DEMURRAGE.—In consequence of the volunteers not having been ready to start on Tuesday, on board the steamship Galveston, which has been chartered to convey them to Point Isabel, she received demurrage at the rate of $500 per day from Tuesday evening last.

RE46v43i5p2c7, May 15, 1846: RECIPE FOR CONDUCTING A SHORT WAR.

One of the ablest Whigs yesterday treated the Senate with a new discovery in the art of war. He was for making a short war with Mexico, and he contended the best way was, first, to give her a blow, and then to hold out the hand of peace to her; and thus, first by the shut fist, and then by the open palm, to drive and win her alternately to peace. And this he recommended as the method of making a short war of it. Now as the Mexicans are the most loquacious people in the world, dealing so much in words, pronunciamientos, and the like, it is apprehended that the Senator's tactics would spin the contest into a long war. They would take it for granted, that immediately after a blow, we should offer them the olive branch; and thus, between two blows they would have time to breathe and to talk, and to collect their forces—whilst our forces might be . . .[illegible] . . . in their supplies, and the time would gradually melt away. We confess, we prefer the old-fashioned way of carrying on the war.

RE46v43i5p2c7, May 15, 1846: VOLUNTEERS FOR TEXAS!.

It will be seen by the annexed appeal, that an effort—we have no doubt it will be a successful one—is about being made in this city to raise Corps of Volunteers to tender their service to the President, in conformity with the provisions of the bill, which was before this time probably became a law, authorizing him to receive 50,000 men in the public service.

RE46v43i5p2c7, May 15, 1846: TEXAS!

PATRIOTS! Your country calls—obey! Glory awaits you! Virginians! Be ever as ready to blast treachery as to trample on tyranny! Let us gain the prize banner of the Union for our ready devotion, and wear it proudly by matchless deeds. Let Virginia be like her matchless . . .[illegible] . . .—"first in war, first in peace," and first in the . . .[illegible] . . . of States! Let our ranks be filled with "brave and freely be our banners flung to the breeze.—From the Rio Grande let us plunge freely in the tide of war, and know no stop or hindrance until our flag waves first on the walls of Mexico.—Let it at least never be furled, until our country men, who have fallen by the hands of treachery shall be avenged—until expectant nations shall see how free America can right her injured honor!

RE46v43i5p3c2, May 15, 1846: By Last Evening’s Mail. BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, the Congress of the United States, by virtue of the constitutional authority vested in them, have declared by their act bearing date this day, that, “by the act of the republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States:”.

Now, therefore, . I, JAMES K. POLK, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the same to all whom it may concern; and I do specially enjoin on all persons holding offices, civil or military, under the authority of the United States, that they be vigilant and zealous in discharging the duties respectively incident thereto: and I do moreover exhort all the good people of the United States as they love their country, as they feel the wrongs which have forced on them the last resort of injured nations, and as they consult the best means, under the blessing of Divine Providence, of abridging its calamities, that they exert themselves in preserving order, in promoting concord, in maintaining the authority and the efficacy of the laws, and in supporting and invigorating all the measures which may be adopted by the constituted authorities for obtaining a speedy, a just, and an honorable peace.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed to these presents. Done at the city of Washington, the thirteenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty six, and of the independence of the United States the seventieth. JAMES K. POLK. By the President: JAMES BUCHANAN, Secretary of State.

RE46v43i5p4c7, May 15, 1846: Wednesday Morning, May 13, 1846. FROM THE SENIOR EDITOR.

WASHINGTON, Monday Night, May 11. The Capitol was thronged with anxious listeners to the proceedings of
From the Second Edition of the Enquirer of May 16th.

The anxiety of our readers to hear from the seat of war, induced us to issue a second edition of the Enquirer this morning, containing later intelligence from Texas and from Mexico.
By the arrival of the schooner Ellen and Clara, Capt. Griffin, from Brazos St. Jago, we have accounts from Point Isabel to the morning of the 29th ultimo. The news is only one day later and of course not very definite or satisfactory. The fact, however, that no communication had been had for three days between Point Isabel and the Camp of Gen. Taylor, is alone sufficient to keep anxiety on tip-toe.

We learn from Captain Griffin, and Doctor N. Briggs, a passenger, who has been several months with the army, that Capt. Walker, formerly of the Texan revenue service, who has been stationed between Point Isabel and General Taylor’s Camp, with a body of twenty-four volunteer Texan Rangers, found several of the teams which had started from the Point for the Camp were returning, and reported that the Mexicans were on the road. He started from his camp on the 28th, with his whole force, to reconnoitre, and, if possible, open a communication with Gen. Taylor. He had proceeded as far as about midway between Point Isabel and the Camp, when an overwhelming Mexican force appeared very suddenly. A portion of his troops were raw—these he instructed to keep on his right, and gave orders to the whole to retire under cover of a chapparel in view.

But his raw troops, panic-stricken, scattered in confusion, and the Mexicans advancing in overwhelming numbers, he was compelled to retreat. He was followed by the Mexicans until within a mile of Point Isabel, where he arrived with only two of his men. Six other subsequently came in.

Capt. Walker estimated the number of Mexicans he encountered at 1500, and he supposed that at least 30 of them fell, during the fifteen minutes which he engaged them. This force is supposed to be a portion of that which had at the last accounts crossed the Rio Grande some 20 or 25 miles above Matamoras, and which is estimated at 3000 men. It is believed that they had arrived at the position they occupied by taking a circuitous route on the Eastern side of Gen. Taylor’s camp.

It is believed that the Mexicans have possession of an Island at the mouth of the Brassos, which commands the entrance. If so, it is apprehended that the troops by the New York will not be able to get in. The island is laid down on some of the maps as Brassos Village. It is a natural fortification.

A small schooner, the Aurora, sailed from Point Isabel on the 28th, for this port, with despatches. The weather has been very severe on the coast and it is feared that she has been driven ashore.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO!

From the New Orleans Bulletin, Extra, May 9.

From the New Orleans Tropic, Extra, May 9.

Two Days Later From Mexico.

The brig Josephine, from Vera Cruz, brings us the following letter from our correspondent, dated April 25th, two days later than the last, and papers from that city of the same date:

[Correspondence of the Tropic.] Vera Cruz, April 25, 1846.

Gentlemen: By the mail steamer Tweed, last evening from Tampico, we have intelligence from Matamoras down to the 15th.

A gentleman informs me that he has seen a letter from the British consul at that city, to the British consul here, from which he give me an extract.

This letter indicates a degree of familiarity between the Mexican General and the writer, that would justify the conclusion, that upon him has fallen the mantle of the “man with the white hat.”.

He says, Ampudia showed him the letter warning General Taylor off the banks of the Bravo, before it was forwarded, and intimates, without asserting it, that nothing prevents an attack from the Mexicans but want of boats. He also says that “General Taylor has plenty of Thirty-two Pounders pointed at the town,” which is of course an exaggeration.

The excitement here regarding the Yankee Fleet has subsided somewhat, as the ships have not been seen since the 20th. We hope they have moved into the neighborhood of our little army, as the tars would form most valuable auxiliaries in case of collision. From what I have seen and heard of sailors, I believe they would fight even better on land than on board ship. They would make excellent Artillerists, and first rate Riflemen.

I see by the Capital papers that the American squadron were at Matzatlan, on the first instant, in the following force:

Frigates—Savannah and Constitution.

Sloops of War—Portsmouth and Levant, and the schooner Shark—the latter of which, in company with the Portsmouth, sailed that day. Official information had been given to the merchants, that, from the 2d. of April, no more business would be done in the Customhouse. This was surely a very silly step, and I presume will cost the Collector his commission, as not blockade had been declared, and could not reasonably be feared.

Every body carps at the proceedings of the Government. Paredes’ nomination of Governor of the Department of Mexico, in the place of Bravo, who was sent here, has brought the Departmental Assembly “down upon him.” They demand the appointment of a Senor Gorospe, and refuse to confirm that of the contestant, Chavarri. I have learned nothing else of interest from the capital.

The call for exact lists of all the naturalized citizens of the Republic, is evidently intended to have an effect upon American emigrants, particularly. Whatever the object may be, I regard the measure as an impolitic one, and as evincing a meddlesome disposition that could not belong to a decent government.

A new edict ids said to be preparing, by which master printers are to be made responsible for whatever may be published from their offices or establishments!

The only American vessel left here by the Josephine, will be the ship Suviah, of your city.

"El Judicador“ of this city of the 22d mentions a meteorological phenomenon, which may have been simultaneously observed farther North, and, therefore, worth transcription. The Observer says:

"Last night at eleven minutes past seven, our attention was attracted by a very brilliant red light at the Northwest, which upon examination proved to be caused by a luminous meteor passing to the Northward, and apparently falling into the sea. By a paralactic calculation, we estimated it to have reached a height of 1700 or 1800 varas, at which elevation it followed a right line for 3 seconds, when it began its descent. We regard this as a prognostic of extreme heat."

There is nothing of importance in the papers. Gorostiza, Minister of the Treasury, has resigned, it is positively stated, in consequence of the Government’s policy towards the press. The Minister of Foreign Relations occupies his place for the present.

The latest information received in Mexico from Matamoras assigned to Gen. Ampudia a force of 7,000 men. The Locomoter says that Ampudia had “compelled the American Consul and his countrymen to march into the interior, to Victoria!”

The 3d Regiment of Infantry had left the city of Mexico for Vera Cruz, and another was to follow immediately.

The Locomoter denounces the Government for its recent decree against the press, as particularly impolitic under the existing relations with this country. "It is only, “ says that paper, "by exciting and pleasing the people, that they can be brought to struggle with a powerful nation. The resources employed by the Government are pitiful and mean.”.

The military at Vera Cruz were active in their preparations for war. The Castle is said to be in excellent condition.

The John Adams was off Vera Cruz.

Extract of a letter under date of 26th ult., from Vera Cruz, received by a commercial house of this city:

"Gen. Alvarez has pronounced in the South in favor of the Federalists—and in the meantime calls for a triumverate composed of Santa Anna, Herrier, and Rincon, who are to govern this country, until a free election can take place for a President; but we have so many of these pronunciamentos, that they do not amount to anything.—On the 20th inst., the editor and proprietor of the Monitor, in Mexico, was imprisoned and sent to San Blas.”.

Important from Mexico!!
GRAND REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT IN THE SOUTH.
Glorious News from Yucatan.

By a vessel at this port (says the New York Sun of Thursday, ) which sailed from Havana on the 1st inst., we have private letters from intelligent correspondents in Merida, Yucatan, to the close of March, with private advices from parts of Southern Mexico to the middle of April, conveying the gratifying intelligence that people of Southern Mexico, in imitation of the patriotic example of Yucatan, were concentrating their efforts, in unison with the Congress of Yucatan, then in session, for a grand revolutionary movement against the military despots of the centre. The Congress of Yucatan had refused to entertain any propositions from Paredes, and a courier, whom he had sent to Merida, to request only three hundred troops, narrowly escaped with his life. We translate a few of the principal political views of our Mexican corresdonents, remarking that we place confidence in them:

"Having nothing to hope from Paredes but a monarchy in its worst shape, or a central power usurping the independence of the Departments and of the people, we again unfurl the banner of liberty, inscribing upon its folds—no compromise with the chieftains of Monarchy! History bears witness to our struggles for liberty. We have perilled our lives in its defence, as have our brethren of Texas and of the other gallant States of the great Northern Union." Men of America, brethren by the holy ties of human liberty, we shall rise in a few days in these Southern Departments, hoping to rescue our beautiful Mexico from the hands of Europe’s minions. Brethren of the North; we respect you for your noble example of self-government, which shines upon the nations. In return we ask your sympathy. You have our confidence—give us yours. We know that we can have your co-operation. But if the central Junto, incited by another power, should war against you for receiving and protecting our sister Texas, you shall find us prepared to greet you in the Halls of the Montesumas.”.

These noble sentiments are much more beautiful in the original Spanish of our correspondents. We give their spirit. Such patriotism demands, and will receive a cordial response from the freemen of America. The revolution had, as we already know, commenced in the south of the department of Mexico, which was not known to our correspondents, although expected, at the time of writing. The Congress of Yucatan consists of twenty three members, representing five departments.

RE46v43i6p1c2, May 19, 1846: PUBLIC MEETING IN RICHMOND. VOLUNTEERS FOR TEXAS.

In answer to the call through the morning papers, a large number of citizens assembled at the City Hall on Thursday evening, 14th May, at half past seven, the hour appointed.

Mr. G. A. Porterfield was called to the Chair, and in a few appropriate remarks explained that the object of the meeting was to inquire into the propriety of raising a Company of Volunteers from the city of Richmond, who should tender its services for the prosecution of the existing war with Mexico.

The Chairman then introduced to the meeting Mr. Edward C. Carrington, who offered a series of resolutions, which he supported in a most spirited and eloquent manner. He addressed himself principally to the young men of the city. He said that the call of the country was addressed to them; that the present welfare, the past glory, and the future destiny of the country, were in their keeping, and that it would be dishonorable to refuse the responsibility or prove recreant to the trust. He said that the call was addressed to them as Virginians, and asked if Old Virginia should sleep while her sister States were aroused, and their sons on the march to the aid of our brethren in Texas. He then asked in what portion of the Commonwealth this spirit could so well display itself as in this city, the heart and capital of the State.

This is but an imperfect sketch of Mr. Carrington’s remarks—in fact, not a full synopsis of what he said.

The following are the resolutions which were read to the meeting:

Resolved, that it is now known through the length and breadth of our land, that war is actually raging on our borders, and we are in daily expectation of intelligence of the most momentous import.

Resolved, That under such circumstances, every generous American youth naturally asks himself, what am I to do, and what do the honor and interests of the country demand of me?.

Resolved, That we, the young men of Virginia are determined to associate ourselves together for the formation of one or more volunteer companies, and offer our services forthwith to the General Government, to do battle for our country, when and where they may think proper to order us.

When Mr. Carrington had concluded, Gen. E. C. Carrington was called upon to address the meeting. He spoke about twenty minutes in the most patriotic spirit—declared that there were none present too young or too old to do battle for the country. He made a feeling vindication of the country against the imputation of degeneracy. He did not doubt that the spirit of the Revolutionary fathers was alive with their sons.

Robt. G. Scott, Esq., was called, and addressed the meeting with his usual ability. He did not consider this proceeding as rendered necessary by the situation of Gen. Taylor’s army—its fate was already sealed. Our object was to carry the war into Mexico, in order to chastise this nation of semi-barbarians into better manners.

Mr. S. urged the adoption of the resolutions.—He said they embodied his sentiments, and their object met with his entire concurrence.

The resolutions were adopted by acclamation.

Col. John D. Munford was called upon, and made a stirring speech. He invoked the aid and countenance of the community; and concluded by offering this resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five persons, be forthwith appointed for the purpose of taking immediate measures to raise by voluntary contribution, of the citizens of Richmond, the necessary funds to uniform and equip the corps of volunteers proposed to be organized in this city, destined for the service of the United States, in the existing war with Mexico.
Potosi, the key to the rich treasury of the Mexican mines, where the two forming an union, they may come down Matamoras upon Leona Vicario, falling upon Zacatecas, let the detachment from Tampico march upon San Louis continent. Let our forces then be sent to both Vera Cruz and Tampico, and while Gen. Taylor advances from under Gen. Barradas in 1829, when they made their last attempt to regain their possessions on the American d'Ulloa fell under their bombardment. Tampico was chosen by the Spaniards for the landing of five thousand troops any foreign supply. Vera Cruz was selected by the French for their attack in 1837, when the Castle of San Juan the Gulf of Mexico, and the only points, except the very unimportant one of Tuzpan, through which Mexico receives the invasion of Mexico, we understand that it is necessary to pass through a section of country in certain points very rugged and difficult of passage, in other points reach the more commanding and valuable portion of Mexico, after leaving the Rio Grande, we understand that it is necessary to pass through a section of country in certain points very rugged and difficult of passage, in other points exceedingly mountainous, with extensive plains beyond, much exposed to drought;--the whole inhabited by a hardy population, who may be said to live on horseback, who are familiar with every pass and defence, who have been accustomed to the excitement and trials o revolutions, and who, by driving their herds of cattle before them, would leave an invading army entirely dependant upon their own supplies, to carry which, for so great a distance, would in itself be an immense labor and expense. We do not doubt that the President of the United States has full information upon all these points. There are intelligent men now in Washington, connected with the Government, who have enjoyed a long experience in Mexico, and who, if we presume, be called upon to furnish what they may for the public good. It occurs to us, that William S. Parrott, Esq., formerly U. States Consul in the city of Mexico and late Secretary of Legation to that country, would be particularly available in this respect. He owned at one time, we learn, a hacienda in the vicinity of Leona Vicario, and for some years was in the habit of travelling through the barrancas dangerous defiles on the other side of the Rio Grande. The Government can derive from him much valuable intelligence as to the nature of the country and the habits of the people.

We have every reason to believe that a well-advised, not less than a prompt and vigorous plan of operations will be adopted by the Executive; and it strikes us as probable, reasoning from circumstances, that a part of this plan may be, to send attacking forces by sea to Tampico and Vera Cruz. These are the two great and important points on the Gulf of Mexico, and the only points, except the very unimportant one of Tuzpan, through which Mexico receives any foreign supply. Vera Cruz was selected by the French for their attack in 1837, when the Castle of San Juan d'Ulloa fell under their bombardment. Tampico was chosen by the Spaniards for the landing of five thousand troops under Gen. Barradas in 1829, when they made their last attempt to regain their possessions on the American continent. Let our forces then be sent to both Vera Cruz and Tampico, and while Gen. Taylor advances from Matamoras upon Leona Vicario, falling upon Zacatecas, let the detachment from Tampico march upon San Louis Potosi, [the key to the rich treasury of the Mexican mines, ] where the two forming an union, they may come down
These suggestions are thrown out after an inspection of the map with a friend who has given greater attention to the subject and has had better opportunities of appreciating the locale than ourselves. We are utterly ignorant of the plan of campaign which may have been agreed upon by the Executive. We only know that prompt and vigorous measures have been set on foot by all the departments of the Government. These suggestions are designed merely to show the probability of a more extended scale of operations than many perhaps anticipate—and, consequently, to commend to a more favorable consideration our proposal for the formation of a Virginia Legion.

In view of the probable loss of life from the climate, to which volunteers taken from this portion of the country, accustomed to regularity of lodging and abundant subsistence, may be exposed, if carried into camp at an unhealthy season of the year, in a climate fatal to strangers, it is not improbable that the President may, for the present, decline to send volunteers from Virginia—but their “turn” will certainly come, if we are not mistaken in our apprehensions of the duration and extent of the war. They may be now regularly enlisted, and may be ordered to the garrison at Old Point, where, under the training of efficient officers of the regular army, they may take the place of the regulars, and be ready, at a moment’s warning, for service in any point of the Union. The South may not be the only seat of war. Circumstances may arise, which may transfer operations to different and not less important points.

Let, then, a Virginia Legion be formed, constituted of men who will touch arms as brothers—who will be animated by the pride of name—who, moved by the spirit of brave Nelson at York-Town, when he ordered his own house to be battered down because it protected the enemy, will leave their business and their interests, and go forth to emulate an ancestry, who are as yet, in the world’s history, without superiors, in all that constitutes high-souled honor and devoted patriotism.

RE46v43i6p1c2, May 19, 1846: VOLUNTEER MEETING.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held this morning (Friday, the 15th,) at the Military Hall, for the purpose of organizing a volunteer corps to aid in defence of Texas. The meeting addressed by Mr. E. C. Carrington in a spirited manner. The meeting then adjourned to the room of one of its members, and Mr., John D. Warren having been called to the Chair, he explained the intention of the meeting, that its object was to get a sufficient number of volunteers, and proceed as early as possible to its organization.

The requisite number being soon enrolled, the meeting proceeded to the election of officers. Mr. Edward C. Carrington was unanimously elected Captain of the Company; Mr. G. P. Porterfield, 1st Lieutenant; Mr. Carlton Munford, 2d Lieutenant; Mr. John D. Warren 3d Lieutenant; and Mr. Htomas G. McKenzie, 4th Lieutenant; Hermon Carlton, 1st Orderly Sergeant, and J. Richard Lewellen, Colour Sergeant.

The meeting then adjourned, to meet again at the Exchange Concert Room at eight o’clock.

The meeting met at the appointed hour. A motion was made, that the Captain and some of the officers should go on to Washington as soon as practicable, and offer their services to the General Government. The motion was unanimously adopted.

The meeting then proceeded to the appointment of a committee to draft a constitution, and to perform such other duties as may be requisite to complete the organization of the corps.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned. E. C. CARRINGTON, Pres’t. HERMON CARLTON, Sec’y.

[In compliance with a resolution, in the above proceedings, Capt. Carrington and Lieutenant Warren left this city for Washington on Saturday morning last, with the view of tendering to the General Government the services of this new and spirited corps of volunteers.] [BWP]
Mr. Douglass next took the floor. Several members proposed that the committee rise, that he might proceed with his speech in the morning. He declined to avail himself of their courtesy, as he had but a few remarks to make, and those principally in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, who had just taken his seat, [Mr. Delano.] The gentleman from Ohio (said Mr. Douglass, ) has been so kind as to herald my advent before my arrival, and announce that I was about to follow him in the debate. I suppose that he drew this inference from the fact, that I took a seat near him, and listened to his speech with the most respectful attention. Acting upon this suggestion, he has addressed a large portion of his speech to me, and invited an answer from me especially to the principal points in his argument. I propose to gratify him in this respect; and while I shall speak with freedom and boldness of his positions and arguments, I trust I shall observe the same respectful courtesy towards my opponents which has characterized his effort. I commend the patriotism, if not the morality of the sentiment which he quoted at the beginning, and repeated several times in the course of his speech: “I go for my country, right or wrong.” I fear, however, that this sentiment, once so much approved by our countrymen, is about to be brought into disrespect and contempt by the use which the gentleman and some of his coadjutors are now making of it. They “go for their country right or wrong;” but they insist that their country is, and has been all the time in the wrong. They say that they will support the war, but that, in their opinion, “the war is unholy, unrighteous and damnable.”. His arguments, moreover, went to destroy all the sophism and misrepresentations of the Whigs in the two Houses of Congress, in regard to the marching of our troops across what is declared to be Mexican soil. He leaves them not an inch to stand upon.

Mr. J. W. Houston. Who made use of that expression? Was it any gentleman on this side of the House?.

Mr. Douglass. Yes, sir. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Delano] who has just taken his seat, made use of the identical words, and repeated them several times with great emphasis in the course of his speech, while the great body of his political friends listened with the most profound respect, and gave every indication of approbation and encouragement, by expressions, looks and nods of assent. I see the venerable gentleman from Massachusetts before me now nods his approval of the sentiment.

Mr. Adams. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I approve and endorse every word and syllable of it.

Mr. Douglass. So I supposed, from the marked indications of approval which that gentleman and his friends gave to every attack upon the right, interests, and honor of his own country. What reliance shall we place on the sincerity of gentlemen’s professions, that they are for the country right or wrong, when they exert all their power and influence to put their country in the wrong in the eyes of Christendom, and invoke the wrath of heaven upon us for our manifold national crimes and aggressions? With professions of patriotism on their lips, do they not show that their hearts are against their own country? They appeal to the consciences and religious feelings of our countrymen to unite in execration of our Government, army, citizen soldiers, and country, for prosecuting what they denounce as an
I will now proceed to examine the arguments by which the gentleman from Ohio, and those with whom he acts, pretend to justify their foreign sympathies. They assume that the Rio del Norte was not the boundary line between Texas and Mexico—that the Republic of Texas never extended beyond the Nueces—and consequently our government was under no obligation, and had no right, to protect the lives and property of American citizens beyond the last mentioned river. In support of this assumption, the gentleman has referred to the dispute which he says arose between the provinces of Coahuila and Texas, and the decisions of Almonte and some other Mexican General thereon prior to the Texan revolution; and while those provinces constituted a state of the Mexican confederacy. He has also referred to Mr. Hasting's History of Texas, in which we are also informed that the same boundary is assigned to the Mexican province of Texas. I do not deem it necessary to go back to a period anterior to the Texan revolution to ascertain the limits and boundaries of the republic of Texas. But if the gentleman has so great a reverence for antiquity as to place more reliance upon old authorities, which have become obsolete and inapplicable, in consequence of the changed relations of the country, I will gratify his taste in that respect, by directing his attention to the various maps, records, histories and authorities—Spanish, English and French—by which it is shown that the Rio del Norte was the boundary line between the French province of Louisiana and the Spanish provinces of Mexico. The gentleman can satisfy himself on that point, if he will take the pains to read a despatch (I might with propriety say a book, from its very great length,) written by the American Secretary of State, John Q. Adams, to the Spanish Minister, (Don Onis,) in 1819. He will there find the authorities all collected and reviewed with a clearness and ability which defies refutation, and demonstrates the validity of the American title under the treaty of 1803, to the country in dispute, together with the expression of his opinion, by the venerable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Adams,) that our title to the Del Norte was as clear as to the island of New Orleans. This was the opinion of Mr. Adams in 1819. It was the opinion of Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney in 1805. It was the opinion of Jefferson and Madison—of all our Presidents, and all administrations from the day of the purchase of Louisiana, in 1803, to the fatal treaty of relinquishment to Spain in 1819. I give the gentleman the opinions of these men in opposition to the opinion of Almonte and his brother Mexican General, and then leave the question of boundary prior to the Texan r evolution. Will he tell us, and his constituents, that those distinguished statesmen, including his friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. Adams,) as well, as Mr. Polk and the American Congress, were engaged in an unholy, an unrighteous and damnable cause, in claiming title to the Rio del Norte?

But, sir, I have already said that I do not deem it necessary to rely upon these old authorities for the full and complete justification of our government in defending possession of the country on the left bank of the Rio del Norte. There is better and higher evidence than this. The republic of Texas held the country by a more glorious title than can be traced through the old maps and musty records of Spanish and French courts. She held the country by the same title that our forefathers of the revolution acquired our territory and achieved the independence of this republic. She held it by virtue of her declaration of independence, setting forth the inalienable rights of man, by men who had hearts to feel and minds to comprehend the blessings of freedom; by principles successfully maintained by the irresistible power of her arms, and consecrated by the precious blood of her glorious heroes. These are her moments of title to the empire which she has voluntarily annexed to our Union, and which we have plighted our faith to protect and defend against invasion or dismemberment. We have received the republic of Texas, with her entire territory into this Union; as an independent and sovereign State, and have no right to alienate or surrender any portion of it. This obligation the gentlemen of the opposition admit, so far as respects the country to the northeast of the Nueces, but deny both the obligation and right to go beyond that river. I should have felt myself under peculiar obligations to them, if they would have condescended to inform us upon what grounds they assume the Nueces to have been the boundary line of the republic of Texas, and draw a distinction between our rights to the country on the opposite sides of that stream. I know nothing in the history of that republic from its birth to its translation, that will authorize any such assumption.

In order that I might be certain of the accuracy of the facts, to which I am about to refer, I have taken the precaution, with in the last few minutes, to have them authenticated by the testimony of the two most distinguished actors, one of whom I now recognize in my eye) of those thrilling and glorious scenes of the Texan Revolution. Before this high authority I assert, that as early as the campaign of 1835, there were soldiers and officers too in the Texan army, who resided in the country between the Nueces and the Del Norte. These same heroic men from the west side of the Nueces, or so many of them as had not been butchered by the Mexican soldiery, were present at the battle of Jan Jacinto, on the 21st of April, 1836, when Santa Ana was captured, and the Mexican army annihilated. Although few in number, and from their residence, exposed to more of the barbarities of the Mexicans than any other portion of Texas, they were faithful to the cause of freedom, and constant in their devotion to the cause of the Republic throughout its existence. Immediately after the battle of San Jacinto, Santa Ana made a proposition to the commander of the Texan army to make a treaty of peace, by which Mexico would recognize the independence of Texas, with the Rio del Norte as the boundary. In May, 1836, such a treaty was made between the Government of Texas and Santa Ana, in which the independence of the Republic of Texas was acknowledged, and the Rio del Norte recognized as the boundary. In pursuance of this treaty, the remnant of the Mexican army were ordered by Santa Ana to retire beyond the confines of the Republic of Texas, and take their position on the west side of the Rio del Norte, which they did in conformity with the treaty of peace.

Mr. J. W. Houston. I wish to ask of the gentleman from Illinois, was that treaty ever ratified by the Government of Mexico?

Mr. Douglass. I will answer the gentleman’s question with great pleasure. That Treaty was never ratified on the part of Mexico by any body, except Santa Ana, for the very good reason that, in the year previous, Santa Ana had usurped the Government of Mexico, had abolished the Constitution and the regularly established Government, and taken all the powers of Government into his own hands. To give stability to the power which he had usurped by the sword, he called a Congress around him, composed of his own adherents and followers, and had himself formally proclaimed dictator of the Republic of Mexico, and, as such, clothed with all the powers of Government, civil and military. In this capacity, he marched his armies into Texas, for the purpose of reducing those people into subjection to the despotism which he had established, and exterminating the last vestige of freedom which remained in all his dominions. While engaged in his work of desolation with fire and sword, committing butcheries and barbarities unknown to civilized warfare, he fell into the hands of the heroic Houston and his gallant little army—a captive to those whom he was striving to reduce to captivity. Then it was, . That the tyrant became the suppliant—a suppliant for his life and liberty—at the hands of those he had designed as his victims. There the dictator bent the knee in prayer for mercy, offering to recognise the independence of Texas, with the Rio del Norte. Subsequently the Treaty was entered into in due form, as I have already stated, and the Mexicans evacuated Texas in pursuance of its provisions, retiring to the West side of the Rio del Norte. This Treaty was entered into by the Government of Mexico de facto, Santa Ana combining in his own person at that time all the powers of the Government, and as such was binding on the Mexican nation.

Mr. John Quincy Adams. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if Santa Ana was not a prisoner of war at the time, and in duress, when he executed that Treaty?

Mr. Douglass, in reply. Santa Anna was a prisoner of war at the time, and so was the entire government of Mexico, he being the government de facto, and clothes with all the powers of government, civil and military. The government was a prisoner at the time, and in duress. But will it be contended that that circumstance rendered its obligation less obligatory? We are now at war with Mexico. Our armies will soon march into the heart of that country. I trust they will penetrate as far as the capital, and capture the army, people and government—make them all prisoners of war, and keep them in duress until they shall conclude a treaty of peace and boundary with us, by which they shall not only recognise the Rio del Norte, but such other line as we shall choose to dictate or accept. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts contend that a treaty made with us under those circumstances would not be binding, because, forsooth, the government was a prisoner at the time? How is a conquered nation ever to make peace, if the gentleman’s doctrine is to prevail? They refuse to make peace before they are conquered, because they hope for victory. They are incompetent to do so afterwards because they are in duress! Surely an unfortunate and defeated belligerent would be in a most lamentable condition. Too imbecile to resist, disarmed, conquered, still incompetent to make a treaty of peace, and adjust the matter in dispute on such fair and equitable terms as a magnanimous foe shall propose, because the war of aggression which they commenced has resulted disastrously, and made them captives! I fear that if this doctrine shall prevail, these gentlemen will soon find their Mexican friends in a most pitiable condition. Perhaps, if that government should be reduced to captivity, these gentlemen would require that our armies should retire within our own territory, and set the government at liberty, before negotiations for peace could be opened. This may be their view of the subject, but I doubt whether it is the view which the American government or the American people will deem it their duty to act upon. Our crude notions of things may teach us that the city of Mexico would be the most suitable place to form a treaty of peace.

Mr. Adams. Has not that treaty with Santa Ana been discarded by the Mexican government since?.

Mr. Douglass. I presume it has, for I am not aware of any treaty or compact which that government ever entered into that has not either been violated or repudiated by them afterwards. And our treaty stipulations with them furnish ample ground for this presumption. I have not deemed it necessary to inquire, therefore, what particular acts of disavowal have been since adopted by the Mexican government. It is sufficient for my purpose that the treaty was entered into and sanctioned by the government de facto for the time being. The acts of a government de facto are binding on the nation as against foreign nations, without reference to the mode in which that government was established, whether by revolution, usurpation, or rightful and constitutional means.

Mr. Adams. I deny it—I deny the proposition.

Mr. Douglass. I do not intent to enter into a discussion of the law of nation with the learned gentleman from Massachusetts. I will only say that I understand all writers on the law of nations to lay down the principle as I have stated. Certainly the practice and usages of all civilized nations sanction it, of which history furnishes us innumerable examples. Mexico herself was nothing but as government de facto, in the strict legal sense of the term, at the time of the Texas revolution. She had revolted from Spain in 1821, and had successfully maintained her national existence; but her independence was not recognized by the mother country until December, 1836.—Yet we had recognized her existence as a government de facto in the meantime and had entered into treaties of commerce, as well as of boundary. These treaties were made with the existing government for the time being, whether a constitutional republic, a military despotism, or a dictatorship. We never pretended to inquire into the question whether the government had been rightfully formed or not; it was sufficient for our purposes that it was the existing government.
de facto. So it was with Texas. She became independent de facto in 1836, and we recognized her independence as such immediately afterwards; and so did England, France, and most of the great powers of the globe. All other nations formed treaties with her as a government de facto without inquiring who had been right and who in the wrong in her revolutionary struggle. We purchased Louisiana from Napoleon, a usurper at the head of a military despotism.—Does the gentleman deny the validity of the acts of the British Government during the times of Oliver Cromwell, because it was a mere government de facto, established in blood, in violation of the British constitution? Many of the most important treaties, affecting the destinies of Europe, were made with the British Government during that period. Who ever thought of denying their validity because they had been made by government de facto, which had been reared on the ruins of the British monarchy? The doctrine of the gentleman from Massachusetts is a novel one—it finds no sanction in the books, and no examples in history. The universal doctrine is, that the acts of the government de facto are binding upon the nation as against other nations, from the consequences of which it cannot release itself by a subsequent revolution. It is immaterial, therefore, whether Mexico has, or has not, since repudiated Santa Ana’s treaty with Texas. It was executed at the time by competent authority. She availed herself of all its benefits. By virtue of it, she saved the remnant of her army from total annihilation. Under it she was enabled to remove in peace and security all her soldiers, citizens and property beyond the Rio de Norte. The question is, had she a moral or legal right to repudiate it, after she had enjoyed all its advantages? But the right of Texas to the country West of the Nueces does not rest on this treaty and the preceding acts alone. She has had legal possession of, and exercised jurisdiction over it from that day to this. When the people of Texas assembled in 1836, to form the constitution of the republic, the inhabitants residing between the Nueces and the Rio del Norte had their representative there. James Powers, a citizen and resident of that part of Texas, was a delegate in that convention. Colonel Renny, formerly a citizen of my own State, has for many years resided West of the Nueces, and represented that county in the Texan Congress. He was a member of the convention which formed the constitution of the State of Texas, preparatory to her admission into the Union, and is now a member of the Senate of that State. Besides all these facts, Texas has had counties organised, and courts established there for years, and has successfully maintained her jurisdiction, not only against the Comanche Indians, but against all the marauding parties that Mexico has been able to send across the Rio del Norte.

There is still another item of information which I can give the gentleman, to show that Mexico has, at a recent date, recognised the Rio del Norte as the boundary. The members of the last Congress will recollect that much was said in debate on the Treaty and resolutions for the annexation of Texas, about an armistice which had been entered into between Texas and Mexico, for the cessation of hostilities. The proposition was proposed and accepted; and in the proclamation of the President of Mexico announcing its existence, the Mexican troops were directed to retire from Texas to the West bank of the Rio del Norte, and did so in pursuance of that armistice. Here we find a clear and unequivocal recognition of the Rio del Norte as the boundary by Mexico as late as 1843. What stronger evidence could we have of the establishment of a boundary line than this train of facts, reaching back as far as 1835, and all tending to two points—first, that Texas has always claimed the country West of the Nueces, and exercised jurisdiction over all sections of it occupied by her people—and secondly, that Mexico has, on all occasions, recognized the Rio del Norte as the boundary?.

Mr. Adams. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the last Congress did not pass a law regulating commerce and trade to the foreign province of Santa Fe?

Mr. Douglass. I believe there was an act passed regulating trade between Independence, Mo., and Santa Fe. I do not now recollect its exact provisions. Nor is it important, inasmuch as that was before Texas was annexed to this Union. Of course Santa Fe was foreign to us at that time, whether it belonged to Texas or Mexico. But as the venerable gentleman from Massachusetts has called my attention to an act of Congress which he supposes bears upon the point at issue, I will reciprocate the compliment by asking his attention to one for which he voted at the present session. Will that gentleman inform us why he voted at the present session of Congress for a bill establishing a collection district in Texas, and in it included the country between the Nueces and the del Norte, and in the bill itself provided for the establishment of a port of delivery west of the Nueces, and the appointment of a surveyor of the port to reside there, and to superintend the execution of the United States revenue laws over the very country which he now asserts belongs to Mexico? The present Congress has passed such a law. It is now in force over the country in dispute, and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Adams, ) and if my recollection serves me right, every gentleman of this House who is now denouncing the President for sending the army there voted for that law. My friend from Ohio, who sits nearest to me, says that the gentleman from Massachusetts made a speech for it—a fact which had escaped my recollection. A surveyor at that port has been appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and, I am informed, has been engaged for some months in the performance of his duties under the law for which all these especial guardians of Mexican rights voted. Now, sirs, I ask in all fairness and candor, what right these gentlemen have to abuse the President for sending the army into that country to protect the lives of our citizens, after they had voted to take legal possession of it by the extension of our laws? They had asserted our right to the country by a solemn act of Congress; they had erected it into a collection district; the constitution required the President to appoint the officers, and see the laws faithfully executed. He has done so; and for this simple discharge of duty, under a law for which they voted, he is now denounced in the coarsest terms known to our language, as having done an act unholy, unrighteous, and damnable.

And this denunciation is endorsed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who, in 1819, declared that our title to the Del Norte was as perfect as to the island of New Orleans.

Mr. Adams. I never said that our title was good to the Rio del Norte from its mouth to its source.

Mr. Douglass. I fully understand the points of the gentleman’s denial. He denies that he claimed the Del Norte all the way to its source. I know nothing of his mental reservations. He claimed the Del Norte as the boundary, without specifying how far it extended up the river. He will not deny this fact, for I have the official evidence over his own
Mr. Adams. I wrote that despatch as Secretary of State, and endeavored to make out the best case I could for my own country, as it was my duty. But I utterly deny that I claimed the Rio del Norte in its whole extent. I only claimed it as the line a short distance up, and then took a line northward, some distance from the river.

Mr. Douglass. Was it above Matamoras?

Mr. Adams. I never specified any particular point.

Mr. Douglass. I have heard of this line to which the gentleman refers. It followed a river near to the gorge of the mountains; certainly more than 100 miles above Matamoras. Consequently, taking the gentleman on his own claim, the position occupied by General Taylor opposite Matamoras, and every inch of the ground upon which an American soldier has planted his foot, were clearly within our own territory as claimed by him in 1819. I am not now to be diverted from the real point at issue by tracing the line beyond which our army has marched. My present object is to repel the calumnies which have been uttered against our government for the purpose of putting our country in the wrong in the existing war. I have exposed these calumnies by reference to the acts and admissions of our accusers, by which they have asserted our title at least as high up as we have taken possession. The President had ordered the army no further than Congress had extended our laws. I have shown that the country in dispute has constituted one congressional election district in Texas since 1836; that its citizens engaged in the war of the revolution; that they participated in the convention which formed the constitution of the republic, and also the State constitution; that the same country is within a senatorial district for the State of Texas, and has a senator residing within it; that it forms a part of one of the districts for electing members to the Congress of the U. States; and that it is included in out revenue districts for the collection of tariff duties, and has officers of the customs residing within it.

In view of all these facts, I submit to the candor of every honest man whether the President did not do his duty, and nothing but his duty, when he ordered the army to the Rio del Norte. Should he have folded his arms, and allowed our citizens to be murdered, and our territory to be invaded with impunity? Have we not forborne to act offensively, until our forbearance is construed into cowardice, and is exciting contempt from those towards whom we have exercised our magnanimity? We have a long list of grievances—a long catalogue of wrongs to be avenged. The war has commenced, and he who is not on the side of our country, must necessarily be a traitor to it. I had trusted and hoped that there would be no anti-war party after war was once declared. But I am particularly mortified to see one of those who were ready to go to war for Oregon, arraigning himself on the side of the enemy, when our country is invaded on the southern side of the Union for our own country, and all its parts are one and indivisible. I would rally under her standard for the defence of one portion as soon as the other—the South as soon as the North—for Texas as soon as Oregon. And I will here now do my Southern friends the justice to say, that I firmly, and never doubted, that if war had arisen out of the Oregon question, when once declared, they would have stood shoulder to shoulder by me as firmly as I shall by them in this Mexican war. When the Oregon issue comes, I have no fears of the result.

Mr. Adams. I thought I understood the gentleman, some time ago, to be for 54 degrees 40 minutes, and to tell his Southern friends that he wanted no dodging on the Oregon question.

Mr. Douglass. Sir, I was for 54 deg. 40 min., and am as ready to fight for that line as the Del Norte. My patriotism is not of that kind which would lead me to go to war to enlarge one section of the Union out of mere hatred and vengeance towards the other. I know of no sections in this respect; and while I did complain of some of my southern friends on the Oregon question, I never doubted their patriotism when war was actually declared. But, since the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred to the Oregon question, I wish to call his attention to one of his wise sayings on that subject, and see if he will not apply it to Texas as well as Oregon. He told us that he went for the policy of the great Frederick in regard to Silesia. He was for taking possession first, and negotiating afterwards. Afterwards. According to the gentleman's own showing, that is precisely what Mr. Polk has done in regard to the country on the Del Norte. He certainly ought not to blame the President for acting over one of his own maxims. The President has taken possession, and has offered to negotiate, and gone so far as to send a minister to Mexico for that purpose. For this he is a bused also. He is condemned alike for using the sword and the olive branch. —His enemies object to his efforts for amicable adjustment as much as to the operations of the army. All is wrong in their eyes. Their country is always wrong, and our enemies in the right.--It has ever been so. so. It was so in the last war. Then it was unbecoming a moral and religious free people to rejoice at the success of our arms. We were wrong in their estimation in the French indemnity case—in the Florida war—in all the Indian wars, and now in the Mexican war. I despair of ever seeing my country again in the right, if they are to be the oracles. Mr. Douglass's hour here expired.

Mr. Washington Hunt asked why, if that was the case, this government had offered compensation for the grant of the Rio Grande as the boundary?.

Mr. Douglass did not know (he said) that such an offer had been made.

Mr. Hunt said the offer was made by Mr. Shannon.
Mr. Douglass said it was a secret that was not intrusted to the friends of the administration.

Mr. Hunt. Then the gentleman denies it?

Mr. Douglass. Certainly not. I know nothing about and care nothing about it. I neither deny nor affirm things as to which I have no knowledge. The gentleman from Massachusetts did not deny that we had some claim to the country west of the Nueces.

Mr. Adams. If the gentleman refers to me, I deny the fact.

Mr. Douglass. I can prove it, sir, from the gentleman’s words, though they are not in his hand-writing, being in print. In his letter to Don Onis, he says: "We might Mr. Monroe and Mr. Pinkney assert that our title to the Rio Grand del Norte was as good as to the Island of New Orleans;" and this assertion the gentleman not only made but proved by a great number of authorities. The gentleman from Massachusetts had said, in relation to Oregon, that he would take possession first and negotiate afterwards; and he would certainly not now blame Mr. Polk for following his advice in regard to Mexico.

Mr. Adams here made a remark, intimating that he was afraid the President would give up Oregon.

Mr. Douglass hoped, he said, for the best. He stood out for the whole, and believed that we should get it; and if for no other reason, because the British title had been demonstrated so clearly here that the demands based upon it would not be acceded to by the American Congress. But whatever become of Oregon he would stand by Mexico, and he believed his country to be in the right.

The gentleman from Ohio has spoken of the expense of war. He (Mr. D.) was not cold-blooded enough to sit down and count the money which it might cost; nor would it be of any use, because we were now in the war. The object in holding out an exaggerated idea of the expense of the war was to destroy the credit of the country, and to paralyze its efforts. For the same reason it was denounced as an unholy and damnable war.

Mr. Payne here asked whether the money which had been appropriated for the object was not already in the treasury?

Mr. Douglass said there was money enough in the treasury to meet the present emergency.

Mr. Payne said he so understood it, and he wished the fact to be known to the country.

IMPORTANT NEWS!
MATAMORAS DESTROYED!
700 Mexicans Killed!
GEN. TAYLOR AT POINT ISABEL!!!

By this morning’s Southern mail we have received late and important news from the Army, which we hasten to lay before our readers in a second edition.

From the New Orleans Picayune Extra, May 11.Important from the Rio Grande—General Taylor at Point Isabel—Attack on his Camp—Repulse of the Mexicans, and Destruction of Matamoras!

The steamship New York, Captain Windle, arrived in port on Sunday evening, having left Brasos Santiago the afternoon of Wednesday, the 6th instant. Her news is important, and of the most gratifying description.

Our last previous accounts came down to Wednesday the 29th ult. Captain Walker, of the Texas Rangers, having come into Point Isabel on the evening of the 28th ult., from his desperate encounter with the Mexicans, had volunteered to carry despatches to General Taylor. We now learn by the New York, that in that desperate attempt—so desperate as to be thought fool hardy—he fully succeeded. General Taylor learned from him the critical situation in which Point Isabel was placed, and the imminent danger of its being carried by an overpowering force of the Mexicans. He promptly determined upon a movement which should protect Point Isabel, and re-establish his communication with his supplies. Accordingly the evening of Friday, the first instant, he left his camp, opposite Matamoras, with the main body of his forces, determined to cut his way through, leaving behind him for the defence of the works, opposite Matamoras, between 700 and 800 troops.

This movement of General Taylor upon Point Isabel was effected without encountering a single Mexican. In place of molesting him, they concentrated their troops about the camps which he had just left.
On the morning of the 3d. Gen. Taylor despatched Capt. Walker back to the Camp for intelligence. The gallant Ranger executed his commission with success, returning to Point Isabel the afternoon of the 5th. He reported that the Mexicans, taking advantage of the supposed weakness of the camp, commenced an attack up on it in front the morning of Sunday, the 3d, with all their batteries from the opposite side of the river, and simultaneously with a detachment of their forces on this side the Rio Grande, in the rear. The Americans hotly returned the fire.—The attack in the rear was immediately repulsed, and in less than thirty minutes the Mexican batteries were silenced, and the city of Matamoras battered down. The loss to the Mexicans in the action is variously set down. While no account makes it less than 200, the latest report in regard to it, which we find in the Galveston news, carries it as high as 700. The Americans lost but a single man, it is said, who was killed by a shell. None were wounded—so admirable was the state of the works before Gen. Taylor left them. The town of Matamoras is a complete ruin; there are scarcely houses enough left standing to serve as hospitals for the wounded.

The attack and repulse, however, is considered but the opening of the campaign. Cannonading was distinctly heard at times, down to the hour of the departure of the New York. General Taylor set forth on the 6th instant to return to his camp with ample supplies. The Galveston News states that when he left Point Isabel, there was not the slightest doubt entertained that he would have to cut his way to his entrenchments through vastly superior numbers of the enemy, who were known to be posted in large forces among the almost impassable thickets of chaparral on the road, with a determination to cut him off, if possible, in his attempt to regain his other forces. The number of the Mexicans is entirely vague and uncertain, though all the statements agree in estimating them at not less than ten thousand, while many accounts put their number at 15 or 20 thousand. All accounts agree also in stating that the Mexican forces were rapidly flocking in from all quarters. How many crossed the river could not be told, though the News thinks it would be reasonable to presume that a large part of their forces would be brought into requisition to dispute the march of General Taylor. They could not but see the importance of cutting him off, and would doubtless employ all their advantages of local knowledge, skill in horsemanship, and all their acknowledged resources in stratagem to accomplish their object. Gen. Taylor anticipated a formidable and desperate opposition to his march, but determined to accomplish it or perish.

Thus reasons the News, and accordingly anticipates intelligence of a decisive general action. We are greatly inclined to doubt whether the Mexicans would venture to attack Gen. Taylor’s whole force, although they so outnumber him; but should they do so we are confident that we shall have a glorious victory to recount.—One account before us states, however, that Gen. Taylor had not left Point Isabel, and probably would not leave there before the arrival of further re-inforcements, he having full confidence in the ability of the troops left in camp to maintain their position against any odds.

The arrival of the New York at Point Isabel was most opportune. It will be recollected that she had nearly 200 regular troops on board, under Lieut. McPhail, as well as several field pieces. These were all safely landed. Even without the arrival of further reinforcements, the post at Point Isabel must have been so strengthened as to place its safety beyond reasonable doubt. Martial law has been proclaimed there and at Santiago, and every man pressed into the service. But ere this, further support has reached Point Isabel from this city and Pensacola.

The accounts from Texas in regard to volunteers are by no means satisfactory. The greatest apathy seems to prevail throughout the country.

Col. Hays, of the Rangers, with his force of about 400 men stationed in the San Antonio country, determined to march at once for Gen. Taylor’s camp, as soon as he learned that it was in a critical situation, not would it surprise us to hear that Col. Harney, with his dragoons, had done the same thing.

While Gen. Taylor was at Point Isabel he despatched a schooner to Vera Cruz, with intelligence of the proceedings upon the Rio Grande. We presume that Com. Connor will at once formally blockade every Mexican port on the Gulf.

With great pleasure we see it mentioned in the Bulletin that the commander of the U. S. schooner Flirt having observed a small encampment of Mexicans on the island at the mouth of the Brazos Santiago, and knowing the great danger of the point at the entrance of the harbor being in possession of the Mexicans, landed with his men and dispersed the camp. The reader will recollect that the utmost fear was felt that the Mexicans might fortify a position here which would command the approach to Point Isabel.

The steamship Alabama left Galveston on the morning of Saturday, the 9th, about twelve hours after the new York, and arrived early Monday morning. She brings nothing whatever later from the Rio Grande, there having been no further arrival from Brazos Santiago.

Since our last publication the Telegraph and James L. Day have left with troops for Brazos Santiago. The Galveston got off on Saturday night, before midnight; the Telegraph followed the next morning; and James L. Day left at about 2 o’clock this morning. Upon these boats the several companies of the Washington Regiment, under Col. J. B. Walton, and one company of Col. Marks’ “Jackson Regiment” have taken passage.

RE46v43i6p2c1, May 19, 1846: No Title.

An extra from the New Orleans Bulletin says: Capt. Walker. Of the Texian Rangers, who, it will be remembered, gallantly offered to carry communications from Point Isabel to Gen. Taylor, succeeded in his desperate enterprise.

"Gen. Taylor immediately on being made acquainted with the condition of affairs, determined with a part of his army to march to Point Isabel, and accordingly on the evening of the 1st, left his intrenchments with from a thousand to twelve hundred men, cavalry, artillery and infantry.

He arrived at Point Isabel on the morning of the 2nd, without having encountered a single Mexican. On the morning of the 3rd, having heard the firing of artillery in the direction of Matamoras, Capt. Walker was again dispatched immediately to ascertain the cause.

This brave man again succeeded in reaching the camp, and on his return on the 5th reported that the Mexicans finding Gen. Taylor absent from his camp and his forces divided, took the opportunity to open their battery at Matamoras on the camp, and those on the eastern bank of the Rio Grande, at the same time made an attack in the rear.

The four gun battery in our camp was immediately opened upon Matamoras. The Mexican battery was silenced in thirty minutes, a number of the houses in Matamoras destroyed, and the enemy of the American side of the river compelled to return.

But one American and none wounded. What number of the enemy was killed or wounded, is not known to any degree of certainty. It is reported that 700 were killed, and that a sufficient number of houses were not left standing in Matamoras to afford shelter to the wounded.

Tuesday Morning, May 19, 1846.

We had hoped that the news received on Saturday of the defeat of the Texas Rangers, under the intrepid Capt. Walker, would have produced in the bosom of no man any other feeling than sorrow for the fate of the brave fellows, and anxiety for the threatened safety of Point Isabel. – But we were disappointed. The following article in yesterday’s Republican shows that that paper seized the melancholy intelligence as a fit subject for coarse jesting and unjust assaults upon the American Government:

"By the Southern mail of Saturday, we learned that Capt. Walker’s company of 75 men, who had volunteered and were on their way to join Gen. Taylor, had been cut to pieces, the captain and four men only surviving to arrive at Point Isabel. These are the ripe fruits that stupid military order which sent General Taylor to the banks of the Rio Grande, to plant his cannon in the very suburbs of a Mexican city, without any reserve or military support, with nothing to fall back upon, and with no safe means of communication from any source of supplies of men and provisions. As a specimen of generalship, it entitles the Duck River Colonel to a second term as commander-in-chief of the land and naval forces of the United States; and as to Mr. Secretary of War Marcy, he deserves the distinction of at least having a new pair of breeches, in addition to having the old ones patched.”.

"It is true it may be said, that no one thought Gen. Taylor’s position so hazardous, until facts demonstrated it to be so! – But the ready answer is, that people at large gave no thought, and had no reason to think anything about military positions. They expected all the consideration, and care, and skill necessary, from those to whom these Can any object of party justif... at a time when our fellow citizens are coming forward and offering their services to the Executive, what excuse can there be in a party journal attempting to run down our government in the eyes of our people? If such assaults have any influence with it's own party friends, if in making them believe that the President and the Secretary of War are such contemptible personages as the republican strives to make them out, will not this party movement have the natural effect of cooling the patriotic ardor of those who have volunteered their services in the cause of their country? All must admit the mischief and injustice of such a proceeding – all must condemn such ill timed jests and attempts at ridicule, when war is raging on our frontier, and when it is of vital importance that parties should sleep, and that every heart should beat with patriotic emotions for the cause. At the present moment, to ridicule and assail the Government who have destines of the nations in it's hands, it is but little better than to damp the ardor of the people and cripple the power of the nation. When our gallant soldiers shall have achieved a glorious victory, and when peace once more reigns throughout the land, party journals and orators may arraign the Administration, and the nation will pass judgment. But it is far from a patriotic course to condemn the Executive at this time, when all it's energies and moral force are required to bring the war to a speedy and satisfactory termination.

It is scarcely necessary to refute the sweeping and unfounded charges brought by the Republican against the administration. When the facts shall have been weighed by the people, we feel convinced that they will triumphantly sustain the Executive for what is now denounced by the Whig press as an unpardonable sin, viz: the moving the army to Rio Grande. A few words will be sufficient to blow up this Whig babble.

For fifteen years we have submitted to every species of indignity and insult on the part of Mexico. The lawful claims of our citizens have been repudiated, and some of our citizens have actually been incarcerated. Mexico has wantonly violated her treaty stipulations. stipulations. She has driven one of our ministers out of the country and refused to receive another, though she had thereto solemnly pledged her faith. We bore all these insults and injuries with remarkable forbearance and charity. Conscious of our own strength and right on our side, we have conceded much to her weakness and imbecility. But when this last and crowning insult was offered to us – when our own ambassador, who had been by herself invited to negotiate, was indignantly refused, a moment had arrived for decided, yet calm and moderate action. Not until the rejection of Mr. Slidell did the American army take up it's position upon our own territory, on the banks of the Rio Grande – and then with strict orders to make no attack upon Mexican soil, but simply to protect our own from invasion. Mexico had at divers times put forth the most violent proclamations of her intention to cross the river and win back, by blood, the whole of Texas, which had been, as she said, so wrongfully wrested from her. Was it not our duty then, to march up to the very line of our boundary and defend our soil and the lives and property of the people of Texas, our own fellow citizens? Suppose the President had, after all the threats and movements of Mexico, kept the army quiet, and allowed the Mexican forces to overrun and take possession of the Texan soil, would not the Whig press have poured out ceaseless denunciations of his want of energy and foresight? He could do nothing else but order the army to the Rio Grande, there to remain at peace and in quiet, to make no attack upon the soil or the citizens of Mexico, but solely to guard our own from invasion. Can any one blame for thus having discharged his simple duty?

But, say the Whig presses, he deserves reprobation for marching so small an army and placing it in so unfortunate a position. Not only the Secretary of War, but Gen.Worth, one of the most intelligent and skillful officers of our army, that the army was safe, that only a few days before the commencement of hostilities, he left for Washington city, sanguine that all was right.- Moreover, to make assurance doubly sure the President fully authorized Gen. Taylor to make a requisition upon the adjoining States for volunteers, provided he found that the force under his command was insufficient to protect our own soil. Had he at once ordered to the Rio Grande a large force, say 10,000 men, how loudly and violently would he have been assailed by the Whig presses for his folly and extravagance, and for the basest personal motives, to be attained by a fierce and extended war! Take it in any view, the administration have managed the affair with all the efficiency and prudence which the peculiar circumstances of the case justified.

But are the disasters, which occurred in the beginning, really ascribable to the location and weakness of our army on the Rio Grande? In any event, the Mexicans would, doubtless, have crossed the river and the same partial, though painful losses, might have occurred.

The lamented deaths of Cross, Porter and the other brave soldiers occurred in their small scouting parties, and is the President, 3,000 miles off to be held responsible for them?.

The cheering news received yesterday morning of the brilliant result of the first great blow struck by Gen. Taylor and his army, show that he is able to meet the crisis. "The War.—The Course of the United States—In a national point of view, it is impossible to suggest anything more appropriate, patriotic and consistent as adapted to the present emergency, growing out of our disturbed relations with Mexico, than the course pursued by the President, and Congress of the United States. The disposition of that man is something more than querulous—it is mischievous—who cannot unite in the warmest commendation of that prompt, vigorous, and decisive action of the executive and legislative authorities of the nation, whereby it is proposed to relieve and succor our gallant little army in the South, and prosecute the war into which the United States has been reluctantly—for certain honorable reasons—reluctantly inveigled. War was in existence; and not to recognise the fact would have been to peril every thing, and render the restoration of peace a much less probable and more remote event than it is now likely to be. The message of the President is a document eminently calculated to enhance and confirm the public confidence in his individual capacity and self reliance so essential as qualifications for the chief magistracy of this republic; while the dignity of style, patriotism, resolution and philanthropy of purpose which characterize it, are honorable to the nation as well as the man. The liberal provision and promptitude of Congress, in reporting and adopting the war bill, also challenge the admiration and approbation of all classes of our fellow citizens. Such action as this at the head of the government is always desirable, to give tone and unanimity to that ardent public feeling which must inevitably develop itself throughout this Union, whenever the tidings of invasion and bloodshed penetrate the public ear. And with such unanimity of feeling and purpose throughout the departments of the Government, and all the ramifications of society, war will be relieved of its repulsiveness, its progress will be effectual and expeditious, and its termination successful and speedy."

The most animated movements are going on at New Orleans. The detachment of the U.S. Infantry lately arrived from Jefferson Barracks, under command of Lieut. Col. Wilson, and Captain J. Stockton’s and Capt. Tobin’s companies of volunteers belonging to the Washington Regiment, left the Barraeks on the evening of the 9th in the steamship Galveston for Point Isabel.—Five more companies of volunteers—the Orleans Cadets, Captain Glenn; Old Hickory Riflemen, Capt. Bryce; Kentucky Volunteers, Capt. R.C. Stockton; Louisiana Greys, Capt. Breedlove, and Orleans Guards, Capt. Breeding, and Orleans Guards, Capt. Soniat—numbering altogether some 400 men, also left on the steamship Telegraph for Point Isabel. Altogether about 800 men, regulars and volunteers, went in the Galveston and Telegraph. Three other companies started on the same day in the steamer James L. Day, viz: the Clinton Guards, the Washington Guards, and the Orleans Invincibles. They were expected to reach Point Isabel about the 13th instant. The Johnson Guards, 93 strong, a fine looking set of fellows, have arrived at N. Orleans from East Feliciana. Other parishes are expected to move in the same spirit. In addition to the two companies of Infantry which have volunteered from East Feliciana, 200 men have enrolled in a Regiment of Mounted Gun-men, under Gen. Lafayette Saunders, who intends to raise 1000 men to rendezvous at Alexandria, and proceed overland via Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande. General S. is an old campaigner, and served under Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans, being then a member of Gen. Coffee’s brigade. This description of troops did efficient and gallant service in the last war, and in the Creek nation, and will answer admirably in the Mexican campaign. Very nearly 2000 volunteers have been mustered into service at New Orleans, and volunteering is still going on with unabated interest. It is thought that it will not be necessary to resort to a "draft." As some evidence of the glorious spirit which animates the gallant Louisianians, we refer to the two additional members of the House of Representatives of Louisiana, Messrs. Ogden of Rapides, and Regan of Caldwell, who have obtained leave of absence, and have volunteered to join the army on the Rio Grande. As far as they are concerned, the adage is true, "Inter arma silent leges."

Mississippi, too, is wide awake. Natchez is about to put forth her strength—and Vicksburg has offered her two gallant companies of the “Southrons” and "Volunteers," which we have often admired as almost equal to the fine volunteer companies of our own city.

But we cannot begin to keep up with the movements in every section of the country. Public meetings are held in every direction—patriotic sentiments and pledges are freely given, and Europe will see, with astonishment if not pain, that when danger calls, any number of citizen soldiers can be mustered into service.

RE46v43i6p2c6, May 19,1846: Military Arrangements.

As everything connected with the Mexican campaign will be read with deep interest, we lay before our readers all the items on the subject we can gather. The following from the Union proves that the Administration will adopt the promptest, fullest and most vigorous measures to meet the crisis. The appointment of Gen. Scott to the command of the Southern Army is eminently wise and proper. He may be looked for every day on his way to the scene of action. Some important intelligence is furnished in regard to the probable disposition to be made of the Volunteers who have tendered their services.

"During the week the most active preparations have been made to give effect to the measure of Congress for a vigorous prosecution of the war with Mexico. We do not doubt that the large discretion given to the President will be found to be in safe hands. While the public may rest assured that the utmost care will be used to consult economy, and to secure a force competent to the protection of the national honor, and to a speedy termination of the war, we do not apprehend that half the authorized number of troops will be immediately mustered into service. True economy and a due regard to the highest national interests, however, make it indispensable that a force shall be at once put into active service, extraordinary for us in point of numbers, and so large that officers of the highest rank will of necessity be in command. From the mixed character of the corps – partly of regular troops, and more largely of volunteers – it seems natural that the General-In-Chief of the army should take the field – and we presume that General Scott will, as a matter of course, assume the command.

“We understand that the volunteer troops to be immediately called into service will be taken from the States nearest to the scene of operations, and for them the necessary orders have been issued. Measures have also been taken to have the residue of the authorized force organized, to be called into the service of their country at the shortest notice, if the public exigencies require. We understand that portions will be called for from each State and Territory, so that an opportunity will be afforded to all her gallant sons to participate in the defense of their country. [BWP]

RE46v43i6p2c7, May 19, 1846: A Pregnant Admission.

The news received on Saturday opened the eyes of many of the Whigs who had assailed Congress for recognizing the existence of the war on the part of Mexico, and who dwelt with great emphasis upon the nice distinction between the "hostilities" and the "war." By the following passages in the in yesterday’s Whig, the leading Whig organ in Virginia, it will be seen that Congress and the President were not so far out when they declared that the war with Mexico actually existed. The wisdom of their course in striking a decisive and vigorous blow, and in showing to the world at large that we are ready, at a moment’s warning, to defend our soil and our honor, will be appreciated by the whole country: “These repeated assaults upon the American forces dissipate the doubt which had previously existed as to the real purpose of the Mexican commander in crossing the Rio Grande, and satisfy us of his deliberate purpose to BEGIN THE WAR long since threatened the Mexican Executive – a threat which had been treated with derision by all parties, as but another specimen of that braggart spirit characteristic of the people of that country, and which it was supposed would evaporate in words.”[BWP]

RE46v43i6p2c7, May 19, 1846: Twenty-Ninth Congress. Saturday, May 16.

The Senate was not in session to-day. House of Representatives.

Mr. Daniel, of N.C. moved a suspension of the rules to enable him to offer a resolution to make it one of the standing rules of the House, that upon any vote being taken in Committee of the whole and no quorum voting, the Clerk shall call the role and the members answer aye, or no which vote shall be recorded as the vote of the Committee, and the Clerk shall make out a list of the absentees and certify the same to the Speaker, who shall deduct from the pay of said absent members the sum of $8 for every vote so taken, unless a satisfactory excuse be given.

The House refused to suspend the rules – Ayes 72, Noes 70 – two thirds being required for that purpose.

A message from the Senate disagreeing to the amendment of the House to the bill to raise a regiment of riflemen, which requires officers to be selected from the line of the army, was taken up, and a motion made that the House receded from its amendment, on which the previous question was demanded, and yeas and nays ordered.

The House receded from its amendment – Ayes 96, Noes 69.

Mr. King of Ga., on leave, offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the number of vessels in the Revenue service, number of officers, &c, was adopted.

Mr. C. J. Ingersoll offered a resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of the Message of the President in relation to Mexican and the accompanying documents.

Mr. Rathbun moved to amend the resolution so as to print 10,000 copies of the message and 3,000 of the documents.

The previous question was demanded an Mr. Ingersoll’s resolution and it was adopted, 72 to 42.

Mr. Brodhead offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of State to communicate to the House the sums paid to Benj. E. Green, late Charge to Mexico, and William M. Blackford late Charge to Bogata, respectively, and also copies of all accounts presented by them.

Mr. Adams moved to amend by adding to the resolution ”specifying what items have not been allowed,” and as amended, the resolution was adopted.
The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Foote of Vt, in the Chair, and took up the private calendar, which consumed the remainder of the session.

RE46v43i6p3c1, May 19, 1846: By Last Evenings Mail.

Maj. Gen. Scott did not arrive last evening as was expected, on his way to take command of the Army. He will probably be here to-day.

The Baltimore Sun says:

"Gen. Scott has been appointed to the command of the army of occupation in Texas, with orders to proceed immediately to the scene of war. The is to consist of 30,000 men, that number to be at once ordered to join the American forces now under Gen. Taylor; the whole being subject to the command of General Scott."

A gentlemen just from Washington informed us that Gen. Perry has been appointed to the command of the Fleet in the Mexican Gulf – Com. Conner having been placed over the Ordnance Department; and that it is most probable that none of the Volunteers from the Atlantic States will be sent at present to Texas. They will be received and disciplined, and held ready for action.

The insurance offices insert a war clause against Mexico alone. They ask three percent on insurance against Mexican privateering. This our merchants decline submitting to, especially those running vessels direct to Europe; and those engaged in the West India trade, &c, say it will be cheaper to arm their vessels for self-defense.

The New York pilots just informed me that they have addressed a letter to the President, offering their whole corps and marine force to the service of the government, consisting of the following material – thirteen boats, eighty pilots, and seventy sailors to cruise in the Gulf of Mexico or elsewhere. Hurrah for the Jack tars, they are the boys. It is said they offered their services to Gov. Tompkins during the late war. The American feeling is up, and no mistake. So look out for hard knocks and severe squalls. (NewYork correspondent of the Union.)

RE46v43i6p4c1, May 19, 1846: Twenty-Ninth Congress. Debate on the War Bill.

In yesterday’s Enquirer, we gave quite a lengthy report of the proceedings in the Senate on Tuesday last, on the War Bill. The remarks, however, of several Senators, were necessarily omitted. We now proceed to supply the omission:

Mr Benton thought that for purposes of information, it would be proper to read a paragraph from a recent proclamation of the President of Mexico ad interim. Mr. B. then read an extract from a proclamation of the 21st March, in substance, that the President of Mexico had no power to declare war, but the commander of the Mexican army had been directed to take a position in which he would be able to repel invasion, and to take the initiative, (ie., strike the first blow,) and to roll back the injury with which they had been threatened; their intention was merely to defend themselves. Mr. Benton remarked that he had read this extract for the purpose of showing that the door was apparently open for a peaceful termination of the existing state of things. So far as he could see, the government of Mexico had not created war. Hostilities had broken out, but the door was not closed against a peaceful issue.

Mr. Clayton said he certainly drew the same inference from the portion of the proclamation read by the Senator which he had deduced. Hostilities were not necessarily war. There was no treatise on the law of nations, which did not recognise the distinction. Hostilities, such as defensive operations, did not amount to war. Reprisals were not war unless general. Measures of defense were not war. However, he did not make these remarks with a view to prejudge this great question whether there was or was not war. All he desired, as he had said again and again, was to obtain time for deliberation on that question, and the man who voted with him did not affirm that there was not war. In order to ascertain the sense of the Senate, he would move to strike out the words "prosecute said war to a speedy and successful issue," and make it read "that for the purpose of enabling the government of the United States to repel the invasion, the President is hereby, “ &c. If that motion were successful, he would follow it up by another, so as to make the bill what he desired.

Mr. Calhoun rose and said, that he now appealed to the Senate if there was a man who could believe upon the only document which they had – how authentic he knew not – that there existed war between the two countries? Even if the two Presidents had declared war, the nations could disavow the act; and he called upon the Senate to
Mr. Houston then rose and said, that he did not wish to trespass on the time of the Senate; but he rose simply for the purpose of expressing his apprehensions in relation to their position with regard to Mexico. He contended that they were actually in a state of war; that war had virtually existed for ten years between Mexico and Texas; that Texas had been annexed in the face of a declaration on the part of Mexico that she would regard it as an act of war. The United States; in annexing Mexico, had assumed the responsibility not legible.

The United States, he argued, now occupied toward Mexico precisely the same attitude which the state of Texas had maintained for the last 10 years. On his conscience he could not resist the conviction that war actually existed. He then went on to point out the folly and danger of delaying proper action till the question as to a formal declaration of war should be decided. That might be discussed for months in that chamber, whilst their troops, exposed to all the rigors of a Southern climate, were doomed to inactivity, and daily wasting away. He eloquently contended that Mexico should be chastised at once for her outrages and insolence and showed that Mexico had the right to the territory on this side of the Rio Grande, that she held no post on it, and that the invasion was evidently sanctioned by the Mexican Government . . . [illegible] . . . and habitual deception he warned the Senate. He did not regard the Mexican government as a systematic political organization at all. All. Were they to wait for the action of that government as though it were regularly consistent? Not at all. The Mexican people were kind, generous and hospitable, but they were ruled with a redhot iron, by a set of tyrants, brigands, usurpers and land pirates. This people, if left to themselves, would never desire nor go to war with this country. The men who are brought into the field against the United States would rather stay at home, and it was not they but their drivers, who had offered insult to American citizens and indignity to the American flag. The Mexicans, then, had committed aggressions under order of their rulers, and he would ask, if they had not produced a state of things in which war was as perfectly existing as it would be after its declaration by that honorable body? The declaration by Texas of war was clear and emphatic, and her action was correspondent; and the question now was, whether the Senate of the United States would sustain them. He did not wish to waste time of the Senate, but he could not omit giving his opinion that war existed. He would vote for the bill.

Mr. Magnum arose and said, the evidence given by the Senator from Texas, in the course of his remarks, of the existence of war, was not the American idea, nor did it agree with the views taken by Senators, in the debates which occurred in the second session of the Congress of the United States; and it seemed not to be the idea of those who held political power in this country now. It would be recollected well, that in the discussions on the Texas question, there was nothing which seemed, in the opinion of that body, as so much to be repudiated and shunned, as the most distant possibility of this country being involved in war through annexation. And, he apprehended, it was not the opinion of the Mexican Government. He thought the proclamation which had been translated by the honorable Senator from Missouri (Mr. Benton) was conclusive on the point. Did not the head of the Mexican Government assume that there was peace between the two countries? He disclaimed the power of the Executive head to put Mexico into a state of war with the United States, and refers to the assembling of Congress as that period when war as to be declared. With the views of the Senate, then, he had offered those of the Mexican Government, to which might be added the opinions of the highest political characters in the nation, that war had not existed by virtue of those acts of hostility committed on the Rio Grande - The question, then, was reduced to the injury, whether, from the existence of that state of hostility, as far as they had evidence of it, they were to admit an existence of a state of war. There was no need of repeating that war was the emanation of the will of the sovereign power. He would thank the chairman of the committee on foreign relations to say in what document (for he of course had read them all) was the evidence contained that the sovereign power of Mexico had assented to a state of war. If there was any doubt as to be declared. With the views of the Senate, then, he had offered those of the Mexican Government, to which might be added the opinions of the highest political characters in the nation, that war had not existed by virtue of those acts of hostility committed on the Rio Grande. - The question, then, was reduced to the inquiry, whether, from the existence of that state of hostilities, as far as they had evidence of it, they were to admit the existence of a state of war. There was no need of repeating that war was the emanation of the will of the sovereign power. He would thank the chairman of the committee on foreign relations to say in what document (for he of course had read them all) was the evidence contained that the sovereign power of Mexico had assented to a state of war. If there was any such evidence, he (Mr. M) was uninformed of it. But, he had arisen for the purpose of asking his friend from Delaware to withdraw his motion to strike out and insert, because in that form the question was indivisible; but if it were drawn in the form "to strike out, " the modification might be in any form to suit the sense of the Senate. And he was frank enough to say, that although utterly repugnant to the thought of considering the country in a state of war, yet he was prepared, if it were thought expedient, that the Executive should determine the question; and if Mexico should make no denial by the Mexican Government of a state of war, that the Executive should act in that...
...an army under such circumstances. But suppose there should be a disavowal of...not readable...by the Mexican Government, in...[illegible]...should they place themselves by...not readable...the existence of war now, which would be to all intents and purposes a declaration of war. But if such a state of things as the want of a disavowal by Mexico, or a continuance of our relations as they are, then the American troops shall pass the boundary, and, if it be necessary, march to the seat of empire, and there dictate peace; and they were willing to provide money and men for that purpose. He hoped his honorable friend would withdraw his amendment; and if it should be the sense of the Senate to strike out, that it adopt some form to answer all purposes.

Mr. Clayton expressed his willingness to make the change suggested, if any gentleman on the other side wished it. If not, he would press the motion.

Mr. McDuffie said he considered it would be in order to strike out the pramble first. There was no rule of that or any legislative body which sought to prevent an amendment of any part of a bill. He thought it an important proposition, and it would have his vote. He would, however, move simply to strike out that part expressing a state of war between the two countries.

Mr. Clayton said that was the motion he had made.

Mr. Reverdy Johnson said he had not been able to examine the documents laid before Congress, and wished, therefore, to inquire whether the Mexican Government, in this correspondence with the United States, had not on several occasions declared that they would consider the annexation of Texas a declaration of war, and repeatedly declared that, in consequence of that act, they considered war as existing between the two Governments; and he was rather inclined to think that the Congress of Mexico, either before or since the annexation of Texas, had declared that it was a declaration of war. He was under that impression. He would like to have an opportunity to examine the documents. In the meantime, he would be happy to learn from the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether he was right in his opinion. At any rate, he did consider war existed de facto, and Government was bound to adopt all necessary measures, not only to repel invasion, but to carry on that war. It was not necessary, in his opinion, to declare war; but if it was, he would vote for a declaration under the existing state of things.

Mr. Cass said: I do not rise to detain the Senate long, nor to enter into any protracted discussion of the subject now under consideration. I have but little to say, and I shall say that speedily. In the first place, sir, I desire to answer the appeal which has been made to this side of the chamber by the honorable senator from Delaware, [Mr. J. M. Clayton.] He desires that portion of the bill which asserts the existence of a war between the United States and Mexico, brought on by the aggression of the latter, should be passed by for the present, and that we should now confine ourselves to a consideration of the measures necessary for the defence of the country. For my own part, I should be happy to take the course indicated by the senator from Delaware, and which he asks us to adopt, were I not prevented from doing so by higher considerations. If we appropriate money and raise men for the mere purpose of repelling an invasion, we place ourselves in the very position which the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Calhoun,] deemed yesterday the proper one, and to which I then expressed, and yet feel, insuperable objections. A Mexican army is upon our soil. Are we to confine our efforts to repelling them? Are we to drive them to the border, and then stop our pursuit, and allow them to find a refuge in their own territory? And what then? To collect again, to cross our frontier at some other point, and again to renew the same scenes, to be followed by the similar immunity? What sort of a condition of things would this be; sir? The advantage would be altogether on the side of the Mexicans, while the loss would be altogether ours. Their army is maintained at any rate, and it would cost them little more to renew and continue these border contests than to keep their troops in their cantonments, while we must spread troops along our border, and hold them in readiness to meet these invasions at whatever point they may be attempted. Now, sir, no vote of mine shall place my country in this situation. And besides these Mexican hostilities will not be confined to operations by land. Are we to suffer their privateers to spread themselves over the ocean, to capture our sailors and vessels, and to run in our commerce? This state of things. I, for one, am disposed to meet with promptitude and energy. Mexico has attacked the United States—has placed herself in a belligerent attitude. And now let her take the consequences of her own aggression. For these reasons, sir, while we provide for the defence of the country, I am for making the defence effectual by not only driving off the enemy, but by following them into their own territory, and by dictating a peace even in the capital, if it be necessary. But, sir, why does the honorable Senator from Delaware ask the separation, and request us to postpone our decision upon the relative condition of this country and Mexico, while we provide only for driving the invaders from our soil? He says, sir, that he desires time to examine the documents which the President has submitted to us, before he can decide whether there is a state of war between the United States and Mexico. I cannot conceive, sir, that any delay can be necessary for this purpose. The main facts are indisputable. They are before the Senate, before the country and before the world. A Mexican army has passed our boundary, and is now upon the soil of the republic. Our troops have been attacked, captured and killed. Our army is surrounded, and efforts are making to subdue them. Now, sir, no documents are necessary to establish these facts, and these facts, it seems to me, are all that can be necessary to justify the statement of the President of the existence of war, and our concurrence in his recommendation. If, indeed, the object be to examine the conduct of the Executive, to ascertain whether this condition of things is to be attributed to him, then, undoubtedly, a careful examination of the documents would be necessary. And from indications already given, I presume that such an investigation will be entered upon. For one I am prepared to enter into it, and I will venture to predict that the more severe it is, the more unreadable...for the administration will be the result. But that subject may well give way to...[illegible]...Let us postpone that inquiry till we are provided for the defence of the country and the vindication of our honor.—That course seems to me to be equally indicated by duty by policy, and by patriotism. And now, sir, permit me to advert to another branch of this subject. Strange doctrines have been heard yesterday and to-day, such as have been presented, neither by the history of our own country, not that of any other. Among those who oppose the course of the Executive, there seems to be an important difference of opinion on some of the principles which should regulate our conduct. By some it is contended that the invasion of the Mexican army is not an act of war, because we have no proof that it was committed by order of the Mexican Government. While others, and among them the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, maintain that no act of another country can create a state of war with this unless such war be declared by Congress.—Now, sir, it seems to me that this pretension is equally dangerous in its conclusions, and unsound in the reasoning by which it is supported. If I understood the honorable Senator yesterday, he considers there are three conditions in which our country may be placed with relation to another. A state of peace, of war, and of hostilities. This to me, sir, is a new division of the principle of intercommunication between different countries.

War I understand; and peace I understand, and the rights and duties which they bring with them. But a state of hostilities, as contradistinguished from these relations, is a new chapter in the law of nations to me. Our Constitution is equally silent upon the subject. I supposed, therefore, that if we were not at peace with a country we were at war with it. I had to learn that there was an intermediate state creating new rights and duties which I am afraid it will be difficult to find unless a new Grotius starts up upon the occasion. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Benton] has correctly stated that there may be war without hostilities, and hostilities without war. Belligerent operations may be temporarily suspended, and there may be acts of aggression, which may be called hostilities, which may be committed without the authority of a government. Rencontres, for instance, between ships-of-war, or predatory incursions across the boundary of a country. But there can be no hostilities undertaken by a government which do not constitute a state of war. War is a fact, Sir, created by an effort made by one nation to injure another.

One party may make a war though it requires two parties to make a peace. The Senator from South Carolina contends, that, as Congress alone have a right, buy the Constitution, to declare war, therefore, there can be no war until it is thus declared. There is here a very obvious error. It is certain that Congress alone have the right to declare war. war. That is, there is no other authority in the United States, which, on our part, can change the relations of peace with another country into those of war. No authority but Congress can commence an aggressive war. But another country can commence a war against us without the cooperation of Congress. Another country, at its pleasure, terminate the relations of peace with us, and substitute for these the relations of war with their legitimate consequences. War may be commenced with or without a previous declaration. It may be commenced by a manifesto announcing the fact to the world, or by hostile attacks by land or sea. The Honorable Senator from Virginia (Mr. Pennybacker) has well stated the modern practice of nations upon this subject. He has referred both to facts authorities showing that acts of hostility with or without a public declaration constitute a state of war. It was thus the war of 1756 was commenced. It was thus, I believe, was commenced the war between England and France during our revolution. The peace of Amiens was terminated by an act of hostility, and not by a public manifesto.

The capture of the Danish fleet was preceded by no declaration of the intentions of the British Government. Our own war of 1812 was declared on the 18th of June. The manifesto of the prince regent, declaring war against us was not issued until January 10th, 1813. And yet, long before that, our borders had been penetrated in many directions, an army had been subdued and captured, and the whole Territory of Michigan had been overrun and seized. All these facts prove conclusively that it is a state of hostilities that produces war, and not any formal declaration. Any other construction would lead to this practical absurdity. England, for instance, by an act of hostility, or by a public declaration announces that she is at war with us. If the view presented by the Honorable Senator from South Carolina is correct, we are not at war with her till Congress has acted upon the subject. One party then is at war, while the other is at peace, or, at any rate, in this new intermediate state of hostilities, before unknown to the world.

Now, Sir, it is very clear that Mexico is at war with us, we at war with her. If she terminates the peaceful relations between the two countries, they are terminated whether we consent or not. The new state of things thus created does not depend upon the will of Congress. The two nations are at war because one party has chosen to place them both in that attitude. But, Sir, it is contended by some of the Senators that, in the present case, there is no evidence that the invasion of our territory has been authorized by the Mexican Government; and until that authority is shown, the act itself does not constitute a state of war.

I have already said, Sir, that there may be accidental or unauthorized rencontres which do not therefore constitute war. The case of the "Little Belt" was of the description. But the nature and circumstances of an aggression sufficiently indicate its true character and consequences. A Mexican army invades our territory. The President calls upon Congress for the necessary means to repel and punish this act of aggression. And we are met forsooth at the very threshold of our proceedings, that it does not appear that this invasion has been committed by the authority of the Mexican Government. Why, Sir, what evidence is required under such circumstances? circumstances? Do you want such as is required by a County Court in investigating a claim for fifty dollars? Must we have a certificate from a justice of the peace of Mexico, that the President of the Republic has directed this attack upon our territory? And whatever evidence is required, how long are we to wait for it? How far may the invaders march before we are satisfied that we are at war with Mexico? Why, Sir, such a state of things must be judged by moral evidence, by the circumstances attending it. It might be enough to say, that the invasion itself throws the responsibility upon the Mexican Government and is a sufficient justification for us in holding that Government accountable. The negative proof is not upon us. The moral presumption is sufficient for our action. But, Sir, there is much more than the bare fact of invasion to justify the conclusion that we are at war with Mexico.

The Government of that country has protested ever since the first project of the annexation of Texas, and has announced its completion as a casus belli. They have withdrawn their minister from the United States, and broken all diplomatic relations with us. They have refused to recognise, and have treated with contumely our minister charged with full powers to adjust all matters in dispute, and whom they solemnly promised to receive. They have collected an army upon our frontier, and have sent to assume its command one of the first military officers in the republic. He summoned Gen. Taylor to retire, or that war would immediately commence. His summons being disregarded, he commenced the war by crossing in force into our territory, or by attacking our troops, and by surrounding our army. Now, sir, I appeal to every Senator on the other side of the chamber, if he does not believe that all this has been done by order of the Mexican government. I presume there is not a man within the sound of my voice, who will not say that, in his opinion, the Mexican general has acted under the direct instructions of the Mexican government. And
Mr. Berrien replied: If it were true, as had been stated by the Senator, that the destiny of this country for a century depended on this question, surely that was not by argument against due deliberation. It is too untruly presented today, to justify me in recording my vote in silence. If the bill provided for a declaration of war, the argument of the gentlemen might be quite pertinent and proper. But that is not the question. No declaration of war is proposed by the bill – It proposes to recognize the existence of an antecedent state of war. I oppose the bill, first, because inconsistent with the truth; and, secondly, because it involves consequences not to be properly hazarded by the exigency of the case. We are according to the bill, in a state of war without the constitutional action of either government. How then? then? Must it not follow that the President of the United States and the President of Mexico have power to declare war? Is that true? You have it from both the gentlemen (Messrs, Pennybacker, and Cass) that the power to declare war is vested in the Congress of both nations. They have failed in showing that any modification of the law of nations justifies their assertion that war does actually exist. There was no analogy in the case put by the Senator (Mr. Cass) of the bombardment of an English port by the United States fleet. We deny that war exists – we admit the existence of hostilities – the power that this Government to repel them. But whether those hostilities are the act of the Mexican nation, or even of the Mexican President, we are utterly uninformed. The Senator (Mr. Cass) states truly the law of nations with the regard to hostilities. They are to be repelled at once. A formal declaration of war is not necessary. necessary. Suppose the Mexican General did not act under the authority of the constituted authorities of Mexico; would war exist even on the supposition of the Senator from Michigan? Certainly not. But he says the Mexican army has crossed the boundary of the United States? Is he prepared to show that the Del Norte is the boundary?

Mr. Cass explained. His idea was, that the Mexicans had no right to attack the United States troops on that side of the river.

Mr. Berrien. The proposition of the Senator is, that war exists. How does he prove it? – Why, by the presence of a Mexican army around the United States army. Does he not thus decide the question of boundary? No. I beg to ask how that possession was acquired, and by whom? whom? It was by the march of the United States army into the territory. If conceding that it was a disputed territory, the right of Mexico was equal with that of the United States to enter the territory. If our possession was derived from marching our army there, cannot Mexico exercise the same right? Does priority in an act of hostility vest a national right? right? The argument of the Senator is, that the march of the Mexican army was an act of hostility. If so, I have demonstrated that the march of the United States army was an equal act of hostility. War does not then exist by an act of the constitutional authorities, in whose hands alone is the power to create war. In every aspect of the subject, the proposition of the Senator is unsustained, and we are not subject to the imputation of maintaining the ridiculous position, that we are not competent to stop at the Rio Grande, and refrain from repelling invasion. The question, whether the hostilities committed by the Mexican army against our army are to be repelled, is another and different question. I hold that there is nothing clearer, than that such invasion may be repelled by the most powerful means, by the pursuit of the invaders, and by all possible and necessary means to make the repulsion effectual, and for the purposes of chastisement.

A declaration of war is not necessary for the purpose of arming us with all necessary power to repel the invasion, and punish the aggression. If recognized by the Government of Mexico, then war does exist – if not, the hostility will have been committed by an officer of the Mexican army, and no war will exist between the two countries. Now I ask what will be the consequences of a recognition of a state of war? The Senator has alluded to the withdrawal of the Mexican minister, and the rejection of ours. But has not our commerce with Mexico been undisturbed? The presumption of the Senator then is refuted by the continuance of the discharge of the functions of our consuls – The rejection or withdrawal of a minister is no evidence of the existence of any war – it affords no presumption of such a state of war. But I was about to allude to the consequences of a recognition of a state of war. At once an end would be put to the subsisting treaties – Most conveniently for Mexico, the accumulated claims of our citizens would be obliterated; the property and lives of our citizens in Mexico would be at her mercy. It is said that Mexican privateers may be already on the seas. That cannot be, unless the hostilities have been recognized by the Government. The evidence thus far is otherwise. The Mexican Government will be answerable for every aggression upon our commerce, if made before a declaration of war. And for what are all these consequences to be incurred? Why that we may chastise the Mexican army, and Mexico in all her parts and portions if she avows the act. But in the absence of all evidence that his is the act of Mexico – with evidence looking the other way – it is proper, it is wise, it is justifiable in us to make a premature declaration that war does exist?

Mr. Westcott said had he been called upon to vote on this bill on yesterday, he believed he should have voted against it. But calm and cool reflection since then had convinced him it was his duty to vote for it. He did not entirely approve of the phraseology of the bill. This was, however, no time for verbal criticism. Immediate, prompt, decisive action was demanded. demanded. His objection to the bill was not that which had been urged. It was entirely different. He was not disposed (as this bill seemed to do) to throw upon Mexico the commencement of this war. He preferred that this government, instead of the declaration in this bill that "war existed" and "by the act of Mexico, “ should make an independent affirmative, positive, and unequivocal declaration of war against that Government. He felt assured that the past conduct of Mexico towards the United States, ever since Mexico had claimed to be a distant nation, if fairly exhibited to the civilized world would fully justify such declaration. Yes, Mr. President, (said Mr. W., ) if the soldiers of Mexico had not invaded Texas during the last month – if they had not murdered Colonel Cross – if they had not killed Lieutenant Porter – if they had not attacked Hardee and Thornton; nay, if her present rulers were now to apologize and atone for these acts, there is ample cause for our declaring war against her, to be found in her past courses towards us. Sir, we have been most forbearing towards Mexico. We have allowed our feelings, for a neighboring sister Republic, to restrain us from demanding and enforcing long ago reparation for her insults and outrages.
Mr. President, I coincide fully in the distinction maintained on yesterday by the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Calhoon] between mere hostilities and war, according to the meaning of the Federal Constitution. No hostilities can be recognised as war by this government, unless they have been declared by Congress to constitute war. I hold, too, that it is important this distinction should be maintained; as otherwise the acts of the Executive may create war, and the wise constitutional provision placing the power of declaring war exclusively in Congress will be a dead letter. I am, however, for Congress in this case exercising its constitutional power. power. As I have before said, I should, after calm deliberation on the subject, prefer an affirmative, unequivocal declaration of war; but I am not disposed to be fastidious as to the mode. I should prefer a manifesto, stating our grievances to the world. But I care not if the military chief who has usurped the reins of power in Mexico – I care not if its congress should disavow the acts of Gen. Ampudia and Arista – if it should disgrace and punish these officers for their recent acts in the State of Texas – still, causes which would weigh with me as sufficient to justify this declaration, were not removed. Doubtless her rulers are instigated by the emissaries of other governments inimical to us. Their influences cannot be concealed. They are manifest. They will not deter me in the least degree from pursuing the path that I believe the honor of my country requires me to follow.

Mr. W. said he was in favor of the declaration of war, because he did not believe that hostilities could be as efficiently, effectually and successfully carried on by the Executive without it as with it. I concur (said Mr. W.) in the opinions advanced on this point by the honorable Senator from Virginia, (Mr. Pennybacker)and other Senators.

Without it, and without the express authority of Congress, the President cannot issue commissions to privateers—issue letters of marque and reprisal—cannot authorize the blockade of the Mexican ports—cannot authorize the capture of the Mexican vessels on the high seas as prizes of war. Without such declaration, Mexicans taken in arms, after defeat in attacking our citizens or soldiers, cannot be held by the Executive authority as prisoners of war—treason in aiding all, without it the observance of the duties of other nations towards us, the duty of neutrality, so likely to be violated, could not be properly enforced. Without such declaration, Mexico may be supplied with arms, ammunition and munitions of war by other nations; and if captured, they would not be liable to forfeiture as ‘contraband of war.’ The declaration of war will in every way strengthen the Executive arm in this contest – at home, abroad, on the field of contest, and in these halls. It will increase the efficiency of the supplies of men and money we propose to give, three-fold. It will convince the world we are in earnest in this matter. Other nations may profit from the information.

The American people would not have submitted to the indignities they have patiently endured from Mexico, from any other Government on God’s earth. They would have risen as one man to repel them years since. This forbearance has emboldened Mexico to farther wrong. Her rulers have mistaken our sympathy for her difficulties and misfortunes, and our consideration of her weakness for pusillanimity! It is time they should be undeceived. The world has been imposed upon with respect to the true causes of difference between Mexico and the United States. The recent occurrences are but a drop in the bucket. Mexico has artfully sought to create the impression, that what she calls the “spoliation” of Texas, is the origin and cause of these difficulties. Sir, (said Mr. W.) before the Texas Revolution, she had outraged our flag in her own ports, and on the high seas in the Gulf. She had robbed and imprisoned our citizen; and even our diplomatic and consular agents in her jurisdiction, were outraged and insulted in a manner which, by the acknowledged laws of nations, afforded to us just cause for declaring war against her. But we forbore to resort to this mode of redress. We negotiated a Treaty with her, by which she engaged to indemnify our citizens. She plighted her faith as a nation to do them justice - to pay for her spoliations of their property and violation of their rights. Has she done so? No, Sir! No, Sir!! She has ignominiously violated her plighted faith to them and to this Government. She has dishonorably withheld the debt she engaged to pay for their benefit. The President, in his Message, states that these spoliations claims amount to upwards of 6,000,000 of dollars. I believe, Sir, that several millions of dollars would not indemnify those American citizens who have suffered from the wrongs and outrages of that Government. She ought in justice, pay that amount, and this Government should compel her to pay it. Without referring to her insults to our flag – the insults to our diplomatic consulate agents, or even the imprisonment of some of them and other American citizens, we can find in her course with respect the indemnity of these spoliations, and in the gross indignity cast in the teeth of the American people, in the treatment of its accredited minister (Mr. Slidell) this winter, after her invitation to send him, as all christendom will say, just cause for an affirmative declaration of war against her. Sir, said (Mr. W.) I am not for temporizing, for any half way measure. I am in favor of such declaration; and, without reference to recent occurrences, should be in favor of it. I care not if the military chief who has usurped the reins of power in Mexico – I care not if its congress should disavow the acts of Gen. Ampudia and Arista – if it should disgrace and punish these officers for their recent acts in the State of Texas – still, causes which would weigh with me as sufficient to justify this declaration, were not removed. Doubtless her rulers are instigated by the emissaries of other governments inimical to us. Their influences cannot be concealed. They are manifest. They will not deter me in the least degree from pursuing the path that I believe the honor of my country requires me to follow.

Even if this matter with Mexico should be settled in a month, the money we expend in war-like preparations may not be spent unprofitably. If war is formally declared, the contest with Mexico must be carries on by the rules of civilized warfare – by the acknowledged rules of war. I prefer this to the quasi practical Indian contest, which it will otherwise become. The rules of civilized war are well known. known. In this age every nation must obey them. them. If war is formally declared and Mexico should, by its favorable fortune to her arms, have the power to perpetrate a repetition of the atrocities of the Alamo and Goliad, she dare not do so in the face of the civilized world. I repeat, therefore, that I shall go for this part of the bill, and am prepared to sit here till it is passed. Alteration will make delay, and expedition is all-important.

I do not approve of that part of this bill which gives the President the power to select the principle officers of the volunteer militia. Was it a new question, I should be inclined to regard the constitutional objection raised to it as a very serious one; but I am disposed to yield to the precedents of 1812 and 1813 in its favor. I should be better satisfied. They will be jealous of officers of federal appointment. But this objection I will forego for the purpose of securing immediate action on the bill, that troops may be sent forthwith to the field, and the honor, and interests, and rights of the country maintained.
Several letters from General Taylor, but of a prior date to those accompanying the message, were received and ordered to be printed.

