interchanged views with no human being on these topics, nor are they based upon any military experience, for we profess to know very little about such matters; but we think they are such as any man of ordinary intelligence must see are at least probable. In the first instance, England having assumed the defensive, with throw the onus of breaking the peace upon us, at least she will so act until Congress, by some hostile demonstration, shall have convinced her war is resolved. It is then probable, that she will wait no longer; but, like the Roman General, shaking her Toga, she will [send] it forth on the four winds of Heaven.

Awful, indeed, will be that hour, but if it is to come, why let us meet it as men and patriots. We have a great and noble country to fight for, and palisied be the hand and accursed the heart, and penniless the purse, that will not surrender the last dollar to preserve it from pollution. Yes, it is true that a country of twenty millions of freemen cannot finally be conquered! We have no craven fear for our noble Eagle: he may perch on Mount Washington, or Peak of Otter, or Mount Brown, and look down proud defiance on the invaders of this country. If then Congress be for war, let there be no miserable, ill-timed economy; let them not act as the child who supposes he can bay a horse for a dime. An immediate appropriation of fifty millions will be necessary, and Government should be directed to adopt immediate measures for the defense of our Lakes, Sea-coast, and Commerce. In sixty days, it may be too late, and the loss of hundreds of millions may be the consequence of our ill-sustained bravado. Americans, we call upon you, whatever may be your opinion of the patriotism and wisdom of those who have induced the present state of things; we call upon you, to sustain your Government, RIGHT OR WRONG. Now, you may censure, reprove, admonish; but sixty days from now, you may be very differently circumstanced. You may then have no alternative but to bear high and proudly the banner of your country. Who can doubt your resolution to defend it to the death.

JUNIUS.

THE MEXICAN INDEMNITY

A LETTER FROM Ex President SANTA ANA, dated at Havana, Nov. 19th, states his be[ ] that the installments due the United States were actually paid in ready cash if not, Minister Agent Voss, (he says) are responsible – the one having disobeyed his orders, and the others not having fulfilled the orders of his constituents.

THE LONE STAR, LONE NO LONGER.

The passage by the Senate of the U. States, of the Joint Resolution for the admission of Texas into the Union, without restriction, merges the “Lone Star,” and blots out the independence of that nation. We may now expect the election of Senators and Representatives, to take place soon after the official announcement of the fact to the State of Texas.

Ex-President Lamar has joined in the denunciation of Houston, who has hitherto been regarded as an aspirant for Senatorial honors; and the latter will have more than his usual good luck to surmount the difficulties which beset his path way to further political distinction. The probability is, that his star has twinkled its last.

SYMPTOMS OF WAR

Washington, Dec. 16, 1845
To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen: As there is some little new astir here which you and your readers may like to hear, I will send it in a few words before the mail closes. The House, today, passed the bill admitting Texas, without any more ado on our part, as part and parcel of the Federal Union – there being only fifty-six votes in the negative. The Senate will follow suit in a day or two, so that “kettle of fish” will soon be stewed. If this must be so, let us all say – so be it – our country, however bounded, still our country – to be defended and regarded as one and inseparable, form now through all time.

The Senate passed unanimously today, the resolution making inquires into the state and condition of the Army and Navy. This looks as if they expected “breakers ahead.” Gen. Cass made a war speech to-day for buncumb. He is opening early for the Presidential campaign. Every one I heard speak about it, regarded in the same light I have. I was surprised to-day, to hear from our most prudent Sachems and wise men, that they thought there was no escaping conflict with Great Britain. Inquires have been made, and there is found a majority in both Houses, in favor of adopting the President’s recommendation of notifying England of the abrogation of the joint occupancy of Oregon, in one year from the time of the passage of the act, and extension of the laws of the U. States over the Territory. If this be the case, I see that war must come. I understand that Mr. Packenham has declared that this must be the case, should Congress adopt the President’s views. Let us hope for the best but prepare for the worst. I hardly expected that the members from the Atlantic States[,] would have been so rash and precipitate. Perhaps when Mr. Calhoun arrives, other counsels may prevail; but there is now, perhaps too strong a current to resist. Many think he will unite with the majority, and attempt to head [Cass]. I fear this Congress, with the President and his advisers, will get us into a row of some kind, before we get rid of them. These are evil times, and our merchants, farmers and manufacturers, should keep an eye to the windward.

In conjunction with this painful view of our position, is the fact that a majority of FIVE members in the lower House, have pledged to repeal the Tarriff of 1842. A Democratic member in the lower House, tells me, that he knows this to be a DEAD CERTAINTY. It will pass also in the Senate, as there are only two Democratic Senators, Messrs. Stargeon and Cameron, who oppose it. This brings us all “right up-standing,” and shows that our “progressive democracy” will waylay the country some way for certain. Well, the people will do all things, and I submit. Let them prepare their nerves for coming events, as the times must change – a change perhaps, that will produce results that will affect his nation unto the fourth and fifth generations. McDuffie’s friends think he will not live the session out. He has been confined some time to his room.

In the Speaker's chamber, a heated debate took place regarding the annexation of Texas. Several resolutions were introduced by Mr. Rockwell of Connecticut, calling for the House to consider the matter of annexation. The resolutions were discussed, and a motion was made to refer them to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Boyd moved that the resolutions be laid upon the table and printed, which motion prevailed.

Mr. Rockwell desired that his Resolutions should be referred to the Committee of the whole and printed.

Mr. BOYD moved that they be laid upon the table and printed, which motion prevailed. The remainder of the day was given to the perception of[.]
Mr. RATHBURN expressed his belief that the resolutions had been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER decided that no such reference was made.

Mr. HERRICK, of New York, moved to lay the resolutions upon the table. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the vote was ayes 52, noes 142.

The previous was then seconded, by a vote of 95 to 81.

The question recurred, shall the main question be now put.

Mr. SCHENCE, of Ohio, called for the yeas and nays. He wished to see who would be willing to record their votes in favor of such a proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered and while the names were being called, several members rose to know the effect of the motions which had been submitted.

The SPEAKER announced that unless the main question was now put the whole question would go over until tomorrow.

The vote was announced as 108 in favor of the main question 90 against it.

A division of the question was then called for, which the SPEAKER decided to be out of order.

The question returned now to the open engrossment of the resolutions. The yeas and nays were ordered, when Mr. HUNT, of N. Y., asked to be excused from voting; the question, he said, was of the greatest magnitude, and he was called upon to vote upon it without opportunity to offer amendment, or to express opinion upon it. He denounced the proceedings as an infringement of the right of discussion. Mr. H. was here, called to order, and afterwards excused from voting.

The question of engrossing the Resolutions was sustained by the House ayes 141, nays 57.

The SPEAKER, now put the Resolutions upon the their passage.

Mr. ROCKWELL, of Mass. obtained the floor, and spoke mildly of the act before the House, and of the unusual manner that had been taken to hurry such a question through the House. He opposed the admission of Texas, in consequence of the enlargement it gave to the Slave territory of the country; and objected to some of the provisions in the Constitution of Texas. Mr. R. concluded with a motion to recommit with instructions, to insert a proviso that there be no Slavery or involuntary servitude in Texas, except for the purposes of punishment.

The SPEAKER decided that the motion to recommit to be in order.

The majority of the dominant party were opposed. The decision of the Speaker was first sustained 92 to 77, and then reversed upon a motion 96 to 93.

After great confession and much discussion upon points of order, the House was brought to a vote upon the resolutions – Ayes 141, Nays 56.

A motion was made to reconsider this vote and lost, after which the House adjourned.

"CALIFORNIA – it seem to be understood that Mr. Slidell, our new Minister to Mexico is fully authorized to arrange our boundary with that Republic upon the [best] [ ] [eral footing. His powers in this [ ] are believed to be so extensive that under them he may appropriate a [ ] [ ] the United States of the right of Mexico to Upper California. This would probably be effected by making our line follow the course of the Rio Grande del Norte from the Gulf of Mexico until it reaches the thirty second degree of north latitude, and then run westward on the parallel to the Pacific Ocean." "Of course such area will not be brought about without a handsome compensation to Mexico for that relinquishment of territory. Our claim [ ] [her [ ] for indemnification to our citizens is now very large, and no way is so likely as this to [such] [ ] [and] [ ] satisfaction. Mr. DOUGLASS of Ill. From the Committee on Territories reported a Bill for the protection of American citizens in Oregon. Referred to the Committee of the Whole, and made the special order of the day for the second Tuesday in January, and every day after until disposed of.

N.E. BOUNDARY.

Mr. HAMLIN of Me. offered a resolution calling upon the President of the United States for information in relation to the navigation of the river St. Johns and the Washington treaty. Also for copies of all correspondence upon the subject during the two years past.

THE OREGON.

Several Resolutions of inquiry upon the subject of the North Western territory, (similar to those offered in the Senate) were submitted, all looking to the establishment of civil and military power West of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. WINTHROP of Mass. offered a series of Resolutions, declaring that there was no occasion to suspend the negotiations between the United States and Great Britain in reference to the disputed territory – that it would be a disgrace to both nations to submit to such a question to be decided by arms, and nothing has occurred by which such a question may not be referred to arbitration, – that arbitration does not necessarily involve the necessity of a reference to crowned heads, but that all the world is open from which to make a choice of Commissioners, who may wisely decide as to the powers of both Governments.

Mr. Winthrop's resolutions excited some interest in the House, but there was danger of their being laid on the table, he gave notice of his intention to debate them, which carried them over to a future day.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Ill. followed with two resolutions, declaring first, "that our title to the whole of Oregon South of 54° 40 was clear and unquestionable." Secondly, "That being a title, it was not a proper subject of arbitration."

Mr. Douglass gave notice that he should debate the Resolutios he had offered, when the [ ] [ ] [ ] Massachusetts called up those which he had submitted [ ] a Resolution was also submitted in reference to the employment of the Home Squadron in the Pacific.

Friday December 23, 1845 RW45v22n14p1 War Panic

Effects of the War Panic.

The consequences of the belligerent debate in the Senate of the United States, are strongly visible in the Northern cities. In New York, the heart of the commercial system, the excitement has been disastrous, and both stocks and market have suffered. We quote from two of the papers that are generally close observers.

The Herald says:

THE PANIC. – The panic in Wall Street is rather increasing than otherwise, and is now operating upon the banks, and money in the business channels. Interest is rising, specie is leaving the banks, and there seems to be every preparation for a general bank panic, more in relation to the sub-treasury [ ] [ ] to any other matter. Old times are coming back.”

The Express remarks:

"The week has been one of a good deal of excitement. The proceedings of the Senate of the United States have been read with unusual interest. Public attention will be turned both to Washington and to Europe. Our foreign are deemed by some to be in so critical a position, that all good men, as well as those having great commercial, mercantile and manufacturing interests at stake, will continue to be deeply anxious for the future. The new has already had a considerable effect on the market, particularly stocks, which have fluctuated very materially. The holders of grain and flour are waiting for further tidings from Europe; and, for the present there is a pause in large transactions. The next news will be of a good deal of commercial importance. If the grain market should be higher in England, prices will advance here, but if lower, holders will accept of prices at which orders can be filled, -- there will be large shipments. The winter has now fairly set in; the River is closed, and merchants are taking their inventories and closing up for the year's work."
CONGRESS
Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot – By Telegraph.
Thursday, Dec. 18—2 P.M.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

This morning, Mr. ALLEN introduced his resolutions of which he had given notice, to authorize the President to give notice to Great Britain, that the treaty for the joint occupancy of the territory of Oregon must be annulled and abrogated. Read for a first time.

Mr. FAIRFIELD presented a memorial from claimants for French spoliations previous to 1800, which after a debate, was referred to a select Committee.

Oregon – Outrageous Resolutions of Mr. Douglass.

The following highly important and antagonistical resolutions were offered in the H. of Representatives on Friday.

They will bring up all the questions involved in that dangerous controversy and probably resolve the issue of peace or war.

We confess ourselves much impressed with Mr. Winthrop’s, with humanity, moderation, wisdom and christian spirit and not less disgusted with the reckless rapaciousness of Mr. Douglass’.

To understand the full meaning and import of the latter, the reader must bear in mind, that neither the U. states nor England claim a [ ] of land North of 50 degrees 40 minutes North Latitude, where the Russian colonies commence. The claim is then for all, accompanied by a refusal to treat any form! In other words, if adopted by Congress, it is tantamount to a declaration of war!

The suggestion of a course so absurdly precipitate and wantonly rash, so little required by any existing emergency or justified by reason, was never addressed before, we feel confident, to any deliberative assembly on Earth! It must shock the calm good sense of the American people, even of the most tenacious for “all of Oregon or none.”

What honor is lost or hazarded by negotiating while it is yet honorable to negotiate, we cannot perceive! And is it not honorable to negotiate until England has offered us either aggression or insult?

Where too are the gentlemen’s fleets and armies, to fence his doughty purposes? How is an army to be marched across the Continent? Where is the fleet to come from that can cope with England in the Pacific? What is to move our immense commerce in those seas from destruction, were these most absurd resolutions be adopted, which every man knows England would construe as a war and act at once? Where are the fortifications, the steamers, the troops, to prevent the bombardment of Boston, New York, and every seaport?

If the proposition had not come from a member of Congress of distinction, we should say that it must have come from a madman.

Mr. WINTHROP submitted the following resolution:

1. Resolved, That the differences between the United States and Great Britain, on the subject of the Oregon Territory are still a subject for negotiation and compromise, and that satisfactory evidence has not yet been afforded that no compromise which the United States ought to accept can be affected.

2. Resolved, That it would be a dishonor to the age in which we live, and in the highest degree be discreditable to both the nations concerned, if they shall suffer themselves to be drawn into a war upon a question of no immediate or practical interest to either of them.

3. Resolved, That if no other mode for the amicable adjustment of this question remains, it is due to the principles of civilization and christianity that a resort to arbitration should be had; and that this Government cannot relieve itself from all responsibility which may follow the failure to settle this controversy while this resort is still untried.
4. Resolved, That arbitration does not necessarily involve a reference to crowned heads; and that, if a jealously of such a reference is entertained in any quarter, a commission of able and dispassionate citizens either from two countries concerned, or from the world at large, offers itself, as an obvious and unobjectionable alternative.

These resolutions were laid over under the rule for debate.

Mr. DOUGLASS moved the following resolutions in relation to Oregon:

1. Resolved, That the title to any part of the Oregon Territory south of 54 degrees 40 minutes of north latitude is not open to compromise so as to surrender any part of said territory.

2. Resolved, That the question of title to that territory should not be left to arbitration.

These resolutions were also laid over under the rule for debate.

Friday December 23, 1845 v22n14p2 COST OF WAR

The N. Y. Express says:

"If a war should take place, The Government would, at the lowest calculation, have to borrow at least one hundred million dollars a year, for the first few years. The present revenue from imports and land sales, would very nearly cease, and the resort would be wholly to taxes."

The calculation of the Express is probably too large – but reduce it in one half – where is the amount of money to be borrowed by a Confederacy whose credit in Europe two years since, was prostrated by the repudiation of some States, and is not yet restored?

The infatuation of the party in power, appears to our judgment most unaccountable, as well as complete. While they are frantically and precipitately hurrying the United States into a war with the greatest power in the world, with an army of 5,000 men, with a navy that would shut up at once in port, or only escape the fate by stealing out a ship at a time, with empty arsenals, and dilapidated forts, they are on one hand proposing to dry up the Revenue by repealing or greatly reducing the Tariff, and on the other to prostrate commercial confidence, and paralyze trade business, to diminish the circulating medium, and destroy the equilibrium of exchanges, by resorting the exploded sub-Treasury, influenced by party spirit!

More rash and destructive counsels never threatened to overhelm a country. But we hope that “sober second thought” of the Democratic party itself, will interpose to avert the wide-spread ruin which their adoption would occasion.

Texas, Oregon and California!

On the 19th Dec., the N. York Locos held a grand pow wow at Tammany Hall.

The News of the 20th says:

"Oregon, Texas, and California – Meeting in Old Tammany in Support of the Presidents Message and Municipal Reforms:

Last night, pursuant to a call of the Democratic Republican Young Men’s General Committee, a meeting was held in Tammany Hall, for the expression of opinions on the message of the President of the United States, and also upon the subjects of Constitutional city Reform. Above the platform a neat banner was suspended, simple but expressive. The nominations have been made, a series of resolutions of a very qualified nature have been reported, and adopted of course – approving to the crossing of a “t”, the President’s Message – rejoining Texas – demanding all Oregon from latitude 54 degrees 40 minutes to California – endorsing the Sub-Treasury – denouncing the Tariff of 1842 as odious and oppressive – applauding the resolution of General Cass in the Senate U. S. &c.

Corn Laws Oregon &c.

The accession of Lord John Russell, long the leader of the Whigs and a man more eminent than he has had general credit for, and moreover the virtual head of the great house of Bedford and of Lord Morpeth, heretofore supporters of the Corn Laws, is universally esteemed as of great importance. We have ever believed that the subversion of the Corn Laws would in a short time lead to the subversion of the Aristocracy, and to a repudiation of the British National Debt, a monopoly of corn sales being necessary to enable the farming interest to sustain their dreadful burthens. We believe the repeal is at hand.

The Paris Press indulges in copious speculations on the Oregon question, and the remarks of some of the Journals are curious enough. Most of them express the opinion that the Americans have much the best claim to the territory, though one of them thinks Britain will fight hard for their claim – in which case the battle "will be one Englishman and an Englishman and a half." Another paper says neither England nor the United States has so much right to Oregon as the French, inasmuch as the latter first discovered the country!

ISLAND OF CUBA

Mr. LEVY submitted the following proposal, which lies over for debate, under the rules.

Resolved, The in the opinion of the Senate it is advisable for the President to open negotiations with the Government of Spain for the cession to the United States of the Island of Cuba, the inhabitants of said island consenting thereto.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, it was Resolved, That the Committee of the Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of organizing a company of sappers, miners, and pontooners.

ADMISSION OF TEXAS

Mr. ASHLEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the joint resolutions from the other floors providing for the admission of Texas as a State into this Union on a footing with the original States; also, a substitute for the bill heretofore offered on the same subject.

The joint resolutions having been read –

Messrs. WEBSTER, BARRIEN, NILES, HUNTINGTON, and BAGBY successively submitted their reasons for the vote which they were reportedly about to give on the resolutions.

The resolutions were then, by consent read a third time and PASSED.

The Senate, on motion of Mr. ALLEN, went into Executive session for a short time, and then adjourned.

The Oregon Question Impartially Viewed – War and its Consequences

To Thomas H. Pleasants, Esq.

Dear Sir: -- This is a question that has been but a short time, prominently before the American People; has been little discussed, in public, and still less understood; for until now, few public documents have been presented to the public eye, from which a correct judgment could be formed, and those, so voluminous, that few comparatively even of our public men, have taken the pains to wade through them. Under these circumstances, I have thought that it could render no more acceptable service to me fellow-citizens, who are so vitally interested in this issue, and who now stand on the brink of a bloody and desolating was, than to present to their minds, as briefly as possible, a clear and distinct understanding of the true nature of the claims set up by Great Britain and the United States, to this comparatively worthless, disputed territory; and of the actual position we occupy towards it at this moment. And for this purpose, I propose to exhibit the question, as it presents itself, from a careful examination of the correspondence between the British and American negotiators, as accompanying the President's Message to the two Houses of Congress, stripped of all the mystification that surrounds it, by the volume of words that have been employed to establish their respective claims.

The Oregon Territory, as it is known, consists of that part of the northwestern portion of North America lying between the summit of the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Ocean—bounded on the South by the 42d degree, and on the North by the 54th deg. 40m of north latitude.

The claim on the part of the United States, up to the present time, has covered only the portion lying between 42 and 49° north latitude; and that portion beyond 49° has been conceded to Great Britain; at least in all former negotiations we have agreed to surrender it, but now, for the first time within 27 years, during which we have been treating and negotiating with Great Britain on this subject, a claim by Mr. Polk and his negotiator, Mr. Buchanan— to the whole territory—and the grounds upon which this claim rests, are twofold:— 1st, a right acquired from the Spanish Government by the Florida treaty in 1819; and secondly, a right derived from discovery, exploration, and settlement.

First, then, let us examine the Spanish title—I quote from Mr. Buchanan's own letter and acknowledgement—to show how it stands:

"That Juan de Fuca, a Greek in the service of Spain, in 1592, discovered and sailed through the strait, now bearing his name, from its Southern to its Northern extremity, and thence returned by the same passage, no longer admits of a reasonable doubt. An account of his voyage was published in London, in 1625, in a work called Pilgrims by Samuel Purchas. This account was received from the lips of Fuca himself, at Genoa in April, 1596, by Micheal Lock, a highly respectable English merchant.

During a long period, his voyage was deemed fabulous, because subsequent navigators have endeavored in vain to find these straits. Finally, after they have been found, it was discovered that descriptions of de Fuca corresponded so accurately with their geography, and the facts presented by nature upon the ground, that it was no longer possible to consider his narrative fabulous." * * * * * *

 Justice has, at length, been done to his memory, and these straits which he discovered, will, in all future time, bear his name: Thus, the merit of the discovery of the Straits of Fuca belongs to Spain; and nearly two centuries before they had been entered by Captain Berkely, under the Austrian Flag.

"It is unnecessary to detail the discoveries of the Spaniards, as they regularly advanced to the North from their settlements, on the Western coasts of North America until we reach the voyage of Captain Juan Perez, in 1774. That Navigator was commissioned by the Viceroy of Mexico, to proceed in the corvette Santiago to the 60° of North latitude, and from that point to examine the coast down to Mexico. He sailed from San Blas on the 25th of January, 1774. In the performance of his commission, he landed on the Northwest coast of Queen Charlotte's Island near the 54th° of North latitude; and then along the coast of the continent until he reached Monterey," (which is about the 42° N. latitude.) "He went on shore and held intercourse with the natives at several places, and especially at the entrance of a bay in latitude 49½ degrees, which he called Port San Lorenzo. The same now known by the name Nootka Sound—

"In addition to the journals of his voyage which render the facts incontestable, we have the high authority of Baron Humboldt in its favor. That distinguished traveler, who had access to the manuscript documents in the city of Mexico, states that Perez and his pilot, Estaner Mastenez, left the port of San Blas on the 24th of January, in 1774. The 9th of August they anchored (the first of all European Navigators) in Nootka road, which they called the Port of Lorenzo, and which the illustrious Cook, four years afterwards, called King George's Sound."

"In the next year 1775, the Viceroy of Mexico, again fitted out the Santiago, under the commission of Bruno Hecata, with Perez her former commander, as ensign, and also, a schooner called Sonoro, commanded by Juan Francisco de Bodega y Quandra. These vessels were commissioned to examine the Northwest coast of America, as far as the 65th degree of latitude, and sailed in company from San Blas, on the 15th of March, 1775. It is unnecessary to enumerate the different places on the coast, examined by these navigators, either in her company or separately. Suffice it to say, they landed at many places, on the coast, from 41st to the 57th degree of North latitude, on all of which occasions, they took possession of the country, in the name of their sovereign, according to a prescribed regulation; celebrating mass, reading declarations, asserting the right of Spain to the territory, and erecting crosses with inscription, to commemorate the event. Some of these crosses were afterward found standing by British navigators."

Again, Mr. Buchanan says: "Compared with this ancient claim of Spain acquiesced in by all European nations for centuries, the claim of Great Britain, that this convention," (the Nootka Sound Convention of 1790 between Spain and Great Britain) "which was dictated to her by Spain contains no provision impairing the ultimate sovereignty which that power had asserted for nearly three centuries, over the whole Western side of North America, as far North as the 61st degree of latitude, and which had never been seriously questioned by any European nation. This right had been maintained by Spain with the most vigilant jealousy ever since the discovery of the American continent, and had been acquiesced in by all European Governments. It had been admitted that even beyond the latitude of 54 degrees 40 minutes North, by Russia, then too only power having claims which could come even in collision with Spain, and that too, under a sovereign peculiarly tenacious of the territorial rights of her empire. This will appear, from the latter of Count Fernan de Montmorin, the Secretary of the Foreign Department of France, dated..."
Paris, June 16th, 1790. From the letter it seems, that complaints had been made by Spain, to the Court of Russia, against Russian subjects, for violating the Spanish territory, on the 61st degree of North latitude; in consequence of which, that Court without delay, assured the King of Spain “that it was extremely sorry that the repeated orders issued to prevent subjects of Russia from violating in the smallest degree, the territory belonging to another power, should have been disobeyed.”

This is the Spanish title, as established by the American negotiator in his correspondence with the British Minister, under which we claim by the Florida treaty of 1819 – and if it be represented by him, that the Spanish claim was not only full and complete, but recognized by all European nations for centuries before discoveries or explorations had been made, either by that government or that of Great Britain, it would seem that little value could be attached to such discoveries or explorations on the part of either – and if the matter rested here, it might appear satisfactorily enough – that the title of Spain being established, and that power by the treaty of 1819, having ceded to the United States “all her rights, claims and pretensions to any territories west of the Rocky Mountains, and north of the 42d parallel of latitude,” would justify the language, that has been lately and for the first time employed that our title of the whole of Oregon was “clear and unquestionable” – but the matter does not rest here: one side of a story is always good, until the other is told. What says Great Britain as an offset to the Spanish title under which we claim to show that this cession on the part of Spain to the United States in 1819 did not entitle the United States to exclusive dominion over any part of the Oregon territory? I take Buchanan’s own statement again:

"In the year 1788, John Meares, a British subject, sailing under a Portuguese flag landed at Nootka Sound, and made a temporary establishment there for the purpose of building a vessel; the Spaniards in 1789 took possession of this establishment under the orders of the Viceroy of Mexico, who claimed for Spain the exclusive sovereignty of the whole territory on the west coast of America up to the Russian line. Meares appealed to the British government for redress of Spain, and the danger of war between the two nations became imminent. This was prevented by the conclusion of the Nootka Sound Convention. That convention provides, by its first and second articles, for the restoration of the lands and buildings of which the subjects of Great Britain had been dispossessed by the Spaniards, and a payment of indemnity for the injuries sustained. – This indemnity was paid by Spain; but no sufficient evidence has been adduced that either Nootka Sound, or any other spot upon the coast was ever actually surrendered by that power to Great Britain."

Observe, this statement and acknowledgement of the American negotiator, and I apprehend it is of little importance as respects the validity of title, whether John Meares’ original design in making a settlement was for a temporary or permanent purpose; and that it is equally unimportant whether there was, or was not an actual surrender of the spot to the British authorities – it is admitted by our government that the Convention between Spain and Great Britain, signed at the Escurial on the 28th of October 1790, recognised the right of Great Britain to the settlement, and Spain stood pledged to a restoration, and paid an indemnity for the injuries sustained by a British subject.

But Mr. Packenham adds, that “in 1792, Vancouver was sent from England to witness the fulfillment of the above mentioned engagement, and to effect a survey of the North West Coast.”

The third article is as follows: “In order to strengthen the bonds of friendship, and to preserve in future, a perfect harmony and good understanding between the contracting parties, it is agreed that their respective subjects shall not be disturbed or molested, either in navigating or carrying on their fisheries in the Pacific Ocean, or in the South Seas, or in landing on the coasts of the country, or of making settlements there; the whole, subject nevertheless to the restrictions specified in the three following articles:"

“The material one of which is,” as Mr. Buchanan himself says:

Art. 5. “As well in the places which are to be restored to the British subjects, by virtue of the first article, as in other parts of the North Western Coasts of North America, or of the islands adjacent, situate to the north of the parts of the said coast, already occupied by Spain, wherever the subjects of either of the two powers shall have made settlements since the month of April 1789, or shall make any, the subjects of the other shall have free access, and shall carry on the trade without any disturbance or molestation.”

It will be perceived, that the first article has a two fold object, and recognises and stipulates for two distinct rights on the part of Great Britain – the first is an understood right to navigate and carry on their fisheries in the Pacific Ocean, or in the South Seas, and to land on the coasts of those seas, in places not already occupied, for the purpose of commerce with the natives. So far as it may be regarded as a commercial treaty; but it also secures to Great Britain, the right to make settlements, which implies a right of jurisdiction and sovereignty, co-equal with that of Spain herself. The 5th article, and only one relied upon, and referred to by Mr. Buchanan, only secures the right of free access to the subjects of each nation, to the settlements that may have been formed by the subjects of the other, since April 1789, or that may be formed subsequent to the Convention.

The importance of the discrimination, as to the distinct objects of the 3rd article of the Convention above quoted, will be seen by reference to another portion of Mr. Buchanan’s communication, which will be presently noticed.

It is manifest then, that if this Nootka Sound Convention was in full force and operation between Great Britain and Spain, at the time of the negotiation of the Florida Treaty, in 1819, by which Spain ceded to the United States “all her rights, claims, and pretensions to any territories west of the Rocky Mountains, and North of the 42d parallel of latitude,” that she would not have entitled the U. States to exclusive dominion over the whole of the Oregon Territory, for she could not transfer to the U. S. what she did not herself possess, or lay claim to, as she held it in joint occupancy with Great Britain.
But says Mr. Buchanan, this Nootka Sound Convention had no existence at the time of the Florida treaty, because there was a war between Great Britain and Spain in 1796, and "the general rule of national law [ ], that war terminates all subsisting treaties between the belligerent Powers."

But again, on the other hand it appears, that subsequent to the war between Great Britain and Spain, and before the Florida treaty in 1819, to wit, on the 28th of August, 1814, additional articles to the treaty of Madrid were signed between these two Powers, the first of which follows:

"It is agreed that pending the negotiation of a new treaty of Commerce, Great Britain shall be admitted to trade with Spain, upon the same conditions as those which existed previously to 1796: all the treaties of Commerce which at the period subsisted between the two Nations, being hereby ratified and confirmed."

And upon this subject, Mr. Buchanan says:

"The first observation to be made upon this article is, that it is confined in terms to the trade with Spain, and does not embrace her colonies or remote territories."

At the time of the war in 1796 between Spain and Great Britain, the trade of the Oregon territory had been opened to G Britain, as had been by the Nootka Sound Convention, but had not been opened to other foreign nations. So in 1814, after the general peace of Europe was established, the trade of her other colonies and remote territories had not been opened up to foreign nations, and therefore in the treaty of Madrid it was further stipulated that "in the event of the Spanish American possessions being opened to foreign nations, his Catholic Majesty promises that Great Britain shall be admitted to trade with those possessions as a most favored nation." A very proper necessary provision, even if taken separate of the Oregon trade, and yet, Mr. Buchanan deduces it as an "irresistible inference," that Great Britain admitted that she had acquired no right under it to trade with the colonies or remote territories of Spain, where she obtained this stipulation – which is apparent to any clear mind is a far fetched and untenable deduction.

I have undertaken to show that the Nootka Sound Convention, embraced two distinct objects – the first was to regulate commerce between the subjects of these two powers in the Oregon territory; and the second, to secure the right to the subjects of each to make settlements: the latter part of which being permanent and enduring in its character, (while the first part is only temporary, and liable to alteration or destruction) is entitled to, as it must carry with it, much the greatest weight and importance.

Mr. Buchanan says, "The general rule of national law is, that war terminates all subsisting treaties between belligerent powers. Great Britain has maintained this rule to its utmost extent. Lord Bathurst in negotiating with Mr. Adams in 1815 says, 'that Great Britain knows of no exception to the rule that all treaties are put to an end by a subsequent war between the same parties.'" Perhaps (continuing Mr. Buchanan) the only exception to this rule – if such it may be styled – is that of a treaty recognising certain sovereign rights, and belonging to a nation which had previously existed, independently of any treaty engagements. These rights which the treaty did not create, but merely acknowledged, cannot be destroyed by war between the parties."

The first question to be determined, if the position of Mr Buchanan is correct, which I am not disposed at this time to dispute, is, whether the Nootka Sound Convention created rights on the part of Great Britain, or whether it acknowledged rights existing previously to the treaty; -- and this may be a question of much difficulty in determining: Certain it is, however, that Great Britain claimed it as a right to make settlements in Oregon prior to the Convention, founded on her real or supposed discoveries, regardless of the rights of Spain; precisely as we had done on the mouth of the Columbia river by Gray, and by the explorations of Lewis & Clark: othereise she would not have demanded and obtained indemnity from Spain for the injuries sustained by dispossessing Meares, one of her subjects; and equally certain it seems to be, that Spain recognised such rights; othereise whatever concessions she was disposed to make, she would not have acquiesced in the demand for indemnity, if no previous right was acknowledged to exist – and therefore it may be regarded not as creating, but as acknowledging rights previously existing – so that according to Mr. Buchanan’s own shewing, the war of 1796 did not and could not, destroy the sovereign rights of Great Britain. But I apprehend that whether these sovereign rights of Great Britain existed or not, prior to the Convention of 1790, they then being recognised and established, could not have been abrogated or annulled by the subsequent war of 96, except by consent or concession.

But hear Mr. Buchanan again: he finds it necessary to deny that the treaty of 1790 was a commercial treaty, for if it were, then it was revived by the treaty of Madrid in 1814, which declared the "all treaties of commerce which at that period, (1796) subsisted between the two nations, being hereby ratified and confirmed;" and he proceeds to say: "The "grant of making settlements," "whether understood in its broadest, or most restrictive sense relates to Sound, as between Great Britain and the U. S. (for the discovery of Perez has nothing to do with the pending claims.

In 1778, Captain Cook discovered Cape Flattery, the Southern entrance to the Straits of Fuca, also of Nootka Sound, for the discovery of Perez has nothing to do with the pending claims.

And yet this is the claim for the first time set up under our Spanish title to the whole of Oregon as “clear and unquestionable,” which is to justify a refusal on the part of our government to compromise the question, or to arbitrate it; but which, at the bidding of Mr. Polk, is to plunge us suddenly and rudely into war, with the most powerful adversary we could find on earth, and a nation between whom and ourselves, from every consideration that can present itself, to a reflecting and patriotic mind, the bonds of fellowship and good feeling should be ever held as indissolubly cemented.

What respect was paid by our government to this “clear and unquestionable” title of Spain, under which we now claim the whole of Oregon, may be inferred from the fact, that prior to the Treaty of Florida, we claimed, and now claim, under the discovery of Captain Gray, of the mouth of the Columbia River in 1789, and by virtue of the explorations of Lewis and Clarke, in 1805-6, a clear and undoubted right to all that portion of Oregon drained by the Columbia River and its tributaries, (which is most elaborately argued by Mr. Calhoun, in the earlier part of the negotiation) in despite of this now asserted “clear and unquestionable” title of Spain, which had been acknowledged for many centuries, by all European nations; and it may be further inferred by the treaty of 1818, between this Government and Great Britain, by which the two Governments, not being able to agree on a line of division between themselves, without consulting Spain on the matter, appropriated the entire Territory of Oregon to their own uses, and agreed to hold it in joint occupancy, which has been continued from that day to the present, 27 years, according to the terms of the treaty.

After the grounds upon which the American negotiator has mainly rested our claim, to wit: that derived from Spain, it might seem necessary to examine the claim founded on discovery and explorations yet upon a question of such magnitude as this, which is to involve issues of peace or war, not of our own people only, but perhaps of the world, the subject cannot be thoroughly canvassed and understood. And first, let us look to our own title, depending on discovery and exploration. According to Mr. Buchanan –

“Capt. Robert Gray, in June 1789, in the sloop Washington, (a private merchantman,) first explored the whole eastern coast of Queen Charlotte’s Island.

“In the autumn of the same year, Capt. John Kendrick, having, in the mean time, surrendered the command of the Columbia to Captain Gray, sailed the sloop Washington, entirely through the Straits of Fuca.

In 1791, Captain Gray returned to the North Pacific in the Columbia, and in the summer of that year examined many of the inlets and passages between the 55th and 56th degree of latitude.

On the 7th May, 1792, he discovered the entire Bullfinch’s harbor, where he remained at anchor for three days, trading with the Indians.

On the 11th of May, 1792, Captain Gray entered the mouth of the Columbia, and completed the discovery of that great river.

In the Years 1805-'6, Messers. Lewis and Clarke, under the commission from the Government of the U.S. explored the waters of the Columbia nearly from its headspring to the Pacific.

In 1811, John Jacob Astor, a merchant from New York, in a spirit of private enterprize, established a settlement on the South side of the mouth of the Columbia, called “Astoria,” which was captured during the war, to wit, on the 1st of December, 1813, by the British Sloop of War, Raccoon, but was again restored to the U.S. in 1818, under that provision of the treaty of Ghent which declared that “all territory, places, and possessions whatever, taken by either party from the other, during the war, &c., shall be restored without delay,” which the American negotiator regarded as an unqualified admonition on the part of Great Britain of our territorial rights, while he admits no such recognition on the part of Spain to Great Britain in the restoration of Nootka Sound, to Meares, and the payment of an indemnity for injuries sustained; and in this again, I think he exhibits a want of candor, and involves himself in an inconsistency that is only to be accounted for, in a gentleman of acknowledged ability, (for I have great personal respect for him,) by an overweening desire to shape his arguments to conform in the views of the President, and to sustain him rather than our just and legitimate claim. And this is the extent of our claim as presented by our Government through its negotiator, by virtue of discovery, exploration and settlement.

Let us see what is presented by the British Plenipotentiary as an offset to it, by virtue of discoveries, explorations and settlements by Great Britain, and it will be observed that up to this time, I have relied entirely upon the statements and admissions of Mr. Buchanan himself, quoting his own language whenever it was possible to do so, and in no part of his entire correspondence, in the conclusion of which he abruptly terminates the negotiation, does he deny the facts stated by Mr. Packenham, which follow:

“In 1778, Captain Cook discovered Cape Flattery, the Southern entrance to the Straits of Fuca, also of Nootka Sound, as between Great Britain and the U. S. (for the discovery of Perez has nothing to do with the pending claims.
"In 1787, Captain Berkley, a British subject, in a vessel under Austrian colors, discovered the Straits of Fuca.

In the same year, Captain Duncan, in the ship Princess Royall, entered the straits, and traded at the village of Classe [t].

In 1788, John Meares, a British subject, formed the establishment at Nootka, which as before stated, gave rise to the Nootka Convention, which terminated in the recognition by Spain of the right of Great Britain to MAKE SETTLEMENTS in the unoccupied parts of the northwest portion of the American Continent, {Oregon} and a stipulation to reinstate Meares in possession, and to pay an indemnity for injuries sustained.

"In 1792, Vancouver was sent by England to witness the fulfillment of the stipulation to restore possession of Nootka, and to survey the north west coast, which he performed by departing Nootka Sound, and entering the straits of Fuca, and after an accurate survey of the coasts and inlets on both sides, discovered a passage northwards into the Pacific by which he returned to Nootka, having thus circumnavigated the Island which now bears his name.

"While Vancouver was prosecuting discovery and exploration by sea, Sir Alexander McKenzie, a partner in the Northwest Company, crossed the Rocky Mountains, discovered the head waters of the river, since called Frazer's river, and following for some time the course of that river effected a passage to the sea – being the first civilized man to traversed the continent of America from sea to sea in these latitudes. On the return of McKenzie to Canada, the Northwest Company established trading posts in the country to the Westward of the Rocky Mountains.

"In 1806 and '11, respectively, the same Company established posts on the Tacoutche, Tepe and Columbia.

"In the year 1811, Thompson, the astronomer of the Northwest Company, discovered the western headwaters of the Columbia, and following its course till joined by the rivers previously discovered by Lewis and Clarke, he continued his journey to the Pacific.

"From that time till the year 1818, when the arrangement for joint occupancy of the territory was concluded, the Northwest Company continued to extend their operations throughout the Oregon Territory."

These are the claims, as respectively set forth, (chiefly in their own language,) by the American negotiator and the British plenipotentiary.

In the progress of the negotiation, a proposition was submitted by the British minister, to divide the territory, by running the 49th parallel of North latitude due west to the point where that parallel strikes the Northeasternmost branch of the Columbia river, with the free navigation of the said river to both parties, to make free to the United States, any ports which the United States might desire, either on the main land or on Vancouver's Island, north of latitude 49°, together with some separated territory on the Pacific.

This was declined on the part of the U. S. negotiator, and a proposition was submitted by him to divide the territory between the two countries, by the 49th parallel of North latitude, from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, making free to Great Britain any port or ports on Vancouver’s Island, south of the 49th degree, that the Government of Great Britain may desire.

This proposition was declined on the part of the British plenipotentiary, and another submitted by him in the following words –

"But considering on the one hand, the impatience which is manifested in the U. S. far a settlement of this question, and on the other, the length of time which it would probably be still required to effect a satisfactory settlement of this question, and on the other, the length of time which would probably be still required to effect a satisfactory adjustment of it, between the two Governments, it has occurred to her Majesty's Government, that under such circumstances, no more fair or honorable mode of settling the question could be adopted than that of arbitration. This proposition I am accordingly authorised to offer to the Government of the U. S. – which proposition was rejected; and to which the American Secretary of State replies as follows –

"The President instructs me to inform you, that while he unites with her Majesty's Government in desire to see the question settled as early as may be practicable, he cannot accede to the offer,"

The same offer is again repeated by the negotiator on the part of the U. S., which had been already declined, and it was again declined, with a request that the Government of the U. S. would, as it had neither acceded to the line proposed by Great Britain, or to the proposition to submit the question to arbitration, offer something "more consistent with fairness and equity, and with the reasonable expectations of the British Government. Whereupon Mr. Polk and Mr. Buchanan, make what may be called a "flare up” and withdraw the proposition already submitted, and substituted instead, a claim to the whole territory of Oregon, American, Spanish and British – up to the Russian Possessions, which are about the 54th degree 40 minutes of North latitude.

Now, I am neither disposed, nor prepared if I were disposed, to decide upon the relative claims of these two parties, as resting on discovery, exploration and settlement: it seems to me, to be a subject involved in much difficulty and
We copy the judicious and truly enlightened article which follows from the Charleston Mercury, a paper apart from the administration; yet it was the last submitted by Great Britain, and not having been withdrawn, has been always open for perpetualation of power to lie in the bottom of the whole proceeding.

The question more briefly stated, is simply this, Great Britain says to the U. S., “from 1790 I have held the Oregon territory in joint occupancy with Spain and the U. S., with my right to make settlements on any portion of the unoccupied territory recognised by Spain as far back as 1790, then the only claimant.

Whether under the Spanish authority, or by discovery, exploration and settlement, my claim is at least equal to yours; you are impatient to divide, and I am not disposed to quarrel with you about it – my object is to cultivate friendly relations with you.

I will propose to decide by such a line; no, says Mr. Polk, I can’t agree to that. Then says Great Britain, do you make me a proposition! Mr. Polk says, I will decide by such a line; Great Britain says no, I can’t agree to that – but as there seem to be a wide difference between us, and I am not disposed to take more than I am entitled to, and am unwilling to interrupt the harmony of the two nations, I will agree to submit the matter to arbitration of some third party, to be mutually agreed on between us. No, says Mr. Polk, I won’t do that either. Then what will you do? make some other proposition more equitable than the first. Why, says Mr. Polk now, I will withdraw my first proposition and claim the whole entire territory of Oregon, even that which has been admitted by this government as belonging to Great Britain, ever since the treaty of joint occupancy in 1818; for if Great Britain had no just claim or title to any part, it is impossible to conceive that the terms of joint occupancy would ever have been agreed upon – or that Mr. Polk would himself have offered any part to Great Britain in the course of this negotiation.*

Disguise it as you may by flourishes of the pen, “to this complexion it must come at last.”

Now I venture to make the unqualified assertion, that there is not one intelligent, honest, disinterested, patriotic man in this whole country, who, upon a full understanding of this much vexed, but greatly misunderstood question, who would, under existing circumstances, be disposed to pronounce our title “clear and unquestionable,” and to favor the desperadoes, the political jugglers, the ambitious aspirants, and the greedy office holders, in their clamors for “the whole of Oregon or none,” and in making war for what can never be accomplished by war, and what is not worth a quarrel even, if we could, but which if the matter had been left alone, would have naturally fallen into our possession by the settlement of the country by our own citizens – for, to use the language of Lord Castle[reagh] – we were acquiring possession of the country, while our people were asleep, and knew nothing about it.”

If the President is sustained in these novel and lofty pretensions, how is war to be averted? Does any body expect Great Britain to surrender the whole of Oregon to us, without a blow, when she uniformly rejected all propositions that have been submitted by us to give her less than half? No sane man does, I am sure! There is but one way by which war can be avoided – and that is, that Congress shall repudiate Mr. Polk and his musical instrument, the organ, in their ridiculous new born doctrines of “the whole of Oregon or none.” Will they do it? I fear not. I think not. Party bondage will prove too strong, and the welfare of the country and the honor of the nation will be sacrificed to the dictation of power. It is rumored, I know, that instructions to Mr. McLane were dispatched by steamer, preceding his message to Congress, authorizing him to compromise the matter; and that therefore, it is, he expresses the hope that the difficulty may yet be amicably adjusted. He can have no such hope, unless he has sent such instructions, and if he has, he has dishonored himself and his government, by playing the bull dog on this side of the water, and the spaniel on the other for what might be the position of the country in such an event?

Mr. Polk says to Congress, we are entitled to the whole of Oregon, and we must give the years notice required by the treaty of 1818, and at the expiration of that time we will take possession of it, and we cannot surrender it or any part, without dishonor and disgrace. Congress sustains him in his views – then comes the information, that Mr. McLane, by instructions from Mr. Polk, has compromised the matter by surrendering one-half.—We should subject ourselves to the contempt and ridicule of the world – and therefore I believe no such instructions can have been given, and of course I must conclude that war is inevitable; this is the fruit of the triumph of destructive locofocoism over conservative whiggery, and all brought about by two men. One a President for four years, and the other a public printer, holding the two most lucrative offices in the government, who may have vainly conceived that the [ the next two lines are unreadable] of honors and emoluments of office in their own heads. I believe a hoped for perpetuation of power to lie in the bottom of the whole proceeding.

*It is known that the proposition to arbitrate was made in the month of January last, during Mr. Tyler’s administration; yet it was the last submitted by Great Britain, and not having been withdrawn, has been always open to Mr. Polk.

the peculiarities of South Carolina politics, always enlightened, moderate and high principled. We will try to find place tomorrow for the important analysis of the supposed English ministerial views, to which the Mercury alludes. We should fain hope that the Mercury was the exponent of the views of Senators Calhoun and McDuffie, and that their influence in the Senate would be exerted to preserve the pacific relations of the country, a matter of no difficulty if it be sought in the right spirit—of no difficulty, even having regard in the first place, to the most punctilious scruples of national honor: But the Mercury has of late, exhibited an elevation of thought and superiority to mere partizan views as much as surpassing the South Carolina Senators, as those Senators outranked the Mercury in position.

The true difficulty in the way of a pacific and honorable adjustment of the Oregon question is the ambition of presidential aspirants, striving to carve political capital out of this and every other prominent question which comes before the country. It is the very curse of our institutions, and the cause which will finally lay them low, that ambitious men seize upon and appropriate to their own advancement, interest and measures which can only be wisely settled when approached in the most passionless and disinterested singleness of spirit. There is ever in this country a large party ready for war with England, with or without a justifiable pretense, from hereditary hatred alone: that party is now swelled by the population of our immense frontiers, Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific! Lake and Inland, who would look to war as the descent of a golden shower among them! The hundreds of millions that war with England will cost, will find its way into their pockets. War with them is mercantile speculation. Again, there are legions, idlers, loafers, who having nothing to lose, hope to gain something by turning the world upside down.

These constitute the elements, and the powerful elements, of the war party—powerful in numbers, powerful in energy. They form the nucleus of a strong Presidential party, which Mr. Cass observing, has stolen a march upon Buchanan Allen & Co., and placed himself at their head. Who doubts that in moving his resolutions, and aiming his speck, he was looking more at the Presidential year of 1848 than the defenses of the country?

As to the point of honor made by Mr. Cass, and alluded to by the Mercury, what can be more preposterous! We make three several offers to England which she rejects; we rejecting hers in turn) we then make a fourth offer less favorable to her the three preceding, and because she rejects that of necessity (having rejected more advantageous positions, as not sufficiently just to her) it becomes a point of honor that we should have all of Oregon, or appeal to arms! Could there be a greater absurdity, a more stupid definition of honor! Can they who insist upon it, really think as they say, and possibly conceive, that the honor of America requires them to be fools, and to run tilts at windmills? These gentlemen clearly did not study honor at the school of Bayard and Sir Philip Sidney, whose humanity and disinterestedness shone even more conspicuously than their valor and punctilio.

A distinguished gentleman of the city has a plan to suggest to Mr. Polk, for settling the difficulty with England, after the method sometimes observed in Heroic times, that is, by single combat between him and Prince Albert! A plan which we presume the courage of the Duck River colonel will eagerly embrace! But in advance of that plan, we express the confident opinion, that Massers. Webster and Rives, if negotiations were reopened, could settle all difficulties with British commissioners in five days, to the observance of the honor and the entire satisfaction of both nations: This however, is exactly what Presidential aspirants do not wish.

Friday December 30, 1845 RW45v22n15p1 Birtsh and Oregon

The Charleston Mercury says:

"We have copied from the N.Y. Courier and Enquirer an extended analysis of several leading articles in the London Times, which are suspected on very plausible ground, to have emanated from the British Cabinet. They possess therefore a peculiar interest. These articles show at once the danger to which peaceful relations are exposed, and the ease at which they might be preserved. The British government desires to compromise and settle the dispute—but it has determined to meet aggression with resistance.

On our side all is extreme. We give our opponent every advantage—we hasten to load ourselves with every prejudice—we [set] at defiance the opinion of the world—we mock our pretensions to be a peace-loving nation. After having occupied Oregon in common with England near thirty years, the President declares that it all belongs to us and Mr. Douglass in the House offers resolutions affirming the same and repelling the suggestion of arbitration. After having offered England an adjustment less favorable than we had three times offered before, Mr. Cass in the Senate makes it a point of honor that we should never recede an inch from that. Other Senators use language full of menace and insult to England. If we cannot recede from our offer without disgrace, neither can England from hers; and thus a case is made to grow out of the peaceable common occupancy of an obscure corner of the earth by two great nations, in which neither can step towards adjustment, without being dishonored! This is monstrous!"

Friday December 30, 1845 RW45v22n15p2 FRANCE AND THE U. STATES.

Our warlike President, impatient for combat, not contented with menacing England in his Message, also insulted France!
The Express says:

"It was a great error in Mr. Polk, when he was firing into the Court of St. James, to throw a shell into the Tuilleries. According to the French Courier of this city, whose Editor is fresh from France, and whose opportunities there fully qualify him to represent what is, or will be, public sentiment,—the Oregon correspondence between Messrs. Calhoun and Buchanan on one side, and Mr. Packenham on the other, will change a now inimical Public opinion in France into a friendly sentiment towards us. A certain M. de [Mofra] says the Editor, who visited Oregon, has published a one sided book in Paris, in favor of the British pretension, which, form its coolness and calmness of tone, and apparent good faith, had powerfully seized the public mind. This presupposition, however, the official correspondence will undoubtedly remove, while it will strengthen the claims of our countrymen in the eyes of the world. But, add the Editor, the Cabinet of Tuilleries will be deeply wounded and pained by the intrigues of Mr. Polk has [enraged] them with the affair of Texas, and other matters having reference to the balance of power. The French Ministry, we may add, have been pretty well abused by the opposition in France for having taken part with England against the United States, in the annexation of Texas, and the reproaches of our President’s Message will so be much fuel to the opposition flame, while we of the United States will suffer from having the Government in the hands of a party embittered against us by a [ ] interposition of ours in foreign politics.

It was unfortunate, therefore, that when Mr. Polk found that the United States was about to be fully occupied with England, he did not omit his reproaches of France, which, we will say, were certainly most ill timed."

Friday December 30, 1845 RW45v22n15p2 France and Oregon

And the N.Y. Courier & Enquirer:

"FRANCE—THE UNITED STATES—OREGON .

Many of our citizens (says the United States Gazette) have felt anxious to hear how France would receive the complaints of interference which Mr. Polk, in his late Message, made against her for interfering in the of Texas annexation. We have yet to hear from Mr. Guizot and his fellow laborers, but the editor of the Courier de Etats Unis, who has recently been with those statesmen, is of opinion that they will find cause to recriminate. The New York Courier translates the following:

"The French Government will be deeply wounded by the accusation of treason and intrigue (the word is there at full length) openly cast upon it from the Presidential Chair. And, let us say it, the French Cabinet will not be wounded without reason. Whether the policy it adopted on the Texan question were good or bad, it owes no account of it other than to its country and to its own conscience, and it belongs not to any foreign Government to constitute itself judge thereof. The accusation preferred by Mr. Polk against the policy of Mr. Guizot will so much the more irritate the latter, as it will be in the hands of the Opposition in France a sharp weapon; the Left of the Chamber will scourge unmercifully with it the policy of the Ministry. But Mr. Guizot is not a patient victim, and when he turns upon his adversaries his return blow usually leaves ine or more of them on the ground. We are much less deceived, or Mr. Polk will have his share in these vigorous reprisals."

Friday December 30, 1845 RW45v22n15p2 Oregon Negotiation

Reprinted from the Nat. Int. of Saturday:

THE OREGON NEGOTIATION.

The following appears in the New York “Morning News” of Wednesday last, which with other New York papers of the same date, reached us since our last publication;

"A report was in general circulation yesterday afternoon that a letter had been received in the city from a member of the Cabinet at Washington, by the afternoon’s mail, to the effect that a settlement of the Oregon boundary question had been concluded in London between the British Government and Mr. McLane on the basis of the 49th degree—the proposition coming from the former. We have not seen the letter in question, but have reason to believe the truth of this report as in the highest degree probable. We know the British Government is anxious for the speedy and amicable settlement of the question. We know too, that it was at a recent day ready to offer the 49th degree, before allowing matters to go to extremities. Nothing can be more likely than that, out of anxiety on their part, coupled with the fact that our Government having recently offered to accept the line of 49 degrees, has grown to a definite treaty between Lord Aberdeen and Mr. McLane."

Had this paragraph originated in almost any other paper, we should have passed it by as being a mere embodiment of the multitude of rumors from Washington which are constantly on the wing in the great commercial emporium. Nor do we now give faith to the rumor said to have gone to New York from this city of the actual "settlement of the Boundary Question" at London. But to the remarks of the "News" upon the rumor, we attach much consequence,
In the absence of proceedings of Congress the sober part of the public mind is deeply agitated by the foreign relations of the country, and the difficulties likely to grow out of the Oregon Question. The Executive, by his Message and through his official organ having been able to work his friends in Congress into something of a passion against the British Government, professes, it is said, an entire willingness to leave the subject to Congress. This would not have been a wiser conclusion if it were not accompanied by the fact that the President was known to hold and encourage the extremes of opinion upon this momentous question. There is, I fear, but little doubt that the majority in Congress will act in harmony with the President’s opinions, whatever they are, in reference to this vexed question. The House of Representatives are certain to do so, and the only hope in the Senate is grounded upon the hope that Mr. Calhoun and his immediate friends may have sufficient political independence to show more attachment to the interests of the country than the success of a party of which he and his friends are members. Upon all the questions that have been decided in Congress there has so much submission to caucus dictation that even this hope does not seem a very reasonable one. Mr. Benton and Mr. Bagby have assumed an independent position upon questions growing out of the choice of officers, but these are trifling matters compared with the grave questions which now agitate the country, and trifling compared with the disposition shown to sustain the Executive the determination to have an Executive organ of his own course.

All questions before Congress and the country sink into utter insignificance compared with that which at this moment threatens war with Great Britain. It seems certain from the letters received here by both the last steamer that Mr. Packenham received no rebuke from his Government in consequence of the attitude assumed by him in declining to accept the proposition submitted by the Secretary of State making the 49th degree of latitude the dividing boundary line between British and American possessions. It is equally certain that we are going on in defense of our extremest claim, and that and that any proposition thus far introduced by any friend of the Administration has aimed at the entire dispossessment of the British Government from the whole Northwest Territory. The most important of these bills is that submitted by the Committee on Territories in the House of Representatives and made the special order of the day for the first Tuesday in January. This bill makes the following important provisions:

1st. That the Boundary of Oregon be extended to the 54th degree 40 minutes of Northern latitude, the Eastern summit of the Rocky Mountains, and the West the Pacific Ocean including the islands adjacent to the coast.

2d. That the President be advised forthwith to give the one year’s notice provided for the Second article of the treaty of the 6th August, 1827, whereby joint possession is now held of the disputed territory; but that this act shall not be enforced in a manner to deprive any of the subjects of Great Britain of any of the rights and privileges secured by the Convention of 1827 until the one year’s notice shall have been given.

3d. That there shall be a complete territorial organization extended at [pace] over the whole of this disputed territory, and that the laws of Iowa shall be in full force as far as they may be applicable. Judicial Districts, Judges and Justices of the Peace, and all necessary ministerial officers, are also provided in the bill, with Superintendents of Indian affairs, Indian Agents and Sub Agents, and whatever civilian officers are necessary for the protection of the Government. A mail route is also established from the St. Joseph’s, Missouri, to the mouth of the Columbia.

4th. Blockhouses, stockades and military posts are authorized to be erected, and two regiments of mounted men to be raised, officered and equipped to serve in the country.

5th. Six hundred and forty acres of land are offered to every white male inhabitant of the territory of Oregon of the age of 18 and upwards, who may have gone there, or who may go within two years from the passage of the act, and who shall cultivate the same for five consecutive. Also to the wife and child of every emigrant and settler 160 acres—

Should this bill become law, and the Government attempt to enforce it, it will be regarded as equivalent to a declaration of war, and all hopes of negotiation end at once. The senate are moving more cautiously, and propose subjects of inquiry where the House propose immediate and positive action.

The whole question, regard it in whatever aspect it may be presented, is fraught with serious consequence to the country, and it will need all the forecaste, good sense, love of justice and of men, to keep the two Governments from engaging in collision, and even with all this it will be a miracle of the wisdom of wise men is not more than overbalance by the folly of fools.

The President having approved the Joint Resolution admitting Texas as a State into this Union, and dispatched the same by a special messenger, it is probable that two months will see Texas merging her identity as an independent nation into a single State of the Union, with representatives on the floor of Congress. California may follow, and Cuba is proposed, and Mexico with us is deemed a speedy probability. All this looks to one direction of the continent. Oregon is the absorbing question elsewhere, and some are ready at once to lay claim to every inch of country from Cape Breton to the Pacific. May Providence preserve us from the fate of those whose ambitions has proved the graves of nations and of men.

The President, to escape from the multitude of applicants pressing upon him for the vacancy upon the Bench of the Supreme Court, has at length nominated George W. Woodward for that high office. Mr. Woodward’s name was but little known among the candidates.

Friday December 30, 1845 RW45v22n15p2 Clay in New Orleans

Mr. Clay has arrived en route to New Orleans, where he goes on professional business. He expects to be absent during the winter and thinks of paying Cuba a visit! By the way, Cuba is now the winter resort of great numbers of pulmonary and other invalids from the U. States, and multitudes of Americans have fixed their abode there for life as merchants, planters, physicians, &c. It’s “annexation” will by these means, find it in a state measurably prepared for free institutions.

January

January 2, 1846: Who would suffer most in the event of War?
Who would suffer most in the event of War?

The New York Express of Saturday Says:

"The "ALBANY ARGUS" labors to prove that Great Britain will suffer sadly by a war with the United States as indicated by the fall of consuls in London, &c. &c.

There is no doubt that England would be a great sufferer, more so from a war with us than any other nation in the world, because our cruisers would do so much damage to her commerce,—but we would never strike her at home or she would strike us. We would never plant our feet on the soil of Britain. We would never shell into London, or bombard Liverpool or Bristol, or Edinburgh,—while New York, Charleston, Norfolk, Mobile, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago might suffer terribly from British guns.

But because England will these suffer, the Albany Argus reasons, England cannot be kicked into a war with the United States! Either ignorance of British character, or stupidity dictates such a conclusion as that. When was England ever known to hold back in a fight? When did England ever shrink from war, because of its consequences to property?—The People who plunged into a war with the French Empire, when not half as strong as they are now, count but little on consequences, where pride, passion and honor are concerned. England is the same stuff we are, always ready for a fight to redress a wrong, or to vindicate a right.

Again, it is argued England will not dodge war with the United States, because of the unpacified state of Ireland, because the potato crop has the rot there, and Mr. O'Conner threatens rebellion! The rot in the potato crop only makes it easier to enlist men of the best physique in Ireland for the British army. Ireland has been twice on the borders of a rebellion, when England was in a war with France, but she was kept under and kept in awe, as she is now. Since the days of Cromwell, there has been nothing that threatened to be a successful rebellion in Ireland. The leaders of the opposition in Ireland are spouters, the people have no arms. It is folly too to calculate on the sympathies of the Irish soldiers in the British army. The Irish soldier is only a machine. The admirable drill of the British officers convert them into so many six feet, or five feet men machines. They obey orders. Thinking is out of their line of duty.

The Argus with its usual profligacy attempts to turn a party point on this Oregon question: It strives to convert the Whigs into the enemies of their country, and the friends of England! We verily believe the politicians of the Albany Argus would sell their souls to the devil, as Tom Walker did, to keep in with the party in power. Spoils is all it breathes of, dreams of, feeds on, or thinks of."

COMMENT.

If the event of a war with England was to be determined by the relative extent of the suffering mutually inflicted, we should soon have to come to an ignominious peace.

Where can we strike England? Obviously, but in two places—in Canada and on the Ocean! We could and would overrun and conquer the two Canadas, possibly all of British North American possessions. Should we cripple England or impair her power by the conquest? Not at all. We should relieve her of what now hangs as a dead weight upon her, her North American Colonies. So far from paying any revenue into the British Exchequer, the Colonial Governments draw money from the Exchequer for their support.

There is, we believe, little doubt felt by England herself, that her North American Colonies are rather a burthen than a benefit, and it is known that a strong party in Great Britain would tomorrow be willing to compliment the Canadas. New Brunswick, &c. with independence—a boon which those Provinces are too wise to accept. Pride alone restrains England from taking the step. We should cut off her commerce with the St. Lawrence, and that would be the extent of the injury we could inflict in that quarter. The loss would be temporary and scarcely felt in England. England gained in the end commercially, by American independence, for she enjoyed the same advantages of trade without being encumbered with colonial expense and responsibility—and she would gain by cutting loose from the Canadas. She would retain the commerce, and rid herself of the expense of her military and civil establishments in those countries.

Again, we could strike at England on the Ocean—as in the war of 1812, capture a frigate in single combat, and by Privateers, cut up her commerce in every sea. But this game she would play too, and to the full as successfully as we. Her fleets would ride triumphant and irresistible in every sea. Her commerce is better protected than ours, by a superior navy, which is a match for all the naval forces in the world united. She has more men, ships and ports, and even at Privateering could overmatch us. We can indeed strike England on the Ocean, but not without having the blow fearfully repaid, and our Commerce destroyed. Like Van Tromp, her ships would sail with a broom at the mast-head, in token of having swept our trade from every sea!

Let us briefly glance at the other side of the picture. Where could England strike us? Or, rather, where could she not strike us? Our seaports and great cities are defenceless: She could and would bombard them, and exact millions to save them from destruction. The products of our looms and forges would remain in the warehouses, and England would resume the monopoly of supplying the countries where we have slowly rivalled or driven her from the field of competition. Our cotton, wheat, tobacco, rice, would rot in the barns, or be stowed away for an indefinite period. Oregon, the cause of war, would fall into her hands without the firing of a gun, for we have no force there, nor are
They are greatly deceived, in our opinion, who think England in a bad position to enter a war with us: On the contrary, she is in a most advantageous position. Her armies and navies could be recruited at libitum from a pauper population, eager to procure a subsistence which they cannot find at home. The supplanting of the Americans from all corners of the world, would impart a stimulus in trade and manufactures: Nor is there solidity in the idea, that we could starve England by withholding our cotton. She would not be more anxious to buy, than we to sell; and she would soon procure from neutral ports, the Cotton we now send to Liverpool: while we should be but too happy thus circuitously to dispose of that Staple.

In short, we have all to lose and nothing to gain by War.

RW46, January 2, 1846 v23n1p1 Oregon

When Mr. Webster, some weeks since, in his speech at [Fanebil] Hall, alluded to the difficulty to extending the laws of the Union over this territory, and expressed the opinion that it would be far better to leave the settlers to their own course, believing that an independent nation would soon spring up on the shores of the Pacific; we signified our hearty concurrence, calling, at the same time, attention to the fact, that we had advanced the very same views a week before, and that we had, at the time, believed them original with us. A friend assures us that neither we nor Mr. Webster are entitled to priority in this discovery. In the House of Representatives, during the last session, a debate having sprung up incidentally upon this question, Mr. E. Joy Morris, of Pennsylvania, a gentleman of a high order of intellect, enlarged and rendered liberal by assiduous cultivation, suggested that under any circumstances coming within the scope of his imagination, they thought the best disposition that could possibly be made of the territory, after it has been proven unquestionably ours, was to make a present of it to the actual settlers. These sentiments, according so exactly with all that the Whig Party has ever contended for, are justified by the actual relative condition of the two countries, Oregon and the United States, separated by two thousand miles of howling wilderness, or unexplored prairie—by the Spirit of the age, avers to all measures which may lead blindfolded to bloodshed—by justice and common sense. It is remarkable that a view, so striking, should not have attracted more attention at the time than it did; and we can only account for it by supposing that it was buried in the agitation consequent upon the Texas debate.

Mr. Morris is no longer a Member of Congress, having been defeated by the Native American candidate, Mr. Levin. It is singular, that John P. Kennedy, of Baltimore, and E. Joy Morris, of Philadelphia, both of them warm friends of the only measure embraced in the creed of Native Americanism, the latter having actually offered a resolution upon the subject of altering the Naturalization laws, should have been both defeated by the Native American Party! These facts should make the body of that party reflect seriously before they act again. That they are honest, we have no doubt; that their object is such as should be granted, we have just as little. But when we see them deliberately throwing overboard the very pilots who have stood by them in the midst of the storms, we cannot help suspecting that they have become the prey of the Demagogues in some shape or another. What do they want? A change in the Naturalization laws. What else? Nothing they say. Here are two men who represent them now, exactly of their way of thinking—men of talents both—men of energy and decision—ready to go the entire length of their creed—Why reject them? The conclusion is irresistibly forced upon the mind, that the party is held together, under false pretenses, by designing men for their own purposes. We call upon all Whigs who have allied themselves to it, for the sake of the name, to reflect upon these things; and further upon the undoubted fact, that while their organization renders, invariably, service to Locofocism, it never fails to advance the only party really opposed to any change in the Naturalization laws.

RW January 2, 1846 v23n1p1 THE PROSPECT OF WAR

THE PROSPECT OF WAR.

The Baltimore Patriot strongly inclines to the opinion that there will be no war, and that the controversy will be ultimately adjusted on the parallel of 49 degrees. This settlement it thinks, and we have no question correctly, would prove satisfactory generally. We have no doubt it would be so to the Atlantic States and to men of moderation every where.

The Patriot says:

"THE OREGON QUESTION.—The papers to the East of us have had, for several days, reports that the negotiation about Oregon had been resumed, and some letter writers went so far as to say that the question had been settled—the line of the 49th parallel having been fixed as the boundary, and some mutual equivalent and concessions having been made. We have reason to believe that these reports were premature, if they were not altogether unfounded, and that it is only since the arrival of Mr. Calhoun in Washington, that an adjustment of the question has seemed probable.

Our correspondent, in his letter published today, alludes to the fact that Mr. Calhoun has had a long interview with Mr. Packenham; and we learn from other sources that the result of the interview is a conviction, in which Mr. Polk shares, that there is no reason to apprehend that a war will grow out of the Oregon question—but that it will be settled amicably, and with proper regard to the rights, whatever they may be, of both nations.

We may say also, that public opinion here, and we believe every where, is decidedly in favor of the course pursued by the American negotiators in the matter, and that if the offer made by Mr. Polk, for the settlement on the basis of making the 49th parallel the boundary, be renewed or accepted by him, there will be no complaint, and no cause for it.

The aspect of things in Washington is, in every view, pacific; and, though we never shared in the apprehension that war was likely to come, we believe that it is now much more unlikely to ensue than two weeks ago.

But whilst we do not believe we are to have a war, we hold it not less the duty of the General Government to prepare for it, let it come when it may. The recent excitement has had this good effect, if no other in directing the attention of Congress to the exposed situation of the seaboard of the whole country, and especially to the defenceless position of all the considerable cities on the Atlantic. If war were now waged, there is nothing to prevent the occupation by the enemy of all our cities, or to ward off the destruction which a bombardment would bring upon them.

The wise admonition—in peace prepare for war—through so often repeated as to become trite, and never [gain said] though it be so old—has been lost upon the General Government, which,—though repeatedly involved in disputes with foreign powers, which threatened to disturb the peace between them,—has been content to leave these disputes settle without a rupture, leaving the country as the dispute found it, destitute on any adequate means to encounter the hostilities that were threatened, or it may come upon it hereafter;—and which experience teaches are often prevented by the very means taken to meet them.

The escape from a war now—if happily we shall entirely escape—we trust will cause Congress to have the whole country put in a situation to be successfully defended.—That speaking of our own city—which is the case of all the Atlantic cities,—the lives and property of our citizens will not be left, as they are now, open to any Naval force that may be brought against them, but that, be the erection of proper forts, and defences, we may be at least able to keep of or hold at bay, whatever enemy may be sent, hereafter, “to wake the city.”

We are gratified to know that the nearly defenseless situation of Baltimore has attracted the attention of the proper Committee of Congress, and our citizens will be glad to learn, that the visit made to this city on Saturday last the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, and the excursion to Soller's Point, to which we alluded on Saturday, will result in an earnest recommendation from that Committee in favor of the erection of proper forts. Of the success of the recommendation we will not permit ourselves to doubt, as such a doubt would be to question the disposition of the members of the Senate and House, to defend the city in case war should ever come.

In regard to the excursion to “Soller's Point,” we may say this much, that apart from the personal knowledge it gave to those whose official position required of them to thus seek information, the excursion was most a delightful one to all who took part in it, and from the good things said, to say nothing of the good things which were on the table, was time well spent and wisely enjoyed.”

We should be glad that our friends of the Patriot would afford some small hint where the money is to come to fortify the whole country! Does it think the amount of the British National Debt would accomplish it?

RW46, January 2, 1846 v23n1p1 Oregon question

Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29, 1845.

I know not precisely upon what authority, but nevertheless the opinion is gaining ground rapidly, that the Administration will, after all, consent to settle the Oregon question with England upon the basis of the 49th parallel; with some little hacking, by way of throwing dust in the people's eyes, about Vancouver's Island.

With this impression, it is stated that Hannegan’s resolutions were introduced in the Senate today, declaring that any surrender South of the parallel of 54° 40 would be an abandonment of the rights and honor of the United States. These resolutions are to be the test question, as I am informed upon sensible Locofoco authority, and if they are voted down or laid on the table or in any other way receive the go by, then a new party starts for the Presidency.
with the Governor Lewis Cass for its candidate, and Mr. Polk goes to the wall! Hannegan, as you know, is a friend of Mr. Cass!

Mr. Polk today sent into the Senate a large batch of appointments, which it required some thirty minutes to be read through, I learn that Marcus Morton, Collector of Boston, the Locofoco Abolitionist was among them. Unquestionably he will be rejected, if all of half of what his Locofoco brethren say of him to be true.

I am informed that at last it has been decided that Mr. Hagner, the Third Auditor, Mr. Pleasanton, the Fifth, and Mr. Edwards, Commissioner of Pensions, must walk the plank. It is confidently predicated that a grand display of dismissals is soon to take place!

Better Prospects for Peace

Better Prospects for Peace!

We congratulate the country on the improved prospect for the preservation of peace. It seems to be acknowledged generally, that the ground taken by Mr. Calhoun Tuesday, is decisive, and that Messrs. McDuffie, Haywood, Lewis, and probably others acting with him, the claim to all Oregon will not be insisted upon, the absurdity set up by Mr. Hennegan, that no foot of vacant territory can be alienated even for the adjustment of boundaries, scouted s it deserves to be, and the foundations laid for an honorable compromise on the 49th parallel of latitude, which in reality gives us nearly all the country worth having.

Mr. Calhoun's resolutions, which we heartily approve, and a succinct but satisfactory sketch of the debate may be seen in another column. He very adroitly represents Hannegan's movement as an attack on the Administration, but the latter retaliated severely in his reference to the “hot haste” of the “peculiar” friends of Texas!

CONGRESS

Tuesday Dec. 30, 1845.
In Senate

In the Senate at an early hour, the resolutions of Mr. Hannegan, declaring that a surrender of any portion of Oregon would be an abandonment of the honor and best interests of the United States, were taken up for consideration.

Mr. HANNEGAN moved that they be printed, and made the special order of the day for some day next week, but, at Mr. Archer’s suggestion, changed his motion so as to have made the order of the day for the third Monday in January.

Mr. CALHOUN rose to offer an amendment in the shape of a series of counter resolutions—declaring the power to make treaties to be voted in the President with the approbation of two thirds of the Senate—that the Administration did right in offering to settle the Oregon Question with England upon the basis of the 49th parallel—and that it would be no abandonment of the honor and best interest of the nation to settle that question upon that line of parallel. He supported his amendment, and stood by the course of the President on this subject vigorously. To pass the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Indiana, he said, would be to declare that the Oregon Question could not be settled by negotiation, to bring on war, and settle the question at the cannon’s mouth—to lose us, for the present, at least, the whole of Oregon—and to pronounce an implied censure for having offered the 49th parallel to Great Britain. Although he could not support the resolutions, but must oppose them, yet he was glad they were offered. They were direct, manly, and met the point boldly.

He pictured the horrors of war which might ensue from a false step in this delicate business, and said that, if war should come in this matter, he would stand by his country as firmly as any man, while he would hold those responsible for its devastating consequences, who, by rashness or imprudence, should bring it upon us.

The following was submitted by Mr. Calhoun.

Resolved, That the President of the United States has the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senate concur.

Resolved, That the power of making treaties embraces that of fixed and settled boundaries between the territories and possessions of the United States and those of other powers, in case of conflicting claims between them in reference to the same.
Resolved, That however clear their claims, in their opinion, to the country included between the parallels of 40 deg. and 54 deg. 40 min. North latitude, and extending from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, known as the territory of Oregon, there now exist, and have always existed, conflicting claims to the possession of the same between us and Great Britain—the adjustment of which has been the subject of negotiation between the respective Governments.

Resolved, That the President of the U.S. has rightfully the power under the Constitution, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the same concur, to adjust by treaty the claims of the two Governments to the said territory, by fixing a boundary for their present possessions.

Resolved, That the President of the U.S., in renewing the offer in the spirit of peace and compromise to establish the 49th degree of North latitude as a line between the two countries to the said territory, did not abandon the honor, character, or the best interests of the American people, or exceed the powers vested in him by the Constitution to make treaties.

Mr. HANNEGAN followed. He did not intend any censure upon the administration for having offered the 49th parallel. The contemptuous rejection of that offer had changed the whole aspect of the case, and it would now be an abandonment of our honor and best interests to settle the question upon that basis, and thus surrender a large portion of soil clearly ours. While we would not censure the President, he was not so bound down to power, but that he could stand up and oppose any measure of the President which he felt was not right. He claimed to be an independent man, as well as the President, and had as good a right to express his sentiments as the President had to communicate his. If war were to come—and he hoped it would not, if it could be avoided with honor—he desired that it might never be settled except at the cannon's mouth, and upon our own terms. He could not help referring to the different treatment meted to this of Oregon and that of Texas by the peculiar friends of the latter. Both questions were born and cradled in the Baltimore Convention, and the democracy of the whole country solemnly agreed to stand by both alike. But the friends of Texas were in hot haste to get that question settled and into the Union, while they were strangling Oregon in the cradle! There were conflicting claims on the subject of the western boundary of Texas, as much so as in regard to the northern boundary of our part of Oregon.

But when those who presumed to know something about the history of the country (Col. Benton was probable to allude to) told the Senate that we ought to stop on the banks of the Nueces and ascertain whether we were right before we should go further, their counsels were unheeded, and there was no pacifying gentlemen until the war horse of the United States was prancing on the banks of the Rio del Norte. Nothing would do short of an armed occupation of the country between these two rivers. In that matter we had only weak Mexico to offend; but now that we have England for an opponent, gentlemen are anxious to prevent hostilities.

Mr. CALHOUN rejoined and explained his course both on the Texas and the Oregon question. He reiterated the sentiments that he had before advanced.

M. HAYWOOD rose as a pacificator—thought the discussion was premature, and rather out of place—and moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. J.M. CLAYTON followed in support of the motion. He thought the Senate ought not to commit itself in advance of the subject.

Mr. ARCHER supported the motion—thanked Mr. Calhoun for the high and honorable position he had assumed—and congratulated the country that new glad tidings would be wafted on the wings of peace to the four quarters of the globe.

Mr. ALLEN spoke on the subject, in his usual style—He supported Mr. Hannegan’s resolutions, and deprecated war-panics, got up to frighten the feeble-minded persons from maintaining the just rights of the nation! The commercial interest were ready to parade the cost of war in grim array before the people, when a question like this came up—as if dollars and cents were to be weighed against the honor of the country.

Mr. CALHOUN, again addressed the Senate, in justification of the course he had marked out for himself on the question. He was followed by

Mr. HAYWOOD, who advocated the medium ground, first reviewing and opposing the position of the Senator from Indiana, and then reviewing and not agreeing with the position of the Senator from South Carolina. They were both wrong, and it would be wrong for the Senate to adopt the resolutions of either, until the jurisdiction of the Oregon question should pass into its hands from those of the Executive. He thought after all, there would be lees to fear from war with Great Britain than from a war of politicians on that floor! He begged Senators to give the Administration two moons for a fair trial, and not attempt in a single month after the assembling of Congress, to break it down by getting up an octagon party in that Chamber. After he had concluded—

MR HANNEGAN once more took the floor in support of the position he has assumed, and in reply to the gentleman from N. Carolina. He maintained that the President had yielded up the jurisdiction question, and announced in his message, to the whole world, that the negotiation had terminated, and was at an end. He asked the gentleman from N. Carolina how, if the negotiation had not terminated, he would defend the President saying it had, in his message? He concluded by declaring himself against any unjust, dishonest and cowardly surrender of our territory, by a settlement of the question upon the 49th parallel.

He then modified his motion, so as to have both sets of resolutions laid on the table, with the understanding that they be taken up with the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the same subject, when the latter shall be presented to the Senate for its adoption.

Mr. BENTON said emphatically the he would vote for the motion without the qualification.—So the whole subject was laid on the table, and soon after the Senate adjourned.

RW46, January 6, 1846 v23n2p1 REMARKS OF MR. ADAMS

REMARKS OF MR. ADAMS

Mr. J.Q. ADAMS rose to address the House. He said that he ought perhaps to commence with an apology to the House for addressing it at all on this question. The state of his health was such to render it impossible for him to appear at all on the many important questions [ . . . ] with this subject, and whatever observations he might feel it his duty to make upon it, must necessarily be brief. His physical power would not enable him to go at any length into the question.

The question now immediately before the House he understood to be, whether the bill making provision for raising two regiments of riflemen should be made a special order for the first Tuesday in January.

The SPEAKER said that this constituted one part of the question, but was not debatable. The other part of the question was on referring this bill to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that question was open to debate.

Mr. ADAMS said that he asked, then, that the question might be divided, and might first be put on the reference, because he presumed the there was no diversity of opinion on that point; if there was, it would change the whole state of the debate.

Mr. HOUSTON, of Alabama, said, in explanation, that it was not the reference of the bill he said he had objected to, but its being made a special order.

The SPEAKER further declared that the first branch of the question, viz. the reference of the bill could be decided by a majority, but that to make it a special order would require a vote of two thirds.

Mr. ADAMS said that, if the House should refuse the references he should have nothing further to say.

The SPEAKER said that the first question would be on the reference of the bill, and that question was debatable.

Mr. ADAMS then asked if he was at liberty to debate the question whether this bill should be made the special order Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER replied that he could not, but that the question of reference might be debated.

Well then, (said Mr. ADAMS,) I will, at risk of being arrested for irrelevancy, (which seems of late a favorite mode of preventing discussion,) speak in reality and in substance to the question of making the bill a special order—while in form, my remarks will be on the question of reference.

This measure now proposed to be referred is one, which, for a variety of reasons, is as important as any question which has hitherto come, or will hereafter come, before this House for discussion. It is difficult to speak on one of the bills relating to this subject without a reference to all others. For example: this is a bill to raise two regiments of riflemen. Now, I find there has been reported in another part of this building a bill providing for one regiment of mounted riflemen. The question then presents itself to me—how are these two bills to go together? If but one regiment only of mounted riflemen is necessary to be maintained, then it does not follow that two regiments of unmounted riflemen are needed: the bill depends in a measure upon the other. I refer to this merely as an illustration [the rest of the paragraph is illegible].

I do not see any testimonials of the probability of a war at this time; but, if any danger is apprehended by any gentlemen here, it appears to me that the very first measures to be taken—that should precede all military measures of any kind—is to give notice to Great Britain that we mean to terminate the existing treaty of joint occupancy of Oregon. That is the first measure to be taken. How can gentlemen apprehend war otherwise? Does Great Britain tell us that she shall take offence at the continuance of the treaty of Joint Occupancy? She does not, though I have heard of some question being made in England, whether they shall not give us notice of the termination of the treaty of joint occupancy. Yet it is not a joint occupation, and I have been surprised at the language held by some gentlemen on the subject. The treaty acknowledges no occupation of the territory by either party; it is a commercial convention for free navigation, but does not admit by either party the occupation of one inch of territory by the other. It is no occupation. But, whatever it is, neither party can permanently occupy the country without notice to the other to terminate the convention of commerce and trade, which would not be permitted without such convention. It is not a treaty of joint occupation; it is a treaty for the exercise of navigation rights, commercial rights, and trading rights with the Indians. It precludes the occupation of the country by either party. Exclusive occupation cannot be assumed by either party without notice. Of all these measures for occupancy and for assuming jurisdiction over citizens to of the U. S., who may have gone to Oregon, and there in actual possession, notice id the first thing. Twelve months after that notice shall have been given, the right will accrue to the U. States to occupy any part of the territory they may think proper.

In a bill which passed at the last session I myself moved, as a first section to the bill, that such notice should be given. The House did not think proper to agree to it. And passed the bill without any notice.

Mr. C. J. INGERSOLL. No; It was put into the bill at the last moment.

Mr. ADAMS. But the bill did not pass the Senate, and so the insertion was immaterial. But it is a material fact to me, because I proposed it as constituting the first section of the bill. I declared myself ready then; and I am ready now, to give such notice. (Great sensation.) I hope it will be given, and that we shall do it as the first measure to be taken —to be followed afterwards by a real occupation of the whole territory. (Great sensation in the House and an incipient clap, which however, was promptly arrested by the Speaker, who called loudly to order.) But it is indispensable that we shall give notice.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Douglas) says that it appears to him there is a game playing here—a remark which is quite incomprehensible to me. I shall not inquire what the gentleman alluded. But I confess I was very much surprised to hear that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will not report to the House such notice.

Mr. C. J. INGERSOLL. I know of no member of that committee who has said so.

Mr. ADAMS resumed. I have heard it from various quarters; and if the report is delayed much linger I shall believe it.
(A laugh.) If it is so, I shall deplore it; I shall deeply regret if a majority of that committee shall not be ready to give notice. All the other measures must depend on that. While we are taking about regiments of riflemen and regiments of infantry, and stockade forts and sappers miners, and pontoniers, Great Britain is assembling steam vessels, equipping her frigates and line-of-battle ships, and sending troops over here to be ready. I would press a resolution giving notice this day if I hoped that a majority of the House could be obtained to effect the measure.

Mr. WENTWORTH here moved that the rules be suspended to afford the opportunity for such a motion; but the motion was pronounced out of order.

Mr. ADAMS resumed. I fell myself scarcely authorized to hope that I should be successful should I make the motion.
But for this I would have moved it on the first day of the session. Because I have so profound a sense of duty of adhering to treaties, I feel debarrd from the least act of hostility, or even from meeting hostility manifested elsewhere, till notice shall have been given. While our convention remains, I will vote no increase of the army or navy, no fort or stockade, no riflemen, no infantry, no sappers, no miners. All must depend on that. If this bill shall be made the special order for Tuesday, I hope it will be arranged by the gentlemen who manage the business of this House, that the question of giving notice shall come up on the same day, and shall be taken up before anything else.
It is mere wasting of time, and whistling in the wind, to talk about raising a military force until our conscience is clear from the obligation of the convention.

And it does not follow that if we give notice, there must of necessity be war; nor does it even follow the we shall then take possession. It will only be saying to Great Britain: After negotiating twenty years about this matter we do not chose to negotiate any longer; we shall take possession of what is our own; and then, if to settle the question what is our own, you wish to negotiate, we will negotiate as long as you please. We may negotiate after we take possession. (Much laughter.) That is the military way of doing business. (Increased merriment.) When the great Frederick came to the throne of Prussia, his father had prepared and equipped for him and army of an hundred thousand men. Meeting, shortly after, the Austrian Minister, the latter said to him: “Your father has given you a great army; but our troops have seen the woolf: yours have not,” “Well, well,” said Frederick. “I will give them an opportunity to see the woolf.” Frederick then added in his memoir: “I had some excellent old pretensions to an Austrian province which some of my ancestors had owned one or two hundred years before, and I sent an ambassador to the Court if Vienna stating my claim, and presenting a full exposition of my right to the province. The same day my ambassador was received in Vienna I entered Silesia with my army.” (A laugh.) So you see that, on the very day his army entered Silesia, he gave notice to the Court of Vienna that the convention of joint occupation of Silesia was ended. (Loud and prolonged laughter.)

I say, therefore, that I hope the first measure adopted by Congress will be to give the most solemn manner, the notice to Britain that the treaty requires; then the coast will be clear for us to do as we please. It does not, I repeat, does not follow as a necessary consequence that, because we gave this notice, we must take possession, though it is my hope that we shall. It is not necessarily draw after it a war; and if Great Britain chooses to take such notice as an act of hostility on our part, and forthwith commence hostilities on hers, we have told been told that we may all be of one party, and God Almighty grant that we may be so! If it shall be so, the war will have less of those extraordinary terrors which my friend fro South Carolina (Mr. Holmes) has now discovered, notwithstanding the extreme military propensities which manifested on this floor last year.
The gentleman was a most valiant man when Texas was in question. But I shall draw no comparisons as to what we witnessed then and what we see now; but this I will say, that I hope, if war shall come—which [. . . ] forbid, and of which I [entertain] no fears at all—the whole country will have [. . . ] one heart, and one united hand. And of this I am very sure, that in that case Great Britain will no longer occupy Oregon, or any thing [. . . ] north of the Canada line. (Great sensation, and incipient indications of applause.) But if you will serve to give notice, strong as is my horror of war, and of all military establishments, if there should then be the breath of life in me, I hope I [rest of sentence is illegible]. But, till notice is given, I am not prepared to vote any preliminary measures of a military kind. I suppose, however, that we may, without giving notice, extend our laws and our protection to our brethren who have settled at least in that part of Oregon which is not claimed by Great Britain; but there can be no need of increasing our army and our navy in order to do that. I hope that such an act will not be effective to Great Britain, and that she will not think of going to war about it.

But if we are going to take actual occupation of the country, then some additional force will be needed to our army, and in that case, however, unwilling I have ever been to increase our military establishment, I think I should get over my difficulties, especially if a disposition should be manifested by Great Britain to take offence at the measure I have just mentioned. All our military preparation must depend on notice to Great Britain; we must not have our hands and feet bound; the obligations of joint occupancy must be dissolved, and we left free to her according as the interests of our country require.

I believe it will not be necessary for me to refer to any other part of this subject. There have been, as I understand, two applications made to the House by fellow citizens of ours settled beyond the Rocky Mountains, for the protection of the Government. The Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs (Mr. C.J. Ingersoll) presented, as I think, one memorial, while another from a different, [sic] quarter is also before the Territorial Committee—possibly it is a copy of the same.

Mr. C. J. INGERSOLL. No; they are different memorials, from different persons.

Mr. ADAMS. I think it is time this House should consider what are our duties to our countrymen there. I confess that I know them very imperfectly. I have of course seen the reports of Lieutenants Wilkes and Fremont; they contain valuable information; but that sort of information which we now want it was not the object of those expeditions to obtain. I am in favor of protecting these persons as far as we can.

I believe I have said all that is at present necessary. I have said perhaps more than I should, and certainly more than I intended; I am not able to go further. The most important point I wished to state is, that to give notice should be our first measure. Then let us protect our emigrating citizens, and our own frontier, by stockade forts and such an increase of our military establishment as may be necessary; but I am against all other measures unless that is done first.

Mr. FARAN of Ohio, moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering a resolution which he held in his hand, but the House, without hearing it read, immediately adjourned.

RW46, January 6, 1846 v23n2p1 PEACE FEELING IN THE SENATE

PEACE FEELING IN THE SENATE

The correspondent of the Courier & Enquirer expresses the opinion the "the Benton and Wright Senators" will cooperate in resisting all violent and aggressive measures respecting Oregon—that the year’s notice will not be given, unless provoked by England—and in short that Polk, his Organ, and the Illinois Democracy will be baffled in their bellicose purpose.

[TCS]

RW46, January 6, 1846 v23n2p1 BRITISH PREPARATIONS FOR WAR AND DEFENCE

BRITISH PREPARATIONS FOR WAR AND DEFENCE.

The correspondent of the National Intelligencer, is clearly right to the opinion that the immense defense preparations of England, are not made from any apprehensions of an American war, since an invasion form this country would be as little feared by her as dreamt by us. They have reference of course to a possible rupture with France, at the death of Louis Phillippe, and the facility with which the Island may be invaded from the introduction of steam. Had it been discovered and in use at the time as now, neither Hoche in 1798 would have baffled in landing in Ireland, nor Bonaparte in England in 1804. they had but to have waited for a storm to blow the British fleet off the coast, to put to sea in steamers and land before the fleet could have re-assembled. It is no longer possible by sail vessel to hinder French invasion, and hence these gigantic preparations for coast defense.
The immense preparations that are making in England, both for attack and defence, on land and water, have attracted the attention of the civilized world, but especially France and the United States. That these active movements and warlike arrangements on the part of Great Britain were not produced by the position of the public affairs of that country and this, must be evident to the most superficial observer. She had no cause to apprehend an invasion by the Americans, and consequently, there was no necessity to guard against such an event. Her coast, defences, therefore, must be intended to meet contingencies that may or may not hereafter arise.

But when we review the vast steam navy that she has created and is creating—the expensive arrangements that she has entered into for the transportation of her mails, by steamers built purposely to be converted, if necessary, into vessels of war, and then take into consideration the large deposits of coal which she has caused to be made on our coasts and in our vicinity, it is impossible to resist the impression that these movements have a beating upon the unfriendly position which the two Governments occupy in relation to each other. True, these movements on the part of Great Britain are only precautionary, and of themselves are no cause of national offence. But it will be perceived that it places her in a position, in case if war, to strike a blow most disastrous to our commerce, and for a period destructive to our revenue rising from imposts and tonnage."

We propose to devote a few moments this morning to another consideration of the vexed question, pregnant with the fate of empires. We would fain hope, that the lust of dominion has not so warped the judgment of our people, that they will turn a deaf ear to the voice of calmness and reason, which admonishes us that war is the greatest calamity which can befall our land, and that Peace alone can fulfill the bright destiny assigned us. We will not emulate the sickening patriotism so forward to sound the charge, but so backward in the hour of battle—nor those political incendiaries, who, like Danton and Robespierre, rouse the worst passions of the breast that they may rise upon the ruin of all that is great and virtuous. We dare to say that our country is in a false position on the Oregon question. And that the interests of our great republic should not be sacrificed to the dictates of a rump convention and the political schemes of a heartless faction. There are occasions enough, Heaven knows, when war is unavoidable. Such were our wars with England. There was Independence to gain and honor to preserve. But let us assure those timid Statesmen, who are too sensitive as to their course in the last contest with Great Britain, that this is a far different issue. If calamity befalls us now, it will spring from an unholy lust for Dominion—if war come, it will be at our own beckoning, and the distress and devastation of our country will be the proofs of our own folly and madness.

How stands the case! We find ourselves on the brink of a disastrous war, to be commenced in folly, and whose end no tongue can tell. With a country the most fertile under the sun, teeming with everything nature can give, or art invent, with hundreds of millions of unoccupied territory, we are to join in deadly conflict for the doubtful sovereignty of a hundred and eighty miles of inhospitable sea coast. For this, our towns must be burnt, our commerce swept from the ocean, our Union endangered, and our country thrown back fifty years in the great march of civilization and improvement. All this must be done at the bidding, and to satisfy the behests of our party. Which under the suspicious guise of Democracy, would soon reduce us to that wild and reckless mob, which acknowledges only the argument of the cannon, and the logic of the sword. Are we so drunk with prosperity, that in the humor of the Donnybrook Fair, we must [ . . . ] trail our coast upon the ground, and solicit a fight? Are we so lacking in manly independence, that we must stand by the vaporings of a President so newly in his seat, that he [ . . . ] not yet assumed the dignity appertaining to his office? Are we so regardless of those who preceeded, and those who are to come after us, as by us unneccessary and unrighteous war, to cripple the energies, and to paralyze the resources of a country which, but for ourselves, would be the brightest portion of the earth? With what spirit can we go into battle when the fearful conviction presses itself upon us, that we ourselves have closed the door of hope, and extinguished the last chance of reconciliation? And what is the state of our defences? Was there ever such excess of folly as to invite war when the whole of our seaboard lies unprotected, and our small navy is scattered in every ocean? Is this culpable negligence, or are we to hope the "Polk" now building will be as great in war, as its namesake in speech, and settle and establish our "clear and unquestionable right" with a few swivels? Or are we to hope, that General Cass. With his homilies on the Right of Search, will scatter our enemies as by the Riot Act? Or shall we trust to the potent arm of the "Union," (that of Washington,) and as John Randolph said, "enter the war against ships of the line; with a sixpenny pamphlet.?”

But for the magnitude of interests involved, we might laugh at the bungling diplomacy of an administration which supports its side by hostile and antagonistic claims—which seeks to establish our right to Oregon by discovery, and the next breath gives all the credit thereof to another country, and shows its desire for a compromise and peace, and its deference to predecessors by offering worse terms than had been refused. How fit a conclusion to all this folly is the withdrawal of the proposition and the assertion of a claim to the whole territory in dispute. But we turn from this Bobadil with disgust. We appeal to the people themselves and their representatives in Congress assembled. We ask the latter to pause before they carry out the measures which must inevitably bring woe to their country. Let them not suffer themselves to the hurried away by a mock enthusiasm, or a dread of the people. We can tell them that the nation does not wish war, nor will it fall in time to inflict the heaviest vengeance upon the heads of its authors. Let them forget themselves and look singly to the welfare of their country. Let them speak in a voice not to be misunderstood, and all may yet be well. There is no need to close the negotiation. Examine the earlier parts of the correspondence, and it will be seen that but for the unhappy intervention of Mr. Polk and his Secretary of State, there was every prospect of an amicable adjustment. Mr. Calhoun, in his principal letter, the most masterly production of his mind, proves our best right to the region drained by the Columbia, postpones to a subsequent period the assertion of our right to the country north of the 49th parallel. To this claim of the valley of the Columbia, the British minister returns but a feeble reply, and confines his principal argument to the subject of Great Britain’s claim to Vancouver Island. Had negotiation been conducted in the spirit in which it was commenced, we have no doubt that a compromise could thus have been effected, viz: that the United States should extend their line to the 49th degree of north latitude, and then taking the middle channel of the straits of Fuca, leave Vancouver’s Island as and equivalent for the territory surrendered by England above the mouth of the Columbia river.

This would give t each all that it desired, good harbors and naval stations. England has never cared for Oregon except for the Fur Trade, and, as the animals which yield the fur gradually disappear before the increasing population, she will value her possessions there less and less. If this proposition be not acceptable let our Representative urge the arbitration of this question. Let us not lose the consolation that we have used every honourable means to avert the calamity of war. It has been urged that we should not have justice form any monarch of Europe in case of arbitration. But are monarchs the only umpires? Are Wisdom and Justice only to be found beneath a crown? Have not the two countries sufficient confidence in the integrity of their own citizens to entrust it to a commission appointed equally by such government? Or if this be objected to, let it be referred to some crowned head, with the distinct understanding that any departure from the forty-ninth degree by the umpire shall be surrendered by the party receiving the award, and thus generously terminate a dispute, which should never for a moment have disturbed the friendly relations of two great nations.

Above all, let us have calmness and moderation. With these, we may have peace and Oregon. Without them we shall have war, disaster and defeat. Blessed will be his position who aids the peaceful conclusion of this subject—whilst upon him, through whose agency a different result is effected, will fall deservedly, the curses of a blighted country.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p1 OREGON DEBATE IN THE HOUSE

THE OREGON DEBATE IN THE HOUSE

Saturday, the Debate commenced Friday upon the proposition of the Military Committee through Mr. Haralson, to raise two Regiments of Riflemen, was continued by Messers. C.J. Ingersoll, Haralson, Darragh, King of N. York, Winthrop of Mass., Owen of Indiana, and Barker of Illinois—Mr. Cabell, of Florida, got the floor Monday.

There was little in this debate but what we uniformly find in all American Debates, much clamorous profession and loud vaunting—much Demagogism, much pretended courage, and much real fear of the People.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p1 MR. ADAMS POSITION

MR. ADAMS POSITION.

The position assumed by this venerable and most eminent, most conscientious and illustrious citizen, to whom is familiar the learning of the ancient and modern world, of all mankind indeed, of all ages, countries and races, is a most melancholy commentary upon human nature, its certain decay under the load of years, (notwithstanding the strictest temperance, and daily ablutions in the Potomac!) its weakness and imperfections. We individually, grieve to see this man, who is worthy in knowledge to have been called by Solomon into consultation, and to have given him sage advice, subject himself to the suspicion of friends, and to the more significant condemnation of Loco Foco plaudits! There must be a screw loose somewhere, or, fast and attached friends could not be universally amazed and disgusted, and the most implacable enemies, rejoiced and delighted! We remember the fate of Gil Blas with the Archbishop, and shall say nothing upon a subject of extremest delicacy at all time and with all men; yet we should be glad if great men would be great here too, as well as in other matters.

Than Mr. Adams’ approbation of the war measures of the Executive, nothing is felt by the general community, to be more unworthy of his grey hairs, and christian professions; than his course of argument in support of that view, nothing is regarded as more contradictory, sophistical and weak!

His cardinal policy is to give the year’s notice to England! Why! Aye WHY! What public necessity demands, or what good is to come from it? He says to preserve (an admirable object) the faith of treaties! But does the treaty of 1818 or 1827, require us to give the notice now? When we are resolved to take all Oregon, the notice may be right: But is the nation so resolved? Are the American People prepared to say that all Oregon belongs of right to us? In no other conceivable state of things can the notice be expedient or necessary.
Mr. Adams claims all Oregon, and looks to war as the consequence of the claim. He knows that England will never relinquish her rights, whether they be real or pretended, and that war must infallibly ensue from our giving her notice, and at its expiration, proceeding to take possession: What does he propose to do, while the year’s notice is running? To prepare for war? To equip soldiers, build navies, and construct fortifications? No! We must do none of these things! He quotes with approbation, the conduct of the great Frederick, in taking possession of Silesia under exactly different councils from those he recommends—but he will have us, in respect of treaties, not build a ship, or arm a man, until the 365 days have elapsed, when undoubtedly a war, British war, the most formidable war in the world, will be poured upon us, on Atlantic and Gulf, Lakes and Pacific! He would throw away the whole year of notice—the only time for preparation we have—and let England, in ulatumque paptus, catch us then, as we should now, completely defenseless and unprepared!

For ourselves, we cannot understand this sort of logic, national faith, or common sense. The notice, if it effects any thing, will bring war, and the it has to run, is the only time left us for PREPARATION.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p1 State of parties

State of parties in the Senate

Upon the state of [ . . . ] in the Senate, everything depends—whether a wanton and ruinous war shall be waged—to the entire prostration of the Southern and planting states—to the disgrace of Christendom, and the outrage of humanity—or whether Peace shall be preserved and continued. Mr. Calhoun has deserved nobly of his country, and has acquired golden opinions: We wish him "God Speed" in efforts which we did not expect from him—efforts which in their philanthropic tendency ought to make those who profess so much christian spirit, blush for the homicide spirit which actuates them with one foot in the grace.

We hope and believe that Mr. Calhoun will be sustained by all the Atlantic States: As for war we fear it as little as another: But war for so slight and absurd a cause! War with ENGLAND, the head of civilization, of christianity and Protestantism! Bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh! The devastation of countries, the expenditure of unknown millions, the slaughter of tens of thousands, the destruction of prosperity—and for what? Let the people ask for themselves FOR WHAT? Why not make a President, or to facilitate the plunder of the Treasury! As for Oregon, we must infallibly obtain it by Peace, and as infallibly lose it by War!

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p1 Response to Adam's speech

A letter in the Courier and Enquirer says:

DEAR SIR:—Mr. Adam's speech today will no doubt produce much speculation and alarm, but I have what I deem good reason to believe that Southern Senators are unanimous for an adjustment of the Oregon question by the 49th degree, if a treaty be made, and that Mr. Calhoun will be sustained in resisting the notice so you may be confidant that we are to have no war.

We have a rumor that Col. Benton, who has heretofore refused to indicate his course, has declared in favor of the notice and for the "whole of Oregon," and some suppose that he will take the Senators from Arkansas, Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Maine as well as Michigan; but without knowing what the other Senators will do, I have the best reason to feel assured that Mr. Cameron of Pennsylvania and Mr. Turney of Tennessee will go with Mr. Calhoun.

It is proper, however, that the press should speak out and sustain those who are for peace."

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p1 Proceedings of Congress

Proceedings of Congress on Tuesday.

The Oregon debate in the House of Representatives, more that any other and all other questions combined, attracts the public attention, and we therefore make an effort to present the proceedings of Tuesday, including the resolutions of Mr. McConnell of Alabama.

These resolutions are we presume, a burlesque upon the arrogance of American pretensions: But, we are free to confess that we think them rather serious joking! Inflated by prosperity—puffed up by vain glory—we believe that with the immense body of the ignorant who all have votes, and who pretty much rule the roast—such ideas exist in reality, as Mr. McConnell has advanced possibly in jest.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p1 England and the United States

England and the United States!

These two countries, it is well said by the North American, are almost the only homes of the PROTESTANT RELIGION! The Religion has indeed a foothold upon the continent of Europe, but uncertain and subsidiary: In the event of a crusade against Protestantism, England and the United States are the only countries which can be relied upon to unfurl the banner of Protestantism and to repel the shackles of Popery and Superstition!

Here then, in the strongest and noblest motive for perpetuating the bonds of brotherhood between the two nations, in addition to the thousand considerations of kindred, similarity of Institutions, and ties of interest and humanity, all pleading eloquently for Peace.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p2 CONGRESS, Senate

CONGRESS.
Correspondence of the Balt. American.
WASHINGTON Jan'y. 6, 1846

UNITED STATES SENATE

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a Resolution directing the Secretary of the Senate to cause to be prepared for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the map of Oregon, compiled by the officers of the Exploring Expedition, provided the cost of the same does not exceed $10 per hundred. Laid over.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Public Buildings, reported a joint resolution to authorize the Washington Monument Committee to erect a statue to Washington on any part of the public ground not otherwise occupied that may be designated by the President of the United States. Laid over.

Mr. BREESE offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for information relative to the land mines on the public lands in the State of Illinois. Adopted.

Mr. SEVIER, from the Committee of Foreign Affairs, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the States of Texas the amount ascertained to be due her by the United States, arising out of the disarming of her troops while she was an independent state by the troops of the United States under the command of Major Shively. Laid over.

Mr. SPEIGHT offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the erection of light houses on St. Joseph’s Island and other points on the Mississippi. Adopted.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Niles, regulating and reducing the price of public printing.

Mr. J. M. CLAYTON moved to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Printing, with a view to amend it so as to provide the compensation allowed by it shall apply to the printing [...] [...] [...] [...] as well as that which may be executed hereafter. The motion prevailed.

A Message was received from the President of the United States transmitting copies of Correspondence between the Attorney General and the legal authorities of Florida, relative to the power and duties of the Territorial Judges under the act of admitting said State into the Union.

The Senate then went into executive session.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p2 OREGON QUESTION
OREGON QUESTION.

Mr. YANCEY of Ala. moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole. The motion prevailed, and the debate was resumed upon the question of the notice and the whole Oregon question was debated upon its merits.

Mr. YANCEY expressed himself in opposition to war at this time, and therefore in opposition to giving the notice at this time, because he regarded it as a war measure.—He advocated the American claim to the whole territory, and believed that it was secured to us by the delay.

Mr. CALEB B. SMITH of In. made a very able and eloquent speech against giving notice at this time, and in favor of committing the power of the President to give the notice. The responsibility belonged to him, and he would not take it form him. The country, however, ought to be defended at once, and placed in a condition to meet any emergency that might happen, but we were now in no condition for war.

Mr. Smith's speech commanded great attention form the fact that he was a Western man and one of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was patriotic, statesmanlike, and inits views such as will commend it to the common sense of the nation.

Mr. COBB next obtained the floor, and on his motion the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

RW46, January 9, 1846 v23n3p3 Letter to the Editors on Oregon

To the Editors of the Whig:

Gentlemen:—Deprecating, as I do, a war between the United States and Great Britain as the most direful calamity that could befall these two great, and most powerful nations on the globe, even if sufficient cause existed, but which is ten times more horrible when it shall result form mere wantonness or madness of political tradesman, my heart beat with unbounded pleasure on taking up, for the first time, last night, your paper of the 2nd inst., and my eye rested on a brief editorial beginning as follows:

"Better prospects of Peace."

"We congratulate the country on the improved prospect for the preservation of peace. It seems to be acknowledged generally that the ground taken by Mr. Calhoun on Tuesday is decisive," and so forth.

Well, I naturally hurried over the paper, in search of the column referred to in the after part, to ascertain what was the ground taken Mr. Calhoun, that was to settle this much vexed Oregon question, and give harmony to the civilized world; and presently I found it, but before looking to the resolutions he had offered, I ran my eye over the debate they had occasioned; first, because of my impatience to form a just estimate of the importance that had been attached by the Senate to the proposition he might have submitted, and secondly, because I could not well understand how a mere proposition form Mr. Calhoun, who certainly heads no very considerable or formidable party in the country, and who I believe is held responsible for no set of opinions or principles he may advance beyond the duration of a single moon, was to work out so desirable, but at the same time, so extraordinary an effect.

But I could not find any one member of that body, save Mr. Archer, had put such a construction on their import as your remarks had led me to anticipate. Yet when I read his views as reported in the proceedings of the Senate. I could not help ejaculating, "Now, indeed, a great man has arisen in Israel; and whatever may be his former errors, and however ignis fatuus like, his previous career, I for one will hereafter hail him as a Patriot," and a deliverer of his country: Mr. Calhoun has thrown off at last all party shackles, has risen superior to the consideration of whether it will "[ . . . ]enure to his own benefit," and struck for his own country. Content with plundering Mexico, he will not attempt to rob Great Britain: content with seizing that, which fell an easy prey, he will no venture to involve the world in arms, to secure a barren, worthless and inhospitable tract of country that must prove disastrous to our institutions, "if we obtain it and settle."

How could I sat less, Messers. Editors, on reading your remarks as quoted above, and the following from Mr. Archer?

"Mr. Archer supported the motion—thanked Mr. Calhoun for the high and honorable position he had assumed, and congratulated the country that new glad tidings would be wafted on the wings of peace to the four quarters of the globe."

But judge, Mr. Pleasants, of my mortification and disappointment, when on turning to the Resolutions themselves, I found the first four to consist mainly of a few common place undisputed truisms, as to the functions and extent of the powers of the Executive and Senate in forming treaties, and the last to bolster up his own "consistency" whilst acting in the character of negotiator. They ran thus:

1st. Resolved, That the President of the United States has the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senate concur.

Well think I, that don’t settle any boundary question, secure peace, or improve “the prospects of peace.” I read again—

2d. Resolved, That the power of making treaties embraces that of fixing and settling boundaries between the territories and possessions of the United States, and those of other powers, in cases of conflicting claims between them in reference to the same.

Well think I, that don’t settle any boundary question, secure peace, or improve “the prospects of peace.” I read on—

3d. Resolved, That however clear their claims, in their opinion, to the country included between the parallels of 40 degrees and 54 degrees 40m, North latitude, and extending from the Rocky Mountains to the pacific Ocean, known as the territory of Oregon, there now exist, and have always existed, conflicting claims to the possession of the same between us and Great Britain—the adjustment of which has been the subject of negotiations between the respective governments.

Well think I, that don’t settle any boundary question, secure peace, or improve “the prospects of peace.” It needed no ghost to tell us that, for every school boy knows it. But nothing daunted, I read on—

4th. Resolved, That the President if the United States has rightfully the power, under the Constitution, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the same concur, to adjust by treaty he claims of the two governments to the said territory, by fixing a boundary to their present possessions.

Well think I, that don’t settle any boundary question, secure peace, or improve “the prospects of peace.” But now for the last, though not the last; for like all lovers of good wine, he has saved the best bottle to wind up with: So on I went, full of hope and confidence, to the 5th and last resolution, which by a dash of goose quill, was to settle all difficulties, and give ease to the aching minds of patriots, and peace to the agitated bosoms of millions—and here I could not pause for a moment, and reflect on those beautiful and impressive words of Richelieu, when speaking of his pen—

“Behold the arch enchanter’s wand; itself a nothing,
“But taking sorcery from the master hand—to paralyze the Cezars,
“And strike the loud earth breathless.”