Resolutions of the Pennsylvania Legislature instructing the Representatives from that State to vote against the new tariff bill, were presented and ordered to be printed.

Resolutions of the New York Legislature in favor of a reorganization of the militia, were also presented and ordered to be printed.

Among the bills reported from the committees, was a bill relative to the transportation of the mail between the U. S. States and foreign countries.

Numerous private and local bills having been reported, the prior orders were postponed for the purpose of taking up the old fortification bill from the House, as amended by the Senate committee.

The first question was upon increasing the appropriation for the Florida reef from $100,000 to $200,000.

Mr. Evans made some objection to the increase of the appropriation until further and more detailed information could be received.

Mr. Yulee eloquently advocated the increase, and went on to show the importance of fortifying that portion of the coast where our commerce was so much exposed. In his opinion half of a million dollars would not be too much.

Mr. Westcott also strenuously advocated an increase of the appropriation. In view of the contest in which we are now involved, especially if Mexico should get any foreign aid, the fortification of that point was of the highest importance.

Mr. Lewis, of the Military Committee, next advocated the proviso and intimated that the war department had recommended $250,000. He hoped the amendment would prevail.

The question was then put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was one empowering the President to make use of any of the appropriations at any time after the passage of this act.

After some remarks from Messrs. Evan and Johnson of Louisiana, Mr. Lewis explained that this bill makes appropriation for fortifications already commenced; and that there is a new bill yet to come from the House, providing for new fortifications.

Mr. Johnson, of Maryland, after some remarks relative to the fortification at Sollers’ Point Flats, moved to amend by inserting 30,000 for that purpose.

Some explanations having been made by members of the Military Committee, Mr. Johnson said he would withdraw his amendment so far as it concerned this bill.

The amendment authorizing the President to use the appropriation at any time, was agreed to; after which the bill, as amended, was passed and returned to the House.

The Senate then adopted a resolution offered by Mr. Berrien, requesting the Judiciary Committee to report on the expediency of legislation for carrying into effect the 11th article of the treaty with Spain in 1795, the object of which is to prevent the fitting out of privateers under Mexican colors from the Island of Cuba.

After a long discussion upon sundry proposed amendments, the bill was, at 4 o’clock, passed over informally, and the Senate went into an executive session.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
The Speaker signed the bill authorizing the President to prosecute the existing war into Mexico, and the bill to increase the rank and file of the army. They were then sent to the President.

Mr. Holmes presented a letter from the steamers now under construction for the revenue service, which are progressing rapidly towards completion and stating that it is desirable that some action should be taken upon the bill in relation to promotions and appointments of officers in that service.

The letter having been read, on motion of Mr. Holmes, the House took up the bill to regulate promotions and appointments of officers in the revenue service.

After some debate, on motion of Mr. Rathbun, the bill was re-committed to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with instructions to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to report a bill providing, "That all vessels now engaged in the revenues marine service of the United States, or now building for the same, and under the control of the Treasury Department, be transferred to the control of the Navy Department, for public service, and subject in all respects to the regulations thereof, as established by law."

At 2 o’clock a message was received from the President of the effect, that he had approved and signed the War Bill, and the Bill increasing the rank and file of the army. (The increase is about 7,000 men.).

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and after debating the West Point Academy Bill for ten minutes, laid it aside to be reported.

On motion of Mr. McKay, the committee then took up the bill making appropriation for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1847.

Several amendments having been agreed to, Mr. Black moved an additional section to pay the non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, attached to the regiment of riflemen, infantry and artillery, eight dollars a month instead of seven. He said the dragoons received eight dollars, and he desired to equalize the pay.

After the amendment had been advocated by Mr. Hamlin and others, Mr. Brockenbrough opposed it on the ground that no additional pay was necessary to stimulate our soldiery to patriotic action.

Messrs, Gordon, Root, Severance and Delano severally gave their views upon the propriety of the recent measures of the President relative to Mexico.

Mr. Douglas then took the floor and made a very animated speech in defense of the President, and of the course of the 54-40 Oregon men in general. In reply to Mr. Adams, he reminded that gentleman, that he, when speaking on the Oregon question, had advised that the President should take possession of the territory and negotiate afterwards. Now, said Mr. D., surely the gentleman and his friends could not blame the President if he had followed their rule in regard to Texas?

When Mr. Douglass concluded, the committee rose, without coming to any conclusion on the bill, and the House adjourned.

During the debate, it was elicited that there is at the present moment abundance of money in the Treasury to defray all the expenses of the war measures.

RE46v43i6p4c6, May 19, 1846: The Spirit Of The People.

The Government, (says Thursday night’s Union) is “assuming (to use Mr. Madison’s celebrated language) the armour and the attitude demanded by the crisis.” The President and his Cabinet are now actively engaged in organizing its military and naval forces under the recent act of Congress. He is in constant communication with his Secretaries and in frequent consultation, night and day, with his Cabinet. Arrangements are making which will be announced in due session; and we entertain little doubt that they will be found satisfactory to the country. The plan of the campaign will develop itself.

The country is rousing up. “Westward, HO!” is becoming the rallying sign. The newspapers are coming to us charged with the rising excitement of the people. Meetings are called – meetings are held – companies organizing – military equipments are preparing. In twenty days after the fiery torch is passed through the land, we shall have 50,000 volunteers offering to take the field. Those who live near the scene of action, will probably be first called out; but the more distant volunteers will be held in reserve to bide their time, if they are wanting.

We understand that offers are pouring in upon the President. Among them, that we can call to mind, is a regiment from Pennsylvania, under the command of Gen. Sherwood; a brigade from New York, under Gen. Gibbs McNeil. Offers of service in various forms are made. Among the offers received by the President is the following from the patriotic and monumental city.
RE46v43i6p4c6, May 19, 1846: Headquarters, 5th Regiment V. I., Baltimore, May 12, 1846.

At a special meeting of the officers of the regiment, held at the Colonel’s quarters, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That Colonel Hickman, in behalf of the Companies composing the 5th regiment volunteer infantry, attached to the first light division, M.I., be authorized to inform Major General G.H. Stewart, that the services of said regiment are at the disposition of Major General Stewart to Garrison Fort McHenry, whenever it may be deemed expedient to remove there from the United States troops; and that the commanding general be respectfully requested to apprise the War Department of the readiness of the 5th regiment to perform with alacrity the service referred to.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant, N. Hickman, Colonel 5th regiment Volunteer Infantry, Major General G. H. Stewart.

RE46v43i6p4c6, May 19, 1846: GEN. SCOTT.

– A Washington correspondent of the Alexandria Gazette states, that a cabinet meeting held on Thursday evening last, it was determined to send Gen. Scott to command our troops in person, and that he will leave for the seat of war forthwith.

RE46v43i6p4c7, May 19, 1846: Well Done Richmond!

We publish to-day the interesting proceedings of the enthusiastic meeting on Thursday night. The addresses were stirring and in capital taste and a fine spirit animated the immense crowd. – The next day, with the drum beating and the flag flying, quite a number of volunteers marched through the streets. The intelligence on Saturday morning, which we then published in an extra, announcing the disastrous defeat of Capt. Walker’s Texas Rangers, and the imminent danger of Point Isabel, produced an intense interest, and encouraged more vigorous exertions. Early in the day, the whole complement of the company was made up – 100 privates and 12 officers. On Saturday, Capt. Carrington and Lieut. Warren proceeded to Washington city to tender their services and to ask to be conveyed with the troops from Fort McHenry, which will be immediately shipped from Baltimore to the seat of war direct. The promptness and alacrity of the whole movement do honor to the patriotism of our city.

It has been stated in the Enquirer, that Samuel Harcum was elected in Northumberlands over Edward Nelms. This is a mistake. We are informed by undoubted authority that Edward Nelms is elected over Samuel Harcum by the casting vote of the High Sheriff, and has the return. They are both Democrats.

In the debate on the War Bill, published yesterday. An error occurred in the in Senate proceedings, where it is stated that Boyd moved to amend by striking out a portion of the preamble to the bill. It will be seen by reference to the full report in another column of today’s paper, that the amendment was proposed by Mr. J. M. Clayton of Delaware.

There was a report circulating through the streets today, (says Thursday night’s Union) which produced some surprise and excitement viz: that Mr. Packenham had protested against our troops crossing the Rio Grande. As the rumor may have flown by this time half way to New York, and may effect the price of stocks, it were not even designed to effect that object, we deem it our duty to say at once that the story so far as we are advised, without any foundation. Certain it is, our Government has not yet heard any such protest; and deeply indeed should we regret the movement. We never expressed any sentiment more honestly in our lives, than that we desire to preserve our amicable relations with Great Britain, if it be compatible with our rights and favor. There are no two nations on the many people globe who can contribute to each others prospective more in a state of peace, or injure each other in now in a state of war. But we are perfectly assured that any measure of the description would so deeply complicate our relations with Great Britain and to make a crisis probable, perhaps inevitable. We profess to be as thoroughly acquainted with the character of our countrymen as any one else; and we are satisfied that their public spirit, and sturdy pride which characterizes the Anglo Saxon race, and which in our countrymen is as great if nor greater, than what belongs to John B. and would not permit our people to tolerate any such intervention on his part with impunity.

The Richmond papers (says the Union) inform us of the death of a distinguished man – Robert Stanard, Esq., a Judge of the Court of Appeals in Virginia. "He was struck down by paralysis, while engaged in the preparation of an opinion in his office on Monday night, and lingered until 3 o'clock Wednesday night. He was in his 67th year. He was one of the most eminent jurists of the country – At the Bar, in the General Assembly, and in the Virginia Convention of 1830, he was distinguished by his great and commanding abilities.

Mr. Archer, in the Senate on Friday, submitted a resolution, which was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing by law for a change in the time of holding the Spring terms of the District Courts of the United States, holden at Richmond and Norfolk in the State of Virginia, so that he former instead of commencing on the 13th day of May, may commence on the 2nd Monday in April of each year; and the latter, instead of being held on the 30th day of May, may commence on the 2nd Monday of June each year.

RE46v43i6p4c7, May 19, 1846: Naval.

The U. S. brig Perry, Lt. C. Blake, will sail today for Chagres. Great fortitude has been used in getting the Perry ready for sea, under orders received yesterday from the Navy Department.

We learn that orders have been received so to fit out the U. S. sloop of war Decatur for service, and that a few more men have been taken into the Navy Yard to finish the order given some time since in relation to the frigate Brandywine, and also for using the utmost diligence at the rendezvous here in enlisting recruits for the naval service. – (Norfolk Beacon on May 16th).

RE46v43i6p4c7, May 19, 1846: Texas Election.

D. S. Kauffman is undoubtedly elected to Congress from the first (Eastern) district. It is uncertain whether Williams of Pillsbury is elected in the second. All the Counties except Colorado and Brazos, give Williams 1,077, Pillsbury 1,094, Cooke 995.

RE46v43i7p1c2, May 22, 1846: “War” and a “State of War” – The Difference.

Under this captain, on Saturday last, our neighbors of the “Times” undertook to carry on the “State of War” which has existed for some time on their part towards the Administration. – They commence their article with the grave questions – “Are we really at war with Mexico, or are we not?” “Are the relations of the two countries subject to all the incidents of war?” “Are neutral nations to act towards each other as though war had been formally declared, and was actually pending?” “These are questions which, strange to say, admit serious speculation.” – And they add: “The verious tyro in politics needs not to be informed that mere hostile collisions between the citizens or the armies of two nations do not necessarily constitute war. Invasion, without a declaration of war, may be cause of war but not war itself. It is an act which may be peacefully atoned by negotiation.”.

We have been at a loss to perceive the difference ourselves between war and a state of war. Our neighbors seem to think that there can be no war without a formal declaration. Invasion, without a declaration, is not war itself: this, then, in their minds, must be the state of war. According to the writers upon the law of nations, “War is that state in which a nation prosecutes its right by force.” The act, therefore, of prosecuting right by force is a state of war. There are at least two sides to every contest. Each nation may consider itself right, ; and each may prosecute that right , or imaginary right, by force. It is not necessary that both should make a formal declaration of war. The aggressive nation generally declares war – the defending generally contents itself with making resistance to agression.

According to the distinction attempted to be drawn, a nation might not only invade another, but if it have the power might overrun it, and the nation thus invaded might make all the resistance in its power, and this might continue for an indefinite period, and yet, if no declaration of war be made by either party, war would not exist, but it would be merely a state of war. So say our neighbors. “The recent conduct of a portion of the Mexican army, in crossing the Rio Grande, capturing an American company, and threatening the whole army of Gen. Taylor, may be deemed sufficient cause of war, but is not, of itself, war, and cannot induce the condition of war.” And by parity of reason, the same Mexican might not only cross the Rio Grande, but the Nueces and the Sabine, and penetrate into the very heart of the United States, capturing armies, bombarding cities from Texas to Maine, meet with resistance everywhere, and bring in their train all the horrors and evils of war, and because the nation of Mexico did not see fit to declare war, and the United States did not deem it necessary formally to announce to the world, in an instrument setting forth their injuries and their rights, that war was delcared, it would not induce the conditions of war. These distinctions are too metaphysical for us. But they were taken by our neighbors, and they might have some ground for cavil, and in order to give them an opportunity of casting a shell into the White House. The reason urged in vindication of this splitting of hairs is a rare specimen of the same powers of ratiocination; “It is (they say) a just occasion of surprise and regret that the Congress of the United States should have been content to assume, immediately in the preamble to a bill granting supplies that these proceedings on the Texan frontier have placed the country in a state of war. The assumption was neither warranted by the law of nations, nor sanctioned by our own Constitution. It is expressly prescribed by the instrument to which the Federal Government owes all its powers, that Congress shall have power to declare war. If war, then, existed before the passage of the late bill, it was not by the authority of Congress, but simply by the will of President Polk, who dispatched an army to the banks of the Del Norte, and thereby induced the present state of affairs. It has come then to this, that the President has usurped the most important prerogative of Congress, and taken the war making power into his own hands, whilst Congress has tamely submitted to the usurpation, and asserted the war which he made to be an actual war.”

Here, forgetting that they were maintaining that Congress declared the country to be in a state of war, they conclude by stating that “Congress has tamely submitted to the usurpation, and asserted the war which he made to be an actual war.” But, aside from this inconsistency, do not our neighbors perceive that though Congress asserts that a state of war exists, no declaration having been made by them according to the Constitution that this may be true, and yet it may be waged by Mexico, without the President having usurped the most important prerogative of Congress, and taken the war making power into his own hands? If an army invades the territory of the U.S., is the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, to permit them to devastate our country and make no defense until Congress declares war? Congress might no be in session – it might be impossible to convene them in time. If in session, party spirit might rage to such an extent as to keep them wrangling for months about the propriety of making the formal declaration. But it is expressly laid down by Vattel, that “He who is attacked and makes only a defensive war, need not declare it; the state of war being sufficiently determined by the declaration of the enemy, or his open hostilities.” And again, in treating of the declaration of war and of the formalities incident to it, it is laid down that, “These formalities consist in the demand of a just satisfaction and in the declaration of war at least on the part of him who attacks, defensive war requiring no declaration, nor even on urgent occasions, so much as an express order from the sovereign.”

Mexico, we contend, both by open hostilities and by declaration, has determined the question of war. It will not be forgotten, that her late Envoy, in a formal note to the Secretary of State, declared that, should Texas be annexed to the United States, Mexico would consider the act a declaration of war on our part, and would proceed accordingly. Texas was annexed, in disregard of the threat, and Mexico proceeds to carry out her design. In various official documents, if we mistake not, emanating directly from the Mexican Government similar declaration is made. And more recently, when our army occupied the left bank of the Nueces, the Mexican General declared, in the name of his Government, that if the forces of the United States crossed that river, he would consider that also a declaration of war. Our troops did cross, and Mexico gathers a powerful force to attack them. Finally, a General coming immediately with the instructions of the Mexican Government, and superceding the officer who made the declaration last referred to, gives deliberate notice to the officer commanding our troops, then on the left bank of the Rio Grande, that if he does not forthwith remove from that position, Mexico will consider it a declaration of war, and will thereupon advance with her arms. Our General maintains his position, and the result is an attack upon our troops. If such conduct does not authorize Congress in stating that “by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States,” nothing that a Government can do by her officers of agents would justify it.

The question recurs, is not the act of Congress itself a declaration of war? The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to “declare war.” A nation having received injuries from another which she deems sufficient to justify her in waging war against another, may declare that she is about to engage in it. This she may do by a formal bill, or manifesto, or proclamation, or as it was done by the ancients, by sending a herald to the borders of the enemy’s country and proclaiming it with a trumpet. She may not only declare it beforehand, but, exercising her forbearance and her disposition to maintain peace, she may wait until it is declared by her enemy or waged without such declaration and then content herself by declaring the fact, that a state of war exists. The latter has been the course pursued by Congress, and by doing so the Constitution has been vindicated, and Congress has not yielded up its power by acknowledging the existence of a war created by the President alone, but it has assumed the responsibility of declaring that “by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a State of war exists between that Government and the United States.” And if we had no other cause for war than the boundary of Texas, and if that boundary was a doubtful one, yet we have acquired a right of having recourse to force by the refusal of Mexico to receive our ambassador charged with powers to discuss and agree upon all matters in dispute between the two nations. Vattel lays it down clearly, that “in things doubtful and not essential, if one of the parties will not listen, either to conferences, and accommodation, a negotiation or compromise, the other has only the last resource for the defense of himself and his rights; the means of force—and his arms are just against so untractable and adversary.”

But we are untold by our neighbors that “Mr. Polk has determined that a war we shall have, and as congress has called the President state of affairs a state of war, he seizes the occasion to spring upon the country this insidious proclamation.” Let us see how just is this charge against Mr. Polk, and whether he would discharge his duty to our own countrymen, and to the rest of the world, if he were to neglect proclaiming so important a fact. Congress declares that a state of war exists by the act of Mexico. How is this fact to be made unknown to our vessels of war in every sea? How is it to be made known officially to our merchantmen in every part of the world? Is he to send ships to hunt up our tars, and make them acquainted with the fact, and warn them of the danger they may encounter? Or, is he to proclaim it to the world, that they may obtain the intelligence at every port into which they may enter? Is it to hunt up our tars, and make them acquainted with the fact, and warn them of the danger they may encounter? Or, is he to proclaim it to the world, that they may obtain the intelligence at every port into which they may enter? Is he to send ships to hunt up our tars, and make them acquainted with the fact, and warn them of the danger they may encounter? Or, is he to proclaim it to the world, that they may obtain the intelligence at every port into which they may enter?

But the President is charged with having created the war, by sending our army to the banks of the Rio Grande. Is this charge founded in justice? The State of Texas was an integral member of the Mexican Confederacy, not of the State of Mexico. It was an independent State, and united itself with Mexico and other States in a Confederacy after the plan of our Federal Union, and with the rest adopted a Constitution for the government of the whole. When this Constitution was violated by the Mexicans and their military rulers, the Texans did not choose to submit, but declared themselves independent; asserting, at the same time, their willingness to abide by the Constitution which had been agreed to, and return into the Union whenever the other States should adhere to the government to which all had assented. The State of Texas never constituted an integral part of the State of Mexico—each State possessed separate territory and separate boundaries—Texas claiming as its boundary the Rio Grande. They nobly sustained their independence, and were recognised as a distinct nation by the United States and several of the most powerful nations of Europe. Subsequently, by the voluntary act of both States, they have become united. In their Constitution they proclaim the Rio Grande as their boundary. The people between the Nueces and the Rio Grande took part in the formation of the Texan State, voted for delegates to the Convention which framed the Constitution, voted upon the ratification of the Constitution, unite in sending delegates to the State Legislature, constitute a revenue district in the State Legislature, constitute a revenue district in the State, and were looked upon by the people of Texas as a component part of that state. The United States, in annexing Texas to the Union, reserve however the right to settle the conflicting rights of boundary. An Ambassador is sent to Mexico to treat of all matters in dispute between the two nations, embracing boundary as well as other claims. The Mexicans indignantly refuse to receive our Ambassador, or to treat with us upon any terms; and claim not only the country between the Rio Grande and the Nueces, but the whole of Texas to the Sabine. They not only set up this unjust and illegal claim, but they proceed to concentrate troops on the frontier. The Constitution provides that “full faith an credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other State.” Is the President to give less credit to such acts than the States themselves are required to give? Texas by her Constitution maintains her boundary to the Rio Grande. Had he done so, he would have violated every obligation to the Constitution requiring him to defend the territory of the States; he would have violated the just expectations of the Texans when they entered into our Union, and he would have been justly chargeable with neglect of duty and would have incurred the just censure of those who now denounce him for the opposite course. He was bound to advance such troops as were at his disposal into the disputed territory and not permit an inch of it to be taken possession of, so long as force could prevent it, such force as was placed within his power by the laws of the Union. "If a nation," says Vattel, "is obliged to preserve itself, it is not less obliged carefully to preserve all its members. The nation owes this to itself, since the loss of even one of its members weakens it and is injurious to its own preservation. It owes this also to the members in particular, in consequence of the very act of association; for those who compose a nation are united for their defence and common advantage; and none can justly be deprived of this Union, and of the advantages which flow from it, while he on his side fulfills the conditions. The body of a nation cannot then abandon a province, a town, or even a particular person, who has done his part, unless obliged to it from necessity or unless it is made necessary by the strongest reasons, founded on the public safety.”.

If even a nation was engaged in a war which was every way just and righteous, such is the war in which this nation is now engaged. We...no more info.

Mr. Evans, from the Finance Committee, reported a bill to remit the duties on railroad iron in certain cases.

On motion of Mr. Benton, the Military Committee was instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the number of officers of the general staff of the army, rendered necessary by the increase of the rank and file; also to provide for the more effectual organization of the volunteers.

On motion of Mr. Benton, 1,000 extra copies of the report of the court of enquiry held at Springfield, Mass., were ordered to be printed.

The bill to repeal the proviso in the naval appropriation bill, so as to make it comport with the provisions of the war bill; was read a third time and passed.

The bill to adjust the suspended pre-emption land claims in the several States and Territories, was, after a long and tedious debate, passed with an amendment authorizing the commissioner of the land office to adjudicate the claims, and issue the patents, requiring him, however, to report his decisions to Congress.

The Indian approbiation bill was returned to the House with sundry amendments.

After a brief discussion, the report of Mr. Semple, relative to a post road across the Isthmus of Panama, was recommitted to the post office committee.

On motion of Mr. Fairfield, the bill authorized the construction of ten war steamers was recommitted to the naval committee, with a view to some amendments.
Several unimportant matters having been disposed of, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill providing for the appointment of assistant Paymaster General and three Paymasters. After some uninteresting discussion, it was passed.

The bill for the relief of Amos Kendall was also passed.

The remainder of the day was devoted to Executive business.

RE46v43i7p1c7, May 22, 1846: House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. St. John, a resolution was adopted, calling on the Secretary of War to communicate the result of the examination of the Board of Engineers of Sandusky Bay, on Lake Erie; also the plan and estimate for placing the river in a state of defence.

Mr. Reed made an ineffectual motion to suspend the rules, for the purpose of offering a resolution providing that hereafter the daily hour of meeting shall be ten instead of eleven o’clock.

On motion of Mr. Thompson the bill regulating intercourse with the Indian tribes in Oregon, was postponed till the 1st of June.

Mr. T. assigned as a reason, that by that time it would be seen what the Senate would do with the Oregon jurisdiction bill, after which the Indian bill might be made to conform to it.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and resumed the consideration of the bill providing for the pay of the army.

Two amendments were pending, one to equalize the pay of the army to $8, and another to $10 per month.

Mr. McKay reminded the committee that last week two bills were passed, one to increase the rank and file of the army, and another to raise a regiment of mounted riflemen, and when in order, he gave notice that he would move an amendment of two millions of dollars to carry these laws into effect.

The debate on the general merit of the bills was continued by...Chipman and others, until the committee rose.

On motion of Mr. McKay, a resolution was adopted, which provides that all debate on the bill shall cease in committee to-morrow at two o’clock.

RE46v43i7p1c7, May 22, 1846: Tuesday May 19, 1846, SENATE.

Among the memorials were several praving that Pittsburg and Wheeling may be made ports of entry.

Mr. Benton, from the Military Committee, reported an act supplantary to the act for prosecuting the war with Mexico.

The bill providing for the adjustment of suspended land claims in the several States, was read a third time and passed.

The bill from the House, making appropriations for the Post Office Department, was next taken up.

Mr. Speight, although he said he would not vote against the bill fired a broadside at the cheap postage system. He said it was an oppressive act, and was the forerunner of one still more oppressive viz the tariff. Which was the grinding down of the people in one section for the benefit of the other.

Mr. Niles, in reply, intimated that the Post Office Committee had not deemed it necessary to make any change in the bill. After further remarks, he expressed his astonishment at the sweeping denunciation of the bill by the last speaker.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Calhoun, Servier and others, after which, with a view to a revision, the bill was informally laid aside.

The remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of the French Spoliation bill.
As soon as the journal had been read, the House went into committee of the Whole, and resumed the consideration of the bill providing for the pay of the army.

Mr. Tibbatts offered an additional amendment, giving non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates three dollars per month, in addition to their present pay, and 100 acres of land to each volunteer who shall serve to the end of the war. He supported the amendment by a speech, in which he argued that humanity calls upon us to adopt measures for a speedy termination of the war. To commence the war with a view of saving money was niggardly policy. On the contrary, it was our duty to offer every reasonable inducement for the enlistment of good soldiers, so that a decisive blow might be struck at once. He said he had offered his amendment as an act of justice to those engaged in the war, and not from any selfish motive. He congratulated Congress and the country upon the glorious news received from the army last evening, and eulogized Gen. Taylor to the skies.

Mr. Dromgoole made a scorching reply to those members who had complained that they had not been allowed time to discuss the war bill. He referred to previous acts of Congress in cases of emergency with even greater dispatch was manifested. He also defended the course of the President relative to Mexico. After proving that we have been drawn into war by the act of Mexico herself, he caused to be read by the clerk, the proclamation of Ampudia appealing to the English and Irish, and inviting them to join the Mexican army, promising them kind treatment and good pay.

In answer to a question from Mr. Ashmun, Mr. Dromgoole admitted that the proclamation was not among the papers communicated by the President, but he said that Ampudia was no less guilty on that account. Ampudia was guilty of what the laws of nations termed "man stealing," and the only thing to be done now, was to have a Court of Inquiry, and make him forfeit his life. (Laughter).

Mr. Hunt of New York condemned the course of the majority in a fixing a preamble to the war bill, declaring in advance the existence of a war with Mexico.

Mr. Cocke spoke till the expiration of the time allowed for debate.

The amendment of Mr. Tibbatts was ruled out of order. The committee then voted upon numerous proposed amendments, and then reported the bill as amended to the House.

The House concurred in all the amendments. Among them was that of Mr. McKay, inserting an additional section, appropriating about two millions for carrying into effect the act for the increase of the rank and file of the army, and to raise a regiment of mounted riflemen. Also, an item of 100,000 of dollars for the purchase of gunpowder.

The whole amount of appropriation is near seven millions of dollars.

The bill as amended, was then read a third time and passed. Years 191, nays none.

After a great uproar occasioned by several members endeavoring to squeeze in bills and resolutions, the House adjourned.

We have already alluded to the injurious effect of the policy pursued by the opponents of the Administration in denouncing the President as having usurped the power of declaring war, and in assailing the war itself as fraudulent, unjust and unwarrantable. We have avowed our opinion, that such a state of things was well calculated to cool the patriotism of the volunteers and thereby throw embarrassment in the way of a vigorous and speedy prosecution of a war into which we have been forced by Mexico. With how much less spirit would our citizen soldiers rally to the field, if they are induced, upon the rally to the field, assertions of the Whig press, to believe that the President is a selfish and reckless usurper, that their country is in the wrong, (and when did the Whigs ever say that their country was in the right, in its difficulties with foreign powers?) and that the war in which they are engaged, is unjust and unrighteous in itself, and that they therefore incur the vengeance of Heaven? Would not such feelings unnerve the arm of the stoutest soldier, and cause his spirit to cower? The consciousness of right on his country's side is the strongest incentive of a Republican champion. The Whigs would, by their party denunciations of the Government, strike away this incentive and weaken the moral force of our Republican army.

We do not speak at random, and in proof of our position, we shall group together various extracts from Whig journals.
The Charlestown (Va) Free Press says: "But the rights and power of Mexico have been uniformly despised in our whole proceedings, and war has been precipitated, without the authority of Congress, and without the shadow of necessity."

[From the Providence Journal].

We are already engaged in a war—in an unnecessary and unrighteous war—undertaken for an unjustifiable object, and not necessary even to accomplish the object for which it was undertaken. Every step in this Texas iniquity has been taken equally in disregard of all the principles of justice and of right, and in defiance of all the dictates of prudence, discretion and common sense."

[From the New York Tribune].

Ten days ago, if a Baltimore clipper had overtaken a Mexican trading ship at sea, captured and plundered her, it would have been piracy by all law, and the perpetrators must have swung for it. Now that same act would be pronounced laudable by our Courts, and the Mexican vessel and cargo a lawful prize to the captors. But can any man imagine that the distinction made by our courts is respected in the Chancery of Heaven? No! No! never! never! Abhorred be this war, its authors and abettors! abettors! "O my soul come not thou into their secrets—unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united?"

[From the Philadelphia U.S. Gazette].

Let the public at all times hold the administration responsible for the position we are now in, and let Mr. Polk and his ministry have the blame of all the disgrace we are suffering, and all the occurrences of a war which they have causelessly brought upon the country. There was not the least necessity for the trouble in which the nation now is—not the least.

[From the Cincinnati (Ohio) Gazette].

There is no language, in our opinion, too severe to be applied to the conduct of the administration in the management of our Mexican affairs.

A war with Mexico cannot but do us injury where we would have our name respected—degrade the national reputation in the world’s estamation, which might otherwise have been honored and respected. It is vain to deceive ourselves. It is all idle and wrong through passion to blind the public to the disgrace which must follow our ... comparatively, dividend to the verge of civil war, no man, no people, looking on upon the contest, can help sympathizing with the broken power of Mexico, and uniting on uttering a better condemnation against our Government.

What the President could have been dreaming about in ordering the army to the position it now occupies, we are at a loss to conceive. Was there any danger of invasion from Mexico?—That is not pretended. Did we intend to invade her territory? This is expressly denied. Why, then, put our soldiery, and plant our cannon, in the face of one of her cities, and upon her own territory! There is but one explanation to be given of this conduct, and that is, that mad politicians in power had resolved, and gentlemen loafers out of office and employment, had united with them, to provoke a war at all hazards.

American arms must be brandished upon disputed territory, and the Mexican defied on his own soil. And now the treasure and blood of the nation are to be spent and spilt to make good this reckless, this inhuman action! For both, the President of these United States, and the men in authority under him, are responsible. For the blood already shed—for the murders of the gallant Cross, Porter and Thornton, and their brave comrades, literally brought about through this direct instrumentality, they will be held responsible before God and man.

'Tis no idle matter, or indifferent theme, this Texan, Mexican trouble. For annexation, the whole country has been driven to suffer and to do, what never would have been suffered or done, if the people had not been made mad by party, and then betrayed by those whom they had elevated into power. Heretofore the nation, as a nation, was clear of soiling its hands with slavery. But by that act she clutched hold of it to defend, extend and perpetuate it. And soon, in addition, there will be a demand for millions upon millions to pay her debts, to fortify her coast, and to feed the soldiery at present in her borders. As if this was not enough, and more than ought to be tolerated, the possession of a strip of disputed territory is to be made cause of war, and the floodgates of a freebooting spirit thrown wide open, that politicians may thrive, and loafers parade in epaulettes, or have a chance to plunder, while the labor, industry and character of the country shall be heavily taxed to support them.

[From the Washington Correspondent of the N.Y. Commercial Advertiser].

After some five years clamor for war, war—for the sake of war, after making war the theme of every oration in Congress or on the stump, and the main issue at every election, the Democracy have, at last, stumbled upon the object of all their wishes.

The imbecility of their administration has done for them more than they could have expected from the energy of any... other.

We have got into a war, through Mr. Polk, from which a Caesar or Bonaparte would have shrunk—an offensive war with Mexico and all the powers of the world sympathizing with her, and upon an issue made by Mr. Polk himself—a war for acquisition or seizure of a portion of Mexican territory.

[From the New York Express].

This mean, miserable and contemptible administration, --we mean just what we say—is as imbecile in vindicating American honor and American arms, as it is braggart in mouthing over them. It bullies England, orders fleets off Mexico, then proposes to razee the navy, and sends a handful of twenty-five hundred gallant men into the heart of a Mexican population, to flog the whole Mexican nation.

We have, we trust, given extracts enough to show the gross injustice of the Whig presses in denouncing their own Government and the free and intelligent people of their own country. All that the Administration has aimed at has been to protect American territory, to take possession of what has become our own and by as clear a title as that of Mexico. It had the right to do so, and for this simple act our citizens have been murdered on our own territory.

The Boston Post rebukes these factious prints with just severity, when it says:

"With a certain party and class our country is always in the wrong—never in the right. It was wrong when it renounced the British allegiance of 1775; wrong when it acquired Lousiana; wrong when it contended for the freedom of the years in 1814; wrong when it took possession of Florida, wrong when it annexed Texas; wrong on Oregon, and is now wrong in the matter with Mexico. If this party has been pretty consistent in the work of condemnation, they have been equally as consistent in accounting for this continuity of error; with them it is the error of the Democracy. The false step was taken in discarding monarchical institutions. Our soil, our free republican soil, from the first, was too extended, and this toryism has begrudged every inch of extension. Let it rave on! Its grumbling is impotent of stay the onward march of this glorious people."[BWP]

RE46v43i7p2c2, May 22, 1846: Has Mexico Any Allies?

We have been strongly inclined to the belief that Great Britain has been mixed up in some way with the recent movements in Mexico. We all recollect the vaunting pronunciamentos of the Mexican Presidents and Generals, and the threats of vengeance upon us for the annexation of Texas. We moreover bring to mind how all these braggart words passed off in smoke. She could find no means, foul or fair, to replenish her Treasury and reinforce her armies. But this year, she has made new and vigorous effects, and has succeeded in assembling a numerous army, led on by skillful officers, many of them, it is said, from Europe. Who has furnished this money and these officers? Who has spurred her up to a conflict with our powerful nation? The mystery needs unravelling, and some of the letterwriters have proceeded to do so.

The Washington correspondent of the N.Y.Tribune writes in the following deliberate and emphatic manner.

"After much thought I cannot dispossess myself of the belief that England is concerned in this movement of Mexico. I am in possession of evidence that the last reinforcements of the Mexican Army were not ordered to be concentrated at Matamoras until about the middle of April, after the receipt of intelligence from Great Britain, which had been so anxiously looked for, and that not till then were the operations undertaken with spirit and vigor. I should be glad to be deceived on this point, but fear I shall not be again. The remarkable alliance between France and England must have ulterior objects in view; and may not the latter, to block up the progress of the United States, and to raise a counter government on our frontier, have agreed to establish a Monarchy in Mexico in the person of the Duke De Montpensier, the young son of Louis Philippe?...In the present juncture, the probability is more plausible.

The Washington correspondent of the N.York Commercial Advertiser writes with still more confidence, though it is proper to add, that the Editor attaches no faith to his opinions. The letter says:

"I have no doubt that Paredes is himself an English agent, and that he was provided with the means for assuming the position he holds by England. France will not be backward to avail herself of the occasion to illustrate her principle of a balance of power.

"We are at war not only with Mexico, but with the whole world, and by the act of the President, not the act of Mexico, as the declaration of war assumes."

The New York Albion, conducted by a British subject, says:

"This state of things does not surprise us; we predicted that difficulties would ensue whenever the American army occupied the belt of land between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, because the Mexicans always contended that that strip of territory never formed any part of Texas. An invasion of that, they held, would be an invasion of Mexico itself, and they would treat it accordingly. This determination was perfectly well known many months since at London, in the city of Mexico and certainly in New York, for we announced it on the best authority in the Albion."
“The question is constantly asked, what will England and France do? We reply, nothing, as tat as hostile measures are concerned. They will no doubt offer their mediation, and prevail on Mexico to do all that is right and proper; with this they will expect that the U. States will be satisfied; but it should appear that the U. States will not rest satisfied, when all just demands be conceded, M. Guizot will then have an opportunity of reverting to his balance of power policy."

While we are far from denying that the United States will be satisfied with what is "right and proper, “ we are clearly of the opinion that she will not admit the interference of England and France, as to what terms she should accept. The quarrel is between the United States and Mexico and no power has a right to meddle with our honor or interests which are involve. Our sense of justice alone will be the arbiter which is to decide upon the propriety of a settlement with Mexico. We will manage our affairs in our own way, and fatal and dark will be the day, when the nations of Europe shall venture to bring to bear upon our conduct their odious "balance-of-power" policy. The zeal and enthusiasm which move the whole country at the present crisis, show how formidable our national power may be made in the hour of danger. While we respect the rights of other nations, we will not brook the least interference with our own.

But, whatever England and France may have done, or intend to do, we conscientiously believe that the moral spectacle now presented throughout our country will go very far to secure the respect of Europe, and produce a long and lasting peace.

RE46v43i7p2c3, May 22, 1846: No Title.

At a large public meeting in Washington City last Saturday to raise Volunteers, Col. R. M. Johnson presided and spoke with enthusiasm. Three members of the House of Representatives also spoke Messrs. Martin and Stanton of Tenn., and Mr. McConnell, of Ala.—A Mr. St. John of Buffalo, and Lieutenant Porter of the Navy also addressed the meeting, the latter with some touching allusions to his brother Lieutenant Porter of the Army, who has been killed upon the frontier by a party of Mexicans. He had received, he said, as the sole bequest of his father, a sword with which he would avenge his brother's blood or die in the attempt to do so; and from his Spartan mother a letter which told him to come not to her, but to go where his brother fell to avenge his death and defend his country. There were 35 names down for volunteers when the meeting broke up, another meeting will be held tomorrow. In a few days it is expected that a full company will be obtained and their services will be at once tendered to and accepted by the President. We gather the above facts from the Baltimore American.

"The whole Southwestern country is in a high state of excitement on the subject of the "Mexican war, “ and great anxiety is expressed on all sides for Gen. Taylor in his present critical position—far from the resources of his own country, and on the borders of a nation whose rule, in all her previous conflicts with our Texan brethren, has been to promise quarter, but to deal cruelly and treacherously with prisoners, few of whom have returned to tell the tale of the hottors of their captivity. Montgomery has sent forth a company to the relief of Gen. Taylor of 83 men, and two more companies are about to be organized. No formal requisition has been made upon our Governor as yet, but he has published a Proclamation, under the impression that many troops will be speedily required on our Mexican frontier, authorizing and advising the organization of companies of volunteers to the number of two thousand men, who are directed to proceed to Mobile and report themselves to the officer in command of the Southwestern Division of the U.S. Army at that place, and pledging the credit of the State of Alabama for all necessary expenses incurred by them, should they not be required by the U.S. Government. The greatest enthusiasm prevails throughout the country, and all parties are united as one man in calling loudly for signal vengeance on the foe who has dared to send a hostile army on the soil marked out as our own, by the sacred symbol of the Stars and Stripes. I am gentlemen, very truly.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: From the Washington Union. Mexican Admission of Boundary.

The charge against the Administration, which some of the Whig journals are sending all over the country, is this: that the Del Norte is not the boundary of the State of Texas, and that the President had no right under the Constitution to send troops to repel an invasion on this side of that river.

Mexico herself has not only admitted, but she has time and again affirmed, and she still affirms the exact contrary. She maintains that the land on the East bank of the Del Norte is Texas, and that it is not Mexico any more than all Texas is Mexico. This we will now prove, documents in hand. If we prove it, there is an end to the whole charge against the President of violating the Constitution, by sending General Taylor to the Del Norte, under orders to prevent and repel invasion on this side of that river.

On the 20th June, 1814, General Woll, then commander-in-chief of the Mexican army on the Northeastern frontier, issued, in pursuance of a decree of the Mexican Government, bearing date 17th June, 1843, the following general orders. The document is, just now, worth pursuing... [See Woll's document below.]

RE46v43i7p2c3, May 22, 1846: For the Enquirer. The Richmond Volunteers.

Messrs. Editors. A card in some of the papers of this morning states, that a full account of the deputation to Washington, on the part of the volunteer corps which has been lately raised in this city, will be given at the proper time. That time has already arrived, and we will state in as few words as possible the result of this application.

We went to Washington on Saturday last, and immediately on arriving there, had an interview with the Secretary of War and Gen. Scott – We learned from them; that the President had made no requisition for troops upon any Atlantic State North of Georgia, and that volunteers who wished their services accepted by the General Government, should be first organized, equipped and drilled, and their officers commissioned by the State Governor; so that, in the event of a requisition on the State, their claims might entitle them to preference. Gen. Scott remarked, that the Secretary of War would only communicate with the State Executive in enlisting companies of volunteers – meaning that no troops would be accepted unless by requisition on the Governor.

Under these circumstances our first determination was to return to Richmond the next day; the design being to make another, and more formal tender of our company, after obeying more minutely the requirements of the law; than we had done with regard to its organization. We were advised, however, not to leave without consulting the President: so, Monday morning, having already written tender of our services to the Secretary of War, we called on the President, in company with Gov. McDowell, Judge Pennybacker, Gen. Chapman and Mr. Hopkins, members of the Virginia delegation of Congress, and our fellow townsman Thos. Green, Esq. – The President received us with great courtesy, expressed satisfaction at the patriotic zeal of the country, and particularly applauded the prompt and decided action of the citizens of Richmond. We then went a second time to the War Department, accompanied by the distinguished gentlemen we have just mentioned. The Hon. Secretary gave much the same answer he did at the former interview- only he gave us greater encouragement to hope that we might at least be ordered to Fortress Monroe, there to be drilled for six weeks or two months, and then to be ordered to the scene of action, if the exigency of the service demanded it.

We returned to Richmond last evening to advise the Company to complete their organization, to have their officers commissioned according to law, then to offer their services to the Governor of the State, to obey any requisition of the President. They should also press the claims which they have upon the Department, and which we have the assurance of the Secretary of War, will not be forgotten. We were advised to this course by the distinguished gentlemen whose kindness we have already mentioned, and also by a distinguished friend of our enterprise, whose attentions to us, and spirited efforts on our behalf, as the representatives of the corps, we are pleased to have an opportunity of acknowledging – We allude to Mr. Ritchie. Let the Citizens and Volunteers persist in their purpose. If there should be no demand for their services, we will all rejoice that our country has no need of them, or, if so, has worthier sons to execute them. – Our candid conviction is, that a requisition will be made on Virginia.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: “Headquarters of the Army of the North, ‘Mier, June 20, 1844.

“I, Adrian Woll, General of Brigade, &c., make known –

“1. The armistice agreed on with the department of Texas having expired, and the war being , in consequence, recommended against the inhabitants of that department, all communication with it ceases.”.

“2. Every individual, of whatever condition, who may contravene provisions of the preceding article, shall be regarded as a traitor and shall receive the punishment prescribed in article 15, title 10, treatise 8, of the articles of war.”.

“3. Every individual who may be found at the distance of one league from the left bank of the Rio Bravo, will be regarded as a favorer and accomplice of the usurpers of that part of the national territory, and as a traitor to his country; and, summary military trial, shall receive the said punishment.”.
“4. Every individual who may be comprehended within the provisions of the preceding article, and may be rash enough to fly at the sight of any force belonging to the supreme government, shall be pursued until taken or put to death.”.

“In consideration of the situation of the towns of Lareda and Santa Rita de Ampudia, as well as all the farm houses beyond the Rio Bravo, in which remain all the interests of the inhabitants of the line committed to my charge, I have this day received from the supreme Government, orders to determine the manner by which those interests are to be protected; but, until the determination of the supreme Government be received, I warn all those who are beyond the limits here prescribed, to bring them within the line, or to abandon them; as those who disobey this order will infallibly suffer the punishment here established.

“ADRIAN WOLL”.

Now this document shows:

1st. That Mexico holds the territory on the East bank of the Del Norte to be Texas;

2nd. That, as Texan territory, she was resolved to make it the scene of a war of extermination; and.

3rd. Some light is thus thrown on the propriety and constitutionality of sending an American force to defend it against armed invasion by such foes, after it had been made a congressional and revenue district of the United States by act of Congress.

No More Wanted- we learn from an authentic source that the requisition made by Gen. Taylor on Louisiana has been fully complied with without a draft, and that there are even more volunteers than can be received. Several companies have been already refused; and offers are beginning to pour in from the interior, which will all be rejected until further requisition from the proper authorities is made.

The intelligence was brought here yesterday by Maj. Chase of the U.S. Army, who declined accepting the services of the gallant volunteers from Montgomery under Capt. Elmore, now quartered in this city, to the very great mortification of Capt. E. and his brave associates.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: ON THEIR OWN HOOK.

We understand that our gallant and patriotic friend, Col. Platt, commenced yesterday the raising of a company of Volunteers to proceed directly to Point Isabel, “on their own hook” to “take stock” in the Mexican war. Some thirty or forty enrolled their names last evening, and the requisite number will be made up this morning. They propose chartering a vessel here, and will leave probably tomorrow for the Rio Grande. (Mobile Advertiser, May 15.)[BWP]

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: MEXICAN PRIVATEERS.

The treaty with Spain, by which it is engaged on both sides, that he citizens of neither nation shall engage in the service of privateers against the commerce of the other; would be somewhat difficult to execute as far as our own case is concerned in a war with Mexico. The principle difficulty would lie in meeting the distinction between Mexicans and Spaniards. Adventurers from Cuba when caught in their vocation of plunder on the seas, would claim to be Mexicans, of course, and the identity of their languages and personal appearance would make it impossible in the majority of cases, to detect the falsehood.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: Still They Come.

A full company of volunteers, commanded by Captain Galbraith, arrived yesterday on board the North Alabama from the Parish of Concordia. There arrived also two hundred and fifty volunteers – fine fellows – from the parishes of Assumption and Lafourche Interior, commanded by Captains E. F. Nicholas and Williams. [BWP] RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: More Mounted Volunteers.

We understand that Capt. M. I. Box, of Texas, who is now in this city, is about raising a company of Mounted Volunteers, to be attached to Col. Lewis’ Regiment. Capt. Box is a noble specimen of a frontier man, the greater part of whose life has been spent amidst the perils of savage warfare, and such, we take him, as would lead his followers to death or glory.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: The Germans.

Hurrah For The Teutonic Chivalry – Our fellow citizens of German origin have evinced the most laudable zeal in the present crisis. Several companies have been formed by them, in that noiseless, unostentatious way, which is so characteristic of their race – Calm, cool, reflecting, yet determined, they are a rampart of iron, on the defense, an avalanche on the attack. There were about 500 of them in barracks yesterday, waiting for embarkation.

Three more companies of Colonel Marks’ Regiment departed this morning in the steamer Sea. The requisition is almost complete, and the balance will be sent off as soon as transports can be furnished.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: Hon. Bailie Peyton.

We learn that our friend Mr. Peyton, in the true spirit of the heroic race from which he sprung, has volunteered as a private for the Rio Grande. Many gentlemen have called at our office today, and expressed a desire that he should raise a regiment. We hope so. We know of no man whose name would rally the right sort of men around him, sooner than Bailie Peyton.

We do not hope the next mail from Washington will bring authority from Government to prosecute this war on the proper scale. Not upon milk and water principles – not by half way measures – not by entrenchments, and baggage wagons, and bush fighting – but marching forthwith into Mexico, with sufficient force to defend every step we take.

Since writing the above, we learn that Gen. Gaines has authorized Col. Peyton to organize a regiment, and he has commenced the work with characteristic energy.

Our life for it, his regiment will not be the last to enter the city of Mexico.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: The Right Spirit.

Our respected fellow citizen, Gen. Dunlap, of Madison, in an eloquent speech on Tuesday evening, announced his intention of going beyond the Rio Grande, and said his parish was ready to march there with him.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: Col. Marks.

We understand Col. Marks will leave this evening for the Army, with the remaining companies of his regiment. He goes with the best wishes of this whole community. A Senator in the Legislature, on the first news from the frontier, he enrolled himself as a private, and gave a stimulus to the recruiting spirit, which was felt throughout the city. He is a brave and experienced officer. Success and honor to him.

RE46v43i7p2c4, May 22, 1846: Capt. Walker-The Texas Rangers.

The Texas Rangers – It has been determined by a few of our leading men to set on foot a subscription to purchase a sword, to be presented to this intrepid man, which whose exploits with the Texas Rangers, and his daring expedition from Point Isabel to the American entrenched camp lately, the public are acquainted. The list is with Mr. Bravo, of The Commercial Exchange Reading Rooms. In an hour or so, forty five dollars were subscribed, in small sums. Who next throws in his contribution of gratitude and admiration?[BWP]

RE46v43i7p2c6, May 22, 1846: No title.

We presume the physician alluded to below by the Union is Dr. Parrott, to whose intimate acquaintance with the climate, country and habits of Mexico, we yesterday referred. [A friend is of opinion, that the physician alluded to is Dr. Davis.] His testimony will go far to relieve the fears of many whose friends have gone off to the war, and who seems to apprehend more danger from the climate than from the Mexican arms:

"We are informed by an intelligent physician who was a native of this city, but who resided for several years to the West of the Rio Grande, who married a Mexican lady, who was an U. States Consul, practised physic several years in the vicinity of Matamoras, and is intimately acquainted with the climate, as well as the habits of the Mexicans, that although at a certain season of the year it is unhealthy at Matamoras, and on the immediate borders of the river, yet that several miles from it the ague and fever is unknown.—The climate for several miles beyond, away off to the West, is remarkably healthy, and no such humbug ought to prevent the troops of the United States from visiting this interesting region of the earth."[BWP]

RE46v43i7p3c1, May 22, 1846: By Last Evening’s Mail. REQUISITION UPON THE GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA.

We understand that Governor Smith has been called upon by the President of the United States for three regiments (30 companies, 2,310 men,) of infantry, to be composed of volunteers, enrolled, and held in readiness to muster in the service of the United States. Each company, we learn, will consist of 64 privates only, not over 45, nor under 18 years of age, and in full physical strength and vigor.

Full particulars will doubtless be announced officially in a few days.

It is stated in the New York papers, that a number of British sailors have deserted from British ships now ion that port, from fear of being pressed into naval service upon their return to England in the event of a war with this country. [BWP]

RE46v43i7p3c1, May 22, 1846: TWENTY-NINTH CONGRESS. WEDNESDAY, MAY 20. SENATE.

Mr. Sturgeon presented the proceedings of a great meeting at Easton, Pa., in reference to the war with Mexico.

Mr. Woodbridge presented resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, against the leasing of . . .[illegible] . . . lands in Lake Superior.

After a discussion between Messrs. Webster, . . .[illegible] . . . Cass and others, the resolutions were ordered to be printed.

The House bill regulating the value at which certain foreign coins shall be received at our custom house, was taken up, the amendment con-(unreadable) and the bill passed.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the French Spoliation bill.

Mr. Morehead having the floor, resumed and concluded his remarks.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Indian appropriation bill, as returned upon the Senate, with amendments, was referred . . .[illegible] . . . Committee on Ways and Means.
Mr. Smith from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill for surveying and constructing a military road from Fort Howard, in Wisconsin, to Fort Wilkins, in Michigan. It was twice read and committed.

This being the day set apart for the consideration of territorial business, a resolution was adopted, postponing the special order till the 2d of June.

Mr. Andrew Stewart moved a suspension of the rules to enable him to offer a resolution instructing the military committee to report a bill increasing the pay of volunteers from seven to ten dollars per month, and granting to those who serve to the end of the war, or who may die in the service, 160 acres of land.

The motion to suspend was negatived—yeas 70, nays 75.

Some unimportant matters being here disposed of, Mr. Butler King, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill making appropriation for twelve iron war steamers and one frigate. It was twice read and committed.

The first section provides, that immediately after the passage of the act, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, after advertising, etc., to contract for the construction of twelve war steamers, to be built of iron, of not less than 1200, nor exceeding 1600 tons, the boilers to be . . .[illegible] . . . so far below the water line, and the machinery so arranged as to be secure from an enemy's shot; that they shall have a speed of at least fifteen miles and hour in ocean navigation, in ordinary weather; that they shall be furnished with engines of not less than 1,000 horse power each, and capable of carrying an armament of at least six of Treadwell's wrought iron guns, of not less than twelve inches calibre, and from two to four smaller guns of the same manufacture, with at least 15 days' fuel under a high pressure of steam.

The second section provides for the construction of one frigate, to be built of iron, capable of carrying an armament of 60 heavy guns, with the necessary accommodations for the officers and crew of such ship.

The third section provides, that one of the steamers shall be built upon Ericsson's plan.

The fourth section provides, that another shall be built upon the plan of Messrs. Schuyler.

The fifth section appropriates five millions of dollars for the purpose of carrying the bill into effect.

A long an very interesting report accompanied the bill. The reports goes into a long and elaborate description of the merits of iron over wood for war ships, and brings the clearest evidence in favor of iron. The plan of uniting sails with steam is also examined and condemned.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and took up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

After some discussion relative to the item providing for meteorological observations, the bill was, for the present laid aside, and the committee rose.

Numerous bills from the Senate was received, read twice and appropriately referred.

The resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relative to the Tariff and the Sub Treasury were presented and ordered to be printed.

The House then adjourned.

RE46v43i7p4c3, May 22, 1846: From the New Orleans Picayune, April 12. FURTHER FROM THE ARMY

The steam schooner Florida, Capt. Clift, arrived at this port last evening from Brazos Santiago, whence she sailed on the 5th instant. Although her dates are not so late by one day as the New York’s they contain fuller and more authentic details of events on the Rio Grande, and put quite a new aspect on affairs.

The reader will be delighted to hear that neither Capt. Thornton nor Lieut. Kane was killed in the affair of the surprise of Capt. Thornton’s Dragoons. We give below a minute account of the surprise and action, of the accuracy of which we have not doubt. It will be read with universal interest.

The Florida brought over official despatches from Gen. Taylor for the Government. Col. Whistler came passenger on the Florida. A gentleman, who also came passenger on the schooner, has furnished us with the following narrative of Gen. Taylor’s march from his camp to Point Isabel and of the subsequent attack upon the camp. It differs from the accounts received by the New York, via Galveston. The reader may repose entire confidence in the following, as it
On the 1st of May the main body of the army of Occupation marched from the camp on the Rio Grande, leaving as a garrison in the field-works opposite Matamoras, the 7th Regiment of Infantry and two companies of Artillery, commanded by Capt. Lowd and Lieut. Bragg—the whole commanded by Major Brown, 7th Infantry.

On the 2d the army encamped at Point Isabel. Early on the morning of the 3d a heavy cannonade was heard in the direction of Matamoras, which was continued during the day, and at intervals through the night and during the day of the 4th. Owing to the difficulty of communicating with the fort, no intelligence was received at head quarters respecting the result of the cannonade until the morning of the 5th, when a party sent forward to communicate brought a despatch from Major Brown, announcing the particulars, a brief statement of which follows:

At 5 o’clock on the morning of the 3d, a fire was opened upon the fort from one of the Mexican batteries, and was continued with seven guns. The fire was immediately returned, and the battery silenced by our guns in thirty minutes—two of the enemy’s guns supposed to be dismounted.

The enemy then commenced firing from the lower fort and mortar battery—a brisk fire of shot and shells was kept up, but without damage to the fort or garrison.

A deliberate fire was now kept up by our eighteen pounders upon the enemy’s guns and the city of Matamoras, the consulate flags being respected.

The fire of the enemy was kept up without cessation until half past 7. At 10 it was temporarily suspended, but recommenced and continue at intervals until 12 at night. Although it is believed that some 1,200 or 1,500 shot were fired by the enemy during this period but one casualty occurred—a sergeant of B Company 3d Infantry being killed. Not one of our guns was dismounted, though the enemy’s fire was concentrated for some time on the 18 pounder battery, and the shot frequently struck the embrasures. At 5 o’clock on the morning of the 4th, the fire was resumed by the enemy, continued for twelve or fifteen shots, and kept up at long intervals during the day, but without effect.

The amount of damage done to the enemy, beyond silencing their batteries, cannot yet be correctly known.

Our informant assures us that it was understood to be Gen. Taylor’s intention to remain at Point Isabel until that post should be perfectly fortified, and a large accession of troops should arrive; but he further gives us every reason to encourage those enrolling or who may desire to enroll themselves, to believe that Gen. Taylor will lead them at once into active service—that it is his firm intention to “carry the war into Africa.”.

We proceed now to lay before the reader an account of the surprise and subsequent surrender of Capt. Thornton’s command. Though not official, we have it from a gentleman familiar with the circumstances of the case, and upon whom all reliance may be placed. We do not know when we have published anything which has afforded us such sincere pleasure. It will cheer hearts that have been wrung with all the bitterness of grief, and make the nation glad.

On the evening of the 23d ult., Gen. Taylor’s spies brought in intelligence to the effect that about two thousand five hundred Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande to the Texas side above the American Fort, and about fifteen hundred of same had crossed below. Gen. T. immediately dispatched a squadron of dragoons to each place of crossing, for the purpose of reconnoitering them and ascertaining their position. The squadron ordered below was in command of Capt. Ker, the one above was commanded by Capt. Thornton, and composed of Capt. Hardee, Lieuts. Kane and Mason, with sixty-one privates and non-commissioned officers. The former commander, Capt. Ker, on arriving at the point where it was supposed they had crossed found that the report was false, that they had not crossed there but had all crossed above, which was afterwards proved by Capt. T’s. command being surprised, in which Lieut. Geo. Mason with nine men were killed and two wounded. The wounded were sent to Gen. Taylor’s camp; the army having no hospital in the field. Capts. Thornton, Hardee and Lieut. Kane, miraculously escaped, together with the balance of the non-commissioned officers and men, but were captured, and are now prisoners of war in Mexico.

The circumstances which led to the surprise are these: After Capt. T.’s command had proceeded up the Rio Grande about twenty-four miles, and as was supposed, to within about three miles of the Mexican camp the guide refused to go any farther, and stated his reason that the whole country was infested with Mexicans. Capt. T. however proceeded on with his command about two miles when he came to a farm house, which was enclosed entirely by a chaparral fence, with the exception of that portion of it which bordered on the river, and this was so boggy as to be impassible. Capt. T. entered this enclosure through a pair of bars and approached the house for the purpose of making some enquiry, his command following him. So soon as his command had all entered the enclosure, the enemy, having been concealed in the chaparral, about two thousand five hundred in number, completely surrounded him and commenced firing upon his command. He then wheeled his command thinking that he could charge through the enemy and pass out where he had entered, not however without a considerable loss. This he attempted but did not succeed, the enemy being too strong.

At this instant, Capt. Hardee approached him for the purpose of advising him how to extricate themselves. The firing of the enemy still continuing, Capt. Thornton’s horse, having doubtless received a shot, ran away with him and leaped the chaparral fence and plunged over a precipice, where he fell, with Capt. T. under him, where the latter remained insensible for five or six hours. This casually placed Capt. Hardee in command, who attempted with the residue to make his escape by the river, intending on arriving at its margin to swim it. In this he failed, finding it so boggy that he could not get to it. He then returned, taking the precaution to get out of distance of musketry, dismounted and examined the arms of his men, determining to sell their lives as dearly as possible. Before he had succeeded, however, in the inspection of his arms, a Mexican officer rode up and asked him to surrender. Capt. H. replied that he would surrender on one condition, which was, that if the Mexican General would receive them as prisoners of war, and treat them as the most civilized nations do, he would surrender, but upon no other conditions. The Mexican officer bore this message to the General commanding, and returned with the assurance that he would. Capt. H. then surrendered. Capts. Thornton and Hardee, with Lieuit. Kane and the residue of the non-commissioned officers and privates of Capt. T.’s command are now prisoners of war ion Mexico. The enemy treat them remarkably well.

Lieut. George Mason was a fine young officer, and his death is much regretted. His sabre belt was recognized among some articles that were subsequently captured from the enemy.

So lively is the curiosity to learn every particular of the actions of the 3d and 4th inst., that we annex hereto a letter from an officer at Point Isabel, written more for our private eye than for the public, but which cannot but interest all our readers.

RE46v43i7p4c4, May 22, 1846: [Correspondence of the Picayune.] POINT ISABEL, May 5, 1846.

Gentlemen—When the express came in this morning, I hurriedly pencilled down the gratifying intelligence which it brought us, expecting the boat would leave in a few minutes. It now only awaits for Gen. Taylor’s official despatch, which is being prepared for Washington. Having heard the official report from Major Brown read, and having a letter before me from there, I will give you further particulars accordingly.

On the morning of the 3d, at reveille, the Mexicans opened their batteries upon the work, throwing balls and shells without intermission until sunset, finishing with half a dozen extra ones at tattoo for a lullaby.

At reveille, on the 4th, they opened again, sending a few shots and shells, which compliment was repeated at noon. Our artillery silenced the fort opposite ours in half an hour after the firing commenced on the 4th, and knocked three embrasures into one. This caused them to stop firing there for a considerable time, to repair damages. Our artillery also dismounted several of their guns, and from appearances must have killed many men. On our part, but one sergeant, of the 7th Infantry, was killed—being shot in the head with a three pound ball. He was carried to the hospital, when strange to say, a shell fell and blew the remainder of his head off. Some twenty men were standing around the hospital when the shell burst; several were knocked down, but none injured. One artillery soldier was slightly wounded by a piece of a shell, and many have made narrow escapes. We only kept up our fire for about two hours—saving our ammunition whilst theirs was being thrown away.—From their having thrown from 1,500 to 2,000 shots and shells, and killing but one of our men, and wounding another, you may judge they are none of the best artillerists, and that we had good defences. Their shot rendered a good many of our tents unserviceable, but all our men are in good spirits, and anxious to come to close quarters.

Our piquet guard is now firing at a party of Mexican soldiers, about a mile below the fort.—The Chaparral between this and the fort is like a bee hive, so full is it with Mexicans. It is thought they will make an assault on the rear of the fort, and try and repel the march of the troops from this place returning. Gen. T. leaves as soon as a reinforcement arrives here, which will enable the work to be defended without the force which he brought down from above.

In haste, yours, S.S.F.

RE46v43i7p4c5, May 22, 1846: ITEMS OF THE WAR.

In another column will be found a circumstantial and deeply interesting sketch, from the Picayune, of the recent gallant exploits at Matamoras. It bears a semi-official stamp, and may be relied upon. It must have, indeed, been hot work during one whole day. Is it not extraordinary, that the Mexicans should have fired some 12 or 1500 cannon shot, and only a single one told fatally upon a poor sergeant? Our cannons seem to have been directed with fearful accuracy.—Very few balls could have been wasted. It will be seen, that this account places the command of the forces left in the camp under Maj. Brown; the intelligence published yesterday assigns Maj. Ringold to the command. Whoever conducted the perilous and gallant, but successful defence, has shown himself to be a master of artillery, and will deserve honor at the hands of his country.

Gen. Taylor was to leave Point Isabel for the camp on the 7th inst. He expected to encounter warm opposition, and this morning’s mail may bring us momentous intelligence. Reasoning from what has been done, we look for a glorious and decisive victory in the pitched battle expected between Gen. Taylor and the Mexican army.

Though disappointed in the hope that our own gallant Thornton had escaped safely into our camp, we are still pleased to know, that he is alive, though a prisoner of war in Matamoras, with his brave associates. His adventures are deeply tinged with romance. In some characteristics his exploits remind one of the Irish hero, Charles O’Malley.

Virginia will mourn over the fate of Lieut. Mason, of the Gunstin (Fairfax) family. He was brave and intelligent, and has lost his life nobly in a noble cause.

The N. O. Bulletin has no fears of a "disastrous battle" between Taylor and the Mexicans; expressing its belief that Gen. Taylor would not only leave Point Isabel secure, but would be able to make his way through any force the Mexicans could bring across the river. As for the camp opposite Matamoras, the same journal furnishes the following interesting and gratifying particulars:

"It is a regular bastion intrenchment fortification of five sides, very strong, and well supplied with guns. It has a force of about 550 men, with provisions, as we are informed, for thirty days, and abundance of ammunition except for the 18 pounders, which is accordingly husbanded. The enemy’s artillery, we infer from the little effect of his cannonading, is not so perfect or else not so well served as was supposed. The place may, therefore, we think, be counted free from danger except by assault. There was reason to think that an attempt to storm it was in contemplation by the Mexicans, and their irregular fire kept up for the purpose of fatiguing the garrison in advance. Maj. Brown, however, whom Gen. Taylor left in command, is represented as a very cool and prudent, as well as brave officer, and there is no fear that he will be found at fault; and as a successful assault upon a battery requires so much greater a degree of discipline and resolution than have ever been exhibited by the Mexicans, no attack they can make is likely to be successful."

The Picayune relates the following anecdote of the gallant Texas Ranger, Col. Hays, and vouches for its authenticity. We have often heard of the bravery and military "cunning" of this fine officer, in baffling the pursuit of large bodies of Mexicans, and we doubt not that he will be equal to the present crisis. Hancock Chevallie of this city, a fearless horseman and famous "Indian fighter, " is attached to Hays’ company—young though he be, he has acquired a highly favorable reputation in the Texas Campaign. There is a "touch" of the chivalry of the Middle Ages, in the challenge and acceptance between the two proud chiefs:

"Col. Canales, a Mexican chief, at the head of a large body of cavalry, sent word to Col. Hays, then at San Antonio, to the effect that he, Canales was at the head of 1,200 Mexican cavalry upon the Arroyo Colorado, and should be very happy to receive there Col. Hays and the Rangers.

"To this Col. Hays promptly responded by the same messenger, that it would give him pleasure to pay his respects to Col. Canales, and that he would accordingly wait upon him for that purpose with 400n Rangers on Wednesday morning, the 6th inst.

"Should this interchange of courtesies take place—and we have no reason to doubt it, for Hays is determined to cut his way to General Taylor's camp—we shall assuredly hear of warmer work than any which has yet been reported."

The N. O. Tropic thinks that Vera Cruz is probably bombarded. The steam ship Mississippi, which sailed from Pensacola on the 4th with the news of the commencement of war between this and the Mexican government, probably arrived at Vera Cruz on the 9th. "Ere this we doubt not that the ‘Yankee Commodore, ’ has opened his battery on St. Juan d’Ulloa. He has the victorious example of Prince de Joinville before him, without any of the Prince’s advantages in attacking the Fort—Com. Connor will have to contend against heavier batteries, and better engineers; and the Mexicans will not let him take the position they did the French Prince in the attack. If our surmises are correct, our American tars are triumphant."

The French schooner Gironde, Capt. Pontele, has arrived at New Orleans. She was from Liverpool, bound for Matamoras, but was ordered off from the mouth of the Rio Grande, on the 1st instant, by the U. S. Brig Lawrence.

The volunteers are being collected at New Orleans with new spirit. The Louisiana Legion, an admirable disciplined brigade of citizen soldiers, has offered its services. It will be commanded by Gen. Lewis.

Gen. Gaines has made the following requisitions, and Gov. Martin, of Alabama, has published his Proclamation, calling upon the people to comply with the call:
Reg’s Infantry (700 each) from Kentucky, 2,800.
4 " do. do. Tennessee, 2,800.
2 " do. do. Mississippi, 1,400.
2 " do. do. Missouri, 1,400.
2 " do. do. Alabama 1,400.

Louisiana has furnished 2500
Gen. Saunders’ Mounted Gun Men, 1,000.
Texas will furnish 4 Regiments Infantry, 2,800
U. S. Troops now in Texas, 3,000.

Total to be in the field, 19,000.

Every paper we open contains some call for a public meeting, or a notice of an organization of volunteer companies for the Mexican campaign. We could have no better proof that the people are ready for any emergency.

As an indication of the proper spirit animating the nation, we refer with pleasure to the fact, that, in New Orleans, William Debuys, Esq, who recently held the rank of Major General, has entered the ranks as a private in the Orleans Guards. To the same effect is the following compliment, in the New Orleans Commercial Times, to the disinterested conduct of the merchants of the Crescent City:

“We stated yesterday, a case of high-minded patriotism in the merchantile class of the city, with respect to their employees. We have since learned an additional fact, which highly redounds to the individuals the prominent characters therein. One of our largest trading houses offered their young men to continue them in their situations, and to allow them half their salaries, if the chose to volunteer for Texas, in defence of the integrity of their glorious country.”

On the 12th instant, at the French Theatre in New Orleans, the Orchestra was to execute between the 2d and 3d acts of Donizetti’s celebrated Opera of Les Martyrs, the March of General Taylor, composed and dedicated to the Rio Grande Army, by Mr. Prevost. The public mind seems to be aroused to the highest excitement by the exploits on the fields of Texas.

That the war will be most vigorously prosecuted no one can doubt. We have forborne long enough. We have been covered with insults, indignities and outrages. Such a peace as we had with Mexico was utterly delusive. It was a quasi-war, and uncertainty, embarrassment and gloom hung over our Southern frontier.----It was time that the affair should be brought to a head. head. Mexico capped the climax of madness, by killing our own citizens on our own soil, and we are called upon to punish her insolence, and by one blow to settle all our complaints against her. This is no war of cupiduty or plunder on our part. It is in self-defence, and to avenge the most glaring wrongs, that we have drawn the sword; but we must not sheathe it till we have forced from her a satisfaction of our numerous just claims, and secured a permanent and solid peace. We may pursue her army into the interior—we may capture her rich cities and fertile provinces—and we should hold them as pledges of her respect and good behavior, and thorough compliance with all her promises, express and implied. Our ambition extends no farther. A Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, doubtless, speaks the truth when he says—.

"On hearing of the action of the Senate last night, the President remarked, I shall now give you [peace—I have the power; there is no friend of his country but desires such a consummation as rapidly as possible, and on terms of magnanimity, to an inferior and comparatively impotent adversary."

Such we feel assured is the spirit which animates the President. He would pursue the War promptly and decisively, not to crush a fallen though once insolent foe, nor to strip her territory and wealth, but to obtain justice from her, and to establish a peace upon impregnable grounds. Can any American, however he may deplore the horrors of war, dispute the propriety of such a position?

A CHANGE OF FRONT.—The Southern Recorder, a prominent Whig paper in Milledgeville, Georgia, has boldly come out for the bill of the committee of Ways and means, which de-destroys the “Whig Tariff of 1812,” and proclaims it a good Southern Whig measure. It says, "Southern Whigs will find no difficulty in the way of a cordial support of the measure.” Is not this flat treason to the Whig cause? Will the Whigs of Virginia run up the same flag, or will they gibbet this deserter from their ranks? Is Georgia Whiggery different from that of Virginia? The question is an important one. However it may be, we rejoice that one Whig journal of the South has come out in favor of a principle, which, a few years since, was with a few exceptions, advocated by the whole South.

[BWP]
Gentlemen: Having observed in the Union of the 11th inst., that in giving the vote on the bill which passed yesterday, entitled "An act providing for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico," you omitted my name in favor of the bill, and placed the vote for the bill at 173; whereas, on the journal, it is stated to be 174. This omission and inaccuracy doubtless was accidental.—As the bill is one of great importance, and having voted in favor of the measure, I wish my vote to be placed fully and fairly before my constituents. So, therefore, you will oblige me by inserting this note in your next paper.

Most respectfully, EDMUND W. HUBARD.

To Messrs. RICHIE & HEISS.

A detachment of the Richmond Artillery Company turned out yesterday evening to receive General Scott—But he did not arrive.—They wished to salute him in military style, and cheer on the soldier in the arduous and honorable duty in which he will soon be engaged.

An immense meeting has been held at Harrisburg, Pa., in favor of sustaining the war with Mexico.

A Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American says that the 50,000 volunteers are all to be called out, and 23,000 to be marched into the field as soon as they can be concentrated. The requisitions sent on last Friday, were as follows: "3 regiments from Indiana, 3 from Illinois, 3 from Kentucky, 3 from Tennessee and others. The residue of the 50,000 will be kept as a force of reserve, and be mustered in the service, so as to be ready for orders at a moment's warning. Mark me, this will be a successful war and a short one!"

This brave soldier has acquitted himself with so much gallantry, that if he gain no more renown, he deserves, and must receive, the most honorable praise from his countrymen. We learn that he once lived in this city a cabinet-maker. If he have to boast many more deeds of valor, he may, some day, in virtue of the military prestige, so powerful in this country, be employed in a cabinet-making of a different kind. [Yesterday's Times]

The last arrivals confirm the account of the loss sustained by Capt. W.'s command in their fight with a large body of Mexicans, though he had only 24 men, instead of 75, as was stated in one narrative. We are glad to hear that but six of his men were killed, the remainder making their way into Point Isabel.

The Times may not be far out of its reckoning, in regard to the probable political honors of the gallant captain. A New Orleans paper already designates him as the future Governor of Tamaulipas. Such services deserve ample reward—and we are pleased to learn that Richmond was once his head quarters.

At a meeting in Washington city last week for the purpose of forming a volunteer company. Col. R. M. Johnson was loudly called for, . . . addressed the meeting in his usual style of oratory. He said he was not for stopping on the Rio Grande, if he had his way. He would march into the interior of Mexico, and cut their departments right and left. He was not desirous of a war, but the time had arrived when forbearance had ceased to be a virtue. He spoke of cutting off California from the Republic of Mexico, and if the people desire it, he was in favor of annexing California to our country. He said the present war was only a wedding and a dinner compared with the last struggle for our independence. He concluded by saying he was for acting not speaking; which was responded to with three hearty cheers of approbation from the multitude.

We are so much delighted with the true spirit, eloquence and justice of the following resolutions, unanimously adopted, on motion of Mr. Richardson, by the City Council of the Monumental city, that we give them entire. Baltimore is always in the lead, when the honor of the country is at stake:

Whereas, The peace of the civilized world has been broken by the military authorities of Mexico, and the soil of the United States has been invaded by a portion of her army, and whereas, these acts of defiance and outrage upon the United States, have been preceded by a systematic and long continued course of a faithlessness, falsehood and insolence, upon the part of the government of Mexico towards this country; and whereas, it is the duty of the General Government to extend its care and protection over every citizen of the Union, and over every foot of its soil, therefore.

Resolved, By the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, that we fully approve of the whole course pursued by the administration, in the annexation, occupancy and defence of Texas; and that we have entire confidence that the interests, the honor and the glory of the country will be protected, preserved and increased by the triumphant issue of the contest forced upon us by the invasion of our soil on the part of Mexico.

Resolved, That the prompt and decided action of both houses of Congress, upon the announcement that war had been commenced by Mexico, meets with our hearty approval, and will be hailed with enthusiasm by the patriotism of the country.

Resolved, That the city of Baltimore is prepared, whenever occasion may demand it, to show that the blood of the Old Maryland Line still courses in the veins of her sons, and that they are now, as were their fathers in the revolution, ready to stake “their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor,” in defence of their country and their country’s rights.

Resolved, That the Mayor of the city, with such assistants as he may deem necessary, be empowered and directed to have all the public arms now scattered throughout the city collected and properly repaired, and placed in some suitable and safe position, ready for service.

Resolved, That the sum of one thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury, or to come into the treasury, for the purpose of carrying out the above resolutions, to be paid by the Register upon the draft of the Mayor.

We understand from the Washington Union that, on Saturday last, the following vessels were ordered to repair forthwith to the seat of war.

Steamers Spencer, McLane and Legare.

Schooners Ewing, Woodbury, Morris, and (unreadable)ward, with an aggregate force of two hundred and fifty men and thirty-five guns of from thirty-two to twelve pound calibre.

We would call the attention of the Volunteer Corps, who may be disposed to unite in the formation of a Virginia Legion, to the resolution adopted unanimously by the Artillery Company on Tuesday night. If action is to be had we think that the present is the auspicious moment. We hope to see delegates from all the Volunteer Corps, who may be able to reach this place by the 29th May.
At a meeting of the Richmond Fayette Artillery Company, held at Military Hall on the 19th May, 1846, on motion of Lieut. Ritchie, it was unanimously.

Resolved, 1. That, in the present condition of our relations with Mexico, it is proper that every citizen should hold himself in readiness to . . .[illegible] . . . whatever issue may arise.

2. That his Company is still actuated by the same impulse of duty which occasioned . . .[illegible] . . .der of its services to the President of the United States in the summer of last year, and ready now, as it ever has been, to obey any call which may be made upon it in consequence thereof.

3. That still further to promote the efficiency of the Volunteers who may respond in Virginia to the call of the country, this Company . . .[illegible] . . . with high gratification the proposition for the formation of a VIRINGIA LEGION.

4. That this Company invites the officers of or delegates from other companies which may be willing to unite in the formation of a Virginia Legion, to meet it at its Anniversary, on 29th of the present month, to devise measures successfully to carry out this design.

5. That the Captain of this Company be requested to apply to the Governor of Virginia for tents and camp equipage for this Company with a view to the formation of an encampment during the summer, or for the use of the Corps in case it is sooner called into service. THOS. H. ELLIS, Captain. E. RAUS, Secretary.
The Washington Union of Tuesday night says the President continues to receive numerous offers of service from Volunteers.

Governor Shunk of Pennsylvania has issued a Proclamation called upon the citizens of that State to hold themselves in readiness promptly to meet and repel the enemies of the Republic, and to preserve the rights and honor and secure the perpetuity of the Union.

Glorious News from the Seat of War!

THE MEXICANS TWICE ROUTED!!!

1200 Mexicans Killed!

THE ENEMY’S GUNS CARRIED AT THE POINT OF THE BAYONET!

The Southern cars came in this morning with flying colors, and brought us joyful tidings from the seat of war. The N. Orleans Picayune and the Advertiser of the 18th inst. furnish the news, the substance of which is given below. No slips were forwarded to Richmond. But a passenger supplied the editors of the Republican with one, and we are indebted to that office for favoring us with a copy:

There have been two engagements between General Taylor and the American Troops. The first occurred on the 7th instant, when General Taylor was returning from Point Isabel to his Camp, opposite Matamoras. In this the Mexicans, from 5,000 to 7,000, were repulsed, our army sleeping on the field of battle, on which next day were found 200 Mexicans dead, several pieces of artillery, stores, &c. Maj. Ringgold died subsequently from the wound in this action.

Of the second battle we can only give the following particulars from the Picayune:

The U. S. Steamer Col. Harney arrived this morning, just as our paper was going to press, from Brazos Santiago, having left on the 13th inst. Her news is glorious to our arms.

She brings official accounts of a second battle between the Mexican and American forces, which took place on the 9th, commencing at half past 3 o’clock, P. M., within three miles of Camp Taylor. The action was upon the edge of a ravine, and one mile from the chapparal, which was here about 12 miles in width.

The Mexicans commenced the action with their artillery, which was posted so as to sweep the narrow pass by which Gen. Taylor was advancing; there being a swamp on either hand, Gen. Taylor immediately ordered a charge in the teeth of the enemy’s destructive fire, and the troops promptly responded, and carried the enemy’s guns at the point of the bayonet.

So sudden and impetuous was the attack, and so successful, that Arista had not time to save his papers, which, with all his correspondence, fell into the hands of General Taylor.

The action lasted one hour and a half, in which some 600 Mexicans were either killed or wounded, and the Americans took 800 prisoners and eight pieces of artillery. The American loss in this action was but sixty-two, killed and wounded.

Among the killed were Colonel McIntosh, Lieutenant Cochran, Colonel Brown, (by the bursting of a shell,) Lieutenant Eng, and one or two others, whose names are not given. Colonel Payne, Lieutenants Gates, Burgank, Hooe, Luther and others, were wounded.

We regret to say that Maj. Ringgold, who was so severely wounded in the action of the 8th, died on the 10th inst., and was buried next day with the honors of war.

The total loss of the Americans in the two actions of the 8th and 9th, was at least 1200. The Mexican force amounted to at least 6000 men, while that of the Americans on the ground did not exceed 1600 men.

An exchange of prisoners took place between the two armies subsequent to the action, by which Capts. Thornton and Hardee and Lieut. Kane have been returned to the army. Lieut. Deas was not demanded, and still remains a prisoner.

—Among the prisoners taken by Gen. Taylor, was Gen. Vega. For him two American officers were offered in exchange, but it was declined to give him up, save in exchange for an American of equal rank, whenever one should be taken.

Gen. Vega and two Mexican lieutenants were sent over by Gen. Taylor on the Col. Harney as prisoners of war. Gen. Vega was allowed to be accompanied by one of his aides, a Lieut. Colonel, as a friend.

The Mexican army was so confident of victory that every preparation had been made to celebrate it; but all their preparations fell into the hands of the Americans. In their flight, many of the Mexicans took to the river and were drowned in their attempt to swim.

Gen. Taylor reached his camp the afternoon of the action. Leaving there his whole force, he started the next morning for Point Isabel, and arrived there the evening of the 10th without molestation. The morning of the 11th he started back for his camp opposite Matamoros. We need not say that he and his army are in the highest spirits.

Credible information had been received, that the American Consul, and all the American citizens at Matamoros, had been arrested and sent to Saltillo, a small town about 130 miles back of Matamoros.

The friends of Capt. Thornton will be gratified to learn that he is still living. Letters had been received from him in the camp, announcing that he had been captured by the enemy, and was held a prisoner at Matamoros.
the Mexicans were in the edge of the Chapparal. A council of war was held by Gen. Taylor, and it was agreed that one Brigade should advance up to the Chapparal in hopes to draw the Mexicans into a renewal of the fight, but the more the troops advanced upon them the more they want there—the Mexicans having retreated leaving three pieces of artillery, and quantity of ammunition—from FOUR to SIX HUNDRED DEAD upon the field, and God only knows how many wounded that they took away. One Mexican, who was stationed at one of their batteries, says every body but himself at the batteries was killed—says the guns beat any thing they ever dreamed of, they were so quick. One of the Mexican officers in trying to rally his men, found he could not hand commenced to cut them with his sword, when his troops shot him dead.—We had 11 killed, and about ten mortally wounded.

Capt. Page, of the 3d, had all the lower part of his face shot off with a cannon ball—it is thought he will recover, though horribly mutilated. Maj. Ringold had the fleshy part of both his legs shot through, and horse killed—none of his bones broken, which is wonderful. Our informant says the field of battle was strewed with the dead, and they could hear the groans of the Mexican wounded all night at Gen. T. ’s camp. The Mexican’s were commanded by Gen. Mejia. Mejia. There is no doubt they have retreated across the river. When the volunteers arrive you may depend you will hear of them “revelling in the halls of the Montezumas,” or “peace and good will” will be whipped into those bombastic Mexicans. It is a matter of surprise that so few were lost on our side.

The monotony of this place has been relieved the last two days by the drilling of "Uncle Samuel’s” “web-feet” or "barnacle-backs” that came here from the Squadron. You would be surprised to see with what dexterity and precision they go through their evolutions with muskets, and no one could resist a laugh to hear some of their sayings. One old salt said this morning “Damn and blast my eyes! here is a ship ashore, and poor Jack on his beam ends.” This speech was addressed to himself, when looking on the tent that had been pitched, and was of sufficient dimensions to hold about fifty-two.

One third of the whole number of the men from the Squadron are Marines, the balance Tars. I should picture to myself a soldier, riding horseback on a cow, as soon as that I should see four or five hundred sailors going into war with muskets on their shoulders; but you could not restrain them from going against the Mexicans with only a knife and fork, if you would only show them a chance, for they are all "eager for the fray." Yours, &c.

RE46v43i8p1c1, May 26, 1846: LATEST NEWS, From the Mobile Advertiser, Extra May 18.

Triumph of the American Arms!
GEN. TAYLOR AGAIN VICTORIOUS!!

(Correspondence of the New Orleans Tropic.) BRASOS SANTIAGO, May 13.

At the receipt of the news of the first battle I wrote you a short account—the result of the second is now on hand; and it is most decisive. It now appears that the Mexicans had only 5,000 men in the field at the first battle, and 4,000 stowed away in the chapparel near the battle-ground. It was their intention to have made but a slight attack the first day, but, being so closely pressed, they were obliged to fight in order to make good their retreat to where the 4,000 were on the chapparel. In the first fight a general officer had his head shot off: it is not yet ascertained who he was, as his body could only be recognized by his dress as he lay upon the field.

Gen. Taylor advanced the morning of the first battle into the chapparel, then sent 800 picked men, under the command of Capt. McCall, to reconnoitre. He advanced unmolested until near . . . [illegible] . . . P. M., (the army following at a distance) when Capt. McCall sent word to Gen. Taylor that he had received a charge of grape from the enemy, and lost two men. The army was then deployed, and Capt. May, 2d Dragoons, ordered to charge the battery that had thrown the grape, and to take it, if he lost every man. He obeyed orders, took the battery of four guns and lost but one man. The battery was commanded by Gen. De La Vega, who was taken prisoner.

Our little army of an army then rent the air with their huzzas, and rushing shouting upon the enemy, committed the most dreadful havoc among them, taking eight pieces of artillery, 155,000 rounds of cartridge, and 500 packed mules. Gen. Arista’s camp bedstead contained all his private and public baggage papers, which latter will be of great value, as we now have the key to the whole campaign, which will enable Gen. T. to form his plans so as to entirely defeat their designs.

We took all and everything they had, four hundred prisoners, and the army baggage. The enemy had between 8 and 9,000 troops in the two battles but we with 1,800 troops completely routed them.

We exchanged prisoners—got Capts. Thornton, Hardee, and his little band. Our officers while prisoners were well treated, having lived with Ampudia ever since they were taken. Gen. Taylor would not exchange for Lieut. Deas as a prisoner of war, as it would be sanctioning his crossing the river, which he did not, having reprobated his crossing in the severest manner.

In this second and glorious battle, we lost about the same number of men as in the first, but had more officers wounded. Capt. Walker with his heroic band of Rangers, was the last that fired at the Mexicans; the army left him and his comrades on the bank of the river shooting them as they attempted to cross.
To-morrow Gen. Taylor leaves here to make an attack on Matamoras, in connection with Com. Connor, who has sent a boat expedition up the river.

I forgot to mention that Gen. Taylor arrived here yesterday with all our wounded, between 50 and 60, with Gen. Romulus De la Vega, one Mexican Captain and two Lieutenants, who go with this letter in the Col. Harney.

The Augusta from New Orleans arrived last evening. The mules from Matamoras, some 500, were sent in to-day, as well as the Mexican wounded.

I should not forget to mention that all the shell, ball, and grape shot of the Mexicans are made of brass or copper. This letter I must close, with details of glory enough for one day!

In the decisive battle Gen. Taylor lost about sixty killed and wounded, among whom there were three officers, viz: Lieut. Inges, of the Dragoons; Lieut. Cochran, of the 4th Infantry, and Lieut. Chadburn, of the 8th Infantry. Among the wounded are Col. Maintosh, of the 5th Infantry; Lieut. Col. Payne, 4th Artillery, and Capt. Hooe, 5th Infantry—most of them slightly, and none supposed mortally.

Major Ringgold, well known as the commander of the Flying Artillery, also died on the 11th, from wounds received in the action of the 8th.

Captain Page, who was wounded in the same engagement, we are happy to state, is rapidly recovering. Lieut. Luther, also slightly wounded, is convalescent.

STILL LATER FROM THE ARMY!

THE GALVESTON ARRIVED

The Galveston is just in, having left Brassos Santiago on the evening of the 13th. We hasten to lay the news by her before our readers. We have the following from the Galveston Civilian of the 15th:

On the morning of the 13th, Gen. Taylor and his staff, with the guard that had brought down the rain, &c., started for his camp. He was met by an express a few miles from Point Isabel, informing him that 8,000 fresh troops had arrived in Matamoras, 2,000 of which had crossed over, and 1,100 more had crossed the Rio Grande at Barrita, near the Bocachica, not more than eight miles from Point Isabel. Gen. Taylor returned to Point Isabel at once, and made preparations to leave next day with such forces as were arriving. The steamship Galveston landed 450 Infantry, (Regulars and Volunteers;) the Augusta landed about 250; Capt. Price arrived via Padre Island from Corpus Christi, with his company of 70 mounted Rangers. They all reached the Point on the 13th. The Telegraph and James L. Day will doubtless land their troops, amounting to upwards of 800, at Point Isabel on the 14th. Great credit is due to Captain Jeremiah Smith of the steamship Cincinnati, and Capt. R. McBaker of the Monmouth, for the skill, energy and promptness shown in management of their boats in transporting troops and supplies across the Bay at the Brassos Santiago.

General Paredes is at the head of 15,000 troops, on his way to Matamoras. It may possibly be, that the fresh troops arrived at Matamoras, in the advance division of his army. No doubt the enemy were fully advised that General Taylor had left for Point Isabel, and their plan is to try and capture him on his return, whilst a strong force, crossing above, is to come down upon his army. General Taylor appeared highly pleased with the intelligence; for since the war has opened, and no mistake, the excitement and activity attending operations, opens a new era to his vigorous achievements, and all have marked how much better he looks than when confined to the “masterly inactivity” of the Corpus Christi Campaign.

THE FORT.

The brave and gallant Maj. Brown died on the 10th, from a wound received in his thigh by the explosion of one of the enemy’s shells. His wound was not considered dangerous, but as he was placed in one of the bomb-proof burrows, mortification ensued, from the want of fresh air. His death is deeply deplored by the army; his intrepid conduct in foiling every attempt of the enemy to reduce the Fort prepared them in a measure to anticipate the result of these conflicts with our brave army. The strength of the Fort and skill with which it is defended, is incomprehensible to the Mexicans, and indeed well it might be, for they have thrown upwards of fourteen hundred shot and shell into the the Fall of the Alamo, and is a brave and accomplished officer. Gen. Vega, is the Col. Vega that was captured by the Texan forces at the Slaughter of San Jacinto. He was also at the mouth of the river, where there is a military force.

It is stated that an expedition is to be sent by boats of the squadron to take the town of Barita, 16 miles from the mouth of the river, where there is a military force.

Gen. Vega, is the Col. Vega that was captured by the Texan forces at the Slaughter of San Jacinto. He was also at the Fall of the Alamo, and is a brave and accomplished officer.

RE46v43i8p1c5, May 26, 1846: PARTY SPIRIT.

In the present crisis, we would cheerfully drop the character of partizans, and until the storm of war be past, unite with all political parties, whatever be their hue, in devising measures for the vigorous prosecution and termination of the war with Mexico. We have never, for party effect, claimed any great honor for the Administration in the management of the difficult questions before it. We have contended that the President had done his duty and nothing but his duty. We have been willing to wait until peace is restored, for a fair and full trial of the Administration upon the merits of the Mexican affair. If for party purposed we quarrel among ourselves, how can we expect to see union at home, or secure the respect of foreign nations? The Whig press, with some few exceptions, have, in our judgment, exhibited a most unpatriotic and improper spirit in this matter. They have denounced the President as the most miserable culprit, and have assailed the criminality of the war, as invoking the vengeance of Heaven.

As conductors of a free press, we have been forced to hold up to public condemnation many of the Whig journals for their violent course in regard to the Mexican war. We to-day make a few extracts from journals of the same party, and show that in their spirit and their assaults upon the Government, they have given this cue to some of the bitterest opponents, in a Foreign Government, of our political institutions and national rights. As good party-men, they may feel conscious of doing their whole duty—but they show themselves to be poor patriots. The New York Express continues its furious attacks upon the Administration, upon Congress, and upon the virtue and intelligence of the American people, embracing a large majority of its own party:

"There is an utter and complete revolution in our country, and a conversion of our Republic into a despotism, if the one-man power, the Executive of it, can declare war. We vain Republicans, if this be the fact, are only cheated by a name, and we are not better off then the subjects of the Amocrat Nicholas, or of the Emperor of Austria. When a despot orders war, subjects obey. Is this our case? Let us see.

"Mr. Polk has not ordered war, it is very true, but he has made war inevitable, and upon this evasion, it is attempted to get him off. The one-man power of government, in imitation of the one-man power of governments over sea, as Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy, directs the invasion of the State of a neighboring republic, and without the then useless formality of a declaration of war, war necessarily ensues—that is, a war created and declared by one man, and only one man, in which from love of country, from sympathy, and from the laws of self-defence, a whole nation of subjects follow.

"Now, it is just as easy for Mr. Polk to involve us in a war with Great Britain, as in a war with Mexico, and precisely upon the same principles. Thus, what has been hitherto considered of some importance, in responsible monarchies, viz: the declaration of war, is to become a mere empty nothing, in our so called, but, if Mr. Polk is right, misnamed, responsible Republic. The Executive here in America, we see, enacts war, just as the Executive in Europe, Asia, or Africa.

"The highest, most august, and awful exercise of human power, is in the creation of war. But this high and mighty power of sovereignty, this semblance of the prerogative of the Divinity, a chance elected President of ours, whom the spasms of only a party ejected into place, clothes himself with, and when the country is at peace, happy and quiet, he secretly and clandestinely whispers a decree, that creates all the horrors of a war between two formerly friendly, and once sympathising Republics. He degrades us in the eyes of Philanthropy, and Constitutional Liberty, from the August pedestal of Peace, on which for thirty years we have stood, and confuses us with the rabble of ever-warring and butchering Spanish American Republics, that disgrace the name of liberty.

"The mournful moral of this picture is not, however, that one man has dared to do such a thing, as that a great party can be found so infatuated, so blind, so forgetful of their duty to Constitutional Liberty, as to sustain him! The sting of the reflection is, that even we Americans love a party more than we love liberty! The idolatry, we see, and we tremble as we see, that disgraces the Hindoo, and makes him unfit for freedom or Christianity, disgraces too many even among us, the only difference being that they worship images of things and creatures, and we worship a party!"[BWP]
The Southern mail of Sunday confirmed, to a great degree, the glorious intelligence received on Saturday, of the double defeat of the Mexicans: which news came on so rapidly by express, that many persons gave it not credit. From all accounts we gather, that in the first battle (of the 8th,) 200 Mexicans were killed, and in the second battle (9th inst.) from 400 to 600 were found dead on the field—to say nothing of those who were wounded or drowned in the river. One account states that 2400 Mexicans were missing. We find in the N. Orleans Delta the following striking anecdote of the first battle:

“When Gen. Taylor came in sight of the enemy, their number appeared so large that he exclaimed, ‘Friends, we must vanquish or die!’—saying which he ordered the dragoons to charge on the Mexican Artillery. They immediately obeyed their commander’s order, and made such an onslaught on them that they were compelled to abandon nine field pieces and seek their safety in flight.”