And so it was to be, with the magic pen of the mighty peacemaker: and on I went to the

5th. Resolved, That the President of the U.S. in renewing the offer in the spirit of peace and compromise to establish the 49th deg. of North latitude, as a line between the two countries to the said territory, did not abandon the honor, character, or best interests of the American people, or exceed the powers vested in him by the Constitution to make treaties.”

Well, thinks I, is that all? How does it settle any boundary question, secure peace, or improve “the prospects of peace.”

I laid the paper down, lit my pipe, and went to thinking, and wondered how my friends Archer and Pleasants should have fallen into so egregious an error, as to construe these resolutions into a settlement of peace maker, unless it was one of the Stockton sort, dispensing mischief, confusion, and destruction to all that followed in its wake.

I at length laid down my pipe, took a long breath, and in spite of my self, said What! John Cataline Calhoun (as the Globe and Enquirer called him) the great disturber of the public peace, whose mischief making propensities have brought this government to the verge of dissolution, kept our own family in continual agitation, discord and turmoil for fifteen years, become a settler of difficulties? Whew!

Now I may be mistaken, and it may be, that if all this does not satisfy Great Britain, she is rather too hard to please, to justify any further effort on our part.

To be told by Mr. Calhoun, that Mr. Polk, did not exceeded his powers, and did not abandon the integrity of his country, by submitting at one time, a proposition to divide the territory by the 49th deg., may appear plain enough to some, as carrying with it sufficient atonement to appease to aroused anger and indignation of the British government, occasioned by the impudent and bullyling tone of our Executive and his mouthpiece, who being suddenly, unexpectedly, and undeservedly transferred to positions that nature did not design them to occupy, have seemed to know nothing of the dignity, courtesy, and decency, that should regulate intercourse between nations; but as a plain and simple minded man, I must confess, that I do not see how the matter is mended in the slightest degree.

Mr. Calhoun does not propose to abandon the preposterous claim now set up by Mr. Polk to the whole of Oregon or none; he does not even advise that the offer of the 49th degree should be renewed; but contents himself with declaring the Mr. Polk, in renewing the proposition which he (Mr. Calhoun) himself had made in the early part of the negotiation, and which had been rejected, had not exceeded his powers, nor abandoned the dignity, character, and bests interests of the American people; for if he had, then so had Mr. Calhoun, and if Mr. Polk had been justified in making this offer, then so had he; so that while he strikes one blow for Mr. Polk, he strikes two for himself but not one for his country; and in this like the rest of the Presidential aspirants in Congress, (of which there are not perhaps less than 200, large and small) he proposes to convert the whole country into one great political chessboard, and make that move which he thinks most likely to win the game that will "ensure to his own benefit."

I say he does not propose to renew the proposition to settle the boundary by the 49th degree, and even if he did, how would that secure peace, or improve the prospects of peace? When has Great Britain agreed to accept such a line of division? Have we not over and again offered it? and has she not rejected it? And why is it to be supposed, that she would be more disposed to accept it now under the bravado and threats of our hectoring and warlike Hickory Sapling (which is a more appropriate title for him than "Young hickory") than before, when she could have gotten it without hard words, and contemptuous treatment.

But if the proposition could now be renewed, so far from its being accepted, I question if a greater indignity could be offered to that people—No! The acceptance of [her] proposition for honourable arbitration, is the only alternative left us, for a peaceable adjustment; and it ought never to have been subjected, unless there was a better prospect of settling it by negotiation, than there appears to have been at the time.

But imagine the proposition to be renewed to divide by the 49th degree, and it would approximate a domestic scene, that we who have spoiled children, are all familiar with.

We attempt to divide an apple between two urchins, John and Jack; John's half is a little the larger, and Jack pouts and says: I won't have that. Why? Because it ain't as big as John's. You had better take this, for if you don't you shan't have any. Well, I won't have any then. He begins to cry, and makes a devil of a racket, which becoming insufferable, he is told—come now, be a good boy, wipe your eyes, and kiss father, and you shall have the piece of apple. Jack wipes his eyes, kisses Pa, takes the apple and chuckles over his good fortune, wisely thinking that half a loaf is better than no bread.

But whether the British nation, and her Statesmen Sir Robert Peel and the Duke of Wellington, are such babies as to thus easily appeased by taking what they had before refused, because you have threatened to withhold all, is a question that remains to be settled.

As that instrument which strikes every note in the [ . . . ] though he never plays but two tunes, to wit: the "President's March" and the 'loaves and fishes,' sometimes says, "Nous Verrons."

No, no, Mr. Whig! Let us look this question sternly in the face: let us not deceive ourselves or the people; let us not lull them into a fatal fancied security; you may rely upon it our young sapling has involved us in difficulties not easily to be overreached and not very likely to be counteracted.

Let us act as becomes men; let us hope for the best, but prepare for the worst.

RW46, January 23, 1846 v23n7p1 ORGEON QUESTION

THE ORGEON QUESTION

To the Editors of the Whig:

I believe it is now a well established maxim, that man has no interest in man, and that all the laws and constitutions of man's invention cannot convert a human being into property. The days of vassalage are or ought to be over. Wild lands belong to the settlers, and not to the different Governments under which these settlers once lived. To throw off allegiance by expatriation, is also a well established maxim. The people, then, of Oregon belong to themselves, and if numerically weak are just as independent as if numerically strong. They, then, should be consulted as to whether they will set up for themselves, be annexed to the U.S. Government, or prefer allegiance to the British Crown. How absurd, then, for the U. States and Great Britain to be negotiating for the free men, pioneers of a wild country, appropriated by original settlement to themselves!

Suppose the U.S. and Great Britain should determine upon parallel of latitude as a geographical line of division – Can they by this species of legislation control the free will of the citizens of Oregon? The idea is preposterous to my mind. No matter how civilized or enlightened man may be, he will act upon the principle that might gives right. Submit then, the controversy to the people of Oregon, and let them decide as to the course most advantageous for them to pursue, regardless of the wishes or pretensions of other nations, who have no legitimate authority either to divide their territory, or coerce them into an obedience of Government and Laws not of their own making, and probably very ungenial to their wishes. Upon what principle of common sense is it to be inferred that persons residing North of a certain degree of latitude are friendly to British Laws, and those South of it to Republican institutions? Legislations with power to coerce may partially control the actions of men, but cannot subvert the will, or change the operations of the mind.
WAR FOR OREGON

It as been suggested in distinguished quarters that the Territory of Oregon is worthless. It has also been said on both sides of the Atlantic that the territory cannot long be governed either by Westminster or Washington; but that it will require a separate government of its own. If either of these assertions be true, a war, in this age of civilization, to determine the title of Oregon, will be “monstrous” and “impious” beyond any wager of battle in history. The following verses from an ancient newspaper will fitly illustrate the folly of both nations that engage in it. – Boston Daily Adv.

CLUMPY and CLOD, two surly clowns,
As reeling home one night
From alehouse, where their sappy crown
They’d soak’d in sad’ning plight,
While all the azure tinted sky
Spread out its clear expanse.
And all the glittering train on high Seem’d o’er their heads to dance – Quoth Clump to Clod. “I tell thee what!
“I only wish that I
“As much good pasture land had got
“As I can see blue sky.”
“And I,” quoth Clod to Clump, “should like “Thy wish to beat by far,
“And have, to prove a wealthier tyke,
“An ox for every star.”
“Ah but,” says Clump, “to veed them all
“What pasture could be vound?”
“Enough,” says Clod, “vor great and small:
“I’d veed them on thy ground.”
“What! And without my leave?” says Clump.
“Ay, that I would,” says Cloddy.
Quoth Clump, “then thee my hide shall thump,
“Or I will bump thy body.”
So to’it they went, both Clump and Clod,
As ast as fist could tag,
Till both lay sprawling on the sod,
And scarce a fist could wag.
“Now, where’s your oxen, Clod,” says Clump?
“And where,” says Clod, “your ground?”
Both sigh’d, and, carcasse raised on rump,
In vain for both look’d round:
Then, shaking hands, they cursed all jars,
And all deceiving eyes,
That looked for oxen in the stars,
And pasture from the skies.

EXPENSE OF WAR

The occurrence of war will so nearly annihilate the revenue from customs, that it will be a large allowance to admit that even the odd money (four and a half millions) of the present revenue from that source will be annually available to the Treasury from customs after war begins. The amount was more than what was collected in the second year of the War of 1812; before war steamers were even thought of, and almost before steam navigation of any sort was successfully practiced.

War will therefore produce a deficiency of twenty millions of dollars in the revenue required to defray the ordinary expenses of the Government: and, after the first year of war, five millions of dollars will be required (an amount which will increase with each year) in addition, making an annual amount of twenty millions of dollars, which must be raised, at the very beginning of the war, by DIRECT AND INTERNAL TAXATION. We do not press this consideration as any argument against a necessary war; but we do put it to our readers whether they are willing to pay to U. States’ excisemen, taxes upon all that they eat, or drink, or wear, upon the houses that they live in, and the shops they work in; and upon every little thing almost in God’s Creation, for the gratification of those honest gentlemen, in Congress or out of it, who are of opinion that it is our duty TO SEEK A WAR! – Nat. Int.

MR. CRITTENDEN’S RESOLUTION
A resolution concerning the Oregon Territory

Whereas, by the convention concluded on the 20th day of October, 1818, between the United States of America and the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the period of ten years, and afterwards indefinitely extended and continued in force by another convention of the same parties, concluded the 6th day of August, 1827, it was agreed that any country that may be claimed by either party on the northwest coast of America, westward of the Stony or Rocky Mountains, now commonly called the Oregon Territory, should together with its harbors, bays and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be ‘free open’ to the vessels, citizens and subjects of the two powers, but without prejudice to any claim which either party might abrogate and annual said convention, on giving due notice of twelve months to the other contracting party:

And whereas it has become desirable that the respective claims of the United States and Great Britain should be definitely settled, and that said territory may, no longer than need be, remain subject to the evil consequences of the parties might have to any part of said country; and with this further provision in the 2c article of the said convention of the 6th August, 1827, hat either divided allegiance of its American and British population, and of the confusion and conflict of national jurisdictions, dangerous to the cherished peace and good understanding of the two countries:

With a view, therefore, that steps be taken for the [ab]abrogation of said convention of the 6th August, 1827, in one mode described in its second article, and that the attention of the Governments of both countries may be the more earnestly and immediately directed to renewed efforts for he settlement of all their differences and dispute in respect to said territory:

Be it Resolved, by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to give to the British Government the notice required by its 2d article for the abrogation of said convention of the 6th of August, 1827. Provided, however, That in order to afford ample time and opportunity for the amicable settlement and adjustment of all their differences and disputes in respect to said territo[f]ry, said notice ought not to be given till after the close of the present session of Congress.

This was made the order of the day for the 10th of February, the day appointed for the consideration of the resolution proposing to give immediate notice to Great Britain.

Mr. Allen’s Contingent War Delcaration.

Speaking of Mr. Allen’s notice of an intention to force up his Resolution of warning to the Powers of Europe, the National Intelligencer says: We can think of nothing more unpropitious to the peace of the country at the present moment than the entertaining and discussing of such propositions, and we are quite sure that considerate men every where have felt grateful to the Senate for putting the subject, as it seemed, to rest.

With these views in regard to the extreme and mischievous proposition, it is with great regret that we have learnt the Mr. Allen gave notice yesterday, of his intention to move the Senate on Friday next, to take up his motion for leave to introduce the resolutions. We are sure that the whole country would be startled at any successful attempt to engage the Senate in public debate of such a measure. The mere disturbing of it is much to be deprecated – especially at this juncture, teeming with agitating and momentous events; and much more would any thing like a grave discussion of it be deplored.
You see by Mr. Allen’s notice in the Senate to day that he intends to run another tilt at the interference of European with American powers, next Friday. The eagle eyes of John C. Calhoun, you may depend, are upon him! – The country is believed to be safe, as it regards that matter!

It is understood that despatches have gone off requiring the Home Squadron to repair forthwith to the vicinity of Vera Cruz and the Army in Texas, and to be there, to proceed to the most available point near the bank of the Rio del Norte to meet the Meixcan forces, should they be sent into Texas.

It is further stated, that the President and the Secretary of War refuse to put the army in Texas under the control and direction of Major General Scott! It must be recollected that the Secretary of war fought some himself during the last war – and that if the President did not volunteer and was not drafted to go to the defence of New Orleans, like many of his comrades, he was no fault of his, because he left his residence in Columbia and went away to Murfreesborough to complete his studies!

But what course will the President now recommend Congress to take on the subject of our affairs with Mexico? – Remember that in his Message, at the opening of the session, after announcing the appointment of Mr. Slidell as Minister, he uses the following significant language:

"The minister appointed has set out on his mission, and is probably by this time near the Mexican capital. He has been instructed to being the negotiation with which he is charged to a conclusion at the earliest practical period; which , it is expected, will be in time to enable me to communicate the result to Congress during the present session. Until the result is known, I forbear to recommend to Congress such ulterior measures of redress for the wrongs and injuries we have long borne, as it would have been proper to make had no such negotiation been instituted."

And now that it is understood his instituted negotiation has been rejected with insult, it mremains to be seen what “ulterior measures of redress” the President will recommend to Congress! Nous Verrons.

POTOMAC.

FROM MEXICO

An arrival at New Orleans from Tampico, brings news to the 5th January.

There seems to be no doubt of the success of Paredes in his revolt. The call of Herrera, upon the “Defenders of the Country,” had met no response, and it was believed that the reins of power had fallen from his hands. Paredes was expected to enter the City of Mexico on the 29th December.

Vera Cruz and Jalapa have pronounced. Gen. Almonte is said to be under arrest. It is said; there are 2,000 troops in the garrison at Tampico, ready for action against the Government.[TCS]

THE PEACE PARTY.

Some of the Administration presses, a short time since the rampant for the “whole of Oregon or [n]one,” have of late considerably modified their tone, and one of them in an article of some length undertakes to prove that the Democracy are essentially the “party of peace.” If this be so, then has the blustering in Congress been to little purpose. It only proves the truth of the oft-repeated remark, that those who make the most noise are always the least inclined to blows.

The windy speeches have reminded us of scenes of every-day life – something that may have often been noticed in an assemblage of pot. valiant heroes in a bar-room. A man of wrath is seen boiling over with super-abundant caloric, "pitching and snorting" for an adversary, and swearing he can "lick all creation." In this alarming state of affairs, he calls out for an opponent - some two or three good-natured and peaceful friends, averse to blood and thunder, undertake to hold him – and four other men of peace take hold of his adversary – and then, good lack, how the froth flies!
"Each hero burns to conquer or to die,
What mighty hearts in little bosoms lie!"

But the moment the by­standers cry "hands off!" the gallant champion, who threw down the gauntlet, becomes as "cool as a cucumber," and declares, "pon honor," he has not the least bad feeling towards any living mortal. And this is the drama being enacted on the great national theatre at Washington.

OREGON – MR. WINTHROP.

We had hoped, ere this, to have been able to present our readers the truly able and statesmanlike speech of Mr. Winthrop of Massachusetts, on the Oregon Question, as well as that of Mr. Hunter of Virginia, the latter taking what may be considered the Calhoun view of the question. But other matters have intervened, to delay our purpose. We find, however, an extract at hand, appropriately and happily introduced by our friend of the Lexington Gazette, to which we call the attention of the reader. We insert this more cheerfully, because it has been intimated to us that on some former occasion, an article appeared in our columns, doing injustice to Mr. Winthrop.

From the Lexington Gazette.

Many of the speeches delivered in the lower House can only make their hearers blush for their country. The vaporing, the hectoring, the rabid abuse of England, the excessive glorification of every thing American, the furious appeals to the passion of the populace! How unlike the calm repose of a mind conscious of right, which aims only at what is just, and seeks just ends by just means. How like the bully endeavoring to intimidate his adversary by menaces, yet trembling in his inmost soul lest his opponent should answer his words with blows. If speeches of this description represent the spirit of this nation [as they do not] we ought to change our national emblem at once, and instead of the Eagle hovering over our ensigns, and fanning with its hue pinions the fires of battle, choose a turkey cock, spreading and spluttering at the sight of a red rag, but running as fast as legs and wings will carry him, at the first rigorous rush of a resolute enemy.

No. This is not the character of the American people. There are statesmen and others, (we regret they are so few) whose arguments and eloquence are worthy the great subject they discuss, and the great nation has called them to its councils. Prominent among these, in the House of Representatives, is Mr. Winthrop of Massachusetts, a man who has reflected new [luster] upon his own honorable name as well as upon the legislators of his country. While we do not doubt for a moment the American title to Oregon, we believe the following extracts from Mr. Winthrop's speech will commend themselves to every true patriot for the enlightened amor patris which they evince – to every friend of humanity for the pacific spirit which they breathe – and to every lover of genuine eloquence for the chaste and impressive language in which such noble sentiments are arrayed.

"I am perfectly aware, Mr. Speaker, that I express the views which I entertain when I say, I shall not escape reproach and imputation from some quarters of the house. I know that there are those by whom the slightest syllable of dissent from the extreme views which the administration would seem recently to have adopted, will be eagerly seized upon as evidence of a want of what they call patriotism and American spirit. I spur all such imputations in advance. I spur the notion that patriotism can only be manifested by plunging the nation into war, or that the love of one's country can only be measured by one's hatred of another country. Sir, the American spirit that is wanted at the present moment, wanted for our highest honor, - wanted for our dearest interests, - that which dares to confront the mad impulses of a superficial popular sentiment, and appeal to the sober second thoughts of moral and intelligent men. Every schoolboy can declaim about honor and war, the British lion and the American eagle, and it is a vice of our nature that the calmest of us have heartstrings which may vibrate for a moment even to such vulgar touches. But (thanks to the institutions of education and religion that our fathers founded) the great mass of the American people have also an intelligence and a moral sense which will sooner or later respond to appeals of a higher and nobler sort, if we will only have the firmness to make them. It was a remark of an old English courtier, a century and a half ago to one who threatened to take the sense of the people on some important question, that he would take the nonsense of the people and beat him twenty to one. And it might have been something better than a good joke in relation to the people of England at the time it was uttered. But I am not ready to regard it as applicable to our own intelligent and educated American people at the present day. An appeal to the nonsense of the American people may succeed for an hour; but the stern sense of the country will soon reassert itself, and will carry the day in the end.

"I honor the Administration, Mr. Speaker, for whatever spirit of conciliation, compromise, and peace it has hitherto manifested on this subject, and have no hesitation in saying so. If I have anything to reproach them with, or taunt them for, it is for what appears to me as an unreasonable and precipitate abandonment of that spirit. And if any body desires on this account, to any other account, to brand me as a member of the peace party, I bare my bosom, I hold up both my hands to receive that brand. I am willing to take its first and deepest impression, while the iron is sharpest and hottest; if there be any thing of shame in such a brand, I certainly glory in my shame. As Cicero said, in contemplation of any [axiom] which might attach to him for dealing in too severe [for] summary a manner with Cataline, " Eo animo semper fui, ut invidiam virtute partam, gloriam, non invidiam, patuarem!"
OREGON: Its Limits – And the Respective Claims set up to It by the Contestants

We have been heretofore prevented, by a pressure of other matter, from spreading before our readers the Correspondence between the British Minister and our own Secretaries of State, on their respective claims to the disputed portion of Oregon. To remedy this omission, and to supply the reader whose time is limited with an abstract of the whole subject, we avail ourselves of the following excellent article, from the New York Mirror:

"THE OREGON QUESTION.

The Oregon question is so completely the paramount object of attention, and peace or war are so immediately dependent upon its settlement, that we have thought it would not be unadvisable to place before our readers the prominent facts upon which the claim of either nation is based. These facts may all be found in the diplomatic correspondence of the two nations, or in the historical voyages now published; but, few men have the time, or care to spend it in searching for them, and of those few but a small number so examine as to form or retain clear notions as to the dates and circumstances attending the several explorations. In any event, this kind of article will be useful in those after dinner and bar room political discussions, which we are brought to what Mr. Puff calls “a dead lock,” by assertion on one side, and flat denial on the other.

The Oregon or disputed territory, comprises that portion of the North-west coast of America between the 42d and 54 50 parallels of latitude. North of it lie the Russian and south the Mexican possessions.

In 1543 the Spaniards visited the Northwest coast, certainly as high as the 40th, and possibly as high as the 43rd latitude.
In 1579 Sir Francis Drake was, without doubt, on the coast as high as the 42d parallel, and it is claimed by the historian of his voyage that his progress extended as far north as the 48th. From the narrative itself, however, it seems clear that the precise degree was not known, and that the one named was merely a conjecture. Drake, with the consent and by request of his inhabitants, however, took formal possession in the name of his sovereign, of that portion of the country on or near the 38th degree.

In 1592 Jean de Fuec, a navigator in the service of Spain, sailed as high as the 48th or 49th parallel, and discovered the straight which now bears his name. This discovery was considered apocryphal for nearly two centuries. In 1602 a Spanish expedition, consisting of several vessels, was fitted out at Acapulco for the purpose of surveying the Northwest coast. Of this expedition, the most adventurous, or most storm-driven, a vessel reached the 43rd parallel.
In 1763, Spain, by the treaties it made at the then peace recovered from France New Orleans, and Louisiana west of the Mississippi; the remainder of Louisiana, Florida and Canada, and all other French possession on the North American continent became the property of Great Britain.

Between 1774 and 1779, three exploring expeditions, sent Spain, ascended to the 64th parallel.

On the 15th August 1777, Heceta, the captain of one of the vessels of the above expedition, discovered the mouth of the Columbia, and gave it the name of San Roque; he did not, however, enter it.

In 1776, Cook sailed from England on a voyage of exploration, the peculiar limits of which, so far as the northwest coast was concerned, were to extend from the 45th parallel, northerly.

In 1778, Kendrick, an American, the first white man since Fuca, sailed through the Strait of Fuca.

In 1792, Meares, an Englishman, sailing under Austrian colors, re discovered the southern entrance of the Strait of Fuca.

In 1799, Spain destroyed the settlement of Meares on Vancouver Island. The difficulties between Spain and England on this subject were settled by the Nootka Sound Convention, which determined no title whatever, but admitted the right of both nations to trade and settle.

In 1792, Kendrick, and American, the first white man since Fuca, sailed through the Strait of Fuca.

In 1795, Vancouver, commander of an English expedition, visited the coast between the 40th and 48th degrees, and records his conviction that between those parallels no navigable stream existed large enough to float his vessel. He persisted in this opinion after being informed by Gray, an American sea captain, of his suspicion of the existence of a large river between the 46th and 47th parallels.

On the 11th of May, 1792, Gray sailed 10 miles up the Columbia.

Gray communicated his discoveries to Vancouver, who sent Lt. Broughton in the Chatham to explore it. Broughton ascended it 80 miles in his cutter, the navigation being too intricate to take up his ship.

In 1792, Mackenzie, an Englishman, floated 250 miles on the Frazer river, which empties into the Strait of Fuca.

In 1803 the U.S. purchased Louisiana.

In 1805 and '6, Lewis and Clarke crossed the Rocky Mountains, explored the whole country drained by the Columbia, and followed that stream to its mouth.

In 1806 the English made settlements west of the Rocky Mountains, but the Columbia river never proved to have been seen by them until 1811.

Before 1810, the (American) Missouri Company made a settlement on Lewis river, the Southern branch of the Columbia, which was shortly abandoned.

In March, 1811, the Pacific Fur Company of New York sent the Tonquin with their agents to the Columbia. They landed and formed a settlement at Astoria, ten miles from the mouth of the river.

On the 18th October, 1813, three of the partners of the Pacific Fur Company sold the establishment, furs and stock in hand to the Northwest Fur Company. While the transfer of property was going on, an English vessel of war, sent to destroy the American settlement, arrived; but as the property was then British, departed, after substituting the British for the American flag, and naming the place Fort George.

In 1818, Astoria was restored under the 1st Article of the Treaty of Ghent – the United States leaving the question of title open, by express understanding.

The whole territory in dispute is yet open to joint occupation, by virtue of various conventions.

In a subsequent article we shall examine the title conferred on each nation by the various acts above enumerated, and shall endeavor to give somewhat in detail; the substance of all the treaties that bear upon the subject. N.Y. Mirror.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

The Mexican schooner Julia, Zalduondo master, arrived here this morning from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the 30th ult., bringing us papers from that place to the 29th inst., and from the city of Mexico to the 23d ult. The Julia also brought J. Tilghman Hoffman Esq, bearer of Despatches to our Government, from whom we learn that Paredes was certainly on his march to the city of Mexico, and that our Minister, Mr. Slidell was still there. From the Vera Cruz and Mexico papers, we have hurriedly gleaned the following news:

The Moniteur, of the 21st ult., says that the Supreme Government has appointed Gen. Bustamente Commander in Chief, and Gen. Obregon his second in command, of the Army to oppose Gen. Paredes. That paper says the Government is indefatigably working to quell the revolt and that it has already taken the necessary measures to put he capital in a state of defence, and given out 3000 guns to be distributed among the citizens. On the 21 ult., the Senate concurred with the Government in giving Dictatorial powers to President Herrera. El Siglo says that Paredes had seized upon the Public Treasury of the Fair at St Juan, which had been committed to his charge. El Veracruzano of the 24th, says that on the 23d, a salute from the Castle of san Juan de Ulloa, under the command of Cassanova, announced the first movement of the Army and Navy, in favor of the Proclamation of San Louis Potosi by Gen. Paredes, and that it was immediately seconded by the garrison of the place, at whose head is the brave Landero, with the exception of a part of the battalion Sigero, numbering about 100 men; who left their barracks with their officers, refusing to join their companions. This body, as they were marching out, fired a volley on those who remained, killing a captain and ten veterans, and wounding three others.

It then marched to the Government palace, and was ordered to quarter in the Convent of San Francisco, where they remained at the latest dates. The same paper says that at a late hour is learned that the city and garrison of Jalapa... had pronounced in favor of Paredes, and that it was momentarily waiting for a similar movement in Orisaba and the fortress of Perote.

On the 23d, the forces of Paredes were said to be only three das march from the city of Mexico.

On the 24th, the troops at Puebla under Gen. Inclan, who had received orders to march to the Capitol, refused to depart, and it was certain that, notwithstanding the efforts of the General to the contrary, they would soon declare in favor of Paredes.

Mexico, it was said, would in a few days open its gates to Paredes.

The Vera Cruzano of the 29th, says that it learns by letters, of responsible persons, from Mexico, that the imbecile and short­sighted Cabinet had mortgaged to England the department of Yucatan, on condition that she would pay its immense debt. There, says that paper, are facts that will soon be divulged.

A Circular of the 24th, transmitted by President Herrera to the Governors of the different Departments, delegates to said Governors the tremendous extraordinary powers with which Congress had invested him, and already had the capital of the Republic began to feel the weight of such despotism, as imprisonments, irrespective of person or characters, had become common, and even the Arch Bishop, Granduno, had obliged to fly from the persecutions that awaited him. Gen. Ampudia had gone over to the revolutionists, and the government troops had publicly expo[u]sed their cause.

Gen. Almonte was concealed, earing persections.

The latest intelligence is to the effect that Perote had had declared it self for Paredes, and that the numerous cavalry of that General were in the near vicinity of the Capitol. His artilllery and infantry were between the city and Arroya Sarco. The cities of Orizava and Guanajuato, had also declared for Paredes at the approach of his forces.

Gen. Urrea, says El Siglo of the 19th, has been defeated by the forces of Generals Campuzana and Cuesta, each party having lost about 60 persons.

The same paper says, that the Government Council, after long deliberation, had determined not to receive Mr. Slidell in his ordinary official capacity, notwithstanding its previous engagement to receive a Plenipotentiary from the United States with special powers to treat on the subject of Texas. This conclusion of the Government took place after Mr. Parrott had reached Mexico on his return from the United States.

In the Monitor of the 23d, is published Herrera’s proclamation calling upon his compatriots to rally in defence of the laws. It is a long document, and concludes as follows: “It is my duty to defend our liberties, and yours to sustain me.”

LATEST FROM MEXICO

By the arrival, on the 14th instant, of the United States brig Porpoise, at Pensacola, (twelve days from Vera Cruz,) the intelligence of a revolution in Mexico has been confirmed.

It appears that on the morning of the 30th, the troops relied upon by the government to defend it against Paredes pronounced in his favor; and the government entered into terms of capitulation with the General Paredes. He entered and took possession of the city on that day without opposition.

The rumor was, that General Paredes manifested less opposition to the reception of Mr. Slidell than the late President, Herrera.

THE FOREIGN NEWS

Every body seemed to have been somewhat disappointed in the tone of the English papers, in reference to the President’s Message. Many of the good people of England are probably too much engrossed with home affairs to care a great deal about Oregon – but whatever be the cause, the President’s Message fell upon dull ears and very languid sensibilities.
The London Times, which is generally regarded as indicating the feelings and sentiments of the British Ministry, talks quite coolly, and we must say, very rationally, upon the Oregon question. It seems decidedly to "prefer a settlement to a litigation – a compromise to a contest – peace to a war." It thinks, then, that "every purpose, both of honor and interest, would be answered, if the British Minister, on whom now devolves the duty of making fresh proposals to the government of the United States, were to renew on his part the offer made to England by Mr. Gallatin, in the Presidency under the direction of Mr. Adams. That proposal was to take the 49th degree of N. Latitude," &c. "This would concede all that the most successful war would acquire – a sovereign, but barren dominion – but it would secure all the commercial bearings of an honorable compromise and a rational peace."

Such sentiments must meet a cordial response from the sensible and reflecting people of both countries – and it will be a criminal disregard of the dictates of humanity, if, from false pride or sublimated notions of honor, the peace of the two countries would be jeopardized.

The National Intelligencer is inclined to regard with satisfaction, as far as our relations with England are concerned, the return of Sir Robert Peel to power. So, indeed, are most of the papers that have had time to comment on the news.

REVOLUTION IN MEXICO

News has reached the city by way of Pensacola that the Revolution in the Government of Mexico is complete, Gen. Paredes having entered the city of Mexico, and possessed himself of the reins of government, without serious opposition. – Nat. Int.

From the London Times of December 24.

A President's Message is seldom so much a new fact as a more authoritative confirmation of what the world has known long before. In England a good deal may be guessed from the general leaning of the Minister, and a convenient usage allows the heads of a Royal speech to transpire just the evening before. In the United States the council at which the President has determined on his announcements is one in which millions are privileged to advise, and the whole world is admitted to hear. For several years every citizen is allowed, or rather compelled, to offer the candidate the benefit of his experience, and to demand in return specific pledge on almost every possible point of disagreement. The candidate strikes a compact with every State, every city, every separate supporter in the Union. – Thence he derives his commission, which is only his own because he has received it, and has perchance been able to suggest some little of it during his previous political life. – But, once elected, there he is the incarnation of creed long since determined and promulgated. As a popular man, as a partisan, as a speculative politician, he may have entered into that creed with disinterested and passionate ardor. On the day of his election, however, he awakes to a new existence. He is the Sovereign, charged with the most awful endless responsibilities, the living source [weat or wo], the arbiter of peace or war, with the eyes of all the world upon his actions, be they good or be they evil, and with posterity, as it were, to enter and pass its calm, irreversible judgment on his name. It is no wonder that the busy candidate for a people's suffrages should pause when he has ascended to this height, and begin to perceive the paternal instincts and conscience of power. Even with a second term of sovereignty still to be solicited, he is compelled, in spite of himself, to be considerate, just, and humane.

In this, the first legitimate act of his Presidency, Mr. Polk does nothing more than impersonate the Democracy which bore him into power. The style of his address is all that can really be called his own, and that is unusually readable, simple, and clear. On such minor topics as are not to us matters of practical discussion, or are not even of a sort to call for commendation; the Message will be read with interest, and sometimes with pleasure.

The annexation of Texas is treated as a matter of history, and at the same time with the brevity of recollection in which the short-lived dictations of the Union are so tempted to indulge. Texas, no matter how, was independent; the States of Europe acknowledged it; Mexico herself at least acknowledged it, though with an offensive or impertinent condition, and too late to answer her purpose. The citizens, whoever, whatever, or whenever, they might be, desired annexation, and on the great principle of self-government, had a right to be governed as they liked. With the same sweet oblivion of Texan antiquities, the inference of Great Britain and France is treated as simply an attempt to maintain a balance of power against the encroachments of the Union. It is asserted to be the indefensible right and duty of the Americans not only to resist European interference, but to be utterly deaf to the suggestions of European discretion and humanity.

With a rather unreasonable avidity of self gratulation, the President claims the contradictory honors of peace and war in the Texas triumph. "The accession to our territory," he says, "has been a bloodless achievement. No arm of force has been raised to produce the result. The sword has had no part in the victory." He cannot, however, forego the pleasure of relating, a few sentences after, what efficient military preparations he had made, and how thoroughly Mexico had been hemmed in on all sides, both by land and by sea, before it could have time to defend the disputed territory.

On one point the message exhibits sympathy with our own Ministerial intentions as marvellous as it is auspicious of international amity. The principle protective duties as opposed to those for revenue, is clearly defined and strongly condemned; and the Legislature is recommended to put an end to oppressive inequalities of what is called the general adoption of ad valorem duties. The President lays down the important maxim that taxation ought to fall as lightly as possible on the materials of profitable employment and the necessaries of life.

Oregon is the subject which the almost fanatical interest with which it has been agitated by the States, and its consequent bearings on the peace of the world, renders the most prominent in the address. The long and animated comments of the American press show how little disposed the citizens have hitherto been "to let off" the President and this painful and delicate subject. What is actually said is neither more nor less than what a million voices have dictated and we have long known. It need not augment the terrors of the European alarmists, and it certainly will not change the resolves or add to the preparations of the British Cabinet. It is already resolved and prepared.

Mr. Polk, after adverting to the negotiations, and attempts at compromise before he came into office, informs us of what he has done towards the conclusion of this unfortunate dispute. In reading his simple narrative, it becomes necessary to remember that an American exists in a sphere of his own, and can hardly be judged by European ideas of moderation, decency, and honor. The President makes great credit to himself for having made and offer which he acknowledges to be less than what the British Government has repeatedly declined.

"In consideration, too, that under the conventions of 1818 and 1927, the citizens and subjects of the two Powers held a joint occupancy of the country, I was induced to make another effort to settle this long pending controversy in the spirit of moderation which had given birth to the renewed discussion. A proposition was accordingly made, which was rejected by the British Plenipotentiary, who, without submitting any other proposition, suffered the negotiation on his part to drop, expressing his trust that the United States would offer what he saw fit to call 'some further proposal for the settlement of the Oregon question more consistent with fairness and equity, and with the reasonable expectations of the British Government.' The proposition thus offered and rejected repeated the offer of the parallel of 49 degrees of north latitude, which had been made by the preceding two Administrations, but without proposing to surrender to Great Britain, as they had done, the free navigation of the Columbia river. The right of our rivers, through the heart of our country, was one which I was unwilling to concede."

In making this proposal, already twice refused, the President thinks it necessary to apologize to his Democratic supporters. He pleads, with all the humiliation of one bound by prescriptive compliances, that he had been obliged to proceed on the basis of compromise, and asks the public condolence for that, under this bondage, he has offered what was known by repeated trials, would not be accepted. To make amends for this self-imposed indignity, he declares that the day of compromise is now over.

"Had this been a new question, coming under discussion for the first time, the proposition would no have been [refused].

By the barque Peno, just arrived from Vera Cruz, we learn that a bearer of dispatches from Mr. Slidell to our Government is on board. We have not received any letters by her, but learn verbally from the Captain that Mr. Slidell had been ordered to leave Mexico, and that no escort had been allowed him to Vera Cruz.

We learn, also, that on the reception of the news of the dismissal of Mr. Slidell, the commander of the U.S. brig Somers, at anchor at Vera Cruz, started immediately for the city of Mexico, with a detachment of Marines, in order to escort our Ambassador to that port for embarkation, and protect his person. –N.O. Courier, Jan. 23.

The accounts in other papers state that Paredes was acting President, and Gen. Almonte, (former minister to the U. States,) acting Secretary of War.

A letter from Vera Cruz, January 8th, says: “The new Government has adopted a very harsh tone towards Mr. Slidell, the United States Minister, and appear determined to carry on the war against Texas. Business, of course, under the above circumstances, has almost been put a stop to; but we now look forward to an improvement.

Trade is exceedingly dull here but we expect an improvement after first of next month, when the new Tariff will come into operation.

TEXAS

The Washington Union says that an express from the Government of the U. States, bearing with him to Texas the acceptance of her Constitution by Congress, arrived at Galveston on the 12th instant, and left immediately for Houston. There he was met by President Jobs, who had left Austin to meet the dispatches, and who, immediately on receiving them, issued a proclamation calling on the Legislature to convene at Austin on the 16th of February to organize a State government and adopt such other measures as they may deem necessary for the general welfare. –Balt. Amer.

TEXAS

FROM TEXAS—By the arrival, since our last, of the steam ship McKim, Capt. Lewis, we have Galveston dates up to the 15th inst.

President Jones has issued a proclamation convening the Legislature of the State of Texas at Austin, on the 16th February next, for the purpose of organizing a State Government, and "other measures for the general welfare."

Capt. Elliot, the original "man with the white hat," was in Galveston on the 12th. We presume he is on his way to Austin to attend the funeral of all British hopes of making any thing out of the new State.

The health of the army at Corpus Christi was improving. The "Army Theatre" opened on the night of the 8th inst. With Sheridan Knowles' play of "The Wife"—Julien St. Pierre, Mr. Edwards; Marianna, Mrs. Hart. The orchestra numbered no less than twenty five musicians.

All was quiet on the frontiers. –N.O. Pic., Jan 20

The New Orleans Tropic of the 26th ult., is of opinion, from valuable sources of information within its reach, that although our Minister at Mexico had demanded his passports, yet that the report that he had been grossly insulted, by the refusal of an escort to ensure his safety out of the country, was a mere rumor. We observe that the warhawks, however, are stirring their wings, and preparing to fan up the sparks of war into a comfortable flare. It would seem a pity, indeed, if we can't get a set to with England, that so much pugnacious patriotism as has been recently exhibited should be altogether wasted; and just in the nick of time, Mexico, and her usual blundering awkwardness, steps in presents a fair target for our concentrated wrath. Whether it is altogether just and polite, considering the disordered and distracted condition of that Republic, to avenge the refusal of her Government to receive Mr. Slidell, is somewhat doubtful. But then it might be advisable and expedient, as an outlet for the surplus steam which has so long been generating in American bosoms, to mandate our little neighbor with the boiling flood of our courage and indignation. As we can't fight England, without being almost demolished ourselves, we may as well turn upon Mexico: like a testy and chivalrous gentleman, of whom we have heard, who, whenever he had a controversy with a stout neighbor, who it was not quite prudent to be said with any thing harder than his words, usually retired to his domicile, and eased himself of his disagreeable feelings by whipping his wife.

The New Orleans Picayune, referring to projects said to be on foot by foreign powers, for settling the affairs of Mexico and Central America, says:

"In this connection the following paragraph, which first made its appearance in El Imparcial, a periodical of the Isle of Carmen of the 14th Dec'r., may shed some light. We find the article re-produced in the Memorial Historico, of the 4th inst. The latter journal is the Siglo revived and is published in Mexico under the eyes of the new authorities. We quote as follows:

"By way of Havana, it is known that Spain, France and England have entered into an alliance to place in Mexico and Guatamala a stable and liberal Government, for which purpose each power will furnish a quota of men; at the same time it is assured that England has already at sea thirty ships of the line which it are on their way to the Gulf of Mexico."

"The Yucatan editor states that a knowledge of what has before transpired renders this intelligence worthy of credence. The Imparcial deplores the condition of the Spanish Republics, but without acknowledging outright the crisis to be so humiliating as to render the intervention necessary. It thinks the three powers possess means to give effect to the projected movement. It indulges foreboding of ulterior purposes on the part of the intervenors, and winds up with a flourish of patriotism and valor."

It is stated that Texas is divided into 35 counties. Galveston is the largest city, and Houston the next. Austin, the seat of government, has a population of 1500, and Washington about the same number. Saint Antonia is the oldest town in the State, with a population of 1500.

RW46v23n10p2c4, February 3, 1846: LATER FROM TEXAS

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Galveston, Capt. Wright, we have Galveston dates up to the 21st instant.

The Civilian of the 21st instant has the following, which may be of interest to our commercial readers:

"The Government of Texas has remitted the extra five percent duty, hitherto levied on merchandise imported in U.S. vessels, as that government is no longer regarded as being upon the footing of 'nations not in treaty with Texas.'"

A mail rider was recently shot at by Indians near Austin, but fortunately was missed and escaped unhurt. It was thought they were Wacos. The Register intimates that many hostile Indians are prowling about in the neighborhood of Austin, and although there is a company of U.S. Dragoons and a company of Rangers at that town, the editor goes on to say that "stationary troops are about as efficient on an Indian frontier as a stationary locomotive on a railroad." There is much truth in this.

The Hon. Anson Jones was at Galveston at last accounts. The papers also chronicle the arrival of Capt. Todd, bearer of dispatches from Washington.

A party of Mexican traders was lately robbed a short distance from San Antonio, on their return to the Rio Grande. It is supposed that the robbers were a few renegade Americans who have been prowling about San Antonio for several months.

The latest accounts from Corpus Christi represent that the health of the U.S. troops had materially improved.

The unusually inclement winter has caused great suffering among the Cammanche and other prairie Indians. Many of them had been in at Torrey's Trading House, and were delighted to procure the blankets sent them for their use.

According to the Houston Telegraph, counterfeit ten dollar notes on the Bank of Louisiana are in circulation in Texas.

Since the above was written, we have received Galveston dates one day later, brought by the steamship Alabama, Capt. Windle.

Young Audubon, the naturalist, had arrived at San Antonio, and had been well received.
The Revolution Consummated—Paredes In Power

The U.S. brig of war Porpoise, Lieutenan Comm’g Hunt, arrived at Pensacola on the 14th instant, from Vera Cruz. The N.O. Picayune, says: From the papers before us we cannot discover what day the Porpoise sailed, but from the tenor of a private letter we presume that it was either on the evening of the 1st instant, or morning of the 2nd.

According to the letters before us, General Paredes appeared with his army before the city of Mexico on the afternoon of the 30th ult. The gates were immediately thrown open to him, and he took possession of the town without firing a gun. The accounts allege that he was immediately proclaimed President of Mexico, and that expresses were at once started off from the capital to the different points of the Republic to proclaim that the revolution was complete. One of these expresses reached Vera Cruz just before the Porpoise sailed.

If then our intelligence is to be fully relied upon, as we presume it may be, although we have so few details, Gen. Paredes has attained to the height of power in Mexico—a hazardous elevation, whence he is liable to be hurled at any moment, unless he shall exhibit great firmness of purpose and energy of will, mingled with sincere devotion to his country’s best interests. Gen. Paredes is universally acknowledged as a brave man, carrying his valor to the point of reckless daring. He is resolute and determined, not fearful of assuming the gravest responsibilities, as he has shown in several revolutions which have been carried through by his influence and under his immediate lead. He bears the name of being a disinterested man, and in proof of this it is urged that with so many opportunities of gratifying merely mercenary purposes, or obtaining personal advantages, he is at this day a poor man, and owes his influence purely to the weight of his personal character. His address to the nation upon setting forth from San Luis Potosi, breathes the sentiments of a patriot and resolute reformer. It is a clear expose of the difficulties into which the Republic is now plunged, and of the causes of the debasement. It indicates a resolute purpose of putting a term to the influence of these causes. In his estimation, there have been revolutions enough in Mexico. He is determined that that now achieved by himself shall work a radical reformation of the causes of discontent. Being popular with the army and the clergy, and having secured public confidence in his disinterested and patriotism he has certainly the most favorable opportunity for the execution of his designs. It may fairly be questioned if he possesses the capacity requisite for the emergency, which is certainly one fo extreme difficulty, overwhelmed as Mexico is with bankruptcy, civil dissensions and grave misunderstandings with foreign powers. It is, we believe, notorious, that Gen. Paredes is a man given to habits of dissipation. It is a nice question whether he will throw off their control with his access to power, or give them freer dominion over him. Yet upon this may measurably depend the stability of his rule. It would be rash in us to speculate upon the probably course of events, but it will be sincerely gratifying to see Paredes coping successfully with the immense difficulties of his position.

In regard to the ultimate policy which Paredes will pursue towards the United States, we are not to suppose that it is the be ribly hostile, as the tenor of the popular cry upon which he has gone into power would indicate. Paredes, we believe, has lived in the United States, and fully appreciates the power of the country, and cannot but feel the hopelessness of a controversy with us. Even in his manifesto to the nation, he makes no professions of hostility to the United States, although he laments that Texas has been turn from the Republic, and illustrates the fatal results of their internal dissensions by reveling the boasts of “our neighbors,” as he terms us, “that the stars of the North American Union shall soon shine upon the towers of Mexico and as far as the Isthmus of Panama.” To show the spirit with which he will enter into the exercise of his power, it may interest the reader to peruse the concluding portion of his address to the Mexican nation:

"The army has risen to save the country and put an end to the precarious and dangerous position in which we have for a long time been plunged. I, who have the honor of fighting for the independence of my country—1, who glory in having been the first to raise at Jalisco the banner of insurrection against a disturbed power—I have bound myself to make good the consequences of this national insurrection. Mexico has not broken the yoke of a soldier to be delivered over without defense to the tyranny of demagogues. If such had not already been my settled conviction, it would have been infused into me by the excitements which have been presented to me, by the appeals which have been addressed to me, by the spontaneous election of the army, and by the misfortunes and fears of the country.

At the moment of marching upon the capital to accomplish the glorious enterprise which has been entrusted to me, I declare in the most solemn manner that we are not about to accomplish a revolution of persons merely; that we aspire to something more grand, more fruitful, more complete. It is not to usurp the Presidency; it is not to install another Congress in the place of the present, that we move. We would make an appeal to the nation, to the end that, without fear of turbulent minorities, it may form a constitution agreeably to its own wishes, and oppose a barrier to the dissolution which threatens it on all sides. It must avoid falling into the power of a professed revolutionists, and refrain from the renewal of the excesses which at a former epoch, of lamentable memory, scandalized the Republic. It is necessary to restore to the producing classes their lost influence, and to give to wealth, to industry, and to labor the share which belongs to them in the government of society. The nation, weary of incessant vicissitudes and of sterile convulsions, without attaining the desired repose, ardentl Longs for guarantees of orders and stability. These considerations have determined me and determined the army to undertake a revolution which shall be final, so that we may commence, under the shade of peace of internal tranquility, the sure development of the elements of our wealth.”

RW46v23n11p2c2, February 6, 1846: CALIFORNIA

It is said that the Mormons intend to make this the Canaan of their future abode, after their exodus from their Egypt in Illinois. If such be the case, and they emigrate in very large numbers, it is more than probable they will erect an empire in California, which Mexico will find impossible to subjugate, and the United States troublesome to annex.

As to any little question of property involved in the acquisition of California by the Mormons, we presume they would regard that matter as a mere “abstraction,” totally unworthy the consideration of saintly minds. They have shown in the code of morals by which their social and domestic intercourse is regulated, that long possession is not even prima facie evidence of right, and that the desire of the mind for an object is sufficient authority for the hands to seize it, if they can. They have also before them the high and honorable example of the United States, which has annexed Texas, is annexing Oregon—and will annex California, unless the Mormons are beforehand with them and all this for the simple reason that the United States wants them, and therefore must have them.

If such is to be the rule of the future policy of our country, we are free to confess that California ought to be annexed at once, it being a far richer and more desirable region, in every way, than either Texas or Oregon, or both combined. The character of the population also, is such as ought not to be tolerated in the neighborhood of a free and enlightened Republic! They are generally the degenerate descendants of Spaniards and Indians, of an indolent and puxillanimous nature. The country, however, is capacious, rich, and inviting. It has a sea coast upon the Pacific of 1420 miles. It has some of the finest harbors in the world. It has large rivers, and extensive salt lakes. Its climate is one of the most delightful and salubrious under the Sun. The qualities of its soil are eminently adapted to the purposes of Agriculture. Wheat of excellent quality, Indian Corn, Potatoes, Pear, Beans, &c., are said to be produced abundantly. Grapes also flourish luxuriantly, and a large quantity of wine, some 3 or 4000 gallons, is made, as well as a like quantity of brandy, altho’ this, it is said, is not enough for the consumption of the present inhabitants, who, from their habits, it would appear, have never heard of Father Matthew. The country is also well adapted to the raising of cattle. Hides and tallow are stated to be its chief articles of export. A considerable quantity of beaver, elk, and deer, and sea otter skins, are also exported.

We would call the attention of our Government to this fine country. Do we not want it? And, if so, must we not have it? There is also another reason, the force of which will be at once recognized by our rulers. If we do not steal it, the Mormons will. Can we hesitate longer?

RW46v23n11p3c1, February 6, 1846: LATEST NEWS FROM A WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

FROM A WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4, 1846.

I understand that a communication will be transmitted by the President to both Houses, tomorrow, in reply to the resolutions of Mr. Webster and Mr. Gollamer, calling upon him for the correspondence on the Oregon question, subsequent to the date of his message; and that it will announce the fact that negotiation has not been resumed, no communication on the subject having been received from the British Government since Mr. Buchanan’s last letter; and, in view of the extensive warlike preparations making by England, will recommend the immediate adoption of measures for defense. –FAIRFAX.

The Washington Correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot writes as follows concerning the opinion of the British Admiral Seymour concerning war with England:-

“One of the evidences that England is not going to war with us about Oregon is to be found in the fact that none of her Naval officers believe it. Our late Charge des Affaires to Lima had a friendly conversation in that city a few months ago, he informs me, with Sir George Seymour, the Commander of the British Fleet in the Pacific Ocean. In that conversation Sir George who is a brave, clear-headed man, that has seen much service and had half of his face shot away in battle, informed Judge Bryan, that England would not and could not go to war with the United States about Oregon, and that the British Admiralty had not a thought of it.”

RW46v23n11p4c3, February 6, 1846: MEXICO
The oath administered the new President of Mexico Paredes, was as follows:

"You swear to God to sustain the independence and integrity of the national territory against any foreign aggression whatever; and the republican, popular, representative system; and the plan of administration of the Republic, agreed to by the Act of the Army on the 2d of January."

A Committee of three drew up the oath, one of whom was in favor of adding a clause compelling the President to swear "to repel the invasion of the United States." The Assembly, however, says the National Intelligencer, after a long discussion, refused to adopt the clause, on the ground that it would be tantamount to a declaration of war, and that it was beyond the competency of the Assembly to declare war.

MORE ANNEXATION.

A recent letter from Yucatan received at New Orleans by way of Mexico says-

The people of Yucatan are in daily expectation of declaring the independence of that province. Offences on the part of the Mexican Congress towards Yucatan have dictated the step. Two assemblies comprised of the most distinguished personages have already met to discuss the measure of separation, and much is said of seeking assistance, should it be necessary. From the cabinet at Washington.

MORE ANNEXATION.

The New York Herald contains a letter from Merida, dated Jan. 1, 1846, from which we take the following paragraphs:

Yucatan is no longer a part of the Mexican federation. Yesterday the "Assembly Departments!" pronounced against their existing form of government, and have recalled the deputies in the Mexican Congress.

The Mexican eagle has been torn from their banner, and replaced by the stars of 1843. They have gone back to the old state of things, as they existed before the treaty with Mexico. The cause of the rupture is this same treaty; a resolution having been introduced and carried, in the Mexican chambers for a revision of said established treaty.

Incident upon this has been the resignation of the Governor of the department, Don Tiburcio Lopez; and his place is filled by Don Miguel Barbachiona, formerly holding the same office.

The Herald says:

"This freshly revolted province is one of the best int eh whole Republic of Mexico. Its inhabitants are energetic and enterprising, and if they are determined to be independent, the rest of Mexico cannot re-take them."

RW46v23n12p2c2, February 10, 1846: LATE FROM TEXAS

By the arrival of the steamship New York, Capt. Phillips, late last evening, in 36 hours from Galveston, we have dates from Galveston to the 28th, and from Corpus Christi to the 22d. We give all the news we have room for below:

The Corpus Christi Gazette of the 22d ult. says:-

"We are happy to say to their absent friends, that the general health of the camp is very good. We have seen all the great encampments in Europe for several years past; and its beauty of situation, excellence of arrangement, cleanliness and good order, it will bear a favorable comparison with that of any other nation. It confers great credit not only upon its commander, and officers generally, but upon the country whose cause they have come here to sustain."

"A train of thirty wagons left here on the 18th inst. Laden with military stores for the detachments of U.S. troops at San Antonio. Our last advices left the troops in good health.

The Gazette also states: "We have just been facored with the perusal of a letter from our much esteemed Consul at Matamoras, J.P. Scatrell, Esq., to a gentleman of this place, in which he says, that Tampico is the only place we have heard of that has pronounced in favor of Paredes. Our place, Matamoras, is strongly in favor of supporting the government. They wish for peace, and hope the result will be of short duration.' Upon this information every reliance
"The Mexican trade continues lively, as there are daily arrivals. Parties of traders from all the settlements for three hundred miles on the Rio Grande, and as far inland as Monterey, have visited this place during the past week. They have little news-a report had reached Arista at Monterey, that Mejia, at Matamoras, had declared war against the Government, in favor of Paredes—a force of 2000 was ordered by the former to march on Matamoras for the purpose of quelling the revolt. By an arrival this morning from Mef., we learn that Gen. Arista with his whole force was still at Monterey, and also that the report of Jejia’s treachery was doubtful."

The Galveston News of the 27th says:

"It is reported by the passengers arrived in the steamer Cincinatti (from Corpus Christi) that "General Taylor had expressed a determination to march immediately to the Rio Grande in case of the overthrow of Herrera."

The Corpus Christi Gazette says:

"It is now rendered certain that Gen. J.P. Henderson is elected Governor of Texas, and but little doubt remains that Gen. N.H. Darnell is chosen Lieutenant Governor Important Intelligence—We are indebted to our friend Middleton, of the Herald and Tribune, for the perusal of a letter from Pensacola, written on Saturday last, from which we learn that the U.S. brig Somers had just arrived at the port from Vera Cruz, bringing the important intelligence that Gen. Arista had declared against the Paredes Government and in favor of the restoration of Herrera—that throughout the country the people were organizing in opposition to the present Administration, assigning as a reason their dread of war and bloodshed, and regretting their having permitted Paredes to overthrow the Herrera Administration. Mr. Slidell was still at Jalupa, with brightening prospects.

Such is the brief and nasty account furnished by the Herald's correspondent, who wrote just as the mail was leaving, with a promise to furnish full particulars in another letter. From the nature of the intelligence we infer that the people of Mexico are not prepared to encounter a war with the United States, and that the ill-fated country is on the eve of another revolution – Mobile Adv.

We yesterday received two letters from Pensacola, from our attentive correspondence at that place, dated on the 1st inst., which would go to confirm the reported revolution by Arista. One of the letters has it that Arista has a regular force of 4000 men at his command, which would probably be increased by volunteers if he had any chance of success.

The U.S. brig Porpoise sailed from Pensavola for Vera Cruz on the morning of the 1st inst., with dispatches for Mr. Slidell. All accounts would have it that that gentleman was quietly waiting, at Jalapa, the result of the different movements in Mexico. Our correspondent "Marinua" says:

"No mention is made of his having demanded his passports, or otherwise deported himself so as to compromise the suviter in vodo, for which he is celebrated, with the fortierin re which can at any time be resorted to when everything else has failed."

All the vessels of war at Pensacola are said to be preparing and will soon be off to sea.

One of our letters says that Arista is represented to be more hostile than any Mexican officers against the United States, and that he is determined to attempt the re-subjugation of Texas. Arista knows too much for this. He may make a noise about it, and pretext to have some such object to view, but he is not so Quixote as to put his foot this side the Rio Grande.

From our regular files of papers, it would seem that it was known in the city of Mexico, as early as the 8th of January, that General Arista had declared against Paredes. He was in consequence removed from the command of the army of the North, and ordered to devolve it upon Gen. D. Romano Diaz de la Vega, until the arrival of a successor. The papers speak as if Gen. Ampudia were likely to be his successor—the inhuman wretch who maltreated the remdios of Gen. Sentmanat, and whose broken faith to the unfortunate Meier prisoners is on record.

The Texas Bible Society will hold its eight annual anniversary in the city of Austin, on the 22d of February. >N.O.
We take from the New Orleans Picayune, some extracts of a letter from Pensacola dated Jan. 31, giving items of Mexican news received by the Somers, from Vera Cruz.

"The dilatoriness of the Mexican Government in furnishing our Minister with an escort, which was demanded at least a fortnight before it was finally granted, and the lame pretences under which it was delayed, or refused from time to time, have been thought to indicate a disposition to delay our Minister in the country to the last possible moment, in hopes that the sentiment of the people might finally take a turn favorable to negotiation.

It is certainly very singular that a military Government, with a force in the capital sufficient to oversee all the neighboring Departments, should plead inability to supply an escort of eight men to expedite the departure of a foreign minister, the question of whose reception had been the cause of the revolution, and thus delay in the capital a functionary "whose very presence," one of the principal agents in the revolution had a few days before declared, "To be an insult to a free and brave people." It has been suggested that the Government were waiting for President Polk's Message before they allowed the Minister to leave.

The Message was conveyed to Mexico by Mr. White about the 12th of January, and was immediately translated into the principal journals without comment of any kind. The Message appears to have given great satisfaction to all the American residents.

The Santa Anna party is growing stronger every day in Vera Cruz. It is confidently asserted that if he were to make his appearance at any time, he would be supported by an immediate pronunciamento. It is thought that the revolutionary Government will not, therefore, venture to weaken their force on the seaboard by sending any military force or naval detachments against the rebellious Yucatanos.

With Arista on the North and Yucatan on the South in armed opposition—with California disaffected and Vera Cruz unstable in its adherence to the plan of San Luis Potosi—it does not seem possible that the revolutionary power should be remnant. I have heard an opinion thrown out that Paredes would remain in power about four months. I know not why this express term should be set, unless it be the shortest time in which the Mexicans can accomplish anything. Four months ago, Hererra was elected by 110 to 130 votes; he was barely installed before a revolution was predicted; it has been at length accomplished, and the military dictator who has come into power by acclamation will probably last no longer than his predecessor.

The N.O. Commercial Times contains the following correspondence, deemed of interest.

"VERA CRUZ, Jan. 16, 1846.

"After consummating the last revolution, Gen. Paredes, although he most solemnly protested that he did not aspire to the executive seat, was, as it might well be expected, named President ad interim, giving the Department of Finances to his former accuracy, Luis Parres, a well intentioned man, but lacking the financial talents called for by the more and more critical circumstances of the treasury. Castillo y Lanzas, at the head of Foreign Relations, is likewise a good and honest man, and possesses a vast deal of correct information. He was Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington a few years ago; but never had the reputation of a firm and energetic diplomatist. He, with the other meunders of the actual ministry, are likely to follow, so far as the general policy of the country is concerned, the impulse of Gen. Almote, Secretary of War, who is looked upon as the Preunier. According to the latest news from the capital, the cabinet was giving satisfaction, but we do not venture to express the hope, that it will do the country any good."

VERA CRUZ, Jan 21, 1846

"Our latest dates from Mexico reach to the 17th inst. It was generally thought that the affairs pending between the United States and this government, will not terminate amicably.

"It is rumored that the government have decreed, that the licences for the introduction of 60,000 quintals foreign Cotton, are to be given to any one that may apply on the payment of $10 per quintal duty."

We understand that letters have been received from Mr. Slidell, at Mexico, under the date of the 17th ult., on which day he intended to depart for Puebla.

Speech of General Paredes upon taking the Presidential Chair.

Representatives of the Departments:-Designated by you provisionally to control the destinies of the nation, I have just aken an oath before the Supreme Being, which proves to you that I have no wish to deceive my fellow citizens.
by fallacious promises—which the people receive with indifference, because they are generally without effect. What I have sworn will be true. I determined at San Luis to rescue the nation from disgrace, to raise it to the height of power and glory, which were the noble end of Hidalgo and Iturbitle. You now give me the means of accomplishing this sacred object, which I will employ for the good of our country, overwhelmed with the evils and all her hopes blated.

It is not ambition that has led me to this cahir where cares and danger abound. As I know all the difficulties of the times, my conduct is a sacrifice, and every thing ought to be sacrificed to the country that honours its children, and after exposing my life and shedding my blood in the field of battle, the loss of rest and even of reputation is nothing, when we are called upon to risk all to save al.

My glory shall be open for my country an era of happiness, and when the time shall come when she may freely dispose of her lot, I will retire to my home and give the first example of submission and respect for her august will.

Fellow citizens, receive assurances of my unbounded gratitude, many solemn declaration, that under my Provisional Government there shall be liberty but without crimes and without outrages. I have done.

RW46v23n15p4c4, February 20, 1846: THE TEXAS MAILS

_Army Letters be_—From what we can learn, there is no longer any necessity for letters to the officers or soldiers stationed at Corpus Christi, or any other part of Texas, to be addressed to the care of the Quartermaster, Col. Hunt, now stationed at this place. Mr. Penn, the postmaster here, having taken the responsibility of making up mail bags regularly for Corpus Christi, which are transported hence without charge to the Post Office Department by the schooners in the Government employ. It will increase the work at our post office which has augmented heavily within the past year and without a corresponding increase in the number of clerks; yet Mr. Penn appears determined that nothing shall be left undone to insure the regular transmission of all mailable matter to Texas and elsewhere with promptness. —_N.O. RW46v23n17p2c2, February 27, 1846: LATER FROM TEXAS AND MEXICO

By the arrival last night of the steamship _Galveston_, Capt. Wright, we have Galveston dates up to Monday, the 16th inst. The G. reports only 34 hours from city to city.

By an extra of the _Corpus Christi Gazette_, dated on the 12th inst., we learn that they have received dates at that place from the city of Mexico up to the 21st of January, three of four days later than we have received here by way of Pensacola. The dates from the Rio Grande are up to the 16th inst.

The editor of the _Gazette_ publishes several extracts from Mexican papers, which, if any reliance can be placed in them, would go to show that Paredes is endeavoring to raise a heavy force to act against Texas. We copy one item:

On the 15th Jan. Gen. Paredes issued a circular order to all the Governors of States that within forty days from that date, they shall furnish the necessary quota of men to fill up the Army of Invasion to a war complement—60,000 men. The present army does not exceed 40,000. The troops at the capital are constantly drilled with a view to act in large bodies.

The news was brought to Corpus Christi by dispatch. The editor of the _Gazette_ says that the bearer reports a considerable force of Commissioners or Mexican Customs Guards, near the mouth of the Grullo or San Gertrudes, within less than twenty leagues of the camp at Corpus Christi. Another party has been seen about the same distance from that place—but a considerable distance from the Gulf, in the interior—watching for return parties of Mexican traders.

The following item we take from the _Gazette_ of the 12th inst:

A large party of traders arrived here last night, bringing in nearly 1000 mules and horses of superior quality. They saw Lieut. Hamilton, having about forty men of the 2d Dragoons and fifteen wagons on the 9th inst., and within a short distance of the rendezvous of a commission party.

The editor of the Gazette thinks there is no truth in the reports brought here by way of Pensacola of the revolt of Arista. That officer, it would seem from the reports of traders, was at his hacienda near Monterey on the 25th January, where he had retired on resigning the command of the army of the North.

The editor of the Gazette deems it unadvisable for the present force at Corpus Christi to march upon the Rio Grande, not thinking it strong enough. He is of the opinion that within twenty days the Mexicans can have 25,000 men within two days march of Point Isabel.

The Corpus Christi Gazette says:

The Hon. Mr. Slidell left the City of Mexico to return to the United States on the 17th January. The passport for which he applied was refused him by the government, but he was furnished with an escort to Vera Cruz. The passport was refused upon the ground that he was not a Special Minister of the United States for the settlement of the affairs of Texas—his appointment being that of a Minister Plenipotentiary, which was in violation of the agreement made with Herrera's Government to receive a Special Minister for a special purpose only.

Our correspondent at New Orleans writes us under date of the 14th instant as follows:

I am just in possession of an item of news on Mexican affairs which I believe can be relied on. The garrison at Matamoras has declared in favor of General Paredes' government, and Arista has been suspended from the command of the Army in the North. Thus the fresh attempt at revolution in the distracted country has been defeated in the very outset. – BALT. AMER

Information from Mexico

By the arrival of the brig Titj. Capt. Brown, Havanna, we have advices, brought by the British steamer Fevmot, from Vera Cruz to the 31st Jan, and from the city of Mexico to the 27th. These advices are several days later than we had previously received, but the intelligence has nevertheless been mostly anticipated. We find them in our Havanna exchanges—our Mexican files not coming to hand.

From the tenor of the papers before us we infer that Gen Arista has attempted no revolution—has made no movement whatever against the Government of Gen. Paredea. The news which reached us by way of Pensacola of his movements cannot be of authentic. El Diario de Gobierno, of the 21st Jan, says that the whole country has given  its  to the plan of San Louis Potosi. Nothing is said of the Yucatan, though the Havanna papers were fully aware that he had withdrawn from the Mexican confederacy.

By this arrival no light whatever is thrown upon the actions of Mr. Slidell. It is mentioned that after repeated *, he obtained an escort to leave Mexico. It is somewhat singular that this most important matter should be shrouded in mystery. In Gen Almonte's letter, which we do not recollect to have seen before, in which he accepted the office of Secretary of War and Marine, there occurs a photograph in which he speaks of the embarrassments of the Government; of his desires to co-operate in the preservation of order, "promptly-re-established," and of making preparations for "the campaign of Texas." Neither in this nor to other documents do we see anything to confirm the report of raising an army of 60,000 men for the for the recovery of Texas. But measures have been taken beyond all doubt, to increase the effective military force of Mexico, and the war for Texas is the single pretext for the same.

The Minister of the Treasury is taking energetic measures to reduce to order the affairs of his department. He has forbidden the Governors of the several Departments to contract loans, and has ordered the "centralization" of the revenues appropriated to the different departments. But these revenue measures are somewhat indistinct. Not so however, the remittance of $50,000 to the army of the north, which is announced in the memorial of the 25th.

The importation of cotton at the port of Vera Cruz is allowed upon the payment of $10 a bale.
The Monitor Constitutional of the 231, says that the Baron Gros has been appointed to settle the differences between France and Mexico. (We think this appointment has before been announced.)

The Mexican editors continue to exhibit great suspicion, and even alarm, in regard to the United States naval forces on their Pacific Coast. Our readers need not be informed as to that squadron; but the Mexicans attribute to Com. Sloat as ominous menace: That in cause Mexico should declare war against the United States, he would take possession of the Mexican armed vessels, and with them blockade the Mexican ports, leaving his own squadron free for more interesting operations upon the coast. The Mexicans grieve over this personal menace of the American Commodore, but they are not a little pleased that both France and England have strong naval force on the Pacific coast to watch "the American forces, and see that the property of their countrymen is respected."

The "call" for the assembling of a Mexican Congress has been made. The act was celebrated as a national holiday, with every demonstration of joy. We do not find the particular day noted for the convening of this Congress and presume the Convocation to have reference to the election, rather than the meeting of this body.

A minister from the King of Prussia has arrived at Vera Cruz.

The Memorial Historico of the 18th January, commenced the emphcity of the habits of the Provisional President, his accessibility to all classes, and indefatigable attention to business. He has not taken up his residence in the National Palace, visiting it only at certain hours for dispatch of sts.

A committee has been appointed by him for the purpose of digesting a complete reorganization of affairs—a plan of Government and policy. Senores Gomez de la Cortica, Franciscos Faguogs, and Eduardo de Gorostiza compose this committee, the designs of which are not particularly unfolded. [PP]

RW46v23i18 March 3, 1846: Something Curious.

The Picayune of this morning contains a letter from Corpus Christi, February 14, which says: Col. Cavallo, an agent of General Arista, here, endeavoring to persuade General Taylor not to advance upon the Rio Grande; for if he does, Arista’s party will join Paredes—but if the General remains in his current position, Arista cannot carry out the revolution he has started. Another emissary, probably of Paredes, an alcalde, tells General Taylor, that all is peace on the Rio Grande, and that the Mexicans are looking for American troops to advance for their protection. One thing is certain adds the letter, the camp is full of rumors and we shall move on the Rio Grande, but nobody knows when.- N.O. Cour., Feb 20. [PP]

RW46v23i18 March 3, 1846: Oregon Correspondence.

Mr. J. M. Clayton offered a resolution, calling upon the President of the United States for copies of any correspondence which has taken place in the reference to the Oregon question, it is not incompatible with the public interest, since the 4th of February. Laid over under the *. [PP]

RW46v23i18 March 3, 1846: Oregon debate.

After some unimportant business the Senate proceeded to the special order of the day, and the Oregon debate was resumed.

Mr. Haywood who was entitled to the floor, commenced his speech with an elaborate defence of the President’s course in  to the Oregon negotiation, in the course of which he denounced in no measured terms the * within and been displayed by some of his own party interesting in the manner they had done. The Ashburton Treaty.

Mr. H. then presented a brief view of the state of the Oregon question; and contended that the President now stood where he stood in August last-viz: upon the line 49 deg and that no where in the message could it be shown that he stood upon the 54 deg. 40. Although he believed our title to be clear he had offered to compromised on the 49 deg. * although he had withdrawn the offer, he still held the door open for Great Britain to enter upon that line.

Mr. H. was in favor of this notice, as a great moral weapon to peace in the hands of the Executive. He thought the question must be settled within the year, or it could not be settled at all peaceably—and said he would stand by the President upon the line of 49 deg; and below that line substantially he would not talk about inches. The American people would never consent to yield the territory, be the consequences that may.
Mr. Haywood had some slight alteration with Mr. Allen while commencing upon the remarks of the Senator from  that "England dare not go to war with the United States," and before he closed his speech a motion was carried to adjourn. [PP]

RW46v23i18 March 3, 1846: Mexico.

The last arrival from Mexico represents the new Executive as making extraordinary efforts to raise an army for the invasion of Texas. We have not much confidence in the ability of that Government to make any very grand and decisive demonstration. But it is possible that it may raise the funds and under the lead of a determined man like Paredes, make a vigorous effort to retrieve the ground it has lost. The rulers of Mexico must perceive that the difficulty in which they are at present involved in a struggle for the national existence. It is not merely the loss of Texas, but the independence and integrity of Mexico are threatened. If they submit to the recent dismemberment of their territory, one providence after another, by the same process of American emigration and armed resistance, will fall into the bands of the Anglo-Saxon race. Just as their ancestors sacrificed the unoffending Indian to their avarice and ambition, another race with all the thirst of the old Spaniard for gold and power, and ten times energy and strength, will pour down from the Northern hive in an angry food, sweeping away upon its resistless tide the last vestige of Mexican power.

We have no idea, however, that any thing that Mexico can do will preserve her from her doom. She stands in the shadow of a colossal power. She is in the way of our manifest destiny. A worm, under a giant's uplifted foot, would have a better chance of escape. She may make a desperate rally for life, she has the courage, doubted though it be, she has the patriotic fire, her sons will gather around their homes and altars, and die like true men. But it will be useless. Their fate is fixed. No temporary success, if such shall be gained over our small force upon the frontiers, can prevent the inevitable result. The first trumpet of defiance will sound her own funeral dirge. For every American that falls, a hundred will fill his place. The Western wilderness will become alive with moving myriads of armed men, who will not stop till they have planted the Stars and Stripes upon the Mexican capital, and reveled in wild triumph in the "halls of Montzumas."

If Mexico was a monarchical government, we should feel less pity for her condition, though even then, we might indulge a natural sympathy for the weak in a struggle with the strong. But when we regard her as a sister Republic, imitating the model of our own Constitution, and looking up to us as an example, the claim upon our compassion is irresistible. We feel humbled at the idea, that a country, rich and powerful like our own, should covet the possessions of a poor and defenceless neighbor, long allied to us by the fraternal bonds of kindred political principals. We are reminded of the rich man, with many flocks and herds, who coveted and seized the one lamb of his poor neighbor. Let us avoid the curse which will be certain to follow similar injustice. [PP]

RW46v23i19 March 6, 1846: The British and American Tariffs.

The following remarks were made by the Union, in publishing the news brought by the Cambria:

"Great an substantial modifications of the English tariff system are to take place; tending, as we conceive, directly to a very considerable extension and improvement of our commercial relations with the British empire. Indian corn and buck wheat are, by Sir Robert Peel's plan, to be at once admitted to the English ports free of duty; a sliding scale of diminished duties on other grains is to be adopted, and various other provisions and natural products, grown in great abundance in the valley of the Mississippi, are to be admitted on terms far more favorable than ever before.

No one can doubt that measures such as these are of great importance to us; and we do not hesitate to express our conviction that if legislation in this liberal spirit towards us shall be carried out in good faith, it will be met on our part by a modification of our tariff system, conceived in a spirit of corresponding liberality.

We take occasion to say upon this point, in reference to certain rumors which have been extensively prevalent in some quarters, that we do not doubt for a moment the readiness of the great western sections of our country to rally cordially during the present session of Congress on the democratic platform, for the essential modification and improvement of the tariff of 1842. We know it has been said that between the West and South, there is diversity and even contrariety of sentiment on this subject and that the West is now inclined to recede from the democratic doctrine of a revenue tariff. We reject this opinion as altogether groundless. The West is the great farming region, and it go for a true farmer's tariff against the tariff of 1842. We have entire confidence in the manly and straightforward policy of the West upon this subject; and we fully believe that that the votes of the present Congress will signally attest the harmony of the democratic party on this great and cardinal point in the domestic legislation of the country. England, heretofore pre eminently the country of the restrictive system, is now leading the way to the better policy of commercial freedom. It is not for us to be outdone in such a career- a career in harmony at once with our institutions, with the varied productions and the extended area of the country, with the demonstration of political science, and with the recognized, well settled, and authoritative political creed of the democratic party."

The above article shows pretty clearly the leaning of the Administration. Every one must be struck with the marked contrast of its language and temper, to the belligerent tone of the Government organ before the arrival of the Cambria. Then, to speak with friendship of Great Britain, was a little less than high treason to Polk. The Whigs were British Whigs, aliens in heart, secret traitors, because they did not join the hue and cry against England, and advocate war to the knife for a poor, barren, wretched territory, where no American would permanently settle, if Great Britain should give us a quit-claim deed to the whole concern tomorrow, and which could never be useful except as a kind of Siberia for exiled Americans. The arrival of the Cambria, however, has lifted a thick veil, and the public are beginning to get a peep at the true position of affairs behind the curtain. It would seem, then, that all the fireworks which have been let off by the great pyrotechnist at Washington, were merely for the amusement of the people, that the thundering broadsides which have caused the ship of State to reel with their recoil, have been complementary salutes and that no harm has been intended from the first. The people have all along asked, if we are to have war, why don’t our government prepare! What is Congress about? Why does not the War Department show some signs of life? Why does Mr. Bancroft nod on his post, instead of starting his * off the stocks and recruiting sailors at every port? Nonsense! We were all looking the wrong direction. The Government was preparing. But not in the way we expected. It was not the War, not the Navy, but the Treasury Department, which, under a cloud of smoke from the Oregon combat, was making ready to carry us successfully through our threatening difficulties. Instead of sending a fleet to dispute the empire of the waves, we were sending a Treasury Report, while on the other side not to be out done in liberality, the British Administration met us with "Free Trade." Sir Robert Peel, and "Sir Robert Walker," embrace each other with fraternal love, while the venerable performer upon the Government organ, saying aside the armor he had just done battle upon the Philistines, exclaims, in the spirit of the minstrel monarco of Israel, "Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

We appeal to the extract which we have made from the Union, to show that the are grounds for the belief that the Tariff is to be the offering by which peace is to be ensured between our country and Great Britain. Look at the enumeration which it makes of the advantages proposed by the plan of Sir Robert Peel, the conviction expressed that it will be met by a corresponding reduction of our own Tariff, and the bait so skilfully thrown out by this experienced angler to the West "the great farming region," to come in and assist in the overthrow of the American policy. Here we find the British Premier and the American Editor, both in pursuit of the same object, "the great farming region" of the West. There is the chief theatre of the war spirit. It is the West which is most glorious for Oregon. But it is the west too, which will expect to be principally benefited by the British Free Trade, and Sir Robert, nothing daunted by its patriotism, makes an appeal to its pocket, as the last hope for the preservation of peace, and the promotion of British power.

It is impossible to predict the result of this crafty scheme. It may succeed, it will succeed, unless a true love of country predominates over self interest. It will be attended, no doubt, with one great benefit, the blessing of peace. And what is more, it will make peace with England perpetual. When she has taught us to look to her for supplies of clothing and arms, when she has drained us of our money, and stolen away all "the sinews of war," it will be no longer in our power to resist her aggressivo spirit. She will sit like the old man of the sea, astride the shoulders of your young giant of the West, until he falls, strangled and breathless, beneath the odious burthen. She will accomplish by her arts, that which, in the Revolutionary and the late war, she in a vain endeavored to effect by the cannon and the sword. We fear this Trojan horse of free trade. But thank Heaven, the country is yet secure, unless a British party is to be found within the citadel, who will surrender the key of our strength to the insidious. [PP]

RW46v23119 March 6, 1846: From Texas.

The steamship Galveston, Capt. Wright, arrived yesterday, bringing Galveston papers of the 28th, and Houston of the 25th. The News publishes the act of Congress extending the jurisdiction of our government over Texas, and also the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury Circular from Washington, which accompanied the act of our Congress, fixed the revenue laws should commence their operation. On the faith of the circular, says the News, a large amount of goods was shipped to Galveston under the expectation that they would be admitted free. The Texas Treasury instructions, however required the collectors to continue their functions in conformity with the laws of Texas until the 16th of February, and thereafter if a Collector, appointed by the U.S. Government, should not have then arrived. Thus were created say that paper, forty-seven days of conflicting jurisdiction, duties after the 31st December not being collectable under the United States law, but collectable under that of Texas. The News, in nearly two columns of comment upon the state of things, is severe upon the Texas authorities. The Texas legislature met at Austin on the 16th, and both Houses were duly organized. Gen. Burleson was unanimously elected President pro tem. Of the Senate, and Mr. Crump of Austin, Speaker of the House. On the 17th the votes for Governor were counted, when it appeared that Gen. Henderson had received 8910 votes, and Dr. Miller 1672. The Houston Star says.

Gen. Darnell received a majority of 48 votes of the official returns, but no official returns were received from the counties of Bastrop, San Patricio, Jackson, Jefferson, Braesos and Lamar. In these counties Col. Horton received a majority of about 600 votes. If the official returns of these counties had been furnished to the Secretary of State, Col. Horton would have been declared elected. Gen. Darnell was not in Austin when the votes were counted. He has been declared by the legislature to be duly elected. His friends think he will resign.

The inauguration of Governor was to place on the 18th. The U.S. Senatorial election would probably be deferred until the 25th February, or first week in March. Gen. Rusk was a candidate. The Star thought Col. V. E. Howard would be appointed Attorney General. Judge Hemphill, Chief Justice, and Judge Lipscomb, and Judge Wheeler, or Judge Boylor, Associates. Austin was crowded with visitors.
The steamboat "Kate Ward" ascended the Colorado a short time since as far as Bastrop; and the Captain intended to proceed up the river as far as Austin; if practicable. The people of that section are highly elated at the prospect of rendering the Colorado navigable.

Majors Chase and Ogden returned to the city a few days since, in the Cutter Woodbury, from Corpus Christi. Maj. C. informs us that all the information he has acquired strengthens his opinion of the practicability, ease and importance of opening the interior navigation along the coast of Texas from the Sabine to the Rio Grande. Comparatively a very few miles of excavation will connect all the rivers and bays, having their outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, with each other along the whole extent of our southeastern boundary; and thus open internal navigation from Louisiana to Mexico, secure at all times from the dangers of ocean storms, and completely protected in case of war, from the attacks of hostile fleets in the gulf.

In a military point of view this is a measure of vital importance to the security and interest of the whole southern country.- Civilian. [PP]

The following letter, intended only for the eye of a friend when written, has been deemed worthy of publication on account of its calm and dispassionate views. The writer has retired from public life, after having occupied a prominent position in the State and National Councils, which afforded him the means of forming correct opinions upon topics of general interest.

Springdale, Fredrick Co. Va, Feb. 18, '46. My Dear Sir; I differ from you entirely in regard to the probabilities of a war with Great Britain. Leaving altogether out of the view the fact that Mr. Polk has never called a secret session, nor recommended an enlargement of the military and marine force of the country- nor an augmentation on, in any form of its pecuniary means. I do not think the history or the internal evidence afforded, by the pending negotiation, warrant any serious apprehension. If any thing could excite a fear in my mind, it would result from the shameless resolution of the Baltimore Convention, and the conduct of the boisterous Hotepurs in the Congress of the United States, committed perhaps to the mandate of that resolution. Great Britain evidently shuns a war – a majority of the people of the United States certainly do not desire one. Mere punctilio or pride may prompt individuals to declare concession, but they will hardly ever precipitate two nations into war, when the bulk of the people on both sides are amicably disposed. Mr. Polk knows too well this disposition of his constituents, and through for party purposes or ulterior personal designs, he may vaunt a high tone and assume a bold front, compromise he must, and compromise he will, ere three months pass away.

I am too much a man of business now, to canvass, with much care the State papers or political news of the day, but a few hours of leisure at night have enabled me to examine, with some degree of attention, the claims of the two governments to Oregon; and while I think no power on earth has such a clear and irresistible claim to the whole or any part of Oregon, as Mr. Polk would assume, still I think the title of Great Britain to the Northern portion of that territory is the most valid, while ours to the Southern embracing the Columbia river, is the clearest. In my humble library, I found two volumes of the journal of Alexander McKensie, containing a narrative of two explorations from Hudson's Bay to the Pacific, made in 1789 and 1793. In these volumes he refers to the English fishing and hunting establishments and settlements, at Vancouver, Pugett's Sound, & c., extending into the interior as far as Hudson's Bay. What is remarkable, while he designates the 49th parallel of latitude, East of the Rocky mountains, as the future division between the British possessions and the United States, on the ground that that parallel leaves to the United States the head waters of the Missouri, as it is called I believe) her title seems to me weak, for her navigator, Cook, passed the mouth of the river, denied its existence- named one of its capes Disappointment, on account of his failure, while Astoria was settled, after the Spanish discoveries of the river, by our people and restored to us after its capture during the war. Their failure, then, either to discover or settle the Columbia, leaves no claim to the country contiguous to the Columbia river, which rises in the 54 deg 40m. N. latitude, although that river was explored by the British, it being an inferior tributary of the Columbia. But how is our title to this high degree of latitude established, even if we have a just claim to the country adjacent to the mouth of the Columbia? It is no better claim than would have been that to the country about Santa Fe, previous to the acquisition of Texas, for the reason that. In that country, were found the sources of the Arkansas and Red River. The discovery of the mouth of the river by consent, rather than the usage of nations, has given to the discoverer a right to the country upon its sources, but only when that right has never been contested.

Now, Sir remember this claim was asserted ten years or more, prior to Lewis & Clarke's discoveries. This certainly shows a pretension of claim and title, which cannot be the score of discovery and settlement near the mouth of the Columbia, and thence up the Tacheloue or Frazer's river, (as it is now called I believe) her title seems to me weak, for her navigator, Cook, passed the mouth of the river, denied its existence- named one of its capes Disappointment, on account of his failure, while Astoria was settled, after the Spanish discoveries of the river, by our people and restored to us after its capture during the war. Their failure, then, either to discover or settle the Columbia, leaves no claim to the country contiguous to the Tacheloue or Frazer's river, which rises in the 54 deg 40m. N. latitude, although that river was explored by the British, it being an inferior tributary of the Columbia. But how is our title to this high degree of latitude established, even if we have a just claim to the country adjacent to the mouth of the Columbia? It is no better claim than would have been that to the country about Santa Fe, previous to the acquisition of Texas, for the reason that. In that country, were found the sources of the Arkansas and Red River. The discovery of the mouth of the river by consent, rather than the usage of nations, has given to the discoverer a right to the country upon its sources, but only when that right has never been contested.

However, let the question of title pass: For my part, I wish the Pacific Ocean washed the base of the Rocky Mountains. That Western slope in a quarter of a century will bring this country into trouble: commercially, however, it is important and that is all that can be said for it. With 700 whale ships, and a growing East India and China commerce, we want harbors upon the Pacific. The mouth of the Columbia is a poor harbor. The whole coast of the Pacific, from Vancouver to Monterey, is iron bound, with scarcely an inlet or shelter for ships. The grand objects, with both England and our country, our harbors. Both countries assumes high pretensions, to give room to fall. England asserts a claim to the mouth of the Columbia, that she may recede and secure Vancouver and its harbors. We pretend to 54 deg. 40m. that we may obtain Vancouver and its apparent advantages. In my opinion, something like the suggested by Gallatin and rivers will ultimately be adopted. I infer this from the whole temper of the discussion on the subject- the correspondence between Ministers, and the geographical and commercial fitness and appositeness of things. I have not here, in the country, access to any good maps, but from an examination of such as I have, if they do not betray me into error, it strikes me inconveniences would result from an undeviating adherence to the 49th parallel of latitude which I have not seen adverted to. Assuming that line as the basis of a compromise, slight departures might be made from it without material detriment to either country. For example: One of the navigable waters of the Columbia is Clarke river, which rises in a degree south of its great recipient, yet in its course makes a large bend North of 49 deg., nearly reaching 50 deg. A Conventional line should not cut this river in two. In my limited vision of the proper line, it has struck me that an extension of the 49th parallel West of the Rocky Mountains until it strikes Clarke's river; thence with the Northern margin of that river until it flows Southward to the same latitude; thence a straight line to the highest navigable point of the Tacouche or Frazer’s River in 50 deg.; thence down its Western margin to 48 deg. 30m; thence to Pugett's sound and Strait to the Ocean, would leave us the undisturbed possession of all the Columbia River and its chief tributaries: While England would be secured in the possession of all of Vancouver and its best, though not all its harbors; and she would enjoy that next desideration, a compact quadrangular territory between the ocean and Frazer’s river forever connecting her with her interior Hudson’s Bay interests, by continuity of country and settlement, if not by water navigation.

It is evident, from Pakenham’s tone, that his country doesn’t want war, and maugre the daunting bluster of Mr. Polk in his inaugural, he, as well as his "Organ" have cooled off. True Mr. Buchanan declines arbitration, but it is worth the blessing coyness of the loving maiden, who says to her lover: "Oh don’t! Pray don’t ask my mamma or papa; we can arrange this matter between ourselves. Submit your proposals in writing, or in some other form, at some other one, and as there are no two (people) on the earth more closely bound together by the ties of (love), so there are none who ought to be more able or willing to do each other justice without the interposition of third parties."

The diplomacy of Washington differs from that of any other place on earth perhaps. Protoculs and formula of treaties are frequently dispensed with, and private interviews and understandings precede, if they do not wholly supercede, clerical formalities. The Ashburton Treaty, it is understood, was concocted at the dinner table, and now we may guess the sinahude. A game is going on between Pakenham, an English gentlemen, and Buchanan, who is a good fellow, not the worse say you for being a bachelor, in which after various good natured attempts to check mate each other, they will get tired, take a glass of wine, damn the game and draw it. Washington is a city, you know of "magnificent distance." The Grand Witmagenott assembled at one end- the Exclusives and Diplomats at the other. The I atter, small in number, dispel enui, by the diner party or evening coterie. My word for it, Pakenham and Buchanan have often stood cheek by jowl pointing upon the map, and tracing a boundary where it may be, or should be. The qualified notice, as it passed the House of Representatives, even should it pass the senate, ought not and can not give offence, as Mr. McLane has probably assured his Government in the suppressed part of the late correspondence. Lord Aberdeen, with all his frankness, could scarcely have given any other answer than he did to our Minister. That response certainly does not indicate any fixedness of purpose hostile to our country, while all the inferences, I think, should be the other way. A more direct answer would commit his Government, and offend in a quarter, where offence and a blow would come together. On the whole, I have no fear of war; and if I were a merchant about freighting a ship to China, I would not add 1 10th of 1 per cent. Insurance on account of the present condition of public affars, the President finds time to step from the great theatre of State and wreak this vengeance upon a handful of innocent clerks. We hope that the press of Virginia will also find time, in the midst of Oregon and Texas discussions, on the record these barbarous acts, to old them up to universal shame, and to denounce and anathematize that infamous system of Proscription which finds such a favor with the General Government, but RW46v23j21 March 13, 1846: The Axe Again At Work.

We perceive by some of the papers, that a now batch Clerks has been lately removed, entirely, we suppose, on account of a difference of political opinion with Mr. Polk and his party. In the midst of a most exciting and critical condition of public affars, the President finds time to step from the great theatre of State and wreak this vengeance upon a handful of innocent clerks. We hope that the press of Virginia will also find time, in the midst of Oregon and Texas discussions, on the record these barbarous acts, to old them up to universal shame, and to denounce and anathematize that infamous system of Proscription which finds such a favor with the General Government, but
By the mail of yesterday we received private advices from Pensacola, announcing the arrival there, on the evening of the 1st inst., of the U.S. brig Lawrence from Vera Cruz in eleven days. Unfortunately we received no papers by this arrival, but our correspondent informs us that there had been no change in affairs in Mexico. A letter from Vera Cruz dated the 18th, from a most responsible source, induces us to believe confidently, that nothing like a revolution has occurred in Mexico since the 1st of February, up to which day we have had advices by way of Havana. The Lawrence brought dispatches to the Government from our Minister, Mr. Slidell. This gentleman was still at Jalapa waiting instructions from Washington.

The U.S. brig Somera was to sail from Pensacola on the 21st for Vera Cruz.
Another letter states that there was great reason to believe that Mr. Slidell's treatment had been such as must lead to hard blows with Mexico. The writer says that the course of the leading men of Mexico had been of a nature most outrageous in the matter of the reception of a Minister from this country, so outrageous, that no other recourse than a resort to war left us. The writer thinks that it must be declared immediately. [PP]

RW46v23i22 March 17, 1846: A Monarchy in Mexico.

This subject, which we first took to be an idle conjecture, seems to be treated seriously by the Paris Journal des Debats and The London Times. The Journal says:

"This return of the Spanish American Republic to monarchical ideas is a serious subject for meditation: they turn their spirits to a monarchy as their only means of safety."

The Times says:

"The results of Mexican independence are before the world. The people of Mexico cannot be insensible to their own ruin, however powerless they may be to avert it. Under such circumstances, what would be the effect of the reappearance on the shores of America of that flag of Spain which was originally planted there by the great discoverers and captains of former ages, and which left indestructible traces of its pristine authority in the colonial descendents of the Spanish people? It would be as easy to accomplish the conquest of Mexico at the present moment, with a handful of the troops which form the garrison of Cuba, as in the days of the aboriginal Mexican princes. Would it be impracticable to accompany such an expedition with political institutions fitted to the wants of the Mexican people, and a calculated to rescue them from the perils which threaten their national existence? When we threw out this suggestion, some months ago, we confess that it wore an air of romance, and night be received with incredulity. But the more the world has learned of the utter weakness of Mexico, and the unquestionable designs of the United States, the more urgent has the case become and the more practienble the application of the only remedy which has been thought of. As far as Spain herself is concerned, such an enterprise would not be unworthy of the man whose military success and whose resolute character have already restored so much of the luster of the Spanish monarchy." RW46v23i22 March 17, 1846: Mr. Webster On Oregon.

We publish the brief, but calm, well digested, and statesman like remarks of Mr. Webster upon the Oregon subject. They render the point clear beyond dispute, that there can be no pacific settlement of the Oregon question, except by compromise. England will never yield the whole of Oregon. In this opinion, indeed, Gen. Cass seems fully to concur. The question is, will the Administration negotiate, or not? It has the decision of war or peace in its own hands. [PP]

RW46v23i22 March 17, 1846: Later from Mexico.

We have been permitted to make the following extract from a letter lately received from Vera Cruz, under date of February 18th:

"Although the recent revolution has given much dissatistaction to a majority of the departmental governments, the country remains quiet. It does not appear that General Arista has as yet declared against the authority of Paredes, though it is highly probable he will do so."

A rumor has reached here which appears to have some foundation, that Sonora, Sinaloa, and California have pronounced against the government.

Mr. Slidell is still at Jalapa. Our citizens and commerce remain unmolested.

There are at present before this place, French, English, and Spanish vessels of war. [PP]

RW46v23i22 March 17, 1846: The Oregon Question, Mr. Webster’s Remarks

The following are resolutions proposed by Mr. Colquilt, of Georgia is the U.S. Senate.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives. That notice be given, in the terms of the treaty, forabrogating the convention made between Great Britain and the United States on the twentieth of October," eighteen hundred and twenty seven, immediately after the close of the present session of Congress, unless the President, in his discretion, shall consider it expedient to defer it to a later period."

"Sec. 2. And be it further resolved. That it is earnestly desired that the long standing controversy, respecting limits in the Oregon territory, be speedily settled by negotiation and compromise, in order to tranquilize the public mind, and to preserve the friendly relations of the two countries."

In the Senate on Thursday week, the question came up for consideration and a long debate ensued. We here copy the remarks of Mr. Webster, as reported by the National Intelligencer:

I shall vote said he, for both portions of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, (Mr. Colquitt). I am prepared to do so. At the opening of the present session the President, uncalled upon by the Senate, sent to both Houses the diplomatic correspondence which had taken place between his Secretary of State and the Representative of the British Government here, recommending at the same time the giving of notice to that Government the termination of the convention of 1818. The correspondence thus submitted has very properly been made a subject of remark in this House. I will say nothing in regard to the propriety of sending that correspondence here. I suppose such a step could hardly be justifiable, save on the ground that the negotiation was ended by the rejection of the President's offer of the parallel of 49 as the boundary, and the immediate withdrawal of that offer; because, is the general practice of Governments, it has been found very inconvenient to publish the letters which may have passed between negotiators before the end of the negotiation has been arrived at. But as the President had sent us this correspondence, and as the Senate was called upon to act on the proposition of notice, I thought it would expedite our decision to have before us also any further correspondence, which might have taken place subsequently to that first sent. Accordingly moved the call, and in response to it, the more recent correspondence has been laid before us, from which we learn the offer by the British Envoy to submit the question to arbitration, and the rejection of that offer by the Executive.

Now without meaning at this time to go into any sort of examination of the course of the Executive in this matter, or indulging in any remark expressive of an unfriendly feeling towards the Administration, or any disposition to embarrass the Government, for I feel nothing of the kind, and nothing is further from my intention, I must still be permitted to say that the existing posture of affairs is such as to render it quite desirable that we should know what is the option of the executive in regard to this measure and its consequences. Nobody doubts that the two Houses of Congress have a perfect authority to terminate the Oregon convention, without offense to any body, because this is our specified right and its exercise can present no just cause of complaint in any quarter. But though this is an undoubted position, yet it must be considered in connection with the circumstances which have been made to surround it. The resolution of notice has passed the other House of Congress with a qualification, or addition, or by whatever name it should be called, which changes in some respect from being a mere naked notice to termination. It comes with that qualification or condition for adoption here. Other propositions are offered in the Senate, and are entertained as a fit subjects of consideration.

The Senator from Kentucky, in one part of his speech, says that he will leave the entire responsibility of this whole controversy where the Constitution has placed it, and contends that those who have the power to conduct the foreign diplomacy of the country are responsible to the country and to the world for the manner in which they shall exercise that power. This is certainly very just, but it raises a doubt whether we ought to do more than simply to give, or refuse to give, the naked notice. But some modification of the mere naked notice has been made already in the other House; and there is, as I believe, a conviction on the part of a large majority of the Senate that it should, to a certain extent, be qualified. Now, I hold that, under these circumstances, we have a right to know in what point of view the Executive himself regards this notice; what are the consequences to which, in the judgment of the Executive, the notice is to lead.

When speaking on this subject some six week ago I said it was most obvious that the President could not expect war; because he did not act as the Chief Magistrate of such a nation must be expected to act, if, charged as he was with the defence of the country, he expected any danger of its being assaulted by the most formidable Power upon earth. I still say there is nothing in the Executive communications to show us that the President does expect a war. He must, then, expect nothing but a continuance of the present dispute, or a settlement of it by negotiation. But how is it to be settled? On what terms? On what basis? All that we hear is, "the whole of Oregon or none." And yet there is to be negotiation. We cannot conceal from ourselves or the world the (the next couple lines are blurred). And yet we are to negotiate! What is negotiation? Does any gentleman expect that the Administration are, by negotiation, to persuade Great Britain to surrender the whole of what she holds in Oregon? They may do this: I cannot say they will not. If that is their expectation, let them try their hand in it; I wish them success. That is, I wish that we may get "all Oregon," if we can; but let our argument be fair, and let us settle the question reasonably.

But I do not understand the position we are placed in. The Executive seems to be for negotiation, but against taking any thing but the whole of Oregon. What is to be the ground of negotiation? What is the basis on which it is to proceed? If the Executive has made up his mind not to treat for less than the whole, he should say so, and throw himself at once on the two Houses of Congress.

I am entitled to make this remark, because it cannot be disguised that the probable effort of this notice is viewed very differently by very intelligent gentlemen, all friends of the Administration, on this floor. The Senator from Georgia (Mr. Colquitt) regards it as a measure tending to peace; he expects, he hopes peace from it, and he thinks the expression of such opinions as he avows will enable the Administration ration to secure the peace of the country. There are certain other gentlemen, and among them the honorable Senator from Michigan, (Mr. Cass,) who are much less ardent in their hopes of peace. That Senator's impression has been, that, if we pass this notice, the
Mr. Cass here rose amid a general smile, and said, no, (much laughter.) no; I never used the word; and I beg leave to contradict the statement. I have been afraid of war. Thus I allow, has been my position; and I hope I shall never be misunderstood nor misrepresented. I do not mean to say that the Senator from Massachusetts intends to misrepresent me.

Mr. Webster. Certainly not.

Mr. Cass. What I said was, that we were called on by the President to give this notice; that if we gave it, and there was no negotiation, and England did not recede, and we went on to carry out the other measures recommended by the President, that then war would be certain. (a laugh) I will repeat my position. I say, if we give these notice, and here shall be no negotiation; and if England adheres to her pretensions, and we go on to take possession of Oregon while she is there in possession, then there will be- gentlemen may use any term they please.

Mr. Webster. The only contingency the Senator fear is that England will continue her claim. Now, I would ask the honorable Senator whether he expects that England will ever surrender all of Oregon to any Power on earth?

Mr. Cass. I have my doubts that she will. I asked, as long ago as in October last, when she had ever relinquished any claim to territory she ever had set up.

Mr. Webster. Exactly; and it comes to the same thing. The gentleman thinks we shall not recede, and England will not recede; and, then, what more likely to happen than war. It was the Senator's argument, and not any particular. It was the Senator's argument, and not any particular expression he employed, which gave me the idea that such was his impressions. I do not charge the gentleman with saying that "war was inevitable," but what he did say yet things in my years, and on every return of the like language I am reminded the sentence with which the Roman Senator ended all his speeches, "delenda est Carthago."

I am desirous of expressing the sentiment (without wishing to embarrass the Administration; if negotiations are pending I withhold my tongue; my tongue shall be blistered before I will say anything against our own title so long as negotiations are pending; but the President must see the embarrassment under which we stand: I am willing to aid the Administration, and will aid it to obtain all to which we are justly entitled- that I must know something of the views, expectations, ends, and objects of the President in recommending this notice. I cannot much longer be quiet in the existing posture of affairs when no measures of defence are recommended to us, but negotiation is held out as likely to bring the question to a settlement by England giving up the whole matter in dispute. My doubt of that is as strong as that expressed by the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Cass). I say here, so far as my own knowledge goes, that it is not the judgment of this country, that it is the judgment of this Senate, that the Government of the United States shall run the hazard of a war for Oregon, by renouncing as no longer fit for consideration propositions made by ourselves to Great Britain thirty years ago, and repeated again and again before the world. I do not speak of any specific propositions, but of the general plan so justly suggested by the Senator from Missouri, (Mr. Beaton,) of separating the interest of British subjects and American citizens beyond the Rocky Mountains. I repeat the assertion that it is not the judgment of this country that we are bound to reject our own propositions, made over and over again twenty and thirty years ago. I do not believe that such is the judgment of this Senate. I have the fullest belief that the propositions proposed by the gentleman from Georgia concur with the views of a large majority of this body.

(A voice. Yes, of two thirds)

A gentleman near me says two thirds of it and I am willing to try that question today, this hour, this minute. I am ready now to take the question whether this difficulty shall or shall not be settled by compromise. Compromise I can understand; but negotiation, with a fixed resolution to take and not to give, with a predetermination not to take less than the whole, is what I do not and cannot understand in diplomacy. I wish we could take that question now not for the purpose of giving information in any quarter, but I wish to put an end to the prevent distressing, distracting, annoying state of things. There are many things which we should attend to, all of which are greatly and materially embarrassed by the present position of this affair. It is proposed, for example, to remodel the tariff. But with what view? If it is to augment revenue, or reduce revenue? If it is to augment revenue, then I ask, is that with a view to war? If it is to reduce revenue, then I ask, is that with a view to peace? How can we possibly know how to act, without the least knowledge whether there is a likelihood of the continuance of peace, or whether we are on the eve of an outbreaking war? The embarrassment in the private affairs of men is equally pressing. The nation possesses a great Comerce. New it is easy for a gentleman to say, "I disregard commerce on a question of the national honor." So do I when it is the question. It the honor of my country is attacked, I will say, in the language once used by a member of the other House, "Perish commerce!" But these are interests not to be trifled with. These great interest of this country, in which we are involved the daily bread of thousands and millions of men, are not to be put in jeopardy for objects not connected in reality either with the honor or the substantial interest of the country. I wish, therefore, as soon as it is practicable, to obtain and expression of the opinion of the Senate. If it shall be the opinion of this body that it is best to give the naked notice recommended in the Executive message, that will throw the responsibility upon either on the Executive to the fullest extent. I am for getting a question either on the naked notice, or on notice in some modified form, such as shall the express what I believe tho be the judgment both of the Senate and the country.

Other Senators expressed their views on the subject, but no question was taken. Many of the friends of Mr.
Colquitt’s resolution desired that a vote upon them might be taken at once, being confident of success; but a motion to adjourn, which takes precedence of all others, was made by Mr. Breese of Illinois, and was carried. [PP]

RW46v23i23 March 20, 1846: Later From Mexico.

The French bark Anax, Capt. Pomparres, arrived here yesterday from Vera Cruz, having sailed on the 23rd two or three days latter than the U.S. brig Lawrence brought. The news is not important, if we may judge from the imperfect files which we have received. The prominent feature in the news is the open canvassing of the question of erecting a constitutional monarchy in Mexico. This is the common theme of conversation at Vera Cruz, and in a late number of the Memorial Historice- the successor of El Siglo XIX- is an earnest article written to show that monarchies are no more exempt from revolutionary disturbances than Republics. The question is illustrated from general history, and especially from that of Spain. The subject has evidently taken hold of men’s minds seriously, and the probability of a revolution founded noon the desire of obtaining a stronger and more stable Government was the town talk.

Mr. Slidell was still at Jalapa, awaiting instructions from Washington. Upon receiving his orders, a short interval would elapse before receiving the definitive action of the Mexican Government; but we presume that the next arrival will inform us, either of Mr. Slidell’s reception, or of his return to the United States.

An intelligent passenger by the Anax thinks there is scarcely a chance of war between the two countries: that Mexico, when it comes to the pitch, will receive our Minister with the best grace possible.

The Falmouth, St. Mary’s and Porpoise, of the U.S. Gulf Squadron, were lying at Vera Cruz when the Anax left there on the 23rd. As we have before mentioned, the appearance of so large a force, when unexpected, alarmed the citizens of Vera Cruz not a little. When the Anax came out, she saw a vessel, supposed to be an American frigate, going into Vera Cruz. Can it have been the Raritan, which was reported as bound thither from Rio at our last account.

The Anax, we should mention, brought $65,000 in specie, and twenty four passengers.

The Mexican steamer Guadaloupe left Vera Cruz on to 22nd for Tampico, with 600 troops on board.

Don Angel Trias, the Governor of the State of Chihuahua, thus, has resigned his office, after having refused adherence to the power of Paredes.

Robberies still continue very frequent in Mexico. One occurred on the 9th, directly opposite the National Palace, three thousand dollars in specie being stolen. The streets are patrolled by the military, but there is no efficient police.

So strained are the means of the new Government in Mexico, that the clerks of the different Departments have not touched their pay since the new order of things. The Secretary of the Treasury, having recovered from a temporary illness is urged to give his attention to this needy class, if he would prevent great distress.

A new paper, El Boletin Militar , assures the public that Gen. D. Juan Alvarez has not disposed of any thing belonging to the expedition to the Californias, has been charged against him. Such things do happen sometimes in Mexico!

Gen. Ampudia does not appear to have moved further than Celaya, on his march to the army of the North. Some scandalous reports had been in circulation about him, but one paper contradicts them.

On the 6th, Gen. Paredes reviewed the troops of the capital, and there was a brilliant shame fight on the occasion. In returning to town in the evening, several accidents happened. One poor fellow was run over and trampled by the cavalry. [PP]

RW46v23i24 March 24, 1846 p1c2: The Army of Texas.

It will be seen by the important news in another column, that the army of Texas is on the advance, and we may soon expect other tidings of stirring interest. If a strong Mexican army be really in the neighborhood of the point to which our forces are advancing, a collision is not improbable; and unless our Generals commit the error of under ratting their enemy, we may soon hear of a new triumph of American arms. But in such a cause, and with such a foe even victory loses half its charms. Hitherto our sword has never been unsheathed, save in the defence of our own territory. Now, it is to be drawn, for the first time, in a war of aggression – never, perhaps, to be returned to its scabbard until our "manifest destiny" has arrived at its complete fulfillment, in the dominion of the United States over the whole of North America. Gen. Taylor, in his proclamation, pays proper respect to the religious feelings of the people when we are about to subjugate. We have no doubt that he will execute his duty with

GENERAL ORDERS ISSUED BY BT. BRIG’R GENERAL Z. TAYLOR OF THE ARMY OF OCCUPATION, AT CORPUS CHRISTI.

Galveston, March 12, 9 o’clock, A.M.

The Galveston has just arrived from Aransas Pass. The main body of Gen. Taylor’s Army had marched towards Brazos St. Jago and the last Regiment with Gen. T. and staff, was to leave this morning. The rumor of a large force of Mexican troops being about to oppose the concentration of Gen. Taylor’s forces had occasioned great excitement. The troops of Gen. T. are said to be in high spirits in the expectations of a conflict with the enemy. The following orders have been issued:

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION.

Corpus Christi, March 8, 1846.

As the Army is about marching to the frontier on a delicate service, the Commanding General wishes it distinctly understood that no person, not properly attached to it, will be permitted to accompany the troops, or establish themselves in their vicinity, either on the route or on the Rio Grande, on any pretence whatever. It may save many individuals useless expense and annoyance to be informed that rigid measures will be taken to enforce this regulation, which is deemed necessary for the intrest of the public service.

By direction of the General.

W.S. Bliss, Asst. Adjt., General.

Head Quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, March 8, 1846.

Orders No. 30

The army of occupation being about to take position on the left bank of the Rio Grande, under the orders of the Executive of the United States, the General commanding deems it proper to express his hope that the movement will prove beneficial to all concerned, and that nothing may be wanted on an part to insure so desirable a result, he sinetly enjoys upon his command the most scrupulous regard for the rights of all persons who may be found in the peaceable pursuit of their respective avocations, residing on both sides of the Rio Grande. No person under any pretence whatever, will interfere in any manner with the civil rights and religious privileges of the people, but will pay the utmost respect to both. Whatever may be required for the use of the army will be purchased by the proper departments at the highest market price. The General commanding is happy to say that he has entire confidence in the patriotism and discipline of the army under his command, and feels assured that his orders, as above expressed, will be strictly observed.

Z. Taylor, Br. General,
U.S. Army Commanding.

The 3rd Brigade commanded by Col. Whistler, composed of the 3rd Regiment of Infantry, commanded by Lieut. Col. J. Garland; will take final leave of their old Corpus Christi encampment, on Wednesday, the 11th instant, to join the main Army.

The squadron of transports are to leave on the 20th inst. under convoy of the cutter Woodbury, Capt Foster, and the steamer Monmouth.

The proclamation above has been published in the Spanish language, and issued to the inhabitants of the Rio Grande.

The First Brigade under the command of Brevet Brigadier General Win. J. Worth, composed of the Battalion of Artillery, commanded by Lieut. Col. Thomas Childs, and the eighth Regiment of Infantry commanded by Lieut. Col. W. G. Beik, will leave the encampment on the morning of the 9th, for the same destination.

The steamer Cincinnati, and almost every thing else is said to be charted for the use of the Army.

The 2nd Brigade, commanded by Lieut. Col. J. S. Melatosh of the 5th Infantry and composed of the 5th Regiment of Infantry, under Major T. Brown, will strike their tents on the morning of the 10th, and take up the line of march for the Depot.

Gen. Mejia is said to have returned to Matamoras on the 2nd. The Mexican troops this side the Rio Grande (if any) are said to be under the command of Garcia, Canales and Severiego. It is reported that Gen. Taylor has made a requisition for more troops—we doubt whether he has done so, or whether he will need them.