The New Orleans Picayune gives a detailed account of the engagement of the 8th. We deplore the death of our gallant officers and soldiers. We are pained to hear that our old friend and school-fellow, Lieutenant Joseph Selden, is among the wounded:

“Gen. Taylor left Point Isabel on the 7th inst., with 2,000 men and 250 wagons loaded with stores, for the fort opposite Matamoras. On the 8th, came in sight of the Mexican army, and when quite near, both armies commenced firing with their artillery. The Mexicans, from 7,000 to 10,000 strong, surrounded Gen. Taylor, but those on the rear were soon compelled to retreat. The battle commenced at noon, and a constant roar of cannon was kept up until dark, when all was quiet. The Mexicans retreated, but the American army slept on the battle field in battle array. About 200 Mexicans were left dead.—The American firing was so destructive that the Mexican officers could not bring their men to a charge.

“On the 8th, three frigates, one sloop and two brigs of war arrived off the Bar, from Vera Cruz, and came to anchor; and, on hearing the roar of cannon, sent five hundred men to Point Isabel, to protect our depot of stores, or reinforce Gen. Taylor, if necessary. They were all well armed, and anxious for a fight with the Mexicans.—While the battle was being fought, two companies of Mexican artillery came down to Cross, Bocha Chica, and marched up the beach to take possession of our vessels with stores, which were obliged to anchor very near the Point. Our flag ship Cumberland got under way and ran down towards them—seeing which, the wheeled and returned back.

“By the official report of the action, it appears that Colonel McIntosh is not killed, but desperately wounded. Major Brown, not Colonel, as we stated, was killed in command of Fort Taylor by the explosion of a shell. The following is as complete a list of the officers killed and wounded on our side, in both actions, as we have been able to obtain:

Killed.—Major Brown, 7th Infantry—wounded in Fort Taylor—died on the 10th; Major Ringold, 3d Artillery, wounded on the 8th, and died on the 10th; Lieutenant Inges, 2d Dragoons; Lieutenant Cochrane, 4th Infantry; Lieutenant Chadburne, 8th Infantry.

Wounded.—Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh, 5th Infantry; Lieutenant Colonel Payne, 4th Artillery; Captains Page, (in the action of the 8th, ) Hooe, Montgomery; Lieutenants Luther, (in the action of the 8th, ) Gates, Selden, McClure, Burbank, Jordan, and Fowler.

“The Mexicans killed, wounded and missing, cannot be easily ascertained. General Taylor sent over on the 10th permission to General Arista to send over Doctors to assist in taking care of his wounded—they came over last night, and reported forty-eight of the Mexican officers missing, while we lost but three. The Americans are all doing well, says a letter from an officer.”

Some of the ammunition taken from the enemy in the first engagement was used upon them in the second.

The following Mexican officers were taken prisoners: Gen. La Vega, Lieuts. Prada and Velez, Lieut. Col. Martines, Aid-de-Camp to Gen. La Vega, accompanied the Gen. voluntarily. They arrived at New Orleans on the 17th May, on the Col. Harney, in the charge of Lieut. J. J. Reynolds of the 4th Artillery.

Gen. Ampudia is reported to have been taken prisoner.

In addition to the accounts of these glorious exploits of the army, we learn by the steamer Galveston, that President Paredes, with 15,000 men was marching to Matamoras. If this be so, it is a very good thing. Gen. Taylor with his forces reinforced to eight or ten thousand, will be enabled by one blow to cut down the Mexican power, and put an end to the war. But we hope that no time will be lost in marching into the interior of the country, say as far as Saltillo, (130 miles, ) and forcing Mexico to a full acknowledgement of all our demands. By this means alone can we hope to obtain a solid peace.

Louisiana has covered herself with glory. See what the Delta says of the patriotic conduce of her Legislature:

RE46v43i8p1c7, May 26, 1846: MEXICAN NAVY.

A Mexican paper publishes the list of vessels to which, by order of the President Paredes, the Mexican navy should be reduced. It is as follows:

For Vera Cruz—brigs Veracruzana, Libre and Mexicana, and a gun boat, with 62 men in each of the two brigs.

For Tobasco—schr.Aguila, with 53 men, and schr.Libertad, with 30 men.

For Tampico—gun boats Queretana, Poblana, and Victoria, with 30 men each.

For Matamoras—gun boats Guerrero and Union, with 30 men each.

RE46v43i8p2c1, May 26, 1846: IS THERE "WAR?"

We presume that no one will now dispute this proposition. The Savannah Republican (Whig) refers to the Proclamation of President Paredes, as "amounting to a Declaration of War against the United States, though it is not issued in that form." But the stirring scenes on the Rio Grande put the matter beyond all doubt. We not only see the flower of the Mexican army, under its most distinguished and able Generals marching into our territory and assailing our army, though with dreadful loss—but the last accounts state, that the President of Mexico himself is on his march to Matamoras, with 15,000 men, to make one grand and decisive blow—though that he will be cut to pieces, no American can doubt. Is it necessary, then, to enter into protracted arguments to prove the existence of the war? The events which have crowded themselves into a short space speak for themselves, and declare, in language not to be mistaken, that war exists, and did exist, at the time when President Polk announced the fact to Congress. The country has approved of the vigorous and wise course of the President and Congress. No other would have suited the strong exigency of the case. See with what cordial approbation the action of the President is hailed by the N. O. Commercial Times, a neutral paper:

"Simultaneously with the arrival of the interesting details of the exploits of our gallant little army on the Rio Grande, information reached us of the action of President Polk and the Cabinet at Washington, on the receipt of the news of a status belli existing on the Texan frontier.

"We are happy to congratulate our fellow citizens on the promptitude displayed by the Executive at this momentous juncture. He has proved himself equal to his mission, as the head of this great Commonwealth. Henceforward, action, action, action, will be the motto of the Government, in relation to Mexico. We shall not have a little war, and the United States will reveal her resources to her enemy, so as to bring the conflict to an issue with that rapidity which her greatness, as well as the cause of humanity, demands.

"With regard to the Army of Occupation, it has deserved well of the Republic, from the intrepid and skilful veteran who has thus led the way to victory, to the humblest soldier, who wields a sword or carries a musket, in the ranks. We deplore the loss we have sustained in the death of the brave men who fell in the battles of the 8th and 9th, but we derive a consolation in the reflection that in filling the patriot-warrior’s grave, their memories will ever be hallowed in the page of their country’s history.”.

We shall now see whether the Whig press will come forward to do justice to the President. They have charged him with recklessness and imbecility in sending so small an army to the Rio Grande, which would surely fall a prey to the overwhelming forces of Mexico. Now this little army, without the aid of Volunteers, has itself achieved the triumphs, which are ringing through the land. In throwing up fortifications to defend the troops, and in meeting and overthrowing the enemy in the field, our officers have shown consummate prudence and skill. The little army has been found equal to the occasion; and though the country has lost some of its bravest and noblest spirits, it was the fortune of war, and could not have been controlled by any human power. All are struck with astonishment that such brilliant triumphs should have been attended by such a limited loss of life on our side.

As, then, the Administration has been so grossly and wantonly denounced in advance for this Mexican War, is it not just that it should have some little credit for the favorable results which have been heralded throughout the nation? As is well said by the Augusta (Georgia) Constitutionalist, in exposing the unjust assaults of its Whig neighbor upon the President:

"We honor too highly the laurels so nobly won by the gallant Gen. Taylor, in the righteous can honorable war in which he is so zealously engaged, to desire to pluck a leaf from the chaplet. But we will remark, by way of parenthesis, that the 'blunders' of this same 'blundering Administration,' as the Chronicle is so fond of designating them, have enabled that gallant General to win at once unfading laurels for himself, and of reflecting immortal lustre upon American arms. In spite of the sneers of the Chronicle, and its few sympathising sneerers, if the blundering Administration will commit a few more such blunders, it will be one of the most famous, most illustrious and triumphant, of all that have signalised the history of our country." [BWP]

To prevent all misconstruction of the notice taken by us of Greys' tender, of services to the Governor, we will state that on Saturday morning Capt. R. G. Scott, Jr., offered to Gov. Smith the services of his company (63) for the Mexican Campaign. We presume that the Gov. will make the selection of the 30 companies under the requisition of the General Government, as soon as sufficient time shall have elapsed for the offer of volunteers from different portions of Virginia. [BWP]

It is said that Gen. Arista commanded the Mexican army, and was present at the late battle near Gen. Taylor's camp. A friend has given us some striking anecdotes of the honesty, intelligence and simple bearing of Gen. A. For some years he resided at Cincinnati, and carried on the tinning business. In the city of Mexico he worked industriously in his little tin-shop.—Under the garb of modesty and poverty he concealed an ambitious spirit. His very simplicity of life saved him from the effects of jealous and domineering rivalry; but, in the excitement of war, he was called forth to take command of the Mexican Army. He is said to be a man of qualities vastly superior to those of his countrymen. [BWP]

Gov. Smith's Proclamation will speak for itself. Though brief, it is to the point, and will arrest the attention. We doubt not hat in a short time the services of a sufficient number of Virginia volunteers will be tendered to meet any emergency which they may be called on to encounter. [BWP]

The Officers of the United States Army of Occupation have raised a purse of 1,000 dollars, as a compliment to Capt. Walker, the gallant Texan. [BWP]

Our attention has been called to an erroneous representation of the remarks made by our eloquent friend, Robert G. Scott, Esq., at the public meeting of the 14th instant, to raise a Company of Volunteers. The published statement represented him as saying, that "the fate of General Taylor's army was sealed." Strange to say, Mr. Scott affirmed directly the opposite. He said, on the contrary, that he had not doubt General Taylor's army was safe—that he was a gallant and noble old officer, who knew what he was doing. Mr. Scott further avowed the opinion, that all General Taylor’s movements had been marked by a wisdom, prudence and foresight, worthy of all praise—and he predicted, that the next authentic accounts would bring the gratifying intelligence that he had soundly “thrashed” these semi-barbarians. We take great pleasure in placing Mr. Scott on the true ground. His predictions have been gloriously realized. We only regret that, even for a short space, the published statement of his remarks should have thrown the least doubt over his usual judgment and discrimination. The public will not know what he did say, and how his views have been verified to the letter.

RE46v43i8p2c4, May 26, 1846: ARMY.

Gen. Taylor arrived at Point Isabel on the 2d inst., with a part of his command, numbering 1,800 men, to assist in placing the Point in a proper state of defence. The works were completed on the 6th, and on the next day at 3 P. M. he took up his line of march for his camp opposite Matamoras, and came to a halt for the night at the water hole about 8 miles distant from Point Isabel. The next morning the spies and scouts came in and reported that the Mexican force, believed to be all their army, had taken up position in the chaparral, about nine miles distant, and had thrown works a cross the road, which was well fortified with cannon.

General Taylor sent back a part of his wagon train, as he could not well afford a sufficient guard to protect it all. His entire force consisted of 2,300 men. The Mexican force, from all that could be learned by our scouts and spies for some days previously, was believed to be between 5,000 and 6,000 men; 1,800 of which was composed of cavalry and Rancheros, the latter being considered the most effective troops in Mexico.

Gen. Taylor put his army in motion, and on reaching the enemy, it was found they were occupying the chaparral, and had thrown up breast works along the road, with several pieces of cannon planted so as to sweep the road. No time was lost in arranging the order of battle, and advancing upon the enemy, the latter opening their artillery, which was speedily returned by our forces. The Mexican cavalry undertook to charge our lines under cover of the smoke—the 5th regiment of Infantry having formed a square, received them with a deadly fire. Maj. Ringgold and Capt. Page had his lower jaw shot off.

The battle was now principally confined to artillery on both sides. The Mexicans aiming too high, which prevented much loss on our side.—Our Flying Artillery was very destructive to the hopes of the enemy; the rapidity and despatch with which it was brought to bear on different points of the enemy’s line created great havoc. Maj. Ringgold received a shot through both his thighs, killing his horse under him. Capt. Page had his lower jaw shot off.

The cannonading continued from about 3 P. M., until sun-down, and could be heard distinctly at Point Isabel. The Mexicans retreated and left one piece of cannon on the field. Several prisoners were taken. The latter were asked, why their cavalry did not charge? They answered it was impossible to get them to do so after the first repulse; the firing was too hot; the men could not be kept to their arms, but would break and run; the order to charge was repeatedly given; a few of the cavalry would advance, but not finding themselves supported by their comrades, would fall back again to the main body. They stated, that one of the officers of the cavalry was so indignant at his troops disobeying his orders that he rushed in among them, cutting right and left, and that one of this men drew his pistol and shot him dead.

We lost some 45 in killed and wounded.—They left about 130 in killed and wounded on the field—a large portion of the latter being carried off.

The next morning Gen. Taylor left with the train a few pieces of artillery and a guard to protect themselves and the wounded, and pushed or with 1800 effective men in pursuit of the enemy. He found they had retreated some eight miles off and taken up a position a few miles below the camp, opposite Matamoras, occupying some of the trenches which had been thrown up by our forces previous to their marching to Point Isabel.

The battle commenced by heavy cannonading on both sides. Gen. Taylor, in passing his lines, accosted Capt. May, of the 2d dragoons, and told him: “Your regiment has never done anything yet—you must take that battery.” He said nothing, but turned to his command and said: “We must take that battery—follows!” He made a charge with three companies—at least with the remainder of three companies—supported by the 5th and 8th regiments of infantry. They cleared the breastwork, rode over the battery, wheeled and came through the enemy’s line, whilst the fire of the infantry was so deadly in its effect as to carry all before it. Capt. May made a cut at an officer as he charged through—on his return, he found him standing between the wheels of a cannon, fighting like hero. He ordered him to surrender. He was asked if he was an officer. Capt. May answered him in the affirmative, when he presented his sword, remarking: “You receive Gen. Vega a prisoner of war.”

Capt. May gave him in charge of one of his sergeants, who had lost his horse in the charge, ordering him to conduct him to Gen. T. out of the lines.

Lieutenant Inge, a brave and gallant officer of the 2d Dragoons, fell in this charge. A complete panic and route ensued on the part of the enemy; they fled in every direction for the river; many were drowned in attempting to cross. Eight pieces of artillery fell into our hands, and innumerable quantity of small arms, munitions, baggage, camp equipage, military chest, containing a large amount of gold; Gen. Arista’s carriage, baggage, port-folio, with all his official correspondence with the Government, with full plans of the campaign, and instructions from the Mexican government, authorizing him to send Gen. Taylor and his army, when taken prisoners, to the city of Mexico; to treat General Taylor and his officers with such care and attention as becomes the magnanimity of the great Mexican nation.

—Four or five hundred head of mules, etc., with a large number of stands of colors.

The plan of the campaign, and the instructions from his government, ordered him to take possession of Point Isabel; this was to be the brief act of hostility; he was to fortify it as strongly as as possible. He was likewise ordered to take possession of the mouth of the river and fortify it at once.

After the route Gen. Taylor dispatched Capt. Carr, of the Dragoons, with a guard, to convey the intelligence. They bore so many of the enemy’s colors with them, that they presumed in the Fort that it was the Mexicans coming up to make an assault, it being dark, and the Fort fired upon them, but fortunately injured no one.

Some 400 Mexicans were buried at our last accounts, but doubtless hundreds are lying dead in the chaparrel, and in the river.

Captain Walker and his Rangers pursued up the enemy, and gave a parting salutation to many in the river.

We lost in killed and wounded about 62. Capt. Hooe lost an arm.

Capt. May’s charge is spoken of as being one of those splendid efforts which would have adorned the brightest feather in the plume of Murat in the palmiest days of his glory. It cost him some 18 horses, with a few of the gallant riders.

This victory entirely belongs to the U.S. Army—no volunteers having arrived in time to share in the honors of the day. It will convince our country that West Point affords the material of exhibiting the courage and bravery of the American soldier!

I trust we will hear no more of dismounting our gallant Dragoons; the affair of the 9th shows them to be the arteries of our defence.

Their conduct on both occasions speaks highly to the credit of their gallant commander, that old "War hoss” and time worn veteran, Col. Twiggs.

Maj. Ringgold died on the morning of the 11th, at Point Isabel, much regretted by all; his bravery and gallant conduct endeared him to the whole army.

The redoubtable hero, Gen. Ampudia, commanded the 2d Division of the Mexican army. It is said he was the first man to make good his escape to Matamaoras, where he reported that Arista had betrayed the army.

As soon as Gen. Arista arrived in Matamoras he sent at once a flag to exchange such prisoners as he had in Matamoras. He showed great anxiety to get back Gen. Vega, offering to exchange two or three officers for him; but Gen. Taylor had sufficient to make the exchange without giving up Gen. Vega. It has been said Gen. Taylor offered the latter his parole of honor, which he declined accepting, on the ground that if he returned he would be forced to bear arms again by his Government.

RE46v43i8p2c3, May 26, 1846: FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

The mail of yesterday morning brought nothing later; but we find in the new Orleans papers clear and circumstantial and satisfactory details of the stirring events of the 8th and 9th, which we know that our readers will appreciate. We ask particular attention to the chivalrous charge of Capt. May on the Mexican batteries. History does not furnish a more brilliant example of courage and skill, than marked the conduct of our officers and soldiers in the apparently desperate conflict. As the N. O. Bulletin says:

"The accounts are brilliant beyond the most sanguine expectations; the triumph of the American arms is complete; a vastly superior force is routed through a series of actions as splendid as any on record, displaying in our brave handful of troops and their illustrious commander, the very highest points of military courage, skill and knowledge."

The same paper publishes the subjoined letter from "a highly intelligent gentleman on the ground."[BWP]

RE46v43i8p2c3, May 26, 1846: POINT ISABEL, May 12, 1846.

By the last departure I wrote you briefly of the operations of the army up to that time; of the bombardment of the fort opposite Matamoras, and the movement of Gen. Taylor with the main body to this place for the purpose of strengthening its defences. Having effected this, he marched without waiting for reinforcements, on the evening of the 7th, and on the 8th at 2 o’clock, found the enemy in position, in front of a chapparel, which lies opposite to the timber of a stream called Palo Alto.

The train was closed up, the troops filled their canteens, and Gen. Taylor promptly formed his line of battle as follows: on the right was Ringgold’s battery, 5th and 3d Infantry; then two eighteen pounders; then the Artillery Battalion. The left was composed of the 4th and 8th Infantry, and Duncan’s Battery. A daring reconnaissance, by Capt. J. E. Blake, showed the enemy’s line to be of nearly twice the strength of ours, with heavy reserves in the chapparel. The Mexicans opened the action with their artillery, the range of which was moving slowly forward, and soon we got into the thickest of their shot and halted. Their fire was returned from all of our batteries and I venture to say that no field of battle ever displayed such skill, or rapidity of fire and evolution.

The first and only important movement attempted by the enemy was a detachment of their cavalry to make a detour around a clump of chapparel on our right, and attack the t rain. Capt. Walker, of the Texas Rangers, promptly reported this, and the 5th Infantry was detached to meet it, which it did handsomely, receiving the lancers in square, and driving them by a well delivered volley. The Mexican cavalry then pushed on again for the train, and found the 3d Infantry advancing in column of divisions upon them.—They then retired, and as they repassed the 5th they received a fire from Lieut. Ridgeley’s two field pieces, which had arrived at the nick of time. Two field pieces of the enemy, which were following his cavalry, were also driven back with them.

Meanwhile the enemy’s left was riddled by the 18 pounders, which slowly advanced up the road—Duncan’s battery on the left neglecting the enemy’s guns, threw their fire into the Mexican infantry, and swept whole ranks. The 8th Infantry on the left suffered severely from the enemy’s fire. The grass was set on fire at the end of an hour’s cannonading, and obscured the enemy’s position completely, and an interval of three quarters of an hour occurred. During this period, our right, now resting on the 18 pounders, advanced along the wood to the point originally occupied by the Mexican left, and when the smoke had cleared a way sufficiently to show the enemy, the fire was resumed with increased rapidity and execution. Duncan divided his battery on the left giving a section to Lieut. Roland to operate in front, and with the other he advanced beyond the burning grass, (which was three feet high, and the flames rolled ten feet in the strong breeze, ) and seized the prolongation of the enemy’s right, enfiling that flank completely.—Night found the two armies in this position.

On the 9th, the General packed the heavy train, collected the enemy’s wounded in hospital, buried their dead, arranged our own wounded, (among whom we have to regret the sudden death of Maj. Ringgold and Capt. Page, ) and moved on in pursuit of the enemy on the Matamoras road. They had taken post in the chapparel the second time, occupying the bed of a stream called Resaca de la Palma, with their artillery on the road at the crossing.. I have not time for details of this affair. The General brought up his troops by battalions, and posted them, with brief orders to find the enemy with the bayonet, and placed the artillery where they could act in the road.

The dragoons were held in reserve, and as soon as the advance of our line had uncovered the Mexican batteries, Gen. Taylor told Capt. May that his time had come—“Here’s the enemy’s battery, sir; take it, nolens volens.” May dashed upon it with his squadron, losing one-third of his number; but he cleared the battery and captured its commander, Gen. Vega, in the act of raising a port-fire to fire a piece himself. May took his sword and brought the General off. The enemy re-manned the guns, and lost them a second time to the 5th Infantry. Capt. Barbour, of the 3d Infantry, with his single company, and a few men from the 5th, who joined him in the chapparel, threw his back against a clump of bushes, and received and gallantly repelled a charge of cavalry. Capt. Duncan, with his battery, did terrible execution—he is a most promising officer. Lieut. Ridgeley was also among the foremost. In truth it was a series of brilliant skirmishes and heavy shocks, in which 1500 fighting men met 6000 hand to hand, overwhelmed them with the precision of their volleys, and the steady coolness of the bayonet, and drive them from the field with the loss of their artillery, baggage, pack mules, fixed ammunition, and near 2000 stand of muskets.

The Fort, meanwhile, had been summoned, with true Mexican duplicity, to surrender, and told that Taylor was flying. The Matamoras newspapers and official bulletins called him a cowardly tailor. In answer to the summons, the officers plunged their swords into the parapet, and replied “to the hilt.” Up to the evening of the 9th, 1500 shells and 3000 shot had been thrown, and the only loss was that of the brave commander, Major Brown, and one serjeant and one private killed, and ten wounded.

The General returns to the army to-night and will cross the river to-morrow or next day. The fort will be increased in guns, and especially provided with mortars, which will bring the town to terms at once. The Navy will cooperate at the mouth of the river, and steamboats shortly begin to carry supplies by that route.

Gen. Taylor has just given Gen. Vega a letter to Gen. Gaines, and a letter of credit on his factor. The officers here, and in the main body of the army, vied with their commander in delicate attentions to a brave and accomplished enemy, who won their admiration on the field, and was taken, like a soldier, in full harness, and fighting gallantly to the last. Our loss about 30 killed, and 140 wounded. wounded. In haste, H. M.

Mexican loss at Palo Alto, set down by themselves at 450; at Resaca de la Palma 200 missing. Since the battle out Dragoons have been exchanged, grade for grade, and the Mexicans wounded sent over to Matamoras. By the next arrival you will hear of the fall of the town, and probably an offer from them to receive Mr. Slidell in any capacity.

It ought to be mentioned that none of our regiments are full, and two of them have only about 300. Many instances occurred, of men handing their canteens to the wounded Mexicans, and turning from them to fire upon others. There was not a single occurrence of cruelty towards the enemy. The morale of the army is at its highest—it can now accomplish anything, and they would die for a commander who does not ask them to go where he is not willing to lead, and in whose judgment they fully confide.

The New Orleans Commercial Times furnishes the following additional items of interest. We cannot devote too much space to the noble exploits of our gallant little army. While the country will rejoice at the laurels which our soldiers have won, they will drop a tear for the fate of the officers and men who have shed their blood in repelling invasion from American soil:

The following full details of the glorious actions between the hostile armies, on the 8th and 9th inst., we find in the Galveston papers of the 15th. They were furnished by an eye witness—an actor in the scene—Capt. Jas. J. Tod, late of the Texan navy.

RE46v43i8p2c4, May 26, 1846: THREE DAYS LATER FROM MEXICO!

By the bark Mandarin, arrived this morning from Vera Cruz, says the (N. Orleans Commercial Times of the 18th inst., ) which port she lett on the 7th inst., we learn that the U. S. Squadron sailed from Vera Cruz on the 4th inst. On getting under way, the guns of the Castle were all manned, matches lighted ready to fire into them, if any disposition was made towards it. It was generally believed that as soon as it was ascertained that hostilities had commenced on the frontiers, Com. Connor would make an attack on the town and Castle; but a larger force would be required than was there.

When the Mandarin sailed, the U. S. ship Falmouth was the only vessel in port. The Commodore, it was reported, had gone to the Brazos, to assist the army, if needed. Every preparation was making at Vera Cruz for its defence, and the of the Castle; heavy guns were being taken over every day. The weather had become very hot. The thermometer standing at 96 in the shade. The Vomito had made its appearance.

RE46v43i8p2c5, May 26, 1846: TWENTY-NINTH CONGRESS. SATURDAY, MAY 23. The Senate was not in session today. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A motion was made to reconsider the vote of the House, yesterday, agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on Naval affairs to the bill from the Senate, “to repeal a part of the act making appropriations for the Naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1846”—and the consideration of the motion was then postponed until Monday.

Mr. Haralson, from the committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill from the Senate, making a change in the pay department of the Army without amendment, and with a recommendation for its immediate passage.

Mr. McKay moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole, and on this motion the yeas and nays were ordered, and resulted as follows: ayes 111, noes 36; so the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Stanton asked leave to report a resolution for the committee of Naval Affairs, to print 5000 extra copies of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, accompanying the bill for the construction of twelve iron war steamers and one iron frigate. It was objected to. A motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of receiving the resolution was decided in the negative.

An ineffectual effort was made to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing a resolution to change the hour of meeting to 10 o’clock.—Ayes 83, Noes 80.

The remainder of the session was devoted to the consideration of private business.

RE46v43i8p2c6, May 26, 1846: BY THE GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA. A PROCLAMATION.

The Congress of the U. States having, by an act approved on the 13th May, 1846, declared that a state of war exists between the Republic of Mexico and that of the United States; and the President of the United States bring by said act authorized "to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not exceeding 50,000, for the purpose of enabling the Government of the United States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination;” and having called upon the Executive of this State, under date of the 19th instant, "to cause to be enrolled and held in readiness for muster into the service of the United States three Regiments of Infantry, “to be composed of volunteer corps—Now, therefore, I, William Smith, Governor of Virginia, by virtue of the authority with which I am invested, do announce to my fellow citizens my readiness to receive, for the purpose aforesaid, a tender of the services of thirty companies of volunteers, to be formed into regiments when mustered into the service of the U. States. These companies must have the organization of the army of the United States, and in their rank and file must consist of 64 men. Not over 45, nor under 18 years of age, and of full “physical strength and vigor.” Existing volunteer companies, tendering their services, will be permitted to retain their existing uniform; but all new companies must strictly conform, in their uniform, to that prescribed by the general order of March, 1834.

No officer of militia, no matter what his grade, will forfeit his commission by entering into the proposed volunteer service.

For the information of the public, the uniform before referred to, as well as the company organization of the army of the United States, will be found in the subjoined general order.

The call to arms has, upon the generous and the brave, a magical effect. To the Virginian it has never been made in vain. Other States are rushing to fields of danger and of glory; and the sons of the Cavaliers will not be outstripped in this noble race of patriotism and duty.

Given under my hand, as Governor, and under the lesser seal of the Commonwealth, at Richmond, this 23d day of May, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-six, and of the Commonwealth the seventieth. WM. SMITH.

RE46v43i8p2c6, May 26, 1846: GENERAL ORDERS. ADJUTANT-GENERAL’S OFFICE, Richmond, May 23, 1846.

The following organization of Volunteer Corps for service under the requisition of the President of the United States will be observed:

A company of Infantry will consist of 1 Captain,
1 First Lieutenant,
1 Second Lieutenant,
4 Sergeants,
4 Corporals,
2 Musicians, and 64 Privates.

Thirty companies are required to constitute, when called into service, three Regiments of Infantry—each Regiment to consist of.

1 Colonel,
1 Lieutenant Colonel,
1 Major,
1 Adjutant, (a Lieutenant of one of the companies, but not in addition),
1 Sergeant Major,
1 Quarter-Master Sergeant,
2 Principal Musicians, and
10 Companies, according to the organization above.

Volunteer Corps now in commission tendering their services, and all new corps which may be raised for this service, will send to this department, with the tender of service, a written engagement, signed by all the members, to serve for twelve months after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous, or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged—at their discretion.

Old corps will retain the uniform now worn by them; new corps will uniform according to the pattern prescribed.

No man under the rank of a commissioned officer will be received, who is in years apparently over forty-five or under eighteen, or who is not in physical strength and vigor.

Commandants of regiments within which volunteer corps for this service shall be raised, will superintend the enrollment, the election of officers, inspect the company, and certify the whole to this department. Commissions for this special service will then be issued to the officers of all new corps. Existing corps will be inspected in like manner and sign the enrollment.

Companies, when enrolled and commissioned, will hold themselves in readiness for muster into the service of the United States when called for; but it is recommended to the members not to abandon their ordinary occupations in the mean time, further than to give such attention to training as may be convenient. By command. WM. H. RICHARDSON, Adj't Gen.

We understand that prompt measures have been taken by the Secretary of the Navy to protect the exposed commerce of the Gulf of Mexico by an adequate naval force cruising between Cuba and the Coast of Florida.

[RE46v43i8p3c1, May 26, 1846: [Correspondence of the Baltimore American.] WASHINGTON, May 22, 5½ P.M.]

A bill has passed the House, giving the President power to call into the service any number of seamen beyond the 7,500 limited by the bill of 1845. The bill is an amended bill of the Senate. The Naval Committee of the Senate have reported a bill to build ten war steamers, the Executive having a discretionary power, both as to the number up to ten, and as to the character of the steamers.

A Bill extending the Drawback System, allowed by the Bill of the last Congress, was also passed in the House, the object of which is to allow all goods imported for foreign provinces to be re-exported with an allowance for Drawback for all goods sent into a foreign country. The only limitations are, that the goods shall be re-exported within one year after the original importation, and the goods to be transported (in their original packages) and under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The New York Sun contains the following description of Mexico from Matamoras to the Halls of the Montesumas, which cannot but prove interesting at the present time.

The U. S. army is posted on the left bank of the Rio Grande, opposite Matamoras, at a distance of 90 miles from the coast by the circuitous channel of the river, but only 30 or 40 miles by the route to Point Isabel, a harbor on the coast of Texas, about ten miles north of the Rio Grande. The latter river is the boundary between Texas and Mexico, as claimed by the United States.—Mexico contends that the river Nueces is the boundary, and that river was the boundary of the former State of Texas before the Revolution.—But Texas claimed to the Rio Grande as the people of that district joined her in defending the Mexican Constitution of 1824, and in the war of independence, which they waged so successfully against the despotism of Mexico. From Matamoras to the city of Mexico there is good road, with five or ten military posts along the route.

“An American army of fifty thousand men, crossing the Rio Grande at Matamoras, could readily march through the country to the city of Mexico. Yucatan, to the South, is already in arms against the military despot governing at the Capital; and the people of Vera Cruz and other States of Central Mexico are clamorous for the recall of Santa Anna, (who is now in Cuba,) and the restoration of the Republic. The facilities for intercourse with our army and with the Mexican people, are favorable to the rapid execution of military operations. From Galveston to Point Isabel is 320 miles by water. New Orleans to Point Isabel 802 miles. New Orleans to Vera Cruz 1,500 miles. Yucatan to the city... of Mexico 900 miles. The population of the city of Mexico is about 180,000. High mountains rise in the distance on all sides of the city, but the location although under the Tropic of Cancer is remarkable for its salubrity, and in summer the extreme heat is less severe than in New York or Philadelphia.

The city is approached by excellent roads which branch out in every direction, and on which are transported the silver ores and bullion from an hundred of the richest mines in the world. The magnificence of the principal edifices—some being furnished with gold and silver ornaments valued at many millions, and containing rich treasures hid away by the avaricious—has excited the admiration of all travellers. Yet, with all her riches, Mexico is poor. Her people are kept in ignorance by the tyranny of a few, and their wealth is carried off to other lands, to swell the gains of trade and commerce, which they are not permitted to enjoy. The poor Mexican crawls listlessly over neglected silver mines, lost in the contemplation of his own abject condition. The iron hand of despotism is upon him.

RE46v43i8p4c1, May 26, 1846: CASTLE OF SAN JUAN DE ULUA.

The N. Y. Courier gives the following facts, in order that an opinion may be formed as to the probable result of an assault upon Vera Cruz.—Certainly nothing can be done until a much larger force is concentrated there than is at present in the vicinity:

"The fortress of San Juan de Ulua would resist a very heavy attack—one certainly much more serious than that of the French, to which it yielded a few years since. The French squadron then consisted of three large frigates and four bomb vessels: the former anchored but little over point-blank distance from the eastern face of the castle, and the bomb vessels but little further.—There were mortars in the castle, but none in use, and not more than seventeen guns could be brought to bear on a single ship, and on the whole squadron only twenty-six, some of which were carronades.

"Of the French vessels, the Cyclops had two mortars, and in two hours she threw one hundred and eight shells. The others did their share, --One of the bombs lodged in the magazine, which was blown up, and about two hundred men destroyed. After about six hours'fighting the Mexicans yielded. Since that time the fortress has been thoroughly repaired; a new water battery has been added; thirty-two and forty-two pounders have been mounted in place of the twelves and eighteens; from twelve to twenty heavy mortars have been introduced, with several Paixhan eight-inch guns, and every thing is in the very best condition to resist an attack.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, writing from the Brazos de Santiago says:

"On the 26th, a friend of mine visited General Taylor in the camp of Point Isabel, where he had established his depot for stores in the army. On landing, the scene presented was quite a wild one, and reminded one of the accounts we have received of an Arab Encampment. There were three or four hundred dragoons in the camp with their horses picketed about; besides an immense number of wagons, mules and oxen. On stepping ashore, an officer conducted my friend to the General's tent. He was introduced to a very plain shabbily dressed old gentleman, of rather small stature, about sixty years of age, and who looked by his hardy appearance, as if he had been camping out all his life.

"This was the commander-in-chief of the army of occupation. He has been 38 years in service on the frontiers of our country. One of his officers remarked that "old as he is, he bears the fatigues and privations of the campaign better than any one under him." His tent was no larger and no better than those of the other officers, and his table was his camp chest, in which he carried his cooking utensils, &c. His plates were tin pans, and his cups (no saucers of course) tin pannikins. A small supply of brown sugar was kept in a tin canister, and not a piece of crockery was to be seen. A party of six was thus entertained in homely style, and they all seemed to enjoy it abundantly."[BWP]

RE46v43i8p4c1, May 26, 1846: CAPT. SAMUEL H. WALKER.

This officer is one of those rare spirits which a state of war will bring out from our citizen soldiers.—His late unequalled conflict with the Mexicans, in which he lost nearly every man under his command, and his daring heroism in cutting his way to Gen. Taylor's camp, have excited in the public mind a strong desire to know more of him. He is the same gentleman so frequently and honorably spoken of in Gen. Green’s journal of the Mier expedition. He is a native of Washington City, from whence he went into the Florida war, where in several campaigns he distinguished himself by his intrepid bravery. In 1842, he went to Texas, and during the invasion of that Republic, by Gen. Woll, he was marked for his bold and daring conduct. After the Mexican General had retreated from San Antonio, and when he lay upon the Rio Hondo, Walker and Capt. McCullough crawled through his camp one night and spies out his position, and the next day with the gallant Hays, led the attack upon his rear-guard. He then joined the celebrated expedition against Mier, and on the morning of that sanguinary battle, he, with three others—being the advanced scout of the Texans—was taken prisoner, and carried with his hands tied behind him to the head quarters of Gen. Ampudia. The Mexican General questioned him as to the Texan forces, and when Walker informed him that The Texans had only three hundred men, Ampudia pompously replied: “Does that audacious handful of men presume to follow me into this strong place and attack me?” “Yes,” says Walker, “make yourself content upon that subject, General; they will follow you into hell and attack you there.” He was, with his comrades, then marched a prisoner to the city of Mexico.

At Salado, with the lamented Capt. Cameron and Dr. Brennen, he led the attack upon the guards, overpowered them, and marched for Texas, when, after eating up all their horses and mules, and living for days upon their own urine, surrendered to the Mexican Generals, Mercier and Ortago. He was a gain marched to Salado, where, with his comrades, he was made to draw in the celebrated black bean lottery, and every tenth man was shot. Those that remained of the Texans were marched to the Castle of Perote and the city of Mexico. Here, while working on the streets in that city, he was struck by a Mexican corporal for not working faster, when with his spade he knocked down the corporal, which caused the guards to beat him nearly to death. His life was a long time despaired of, and upon his recovery, he with two companions scaled the walls of his prison after nightfall, and made his way to Texas, over a distance of more than a thousand miles. Before, however, they got out of the country, they were twice more imprisoned, and each time effected their escape.—When he had reached Texas again, he joined Capt. Hays, who, with fifteen others, armed with Colt's repeating pistols, fought 96 Comanches, and defeated them, leaving 36 killed upon the ground. Here Walker was run through the body with a Comanche spear, and his life again despaired of. We now hear of him, with 70 Texans, attacking 1500 Mexicans, and all perishing in battle but himself and six others; and then, to crown his wonderful life of daring, he cut his way, single handed into Gen. Taylor's camp from Point Isabel.—

RE46v43i8p4c2, May 26, 1846: ORGANIZATION OF VOLUNTEER CORPS FOR THE U. S. SERVICE.

With a view of obtaining the requisite information as to the government of the volunteer corps now organizing under the late Act of Congress, a letter was written a few days ago by Major Gen. Steuart to Washington, making all needful inquiries on the subject. The reply of the Secretary of War is annexed. It appears to contain every necessary direction, and, if extensively circulated, will save a vast deal of trouble to all parties interested. It will be observed by the accompanying memorandum that no provision is made for a company of Artillery:

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 19, 1846.

Sir:--In reply to the inquiries contained in the letter of Maj. Gen. Steuart's and in other communications, submitted by you to this Department, I have the honor to inform you that the rule adopted, is to call for volunteers that are required from any particular State, through the Governor.—This is an act of respect to the Executive of the State, due as well to his position, as to his generally superior knowledge of the character and efficiency of volunteers throughout the State, the sections from which it is most advisable to take them, and which of them can, with the greatest facility and least expense, be embodies for the service for which they may be required. Circumstances may, however, occur to render it expedient to accept offers of service direct, without the intervention of the Governor when an application to him might cause delay. Applications of companies, regiments, &c., to enter the service may therefore be made direct to this Department.

The law, a copy of which is enclosed, provides that the officers of volunteers shall be appointed by the proper State authority, in the manner prescribed by the State laws; and the accompanying memorandum shows the number of officers, non-commissioned officers and privates, and the organization of companies and regiments.

The law also requires that the volunteers furnish their own clothing, and, if cavalry, their own horses and horse equipage. Such as are already uniformed need not change; such as are not, and contemplate uniforming, are at liberty to adopt such as they think proper; but it is advisable that all who may be called into the service adopt their dress, as nearly as the circumstances will permit, to the nature of the service that may be required of them, and to the character of the country and climate where they may have to serve. Those that shall be accepted will be armed and equipped at the expense of the United States, and will be inspected and mustered into the service by an officer of the army, or by one appointed by the Governor, at such times and places as will be specified when their services are called for.

Very respectfully, your obd's serv't,

W. L. MARCY, Secretary of War.

RE46v43i8p4c2, May 26, 1846: [From the Petersburg Republican, May 20.] TEXAS VOLUNTEERS.

There was a very large and enthusiastic meeting of the citizens of our town, at the Courthouse, on Monday night last, to take measures for the formation of a company of Texas volunteers. The large number of persons present made it necessary for the crowd to adjourn into the square in front of the Court-house. The meeting was addressed with considerable ability and eloquence by Capt. H. A. Garland and R. K. Meade, who agreed in the propriety of taking steps towards the formation of a Regiment of Infantry, to be called the "South Side Regiment," and to be placed at the service of the General Government, to go to Mexico, or elsewhere, as they should be ordered. To this proposition the crowd responded with manifestations of the most enthusiastic applause. Resolutions to this effect were adopted, and a number of names, as we understand, were added to the list of names already obtained for the purpose of entering the service at once.
Col. Swan presided on the occasion, and appeared to be highly gratified at the patriotic spirit which seemed to pervade the 39th, which he has commanded for so many years.

RE46v43i8p4c3, May 26, 1846: FRIDAY May 22nd, 1846. SENATE.

Mr. Dix, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom had been referred the House bill making appropriations for harbors and rivers, reported back the same with sundry amendments which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Fairfield, from the Naval Committee, reported back the Senate bill authorizing the construction of ten war steamers of iron, with sundry amendments; one of which authorizes the President to purchase ships instead of having them built, provided it can be done to advantage.

Mr. Mangum having stated some objection to the above amendment, inquired on what day Mr. Fairfield proposed to call up the consideration of the bill.

Mr. Fairfield answered the objections to the amendment, and said he would call up the bill on Monday next.

Mr. Woodbridge introduced a resolution relative to the boundary between the U. S. and the British province, as fixed by the Ashburton treaty.

On motion of Mr. Allen, a resolution was adopted, calling for copies of correspondence relative to treaties between England and France and Texas, when the latter was an independent State.

Mr. Westcott then called up the report of the committee on Territories made yesterday, asking that the committee may be discharged from further consideration of the Oregon jurisdiction bill.

Mr. Allen gave his views, and in the course of his remarks asked if the committee intended to leave our citizens in Oregon unprotected and without a government, after the expiration of the year’s notice.

Mr. Westcott reminded him that the people of Oregon have already established a government of their own.

Mr. Benton then took the floor, and at great length gave his views on the 54 40 question. The subject was then laid over till Monday.

RE46v43i8p4c2, May 26, 1846: TEXAS MEETING.

Pursuant to a previous call, a meeting of the citizens of Petersburg was held at the Courthouse, to take into consideration the war now existing between the United States and Mexico, which was numerously attended.

Col. J. C. Swan being called to the Chair, and Wm. McGowan appointed Secretary, the Chairman, after a brief and happy expose of the purpose of the meeting, announced that they were now ready to proceed to business. The Chairman introduced to the meeting Capt. Hugh A. Garland, who was arrested in his address by a loud call to move the stand to the Court Square, that the numerous attendants might be better accommodated—one half of the audience not being able to get in the house. On motion, the assembly repaired to the front of the court-house, where Capt. G. entered into a happy exposition of the causes which have led our government into this extremity, and was loudly applauded during the delivery of his speech; after Mr. G. had concluded Mr. R. K. Meade being loudly called for, appeared, and in a happy strain of eloquence, which caused every heart to leap as the impassioned manner in which he pourtrayed the history of our wrongs and forbearance, begged leave to introduce some definite plan of action, which will appear in the annexed proceedings, and which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, our country is now engaged in war with a foreign nation, and has called upon her citizens for support and assistance, and it is the duty of a free people at all times to obey the call of their country: we, the citizens of the town of Petersburg, do therefore Resolve,

1. That we will serve our country with our lives and fortunes.

2. That we will use our best exertions to raise a regiment of infantry on the South side of James river, to be called the South side Regiment of Volunteers, to serve during the war.

3. That a committee of five be appointed to be called the Central Committee, who shall correspond with the officers of the militia on the South side and others, and use their best endeavors to procure enlistments in the proposed Regiments, and do all other acts necessary to the organization thereof.

4. The said Regiment, when organized, shall offer its services to the President of the U. States, to be called out at such time and on such duty as the President or other authorized officers shall appoint.

5. The Central Committee shall appoint five or more to procure recruits in the town of Petersburg and adjoining counties, who shall make returns to said committee weekly or oftener.

6. The Central Committee shall correspond with citizens of other towns and counties on the South side of James River, and urge them to organize committees in their respective towns and counties, to promote the object of this meeting, and encourage the enlistment of soldiers, and said Committee may also appoint proper persons to enlist recruits in any town or county on the South side.

7. Whenever six hundred and twenty-five men shall enroll themselves to serve as volunteers, the Central Committee shall confer with the Governor of Virginia and the President of the United States, and under their advice shall appoint a time and place for the meeting of such volunteers, who shall then proceed to elect their officers, and organize themselves into companies and battalions, to constitute a regiment under the act of Congress, passed 13th day of May, 1846.

8. The Central Committee shall, if expedient, correspond with the Governor of Virginia and ask for such facilities as he may lawfully give in forwarding the object of this meeting.

9. Any citizen of the United States may enlist as a volunteer in said Regiment.

10. A Committee of five be appointed to procure funds by subscription to be placed with the Central Committee to pay the expenses of correspondences, and of such recruiting officers as may be sent out of the corporation on that service.

11. That we will cheerfully unite in the race of patriotism with companies raised by our fellow citizens on the North side of James River, so as to form a brigade of Virginia Volunteers.

On motion of the Secretary, it was.

Resolved, That the Chairman, assisted by Capt. Garland and Mr. Meade, appoint the respective committees recommended in the resolutions, and notify them of their appointment.

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the papers of Petersburg and Richmond.

The audience were then informed that a meeting would be held at the same time and place on the next evening, for the purpose of organizing those already enlisted, into a Volunteer Corps.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned. J. C. SWAN, Chairman. WM. McGOWAN, Secretary.

NEW YORK, May 21st, 1846.

Gentlemen: I can hardly trust myself to describe to you the great War Meeting which was held in the Park last evening. I never witnessed such an assemblage animated by such thrilling enthusiasm. Its numbers are uncounted. For more than three hours, the dense mass stood and heard and responded to the patriotic sentiments addressed by popular speakers from three platforms. The action of our Government, and the conduct of its gallant army, were warmly approved and commended. One feeling only was manifested—that of repelling invasion and redressing the wrongs of our common country. Most loudly did the assemblage respond to the sentiment, that the United States would never permit European interference in the affairs of this county. The moral effect of such a meeting as this must be great. As was remarked, could the Mexicans have witnessed the spectacle, their military tyrants would have taken to flight, and their armies have ceased to prosecute the war. Several speakers alluded to our differences with England; some expressed the belief that the present attitude of affairs with Mexico was brought about by English influence, and the probability of a war with that power was freely spoken, and as heartily responded to. I have seen many mass meetings in New York, (although never one so large as this,) and I know something of the temperament of the people; but I confess that I was rather surprised to find the war sentiment—I mean a war with England—so strongly re-echoes from the vast masses who were assembled. I know that you hope and trust with me, that a war with England may be averted, and our country spared the calamities of any long war; but, nevertheless, if that war which we so little desire should come upon us, I think that this matter with Mexico, and the preparations made for carrying it on, will be of eminent service to us. The expenditure during a war with Mexico will be a cheap preparation and inuring of our forces for any greater war which is to follow.
The scene—the coup d’oeil—presented by the “sea of upturned faces,” to quote a phrase of Mr. Webster, was animating beyond description. I witnessed it from the platform, immediately in rear of the Mayor. They were a densely wedged mass, intent upon hearing what was said, and expressing their approval or condemnation, as the proceedings went on. No disorder occurred. The meeting was opened with music, a large brass band performing in company with a chorus of vocalist. At dusk, the assemblage was cheered by the radiance of a Drummond light stationed in the presence of a number of ladies on the balcony of the City Hall. During the evening fire works were exhibited, and frequent discharges of artillery were heard booming over the meeting.

During the morning of yesterday, I visited the Navy Yard at Brooklyn, and went on board of some of the vessels there placed. Active preparations are making, in order that they may be despatched to sea. It had been said that the Secretary of the Navy was not pushing forward the equipment of the Navy as he should, and that only a few additional workmen were engaged. I made enquiry of the officers on duty, and was informed that there were at work as many persons as could be employed to any advantage, and that the preparations were fast progressing.

But to turn from warlike thoughts and narratives. I cannot close my letter to you, without mentioning the solemn and impressive spectacle which, for about four hours, I witnessed to-day.—This (Ascension) day was set apart for the consecration of Trinity Church in Broadway, opposite the head of Wall Street. The grand and imposing ceremony accordingly took place in the presence of congregated thousands. I was fortunate enough to obtain a ticket of admission.—Bishop McCoskry of Michigan, now acting here, a man of fine voice and personal appearance, and somewhat resembling the present Bishop of London, performed the dedicatory offices. The sentence of consecration appeared to be quite long, and was drawn up with all the technicality of a complicated law instrument. The procession of the Clergy, in surplices, about 200 in number, entering the Church, amid the swelling notes of a splendid organ, was most solemn and sublime. I cannot speak adequately of the musical portion of the service. The various chants and anthems occupied near two hours. The sermon was preached by the Bishop, and lasted 32 minutes only. A portion of the morning prayer was read by Mr. Southard, a son of the late Senator, &c. He is the same young man who refused the assistant Rectorship of this Church, worth $5,000 a year, and preferred to remain in his present parish, with a small salary. He was an object of general interest on the part of the Church where I sat. The architecture of this magnificent edifice is unsurpassed in the United States. Indeed, it is a Church which can vie with the palatial temples of Old Oxford. I will endeavor to give you some account of it soon.

I have no more time, before the mail, at a very inconvenient hour, closes. Your Friend,

G.

RE46v43i8p4c5, May 26, 1846: MR. MADISON’S VIEW OF A CASUS BELLII.

To those who are troubled about the propriety of an act of Congress recognizing a war with Mexico and preparing to meet it, we offer the following precedent, (says the Union.) We suppose no man will deny that the case of Mexico now is quite as bad as was the case of Algiers in 1815:

Confidential Message of Mr. Madison, February 23, 1815.

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the U. S.

"Congress will have seen, by the communication of the consul-general of the United States at Algiers, laid before them on the 17th of November, 1812, the hostile proceedings of the Dey against that functionary. These have been followed by acts of more overt and direct warfare against the citizens of the United States trading in the Mediterranean, some of whom are still detained in captivity, notwithstanding the attempts which have been made to ransom them, and are treated with the rigor usual on the coast of Barbary.

"The considerations which rendered it unnecessary and unimportant to commence hostile preparations on the part of the United States being now terminated by the peace with Great Britain, which opens the prospect of an active and valuable trade of their citizens within the range of the Algerine cruisers, I recommend to Congress the expediency of an act declaring the existence of a state of war between the United States and the Dey and regency of Algiers, and of such provisions as may be requisite for a vigorous prosecution of it to a successful issue."[BWP]

RE46v43i8p4c4, May 26, 1846: GREAT WAR MEETING IN THE PARK.

Pursuant to a call issued by the Mayor and Common Council, (says the Sun of Thursday,) the citizens of New York met in the Park last evening to deliberate on the best method of aiding the government to secure a speedy, honorable and triumphant termination of the war with Mexico.

Hon. A. H. Mickle, Mayor of the city, having been called to the chair, briefly addressed the assembled multitude. It is estimated that fifty thousand persons attended. Four large platforms were erected, from which different speakers addressed the meeting. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Shepherd, McKeon, Wells, Barnes, Schieffelin, Dixon, Whitney, Tannis, Capt. Rynders, and, many others.
But one spirit animated the orators and the vast concourse—a spirit of Patriotism. The honor and defence of the country; the importance of union and harmony among ourselves; the readiness of New York to put forth all her energies, if necessary, in defence of the Union; and the necessity of prompt and vigorous action, were eloquently set forth by the speakers, and heartily responded to by the meeting.

Resolutions to this effect having been passed unanimously, a national salute was fired and rockets let off. The Park and the streets around it were brilliantly illuminated by a Drummond light on the City Hall, and another on the American Museum. The gallant proprietor of the latter also caused his splendid edifice to be illuminated. The meeting adjourned about nine o’clock.

RE46v43i9p1c1, May 29, 1846: TWENTY-NINTH CONGRESS. MONDAY, MAY 25. SENATE.

Mr. Dickenson presented the proceedings of an immense meeting in New York city, in reference to the war with Mexico.

He accompanied their presentation with some eloquent remarks, commending the patriotism of those proceedings. The proceedings were then ordered to be printed.

The previous orders were then suspended, and the Senate took up the Texas mail route bill.

Mr. Rusk remarked that a joint resolution relative to this matter had been passed by other House, but the Postmaster General did not feel warranted to act under it. The bill was then read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Dix, the Senate took up the bill supplemental to the “war bill.” It provides for the appointment and creation of two additional Major Generals, four Brigadier Generals, &c.

Mr. Atchison moved to amend the bill by providing that the additional officers shall be dismissed at the termination of the war, or three months thereafter.

Mr. Dix, at some length, opposed the amendment on the ground that the recent increase of the rank and file of the army, rendered such additional officers necessary.

Mr. Westcott followed on the same side. He contended that it would be an act of great injustice to the officers promoted under this act. For instance, if General Taylor should be promoted at the end of this war, he would necessarily fall back to his former rank.

Mr. Atchison defended his amendment. He said the number of officers was already too great for a peace establishment. Besides, no injustice would be done to the officers, because they would know the conditions under which they were promoted.

On motion of Mr. Mangum, the bill was for the present laid on the table.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the Oregon jurisdiction bill, as reported back by Mr. Westcott from the military committee, with a motion that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, on the ground that it is inexpedient at the present time to pass such a bill.

Mr. Benton having the floor, resumed and concluded his remarks from Friday last upon the question of title, and in favor of the 49th parallel.

RE46v43i9p1c1, May 29, 1846: HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Brinkerhoff moved a suspension of the rules to enable him to submit a joint resolution, . . .[illegible] . . . forth that the thanks of Congress are due to Gen. Taylor and his army, and that the President be empowered to allow them one month’s extra pay in consideration of their gallant conduct.

Mr. Winthrop thought the motion rather premature. He thought the better plan would be to wait until the arrival of the official dispatches from the army. He said he would unite most cordially in any testimonial of gratitude to Gen. Taylor and the army, but he was convinced that the true parliamentary course would be to wait until the President should have communicated the official account to Congress.

Mr. Brinkerhoff said, that in case the rules should be suspended, the resolution might lie over until the official accounts should be transmitted.

The question being then taken, the rules were suspended.

On motion of Mr. Preston King, the resolution was then referred to a Committee of the Whole.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and resumed the consideration of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. King of Mass. moved to amend by inserting $25,000 for sick and disabled seamen.

Mr. K. said he had offered the amendment at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.—He then contended that it would be cruel and unjust to deprive the hardy sailors of the benefit of the fund exacted from their honest earnings.

Mr. McKay opposed the amendment on the ground that if all the money due from seamen were collected there would be a sufficiency without this appropriation.

Mr. Holmes, of S. C., eloquently advocated the amendment.

Mr. Winthrop followed on the same side. He contended that the government was bound to make a proper application of the funds collected from seamen and that it ought not to be diverted from its original purposes.

After further debate, the amendment was agreed to. Ayes 79, Nays 45.

Several other amendments having been discussed, the committee rose.

Several communications in answer to resolutions of enquiry were presented, after which the House adjourned.

RE46v43i9p1c1, May 29, 1846: TUESDAY, May 26, 1846. SENATE.

Mr. Dix presented a petition in reference to the extension of Morse’s Magnetic Telegraph to New Orleans, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

On motion of Mr. Pearce, the Committee on Military Affairs was instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the distribution of public property captured during the war, among the officers and soldiers engaged in the war.

Mr. Pennybacker, on leave, introduced a bill to authorize the Clerks of the Courts of the United States, in the Western District of Va. to appoint deputies, and for other purposes.

Mr. Bagly introduced a bill to cede to the State of Alabama all the public lands lying in that State which may remain unsold on the 1st of Jan'y 1817.

The Judiciary Committee reported a bill to change the time for holding the U. S. Courts in the District of Ohio, which was read three times by unanimous consent and passed.

Mr. Berrien, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report, accompanied by a bill, in re(unreadable) to the clause in our treaty with Spain of 1795, respecting letters of marque, which were ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Johnson, of La., the bill to provide for the adjustment of land claims in the states of Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, &c., was taken up, and,. after being amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Senate then proceeded to the special order, and took up the bill supplemental to the act providing for the prosecution of the existing war with Mexico.

[The bill provides for the appointment of two additional major generals, and four brigadier generals, to call into the service, when necessary, general officers of the militia, &c.].

Mr. Dix briefly explained the necessity for the increase of generals proposed in the first section, and opposed the amendment offered yesterday by Mr. Atchison, requiring their dismissal as soon as the war shall terminate.

Mr. Morehead very briefly opposed the first section as it stood. He was unwilling to give the President power to place citizens who have never seen service over the heads of officers who had devoted a life time to it—over such men as Gen. Taylor. Mr. M paid a high tribute to “old rough and ready” as Gen. T. is sometimes called. If the increased number of Generals proposed by the bill should be authorized, Mr. M. was in favor of requiring the President to appoint them from among those who had or should distinguished themselves in the war.

Mr. Miller moved to amend by striking out the amendment, and inserting in lieu thereof a proviso that the officers shall be selected from the Army.

Mr. M. supported his amendment in an appropriate speech.

Mr. Allen followed in opposition to both amendments. He seemed to think it necessary to harmonize the soldiers of the regular army and the citizen soldiers, by selecting some of the Generals from the army and some from private life.

Mr. Mangum made a zealous speech, and agreed that there was no necessity for the proposed increase. The brevet Generals already in service were fully equal to the command of any army that was likely to be brought into the field.
The volunteers would be officered by the States, and the war would give an opportunity to discover the military talent which they might possess. The government could then take care not to permit this talent to be lost to the country.

Mr. Cass sustained the bill.

A long and warm debate upon the amendment of Mr. Atchison continued until a very late hour, and the question was informally passed over.

This evening’s southern mail (says the Union) brings the following letter from a gallant son of Washington to his sister. We are obliged to the family for a copy of it:

"POINT ISABEL, Texas, May 13th, 1846.

"By the time you receive this, you will have heard of the two great battles that have been fought by our army against the Mexican forces. We had but 2,400 men, and the Mexicans had 6,000. The first day they did nothing but fire artillery at us, which we returned, and killed some hundred of them. They tried several times to break our lines by charging us, but they were repulsed.—This day Major Ringgold, of the artillery, was killed by a cannon ball, which took off both his legs; and some sixty of our men were killed and wounded. Our squadron of dragoons (Captain May's of Washington) was under fire the whole time, and we lost ten or fifteen horses killed, and the same number of men wounded. Several shot passed near me and over my head, and one went between my horse's legs, but did not hit him.—That night the Mexican force fell back and took up a position in a dense chapporal, or thicket, that borders the Rio Grande, and is seven or eight miles through. I was one of the advanced guard, and was within sixty yards of the enemy when they fired grape shot upon us; and, singular as it may appear, not one of my men were struck.

"The General then ordered us to allow the infantry to pass up and engage them; they did so, and also our light artillery. They had been engaged a bout an hour and a half, when OUR squadron was then ordered to charge the enemy’s batteries. We did so, took one of their batteries, and General la Vega prisoner, while in the act of pointing a gun. Lieut. Inge, of the dragoons, was killed in the charge; Lieut. Lucket had his horse shot under him, and many of the men and horses were killed and wounded. Gen. la Vega surrendered his sword to Capt. May. It was a desperate affair, and was as gallantly performed as any action of our revolution.

"I had four men killed at my side. I cut one Mexican down, and then rallied the men that were left, when the enemy broke and run, and left everything in our possession. The plunder was great—600 mules, 9 pieced of cannon, some 20 standards, and a large amount of money in gold, besides all their equipage. Seventeen officers were taken prisoners, and hundreds of men. An exchange of prisoners has been made, and our officers and men whom they took in a previous affair are now restored to us. Henry, Crezet and your friends were in the action, and behaved like men. Piper was not in the action, and is almost crazy about it. I am safe and sound, although, when I think over what I have gone through, I involuntarily shudder at my escape. Gen. Taylor has gone up to the army to day, and we start to morrow. We brought the wounded down here. Several of our officers were killed, and a large number wounded, but nothing in comparison to the enemy.” [BWP]

Mr. Hunt, of Michigan, from the Committee on (unreadable0 Lands, reported back the bill from the Senate granting alternate sections of the public domain to aid in the completion of works of internal improvement in the State of Michigan.
Mr. McKay moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

The motion prevailed, and Mr. Hopkins of Va. having taken the chair, the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill was taken up.

Mr. Brinkerhoff of Ohio, moved to lay the bill aside for a short time, for the purpose of taking up the resolutions of thanks, &c., to Gen. Taylor and his army, introduced by him yesterday.

Mr. Haralson, chairman of the Military Committee, suggested to the member from Ohio the propriety of delaying action upon his resolutions until the reception of a message from the President, which would probably be received today, transmitting the official accounts, and the House could then act understandingly upon the subject.

Mr. Brinkerhoff acquiesced and withdrew his motion.

The consideration of the Civil and Diplomatic Bill was then resumed, the question being upon the amendment of Mr. Boyd of Kentucky, to insert an appropriation for a Marine Hospital at Paducah, Kentucky.

Mr. Crozier of Tennessee advocated the amendment, and in the course of his remarks alluded to the River and Harbor Bill, and assailed the inconsistency of the Democratic Party upon the question of Internal Improvement.

Mr. Houston of Alabama replied to the remarks of Mr. Crozier on the Internal Improvement question, which, he said, had been so improperly dragged into his debate.

Mr. Stanton of Tennessee followed in reference to the improvements of Tennessee river, and the probably veto of Mr. Polk, had that river been included in the River and Harbor Bill.

Mr. Crozier rejoined in reply to the remarks of Mr. Houston and Mr. Stanton, and after some remarks from Mr. Davis of Kentucky, the amendment prevailed—yeas 69, noes 46. Mr. Darragh, of Pa., proposed a Marine Hospital at Pittsburg, and a member from Mississippi, one at Natchez. Both of the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. Farran of Ohio, proposed $1,500 for the hospital at Cincinnati.

Mr. Grover of N. Y., moved to strike out the appropriations for all the hospitals—and defended it in a speech denunciatory of the Democratic party for violating its promises. He was amazed at the legislation he had seen in the House, and at the indifference with which members of his party ran their arms into the Treasury up to their elbows.

Mr. Payne, of Ala., was delighted with this speech, and made an argument to prove that marine hospitals were alms houses. He desired to know whether Congress was to act upon the revenue system, and the people desired to know something about it. Six weeks ago a revenue bill had been reported, but it slept most quietly in committee of the whole. He hoped the question was not to be passed over in silence, and that the apathy which prevailed upon it would be removed. The Baltimore Convention had been mentioned in previous debates, and if a Convention was to settle the legislation of the country, then the Tariff should be acted upon, and the revenue system modified. Mr. P. stated the part he had taken in the canvass of 1844, and maintained that the party were bound to modify the Tariff and reduce the duties. He called upon the party to reduce the Tariff and to redeem their pledges.—Mr. P. denounced the National Fair and the protective policy.

Mr. Jones of Ga. said that the Tariff could not be acted upon if members were to make speeches like those he had heard.

Mr. Payne complained of the rebuke, and said he knew his rights.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., moved that the Committee rise, which was agreed to.

A resolution was then offered providing that all debate on the bill, in committee of the whole, shall cease at three o’clock to-morrow.

A motion was made to amend by striking our three o’clock to-morrow, and inserting “four o’clock to-day.”

Mr. Winthrop moved to lay the resolution on the table. This motion was rejected—yeas 73, nays 92.

The question was then taken on the amendment to insert four o’clock to-day, and it was rejected.

The original resolution, modified by inserting “1 o’clock,” was then adopted, after which the House adjourned.

[BWP]
We give extracts, (says the Union,) from the official despatches of Commodore Conner, showing the gallant and well-judged promptitude with which the excellent officer, in pursuance of his general instructions from the Navy Department, has brought his valuable aid to the scene of action. We had not supposed it probable that his squadron could have been concentrated there so soon after the Mexican attack commence.

Extract of letters from Commodore Conner to the Secretary of the Navy, dated:

U. S. SHIP CUMBERLAND,
Off Vera Cruz, May 3, 1846.

The decided tone of the Manifesto of the President of the Mexican Republican, in connexion with other indications, seems to leave no doubt that orders have been given to General Arista to attack the American army on the Del Norte, should a favorable occasion offer. Under the belief that an attack is contemplated, I have considered it advisable, and have determined to sail to-morrow morning for the Brazos Santiago with the Cumberland, Raritan, Potomac, John Adams and Somers. The Falmouth will be left here to protect our interests, and to watch the course of events. The appearance of the squadron at that place, with a knowledge of the considerable reinforcement it can afford to our army, will, I think, cause the Mexican Generals to pause, if not altogether to abandon their design of attacking General Taylor. All accounts concur in stating the Mexican army to amount to nearly eight thousand men. I feel assured the Government has not the means of maintaining this force for any length of time in the field; indeed, there is not, even now, a dollar in the Treasury. Hence delay will either cause the army to disband, or another revolution to take place; either of which events, it is believed, cannot be otherwise than favorable to the wishes of our Government in bringing about an amicable settlement of our difficulties with Mexico. The latter would undoubtedly contribute to that end, as it would place in power men wholly opposed to the policy at present pursued.

Considerable activity has prevailed at this place since my arrival, in improving and strengthening the defences of the castle and the town of Vera Cruz. As far as I am able to ascertain, there are now nearly, if not quite, two hundred guns mounted in the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, and as many as fifty in the two forts and walls of the city commanding the anchorage. These guns are all new, and of heavy calibre, most of them being thirty-two and forty-two pounders, with a number of eight and ten-inch Paixhan guns. There are said to be nearly two thousand men in the fortress, and about the same number in the town.

I am,
Very respectfully, Your obedient servant,
D. CONNER,
Commanding Home Squadron.

HON. GEORGE BANCROFT,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

U. S. SHIP CUMBERLAND,
Off the bar of Brazos Santiago,
May 8, 1846.

Sir—As stated in my communication of the 3d, the squadron left the roads of Sacrificios on the morning of the 4th, and has just anchored off the bar of Santiago, where I have just been apprised that hostilities have actually taken place some days since.

As the opportunity by which I send this communication cannot be detained, I have only time to add, that after communicating with Gen. Taylor, and ascertaining the situation of affairs at Matamoras, I shall remain here no longer than the presence of the squadron may be required, after which it will be necessary for this ship, the Potomac, and John Adams to repair to Pensacola to replenish their provisions and water. In the mean time orders will be given to carry into execution your instructions in relation to the blockade of the Mexican coast, and to meet and repel, in the most decisive manner, the hostilities of the Mexican nation. Some more small vessels are required, also one or two small steamboats of a draft of water not exceeding eight feet. These vessels will be necessary to enforce a strict blockade of the coast.

I am, very respectfully, &c.
D. CONNER,
Commanding home squadron.

Hon. GEO. BANCROFT,
Secretary of the Navy.

[BWP]
a Democratic President must be assailed for doing wrong. Although our army has triumphed, and our frontier been saved from devastation, yet a Democratic President who committed the unpardonable sin of ousting Mr. Clay from the Presidency, must be held up to public condemnation for having put this army in a position to check the Mexican invasion, and save from pollution the soil of Texas, which is as much American ground as the streets of our own city.
The Times could not have seized a more unpropitious moment to attack this Administration. The paper denounces the action of the Government as the “weakest policy which was ever adopted by the public authorities of a country.” It, then, proceeds to berate the Administration for sending such “a small army to the farthest limit of the disputed territory, and under the orders from the Department, the General erected batteries, with their guns perfectly commanding the town of Matamoros, acknowledged to belong entirely to Mexico. Had such an act been attempted in the case of the Maine boundary—had a British town been thus menaced, he would have been considered demented who did not think the result would be immediate war, and the President would have been deemed a madman or a traitor, who ordered only 2500 men of the regular army to enforce the measure. Every body would have protested against an act of such consummate folly, and the Administration would have been held responsible for the safety of every officer and every private, whose safety it had so recklessly put in jeopardy.”.

An escape from the fatal consequences of this “weakest policy,” says the Times, is “entirely due to the perfect discipline of our men and to the skill of our officers.” In another place the Times says:

“The two victories of Gen. Taylor will give the country confidence, that our cause is in the hands of able and courageous officers, who perfectly understand their position, the character of the enemy with whom they are contending, and the means of resisting them with efficiency. Gen. Taylor himself has exhibited in his despatches, and in all his arrangements, a coolness of judgment and a firmness of purpose, which may well remind us of the Duke of Wellington, whilst in action he has shown an intrepid courage and a promptness of decision which have never been surpassed.”.

These quotations in themselves are the strongest refutation of the unjust assaults upon the Government. Has not this “small army,” unaided, vanquished our enemies, and covered itself with glory? Has it not been found to possess the means of resisting them (the Mexicans) with efficiency? If Mr. Polk be chargeable with “an illegal usurpation of authority,” in sending a force to defend our own American soil, has he not done every thing that was necessary to meet the crisis? Did he not send there perfectly disciplined men and skilful officers, and have they not proved equal, nay, superior to circumstances? While the country mourns the loss, and will do honor to the memory of the few who died bravely in their country’s cause, do sit not rejoice at the brilliant triumph of our arms? Where, then, is this “weakest policy” to be found? Texas came under our protection by our own consent. Her territory extended to the Rio Grande, by her own laws and buy the recognition of the great powers of Europe. Would it not have been base and cowardly in the United States to abandon her people and her soil to the ruthless havoc of foreign invaders?
In that matter, Mr. Polk has done his whole duty, and he could do nothing else. He sent a noble army, and most gallant and skilful officers, not to make the attack, but to defend our soil. The result is written in glowing characters, and the nation will sustain him to the very letter.

The correspondent of the N. Y. Evening Post writes:

“The late events prove the sagacity and efficacy of all the arrangements of the Executive and the War Department in regard to this rupture with Mexico. General Taylor was provided with three thousand excellent regular troops, and invested with full authority to call for ten thousand militia, if he was likely to need them. Commodore Conner was also provided with instructions to go to the assistance of the land forces in a certain contingency. All things have come out right.

“Gen. Taylor has called for militia, but whipped the Mexicans before a single company arrive; and the fleet reaches the point of danger on the very day of a decisive battle, to be in readiness to render the most effectual aid to General Taylor, in case the fortune of the day had been adverse. The course of things proved that the whole exigency of the case was appreciated in the councils of the administration, and that it was provided against, and that no more than was necessary to be done was done.”.

To the same effect speaks the N. Orleans Jeffersonian:

“The most extraordinary feature of the information from Washington, is the surprise that seems to be evinced at the removal of the troops from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande. General Scott professes to have had no knowledge of it, and the correspondent of the Baltimore American says the movement is universally condemned at Washington. We presume, of course, General Taylor acted under the directions of the War Department. Upon that Department rests the responsibility, and if the Secretary of War never had done anything else to establish his reputation, his wise forecast in ordering this important charge of position would be sufficient. The brilliant achievements of the army will, we presume, silence the croakers at Washington.”.

So much for the partizan assaults of the Times, which destroy themselves. The last Union points out the probable course which will be adopted for the prosecution of the war. Its wisdom and justice must be approved of by the whole country, including the Times, who generally sees in the Administration nothing but to condemn. It strikes down all the misrepresentations of the Whig press, who charge Mr. Polk with “getting up” this war for his own selfish end.—Never had we a more righteous war, and, our word for it, it will be conducted with a moderation and liberal spirit, worthy of all praise. As the Union says, “we war for peace and not for plunder.” Can a nobler motive animate any Government?

“The moral effect of this great triumph upon the country, will be as irresistible as its result upon the battle-field was
While we perfectly agree with the following suggestions, as to Mexico being compelled to pay the whole expenses of the war, which we believe to be a most righteous one, but which many of the Whig prints stigmatize as "the President's War," forced by him upon Mexico, we are anxious to know how the advice will be received by those Whig journals which t' aunt the Government with "truculent and pernicious designs of invasion and conquest!"

The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says:

"In the mean time the Government have taken a step which is quite as decided and important as a march to the Mexican capital. The American squadron, under Commodore Stockton, have orders to take possession of St. Francisco and Monterey, and to hold those places against all opposition. I know this to be a fact.

"Taking possession in California, the United States will never relinquish the foothold in that country until Mexico has not only paid all the indemnities due to our citizens, but . . .[illegible] . . . paid the expenses of the war."[BWP]

"What now have they contrived to find out in him?"

Shall we never look into a Whig paper without meeting the most pitiful accusations that the malice of an enemy can suggest? Without finding some half-way, milk-and-water talk the propriety of this or that policy? Whoever yet in a public emergency has given complete satisfaction to his friends even? Shall I say to his enemies? Instead of every patriotic citizen suggesting the best means for the defence of the country, and the prosecution of the war in which we are now engaged, a press like the Times of this city is endeavoring to show a want of foresight and judgment on the part of the Administration, when the commonest observation is aware that these two qualities have been displayed in the commencement of hostilities, and the victories of our arms. If the army on the Rio Grande had been cut up, horse, foot and dragoons, such another clamor against the Administration would have been raised by these partizans, sufficient almost to overwhelm and drive it from power; as now, when we are victors, it has received, I venture to say the applause and congratulation of the country, and the esteem of its rivals a broad. Because the . . .[illegible] . . . means, however, have been found equal to the emergency; the cap is neither too large nor too small; it fits the conqueror well, and he wears it well; the target has been struck, so as make the national pulse throb with pride and emotion; and yet there are cavillers who esteem their own violent prejudice above the fact and argument of the controversy. This is what may be called murdering one's own reputation—falling into one's own ambushade—digging one's own grave. Mark this! this! Experience has added little to their foresight. They blundered in their opposition to the Annexation of Texas—they are falling now into the same snare. Let them beware. The editors of the Times are not too wise. What they call the "weakest policy," is the very strongest. Every one knows this. Years hence, also, when Mexican representatives shall sit like brothers in our Congress halls; and Yankee enterprise shall have pruned the weeds which grow like grass on Mexican soil—when Mexicans themselves shall bless us for ridding them of those who have led them about like sheep in consternation and affliction, and this Union shall have compassed the flower of the Western world, both Whig and Democrat, both high and low, as they love their country, its institutions and its administrators, will look back with pride upon the glorious events of 1846. The Times may blush when it grows older and wiser. Such remarks falling from such lips, are apt to assist the storm, as in the "Tempest." If nothing can be done, nothing should be said. One should not be too humane in war, nor too valorous in peace for often. --------In their distress They call a spirit up, and when he comes, Straight their flesh creeps, and quivers, and they dread him, More than the ills for which they called him up."

A REPUBLICAN.

[BWP]
We ask attention to the lucid and able remarks of Senator Pennybacker, on the bill for the successful prosecution of the Mexican war. He handles the subject, in connection with the law of nations, with tact and force. We had the pleasure of hearing Mr. P., and were pleased to see what a favorable impression he produced upon the Senate and the audience. [BWP]

RE46v43i9p2c1, May 29, 1846: IN SENATE—TUESDAY, MAY 12, 1846.

Mr. PENNYBACKER said, as the question was one of great importance, he would assign very briefly the reasons for his vote.

It is not necessary (said Mr. P.) to the existence of a state of war, that war should be declared by both, or by even either of the contending parties. There is the highest authority on national law for the support of this position.

Bynkershoe (says Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries on American Law) has devoted an entire chapter to this question, and he maintains that a declaration of war is not requisite by the law of nations, and that, though it may very properly be made, it cannot be required as a matter of right. The practice rests entirely on manners and magnanimity, and it was borrowed from the ancient Romans. All that he contends for is, that a demand of what we conceive to be due should be previously made. We are not bound to accompany that demand with threats of hostility, or to follow it with a public declaration of war, and he cites many instances to show that, within the two last centuries, wars have been frequently commenced without a previous declaration. Since the time of Bynkershoe (continues he) it has become settled, by the practice of Europe, that war may lawfully exist by a declaration which is . . .[illegible] . . . only, or without declaration on either side. It may begin with mutual hostilities. Since the peace of Versailles, in 1763, formal declarations of war of every kind seem to have been discontinued, and all the necessary and legitimate consequences of war flow at once from a state of public hostilities, duly recognised, and explicitly announced, by a domestic manifesto or State paper. In the war between England and France, in 1778, the first public action the part of the English Government was recalling its Minister, as a breach of the peace between the two nations. There was no other declaration of war, though, each Government afterwards published a manifesto in vindication of its claims and conduct. The same thing may be said of the war which broke out in 1793—though a solemn and formal declaration of war, in the ancient style, was made in June 1756—vigorous hostilities had been carried on between England and France for a year preceding. In the war declared by the United States against England in 1812, hostilities were immediately commenced on our part as soon as the act of Congress was passed, without waiting to communicate to the English Government any notice of our intentions.

To the same effect (said Mr. P.) is the authority of Sir W. Scott, one of the most distinguished judges who ever presided in the High Court of Admiralty in the Kingdom of Great Britain. He says: says: “But it is said that the two countries were not, in reality, in a state of war, because the declaration was unilateral only. I am, however, perfectly clear that it was not less a war on that account, for war may exist without a declaration on either side. It is so laid down by the best writers on the law of nations. A declaration of war by one country only, is not, as has been represented, a mere challenge, to be accepted or refused at pleasure. It proves the existence of actual hostilities on one side at least, and puts the other party also into a state of war, though he may perhaps, think proper to act on the defensive only.

From these authorities (said Mr. P.) it is clear that war may exist, though there may have been no declaration of it.

Now, if this be so, it follows necessarily that the existence of a war may be proved by evidence other than a declaration of it. A declaration of war, to be sure, is the best evidence of a state of war, for it is conclusive upon the subject, and leaves nothing to presumption; but, as war may exist without such declaration, it follows, of course, that it may be proved by other evidence.

What is the evidence, then, before us, that war exists between the United States and Mexico?.

It will be remembered by the Senate, that, for years long past, Mexico has entertained hostile feelings towards the United States. She has charged our citizens with wrenching from her the territory of Texas. Nay, she has charged our Government with conniving at it, if not in fact instigating it. She protested against the annexation of Texas to the United States, and gave formal notice to the Government here, that, if the point resolutions should be passed by Congress, admitting Texas into the Union, she would consider that an act of war. On the passage of the (next line unreadable) Government withdrew his passports and indignantly withdrew from the country, breathing vengeance against the United States. In return, our Minister at Mexico was refused all official intercourse with that Government, and was in effect driven from their country; thus terminating, by the acts of Mexico, all diplomatic intercourse between the two countries. Afterwards she occupied a hostile attitude towards the United States, marshalling and organizing armies, issuing proclamations, and avowing the intention to make war on the United States, either by an open declaration of war, or by invading Texas. These are matters of history, (said Mr. P.,) and would be evidence in a court of justice, and must more are they so in a political body.

Notwithstanding these things (said Mr. P.) the President of the United States, actuated by a strong desire to establish peace with that country on the most liberal and honorable terms, actually sought a reopening of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and sent a Minister there; and how was he treated? He was refused to be received—not only once but twice, and he was thus compelled to leave the country. These acts of hostile character were followed up by a concentration of military forces on the right bank of the Rio del Norte, in the town and vicinity of Matamoras, on the immediate boundary between the two countries. Our troops were ordered to that boundary to repel the threatened invasion, and they posted themselves immediately opposite the enemy on the American side of the river.

—The Mexican general in command notified the American general to break up his camp with 24 hours, or war would be the result. Nay, he notified him to retire beyond the Neuces river, and in the event of his not complying, arms would decide the question. Why was this demand made if war was not intended? Did he expect to intimidate the American forces and cause them to ingloriously flee? No; no one can believe that. Why was the demand made then? It was made because the law of nations required that it should be made before there could be lawfully a resort to arms. I have already said that Bynkershoek contends that, though a declaration of war is not necessary to justify aggression, yet "a demand of what we conceive to be due should be previously made." Here was the demand made; and it was conceived to be due by the Mexican General that our troops should decamp and retire beyond the Neuces.

In a short time after this (only a few days) the Mexican General was changed and another appointed in his place—that was Gen. Arista, the most skilful and accomplished of all the Mexican Generals. He informed Gen. Taylor "that he considered hostilities had commenced and he should prosecute them accordingly." On that day his forces were sent across the river into the territory of the United with the avowed purpose of prosecuting the war and on that very day the hostile parties met and sixty dragoons of the American army, including officers and men, were killed and taken prisoners. Is not this war? What evidence will be required of the existence of war? If Mexico is not bound to make a declaration of war before war can properly be said to exist, what other evidence can possibly be expected of the existence of a state of war. To Mr. P.'s mind the evidence was complete to show that state of war actually existed.

But gentlemen say war can only be made by the sovereign authority of the two nations, and that in this case it does not appear that portion of the two Governments which represents the sovereign power, quoad this thing of making war, has assented to the hostilities existing. Why, how is it, so far as we are concerned? Our territory has been invaded, and we have been solemnly informed "that the question between the two nations can only be settled by arms." Now, the Constitution declares that "the President of the United States shall be the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States." If the country be invaded, what is his duty? It is to defend it. His duty as commander-in-chief requires him to defend it. When he does defend it, therefore, does he act without authority from the sovereign power of the States? He acts but in pursuance of his constitutional duty, and when he so acts he represents the sovereign power of the State.

But, more than this, (said Mr. P.) the Constitution empowers Congress "to provide for calling forth the militia to suppress insurrection and repel invasion;" and they have executed this power by passing laws upon the subject. They have authorized the President, "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, to call for the such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action, as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper." Now, when the country is invaded, and he acts under this law, does he not act by the authority of the sovereign power of the nation? Has not the power so to act been delegated to him by the sovereign power itself?

So far as the United States are, then, concerned in repelling invasion, the President acts as the representative of the nation; and this without a formal declaration of war by Congress, to enable him to do so. Such declaration of war is unnecessary to enable him to do so. He has already the power to do so; and the Constitution makes it his duty to exercise it. Indeed, under the law of nations, a declaration of war was never necessary in a case of defensive war. Vattel says: "he who is attacked, and only wages defensive war, need not make any hostile declaration; the state of warfare being sufficiently ascertained by the enemy's declaration, open hostilities. In modern times, however, the sovereign, who is attacked, seldom omits to declare war in his turn, whether from an idea of dignity, or for the direction of his subjects." It is only in the case of offensive war, or the commencement of war on the part of the United States, that Congress is called upon "to declare war," before the state of war can properly exist.

Then how is it with Mexico? (said Mr. P.)—It is said, that it does not appear that the sovereign power of Mexico has authorized these hostilities; that the nation may disclaim the acts of the General; and that in that case there would be no war. Now, can a y one in view of the whole conduct of Mexico, suppose for a moment that this possible? The General was changed in the face of our troops, and by whose authority was this done? Does not this look like as if the finger of the Government was in this matter?—There is no need of a declaration of war, on the part of Mexico, to prove that war does actually exist. They are not bound to furnish us with evidence that the war does exist. exist.

How, then, can we determine upon what they have resolved to do, except through the acts of their legally appointed officers? We are not bound to wait until they furnish us with evidence of their intent to strike before we can say that war exists. Every presumption of law, and of common sense, is in favor of the idea, that so much military parade and preparation, and such fearful responsibilities, were never made and assumed without the direction of the proper authorities in the Republic of Mexico. We must hold nation bound for such acts of their officers, or otherwise there would be no security for the peace of the world.

War then exists, and shall we not say so? The highest consideration of policy and justice require us to do so. It is necessary that we should do so to apprize our own people at home and abroad of their new relations and duties, growing out of this state of war. It is necessary that we should do so to apprize neutral nations of the fact, to enable them to conform their conduct to the rights belonging to the new state of things. And it is necessary that we should do so, in order to obviate all difficulty, when we come to treat of the right to seize certain things which neutral persons are carrying to the enemy, and of what is termed contraband, in time of war. Entertaining these opinions, Mr. P. said he was opposed to all amendments which should be offered to the bill, having for their objects the striking out of any portion of the bill which asserts, most truly, that war does exist and he should vote accordingly.
RE46v43i9p2c2, May 29, 1846: INTERESTING AND LATE EXTRACTS FROM MEXICO.

We are indebted to our friends in this city (says the Union) for various interesting extracts from their correspondence. Among these are the following letters just received from Mexico.—They are entitled to attention from their authenticity as well as importance. Mexico is determined to wage the war against us with all her vigor. And for this purpose, she has laid her hands upon the duties arising from imported goods; and this confiscation must be highly displeasing to the British capitalists, to whom the amount had been made over, for the purpose of discharging what was due to them by the Government. This source of revenue must, however, be considerably abridged, if not entirely arrested, in a short time, by our own squadron blockading her ports.

RE46v43i9p2c2, May 29, 1846: (From the New Orleans Picayune, May 21.) TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO CAPT. MAY.

We take great pleasure in stating that the gallant Capt. May, of the U. S. Dragoons, who led as brilliant a charge as was ever made on any field of battle, and with his small but brave squadron carried the enemy's battery and captured their general on the 9th inst., has been remembered by his fellow-citizens. Capt. May is a native of Washington, D. C., and some of our citizens from that district yesterday raised a subscription and purchased for their brave countryman a sword and belt, which was despatched to him last night. The sword has the following inscription upon it: "Presented to Captain Charles May, of the Second Regiment of United States Dragoons, by his fellow-citizens of New Orleans from the District of Columbia, as a token of their sense of his gallantry displayed in the battle with the Mexican forces May 9th, 1846."

RE46v43i9p2c2, May 29, 1846: DEPARTURE OF GEN. WORTH.

The General left this city yesterday, on board the Col. Harney, to rejoin the army, and we shall soon hear of his distinguishing himself.

RE46v43i9p2c2, May 29, 1846: TRANSMISSION OF ARMS, &c.

Yesterday, 2,500 stands of muskets, with bayonets, belts, cartridge boxes, and a large quantity of fixed ammunition, including grape and canister, were taken from the Arsenal in this city, and shipped for the South, for the use of the army in Texas.—[N. York Journal of Commerce, May 27]

RE46v43i9p2c2, May 29, 1846: CAMPEACHY.

The Yucatan schooner Ventura, Capt. Pratt, from Campeachy, arrived at New Orleans on the 20th, having sailed on the 13th.

Congress was still in session, and would no doubt confirm the declaration made some time since of the separation of the State of Yucatan from the government of Mexico. The news of the blockade of the mouth of the Rio Grande had been received at Campeachy, but they had not heard of the actual commencement of hostilities. The Yucatacos are said to be opposed to rendering any aid to Mexico in case of a war with the United States.

Some disturbances had taken place in the Department of Tobasco about the 1st inst., headed by Bruno; the result was not known at Campeachy when the Ventura sailed.

RE46v43i9p2c3, May 29, 1846: BOMBARDMENT OF FORT BROWN.

We have no where else (says the N. O. Picayune) seen so circumstantial and interesting an account of the bombardment of the camp opposite Matamoras as is contained in the following letter. It is due the author to state that it was written exclusively for the gratification of "a select few" of his friends—not for the Public eye. The reader will on this account excuse the air of levity with which serious matters are discussed. Under all this exuberance of fun and humor, we do assure the reader that the writer bears a heart which beats with every generous and manly
Since the evening of the 9th nothing has transpired here. You may know, ere this, that we gave the Mexicans “jesse” on the 8th and 9th.—Gen. Taylor, after establishing his little sand fort here, right opposite the town, left the 7th Infantry and two Artillery companies in it, with instructions to defend it to the death; he then left with the remainder of his force for Brazos Santiago for supplies, and with the hope that the two mortars (which he had ordered six months ago) had arrived from Washington, and also to bring up ammunition enough for our 18-pounders to batter down Matamoros. Gen. T. and command left on the 1st of this month. On the morning of the 3d, at daylight the Mexicans opened their batteries on our fort, or rather our grand entrenchments; from that moment it was right hot work until 12 o’clock, when both parties had ceased until their guns would cool. Were you ever shot at in front with a 12-pounder, in the flank by a 6-pounder, and a shell directed to burst over your head? If not try it, just to properly enjoy a brandy toddy after the gun cooling begins. Well, after the refreshments the ball continued, varied only by a little more ‘vindictate looseness’ and wild-colt, comet-like flying of shells. It was only 23 minutes after we commenced our fire before one of our 18 pound shot struck their 12 pound cannon directly in the muzzle, and knocked it head, back and stomach into the air about 20 feet, and it was accompanied by legs, heads and arms. Seven Mexican officers were wounded, and eight privates, who were around their piece, killed. We have not heard from their 12-pounders since, and so hot was the little fort in which it had been placed, that they were compelled to abandon it. When the first fire came, I rushed into my tent and jerked up my rifle, and as I stepped out, a 9-pound shot struck my tent at the head of my bed, ranged the whole length of my bed, cut off the back upright pole, passed out the back part through two other tents, and then buried itself in the parapet. I’m glad I was not “caught napping.”.

In the first half hour a Sergeant of Captain Lee’s company was killed; he was carried over to the hospital tent, (full of sick,) and directly after he was laid on a bed, a bomb shell was thrown through the top of the tent, hit near the bed burst and blew the dead man’s head off without injuring any one else. On Wednesday, the 6th May, and 3d day of the bombardment, Major Brown was struck on the leg with a bomb-shell, and his leg had to be amputated—he died on the 9th. These are the only two we have lost during the whole of the bombardment, which commenced on Sunday, the 3d, and lasted, with little intermission, day and night until the next Saturday at dark. During this time the enemy had thrown about 3500 shots—solid and shell-amongst us. It is incredible that the damage should have been so slight. Finding we could not dismount their mortars—they being sunk in the ground, with thick embankments in front—and having only about 400 rounds of ammunition to our cannon, we went to work to throw up a kind of temporary bombproof shelter, by taking our barrels of pork, laying sticks of wood across them, and throwing up six feet of earth upon that. These we built at points in the fort where they would be convenient for the men; and when we saw the smoke from their guns, every one would fall from the parapet and “hole.” When we would see a shell coming we would fall upon the ground, as the explosion generally takes place upwards. The Mexicans thought they had killed nearly all of us, as they were under the impression that all who fell were shot.

It was very disgusting to stand and be tired at all round, and not be able to return it “in full force and virtue,” but knowing our ammunition was scarce, we reserved it till the death struggle should come one. We were in hopes that, after a reasonable time of bombarding, the enemy would attempt to storm us. Two or three teints were made, but they could not be brought to the scratch. Five mortars were playing on us at once, from every point of their works. General Taylor’s orders to us were to maintain this post, and not pretend to make any sally, or risk in the least his position here; but in case we were surrounded after he left, that signal guns should be fired at certain intervals, which would notify him of the fact. This notice was given to the General as they heard all our guns at Point Isabel. Isabel. On the 8th, the General commenced his march with the train of provisions, and when about twelve miles from here, he saw the enemy in position. He immediately “walked into their affections.” We heard the firing of cannon on both sides, and distinctly the volleys of musketry. We knew well that it was the General poking it into a 12-pounder, in the flank by a 6 pounder, and a shell directed to burst over your head? If not try it, just to properly enjoy a brandy toddy after the gun cooling begins. Well, after the refreshments the ball continued, varied only by a little more ‘vindictate looseness’ and wild-colt, comet-like flying of shells. It was only 23 minutes after we commenced our fire before one of our 18 pound shot struck their 12 pound cannon directly in the muzzle, and knocked it head, back and stomach into the air about 20 feet, and it was accompanied by legs, heads and arms. Seven Mexican officers were wounded, and eight privates, who were around their piece, killed. We have not heard from their 12-pounders since, and so hot was the little fort in which it had been placed, that they were compelled to abandon it. When the first fire came, I rushed into my tent and jerked up my rifle, and as I stepped out, a 9-pound shot struck my tent at the head of my bed, ranged the whole length of my bed, cut off the back upright pole, passed out the back part through two other tents, and then buried itself in the parapet. I’m glad I was not “caught napping.”.

But wait, I forgot one thing: On the first Wednesday, after the bombardment had lasted three days, the enemy “sounded a parley.” Major Seawell and Lieutenant Britton were ordered to go out and see what they wanted. They did so, and the Mexicans demanded the surrender of the fort “for humanity’s sake.” They gave us one hour to surrender, or they would put us all to the sword. They brought us a letter from General Arista to our commanding officer. The commanding officer, Capt. Hawkins, (Brown had been shot just before,) had a council of war called, and said he presumed we were unanimous on such points, but that he would put the matter to vote as to their feelings. The vote of the youngest member was taken first and so on throughout. This was the unanimous vote:—“Defend the place to the death.” Gen. Arista was in thirty minutes replied to as follows: That we had received his humane communication, but not understanding perfectly the Spanish language, we were doubtful if we had understood exactly his meaning; but from all we could understand, he had proposed that we give him possession of this place, or we would all be put to the sword in one hour; if this was the proper understanding, we would respectfully decline the proposition, and “took this opportunity to assure his Excellency of our distinguished consideration.” After the reception of this by his “Excellency,” it just rained balls. The different mortars kept two pair of “saddle-bags” in the air all the time, varied only by their 6 and 4-pouonders. But in the midst of all the storm the Star spangled Banner still floated on our breast-works, at the point where they directed their strongest efforts; and we took out our two regimental colors and planted them on different parts of the wall. This fire was kept up all night, while their musketry... played on us from the rear, at the distance of five hundred yards. We ordered our men not to fire a shot until they came within eighty yards—but they did not approach. Their object was to exhaust us in ammunition. They knew from deserters that it was scarce, and Gen. Taylor had gone for a supply. Supply. They are fond of fighting at long distances, but they can’t stand the cold steel.

Now for where I left off on the night of the 8th. Gen. Taylor and the Mexican army were 12 miles from here-between this and Brazos. The batteries at Matamoras and around us, and in our fort, kept up a constant firing until dark, when all ceased. We had no communication from the General, but that he had to lick ’em or die! The sound of arms had not retrograded, but advanced; besides, there was not ringing of bells in the city, or sings of rejoicing, therefore, we judged they had not the first cause for jolification. That night was the first sound napping that had been done in the fort for six nights. He next morning at daylight the enemy’s batteries opened on us as usual, we laying low, as our cannon ammunition was nearly exhausted, giving them now and then a “crowder,” to let them know that the “degenerate sons of Washington” were not all dead yet. At 1 o’clock we heard Gen. Taylor open again, and from that till 4o’clock the battle raged with fury, and coming closer almost every shot. The General was driving them before him in the chapporal at the point of the bayonet.—About half a mile in our rear we saw their cavalry retreating for the ferry, to recross the river to Matamoras, and they were in utter confusion; we turned one of our eighteen pounder to bear on the mass, and gave them a “blizzard” to help them along.

Then you should have heard the loud huzzas that went up from this little spot. I sprang upon the walls near our regimental flag and requested silence. Every thing was as still as death. Says I, ”three cheers, all together, for the star spangled banner.” It was given in full blast; Matamoras heard the shout; and then, and not till then, every gun from the enemy ceased its fire.