Corpus Christi has been literally abandoned. The hangers on of the army are leaving for the East as fast as possible. The respect so strictly enjoyed for the rights of private property will meet with universal approbation. [PP]

We publish in another column, the Message of the President, of which we yesterday gave a sketch. It is with some difficulty that any answer at all has been obtained from that high functionary, but, having at last condescended to respond to Mr. Dayton’s resolutions, he declares that an increase of the naval and military force is at this time advisable to put the country in a state of defence. It is understood that an expenditure of ten or twelve millions will be required immediately.

Now, we are free to confess, that if war be inevitable, if there are no proper, natural, honorable means to escape from that dire calamity, we should not object to the appropriation of ten times ten millions. Of the facts, however, so far as they are stated in his Message, upon which Mr. Polk grounds the recommendation of an increase of the naval and military force, the country has been long since apprised, and is as capable of judging as himself. Is there no way, plain, easy, equitable, by which the Oregon dispute may be amicably settled? We believe there is. We have had every evidence of the disposition of England, to arrive at a peaceable result. We have had good reason, in the language of the papers which are upon this point the organs of the British Government, and in the declaration of the Premier himself in reference to Mr. Pakenham’s rejection of the proposition of 49, to believe that a pacific settlement of this controversy may be easily attained, if such be the inclination of our Government. Such a settlement, we fearlessly venture to assert, would receive the approbation of three-fourths of the American people. They are thoroughly tired, disgusted, sick at heart, of this senseless quarrel. The President cannot but know, that public sentiment, with wonderful unanimity, points him to a compromise, by which our honor may be preserved, and a war avoided. We have the authority of the Washington Correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer for saying that a very decided majority of the Senate of the United States are believed to be in favor of a reasonable adjustment of the dispute. In his letter of the 22nd instant, he says:

"A letter, written in a jocose vein, in the New York Herald, headed "scientific classification of the Senate according to Buffon, exhibits signs of what a good number here conceived to be the real condition of parties is that body on the Oregon question, though I know it embraces takes as to the individual position assigned to many of the Senators. Few doubt that a treaty would be ratified on the basis of the 49th degree of North Latitude, which by the bye, should not yield to Great Britain the navigation of the straits of Fuea. Indeed, it is generally believed that not more than twelve Senators at most could be found to vote against it. Many members of that body who would sustain it, doubtless believe with the Executive that the title of the United States to the whole of Oregon, up to fifty-four forty, is clear and unquestionable."

If such be the case, there can be no necessity of an enormous expenditure of money for the object specified by the President. He has it in his own power to save that expenditure, and to avert the terrible issue of a collision between two of the greatest empires of modern times.

We do not charge upon the President that he willfully designs to involve this nation in a bloody strife,—we would impute to no man such horrible criminality: But, from first to last, from the Alpha to the Omega of this Oregon dispute, he has taught this nation a lesson which may yet need to be enforced by the scorpion lash of war, never to elevate an inferior man to a post of such transcendant importance. In his very Inaugural, he throws down the gauntlet of defiance to Great Britain upon this subject. He addresses her in the menacing tone of a high-wayman, bidding the traveler stop and deliver, rather than in the calm and dispassionate language of a practiced statesman. Confident of the goodness of his cause, and mindful of the courtesies which should prevail in the intercourse of civilized nations. We all recollect the explosion which followed in the British Parliament. Then came a lucid interval, in which our Government made the proposition of 49, and then, its pettish withdrawal of negotiation, because of the somewhat uncereonious rejection of that proposition by the British Minister. Afterwards, the Ambassador of Great Britain, representing the solicitude of his Government to avoid a war, makes the proposal of arbitration, and that, however, so far as they are stated in his Message, upon which Mr. Polk grounds the recommendation of an increase of the naval and military force, the country has been long since apprised, and is as capable of judging as himself. This offer is at once rejected, and upon grounds calculated to arouse general indignation in the minds of the British people. Such, indeed, has been its effect. Previous arrivals from that country had indicated a pacific and friendly feeling. But, the last news shows a decided change in journals which had, before been distinguished for the moderation of their tone to our country. Distrust had pervaded commercial circles, and a general apprehension evidently prevailed, that no prudent reasons would sufficiently restrain our Government from stubborn adherence to a policy which must terminate in war. The last act in this strange drama is the Message which bids us put on our armour and prepare for battle. It seems to us, that if Mr. Polk had come into the Executive Chair, with the sole design of involving our country in hostilities with Great Britain, he could not have pursued a line of conduct better calculated than that which he has in reality adopted, to bring about a collision with Great Britain. At the same time we fully acquit him of any such intention, and acknowledge that his course may be more properly attributed to a lamentable deficiency of the wisdom, judgment
In my annual message of the 2nd of December last I recommended to the favorable consideration of wise precaution demands such increase. I have to express the opinion, that a any circumstances connected with, or growing out of the foreign relations of this country, require at this time an increase of our naval or military force, and, if so what those circumstances are, I have to express the opinion, that a wise precaution demands such increase.

In my annual message of the 2nd of December last I recommended to the favorable consideration of Congress as increase of our naval force, especially of our steam navy, and the raising of an adequate military force to guard and protect suck of our citizens as might think proper to emigrate to Oregon. Since that period, I have seen no cause to recall or modify these recommendations. On the contrary, reasons exist which, in my judgment, render it proper not only that they should be promptly carried into effect, but that additional provision should be made for the public defence.

The consideration of such additional provision was brought before appropriate comities of the two Houses of Congress, in answer to calls made by them in reports prepared, with my sanction, by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, on the 29th of December and the 8th of January last; a mode of communication with Congress not, unusual, and, under existing circumstances, believed to be most eligible. Subsequent events have confirmed me in the opinion that those recommendations were proper as precautionary measures.

It was a wise maxim of the Father of his country, that "to be prepared for war, is one of the most efficient means of preserving peace," and that, "avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace," we should "remember also, that timely disbursements to repel it." The general obligation to perform this duty is greatly strengthened by facts known to the whole world. A controversy respecting the Oregon territory now exist between the United States and Great Britain; and while, as far as we know, the relations of the latter with all European nations are of the most pacific character, she is making unusual and extraordinary armaments and warlike preparations, naval and military, both at home and in her North American possessions.

It cannot be disguised, that, however sincere may be the desire of peace, in the event of a rupture these preparations the fact is undoubted that they are now proceeding, in part, at least, with a view to the contingent possibility of a war with the United States. The general policy of making additional warlike preparations was distinctly announced, in the speech from the throne, as late as January 1st, and has since been reiterated by the ministers of the crown in both houses of Parliament. Under this aspect of our relations with Great Britain, I cannot doubt the propriety of increasing our means of defence, both by land and by sea. This can give Great Britain no cause of offence, or increase the danger of rupture. If on the contrary, we should fold our arms in security and at last be suddenly involved in hostilities for the maintenance of our just rights, without any adequate preparation, our responsibility to the country would be of the gravest character. Should collision between the two countries be avoided, as I sincerely trust it may be, the additional charge upon the treasury, in making the necessary preparations, will not be lost; while in the event of such a collision they would be indispensable for the maintenance of our national rights and national honor.

I have seen no reason to change or modify the recommendations of my annual message in regard to the Oregon question. The notice to abrogate it's the treaty of the  of August, 1827, is authorized by the treaty itself, and cannot be regarded as a warlike measure; and I cannot withhold my conviction that it should be promptly given. The other recommendations are in conformity with the existing treaty, and would afford to American citizens in Oregon no more than the same measure of protection which has long since been extended to British subjects in that territory.

The state of our relations with Mexico is still in an unsettled condition. Since the meeting of Congress another revolution has taken place in that country, by which the government has passed into the hands of new rulers. This event has procrastinated, and may possibly defeat, the settlement of the differences between the United States to Mexico, at the date of the last advices, had not been received by the existing authorities. Demonstrations of a character hostile to the United States continue to be made in Mexico which has rendered it proper, in my judgment, to keep nearly to thirds of our army on our southwestern frontier. In doing this, many of the regular military post have been reduced to a small force, inadequate to their defence should an emergency arise.
In view of these "circumstances," it is my "judgment" that "an increase of our naval and military force is at this time required," to place the country in a suitable state of defence: At the same time, it is my settled purpose to pursue such a course of policy as may be most calculated to preserve, both with Great Britain and Mexico, an honorable peace; which nothing will so effectually promote as unanimity in our councils, and a firm maintenance of all our just rights.

JAMES K. POLK

Washington, March 24, 1846

Mr. Berrien offered a resolution directing the comities on Military and Naval Affairs so lay before the Senate the communications and estimates form the War and Navy Departments, relative to the proposed increase of those branches of the public service.

Mr. Benton said the Committee on Military Affairs, all of whom he had consulted, except one now absent, were ready to lay before the Senate the report and estimate of the Secretary of War, and saw no impropriety in their publication.

Mr. Fairfield said that some of the papers communicated by the Secretary of the Navy, were not proper to be made public, and he hoped the resolution would not prevail.

Mr. Berrien said he wished the Senate to be put in possession of the information, and they would afterwards decided upon the expediency of publishing or withholding it.

Mr. Westcott hoped the resolution would pass. The information would be as safe in the possession of any and every member of the Senate as it would be in that of the Committees, or he Executive and his Secretaries- and it was proper they should have it to guide their action.

The resolution was then passed, and the report and estimates from the Secretary of War ordered to be printed.

Mr. Adams motion to reconsider the vote (closing the debate upon the Military Bill at three o’clock yesterday) was laid upon the table.

The House on motion of Mr. Brinkerhoff, went into the Committee of the Whole.

A motion was made by Mr. McConnell to lay aside the Military Bill, and lost.

The Committee then adopted an amendment that the enlistment should be for three years, unless sooner disbanded by the President and that the increase to each company of privates should not exceed eight. This amendment was adopted.

An amendment to increase the number of troops for each company from eighty to one hundred, was also carried.

A substitute to the whole bill was the proposed by Mr. Hungerford, of N.Y., and agreed to, authorizing the companies to be filled with six men each, and to serve for three years unless sooner disbanded by the President.

The Bill was then reported to the House.

Mr. Brinkerhoff moved to the previous questions which was withdrawn, and Mr. McKay addressed the House in favor of an amendment to the bill by increasing the rank and file at once to sixty men; and by giving power to the President to make each company 100 men.

Mr. McKay renewed the motion for the Previous Question, which the House refused to second, yeas 50, nays 91.

Mr. Boyd moved to recommit this bill. Lost 96 to 69.
Mr. Haralson of Ga. proceeded to defend the bill as reported from his Committee. Mr. H. said he should bring forward another bill to give the President power to raise 50,000 men, and if the emergencies of the country required it, he was ready to vote 100,000 or 1,000,000.

Mr. Davis of KY., put some plain questions to Mr. Haralson as to the exigency which the Executive had surmised in the increase of the Army.

Mr. Haralson answered that a communication had been received on the 31st of December, upon which was based the action of the Committee.

Mr. Davis wished to know what were the views of the Executive about the increase.

Mr. Burt S.C. (a member of the Military Committee) objected as the information and Mr. Haralson then said that the information could not be communicated consistently with a due regard for the public interest.

The motion for the Previous Question was now renewed and seconded by a vote of 91 to 50.

The amendment that Mr. McKay was rejected by a vote of 105 to 76, and the amendment of Mr. Hungerford (raising each company to 80 men, if the President thought proper to do so, and to enlist the new troops for three years) was agreed to by a vote of 112 to 79.

A motion was now made to lay the bill upon the table, and lost a vote 149 to 32. The bill was finally passed, 169 to 15. The bill if passed, would add 2900 men to the Army.

The house again went into Committee of the Whole upon the bill for making appropriations for deficiencies in former bills.

A debate upon an amendment in relation to distributing book, which was denounced by Mr. Payne, of Ala. The debate was continued by Mr. Ewing, of Pa. and Mr. Winthrop, of Mass., amidst much confusion, and the committee rose without action on the bill or amendments, when the House adjourned. [PP]

RW46v23i26 March 31, 1846 p1c2: Mexico

The N.O. Tropic of the 20th inst. contains some news from Mexico. It is not, however, of much importance. All sorts of rumors were rife among the Mexicans in regard to advance of the American Army. One report states that the army was advancing towards Matamoros on the left bank of the Rio Bravo, but that they had been driven back by the Mexicans. This was contradicted by other accounts. There were large stories also of desertions from the American army. [PP]

RW46v23i26 March 31, 1846 p1c4: Despatches From Mr. McLane.

Despatches from Mr. McLane- the Washington correspondent of the New York Courier, under date of Monday last, writer:

"Despatches were received at the State Department per the Hibernia, from Mr. McLane, our Minister at London; the exact purport of which I am not informed, but unquestionably of an unfavorable character as it relates to the existing attitude of the Oregon question. Those who from their position and political relations, are accurately advised of the nature of those dispatches, and who are also advocates of peaceful and equitable adjustment of the difficulty, are evidently alarmed at the posture of affairs, and are full of apprehension that the course of our government has been such as to make it extremely improbable that the matter will be settled by negotiation."

But the Editor of the Courier himself says in the same paper:

"With regard to the Oregon difficulty, we have a well settled conviction, that it will be in a train of settlement shortly after the arrival of the steamer of the 4th of April. We have no doubt but Mr. McLane has been instructed to inform the British Government that if they will offer the proposition refused by Mr. Packenham, it will be accepted; and in our judgment, they will tender that proposition accompanied with a demand of free navigation forever, of the Columbia for a term of years, when by the extinction of the fur trade, it will become valueless to G. Britain. Should they do so we cannot doubt but the whole difficulty will be amicably arranged. For the offensive manner in which Mr. Buchanan refused arbitration, there can be no apology; but recent events have taken off the edge of that foolish and unjustifiable act; and the wise merchant and all who are engaged in business should feel and act as if the Oregon affair was in a train of satisfactory adjustment. Such a tall events are our opinions of the matter, and we give them what they are worth." [PP]
The secret estimates of the Naval Bureau and Secretary of the Navy were in the House this morning, and at one time upon the Speaker's table. The Committee on majority took the matter into their own hands, and refused to show the reports to be read. The information, however, I can give you.

The information, then, which the House designed to keep secret is the fact that the estimates were made by the Heads of the Naval Bureaus. Commodores Morris, Warrington, Crane and Shubrick proposed, under estimates prepared by the Secretary of the Navy, the following increase of the Navy:

In men, thirty six thousand, eight hundred.

Expenditure, $20,000,000

And the increase of the vessels in commission to the following number:

An increase of fifty-eight vessels of war in all. The Secretary of War did not go to this extreme, but proposed an increase of 50,000 to the Standing Army, the whole force to be under the control of the President of the United States. [PP]

Our Washington Correspondent writes us, by telegraph, as follows- I have it from reliable authority, that the suppressed, or withdrawn, estimates of the bureau, made with the President's sanction, proposed an expenditure of from forty to fifty millions of dollars: The Navy estimates proposed forty steamers!

Mr. Fairfield, the Chairman of the Naval Committee in the Senate, got alarmed and cut them down to ten steamers. I will write you further in my letter tonight.- Belt Pat. of Thursday. [PP]

This renowned exile, it is said, is amusing himself at present with the gentlemanly occupation of cock fighting. He has lost heavily of late at cards. He will have to return to Mexico before long, if for no other purpose than to replenish his exhausted purse. [PP]

We learn by an extract from a letter, receive by a commercial house yesterday from Galveston, and dated on the 14th inst. that the schr. Mary Shields, from Matamoros bound to New York, put into Galveston a few days since in distress. The captain reports the American Consul at Matamoros, to Gen. Taylor at Corpus Christi. In addition to this, we earn verbally that a Mexican who was the bearer of dispatches from Mr. S. at Matamoros, to Gen. Taylor at Corpus Christi, had been shot by the authorities at the former place on his return. It is also said that 8000 Mexican troops are stationed there.

There was a rumor in town yesterday, to the effect that Mr. Slidell himself had been thrown into prison, but this undoubtedly took its rise from the above. Should it turn out that Mr. Schatzell has really been incarcerated at Matamoros, Gen. Taylor cannot reach the vicinity of that city with too great speed. We have heard of several other acts committed of late- one of which was the shooting of a young American trader named Burney, in Perote, on the principal ground that he was in Texas during her early straggle for liberty- and now it is stated that one of our Counsuls has been thrown into prison on no other plea than that he has been in correspondence with Gen. Taylor. We have said so often that our Government should come to some understanding with Mexico- should have a full and final settlement with her of all difficulties – that we have become sid of the subject. Granted that Mexico- a weak, powerless- yet no one can allow a snarling puppy to be continually snapping at his heels without kicking him out of the way at least. [PP]
Extract of a letter from an Officer in the Army of Observation, dated. Corpus Christi March 10, 1846.

The Dragoons and Ringgold’s Light Artillery left on the 8th for the Rio Grande; the first brigade (Worth’s) with Duncan’s battery, on the 9th; and the second brigade, this morning. The brigade, with Bragg’s battery, will march tomorrow morning and Gen. Taylor, with his staff, will follow at noon. It is said that all the corps will unite on the Sal Colorado, and moved on together towards Matamoros or point Isabel, as it may then be determined.

No one expects a fight. My own opinion is, and has been for some time past, that the Mexican troops will retire as we made advance, and that some arrangement will be made with the Mexican Commander, by which our troops will be permitted to take position on or near the Rio Grande, and that a post will be established at Point Isabel, which will be fortified in order to insure a water communication with New Orleans and a depot for supplies.

This is all conjecture on my part – but we shall soon see whether I am right or not. The former battalion of light artillery being broken up by the assignment of three of the batteries to the Dragoons and Brigades, is late commander, Major Erving, is ordered to remain in command here for the purpose of removing the troops, artillery and stores left, from this to St. Joseph’s, and thence to the Brazos Santiago, or Point Isabel. A battery of six 18 pounders, besides Monroe’s field battery, is to go round by water with the troops and stores. St. Joseph’s as well as this place, will be abandoned – though a small depot for the supply of the dragoons at San Antonio and at Austin, may be continued. The army is to move slowly, and will probably be from 13 to 15 days on the march.

I cannot yet say how long I shall remain here, or at St. Joseph’s – both which stations are under Major Erving’s command – no final instructions having yet been received – but the passage to the Brazos Santiago could be made by an ordinary steamboat in good weather, in from 12 to 14 hours.

The troops left with me consist of Monroe’s company, Porter’s first Artillery, and somewhere about sixty or seventy supernumeraries, effective for guards, &c. Besides these are the sick and convalescent of general hospital, &c. I believe it is intended that the troops, including engineers, tools, &c, shall arrive at point Isabel about the time the troops reach it by land.

I may be wrong in some of these points, for I cannot know with certainty what is to be done here, till the instructions I have before mentioned are received. I will write a line and tell you when to change the directions of my letters. I have written this in very great haste, to be in time for the steamer for St. Joseph’s, which leaves in a few minutes.

Captain Frank of the schr. Equity, which has just arrived from Matamoros, which place she left on the 11th inst. reports that the American Consul Mr. Schatzell is not imprisoned as the schr. Mary Shields reported. Letters were received by a Commercial House in this city from the Consul himself, who says the rumor is entirely unfounded. [PP]

May

We deem no apology necessary for occupying much space in this morning’s paper with the [ . . . ] (though, we must add, discreditable) debate in the House of Representatives, on Monday last, between Mr. Charles Jarod Ingersoll and Mr. Ashmun of Massachusetts. The former gentleman, it will be perceived, has not only repeated his last series of charges against Mr. Webster, the first having been abandoned as untenable, and the accuser thereby acknowledging their falsity,) but he has attempted to sustain them, in advance of the investigation directed to be made [ . . . ] the House. And how? Why, by reading manuscripts from the books of the State Department, to which, it seems he has been permitted to have access, and the contents of which he has not hesitated to divulge, although the President, in whose charge the fund to the disbursements of which these books refer is specially placed by law felt himself constrained by solemn considerations of public duty to withhold even from the Representatives of the People that precise information, when requested by a resolution of the House to lay it before that body! It will devolve upon Mr. Ingersoll, therefore, even if he shall be able to sustain his charges against Mr. Webster—and upon that point we are content to await the action of the Committee of Investigation, prepared to unite in his condemnation if he be guilty, though feeling nevertheless a strong hope, as well as a profound conviction that he will pass through the fiery ordeal unscathed—we say it will devolve upon Mr. Ingersoll to clear his own skirts of the serious charge of have transcended his privileges as a member of the House in examining the records referred to, and of having violated a law of the land in making portions of those records public. If Mr. Ingersoll shall be permitted, like "a mousing owl," to pry into the secret recesses of the Executive Departments for the purpose of arming himself with weapons of assault upon the personal reputation of a gentleman who (incomplete).

[...] announced to Congress that [...] Resolution, adopted by [...] notice to Great Britain that [...] of 1827, recognizing the [...] (or non-occupation, as [...] the Oregon territory, shall [...] of twelve months from [...] of giving the notice, contem-[...] for by thie treaty itself, is of [...] of wear, nor has it any one who [...] the subject. In or out of Congress, [...] of resorting to this measure, we [...] been questioned and denied, mainly [...] if it should be given in a discourteous [...] spirit, as there was certainly at one [...] too much reason to fear, and in regard to which we are not now entirely free from apprehension, it might close the door to friendly negotiation, and consequently result in war at the expiration of this twelve months, if not sooner. Especially, was it apprehended, would this be the case, if, as was clearly recommended in the President's Message, measures should be adopted by Congress, simultaneously with the adoption of the notice, for the purpose of taking actual possession, at that time, of the disputed territory, and expelling from it the British occupants now holding it and exercising over it, as they have long done, all the rights of sovereignty.

But the language of the notice being unobjectionable, and unaccompanied as it has been by any measure calculated to would the pride or to affect the rights (real or imaginary) of Great Britain, these grounds of objection of course
The result of the controversy now depends materially, we doubt not, upon the manner in which the President shall exercise the "discretion" with which, as well because it is legitimately and Executive function, as because of his peculiar relations to this question, he has been properly clothed. We hope for his own sake, as well as for that of the country, that neither the "pride of consistency," by which even strong minds are often unduly influenced, nor the dread of denunciation from the ultra portion of his own party, which has so much terror for aspiring politicians, will induce him, in communicating the resolution of Congress to the British Ministry, to accompany it by an inadmissible ultimatum, or, if he shall make no new proposition himself to present it in such manner as to prevent the submission, in reply, of terms of compromise by that Government. Entertaining a less exalted opinion both of Mr. Polk's expansiveness of mind and of his firmness, than some of his friends appear to do—regarding him rather as a partizan than as a statesman—believing him to be influenced less by his obligations to his country, and less by considerations of what its vital interests demand of him, than by his allegiance to party, and by his estimate of the effect which a particular course of policy may exert upon its fortunes—we have not been without strong apprehensions that he may so far depart from the spirit of the resolution adopted by Congress, as to neutralize the pacific temper of its joint resolution, and thereby to counteract the obvious design of that body in giving to it the "form" which it finally assumed. These apprehensions have not been diminished by the fact, that, in that form the resolution drew to its support every Whig in both branches of Congress, and every member of the Administration party exposed to the extreme position originally assumed by Mr. Polk, and zealously maintained by those supposed to be in his confidence,--circumstance in itself well calculated to influence the action of a mere partizan. And certainly we are not authorized to draw a very favorable augury from the recent declaration of the Official Journal, [if that paper reflects the feelings, and foreshadows the purposes of the President,] to the effect that, while it rejoices that Congress has authorized the notice to be given, it strongly disapproves of the form which that notice finally assumed.

Nevertheless, we have no desire nor intention to prejudge the Executive, nor unnecessarily to excite in the public mind fears of an inauspicious conclusion to this controversy. If, indeed, the Washington Correspondent of the New York Courier be correctly informed, Mr. Polk will adopt a course calculated to promote its pacific adjustment; notwithstanding the contrary inference is, we think, legitimately deductible from the language of the Washington Union, and from the President's own uniform language and conduct heretofore. The correspondent of the Courier thus shadows forth the probable views and purposes of the Cabinet:

"I believe that the President is still willing to adjust the matter fairly and upon the basis heretofore offered. If the same opinion is the majority of his Cabinet, the only opposing member being Mr. Buchanan; but he, from his position, is a very serious obstacle in the way of the pacific intentions of the government. His opposition, however, was upon ulterior objects the first and more immediate of which is the vacant seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the next and more remote is that of the succession to the Presidency. By adhering to his opposition he may compel the President to gratify the first and most reasonable of his wishes, in which, if he should be successful, the question of the succession would be merged. It is well understood that the War candidate for the Presidency, the candidate of the 54 40 men, is Gen. Cass. He commences with a small force, it is true, but should be successful, the question of the succession would be merged. It is well understood that the War candidate for the Presidency, the candidate of the 54 40 men, is Gen. Cass. In regard to the mode of giving the notice, another correspondent of the same paper writes as follows:

"The "notice" will be sent to Mr. McLane, by the steamer of the 1st prox., to be presented to the Earl of Adeen, on behalf of this government. The respect due to a foreign power, and the importance of the occasion in the view of the administration, requires the observance of this form, which seems to be consistent with reason and propriety. I have it from the most reliable authority, that it will not be accompanied by a proposition; but Mr. McLane will be instructed to "lump it," and pay, when they can, about 50 cents in the dollar. They will never find out the actual amount, we imagine—though they had it at their finger's ends when they were pressing the annexation measure through Congress—Until Uncle Sam shall be persuaded to assume the entire debt, in exchange for the public lands of Texas. It will soon be ascertained, after that, how much is due; and it will be "a caution to Crockett" to see how rapidly the Now that the war in Indian is decided, the Oregon question begins to attract more attention, but the speeches of Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Haywood, and others, had convinced the British Public that our intentions were peaceable.

The U. S. steamer Col. Harney arrived in port last evening from Brazos Santiago, whence she sailed on the 16th inst. She brings us advices from Gen. Taylor's camp down to the 12th instant.

Thus affairs remained till the 11th inst., when Gen. Ampudia arrived at Matamoros. The following day General Ampudia sent a written notice to Gen. Taylor, requiring him to retire at once to the left bank of the Nueces, and insinuating to him that his persistence in maintaining his position would be deemed an overt act of hostility. To this Gen. Taylor replied substantially that he had received orders from the President of the United States to take up his position upon the Rio Grande, and to see that no encroachment was made upon our Territory; That he should obey his orders, and repel any hostile attempt to cross the river. At the same time he assured the Mexican that he had no hostile designs upon the people; that they might remain in the undisturbed enjoyment of their property and rights; and that his sole business was to resist aggression.

Gen. Taylor, however, thinking it possible that Ampudia might attempt hostilities, changed his position somewhat on the 12th inst., and thereby withdrew his army beyond the reach of the Mexican batteries, he still commanding the town with his 18 pounders and the only practicable fords. At the same time he chose to regard Ampudia's letter as so far hostile, that he directed the commandant of the force at Brazos Santiago to act as in case of war, and he gave a verbal intimation to the same effect to the naval officer in command on that station. He particularly enjoined upon both these notices would appear to be rather precautionary measures than intended to lead to aggressive acts.

Gen. Ampudia made no hostile demonstration after receiving Gen. Taylor's letter, but, like the valiant Mejia before him, determined to forward Gen. Taylor's letter to his Government, and await further orders.

We are assured by this arrival that Gen. Ampudia had but 2000 troops with him when he reached Matamoros. Of these, 1000 accompanied him from the city of Mexico; the rest joined him on the march. He lost about 1000 more between San Luis and Matamoros by mutiny and desertion. He found in the latter town about 3500 troops, so that the whole force there on the 12th was not far from 5500. {In another part of this paper the reader will note that upon other authority we have given the date of Ampudia's arrival, the number of his troops, &c., somewhat differently. We place full confidence in our later advices by the Col. Harney.] The Mexicans have 18 or 20 pieces of artillery at Matamoras, which may be call serviceable. The Americans 12 field pieces, besides the four 18 pounders before mentioned.

Upon the whole, therefore, we think there can be little doubt that we shall hear of no fighting for some time to come; and yet less doubt, that when it does come to blows our army will render such an account of itself as the country anticipates, and has a right to anticipate. In the means time the troops are well supplied with fresh provisions, chiefly by the Mexicans themselves. Citizens of the country are allowed to come and go undisturbed, and to traffic at their pleasure. Partially by their fears of the Americans, but more by the threats of the Mexican officers, the inhabitants on this side the river have very generally been induced to cross over to the other side. The Mexicans have it in their power to concentrate a large number of men at Matamoros, but they ought by no means to be called soldiers. They have neither the equipments, the discipline, nor the moral force of well-organized troops.

We have reports that Gen. Taylor has put a check to desertions from his ranks by shooting ten or twelve men who were in the act of crossing the river.

It has been mentioned to us that Gen. Worth is on his way to this port in the iron steamer Hunter.
The U. S. brig Lawrence and the schooner Flirt, lying off Brazos Santiago, had been compelled to put to sea by a gale of wind, and they had not returned on the 16th inst. We think it more than probable the Lawrence proceeded to the mouth of the Rio Grande to look after those vessels laden on this port with supplies for the Mexicans. Their owners had better get insured!

At the late hour at which we write, we find we have neither time nor room for a word more! [BWP]

RW46v23i35p4c4, May 1, 1846: From The Picayune. LATER FROM MEXICO

The bark Claremont, Capt. Lermond, arrived at this port yesterday from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 6th inst. By her we have received our files from the city of Mexico to the 2d inst., and from vera Cruz to the 5th.

And first of all, the revolution so confidently spoken of by the master of the bark Mandarin, as to take place on 3ds inst., did not come off agreeably to announcement. The Vera Cruz papers speak very freely upon the subject. El Locomoto says that if the revolution did not take place, it was only because the leading men engaged in it differed about the measures to be taken; as to principles, they were perfectly of accord. The passage of Gen. Almonte through Vera Cruz, on his way to Havana, afforded an opportunity to communicate with Gen. Santa Ana, which was readily embraced. It goes further, and say that when once the necessary steps have been agreed upon, the revolution will not be long delayed. The same paper of the 2d inst states that in Vera Cruz the Government of Paredes has completely lost all popularity and respect, and that when a revolution was hourly expected, men of all political opinions either openly favored it or remained indifferent—none opposed it.

Private letters have been received in town from a very intelligent source in Vera Cruz, dated the 6th inst. These attribute the failure of the expected revolution to a disagreement between the Federalists and the Santa Ana party.—They represent every thing as perfectly quiet.

The frigate Potomac arrived at Vera Cruz from Norfolk on the 1st inst. the American squadron at Sacrificios on the 5th Inst. was composed of the frigates Cumberland and Potomac, and the sloops Falmouth, St. Mary’s and John Adams.

The Courrier Francais of the 1st inst. [published in the city of Mexico] announces, upon the authority of a private letter, that the port of Mazatlan had been blockaded by the Americans, and that the troops which were to have sailed from San Blas for Mazatlan had been ordered to proceed by land. The Mexican papers say nothing of this, and the Courrier was evidently a good deal incredulous in regard to the matter. Although there can be no foundation for the rumor, it may be well to hear what the editor of the Courrier has to say upon the subject, upon the presumption that the blockade was declared.

"Behold, then, the war broke forth upon the point the most feeble, and yet the most interesting of the Republic! If the announcement of the blockade of Mazatlan be authentic, this first hostile demonstration on the part of the United States menace the Californias, which, cut off from all succor and destitute of real force, cannot fail to succumb at the first blow. And in the midst of these momentous transactions, the soi-disant national press is aroused to preach homilies for this or that form of government, to disparage and vilify every man in power, and to suggest incendiary measures, under the guise of proclaiming the union of citizens! Great God! how mad is the spectacle before us!"

Senor D. Manuel E. Gorostiza has accepted the portfolio of the Treasury Department, resigned by the former incumbent in consequence of ill health. LA REFORMA asserts that Sr. Gorostiza made it a condition to his acceptance of office that the President should modify the call for the constituent Congress, and abrogate the decree in regard to the press; and that the President acceded to this. Up to the 2d inst no denial of this had appeared in the Diario Official. El Republicano urges upon the President to retrace his steps, especially his measure towards the press; and reminds him that it is more magnanimous to acknowledge the errors already committed, and pursue a new course, than obstinately to hold our against the clearest manifestations of public opinion.

The two Mexican papers, the Reforma and the Contra-Tiempo, have been seized by the Government, and Senor Zertero, the editor of the first, and D. Luis Espino, of the second, have been put under arrest. Two military gentlemen, also, have been ordered from the capital under a species of arrest—General Alcorta to repair to Oaxaca, and Capt. Schiafino to San Juan de Ullua. The two editors were proceeded against because they openly demanded the recall of Santa Ana and his restoration to power; the other two individuals had taken a very active part in getting up a protest in favor of the republican system—a protest which was signed by a large number of officers. The republican press is full of indignant rebukes of the course of the Government in pursuing journals devoted to Santa Ana, while it take no step to check El Tiempo, which continues its warm advocacy of monarchical principles, and praises the state of Mexico under the old colonial rule.

We note that the President is gradually effecting a reorganization of the army, almost every paper containing orders for the reduction of one regiment, the creation of another and the like. This clearly evinces distrust of the army under its old officers.
We find in the Mexican papers, continual despatches from Gen. Mejia, detailing proceedings upon the Rio Grande. The examination of numerous deserters from Gen. Taylor’s troops are given to show the American designs, but our advices direct are ten days later than by Vera Cruz, and are quite as authentic as the revelations of deserters.

The primary elections were going on in some of the Departments, but excited little interest. It was even difficult to induce a majority of those possessing the franchise, to exercise it in any way.

The mission of Gen. Almonte to France, has been attributed to a variety of motives, the most plausible of which would appear to be the desire of Paredes to get rid of him; to send him into an honorable exile. The Diario Oficial, on the contrary, says that the President was induced to make the appointment solely in consequence of the severe illness of the present Minister to France, Senor Garro, and in consideration of the high qualifications of Gen. Almonte, and his familiarity with the controverted points with the U. States. The General had an outfit of $10,000, and an annual salary of the same allotted to him.

The death of D. Manuel Cortazar is announced. He was the treasurer or administrator of the tobacco revenue, and is spoken of as an honest public officer.

The Archbishop of Mexico was seized with apoplexy on the night of the 30th ult., and his life was at one time despaired of but he was somewhat better on the 2d inst.

The wretch Palacio, who was the principal instigator in the assassination of D. Luis Falconi and his brother-in-law, and who had been sentenced to death, made his escape from prison at Vera Cruz the morning of the 5th inst. The authorities were making diligent pursuit for him. His guilt had excited the utmost abhorrence towards him.

A report from the military hospital of Vera Cruz, dated the 28th ult. states that one death had occurred there from yellow fever since the 21st. There had been but two new cases admitted since that day, and of previous cases four had been discharged. On the 28th there were five remaining cases under treatment.

Since the 1st inst., the brigs Plymouth and Orleans, and the French bark Anex, have arrived at Vera Cruz from this port.

RW46v23i35p4c5, May 1, 1846: From the New Orleans Picayune April 21. Later from Texas.

The steamship Alabama, Capt Windle, arrived yesterday from Galveston with dates to the 18th inst.—three days later than our former advices. There had been no arrival at Galveston from the Rio Grande, and the Galveston papers are destitute of any intelligence of importance.

The Civilian and Gazette of Saturday last had received a few more reported returns of the Congressional election, and the editor was of opinion that there was scarcely a doubt of the election of Col. Williams.

From the same paper we copy the following resolution, which embodies the substance of a report made by the select committee of the House of Representatives, in the Texas Legislature, to whom was referred the subject of the public debt and public lands of Texas. This resolution had not been finally acted upon at the date of our last advices. It is the same resolution mentioned by our correspondent “Paul” in a letter of the 1st inst. from Austin, and the discussion of which he thought would lead to violent excitement:

Resolved, That our delegation in Congress be requested and authorized forthwith to open a negotiation with the Government of the United States, in such form as they may think fit, for the cession of the public lands of Texas to the United States, for an adequate consideration, to enable Texas to pay her public debt; and negotiation to be subject to the ratification of the Legislature of the State of Texas, according to the ordinary forms of legislation.

The following are the classes of debts incurred by the Republic of Texas, included in the bill to be entitled “An act to ascertain and establish the public debt, and to define how the same is to be paid.”

1. All bonds issued by her authority, for which she received par in gold and silver, or its equivalent, together with the interest stipulated to be paid on the face of the bonds, shall be paid at par.

2. All bonds issued under special contract for munitions of war, vessels of war, and naval supplies which continue in first hands, or have not been assigned at a discount, shall be paid at------with the interest stipulated on the face of the bonds, at whatever rate they might have been taken, provided such bonds can be traced to have originated under such special contract, and can be clearly authenticated and identified.

3. The bonds of the Consolidated Fund of Texas, having been funded when the Treasury notes and audited papers were at an average of less than 33 1/3 cents on the dollar, shall be paid at 33 1/3 cents on the dollar, with the interest on the same stipulated to be paid on the face of the bonds from the date of the said bonds to the day of Epithets have not unfrequently been thrown out in a derisive and scornful spirit, which became "words to conjure with," moving masses of men to action with talismanic power. Innumerable instances might be cited, in which terms originally of degradation and reproach have become the watch-word and war-cry of revolutionary hosts, and have been inscribed with pride upon their victorious banners—thus "returning to plague the inventors." Is it not possible, at least, that the words at the head of this article, which the April number of Blackwood’s magazine sarcastically adopts as the running title of a long disquisition upon American manners, the design of which is of course to depreciate our national character and to cast odium upon our institutions, may at no distant day be adopted by the oppressed and down-trodden people, even of great Britain, as the prelude to the overthrow of her artificial and corrupt political system, and to the correction of those monstrous abuses in Church and State, which even her most partial eulogists do not hesitate to acknowledge and deplore? May it not happen, that, in despite of all the defects of our own system, either inherent or which have been engraven upon it by a departure from the just and wise principles upon which it is founded, the toiling millions of Europe, suffering not only the deprivation of political rights, but of physical comforts to an extent undreamed of on this side of the Atlantic, while the favored few, born to a higher destiny, not only monopolize all public distinctions, but revel in luxury and splendor, unknowingly or unnoticing the destitution and wretchedness which surround them on every side—may it not happen, that they will take up the words in earnest, which the organ of the British Tories has thrown out in derision, and demand the reorganization of the British Government upon the great principles of "equal rights" which constitutes the foundation-stone of "THE MODEL REPUBLIC?" Indeed, is not a revolution now in progress in Great Britain? Now a revolution of force, we admit; but a revolution of opinion by which radical changes are in progress, and changes still more radical are ultimately to ensue, in the very constitution and frame work of her institutions, affecting ultimately her social not less powerfully than her political system? To what cause is this strong and resistless tendency of opinion to be mainly ascribed? Certainly to the light which has been thrown upon the subject of human rights, by the brilliant example of "the Model Republic"—a light, which as it shall be more widely diffused, will unveil still more extensively and clearly the monstrous abuses under which the hereditary bondsmen of Europe have so long despairingly groaned, and excite them to renewed, and in the end successful efforts, to throw off the yoke of the oppressor.

The recent debate in Congress on the existing relations between the United States and Great Britain, has furnished Blackwood with the text upon which it descants with such unctuous touching the defects of American institutions, and the vices of American statesmen. Some of the speeches which it cites, in corroboratation of its opinions, we confess are far from being models either of sense, temper or taste. But is it fair to select the most objectionable portions of the worst speeches of the most violent men in Congress as specimens of American statesmanship? From the debates of the British Parliament examples not less coarse and vulgar might be selected, in which an American commentator might find a text not less apt for his purposes, if it were fair thus to deduce from occasional exhibitions of bad taste and temper inferences prejudicial to the character of a nation, and to the influence of its institutions in forming and modifying that character.

Blackwood’s Magazine, however, is not singular in its efforts to depreciate our institutions and to defame our reputation. The London Times, not unfrequently of late, indulges in these ribald assaults. One of its bitterest articles, in which, after characterizing the speech of Ex-President Adams as "the ravings of a moon-struck madman," it proceeds to comment in terms of great severity upon the proceedings of our Government, which it says is "too feeble to restrain bad impulses" has drawn forth a brief and eloquent reply from an American citizen, which the Times, with unwonted candor and courtesy, publishes in its own columns. And it was chiefly for the purpose of introducing that pungent article to our readers, that we have been led into these remarks upon the vituperative and sneering disquisition of the coadjutor of the Times in the congenial work of national defamation. If the English papers will continue to open their columns to such manifold vindications of the "the Model Republic" as that which we subjoin from the London Times, the period will be rapidly accelerated when it will in truth be regarded, even in England, as a model of which its framers need not be ashamed, and after which British patriots will be proud to fashion their own system.
To the Editors of the Times: Sir,—Among other reasons for thinking our Government “too feeble to restrain bad impulses, and our population too excitable to be conscious of consequences,” “moonstruck madman’s” speech and the manner in which it was listened to in the United States House of Representatives, seem with you to rank among the foremost. Without stopping to inquire whether it is his “much learning that has made him mad,” if Mr. Quincy Adams be really mad (for learning even if his wits be disordered, he possesses to a degree seldom equalled in Europe or America) and without uttering a suspicion, that the superstructure, reared on such a crazy foundation, may be unsound, allow me to ask in what, and on what occasion, the general government at Washington has exhibited feebleness, and wherein has our population betrayed an excitability which is regardless of consequences?

Since we came into being, which was but as yesterday in the history of nations, it can be said without a boast, that there is not a quarter of the globe that will not bear witness to the strength and energy of our Executive in its foreign relations. Were we not the first to refuse tribute to the Algerine, while Europe was laying its black mail sat his feet? Did we follow or lead in declaring and making the slave trade subject to the penalties of piracy—which was at least one step towards purgation from the black plague inherited from our ancestors? Was our claim upon the kingdom of Naples for indemnification suffered to grow weak through age? Had France any repose till the $25,000,000 were paid? And in these latter days, was not Texas annexed in spite of foreign interference?

But perhaps the feeble nature of our Government develops itself only at home. Well, then, at home.—Did it not quell a most portentous insurrection in Pennsylvania, and that, too, while its powers were in their infancy, without shedding a single drop of blood? Did it not, in its full strength, stifle South Carolina’s nullification scheme with a menace? Did it not easily crush a monster bank conspiracy? And finally, has it not recently, in scorn of domestic opposition, added a new territory to its own?

Should weakness in the art of defence ever be charged against it, the voices from English graves throughout the country, honored wherever found, would induce many not to gainsay the slander. And if its power of offence be doubted or forgotten, not the wide ocean alone, but your very channels, whose waves almost kiss the lintels of your doors, could, if their records were not written in water, bear witness to its reality. The smoke, too, from many a richly laden convoy, was wafted too often, with a not sweet smelling savour, to the nostrils of their armed but too distant guardians, to convict the aggressors of inoffensiveness.

As to the excitability of a population, no part of which corresponds to the English mob or the French canaille, and to none of whose members the common rudiments of education are strange, it is vain to speculate on its evil results; for intelligence goes hand in hand with it, and the cool, calculating spirit of my countrymen, is a sufficient guarantee, that it will never lead them into danger.

Tried by the Procrustean standard of Europe, I doubt not that we should often be pronounced out of measure, and that even upon the floor of Congress certain scenes might be curtailed to advantage; but that “one branch of the most important legislative assembly of the new world should listen with interest and excitement” to our “lunatic” ex-President’s most original exhibition ought no more to raise your wonder, than that the House of Commons should be amused by a ludicrous description of a noble lord’s coal-hole escapade, or that it should now and then uproariously cheer on “Young England’s” champion, to badger a man who is to him like Jupiter to a rejected entellite.

As in common with my countrymen here, I no longer regard the Oregon question as a war question, with your permission, I will add a line or two respecting what is described by you to be “the threatening state of our relations with Mexico.” Your intelligent correspondent in that unhappy country might have told you, that as against a more powerful antagonist it is more helpless than a wailing child, whether for offence or defence, because it is like a “house divided against itself;” that it can no more prevent the flood of emigration from the States into California, and its consequences, be they what they may, than could the red man close his forests against the inundation of the whites; and that, though it may declare war till it is “hoarse with calling,” it can never make, it unless perchance, which I do not suspect, some European nations come to its aid, and then, without time even to see the forecast shadow of coming events, one universal howl of war, on both sides of the Atlantic, will for many a year be heard, smothering in its death echo the voice of peace.

Our “democratic pretences,” I sincerely believe, are entirely misunderstood in Europe, especially as they regard territory. We want none of your possessions, and Canada we should be must less thankful for than yourselves would be to get honorably rid of a colony, which is ravenous as a horseleech and ungrateful as its own soil.

No! pretences, unjust pretences, if they have an existence, time will show that they are not on our side. But in the eyes of some, because we are professed Republicans, and having power, choose to use it as to us seems best, we therefore and our claims are arrogance itself; and, because we will not that kings or nobles should have dominion over us, we are for that reason “of the earth earthly,” and on the high road to anarchy and confusion. What is most “strange and unnatural” is, that it is not those who are divinely hedged about and stand in high places, that are in general our self-deluded or malicious traducers; but mere men, unnoble and untitled men like ourselves, who, having sucked in their mother’s with milk an over weening reverence for rank, cannot bear to see others, void of sympathy for their weakness, asserting and maintaining the dignity of their common nature.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,
A “STATES” MAN
RW46v23i36p1c2, May 5, 1846: News Expected.

We have received no New Orleans papers since Thursday morning last. The last Charleston Mercury, however, copies a paragraph from the new Orleans Picayune of the 24th ultimo, announcing that the Mexican schooner Ventura was in the river below, said to have on board a bearer of important dispatches. The next mail will probably bring us additional particulars.

RW46v23i36p1c2, May 5, 1846: Forthcoming work on Mexico.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American informs us that Gen. Waddy Thompson, formerly a distinguished member of Congress from South Carolina, and late our Minister at Mexico, has now in press, to be issued with the present month, a book containing the recollections of his residence in that unhappy and interesting country. All who know Gen. Thompson will concur in the opinion, expressed by the American's correspondent, that few public men possess in so eminent a degree the requisites for an attractive, useful and instructive work of this sort as that gentleman; and we know of no country in reference to the real character and condition of which authentic information is more desirable and necessary than that of Mexico—of which, although our nearest neighbor, there is an universal ignorance.

RW46v23i36p2c1, May 5, 1846: "Democratic" Principles.

In an elaborate address "to the people," reviewing the events of the year that has elapsed since his removal from Richmond to preside over the Executive Organ, the Editor of the Washington Union congratulates himself that he has labored with honesty and singleness of purpose to support "the true principles of the ancient and well-established democratic creed." We are not disposed to question either his zeal or his ability in the vindication of every Executive recommendation; and if that be, as from the events of the last sixteen years we may legitimately infer, the test of modern democracy, it is impossible to doubt his fidelity to the great principle—submission to Executive dictation—which constitutes the leading feature of the creed of the party which has cunningly appropriated to itself a popular appellation, to the influence of which, in despite of the unpopularity of many of its measures, it is indebted for its repeated triumphs.

"The true principles of the ancient and well-established democratic creed!" What are they? We are aware that certain cabalistic terms are in vogue among our opponents, to which they will refer us, with a triumphant air, as an answer to this question—such as "Revenue Tariff," "divorce of Bank and State," "strict construction," and the like. But whose mind is so obtuse as not to see that these phrases, though constituting the shibboleth of the party, have practically no clear and well defined signification? In reference to the Tariff, the very scheme just introduced into the House of Representatives, as an Administration measure, violates throughout the definition of a Revenue Tariff given by the Address of the Virginia Democratic Convention held in this city in 1843, and which has since been reiterated times without number by recognized leaders and organs of that party: and, even thus modified, it is admitted to be questionable whether the Administration party, overwhelming as is its ascendancy in the House of Representatives, and decisive as is its majesty in the Senate, will be able to consummate the overthrow of the existing system. How happens this, if indeed a tariff discriminating alone for revenue and against protection be, as the Union asserts, one of the "true principles of the ancient and well established democratic creed?" Is it not, rather, because it is an innovation upon the uniform policy of the Government since its foundation—a policy which, looking to the development of our national wealth and power, by the protection afforded to national industry, received the sanction and approval of Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe, embracing the whole line of Revolutionary Presidents, and emphatically the Fathers of the Constitution,—to say nothing of their successors, (including Jackson and Van Buren, the apostles of modern democracy,) all of whom, without exception, unless the present Chief Magistrate constitute that exception, were avowedly, as their written opinions and votes demonstrate, in favor of a Protective Tariff? This "principle," therefore, is neither "ancient" nor "well established." It is, on the contrary, an attempt—we hope an abortive attempt—to subvert a policy so old as the Government itself—a policy under the benign effects of which this Republic, which but yesterday was in the swaddling-clothes of infancy, has so rapidly acquired Herculean stature and strength, and has been enabled to take its position among the leading Powers of the world,—if not the first, soon to assume that rank unless her energies be fettered and cramped by the injudicious legislation of those who would go to Birmingham and Leeds, rather than to Lowell and Pittsburg, for ploughs to till the soil, and for garments to clothe the laborers who cultivate it.

Still less can it be even plausibly pretended that the idea of "divorcing Bank and State," by the establishment of a Sub-Treasury, in which the surplus revenues of the Government are to be locked up, (though, by the way, under their "revenue system," a deficiency rather than a surplus is to be apprehended,) is one of the "true principles of the ancient and well established democratic creed." We need only refer to the files of the Richmond Enquirer, nine years ago, then conducted by the present Editor of the Union, to show, that so far from being entitled to be so regarded, it was at that time denounced by himself as a dangerous innovation upon the "ancient and well established" principles of the Republican creed. Indeed, we have some reason to doubt whether the Editor of the Union has yet become a convert to the wisdom and expediency of a system borrowed from barbarian and despotic governments—for, in the address to which we have referred, he touches it as gingerly as if he were handling hot iron. “The country,” he believes, “has resolved to adopt it.” It was promulgated as one of the important measures of the Baltimore Convention.” But he does not say that he is any more in favor now, than he was in 1837, of strengthening, by its adoption, the Executive power, already too great for a Republic, and of adding to its overgrown patronage—or that he wishes to see two currencies established, the better for the Government, and the more worthless for the people. Confessedly, then, this is neither an “ancient” nor a “well established” principle, either of the “democratic” or of any other creed—for although the Washington Globe, in 1833, pronounced this now favorite measure of the democracy a “foul federal conception,” it thereby grossly slandered a party, which, whatever may be the sins of which it was guilty, at no time entertained the design of separating the government from the people, by the introduction of a financial system which is equally at war with the spirit of the age and with the genius of free government.

"Strict construction" is, we admit, an ancient and well established principle of the old Republican party; but, judging the tree by its fruit, we are constrained to deny that the modern democracy, of which the Union is the metropolitan organ, has any especial and peculiar right to array itself under a banner upon which those words are inscribed. They are, indeed, sufficiently rigid in the interpretation of the Constitution when they would thwart the purposes or impugn the orthodoxy of their opponents. But when they wish to carry a measure, who has ever seen them hesitate to overlap a constitutional barrier, or deficient in the ingenuity so to torture its provisions as to sanction their designs? We need only refer to their final action upon the Texas question, to show how little they regard any impediment to the consummation of an object which they desire to accomplish. Never before, we venture to assert, were the provisions of the Constitution so violently wrested from their true intent and meaning as in the measures adopted on that occasion, (rest of article unreadable).

We have before alluded to the critical position of our little army on the Rio Grande, and to the danger of a hostile collision with the Mexican forces on the opposite bank. The Charleston Mercury closes an article animadverting with some severity upon the foreign policy of Mr. Polk, [whom, having aided to elect it has a right to castigate—the Chinese, we are told, some times whip their gods,] with the following remarks:

"Nor can we see the wisdom of his policy in sending the army of the United States to the Rio Grande. Did he fear that the Mexicans would invade Texas, or that we could not at any time take possession of just as much of Texas as we pleased to call by that name? The camp at Corpus Christi was far beyond any American settlements, and therefore a far more efficient point for their protection than further off. And if it was expedient, for some cause which we cannot divine, to send our army to the Rio Grande, why order them to pitch their tents directly opposite Matamoras, with their cannon pointing into the town? Is there no other position along that mighty river where our troops could be accommodated whilst our rights were maintained? This course looks very like a determination to provoke a war with Mexico. But whether this is the intention or not, most clearly this is the tendency. Every army, great or small, is always eager for war. If the American army on the Rio Grande does not get up a fight with the Mexicans, in spite of all pacific instructions, it will be little short of a miracle.”

RW46v23i36p2c5, May 5, 1846: From the N. O. Picayune LATER FROM MEXICO

The Mexican schooner Ventura, Captain Durantez, arrived at this port yesterday from Vera Cruz, having sailed thence on the 10th inst. Our files are but two days later from the capital or Vera Cruz, than we had previously received, and they contain little of interest. So far as we can learn, nothing had occurred to change the aspect of affairs in the country.

We perceive that the Government is determined to be ready to meet Santa Ana, should the ex-President determine to return, as we have no doubt he will do. It may be known that criminal proceedings were instituted against Santa Ana for his transactions just prior to the revolution which hurled him from power. The proceedings in the case have been published by order of the Supreme Court, and they make a pamphlet of 130 pages. A general circulation of these may, it is thought, have some influence on the minds of the people, and prepare them for any measure of severity which the Government may take against Santa Ana.

A new paper called El Puritano, publishes two letters from Gen. Santa Ana to Gen. Tornel, Secretary of War. The first was written from Perote, at the moment Santa Anna was about setting forth from his imprisonment to leave the country. The second is dated the 9th March last from Cerro, his retreat near Havana. It is sufficiently curious to be deserving a free translation:

"MY ESTEEMED FRIEND AND COMPANION—Your entrance into the War Department has been much applauded, and I join with the nation in congratulations upon it; especially as it will enable you to give your active services in the matter of the Texas question and the other frontier departments. WHO KNOWS BETTER THAN YOU THE INTENTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA?"
The papers abound with more than usual complaints of the insecurity of the public roads for travellers. That the only remedy for the evil is the re-establishment of the old presidial guards.

The press in the Department of Durango still complain of Indian outrages such as robbery and murder, and suggest purposes of rapine and plunder. Mention is also made of an ineffectual attempt of the Indians in the South of Mexico, to get up an insurrection of the 28th ult. says that orders have been given to the administrator of the mails from Jalappa and Vera Cruz, that any extraordinary courier from the latter port to the capital should be strictly detained at Puebla, and the drivers even are enjoined to preserve silence as to what may transpire at Vera Cruz. This may be an invention of La Reforma, but it shows what men are thinking about in the capital, and that Paredes knows well from what quarter danger threatens.

The Mexican papers now deny the blockade of Mazatlan, and tell a long story to show how the rumor was started. Mention is also made of an ineffectual attempt of the Indians in the South of Mexico, to get up an insurrection of purposes of rapine and plunder.

The press in the Department of Durango still complain of Indian outrages such as robbery and murder, and suggest that the only remedy for the evil is the re-establishment of the old presidial guards. The papers abound with more than usual complaints of the insecurity of the public roads for travellers.

"You have done well in accepting the portfolio of war, as it will enable you in a measure to reciprocate the kind offices of Senor Paredes, extended to you at the melancholy crisis of your banishment. You know well, that the noble and generous conduct of that General to yourself and other friends of mine reconciled me with him, and I have not hesitated to express as much in my correspondence with others.

"By that course of conduct he entitled himself to every consideration from me, and to a certain point repaid the solicitous kindness which he received during his severe and critical illness at Toluca. You will recall that one of my aids-de-camp was charged with visiting and attending upon him, extending to him at the same time the pecuniary assistance called for by his situation.

"I know not for what Providence has reserved me; but whatever may be my lot, I live in the enjoyment of the sweet idea that the day will come when justice shall triumph, and when not only my innocence shall be acknowledged, but my policy vindicated, which you well know was always inspired by the purest patriotism. In nothing does my conscience upbraid me; I live in peace, notwithstanding that I eat without salt the bread of exile. I shall never solicit a return to my beloved country; and should events ever restore me to her bosom, it will be only to serve her, and to shed the little blood which is left in me inion defence of her liberties and in defeating foreign influences, direct or indirect.

"Present my profound respects to Madame, your wife, and count always upon the affection of your old friend and companion. A. L. DE SANTA ANA."

The imperturbable impudence of the above is so characteristic, that we believe the letter to be genuine; its grossness led us at first to think it a hoax. Presuming it to be genuine, we argue from it that Santa Ana will be in Mexico by the time it has been sufficiently circulated.

La Reforma of the 28th ult. says that orders have been given to the administrator of the mails from Jalappa and Vera Cruz, that any extraordinary courier from the latter port to the capital should be strictly detained at Puebla, and the drivers even are enjoined to preserve silence as to what may transpire at Vera Cruz. This may be an invention of La Reforma, but it shows what men are thinking about in the capital, and that Paredes knows well from what quarter danger threatens.

It is mentioned in the papers that the President has increased very considerably the detachment assigned to guard his residence, as if he were not without apprehension of difficulties in the city of Mexico.

The Mexican papers now deny the blockade of Mazatlan, and tell a long story to show how the rumor was started.

Mention is also made of an ineffectual attempt of the Indians in the South of Mexico, to get up an insurrection of purposes of rapine and plunder.

The press in the Department of Durango still complain of Indian outrages such as robbery and murder, and suggest that the only remedy for the evil is the re-establishment of the old presidial guards.

The papers abound with more than usual complaints of the insecurity of the public roads for travellers.

RW46v23i36p4c1, May 5, 1846: SATURDAY MORNING, MAY 2,1846, "Oregon Controversy Settled."

Under this imposing caption we transferred to our last paper, without comment, an article from the New York Journal of Commerce, announcing, in the most positive and unqualified manner, the adjustment of the Oregon question—that is to say, that the preliminaries have been informally agreed upon, with the concurrence of both parties, and that it now only remains to embody them in a treaty, and give them the sanction of the usual official forms. This information the Journal professes to have obtained from letters received by the Great Western “from high sources,” stating that the latitude of 49 to the Straits of Fuca, and thence through said Straits to the Pacific, leaving the whole of Vancouver’s Island to Great Britain, and the navigation off the Columbia for a term of years, had been agreed upon as the basis of the treaty of pacification.

The Journal is not in the habit of heedlessly throwing out important statements of this character, from the silly ambition of anticipating its cotemporaries, or for the more reprehensible purpose of affecting the stock market, and enabling the “Bulls” to prey upon the “Bears.” At the first blush, therefore, we were indisposed to question the accuracy of its statement. But subsequent reflection induces us to apprehend that it has been itself misled, and that “its wish is father to the thought.” It may be, indeed, as the Enquirer of yesterday, commenting on the Journal’s article, remarks, that there is “some probability of the prospective realization of the settlement described;” but we cannot believe that it has yet been concurred in by the high contracting parties. It is not probable, certainly, in the first place, that, during the pendency of the discussion on this subject, in the American Congress, and while it was yet uncertain what would be the character of its final action, the British Government would resume the negotiation, twice before abruptly broken off, by submitting a new proposition; and they have not had time to do so, of course, since the a doption of the joint resolution. And in the next place, the e ditorials of the Official Journal, within a few days past, urging the Senate, in a somewhat imperious tone, promptly to follow up the notice, “by carrying out the other measures recommended by the President in relation to Oregon," the most important of which, extending the jurisdiction of our laws over our citizens in Oregon, has already passed the House of Representatives, satisfy us that the editor of that paper could not have been in possession of this information, upon which the Journal so confidently relies, and which, if it had been well founded, we take it for granted, must have reached Washington prior to the publication of the last of them. If a treaty be formed upon the basis stated by the Journal of Commerce, the "other measures" referred to, though still to some extent necessary, must be materially modified—and the "Union," would therefore scarcely have exhibited such feverish anxiety for the speedy action of Congress upon the bills in their present shape, had it been aware that the outlines of a treaty, rendering some of their provisions inapplicable, and precipitation in all of them both unnecessary and unwise, had been already agreed upon.

The article in the last London Quarterly Review, which seems to be regarded as semi-official in its character, indicating a considerable abatement of British pretensions and an earnest desire to adjust the controversy peaceably, in connection with other significant circumstances, leaves us but little room to doubt that both the British Government and the British people are willing to make a treaty upon the basis suggested in the article of the Journal of Commerce. Supposing that difficulty removed, there is of course no reason to apprehend a hostile issue, if our own Government is prepared to assent to terms of compromise, which, however just in themselves, fall so far short of the high ground heretofore assumed by the President and his Cabinet. We have felt serious apprehensions that here would be found the great obstacle to the pacific settlement of the controversy. These apprehensions have been to some extent relieved, we confess, by the remark, in yesterday's Enquirer, [to which we hope we do not give more weight than it is entitled,] that "there may be some probability of the prospective realization of the settlement described" by the Journal of Commerce. While, therefore, we think the announcement of the Journal premature, we are not without hope that it truly foreshadows coming events.

[BWP]

This distinguished gentleman, in a letter addressed to the President of the Senate of Texas, explanatory of his last connection with the affairs of that Republic, urges the transfer of the Public Lands to the Government of the U. States, as the means of enabling Texas to meet all her obligations, which he says she is entirely able to do by a wise management of her resources. The General declares, in the same letter, that the federal government has no right to take the Custom Houses of Texas under its control, because the revenue from this source was pledged to the creditors of the defunct Republic before the ordinances of annexation was passed! This is one of those vagaries, smelling somewhat rankly of Nullification, by which General Hamilton has before rendered his opinions more notorious than respected.

RW46v23i36p4c3, May 5, 1846: Texas not a Paradise.

Ye restless and dissatisfied; you who are disposed to abandon your pleasant and prosperous homes, in the vain hope of finding in an untried wilderness, and earthly paradise, who have heard of the flowers, but not of the thorns; who have been told of the balmy breezes, but not of the freezing siroccos of Texas, read and ponder well the sad revelations of the unadorned truth, briefly shadowed forth in the following from and intelligent and well informed source:

From the Charleston Evening News. CORPUS CHRISTI, (Texas,) Jan. 25.

The people of the United States have been, and still are, egregiously gulled by scripholders and editors respecting the character of this country. I should be amused in reading the eulogistic descriptions which are to be found in almost every newspaper respecting the climate, the productions, and the general capabilities of Texas, were it not for the indignation which I feel in reflecting on the very many worthy families that will be ruined by such barefaced misrepresentations. There is no district in all Texas, from the Sabine to the Rio Grande, with the general character of which I have not made myself pretty well acquainted. This I did by making it a business to cross-examine intelligent persons who had visited one or more of all those districts. One of the conclusions which I derive from my inquiries is, that, taking Texas in its totality, there is no region in the United States, containing the same number of square miles, that is not intrinsically much more valuable. Another is, that no district of ten miles square can be found within the widest limits of Texas which combines the advantages of good land, good water, good timber, good health, and good navigation. Nine-tenths of the whole country (at the lowest calculation) consist of prairie wastes, which, for many substantial reasons, must remain for centuries to come, if not forever and uncultivated wilderness, fit only for animals to inhabit. It is almost exclusively on the banks of a few paltry rivers, which are said to be navigable, that good timber is to be found; and even on them only narrow strips, which do not generally average over three hundred yards in breadth. The lands on the margins of those rivers are generally very rich, but almost every year they are extensively overflowed, and subsequently visited by fevers of a most deadly type. In addition to all this, the seasons in Texas are unquestionable worse than those of any country in the United States. The rainy season prevails here during the winter months, when rains are not wanted, and from April till September there pretty regularly prevails an unremitting drought. The consequence is that experienced planters do not calculate on making more than one out of three crops; and it is not always that they can make so large a proportion. I was told the following anecdote yesterday by a gentleman who attempted, during four years to sustain himself by planting on the bank of the "Gaudalupe," near Victoria, which is one of the richest, the best located, and most lauded positions.
in all Texas. He told me that he planted on high ground, which was very rich, the first year; and that his crop was entirely burnt up by the drought. The second year he planted on the low river bottom lands, and succeeded in making a crop. The third and fourth years he planted in the same land, and each year his crop was totally destroyed by the floods.—He said, moreover, that the only crop which never failed was bilious fever, and that this flourished abundantly in his family every year as regularly as July came."

The climate of Texas, like every thing else, has been greatly misrepresented. The tremendous "northers" which prevail every few days, during the winter months, and which sweep unbroken from the Rocky Mountains, over the prairie regions of this wilderness country, frequently reducing the mercury to twenty degrees, give one a strange idea of "tropical" Texas! These, together with cold pelting rains, dense fogs, relieved by a few scattering fair days, present the true bill of fare of the winter season in the most tropical portion of Texas! In summer there prevails dreadful droughts, which generally commence in April and continue unremittingly till September. These droughts are accompanied, four days out of five, with blustering, parching sirocco winds, which occasion such excessive evaporation as to destroy any species of young tree; and it is probably to this circumstance that Texas owes its prairie character. I have seen several attempts made to raise sugar cane in this part of country, but they all prove signal failures. The cane, though planted in the richest land, was so stunned by the powerful evaporating winds, as not to acquire one half the size of ordinary cane by the 28th November, when it was utterly destroyed by a frost, which reduced the mercury to 20 degrees. It is said that some good sugar crops have been made on the Brasos, and on the rifer north and east of this; but it would take ocular demonstration to convince me that a full sugar crop ever has been or ever will be made in any portion of the country between the Sabine and the Rio Grande. I need scarcely inform you that orange trees and other tropical productions will never be seen (except as curiosities) in a country whose climate is so inclement that a blackjack tree dares not show its head. But, supposing that the unavailable prairies which form nearly the whole of southern and western Texas (alias tropical "Texas") were rich, well timbered, well watered lands, with good navigation and a seasonable climate, instead of being, as they are timberless; unwatered, land-locked deserts, subject to irregular and most inclement seasons, would it even then, I ask, be advisable for southern planters to emigrate here?—Most assuredly not, unless they wished to lose all their negroes, and then cultivate, by free labor, lands to which they would have precarious titles. The insecurity of slave property is so great in the southern and western portions of Texas, that no man in his senses would risk a large gang of negroes south of the Colorado, even did he find their labor profitable, which he most assuredly would not. It is only necessary for a negro in this region of the country to mount one of the mustangs, which are always and every where at hand, and in less than forty-eight hours he is irrecoverably lost to his owner; for he has only to cross the Rio Grande in order to be a freeman, and on a perfect equality with his adopted countrymen.

I have not space to say half that I wish to say about Texas, and must therefore conclude here for the present, and I may probably renew the subject in another communication.

RW46v23i36p4c6, May 5, 1846: THE ARMY.

Official accounts from the "Army of Occupation," to the 15th of April, inclusive, have been received at Washington. The United States and Mexican armies were still posted on opposite sides of the Rio Grande; but no collision had taken place, and none was seriously apprehended.

RW46v23i37p1c2, May 8, 1846: Benton and Polk.

We have heretofore informed our readers that Colonel Benton’s speech on the Oregon question, in reply to Gen. Cass, had given great dissatisfaction to the ultra Oregon papers in the West, the remarks of one of which we have already quoted. Another, [the Jacksonian, published at Rushville,] declares that, "He has passed the Rubicon; it is time that every Democratic press should speak of him as he deserves—to unmask his plans and lay bare his treachery. It were better it had been done before. He is travelling in the path of the Rivers, the Tallmadges, and others, that have heretofore SLOUGGED OFF. He will soon reach THEIR level."

All of them, however, do not exhibit this vindictive and unforgiving temper. Some of them remember that in times past, the Missouri Senator has rendered good service to the Locofoco cause; and even if he had now grown somewhat lukewarm, or if his position were somewhat dubious, the most vindictive of his assailants might, it seems to us, find some palliation for his lack of zeal and firmness in the vaccillating policy of the President himself on the Oregon question, whose position is at least as equivocal as that of Mr. Benton. So thinks the Lafayette [Indiana] Courier, which, in a tone of amusing simplicity, remarks:

"Mr. Benton’s views on the Oregon question differ from those of Gen. Cass, perhaps of Mr. Polk; but they are views that are coincided in by thousands of Democrats all over the Union, and therefore, he forsooth, is to be accused of playing the traitor and abandoning his party."

"Perhaps of Mr. Polk!" There is a world of meaning in the phrase. It shows that even the friends of the President are at a loss to decide,—oscillating like a pendulum as he has been between 54 40 and 49,—where he stands upon this great question, in reference to which, although he has written much, he has said only enough to obscure his real designs from the most penetrating eye—if, indeed he knows his own mind two days together, which is very reasonably doubted.

RW46v23i37p1c3, May 8, 1846: From the New Orleans Tropic, Extra, April 29. LATE FROM TEXAS.

The steamship New York, Capt. Phillips, has just arrived, bringing Galveston papers of the 27th, and dates from the Army to the 22d. The following persons came passengers:

The iron propeller Hunter, which sailed from Brasos St. Jago in company with the steamer Col. Harney for this port, arrived off Galveston Bar on the 27th, eleven days out, with loss of smoke-pipe and short of fuel. She had encountered very heavy weather, having once been within seventy miles of the Pass and obliged to put back on account of head winds.

We take the subjoined article from the Galveston News of the 24th:

[WP]

RW46v23i37p1c3, May 8, 1846: Later from the Army of Occupation.

The schooner L. M. Hitchcock, Capt. Wright, arrived yesterday morning, having left Brasos St. Jago last Sunday. We are indebted for the following information to Col. March, who came on board the Hitchcock, having left the camp of Gen. Taylor on the 15th inst.

Our former intelligence by the Hitchcock, in regard to the movement of the army to a position three or four miles below Matamoras, was materially incorrect. On the morning of the 10th ult, when Gen. Taylor found himself exposed to the enemy's fire, with his right and left unprotected in consequence of the peculiar bends of the river, he ordered one division of his army to take position in the bend above and the bend below the town, while with the main army he maintained his first position, where he still remains. Gen. T. has used all diligence to strengthen his position, by throwing up breastworks, by entrenchments, fortifications, &c., and the Mexican General Ampudia, has been equally industrious in fortifying the town defensively keeping his soldiers employed night and day. Gen. Taylor's heavy ordnance of eighteen pounders, are said to be situated within point blank shot of Gen. Ampudia's house in the middle of the city, at a distance of 300 yards. Thus the two armies have been situated for upwards of 2 weeks up to our present dates, neither having committed any positive act of hostility, upon the other. On the 10th inst., Col. Cross, commissary General of the army, rode out by himself about 10 o'clock in the morning, to the house of a German, about two miles from the army, where, (as was afterwards ascertained,) he was taken prisoner, by a party of Mexican Rancheros. As soon as he was missing, Gen. Taylor sent a detachment of men, who scoured the country in search of him, but to no purpose.

Two or three days after Captain May, of the 2nd Dragoons, took a runaway negro in the neighborhood of the same place where Col. Cross was captured; and from this negro the above information of the taking of Col. Cross was obtained. Immediately after Gen. Taylor sent a messenger to the Mexican General requesting information whether Colonel Cross was a prisoner with him or not. The next day Gen. Ampudia sent several officers to the American camp with the answer that they knew nothing of Colonel Cross, but they had made Lieut. Deas a prisoner. This officer, it appears, had previously crossed the river [but without orders] in search of Colonel Cross, (who was his particular friend,) and had fallen into the hands of the Mexicans. Much uncertainty and many surmises prevail in regard to the fate of Colonel Cross. But the more probable opinion appears to be that his capture was authorized by, and unknown to Ampudia; and it is to be feared that he has been murdered by the party of by whom he was taken, and his horse, money and clothing divided among them.

On the 14th, Gen. Ampudia sent a formal notice to Gen. Taylor, ordering him to leave his present position within 24 hours, and to evacuate the whole territory west of the Nueces, or that has refusal would be considered a declaration of war. Gen. T. immediately returned for answer, that his orders were to maintain his position on the east bank of the river, and that he should do so, especially as the roads were muddy, and as it was unpleasant retreating at this season. Shortly after the reception, of this answer, the Mexican army partially withdrew from the town, and a portion of the troops disappeared from the west bank of the river. Thus closes the last act of the drama as far as the enemy is quite as inexplicable to Gen. Taylor as to every body else. Colonel March informs as that a report has been put in circulation, that the threatened hostilities are only suspended till the first of June, then to be renewed, we suppose, with redoubled energy and still more slaughter.

Gen. Taylor is prosecuting the fortifications at Point Isabel, with steady perseverance.
Before he returned the above answer to Ampudia, he ordered the blockade of Matamoros, and directed the commanders of the Flirt and Lawrence to enforce it strictly, which was accordingly done. A vessel, with a cargo of flour, having been waiting some time for a fair wind to enter the port, was the first to suffer from this measure, and was compelled to leave the market, where flour is now, worth $40 per bbl.

The Texas Congressional election was yet undecided. The Houston Star thinks there is little doubt that Judge Pillbury is elected. The Galveston News thinks the chances are in favor of Col. Williams.

The Galveston News of the 24th, says—The Telegraph, Capt. Auld, arrived last night from the Brasos St. Iago, and four days later from the Army of Occupation. This steamship left Brasos St. Iago at 10 o’clock, A. M., day before yesterday, being only 28 hours out. The Captain has kindly furnished us with some memoranda, stating that on the 19th inst., Lieut. Porter of the 4th Regiment, (son of the late Commodore Porter,) being out with a fatigue party of ten men, (some of them wearing uniform,) were tired upon when within a few miles of the camp.

Lieut. Porter and three of his men were killed, in the attack, the rest of the party escaping returned to the camp next day. It is stated that the guns of the Americans were wet and would not fire. We see no explanation given why this party of soldiers should be ranging about the country with guns that would not fire.

Lieut. Van Ness informs us that nothing further had been heard of Col. Cross up to the 19th, but that the general opinion is that he is still a prisoner, though not at Matamoros.

About fifty of the American army have deserted and swam the river for the Mexican camp, but a number of them were shot as deserters while in the water. The whole number of American troops is estimated at between two and three thousand, and they are said to be in excellent discipline, and eager for an engagement with the enemy.—
Ampudia’s forces are reported at between three and four thousand. It is rumored that Arista is about to supercede Ampudia in the command.

The Telegraph left at Brasos St. Iago, barque Wm. Iry, brig Apalachicola and schooners Wm. Bryan, Aurora, Arispa, Invincible, Gen. Worth and the steam schooner Augusta and several others, names unknown.

Laying outside the bar, schooner Florida and schooner Waterman, unable to get in for want of water.

We may here remark that it is now understood as a fact that Ampudia is already superseded by Arista, from whom we may expect the next proclamation. This General is admitted to be an officer of character, good sense and prudence, and whatever proceeds from him will be entitled to some consideration.

In our summary of news by the steamship Telegraph, we omitted to state what may be of some importance, viz:
that Gen. Ampudia, in his answer to the inquiries of Gen. Taylor concerning Col. Cross, expressly disavowed any acts of hostility that might have been or might hereafter be committed by Mexicans on this side of the river, stating that all such acts were unauthorized by him or his Government.

The brig Orleans, Capt. Patterson, arrived at this port this morning from Vera Cruz, having sailed thence on the 23d inst. She brings us our files of papers to the 22d from Vera Cruz, and to the 18th from the city of Mexico.

Every thing was still quiet in the Captiol and Vera Cruz, so far as any outbreak in favor of Santa Anna was concerned, but the minds of all men were ripe for a revolution. Letters had been received at Vera Cruz from the City of Mexico, stating that Gen. Alvarez had raised the standard of revolt in the Southern part of the Department of Mexico; proclaimed the Federal Constitution; and declared himself in favor of the recall of Gen. Santa Ana. No details upon this subject are given in the papers, but El Locomotor of the 22d has no doubt of the fact of a revolution having broken out as alleged.

The latest accounts received at Vera Cruz of the military operations on the Rio Grande were only to the 31st of March. Our advices are several weeks later

The Mexican Government is said to have sold its two war steamers, the Montezuma and Guadalupe, to Manning & McIntosh, an English house. The price is said to have been $640,000. Various speculations were indulged us to the object of this sale. The steamers were to proceed immediately to Havanna—some reports say to bring over the Spanish Prince destined to fill the throne of Mexico; others as confidently predict that Santa Ana would return in one of them—in a few weeks, too. On this subject we are left entirely to conjecture.
The ship Suviah arrived at Vera Cruz on the 18th inst. The same day the brig squadron was perfectly good. John Adams sloop of war was the only vessel of war lying at Sacrificious when the Orleans sailed. The health of the Falmouth fleet had previously gone out to sea for a day or two, to give the men benefit of fresh air, &c., The , sailed from Vera Cruz on the 23d, on a cruise off the coast, accompanied by the and Cumberland Potomac. The ship Suviah arrived at Vera Cruz on the 18th inst. The same day the brig Josephine arrived. On going in over the bar she got aground on the reef, and had to discharge her cargo. The brig Plymouth sailed for this port on the 20th inst.

El Diario del Gobierno announces that 7000 men, well organized and officered, and amply provided with munitions, money, &c., will compose the Army of the North, and that the chief command has been restored to Gen. Arista, and that Gen. Ampudia, will henceforth be only second in command. The appointment of Arista is confirmed by way of Brazos Santiago.

The business of Vera Cruz is almost annihihted by the unsettled state of the country, in regard to its internal prospects and foreign relations.

the Straits of Fuca, the free use of the Columbia and its northern branches down to the sea, and an indemnity or compensation to the Hudson’s Bay Company for the posts they will be called upon to surrender.” These terms will not be assented to, in our opinion, by the Executive, nor do we know that public sentiment in this country would be prepared to yield to them, in all their extent. But, while we are aware of the weight to which the remarks of the London Times are entitled, particularly in its articles on the relations of Great Britain with foreign nations, we have a strong hope, that, if Mr. Polk shall consent to abandon his claim to the territory between the 40th degree and the Russian boundary, these terms will be considerably modified, and that the incidental “conditions” may be finally satisfactorily adjusted. Nevertheless, it is not to be denied or concealed that he difficulties to an amicable adjustment of the question are far from being removed; and, although it is unquestionably now the general opinion, on both sides of the Atlantic, that peace will be preserved, we confess that to our minds it is apparent that THE DANGER IS NOT YET OVER. We repeat, that in this apprehension we seem to stand almost alone; and, in giving it utterance, therefore, we feel that we are striking a chord not at all in unison with the tone of public feeling. We shall most sincerely rejoice if subsequent events shall show that it is without foundation.

The attempt upon the life of the “Citizen King” of France indicates the prevalence in that kingdom still of disorganizing and r evolutionary opinions, which may be expected to develop themselves inextensive popular commotions, whenever the death of Louis Phillippe, (who indeed seems to bear about him “a charmed life”) shall occur. Had the ball of the assassin been directed with a truer aim, a few weeks ago, it seems to be the general impression that a rising of that large portion of the people, Republicans and Legitimists, hostile to the Orleans dynasty, would have taken place—the former because of the failure of the Citizen King to fulfill the pledges exacted from him by their leaders in the Three Days’ Revolution, when they placed the diadem upon his brow; and the latter because they look upon him, notwithstanding the Princely blood that flows in his veins, as scarcely less a usurper than Napoleon, and have consequently been long anxiously awaiting the period of his demise as a favorable moment of the restoration of the older branch of the Bourbons, in the person of their “legitimate Prince,” the young Duke of Bordeaux. It is not improbable however, that the extend of the disaffection to the Orleans dynasty in France has been exaggerated, as it certainly seems to us, at this distance from the scene, to be most unreasonable; for never, at any period, has France been governed so wisely as during the last ten years—and we doubt, if at any moment, since the downfall of Napoleon, that powerful kingdom has been in a condition of greater internal prosperity, or has presented to its enemies a front better calculated to command their respect and to hold them in check. “The Napoleon of Peace,” as he has been justly called, Louis Phillippe has nevertheless won that appellation not by any sacrifice of the honor or rights of the nation, for the government of which he possesses such rare and admirable qualifications, nor by unmannerly concessions to the arrogant pretensions of some of his brother Monarchs by whom he has been always rather coldly treated as an intruder into the charmed circle of Royalty,—having about him none of that divinity, which, according to the ancient faith of Europe “doth hedge in a King,”—but he has acquired it by holding in check the passions of his violent and impulsive subjects, while asserting firmly, in his intercourse with other Powers, the right of the Nation and the honor of his Crown. It is conceded that, of all living Monarchs, he is incomparably the wisest—wisest, as well in the learning derived from books, as in that practical knowledge which is far better, and which he acquired in that rough school of adversity, into which, in his younger days, it was his fortune to be thrown. His death, occur when it may, will prove a great calamity to the French people, unless indeed they have profited more than we have reason to suppose they have done, by the “bloody instructions” which twenty years of revolution and war ought to have impressed indelibly upon their minds.

From Great Britain, the intelligence by the Cambria is not decisive in regard to those great measures of domestic policy, upon which the prosperity and perhaps the internal tranquility of that kingdom depends. The House of Lords, it will be remembered, has already passed the “Irish Coercion Bill”—a measure characterized, it is said, [for we have not seen it,] by the most despotic and tyrannical features, and to which consequently the Irish members of the House of Commons are so inflexibly hostile, that, in order to prevent its adoption, they have intimated their intention to vote against Sir Robert Peel’s proposed modifications of the British Tariff, if the Ministry shall persist in sustaining a bill so obnoxious to their countrymen. So that the fate of that important commercial scheme may be regarded as seriously endangered by its connection with a measure upon which it has not legitimate bearing.

RW46v23i37p2c2, May 8, 1846: Congressional Independence.

The Union continues to press upon Congress, with all the earnestness and pertinacity for which its editor is so remarkable, the adoption of those “other measures” in relation to the Oregon territory, which Mr. Polk recommended in his annual message. The Senate, however, turns a deaf ear to the unceasing exhortations of the Official Journal, and proceeds calmly in the consideration of the ordinary subjects of legislation. Even the House of Representatives, which has been heretofore most disposed to lend a willing ear to the importunities of the Union, seems now to be unmoved by its pathetic appeals. Are we to infer from this unwonted indifference of the two Houses to the admonitory counsel of the Union, that the wand of the magician is broken, and that henceforth Congress intends to think and act for itself, instead of sitting in the Capitol to register decrees sent to it from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue? “That were a consummation devoutly to be wished.” Of all the practical reforms demanded by the country not one is more important or more imperatively required by its true interests—not one more essential to the preservation of our free institutions, by keeping the Executive in its constitutional orbit, from which it so often madly shoots—than the correction of the too long prevalent idea, that the representatives of the people in Congress are bound, by party allegiance, to reposes implicit confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the President for the time being, and to carry into effect, without enquiry or deliberation, every measure that he may recommend. There has been already too much of this subserviency; and we rejoice to believe that we see indications, in the action of the present Congress, of a more just and rational apprehension of the relative duties, rights and responsibilities of the co-ordinate departments of the government.
The New Orleans Tropic states that Lieut. Porter, recently murdered by a wandering band of Mexicans under the command of Canales, who is said to be himself an outlaw, and therefore not acting under authority of the Mexican Government, was a son of Com. Porter, formerly of the U. S. Navy, and son-in-law of Colonel Beal, of the U. S. Army, now stationed at Austria, Texas. He left a wife and three children at Fort Towson, the residence of his mother-in-law. The Tropic also states that this Canales has been very troublesome to Gen. Taylor, hanging on in the rear of his army, and cutting off his supplies.

From the same paper we learn that there is no doubt Col. Cross is in Matamoras, and had been peremptorily demanded by Gen. Taylor. No answer had been received. Lieut. Deas, of the 4th Artillery, who is a warm friend of Col. Cross, the moment he heard of his capture, swam the river in his uniform, and was taken prisoner. He is at large, on parole, at Matamoras.

The American officers who have visited Matamoros, say the Mexicans have no idea that there will be war, notwithstanding their furious proclamations.

CAMP OPPOSITE MATAMOROS, EASTERN BANK OF THE RIO GRANDE, Texas, April 18th, 1846.

Gentlemen—Knowing your disposition to enlighten the world upon all the important topics of the day, I have borrowed pen, ink and paper with a view of giving you some information with regard to our present position and anticipated differences with Mexico. You have doubtless been apprised of General Ampudia's bravo communication to General Taylor, in which he informed him that it would be an insult to the good sense and understanding of Don Z. Taylor for him (General Ampudia) to attempt a recapitulation of the very many insults and grievances which the American Government had heaped upon that of Mexico, and if he, the said Don Z., did not within twenty-four hours fall back beyond the Nueces river, that the Mexican Government would be under the disagreeable necessity of making him do so. To this General Taylor politely replied, that although he might have every disposition to accommodate, yet he could not think of disobeying the orders of his own Government, and was therefore prepared to stand the consequences. Several days have elapsed since, and no attempt has yet been made to drive us off. The two opposing armies are within five hundred yards of each other—both busily engaged in entrenching themselves and throwing up field works. The most perfect non-intercourse is established. Thousands of reports are daily in circulation with regard to the probable time at which we are to be eaten up, and frequently news reached us that the Mexicans are crossing the river at some point above or below us, when some unlucky devils (whose detail it happens to be) are detached on a scout for the whole night.

The last report is that Gen. Arista has taken command of the Mexican army, and that all hostile operations are to be suspended until next June, in order to give the two Governments an opportunity of negotiating peaceably—or, in other words, giving the Mexicans an opportunity of backing out with some show of decency. Take my word for it, we are to have no fun, unless we lead off the dance.

Many of our officers assemble daily on the banks of the river, and gaze with longing eyes at the houses, streets and signoras of the beautiful city of Matamoros. In the course of a week our fortification will be finished, when we may safely defy the whole Mexican army. It is said that Arista is the rival and enemy of Parades, and will therefore be disposed to favor the American Government.

Col. Cross our Quartermaster General, has doubtless been taken prisoner by a party of rancheros, and taken over to Mexico. Lieut. Deas, of the 4th Artillery, concluded, very strangely, the other night that he would swim over to Matamoros and get information about Col. Cross. He swam over in his uniform; and yesterday, when Gen. T. made a demand upon the authorities for Col. C., they returned an answer that he was not there, but that they had Lieut. Deas, whom they held as a prisoner of war. Deas had no permission from Gen. T. to go, so I suppose he will have to get back the best way he can. There is no apprehension but that these gentlemen are safe—Deas at Matamoros, and Col. Cross at some place in the interior. Yours, L.

CAMP OPPOSITE MATAMOROS, Aprt 15, 1846.

My Dear Friends—We are all alive and kicking, the Mexicans not having yet caused "the waters of the Rio Bravo del Norte to drink any of the blood of the degenerate sons of Washington."

From circumstances we are induced to believe that Col. Cross, was taken prisoner by a set of land-pirates that roam (unreadable). A notorious character by the name of Raffael Falcon, who scruples not at theft or murder, is supposed to have been prowling about our camp with some of his party, and seeing the colonel alone, they pounced upon him from the bushes, overpowered him, and either despatched him or run him over the river into Mexico, and now have him a prisoner—which, we have not been able to ascertain. This R. Falcon is said to be a captain of the Mexican army, and keeps at all times in his employ a set of desperadoes ready for any emergency.

This morning Lieut. Edward Deas, of the Artillery, said he was determined to ascertain what had become of Col. Cross. He dressed himself in uniform, mounted his horse, and, it is said, swam the river, and has gone to Matamoros. He has not been heard from, and how he will be received, or what will be his fate among them, none can tell, as he goes it entirely on "his own hook."

The Mexicans hold no intercourse with us, having immediately before our arrival here drawn up their boats on the other side, and told us they could not talk to us until we retired beyond the Nueces river. We won't do it.

To-day a Mexican came over from the other side and reported to Gen. Taylor that last night an express arrived in Matamoros from the city of Mexico, bringing intelligence that Ampudia is hereby relieved in command of the Army of the North, and Gen. Arista would resume the duties of that office, and that all warlike demonstrations on their part should cease until the 1st of June next, to give the two Governments time to settle the question. Yours truly,

CAMP, OPPOSITE MATAMOROS, April 19, 1846.

My Dear Friends—A report has been brought over here, by a Mexican from Matamoros, to the effect that Ampudia will, in three days, be relieved in the command of the "army of the North" by Gen. Arista, and that so soon as he arrives, he will give us a battle; and as a matter of course, we are all to have our heads boiled in oil and our livers stuffed with garlic. Look out that the Matamorians don't "ring in" an extra lot of sausage meat on the Crescent City. From the general character of Gen. Arista I look for more favorable views towards the United States than in appointing any other general in Mexico. He opposed the present Government of Mexico, and since Paredes has been in power, has expressed sentiments favorable to the United States.

Lieut. E. Deas, mentioned in my last, has been heard from. He swam the river for the purpose of gaining information in relation to Col. Cross—he went on his own hook and responsibility, without permission or sanction from either party. He was taken by a picket guard, and is now a prisoner at Matamoros. He writes that he is kindly treated. We heard that he was not in close confinement, but had the privilege of the barracks, on his parole, and was invited to the mess of Col. Curesco. Deas is a brave and intelligent man, and I think will some day be found "right side up." He is, however, in an unfortunate position, leaving our camp without the sanction of Gen. Taylor, and crossing into Mexico without a passport.

I have not time to say more to you this morning except that there has been a very severe fog her for two days, which has brought the mud to about ankle deep. Your, truly, Several Executive communications were laid before the House from the President of the U. S. and their reading called for.

One was in relation to the Salve trade and covered a correspondence from Mr. Gordon, Consul at Rio De Janeiro.

Another was in relation to the Cherokee Indians, and the third a statement from the Adjutant General in answer to a Resolution of the House as to the desertions from the Army.

Gen. Taylor, in his Report to the Adjutant General, states that there have been four desertions from the Army where the deserters were drowned and two where the deserters were shot while swimming. They were old offenders, and their punishment had deterred others from deserting.

Mr. ADAMS moved to refer this communication to five members.

Mr. DROMGOOLE moved to lay upon the table, which was agreed to.

The Bill from the Senate, in regard to deficient appropriations, was reported, and the House insisted upon its amendments from which the Senate had not receded.

Extract of a letter from an American officer on the Vera Cruz station, dated April 15.

"Nothing of importance has transpired here recently, but news of exciting interest pours in upon us from the frontier. The demonstration of General Taylor on the banks of the Bravo and the concentration of the Mexican forces about Matamoras, are events that we look upon as involving probable consequences of vast importance.

RW46v23i38p1c1, May 12, 1846: The Question Not Settled.

INTERESTING DEVELOPMENTS.

The Washington Union of Thursday night last [ . . . ] occasion, in language rather less diplomatic than it habitually employs, to contradict again the statement recently made by the N. Y. Journal Commerce, and since confidently repeated in other quarters, the truth of which we questioned from the beginning, that the Oregon question had been substantially settled by the informal concurrence [ . . . ] the high contracting parties in the outlines of a treaty of pacification, satisfactory to both. "We just again state," says the Union, "that there is some extraordinary mistake in this matter—that there is no foundation for the statement—that the question has not been directly or indirectly settled in London—that nothing will probably be done until the news reaches England of the decision of Congress. And we say this with the recollection that the Cambria has just brought despatches to our Government from London." This unequivocal denial, of course, puts to rest all the rumors, heretofore prevalent, by which the public anxiety as to the termination of this controversy had been to a great extent relieved.

There is too, we perceive, a greater diversity of opinion than a day or two since we had imagined, a regard to the final settlement of this controversy. Instead of being "solitary and alone" we find that several of our Northern cotemporaries concur in the strong fears that we have from time to time expressed, that insuperable difficulties may arise, even if both Governments shall agree to assume the 49th parallel of latitude as the basis of negotiation, in determining the rights of the parties, upon collateral but important points, upon which they are now directly at issue—such as the possession of Vancouver’s Island, the navigation of the Columbia, and the new and grave subject of difference recently suggested in England, growing out of the alleged infraction of certain rights and injury to the possessions of the Hudson’s Bay Company in the valley of the Columbia.

But perhaps the most important indication of the probable unfavorable termination of this complicated affair, the precarious and inauspicious aspect of which is to be ascribed exclusively to the unstatesman-like manner in which it has been managed by the present Administration—which, without the slightest necessity of it, has precipitated it to a point from which one or the other of the parties must recede from the position it has long and pertinaciously held, or, in the language of Gen. Cass, "war is inevitable,"—is a Letter from

ascribed to the contents of this letter by the Executive Organ, is emphatically marked by the fact that it "stopped the press," in order that it might publish, "without a day's delay," what it strongly characterizes as "MOMENTOUS" intelligence. The writer, who we are told, by the Union, "is unconnected without missions abroad, but who never writes upon any subject on which he is not accurately informed," after indulging in the usual flings of the 54 40 men at the timidity of the Senate, in refusing prompt obedience to Executive orders, and descanting upon the mischievous consequences likely to ensue therefrom, remarks: "I frankly confess to you that I cannot discover a solitary ray of hope for maintaining our rights in Oregon, except by the last resort, the ultima ratio of nations." The reasons for this opinion are to be found in the following extract from his letter, [which bears the date of London, April 18:]

"It is now generally believed, in the best informed circles, that Sir Robert Peel will succeed in effecting the change proposed by him some time since in the corn laws; and that he will then, with his ministers, retire from office. This will happen at a very early day; probably before the middle of next month. A new cabinet will, of course, be immediately formed, after the dissolution of the present one, under the s election of Lord John Russell; and Lord Palmerston, it is confidently asserted, will be restored to his said post of secretary for foreign affairs. The chief obstacle to the formation of a ministry by Russell, at the time of Peel's resignation, was the objection urged against Palmerston on account of the hostile feelings which he was known to entertain towards France. It was feared on both sides of the channel, that he would be instrumental in destroying the eptente cordiale which subsisted between Guizot and Peel, or rather between the two governments.

In anticipation of the early resignation of the Peel ministry, Palmerston availed himself of the Easter holydays to make a visit to the French metropolis, where he still continues, for the purpose, it is very evident, of reconciling Louis Philippe to his restoration. He has been most kindly received by Monsieur Guizot and the other members of the cabinet, and his mission doubtless will terminate successfully. His sentiments with regard to France will hereafter be entirely pacific, because his continuance in office would be of but short duration were they to become otherwise; but I have awful forebodings that our country is to find in him an inveterate deadly enemy. In his new-born zeal for the welfare of France, he will at once seize upon Guizot's "balance of power" doctrine in North America, and use his position and his talents to consummate the most desperate purposes at any time contemplated by England or France to check our growth or diminish the influence which our institutions are exercising over the other nations of the earth.

"I most sincerely regret that there should be so slight a prospect for adjusting the Oregon question before Peel's administration is at an end. Such an event could have been consummated, if there had been even a moderate degree of good management in Congress. Had the 'notice' so sincerely, and I may add, so patriotically urged by the President been promptly authorized to be given with the elevated ground upon which our title was placed by the correspondence which accompanied the message, there is not the shadow of doubt but that everything could have been, before this, amicably arranged, and to the general satisfaction of the people of the United States. But I distinctly foresee that such a result is no longer attainable by negotiation. Startle not, when I state to you, as my candid belief, that even should the notice arrive by the 25th inst., under the House resolution, nothing like the clear line of the 49th parallel can be secured! Peel could not be prevailed upon to settle at that, just as he is going out, if the 'notice' was now before him; and if we were disposed to compromise on the boundary, Russell will hesitate long, in my opinion, before he will offer it”

There are some intimations in the late English papers in reference to a possible change in Ministry in Great Britain; but, that event, should it occur, is based upon a presumption precisely the opposite of that upon which the speculations of the Union's correspondent are founded. We have seen not the remotest allusion to the probability of Sir Robert Peel's withdrawal from office in the event of the passage of his great measure of "commercial reform;” but it has been surmised, and very reasonably, that, in the event of the defeat of that measure, he will necessarily surrender his post. But is it likely that Lord John Russell, who is even more fully than Sir Robert Peel, pledged to the repeal of the Corn Laws, if Sir Robert Peel be defeated in that measure, will be his successor? We should infer otherwise; and that either Lord Stanley or the Duke of Richmond, who may be regarded as the leaders of the party opposed to the proposed modification or repeal of the Corn Laws, will be entrusted with the responsibility of conducting the Government— to be followed, perhaps, by a dissolution of Parliament a new election, and the postponement of the final struggle until another Parliament shall convene. The statement of the writer of the foregoing letter, however, in relation to Lord Palmerston's sudden visit to Paris, and his gracious reception at the Tuilleries, is corroborated by the London papers; and we leave it for our readers to judge to what extent that isolated fact is calculated to give plausibility to his gloomy inferences. We confess that we ascribe more importance and give more weight to them from the gravity of the Union in presenting them to the country, than we should be otherwise disposed to do. Occupying, as the editor of that paper does, a position which enables him to go behind the curtain which conceals from the public eye much information that may be essential in arriving at just conclusions on the subject, we cannot for a moment believe that he would, on the faith of a private letter from London, however intelligent and veracious the writer, and however ample his facilities of "ascertaining the truth from the highest and most unquestionable sources,” as we are assured is the fact in the present instance,---we say we cannot believe that the editor of the Union would even on such authority, publish, in a manner calculated to give a semi-official sanction to its contents, a letter of this character, unless its revelations were confirmed by information in the possession of the State Department. If, however, the revelations and speculations of this letter are not confirmed by information received by our Government from our official agents in London, we confess that, for one, we are strongly disinclined to give full credit to them. We believe, as we have heretofore said, that the danger of war is not over; but we do not believe that the event, should it occur, will be rendered more probable by the accession of Lord John Russell to the British Premiership. We have no doubt that he will be as strongly disposed as Sir Robert Peel to settle the controversy amicably. If the latter will consent to adopt the 49th degree of latitude as the boundary line, it is scarcely to be questioned that the former will accede to the same terms as the basis of the negotiation. But it is in the adjustment of the collateral issues that we have always apprehended, as we still do, the most serious obstacle to the satisfactory settlement of the question; and in reference to them so far as we may judge by their public declarations, we have no reason to suppose that difficulties which might be easily obviated with Sir Robert Peel will prove to be insurmountable with Lord John Russell. The danger lies in the question itself, and not in the individuals to whom its management has been, or may hereafter be entrusted.

RW46v23i38p1c2, May 12, 1846: Stirring News from the Army!

Sooner, but not more certainly, than we had anticipated, bad tidings have reached us from our gallant little army upon the Mexican frontier—sent there, as it seems to us, in a mere spirit of bravado, and at the imminent hazard of being cut off by the superior force which it ought to have been obvious the Mexicans might at any moment concentrate upon that point. Already, to, it begins to be admitted (see the interesting letter to the New Orleans Tropic) that the bravery of the Mexican soldiers, and the skill of their officers, have been greatly underrated; and we hope, consequently, that there will be no more exhibitions of that fool-hardiness, which prompted one of our officers, at the head of a small reconnoitering party, to attack the advance guard of a formidable army—paying with his own and the lives of his comrades the penalty of his rashness.

The news of Gen. Taylor’s critical position has, it will be perceived, created great excitement in New Orleans as well as in Texas; and thousands of volunteers, we doubt not, are now marching to his relief. And we hope they may not be too late to rescue him from the large force, by which, at the last dates, he was threatened. Fearful will be the retribution, if he and his army have been cut off, that will await those by whose orders they were subjected to this needless peril.

This is among the first fruits of annexation—a war to defend a frontier, which we were assured was itself to be an impregnable wall of defence!

RW46v23i38p1c3, May 12, 1846: IMPORTANT FROM TEXAS AND THE ARMY.

Per Steamer Galveston from Galveston. Commencement of Hostilities!—News from the Seat of War! From the Galveston News Extra, April 30, 1846.

On Thursday morning, 23d ult., a Mexican came into General Taylor’s camp and reported 2000 Mexicans crossing the river some twenty miles above. That afternoon Captains Hardee and Thornton were sent with two companies of cavalry, 63 men in all, to reconnoitre. On Friday morning they fell into an ambush of the enemy, when Lieut. Cain and thirteen men were killed. Capt. Thornton missing and Capt. Hardee and 46 men prisoners. On Saturday afternoon the Mexicans sent in a wounded man who made the above report. These Mexicans, it is stated, were commanded by Canals and Carabajal. After the fight, the Mexicans on this side of the river were largely reinforced, and have surrounded Gen. Taylor’s camp, cutting off all communication with Point Isabel, at which place is the train and all of the stores belonging to the Army—Gen. Taylor not having on hand over ten days provisions. There are at Point Isabel 90 artillery men, 20 dragoons, about 250 teamsters, and about 150 citizens and laborers, and the entrenchments not half finished.

The steamer Monmouth landed Mr. Catlett on the night of the 28th ult. at Port Labacco, with despatches from Gen. Taylor, calling on Governor Henderson for 40 companies of Riflemen, 60 men each, 20 of the companies to be mounted men to rendezvous at Corpus Christi, when they will be mustered into service and supplied with provisions—the foot companies will rendezvous at Galveston where transportation will be furnished.

The steamer Augusta was to have left the Brasos St. Iago on Monday night for New Orleans with Gen. Taylor’s call on the Governors of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama for 8000 troops. Should immediate relief not be sent to Point Isabel, it will most probably fail into the power of the enemy, with all the army stores, and the destruction of the whole army may follow.

Gen. Taylor’s works in front of Matamoras would be completed on the morn of the 28th, at which time it was expected the fire would be opened on the city. Troops should not await the call of the Governor, as it will be a week before it can reach this place, but hurry to the relief of Point Isabel, as by saving that place only will we have it in our power to render the army timely assistance. Texas! You have now at last a glorious opportunity of retaliating on these perfidious Mexicans the many injuries they have done you, and of carrying that war into the heart of their own country, the cruelties of which they have so often made you feel.

We are indebted for the above to Mr. Gen. S. Grason, who has just retured by the Monmouth. He informs us that Capt. Catlett left the army on Sunday night, with a Mexican guide, and passing down the river reached Point Isabel on Monday morning with Gen. Taylors despatches to the Governor of Texas. The Monmouth was unable to leave until Monday night, in consequence of having to discharge, and take in provisions to be sent into Corpus Christi for the volunteers as fast as they arrive. These were left at St. Joseph’s, where the White Wing is now taking them to their destination.
Gen. Memucan Hunt will leave this city late this evening by way of Velasco and Victoria to rendezvous at Corpus Christi, preparatory to marching for the relief of Gen. Taylor.

RW46v23i38p1c3, May 12, 1846: To Arms! Texans, to Arms!

The United States Army under Gen. Taylor is surrounded by the Mexican enemy on Texan soil. Gen. Taylor has called upon the Governor of Texas for 2400 troops—let Galveston show to the world that they are always ready for the defence of their country—let them display the same spirit and alacrity that they did in 1842.

Head Quarters,
Galveston Volunteer Battalion,
30th April, 1846.

ORDERS.

The commissioned and non commissioned officers of the companies composing the Galveston Volunteer Battallion, are requested to meet for consultation at ten o’clock this morning, at the Galveston Artillery Armory, at Mr. Crawford’s store. The country needs our services! No time should be lost in immediately organizing the several corps of this battallion. The commandant of the battallion has the fullest confidence in the patriotism and zeal of the citizen soldiers of Galveston! He is sure they will not falter nor hesitate in this emergency! They have always desired an opportunity of showing their prowess to their Mexican enemies! That opportunity has now arrived! It is expected the young men of Galveston will immediately rally as volunteers, nor wait for their services to be required by draft.

If 150 or 200 men with the proper officers can be raised by to-morrow morning at 8 o’clock, they will be shipped with arms and accoutrements, and will take passage on board the steamer Monmouth, now bound for Point Isabel. N. KINGSBURY, Lieut. U. S. Army.

RW46v23i38p1c3, May 12, 1846: [Correspondence of the N. O. Tropic .]

BRASOS ST. IAGO, April 27.

By the Augusta, I sent you some of the items now transpiring around this interesting spot. The opinion is fast gaining ground here, that the imbecility of the Mexicans has been greatly overrated. This is the theatre of real war, not paper squabbles, but is the seat of the commencement of sanguinary conflict, and one it is feared of more importance and longer duration than has been anticipated; but the farce is at an end, and the curtain has risen bloody with carnage, the opening of a drama almost unexpected, and our country already mourns the loss of some of her finest and bravest officers. On Thursday, the 23d, Gen. Taylor received information that a body of the Mexican Army had crossed the Rio Grande some distance above the encampment. Early the following morning, Capt. Thornton and Harndee of 2d Light Dragoons, with a company of 70 men, were dispatches by Gen. Taylor, to reconnoitre above, and Capt. Kerr of the same regiment, with a company to reconnoitre below the Encampment. The latter returned without having made any discovery.

The former division fell in with what he considered to be a scouting party of the enemy, but which proved to be the advanced guard of a strong body of the enemy; who held a situation in the chaparel immediately in the rear of Gen. Taylor’s camp. Capt. Thornton charged upon the guard, contrary to the advice of his Mexican guide, and on following the enemy Capt. Thornton found his command surrounded by the enemy, who fired on him, killing as is supposed, Capt. Thornton, Lieuts. Kane and Mason, and some 26 of the men, and taking Capt. Hardee and the remainder of the command prisoner.

The Mexican commander sent in a cart to Gen. Taylor’s camp with a soldier badly wounded, with a message that he had no travelling hospital with him and could not give him the assistance his situations required. There is no doubt the detachment of the enemy east of the Rio Grande consists of fully 2500 men commanded by Col. Carasco and Carrajabal, bold and intrepid officers to experience and ability, and were the whole army officered by such men as Carasco, as I know him personally, we should not be upon an equal footing. There is no doubt their object is to cut off all communication with Point Isabel, this being the general depot of provisions for the American army; they have succeeded and consequently placed the American army in a precarious situation. It will be utterly impossible for Gen. Taylor to force his way along the dreary chaparels in which the enemy are strongly posted. His command cannot exceed 2300 men.
Gen. Taylor has an excellent position in the rear of Matamoras; and can hold his position against the whole Mexican army combined, and his batteries can range the city of an hour. Most of the citizens have left Matamoras, and Gen. Taylor has said that when the regular soldiers of Mexico were seen on the east side of the river, he would destroy the city. His batteries are to be ready on the 27th, complete. Gen. Taylor has in camp full rations for 15 days, which he thinks can be made to last 30, by which time he is in hopes to receive large reinforcements from the States of Texas and Louisiana, upon each of which State he has made a requisition for the equipment and transmission to Point Isabel of four full regiments of Militia.

It is thought by the superior officers of Gen. Taylor's army that 20,000 men will be required within a very short period, as it is well known that the Mexican army is daily receiving large reinforcements from the interior. It was suposed by the American officers that Gen. Arista reached Matamoros on the evening of the 22d, with a large Brigade, but up to the period of my informant leaving the Camp no communication had been received by Gen. Taylor from Gen. Arista. On the 22d, Gen. Taylor received from Gen. Ampudia, by the means of a flag of truce, a communication IN VERY DEFENSIVE TERMS, complaining of having blockaded the Rio Grande. To which he replied, that he, Gen. Ampudia, had been the cause of the blockade, he having expressly declared that Unless Gen. Taylor commenced his Retreat beyond the Nueces within twenty-four hours after his displaying his Flag upon the banks of the Rio Grande, he would consider WAR as being declared, and should act accordingly.—Gen. Taylor furthermore stated that he would receive no further communication from the Mexican Government, unless couched in language more respectful towards the Government and People of the United States. At Point Isabel great fears were entertained of a night attack, which, from the exposed situation of that Point, could not be otherwise than successful, if conducted with energy.

This post is defended by Major Munroe, with a detachment of 80 artillerists. There are also at the post about 200 armed waggoneers, and 10 laborers under the orders of the Quarter Master; some 100 citizen, furnished with arms by the U. S. Ordnance officer, organized under the command of Capt. Perkins, and denominated the Sumter Guards. A company of 50 Mexican cavalry was seen on the night of the 26th, within 5 miles of Point Isabel. They were supposed to be a corps of observation.

The body of Lieut. Porter, who was killed by a party of banditti, under the command of Romer Falcon, had not been found., The principal officers known to be in command of the Mexican forces as Generals Arista, Ampudia, Mejia, and Canales; and Colonels Carrasco and Carrajabal are men of talent. I am indebted for the above information to the politeness of Col. ?oane, who is on his way to New Orleans in the Augusta.

P. S. A messenger has just arrived, after severe toil and much danger, owing to the proximity of the troops and the state of the prairie. From him, I learn, that Arista communicated politely to Gen. Taylor, that he had assumed command of the Mexican Army.

RW46v23i38p1c3, May 12, 1846: To the Editors of the Tropic

ST. JOSEPH’S ISLAND, TEXAS, April 28th, 1846.

Messrs. Editors:--By the arrival of the steamer Monmouth, this day, intelligence has been received at this place of the Army of Occupation being surrounded by 10,000 Mexican troops. The Mexican army passed the Rio Grande in the night. Capt. Thornton, 2 Dragoons, in attempting to cut his way out with his company, was killed. Also, two sub . . . ers and 13 privates, the remainder taken prisoners. Gen. Taylor, on this day, 28th, engages with the enemy. His whole force of fighting men will not number 3000—his mott is, “Conquer or die!” The United States troops are eager for the fray.

RW46v23i38p2c1, May 12, 1846: THE NEWS!

We received no later intelligence by yesterday morning’s Southern mail from the seat of war on the Rio Grande—though the reader will find some additional particulars in our columns this morning.