The enemy say they had 6,000 in the fight, but from the returns of the regiments which we have found on the field there must have been 7,153 of them. We had 1,500 engaged in the battle, about 500 forming the reserve. All Gen. Arista’s papers and baggage have been taken, silver plate in abundance. The loss [taken, wounded and missing] of the enemy amounts to about 2,000; among the prisoners were Gen. La Vega and 17 officers. Nine pieces of cannon were taken.—7 out of the 9 were loaded; this shows you how tight it was. Gen. T. captured more muskets from the enemy than we had in the fight against them—the biggest pile of ammunition you ever saw; 400 splendid mules, and baggage of all kinds enough to load the steamer “Harney.” We have lost about 150 killed and wounded—44 officers killed, 9 wounded. Gen. T. left day before yesterday for Brazos to bring up his mortars, which we understand have arrived. He will also organize the volunteers expected. We look for him to-night and so soon as he arrives we shall commence operations against Matamoras, and we will have it or faint in our traces.. It is my opinion that we have crippled them so by the loss of their cannon, muskets, and ammunition that they will be forced to retreat to Carmargo [60 miles from here,) or Monterey, [108,] but from indications they may be fortifying the city and preparing to give us a street fight; let it be so—we are prepared for any event. The Anglo-Saxon never can acknowledge the corn to the cross of Negro and Indian. Some of us will get our pates cracked, but it is our profession. Nevertheless, mark what I say—unless everything we demand is granted our banner will in a few days wave from the walls of Matamoras.

RE46v43i9p2c4, May 29, 1846: HORSE AND SWORD TO CAPTAIN WALKER.

The sword for the brave Walker (says the N. Orleans Courier) was carried out to Point Isabel in charge of Gen. P. F. Smith. A suitable inscription is engraved upon it—and it is accompanied by an appropriate letter written by Mr. Bravo, in behalf of himself and the other citizens at whose cost it was purchased. The Alabama also took out a noble charger for Captain W., presented to him by some of our fellow-citizens. These testimonials to the valor and zeal of the gallant Texan are highly creditable to N. Orleans, and they will not be with good effect in future.

RE46v43i9p2c4, May 29, 1846: NEVER RIGHT.

There is a class of people in this country—a small class, indeed—(says the New Orleans Delta) who always find fault with the policy, more particularly the foreign policy, of the Government. They were the Tories of the Revolution—the Federalists of 1812; but have no distinctive local habitation or name now, that we know of, although their existence is unquestionable. On the debate in the Senate, in reference to the recent message of the President, Mr. Sevier, of Arkansas, in a spirit of sarcasm, alluded to them by saying—.

The Americans were certainly a very unfortunate people. He never knew them to be right in the whole course of his life. They were wrong, ten years ago, in the case of France; wrong lately with Great Britain; wrong in the Seminole war; and now, wrong again with Mexico. He had hoped to see his country right once in his life, but he was to be disappointed.
The Whigs call the war with Mexico “the President’s war,” and assert that Congress, as the “tool” of the President, stated what was false, in recognizing the existence of war. Events have proved the foresight and wisdom of the President and Congress in adopting, at the outset, the fullest and most vigorous measures. Many of the Whigs, even, are coming out in justification of the bold and thorough action of Congress.—Mexico, beyond all doubt, struck the first blow in the war. So far from disavowing the outrages of her Generals on the Rio Grande, her President has proclaimed the act of war to the world. The Washington correspondent of the Boston Courier (Whig) says:

"Mexico, you will learn before the receipt of this, preceded the United States, in the declaration of war, by two or three weeks. This intelligence was received last night by an arrival directly from Vera Cruz to the Department of State. It was communicated to the President, last evening, in a copy of the Declaration translated at the State Department, and a brief extract from it went north this morning in the official paper.—War, it is now certain, exists, and by the action of both Governments. The Mexicans declare it to be a defensive war, and, moreover, aver that it was provoked by the United States, in the seizure of Mexican soil. This, however, is not a question to be settled now, and the declaration of that Government preceding our own materially changes the aspect of public affairs."[BWP]

The course of some of the Northern Whig presses, in regard to our Mexican difficulties, brings forcibly to mind their factious and detestable conduct on the subject of Annexation. It is more criminal now, because we are in actual war, and the assaults upon our Government are calculated to encourage Mexico and other nations in their designs upon the country. The following specimen from the New York Tribune surpasses any denunciation that may be found in Mexican writings. It exhibits the fierceness of party-spirit, when it causes a journal calling itself American, thus to betray its own country, and more than endorse the curses and vituperation of enemies, in open warfare with us. Could the Editor of the Tribune act with much more criminality, were he to cross the Rio Grande and take service in the ranks of the bloody Ampudia?.

Of all wars ever fomented, we remember none more nefarious in its origin, more wanton and atrocious, than that in which we are now plunged by our rulers, and the land-jobbers and slave-jobbers, whose money, exertions and lies, have made those instruments of their cupidity our rulers. The bloody villainy of some wars was measurably redeemed by the daring evinced in commencing them; but this war is as cowardly as it is wicked. A wealthy, enlightened, and powerful Republic of twenty millions of people is attempting to humble and despoil an ignorant, enfeebled, distracted nation of seven millions, and these in good part semi-barbarous Aborigines of this continent! The giant who should beat a cripple, would be a hero in comparison.[BWP]

A curious and interesting scene took place in the Louisiana Legislature on the 19th. The Governor entered the Hall and asked leave to address the House. He said:

"Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen: I have called on you this morning to state a circumstance of peculiar nature, and to ask you to become my witnesses and endorsers in reference to it. On my visit to the Barracks last evening, presuming that the additional appropriation of 200,000 dollars would become a law this morning, I promised that the five companies about to proceed to the Rio Grande should be paid immediately. On (unreadable sentence) made some amendments that would somewhat delay the passage of the bill, and that I should be obliged to forfeit my word to the troops, unless I could obtain the money immediately. I made application to Mr. Benj. Story, of the Bank of Louisiana, and asked for 9,000 dollars, to be re- (unreadable sentence) letting me have the amount. I then made application to Mr. Burke, President of the Canal Bank, who, without any hesitation, immediately placed to my credit the sum of 9,000 dollars, and declared his willingness to let me have any amount needed. Gentlemen, I ask you to be witnesses and endorsers in this matter."

The Governor retired from the House amidst the cheers of the Representatives.

The House instantly took up the appropriation bill, just received from the Senate, and passed it by acclamation—and immediately afterwards passed a bill, empowering the Treasurer to pay into the Canal Bank the said sum of $9,000, thus liberally advanced.

It was then resolved, "that the Canal Bank of New Orleans shows the fact, that all corporations are not destitute of patriotic feeling, and its prompt action in furthering the views of the country, by the late loan to the Governor, deserves the thanks of the Legislature."

This Mr. Benj. Story, of the Bank of Louisiana, had been lauded to the skies, for offering half a million to the State of Louisiana, to meet the Mexican crisis. So far from this being true, he refused to make the small loan of $9,000, under the peculiar circumstances. Mr. S. "catches it" from all the New Orleans papers.
A public meeting was held at N. Orleans, May 20th, which was addressed by S. S. Prentiss, Esq., with his usual glowing eloquence, on the subject of the noble exploits in Texas. After the adjournment, the multitude, arranged in two regiments, en masse, went to the residence of Mr. Benjamin Story, President of the Louisiana Bank, (who refused to loan the Governor $9,000 for the volunteers to Texas,) and gave him three tremendous groans; after which they waited on Mr. Glandy Burke, of the Canal Bank, and gave him three cheers.

When the glorious Mexican war intelligence was received in this city by Saturday’s Southern mail, no credit was given to it by many persons. It came too rapidly, they said. The mystery is now cleared up. The news was brought though night, by express from Blakely to Montgomery, Ala., one hundred and ninety miles, in 13 hours. This great and almost unequalled feat of horsemanship was performed by one person, young Frederick Tyler, a fearless and expert rider. The most extraordinary circumstance is that he had to saddle all the horses himself, as he was not expected, and all were asleep at the stations. The citizens of Montgomery have made up a purse for him. The Augusta Constitutionalist hopes that the Government will employ this Express, which would gain 48 hours on the regular mail from Mobile to Atalanta.

Our old friend, Captain William M. Fulton, a native of Richmond, and late of the United States Army, has been authorized by General Gaines to raise a Regiment for the Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande. He served through the whole Florida war as Captain ofDragoons. The New Orleans Tropic says: "He is an able and experienced officer, and we trust his regiment will soon be filled, and on its way to the battlefield.”.

The Jeffersonian described Colonel Fulton as "a brave and experienced officer, who distinguished himself in the Florida war.”

The reported death of the gallant McIntosh, of Ga., from the wounds received in the action of the 8th, is disproved by a letter from his son, dated at Point Isabel, on the 13th, stating that though he has suffered severely from two wounds, in the neck and arm, which was broken, he is now doing remarkable well. The Colonel was also wounded in the neck during the last war. He entered the service as a Lieutenant, in the war of 1812.

On the 20th, (says the correspondent of the Charleston News,) 900 men left the N. Orleans barracks for the Rio Grande, on board the steamer Mary Kingsland and ship Ondiaka, of Philadelphia. The Col. Harney has also set out, carrying Gen. Worth, Col. Davis and staff, T. B. Thorpe, Esq., editor of the Tropic, and bearer of despatches, and Capt. Doanne's company of volunteers. Mr. Thorpe carries despatches from Gen. Gaines to Gen. Taylor, and a sash worn by Braddock at the time of his death, which is presented by Gen. Gaines to the Commander of our forces on the Rio Grande.

The Baltimore Patriot protests against sending another and a higher officer to the Rio Grande, to take the command in chief:

“To do that now would be but rank injustice (missing sentences) given the highest of all evidence of his ability to command—success. Other equally gallant and able officers there are in the Army, who, had they been in his place, would have done all he has accomplished. But none could do more. He has met the enemy—he has conquered them—and driven them from the country. Our letter say that the fighting is over—that there are now no more laurels to win. It is very likely. The news of the battles of Gen. Taylor will not fail to strike terror into the hearts of the Mexican people—they will have "no stomach" to renew the fight with him again. Let, then, all the glory of the commanding
And yet, it was for sending this fine officer and his gallant army to defend our soil on the Rio Grande, that the Whig press lavished their abuse upon the President as for an act of imbecility, recklessness and unpardonable sin. Gen. Taylor has won his laurels nobly and he wears them well.—His services have been appreciated by the Administration, in conferring on him the high rank of Major General. To judge from the past, it is natural to infer that no General can "do more."

We have received no news from the Army since last Sunday morning—every day we look for interesting intelligence, announcing that Major General Taylor has attacked Matamoras and Barita and must probably set his foot upon Mexican soil. We should not be surprised that, when the news of the Mexican disasters travels through Mexico, a revolution should spring up, forcing Paredes to abandon the helm and substituting a new President, who will be disposed to ask for peace, in return for a full recognition and satisfaction of all our demands. The heavy blows on the Rio Grande must have "broken the spirit" of boastful Mexico, and she may sue for any terms.

The sketch of the bombardment of Fort Brown from the N. O. Picayune, is full of interest.

We are indebted to the N. O. Picayune for a handsome diagram clearly showing the positions of the different American and Mexican troops, on each side of the river, at Matamoras. The Mexican fortifications, &c., are from official drawings. Officers of our Army furnished the particulars of the arrangements of the American camp.

We received no Union last night—but a friend who saw one says, that it announces among others the appointment of Gen. Zachary Taylor as Major General by brevet; of "Capt. Walker of Texas" as captain in the mounted regiment, and Stephens Thompson Mason as Captain in the same Regiment.

As it is my design to give as full and impartial an account of Texas as it is in my power to do, I have availed myself of the four letters, which will follow from the pen of a friend, (the author of "Prairiedom," a new and interesting work recently published,) who has frequently and recently visited that portion of Texas, which I have not seen. My own letters will appear after those which have been so kindly handed me shall have been published. Yours, J. A. P.
regions of the west. I was as wet as a sea-dog, but happy as—myself. We stopped for the night at an Indian camp of our old friends, the Lipans who were anchored on Onion creek, so called from the quantity of wild onions that grow upon its margin, some of which they had already gathered, and were cooking them when we arrived. We turned our horses to grass, and quietly camped for the night. The moon was bright above, and myriads of stars sparkled in the sky, like gems in as bride’s bosom. I lay gazing upon them in the open air, thinking upon home and heaven, till I sank to sleep. Suddenly I heard great commotion in the camp of the Indians. On calling out to know what was the matter, "mucha aguaventa" was the reply and in a twinkling every squaw was busy in changing the position of the wigwams, turning them round and placing them upon more elevated ground, to protect themselves more carefully from the approaching norther and the rain.

The first indication we had of it was a flash of lightning in the north. Presently the wind came booming onward, and the thunder rolled, and the lightning flashed, and the rain poured upon us in torrents. It passed almost as quick as it came, and in a moment, as it were, all was again clear and still. I ensconced myself in one of the wigwams, and, protected by a buffalo robe and blanket, endeavored, amid the howl of Indian dogs and the loud laugh of the squaws, to while away the balance of the night in dreams. At daylight we were again moving and before night compassed 35 miles-reaching the German settlement of Newbraunsfels in time to see the village, eat a cold supper and sleep on a hard bed. The following day we passed in our ride the head waters and springs of San Marcos, a beautiful stream, with rich lands adjoining and passed the Guadaloupe at Newbraunsfels by ferry, just at the mouth of the Comal, a lovely little creek, on the borders of which the village is built. It is a few months old only, and has about two hundred families already settled, and as many houses to shelter them from the weather. They are generally a very industrious and enterprising people, and seem pleased and contented in their new abode. This is a lovely spot for farming, and a town.

The Comal is a beautiful little bayou that empties into the Guadaloupe at this place, and as a bathing spot, all the year round, equals the Warm Springs of Virginia. We found the temperature 76 deg. Feb., while the thermometer in the open air indicated a temperature of only 50 degrees. It was the only place where one could keep comfortably warm during a norther.

From Newbraunsfels, or Princeville as it is often called, we rode on 25 miles to San Antonio. We passed through a lovely country, and when about half the distance, over a lofty eminence called Buena Vista, from whose summit we enjoyed one of the widest and loveliest prospects that we have seen in Prairiedom. It commands a view of at least 300 miles in circumference. The whole scope of country, indeed, from Austin to San Antonio, is extremely beautiful, and we defy any one to ride that distance and that route, and say he ever saw a lovelier region. In truth, a lovelier region is no where to be found.

"There eternal Summer dwells,
And west winds with musky wing,
About the cedared alley fling,
Nard and cassia’s balmy smells;
Iris there with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow,
Flowers of more ming’ed hue,
Than her purfled scarf can show,
And drenches with Elysian dew,
(List mortals if your ears be true,)
Beds of hyacinth and roses,
Where young Adonis oft reposes, Waxing well of his deep wound."

The bill to provide for the adjustment of land claims in the States of Louisiana, Missouri and Arkansas, and parts of Mississippi and Alabama, was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mangum, the Sergeant at Arms was authorized to employ the necessary force to work the ventilator on the dome of the Senate. This was very refreshing to the reporters.

Mr. Benton said it was important to pass the army bill, and he would therefore defer the balance of his Oregon speech until to-morrow. On motion of Mr. Dix, the bill to increase the number of Generals in the Army, &c., was then taken up as the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. Atchison withdrew his amendment, requiring the discharge of the others at the close of the war.

Mr. Mangum also withdrew his motion to strike out the first section.

Mr. Dix offered several slight amendments to the details of the bill, which were agreed to.

Mr. Benton also presented one or two amendments, which were adopted.

Mr. Westcott offered an amendment to give the President the authority to select officers for the volunteers from the Militia of the States, instead of leaving it to the Governors of the States. Rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and was subsequently, by consent, read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Johnson of Md., the prior orders were postponed and the French Spoliation was taken up.

Mr. Sevier said that the bill would give rise to some debate, and he hoped it would be passed over informally.

Mr. Johnson of Md. said he was under the impression that there was to be no debate but merely the vote taken. If, however, any Senator intended to debate it, he had no objection to its being passed by.

Mr. Speight intimating an intention to debate it, the bill was informally passed over.

The bill for building ten war steamers, was made the special order for Monday.

Several messages having been received from the President, the Senate at 1 o’clock, on motion of Mr. Sevier, went into Executive session.

Mr. Haralson, of Ga., offered a resolution calling upon the President of the United States for copies of the official letters of Gen. Taylor, giving an account of the battles of the 8th and 9th inst. The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McKay moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole. The motion prevailed, and the debate was resumed as in committee upon the Civil and Diplomatic Bill. The pending motion was to strike out the sum of $50,000 proposed for the Marine Hospital of the country. The debate had little reference to the amendment.

Mr. McClelland gave notice of several amendments to be introduced by him from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. Collamer of Vermont, replied in part to the speech of Mr. Payne of Alabama, who yesterday made a warm anti-Tariff speech. He asserted in answer to an assertion made yesterday, that protective duties, without a single exception, had reduced the prices of goods. The facts would prove this, and if gentlemen would not strangle discussion when the Tariff Bill came up, the fact would be abundantly proved. He hoped a liberal discussion would be allowed, and that debate would not be strangled.

Mr. Stewart of Pennsylvania replied more minutely, and in much detail to the argument of Mr. Payne. The exhibition of American goods in the city, he maintained, demonstrated the national independence, skill, ability, and economy of the country. Prices had been reduced by the Tariff, and there were no exceptions to this great fact.

Mr. Stewart was stopped in the midst of his remarks by the hour for closing the debate.
A motion to increase the sum for marine hospitals from $50,000 to $85,000 was rejected.

A motion to strike out $50,000 was made and carried—yeas 79, nays 77.

Mr. Winthrop moved to amend, by inserting $18,000 for a special minister to Mexico, whenever the President of the U. States shall have ascertained that the government of Mexico will receive one. This was rejected, ayes 50, nays 81.

The next hour was occupied in offering miscellaneous amendments to the bill, but few of which were agreed to by the committee.

At 3 o'clock, without getting through with the amendments, the committee rose.

A message was received from the President of the United States, in compliance with the resolution of this morning, communicating copies of all despatches received from Gen. Taylor.

Without reading, they were referred to the military committee and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Haralson, from the military committee, reported a bill providing for the distribution of certain military books among the volunteers. It was twice read and referred to a committee of the whole.

The House again went into committee upon the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.—Many amendments were acted upon, but finally there was no quorum to vote, and the committee rose and the House adjourned.

RE46v43i9p4c1, May 29, 1846: OUR RELATIONS WITH ENGLAND.

But little is said in the British papers by the last steamer in regard to the Oregon question.—It had not been named in Parliament nor much discussed in the newspapers. Some of the English journals represent the disposition to settle the question, if possible, on the basis of the 49th parallel, as gaining ground on the other side of the Atlantic.

Unless England should make a handle of the Mexican war to exact more rigid terms of settling the Oregon question, we do not despair of a pacific arrangement. We have already expressed our inability to understand from what sources a Mexico has been enabled to raise so large a sum of money, and equip so fine an army. We have suspected England to be at the bottom of it—but there is no direct proof to that effect. On the contrary, Mr. Reverdy Johnson says, almost oracularly, that England desires a certain arrangement, the Mexican war may be soon closed by a triumph of our arms.

What gives us some uneasiness, is, lest England and France, in their attempt to mediate between Mexico and the United States, may lay down certain conditions, as the basis of an arrangement, which we could not accept. They have no right to interfere between us and Mexico. They may indeed advise—but, should their advice not be compatible with our views, and should they, then, attempt to enforce their odious “balance of power” doctrine, a general war will be inevitable—and, if it is to be forced upon us, it will come at a time when our people were never so well prepared to meet it.

The enthusiastic spirit of the whole country will exert a fine moral influence over the powers of Europe, and go far to secure peace, by making them acquainted with our union, harmony strength and energies, when the honor or rights of the nation are assailed.

The monster meeting at New York seems to have impressed the Editor of the Albion, the organ of British feeling in that city, He says:

“A public meeting on an exceedingly large scale took place in the Park of this city on Wednesday. It will be observed that resolutions, in favor of the war, and pledges of unbounded support of it, were adopted; and it will be further observed, that among the Vice Presidents of the meeting were some of the first persons in the city. The sentiment everywhere adopted is, that the country is in danger, and right or wrong must be supported. All this calls for deep reflection—Here is a case of war brought on by marching a military force into a disputed territory; which many persons contend was unnecessary; yet, unnecessary as it is represented to be, the whole nations rises up to support it.”

He, however, sees much peril to peace in the movement, and adds:

“We most earnestly implore every lover of peace, and every good man, to reflect on this state of affairs. We urge them, one and all, to exercise their influence in calming excited feelings, and in endeavoring to bring about a speedy arrangement of the difficulties with England, lest before we are aware of it, the two countries may be plunged in deadly strife. It is for public opinion, and for the leading men of England and America, to avert this terrible calamity. The danger we think is imminent, and they should be up and doing. Fifty thousand men have been voted by Congress. Gen. Taylor says five thousand will be sufficient to bring matters to a conclusion on the Rio Grande. To what use then is this large force to be applied? To make a conquest of Mexico, or to threaten England? Far be it from us to impute to the government of the country any unwarrantable desire for war; but when the elements of strife are abroad, and the means of engaging in them are so copiously given, we cannot conceal our fears as to what may happen. We know how much opposed the common sense of the two nations is to war; we know the horrors and miseries it would inflict on both; let us use then all our might in keeping such a fell calamity at a distance, by striving to bring all points of difference to a settlement. A great career of prosperity is before us; a profitable trade is springing up in articles unknown to English markets heretofore, which promises to be of exceeding value. The provision trade it unmolested will be immense, and will at once enrich the merchant, the shipbuilder, and the farmer, and of course the whole of this country. Civilization is extending everywhere, opening new markets to the industry of both nations. Let us then hold fast to these advantages, and cherish the great and manifold blessings which peace secures to us and which war would infallibly destroy.

Here the Albion misrepresents the motives of Congress. Their object was not to extend the war, but to set on foot a prompt and vigorous military organization, to end the war by one strong and decisive blow. Congress designed to prepare for the worst contingencies. The extensive hostile preparations of Mexico called for the fullest action on our part, and it was important not only to a peace with Mexico, but with the whole world, that no time should be lost, and no effort spared to end the war at once. While Gen. Taylor, with 6,000 additional troops, might subdue opposition upon the Rio Grande, no one could say positively that Mexico would not continue to send in reinforcements, and make it necessary on our part to push into the interior of Mexico, and even penetrate the City of Mexico itself, and by seizing her rich towns and provinces, compel her to do us justice for her many wrongs and injuries towards us. For this purpose, a large army was indispensable, and Congress acted providently and wisely in authorizing a large force to be organized. Again, in view of the extraordinary interposition of England and France in the Annexation of Texas, we could not be sure that the powers of Europe might not interfere in our Mexican relations, and to make "assurance doubly sure," it was most important to be armed at all points, and ready for any contingency. In making out large preparations, therefore, we consulted not only our own safety, but the peace of the world. Our object was not to provoke hostilities, but to give notice to the world that they should keep their "hands off."

We can tell the Albion how we may avoid the horrors of a war with England. If (unreadable0dent) abstain from interference with our Mexican relations, and at the same time exhibit a disposition to meet us half-way on the Oregon question, and conclude a speedy settlement upon just and proper terms, we doubt not the result will be a permanent peace, the blessings of which we appreciate as highly as the Albion does. A contrary course may lead to war, but that war will be in no degree referable to the preparations which we have now set on foot, to punish an insolent and aggressive foe, and at the same time guard against the improper interference of other nations. All that the United States desire is, to preserve their rights and honor unharmed. Hat end secured, we shall be ready to affix the seal to a permanent contract of peace with all the world.

RE46v43i9p4c1, May 29, 1846: No title.

The Washington Correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot learns that the officers of the new Regiment of Mounted Riflemen have been appointed—that the command has been conferred on General Smith of New Orleans, who distinguished himself in the Florida war, and who has now gone with troops to the aid of Gen. Taylor, on the Rio Grande. The Lieutenant Colonelcy has been conferred upon Lieut. Fremont, now in the Rocky Mountains.

He also states that a bill has been prepared by the Military Committee to create two more Major Generals and three Brigadier Generals. It will pass—and it is thought that Gen. Taylor and Gen. Saml. Houston will receive the two highest commissions.

RE46v43i9p4c2, May 29, 1846: No title.

The Louisiana Legislature, as her people, have acted nobly throughout the present crisis. On the 18th inst., both houses made a further appropriation of $200,000 to fit out the Legion for the seat of war and to forward the residue of the four Regiments raised under requisition from Gen. Taylor.

The Legion is completed. It comprises Maj. Gally’s Battallion of Artillery and seven companies of Artillery, in all 880 rank and file. Col. Bailie Peyotn’s regiment is filled up by the volunteers from the country, leaving three companies over. The number of Louisiana Volunteers is thus swelled to 4,443 rank and file! file! Gen. Gaines regretted that he had no authority to take the Legion into service at present. He hoped soon to receive instructions from Washington to accept their valuable services.
Gen. Worth reached Mobile on the 17th, with instructions and directions for Gen. Gaines at New Orleans and General Taylor on the Rio Grande. He will go directly to Point Isabel.—The Collector of the port of Mobile offered a cutter for the immediate use of Gen. W., but he was forced to go to New Orleans, where he will take the swiftest conveyance west. Every where he is welcomed on his road to honor.

RE46v43i9p4c4, May 29, 1846: ITEMS OF THE WAR.

The James L. Day, from Brazos Santiago on the 16th, has arrived at New Orleans, bringing three days’ later intelligence from the Army. A sort of pause seems to have succeeded the stirring scenes of the 8th and 9th, but we have a hint of events in embryo, which promise to produce most important results.

[From the New Orleans Picayune, Extra, May 18.].

Gen. Taylor left Point Isabel on Thursday, the 14th, for his camp, with about 600 men only.—On the 15th two companies of volunteers, under Captains Desha and Stockton, with some regulars—in allamounting to about 1,000 men—marched under command of Col. Wilson for Barrita.

On Saturday, the 16th, intelligence was received from Gen. Taylor that he intended crossing the Rio Grande, just below his camp, by making a bridge with his wagons. So far every thing looked favorable to his design. The fleet had sailed from off the Brazos to the mouth of the river, and were to send up detachments to cooperate in the attack upon Barrita.

Another account says that Gen. Taylor, ere the departure of the James L. Day, opened his communication with his camp. It will be seen that two companies of artillery reached Point Isabel on the 14th from Pensacola. The annexed letter gives details of the arrival of volunteers, &c., and of the movements of the troops from the Point:

CAMP AT POINT ISABEL, BRASOS ST. JAGO, May 16, 1846.

Gents:—The Volunteer Companies under command of Col. J. B. Walton of the Washington Regiment, on board the steamer James L. Day, arrived here on Thursday morning the 14th inst., after a very pleasant passage of three days, and those by the Telegraph arrived on the 15th and went immediately into camp. Gen. Taylor left here on the morning of the 14th for his camp, with a large train of wagons, and quite a formidable train of artillery, dragoons and infantry, amounting to some six or eight hundred. There was an arrival from the upper camp this morning which passed him yesterday on his march; he has in all probability ere this reached his camp.

On the morning of the 15th, regulars enough to swell the amount to about one thousand embarked on board the steamers Neva, Loo and Cincinnati, and at 1 o’clock were landed at the Brazos Santiago, and took up their line of march for the Rio Grande, all under the command of Colonel Wilson; their march is for Barita, situated some fifteen miles up the river, where it is stated the Mexicans are collecting considerable forces.

The United States fleet, consisting of the Mississippi, Cumberland, Raritan, Lawrence, &c., which have been here for some days, have run down to the mouth of the river and come to, and with their boats will cross the troops under the command of Colonel Wilson to the South bank of the river. The steamers will be in readiness at Barita to assist in the transportation of arms and ammunition. Colonel Wilson’s command have with them two days’ rations, and scarce a blanket, with no tents nor any baggage train. At dark they had crossed Cocachita, and were on their march for the river. This morning, the 16th, the sea is very high, and the weather squally, so that the steamer Neva cannot get to the sea, and if it continue so, must create some distress in Colonel Wilson’s camp for provisions and blankets.

On the 15th, the steam schooner Augusta sailed for the Island of St. Joseph, with all the wounded that were able to be transported, taken from the battle of the 8th and 9th instant.

Men of war lying off the Rio del Norte: Mississippi, Potomac, Lawrence, St. Mary, Cumberland, flag ship; Raritan, Somers, and the armed schooner Santa Anna, under command of Lieutenant Renshaw.

We learn that about 175,000 rounds of musket cartridges, 500 packed mules, with their saddles and camp equipage, were taken in the action of the nineth inst. The American soldiers drank the Mexicans’ liquor, smoked their cigars, eat their bread and beef, which they were just in the act of cooking when the engagement took place.

CAMP OPPOSITE MATAMORAS, May 14, 10 o’clock at night.

Gentlemen: I would like to write a detailed account of all that has occurred since the 8th inst., but I have a hope of getting a few hours’ sleep to-night, for to-morrow I fancy we shall have some thing to do. A report is going around camp to-night, that we will go over and take possession of Matamoros to-morrow or next day.
Gen. Taylor returned to-night from Point Isabel. A party of Dragoons since his arrival have swam over and brought a boat from the opposite side. The sentinel over this boat left in haste.—All the prisoners whom we had in Matamoras were exchanged day before yesterday, besides which, we gave our enemy 97 wounded men by way of La Narp.

Yours, N.

During the engagements of the 8th and 9th about 1000 sailors and marines from the Fleet at anchor off here were landed and were a formidable set of men to keep the place while the soldiers were absent. They are now on board their respective vessels and will not be called on again till a similar occasion may demand their services.

Major Ringgold was buried with all the military honors.

Another letter dated the 15th, 10 P. M., winds up thus:

"We have no news from General Taylor's camp to-day, and I expect the first news you receive of any active measures, will be the crossing of the American troops over the Rio Grande.

"Captain Griffin (of the James L. Day) heard nothing whatever of the report that Paredes was marching to Matamoras with 15,000 men, nor was there any certainty that the Mexicans had been reinforced; the general opinion, however, was, that they had been."

An officer thus describes the military arrangements of General Taylor—he wrote before the late engagements—and yet this is the "small and inefficient" army, which, in the opinion of the Whigs, the President had so wantonly sent to the Rio Grande to be sacrificed:

"Every movement of his army has been as perfect as a piece of machinery, and although the enemy have watched him incessantly with the design of attacking him, they have never seen a false move that they could take advantage of. There never has been a time, by night or day, that his whole force would not have been in readiness, and in the best possible position to sustain the shock of an attack, in three minutes after the tap of the drum. All this has been done too with a large portion of the command daily at work, first in the throwing up temporary defences and batteries, and subsequently upon a large fort designed for permanent occupancy, which was commenced as soon as the necessary reconnoisances and surveys could be made by our engineers."

RE46v43i9p4c3, May 29, 1846: A GOOD HIT.

The N. O. Tropic inserts the figure of a "Runaway," and adds:

Gen. Ampudia, the great Mexican hero, who cut off the heads of our citizens in Tobasco, and boiled them in oil, in running away from the battle of the 9th, opposite Matamoras, got wounded low down in the back. This information is authentic. We hope that when Gen. Taylor takes Matamoras, that Gen. Ampudia will be left behind as a rich prize. There are those in the American ranks who want him.

RE46v43i9p4c3, May 29, 1846: No title.

We have heard much talk of the apparent apathy of the people of Texas in raising troops to defend their own soil. We are glad to see a new face put upon affairs by the last arrivals. The Austin New Era, of the 2d may, in speaking of the requisition for troops says, "it is gratifying to see the joyous excitement prevailing among all classes of our citizens at the prospect offered them once more of meeting the Mexicans in the battle field. Many of our most prominent and cherished citizens are enrolling themselves as private soldiers in different companies, vieing with the young men in promptness and alacrity. It is with difficulty that a quorum of the Legislature can be kept together. Some of the most fiery spirits have already left for the Rio Grande.—It was supposed that the 200 United States Dragoons stationed at Bexar, and the 60 near Austin, would join Colonel Hays, and all proceed to the Rio Grande in a body. The entire force would not be less than five hundred most efficient troops, admirable mounted."

RE46v43i9p4c3, May 29, 1846: No title.

The N. O. Picayune gives further items of news from the Mexican by the Mandarin:

A letter was received at Vera Cruz from Tampico on the 7th inst., which announced the death of Col. Cross of our army, the circumstances of his cruel fate are detailed. "He was taken by an armed party of Rancheros, and hung immediately to a tree."
In the official journal we find the documents by which the manifesto of Gen. Paredes of the 23d ult. was accompanied, and upon which it was based. They consist of the Mexican reports of events occurring on the Rio Grande down to the 14th of April, with the correspondence between Generals Ampudia and Taylor.

In regard to the revocation of Gen. Almonte’s commission, El Tiempo supposes that it was made either because the Government had obtained proof of his implication in revolutionary projects, or were distrustful of his sentiments towards the Administration. At any rate, he was ordered to remain at Havana.

El Locomotor is extremely gratified by the prompt preparation which was made in the Castle of San Juan de Ulua to give Com. Connor’s squadron a warm reception. The wind was such that the squadron in setting sail approached somewhat towards the Castle. Thereupon the guns were manned, matches lighted, and every preparation made for repelling an attack. But the squadron sheared off and pursued its course.

The editor of the same paper speaks in the highest terms of the state of the fortifications in the Castle. Since 1838 a barbet battery has been erected upon the glacis of the Castle, mounting 40 or 50 mortars of an immense size. That the cannon and powder are good within the Castle we have not doubt, for they were obtained from the United States! In this connection we may add, that a gentleman arrived here, yesterday from Vera Cruz, who comes over for the express purpose of making large purchases of powder for the Mexican Government. We suppose it will be shipped from New Orleans—“in a horn.”

El Locomotor, having made inquiries, is satisfied that Com. Connor had assured the Government at Washington that it would require twenty vessels of the largest class to take the Castle, fortified as it now is; but that the Government had replied to him that he must abide by the instructions before given him—that having 300 guns in his squadron at Sacrificios, he should only wait to hear that hostilities had commenced on the frontier and then proceed to attack the Castle. We presume that Com. Connor needs not to be enlightened in the premises.

The Mexicans remote from the seat of war were universally confident of victory upon the Rio Grande. They founded their hopes purely upon their numerical superiority. They set down the number of their own troops at 10,000 at the least, and that of Gen. Taylor’s at less than 3000.

A gentleman who has just arrived at New Orleans from Havana, says the Picayune, talked freely with Santa Anna upon the Mexican affairs. He deprecated the war with the United States, as sure to be disastrous to Mexico. He spoke of the monarchical projects in Mexico as destined to certain failure; he believing that a majority of the people would prefer even annexation to the United States to the rule of a Spanish Prince. Santa Anna had, it is said, no intention of returning to Mexico at present, and has recently rented a new house.

Gen. Almonte regards the insurrectionary attempt of Gen. Alvarez as one of great moment and very difficult to be put down.

We have received, at an hour too late for any special remarks upon them, (says the Union, of Monday night,) the official despatches from the War and Navy Departments. We lose no time in laying them before our readers. It will be seen that they confirm substantially the accounts already published.

Sir: I respectfully report, that I shall march this day with the main body of the army, to open a communication with Major Brown, and throw forward supplies of ordnance and provisions. If the enemy oppose my march, in whatever force, I shall fight him. Occasional guns are heard in the direction of Matamoros, showing that everything is right in that quarter.

Yesterday, the recruits under Lieut. McPhail arrived here. After filling up the companies of the permanent garrison, (A 1st arty. And G 4th arty.,) the remainder of the detachment, with its officers, was placed under Maj. Munroe's orders to assist in the defence of the depot. The men are yet too raw to take the field, though efficient for garrison defence. They will be permanently assigned as soon as practicable.

The four companies of the first infantry are hourly expected, and will be a seasonable reinforcement. The first shipment of volunteers from New Orleans may also soon be looked for. Their arrival will enable me to open the river and free our communications.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obd’t serv’t,
Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig’r Gen. U. S. A. Com’g.

RE46v43i9p4c5, May 29, 1846

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp at Palo Alto, Texas,
May 9, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I was met near this place yesterday, on my march from Point Isabel, by the Mexican forces, and after an action of about five hours dislodged them from their position and encamped upon the field. Our artillery, consisting of two 18 pounders and tow light batteries, was the arm chiefly engaged, and to the excellent manner in which it was manoeuvred and served is our success mainly due.

The strength of the enemy is believed to have been about six thousand men, with seven pieces of artillery, and eight hundred cavalry. His loss is probably at least one hundred killed. Our strength did not exceed all told twenty-three hundred, while our loss was comparatively trifling—four men killed, three officers and thirty seven men wounded, several of the latter mortally. I regret to say that Major Ringgold, 3d artillery, and Captain Page, 4th infantry, are severely wounded. Lieutenant Luther, 2d artillery, slightly so.

The enemy has fallen back, and it is believed has repassed the river. I have advanced parties now thrown forward in his direction and shall move the main body immediately.

In the haste of this first report, I can only say that the officers and men behaved in the most admirable manner throughout the action. I shall have the pleasure of making a more detailed report when those of the different commanders shall be received. I am, sir, very respectfully.

Your obedient servant,
Z. TAYLOR,

The Adjutant General, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

RE46v43i9p4c5, May 29, 1846

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp at Resaca de la Palma,
3 miles from Matamoras,
10 o’clock, P.M. May 9, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report, that I marched with the main body of the army at 2 o’clock to-day, having previously thrown forward a body of light infantry into the forest, which covers the Matamoras road. When near the spot where I am now encamped, my advance discovered that a ravine crossing the road had been occupied by the enemy with artillery. I immediately ordered a battery of field artillery to sweep the position, flanking and sustaining it by the 3d, 4th and 5th regiments, deployed as skirmishers to the right and left. A heavy fire of artillery and of musketry was kept up for some time, until finally the enemy’s batteries were carried in succession by a squadron of dragoons and the regiments of infantry that were on the ground. He was soon driven from his position, and pursued by a squadron of dragoons, battalion of artillery, 3d infantry, and a light battery, to the river. Our victory has been complete. Eight pieces of artillery, with a great quantity of ammunition, three standards, and some one hundred prisoners, have been taken; among the latter, General La Vega, and several other officers. One General is understood to have been killed. The enemy has recrossed the river, and I am sure will not again molest us on this bank.
The loss of the enemy in killed has been most severe. Our own has been very heavy, and I deeply regret to report that Lieutenant Inge, 2d Dragoons, Lieutenant Cochrane, 4th Infantry, and Lieutenant Chadbourne, 8th Infantry, were killed on the . . . [illegible] . . . Lieutenant Colonel Payne, 4th Artillery, Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh, Lieutenant Dobbins, 3d Infantry, Captina Hooe, and Lieutenant Fowler, 5th Infantry, and Captain Montgomery, Lieutenants Gates, Selden, McClay, Burbank, and Jordan, 8th Infantry, were wounded. The extent of our loss in killed and wounded is not yet ascertained, and is reserved for a more detailed report.

The affair of to-day may be regarded as a proper supplement to the cannonade of yesterday; and the two taken together, exhibit the coolness and gallantry of our officers and men in the most favorable light. All have done their duty, and done it nobly. It will be my pride, in a more circumstantial report of both actions, to dwell upon particular instances of individual distinction.

It affords me peculiar pleasure to report, that the field work opposite Matamoras has sustained itself handsomely during a cannonade and bombardment of 160 hours. But the pleasure is alloyed with profound regret at the loss of its heroic and indomitable commander, Major Brown, who died to-day from the effect of a shell. His loss would be a severe one to the service at any time, but to the army under my order it is indeed irreparable. One officer and one non-commissioned officer killed, and ten men wounded, comprise all the casualties incident to this severe bombardment.

I inadvertently omitted to mention the capture of a large number of pack mules left in the Mexican camp.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR
Bt. Brig'r General U. S. A., Com'g.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army, Washington, D. C.

RE46v43i9p4c5, May 29, 1846: HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION, Resaca de la Palma, May 11, 1846.

1. The Commanding General congratulates the army under his command upon the signal success which has crowned its recent operations against the enemy. The coolness and steadiness of the troops during the action of the 8th, and the brilliant impetuosity with which the enemy's position and artillery were carried on the 9th, have displayed the best qualities of the American soldier. To every officer and soldier of his command, the General publicly returns his thanks for the noble manner in which they have sustained the honor of the service and of the country. While the main body of the army has been thus actively employed, the garrison left opposite Matamoras has rendered no less distinguished service by sustaining a severe cannonade and bombardment for many successive days. The army and the country, while justly rejoicing in this triumph of our arms, will deplore the loss of many brave officers and men, who fell gallantly in the hour of combat.

2. It being necessary for the Commanding General to visit Point Isabel on public business, Col. Twiggs will assume command of the corps of the army near Matamoras, including the garrison of the field-work. He will occupy the former lines of the army, making such disposition for defence, and for the comfort of his command, as he may deem advisable. He will hold himself strictly on the defensive until the return of the Commanding General.

By order of Brig. Gen. TAYLOR:
W. W. J. BLISS, Acting Adjutant General.

RE46v43i9p4c5, May 29, 1846
HEAD QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, (Texas,) May 12, 1846.

Sir: I am making a hasty visit to this place, for the purpose of having an interview with Commodore Conner, whose squadron is now at anchor off the harbor, and arranging with him a combined movement up the river. I avail myself of the brief time at my command to report, that the main body of the army is now occupying its former position opposite Matamoras.—The Mexican forces are almost disorganized, and I shall lose no time in investing Matamoras, ands opening the navigation of the river.

I regret to report, that Maj. Ringgold died the morning of the 11th inst., of the severe wounds received in the action of Palo Alto. With the exception of Capt. Page, whose wound is dangerous, the other wounded officers are doing well.
In my report of the second engagement, I accidentally omitted the name of Lieut. Dobbins, 3d Infantry, among the officers slightly wounded, and desire that the omission may be supplied in the despatch itself. I am under the painful necessity of reporting that Lieut. Blake, topographical engineers, after rendering distinguished service in my staff during the affair of the 8th inst., accidentally shot himself with a pistol on the following day, and expired before night.

It has been quite impossible as yet to furnish detailed reports of our engagements with the enemy, or even accurate returns of the killed and wounded. Our loss is not far from 3 officers and 40 men killed and 13 officers and 100 men wounded; while that of the enemy has in all probability exceeded 300 killed; more than 200 have been buried by us on the two fields of battle.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Fort Polk, Texas, May 12, 1846.
[ORDERS No. 60.]

As a mark of respect to the Chief Magistrate of the Republic, the work constructed at this place, to cover the main depot of the army, will be known as “Fort Polk,”.

The Commanding General takes this occasion to express his satisfaction with the dispositions made for the defence and protection of this point, so vitally important to the efficiency and security of the army. To Maj. Monroe, the commanding officer, Captain Saunders of the Engineers, Majors Thomas and MacRee, and Captains Sibley and Hill of the Quartermaster's department, Captain Ramsey of the Ordnance, and Lieut. Montgomery of the Subsistence departments, credit is especially due for their zeal and activity.—The General returns his thanks to the numerous citizens who volunteered their services in the defence of the depot. Their assistance added materially to its strength, and to his confidence in its ability to resist an attack. The reinforcement from the brig "Lawrence," under Lieut. Renshaw, and the large force of seamen and marines so promptly furnished by the squadron on its arrival, require a special acknowledgment to Commodore Connrer and Commander Mercer of the navy. The army is deeply grateful for this support and co-operation from a kindred branch of the public service.

By order of Brigadier General Taylor,
W. W. J. BLISS, Acting Adjutant General.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, Texas, May 12, 1846.
[SPECIAL ORDERS, No. 62.]

1. General la Vega and the other Mexican officers, prisoners of war, will be conducted to New Orleans, under charge of Lieut. J. J. Reynolds, 4th Artillery, who will report on his arrival to Major General Gaines, for further instructions. The quartermaster's department will furnish a steamer for the transportation of the party.

2. As many of the sick and wounded now at this place as may be indicated by Surgeon Wood, will be sent in suitable transports to St. Hoseph's island.

Assistant Surgeon Byrne will accompany the detachment, and will return with the convalescents that may be in condition to leave the general hospital. The quartermaster's department will furnish the proper transportation.

By order of Brigadier General Taylor,
W. W. J. BLISS, Acting Adjutant General.

Sir:--The arrival of the squadron at this anchorage, of which the department was informed, in my communication of yesterday, was most opportune. To obtain a supply of provisions from the depot at Point Isabel, Gen. Taylor after leaving Major Brown with five hundred men in charge of the works at Matamoras, marched for the former place with the remainder of his forces, consisting of two thousand men. On his return, when within twelve or fifteen miles of Matamoras, he encountered the enemy in considerable force, estimated at from six thousand to seven thousand men, with a large portion of cavalry—An engagement took place about 10 o'clock yesterday morning, which lasted until night. A pilot in the employment of the United States at this bar, who visited the army to-day, informs me that our loss amounted to sixty killed, and that Gen. Taylor had offered the enemy battle again to-day, but that it was declined. From the rapid and incessant firing, particularly of artillery, throughout the day, I should infer the loss of the enemy must have been very considerable. No further particulars have reached me. Shortly after the action commenced, I received a communication from Major Munroe, commanding Point Isabel, requesting a reinforcement from the squadron, for the defence of that post, where it appears all the supplies for the army are deposited. In the course of yesterday afternoon and this morning, five hundred seamen and marines under the command of Captain Gregory, of the Raritan, were landed from the squadron—a force, it is believed, sufficient to defend it against any attempt that the enemy can make. A reinforcement for the army is hourly expected from Galveston and New Orleans.

I am, very respectfully yours, your obedient servant,
D. CONNOR,
Commanding Home Squadron.

Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

UNITED STATES SHIP CUMBERLAND, Off Brazos Santiago, May 13, 1846.

Sir: In my communication of the 9th inst., of which a duplicate is enclosed, the department was informed that a battle had been fought on the day previous, between the American and Mexican forces near Matamoras. On the 9th, Gen. Taylor continued to advance towards his works opposite that place, the Mexican army under General Arista falling back before him until within two and a half miles from the American works, when it made a stand, and a general action ensued, which ended in the complete rout of the enemy. All his artillery, several standards, nearly all his baggage, ammunition and stores, with a large number of prisoner, among whom were Gen. La Vega, and other officers of rank, were captured. The enemy maintained his position bravely, and did not abandon it, without very severe loss. Our loss is stated to be about sixty, killed and wounded. So signal has been the defeat, that it is not believed the enemy will be able to assemble in any force for a considerable time. This event, with the arrival to-day of nearly one thousand volunteers from New Orleans, has placed the army in perfect security. It is my intention to dispatch such vessels of the squadron as are not in immediate want of water, to blockade the Mexican ports—leaving the Lawrence to cruise in this neighborhood for the protection of the vessels engaged in furnishing the army with supplies.

I am, very respectfully,
D. CONNOR,
Commanding Home Squadron.

Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

D. S. Kaufman, Esq., member of Congress from Eastern Texas, left New Orleans for Washington city on the 19th. His majority is 1,009.—It is yet uncertain who is elected from Western Texas. The last accounts place Williams 9 votes
The Congress of the U. States having, by an act approved on the 13th May, 1846, declared that a state of war exists between the Republic of Mexico and that of the United States; and the President of the United States being by said act authorized "to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not exceeding 50,000 for the purpose of enabling the Government of the United States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination," and having called upon the Executive of this State, (unreadable) date of the 19th instant, "to cause to be enrolled and held in readiness for muster into the service of the United States three Regiments of Infantry," to be composed of volunteer corps—Now, therefore, I, William Smith, Governor of Virginia, by virtue of the authority with which I am invested, do announce to my fellow citizens the readiness to receive, for the purpose aforesaid the tender of the services of thirty companies of volunteers, to be formed into regiments when mustered into the service of the U. States. These companies must have the organization of the . . .[illegible] . . . the United States, and in their rank and file must consist of 64 men, not over 45, nor under 18 years of age, and of full "physical strength and vigor." Existing volunteer companies, tendering their services, will be permitted to retain their existing uniform; but all new companies must strictly conform, in their uniform to the prescribed by the general order of March, 1834.

No officer of militia, no matter what his grade will forfeit his commission by entering into the proposed volunteer service.

For information of the public, the uniform before referred to, as well as the company organization of the army of the United States, will be found in the subjoined general order.

The call to arms has, upon the generous and the brave, a magical effect. To the Virginian is has never been made in vain. Other States . . .[illegible] . . . rushing to fields of danger and of glory; and the sons of the Cavaliers will not be outstripped in this noble race of patriotism and duty.

Given under my hand, as Governor, and under the lesser seal of the Commonwealth at Richmond, this 23d day of May inst., [SEAL.] the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-six, and of the Commonwealth the seventieth.

WM. SMITH.

The following organization of Volunteer Corps for service under the requisition of the President of the United States will be observed:

1 Adjutant, (a Lieutenant of one of the companies, but not in addition.),
1 Sergeant Major,
1 Quarter-Master Sergeant,
2 Principal Musicians, and
10 Companies, according to the organization above.

Volunteer Corps now in commission tendering their services, and all new corps which may be raised for this service, will send to this department, with the tender of service, a written engagement, signed by all the members, to (unreadable) for twelve months after they shall have . . .[illegible] . . . at the place of rendezvous, or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged—according to their discretion.
Old corps will retain the uniform now worn by them; new corps will uniform according to the pattern prescribed.

No man under the rank of a commissioned officer will be received, who is in years apparently over forty five or under eighteen, or who is not in physical strength and vigor.

Commandants of regiments within which volunteer corps for this service shall be raised, will superintend the enrollment, the election of officers to inspect the company, and certify the whole to this department. Commissions for this special service will then be issued to the officers of all new corps. Existing corps will be inspected in like manner and sign the enrolment.

Companies, when enrolled and commissioned will hold themselves in readiness for muster into the service of the United States when called for but it is recommended to the members not to abandon their ordinary occupations in the mean time further than to give such attention to training as may be convenient. June

June 1, 1847, REv64i9p2c1, From the Brazos

U.S. Steamer Trumbal arrived on Saturday from the Brazos. We have received by this arrival the Matamoras Flag of 15th, and the Saltillo Picket Guard of 3d.

The following passengers came in the Trumball: Capts. Webster, and Crowenshields, Mass, Volunteers; Captain Claiborne of U.S. steamer, Col. Cross; Capt. Lansing, U.S.A.; Rev Mr. McElroy, Chaplain, U.S.A; Lieut. Frost, U.S. Voltiguers; M. Field, Mr. Coolridge, Mrs. Field, and 40 deck passengers, principally discharged volunteers.

The Picket Guard contains the following result of the court martial in case of Gen Lane and Col. Bowles:

INQUIRY IN THE CASE OF GEN. LANE.

Facts. –That at the battle of Buena Vista, on the 22d February, Gen. Lane commanded the 2d and 3d Regiments of Indiana Volunteers; that on the 23d he was in immediate command of the 2d Regiment of the Indiana Volunteers, and three pieces of artillery under the command of Lieut. O'Brien, and that the 2d Indiana Volunteers retreated from the field without any orders from Gen. Lane, on the 22d of February; but through the exertions of Gen. Lane and other officers from one hundred and fifty to two hundred men of the 2d Regiment Indiana Volunteers were rallied and attached to the Mississippi Regiment and the 3d Indiana Regiment, and remained with them on the field of battle during the remainder of the day.

Opinion. –The court are of opinion that during the whole period of the 22d and 23d of February, 1847, Brig. Gen. Lane conducted himself as a brave and gallant officer; and that no censure is attached to him for the retreat of the 2d Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

INQUIRY IN THE CASE OF COL. BOWLES.
Facts. – In reference to the first charge, it appears from the evidence, that Bowles is ignorant of the company, battalion or brigade drills, and that the maneuver of the evening of the 22d February, indicated in the third specification of that charge, was indicative of an ignorance of battalion drill.

In relation to the second charge, it appears from evidence before the court, that Colonel Bowles gave the order, "cease firing and retreat;" that Gen. Lane was present, and that he had no authority from Gen. Lane to give such orders.

It also appears that Col. Bowles retreated after having given the aforesaid command; but that he did not shamefully run away from the enemy, nor did he hide himself in any ravine from the enemy or from his regiment.

It appears, too, that Col. Bowles dismounted from his horse in rear of his regiment; but there is no evidence to show that he did so to protect himself from the enemy.

The court find that the fact of Col. Bowles having given the order above mentioned, did induce the regiment to retreat in disorder.

Col. Bowles gave this order with the intention of making the regiment leave its position; but the court does not find that he had been particularly ordered to maintain and defend it.

Opinion. – With reference to the first charge, the court is of the opinion that Col. Bowles is ignorant of the duties of the Colonel; but the court would remark that ill health, and absence on account of ill health, have, in some degree, prevented him from fitting himself for the duties of that office.

The court is of opinion that, at a time Col. Bowles gave the order "retreat," he was under the impression that the artillery had retreated, when, in fact, that battery had gone to an advanced position, under the orders of Gen. Lane, which orders had not been communicated to Col. Bowles.

And, in conclusion, the court find that throughout the engagement, and through the whole day, Col. Bowles evinced no want of personal courage or bravery; but that he did manifest a want of capacity and judgement as a commander.

General Cadwallader, and staff, are at the camp of instruction, (Palo Alto,) fourteen miles below this place. Also, Col. A. C. Ramsay; Pennsylvania regiment; Lt. Col. Fay, 10th regiment; Major Morgan, 11th do; Major Talbott, 16th do.; Captains Carr, Lyberg Moore, Irwin, Waddell and Cummings, 11th regiment. Tow companies of dragoons, Captains Butler and Merrick. Five companies of voltiguers, Captains Bernard, Biddle, Howard, Edwards and Churchill. Tow companies of the 16th regiment, Captains Hendricks and Brennan –three companies of the 10th, and Captain Pitman's company of the 9th. These troops will remain at Palo Alto under strong discipline, and from thence, it is rumored, transferred to Vera Cruz.

Col. Humphrey Marshall; s Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry were in Camargo at last accounts on their way home. They will probably reach here in a day or two, and not be disbanded until they arrive at New Orleans.

It is stated in the Monterey Pioneer, upon the authority of a gentleman from San Luis Potosi, that but a few hundred effective troops were in that city and that the hospitals were filled with the sick an wounded, who were (illegible) of attention. A report (illegible) there that Gen. Taylor was within three days march of the city, which caused hundreds of the inhabitants to ramos with their property.

The Monterey Pioneer thinks that an advance upon San Luis is designed by Gen. Taylor, as unusual activity prevails in all the departments, and four trains, loaded with subsistence stores, have recently arrived at that place.

Lieutenant Waters, of the Alexandria company, Virginia regiment, died, a short time since at the town of China.

ESCAPED. – A young man named John Davis (an American we believe) was confined in prison Tuesday, charged with selling arms and ammunition, to Mexicans. Through the insecurity of the prison, or the carelessness of the sentry, he effected his escape during Thursday night last.

Romano Paz, a notorious Mexican robber and murderer was captured in the vicinity of Old Reynosa, by Captain Reid of the steamer Corvette, and brought down to this city on Wednesday last, where he is now imprisoned. It appears that he holds the rank of captain under Canales, and visited the settlements near Reynosa, for the purpose of inducing or forcing the Rancheros to join his standard. The people were not disposed to join him, and sought an opportunity to place him in the hands of the Americans. This was effected by informing Captain Reid of his whereabouts and designs, who collected a force from the boat, and made him prisoner, at a ranchero where he had been quartered for several days.

Gen. Urrea has issued a proclamation to the citizens of Cadareyta, very similar in tone to that of Santa Anna. He calls upon the town for a contribution towards supporting the war, and also orders under arms all the able bodied bales between ages of 16 and 45. Immediately after having issued this proclamation, he set off for the city of Mexico.
We understand that Mr. Simonds, beef contractor, well known to the army here, was attacked a few days ago, while on his way to Monterey, by some Mexican robbers. He was shot through the knee, so that the limb had to be amputated. One of the robbers was killed in the encounter. They made nothing that haul.

We regret to see, by the following letter, that there is a report of the defeat of Col. DONIPHAN. It comes, however, through Mexican sources, and we sincerely hope, will prove to be unfounded:

Special Correspondence of the Picayune.

CAMP WALNUT SPRINGS, (Near Monterey,) May 2, 1847.

There is a report here, derived from pretty good authority, from Col. Doniphan’s force, and of a very unwelcome character. It is derived from an attaché of the army as Silenas, a small town within about forty miles of this place, and he obtained the information from Mexicans who had just arrived. It is to the effect, that Col. Doniphan’s force had been attacked at a pas called Sierra Gordon, about half way between Saltillo and Chihuahua, by a Mexican force from Durango under Gen. Reiz –of whom I never recollect of hearing before –and that a Col. D. had been defeated with severe loss, and all his artillery captured. There may be some truth in this report, as the Col. was once on route to join Gen. Wool’s command at Saltillo. All we can do, is hope that the reported is unfounded, and await authentic information. The train will be off in a few moments, and I have not the time to write more.

J. E. D.

‘Col. Doniphan must be within a few day’s march of this place. This may truly be called the marching command. But they have not hurt themselves much by it, if Mexican stories are believed, according to which they were not very scrupulous as to whose mules they took on the way, and infantry as well as cavalry were all mounted. They have not received a cent of pay since they loft home, nor clothing from the Government, so that, as far as outward appearances are concerned, they must be a shabby looking set. It appears they are generally clothed in buckskin. There is no doubt, however, they are some in a fight. Some English gentlemen, who arrived yesterday from Durango, report Col. Doniphan to have started from Chihuahua on the 1st of April for this part of the country, by way of San Jose del Parral. On the route they saw Gen. Garcia Conde on his way to Durango with about 150 men, having as prisoner General Heredia, who commanded at the battle of the Sacamentos. He is accused to treason, and of being fond of American gold. All the rest of the troops had dispersed for their homes. Durango was in a great state of alarm, dreading the arrival of Gen. Wool, which was expected by them daily. Mr. James Magoffin was a prisoner, with the city for his prison limits, but well treated by the Mexicans. Everything was quiet in California, the whole country in possession of the Americans, and a very great influx of families and settlers from Oregon.’

[BJM]
We take from the Eagle the following account of the recent surprise at Santa Fe:

MEXICAN TREACHERY. –One of those bloody and brutal acts which seem to be characteristic of the lower order of the Mexican people, was committed at Santa Fe, about 8 or 9 miles from this city, on Wednesday night last. It appears that a detachment of seventy-odd dragoons, belonging to the command of Col. Harney, left Jalapa some days since in command of Lieut. Hill, with the intention of visiting this city to procure a further supply of horses. On arriving at Santa Fe, nine of the men were left behind in consequence of illness on their part, and the fatigue of their horses.

Lieut. Hill and his command continued on, feeling that those who were left behind were perfectly safe, and soon afterwards reached this city, where he has been detained, although it was his expectation that he would have returned the next morning. Nothing further was heard from the men until Thursday morning, when news reached here informing us that a large party of Mexicans had attacked and literally cut them to pieces in a most shocking manner. One of them was killed on the spot, and five others were mutilated in such a manner as to strike any one with horror at the sight. Means of transportation were furnished, and the survivors brought to the city as soon as possible. One of the number, however, died on Thursday night, and two others were reported last evening, by the surgeon, as unable to survive their wounds during the night. The hand of one was cut off above the wrist. The abdomen of another was cut in such a manner as to allow his bowels to protrude. Another has several sabre cuts on his head, and the arms and bodies of others are hacked and mangled to as to render the description almost incredible. Captain Walker left this city on Thursday morning, accompanied by his Mounted Riflemen, in search of the murderers, and encountered a large body of Mexicans, whom he attacked and succeeded in killing four. A yet, we believe there has not been anything received of a positive nature in regard to the number killed. However much this kind of warfare is to be deprecated by us, we can see no other alternative than to fight them in their own way, if they will no fight us fairly. We still trust that some measure will be discovered by which this cowardly system of butchery may be obviated, and that when American blood must flow, it may be in open and honorable combat; the enemy in front, instead of sneaking behind the back.

The editor of the "Picket Guard" very vigorously defends the two Indiana regiments. He says:

"It is due to Indiana to say, that they four rifle companies from the two regiments of that brigade opened the fight on the mountain on the 22d, that the 2d regiment opened the fight on the morning of the 23d; that the 3d Indiana lost the last man that was killed on the field, Capt. Taggart, of company E., and occupied, in conjunction with the 1st Illinois, the advanced position on the night of the 23d, when the enemy drew off."

MAJOR GENERAL PATTERSON. –In the General Orders of Gen. Scott, directing the manner of march of the first body of the volunteers, returning home to be discharged, he says:

"Maj. Gen. Patterson, rendered for the moment, supernumerary with this army, will accompany the returning volunteers of his late gallant division, and render them such assistance, on the way as he well knows how to give. He will report, in person, as Washington, or by letter from New Orleans, for further orders from the War Department.

"This distinguished general officer will please accept the thanks of the General-in-Chief for the gallant, able and efficient support uniformly received from the second in rank of this army."

RETURNED VOLUNTEERS. –Brig Russell, from Vera Cruz, with three companies Tennessee Volunteers, and Regiment, and 1 company of Kentucky Volunteers.

Brig Billow, with 140 of the 2d Illinois Regiment.

Ship Pharsalia arrived yesterday, with about 280 of the 1st Tennessee Cavalry, with Colonel Thomas, Maj. Waterhouse, Capts. Cooper, Newman, Haines and (illegible); Lieuts Richardson, Brownlow, McCabe, Leftwich, Chambliess, Kirk, Donnelly, Allen, McKnight, Johnston, Woodson, Gossett, Bell, Allen and Anderson; Surgeon Alsop, and Assistant Surgeons Walker and Donoho. –*[N.O. June 1, 1847, REv64i9p2c4, Prospects of Peace

Of the charges most bitterly urged against the Administration by the Whig press, is that of boundless "lust of dominion," and the most immoderate conditions required of Mexico in the negotiation of a peace. It has over and over again been asserted, that the President would be satisfied with nothing less that the acquisition of the whole of Mexico. This wholesale denunciation has been fully met, but the Whig papers still keep up the cry. We are, however, glad to see that one of them has the firmness to represent the Administration as not an uncompromising "land robber," or as a monstrous Ogre, voracious enough to swallow the whole of Mexico one meal. A letter from Washington in the N.Y. Courier refers to the statement in the New Orleans papers, that Mr. Trist had arrived at Vera Cruz, armed with authority to negotiate a peace with Mexico, in co-operation with Gen. Scott; that he (Mr. Trist) had held long and confidential conversations of such importance as to justify the belief that "Mr. Trist is the government in Mexico." So much only of this "important mission," says the Washington writer, had publicly transpired at N. Orleans; and he proceeds to supply, upon the authority of a "well informed correspondent" of that city, the following additional particulars, which, if true, are important enough. —We have been so often deceived buy the "signs of the times" in regard to the operation of cause and effect in Mexican policy, that we shall not now express an opinion as to the result. The statements, however, reveal the fact that, in the view of one Whig at least, the Administration is anxious to close the war upon terms which ought to be entirely satisfactory to Mexico. If, therefore, Mexico shall madly refuse to negotiate after the magnanimous and liberal conduct on our part, the whole world will hold our Government free from blame for the continuance of the war:

"That Mr. Trist had communicated from Vera Cruz with Gen. Scott at Jalapa; that, in all probability, Mr. Trist would proceed with the next train to Jalapa; and that the negotiation might, perhaps, be brought very suddenly to a favorable conclusion. This is not absolutely certain; but from the diplomatic survey of Gen. Scott, and a reconnoitering officer in Mexico, the exceedingly strong probability now is that we shall soon have peace. Buena Vista was a more brilliant affair than Cerro Gordo; but the results of the latter are likely to be of incalculably more importance. —If Scott, after conquering the army of Mexico in the field, should now, in conjunction with Mr. Trist sign a treaty of peace in "the Halls of the Montezuamas," he will have achieved glory enough, even although he should never be President.

"Rest assured, there was a perfect understanding with Scott and the Administration, and that the terms on which both coincide in the opinion are" Upper California and New Mexico, and no other or greater portion of territory; and the right o the way across the Isthmus if it can be obtained —These terms are so much more moderate that were anticipated by Mexico, that whenever they are promulgated it is believed that the popular voice of Mexico will be clamorous for peace. --Unless, then, the Mexicans are more besotted than Hottentots or Esquimaux, we must have peace."

June 4, 1847, REV64i10p1c5, Late From the City of Mexico

We received on Monday evening papers from the city of Mexico to the 8th inst., forwarded by Mr. Kendall. They are a week later than any papers before received. We were too crowded yesterday to make much use of them, and now recur to them, as they contain some news of the importance, yet more rumors, and relate many facts which serve to illustrate the state of affairs in the interior of Mexico.

The Mexicans seize upon the slightest pretext of rumor for believing they have inflicted injury upon our forces. It was reported and believed at Puebla on the 9th inst., that the guerrillas of New Leon and Coahuila had attacked and gained possession of a supply train, at the same time wounding Gen. Taylor.

Another rumor, credited both in Puebla and the city of Mexico, is that Gen. Scott was ill at Jalapa with dysentery, and that for this reason and the want of troops he would defer his advance upon Puebla. There is no foundation for the rumor of his illness, we are happy to say.

Another Mexican story was that Gen. Urrea was threatening Tampico, if he had not already taken it; and yet another story was to the effect that a party of guerrillas had seized $60,000 in gold belonging to the Americans. By such miserable rumors the people of the capital are continually deluded. It serves to feed their false hopes, to keep in circulation idle reports of this kind.

A Puebla paper of the 9th instant says, that the President Substitute has at last ordered General Santa Anna to be supplied with men, muskets, heavy ordnance, and, more than all, with money. There would appear to have been some difficulty between General Bravo, "the commander of the Army of the Centre," and Anaya, before the demands of Santa Anna were complied with. From the intimations thrown out, we infer that Bravo was reluctant to spare any means from the capital.

In our last, we alluded to a letter from Durango, dated the 26th of April. If is so important and significant, that we give it entire:

"Blessed be God, we are now relieved from the fear which the coming of the4 Yankees had spread amongst us, as they have returned to Chihuahua, in as much as a general massacre has been attempted by the conquered New Mexicans and Pasenos, joined with a tribe of Navajoe Indians —all led on, as is said, by the few padres who serve in New Mexico. The insurrection, as it has been described to us, was so decisive, and made with such effect, that even the women flew at the throats of our Texas neighbors, the number killed by them being very considerable. They say also that the New Mexicans encouraged by their triumph, are coming to avenge the outrage upon Chihuahua. God grant it may be true!"
The insurrection here alluded to is doubtless that which has already been effectually quelled. Our advises from Santa Fe, via St. Louis, are to the 19th of April, when all was quiet there, and the officers of justice were meeting out punishment to those engaged in the murderous insurrection. If anything were required to justify the measures of severity which have been taken at Taos by American authorities, we think the spirit of the letter we have just given is of itself sufficient.

The Legislature of the powerful State of Jalisco has appropriated the revenue derived from tobacco in the State, diverting it altogether from the use of the Central Government. It is well known that the government derives a large portion of its income from this source. The Republicano reproaches the authorities of Jalisco with this diversion of funds, and adds: "If the Union is to be deprived of these general revenues, and if obstacles are to be opposed whenever an attempt is made to create new sources of income, let us ask the authorities of the States in what manner can the war be carried on?"

The same paper mentions that the office for the administration of the tobacco revenues, with all the attaches thereto, is to be removed from the capital, with an escort of military for its protection. This, says the Republicano, strikes us as very strange, for if the office is to seek a place where it cannot be attacked by the enemy, for this very reason the military and the battalions of the Guard ought not to go there.

There is a great destitution of arms, as is already known, throughout the country. It having been reported that there were six thousand muskets for sale at Guadalajara, the authorities of the State of Guanajuato dispatched Gen. Alcayaga thither at once to buy them all up for the State. It turned out that there were none to be had, but the incident gibs color to the idea that the individual States are now looking to their own defense rather than relying upon the General Government for safely on contributing their means to the Central Government.

The decree suppressing the liberty of the press within the Federal District of Mexico, mentioned in Mr. Kendall's letter which we published yesterday, is dated the 5th inst., and was promulgated the following day. By it the press is forbidden to engage in political and military discussions, or to express censure upon the supreme authorities, or in any way to throw discredit upon the army or its commanders. The preamble alleges that the abuse of the liberty of the press has been scandalous; that the papers have promoted dissensions, reciprocal distrust and disunion, whereby the foreign enemy is indirectly protected and the defense of the country rendered every day more difficult.

El Republicano of the 7th inst. comes out in a noble article rebuking the Government for this measure. It makes an earnest appeal to the conscience and understanding of President Anaya to retrace the false step. In the course of the article the army comes in for a large share of the indignation of the Editors, and some wholesome truths are told to Mexicans on the subject. --"Would to God," says the (illegible) army had been brought into disrepute by the press, instead of by a series of inglorious defeats, which in the course of a single year have covered with shame the name of Mexico, and increased (illegible) of the well-organized armies of Europe." And again the Republicano reproaches the army with having cost the country the enormous sum of three hundred millions of dollars since its independence was achieved; and yet, from want of discipline, it has never been able to maintain any established order of things; it has been torn by incessant civil wars; it now supports officers enough for an army eight times more numerous that the Mexican army numbers, and promotions in it have been gained by distinctions in civil war alone. Moreover, to support (illegible) country (illegible) been crushed with an immense foreign debt and involved in a frightful bankruptcy. Under such circumstances the army should respond with something more than a series of disgraceful routs. We only indicate the tone of the article in the Republicano towards the army. That paper has no further faith in it, and relies solely upon guerrilla warfare for the salvation of the country. It seems strange that a paper which reasons so powerfully upon the freedom of the press --we would reproduce the article were it not several columns long--and which appreciates so perfectly the desperate state of the country and the enormous burden of a licentious soldiery, should still be the steadfast advocate of the continuance of the war. But looking to the future of Mexico, it is gratifying to see such a paper as El Republicano pointing out to its countrymen the insupportable grievance of such a military establishment as that Mexico now supports.

Our readers will be interested to know what measure have been taken in the capital to defend it upon the approach of our troops. We cannot do this more effectually than by giving the whole of a proclamation promulgated by Gov. Trigueros on the 7th inst:

PROCLAMATION

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Centre yesterday addressed me the following decree:

Gen. Worth at Puebla –Advance of the Army – Herrera Elected President of Mexico –Capture of (illegible)

At an early hour this morning (says the N.O. Delta, May 27) the steamship Palmetto arrived from Vera Cruz bringing dates from that city to the 22d and from Jalapa to the 21st. We are in receipt of our full correspondence, but have only time to give the following brief extracts, at this late hour.

Our correspondent "Mustang," writes from Jalapa, under the date of the 21st inst. –"We have positive information of the arrival of Gen. Worth's command at Puebla. On the approach of our army to the city Gen. Santa Anna, who was there at the time supplying his troops with some necessities, sent out a detachment to engage Gen. Worth until he could procure his supplies but the encounter was soon over, and Santa Anna and his army compelled to fly. In the skirmish there were four Mexicans killed –our loss none. He has retreated towards the city of Mexico. One report says he is at Santa Martin, a town about 28 miles from Puebla, but it is generally conceded that his main force, upwards of 12,000 men, have gone to Rio Frio, where he is preparing for another engagement. –The latter place is said to be a naturally strong point, and can be made to offer strong resistance, but if Cerro Gerdo could not resist the brigade of Gen. Twiggs, what position can avail the Mexican chieftain?

"The train looked for the past few days has arrived, together with Capt. Walker and Ruft with their commands. The army here will move four miles on the Perote road to-morrow evening, and on Sunday take up its line of the march. No stop will be made at Perote. If we should not halt at Puebla, to hear the result of some more propositions of peace from the American government, you may soon expect to receive my letters dated at capital of the Republic."

JALAPA, 11 o'clock, A.M., May 21, 1847

Eds. Delta: -The "diligence" is about leaving –I write to give you the latest up to departure. The Mexicans have a report here, which is credited by the Americans generally, that Herrera is elected President of Mexico, and that he is disposed to treat for peace. The "diligence" from Puebla is looked for momentarily, which will give us the correct position of affairs at the Capital. –If it should arrive in time to overtake the line towards Vera Cruz, I will send an express to overhaul it. The reason assigned by the Mexicans for Herrera being willing to make peace with us is that he desires to prevent our taking possession of the Capital of the Republic, which he says will be the inevitable result if the Mexicans do not come to terms. Shall we be delayed by soothing promises and friendly professions, or shall we march on, conquering and to conquer? I hope the word will be "Onward!" and not wait until they have placed the Capital in a proper state of defense, and then bid us defiance. "Delays are dangerous," and may cause us to lose many gallant officers and soldiers. Herrera, no doubt, is favorably disposed; but can he control the factions? Once in possession of the City of Mexico we can treat on what terms we please.

The Army is under marching orders for tomorrow evening at 3 o'clock. Gen. Twiggs’ column will move at that hour, if no unforeseen circumstances intervene. Nothing further from Gens. Worth and Quitman, except that they were resting from the fatigues of the march in Puebla.

Gen. Shields had an attack of pleurisy two nights ago, but is recovering from the effect of it, and also his wound, He expects to be able to leave for the United States about the 10th of next month.

Capt. Walker is encamped with his recruits close to the town. It was generally supposed he would be arrested for the course he pursued in reference to a guerilla party he came in contact with. But I understand his course is approved of. The Alcalde of Santa Fe, who had been harboring the bandit, and in whose possession the property and clothing of the murdered dragoons were found, had to share the same fate as those who committed the murder. Served him right.

JALAPA, May 21, 12o'clock.

Eds. Delta –The Diligence has arrived from Puebla, but nothing official had arrived from the capital previous to its departure. The passengers state that it was current at that place Herrera had been elected President. I received a letter from Puebla, of which the following is an extract:

"We entered this place on the 15th inst. The of the men, and have killed two. We were attacked in Amasoc by Santa Anna, with about 1500 cavalry –he lost 3 killed and 7 wounded. –The old codger took a fir of leaving for Mexico, (illegible).

I have seen another letter, from an intelligent source, to a gentleman in this place, which says that Santa Anna retreated from Puebla to San Martin, and subsequently left for the city of Mexico, also that we are to be met on the road, somewhere, with 10,000 men, under one General, whose name I don not recollect, and 4000 under Minon. So mote if be –the more the better. No doubt buy the time we meet them, their force will be augmented to double the number. We also learn that murders and robberies are being committed on the road daily, both by horsemen and footmen. (illegible).

Our correspondent at Vera Cruz, under date of the 22d inst., writes us as follows –just as the Palmetto was leaving:
“One hundred and twenty Quartermaster’s mules, loaded with four and pork, on their road to rendezvous at Santa Fe, were attacked late last evening, three miles from here. The muleteers were fired upon, but I cannot learn whether any were killed. Most of the muleteers have just returned and report that the entire train was captured. This is no rumor. I have facts from the Quartermaster here.”

THE PENNSYLVANIA REGIMENTS. –We learn from the American Star, published at Jalapa, that a part of the 1st and the whole of the 2d Regiments of Pennsylvania Volunteers will remain at Jalapa, and with the 3d Artillery form the garrison of that town under Lieut. Col. Childs.

June 4, 1847, Rev64i10p2c2, Later from the Brazos

The brig Henry, Capt. Cole arrived last night from the Brazos, having left there on the 20th May, (says the New Orleans Delta.) By this arrival we have dates from Matamoros to the 19th, and from Monterey to the 9th May. There is no news of any importance of Gen. Taylor’s column. The Monterey and Matamoros papers are principally filled with extracts taken from the New Orleans papers. We clean from the Matamoros Flag, of the 19th inst., the following items:

Carabjal still keeps himself in the vicinity of (illegible) is about sixty miles from there, on the San Fernando road. The force under his command is small –not exceeding fifty men –but sufficient to plunder all treading parties coming in or going out from Matamoros.

Capt. (illegible) has already been made in our columns, died from the effects of his wounds on the 17th inst. Capt M. was a partner and not the Clerk of Mr. Sinclair, as previously stated. The assassin has been placed in close confinement.

CAUGHT A TARTAR. –Between Camargo and Mier, a short time ago, three Mexicans were waylaying the road to rob a Mexican merchant of Matamoros, who they knew was coming down from Mier with a large amount of money in his possession. The merchant had three men with (illegible) the spot where the robbers had posed themselves that three Texan Rangers, who had been out on a scout, struck into the road a short distance ahead of him, pursuing their way down to Camargo. –It was after dark, and the robbers mistook the Rangers for the merchant’s party. They ordered them to halt and deliver, and the Rangers did halt and deliver, but they delivered bullets instead of money, and left not a robber to carry off his load –all were killed, and the merchant passed down in safety.

The mule train which left Matamoros about the 12th inst. For Camargo, under an escort of Massachusetts Volunteers, commanded my Capt. Walsh, reached there in safety. The report about their being attacked, and the mules stampeding turned out to be incorrect.

The 9th, 11th, 12th, 14th and 15th Regiments of Infantry, and the Regiment of Voltiguers, had been ordered to Gen. Scott. The 10th, 13th, and 16th Regiments of Infantry and the 3d Dragoons, had been ordered to join General Taylor.

It was reported in Matamoros that Lieutenant Colonel Randolph, of the Virginia Regiment, had, with a portion of his command, captured, on the 5th instant, 40 of Canales’ men, at China.

The 1st Mississippi Regiment under Colonel Davis, was to have left Cerralvo on the 20th May, for the month of the Rio Grande. Colonel Davis was fast recovering from his wounds.

The health of General Taylor’s army was generally good. The smallpox, which at one time created considerable alarm among the troops and the Mexican inhabitants in Saltillo, had nearly disappeared.

The remains of Lieutenant R. L. Moore, of the 1st Mississippi Regiment, who was killed at the battle of Buena Vista, were brought over from the Brazos on board the brig Henry, under the charge of Colonel C. E. Smeads and J. E. Tappen.

We make the following extracts from Kendall’s letters at Jalapa, in an Extra Picayune:

JALAPA, Mexico, May 20, 1847

There is no mistake that General Scott’s proclamation which went directly home to every reflecting Mexican, is doing a great deal of good.

We are still without farther positive news of General Worth, and it is now almost certain that his dispatches are cut off. He would hardly enter so rich and populous a city as is Puebla without sending an official account of it to General Scott –at least such is the impression.

The Mexicans here have news from the city of Mexico, which we cannot get hold of, their own couriers doubtless running regularly. One of the men told me last night that fifteen battalions of the National Guard have been thoroughly organized at the capital, that fortifications are already in process of construction at or near Rio Frio, that the hells have been run up into cannon, and that the owners of an iron foundry at the city of Mexico, Englishmen, have been compelled to cast balls on the promise of remuneration hereafter. Understand, distinctly, that I get all this from a Mexican, and that it must be taken with allowances; but that there is now a prospect of another fight, and a hard one, is considered certain my many. To my thinking, it will depend much upon the result of he election of President, news of which has not as yet reached the Americans here. If Herrera had been chosen, and there certainly was a party in his favor, it may be put down as a guaranty that peace measures will prevail. On the other hand, if Santa Anna had been elected, or a friend of his, the struggle may be protracted, and another stand made this side of the capital. It is now certain that Santa Anna was not at the city of Mexico to control the late election in person, although his approach with an armed force may have had some effect upon the States of Puebla and Mexico.

The four individuals I spoke of yesterday as having been guilty of robbery, received a portion of their sentence last evening and the rest this morning. A most disgraceful figure did they cut, marching through the street with their heads shaved, the word 'robber' pinned upon their backs, and a band of music playing the "Rogue's March" immediately in their rear. Their names were Henry Reed, Hugh Duane, and Benj. Potter, of the 4th Artillery, and the D. F. Revalon, of the 2d Pennsylvania Volunteers. The latter was found guilty of horse stealing; the three former of breaking twice into a house of the same Mexican, and the threats and violence robbing him of everything he possessed. Hard and degrading as was their punishment, everyone says it was deserved.

June 4, 1847, Rev64i10p2c4, News from the Army

In another column we give some very interesting intelligence from the Delta. We extract a few additional particulars from the Picayune. –We deeply lament the death of Capt. Stevens T. Mason. He was brave and generous and beloved by all.

The reported election of Herrera (the friend of peace) as President of Mexico (Gen. Scott, in his late Proclamation refers to him as the former "virtuous and patriotic President," the flight of Santa Anna from Puebla, and the capture of that populous and wealthy city by generals Worth and Quitman, form new elements of calculation as to the probabilities of peace of continued war.

We take great pleasure in recording the capture of a party of guerillas to the number of 40, but L. Col. Randolph of the Virginia Regiment. We are glad that our "boys" have had a little "chance."

Gen. Worth entered Puebla on the afternoon of the 15th, after a short skirmish with a party of lancers sent out to delay his advance.

Santa Anna was in the city at the moment, but at once left, and pushed on towards the Capital.

It was reported that Gen. Valencia was between Puebla and the capital at the head of fourteen thousand men to resist our further advance but this is doubtful.

The result of the presidential election was not known. Santa Anna, Elloriaga and Herrera were candidates among others.

Santa Anna is said to have had a considerable force with him when he passed through Puebla –variously estimated form 1,500 to 10,000. It is shrewdly suspected that he intends to use his force to maintain his personal position and secure the Presidency.

Capt. Mayo, of the navy, Governor of Alvarado, started on the 13th May from Talascoya. –The town surrendered to him without resistance. On his return he was fired upon and Passed Midshipman Prigle and five seamen were badly wounded.

D. Barton, Surgeon U.S.A. has been appointed President of the Board of Health at Vera Cruz.

A party of guerillas has been surprised and taken close to Vera Cruz –fifteen in number. We have not room for particulars, but it is not yet mentioned that they have been hung.

Gen. Shields continues to improve slowly –Capt. Mason, of the Rifles, we are pained to learn, died on the 15th.

The U.S. sloop-of-war St. Mary’s, John L. Saunders, esq., commander, anchored in Hamton Roads on Monday night, 21 days from the Gulf of Mexico. She has done good service in the campaign. She brings as trophies of war, thirty pieces of cannon captured at Vera Cruz –ranging from 6 to 32-pounders. The most of them are brass, and from their inscriptions must be very similar to the beautiful guns in our Armory Yard. They were made in France, Spain and a few in England. The Norfolk Beacon hopes that they will be deposited at Fort Monroe.

The Union says: Capt. Sands, late of the U. States steamer Vixen, cruising in the Gulf of Mexico, arrived in town today with the dispatches from Commodore Perry for the Navy Department. He brings with him a number of flags taken from the enemy at Tuspan –also those of the Truxton which were recaptured. Capt. S. is also in charge of some beautiful brass ordnance taken from the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, brought as trophies to be put at the disposal of the government. They are now on board the U. S. ship St. Mary’s arrived at Norfolk on Monday last.

June 4, 1847, REv64i10p4c1, Late from General Scott’s Army

By the arrival of the schr.Eleanor Stevens, Captain Hall, from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 15th May, we have letters from Jalapa to the 14th May, -three days later than our previous advices, (says the N. O. Picayune.)

The movement of Santa Anna upon Puebla is mentioned in Mr. Kendall’s letter below. –Hopes are entertained that Gen. Worth may be so fortunate as to encounter him. The probable motives of Santa Anna are conjectured by Mr. K. Gen. Worth left Perote for Puebla on the 10th with his own and Gen. Quitman’s divisions. He was expected to enter Puebla on Sunday, the 16th. It is supposed the authorities of the town will come out to meet him and escort him in.

All will be glad to learn that Gen. Shields is mending, though slowly, and that Gen. P. F. Smith has reported for duty.

Gen. Scott is still detained at Jalapa. The reasons for his detention are mentioned by Mr. Kendall. It will also be seen by his letter that Mr. Trist has arrived at the general’s head-quarters.

The last number of the Star informs us that rumors were right on the 12th May, that the troops at Orizaba had pronounced against Santa Anna, and made him prisoner. The Star is incredulous, and Mr. K.’s letter of the 14th does not confirm the news.

Col. Childs is governor of Jalapa, and will remain there with 2,000 picked troops when Gen. Scott moves on to Puebla. The city of Jalapa is entirely quiet and orderly. No rows or disturbances have occurred there.

We have a paper printed at Puebla on the 9th May. It announces positively that Gen. Taylor had left Saltillo and marched wither upon Zacatecas or San Luis Potosi. One report says with 4,000 men upon the former State, and 6,000 on the latter. Would that he had the force to do so.

The Yankee, or “foreign legion,” organized by Santa Anna from deserters from our armies, has been disbanded and ordered out of the city. Their immorality and insubordination are assigned for this proceeding. Their manners, the Mexicans say, are not at all adapted to their society.

A letter from Durango, dated the 26th of April, states positively that Col. Doniphan’s forces had fallen back upon Chihuahua, instead of advancing upon Durango. We think that there can be no doubt of this fact, and consequently that Col. Doniphan has not been defeated. The insurrection in New Mexico is assigned as the cause of his return.

For two or three days there has hardly been an item of news worth recording –not even a rumor of the least movement; but last evening and this morning reports have come in which are entitled to some little show of importance.

It is now confidently asserted that Santa Anna has moved from Orizaba, and in the direction of Puebla and the city of Mexico. The administrador de las diligencias –general stage agent I suppose he might be called in the vernacular –left yesterday for the capital on business for the line, but this morning he returned with more speed that he went. He reports having met at Cerro de Leon, near Perote, with a force of seventy armed Mexicans, whose appearance he did not at all like. From stragglers he learned that Santa Anna, with a large force, and passed on toward Puebla; that he roads were filled with robbers and brigands, and that it would not be prudent for him to go on –so the administrator de las diligencias returned without effecting the object of his mission.

Last night an intelligent Spaniard informed me that he had seen two letters from Orizaba, one dated the 6th and the other the 7th inst. ON the first day the letter stated that the first brigade or division of the Santa Anna’s army started en route for Puebla, and on the 7th the other division marched in the same direction. His entire force was put down at 2,500, the most of them indifferently armed and under little or no discipline.
It Santa Anna has moved towards the capital, and there certainly is good reason to believe that he has, his intentions are doubtless to control the election for President, which takes place tomorrow. He cannot certainly have the temerity to even think of attacking Gen. Worth, whose division could put to light 10,000 of the best Mexican troops that ever bore arms; so that the conviction is irresistible that he intends having a hand in the coming election. One would naturally think that, after his many disgraceful reverses, he would either attempt to leave the country, or else hide himself in an obscure part of it; but the cowardly tyrant loves lower and place too well, and will cling to them as long as there is a dollar, a musket, and an open road, on which to run, left in the Republic.

Mr. Downie, sutler of the 2d Pennsylvania Regiment, arrived here yesterday. It may be recollected that he had a large sum of money stolen from him at Vera Cruz by a Mexican, a short time since, that he pursued the rascal to Cordova, and that he succeeded in recovering the most of his money. So far, so good; but the worst of it has yet to be told. Mr. D. came out with the permission of the Alcalde and authorities of Vera Cruz in search of the robber of his money, found him, and succeeded, as is said above, in recovering the most of his treasure; but just at this moment a worse robber got hold of him in the shape of Santa Anna; poor D. was cast into prison as a spy, all his money again taken from him, and the only way by which he could obtain his liberty was to acknowledge himself as a spy in writing! This Santa Anna insisted upon as an excuse for robbing him of his money; but, on the other hand, Downie insisted as well in putting a protest at the bottom of his confession, stating that all he had said above was false! The way in which Downie now speaks of Santa Anna is anything but complimentary.

The long wagon train is now coming into the city from Vera Cruz, and has met with no opposition on the way. There are between three and four hundred wagons, and between eleven and twelve hundred pack mules in the train—quite a long string, you would think, were you to see them all together. Capt. Grayson, the stirring and most popular commissary, is along with the train, and I am pleased to learn is going on towards certain halls named after the elder Montezuma.

The foreigners in the city of Mexico area all extremely anxious for the arrival of Gen. Scott. It is said that a heavy sum has already been subscribed for a grand Fourth of July dinner—one individual, an Irishman, having put down his name for no less than $800. The war has been most disastrous to all the foreigners, breaking up the business of many entirely. The only advantage it has been to any has been the depreciation if has caused in the value of real estate. Houses in the city of Mexico, belonging to the church, and which have been sold under the hammer, have been bought in by the English and other merchants at prices far below their real value.

You will doubtless learn with pleasure, as will doubtless his numerous friends in New Orleans, that Gen. P. F. Smith has again reported for duty. For no less than a month he was unable to put his foot to the ground, to such a degree was his ankle inflamed. I am also happy in being able to state that Gen. Shields is still mending, although slowly. The saving of his life may be put down almost as a miracle. I saw him but a sort time after he received his dreadful wound, and no one then thought that he could live even twenty-four hours.

Gen. Scott's proclamations, which I sent off to you two or three nights since buy an express rider, has been read here by all the Mexicans, and in a large majority of cases with excellent effect. It is a most able document, and goes home to the feelings of the people. By this time it has been circulated at Puebla and the city of Mexico, and will doubtless turn the minds, at least of the honest and reflecting, towards peace.

I have been much amused at reading accounts in some of our papers at home of the road between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico. One writer, who "talks like a book," says that there is a stream ten miles from the frontier city which is crossed in scows! We did not come that road. Again, the same writer says that the Puente National is a wooden bridge! Wooden! Whew! It is the best imitation of stone I have ever seen, and as durable as the rock of ages at that.

Mr. Trist arrived here this morning from Vera Cruz. His business I do not know, but I suppose he goes on with the army. Gen. Scott, owing to the non-arrival of all the train, will not be able to move for two of three days to come. – Capt. Walker, with his Rifles, is on the way up, guarding another smaller train. I trust there may be wagons enough to carry on the little baggage our officers now possess. For want of sufficient transportation heretofore they have been compelled to leave carpet bags here, trunks there and boxes elsewhere, until nearly everything has been lost. The Government most certainly should make allowances for sacrifices which have been unavoidable on the part of its officers. Yours, &c.,

G. W. K.

P.S. With not a little trouble and expense I have been enabled to procure the very latest dates from the city of Mexico, and also from Puebla. You will see that the freedom of the press has been suspended, but not until the editors had lied most lustily about us miserable Yankees. The letter about Gen. Scott’s destroying Encerro, and offering a reward for Santa Anna, it would puzzle the father of lies to beat. On the contrary, a safeguard was placed upon the house of Santa Anna, and not a stone of it has been moved.

The report that Santa Anna has gone towards the capital receives additional confirmation. –We hear nothing of Gen. Worth, but every one hopes he has fallen in with Santa Anna.

A Mexican officer, Capt. Velasquez, died yesterday from a wound received at Cerro Gordo, and was buried with military honors. Lieut. Shelby Johnson, of the 4th Illinois volunteers, also died yesterday, and was buried with
A work has been thrown up near this place which completely commands the city. It was constructed under the superintendent of Capt. Beauregard, a native of Louisiana, who enjoys a high reputation in the army.

June 4, 1847, REV64i10p4c3, Captain Tuttwall

We find in the N. Orleans Delta, the following interesting letter from the fallarit commander of the famous "Mosquito Fleet," which has come so much execution in the Gulf of Mexico. It is but just to Com. Conner, that the public should be made acquainted with the sentiments of his brave and experienced brother officers in regard to his character and conduct. TheDelta most properly remarks:

"Certainly the dissatisfaction expressed by a propel, justly fold of the renown of our noble Navy, at the difficulties and disasters encountered by our squadron in the early part of the war, ought to give way to admiration of the magnificent debarkation of our troops at Vera Cruz, so skillfully effected under the direction of Com. Conner. Many of the arrangements in regard to the investment and bombardment of the city and castle were also made by Com. Conner, who, from the same morbidity sensiveness and pride to which we have referred, readily gave up to Com. Perry the command of the squadron, at a time when he might have been justified by the rules of the service in retaining it until the capitulation of Vera Cruz had been effected."

Who Capt. Tattnall is, the country is well informed by his brilliant and untiring services in the Gulf. We subjoin a very neat outline of his late achievements from the Delta. On reading his letter, we were reminded of an anecdote related to us by a gallant naval officer, who was himself the present at the bombardment of Vera Cruz. The fierce little Spitfire was in the lead of the "mosquito fleet" in attacking San Juan, and, amidst the showers of bullets from the Castle which fell around the vessel without wounding any one, Tattnall strode the deck with marked, impatience, and, with a vehemence of manner, cried out, "Will no one get killed or wounded? There is no honor to be won otherwise. Will no body be killed?" He himself afterwards was wounded in the wrist at Tuxpan; his wished were gratified and the "honor," already secured by his previous conduct, heightened by the peculiar means which he himself had so empathetically indicated. Not satisfied, however, with the distinction he had won, but anxious to enlarge his contracted field of operations, he obtained leave to be detached from the Spitfire and to join General Quitman's force on land. We regret that his wound will prevent him from expanding the "honor" won upon the sea:

"Of Capt. Tattnall's incessant and successful exertions to sustain the high reputation of the service, of which he is a bright ornament, we cannot adequately express the admiration and gratitude we feel. From the commencement of the blockade he has planned and executed the curious difficult and perilous enterprises on the dangerous reel, and against the well-defended towns of the Mexican coast, which have excited so much admiration, and contributed so much to the success of our occupation of the towns in the Terra Caliente. On the gallant he has led every attack, constituting on all the occasions the advanced-guard of the squadron. At the bombardment of Vera Cruz, he commanded the fleet of small vessels, which approached within a few hundred yards of the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, and opened up on the is famous fortification, sustaining a constant fire from its two hundred guns. At the last achievement of our Navy in the attack of Tuxpan, the Spitfire again led the attack, and was exposed to a heavy fire from a concealed fort, by which several of our brave officers were wounded –among them the gallant Captain himself received a wound in the arm, from which he is now suffering. The necessity of returning to this country to improve his health and heal his wound, withdraws Capt. Tatnall from the scene of warlike operations just as he was preparing to join Gen. Scott in his march to Mexico."

June 8, 1847, REV64i11p2c1, General Taylor and the battle of Buena Vista

–We are the authorized to say, (says the New Orleans Bulletin,) that General Taylor never used the expression, which has obtained such general currency through the public press, that "if there had been only regulars in the battle of Buena Vista he would probably have lost the day, as the Mississippi volunteers were whipped three times without knowing it." This he considers is doing great injustice to the regular army.

This letter, under which we make the above statement, continues, and says "so far from entertaining such a sentiment, the General lamented nothing more strongly than his entire want of regular infantry, as a brigade, or even a strong battalion would have enabled him to carry the enemy's artillery, and to have entirely destroyed his army."

We are further authorized to deny the report, that the officers next in rank, were opposed to giving battle, which is entirely untrue, and it calculated to injure those officers if allowed to circulate uncontradicted.
U.S. FRIGATE RARITAN, off Tabasco, May 16.

Gentlemen –We expect the Raritan will leave Anton Lizardo, bound for Boston, about the 1st of June. She will take home some of the older officers of the squadron, who have been jaded by long service, and also the sick from the different vessels. I am happy to say that these are not numerous.

An American flag is now planted at Frontera, at the mouth of the Tobasco river, and it is supposed that a custom house will soon be established there. The city of Tobasco, seventy miles up the river, is still in possession of the Mexicans, who have occupied a point about seven miles below, called the “Devil’s Turn,” with a force of at least one, and some say tow thousand men, indifferently provided with small arms and muskets, but having a commanding battery of three 24-pounders.” I don’t know that Com. Perry will deem it advisable to attack Tobasco, inasmuch as we now hold the mouth of the river and sixty miles of navigation. For my own part, I can see no reason for such a proceeding, although I should be very glad of a fight. The navy had had too little to do in that line for its own interest.