The New Orleans papers of the 4th inst. are crowded with articles growing out of the recent stirring events in that quarter, and with notices in reference to the military movements in progress in the city, with the view of raising a sufficient force for the relief of Gen. Taylor. In the mean while, we are gratified to perceive that they generally concur in the opinion that the American Commander would be able to maintain his position, in defiance of the superior force by which he was threatened, until the arrival of an additional force. The Commercial Times, for example, says:
"From all that we can gather in relation to the contest, little apprehension need be entertained that the position of Gen. Taylor will be forced. He is very strongly entrenched, and has a battery commanding the town of Matamoras. The first assault of the Mexicans will be a signal for the levelling of his artillery against that town; and any effort to break into his fortress will only result in the bombarding of that frontier village. Famine alone can drive him into open field, and as, according to his own showing, Gen. Taylor had fifteen days’ rations with him, there is no reasonable fear of such a catastrophe occurring before the arrival of sufficient reinforcements to enable him to resume an offensive attitude. Point Isabel, it is true, may tempt the cupidity of the Mexicans, and its loss would be serious, not only because it contains ample munitions and military stores, but from the fact that it commands the route to the main body of our Army. It is stated that an addition of two or three hundred men, would be sufficient to defend this important point, from any probable force that the Mexicans could bring to bear again it. Under such circumstances, the place is safe, for Galveston and the adjacent country have already dispatched more than the number required, to the assistance of the beleaguered fortress. The only possible danger is from meeting the enemy, and being cut up, before they can reach the point. We think, however, that the Texans themselves may be relied upon. Their knowledge of localities, and experience in the border warfare so frequently waged between them and Mexico, will greatly avail them in so critical a juncture."

The Tropic presents us with a map of the position occupied by the American forces. It says:

"Gen. Taylor’s camp extend about four miles along the river bank—two miles above, and two below Matamoras. The entrenchment to erect it required 2300 men for thirty days. It is made of sand, and covered over with twigs woven together like basket work, surrounded by a very wide and deep ditch. He walls of the magazine, in the interior of the fortification, are formed of pork barrels filled with sand, and, seven tier thick, four tier high, covered over with timber, on which sand is piled ten or twelve feet.—Twelve heavy pieces of ordnance are so placed as to command the town of Matamoras. Five hundred men could defend the fortification against any force the Mexicans could bring against it at present."

The New Orleans paper complain that the volunteering has not been as rapid as had been anticipated, and not at all commensurate with the exigency of the call made by Gen. Taylor. The Tropic of the 4th furnishes the following, as the number of enrolments on the preceding afternoon:

"We are not aware of the numbers collected down town, but we have been told that perhaps the whole will not amount to more than 800 men, those already enumerated included. Hence it seems that the Governor will be obliged to have recourse to a draft. A gentleman informs us that his Excellency stated yesterday that he should issue his proclamation to that effect this day at noon. Two of the Regiments required will, it is probable, be taken from this city and Lafayette; the other two, from the rural parishes. In Lafayette we heard that up to two o’clock, yesterday, only ten men had volunteered."

Mobile has displayed more energy than her sister city, though of course her preparations are on a smaller scale. The news from the Rio Grande was received in Mobile on the night of the 2d, and on the 4th, a company of volunteers, numbering fully 100, started for New Orleans, on board the steamer Fashion, whence they intended to proceed with all possible despatch to the Army. Before leaving, the Company elected Gen. Robert Desha, who is said to be a gentleman of great energy and bravery, and one who has "seen service," as it is Captain, and Capt. Thomas Adrian as its Lieutenant. The wharves were lined with citizens for an hour before the departure of the gallant band, and as the boat shoved off the air resounded with shouts and cheers.

The news from the frontier reached Washington last Saturday evening; and, as might have been expected, it seems to have startled the Administration from its listlessness and apathy. We infer, from an editorial in the Union of Saturday night that the President transmitted to Congress a communication on the subject of our Mexican relations yesterday; and we take it for granted, that, under existing circumstances, that body will act upon his recommendations with promptness, decision and unanimity. It is no time to deliberate in cold debate, while the tocsin of war is ringing in our ears. It is now too late to discuss the propriety of stationing a small force on the banks of the Rio Grande, in the face of an exasperated enemy with the means of greatly outnumbering it; unsupported by a corps de reserve, and with a Desert intervening between our troops and the means of succoring them in the event of a successful assault by their adversary. Nor is it the proper period, for discussing the graver question, whether a position ought to have been taken upon the banks of that river at all, which while we claim it as belonging to Texas, is also claimed by Mexico as a part of its territory, before an effort at least had been made to ascertain and settle the
The city was thrown into a state of profound excitement yesterday morning by the arrival of the steamship Galveston, from Brazos Santiago, with later news from the Army justifying the worst apprehensions which had previously been entertained of the critical position of Gen. Taylor’s forces. We issued, immediately upon the receipt of the news, a second edition of The Picayune, laying a full statement of affairs on the Rio Grande before the reader. But not to omit any thing that may relieve the anxiety felt by all to obtain the smallest item of information in regard to the disaster which has overtaken Capt. Thornton and his command, we give, place to the following letter direct from the camp. In some particulars, it differs from the statements that have been laid before the public by the press of the city—and particularly, it sets down the loss occasioned by the surprise of Capt. Thornton’s command as less than it is made by any other report we have seen. Other letters which we have from the Army, breathe the entire calm spirit of determination as Lieut. Henry’s, from which we will no longer detain the reader:

The result of the contest cannot of course be for a moment doubtful. There is too great a disparity between the relative power and resources of the two countries, to justify and apprehensions on that score, even if the internal dissensions which seem to be a chronic disease of the Mexican people, should all be healed by the dangers which assail them from without, and their hundred factions could be induced to combine their energies and resources for the common defence. Her subjugation, indeed, under such circumstances, might be a task of difficult accomplishment—she has been so long disturbed, there is no alternative left to our Government but an appeal to arms. In that appeal, without stopping to enquire into the wisdom or justice of the course heretofore pursued by the Administration, the whole country, irrespective of party, will, without doubt, give it a cordial and hearty support. Such, at least, will be our own course—leaving it for a season more pietious to a calm and just decision by the people, to scrutinize the policy pursued by the Executive, by which the threatened war has been, if not provoked, unquestionably and unnecessarily precipitated.

Gentlemen—Knowing that in the present excited state of the public mind as regards our Mexican affairs and the welfare of our little army, that most exaggerated reports creep into the public prints, thereby carrying with them sorrow and anxiety into the bosom of the friends and relations of many officers, I deem it my duty to give you a hasty but correct account of the capture of Capt. Thornton and a squadron of the 2d Dragoons, by a force of 2000 Mexicans under the command of Gen. Torrejon. General Taylor, on the 24th, had received a report that the enemy were crossing the river above his camp. Capt. Thornton, with his command, was sent out on the evening of the 24th to examine the country above and see whether there was any truth in the report. His command was composed of Capt. Hardee, Lieut. Kane, Lieut. Mason, 5 sergeants, 4 corporals, 1 bugler, and 49 privates. His Mexican guide returned this morning, stating that he had been attacked at 8 o’clock on the morning of the 25th by a large number of the enemy, and that the whole command was captured or destroyed. The guide warned him that he was in the vicinity of the enemy and refused to proceed. He waited until night, and none of the party coming in, he returned home. About 11 this morning a private of the party was brought in, in a cart.

He was wounded. The man who brought him was the bearer of a note from Torrejon to Gen. Taylor, the amount of which was that “on the score of humanity he claimed the privilege of sending into him two dragoons, who were wounded in an engagement brought on by a charge from an American cavalry officer against his command of 200 men, as he had not flying hospital.” He then spoke of the rest being prisoner, and said “they would be treated with the considerations due prisoners of war, agreeable to the custom of civilized nations.” From the wounded dragoon we obtain the following facts: That the charge was made in open ground; that when the command "charge" was given, but a few of the enemy were seen, but as they dashed over a hill the whole command presented themselves; they were fired upon, and immediately surrounded and taken prisoners. He does not know what became of Capt. Thornton. Capt. Hardee and Lieut. Mason are prisoners, and are all well. He reports Lieut. Kane, as shot, and it is feared he is killed. Ten men were killed. Before the cart left one of the two men mentioned died. From the note of Gen. T., it seems that he accuses Captain Thornton of having charged upon him. One can hardly conceive of such madness as charging 200 men with 63, and it is fair to presume that he was surrounded and charged to cut his way through. Time will clear it all up. The capture of Captain Thornton's party and sad death of Lieut. Porter, and murder of Col. Cross, are rather melancholy commencements of the war. I say war, for there is no doubt of its existence, and that unless an armistice is signed in ten days, we must have some hard fighting. The enemy are collecting in some considerable number, and I think their force may be estimated with safety at 5000. Gen. Taylor is rapidly pushing forward his field work, and I understand has sent for 4000 volunteers—two thousand from Louisiana and two from Texas. If they will give us a fair fight, we do not doubt our ability to whip them; but if they are going to give us a second edition of the Florida war, it will be a very annoying affair.

Yours very truly,
W. S. HENRY, Lt. U. S. A.

We were politely furnished with the perusal of letter from Gen. Taylor to a friend in this city, from which we make the following extracts:

"Strong guards of foot and mounted men are established on the margin of the river," and thus efficient means have been adopted on our part to prevent all intercourse. While opposite to us their pickets extend above and below for several miles, we are equally active in keeping up a strong and vigilant guard to prevent surprise, or attacks under disadvantageous circumstances. This is the more necessary, whilst we have to act on the defensive, and they at liberty to take the opposite course whenever they think proper to do so. Nor have we been idle in other respects; we have a field work under way, besides having erected a strong battery, and a number of buildings for the security of our supplies, in addition to some respectable works for their protection. We have mounted a respectable battery, four pieces of which are long eighteen pounders; with which we could batter or burn down the city of Matamoras, should it become necessary to do so. When our field work is completed (which will soon be the case) and mounted with its proper armament, five hundred men could hold it against as many thousand Mexicans. During the twenty-seven days, since our arrival here, a most singular state of things has prevailed all through the outlines of the two armies, which to a certain extend, have all the feelings as if there were actual war.

"Fronting each other for an extent of more than two miles and within musket range are batteries shotted, and the officers and men in many instances, waiting impatiently for orders to apply marches; yet nothing has been done, to provoke the firing of a gun or any act of violence.

"Matamoras, at the distance we are now from it, appears to cover a large extent of ground, with some handsome buildings, but I would imagine the greater portion of them to be indifferent one story houses, with roofs of straw, and walls of mud, or unburnt brick. During peace the population is said to be five or six thousand, but it is now filled to overflowing with troops. Report says from five to ten thousand of all sorts, regular and militia. The number I presume is very much overrated.

"P. S.—Since writing the above, an engagement has taken place between a detachment of our cavalry and the Mexicans, in which we were worsted. So the war has actually commenced and the hardest must fend off."

From the above it will be seen that Gen. Taylor has neither fallen back nor retreated, but has acted strictly in accordance with his orders from the Secretary of War, which was to act on the defensive until attacked.

An extra from the Tropic office, dated at 1 o'clock, P. M., of the 4th inst., says:--"We were favored with the perusal of a letter from an officer of the Army of Occupation to a gentleman in this city, in which it is explained that the engagement of the 70 dragoons took place 23 miles up the river, which runs W. by N. from Matamoros, while Point Isabella is NE. of the same place, thus showing that the whole Mexican force is not between Gen. Taylor's camp and his supplies. The letter also stated that the communication could be kept open that the camp was well fortified considering its length of line, and that in five days the fort would be finished and fire upon Matamoros commence.

"The Mexican force now on this side of the river is 2000 infantry and 1200 cavalry."
SENATE. The Senate was not in session to-day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. A motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the private calendar was agreed to.

A bill for the relief of William Culver was read a third time and passed.

Mr. GARRET DAVIS moved to suspend the rules to enable him to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, 1st, That the President of the U. S. be requested to inform the House whether any portions or de (unreadable) of the American Army on the Rio Grande have attacked, or been attacked by the Mexican forces or people; whether any American officers or soldiers have been killed in any such attack, and if so the name or names of such officers or soldiers; and whether they were killed in the American or Mexican territory.

2nd. Whether any supplies for the American Army have been captured by the Mexican forces, and if so, what amount or supplies were thus captured; what force had been detailed to guard them; and what efforts were made to retake them.

3d. Whether any naval commander of the United States has blockaded the mouth of the Rio Grande, or Matamoras; whether such commander has ordered off, or captured, any American, English, or Mexican ships from Matamoras, or the mouth of the Rio Grande; and if so, what ships have been thus ordered off or captured; and also to communicate to this House a copy of any order or orders under which any such commander may have acted.

The House refused to suspend the rules, and the resolutions were not received. Ayes 64, noes 85.

Mr. PETTIT, Chairman of the “Webster Investigating Committee,” submitted a resolution to allow the Committee to sit during the sessions of the House, and to employ a clerk.

Mr. HAMLIN moved to strike out that part of the resolution which authorized the employment of a clerk.

Mr. PETTIT said that a clerk was indispensably necessary.

Mr. HAMLIN'S motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the resolution, as amended.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to amend it by allowing a clerk to the Committee of which he is Chairman. The motion was lost.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. PETTIT then asked to be excused from serving upon the committee. He said that no member of the committee would undertake to do the necessary writing.

The House refused to excuse him.

Mr. HOMES, of S. C. moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The SPEAKER decided that the motion could not be entertained.

The following bills were then read a third time and passed.

The bill for the relief of the owner and crew of the schooner Success.

A bill for the relief of Nathaniel Bird.

A bill for the relief of George Wenthing.

Mr. BAYLY renewed a motion made by him on a former day to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill for the relief of the heirs of Lieut. Jonathan Dye, an officer in the Virginia Continental line, who was killed at the Battle Brandywine. The house refused to reconsider.

Mr. WILMUT, of Pa., who is confined to his lodgings by indisposition, was excused from serving upon the Committee. to investigate the charges against Mr. Webster.

Mr. SIMS, of S. C., moved that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill to incorporate the Orphan Asylum and Female Free School of Alexandria, and that said bill be put upon its passage.

The Speaker said that it was necessary that the bill should pass through the Committee before it could be acted upon by the House, as it contained an appropriation.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CALEB B. SMITH in the Chair, and took up the private calendar.

A few bills were acted upon, and then the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

The National Intelligence of yesterday says—"The news from the Rio Grande has of course put in motion all the Executive Departments connected with the Military or Naval operations. A Cabinet Council is said to have been held on Saturday night, and during yesterday various orders were issued from the public offices. Among other steps taken, all the remaining disposable forces of the Army has been ordered to the 'seat of war,' as it is now familiarly called. Gen. Worth, it is said, his resignation not being accepted, returns forthwith to the Army of the South."

From the same paper, we copy the following letter:

Extract from a letter from Col. Fitzpatrick, of Florida, serving as a volunteer under Col. Twiggs, to a member of Congress.

[Col. F. is a gentleman of high character, well known as an officer who served in the Florida war.

Camp before Matamoras, April 27, 1846.

Dear Sir—The war was commenced on the part of Mexico. On the night of the 25th inst., Capt. Thornton, of the Dragoons, with a squadron consisting of his own and Capt. Hardee's company, were ordered to reconnoitre the Mexican army, which Gen. Taylor had been informed were crossing the Rio Grande twenty-seven miles above here. The squad was ambusched and fired on, and a number (unknown) killed, and all besides taken by the Mexicans. They sent in 2 wounded, with a note to Gen. Taylor. Capt. Hardee is prisoner, but no news of Capt. Thornton and Lieuts. Mason and Cain. You will believe me when I tell you the war is commenced by Mexico, and that Gen. T. is about to be surrounded and cut off from his supplies at Point Isabel, which is twenty-seven miles distant. The Mexicans have a force of two to three thousand on this side the river, and their destination is doubtless Point Isabel, where there is not more than four hundred men of all descriptions. You will believe me when I tell you that this army will have the ddest hardest fighting that ever any army had in this world, and, unless reinforcements are largely and speedily sent to its assistance, it must be cut off, as the enemy are in great force, and I fear have been very much underrated. I tell you, sit, the enemy have been entirely underrated, and this army has put itself in a trap, and is cut off (or about to be so) from its supplies.

I am here with Col. Twiggs as an amateur, and I shall stick to it till I am killed or made prisoner. Yours, truly, R. FITZPATRICK.

Important from Washington. By the Electro-Magnetic Telegraph.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, May 10, 4 P. M.

We understand that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, held a meeting this morning, at 8½ o'clock, and have determined to urge to-morrow morning, the immediate passage of a Bill authorizing the President to receive 50,000 volunteers, and appropriate $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for effective operations against Mexico. The vouchers for the above are A. VIAL, Ass't. S. U. S. Telegraph.

H. J. ROGERS,
Ass't. S. U. S. Telegraph.
WASHINGTON, May 10, 5½ P. M.

The last news from Mexico and Texas has created a deep feeling in the city, and, in view of its importance and the necessity of doing something to relieve the Army in Texas, The Committee on Military Affairs for he House of Representatives have been in session to-day, and will probably report a bill to-morrow for raising Volunteers, and for paying them during their term of service, which the Government has been slow to do heretofore. The Committee of Ways and means, it is also said, have been consulted as to the provisions for carrying out the views of the Committee on Military Affairs.

A message is also expected from the President to-morrow in reference to our Mexican Affairs, and probably re-commanding a Declaration of War. The Executive and his advisers are loudly complained of in the city for the removal of the Army from Corpus Christi, and thus provoking the hostilities which have followed, and which were sure to follow. All must agree heartily to fight the battles of the country, but the responsibility of war will rest with the President.

P. S. The Committee on Military Affairs will recommend $10,000,000 in money and 50,000 volunteers.

RW46v23i38p4c2, May 12, 1846: News from the Frontier.

The reader’s attention will be arrested by the highly interesting intelligence from our little army on the banks of the Rio Grande, in another column---if, indeed, it has been able to maintain its position on the banks of that river, against the overwhelming force with which there is some reason to apprehend the Mexicans have been stealthily concentrating at Matamoras, and which, before this time, Gen. Taylor has not probability encountered in battle. We certainly have not a very exalted opinion of Mexican valor, yet we have not now to learn that it is sometimes dangerous to understate the prowess of an adversary. The very contempt for him leads to lack of caution in guarding against his attacks, and to a foolish rashness in meeting them. But even if our army escape the sword of the hectoring Dons, who, puerile as they are said to be, have evinced no signs of quailing at the approach of the American forces to the borders of their territory, it is not unreasonably feared by the New Orleans Bee that famine and the ague will decimate its ranks. We are more than ever compelled to doubt the wisdom—we certainly cannot perceive the necessity—of removing Gen. Taylor’s army from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande, leaving no corps de reserve to fall back upon for support in the event of even the improbable contingency of a disastrous conflict, and liable to have his supplies of provisions intercepted by marauding parties of Mexicans, some of which indeed have already succeeded not only in thus harassing him, but in cutting off small detachments of his soldiers, who have been murdered in cold blood. We are not surprised to learn that the tidings of these melancholy events have kindled an angry excitement in new Orleans, and that public opinion in that city warmly censures the course of the government in sending Gen. Taylor to face an enemy whom he is instructed not to assail, while that enemy is continually harassing and threatening him, and is daily recruiting his forces for an effectual onslaught. We fear that what we have already heard is but the prelude to still gloomier intelligence from that quarter. We have no doubt, of course, that our soldiers will do their duty in the event of a battle with the Mexicans—but can it be expected that a mere handful of men, however brave, can withstand the shock, in an open field, of thrice their number?

RW46v23i38p3c3, May 12, 1846: From the New Orleans Picayune, May 1.

LATER FROM THE ARMY.

Col. Cross Murdered!—His Body Found!

The brig Apalachicola, Capt. Smith, arrived at this port, yesterday from Brasos Bay, whence she sailed on the 24th ult., and reports that on the 22d she left Point Isabel, where Major Thomas, the acting Quarter Mater, informed Capt. Smith that the body of Col. Cross had been found about four miles from Gen. Taylor’s camp on the Rio Grande. From the wounds upon the body it seems evident that he was killed by a lance.

It was further reported that a person in Matamoras had acknowledge that he was the murderer, and had the watch and clothing of Col. Cross in his possession.

Gen. Taylor, it is reported, had made a formal demand for the murderer.

All open communications were permitted to pass by the Commandment of point Isabel between that post and Matamoras.
The Mexican schooner Juanita, from this port to Matamoras, was taken into Brasos Bay on the 22d ult. by the pilots—no doubt by permission of the blockading force.

STILL LATER.—The schr. Cornelia, Captain Stark, arrived last evening from Brazos Santiago, when she sailed on the evening of the 24th inst. She reports that about three hours before she sailed an express arrived from Gen. Taylor, stating that the commander of the Mexican forces had made a formal declaration to Gen. Taylor that if he did not move his army from the position he then occupied within thirty six hours, that the Mexican batteries would be opened upon them.

The same express also stated that at that time a body of 2000 Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande near Boretta—a small town about eight miles below Matamoras, on the west bank of the river—and taken up a position between Point Isabel and General Taylor’s camp. The design of this movement is evidently to cut off the American troops from their supplies. A Private letter was also received last evening from an officer in Gen. Taylor’s camp confirming in part the above report of the Mexicans having crossed the river, but stating the number at 1000 only. There had been previously so man rumors to the same effect in the camp, that little reliance was placed upon this one which was first communicated by a Mexican, who was prudently detained by order of Gen. Taylor.

The accounts by the Cornelia confirms the melancholy news given above as to the fate of Col. Cross. He was found entirely stripped and wounded as before stated.

We have a letter from an officer in the camp, dated the 21st ult., the postscript to which states, what we had not doubt of that the Americans “had not retired one foot from the bank of the river, nor does the General mean to do any think that can look like it.” “Our flag waves over the waters of the Rio Grande, and we have a fixed battery of 18 pounders that can ‘spot’ any thing in Matamoras.”

While upon the subject of the army, we may state that the steamer Col. Harney, which left here on Wednesday for Brasos Santiago, took with her a battery of ten long 12 pounders, and a quantity of munitions of war, and that she was to take in more at Galveston for the same destination. The New York, which sailed yesterday, for the same point, had a detachment of 180 men on board for the army, under the command of Lieut. McPhail. F our companies of Infantry are expected here in two or three days, who will be despatches immediately for the same destination.

The steamer Gen. Worth, twelve hours later from Brasos Santiago, and bringing, it is said, one day’s later intelligence from Gen. Taylor’s camp, was in the river late last night, eight or ten miles below the city, waiting for a tow. It is said a bearer of despatches from Gen. Taylor was on board. Colonel Hunt immediately despatched a boat to bring her up. Mr. Marks, attached to the American Com????ate at Matamoras is on board the Gen. Worth. There was rumor brought by one of the schooners last night that our Consul at Matamoras is on board the Gen. Worth. There was rumor brought by one of the schooners last night that our Consul at Matamoras, apprehending imprisonment from the Mexicans, had left his post and repaired to Gen. Taylor’s camp.

We learned last evening that formal protest had been made before the British Consul by the English houses which had shipped cargoes on board the schooners Equity and Floridian, for Matamoras, which were turned back by the United States brig Lawrence, off the mouth of the Rio Grande.

On exhibiting a white flag on the left bank of the Rio Grande, a boat with two officers—represented as cavalry officers—with an interpreter—the same who appeared at the crossing of the Colorado—and a fourth person crossed from the right bank of the river

It was stated through an interpreter—Mr. Mitchell—that a general officer of the United States Army had been sent by his commanding general with despatches, to the commanding general at Matamoras, and to the civil authorities and that an interview was requested.

After some conversation explanatory of the above, the Mexican party recrossed the river, to report to the commanding general at Matamoras and return with his reply. An open note for the American Consul at Matamoras, with an endorsement on the back in pencil wads delivered to the Mexican officer. He replied that he should hand it to the commanding general. “Certainly, of course,” was Gen. Worth’s remark in reply.
On the return of the same party, Gen. Mejia sent word, that if the commanding general of the American forces wished a conference with the commanding general of the Mexican forces, it would readily be acceded to; but as a junior to the commanding general, on the part of the American troops, had requested a conference, Gen. Mejia could not entertain such a proposition; but that an officer of corresponding rank and position, in the Mexican forces, would be ready to receive any communication sent by Gen. Taylor.

It was perceived that the relation of the parties was misapprehended, they supposing that a conference was requested, this was corrected immediately, and it was reiterated that Gen. Worth was merely the bearer of despatches, with authority to relate verbally certain matters of interest to the commanding general at Matamoros.

The proposition of Gen. Mejia was then acceded to, with the remark, that this was a mere question of form, which should not be permitted to interfere with any arrangements necessary to the continuance of the friendly relation now existing between the two Governments.

The Mexican party recrossed to the right bank, and after a short absence returned, stating that Gen. Romulo Vega would receive Gen. Worth on the right bank of the river—their own selection—for the reception of any communication which Gen. Worth might have to make from the commanding general.

Gen. Worth then crossed the River, accompanied by Lieut. Smith, Aid-de-Camp; Lieuts. Magruder, Deas and Blake, attached to his staff; together with Lieut. Knowlton as interpreter. On arriving at the right bank of the river, Gen. Worth was received by Gen. Vega, with becoming courtesy and respect, and introduced to the "authorities of Matamoras," represented in the person of the Licenciado Casares. On the Mexican part were present, Gen. Vega, the Licenciado Casares, two officers—represented as cavalry officers—an interpreter, with a person named Juan N. Garza, Official de Defensores.

After the usual courtesies on meeting, it was stated by Gen. Worth that he was the bearer of despatches from the commanding general of the American forces to Gen. Mejia, and to the civil authorities of Matamoros. A written and unsealed document was produced, and Gen. Vega desiring to know its contents, it was carefully read, and translated into French by Lieut. Knowlton, and afterwards ret-translated into Spanish by the Mexican interpreter. Gen. Vega then stated that he had been directed to receive such communications as Gen. Worth might present from his commanding General; going on to say that the march of the U. S. troops into a part of the Mexican territory, Tamaulipas, was considered as an act of war.

GEN. WORTH.—"I am well aware that some of the Mexican people consider it an aggressive act but [interrupted by the Mexican interpreter, and after a slight discussion of the international question on the part of Gen. Vega, Gen. (next lines unreadable) ordered there by his Government, and there it would remain; whether rightfully or otherwise, that was a question to be settled between the two Governments. Gen. Worth then stated that he had been sent with despatches from his commanding general to Gen. Mejia; that Gen. Mejia had refused to receive it from him personally, adding, with emphasis and some degree of warmth, "I now state that I withdraw this despatch, having read it merely as an act of courtesy to Gen. Vega; that, in addition to the written despatch to Gen. Mejia, I am authorized to express verbally the sentiments with which the commanding general proposed to carry out the instructions of his Government, which in he hoped to preserve the peaceable relations between the two Governments, leaving all questions between the two Governments, leaving all questions between the two countries to be settled between the two Governments: and if hereafter Gen. Mejia wished to communicate with Gen. Taylor, he must propose the means—assuring Gen. Vega that should Gen. Mejia present himself or send his communications by a subaltern officer, in either case, he should be received with proper courtesy and respect. The question of right of territory was again opened by Gen. Vega, who asked how the United States Government would view the matter should the Mexican troops march into or occupy a portion of the territory of the United States. Gen. Worth replied that Gen. Vega might probably be familiar with the old proverb, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," and that "it would be time enough to consider such matters when the act was perpetrated."

This proverb did not appear to have been translated by the Mexican interpreter, but was received by Gen. Vega with a smile and slight shrug.

Gen. Worth.—"Is the American Consul in arrest, or in prison?"

Gen. Vega.—"No."

Gen. Worth.—"Is he now in the exercise of his proper functions?"

Gen. Vega, after apparently consulting with the Licenciado Casares for a moment, replied that he was.

Gen. Worth.—"Then, as an American officer, in the name of my Government and my commanding general, I demand an interview with the Consul of my country."

No reply.

Gen. Worth.—"Has Mexico declared war against the United States?"
Gen. Vega.—"No."

Gen. Worth.—"Are the two countries still at peace?"

Gen. Vega.—"Yes."

Gen. Worth.—"Then, I again demand an interview with the Consul of my Government, in Matamoros—in presence, of course, of these gentleman, or any other that the commanding general in Matamoros may be pleased to designate."

Gen. Vega reiterated that he was in the proper exercise of his functions; that he was not in arrest, nor were any Americans in Matamoros in arrest; that he would submit the demand to Gen. Mejia, adding that he thought there would be great difficulty. This demand was repeatedly made, in the most emphatic manner, and a reply requested, General Vega [ . . . ] Consulting that (?) continued in the exercise of his functions, and that the demand would be submitted to Gen. Mejia.

Here the interview was suspended, while the Licenciado left the party, to submit, as we understood, the demand for an interview with the Consul to General Mejia. While engaged in friendly intercourse, Gen.Worth stated to Gen. Vega, in an informal manner, as an evidence of the good faith, intentions and dispositions of his commanding general, that he was well aware of the importance of Brasos Santiago to the commerce and business community of Matamoros; that he would respect their laws and customs, and freely grant entrance and exit to all Mexican and other vessels trading with Matamoros on the same terms as before its occupation by the United States, leaving all questions arising therefrom to be settled hereafter by the two Governments. At the expiration of about a quarter of an hour the Licenciado returned, and reported that Gen. Mejia would not accede to the request for an interview on the part of Gen. Worth, saying nothing, however, relative to the question of the Consul.

Gen. Vega was then again informed that the despatches intended to be delivered to Gen. Mejia by Gen. Worth in person would be returned by him (Gen.W.) to his commanding general, considering any other disposition of them as disrespectful to him, repeating that they had been read to Gen. Vega in courtesy to him, and that Gen. Mejia must take his own means of communicating with Gen. Taylor; that whether Gen. Mejia sent a superior or subaltern officer to Gen. Taylor, at all times accessible, he would be received with becoming courtesy and hospitality, presenting at the same time, a written and sealed document of the civil authorities of Matamoros, which was received by Gen. Vega and immediately transferred to the Licenciado Casares.

GEN. VEGA.—"Is it the intention of General Taylor to remain on the left bank of the Rio Grande?"

GEN. WORTH.—"Most assuredly; and there to remain until directed otherwise by his Government."

Gen. Vega remarked that "we" felt indignation at seeing the American flag placed on the Rio Grande, a portion of the Mexican territory. General Worth replied "that was a matter of taste; notwithstanding that, there it would remain." The army had been ordered to occupy its present position by its Government; it came in a peaceful rather than belligerent attitude, with a determination to respect the rights and customs of those on the right bank of the Rio Grande, while it offers protection to all on the left bank within their own territory.

No reply having been received from General Vega relative to the demand for an interview with the American Consul, the question was again introduced by Gen. Worth and the demand for the last time reiterated.

Gen. Vega promptly refused to accede to the demand replying, without waiting for the interpretation "No, no."

Gen. Worth.—"I have now to state that the refusal of my demand to see the American Consul is regarded as a belligerent act; and in conclusion I have to add, that the commanding general of the American forces on the left bank of the river will regard the passage of any armed party of Mexicans, in hostile array, across the Rio Grande, as an act of war, and pursue it accordingly.

The interview here terminated, and Gen. Worth and staff returned to the left bank of the river.

The above contains the substance of the interview between Generals Worth and Vega, and, as far as possible, the exact words and expressions used on the occasion.—Lieutenants Knowlton and McGruder, of the 1st Artillery, Lieut. Deas, of the 4th Artillery, Lieut. Blake, of the Topographical Engineers, and Lieut. Smith, of the 8th Infantry, were present at the interview.

Our readers cannot fail to have been struck by the number of officers reported by the city press to have arrived here on the New York on her last trip from Galveston. Enough were reported to have officered several regiments. This was entirely the result of misapprehension. We learn that but three gentlemen connected with the Army did in fact arrive; these were Gen. Worth, Major Van Ness and Lieutenant Smith. Gen. Worth, it is known, has transmitted his resignation to Washington; the other gentlemen named came here on important business connected with the service.

We have before expressed the deep regret that would be felt by the nation at the resignation of Gen. Worth. He has conferred lustre upon our army by his distinguished services in Florida and elsewhere, and the country looked to him as one of the chief of the gallant spirits who were to sustain the national fame, should our difficulties with Mexico terminate in open war. But he felt himself constrained to pursue the course he did, in consequence of recent decisions of the Executive upon the subject of rank. His resignation was not tendered until all prospect of an immediate conflict with the Mexicans had passed. After it was tendered, he remained for some days in camp as a private individual, nor did he leave so long as there was any probability that his services in any contingency could be rendered available.

Gen. Worth led the advance of the Army across from Corpus Christi to Matamoros, and hoisted with his own hand the American flag upon the banks of the Rio Grande, within 350 yards of the Mexican batteries. It was the flag of his own regiment—he 8th Infantry—which he had brought with him from Florida, and was the first American ensign hoisted by the army West of the Nueces, and, strange to say, it is the only one with the army on the banks of the Rio Grande del Norte.—[N. RW46v23i38p4c4, May 12, 1846: THE SANDWICH ISLANDS—OREGON AND CALIFORNIA.

Interesting News. —Intelligence from Honolulu to the 14th February, has been received at New York. Letters from Hawaii, of December, state, that in consequence of an unprecedented drought, that whole districts of country had been ravaged by fires, which consumed in great numbers the habitations of the natives. A famine had also prevailed there for six or eight weeks, the people living on fern and roots, and there was no prospect of immediate relief.

The Helvetia, whale ship, Captain Porter, of New London, Ct., was burned in the harbor of Honolulu, Jan. 25th. The ship was of 322 tons, but 18 months out, and had on board 150 barrels sperm and 1500 whale oil. Loss in destruction of the vessel and the greater portion of her cargo, 425,000, which, however, as covered by insurance. The personal losses of the Captain and officers are considerable, and the friends of Capt. Porter, in port, presented him with a donation of $600.
OREGON.—Previous to the departure of the Cowlitz, arrived at Honolulu from the Straits of San Juan de Fuca, 450 wagons and 3000 emigrants had arrived. Some of them were men of capital. Dr. McLaughlin had removed to the Falls and intends shortly to leave for Paris. Mr. Douglass takes Charge of the Hudson’s Bay Co.’s affairs at Fort Vancouver. Bark Toulon, Crosby, from Honolulu, was 54 days into the river, and in November had not arrived at her discharging place. Many more emigrants were to arrive, and certain description of goods to supply their wants in the winter will be much in demand.

CALIFORNIA.—By letters from California by the Don Quixote, we learn that in consequence of an advantageous attack made by the Mexican authorities of St. Francisco, on some American citizens, by which Mr. Nathan Spear came near losing his life, a memorial was presented to Captain Page of the U. S. Sloop Levant, then at Monterey, and he, together with Mr. Larkin, the U. S. Consul, immediately sailed for St. Francisco, to investigate the affair.

We also learn that three companies from the U. States numbering from three to four hundred people, with fifty or sixty wagons, had arrived at the head waters of the Bay. Some hundred head of Derham cows were brought by the emigrants.

There were three Russian ships at anchor in the Bay, for wheat, tallow, hides, &c. Also, Vandalia, Sterling and Tassen, of Boston, and Fama of Oahu.

Mr. Wm. A. Leedsdorf has been appointed U. S. Vice Consul for St. Francisco.

WASHINGTON, May 8.

The Hon. JOHN SLIDELL, our late Minister to Mexico, arrived in this city last evening, in the Western train of cars, and immediately had an interview with the President. We may now look for a message in a very few days.

It is a matter of surprise to me that the state of affairs on the Rio Grande should thus far have failed to attract the attention of Congress, and of the people. The Executive has virtually declared war against Mexico, while Congress is in session, and without its sanction, by authorizing the blockade of Matamoras. Already we hear of two American vessels being compelled to return to New Orleans, at an immense loss to the owners and shippers, which loss the Government is bound, in honor, to make good to them. The conduct of the Executive in the whole of this Mexican business, exhibits an assumption of power which requires the immediate attention of Congress. P.

THE DEBATE.

Taking it for granted that the debate on Mexican affairs will possess more interest than any other matter at present, we devote to it as much space as possible this morning.

The President’s Message assumes what remains to be proved, that the territory lying between the Nueces and the Rio del Norte is “American soil;” and upon that assumption he rests, as we anticipated, the vindication of his course, in ordering Gen. Taylor to occupy a position opposite the town of Matamoros. And yet he informs us that, after having obtained an assurance from the Mexican authorities that they would receive a Minister from the United States, for the purpose of adjusting the questions in controversy between the two governments, he abstained from taking this step, because among those questions, that of boundary occupied a prominent position. The American army, he tells us, “was concentrated at Corpus Christi, and remained there until after I had received such information as rendered it probable that the Mexican Government would not receive our Envoy. Why was not the left bank of the Rio Grande selected at first, instead of the Neues, as the position of our army? It was precisely because that which is now assumed to be an unquestionable fact, was then conceded to be a disputed and doubtful assertion of right, to be determined not by the strong arm but by the usual process of negotiation. The Neues was then, by the act of the Administration itself, admitted to be the ascertained and undisputed frontier of Texas; and our claim to its extension westwardly was deferred, as it ought to have been, for future adjustment. If our troops had remained at Corpus Christi, however, we are told, the result would have been the same—since the Mexicans would have marched their forces to that point, in hostile array, as they have done to the Rio Grande, and attempted the expulsion of the American forces, whom they would have looked upon as invaders of the Mexican territory not less when occupying that position, than when afterwards they were pushed farther on to the Rio del Norte. This is piling assumption upon assumption—“Pelion upon Ossa.” But admit that the result would have been the same—the effect would have been essentially different. The position of the two parties would have been reversed. They, and not we, would, in that event, have invited the commencement of hostilities; and although war might have ensued, the Administration would have been free from all ground of censure. It is our firm conviction, however, that, if the American forces had continued at Corpus Christi, the Mexicans would have remained on the western side of the river, with the exception perhaps of that small number of them, who already occupied settlements on its eastern banks,—as at Point Isabel, for example, selected by Gen. Taylor as his depot, at which, when he reached it, there was a Mexican village, and a Mexican custom house, under the jurisdiction of Mexican laws, and under the protection of the Mexican flag—a fact which, of itself, strongly implies their right to the territory; for, although Texas in 1836 claimed it, yet not one foot of it had ever for an instant been in the possession of the Texan forces. It is manifest, if a mere declaration of the Texan Revolutionary Convention is to settle arbitrarily and conclusively the question of boundary, that if those who framed her original Constitution had thought proper to embrace within her paper limits the city of Mexico itself, although no Texan had ever reached that city but as a prisoner, we, in virtue of the treaty of annexation, should be bound to make that pretension good by force of arms—and them, instead of regarding the Rio del Norte as the frontier of the new State, we should not have reached that point until our flag had floated over the palace, and our soldiers "revelled in the halls of the Montezumas."

We repeat, however, that we do not mean to prejudge the question of right to the disputed territory. All we say is, that, so long as it was in dispute, or until Mexico had intimated her purpose to seize upon it, it should not have been occupied by an armed force, entrenching itself opposite a Mexican city, and bringing its cannon, as if with hostile intent, to bear upon the dwellings of its citizens. This is the ground upon which we condemn the Administration—as we do also for sending upon so perilous an errand a force so utterly incompetent, as events have shown, to maintain its position. In our determination to support this or any other Administration in the most vigorous efforts to meet and repel an enemy, we hold it to be no less a duty to investigate fearlessly the injudicious conduct by which those efforts have been rendered necessary—just as if at sea an ignorant or head strong pilot had run the ship amid rocks and breakers, each man on board would feel impelled to exert every nerve to rescue her from her perilous condition, but with a determination nevertheless freely to criticise and condemn the individual by whose incompetency or rashness the danger had been incurred.

RW46v23i39p1c2, May 15, 1846: General Scott.

Although the partizans of the Administration defend zealously the wisdom of sending the American army to the Rio Grande, they nevertheless seem not at all unwilling to divide the responsibility and the glory of that measure with Gen. Scott—which they would never do if they had not themselves some serious misgivings in reference to its propriety. The General and his friend, however, seem to be not at all willing to deprive the Administration of any portion of the merit of that movement! A letter from Washington to the editor of the Alexandria Gazette affirms, "on competent authority, that Gen. Scott was not consulted on the subject, but was peremptorily directed to issue the order. He did not approve of the movement; and, had he been consulted, would have objected to it." Strange, if the step was a wise one, that the Administration should be so eager to confer the honor of it upon a gentleman for whom it has no very especial regard—and scarcely less strange that he should so promptly decline that honor!—The truth is, the President and his partizans, now that it is too late, perceive that he has committed a capital error, for which he will be condemned by the sober judgment of the people; and they are [. . . ] out for a scape-goat!

From the camp of Gen. Taylor, across the Peninsula, to Point Isabel, is about 30 miles. The distances to be reached by the earliest aid that can reach Point Isabel are as follows: From Galveston, by the outside route 320 miles; from Galveston by the inside route 336 miles; from New Orleans by river Mississippi and coastwise to Point Isabel 802 miles; from New Orleans to Galveston 482 miles; from Matamoras to the bar of the Rio Grande, by the course of the river, about 70 miles.

RW46v23i39p1c2, May 15, 1846: England and Mexico.

The last New York Mirror contains a long and interesting extract from the forthcoming work of General Waddy Thompson, on Mexico. His opportunities of information, while our Minister to that country, and his ability, both entitle his opinions to great respect; and we are therefore glad to find that he expresses the conviction that Great Britain, so far from desiring a war between Mexico and the United States, is deeply interested in the preservation of peace between the two countries. After stating that the popular impression that English influence is in the ascendent in Mexico, is entirely erroneous, and that, so far from this being the fact, the general feeling of the Mexicans towards the English is unfriendly, he adds:

"The British Government keeps two officers, or agent, in Mexico, with high salaries, to attend to this [the mining] interest alone. It is with the money thus derived that the English establishments on this continent and in the West Indies are supported.

"The amount of the specie annually obtained from Mexico is more than half as great as that which is kept at one time in the Bank of England. The stoppage of this supply would very much derange the whole monetary system of England; on this account, it is to be apprehended that in the event of a war between the United States and Mexico, that England would very soon be involved in it.—If the coast of Mexico should be blockaded, England will demand that the line of steam-packets to Vera Cruz should be exempted from its operations. These packets, although commercial vessels, possess a sort of quasi-government character. This, of course, our government could not concede; and the interruption of the regular supply of the precious metals from Mexico would be most disastrously felt in England. Knowing all this, I was well satisfied that all that we have heard about England stimulating Mexico to declare war against this country was ridiculously absurd.—Such a war would injure England more than either of the belligerents. All her interests are opposed to it, unless, indeed, she intended to participate in that war. I have the best reasons for saying, that there is no other power in the world with which England would not prefer to engage in a war; not that she fears us, for England fears no nation, nor combination of nations as all her history proves; but such a war would be, more than any other, disastrous to her commercial, manufacturing, and all other industrial pursuits.

"England has no single motive for a war with us. It is not of this country that she is jealous, but of the Northern despotism of Europe, and mainly of Russia, and has been so since the seizure of the fortress of Aczaco, in 1788."

A letter from Pensacola, dated on the 4th instant, states that "Commander Saunders, of the U. S. ship St. Mary's, had been ordered by Capt. Fitzhugh, to get under way immediately for Brasos St. Iago, to furnish prompt assistance to the army force at Point Isabel. While I write she is beating out the harbor. The steam frigate Mississippi is to leave for Vera Cruz this evening at 4 o'clock."

A BILL to authorize the President of the United States, under certain contingencies therein named, to accept the services of volunteers, and for other purposes.

Whereas, by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States: therefore—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of enabling the Government of the U. States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ the militia, naval, and military forces of the United States, and to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers not exceeding fifty thousand, who may offer their services, as cavalry, artillery, infantry, or riflemen, to serve six or twelve months after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous, or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged. That the sum of ten millions of dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury or to come into the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the militia, when called into service of the United States by virtue of this act, or any other act, may, if in the opinion of the President of the United States the public interest requires it, be compelled to serve for a term not exceeding six months after their arrival at the place of rendezvous, in any one year, unless sooner discharged.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said volunteers shall furnish their own clothes, and if cavalry, their own horses; and, when mustered into service, shall be armed and equipped at the expense of the United States.

SEC. 4. The foregoing bill passed by the decisive vote of 174 to 14. Every member of the Virginia delegation present voted in its favor. The following are the names recorded in the negative: Messrs. John Q. Adams, Ashmun, Cranston, Culver, Delano, Giddings, Grinnell, Hudson, D. P. King. Root, Severance, Strohm, Tilden and Vance. Two or three of these gentlemen belong to the sect of Abolition fanatics—and, while willing to go to war with Great Britain for the purpose of acquiring a sandy and sun-scorched Desert on this side of the Rocky Mountains, and a rocky and ice bound coast on the other, would be doubtless willing to see our Southern frontier desolated by fire and sword. But most of them, we presume, (at least we hope,) were influenced in their vote against the bill, not by opposition to the necessary measures of defence proposed, but by the grave and potent reasons which induced so many members to vote for it with a protest against certain of it is obnoxious and fraudulent features. These features are referred to in the subjoined remarks of Messrs. Garrett Davis of Kentucky, Bayly of Virginia, Holmes of New York, and Smith of Indiana:

Mr. GARRETT DAVIS rose and said: Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to excuse me from voting on the passage of this bill, and I will assign very briefly my reasons.

This is a measure, directly and indirectly, of very great importance, and yet not opportunity, not a single moment has been allowed any Whig of this House to say one word upon it. So far as it can operate upon the fate of the gallant General and his little army upon the Del Norte, there is no need for such unparalleled haste in urging a measure of its character through this body. He is on a frontier 3000 miles distant. In the exercise of a discretionary power vested in him by the Executive, he has made a requisition on the Governors of the neighboring States for ten thousand troops. At this moment, the destiny of Gen. Taylor and his gallant band is sealed, and I doubt not that ere now the prompt succor which he has received from the States contiguous to the theatre of his operations, has given him such force he has beaten back the enemy, and anything we may now do will be too late to influence it. There could then be no valid objection to give a day to the consideration of this bill and no person would desire more. But the haughty and dominating majorit will not allow now this much.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the preamble of the bill. It recites that war exists between the United States and Mexico, and that this war was began by Mexico. That informal war exists between the two countries is undeniable; but that Mexico commenced it is utterly untrue, and I object to the preamble because it sets forth so bold a falsehood. I am decidedly, strongly in favor of the appropriation of the money, and of the raising of the forces for which the bill provides. For these purposes it is sufficient for me that our country is at war, be it formal or informal; whether began by Mexico or our own Government. I require only to know that our army is in danger, and whether it be in the territory of the United States or Mexico. I am ready to vote men and money even to the utmost resources of the country for the rescue. If the war be wrongful at a more convenient season I would hold them responsible who made it. But I protest solemnly against defiling this measure with unfounded statement that Mexico began this war. That position is not necessary to give this bill any possible effect. It could have been as well omitted, and, had it been rejected, I doubt not the bill would receive the unanimous vote of the House. But that was not the object of its authors. Their purpose was to make the Whigs vote against or force them to aid in throwing a shelter over the Administration, by voting for a bill which set forth that this needless and unexpected war was commenced by Mexico.

Sirs, if the bill contained any recitation upon that point in truth and justice, it should be that this war was begun by the President. The river Nueces is the true western boundary of Texas. The country between that stream and the Del Norte is part of Mexico; and that Power had people and establishments in it. Months ago the President, of his own
The debate in the House was confined mainly to amendments proposed to the original bill. Mr. Brinkerhoff declared in silence without placing myself in a false position. I consider this bill virtually a declaration of war, made with Executive recommendation; for I do not understand the Executive as recommending a declaration of war. And made too when we do not know that the invasion of our territory and aggressive acts are sanctioned by the Government of Mexico. They may yet be disavowed, and repARATION made. I am, therefore, unwilling at this time to vote the declaration of war. I do not consider such a declaration necessary to meet the emergency. On the other hand, I am anxious to vote such supplies of men and means as will afford succor to our army and repel the invasion. I must, as I am now placed, decline to do this, or vote for the bill before the House. If I am not excused I shall vote for the bill, as I consider withholding the supplies under the circumstances as the greater evil. Mr. B. withdrew his request to be excused.

When Mr. E. B. HOLMES was called, he rose in his place and said: "Mr. Speaker, I vote ay, because I cannot withhold supplies from our army in its present condition; but I solemnly protest against the preamble to this bill, and publicly denounce it as base, fraudulent, and false."

When Mr. ALBERT SMITH'S name was called he rose and said: Mr. Speaker, I vote for the bill, but I do so under a protest to the preamble of the bill as false in its facts and operating as a fraud upon the nation.

The debate in the Senate was confined mainly to amendments proposed to the original bill. Mr. Brinkerhoff declared himself in favor of carrying the war into Mexico, and repudiated the idea that the operations of the American forces should be confined to the left bank of the Rio Grande, even though the Mexican forces should be compelled to retreat across that river. Mr. Brockenbrough was in favor of a declaration of war, and moved so to amend the bill. Mr. Roberts are in favor of issuing letter of marque and reprisal. Various other propositions, more or less decided in their character, were submitted by other gentlemen, and briefly discussed. Messrs. Rhett and Holmes of S. C. insisted, as did Mr. Calhoun and others in the Senate, that, in a constitutional point of view, there is a wide difference between a war and a sudden our break of hostilities on an exposed frontier,—that the commanding Generals might for instance, be guilty of attacks which their Government might disavow—and therefore they insisted that for the present at least, we should be content with adopting the necessary measures of defence, leaving it for future developments to govern our final action. We regret that our space will not permit us to publish the whole of the interesting debate. We are compelled however, to confine ourselves this morning to a portion of the interesting discussion in the Senate.
A message was received from the President of the United States on Mexican affairs.

The message having been read—

Mr. SEVIER moved that the message and documents be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and printed.

Mr. DAVIS desired that the documents accompany the message be read.

Mr. SPEIGHT observed that those documents were very voluminous, and the reading would consequently occupy a considerable time. He suggested that, as they were to be printed, the reading might be dispensed with at present.—He moved that twenty thousand additional copies of the message and accompanying documents be printed.

Mr. CALHOUN said they had now a very great question presented to them—a question which, in view of all of its consequences, it would take many years to terminate and he hoped that the Senate would on this occasion, manifest that quiet dignity, and give to the subject that dispassionate consideration, which was worthy the character of a grave and deliberative body. He trusted that they would, laying aside every minor consideration, proceed at once to the adoption of such measures as were rendered necessary in the present emergency, such as the Constitution demanded of them, and such as the honor and the interest of the country might require. But he hoped that in this state of the case nothing more than was usual would be done in regard to printing documents for the use of the Senate; after they had had the matter under consideration it would be time enough to determine what number should be published.—It had always been understood that the printing of a vast number of any set of documents was an endorsement of their contents. He would offer no opinion upon the documents now before them, but the thought it would be at least undignified on the part of the Senate to print an unusual number.

Mr. SPEIGHT said he responded heartily to every word which had fallen from the Senator from South Carolina as to the proper action of the Senate upon this occasion. His motive in proposing the printing of an extra number, which proposition was suggested by his friends around him, was that he supposed that the people throughout the country would be desirous of reading the document. He could not say whether the printing might be considered an endorsement of them by the Senate, but this he would say, that as far as he was concerned, he for one endorsed every word they contained. He entirely approved of the message, and was prepared without hesitation to carry out what the President had recommended. He had recommended no declaration of war; he had only recommended the placing at his disposal a sufficient military force to repel an invasion. He believed there was no American who would not respond to that message. He would do the Senator from South Carolina the justice to say that he believed he would respond to it.

If he thought it was the sense of the Senate that no more than the usual number of copies should be printed, he would withdraw his motion; but he would repeat that he believed there would be a desire throughout the country to read these documents, and he saw no reason why they should not be printed and circulated extensively. This message was a highly important document, they had reached an important crisis, and he agreed with the Senator from South Carolina that they should meet it firmly and with due and proper deliberation. For his own part he was prepared without hesitation to carry out the proper action of the Senate upon this occasion. His motive in proposing the printing of an extra number, which he thought it would be at least undignified on the part of the Senate to print an unusual number.

Mr. ALLEN said he believed it was usual, whenever an important communication was made to Congress, if that communication and the documents which accompanied it were too voluminous to find admission in the public newspapers of the country, for the Senate of the United States to supply the demand of the country by printing an extra number of such communication with the accompanying documents. No man would question for an instant the transcendant importance of the matter now communicated to the Senate; and no man would doubt that the matter contained in those papers was too voluminous to find a publication in the newspaper press of the country. No man could doubt the right which the American people had to indulge that wholesome curiosity which would induce them to look for the publication of those documents. These were facts about which there could be no doubt, and if there ever was a case where it became important to give an extended circulation to a great public fact, this was that case. They were told by the Senator from Mississippi that the President had not recommended a declaration of war, but the President had overlooked the more important fact that the President told them that war actually exists, and he had asked the Congress of the United States to acknowledge the fact by such a public act as should nationalize it, and put the United States in that relation to the nations of the world which she had a right to occupy in consequence of a state of war. It had been said that time for deliberation was necessary; but the time for deliberation should be measured by the crisis presented by the state of facet upon which those deliberations were to be had.—What was the crises here? The crisis was existing war. Deliberation, then, could tend to no benefit. As for the suggestion which had been thrown out, that the operation of the army of this Government ought to be limited to its own soil, that we should be required to fight only on one square of the board, while Mexico fights on the whole board, it seemed to him to be unadvisable to involve the most suicidal policy. How could the war be brought to a successful termination? How could a peace which should have any duration be expected to result from a conflict conducted in that manner, unless Mexico be given distinctly to understand that when she make war upon the U. S. she incurs all the consequences which a state of war inflicts. But he would go no further in this matter at this time; he desired that the documents should be printed, and extensively circulated, for reasons which he had already given. And, for the purpose of testing and
Mr. ARCHER said he was a good deal surprised that his honorable friend from Delaware failed to make the distinction.

Mr. J. M. CLAYTON said it appeared to him there ought to be prompt and efficient action. They might be deliberated upon at leisure. Upon the main question of furnishing U. S. to the Rio del Norte. But the country was in a state of war. What was now to be done? To provide supplies to own upon this matter. He was very far from justifying the course taken by the Executive in sending the troops of the country in the first place. He denied that the Committee on Foreign Relations could decide at leisure, upon the grave question of responsibility of occasioning the war. That the war was right or not. It being in existence, he was ready to go for the volunteers and the allowance of money at the President alone, who brought it about—he was not willing to hesitate, or [ . . . ] to decide whether the inception of the war was right or not. The President also demanded of them tens of thousands of volunteers for the same purpose. Now, he was not inclined to distinguish between hostilities and war. God forbid that they should ever be found under the Constitution of this Government confounding the one with the other. There might be invasion without war, and they might find themselves forced to repel invasion, and yet no war ensue such as was strictly entitled to be so denominated. It was for Congress to determine whether war should be declared or not. And it was under that aspect of the question that he considered it unadvisable that there should be any act on the part of the Senate tending to sanction the idea that there was war.—There was a certain calmness, dignity, decorum, and forbearance expected to be exercised by the Senate of the United States which should never be lost sight of. He hoped that body would never suffer itself to be carried away by impetuosity, or hurried into precipitate action. He was prepared to do all that patriotism and the honor of the country required. He wished to be prepared at all points, but he wished that this should be performed in a manner worthy of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. J. M. CLAYTON contended that the message ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The President asks Congress for old aid and assistance to carry on military operations; it appeared to him that the matter should go to that committee, and not the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALHOUN said he had in part effected the objects he had to view by eliciting the observations which had been made by the Senator from Ohio. His object was, that the Senate should not precipitately order the printing of a large extra number, thereby causing it to be inferred that there was an absolute endorsement of the documents on the part of the Senate. He would admit the President had announced that there was war; but according to his interpretation, it was not such a war as the Constitution designated by the term war. For his own part, he was inclined to distinguish between hostilities and war. God forbid that they should ever be found under the Constitution of this Government confounding the one with the other. There might be invasion without war, and they might find themselves forced to repel invasion, and yet no war ensue such as was strictly entitled to be so denominated. It was for Congress to determine whether war should be declared or not. And it was under that aspect of the question that he considered it unadvisable that there should be any act on the part of the Senate tending to sanction the idea that there was war.—There was a certain calmness, dignity, decorum, and forbearance expected to be exercised by the Senate of the United States which should never be lost sight of. He hoped that body would never suffer itself to be carried away by impetuosity, or hurried into precipitate action. He was prepared to do all that patriotism and the honor of the country required. He wished to be prepared at all points, but he wished that this should be performed in a manner worthy of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SEVIER. My motion was to refer the message to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where messages of that sort are always referred. Has the Senator more confidence in another committee than he has in that? I understand the motion to print an extra number of copies to have been withdrawn, and on the motion to print the usual number. I now ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. CALHOUN said he had not the slightest reference to the Senator from Arkansas in any thing he had said.

Mr. SEVIER. My motion was to refer the message to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where messages of that sort are always referred. Has the Senator more confidence in another committee than he has in that? I understand the motion to print an extra number of copies to have been withdrawn, and on the motion to print the usual number. I now ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. MOREHEAD said he regretted that he could not concur with his honorable friend from Delaware in his suggestion as to the proper direction or reference of the message. The reference, in his opinion, should be to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and he thought so because he conurred with the Senator from South Carolina that before war does exist, according to the Constitution of the United States, there must be some action on the part of Congress. Thus far, if war now existed, if the people of this country found themselves in a state of war with Mexico, it was a war which had not been brought about or declared by the Legislative department of the Government, to which constitutionally the power of declaring war belonged. Before, therefore, we could occupy a proper position in the estimation of the nations of the world, whose opinion on subjects of this sort he thought they ought not to venture to disregard—before they assumed a hostile attitude, which in all probability it would become their duty to assume, the subject should be referred to that committee which in all cases of this sort, was accustomed to have charge and to receive the consideration of the matter; before the Congress of the United States recognized the existence of war, they should perform the part assigned to them by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. J. M. CLAYTON contended that the message ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The President—(he said) had announced that there was war; that war actually existed and called upon Congress for a grant of some millions of dollars to carry on that war, pronouncing it essentially necessary that it should be carried on. The President also demanded of them tens of thousands of volunteers for the same purpose. Now, he was not willing, though he did not take on himself the responsibility of the war—that responsibility must rest with the President alone, who brought it about—he was not willing to hesitate, or [ . . . ] to decide whether the inception of the war was right or not. It being in existence, he was ready to go for the volunteers and the allowance of money at once for the support of the honor of the country. They could decide at their leisure afterwards, and the Committee on Foreign Relations could decide at leisure, upon the grave question of responsibility of occasioning the war. That question would come under consideration undoubtedly. But the first duty of the Senate, in his humble judgment, was to vote for the supplies. What had the Committee on Foreign Relations to do with this? He would say to his friend from S. C. (if he would allow him to call him so) that the opinion he entertained very closely approached to his own upon this matter. He was very far from justifying the course taken by the Executive in sending the troops of the U. S. to the Rio del Norte. But the country was in a state of war. What was now to be done? To provide supplies to defend our position, and to lose no time in doing so. The other questions, as they arose, would have to be settled by the people and the Executive. They might be deliberated upon at leisure. Upon the main question of furnishing supplies, it appeared to him there ought to be prompt and efficient action.

Mr. ARCHER said he was a good deal surprised that his honorable friend from Delaware failed to make the distinction
Mr. BENTON said he apprehended that there were two very distinct questions presented to the consideration of the Senate touching this matter. The President announced the fact of the invasion of the United States; he then proposed to carry on a war against Mexico on a scale commensurate with the necessity of the occasion. Upon the occurrence of invasion it was the duty of the President, under the Constitution, at once, by all the means which the law placed in his power, to repel that invasion. Certain acts of Congress authorized him to call out the militia for that purpose, the period of that service being limited to three months, and as often as an occasion of this kind had occurred, it had been deemed proper, in order to procure the most efficient troops, to permit the president to accept the services of the volunteers. The General Commanding on the banks of the Rio del Norte had, therefore, in this case, in accordance with authority given him by this President called for volunteers. The first thing, then, in his opinion, which they had to do was to furnish the means to pay those volunteers, legitimize the call which he made for their services. Thus far it would be a military question—a question for the Committee on Military Affairs, to say whether they will adopt eight thousand of three times eight thousand. But it became also a question which concerned our foreign relations; and if the first measure were adopted—about which he apprehended there could be no dispute, it being requisite to repel invasion—the first measure being adopted, there would then be time to consider. He would suggest, therefore, that so much of the message as related to repelling an invasion be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and so much of it as related to our foreign relations be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN observed that the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri appeared to him to present the question in its true and natural aspect. The appropriations for the defence of the country need not be delayed by being connected with other questions growing out of the same state of facts.

Mr. SEVIER accepted the proposition of the Senator from Mo. As a modification of his motion.

Mr. CASS desired to say merely a single word. The message of the President was but a manifesto of the difficulty existing between this country and Mexico; it was very similar to a message which was sent to Congress by Mr. Madison. He felt very much gratified at hearing the language which had fallen from the honorable Senator from Delaware. The Senator had spoken like an American; he was ready to meet the emergency. The ground he took was fair ground for a party man to take: going for his country first, and afterwards to inquire by whom the mischief was brought about. It was a very fair subject of inquiry. Let us, (pursued Mr. C.) let us go for the defence of our country first; let us adopt all proper measures for repelling invasion; and, as soon as we have done that, IToe one am prepared to enter into an inquiry as to who is tight and who is wrong. I agree with the Senator from Miss., I concur entirely in the message of the President; and, as far as my voice will go to accomplish it, its recommendation shall be carried out. And I must be allowed to say further, (and I use the word in its best sense,) I repel the construction put upon it by the honorable Senator from South Carolina. One country may declare war, but it takes two countries to declare peace. Suppose Mexico declares war against you, are you at peace? No. There is no intermediate state between peace and war. In which state are we are present? Can it be said that our troops may drive the Mexicans to declare peace. Suppose Mexico declares war against you, are you at peace? No. There is no intermediate state between peace and war. In which state are we are present? Can it be said that our troops may drive the Mexicans over the boundary, and then politely say, Good bye, until you come back; and then we shall be ready for you again. This I should say was a state of war. Every gentleman knows that within the last century a dozen wars have been waged growing out of acts of hostility of that nature. The honorable Senator from South Carolina says we are not in a state of war, but in a state of hostility. Now, I am not going to dispute about the meaning of words, but if the gentleman denies that an invasion is an act of war, I differ with him entirely. Suppose a foreign nation blockages your port, to be sure you are not invaded on land, but are you not in a state of hostility—a state that leads legitimately to the consequence of war? These are my views. I say we are now in a position that, whether we declare war or not, our acts must be acts of war. We are placed in this solemn conditions. It is a most important crisis. If we march forward with firmness, decision, and promptitude, our course is plain and honorable before the world. If we do not—if we make half war and half peace; if we do this to this border and say, if you come over we will fight you; if we do this we disgrace ourselves before the world. I think there is but one course, and that is, to push the expedition into Mexico and compel her to make peace.

Mr. CALHOUN said that, in his judgment, mere invasion and a solemn declaration of war were two things entirely distinct. He hoped that there would not be the slightest difference of opinion. He hoped they would act with the utmost promptitude, so far as repelling the invasion was concerned. The Senator from Michigan (said Mr. C.) repels no observation of mine, for his remark has no application to any thing I said. I said, in the meaning of the Constitution war could only be declared by Congress that it was only through the authority of Congress that the state of things called war could be brought about. There is no question between the Senator and myself. I will go further, and say it is a great perversion of language to call the present state of things war. It is a case of invasion, a state of hostilities between two opposite forces on the frontier. Now, whether we shall proceed and settle all our accounts with Mexico at once is the great question to which I alluded.

Mr. ALLEN said he did not rise to protract the debate, but for the purpose of moving that so much of the annual message as relates to Mexico be printed, together with the document communicated to the Senate to-day.

Mr. MOREHEAD said he had no earthly objection, as far as he was concerned, to a division of the question of reference. He rose for the purpose of saying a single word in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan; and, before doing so, he must express his surprise that the Senator from Dela. Should think it a subject of congratulation that a member of the Senate of the U. S. had expressed, powerfully and eloquently as his friend from Dela. had done, in regard to the question now under consideration, his determination to stand by the country in the hostile attitude in which it was placed. He trusted the sentiment avowed by the Senator from Dela. was a sentiment entertained by every member of the Senate. He trusted it was not so remarkable as to be made the subject of special observation. But in regard to the point assumed by the Senator, whether there was a war now existing between Mexico and the United States, he desired to say a word. It was familiarly understood by them all that the power to declare war belonged alone to Congress, and that the President of the United States had no power constitutionally to involve the country in a war; but if there was at this moment actually subsisting a war between the United States and Mexico, it would follow that the President of the United States could involve the country in a war without the assent of the Legislative department of the Government. He could very well conceive a case where the army of the United States, having assumed a position within the territory of Mexico, such a position as would de- (unreadable) from Mexico that she should repel the invasion, and that hostilities should arise between the two countries—would that be a state of war? No. He held that it was competent alone for Congress to declare when war did exist; and because the President had not the power to create hostile relations between this Government and another, it became the duty of the Congress of the United States to exercise that power. In this view he did not think there did exist at this moment war between the two nations, in the sense in which the Constitution intended it to be understood. He thought there was a very reasonable distinction between war and hostilities. There was a period of the government when that distinction was practically carried out. It was that period when hostile relations existed between this country and France. There were aggressions committed on our commerce on the high seas, and claims for restitution were formally set up by the owners of the property destroyed. Congress adopted various measures indicating a state of hostilities, but there was not war declared, and none existing, and yet there was an extensive series of hostilities enacted on the ocean—not amounting to actual war, not constituting war as intended by the Constitution, yet such a state of hostilities as made it necessary for Congress to adopt various measures authorizing various parties to repel aggressions on the part of France. It seemed to him the distinction very properly existed; and he hoped, therefore, that that portion of the message of referring to the relations existing between this country and Mexico would be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that part which referred to raising supplies and reinforcements would be placed under the charge of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. Cass, Davis, Clayton, Sevier, Allen, Houston, and Huntington, the reports of whose speeches are necessarily deferred until to-morrow.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Sevier, as modified, on referring so much of the President’s message as relates to military affairs to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the remainder to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the message and documents be printed which was adapted without division, with an amendment of Mr. Allen that so much of the annual message as relates to Mexico be printed with the documents.

Mr. SPEIGHT then renewed the motion to print 20,000 extra copies; when

Mr. CRITTENDEN, after making some inquiry as to the documents communicated with the President’s message, and after the order to General Taylor to advance to the Rio del Norte had been read, proceeded to remark, in substance, that he deeply regretted the intelligence communicated by the message of hostilities with Mexico.—that it was our true policy to cultivate peace with her.—That such had been our policy in relation to Mexico and all the South American Republics. That we had haid their first struggles for liberty, and their establishment of Republican Governments, and looked upon them as forming a system of republics opposed to the monarchial systems of Europe. At the head of the republican system, it has been our feeling, as it was our true policy, to cherish the kindliest relations and sympathies towards them all. And such had been our course till our late unfortunate difficulties with Mexico, which resulted, as we are now informed, in actual hostilities. Mr. C. feared that all had not been done by our Executive that might have been done to avoid that result. He hoped that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. SEVIER) might be able to justify, in every particular, the conduct of the President; but at present he could see no good reason for advancing our army through a disputed territory to the banks of the Rio del Norte, and pointing our cannon upon the town of Matamoras. Such a course could hardly fail to be regarded as an insult, and to provoke hostility. But he did not wish prematurely, or with the fullest information, to impute blame. As to Gen. Taylor, he knew him well he was a brave and prudent officer, worthy of all confidence, and he felt assurance that he was warranted by his orders in all that he had done.

He said the time would come hereafter for inquiring into the circumstances and causes of the present hostilities; and the scrutiny, he trusted, would be strict, and such as the importance of the event demands. Whoever should be found to have caused the hostility; if it has been caused on our part, ought to be held to the highest responsibility. Congress alone can constitutionally declare war and the people of the United States are not to be involved in war by any other authority than that of their own representatives.
There would come a time, however, for that scrutiny. For the present we must provide instantly for the defence of the country. That was our first duty, however hostilities may have been occasioned; and he was prepared to grant at once whatever of men or money was necessary for the purpose. Our country is not in fault, though her servants or agents may be, and it is our duty to stand by her.

But I trust that while we adopt all the warlike measures that the occasion may require, we shall be equally unanimous in adopting all the most prompt and efficient means of restoring, if we can, friendly relations with Mexico. We can have no motive for pressing too far on a weak or fallen foe. The feelings of Mexico, under all recent occurrences, must naturally be excited and wounded.

Policy and magnanimity require that we should be as forbearing towards her as we can. Our superiority is such as to relieve us from the possibility of our forbearance or generosity being construed into fear, or ascribed to any improper or unworthy motives. No statesman could render a greater service to his country than restoring our peace and friendship with Mexico. And so important do I regard it that, if it was in my power, I would, as soon as circumstances would possibly permit, send her a high and honorable embassy of peace—I would appoint Clay, Van Buren, Calhoun, and Benton—any one, two, three, or all of them. Mexico would feel herself honored by such a mission, and such ambassadors would give peace, cordial peace, to the two countries.

After a few observations from Messrs. SEVIER and HUNTINGTON in reply, the question was taken on Mr. SPEIGHT'S motion, and it was agreed to.

RW46v23i39p1c3, May 15, 1846: THE WAR BILL PASSED.

It will be seen, by the annexed sketch of Tuesday’s proceedings, that the Senate passed the War Bill by a vote of 40 to 1—the two noes Mr. T. Clayton and Mr. Davis of Mass. Mr. Calhoun refused to vote, for reasons which he so emphatically states in the subjoined sketch. Mr. Crittenden, when his name was called, answered, “Aye, except the preamble.”

Correspondence of the Baltimore American. WASHINGTON, May 12, 1846. United States Senate. THE WAR BILL.

The House Bill was reported at once to the Senate this morning from the House of Representatives.

The Bill was read twice, when Mr. ALLEN, of Ohio, moved that the previous business be postponed until to-morrow, and that the Bill from the House be considered.

Mr. CALHOUN said he desired time—time to examine his own mind and the question. He wished to satisfy himself as to the fact of a declaration of war in the Bill from the House.

Mr. ALLEN was opposed to any delay in the Bill. Forty-eight hour’s delay might be productive of the greatest mischief.

Mr. MANGUM was willing to vote ten millions in money and 50,000 of men, and to do this in thirty minutes, but he could not consent that a Bill should pass declaring war, as was done in the Bill before the Senate. Why, he asked, should Senators be embarrassed by such a question as this? Why declare war in voting men and money? The supplies could be voted in half an hour and there were no objections to any provision of the Bill except that which declared war, in substance if not in reality.

Mr. J. M. CLAYTON pressed the [ ... ] considerations upon the majority, and exhorted unanimity of action, which was easily accomplished. There were no objections to the Bill except in one of two particulars. If there was any desire to obtain unanimity of action, it should be obtained; and upon a solemn question like this, he regarded unanimity as most desirable.

Mr. CALHOUN said that he had no feeling whatever upon this subject. The rule of his life had been to act promptly and to act conscientiously, and with due regard to the duty he owed to his sense of right and justice. He desired time, and he desired that there should be a hearty concurrence in all that was done.

It was as much impossible for him to vote for the Bill before the Senate as it would be for him to plunge a dagger into his own bosom, and must more so. I will not agree to make war upon the Constitution by making war upon Mexico. I shall neither vote for the Bill or against the Bill. I desire time to examine it.

Mr. CLAYTON moved to refer the bill to the Military Committee, which motion was rejected by a vote of 26 to 20.

The Military Committee had signified their intention of moving amendments to meet objections. The Committee, however, did not design to interfere with the political character of the bill, but they were prepared to move amendments to the details of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON moved to strike out the words for “the prosecution of a war,” and to insert “to repel invasion.”
Mr. CLAHOUN defended the amendment, and Mr. HOUSTON opposed it—the former declaring that war did not exist constitutionally, and the latter asserting that it did exist. General Houston regarded the war as a continuation of that which had been going on between Mexico and Texas for ten years. War in his judgment actually existed.

Mr. ARCHER said he thought that Mexico had done enough to warrant a declaration of war, but he was not prepared to vote so, until further advices, as his opinion was governed to some extent by the judgment of others who thought differently from himself.

Mr. PENNYBACKER said that war existed de facto, and it was no violation of the law of nations that war should be declared to exist after what had been done by Mexico in crossing the Rio Grande and committing hostilities.

Mr. JOHNSON of La., also defended the idea of a war de facto. War existed by the repeated and avowed acts of Mexican officers and Government.

Gen. CASS was delighted with Gen. Houston's remarks. They showed that there was war, and he could not see how any would doubt its existence. He would not discuss the question of boundary, whether the Rio del Norte was ours or not. It was enough that the soil possessed by us had been invaded. This was good cause of war with him, and he was ready to act in reference to the hostilities, and he was for carrying the war into the heart of the enemy’s camp and country.

Mr. BERRIEN continued the debate in a brilliant constitutional argument upon the war power, and the difference between war and hostilities.

The debate was further continued against declaring war by Mr. CLAYTON and Mr. WESTCOTT in favor of the Bill. The latter was ready to declare war at once, and to vote for any war message.

Mr. CRITTENDEN said he was in favor of expeditious action. He believed that the next news from the frontier would find the Mexicans driven from the Rio del Norte and Matamoras in possession of the American Army.—But it was necessary to act without any delay, and he was ready to vote for all necessary means for the prosecution of hostilities against the Mexican Government.

He was for carrying the sword in one hand and sending the minister of peace along with it, and for marching right on into Mexico, proffering peace all the time and holding out a desire to settle the question amicably.

Mr. Crittenden said he could not do anything which would embarrass the administration, but he could not defend what the Government had done. Why had we gone on to occupy a disputed country—to place an army in hostile array—pointing gun to gun, and thus placing two hostile armies of two quarrelsome countries in close collision. Collision must have been foreseen, and it has come.

Mr. CALHOUN said,—I am amazed,—I am in wonder,—I am in deep alarm at the precipitancy of action upon a question like this. One day only was asked to read the documents, and it was refused, and that, too, when the supplies would be voted without this disguised and undignified manner of declaring war.

The Senate were then brought to a vote upon striking out the words “for the purpose of prosecuting a war.”—The Senate rejected the motion by a vote of 26 to 20.

Mr. CRITTENDEN then moved to insert the words “prosecuting hostilities.” Rejected by a vote of 26 to 20.

Mr. Crittenden introduced an amendment in regard to the provisions of the Bill touching the appointment of officers. He regarded it as it was, as an infraction of the Constitution.

Mr. DAVIS said he could not vote for the Bill, because it declared war to exist by the act of Mexico—which he believed to be contrary to the fact.

Mr. CLAYTON said that notwithstanding the unhandsome and discourteous act of the majority, in refusing an amendment, he should vote for the Bill.

The Senate is now sitting as the [. . . ] leave, and the bill will pass to-night.

[BWP]
The House then adjourned.

Weak or unprincipled Rulers never fail to avail themselves of events such as those which are now in progress on the South-western frontier, to palliate their misconduct and to cloak their own delinquencies from the public eye. They are well aware how easy it is, when the public mind is excited by an apprehended conflict with a foreign foe, to lead it, by the presentation of false issues, from the contemplation of their own errors. Love of country is a universal instinct, which they know well enough how to take advantage of. They appeal to it with all the art and eloquence of which they are masters, because they know that they will strike a chord which will respond promptly to the player’s touch. Patriotism is made to perform the office of Charity by covering a multitude of sins—and he who has the nerve, at such a moment, to condemn the policy of the Administration by whose folly or ambition the crisis has been unnecessarily brought on, may expect to be denounced by its partisans as the enemies of the Country, which, in their vocabulary, is a synonymous term. “The gloss of zeal for the public good (as Edward Livingston strikingly and eloquently remarked,) is always spread over acts of oppression; and—the people are sometimes made to consider that as a brilliant exertion of energy in their favor, which, when viewed in its true light, will be found a fatal blow to their rights. In no government is this so easily produced as in a Republic. Party spirit, inseparable from its existence, then aids the illusion and a popular leader is allowed, in many instances, impunity, and sometimes rewarded with applause, for acts that would make a tyrant tremble on his throne.”

The debate in the Senate last Tuesday, on the bill declaring that a war now exists between Mexico and the United States, and authorizing the acceptance, by the President, of the services of 50,000 volunteers, to ensure its vigorous prosecution, furnishes a striking illustration of the facility with which a Party in power may avail itself of an intense popular excitement, to effect its own insidious purposes. We regret that our limited space will not allow us to publish this debate in extenso. But contracted as are our limits, and numerous and pressing as are the demands upon our columns, justice to those distinguished Senators, who, either in express terms, or by implication, have been wantonly assailed for refusing to identify the Administration with the Country, and to make the defence of the one a pretext for throwing a shield over the blunders of the other, requires that we should give them an opportunity to be heard in their defence.

What is the nature of the emergency that called for the prompt action of Congress? A Mexican General, following the example set him by the Commander of the American forces, has passed beyond the acknowledged limits of Mexico, and planted his standard upon a territory claimed by both countries. He has taken this course, however, without a previous declaration of war by his own Government—indeed, while the war making authority of that Government is not in session. But nevertheless his attitude is one of hostility. And all parties—we believe all men of all parties, except, perhaps, the traitorous fanatic, Giddings, of Ohio—concur in the necessity of meeting and repelling his threatened attack, and avow their readiness to vote men and money for that purpose. Is not this enough? Is not this all that Patriotism demands—all that the honor of the Country requires? Undeniably it is. But it does not go far enough to answer the purposes of the Administration. Not only must the Country be defended but the President must, in the same act, be vindicated. Congress is not only required to raise troops for the purpose of repelling a threatened assault; but it must prejudge the question, by asserting first, that war exists when it is impossible that it can be cognizant of that fact, and when, in truth, if the Mexican Government should disavow the acts of its officer, it is not a fact—and secondly, that Mexico has commenced that war, when subsequent investigation may fix that act upon the conduct of our own Executive. The bill prepared by the majority, therefore, wore this double aspect, and secondly, that Mexico has commenced that war, when subsequent investigation may fix that act upon the conduct of our own Executive. The bill prepared by the majority, therefore, wore this double aspect, and part of its title should have been “an act vindicating the course of the Administration in advance and without enquiry,”—that being manifestly deemed more important than unanimity in the adoption of the measures necessary for the defence of the country. And yet, because such men as Calhoun, Berrien, Crittenden, Mangum, McDuffie, Bayly, Davis and others refused to vote for a bill, or voted for it under “protest,” which, in their opinion, not only bore the stamp of “falsehood” and “fraud” upon its face, but violated the Constitution itself, they are denounced (or the Whig portion of them at least—for the time is not yet quite ripe for the application of the lash to the others)—they are denounced as faithless to the country, and insensible to the obligations which rest upon them, as citizens and as legislators, to assert unflinchingly its rights, and to maintain its honor unsullied! It is in vain that they declare, with one voice, (to quote the language of Mr. Mangum as expressive of the sentiments of the party of which
In the course of the debate in the Senate, last Tuesday, Mr. BENTON read an extract from a Proclamation of President Paredes of Mexico, on hearing of the advance of the American troops from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande, for the purpose of showing the correctness of the doctrine that there might be hostilities without war. This extract is important. President Paredes stated in this proclamation that "it was not his right, as such, by his own act, to declare war; but that the august Mexican Congress would take into consideration the state of conflict in which they found themselves, and that a magnanimous and suffering people would not be attacked with impunity; but, in the mean while, it might be necessary to repel acts of hostility and take the initiative in regard to the invaders by

We repeat our expression of regret that we have not room for the Debate itself. But Mr. Calhoun's position—so creditable to his independence and his firmness as well as his sagacity and wisdom—is one of so delicate a character, that we feel constrained to permit him to be heard at length in its defence.

"Mr. CALHOUN said he had no disposition whatever to create unnecessary delay in the passage of this bill. The rule he had laid down for himself, and which throughout life he had endeavored to follow, had been to discharge his duty in whatever emergency he might be placed, and especially was he called upon to observe this rule in acting on so solemn a question as a declaration of war. All he wanted, all he asked for, was time to make up his opinion. He sought no delay, and resorted to no indirect course to conceal his true intent. Gentlemen argued strongly in favor of unanimity; but if unanimity constituted an element of force, and the friends of the bill were so anxious to obtain it, why could they not accommodate gentlemen who had honest doubts as to the state of facts by consenting to strike out the preamble of the bill, and to suffer the question of supplies to be separated from the question of a declaration of war? Was not such a course reasonable? Was it not fair and just? Gentlemen stated to the Senate that the information received from the frontier was such as to require instant action: if so they could have instant action. If any delay occurred the delay was their own. Mr. C. should create none. He was prepared to vote the supplies on the spot and without an hour's delay; but it was just as impossible for him to vote for the preamble as it was for him to not; he was not prepared to affirm that war existed between the United States and Mexico, and that it existed by the act of the Government. How could he affirm this, when he had not evidence in which to affirm it? How did he know that the Government of Mexico would not disavow what had been done? Was he to be called upon to give a vote like this? It would be impossible for him to utter it, consistently with that sacred regard for truth in which he had been educated.

He had no difficulty as to his course. His mind was made up; it was made up unalterably; he could neither vote affirmatively nor negatively. He had no certain evidence to go on. Whether any one would go with him in this course he did not know; he had made no inquiries, and he did not know that a single friend would be found at his side. As to what might be said on such a course, and all that was called popularity, he did not care the snap of a finger. If he could not stand and brave so small a danger, he should be but little worthy of that small amount of reputation he might have earned. He could not agree to make war on Mexico by making war on the Constitution; and the Senate would make war on the Constitution by declaring war to exist between the two Governments when no war had been declared, and nothing had occurred but a slight military conflict between a portion of two armies. Yet he was asked to affirm, in the very face of the Constitution, that a local rencontre not authorized by the act of either Government, constituted a state of war between the Government Mexico and the Government of the U. S.---so to say that by a certain military movement of Gen. Taylor and Gen. Arista, every citizen of the United States was made the enemy of every man in Mexico. It was monstrous. It stripped Congress of the power of making war and, what was more and worse, it gave that power to every officer, nay, to every subaltern commandant a corporal's guard. Did gentlemen call upon him to do this? Did they expect he was going to vote for a position so monstrous? If they forced the question upon him, he should take his own course. If they wanted unanimity, they could have it; but if they chose to proceed on their own petty party views, be is so."

Even this appeal, from a leading member of their own party—from a statesman of long and large experience in public affairs—who has grown old in the service of his country, to which, whatever may have been his errors of judgment, he has never proved faithless or recreant in times of real peril—even this appeal, coming from a source so well entitled to deference and respect, fell upon deaf or heedless ears. The defence of the Country and unanimity in the measures necessary for that object, might be important; but the vindication of the Administration and its investment with new and unprecedented powers, was, in the estimation of the majority, still more so!

The judgment of the country will, we are confident, revolt at this unjustifiable action of the dominant party; for the people will see in it, if not a tacit confession that, in the previous course of the Administration, there has been something which will not bear the test of scrutiny, at least an eagerness to procure a verdict in its favor before there has been time for investigation, wholly incompatible with that conscious rectitude which courts inquiry, and disdains and acquittal by a packed jury as worse, than worthless, because in itself tainted with dishonor.

[BWP]
This passage from Paredes’ Proclamation shows, conclusively, that he regarded the movement of our troops to the Rio Grande as an act of hostilities against Mexico, which he was bound to repel—just as President Polk now argues in reference to the crossing of the Rio Grande by Mexican troops—each country claiming the disputed territory as its own, and each therefore regarding its armed occupation by the other as an invasion of its soil.

Mr. Benton quoted this passage for the purpose of showing not only that, although there are hostilities, there is no war, by that the door is open for an adjustment of our difficulties; and he thought he could see, in the language of this officer, that a peaceable adjustment of them might be effected. So far as he could see from this declaration, the government of Mexico seemed to be willing and ready for such a result. It seemed to consider the hostilities as proceeding from our troops only, and there appeared to be an opinion that Mexico ought to adopt some preliminary measures before she drew the sword.”

In the House of Representatives of Louisiana, on the 6th inst. Mr. Prerot offered the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That whereas, the presence of a body of armed men is necessary on the plains of Texas for its defence; and whereas, the services of the General Assembly are more necessary on the field of battle than in the council chamber of the State,--

"Be it therefore Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives do now form themselves into two companies, to march under their respective officers to the relief of General Taylor, commander of the Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande, Texas.”

After some discussion, in the course of which Mr. Campbell gravely remarked, that if the Legislature were to march to Texas to aid the war, he doubted much whether they would prove as formidable to the Mexican troops as they will to the interests of the Commonwealth if they remain much longer in session, the resolution was laid on the table, by a vote of 44 to 25.

We are indebted to the clerk of the Telegraph for files of papers—we have received Galveston dates to the 2nd May—the Telegraph left Galveston on Sunday 3d instant, at noon, at 4 P. M., met steamship New York about 50 miles from Galveston—the Civilian of the 2d says, we understand that the U. schr. Flirt was endeavoring to get over the bar into the Brasos Santiago; in order to co-operate more effectually in the defence of the depot and position at the mouth of the river. Capt. Sympton of the Alert, was assisting in the object, having taken off some of the Flirt’s guns, in order to reduce her draught of water.—The steamer Monmouth left Friday the 1st, for Brasos Santiago, with a number of volunteers for the army under Gen. Taylor. The short time of her stay was not sufficient for many who desire to go to get ready, but others will doubtless soon follow. Gen. Johnson has just reached town. He is a soldier in whom our citizens have confidence as a leader, and can doubtless raise a company or two in Galveston. We doubt not a general and immediate turn-out of the hardy and experienced citizen soldiers of Western Texas, to be followed by the whole State, as rapidly as the occasion which demands their services shall become known. Gen. Taylor has not cried “Wolf!” until he had seen the animal, and those who go need not fear disappointment in finding the wild beast, as ample opportunity will doubtless present itself to those who desire to do so, on the other side of Rio Grande if not on this.

Colonel Marks has now mustered companies A, B, C, D, of his Regiment, and has received intelligence of two more companies, which will be here by Friday next, from West Felicians. The principal portion of those above named, are mustered in the U. S. Service and have proceeded to the barracks. Capt. Copeland S. Hunt, at the head of his company marched from their rendezvous yesterday evening for the barracks, having been mustered and inspected regularly. First Lieutenant, W. Davison Hennen. Second Lieutenant J. C. Parker.

Seven companies complete have been mustered into the U. S. Service, as we learn at Head Quarters, Washington Armory, and others are pouring in fast from all directions.
THE VOLUNTEERS’ PROTECTION.—It will be seen by reference to our Legislative Report that the bill for the protection of the Volunteers about to proceed to Texas, has passed both branches of the Legislature yesterday. Before the House adjourned yesterday, the bill was signed by the Governor, and is therefore become a law.—TROPIC.

WAR MOVEMENTS.—The steamboat Augusta was chartered yesterday to take two Companies of U. S. artillery as well as Captain De Shea’s Company of Mobile Volunteers, to the Brazos St. Iago. The steamship Galveston was chartered on Tuesday on account of the Government in order to transport troops to the Rio Grande at the rate of $500 per diem.

Lieut. Lovell left yesterday in order to muster the several Companies already formed in Mobile.—BRE.

LEVIES FOR THE ARMY OF OCCUPATION.—The recruiting was very lively yesterday, a considerable number having been enlisted at the head-quarters of all the companies throughout the city. There are now seven companies in barracks below the Third Municipality, whose numbers are complete, averaging 70 men each. The following is the order in which they were mustered into the service: No. 1, company, Capt. I. Stockton; No. 2, Capt. Smith; No. 3, Capt. Hunt; No. 4, Capt. Breedlove; No. 5, Capt. Head; no. 6, Capt. Tobin; No. 7, Capt. Glenn. These in round numbers, make about 500 men. The companies which are nearly complete, but yet not mustered, viz: Capt. Crevon’s, Capt. Dessomme’s, Capt. Soniat’s, Capt. White’s, and Senator Marks, will probably reach in the aggregate, 400 more; making in all 900 men.

There are a few more companies in process of formation, scattered in different localities, which will be filled up, it is expected, by Saturday, when they will be en masse a body of 1200 men. Gen. Smith expects the first regiment to be ready to proceed to the scene of action on the Rio Grande, on Saturday. It will be under the command of Col. Walton. We hope certainly to see them off before the week closes, as much depends on the celerity of their movements, at this critical juncture. Indeed, since the principal object is to reinforce Gen. Taylor at once, we are unfavourably of opinion that it would be better to send them off even 100 at a time, as soon as ready. They could easily be formed into regiments and be brigaded, after the first pressing want has been relieved. We should imitate the Mobile people herein; they sent off the first available force at a moment’s warning.—Times.

[BWP]

The following is the latest of the series of letters from General Taylor which were communicated to Congress on Monday last in connexion with the President’s Message on the subject of our relations with Mexico. It contains, we believe, the latest official intelligence from our army on the Rio Grande:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION, CAMP NEAR MATAMORAS, (Texas,) APRIL 26, 1846.

SIR: I have respectfully to report that General Arista arrived in Matamoras on the 24th instant, and assumed the chief command of the Mexican troops. On the same day he addressed me a communication, conceived in courteous terms, but saying that he considered hostilities commenced, and should prosecute them. A translation of his note and copy of my reply will be transmitted the moment they can be prepared. I dispatch this by an express which is now waiting.

I regret to report that a party of dragoons sent out by me on the 24th instant, to watch the course of the river above on this bank, became engaged with a very large force of the enemy, and after a short affair, in which some sixteen were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender. Not one of the party has returned, except a wounded man sent in this morning by the Mexican commander so that I cannot report with confidence the particulars of the engagement or the fate of the officers, except that Captain Hardee was known to be a prisoner and unhurt. Capt. Thornton and Lieutenants Mason and Kane were the other officers. The party was sixty-three strong.

Hostilities may now be considered as commenced, and I have this day deemed it necessary to call upon the Governor of Texas for four regiments of volunteers—two to be mounted and two to serve as foot. As some delay must occur in collecting these troops, I have also desired the Governor of Louisiana to send out four regiments of infantry, as soon as practicable. This will constitute an auxiliary force of nearly 5,000 men, which will be required to prosecute the war with energy and carry it, as it should be, into the enemy’s country.

I trust the Department will approve my course in this matter, and will give the necessary orders to the staff departments for the supply of this large additional force.

If a law could be passed authorizing the President to raise volunteers for twelve months, it would be of the greatest importance for a service so remote from support as this.

I am, sir, very respectfully, Your obedient servant,

Z TAYLOR,
Brevet Brigadier Gen’l U. S. A. Com’dg.
THE WAR SPIRIT.—There was much stir and excitement in our streets yesterday, occasioned, by an understanding that a requisition had been made on the Governor of this State for troops to repair to the scene of War. There was a general beating up for Volunteers and we understand quite a number enrolled their names. But, the truth is, we believe no regular requisition has been made on the Governor. A communication, however, was received here yesterday addressed to the Governor by Gen. Gaines, recommending him, as it is understood, to furnish three battalions of 600 men each, for the present emergency, and last evening Gen. Lang, Adjutant General of the State, proceeded with the dispatch to Tuscaloosa, to deliver it to the Governor. Previous to his departure he issued the following handbill: **********

To Arms! To Arms!! To Arms!!! To the Gallant Young Men of Alabama.

Hostilities have actually commenced on the Mexican frontier. Sixty-three of our men have been butchered or taken prisoners. Our army under General Taylor is surrounded by an enemy, reported to be 8 or 10,000 men. His communications have been cut off with Point Isabel, the depot of his provisions, and he has in his camp at Matamoras, rations for only 10 or 15 days, which may perhaps be made to last 20 or 30 days.

I am the bearer of a call from Major Gen. Gaines upon the Governor of Alabama for Volunteers, to be raised and marched immediately for the seat of war, which are to rendezvous at Mobile, there to be equipped and mustered into service. When I shall have received the orders of his excellency the Governor, I shall return immediately in a steamboat down the Warrior and Tombeckbee, and shall expect at every landing to find brave volunteers to join in this patriotic enterprise. JAMES W. LANG. Adjutant and Inspector Gen’l of the State of Ala. Mobile May 7, 1846.

P. S. When the Governor issues his orders, they will be sent to the different towns on the Alabama River.

In addition, we would remark, that Lieut. Lovell of the U. S. Army arrived here yesterday, with full authority from Gen. Gaines to receive, provide for, and muster into the service, any and all volunteers in this city who desire to engage in the service of their country at this important crisis.

Military.

In accordance with a determination of the War Department to send the entire disposable force of the U. S. Army to Texas, the two companies of Artillery stationed at Fort McHenry and the three companies now at Fortress Monroe have been ordered to the seat of war forthwith. The whole will be under the command of Colonel BELTON, and will we learn proceed by sea to Point Isabel. The companies at Fort McHenry are F. 3d Artillery, Lieut. TOMPKINS; and K. 4th Artillery, Liet. HUNT. [Baltimore American, May 12.

EXECUTIVE DECLARATION OF WAR.

Following speedily the Act of Congress, declaring that "WAR EXISTS" between the United States and Mexico, the President has issued the following PROCLAMATION: From the President of the United States of America. A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by virtue of constitutional authority vested in them have declared their act, bearing date this day, that "by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States:"

Now, therefore, I, JAMES K. POLK, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the same to whom it may concern; and I do specially enjoin on all persons holding offices, civil or military, under the authority of the U. S. that they be vigilant and zealous in discharging the duties respectively incident thereto: and I do moreover [. . . ] all the good people of the U. S., as they love their country as they feel the wrongs which have forced on them [. . . ] last resort of injured nations, and as they consult the best (unreadable), under the blessing of Divine Providence, of abridging its calamities, that they exert themselves in preserving order, in promoting concord, in maintaining the authority and the efficacy of the laws, and in supporting andigorating all the measures which may be adopted by constituted authorities for obtaining a speedy, a just and an honorable peace.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed to these presents. Done at the city of Washington the thirteenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, and of the Independence of the United States the seventieth.

JAMES K. POLK.
The President:

JAMES BUCHANAN, Secretary of State.

RW46v23i39p3c1, May 15, 1846: CONGRESS.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American. WASHINGTON, May 13.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

The Clerk of the House announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill providing for the prosecution of the existing war with Mexico.

Sundry memorials were presented. Among them were several against a repeal of the Pilot laws of 1837.

Mr. Cameron presented a resolution from the Legislature of Penna. Instructing the Senators from that State to oppose any Modification of the Tariff of 1842.

Mr. Dix presented a resolution of the Legislative of N. in favor of a reorganization of the Militia of the U. S.

Mr. Niles from the Post Office Committee, reported a amendatory of the act regulating the transmission of to foreign countries.

The prior orders were suspended and the Senate took up the Fortification Bill.

Mr. Lewis moved an amendment to increase the appropriation for the commencement of Fortifications on Florida reef from 1 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Johnson of La., moved an amendment to authorize the construction of a fort below New Orleans.

Mr. Johnson, of Md., submitted an amendment to authorise the construction of a fort at Soller’s Point, near Baltimore.

Mr. Lewis explained that the present bill was one making appropriations for works already commenced, and that all new works would be put in a separate bill.

After some remarks from Messrs. Evans, Johnson of Md., and Dix, the proposed amendments were withdrawn and the bill finally passed.

Mr. Berrien offered a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire whether any and what legislation is necessary to give effect to the 11th article of the Treaty of 27th October, 1795, between the U. DS. And Spain (by which the subject of Spain are prohibited from taking out letters of marque against the U. S. under the penalty of being treated as pirates) and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. Berrien explained the necessity of looking into this matter, in consequence of the passage of the bill recognizing the existence of a war with Mexico, and the probability that privateers might be fitted out in the Island of Cuba.

The resolution was adopted.

The Senate took up the bill making appropriation for the support of the Indian Department for the ensuing fiscal year, and after consuming two hours in a dull debate on various amendments, the bill was laid aside, and

The Senate then went into Executive Session, and afterwares adjourned.
The Bill for the increase of the rank and file of the army of the U. S., and for prosecuting the war with Mexico, was signed this morning.

Mr. Holmes, of S. C., laid before the House a communication in relation to Revenue vessels, stating that those on the stocks would be finished this summer or in the Fall.

A Bill was reported authorising the President to appoint Revenue officers, and Mr. Holmes requested that it might pass at once.

Mr. Rathbun, desired that the Bill should not pass. He regarded the importance of this act as much over estimated. It was to make an increase of the navy, and yet to make a branch of the service independent of the Navy.

He would be willing to transfer the Revenue service to the Navy and to have them co-operate with the navy for the purpose of useful action.

Mr. GORDON, of N. Y. moved the Previous Question, which motion received but 18 votes.

Mr. RATHBUN moved to recommit the Bill with instructions to transfer the Revenue to the naval Service. This done, the vessels could be employed as expresses, and co-operate efficiently with the Navy.

Mr. KING of Georgia, spoke of the importance of a Bill like this, and the necessity of having efficient Naval officers to command the Revenue vessels. Such was the practice in Great Britain and in other countries.

The Bill was finally recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs and the House went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

The West Point Academy Bill was first considered, and by a resolution previously adopted, the debate upon the bill closed in ten minutes. These ten minutes were occupied by Mr. Gordon, an Administration member from N. York, representing the Anti-Rent District of Delaware and Ulster counties in an assault upon Mr. Severance of Maine, and other members who were not ready to vote a Declaration of War, and to declare that War existed by the act of Mexico.

Mr. G. spoke the full ten minutes. The pending amendment before the Committee was to break up the Academy at West Point after the present cadets had filled their term of service. The amendment was rejected by a very large vote, and the Bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, and the ARMY BILL. Was taken up and read.

Mr. McKay moved to amend by increasing the subsistence for the Army to the amount of $163,000. Mr. McKay said that this was necessary in consequence of the Texas movements, and the Committee voted the money most readily.

Mr. BLACK of S. C. offered and amendment to increase the pay of the rank and file of the Army during the war to [ . . . ] dollars per month,. The amendment was briefly defended by Mr. BLACK, and opposed by Mr. BROCKENBOROUGH, of Florida, who thought that it would be mercenary to increase the pay. It would be suspecting the patriotism of men of legislate about pay.

Mr. Root of Ohio, said if it was worth eight dollars a day to sit here and declare war, it was worth eight dollars a month to fight the war out. Since we had got into this war, he was for fighting it out. He was for paying the soldiers well, and for avoiding the disastrous errors of the last war. We commence then with paying $16 a month for bounty, and ended by paying $140 a month.

Mr. Gordon of N. Y. having assailed the fourteen members who voted against the War Bill, Mr. R. said he voted as he did to keep the country in the right, but now, that war had been declared, he was for prosecuting it vigorously and for conquering peace. The Administration had violated justice and truth. He was not responsibility for it, and would do all in his power to bring the country from the difficulty into which it had fallen.

Mr. Gordon rejoined, but mainly by an assault upon Mr. Severance of Me. For a letter of his declaring that the country had possessed itself of territory belonging to Mexico.

Mr. S. said his letter contained the truth and nothing but the truth. The Army of General Taylor had taken possession of territory which did not belong to the United States. He could not defend the country in doing what his judgment told him was wrong, most wrong.

A speech from Mr. Delano, of Ohio, commanded great attention for the withering manner in which he denounced the Administration for the war which it had shamefully and unnecessarily provoked,—provoked by seizing territory which never belonged to the United States, and which the ablest men of the Administration had publicly proclaimed to the world never belonged to this country, to Texas.—Mr. D. alluded to Mr. Benton, who had said and written in the form of a Resolution, that the possession of the left bank of the Rio del Norte was an outrage upon the country.
Mr. D. condemned the Bill which had just been passed, and approved, for the enormous falsehood it contained in saying that war existed by the act of Mexico. Never, said he, will I vote for so abominable a lie as is embodied in the bill which has become a law. You may gibbet me, or destroy me, but you cannot make me violate my oath and my conscience by doing that which all truth, all history and all justice pronounced to be infamous.

This war, Mr. D. said, was conceived in fraud, and had been consummated in iniquity. The country would hold the Administration responsible for it, and the world would hold the Government responsible for it. It was a foul, false, damnable war, and yet every man was bound to prosecute it with vigor, power and effect. He was like his friend form Ohio for conquering peace,—but literally the President had conquered peace and let loose a ruthless and bloody war upon the country.

Mr. D. also commented upon the expenditures of the Government—the $100,000 paid to get Texas into the Union—the one million increase to pay the expenses of the Army in Texas—the five millions in the Bill before the House—the ten millions voted yesterday—the six million for the Navy over the three and four millions of previous years. These were the fruits of annexation.

Mr. Douglass of Ill., would not credit Mr. Delano’s patriotism. In his heart he was sure he was opposed to the war and the country, and so were all who acted with him.

Mr. D., by his bitterness, personality and fierceness, soon cause in conflict with several members. He claimed the whole of the territory between the Nueces and the Rio del Norte as rightfully belonging to the U. S. Mr. D. contended that Santa Ana had [ . . . ] the Rio del Norte as the boundary.

Mr. Adams—When?

Mr. Douglass—When in Texas and when he was the Dictator.

Mr. Adams—Was he not than a prisoner of war?

Mr. Douglass—Yes, but he was the Government and acted for the Government.

Mr. Adams said it was something new that a Prisoner of War could make a treaty and a boundary for his Government.

Mr. Douglass insisted that Santa Ana was the Government and as such had a right to make the treaty.

Mr. Adams asked if the Government of Mexico had not disavowed every act that Santa Ana had thus done?

Mr. Douglass admitted this, but contended that he was the Government de facto, and so on, and then referred to what Mr. Adams had done as Secretary of State, when he claimed the Rio del Norte.

Mr. ADAMS—What I did as Secretary of State, I did as the representative of the Department, but the gentleman can find no document of mine claiming the Rio del Norte as the boundary from its source to its mouth.

Mr. DOUGLASS went on to say that Texas Independence preserved the territory to Texas and so on to the United States by annexation.

Mr. Hunt, of N. Y. If the territory belonged to the United States, why had we offered an indemnity to Mexico for this disputed portion.

Mr. Douglass asked who had made the offer? He did not know of any.

Mr. Hunt named Mr. Shanon.

Mr. Douglass's hour soon expired. The floor was given to Mr. Thurman, and the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

RW46v23i39p4c1, May 15, 1846: Boundary of Mexico.

We have already [ . . . ] we do not deem this a suitable time to dispute the question whether or not the territorial limits of the Republic of Texas, prior to its annexation to the United States, extended to the Rio Grande, (Rio del Norte). But it is one which cannot be wholly lost sight of; since upon its determination will rest the judgment that the American people will be hereafter called on to pass upon the conduct of the President in directing the occupation of the territory between the Neues and the Rio Grande, ion the then existing condition of the relations between the governments of Mexico and the United States. A brief recurrence to it, is, in our opinion, rendered necessary, too, by the fact, that insidious efforts have been already made, and will be doubtless hereafter repeated, to forestall the public judgment on this subject, by the unqualified assumption, that, in crossing the left bank of the Rio Grande, the Mexicans have invaded our soil, and consequently that those who have fallen, or who may hereafter fall, have been slain in repelling as unjustifiable and wanton aggression upon our rights.

We do not profess to be sufficiently well acquainted with the facts to pronounce a definitive judgment upon this question, although we have a very strong opinion in reference to it;—for we well remember that one of the most formidable objections urged in the Senate, against the ratification of the celebrated Tyler Treaty, in 1844, grew out of the fact that his very territory, which it was alleged had never been deemed within the recognized limits of Texas before the revolution by which its independence was established, and which had not for a moment been occupied by its troops, nor under the jurisdiction of its laws, during the progress or after the close of that struggle, had been nevertheless ceded to the United States—embracing within its limits not an unpopulated region only, but towns and cities and custom houses, in no less than four of the Mexican States—embracing within its limits not an unpopulated region only, but towns and cities and custom houses, in no less than four of the Mexican States, which from time immemorial and up to that very moment had been governed by Mexican officers, acting under Mexican laws. This objection, it will be remembered, was urged with tremendous and resistible power by Senator BENTON, then as he is now one of the ablest and most influential leaders of the Locofoco party, and whose opinion is entitled to more weight from the acknowledged fact, that, of all our public men, his acquaintance with this question, which he had made a subject of long and laborious research, when the “Neophytes” had scarcely heard of Texas by name, is by far the most extensive and accurate. His views are briefly embodied in the subjoined resolution, submitted by him while the Tyler Treaty was under discussion—though they were amplified and enforced in his elaborate argument, to which we may hereafter have occasion more particularly to refer. His resolution is in these words:

"Resolved, That the incorporation of the left bank of the Rio del Norte into the American Union, by virtue of a treaty with Texas, comprehending, as the said incorporation would do, a part of the Mexican departments of New Mexico, Chihuahua, Coahuila, and Tamaulipas, would be an act of direct aggression on Mexico; for all the consequences of which the United States would stand responsible."

[The reader will remember that the “Rio del Norte” and the “Rio Grande” are names applied indifferently to the same stream.]

And how was Col. Benton’s objection to the Tyler treaty met? By a denial of his position? No, but by the express declarations of its friends and supporters, that if, in defining the limits of Texas, the negotiators of the treaty had trespassed upon Mexican territory, the wrong might be rectified by subsequent arrangement between the two governments, which, by mutual agreement, might run the boundary so as to maintain the just right of each. Texas has always, we are told, claimed to the Neches. And the fact that within the limits so claimed by Texas, the Mexicans maintained undisputed away, ought certainly to be regarded as prima facie evidence of the justness of her title, at least to that portion of the disputed territory which was and had always been in the quiet possession of her citizens, and under the undisputed government of her laws.

Even, however, if President Polk had deemed our title to the left bank of the Rio Grande to be as “clear and unquestionable” as that to Oregon, he ought, it seems to us, to have been governed by the same policy in reference to it—and that is, to have considered it as disputed territory, until the conflicting claims of the respective parties should have undergone the usual diplomatic routine. It would have been time enough to have planted our flag on the Rio Grande and to have cut the Gordian knot with the sword, when negotiation had failed to unite it. We do not mean to say that the territory between the Neches and the Rio Grande belongs to Mexico—for that would be to prejudge the question in dispute; but we do say that it ought to have been left unoccupied, unless some strong reason existed for sending an armed force to that river, until every reasonable effort had been made to settle it peaceably and satisfactorily to both governments.

Nor will it be questioned that the President, when he determined to take armed possession of the country west of the Neches, should have sent thither a force adequate to its defence. It will be a wretched excuse to say that the general contempt for the Mexican character, justified the belief, that, with a small force he would be able to overawe and defy them. Mistakes like these, in national affairs, are to be regarded as great crimes since they lead not only to irreparable injury to individuals, but to public disaster and disgrace. The fault of underrating an enemy is always magnified by the importance of the object to be attained, which, rather than the conjectured power of resistance, ought to be chiefly considered by him who undertakes its accomplishment. Failing in this, the President has evinced—as he has done in other matters of as grave importance—that want of foresight, prudence and judgment, which are the very elements of wise statesmanship, and destitute of which the ship of State is as much at the mercy of accident as the gallant bark is of the waves and winds when her captain and helmsman are ignorant of their responsible duties.

When the commanding officer is thus found inadequate to an emergency which demands the highest powers, it is the duty of the crew to come to the rescue; and we therefore hope that Congress without permitting its attention to be diverted for a moment by the consideration of collateral topics, will promptly adopt the most efficient measures for the national defence, and for the indication of the national rights and honor. It will be time enough, when this shall have been accomplished, to investigate the causes which have jeopardized the safety of our army, and which, should it be defeated by a foe whom we have been taught to regard as the very impersonation of imbecility, would be an indelible stigma upon the national character.
The N. O. Picayune says—"It is fully understood that the Mexicans have been sustained in their hostility to the U. States by foreigners." We do not know whether, in this remark, The Picayune has reference to individuals or to foreign governments—we presume, the former. We are not without strong suspicion, however, that the remark is equally applicable to the latter. In the weakness and the distracted condition of Mexico, we had supposed there would be found a strong guarantee of peace between that country and the U. States, whatever might be her estimate of the wrongs which she has suffered at our hands—an estimate, however, which is certainly very greatly exaggerated by the false medium, through which she views the policy of our government. We can scarcely believe, however tempting the prospect of an easy victory over our little army on the frontier, that she would be guilty, even to achieve that honor for her disparaged arms, of provoking a contest single-handed with the U. States, unless she had received some intimations that in the conflict she would be cheered by the sympathy and support of other powers. We hope that in this apprehension we may be mistaken; but we have strong fears that "Texas and Oregon," the war-cry of a party in 1844, may soon become a national watchword.—We respectfully submit whether, under such circumstances, the NATIONAL DEFENCE ought not to be regarded by Congress an object of greater importance even than the Tariff itself—the revenue derived from which will scarcely admit of reduction even if we have only a Mexican war, and the proposed change in which will be of the smallest possible consequence, should we be unfortunately thrown into collision at the same time with Great Britain.

The Picayune published the following translation of a proclamation, which the Mexican General, Ampudia, found the means of distributing in the American camp:

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE MEXICAN ARMY TO THE ENGLISH AND IRISH UNDER THE ORDER OF THE AMERICAN GENERAL TAYLOR:

KNOW YE: That the Government of the United States is committing repeated acts of barbarous aggression against the magnanimous Mexican Nation; that the Government which exists under the "flag of the stars" is unworthy of the designation of Christian. Recollect that you were born in Great Britain; that the American Government looks with coldness upon the powerful flag of St. George, and is provoking to a rupture the warlike people to whom it belongs. President Polk boldly manifesting a desire to take possession of Oregon, as he has already done of Texas. Now, then, come with all confidence to the Mexican ranks, and I guarantee to you, upon my honor, good treatment, and that all your expenses shall be defrayed until your arrival in the beautiful capital of Mexico.

Germans, French, Poles, and individuals of other nations! Separate yourselves from the Yankees, and do not contribute to defend a robbery and usurpation which, be assured, the civilized nations of Europe look upon with the utmost indignation. Come, therefore, and array yourselves under the tri-colored flag, in the confidence that the God of Armies protects it, and that it will protect you equally with the English.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.
FRANCISCO R. MORENO,
Adjt. Of the Commander-in-chief,
Head Quarters, upon the Road to Matamoras, April 2, 1846.