Capt. Van Brunt is at present discharging the functions of Governor, by order of Com. Perry.

Com. Perry arrived here in the Mississippi yesterday, accompanied by the Vixen and Scorpion steamers. He soon afterwards got under way with the Scorpion, and proceeded to Laguna and Sisal. It is said that Capt. Mackenzie is to be charged with some negotiations with the Government of Yucatan.

Goatzacoalcos has been taken, or rather occupied in consequence of surrender.

In case we have a fight here, I will give you the particulars.

P.S. May 19. –The commodore returned to this anchorage last evening, and will leave for Vera Cruz this evening.

June 11, 1847, The Mexican Pirates

THE MEXICAN PIRATES. –The Princeton to be sent to the Mediterranean. –The President has issued orders directing the steamship of war “Princeton” to be go ready for sea, to proceed to the Mediterranean, in quest of the Mexican privateer “Unico,” and any other vessels that may be insulting our flag there. The matter was formally laid before the President on Monday morning my Mr. Buchanan, and his action thereon was prompt and decisive. The Princeton is to be made ready to sail on or about the 15th of the present month. –[Baltimore Sun.

June 11, 1847, Important from Mexico

We received yesterday a copy of El Republicano from the city of Mexico, wit a requenst fo ran exchange, (says the Mobile Herald.) It is dated the 16th of May.

In this number of El Republicano we find an important document which a friend translates for us as follows. None of the New Orleans papers contain any allusion to it:

Official letter of his Excellency, the General in Chief, (Santa Anna) accompanying some intercepted documents of the enemy

HEADQUARTERS,
Puebla, May 13, 1847.

ARMY OF OPERATIONS. –Excellent Sir: -The commandant of the flying revenue guard of tobacco of Orizaba, the Colonel D. Juan N. Caraveo, whom I left with his command near the National Road, between Perote and Nopalucan, to observe the movements of the enemy, and to harass him when the opportunity might offer, has remitted to me the accompanying documents which were taken from the enemy’s mail which left Jalapa for Col. Worth’s camp.

Among them you will find the General Scott’s proclamation of the Mexican nation, which from its style appears to
This proclamation of Scott’s is written with the most refined hypocrisy and with the most infamous perfidy. It is the greatest insult yet offered to the Mexican people, whom it has attempted to lull (a quien se pretende adormecer) to make it the victim of the ambition of that nation which is the enemy of our race, when, in another place, it feels no embarrassment in proclaiming by the press and in official documents, that it carries on against us a war of conquest and that this war must be made at the cost of the blood and treasure of the unfortunate country.

Your Excellency will note in one of the accompanying intercepted letters, that Scott, the Inspector General of the United States Army, considers the above proclamation well adapted to aid the views of the invaders.

You will observe, that this letter harmonizes with others which have been lately published in this capital, and which with reason have been regarded by all well disposed Mexicans as more prejudicial for the venom (ponzona) which they conceal than the loss of a battle.

But in the midst of the malevolence (encona) which General Scott shows he has against me, he does me too much honor when he says that they had been deceived as to my real intentions, and that on account of this mistake his Government permitted me to pass to my country. Indeed, most Excellent Sir, the United States did deceive when they dreamed that I was capable of betraying my country. Before this should happen I would prefer to be consumed by fire and my ashes should be scattered that not a single atom be left.

Would to God the Mexicans would open their eyes to discover the poison in the golden chalice that the perfidious Scott proffers them, and that (illegible) of universal indignation against the invaders of our soil. Let a war be made against these without period, that when we may no longer be able, because Providence may have decreed the subjugations of this unfortunate country, there may remain to our children or grand children, when the wrath of the Omnipotent shall have passed, the noble work of revenging the outrages committed by the republic of the United States on (illegible)

God and Liberty!

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p2c6, The Mexican tariff

The manufacturing class seem determined to regulate the tariff for Mexico, as well as for our own country, to suit their particular interests. –These people and their paid advocates seem to act as though the country belonged to them, and all the other interests were but to support a home government and conquer foreign ones for their advantage. Not satisfied with upwards of 30 years protection at home, ranging from 30 to 200 percent., they now claim the exclusive right to supply all Mexico. What do these manufacturers contribute to support this government? Not one cent. They receive millions in tribute, and pay nothing. The higher the revenue, the greater their profits – and they unanimously refused to pay anything on tea and coffee to support the war, because to that extent they would have been compelled to contribute with others to that object.

When with the money of others, we have got possession of Mexico, and mean to make them pay part of the expense, these men reproach the Secretary of the Treasury, because foreign goods are admitted also. Modesty unparalleled! If then millions of dollars are to be paid by Mexicans in the price of their goods, these gentlemen claim it, though they have never paid one cent towards the war! Nor is that all: for, were they to have the exclusive right, the demand for Mexico and the United States together would be so great that these American goods would be enhanced 25 to 50 percent in value, and our own citizens, after paying for the war, would be made to pay the manufacturers extra price for all their domestic articles. These modest gentlemen own the whole country, excepting only their stipendiary, and are to incur no other expense.

Did Great Britain make discriminating duties when she conquered China? Is such conduct compatible with the independence of any country? Did we make war with Mexico in order to exclude others and to sell our goods to them? But the hue and cry is up from Vera Cruz to the Aroostock –and Mr. Walker is denounced because his Mexican Tariff is intended to obtain money from Mexico, and not to benefit a few thousand people in the United States who have refused to pay in any shape towards the war.

June 8, 1847, REv64i11p4c7, June 8, 1847, From General Taylor’s Army

OFFICIAL.
The following "orders," issued by Gen. Taylor, have been transmitted by him to the War Department. In laying them before our readers, [says then Union] we hardly deem it necessary to allude to the pitiful falsehoods circulated by the Federal press, to the effect that the administration had neglected to notice in suitable terms the glorious achievement of American arms at Buena Vista. A calumny so foolish and so mean, must needs recoil upon the heads of its authors.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, May 6, 1847.

[ORDERS No. 46]

Under the instructions of the Secretary of War, the commanding general had the gratification to publish to the troops of his command the following communication, received by him from the War Department:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, April 3, 1847.

"Sir: Your communications of the 24th and 25th of February, and the 1st of March, announcing the brilliant success of the troops under your command at Buena Vista, against the forces of the enemy vastly superior in numbers, have been laid before the President; and I am instructed to convey to you his high appreciation of the distinguished services rendered to the country by yourself, and the officers and soldiers of your command on that occasion.

"The victory achieved at Buena Vista, while it adds new glory to our arms, and furnishes new proofs of the valor and brave daring of our officers and soldiers, will excite the admiration and call forth the gratitude of the nation.

"The single fact that five thousand of our troops, nearly all volunteers, who, yielding to the impulse of patriotism, had rallied to their country's standard for a temporary service, were brought into conflict with an army of twenty thousand, mostly veteran soldiers, and only withstood and repulsed the assaults of this numerous host, led by their most experienced General, but, in a protracted battle of two days, won a glorious victory, is the most indubitable evidence of the consummate skill and gallant conduct of our officers, and the devoted heroism of the troops under their command, It will ever be a proud distinction to have been in the memorable battle of Buena Vista.

"The general joy which the intelligence of this success of our arms has spread through the land, is mingled with regret that it has been obtained at so great a price –that so many heroic men have fallen in that sanguinary conflict. They died in the intrepid discharge of a patriotic duty, and will be honored and lamented by a grateful nation.

"You will cause this communication to be published to the troops under your command.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed)
"W.L. MARCY,
"Secretary of War."

By order of Major General Taylor:
W. W. S. Bliss,
Assistant Adjutant General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,

[ORDERS No 47]

The commanding general has the satisfaction of announcing to the troops of his command at other decisive victory achieved by the American forces under Major General Scott, on the 18th of April, and Cerro Gordo, in the State of Vera Cruz. The Mexican army; under the immediate orders of Gen. Santa Anna, President of the Republic, is known to have been entirely routed with the loss of all its artillery and munitions of war.

The army of occupation will hail with joy this brilliant success of the Americans arms.

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p4c1, Very Late from the City of Mexico

By the way of Tampico, we are placed in possession of a file of El Republicano from the city of Mexico down to and including the 19th of May –eleven days later than our previous advises.

The election of President for Mexico was to have taken place of the 15th of May. As the election was made by the Legislatures of the different States, it is even yet quite too soon to know the result, which is likely to disappoint all expectations. In the State of Mexico, Angel Trias, the Governor of Chihuahua, received the vote. Upon the first ballot Trias received 9 votes, Gen. Alvarez 7, Gen. Almonte 2, and Senor D. Melchor Ocampo 1. Upon proceeding to elect between Trias and Alvarez, the former received 10 votes and the latter 9.

In the State of Queretaro there was a tie between Senor Almonte, and Senor D. J. Joaquin Herrera. Lots were cast between the two, and the chances favored Senor Herrera, who thus secured the vote of that State. If we recollect aright, this is not the ex-President.

The State of Puebla gave its vote of Senor D. Melchor Ocampo. The particulars of the voting are not given. Some time will elapse before we shall have the result of the election.

The Republicano of the 19th announces that Gen. Santa Anna had left the command of the army of the East to assume the duties of President of the Republic. He was to make his entry into the capital the evening of the 19th. He had issued a manifesto to the nation, but we regret that we have no copy of it. It was to be published in El Republicano on the 20th, which is a day later than we have received.

We have two letters from the valorous General, giving an account of his military operations. The first is dated May 9th, and in it he tells the Secretary of War that since his arrival at Orizava he had been organizing guerrilla parties, both infantry and cavalry, in the vicinity of Orizava, of Cordova and Vera Cruz; that he had collected the scattered remains of his Cerro Gordo forces; improved the brigade from Oajaca under General Leon; reinforced and remounted a cavalry force, which he had stationed at San Andreas; and lastly, fitted for service seven pieces of artillery, which are at Orizava and Cordova. The result of all these labors is, according to him, that guerrilla parties are already at work between Jalapa and Vera Cruz; three battalions, organized with 1,470 men of those dispersed at Cerro Gordo; more than 200 horses collected; a quantity of infantry equipment prepared; and, finally, 4,500 men, with seven pieces of artillery, put in movement, who would enter Puebla on the 12th May.

He tells the Secretary that he had left in command in the tierra caliente Colonel Cenobio; in the district of Cordova, D. Tomas Marin, who commanded at Alvarado when Com. Conner attacked it; in Huatuxco, General Hernandez; and in Orizava General Teran. He announces that he himself was on his march to Puebla, compelled to that course by his extreme destitution. He has only had 25,000 dollars to do all he has done, and thinks he could easily have ten or twelve thousand men under arms if the Government would give him means.

If this letter shows some energy and spirit, the second letter is replete with evidence of a contemptible, bragging soul. He would then prepare the way for his entry into the city of Mexico like a hero and conqueror. To enable the reader to verify this, we annex a translation of the letter, written on the 15th May, from San Martin Tesmelucan, seven Mexican leagues beyond Puebla, towards Mexico. The town of Amozoc, so often mentioned in it, is four leagues this side of Puebla:

ARMY OF OPERATIONS OF THE EAST,
Headquarters of the General-in-Chief,
At San Martin, Tesmelucan, May 15, 1847.

His Excellency, the Minister of War: -I communicated to your Excellency, in my dispatch of the day before yesterday, at 9 o’clock, P.M., that the enemy would pass the night at Amozoc, and that I was preparing to establish myself yesterday in this place, with the troops under my command. The infantry and artillery marched in reality for this place, but I retained the cavalry, with the intention of surprising a convoy of about 200 wagons, which was proceeding under a very feeble guard to join the first (illegible) of the enemy’s army, and also of challenging the enemy, to induce him to march forth from Amozoe to a convenient ground for giving battle. The convoy to which I refer passed the night at Nopalncan, and I calculated that, although it might start early, I would meet it on this side of Acajete, at a point where the ground would be favorable for the manoeuvering of cavalry; but no doubt the smallness of his force induced the commander, from motives of precaution, to start at midnight, so that, at half-past 8 o’clock in the morning, (the hour at which I was flanking Amozoc in order to gain the public road,) the convoy was already very near to the village, and in a narrow lane, covered on both sides by trees, which protected it against the attack of my troops. The enemy, fearing, notwithstanding, that the convoy might be captured, sent immediately a force of 1,000 infantry, with six pieces of cannon, to its assistance. The troops immediately opened a fire on my column, which fearlessly continued its march within one league of Amozoc, at which point I determined to countermarch to Puebla, where I arrived at half-past 4 o’clock in the afternoon, in the best order.

The whole population of this beautiful city was in motion at the entrance of my division, and gave signs of the most ardent enthusiasm. I could hardly walk from being surrounded by thousands of citizens, who were hurrahing for independence and for the Republic, and giving utterance to their hatred of our invaders. In these moments my heart was agitated my different feelings as I looked upon an enthusiastic people calling upon me for arms to defend themselves, giving the most signal proof of their love for liberty of their country, and as I reflected upon the responsibility of those who having the means had neglected to take advantage of the good dispositions of these people. The only want in this city, your Excellency, was proper men to move in the defense of the national cause.

Resuming the thread of my military report, I will inform your Excellency that, although our guide having missed the road, brought us within grape shot distance of the village of Amozoc, we completely flanked this village, showing the enemy by this bold movement the contempt in which we held him. He appeared, however, determined not to leave his stronghold after having saved his convoy, and both myself and my officers rode off with the conviction that the enemy dared not accept our challenge in the open field.

The loss we have deplore in this feat of arms is three soldiers killed and wounded, and four horses killed.

Although I was aware that the enemy was to move very early on Puebla, I ordered the division of cavalry to pass the night in the city, and at daybreak this morning it commenced its march for this place, where I also arrived this morning.

May it please your Excellency to submit this report to his Excellency the President Substitute, and to receive the assurances of my consideration and esteem. God and Liberty!

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA

His Excellency the MINISTER OF WAR.

El Republicano of the 19th announces that Gen. Bravo has proposed to the Supreme Government that the American prisoners should be sent off “successively and with due security” to Tampico to be released, inasmuch as Mexican prisoners taken at the Angostura and Cerro Gordo had been released without condition. This is the first mention of those unfortunate prisoners which we recollect to have seen in the Mexican papers.

The Republicano is again endeavoring to arouse the fears of the Mexicans against the machinations of a monarchical party. It copies, with this view, a long letter from Paris published in a Madrid journal, indicating that monarchy is the sole salvation for Mexico. The Republicano intimates that the agents of such a party are still secretly at work in Mexico, and that some traces of their operations have lately been discovered in Puebla.

The same number of this paper announces that Congress had completed its work of forming a constitution, and congratulates the country upon the termination of the great work. The constitution is described as not so much a novelty and an innovation as a modification and improvement of the old constitution of 1824.

In the same paper of the 18th, it is announced that a new opprobrium was about to fall on their unhappy country, in consequence of a dissolution of Congress which some extreme partisans of the Pures section were determined to force on. Congress was compelled to adjourn on the 17th for want of a quorum, four members having purposely withdrawn to bring about this result. —There were twelve deputies pledged, according to the Republicano, to pursue a like course, to percent there being a sufficient number of members present to promulgate the new constitution, which had been adopted by a large majority. Rather than submit to the indignity of being thus rendered powerless, it was said that the majority of Congress had resolved to dissolve and publish a manifesto to the nation. How this affair was settled the papers do not tell us, but the disgraceful dissension in the chief legislative assembly of the nation shows the country in no state to resist a foreign foe.

The Mexicans says Gen. Worth entered Puebla with 5000 infantry, 200 cavalry and a train of 400 wagons; and that Gen. Scott left Jalapa for the same destination with 2000 men and a considerable train of artillery.

Before entering Puebla, General Worth addressed a note dated the 12th to the municipal authorities of the city, announcing to them his intention of entering on the 15th and taking military possession. Should no opposition be intended, he desired an immediate conference with the authorities, to take measures in concert for the security of persons and property. At the same time he promised that their religion should be respected in all its forms and observances, and that he would support the civil authorities in administration of the laws.

The authorities replied by offering to refer the letter to Santa Anna. This General Worth refused. Santa Anna punished the prefect of the city for the course he took in the business, one little worthy of a Mexican, it is said. We presume he thought it better that General Worth should enter quietly, and that the citizens should be protected, rather than make a futile sham resistance.

Senores Gutierrez and Iriarte have resigned the portfolios of War and Justice. The former is succeeded by General Alcorta; the latter by D. Luis de la Rosa. Senor Baranda remains Minister of Foreign Affairs.
A new State has been created, to be called Guerrero, after the general of that name. The assent of the States of Mexico, Puebla and Michoacan, from whose territory it is formed, is necessary to the completion of the project. Acapulco is within the limits of the new State.

Our Pacific squadron is busy upon the western ports of Mexico. On the 28th of April a squadron of six or eight vessels was of Mazatlan, and a thousand men were disembark to take the town. Letters from Mazatlan say they were making their every preparation for defense, but if the decent is made in a great force as is represented, they can make no defense of much account. Other accounts say that the port of San Blas, too, was menaced by our squadron, and that it was the purpose of the Americans to land and take the town.

The Mexicans believe that the property seized by the Gens. Urrea and Romero, on the route from Camargo to Monterey was worth over $200,000 but in the hands of their commissioners it brought less that $20,000. The peculation is denounced as especially reprehensible, as the troops who seized the booty are represented as suffering extreme privations.

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p4c2, Prospects of a Speedy Peace

PROSPECTS OF A SPEEDY PEACE. –The most important item of news by James L. Day, (says the New Orleans Times,) is the prospect of a speedy peace, which really seems from what is announced as having lately transpired in the interior of Mexico, to be not divest of something like probability. On the 24th April, intelligence reached Vera Cruz from the Capital, that General Herrera had been elected President on the 15th May and that the cause of his success over his competitors was the desire, generally felt by the thinking portion of the Mexican population, to open negotiations with the United States, for a renewal of friendly relations. It was stated, also, that the new President would not be hampered with any restrictions in his efforts to make peace. The only drawback on this agreeable intelligence is, that it does not come in an official form, although almost universal credence is given to it in Vera Cruz; and men's minds are becoming more and more soothed, as the real character of the Americans becomes known to the people in the Interior, and particularly in the populous cities. General Worth's visit to the Bishop at Puebla, has wrought immensely in favor of the invaders; while the scrupulous honesty, and high feeling of honor displayed by all ranks of the army, with a few inconceivable exceptions, in their intercourse with the inhabitants of the large towns, have quite undeceived their expectations, which counted on cruelty and rapacity, as our distinguishing characteristics. We shall impatiently wait for the next arrival, which must realize or dissipate this pleasant vision of peace. One fact, however, we gather from these advises, which is, that the tumult of passion into which the Mexican population were thrown, by the dispersion of Santa Anna's army at Cerro Gordo, has considerably subsided. There is nothing yet said of the progress, or the issue of Mr. Trist's mission.

[Correspondence of the N. O. Commercial Times.]

The Palmetto did not go, as I expected her to do, and I may consequently get another scrawl on board before she puts off in the morning. I avail myself of the chance to say, that the details of the news from Puebla and Jalapa, are even more interesting than was the resume which I today give you. Very few of the people left the city, and the interchange of courtesies between the citizens and our officers has been marked with an unexpected degree of cordiality. The early visit of Gen. Worth to the Bishop had a good effect in all quarters; and the orderly bearing of the troops, and the gentlemanly qualities of the officers, naturally increased the good will thus generated. General Scott was to move forward on the 20th –yesterday. Santa Anna himself led the troops which were to attack the baggage and provision train of our army, but it is said he had only five hundred, instead of a thousand men with him – all guerillas. There was no vulnerable point in flank or rear to be observed, and he took the prudent part of withdrawing without firing a musket. It is hard to tell what Santa Anna's position is at this moment. All accounts agree in representing him as without the confidence of any considerable party, while by a large number –say by a large party –he is denounced in turn as a traitor, a coward, and, at least, a humbug. He certainly does not wish to bring matters to a crisis, or he would have returned to the capital, ere this, and demanded his seat –a seat which, in my opinion, he will never again occupy.

May 22. –I have a few minutes, before the Palmetto leaves, to say that the diligence is in from Jalapa with further news from Puebla, none of especial interest, except so far as connected with affairs at the Capital. For this part of it, I am indebted to the gentlemanly and able Prussian Counsel, who has a letter from a high source in Puebla, teeming with hopes of an early peace. Santa Anna and Anaya being equally unavailable as President, in point of success, a new appointment is to be made at an early date. The general voice calls upon Herrera, the President deposed by Parades, and it is supposed he will accept the nomination this accorded. In that event, there is but little doubt of his election.. I am told that Santa Anna has rushed to Mexico to defeat this movement, but it is believed that he has no longer the power to prevent it. It is also believed that Herrera has the power, and the moral courage to carry the object through. God grant that these suppositions are correct!

May 24. –We this morning have agreeable intelligence from the Capital, which, though not quite so authentic as I could wish, is so strongly supported by probabilities, and so well conforms to the public expectations, that it obtains general credence. The election for President is said to have taken place on the 15th instant, and Herrera, the former incumbent of the chair, was again chosen, it is also said that he is not hampered with restrictions in regard to the
The steamer New Orleans arrived this morning, followed within a few hours by the ship Sophia Walker, both filled with troops. This looks more like doing business, and proves the Adjutant General and the editor of the Union to have been more nearly correct than I gave them credit for being. But in order to meet their promises, we have yet to receive within the coming month, nearly ten thousand troops. Who believes that half that number will reach Vera Cruz before the 1st of August? I do not.

The troops not arrived, will proceed at once with a train, for the field of operations, and I suppose will continue their march directly to Puebla, which is now the headquarters of General Scott.

Since I commenced writing a most disagreeable report has reached me, which I have now confirmed, beyond question. The Jalapa stage has been beset, the passengers ill-treated, if not murdered, the driver beaten nearly to death, and the carriage, luggage, mails, etc., burned. The driver has just arrived in town, and reports the details of the affair as far as his fright, and the treatment would allow him to observe them, but is strangely ignorant, or confused upon the points of the greatest interest. The attack was made near la Riconada, a few miles beyond the National bridge. The ruffians engaged in the affair were rancheros, in all probability acting without authority, and perhaps indeed, they are only common robbers. It is thought that none of the passengers have been killed, but of this there is not certainty. If they were released, some of them will probably be in town tomorrow.

June 11, 1847, REV64i12p4c5, News from Mexico

We lay before our readers copious extracts from the New Orleans papers. On one point, the election of President, the reports in the New Orleans Times and Picayune conflict—the former being confident of the election of Herrera, the peace candidate—and the latter, upon data which look to us more authentic, leading us to believe that the result will not be known for some time, and that the Herrera spoken of I not the President who was willing to receive our Minister of Peace, and who succeeded by Parades. As to the prospects of peace, our readers may judge as well as ourselves, from the elements before them. They are not as bright, however, as we had been led to expect.

We are deeply pained at the report in the Picayune, of bloody and fatal duel between the two lieutenants of the Virginia Regiment. Mahan, the only one named, was third Lieutenant of Capt. Bankhead's Caroline Company, and was from the city of Philadelphia, which furnished a large proportion of said company. –Captain Bankhead, we learn, was promoted to the post of one of Gen. Scott's aides; and 1st Lieutenant Garnett, (of Westmoreland,) and 2d Lieutenant Coleman, (of Caroline,) being on the sick list, 3d Lieutenant Mahan was in command of the company. These facts have been narrated to us, and may furnish a clue to the desperate and lamentable combat. On the streets yesterday, we heard the name of several officers of the Virginia Regiment mentioned as the other Lieutenant killed whose name is not given—but being vague rumors, we think it improper to chronicle them.

The New Orleans Courier reviews the address of the Tennessee officers, impugning the conduct of General Pillow and his utter want of military skill at the battle of Cerro Gordo, and imputing to him an untrue statement made to General Scott. We have room but for the following extract:

"We are told that General Pillow informed General Scott that he had reconnoitered the enemy's position, and was sure it was defended by only one or two guns. Well, every work of this disclosure to General Scott was true. General Pillow did reconnoiter the enemy's work, and he found it weak, as he reported it to be. But by some means or other, (perhaps by a deserter,) the enemy was apprised of General Pillow's reconnaissance, of his report to the commanding general, and of the intention to assault the batteries. This information was conveyed in the night of the 17th—the enemy immediately set to work, added five or six guns to the batteries, marched upwards of two thousand men to sustain them, and placed strong detachments of infantry, with some light pieces of cannon concealed on the flank of the route by which our troops were expected to advance. We are told this fact is well understood in the army; if it came to the knowledge of the officers who signed this address to the public against the Brigadier General, they ought to have mentioned it.

These officers say that General Pillow was not at the head of the regiment when it advanced—that he neither led nor followed it. Who has asserted that he did lead or follow the regiment in its advance? Surely the General himself asserts so such thing nor, to out knowledge, have any of his friends made such an assertion. But we know it to be true—that that when the General was wounded he was very near the right of the regiment: This information has come to us from a gallant officer who was on the ground, and an eyewitness of what took place. Why was not this fact stated in the Address of the officers to the Public? This address to the public, from the officers of the 2d Tennessee regiment of volunteers has but been provoked by anything said or done by General Pillow. ON the contrary, in his official letter, he bestows high applause upon the regiment and its officers for the steady and gallant manner in which they bore themselves in the attack. If any part of the General's conduct deserves censure—and if the intimations of this address are well grounded, he is unfit for his station—if he deserves censure, it would be more proper in a military point of view, and more consonant to usage, to have preferred charges against him to the Commander-in-Chief, in order that his conduct might have been investigated and the real truth brought to light. It is a serious matter to
June 15, 1847, REV64i13p1c3, Spanish Opinions on Mexican War

This article is particularly interesting, in that while it grossly misrepresents our government as aiming at "nothing less than the destruction of Mexican nationality" and our people as inclined to appropriate the church property of Mexico without ceremony, it renders a forced and a proud tribute to the resistless energies of our free people. Our progress, which the Spanish organ seems to regard with so much horror as to invoke the arm of European monarchies, is not the fruit of blood or violence, but of the genial influence of liberal institutions, gradually melting away the prejudices and ignorance of the nations of the earth, both in the new and old world. What may be the fate of Mexico, we shall not pretend to investigate -- but all we ask of her at present is a just respect for our rights. Our desire is to see her establish an enlightened, liberal Republican form of Government, to assist us in keeping off the encroachments of the Old-World monarchists -- And, whatever partisans may say of the origin of the war, it cannot reasonably be denied that it will essentially benefit Mexico, in liberalizing and civilizing her people by the influence of American example. The acquisitions of territory we have already made have been based upon the highest principles of law and morality -- and to the powers of Europe, should they dare to interfere with the exercise of our lawful privileges! The article of El Heraldo shows the mighty place our young nation holds in the eyes of the world:

"The latest news from Mexico announces a triumph of the arms of the republic, which would be gratifying to us as Spaniards, as united to the people of that country by so many ties and so many traditions in common, if we thought it could decide, in favor of Mexico, the present desperate struggle between the Spanish and Anglo-Saxon races. But unfortunately it is not so. We see that after prolonged disasters, after infinite defeats, operating in a country the thinness of whose population makes war most difficult, the Mexicans found it necessary to unite the flower of their army, in number fourfold superior to that of the Anglo-Americans, to achieve a triumph exceedingly doubtful, attended with losses which rendered any new operations impossible.

"This victory, it is true, has somewhat re-animated the spirit of the country so far as least as a nation whose people are not homogeneous, are susceptible of being re-animated; but in exchange for this advantage, it has deeply wounded the pride of the Anglo-Americans, and if they determine to employ all their resources, the conquest of Mexico is inevitable.

"Let it be considered that the Mexican troops have been obligated to make a Herculean effort to gather a few trophies from one of the divisions of the enemy -- that this effort is almost a defeat, as it has left them exhausted -- and that there were remain in the country three or four divisions of the enemy, against which nothing can be opposed -- and it must be confessed that this victory of Santa Anna will only serve to precipitate the feeble nationality of Mexico, down the declivity which leads to the precipice.

"For ourselves, we believe that Mexico is already virtually blotted out of the lest of independent nations. What can be expected of a nation, distracted by revolutions and contests for ephemeral power, when the enemy is at its fates, and that no common enemy, but one which aims at nothing less that the destruction of its nationality? -- What can we expect of a nation, where the clergy -- the richest Catholic clergy in the world -- refuse the smallest sacrifice in favor of the country, and prefer the precarious possession of the worldly goods to the salvation of the land?

"The army without resources, even without food -- the rickety politicians of the capital conspiring to overthrow the established order of things -- the clergy occupied in secreting their valuables, and in exciting the fanatical opposition of the people against the sale of their property, without considering whether the Anglo-American will not appropriate it with less care than the only fortress -- a great part of the country occupied by an army highly-disciplined, composed of men whose energy is proverbial, and abundantly supplied with every kind of munitions: what can result from all this? We look upon the consequences as inevitable. Enthusiasm will be re-awakened in the United States. An irresistible torrent of volunteers will inundate Mexico. And it will not be long before the Eagle of the Union will light in triumph upon the ancient capital of Montezuma.

"We, as Spaniards, cannot be but lament this result. The last remnants of the magnificent work of Hernan Cortes are about to disappear, and one of the most brilliant pages in our history will be bound, so to speak, in the volume of the stranger. Sorrowful effects of revolutions! Of demagogical tendencies prematurely ingrated on a nation without stamina to support the effects of an unholy ambition! Thirty years of independence have not sufficed to make the Mexicans a nation, notwithstanding they have held in their hands the richest elements that Providence ever placed within reach of the human family. And why? -- Because they have strayed from the proper path; because they desired to form a republic with the materials fit only for a monarchy; because they concerted, by a simple decree, the ignorant and oppressed Indians, the dregs of the population, ignorant until then even of the language of their lords, into free citizens, possessing all the rights which a free nation could give. We now behold, though too late, the unavoidable evils which this error drew after it.

"And now, is it not permitted to ask what the nations of Europe think of the indefinite extension which the American Union is acquiring, and which it carries forward with as much safety as rapidity, sometimes by arms, sometimes by money, sometimes by emigration, without ever appearing to consider the morality of the means which it employs? Will they permit it to absorb, successively, the whole continent of America, and so form a nation by the side of which the most powerful states of Europe would appear as ridiculous pigmies? Will they consent that it shall consolidate its rich conquests, and make them the base of operations from which to invade in succession the states of Central America, where are to be found some of the most magnificent harbors in the world? Will they permit it, without obstruction, to reach the Isthmus of Panama –its golden dream –and thus yield to it one of the principal keys to the commerce of the globe?

"Time alone can answer these questions; but the history of the past affords us but little comfort for the future. Within this century the Union has acquired, successively, the Floridas, Louisiana, and Texas, and it is now about to acquire the Californias and some of the richest provinces of Mexico. Who shall fix limits to the power of the active race which peoples it? Let it once extend to Panama, and its might will be irresistible. It will hold the dominion of the seas; it will monopolize the commerce of the whole earth. And when the English language is spoken on all the shores of the Mexican Gulf, what human power will be sufficient to prevent the Island of Cuba and the English Antilles from falling by their own movement, and impulses of irresistible attraction, into the arms open to receive them?”

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p2c1, Later from Mexico

The steamship New Orleans, Captain Wright, has arrived from Vera Cruz, having left there on the 1st June. She touched on the 4th at the Brazos.

Gen. Shields is doing well, we are most happy to hear, and was shortly expected at Vera Cruz.

General Scott left Jalapa on the 23d May for Puebla, at the head of nearly 6,000 troops. We have the following brief note:

PUEBLA, MEXICO, May 29, 1847:

The division of General Twiggs entered this city today, all well. There were rumors in the morning that Generals Bustamente and Leon were advancing to attack General Scott with an immense force, but so far we have heard nothing confirming the reports. Almost everyone thinks that the Americans are to have another grand battle, but where no one can divine.

The diligencia does not run between this and the city of Mexico, and so far I have found it impossible to lay hands upon any papers.

No one as yet knows what General Scott’s intentions are as regards his future movements, yet small as his force is, many think he will advance upon the capital. We shall know in a day of two.

G. W. K.

The news from the city of Mexico by this arrival is most important. Our intelligent correspondent from Vera Cruz has furnished us with the annexed extracts from letters written at Mexico, and from the best sources of information. The resignation of Santa Anna is an important event in the history of the war:

Extract of a letter dated:

"CITY OF MEXICO, May 29, 1847.

"From here I have nothing worthy of notice to communicate except that Santa Anna yesterday resigned the presidency, but it is not known yet whether Congress will admit of it. –He was induced to take that course from the opposition he meets in his views of carrying on the defense of the city, and from some defamatory writings which appeared in the public papers against his past conduct. It is generally expected that the Americans will be here about the 15th of next month, and, considering the state of things in the capital, I may say that they will meet with but slight resistance on the part of this government."

Through the same channel we have received the following brief extract from another letter of the same date:

"Last week Santa Anna commenced fortifying Guadalupe, Penon and Mexicalzingo, near the suburbs of the city; but unusual disapprobation was the result, and hence his reason for offering his resignation. It is supposed it will be accepted, and that Herrera will receive the nomination. There are only about 3,000 troops in the city.”
We have an exciting rumor from Puebla, mentioned in letters from Vera Cruz, that the citizens of Puebla had risen upon Gen. Worth, and cut off six or seven hundred of his men. The rumor was in every man’s mouth at Vera Cruz and much credence given to it. We are happy to say that our correspondent in Vera Cruz puts little faith in the rumors.

[Correspondence of the New Orleans Picayune]
VERA CRUZ, May 23, 1847.

Gentlemen: After several days of anxiety and suspense, occasioned by the capture of the diligence by a band of guerrillas, and the well-known dangerous state of the road, another train has arrived at last from Jalapa bringing us news from the army and the events that have occurred on the road during the last six days, the most important of which is the murder of Col. Sowers, and seven of his escort of eight dragoons, and Lieut. McDonald, of the Rifle Regiment.

Col. S arrived here about a week ago with dispatches from Washington to Gen. Scott. He left this city last Saturday for Jalapa, and was murdered three miles beyond the National bridge. From all appearances, the party must have been an ambush very near the road, and by a well-directed volley brought them all to the ground at once, without giving them the slightest opportunity for resistance. Thus it is again that dispatches, probably of no little importance, have fallen into the hands of the enemy, and perhaps may be used to good purpose against us. The bodies of three of the party were found near the road, partially covered with sand, and the others had been dragged into the chaparral. One American house was found shot near the place where the party was assassinated.

A gentleman from the city of Mexico, who was one of the American prisoners captured by Urrea between Camargo and Monterey, came down with the train, having been liberated by the English Minister, he having claimed British protection. He reports all the American officers that were prisoners of parole.

A wagon master by the name of Parker and a quartermaster’s clerk by the name of Lathrop, both captured on the road from Camargo to Monterey, and who were supposed to have been killed, were in prison in Mexico.

The diligence, the capture of which has caused so much excitement, it appears, was robbed on its way, its village being partially destroyed and plundered of every thing if contained.

Gen. Shields was doing well and may be expected here on his way home in the course of ten days.

Strong suspicions were entertained at Jalapa of an attempt to retake the place, but Col. Childs is always wide awake for anything of that kind, and will do then up brown if the attempt is made.

Some Mexicans also came down yesterday from Jalapa, having been robbed on the road of everything they had of value; but the highwaymen showed their generosity and kindness to the unfortunate afterwards, by returning them twenty-five cents each to pay their expenses to his place.

The force of the (illegible) etc., on the road, is estimated at 500 men, disposed of as follows 300 men near the road, and 100 on each side of it, ranging at a sufficient distance to prevent small parties from taking the by-paths.

Gen. Scott left Jalapa from Puebla on the 23d inst., at the head of about 6,000 men.

I cannot hear of any later news than what has been forwarded to you, from Gen. Worth’s column at Puebla.

The train which came down was escorted by about sixty men, mostly discharged soldiers and some of the wounded at Cerro Gordo, in charge of Capt. Whiting. They saw frequently on the route men on the heights, and in the distance men on the lookout.

As for local news I have none to give you. —The rainy season has, it is thought, fully commenced, as we have had a sample of it during the last three days.

I have seen a private letter from Jalapa, which states that Col. Lawrence, bearer of dispatches, and one of his escort, were killed on the road, but no doubt the writer was mistaken in the name, and that the rumor emanated from the murder of Col. Sowers.

We regret to say that Maj. R. Hammond, Paymaster U. S. Army, died on board the New Orleans, at sea, on the 2d inst., on his passage from Vera Cruz.

army of Gen. Taylor. The letter of our correspondent below announces the arrival of a portion of Col. Doniphan’s command at Saltillo, after a short encounter with a body of hostile Indians.

We have a copy of the Matamoras Flag of the 2d inst. The individual found murdered below Reynosa, as before mentioned by us, turns out to have been a private in Capt. Paul’s company of Massachusetts volunteers. A company of Massachusetts men, under Capt. Walsh, escorting a train to Carmargo, passed the spot a few days since, and identified and buried the body. –Capt. W. demanded of some Mexicans residing near the scene of murder to produce the murders or he would burn down their ranches. The threat had the desired effect, and three incorrigible scoundrels were handed over to him –one of whom was killed in endeavoring to make his escape, an the other two are imprisoned at Reynosa. The clothes of the murdered man were upon the Mexican who was killed.

From the Flag we learn that Lieut. Col. Abbott, with four companies of Massachusetts volunteers, escorting a wagon train and a number of artillery horses, took up the line of march for Cerralvo on Saturday, the 29th ult. Col. Wright, with the remaining six companies, was to proceed by boat to aCarmargo, thence to Monterey, as soon as transportation could be had.

The troops remaining at Matamoras after the departure of the Massachusetts Regiment will be three companies of the 3d Dragoons –Hagan’s, Butler’s and Merrick’s. These dragoons companies are not yet furnished with horses, and it is uncertain when they will be mounted –probably (says the Flag) not until they are called into active service, without affording an opportunity to drill. We copy the following from the Flag:

Murder. –A Mexican, Joseph Maria Lara, a carpenter by trade, who has a shop near the lower end of Comercial street, was found about ten o’clock on Saturday last lying dead on the floor of his house, having been stabbed in the breast. It has not yet been ascertained by whose (illegible) he was killed. His wife represents that she left him in the house in conversation with a (illegible), and when she returned he was found as described. Circumstances tend to a belief that she committed or instigated the murder herself, and we understand that she has been imprisoned until the matter can undergo investigation.

Col. Curtis, of the 3d Ohio Regiment, has received the appointment of Assistant Adjutant General to Gen. Wool.

The Matamoras Flag of the 20th May records the following:

STEAMBOAT DISASTER –The steamer Lama, Captain Ferguson, on the upward trop to Camargo, collapsed a (illegible) on Saturday last, in consequence of which she is detained a few miles below Reynosa. No one was injured, and a new boiler having been procured, Captain Ferguson expects to have her in trim again in a few days. The Lama was under Government charter, and freighted with army stores.

The steamer Gazelle, also under Government charter, bound up the river with stores, sank on Monday last about sixty miles above here. Boat a total loss, the current having broken her up, and swept off cabin and hull.

The Sabine, Captain Sterrit, freighted with private merchandise –her first trip up the river –struck a snag on Tuesday last, about thirty miles below Reynosa, and was run into shallow water, where she sand. The principal part of her cargo was saved without injury, and the boast, it is said, will soon again be afloat.

The steamer Big Hatchee lies high and dry between here and the mouth of the river, having grounded during the late rise, and the river receded from her. A rise of four feet will put her again in her element.

At the election of officers in the Massachusetts regiment, Lieut. Col. Wright was chosen colonel; Maj. Abbott, lieutenant colonel; and Capt. Webster chosen major.

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p2c3, General Scott’s Proclamation

The Union publishes an authentic copy of Gen. Scott’s proclamation to the Mexican people. –Having already laid before our readers the same remarkable document, translated from the Spanish, we deem it unnecessary to copy the official paper, which, though more polished in form and perfect in context, gives no better idea of the views and arguments of the author than the translated copy. In relation to this paper the Union says:

"There are not many parts of it which do not meet with our cordial approval, and on these we do not now propose to make any comments. –With some few qualifications, we unhesitatingly pronounce it an able and patriotic paper, credible to its author –General Scott –and well calculated to produce favorable impressions upon the Mexican people. That such is its true character, is evinced by the fact that it has drawn forth the bitter invectives of Santa Anna and then editors of the National Intelligencer. Gen. Scott has many friends among the Whig party and we do not doubt they will at once step forth and vindicate him from his allied assailants –General Santa Anna and the National Intelligencer.

"We publish, along with the proclamation, Santa Anna’s letter in reply to it, and we refer our readers to the Verbally we learn that the Mexicans were busy fortifying the pass at Rio Frio, between Puebla and the City of Mexico. Having left there on Sunday forenoon, the 30th ult.

"The address of General Scott, to the Mexicans, dates at Jalapa, is a document which does him honor, and at the same time does no more than justice to the American character. It breathes the most noble and chivalrous sentiments, and is distinguished by an elevated and magnanimous tone of morals. We behold an American army invading a foreign country in the course of a war, defeating the armies of the enemy, taking their towns, not only without committing a single act of violence on the defenseless, but scrupulously regardful, in the minutest particular, of individual immunity, excepting in cases purely accidental, or unavoidably consequent on military operations. The moment the battle is fought, and the victory won, our soldiers are seen rendering the most touching offices of humanity to the wounded enemy, as if they had been comrades. How different from the Mexican practice of killing the wounded and stripping the dead! Such is the mildness and humanity of the American victors, that their thousands of prisoners feel themselves at once in as perfect security as if they were in the midst of their own people. Their wants are liberally supplied, the little boy and his pet lamb, and the little girl and her pet dove, are spoken to with kind and soothing words, by those who just before were fighting with armed men, and with the fierceness of lions. It is not any wonder that such traits should excite admiration, or that the multitude of captives, who have been set free, have been forbidden by their own despotic rulers to enter the cities, on account of what they are in the habit of relating, not only of the courage and prowess of the Yankees, but still more of their strange and unaccountable humanity and generosity.

"In the cities occupied by the American troops order is immediately restored, and measures taken to command the most perfect security to the inhabitants, man, woman and child. Scarcely a day has passed by, when all classes, excepting the assassin and plunderer, feels a degree to security hitherto unknown. No one is molested in his house, no one fears to go forth into the streets, while their places of worship are held sacred, -Everything is as safe as in one of our own peaceful towns. This certainly is to divest grim-vi-saged war of its worst terrors. Gen. Morales, who had seen the conduct of our army after the taking of Vera Cruz, advised the people of Jalapa to remain quiet at their homes, and look upon the Americans as their best protectors, and for this he has been denounced by the military anarchists of the country as a traitor. Notwithstanding the slanders of the war party in Mexico, a party interested in making the war interminable, there is little doubt that the inhabitants of Puebla and the capital will hail the arrival of the Yankees, as that of deliverers, from the cut-throats and robbers, brought to the surface by the fermentation and disorganization of their own society. One mighty effort will shorten the war, and, even, save expense. If there be no central government in Mexico capable of forming treaties, we must raise up and treat with separate States and confederacies, taking care to secure sufficient guaranties for their fulfillment. We often see the expression, 'Stop the war –stop the war.' It is for Mexico to stop the war; she can do it at any moment, but it is not in our power. We may submit, we may renounce all our demands, we may leave all matters unsettled and consent to remain, no in a state of doubtful peace, but unavoidable and unending warfare, consequent on having no definite settlement of differences, or regulation of intercourse. Two nations in this situation are always at war, because always in collision. Suppose we withdraw our armies, is there any rational man who can suppose that, in thus implicitly confiding in Mexico, we can obtain a treaty of peace, or that she will renounce her pretension to the Sabine as her boundary? One of her very last pretensions, is a claim for indemnity for the loss of Texas, and all expenses of the war in that country since the year 1836! If we should lose the grasp we now have, she would laugh us to scorn, and treat us with contempt."

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p4c2, Later from Vera Cruz

The steamship Fashion, Capt. Ivy, (says the N. Orleans Delta, June 4,) arrived at this port yesterday from Vera Cruz, having left there on Sunday forenoon, the 30th ult.

Verbally we learn that the Mexicans were busy fortifying the pass at Rio Frio, between Puebla and the City of Mexico.

Gen. Scott, with the rear of the army, was to have left Jalapa on the 29th ult., and would arrive at Puebla on the 4th inst., where it is presumed he will await the arrival of the reinforcements being forwarded to him, before he advances farther.

We have heard a rumor that Herrera has been elected President, but cannot trace t to a reliable source, and we think the result of the election could scarcely be known at the capital so soon.

From the American Eagle we learn that the diligence which left Vera Cruz for Jalapa on the 22d ult., without passengers, but with three trunks filled with very fine dry goods, was stopped two miles beyond the National Bridge and robbed, and then burnt and destroyed. The driver and postillion who accompanied it were released and made their way to Jalapa. The diligence which should have come into Vera Cruz on the 24th ult., only came down to where the other had been destroyed, and at once returned. This, it is feared, will put an end to the use of diligences on the road. The robbery was no doubt the work of Mexican banditti. We come now to a more atrocious act by the same “HORRID. –It is with pain mingled with a desire for vengeance that we undertake to relate another massacre of our countrymen in the most cruel and brutal manner. In our paper of last Saturday (only one week) we announced the fact that Col. Sowers was in this city as a bearer of dispatches to Gen. Scott, and today we are called upon to inform the public of his horrid death—not with his enemy in front to oppose him, but cowardly shot by those who dared to show themselves.

“It appears that he left this city on Saturday last with an escort of five men and Lieut. McDonnell of Capt. Wheat’s company, expecting to find the captain at Santa Fe, or at the most a very short distance the other side. They arrived at Santa Fe and lodged there during the night, finding that Capt. Wheat had left: in the morning, anxious to push forward although it was ascertained that Capt. W. was some thirty miles ahead) with an addition of two more to the escort Col. Sowers set out for Jalapa. The next that we know of this little party is buy the arrival of one of the men, who returned and reported its surprise and destruction. In consequent of the falsity of the greater number of similar stories, Col. Wilson, our Governor, had the man arrested as a deserter. Thus matters stood until yesterday, when developments were made by an arrival from Jalapa—the first that has reached us for a week—tending to confirm our worst fears.

“We conversed yesterday with a gentleman who arrived in the morning, and he informs us that at a point about two miles on the other side of Puente National, he saw the ruins of the diligence, underneath which was a human body stripped, with the exception of a part of drawers, and mutilated in the most beastly manner. This is supposed to be the body of Col. Sowers. Near him lay another perfectly naked and likewise dreadfully mangled. Our informant was assured that five other bodies lay in some thick chaparral a short distance from the road. Now, the number of killed, with the man who escaped, exactly corresponds with that of the party which accompanied the unfortunate Col. Sowers, and leaves no doubt in out mind of its destruction.”

Our readers will recollect a party of Mexican robbers recently captured near Vera Cruz by a party of amateurs, under Col. Banks. Ten of them have been tried for robbing, secreting arms and ammunition, &c. Five have been acquitted and five convicted. The latter were sentenced to four and a half months’ work upon the public streets and thoroughfares in chains. Tow more yet it remained to be tried. We hope this example may be salutary.

The Eagle informs us, that on the 28th a party of six Mexicans, coming into Vera Cruz from Santa Fe, were attacked by some of their own countrymen, and robbed of all they had about them.

The ship Zenobia arrived at Vera Cruz from New York on the 28th May, having on board 193 troops, principally of the 4th and 5th Infantry, under command of Captain J. H. Whipple, of the 5th, 1st Lieutenant H. Price of the 4th Infantry, and 2d Lieutenant J. W. Lendrum of the 3d Infantry. Fourteen of the men were recruits for several regiments.

We note the (illegible) to Vera Cruz. They have published instructions to the unacclamated, full of good sense.

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p4c3, Conditions of Peace

The Whigs will find fault with the Administration, whatever it may do. At one time they hurled the most bitter anthems on the President, because, as they wantonly alleged, his design was to push this "war of conquest" and ruthlessly to annex the whole of Mexico to our Union. Beaten from this position, and compelled by facts too stubborn to be overcome, to admit that the Administration is willing to close a peace with Mexico upon terms which a large majority of the American people regard as most liberal and magnanimous on our part, they change their tone, and argue that, had the same spirit of moderation been evinced by the Administration, this bloody and unnecessary war would have been avoided, and the heavy loss of American blood and treasure been averted. Yesterday’s Whig quotes the following passages from the leading article in the Democratic (illegible) upon “the State of the Country,” and remarked, that if the writer “correctly delineates the policy and purposes of the Administration, we must confess that the terms upon which it is willing to make peace with Mexico, though not at all to our liking, are less harsh and exacting than, from intimations proceeding from other high sources, we had preciously supposed.” We, of course, do not attach very great importance to the correctness of the writer’s expositions, but are willing, for the present, to assume them to be authentic:

“We believe, in the first place, that the administration is willing to make to Mexico every possible concession in point of form, and to allow the defeated party in the war to prescribe its own rule of diplomatic etiquette in settling the preliminaries of peace. It has, for this purpose, clothed Gen. Scott, the commander-in-chief of the American army, with power to treat with the authorities he may find in Mexico, and sent Mr. Trist, the second officer in the State Department, down to aid and instruct him in carrying out the views of the President. Nay, should the Mexicans desire, or consider it a special mark of attention, Mr. Buchanan, the distinguished Secretary of State, will himself go down and negotiate in the city of the Aztecs.

“As to the cession of territory demanded of the Mexicans, the administration will not claim it as a forfeit, but offer to pay for it, so as to acquire it by purchase. We want a clear title to it; and the administration considers purchase the very best of all titles.
"The expense of the war we will not claim from the Mexicans, and the indemnity which she owes our citizens will be assumed by the government of the United States. We shall then claim no money of Mexico in any shape, and are willing to accept land in payment of our just demands.

"As to the territory to be ceded or sold to us by Mexico, we are of opinion that it will no comprise more than Upper California and New Mexico, and that our government will not insist, as a condition of peace, on the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; but rather make this a subject for subsequent friendly negotiations between the two sister republics."

As to the first proposition, the Whig asks "if Mr. Polk is now willing to permit Mexico to 'prescribe her own rule of diplomatic etiquette,' for example, at this time, why was he so ignignant at her refusal to permit him to prescribe that rule, when he sent her, in the person of Mr. Slidell, an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, to negotiate upon all the subjects in dispute between the two countries, instead of the Commissioner, to adjust the question of boundary, whom alone she had agreed to receive?"

The official documents expressly contradict the position here taken by the Whig. As soon as the resolutions annexing Texas were passed by Congress, Almonte, the Mexican Minister at Washington, demanded his passports, declaring that the action of our Government would justify war. The Administration, however, resolved upon doing everything to conciliate Mexico and terminate the difficulty amicably, instructed Mr. Black, the American Consul at the City of Mexico, "to ascertain from the Mexican Government whether they would receive an Envoy from the United States, entrusted with full power to adjust all the questions between the two Governments, though Mr. Pena y Pena, agreed to "receive a Minister from the United States in the Capital of Mexico, with full power from his Government to settle the dispute in a peaceable manner." Mr. Slidell was sent as such Envoy; but, on arriving at the City of Mexico, was objected to by the Secretary of State. Two weeks afterwards, his mission was annulled by an official vote from the Mexican Secretary, requiring him to produce special powers, from the settlement of the Texas question alone. This gross violation of an express agreement was, no doubt, attributable to the public excitement raised against President Herrera for wishing, as it was alleged, to bargain away the Mexican territory, embraced in Texas. The fact is, a few days after, the Government of Herrera was overthrown, and General Paredes, a military usurper, succeeded to power, pledging himself to recover Texas by force. Mr. Slidell, who had retired to Jalapa, repeated the proffer of peace to the new Mexican Secretary of State, Mr. Castillo y Lanzas, stating that the President was sincerely desirous of preserving peace between the two countries. A few days after Mr. Slidell (illegible) rejected, his passports were sent to him, and he returned to the United States.

Is it not evident that the objection to Mr. Slidell, as a full Minister, was a mere quibble to disguise a gross violation of an express agreement, and that, in the excited state of the public mind on account of the Annexation of Texas which led to the overthrow of Herrera, no change in policy in our diplomatic intercourse would have induced the Mexican rulers to enter upon a negotiation, even of the boundary question alone? Paredes was hoisted into power, pledged to wrest the whole of Texas from the "Northern invaders," and he would not therefore listen to any proposition, however "conciliatory or complying." This is demonstrated by his orders to the commanding General on the Rio Grande, before he could have possibly heard of the march of General Taylor from Corpus Christi, to cross the river and take "the initiative" in making hostilities. His cry was for war, and not for peace—and any argument that the war was brought on by our Government stickling for diplomatic etiquette, is refuted by history.

In reply to the Whig's assertion, we contend that the President has, from the first clash of arms, been ready and willing to make peace with Mexico. We shall not now go into the question of the march of our army to the Rio Grande. It is enough to know, that the war was recognized by Congress as the act of Mexico, and the President was fully provided with men and money to prosecute it vigorously. Not a work was then raised against the pursuit of the insolent foe into his own territory, to punish the murders of our citizens, and other wrongs inflicted upon us. The cry of "lawless invasion," "war of conquest," was not then heard. With the full acquiescence of the nation, the army crossed the Rio Grande. It is enough to know, that the war was recognized by Congress as the act of Mexico, and the President was fully provided with men and money to prosecute it vigorously. Not a word was then raised against the pursuit of the insolent foe into his own territory, to punish the murders of our citizens, and other wrongs inflicted upon us. The cry of "lawless invasion," "war of conquest," was not then heard. With the full acquiescence of the nation, the army crossed the Rio Grande and victory after victory received the applause of our whole people. Still the President was not neglectful of the great object we had in view, the establishment of a permanent and honorable peace. Proffers of negotiation were again made, in the midst of our triumphs, but they were again rejected with scorn. Could the President have done more to effect a pacific settlement of the difficulty or, rather, was he not imperatively required, by the action of Congress and the people, to push on the war, so as to weaken and humble Mexico, and compel her to listen to a negotiation of peace? That this desirable end has not been attained, is not the fault of the President nor our gallant officers and men—but is mainly attributable to the factious partisan course of Whig presses and politicians, whose assaults upon their own Government are eagerly caught up by the war party in Mexico, as conveying sympathy for their blind and infatuated perseverance in hostilities. The Administration, we have no doubt, is now, and ever has been, willing to make peace on fair, equitable and liberal terms. What more can the country, or even the Whig party, demand?

The Whig attempts to show up the inconsistency of the proposition attributed to the President, viz: to obtain Mexican territory, not by conquest but my purchase and asks, "why conquer it first, in order to buy it afterwards?" How does the Whig know that the purchase of territory was not embraced in Mr. Slidell's mission, which was so insultingly rejected, under the influence of the war spirit? And is it not a matter of record, that in the summer of 1846 the President by special message called upon Congress for a certain amount to assist in arranging the terms of peace with Mexico; and that at the last session of Congress, after we had "conquered" a large portion of Mexico, a sum of money for the same purpose was placed at the President's disposal by Congress? The attempt, then, of the Whig to present this matter of "purchase" as a new question, is not sustained by facts.
We shall not undertake to discuss the propriety of the Whig's parallel between our course towards Mexico and "the partition of Poland and the extinction of its nation existence, by then usurping triumvirate of Russia, Austria and Prussia." It is sufficient to chronicle such assertions as indicative of how far party spirit will blind the judgement. To use the language of the Whig, we believe that the Administration did "exhaust every effort to effect its object by peaceable means, before it unsheathed the sword," and that since the sword has been drawn, it has left untried no plan, consistent with the honor and interests of the nation, to bring the war to a close.

We do not profess, however, to be acquainted with the designs of the Administration in regard to the conditions of peace. All that we ask is indemnification for the past and security for the future. We would put away every notion of annexing Mexico to the United States, as has been most wantonly charged upon the Administration by the Whigs; nor would we do anything to denationalize that Republic, which we yet hope to see, under the influence of our free institutions, acquiring stability and strength, and acting as a barrier against the progress of monarchical principles. To secure the object we have in view, however, it may be necessary for us to hold the country to levy duties sufficient to pay the expenses of our armies of occupation, and to protect the peace party, who may be willing to organize their Government on sound principles and consummate a solid and honorable peace with us. Money she has none, and we must therefore take a reasonable portion of her territory, of no real value to Mexico, as a moderate equivalent for the sacrifice of life and the heavy expense which has been forced upon us. –It is our policy, as it should be the aim of our Government, to see established in Mexico a literal, permanent civil government, with whom we may cultivate a friendly and generous intercourse in trade and commerce, -exchanging with one another the blessings with which Nature has endowed each country. In a word, we fully sanction the following views of the N. Y. Globe:

"The original declaration of war against us by Mexico, without any justifiable cause, has been punished by a series of victories, which has placed that country at our disposal; another movement directed by a proper force, will give us possession of her capital, she is in every point of view a beaten, conquered and humiliated nation; and what adds to her humiliation, she has brought into the field one against us, and yet she has been vanquished in every flight; she has not gained a single victory, or achieved a single exploit, but with characteristic obstinacy, she insists upon a farther prosecution of the war. We have gained all that we hoped for in defending ourselves against these aggressions, and now we have an example to set to Mexico and to the world, an example of reason, of moderation, of forbearance. We conquer not for occupation, but for defense. We conquer for peace not for territory, and beyond our just claims to a safe boundary reaching to the Pacific, it is not our interest or our desire to occupy any more territory owned by Mexico."

June 18, 1847, REv64i14p1c7, Important to Discharged Soldiers

IMPORTANT TO DISCHARGED SOLDIERS. –By an act of the last Congress, approved 2d March, 1847, (says the New Orleans Delta,) $500,000 was appropriated to provide for the comfort of discharged soldiers, who may be landed at New Orleans, or other places within the United States, so disabled by disease or by wounds received in the service, as to be unable to proceed to their homes. This sum is to be applied under the direction of the Secretary of War. On the 20th of May Gov. Johnson addressed a communication to Gen. Brooke, calling his attention to the wise and humane provisions of this act of Congress, and inquiring whether, under the direction of the Secretary of War, he had been empowered to apply any portion of the sum appropriated at this point, and what arrangements, if any, had been made for carrying into effect the provisions of that act. Gen. Brooke, with his usual promptness, immediately wrote to the authorities at Washington on the subject, which was as promptly responded to in the following letter from Adjutant General Jones:

ADJUTANT GENERAL’S OFFICE,
Washington, May 28, 1847.

General: Your letter of the 20th, on the subject of discharge volunteers who are sick and in want, has been received, and I have the pleasure to inform you that the fund appropriated by Congress for their relief (500,000 dollars) is now available. Your requisition on the (illegible) at New Orleans for any funds that you may think necessary to be placed in the hand of Assistant Surgeon McCormick, in fulfillment of the object of the law at New Orleans, will be promptly met. I am, General,

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
[Signed,]R. JONES, Adjutant General.

To Brig. General GEORGE M. BROOKE,
Commanding Western Division,
New Orleans, Louisiana. [BJM]
The following is the dispatch from Gen. Santa Anna to which allusion was made in our last paper:

ARMY OF OPERATIONS OF THE EAST,
Ayoltla, May 18, 1847.

From the moment that I arrived at this place, I learned with deep regret, through channels worthy of all confidence, that my approach to the capital with the Army of the East had spread the greatest alarm among its inhabitants, caused by the idea that it was intended to defend the city within its own walls, as also by the agitation of party interest, which putting party passions in motion, appear in this instance to have made common cause with the enemies of honor and of the independence of the nation. Alarmed by this intelligence, which, if left to its natural course, would not only rob me of the only property remaining to me in this world –my honor –but would also decidedly endanger the sacred cause which we defend, I have thought it to be my duty to suspend my march, in order to render an account to the Supreme Government of my conduct and intentions, trusting that the loyalty and candor with which I shall explain them will prevent the last and most fatal calamity which could in our present position befall our country, “distrust and discord among those who are called upon to save it.”

When I commenced the march to this city it was in obedience to a resolution adopted by the Committee of War, of which I informed your Excellency in my dispatch of the day before yesterday, in which it was determined that the salvation of the capital was not only necessary and advantageous for the ulterior operations of the war, but might be sufficient to bring it to a happy and honorable conclusion. Although fully convinced of the utility of this measure, I had notwithstanding, resolved to submit the same question, on my arrival at the capital, to another and more numerous meeting, presided over by the older general in the army, determined to respect its decision and even to resign my military power, which I also manifested to your Excellency in my above named dispatch. Such were my designs, in which I protest most solemnly not a thought of personal aggrandizement or ambition had a part. The nation has seen that since my return to the Republic I have passed my time in the field without thinking of the supreme power, until a majority of the Representatives of the nation urged me to put an end to the civil war which was destroying the heart of the nation.

Not even this complete self-denial, nor the numerous and severe sacrifices to which I have submitted, have been sufficient to destroy old prejudices. Calumny and suspicion have added fresh wormwood to the already bitter cup of my life, and under what circumstances? At a moment when I was leading to the defense of the capital an army drawn from its ruins, and when I asked of my country no other favor than to be allowed to die in its defense. Although this unexpected and undeserved return ought to absolve me from all engagements, furnishing me an opportunity to escape with honor from the extremely difficult position in which I find myself placed, yet I will not voluntarily take such a step, nor shall it ever be said that the man to whom the nation entrusted her salvation did not have the recourse to every sacrifice, including his self-love and even outward appearances, before he retreated from before the enemy, and that if ever this should happen it will be due to invincible obstacles; and finally because he had been repudiated by his countrymen.

As in my person are at this moment united two kinds of representations, both supreme—one military and the other political—which especially claim the fulfillment of peculiar duties, it is necessary that I should satisfy both. I will do so as clearly and succinctly as the straitened position in which I am placed will admit. The first requires that I should state freely and explicitly my opinion respecting the military operations under my charge and these re, that the war must be continued until we shall have obtained ample justice from our unjust aggressors; and that, to arrive at this result, it is necessary to save the capital should be occupied without resistance, the spirit of the people will be broken, and the complete submission of the country will be inevitable.

My duty as the first magistrate of the nation, at present shamefully censured and suspected by unjust and artful detractors, requires that I should remove a pretext invented by perfidy and pusillanimity in order to neutralize the generous efforts which the good citizens are disposed to make for the salvation of its independence and honor. In order to (illegible) it is (illegible) to which I have previously alluded, and of which I now repeat the following two points: First, to carry on the war on the basis before indicated, and, secondly, to (illegible) the salvation of the capital as indispensable. Being determined to admit any compromise on either of these points, I communicate the same to your Excellency, that you may impart the same to his Excellency, the President, and, should he decide against me, you will at once tender my resignation as commander-in-chief and first magistrate of the Republic, and forward my passports to retire to wherever may be most convenient for me.

It might happen, that although there may be an obsolete conformity with my ideas, it may be thought that I would be an obstacle to carrying them into due effect. I have already stated that these circumstances would be very propitious for me to escape from the critical position in which I am placed in an easy and honorable manner by a prompt dismissal from service, but I have too high an opinion of my duty. I know the obligation I contracted with the nation when I was placed at its head, and when it confided to me its precious defense. I shall never betray this trust, and a voluntary separation from the affair would make me believe myself guilty of a dishonorable desertion. My country finds me at her side, and I am determined to fulfil the mission that has been confided to me to the very last extremity, and my dearest interests and my very existence are staked on the altar of liberty and independence of my country. But as I wish to hear and to respect the sound opinion of the nation, I should with that the Supreme Government, speaking to me loyally and with candor, should make known whether I should separate myself from the nation. blood for my country, and standing by her in the moments of her affliction. Senores Don Manuel Barande, Don Ignacio Trigueros and Don Jose Fernando Ramirez, who are here on a friendly visit, are commissioned to be my interpreters near the Supreme Government, and I have requested them to enlarge upon these ideas, as they have listened to them from my lips.

May it please your Excellency to communicate this note to his Excellency, the President, requesting him to favor me with an answer in the shortest delay possible, to enable me to form any ulterior determination. God and Liberty!

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

To his Excellency the MINISTER OF WAR.

To this letter the following reply was immediately made by the Government through the Minster of War:

DEPARTMENT OF WAR AND MARINE,
Mexico, May 19, 1847.

June 18, 1847, REV64i14p4c1, Prospects of Peace

The intelligence in the N. O. papers is of a contradictory character, in relation to the election of President. The Bulletin says that Herrera had been elected President, and the clergy were in favor of peace; and that Herrera would immediately make a public declaration to that effect. –The same paper says that a late letter from an officer in Gen. Scott’s army and whose situation was highly favorable for obtaining correct information, states that peace would shortly be made:

"The news, on the whole, we think, in favorable as regards peace, or at least of a disposition on the part of the enemy to make it, if the terms should be admissible."

On the other hand, it is stated positively, that the enemy were actively engaged in fortifying the Río Frio Pass.

The N. O. National has the following article on the same subject. We trust that its expectations may be as well founded as its reasoning is sound:

"We have had the pleasure of conversing with one of our gallant officers, just returned from the seat of war, and we have reason to believe that the prospect of peace with Mexico is not altogether chimerical. –The British residents of Mexico begin to speak of such a thing as necessary, and they no doubt represent the feelings of their government; and the British nation, having great interests to look after in Mexico, can exert influence that will greatly facilitate a peace, if it choose to do so. Before the taking of Vera Cruz, the British residents of that city were very incredulous about our conquering Mexico. The battles of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo have forced them to acknowledge the thing as done, and they now speak of the Mexican nation as no longer competent to carry on a civilized warfare.

"Again, the most intelligent native citizens of Vera Cruz and Jalapa, and the intervening country, agree that the war should no longer be carried on. They acknowledge that the Mexican arms cannot prevail; that the resources of the people are exhausted. The people are hourly becoming reconciled to the Americans. The destruction of the enormous tariffs, and annoying tolls upon the roads, has facilitated internal commerce, and destroyed the monopolies that every where weighed down the laboring classes.

"Lastly, the clergy of Jalapa, among whom are many of the most intelligent in Mexico, openly avow their desire for peace. They have learned that we are not making war upon religion, but upon the military despots that have reduced Mexico to its present degradation; of course their sentiments will have an extended influence.

"Although our reasons for expecting peace may appear at first-sight somewhat superficial, still we find more substance on which to ground a hope that the war is nearer at an end that has heretofore been presented to us."

June 22, 1847, REV64i15p1c2, The President and Santa Anna

Not long since we took occasion to review some of the prominent scenes in the military life of Santa Anna, and to show that, as a General, his career has been marked by nothing but cowardice, unmilitary conduct and defeat. We further contend that if Mexico had empowered the President to select a General to lead her to battle, he could not have chosen one who, with the resources at his disposal, would have met such inglorious defeats from our gallant and skilful officers and troops. The Whig thinks we have underrated the ability as well as bravery of the Mexican Ex-President, and quotes the opinion of Colonel Baker, of Illinois, who has returned home, and is reported to have said: that Santa Anna is a great man, and that no other Mexican could control the population of that country, raise armies,
These opinions, certainly, ought not to outweigh the stubborn facts with which the country is familiar. Santa Anna, we admit, is a man of talents and ready pen; his beautiful and glowing pronunciamientos are worthy of the days of Roman virtue and self-devotion; though he has, on every occasion, with marked hypocrisy and cowardice, falsified his heroic words. But that he has not the qualities to excite a popular enthusiasm, or the skill or courage to lead armies on the field, his ceaseless defeats and pusillanimous flights have thoroughly convinced us.

We, too, can quote the weighty opinions of others in defense of our position. We find the following article in the New Orleans Commercial Times:

"GEN. MINON. –This officer, whom Santa Anna denounced for a want of skill and courage an Buena Vista, has published in the Republicano a regulation of the charge brought against him –He declares that he assertion by Santa, of the want of provisions and water in the army, is a falsehood. He states that he himself had cattle to the number of 600 head, besides maize and flour, of which he apprised Santa Anna. He further asserts that the latter's retreat was unjustifiable; that the manner of it was still more so –moving off in the darkness of the night, and leaving hundreds of his poor wounded soldiers to their fate on the field –more like a fading hiding from his enemy, than a general retiring to recruit his forces. It was to prevent these facts from being made public, that he, Gen. Minon, was persecuted, imprisoned and denied communication with his friends. Truth will but, it appears, and Santa Anna will shrink into a pigmy, by and by, from the inflated dimensions he gave himself, as the Napoleon of the West."

A writer in the Union, who has been in Mexico, presents the following strong and interesting facts and sound views in regards to the return of Santa Anna to Mexico. The extract is long, but it is marked with a calm and patriotic spirit, which gives it much weight. History and observation satisfy us of the correctness of the views we have formed of the character and ability of Santa Anna; and until we see reason to change our opinion, we shall continue to believe that the return of Santa Anna has been (illegible) country's cause, instead of a fatal and reasonable movement, as the Whigs allege:

Hoping and believing that my countrymen, whatever their alliance of party, can as patriots look upon national measures independent of the one-sided views presented by partisan presses, I venture to lay before them a few facts and observations in relation to a prominent incident in the Mexican war. I allude to the consent of the government to the admission of Gen. Santa Anna into Mexico. There is no act for which the President has been more censured and ridiculed; yet there is none in the conduct of the war which could have shown a more correct estimate of Mexican character, or of the military character of Gen. Santa Anna himself. The results have in many respects, if not in all, justified that estimate.

To those whose lot has been cast in Mexico, it is often amusing, and sometimes painful, to witness among our own people the false reasoning, based upon false impressions, applied to the Mexican population, institutions, and officers. –It is natural. We reason from those of our own country to theirs; and it is difficult for a citizen of this Union to imagine, or to understand when laid before him, the degradation of Mexico; and in making up a Mexican hero, he would never take into account the vices which are essential to the character. None have professed so much by these difficulties of judgement as Gen. Santa Anna, who has, with us, been gratuitously endowed with the character of a gallant, if not that of a chivalric, chief; whereas, at home, he is known as a chief from his pre-eminence in the national vices, and for years the inconstancy of his courage has been the subject of popular talk. From the battle of Talome, at which he was defeated, (I think in 1832,) down to the present time, he has never, even among his own people, gained a battle, excepting when he has been enabled to purchase a part of the opposing army. Going before more recent events, we know the result of San Jacinto, and we know his conduct when captured there; we also know the fate of the last battle of his contest with Paredes, after which he fled his country. Then why is he a military chief? Because, as such he is known as a leader of a horde of banditti, which, receiving no pay from a government having no revenue, is necessarily thrown upon robbery for the means of support. –By such of the Mexican people as are not in some way connected with the military, he is detested; and is, perhaps, the only politician who, in the event of a decided overthrow at home, runs the risk of losing his life. Nothing could exceed the enthusiasm of hate by which he was forced to fly his country at the time of his late exile. Happening at the time to be in one of the remote provinces, I saw people running to each other's houses with congratulations at his overthrow, and exulting in the hope that he would yet be caught and shot. They repeated doggerel rhymes, in which the "one-legged scoundrel" was his most flattering epithet. Now whom did the admission of Santa Anna expel from the country? General Paredes. He fled, not from the Mexican people, but from Santa Anna, whom he knew better than did the unfortunate officer over whose name I write. A more gallant spirit than that of Paredes never existed. He is too brave a man to be long a Mexican leader. Plunging into the hottest of the fight himself, he gives his followers no excuse for retreating. His small person is now covered with scars of desperate wounds, and of one of his arms but a fragment remains. Single-handed, he has had then energy and courage to quell the mutiny of a Mexican garrison. His wife, equally brave with himself, has been by his side in some of his most desperate fights. Although it is not probable that the general result would have been changed, fighting Mexicans with Paredes, of even his wife at their head, would have been a very different thing to fighting them under that "very best General" whom the President had the INDISCRETION to give them. It is pretty certain Paredes never would have set the example of flight at Buena Vista.

Although the acts of the administration, as those of all human beings, may be assailed for erroneous judgement, doubts of the integrity of motive of the clearness of judgement which prompts the censure must arise in the minds of all independent citizens, when they see suggested, as a motive of policy, a want of patriotism among the chief officers of the republic. To this allegation every honest man’s heart involuntarily gives the lie. No citizen, appealing to his own bosom, can believe that the President of the United States and the members of his cabinet desire the defeat and disgrace of their country. On the contrary, he must feel that, as citizens and men, they are, equally with any alive to its interests and to its successes in our present contest with an ever vicious and faithless neighbor; while, as the agents of its policy, they have an additional interest in all that concerns its glory and renown. Yet do we daily see hostility to the success of the war charged upon the administration. Such charges are too much for the credulity of the most violent, though honest opponent of the administration, and are evidences of the spirit and judgement with which the administration is measured.

FANNINO.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Extra June 14.

FROM THE ARMY OF GEN. SCOTT.

The steamship Telegraph, Capt. Auld, arrived Sunday evening having left Vera Cruz on the 4th inst., Tampico on the 7th and Brazos Santiago on the 9th inst.

The Telegraph brought over the following passengers from the Brazos:

JALAPA, Mexico, May 22, 1847.

It seems that the affair with Santa Anna’s lancers took place at Amasoique, a small place about three leagues this side of Puebla. The number of the enemy was variously estimated at from 1500 to 2000. They charged up within cannon range with great apparent resolution, so much so that a regular movement was made to receive them; them all scampering off as fast as their animals would carry them, leaving ten men and seven horses dead on the field.

The better classes at Puebla appear well enough disposed towards the Americans, although they perhaps do not altogether like the idea that a force of 3000 men should enter a city of near 100,000 souls, and without resistance. The lower orders –the ladrones and leperos, with which Puebla abounds –are evidently but ill disposed towards us. One of Gen. Worth’s men has already been assassinated, but fortunately the murders were immediately arrested. On the alcades telling Gen. W. that according to their laws, a year and a half would elapse before the case of the assassins could be settled in the courts of Puebla, he was informed that an American tribunal would render them full of justice in a day and a half! The miscreants are now where they never will commit another murder.

It seems that supplies of all kinds can be readily obtained at Puebla. The wheat crop has just ripened and is now most abundant.

The news now is that the Mexicans have abandoned the idea of fortifying at the Rio Frio, but intend constructing a line of works at El Penol, a position about nine miles this side of the city of Mexico. Perhaps they only intend this as a show of resistance, for the sake of saving their credit; again, they may hope to raise men enough to give a regular battle to the Americans. They can collect nothing, however, but an undisciplined rabble, and these our regulars can disperse like a chaff. The more they have to contend with of (illegible) the quicker a (illegible) be created among them.

Santa Anna, after the dispersion of his cavalry, did not stop even at San Martin or Rio Frio, but kept on with all speed to the city of Mexico. Our knowledge of the state of affairs at the capital, since Santa Anna’s arrival, is limited, but it was currently reported at Puebla on Wednesday last, that on the previous day the two parties –the Polkas and the Puros –were fighting like cats and dogs. Some new revolution has without doubt broken out, but the leaders are at present unknown.
Gen. Scott's last proclamation has been generally circulated at Puebla, and it is said with most excellent effect. No less than three editions of it had been printed, and still the inhabitants were calling for more. The demand for it alone would show that its effects have been salutary. The numberless horde of military drones and all the employees and hangers-on of the Government, are doubtless doing all they can to put down its circulation and deaden its influence upon the masses; but they cannot keep it out of the hands of the middle and better class of citizens, the laborious and thinking artisans, nor prevent them from perusing and pondering upon its contents.

In a letter I sent you yesterday by the diligencia I believe I states that Gen. Valencia was coming out with 14,000 men to meet the Americans. The report is that of this number 4000 are Pintos, or Indians of the South under Gen. Alvares. They are called Pintos from the fact that after they come to manhood their faces, from some cause or other which I have not heard explained, become spotted —yellow and red. They are of little account as soldiers, and it is probable that Valencia's men, if he has the number given him by rumor, are nothing but raw recruits. If they stop to be fired at once they will not do it a second time.

There is much speculation in the army as to what is to be the result —as to what is to be the winding up of this war with Mexico. I can see no other result than the subjugation of the country entirely, -or at least in bringing it under the protection of the United States. As a nation, Mexico is blotted out of the list; the candle of her independence is burnt down to the socket. If left to herself she would in a few months, from her utter inability to govern herself, be torn and divided by intestine commotion. No protection whatever could be given either to life or property; there are no men in the country who could make headway against the torrent of abuses that would at once creep into every department; there is no money or means with which to establish a new and stable government. What then is she to do? This is a question for wise heads to answer. Too utterly helpless to be left to herself, I repeat that the better plan would be to take her at once under our protection. Let some honest and well-meaning man —there may be a few of them left —let someone be chosen or selected as President, and give him the assistance of a few thousand men to keep down revolutions, and awe the hungry horde of leeches, who have so long preyed upon the country. If they raised a grito or pronunciamento, put them down by the bayonet; pronunciamentos would soon become unfashionable if the precious blood for those who started them was brought in jeopardy. Give but one of their revolutions a tragic turn —they have been costly farces heretofore —and the people would soon become sick of them.

These remarks have been hastily thrown together, but they may possibly be as good as any speculations that can be offered. He who thinks that a lasting and beneficial peace can be made with Mexico, or believes that the American troops are soon to be withdrawn, is someone who has not bee over the country; he starts in his belief from false premises, and judges a race of people by the ordinary rules which govern human nature, while it is notoriously a fact that they have long since thrown all ordinary rules at defiance. The Chinese, when they painted hideous faces upon their walls to frighten off the English invaders, were not a whit behind these people when they get up their tremendous proclamations, and flatter themselves into the belief that what they say in them is all true —that they really area a great people, and able to contend with those whom they profess to despise. Yours,

G. W. K.

June 22, 1847, REV64i15p2c1, From the Army of General Taylor

From the Brazos, by the arrival of the Telegraph, our news is later.

From the Flag of the 7th inst., we learn that Col. Doniphan, with a portion of his command, passed down the Rio Grande on the 5th inst. The Flag thus speaks of them:

The unshorn beards and goat and deer skin clothes of many of them reminded us of descriptions we have read of the inhabitants of some of the countries of the Russian Empire. They stopped in town a couple of hours. Col. Doniphan is a stout, rough-featured, good-natured-looking sort of a man. He brought along with him Clark’s battery, and ten pieces of cannon captured at Sacramento. The sick, &c, forty or fifty wagons, with several hundred mules, were turned over to the quartermaster.

A private belonging to this command fell off the steamboat on the 5th inst., and was drowned.

Capt. Rice Garland’s company of Rangers has been dismissed at Matamoras, some difficulty about mustering them into the service having occurred.

The Massachusetts volunteer put in prison for killing a man who refused him whisky, has made his escape. One of his companions has killed a woman in Matamoras for the same offence. The Flag loudly denounces these outrages.

A private in the 1st Indiana Regiment is also denounced for a brutal assault upon a Mr. Stip, an aged French silversmith, with whom he had a slight difficulty.

Brig. Gen. Hopping has arrived at Matamoras, and occupies Gen. Cushing’s former quarters there. By Lieut. Tidball, of the 3d Ohio Regiment, the editors of the Flag learn that a short time since a party of about one hundred Camanches, in all the panoply of war came suddenly across a small party of volunteers, who were chopping wood in a neighborhood of Parras. Instead of a fight, as was naturally expected, the Indians gave tokens of peace, and stated that the game they were after were Mexicans. They partially escorted the volunteers into town, to whom they seemed much attached. Lieut. T. is on his way home.

SALTILLO, MEXICO, May 21, 1847.

A short time after my last letter closed the town was thrown into a fever of excitement by the arrival of Gen. Wool’s camp of two Mexican officers from San Luis Potosi, charged with dispatches for Gen. Taylor. They professed to be ignorant of their contents, but to believe that they had come from the city of Mexico and contained the intelligence that an armistice had been granted, and that negotiations for peace were under discussion between Gen. Scott and Santa Anna. Ecstatic was the joy of many who are “in for the war” and pine for the day when they shall rejoin their friends and families. The dispatches were immediately forwarded to Gen. Taylor by Lieut. Franklin, and the Mexican officers treated with the most marked courtesy by our officers at this post. They professed ignorance of the character of the dispatches, but believed that they above was their purport. Singular to say, this idea was generally believed; for myself, I have so little confidence in anything Mexican that I believed it to be a paper from the Department of San Luis—a remonstrance against the advance of Gen. Taylor, or something of that character. Private letters received from San Luis by citizens here, brought by the Mexican officers, announce that the inhabitants were in a state of excitement from the expected approach of our army from this quarter, which was looked for by the 28th inst. The dispatches arrived here on Tuesday and were immediately forwarded, and the protracted absence of the bearer, Lieut. Franklin tended to excite the curiosity felt to be apprised of their contents.

About 1 o’clock today he returned. And lo! The bubble burst! The important dispatch was a communication from the Governor of San Luis Potosi, announcing that he had heard of the intended approach of the American army, and begging to inquire whether it was the intention of the commanding general to conduct the war according to the usages of civilized nations, of according to the manner adopted by the Camanches. What reply Gen. Taylor will make to a question and communication of so insulting a character I cannot say, but I am told his usually even temper was considerably ruffled upon reading it, and he is said to have remarked that he should think the Mexicans had become pretty well acquainted with (illegible) conducting war before this. If they have not it is certainly no his fault, for he has tried hard enough to beat it into them. There is no doubt that we shall march upon San Luis at a very early period, as soon as a sufficient number of troops arrive from below, and from San Luis to the city of Mexico. A communication received from Gen. Scott by Gen. Taylor a few days ago, giving a brief account of the battle near Jalapa, directs Gen. T. to move at once, or as early as possible, from San Luis, where he expected the letter would reach him, to the city of Mexico. So that Gen. Taylor will not probably remain any time at San Luis, unless he receives orders there, but leaving garrison for the lace, will proceed with the residue of his command to the city of Mexico. The command will probably never retrace its steps this way, as there will be no occasion for it. I have, therefore, a fair prospect of “reveling in the halls of the Montezumas,” as well as some other people, as if I live through the campaign and return via Vera Cruz, I shall have seen quite as much of the country as I care about.

Speaking of health, Saltillo appears to be a very healthy place, and the temperature is really delightful. The mornings, evenings and nights are cool, and a good breeze prevails through the day, rendering the atmosphere pleasant and agreeable in the shade—in the sun I confess it is hot. And yet there is now a great deal of sickness among the Mexicans mostly children, and the number of funerals of the latter are really quite alarming.

Col. Doniphan with the residue of his command arrived at camp this morning and reported to Gen. Wool. It is thought that this artillery companies under Capt. Weightman, attached to this command, will consent to remain during the war, but I hardly think such will be the case. —The regiment is under orders to march on Sunday, the 23d, for the Brazos, there to be discharged. The two Illinois regiments will march from here on the 30th or 31st inst., and the Arkansas cavalry on the 1st June. The two Indiana regiments, 2nd and 3rd, will proceed on Monday. The troops then of the old stock, will all be gone, except Ben McCulloch’s company of Texan Rangers, now commanded by Lieut. Tobin, and not a company will go on to San Luis, except the artillery batteries, that have been in any of the hard fights with Gen. Taylor. Well, let us hope that the new regiments will stand up to their work quit as well as the old, and if an opportunity occurs, distinguish themselves as their predecessors have done. We cannot doubt them. It is scarcely probable that there will be any resistance, at San Luis, yet the Mexicans may make a stout one. An order has just been received from Gen. Wool, by the two Mexican officers who brought the despatchers from San Luis, to report to him tomorrow morning, at 8 o’clock, for an answer to their despatches.

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p2c2, Important from Mexico City

We have received by the way of Tampico, (illegible) the Capital as late as the 29th of May. This is a week later than the papers received last week by the Oregon, and full as late as the private advices from the Capital.

Santa Anna’s letter of resignation, which we gave on Friday last, is published in the papers of the 29th May, but we know nothing of the action taken by Congress on the subject. We find also a long manifesto addressed to the nation by him a few days earlier, which we have not time to translate before the mail goes, if it be work a translation.
In the city of Mexico everything is manifestly in a state of confusion, and almost unlicensed anarchy. General Bravo has resigned not only his command of General-in-Chief, but also his commission of general of division. General Rincon is said to have done the same thing. More of the causes in our next.

It is true that General Almonte is under arrest though the causes of his imprisonment are not avowed. He is confined in Santiago Tlaltelolco.

The death of General Scott was for several days reported in the city of Mexico, and generally credited. The error was discovered, however, prior to the latest dates.

Gen. Ampudia has been directed to wait further orders at Cuernavaca. What suspicious thing he has done or contemplated, we are not informed.

Gen. Valencia and Gen. Salas were ordered to leave the city of Mexico on the 24th ult., for the city of San Luis Potosi, to take command of the army of the North.

The accounts we find in the Mexican papers of the disaffection in Zacatecas confirm those we published a few days since. The official paper of the State publishes wrong representations made against Santa Anna and in favor the Americans-Gen. Scott’s manifesto among the latter. The latter document is also given in all the papers of the capital.

Gen. Arista has refused to resume his military functions until his conduct should be investigated by a military tribunal. He demands that his trial may take place at once, in order that he may take part in the defense of the country.

The Legislature of Durango voted for Seno D. Francisco Elloriaga for President. Upon the first ballot, Elloriaga received eight votes, and Santa Anna six. Elloriaga was the former Governor of the State, and it will be recollected ran Santa Anna hard for the Provisional Presidency, in the last election by Congress.

The Sate of Tamaulipas has voted for General Almonte for the Presidency and Zacatecas for Senor Jose Maria Lafragua.

The Legislature of Oajaca, (which has been denounced by the revolutionary party in that State, voted for General Herrera. The new Legislature voted for General Santa Anna for President.

If this last vote be allowed to General Herrera, the result of the election so far will stand thus: General Herrera 4 votes, Angel Trias 3 votes, Senor Ocampo 1 vote, Senor Elloriaga 1 vote, General Almonte 1 vote, and Senor Lafragua 1 vote. Give the vote of Oajaca to General Santa Anna, and you have the seventh candidate for the unenviable station of the President of Mexico.

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p2c2, Latest from Vera Cruz

By the arrival of the steamship Fanny at New Orleans, on the 21st, the editors of the Delta have received Vera Cruz papers to 5th of June. The following items are copied from the Vera Cruz Eagle of the 5th June:

We regret to say that it is not in our power to congratulate our citizens upon their good health: it pains us to say that there appears to be some increase in the number and virulence of cases of fever, and we feel it a duty to add our own to the warnings of the Board of Health. Avoid exposure to the rays of the sun between the hours of 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.; and when overheated and suffering profuse perspiration, be cautious, in your anxiety to be cool quickly, not to seek a strong current of cold air, thereby checking the perspiration, and compelling Nature to suspend an amusement she seems much to delight in—this vexes her so much that she usually relapses into more of less fever.

A very large train leaves his place this morning for Puebla, under the special command of Col. McIntosh. It carries out a mail, (the first, we believe, for nearly a month,) and Major A. G. Bennett, Paymaster, in charge of about three hundred thousand dollars. This train is escorted by a large force of soldiery, composed of companies F. of the 4th Infantry; B, of the 5th Inf. G of the 7th Inf.; I and K, of the 15th Int.; and D, G and K. of the 3rd Dragoons—in all about 800 men.

The steamship Mary Kingsland reached this port yesterday, having left New Orleans on the 30th. She brings 458 teamsters, 113 horses, and Lieut. Scott, 11th Infantry; W. Hammond, G. W. Armstrong, and L. Gill, as cabin passengers.

The thermometer has ranged between the degrees of 87 and 92, day and night, for the last ten days in this city. In the sun, it has been as high as 130 degrees, yet it appears to be much warmer than indicated.

The steamship Massachusetts, Capt. Wood arrived at this port on Thursday last, with a detachment of the Voltigeur

SANTA ANNA - - The Clergy, and the Capital- We find in the Patria of yesterday,(says the N.O. Times) a very interesting letter from the city of Mexico, dated the 22nd ult. The writer says that everything was in the greatest state of confusion at the Metropolis. The men at the head of the Government knew not what was to be done, nor in whom to confide. Santa Anna, in an evil hour for his own popularity, persecuted an evil hour for his own popularity, persecuted a Minon; the latter who does not seem to be a man who will be trodden upon with impunity, wrote a defense of himself, which was published in the Republicano of the 16th and 17th. Ult. We gave a summary of Minon’s countercharges against Santa Anna, in the Commercial Times of the 11th inst. Their evident truth forcibly struck the minds of all, and on the Dictator’s arrival on the 19th, the leperos, or mob of the metropolis, assailed him with the foulest epithets. “Death to the traitor, who has sold us to the Yankis!” was shouted on all sides; and he was most ignominiously pelted with stories, by the very population that had formerly almost idolized him. The writer says he (Santa Anna) had taken his precautions, which enabled him to avoid a misfortune, which would have proved a blessing the hapless Mexican Republic. By the (illeg.) being killed by the infuriated leperos. Santa Anna escaped their vengeance, and shut himself up in his palace, the guard at which had to be considerably reinforced to prevent a successful attack. There he remained up the date of the letter secluded from all.-It was this unpopularity, no doubt, which led to his tendering his resignation of the Presidency- the place had suddenly become too hot to hold him.

THE PRESIDENCY.- The writer of this letter says that it is confidently believed in the metropolis that Gen. Herrera will be elected President, and that he will forthwith open negotiations with the Yankis.

CHINA, MEXICO, MAY 21st, 1847

My Dear Sir- An express is just starting for Camargo, and I avail myself of it to communicate to you, as a friend of Lieutenant Mahan, the information which will probably reach you before this, of the fatal meeting between him and Lieut. Munford, of the same regiment. I was present on the ground as the friend of Lieut. Mahan, and a more honorable meeting never took place.- They fought with muskets-advancing as they chose, they fired when within thirty yards of each other, both falling seriously wounded. Lt. Munford cannot survive, whilst Lieut. Mahan, although he received three several balls, is not considered mortally wounded, and is doing very well. A statement of the whole affair will appear in a short time, prepared by myself, and signed by all the parties on the field. I have only time to add that Lieut. Mahan has acted with a firmness and resolution which do him great credit, and his friends have nothing to fear, either for his character of for his life, as he is doing very well. They met on the 20th inst. At 6 p.m. Break this sad news to his family, and assure them that he shall receive every attention in my power to bestow; that he wants for nothing, and so long as he is with us shall not. He is now in my quarters, and my 1st lieutenant being a physician, every advantage is taken of any favorable symptom. Tender to his family and friends my assurances of sincere sympathy, and also of my determination to allow him to want for nothing which can add to his comfort or conduct to his speedy recovery. Do not allow any misstatement of this affair to become public, but, if necessary, show my letter to contradict them. By the first opportunity, I will write to his father, and forward to him and to you a statement of the whole affair, from which you will discern that Lieut. Mahan ha only acted as a gentleman, and as a man of honor is compelled to act when placed in such trying circumstances. He does no suffer any great deal of pain, and the Lieut. apprehends nothing very serious.

In great haste, your obliged friend.

Santa Anna’s letter of resignation.

The schooner Zenobia, Captain Brown, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 3rd June. The steamer Telegraph was to sail from Vera Cruz I two of three days.

By this arrival a copy of the American Eagle of the 2nd June was received in town, and through the kindness of a friend we have obtained the use of it. It contains Santa Anna’s letter of resignation, which we give below, as translated by the editors of that paper. Congress had not acted upon it at last accounts.

The Eagle says that this resignation was followed up by that of General Bravo, as Vice President. There is probably some confusion in this. As we understand it, the Vice Presidency was abolished to get rid of Gomez Farias, and has not been re-established. General Bravo, was recently in command at Puebla, and yet more recently was at the head of what is called the "Army of the Centre." He may have resigned this post.

The Eagle says that the election for President will take place on the 15th June, By this we presume is meant that the votes will then be officially counted, and the result declared. We have no further returns by this arrival, but the Eagle thinks Generals Herrera will be President.

General Scott reached Puebla on the 28th May, the day before General Twiggs arrived there. Everything was quiet in the city, our soldiers and the inhabitants being apparently on the best terms.

A small reconnoitering party of our troops had been met some twenty miles beyond Puebla, -They had encountered no enemy so far. The Mexicans are erecting works a short distance this side of the capital, but the Eagle treats them as unimportant and no likely to be completed.

The Eagle gives it as a report that Gen. Almonte is a prisoner, on an accusation of holding correspondence with General Scott.

Benj. Thomas, sergeant major of the 1st Infantry, died on Sunday, the 30th ult., in Vera Cruz, and was buried on Monday morning with military honors. The sergeant was a valuable officer, say the Eagle, and his demise was regretted by all who knew him.

It has been ascertained that only one man was killed with Col. Sowers. The imprudence of the colonel in venturing ahead of his party cost these two lives.

The report we have of the health of Tampico is very unfavorable. Many cases of yellow fever had occurred and they were on the increase. It is said, though we hope this is an exaggeration, that on the morning of the 2nd inst. Only one sergeant and two men out of Company E, Louisiana Volunteers, reported themselves for duty, the rest being sick.

A naval expedition against Tabasco, under then commodore in person, was talked of at Vera Cruz as about to start at once. The following vessels were mentioned as likely to compose it: The frigate Raritan, sloop of war John Adams, ship Germantown, the (illegible) the Spitfire (do,) the Scorpion, and the gunboats Bonita and Mahoncse. Should the sloop of war Albany arrive in time she would probably join in the expedition.

We will not detain the reader longer from the letter of Santa Anna:

MEXICO, May 29, 1847.

Your Excellency: Since my return to the Republic I have had but one grand and sacred object in view, which has solely occupied my mind –for which object the nation recalled me: it was the defense, the integrity, the independence of my country. My efforts were unlimited, and I worked incessantly for this object. On my arrival I found nothing –neither army nor resources. I succeeded in my exertions, finally, and procured both.

I gave the nation to understand that I was taking charge of its government, in a manifesto published on the 22d inst., in which I related the successes which have attended our arms up to my arrival in this capital, and also the motives which moved my return, and the benefits that might result from it. Arrived at the head of only part of an army, in the greatest destitution and disgrace, in order to reinforce this garrison, and entered with the full power to obtain everything that was necessary for its defense. So successful have I been that I can now with pride say, that the city of Mexico is provided with means of defense to resist all the efforts to subdue it which the enemy can now command.

I have always refused supreme power, except in cases of emergency, whereby the interests of the nation might be endangered. At present, circumstances require from me a sacrifice of all I possess, which sacrifices is even attended with danger and a gloomy prospect, besides disgrace attached to it: this is no less than the consecration of myself, by marching forward and setting at defiance the calumny and perfidy of my enemies, and with deeds of valor revenging myself against them for their venomous imputations. –This I am ready and willing to perform, if in any way the result thereof can benefit my beloved country. I am fearful, however, that such will not be the result, and I have come to the conclusion, that by holding the seat of the chief magistracy I will be fomenting impediments against the attachment of my most ardent wishes.