By the same paper we are informed that the Mexican fort of St. Juan de Ulloa is filled with foreign engineers, and that the army on this side the Rio Grande is accompanied by English, French, and other Artillerymen. "An army (says The Picayune) altogether formidable enough to excite the spunk and exercise the military abilities of as great a people as popular orators describe us to be, waits us. Mark this. And, since the war has begun, let it be pushed forward with vigor."

It is a remarkable fact, and shows the cunning as well as the secrecy with which the Mexican government masked its warlike designs, that it pretended to have sold, a few weeks since, its two war steamers, then lying at Vera Cruz, to a mercantile house in Havana. The N. Orleans Bulletin expresses the hope that our vessels in the Gulf did not permit these vessels to leave the ports of Mexico.—There is scarcely a doubt, it says, that the sale was a ruse, intended to get the vessels out of port without opposition, in order to fit them out as privateers."
We are informed by the Republican, that at Mr. Tyler's store two beautiful and highly finished double-barrelled fowling pieces may be seen, intended for exhibition at the National Fair in Washington City on the 20th instant. They were manufactured by Mr. Tyler, and nothing superior, the Republican thinks, of their kind, can be exhibited.

NEW ORLEANS, May 5. Volunteers.

This spirit of patriotism goes cheerily on. Yesterday the whole city, from the extreme verge of the Third Municipality to Lafayette, exhibited one scene of military excitement. Houses of rendezvous were opened in almost every street, where lines lay exposed for signature. The stripes and stars, in their banded brightness, streamed from the windows and doorways of the rendezvous houses, and during the morning there was almost a rush to several of them by our patriotic citizens, to evince their zeal and military ardor. The companies in process of formation marched through the principle streets at different periods of the day, headed by bands of music, and with the National flag borne before them. Every spot which offered a means of congregating together—the Public Squares—the fronts of the Municipal Halls, etc. were a most animating appearance. Crowds of people followed the military displays, seemingly to the utmost abandonment of business. The balconies of the houses in the principal throughfares were, at almost every moment, from the quick succession of the recruiting parties, who marched pass, filled with ladies, who seemed to participate in the general ardor, and to smile encouragingly on the brave men who were the first to hear, and with alacrity to obey, the mandate of their country in peril.

All these signs are most exhilarating; they manifest the intense degree to which free institutions—to which liberty and equality in their most rational, most enlarged sense, are calculated to impregnate a nation. In the ranks of these companies, destined to relieve General Taylor from his embarrassing position, are to be found citizen soldiers of every grade in society—from the grave legislator, who quits the Senate Chamber to don the uniform, to the hardy flatboat-man, who leaves his river occupation—the solitudes of the mighty Mississippi—to take up the musket and stand shoulder to shoulder with the merchant the artizan, the shopman, the day-laborer. There is something exceedingly fine in all this—where we see such a conglomeration of various interests, such a fusion of ranks, so utterly antagonistic with regard to antecedent pursuits, yet so analogous with regard to the one spirit of liberty which pervades the whole—that reigns in every bosom. Such general abnegation—and, by the by, there is no true grandeur without it—can only be found in a Republic, where enlightened institutions prevail, and where such a degree of intelligence is diffused through the masses, as to enable them fully to appreciate all its blessings. It is at such a crisis as the present, that the national glory beams forth in all its lustre.

"What constitutes a nation's true defence?
Not walls of stone, not the embattled tow'r,
Nor scarp, nor counter-scarp, nor ditch, nor moat,
Nor will the aids of Science and of Art:--
'Tis the true manly heart with Freedom fill'd Inspired with love of Country—Intelligence his guide." [Times.]

President's Message---War Measures by Congress.

The following Message was communicated by the President to both Houses of Congress, on Monday morning last:
WASHINGTON, May 11, 1846.

To the Senate and House of Representatives.

The existing state of the relations between the United States and Mexico, renders it proper that I should bring the subject to the consideration of Congress. In my message at the commencement of your present session, the state of these relations, the causes which lead to the suspension of diplomatic intercourse between the two countries in March, 1845, and the long continued and unredressed wrongs and injuries committed by the Mexican Government on citizens of the U. States in their persons and property, were briefly set forth.

As the fact and opinions which were then laid before you were carefully considered, I cannot better express my present convictions of the condition of affairs up to that time than by referring you to that communication.

The strong desire to establish peace with Mexico, on liberal and honorable terms, and the readiness of this Government to regulate and adjust our boundary and other causes of difference with that Power on such fair and equitable principles as would lead to permanent relations of the most friendly nature, induced me, in September last, to seek the re-opening of diplomatic relations between the two countries. Every measure adopted on our part had for its object the furtherance of these desired results. In communicating to Congress a succinct statement of the injuries which we had suffered from Mexico, and which have been accumulating during a period of more than 20 years, every expression that could tend to inflame the people of Mexico, or defeat or delay a pacific result was carefully avoided. An Envoy of the U. States repaired to Mexico, with full powers to adjust every existing difference. But, though present on the Mexican soil by agreement between the two Governments, invested with full powers, and bearing evidence of the most friendly dispositions, but, after a long continued series of menaces, have at last invaded our territory and shed the blood of our fellow citizens on our own soil.

It now becomes my duty to state more in detail the origin, progress, and failure of that mission. In pursuance of the instructions given in Sept. last, an inquiry was made on the 13th Oct., 1845, in the most friendly terms, through our Consul in Mexico, of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, whether the Mexican Government “would receive an Envoy from the U. S., entrusted with full powers to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two Government;” with the assurance that, “should the answer be in the affirmative, such an Envoy would be immediately dispatched to Mexico.” The Mexican Minister, on the 15th October, gave an affirmative answer to this inquiry, requesting at the same time that our naval forces at Vera Cruz might be withdrawn, lest its continued presence might assume the appearance of menace and coercion pending the negotiations.—This force was immediately withdrawn. On the 10th Nov. 1845, Mr. John Slidell, of Louisiana, was commissioned by me as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the U. S. to Mexico, and was entrusted with full powers to adjust both the questions of the Texas boundary and of indemnification to our citizens. The redress of the wrongs of our citizens naturally and inseparably blended itself with the question of boundary. The settlement of the one question, in any correct view of the subject, involves that of the other. I could not, for a moment, entertain the idea that the claims of our much injured and long-suffering citizens, many of which had existed for more than 20 years, should be postponed or separated from the settlement of the boundary question.

Mr. Slidell arrived at Vera Cruz on the thirtieth of November, and was courteously received by the authorities of that city. But the Government of General Herrera was then tottering to its fall. The Revolutionary party had seized upon the Texas question to effect or hasten its overthrow. Its determination to restore friendly relations with the United States and to receive our Minister to negotiate for the settlement of this question was violently assailed, and was made the great theme of denunciation against it.—The Government of General Herrera, there is good reason to believe, was sincerely desirous to receive our Minister; but it yielded to the storm raised by its enemies, and on the 21st December refused to accredit Mr. Slidell upon the most frivolous pretexts. These are so fully and ably exposed by the arguments of his predecessor, and, in terms that may be considered as giving just grounds of offence to the Government and People of the United States, denied the application of Mr. Slidell. Nothing, therefore, remained for us but to admit the Envoy who came because they had bound themselves to receive him. Nor can it be said that the offer only was the offer rejected, but the indignity of its rejection was enhanced by the manifest breach of faith in refusing to admit the Envoy who came because they had bound themselves to receive him. Nor can it be objected, that we, on our part, would not listen to any reasonable terms of their suggestion; the Mexican Government refused all negotiation, and have made no proposition of any kind.

In my message, at the commencement of the present session, I informed you that, upon the earnest appeal both of the Congress and Convention of Texas, I had ordered an efficient military force to take a position “between the Nueces and the Del Norte.” This had become necessary to meet a threatened invasion of Texas by the Mexican forces for which extensive military preparations had been made. The invasion was threatened solely because Texas had determined, in accordance with a solemn resolution of the Congress of the United States, to annex herself to our Union; and, under these circumstances, it was plainly our duty to extend our protection over her citizens and soil.
This force was concentrated at Corpus Christi, and remained there until after I had received such information from Mexico as rendered it probable, if not certain, that the Mexican Government would refuse to receive our Envoy.

Meantime Texas, by the final action of our Congress, had become an integral part of our Union. The Congress of Texas, by its act of December 19, 1836, had declared the Rio del Norte to be the boundary of that Republic. Its jurisdiction had been extended and exercised beyond the Nueces. The country between that river and the Del Norte had been represented in the Congress and the Convention of Texas, had thus taken part in the act of annexation itself, and is now included within one of our Congressional Districts. Our own Congress had, moreover, with great unanimity, by the act approved December 31, 1845, recognised the country beyond the Nueces as a part of our territory, by including it within our own revenue system, and a revenue officer, to reside within that district, has been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It became, therefore, of urgent necessity to provide for the defence of that portion of our country. Accordingly, on the 13th of January last, instructions were issued to the General in command of these troops to occupy the left bank of the Del Norte. This river, which is the southwestern boundary to the State of Texas, is an exposed frontier: from this quarter invasion was threatened; upon it, and in its immediate vicinity, in the judgment of high military experience, are the proper stations for the protecting forces of the Government. In addition to this important consideration, several others occurred to induce this movement. Among these, are the facilities afforded by the ports at Brasos Santiago and the mouth of the Del Norte for the reception supplies by sea; the stronger and more healthful military positions; the convenience for obtaining a ready and more abundant supply of provisions, water, fuel, and forage; and the advantages which are afforded by the Del Norte in forwarding supplies to such posts as may be established in the interior and upon the Indian frontier.

The movement of the troops to the Del Norte was made by the Commanding General, under positive instructions to abstain from all aggressive acts towards Mexico or Mexican citizens, and to regard the relations between that Republic and the United States as peaceful, unless she should declare war or commit acts of hostility indicative of a state of war. He was specially directed to protect private property and respect personal rights.

The army moved from Corpus Christi on the 11th of March, and on the 28th of that month arrived on the left bank of the Del Norte. This river, which is the southwestern boundary to the State of Texas, is an exposed frontier: from this quarter invasion was threatened; upon it, and in its immediate vicinity, in the judgment of high military experience, are the proper stations for the protecting forces of the Government. In addition to this important consideration, several others occurred to induce this movement. Among these, are the facilities afforded by the ports at Brasos Santiago and the mouth of the Del Norte for the reception supplies by sea; the stronger and more healthful military positions; the convenience for obtaining a ready and more abundant supply of provisions, water, fuel, and forage; and the advantages which are afforded by the Del Norte in forwarding supplies to such posts as may be established in the interior and upon the Indian frontier.

The Mexican forces at Matamoras assumed a belligerent attitude, and on the 12th of April, Gen. Ampudia, then in command, notified Gen. Taylor to break up his camp within 24 hours and to retire beyond the Nueces river, and, in the event of his failure to comply with these demands, announced that arms, and arms along, must decide the question. But no open act as hostility was committed until the 24th of April. On that day Gen. Arista, who had succeeded to the command of the Mexican forces, communicated to Gen. Taylor that “he considered hostilities commenced and should prosecute them.” A party of dragoons of 63 men and officers, who were on the same day dispatched from the American camp up the Rio del Norte, on its left bank, to ascertain whether the Mexican troops had crossed, or were preparing to cross the river, “became engaged with a large body of these troops, and, after a short affair, in which some 16 were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender.”

The grievous wrongs perpetrated by Mexico upon our citizens throughout a long period of years remain unredressed, and solemn treaties, pledging her public faith for this redress, have been disregarded. A Government either unwilling or unwillning to enforce the execution of such treaties fails to perform one of its plainest duties.

Our commerce with Mexico has been almost annihilated. It was formerly highly beneficial to both nations; but our merchants have been deterred from prosecuting it by the system of outrage and extortion which the Mexican authorities have pursued against them, whilst their appeals through their own Government for indemnity have been made in vain. Our forbearance has gone to such an extreme as to be mistaken in its character. Had we acted with vigor in repelling the insults and redressing the injuries inflicted by Mexico at the commencement, we should doubtless have escaped all the difficulties in which we are now involved.

Instead of this, however, we have been exerting our best efforts to propitiate her good will. Upon the pretext that Texas, a nation as independent as herself, thought proper to unite its destinies without own, she has affected to believe that we have severed her rightful territory, and, in official proclamations and manifestoes, has repeatedly threatened to make war upon us for the purpose of reconquering Texas. In the mean time we have tried every effort at reconciliation. The cup of forbearance had been exhausted even before the recent information from the frontier of the Del Norte. But now, after reiterated menaces, Mexico has passed the boundary of the United States, has invaded our territory, and shed American blood upon American soil. She has proclaimed that hostilities have commenced, and that the two nations are now at war.

As war exists, and notwithstanding all our efforts to avoid it, exists by the act of Mexico herself, we are called upon by every consideration of duty and patriotism to vindicate with decision the honor, the right, and the interests of our country.

Anticipating the possibility of a crisis like that which has arrived, instructions were given in August last, “as a precautionary measure” against invasion or threatened invasion, authorizing General Taylor, if the emergency required to accept volunteers, not from Texas only, but from the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky; and corresponding letters were addressed to the respective Governors of those States. These instructions were repeated, and in January last, soon after the incorporation of “Texas into our Union of States,” General Taylor was further “authorized by the President to make a requisition upon the Executive of that State for such of its militia forces as may be needed to repel invasion or to secure the country against apprehended invasion.” On the 2d day of March he was again reminded, “in the event of the approach of any considerable Mexican force, promptly and efficiently to use the authority with which he was clothed to call to him such auxiliary force as he might need.” War actually existing, and our territory having been invaded, General Taylor, pursuant to authority vested in him by any direction has called on the Governor of Texas for four regiments of State troops, two to be mounted and two to serve on foot, and on the Governor of Louisiana for four regiments of infantry, to be sent to him as soon as practicable.

In further vindication of our rights and defence of our territory, I invoke the prompt action of Congress to recognise the existence of the war, and to place at the disposition of the Executive the means of prosecuting the war with vigor, and thus hastening the restoration of peace. To this end I recommend that authority should be given to call into the public service a large body of volunteers, to serve for not less than six or twelve months, unless sooner discharged. A volunteer force is beyond question more efficient than any other description of citizen soldiers; and it is not to be doubted that a number far beyond that required would readily rush to the field upon the call of their country. I further recommend that a liberal provision be made for sustaining our military force, and furnishing it with supplied and munitions of war.

The most energetic and prompt measures, and the immediate appearance in arms of a large and overpowering force, are recommended to Congress as the most certain and efficient means of bringing the existing collision with Mexico to a speedy and successful termination.

In making these recommendations, I deem it proper to declare that it is my anxious desire not only to terminate hostilities speedily, but to bring all matters in dispute between this Government and Mexico to an early and amicable adjustment; and in this view I shall be prepared to renew negotiations whenever Mexico shall be ready to receive propositions, or to make propositions of her own.

I transmit herewith a copy of the correspondence between our Envoy to Mexico and the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, and so much of the correspondence between that Envoy and the Secretary of State, and between the Secretary of War and the General in command on the Del Norte, as are necessary to a full understanding of the subject. JAMES K. POLK.

[Accompanying the Message was a collection of letters, consisting of the correspondence between Mr. Slidell and the Mexican Government and a series of letters from Gen. Taylor.]

RW46v23i39p4c3, May 15, 1846: The Volunteers—“The cry is still they come.”

The gallant Major Hunt, we are glad to announce, has raised the first company, which was regularly inspected yesterday and declared complete. This noble example is being followed up in every direction. Our late cotemporary, Major Kelly of St. Francisville, has already, aided by Senator Marks, succeeded in enrolling upwards of two hundred men, and expects in a day or two to have the complement for a regiment under Major Marks, ready for the field. Three Volunteer corps from the Third Municipality, have through their officers sent in their names almost to a man, to fill up the number of troops required for the reinforcement of General Taylor. We also learn that Captain Forno, has his company of Artillery now full and in marching order.—This in every direction, “the work goes bravely on.” [Times.]

RW46v23i39p4c3, May 15, 1846: MEETING AT THE COMMERCIAL EXCHANGE.

A numerous meeting was held at Bravo’s Commercial Exchange last evening, Col. William Christy in the chair. The chairman having briefly alluded to the objects of the meeting, namely to take such measures as might be deemed necessary to raise troops in the present exigency, Mr. Bryce, Col.. T. G. Hunt, Randall Hunt, and several other gentlemen addressed the meeting. A resolution was unanimously adopted, and numerous signed by those present, expressive of the willingness of the subscribers to march to the aid of Gen. Taylor, who now awaits reinforcements at the hands of the citizens of Louisiana. The most entire enthusiasm prevailed during the evening.—PICAYUNE.

We learn from the Reformer of yesterday that orders were despatched on Sunday by Maj. Gen. Gaines, directing that the two companies of Artillery at Pensacola and two companies of the same description of troops, stationed at Forts Pike and Wood, near this city, proceed forthwith to the scene of operations near Matamoras.

THE TRUE SPIRIT.

Senator MARKS of West Felicians, and his friend, Major KELLY; have already raised two hundred men. Their purpose is to continue with unabated ardor until five companies are raised, of one hundred men each. Mr. MARKS has already seen service, as Captain of a company raised by him, for the Florida war, and afterwards as Brigade Major of the Louisiana Detachment. [Times.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

Four full Companies were mustered into the U. S. Service for Texas, yesterday evening, and sent down to the barracks. There are several other Companies waiting a muster. In the meantime, the troops are all quartered, and nearly all paid off. Hurrah for Texas and the Volunteers!!—[Tropic.

U. S. TROOPS FROM FORT PIKE.

The N.O. Picayune says—"A detachment of regular troops numbering about 80, arrived yesterday from Fort Pike, and marched to their quarters at the Barracks. Several companies of Volunteers raised in this city, we learn, also marched down last evening. The U. S. Quarter Master has dispatched all necessary arms and equipments to the Barracks, so that there need be no delay in equipping the Volunteers, and we hope no delay in getting them off.

RECRUITS FOR TEXAS.

The number of volunteers already obtained in this city is probably about 1200, certainly not more than that number. Unless they come forward with more promptness, the Governor will be compelled to resort to a draft. Several very fine companies have been formed, and we sincerely trust that there will be no holding back on the part of our citizens, when it is of the most vital importance that the whole force should depart immediately.—Id.

The Washington Union of Monday night states that Capt. S. D. Thornton and Lieut. Mason of the Dragoons, who were supposed to have been killed in the recent skirmish with the Mexicans, had safely arrived in Gen. Taylor's camp.

No title.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore American writes:--"The President is more and more blamed for ordering the removal of the troops from Corpus Christi to the neighborhood of Matamoras."—Gen. Scott having been charged with ordering their removal, denies it, as I understand, except as acting under the orders of the War Department. In regard to the act of removal, he was not even consulted."
Prosperity, and from the anarchy which has crushed every germ of national freedom. A nobler motive of redeeming the finest country upon the fact of the globe from the misrule which has blasted its honor—a motive which would animate by feelings of vengeance against the murderers of their countrymen, and inspired perhaps by the still more noble motive of redeeming the finest country upon the fact of the globe from the misrule which has blasted its honor. A nation has risen in all quarters rushing to the standard of their country, shall pour like a resistless torrent across the frontier, and the people of Mexico. Their officers, tempted by the opportunity of achieving an equivocal honor, by subduing a vastly inferior force, have madly drawn the sword and lighted up the fires of war. They will long and bitterly rue their rash folly, when did troops of the United States, reinforced as they will speedily be by thousands of volunteers, who are in all quarters racing to the standard of their country, shall pour like a resistless torrent across the frontier, animated by feelings of vengeance against the murderers of their countrymen, and inspired perhaps by the still nobler motive of redeeming the finest country upon the fact of the globe from the misrule which has blasted its prosperity, and from the anarchy which has crushed every germ of national freedom.

Mr. Calhoun well said, in the Senate, while counselling calmness and deliberation, that "we are placed in a position calling for solemn deliberation, and which it might take years to terminate."

We congratulate the country on the adoption, so promptly and with so much unanimity, of these vigorous measures.

We laid before our city readers, in an Extra sheet, last Saturday, the disastrous intelligence received by that morning's mail from the South, which the reader will find in our columns to-day. It appears that another detachment of our gallant troops has been cut off, almost (unreadable), by a superior body of Mexicans, while the line of march to the relief of their little situation, isolated and remote from the body of the army, we are constrained to (unreadable), from this evidence of the difficulty of succoring them, is even more perilous and critical than we had previously apprehended.

These repeated assaults upon the American [ . . . ] dissipate the doubt which had previously existed as to the real purpose of the Mexican commander in crossing the Rio Grande, and satisfy us of his deliberate purpose to BEGIN THE WAR long since threatened by the Mexican Executive—a threat which had been treated with derision by all parties, as but another specimen of [ . . . ] braggart spirit characteristic of the people of that country, and which it was supposed would (unreadable)porate in words. Unfortunately, it had become the fashion to regard the blustering Proclamations and Manifestoes of Mexican President and Generals, with the contempt naturally felt for those who, while they habitually "speak daggers," [ . . . ] rather remarkable than otherwise for avoiding contact with cold steel and "villainous saltpetre." (Unreadable) ence, no doubt, the great mistake of our own government, in detaching so small a body of troops to the very b orders of a country, known to be, if not hostile, greatly exasperated against us, and with the obvious fact staring it in the face, that, if they should be assaulted by a superior force, there would be great, if not insuperable difficulties in affording them timely and efficient relief. But the idea that our Army might need assistance, was, some weeks ago, almost universally hooted at as preposterous and absurd. One American, it seemed really to be thought, "could chase a thousand" Mexicans, and “two put ten thousand to flight.” Our Commanding General, doubtless, as well as his officers and soldiers, united in this unwise and dangerous depreciation of the prowess of their adversary; for, as letters from the camp show, they were not only indifferent to an assault, but really seemed eager to measure swords with the foe, even though he might outnumber them in the proportion of ten to one. Fatal error! And fatally, we fear, have they atoned for (unreadable). [ . . . ] of which were foreseen by persons less in(unreadable) than those who have had the management and must shoulder the responsibility of this disastrous movement—foreseen and predicted by those who now complain of its authors, and hole them up to public censure and condemnation.

But, whatever may be the public judgment upon the act of thus exposing such an inefficient force to the attack of a superior army, the indignation of our people, from one end of the Union to the other, will not be less intense against the people of Mexico. Their officers, tempted by the opportunity of achieving an equivocal honor, by subduing a vastly inferior force, have madly drawn the sword and lighted up the fires of war. They will long and bitterly rue their rash folly, when did troops of the United States, reinforced as they will speedily be by thousands of volunteers, who are in all quarters rushing to the standard of their country, shall pour like a resistless torrent across the frontier, animated by feelings of vengeance against the murderers of their countrymen, and inspired perhaps by the still nobler motive of redeeming the finest country upon the fact of the globe from the misrule which has blasted its prosperity, and from the anarchy which has crushed every germ of national freedom.
Great as has been public anxiety for some days past to hear tidings from the frontier, it has become still more intense since the receipt of the last gloomy intelligence. Notwithstanding the evidently critical condition of Gen. Taylor’s force, there seemed to be still a pervading confidence that he would be able to keep his assailants at bay, even if he did not rout them, until reinforcements should reach him in sufficient numbers to enable him to assume an offensive attitude. We still entertain a strong hope that he has been able to maintain his position; but it is not to be concealed that he was in great danger of being cut off, or compelled by famine to surrender—and still greater that the feeble detachment at Point Isabel, and probably some of the detached companies of volunteers rushing to aid, have heard a similar fate. We still, however, hope for the best. We are confident that all will be done that can be accomplished by consummate skill, inflexible resolution and determined bravery. If they shall have perished by the sword, however, terrible will be the vengeance of the infuriated soldiers whose duty it will be to avenge their fall.

An immense Town Meeting was held in Philadelphia on Wednesday afternoon last, in conformity with a call from the mayor, to take into consideration, the existing relations between Mexico and the U. States. At least 20,000 citizens, of all parties, assembled in Independence Square, where, by a remarkable coincidence, on the same day of the same month, 34 years ago, they met for a similar purpose—to arm in defence of their country. Col. Swift, (the Mayor,) was called to preside, and several Vice Presidents, and Secretaries were appointed to aid him. Eloquent addresses were then delivered by Peter A Browne, Joniah Randall, Col. Lee, Col. Page, B. H. Brewster, P. S. Smith and Judge Conrad—Whigs, Democrats and natives in fair proportions; after which a preamble and resolutions were adopted by acclamation setting forth the existing facts, announcing the hearty concurrence of the citizens of Philadelphia in the section already taken by the government and pledging its support in all measures it may hereafter deem necessary “for the preservation of the national domain, the security of the liberties and the conservation of the rights of our fellow-citizens, and the honor of our beloved country.”

The spirit of the country is fully aroused—and it is not too much to say, that, unless Mexico, by hasty submission, avert the threatened storm, her destiny is sealed.

Mr. Delano, one of the fourteen members of the House of Representatives, who voted against the bill declaring the existence of war with Mexico, and authorizing the raising of 50,000 volunteers, in a speech since delivered, indignantly repels the charge, predicated upon that vote, that he was therefore to be classed among “the enemies of the country.”

I am (he said) one of those who voted against the declaration of war. I thought I was right then, and I think so now. But that is over. We are in a war now; and I am with you, and my constituents are with you. [Cries of good!] And I speak for a people who live on the frontier—who can look into the enemy’s country, or what may become an enemy’s country very shortly,. We are with you in this war with Mexico; and if other wars come we shall do our duty.”—Such, we doubt not, are the sentiments of all who voted against that bill—except, perhaps, John Q. Adams and J. R. Giddings, who, although ready enough to engage in a war with Great Britain, for the whole of Oregon, it seems have “no stomach for a fight” with Mexico. Why? The people of the South will be at no loss to interpret their motives.
We of the country have been sadly [ . . . ] in our efforts to discover the real drift of the singular announcement [ . . . ] “The Union,” that “the stone which the President’s Message, by a fling, cast upon the high Rocky Mountain, but which Congressional procrastination had suffered to roll almost to the bottom, is once more raised in the top. That on a rock stands the Chief Magistrate, a man of peace and slow to anger.”

What is the import of all of it? In solemnity of tone, and mathematical precision of language, suggest the belief, that it is benthed with a weight that of secret meaning not obvious to the careless reader. Governmental and party organs often deal in mystic phrases, “where more is meant than meets the ear.” We all remember the discovery made by an official dignitary in Lapota, that a letter seemingly innocent, was in truth a revolutionary (unreadable); and the expression, “Our brother Tom has got the (unreadable),” foreboded the downfall of the State. Does not the respect due to the accredited organ of the Administration require us to suppose that this strange declaration is not absolute nonsense, but, like the Lapoton missive, conveys an occult meaning not to be fathomed by the (unreadable)? “A mummy,” quoth Sampson Legend in the play, “is no illustrious creature, and may have significations of [ . . . ] about him.” And surely the same remark is [ . . . ] of the venerable gentleman who presides over the columns of the Union. It is true he loves, oh! how fervently “the President of these United States and all others in authority,” and it is the quality of intense affection to put itself in expressions of unmeaning (unreadable). Mr. Richie, however, will scarcely assert and excuse the [ . . . ] of the paragraph in question, by admitting with King(unreadable), that he is “a very fond, foolish old man.” He must have meant something.

This preliminary being settled, the inquisitive must be permitted to ask, What was the motive of this extraordinary projection? What impelled His Excellency to carry coals to Newcastle—to fling an additional rock on the mountains, which are already but an accumulation of rocks? A member of Congress has recently declared, in the furor of patriotism, that the British shall not have a single pebble that glitters on the coast of Oregon; and this was regarded as quite a sublime avowal of local attachments. But why should the President unnecessarily hazard this extra “pebble”—why throw this additional temptation in the way of the enemy? We submit that where the salvation of rocks is concerned, the Chief Magistrate of this Nation, duly impressed with the magnitude of his trust, should walk with wary circumspection.

Some have imagined that his object is to alarm the natives, by an artificial shower of meteoric stones; while others contend that he is engaged in geological researches, which invite a comparison, by juxta-position, of the granite of the district with the primary formation of the West. If this last supposition is correct, he should certainly employ the learned agency of Mike Walsh, the Subterranean, with his horde of Trogdolytes the Empire Club, whose familiarity with all the varieties of dirt rendered them invaluable auxiliaries in the cabinet of our Presidential geologist.

It is pleasant to perceive that this most effective “Message” was not a gunpowder communication, and that the tremendous impulse given by it to this famous “stone” was not the result of its explosive character; for we are cautiously reminded that it was done “by a fling.” But what was the nature of the engine employed by the Message thus to cast it “to the top of the high Rocky Mountains,” is left altogether to our conjectures. It could not have been either the Balista or Catapult of antiquity; for, though powerful agents in their day, they were quite unequal to such an effort as this. Nor could the requisite momentum have been derived from the nervous springiness of the President’s style—though the variety of contradictory meanings into which his celebrated “Kane Letter” was stretched, proves that it possesses considerable elasticity. Upon the whole, we suspect that “the stone” received its impetus mainly from caucus machinery, since Mr. Polk’s own elevation to office illustrates the mighty energy of that engine in lifting dead weights to a height far above their congenial humility of position.

It may be supposed that this elegant paragraph contains a recondite allusion to the profitless labours of Sisyphus in the Infernal Regions, and delicately conveys to the public an authentic confirmation of the fact, before generally suspected, that his Excellency Mr. Polk, is already politically damned. But as the candid publication of such a truth scarcely comports with the “Articles of Agreement” which we all believe to be expressed or implied between the Government and its Laureate-Editor, this hypothesis must be abandoned. Indeed, the whole spirit of the article to which we refer, shows any thing rather than an abatement of religious reverence for the sacro-sanct person of the President. It places his Eminence, as the Samaritans did their Idols of old, upon the summit of a lofty mountain. Whether he flung himself into that airy position at the same time, and by the same effort, which cast the every memorable stone, is, like everything about him, equivocal. But “there on a rock stands the Chief Magistrate,” solitary and sublime, an embodiment of democracy in repose!

The giddy height to which, whether by crawling or soaring, he has attained, tends doubtless to inspire purer aspir-(unreadable) as his imperial eye glances around on “the whole of Oregon,” and he calls to mind the thousands of Democrats, Hunkers and Barn-Burners, Butte-enders and Subterraneans, Mormons, Repudiators and Anti-Renters, all submissive to his will, and ready to rush in to occupy, his exalting heart swells with emotion, and his lips are hears to murmur the language of Alexander Selkirk—

“I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute,
From the centre all round to the sea.
I am lord of the foul and the brute.”

We must add, before we conclude, that the lovers of quiet, have been (in Chinese phrase) “exceedingly tranquillized” by learning that the President as “a man of peace,” and that “Allen’s Alarm,” Cass’s Call to Conflict,” and “Hannegan’s Howl for War,” are all obsolete works. That he is “slow to anger,” we have the positive testimony of Mr. Wise, and need no assurances to that effect from our old and venerated friend Mr. Richie. AUSTER.

SEVENTY MEN CUT TO PIECES, BY A LARGE FORCE OF MEXICANS!

The schr. Mary Clare has just arrived from Brazos Santiago, having left on the 29th ult. Capt. Griffin of the Mar. C., and passengers, report that Capt. Walker with 75 men of the Texan Rangers, were nearly all killed and taken prisoners on the 28th ult. about 20 miles above Point Isabel, by a superior force of Mexican troops, amounting to some 1500 men.

Capt. WALKER succeeded in reaching Point Isabel at 4 o’clock P. M., on the 28th, with THREE MEN ONLY! He immediately applied to Major THOMAS for four men, and announced his determination to proceed to Gen. TAYLOR’s Camp, or DIE IN THE ATTEMPT! his object being to communicate the full particulars of this attack, without delay to his commanding officer.

The New Orleans Tropic informs us that the pilots at the Balize have applied to the government for cannon to arm their fleet to watch the privateers that are undoubtedly getting ready to attack our commerce. The pilot boats are placed at the call of the Surveyor of the port, to carry despatches between the city and the seat of war.

RW46v23i40p1c3, May 19, 1846: From the Mobile Advertiser, May 9.

Volunteers—The Rifle Company of this city under command of Capt. James Crawford, have volunteered their services for the assistance of the Army on the Rio Grande, and been accepted by Lieut. Lovell of the U. S. Army. They will proceed directly to Point Isabel, as soon as means of conveyance can be provided—to-day or to-morrow—and will be joined; we understand, by the Company of Volunteers raised by Mr. James Hagan and his gallant associates. The two companies will be composed of 200 as brave and gallant young men as ever fought in the defence of their country.

The Rifle Company is composed of young men of the highest character for bravery, intelligence and worth—the very flower of our city—and will give a noble account of themselves. We understand that it will be impossible for Capt. Crawford to leave with the Company, but he will join them in a few days. In the meantime, 1st Lieut. Robt. W. Smith will have command of the Company.

RW46v23i40p1c4, May 19, 1846: TWO DAYS LATER FROM MEXICO.

The brig Josephine, from Vera Cruz, brings us the following letter from our correspondent, dated April 25th, two days later than the last, and papers from that city of the same date:--[Correspondence of the Tropic.] VERA CRUZ, April 25, 1846. Messrs. SAWYER, HALL AND THORPE, New Orleans Tropic.

Gentlemen—By the Mail Steamer Tweed, last evening from Tampico, we have intelligence from Matamoros down to the 15th.
A gentleman informs me that he has seen a letter from the British Consul at that city, to the British Consul here, from which he gives me an extract.

This letter indicates a degree of familiarity between the Mexican General and the writer, that would justify the conclusion, that upon him has fallen the mantle of the "man with the white hat.”

He says, Ampudia showed him the letter warning Gen. Taylor off the banks of the Bravo, before it was forwarded, and intimates, without asserting it, that nothing prevents an attack from the Mexicans, but want of boats. He also says, that "Gen. Taylor has plenty of THIRTY-TWO POUNDERS pointed at the town,” which is of course an exaggeration.

The excitement here regarding the Yankee Fleet has subsided somewhat as the ships have not been seen since the 20th. We hope they have moved into the neighborhood of our little army, as the tars would form most valuable auxiliaries in case of collision. From what I have seen and heard of sailors, I believe they would fight even better on land than on board ship. They would make excellent Artilleries, and first-rate Riflemen.

I see by the Capital papers that the American Squadron were at [ . . . ] on the 1st inst., in the following force:

Frigate—Savannah and Constitution.

Sloops of War—Portsmouth and Levant, and the Schooner Shark: the latter of which, in company with the Portsmouth, sailed that day. Official information had been given to the merchants that from the 2d of April, no more business would be done in the Customhouse. This was, surely, a very silly step, and, I presume, will cost the Collector his commission, and no blockade had been declared, and could not, reasonably, be feared.

The latest information received in Mexico from Matamoras assigned to Gen. Ampudia's force of 7000 men.—The Locomoter says that Ampudia had "compelled the American Consul and his countrymen to march into the interior, to Victoria.”

The 3d Regiment of Infantry had left the city of Mexico for Vera Cruz, and another was to follow immediately.

The Locomoter denounces the Government for its recent decree against the press, as particularly impolitic under existing relations with this country. "It is only,” says that paper, “by exciting and pleasing the people, that they can be brought to struggle with a powerful nation. The resources employed by the Government are pitiful and mean.”

The military at Vera Cruz were active in their preparations for war. The Castle is said to be in excellent condition.

The John Adams was off Vera Cruz.

We take the following from the Courier of last evening: "Extract of a letter under date of 26th ult., from Vera Cruz, received by a commercial house of this city:

"Gen. Alvarez has pronounced in the South in favor the Federalists—and in the meantime call for a triumvirate composed of Gen. Santa Ana, Herrier and Rincon, who are to govern this country until a free election can take place for a President—but we have so many of these pronunciamentoe that they do not amount to any thing.

On the 20th inst., the editor and proprietor of the monitor, in Mexico, was imprisoned and sent to San Blas.”

The New Orleans Picayune of the 10th gives an account of the late skirmish near Point Isabel, representing as having been less disastrous than the Tropic 's version of the affair, published the day before. It says:

"Capt. Walker, a gallant Texas volunteer and now a captain in the service, had been driven into the post at Point Isabel by the Mexicans. With his small command he had sallied forth and encountered the main body of the Mexicans —not less than 1500 strong. Most of his men being raw recruits, refused to stand by him and made their escape. Twelve men, however, remained firm, and with this little handful, Walker kept the Mexicans in check for half an hour. By this time, six of his men had fallen by his side, when his horse was shot under him, and he with his surviving men effected their escape and reached the post at Point Isabel in safety. Above thirty Mexicans were killed in the engagement.

This engagement occurred on the 28th. Capt. Walker got into the post about 5 o’clock in the afternoon of that day. His original force, known as Texan Rangers amounted to about 24 men.

The next day Capt. Walker volunteered with four men to carry an express through to Gen. Taylor. The attempt was thought almost fool-hardy, but he persisted. The result was not known when the Ellen and Clara left.

The Mexicans pursued Capt. Walker in his retreat till they came within range of the guns of the post, when they in turn immediately retreated. The post is very strongly defended—thanks to the exertions of Majors Munroe and Saunders. With 500 men to defend the post, it is believed it can be made good against 3000 Mexicans.

There are now about 3000 Mexicans on the American side of the Rio Grande—one half above and one half below Gen. Taylor’s camp.

The greatest apprehension now felt for the American position is, that the Mexicans may erect fortifications which will command Brasos Santiago. The natural formation of the ground is most favorable for such a purpose. The men would be effectually protected from any naval force by a natural embankment of sand, and the position could only be carried by actual storm of the works. These works would perfectly command all vessels entering Brasos Santiago, as they have all to follow the channel within a few feet only of the position which would be occupied by the enemy’s guns.

When the Ellen and Clara sailed Maj. Monroe had under his command at Point Isabel 500 men, composed of soldiers, teamsters, laborers, &c. The works were then very strong and every day he was adding to them. He had two 18 pounders and several field pieces. He is an officer of great energy and skill, and was confident of his ability to maintain his post against two or three thousand of the enemy.

For several days an attack on the post had been apprehended, and the men slept nightly on their arms. The weather at the point had been very agreeable and the men were healthy, although the water was very bad. The distance of the Point from Brasos Santiago is about 5 miles. On the bar there are about nine feet of water in the South Channel.

The Picayune informs us that the U. S. troops from Jefferson Barracks and three companies of volunteers embarked on the evening of the 9th on board the steamship Galveston, and that three more companies of volunteers would embark at 12 o’clock on the 10th in the James L. Day, for

The scene of action. The scene it describes as highly exciting—“friends parting, perhaps, forever, from each other—a mother, a sister, or a wife, weeping upon the shoulders of a son, a brother, or a husband.” The volunteers, however, all seemed to be in good spirits, and eager for the fray. J. B. Walton, Esq. is Colonel of the organized regiment of volunteers, 1060 strong; H. Forno, Esq., Lieutenant Colonel; Capt. Glenn, Major; Charles Doane, Quartermaster; Dr. Wilson Surgeon; Dr. Gibson, Assistant Surgeon; and the Rev. Mr. Allen, Chaplain.

The whole country was alive with excitement. Lafayette Saunders, Esq., of East Feliciana, has, under authority conferred on him by Gen. Gaines, undertaken to raise a regiment of mounted gun-men, 1000 strong, and his lists were rapidly filling up; and from all the interior parishes troops were pouring in.

RW46v23i40p1c6, May 19, 1846: CASTLE OF SAN JUAN DE ULUA.

The New York Courier gives the following facts, in order that an opinion may be formed as to the probable result of an assault upon Vera Cruz. Certainly nothing can be done until a much larger force is concentrated there than is at present in the vicinity.

"The fortress of San Juan de Ulua would resist a very heavy attack—one certainly much more serious than that of the French, to which it yielded a few years since. The French squadron then consisted of three large frigates and four bomb vessels; the former anchored but little over point-blank distance from the eastern face of the castle, and the bomb vessels but little further. There were mortars in the castle, but none in use, and not more than seventeen guns could be brought to bear on a single ship, and, on the whole squadron, only twenty-six, some of which were carronades.

"Of the French vessels, the Cyclops had two mortars, and in two hours she threw one hundred and eight shells. The others did their share. One of the bombs lodged in the magazine, which was blown up, and about two hundred men destroyed. After six hours fighting, the Mexicans yielded. Since that time the fortress has been thoroughly repaired, a new water-battery has been added; thirty-two and forty-two pounders have been mounted in place of the twelves and eighteens; from twelve to twenty heavy mortars have been introduced, with several Paixltan eight inch guns, and every thing is in the very best condition to resist an attack.

RW46v23i40p1c6, May 19, 1846: General Taylor in his Tent.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, writing from the Brasos de Santiago, says,—

"On the 26th, a friend of mine visited General Taylor in the camp of Point Isabel, where he had established his depot for stores in the army. On landing, the scene presented was quite a wild one, and reminded me of the accounts we have received of an Arab Encampment. There were three or four hundred dragoons in the camp, with their horses picketed about; besides an immense number of wagons, mules and oxen. On stepping ashore, an officer conducted my friend to the General’s tent. He was introduced to a very plain shabbily dressed old gentleman, of rather small stature, about sixty years of age; and who looked by his hardy appearance, as if he had been camping out all his life.

“This was the commander-in-chief of the army of occupation. He has been 38 years in service on the frontiers of our country. One of his officers remarked that "old as he is, he bears the fatigues and privations of the campaign better than any on under him." He was affable, dignified, and in excellent spirits. His tent was no larger and no better than those of the other officers, and his table was camp chest, in which he carried his cooking utensils, &c. His plates were tin pans, and his cups (no saucers of course) tin pannikins. A small supply of brown sugar was kept in a tin canister, and not a piece of crockery was to be seen. A party of six was thus entertained in homely style, and they all seemed to enjoy it abundantly.

RW46v23i40p1c5, May 19, 1846: MEXICAN PRIVATEERS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

It appears from the following letter of the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Board of Underwriters of New York, that we have little to fear from Mexican privateers and letters of marque, so far as Spain is concerned.

WASHINGTON, April 11, 1846.

My Dear Sir: In consequence of our conversation a few minutes since, I think, it proper to inform you, without delay, that our Treaty with Spain of the 20th October, 1795, contains the following article, still in force:

"Art. 14. No subject of his Catholic Majesty shall apply for or take any commission or letters of marque for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers against the said United States, or against the citizens, people or inhabitants of the said United States, or against the property of any of the inhabitants of any of them, from any prince or State with which the said United States shall be at war.

"Nor shall say citizen, subject or inhabitant, of the said United States, apply for, or take, any commission, or letter of marque, for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers against the subjects of his Catholic Majesty, or the property of any of them, from any prince or State with which the said King shall be at war. And if any person of either nation shall take such commissions or letters of marque, he shall be punished as a pirate.” Your, very respectfully, JAMES BUCHANAN.

RW46v23i40p1c5, May 19, 1846: SANTA ANA.

Rather the most singular news which we received from Havana by the T. Street relates to a great sporting affair, which perhaps has come off ere this. It appears that two or three weeks ago some of “the boys” at Matamoras challenged Gen. Santa Ana to fight a main of cocks at that place for $20,000 a side. The General gladly accepted the offer, and was to leave his residence near Havana about the 1st ins., for the scene of the sport. Picayune.
The Washington Union says—

The government is "assuming (to use Mr. Madison's celebrated language) the armor and the attitude demanded by the crisis." The President and his cabinet are now actively engaged in organizing its military and naval forces under the recent act of Congress. He is in constant communication with his secretaries, and in frequent consultation, night and day, with his cabinet. Arrangements are making which will be announced in due season; and we entertain little doubt that they will be found satisfactory to the country. The plan of the campaign will develop it.

CONGRESS.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American. WASHINGTON, May 15, 1846. United States Senate.

An Act in reference to the Useful Arts was reported by Mr. Cameron, and 1,000 extra copies ordered.

A resolution inquiring into the expediency of a General Insolvent Law was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Cameron of Penn., presented the proceedings of a meeting held at the State House Yard, Philadelphia. The State of Penn., Mr. C. said, had 200,000 militia, and 30,000 volunteers, and was ready to meet all the enemies of the country. Penn., he added, will do all her duty for the country. She has heart enough for all friends and iron enough for all her foes.

The proceedings of the great meeting were then read, laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

MOUNTED REGIMENT OF RIFLEMAN.

The Bill for raising a regiment of mounted riflemen was called before the Senate upon the question of the consideration of an amendment in regard to the selection of officers.

Mr. Archer desired that the officers should be selected from the Army proper. This was opposed by the favorites hanging around the Executive, who would take all prospect of promotion from the officers of the regular Army. As it now is, an officer could not reach the rank of Colonel until he is 60 years of age. A small chance for a promotion now occurred and an attempt was made to deprive them of the opportunity.

Mr. DIX of N. Y. opposed the views of Mr. Archer, and thought the officers of the Army would not agree with him. He desired to leave the power of appointment with the President, and unrestricted entirely except as he should think proper to choose.

Mr. HOUSTON was also in favor of the amendment, and for allowing the door to be opened for every man to come into the service whom the President might think proper to select. He thought the importance of military education was over estimated. A brave heart determined to do its duty was all that was necessary to accomplish the fighting in battle. The fact that officers were educated at West Point ought not to give them any advantage over others.

Mr. CASS gave an account of the rank and file of the officers of the Army. There were now 7540 men in the Army, and 140 companies. The rank and file of the Standing Army was increased 8000 men by the Bill passed two days since. There are 325 officers in all as the Army, and 62 of these were Brevet Lieutenants. These Brevet Lieutenants were miscalled supernumerary officers. There were ninety-five less officers belonging properly to the Army than were attached to it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN contended that the Army was entitled to the few opportunities that were offered for promotions. A man had to serve in the regular Army until he was 60 years of age before he could die a Colonel. It seemed to him gross injustice to the Army to select the officers from any quarter other than the rank and file of the Army.

Mr. Berrien quoted from an opinion of President Monroe who denied the Constitutional power of the President to select officers otherwise than from the ranks of the Army.

The vote was now taken by yeas and nays, 22 to 22, and the Vice President gave his casting vote against reconsideration, or in favor of giving the President power to select officers for the new regiments from the citizens.

The Bill was returned to the House with the amendment disagreed to requiring the officers to be taken "from the line of the Army."
The INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL was taken up, and a debate arose upon an amendment giving the Wyandotte Indians $127,000 for their improvements.—The discussion was participated in by Messrs. Evans, Atchison, Corwin and others.

The amendment was Agreed to and the Bill ordered to be engrossed.

A motion was made to take up the Bill repealing the proviso limiting the naval force to 7,500 men, pending which the Senate adjourned, and by a previous motion over to (unreadable).

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Delano of Ohio asked leave to make a personal explanation. Mr. Chapman of Alabama objected. This is the first time that a member has been refused.

Mr. McKay of N. C. moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the public business.

Mr. Daniels asked that the private business should be considered and the motion was carried, by a vote of 74 to 37.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. Delano, by more general consent, was permitted to make a personal explanation.

Mr. D. said he would not abuse the privilege which the House had granted him, and sent at once to the Chair the assault make upon him by Mr. Thurman, of Ohio, in his absence yesterday. The personal extracts were sent to the Chair and read, and Mr. Delano replied.

The charges made against him were altogether groundless, incorrect, and absolutely untrue. He had said that he was willing to lend the entire energies of the Government for the prosecution of the war. He had not called it a Democratic war, but a Presidential war, an illegal and unconstitutional war; nor had he said it was a war against Omnipotence. Mr. E. said he would not be placed in a false position here or any where else. He desired not to be misrepresented, and would not allow himself to be misrepresented.

Mr. Thurman said he was ready to meet his colleague in a matter of responsibility any where he chose, and denied that he had misrepresented his colleague, except where he was not correctly reported, and in applying to him a remark made by Mr. Giddings of Ohio, that the war was one against Omnipotence.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The Private Calendar was then taken up and the bill for the relief of the owners and crew of the schr. [ . . . ] finally passed by a vote of 85 to 82.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on private bills and afterwards adjourned.

RW46v23i40p2c1, May 19, 1846: BRILLIANT TRIUMPH! A Glimpse at the Future.

Our citizens, who had been in a state of the most anxious and painful solicitude with regard to the fate of General Taylor and his gallant little Army, consequent upon our previous advices from the seat of war, were electrified yesterday morning by the glorious tidings which reached us by the Southern mail—tidings which we hastened to spread before our city readers in an extra sheet, and which will be found in our columns this morning.

The details of this splendid achievement are yet vague and indefinite; but no doubt can be entertained of the entire accuracy of the most important and substantial features of the intelligence. It may now, therefore, be safely assumed, we think, notwithstanding the immense disproportion between the opposing forces, that THE ARMY IS SAFE, and that, though inadequate to the purposes of offensive warfare, it is fully able to maintain its position until it shall be reinforced by the thousands of volunteers, who, in all quarters of the Union, are organizing, and preparing to pour like a flood into the Mexican territory, unless, grown wiser by the bloody lesson they have just received, the Mexicans shall promptly sue for peace. Should this be the policy of the Mexican Government, the terms of pacification will be of course dictated by the conqueror; but we hope, notwithstanding recent events, that the requisitions of our Government will be characterized by that magnanimity and generosity, which, while it will secure ample reparation for the past, and security for the future, will reflect more lustre upon our national character than even the most splendid series of triumphs. If, however, under the influence of that fatuity, bordering upon madness, by which her public men seem lately to have acted, Mexico should protract the war until the immense force authorized to be raised by Congress shall cross the frontier, it may well be doubted whether it will be in the power of the governments themselves to prevent her speedy dismemberment, and the "annexation," by the action of her own citizens, combined with the r evolutionary elements which will be introduced into their midst, of some of her border States, to the American Union.
That this is the natural tendency of things, indeed, has long been perceived. The internal tranquility, order, prosperity, and toleration of opinion, civil and religious, existing in the United States, contrasted with the eternal dissentions and revolutions, the poverty, oppression and intolerance prevalent in the Mexican States, must have led necessarily, even in the absence of a warlike collision, the enquiring and reflecting portion of the Mexican population to investigate the causes of these marked differences in the relative condition of the two countries—the more striking the closer the approximation of the two countries, consequent upon the rapid population of the neighboring State of Texas. Indeed, the change that has passed as if by magic, over that State—but yesterday, as it were, a Mexican province, and exhibiting in her tardy growth and in the feeble development of her natural resources the unmistakable impress of Mexican misrule—and now, under a better political system, rapidly filling up with a hardy, industrious and enterprising population, who are bringing into cultivation her gentle soil, opening her ports to foreign commerce and her rivers to internal trade, and filling her vast solitudes with the hum of industry—this rapid and beneficent change, wrought within the brief space of ten years, would of itself have induced the people of the border States of Mexico, at no distant day, to follow in the footsteps of the Texan Revolutionists—to sunder their connection with a Government, (if Government it may be called which changes its principles and its rulers with every change of the moon,) by which all their energies are paralyzed and their prosperity blighted, and to unite themselves to the great Northern Confederation, in which all the guaranties that security to life liberty and property can give, are afforded by its Constitution, and every incentive to industry and enterprize are presented by its laws. With this broad contrast constantly presented to their contemplation, we repeat, it is impossible to doubt that many of the Mexican States, even if peace had been preserved, would, one after another, have thrown off the yoke of the mother country, and united their destinies with ours. And not less certain is it that the war, unless speedily terminated, will facilitate that state of things.

The New York Mirror, in a vein of pleasantry, concealing a deep under current of truth, foreshadows future events, in case of a successful invasion of Mexico by large bodies of American volunteers—many of whom will be mere adventurers, without the ties of home, kindred or interest to draw them back, and who will be strongly tempted, therefore, even in the event of the restoration of peace, to become permanent settlers in the "pleasant land" into which they will be introduced. It requires, indeed, no ghost from the grave to predict the final result, which is playfully glanced at in the following article:

RW46v23i40p2c2, May 19, 1846: The Texan Boundary.

The Washington Union labors as hard to show that the Rio Grande is the true Texan boundary, as it did (unreadable)—the country "54 40" was the Americas line on the Pacific. But if it be so, why did the President, when he first ordered Gen. Taylor to Texas, require him to stop at Corpus Christi, on the river Neuses? Why did he send Mr. Slidell to Mexico to negotiate about the boundary question, if our title to the Rio Grande was so "clear and unquestionable" as not to admit of some doubt? Why did Congress itself, in adopting the resolution admitting Texas into the Union, expressly incorporate in the resolution of annexation a section providing for the future settlement with Mexico, of questions of disputed boundary! Our Government has never claimed a foot of soil West of the Rio Grande—and therefore, if there be any territory in dispute, it must be on this side of that river. Will the Union be good enough to tell us where that disputed territory is, if it be not precisely the positions occupied by Gen. Taylor’s troops at Point Isabel and opposite Matamoros?

Again: The Union tells us that Texas not only claimed all the territory between the Neuces and the Rio Grande, but that, since the annexation of that Republic, the laws of our own Congress have embraced it within our jurisdiction, by authorizing the establishment of a custom-house within its limits. But if that fact establishes our title, how will the Union get rid of some other facts—to wit, that there was a Mexican village and custom-house at Point Isabel when Gen. Taylor’s troops approached that place; that there are Mexicans settlements and Mexican forts on this side the Rio Grande, at other points; that Santa Fe, which our own laws have over and often recognized as a Mexican town, is east of that river—nay, that thousands of Mexicans brave, from time immemorial, resided on this side of the river, while acknowledging allegiance to the Mexican government obeying Mexican laws, and governed by Mexican officers. How, we ask, will the Union get rid of these facts?

What is thought and said upon this subject even by officers of our own Army, may be inferred from a letter written by one of them, which we find in the Newark Daily Advertiser, whom writing from the camp opposite Matamoros, says: “THIS MEXICAN STATE, TAMALIPAS, IN WHICH WE ARE ENCAMPED, is a beautiful and most delightful region.” And he then goes on to describe “the level surface, dotted with cotton and sugar cane fields, interspersed with lovely gardens after the Spanish fashion,” which we suppose were the residences of Mexican, and not American citizens.

The question of boundary will soon be adjusted now, however, by a process more summary than any known to diplomacy. It may be that our title is as good to the Rio Grande in one direction as to "54 40" in another; nor do we mean now to express an opinion upon a point in reference to which we can only speak upon the vaguest possible information. Our only purpose is to show that the boundary line was an unsettled question when the Administration ordered Gen. Taylor to take position upon the extreme limits of the American claim, thereby, forestalling negotiations by taking actual possession of the soil in dispute, and which, being in dispute, we had no more right so to occupy than had Mexico herself. The Union foresees that the Administration is hereafter to be held answerable for this movement, to which unquestionable the origin of the Mexican war is ascribable; and hence its anxiety to pre-occupy the public mind with an erroneous idea.
Reducing the Tariff.

The Union declares "that the existing war with Mexico can constitute no reason for refusing to reduce the tariff." It says: "We have a present surplus of twelve millions of dollars. And the expenditure of less than this sum, we trust, will bring the contest to a speedy and successful termination." And it adds: "Let no member of Congress, therefore, refuse to support the rights of our country abroad, from any panic anticipation that it will arrest the reduction of the tariff. Far from it! We must do our duty in both ways, boldly and unhesitatingly. Now is the time to strike against the tariff system." Heard every sensible people the like of this? "Now is the time to strike against the Tariff!!—Alexandria Gazette.

We marvel that our shrewd friend of the Gazette should express any surprise at the position assumed on this question by the Executive organ. According to the dogmas of the last Treasury Report, the Union is unquestionable right.—Secretary Walker urges a reduction of duties in order to increase the revenue; and, if an augmentation of the resources of the government will be the effect of the reduced duties, no one can question that "now is the time to strike against the tariff." And while, we confess, we do not put as much faith in Mr. Walker’s sagacity as some others do, and certainly have strong doubts of the correctness of this particular position, yet, under the circumstances, we thin, the “experiment” in at least worth the trial. Let us see;

Last year, the expenses of the government were in round numbers, $30,000,000
And the following "extraordinaries" are, according to a correspondent of the New York Herald, to be added to those of the present year, to wit, For the prosecution of the war with Mexico
Increase of the army $2,500,000
Two regiments of dragoons 1,000,000
Army of occupation, thus far, of three thousand men, &c. 500,000
Thenavy in the Gulf 1,000,000
Fortifications (probable) extra 4,000,000
Contingent expenses 1,000,000
Making a total of $50,000,000

It is manifest, therefore, that Mr. Walker will require all the money he can raise, from the legitimate sources of revenue, to make buckle and tongue meet; and as he says, and his friends repeat, that diminished duties will swell the receipts from customs, those who concur in that opinion ought by all means to give him just such a "revenue tariff" as he desires. We venture the prediction, if a majority of Congress shall do so, however, that the Treasury, at the close of Mr. Polk’s term, will be even more deeply in debt than it was when the Whigs went into power in 1841, and by the Tariff enacted in 1842 provided the means of paying off its outstanding debts of redeeming its millions of outstanding Treasury Notes, and restoring its credit, which had sunk so low that even the gamblers in Stocks in all of the money marts of Europe or America refused to touch its dishonored paper.

Yet, Secretary Walker and his friends are responsible—and we are giving them rope, if they think proper to incur the hazards against which past experiences so eloquently warns them. This is certainly a favorable period to test their experiment; and, if they have the nerve to try it, we, for one, bid them "go ahead!"

From the New York Mirror.

"THE TRUE MEANING OF THE TERM 'ARMY OF OCCUPATION'—The Morning news is in distress and perplexity as to the future movement of the President, and asks in despair, 'What next? What is to be done with the vast army of 50,000,' for the maintenance of which it speaks of the 'insignificant little sum' of ten millions as utterly contemptible. The sum certainly a small enough if the army is to be carried to Mexico and brought back again; but is the latter step necessary or desirable? Does not Mexico, the land of the sun—where the naked sky is a better shelter than half the roofs of the bleak north, and where the least possible digging produces the largest imaginable tortillas—where wives are faithful, and the men some of the best natured fellows in the world—does not Mexico—not a 10th part peopled or cultivated—offer many inducements to a residence? Certainly it does; and of the 50,000, or 500,000 gallant fellows who will go there as an army of occupation, not one in a hundred will ever come back again, and they won't be shot either. Give a Yankee a foothold and if it is worth holding he will keep it. His government will never be able to recall him, his General won't want him when the war is over; he will stay, dig, cultivate, get married, and trade. He will then revolutionize the land, and it will be impossible not to annex him when he desires it. The whole present Mexican system is utterly rotten. The land is uncultivated, commerce there is none, one of the finest cotton regions in the world runs to waste, the people are literally slaves to the landed proprietors, and utterly miserable; the different military despotisms one after the other are nuisances; the mines of the country are already in the hand of foreigners—the land is an inevitable prey to the first comer, and Jonathan is the man. It might be wished that the Mexicans were a stronger race with greater industry and the power of preserving an honorable nationality, but wishers will avail nothing against facts. As surely as that the white man on this Atlanta frontier was destined to be the successor of the Indian by superiority of race, as surely must the vigor and industry of the United States succeeded to the feebleness of the present native of Mexico. As it is, the Yankee foothold in that region is neither feeble nor unfrequent. The traveller from Vera Cruz to Mexico performs the journey in Troy coaches, and the stone of which the custom house of the former city is built came from Quincy, Massachusetts. Waddy Thompson in his new book on Mexico, has a hundred such telling anecdotes. In view of these things we would make one suggestion to the War Department—to incorporate alongside of the new company of sappers and miners, a body of (remainder unreadable).

We have received a copy of a "POETICAL SERMON," by Wm. Thurman, very neatly printed, and also a copy of a poetical essay on "OREGON," from the same pen—which may be obtained of the author, and at the book stores in this city. Mr. Thurman is a highly respectable and deserving gentleman—and, although we have met with better poetry than his, yet his publications are worth the price he asks for them, to while away an idle hour.

The Enquirer proposed the immediate formation of a Legion, to be composed of eight full companies of Infantry, four of Artillery and four of Riflemen, to be called "the Virginia Legion," to offer its services to the President for the invasion of Mexico. Should the war be protracted, we cheerfully "second the motion," though there is some reason now to hope that there will be no necessity for carrying it into execution. The Mexicans defeated in their first battle, under circumstances so advantageous to them, will scarcely hesitate to sue for peace, upon our own terms when her government hears of the formidable preparations in progress in this country.

The last New Orleans papers inform us that a uniformed corps in that city, known as "The Legion," had twice offered its services to the Governor of Louisiana. The first proffer was declined, and to the second no answer had been returned. The Tropic expresses its surprise that the services of a corps well disciplined and well equipped should have been refused, especially when there was so much difficulty in obtaining volunteers as to render a draft necessary.

The enlistment of Volunteers was still progressing in New Orleans. We learn from the Tropic that Senator mark's regiment, (called the Jackson regiment) is fully organized. Samuel F. Marks was elected Colonel Theodore P. Hunt Lieutenant Colonel, and—Fowler, late of the U. S. Army, Major. Senator Marks, who has resigned his seat in the Legislature of Louisiana, for the purpose of going to Gen. Taylor's relief, distinguished himself in the Florida campaign.

A company of 60 rank and file, from Natchez, had been organized, and was hourly expected at New Orleans; and other companies were rapidly filling up in the Mississippi counties adjacent to that city.

Amid the exciting news from Mexico, we had forgotten to acknowledge a number of editorial presents recently sent us. Mr. Joniah L. Woodson favored us a few days since, with a bottle of his excellent wine, vintage 1836, and proceeded from Virginia grapes grown on his land. We had frequently hears of the superior quality of this wine, in it pure state; but Mr. Woodson's kindness has enabled us to speak understandingly on the subject of wine-making in the neighborhood of Richmond. Mr. W., like several other enterprising gentlemen near this city, has given the best evidence of what can be produced from the grape on Virginia soil. There will be but little occasion to send abroad for grapes since, if all who undertake vineyards in this region [ . . . ] be as successful, in making wine, as Mr. W.

That Dozen of Porter!" We almost fear that our readers may think us fond of "drinkables," if we continue to acknowledge the receipt of such excellent wine and porter as have been lately sent. We are indebted to Mr. Archie Reath for a dozen "quarts" of his popular porter. Mr. R. had extensive arrangements at his establishment, under Messrs. Ratcliffe and Taylor's Store, for bottling porter and furnishing it to the citizens. Those who are fond of that beverage can be supplied with porter either in pint or quart bottles on reasonable terms. Mr. R., we believe, has a vehicle always ready to convey his porter to any part of the city.

_Turtle Soup_—The season for enjoying Turtle Soup has just commenced, and the enterprising conductors of the City Restaurants are already vieing with each other in serving up such delicacies of the season. Friend Smith of the Republican and ourself dropped in at "Our House," (Thompson's) yesterday, where we found a savoury bowl in readiness for us, and which we, as the saying is, "walked right into." We pronounced it rich and well flavored—such as no lover of good things could turn up his nose at.

RW46v23i40p2c5, May 19, 1846: Daily Advertiser-Extra, Mobile, Tuesday, May 12, 10½ o'clock.

LATER FROM THE ARMY.
Arrival of the Steamship _New York_.

GLORIOUS NEWS!
Point Isabel Relieved! Matamoras reduced to Ashes! The American Army Triumphant!! 700 Mexicans Killed! A general Blockade of the Mexican Ports Ordered!!

After a painful suspense of several days, news reached us of a blow being struck by the Americans. The prowess of our brave soldiers has made the perfidious Mexicans bite the dust. The serpent of the Mexicans arms, now withes in death agony under the American Eagle. Victory perches upon our banner! Honor to Major Ringgold of the 3d Artillery, and his brave companions for their defence of the American camp. Cheers, none times nine, for our country, and its free institutions!!!

[From the N. O. _Commercial Times_]

It is with feelings of heartfelt gratitude and the deepest satisfaction, that we take up our pen in record the brilliant result of the first great blow struck by Gen. Taylor and his glorious little army. The fame of the American arms has been signaly vindicated. With an inferiority of forces as disproportionate as to have caused the deepest anxiety for Gen. Taylor and his gallant band, they have gained a great, a glorious, a noble, a most triumphant victory. Seven hundred Mexicans were left dead on the field of battle—Matamoras is reduced to ashes—Point Isabel is relieved. Such are the immediate results of this magnificent exploit.

The reception of this gratifying news will cause the national pulse to vibrate, from one extremity of the Union to the other. The thunder of the artillery which was fired last evening, in honor of this gallant achievement, will roll, responsively, from State to State—from city to city—from village to village—from hamlet to hamlet—until it reverberates from the rock girt cliffs of Maine, and the mountains of Vermont echoing a Nation's gratitude.

"The battle is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift." An overruling Providence has mercifully preserved our little army, apparently devoted to destruction, and scattered the Mexican host like chaff before the wind.

RW46v23i40p2c4, May 19, 1846: Congress.

Correspondence of the _Baltimore American_.

WASHINGTON, May 16.

Senate not in session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Daniel of N. C. offered a resolution this morning that the members absent during the session in committee of the whole should have their per diem deducted, except in giving good excuse to the Speaker for such absence, and that eight dollars should be deducted every time they are absent during a call of the roll in Committee of the Whole.

The Resolution being objected to, a motion was made to suspend the Rules. The yeas and nays were ordered and the motion lost, yeas 72, nays 70 – not two thirds.
REGIMENT OF MOUNTED RIFLEMEN.

This bill was before the House upon the question of concurring with the Senate, or receding from the amendment requiring the officers to be selected “from the line of the army.” The Previous Question was moved, and the House receded from its amendment by a vote of 96 to 67.

Mr. King, of Ga., offered a Resolution, agreed to by the House, calling for the number of Revenue vessels in the public service, and the forces employed in these vessels.

A resolution of inquiry in relation to the sums of money paid to Wm. M. Blackford and Benj. B. Green, acting as Chargés des Affaires, with a view of acting upon claims received by them, was also adopted.

Mr. C.J. INGERSOLL moved for the printing of 10,000 extra copies of the Message of the President and accompanying correspondence upon the subject of our relations with Mexico.

PRIVATE BILLS

The House then went into Committee of the Whole upon the private calendar. A bill for the relief of Commodore Jones, allowing $1500 for presents paid to the inhabitants of the South Sea Islands, with whom a treaty was negotiated, was passed.

The balance of the day was given to private bills but not one was passed, and the House adjourned at an early hour.

From the N.O. Tropic, May 11
Later from the Army of Occupation

A BATTLE REPORTED TO HAVE BEEN FOUGHT!

We have been favored by a mercantile friend, with the perusal of a letter from Capt. Shipman, of the steam propeller “James Cage,” from which we have been kindly permitted to make the following extracts, which appear to give a clearer and more explicit statement in reference to the capture of Capt. Walker’s Company of Texan Rangers – the state of affairs at Point Isabel – the strength of the Mexican force, &c., than was received by the Ellen Clara.

EXTRACTS.

BRAZOS SANTIAGO,
April 29th, 1846.

“Yesterday a party of Texan Rangers went out to (unreadable), and they were surrounded about seven miles from camp by a strong force and were all cut up except three, and those made out to get back to tell the tale.”

“There are about sixty soldiers at Point Isabel, with about 300 Quarter Master’s men, such as teamsters and along-shore-men.”

Volunteer Meeting.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held this morning (Friday, the 15th,) at the Military Hall, for the purpose of organizing a volunteer corps to aid in defence of Texas. The meeting was addressed by E. C. Carrington in a spirited manner. The meeting then adjourned to the room of one of its members, and Mr. John D. Warren having been called to the Chair, he explained the intention of the meeting, that its object was to get a sufficient number of volunteers, and proceed as early as possible to its organization.

The requisite number being soon enrolled, the meeting, proceeded to the election of officers. Mr. Edward C.
Carrington was unanimously elected Captain of the Company; Mr. G. A. Porterfield, 1st Lieutenant; Mr. Carlton Munford, 2d Lieutenant; Mr. John D. Warren; 3d Lieutenant and Mr. Thomas G. McKenzie, 4th Lieutenant; Hermon Carlton, 1st Orderly Sergeant, and I. Richard Lewellen Colour Sergeant.

The meeting then adjourned, to meet again at the Exchange Concert Room at eight o'clock.

The meeting then proceeded to the appointment of a committee to draft constitution, and to perform such other duties as may be requisite to complete the organization of the corps.

On motion the meeting then adjourned.

E. C. CARRINGTON, Pres't.

HERMON CARLTON, Sec'y.

[In compliance with a resolution, in the above proceedings, Capt. Carrington and Lieutenant Warren left this city for Washington on Saturday morning last, with a view of tendering to the General Government the services of this new and spirited corps of volunteers.]

WASHINGTON, May 17, 5½ P.M.

LAST EVENING'S MAIL.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American

Washington, May 17, 5½ P.M.

The public meeting held last evening to raise a company of volunteers for Mexico was wanting in public spirit, though pretty well attended. Colonel Johnson presided and spoke briefly. Three members of the House of Representatives also spoke, Messrs. Martin and Stanton of Tenn. and Mr. McConnell of Ala. A Mr. St. John of Buffalo, and Lieutenant Porter of the Navy also addressed the meeting, the latter with some touching allusions to his brother Lieutenant Porter of the Army, who had been killed upon the frontier by a party of Mexicans. He had received, he said, as the sole bequest of his father, a sword, with which he would avenge his brother's blood or die in the attempt to do so; and from his Spartan mother a letter which told him to come not to her, but to go where his brother fell to avenge his death and defend his country. There were 35 names down for volunteers when the meeting broke up; another meeting will be held to-morrow. On Wednesday, it is expected that a full company will be obtained, and their services will be at once tendered to and accepted by the President.

We were not surprised, of course when we received the Proclamation of the President, announcing the existence of, War between the United States and Mexico; because that document is the legitimate and necessary consequence of the affirmation of that fact by Congress. And it is precisely for this reason, and not because we are not in favor of the adoption of the most vigorous and efficient measures for the repulse of the Mexicans, and, if need be, for their summary and severe chastisement, that we regret the failure of the efforts of Messrs. Calhoun, Berrien and others to procure a modification of the phraseology of that statute. We are entirely persuaded, that, independent altogether of the controversy between Mexico and the United States, growing out of the annexation of Texas, we have causes of complaint against the government of that country sufficient of themselves to justify a resort to arms for redress. And were it not for those considerations which address themselves to our magnanimity as far the more powerful nation, and to our sympathies as the older sister of the family of Republics upon this continent (how little soever some of the old Spanish colonies my deserve this appellation,) we should have deemed it altogether justifiable, years ago, had our Government resorted to the ultima ratio, as the only means apparently left them, to obtain indemnity for the past and security for the future. But, what we regret and condemn is, the assumption that "by the act of the Republic of Mexico, War exists," when we do not know that to be the fact, and when it may turn out that the act complained of was unauthorized by the Government of that country, and my be disavowed; which, would render a resort to war, solely on that account – and that is the only pretext for it now – not only unwise, but unjustifiable. Had the law of Congress been so modified, as to authorize the employment of our forces in repelling the hostile acts of the Mexican Commander, and in guarding against their repetition, until time had been afforded to the Mexican Government either to avow or to disavow its responsibility for his conduct – or until other facts had occurred, leaving no doubt of its intention, without a previous declaration of its purpose, to make war upon us – it would have been all-sufficient for the emergency, and would have averted obstacles to a restoration of pacific relations, which may now prove insuperable, In other words, it might have prevented a War, the existence of which is now officially proclaimed, and the end of which the man does not live who has the prescience to foretell; for it is a trite remark that a straw may light a blaze which may result in the conflagration of a city. We do not, of course, mean that in a contest with the imbecile Mexicans, we shall sustain any material injury from their assaults; but if other nations should stand aloof from it altogether, we may be tempted into a war of conquest and annexation, which in the end may be far more disastrous than even defeat itself.

But we will not attempt to lift the curtain which hangs over the future. "Sufficient for the day."

RW46v23i40p4c1, May 19, 1846: Volunteers from Richmond.

An immense crowd assembled at the City Hall last Thursday evening, in conformity with a notice published in the papers of that morning, with a view of facilitating the organization of one or more companies of volunteers, for the Mexican campaign. After its organization, the meeting was addressed successively by Messrs. Edward Carrington, Jr., Gen. Edward C. Carrington, Robert G. Scott and John D. Munford; but, owing to the wretched construction of the Hall, we found it impossible, in the out-skirts of the crowd, to hear a sentence that was uttered. From the frequent plaudits, however, of those who were near the speaker, we take it for granted that what they said was worthy of the theme. After various unsuccessful efforts to induce the meeting to adjourn to the Capitol Square, a movement from the Hall was effected about 10 o’clock—and Capt. Charles Dimmock, responding to the repeated calls of the meeting, took a position on the steps of the City Hall fronting the Capitol, and addressed it in a brief, but pertinent and thrilling manner, eliciting frequent bursts of applause. No effort that we are aware of, was made, during the evening, to add to the number who, we learn, had previously enrolled their names. Yesterday, the strains of martial music were heard in our streets, through which the volunteers paraded. We do not know what is their present number, but we do not question, should the demand for their services continue, about which there may well be some doubt, that Richmond, as well as other sections of Virginia, will send to the field of battle its full quota of volunteers—soldiers, who like the Spartan boy, will return "with their shields or upon them."

We inadvertently neglected to mention, yesterday, that Capt. Thomas H. Ellis’s Artillery Company, which some months since, when war with Mexico was apprehended, tendered its services to the General Government, is still ready to obey a summons to the field. We hope, however—unless they prefer a tour to Mexico—that, in the event of their services being needed, the Government may find for them a more pleasant location, nearer home—we mean Old Point, which the U.S. troops at that place having all been ordered to the seat of war, will be without a garrison, unless their place be supplied by volunteers. We perceive that a Baltimore Regiment has offered its services to the War Department, to garrison Fort McHenry during the absence of the regulars, who have been sent thence to the frontier.

Since the foregoing was in type, we learn that one Company of Volunteers has been organized—of which Edward Carrington, Jr. has been elected Captain; George Porterfield, 1st lieutenant; and Carlton Munford, 2nd Lieutenant.

A War-Horse and a magnificent piece of plate has been presented by a number of the citizens of New Orleans to Capt. Henry Forno,—the commander of one of the Companies of Louisiana Volunteers, which, under Gen. Gaines’s requisition, marched to the aid of Gen. Taylor some months ago, and who has again actively taken the field.

The Charleston Mercury replies, with some warmth, to the recent attack upon it, by the Washington Union. It regard the attack, however, as designed not for itself, but for Mr. Calhoun,—the time to begin a war upon that gentleman and his friends having arrived. The Mercury promises to shiver a lance in their defense; and its assailants have reason to dread the force of its blows. We shall watch with interest the progress of the battle between these organs of the rival factions.

The Mexican correspondent of the London Times, to whose interesting communications we have heretofore referred, in his letter of February 28th, expresses the opinion that Mexico will be ultimately absorbed by the United States and that Great Britain will be so much the gainer by that, event, that she ought rather to desire than to deprecate it. He argues this point at some length, but we have no room for his speculations this morning—one of which is the dissolution of the American Union as a consequence of this expansion of territory—a fierce rivalry between its Northern and Southern Republics, settling down at last into bitter hostility—and Great Britain holding the balance of power and acting as umpire between them, and profiting by their dissensions. A half-century, he predicts, will witness the fulfillment of his prophecy.

We were talking yesterday with an officer of one of our volunteer corps, and he informed us that there was not a man in his regiment that knew anything about Geography, of any difference between the soils East or West of the Rio Grande. We hear of new Republics spoken of in Mexico, and we saw two candidates for Governors for these new Republics. The events of the future open with singular magnificence.

RW46v23i40p4c2, May 19, 1846: New Orleans, May 8. From Galveston.

The steamship Telegraph Capt. Auld, arrived at an early hour yesterday morning from Galveston, having left there on Sunday 3rd inst. The news she brought we did not deem of sufficient interest to delay the publication of our paper.

We regret to say that the steamboat I left Galveston for Brazos Santiago with only sixteen volunteers on board. The people were waiting further orders from the Governor before enrolling themselves. The steamboat Col. Harney had not left Galveston when the Telegraph sailed.

The Telegraph met the New York within 50 miles of Galveston Sunday afternoon. We look for the early return of the New York with later news from the army. The Telegraph encountered a heavy gale on her voyage hither, with a heavy sea from the eastward. During the height of the storm a female passenger on board gave birth to a fine boy—Picayune.

Rumor of Privateers—We heard last evening that an affidavit had been made before Judge McCaleb, of the U.S. District Court, to the effect that vessels in this port were about preparing to sail as privateers against American commerce. This rumor may be true or not, but it certainly becomes the officers of our customs to be on the alert.
So important are the principles of the recent Debate in the Senate, and the consequences involved in the action, that we deem no apology necessary for occupying so much space with it. The reader can not fail to peruse it with deep interest.

Mr. HOUSTON rose and said, that he did not wish to trespass on the time of the Senate; but he rose simply for the purpose of expressing his apprehensions in relation to their position with regard to Mexico. He contended that they were actually in the state of War, that war had virtually existed for the years between Mexico and Texas, that Texas had been annexed on the face of a declaration on the part of Mexico that she would regard it as an act of war. The United States in annexing Texas had assumed the responsibility that devolved upon Texas antecedent to that event. It was only in accordance with the long-continued declarations of Mexico that the recent outrages had been committed upon the troops of the United States, and upon that territory from which Mexico had insolently ordered the citizens of Texas as invaders and rebels. The United States, he argued, now occupied towards Mexico precisely the same attitude which the State of Texas had maintained for the last ten years. On his conscience he could not resist the convictions that war actually existed. He then went on to point out the folly and danger of delaying proper action till the questions as to a formal declaration of war should be decided. That might be discussed for months in that chamber, whilst their trips, exposed to all the rigors of a southern climate, were doomed to inactivity, and daily wasting away. He eloquently contended that Mexico should be chastised at once for her outrages and insolence, and showed that Mexico had no right to the territory on this side of the Rio Grande—that she held no post on it—and that the invasion was evidently sanctioned by the Mexican government—a government against whose dishonorable course and habitual deception, he warned the Senate. He did not regard the Mexican government as a systematic political organization at all. The Mexican people were kind, generous, and hospitable, but they were ruled with a rod of iron by a set of tyrants, brigands, usurpers and land pirates. This people, if left to themselves, would never desire nor go to war with this country. The men that are brought into the field against the United States would rather stay at home, and it was not they but their drivers, who had offered insult to American citizens, and indignity to the American flag. The Mexicans, then, had committed aggression under order of their rulers, and he would ask, If they had not produced a stat of things in which as perfectly existing as it would be after its declaration by that honorable body? The declaration by Texas of war was clear and emphatic, add her action was correspondent; and the question now was, whether the Senate of the United States would sustain them. He did not wish to waste the time of the Senate, but he could not omit giving his opinion that war existed. He would vote for the bill.

Mr. MANGUM arose and said, the evidence given by the Senator from Texas, in the course of his remarks of the existence of war, was not the American idea, nor did it agree with the views taken by senators, in the debates which occurred in the second session of the Congress of the United States; and it seemed not to be the idea of those who held political power in this country now. It would be recollected well, that in the discussions on the Texas question, there was nothing which seemed in the opinion of that body, as so much to be repudiated and shunned, as the most distant possibility of this country being involved in war through annexation. And, he apprehended, it was not the opinion of the Mexican government. He thought the proclamation which had been translated by the honorable senator from Missouri [Mr. Benton] was conclusive on the point. Did not the head of the Mexican government assume that there was peace between the two countries?—He disclaimed the power of the executive head to put Mexico into a state of war with the United States, and refers to the assembling of Congress at that period when war was to be declared. With the views of the Senate, then, he had offered those of the Mexican government, to which might be added the opinions of the highest political characters in the nation, that war had not existed by virtue of those acts of hostility committed on the Rio Grande. The question, then, was reduced to the inquiry, whether, from the existence of a state of war. There was no need of repeating that war was the emanation of the will of the sovereign power. He would thank the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to say in what document (for he, of course, had read them all) was the evidence contained that the sovereign power of Mexico had assented to a state of war. If there was any such evidence, he [Mr. M.] was uniformed of it. But he had arisen for the purpose of asking his friend from Delaware to withdraw his motion to strike out and insert, because in that form the question was indivisible; but if it were drawn in the form “to strike out,” the modification might be in any form to suit the sense of the Senate. And he was frank enough to say, that although utterly repugnant to the thought of considering the country in a state of war, yet he was prepared, if it were thought expedient, that the Executive should determine the question and if Mexico should make no denial by the Mexican Government of a state of war—that the Executive should set in that state of things, and not confine the American Troops to the left bank of the Rio Grande. He knew the inefficiency of an army under such circumstances. But suppose there should be a disavowal of what has occurred by the Mexican government, in what a predicament should they place themselves by recognizing the existence of war now, which would be to all intents and purposes a declaration of war. But if such a state of thins as the want of a disavowal by Mexico or a continuance of our relations as they are, then the American troops shall pass the boundary, and, if it be necessary, march to the seat of empire, and there dictate peace; and they were willing to provide money and men for that purpose. He hoped his honorable friend would withdraw his amendment; and if it should be the sense of the Senate to strike out, that it adopt some form to answer all purposes.

Mr. ARCHER continued to say, that on yesterday he spoke of war not existing DE JURE, or in the legal acception of the term; but a state of WAR DE FACTO did exist; and the question to be presented, in a few days, would be, were they prepared to make that war WAR DE FACTO a war DE JURE? He would vote for the motion of the honorable Senator from Delaware, to strike out the word “war,” but he could not do so without that avowal of his opinion to go before the people of the United States. He was waiting to wait for advises from Mexico, and learn what was to be the termination of the present state of things; and if it was to be war, he was for prosecuting it with promptitude and energy. He would not consent that any officer, military or civil, of the United States, should make blockades, throw up fortifications in sight of a foreign nation, and exercise, in truth, all the powers of war, and impose all its expenses, all its commitments, with foreign nations. In that state of thins he would not consent unless it got a legal coloring from the United States. The Senators on the other side, in this view of the question, and for
Mr. CASS said: I do not rise to detain the Senate long, nor to enter into any protracted discussion of the subject now under consideration. I have but little to say, and I shall say that speedily. In the first place, sir, I desire to answer the appeal which has been made to this side of the chamber by the Hon. Senator from Delaware, [Mr. J. M. Clayton.] He desires that portion of the bill which asserts the existence of a ware between the U. States and Mexico, brought on by the aggression of the latter, should be passed by for the present, and that we should now confine ourselves to a consideration of the measures necessary for the defense of the country. For my own part, I should be happy to take the course indicated by the Senator from Delaware, and which he asks us to adopt, were I not prevented from doing so by higher considerations. If we appropriate money and raise men for the mere purpose of repelling an invasion, we place ourselves in the very position which the honorable Senator from S. Carolina, [Mr. Calhoun,] deemed yesterday the proper on, and to which I then expressed, and yet feel, insuperable objections. A Mexican army is upon our soil. Are we to confine our efforts to repelling them? Are we to drive them to the border, and then stop our pursuit, and allow them to find a refuge in their own territory? And what then? To collect again to cross our frontier at some other point, and again to renew the same scenes, to be followed by a similar immunity? What sort of condition of thing would this be, sir? The advantage would be altogether on the side of the Mexicans, while the loss would be altogether ours. Their army is maintained at any rate, and it would cost them little more to renew and continue these border contests than to keep their troops in their cantonments, while we must spend troops along our border, and hold them in readiness to meet these invasions at whatever point they may be attempted. Now, sir, no vote of mine shall place my country in this situation. And beside, these Mexican hostilities will not be confined to operations by land. Are we to suffer their privateers to spread themselves over the ocean, to capture our sailors and vessels, and to ruin our commerce? This state of things, I, for one, am disposed to meet with promptitude and energy. Mexico has attacked the United States – has placed herself in a belligerent attitude. And now let her take the consequences of her own aggression. For these reasons, sir, while we provide for the defense of the country, I am for making the defense effectual by not only driving off the enemy, but by following them into their own territory, and by dictating a peace even in the capital, if it be necessary. But, sir, why does the honorable senator from Delaware ask the separation, and request us to postpone our decision upon the relative condition of this country and Mexico, while we provide only for driving the invaders from our soil? He says, sir, that he desires time to examine the documents which the President has submitted to us, before he can decide whether there is a state of war between the United States and Mexico. I cannot conceive, sir, that any delay can be necessary for this purpose. The main facts are indisputable. They are before the Senate, before the country, and before the world. A Mexican army has passed our boundary, and is now upon the soil of the republic. Our troops have been attacked, captured, and killed. Our army is surrounded, and efforts are making to subdue them. Now, sir, no documents are necessary to establish these facts; and these facts, it seems to me, are all that can be necessary to justify the statement of the President of the existence of the war, and our concurrence in his recommendation. If, indeed, the object be to examine the conduct of the executive, to ascertain whether this condition of things is to be attributed to him, then, undoubtedly, a careful examination of the documents would be necessary. And from indications already given, I presume that such an investigation will be entered upon. For one, I am prepared to enter into it, and I will venture to predict that the more severe it is, the more triumphant for the administration will be the result. But that subject may well give way to this. Let us postpone that inquiry till we are provided for the defense of the country and the vindication of our honor. That course seems to me to be equally indicated by duty, by policy, and by patriotism. And now, sir, permit me to advert to another branch of this subject. Strange doctrines have been heard yesterday and today, such as have been presented, neither by the history of our own country, nor that of any other. Among those who oppose the course of the executive, there seems to be an important difference of opinion on some of the principles which should regulate our conduct. By some it is contended that the invasion of the Mexican army is not an act of war, because we have no proof that it was committed by the order of the Mexican government. While others, and among them the distinguished senator from South Carolina, maintain, that an act of another company

[Illegible] ... This to me sir, is a new division of the principle of inter-communication between different countries. War I understand, and peace I understand, and the rights and duties which they bring with them. But a state of hostilities, as contradistinguished from them relations, is a new chapter in the law of nations to me. Our constitution is equally silent upon the subject. I supposed, heretofore; that if we were not at peace with a country we were at war with it. I had to learn that there was an intermediate state creating new rights and duties which I am afraid it will be difficult to find unless a new Gratis starts up upon the occasion. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Benton] has correctly stated that there may be war with out hostilities, and hostilities without war. Belligerent operations may be temporarily suspended, and there may be acts of aggression, which may be called hostilities, which may be committed without the authority of a government. Reencounters, for instance, between ships-of-war, or predatory incursions across the boundary of a country. But there can be no hostilities undertaken by a government which do not constitute a state of war. War is a fact, sir, created by an effort made by one nation to injure another. One party may make a war, though it requires two parties to make a peace. The Senator from South Carolina contends that as Congress alone have a right by the constitution to declare ware, therefore there can be no war until it is thus declared. There is here a very obvious error. It is certain that Congress alone has the right to declare war. There is no other authority in the U. States, which, on our part can change the relations of peace with another country into those of war. No authority but Congress can commence an aggressive war. But another country can commence a war against us without the co-operation of Congress. Another country can at its pleasure, terminate the relations of peace with us, and substitute for these the relations of war with their legitimate consequences. War may be commenced with or without a previous declaration. It may be commenced by a manifesto announcing the fact to the world, or by hostile attacks by land or sea. The honorable senator from Virginia [Mr. Pennybacker,] has well stated the modern practice of nations upon this subject. He has referred both to facts and authorities showing that acts of hostility with or without a public declaration constitute a state of war. It was thus the war of 1756 was commenced. It was thus, I believe was commenced the war between England and France during our revolution. The peace of Amiens was terminated by an act of hostility, and not by a public manifest. The capture of the Danish fleet was preceded by no declaration of the intentions of the British government. Our own war of 1812 was declared on the 18th of June. The Manifesto of the prince regent declaring war against us, was not issued till January 10th, 1813. And the continent is an unerring indication of what they apprehended and what they design. We have but one safe course. The political principles which are there practically adopted. This new doctrine of a balance of power on the American and aristocratical governments of the old world. Our condition and progress are a standing reproach to many of the representatives of a great and spirited people, we shall furnish a lesson to the world which will be profitable most important crisis in this history of this country—a crisis which, perhaps, to affect our character and our destiny onward till they reach the frontiers of Louisiana, or till we receive such a formal certificate of the intentions of the army may be unauthorized; and they demand of us, what would be the condition of the two countries if such should aggression would be considered acts of war. Honorable senators have said that this act of invasion by the Mexican government. They have withdrawn their minister from the United States, and broken off all diplomatic relations with us. They have refused to recognize, and have treated with contumely our minister charged with full powers to adjust all matter in dispute, and whom they solemnly promised to receive.—They have collected an army upon our frontier, and have sent to assume its command one of the first military officers in the republic. He summoned General Taylor to retire, or that war would immediately commence. His summons being disregarded, he commenced the war by crossing in force into our territory, by attacking our troops and by surrounding our army. Now, sir, I appeal to every senator on the other side of the chamber, if he does not believe that all this has been done by order of the Mexican government. I presume there is not a man within the sound of my voice who will not say that, in his opinion, the Mexican general has acted under the direct instructions of the Mexican government. And are we now to be told, sir, that we must sit still till we ascertain whether his acts have been approved or disclaimed? No, sir. A hostile army is in our country; our frontier has been penetrated; a foreign banner floats over the soil of the republic; our citizens have been killed, while defending their country; a great blow has been aimed at us; and while we are talking for evidence it may have been struck, and our army been annihilated. And what then? The triumphant Mexicans will march onward till they reach the frontiers of Louisiana, or till we receive such a formal certificate of the intentions of the Mexican government as will unite us in a determination to recognize the existence of the war, and to take the necessary measures to prosecute it with vigor. It has indeed been suggested that acts of hostility to constitute a state of war must be directed by the legitimate authority of their country; and if not constitutional at home, they cannot be operative abroad. This is not the least strange among the strange principles we have heard advanced today. What have we to do with the constitution of Mexico? What have we to do with the powers of her President, or of her Congress? It is not for us to stop in the midst of our deliberations to turn over the pages of the last so called constitution of Mexico, and to seek how the powers of government are divided among its various functionaries, nor to inquire what is the last pronunciamento; or who is the present dictator of that unhappy country. The changes, both of authority and authorities, are so rapid that it is difficult to keep pace with them. Whoever directs the military power of the Mexican government against us is, for our purposes, the representative of the Mexican nation. Whether he has attained that power by usurpation, by false construction, or by an exercise of legitimate authority the responsibility of his country is the same. If a fleet of the United States should, by order of the President, bombard and English town, or commit any other act of aggression, certainly we should be held responsible; and such acts of aggression would be considered acts of war. Honorable senators have said that this act of invasion by the Mexican army may be unauthorized; and they demand of us, what would be the condition of the two countries if such should turn out to be the fact? Why, sir, the answer is equally clear and easy. If the Mexican government should disavow the act of invasion, and make proper satisfaction for the injuries done, peace would be immediately restored. But until this done, we have only to accept the state of war which is offered to us, and act accordingly. I have no doubt but the boundary of Texas goes to the Rio del Norte. But I do not place the justification of our government upon any question of title. Granting that the Mexicans have a claim to that country as well as we, still the nature of the aggression is not changed. We were in the possession of the country. A possession obtained without conflict. And we could not be divested of this possession but by our own consent, or by an act of war. The ultimate claim to the country was a question for diplomatic adjustment. Till that took place the possessive right was in us, and any attempt to dislodge us was a clear act of war. It appear to me, sir, that the present is a most important crisis in this history of this country—a crisis which, perhaps, to affect our character and our destiny for a long series of years. If we meet this act of aggression promptly, vigorously, energetically, as becomes the representatives of a great and spirited people, we shall furnish a lesson to the world which will be profitable remembered hereafter. But if we spend our time in useless discussion—if we adopt timid half-way measures—if we delay action, seeking for further evidence, we shall exhibit counsels and conduct whose effect will impress themselves upon many a chapter of our future history. Our institutions have no admirers among the monarchical and aristocratical governments of the old world. Our condition and progress are a standing reproach to many of the political principles which are there practically adopted. This new doctrine of a balance of power on the American continent is an unerring indication of what they apprehended and what they design. We have but one safe course before us. Let us put forth our whole strength. Let us organize a force which will leave no doubt as to the result. Let us enter the Mexican territory, and conquer a peace at the point of the bayonet. Let us move on till we meet reasonable proposals from the Mexican government; and if these are not met this side of the capital, let us take possession of the city of Montezuma, and dictate our own conditions. And I trust these conditions will be honorable and reasonable. If all this is done soon, it will be well done. But if delayed there will be other parties than Mexico who will soon mingle themselves in this affair. And the consequences may be felt throughout the civilized world. I am not afraid to treat the President with the necessary power to vindicate the country and defend its honor. I believe he will execute his duties patriotically. Before I conclude, I beg leave to tender my thanks to the distinguished senator from Texas, [Mr. Houston,] for the patriotic sentiments he has thus uttered. He has shown us that he is as able to advocate the rights of his country in counsel as to maintain them in arms. His name is connected with one of those imperishable deeds which connect themselves with the fate of nations. He led the forces of his adopted country upon that day which secured their independence and broke the power of Mexico. He had the rare good fortune to overpower a hostile army, and to capture the chief magistrate of a hostile nation.

RW46v23i40p4c6, May 19, 1846: Congress.

Mr. Miller from the Committee on the District of Columbia reported a bill to make the bridges over the Eastern branch of the Potomac free.

Mr. Breeze reported a bill to repeal the proviso to the Naval Appropriation Bill for the present fiscal year which limits the force of the Navy to 7,500 men.

Mr. Johnson, of Md., moved to refer the bill to the Naval Committee.

After some debate, the bill was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. Sevier, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to extend the collection district of New Orleans.

The Senate refused to reconsider the Florida judicial bill.

The bill to settle the claim of New Hampshire against the U.S. was passed, ayes 29, noes 14.

Mr. Morehead gave notice that he should call up the French Spoliation bill on Monday.

The amendment of the House to the bill for the organization of a company of sappers, miners and pontoniers was agreed to.

The motion made by Mr. Archer to reconsider the vote of the Senate disagreeing to the amendment of the House to the Bill for raising a regiment of riflemen, &c., came up in order.

The amendment provides that the officers of the proposed regiment shall be selected from the supernumerary officers of the Army.

Mr. Archer said that when he moved the reconsideration, the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Benton] had promised to convince him that the amendment ought not to be adopted. He would now like to hear from him.

Mr. Benton said there were two objections to the amendment. One was that it was unconstitutional, and the other that it was inexpedient, as it closed the door against the entrance of our citizens into the army.

Mr. Archer said he would reply to the objections of the Senator from Missouri—but he desired that the subject might pass by until the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Crittenden,] was in his seat, as he had a paper which he wished to make use of.

The Senate then took up the bill making some alteration in the pay department of the Army.

The bill provides for the appointment of an additional Assistant Paymaster General and several additional Paymasters, and repeals the act of 1820, limiting their tenure of office to four years.

The bill led to an interesting debate upon the subject of appointments and removals, in which Mr. Calhoun deplotted the evils arising from the constant changes in office, and advocated the regulation of the power of removal from Congress.

Mr. Webster made some remarks in reference to the evil effects of limiting the term of office to four years.

The debate was participated in by Mesars, Mangum, Johnson, of Md., J.M.Clayton, Allen, Morehead, Sevier and The Senate adjourned.

The West Point Academy Bill was taken up, and the yeas and nays refused. The bill was then passed by tellers, 90 to 41.

Mr. Martin of Ky. moved to take up the Mileage Bill, but could not obtain the yeas and nays, and the motion was lost.

ARMY BILL

The House, on motion of Mr. McKay, went into Committee of the Whole upon the Army Bill.

Mr. Thierman was entitled to the floor and commenced by reading to the chair, an extract from an intemperate speech of Mr. Giddings. Mr. G. at once complained that his colleague was misrepresenting him, but T. said he was stating the substance of the speech, and refused to yield.

The speeches of Mr. Tilden and Mr. Lelano were then taken up but both gentlemen were absent. The speech was made up mainly of garbled extracts from those opposing the last war, and brought into the House now for the purpose of prejudicing those who had spoken against the declaration of war by the act of Mexico.

Mr. Sims of Mo. spoke briefly in defense of the war which had just been commenced, and against those who opposed it. He repudiated all distinction between war and hostilities and said that there was no more difference than there was between a black man and a "nigger."

Mr. DAVIS of Ky., said that he recognized the existence of a constitutional war since the passage of the war act. But an illegal war had previously been made in violation of the Constitution by the President. This was done in sending an Army into a disputed territory. He had marched a hostile army into a peaceful country, and this disturbed the peaceful relations of the country.

Mr. D. quoted Humboldt and others, (remarking that he had examined all the maps which he could find, and that all defined the Nueces as the boundary of Texas.) The country between the Nueces and the Rio Grande had never been subjugated, and Texas therefore had acquired no right to this soil. The President had declared war of himself and by himself, and, said Mr. D. I scorn, I utterly scorn the base attempts made in this Hall to bring obloquy upon those who have had the independence to arraign the usurpations of the President.

I hold all who would thus assail others for their defenses of the constitution in utter contempt. In defense of the country, I doubt not those who were assailed would go as far as those who make the assaults. I have but one son in the world, and I would freely offer him up a sacrifice in defense of my country, and with ten-fold more freedom would I offer up my own life.

It ill becomes men to rise up here and impute disloyalty to others. My life upon it that the member from Ohio [Mr. Delano] who was assailed by the member from Illinois, [Mr. Douglass] would meet the enemy with as much firmness, with as much courage, with as prompt and dauntless a spirit, and with as true bravery as the member who had assailed him, or any other member of this House.

It ill became the member from Ohio, in the spirit of a low demagogue, to resort to the appeals of a low vulgar partisan to arraign men for their want of loyalty.

Mr. Hudson of Mass, as one of the 14 members voting against the War Bill, said that he, with those voting with him, had been arraigned as hypocrites, cowards and by other choice epithets, for voting against the Bill. He had his reasons, and they were in the first place that not one moment had been given to the war clause of the Bill, and but twenty minutes to the discussion of the whole question.

But his main reason was that he was called upon to say that war existed, and that it existed by the act of Mexico, which he did not believe. He was called upon to vote for what he religiously believed to be false, and this he could not and would not do.

Mr. James of Ga. Replied to this speech: with some interruptions from Mr. Stewart of Pa. who put to Mr. J. some pertinent questions as to the war in Mexico and the causes of it.
The floor was given to Mr. Sims of S.C., when the Committee took up the Fortification Bill and concurred in the Senate amendments. The report was concurred in by the House, and the Senate amendments agreed to, after which the House adjourned.

A white lady visiting the Comanche—A friend writing from Red River, thus notices the lady of Col. Lewis, who accompanies her husband, one of the U.S. commissioners, to treat with the Comanches.

"Col. Lewis take his lady love with him—he is quite an Amazon—wears a belt and dagger—shoots a rifle and pistol—rides well on horse back, and take notes—rather handsome—medium size—English by birth—married four year—no children. The col. Is very sprightly and gentlemanly in his department, and is from Columbia, Tennessee."

RW46v23i41p1c1, May 22, 1846: A “Democratic” Tariff.

The Enquirer of yesterday expresses its gratification that a leading Whig paper in Georgia has intimated a purpose to sustain the Tariff Bill of the Administration as a substitute for that of 1842. Although we exchange with the Milledgeville Recorder, such an expression of opinion by that paper has escaped our observation. We have, however seen an allusion to the same circumstance in another Georgia paper, from which we suspect the Enquirer obtained its information. It is not of very unfrequent occurrence, however, to find individual members of a party differing with that party upon some particular feature of its general policy. When the Sub-Treasury, for example, was first suggested by Mr. Van Buren as a party measure, it is known that a large number of the leaders and perhaps not less than one-fifth of the rank and file, were bitterly hostile to that scheme. Time, however, and the appliances usually resorted to in such emergencies by our opponents—such as buying up some with office, wheedling others by flattery, administering the wash to not a few, and (and as Gen. Jackson recommended) “kicking out” the incorrigibly obstinate—have wrought wonderful changes; and the party now presents upon this question perhaps more the appearance of a “unit” than upon any other article in its ever-shifting creed—even those who taught us some of the strongest grounds of objection to this measure, now either warmly advocating, or silently acquiescing in, its adoption! The old proverb tells us, too, that “one swallow doesn’t make a summer;” and if the Milledgeville Recorder is prepared to unite with the Administration party in its assaults upon a system the wisdom of which has been so triumphantly vindicated by its beneficent results, and in substituting for it a scheme the like of which we have tried before with the most disastrous consequences, it will find itself almost alone—very few of the Whigs, even in the cotton growing States, concurring with that paper in the extraordinary opinion ascribed to it.

But let us reverse the medal, and see if we cannot find, among the “Democrats” of the North, men occupying high and influential positions, who, while in the very act of decrying the Whig doctrine, upon the Tariff question, are themselves nevertheless its advocates—flying directly in the teeth of the principles laid down in Secretary Walker’s Report, and upon which the Tariff Bill shortly to be acted upon by congress is professedly based. Glancing over the Message of His Excellency Isaac Toucey, the recently elected Governor of Connecticut, and heretofore a distinguished Locofoco Member of Congress, we find an exposition of that gentleman’s views upon this important question. After remarking that taxes must be levied and collected, to meet the necessary expenditures of the Government, he adds:

“By universal consent, these taxes are levied upon foreign imports, and if they are levied, by a strictly revenue tariff, upon foreign articles, which come in competition with those of our own growth and manufacture, then our home interests have an incidental protection or advantage to the extent of twenty-five millions of dollars annually. This protection or advantage is, beyond all doubt, amply sufficient for all the great interests of the country, in any manner dependent upon a tariff of duties. Here is solid ground to rest upon."

This is such sound Whig doctrine, that, if we had found the paragraph without caption or signature, we should have taken it for granted that it had been copied from a Whig essay. The Tariff of 1842 is based upon precisely the principle laid down by Gov. Toucey—while the scheme lately reported by the Committee of Ways and Means rests upon the opposite doctrine. The Whigs insist that the Tariff ought to be so adjusted as to raise no more revenue than is necessary for the economical administration of the Government, [Which the Tariff of 1842 had done.] And Gov. Toucey declares that he is in favor of just such a system –as, indeed, we believe, all men of all parties, with the exception of a very few who are in favor of the abolition of the custom house system altogether, and of raising the revenue of the Federal as well as of the State Governments by direct taxation, are. But the great point of difference between the two parties is this – in adjusting the scale of duties, shall reference be had exclusively to revenue, as the leading Locos assert – or as the Whigs contend, shall an eye be kept both to revenue and protection? The Virginia Locofoco Convention, held in this city in the winter of 1848, emphatically laid down, in its Address, the broad principle, that, in the adjustment of a Revenue Tariff, such only as the Constitution authorized Congress to enact, especial care should be taken, if any discriminations were made between the various articles imported, that they should be made "not for protection, but against it"—an idea expressed perhaps more lucidly by Senator McDuffie, who contends that the lowest duties should be laid upon those articles which come in competition with domestic fabrics, and the highest upon those which we can not ourselves produce or manufacture! But what, on the contrary,
But why single out an individual, however prominent his position, or eminent his talents, for the purpose of establishing the fact that there is a wide diversity of opinion in the Locofoco ranks on this subject—that not one voice, like that of the Southern Recorder, is heard in opposition to the creed of the party, but that a large number dissent most widely from it? Who does not know that at this very moment, with a majority of about SEVENTY in the House of Representatives, there is at least strong doubt whether the Administration party will sustain the Administration Tariff? Is it not apparent that they approach the consideration of the subject with "fear and trembling"—pledged, on the one hand, to the overthrow of the existing system, which they have so vehemently assailed; and yet, thoroughly convinced by its results, on the other, that a wiser and more judicious scheme has never been adopted than the organization of the Government, and justly apprehensive, therefore, if it be subverted or materially modified, that the most mischievous effects will result from the success of their attempts to remodel it. No wonder that they hesitate and falter when vehemently urged by the Executive Organ to redeem their pledge, and warmly expostulated with and censured for their tardiness in its execution. And right glad are not a few of them, we doubt not that a pretext is furnished them, by the large additional expenditures that will be rendered necessary by the Mexican war, to vote against the proposed change of a system upon which the Government must rely for the money necessary to its prosecution. It is true, that even by the suggestion of this pretext, they will fly in the face of one of the leading dogmas upon which the Administration project is based—to wit, that the lower the duties, the greater will be the amount of revenue flowing into the government coffers. But so absurd is the pretence upon its face, and so often has it been falsified by experiment, that no practical Statesman will, in an emergency like the present, hesitate to renounce it. In a period of peace, when a deficiency in one year's revenue may be easily supplied by the legislation of the next, those even who scout the doctrine may have been willing to indulge the accomplished financier at the head of the Treasury Department with a brief trial of his experiment; but now, when War exists, and, even if it be of brief duration, must lead to the expenditure of many millions of dollars beyond the amount requisite for a peace establishment, it is to be presumed that at least a sufficient number of the Administration party in Congress will unite with the Whigs to effect the defeat of a Bill, the tendency of which, as a Revenue measure, is, to say the least of it, so exceedingly doubtful.—At such a time, the public credit cannot be safely subjected to such precarious and hazardous experiments, however authoritatively recommended.—We look, with increased confidence, therefore, to the refusal of Congress to interfere materially with the present Revenue Tariff, as it may be emphatically styled; for although, in such a complex system there are doubtless some defects, it may well be questioned whether any plan could be devised, in which there would be fewer or slighter, or which would, as a whole, operate more beneficially than that which has been so ruthlessly and so unjustly assailed. It is a proud monument, indeed, of the wisdom, as well as of the patriotism, of the Whig Congress of 1842—and we hope to see it survive even the passions of the party which, going into power by a triumphant majority, pledged to its subversion, exhibit towards it a forbearance far more creditable to their sagacity and prudence, than to their fidelity to party engagements.

We submit, therefore, to the Enquirer, whether the isolated case of disagreement with the Whig party, on the part of the Southern Recorder, upon this subject, is not much more than compensated by the concurrence with them in opinion and action of so many of their leading opponents?

RW46v23i41p1c2, May 22, 1846: The Past and the Present.

In Mr. Clay's letter on the annexation of Texas, written during the late Presidential canvass, the following passage occurs:

"Under these circumstances, if the government of the United States were to acquire Texas, it would acquire along with it all the encumbrances which Texas is under, and among them the actual or suspended war between Mexico and Texas. Of that consequence there cannot be a doubt. Annexation and war with Mexico are identical."

This position was warmly denied by the advocates of annexation—although General Houston, one of the Texas Senators, now boldly attempts, in the teeth of the arguments of his old friends, to vindicate the policy of the Executive in advancing our army to the Rio Grande, by alleging that Texas and Mexico being at war with each other when Texas was annexed, the United States necessarily inherited that war, and that we are bound to prosecute it even though no act of hostility had been perpetrated by the government or troops of Mexico!

The New York Evening Post, [a Locofoco paper,] reminds us of another lapse of memory on the part of its political associates. When the question of annexing Texas was debated, it admits that the convenience of such a barrier as the broad and sandy waste between the Rio Nueces and Rio Grande, was much dwelt upon by the friends of the measure. But, as the Post remarks, we have now passed over that barrier already, (claiming as our own the territory beyond the desert, which was spoken of as such an admirable natural boundary,) and are beginning to talk of no other immediate boundary than the great mountain chain, the mother ridge, that forms for the present a bulwark to the table land of Mexico! At what point we are finally to pause, who shall now say?

The New Orleans Reformer proffers our Government and those in authority some excellent counsel, in regard to the approaching Mexican campaign. After referring to the universal delusion which has heretofore prevailed in regard to the bravery and prowess of the Mexicans, it points out the difficulties to be encountered and the obstacles to be overcome, in the prosecution of a war of conquest in the following language:

"The events which have transpired since Gen. Taylor reached the frontier have caused men to reflect on this subject more profoundly and they have hitherto done, and to estimate in a more rational manner the resources of Mexico and the resistance she is able to present in a conflict with a foreign power. If a stable government existed in that country, and its whole strength, moral and physical, could be brought into requisition, it would require, so admirably is its territory adapted to defensive operations, unusual and extensive preparations to insure speedy and satisfactory results.

As she is however—torn and distracted by internal dissensions, and the sport of every ambitious conqueror—there are yet active and available materials enough in her bosom to render the work of subjugation arduous and protracted and to develop no small share of the military fact and powers of the United States. When one looks carefully at all the resources of Mexico—its population of many millions—the salubrity of its climate and the fertility of its soil affording comparatively without labor, subsistence to its people—the bravery and heroism of the old Castilian race of which many remains are yet to be found in Mexico—and the physical conformation of the country, its mountain passes, and its narrow defies, and its hidden retreats—when all these things are maturely considered it will be readily seen although Santa Ana, and Bustamente, and Paredes may by turns “revel in the halls of the Montezuma,” and American general—whoever he may be, and however well supported by a powerful army—attains that luxury only through blood and toil, and perils besetting him on every side.

Mexico too, it must be recollected, is to us an unknown country. Americans who have, here and there, visited it, saw nothing but what the eye took in as they passed over a few of the principal highways and through the large towns. The ambush by the road-side, the natural fortifications within a few yards of them made by rocks and precipices, were as a dead letter to them. And where on of our countrymen has remained for years the entire dissimilarity of language opinions and customs, and the great insecurity of traveling, have rendered it impracticable for him to obtain any extended and accurate knowledge of some of the most interesting portions even of Mexico. We know in fact nothing of the country. Probably it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find an American who could guide an army entering at Matamoras by the safest the route opposing the fewest obstacles to an invading force, and the best supplied with water. Relying upon a Mexican guide, whose treachery and duplicity are proverbial, what risks would be encountered?—what perils endured?—what sacrifices perhaps made?

The government of the United States—if we are in fact to have a war with Mexico—must not overlook all nor any of these considerations. No American general must be permitted to penetrate the Mexican territory unless he is well provided and properly secured in every respect. And the point from whence he shall leave American soil and the direction he is to go, must be determined only after careful, and prolonged, and most mature consideration. The United States must commit no blunder in this particular, or defeat, disaster and disgrace await our arms.”

The New York Herald, a warm advocate both of the Administration Tariff and the Sub-Treasury, after taking a brief view of the existing condition of the country, concludes that there is now no prospect of any change in the one, nor of the passage f the other. All these matters, it says, must be postponed for the present. Should this be the case, the Mexican War will not be an unmixed evil.

Complaints have been very generally made of the indifference manifested in Texas upon the receipt of the stirring news from the Rio Grande. The following explanation will set the matter in a better—because more just, light. We give it an insertion with pleasure:
very unsatisfactory; the greatest apathy appears to prevail." This is easy of explanation. The people of Texas for several years past have been very much harassed by reported invasions of the Mexicans. The end has generally shown these statements to be false. And the result has very naturally been to create a feeling of distrust in regard to all Mexican news. I was in Houston when the information that General Taylor was surrounded reached there. It was not official, and was not altogether credited; and those who did credit the account also said and though that General Taylor could whip them very easily. You must recollect that in Texas the opinion is, that 3000 American troops ought certainly to whip 10,000 Mexicans, and 15,000 if necessary, and this belief is based upon the fact of its having been done in that proportion over and over again.

But the principal reason for the supposed apathy was the fact, that no orders had come from the Government, and no means were at hand to furnish the necessary supply until the orders were given. The corporation and merchants of Houston were willing to advance the necessary means, but it was thought best to await the call of the Executives. Companies were forming in various parts of Texas, awaiting the action of the Executive; an you may rest assured when the call is made, Texas soldiers will be at their posts.”

We are wholly unable to keep pace with the popular movements, in various section of the Union, to meet the anticipated requisition of the government for troops. They show very clearly that, whenever the services of its citizens are requisite to defend the country or to maintain its rights or honor, the emergency will be met in a spirit corresponding with the magnitude of the occasion.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 13th inst. state that volunteers are pouring in from all quarters, and that the idea of resorting to a draft has been abandoned. On the 12th, no less than 437 volunteers reached that city from the interior, among whom was a fine company of 107 men from Plaquemine and Iberville, under Gen. G. S. Rousseau as captain, and another of 90 men from East Baton Rouge, under the command of the Rev. Richard A. Stewart as captain. When the Parsons take the field, the Mexicans may look out!—The Picayune adds that the full compliment of four regiments required from Louisiana under the requisition of Gen. Taylor will soon be filled up, and, it doubts not, double that number.

The Mobile Advertiser of the 14th announces the arrival in that city of a fine looking company, numbering about 100, under the command of Captain Elmore, from Montgomery, Alabama, on their way to the scene of action.

The Pennsylvanian says: "We understand, from good authority, that one of the chiefs of the Creek nation, now in Washington, has offered to the President the services of 2000 picked warriors, should they be required in the conflict of Mexico. However gratifying the offer, it is to be hoped the President will decline it. We should regret to see "the hell-hounds of savage warfare" in the service of our government, unless indeed their aid should be justified by the employment of a similar force by the enemy.

The mail brought over from Brasos Santiago by the Florida was not distributed till yesterday morning, when we received a whole budget of letters, the contents of which have generally been anticipated.

Gen. Ampudia is endeavoring to redeem his character for humanity by the treatment of his prisoners.

Had we room we should be glad to give a series of letters which have reached us from the officers at Fort Taylor,—They all breathe the right spirit. The following, however, we will not suppress, as it shows the feeling which exists in the camp, and is their very latest date received thence:

FORT TAYLOR, CAMP OPPOSITE MATAMORAS,
May 4th, 1946—half-past 2 in the morning.

Dear Friends—The ball opened yesterday morning from the Mexican line. They fired the first shots at reveille, and the way 4, 6, 9 and 12 (I think) pound shout flew about these part was a win, and their throwing shells kept the atmosphere in continued confusion with their “whiz! Whiz! Bang!” all the time. But notwithstanding the “Star-Spangled Banner” still waves over the “land of the free and home of the brave.” Their firing did not cease until 12 last night. I suppose tomorrow will be a duplicate of today.

It would have warmed the wax in your ears to have heard our 18-pounders “give out the cry.” One shot struck in the embrasure of the enemy’s works, and knocked canon carriage, embrasure and men “into fits.” We have no mortars, had we received those General Taylor requested from Washington when he first came to Corpus Christi, we should have left no more bricks in that town than there are “in my hat.” But, sirs, this is only the introductory act;
At a meeting of the Richmond Fayette Artillery Company, held at Military Hall on the 19th of May, 1846—

On the motion of Lieut. Ritchie, it was unanimously resolved, 1. That in the present condition of our relations with Mexico, it is proper that every citizen should hold himself in readiness to meet whatever issue may arise.

2. That this Company is still actuated by the same impulse of duty which occasioned the tender of its services to the President of the United States in the summer of last year, and is ready now, as it ever has been, to obey any call which may be made upon it in consequence thereof.

3. That still further to promote the efficiency of the volunteers who may respond in Virginia to the call of the country, this company views with high gratification the proposition for the formation of a Virginia Legion.

4. That this Company invites the officers of, or delegates from, other companies which may be willing to unite in the formation of a Virginia Legion, to meet it at its anniversary on the 29th of the present month, to devise measures successfully to carry out this design.

5. That the Captain of this Company be requested to apply to the Governor of Virginia for tents and camp equipage for this company, with a view to the formation of an encampment during the summer, or for the use of the company in case it is sooner called into service.

THOMAS H. ELLIS, Captain

E. Raux, Secretary

May 4, 1846 – 6 o'clock in the Morning.

"Here we go again!" as the boy said when the bull chased him. As I expected, at daylight they led off again, and we are going it "hip and tuck," like a grog at a burnt boot. Up to the present speaking the enemy have thrown between 1200 and 1300 shot, solid and hollow, while we have fired 357. On our side, one sergeant—of Company A, 7th regiment—has been killed, and one man slightly wounded in the arm. This is all the damage to us; the extent of damage to the enemy is not known, but must be considerable. It is almost incredible to suppose we should receive so little injury from so many shots.

If I live, I may tell you some more; if I die, you can't expect it. Yours,

By an arrival at New York on Monday evening, direct from Havana, the Philadelphia American has (by Telegraph) Vera Cruz dates to the 1st inst.

Paredes issued a proclamation on 23d April, announcing the position of the United States Army on the Rio Grande, in which he expresses his determination to defend his country against attack. War, he asserts, had commenced, but he would not declare war against the United States, as the American Congress, and not the President, had the power to adjust the question in dispute.

Santa Ana was still remaining quiet at Havana, engaged in his characteristic occupations.

There is nothing said of further revolutionary movements in Mexico.
Among the petitions presented were some by Mr. Crittenden, praying that Wheeling and Pittsburg may be made ports of entry.

Mr. Benton, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported "An act supplementary to the Act to provide for the prosecution of the existing War between the Republic of Mexico and the U.S. and for other purposes."

Mr. Lewis called up the Bill making appropriations for the support of the Post Office Department for the year 1847.

Mr. Speight said he should not oppose the bill, but have proceeded to denounce the cheap postage systems as a scheme to keep up high taxes—a handmaid of the Tariff—a burden upon one section of the country for the benefit of another. He complained that it had broken up the stage lines in his section of the country, and destroyed the facilities of traveling. He enquired whether the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads intended to report a bill to repeal or alter the existing law.

Mr. Niles in reply, observed that the Committee had not thought it their duty to recommend any change. He was surprised at the denunciation of what he regarded as one of the most beneficial pieces of legislation ever contaminated. As to the stage lines, they had hitherto been a burden of a million a year on the Department, and had nothing to do with the conveyance of the mails.

Mr. Niles said the Post Master of New York had informed him that the increase of letter in his Office were astonishing—and he [Mr. N.] was satisfied that after the next lettings the Department would cease to be a burden upon the Treasury.

Mr. Calhoun inquired what was the deficit in the revenue this year, compared with the last.

Mr. Niles replied that he believed it was about 45 percent on the first six months.

Some Conversation ensued upon the mode of compensating Postmasters, and the bill was then passed over until tomorrow.

The Committee on Foreign Relations mad a report upon the subject of the claim of the owners of the brig Gen. Armstrong against the Government of Portugal, which was ordered to be printed.

The French Spoliation bill, being the special order of the day, was then taken up.

Mr. Morehead made a powerful speech in behalf of the claimants, and left off without closing his argument. The Senate adjourned.

It is stated in some of the letters from Washington, that the appointment of this distinguished officer to the command in chief of the army on the Mexican frontier was vehemently opposed by many of the Locofoco members of Congress—and that, at one time, it was contemplated to deny it to him, and to confer the command upon him Jessup or Gen. Roger Jones, from which nothing induced the Administration to swerve but he act that Gen. Gaines, next in rank to Gen. Scott, stood in the way of the selection of either of those gentlemen, and would be justly offended if his claims were set aside for those of a junior officer—What truth there is in these reports we are not prepared to say; but if they be well founded, they are discreditable to all concerned, and non the less so because of the motive to which it is ascribed—an apprehension that Gen. Scott, who has been spoken of as a candidate for the next Presidency, may add to his already strong claims that the gratitude of his country, by decking his brow with new laurels in the approaching campaign. We hope there is no truth in the statement but there are certainly some circumstances strongly corroborative of it.

It has been more than once intimated that there were probably other powers "behind the throne" than the Mexican government itself, investigating the War between that country and the United States.

Among the many surmises of a similar nature, we find the following in a late letter of the Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune. He says:
"After much thought I cannot dispossess myself of the belief that England is concerned in this movement of Mexico. I am in possession of evidence that the last reinforcements of the Mexican Army were not ordered to be concentrated at Matamoras until about the middle of April, after the receipt of intelligence from Great Britain, which had been so anxiously looked for, and that not till then were the operations undertaken with spirit and vigor. I should be glad to be deceived on this point, but I fear I shall not be again. The remarkable alliance between France and England must have ulterior objects in view; and may not the latter, to black up the progress of the United States and to raise a counter Government on our frontier, have agreed to establish a Monarch in Mexico in the person of the Duke De Montpensier, the young son of Louis Philippe? This suggestion was presented to me, from an important source, three or four months ago, and seemed to attract no little attention when I laid it before the public. In the present juncture the probability is more plausible."

[Adapted for Natural Language Processing] American camp, to confer with Gen. Taylor relative to the safety of H.B.M. subjects in Matamoras, in case of hostilities. Gen. Ampudia replied that he did not know whether the American gun could play upon their houses, but he had no power to authorize an interview like that requested.

The Indicator, of 6th April, gives Gen. Arista’s letter to the War Department, returning thanks for being appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army in the North; protesting his fidelity to his country, and reporting himself on the march, with all dispatch, to assume the command. Most ridiculous fables are circulated relative to desertions from the American army. Gen. Mejia reports twenty-six U.S. deserters in his ranks. Gen. Taylor, it is said, employs one half his men to guard to other half, to prevent them joining the holy standard of the Mexican church and state.—
All fears of a revolution had entirely disappeared, (if we can believe the Mexican papers,) and the appearance of the American army had I fused new energies into the government, and given it new friends. The fact is, we believe, a late law against newspapers, has sealed the press to popular feeling. We shall hear no more of revolutions until they actually burst forth.

Letters from Mazatlan, San Bias, &c., betray the greatest consternation on the west coast, in consequence of the number of U.S. vessels of ware there. Reports were constantly arriving in the city of Mexico that Monterey, or Mazatlan, or some other port on the Pacific, had been taken or blockaded by our forces, but they were generally contradicted the next day.

The British ship Collingwood, 80 guns, Admiral Seymour, was at anchor off San Bias, 7th April. Emigrants from the U.S. were still pouring into California, to the great consideration of Gen. Paredes, who considers them an army in disguise. He gives up California as lost. Apprehensions are entertained that the Mormons, who were said to be crossing the mountains, would overrun the whole of Mexico and subdue it. Their reputation has preceded them.

We publish this morning the Proclamation of President Paredes of Mexico, received at New York via Havana, issued prior to but evidently in anticipation of the recent events on the Rio Grande. It will be seen that he expresses great aversion to War, and disclaims for himself the power to involve his country in hostilities. He expresses his determination, however, to defend the soil of the country, which he alleges had been invaded by the American forces, who, by that act, had begun a war upon Mexico! So that, while our President and Congress affirm that "war exists by the act of Mexico," the Mexican President declares that we struck the first blow. The parties to a conflict are generally incompetent judges of the degree of blame which should attach to them respectively, the important question is, how will the civilized world, to the opinions of which nations are amenable, decide the questions?

In common with our whole community, we have been anxiously awaiting the arrival of further intelligence from our gallant little Army on the Rio del Norte. For two or three mornings past, we have visited the Petersburg Depot, hoping to hear of glorious achievements by our army of occupation—and, indeed, earnestly desiring that the first news which is to reach us may be of such a nature as to put at rest the fears of a continue conflict with the Mexican government. By the known skill and determined purpose of General Taylor, and his companions in arms, together with the efficient services of a large number of Volunteer gone to the scene of action, we expect that the vaunting Mexicans will find their hands rather fuller than they dreamed of – when this war was first waged. And, without stopping here to inquire into the cause of the conflict between the two nations, (for that will be a subject of investigation hereafter,) we sincerely trust our adversaries may get such a thrashing at the hands of Gen. Taylor’s Army, as may serve them for the balance of their days, and cause the whole Mexican race to be at peace with the world at large for the future. The state of suspense our whole country has been in, since the last advices from our army, is indeed intense; and, whatever may be the nature of the news when it does come, we shall hasten to lay it before our readers in an Extra.

Although the New Orleans papers have said but little on the subject of our present army on the Rio Grande, within the last few days, yet we are pleased to learn through some of our exchanges from that city, that a large number of Volunteers from the Parishes of Louisiana are continuing to pour into New Orleans en route to the battle field, and to the rescue of the American forces. Like gallant and brave spirits in defense of their country, every Volunteer in the Union seems to pant for the contest, that it may be ended, as doubtless it must and that speedily, to the honor of the American nation. For the easy consummation of that which is so devoutly to be wished, the United States should not hesitate to make ample—nay, even more than abundant provision—and it is to b hoped that "money and men" may be at once called into requisition sufficient to show the enemies of our country that we are capable of doing things as they should be done.
Major CHASE, of the engineer corps has furnished the Bulletin with a communication containing important intelligence respecting the number of regular troops at the disposal of Gen. Taylor. According to the estimate of the major, and he is undoubtedly well informed, Gen. T. must have had in his command when he left Corpus Christi, from 26 to 2800 men. If Gen. TAYLOR brought with him to Point Isabel from his encampment opposite Matamoras 2000 men, and left 6 or 700 under Maj. BROWN, to defend the entrenchments on the Rio Grande, his force is, of course, nearly three thousand.

We did understand about the time Gen. Taylor took up his line of march for Corpus Christi—and from what we consider the highest authority—that the whole United States force then in Texas did not exceed 2500 effective men, and of this number that not less than 500 were left at Austin and San Antonio.

We are happy, however, to hear that Gen. Taylor is not as weak as we had been led to suppose from our previous intelligence.—(New Orleans Daily Reformer)

A bill providing an appreciation for the building of 13 vessels of war—12 of them to be steam vessels and one an iron sailing frigate—was reported this morning in the House from the Committee on Naval Affairs, by Mr. King of Ga. The steamers, it is supposed, will average, completed, an expense of $400,000 each—some less and some more. The Bill proposes that the contractors shall warrant a speed of 15 miles the hour and fuel for 15 days when the full pressure of steam is on and for 30 days when it is not; that the propellers or paddle-wheels shall be out of the reach of shot, and in other ways more secure. Thus warranted the model of the vessel is left to whoever may become the contractor.

The report accompanying the Bill I have read casually. It is drawn by the author of the bill and embodies a great deal of practical information. It is stated that the success of iron steamers for economy, durability, lightness and quickness is proved by experience beyond all peradventure. It is designed that the iron work for these steamers may be made at any point on the Atlantic or on the Lakes and rivers, and that they shall be so constructed that they be detached ready to be carried or to be launched any where.

The news from Mexico is regarded here as equivalent to an open declaration of war. The Proclamation of Parades was received from Vera Cruz last night, at once translated, and laid before the President.

Mr. Evans reported a Bill from the Finance Committee for the support of the Military Academy with amendments. Mr. Turney offered a Resolution of inquiry proposing the limiting of military appointments to the age of 60 years. The Resolution was adopted.

Mr. Sturgeon presented the proceedings of a public meeting held at Easton, Pa. in reference to the existing war with Mexico. Mr. S. prefaced the introduction of the proceedings with some remarks in reference to the bravery of the People.

Mr. Darragh of Pa. has presented an offer made by the Pittsburgh Military to the President of the United States volunteering their services for the campaign in Mexico.

Mr. Woodbridge presented the proceedings of the Legislature of Michigan against the system of leasing the Mineral lands upon Lake superior.

Mesers, Webster, Woodbridge, Breese, Sevier and Cass, debated the question of selling all the mineral lands belonging to the United States. The Resolutions were then laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Dix presented the Resolutions of the N.Y. Legislature upon the Pilot System.

Mr. Ashley, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a Bill to revive the laws heretofore enacted for the relief of insolvent debtors to the Government.

FRENCH SPOLIATION

The Special order was called at one o’clock, and a long and able argument concluded upon the French Spoliations by Mr. Morehead of Ky. In continuation of his argument commenced yesterday.

Mr. Colquitt of Ga. replied, and spoke in opposition to the payment of the claims, not regarding the Government as bound for their payment.

The Senate went into Executive session and soon after adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The special order for this day was Territorial business, which was postponed on motion of Mr. Dodge, until the first three business days in June.

SOLDIERS PAY

Mr. Stewart of Pa. introduced a resolution, on leave, to pay the soldiers volunteering in the service and serving during the war, $10 per month, and at the end of the war to receive 160 acres of land, or in case the soldier dies in the service, that his heirs receive the land.

Objections were made to the resolution, which was in the form of instructing the Military Committee to bring in a bill to that effect.

Mr. Stewart moved to suspend the Rules, and called for the yeas and nays, [two thirds being necessary]. The vote was yeas 70, nays 75.

The Rules not suspended, and the friends of the administration were found voting in the negative. Though earnest for war, they are not ready to pay for services rendered.

NOTE.

Attend a meeting of your Company at the Exchange Hotel on Tuesday next, the 26th inst. At 8 o’clock P.M. By order of the Captain,

F. MARX, Orderly.

NOTE.

It is proper that the citizens generally, as well as the members of the Troop should be apprized that the above meeting is called with a view of proceeding forthwith, (if a sufficient number is added to the roll by the day appointed.) to organize the Company thoroughly and place it in a condition for active and efficient service—or, failing in this, to disband the corps at once, in order that its members may enroll themselves for duty in some other arm of the service.

[BWP]

In the present attitude of Mexico and the United States, there is very little necessity for discussing the question whether the Nueces or the Rio Grande constitutes the Western boundary of the State of Texas; for whatever might have been the final decision upon that point it had it been left to peaceable negotiation, there can be no doubt that, under existing circumstances, the geographical limits of that State will be dictated by the U. States as a sine qua non of the termination of hostilities. It is with no reference, therefore, to the ultimate rights of the two countries, that we have heretofore adverted to it, or that we may hereafter do so; but for the purpose of showing that each of them should have forborne the armed occupations of the disputed territory until the question of boundary had been definitively settled. We should have been willing to leave to a future period, therefore, more propitious to a dispassionate hearing and a just judgment than the present, the examination of a question, the decision of which must affect in a great degree the opinion of the world, as to the degree of responsibility which attaches to our own Government for the interruption of pacific relations. But the friends of the Administration, apparently as solicitous for its vindication as for the defense of the country, will not have it so; and it is therefore proper, in our opinion, to show that their unqualified assertion of the absolute right of Texas to the territory lying between the Neuces and the Rio Grande, if not entirely unfounded, is at least repelled by as plausible and as strong conflicting pretensions on the part of Mexico. If this be the fact—and it is merely as a question of fact that we propose briefly to examine it—who can doubt that its armed occupation by Mexico would have been regarded as an act of war by the United States? And if so, how can it be assumed that the United States in thus occupying it, is guiltless of aggression? It is not he who strikes the first blow that begins a war—but he who, by aggressive acts upon the rights or honor of his neighbor, renders that blow necessary. Consequently while we concede that if the Rio Grande had beenascertained and acknowledged to be the true Western boundary of Texas, the United States could not have been properly censured for planting their national standard upon its banks, we hold, on the other hand, that, so long as that fact had neither been ascertained nor acknowledged, it was, to say the least of it, an act well calculated to arouse the national pride even of the most imbecile and degraded race—to arouse within their bosoms feelings of resentment, and to impel them to acts of hostility. From the Neuces to the Rio Grande the troops of both countries should have been carefully excluded, leaving its occupants as annexation found them, until the boundary question had been definitively settled by negotiation, or, if that means should within a reasonable time be found unavailing, by an open declaration of war.

The question then arises, is the title to the soil involved in so much doubt as to render its armed occupation by either party a just ground of complaint by the other?

We admit, at the outset, that the claim of Texas, and, through her, of the United States, is sustained by plausible arguments—sufficiently so to have justified us in regarding the appearance of a Mexican army east of the Rio Grande as an aggressive act. Let us now see, whether the claim of Mexico is not likewise so plausibly sustained as to justify her in regarding the appearance of an American army at Point Isabel and opposite the town of Matamoras, as equally aggressive in its character. We notice, in our last paper, and extract of a letter from an officer in the army, in which, speaking doubtless the popular impression, (in such cases generally correct,) he stated that the American army was encamped—where? Within the limits of the State of Texas? No: but on the soil of the "Mexican State of Tamaulips." If this were an isolated expression of opinion, it might not be entitled to very great weight. But it is the general language of those who write from the camp. The intelligent correspondent of the New York Spirit of the Times, for example, says: "Our situation here is an extraordinary one. Right in the enemy's country, occupying their corn and cotton fields, the people of the soil leaving their homes, and we, with a small handful of men, are marching with colors flying and drums beating, right under the guns of one of their principal cities, displaying the Star - Spangled Banner as if in defiance under their very nose." Can there be a more vivid picture than this of the invasion of a foreign territory—the "people of the soil" flying from their fields before an army which they regarded not as the protectors of the State to which they owe allegiance, but as its enemies, coming hostile array to expel them from their homes? Would this state of things have existed, if Texas, in addition to the act of claiming the territory in dispute, had ever been able to make that claim good?

But we have still another letter from the camp before us, addressed to the Editor of the Albany Atlas, in which we find the following Decisive statement:

"West of the Neuces the people are all Spaniards. The country is uninhabitable excepting the valley of the Rio Grande, and that contains a pretty dense population, and in no part of the country are the people more loyal to the Mexican Government.

The soil on the river is of great fertility, and, though imperfectly cultivated, produces considerable corn, cotton and sugar. On the river are several towns, some on one side, some on the other. Matamoras 9,000 inhabitants, Remosio 1500, Comongo 3000, Mier 5000, Guerrero 3500, Loredo 1500, Presidius 5,000, San Fernando 15,000; and, when you get higher up towards Santa Fe, there is another populated country. These people are all Spaniards, and actuated by a universal feeling of hostility towards the United States, and since our arrival nearly all of them have left this side of the rive and gone over, leaving their houses and much valuable property, notwithstanding every assurance from General Taylor that all their rights and property would be respected by our Government. They quarrel among themselves, but against a foreign foe they are united."

If, as has been said, this disputed territory has been represented in the Texas Congress, and now constitutes a portion of one of the Congressional districts represented at Washington, we should like to know how many voters there were, and where the polls were held! In what light the resident population of the country regarded our army, is shown by the universal flight on its approach. Gen. Taylor himself, in one of his dispatches, indeed, graphically depicts the consternation as well as the resentment excited by his appearance. Writing from Matamoras on the 23rd of March, he says:

"While on my way hither, our column was approached by a party on its right flank, bearing a white flag. It proved to be a civil deputation from Matamoras, desiring an interview with me. I informed them that I would halt at the first suitable place on the road, and afford them the desired interview with me, It was, however, found necessary, from the want of water, to continue the route to this place. The deputation halted while yet some miles from Point Isabel, declining to come further, and sent me a formal protest of the Prefect of the northern district of Tamaulipas against our occupation of the country, which I enclose herewith. At this moment it was discovered that the buildings at Point Isabel were in Flames. I then informed the bearer of the protest that I would answer it when opposite to Matamoras, and dismissed the deputation."

In what other part of Texas, we ask, would the American army and the American Flag have met with such a reception? All will concede that it could only have been upon Mexican soil and from a Mexican population that an American commander would have been thus greeted.
We have thus examined the question of title as one of fact, to be determined, not be searching archives and records, but by ascertaining in whose possession the country was when our army crossed the Neuces and marched the Rio Grande, in conformity to Executive Orders. Can any man deny that it was in possession of Mexican citizens peaceably pursuing their ordinary avocation? Have we been yet pointed to a single spot over which the Texas flag floated or a Texan citizen resided? Never. What, then, becomes of the assumption that Mexico began the war, because finding our troops upon the banks of the Rio Grande, which she claims as a part of her soil, she attacked them? Had no those troops first expelled "the people of the soil," whom they found in peaceful occupation of it on their arrival?

It is true, that the Texan Congress did, in 1836, pass an act extending the jurisdiction of its laws to the mouth of the Rio Grande. But surely it cannot be gravely argued that an act of the Texan Congress, which never was and never could be enforced, is to settle a question of disputed boundary with and adjoining State! If so, what becomes of our title to Oregon? The British Parliament is as omnipotent as a Texan Congress, and in 1820 that body passed an act declaring that all Oregon was an English possession, and attached it to Canada! Will those that contend that the Rio Grande is the western boundary of Texas because the Texan Congress so enacted, admit that the whole of Oregon belongs to Great Britain, because the British Parliament affirmed the fact to be so? But as Garrett Davis, of Ky. From whose able speech we derive this fact, and upon which we may hereafter draw more largely, says:

"Texas herself has admitted, in effect, that her law had no such consequences, and it would be wholly immaterial whether she had or had not made such admission. In 1839 Canales, a Mexican Chief, attempted with the aid and countenance of Texas, to establish the Republic of Rio Grande, constituted of the States Tamaulipas, Coabuila, and Durango. Its independence was declared, and Canales elected President. He thereupon marched his army to Loredo, a small town of Tamaulipas, on the east bank of the Rio Grande, and held possession of it with his army for more than six months. In April 1840, he was attacked and defeated by General Arista, who commanded a strong body of Central Mexican troops, and Canales, with some of his followers, retreated into Texas. In this struggle the Texan fleet and land forces co-operated with Canales, and the common object of that Government and him was the establishment of this independence of the Republic of Rio Grande, composed of the States of Tamaulipas, Coabuila, and Durango, the army of Canales occupying a portion of Tamaulipas between Texas and the Rio Grande. In the meantime, he and the Government of Texas had entered into a secret agreement, of which the first three articles are as follows:

1st. The president of the Republic of Rio Grande (General Canales) pledges himself to declare the independence of the Republic at Rio Grande, and to declare and establish the State and Federal Constitution 1824 so soon as he shall have established his headquarters within the limits of the territory claimed by the said Republic.

2nd. That the Republic of Rio Grande shall, immediately after the said declaration of independence, recognize the independence of Texas.

3rd. The Republic of Texas pledges herself to aid the Federalists of Rio Grande, in their struggle for independence, directly her independence is recognized by the Republic of Rio Grande.

"Nearly three years after the act of the Texas Congress defining her western boundary to be the Rio Grande, she gravely and formally abandons it by acknowledging that Tamaulipas and Coahula constituted a part of another Republic; and, instead of claiming any part of them to be her territory, pledges herself, and actually by her army and navy aids in the attempt, to maintain the independence of that other country, of which a section that she had before declared to be within her limits was an integral part; and this is the identical territory into which General Taylor has marched his army in the execution of the orders of President Polk. That law of Texas had not at any time the least affect over any country of which Mexico was in the possession and continued to hold or to any over which Texas did not establish her jurisdiction and laws; and, after her arrangement with Canales, there is not even a pretext for the claim that it annexed to her any territory thus situated. The only title which Texas has to territory is that of conquest. All that she had subdued by the sword, of which she held the possession, and over which she exercised jurisdiction at the time of her annexation, and nothing more, was rightfully a part of Texas."

We have occupied as much space as we are able to devote to this subject today, intending to resume it at our leisure. The examination we propose to make, is necessary to a right understanding of the origin of the war in which we find ourselves involved—and which we hope, being in, we shall push to a vigorous and triumphant conclusion. But, while Mexico had doubtless given us just cause of offence, wholly apart from the Texas question, it does not the less become the tax-payers and those who are to fight the battles of the country, to inquire into the prominent causes of the existing war, and to ascertain whether it might not have been avoided by a judicious exercise of the powers confided to the President, without any sacrifice of the national rights, or any stain upon the national honor—nay, whether it has not resulted from an usurpation of power on the part of the President. If this be so, then will the people condemn the authors of this unnecessary war, however zealously and ardently they may co-operate in its prosecution while it lasts.

the brevet rank of Major. He has been engaged in several battles with the Indians; and for his service in the various campaigns against that subtle and dangerous foe, he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General. Gen. T. is about 60 years of age, and is regarded as one of the most skilful officers as well as one of the most dating men in the service—uniting great prudence with reckless courage. He is a Kentuckian by birth.

One of the most ridiculous rumors we have in the paper is to the effect that the two Mexican steam vessels of war, (about the whole of its navy,) which recently sailed from Vera Cruz, intend to blockade New York! How long, pray, could they enforce it?

A Charleston letter states that Lieut. Deas, who recently swam across the Rio Grande and was captured by a Mexican, was induced to make the plunge in consequence of becoming enamored of a Mexican beauty on the other side, who gave him sundry signs and tokens of affection. He is christened the Modern Lander.

The widow of Col. Cross, the first victim of Mexican barbarity, died in Washington city on the 14th inst.—She had been for some time in bad health, and the shock of her husband’s fate is supposed to have hurried her to a premature grave.

Mr. Douglass of Illinois gave a fair hit to John Q. Adams a few days ago. "The gentleman from Massachusetts [he said] on the question on Oregon was for taking possession 54 40 first, and negotiating afterwards. I hope the gentleman will not blame Mr. Polk for taking possession of the Rio del Norte first, and negotiating afterwards."

Gen. Wool passes through New York on Saturday last, on his way to Washington, in pursuance of orders. He is to be transferred to the South.

A great War meeting, under the call of the Mayor, was to be held in New York last night. Great preparations were making in advance, and the most eminent speakers of both political parties were expected to address the assembled multitude.

We copy the following enigmatical paragraph from the New Orleans Tropic of the 12th inst. We have no clue to its meaning:
Pensacola Excitement—The rumors from Pensacola, rife in our city last evening, we believe to be without foundation. The letters bringing the news here, appear on their face to contain but unfounded rumors. We think the publication of them calculated to do much injury, create unnecessary excitement, and do no good whatever."

RW46v23i41p4c3, May 22, 1846: Later Advices.

The intelligence by yesterday’s Southern mail lease us to believe that the accounts of the preceding day were somewhat exaggerated, especially in relation to the number of Mexicans killed, and the extent of the damage sustained by the town of Matamoras. Apprehensions will seem to be felt for the fate of Gen. Taylor by the New Orleans papers, though they express strong confidence of his ability to keep the enemy in check until he could be reinforced. The Picayune of the 12th says: “If Gen. Taylor succeeded upon his return march in reaching the camp upon the Rio Grande without serious loss, the communication between Isabel and Matamoras is again open. But we cannot suppress a deep solicitude about the events of the 7th inst. If the Mexicans permitted the bulk of the army to go down to Point Isabel without molestation from policy, of course they will make the greater effort to prevent Gen. Taylor’s return to the camp. When the New York left, a battle was in progress, the result of which we await with confidence and concern.”

The New Orleans papers are filled with evidences of public enthusiasts, which seem rather to increase than to diminish. In addition to the two regiments of volunteers, the second of which was to sail on the 12th, the first having embarked the services of the Louisiana Legion, constituting in itself a brigade, have been accepted, and they are about to proceed to the field under the command of Brig. Gen. Augustin—other brigade being under the command of Brig. Gen. Smith. Maj. Gen. Lewis has applied to the Governor of Louisiana for the command of the whole division, and will doubtless receive the appointment. Many other separate corps of volunteers are in process of organization—among them a company of Germans, which has taken the name of The Black Hussars, after a celebrated corps commanded by the Duke of Brunswick, who was killed in the Belgian campaign in 1815. Troops from the interior were also pouring in. We have no space, indeed, to chronicle all the movements with which the papers in every section of the Union, but especially in the South, are filled.

Gen. Gaines has made the following requisitions: From Kentucky 2800 men; from Tennessee 2800; from Mississippi 1400; from Missouri 1400; from Alabama 1400—in all 9800. To these are to be added 2500 already furnished by Louisiana, 1000 mounted gunmen now organizing in the same State, and 2800 men called for from Texas, which will make Gen. Taylor’s force, when all assembled, (added to the U.S. trips) 19,000 strong.

Many of the merchants of New Orleans, it is said, have permitted their clerks to volunteer, without apprehension of losing their situation. One of the largest houses not only continue such of them as had volunteered in their situations, but give them half salaries during their absence.—Such liberality is worthy of all praise.

Among the privates in the Orleans Guards, about to start for the seat of war, is Gen. Wm. Debuys, the late Whig candidate for Governor of Louisiana.

Safety of Capt. Thornton and Lieut. Kane! Attack upon Gen. Taylor’s Camp—Narrative of the Action, &c.,

The steam schooner Florida, Capt. Clint, arrived at this post last evening from Brtrasos Santiago, whence she sailed on the 5th inst. Although her dates are not so late by one day as the new York’s, they contain fuller and more authentic details of events on the Rio Grande, and put quite a new aspect on affairs.

The reader will be delighted to hear that neither Capt. Thornton nor Lieut. Kane was killed in this affair of the surprise of Capt. Thornton’s Dragoons. We give below a minute account of the surprise and action, of the accuracy of which we have no doubt. It will be read with universal interest.

The Florida brought over official dispatches from Gen. Taylor for the Government. Col. Whistler came passenger on the Florida. A gentleman, who also cam passenger on the schooner, has furnished us with the following narrative of Gen. Taylor’s march from his camp to Point Isabel and of the subsequent attack upon the camp. It differs from the accounts received by the New York, via Galveston,[of which we have given the details commencing on the first page]. The reader may repose entire confidence in the following, as it may be considered almost official:

[ RW46v23i41p4c4, May 22, 1846: Attack Upon Gen. Taylor’s Camp. ]
On the 1st of May the main body of the Army of Occupation marched from the camp on the Rio Grande, leaving as a garrison in the fieldworks opposite Matamoras, the 7th Regiment of Infantry and two companies of Artillery, commanded by Capt. Lowd and Lieut. Bragg—the whole commanded by Major Brown, 7th Infantry.

On the 2nd the army encamped at Point Isabel. Early in the morning of the 3rd a heavy cannonade was heard in the direction of Matamoras, which was continued during the day of the 4th. Owing to the difficulty of communicating with the fort, no intelligence was received at headquarters respecting the result of the cannonade until the morning of the 5th, when a party sent forward to communicate brought a dispatch from Major Brown, announcing the particulars, a brief statement of which follows:

At 5 o'clock on the morning of the 3rd a fire was opened upon the fort from one of the Mexican batteries, and was continued with seven guns. The fire was immediately returned and the battery silenced by our guns in thirty minutes—two of the enemy's guns supposed to be dismounted.

The enemy then commenced firing from the lower fort and mortar battery; a brisk fire of shot and shells was kept up, but without damage to the fort or garrison.

A deliberate fire was now kept up by our eighteen pounders upon the enemy's guns and the city of Matamoras, the consulate flags being respected.

The fire of the enemy was kept up without cessation until half past 7. At 10 it was temporarily suspended, but recommenced and continued at intervals until 12 at night. Although it is believed that some 12 or 1500 shot were fired by the enemy during this period, but on casualty occurred—a sergeant of B Company 3rd Infantry being killed. Not one of our guns was dismounted, though the enemy's fire was concentrated for some time on the 18 pounder battery and the shot frequently struck the embrasures. At 5 o'clock on the morning of the 4th, the fire was resumed by the enemy, continued for 12 or 15 shots, and kept up at long intervals during the day, but without effect.

The amount of damage done to the enemy, beyond silencing their batteries, cannot yet be correctly known.

Our informant assures us that it was understood to be Gen. Taylor's intention to remain at Point Isabel until that post should be perfectly fortified, and a large accession of troops should arrive; but he further gives us every reason to encourage those enrolling or who may desire to enroll themselves, to believe that Gen. Taylor will lead them at once into active service—that it is his firm intention to "carry the war into Africa."

We proceed now to lay before the reader an account of the surprise and subsequent surrender of Capt. Thornton's command. Though not official, we have it from a gentleman familiar with the circumstances of the case, and upon whom we have published anything which has afforded us such sincere pleasure. It will cheer hearts and make the nation glad;

RW46v23i41p4c4, May 22, 1846: Surprise and Surrender of Capt. Thornton’s Command.

On the evening of the 23rd ult., General Taylor’s spies brought in intelligence to the effect that about two thousand five hundred Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande to the Texas side above the American Fort, and that about fifteen hundred of same had crossed below. Gen. T. immediately dispatched a squadron of dragoons to each place of crossing for the purpose of reconnoitering them and ascertaining their position. The squadron ordered below was in command of Capt. Ker, the one above was commanded by Capt. Thornton and composed of Capt. Hardee, Lieut.’s Land and Mason, with sixty-one privates and non commissioned officers. The former commander, Capt. Ker, on arriving at the point where it was supposed they had crossed found that the report was false, that they had not crossed there but had all crossed above, which was afterwards proved by Capt. Thornton’s command being surprised, in which Lieut. Geo. Mason with nine men were killed and two wounded. The wounded were sent to Gen. Taylor’s camp; the army having no hospital in the field. Capt’s Thornton, Hardee, and Lieut. Kane miraculously escaped together with the balance of the non commissioned officers and men, but were captured and are now prisoners of war in Mexico.

The circumstances which led to the surprise are these; After Capt. T.’s command had proceeded up the Rio Grande about twenty-four miles and as was supposed, to within about three miles of the Mexican camp the guide refused to go any further, and stated for his reason that the whole country was infested with Mexicans. Capt. T. however, proceeded on with his command about two miles when he came to a farm house, which was enclosed entirely by a chaparral fence, with the exception of that portion of it which bordered on the river and this was so boggy as to be impassable. Capt. T. entered this enclosure, through a pair of bars and approached the house for the purpose of making some enquiry, his command following him. So soon as his command had all entered the enclosure, the enemy, having been concealed in the chaparral, about two thousand five hundred in number, completely surrounded him and commenced firing upon his command. He then wheeled his command thinking that he could charge through the enemy and pass out where he had entered, not however, without a considerable loss. This he attempted but did not succeed, the enemy being too strong.
At this instant, Capt. Hardee approached him for the purpose of advising him how to extricate themselves. The firing of the enemy still continuing Capt. Thornton’s horse, doubtless having received a shot, ran away with him and leaped the Chaparral fence and plunged into a precipice where he fell with Capt. T. under him, where he latter remained insensible for five or six hours. This casualty placed Capt. Hardee in command, who attempted with the residue to make his escape by the river, intending on arriving at its margin to swim it. In this he failed, finding it so boggy that he could not get to it. He then returned, taking the precaution to get out of distance of musketry, dismounted and examined the arms of his men, determining to sell their lives as dearly as possible. Before he had succeeded, however, in the inspection of his arms, a Mexican officer rode up and asked him to surrender. Capt. H. replied that he would surrender, but on no other conditions.—Capt. H. then surrendered. Capts. Thornton and Hardee, with Lieut. Kane and the residue of the non-commissioned officers and privates of Capt. T.’s command are now prisoner of war in Mexico. The enemy treats them remarkably well.

Lieut. Geo. Mason was a fine young officer, and his death is much regretted. His saber belt was recognized among some articles that were subsequently captured from the enemy.

So lively is the curiosity to learn every particular of the actions of the 3rd and 4th insts., that we annex hereto a letter from an officer at Point Isabel, written more for our private eye than for the public, but which cannot but interest all our readers.

The gallant corps of volunteers, of this city, now numbering upwards of one hundred strong were carried through their exercises, yesterday evening, by Capt. Dimmock of the State Guard. A large number of citizens were at the Armory to witness the drill, and all present were struck with the aptitude of the gallant young soldiers, many of whom, for the short time they had been drilled, performed their parts with credit to themselves and promised honor to their country. We had no idea they numbered so strong, until we entered the Armory Yard and discovered what a formidable line these young soldiers presented. We counted seventy-eight in the line who were on drill, and understood that the number already enrolled amounts to upwards of one hundred men. A still larger number are expected to enroll their names, prepare for service, and await the orders of President Polk.

The Washington Union states that Capt. Carrington and Lieut. Warren, of the Richmond Texas Volunteers, applied to the President on the 18th inst. for immediate service, in the presence of many distinguished gentlemen, Senator Pennybacker, Gov. McDowell from Virginia, &c. &c. The President (save the Union) was evidently gratified, complimented their patriotism, and promised, if a call should be made upon Virginia, that their claims should be fairly considered.

The President has ordered 43,500 men in all, to be enrolled and made ready to be called into the public service at any moment. This includes the troops already called out from the Southwest, and the additional number will be from other sections of the Union.—New York will be called upon for eight regiments, Pennsylvania for six, and so on.

Two millions of money more you will observe has been asked for by the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to feed and clothe 8000 men added last week to the rank and file of the Standing Army, and for the Oregon regiment of mounted volunteers.

Gentlemen—When the express came in this morning, I hurriedly penciled down gratifying intelligence which it brought us, expecting the boat would leave in a few minutes. It now only waits for Gen. Taylor’s official dispatch, which is being prepared for Washington. Having heard the official report from Major Brown read, and having a letter before me from there, I will give your further particulars accordingly.
On the morning of the 3rd, at reveille, the Mexicans opened their batteries upon the work, throwing balls and shells without intermission until sunset, finishing with half a dozen extra ones at tattoo for a lullaby.

At reveille, on the 4th, they opened again, sending a few shots and shells, which compliment was repeated at noon. Our artillery silenced the fort opposite ours in half an hour after the firing commenced on the 4th, and knocked three embrasures into one. This caused them to stop firing there for a considerable time, to repair damages. Our artillery also dismounted several of their guns, and from appearances must have killed many men. On our part but one sergeant, of the 7th infantry, was killed—being shot in the head with a 3lb ball. He was carried to the hospital, when, strange to say, a shell fell and blew the remainder of his head off. Some twenty men were standing around the hospital when the shell burst several were knocked down, but none injured. One artillery soldier was slightly wounded by a piece of a shell, and many have made narrow escapes. We only kept up our fire for about two hours—saving our ammunition whilst theirs was being thrown away. From their having thrown from 1500 to 2000 shots and shells, and killing but one of our men and wounding another, you may judge they are none of the best artillerists, and that we had good defenses. Their shot rendered a good many of our tents unserviceable, but all our men are in good spirits and anxious to come to close quarters.

Our piquet guard is now firing at a party of Mexican soldiers, about a mile below the fort. The Chaparral between this and the fort is like a bee-hive, so full is it with Mexicans. It is thought they will make an assault on the rear of the fort, and try and repel the march of the troops from this place returning. Gen. T. leaves as soon as a reinforcement arrives here, which will enable the work to be defended without the force which he brought down from above.

In haste yours,
S.S.F.

RW46v23i41p4c5, May 22, 1846: The Administration and the Country.

The calamities which the Whigs predicted would result from the annexation of Texas, are now upon us. War, in its grim aspects, has opened its fires upon our South-Western borders, and the whole nation feels something of the excitement always incident to a state of hostilities. Already has the blood of Americans been shed in a contest with Mexican soldiers? In such a case, no loyal son of the Old Dominion will be a careless and indifferent spectator, not will he stop to enquire into the righteousness of the cause of this state of things. It is enough for him to know that a hostile foe has planted his flag upon territory which the action of our National legislation has made ours, and that every attempt to negotiate and settle the limits of Texas has been refused by Mexico. Our country has been patient with our neighbor Mexico; our citizens have suffered grievous wrongs at her hands; but still there was no desire to draw the sword to avenge them,—at least on the part of the people;—she has been the first to refuse to treat, and the first to sound the tocsin of war. It is, then, incumbent upon our citizens to see that the contest is a decisive one—one that shall vindicate the country and in the peace which shall ensue make it permanent and lasting. When this is accomplished, (and may a kind Providence early ordain it!) then we will canvass the causes of the war, and fix the blame where it belongs. If our Administration can clear its skirts of censure, then we shall have still farther cause of congratulation. But let not our politicians and our partisan editors suppose that the popularity of a war in the nineteenth century can depend upon their speculations. This is an age of enquiry; and the honest, intelligent men of the times, such as John C. Calhoun and JNO. J. Crittenden, will expose what is wrong, be he who he may that practices it. But for the present, look to our little army; be ready to give it assistance and protection, and if need be, march at once to the scene of danger and of action.

For the Whigs of Virginia, one, who knows well of "what stuff they are made," will freely speak: They will not be found lagging—they have ever been found in the front ranks of the battle for freedom. From the days of John Hampden till now, they have poured out their blood like water for the cause of human liberty. When the mere pander to Executive favor has been boisterous in his adulation, with no soul nor heart to love his country and defend her rights, Whigs, in the and in the Senate, have been raising barriers to the approach of the foe. Ina contest like the present, every such Whig in Virginia is ready, and will do his duty. Let not the guilty, however, expect to escape the condemnation justly due for his crimes.

To the rescue, then, in any way your country may call! Gen. Taylor is our "Harry of Navarre"—follow his white plume!

[End of second page]
Mr. Benton offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expedience of increasing the general staff of the Army in consequence of the increase of the rank and file; also of providing for the mere efficient organization of volunteers.

The bill to repeal that part of the naval appropriation bill which limits the force of the Navy to 7500 men was taken up and passed.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to provide for the adjustment of all suspended preemption claims in the several States and Territories.

Mr. Huntington offered an amendment designed to retain the final decision upon the claims in the hands of Congress, and supported it in a brief speech.

Mr. Johnson, of La. opposed the amendment and supported the bill as amended by the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. Calhoun was in favor of allowing the Commissioner to decide upon the claims, after consultation with the Attorney General, but requiring him to report his decisions to Congress, and the grounds upon which they are based.

After some conversation the bill was amended so as to embrace the points advocated by Mr. Calhoun, and were then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Dayton the bill and report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the subject of a mail route across the Isthmus of Panama, was recommitted.

More than half an hour was occupied by Mr. D. in reading some choice extracts from the correspondence of Mr. Wm. Gilpin, embraced in this report, which put the gravity of the Senate to a severe test.

On motion of Mr. Fairfield the bill reported in the early part of the session for building ten war steamers, was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill increasing the number of Paymasters in the Army, and changing the tenure of the office, was taken up; and, after a brief discussion, was read a third time and passed.

The Senate then went into Executive session, and after a short time spent therein, adjourned.

A Resolution was offered calling for information in relation to the Harbor at Sandusky Bay, which was agreed to by the House.

Mr. McKay of N.C., proposed to terminate all debate upon the Army Bill at two o’clock to morrow. A motion to lay upon the table was lost, 93 to 67, and the Resolution was then adopted.

OREGON INDIAN BILL

Mr. Thompson, of Miss., moved to postpone the Oregon Indian Bill until the first Monday in June. Mr. T. said he made the motion with a view of awaiting the action of the Senate upon the Oregon jurisdiction Bill. The consideration of the Bill was postponed.

ARMY BILL

Mr. McKay of N.C. moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union, which motion was agreed to. Mr. Cobb of Ga. was called to the Chair. Mr. McKay stated that in consequence of the increase of the rank and fate of the Army, it would be necessary to increase the appropriations for the rank and file some two millions of dollars.

Mr. Sims of S.C. opposed the pending amendment to the Bill which was to increase the pay of soldiers in the ranks of the Army to ten dollars a month. Mr. S. also entered upon general defense of the Administration, and the laws of nations to prove that the Executive had been guilty of no improprieties in prosecuting a war with Mexico.

Mr. Lumpkin of Georgia read a speech giving his views upon the war movements. They were warmly in defense of what had been done by the Executive, and an argument to show that the Executive was bound to do what had been done. The few members who had voted against the Bill to declare war were treated with the respect due to their opinions and sincerity awarded them, which is more than has been done by all the friends of the Administration.
All of them had avowed their willingness to vote for supplies, though all were not ready to excuse the Administration and rally in support of it, which he thought ought to be done.

Mr. Tombs of Ga. rose in reply, and with so much spirit and fervor that his speech at once commanded the undivided attention of the House. The bill passed by Congress was prefaced by a statement which was not true, and this misstatement of fact he denounced in warm language. The war declared was an aggression upon Mexico, a usurpation of power.

The soil was never represented in the Texan Congress. They were Mexican people there, and did not rebel with the Texans or take part in the Texan Revolution. The President had violated the law of Congress and committed an act of usurpation by sending the Army to the Rio Grande. Mr. Tombs addressed the Committee briefly but with great force and effect.

Mr. Chipman, of Mich., continued the debate in a violation speech abusive of the “Federal Whigs” and laudatory of Mr. Polk and the “Democracy.”

Mr. Grider of Ky., denounced this war which had been produced by the Executive. He argued that peace might have been obtained, and our difficulties with Mexico settled in an amicable and honorable manner.

The war was an Executive war, and he should speak of it as such, regardless of all that might be said by anybody. He should cease to be a freeman when he could not speak of him in a manner corresponding to his usurpations. The war that had been provoked he would prosecute with vigor, but the manner of the war he condemned.

The soil between the Nueces and the Rio del Norte was at least doubtful, and ought not to have been invaded. With as earnest efforts to make peace as to prosecute war, peace might have been preserved, and all questions amicably settled.

Mr. G. said he should not heed the denunciations against him. He spoke from his own convictions of right and in detestation of all usurpations of power.

Mr. Tibbatts of Ky. Took the floor to reply, but gave way to a motion that the Committee rise, which prevailed.

The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Hopkins of Va., said that as Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, he had received a communication from one of the Texas Senators in reference to the mail routes, and complaining that the mail service was suspended.

A Bill was then passes giving the Post Master General power to continue the mail service in Texas as when Texas was independent, The House then adjourned.

The Star-Spangled Banner Still Waving in Triumph!

The public pulse was made to beat high, and our citizens were relieved of an almost agonizing suspense, by the arrival of the Southern train on Saturday. The thrilling news from the seat of war was first indicated to the anxious expectants at the Depot, by the signal which floated in triumph as the cars reached the bridge over our noble James. The stars and stripes waved in triumphant beauty as all eyes turned upon them; and upon the breeze was wafted the soul-stirring news that our intrepid Taylor, with his gallant little army, had done his duty, in defending a country of which he and those under him have ample reason to be proud.

It will be seen, by our columns of to-day, that two engagements had taken place between a Mexican force of more than 5000 strong, and the American army, of only about two thousand men. Of the actual number killed and wounded on either side, it is a matter of perfect uncertainty to undertake to decide; but this much we are satisfied of, we have at least good reason, for regarding the action as having turned decidedly in favor of our own countrymen. We see it stated by the slips, we have before us, that a battle—nay, two battles had been fought, and we also notice, that a large number of Mexicans were either killed, wounded, or taken prisoner, whilst but few Americans have been sacrificed. We have therefore, cause to rejoice at a victory over our enemies, yet we should nevertheless pause to mourn the loss of a Ringgold, a Brown, a McIntosh, and other gallant spirits, whose blood has been poured out in defence of their country. In the midst of all the excitement incident upon such an occasion, we cannot but deeply deplore the loss we have sustained; even though it seems comparatively but small. The news likely to reach the city in a short time, may enable us to give a more accurate account of the killed and wounded on either side; and we devoutly hope that the loss from our ranks may be far less than has been heretofore stated. Should it be otherwise, however, we will still have abundant reason for congratulating the county upon a noble achievement.
By recent successful engagements of our little army with a much larger Mexican force, General Taylor has verified the prediction, that the American Flag would never be trampled upon while under his protection. He has met the enemy of our country under many disadvantages, yet how nobly has he vindicated himself and the objects for which his army contend! When the United States need a bright example to point out to other nations, let the triumphs of the 7th and 9th of May, be held forth as achievements which would reflect honor upon any soldiery.

In view of all now before us, notwithstanding the apparently determined spirit of the Mexicans to carry this matter still further, have we not a dependence in the skill and energy of Gen. Taylor—with the aid of such a combined force as we have been informed has already gone to his rescue, have we not reason, we say, to regard the peace of the two countries as near at hand? If the Mexican Government, which has heretofore dealt so much in empty words, should continue to wage a war with the United States, it will be incumbent upon this Government to sustain our army, add to its strength and efficiency by accepting the services of such volunteers as have already tendered their lives and their fortunes in endeavoring to bring about a speedy settlement of our present difficulties with Mexico. We do not hesitate to say, that now we have embarked in this matter, it should be carried through. If the Mexicans will not come into terms willingly, without the fight, why, let us give it them; and who then can doubt our ability to place them in a condition in which they will be glad to sue for peace. We say again, let men and money be freely given; but above all, let us bring about as speedy a restoration of peace between the two countries, as it is possible to accomplish without further bloodshed.

RW46v23i42p1c2, May 26, 1846: Volunteers.

At a meeting of the Richmond Grays, held at the Military Hall, on the evening of the 22d May, 1846, pursuant to the order of the Captain thereof, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas this Company has received information that a Requisition has been made by the President of the United States upon the Governor of Virginia for three Regiments of Infantry, who are to be equipped and armed, and to hold themselves in readiness for service; and whereas this Company is, and has been, at all times, ready to protect the interest and defend the honor and rights of their country, and deeming it now necessary to volunteer their services.

Therefore, be it Resolved, That the Captain of the Company tender to the Executive of Virginia the services of the Richmond Grays, with an earnest request to be enrolled in any Regiment that may be raised under the requisition aforesaid.

RO. G. SCOTT, Jr.
Captain of the Richmond Grays.

Louis J. Boissieux, Secretary.

At a meeting of the citizens of Richmond, held at the Odd Fellows' Hall, on the evening of the 21st instant, Gen. W. H. Lambert was called to the Chair, and Thos. T. T. Tabb appointed Secretary. The meeting was eloquently addressed by Capt. Carrington, Messrs. Wm. A Patteson, Thomas P. August, and John S. Caskie.

On motion of John S. Caskie, Esq., it was Resolved, That the Committee of Five, appointed at a former meeting, for the purpose of collecting an amount sufficient to equip the Richmond Volunteers, be enlarged to nine, three from each Ward, and that the Chairman appoint the additional members of said Committee; whereupon, the following gentlemen were added to the Committee: John Wamble, Samuel D. Denoon, John H. Cooke, and Hay Taliaferro\Dr. Wm. A. Patteson, Col. T. B. Bigger, Jas. Winston, Col. George M. Carrington, and Jno. D. Munford, being the Committee before appointed. The meeting then adjourned.

WM. LAMBERT, Chairman,
Thos. T. T. Tabb, Secretary.

RW46v23i42p1c1, May 26, 1846: A Wise and Prudent Decision.

A Wise and Prudent Decision.

It will be recollected that, after the defeat of the resolution from the lower house of Congress, to give the "Notice" to Great Britain, the Senate passed a resolution which was to extend the jurisdiction of our laws over the Oregon Territory. This, at the time it was passed, was properly regarded as being even more offensive to the British Government, than the "Notice" itself; and, we must confess, we dreaded the result of its being carried into effect. The subject, in its original form, having been referred, by the Senate, to the Committee of Territories, has since come back to the body in which it originated, and the Committee ask to be excused from its further consideration.

The subjoined, taken from the Congress news of Thursday, will give the reader an idea of the conclusion to which the Senate's Committee have come on the subject:

"Mr. Westcott, from the Territorial Committee, to whom had been referred, the resolution relative to the expediency of the establishment of a Territorial Government in Oregon, reported that the committee did not deem it expedient to act upon the matter at this time.

The Oregon jurisdiction bill from the House, which had been referred to the same committee, was also reported back, with a motion that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, on the grounds that it is inexpedient to act upon it at present.

The Right Spirit abroad in the Land.

With what pride should we look upon the movements of our gallant countrymen, who are rallying from one extremity of the Union to the other, in behalf of a country alike dear to the heart of every American freeman! Each mail brings us evidence that the right spirit is abroad, and that Americans are determined to sustain their country, under its existing trials, whether right or wrong. Although a majority of our people must feel that their county has been placed in an unenviable position, by the duplicity, and, we might well say, imbecility of the powers that be, now at its head; yet, like true patriots, the generous, the proud, and the noble sons of liberty, have lost sight of the cause in seeking to avert the effect, which a war like that now existing between Mexico and their own Government is well calculated to produce.

ENGLAND'S WARLIKE REPARATIONS FOR AMERICA.

"Within the last 6 months a great war party has manifested itself in the U. S. England thinks that in the Oregon affair there is one of those questions of national honor which do not permit her to cede to imperious injunctions. She has feared, especially as the probable result of a war with the American Union, the loss of her immense possessions of Canada, New Scotland, New Brunswick, and other colonies on the continent to the north of the great Republic. To put herself in a position to meet all dangers, she has, without affectation, but without mystery, made the most formidable armament. It is as follows:

42 sailing vessels of war, commanded by post captains, and, moreover, 7 steam frigates and corvettes, disposable in the Atlantic and Pacific.

SENATE--Thursday, May 21.

Mr. Ashly, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to change the time of holding the Spring Courts of Mr. Semple presented a remonstrance from citizens of the District of Columbia against the retrocession of any part of the District. Referred to the Committee on the District.

Mr. Yulee offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the merits of Capt. R. F. Lopers' plan of building iron steamers.

On motion of Mr. Rusk, the Military Committee was instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing 200 of Colt's patent rifles.

The Committee on Territories to which the subject had been referred, reported that it was not expedient to move in the matter of a territorial government for Oregon at this session.

Also, that they had been unable to come to an agreement upon the various matters contained in the bill from the House for extending our laws over the territory of the U. S. lying west of the Rocky Mountains, and for other purposes, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. Wescott gave notice that when the report came up to-morrow, he should move to postpone the whole subject until the 1st Monday in December.

Mr. Benton. At what hour to-morrow does the Senator intend to make the motion?

Mr. Wescott. At 1 o'clock.

Mr. Benton. Perhaps I shall have a word or two to say then.

On motion of Mr. Johnson, of La., the Senate took up the bill to amend the act providing for the adjustment of land claims within the States of Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, and parts of Mississippi and Alabama.

After some discussion and the adoption of sundry amendments, the bill was postponed until Monday next.

The French Spoliation Bill was then taken up, and after sundry amendments were offered to the bill, which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. J. M. Clayton addressed the Senate at some length in reply to the speeches of Mr. Dix and Mr. Colquitt, and after a short Executive session, the Senate adjourned.

RW46v23i42p2c1, May 26, 1846: From the Army.

We have been politely furnished with the following extract of a letter from an officer of the 8th Infantry, to his father in this city. That regiment participated prominently and honorably in the late triumphant battles between the American and Mexican forces on the frontier—bearing, indeed, on one occasion, the brunt of the battle. We refer the reader to another column for an abstract of Gen. Taylor's official account of these engagements, and for other very interesting items of information copied from the last New Orleans papers:

"Camp, Near Matamoros, May 10, 1846.

"The Express is going in five minutes•so I have time only to write two words. We have had two battles with the Mexicans. Our victory has been complete. All the officers, except myself, and one-third of the soldiers of my company have been either killed or wounded. I, by some miracle, have escaped. We took one battery, which fired grape-shot for a quarter of an hour upon us. My company was the first. The Mexican Army was cut to pieces. We were 1700•they were 6800. Gen. La Vega is a prisoner, and it is from him we have their number. We have all their artillery, and all their munitions of war."

[BWP]

RW46v23i42p2c2, May 26, 1846: Virginia Volunteers.

A volunteer company has been organized in Fredericksburg, to aid in the defence of Texas. Joseph Robinson is Captain, Wm. S. Briggs 1st Lieutenant, Mural Willis 2d, William G. Coleman 3rd, Henry Knox 4th, and Robert B. Alexander Orderly Sergeant.
In Lynchburg, we learn from the Virginian, efforts are making to organize a company. Two meetings have been held, which were addressed by Messrs. Wm. D. Fair, Jno. Wm. Dudley, James B. Green, and others, with patriotic fervor.

It will be seen, by the Proclamation of the Governor of Virginia, in another column, that that officer is authorized to receive applications for a large number of volunteers, to be hereafter mustered into the service of the U. States, should the emergency require it. Of this, unless there should be unfortunately a war with England, we think there is now no much probability. Nevertheless, we hope the full number which may be required from Virginia will respond to the call.

The Editor of the St. Louis Republican, who has recently returned to that city from a visit to Nauvoo, states that the number of Mormons who have left that place on their way to California is about 1000, and others are making preparations to follow as rapidly as possible. The Nauvoo Eagle, however, manifests great uneasiness lest those who remain shall be attacked by the Anti-Mormons before they can make arrangements to depart.

The N. O. and other Southern papers continue to be filled with accounts of the organization and marching of corps of Volunteers for the Mexican campaign. We take it for granted that Mexico will now soon beg for peace, and that the services of but few of them will be required.

The present age presents various features in its moral and political character, differing materially from the age that preceded it; and while there is much that is praise worthy, and that deserves to be considered an improvement on the past, there are other matters deserving the severest censure, and that will meet with the decided condemnation of reflecting men of all parties in politics, and of every shade of difference in religious sentiment. Among the censurable and dark features in the character of the present age, bigotry, intolerance, and a spirit of detraction, hold a conspicuous place. The truth of this remark will be apparent to every man who will rid himself as far as possible of party prejudices, and retire to some quiet retreat, whence he may through a "loop hole" take a calm view of what is passing around him in the world.

These reflections have been induced by considering the position assumed by a portion of the political press in the United States towards another portion of the press, which is generally considered the organ of a large and highly respectable portion of our citizens, who happens not to possess optics keen enough to see that every thing done by the officers of the General Government is precisely right. For what they consider a candid and honest expression of opinion, they are denounced, in offensive language, as traitors to their country, who, under the profession of patriotism are virtually in league with her enemies. The writer proposes to furnish an example, which has very recently come under his observation. The following language deserves to be pondered well by all Editors of political papers. It is reasonable to suppose that the writer himself could not have considered with seriousness its import, otherwise he would have so modified it as to have shorn it of its offensive and intolerant features.

"We are extremely sorry to use party terms in connection with this Mexican War. We had hoped that such distinctions would be forgotten; and that all who claim the protection of our common flag would come to is rescue with a common alacrity and zeal. As far as the people are concerned, we are not disappointed. There is a strong and irrepressible instinct of republicanism and patriotism in the popular mind, which the ill-disguised toryism of self-constituted oracles can neither dampen nor corrupt. The great heart of the country is right, notwithstanding nearly every Whig paper which comes under our observation is pouring out its strong and foul current of modified treason. It is true their sympathies may not be steeled against our gallant brethren in arms on the Rio Grande; and it is true they decorate their columns in glowing words and startling capitals, when they have occasion to chronicle their successes; but it is also true and here is the treason of it•they labor with 'horrid arts and execrable zeal' to place our country is the wrong before the world. This is the treason, and for it they deserve the execration of every honest man in Christendom."
It is not the writer's design to charge this illiberal, uncandid, and intolerant course exclusively upon the Democratic press. Much of it may doubtless be found in the presses of other parties, and it is deeply deplored by all who esteem it right to treat an opponent with that fairness and courtesy which we all wish to have extended to ourselves. It is time for the conductors of the press to discountenance all productions which are filled with offensive language, impugning the motives, honesty, and patriotism of all who are not their thorough-going partisans. When will all who write or speak learn to exercise moderation, candor, and courtesy? Can it be productive of good, or is it consistent with TRUTH, to charge an opponent with bad motives because he may be found advocating opinions or practices which we do not approve? MODERATION.

Fredericksburg, May 22d.

P.S. What does the word "people" in the foregoing extract mean? If it is intended to embrace the citizens of the U. States, of all parties, it is far from being correct to say that they are "right" if to be "right" means that they approve indiscriminately of the doings of the officers of the General Government: And if it is to be confined to the Democratic party, it is still incorrect, for a large number of both parties do not approve of the doings of President Polk; and without doubt there is patriotism in both parties. Who, then are the People? [Democratic Recorder, May 22nd.]

We have been politely favoured with a perusal of the official dispatch addressed by Gen. Taylor to Gen Gaines, dated from his camp on the field of battle, three miles from Matamoras, May 9th 1846. It does not differ materially from the accounts of the two engagements already laid before the public. On the 8th Gen. T. drove the enemy from their position, and occupied it during the night. The lost in this conflict was 12 killed and 39 wounded. On the 9th the army resumed its march until it encountered the enemy, protected, as stated in our extra, by a ravine, with artillery on its ravine. This battery was stormed by Capt. May's Company of Dragoons. The number of killed and wounded on our side could not be ascertained. Private accounts make the number something over one hundred.

In this second engagement Lieutenant Inge of the 2nd Dragoons, Lieutenant Cochrane of the 4th Infantry, and Lieutenant Chadbourne of the 8th Infantry were killed. Officers wounded: Lieutenant Cols. McIntosh and Payne, Captains Montgomery and Hove; Lieutenants Gaters, Maclay, Seldon, Burbank, Jordon and Fowler of the Infantry.

The dispatch states that the forces under General Taylor were two thousand three hundred men, and that they had to contend against 3,800 Mexicans of the regular army, and about 2000 irregular cavalry.

The fort opposite Matamoras has been nearly incessantly bombarded during one hundred and sixty hours, during which an immense number of shot and shells were thrown in it. No material damage has been sustained.

RW46v23i42p2c4, May 26, 1846: Affairs on the Frontier.

AFFAIRS ON THE FRONTIER.

We published in Extras the substance of the interesting and important information brought by the Louisiana, the Col. Harney and the Galveston—the latter being the last of the arrivals, and bringing the latest intelligence. We now subjoin, from a supplementary edition of the Galveston News and Civilian of the 15th, such additional particulars as we were able to crowd in our extras.

The following anecdote connected with the decisive battle of the 9th; is too good to be omitted:

"The battle commenced by heavy cannonading on both sides. Gen. Taylor, in passing his lines, accosted Captain May of the 2d dragoons, and told him 'your regiment has never done anything yet, you must take that battery.' He said nothing but turned to the command and said 'we must take that battery follow.' He made a charge with three companies—at least with the remainder of three companies—supported by the 5th and 8th regiments of infantry. They cleared the breast work, rode over the battery, wheeled and came through the enemy's line whilst the fire of the infantry was so deadly in its effects to carry all before it. Captain May made a cut at an officer as he charged through—on his return he found him standing between the wheels of a cannon—fighting like a hero. He ordered him to surrender. He was asked if he was an officer? Captain May answered him in the affirmative, when he presented his sword remarking 'You receive General Vega a prisoner of war? Captain May gave him in charge of one of his sergeants who had lost his horse in the charge, ordering him to conduct him to General Taylor out of the line.'

In this charge Capt. Gage, a brave and gallant officer fell. A complete panic issued on the part of the enemy, and they fled in every direction, many being drowned in attempting to cross the river.

"Eight pieces of artillery fell into our hands, and innumerable quantity of small arms, munitions, baggage, camp equipage, military chest containing a large quantity of gold, Gen. Arista's carriage, baggage, port folio with all his official correspondence with the Government, with full plans of the campaign, and instructions from the Mexican Government, authorizing him to send Gen. Taylor and his army when taken to the city of Mexico; to treat Gen. Taylor and his officers with such care and attention as becomes the magnanimity of the great Mexican nation. Four or five hundred head of mules &c. with a large number of strands of colors.

The plan of the campaign and the instructions from his Government ordered him to take possession of Point Isabel, this was to be the brief act of hostility, he was to fortify it as strongly as possible. He was likewise ordered to take possession of the mouth of the river and fortify it at once.

Some 400 Mexicans were buried at the last accounts, but doubtless hundreds lie dead among the Chaperal.

Capt. May's attack is spoken of as being one of those splendid efforts which would have adorned the brightest feather of the plume of Murat, in the palmist days of his glory. It cost him 18 horses with a few of the gallant riders. The victory, says the Extra from which we copy entirely belongs to the U. S. Army. No volunteers having arrived in time to share in the honors of the day. It will convince our country, that West Point affords the material of exhibiting the courage and bravery of American soldier.

I trust we will hear no more of dismounting our gallant Dragoons, the affair of the 9th shows them to be the arteries of our defence.

That redoubtable hero, Gen. Ampudia, commanded the 2d Division of the Mexican army. It is said he was the first man to make good his escape to Matamoras, where he reported that Arista had betrayed the army. [N. O Bee.]

GENERAL VEGA. In addition to the unprecedented excitement in our city yesterday, caused by the news of the glorious victory of General Taylor, and the war intelligence from Washington, the sensation was if possible increased by the landing of General Romilio Dias de la Vega as a prisoner of war, from on board the steamer Colonel Harney. This brave and experienced officer has a very prepossessing appearance; his is very little over the middle height, has a fine manly countenance of a swarthy hue, set off by full and well trimmed whiskers and mustachi es. On his landing from the steamer he was conducted to a private residence at the corner of Toulouse and Royal streets, where a vast concourse of people were gathered to catch a glimpse of a live Mexican General. The General appeared to be in excellent spirits. His conversation with several persons who were admitted to see him, was carried on by an interpreter in the Spanish language as he does not speak either the English or French. He expressed himself surprised at the wonderful extent of New Orleans and expatiated upon its immense amount of shipping, stating that he had no idea of the importance of the city. In speaking of the late battle, he was understood to say that the American artillery behaved with uncommon efficiency. Shortly after his arrival, General Gaines admitted him and the officers on parole, and they will, no doubt, take their quarters at the St. Charles Hotel.

By the barque Mandarin, arrived this morning from Vera Cruz, which port she left on the 7th inst., we learn that the U. S. Squadron sailed from Vera Cruz on the 4th inst. On getting under way, the guns of the Castle were all manned, matches lighted ready to fire into them, if any disposition was made towards it. It was generally believed that as soon as it was ascertained that hostilities had commenced on the frontiers, Com. Conner would make an attack on the town and Castle; but a larger force would be required than was there.

When the Meridian sailed the U. S. Ship Falmouth was the only vessel in port. The Commodore, it was reported; had gone to the Brazos, to assist the army, if needed. Every preparation was making at Vera Cruz for its defence, and that of the Castle, heavy guns were being taken over every day. The weather had become very hot. The thermometer standing at 96 in the shade.

The Vomits had made its appearance.

With a view of obtaining the requisite information as to the government of this volunteer corps, now organizing under the late act of Congress, a letter was written a few days ago by major General Stewart to Washington, making all needful inquiries on the subject. The reply of the Secretary of War is annexed. It appears to contain every necessary direction, and, if extensively circulated, will save a vast deal of trouble to all parties interested. It will be observed by the accompanying memorandum that no provision is made for a company of artillery.

[Baltimore American.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 19, 1846.

Sir: In reply to the inquiries contained in the letter of Major General Steuart, and in other communications, submitted by you to this Department, I have the honor to inform you that the rule adopted is to call for volunteers that are required from any particular State, through the Governor. This is an act of respect to the Executive of the State, due as well to his position, as to his generally superior knowledge of the character and efficiency of the volunteers throughout the State, the sections from which it is most advisable to take them, and which of them can, with the greatest facility and least expense, be embodied for the service for which they may be required. Circumstances may, however, occur to render it expedient to accept offers of service direct, without the intervention of the Governor, when an application to him might cause delay. Applications of companies, regiments, &c. to enter the service may therefore be made direct to this Department.

The law, a copy of which is enclosed, provides that the officers of volunteers shall be appointed by the proper State authority, in the manner prescribed by the State laws; and the accompanying memorandum shows the number of officers, non-commissioned officers and privates, and the organization of companies and regiments.

The law also requires that the volunteers furnish their own clothing, and, if cavalry their own horses and horse equipage. Such as are already uniformed need not change; such as are not, and contemplate uniforming, are at liberty to adopt such as they think proper; but it is advisable that all who may be called into the service adapt their dress, as nearly as circumstances will permit, to the nature of the service that may be required of them, and to the character of the country and climate where they may have to serve. Those that shall be accepted will be armed and equipped at the expense of the United States, and will be inspected and mustered into service by an officer of the army, or by one appointed by the Governor, at such times and places as will be specified when their services are called for.

Very respectfully your obedient serv’t,

W. L. Marcy, Secretary of War.

Hon. Wm. F. Gilem,
House of Representatives U. S.

BY THE GOVERNOR.

A PROCLAMATION.

The Congress of the United States having, by an act approved on the 13th May, 1946, declared that a state of War exists between the Republic of Mexico and that of the United States; and the President of the United States, being by said act authorized "to call for and accept the services of any number of Volunteers, not exceeding 50,000," "for the purpose of enabling the Government of the United States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination," and having called upon the Executive of this State, under date of the 19th inst., "to cause to be enrolled and held in readiness for muster into the service of the United States, three Regiments of Infantry," to be composed of Volunteer corps.

Now, therefore, I, WILLIAM SMITH, Governor of Virginia, by virtue of the authority with which I am invested, do announce to my fellow citizens my readiness to receive, for the purpose aforesaid, a tender of the services of thirty companies of Volunteers to be formed into regiments when mustered into the service of the United States. These companies must have the organization of the Army of the United States, and in their rank and file must consist of 64 men, not over 45, nor under 18 years of age, and of full "physical strength and vigor." Existing Volunteer Companies tendering their services, will be permitted to retain their existing uniform; but all new companies must strictly conform, in their uniform, to that prescribed by the general order of March 1824.

No officer of Militia, no matter what his grade, will forfeit his commission by entering into the proposed Volunteer service.

For the information of the public, the uniform before referred to, as well as the company organization of the Army of the United States, will be found in the subjoined general order.

The call to arms has, upon the generous and the brave, a magical effect. To the Virginian it has never been made in vain. Other States are rushing to fields of danger and of glory; and the sons of the cavaliers will not be outstripped in this noble race of patriotism and duty.

Given under my hand as Governor, and under the lesser Seal of the Commonwealth, at Richmond, this 23d day of May, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-six, and of the Commonwealth the seventieth.

May 26th W. M. SMITH.

RW46v23i42p2c5, May 26, 1846: From the Washington Union, Military Arrangements.

The offers made to the President, and to the War Department, of the services of volunteers, the applications for appointment as officers, and the inquiries as to the strength, organization, &c., are so numerous, that it has become impossible to answer them with promptness. The following is therefore, published for general information.

The President has deemed it best to call for such volunteers as are required from particular States through their Governors, as, from their generally superior information, they can best judge of the relative efficiency of the different corps, and which of them can, with the greatest facility and the least expense, be embodied for the service for which they are needed. The President has no power to appoint officers of volunteers—the law requires that they be appointed by the proper authorities of the States in the manner prescribed by their laws. The offers of services, and the applications for appointments, should, therefore, be made to the Governors of the States and Territories.

Those who propose to tender their services should be first enrolled and organized into regiments, or battalions, where a battalion is designated in the quota called for from a State. When this is done, they will tender their services through the Governor of the State, who will give notice thereof to the President, or Secretary of War. They will be duly informed of the acceptance of their offer by the President, and notified to be ready to be called into service when the public exigencies may require. Their pay will commence when actually called and mustered into service, and not before.

Volunteers are required by law to furnish their own clothing, and, if cavalry, their own horses, and horse equipments; but none under the rank of commissioned officer will be received into service who, in years, are under eighteen, or over forty-five; and no horses but such as are perfectly sound and in good condition to render effective service. No particular dress is prescribed for volunteers. They are at liberty to adopt such an uniform as they think proper; but it is advisable that those entering the service adapt their dress, as well as may be, to the nature of the service, and the character of the country and climate to which they may be called. When called into service, they are armed and equipped at the expense of the U. States.

[Text continues with details of the organization of Volunteer corps for service under the requisition of the President of the United States.]

RW46v23i42p2c6, May 26, 1846: General Orders.

GENERAL ORDERS.

ADJUTANT GENERAL’S OFFICE,

Richmond, May 23d. 1846.

The following organization of Volunteer corps for service under the requisition of the President of the United States, will be observed:

Each company of Infantry will consist of 1 Captain,

1 1st. Lieutenant,
1 2d " ,
4 Sergeants,
4 Corporals,
2 Musicians, and
64 Privates.

Thirty Companies are required to constitute, when called into service, three Regiments of Infantry—each Regiment to consist of 1 Colonel,

1 Lt. Colonel,
1 Major, [addition]
1 Adjutant [a Lieutenant of one of the Companies, but not in]
1 Sergeant Major,
1 Quarter Master Sergeant,
2 Principal Musicians,
10 Companies, according to the organization above.
Volunteer Corps now in commission tendering their services, and all new corps which may be raised for this service, will send to this Department with the tender of service, a written engagement signed by all the members, to serve for twelve months after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous; or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged, according to their discretions.

Old corps will retain the uniform now worn by them; new corps will uniform according to the pattern prescribed.

No man under the rank of a commissioned officer will be received, who is in years apparently over 45 or under 18, or who is not in physical strength and vigor.

Commandants of regiments within which Volunteer corps for this service shall be raised, will superintend the enrollment, the elections of officers, inspect the Company, and certify the whole to this Department. Commissions for this special service will then be issued to the officers of all new corps. Existing corps will be inspected in like manner and sign the enrolment.

Companies when enrolled and commissioned will hold themselves in readiness for muster into the service of the United States when called for; but it is recommended to the members not to abandon their ordinary occupations in the mean time, further than to give such attention to training as may be convenient.

By command. WM. H. RICHARDSON, Adj. Gen'l.

FORM OF ENROLMENT.

We, the undersigned, do hereby engage to serve in a Volunteer Company of infantry to constitute a portion of three Regiments required for the service of the United States, according to the terms of an act of Congress "providing for the prosecution of the existing War between the United States and the Republic of Mexico," approved the 13th May, 1846, and to hold ourselves in readiness for muster into the service of the United States, when called upon by the Governor of Virginia.

CAPTAIN WALKER.

This brave soldier who acquitted himself with so much gallantry that if he gain no more renown, he deserves and must receive the most honorable praise from his countrymen. We learn that he once lived in this city a cabinet-maker. If he have to boast many more deeds of valor, he may, some day, in virtue of the military prestige so powerful in this country, be employed into a cabinet making of a different kind.

RICHMOND COMPILER.

The above paragraph unless we are greatly mistaken is erroneous. Capt. WALKER, [Samuel H., as we suppose him to be] lately one of the Rangers operating on the Texan frontier under Colonel HAYS, is a native of Maryland, and was formerly a resident of Washington city, where he has many family connexions. He is a carpenter by trade, and is yet a young man. His first entry upon military life was as a volunteer in the company which left here for Florida in 1834; and after returning from that expedition, he resumed and pursued his occupation in this city for some time, until the spirit of adventure led him first to emigrate to Florida, and from thence to Texas. While here, as we are informed, he was a young man of strictly temperate habits and unassuming deportment, but of indomitable energy.

ATTEND a meeting of your Company at the Exchange Hotel on Tuesday next, the 26th inst. At 8 o'clock, P. M. By order of the Captain,
F. MARX, Orderly.

NOTICE. It is proper that the citizens generally, as well as the members of the Troop, should be apprized that the above meeting is called with a view of proceeding forthwith, (if a sufficient number is added to the roll by the day appointed,) to organize the Company thoroughly and place it in a condition for active and efficient service; or, failing in this, to disband the corps at once, in order that its members may enroll themselves for duty in some other arm of the service.

JOHN J. WERTH,
May 20th dtd Captain R. L. Dragoons.

[By Express from Mobile] Latest From the Army.

THE MEXICANS TWICE ROUTED!

By the Daily Picayune, and an Extra from the Mobile Advertiser of the 18th, we have news, the substance of which is contained in the following:

There have been two engagements between Gen. Taylor and the Mexican Troops, the first occurring on the 7th instant, when Gen. Taylor was returning from Point Isabel to his Camp, opposite Matamoras. In this the Mexicans, from 5000 to 7000 were repulsed, our army sleeping on the field of battle, on which next day were found 200 Mexicans dead, several pieces of artillery, stores, &c. Major Ringgold died, subsequently, from wound in this action.

Of the second battle we can only give the following particulars from The Picayune.

The U. S. Steamer Col. Harney arrived this morning, just as our paper was going to press, from Brazos Santiago, having left on the 13th inst. Her news is glorious to our arms.

She brings official accounts of a second battle between the Mexican and American forces, which took place on 9th, commencing at half past 3 o'clock, P. M., within three miles of Camp Taylor. The action was upon the edge of a ravine, and one mile from the chaparral, which was here about twelve miles in width.

The Mexicans commenced the action with their artillery, which was posted as to sweep the narrow pass by which Gen. Taylor was advancing, there being a swamp on either hand. Gen. Taylor immediately ordered a charge in the teeth of the enemy's destructive fire, and the troops promptly responded, and carried the enemy's guns at the point of the bayonet.

So sudden and impetuous was the attack, and so successful, that Arista had not time to save his papers, which with all his correspondence, fell into the hands of Gen. Taylor.

The action lasted one hour and a half, in which time 600 Mexicans were either killed or wounded, and the Americans took 300 prisoners and eight pieces of artillery. The American loss in this action was but 62, killed and wounded.

Among the killed were Col. McIntosh, Lieut. Cochran, Col. Brown (by the bursting of a shell,) Lieut. Eng, and one or two others, whose names are not given. Colonel Payne, Lieuts. Gates, Burbank, Hooe, Luther and others were wounded.

We regret to say that Major Ringgold, who was so severely wounded in the action of the 8th, died on the 10th inst., and was buried next day with the honors of war.

The total loss of the Mexicans in the two actions of the 8th and 9th, was at least 1200. The Mexican force amounted to at least 6,000 men, while that of the Americans on the ground did not exceed 1600 men.

An exchange of prisoners took place between the two armies subsequent to the action, by which Capts. Thornton and Hardee and Lieut. Kane have been returned to the army. Lieut. Deas was not demanded and still remains a prisoner. Among the prisoners taken by Gen. Taylor was Gen. Veja. For him two American officers were offered in exchange, but it was declined to give him up, save in exchange for an American officer of equal rank, whenever one should be taken.
Gen. Vega and two Mexican Lieutenants were sent by Gen. Taylor on the Col. Harney as prisoners of war. Gen. Vega was allowed to be accompanied by one of his aides, a Lieutenant Colonel as a friend.

The Mexican army was so confident of victory that every preparation had been made to celebrate it; but all their preparations fell into the hands of the Americans. In their fight many of the Mexicans took the river, and were drowned in their attempts to swim it.

Gen Taylor reached his camp the afternoon of the action. Leaving there his whole force, he started the next morning for Point Isabel, and arrived there the evening of the 10th without molestation. The morning of the 11th he started back for his camp opposite Matamoras. We need not say that he and his army are in high spirits.

The steamer Dallas took off from this place (Montgomery) last night, the "Pintala Vanguards," numbering 70 hardy fellows; the Selma will take the "Blues" to-day, about 800 and to-morrow the "Rifles," about the same number, will leave for Mobile. Montgomery will have sent a battalion when all these have got off.

RW46v23i42p4c4, May 26, 1846: From the New Orleans Reformer. Late Intelligence from the Seat of WAR.

Arrival of the U. States sloop of war Flirt, The frigates Cumberland, Raritan and Potomac, brig Somers, and sloop John Adams, off the mouth of the Rio Grande, Departure of Gen. Taylor from Point Isabel, Engagement with the Enemy, Result not ascertained.

The sloop of war Flirt, captain Sinclair, arrived in the river late yesterday afternoon from Brasos St. Iago, which place she left about noon on the 8th inst. two days only subsequently to the sailing of the New York, which arrived at this port on Sunday evening last.

The intelligence brought by the Flirt is of an important character, but it leaves us all in painful suspense. Unless the Mexican force under Arista was much greater than has been conjectured, or than Gen. Taylor himself estimated it from the best information he was able to procure, the American forces will escape capture.

Gen. Taylor left Point Isabel on his return to his encampment opposite Matamoras, with about 2,000 men, and taking with him a large quantity of supplies, late in the afternoon of the 7th. Soon after his departure, and when it was supposed Gen. Taylor had proceeded about 9 miles on his route, a heavy cannonading was heard, which continued for several hours.

On the morning of the 8th, the firing was renewed, and was still heard when the Flirt left. The sound becoming less distinct, an impression was entertained that Gen. Taylor was forcing the enemy before him. The firing was heard by the officers of the Flirt when quite out to sea.

The officers of the Flirt saw about dark a dense volume of smoke rising in the direction of Matamoras, and their conjecture was that the American forces had fired the town.

There had been no communication with the camp near Matamoros, since the arrival of captain Walker, bringing information to Gen. Taylor at Point Isabel of the attacks of the Mexicans, and their repulse, on the 3d May. Walker had immediately returned with 75 men, but it was not known when the Flirt sailed whether he reached major Brown's quarters in safety or not.

Gen. Taylor was fully prepared for an encounter with the enemy, and had made every necessary disposition of his troops to give them the best fight in his power.

No apprehension was entertained for the safety of the small detachment under major Brown, left at fort Taylor. The defences were ample to resist any force Gen. Arista had at his command.

The fleet from Vera Cruz consisting of the frigates Cumberland, Raritan and Potomac, brig Somers, and sloop John Adams arrived off Brasos St. Iago on the night of the 7th. The Flirt was detained several hours to bring important despatches from commodore Conner.

The Day and Telegraph, government transports, were passed on their way down about 200 miles west of the Balize.

Capt. Thornton was alive, and a prisoner at Matamoras.

Our consul and the American residents in Matamoras, had been sent into the interior.

General Taylor again Victorious!!

Route of the Mexican Army!!!

Per steamer Col. Harney at New Orleans.

[Correspondence N. O. Tropic.]

BRASOS SANTIAGO, May 13.

At the receipt of the news of the first battle I wrote you a short account, the result of the second is now on hand, and it is most decisive. It now appears that the Mexicans had only five thousand men in the field at the first battle, and four thousand stowed away in the chapparel near the battle ground. It was their intention to have made but a slight attack the first day, but being so closely pressed they were obliged to make good their retreat to where the four thousand were in the chapparel. In the first fight a general officer had his head shot off, it is not yet ascertained who he was, as his body was recognized by his dress as he lay upon the field.

Gen. Taylor advanced the morning of the first battle in to the chapparel, then sent 800 picked men under the charge of Captain McCall, to reconnoitre, he advanced unmolested until near 3 P. M., (the army followed at a distance,) when Captain McCall sent word to Gen. Taylor, that he had received a charge of grape from the enemy, and lost two men.

The army was then deployed, and Captain May, 2d dragoons ordered to charge the battery that had thrown the grape, and to take it if he lost every man, he obeyed orders, took the battery of four guns and lost but one man. The battery was commanded by General de la Vega, who was taken prisoner.

Our little army of an army then rent the air with their huzzas, and rushing shouting upon the enemy, committing the most dreadful havoc among them, taking eight pieces of artillery, 155,000 rounds of cartridge, and 500 packed mules. General Arista's camp beaastead contained all his private and public baggage papers, which latter will be of great value, as we now not only have the key to the whole campaign, which will enable General Taylor to form his plans so as to entirely defeat their designs.

We took all and every thing they had, four hundred prisoners, and the army baggage. The enemy had between 8 and 9,000 troops in the two battles, but we with 1,800 troops completely routed them.

We exchanged prisoners, got Captain Thornton, Hardy and his little band. Our officers while prisoners were well treated, having lived with Ampudia ever since they were taken. Gen. Taylor would not exchange for Lieutenant Deas as a prisoner of war, as it would be sanctioning his crossing the river, which he did not, having reprobated his crossing in the severest manner.

In this second and glorious battle we lost about the same number of men as in the first, but had more officers wounded. Captain Walker with his heroic bank of Rangers, was the last that fired at the Mexicans, the army left him and his comrades on the bank of the river shooting them as they attempted to cross.

To-morrow General Taylor leaves here to make an attack on Matamoras, in connection with Com. Connor, who has sent a boat expedition up the river.

I forgot to mention that Gen. Taylor arrived here yesterday with all our wounded, between 50 and 60, with Gen Romulus De la Vega, one Mexican Capt. and two lieutenants, who go with this letter in the Col. Harney.

The Augusta from New Orleans arrived last evening. The mules from Matamoras, some 500, were sent in to-day, as well as the Mexican wounded.

I should not forget to mention that all the shell, ball and grape shot of the Mexicans are made of brass or copper.

This letter I must close, with details of glory enough for one day.

[BWP]
Since my last (not received) we have had two arrivals; the New York and brig Millaudon. The last brought the news that six steamboats with four thousand volunteers were about starting when she left. This news made us most cheerful, as we could not have then expected the result that has since taken place with our troops.

Despatches had been sent to Vera Cruz by General T., contents to us unknown, but rumor would have it that aforesaid Vera Cruz was to have been bombarded. Judge of our surprise then when at daylight on the morning of the 8th, after the whole squadron (Falmouth excepted) appeared off our harbor. The Commodore had not received the despatches from her, but was informed at Vera Cruz, that the Mexicans had marched 6 or 7,000 troops across by land to assist Gen. Arista in whipping Gen. Taylor.

Commodore C. therefore, thought very wisely that his presence here would do some good in the way of reinforcements. Gladly was he welcomed, as Gen. Taylor had marched out the evening previous to meet and conquer the enemy, taking with him twenty-two hundred men, teamsters included, with two hundred and fifty teams loaded with ammunitions, provisions, &c., which the Mexicans were no doubt apprized of, as the teams had been loaded ever since Monday last, awaiting the orders for a march at a moment's warning.

Gen T. left Point Isabel with little over four hundred men to defend it. Major Monroe, commanding here, sent a requisition to Com. Connor for as many men as he could spare, as we heard firing about 2 P. M. of the 8th, which continued with but little intermission until dark. Com. C. sent ashore 250 men, and on the 9th 4 or 500 more, which makes this place strong enough to withstand an attack against 20,000 men.

Believe me when I say there was the greatest excitement here all the afternoon of the 8th, as we could plainly hear the cannonading from the field of battle.

On the evening of the 8th, Mr. Murray and Mr. Bacon volunteered to go and find out the result.

On the morning of the 9th, a black boy came into camp, gave a history of the fight, which was about true, but as he had run away and left his team, he was not believed.

At 3 P. M. on the 9th, Messrs. M. and B. returned, and stated that they got to Gen. T.'s present camp, 16 miles from here, at 3 A. M. and learned that the army marched until about 16 miles from here, when they saw the Mexicans drawn up in battle array across his road, he immediately gave his orders for the teams to halt until the 2d Brigade had passed. The Mexicans were on the prairie near the edge of the chapparel. When Taylor got within ¼ of a mile they opened upon him with their flying artillery. Gen. Taylor arrived with Capt. Duncan and Maj. Ringgold's companies, and at it they went until about sunset, when the Mexicans had retreated to the edge of the chapparel, and ceased firing.

After which, Gen. Taylor fired ten or fifteen guns at them and set to work throwing up two breast-works. At daylight, the Mexicans were in the edge of the Chapparel. A Council of war was held by Gen. Taylor, and it was agreed that one Brigade should advance up to the Chapparel in hopes to draw the Mexicans into a renewal of the fight, but the more the troops advanced upon them, the more they want there of the Mexicans having retreated leaving three pieces of artillery, any quantity of ammunition from FOUR to SIX HUNDRED DEAD upon the field, and God only knows how many wounded they took away. One Mexican, who was stationed at one of their batteries, says every body but himself at the batteries was killed says the guns beat any thing they ever dreamed of, they were so quick. One of the Mexican officers in trying to rally his men, found he could not and commenced to cut them with his sword, when his troops shot him dead. We had 11 killed, and about 10 mortally wounded.

Captain Page of the 3d, had all the lower part of his face shot off with a cannon ball it is thought he will re-cover, though horribly mutilated. Major Ringold had the fleshy part of his legs shot through, and horse killed none of his bones broken, which is wonderful. Our informant says the field of battle was strewn with the dead, and they could hear the groans of the Mexicans wounded all night at Gen. T.'s camp. The Mexicans were commanded by General Maja. There is no doubt they have retreated across the river. When the volunteers arrive you may depend you will hear of them "reveling in the hills of the Montezumas," or peace and good will, will be whipped into those bombastic Mexicans. It is a matter of surprise that so few were lost on our side.

The monotony of this place has been relieved the last two days by the drilling of "Uncle Samuel's" "web-feet" or "barnacle backs" that came here from the Squadron. You would be surprised to see with what dexterity and precision they go through their evolutions with muskets, and no one could resist a laugh to hear some of their sayings. One old salt said this morning, "Damn and blast my eyes! here is a ship ashore, and poor jack on his beam ends." speech was addressed to himself when looking on the tent that had been pitched, and was of sufficient dimensions to hold about fifty-two.

One-third of the whole number of men from the squadron are Marines, the balance Tars. I should picture to myself a soldier, riding horseback or a cow as soon as that I should see four or five hundred sailors going into war with muskets on their shoulders, but you could not restrain them going against the Mexicans with only a knife and fork, if you would only show them a chance, for they are all eager for the fray. Yours, &c.

In the decisive battle Gen. Taylor lost about sixty killed and wounded, among whom there were three officers, viz: Lt. Inges, of the Dragoons; Lt. Cochran, of the 4th Infantry, and Lt. Chadburn, of the 8th Infantry. Among the wounded are Col. McIntosh, of the 5th Infantry; Lt. Col. Payne, 4th Artillery, and Capt. Hooe, 5th Infantry of them slightly, and none supposed mortally.

Major Ringgold, well known as the commander of the Flying Artillery, also died on the 11th, from wounds received in the action of the 8th.

Capt. Page, who was wounded in the same engagement, we are happy to state, is rapidly recovering. Lieut. Luther, also slightly wounded, in convalescent.

The Galveston arrived!! The Galveston is just in, having left Brasos Santiago on the evening of the 13th. We hasten to lay the news by her before our readers.

From the Galveston Civilian of the 15th.

On the morning of the 13th, Gen. Taylor and his staff, with the guard that had brought down the train, &c. started for the camp. He was met by an express a few miles from Point Isabel, informing him that 8000 fresh troops had arrived in Matamoras, 2000 of which had crossed over, and 1100 more had crossed the Rio Grande at Barrita, near the Bocachica, not more than 8 miles from Point Isabel. Gen. Taylor returned to Point Isabel at once, and made preparations to leave next day with such forces as were arriving. The steamship Galveston landed four hundred and fifty Infantry.~[Regulars and Volunteers;]~ the Augusta landed about 250; Capt. Price arrived via Padre Island from Corpus Christi, with his company of 70 mounted Rangers. They all reached the point on the 13th. The Telegraph and James L. Day will doubtless land their troops, amounting to upwards of 800, at Point Isabel on the 14th. Great credit is due to Capt. Smith, of the steamship Cincinnati, and Capt. R. McBaker, of the Monmouth, for the skill, energy and promptness, shown in transporting troops and supplies across the Bay at the Brasos Santiago.

Gen. Paredes is at the head of 15,000 troops, on his way to Matamoros. It may possibly be that the fresh troops arrived at Matamoros, is the advance division of his army. No doubt the enemy were fully advised that Gen'l Taylor had left for Point Isabel, and their plan is to try and capture him on his return, whilst a strong force crossing above, is to come down upon his army. Gen. Taylor appeared highly pleased with the intelligence; for since the war has opened and no mistake, the excitement and activity attending operations, opens a new era to his vigorous achievements, and all have remarked how much better he looks than when confined to the "masterly inactivity" of the Corpus Christi campaign.

The brave and gallant Major Brown died on 23 May, from a wound received in his thigh by the explosion of one of the enemy's shells. His wound was not considered dangerous, but as he was placed in one of the bomb proof burrows, mortification ensued, from the want of fresh air. His death is deeply deplored by the army; his intrepid conduct in foiling every attempt of the enemy to reduce the Fort prepared them in a measure to anticipate the result of these conflicts with our brave army. The strength of the fort and skill with which it is defended, is incomprehensible to the Mexicans, and indeed well it might be, for they have thrown upwards of 1400 shot and shell into the works, and every morning they present the same appearance; our loss has only been two or three in the Fort. The constant practice the enemy have had in firing at it, has taught them the proper bearing to give to their guns, and almost every shot falls within the works. The Fort is never idle, and the ramparts and dwellings of Matamoros exhibit ruins as plainly as those of a hundred Centuries when gaping forth their lamentation of lo! and behold what desolation is here.

The sloop-of-war St. Mary's, arrived from Pensacola on the 10th; the steamer Mississippi on the 12th from Vera Cruz. The Bainbridge is off the Rio Grande, enforcing the blockade. The schooner Flirt sailed for New Orleans on the
It is stated that an expedition is to be sent by boats of the squadron to take the town of Barita, 16 miles from the mouth of the river, where there is a military force.

General Vega is the Col. Vega that was captured by the Texan forces at the Slaughter of San Jacinto. He was also at the Fall of the Alamo, and is a brave and accomplished officer.

RW46v23i43p1c1, May 29, 1846: Course of the Whigs.

The ungenerous assaults so frequently made upon the Whigs, in connection with the Mexican War, by Journals devoted to the Administration, which seem to regard every unfriendly criticism upon the conduct of the President as synonymous with a want of attachment to the country in the prosperity of which, by the way, it may safely be assumed, the Whigs, as a party, have at least as deep an interest as their assailants fully justify the following severe retort, which we find in the last New York Express:

"The 'Union,' as the organ of the Government, is making itself contemptible in the imputations it throws out against the patriotism of the Whigs, and the Whig Press, in this Mexican war.

"Who is Gen. Taylor, now leading our arms to victory and to glory, in Mexico? A warm hearted, staunch, high minded, Henry Clay Whig. Mr. Clay has not a warmer friend in the world, one more devoted to him, one who was more anxious for his election to the Presidency. Nor was there a man in the country more opposed to the Texas annexation, or to THE WAY IT WAS DONE.

"Who is Major Ringgold, whose life has just been offered up in the battle-field? Another Whig, and a Henry Clay Whig! who was thoroughly opposed to Texas annexation, and THE WAY IT WAS DONE. We did not know Col. McIntosh and the others, who have fallen, but from the gallant bearing, in the discharge of their duty, we have no doubt they were men of the same school.

"Commodore Conner, who has rushed to the scene of the war off the Brazos, as soon as he heard of it, is, we are told, another Whig. Gen. Scott, who is to lead our forces in Mexico, has been a leading Whig candidate for the Presidency, and has poured out his blood freely for his country.

"The Whigs are not SPOUTERS, froth-makers, declaimers, rampant orators, such as the 54 40 men are, and all that clan and school of mock patriots; but when any hard fighting is to be done for their country, when men or money are wanted in the battle-field, they are there, not spouting, nor making speeches, but ACTING, as Gen. Taylor does. If there are any cowards in the day of trial, any distinguished for their words, and recreant in their acts, they will be found among the froth 'democracy.' When Whigs make pledges they MEAN what they say, which is much more than can be said of the Dorr democracy men."

We do not concur in so much of the foregoing article as seems to insinuate that our political opponents are destitute either of patriotism or courage. Those qualities, we respectfully suggest, are monopolized by neither party; and, we do not question that the "rank and file" of both will always be found promptly rallying under their country's flag whenever the emergency may demand their services. Is it not, however, most ungenerous and most unjust, that the Whigs, as a party, should be so constantly assailed, and held up to public reprobation, as devoid of national feelings and sympathies, because a few of their number an infinitesimal portion whose affinities are known to be with the Abolitionists, have thought proper, since the commencement of hostilities on the Mexican frontier, to express unpatriotic and anti-national sentiments and opinions? Is it not equally unfair and ungenerous to construe every unfriendly criticism upon the conduct of the Administration, in the progress of the Mexican controversy, as in itself evidence of a lack of patriotism, and to stigmatize those who question the infallibility of Mr. James K. Polk, as has been done by one Locofoco Editor, as guilty of "modified treason!" Has it come to this, that although, when war exists, the Whigs are as ready as their opponents to pour out their treasured and their blood in defence of their country, they are to be denied the right to express an opinion in regard to the character of the measures by which its peace has been disturbed? Are the tax-payers and the fighting men to be gagged, as well as to be fleeced and slain? To what consequences might not this slavish dogma lead? If a state of war is to stifle enquiry into the means by which the country has been involved in it, and to silence all discussion on the subject, and if every expression of opinion adverse to the policy of the Administration is to be silenced by the clamors of its partizans, proclaiming that those who pause thus to examine and to criticize the acts of the Government, are traitors and poltroons, it is easy to see that the tremendous power of making war, though vested by the Constitution exclusively in the representatives of the people, in Congress assembled, may at any moment be exercised with impunity by the Executive, from whom, for the gravest reasons, that power has been expressly withheld. At this very moment, indeed, the President might plunge us into a war with Great Britain, by a course not dissimilar to that which he has pursued towards Mexico. Let us suppose that before the expiration of the convention of joint occupation by which Oregon is held by the United States and Great Britain in common, the President should order an armed force to march to the extreme limits of the territory, our title to which he has pronounced, authoritatively and officially, to be "clear and unquestionable," with a view to take exclusive possession and to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over it. Every man will at once admit that this would be an act of aggression which Great Britain could not fail to regard as equivalent to a declaration of war; and the reception of the intelligence in Downing street would at once lead to preparations for resistance and retaliation.
The armies and navies of Great Britain would be promptly put in motion to avenge the outrage, and we should be attacked at every assailable point. No one would doubt, at such a moment, the duty of every good citizen to meet and repel the enemy. But will any patriot will any man who regards the Constitution as the sheet anchor of our liberties, and, who, sees, in this usurpation by the Executive of the war-making power, a dangerous infraction of that charter will any man, who professes to be governed by the maxim, that while, as a nation, we ought to submit to no wrong, so on the other hand, we should demand nothing of other nations which is not right hesitate, even in the act of contributing his money or of shouldering his musket, to condemn the act of the Administration, by which the country would be involved by the Executive in an unjust war, and these pecuniary and personal sacrifices rendered necessary? Surely not. To argue otherwise, would be to give a carte blanche to the President to break down all the checks and limitations which were designed by the framers of the Constitution as barriers against the encroachments of that officer, and as safeguards to the interests, rights, and liberties of the people. In truth, if this dogma is to prevail, the President is "every inch a King," and is invested with unlimited authority. In Great Britain even, where the Monarch has the exclusive power to declare war and to make peace, the Commons May hold him in check, if he attempt to exercise it capriciously and unjustly, by withholding from him the "supplies" necessary to its prosecution.

RW46v23i43p1c2, May 29, 1846: Mr. Benton

This gentleman had not concluded his great Oregon speech at our last dates from Washington. It will doubtless, when finished, embody a great deal of new and valuable information upon this delicate and interesting question. Mr. B. has displayed, on this occasion, a quality, in which too many of our leading Statesmen are unfortunately deficient we mean fearlessness in the expression of opinions honestly entertained, after diligent and careful examination, favorable to the claims of a foreign Government, although that government be in collision with our own. Where he believes the British claim to be a valid one, he has not been afraid to say so in plain language nor has he hesitated to deny our right to certain portions of Oregon, although our infallible President has asserted the unquestionable validity of our title to those portions. Yet we have seen no attempt made to lead Mr. Benton out of the church no attack upon him as a "British Whig" no attack upon his orthodoxy in the columns of the Executive Organ, or its echoes. Why this forbearance? If Mr. Archer, or Mr. Crittenden, or Mr. Mangum, or any other distinguished Whig, had uttered such sentiments, he would have been promptly impealed by the Union and its associates and branded as an enemy of his country. But, when Mr. Benton speaks, they are struck dumb. Their silence, nevertheless, is one of the strongest proofs of their intense sufferings (of which we have other evidences) under the severe infliction of the Missouri Senator. If he had pitched his pipes to the same note on which "the organs, great and small," have harped so long, with what rapturous sounds his speech would have been greeted! We pity them, that they are compelled to endure, without a murmur loud enough to reach that Senator's ears, his luminous exposure of the glaring absurdity of the pretensions originally set up by Mr. Polk, and his refutation of the ridiculous arguments by which the "all or none" doctrine has been maintained by the unfortunate Fifty-four Forties.

RW46v23i43p1c2, May 29, 1846: The Interior of Mexico.

The New York Journal of Commerce has the following geographical and topographical information concerning the region east of the Rio Grande. The Journal has derived it from an intelligent American merchant who has resided at Matamoras for eight years. It is, at this particular juncture, very interesting and important:

"The distance from the Nueces to the Del Norte is about seventy-five miles. On the banks of both these rivers is a strip of good land, extending fifteen or twenty miles each way. The rest is a worthless barten. Matamoras is healthy, the yellow fever never appearing there more than in New York; and so it is through all the interior of Mexico. The Del Norte has many bars; so that only vessels of very light draft of water can go up to Matamoras. Above, it is navigated by scows for a hundred miles. The distance from Matamoras to the Gulf is twenty-six miles, and to Point Isabel something more. The Point is a poor place to land merchandise, as a vessel cannot come within a mile of the shore. The distance to the city of Mexico is from nine hundred to a thousand miles. A small mail is transported the whole distance on horseback, at the rate of sixty miles a day, and occupies sixteen days.

"From Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico is four hundred miles over an excellent Macadamized road, which was built by the Spanish Government long ago, and is now in good repair. Besides this, there are no made roads in Mexico. Except in the immediate neighborhood of the large towns. Waggonen, and even coaches, pass from Matamoras to Mexico, over a traveled road passing through all varieties of country, and with great labor. The fortress of D'Ulloa, which defends Vera Cruz, has always been counted as impregnable, though the French took it a few years ago, in consequence of an explosion which occurred by accident, within the castle. Troops marching from Matamoras for Mexico would pass through many defiles and woods, must cross all the streams without bridge, (for there are next to none in the Republic,) and must, in addition to their military preparations, carry their provisions, and, a portion of the way, their water too--for there are districts where, for sixty miles, no water is to be obtained. The Mexicans understand guerilla warfare, and are fond of it; so that if our grand army of fifty thousand men were to start over this road, with the appropriated ten millions of dollars in their purse, there would probably be little left of either men or money, when the procession should reach the renowned city of the Incas. We hope, if such an expedition is to be undertaken, the men of 54 40 will not hesitate to head the column for the inevitable war. There are richer jewels to stimulate hope for this southern march than any thing which has ever been discovered north of 49. We will agree that it General Cass will go to Mexico and back, he may afterward taunt common men with cowardice."

We insert in another column the official account of the recent battles on the Mexican frontier, from the pen of the gallant commanding officer. They add nothing material to the facts previously in possession of the public, though those facts are detailed in a more concise, perspicuous and authentic form. General Taylor speaks in high and doubtless unexaggerated terms of praise of the conduct of his subordinates. Of himself, however, of course, he could say nothing. His junior officers, however, will not permit injustice to be done him. One of them, writing to his correspondent in New Orleans, for example, says: "The General behaved most gallantly. In the second battle he was more exposed than any one else; and there he sat, part of the time, giving his orders, with his leg 'cocked over' the pummel of the saddle, unheeding the solicitations of his Staff to retire."

The New Orleans Tropic nominates WALKER, the brave and gallant Texan, as first American Governor of the State of Tumaulipas. Has it no one in reserve for New Mexico, Coahuila, and Chihuahua? Does it not know one, whose tastes and habits peculiarly fit him to REVEL in the halls of the Montezumas?

The N. Y. Herald of the 24th inst. Contains melancholy intelligence from the Cape de Verde Islands, received by an arrival at Boston. One of them, Bona Vista, has lately been visited by the Yellow Fever, which has swept off one eighth of the population, and was still spreading. Famine has been added to the pestilence, and numbers of the people are perishing for food. An appeal is therefore made to the citizens of the U. States, on the part of the starving inhabitants of Bona Vista, which it is hoped will be quickly and liberally responded to. Capt. Yarrington, of the brig Pauline, at Boston, has volunteered to deliver to them the contributions of the benevolent.

The Washington correspondent of the Charleston Mercury writes as follows:

"War on somebody by this Congress, seems to be necessary. If it don't make Presidents in future, it will at least kill the proposed modifications of the Tariff. To get rid of this question is doubtless one of the leading causes, which have governed events here for the last six months. Nobody, however, should be surprised at the state of things on our frontier, from the time Gen. Taylor was sent to the Rio Grande directly opposite Matamoras. All reforms are probably at an end; and the South will only reap accumulated taxes and burdens as her part of the achievements of this Administration."

The Baltimore Patriot states that the Catholic Clergy of the Georgetown College have all offered their services, in the present war, as Chaplains in the Army, and that the President has selected the Rev. John McElroy and the Rev. Mr. McRae, for that purpose, who will proceed forthwith to join the army.

RW46v23i43p1c3, May 29, 1846: Lieut. Deas.

LIEUT. DEAS. Although from the peculiar circumstances of the case of Lieut. Deas, Gen. Worth was unable to exchange for him, we learn that strong hopes are entertained that the Mexicans of their own accord will allow that gentleman to return to the American army. The rash act, of which he has suffered already severe consequences, was one of courage and generous devotion, and will be judged of more leniently by public opinion than almost any other violation of military discipline. —PICAYUNE.-[WP]

Five out of the six printers on the Vicksburg Daily Whig belong to volunteer companies, and some of them have already enrolled their names to march to the Rio Grande when required.