The enemies of my country have emissaries in every part of the Republic, whose artifices mislead and create distrust and calumny to such an extent that it is impossible to convince the Mexicans other than that I am an insuperable barrier to my country’s welfare, and particularly that my love of power will ever be a curse to its tranquility.
It is easy to perceive the reason why they spread such reports to my detriment—men who are afraid to defend the country which for peace, and are fearful that they will not enjoy it as long as I am at the head of the Government. They are well aware that my determination has been to put down the different parties which have endeavored to destroy one another, which, even now, have entirely forgotten the common danger, in order to be benefited by such division, hoping that a change may place them in power, and free them from their responsibility to the nation. The foreign enemy’s policy is to foment such a division; in order to obtain it, they have selected me as the most probably person by the ruin of whom it may be obtained. I am consequently a target for the shafts of all parties. Therefore, my position is full of danger; but I do not fear it. The difficulty lies in preventing me from doing what I could to save the Republic. The intrigues of a revolution are well known. On that account, the enemy are now advancing towards Puebla and Mexico, as they have been given to understand that a revolution would take place in the capital. With on act alone I can stop such a revolution, which I consider is the most important service I can render the Republic—that act is my present resignation as President pro tem. Of the Republic, with which my nation has honored me. I am fully persuaded that this resignation will save the country. I respectfully request the Sovereign Congress to accept immediately my resignation, and to declare its session, in order to appoint a person well qualified to discharge the above responsible office. I have discharged my duty towards my country as far as in my power. I have dedicated myself to it—my fortune and that of my family, as well as my own reputation—my blood has been spilt and my limbs lost in its defense; and now with pride I forever resign my public career, without fear of disgrace, and conscious that my services have been faithful and patriotic. I any part of the world where lot may place me, I can raise my head with pride, and with satisfaction carry a name that has never been stained with shame—but, on the contrary, they will see me a faithful and patriotic Mexican, who, in all his actions, has striven for the honor of being instrumental in elevating his nation to prosperity and honor.

Your Excellency will report the same to the Sovereign Congress, in order that it may accept of my resignation, for which I will remain yours respectfully, with the highest consideration. God and liberty.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

To their Excellencies the Secretaries of the Sovereign Congress.

June 22, 1847, REV64i15p4c3, The Army in Mexico

The Whig press have been filled with assaults upon the Administration, because, as they say no arrangement was made to supply the vacuum left in the armies of Mexico, by the withdrawal of the discharge volunteers. These bitter partisans have indeed gone so far as to charge that the design of the President was to leave General Taylor with a miserably small number of men, so as to confine him to a mere guard duty and deprive him of all opportunity of winning more laurels. It is to be regretted that the construction of the law in regard to the discharge of the volunteers should have given rise to such much embarrassment. It has been construed by the commanding generals in Mexico to require a discharge so long before the expiration of the twelve months enlistment as to insure to the volunteers abundant time to reach the United States within the period. The other, and to us more reasonable construction is, that the volunteers should be discharged at the end of the twelve months. This, we learn, was the construction put upon the law of enlistment by Washington and Jackson, and by the Administration which based upon construction is, that the volunteers should be discharged at the end of the twelve months. This, we learn, was the construction put upon the law of enlistment by Washington and Jackson, and by the Administration which based upon it their plans and estimates. Had the law been carried out under this view, the volunteers could have been retained in Mexico until their numbers could have been more that supplied by the new recruits.

But even as things are, the Whig press have attached so much importance to this point, and have dwelt so zealously upon the curious misrepresentations of the truth, that we deem it proper to re-publish the striking facts set forth in the Union:

Our attention has been called to an article published in the New York Courier and Enquirer of the 14th instant, in which it is charged upon the “Union” that it has misstated the amount of force of the armies under Major Generals Scott and Taylor, and that the actual strength of their columns will be much less than represented, &c.

It was stated in the “union,” that when the reinforcements which have been ordered my the War Department for Major Generals Scott and Taylor should all have reached their destination, those generals would have under their command—the former nearly 20,000, and the latter nearly 10,000 troops. On inquiry at the Adjutant General’s office today, we are confirmed in the correctness of the statements heretofore made in reference to the troops which have been provided for the armies in the field. The force under the orders of Major General Scott—exclusive of the twelve-months’ men, say 3,500—amounted, on the last of March, to upwards of 11,000 aggregate. Since that date, reinforcements of regulars (old and new regiments) to the number of 5,000 must, it is believed, have reached the seat of war in that quarter; which number, by the last of June, will be still further augmented by some 3,500-making the aggregate to: under the orders of Gen. Scott at that date, say 19,500; which includes the garrisons of captured towns, and is subject to a deduction on account of the casualties of the service during the last two months. On the other hand, however, Gen. Scott will be further reinforced by the quota of volunteers under the April calls, assigned by his command—some 2,000; and by further accessions of regular troops—say 2,500. The force provided for the main army in Mexico will not, we have reason to believe, be less than 20,000.

The measures taken by the War Department to reinforce the army under Gen. Taylor, we have said, will provide a force of at least 10,000, which, we have every reason to believe, will be realized.
Regular Troops

Fourteen companies, old regiments, (nine of artillery and five of cavalry) 1,200
10th regiment of infantry (10 companies) 866
13th regiment of infantry (6 companies) 469
16th regiment of infantry (10 companies) 1,097
3rd regiment of dragoon (5 companies) 400

When these regiments are completed to the establishment, the regular infantry will be increased to more than 3,000, which will make the regular force assigned to the "army of occupation" at least 4,500 men, old and new regiments.

Volunteer forces

The four regiments of volunteers from Massachusetts, Virginia, North Carolina, and Mississippi, when mustered into the service during the past winter and spring, amounted to 3,469; which no doubt, from what we can learn, has been considerably reduced by sickness and other causes. Deduct, say 15 per cent.-which would make that force now, probably, not to exceed 2,949, this, added to the regulars above, would make the present force under General Taylor 6,981.

The volunteers called out in April, assigned to the division of the army under Gen. Taylor, equal four regiments and two companies, which ought to give a force of at least 3,700 men. The regiments from Indiana and Ohio will soon be en route for the seat of war, as the call was promptly met in the quarter. The strength of the volunteers being raised, added to the present force, makes an aggregate of 10,508.

The above is exclusive of the Texas volunteers now in service, which it is known amount to more than 1,600 men. It will, therefore, be seen that the aggregate force under the command of Major General Taylor will be considerably beyond 10,000.

We know not, nor is it for us to say, what portions of the forces in the field will be fit for duty as the phrase is; and it is far from our purpose to magnify the strength of the army. We may say-what it is supposed everybody must know-that great allowance ought always be made, on account of sickness and other casualties, always incident to an army in the field, especially in a southern country like Mexico, during the unhealthy season of the year.

We lay the preceding statements, which we have derived from the highest official source, before our readers. Let us add, in justice to that source, that it states the truth, without regard to politics. Upon many points we are unfortunate enough to differ with the head of that bureau; but we have every confidence in his honor, his integrity, and his truth. In fact, there are the records in his possession; here are the muster rolls. He neither would nor can change their character. We may take up tomorrow the charges which have been made against us, for our past expositions of the strength of the army by the correspondents of the "New York Courier" and of the "Picayune," and the remarks made by their editors. Meantime, what must we think of the recklessness which charges us with misrepresentation, when this writer from the camp (in the "New York Courier and Enquirer") says thus?

"The twelve-months men being now about to be discharged, there will remain with Gen. Taylor, and under his command, the following troops:- 2,300 volunteers, 300 mounted Texans, and ten companies of regulars-making the whole number about 3,200 men. There have been allotted to him four of the new regiments, and a few of these troops are daily expected to arrive at Matamoras. Admitting that these regiments are full and here, it would then only make the force on this line about 6,100 men, and you can safely say, that 30 per cent of the new arrivals will be sick and unavailable."

Look at this statement about the Texas volunteers alone. We understand, from the best authority, that the force of Texas volunteers, now serving under Maj. Gen. Taylor, is composed as follows:

Six companies of twelve-month men, whose term of service does not expire until September and October next. Strength of the six companies, say 400.

June 25 1847, REv64i16p2c1, Later from Vera Cruz

Attack on a wagon train by a Mexican Guerilla Party-Thirty Americans supposed to be killed-Forty wagons destroyed-Death of Major Bosworth, Paymaster, U.S. Army.

The U.S. ship Massachusetts, Capt. Wood, arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the evening of the 11 inst. The Massachusetts brings over 155 sick and wounded soldiers, under charge of Dr. Tudor, besides the following passengers: Mr. Joseph Harrod, Dr. Tudor, U.S.A., Purser Bryan, of the navy, and Mr Bosworth and two servants.

The following deaths occurred on the Massachusetts:

C. Gaines, of the Mounted Rifles, and John Drew of company 1, 7th Infantry, died on board before the Massachusetts left Vera Cruz, and were sent on shore for interment on the 11th June. One the 1wth June, John Pope, of the Mounted Rifles, and John Smith, of company C, 7th Infantry, died at sea. On the 13th, J. F. Carson, South Carolina Volunteers, died. On the 14th, D. Scurry, South Carolina Volunteers, and H. Heck, 2nd Dragoons. On the 15th, L Grover, company E. Mounted Rifles

The vomito is represented as on the increase at Vera Cruz. We regret extremely to say that Paymaster Bosworth, who sailed from here only on the 18th ult. sickened and died in Vera Cruz of the vomita. His remains were brought back on the Massachusetts in charge of his brother.

Quite the most important intelligence brought by this arrival relates to an attack upon a large train by the Mexican guerrillas, which has been partially successfully. By the Fanny we learned that a train was to leave Vera Cruz on the morning of the 5th inst. for Puebla, under command of Lieut. Col. McIntosh. The train had in charge $225,000 in specie, of which sum one hundred thousand belonged to the Paymaster's Department, the remainder to the Quartermaster's. One hundred and twenty-five wagons and six hundred pack males were in the train, which was escorted by 800 troops.

The train left Vera Cruz on the night of the 4th inst. and Sunday the 6th, when it had advanced about twenty-five miles, it was attacked by a large party of guerrillas. The place was well selected for the purpose by the Mexicans, being represented as a defile broad enough for a single wagon only. It is said, too, that slight works had been thrown up by the Mexicans to obstruct our advance. The attack was made upon each extremity of the train and upon the centre at the same time, the principal point, however, being the wagons, which were supposed to contain the specie.

Private accounts represent that the attack was so far successful that forty of our wagons were destroyed, though not those containing the specie-two hundred mules loaded with subsistence were taken, and thirty of our men killed. The American Eagle of the 9th says our loss is variously estimated at from four to twenty, but private accounts, from responsible sources, give the loss as we have done, at thirty men.

The check was so severe that Col. McIntosh determined no to hazard an advance without reinforcements.- Our troops accordingly entrenched themselves behind their wagons, and despatches were sent off to Gen. Cadwalader at Vera Cruz. The general left on Monday evening, the 7th inst. With a force of about five hundred men and four howitzers.-Private accounts say further that on the 10th a part of the voltigeurs also left, with four howitzers, to join the train.

The Eagle represents that our troops received the attack with the utmost coolness, and that the enemy, being repulsed, fell back towards the Puente Nacional, which some suppose they may attempts to defend. No later news from the train had been received the morning of the 11th, the day the Massachusetts left. On the 10th a large mail was despatched to this port on the propeller Washington, which may be hourly expected.—Her letters may bring us further details.

No later news had been received from the army of Gen. Scott. The reason is obvious, for the present, at least, the communication has been entirely cut off. We do not regard this as at all alarming, for General Cadwalader will no doubt open a passage to Jalapa at once, but it indicates a necessity for some cavalry force upon the line to clear away the brigands which infest it, and who must have mustered in a greater force than had been anticipated to attack a train guarded by 810 troops.

But the audacity of these guerrillas does not stop here. They are entering Vera Cruz and stealing our horses. For several nights alarms had been created in the city by these predatory attempts. Private letters say that 60 horses were stolen from one pen in the immediate vicinity of the town. A regiment of Texas Rangers, it seems to us, would find ample scope for employment in the vicinity of Vera Cruz.

The steamers Palmetto and . . . (illigible) . . . arrived at Vera Cruz on the . . . (illigible) . . . inst. The schooner General Worth had also arrived with one company of . . . (illigible) . . . have arrived from New Orleans in search of a runaway slave. Her pursuit is represented as successful.

We await anxiously our letters by the Washington.

[BJM]
A new paper, called La Guerra, (The War) has been started in opposition to El Razonador, and it advocates Santa Anna’s principles strongly.

In El Republicano on the 28th May there is an article upon the defence of the Capital, and the propriety of removing the seat of Government into the interior. The editor urges upon the authorities to defend the capital to extremities, and says, that the work of erecting fortifications is going on actively. But this part of the article is not in his usual bold strain. From the tone of it, and from private letters from the Capital, which we have seen, we feel persuaded that little opposition to General Scott’s entrance into the city will be made. El Republicano urges strenuously that the seat of Government should at once be transferred. Then, should the Capital fall, it urges the Government will still exist, and form a centre of union and a rallying point. The Editor urges the point with such force, that we are persuaded he anticipated formidable opposition to General Scott’s advance.

In an earlier article upon the subject of the defence of the Capital, El Republicano sets down the troops available for the purpose as follows:
The garrison then in the Capital, (the 26th of May,) was not far from 10,000 men, while they were to arrive, says the Editor, from the State of Guanajuato 3,000, from Michoacan, 2,000 and from Queretaro 1,000. We infer from allusions made to an article in El Razonador, that the latter paper ridicules the idea of making any defence of the city.

About 4,000 men, volunteers or national guards, quartered at the barrack of San Domingo, belonging to Gen. Urage’s command, were ordered to return to their occupations until they would be instructed otherwise, as the Government had not the means to support them.

The Liberal Verdadero, of Guanajuato, says that great preparations are going on there to supply the army with several pieces of artillery, from 4 to 12 pounders. All other arms were undergoing repairs and tailors and women were active in the arrangement of uniforms.

An American prisoner in Mexico writes on the 28th, that Gen. Scott was expected to enter the Capital within eight days, and he did not anticipate any formidable opposition. Gen. Worth found in Puebla a large quantity of tobacco belonging to the Government.

Whilst exercising supreme power, Santa Anna, on the 22nd ult. directed that every prosecution against military persons should be at once set at large. The services of such men are thought to be of sufficient importance to the Government to justify this clemency. It looks like an attempt of Santa Anna to strengthen himself with the soldiery.

It is thought that the resistance anticipated at Rio Frio has been much exaggerated, as the Mexican papers say nothing of it. And speak only of the fortifications in the immediate vicinity of the capital. They also state that an advance party of Gen. Worth had reconnoitered the road as far as Rio Frio.

Five hundred infantry, perfectly armed and equipped, arrives in the city of Mexico on the 24th ult. from Queretaro. They belonged to the National Guard of that state and were sent to aid in the defence of the capital.

The “valiant” Ampudia has published an address to the nation, vindicating is conduct at Monterey.

We are at a loss to understand (says the Picayune) the various movements among the military chieftains of Mexico. We have the resignations of Santa Anna, Bravo and Rincon and the arrest of Almonte, all within the space of eight or ten days, and the departure of other generals to remote points and Santa Anna during the time was exercising full sway, and extending every indulgence to the soldiery. It looks as though parties were marshalling their forces for a struggle for power among themselves, rather than to defend their country against a foreign foe.

June 25 1847, REv64i16p4c3, British Opinions

The great battle of Cerro Gordo has furnished new food for the London press. Of course, borrowing their arguments from the Whig journals here, they continue to denounce our country for “the slight cause for which this war was entered upon by the authorities at Washington”- the “trivial pretext” upon which an “immense amount of misery has been inflicted upon an unoffending people,” for the “severance of the province of Texas” by U.S. agents, which engendered hostilities in the hearts of Mexicans- and for “the brigandage of unauthorized attack” which no excuse “can convert into a legitimate war.” But we do not intend to refute these comments upon the causes of the war. As long as our own Whig press takes sides against their own Government, it is not to be wondered at that British journals, in their jealously and dread of Republican progress, should seize the occasion to vituperate and depreciate our conduct in the eyes of the world. But we do mean to refer to the tribute which the London press if forced, by the brilliant events of the war, to pay to American military skill and valor. It is not long since we quoted the remarks of the London papers, sneering at the puny efforts of our “rabble militia” to assail and conquer the myrmidons of Mexico. The rapid succession of victories, however, capped with the triumph of Cerro Gordo, have forced the London critics to swallow their words of disparagement, and extorted from them a compliment to American power and military energy.

... (illegible)... can campaign as one in which "conquests bring no particle of credit, and fighting no prospect of peace, and in which it is equally impossible to applaud the victors or commiserate the vanquished," it is compelled to confess that "there is not much doubt, but that the Americans can march to Mexico, and could have done so long ago."

"The Americans have already got all the sea coast, the customs the chief forts, and the chief towns, and while we write, they have probably got the metropolis of their victims. They have dispersed their armies, captured their generals and destroyed their materials, but it is confessed that "the war seems about as far from its close as when it started and it is now to be seen what force will be brought to bear against a people whose self-sufficiency suffers by no discomfiture, whose delusions are dispelled by no defeats, and who can dispense with a government, a capital, or a coast, as easily as with character or credit."

The London Chronicle speaks still more emphatically of the triumphs of American prowess and military skill:

"As far as the success of their military operations is concerned, nothing more conclusive can be conceived than the late movements of the United States generals against the forces that the Mexicans have been able to oppose them in the field. It is impossible to read the accounts of these successive actions without something like a feeling of contempt for the beaten party, so strong an effect do the triumphs of military prowess exercise on the mind. Almost despite of the claims of justice, and of compassion for the countless and unoffending thousands whose fates are inextricably bound up with those of the beaten troops, one is tempted to exclaim, that they who know so on how to defend a country are not worthy to possess one... The prize of empire-so all history tells us-bears inscribed upon it the legend... (illegible)...

They (the Mexicans) forget "in their imaginative gallantry" that a thousand Bayards could never break a modern square of infantry, nor resist a modern charge, if they had not themselves passed through the hands of the drill-sergeant. They will not trust to their best allies, their deserts and their yellow fever, but must needs fight great battles, which invariably terminate in one result-disgrace and defeat. The courage displayed by the Anglo-Americans throughout the action is unquestionable, and yet it does not appear to have been a bloody one on either side."

In the following passages, the Chronicle pays the highest compliment to the energy and foresight of General Scott, and the enduring valor of his army:

"The opinion entertained by the United States officers of the powers of resistance of their opponents may be inferred from General Scott’s orders issued to the various Generals of division on the day preceding the action. Never, in the directions issued by any of the greatest European commanders, do we remember to have seen a greater confidence manifested in what must be the result of his operations. Success is assumed on every point, and the direction to be taken by each division, after forcing each point of the Mexican entrenchment’s, is as clearly marked out as though the result had already taken place. We are bound to say, that the unlimited confidence placed by General Scott in the troops under his command, has been justified by the event. His victory at Cerro Gordo appears to have been by far the most brilliant affair of the war. He describes himself as being absolutely embarrassed with the results of his own success-prisoners of war, heavy ordinance, small arms and accoutrements. Undoubtedly, if military resistance be the only obstacle to be apprehended by the Anglo American Generals in their advance upon Mexico, we shall expect shortly to hear of the fall of that city, as we have just heard of that of Vera Cruz."

The London press profess to feel an anxious hope for the termination of this "disastrous war," which, if the conquest of the country be aims at, "this generation will not see accomplished."

However, we may reprobate the charges brought against us, of extravagant designs of dominion, we cannot deny that there is some force in the following remarks of the Chronicle. If the Whig press had taken the same reasonable view, and not given hopes to the public enemy, peace would long since have been established:

"Perhaps the best thing to be wished for in the interest of the Mexicans themselves, is that the success of the United States Generals should be still more rapid, and decisive than it has hitherto been, in order that they may be driven to make terms at once, and by a definite sacrifice purchase the retreat of their invaders."

June 29 1847, REv64i17p2c, Highly Important from Mexico

Arrival of the Steamship Galveston.

... (illegible)... Fights with the Guerrillas-One hundred Mexicans killed and wounded, and forty or fifty Americans-General Cadwallader attacked by a large party-Battle at the National Bridge.

The following highly important intelligence was communicated to us by Lieutenants Floyd and McWilliams, of the 2nd Pennsylvania Volunteers, who came over on the steamship Galveston, this morning at 6 o'clock. On the 8th a small recruiting party, together with some citizens and disbanded soldiers, in number about 150, with 75 armed men, and thirty mounted, left Puebla for Vera Cruz. This party was under command of Captain Bainbridge of 3rd Artillery. On leaving Jalapa, and getting near Cerro Gordo, this party was informed that it would not be prudent to go through the pass as there were about 4,000 Mexicans in the chaparral along the pass. Previous to this, two officers who had gone to the rear of the train were fired at from the chaparral. At the mouth of the pass, the party was organized and marched through without meeting an enemy. Arrived at the Bridge that evening. Whilst they were bivouacked on the other side of the bridge, being so fatigued that they were unable to furnish a guard, they were informed that some persons were barricading the bridge. A guard was then stationed between the bridge and the encampment, to prevent the party being surprised. At this time signal lights on the ridges and cliffs were distinctly seen.

Before daylight, the sick and wounded of this little party were removed to Santa Anna’s hacienda, a quarter of a mile from the bridge. A scouting party was then sent out, and also a party to clear the bridge, which was done without any opposition. The main body of the army then passed over the bridge. Every thing appearing then to be safe and all danger being passed, Lieut. McWilliams and Mr Frazer . . . (illegible) . . . side of the bridge. Just as they were entering the bridge, a party of about twenty-five Mexicans appeared on the ridge, and fired several volleys on them. The wagon master and four others who were passing the bridge, were fired on and the whole five were killed and a wagon was captured of no great value.

After the fire had ceased a party of lancers appeared on the bridge and seemed to be preparing to charge, but seeing that Captain Bainbridge’s party were preparing to receive them, they wheeled their horses and galloped off.

Captain Bainbridge resumed his march in good order, followed by 400 or 500 of the lancers, who hung upon his rear and flanks for four or five miles, but at a respectable distance. Thus hemmed in, this little party pursued its way until it arrived at the Pass of La Volta, where Col. McIntosh had encamped with his large train. The Mexicans who had attacked Bainbridge’s party were the same who had compelled Col McIntosh to halt and wait for reinforcements. The party remained that night in McIntosh’s camp, and during the whole time the Mexicans kept a continual fire on the camp, approaching with great boldness very near . . . (illegible) . . .

On the next day Capt. Bainbridge’s party resumed its march to Vera Cruz, being joined by Capt. Duperu’s dragoon, who were sent back to get their horses. This company with its gallant captain, had behaved very handsomely in the attack on McIntosh’s camp. Its gallantry was the theme of universal praise and admiration in the army. Indeed, it was generally admitted that Col. McIntosh’s command was saved by the gallantry of Duperu’s party. Bainbridge’s party continued their march to Vera Cruz, where they arrived in safety. In the meantime, Duperu’s party, having a long return train to guard, and being threatened by a large body of lancers, halted at Santa Fe, where they were charged by a greatly superior force, which they gallantly repulsed, killing many of the enemy, and suffering no loss themselves. It was said, however, that some of our wagons were cut off and the drivers taken prisoners. Capt. Duperu arrived safely in Vera Cruz, having lost three killed and three wounded.

On the day Capt. Bainbridge’s party left McIntosh’s camp, Gen. Cadwallader had arrived, with a force of 800 men and two howitzers. The two commands were then joined, making, in all, about 1600 men, with two howitzers, under command of Gen. Cadwallader, and pushed on towards the National Bridge.

On approaching the bridge Gen. Cadwallader occupied the heights commanding the bridge from which the enemy had fired on Capt. Bainbridge’s party, where he was attacked by a large force of the Mexicans, posted in the ridges and chaparral, and some hard fighting was carried on for several hours, the Mexicans losing more than 100 men, and Gen. Cadwallader losing some 15 killed and some thirty or forty wounded. The Mexicans were repulsed the bridge was successfully passed by Gen. Cadwallader, who was on . . .(illegible) . . .

There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the army, respecting the conduct of the command which had charge of this train. There will be a court of inquiry into the subject.

The garrison at Jalapa has been broken up, by order of Gen. Scott, and all the sick and Government stores have been sent to Perote castle, so that this line of communication is entirely closed. Gen. Scott has had a road opened from Perote to Taxpan, the distance being less than one half that from Vera Cruz to Perote, and Taxpan being a healthier place.

The success of the attack on McIntosh’s command has given great confidence to the guerrillas, who are swarming in great numbers through the country, and attacking all our parties, large and small.

It was chiefly owing to the gallantry of Major Bennett, the Paymaster, that the specie wagons in McIntosh’s party were saved. He was I one of them himself when the wagon was attacked, and fought like a tiger.

We are pained to hear that the fine charger sent out by the citizens of New Orleans to Col. Harney was captured by the Mexicans. Their daring was so great that they even lariated a woman who was in the wagon, but she was rescued by our men after some hard fighting.

There are about 1000 men in camp at Vera Cruz.

Gen. Shields was at Jalapa and was about to leave for the U. States, when he received an order from Gen. Scott to join him at Puebla.
There are no preparations to defend any point between Puebla and the Capital. All the odds and ends of the army are collected in the city, about 20,000 in number, but poorly armed, and of miserable material. There was a small . . . (illigible) . . . at the City of Mexico, which was easily put down by Gen. Bastamento. It was got up by factions of the peace party and of Gomez Farias party. Their cry was “down with Santa Anna!” but the President still maintains his power and influence. Congress has refused to accept his resignation.

We have about 6000 men at Puebla, under command of Worth and Quitman.

Gen. Scott will remain at Puebla until he is reinforced. Gen. Bravo is in command of the army at the Capital.

Santa Anna has published quite a flaming account of the affair between him and Gen. Worth, at Amozoque. The truth is that he had a large force of cavalry, which was attacked by Col. Duncan’s battery and Maj. Bonneville of 6th Infantry. He did not wait to receive more than one volley, from which, however, he sustained a heavy loss, and then fled in the wildest disorder towards the Capital.

Since the above was written, we have learned that, in the affair between Ge. Calwallader and the Mexicans, at the national bridge, the company of Lieut. Blaky, (of Richmond Virginia) of the newly raised voleigruers, with two howitzers, charged the barricades and swept them with a few discharges from the howitzers. In passing through, however, Lieut. Blakey received a heavy fire from the enemy on the ridge which commands the bridge, by which he sustained a loss of one killed and four wounded, the Lieutenant himself being wounded in the leg. They also lost several horses. The heights were then charged on the right and left of the road and gallantly carried, the enemy flying from before them in great confusion. When Gen. Cadwallader had passed the bridge, he was attacked by a large party of guerrillas, who kept up a continued fire on his men for a long distance. At Cerro Gordo it was thought, from the reports of heavy firing, that the enemy had made a stand in great numbers, though no apprehension was entertained for the safety of Gen. Cadwallader’s command, who was moving in a bold and steady manner, the only way to deal with the Mexicans. Capt. Gates company of 3rd dragoons being sent by Gen. Cadwallader to the rear, to reinforce the guards of the train, were attacked by a large force of Lancers, whom they repulsed with considerable loss.

There is much sickness at Vera Cruz, but very little in the Castle. Col. Wilson publishes a card in the Eagle pronouncing the statement of Col. Mata, that La Vega had been confined in the guard-house of the Castle, to be false.

The little party, who cut their way from Jalapa to Vera Cruz, and so narrowly escaped the many perils that surrounded them express themselves under the greatest obligations to Capt. Bainbridge, Mr. Karns and Adj. Dutton for their coolness, prudence and judgement in conducting them in safety through their many dangers.

Gen. Cadwallader is much praised for the energy and promptness of his movements to the rescue of McIntosh and for the bravery and skill with which he scattered the swarms of guerrillas, grown confident by the success of their previous enterprise.

Gen. Scott was at Puebla at the last accounts. The editors of El Arco Iris had received dates from the Capital up to the 23 of June, Santa Anna had a second time sent in his resignation of the Presidency. Congress had not, however, up to that time, accepted it. He had also made a formal renunciation of his office as Commander-in-Chief of the army; which, like his resignation of the Presidency, remained in abeyance-Congress not having acted upon either.

Rejon, and five other generals, whose names are not given, had been arrested and sent to the different States for confinement.

The gallant Capt. Walker has commenced his work of retaliation on the guerrillas. On the morning of the 8th inst. He started with his command from Perote on an expedition some distance into the interior. During the expedition, he succeeded in capturing nineteen guerrillas and an alcalde. He has employed them in cleaning the streets and sinks.

A letter had been received in Vera Cruz on the 15th inst. previous to the sailing of the Galveston, direct from the headquarters of Gen. Scott, stating that Gen. Scott had issued orders for the removal of the Government from Vera Cruz to Tuxpan. This change was said to be, in part, owing to the sickness I Vera Cruz, and because communication could be more easily kept up between Tuxpan and Puebla than between the latter place and Vera Cruz. All the public stores in Vera Cruz would, in that case, be removed to Tuxpan, and troops, only sufficient to garrison the place, left at Vera Cruz. The activity displayed among the different vessels in the harbor of Vera Cruz, in shifting the cargoes from vessels having but small portions of Government property on board, into other nearly full, with the evident intention of a move, would go far to confirm the rumor of a change in the base of operations.

Threatened attack on Tampico-Arrival of General Scott at Rio Fria-Proposals for Peace.

We issued an extra on Sunday, giving the exciting news of which we were put in possession . . . (illigible) . . .
June, touching at Tampico on the morning of the 17th, and Brazos St. Jago on the afternoon of the 18th.

On the night of the 12th June, a demonstration was made by the Mexicans in Tampico to rise. The American authorities, however, had timely information of the contemplated movement, and to suppress it, if attempted, called out the troops, who lay on their arms all night. There was then no demonstration of revolt made.

On the 15th inst. a party of Mexicans lancers attacked the outposts at Tampico and drove the sentinels into the city. On the 16th a party of rancheros attacked the pilot station and were greeted by a discharge from half a dozen muskets, when they retreated.

The barque, Mary of Baltimore, put into Tampico on the 16th inst. for supplies and repairs.-She was bound for Vera Cruz with 200 volunteers, which she landed at Tampico.

The most important part of the intelligence brought by this arrival is the flattering prospect of peace. Capt. Wood, of the Jas. L. Day, informs us that information had been received at Vera Cruz before the Day left, that Gens. Scott and Worth, with the main body of the army, had advanced as far as Rio Frio, without opposition, and were met at that place by a deputation from the capital, with propositions for peace. The exact tenor of the propositions were unknown; they were, however, of such a nature, that Gen. Scott refused to accept them, and was determined to push on his forces to the capital. From the deep anxiety felt by the new government, if the term government can be applied to any party or power in Mexico, to stay the march of our forces on the capital, it was thought that further concessions would be made to Gen. Scott before he took up his line of march from Rio Frio.

The towboat Mary Kingsland, which arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, touched at the Brazos and left there on the 13th inst. She brought over Capt. Conner, of the Texas Volunteers, Capt. Wm. B. Archer and Lieut. Pegram, of the Virginia Volunteers; Lieut. Phaw, of the North Carolina Volunteers; Mr. Atwood, the artist; and the following officers of the 2nd Indiana Regiment, with six companies of the same, making 360 men:

Col. Bowles; Lieut. Col. Hadden; Majors Cravens and Mooney; Capt. Sanderson, Dennis, Davis, Briggs, Rousseau, Kimball, Graham and Young; Surgeon Walker; Lieuts. Rice, Loud, Tele, Rose, Cagle, Shanks, Haggatt, Burwell, Stropes, Davis, Schoonover, Kemple, Hostet, Beerfield, Erwin, Pennybacker, Pennington, Payntle, Epperdon and Hagan.

Mr. H. W. Pierce also came passenger on the Mary Kingsland, having in charge the remains of three of the first Mississippi Regiment.

By this arrival we learn something more of the deplorable duel in the Virginia Regiment which we published in our paper of the 1st inst. Since which time we had not till now been able to learn a word more of the affair. The parties engaged in it were Lieut. Mahan of Capt. Bankhead’s company, and Lieut. Munford, of Capt. Carrington’s company. The latter died immediately, being shot through in several places. Lieut. Mahan was alive at last accounts from him, but it was thought could not survive, having been shot directly through the body. Further particulars are given in our correspondent’s letter.

The Flag of the 9th inst. gives, upon the authority of Capt. Benedict, of the schooner Madonna, which had just arrived at the Brazos, the following account of the wreck of the brig Mobile, bound from New York for Brazos Santiago, with 180 troops of the 10th Regiment U.S. Infantry, under Capt. Andrews, of Buffalo, N.Y.

During a strong breeze from the Southward, on the night of the 23rd ultimo, the above-named brig was driven ashore on Orange Keys, Florida coast—her masts were cut away, and every exertion made to ease her, but she soon bilged and settled down, the sea making a complete breach over her. About forty of the troops took to the boats and reached the Keys—the boats were dashed to pieces, which cut off all further communication between the vessel and Keys, rendering the condition of both parties extremely dangerous. Such was the situation of the wreck on the morning of the 21st, when the schooner Madonna, Captain Benedict, bound from Philadelphia to the Brazos with Government stores, discovered it, and at the risk of losing his own vessel Capt. B. bore up to the rescue. At imminent peril and with great exertion, he succeeded in reaching and rescuing the men who were on the Keys, and was proceeding to render what assistance he could to those on the wreck, when the bark Alabama, from Liverpool to Havana, hove into sight, and by hoisting signals and firing guns, she was induced to come to anchor about five miles off. The troops, with their arms, ammunition and supplies, were then taken from the wreck by Captain Benedict, and placed in safety on the Alabama, which vessel proceeded with them to Havana, whence they will doubtless be reshipped to their destination.-The Madonna was got under way, and reached the Brazos on Friday last, (the 4th inst.,) 15 days from New York.
This detachment of troops has since reached the Brazos from Havana and encamped near the mouth of the river.

Col. E. G. W. Butler, of the 3rd Dragoons, arrived at Matamoras on the 10th inst.

The Flag corrects its statement that Capt. Rice Garland’s company of Rangers has been disbanded.

We have several acts of brutality recorded in the Flag. In one case a party of miscreants-Americans, we are pained to say—insulted a Mexican woman in her own house, and killed her husband, who interposed to save her. One of the party is in custody.

The proprietor of the Resaca House in Matamoras was robbed of 1,500 dollars on the 10th May.

A man by the name of Simmons, in the employ of the Quartermaster, was shot on the 7th May by the guard, who interposed to save Simmons’s wife from a beating by her husband.

Monterey, Mexico, May 30, 1847

When I wrote you last, we were all full of the expedition to San Luis, and active preparations were making for a march at an early period, but now everything is knocked in the head. General Scott has thrown a bombshell into this division of the forces, which will utterly preclude the possibility of General Taylor’s advancing for many weeks, and probably will put an end to the expedition. Seven of the ten regiments have received orders to repair to Vera Cruz and join General Scott.

The 2nd Mississippi Regiment and Capt. Fairfax’s company of Virginia volunteers probably entered Saltillo this morning. I passed them in camp about ten miles this side of that place yesterday afternoon, the men all pretty well beat out by the march, the road, being a terribly hard and rough one. Two companies of North Carolina volunteers and one of Virginia volunteers, Capt. Harper’s left last night for Saltillo, and the 2nd Battalion of Virginians, who are expected up from China in a few days, will immediately proceed to the same place, I regret to be compelled to state that a most unfortunate and bloody affray has occurred in that battalion between Lieuts. Munford and Mahan. A quarrel occurred which resulted in a challenge from Lieut. Mahan, which was accepted and each party left to the selection of his own weapons; the meeting to take place in one hour after the challenge was received. The parties met, accompanied by friends, and were armed with muskets, loaded with buckshot, and pistols. The distance agreed upon was one hundred yards, each party to advance and fire at will. Each man advanced about ten yards and took aim, but recovered and advanced about fifteen paces further, when both parties fired at the same moment and both fell, mortally wounded. Lieut. Munford died very soon after, and no hopes were entertained for the recovery of Lieut. Mahan. There was also a disturbance occasioned by some of the men refusing to obey orders and be placed under arrest, in which some of the officers were roughly handled, but they succeeded in reducing the ruffianly fellows to subordination. Mescal was the cause.

There is a good deal of sickness here, but not of a serious character, and but few deaths have taken place.

Adios, J. E. D.

MONTEREY, JUNE 1, 1847.

Although we cannot advance upon San Luis, it is thought there may be some skirmishing on the road from here to Camargo, Urrea having again plucked up courage, become tired of masterly inactivity, and being now at the head of a large force of lancers. It has been reported that he was at Tula, but the report was not credited; but I was yesterday informed at headquarters, that positive information had been received that Urrea was at the head of 4000 cavalry this side of Victoria. It is probable that the force is over estimated. If the gentleman should show himself, I suspect the old general will make another push to take him. A few days ago he might have made a very pretty little speculation, as a large amount of specie was brought up.

Talking of specie, and American, who has been doing business in Zacatecas for some years, arrived here a few days ago with $160,000 in Mexican dollars of this year’s coinage. He converted his property into hard cash, and succeeded in smuggling it out of the country. Here he obtained drafts on New Orleans from Paymaster Hunter.
I wrote you on the 30th ult. and my letter stated that Col. Hays was on his way hither with a full regiment of Texas Rangers, but upon inquiry, it turns out that he only has five companies of the same regiment that Henry McCulloch came out with, and as they were enlisted for six months only and came out under Col. Curtis's 50,000 call, of course he cannot be received. The Missouri volunteers did not succeed in forming the company of cavalry they expected, the sound of home being too sweet. They had the positive assurance of G. H. Taylor that he would gladly receive as many as were disposed to re-enlist but they backed out. There may be two companies raised out of the Arkansas cavalry, but I very much doubt whether it can be done.

Four companies of the first battalion Virginia volunteers marched into town from China this morning, Capt. Bankhead's company being left behind to take care of a few sick to rejoin the regiment as soon as possible. Lieut. Mahan, who was shot in the duel which I mentioned in my last, was still alive but no hopes entertained of his recovery. A short time since a party of about thirty armed Mexicans were brought in by a company of Virginians, and after undergoing an examination were disarmed and released, the alcalde giving security that they should no again be found under arms. There are about one hundred and thirty of the regiment on the sick list, but there are few of them dangerously ill. About twenty of them are to be discharged and will go home under charge of Lieuts. Allen and Pegram, who go home on recruiting service. A volunteer named Daniel Harmon, of Capt. Preston's company, Virginia volunteers, died day before yesterday.

The abandonment of the San Luis expedition on account of the withdrawal of the troops, is still the topic of conversation and a cause of universal regret. I believe Gen. Taylor freely admits the necessity of Gen. Scott's having more troops and speedily, and can only regret that a sufficient number of troops have not been forewarned. Now the very commencement of the campaign the troops have been sent out in dribbles and operations of a vigorous character prevented from this cause. Well, we shall see what we shall see. The impression seems to prevail here, to some extent that Mexico is disposed for peace. It all grows out of the statement in N. O. Delta, that the British Minister had received an application for mediation on the part of his Government from the Mexican Government. There is no news at all here.

VERA CRUZ, MAY 9TH, 1847

Eds. Delta: The train which left here the day before yesterday for the army, with an escort of 800 men, was attacked five miles from the walls of Vera Cruz by 1,500 lancers and rancheros—several men killed and 90 mules captured, in face of the whole detachment. The train was stretched out so long that it was impossible for so small a body of men to protect the whole line, assailed as it was on the extreme rear by a compact body of 1,500 lancers. An express came I the same night to Gov. Wilson for reinforcement. One hundred and fifty dragoons started out to their relief, they had hardly got out of sight of Vera Cruz before they in their turn were assailed by a large troop of lancers. They succeeded, however, in cutting their way through to the train, after suffering some little loss. These fellows had undoubtedly been apprized of the starting of this train and the $300,000 which goes with it. The/They have become so daring now that they actually come within sight of the city. Murders are committed within sight of the very walls, and no means whatever are adopted to bring the criminals to punishment. No example has been made to strike terror into them. Affairs are managed badly here, I am afraid. Energy—energy—we want, but energy we have not.

Some of the officers from Anton Lizardo have just arrived in the steamer Vixen. From them I gather this information: They left Alvarado yesterday morning; the old priest of that place had, a few moments before their leaving received a letter from his brother in the city of Mexico, which he read to them, to the effect, that Herrera's election would take place on the 20th of this month; the issue is peace or war; he is supported by the united Church party in Mexico. The letter states, that a continuance of the war will be 'the downfall of the Church'; that the enemy have cut off all sources of revenue to the Government; that it cannot be carried on without a sacrifice of the Church property, and it behooves them to unite with the peace party and put an end to the war; that immediately on Herrera's accession to power, propositions of peace will be made to our Government, and the writer doubts not but that peace will be concluded in a short time afterwards.

The writer of this letter is a priest of great distinction, and I place more reliance on this news than any that has yet reached us, as the officers inform me that the information they have received from him, from time to time relating to the affairs of the capital, have, in all cases, proved correct. Since the first occupation of Alvarado, to the present time, they have kept up a constant communication with the City of Mexico, and have ever found information through this source to be most reliable. Again I assure you that I pace great confidence in this news.

The squadron had all . . . (illigible) . . . Tabasco. A French merchant had arrived at Tlacotalpam, from Tabasco, just before the Vixen fell, who reports that they had determined to station forces all along the banks of the river, and fire at the Americans as they go up. They have about 2000 good troops (i.e. for Mexicans.) Com Perry will land about 1000 sailors and marines to oppose this force. The old Commodore will lead the storming party in person. He leaves behind the two old captains this time; he thinks, I suspect, that he can get along better with the young commanders as leaders of detachments. The young officers have every confidence in the old Commodore as their leader. He cares no more for bullets than does Old Rough and Ready.
The officers speak in high terms of the gallantry of some of the Commanders of the squadron.

There are some dashing fellows among them. Buchana, Breese, McKenzie, McCluny, Adams, and Bigclow—where can you find a nobler set of fellows? And the younger ones are the boys to follow, and go ahead, too, if they find their leaders are all laggard. Success to them all.

Yours truly
J.D.J.

Far be it from our intention, we assure the Republican to avow the doctrine that the President “can do no wrong,” or that his acts should not be rigorously enquired into. But, now that we are engaged in war, and that it is of vital importance to its successful prosecution and to a speedy and permanent peace, that the whole public mind would be cordially united, and that the whole nation should have but one heart and soul for its glorious termination, we contend, that these fierce assaults upon the justice and policy of the war, these charges of “weakness and wickedness” upon those who are by the Constitution clothed with its management, are ill-timed and mischievous, and in the strong language of the able and philosophic “Pike,” in the Union, are “a blow at the nation itself, while grappling in deadly strife with its foe. It is a decided encouragement to that foe for prolonging the conflict, and going on with his efforts […]. The one course cannot be pursued without endangering the other. The separation is impossible; and it this be the liberty of the press, it only shows how an engine of great good may be turned to public evil.”

It is not now for the first time, that the causes of war have been denounced by the Whig press. All remember the violent struggle that occurred upon the passage of the war bill – how the Whigs assailed the President as having himself produced the war, for the most miserable personal or political objects – how it was stigmatized as the “President’s war.” Still, the law was passed, by a majority of Democrats and Whigs, recognizing the existence of the war, not as produced by the President, but as having been begun by Mexico herself. The whole country acknowledged the justice and wisdom of the measure, and volunteers flocked by thousands to the standard of their country. This in itself is the strongest proof that the Administration had not brought on the war in the opinion of the American people.

But, says the Republican, “will the Enquirer deny that it was the march to that point [the Rio Grande] which provoked hostilities, the invasion of a territory which the Mexicans considered their own, and which, at the best, must be admitted to be debatable ground? If the American forces had remained at Corpus Christi, it is probable that not a single hostile gun would have been fired, that millions of treasure would have been saved, and hundreds of valuable lives, more precious than gold, been preserved to their country and their homes. Was the order to leave that point, and plant our banners on the Rio Grande, doing every thing to ward off the evil day?”

We dissent entirely from such conclusions. – We are satisfied that the Mexican rulers had resolved upon the reconquest of Texas, long before the march of our troops to the Rio Grande and commented the war, not because we occupied what the Republican calls “at best, debatable ground,” but because we had dared to form an union with Texas – a republic which had exhibited, in the languaged [sic] of Mr. Webster, (an authority not to be contemned by the Republican,) “from the time of the battle of San Jacinto, in April, 1836, to the present moment the same external signs of [….] quite as much stability of government – practically free and independent, acknowledged as a political sovereignty by the principal powers of the world, no hostile foot finding rest within her territory for six or seven years and Mexico her self refraining for all that period from any further attempt to re-establish her own authority over that territory.”

We know that the Whig press looked upon the annexation of Texas as a “gross usurpation of the Constitution,” and as giving sufficient justification to Mexico to make war, and the result shows that Mexico followed the advice. But whether Texas was rightfully or wrongfully annexed, the great measure was achieved by the American people, an the young State came under the wing of the American Eagle. We received her “ for better, for worse;” she consenting to share with us the blessings and the dangers of the Union, and we giving to hr a solemn pledge, that we should preserve and protect her in her full power and extent, against “a world in arms.” Even putting aside, against the historical fact that Texas originally extended to the Rio Grande the circumstance that she had solemnly fixed her limits by legislation at that river, and that she had been recognized with those metes and boundaries as a free and independent State, by the great nations of Europe and ourselves, imperatively demanded of us that we should throw our protection over her whole soil and citizens, as claimed by herself. Most treacherous and cowardly would it have been for us to have violated the conditions "nominated in the bond" of union, and suffered her territory to be overrun and her citizens and property to be murdered and desolated by her bitter foe. The Mexican rulers had vowed vengeance against us- had declared their intention to regain by conquest the whole of Texas up to the Sabine – had refused to negotiate a peace with the United States, and had marched an army to the Rio Grande. Would it not have been absurd and criminally negligent in our Government to have suffered that army to cross over into Texas, seizing our soil and murdering our citizens, without the least resistance on our part? Opposed as we are to war, we cannot see how our Government could have acted differently, and not justly incur the charge of dishonorable and guilty apathy.

But admit the truth of all the Whig press say in regard to the causes of this "flagrantly unjust, unreasonable and destructive war" – admit that the President had himself waged war for his own wicked purposes – admit that it is an "unholy, damnable, abhorred, accused and infamous war," in the chaste and patriotic words of the Whig Ohio Congressmen Delano, and the Whig New York Tribune; or, in the language of the National Intelligencer, that our gallant officers and soldiers are "lawless men" engaged in "rapine" – admit all this, and we ask what good purpose can be attained by the constant iteration of assaults upon the Administration, and upon the justice an policy of the war? Truly, the president has already been abused roundly enough, and the war itself stigmatized in sufficiently violent terms. Let us first fight it out, gain our just demands, and an honorable and substantial peace – and then the Whig press may, with some show of propriety, let loose their amathemas. Then will be the time to scrutinize the conduct and motives of the Administration – then the Representatives of the people may order a searching investigation of the whole subject, and we mistake the President if he does not manfully meet the ordeal, and lay before the world the reasons and motives for all that he has been called upon to do, in obedience to his aworn obligations to the Constitution and the people.

Can any one doubt the impolicy [sic] and mischief of the daily assaults upon the justice of the war, and what the Whigs call, the "imbecility, weakness and wickedness" of the Executive? Can any one fail to see that such proceedings are calculated to arouse in the Mexican rulers hopes of success from divisions among ourselves? Not long since, Mr. Curtiss of Boston, Whig, in a speech in defense of Mr. Winthrop's vote on the war bill, according to the report of the Boston Courier, Whig, said:

"It was well understood in Mexico, that a party existed in the United States, soradically opposed to this war upon principle, an so firm in their condemnation of the President for placing Gen. Taylor where he then was, that it was believed he would not be rescued. The Mexican government counted upon him as their certain prey, from this circumstance."

Upon which the New Harvest Register well remarks:

"The Whigs had better not shed any more tears over the 'poor Mexicans killed at Palo Alto,' as it seems they were induced to cross the Rio Grande and attack Gen. Taylor, from what they read in the Whig newspapers. They supposed our brave little army would 'not be rescued,' because the Whigs were abusing the President! And they counted confidently on another Alamo massacre of our little army!
There is little doubt but such would have been the result, had Taylor been defeated. 'It was well understood in Mexico' that the Whigs were opposed to the war, and that they would 'not rescue him.'
Who then is responsible for the lives of those Mexicans, who, like many others, have been deceived by the Whig panics and promises? And what would be thought of members of Congress, who, with the belief that Gen. Taylor would be defeated, refused to vote supplies, and would have left their brave countrymen to the fate of Crocket and Fanning? In all our difficulties with foreign governments, this same factious spirit has hindered negotiation, weakened the influence of our government abroad and encouraged the enemy."

But our past history shed a much light upon this point the virtuous Madison was denounced in the same way by the Federal press for having caused the war of 1812, also for its mismanagement. As a specimen, we give the following language of the Woroeser [Mass.] Spy, of [...]:

"We hope, and believe, the people will soon be convinced that Mr. Madison is totally incompetent to hold the reins of government. This wanton waste of property, this perverse neglect of duty, is sufficient to band any administration with eternal infamy."

What a remarkable parallel between this language and what we see daily in the whig press! If Mr. Madison could not escape such denunciations of his opponents, for party effect is it to be expected that Mr. Polk should, in the discharge of his responsible duties, pass the ordeal untouched, when a similar game of party is to be played?

We do not doubt the patriotic motives of the Republican – but we contend that the course pursued by it and the affiliated Whig press, is calculated to encourage the enemy and prolong the war. And to show how such proceedings were viewed during the last war, we quote from the National Intelligencer of that day. Then it fearlessly and honorably sustained the war and the Government. Now, for a party object, it denounces the Administration as "weak and wicked," sneers at the present war as "rapine," and our officers and soldiers, fighting our battles, as "lawless men." See how its ethics of an earlier day contrast with its present course, and how conclusively it answers itself. On the 18th of August, 1812, it employed the following language, which is now quoted with strong effect, by the Union:
"It is impossible to read the federal papers at the present crisis – we mean the most of them, and particularly some in New England – without astonishment at the falsehood, the malice, and the following which their polluted columns are daily disgorging. If the declaration of war did not produce an unison of opinion in all the States it was at least to be expected, that some decency and come bounds would have been observed in a candid portion of our own citizens are seen openly to enlist an active and a wicked zeal in the cause of the public enemy, not merely shielding it of its enorunites [sic] but making it out to be the best, and at the [...] nation with labels and abuse, in a spirit still more vengeful, acrid and turbulent, it is calculated to excite in the bosoms of the sound and patriotic millions of the country, who are doomed to witness such baseness, sensations of the strongest and most unqualified HORROR, mixed with the deepest LOATHINGS OF DISGUST!"

"These are the pure, the select, the self-made, bloated patriots, who can bawl out from the highways and the housetops 'tyranny,' 'tyranny!' 'proscription!_' 'proscription!' 'fettered tongues, fettered presses!' While their own language and their own acts are marked by an audaeity [sic] in false assertion, piling up in a black, stupendous heap, slander upon slander, one base invention upon another base perversion; here a misrepresentation an there a lie; one day a false rumor, the next a false charge; always mixing the deadliest [sic] gall with the foulest defamation. These are the men who see everything right in the conduct of the enemy, and everything not simply wrong but atrociously wicked in the measures of their own country. These are the men who, in their most deliberate resolves, brand with the epithets of mad men and fools, all those who legitimately hold the powers of the nation, and who, under the most awful responsibilities, and at the hazard of all the dearest stakes, have legitimately exercised them. – These are the men who, from sanctified lips, can [...] about rights; who invoke the law and the constitution; who have at last fixed it in their own belief that they are all Gen. Washington’s own sons, &c., &c.

The Mexican papers laud Santa Anna for having disposed of his person a credit and his own private funds, in order to facilitate the speedy march of his Division to Monterey. The National Guards were the only troops that would remain to form the garrison in the Capital. All the other brigades would follow Santa Anna.

We have been informed on good authority, (says the New Orleans Courier,) that the Mexicans are fortifying the City of Mexico with great care – to defray the expenses of which, the Government had levied a forced contribution.

[From the N.O. Bulletin]

The Editor of La Patria has received Havana papers containing the news from Mexico by the British steamer, which left Vera Cruz on the 1st Oct., and he has courteously permitted us to look over them.

The most important part of the news is, that the first brigade of cavalry left the capital on the 24th Sept. for Monterey, and Santa Anna was to have followed the next day at the head of the National Guard, which had been organized, and the other troops at the capital. The strength of his force is not stated, but he seems to have been actively engaged in raising and equipping men. A meeting of the merchants and other men of wealth residing in the capital, was held on the 17th Sept., to devise the means of supplying the Government with funds to carry on the war; but although the dates from that city are to the 24th, the result of their deliberations is not mentioned. A meeting for a similar purpose was held at Vera Cruz on the 23rd, but we are left in equal ignorance as to the result.

The Governor of Chihuahua has been informed of the intention of Gen. Wool to march on that department, and the Legislative Assembly had authorized him to raise $5,000 by disposing of the privilege of selling tobacco.

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p1c7 Capture of a Mexican Brig of War

From a letter published in the city of Mexico, (says the N. Y. Journal of Commerce,) it appears that the Mexican brig of war Malek Adhel was captured in the port of Mazatlan by one of our vessels, supposed to be the sloop of war
Warren. The Warren being outside, dispatched five launches, well armed, to capture the Mexican then at anchor in the bay. The officers and crew on board the brig, unprepared for an attack, took to their boats in great confusion on the appearance of the Americans. Two officers, named Zerega and Cililio, and several sailors, were taken prisoners. The moment the “Yankees” found themselves masters of the vessel, they cut her cables and made sail for the frigate.

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p1c7 204 words Hancock Expedition

[From the Illinois State Register, Oct. 23.]

Pursuant to the proclamation of Gov. Ford of the 12th inst., published in our last, a company of volunteers, to the number of 411, was raised in this city to be sent against the mob now infesting the ill-fated city of Nauvoo. The company elected Col. Robert Allen their Captain, and John Connelly and R.W. Diller their 1st and 2nd Lieutenants. Two brass 6 pounders, well appointed and manned by skillful artillerists, accompany the expedition.

As soon as the troops were enrolled [...] for their departure were [...] most despatch [sic], and they left town on Tuesday last abent [sic] noon. They will unquestionably receive large accessions of volunteers on their route. Ample provision has been made for arming and equipping such as may join them. The Governor hears the expedition in person, and it is his determination to put an end, at all hazards, to the violence and outrages that have brought disgrace upon the State.

His force will undoubtedly be, by the time he reaches the theatre of action, amply sufficient for the purpose, and the public sentiment will sustain him in resorting, it necessary, to last extremity in restoring the supremacy of the laws and vindicating the character of the State.

Tuesday November 3, 1846 REv43i54p1c7 268 words Letter to the Editor

Washington, Oct. 30, 1846

[Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.]

No dispatches have arrived from the Army, except those, the contents of which have already been communicated through the medium of the Southern papers. Private letters, received here by gentlemen connected with the military department, lead us to suppose that the Mexicans are preparing for another fight, still more sanguinary and obstinate than that of Monterey. We cannot hope to make Mexico sue for peace until we have gained the basis of a line of military operations, which, at the same time that it renders us powerful for attack, shall enable us to remain military masters of the conquered territory.

Such a line of operations, it is believed, would be obtained, by taking possession and strongly fortifying Rincanado, Linares and San Francisco. By the terms of the capitulation of the troops under Ampudia, at Monterey, the Mexicans were to fall back on Rincanado; but they were allowed to keep possession of it. Rincanado is but thirty miles from Monterey, just half way on the road from Monterey to Saltillo; and here military men expect the Mexicans to make another desperate stand. The terrain is favorable to them, as that town, (with about 12,000 inhabitants,) is situated in a defile of the mountains, so as to form the key either to Monterey of Saltillo.

In regard to the manoeuvres contemplated in the Gulf of Mexico, nothing but surmise and rumors have as yet reached the people who are in a habit of “listening at the doors.” The members of the Cabinet would ill execute their trust if the intentions of the Government could be made known to the letter-writers.

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p1c7 152 words General Taylor and General Butler

A writer in the Washington Union, in some remarks upon the report about General Butler, says: A gallant regular officer who has just returned from Monterey, in the capture of which he bore his part, in relation to the charges against General Butler, says, explicitly, “that if there was any complaint against General Butler, on any account, in the army, he had never heard of no angry words or difficulty of any kind between Generals Taylor and Butler; nor did he believe that there had been any. The officers of the regular army had the greatest respect for Gen. Butler as well as for Gen. Taylor, and had all been to visit the former after he had received his wound.”

He also says, “the kindest feelings exist in the army between the regulars and volunteers, and that the former considered the latter as having shown extraordinary steadiness and efficiency for raw troops.”
Richmond, VA, Tuesday Morning, November 3, 1846

We have already dwelt upon the mischievous effect of the course pursued by the Whig press in regard to the Mexican war. It is calculated to depress the ardor of our own men, and elevate the hopes of the enemy. We deem it our duty to refer once more to a particular case, which clearly demonstrates the impolicy [sic] of such reckless proceedings.

The New Orleans Tropic, for party purposes, published a statement that General Taylor was to be superseded, and General Butler to be appointed to the chief command of the army. – This news reaches the camp, and is received as "Gospel truth." It produces immense excitement among the volunteers, public meetings are held, &c. We had no doubt that this was a fabrication of a Whig brain, intended to throw odium on the Administration. As we predicted, the Union comes out and refutes the whole story. There never was the least foundation for a rumor, which was near producing fatal consequences upon the harmony and efficiency of our army. We trust that this will be a useful lesson to the Whig press, not to indulge in such assaults for political effect, when their country is engaged in war.

The Union refers to the "idle and unfounded rumor, which had prevailed in the camp for a brief period, that General Taylor was about to be supersede from the command of the camp at Monterey; but it was soon exploded, as appears by the letters themselves, before they were sent off."

"We beg leave most respectfully to say, that the press ought to be more careful in arraigning distinguished officers before the bar of the country, and ascribing designs to the administration which have no existence. We regret this censorious spirit in the journals; as we also deeply regret the feuds and quarrels and rencontres [sic], if they too have any foundation, which have been lately reported to exist in to cases between two of the officers of the army."

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p2c2 THE SIEGE OF MONTEREY

We know that our readers cannot hear too much of the thrilling scenes of this great event in our history. The success of our arms has proved that while we have the finest army in the world, our citizen-soldiers are always ready to defend their Country's rights and honor with as much efficiency as zeal and courage. Thanks to our free institutions, which make every citizen feel and act, as if he was specially commissioned by his Country to uphold her honor and maintain her rights. How nobly do they contrast with the hireling troops of European monarchies, who fight like automatons, well-organized, it is true, but wanting that fire of liberty and free thought and action, which animate our troops.

In another column will be found a letter wiping off the stain which was attempted to be cast upon the gallant Baltimoreans. We add here a letter which we find in the Cincinnati Advertiser. It will be seen that Ohio is vindicated by her own bravemen. We feel proud in the conviction that all the volunteers have won green laurels at Monterey, and we trust that no cavilling or unworthy jealousy will attempt to deprive them of a single leaf.

September 25, 1846
Head-Quarters, Army of Occupation, before Monterey.

Dear Brough: My last advices to you were dated Cerralvo, 14th inst. What I then told you has proved true. The ten days have passed, a dreadful battle has been fought and Monterey is ours. We arrived at our present encampment from three to four miles from town, about noon the 19th inst. That day and the night of the 19th were occupied in reconmomerating perhaps one of the strongest possible natural positions; made apparently impregnable, by batteries, bastions, barricades and castles; absolutely coverd with heavy artillery, and defended by at least ten thousand men. The town is situated at he foot of the chain of hills called the "Sierra Madre," or the mother chain, and commands the pass upon the Saltillo road, and is, in fact, the key to the whole plain from here to the gulf; and if defence has been successful, no further inroad could have been made by the army of "Occupation" into the interior of Mexico from this direction.

The west end of the town is defended by what is called the Bishop's Palace, on a hill of several hundred feet in height, and mounted with 18 pounders, commanding the town, and the entire plain in front, within reach of its metal. This castle was in turn defended by three batteries in its rear, on successive elevations, sweeping the hill side in the only direction where aproach was possible, and commanding the Saltillo road. The town itself was a fortification, or defended by a succession of forts, running through the whole town, from east to west, and so arranged that all could range upon each one east, as they by chance should fall into our hands, while each of them could command the plain in front. The whole of these defended by the "Bishop's Castle." Batteries were literally placed at every street corner, sweeping the streets in every direction by cross fires. You discover, therefore, the impossibility of knowing the resistance your infantry would meet with in the town, after having passed two miles
The first step therefore, was to take the "Bishop's Castle." That once in our possession would enable us, effectually, to attack each fort in succession, upon the most vulnerable and least protected front - as the enemy no doubt had regarded that as totally impossible, fully believing the only attack, with the remotest hope of success, would be from east to west - and not from west to east. To accomplish this task, Gen. Worth was assigned, with about two thousand infantry and a couple of pieces of Duncan's six-pound artillery. He commenced his march from camp about 12 o'clock at noon of the 20th, so as to effectually obtain the point in the rear of the hill before dark, and in the night to take up his position on the hill side. On the morning of the 20th, the remaining regular infantry and all the volunteers of Gen. Butler's Division, were led to the attack upon the east end, thus to divert the forces of the enemy, for the relief of Gen. Worth. Both attacks were made about the same time in the day, say about 9 o'clock, A.M. of the 20th. The conflict was awful beyond conception. Our whole force of infantry were contending with muskets only against stone walls, batteries and forts, from morning till night. Dreadful was the havoc. The officers in the engagement of the 8th and 9th pronounced it nothing compared with the horrors of this dreadful day. I do not yet know the loss, but it was at least six or eight hundred, in my opinion. The 1st Ohio Regiment was in the hottest part of the fight all day, but did not suffer as much as the Tennessee and Mississippi Regiments. Col. Mitchell is wounded severely in the leg, by a two ounce ball passing through it below his knee; he is doing well. Adj't Armstrong, of the Cadets, a noble and gallant fellow, has had his leg amputated. Capt. George of the Butler Boys, was slightly wounded, and about thirty or forty of the regiment killed and missing; the names of whom I cannot give you, but some officer of the regiment will of course give them all. In my hurry, however, to inform you of our immediate friends, I have digressed from the general engagement.

On the night of the 21st, our men, exhausted and worn out with labor, returned to camp, leaving sufficient force only to keep possession of two batteries and two forts, and to throw up a defense in the night - while on the morning of the 21st, General Worth sent a despatch that he had possession of all the batteries of the enemy, and was using them upon him, commanding the Bishop's Palace, and would soon have it - that he had met them in open field, and dispersed them with great slaughter. Our troops therefore again marched to the conflict, and did what they could, while Gen. Worth went on with his work. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon was discovered, by the aid of the glass, a general scramble of troops for the Castle - an indiscriminate scramble of Mexicans and Americans, all going in together. In about twenty minutes THE SPANISH FLAG WAS DOWN, and the Stars and Stripes were waving! - the Castle was ours!

Worth lost in all this - the greatest achievement of modern times - about thirty men.

The infantry in the East end of the town seeing this, renewed their courage and energy, while Worth lost no time in running his forces down the hill into the west end, with tremendous havoc. Each division thus in possession of opposite ends of the town, and in possession of strong holds, closed the second day's work of horrors. In the mean time Duncan had his battery in town, going from house to house, advancing half a square every fire, and driving the enemy from post to post, into the Palace and Public Square, into the midst of which shells were continually thrown, exploding with awful effect. During the night our mortar was placed upon a hill commanding the Cathedral, or what the officers call the "black fort," which itself, it is said, cannot be taken, except by regular approaches. An eighteen pounder, thrown from the Bishop's Palace into the ditch, was raised, and placed in a most effective position, during the second night, or before the third morning. Our positions now all manifested. On the third morning our great demonstration was to be made. Just as the fire was opening, a white flag appearing, negotiations for evacuating the town were commenced, and last night were closed. The town and all munitions of war are ours. The enemy have seven days to leave it in; they march out with all their small arms, and one small piece of artillery. The troops not again to serve during the war, and we are not to pass a certain point between this and Saltillo in sixty days.

This is a brief and imperfect sketch of what is no doubt one of the greatest military efforts of the century in which we live. Errors of detail will be found perhaps, when you see the official history of the affair. I had forgotten to tell you that all the armed positions are to be put into our hands today.

Old Medicine regrets his jokes upon poor Mitchell, as there is too much reality in the matter. The gallant Colonel, however, lays upon his back, with his leg swung to the top of his tent, swearing that Chamberlain shall cure his leg without the old saw, and seems to worry at the loss of his horse, given him by his friends of the Cincinnati Bar, more than the wound of his limb. Adj. Armstrong says he don't care for his leg, so we have the town; but I fear it will go hard with him. The ability with which he attended to the duties of his regiment has won for him the highest esteem from Col. Mitchell, and the entire respect of all the officers and men. Though a long resident of Cincinnati, I only became acquainted with him here. He certainly is capable of high enterprises. I am in the midst of business, and the camp full of confusion. I cannot devote you more time at this moment.

Gen. Butler was wounded in the leg early in the engagement, and the command of course devolved upon one of Ohio's favorites - General Hamer. His coolness and deliberation is the theme of general remark. The boys call him our "Sledge Hammer." During the 21st, Dr. Chamberlain was the only surgeon in camp, and all the cases of wounded that came in, were thrown upon his hands. His labour was incredible.

[From the Baltimore Patriot]

THE SIEGE OF MONTEREY

Very Interesting Details - the Killed and Wounded of the Baltimore Battalion.

The following letter from a soldier of the Baltimore Battalion is one of the most interesting yet published. It has been furnished to us for publication by the gentleman to whom it was addressed:

Monterey, 26th sept., 1846.

My dear sir - The American arms are once more victorious after one of the most glorious contests on record. The enemy fought us five days and surrendered yesterday. The city of Monterey, with all its public buildings and records; its Cathedral, armed to its dome, its plaza, a complete net work of masonry - in some places eight feet thick; its distilleries and an yards, all turned into forts and in our hands impregnable; besides five regularly built forts of the strongest kind, all are ours, 42 pieces cannon, mortars, howitzers and 18-pounders; small arms and ammunition innumerable, together with a large number of prisoners are also ours. Monterey, the place where Mexico has heretofore been invulnerable - the spot where she once defeated the combined forces of Old Spain and France, 17,000 strong, has fallen into our hands. The regular and voluntary infantry fought like lions, charging in several instances right up to the fort walls, six feet thick; jumping and wading the dykes and ditches; climbing the walls and shooting the cannoniers at their guns, without any support from artillery whatever. Such a thing was never heard of before. Our Battalion charged upon the city with three forts pouring a continual cross Fire upon us, while every roof, window and door sent forth one uninterrupted stream of musket and rifle balls; bomb-shell, 18, 24-pounders, grape, canister and round shot of all sizes fell around us and passed over us in millions, and many a gallant heart that beat high on the glorious 21st September lies cold around and within the city of Monterey. Honored be their memory. The brave and chivalrous Col. Watson, after making two different charges on the city, after the 3d Infantry Regiment of Regulars and Flying Artillery had retreated as ordered, on his return to the eastern section of the city, and while again charging on a fort tannery and distillery, fell mortally wounded with a musket ball passing through his neck and separating the jugular vein. He never spoke but died in three minutes, and lies buried in a grave with officers of the army, forty feet from the upper fort. It was reported that our gallant captain, now Colonel Stewart, had fallen early in the action, [...] in the thickest of the fighting, while death was claiming many around him, alternately leading and urging on his own men and others (for we were all huddled together) to another charge, or directing and pointing out the best shelter a mud hole, hedge, fence or sapling would afford. He made a gallant stand after we were ordered to retreat, kneeling with his own hand an officer and driving back, with a few more, a large body of Lancers who were charging upon the volunteers. He succeeds to the command of the Battalion by seniority and with, I may say, the universal approval of the officers and men, and Governor Pratt would do great injustice to the son of an old defender, to a brave and cool officer and warm-hearted gentleman, were he to entertain for one moment the idea of commissioning any other person as Colonel. Captain Boyd of the Chesapeakes was also reported to have fallen early in the action, but I saw him soon afterwards bravely leading his men up to the cannon's mouth, followed by volunteers from other regiments. Captain Kenley bore himself gallantly in the fight, also pressing into the very thickest of the fray; and Captains Piper and Waters both behaved well. Captain Bronaugh's company were on guard and not in action. The 1st sergeant in Captain Waters' company. (orderly Truscott, a man about 42 years of age) and whose place is at my elbow in line, had his head blown about 40 feet in the air by a 12-pound shot. There are eight men in my mess. Wm. P. Alexander, one of them, has not been recognized since the action of the 21st. The Lancers killed all the wounded and I fear he has been buried without being recognized. Robert Caples, another, was mortally wounded, I fear in the groin - the ball was taken out of the back.

Malcolm Wilson, another, was wounded in the arm by a musketball. Three out of eight killed or wounded; besides, W. G. H., another was in the first fort taken all night, and R. W. R., another, after charging on the fort once, and down town twice, was cut off and taken prisoner but succeeded, two hours after the Americans had retreated, by the aid of a Mexican officer, in making his escape, running the gauntlet of three batteries without receiving a scratch. After being forced into the little shelter which a small hole in an open field, raked by three forts, afforded, raising my head a few moments after, I found forty Lancers within one hundred yards of my right, and 5 or 600 between me and the American army. Knowing that their mode of warfare is to show no quarter, and cut the throats of the wounded you may know I did not feel comfortable, and was glad to see Gould and Freburger, the only two of our company then on the field. I feel grateful to God that my life was spared amid such hopeless circumstances, and a general feeling of gratitude to the Almighty God of Battles seems to pervade our men. We had to run near three miles in making the different charges. Poor Watson said to me a few moments before he fell, "Who will dare say now that American volunteers cannot be depended upon in any fight?" They were the last words I heard him utter, being separated from him when wounded. Albert Hart, our color sergeant, has lost an arm, and the flag-staff of the banner presented to the brave Steuart, by the ladies of Baltimore, through the Old Defenders, has a wound upon it, from the same ball. That flag was the first and only one that floated gallantly in the breeze yesterday from the first fort taken from the enemy. Joseph Files has lost an arm, and Wm. Lee was wounded slightly in the abdomen. I merely mention the killed and wounded in our company, knowing you will see an official list. Gen. Worth, with two brigades, was led around by a secret pass behind the town, (by a Mexican, to save his neck,) and coming into the Saltillo road, cut off the enemy's supplies and utterly surprise him by a brisk cannonading and bombardment in his rear. Unfading laurels are due to Worth for his scientific, soldierlike and highly praiseworthy part in the bloody battle of Monterey. The fight commenced, on our part, Monday morning early, and ended late Wednesday night. They had fired upon us, however, for three days before, but with little success. Our glorious little battalion has covered itself with honor, and, with the exception of a very few, who will be duly reported, every individual seemed to think the result depended on him. All in Captain Steuart's company not here mentioned as wounded, escaped unhurt and are well. An armistice has taken place for eight weeks, and we hold this whole country as security for the expenses of the war. It was the said enemy were 14,000 strong at least, and our force in the field was less than 6,000. I had forty odd wounded Mexicans placed under my charge by Col. Stewart night before last. Miserable objects of compassion some of them are and they and the stench of the dead lying around, the damp, the dirt and the want of food for almost eighteen hours, almost overcame me. Monterey is the strongest place naturally I ever saw with the eye or in print. There is an open plain, three to four miles long and four or five wide in front, except a range of hills, about forty feet high, behind which the town lies. In the rear, and on the right and left, the mountains back right up to it, and rise several hundred feet high abruptly and almost perpendicularly, while the only pass is through a mountain-gorge directly in its centre. I was within ten feet of General Taylor in the town on the 21st. He was as cool as a cucumber and ordered us to pass into the city and break open the houses. "God knows how any of us got out."

R.

The following is an extract of a letter from an officer in the Baltimore Battalion, to his parents.

CAMP NEAR MONTEREY,
September 25, 1846

We arrived here on the 20th [...] and when within three miles of the city we were sluted by a brisk cannonading from the enemy's batteries- they fired upon our advance Guard and General staff. We of course countermarched, and encamped within sight if the city. On Sunday we went on, but returned without doing any thing, the enemy firing upon us- not a shot returned. Early on monday all the troops were assembled in battle array. I cannot picture the horrors of the day to your mind, and am thankful that an Altwise Providence has spared me the fate that many a noble heart has met with -Four officers belonging to the army fell very near to me, among [them] [sic] Col. Watson, for whom a nation might mourn. He is no more.

In a desperate charge against one of the Mexican forts, he fell mortally wounded. He handed his sword to Lient. Bowie, and died with a smile on his face, that indicated more than tongue can tell. He died a brave man and a gallant soldier. The last words which he uttered were:- "MEN! YOUR GENERAL LEADS YOU- WHO WOULD NOT FOLLOW?". These words were uttered, seeing an officer pass, who, it is presumed, he in the expiting agony of death, took for Gen. Taylor.

I deeply regret that Col. Watson was not spared to enjoy the victory with us. Poor fellow, he is gone, and I hope his country will take care of his wife and children. It will be a great loss to them. So hot was the battle, that we were unable to take the body of our lamented Colonel from the street, until nearly 48 hours had elasped. We buried him in a brick house within about 400 yards of where he first made a charge with the battalion. A very singular circumstance occurred while the man was in the act of preparing the grave: a ball came and took his head off; and instead of burying one, we had to have another - dirge for the poor soldier.  Such is war.

We have lost a number of men, but nothing appears so horrible to me as those men who have their arms and legs taken off. I never before imagined what a battle-field was - never thought it like this. We have some noble fellows in our battalion- instead of being privates they should be generals. They charged three forts and succeeded in taking them, but many who were foremost are now numbered with the dead. We passed the forts on Monday, and got into the city. I left my ten determined to surmount every obstacle. I know we had eyes looking upon us that had jealousy in them, and we determined to lead the leaders.

You would not suppose that any one could live in this lane or street where we were fighting. -

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p2c4 THE DESTRUCTIVE STORM IN THE GULF

(From the Union)

KEY WEST, Oct. 14, 1846

Sir:- It is my painful duty to report to you a dreadful calamity which has befallen this place, and every thing connected with the Florida ref, so far as heard from.

The town of Key West is now a heap of ruins of about 400 houses, large and small; there are not more than 10 or 12 left standing or in habitable condition, and those much shattered, whilst the general confusion and distress can hardly be realized. On Sunday, 11th Oct, we were visited with a fearful hurricane, accompanied with torrents of rain. The gale commenced about 5 A.M., from the Northeast, and continued to increase during the day, when at between 3 and 4, P.M., the wind veered to the southeast, and the storm became a tornado. At this time commenced a scene which defies description. The houses in town, (stone as well as wood,) were torn piecemeal and scattered away like chaff before the wind, tendering it dangerous to move about - which last was indeed impossible as a foothold could not be maintained. The wind gradually changed to the south, still blowing with the same strength, and finally to the is wrecked to the Eastward. The United States brig Perry small vessels lying there dismasted. We have just this moment heard from the Tortugas. Garden Key is safe, though the lighthouse is much injured, and now only this brief outline, to avail of a special messenger about to depart for Charleston. Point I shall submit my views to the department as soon as possible, and a more full report of the disaster, giving perhaps the department may deem some change in the mode of construction necessary since this event. On this case rose on the west side of the island about three feet higher than known before. It was wholly a wind tide. That we commence de novo. No storm like this has been known on the island since its settlement. The water in this is, it will require that to make us good again, or put us in the same state we were in before the hurricane, supposing soon as possible, to re-establish the wharf. The loss to the Engineer Department cannot be less than $50,000; that found, and to the erection of a temporary carpenter shop and other fixtures for doing work, and shall proceed, as much injured. At the present time, I have turned my attention to the collection of the public property that can be we were nine months ago. A large quantity of lumber may be recovered, and some tools: pile-driver and two scows at the angles. But in this general wreck, and loss of all the property on hand. We are put back to the position where we were were nine months ago. A large quantity of lumber may be recovered, and some tools: pile-driver and two scows much injured. At the present time, I have turned my attention to the collection of the public property that can be found, and to the erection of a temporary carpenter shop and other fixtures for doing work, and shall proceed, as soon as possible, to re-establish the wharf. That loss to the Engineer Department cannot be less than $50,000; that is, it will require that to make us good again, or put us in the same state we were in before the hurricane, supposing that we commence de novo. No storm like this has been known on the island since its settlement. The water in this case rose on the west side of the island about three feet higher than known before. It was wholly a wind tide.

Perhaps the department may deem some change in the mode of construction necessary since this event. On this point I shall submit my views to the department as soon as possible, and a more full report of the disaster, giving now only this brief outline, to avail of a special messenger about to depart for Charleston.

We have just this moment heard from the Tortugas. Garden Key is safe, though the lighthouse is much injured, and small vessels lying there dismasted.

The United States brig Perry is wrecked to the Eastward.

I have the horror to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. DUTTON,
Captain of Engineers.

To Col. J. G. Totten, Chief Engineer, Washington, D.C.

In addition to the above, we are favored with the following letter from Commodore Sloat to the Secretary of the Navy:

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 23, 1846.

Sir:— I have the honor to inform the Department that I arrived at Havana on the evening of the 7th instant from Charges, in the English mail steamer, and not finding any vessel to sail for any southern port of the United States. I embarked on board the U. S. brig Perry, and sailed on Saturday, the 10th, directing Lieutenant Commandant Blake to land me at Charleston, or any port south of that, from which I could reach Washington without delay. During the night it commenced blowing a gale, and on Sunday it increased to a tremendous hurricane, such as has never before been witnessed in those seas. During the whole day and Sunday night the brig was driven before it at the rate of twelve or thirteen miles per hour, and no one on board expected her to live from one moment to another. About two o’clock on Monday morning, she struck on the Florida reef, about forty miles East of Key West, a kind Providence directing her to a part of the reef where the tremendous high seas carried her over, striking several times very hard, and breaking the rudder from the stern post. The masts were immediately cut away, to prevent the vessel going to pieces, that the lives of those on board might have some chance of being saved. She finally stopped in comparatively smooth water. At daylight we found we were within mile of one of the Baya Honda Keys, and several wrecks near us. On board of one, not half a mile from us, twenty lives were lost out of twenty-one. One was saved by a boat from the Perry. On Tuesday two small wreckers came alongside, and Lieutenant Blake employed them to take on board the guns, shot and other heavy articles to lighten the brig, in hopes to get her off, as she remains quite tight. On Thursday I left her in one of those vessels to land the cargo at Key West, and the next day took passage in a small schooner from New York bound to the Brazos St. Jago, the captain agreeing to land me at the Balize, where I arrived yesterday.
Everything will be saved from the brig, and I think she will be got off and taken to Key West, and probably she may be got to Norfolk under jury masts. The department may rest assured that Lieutenant Blake will do everything that can be done for the interest of the United States. It is impossible to speak in too high terms of the noble, cool, and judicious conduct of Lieutenant Blake, his officers and men, on this most trying occasion; and I am most happy to state, that no life has been lost, or any accident happened to anyone on board. Lieutenant Blake will send a detailed report to the department by the first opportunity. He had not time to send one by me, as I did not determine to leave until five minutes before the wrecker left the brig.

The destruction of life and property by this hurricane is immense. Forty or fifty vessels were known to be on shore before [...] nearly all the wrecking vessels are destroyed; the town at Key West is entirely in ruins; not more than five or six houses remain uninjured. Of the light-houses at Key West and Sand Key not a vestige remains; Sand Key is washed away, so that the sea flows over it. Fifteen persons were lost at the light-house at Key West, and six at that on Sand Key. Many other lives were lost in the harbour [sic] and town of Key West. The revenue cutter Morris is a wreck, lying in two feet water; the custom-house is blown down, and the marine hospital unrooted, and otherwise much injured; the preparations for building the forts are entirely destroyed. The barracks escaped with less damage than any other buildings, but they have been slightly damaged. Some stores, wagons, &c., for the army, have been wrecked in the harbour [sic]; and as near as I can judge, the loss of public property at Key West will not fall short of two hundred and fifty to three hundred thousand dollars.

Most respectfully I have the honor to be your obedient servant, & c.,

JOHN D. SLOAT, Commodore.

To the Hon. John Y. Mason,
Secretary of the Navy
Washington, D.C.

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p2c5 LATE F[R]OM HAVANA

Terrific Hurricane -Great Loss of Property- Unparalleled Destruction of Shipping.

By the brig Cybele, Capt Merrill, which arrived at this port yesterday from Havana, whence she sailed on the 20th inst., we have been placed in possession of a great mass of particulars in regard to the disastrous hurricane which occurred on the 10th and 11th inst.

During the hurricane, walking in the city was dangerous from large sheets of lead and tilepots, blown down from the tops of the houses; these lay about in every direction, and were in many instances carried by the wind to a great distance. The beautiful Palmetto and other trees, which adorned the Governor's square, were broken and torn down - even the lamp posts, &c. The wind was strongest about nine o'clock, at which time it shifted suddenly to the N. W. , and blew with terrific violence-the air was filled with dense clouds of "spoon drift", or salt spray, which made it impossible to face it. This spray was carried for half a league into the country and deluged the houses, entering every crevice and flooding the streets. The surf and spray was seen to dash high over the lantern of the lighthouse on the Moro Castle. Many houses were blown down or unroofed, among them the Tacon Theatre, which was partly unroofed and received other damage. The streets were nearly deserted, except by occasional detachments of soldiers, ordered to different posts to give assistance where it was needed. The beautiful Passao, the fashionable drive and promenade of the citizens, suffered in its shrubs, trees and plants, and after the hurricane many persons were forcibly detained to assist in removing the rubbish and ruins from the street. An occasional pedestrian might be seen flying faster than he appeared willing to go, borne by the irresistible force of the wind, which swept through the long narrow streets with incredible fury. But the wharves presented the most disastrous spectacle. Ships, barques, brigs, and schooners, some crowding on top of each other, three tier deep-sunk, wrecked, disastered [sic], or totally crushed to pieces with the owners, Captains and sailors, gazing in amazement upon the scene of destruction.

Some vessels, known to have been in the harbor before the hurricane, have disappeared and their fate was left to conjecture, as nothing could be seen a furlong's length, owing to the showers of spray and drift which filled the air; and as the wind blew nearly into the habor, they could not have gone out: but the sad spectacle of mast's spars, yards and pieces of wrecks, crowding the harbor, proved that they must have drifted into each other and sunk or gone to pieces. The numerous men-of-war were driven on ashore and dismayed. It is not known how many lives were lost, but bodies were seen floating in the harbor in the different dresses of seamen in the merchant and naval service. The brig Mohawk, from Newfoundland, went ashore at the Punto Fort, and was exposed to the heaviest part of the hurricane. The crew escaped by lines being let down from the fort to the wreck, by which they ascended to the walls of the fort.

Men from the interior stated that the sugar crops were very much injured, and in many instances ruined. A continuance of fine weather, might restore such as were not totally lost. The coffee plants were also seriously damaged.
The gale towards Cardenas was not so violent. Fears were entertained regarding several vessels which sailed the day preceding the hurricane.

The Governor had issued permission to such as had their houses damaged to rebuild with wood -a privilege heretofore denied under such circumstances.

His Excellency was seen riding with his suite the day following the hurricane to ascertain the damage done. He was everywhere received with marks of respect by the citizens.

The captain of an English brig died on the 13th from wounds received during the hurricane.

The hurricane commenced about 12 o’clock on the 10th, and was at its height at 9 o’clock on Sunday, the 11th.

Capt. Merril reports the following vessels sunk, ashore, dismasted, &c., in Havana, in the hurricane of the 10th:

The barque Rapid, of New York, sunk at her anchors, has been got up, and would load in a few days for New York.

Barque Iowa of Baltimore, went ashore, was got off after discharging with little injury.

Ship Madiline, of and from New York, arrived on the 9th, sunk next day- would be sold.

The ship Childe Harold, Crosby, of N. York from Guayaquil, badly damaged; was repairing and taking in a cargo of sugar for New York.

Ship Mudara, of New York, will be a total loss. She was a new ship, about sixteen months old.

Ship Madeline, Shankland, of Philadelphia, just arrived from New Orleans-sunk.

Brig Echo, of Newport, Smith-sunk.

Brig Lisbon, of Newport, injured about $1,000.00.

Brig Mohawk, Crocker, sunk; cargo and vessels total loss; sold for $100.00.

Brig Millinoket, of Boston, badly damaged, having had her stern knocked off; probably would be condemned.

Brig Oak had been ashore on the rocks, and lost her fore-mast and main-top mast.

Brig Titi, badly damaged, has her side stove in and lost top-mast; was repairing, and would sail in a few days for New Orleans.

Brig Cumberland, of New York, Hadley, badly injured, and was condemned.

Schr. Planet, Jacobs, sunk, condemned and was sold for $10.00.

Schr. Merchant, of Charleston, Keare, dismastered.

Brig Venezuela, Fower, lost both masts close to the deck.

A French frigate went ashore, but will probably be got off with considerable damage.

A French sloup-of-war was driven ashore on the morning of the 11th, and will be a total loss. Also, a French man-of-war steamer, much damaged, being dismasted, & c.

A Spanish man-of-war brig sunk at her anchors- one went ashore, and three were slightly injured.

The steamers Montezuma and Guadaloupe are ashore.

The Havana Prices Current of the 18th Oct., in summing up the disasters of the shipping, gives the following result: ships sunk 11, dismasted 4, much damaged 8, safe 4 - total 27. Brigs sunk 19, dismasted 12, much damaged 14, safe 4- total 49. Schooners sunk 7, dismasted 3, much damaged 2, safe 1 - total 13. Steamers lost- Natchez, Tacon and Villeneuva. Coasters sunk upwards of 15.

The brig Maria L. Hill, of Dennis, Mass., Capt. Chase, from Georgetown, D.C., bound to Kingston Ja., went down in a gale of wind on the 16th Sept., in lat. 30, lon. 72. Captain and crew were taken off by Capt. Sprague, of the brig Smyrna and carried to Havana.
"Havana, Oct 17th. - We have to announce, with deep regret, that we have again been visited with a terrific hurricane, far more destructive in its effects upon the shipping in harbour [sic] than that of 1844; it commenced on the evening of the 10th, and lasted until 11 o'clock the next morning. Out of 104 sailing vessels, steamers, and vessels of war in our port, all but 12 have been sunk, wrecked, dismasted, or otherwise seriously injured; besides which 40 or 50 coasting vessels were destroyed.

"In the city and environs, the injury to the buildings and trees, & c. has been immense, and many lives lost. The accounts from the country are, as yet, incomplete, in the information afforded, and vary a good deal. In some districts, the damage, both to the sugar cane and buildings on the estates, has been immense, in others it has been somewhat lighter.

"The total diminution of the crop in consequence of this calamity will no doubt be very considerable; though we have not data enough as yet to make an estimate- much will also depend on the weather we have for some weeks to come.

"The greater part of the coffee crop has perished, and almost all the Plantain trees have been rooted up and fields of Rice destroyed, whereby much suffering will be occasioned and imports of provisions from abroad will be required to a great extent.

"Our Government have published an order permitting small foreign vessels, suited for the coasting trade, to be transferred to the Spanish flag. Such vessels should be of light draft with a good capacity of storage.

"No announcement has yet been made of any reduction of duties upon articles of necessity, and it is doubtful if any relief will be afforded in that way."

You may expect shortly to hear of a further war. Peace is to be conquered, and such a blow struck upon Mexico as will induce her Congress, now about to convene, to sue for terms. In no case will our Government be disposed to give back Upper California and New Mexico; though it is hardly to be supposed that Mexico will insist on such a condition.

Commodore Sloat, who was in the terrific gale in which the Perry was driven ashore, who was left to command, will soon be relieved by Com. Shubrick, now on his way to the Pacific on the raze Independence.

The sloop Boston, Lieut. Pearson, commander, and the splendid sloop Albany, lately launched in New York, Captain Breese, both of the first class, will be ready in a few days to join the squadron in the Gulf.

The Brandywine frigate, now at Norfolk, will probably replace one of the frigates, perhaps the Cumberland.

The Germantown sloop, now at Philadelphia, is also destined or the Gulf, but may eventually sail for the Pacific.

The sloop Decatur (Norfolk,) is nearly ready for the same destination (Gulf.)

Miscellaneous [from the New Orleans Picayune, October 23.] Arrival of Commodore Sloat

We had the pleasure of greeting Com. Sloat last evening, just arrived from the Pacific in company with his son. The Princeton had apprised us of his arrival at Chagres. He would have retuned to the United States in the Princeton, but that vessel was short of coal and it was determined to return home in an English steamer by the way of Kingston and Havana. Arrived at Havana he there found the U.S. brig Perry, Lieut. Blake, and took passage on her for Charleston.

In another column we have told of the gale which the Perry encountered. The gallant Commodore told us last night that he had followed the sea now for nearly forty-seven years, and thought he knew what a storm was, but that he never before had seen it blow. We need not detail his very interesting description of the gale and the almost miraculous preservation of the ship and the lives of those on board. From the wreck of the Perry he reached Key West, and thence went on board a schooner bound to Brazos Santiago, which put him aboard a pilot boat, so that he reached this city last evening by a towboat.

The Commodore’s health is somewhat impaired and he has been suffering for several months, but from recent exposure his appearance indicates no sign of indisposition or infirmity.

We are indeed to the Commodore for various information on different topics, frankly communicated to us, but make but little use of it at this time. Duplicates of his despatches [sic], brought over by the Princeton, have already gone on to Washington. His arrival at Chagres at about the same time as the Princeton was most opportune on every account, and will prevent any confusion or trouble from the non-arrival or failure of messengers.

The Commodore was at Mazatlan on the 7th of June. The evening of that day he received news of the battles of the 8th and 9th of May – not formal reports or authorized accounts, but straggling extracts from private commercial letters. The moment was critical; there was no time to delay. The Commodore decided “to take responsibility,” and at 8 o’clock next morning he set sail for Monterey, and on the 7th officially planted in California. Not till the Commodore’s return to Mazatlan, after the middle of August, did he receive the communications from his Government which justified the wisdom of the step he had so promptly taken.

The flag of the United States was hoisted at Monterey, Upper California, on the 7th of July, 1846. On the 9th, it was displayed at San Francisco, Sanoma, and Bodega, and a few days after at Sutter’s Fort on the Sacramento. On the 12th, a flag was furnished at the request of and was hoisted by the foreigners, (principally American and English,) at the Pueblo of San Jose. – On the 16th, the mission of San Juan, about forty miles from Monterey, was garrisoned and fortified. On the 26th, the corvette Cyrane sailed with a battalion of riflemen, to take possession of San Diego, and cut off the retreat of General Castro, the Commanding General of Upper California, into Lower California or Mexico.

When Com. Sloat left Monterey on the 29th of July, all Upper California, North of Santa Barbara, was in the full and quiet possession of the American forces, apparently very much to the satisfaction of all the inhabitants, who have been long desirous of seeing their country under some stable government.

The gallant an adventurous Fremont commands the refleuten who went down on the Cyane to San Diego. His men are animated with the bitterest feelings of hostility towards Castro for his conduct towards their expedition before the war.

The Commodore graphically describes the mode in which justice is administered now in California. In some cases, surgeons and pursers are converted into magistrates, and admirable magistrates do they make. The people at first stood aloof, but they have found that true justice rather than Mexican law is now administered, and that it costs nothing. This has surprised them and is working its natural effect in conciliating them. – Were the flag of the United States now to be hauled down in California, it would not be replaced by that of Mexico. The inhabitants of California will never submit to the rule of their old masters.

Lower California, too, will probably succumb to our arms if the war continues. Representations of its value to our commerce will be made to the Government, and of such a nature as to induce prompt action unless Mexico speedily sues for peace. The next news from the Pacific will probably be to the effect that the ports of Mexico on that coast have been blockaded. Mazatlan has been spared as a measure of policy. It is now an American and English port rather than a Mexican one.

At the late hour at which we write, we can but thus indicate few points of interests upon which the Commodore touched.

Miscellaneous, Good Reasoning [from the N.O. Bullentin]

Commodore Sloat, (says the N.O. Bullentin,) on receiving information of the battles on the Rio Grande, was placed in quite a dilemma, having the unfortunate example of Commodore Jones before his eyes to warn against any extra responsibility; and on the other hand, the shocking dereliction of duty that would be charged on him, should it turn out that war in fact existed, and he failed to act. He argued, however, that it was better to be condemned for doing too much, than for too little; that if the country on the east of the Rio Grande belonged to the United States, it was plain that Mexico had invaded our territory, and he had a right, being in the public service, to retaliate, and invade hers. It on the contrary, the disputed limits belonged to Mexico, it was plain that our Government had invaded Mexico, and he had a right to follow the example of Government. And on that hint, came California under the star spangled banner.

Loss of Revenue Cutter Morris

An officer who was on board the Morris during the gale has kindly furnished us with some hasty memoranda relating therein. He writes us: “It is very doubtful if we ever get the Morris off, as she is about one and a half miles from the main channel. Capt. Walden is busily engaged in discharging the ballast, and will make every effort to get her off.”

We make liberal extracts from his letter:

Gentlemen – I have the unpleasant duty of informing you of the wreck of the revenue cutter Morris in a hurricane. It commenced on the morning of the 11th, and continued until mid night. We were lying about one mile from Key West when it commenced, and immediately sent down the yards and made every preparation for the gale. At 1:45, P.M., the schooner was riding with 130 fathoms of chain out in an ugly cross sea. Owing to the violence of the current, which was running twelve knots by us, and the vessel laboring very heavy, we battened down the main hatches, and all bands passed through the wardroom.

At 2 o’clock, blowing a gale from the S.E., and our lee rail under water, cut away mainmast or the safety of the vessel and lives on board, which carried with it the foretopmast in the cap.

At 4, p.m., the starboard chain parted, the schooner dragging boardside to the wind and sea which was making a complete breach over us, both pumps going an bailing from ward-room and berth deck, and with great difficulty kept the vessel free.

At 4:15, the water gaining upon us and the upper works seeming to work, cut away the foremast, when a sea struck us, staving away the larboard boat, cranes, bulwarks, quarter-house, swinging boom and everything moveable off the deck. The sea continuing to make a breach over us, and the schooner on her beam ends, hove the two lee guns overboard.

At 5, P.M., we struck on a shoal, at this time unknown, the compasses flying around in such a manner that it was difficult to tell which way we were going when the larboard chain parted, and the vessel continued to strike heavily on the shoal for some time.

On Monday morning, the 12th, we ascertained that the vessel had drifted about three miles, and was on the northwest shoal, in two feet of water. Around us lay vessels of all descriptions; not one rode out the hurricane in safety.