[WP]

The Investigating Committee make slow work, but the Committee to investigate the facts in relation to Mr. Ingersoll, will report at an early day. The Disbursing Ck, (Mr Stubbins) will probably be regarded as one of the principal offenders, and will no doubt lose his office. Mr. Tyler will have certain interrogatories submitted to him, to answer in writing, (the other committee have summoned him in person to be present.)

Mr. Adams, Mr. J. Y. Mason, and Mr. Cushing are summoned to answer certain questions as to the practices of the Committee on Foreign Relations. This subject, from long delay lost much of its interest, but the time of reporting will give it freshness. Mr. Webster will be entirely acquitted, and the charges fall with severe indignation upon the heads of those who made them.

On the specifications, you will remember, was the corruption of the public press. This is entirely disproved. The only money paid to any press was for printing some blank forms of petitions.

Mr. Tyler, I learn, was expected to reach the city this evening.

I hear it said this evening that in consequence of Gen. Taylor's great success, he will be suffered to remain at the head of the Army.

The law introduced by Mr. Berrien of Ga. to-day in the Senate, provides that the receiving of any letters of marque from any foreign Prince or State, in violation of treaty with the U. States, shall, be punished as piracy, and the Circuit Courts of the U. S. are empowered to try and determine accordingly.

The President to-day nominated Gen. Taylor to the Senate as Brev. Major-General, and the nomination was unanimously confirmed by the Senate.

RW46v23i43p1c5, May 29, 1846: Official.

We have received, at an hour too late for any special remarks upon them, (says the Union, of Monday night,) the official despatches from the War and Navy Departments. We lose no time in laying them before our readers. It will be seen that they confirm substantially the accounts already published:

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION
POINT ISABEL, Texas, May 7, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully report, that I shall march this day with the main body of the army to open a communication with Major Brown, and throw forward supplies of ordinance and provisions. If the enemy oppose my march, in whatever force, I shall fight him. Occasional guns are heard in the direction of Matamoras, showing that everything is right in that quarter.
Yesterday, the recruits under Lieut. McPhail arrived here. After filling up the companies of the permanent garrison, (A 1st arty. And G 4th arty.,) the remainder of the detachment, with its officers was placed under Maj. Monroe's orders to assist in the field, though efficient for garrison defence. They will be permanently assigned as soon as practicable.

The four companies of the first infantry are hourly expected, and will be a seasonable reinforcement. The first shipment of volunteers from New Orleans may also soon be looked for. Their arrival will enable me to open the river and free our communications.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obd't serv't,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig'r Gen. U. S. A. Com'g.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,

Washington, D. D.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,

Camp at Palo Alto, Texas, May 9, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I was met near this place yesterday, on my march from Point Isabel, by the Mexican forces, and after an action of about five hours dislodged them from their position and encamped upon the field. Our artillery, consisting of two 18-pounders and two light batteries, was the arm chiefly engaged, and to the excellent manner in which it was maneuvered and served is our success mainly due.

The strength of the enemy is believed to have been about six thousand men, with seven pieces of artillery, and eight hundred cavalry. His loss is probably at least one hundred, killed. Our strength did not exceed all told twenty-three hundred, while our loss was comparatively trifling four men killed, three officers and thirty-seven men wounded, several of the latter mortally. I regret to say that Major Ringgold, 3d artillery, and Captain Page, 4th infantry, are severely wounded. Lieutenant Luther, 2d artillery, slightly so.

The enemy has fallen back, and it is believed has repassed the river. I have advanced parties now thrown forward in his direction and shall move the main body immediately.

In the haste of this first report, I can only say that the officers and men behaved in the most admirable manner throughout the action. I shall have the pleasure of making a more detailed report when those of the different commanders shall be received. I am, sir, very respectfully

Your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

The Adjutant General, U. S. Army
Washington, D. C.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,

Camp at Resaca de la Palma,
3 miles from Matamoras,
10 o'clock, P. M., May 9, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I marched with the main body of the army at two o'clock to-day, having previously thrown forward a body of light infantry into the forest which covers the Matamoras road. When near the spot where I am now encamped, my advance discovered that a ravine crossing the road had been occupied by the enemy with artillery. I immediately ordered a battery of field artillery to sweep the position, flanking and sustaining it by the 3d, 4th and 5th regiments, deployed as skirmishers to the right and left. A heavy fire of artillery and of musketry was kept up for some time, until finally the enemy's batteries were carried in succession by a squadron of dragoons and the regiments of infantry that were on the ground. He was soon driven from his position, and pursued by a squadron of dragoons, battalion of artillery, 3d infantry, and a light battery to the river. Our victory has been complete. Eight pieces artillery, with a great quantity of ammunition, three standards, and some one hundred prisoners, have been taken; among the latter, General La Vega, and several other officers. One General is understood to have been killed. The enemy has recrossed the river, and I am sure will not again molest us on this bank.
It affords me peculiar pleasure to report, that the field work opposite Matamoras has sustained itself handsomely during a cannonade and bombardment of 160 hours. But the pleasure is alloyed with profound regret at the loss of its heroic and indomitable commander, Major Brown, who died to-day from the effect of a shell. His loss would be a severe one to the service at any time, but to the army under my orders it is indeed irreparable. One officer and one non-commissioned officer killed, and ten men wounded, comprise all the casualties incident to this severe bombardment.

The loss of the enemy in killed has been most severe. Our own has been very heavy, and I deeply regret to report that Lieutenant Inge, 24 Dragoons, Lieutenant Cochrane, 4th Infantry, and Lieutenant Chadbourne, 8th Infantry, were killed on the field. Lieutenant Colonel Payne, 4th Artillery, Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh, Lieutenant Dobbins, 3d
Infantry, captain Hooe, and Lieutenant Fowler, 5th Infantry, and captain Montgomery, Lieutenant Gates, Selden, McClay, Burbank, and Jordan, 8th Infantry, were wounded. The extent of our loss in killed and wounded is not yet ascertained, and is reserved for a more detailed report.

The affair of to-day may be regarded as a proper supplement to the cannonade of yesterday; and the two taken [together], exhibit the coolness and gallantry of our officers and men in the most favorable light. All have done their duty, and done it nobly. It will be my pride, in a more circumstantial report of both actions, to dwell upon particular instances of individual distinction.

I inadvertently omitted to mention the capture of a large number of pack mules left in the Mexican camp.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z TAYLOR,
Lt. Brig'r General U. S. A., Com'g.

The Adjutant General, U. S. Army
Washington, D. C.

[ORDERS
─
No. 59.]

1. The Commanding General congratulates the army under his command upon the signal success which has crowned its recent operations against the enemy. The coolness and steadiness of the troops during the action of the 8th, and the brilliant impetuosity with which the army's position and artillery were carried on the 9th, have displayed the best qualities of the American soldier. To every officer and soldier of his command, the General publicly returns his thanks for the noble manner in which they have sustained the honor of the service and of the country. While the main body of the army has been thus actively employed, the garrison left opposite Matamoras has rendered no less distinguished service by sustaining a severe cannonade and bombardment for many successive days. The army and the country, while justly rejoicing in this triumph of our arms, will deplore the loss of many brave officers and men, who fell gallantly in the hour of combat.

2. It being necessary for the Commanding General to visit Point Isabel on public business, Col. Twiggs will assume command of the corps of the army near Matamoras, including the garrison of the field-work. He will occupy the former lines of the army, making such disposition for defence, and for the comfort of his command, as he may deem advisable. He will hold himself strictly on the defensive until the return of the Commanding General.

By order of Brig. Gen. TAYLOR:

W. W. J. BLISS,
Acting Adjutant General.

[ORDERS
─
No. 61.]

Sir: I am making a hasty visit to this place, for the purpose of having an interview with Commodore Conner, whose squadron is now at anchor off the harbor, and arranging with him a combined movement up the river. I avail myself of the brief time at my command to report, that the main body of the army is now occupying its former position opposite Matamoras. The Mexican forces are almost disorganized, and I shall lose no time in investing Matamoras, and opening the navigation of the river.
I regret to report, that Maj. Ringgold died the morning of the 11th inst., of the severe wounds received in the action of Palo Alto. With the exception of Capt. Page, whose wound is dangerous, the other wounded officers are doing well. In my report of the second engagement, I accidentally omitted the name of Lieut. Dobbins, 3d Infantry, among the officers slightly wounded, and desire that the omission may be supplied in the despatch itself. I am under the painful necessity of reporting that Lieut. Blake, topographical engineers, after rendering distinguished service in my staff during the affair of the 8th inst., accidentally shot himself with a pistol on the following day, and expired before night.

It has been quite impossible as yet to furnish detailed reports of our engagements with the enemy, or even accurate returns of the killed and wounded. Our loss is not far from 3 officers and 40 men killed and 13 officers and 100 men wounded; while that of the enemy has in all probability exceeded 300 killed, more than 200 have been buried by us on the two fields of battle.

I have exchanged a sufficient number of prisoners to recover the command of Capt. Thorston. The wounded prisoners have been sent to Matamoras [I] the wounded officers on their parole. Gen. la Vega and a few other officers have been sent to New Orleans, having declined a parole, and will be reported to Maj. Gen. Gaines. I am not conversant with the usages of war in such cases, and beg that such provisions may be made for these prisoners as may be authorized by law. Our own prisoners have been treated with great kindness by the Mexican officers.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obd't serv't,

Z. TAYLOR,
Lt. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., com'dg,

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL of the army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION.
Fort Polk, Texas, May 12, 1846

[ORDERSNo. 60]

As a mark of respect to the Chief Magistrate of the Republic, the work constructed at this place, to cover the main depot of the army, will be known as "Fort Polk."

The Commanding General takes this occasion to express his satisfaction with the dispositions made for the defence and protection of this point, so vitally important to the efficiency and security of the army. To Maj. Monroe, the commanding officer, captain Saunders of the Engineers, Majors Thomas and MacRee, and captains Sibley and Hill of the Quartermaster's department, captain Ramsey of the Ordnance, and Lieutenant Montgomery of the subsistence departments, credit is especially due for their zeal and activity. The General returns his thanks to numerous citizens who volunteered their services in the defence of the depot. Their assistance added materially to its strength, and to his confidence in its ability to resist an attack. The reinforcement from the brig "Lawrence," under Lieut. Renshaw, and the large force of seamen and marines so promptly furnished by the squadron on its arrival, require a special acknowledgement to Commodore Conner and Commander Mercer of the navy. The army is deeply grateful for this support and co-operation from a kindred branch of the public service.

By order of Brigadier General Taylor,
W. W. J. BLISS.
Acting Adjutant General.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION.
Point Isabel, Texas, May 12, 1846

[SPECIAL ORDERS, No. 62]

1. General la Vega and the other Mexican officers prisoners of war, will be conducted to New Orleans under charge of Lieut. J. J. Reynolds 4th Artillery, who will report on his arrival to Major General Gaines for further instructions. The quartermasters department will furnish a steamer for the transportation of the party.

2. As many of the sick and wounded now at this place as may be indicated by Surgeon Wood, will be sent in suitable transports to St. Joseph's island.

Assistant Surgeon Byrne will accompany the detachment and will return with the convalescents that may be in condition to leave the general hospital. The quartermaster's department will furnish the proper transportation.

By order of Brigadier General Taylor,
W. W. J. BLISS,
Acting Adjutant General.

THE UNITED STATES SHIP CUMBERLAND,
Off Brazos Santiago, May 9, 1846.

Sir:—The arrival of the squadron at this anchorage, of which the department was informed, in my communication of yesterday, was most opportune. To obtain a supply of provisions from the depot at Point Isabel, Gen. Taylor after leaving Major Brown with five hundred men in charge of the works at Matemoras, marched for the former place with the remainder of his forces, consisting of two thousand men. On his return, when within twelve or fifteen miles of Matamoras, he encountered the enemy in considerable force, estimated at from six to seven thousand men, with a large portion of cavalry. An engagement took place about 10 o'clock yesterday morning, which lasted until night. A pilot in the employment of the United States at this bar, who visited the army to-day, informs me that our loss amounted to sixty killed, and that Gen. Taylor had offered the enemy battle again to-day, but that it was declined. From the rapid and incessant firing, particularly of artillery, throughout the day, I should infer the loss of the enemy must have been very considerable. No further particulars have reached me. Shortly after the action commenced, I received a communication from Major Monroe, commanding Point Isabel requesting a reinforcement from the squadron for the defence of that post, where it appears all the supplies for the army are deposited. In the course of yesterday afternoon and this morning, five hundred seamen and marines under the command of Captain Gregory, of the Raritan, were landed from the Squadron—a force, it is believed, sufficient to defend it against any attempt that the enemy can make. A reinforcement for the army is hourly expected from Galveston and New Orleans.

I am very respectfully your obedient servant,

D. CONNER,
Commanding Home Squadron.

Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

THE UNITED STATES SHIP CUMBERLAND,
Off Brazos Santiago, May 13, 1846.

Sir: In my communication of the 9th inst., of which a duplicate is enclosed, the department was informed that a battle had been fought on the day previous, between the American and Mexican forces near Matamoras. On the 9th, Gen. Taylor continued to advance towards his works opposite that place, the Mexican army under Gen. Arista falling back before him until within two and a half miles from the American works when it made a stand, and a general action engaged, which ended in the complete route of the enemy. All his artillery, several standards, nearly all his baggage, ammunition and stores, with a large number of prisoners, among whom were Gen. la Vega, and other officers of rank, were captured. The enemy maintained his position bravely, and did not abandon it, without very severe loss. Our loss is stated to be about 60 killed and wounded. So signal has been the defeat, that it is not believed the enemy will be able to assemble in any force for a considerable time. This event, with the arrival to-day of nearly 1000 volunteers from New Orleans, has placed the army in perfect security. It is my intention to despatch such vessels of the squadron as are not in immediate want of water, to blockade the Mexican ports—leaving the Lawrence to cruise in this neighborhood for the protection of the vessels engaged in furnishing the army with supplies.

I am, very respectfully,

D. CONNER,
Commanding Home Squadron.

Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

An invasion from different points, at the same time, the forces all aiming at the city of Mexico, has been talked of. A distinguished officer of the Army has, it is said, given it as his opinion that a force of a hundred thousand men will be necessary for this object.

In the meantime the Government have taken a step which is quite as decided and important as a march to the Mexican capital. The American squadron, under Commodore Stockton, have orders to make possession of St. Francisco and Monterey, and to hold those places against all opposition. I know this to be a fact.

IN SENATE.

Mr. Dix presented a petition praying the extension of Morse’s Magnetic Telegraph, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

On motion of Mr. Pearce, the Committee on Military Affairs was instructed to enquire into the expediency of providing for the distribution of public property captured during the war among the officers and soldiers engaged in it.

Mr. Berrien reported a bill in reference to the article in our treaty of 1795 with Spain, relating to the taking out of letters of marque, &c. The bill and report were ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Johnson of La. the bill to provide for the adjustment of land claims in the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama, was taken up.

The bill, after being amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Dix, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill supplemental to the act providing for the prosecution of the existing war with Mexico.

Mr. Dix explained the necessity which exists for the increase in the number of Brigadier Generals and Major Generals, in consequence of the increase in the rank and file of the Army, and showed the great injustice which would be inflicted by the adoption of the amendment offered yesterday by Mr. Atchison.

Mr. Morehead briefly opposed the first section as it stood, and was unwilling to place citizens over the heads of officers who have devoted life-time to the service; over such men as General Taylor; “old, rough and ready,” as he is called; and if the appointments should be authorized, he was in favor of requiring the President to make them from among those who should distinguish themselves in the war, and not from citizens; from more partizans.

Mr. Miller moved to amend, by striking out Mr. Atchison’s amendment and inserting in lieu thereof a proviso that the officers shall be selected from the Army.

Mr. Allen was opposed to both amendments. The first was inexpedient; the last unconstitutional. He wished to leave it to the President to select the officers from the Army or from citizens at his discretion. He desired to show to the people, that great appointments of this kind were open to all alike, and not to be given only to a favored class.

Mr. Mangum was in favor of Mr. Atchison’s amendment, and thought that means would be taken to secure to the country the use of any brilliant military talents which might be displayed during the war.

Mr. Benton opposed the amendment of Mr. Atchison, and, was opposed to the appointment of temporary generals which would lead to great difficulties, heart burnings and jealousies.

Mr. Johnson of Md. moved to amend the amendment by excepting the officers who should be appointed from the Army, from its operation.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Oass, Niles, Allen, Crittenden, Simmons and Webster, until near 4 o’clock, when the Senate went into Executive session, and afterwards adjourned.

RW46v23i43p2c1, May 29, 1846: Mr. Benton’s Great Speech.

The numerous and pressing demands upon our columns at this moment, will not permit us to publish at length the able and conclusive argument of the Senator from Missouri, in which, as with a pencil of light, he traces the true boundary line between the American and British possessions in Oregon. We cannot forbear, however, to present to our readers a condensed view of his leading positions.

The basis of Mr. Benton’s argument is this—that the country presents three distinct geographical divisions, to each of which a different claim and a different degree of claim attaches, and which cannot be confounded under any one general view without a general mystification and total confusion of the whole subject. The Columbia river and its valley is one of these divisions; the Islands along the coast is another; Frazer’s river and its valley is the third.

Beginning with the “the Islands,” which he describes as “a net-work, some large, some small, chequered in together, and covering the coast to the extent of one, two, and even three hundred miles in front of the continent,” he proceeds to trace the titles of the various nations which at different periods have made discoveries in that region, but none of which made permanent settlements. In neither the title or the value of these islands does he see anything to fight about. His conclusion is, that "our title to these islands is better than that of the British, but that neither is perfect for want of settlement; and that now, as proposed in 1824, they should follow the fate of the continental divisions in front of which they lie."

The second division of Oregon is called Frazer's river and its valley, the upper part of which is good for navigation, but the lower part is wholly unnavigable for any species of craft. Our claim to it rests upon the Spanish treaty of 1819; and the claim of Spain rests wholly upon her discoveries among the Islands. At the time that we acquired this Spanish claim, Mr. Benton says, the country had already been discovered 26 years by the British; had been settled by them for twelve years; was known by a British name; and no Spaniard had ever made a track upon its banks. And he quotes from a book of travels, written by an American, Mr. David Harmon, and published in 1820, giving a description of this country, called New Caledonia, to show that it was then universally regarded as a British province, and that not the slightest suspicion was entertained that it belonged to Spain. Indeed, he affirms that the Spaniards never claimed it themselves. Holding up a 54 40 map, he showed that that line, which takes in the province of New Caledonia, would embrace a line of British posts, from Fort McLeod at its head to Fort Langley at its mouth, and from Thompson's Fork on one side, to Stuart's Fork on the other. "And here (he said) are clusters of British names imposed by the British visible everywhere—Forts George, St. James, Simpson, Thompson, Frazer, and others; rivers and lakes, with these names and others." This famous line, "starting at the sea, gives us, by a quarter of an inch on the map, Fort Simpson, so named after the British Governor Simpson, and founded by the Hudson's Bay Company. Upon what principle we take this British Fort, (said Mr. B.,) I know not." "This is the country which geography and history, five and twenty years ago, called new Caledonia, and treated as a British possession—and it is the country which an organ-ized party among ourselves of the present day call 'the whole of Oregon or none,' and every inch of which they say belongs to us." Mr. B. then read several extracts from the instructions of the American Secretary of State to Mr. Rush, then our Minister to Great Britain, in order to show that at that time four years after the Spanish treaty was negotiated, we claimed only to the parallel of 49, and not a foot beyond, conceding that Frazer's river and its valley, our title to which President Polk pronounces so "clear and unquestionable," was a province of the British Empire. "The British (said Mr. Benton,) who know all this, must be astonished at our fifty-four forty war fever of "today!" This part of his argument is thus summed up:

"On Friday, Mr. President, I read one passage from the documents of 1823 to let you see that fifty-four forty (for that is the true reading of fifty-five) had been offered to Great Britain for her northern boundary: to-day I read you SIX PASSAGES from the same documents to show the same thing. And let me remark once more—the remark will bear eternal repetition—these offers were made by the men who had acquired the Spanish title to Oregon! And who must be presumed to know as much about it as those whose acquaintance with Oregon dates from the epoch of the Baltimore Convention—whose love for it dates from the era of its promulgation as a party watchword—whose knowledge of it extends to the luminous pages of Mr. Greenhow's book!

"Six times Mr. Monroe and his Cabinet renounced Fraser's river and its valley, and left it to the British! They did so on the intelligible principle that the British had discovered it, and settled it, and were in the actual possession of it when we got the Spanish claim; which claim Spain never made! Upon this principle New Caledonia was left to the British in 1823. Upon what principle is it claimed now?

"This is what Mr. Monroe and his Cabinet thought of our title to the whole of Oregon or none, in the year 1823. They took neither branch of this proposition. They did not go for all or none, but for some! They took some and left some; and they divided by a line right in itself, and convenient in itself, and mutually suitable to each party. This President and his Cabinet carry their "unquestionable right" to Oregon as far as 49, and no further. This is exactly what was done six years before. Mr. Gallatin and Mr. Rush offered the same line as being the continuation of the line of Utrecht, [describing it by that name in their despatch of October 20th, 1818] and as covering the valley of the Columbia river, to which they alleged our title to be indisputable. Mr. Jefferson had offered the same line in 1807. All these offers leave Frazer's river and its valley to the British, because they discovered and settled it. All those offers hold on to the Columbia river and its valley, because they discovered and settled it; and all these offers let the principle of contiguity or continuity work equally on the British as on the American side of the line of Utrecht.

"This is what the statesmen did who made the acquisition of the Spanish claim to Oregon in 1819. In four years afterwards they had freely offered all north of 49 to Great Britain, and no one ever thought of arraigning them for it. Most of these Statesmen have gone through fiery trials since, and been fiercely assailed on all the deeds of their lives, but I never heard of one of them being called to account, much less lose an election, for the part he acted in afterwards they had freely offered all north of 49 to Great Britain, and no one ever thought of arraigning them for it.

"I come to the river Columbia, and its vast and magnificent valley. I once made a description of it, with an anathema against its alienation. I described it by metes and bounds by marks and features and then wrote its name in its face. The fifty-four forties got hold of my description and rubbed out the name, obliterated the features, expanded the boundaries took in New Caledonia, and all the rivers, lakes, bays, sounds, islands, valleys, forts and settlements, all the way up to 54 40! and then turned my own anathema against myself, because their minds could not apply words to things. Well! I take no offence at this. There are some people too simple to get angry with. All we do with them in the West, is to have them "cut for the simples;" after which they are cured. They can perform this operation for themselves, or have it done. If by themselves all they have to do is rub their eyes, and read again; if by others, the operator must read, and caution the listening patient to stick the word to the thing.

The valley of the Columbia is ours: ours by discovery, by settlement, and by the treaty of Utrecht! and has, too often, been so admitted by Great Britain to admit of her disputing it now. I do not plead our title to that great country. I did that twenty years ago, when there were few to repeat or applaud what I said. I pass over the ground which I trod so long ago, and which has been again so much trodden of late, and take up the question at a fresh place—the admissions of Great Britain! and show that she is precluded by her own acts and words from ever setting up any claim to the river and valley of the Columbia, or to any part of the territory south of the 49th degree."

Mr. Benton then enters into an elaborate historical sketch of Astoria—which, he says, was not a mere trading post for temporary traffic, but the foundation of a colony, and the occupation of the whole valley of the Columbia, and the establishment of a commercial emporium, of which . . . [BWP]

The New York Morning News, a leading friend of the Administration, discusses, in a long article, the probable cost of the Mexican War, and the means by which the money is to be obtained. The ten millions already appropriated, it admits, are only a beginning, and FIFTY MILLIONS MORE must before long follow suit—and possibly ANOTHER FIFTY MILLIONS must be added to the amount before a glimpse of the spires of the Mexican Cathedral will be caught by the American conqueror! How shall the money be raised? Loans, it entirely disapproves. Treasury Notes can only be issued to a limited amount; and we are informed by the "News" that the Secretary of the Treasury has estimated that the business of the country will stand an issue of about thirty millions, and, what is more important, that this is the plan to be brought forward by the Administration. The only other plan is by a DIRECT TAX, unless indeed Secretary Walker's idea of an increased revenue from imports, to result from the reduction of the Tariff, should be realised! Even in that case, however, so inadequate would be the revenue, the Federal tax-gatherer must soon be among the people. We do not doubt, any more than the NEWS, that the patriotic citizens of the country will cheerfully submit to any demand upon their purse necessary to sustain the honor and to vindicate the rights of the country. But that paper may be assured, that, after the danger shall have passed away, the tax-payers will not fail to enquire whether this war might not have been averted, without a sacrifice of either our rights or our honor, by a wise and judicious course of conduct on the part of the Executive—whether he has not needlessly plunged us into hostilities, without consulting the war-making power, and thereby subjected the people to the heavy privations which, ills able as many of them are to bear these new exactions, they will nevertheless, so long as they may be necessary, cheerfully submit to.

If this tremendous array of military force, and this immense expenditure, are demanded by a War with so feeble a power as Mexico, too, the people may be reasonably expected to count the cost of a war with a so formidable as Great Britain, for the purpose of acquiring possession of a region of country so remote and valueless as that part of Oregon between the parallels of 49 and 54 40; the title to which, instead of being "clear and unquestionable," as Mr. Polk asserted with as much dogmatism as ignorance of its history, is shown by Mr. Benton to be in Great Britain! They will see that there is something in War besides "glory;" and that, severe as must be the exactions upon the people to which it must lead, that is not by any means the greatest of its evils among which may be regarded the strengthening of the arm of the General Government at the expense of the rights of the people and of the States, and indefinitely enlarging the power and patronage of that branch of it, (the Executive,) from the usurpations and misconduct of which have sprung all the mischiefs that for twenty years past have scourged the country.

Lieut. JOSEPH SELDEN, one of the officers wounded in the second battle with the Mexicans, is from this city; and his numerous friends, whilst they sympathise with him in his sufferings, are gratified to hear that he has won distinction on the battle field. [BWP]

This Company has been re-organized, and Maj. WALTER GWYNN chosen its Captain. Maj. G. is a graduate of West Point, and an Engineer of eminence. Possessed of all the indomitable traits of a soldier and the gallant bearing of a gentleman, he will soon infuse into the troop all the vigor and discipline necessary to render it an efficient arm of the public defence.

The compliment conveyed to Maj. G. in this case is the more valuable because it was conferred in his absence from the city. [BWP]
The "54 40" papers & the "all or nonev patriots ḳ who asserted that there is "no break" in our title to "the whole of Oregon" are as dumb as oysters about Benton's demolishing speech. Why this ominous silence? Are they convinced? Or do they shrink from an attack upon Old Bullion?

[Source: Philadelphia North American, May 29, 1846]

WASHINGTON, May 24, 1846.

It is hardly necessary for me to make any comments upon the intelligence received from the frontier last night, inasmuch as no official accounts have been received by the President or at the War Department, and the subject is by far too grave a one for mere speculation. I can only say, the facts as stated are supposed to be greatly exaggerated.

I now turn to a matter, the promulgation of which will, I have no doubt, occasion no little surprise to the country, and if it should result, as circumstances now seem to warrant the apprehension of, will cause one general and spontaneous burst of just indignation throughout the Union ṽ in a word, THERE IS SERIOUS REASON TO BELIEVE AN EFFORT IS BEING MADE BY THE ADMINISTRATION TO SUPERSEDE GEN. SCOTT IN THE COMMAND OF THE SOUTH-WESTERN ARMY!!

In order to present the case fairly, it is necessary to refer to the circumstances which brought about his selection for this post. After the first indications of hostilities from the frontier, Gen. Scott was called into council as to the military operations. It was then proposed to him by the President and Secretary of War, to proceed to the Rio Grande and take command of the forces ṽ in plain terms, they desired to displace Gen. Taylor. With all the true instincts of a soldier and the noble qualities of a man, Gen. Scott respectfully requested to be relieved from such a duty. He stated that Gen. Taylor was his personal friend ṽ he had served on the field of battle together ṽ he had always shown himself superior to every emergency in which he had been placed, and was a brave and gallant officer, and would come out victoriously. After his urgent remonstrance, at various interviews the subject was renewed, and it was then submitted whether he would accept the command of the forces ordered by Congress. To this he readily assented, alleging that General Taylor would then have no proper ground of exception inasmuch as his higher rank would entitle him to the position, and could not be regarded as any disparagement to Gen. Taylor. When this understanding had been perfected, the President at once entered into what was presumed to be very confidential intercourse with Gen. Scott, and they were closeted nearly two days without interruption of any sort, in arranging the requisitions upon the States, and other details.

It is well known with what a cordial and universal response the selection of Gen. Scott was received all over the Union, and by men of all parties. The echo found its way back to Washington, and fell upon the ears of some high in office, in any thing but grateful notes. I shall not say how much or how little the prospect of a future, beyond the successful termination of this Mexican war, may have influenced those in power in the course of conduct which has been manifested towards Gen. Scott since this acclamation was heard; but I know, and proclaim it, that the President and his advisers have acted with marked coolness, and in a manner utterly at variance with their recent professions. Whether this be the result of cause and effect, is left for others to judge.

During all these consultations and councils, no order of any sort was issued to Gen. Scott. The President expressed his desire he should take the command of the army, when it was mustered into service, and Gen. Scott made but one stipulation, viz: that in the event of war with England, he should be permitted to return from the frontier, to the more honorable command, which was granted.

Thus stood matters until about nine days ago. Gen. Scott all the while was pushing forward his arrangements, and was devoting night and day to the organization of troops. Then, much to his surprise, the President and the Secretary of War and others connected with the administration on different occasions, renewed the suggestion, that he ought to go to the seat of war. He replied as before ṽ Gen. Taylor had accomplished as much as any officer could do, under the circumstances ṽ he had proved himself in every way capable of coping with the enemy, and deserved whatever laurels were to be won from the campaign on the Rio Grande. Still it was pressed upon his attention, so as to become disagreeable. About this time, (a week ago) it became necessary to frame a Bill systematizing the details of that granting the supplies. This was confirmed to Gen. Scott, and was laid before the Military Committee of the Senate in his handwriting. It was done with the knowledge and consent, and I believe at the request of the War
The Military Committee of the Senate met, and Mr. Marcy, the Secretary of War, appeared in person before them—a proceeding altogether unusual. Several members being absent, a section was introduced without any conference with Gen. Scott, which appears as the very first in the Bill reported on Tuesday morning last by Col. Benton. It is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two major generals, and four brigadier generals, in addition to the present military establishment.

When it is remembered, that according to the recent act, the States are allowed to appoint their own officers, that 3 generals of the regular army, Gen. Taylor, Gen. Worth and Gen. Wool, exclusive of the Commander-in-Chief are to be on the field, and therefore that no necessity, and no reasonable pretext exists for the creation of these new officers, and the mode by which the clause was inserted in the bill, is taken into consideration, it cannot but be inferred, there was some decided motive for such a movement upon the part of the administration, when the personal agency of a member of the Cabinet, was necessary to procure its adoption.

Will the government paper answer whether it was the President’s purpose by this means to supersede General Scott in the command of the army, or by securing places for his friends now, to retain them as the close of the war, when the peace establishment came to be formed, by giving the go by to Scott and Gaines? These are pungent interrogatories and explicit answers are demanded by the country, of whose glory and greatness, the reputation of Winfield Scott, is no unimportant part. I challenge a manly and candid reply and I call upon the President’s organ, to tell us, why this increase of high officers was demanded by the President through his Secretary of War, when not needed for the public service.

In this connection let we venture a prediction—if this bill is passed Samuel Houston, of Texas, will be a General in the army of the United States, mark that! The inferences are left to those who choose to form them.

But to return. Within the last few days, Gen. Scott, being still without orders, the subject not being resumed, and this bill, itself singularly expressive, being before Congress—he addressed a letter to the President stating at length, his reasons for declining the appointment to supersede Gen. Taylor, and why he could without any reflection upon that gallant officer, assume the command of the whole force to be called out. No reply has been given as yet, and it is now a matter of much doubt if he will be ordered. If the pending bill can be hastily carried through, I believe he will be overslaughed—if not, the President may take even a more exceptionable course.

The length of this letter precludes me from extending the remarks which I intended to submit to the public, but I cannot close without the expression of one opinion. If Mr. Polk and his cabinet design to make this Mexican war, a political war, as events have already indicated, the sooner they abandon their places the better for themselves; no execration can be too loud for such conduct—no penalty too severe. The Union has day after day, charged falsehoods upon statesmen of as pure patriotism and unsullied integrity as any that exist in this land, and its tirades seem only to have been the preludes to a war upon the hero of Niagara. INDEPENDENT.

A few of the citizens of New Orleans have presented Capt. May, who made the gallant and successful charge upon the Mexican Artillery, with a Sword and Belt. Upon the Sword is this inscription: "Presented to Capt. Charles May, of the second regiment of Dragoons, by his fellow citizens of New Orleans from the District of Columbia, as a token of their sense of his gallantry, displayed in the battle with the Mexican forces, May 9th, 1846." Capt. May is a native of Washington city, and is described as a very model of chivalry and heroism.

CAPTAIN W. M. FULTON, late of the U. S. Army, has been authorized by General Gaines to raise a regiment for the Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande. Captain Fulton served through the whole Florida war as Captain of Dragoons. He is an able and experienced officer, and we trust his regiment will soon be filled, and on its way to the battle-field.

The N. Y. Express states that Commodores Perry and Kearner, have purchased for the Government two steamers of 500 tons each, and four schooners of 90 tons each. They were built by Bell & Brown of that city, for the Mexicans, who were unable or unwilling to pay for them.

CASTLE OF San Juan de Ulloa.

The Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, with the distance behind it. It stands alone upon a small rocky island, on one side of the main entrance to the harbor, and only about a half a mile from the wall of the city, and consequently has complete command of the port. The entrance off the other side, is so barred with broken reefs and ledges, that it can only be used by small craft in favorable weather.

The form of the city of Vera Cruz is semi-circular, fronting the sea. It is situated on an arid plain, surrounded by sand hills, and is badly supplied with water, the chief reliance being upon rain collected in cisterns, which are often so poorly constructed as to answer but very little purpose. The chief resource of the lower is the water of a ditch, so impure as frequently to occasion disease. An attempt was made, more than a century ago, to remedy this evil, by the construction of a stone aqueduct from the river Xamape; but, unfortunately, after a very large sum had been expended on the work, it was discovered that the engineer who constructed it had made a fatal mistake in not ascertaining the true level, and the work was abandoned in despair.

POINT ISABEL, TEXAS, May 13th, 1846.

"By the time you receive this, you will have heard of the two great battles that have been fought by our army against the Mexican forces. We had but 2100 men, and the Mexicans had 6000. The first day they did nothing but fire artillery at us, which we returned, and killed some hundred of them. They tried several times to break our lines by charging us, but they were repulsed. This day Major Ringgold, of the artillery, was killed by a cannon ball, which took off both his legs; and some sixty of our men were killed and wounded. Several shot passed near me and over my head, and one went between my horse's legs, but did not hit him. That night the Mexican force fell back, and took up a position in a dense chapparel, or thicket, that borders the Rio Grande, and is seven or eight miles through. I was one of the advanced guard, and was within sixty yards of the enemy when they fired grape shot upon us; and, singular as it may appear, not one of my men was struck.

"The General then ordered us to allow the infantry to pass up and engage them; they did so, and also our light artillery. They had been engaged about an hour and a half, when our squadron was then ordered to charge the enemy's batteries. We did so, took one of their batteries, and General la Vega prisoner, while in the act of pointing a gun. Lieut. Inge, of the dragoons, was killed in the charge; Lieut. Luckett had his horse shot under him, and many of the men and horses were killed and wounded. General la Vega surrendered his sword to Capt. May. It was a desperate affair, and was as gallantly performed as any action of our revolution.

"I had four men killed at my side. I cut one Mexican down, and then rallied the men that were left, when the enemy broke and run, and left every thing in our possession. The plunder was great—600 miles, 9 pieces of cannon, some 20 standards, and a large amount of money in gold, besides all their equipage. Seventeen officers were taken. prisoners, and hundreds of men. An exchange of prisoners has been made, and our officers and men whom they took on a previous affair are now restored to us. Henry, Crozet and your friends were in the action, and behaved like men. Piper was not in the action, and is almost crazy over what I have gone through, I involuntarily shudder at my escape. General Taylor has gone up to the army to-day, and we start to-morrow. We brought the wounded down here. Several of our officers were killed, and a large number wounded, but nothing in comparison to the enemy.

[Mr. Crozet, referred to in such complimentary terms in the foregoing letter, is a son of Col. Claude Crozet, of Richmond.]

WASHINGTON, May 27.

The orders given to Gen. SCOTT to take command of the army on the Rio Grande have been revoked. The President thinks it would be unjust to Gen. Taylor to give the command to another, after his brilliant opening of the campaign. The nomination of Gen. Taylor as brevet major General was yesterday unanimously confirmed by the Senate.

The President has concluded to accept the services of one battalion of volunteers from the District, and another from Baltimore. This is the extent to which volunteers so far north will be called into service at present.

I learn that the President has caused the strictest orders to be given that in the prosecution of the war, the property of the Church in Mexico shall be held sacred, and every attempt to pillage it be punished with the utmost severity. This, in connection with the confidential mission of Bishop Hughes spoken of, will undoubtedly be productive of good results.

Among the appointments in the new rifle regiment, I have heard of the following; Percifor L. Smith, of New Orleans, to be Colonel; Capt. Fremont to be Lieut. Col.; Mr. Crittenden, (a son of Senator C.) to be Captain, and Julian May, of this city, Lieutenant.

WASHINGTON, May 27.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

The bill to provide for the adjustment of land claims in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, &c. [Spanish grants] was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Benton said he was anxious that the bill, which was before the Senate yesterday in relation to the Army should be passed without delay, and he would therefore defer the remainder of his Oregon speech until to-morrow.

The bill relative to the Army was then taken up.

Mr. Atchison withdrew his amendment to the first section requiring the officers to be discharged at the close of the war.

Mr. Mangum also withdrew his motion to strike out the first section.

Mr. Dix offered sundry amendments to the details of the bill, all of which were agreed to.

Mr. Benton also offered one or two amendments authorizing the employment of armorers, wheelwrights, carriage makers, &c., which were agreed to.

Mr. Wescott offered an amendment, the effect of which was to give the President the power of selecting the general officers to command the volunteers from the officers of the State militia, instead of leaving the selection to the Governors of the States called upon. The amendment was very properly rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and was subsequently read a third time and passed.
By this bill the President has authority to appoint two Major Generals and four Brigadier Generals in addition to those now in service, and to select them from the Army or from citizens, at his discretion.

On motion of Mr. Johnson of Md., the French Spoliation Bill was taken up for the purpose of taking a vote upon it—but intimations having been given of an intention to debate it, it passed by informally.

On motion of Mr. Fairfield, the bill for the augmentation of the naval force of the U. S. was taken up and made the special order for Monday.

On motion of Mr. Sevier, the Senate at 1 o'clock, went into Executive Session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Haralson of Ga., offered a resolution calling for copies of the account of the battles which took place between the American army and the Mexicans on the 8th and 9th instants. The resolution was adopted without objection.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McClellan of Ill., gave notice of several amendments on reference to commerce, which he designed to offer to the above bill.

Mr. Collamer of Vt. With some interruption upon a point of order, replied to the Anti-Tariff speech of Mr. Payne of Ala. That speech he pronounced the same old song that had been sung for all the time the Tariff had been before the country. That gentleman thought the minds of men were stultified by the statement that the protective duties reduced the price of goods. Such was the fact, and the fact was good against all the assertions which had been made, or could be made.

Mr. C. said the Tariff had reduced the price of goods. This was not true only of glass and leather, and some few articles, but it was true of all articles. The exclusive patriotism set up by the gentleman from Alabama for himself and party, was also rebuked—Mr. Payne having charged the Whig members with voting for the Tariff from motives of selfishness. This was claiming a great deal for the gentleman and his party, more indeed than he believed they possessed, though he awarded as much consistency to that party, and as much fidelity to their constituents, as he claimed for himself or the Party with whom he acted.

Mr. C. did not, however, intend to discuss this question now, nor the tariff question. He reserved all that he had to say upon the tariff for the time when the Tariff Bill should come up. The tariffs which had hitherto been discussed had been debated from six weeks to six months. He hoped a liberal discussion would be allowed upon the present bill, that it would not be strangled, and that it would be suffered to receive something more than what it would endure.

Mr. Steward, of Pa., continued the debate in reply to Mr. Payne of Ala., and in defence of the National Fair, which had been assailed. He had seen there every possible specimen of American manufacture, every kind of goods, all sorts of Agricultural implements, and all sorts of mechanic arts—every thing indeed he had seen from three hundred beautiful children of American manufacture to the most perfect specimen of art.

Mr. S. reaffirmed that the tariff had reduced the prices of goods. Cloths which sold in 1816 for 85 cents a yard now sold for 7½ cents. This was not true of one article but of all articles. The very highest duty had often resulted in producing the lowest prices. This was the fact which would be borne out by examination. Competition was the cause, and the fruits of it was an increase of sales and decrease of prices and a great good conferred upon the consumers.

We now send to the East Indies between four and five millions of goods. We lead the English in their own markets.

Southern men, instead of denouncing the Tariff, had better turn their attention to manufacturing. Where was South Carolina now, and where Virginia? The latter State came into the Union with ten Representatives and the former five. They had hardly more now, while Pennsylvania had 24, and New York 34. This was the fruit of a Northern, or manufacturing policy, and that of a Southern.

The plan now was, and in a time of war, to increase the revenue by decreasing the duties. In the last war, just the reverse of this was done. The duties were doubled to increase the revenues, but now our wise financiers adopted a policy directly the reverse of this.

Mr. Stewart spoke with great ability and intelligence, and commanded the undivided attention of the House by his remarks.

One o'clock arrived before Mr. S. finished, and the committee were brought to a vote upon the amendments, the first of which was to strike out 50,000 and insert $85,000 for Marine Hospitals. The amendments to the bill were from one two hundred. Some few were carried, but the greater number were rejected.
Mr. Winthrop of Mass. Offered an amendment appropriating $18,000 for a special COMMISSION TO Mexico whenever it should be ascertained that he would be received by the Mexican Government. Rejected, yeas 50, nays 81.

Mr. Thompson of Miss. Offered an amendment to prevent the Commissioner for China from receiving his salary unless he shall reside at China. The amendment was agreed to, and is designed as a bit at Alexander Everett for his return to and long continuance in this country.

An amendment in relation to the mileage and per diem of members of the House and Senate, and changing to a pay of $6 per diem was moved by Mr. Marshall, pending which the Committee rose.

A message from the President was received and read accompanying the official account of the battles of the 8th and 9th instant. The message made no remarks in references to the information received in the letter of General Taylor.

The message and papers were referred to the committee on Military Affairs, who reported a bill for furnishing books on Military tactics for the use of the Army, which was read twice and referred to the committee of the whole.

Two unsuccessful motions having been made to adjourn, the House went into Committee of the Whole, when the per diem and mileage amendment was resumed, and an amendment adopted requiring a reduction of daily pay for daily absence, upon the call of the yeas and nays, unless a certificate can be procured from a physician.

This amendment was ruled to be out of order, but an amendment in regard to mileage of members was agreed to by which no member can receive more than $750 during any one session of Congress, and that he shall receive 40 cents a mile for the first 200 miles, 35 cents for 300 miles, and 30, 25 and 20 cents a mile for longer distances.

This amendment being agreed to, attempt was made to bring forward that in relation to physicians' certificates; pending which the House adjourned, the members apparently quite disgusted with their own demagoguism.

RW46v23i43p4c1, May 29, 1846: The U. States and Mexico.

An attentive perusal of the Documents accompanying the President's Message, of the 11th instant, in reference to Mexican affairs, has satisfied us, that, with whatever justice we may complain of the refusal to receive Mr. Slidell, by the usurper, President Paredes, his predecessor, Gen. Herrera, with whom the arrangement was concluded by Mr. Black, our Consul in the city of Mexico, entered into it in good faith, and with a sincere desire to adjust, by negotiation, the questions in controversy between the two Governments. It is apparent, indeed, from the whole course pursued by the Mexican authorities, in relation to the reception of a Minister from the U. States, that, although sincere and honest in their purposes, they did not conclude this arrangement without strong misgivings as to their ability to consummate it; and the fact that, under such circumstances they consented to it at all, is at least prima facie evidence of the honesty of their intentions. They knew that the minds of the people of Mexico had been inflamed against the United States by highly wrought pictures, daily presented to their contemplation, of the injustice and injury to which Mexico had been subjected by the aggressive acts of our Government upon the "department of Texas," while similar aggressions hereafter, upon other States of the Mexican Republic, were confidently predicted. Large portions, indeed, of some of them, including the most populous and wealthy cities of Tamaulipas, Chiahua and New Mexico, they saw, were already claimed in virtue of the articles of annexation with Texas, and upon others, particularly the Californias, it was not less evident we were already turning a long eye. Public opinion was thus rendered decidedly averse to a renewal of the diplomatic intercourse between the two countries; and of this state of things Gen. Paredes artfully availed himself to bring into odium and finally to overthrow, the constitutionally elected President, Herrera, who, with a juster appreciation of the disproportion between the military resources and the prowess of the two countries, was unquestionably desirous of adjusting the matters in dispute between them without an appeal to arms, the result of which he foresaw must be most disastrous to Mexico. We feel entirely persuaded, therefore, that; had Herrera been strong enough to defeat the revolutionary machinations of Paredes, the success of which subverted the regularly constituted government and placed the reins of power in the hands of a Military Usurper, who assumed to himself all the powers of a Dictator, our Minister would have been received by him, and negotiations opened for the peacable adjustment of the boundary, as well as all other unsettled questions. Hence, we do not deem it altogether just to impute a fraudulent design to the Mexican Government in the rejection of Mr. Slidell, after having consented to receive a Minister from the U. States, or to base upon that act a charge of Punic faith. We might suppose a parallel (though of course an improbable) case, in this country, by reversing the position of the two parties. Had Mexico, for example, made the proposition to send a Commissioner for Texas, when our relations with her were in their most friendly aspect, and upon the assent of the U. States, had proceeded to demand and receive a special mission from the President of our country to settle the boundary, it might well have been argued by the Mexicans that such a formal gesture was only a device to obtain an opportunity of aggression. The fact that, upon similar principles, we have never sent a Commissioner to Mexico, is sufficient to destroy the force of such an argument.

Mr. Winthrop of Mass. offered an amendment appropriating $18,000 for a special COMMISSION TO Mexico when ever it should be ascertained that he would be received by the Mexican Government. Rejected, yeas 50, nays 81.

Mr. Thompson of Miss. offered an amendment to prevent the Commissioner for China from receiving his salary unless he shall reside at China. The amendment was agreed to, and is designed as a bit at Alexander Everett for his return to and long continuance in this country.

acquired power, or to the tenure by which it is held, must necessarily be regarded as the acts of the nation. But, although this be true, it does not deprive other governments of the right, nor indeed does it authorize them to dispense with the obligation, in deciding upon the character of these acts, to consider and weigh well the circumstances in which they originate, and by which they are surrounded, and which ought to go very far in determining the ultimate course of an adversary government which may have been offended or injured by their perpetration.

We proceed, then, briefly to group together some of the most striking features of the correspondence, which, in our estimation, justify the belief, that, when Herrera intimated to the Consul, Mr. Black, through M. Pena y Pena, his Minister of Foreign Relations, his willingness to receive a Minister from the U. States, he had no purpose to deceive or to mislead our Government, and that he was influenced by a sincere desire to avert from his own country the calamities of war, which he knew she was so inadequately prepared to encounter. From Mr. Black's letter to Mr. Buchanan, detailing the events of his interview with the Mexican Minister, when the proposition of the U. States to send a Diplomatic Agent to Mexico, was first communicated, we see the trepidation with which the proposition was assented to. The Mexican Minister, for, example, after urging the greatest secrecy upon Mr. Black, proceeded to urge that the U. S. naval and military forces in the Gulf and on the frontier should be removed, as a preliminary step, [though, this was not done, as we may hereafter have occasion to show,] lest the Mexican Government might be supposed to be intimidated into the reception of a Minister; secondly, that the Minister to be sent should be a person suitable in every respect, and not one against whom the government or people of Mexico might entertain a fixed prejudice; and thirdly, that all irritating topics should be avoided in the preparatory discussions—and he added, lest the suggestion of these precautions should be deemed offensive, that, "if the Government (of Mexico) had but itself to consult, the expression of those feelings would have been left out of the communication; but that I (Mr. Black) knew, as well as he did, that Governments like ours, must endeavor to reconcile the opinions and feelings of the people for their public acts; and that I also knew very well that a strong opposition were daily calling the attention of the public to, and scrutinizing and condemning every act of the Government, and that the Government endeavored to give them as little pretext as possible." This extract shows, we think, both the strong anxiety of Herrera's Administration to negotiate, and their equally strong apprehensions that they might be defeated, as they were, by the decided opposition of public opinion, misled by such men as Paredes and his associates, to that mode of proceeding.

This opinion is further confirmed by a subsequent letter of Mr. Black to Mr. Buchanan, in which, after alluding to the anticipated revolution, of which Paredes was then deemed the master spirit, and which Herrera was exerting himself to counteract, Mr. Black says: "I wish this Government may stand, as I think it well disposed to arrange all matters in dispute with the U. States."

RW46v23i43p4c2, May 29, 1846: New Engine of War.

Mr. Benjamin Reynolds and his brother, of New York, have invented a new engine of war, which they call a Projecting Engine, and which is thus described in the N. Y. Herald:

"The principle upon which it is constructed, is perfectly simple—and it is capable of propelling twenty, thirty or any number of balls, by a centrifugal power, to the ordinary distance as that by either a cannon or musket, and with equal force and velocity. This engine is worked in the same manner as the fire engine—by the aid of manual labor—and with the power of steam, could be made far more effective in storming a fortress, than a regular battery. It is neither steam, nor powder, nor gas, nor any of the ordinary aids which are required to work engines of war. The model which we have seen, resembles a windlass, placed horizontally, at the upper verge of which is placed a small barrel, about the size of a blunderbuss. Fourteen leaden balls, weighing each one and a half ounce, were placed at a certain part of the engine, and four men were set to work, in the same manner as if they were turning a winnowing machine. Having worked the engine, which was placed a distance of seventy or eighty yards from a target, with moderate strength, the balls were propelled with a velocity equal to that of a musket, and shattered to pieces and perforated the plank. The inventor states that it is capable of projecting one thousand balls a minute, and could do execution equal to one hundred muskets. But this model is capable of being applied to large cannon. At a cost of a few thousand dollars, within two months, the inventor could construct one or more projecting engines, capable of propelling a cannon-ball with equal power and velocity as if shot from the ordinary cannon by the aid of powder; also, of discharging one thousand per minute, by the aid of steam-power."

RW46v23i43p4c2, May 29, 1846: No title.

Many of the papers contain glowing descriptions of the wealth of the Mexican Churches—for the purpose, probably, of exciting the cupidity of those who might be deaf to the voice of patriotism. The altar of the Cathedral in the city of Mexico, which occupies the site of the Idol temple of Montezuma, is made of pure Silver, ornamented with gold, and surrounded by a balustrade surmounted with images, which are made of a compound of gold, silver and copper. The balustrade is supposed to be worth more than a million of dollars. Besides there are gold and silver vases, waifers, candlesticks, &c.
The property of the Church, in gold and silver ornaments, is valued at not less than fifty millions of dollars.

RW46v23i43p4c2, May 29, 1846: Warlike Preparations.

The papers, in every section of the Union, continue to be filled with notices of warlike movements, both by the expressions of opinion at large public meetings, as in New York and Philadelphia, and by the organization of Volunteer corps. We find it impossible to keep pace with these movements, and must therefore content ourselves with a selection of a few of the many incidents that meet the eye.

The last New Orleans Picayune states that the whole number of volunteers from Louisiana, including Colonel Ba Peyton’s newly organized regiment, is 4,443 rank and file. "The Legion," numbering 880 rank and file, have not yet been mustered into the service of the U. S., but are ready at a moment's warning. Among the companies formed in New Orleans, is one of mounted gunmen, commanded by F. A. Lumsden, one of the Editors of The Picayune. Large numbers of troops continue to pour into New Orleans from the interior parishes, and from the adjoining States among them two more companies from Mobile. A corps of 500 were expected soon to start from St. Louis. An additional detachment of troops sailed from New Orleans for the seat of war on the 17th inst.

The Louisville Journal of the 20th inst., states that Wm. Preston, Esq. on the day before procured a subscription of $50,000, (twenty-five gentlemen subscribing $2000 each,) which he has placed in the Bank of Kentucky to the credit of the Governor, in case it should be necessary in despatching troops to Texas.

FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

Arrival of the James L. Day.

FAVORABLE NEWS.

We hastily compile the following from the letters of our friends at Point Isabel, which is the latest from the seat of war. All Speak of the prospects of Gen. Taylor as being in the highest degree auspicious. It is stated that the General is preparing to cross the Rio Grande and to attack and occupy Matamoras. The news reached this city by the James L. Day, Capt. Griffin.

Correspondence of the Daily Delta.

POINT ISABEL, May 15, 9 P. M.

Gentlemen — The steamer Jas. L. Day, which leaves here in a few hours, affords me an opportunity of sending you a few lines of information from this place.

We arrived here, (that is, company A, to which I am attached,) on the above named boat, on the morning of the 14th, after a pleasant passage of three days, and found everything wearing the most warlike aspect anxiously awaiting the hour when the order should be given to "strike tents," and take up the line of march for that section of country where the Mexicans do most congregate. A more cheerful set of men the sun never shone upon, you would suppose, to look upon them, they were preparing for a festival rather than an encounter with a merciless enemy — so cheerful and light hearted do they go about their labor.

The report prevalent in camp at this time is, that the Mexicans are within our immediate vicinity to the number of some 6 or 7000 strong. As to its correctness I cannot vouch, but certain it is, we are in the neighborhood of the enemy, and an attack at any hour would surprise no one here.
Gen. Taylor left this place on the morning of the 13th for his camp on the river above, accompanied by only one company of Artillery and one of Dragoons. He was dressed in a simple farmer's apparel, and his mode of conveyance a light wagon, driven by a negro servant. There seems to be little doubt but he will reach his camp in safety. After which the general supposition is the Mexicans will have to look out for squalls, his dander is up since the last engagement, and he seems determined to start the ball.

When the ball is fairly opened the amusement must not cease until the tune is played and the fiddlers paid.

Four companies of the regular Infantry, accompanied by one volunteer company of Artillery and the Mobile volunteers, left here to-day for Bareta, a point on the Rio Grande, where they will be joined in a few days by all the companies from this place, which will swell the number to some 12 or 1500 men. It is Gen. Taylor's intention to keep possession of this point, and to the volunteers he has assigned the honor of maintaining it. I am of opinion he will never regret the hour he placed its guardianship in their hands. At least they will, I am sure, never dishonor themselves or the country whose rights they are maintaining.

Col. Forno arrived this morning with five companies, which increases the force now here to about 1200 men. The teamsters and laborers number some 300, who are liable to be called on at any moment for military duty, so the post may be considered perfectly safe from any incursion of the enemy.

During the engagements of the 8th and 9th about 1000 sailors and marines from the fleet at anchor off here were landed and were a formidable set of men to keep the place while the soldiers were absent. They are now on board their respective vessels and will not be called on again till a similar occasion may demand their services.

Major Ringgold was buried with all the military honors.

It would, I suppose, be superfluous to send you an account of the actions of the 8th and 9th, as they must be in your possession per steamer Galveston. In the two battles we lost about 160 men, whilst that of the enemy was near on to 900. Some of our men acted remarkably brave, amongst whom none seems more conspicuous than the Commander and Col. Twiggs.

I would write more in detail had not the fatigues of the day – drilling and preparing for departure – incapacitated me; but my next shall make amends for this, as I will advise you of every thing which will interest your readers.

Your. A*****.

My next letter will doubtless be from the Barretta, where, as I before stated, we will immediately leave for.

RW46v23i43p4c6, May 29, 1846: Congress

Correspondence of the Baltimore American

WASHINGTON, May 25.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

On motion of Mr. Woodbridge the communication recently received from the Treasury Department in reference to the mineral lands on Lake Superior was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. Dickinson presented the proceedings of a large meeting held in New York, in reference to the existing war with Mexico, and accompanied their presentation with a brief tribute to the patriotism and public spirit of the citizens of New York. Mr. D. also availed himself of the opportunity to state that had he been here when the bill to provide for the prosecution of the war was under consideration, it would have received his earnest support.

Mr. Rush moved to postpone the previous orders and take up the Senate bill in reference to the mail service in Texas. He said that a joint resolution had passed both Houses in reference to this subject, but the Postmaster General did not feel himself authorized to act under it at present. The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then amended in some particulars, and by unanimous consent was read a third time and passed.
On motion of Mr. Dix, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, supplementary to the act providing for the prosecution of the existing war with Mexico.

Mr. Atchison offered an amendment to the first section requiring that the additional officers to the regular army there provided for shall be discharged from the service at the end of the war, or within 3 months thereafter.

Mr. Dix opposed the amendment. The increased number of officers asked for was rendered necessary by the increase in the rank and file of the Army.

Mr. Westcott followed on the same side. It would be an act of injustice to the officers who should be promoted under this act – Gen. Taylor, for instance, if he should be promoted to Brig. General, or Major General – that they should be discharged from the service as soon as the war is over.

Mr. Atchison defended his amendment. He argued that the number of officers in the Army was altogether too great for a peace establishment, and he was unwilling that any additional number should be fastened upon the country permanently in consequence of the war. If the officers proposed should be taken either from citizens or from the Army, no injustice would be done to them in either case, because they should know the nature of the contract before they accepted the appointments or the promotion offered to them.

After some remarks from Mr. Mangum, who intimated an intention of saying something more on the subject, the bill was postponed, and made the special order for to-morrow.

The Oregon jurisdiction bill was then taken up, and Mr. Benton resumed his remarks, showing that our title extended up to 49 and no farther.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THANKS TO GEN. TAYLOR AND EXTRA PAY PROPOSED.

Mr. Brinkerhoff of Ohio proposed, as soon as the Journal was read this morning, a Joint Resolution, thanking Gen. Taylor and his Army for their gallant defence of the country in the recent engagements with the Mexican forces, and also allowing to each officer, non-commissioned officer and private one month’s extra pay.

Mr. Winthrop said he had no objection to the Resolution, but he was desirous to know whether there had been any official communication received of the engagement from the camp of Gen. Taylor.

Mr. Brinkerhoff said he did not design to ask for the passage of the Resolution at this time, but merely that it should have its first and second reading, which was agreed to almost by general consent.

Mr. Dromgoole suggested that the thanks of Congress should be made a separate Resolution from that giving one month’s extra pay.

Mr. King of N. Y. moved to refer it to the Committee of the Whole which was agreed to.

The following account of the operations of Gen. Worth's division at Monterey, and defence of the capituation, are from the pen of Col. Balie Peyton, of this city:

MONTEREY, Sept. 25, 1844.

My Dear Sir. - After a most obstinate and . . . conflict, which was continued from day to day for 5 days, Gen. Ampudia capitulated this city . . . . Our loss in killed and wounded, has been . . . severe, not less than 500, amongst . . . of the most valuable officers of the regular army, as well as volunteers.

The 1st Regiment of Tennessee volunteers, commanded by Col. Campbell, suffered more severely perhaps, than any other which was engaged during the siege, having had 27 killed on the field, and 77 wounded, some of them mortally, and many of them seriously, and this out of a force of only 390 men. Notwithstanding this tremendous loss, the regiment charged under the lead of its gallant colonel and other officers, and was the first regiment which stormed the fort, mounted the beast works, and unfurled the stars and stripes upon its walls, amidst a perfect hail storm, of balls, which was pouring upon it.

These Mexican towns and fortresses are incredibly strong, and few men fight letter from house tops, and behind stone walls, or are more adroitun the use of stationary artillery than the Mexicans. In these actions Gen. Taylor, had, all told, about 5000 men, while Gen. Ampudia's force consisted of 10,500 infantry and cavalry, besides militia, rancheros, &c. Gen. Taylor had eighteen pieces of artillery, of which seventeen were field pieces, while Gen. Ampudia had forty-four pieces, thirty-eight of which, with two standards of colors, are now in our possession.

Our Army arrived before Monterey the morning of Saturday, the 19th instant, and about half past 8 o'clock, while reconnoitering the out works of the city, a ball, discharged from a 12 pounder, struck near Gen. Taylor and staff, and bounded with terrific velocity over his head, at which the old hero did not change a muscle of even bat his eye. This day, the 19th , was spent in making reconnoisances of the place and its various outposts, amidst a good deal of firing on the part of the Mexicans, from cannon and a short gun called an escopette, which carries a large ball to a distance of 500 or 600 yards.

On Sunday, the 21th, Gen. Worth was detached by Gen. Taylor, in command of the 2d division of the regular Army "about 1500 strong" and Col. Hays'regiment of Texas Rangers "consisting of 400 men," with a view of turning the city and occupying the Saltillo road, for the purpose of cutting off the enemy's supplies and reinforcements, which were daily expected under General Santa Anna. The division performed the march - making a road - filling ditches, &c. - a distance of about six or seven miles, and reached the vicinity of the enemy in the evening about 5 o'clock, when the General, with an escort from Col. Hays'Rangers, was fired on by the batteries placed on the heights, and also by a corps of the enemy's light troops, who were sent through a corn-field to cut off his party.

From this time until the appearance of the white flag, on the evening of the 24th , the division of the Army commanded by Gen. Worth was incessantly engaged and was ever successful - never for one moment hesitating or faltering - putting to route the enemy's cavalry on the plains, driving his infantry through the chapparal and from the house tops, scaling immense heights, capturing guns, and storming fortresses which were not only deemed impregnable but which seemed to be almost inaccessible. And, best of all, these brilliant exploits were performed with the loss of fourteen killed and fifty six wounded; and during the four days'contest there occurred not the slightest error or mistake on the part of the commanding General nor was there at any time the least faltering or hesitancy on the part of the officers and men - regulars and volunteers - in executing his orders. Indeed it is difficult
When the difficulties and apparently insurmountable obstacles are considered, I venture the assertion that the series of successes obtained by the division under Gen. Worth's command, in the recent operations against Monterey, will bear a favorable comparison with the proudest achievements of the American arms. He was opposed by a greatly superior force, which was well served with artillery and posted upon the highest peaks of the Sierra Madre. He stormed heights, took three pieces of artillery, turned them on the enemy, and with these and the aid of one of his own pieces - which he contrived to place upon the summit which commands the famous Bishop's Palace, eight hundred feet above the base of the mountain - united with the inestimable services rendered by the dauntless and invincible spirits who stormed these heights, he reduced that stronghold of the enemy and drove him into the city, upon which he turned the guns he had captured. He bivouacked his force for the night on the bleak mountain, and the next day, after bombarding the town, he conducted his forces into the streets amidst a shower of balls discharged at his person. He was seen everywhere, directing everything, driving the enemy from his batteries, forcing him from street to street and house to house, until night ended the conflict. He maintained his position in the city, placed a ten inch mortar in one of the strongly fortified squares, to direct which he placed that gallant and skillful officer, Major Monroe, with instruction to fire a shell (weighing ninety pounds) every half hour during the night. This duty was performed with terrible effect, almost every shell falling in plaza where the enemy's forces were collected to the number of 7000 or 8000 men. He had made every necessary preparation for pursuing his advantages the next day, even to placing some of his artillery on the tops of high buildings, which would command and sweep the house tops from which the enemy fought.

Such was the state of probation when Gen. Ampudia capitulated the city, reflecting equal honor upon the military skill of the head which conceived, and the indomitable energy of the gallant spirits who executed the plan of operations.

Our most serious low occurred on the 21st, when Gen. Taylor only intended to make a diversion in favor of Gen. Worth, who was engaged in the attack on the other side of the town, but owing to the ardor and impetuosity of the troops they very soon became involved in a general engagement, which Gen. Taylor felt bound to sustain. This excess of courage involved melancholy consequences, but it is surely a most excusable weakness, if it be a weakness, to display an excess of ardor in the field of battle.

The volunteers from the different States behaved in the most handsome manner. They have won for the citizen soldier the admiration and applause of the officers and soldiers of the regular Army, who speak of their conduct in the highest terms of approbation and eulogy. Amongst the volunteers none have shone more conspicuously than the 1st Regiment of Texas mounted riflemen: command by that Chevalier Bayard, Colonel J. C. Hays, better known as Jack Hays. This corps, from the Colonel to the private, has fully sustained its former reputation. In the first affairs in which Gen. Worth's division was engaged on the morning of the 21st, Col. Hays, with several companies of his mounted riflemen, were thrown forward to open the ball, which he did most beautifully, encountering and shooting in the presence of the General the Colonel of dragoons who commanded the enemy's forces. In scaling heights, storming batteries, and clambering over walls and house tops, the voice of the gallant Colonel and the reports of the un... rifle of the Ranger, were ever head in the van. The courage and constancy and subordination of this corps, is the theme of admiration in the Army.

But my object is narrative and not eulogy. It is not necessary for me to go into detail in relation to the terms recorded to the Mexican Army in the capitulation as you will have seen the articles, or the substance therefore, published in the newspapers ere this reaches you. If any one not acquainted with the facts of the case should object that our commanding General has granted terms too favorable to the retiring Army let it be remembered that our invisible little Army had already suffered severely in baring the bosoms of our best citizens and bravest officers, and soldiers, to the batteries of the unseen foe; that the city was still immensely strong in its defences [sic]; that the Mexican Army was doubted that of our own; this Army was in possession of the strongest part of a city each house of which is a fortress within itself; that each remaining street was barricaded and most of them defended by cannon; and that when driven from the city the Mexican Army possessed a fortress called the Citadel, of immense capacity and great strength to which the whole Army could have retired. To have taken this work without a siege train, as we were, by assault, would have cost us very dearly. Independently of these considerations our provisions were growing short and our ammunition was quite limited. We were far removed from our supplies and reinforcements, while the enemy night have been reinforced at any moment. And lastly, the policy avowed by our own Government does not inculeate the idea that this is to be a vindictive or exterminating war against the people of Mexico, but on the contrary to conquer a peace, or in other words to whip Mexico to her own satisfaction, obtain our just rights, and conclude a peace upon terms such as would be becoming in a great and magnanimous nation towards a weak and distracted Government. All this has in my opinion been accomplished, in as full, complete and ample a manner by the theme of admiration in the Army.
Gen. Ampudia and his army left this morning for Saltillo. He was treated with courtesy and respect by Gen. Worth, whose quarters are in the city, and who accomplished him to the limits of the town. In fact, all of our troops displayed that forbearance which always marks the conduct of brave and magnanimous men towards those whom the torture of war has placed in their power. You will observe that in my narration of the vents of the battle, I have confined myself to the operations of that division of the army which was commanded by Gen. Worth. I have done so because I was with this command, near his person, saw what occurred, and know that which I have stated to be substantially correct. You are not to infer that I mean to intimate that the main army, under the command of Gen. Taylor did not perform feats equally worthy of informed as to facts and much better qualified for the duty, will no doubt give a detailed account of the operations of this portion of the army. Take the army altogether, I doubt whether a superior body of men ever rallied under the flag of our country.

Very truly, yours, &c.
BALIE PEYTON.

Friday, November 6, 1846 RW46v23i89p1c6 Santa Fe News

Correspondent of the St. Louis Union.

Santa Fe, Sept. 13, 1846.

Messers. Editors - On the 2d inst. Gen. Kearney, with about 800 men, left this town on an excursion South. We went to a village called Tonic, about one hundred miles distant. We struck the Rio Grande twenty-seven miles from this place, at a village called San Domingo, inhabited by the Pueblo Indians. Our reception at this village was quite a grand affair, the principal men and braves of the tribe met us six miles from the town, and escorted us in; the braves were mounted on their best horses, and dressed in the most gaudy apparel, and armed and equipped in the same manner as when they go out for the purpose of fighting. When the General passed the head of their columns, they fired off their guns, and then one file on each side of our companies proceeded to the rear, and then wheeled and came down close to our line at the top of the speed of their horses, yelling and going through all he manoeuvres of a regular charge; they met again at the head of our column, fired at each other with their pistols, made passes with their lances, and then filed off and returned to the head of our companies. This was repeated several times to the great admiration and astonishment of all who witnessed it. I have never seen better horsemen anywhere, and from what I could discover, I should take them to be formidable in battle if properly armed. They are fine looking men, and much superior in every respect to the Mexican population. They have a very fine village, most splendid vineyards, and appear to be much more comfortable in every respect than the Mexicans. When we got into the village, we were invited into the priest’s house, where a most sumptuous repast was set out, consisting of the best grapes I ever saw, melons, apples, cakes, and with liquor enough to wash them down.

There is at this town, quite an extensive church to which is attached the priest's house, where he keeps his . . . of concubines. The priest at this place has four - two of them are quite good looking. After our repast, the General made a speech to the citizens, who appeared quite well pleased; they then escorted us out of town, and we went our way rejoicing with full stomachs, and every man with just liquor enough in him to make him feel patriotic. This was the only Indian village we visited.

After we left San Domingo, we passed through villages every 8 or 10 miles, until we reached the village of Tonie. Most of them, however, were quite small, and the inhabitants, with the exception of two or three men in each, are poor miserable . . . .

The only villages on the Rio Grande that we visited worthy of note, are San Domingo, San Phillippe, Albuquerque, and Tonie. Albuquerque was the residence of Armijo. - We haulted a short time at this place, going and returning. Gen. Kearney called on the late Governor's wife, and passed an hour or two, as he told me, very pleasantly. She is said to be a intelligent women, and deported herself with much property. Her husband, (Armijo,) it is said, has gone to the Passo, an it is supposed, will continue on to the city of Mexico. The people near the Tonie, and the inhabitants of the different villages have heard of our intended visit, and the General so arranged our marches as to bring us to this town the evening before the anniversary of their patron Saint, a great day with the inhabitants of that region of country, and I assure you it was a great day not only with them, but to all who were present; there was an immense concourse of people, men, women, children, Mexican, Indians, and white folks. They had prepared fire-works, which were gotten up in a very good style, the town was illuminated, they had a theatre, that is, a play in the open yard, which appeared to be received by the in habitants, they also had a fandango, which was not only crowded, but jammed and crowded to overflowing, the beauty and fashion were there, and to my astonishment I found some of the women quite handsome. During the day there was mass said and the Virgin Mary was paraded around the streets, followed by the principle men of the town, and also by Gen. Kearney and his staff, with lighted candles in their hands.

The priest at Tonie joined in the waltz, and appeared as jovial and as much disposed to participate in all the amusements as any one else. The country couth of this place, Santa Fe along the Rio Grande, is much better than any portion of the Province I have yet visited; yet, in my judgment, no Missourian would ever think of locating any where here for the purpose of cultivating the soil. The Province has been over rated, and our government has been grossly imposed upon and deceived, as to its resources, commerce, &c. I have not seen any thing since my arrival here that would excite the least desire for me to reside here. To sum up the whole in a few words, the Mexican are physically, mentally and morally an inferior and "low flung" race.

Yesterday an order was read, assigning the five companies of dragoons for the California expedition; there has not as yet been any place designated that my company will be attached to Maj. Clerk's Battalion, and stationed at this place. I hope such may be the case, unless I can induce the Gen. to let me go south, to Passo del Norte. I saw the Gen. last night and requested that he would not assign me to Doniphan's command - he said he would not.

I have found the offices of the army very agreeable companions, and thus far, all has gone on very well. Our mail will not leave next Thursday. Should anything occur before the departure of the mail. I will write you again.

September 15th , 1846.

Since writing the foregoing, an order was made, assigning my company to do duty with Major Clark's battalion, and stationing up at this place for the winter.

The five companies of dragoons, will, it is said, march on the 25th instant for California. We have had no news in relation to prices'regiment, nor of Captain Allen's command of Mormous. We do not know how to account for the non-arrival of Price, nor the delay of Allen.

The following are extracts of a letter from Gen. BUTLER, to a near relative of his in Louisville. In publishing it the Journal of that city states that the General says, in the same letter, that it is the opinion of those Mexican officers who have been taken prisoners by our army, that their Government will at once offer to ours terms of peace.

MONTEREY, SEPT. 25, 1846.

Monterey is ours, but not without a heavy loss, and my division has probably sustained more than one-half of it. I am myself wounded, but not badly. I was struck by a musket ball below the knee: it entered in front, grazed the bones without injuring them, ranged round through the flesh, and came out on the opposite side. I became faint from loss of blood, and was compelled to leave the field after having been in it under a heavy fire of grape and musketry for three hours. I have been required by my surgeon to keep perfectly still ever since the battle.

I was in the act of leading the Ohio Regiment to storm two of the most formidable batteries in the town, flanked by a stone wall, ten feet high, with a deep ditch in front, and covered by a strong musketry force in the rear, under complete shelter. There were two other batteries of grape shot discharged, that swept the ground continually. Col. Mitchell, who commanded the regiment of Ohio volunteers, was wounded about the same time that I was, and we then prudently abandoned the enterprise, as we become convinced that our loss would have been probably at least one-hundred more men, had we persevered.

I hope you will not think I acted rashly. I know that I am often rash where I involve myself alone; not so, however, when the fate of others are at stake. The condition is which we were placed fully justified, if it did not positively require us to make the attempt. The peculiarity of our situation I cannot now explain without going into greater detail than I am able to do.

The battle commenced about 9 o'clock A. M., and continued without intermission, with various degrees of intensity, for eight hours. I had almost 1000 men in the battle - the Louisville Legion having been left to guard our mortars - and of that number we lost in killed and wounded about 250.

We took our battery and a house fitted up as a fortification, and assisted the regulars in taking a second. General Worth, with great gallantry and equal success, and with far less loss, carried on his operations on the opposite side of the town.

The loss of the regulars who acted with us was nearly proportional to ours, as I learn, though I have not seen the official returns.

Under the circumstances, the terms of the capitulation are favorable to us. There were still several strong forts in the hands of the enemy, which we would have been compelled to take by regular approaches or with heavy losses. The plaza is of itself an enormous fortification of continuous houses, with thick stone walls, and all the streets leading into it strongly fortified and filled with guns.

They admit that they will have at least 8000 fighting men, whilst on our part we cannot muster 5000 for duty, and have only a few heavy guns, and them we took from them. Never, I believe, did troops, both volunteers and regulars, behave with more calmness and intrepidity, and I do not believe that for downright straightforward hard fighting the battle of Monterey has ever been surpassed.

[AMB]
100 of which are swimming, and with a rapid current of six miles the hour. If opposed by a considerable force, the passage would be exceedingly difficult, and could not be effected without great loss.

Col. Harney's command, in July, were compelled to swim about sixty yards, and the stream so scattered them, that 100 resolute men, as asserted by some of his officers, could have prevented their landing.

As soon as supplies are received to enable him to advance, Gen. Wool will press on to Chihuahua, taking Santa Rose and Monclova in his route. The former town is garrisoned with regular troops and is said to be capable of strong resistance. This line of operations is longer than might be selected, but it has the advantage of turning the mountain passes - of assurance of water and some provisions - and runs within seventy or eighty miles of Gen. Taylor's, when cooperation can be readily effected if necessary.

Gen. Wool has exhibited great activity and energy in preparing for the march. On arriving at San Antonio, on the 14th of August he was far in advance of his army and his supplies and met with innumerable obstacles in procuring wagons, teams, forage and provisions. He moved his forces at the earliest practicable moment, with so limited a number of rations as scarcely to justify his advance.

If it is found impossible to transport supplies by water to the Presidio or other point on the Rio Grande whence to furnish the Army, it will be necessary to haul all their previsions from Port Lavaces, by way of San Antonio, a distance to Chihuahua of nearly 800 miles, and through a country in rainy seasons almost impeamable for heavy wagons. It will be seen that this enterprise is gigantic, and its accomplishment will be an achievement more arduous and more creditable than a brilliant victory.

The health of the troops had very much improved. The sick were left at Bexar under care of Dr. Glen, U.S.A.

The command consists of the following officers and troops:

The Kentucky Regiment of Cavalry left Lavacca on the 13th inst. for Matamoros. About forty of them had; died fifty to seventy of them had been discharged, and one hundred sick were sent to Matamoros by water. At one time it was said that 300 men were on the sick report. - The Tennessee Cavalry followed the Kentucky Regiment on the 16th.

Friday, November 6, 1846 RW46v23i89p3c4 Notice of Some of the Officers who fell at Monterey Lieutenant Charles Hoskins, of the 4th infantry, who was killed in that gallant charge in the streets of Monterey, on the 21st September, was a native of North Carolina. He graduated at West Point in 1836, and was Adjutant of his regiment at the time of his death. AS an officer he was ever active and distinguished. He rendered very important services in his capacity as adjutant in the battles of the 8th and 9th of May last. As Quartermaster in the said Cherokee nation in 1835, under Generals Scott and Wool, his services were pre-eminent in all the operations preliminary to the removal of the Cherokees. To attempt to bear any sufficient tribute to his rare virtues as a man, a gentleman, and a friend might cause this notice to transcend its character as a record interesting to the public. But that public, which cherished the glory of the Republic, and instantly accords its admiration for such heroic deeds, will feel an interest in hearing of the exalted private worth of such men, and will sympathize with those who lament their departure and extol their virtues. Lieut. Hoskins possessed a quick and sagacious intellect; he remarkable for the generosity and chivalry of his character, and for those winning traits which ever secured the regard and respect of those with whom he moved. The old "North State" never furnished for the service of the county a more choice and noble spirit. North Carolina will ever be proud of sons whose high character and gallant bearing shall rival his.

BREVET MAJOR PHILIP N. BARBOUR,

Of the 3d Infantry, who also fell on the 21st September, was a native of Kentucky, and graduate at West Point in 1834. He was brevetted a Captain for gallant services in Florida, on the 15th April, 1842. He was brevetted a Major from 9th May last for gallant conduct in the battle of Resaca de la Palma. He was ever, like a true soldier, eager to distinguish himself, and fell at Monterey in the thickest of the fight, while his regiment was subjected to that murderous fire from masked batteries in the streets, which, after severely wounding its commander, Major Lear, killed three captains and two subalterns, and left the regiment commanded by its youngest captain. His loss will be severely felt in his regiment. He was an ornament to his profession; as much from his rare private virtues as from his public character. Devotedly attached to his native State, he has ever, throughout his career as on his glorious death, reflected great honor upon it. The army will lament his death; it remains for the country to record his name among its heroes. He was a relation of the Barbours of Virginia.

SECOND LIEUTENANT J. S. WOODS,

Of the 2d Infantry, then on duty with the 4th Infantry, who was killed in the same charge, was a native of Pennsylvania. He graduated at West Point in 1844. He was brevetted a First Lieut. for his gallantry on the 9th May at Resaca de la Palma, whilst serving in the 4th Infantry, in capturing a field-piece from the Mexicans with a very few men. He was a young and modest officer, son of a clergyman in the interior of Pennsylvania. The citizens of his native town had just presented a sword to him for his gallantry on the 9th of May, little dreaming that he was so soon to exhibit the same spirit in another signal victory which numbers him among the slain.

First Lieut. Douglass S. Irwin, of the 3d infantry, killed at the battle of Monterey, was the son of Maj. Irwin, of Old Point Comfort, a gentlemen well known and highly respected by all the officers of the army. Lieut. Irwin was educated at West Point, and distinguished himself in the Florida war. He was a mild amiable man, beloved by the army, and his fate is deeply regretted by all his companions in arms. Had he lived he would have rapidly risen to command, as he possessed all the requisites of an able officer.

Each one of the officers of the regular army who have fallen in those brilliant battles at Monterey were graduates at West Point, except Lieut. Terrett, 1st Infantry, from Virginia, a young officer of high promise. Those battles reflect . . . upon our arms, and exhibit a remarkable instance of what American troops can accomplish even in storming entrenched positions held by superior numbers. [Nat. Int.

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 RW46v23i90p1c3 General Taylor

A Paris correspondent of the Louisville Journal says: "I heard often in England and Ireland, and I still hear in France, the highest compliment paid to the dispatches of Gen. Taylor. An officer in the British Navy remarked to me, after reading them, that they were models and reflected more credit upon him even than his victories."

We copy the foregoing for the purpose of correcting a very general impression, that Gen. Taylor does not write his own despatches [sic], but that, like Gen. Jackson, he . . . cures the aid of a more polished pen than his own to narrate the incidents of the battlefield. A gentlemen who was with Gen. Taylor several months during the past summer, has assured us, from personal knowledge that Gen. Taylor "writes as well as he fights," and that every despatch [sic] to which his name is signed, is written with his own hand.

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 RW46v23i90p1c5 From the N.O. Picayune, Oct. 30

The steamship McKim arrived at Galveston from Brazos Santiago on Saturday last, the 24th inst., having sustained some right damage in her machinery. Gen. A. S. Johnson, of Texas, Col. Balie Peyton and our associate, Mr. Kendall, were passengers on the McKim. Capt. Shivery’s company of Mississippi and Texas volunteers, and a large number of the steam schooner Spitfire at Bazos from Chagres. This and other items are given in Mr. Kendall's letter appended. The McKim was to leave Galveston on Wednesday, the 28th inst., if her repairs were completed, and also may therefore be expected every hour. Our correspondence from the Army is in the mails on the McKim. The Palmetto brought no mail.

The U.S. propeller Florida, Capt. Butler, from Brazos for this port, put for Galveston on the 25th inst., having been eleven days out, with 200 discharged volunteers on board. She was abort of provisions and water. Having supplied herself she was to sail again for this port on the 28th.

[AMB]
The Palmetto going out towards New Orleans this evening gives me a chance of sending you a line, although I have little in the way of news to communicate.

The McKim and Florida, propellers, are both in port here from Brazos Island. The former came in, with her machinery out of order, three days since, and having been repaired will sail to-morrow: the Florida experienced head [sic] weather, and was obliged to put in for water. She, as well as the McKim, was crowded with sick and discharged volunteers, several dying on the passage up. If anything is needed it is a comfortable Government transport on which to send home the sick and disabled soldiers.

From Monterey, a great deal of sickness prevails - chills an fevers and intermitting fevers. I have come in for more than a full shore of both, but am now on the mend. I regret to state that two able officers died here last night and are to be buried this afternoon - Col. William S. Fisher, who commanded the noted Mier expedition and Capt. Francis S. Karty, who commanded the Washington company of Texas Rangers at the battles of Monterey. The former had just married a young and accomplished wife; the latter was hourly expecting his family to meet him at this place.

The U.S. steamer Spitfire, Capt. Tatnall, arrived at Brazos Island on the 19th inst. from Chagres. She had on board Capt. Wes. C. Nocholson, Lieut. . . . and Passed . . . , U.S.N., who had been all been sent down to Chagres with dispatches for the Pacific squadron. - They are now on their way to New Orleans on the McKim. The news from California, brought by these gentlemen, has doubtless been anticipated by the arrival of Com. Sloat.

I am glad to see that our Government is to prosecute the war against Mexico with some show of reason and vigor. Recall. Gen. Wool from his nonsensical and Quixotic expedition to Chihuahua, order him to join Gen. Taylor and help out in the operations againstSaltillo and San Louis, and the eyes of the Mexican rulers will soon be opened. All that will be wanting will be the subjugation of Tampico, and the establishment of depots of provisions on the road between that and San Louis, to throw all of Northern Mexico completely in our power.

The Mexican General, I am confidently told, was once a common drayman in the streets of Havana.

On the 25th, the ceremony of the surrender took place, and the Mexican flag on the citadel went down saluted by their cannon, and the stars and stripes rose proudly in its place, saluted in return by the guns of the Mexican fort, while the cheers of our brave men greeted its folds, as it disdainfully fluttered out on the breeze that wafted it from the staff of its conquered foe. Many of the Mexican officers called on Gen. Worth, among whom were Don Francisco Bena, who commanded at the Onis Pado, or Bishop's Palace, Gen. Ortiga, Col. Marino, and others. While drinking with these gentlemen upon this occasion, Gen. Ortiga [sic] gave the following toast, at whose pronouns, we and our, I could not help but smile. He said, "I drink to the perpetual peace of the two Republics, and may we hereafter ever be as brothers joined in one cause, and let us show to foreign nations the greatness of our power, which the valor of our arms shall teach all Europe that we can defy them." That day a great portion of the Mexican cavalry and infantry marched out of the city, and they continued to leave in detachments throughout the week, with a great flourish of drums and trumpets. You may form a very good idea of their music by comparing it with the beating of a [..] kettle by some noisy urchin, which you occasionally see in the streets, to the [..] of some auctioneer's drum. It was a sight indeed to have seen the Mexican soldiery marching out of the city; a set of weak and diminutive creatures, dressed up in a tawdry uniform of blue and red, without shoes, having only sandals to their feet, and seeming scarcely able to support the knapsacks on their backs, while the officers who commanded them had more of the look and appearance of slave-drivers than of military men. And when our men and officers saw it was with such as these they had to do, their lips curled with the scorn of pity and [..]. - While one of their regiments were marching out of the city, in passing by the Texan camp of Rangers, a captain of their infantry saw one of our horses tied to a stake near the road, and seeing no one near, stole the horse and rode off at a rapid rate, but was soon followed by our men, on the discovery, and was overtaken, and the horse brought back. On informing the Mexican Colonel of what had occurred, the officer, or horse-thief, was immediately arrested and his sword taken from him. I had occasion to go on a matter of business with several of our officers, to call on Gen. Ampudia; we found his quarters finely furnished, his tables loaded with fruit, wine and cigars; while in an adjoining apartment, were seen several women gaudily dressed. On our presentation to him he merely bowed, standing with his hands in his breeches, with a white jacketon, and an unlit cigar in his mouth, and asked what we wanted, without even extending to us the courtesy of a seat, much less to partake of the viands on his sumptuous table. He is a large man of full six feet, inclined to corpulency with little shrewed, cunning black eyes, indicative of deceit, intrigue and libertinism; he wore am imperial, with a tuft of beard on his chin. There was nothing in his manners prepossessing or pleasing, but, on the contrary, you become disgusted with the man, and feel he is a villain, a tyrant, and a coward. And this great Mexican General, I am confidently told, was once a common drayman in the streets of Havana.
If it were possibl, I should be glad to send you a particular report of the fight on Gen. Taylor's side of the town, but not having been there, I cannot give you any further particulars than I sent you in my last; but you will soon be furnished with an official report of the whole affair, as the different returns of the commanding officers are nearly finished. The Mississippians have covered themselves with glory, and Gen. Quitman, who commanded the brigade, has added to his reputation of a statesman and noble hearted gentlemen, that of a brave soldier and a gallant and talented military chiefain. Gen. McClung also, who fell wounded in taking the first fort, on the Taylor side, at the time of receiving the award of the commanding Mexican officer, is doing well, and has won a name which his former character well sustained. I must not forget to mention an act of high souled magnanimity and bravery on the part of Lieut. George Deas, the Ajutant of the Fifth Regiment of the U.S. Infantry, which came under my observation. On the day of the 21st, when we ha been ordered to storm the first hill, which I have before described, and while we were rushing on to take the second battery, which was done by the Fifth and the Rangers, the Sergeant-Major of that regiment received a severe wound in the jaw, by a cannister shot, and fell by the side of Adjutant Deas, who was also knocked down by the concussion, and under a galling fire of grape and caninister he carried the wounded soldier to a place of security, and then with the proud feelings of his noble daring, rushed on to the taking of the battery.

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 RW46v23i90p1c6 Later from Monterey

The streamship Palmetto, Lewis arrived last night, in 36 hours from Galveston. Among the passengers were Dr. Conrad and Lieut. Nichols, U.S.A.; Lieuts. Dorfendorf, Price, (reported dead,) South and Smedes, of the Mississippi volunteers, and lieut. Read, of the Texas Rangers, with 41 volunteers. The vessels left at Galveston were the ship Star Republic for New York; bark Bostonian, for Thomaston; brigs Jenkins, of Southport, and Martha Sanger; Bremen, brig Napoleon; do. Mary, for New York, brig Damascurs, for Mobile; schrs. Sea Nymph, of Southport; Telemache, of Hallowell; Ellenor Stevens, New York; five brigs unknown; the steamship McKim, and steamshooner Florida, both for New Orleans. The McKim was from Brazos Santiago, and was to leave Galveston for this port on the 28th (Wednesday.) The steam schooner Florida was eleven days from Brazos Santiago with three hundred discharged volunteers. She put into Galveston of the 25th short of provisions and water, and was to leave again for this port on the 28th inst.

There is not much news from the Army. Lieut. Price, whose death has been announced in Mississippi papers and our own, is, thank God, alive, and now at the St. Charles Hotel, in this city. From some of the officers of the U.S. Army, who came passengers on the Palmetto, and who left Monterey on the 11th inst, we learn that the first Government Express, ordering Gen. Taylor to carry on the war with renewed energy, in consequence of the refusal of Mexico to negotiate, was within a few miles of Monterey, and would reach that point the next day.

The health of the troops at Monterey was much better than it had been on the Rio Grande.

The fortifications in the city were garrisoned by the regular troops.

Gen. Taylor's camp was about three miles this side of Monterey.

The last accounts from Gen. Ampudia and his army left them beyond Saltillo on their march toward San Luis Potosi, at which point it was rumored that Santa Anna had arrived at the head of thirteen thousand, and daily expecting reinforcements.

The Georgia Regiments was the only reinforcement which had reached Monterey at the time our informants left. Orders had been received, it was understood, by the other Regiments stationed on the Rio Grande, to move towards Head-Quarters. The Kentucky and Tennessee mounted Regiments had not yet reached Matamoros.

The people of Monterey who had left about the time of the siege, were gradually returning. They had begun to exhibited friendly feelings towards the Americans, interchanges of visits not being rare among both parties.

There had been affrays between the citizens of Monterey and Texas Rangers, which resulted, first, in the assassination of a Texan Volunteer, and then, by way of revenge, in the killing of eleven Mexicans by the comrades of the slain. General Taylor, to prevent similar recurrences had ordered an efficient guard to be distributed through the city.

Lieut. Col. McClung was rapidly recovering from the effects of his wounds. One of the officers of his Regiment informs us that the gallant Colonel was the first man that showed himself on the first Fort stormed by Gen. Taylor's Division and that he received his wounds whilst waving his sword aloft and cheering on his men, shouting "Victory." The musket ball struck him on his left hand whilst holding his scabbard and entering his abdomen, fracturing in its course, the bone above the hip joint.

We feel bound to state further from the evidence furnished us, that Gen. Taylor's coolness and sound judgement throughout the terrible three days was remarked by every one engaged, and that his intrepidity was such, he being in the thickest of the fight and always where the balls fell fastest, that his escape was deemed miraculous. He still

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 RW46v23i90p4c4 Late from Havana

The brig P. Soule, Capt. Delvailie, arrived yesterday evening from Havana, having left there early the morning of the 26th October. Ten of the crew belonging to the barque Madeline and schooner Planet, totally wrecked in the harbour of Havana, came over on the brig.

She brings us full files of the papers, and they are crowded with details relating to the hurricane and the destruction caused by it. The loss is absolutely incalculable. About fifty lives were lost. One house was blown down under which eleven persons were overwhelmed and killed. The harbour was strewn with wrecks, and most of the vessels left afloat were dismasted. Not a house in the city escaped damage to some extent, while many were completely razed and their occupants suffered in the ruins. The destruction far surpasses that caused by the hurricane of October, 1844.

We find a list of those buried at the General Cemetery in the course of the 12th ult. It contains 47 names. - From this one may judge of the destruction of life. Four more were buried at the same place the following day, and two more on the 14th.

The storm commenced between 10 and 11 o'clock the night of the 10th of October, and continued gradually to increase; and till 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning of the 11th when the hurricane was at its height. The rain fell in torrents during the gale. The houses outside the wall's being lighter than those in the city proper, suffered the most severely. The ward San Lazaro appears to have been ruined, almost every house being prostrated, and the waters of the sea being driven up into the houses by the violence of the wind. We have a long enumeration of the injuries in the different wards of the city, but as the localities are known to but very few of our readers, we shall not enter upon the details. The papers make vain efforts to estimate the losses, but give it up in despair.

The Captain-General and other principal authorities of the Island distinguished themselves by their efforts to maintain order and tranquillity, and after the hurricane was over they were equally prompt to come to the rescue of the afflicted. Subscriptions were at once opened for the relief of the sufferers, Gen. O'Donnell besides the list with 500 dollars, and other officers contributing as liberally. the various benevolent societies took prompt measures to succor the distressed. The officers of the different wards were required to give immediate notice of any urgent cases of distress within their limits, that the Government might promptly afford relief. Individual instances of courageous benevolence are promulgated in the papers, and we hardly need say that the ladies of the city were the first to cheer the despairing and minister to the wounded. Various mitigations of existing regulations in the city were made promptly by Gen. O'Donnell, and the energies of all directed to the speediest reparation of the evils suffered.

The authorities of the Island, in order to facilitate the replacin of the smaller class of vessels engaged in the coasting and fruit trade, which was lost or disabled in the hurricane, have so far suspended the existing ordinances as to allow the owners of such vessels to buy foreign vessels to supply the places of hose lost - the owners being only required to prove the former existence of the vessel lost or disabled, and the fact of its loss in the late hurricane.

We find several anecdotes related, showing acts of gallantry in rescuing crews of vessels. The crew of the American ship Rapid were thus saved by the boats of the Belgian ship Anversois; but w have neither time nor room for such particulars to-day.

The Havana editors give great thanks that the sugar cane has suffered severely less by this hurricane than that of 1844, although very much injured.

The accounts from Matanzas give a general description of the destruction sustained there. All the vessels in port suffered severely, and there is a long list of injuries to the houses of the town. The newspapers were able to issue only slips, as the printers were unable to leave their families in the general distress. The American bark Ranger, from Portland, the bark Nichol Brown, last from Havana, and the schooner Gen. Warren, from Philadelphia, were stranded and in a bad state. The brigs Neptune and North Bend, of Frankfort, Porto Rico, of Boston, Merlin, last from Havana, and Old Colony, from Portland, and Nassau, were all aground. The injury done to coasting vessels was yet more extensive. The country about presents a sad aspect. The cane suffered as severely as in 1844, and the plantations were destroyed.
Guines suffered to a considerable extent. Several public buildings were destroyed, as were many private houses, and those left standing had their roofs blown off. Considerable loss of life, too, occurred in this town. The same general account will apply to the villages of Santa Maria del Rosario, San Antonio, Santiago. At Mariel, besides the houses blown down, six schooners were lost at the wharves and another in the bay, two only of the crew of the latter being saved.

Official accounts from Cardenas represent that in Guasimas, Lagunillas and Cimarrones the plantain trees were prostrated, but the crop would not be lost, but only kept back; a fifth or sixth part of the coffee crop would be lost, while the cane was even less injured. The whole Department, if that be the name of the territorial division, had suffered little. Not a personal accident had occurred.

The editors of the Diario de la Marino have advices from Cuba to the 12th, from Puerto Principe to the 14th, from Trinidad to the 15th, from Santiago to the 16th and from Cienfuegos to the 17th of October. From all these points the accounts in regard to the gale were highly satisfactory. The injury done by the hurricane is said to be comparatively insignificant; at some points nothing is said of the gale. At Sagua la Grande the gale was scarcely felt.

But we do not propose to follow the Havana papers into a tithe of their details. We could readily fill several numbers of our paper with them. We have written enough to give a general idea of the ravages of the gale. Besides, the Havana papers have not given us a comprehensive picture of their losses, but an infinity of particulars. The other news from the island is of little moment and may be speedily disposed of.

RW46v23i90p5c1 The President and Santa Anna

If, as a French politician remarked, "a blunder is worse than a crime," in affairs of State, Mr. Polk cannot escape either self-mortification or public censure, if it shall hereafter appear, as it is now believed, that Santa Anna was induced to leave his place of exile by the previous pledge of Mr. Polk's secret agent that no impediment would be offered by the blockading squadron to his return to Mexico. For, although Santa Anna, in turn, may have given assurance to Mr. Polk of his desire and willingness, for an adequate consideration, (say two millions of dollars,) to exert his influence to put an end to the war, on conditions satisfactory to the American Government, there are at least two grave objections to the arrangement that ought to have been an insuperable barrier to its consummation.

In the first place, the whole previous history of Santa Anna, and especially his course towards the people of Texas, who had generously spared his forfeited life, proves that he is faithless and perfidious; and the zeal with which he has co-operated, since his return to Mexico, in measures of vigorous resistance to the American armies, after having virtually rejected a proposition for the renewal of negotiations tendered by our Government to that of Mexico, with view to the termination of the conflict, is therefore characteristic of the man, and ought to have been anticipated by Mr. Polk and his advisers. Fortunately, that part of the supposed bargain between the high contracting parties, which, it is conjectured, required the payment of two millions of dollars to Santa Anna, as the price of his acquiescence in the plans of Mr. Polk, failed by the loss of the famous "two million bill" the reasons for the demand of which sum by the Executive, discreetly withheld at the time it was made, will, we presume, be required by Congress at its next session. And this feature of the transaction suggests the second and more important objection to the secret treaty supposed to have been made between the parties. For, while it would have been entirely compatible with the national honor to have avoided the war in which we are now engaged, by making an equitable compensation to Mexico for the transfer to the United States of such portions of her territory as our Government might have desired to obtain, either for the purpose of "rounding off our frontier" on the Texas boundary line, or of securing the fine ports and harbours on the Pacific coast, we hold that that [sic] honor is in no small degree compromitted, now that the war is in progress, by efforts to obtain a peace by a secret intrigue with an expld President, whose assent to the conditions proposed was to be obtained by a peace by a magnificent douceur. It is, indeed, not improbable, that the inability of Mr. Polk to fulfill the pecuniary part of his contract with Santa Anna, consequent upon the loss of the two million-bill, may have induced Santa Anna, after his return to Mexico, tochange his line of policy, and to fall in with the excited tone of public sentiment against the United States, rather than run the hazard of stemming its fury. But even if this be the fact, and if it be farther probable that his personal popularity might have enabled him to revolutionize public opinion, and to induce his fellow-citizens to assent to the terms of the secret arrangement, we should nevertheless rejoice at the discomfiture of a project, involving so serious a reflection upon the character of our own country.

These remarks are made on the presumption that an understanding did exist between Mr. Polk and Mexican Ex-
President - a presumption justified by the circumstances of the case, as well as by the omenious silence of the Executive Organ and the Administration presses in regard to the permission, given, by some competent authority, Santa Anna, to pass the blockading squadron, and to land Vera Cruz. We hope soon to see this silence broken. Public opinion requires an explanation of this extraordinary circumstance - and the Administration cannot avoid the necessity, however disagreeable and mortifying it may be, of giving it. This remarkable event has attracted attention abroad as well as at home, as we learn by the following paragraph from the Alexandria Gazette:

"We learned, a day or two since, in conversation with a gentleman recently returned from Europe, that the greatest surprise was manifested in private circles in England, by the most intelligent and well-informed people, at the very extraordinary movement of our government in countenancing and permitting the return of Santa Anna and his officers to Mexico. "You Americans," was the common remark, "are certainly the strangest people on the face of the earth. You certainly display the most indomitable heroism and perseverance - you overcome obstacles that would seem almost insurmountable - and yet you display the utmost lack of wisdom, nay, even of common sense, in the conduct of your war, with Mexico. You permit Santa Anna, a skilful general, a man of notoriously bad faith, without one single honorable trait in his character, crafty, cunning, deceitful, and your bitter enemy, to regain his country, unite a divided people, and lead an army, devoted to his interests, against you. This is a movement which no other nation on earth would have thought of, for a single moment. You permit Almonte, too, who from his long residence in your country, as probably the best informed of all his countrymen, of your condition and resources, as well as the motion was manifested in private circles in England, by the most intelligent and well-informed people, at the very extraordinary movement of our government in countenancing and permitting the return of Santa Anna and his officers to Mexico. "You Americans," was the common remark, "are certainly the strangest people on the face of the earth. You certainly display the most indomitable heroism and perseverance - you overcome obstacles that would seem almost insurmountable - and yet you display the utmost lack of wisdom, nay, even of common sense, in the conduct of your war, with Mexico. You permit Santa Anna, a skilful general, a man of notoriously bad faith, without one single honorable trait in his character, crafty, cunning, deceitful, and your bitter enemy, to regain his country, unite a divided people, and lead an army, devoted to his interests, against you. This is a movement which no other nation on earth would have thought of, for a single moment. You permit Almonte, too, who from his long residence in your country, as probably the best informed of all his countrymen, of your condition and resources, as well as the disposition of your people, to return with Santa Anna, and, in all probability, assume the direction of the war department."

We repeat, that public opinion will demand of the Administration a satisfactory explanation of this remarkable movement. At no distant day, it must be given. That it will be made with reluctance, however, is manifest from the refusal heretofore of the champions of the Administration to allude to the subject, except in terms so general and indefinite as rather to puzzle than enlighten the public mind.

The following significant letter on the subject will be read with interest:

Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot.
WASHINGTON, NOV. 2d, 1846.

Is the Hon. John Slidell still the American Minister to Mexico, and does he continue to draw his salary of $9000 per annum as Minister? Who knows? Will any body answer?

Mr. Slidell has the reputation of being a shewed, keen man, who is not only wealthy, but fond of being more so. He is said to be fond of speculation. If he had succeeded on his mission to Mexico; if he had effected a treaty whereby the management of the Indemnity due by Mexico to claimants in the United States would fall into his hands, the probability is that he would have realized a magnificant sum of money. But the mission failed. He was not received, and came back to the United States. The war ensued. Who knows what influences Mr. slidell had in bringing it on?
After awhile his brother, Capt. Slidell Macken[...] is deputed by our Government to proceed post haste to Havana, where he held an interview with Santa Anna and Almonte. What for? He next goes to vera Cruz. What for? Next he proceeds to the Army of Occupation, and holds an interview with Gen. Taylor. What for?

"Does not the sequel show what all this was for? The President sends, through the Secretary of State, a communication to the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Mexico, pro[...] of peace and good fellowship between the [...]s.
He also sends a message in great haste to [...] to have 2 millions of dollars placed at its [...] to enable him to effect a peace with Mexico. Santa Anna and Almonte leave Havana for Vera Cruz. They arrive at the latter place, which is blockaded by our squadron. The commander suffers them to pass in unmolested. Capt. Slidell Mackenzie had been there before them. If they could get at the head of Mexican Affairs, they might assent [...] of peace; receive Mr.
John Slidell as Minister; and the latter might yet get the negotiations respecting California, and the Rio Grande, and Mexican indemnity mainly into his hands

But Santa Anna and Almonte proved teacherous. - They got into Vera Cruz and are now at the head of the Army and the Government of Mexico, swearing vengeance against the United StatesWho trusted them? He who would place confidence in them deserved to be betrayed. But was any portion of the two millions asked for, drawn [...]vance and paid to them or any one else concerned in the matter? Who can tell?

How stands the matter now? We are going to war upon Mexico more rigorously than ever. WhyIs it not, in part, at least, because Santa Anna and Almonte have broken their faith? Why were they trusted in the first place? Why was confidence for one moment placed in them? The bones of the martyrs to freedom against Mexican tyranny and Mexican butchery, who were slaughtered at the Alamo and at Gohad, and of those who were shot in the Mier Expedition, ought to have risen from their graves and stood in vision before any American Administration that would for one moment trust the cold-blooded tyrants.

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p1c3 The Sufferings of the Soldiers

A volunteer in the Kentucky regiment (Robert Hardin) writing to his father, after the battle of Monterey gives an account of the three days' fighting. He says:

On Monday night the Mexicans were in high spirits. - They had lost but a few men. All night they threw up sky rockets. At night the firing ceased. The left wing of the Kentucky regiment, to which I am attached, were marched into the fort taken by us to hold it during the night. As we moved in, we were in point blank shot of one battery, and raked on our right by another. They both belched fire the whole time we were marching in, a distance of one mile. Such a night as I spent that night, I hope never to spend again. We had eaten nothing since day light. - We had no shelter - no food - no fire. We laid down in the mire and blood, among the dead men and horses, and a cold rain fell on us all night. I had no coat on, having gone into the tight in m shirt sleeves.

I never heard balls whistle before. Two cannon balls passed within two feet of me, and many more withi a short distance. As we left the fort on Tuesday evening, which we had been holding as stated before through Monday night, we were ordered to scatter, as the best means of protection against two batteries which ranked our line. I had got away from the company about 50 yards to myself when a whole load of grape shot were discharged at me alone. I heard the shot, and stooped in the bushes, when on both sides and above me the shot fell like hail. We lost three of our men with these tares this morning.

The dead were awful sights to look upon - same shot with cannon balls, and some with small shot - some with their heads shot off - some with their legs off - some with their bowels scattered on the ground. We had no time until yesterday to bury the dead. The heavens were full of carrios birds, and the air with stench. I have not time to write large - am in fine health, unhurt, without a scratch, for which I am truly thankful. [AMB]

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p1c3 The Rancheros

These constitute a principal portion of the Mexican Army. Rowan Hardin, of Ky, (who is in the Army in Mexico) writes to his father as follows -
The Rancheros are the people who live on farms. They are poor soldiers. By the laws of their government they are not allowed to have arms at home, and consequently do not understand the use of them. These people are not cowardly, but unskilled in the use of arms and without confidence in their rulers. Gen. Taylor esteems them a brave people; but they are not effective in battle because of their ignorance of the use of arms. Their defeat by Gen. Taylor on the Rio Grande, with such odds in their favor, has destroyed all confidence in themselves and they fight with no other expectation than to be whipped, but let this war last 12 months longer, and rest assured, they will prove an enemy no longer to be despised.

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p1c4 Operation of Captain Fremont

In Upper California.

(From the Washington Union.)

Letter from Senator Benton to the President.

SIR: In the absence of official information on the subject of Lieutenant Colonel [..] Captain Fremont's operations in Upper California, I deem it my duty to lay before you the private letters that I have received from that officer, for the purpose of showing you his actual position at the latest dates; the unwilling manner in which he became involved in hostilities with the Mexican authorities of that province, before he had heard of the war with Mexico; and especially to disprove the accusation, officially against him by Governor Castro, of having come into California with a body of United States troops, under the pretext of a scientific expedition, but in reality to excite the American settlers in that province to an insurrection against the Mexican government. This accusation is of the gravest character, most seriously implicating the good faith and honor of our government, and officially made by Governor Castro in a despatch [sic] to the minister of war and marine, under [..] of the first of April last, and published in El Monitor [..] publicano, in the city of Mexico, by the other of the [..] government, on the 10th of May last. A copy [..] paper was sent in Mrs. Fremont, my daughter, by [..] . Mr. Slidell, and an English translation of it is the [..] presented.

When Capt. Fremont left the United States to complete his scientific labors beyond the Rocky mountains, it was with a full knowledge of the political as well as personal difficulties of the enterprise. He knew that the relations of the U. States were [..] both with Mexico and Great Britain - that he was going through the territories of the [..], and among the settlements of the other - that jealousy would attach to his movements, and all his acts he referred to his government; and he was perfectly determined to use the utmost circumspection to all his conduct, confining himself wholly to his scientific pursuits, and carefully avoiding as well the appearance as the reality of either a political or military missions. With this view, and after having traversed the [..] and crossed the Great Basin which lies between the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Nevada of the Alta California, he left men upon the frontier, an hundred miles from Monterey, and went alone to that city to explain his object and wishes in person to Gov. Castro. He did this in the most formal and official manner, in company with the United States consul, Mr. O'Larkin, (at whose house he stopped,) and conforming to the whole detail of Spanish ceremonial, he not only called on the governor, but also on the perfect and the alcalde. The interview was entirely satisfactory. To the governor's remark that he was bringing a considerable body of United States troops with him, Capt. F. answered that it was not security against Indians, and killing game - that he was not even an officer of the line, but of Topographical Engineers and that he was seeing a new route (among the objects of science) to the mouth of the Columbia, upon a line further south than the present traveling route, and which had brought him through the unsettled parts of the Upper California; and that he now wished to winter in the valley of the San Josquin, where there was game for his men, and grass for his horses. To this the governor agreed; and Capt. Fremont left Monterey to bring his men to the beautiful valley which he had explored in his previous expedition, and to which both himself and his men looked forward, as to a paradise of rest and refreshment, after their toilsome and perilous march of three thousand miles among savage tribes, and through wilderness and desert countries.

Scarcely had he arrived in this valley, when information began to reach him from all quarters that the governor was raising the province against him and coming upon him with troops of all arms - calvary, artillery, and infantry - and that his situation was most critical and dangerous. The consul sent a special messenger to warn him of his danger; the American settlers below offered to join him; but he utterly refused their assistance, because he would not compromise them. But he did what honor and self-preservation required, and what the courage and fidelity of his men enthusiastically seconded; he took a position, and waited the approach of the assailants; and that position was nearer to them, on the summit of the Sierra, overlooking Monterey, at thirty miles distance, and whence, with their glasses, they could plainly see the troops, with their artillery, which had crossed the bay (of Monterey) to San Juan, on their way to attack him. The governor, with these troops, and with all his threats, after coming towards the camp on the Sierra, did not come to it; and Captain Fremont, faithful to his design to avoid collision, if possible, finding himself not attacked, determined to retire, and proceed to Oregon, on his intended route of the valley of the San Joaquin, and commenced his march by slow and easy stages, of four and six miles a day, towards Oregon.

It is of this encampment on the Sierra that Governor Castro makes particular complaint in his despatch [sic] to the Minister of War and Marine, as an evidence of hostile intentions, and where the American flag was raised, a fortification built and the American settlers called in for its defence. Unhappily we have no letter from Capt. Fremont [sic] detailing the events of these days; but the want of such a letter is well supplied by the official communications from the American consul at Monterey to our Secretary of State, and by Capt. Fremont's [sic] brief note to the consul, (written in pencil,) while expecting the attack of Gov. Castro, and which has been [..] published. in our papers. Mr. Buchanan furnished us, as soon as they were received, with copies of these despatches [sic], which are herewith laid before you, and from which it will be seen that Gov. Castro's accusations against Capt. Fremont [sic] are entirely unfounded - that so far from having excited the Americans to revolt, he absolutely refused to receive those who offered to join him [sic] and, more, that when after leaving this position, and granting discharges to five or six men, he refused to fill their places from the men in the country [sic] so determined was he to avoid as well in appearance, as in fact, the smallest act offensive or injurious to the Mexican authorities. The same correspondence shows the entire falsehood of all the superfluous gasconade which Governor Castro put into his official report about the spoils of the camp - the dispersion of Fremont and his men - their flight into the bulrushes, and through the desert - his suffocation in the cradle of a dangerous conspiracy, & c., with all which imaginary exploits his official despatch [sic] was filled, while Fremont with sixty-two men and two hundred horses, were slowly retiring in a body almost in his view, and utterly abstaining from any act of offence to the province or its authorities. It was no doubt a false report to his government, and the ridicule he incurred by it in California, that led to his subsequent operations in May to exterminate Fremont's party and all the American settlers on the Sacramento.

On return from the evacuated camp on the Sierra, the governor also put forth a proclamation, in the vein of his report, and even worse, styling Fremont and his men a band of highway robbers, plundering the people & c., which accusation of plundering the consul took the trouble to investigate, and found to be a very trivial offence of manners (not of law or morals) which the injured party valued a five dollars, and for which Capt. Fremont gave ten. For the rest, the consul, after all this, declares the inhabitants of the country to be well pleased with Capt. Fremont, and that he might walk the streets of Monterey the next day alone, if he chose. The only truth in Governor Castro's despatch [sic] is, that Captain Fremont took a military position, entrenched it, and raised the American flag; but these events were the consequence, and not the cause of Gov. Castro's movement against him; and this is fully shown in that brief, heroic note, written in pencil, in answer to the consul's warning, in which Capt. Fremont, after refusing the aid of the American settlers, declared for himself and his sixty-two men that they had done nothing wrong to the authorities or the people of the country - that if attacked they would defend themselves, and die to the last man under the flag of their country, and leave it to the country to avenge their deaths. All they did was in self-defence. - The flag was raised, not as a standard of insurrection, or as a sign of contempt to the Mexican government, but as the American symbol of honor and patriotism, which was entitled to respect from others - to defence from them - and which they had displayed in that hour of danger as a warning to the approaching assailants - as a bond of union and devotion among themselves - and as an appeal and invocation (if they should be destroyed) to the avenging spirit of their far distant country. To my mind, this entrenching on the mountain, and raising the national flag, was entirely justifiable under the circumstances of the case; and the noble resolution which they took (refusing the aid of their countrymen) to die if attacked under the flag of their country, four thousand miles distant from their homes, was an [...] of the highest heroism, worthy to be recorded by Xenophon, and reflecting equal honor upon the brave young officer who commanded and the heroic sixty-two by whom he was supported.

The first letter that we received from Captain Fremont after his withdrawal from the Sierras, and from the valley of the Sad Juan, is dated the first day of April in latitude 40, on the Sacramento river; and, though written merely to inform Mrs. Fremont of his personal concerns, becomes important in a public point of view on account of subsequent events in June and July, by showing that on the first of April he was on his way to Oregon - that he had abandoned all intention of returning through any part of California - would cross the Rocky mountains through the Northern Pass on the line between the Upper, or Kettle Falls of the Columbia, and the Great Falls of the Missouri - and be in the United States in September. This shows that he had, at that time, no idea of the events in which he was subsequently involved, and that he had abandoned the cherished field of his intended scientific researches for the express purpose of avoiding all offence to the Mexican authorities. Of the events in the valley of the San Joaquin and the camp on the Sierra, he speaks a few words, without detail, but descriptive of his condition, characteristic of his prudence in not compromising his country, and worthy to be repeated in his own language. He says: "The Spaniards were somewhat rude and inhospitable below, and ordered me out of the country after having given me permission to winter there. My sense of duty did not permit me to fight them, but we retired slowly and growlingly before a force of three or four hundred men, and three pieces of artillery. Without the shadow of a cause the governor suddenly raised the whole country against me, issuing a false and compromising the United States, against which appearances would have been strong; but though it was in my power to increase my party by Americans, I refrained from committing a solitary act of hostility or impropriety." His next letter is dated the 14th of May, and informs me that, in his progress to Oregon, he found himself and party unexpectedly attacked by the Tlamath Indians - the most warlike of that quarter - had lost five men in killed and wounded - and still expected to be in the United States in the month of September.

This was the last letter received from Captain Fremont until the one of July 26th, from Monterey, of the Pacific ocean, and brought in by Commodore Sloat. the events which brought him back you have learned from that commodore but the [...] which led to these events are necessary to be known for the justification of Capt. The substance in this: At the middle of May, Capt. Fremont, in pursuance of his design to reach Oregon, and return by the Columbia and Missouri through the Northern Pass in the Rocky Mountains, had arrived at the Tlamath Lake, in the edge of the Oregon Territory, when he found his father progress completely baited by the double obstacle of hostile Indians, which Castro had excited against him, and the lofty mountains, convened with deep and falling snows, which made the middle of May in that elevated region the same as the middle of winter. These were the difficulties and dangers in front. Behind, and on the north bank of the San Francisco Bay, at the military post of Sonoma, was Gen. Castro, [...] troops with the avowed intention of attacking both Fremont's party, and all the American settlers, against whom the Indians had been already excited. This, his passage barred in front by impossible snows and mountains, hemmed in by savage Indians, who were thinning the ranks of his little

On the 11th of June a supply of two hundred horses for Castro's troops, on the way to his camp, conducted by an officer and fourteen men, were surprised at daylight, and the whole captured - the men and officers being released, and the horses retained for American use (the point of rendezvous, and intended headquarters) was surprised and taken, with nine pieces of brass cannon; two hundred and fifty stand of muskets, other arms and ammunition, with several superior officers, General Vallejo, (Val-y-a-ho,) his brother, Captain Vallejo, Colonel Greuxdon, and others; all of whom were detained and confined as prisoners. Captain Fremont then repaired to the American settlements on the Rio de los Americans to obtain assistance; and receiving an express from his little garrison of fourteen in Sonoma that General Castro was preparing to cross the bay of San Francisco and attack them with a large force, he sat out in the afternoon of the twenty-third of June with ninety mounted riflemen, and traveling day and night, arrived at 2 o'clock in the morning of the 25th at Sonoma - eighty miles distance. The vanguard of Castro's force had crossed the bay - a squadron of seventy dragoons, commanded by de la Torre barely escaping with the loss of his transport boats, and spiking six pieces of artillery. In the mean time, two of Capt. Fremont's men, going as an express, were captured by d [...] Very respectfully, sir, your friend and fellow-citizen, THOMAS H. BENTON. Washington, Nov. 9 1846. [AMB] Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p2c1 The Mexican War The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, speaking of the peremptory order said to have been given to Gen. Taylor to resume active operations by marching on towards Saltillo, says: "We understand the War Department has rescinded that order, and given Gen. Taylor instructions to concentrate the scattered forces within his command, and to await at Monterey further instructions." This statement derives confirmation from the subjoined extract from a letter from a Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce, whose access to authentic sources of information has been often remarked. He writes: "There will be no expensive movements - no energetic movements, made before the meeting of Congress. The Mexican Congress may court a peace, and thus relieve our government from the necessity of acting further in the matter; and, if not, the whole responsibility of further action will be thrown upon Congress.

I believe that the question of peace has been agitated - that the government desires peace and intends to have it, at any price - and that its warlike energies are to rest until it can be found whether peace or war is the final determination of Mexico.

This is the opinion of many others. The operations in the Gulf of Mexico, so long talked of, are transferred to the moon. Ditto of the Tampican expedition. Ditto of the march to the halls of the Montezums. Ditto of the march of General Kearney and the greasy tallow candles and the Virgin Mary to Saltillo. Ditto of the alleged orders to General Wool to join Taylor at Saltillo. Ditto of the fable of General Patterson's enterprises. Ditto of all the stuff, in and out of the "Union," about the energies and objects of this government.

It is very evident that Mr. Polk's estimate of the disposition and capacity of the Mexican nation to meet the shock of war was as erroneous as was his opinion of the facility with which, by assuming a swaggering attitude, he could compel John Bull to relinquish the "whole of Oregon." We do not ensure him, of course, for falling into an error in regard to the weakness and timidity of the Mexican people, which was unfortunately too common among our countrymen, and which induced the Official Editor to promise to the country, in substance if not in express terms, that the American General would eat his Christmas dinner in the city of Mexico, and which led to so much silly ballerish about "reveling in the halls of Montezuma." The victory of San Jacinto, one of the most remarkable certainly on record, when the overwhelming superiority of the defeated force in point of numbers is considered, unfortunately contributed to strengthen and diffuse this erroneous estimate of the Mexican character; and consequently, after that brilliant (but we cannot help thinking accidental) triumph, the impression became universal that Texas, single-handed, or with such aid as she might be enabled to obtain from bands of armed emigrants from the United States, could without difficulty achieve the conquest of the Reput lie from which she had just seceded. Yet nothing is new, more certain than that her resources, both in men and in the material of war, would have been ridiculously inadequate to the enterprize, which has tasked thus far all the energy, skill and courage of the United States, and which, so confident are we of the ability of almost any nation, when united against an invader, to maintain its independence, will continue to grow more and more desperate as our armies shall recede farther and farther from our frontier. We repeat, that we do not complain that Mr.Polk so readily fell into an opinion of Mexica imbecility and cowardice, at that time so universal; although we think it will now be conceded, that, to act upon that opinion, by seizing upon and occupying with an armed force, a territory, which, if it did not belong to Mexico, was admitted by himself to be in dispute between that country and Texas, and thereby to involve that nation, without the consent of Congress, in a bloody and expensive war, was a grave BLUNDER, the serious consequences of which are perhaps as much to be depredated as the violation of the Constitution which it presupposes. We are firmly persuaded, that, had Mr. Polk foreseen the consequences of his order to Gen. Taylor to march to the Rio Grande, that order would never have given. He believed that the valley of the Rio Grande might be secured by this movement, without opposition from the Mexican troops, and probably without compensation to the Mexican Government. Acting upon the popular belief of the inefficiency of the Mexican troops, and sumulated perhaps by the distracted condition of that country and the instability of her institutions, he thought he might safely seize the territory in dispute, and leave it to subsequent negotiation to settle the price of its final relinquishment. The prompt resistance made to this attempt, though unsuccessful, and the obstinacy with which our army has been on every subsequent occasion encountered by the Mexicans, have opened the eyes of the Government to the difficulties of the task it has undertaken, and which, until very recently, it had believed might be so easily accomplished. We are not surprised, therefore, to see it intimated that the President is now solicitous for the speedy restoration of peace, and that, instead of promised by his Organ, he has resolved to remain in statu quo until the meeting of Congress, doubtless with the hope that that body may be able to extricate him, as it did from the embarrassments in which his want of sagacity and prudence involved him on the Oregon question, from the new dilemma in which he has been involved by his rash and unstatesmanlike proceedings. We sincerely hope that he may not be disappointed, if this be his purpos. We are aware that the expression of this opinion may subject us to harsh criticism from those who choose to confound the ADMINISTRATION with the COUNTRY - than which, unfortunately, as other measures of the government, besides the Mexican war, show, no two things may be rendered more distinct, and even antagonistical. In condemning the policy of the one - whether that policy be one of aggression upon Mexico for its own advantage, or upon American labor for the benefit of foreigners - we do not abate one jot or title of our devotion to the other. That very devotion, indeed, induces us to regret the existence of a war, in which the blood and treasure of the nation are poured out like water, for an object which might have been for more easily attained without the sacrifice of a human life or the expenditure of a fourth of the money which will be necessary to maintain our armies in the field. It is because we desire to see the Country prosperous and the Constitution unimpaired, that we condemn the foreign as well as the domestic policy of an Administration, which, whatever be the motives by which it has been influenced, has, in our opinion, aimed a deadly blow at both.

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p2c5 The Gun-Cotton

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10, 1846.
This afternoon experiments were made in the office of the Secretary of War with a quantity of prepared cotton, brought by Mr. Robertson, our present consul to Breman, for the express purpose of securing a patient for the inventors, Messrs. Schoenbein & Buttger.

The whole cabinet - the President, General Scott, Col. Totten, and a variety of distinguished gentlemen were present, and the experiments succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectation.

The prepared cotton ignites more readily than powder, and its combustion is more perfect. A ball was fired with it from a common market, from the window of the War Department against the wall of the Navy Department, with immense force; an excavation of nearly the depth of an inch being produced in the wall, and the ball being completely flattened.

The day after tomorrow, the expansive faculty of the prepared cotton will be tried at the arsenal with the musket pendulum. I will undoubtedly succeed, as a similar experiments have succeeded with it in Germany, Switzerland, and England.

Prepared cotton is nothing else than gunpowder in a purer state and more acceptable form. It contains precisely the same ingredients - carbon, sulphur, and nitre, and is manufactured with great ease, and may be preserved even for months in water. All that is necessary is to dry it before using it. - When the preparation is once made, twenty-four hours would suffice to prepare a sufficient quantity of cotton, just taken from the carding machine, to carry on our whole war with Mexico.

And yet the preparation is so simple, so clearly a scientific reduction of the known property of each ingredient part, that it is only a wonder that the same discovery has not been made years and years ago. The ventors being about to take out a patient, it would not be proper to say more on the subject now; in a few days (when the patient will be secured) all will be published, and then the process will be found so simple that every man may henceforth make his own gunpowder as he makes his own bread, or boils his own potatoes. Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p3c1 Last Evening Mail

From the Camp at Monterey Nov. 11

It is stated in the last Washington Union that Gen. La Vega and other Mexican officers, taken prisoners in May last, have been exchanged for Capt. Carpender and the crew of the brig. Truxton. Orders have been consequently issued by Gen. Scott for the release of Gen. La Vega and his officers.

Last evening the War Department received despatches [sic] from General Taylor. They were written on the 6th, 11th, 12th, and 13th October. But the detailed official letters on the operations before Monterey did not accompany them - much delay having occurred in making out complete returns from the various subordinate commandors of the army. The despatches [sic] which were received last evening, are brief and comparatively unimportant in their character.

In his letter of the 6th of October, General Taylor states that he had mustered out of service the entire force of mounted Texas volunteers. One company of Texas foot volunteers, which has rendered excellent service in the campaign, was then on the march to Camargo there to be mustered out of service.

The General states, that a small force is to be stationed at Laredo on the east bank of the Rio Grande, for the purpose of protecting that frontier of country from Indian depredations, and enabling the government of Texas to extend its jurisdiction with more facility to the river. With the advice of Governor Henderson, he has authorized Gen. Lamar, ex-President of Texas, to raise a mounted company of eighty men for this service, for twelve months. -- As a very small force is now in service from the State of Texas, he trusts that this step will be approved by the department.

The 2d infantry, with some of the artillery companies left in the rear, and so additional volunteer force, has been ordered forward to Monterey, together with a heavy battery train.

No credible intelligence has been received from the interior at the date of this letter. Gen. Ampudia, at the last advice was at Saltillo, probably with the whole or greater part of his army, [But subsequent accounts, in private letters, report that Ampudia had retreated from Saltillo, and would make San Luis de Potosi his rallying point. He was expected to make a stand there, and perhaps to be joined by Santa Anna, in case Gen. Taylor should extend his advance in that direction.]

The General states, that he had been unable as yet to prepare his detailed official report of the operations before Monterey - the last report from his subordinate commandors having been at that moment received. Our loss in killed, wounded and missing, will vary very little from 500-400 of which was sustained in the attack on the lower part of the city on the 21st.
Lieut. Dilworth, 1st Infantry had died of the wounds received on the 27th ult.

In his letter of the 13th of October, Gen. T. enclose a statement of a recent atrocious murder, which had been perpetrated on the 5th, in the streets of Monterey, upon a Mexican dancer, by one Fitzsimons. Captain Hays of the Texas rangers was present, soon after the scene, and had no doubt of the guilt of the man. He is now in confinement. Some difficulty had occurred as to the proper disposition of the accused, as there seems to be no American tribunal [...] to meet the case. The Mexican governor had complained of the act, and desired that the man might be brought to merited punishment. The general replied that the case should be submitted to his government before any action would be taken there.

In his last letter, Gen. Taylor deeply regrets he necessity of reporting the death of the brave Robt. H. Graham, 1st lieut. of the 4th infantry, who died, on the previous night, of the wounds which he had received in the engagement of the 21st Sept.

Camargo (Mexico) October 22, 1845

Gentlemen: - In my last I intimated to you that everything was very quiet about Monterey, and the indications were in favor of a continuance of the calm, until the expiration of the eight weeks mentioned in the terms of capitulation, or the return of Captain Eaton, the aid of General Taylor, from Washington City. Up to the time of my departure on the 16th, nothing indicated any change in the state of things. The discharge of the Texas troops and their departure caused the town to be more tranquil than ever. Not many of the Mexicans had returned to the place, as they are yet afraid; but that will not probably continue much longer.
Before my leaving, the account of the departure of Gen. Aumpudia from Saltillo with the army was fully confirmed. He proposed to fortify that town and make another stand; therefore he called on the citizens to assist him. They held a meeting and the answer to his call was, Monterey was a town naturally easier of defence than Saltillo, that it was well fortified, and he had been driven out of it, therefore they would not expose their families and property to certain injury and danger. The general then left taking the road towards San Luis Potosi.

At first, all the public arms were taken away, and it was not until Gen. Henderson sent Col. Hays to Gen. Taylor, that the arms were restored, to be delivered up at Bexar, in Texas. Many then would not go to get them.

During the truce, I shall run down to Matamoros and Point Isabel, but have faithful chroniclers at Monterey to record any important event; and you will be regularly in.

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p4c6 Naval - Attack on Alvarado

(From the New Orleans Tropic, Nov. 3.)

We have a letter from our correspondent 'Indicator,' who is yet in Pensacola advising us that the U.S. steamship Relief, Bellum Lieutenant Commanding, arriving there on the 30th ult., twenty days from Vera Cruz. Her letter is dated the 31st ult. He writes: "The only intelligence by her of interest regards the projected at Captain Fitzburgh came a passenger in the Relief, having been detached from the steamer Mississippi, and his place supplied temporarily by Commander Adams, heretofore second in command. Commodore Perry has hoisted his red beard permant on the board of the Mississippi, and of course is to be regarded as a Commodore, nor as a Captain. The attack on Alvardo was to take place on the 11th or 12th, at farthest. The steamer Mississippi arrived as the Relief was coming out. There is nothing sure worth communicating. - The Princeton sailed this morning for Vera Cruz. The John Adams was to leave to-day [sic]."

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p4c5 The General-in-chief of the Army of the North to the Inhabitants of the Three Provinces of the East

Countrymen: The Supreme Government being anxious to attend to the defence of the rights and the integrity of our beloved Republic, against the enemies who have invaded it, has thought proper to appoint me General-in-Chief of the brave troops destined to that holy purpose in the North. I immediately flew with enthusiasm to this section, my desire to sustain the rights of the people being notorious, and at the commencement of the present month I was in Monterey, dictating and ordering all the measures in my power to repel the advance of our enemies. Thinking, however, that an immense weight was imposed upon me, and feeling my inability, I entreated that his Excellency, the Gen. Don Juan Nepomuceno de Almonte, should come and take the command, supposing that the illustrious conqueror of Pa[...]co would, on his arrival in Mexico, assume the rein of the National Government.

Friday, November 13, 1846 RW46v23i90p4c5 Untitled, Camp near Monterey

Camp near Monterey (Mexico) October 13, 1846

The Mexican mounted corps encamped about the town, began to move of on the 25th of September, as did part of the baggage train of mules. Gen. Ampudia, on the 26th, left with two heavy brigades of infantry, part of the artillery and some cavalry. His column mustered 2500 men at least, probably more. he took the road to Saltillo. On the 27th and 28th, divisions, equally as numerous, marched in the same direction. The most motley collection of men, women and children, white and copper-colored, with dogs, cats, game-cocks, parrots, and a thousand other things, mounted on horses, mules and donkeys, or on foot, accompanied each column. There never was so mixed a multitude. The followers were almost as numerous as the army, and as variegated in colors. Some of the Mexican officers are as black as any negro, and must be runaway slaves from the U. States or emigrants from the Spanish Islands. After the departure of these divisions, the Governor also left the place, and our soldiers thronged the streets, particularly the volunteers, who were anxious to see every thing. They went into house without ceremony, and in some instances did not behave well. These circumstances excited considerable apprehensions amongst the people, and a good many went away, or closed their houses entirely and concealed themselves. Those fears are now, it is hoped, being allayed, and it is hoped the people will return to their homes.

Gen. Taylor seems to have sailed down to spend the eight weeks mentioned in the capitulation, as quietly as possible. There is some talk of a post being established at Linares, a town about one hundred miles from here on the road to Tampico; but when, I do not know. It is also said a post will be established at Riconada, about forty-miles from here on the Saltillo road. I have good reason to believe Gen. Taylor and other officers high in command, and in the confidence of the President, have written to Washington, strongly advising no further advance into the interior on this line. They recommend the occupation of the country from the sea coast, say Tampico along the line of mountains, and placing garrisons in every important place across to the Gulf of California - there hold on and subsist our forces as well as possible on the country, and let the Mexicans come to fight us, if their Government [the rest is illegible.]

Correspondence of the N.O. Picayune, Monterey, Mexico Oct. 16, 1846

Gentlemen: - A chance [sic] officers to send a line, which I must write in haste, as the gentleman who takes it will be off in few moments. Gen Wool crossed the Rio Grande thirteen days ago on his way to Monclova. A train of fifteen hundred miles arrived from Camargo a day or two since, with provisions. Two thousand mules have been hired at this place for the use of the Army, at 37 1/2 cents per day each.

Lieut. Graham's remains were followed to the grave three days since, by Gen. Taylor and nearly all the officers.

No news yet from the first mail that was captured by the enemy. Another large mail started from Camargo a few days ago (the 5th inst.) which shared the fate of the first. - This makes two important mails that have been captured from us within a month. The last was taken out of the mule train.

Everything is as dull here as possible. As for letters and papers, we never expect to see any more as long as Ampudia is permitted to act as Post Master General for our Army.

H.

Santa Anna is at San Luis Potosi, but is doing nothing. He sustains Ampudia in his late conduct. The fever and argue is spreading through the Army at a fearful rate.

Friday, November 20, 1846 RW46v23i92p1c1 Call for Troops

Call for More Troops

By the following editorial article in the Washington Union of Monday night, it appears that the Executive has resolved to call into the field nine additional regiments of volunteers. This sudden change in the determination of the President - for it was only a few days ago that the Secretary of War officially announced, in reply to a tender of service from a volunteer corps (we believe in Delaware) that no more troops were wanted - induces us to suppose that the recent intelligence from the Mexican capital, or from the seat of war, has satisfied the authorities at Washington that there is but little prospect of a speedy restoration of peace:

From the Washington Union, Nov. 16.

Call of Troops

We understand that requisition have been sent out from the War Department, calling into the service of the United States nine additional regiments of volunteers to serve during the war with Mexico, unless sooner discharged. They are asked for from the following States:

One regiment of Infantry from Massachusetts;
One regiment of Infantry from the State of New York;
One regiment of Infantry from Pennsylvania;
One regiment of Infantry from Virginia;
One regiment of Infantry from North Carolina;
One regiment of Infantry from South Carolina;
One regiment of Infantry from Louisiana;
One regiment of Infantry from Mississippi; and One regiment of Mounted Men from Texas.
This important movement will show the federal press whether there is any faltering on the part of the administration, as they have been recently most recklessly charging. We have no time, at the late hour at which we receive the above interesting intelligence, to dwell upon this subject. It shows how little force there is in such suggestions as are thrown out in a Baltimore paper, that "it is believed that nothing decisive will be undertaken, either by our army or navy, before the next meeting of Congress."

We subjoin also the requisition of the Secretary of War upon the Governor of Virginia for one of the new regiments:

WAR DEPARTMENT

Nov. 16th, 1846.

SIR: - In my communication of the 19th of May last, your Excellency was requested to organize three regiments of volunteers, under the act of the 13th of that month, to be held in readiness for public service.

The President now directs me to notify your Excellency that one Infantry regiment of volunteers from your State is required for immediate service, and to be continued therein during the war with Mexico, unless sooner discharged. The regiment will consist of -

FIELD AND STAFF: -1 Colonel, 1 Lieutenant Colonel, 1 Major, 1 Adjutant, (a Lieutenant of one of the Companies, but not in addition.)

NON-COMMISSIONED STAFF:- 1 Sergeant Major, 1 Quarter master Sergeant, 2 Principal Musicians, and 10 Companies, each of which to consist of 1 Captain, 1 First Lieutenant, 2 Second Lieutenants, 4 Sergeants, 4 Corporals, 2 Musicians, and 80 Privates.

Should the number of Privates, on being mustered not fall below sixty-four effective men in a Company, it will be received.

Guyandoite is designated as a place of rendezvous for the several companies as fast as they shall be organized, and where they may be further organized into a regiment, if not already done under a previous call. The regiment will be inspected and mustered into service by an officer or officers of the U. S. Army, who will in every case, be instructed to receive no man who is in years apparently over 45 or under 18, or who is not of physical strength and vigor. To this end the the Inspector while accompanied by a medical officer of the army, and the volunteers will be submitted to his examination. It is respectfully suggested that public notice of these requirements will prevent much disappointment to the zealous and patriotic citizens of your State who may be disposed to volunteer.

By the enclosed copy of an act authorizing the President to call for volunteers, it will be perceived that all the field and company officers with volunteers taken into the service of the U. States are to be appointed and commissioned, or such as have been appointed and commissioned, in accordance with the laws of the State whence they are taken; and I would suggest the extreme importance to the public service, that the officers for the above regiment be judiciously selected.

By the act of Congress above [ ... ] to, it will also be seen, that the terms of service are for "twelve months, or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged," and it may be that the regiments which have been enrolled in your State, and are now in readiness to enter the service, may regard this offer as made with reference to the former period. Should this be so, your Excellency will cause them to be informed, that the engagement required by this requisition is to the end of the war with Mexico, unless sooner discharged; and on this condition only will their services be required. With this understanding, one of these regiments (to be selected by your Excellency) will be accepted. if the modification suggested should not be acceptable to any of those regiments which have tendered their services, you are respectfully requested to proceed, without delay, to enroll and organize one in fulfillment of this requisition.

It may be proper to remark, that the law provides for the clothing (in money) and [...] of the non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates of volunteers, who are received into the service of the united States. In respect to clothing, for which purpose it allows to each non-commissioned officer musician and private three dollars and fifty cents per month during the time he shall be in the service of the United States. In order that the volunteers, who shall be mustered into service under this requisition, may be enabled to provide themselves with good and sufficient clothing, the commutation allowance for six months, (twenty-one dollars,) will be advanced to each non-commissioned officer, musician and private after being mustered into service but only with the express condition, that the volunteer has already furnished himself with six months clothing: this fact to be certified to the Paymaster by the Captain of the company, or that the amount thus advanced shall be applied, under the supervision of his Captain, to the object contemplated by law. In this letter case, the advance commutation for clothing will be paid on the Captain's certificate that he is satisfied it will be so applied.

In respect to subsistence before arriving at the place of rendezvous, and for traveling home from the place of discharge, that allowance is fifty cents for every twenty miles distance. . . . [The rest of the article is illegible.] [AMB]
In the St. Louis Republican of the 9th inst. we find the subjoined "Notice," issued by Gen. Kearney, which removes all doubt, if any had been entertained before, that, by virtue of the authority with which he has been clothed by the President, he has, without the sanction of Congress or the People, "entended the areas of freedom," by solemnly "ANNEXING", New Mexico to the United States, organizing a Territorial Government, and appointing officers to administer it. This remarkable document reads as follows:

NOTICE.

Being duly authorized by the President of the United States of America, I hereby make the following appointments for the Government of New Mexico, a Territory of the United States.

The officers thus appointed will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

Charles Bent, to be Governor.
Donaciano Vigil, to be Secretary of Territory.
Francis P. Blair, to be U.S. District Attorney.
Charles Leitendorfer, to be Auditor Public Accounts.
And Joab Houghton, Antonio Jose Otero, and Charles Beaubien, to be Judges of the "Superior Court."

Given at Santa Fe, the capital of the Territory of New Mexico, this 22d day of September, 1846, and in the 71st year of the independence of the United States.

S.W. KEARNEY,
Brig. Gen. U. S. A.

Could any thing be more Napoleonic? Did the Emperor of the French, when his victorious eagles perched upon every capitol in Europe, ever decree the extinction of a dynasty and the annexation of the subjugated States to the French Empire in terms more summary and with a more imperial air? Whence, we ask, in no spirit of factious complaint, but with a solemn conviction of the gravity of this act of usurpation,-whence did the President derive authority to instruct Gen. Kearney to declare New Mexico "a Territory of the United States" Whence his right to create offices, and to make appointments unknown to our constitution and laws? As the St. Louis Republican well remarks, "To the people of the Union the question is important, as it involves the inquiry to what extent the Executive may go in the acquisition of territory and the exercise of the appointing power. If the President can go on and make conquest, subvert governments, annex a whole foreign and independent State and people to this Republic, constitute them citizens, give them a new form of Government, and fill all the offices by his own appointments, then indeed his powers are unlimited, and all other departments of Government are lost in this universal stretch of power." The St. Louis New Era also invokes public attention to this extraordinary development. Gen. Kearney (it says) undertake to naturalize millions of mixed parti [sic] colored people, of various languages and natures, and most solemnly swears then in as citizens of the United States, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost.-Where does he get authority for all this? He then undertakes to appoint Governors, Judges, and a list of Judicial and Ministerial officers. Where does his authority for this come? Is there any thing in the Constitution that warrants such proceedings? Where are the Strict Constructionists, when these events are in progress?-Their tender consciences will not permit them to pull a log or a song out of the Mississippi, even when it endangers thousands of lives and millions of property; but they can ride rough-shod over the Constitution in a career of conquest and national aggrendizement." [AMB]
To raise money for the war the supreme Government has allotted to the cities and States certain sums to be contributed by them monthly, but leaving the details to be arranged by the municipal authorities, &c. We have the report of a committee or junta in Vera Cruz in which the following assessment is recommended at great length: The city proper is set down for $500 a month. Then the citizens are divided into six classes. The first is composed of twenty-four citizens, who are to pay $30 a month a piece; the second of the sixteen citizens, $20 a month a piece, and so on down to $2 a month a piece. The sum total thus to be raised in Vera Cruz is estimated at $2921 a month. - We note this as a model of the manner in which Mexico is proviling resources of money. The same course is pursued in the other cities and Departments.

The Government organ of the 3d ult announced that on the morning of the day previous Gen. Salas assembled some of the wealthy citizens of the capital and addressed them upon the necessities of the Government and suggested various remedies. It was finally determined to make as assessment of $200,000 upon fifty gentlemen, which should be advanced to the Government in the shape of a loan. It was carried with signs of enthusiasm, and although the money was not actually paid in, it was deemed to be secured, and profuse thanks are showered upon the fifty capitalists who thus came forward.

In Chihuahua, Governor Trias is said to be melting up the bells of the churches to make cannon for the defence of the city. The greatest lamentations are heard that the people cannot be provided with the arms which they are so eager to take up against the invaders. In all our papers we do not see mention made of gen. Wool's invasion. it is front the North that they anticipate the descent of the avalanche.

In the capital, popular clubs have been formed, to which influential members of the Government belong. They meet nightly and talk over public affairs, and keep alive each others patriotism, an orator being appointed for each night. A chief end of these clubs is to produce a fusion of parties by bringing the leaders into apparent union. The lines are drawn between the pueros and the moderados. - The former are the republicans federalists; the latter conservatives. Gomez Farias appears to be the organ of the former, and his party is decidedly in the ascendent. These party divisions do not show themselves out of the capital.

On the 10th of October, Gen. Salas promulgated a decree touching the internal revenues of the country of great moment. The grounds of it are set forth at length in a well reasoned preamble, and the decree follows in twelve articles. The first abolishes throughout the whole Repubpublic [sic], from the 6th of December next, the excise revenue [la renta de alcabalas] from the sale of various kinds of property and securities, and the different States are prohibited from re-establishing such excise under any form. - In subsequent articles compensation is made to the States by imposts in lieu of those abolished. The whole decree is a sweeping measure, the details of which would not interest our readers, but it is denounced in some papers as high-handed and lawless.

Perhaps we owe an apology to our readers for giving up so much of our space to these details of mexican affairs, but our space to these details of Mexican affairs, but our purpose has been to give them an idea of the activity which prevails in Mexico in developing the resources of the country for the war, and to convince the public, if possible, that the whole Mexican nation is aroused thorughly, and that if we would see a speedy end put to these hostilities, or even avoid reverses to our arms, we must put forth more strength and call into th field more troops. - We will conclude our voluminous extracts to-day with the following rough translation of a circular of Gen. Almonte. It is eminently calculated to inflame the animosity of the Mexicans, and holds out to them in the end the most deceptive hopes. It is obviously intended as an appeal to the world as well as to his countrymen, and we are in hopes it will teach our own people how much in earnest the leading men in Mexico truly are in their determination to adopt the war with the United States as the deperate resource for war with the United States as the desperate resource for forming a sound national feeling, and overcoming the evils which Mexico has long endured from internal strife and civil wars:

[CIRCULAR.]

MINISTRY OF WAR AND MARINE,

October 2, 1846.

The Mexican Republic achieved her independence from ancientmetropolis without the need of other efforts than those of her own sons; and in entering the ranks of free people, she opened her ports frankly to foreign commerce.

With a loyalty which is acknowledged, she has fulfilled religiously her engagements with friendly nations [sic]; and the different administrations which have succeeded one another in the country, have vied with each other in cultivating their international relations, so that they have never been interrupted on the part of Mexico. From this religious fidelity in the fulfillment of our obligations, have followed the peace and good intelligence which subsists at present between us and the Governments of Europe and those States of independent America which were formerly Spanish; but the United States of the North, a nation greedy of conquests, not acknowledging these truths and unworthily responding to our generous friendship, has inflicted upon us all the wrongs possible, since we had the misfortune to enter into relations with it. The North Americans have excited and fomented constantly our domestic dissensions. They introduced their citizens into our States of Texas; they procured the independence of those thankless adventurers; and when it suited their interests, they resolved to incorporate with their own country that interesting portion of our territory, upon which the United States are unable to allege the slightest claim of right.
It was and is unquestionably just, that the Mexicans should reclaim their own; and when our troops were preparing to vindicate the honor of the nation reconquer a territory which belonged to us, then the Government of the U. States assumed as their own the cause of a revolted department of Mexico, and in a manner the most ignoble and unjust declared war upon us, introducing into the heart of the Republic their squadrons, thus paralyzing our commerce, and to make our position more difficult compelling us to misapply the ordinary resources of our public administration. - This war demands great sacrifices of the republic, and these sacrifices are to be attributed to the necessity forced upon us by the most iniquitous act which can be perpetrated among civilized and christian people. To the scandal of the whole world, the Mexicans find themselves attacked, and are resolved to perish together and to see their cities reduced to ruine, rather than to submit to the ambition of the people which seeks to make itself the colossus of the New World. The ambitious views of these men are as ancient as they are notorious - to extend their territory over the vast expanse comprehended with the Mexican nation, destroying our temples, our race and our nationality; and this conflict, which is one of life or death for Mexico, she must maintain with glory, or she must perish in it. It matters not that fortune sometime deserts us in the field of battle; the honor of our arms we have preserved even in the midst of the disasters of the war; and above every thing, a people numbering eight millions, which achieved their independence against the might of a powerful nation, cannot succumb in a war waged upon it by the North Americans. Our efforts to come out of a war gloriously will be as extraordinary as our sacrifices, since on every side the citizens are arming in support of the Supreme Government in defense of the country. Upon all classes in the State, it has made and it will continue to make great demands to place Mexico in an attitude to maintain her dearest rights, and Heaven, which always protects the right, is upon our side, and will be propitious to us without doubt, because we are struggling for the religion of our fathers, for our independence and our firesides. The day is coming, nor is it now distant, when we shall not only be able to impose terms upon our enemies, but to exact from them as a fitting act of justice, an indemnity for the injuries they have inflicted upon us - injuries which will be indeed a grievous burden to the country, but which will save its honor and its nationality.

The Supreme Government, in anticipation of these events, and convinced that the final triumph in the present struggle will be in favor of Mexico, wishes that in due time there should be prepared and transmitted to it in the clearest form an exact account of the losses sustained by the public interests and those of private individuals in he entrusted with the supreme executive power, charges me that I should direct you, as I now have the honor to do, this design of the executive, in order that the noble and patriotic views of the chief magistrate of the Republic may be fulfilled. God and Liberty.

ALMONTE.

On the following day, October 3d, Gen. Almonte issued his instructions for organizing he recruits. Upon their arriving at the recruiting stations, they are to be divided into two classes according to their height - those above five feet two inches forming the first, and those below that measure the second class. From the first are to be taken by preference the artillerists, the sappers and cuirassiers, the artillerists and sappers first taking those of particular trades or occupations, which may have particularly atted [sic] them for these branches of the services. The resides will join the cuirassiers. The second class is to be divided in [sic] like manner between the cavalry and infantry, having regard to individual conformation and preference. The directions are minute and simple.

Friday, November 20, 1846 RW46v23i92p1c5 Late from Our Squadron in the Gulf and on the Pacific

Extract of a letter from Commodore Conner to the Secretary of the Navy: "U.S. SHIP CUMBERLAND, OFF VERA CRUZ, Oct. 17, 1846."

"It is with feelings of deep mortification that I apprise the Department of the failure of another attempt to enter the river of Alvarado. [sic]

"On the morning of the 15th, a little after sun rise, I reached the entrance of the river, with the steamer Vixen, the three gunboats, the prize schooner Forward and steamer McLane, accomplished by the Mississippi, Com. Perry. It was intended the latter should cannonade the battery, while the smaller vessels crossed the bar. It was found, however, she could not approach near enough to make any impression on the work with her shells. This battery mounted seven guns; and immediately behind it, on an elevated knoll, was a platform, on which was mounted a pivot-gun. Knowing the small power of the steam ere on which I depended to tow the small vessels over the bar, and up the river, I was desirious of having a favorable wind to assist them. For this purpose, I delayed moving until nearly two o'clock, but seeing no prospect of the usual sea breezes setting in, I determined to proceed. The first division, composed of the Reefer and Bonits, in low of the Villen, got under way, and was followed by the second divisions, consisting of the Nonats, Forward and Petrel, towing by the McLane. As they approached the bar, the current became stronger, causing the streamers to steer badly, and lessening their progress to not more that a mile of a mile and a half, the hour.

"The first division continued to advance steadily, and had been sometime engaged with the battery, when I had the mortification to see the McLane aground on the bar, and the vessels she had in tow, foul of each other, in the greatest disorder.

"As it was evident no support could be expected from the second division for some time, if at all, and as the three vessels composing the first were wholly inadequate to prosecute the attack, even if they could pass the battery with with [sic] which we were engaged, I was constrained to order the Vixen to be put about and repass the bar."
"It may be as well to observe here that besides the battery at the entrance of the river, there is another at the town, one and-a-half miles distant, of three guns, with two brigs, each mounting nine guns, a schooner, of seven guns, and two gunboats each carrying a long 24-pounder—all so disposed as to command the channel. By the time the Vixen joined her the McLane was again afloat, without having sustained any material injury. It was obvious however, her draft (ten feet two inches) was too great to pass the bar in its present state. Generally there are from thirteen to fifteen feet on it, and my information led me to believe I should find that depth now, but the late floods have probably lessened it, as on sounding previously to entering there were barely twelve feet. The Vixen struck twice in going over, though drawing only seven feet. The current was also stronger in the river than I expected, and even if she could pass the bar, I felt convinced the power of the McLane was inadequate to make head against it with any vessel in tow: These consideration - and the day being far spent - induced me, however much against my inclination, to abandon any further attempt at present to enter the river.

"Except for a short time, from early in the spring to the commencement of the rainy season, no one not acquainted with them, can have any conception of the difficulties attending naval operations on this coast. The north winds, during the winter months, are sudden and violent, accompanied by high seas and strong currents. No judgment can be formed as to what moment they may commence. - Under such circumstances, an opinion may be easily formed of the difficulty of landing a body of men on the open coast, and also of the danger from the elements attending it.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
D. CONNER,
Commanding Home Squadron.

HON. JOHN Y. MASON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

The reader will see it stated in private letters from the squadron that Commodore Perry, with the larger portion of the vessels, has gone to make an attack upon Tabasco, where some boats have taken shelter that assist in keeping open the commerce of the place.

Since the abortive attack on Alvarado, which Com. Conner describes in his despatch [sic], he has been joined, in all probability, by the Princeton and the Spitfire - thus considerably increasing his means for attack.

Friday, November 20, 1846 RW46v23i92p1c6 Acquittal of Dr. Tyler

The trial of Dr. William Tyler, at Frederick, on a charge of malpractice in treating ex-Governor Thomas, by administering certain drugs to him some fifteen years since, has resulted in a verdict of acquittal upon the first count, and upon the others a nolle prosequi was entered.

From the Hageratowa (Mt.) Torch Light.

THE THOMAS AFFAIR. - We were in error in our last number, in saying that ex-Governor Thomas was the only witness examined at the trial of Dr. Tyler. Several medical gentlemen [...]tified on the part of the State and one on the part of the traveller, all of whom exonerated the latter from blame.

An intelligent gentlemen from Frederick, with whom we have conversed upon the subject, assured us that there is not a difference of opinion in that city, at the fact that Mr. Thomas is a perfect monomaniac upon the subject of his domestic affairs; although in his statement to the Court, he acknowledged the innocence of his wife, and declared his conviction that her character was so white as the driven snow. He is said to have prepared himself upon that portion of the subject, relating to the medical treatment of Dr. Tyler, with amiduous care; and it was particularly in connection with this branch of the subject that the disease of his mind was so clearly manifested. In dealing the consequences of this disease, of which he was sensible - although greatly in error as to the cause - the spectacle presented was one of the most humiliating characters.

Revelations of weakness and of misery - clothed in jangunge the most touching - delivered with an eloquence of manner that has seldom failed of effect - and inspired with the unnatural fire of a frenzied mind - were poured forth, without concealment, by one who will himself, the subject and the victim; [...] once filling those in attendance with pity for the sufferer, and causing them to blush at the infirmities of their race. Whether the details of the trial will ever be made public we cannot tell. The Court passed an order that the testimony should not be published until the case had been disposed of.

Gov. McDowell, his wife and Mrs. Thomas we understand, were waited upon, at their lodgings, by most of the ladies and gentlemen of Frederick, who showed them marked attantion and respect.

Accounts from the Pacific, of Aug. 22, afford us some interesting particulars:

On the 23d of July, Commodore Stockton assumed command of the United States naval forces on the West Coast of Mexico. On the 25th the "Cyane," with the "California company of mounted riflemen," under Col. Fremont, sailed from Monterey for San Diego, that they might be landed Southward of the Mexican forces, amounting to 500 men, under Gen. Castro and Gov. Pico, who were well fortified at the camp of mess, three miles from the "city of the Angels." A few days after, Commodore Stockton, in the "Congress," sailed for San Pedro, where he landed with his gallant sailor army, and marched directly for the redoubtable "camp of the Mesa." When he had come within twelve miles of the camp, Gen. Castro broke ground and ran for the city of Mexico. The governor of the territory, and other principal officers, separated in different parties; and on the 13th August, having been joined by Col. Fremont and eighty riflemen, and by Mr. Larkin, late American consul, the Commodore entered the famous "Ciudad de los Angeles," the capital of the Californias, and took quiet possession of the government-house. Most of the principal officers were subsequently taken.

The American force thus chased the Mexican army more than 300 miles along the coast; pursued them 30 miles in the interior of their country; routed and dispersed them, and secured quiet possession of their territory.

The "Congress" was to sail in a few days on a cruise for the protection of our commerce, and the remaining vessels of the squadron were to be disposed with a view to the same object, so far as they could be spared from the blockade of the southern coast.

The President's proclamation, and the Congressional proceedings in reference to the war, were first received by Commodore Stockton (in a Mexican account) on the 19th of August by the United States ship Warren, from Mazatlan. The flag of the United States is now flying from every commanding position in the territory of California.

The patriotism and courage of the men who accompanied the Commodore on his expedition after Castro, are spoken of in the highest terms. Their march was trying and hazardous, perhaps longer than has ever been made in the interior of a country by sailors after an enemy.

Chance of Volunteers

We are requested to state that Captain E. C. Carrington, Jr. by whose patriotic exertions a company of Volunteers for Mexico was organized last Spring, but not mustered into service, because the Government did not then need its services, is again in the field, beating up for recruits. A few additional members are requisite to fill the ranks of his Company; and persons disposed to take part in this enterprise are requested to call immediately at Captain C's office, and enroll their names. There need be no apprehension of disappointment, or of delay in marching to the tented field.

Letter to Governor
To His Excellency, Wm. Smith, Governor of Virginia.

We hope that the requisition of the War Department, and especially that the call upon Virginia will be promptly responded to, although the change in the term of service, (a very wise one, by the way) from a twelve months tour to the duration of the war, will doubtless render many persons, who were last Spring and Summer eager for the fray, now indisposed to embark in an enterprise the end of which no human sagacity can foresee. It is to be regretted, indeed, for more than one reason, that the volunteers first called into service were not required to serve “during the war,” instead of the limited period of twelve months. There might have been less enthusiasm and fewer applications, it is true, but there would have been though of both, and it is probable the applicants would have been of that sort of material who could have been [...] spared from home, and who would have been more [... in the field. It is obvious, too, that the Mexican government, being cognizant of the fact that the term of service of four-fifths of the invading army would expire at the end of twelve months, has determined to maintain a hostile attitude until that time, with the idle hope that the disbandment and return home of the large portion of our army, before their places could be supplied, might enable them more easily to force the remainder to retreat to the frontier. Both the Administration and the volunteers, however, anticipated a frolic rather than a serious fray—and now that delusion under which they and the country generally labored has been dispelled, the only matter of [...] is that they did not take six months volunteers instead of twelve,—that being the length of time, which, according to the semi-official intimations of the views of the Administration, it would require to overrun Mexico and to reduce its gorgeous capital to terms.

We repeat, that we hope the requisition of the War Department will be at once met by the several States upon which it is made. For, although we believe that the war ought to have been, and that, with ordinary wisdom and [...] it might have been avoided—and although we have seen, in some quarters, durning its progress, not a little to censure and condemn—yet we are not less solicitous than the Administration itself (aside from its personal connection with the subject) for its speedy and successful termination, and for the triumph of our arm in every conflict, by sea or land, that may occur during its progress. We rejoice, therefore, at every indication of renewed vigor in the conduct of the war, as the only means by which the Mexican rulers and people can be taught that their true interests, as well as our own, consist in the early termination of this unfortunate and sanguinary struggle.

Friday, November 20, 1846 RW46v23i92p2c7 A Proclamation

Whereas, the President of the United States, in pursuance of the Act of Congress providing for the [...] of the existing war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, has made a requisition upon the Governor of Virginia for one infantry Regiment of Volunteers for immediate service, and is be [...] therein durning the war with Mexico unless sooner discharged—And, whereas, by the change of the term of service, the enrolment [sic] of the three Regiments of Volunteers under the Proclamation of the 23d May last is void.—Now, therefore, I WILLIAM SMITH, Governor of Virginia, to hereby make known, that the services of ten companies, to constitute a Regiment of Infantry, to serve according to the term of the requisition of the President, will be accepted—the said consist of.—

1 Captain; 1 First Lieutenant; 2 Second Lieutenant; 4 Sergeants; 4 Corporals; 2 Musicians; and 80 Privates.

These companies, when organized and commissioned, to [...] at [...] where they will be mustered into the service of the United States. Volunteer companies of Infantry enrolled under the Proclamation of 23d May last, who shall promptly conform to the new organization and give notice thereof to the Governor, will have the preference. But the Officers must necessarily be elected anew, and as it is for immediate and important service in the field, it cannot be too strongly impressed upon the men that in electing their officers all personal preferences should be discarded, and the best qualified officers be chosen.

No Officer of the Militia, whatever may be his grade, will forfeit his commission by entering the proposed Volunteer service.

The promptitude with which the requisition for three Regiments, to serve for twelve months, was responded to, affords undoubted assurance that the single Regiment now called for will be speedily in the field.

Given under my hand as Governor, and under the seal of the Commonwealth, at Richmond, this [L.S.] eighteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-six, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-first.

Friday, November 20, 1846, RW46v23i92p2c5 The Mexicans, News, The Loan, &c.

The news from Mexico communicated by this last arrival it [...] thought, may infuse more public spirit into the counsels of the Administration. There was and is, I fear a disposition to delay action until the meeting of the Mexican Congress, at least in reference to the land forces. The Government has given public notice that it would call out no more volunteers, and General Taylor will not probably move from Monterey with the force he has. In the mean time, notwithstanding the disasters of May and September, the Mexican Government, with a singular infatuation, takes courage with defeat. No one breathes conciliation or a spirit of conciliation towards the United it would seem, within all the borders of the Mexican Republic. "War to the knife and the knife to the hilt" is everywhere their languages towards us, and this now for the first time, no matter whose star may be in the ascendancy. The Government here is now well advised of this revengeful and obstinate determination, and it might have been before committing the "blunder" which already has proved "worse than so many crimes," of admitting Santa Anna to the capital of Mexico, there to infuse new hopes among the Mexican people and to raise up a popular leader to command her armies. I hope the Administration will not embrace that other French maxum, and be as those who "never forget anything and never learn anything." But experience so far has not been to much purpose. We have neither "conquered a peace" as yet, not have we had that "short war," of which we heard so much at the commencement of hostilities. The Administration should be held strictly responsible for all this, for the procrastination complained of is all its own. Congress, as soon as it heard of the clash of arms and acts of war, empowered the President to call out fifty thousand volunteers. Why was it not done? It added eight thousand men to the rank and file of the standing army. Why are they not in the field? It provided a new regiment of mounted men, but we hear nothing satisfactory as to the complete and efficient organization of this expensive body of troops. It crested a corps of Sappers and Minere, and they are only just now with the main body of the Army. It authorized an increase of the rank and file of the Navy of twenty-five hundred men, or a naval force of ten thousand besides the command, and yet owing to the clogs that hang upon the Navy at head quarters, nothing has yet been done through this branch of the public service, though the officers and men are burning to win laurels for themselves and victory for their flag. Military officers, too, were made by Congress by scores, and money was appropriated with so much haste that there was no command upon the President except to spend it as fast as he could-and how some of it has gone, and at what cost of principle and principal, too, I may add, you will learn hereafter. Ten millions was the first appropriation, since when nearly the whole surplus of twelve millions has gone. A loan also has been created and Treasury notes issued and re-issued by millions. All that the Executive and Heads of the Department asked of Congress was granted, save and except the memorable two millions of dollars, which most happily was not appropriated.

Well indeed is it for the country if the bill really died in the Senate of that terrible disease known as the cacoethes loquendi, for that little temporary ailment has saved the whole country the deep mortification of finding two millions of our own money transferred to the poackets of Santa Anna, nominally to buy a peace with his country, but in reality to enable him to prosecute the war against us with our money.

Since Santa Anna played the Administration falsely after his safe convoy from Havana to Vera Cruz, you have heard but little about that two millions bill, and now that this famous Generalissimo has seized two millions from a conducta at San Luis Potosi, "for its safe keeping," as he says, I image you will hear still less than before. Santa Anna, you will see, borrowed [sic] the idea of his splendid theft from our Sub-treasury law, and has proved himself the prince of Sub-Treasures. He has even given "Bonds for the safe-keeping of the money." So, too, our law requires. Is not this [...] of coin a beautiful exemplification of a Sub-Treasury law?

It is hoped that many months will not elapse now before there is an end to this whole war. Congress will act with more energy that the Executive and Cabinet have done, but with such ample powers and means as I have enumerated, why delay until Congress meets?

The rumors in the city about the Loan since my last are more than you would care to read or I care to write. There are great many persons disappointed in the result. Many small capitalists had arranged to obtain portions of the loan at a small fraction above par, and those persona will demand that their contracts be filled. Others were promised small sums at the average bids, and these, too, have nothing, for reasons I have already named. Some of the [...] from all accounts, were very busy and very [...] on the 12th. They, too, have burnt their fingers.

Washington, Nov 17

The last news from Mexico, as I wrote you yesterday, produced almost an astounding effect upon the Administration, and resulted in a Cabinet meeting, where, after the gravest deliberation, it was determined to call out a new army of Volunteers.

The official paper announced the call, and it must be to the great gratification of all who would see the war conducted with more energy and more success than it has been thus far. This call, however, is one of the many new ideas of this waviering and uncertain administration, and if it be necessary to bring the dominant party into court as a witness against itself, or for the purpose of condemning or disapproving the Government oracle, it may be done.

Upon the authority of the Secretary of War himself I wrote you at the commencement of the month that no more volunteers would be called out. I found my authority confirmed in the Washington (Del.) Gazette, an Administration paper, which introduced the following official letter with a sneering imputation upon the fears of the Whigs, lest they should be "called on to go to Mexico."

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Sir:-In reply to your letter of the 12th inst., I have the honor to inform you that it is not contemplated to make any

A letter from an officer of the U.S. Army, to a friend in St. Louis, says that Lieut Col Smith, in command of the Mormon Battalion, arrived in Santa Fe on the 8th Oct.–The commanding officers speak in the highest terms of the conduct and good order of these troops, and say that with time for drilling they will be every way equal to the regular soldiers. The battalion was turned over to the command of Capt Cook, who, with a portion of Col Price’s regiment-500 men in all, under the command of Col Price–were to leave in a few days for California.

Col Doniphan was to leave Santa Fe in a few days for the South. He would first visit some tribes of Indians, who have manifested a hostile spirit, and after quieting them, or whipping them into subjection, he would continue to Chihuahua, and join Gen Wool, unless affairs in Santa Fe required his earlier return.

Tuesday, November 24, 1846, RW46v23i93p4c2 Abolitionism

We were gratified to see, in yesterday’s Enquirer, an admission that "Abolitionism is on the decline." We agree with the Enquirer, that "the recent elections in the North have shown it. Massachusetts begins to frown upon the sentiments of the fanatics, and New York has overwhelmed and forever buried the proposition for negro suffrage." In our opinion, the Abolition organization would long ago have been dissolved-certain we are that it would have proved far less efficient-had Southern men at first taken the true position on the subject—that position which, after a long and angry contest, they were compelled to occupy.-We refer to the reception of Abolition petitions by Congress, the refusal to do which, by uniting with the Abolitionist proper in the Northern States a large number of voters who believed that the great "right of petition" had been denied to the people, contributed to swell their numbers and greatly to augment their influence. John Q. Adams may be cited, as a striking illustration of this remark. Up to the period at which the House of Representatives adopted a rule excluding these petitions, his influence had been uniformly exerted in opposition to the fanatics; But when the right of petition, as he believed (erroneously in our judgement) was attacked, he stood forth as its champion, irrespective of the question with which it became thus unfortunately identified-and by slow and imperceptible degrees, cheered on the one hand by the approbation of the fanatics, and on the other [...] to madness by the envenomed assaults of the Southern press and politicians, he became as furious in his [...] against the South as the most rabid of the crew against whose [...] nations his voice had always previously been raised. No one can have failed to perceive, that from the moment of the abrogation of the rule referred to, there has been a progressive diminution of the excitement on this question; and we feel assured that Abolitionism, like Anti-Masonry, will be extinct, or at least powerless, whenever Southern politicians shall cease to attempt to make capital out of this question, by misrepresenting the position of their political opponents at the North in relations to it, for the purpose of winning to themselves favor at the South.

The fact ought not to be concealed, however, that, while Abolitionism is on the decline, there is reason to believe that the Anti-Slavery feeling has not at all abated; and if a question shall hereafter arise, as in the progress of events is exceedingly probable, involving the admission of new Slave States into the Union, it will develope itself in the most decided manner. The Missouri Question had shaken the Union to its centre before we had over heard of Tappan or Garrison, Wendell Phillipe or Abby Kelly. Abolitionism, as a distinct party term, was unknown in our political vocabulary, when the admission of Missouri into the Union as a Slave State was opposed, not by a faction or by a party, but by the almost united vote of the non-Slaveholding States, of all parties. Do not the "signs of the times" clearly indicate, that, when that question shall again arise, as, if we acquire from Mexico territory bordering upon Texas, it must do, the struggle will be renewed, with augmented violence, and with the odds against us materially increased?-We confess, that it is in this aspect of the subject that we view the acquisition of new territory from Mexico with a feeling of apprehension and alarm. What meant the success of Wilmot's amendment to the Two Million Bill, by the almost undivided Northern vote in its favor, at the last session of Congress? If any one doubts that that provision, declaring uncompromising hostility to the addition of new Slave State to the Union, to be carved out of the territory to be obtained from Mexico, by conquest or by purchase, is a fair exponent of Northern sentiment, without regard to party lines, let him read the journals published in the nonslaveholding states, and listen to the resolutions, generally unanimously adopted, of their Legislature; and he will not fail to be convinced that the Missouri controversy, under circumstances much less favorable to its satisfactory settlement, mustbe revived, whenever, peace being restored, it shall become necessary to provide for the government of the new Empires to be annexed to our rapidly expanding confederry. Without anticipating the evil day, however, we content ourselves with the hope that, arrive when it may, the struggle may be not less auspiciously terminated than that which grew out of the bill for the admission of Missouri—that, although we may not have in the national councils another CLAY to pour oil upon the troubled waves, there will be enough of virtue left to profit by the great lesson of wisdom and moderation for which the Union is indebted to that illustrious Statesman and Patriot.

Wm. J. Shelton, Esq. has resumed his connection with the Charlottesville Advocate as its editor. Mr. S. is a well-informed politician, and a vigorous writer. We wish him all success.

A letter from an officer in Gen. Taylor's army was published in the Charleston Mercury, (Locofoco,) from which we make [...] two extracts. After describing the battle of Monterrey and the surrender of that city, which he ascribes [...] to the success of Gen. Worth's division, he says:

"Wonderful it is the achievement, the actore know that there will be deep dissatisfaction in the United States. It was thought a light matter to crush an imbecile people, and thousands of militiant spirits, burning with patriotism and covetous of distraction, had rushed to their country's standard in the [...] belief that in a few months they would be revelling in more than Oriental pomp and luxury in the gorgeous [...] of the Capitol of Mexico. How keenly then must then be felt the rebuke to the arrogant presumption with which the war began-this baffling of our arms for three days, and arresting our progress for eight weeks, on the very borders of the country that was to be overrun in six months. How mortifying too must be the fact that our proud banner would have trailed in the dust, but for the much despised 'mercenaries' under Gen. Worth, aided by three hundred ragged Texans almost as much reviled as they."

Speaking of the manner in which the Campaign has been arranged and conducted, he makes the following remarks:

"The [...] from which the country suffered so much during the [...] war, of directing the operations of a distant army from a [...] in Washington, it is feared, will be repeated again and again, until our arms are defeated and our country disgraced. The present distinguished Secretary of War [...] never to have doubted that with the aid of ridiculously inaccurate maps and ignorant advisers he could plan a campaign with the skill of a Wellington, and thus from the [...] our army landed on the shelly shore of Corpus [...] till now, he has taken upon him to manage everything, at one time restraining the General from the performance of possibilities, at another goading him on to impossibilities. The "Man of Iron," whom our Secretary regards as a brother in arms, would doubtless be filled with astonishment if not admiration, at some of his performances. He sent an army of invasion into the field without a single piece of [...]. He ordered the same army to encamp under the heavy guns of a fortified city, although entirely destitute of siege train and all the ordinary intrenching implements. To show that a battle could be fought [...] than Gen. Scott predicted, he urged on Gen. Taylor to the attack of an almost impregnable city, although the General's weightiest was two 24 pound howitzers, whose [...] [...] back like pebbles from the solid fortifications of Monterrey. And to drown the whole, when every obstacle had been overcome, and the Mexican forces were completely in our power, the Secretary's orders determined that it was better to fight them again behind other intrenchments than to crush them on the spot. It is supposed here that he is ambitious to occupy a page in Dr. Frost's Wonders of History, and that to insure so desirable and end, he will next order us to take San Luis Potsi with slings and pop-guns."

The writer then proceeds to describ, ( but for the honor of our country, we hope he greatly [...] the atrocities committed upon the defenseless Mexicans, after the surrender of Monterrey, by a portion of the volunteers; and adverts to the consequences of these outrages in the following terms:

"We do not care so much for the disregard of authority among the Volunteers,- their frays and fueds among themselves, and the unsoldierly scenes between the officers and privates, such as the chasing of a dignified Commander of Brigade through his own camp. All these are private matters of their own, affecting but indirectly the issue of the campaign. But outrages on the helpless and unoffending Mexicans, on the contrary, have a direct and palatable bearing on the successful termination of the war. The Mexicans themselves admit that before the arrival of the Volunteers upon the Rio Grande, all Eastern Mexico was ripe for [...] and annexation to the United States. Now there is no portion of the country so bitterly hostile to us and to our institutions. We have before us a Monterey paper of July, which reminds the disaffected of the atrocities committed at [...] and adds the "the Volunteers, the most unprincipled and ungovernable class at home, have been let loose like blood-hounds upon Mexico." We fear that very soon there will be kindled a burning hatred towards us which will make a timid Mexicans rally from every city, village and rancho around the banner of their country, and fight with a courage and constancy worthy the descendants of those renowned heroes who conquered the fairest portion of America."

To the Editor of the Union:

Enclosed I send you Gen. Wool's order on the [...] bank of the Rio Grande; we are now on the west bank, and in Mexico. We shall be destained a few days for the arrival of Col. Hardin's command of 600 volunteers when we will take up the line of march for Monclova via San Fernando and San Ross. There is a rumor of Gen. Taylor taking Monterrey, and an armistice for two months. The General has no official information of that fact, and will proceed with all possible despatch [sic] to Chihuahua without further orders from Gen. Taylor. The army is in good health and fine spirits, and anxious to meet an enemy.

HEADQUARTERS, CAMP ON THE RIO GRANDE,
Near Presidio, October 9, 1846.
[Orders. -- No.89]

Soldiers! After a long and tedious march you have arrived on the bank of the Rio Grande. In the performance of this service the commanding general has witnessed, with the greatest pleasure, your patience, good order, and perseverance, under many deprivations and hardships. All have done their duty, and in a manner that reflects the highest credit on both officers and men. From this remark we would not except his staff, who have actively and zealously devoted themselves to the service; whilst Capt. Cross has been eminently successful in forwarding his long train of supplies, without delay or serious accident.

Tomorrow you will cross the Rio Grande, and occupy the territory of our enemies. We have not come to make war upon the people or pessantry of the country, but to compel the government of Mexico to render justice to the U. States. The people, therefore, who do not take up arms against the U. States, and remain quiet and peaceful at their homes, will not be molested or interfered with, either as regards their persons or property; and all those who furnish supplies will be treated kindly, and whatever is received from them will be liberally paid for.

It is expected of the troops that they will observe the most rigid discipline and subordination. All depredations on the persons or property of the people of the country are strictly forbidden; and shy soldier or follower of the camp who may so far forget his duty as to violate this injunction will be severely punished.

By command of Brig. General Wool.

JAS. H. PRENTISS, Adj't Gen'l.

[It appears from Gov. Yell's letter, that Gen. Wool was expecting orders from Gen. Taylor. He may receive them at Monclova, which is about 100 miles from Monterey. ]

From the N. O. Picayune, Nov. 14.

The steamship Virginia, Capt. Tucker, arrived yesterday morning from Brazos Santiago, bringing a large number of passengers and later news from Monterey. We regret to say that the report touching an accident to Capt. Randolph Ridgely was fell wounded. That gallant officer are this, we doubt not, is no more. A whole nation will lament his loss.

The propeller Edith also arrived yesterday morning, having left Brazos Santiago on the 7th inst. Capt. Gatlin, of the 7th Infantry, who was wounded at Monterey, came, passenger on the Edith. She also brought over Captain McCerren and Messrs. T. Mewis, W. Armstrong, and Archinger.

CAPT. RANDOLPH RIDGELY. - Terrible Accident. - Maj. Dashiell, U. S. Paymaster, who left Monterey to days after us, and overtuck us at Camargo, brought intelligence that has cast a gloom over every heart. He states that on the 25th ult., the day after we left, as Captain Ridgely was riding onto town to dine with Lieut. Mackall, his horse slipped on the smooth pavement, and he was thrown with such violence against a rock as to cause a severe fracture of the skull. He lay senseless when Maj. Dashiell left, on the following day, and no hope of his recovery was entertained by the surgeons. In parting with this splendid young officer, I little thought that before I reached home it would become my duty to chronicle so painful an event concerning him. The world never produced a braver men or better soldier than Randolph Ridgely. A nobler spirit was never encased in the human form -- a kinder heart never beat. I cannot bring myself to feel that the gallant Ridgely has died thus; the thought is too cruel to be entertained. I can well imagine the heart-rending emotions of the comrades who surround him. They have seen him emerge unscathed from several battles, where he behaved with almost unparalleled heroism. They all loved him, for he was kind, frank and generous to every one.

"Hold on, Charley, and let me draw the rifle."

Poor Ridgely- how many a brave comrade would have drawn upon himself the shaft of death to have averted it from thee.

In an affray between two Texans named Peche and Allen, in Matamoros on the 27th ult. the latter was killed by a blow and a kick. No weapons were used. Daniel Murphy and John Kinsey fought a duel opposite Matamoros on the 2d inst. Murphy was severely wounded in the side.

Lieut. P. Kearny's company of [....] Matamoros on the 30th ult., and left on the 2d inst. for Monterey.

Two companies of Artillery, one [H] under Capt. Norman, the other [F] under Lieut. Haskins, broke up their quarters at Matamoros on the 3d inst., and would leave immediately for Monterey.

Reports were current at Matamoros on the 4th inst., among the Mexican residents that Tampico had been taken, by our squadron. The Americans did not know what to make of the report. We make two extended extracts from the Flag.

[From the American Flag of the 28th ult.]

MEXICAN RUMOR. - It was rumored yesterday in Mexican circles, that the troops which were on their way to San Luis Potosi from Saltillo (noticed as a rumor in our last number) have been ordered back to that place by Santa Anna, who has joined them with a large additional force. Eight thousand troops are stated to be on the evd [sic] of marching from San Luis Potosi to Tampico. A gentleman, conversant with the country and Mexican policy hints to us that, if this latter force crosses the mountains at Tuls, (being the road to Victoria) the design is to contains the march in this direction, and operate in the rear of General Taylor; but should they continue on the east side of the mountains from Tuls, (the road to Santa Barbara) their destination is certainly Tampico.

He likewise hints that much good night result from having spies out in the direction of Victoria, to watch their movements. Santa Anna, it is said, will have at Saltillo about 20,000 troops, including regulars, volunteers and rancheros.

[From the American Flag of Nov. 4th]

FROM MONTEREY. - We have advices from this post as late as the 26th ult. To the politeness of a friend we are indebted for a few items of news. The health of the troops is said to be rather bad at this time, the principal complaints being the diarrhea and chills and fever. It is supposed that the fruit, so readily obtained there, increases the sickness.

A gentlemen recently returned from Monterey, who has had a good opportunity of forming a correct opinion of the future movements of Gen. Taylor, expresses it as his belief that, after garrisoning Saltillo, the main body of the army will take up the line of march for Tampico, where it will be reinforced preparatory to making a descent upon San Luis Potosi, which is generally supposed will be the next battle scene.

It seems to be an ascertained fact in Gen. Taylor's camp, (Mexican rumors in this city to the country, notwithstanding) that Saltillo is not to be defended - the whole Mexican force being fortified in the strongest possible manner.

It is also stated to us that Victoria and all the principal towns in Tamaulipas are to be immediately garrisoned, and we would speculate that it is with the ultimate object of placing all the country on the east or northeast side of the United States, to be held as a portion of her territory and as an indemnification for the war. The state of feeling on this subject cannot be misunderstood. Every day it becomes more apparent that this range of mountains is henceforth to be the dividing line between Mexico and the United States It can no longer be viewed as a vague supposition - such we believe to be the fixed intention of the American Government - in no other way can she be indemnified for the war.

MELANCHOLY CASUALITY-Captain Randolph Ridgely-The gallant officer, who has won so many laurels in the war, is supposed to have lost his life at monterey, about three weeks ago, in a most melancholy manner.- Tropic.

SINGULAR AND ALMOST FATAL OCCURRENCE-We were told yesterday of a singular occurrence which happened on the steamboat Pike No. 8, on her recent trip from Cincinnati to this port. One of our most respected citizens, Mr. A.S. Trotter, agent we believe, for the Bank of Kentucky, in the city, was a passenger on board, and on Monday night last, at about nine o'clock, when the Pike was some forty miles from the city, he retired to his state-room. When nearly asleep he was roused by the report of a pistol in the state-room adjoining, and at the same time experienced a sharp, smarting pain on the top of his head, the blood pouring from it freely. The state-room from which the shot proceeded was immediately searched, and found recent, though a hole in the partition, close to the head of Mr. T's [...] showed that the ball, which was found flattened against the opposite wall, failed but by a hair's breadth of its deadly aim. Notwithstanding the most diligent search, nothing could be found of the intended assassin, and we understand that Mr. T. has been unable, thus far, to obtain any clue to the mystery. Several strangers got on the boat at Louisville, and probably the impression that Mr. Trotter had a large amount of money with him was the incentive to be the attempted murder. The ball, which has been preserved, is evidently from a revolver.---[...

Tuesday, November 24, 1846 RW46v23i93p1c7 The Very Latest from Monterey

We yesterday received, after our main news from the Army was made up, a letter from a distinguished officer of the American Army at Monterey, which is three days later than anything we have seen. That portion of it in relation to Bustamante we look upon as rather doubtful, although the old General may have been sent up in the neighborhood of Chihuahua and Sonora to look after Gen. Wool. We make extracts from the letter, which is dated:

MONTEREY, Oct., 29, 1846.

Poor Ridgely is dead. He was buried yesterday and is mourned by the entire Army. Maj. Lear will not live twenty-four hours longer. We have late news from San Luis de Potosi [...] The effect that Santa Anna was there with 12,000 men and no less than thirty-seven generals. He was recruiting daily, but his intentions were not known. It is rumored that Bustamante has gone [...] in the direction of Chihuahua, to meet Gen. Wool, and farther it is positively asserted that the Indians are killing and laying waste all before them in the latter State. Not a line more in the shape of news. Yours, a.e. &c.

Tuesday, November 24, 1846, RW46v23i93p2c4 Official Dispatches from Gen. Taylor

The Official Despatches [sic].

We lay before our readers this morning, Gen. Taylor's official account of the operations of that portion of the army under his command, in the brilliant attack upon Monterey. The letters of Generals Butler, Hamer and Quitman will appear to-morrow [sic], and Gen. Worth's on the next day.

The Union of Saturday night states that official despatches [sic] have also been received from Gen. Wool, who was within three or four day's march of Monclova, and 135 miles from Monterey. "It appears (says he Union) from Gen. Taylor's letter, that Gen. Ampudia had abandoned Saltillo without completing its fortifications, and had gone southwardly, probably to San Luis de Potosi, instead of going to cope with Gen. Wool. Gen. Taylor considers himself almost as much master of Saltillo as if he were actually in the city."

Tuesday, November 24, 1846 RW46v23i93p3c1 Policy of Annexation

If there were no other reason to induce us to doubt the sound policy of extending the limits of the confederacy, upon our Southwestern frontier, the fact that the acquisition on additional territory and its formation into new States must inevitably bring up another question of equal importance and even greater delicacy, and more immediately threatening the permanency of the Union, should, we conceive, make us pause in the career of conquest, even though we were assured that our victorious legions might hereafter meet with fewer and less serious impediments than they have encountered and overcome in their toilsome and perilous march to the “table-lands” of Mexico. That question, as we have heretofore intimated, is the admission of new Slave States into the Union. That this issue will be made, not by the fanatical Abolitionists alone, who are alike contemptible in numbers and in influence, but by the people of the non-Slaveholding States with almost entire unanimity, does not, we think, admit of a doubt. Even while the war with Mexico is in progress, this design is unequivocally proclaimed by the Northern politicians - who being influenced less by philanthropical considerations than by a determination to maintain the preponderance of the “free” States in the federal councils, will be less likely to abandon their position when the struggle for sectional ascendancy shall come on. The proposition of Mr. Wilmot of Pennsylvania, at the last session of Congress, introduced in connection with a bill to which it had no sort of relevancy, and the unanimity with which, in despite of its incongruity with the measure pending before Congress, it was sustained by the votes of the Northern members, of both parties, evince a foregone conclusion on this question too plainly to permit a reasonable doubt, that whenever the question shall arise, they will be prepared to resist the admission of any new State into the Union, even though it be organized in the section of country between the Neches and the Rio Grande, the occupation of which by Gen. Taylor’s forces precipitated the war with Mexico, save on the condition that Slavery shall forever be excluded from its limits. For it will be remembered that Mr. Wilmot’s proviso to the Two Million bill declared substantially that in no territories which may be hereafter acquired from Mexico shall Slavery be permitted to exist. That they will firmly adhere to this position is certain. What course it will become the South to take, should this proposition receive the deliberate sanction of Congress, it does not become us to suggest, nor indeed is it proper now to determine. Sufficient for the day will be the evil thereof; and it is, in our estimation, one of the gravest objections to the war of conquest in which we are now engaged with Mexico, that it may lead to a catastrophe scarcely dreamed of, in the outset, by its authors. That we are justified in the apprehensions we have expressed, might be shown by a number of articles from Northern journals of both parties. We content ourselves, however, for the present, with inviting the attention of our readers to the subjoined extract from an interesting letter from Washington, which we find in the New York Herald. The writer, after giving a sketch of the proceedings of the House of Representatives on the Two Million bill, and the adoption of Wilmot’s Anti-Slavery proviso, remarks:

"Now, the question recurs, will the north and west assent to the extension of slavery beyond the territories acquired in the annexation of Texas? No, sir; and upon this very issue we may expect, before the close of the session, if not in the beginning, a most determined and premeditated agitation. We anticipate, before the adjournment of Congress, a peace with Mexico. We shall acquire by such peace a large accession of territory, south and west of the boundaries of Texas. The Senate will be called on to raufy such treaty, and both Houses for appropriations of money, to meet its terms, and to carry it into effect. And here will arise, and here will be renewed the proviso “for arresting the extension of the area of slavery,” as Mr. Brinkerhoff expresses it. The South appear to be indifferent about it, an indifference for which we cannot readily account, unless from the supposition that this circumvallation of slave States by free States is impossible. We have a different impressions. We apprehend that the undoubted possibility of the power of the North and West to gives metes [sic] and bounds to the South will be too strong a temptation for its exercise to be resisted. This single question of itself compasses a field of reflection embracing not only the fellowship of the States; but the integrity of the Union. Better would it be, and safer for the South to refuse any further
Mr. Calhoun unquestionably foresaw this difficulty in his opposition to the declaration of "the existing war with Mexico." He foresaw that it would precipitate another is […] nearer […] which might otherwise be evaded. - But he was overruled by those who had no foresight - no capacity to see beyond the "blow-out," - the flare-up of glory and the hurrah of the hour. In the ultimate settlement of this question, we rely upon a superintending Providence, though we expect a great deal of difficulty before we shall perfect a treaty with Mexico, however good the understanding that may be secured between Uncle Sam and Santa Anna. The difficulty to a treaty lies in Wilmot's proviso."

The Louisville Journal publishes the following extract from Monterey, describing a most touching incident in the great battle.-The poor victim should have a monument erected to her memory.

CAMP MONTEREY, OCT. 7, 1846

Hungry and cold, I crept to one corner of the fort to get in the sunshine, and at that time to shelter myself from the bombs that were flying think around me. I looked out, and, some two or three hundred yards from the fort, I saw a Mexican female carrying water and food to the wounded men of both armies. I saw her lift the handkerchief from her own head and bind up his wounds; attending one or two others in the same way, she went back for more food and water. As she was returning I heard the crack of one or two guns, and she poor good creature fell; after a few struggles all was still-she was dead. I turned my eyes to heaven and thought "Oh God and this is war?" I cannot believe but that the shot was an accidental one. The next day, passing into another fort, I passed her dead body. It was lying on its back, with the bread and broken gourd containing a few drops of water. We buried her amidst showers of grape and round shot, occasionally dodging a shell or twelve pounder, and expecting every moment to have another grave to dig for one of ourselves. J. R. B.

ADDITIONAL AND INTERESTING FROM MONTEREY.

The steamship Galveston, Capt. […], arrived here yesterday from Galveston, which port she left on the 10th last. She brings no later news from the army. Capt. G. […], formerly connected with the Galveston News, arrived in that city on Sunday, the 8th instant, having left Monterey on the 13th […] to which date our […] already published sometime ago, reach. This gentleman, however, brings some intelligence which conflicts a little with the information we have already given our readers, regarding the system of operations to be adopted by the Mexican army, in opposing the advance of Gen. Taylor. For instance, he says that the opinion at Monterey was, that Gen. […] had not retreated from […] to San Luis […], but that he had marched with an overwhelming […] to meet Gen. Wool, and prevent his juncture with Gen Taylor. We give extracts from the Galveston News below, in reference to this subject.

Among the passengers who have arrived in this city on the steamship Galveston, are the gallant hays and the […] Walker, whose exploits are in every mouth in this […] Republic whose names will be household words to […] […] bearingThey are accompanied by some of their companions in arms-Capt. McMullen, and […] Cage. Wherever they go honors will be showered on them in profussion, by an admiring and grateful people.

The reception given to Colonel Hays and Captain Walker by the citizens of Galveston was marked by the highest enthusiasm. Here is the notice of their arrival, and the proceedings to which that event gave rise:

"Cols. Hays and Walker, distinguished before and since the beginning of the war between the United States and Mexico, arrived here on Thursday morning, on board the steamer […] from Houston. They both appear in fine health; and though still in the morning of life; when honors most […] men, they wear their laurels as modestly as if unconscionce of their existance. To see them, one might think they had never encountered scenes more rugged than might be presented upon a farm, or in some peaceful town, where the alarms of war were never heard. Yet the fatigues of the wilderness-storm on the desert-Mexican dungeons-famine-and war-have scarcely any terrors which they have not faced. Texas is, and well may be, proud to call them her citizen soldiers.

"A ball and banquet was given to those gentelman, by the Mayor and Board of Aldermen, at the City Hall over the New Market, on Thursday evening. The company was very large, and graced as it was by the beauty and chivary of our young State, it is not to be wondered that, . . . [illegible] . . .
Texas Election Returns

The election returns come in very slowly as usual, but the report from every part of the country, as far as we have yet heard, is nearly uniform, giving Mr. Pilsbury an overwhelming majority over every other candidate. We can give the exact vote of but few countries, but have heard the general results in Victoria, Port Lavacca, Matagords, St. Joseph's Island, Pass Cavallo, Colorado county. Washington, Austin, Fort Bend, Brazoria, Montgomery, Robertson, and some other countries, in all of which Mr. Pilsbury's majority is doubtless very large. In Bexa, Colonel Williams, it is thought, received a small majority. In Comal, Gonzales, and probably in Travis, Judge Jones is probably ahead of his competitors. It is thought to be doubtful whether Judge Baylor has a majority in any county. With these exceptions, it is said Judge Pilsbury will carry all or nearly all the counties in this district. No doubt as to the result can therefore be entertained. - News, 10th instant.

Correspondence of the European Times

PARIS, October 29. - The news brought by the Great Western is given in all the newspapers of this morning at considerable length. No comments, however, of sufficient importance to be transcribed are made upon it by any one journal. It seems, nevertheless, to be the opinion of the Parisian press, that the United States Government has made a great error in deciding that its invading army shall levy contributions from the Mexicans. As long as the army paid its way the Mexicans, having no patriotism, or at least very little, were not ill-disposed to the invaders, and, in fact, rather welcomed them than otherwise. But now that the interests of the Mexicans will be, not promoted as heretofore, but cruelly injured, it is believed by the Parisian journals that the whole population will become most exasperated against the Americans, and will resist them by all the means in their power. In that case, it is calculated that grave difficulties, perhaps disaster and defeat, are in store for the Americans, for they will have to struggle at one and the same time against all the difficulties that an army can encounter - against troops superior in number, against harrassing guerilla forces, against a hostile population, against a horrible climate, against the difficulties of a wild country, without roads, and often times mountainous, against sickness, against want of provisions, and perhaps, also, against the reluctance, the discouragement, the desertion, and the want of discipline of their own soldiers. Notwithstanding all this, it is not doubted for one moment, that if the Americans could get fairly hand to hand with the Mexicans, the latter, would get severely licked, however great might be the odds in their favor. Touching the annexation of the province of New Mexico, few observations are made, though some papers notice the vest addition it makes to the already gigantic territory of the United States. It does not appear to be thought, however, that the annexation can at [...].

Col. Benton

The New York Tribune makes the following remarks in regard to the rumored reconciliation between Col. Benton and the Administration:

"New Treaty at Washington. - It has for some days been reported from the Federal Metropolis that Col. Benton has given in his unqualified adhesion to the ruling dynasty, and will be the Administration leader in the Senate at the coming session.

"We have just learned what is the quid pro quo of this adhesion. Col. Benton's son-in-law, J.C. Fremont, who was recently jumped over three or four grades of his seniors in the Army, and from a Lieutenant made a Lieutenant Colonel, has been appointed Governor of California. So Stockton, Stevenson, Mason and all are adrift. Fremont is to be the autocrat of the new empire, as the price of 'O'd Bullion's' support of the tottering Executive. Such is the advantage of having a powerful friend at Court. Such is the game which great men (in station) play, using for dice the bones of the undistinguished multitude. We have this information privately, of course, but from such a source that we feel very sure of its authenticity."

WASHINGTON, 23 Nov., 1846.

If reliance is to be placed upon a statement in the following letter from Washington, however, the rumor to which it refers is groundless. We do not, however, vouch for the authenticity of the statement of our correspondent, nor endorse what he says:

artillery,) of the artillery battalion, and Green's McGowan's R A Gillespie's, Chandler's Ballowe's and McCulloch's companies of Texan riflemen, under Major Chevalier, acting in co-operation- in all about 300 effectives. It was impossible to mask the movement of the storming party. On approaching the base of the mountain, the guns of both batteries upon a plunging fire, and numerous light troops were seen descending and arranging themselves at favorable points on the slope. Perceiving these inscrutable of determined resistance, Capt. Miles was detached with the 7th. to support and co-operate with the first party. In a short time the [...] became general, the enemy gradually yielding and retreating up the rugged acclivity, and our men as steadily pursuing. The appearance of heavy reinforcements on the summit, and the cardinal importance of the operation demanding further support-the 5th under Major Scott and Blanchard's company of volunteers were immediately detached, accompanied by Brigadier General Smith, who was instructed to take direction in that quarter. On reaching the advance parties, Gen. Smith discovered that under favor of the ground, he could, by diverting a portion of the force to the right, and moving it obliquely up the hill, carry the Soldada simultaneously with the Federacion. He accordingly very judiciously pointed, and accompanied the 5th, 7th, and Blanchard's company, in that direction. Captain Smith's command having most gallantly carried the first object of attack, promptly turned the captured gun a nine pounder-upon the second, and moved on with his main body to participate in the assault upon Soldada-which was carried in gallant style by the forces under Scott, Miles, Blanchard, and Hays [who had been detached on special service, but who returned in time to share with fifty of his men in the first assault, and to take a prominent part in the second,] the whole directed by Gen. Smith.

At this point we secured another 9-pounder, and immediately both pieces were brought to bear upon the Bishop's Palace, situated upon and midway the southern slope of the hill Independencia, a valley of only six hundred yards intervening. We had now secured an important advantage, and yet but half the work was done. The possession of these heights only made the more apparent the controlling importance of those opposite, and the necessity of occupying the palace. A violent storm ensued, and night closing in, operations for the day ceased. The troops had now been thirty six hours without food, and constantly taxed to the utmost physical exertions. Such as could be permitted, slept with arms in hand, subjected to a pelting storm, and without covering, till 3 a.m., when they were aroused to carry the hill Independencia.

Lieut. Col. Childs was assigned to lead this storming party, consisting of three companies, H and G 4th, and A 3d, (artillery battalion;) three companies 8th infantry, (A, B, and D,) under Capt. Scriven, with two hundred Texan riflemen, under Col. Hays and Lieut. Col. Walker, (captain of rifles,) acting in co-operation. The command moved at 3, conducted to its point of ascent by Capt. Sanders, military, and Lieut. Meade, topographical engineers. Favoring by the weather, it reached by dawn of day within about one hundred yards of the crest, in which position, among the creftes of rocks, a body of the enemy had been stationed the previous evening in apparent anticipation of attack. The enemy's retreating fire was ineffectual, and not returned until Cols. Childs's and Hays's command had reached within a few yards of the summit, when a well directed and destructive fire, followed by the bayonet of the regulars and rush of the Texans, placed us in possession of the work; the cannon having been previously withdrawn, no impression could be made upon the massive walls of the palace or its outworks without artillery, except at enormous sacrifice.

Meanwhile, to reinforce the position, the 5th, Major Scott, and Blanchard's volunteers, had been passed from the first height's and reached the second in time to participate in the operation's against the palace.

After many affairs of light troops and several [...] a heavy [...] was made, sustained by a strong corps of cavalry, with desperate resolution, to repossess the heights. Since the move had been anticipated and prepared for, Lieut. Col. Childs had advanced under cover, two companies of light troops under the command of Captain Vinton, acting major, and judiciously drawn up the main body of his [...] and, flanked on the right by Hays, and left by Walker's Texans. The enemy advanced boldly, was repulsed by one general discharge from all arms, fled in confusion closely pressed by Childs and Hays, preceded by the light troops under Vinton; and while they fled past our troops entered the palace and fort. In a few moments the unpretending flag of the Union had replaced the gaudy standard of Mexico. The captured guns-one six-inch howitzer, one twelve and two nine pounder brass guns, together with Duncan's and Mackall's field batteries, which came up at a gallop, were in full and effective play upon the retiring and confused masses that filled the street of which we had the [...] leading to the nearest plaza, la capella, also crowded with troops. At this moment the enemy's loss was heavy. The investment was now complete. Except the force necessary to hold the positions on independencia and serve the guns, [...] to points whence the shot could be made to reach the great plaza.) the division was now concentrated around the palace, and preparation made to assault the city on the following day, or sooner, should the general-in-chief either so directed, or, before communication be had, [...] the assault from the opposite quarter. In the meantime attention was directed to every provision our circumstances permitted to alleviate the condition of our wounded soldiers and officers; to the decent interment of the dead, not omitting in either respect [...] that was due to those of the enemy.

About 10 A.M. on the 23d, a heavy fire was heard in the opposite quarter. Its magnitude and continuance, as well as other circumstances, did not permit a doubt that the general was conducting a main attack; and that his orders for my co-operation (having to travel a circuit of some six mile,) had miscarried, of failed to reach me by the means of the numerous cavalry of the enemy.-Under these convictions, the troops were instantly ordered to commence an operation which, if not otherwise directed, I had designed to execute in part, under favor of the night. Two columns of attack were organized, to move along the two principle streets leading from our position, in directin of the great plaza composed of light troops slightly extended, with orders to mask the men whenever practicable, avoid those points swept by the enemy's artillery; to press on to the first plaza, Capella; to get hold of the ends of the streets beyond, then enter the buildings, and by means of picks and bars break through the longitudinal sections of the walls; work from house to house, and ascending to the roofs, to place themselves upon the same breast-height with the enemy. Light artillery by sections and pieces, under Ducan, Roland, Mackall, Martin, Hays, Irons, Clarke, and Curd, followed at suitable intervals, covered by reserves to guard the places and the whole operation against the probable enterprises cavalry upon our left. This was effectually done by seizing and commanding the head of every cross street. The streets were, at different and well chosen points barricaded by heavy masonry walls, with embarasses for one or more guns, and in every instance well supported by cross [...]. These arrangements of defence gave to our operations at this moment a complicated character, demanding much care and precaution; but the work went on steadily, simulataneously and successfully. About the time our assault commenced, the fire ceased from our force in the opposite quarter. Disengaged on the one side, the enemy was enabled to shift men and guns to our quarter as was soon manifested by accumulation of fire. At dark we had worked through the walls and squares, reached to within one block of the great plaza, leaving a covered way in our rear—carried a large building which towered over the principle defences, and during the night and ensuing morning, crowned its roof with two howitzers and a six-pounder. All things were now prepared to renew the assault at dawn of day, when a flag was sent in, asking a momentary suspension of fire, which led to the capitulation upon terms so honorable to our arms. As the columns of attack was moving from the Palace hill, Major Monroe, chief of artillery, reached me with a ten inch mortar, which was immediately advanced to the plaza, Chapel, put in position marked by the church wall, its bed adjusted as rapidly as possible, and by sunset opened upon upon the great square. At this period our troops had worked to within one square of the plaza. The exact position of our comrades on the opposite side was not known, and the distance of the position to be assaulted from the bomb battery but conjectural; eight hundred yards was assumed, and fuze and charge regulated accordingly; the first shell fell a little short of the point on which it was directed, and beside our troops; a slight increase of the projecting charge gave exact results. The whole service was managed by Major Monroe, most admirably, and, combined with other operations, exercised a decided influence upon the final results. Early on the morning of the 23, Major Brown, artillery battalion, was despatches with a select command, and one section of Mackall's battery, under Lieut. Irons, to occupy the stone mill and adjacent grounds, constituting on league in advance, the narrow gorge near St. Catarina. The major took possession, repulsed the enemy's picquets, and was preparing his command to resist anyattack, when he received my orders to retrace his steps, enter the city, and form the main reserve to the assaulting columns. He On the 25th, in confromity with the articles of capitulation, the citadel was taken possession of by a command consisting of two companies of each regiment, and one section of each battery, 2d division. Gen. Smith was directed to take command of this corps, and conduct the ceremony, which duty he executed with delicacy to the unhappy and humiliated foe.

You will receive lists of captured munitions of war; lists of such as were surrendered, have already been handed in.
It is a source of high gratification that we have been able to accomplish such fortunate results with so moderate a sacrifice of gallant men. Annexed is a return of killed and wounded, exhibiting dates, actions, and circumstances.

When every officer and every soldier, regular and volunteer, has through a series of harassing and severe conflicts, in the valley and on the mountain, in the street and on the house-top, cheerfully, bravely, and successfully executed every service and complied with every execution of valor and patriotism, the task is as difficult as delicate to distinguish individuals; and yet it will always happen, as it has always happened in the varied scenes of battle and seige, that fortune presents to some those opportunities which all would have seized with gladness and [...]. It is my pleasing and grateful duty to present to the consideration of the general in chief, and through him to the government, the distinguished conduct of Brigadier General Smith, colonel of rifles; Brevet Lieutenant ColonelChilds, artillery battalion; Colonel Hays, Texas riflemen, Brevet Lt. Colonel Ducan, horse artillery; and Capt.[sic] C. F. Smith, secondartillery, commanding light troops 1st brigade. Lord My thanks are also especially due to Lieutenant Colonel Stanford, 8th, (commanding first brigade;) Maj., chief of artillery, (general staff;) Brevet Major Brown, Capt. J R Vinton, artillery battalion; Capt. J B Selan, artillery battalion; Capt. J B Selan, artillery battalion; Capt. John Scott, artillery battalion; Capt. Scott, commanding 1st brigade.
Merrill, 5th; Captain, Miles commanding, Holmes and Ross, 7th infantry; and Capt Seriven, commanding 8th infantry; to Lieut. Col. Walker, (captain rifles,) Maj. Chevalier, and Capt. McCulloch, of the Texans and Captain Blanchard, Louisiana volunteers to Lieuts. Mackall, (commanding battery,) Roland, Martin, Hays, Irons, Clarke and Curd, horse artillery; Lieut. Longstreet, commanding light company, 8th infantry. Ayres, artillery battalion, who was among the first in the assualt upon the palace, and who secured the colors. Each of the officers named either headed different detachments, columns of attack, storming parties, or detached guns, and all were conspicuous for conduct and courage. My attention has been particulary directed by Gen. Smith to the gallant conduct of Lieut. Gardner, 7th infantry, during the assault upon the city; on which occasion he threw himself in advance, and on the most exposed points animating the men by his brave example. Particular attention has also been called to the Lieuts. Nicholls, (brother,) Louisiana volunteers, as having highly distinguished themselves by personal daring and efficient service.
The officers of brigade and regimental staff were conspicuous in the field, or in their particular departments.
Lietenants Hanson, (commanding,) Vandore, aid-de-camp, 7th; Lieut. Robinson, 5th, (quartermaster's department) on the staff of Gen. Smith; Lieut. and Adjt. Clarke, 8th infantry, staff 1st brigade; Lieuts. Benjamin, adjutant artillery battalion; G [...] adjutant 5th; and Page, adjutant 7th infantry, are highly commended by their respective chiefs, to the justness of which I have the pleasure to add my personal observation. Incommom with the entire division, my particular thanks are tendered to assistant surgeons Porter, (senior,) Byrne, Conrad, DeLeon, and Roberts, (medical department,) who were ever at hand in the close fight, promptly administering to the wounded and suffering soldier.
To the officers of the Staff, general and personal, more especially associated with myself—Hon. Col. Balie Peyton, Louisiana troops, who did me the honor to serve as aide-de-camp; Capt. Sanders, military engineers; Lieut. Meade, topographical engineers; Lieuts. E Deas, Daniels and Ripley, quartermaster's and commissary's staff; and Lieuts.
Pemberton, 4th artillery, and Wood 8th infantry, my aides de-camp—I have to express the greatest obligation. In such diversified operations during the three days and nights, they were constandy in motion, performing every executive duty with zeal and intelgence only surpassed by daring courage in conflict. i beg to commend each to special consideration.
We have to [...] the gallant Capt. McKavatt, 8th infantry, an officer of high merit, killed on the 21st, and Gillespie, Texas volunteers, on the 22d. The latter eminently distinguished himself which leading his brave company at the storming of the first height, and perished in seeking similar distinction on a second occasion; Capt. Gatlin and Lieut. Potter, 7th; Lieuts. Russell 5th, and [...] right, 8th infantry, and Lieut. Reece, Texas riflemen, received honorable, happily not mortal wounds.

The following, non-commissioned officers are reported as having highly distinguished themselves. Sergeants Hazard, 4th, and Dilworth, 3d artillery. Quartermaster Sergeant Henry, 7th infantry; Cross, company C; Rounds, [...] (color sergeant,) and Magg, company E; [...] company [...] and Ballard, 7th infantry.

In the several conflicts with the division, the enemy's loss is ascertained to exceed four hundred and fifty men; four nine-pounders, one twelve-pounder brass gun, one twenty-four pounder howitzer, and two national (garrison) standards captured.

Very respectfully;
Your obedient servant,

W. J. WORTH,
Brevet Brigadier General, Commanding 2d division.

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p1c6 Departure of Major General Scott

Correspondence of the Baltimore American.

General Scott and his staff are ordered to Mexico, to give additional spirit and direction to the Army. This new movement is the result of the recent communications and conferences of which I made mention in my letter of this morning, and have grown out of recent events in Mexico, and advices from the head quarters of the Army.

Gen. Scott was to leave in the mail boat this morning, and has probably gone. His destination, is Tampico, but with large additional powers to control his actions when upon the ground.

From both the Navy and War Departments, I learn that every preparation is making for an attack upon Tampico. The force commanded by Maj. Gen. Patterson will march from Matamoros down by the coast through Tamaulipas.

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p1c6 Later from the Army

(From the N. O. Times, Nov. 17)

The U. S. steamship Massachusetts, Capt. Wood, arrived yesterday in the river, from Brazos Santiago. The latest dates from Monterey are to the 4th; but we understand that nothing new had transpired there. Capt. Lamontte left Monterey on the 3d inst., and our private advices came down to the 2d. The gallant Maj. Lear, of the 3d Infantry, has died of his wounds. He was buried on the 1st inst.

Gen. Wool had communicated with Gen. Taylor on two occasions. It would appear that the former has detached one thousand men from his command to take possession of Monclova, and with the other two thousand proceeded on his march to Chihuahua. It seems to be regretted that General Taylor, from motives perhaps of delicacy, refrained from interfering in any way with Gen. Wool's plans.

The Regular troops had all been removed from Matamoros - the last company proceeded up the river on the 4th inst. The 3d Regiment Ohio, and 3d Indiana Volunteers, are now the sole guardians of the city. Fort Brown is likewise garrisoned by the Ohio troops. The remainder of the two regiments, with the exception of two companies of Indians, stationed at Reynosa, are encamped on the bank of the river, just below the town.

Colonel McKee’s 2d regiment of Kentucky Infantry were under marching orders for Monterey, three Companies having already left Camargo. The Georgia regiment had probably reached Gen. Taylor's camp. Gen. Marshall's regiment of Kentucky mounted men were encamped four or five miles below Camargo. Some Companies of Colonel Ormsby's regiment of Kentucky Infantry were at Camargo. The Tennessee regiment of mounted men were encamped a short distance below Matamoros.

The recruits for the regular army are sent forward to Monterey as fast as they arrive. [AMB]

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p2c4 The War - Its Results

The fact that General Scott has been ordered to proceed to the seat of war, and, it is said that, with his Staff, he left Washington city last Tuesday morning -- for the purpose of taking the command in chief of the land forces, is one of many circumstances going to show, that the Administration, tacitly confessing the want of energy and skill hiterto exhibited in the prosecution of the campaign, has been at length satisfied of the necessity of more vigorous efforts, as well as a more wisely digested plan of operations. It is rumored also that Commodore Stewart, now the Senior Naval officer, is to be sent to the Gulf of Mexico, with a considerably increased force; and we may therefore expect, at no distant day, to hear of an attack upon the fort of San Juan de Ulloa -- by some persons well qualified to judge, deemed impregnable to an assault by sea, but which, defended by the Mexicans, in whose firmness, notwithstanding recent occurrences have tended to increase our respect for their soldierly qualities, we have not very strong confidence, it is to be hoped may be successful.

We infer from these movements, that all hope of the speedy restoration of peace has been abandoned by the Administration. Indeed, it is so stated explicitly by the "Daily Fountain," a paper published in Washington city, which professes to have "the very best authority" for its statement -- and which adds that "it has been determined to take, at all hazards, the Castle of St. Juan de Ulloa, and to occupy it and the port of Vera Cruz until our stubborn enemy shall be reduced to submission -- that Tampico, Mazitian, Alvarado, Tabasco, Campeachy, and every other Mexican port, at which trade can be carried on, is to be seized and held by our forces -- that General Taylor has been entrusted with full power and positive orders to harass and destroy the enemy in every possible way, and, so soon as the new reinforcements, which are to be increased immediately to the utmost point allowed by law, shall reach the scene of operations, to march to the city of Mexico -- and that no quarter, consistent with the rules of civilized warfare, is to be given hereafter to the enemy until he sues for peace, and shall make entire restitution for the expenses of the war."

The last remark in the above extract points to a chapter in the future history of this country, the opening sentences of which are already written, and may be read by those who run; but the concluding portion is yet sealed, and may not be fully revealed until the clouds of war shall be entirely dispersed. How is Mexico, already bankrupt and crushed to the earth by a national debt infinitely beyond her means of payment - which, indeed, has been literally unable to comply with the stipulations of its treaties with the United States, admitting its obligations and agreeing to indemnify our citizens for innumerable spoliations and robberies - how, we ask, is the Mexican Government to liquidate this large and daily augmenting amount? No one, we presume, supposes that it can pay in cash - and, as for its promises, we have already seen, that, when an infinitely smaller sum was involved, its inadequate means compelled it to allow the drafts upon it to be dishonored. There is but one mode in which it can be made to defray the expenses of the war - and that is by the session of a portion of its territory. This, we presume, will be the ultimatum of our government, whenever the parties to the contest shall seriously address themselves to the task of its termination. The question then, is, how much territory with be deemed sufficient for this purpose? Will California, the importance of which, in a commercial point of view, and the danger, if we do not secure it, that it will fall into the hands of Great Britain, will reconcile many to its acquisition, who nevertheless look with unaffected apprehension on the consequences to the union and to the cause of free government that are likely to result from the extension of its limits - will California suffice? Or, the annexation of Texas having failed to "round off of the frontier" and to serve as a wall of defence, is there yet another "outside row" on her borders, which it is essential to secure, in order to produce this geographical symmetry and to serve as an impossible barrier to foreign aggression? Must New Mexico and Tamaulipas, Chihuauha, and New Leon be annexed to the Union, as "indemnity for the past and security for the future"? And if we are thus to extend the limits of this Republic, and to enlarge its “area” to an extent greater than that over which the Roman eagles flew, can we reasonably expect that our existing them of government will long be able to resist the disturbing and debilitating influences that will be thus necessarily combined with pre-existing antagonist interests, which, as we have seen, have been already numerous and powerful enough to threaten their overthrow?

But we will not press this enquiry now. Indeed, in the present state of our relations with Mexico, and the natural temper of the public mind, which is more interested in the events of the war than its probable results, it would be an unprofitable if not an unwelcome task. We are content to adopt the language of a toast recently given by Mr. Winsthrop, the able representative in congress from the city of Boston: "OUR COUNTRY, WHATEVER ITS BOUNDARIES" - but we will add, may these bundaries never be enlarged by wars of ambition and conquest - foreign wars waged (for national agrandizement, inevitably lie the germs of the future discord and disunion, with all the evils and horrors that must follow in their train.

We do not know that the purpose of some of our leading statesmen is correctly shadowed forth by the following half playful, half-erious [sic] letter from Washington, which we met with in the New York Herald. We copy it neverthe less, because it is "germane to the matter," and because there is not [...], in despite of the manner in which the subject is treated, food for serious thought:

The Vixen with this heavy drag steadily ascending the stream against a four-knot current, and arriving near the Frontier. I discovered two steamers (of which I had received previous information) firing up, doubtless in the hope of escape, but we were too close upon them. Casting off her tow, the Vixen proceeded ahead, followed by the other vessels and barques, and at once the town, the steamers, and all the vessels in port were in our possession, excepting only the schooner [...] which vessel attempted to escape up the river, was pursued by Lieut. Commandant [...] in the Bonita, and captured.

Desirous of reaching Tabasco before they would have time for increasing their defences, the detachment under Captain Forrest was placed on board the largest of the captured steamers, the Petrita, and she, with the Nonate, the Forward, and the barges in tow, and the Vixen, with the Bonita, left Frontera at half-past 9 the next morning, Lieutenant Walsh being left in command of the place.

After standing all night, and encountering various incidents arising from the rapidity of the current and the [...] course of the stream, we arrived at 9 the next morning in sight of Fort Aceachappa, intended to command a most difficult pass of the river. On our approach, the men employed in preparing the guns for service fled, and we passed [...] unmolested, but I was careful to cause the guns to be spiked.

Anticipating serious resistance at this place, arrangements had been made for landing Capt Forrest with his detachments a mile below the fort, to march up and carry it by storm.

At noon, all the vessels anchored in line of battle in front of the city at half musket range, when I immediately summoned it to surrender, the boats meanwhile being employed in securing five merchant vessels found at anchor in the port.

To my summons sent by a flag with Captain Forrest a refusal to capitulate was returned, with an invitation to me to fire as soon as I pleased. Suspecting, as I did, that this answer was given more in bravado than in earnest, and being extremely reluctant to destroy the place, I entertained the hope that a few shots fired over the buildings would have caused a surrender. Accordingly, I directed the guns of the Vixen alone to be fired, and at the flag-staff, sending an order to all the vessels to avoid, so far as possible, in case of a general fire, injury to the house distinguished by consular flags.

At the third discharge from the Vixen, the flag disappeared from the staff. On seeing it down, I ordered the firing cease, and sent Captain Forrest again ashore to learn whether it had been cut down by our shot, or purposely struck; the reply was that it had been shot away, and the city would not be surrendered.

I now directed Capt. Forrest, with the force under his command, to land and take a position in the city, commanded by our guns. This movement brought on a scattering fire of musketry from various parts of the city, which was returned by the flotilla.

Perceiving towards evening that the enemy did us but little injury, though openly exposed on the decks of the small vessels, and their balls passing through our slight [...] works, and apprehending, from the proverbial heedlessness of sailors, that should they and the marines be attacked in the narrow streets after dark, they would be cut off by sharp-shooters from the houses, I ordered the detachment to be re-embarked.

In this position the vessels remained all night, the crews lying at their quarters ready to return the fire of the [...] of the enemy, which it was supposed they would have had the courage to have brought down under cover of the night to the openings of the streets opposite to our vessels, but they left us undisturbed.

Learning that the merchant, and other citizens of the city, were desirous that a capitulation should be made, but were overruled by the governor, who, regardless of consequences, and secure himself against attack, was content that the city should be destroyed rather than surrendered, I determined from motives of humanity not to fire again, but
Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p4c1 The Dispatches - The Future

In the morning, however, the fire was recommenced from shore, and was necessitate returned, but with renewed orders to regard the consular houses so far as they could be distinguished. In the midst of the fire, a flag of truce was displayed on shore: on perceiving which, I caused the firing again to cease, and Captian Forrest was sent to meet its bearer, who submitted a written communication addressed to me; a copy of which, with a copy of my reply, [...] B and C, will be enclosed.

As an assurance of my sincerity, I now hoisted a white flag and directed the prizes to drop down the stream, intending to follow with the frylilla; but in violation of the understanding implied in the before mentioned correspondence, the enemy, in discovering that one of the prizes had [...] ashore in front of the city, collected a large force within and behind the houses in the vicinity, and commenced a furious fire upon her. Lieut. Parker, of this one, in command of the prize, defend her in the most gallant mariner, and ultimately succeeded in getting her again afloat, having one of her men killed and two wounded.

It was in carrying an order to Lient. Parker that Lieut Morris was wounded. He had been of infinite service to me from the time we left Lizardo, and, conducting himself during the bombardment with remarkable deliberation and coolness, he approached the prize in a line to cover his bond, and though apparently regardful of the safety of the officer and men of this boat, who were seated, he stood erect himself, and the ball struck him in the throat. No one can explore the fate of this very valuable young officer more than myself. His loss is irreputable to the service and his family.

It may well be supposed that on perceiving the attack upon the prize, I re-opened upon the city, which again silenced their fire. I now proceeded with the [...] and prizes down the river. One of the prizes, a small schr of little value, having grounded in a dangerous pass, and knowing that it would be difficult to extricate her without causing unconvenient delay, I ordered her to be burned. We arrived safely at Frontera on the evening of the 26th, the Vixen having towed down the river five vessels and several barges.

From Frontera I dispatched my prizes to this place; and after destroying all the vessels and crafts found in the river of too little value to be manned, I proceeded on the 31st to rejoin you, leaving the McLane and Forward at anchor [...] Frontera to continue the blockade of the river, and to afford protection and shelter to the [illegible].

M.C. Perry.

p.s.- I omitted to mention that [illegible] In regard to the McLane I propose to make a special communication. [AMB]

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p3c1 General Scott

We apprehend that there is some error in the statement that Gen. Scott has been appointed to take command of the Army in Mexico. The Washington Union, received last night, is silent on the subject, and a letter from Baltimore, dated November 25, to the editors of the National Intelligencer, says: "General Scott passed through Baltimore yesterday afternoon en route to the North - New Jersey, I believe - where some members of his family are sejourning. His business is altogether of a private nature. He gave no intimation to those with whom he conversed for a short period that he had been ordered to Mexico."

Friday, November 27, 1846 RW46v23i94p4c1 The Dispatches - The Future

In continuing the publication of the official details of the obstinately contested conflict at Monterey, we avail ourselves of the occasion to express our sincere gratification that it puts forever to rest the idle rumors, first propagated by some one or more of the innumerable letter-writers attached to the Army, of an unpleasant disagreement on the field of battle between Generals Taylor and Butler, growing out of the alleged misconduct of the latter officer. Not the slightest allusion is made to such an event, by either of them - an omission wholly irreconcilable with the presumption of its occurrence. For one, we did not for a moment believe so much of the story as imputed to Gen. Butler a want of firmness; for although it may be true that "every man has his moment of fear," it rarely happens that an old soldier, like Gen. Butler, is betrayed into an exhibition of timidity while the battle is raging around him, and his men are marching steadily forward to the attack. Par it is unfortunate, we think, that there are so many letter-writers in the Army - or rather, that there are so many presses eager to publish all that is written, not an inconsiderable portion of which must necessarily be made up of crude and ill-digested rumors, of which a camp is even more prolific than other places in which large masses of men are congregated. Nor is it the only or the most serious evil arising from this source. But partially informed, as most of the writers must necessarily be, of the events of a battle, in which the circle of observation of most of those engaged in it is necessarily circumscribed, it is impossible that they can do justice even to the prominent actors in the conflict; and much more incompetent are they to judge of the propriety of the course pursued by the commander-in-chief, or to decide upon the comparative merits of his principal subordinates, and to award to each the honor due to his skill as a commander.