One ship near us on her beam ends, the Eben Preble, of Boston: two brigs and three schooners dismasted and ashore in about the same depth of water as we have. One hull of a vessel sunk, and four vessels bottom up. Our decks were covered with sand, and the bottom appeared to be in motion during the hurricane.

From Havana

Before the Perry, left Havana, the steamer arrived there from Vera Cruz. Gen. Paredes, the late President of Mexico, was a passenger on her.

Great apprehension is expressed to us by Com. Sloat, whether the British steamer for Vera Cruz, which left about the 9th inst., could survive the late gale, if she were unfortunately caught in it. The accounts given in another column do not realize the Commodore’s description of the violence of the gale.

The U.S. troops at Fort Moultrie, ordered some time since to proceed to Mexico, have been detained by order, to await the reception of clothing. The clothing having arrived, the ship South Carolina has been chartered, and the troops – about 250 in number – are now embarked, and the vessel is to leave, we understand, to-morrow. The men are mostly recruited within a few months past, in the upper parts of this State and Georgia, and are said to be as fine a body of soldiers as any in the service. With good drilling, under the experienced officers that have them in charge, it may be expected that they will give a good account of themselves.

Miscellaneous, Conciliating the Enemy [from the New Orleans Times, Oct. 21]

The Matamoras Flag of the 10th contains a sensible article in regard to the conciliating policy of the United States Government. This policy, the editor says, serves but to make the Mexicans more insolent, and offers them stronger inducements to continue the war, for it is enriching them at the expense of our own citizens. The enemy are enjoying privileges denied to our own people! They accept our favors – laugh at our stupid policy, and assassinate us at the first opportunity. – But make them suffer the evils, instead of the blessings of war, by making them support our army, instead of supporting theirs, and then they will probably soon sue for peace. It ridicules the "liberal policy." As it is called, towards the enemy. During the suspension of hostilities they have a first-rate opportunity to prepare for another brush. "Their officers are allowed the freedom of our camps. They can come to any of our posts, examine our strength and means of defense, lay plans for their capture an incite their countrymen to resistance."

Miscellaneous, Duels, Affairs of Honor

We are sorry to find that some difficulties have broken out amongst a few of our officers connected with the army at Camargo. – It is a pity that any American blood should be spilled by American hands, in an enemy’s country, and after events so glorious to our arms. – The Galveston News, of the 16th contains the following:

AFFAIRS OF HONOR. – We learn that Gen. A. S. Johnston, and others, would have came by the Galveston, but were detained in Camargo by an unfortunate occurrence. A misunderstanding has risen between Col. Marshall, of Kentucky, and Col. Bailie Peyton, of New Orleans. The former, we learn, had very freely censured Gen. Taylor for what he deemed to be bad generalship or culpable neglect. He was defended by Col. Peyton. The language finally became so warm that a challenge was given and accepted, and the parties were to meet with their friends the next morning (last Sunday) and settle the difference by combat, Gen. A. S. Johnston acting as the friend of Col. Marshall. The officers now here left Camargo on Saturday evening before the duel was to be fought between Capt. Shivors, who was mustered into the services from Texas, and Capt. Mousson, of New Orleans. The cause of this is said to be the insulting deportment of Mousson towards Shivors’ company. It was supposed that Mr. Kendall, of the Picayune would act as the friend of Mousson, and Lieut. Jacobs, as the friend of Shivors.

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p4c6 MAJOR P. N. BARBOUR

[N. O. Delta]

The Cincinnati Times says that "Maj. P. N. Barbour, one of the gallant officers killed at Monterey, was not - -as we stated yesterday from the N. O. Delta- of the 5th, but the 3rd regiment of infantry.- Capt. Macrae, of the same regiment, commanding at Newport, writes us of Maj. Barbour, that 'his virtues as a man, and his fame as a soldier, are proud monuments, which his regiment will ever claim as its heritage.' Most men are aware of, though scarcely [sic] any fully appreciate, the esprit du corps which is one of the strongest feelings of a soldier; added to which, the kindly sympathies of close social communion and common danger, form a bond of union, second to none other in strength. We are pleased to see these attentions to accuracy, for the soldier's wealth is his honor, and his fame his children's inheritance!"

This brave officer distinguished himself in the battles of the Rio Grande. An intelligent correspondent, and a kinsman of Major Barbour, writes us, from personal knowledge, that he was "a young man of the highest worth and of great promise. He was the son of Mr. Mordecai Barbour's youngest brother, Philip Barbour, of Culpepper, who moved to Kentucky with his father in 1799. The mother of this young man consigned him, in 1828, to Messrs. Mark Alexander and John J. Barbour, of Virginia. They put him to school in Georgetown, District of Columbia, and in 1829, obtained a cadet's warrant for him. His father was then dead; he lost his life in the campaign of 1813, with Gen. Harrison, where he commanded a regiment at the Thames, and where he contracted the disease which, a year or two after, ended his life. The father was a great favorite of Mr. Madison, and he was in the habit of relating many anecdoted [sic] of him, some years ago." [Union.

Tuesday, November 3, 1846 REv43i54p4c3 THE STORMING OF MONTEREY
The following account of the operations of Gen. Worth's Division at Monterey and defense of Baylie Peyton, of this city, (says the New Orleans Picayune):

Monterey, Sept. 25, 1846.

My Dear Sir: After a most obstinate and sanguinary conflict, which was continued from day to day for five days, Gen. Ampudia capitulated this city on the 24th inst. Our loss in killed and wounded has been extremely severe, not less than 500, amongst whom are some of the most valuable officers of the regular army, as well as volunteers.

The 1st Regiment of Tennessee volunteers, commanded by Col. Campbell, suffered more severely, perhaps, than any other which was engaged during the siege, having had twenty-seven killed on the field, and seventy-seven wounded, some of them mortally, and many of them seriously, and this out of a force of only 379 men. Not withstanding this tremendous loss, the regiment charged under the lead of its gallant colonel and other officers, and was the first regiment which stormed the fort, mounted the breast-works, and unfurled the stars and stripes upon its walls, amidst a perfect hail-storm of balls, which was pouring upon it.

These Mexican towns and fortresses are incredibly strong, and few men fight better from housetops, and behind stone walls, or are more adroit in the use of stationary artillery than the Mexicans. In these actions Gen. Taylor had, all told, about 5,000 men; while Gen. Ampudia's force consisted of 10,500 infantry and cavalry, besides militia, rancheros, &c. Gen Taylor had eighteen pieces of artillery, of which seventeen were field pieces; while Gen. Ampudia had forty-four pieces; thrity-eight of which, with two standards of colors, are now in our possession.

Our Army arrived before Monterey the morning of Saturday the 19th inst., and about half-past 8 o'clock, while reconnoitering the out-works of the city, a ball, discharged from a 12 pounder, struck near Gen. Taylor and staff, and bounded with terrible velocity over his head, at which the old hero did not change a muscle or even bat his eye. This day, the 19th, was spent in making reconnoisances [sic] of the place, and its various outposts, amidst a good deal of firing on the part of the Mexicans, from cannon and a short gun called an escopette, which carries a large ball to a distance of 500 or 600 yards.

On Sunday, the 20th, Gen. Worth was detached by Gen. Taylor, in command of the 2d division of the regular Army (about 1500 strong) and Col. Hays's regiment of Texas Rangers (consisting of 400 men) with a view of turning the city and occupying the Saltillo road, for the purpose of cutting off the enemy's supplies and reinforcements, which were daily expected under Gen. Santa Anna. The division performed the march making a road, filling ditches, &c. - a distance of about six or seven miles, and reached the vicinity of the enemy in the evening, about 5 o'clock, when the General, with an escort from Col. Hays's Rangers, was fired on by the batteries placed on the heights, and also by a corps of the enemy's light troops, who were sent through a corn-field to cut off his party.

From this time until the appearance of the white flag, on the evening of the 24th, the division of the Army commanded by Gen. Worth was incessantly engaged, and was ever successful- never for one moment hesitating or faltering- putting to route the enemy's cavalry on the plains, driving his infantry through the chaparral and from the house-tops, scaling immense heights, capturing guns, and storming fortresses which were not only deemed impregnable but which seemed to be almost inaccessible. And, best of all, these brilliant exploits were performed with the loss of fourteen killed and fifty-six wounded; and during the four days' contest there occurred not the slightest error or mistake on the part of the commanding General, nor was there at any time the least faltering or hesitancy on the part of the officers and men- regulars and volunteers in executing his orders. Indeed, it is difficult to determine which is most worthy of admiration, the wisdom and energy displayed by the able and accomplished commander, or the gallantry and ardor with which he was sustained by those under his command.

When the difficulties and apparently insuperable obstacles are considered, I venture the assertion that the series of successes obtained by the division under Gen. Worth's command, in the recent operations against Monterey, will bear a favorable comparison with the proudest achievements of the American arms. He was opposed by a greatly superior force, which was well served with artillery and posted upon the highest peaks of the Sierra Madre. He stormed heights, took three pieces of artillery, turned them on the enemy, and with these and the aid of one of his own pieces- which he contrived to place upon the summit which commands the famous Bishop's Palace, eight hundred feet above the base of the mountain- united with the inestimable [sic] services rendered by the dauntless and invincible spirits who stormed these heights, he reduced that stronghold of the enemy and drove him into the city, upon which he turned the guns he had captured. He bivouacked his force for the night on the bleak mountain, and the next day, after bombarding the town, he conducted his forces into the streets amidst a shower of balls discharged at his person. He was seen everywhere, directing everything, driving the enemy from his batteries forcing him from street to street and house to house, until night ended the conflict. He maintained his position in the city, placed a ten-inch mortar in one of the strongly fortified squares, to direct which he placed that gallant and [skillful] [sic.] officer, Maj. Munroe, with instructions to fire a shell, (weighing ninety pounds.) every half hour during the night. This duty was performed with terrible effect, almost every shell falling in the plaza, where the enemy's forces were collected he number of 7000 or 8000 men. He had made every necessary preparation for pursuing his advantages the next day, even to placing some of his artillery on the tops of high buildings, which would command and sweep the house-tops from which the enemy fought.

Such was the state of preparation when Gen. Ampudia capitulated the city, reflecting equal honor upon the military skill of the head which conceived, and the indomitable energy of the gallant spirits who executed the plan of operations.
Our most serious loss occurred on the 21st, when Gen. Taylor only intended to make a diversion in favor of Gen. Worth, who was engaged in the attack on the other side of the town, but owing to the ardor and impetuosity of the troops, they very soon became involved in a general engagement, which Gen. Taylor felt bound to sustain. This excess of courage involved melancholy consequences, but it is surely a most excusable weakness, if it be a weakness, to display an excess of ardor in the field of battle.

The volunteers from the different States behaved in the most handsome manner. They have won for the citizen soldier the admiration and applause of the officers and soldiers of the regular Army, who speak of their conduct in the highest terms of approbation and eulogy. Amongst the volunteers none have shown more conspicuously than the 1st Regiment of Texas mounted riflemen, commanded by that Chevalier Bayard, Col. J. C. Hays, better known as Jack Hays. This corps, from the Colonel to the private, has fully sustained its former reputation. In the first affairs in which Gen. Worth's division was engaged on the morning of the 21st, Col. Hays, with several companies of his mounted riflemen, were thrown forward to open the ball, which he did most beautifully, encountering and shooting in the presence of the General the Colonel of dragons who commanded the enemy's forces. In scaling heights, storming batteries, and clambering over walls and house-tops, the voice of the gallant Colonel and the reports of the unerring rifle of the Ranger, were ever heard in the van. The courage and constancy, and subordination of this corps, is the theme of admiration in the Army.

But my object is narrative and not eulogy. It is not necessary for me to go into detail in relation to the terms accorded to the Mexican Army in the capitulation, as you will have seen the articles, or the substance thereof, published in the newspapers ere this reaches you. If anyone not acquainted with the facts of the case should object that our commanding general has granted terms too favorable to the retiring army, it be remembered that our invincible little army had already suffered severely in baring the bosoms of our best citizens, and bravest officers and soldiers, to the batteries of an unseen foe; that the city was still immensely strong in its defences [sic]; that the Mexican army was double that of our own; this army was in possession of the strongest part of a city, each house of which is a fortress within itself; that each remaining street was barricaded, and most of them defended by cannon; and that, when driven from the city, the Mexican army possessed a fortress called the Citadel, of immense capacity and great strength, to which the whole army could have retired. To have taken this work, without a siege train, as we were, by assault, would have cost us very dearly. Independently of these considerations, our provisions were growing short, and our ammunition was quite limited. We were far removed from our supplies and reinforcements—while the enemy might have been reinforced at any moment. And lastly, the policy avowed by our Government does not inculcate the idea that this is to be a vindictive or exterminating war against the people of Mexico, but on the contrary to conquer a peace, or in other words to whip Mexico to her own satisfaction, obtain our just rights, and conclude a peace upon terms such as would be becoming in a great and magnanimous nation towards a weak and distracted Government. All this has in my opinion been accomplished in as full, complete and ample a manner by the course pursued in the capitulation, as if we had stormed the citadel and put their whole army to the sword. This is, in my judgment, the last battle which will be fought in the Mexican war. Gen. Ampudia, in urging a pacific course on Gen. Taylor, stated repeatedly that he knew that Gen. Santa Anna was disposed to peace; that he was well assured that the course adopted would lead to peace between the two countries; that his object was to save the effusion of blood and the honor of his Government. But if the war is to be prosecuted, we are in the possession of one of the strongest, most healthy and beautiful places in Mexico; from which, when our reinforcements and supplies arrive, our army cannot be expelled by any force which Mexico will be able to send against it. We have taken arms and ammunition with which we can act offensively or defensively, according to the course of events and the policy of the government. If it be the policy of our Government to extend our boundary beyond the Rio Grande, then the line of the Rinconada, agreed upon as that beyond which the Mexican troops are to retire, is the most eligible which can be indicated by the geographical features of the country.

Gen. Ampudia and his army left this morning for Saltillo. He was treated with courtesy and respect by General Worth, whose quarters are in the city, and who accompanied him to the limits of the town. In fact, all of our troops displayed that forbearance which always marks the conduct of brave and magnanimous men towards those whom the fortune of war has placed in their power. You will observe that, in my narration of the events of the battles, I have confined myself to the operations of that division of the army which was commanded by General Worth. I have done so because I was with this command, near his person, saw what occurred, and know that which I have stated to be substantially correct. You are not to infer that I mean to intimate that the main army, under the command of General Taylor, did not perform feats equally worthy of the applause and admiration of the country. Other well informed as to the facts, and much better qualified for the duty, will no doubt give a detailed account of the operations of this portion of the army. Take the army altogether, and I doubt whether a superior body of men ever fought under the flag of our country.

Very truly, yours, & c.

REV43i55p2c1 Whig Justice

The most barefaced misrepresentation we have yet seen in the Whig press, is a charge in the Georgia Journal that the object of the administration is to involve a gallant army in difficulties impossible to surmount! It says that “the game is to be, an assault upon the gallant old Taylor and his inetitorious [sic] army,” and adds:
"General Taylor, then, is to garrison Monterey, and advance upon the city or Mexico with the remainder of his army. It not re-enforced, his advance will be a perilous one, and it re-in forced by one-half of the remaining troops in Mexico, his peril will be very little less. Some idea of the preparation made to meet him, may be gathered from an account, in another column, from the intelligent correspondent of the New Orleans Tropic, at Vera Cruz, under date of the 24th September.

"These preparations are making under the direction of Santa Anna, and all accounts agree that the Mexicans are rallying to the was, with renewed ardour. And it is under these peculiar circumstances, with an army diminished in numbers, and daily diminishing, that he is ordered to advance upon the city of Mexico itself. Do not Mr. Polk and his advisers expect more than "[...] of arms"- more than wonders from the old hero? - or do they intend to make a sacrifice of him, from the most selfish, the meanest ambition?"

Can anything be more wantonly absurd than the above? The Whigs say that this is "the President's war," forced upon the country for personal objects! Yet this liberal and far seeing Whig Editor actually charges the President with the design of placing this army in a position where it must be cut to pieces! It the army be designedly, does not the President willfully destroy all hopes of "glory" and personal advantages, which the Whigs charge him with having exclusively in view? But it is useless to dwell upon such an absurdly suicidal argument.

Let us look at another Whig speculation. In the Baltimore Patriot we find the following:

"If it shall turn out, as we cannot believe it will, that Gen. Taylor and his army, cut off from all communication with the rest of the army, have been or will be entrapped, so that disaster shall fall upon him or his soldiers, the responsibility of such disaster and the loss of life that it may involve, will be laid to the charge of the Administration, who have hurried Gen Taylor on to Monterey, without furnishing him with adequate supplies, and have left him there without providing the means of keeping open the communication between him and the forces on the Rio Grande.

"But we trust no such disaster has befallen the gallant General or his gallant army. We have full confidence that they will be able to maintain their position against any force that may be brought against them, though we cannot help sharing in the apprehension that they may be exposed to get privation and dangers, from an attempt of the enemy to cut off his intercourse with the Rio Grande, from which he must get his supplies."

So anxious is the Whig editor to throw odium upon the Executive, that it imagines a disaster, and in the same breath "cannot believe it will" happen- at the same time it has "full confidence" in any event, that the army "will be able to maintain its position against any force that may be brought against them." Was there ever so strange a device to make political capital?

Again, hear the N.O. Tropic-

"We have no fears of the indomitable Taylor. His victory at Monterey is a perfect guaranty for the future. It, however, reverses [sic] should be his fortune, we shall hold the Government responsible for the faux pas of sending him forward with so small a force, into the midst of a swarming enemy, and in the face of an opposing army whose legions may hardly be numbered."

In the first place Gen, Taylor is "indomitable," and will plant the victorious Eagles of the Union wherever he goes. But "it reverses should be his fortune," the Government is to be held responsible for "reverses of fortune," as if, in the language of the N.O. Courier, Mr. Polk had the fickle goddess under bond and security to do just as he pleases. There are [acc......] [...] human energy or prudence can prevent. Brave and efficient armies have been foiled and defeated by circumstances, which sprung from the merest accident, such as false information, the combination of the elements, or other "reverse of fortune"-yet, in such a case, the Government is to be held responsible.

We have not been chary of our praises of old "Rough and Ready". We have taken pride in expressing our confidence in the man and the soldier, and we still believe that he will do his whole duty, and again disappoint the Whig predictions of his defeat. But, at the same time, it must be admitted [sic] that he is necessarily clothed with a high responsibility, and that much is to be left to his judgment and discretion. He will, of course, take every means of concentrating his forces, and we are satisfied that he will be able to prepare himself to meet and overthrow any Mexican force that may oppose him. But the battle is not always to the strong; and it is within the range of possibility, that accident or a "reverse of fortune" may lead to disaster. Is it fair that, while the Administration are to have no credit for the brilliant victories of our army, it should be held responsible for all the accidents which human energy and prudence could not prevent?

But, we feel assured, that our brave officers and soldiers will once more throw to the winds the cavilling and grumbling prophecies of the Whigs. Even the Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Express, while charging the War Department with gross inefficiencies, refers to an expected battle at San Luis Potosi with the new army of Mexico concentrated under Santa Anna, and declares unequivocally [sic] "The result will be as certain a victory to our arms as that a battle shall be fought. Let the Mexican army, therefore, be what it may, in point of numbers, there can be no danger of defeat."

Let the Whig press have no fears that the Administration will fail to do justice to Gen. Taylor. Everything shows that the Administration regard him with kindness and grateful confidence. Is it too much to ask of the Whigs, to extend to the Administration common justice,- and not condemn it in advance, upon the flimsiest pretexts manufactured for the occasion? The President has every reason to hope for the continued triumph of our arms and a speedy and permanent peace. Did he harbor the designs imputed to him by his political opponents, he would be acting in direct opposition to the dictates of human nature and common sense— to say nothing of more elevated feelings, which we shall not ask the Whigs to concede to him.

Friday, November 6, 1846 REv43i55p3c4 TO THE EDITOR OF THE UNION

I send you an article that appeared in the "Telegraph". It is curious that the papers referred to have never seen the light. Publish the [...] [one line illegible]. New York, Oct. 7. (From the N. Y. Telegraph)

MEXICO. -Every information that can be obtained in regard to Mexico, at the present time, is desirable, and anxiously sought for and published. The Department of State at Washington, if the files are examined, are in possession of a great deal of information in regard to Mexico, which might be useful at this time.
Under the impression that, in consequence of the rapid and constant changes of clerks and officers in the department, which have taken place, the present clerks may not know of the existence of the papers to which I refer, I beg leave to refresh their memories, by stating the following circumstances:

After the arraignment, trial and acquittal of Col. Burr, it is well known that gentlemen went to France; that, long prior to his going, he had very assiduously searched for and obtained all kinds of information that was deemed useful or necessary to a successful invasion of Mexico, which he had long contemplated.

These papers and documents he took with him to France. Whilst at Paris, Colonel Burr requested an interview with Bonaparte, proposing an invasion of Mexico, and offering to take a command in the proposed expedition. Bonaparte [....][one line unreadable] the Secretary of War, Col. B. was informed the emperor would receive any written communication he was disposed to make. After some deliberation, and a delay of three months, Col. B. sent in a proposition, accompanied by a voluminous memoir, detailing all the advantages to be derived by an invasion of Mexico. This memoir contained an accurate description of its geographical position, military resources- its roads, rivers, mountains, defiles and points suitable for defence [sic]. The mode and directions in which it was to be attacked- the routes to be avoided- the places proper to secure and fortify- the resources for sustaining the army- the use that might be made of the mines- their relative position, condition, production and every other matter useful and necessary to be known and understood by an invading General.

After the "memoir" a proposition was received. The government of France deliberated upon it, and referred it to a "council of war." In the meantime General Armstrong, our minister then resident at Paris, by some means "got wind" of what was going on, and had tact enough to acquire a thorough knowledge of Colonel B.'s plans. By his remonstrances [sic] Bonaparte was induced to decline their acceptance or adoption. And in the sequel General Armstrong frustrated all the arrangements of Col. Burr, who was in consequence obliged to leave France. At all events, he deemed his longer stay in Paris unnecessary.

After Colonel B.'s departure, copies of all these papers, maps, plans, and documents presented to Bonaparte, were obtained by General Armstrong and transmitted to the Secretary of State at Washington, where I have no doubt, if search be made for them, they may be found.

I have never seen any notice or allusion to these papers, in any work or document published in the United States. Mr. Gallatin probably saw them, and may remember something about them.

The writer had his information from the late Count St. Seari d' Angely, the former attorney general of France, and once, and at the time alluded to, the confidential counsellor and devoted friend of "Napoleon," (who resided during his exile many years in this city.) I respectfully suggest to the Secretary of War the propriety of causing a search to be made for these papers, satisfied they will be found useful and important to him, in conducting the present war with Mexico.

The editor of the Courrier des Etats Unis has seen a letter from Havana which says Santa Anna took with him from Havana a score of Spanish officers of acknowledged ability, among whom was Narciso Lopez, a Christino officer, who has played a distinguished part in the late civil wars of Spain. The Courrier thinks they will prove very useful auxiliaries for the Mexican Generalissimo.

Friday, November 6, 1846 REv43i55p3c4 AN EVENING VISIT TO THE WHITE HOUSE

To the Editors of the Enquirer:

AN EVENING VISIT TO THE WHITE HOUSE

Gentlemen: If you will kindly allow me a part of one of your well-filled columns, I will give your numerous readers a little sketch of a casual visit to the White House on Friday evening last. We were met by Mr. Walker, the Private Secretary, (I should remark the President was absent when we entered) with much politeness, and received by Mrs. Polk in the kindest, and, at the same time, most graceful manner. It may be said with truth, she is a lady of commanding dignity at all times, and her conversation, generally of the most agreeable character, is always happily directed. In my judgment, at no period in our history have we seen the hospitalities and ceremonies of the White House more handsomely dispensed, or displayed with greater Republican simplicity, than at the present time. If my observation be correct, no invidious or improper distinction seems to be made in the circle of visitors. There is no imposing movement or extra formality exhibited when a Secretary or some other high officer of Government presents himself. The quiet and unheralded citizen receives a polite and cordial salutation, as well as the haughty millionaire, or some proud Minister of State. And this is precisely as it should be—a just and beautiful commentary, alike upon our noble institutions and the charming social qualities of the President and his family.

I was struck, not only with the easy and fascinating manners of Mrs. Polk, but equally with her patriotic sentiments and feelings. A gallant Lieutenant, just from the bloody but glorious conflict at Monterey, was there also, and as Mrs. P. gracefully carried back his thoughts to the distant field of his early fame, he caught the inspiration at once and dwelt briefly, for her entertainment, upon some of the thrilling incidents of those scenes. In the course of this animated conversation, (to which I was a favored listener,) the modest young officer remarked, in a playful manner, that something, (I do not now recollect what,) was rather too Democratic; to which Mrs. Polk replied, that "whatever sustained the honor and advanced the interests of the country, whether regarding as Democratic or not, she admired and applauded." the sentiment was truly a noble one.

I will conclude, gentlemen, by wishing our Republican President and his honored household, increased happiness and great "length of days," and yourselves eminent success in the glorious cause of Democracy.

Friday, November 6, 1846 REv43i55p4c3 The Army of Chihuahua

[from the New Orleans Picayune, Oct. 27]

From Maj. M.C.M. Hammond, U.S.A., who arrived a day or two since from Port Lavacca and San Antonio, Texas, we obtain the following information:

One half of Gen. Wool's army left San Antonio for the Presidio on the Rio Grande on the 20th of September. The General went in person on the 29th. The remainder, consisting of sixteen companies of Illinois infantry and four companies of Arkansas cavalry, were under command of Col. Churchill, Inspector General U. S. A. Between the 5th and 8th of October eight of these companies marched, commanded by Col. Hardin; and Col. Churchill was to have conducted the remainder on the 14th, leaving one or two companies in garrison at Bexar, to protect supplies and furnish [sic] escorts.

Gen. W. expected to reach Presidio in twelve days. He will establish a depot at that point, until it is ascertained whether steamers can ascend the Rio Grande to a position more suitable for his operations. His army will cross the river on a flying bridge, boats for which were constructed at San Antonio, under the direction of Capt. Fraser, engineer, and were transported in wagons. The river at the crossing is said to be near 400 yards wide, from 50 to 100 of which are swimming, and with a rapid current of six miles the hour. If opposed by a considerable force, the passage would be exceedingly difficult and could not be effected without great loss.

Col. Harney's command, in July, were compelled to swim about sixty yards, and the stream so scattered them, that 100 resolute men, as asserted by some of his officers could have prevented their landing.

As soon as supplies are received to enable him to advance, Gen. Wool will press on to Chihuahua, taking Santa Rosa and Monclova in his route. The former town is garrisoned with regular troops, and is said to be capable of strong resistance. This line of operations is longer than might be selected, but it has the advantage of turning the mountain passes- of abundance of water and some provisions- and runs within 70 or 80 miles of Gen. Taylor's, when co-operation can be readily elected if necessary.

Gen. Wool has exhibited great activity and energy in preparing for the march. On arriving at San Antonio, on the 14th of August, he was far in advance of his army and his supplies and met with innumerable obstacles in procuring wagons, teams, forage and provisions. He moved his forces at the earliest practicable moment, with so limited a number of rations as scarcely to justify his advance.

It is found impossible to transport supplies by water to the Presidio or other point on the Rio Grande whence to furnish the army, it will be necessary to haul all their provisions from Port Lavacca, by way of San Antonio, a distance to Chihuahua of nearly 800 miles, and through a country in rainy seasons almost impassable for heavy wagons. It will be seen that this enterprise is gigantic, and its accomplishment will be an achievement more arduous and more creditable than a brilliant victory.

The command consists of the following officers and troops:

STAFF:

Capt. Lee and Fraser, Corps Engineers,

Capt. Hughes, and Lieutenants Sitgreaves and Franklin, Topographical Engineers.

Lieutenant Kingdbury, Ordnance Corps.

Major Thomas, Quarter Masters Captains Cross, Wall, Chapman and Chilton, Assistant Quartermasters.

Dr. Hitchcock, Medical Director; Drs. Simpson, Levely, and several Volunteer Surgeons.

LINE:

1 Company Light Artillery;
2 do. 1st Dragoons;
2 do. 2d Dragoons;
1 Regiment Arkansas Cavalry;
3 Companies 6th Regular Infantry;
1 do. Kentucky Infantry;
2 Regiments Illinois Infantry.

The Kentucky Regiment of Cavalry left Lavacca on the 13th October for Matamoras. About forty of them had died, fifty to seventy had been discharged, and one hundred sick were sent to Matamoras by water. At one time it was said that three hundred men were on the sick report. The Tennessee Cavalry followed the Kentucky Regiment on the 16th.

Friday, November 6, 1846  REv43i55p4c3 Letter From General Butler

LETTER FROM GEN. BUTLER- PARTICULARS OF HIS CHARGE -HIS WOUND-BRAVERY OF HIS TROOPS - ABANDONMENT OF HIS ATTACK. & c.

The following are extracts from a letter of Gen. Butler to a near relative in Louisville, Ky. The General says, in the same letter that it is the opinion of those Mexican officers who have been taken prisoners by our army, that their Government will at once offer to ours terms of peace:

MONTEREY, SEPT. 25, 1846

Monterey is ours, but not without a heavy loss, and my division has probably sustained more than one half of it. I am myself wounded, but not badly. I was struck by a musket ball below the knee; it entered in front, grazed the bones without injuring them, ranged round through the flesh and came out on the opposite side.

I became faint from loss of blood, and was compelled to leave the field after having been in it under a heavy fire of grape and musketry for three hours. I have been required by my surgeon to keep perfectly still, ever since the battle.

I was in the act of leading the Ohio Regiment to storm two of the most formidable batteries in the town, flanked by a stone wall, ten feet high, with a deep ditch in front, and covered by a strong musketry force in the rear, under complete shelter. There were two other batteries of grape-shot discharged, that swept the ground continually.

Col. Mitchell, who commanded the regiment of Ohio volunteers, was wounded about the same time that I was, and we then prudently abandoned the enterprise, as we became convinced that our loss would have been, probably, at least one hundred more men, had we persevered.

I hope you will not think I acted rashly. I know that I am often rash where I involve myself alone; not so, however, when the fate of others is at stake.

The condition in which we were placed fully justified, if it did not positively require us to make the attempt. The peculiarity of our situation I cannot now explain without going into greater detail than I am able to do.

The battle commenced about 9 o'clock A. M., and continued without intermission, with various degrees of intensity for eight hours.

I had almost 1000 men in the battle, (the Louisville Legion having been left to guard our mortars.) and of the number we lost in killed and wounded about 250.

We took one battery and a house fided [sic] up as a fortification, and assisted the regulars in taking a second. Gen Worth, with great gallantry and equal success, and with far less loss, carried on his operations on the opposite side of the town.

The loss of the regulars who acted with us, was nearly proportional to ours, as I learn, though I have not seen the official returns.

Under all these circumstances, the terms of the capitulation are favorable to us. There are still several strong forts in the hands of the enemy, which we would have been compelled to take by regular approaches or with heavy losses. The plaza is of itself an enormous fortification of continuous houses, with thick stone walls, and all the streets leading into it strongly fortified and filled with guns.

They admit that they will have at least 8,000 fighting men, whilst on our part we cannot muster 5,000 for duty, and have only a few heavy guns, and them we took from them.

Never, I believe, did troops, both volunteers and regulars, behave with more calmness and intrepidity, and I do not believe that for downright, straightforward, hard fighting, the battle of Monterey has ever been surpassed.

Friday, November 6, 1846 REv43i55p4c5 THE MEXICAN WAR

The Republican pronounces our war with Mexico as "flagrantly unjust" being produced entirely by the reckless policy of marching an army to the Rio Grande, and occupying territory which was, "at best, debateable [sic] ground." We on the contrary, look upon the war as founded upon as just and righteous grounds, as far as we are concerned, as any that History records. It was forced upon us, against all our endeavors for peace, and while we were defending our own soil, which it would have been highly criminal to abandon to foreign invasion.

While, then, we have no hope of convincing the Republican of the justice of the war, we deem it proper to recapitulate the grounds upon which we base our claim to the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, which General Taylor was ordered to hold and protect.

First, the Treaty between Houston and Santa Anna, by which the Rio Grande, throughout its whole length, was made the boundary between Texas and Mexico, and this boundary was also recognized by the Texan Congress of 1836. Indeed the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, was represented in the Convention in Texas, and in the Texan Congress, and called San Patricio. After the Annexation of Texas, the United States' revenue laws were thrown over it, and provision made for a superintendent or inspector, South of the Nueces.

It was part and parcel of the ancient province of Louisiana, ceded by France to the United States, for a valuable consideration. Jefferson and Madison recognized the Rio Grande as the true original limit of Louisiana, and contended that Spain never had a right to any possession beyond that river.

We admitted Texas with that territory into the Union, and as such, she was previously recognized as an independent nation by England, France and Holland.

In sending our army, then, to protect that territory, which was clearly a part of the U. States, the President acted in exact conformity to his solemn oath.

But, says the Republican, had Gen. Taylor remained at Corpus Christi, (itself beyond the Neues,) there would have been no conflict of arms. This theory is disproved by the fact, that despatches [sic] from the Mexican President to General Arista were intercepted, in which instructions were given to the latter to cross the Rio Grande, which was accordingly done, and the first act of war consummated on the part of Mexico. For our lives, with these facts before us, we cannot see the "flagrant injustice" of this war, as far as our country is concerned.

Friday, November 6, 1846 REv43i55p4c6 CAPT. STEWART

[Baltimore Sun]

We learn (says the Baltimore Sun,) that Gov. Pratt received on Saturday, from Gen. Taylor, an official announcement of the death of Lieut. Col. Wm. H. Watson, also informing him that Capt. Stewart had been promoted by seniority, as well as by the "unanimous" voice of the officers of the Baltimore battalion, to the vacancy thus occasioned. Gov. Pratt immediately forwarded the document to the President of the United States, with the recommendation that Capt. Stewart be officially confirmed as Lieut. Colonel of the battalion, and we have no doubt that his commission is now enroute to the "seat of war". [AMB]
The Whig has utterly failed to raise a storm from the Whig press against the "gross outrage" and "unwarrantable usurpation" carried out in "Brigadier General Governor Kearney's" Proclamation, "annexing" the whole of New Mexico, in violation of the Constitution and of international law! Some of its Whig associates are not only "mute," but actually sanction the "despotic" proceeding! What will the Whig and National Intelligencer say to the following remarks of the Whig Herald of Norfolk? "Speaking of guns," have those horror-stricken journals ever informed their readers that this "Proconsol of the President"- this "Brigadier General Governor Kearney"- is a Whig?

"It is wrong to bring in question the politics of those who fight their country's battles. For our part, without knowing or caring to know, the politics of Gen. Kearney, when we read his proclamation we saw no reason to censure his course. For the present, his proclamation may serve a good purpose; but unless ratified by the higher powers of the Government, it can only prove a mere brutum fulmen."

[Correspondence, Baltimore Sun]

Washington, 1st November 1846

IMPORTANT - Despatches have been received from General Kearney, who is hale and hearty at Santa Fe, fortifying it according to the most approved rule of Vauban, and erecting a Fort which, in honor of the present Secretary of War, he has called "Fort Marcy."

General Kearney finds the people of New Mexico in excellent spirits, and delighted with the prospects of becoming citizens of the United States. It is as if their property, their lives, and their prosperity had been insured to them, and they were now permitted to draw the first free breath of life.

Our troops throughout received nothing but the kindest treatment from the inhabitants, and were well pleased with their vocation. Their wants were liberally supplied by the hospitable people of that province, and they were treated not as enemies, but as deliverers of the country.

The General made an excursion South, about one hundred miles to the village of Tome, without meeting any resistance, and it is probable the Mexican Government entertains no idea of disputing us the quiet possession of that country. It has certainly provided no means for its defence, and alienated the affection of the people, whom it only plundered by the appointment of some military favorite as Governor.

General Kearney will probably effect a junction with our forces on the Pacific, in order to take possession of California. It is thought he will arrive there in November, consequently quite in time for the anticipated movement of our troops. He may for that purpose take the Southern route down the Del Norte, follow the Gila, cross the Colorado, and take up his march along the Pacific. Quivivra, verra.

Monday Morning, November 9, 1846,

MAJ. GEN. WM. O. BUTLER

In justice to this distinguished and gallant officer, and as a refutation of the charges of an infuriated party press, we give place to the following, from the New Orleans Delta of the 30th October. These charges, conflicting as they did with each other, were, first, that General Butler rashly exposed his troops to the destructive fire of the Mexicans, and secondly, that he exhibited a [word unreadable] of nerve in storming the enemy's batteries. We were confident that the charges had their origin in partisan feelings, and so expressed ourselves. We are glad to see that several Whig papers, and among others the Louisville Journal, have stepped forward to do justice to the reputation of a gallant officer. But to the article from the N.O. Delta:

"The statement of a letter-writer, published in the Baltimore Sun, in regard to an alleged difficulty between Generals Taylor and Butler, on the occasion of the desperate charge which proved so fatal to Col. Garland's brigade, causing the death of Col. Watson, of the Baltimore volunteers, and many other distinguished officers, is, we are assured by good authority, totally untrue. Col. Garland's brigade was detached, and had orders to advance under the direction of Maj. Mansfield of the Engineers, and if he encountered a battery to take it. The brigade, however, advanced nearer to the town than was prudent, and was suddenly opened upon from three distinct forts, of the existence of which neither General Taylor, Maj. Mansfield, nor Col. Garland, had any idea at the time of the advance. Gen. Butler had nothing to do with this command; it acted under the express orders of Gen. Taylor.

[AMB]

The Southern mail of Saturday morning brought us the painful news of the death of two distinguished officers, viz: Col. Wm. S. Fisher, formerly of Richmond and son of the late Mr. James Fisher - and Capt. Francis S. Early; both of whom died at Galveston, Texas, on the 26th of October. Mr. Kendall, one of the Editors of the N. O. Picayune, writing from Galveston on the 27th of October, says:

"From Monterey to Matamoras, among both Americans and Mexicans, a great deal of sickness prevails - chills and fevers and intermitting fevers. I have come in for more than a full share of both, but am now on the mend. I regret to state that two able officers died here last night and are to be buried this afternoon- Col. Wm. S. Fisher, who commanded the noted Mier expedition, and Capt. Francis S. Early, who commanded the Washington company of Texas Rangers at the battles of Monterey. The former had just married a young and accomplished wife; the latter was hourly expecting his family to meet him at this place."

FROM VERA CRUZ

We have nothing of importance from Mexico by way of Havana but have been admitted to make an extract from a commercial [sic] letter of a late date. It is from a [ . . . ] to all respect:

Vera Cruz, Oct. 1, 1846.

Dear Sir:- There is very little news worth reporting. The present government is trying to render itself popular by a series of rather liberal measures, and appears willing to recommence the campaign more rigorously. Gen. Santa Anna is about to leave Mexico in order to assume the generalship in chief of the troops concentrated in San Luis Potosi; but we confess to have the very worst opinion of the Mexican army, and do not believe that they will make any vigorous resistance to the American troops. The main difficulty will be, moreover, the entire want of money, as in the coffers of the treasury there is not even enough wherewith to pay the most necessary and urgent exigences, and the credit of Government is very much shaken indeed. It is true that the clergy will guarantee a loan of some millions of dollars, but we do not believe that this amount will be procured, and even if it were undoubtedly the largest part will consist in Government paper, which is very difficult to realize in this moment.

Letter to the Editor

[from the New Orleans Delta, November 2]

LETTER TO THE EDITOR FROM MEXICO

By the brig. P. Soule, from Havana, we have received our files of Mexican papers. The dates from the capital are to the 26th September.

We find nothing in the later numbers about the departure of Santa Anna towards Monterey. So far from that, he was still in the capital mustering his forces for the contemplated expedition.

The Diario del Gobierno says that all the rich people of Mexico would do well in following Santa Anna's example - contributing liberally towards the support of the war- or else the mob would go where they knew the money was, and take it to the soldiers who defended the country. Then it adds, that the Clergy had consented to mortgage [sic] their property for $2,000,000; that the merchants and wealthy citizens of Mexico would deliver to the Government on the 25th September $500,000 for the purpose of the war; that the same amount would be delivered on the 5th October, and equal sums would be paid every month.

Senor [Gomez de] la Cortina had made himself a loan of $50,000, without any conditions as to premium or time of reimbursement.

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 REv43i56p1c7 LATER FROM MONTEREY

[from the New Orleans Tropic, Oct. 31]

The steamship Palmetto, Lewis arrived last night, in 36 hours from Galveston. Among the passengers, were Dr. Conrad and Lieut. Nichols, U. S. A.; Lieuts. Dorfendorf, Price, (reported dead,) Smith and Smedes, of the Mississippi volunteers, and Lieut. Read, of the Texas Rangers, with 41 volunteers.

Lieut. Col. McClung was rapidly recovering from the effects of his wounds. One of the officers of his Regiment informs us that the gallant Colonel was the first man that showed himself on the first fort stormed by General Taylor's Division, and that he received his wounds whilst waving his sword aloft, and cheering on his men, shouting "Victory!". The musket ball struck him on his left hand whilst holding his scabbard to his hip, and cut off two of his fingers, glancing from the scabbard and entering his abdomen, fracturing, in its course, the bone above the hip-joint.

General Ampudia has issued another proclamation since his retreat from Monterey, calling upon the Mexicans to flock to his standard to repel the invaders of their soil. His excuse, in the proclamation, for defeat at Monterey, and the surrender of that city to our troops, is A WANT OF AMMUNITION! The utter falsity of this statement is well known, for any quantity of ammunition was found at Monterey after the capitulation.
WHAT CAN BE DONE FOR MEXICO? - It is high time that we in England should take into serious consideration the question, What can be done to save the miserable and impotent Republic of Mexico from extinction as an independent nation? Apart from all the problematical evil consequences of its absorption into the United States- and they are momentous- the fate of Mexico has an immediate practical importance for all classes of men in this country, being inseparably identified with that of a vast amount of British capital. Expunge Mexico from the list of nations, and with the same blow you put out the fires on thousands of English hearths. Already we have suffered enough by the waste and decay of the wealth we have invested in that country the annihilation of what remains would scatter bankruptcy among our merchants, paralyze our industry, disorder all the functions of our national life and spread starvation among our working classes. And this is the conclusion to which events are tending in a rapid and accumulating flood, that must inevitably bear down all such flimsy barriers as Santa Anna's countrymen can set up against it.

That the United States are bent on seizing the whole Mexican territory, is a fact they scarcely condescend to disguise. The manner in which they intend to effect their purpose is also apparent; it is the same as that by which they have already secured Texas; the same piratical system as that by which they had begun to possess themselves of Louisiana, before they had the opportunity of acquiring it in the more legitimate way of purchase. The present petty warfare they are waging on the frontier is but an episode in the great plot. Gen. Taylor's force is but the precursor of the real army of invasion- the squatter and backwoodsman men in whom it is a hereditary and invincible instinct always to depart from before the approach of civilization, to avoid every spot where law has become established, and never to feel themselves thoroughly at home except on debatable ground. [By men like these, coming by two and threes, then by scores and hundreds, and finally in multitudes, like carrion birds to the quarry, the Northern provinces of the Republic will be overrun; and thence the process will be continued until the whole territory is filled and mastered by these unprincipled and desperately energetic immigrants.] Already many of the provinces have shown a willing alacrity to meet the destiny they foresee; not from any affection they bear to their encroaching neighbors, but because they are weary of anarchy, hopeless of relief from their own wretched nominal Governments, and eager to accede to the blessings of law and order from any power strong enough to secure them.

Mexico must be tranquilized, and her strength consolidated by good and stable government, or she is lost. This has long been felt by her allies; and they have even suggested and indirectly urged the adoption of the means that seemed to them most likely to bring about the desired result. The proposed panacea was the conversion of the Republic into a Monarchy, the sceptre [sic] of which should be swayed by some European Royal cadet. It is needless to discuss the abstract inherits of this plan, since it is a mere figment of political speculation, at present beyond the scope of any practical discussion.

There is but one sure way to save Mexico, and that is to transfer fresh, healthy blood into her languid veins; to colonize a portion of her magnificent territory with a people worthy to occupy and able to defend it. If Mexico were to mingle a portion of the Ango-Saxon element with their population, she might venture to cope with the moiety of that indomitable race that now threatens her existence. In our paper, last week, on the project of cutting a ship-canal through the great American isthmus, we pointed out the admirable opportunity now offered for peopling the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and realizing the incalculable natural advantages of one of the most eligible commercial [sic] sites on the face of the globe. That majestic region teeming with boundless wealth, washed by two oceans, traversed through half its breadth by a navigable river, which offers at its mouth the finest harbor in the Gulf of Mexico, may now be secured by Englishmen. Will they refuse to accept a region which was selected by the sagacious mind of the great conqueror Cortez to constitute his own private domain If so, the French will be delighted to grasp the prize we disdain.[AMB]

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 REv43i56p3c1 POETICAL.

A fair friend has sent us the following beautiful lines as appropriate to the present moment.- All will appreciate their spirit, when applied to the brilliant victories of our army, but which cost the country much of its best blood. Let the solemn dirge be chanted in memory of the gallant soldiers who fell on the Rio Grande and at Monterey- and let martial strains swell upon the air in honor of the living heroes of those hard-fought fields. It would be cruel and heartless to desecrate such thrilling associations by mingling them with the light and frivolous amusements or enjoyments of the hour:

On seeing the "Waterloo Waltz" in a list of Music.

A moment pause, ye British fair,
While Pleasure's phantom ye pursue,
And see if dance or sprightly air
Suit with the name of Waterloo!

Glorious was the victory,
Chasten'd should the triumph be;
Midst the laurels she has won,
Britain weeps for many a son.
Veil’d in clouds the morning rose,
Nature seem’d to mourn the day
Which consign’d, before its close,
Thousands to their kindred clay.

How unfit for court or ball,
Or the giddy festival,
Was the grim and ghastly view,
Ere they closed at Waterloo!

See the Highland warrior rushing,
First in danger on the foe,
Till the life-blood warmly gushing,
Lays the plaided hero low;

His native pipes' accustom’d sound,
Mid war's infernal concert drown'd,
Cannot soothe his last adieu,
Or wake his sleep on Waterloo.

Crashing o'er the cuirassier,
See the foaming charger flying,
Trampling in his wild career,
All alike, the dead and dying:

See the bullets through his side,
Answered by the crimson tide;
Helmet, horse, and rider too!
Roll on bloody Waterloo.

Shall sounds like these the dance inspire?
A wake the enliv'ning sounds of mirth?
Oh! shivered be the recreant lyre
That gave the base idea birth.

Other sounds I ween were there,
Other music rent the air,
Other waltz the warrior knew
When they closed at Waterloo.

Forbear, till Time, with lenient hand,
Has heal'd the pang of recent sorrow,
And let the picture distant stand,
The soften'd tone of years to borrow.

When our race has passed away,
Hand unborn shall wake the lay,
And give to joy alone the view.
Of Britian's fame at Waterloo.

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 REv43i56p3c1 Latest From Havana

By the packet brig. P. Soule, the New Orleans Delta has received its regular files of Havana papers to the 24th October. They are filled with accounts of the hurricane of the 10th and 11th Oct. On the 10th, (being the Queen's birth-day,) the city, and particularly the port, presented the most gay and pleasant appearance- every vessel in the harbor flaunting its colors at its mast-head. The next day all was desolation and ruin. Dead bodies, fragments of vessels, bales of goods, produce, &c., were seen scattered in wild confusion over the angry surge. Over 1500 houses were razed to the ground in Havana and neighboring cities!

About 90 persons had already been found dead among the ruins of the city, and many more were expected to be found. The Havana papers say the gale of 1844 was slight compared to this. Property to a considerable amount had also been destroyed in Matanzas, Cardenas, and some 30 or 40 of the neighboring towns. There were 160 vessels lost and injured in the port of Havana- among them were 16 American merchantmen. The packet ship Mudara, arrived from N. York on the 10th, was nearly lost. The Government had issued orders for supplying the destitute with the necessaries of life. The "Principal" Theatre, one of the finest public buildings in Havana, was destroyed.

Tuesday, November 10, 1846 REv43i56p3c1 Miscellaneous

[FROM THE CHARLESTON MERCURY]

There is one feature in the extracts we yesterday published from Mexican Papers, that deserves to be noticed. There is no more of the old-fashioned, bragging and blustering. Their tone is despondent, and in their humility, they allow the truth to escape- that the Government is without means, the provinces without courage or preparation, and they are beset by a determined, active and powerful enemy. The bloodless conquest of California and New Mexico- the advance of Gen. Wool upon Chihuahua with as little prospect of serious opposition- the rapid march of Gen. Taylor upon Monterey- were events that singly were exciting enough; but, all together, they overwhelmed the Capital with terror and amazement. At the time these extracts were written, there remained one hope of safety to the Republic, in a successful defence [sic] of Monterey. The following letter from a Mexican, written a day before the arrival of Gen. Taylor, shows how much was expected from the preparations at that place:

"To-day, if the attack we every moment expect from the Yankees is realized, there is not a doubt but the cause of the people will triumph. - Our army has just received a most opportune reinforcement of five thousand men, with sixteen pieces of cannon of the very best quality, so that our whole available force is thirteen thousand seven hundred and fifty regular troops, besides the assistance we may reasonably expect from the inhabitants. Immediately on the arrival of Gen. Ampudia, the city was declared under martial law, but although we are thus deprived of perfect liberty temporarily, we are thankful that we shall soon be recompensed for the deprivation by a great triumph over the enemy.

"Gen. Taylor is at Ceralvo, detained by a scanty supply of mules, but determined to march upon us with his present force of about three thousand men, thinking the city is not guarded. We shall give him a glorious reception indeed, and when the news of his fool-hardiness returns to his countrymen, they will know that the glory of the Mexican flag is not to be sullied without a struggle. - Our troops are at work day and night barricading the houses, mounting cannon and doing everything to render the city impregnable. A soldier was shot by order of General Ampudia, charged with treason, and a proclamation of death to any engaged in traffic with the Americans, has been issued by our brave Gen. Ampudia."

What a joyous and triumphant spirit breathes through this letter! And yet the anticipations of the writer were really moderate. Doubtless Ampudia had given an exaggerated estimate of his own force and a greatly diminished one of the enemy, for the sake of encouraging his troops; but he could not have deceived them so far as to multiply seven thousand into thirteen thousand. There were certainly not less than ten thousand regular troops in the city, with probably five thousand new levies- and these with the advantage of a powerful artillery and strong fortifications. Gen. Taylor's force was six thousand five hundred men, one half of whom had never seen a battle, and his artillery force was feeble. With such enormous disparity in men, in guns and in the advantage of position, it would have been very strange if the Mexicans had expected anything but a decisive victory, and those who underrate the character of Gen. Taylor's success, do injustice to one of the most brilliant achievements in the annals of war.

If we may judge from the tone of the Mexican journals- humbled and despondent, - before the capture of Monterey, that event is likely to extinquish [sic] their last hope of successful resistance, and to lead at no distant day to the conclusion of a durable peace. The rumor that Santa Anna was at Saltillo before the end of September with a strong force, is alike destitute of proof and of probability. Still, having accepted the command of the army, he will doubtless try to do something. -

His hopes of the Presidency must rest upon his conduct for the next two months, and hence we look for a show of military operations and perhaps some substantial fighting; but what is done hereafter will be merely in the way of making terms for a peace. All idea of maintaining the war with the United States, as nation against nation, must have ended with the battle of Monterey.

Friday, November 13, 1846 REv43i57p1c4 NORTHERN WHIGGERY AND ABOLITION

The blindest must see that the course pursued by the Northern Whig press and Whig public meetings, is far from producing thatcordial feeling of union between the different sections of the country, which Washington so solemnly and so strongly enforced. With but few exceptions, they denounce the South for selfishness, for aiming at despotic domination, and for shaping her policy so as to sacrifice the rest of the Union to her "slaveholding monopoly." The South cannot support any question of great national benefit- it cannot advocate any system of just and equal laws, but the Whig journals and politicians of the North assail her motives as steeped in selfishness, and as looking alone to the extension of slavery. Fired with this wild notion, they raise [...] [missing line(s)]

"We regard such a measure as dangerous to the purity of the elective franchise. We regard the Negroes, as a class, as incapable of self-government. Such is their physical organization, that it is impossible for the whites to associate with them in any relation of life, and that amalgamation with them would be unmitigated degradation. It is impossible that two races, so radically and essentially unlike, can ever harmoniously co-operate in administering a Countrymen: The Supreme Government being anxious to attend to the defence [sic] of the rights and the integrity of our beloved Republic, against the enemies who have invaded it, has thought proper to appoint me, General-in-Chief of the brave troops destined to that holy purpose in the North. I immediately flew with enthusiasm [sic] to this section, my desire to sustain the rights of the people being notorious, and at the commencement of the present month I was in Monterey, dictating and ordering all the measures in my power to repel the advance of our enemies. Thinking, however, that an immense weight was imposed upon me, and feeling my inability, I entreated that his Excellency the Gen. Don Juan Nepomuceno de Aimeonde, should come and take the command, supposing that the illustrious conqueror of Panuco would, on his arrival in Mexico, assume the reins of the National Government.

The enemy on the 19th inst, made his appearance near my headquarters at Monterey, and encamped in the wood of Santo Domingo, their encampment being three miles in length, and about nine in circumference. I gave orders to observe diligently all their movements, and to harass them as much as possible, all the generals and chiefs under my command being determined to fight sooner than retire. The citadel or fort of the Monastery, aimed some good shots at the enemy, who employed the day in reconnoitering and preparations for their attack.

They commenced their attack on the 21st with a formidable mass, composed of the greater part of their regular troops, upon the bridge of the Purisima and the forts of Rincon del Diablo and Teneria, but they were victoriously repulsed by our valiant veterans, causing them a positive loss of 1500.

On the 22d, in the morning, Gen. Taylor directed his columns of attack upon the Archbishop's hill, a point commanding the city, and although in their first advance, the enemy suffered severely, they again came to the charge with a brigade composed almost entirely of regular troops, and two of our largest guns and one howitzer (obuss [sic]) were unfortunately blown up. Not withstanding that misfortune, I sent a reinforcement of infantry with two light pieces of artillery, as soon as I was informed of the event. They arrived to late the enemy were already in possession of the position and works. This accident compelled me to concentrate my forces in the Plaza, to enable me to offer a more vigorous defence [sic] to the invaders, and repel, as we did, their attacks upon the streets and possession of the position and works. This accident compelled me to concentrate my forces in the Plaza, to enable me to offer a more vigorous defence [sic] to the invaders, and repel, as we did, their attacks upon the streets and houses of Monterey. Under these circumstances, our ammunition and provisions were getting scarce, and not withstanding the valor and energy with which all our combatants, veterans and auxiliaries were animated, I proposed to the General of the enemy to open a conference, by which the national honor, that of our arms and of the particular division under my command, with their arms, equipments and baggage were saved.

This is a true relation of the operations of the campaign up to the 24th inst; and although the scarcity of means, materials, and other circumstances, have compelled us to such a result, we should not for an instant lose our courage, as the Republic will bring into action all its great elements, and with one victory, which we may, shall and must obtain, the problem will be definitively solved in favor of our arms.

People of the East! The alternative that was taken at Monterey is of no great consequence particularly when you bear in mind that in a short time the favorite general of the Mexicans, his Excellency Don Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, will personally direct the campaign. In the meantime let the sacred flame of love for your country burn in your bosoms, and we shall without doubt, triumph over our enemies.

Friday, November 13, 1846 REv43i57p1c7 FROM THE CAMP AT MONTEREY

Last evening the War Department received despatches [sic] from General Taylor. They were writing on the 6th, 11th, 12th, and 13th October. But the detailed official letters on the operations before Monterey did not accompany them - much delay having occurred in making out complete returns from the various subordinate commanders of the army. The despatches [sic] which were received last evening are brief and comparatively unimportant in their character.

In his letter of the 6th of October, Gen. Taylor states that he had mustered out of service the entire force of mounted Texas volunteers. One company of Texas foot volunteers, which has rendered excellent service in the campaign, was then on the march to Camargo, there to be mustered out of service.

The General states, that a small force is to be stationed at Laredo on the east bank of the Rio Grande, for the purpose of protecting that frontier of country from Indian depredations, and enabling the Government of Texas to extend its jurisdiction with more facility to the river. With the advice of Governor Henderson, he has authorized General Lamar, ex-President of Texas, to raise a mounted company of eighty men for this service for twelve months.
As a very small force is now in service from the State of Texas, he trusts that this step will be approved by the department.

The second infantry, with some of the artillery companies left in the rear, and an additional volunteer force, has been ordered forward to Monterey, together with a heavy battery train.

No credible intelligence has been received from the interior at the date of this letter. General Ampudia, at the last advices, was at Saltillo, probably with the whole or greater part of his army. [ But subsequent accounts, in private letters, report that Ampudia had retreated from Saltillo, and would make San Luis de Potosi his rallying point. He was expected to make a stand there, and perhaps to be joined by Santa Anna, in case Gen. Taylor should extend his advance in that direction.]

The General states, that he had been unable as yet to prepare his detailed official report of the operations before Monterey - the last report from his subordinate commanders having been at that moment received. Our loss in killed, wounded, and missing, will vary very little from 500 - 400 of which was sustained in the attack on the lower part of the city on the 21st.

Lieut. Dilworb 1st infantry had died of the [...] [missing words].

In his last letter, Gen. Taylor deeply regrets the necessity of reporting the death of the brave Robert H. Graham, 1st Lieut. of 4th Infantry, who died, on the previous night, of the wounds which he had received in the engagement of the 21st September. - [Union of Wednesday night.

Friday, November 13, 1846 REv43i57p2c5 GENERAL BUTLER

[from the Union]
We had the pleasure of conversation with an officer today, who camp at Monterey, which he left on the 5th of October. He engaged in the memorable action of the 21st, in the Staff of General Quitman, and of course, was one of the gallant band who suffered most severely on that day. He states that he was frequently near General Butler during this action, until he received his wound—saw much of what passed on that occasion—but saw or heard nothing to justify the idle rumors which have been in circulation respecting any difference between General Taylor and General Butler. He added further, that if any such circumstance occurred, he must have heard it from the persons with whom he associated; but that he heard nothing about it before he left the camp, nor until he reached the United States. He cannot entertain a doubt that the whole rumor is gratuitous, and without foundation. [Union.]

Friday, November 13, 1846 REv43i57p2c4 YUCATAN

[N.O. Commercial Times]

Arrived here yesterday, the Mexican schooner Joaquina, from Campeachy and Laguna, loaded with logwood, etc. From what has recently occurred, we presume she will be seized as an enemy's property. It is intended, we are informed, to make an appeal to the authorities at Washington, for an exception to the usual way of proceedings in the case of crafts from a hostile country, in favor of Yucatanese vessels. Among other reasons to be assigned, is the fact that Santa Anna induced the Yucatan Legislature to re-annex that country to Mexico, by declaring that all differences between the latter and the United States had been settled. The trick having been discovered, the people of Yucatan, within the last few weeks, have again abandoned the connection, and they are determined to preserve their independent sovereignty. We are assured that a proclamation has been lately issued by the governing powers in Yucatan, to the inhabitants, announcing this resolution. The Captain of the Joaquina, it is stated, brought a copy of it hither.

Information has reached the city from Laguna, that it was the general report there, that all the ports of Yucatan, above all Campeachy, would be blockaded by the U. S. vessels of war. [N. O. Commercial Times.]

Friday, November 13, 1846 REv43i57p2c6 ATTACKS ON GENERAL BUTLER

It has afforded us no pleasure to comment upon the course which a great portion of the Whig press has pursed with respect to the Mexican war, from its inception down to the present day. Although we condemned the manner in which they have spoken of the measures of the Government and the movements of the country's army; yet we hoped that when blows were struck—when our brave men were in gallant action—no voice of censure or defamation would have been heard. Not so, however! The fangs of party violence have been outstretched and pierce the heart and wound the reputation of the brave soldier even when performing his duty in the thickest of fight. But the mark is illustrious and intangible! He will defy and outlive all calumny.

Major General Butler is no soldier of yesterday. He is no volunteer for love of adventure—no officer for want of employment. He has been familiar, in past years, with service, and he has seen battles long before he ever reached Monterey. He was the honored and admired of Andrew Jackson until his death—of Jackson who was not to be deceived about a matter of personal courage. Let his detractors—his partisan defamers—go on and make the most of their idle undertaking. He will stand before the country as he did before, high in reputation, unblurred in honor—even though some event during the present war do not vindicate him.

In the meantime, we are glad to republish the following from a political opponent, The Martinsburg, Va, Gazette:

"We have been exceedingly pained to observe the papers generally of the country teeming with accounts from the army, derogatory to the military character, skill and bravery of Major General Butler. We have never for single moment believed that there was one word of truth in any of them, and as to angry words, & c., passing between him and Gen. Taylor, we are almost positively certain that no such occurrence ever took place. It is true the division under Gen. Butler suffered very severely, but it was from no fault of his that we can see his position was a trying one, and the very fact that he led his men to the charge amid so much danger, and amid so merciless, constant and destructive a fire as he did— at once places the lie upon the charge made against him of a want of courage. That he lacked prudence, might perhaps have been the case, but where is the evidence of it? Does Gen. Taylor say so in his despatches [sic] to Government? No, on the contrary, he returns his thanks especially to Maj. Generals Butler, Henderson, and Brig. Gen. Worth, for the gallant and [em...][unreadable word] services rendered to him. Do any of the leading officers, in their accounts of the battle, make any charges against him? None—None, that we can see. Let the country then beware what confidence they place in the newspaper correspondence which they see from Monterey, or any other point of the army. In justice let us remember our gallant officers and men who are now perilng their lives and the all in their field of battle, and surround them with the good wishes and prayers of our whole hearts. Let no man be condemned upon rumors. In our comments upon the conduct of the army, let us wait for official dispatches. We care not what may be the political complication of the officers and men of our army— it is not our business to inquire now— they are our countrymen—that is enough for us. We know that Major General Butler is a prominent Democrat, and very strenuous in his opinions and course—but what of that?—is he not our countryman?— and engaged now in the defence [sic] of our common country? Surely, most surely, then, is he entitled to the regard and affection of his countrymen, until he does something to forfeit that regard. Were General Butler now a candidate for political office or preferment in this country, we should vote against him, because we know the doctrines of his political creed, and we do not believe in their truth or adaptation to the glory and prosperity of our country. But as a man we like him as a soldier we honor him, and the page of history bears honorable testimony to his gallantry in the last war; and now at Monterey he has again sealed his bravery and his devotion to his country with his blood. we are glad to learn that the gallant old soldier is recovering from his wounds, and hope he may live to do signal service to his country, and brand the lie upon his revilers."

We also annex the following from the N. Orleans Bulletin, (Whig):

"GENERAL BUTLER - We regret to see that some of the Northern papers are publishing letters from the army, reflecting on Gen. Butler's conduct in the recent affair at Monterey, the tenor of them being that, contrary to Gen. Taylor's orders or intentions, he had converted what was intended to be a feint into a real attack, by which his command was unnecessarily exposed in street fighting with the Mexicans in the houses or protected by parapet walls, and that a greatly increased loss of life on our part was the consequence. We do not so much blame the writers of these letters as we do the recipients of them, as they were probably only meant for private information, and not intended for publication. The American people, however, will not be particularly disposed to find fault with any one for a little extra display of gallantry in action, though we think it rather hard for General Butler, that he should, in any way, be censured on the present occasion, when we recollect that no fault or information of the kind has been furnished by the Commander-in-chief, but who, on the contrary, speaks in high terms of him in his official dispatches."

Friday, November 13, 1846  REv43i57p2c1 LATER FROM THE ARMY!

[from the N.O. Picayune, Nov. 3]

By the arrival of the Galveston, Capt. Wright, we are placed in possession of our correspondence from Monterey from the 1st to the 16th of October. The letters of Mr. Haile contain the first announcement we have seen of the death of Lieut. Graham, of the 4th Infantry. He died on the evening of the 11th of October, universally lamented. The wounded generally are doing well. Hopes are entertained that Maj. Lear, of the 3rd Infantry, may recover, although so terribly wounded. We are sorry to learn that fever and ague is beginning to prevail extensively in the army. The accounts we have from the troops in the valley of the Rio Grande are truly distressing.

In the Matamoras Flag we have portions of a correspondence between Gen. Taylor and the Governor of Monterey, in which the former gives an indication of the policy to be pursued in regard to the subsistence of the army. We will no longer detain the reader from the interesting letters of our correspondent:

Monterey, Mexico, Oct. 1, 1846

Gentlemen- The weather begins to admonish us that winter is not far off. The mornings are quite cool, rendering overcoats, and even fires, very comfortable. Everything begins to assume a quiet aspect in this region. The troops are entering into quarters for the next two months- the wounded are receiving every attention from the surgeons, and are placed in excellent rooms- the ammunition is nearly removed from the Cathedral, (a magnificent building outside and in.) and religious services will soon be performed in it. The ships, billiard-rooms, eating houses and mechanic shops are opening again. Families are returning, confidence is taking the place of distrust towards us with the Mexicans, and I believe that a majority of the best people here are glad that our army has driven off Ampudia and his thievish soldiery. Gen. Taylor has published his order of congratulation- one of the most chaste and perfect documents of the kind I ever saw- but you can judge for yourself, for I sent you a copy.

[A copy of these orders has already appeared in our columns]

The following order has been published in the 2d Division. Gen Worth may well exult over the achievements of his division, for he has been immortalized by them.

Orders No. 39
HEADQUARTERS, SECOND DIVISION
Monterey, Sept. 28, 1846

The Commanding General of the Division seizes the first instant of leisure to tender to the officers and soldiers of his command the expression of his thanks and admiration. During the three day's operations, down to the final capitulation of this important position, until after they have seen nearly twice their numbers defile before them in retreat- whether on the fatiguing march, in combat in the valley or on the mountains, on the house-tops or in the streets, this noble Division has given an exhibition of courage, constancy and discipline above all praise, and a generous and manly forbearance towards fallen and humiliated foes, which bear comparison with the proudest achievements that grace the annals of their country.

The General feels assured that every individual in the command unites with him in admiration of the distinguished gallantry and conduct of Col. Hays and his noble band of Texas volunteers - hereafter they and we are brothers, and we can desire no better guarantee of success than by their association.

To Brigadier General Smith, commanding 2d Brigade: Lieut. Col. Staniford, 1st Brigade; Lieut. Col. Childs, Army Battalion, Maj. [ ...illegible . . . ]

Capt. Miles, 7th Infantry; Capt. Smith, 2d Artillery, commanding light troops; Capt. Seriven, 8th Infantry; to Capt. Blanchard, Louisiana volunteers; Lieut. Col. Duncan and Lieut. Mackall, he tenders all thanks and respect. To the gentlemen of the staff, Maj. Munroe, Chief of Artillery; Capt. Saunders, Military engineer; Lieut. Deas, Division Quartermaster; Lieut. Daniels, Division Commissariat: Lieut. Meade, Topographical Engineers; Lieut. Pemberton and Wood, Aids-de-Camp, his special thanks are due, for the alacritiy, zeal and gallantry with which they have performed every service. To Col. Peyton, Louisiana volunteers, who did im the honor to tender his very acceptable services as Aid-de-Camp, he feels under especial obligations for his valuable counsel and splendid exhibition of courage.

To the General himself, the highest and proudest gratification is, that such fortunate results have been attained with comparatively so small sacrifice of the precious blood of the soldier.

By order of Brig. Gen. WORTH:

J. C. PEMBERTON,
1st. Lieut. and Aid-de-Camp.

The wounded are doing well, better than was at first expected. Maj. Lear, who was so horribly wounded through the mouth, the ball coming out at the back of the neck, shattering the jawbone and palate, will, it is hoped recover. His son, a young gentleman of twenty, is fortunately with him. Lieutenant Richard { l. Graham, of the 4th Infantry, died of his wounds last night. Gen. Butler, who was shot through the leg, is recovering fast, and begins to attempt, in his impatience, to be on his legs again, to hobble about his room.

Gen. Taylor keeps his own counsel respecting the nature of the instructions received from Washington. The Washington letter writers probably know more about it than a majority of the officers under Gen. Taylor at this moment. Something is brewing, however, and I can see that some movement is soon to be made, though none has yet been ordered.

The Bishop's Palace and heights back of the town are not garrisoned; the troops having been withdrawn into town, and there is no piquet stationed on the Saltillo road in that vicinity.

I send you by this mail a list of the killed and wounded, with all the remarks, which I have complied from the official returns. This list has cost me considerable time and labor. Several of the corps only returned the number of killed and wounded, and it was only after I commenced seeking for the names, etc., that they were sent in: and even now, all the names have been gathered the Kentucky Regiment not having sent in any, and some other corps having failed to report the names of those killed and wounded after the 21st. My list, however, is complete, with the exception of two killed and eleven wounded. My object in collecting these names will be appreciated by the friends of the brave men who have fallen, as well as by those who will be relieved from anxiety by reading over the list.

Friday, November 13, 1846  REv43i57p4c1 Letter from Monterey

MONTEREY MEXICO, Oct. 16, 1846

Gentlemen- A chance offers to send a line which I must write in haste as the gentlemen who takes it will be off in a few moments. Gen. Wool crossed the Rio Grande 13 days ago, on his way to Monclova. A train of 1500 mules arrived from Camargo a day or two since, with provisions. Two thousand mules have been hired at this place for the use of the army at 37 1/2 cents per day each.

Lieut. Graham's remains were followed to the grave, three days since, by Gen. Taylor and nearly all the officers.

No news yet from the first mail that was captured by the enemy. Another large mail started from Camargo a few days ago, (the 5th instant,) which shared the fate of the first. This makes two important mails that have been captured from us within a month. The last was taken out of the mule train.

Santa Anna is at San Luis Potosi, but is doing nothing. He sustains Ampudia in his late conduct. The fever and ague is spreading through the army at a fearful rate.

Friday, November 13, 1846  REV43i57p4c1 INTELLIGENCE FROM THE ARMY

[from the American Flag]

We make the following copious extracts from the American Flag published at Matamoras:

Although several persons have called at our office within the last two days direct from Monterey and intermediate posts, yet not one word of news do they bring not before published, except that preparations for future hostile operations on our side are rapidly progressing. By the time the armistice shall have expired, everything will have been completed to insure success in future engagements or movements. Of the doings of [...] lines unreadable] with Gen. Taylor, Gov. Morales proposes that their future correspondence shall be carried on in French, and he flatters old "Rough and Ready" thus:

"With satisfaction it is known to the Government of this State, that your Excellency is perfectly versant with the French idiom. This government has a proficient interpreter in this language, and wishes (to be better understood) that all future communications from your Excellency be made in this idiom.

"With profound respect, God and Liberty!

"Francisco De P. Morales.

"To Z. Taylor,
"Commander-in-Chief Army of Occupation, Monterey Sept. 29, 1846."

On the 1st of October, Gen. Taylor addressed the following reply to these two last notes of Gov. Morales:

"The communication of your Excellency, dated 29th ult relative to excesses committed by volunteers in the city of Monterey; was duly delivered. Some delay has occurred in answering it, in order that I might communicate with the commandant of that post.

"It is with sentiments of regret I learn your just cause of complaint, founded upon the grounds stated by your Excellency. Your Excellency must be aware that it is no easy task to keep such men in subjection, and although my great desire is to maintain good order, yet excesses have been committed, but I believe, none of grave character.

"The volunteers now in the city will be removed in a few days, and by their absence I hope all cause of further complaints will cease. In the meantime, Brig. General Worth will use all efficaciots [sic] measures to maintain order in the city. He is now invested with orders to this effect. Your Excellency must be aware that my desire is to comply with the guarantees I have given in the name of my Government, relative to the security of persons and property.

"I take the liberty, at the same time, to add, that your Excellency has been misinformed in regard to my possessing a knowledge of the French idiom, and in consequence, you will please hereafter, as heretofore, receive my communications in English."

Friday, November 13, 1846  REV43i57p4c2 NAVAL ATTACK ON ALVARADO!

We have a letter from our correspondent "Indicator" who is yet in Pensacola, advising us that the U.S. schr. ship Relief, Bullus, Lieut. Commanding, arrived there on the 30th ult. 20 days from Vera Cruz. His letter is dated 31st ultimo He writes "The only intelligence by her of interest regards the projected attack on Alvarado, which Commodore Conner intends to lead in person. Capt. Fitzhugh came a passenger in the Relief, having been detached from the steamer Mississippi, and his place supplied temporarily by Commander Adams, heretofore second in command. Commodore Perry has hoisted his red broad pennant on board the Mississippi, and of course, is to be regarded as a Commodore, not as a Captain. The attack on Alvarado was to take place on the 11th or 12th at furthest. The steamer Mississippi arrived as the Relief was coming out. There is nothing sure worth communicating. The Princeton sailed this morning for Vera Cruz. The John Adams was to leave to-day." [N. O. Tropic.

Friday, November 13, 1846  REV43i57p4c2 THE DEATH OF A NAVAL OFFICER, AND AN AMIABLE MAN
We have to announce, with profound regret, the sudden death of Commodore John Nicholson, of the United States Navy, who died last night at Mrs. Ulrich's in this city, under an attack of apoplexy. We have known Com. Nicholson for more than forty years. He was a printer by profession, in Richmond, in 1804-our near and respected neighbor-but his genius led him into a different destination, and his merits, gallantry and skill raised him to a high rank in the service, and made him many friends and numerous admirers. In several actions, he was distinguished for his extraordinary coolness and bravery. We deeply lament the loss of such a man to his country, his family and his friends.

Friday, November 13, 1846 REv43i57p4c4 GEN. LAMAR

Gen. Mirabeau B. Lamar has been commissioned by Gov. Henderson to act as a civil and military Governor of the Texas frontier. He is to make his headquarters at Laredo, a Mexican town on the Texas side of the Rio Grande. To enable him to extend his jurisdiction, he is authorized to raise and have under his command a company of 100 men. The required force was raised from among the disbanded Texans, and Gen. Lamar is now on his way to Loredo, to fulfill the duties of his new appointment.

Tuesday, November 17, 1846 REv43i58p1c4 VERY LATE FROM MEXICO

[From the New Orleans Picayune November

Through the same channel by which we received the intelligence given in another column from the Gulf squadron, we also received papers from Vera Cruz as late as the 29th of October. The intelligence is interesting and important.

In the first place we may say, in general terms that in no paper which we have opened do we find any token of submission on the part of the Mexicans in their conflict with this country. Every paragraph breathes threats of vengeance. Their losses are enumerated in detail, to found thereupon more urgent appeals to the patriotism of their citizens to give up everything from the support of the war. It is not too much to say that there is the warmest enthusiasm [sic] apparent in all that we read, whether in editorial remarks or the military addresses with which the papers are crowded. The spirit of all is "War to the knife." But this shows the surface of affairs only. We shall have occasion to note incidents, which lead us to suspect the country is by no means so united as the crisis in her affairs would seem to demand.

We enter into the details of the news without much attempt at arrangement or time for revision; but this will be excused. And first of Santa Anna.

The news of his arrival at San Luis Potosi which we gave the other ay, was at least premature. He did not reach there till the 8th of October. As every thing in regard to his movements is sought after, we annex his letter announcing his arrival:

LIBERATING ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Headquarters, San Luis, Oct. 10, 1846.

Most Excellent Sir:- On the evening of the 8th inst. I arrived at this capital, accompanied by my staff, and established therein the headquarters of the Army of Operations, destined to repel the unjust invasion made upon the Republic by the Army of the United States of the North.

I have the pleasure of saying to your Excellency, that my entrance into this State was made amidst the congratulations of a magnanimous people, who have not ceased to bestow upon me profuse marks of consideration, and the same remark will apply to the authorities and public functionaries of all classes.

Oblig me by communicating these facts to his Excellency, the General charged with supreme executive power, and accept assurances of my consideration and esteem. God and Liberty!

Antonio Lopez De Santa Anna.

To the Secretary of War.

One of the first acts of the wily general Issimo [sic], was to supply himself with funds. This he did very effectually, by seizing upon a conducts of specie, thereby getting hold of two millions of dollars. His pretext was, that it was unsafe to forward this large amount of money to the seacoast in the present state of affairs. He gave receipts for the money, and his individual bonds for its restoration. It must be confessed that this mode of supplying his coffers is infinitely more expeditious than advertising for a loan, and more acceptable to the people at large than a forced loan from the clergy. The accounts we give of this great financial stroke, we do not derive from Mexican papers, but we have entire faith in the facts. We trust they will be satisfactory to English merchants and be accepted as an earnest of the security of the money they loaned Mexico on the mortgage of the Californias [sic]. We find Santa Anna's letter, of the 10th ult, in the latest paper before us. We regret to say, that the papers give us no clue to his plan of operations.

But while Santa Anna was on his way to San Luis, he wrote back from Queretaro, on the 3rd of October, as follows: "The disaster which we encountered at Monterey is not so great as I at first thought. Our troops have left for Saltillo and have already occupied the principal points of the Sierra. So far from the troops having become demoralized, I am assured that great enthusiasm prevails among them. Their success has cost the enemy, according to incontestable evidence, more than fifteen hundred men. Our artillery was well managed, and it is said that the enemy believe it was served by French officers- - - - - - I am now about to unfold all my character, with the energy which is habitual to me, and the Americans will very soon succumb, or I shall cease to exist." Upon copying this effusion of Santa Anna, the Diario breaks forth: "May Heaven crown with the most brilliant results the patriotism of this illustrious child of his country, whom we ardently desire to see return to the capital covered with glory."

We now for the first time learn what fruits the Mexicans derived from the seizure of our mails near Martin, intended for Gen. Taylor at Monterey. Among the multitude of papers forwarded by Ampudia to Santa Anna and the Government, we find a letter from our Secretary of War, Mr. Marcy, to Gen Taylor, revealing the design upon Tampico and San Luis Potosi. The letter is dated Washington, Sept. 21st, and through our account of the contents of the letter will be an old story at Washington, we may say here, that the design of the Secretary's letter is to obtain Gen. Taylor's opinion, rather than to dictate a line of proceedings for him. He is told what the Government has thought of doing, and asked what he thinks about it.

Col. T. F. Hunt, U.S. A., on Saturday, notified officially to Gen. Vega, and other Mexican officers, prisoners in this city, that they have been exchanged for Captain Carpender, and the crew of the brig Truxton. They were informed that they could proceed to Pensacola, as soon as possible, whence they would be taken on board one of the U. S. men-of-war, to Vera Cruz. It was, however, left to the discretion of Gen. Vega, and the other gentlemen, to return to their country by the way of Havana. The communication containing this information was dated Washington, the 28th ult, and signed by Gen. Winfield Scott. [N. O. Commerical Times].

Friday, November 17, 1846 REv43i58p2c5 OPERATIONS OF CAPT. FREMONT IN UPPER CALIFORNIA

Letter from Senator Benton to the President

Sir: - In the absence of official information on the subject of Lieutenant Colonel (then Captain) Fremont's operations in Upper California, I deem it my duty to lay before you the private letters which I have received from that officer, showing you his actual position at the latest dates; the unwilling manner in which he became involved in hostilities with the Mexican authorities of that province before he had heard of the war with Mexico; and especially to disprove the accusation officially made against him by Governor Castro of having come into California with a body of United States troops, under the pretext of a scientific expedition, but in reality to excite the Americans settled in that province to an insurrection against the Mexican government. This accusation is of the gravest character, most seriously implicating, the good faith and honor of our government and officially made by Governor Castro, in a despatch [sic] to the minister of war and marine, under date of the first of April last, and published in El Monitor Republicano, in the city of Mexico, by the order of the Mexican government, on the 10th of May last. A copy of this paper was sent to Mrs. Fremont, my daughter, by the Hon. Mr. Slidell, and an English translation of it is herewith presented.

When Capt. Fremont left the U. States to complete his scientific labors beyond the Rocky mountains, it was with a full knowledge of the political as well as personal difficulties of the enterprise. He knew that the relations of the United States were critical both with Mexico and Great Britain - that he was going through the territories of the one, and among the settlements of the other - that jealousy would attach to his movements, and all his acts be referred to his government; and he was perfectly determined to use the utmost circumspection in all his conduct, confining himself wholly to his scientific pursuits, and carefully avoiding as well the appearance as the reality of either a political or military mission. With this view, and after having traversed the desert, and crossed the Great Basin which lies between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada of the Atta California, he left men upon the frontier, an hundred miles from Monterey, and went alone to that city to explain his objects and wishes in person to Gov. Castro. He did this in the most formal and official manner, in company with the U. States consul, Mr. O'Larkin, (at whose house he stopped,) and conforming to the whole detail of Spanish ceremonial, he not only called on the governor but if attacked, under the flag of their country, four thousand miles distant from their homes, was an act of the highest the circumstance of the case; and the noble resolution which they took (refusing the aid of their countrymen) to die, country. To my mind, this entrenching on the mountain and raising the national flag, was entirely justifiable under that hour of danger, as a warning to the approaching assailants— as a bond of union and devotion among a standard of insurrection, or as a sign of contempt to the Mexican government, but as the symbol of honor and and leave it to their country to avenge their deaths. All they did was in self-defence [sic]. The flag was raised, not as the country— that if attacked they would defend themselves, and die to the last man under the flag of their country, that his situation was most critical and dangerous. The consul sent a special messenger to warn him of his danger; the American settlers below offered to join him; but he utterly refused their assistance, because he would not compromise them. But he did what honor and self-preservation required, and what the courage and fidelity of his men enthusiastically seconded; he took a position, and waited the approach of the assailants; and that position was nearer to them, on the summit of the Sierra, overlooking Monterey, at thirty miles distance and whence, with their glasses, they could plainly see the troops, with their artillery, which had crossed the bay (of Monterey) to San Juan, on their way to attack him. The Governor, with these troops, and with all his threats, after coming towards the camp on the Sierra, did not come to it; and Captain Fremont, faithful to his design to avoid collision, if possible, finding himself not attacked, determined to retire, and proceed to Oregon on his intended route of the valley of the Sacramento, the Tlamat lake, and the valley of the Wahlamath river. Accordingly, about the 10th of March, he left his position on the Sierra, descended into the valley of San Joaquin, and commenced his march by slow and easy stages, of four and six miles a day, towards Oregon.

It is of his encampment on the Sierra, that Governor Castro makes particular complaint in his despatch [sic] to Minister of War and Marine, as an evidence of hostile intentions, and where the American flag was raised, a fortification built, and the American settlers called in for its defence [sic] . Unhappily we have no letter from Captain Fremont, detailing the events of these days; but the want of such a letter is well supplied by the official communications from the American Consul at Monterey to our Secretary of State, and by Captain Fremont's brief note to the consul, (written in pencil) while expecting the attack of Governor Castro, and which has been heretofore published in our papers. Mr. Buchanan furnished us, as soon as they were received, with copies of these dispatches, which are herewith laid before you, and from which it will be seen that Governor Castro's accusations against Captain Fremont are entirely unfounded; that so far from having excited the Americans to revolt, he absolutely refused to receive those who offered to join him; and more, that when after leaving this position, and granting discharges to five or six men, he refused to fill their places from the men in the country, so determined was he to avoid as well in appearance, as in fact, the smallest act offensive or injurious to the Mexican authorities. The same correspondence shows the entire falsehood of all the superlative gas-conade which Governor Castero put into his official report about the spoils of the camp – the dispensor [sic] of Fremont and his men- their fight into the bulrushes, and through the desert—his suffocation in the cradle of a dangerous conspiracy, & c., with all which imaginary exploits his official despatch [sic] was filled, while Fremont, with sixty-two men and two hundred horses, were slowly retiring in a body, almost in his view, and utterly abstaining from any act of offence to the province or its authorities. It was no doubt this false report to his Government, that led to his subsequent operations in May, to exterminate Fremont's party and all the American settlers on the Sacramento.

On return from the evacuated camp on the Sierra, the governor also put forth a proclamation, in the vein of his report, and even worse, styling Fremont and his men a band of highway robbers, plundering the consul took the trouble to investigate, and found to be a very trivial offence of manners (not of law or morals) which the injured party valued at five dollars, and for which Captain Fremont gave ten. For the rest, the consul, after all this, declares the inhabitants of the country to be well pleased with Captain Fremont, and that he might walk the streets of Monterey the next day alone, if he chose. The only truth in Governor Castro's despatch [sic] is, that Captain Fremont took a military position, entrenched it, and raised the American flag: but these events were the consequence, and not the cause of Gov. Castro's movement against him; and this is fully shown in that brief, but heroic note, written in pencil, in answer to the consul's warning, in which Capt. Fremont after refusing the aid of the American settlers, declared for himself and his sixty-two men, that they had done nothing wrong to the authorities or to the people of the country— that if attacked they would defend themselves, and die to the last man under the flag of their country, and leave it to their country to avenge their deaths. All they did was in self-defence [sic]. The flag was raised, not as a standard of insurrection, or as a sign of contempt to the Mexican government, but as the symbol of honor and patriotism., which was entitled to respect from others to defence [sic] from them—and which they had displayed in that hour of danger, as a warning to the approaching assailants— as a bond of union and devotion among themselves- and as an appeal and invocation (if they should be destroyed) to the avenging spirit of their far distant country. To my mind, this entrenching on the mountain and raising the national flag, was entirely justifiable under the circumstance of the case; and the noble resolution which they took (refusing the aid of their countrymen) to die, if attacked, under the flag of their country, four thousand miles distant from their homes, was an act of the highest heroism, worthy to be recorded by xenophon [sic], and reflecting equal honor upon the brave young officer who commanded and the heroic SIXTY-TWO by whom he was supported.

A volunteer in the Kentucky regiment (Robert Hardin) writing to his father after the battle of Monterey, gives an account of three days' fighting. He says:

On Monday night the Mexicans were in high spirits. They had lost but few men. All night they threw up sky rockets. At night the firing ceased. The left wing of the Kentucky regiment, to which I am attached, marched into the fort taken by us, to hold it during the night. As we moved in, we were in point blank shot of one battery, and raked on our right by another. They both belched fire the whole time we were marching in, a distance of one mile. Such a night as I spent that night, I hope never to spend again. We had eaten nothing since daylight. We had no shelter-no fire. We laid down in the mire and blood, among dead men and horses, and cold rain fell on us all night. I had no coat on, having gone into the fight in my shirt sleeves.

I never heard balls whistle before. Two cannon balls passed within two feet of me, and many more within a short distance. As we left the fort on Tuesday evening, which we had been holding as stated before through Monday night we were ordered to scatter, as the best means of protection against the two batteries which raked our line. I had got away from the company about 50 yards to myself, when a whole load of grape shot were discharged at me alone. I heard the shot and stooped in the bushes, when on both sides and above me the shot fell like hail. We lost three of our men with these fires this morning.

The dead were awful sights to look upon- some shot with cannon balls, and some with small shot- some with their heads shot off- some with their legs off- some with their bowels scattered on the ground. We had no time until yesterday, to bury the dead. The heavens were full of carrion birds, and the air with stench. I have not time to write at large- am in fine health, unhurt: without a scratch for which I am truly thankful.

Friday, November 17, 1846 REv43i58p4c1 IMPORTANT FROM SANTA FE

[from the St. Louis Republican, Nov. 7]

By the arrival at Fort Leavenworth, on the 30th October, of Lieut. Col. Ruff of the Missouri Volunteers, we learn that Gen. Kearney left for California on the 25th of September, taking with him companies B, C, G, K and I, 1st U. States Dragoons - - in all about 400 men, mounted on mules. The route of this small command was considered by many of the oldest and most experienced mountaineers and traders, as one of great hardships and suffering, if not absolutely impracticable- being down the Rio Grande to Socoro, (an old Spanish town, formerly of much importance from the large garrison stationed there.) about two hundred miles South of Santa Fe; thence West to the "Gila," (pronounced Hela;) thence down the Gila, to within one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles of the head of the Gulf of California, into which the Gila empties itself; thence Northwest to Monterey, on the Pacific. This route is called and known as the Copper Mine route.

The Colonel reports that everything was tranquil at Santa Fe when he left, (September 27th,) though a very current rumor existed that the Army family would endeavor to incite the population to open resistance as soon as Gen. Kearney and the regular troops of the United States had left that part of the country.

This report was not believed, however, or, if true, would have caused no uneasiness.

General Kearney, by printed proclamation, dated September 22, 1846, announces that, being duly authorized by the President of the United States, he appoints the following named persons the executive and administrative officers of the laws and government of the Territory of New Mexico:

Governor-Charles Bent
Secretary of the Territory- Don Aduciano Vigil Marshal- Richard Daltam.
U. S. District Attorney- Francis P. Blair.
Treasurer- Chas. Blummer.
Auditor Public Accounts- Eugene Leitensdorfer.

And Jacob Houghton, Antonio Jose Otero and Chas Baubie Judges of the Supreme court.- These appointments were regarded as the best that could be made out of the material present in Santa Fe. The appointment of Gov. Bent appears to give general satisfaction.

The troops left in Santa Fe and vicinity are Major M. Lewis Clark's battalion of horse artillery and part of Col. Price's regiment, together with Capt. Augney's company, (from Cole) and Capt. Murphy's (of Platte) company of Infantry.

Col. Doniphan's regiment had obtained permission of Gen. Kearney to march to Chihuahua and effect there a junction with Gen. Wool, U. S. Army. Indeed such a movement was necessary, as owing to some mismanagement, provisions were very scarce, the Army being obliged to subsist from Bent's Fort (some time in July) up to the last of September, without sugar or coffee, and on half ration of flour (ground wheat.)

It was the universal belief at Santa Fe that General Wool would meet with no resistance at Chihuahua. Constant communication was had between the traders at Chihuahua and the traders at Santa Fe, and the trains of Connelly & Glasgow, Owens & Anulu, Doane & Co., Huffman & Mayoffins, left for Chihuahua about the 20th of September expecting to find General Wool in possession of the city. In this they will be very much mistaken, however, as he had not then left San Antonio.

Of the 7000 dollars of specie on board the Ventura 1500 dollars have been taken possession of by the proper authority; 5500 having been sent from the vessel before her seizure. A portion of her cargo, fruit, &c., perishable articles, will be sold today. [N. O. Delta, Nov. 5.]

Second Abortive Attack on Alvarado!

EXPEDITION AGAINST TOBASCO.

[from the New Orleans Picayune, Nov. 7]

By the arrival of the pilot boat at the Balize we are in the possession of late advices from the squadron. We have only time to give the annexed letters and save the mail. If the Commodore has failed in his attack upon Alvarado, it is owing to no want of gallantry or skill on his part or that of his officers. The difficulties he has had to surmount have been insuperable so far; but he will yet prevail. He will in a few weeks renew his attempt at all hazards: [Correspondence of the Picayune]

OFF ANTON LIZARDO}
October 13, 1846 }

Gentlemen— We are on the eve of another attack on Alvarado. At 5 o'clock this afternoon Com. Conner issued orders for the sailing of the squadron (frigates Cumberland and Raritan excepted) for the mouth of the Alvarado river. The Commodore takes command of the expedition in person, making use of the steamer Vixen as his flag ship for the occasion. One o'clock tomorrow morning is the hour fixed for getting under weigh, and already the streamers Mississippi, Vixen and McLane are firing up. Besides these vessels the force consists of the revenue cutter Forward, schrs. Reefer, Petrel and Bonito and prize schooner Nonata. This latter vessel was recently captured from the Mexicans, and was formerly the American schr. Belle out of your port. She now mounts 4 42 pound carronades. For the past month we have been drilling our men as infantry upon small island here; and Jack is so anxious for a fight that he marks time with a good grace, and every one appears pleased that at last we are to have a chance at the enemy.

At the mouth of the river the Mexicans have a ten gun battery, and we know of a brig of war and two gunboats being anchored inside. A number of their small merchantmen have taken refuge in the harbor, and there must be a smart sprinkling of prize money in store for us.

October 16– Our sailing orders for the morning of the 14th, were countermanded, in consequence of us blowing too fresh for operations—occasioning a delay of the expedition for twenty-four hours. We sailed, however, at 1 o'clock, A. M. yesterday; but I regret to say, that we are all at anchor again today, and Alvarado is yet in possession of the Mexicans.

You were pleased to call the former attack on Alvarado an abortion, and I suppose you will not be sparing of hard names for the present failure; but I trust that when you examine the facts of the case, you will understand that it is owing to the inefficiency of the means at the disposal of Commodore Conner, and to the natural elements of the place itself, that we have not been successful, rather than to any want of skill or courage on his part, or lack of spirit and support by the officers and men under his command.

We were within ten miles of the mouth of the river at daylight, and stood slowly into shore, it being dead calm— the Vixen and McLane towing the schooners. The Mississippi anchored at long-shot distance, and commenced her fire. Up to this time everything appeared highly favorable for the success of the expedition. There being a heavy swell on the bar, the pilots declined taking the vessels over. The Commodore leading in the Vixen, with the rest of the force following, passed by the fort, each vessel firing her broadside as she ranged ahead, with but little effect, however, owing to the distance. A long eighteen in the Forward sent a shot directly into the fort; this movement was repeated with better success, the distance being lessened, and again the Forward made a most beautiful shot. In the the volunteer companies, who may desire to enlist under the new terms of service, (during the war,) to come, in another column will be found an appropriate proclamation, which governor smith promptly issued, calling upon, let the whigs rave as they may, the nation is convinced of the justice and righteousness of the war with mexico, and predicted that the government could not raise money to carry on the war. This public confidence, the Whig press untimely appeals to party will utterly fail to keep down the rising patriotism of the nation. At the risk of destroying sentiments, at a moment when we are actually engaged in war, with an insolent and phrenzied foe. All these gravelling selfishness of the "yankee" character in calculating the "cost of the war." The Whig press may re echo his mind. Mr. Webster may disgrace himself and his country by appealing to what he falsely conceives to be the denial, that the vigorous movements set on foot by the government will meet with a cordial response in the popular. There remains one way to take this alvarado, and, mark my words, it will be done before many weeks; meanwhile we must expect to be severely handled by the newspapers at home, and by people who expect us to accomplish impossibilities and gain glory on a field where none is to be won- although no man, with two ideas in his head, who witnessed our recent defeat, can attribute blame to any one.

October 25,—on the night of the 16th instant, the three steamers, cutter forward, schooners bonito, reefer and nonata, under command of commodore perry, left anton lizaro for an attack on tabasco. on the morning of the 17th, the mississippi made a prize of the american barque coosa, captain hickling, off alvarado river, and sent her into this place upon suspicion of her being about to land her cargo on the mexican coast. this vessel was cleared from new orleans on the 3rd instant for havana, by messrs. wylie & egana, with 1,600 bales of cotton, put up in 200 pound bales, and there appears good reason to suppose that it was intended for mexico. she will sail for your port on the 27th, in charge of passed midshipman barrett, son of one of your former collectors.

today another prize, the Yucatan schooner "El Telegrafo" arrived from the tabasco expedition on the 23rd, and reports the fleet standing off the land waiting for weather to go into the river.

the following vessels are here discharging coal for the steamers; barques ever and morgan dix; brigs abrasia and Juan Cartagena schooners Regina Hill and Sarah. The latter vessel having lost her rudder on her passage from New orleans to brazos santiago was blown down here, and her coal has been made use of by commodore conner. also, schooners Portia from New orleans, and Titus from New haven, with supplies for the squadron.

Yours,

forward at once. We doubt not, that they will respond with a promptness and patriotism worthy of the good old state.

We learn that several applications have already been made for appointments in the new Regiment, and that Governor Smith has accepted the services of the Richmond Greys, Capt. Robert G. Scott, Jr. and of the Rangers, the new volunteer company formed in this city last Spring, on the first breaking out of hostilities, under Capt. E. C. Carrington. Robert Porterfield is 1st Lieutenant, and Carlton Munford 2d Lieutenant of this new corps. We are requested to call upon the members immediately at the office of Messrs. Carrington & Hughes.

The Whig press predicted that the Government could not raise money to carry on the war. This mischievous attempt to clog the wheels of Government, has been put down by the successful loan of five millions just effected by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Let the Whigs rave as they may, the nation is convinced of the justice and righteousness of the war with Mexico, and will cordially aid the administration in bringing it to a glorious end.

The present war brings us better acquainted with the country which we have conquered. It shows us the habits of the people, the producing capacities of their soil, its rivers, its mountains and the routes by which commerce is hereafter to shed its blessings upon the land. How many were acquainted with the beauties of Monterey for example: of which one of the first officers of the army gives us the following picturesque description under date of October 10th.

THE CALL FOR TROOPS

The following (says the Union) are the places of rendezvous for the nine regiments called for in yesterday's orders by the Secretary of War:

One regiment from Louisiana, New Orleans

- Mississippi, Vicksburg
- South Carolina, Charleston
- North Carolina, Wilmington
- Virginia, Guyandotte
- Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh
- New York, City of N. Y.
- Massachusetts, Boston
Texas. The Governor is authorized to designate the place of rendezvous, and to report the same to Gen. Taylor.

The troops are to serve during the war, and are estimated to amount to from 6,500 to 7,000 troops.

This movement appears to be little in conformity with the policy, latterly assigned by the Federal press and its scribes, of "masterly inactivity."

A scribe in this morning's "Baltimore American," says we either do not know, or will not tell the plan of the war. He is welcome to take whichever alternative pleases him best. And so of the destination of these troops, or of any others which are now in the service.

Tenants and sub-tenants are required to contribute a sum equal to the fourthpart of a month's rent.

FURTHER MEXICAN INTELLIGENCE

We recur to-day to our files of Mexican papers, which are full of interest. Somewhat at random, we plunge at once into their contents.

We have a report from Gen. Ampudia, written from Saltillo on the 4th, of October, giving the killed, wounded and missing in "the division under his command" at Monterey, from the 19th to the 23rd of September, in their different encounters with the Americans. The list embraces 5 officers and 117 privates killed; 23 officers and 221 men wounded; 1 officer and 8 men injured or "confused" and 63 wounded. This gives a total of 438. We know this to be far below the true number of casualties, unless Ampudia intends to confine this, as his words my impart, to his own immediate command, independent of that under other general officers, and the irregular troops.

To keep alive the enthusiasm which has been aroused throughout Mexico, and thereby forward the organization of the National Guard, General Salas, the nominal head of the Government, has allowed himself to be named Colonel of a new battalion raised in the City of Mexico. Don V. Garcia Torres, the editor and printer who was persecuted by Paredes but who is again at large, has made an attempt to form another battalion, and with every prospect of success.

We find denunciation [sic] in the papers against a class of Mexicans who are said to be withdrawing privately from the country, taking with them the wealth which they have amassed, as is alleged by speculating in the funds, and
The press is very bold, too, in its denunciations of the clergy, who are accused of opposing the measures of the Government. An attempt is made to throw odium upon the church, and as we judge, with the view of justifying measures watch the Government may feel compelled to take to make the church contribute from its hoards to the necessities of the government. It is well known that when Gomez Farias was in power many years since, he had courage to propose... "laying hands upon the property of the church, and Farias is assuredly one of the master spirits in the present Government of Mexico.

Gen. Cortina, before resigning his post as Governor of the district, signed an order for the disarming a battalion of the Naional Guard. It led to an immediate commotion. The discontented flew at once to Gomez Farias for relief, and through his influence the order was rescinded. Cortina in the business is accused of acting under the influence of the Modcrads or Conservatives; and although this party is in the minority, and Cortina has been compelled to resign, we inter from the continual denunciations of which it is the object, that is formidable, and my embarrass the Government whenever a favorable opportunity occurs.

The troops stationed in the city of Morelia, received orders on the 3rd of October to march forthwith under General Cela, and join the army of Monterey. The call for these troops reached that city at the same time as the news of the disaster at Monterey and produced an immense excitement. So far from being depressed, the people came forward with contributions to support the war, and provide resources for the garrison to set out upon its march.

The press is very bold, too, in its denunciations of the clergy, who are accused of opposing the measures of the Government. An attempt is made to throw odium upon the church, and as we judge, with the view of justifying measures watch the Government may feel compelled to take to make the church contribute from its hoards to the necessities of the government. Gen. Rincon, a distinguished [sic] officer in the Mexican service, died on the 16th, ult. at Jalapa.

In a paper of the 7th October, published at Puebla the following pointed allusion is made to the defenseless state of Matamorcas:

"What are three hundred Anglo-Americans, who form the garrison of Matamorcas, to subdue the ten thousand inhabitants of that town? What! are several or eight thousand adventurers under Gen. Taylor to conquer the State of New Leo? What! are the one hundred or two hundred thousand adventurers, who my be sent out by the presumptuous Government of Washington, to enslave eight millions of Mexicans?"

The writer then goes on to answer the question he thus asks, and in a very patriotic strain. We meet continually in our papers with sneers at the inadequacy of the forces which we are employing against Mexico, but more especially do we find them touching upon the small number of troops left for the defence [sic] of Matamorcas. It was at one time boldly proclaimed in this country, prior to the fall of Monterey, that they true point of attack for Santa Anna was to fall suddenly upon Gen. Taylor's line of communications near the mouth of the Rio Grande. This was before our Government was known to have conceived a design upon Tampico, and of course before the Mexicans had their attention directed to the defence [sic] of that [...]. [words unreadable] publication of Mr. Marcy's letter to Gen. Taylor of the 21st September. It certainly is not less worthy of consideration now, to look well to the strength of our position on the lower Rio Grande, when it would best suit the purposes of Santa Anna to take the initiative and divert us from the dreaded attack by threatening our communications.

In our paper of Sunday, we endeavored to give an idea of the tone of public feeling in Mexico, and the efforts made by the Government to stimulate popular animosity against this country. In pursuance of the same purpose, we translate an article from the official journal of Mexico, which throws much light upon the state of the public mind in Mexico, and states some facts or alleged facts, in regard to our occupation of Monterey. We have no belief in the extent of the excesses said to have been committed by the volunteers, and those which have been committed are to be attributed to a small number of lawless fellows, camp followers and others, rather than soldiers; but we allow the Mexicans to tell the story in their own way. Incidentally, the reader may derive knowledge of many interesting facts from the translation of such documents.

(From the El Diario del Gobierno, of the 8th October)

Everything we asserted a few days since, when we inserted the address to the inhabitants of New Mexico made by the American commander who occupied that capital, in regard to the barbarous conduct observed towards Mexicans by the enemy, notwithstanding his flattering promise in regard to religion, life and property, is confirmed in the letter which we append hereto written by a person worthy of credit in Monterey to another in Saltillo. By this we can see what fate the invader is preparing for the inhabitants of the republic, and how civilized they show themselves who in the name of civilization seek to extend their domination over us.

The blood freezes in our veins as we think upon our brothers at Monterey under the American yoke, compelled to seek an asylum against the barbarity of these savages of the North to secure the honor of their daughters ad wives, and to save lives threatened every moment by the ferocity of the conqueror- abandoning their homes and fortunes. Such is the mode in which the laws of humanity are respected by these men, who would present themselves as models to us; who would seduce us into treason by promises which can deceive no one, because their acts, more eloquent than words, reveal to us the insincerity of their professions. And if the vandalism of our enemy presses now upon our countrymen at Monterey, upon our enemy shall recoil in the eyes of the whole earth the indelible stain of the infamy with which these atrocities cover their authors.

All true Mexicans will see the fate which awaits us if we fall into the hands of this ferocious foe; and if our duty to our country, our sense of honor and dignity as citizens, were not sufficient to compel us to chase back the enemy, at the cost of every possible sacrifice, still we must do it if we would not see ourselves treated as our brothers at Monterey have been since the victory.

It was indeed appalling to our enemy, when, full of fear at seeing the conquered city abandoned by its ancient inhabitants, they comprehended, contrary to their expectations, that Mexicans were not disheartened by their calamity, and that, far from inspiring dismay, the triumphs of the Americans did but animate public spirit, enkindle the liveliest enthusiasm, and make of every Mexican a hero to repel an enemy whose cowardice is capable of abusing his triumph against defenseless citizens.

The war is necessary; it is indispensable. It will be the only means of restraining the enemy, and of avenging the outrages committed upon our countrymen, and the blood shed in battle. Fortune will not always prove adverse. When we deserve her favors by our sacrifices and our virtues, she will station herself on our side, and our triumphant arms will dictate law to the conqueror.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Conner to the secretary of the Navy:

"U.S. Ship CUMBERLAND "OFF VERA CRUZ, October 17, 1846

"It is with feelings of deep mortification that I apprise the Department of the failure of another attempt to enter the river of Alvarado.

On the morning of the 15th, a little after sunrise, I reached the entrance of that river, with the steamer Vixen, the three gunboats, the prize schooner Nonata, mounting four guns, and the revenue vessels, schooner Forward and steamer McLane, accompanied by the Mississippi, Commodore Perry. It was intended the latter should cannonade the battery, while the smaller vessels crossed the bar. It was found, however, she could not approach near enough to make any impression on the work with her shells. This battery mounted seven guns; and immediately behind it, on an elevated knoll, was a platform, on which was a mounted pivot-gun. Knowing the small power of the steamers on which I depended to tow the small vessels over the bar, and up the river, I was desirous of having a favorable wind to assist them. For this purpose, I delayed moving until nearly two o'clock, but seeing no prospect of the usual sea breezes setting in, I determined to proceed. The first division, composed of the Reefer and Bonita, in tow of the Vixen, got under way, and was followed by the second division, consisting of the Nonata, Forward and Petrel, towed by the McLane. As they approached the bar, the current became stronger, causing the steamers to steer badly, and lessening their progress to not more than a mile, or a mile and a half, the hour.

"The first division continued to advance steadily, and had been some time engaged with the battery, when I had the mortification to see the McLane aground on the bar, and the vessels she had in tow, foul of each other, in the greatest disorder.

"As it was evident no support could be expected from the second division for some time, if at all, and as the three vessels composing the first were wholly inadequate to prosecute the attack, even it they could pass the battery with which we were engaged, I was constrained to order the Vixen to be put about, and repass [sic] the bar.

"It may be as well to observe here, that besides the battery at the entrance of the river, there is another at the town, one-and-a-half miles distant, of three guns, with two brigs, each mounting nine guns, a schooner of seven guns, and two gunboats, each carrying a long 24-pounder—all so disposed as to command the channel. By the time the Vixen joined her, the McLane was again afloat, without having sustained any material injury. It was obvious, however, her draft (ten feet two inches) was too great to pass the bar in its present state. Generally, there are from thirteen to fifteen feet on it, and my information led me to believe I should find that depth now, but the late floods have probably lessened it, as on sounding, previously to entering, there were barely twelve feet. The Vixen struck twice in going over, through drawing only seven feet. The current was also stronger in the river than I expected, even if she could pass the bar, I felt convinced the power of the McLane was inadequate to make head against it with any vessel in tow: These considerations- and the day being far spent- induced me, however, much against my present to enter the river.

[AMB]
The steam schooner Virginia, from Brazos Santiago, arrived yesterday at this port. E. Solomon, Esq., a gentlemen connected with the Paymaster's department, returned in the Virginia, and to his politeness we are indebted for many items of interest from Monterey.

Mr. S. left Monterey on Monday, the 26th ult., and he fully confirms the melancholy intelligence of the accident which befell the gallant Captain Randolph Ridgely, an account of which we gave in our last number. On the day of leaving, there were four physicians in attendance upon Captain Ridgely. He continued wholly insensible, and his medical attendants entertained little or no hopes of his recovery. General Taylor was greatly afflicted by this sad casualty, and expressed himself in relation to it in the most feeling manner. He declared in the presence of several, that Captain Ridgely was an invaluable officer, and that his place could not be filled.

The strength of the forces of the United States at Monterey does not exceed five thousand men, and the whole number of troops, from the mouth of the Rio Grande to Monterey, does not exceed thirteen thousand. It will require five thousand men to garrison the town already taken, and General Taylor thinks it would be injudicious to leave Monterey for San Luis Potosi with less than fifteen thousand men.

Lieut. Armstead, bearer of despatches from Washington to General Taylor had arrived. It was understood at Monterey that they directed Gen. Taylor to proceed to Tampico if he thought proper. The next movement of the army will be towards Linares, a town about one hundred and twenty miles from Monterey on the route to Tampico. Gen. Worth is of the opinion that there will be a severe fight there. Saltillo is entirely deserted by the enemy, their forces being concentrated at San Luis Potosi. General Taylor will leave a small force at Saltillo. An express from General Wool reached General Taylor on the 25th ult., informing him he had fifty days, subsistence, and was within six days' march of Moncova. He was hastening his marches to unite with General Taylor at Monterey.

Major Lear, who was wounded similarly to the late Captain Page was still ill. There were hopes of his recovery but his wound was of the most distressing character. Lieut, Col. McClung was rapidly recovering. Col. Marshall's regiment of Kentucky mounted men were encamped near Camargo, and the Tennessee mounted regiment was encamped near Matamoras.

The Mexican citizens of Monterey were returning to the city, resuming their usual avocations, and seemed to be satisfied with the new order of things.

A party of Mexicans and Americans under the command of the daring Capt. Jack Everett, formerly of Mobile, had gone in pursuit of the Comanche Indians who had been committing depredations upon the property of and murdered several Mexicans.

The U. S. steamer Spitfire left the brazos on Thursday last for Tampico. The object of the trip had not transpired.

The health of the troops was generally good, with the exception of some cases of ague and fever and diarrhea.

Among the property left by the enemy when he evacuated Monterey, was 30 to 40,000 choice cigars, about the same number of bales of tobacco and 20 to 30 bales of officer's uniforms, of the finest fabric, elegantly decorated, which must have cost large sums.

General Worth reports that 460 Mexicans were killed in his division of the army 130 of whom were buried at Mount Gillespie, the part of the city so called in honor of the brave and lamented officer, whose honored name it bears, and who was interred at that spot.

Great harmony and good feeling exists between General Taylor, Worth, Butler, and all the other officers, from which we conclude the letters received in the States stating that unpleasant words had passed between Generals Taylor and Butler were without foundation.

All the troops in Camargo are ordered to Mier, Seralvo and Pontaguida, the latter place is suppose to be the quarters of Canales. This will leave but one regiment from the mouth of the river to Matamoras, and two regiments at the latter place.

The city of Monterey is represented as a most delightful place of residence, and the country around it beautiful beyond description. Oranges, Lemons, Grapes, Pomegranates and indeed all the tropical fruits of the most delicious quality are most abundant.

Gov. Henderson had left the encampment with the official account of the siege and capture at Monterey. It was not known whether he would proceed himself to Washington.

A number of wounded officers and privates were passengers in the Virginia.
Capt. Harney's dragoons left here yesterday for Monterey. We have advices from Monterey as late as the 26th ult. The troops are suffering some from the chills and fever, and the diarrhea. The Mexicans here in Mataoras have a report that Tampico has been taken by our fleet, and they generally credit it. You may recollect that last June I wrote you that a report was in circulation amongst them here, that a fight had come off between some of our gunboats and theirs, which subsequently proved true, and I give you this rumor in the same way, thinking there may be some grounds to build it upon. The Tennessee Cavalry are expected here today from Lavacca. Health of the soldiers still improving.

P.S. - Gen. Wool has arrived at Monclovia, from which place he will send a part of his forces to Chihuahua and join Taylor with the balance at Monterey. This I get from Major Shields, who arrived here last evening. He also says that Taylor will move upon Tampico for reinforcements.

CORPORAL

Friday, November 24, 1846  REv43i60p4c4 JUSTICE TO A BRAVE VIRGINIAN

We have hitherto failed to re-publish, which we now do most cordially, the following high compliment to Lieutenant Colonel Garland, contained in a letter in the New Orleans Commercial Times from Monterey. Colonel Garland is a son of Hudson M. Garland, Esq, the distinguished Ex-Representative of the Albemarle Congressional District. He has more than once nobly upheld the honor of his native State, and we hope to have the pleasure of recording the honors won by many more of the sons of Virginia, before the termination of the war:

"On the left, the fighting was of a different and more sanguinary character than on the right. It was there the enemy had their heaviest force, and every point could be reinforced promptly. Nearly every house was a fortress, and shot were flying in every quarter from invisible enemies. It was in the lower part of the town, and on the plain, four-fifths of our men were killed and wounded. There Colonel Garland led the first division into the fight, and commanded all of it that was in the town on the 21st of September, and whilst officers and men were falling by scores around him, displayed that species of cool and undaunted courage, so rare, that enables the man to overcome his warmest feelings of friendship, and carries the officer on to his duty, and to face the storm of battle, when his judgment tells him he gains nothing by the contest, and when he is repulsed, to again return with the same unflinching nerve to the charge."

Friday, November 24, 1846  REv43i60p4c5 MELANCHOLY CASUALTY – CAPT. RANDOLPH RIDGELY

This gallant officer, who has won so many laurels in the war, is supposed to have lost his life at Monterey, about three weeks ago in a most melancholy manner. Our information, as derived from John Deshon, Esq., one of the owners of the steamship Sea, and who came passenger in the ship Uncas which arrived here from Brazos yesterday, is to this effect. Capt. Hill, U. S. Quartermaster at Brazos, informed Mr. Deshon that an express had just arrived from Monterey, communicating the sad intelligence, that Capt. Ringely, being on an unruly horse, and riding down a steep hill, was thrown, the horse falling upon him, and shockingly mangled. At the time the express left Monterey, Captain Ridgely was wholly insensible, the brains oozing out of his ears, and no hopes were entertained of his recovery. The Uncas spoke the steamship Virginian about twenty five miles from the S. W. Pass, on her way from Brazos to this port. On board of the Virginian was a bearer of despatches [sic] from Monterey for Washington, who will probably arrive today. From him we may expect full particulars of this terrible catastrophe. We must hope that Capt. Ridgely will yet be spared to his country, which cannot afford to lose so brave and chivalrous and meritorious an officer. [New Orleans Tropic, Nov. 13.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES FROM GEN. TAYLOR

HEADQUARTERS FIELD DIVISION VOLUNTEERS
MONTEREY, September 30, 1846

Sir: Pursuant to the instructions of the Major General commanding, on the 21st inst., at about 8 o'clock, A.M., I marched my division (with the exception of one company from each infantry regiment, left to guard the camp) and placed it in order of battle, under cover, immediately in rear of the mortar and howitzer battery, my left resting on the main road to Monterey. I had been in position but a short time when I received the General's further orders to move as speedily as practicable with three regiments to the support of General Twiggs' division, then engaged in an attempt to carry the enemy's first battery on our left. To expedite this movement I marched the three nearest
The division, under Gen. Hamer, on whom devolved [sic] the command, moved to a new position near the captured fort, within supporting distance of our field batteries on the left. The troops remained in and near this position, and under fire at the enemy's batteries until late in the day. For details of the after proceedings of the day, I refer to Gen. Hamer's report.

It is with no little pride and gratification that I bear testimony of the gallantry and general good conduct of my command. Were proof wanting, a mournful one is to be found in the subjoined return of the casualties of the day. That part of my division properly in the field, did not exceed eleven hundred, of which number full one-fifth was killed or wounded. The fact that troops for the first time under fire should have suffered such loss, without shrinking, in a continuous struggle of more than two hours, and mainly against a sheltered and inaccessible foe, finds but few parallels, and is of itself an eulogy to which I need not add. That there were some more prominent for skill and gallantry than others, even in a contest where all were brave, there can be no doubt; and I leave to those better qualified from their situations than myself, the pleasing, though delicate task of reporting upon their respective merits.

Of my brigadiers, however, it is proper that I should myself speak. General Hamer was placed in a situation where nothing brilliant could be achieved, but which at every moment imperatively demanded prudence and clam, unbending courage. It is but justice to him to say that I found him equal to the emergency.

General Quitman had before him a field in which military genius and skill were called into requisition, and honors could be fairly won, and I but echo the general voice in saying that he nobly availed himself of the occasion.

My special thanks are due to Major L. Thomas, assistant adjutant general; General A. Sidney Johnston of Texas, acting inspector general, and Lieut. G. W. Lay, aid-de-camp, who not only displayed great gallantry and coolness, but by their professional skill, activity and energy, rendered valuable service throughout the action. After my withdrawal, they remained with the troops in the field.

Surgeon R. P. Hunt, my volunteer aid-de-camp, also evinced great coolness, and conveyed promptly the orders confided to him.

On the way back to camp I found the Kentucky regiment, under command of Col. Ormsby, drawn up in fine order to repel a threatened charge from a large body of Mexican cavalry then in view. Though necessarily kept from the field of action proper, they occupied a most important position, and had two men wounded in defending it.

I make no mention of the movements of Capt. Webster's howitzer battery, which was withdrawn from my division and placed under charge of the chief of artillery.

Enclosed are the reports of Brig. Gens. Hamer and Quitman of the operations of their respective brigades; also, a statement in detail of the loss sustained by the division.

I am, sir, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,

W. O. BUTLER,

Maj. W. W. S. Bliss
Asst. Adj't General

Head-Quarters Army of Occupation,
Monterey, Mexico.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION VOLUNTEERS,
Camp near Monterey, Sept. 28th, 1846

Sir:— I have transmitted to Maj. Gen. Butler a report of the operations of the first brigade of this division on the 21st inst; but it becomes my duty, as commandant of the division, to send you a account of the movements of both brigades during the remaining days of our attack upon Monterey.

For a full statement of the points occupied and the services rendered by the 2d brigade, I respectfully refer you to the report of Brig. Gen. Quitman, who accompanied the brigade, and whose communication to me is herewith sent. I was not with tem to witness their gallantry; but from the general's report, they are entitled to great credit for the courage, energy, and zeal displayed n the 23rd, in pushing their attack so far into the city, and sustaining themselves under the galling fires of the enemy, who had such decided advantages over them in their barricades and other fences.

On the morning of the 23d, the first brigade was ordered out in front of the city, and took a position near the infantry of Gen. Twiggs' command, where we remained until late in the afternoon. Whilst on the plain, we could distinctly hear the discharges of small arms, occasionally, between Gen. Quitman's and Gen. Henderson's command and the forces of the enemy in the city. When they were ordered to retire from the city and return to camp, the first brigade was directed to march to the town and occupy the fort taken on the 21st the one above it, "El Diablo", which had been abandoned by the enemy on the previous evening, and the tannery between them. We obeyed, the order, approaching them under a fire of balls and shells, which fortunately did us no injury.

Capt. Webster's battery formed part of my command, and after stationing the brigade, I directed him to throw a couple of shells from his 24lb. howlizers [sic] into the plaza, where it was understood the principal force of the enemy was collected. He did so; and, as far as we could discover, with great precision and considerable effect. Subsequent information confirmed our opinions in regard to the injury and alarm produced by these shells. During the night, Gen. Worth threw several in the same direction from the batteries on the Western side of the city, proving to the Mexicans that they were assailable in this form both flanks.

Through the whole night the enemy threw up rockets from the plaza and from the citadel; no doubt expecting a night attack, and adopting this method to discover the approach of our troops.

Early on the morning of the 24th, we had made every preparation for renewing the attack upon the city, when we were suddenly arrested by a bugle with a [...] [unreadable word] of truce, approaching the forts. It was accompanied by Col. Marino, one of Gen. Ampudia's aids, bearing a letter to the General-in-Chief. He was conducted to me by Lieut. Col. Rogers, from the upper fort, and I furnished him a horse and escort to Maj. Gen. Taylor's quarters in camp. The firing on both sides was suspended until a conference could be held. This led to the capitulation by which the city was surrendered.

I have in my former report expressed my opinion in regard to the coolness and gallantry displayed by the officers and men under my command; and have only to add, that their conduct from the firing of the first to the last gun, was of the most meritorious character, richly deserving the approbation of their superior officers, and the gratitude of their countrymen.

Very respectfully, your obd't serv't
T.H. L. HAMER
Brig. Gen. Comd'g 1st division volunteers.

Major W. W. S. Bliss,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Friday, November 24, 1846 REv43i60p2c4 General Taylor's Dispatch

TUESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 24, 1846

General Taylor's dispatch of the army's position and operations.

We surrender our columns today to the long official despatch [sic] of G. Taylor, which will be read with deep interest.
It is a lucid, dignified and modest narrative of one of the most brilliant achievements which history records. It shows that this able officer not only does his whole duty in the field, but what it almost as difficult, clearly portrays the whole facts to his admiring countrymen. Some one was not far out, when he declared that Gen. Taylor's despatches [sic] would proudly compare with Caesar's commentaries upon his great deeds of arms. Of course our readers will devour every line, and will need no prompting or guidance from us. We deem it just, however, to a gallant and injured officer, to call particular attention to what Major General Taylor says of Maj. Gen. W. O. Butler, of Kentucky. An attempt has been made, for party effect in some instances, to assail his fair reputation, first by charging him with cowardice, and then, in a most contradictory manner, with imprudence and rashness [sic]. Mark how the following passages, taken in connexion [sic] with the regular narrative it Gen. Taylor's dispatch, utterly put down these wantonly malicious and baseless tales. It appears, moreover, that Gen. Butler acted throughout, under the immediate instructions of Gen. Taylor:

"I take pleasure in bringing to the notice of the government the good conduct of the troops, both regulars and volunteers, which has been conspicuous throughout the operations. I am proud to bear testimony to their coolness and constancy in battle and the cheerfulness with which they have submitted to exposure and privation. To the general officers commanding divisions- Major Generals Butler and Henderson, and Brigadier Generals Twiggs and Worth - I must express my obligations for the efficient aid which they have rendered in their respective commands. I was unfortunately deprived, early on the 21st, of the valuable services of Major General Butler, who was disabled by a wound received in the attack on the city."

The rest of the interesting despatches [sic] shall appear very soon.

Friday, November 24, 1846  REv43i60p2c5 TO ARMS!

In order to help along the good cause, we republish the following spirited appeal of the two gallant young captains of this city. We cannot doubt that recruits will flock to the standard of their country. We learn that Capt. Scott will today visit the county of Hanover; and that himself or representative will be at Goochland Court-house on Thursday. Will not the people of Eastern Virginia turn out to do their duty? Already companies have offered their services from Lynchburg, Alexandria, Jefferson and Berkeley counties, and two from this city. The moment for action has arrived. Let the sons of Virginia see that she win the honor of having the first Regiment in the field. Through the term of enlistment be "during the war," we cannot believe that it can continue more than a year. The finest spirit prevails in this city. Let the country catch the inspiration, and bring forward her sons, proud of the distinction of serving their native land.

[from the N.O. Jeffersonian, Extra, Nov. 16]

IMPORTANT NEWS!

Another Revolution!!- By the brig. Havne, just arrived from Havana, we have been put into possession of Havana papers to the 6th instant. Their contents, which we condense, will be found important at this crisis of our Mexican relations.

The English steamer- (name omitted) arrived at Havana from Vera Cruz on the 6th after a passage of four days. She brought 102 passengers- the principal part of whom were Mexicans who had left Mexico on account of the prosecution of the war.

Our dates from Vera Cruz are to the 31st ult:

On the 27th October, M. Pacheco Minister of foreign relations, and Don Crescencio Rejon, Minister of Mercy and Justice, threw up their commissions. Their resignation was accepted by the President ad interim, and Don Jose Maria Lafragna and Don Joaquine Ladron de Guevara had been appointed to their stead.

The Department of San Luis Potosi has declared against the Presidency of Gen. Salas, and the people of that Department have declared their opposition to entrusting the affairs of the government either to Santa Anna, or any other person whom he may select. The confidence which previous advices seemed to have placed in Santa Anna by the people of Mexico, appears to have been without foundation.

Santa Anna is reported to have arrived with his handful of troops at San Luis Potosi on the 8th October, and established his headquarters. He immediately commenced a correspondence with General Salas, expressive of his confidence in his administration, and pledging him his support in any endeavor to sustain him. This, too, in the very face of the expression of the people against Salas, by the people at San Luis Potosi. Verily, Santa Anna is playing a deep game, which time alone will expose.

The dates from the city of Mexico are the 25th and 26th October. From these we learn that Don Felix Rivas, charged by the executive of Mexico with a special commission, the contents of which have not transpired, left the capital on the 24th for Vera Cruz, with instructions to make his way to Havana with all dispatch. We heartily hope that our fleet will intercept him, and keep up a stricter blockade than that which is represented as being kept up at present.

Gen. Salas having had his life threatened, left the palace on the 28th October, and made his way safely to Gacubaya, where he was received very cordially by don Flores. The President ad interim took with him in his flight some of the best troops which garrisoned the capital.

It is reported that Santa Anna has expressed his approval of Lafragua and Guevara.

It is rumored that the U. S. steamers off Green Island are short of coal, and the crews suffering from scurvy.

The Mexican papers estimate the expenses of the war thus far, on the part of the United States, at seventy-five millions of dollars. This is Mexican calculation. The Mexican papers think that to continue the war will prove highly advantageous to the Mexicans, as the advances of the foe should be met by light skirmishes and other embarrassments, until the Americans shall be expelled from the country.

Extract of a letter dated Vera Cruz, Oct. 12th:

"Commodore Connor yesterday addressed a letter of thanks to the General commanding this place, thanking him for the courtesy and kindness shown to the officers and crew of the Truxion.

"An attack on the Castle of San Juan d' Ullca and the town of Vera Cruz was expected to take place this week. The enthusiasm and valor which was displayed by the Mexicans at Monterey, will not fail here."

"The National Guard are approaching Vera Cruz by forced marches."

Several private letters from the "Army of the North," state that Santa Anna had ordered all the troops at Saltillo to San Luis Potosi.

Most of the foregoing information is derived from extracts of private letters received at Havana, and expressive only of Mexican views.

[from the Independence Expositor]

From the Independence Expositor we glean the following items of news: Gen. Kearney will proceed to Monterey in California. Col. Doniphan is to recover the stolen property from the Navagoes, force them to make a treaty, or punish them. If he can then procure supplies, he will advance with his Regiment to Chihuahua. The companies under command of Capt. Waldo and Stevenson are stationed at Taos, under Major Gilpin.

Friday, November 24, 1846  REv43i60p1c4 LATER FROM MEXICO

[from the N.O. Jeffersonian, Extra]

In another column will be found an Extra from the N. O. Jeffersonian, with some interesting news. We have before us an Extra Picayune of the same date, which says that the State of San Luis Potosi has pronounced against the Presidency of Gen. Salas, demanding that Gen. Santa Anna should assume the Executive functions, or some one named by him. This latter version is different from the Jeffersonian's account. The Picayune thinks that Santa Anna is determined that Gen. Salas shall not obtain to absolute an ascendancy- it being reported that Salas is honest enough to attempt to carry into effect all the guaranties of the revolution of Jalisco and the citadel. Santa Anna is playing a deep game. On the 23rd Oct. he addressed the following letter of professions to Salas:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE LIBERATING ARMY,

In Campaign,}

Most Excellent Sir:  Ry the Circular of your Excellency of the 19th inst., I have learned with deep concern that the foreign enemies of the country, by means of their secret agents, circulated malicious reports on the night of that day, with a view to produce an impression that there was a plan on foot to deprive of power his Excellency, the General charged with supreme Executive authority, which reports led to most serious alarm, that might have produced lamentable consequences had not the artifice been very opportunely discovered.
I rejoice exceedingly that tranquility and public confidence have been re-established, and agreeably to the wishes of the Supreme Government, I shall take care that these great blessings are not disturbed in these States, and especially in the army under my command. I assure your Excellency that this army shall not entertain any other idea than that of struggling against the foreign enemy, fulfilling its duties towards the country, and scouting the suggestions with which it is sought to divert it from such noble aims. I have the honor of reiterating, & c.

God and Liberty.

Antonio Lopez De Santa Anna.
October 23rd, 1846,

To the Secretary of War.

An influential Mexican paper says, that Santa Anna will withdraw the troops from Tampico and Saltillo, and concentrate a large army at San Luis, and then make an offensive attack.

To show the policy of Mexico and the vast importance of a most active and vigorous prosecution of the war on our part, we quote a Vera Cruz paper, which, after stating that the war has already cost the United States the sum of sixty-five millions of dollars, adds: "To prolong it is..." [unreadable line].

Friday, November 24, 1846  REv43i60p3c6 ATTENTION VOLUNTEERS!

Captain Carrington's company of volunteers are hereby notified to rendezvous forthwith in the city of Richmond. The company is now organizing anew, in accordance with the recent instructions of the Secretary of War, and will march as soon as its organization shall be completed. The term of enlistment will be during the continuance of the war with Mexico. The new requisition raises the number of privates in the company to EIGHTY instead of SIXTY-FOUR, as before required. Several vacancies have been occasioned by the removal from the city of some of the original volunteers, and by other causes - so that the whole number of vacancies to be supplied is not less than thirty. Volunteers in the country, whether members of the original company or not, are recommended to repair to the city as soon practicable. Applications for enlistment should be made to the Captain at his office, corner of 11th and Bank Streets. By order of the Captain.—Nov. 20

Friday, November 24, 1846  REv43i60p4c2 ALEXANDRIA IN THE FIELD!

Saturday Morning, November 21, 1846 [from the Enquirer]

At the moment of our warmly advocating the "re-annexation" of Alexandria to the Old Dominion, we predicted that her sons would do their duty as good citizens - having entered into the alliance "for better for worse," prepared to enjoy the benefits and share the responsibilities of the new connexion [sic]. The following from the Alexandria Gazette shows that we did not misconstrue their character. At the first call of their country, they step forward as citizens of Virginia to meet her engagements. We do not know what may be the decision of Governor Smith, but if it be compatible with his opinions and duty, we should be glad to see these "harden young Virginians" enrolled among the troops from the State:

"A PROMPT RESPONSE- We are informed that immediately upon the receipt of intelligence that the War Department had made a requisition upon the State of Virginia for one regiment of infantry, to serve during the was against Mexico, the Alexandria Volunteers of this place, under the command of Captain M. D. Corse [sic], made a tender of their services to governor Smith, to form a part of the regiment thus called for. As our town is now de facto a part and parcel of the State, we see no reason to doubt that the offer will be accepted as promptly as it was made. This is the second time that the "Alexandria Volunteers" have tendered their services since the commencement of the war, and it reflects the highest credit upon their patriotism and public spirit. The ranks of the company, we learn, are not at this time quite filled up but they, doubtless, will be as soon as it shall be made known that their services have been accepted."

We are glad to see from the Standard that in our own city the worthy and spirited young Captains Scott and Carrington are recruiting for the Mexican service under the Virginia requisition [sic], with every prospect of success; their ranks fast filling up. We renew the request made to the Standard, which is, to state that, to a certain extent, uniforms have already been provided, and, as far as they go, will be furnished gratis to Capt. Carrington's recruits.

We look forward confidently to a prompt and efficient organization of the regiment from this State. Virginia never was backward, when the country needed her services. Many of her brave sons have hitherto panted for an opportunity of distinguishing themselves. It is now presented under most auspicious circumstances. The season of the year is most favorable, those fond of adventure and travel will be delighted with the natural beauties of a country blessed by Heaven but cursed by the wickedness and vice of man, and, unless we mistake the signs of the times, the new recruits will be saved all the ennui and irritations of inactive life in camp, and will have an opportunity of meeting danger and reaping honors in the field. We cannot think it necessary, but duty impels us to make an earnest appeal to Virginia pride of character, and to invoke her young men to come forward promptly and enthusiastically. Let not the slur be cast upon the Old Dominion, that her sons, who, last summer, so cordially enrolled their names, should now be backward in meeting the new state of circumstances when their services are really required. Is there a Virginian who could tamely bear the disgrace of seeing a draft put in operation? In a short time, we doubt not, we shall have the pleasure of recording the fact, that the Virginia Regiment has been made up of zealous and efficient men, who freely offer themselves to serve until the termination of the war shall announce the chastisement of an insolent foe and his ample reparation for the many insults and injuries inflicted upon our country and our fellow-citizens.

We understand that Gov. Smith has suggested to the Secretary of War the importance of fixing the rendezvous for the troops from Eastern Virginia in this city or Old Point. We think it probable that a proposition, so desirable, will be acceded to. We also hear, that Gov. Smith has directed that quarters and rations for the recruits collected here, be provided at the State Armory.

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p1c6 MEXICAN LETTERS OF MARQUE

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO

Information has been received in this city of the fact that the steamer Tay, in its last trip from Vera Cruz to Havana, took out three hundred letters of marque, with naturalization papers conferring the rights and privileges of Mexican citizens upon all who would sail under them. This information comes in an authentic form. It was expressed from Mexico on the evening of the 30th ult., and reached Vera Cruz in time for the Tay, the vessel in which the letters of marque were mailed, by which it was taken to Havana, and thence it was brought here by the late arrival.

A letter from Havana, has also been received announcing the arrival there of those letters of marque. The writer was of the opinion that the Spanish Government would not permit the letters to be used in the port of Havana, but adds, as naturalization papers offering extraordinary privileges accompany them, it is probable some of them may slip out upon our commerce despite of the vigilance of the authorities.

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p1c6 THIRD ATTEMPT UPON ALVARADO

A letter from the Gulf Squadron says that Com. Conner informed the Captains of the several ships that he again intended to attack Alvarado with 2,000 men. The following ships he intends to anchor off the fortress at the mouth of the river for the purpose of bombarding it:

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p1c5 DEPARTURE OF MAJ. GEN. SCOTT FOR THE SEAT OF WAR

Washington, November 24

General Scott and his Staff are ordered to Mexico to give additional spirit and direction to the Army. This new movement is the result of the recent communications and conferences of which I made mention in my letter of this morning, and has grown out of recent events in Mexico, and advices from the headquarters of the army.

Gen. Scott was to leave in the mail boat this morning, and has probably gone. His destination is Tampico, but with large additional powers to control his actions when upon the ground.

From both the Navy and War Departments, I learn that every preparation is making for an attack upon Tampico. The force command by Maj. Gen. Patterson will march from Matamoras down by the coast through Tamaulipas.

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p1c5 CAPTURE OF TABASCO

Tuesday night's Union contains the official despatches [sic] from Commodore Conner. We have room today but for the following letter of Com. Conner. The other despatches [sic] of this great and successful achievement shall appear tomorrow. We rejoice that the Navy have had an "opportunity" of winning the praise and admiration of the whole country:

U. S. SHIP CUMBERLAND,
Off Vera Cruz, Nov. 5, 1846.

Sir: Herewith is transmitted a copy of a letter from Com. Perry, accompanied by copies of other communications, giving a detailed account of his operations with a detachment of the squadron in the river Tabasco. The objects of the expedition have been fully accomplished, and by the destruction or capture of all the enemy's vessels, a check has been given to a commerce, by which munitions of war were, no doubt, introduced into Mexico from the neighboring province of Yucatan. Much praise is due to Commodore Perry for the skill and judgment manifested throughout the whole expedition.

The department will learn with regret the death of Lieut. Charles W. Morris, which took place on the 1st instant, on board the Cumberland, from a wound received at the town of Tabasco on the 26th ult. He was an officer of great promise, and his loss is a most serious one to the service.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant
D. CONNER,
Commanding Home Squadron.

Hon. JOHN Y. MASON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

The Union says:

At a late hour this evening we received the official reports from the squadron, which we lay before our readers in another column. They add another most brilliant and successful incident in the official records of the war, and in this instance it is our gallant navy that triumphs. The attack of Commodore Perry appears to have been admirably planned and executed. We have had time as yet only to give a passing glance to the dispatches, and we must reserve more extended comment upon them till tomorrow evening.

The country will learn with profound sorrow that this achievement, full of success and honor as it is, has yet cost our nation and our naval service the life of one of its most gallant and accomplished young officers, Lieut. Morris, bearing a name already eminently distinguished in the triumphs of our navy. He has given to that name, in his death of heroic duty and devotion, a new and more sorrowful renown. His countrymen will mourn his fate, while they remember his patriotic valor with gratitude and pride.

CAPTURE OF TABASCO!

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES

A detailed account of the Proceedings of the Expedition, under my command along the Eastern Coast of Mexico

I left the anchorage at St. John Lizardo on the evening of the 16th of October, with the steamer "Mississippi", having on board a detachment of 200 officers, seamen and marines, under command of Captain French Forrest, and in tow, the steamer "Vixen", and schooners "Bonita", "Reefer", and "Nonata," respectively commanded by Commander Sands, and Lieutenants Commandant Benham, Sterrett and Hazard, and the schooner "Forward," and steamer "McLane," commanded by Captains Nonces and Howard, of the revenue marine.

The next morning at daylight I captured, off the bar of Alvarado, the American barque "Coosa", found in treasonable communication with the enemy; and the same day the "Vixen" chased and boarded the American schooner "Portia". The "Coosa" was despatched [sic] to this place as a prize, and the "Portia" was permitted to proceed, her papers having been endorsed. From the day of our leaving Alvarado [the 17th] up to the 22nd, we had a succession of very bad weather, which gave me much trouble in keeping my little command together. During the interval, however, we captured and sent (in the Mexican schr. "Telegraph")

On the 23rd, all the vessels, with the exception of the "Reefer," (previously separated in a gale,) reached the bar of the river Tabasco; and having determined on attacking the commerical [sic] town of Frontera, at the mouth of the river, and the city of Tabasco, situated 74 miles higher up, I placed myself on board the "Vixen", leaving the "Mississippi" in command of Commander Adams at anchor outside, and taking in tow the "Bonita" and "Forward", with the barges containing the detachment under command of Capt. Forrest, I crossed the bar, the "Nonata" following under sail.

The "Vixen" with this heavy drag steadily ascended the stream against a four-knot current, and arriving near to Frontera, I discovered two steamers (of which I had received previous information) firing up, doubtless in the hope of escape, but we were too close upon them. Casting off her tow, the "Vixen" proceeded ahead, followed by the other vessels and barges, and at once the town, the steamers, and all the vessels in port were in our possession, excepting only the schooner "Amado", which vessel, attempting to escape up the river, was pursued by Lieut. Commandant Benham in the "Bonita", and captured.

Desirous of reaching Tabasco before they would have time for increasing their defences [sic], the detachment under Captain Forrest was placed on board the largest of the captured steamers, the "Petrita", and she, with the "Nonata", the "Forward," and the barges in tow, and the "Vixen" with the "Bonita", left Frontera at halfpast 9 the next morning; Lieut. Walsh being left in command of the place.

After steaming all night, and encountering various incidents arising from the rapidity of the current and circuitous course of the stream, we arrived at 9 the next morning in sight of fort Aceachappa, intended to command a most difficult pass of the river. On our approach, the men employed in preparing the guns for service fled, and we passed it unmolested, but I was careful to cause the guns to be spiked.

Anticipating serious resistance at this place, arrangements had been made for landing Capt. Forrest with his detachment a mile below the fort, to march up and carrying it by storm.

At noon, all the vessels anchored in line of battle in front of the city at half-musket range, when I immediately summoned it to surrender, the boats meanwhile being employed in securing five merchant vessels found at anchor in the port.

To my summons sent by a flag with Captain Forrest, a refusal to capitulate was returned, with an invitation to me to fire as soon as I pleased. Suspecting, as I did, that this answer was given more in bravado than in earnest, and being extremely reluctant to destroy the place, I entertained the hope that a few shots fired over the buildings would have caused a surrender. Accordingly, I directed the guns of the "Vixen" alone to be fired, and at the flag staff, sending an order to all the vessels to avoid, so far as possible, in case of general fire, injury the houses distinguished by consular flags.

At the third discharge from the "Vixen", the flag disappeared from the staff. On seeing it down, I ordered the firing to cease, and sent Captain Forrest again ashore to learn whether it had been cut down by our shot, or purposely struck; the reply was, that it had been shot away, and the city would not be surrendered.

I now directed Capt. Forrest, with the force under his command, to land and take a position in the city, commanded by our guns. This movement brought on a scattering fire of musketry from various parts of the city, which was returned by the flotilla.

Perceiving towards evening that the enemy did us but little injury, though openly exposed on the decks of the small vessels, and their balls passing through our slight bulwarks, and apprehending, from the proverbial business of sailors, that should they and the marines be attacked in the narrow streets after dark, they, would be cut off by sharp-shooters from the houses, I ordered the detachment to be re-embarked.

In this position the vessels remained all night, the crews lying at their quarters ready to return the fire of the artillery of the enemy, which it was supposed they would have had the courage to have brought down under cover of the night to the openings of the streets opposite to our vessels, but they left us undisturbed.

Learning that the merchants, and other citizens of the city were desirous that a capitulation should be made, but were overruled by the Governor, who, regardless of consequences, and secure himself against attack, was content that the city should be destroyed rather than surrendered, I determined from the motives of humanity not to fire again, but to pass down to Frontora with my prizes.

In the morning, however, the fire was recommenced from the shore, and was necessarily returned, but with renewed orders to regard the consular houses, so far as they could be distinguished. In the midst of the fire, a flag of truce was displayed on shore; on perceiving which, I caused the firing again to cease, and Captain Forrest was sent to meet its bearer, who submitted a written communication addressed to me; a copy of which with a copy of my reply, marked B and C, will be found enclosed.

As an assurance of my sincerity, I now hoisted a white flag, and directed the prizes to drop down the stream, intending to follow with the flotilla; but in violation of the understanding implied in the before mentioned correspondence, the enemy, in discovering that one of the prizes had drifted ashore in front of the city, collected a large force within and behind the houses in the vicinity, and commenced a furious fire upon her. Lieut. Parker, of this ship, in command of the prize defended her in the most gallant manner, and ultimately succeeded in getting her again afloat, having one of her men killed and two wounded.

It was in carrying an order to Lieut. Parker, that Lieut. Morris was wounded. He had been of infinite service to me from the time we left Lizardo, and conducting himself during the bombardment with remarkable deliberation and coolness, he approached the prize in a line to cover his boat, and, though apparently regardful of the safety of the officer and men of the boat, who were seated, he stood erect himself, and the ball struck him in the throat. No one can deplore the fate of the very valuable young officer more than myself. His loss is irreparable to the service and to his family.
It may well be supposed that on perceiving the attack upon the prize, I reopened upon the city which again silenced their fire. I now proceeded with the flotilla and prizes down the river. One of the prizes, a small schooner of little value, having grounded in a dangerous pass, and knowing that it would be difficult to extricate her without causing inconvenient delay, I ordered her to be burned.

We arrived safely at Frontera on the evening of the 26th, the "Vixen" having towed down the river five vessels and several barges.

From Frontera I despatched my prizes to this place; and after destroying all the vessels and craft found in the river of little value to be manned, I proceeded on the 31st to rejoin you, leaving the "McLane" and "Forward" at anchor opposite Frontera to continue the blockade of the river, and to afford protection and shelter to the neutral merchants, residents of the place, who professed themselves in apprehension of violence from the Mexican soldiery should they be left unprotected.

On our way to this place the prize steamer Petrita, in company and in sight of this vessel, captured the American brig "Plymouth," found engaged in landing a cargo upon the enemy's coast.

From the Company order in another column, it will be seen that Captain Carrington's Company of Volunteers for Mexico will be fully organized on Saturday next- the number now enlisted, leaving no doubt that it will be full at that time. We rejoice at the success which has attended Captain C's energetic and spirited exertions.

We are equally pleased to hear that Captain Scott is rapidly filling up the ranks of his Company of Greys. Yesterday morning he had enrolled about fifty recruits. The remainder, we doubt not, will be promptly made up. He deserves high credit for his ind... zeal in meeting the emergency.

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p2c2 OFFICIAL DESPATCHES FROM GENERAL WOOL

HEADQUARTERS, COAHUILA, MEXICO
Near Presido, 14th October, 1846

Sir: I have the honor to report that I arrived with about 1,300 men at the Rio Grande on the morning of the 8th instant, and crossed the river on the 9th, 10th, and 11th instant, without any serious accident, and encamped three miles west of the Presidio, and nine miles from the river, which, at the time of the crossing, was four feet three inches deep. By unloading and raising the articles a foot in the wagons, we were enabled to cross the ford. The Infantry crossed in the boats prepared at San Antonio.

Colonel Hardin, with eight companies of the 1st regiment of Illinois volunteers, came up on the evening of the 12th. Yesterday he crossed the river, and will join us in the course of an hour. We have been compelled to delay a few days to repair our train, 170 wagons, carrying fifty five days' rations, and to recruit our horses and mules; much reduced by a long march, without anything but prairie grass to feed on.

A part of the train had traveled from La Vaca, three hundred and thirty miles, without a day's rest. We shall resume our march with about 1,800 men, on the morning of the 16th instant, after leaving a company to take charge of the boats, and the ford of the Rio Grande, until the rear of my column under the direction of Col. Churchill arrives, which is expected in the course of ten days.

Unfortunately the quartermaster's department is without specie. Treasury notes are of no use to us, as the Mexicans will take nothing but gold and silver. With private means, and borrowing, we shall be able to pay for half rations of corn during our stay at this place. Whether I shall be able to succeed as well at other towns is doubtful. My route to Chihuahua will be through San Fernando, Santa Rosa, and perhaps Monclova. At this point I will endeavor to open a communication with General Taylor, which it would seem, will be necessary on account of supplies. As soon as the wet season commences our communications with San Antonio and Presidio will be, in a great measure, cut off- the route in many places, independent of the streams, will be impassable. Hence, I will be compelled to establish a depot of supplies at Monclova, or some other point in the interior, and on a route leading to General Taylor's army, or depot of supplies. The supplies in the country are limited. A partial amount of flour and corn, and full rations of beef, can be obtained. I have ordered the quartermaster's department to forward, as fast as possible, all the subsistence he could obtain between this and the middle of November, when it is thought we may have our communications interrupted by wet weather.
Brigadier General shields arrived yesterday, and confirmed the previous intelligence of a hard-fought battle between Gen. Taylor and Ampudia, and also of the capitulation. This morning I was informed by an intelligent Mexican, that Santa Anna had arrived at Saltillo with 13,000, and with those of Ampudia, making a force of 16,000 men. It is also stated that the government had called out 60,000 militia. In a few days I shall know the truth of the rumor. I herewith send you a copy of an order issued on the arrival of the troops on the Rio Grande. Also, a report of Lieut. Kingsbury's, of the route and days' march from San Antonio to this place.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN E. WOOL,
Brigadier General.

To Brigadier Gen. Jones,
Adjutant General United States Army.

[ORDERS.- NO.89]
HEADQUARTERS CAMP ON THE RIO GRANDE,}
Near Presidio, 9th October, 1846                      }

Soldiers! - - After a long and tedious march you have arrived on the bank of the Rio Grande. In the performance of this service, the commanding General has witnessed, with the greatest pleasure, your patience, good order and perseverance [sic], under many deprivations and hardships. All have done their duty, and in a manner that reflects the highest credit on both officers and men. From this remark he would not except his staff, who have actively and zealously devoted themselves to the service, whilst Captain Cross had been eminently successful in forwarding his long train of supplies, without delay or serious accident.

Tomorrow you will cross the Rio Grande, and occupy the territory of our enemies. We have not come to make war upon the people or peasantry of the country, but to compel the government of Mexico to render justice to the United States. The people, therefore, who do not take up arms against the United States, and remain quiet and peaceful at their homes, will not be molested or interfered with, either as regards their persons or property; and all those who furnish supplies will be treated kindly, and whatever is received from them will be liberally paid for.

It is expected of the troops that they will observe the most rigid discipline and subordination. All depredations on the persons or property of the people of the country are strictly forbidden; And any soldier or follower of the camp, who may so forget his duty as to violate this in junction will be severely punished.

By command of Brigadier Gen. Wool.

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p3c1 DEATH OF MAJOR LEAR

We have received (says the Union) from the office of the Adjutant General of the Army the following copy of the order issued by General Taylor, announcing the death of this brave and lamented officer:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION}
CAMP NEAR MONTEREY, Nov. 1, 1846

The melancholy duty devolves upon the Commanding-general of announcing to the army the decease of Major W. W. Lear, 3rd infantry, who expired yesterday of the wound received while gallantly leading his regiment in the action of the 21st September.

A long and creditable service, commencing in the war of 1812, has thus been sadly but nobly closed. Kind and generous in his private relations, and though feeble, from the ravages of protracted disease, faithful, zealous and efficient in the discharge of duty, the relatives and friends of the deceased major, and the service at large, have sustained in his death no ordinary loss.

The deceased will be interred at 4 o'clock, P. M., this day with the honors due to his rank. All officers off duty are respectfully invited to attend his funeral at the headquarters of his late regiment- the 3d infantry.

By order of Major General Taylor.

Monday, November 27, 1846 REv43i61p4c1 FROM MONTEREY

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES FROM GEN. TAYLOR

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION
CAMP NEAR MONTEREY, Oct. 9, 1846

Sir: I have now the honor to submit a detailed report of the recent operations before Monterey, resulting in the capitulation of that city.

The information received on the route from Cerralvo, and particularly the continual appearance in our front of the Mexican cavalry, which had a slight skirmish with our advance at the village at Ramas, induced the belief, as we approached Monterey, that the enemy would defend that place. Upon reaching the neighborhood of the city on the morning of the 19th of September, this belief was fully confirmed. It was ascertained that he occupied the town in force that a large work had been constructed, commanding all the Northern approaches; and that the Bishop's Palace and some heights in its vicinity near the Saltillo road, had also been fortified and occupied with troops and artillery. It was known, from information previously received, that the Eastern approaches were commanded by several small works in the lower edge of the city.

The configuration of the heights and gorges in the direction of the Saltillo road, as visible from the point attained by our advance on the morning of the 19th, led me to suspect that it was practicable to turn all the works in that direction, and thus cut the enemy's line of communication. After establishing my camp at the "Walnut springs", three miles from Monterey, the nearest suitable position, it was, accordingly my first care to order a close reconnoissance [sic] of the ground in question, which was executed on the evening of the 19th by the engineer officers under the direction of Major Mansfield. A reconnoissance [sic] of the Eastern approaches was at the same time made by Captain Williams, topographical engineers. The examination made by Major Mansfield proved the entire practicability of throwing forward a column to the Saltillo road, and thus turning the position of the enemy. Deeming this to be an operation of essential importance, orders were given to Brevet Brig. Gen. Worth, commanding the second division, to turn the hill of the Bishop's Palace; to occupy a position on the Saltillo road, and to carry the enemy's detached works in that quarter, where practicable. The first regiment of Texas mounted volunteers, under command of Col. Hays, was associated with the second division on this service. Capt. Sanders, engineers, and Lieut. Meade, topographical engineers, were also ordered to report to Gen. Worth for duty with his column.

At 2 o'clock, P.M., on the 20th, the second division took up its march. It was soon discovered by officers who were reconnoitering the town, and communicated to Gen. Worth, that this movement had been perceived, and that the enemy was throwing reinforcements towards Bishop's Palace and the height which commands it. To divert his attention as far as practicable, the first division, under Brigadier General Twiggs, and field division of volunteers under Major General Butler, were displayed in front of the town until dark. Arrangements were made at the same time to place from the enemy's main work, the citadel, two 24-pounder howitzers, and a 10 inch mortar, with a view to open fire on the following day, when I proposed to make a diversion in favor of Gen. Worth's movement. The 4th Infantry covered this battery during the night. Gen. Worth had in the meantime reached and occupied for the night, a defensive position just without range of a battery above the Bishop's Palace, having made a reconnoissance [sic] as far as the Saltillo road.
Early on the morning of the 21st, I received a note from Gen. Worth, written at half-past 9 o'clock the night before suggesting what I had already intended, a strong diversion against the center and left of the town, to favor his enterprise against the heights in rear. The infantry and artillery of the 1st division, and the fields division of volunteers were ordered under arms and took the direction of the city, leaving one company of each regiment as a camp guard. The 2d dragoons, under Lieut. Col. May, and Col. Wood's regiment of Texas mounted volunteers, under the immediate direction of Gen. Henderson, were directed to the right to support Gen. Worth, if necessary, and to make an impression, if practicable, upon the upper quarter of the city. Upon approaching the mortar battery, the 1st and third regiments of infantry, and battalion of Baltimore and Washington volunteers, with Capt. Bragg's field battery--the whole under the command of Lieut. Co. Garland- were directed towards the lower part of the town, with orders to make a strong demonstration, and carry one of the enemy's advanced works, if it could be done without too heavy a loss. Major Mansfield, engineers, and Capt. Williams and Lieut. Pope, topographical engineers accompanied this column, Maj. Mansfield being charged with its direction, and the designation of points of attack. In the meantime the mortar, served by Capt. Ramsay of the ordnance, and the howitzer battery under Captain Webster, 1st artillery, had opened their fire upon the citadel, which was deliberately sustained and answered from the work. Gen. Butler's division had now taken up a position in rear of this battery, when discharges of artillery, mingled finally with a rapid fire of small arms, showed that Lieut. Col. Garland's command had become warmly engaged. I now deemed it necessary to support this attack, and accordingly ordered the 4th infantry and three regiments of Gen. Butler's division to march at once by the left flank in the direction of the advanced work at the lower extremity of the town, leaving one regiment [1st Kentucky] to cover the mortar and howitzer battery. By some mistake, two companies of the 4th infantry did not receive this order, and consequently did not join the advance companies until sometime afterwards.

Lieu. Col. Garland's command had approached the town in a direction to the right of the advanced work (No. 1) at the northeastern angle of the city, and the engineer officer, covered by skirmishers, had succeeded in entering the suburbs and gaining cover. The remainder of this command now advanced and entered the town under a heavy fire of artillery from the citadel and the works on the left, and of musketry from the houses and small works in front. A movement to the right was attempted with a view to gain the rear of No. 1 and carry that work, but the troops were so much exposed to a fire which they could not effectually return, and had already sustained such severe loss, particularly in officers, that it was deemed best to withdraw them to a more secure position. Capt. Backus, 1st Infantry, however, with a portion of his own and other companies, had gained the roof of a tannery, which looked directly into the gorge of No. 1 and from which he poured a most destructive fire into that work and upon no.1, and contributed largely to the fall of that strong and important work.

The three regiments of the volunteer division under the immediate command of Major General Butler, had in the meantime advanced in the direction of No. 1. The leading brigade, under Brigadier General Quitman, continued its advance upon that work, preceded by three companies of the 4th infantry, while general Butler, with the 1st Ohio regiment entered the town to the right. The companies of the 4th infantry had advanced within short range of the work, when they were received by a fire that almost in one moment struck down one-third of the officers and men, and rendered it necessary to retire and effect a conjunction with the two other companies then advancing. General Quitman's brigade, though suffering most severely, particularly in the Tennessee regiment, continued its advance and finally carried the work in handsome style, as well as the strong building in its rear. Five pieces of artillery, a considerable supply of ammunition and thirty prisoners, including three officers, fell into our hands. Maj. Gen. Butler, with the 1st Ohio regiment, after entering the edge of the town, discovered that nothing was to be accomplished in his front, and at this point, yielding [sic] to the suggestions of several officers, I ordered a retrograde movement; but learning almost immediately from one of my staff that the battery No. 1 was in our possession, the order was countermanded, and I determined to hold the battery and defences [sic] already gained. Gen. Butler, was with the 1st Ohio regiment, then entered the town at a point farther to the left, and marched in the direction of the battery No. 2. While making an examination with a view to ascertain the possibility of carrying this second work by storm, the General was wounded, and soon after compelled to quit the field. As strength of No. 2, and the heavy musketry fire flanking the approach, rendered it impossible to carry it without great loss, the 1st Ohio regiment was withdrawn from the town.

Fragments of the various regiments engaged were now under cover of the captured battery and some buildings in its front, and on the right. The field batteries of Captains Bragg and Ridgely were also partially covered by the battery. An incessant fire was kept up on his position from battery No. 2, and other works on its right, and from the citadel on all our approaches. General Twiggs, though quite unwell, joined me at this point, and was instrumental in causing the artillery captured from the enemy to be placed in battery, and served by Capt. Ridgely against No. 2, until the arrival of Capt. Webster's howitzer battery, which took its place. In the mean time, I directed such men as could be collected of the 1st, 3d, and 4th regiment, and Baltimore Battalion, to enter the town, penetrating to the right and making the 2d battery if possible. This command under Lieut. Col. Garland, advanced beyond the bridge "Purisma" when finding it impracticable to gain the rear of the 2d battery, a portion of it sustained themselves for some time in that advanced position; but as no permanent impression could be made at the point, and the main object of the general operation had been effected, the command including a section of Captain Ridgely's battery, which had joined, it was withdrawn to battery No. 1. During the absence of this column, a demonstration of cavalry was reported in the direction of the citadel. Captain Bragg, who was at hand, immediately galloped with his battery to a suitable position, from which a few discharges effectually dispersed the enemy. Capt. Miller, 1st infantry, was despatched [sic] with a mixed command, to support the battery on this service. The enemy's lancers had previously charged upon the Ohio and a part of the Mississippi regiment, near some fields at a distance from the edge of the

Early on the morning of the 24th, I received, through Col. Moreno, a communication from Gen. Ampudia, proposing his headquarters. In the proceeding night, except Captain Ridgely's company, was relieved at mid-day by Gen.Quitman's brigade.
Bragg's battery was thrown under cover in front of the town to repel any demonstration of calvary in that quarter. At dawn of day, the height above the Bishop's Palace was carried, and soon after meridian; the Palace itself was taken and its guns turned upon the fugitive garrison. The object for which the 2d division was detached had thus been completely accomplished, and I felt confident that with a strong force occupying the road and heights in his rear, and a good position below the city in our [...], the enemy could not possibly maintain the town.

Desiring to make no further attempt upon the city without complete concert as to the lines and mode of approach, I instructed that officer to suspend his advance until I could have an interview with him on the following morning at his headquarters.

Early on the morning of the 24th, I received, through Col. Moreno, a communication from Gen. Ampudia, proposing evacuated nearly all his defences in the lower part of the city. This was reported to me early in the morning of the 23d by Gen. Quitman, who had already mediated an assault upon those men, by working parties during the night, under the direction of Lieut. Scarritt. Engineers.

The main object proposed in the morning had been effected. A powerful diversion had been made to favor the operations of the 2d division, one of the enemy's advanced works had been carried, and we now had a strong foot hold in the town. But this had not been accomplished without a very heavy loss, embracing some of our most gallant and promising officers. Capt. Williams, topographical engineers; Lieuts. Terrett and Dilworth, 1st infantry; Lieut.
Woods 2d infantry; Capts. Morris and Field, Bvt. Maj. Barbour; Lieuts. Irwin and Hazlitt, 3rd infantry; Lieut. Hoskins, 4th infantry; Lieut. Col. Watson, Baltimore battalion; Capt. Allen and Lieut. Putman, Tennessee regiment; and Lieut.
Hett, Ohio regiment, were killed, or have since died of wounds received in this engagement, while the number and rank of the officers wounded gives additional proof of the obstinacy of the contest and the good conduct of our troops. The number of killed and wounded incident to the operation in the lower part of the city on the 21st, is 394.

The 22d day of September passed without any active operations in the lower part of the city. The citadel and other works. I immediately sent instructions to that officer, leaving it to his discretion to enter the city covering his men by the houses and walls, and advance carefully as far as he might deem prudent. After ordering the remainder of the troops as a reserve, under the orders of Brigadier General Twiggs, I repaired to the abandoned works, and discovered that a portion of Gen. Quitman's brigade had entered the town, and were successfully forcing their way towards the principal plaza. I then ordered up the 2d regiment of Texas mounted volunteers who entered the city Bragg's battery was also ordered up, supported by the 3rd infantry; and after firing for some time at the cathedral, a portion of it was likewise thrown into the city. Our troops advanced from house to house, and from square to square, until they reached a street but one square in rear of the principal plaza, in and near which the enemy's force was mainly concentrated. This advance was conducted vigorously but with due caution, and although destructive to the enemy, was attended with but small loss on our part. Captain Ridgely, in the meantime, has served a captured piece in battery No. 1 against the city, until the advance of our men rendered it imprudent to fire in the direction of the principal plaza. I was now satisfied that we could operate successfully in the city, and that the enemy had retired from the lower portion of it to make a stand behind his barricades. As Gen. Quitman's brigade had been on duty the previous night, I determined to withdraw the troops to the evacuated works and concert with Gen. Worth a combined attack upon the town. The troops accordingly fell back deliberately, in good order, and assumed their original positions.
General Quitman's brigade being relieved after nightfall by that of Gen. Hamer. On my return to camp, I met an officer with the intelligence that Gen. Worth, induced by the firing in the lower part of the city, was about making an attack at the upper extremity, which had also been evacuated by the enemy to a considerable distance. I regretted that this information had not reached me before leaving the city, but still deemed it inexpedient to change my orders, and accordingly returned to camp. A note from Gen. Worth written at eleven o'clock, P. M., informed me that he had advanced to within a short distance of the principal plaza, and that the mortar (which had been sent to his division in the morning) was doing good execution within effective range of the enemy's position.

Desiring to make no further attempt upon the city without complete concert as to the lines and mode of approach, I instructed that officer to suspend his advance until I could have an interview with him on the following morning at his headquarters.

Upon occupying the city, it was discovered to be of great strength in itself, and to have its approaches carefully and strongly fortified. The town and works were armed with forty-two pieces of cannon, well supplied with ammunition, and manned with a force of at least 7,000 troops of the line, and from 2000 to 3000 irregulars. The force under my orders before Monterey, as exhibited by the accompanying return, was 425 officers and 6,220 men. Our artillery consisted of one 10-inch mortar, two 24-pound howitzers, and four light field batteries of four guns each - the mortar being the only piece suitable to the operations of a siege.

Our loss is twelve officers and one hundred and eight men killed; thirty-one officers and three hundred and thirty-seven men wounded. That of the enemy is not known, but believed considerably to exceed our own.

I take pleasure in bringing to the notice of the Government the good conduct of the troops, both regulars and volunteers, which has been conspicuous throughout the operations. I am proud to bear testimony to their coolness and constancy in battle, and the cheerfulness with which they have submitted exposure and privation. To the general officers commanding divisions - Major Generals Butler and Henderson, and Brigadier Generals Twiggs and Worth - I must express my obligations for the efficient aid which they have rendered in their respective commands. I was unfortunately deprived, early on the 21st, of the valuable services of Major General Butler who was disabled by a wound received in the attack on the city. Major General Henderson, commanding the Texas volunteers, has given me important aid in the organization of his command, and its subsequent operations. Brigadier General Twiggs rendered important services with his division, and, as the second in command after Major General Butler was disabled. Brigadier General Worth was intrusted [sic] with an important detachment, which rendered his operations independent of my own. Those operations were conducted with ability, and crowned with complete success. I desire also to notice Brigadier Generals Hamer and Quitman, commanding brigades in General Butler's division. Lieutenant Colonels Garland and Wilson, commanding brigades in Gen. Twiggs' division. Colonels Mitchell, Campbell, Davis and Wood commanding the Ohio, Tennessee, Mississippi, and 2d Texas regiments, respectively and Majors Lear, Allen and Abercrombie, commanding the 3rd, 4th and 1st regiments of infantry; all of whom served under my eye, and conducted their commands with coolness and gallantry against the enemy. Colonel Mitchell, Lieutenant Colonel McClung, Mississippi regiment, Major Lear, 3rd infantry and Major Alexander, Tennessee regiment, were all severely wounded.

Captains Bragg and Ridgely severed with their battles during the operations under my own observation, and in part under my immediate orders, and exhibited distinguished skill and gallantry. Capt. Webster, 1st artillery, assisted by Lieuts. Donaldson and Bowen, rendered good service with the howitzer battery, which was much exposed to the enemy's fire on the 21st.

From the nature of the operations, the 2d dragoons were not brought into action, but were usefully employed under the direction of Lieut. Col. May as escorts, and in keeping open our communications. The 1st Kentucky regiment was also prevented from participating in the action of the 21st, but rendered highly important services under Col. Ormsby, in covering the mortar battery, and holding in check the enemy's cavalry during the day.

I have noticed above, the officers whose conduct fell under my own immediate eye or is noticed only in minor reports which are not forwarded. For further mention of individuals, I beg leave to refer to the reports of division commanders herewith respectfully transmitted. I fully concur in their recommendations, and desire that they may be considered as part of my own report.

I must express my particular obligations to Brevet Major Mansfield and Lieut. Scarritt, corps of engineers. They both rendered most important services in reconnoitering the enemy's positions, conducting troops in attack and strengthening the works captured from the enemy. Major Mansfield, though wounded on the 21st, remained on duty during the following day, until confined by his wound to camp. Capt. Williams, topographical engineers, to my regret and the loss of the service, was mortally wounded while fearlessly exposing himself in the attack of the 21st. Lieut. Pope, of the same corps, was active and zealous throughout the operations. Major Munroe, chief of the artillery, Maj. Craig and Capt. Ramsay of the ordnance, were assiduous in the performance of their proper duties. The former superintended the mortar service on the 22d, as particularly mentioned in the report of Gen. Worth, to which I also refer for the services of the engineer and topographical officers detached with the second division.

Surgeon Craig, medical director, was actively employed in the important duties of his department, and the medical staff generally were unremitting in their attention to the numerous wounded - their duties with the regular regiments being rendered uncommonly arduous by the small number serving in the field.

I respectfully enclose herewith, in addition to the reports of division commanders, a field return of the force before Monterey on the 21st September - a return of killed, wounded, and missing during the operations - and two topographical sketches - one exhibiting all the movements around Monterey - the other on a larger scale, illustrating more particularly the operations in the lower quarter of the city - prepared respectively by Lts. Meade and Pope, topographical engineers.

LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA

Tuesday, Dec. 29th, 1846.

THE VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Stephenson referring to the publication by Capt. E.C. Carrington, Jr., (made in the Times and Compiler of this, Tuesday, morning) said that it exhibited a strange difficulty which had arisen between the Executive and that officer, which he thought ought to receive the attention of the House, and in order to bring the matter before it he offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Virginia be requested to furnish this House with a copy of a correspondence between himself, as Adjutant General, and Captain Carrington, in relation to the expenses incurred by said Carrington’s company of volunteers.
Mr. STEPHENSON said, as he understood the difficulty, Capt. Carrington had incurred expenses for clothing his company before it was mustered into the service of the United States, and that the Governor had refused to pay these expenses out of the fund appropriated by the Legislature. He understood that the Governor refused on the ground that the appropriation was for provisions only, and not for clothing. The Governor had taken ground not designed by the Legislature, and throw on Capt. Carrington the burthen of a debt which he ought not to be forced to pay. It was not his design, nor did he believe it to be the design of this House, that any such responsibility should be thrown on any of the officers of the new regiment. He had coated for the bill, as he believed the House did, with the design that all expenses, whether for provisions or anything else necessary for the volunteers, were to be paid out of the appropriation. It would be hard, indeed, if a young man, who had by his exertions raised a volunteer company, should be compelled to pay for their clothing. For the information of the House, he stated that, in a conversation for the volunteers would not exceed a thousand dollars;--so that the refusal to pay the bill for clothing did not result form a want of funds, but from something else. He offered the resolution to get the correspondence before the House, so as to relieve Capt. Carrington from his embarrassment.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. DORMAN, soon after the adoption of Mr. Stephenson’s resolution, arose, and, after referring to it, expressed the opinion that the difficulty referred to by M. Stephenson, could be easily settled by the House. He had no doubt that it was entirely the result of a misconstruction.—He felt satisfied that the Governor had acted conscientiously, according to his construction of the law. But he believed it to be a misconstruction. He felt assured that it was the intention of the Legislature, in making the appropriation, that all legitimate expenses for those things necessary for the comfort and wants of the volunteers were to be paid. But he was convinced this matter could be all settled to the satisfaction of the Governor and Capt. Carrington; and the resolution he would now offer, he believed would have that effect. He would have made it a joint resolution; but the senate was not in session, and would not be possibly until too late to meet the emergency, as the volunteers were probably soon to be ordered on their way to Mexico. He proposed the following resolution:

Resolved, by the House of Delegates, That it be certified to the Governor of this Commonwealth, that this House, in passing the law appropriating ten thousand dollars for the relief of the Virginia regiment of volunteers, intended to embrace all proper expenses incurred by the officers in charge of the several companies; and that a liberal construction out to be given to said law in disbursing the appropriation aforesaid.

Mr. STEPHENSON said the resolution met his concurrence. He was prepared to vote for it, and hoped the House was. If it wee adopted, it would do away with the necessity for the resolution he had introduced.

Mr. BOCOCK was not prepared to vote for the resolution. He had not red the correspondence, and did not know what construction the Governor had placed upon the law. The resolution, Mr. B., said, was a strange one, and presumed to say what the Legislature meant in passing a law. He contended that it was beyond the power of the House of Delegates to construe a law for those who had to execute it. It could neither construe nor change the law. It presumed to say what the Legislature meant in passing a law. He contended that it was beyond the power of the House of Delegates to construe a law for those who had to execute it. It could neither construe nor change the law. It may be the Governor had construed the law properly; if so, the Legislature could not change his construction, and nothing less than the Legislature could change the law. Mr. B. said the resolution proposed a novel proceeding, and he preferred to await to see the true nature of the difficulty and learn whether it would be more reluctant that he to involve a young man in a responsibility which did not properly belong to him; but he could not consent to depart form the fundamental principle that it takes both the House of Delegates and the Senate to act in the matter of changing and defining a law.

Mr. Jones of Chesterfield, confessed himself to be in a situation like that of the gentleman from Buckingham, (Mr. Bocock.) He had not seen the correspondence alluded to. He was nevertheless included to believe form what he had heard among the members of the House, that the construction of the law by the Governor was different form that he (Mr. J.) intended in voting for it. But he could see no advantage from the adoption of the resolution. What would the Governor do were it sent to him? He might declare that he concurred in the sentiments of the resolution, but adhered to his opinion, that his construction had been the proper one—that it had been just and liberal. He might, too question the right of the House to construe the law for him. Mr. J. though it better not to adopt such a resolution.

Mr. DORMAN said he would cheerfully acquiesce in the scruples of gentlemen, and consent that the resolution be laid on the table, to give time to examine the correspondence, He moved that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOCOCK suggested the propriety of obtaining additional information to that called for by Mr. Stephenson’s resolution, (to be added at the end,) which Mr. S. accepted; and, as amended the resolution was adopted:

"Also, with a copy of the claims, which have been preferred for payment under the act of the 9th of December, stating the reasons which have prevented the payment of such as have been rejected."

On motion of Mr. NEWMAN—Resolved, That the Auditor of Public Accounts be requested to report to this House—1st, the annual expense of the Public Guard from its organization, showing the whole amount expended to the end of the last fiscal year;—2d, the annual expense incurred in building and keeping in repair the Armory of Virginia, with the cost of the lot of ground on which it is situated, so as to exhibit the whole amount to the end of the last fiscal year;--3d, the annual expense of making and repairing arms at said Armory, with the whole cost to the end of the last fiscal year;--4th, the annual amount of money paid out by the State for water rent for the use of the Armory; and, also, the amount received by the State annually for water rent, in such way as to exhibit the amount of balance paid out by the State to the end of the last fiscal year;--and, 5th, the nature of the existing leases, and the purposes for which any part of the lot on which the Armory is erected is let out, and to whom.

THE MESSAGE.—The last Courrier des Etats Unis, [N.Y.,] (which, to please M. Guizot and his master, never pretermits any opportunity of twitting the administration on account of the Mexican war,) is forced thus to speak of the President’s message:

“Taken together, this state paper is a remarkable production. It cannot be denied that he side of America—to defend which was its great object—has been stated and sustained in it with a rare ability. The rights of the United States against Mexico are taken up in it above, and pleaded, point by point, with a method and logic that might make the reputation of a statesman, and most certainly, that of a perfect man of business. The President reviews minutely all the facts appertaining to the quarrel, from the separation of Texas to the date of the first collision; and all these historical events are so interlinked and so clearly arranged as to cause the United States to emerge form the imbroglio as white and pure as snow.”

Again, alluding to the discussion of the question of the boundary of the Rio Grande, the Editor says: “All this portion of the message is handled with the hand of a master. It will reverse the judgment of the tribunals of Europe, and restore the cause of America before it, as two of the principal Federal journals of New York have frankly admitted—we mean the Courier & Enquirer and the Commercial Advertiser. And this admission, and the sincerity with which it is made, do honor to tier conductors. It is to us a source of pleasure to behold the cause of the country put beyond the scope of political passions and interests.”

The message is spread at length, in almost excellent French version, before the patrons of this journal; and no doubt will be copied form it into the columns of most of the journals published in the same language in Europe, as it will be no little thing for foreign publishers to have the document ready translated to their hands.

THE AUGUSTA VOLUNTEERS.

At a meeting of the Augusta Volunteers, held at their rendezvous in the city of Richmond on the morning of 30th December, 1846, Daniel A. Stofer was appointed Chairman.

The object of the meeting having been explained by the Chairman, in a few pertinent remarks, the following resolutions were offered, a vote taken upon each, and the whole were unanimously adopted:

- Resolved, That his company will at all times observe that strict regard to subordination and discipline that becomes good citizens.
- Resolved, That in volunteering our services to our country as soldiers, we will not forget what is due to the civil authority as citizens,
- Resolved, That this company will discourage all disorderly conduct in any member composing it; and that it will endeavor, while in this city, and elsewhere, to maintain a character or orderly and genteel deportment.
- Resolved, That in our intercourse with each other, we will indulge those amicable and friendly feelings which ought to possess the breasts of men who expect to serve their country together, in a foreign land.
- Resolved, That we will meet our fellow volunteers from other portions of this State, in a spirit of perfect amity and cordiality.
- Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be handed to our Captain, with a request that he have them published in one or more than one newspaper in this city.

Correspondence of the New York Mirror

A pretty good anecdote is told of Capt. Walker, so well known for his daring acts in the present war. When the bill creating the mounted regiment of riflemen was before Congress, last year, with a probability of its being passed into a law, regular officers of the army, now in Mexico, gave him letters, recommending him to the President for the post of Captain of one of the companies. The President nominated him, and he was confirmed without hesitation by the Senate. A month ago, to-day, he was sworn in by a magistrate of this city. Before the battle of Monterey, in which he fought with the Rangers, as Lieutenant Colonel, the regular officers told him he ought to join his company of rifles, as Captain, and incidentally mentioned that they had given him letters to the President. He replied that he was under great obligations to them; but that he had safely stowed the letters away—they were at his quarters! When he came to Washington, the President informed him that no secondary influence had induced the appointment. It was made on the ground of real merit.

PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.—The First Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers departed form Pittsburg on Tuesday last. The scene was witnessed by immense crowds. The Gazette of that city says: "What added greatly to the interest of the occasion, was the departure of two Pittsburg companies, the Blues and Grey. Ties of relationship, of friendship and acquaintance bound these two hundred men to thousands of others, and the rude shock of separation, when the prospects of re-union were so uncertain to all, and when to many it was an eternal farewell, caused deep feeling and a very general excitement. Sons parted form fathers and mothers, husbands from wives, fathers from children, brothers from sisters, and, in some instances, all these ties were centred in one individual, and had to be sundered. The scene was also in the highest degree animating, and was well calculated to increase the military ardor among the youth of our city, already sufficiently excited on this subject. Cheers upon cheers rent the air, while the different boats left the wharf, and many a poor fellow put on a cheerful countenance, and waved his cap, and shouted with the loudest when his heart was full and his eyes overflowed."

"COURT SQUARE, Dec. 18, 1846.

"Dear Sir: You will pardon me for addressing you in this manner for the first time. But when last evening the duties of my position, as presiding officer of the meeting at Faneuil Hall, permitted me to look around, for the purpose of claiming your acquaintance, I was unable to find you on the platform. Permit me then, Sir, in this rather formal manner, to present to you my congratulations on your most happy and eloquent debut as a public speaker, and to assure you that the sentiments of pleasure and pride which your address last evening inspired, were not confined to myself alone, but were cordially felt and frankly acknowledged by the whole assemblage present. For myself, I must say that my satisfaction at your address was more deep perhaps than that of others, from the circumstance, that much the greater portion of my life has been passed in different sections of the southern country, and that the most of my warmest and closest social ties of friendship have been contracted at the South, and with the people of the South. I felt, then, most warmly and sincerely, that your appeal should have been made, regarding that bone of contention between the two sections of our country, in a way so happy, so firm, and so just, and the cordial response of the masses who listened, renewed in me the conviction, that the people of our country are still true to the integrity of the Union, and that the efforts of fanaticism merely affect the scum on the surface, and have not touched the vials of our country. Permit me, Sir, the pleasure of forming your personal acquaintance at your convenience, and if I can be of any service to you, I hope you will feel that you have a friend in your obedient servant,

Charles L. WOODBURY.

Still harping on my daughter

The Richmond Whig continues its work of defaming the Tenth Legion. Not content with sneering at its sturdy Democracy in time of peaceful political contest, it now endeavors to blacken it's patriotism in time of war. Again, and again has the Whig alluded in terms of derision to the fact that no company of volunteers ahs been raised in that region; and, yesterday, it expresses regret that the War Department should have declined to call for another battalion, and thus have deprived “the Tenth” from contributing its quota. Why are these reprehensions so continually courted out against the people of that section? Why should their patriotism be impugned and their character ridiculed before the other portions of the State? Is it a reproach to any county not to have raised a company? If so, why does not the Whig speak out in relation to other counties besides those composing the Tenth Legion? We can specify many of the strong holds of Whiggery which have not raised their quotas; but we would not do so in order to reproach them. Where is Loudoun, one of the Whig Gibralters? Where is Wheeling? Where is Lynchburg, which can send such a cloud of Whig votes to the surrounding counties?—Where is the unfaUtering Whig county of Rockbridge, the seat for the Military Institute? These and other places, high in the estimation of the Richmond Whig, have not furnished their quotas. But we are not the persons to impugn their patriotism, on that account. We love our whole Commonwealth too well to throw out jests and jeers upon the public spirit of any portion of it.

The truth is, that the volunteer companies thus far raised have all been collected in large towns, and where great thoroughfares pass. Between some counties the means of intercommunication are far greater than between others, and young men are enabled to flock to the standard with far greater facility. It would be doing Richmond city more than justice to say that three companies have been raised form amongst her population; and it would be doing the surrounding counties (so easily reached by railroads and steamboats,) great injustice not to mention that many of the young men enrolled here came in from the country.

Our State has done more than her duty. She has raised more than the regiment called for. She has done more than the Whig States of Massachusetts and North Carolina have yet accomplished. We therefore see no reason for any one section or any one party to be taunting another with negligence or deficiency in patriotism.

Report of the Secretary of the Navy

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 5, 1846.

Sir: Since the last annual report, no naval force has been maintained in the Mediterranean. Under the earnest request of the Spanish authorities, the depot at Port Mahon has been broken up, and measures taken to remove the stores and withdraw the officers in charge of them. It is proposed in the coming year to send a suitable force to that station.

After exchanging with the proper officers the ratifications of the treaty between the U. States and China, in December last, Commodore Biddle, with the Columbus and Vincennes, the ships under this command, has visited various important points in the China seas. In the month of May or June, he sailed for Japan, and expected to extend his cruise to Kamschatka.

There is no reason to doubt that he will render the valuable service to be expected from an officer of his experience and judgment, by making our country, its resources, and its friendly disposition towards the people inhabiting these remote regions, more favorably known. He has probably returned to Macao about this time, and in the month of January or February, the Columbus and Vincennes will commence their cruise homeward, by way of the North Pacific.

On the 6th of January last, orders were sent from this department to Commodore Biddle, to proceed with the Columbus to the northwest coast of America, and assume the command of the naval forces of the United States on that station.—No acknowledgement of the order has been received, and there is no reason to doubt that he had left Macao before it reached that place, or that he will promptly obey it on its reaching him.

Commodore Skinner was relieved in the command of the squadron on the coast of Africa in the month of June last, by Commodore Read.—Our naval forces on that station have been actively and successfully employed in the humane duty of suppressing the slave trade. The squadron consists of the frigate United States, 44; sloop Marion, 16; brigs Dolphin and Boxer, 10 each; and storeship Southampton, 6 guns.

The judicious measures adopted have secured to the officers and men an extraordinary degree of health in that inhospitable climate. Its effects are, however, so injurious that the cruises have not been, and ought not to be, so long on that as on other stations. The prizes captured and condemned will contribute some thousands of dollars to the navy pension fund.
On the Brazil station, the squadron under Commodore Rousseau has been reduced by the return of the frigate Raritan, Captain Gregory, and of the sloop Plymouth, Commander Henry, and the detachment of the sloop Saratoga, Commander Shubrick, for the Pacific. The frigate Columbia and brig Bainbridge remain on the station; and although this force is small, it has secured protection to American commerce within the limits of its operations.

The frigate Constitution, Captain Percival, has returned to the United States, having made a voyage around the world. The special duty assigned to Captain Percival has been satisfactorily performed.

In the Pacific ocean the naval forces of the United States, under command of Commodore John D. Sloat, consisted, on the first of July last, of the frigate Savannah, sloops Portsmouth, Levant, Warren and Cyane, schooner Shark, and store-ship Erie.

They have been reinforced by the frigate Congress, the sloops Saratoga, Dale and Preble, and the raze Independence. The sloop Levant is on her return home, and authority has been given to send home the Savannah and Warren, the time for which the crews of these vessels enlisted having expired. Commodore W. Branford Shubrick went out in the Independence to relieve Commodore Sloat, under orders issued in August last.

In confidential instructions dated on the 24th of June, 1844, the Secretary of the Navy called Commodore Sloat’s “attention particularly to the present aspect of the relations between this country and Mexico. It is the earnest desire of the President to pursue the policy of peace, and he is anxious that you and every part of your squadron should be assiduously careful to avoid any act of aggression. Should Mexico, however, be resolutely bent on hostilities, you will be mindful to protect the persons and interests of citizens of the United States near your station; and should you ascertain, beyond a doubt, that the Mexican Government has declared war against us, you will at once employ the forces under your command to the best advantage.” “The great distance of your squadron, and the difficulty of communicating with you, is the cause of issuing this order.” The officer who was thus instructed, observed the line of conduct prescribed to him with such intelligence and fidelity, that no complaint has ever been made of any unauthorized aggression on his part.

On the 7th of June, 1846, at Mazatlan, Commodore Sloat received satisfactory information, through Mexico, “that the Mexican troops six or seven thousand strong, had, by order of the Mexican government invaded the territory of the United States north of the Rio Grande, and that the squadron of the United States were blockading the ports of Mexico on the Gulf. He properly considered these hostilities as justifying his commencing offensive operations on the west coast” and, on the 8th of June, sailed in the frigate Savannah “for the coast of California; to carry out the orders of the department on the 20th of June, 1845. He arrived at Monterey on the 2d of July, and on the 7th demanded a surrender of the place. This was evaded, and an adequate force landed from the squadron, took possession of the town and raised the flag of the United States without opposition or bloodshed. On the 9th, Commodore Stockton, of the sloop Portsmouth, under the Commodore’s orders, with like success, took possession of Francisco, and that part of the country, in the name of the United States. On the 17th, he sent Purser Faunteroy with a detachment as far as the Mission of St. Johns, to hoist the flag of United States, and to recover cannon and munitions which had been buried by the enemy. On his arrival he found that the place had been captured an hour or two previously by Lieut. Colonel Fremont, of the United States army, with whom he returned to Monterey on the 19th.

On the 15th of July, the frigate Congress arrived at Monterey, and Commodore Stockton reported to Commodore Sloat for duty as a part of his squadron. On the 23d he was ordered to the command on shore, and on the 19th, Commodore Sloat found his infirm health so enfeebled by his arduous duties, that he determined to avail himself of a permission which had been given him in his discretion, to assign the command to Commodore Stockton, and sailed for Panama on his return home. After encountering much peril and hardship, this gallant and meritorious officer, arrived at the seat of government early in November last.

On the 25th of July, the Cyane, Captain Mervine, sailed from Monterey, with Lieut. Col. Fremont and a small volunteer force on board, for San Diego, to intercept the retreat of the Mexican Genera Castro. A few days after, Commodore Stockton sailed in the Congress frigate for San Pedro, and with a detachment from his squadron of three hundred and sixty men, marched to the enemy’s camp. It was found that the camp was broken up, and the Mexicans, under Gov. Pico and Gen. Castro, had retreated so precipitately that Lieut. Col. Fremont was disappointed in interpreting him. On the 13th, Com. Stockton was joined by this gallant officer, and marched a distance of thirty miles from the sea, and entered, without opposition, the Cuidad de Los Angelos, the capital of the Californias.

And on the 22d of August, the flag of the United States was flying at every commanding position, and California was in the undisputed military possession of the United States.

The conduct of the officers and men of the squadron in these important operations, has been characterized by activity, courage and thoughtful discipline, and entitles them to the thanks of the department. Efficient aid was rendered by Lieutenant Colonel Fremont and the volunteers under his command. In his hands, Com. Stockton informs the department, he will leave the military government, when he shall leave California in the further execution of his orders.

In the novel situation, in which both the commanders of our naval forces have been played, without instructions to regulate them in the detail of their conduct, they have adopted measures to preserve social order and maintain our authority, and to withhold from the enemy any advantages from the conquered territory which are believed to be warranted by the laws of war.
The conduct of both commanders has been marked by discretion, a spirit of conciliation, and a sacred respect for private rights, while the military movements have been ably conceived and brilliantly executed.

On her outward voyage, the Congress touched at Honolulu, and landed Mr. Ten Eyck, the commissioner of the United States to the Sandwich Islands. It was the good fortune of commodore Stockton to contribute largely to an amicable adjustment of an unhappy misunderstanding between our former agent and the King’s Government, which threatened injury to our commercial interests.

The home squadron on the 13th of May last, consisted of the frigates Cumberland, Raritan, and Potomac; sloops Falmouth, John Adams, and St. Mary’s; steamers Mississippi and Princeton; brigs Somers and Porpoise, and schr. Spitfire and Vixen; brigs Perry and Truxton; schrs. Reefer, Petral and Bonito; and storeship Relief.

During the last two years, the menaces of hostilities on the part of Mexico have made it necessary to confine the operation of the squadron principally to the Gulf of Mexico.

On the 29th of March, 1845, the acting Secretary of the Navy, in a confidential dispatch, informed Commodore Conner “that the President of the United States is impressed with a belief that it is a possible contingency that the Government of Mexico may resort to acts of hostility against the United States, and has direct me to order the other vessels of the home squadron under your command to join you at Vera Cruz. The disposition f the President is to maintain the most friendly relations with the Mexican Republic, and to meet any belligerent movement on the part of that Republic in the most decisive manner. You will, therefore, so dispose of the force which now is or may be placed under your command, as will give the most effectual protection to our citizens and commerce. You will be cautious not to violate the rights of others, but to resist and punish any aggression on ours. If a public declaration of war shall be made by Mexico against the United States, you will so conduct your operations as to show to her and to the world that, while ready to do justice and maintain peace, we are prepared to vindicate the national honor, and to visit upon our enemies the utmost severities of the war thus provoked. If, without such an open declaration, hostilities shall be commenced on her part, you will meet and visit them with the utmost promptness and energy;” and on the 16th of August, 1845, it was again impressed upon him by the Secretary of the Navy, “that the policy of this Government is the preservation of peace if possible.”

In the extremely delicate circumstances in which he was placed by the menaced hostility on the part of Mexico, Commodore Conner fully sustained his reputation for sound judgment in the performance of his duty.

On the 3d of May, 1846, he received the intelligence at Vera Cruz, which left no doubt on his mind that orders had been given by the Mexican government to General Arista to attack the American army east of the Del Norte with the forces under his command. On the 4th the Commodore sailed with the principal part of his squadron for the Brazos, been given by the Mexican government to General Arista to attack the American army east of the Del Norte with the

During the last two years, the menaces of hostilities on the part of Mexico have made it necessary to confine the operation of the squadron principally to the Gulf of Mexico.

On the 16th of October, Commodore M. C. Perry, with the steamer Mississippi and the small vessels, left the squadron at Lizardo, and sailed for Tabasco. On the 23d he arrived off the bar, and with great judgment and gallantry composed the Texan Navy were ceded to the United States. On the eleventh day of May last, Hiram G. Runnels, Esq,

The political condition of the State of Yucatan had induced a course of conduct towards her which exempted her from republic, and her people as a portion of the public enemies with whom we are at war, and you will act towards other

These instructions will be carried into effect.

During the past season, the brig Truxton has been lost, and the brig Perry wrecked; but has been, by great exertions of Lieutenant-commanding Blake, go to Key West, and will be brought to Norfolk for repair. The officers and crew of the Truxton became prisoners to the Mexicans. An inquiry will be had as to the causes of both disasters—a proceeding due to the officers and to the service.

No general cartel has been established between the two governments to regulate the exchange of prisoners during the existing war. A proposition of the Mexican government to exchange the officers and crew of the Truxton against

General La Vega and the officers who accompanied him, prisoners of war in the United States, was by your direction acceded to, and the exchange has been carried into effect. Our officers and men were placed on board our squadron and sent home; and the Mexican officers, being at full liberty, have been offered a free passage in one of our public vessels, and, I have reason to believe, have sailed from Pensacola for Vera Cruz.

In concluding my report of the operations of the Naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico, I deem it but an act of justice to call your attention to some considerations which must be borne in mind, when forming an estimate of the results accomplished. The navy of the United States is designed for the protection of our commerce in the most distant seas. The vessels composing it are authorized by law, and have been so constructed, in size and draft of water, as to navigate the ocean with safety.

The outlets of the rivers emptying into the Gulf are protected by bars, which afford but small depth of water, and the navigation of this confined sea is exposed to dangers for many months in the year by storms, sudden and violent; so that a vessel, constructed with a draft light enough to cross the bars, encounters considerable risk in keeping the sea. When hostilities with Mexico commenced, no such vessels belonged to the navy—they would have been almost useless except to prosecute hostilities in her waters. Since the necessity arose, and authority was given, vigorous efforts to supply these means have been made, and will be continued; but some time has necessarily elapsed before they could be provided to the limited extent which has been reached.

It gives me pleasure to bear testimony to the chivalrous patriotism which has animated the officers of the navy of all grades, in prompting them to seek active service against the enemy, and to offer, with the most anxious desire, to be permitted to engage in the most perilous enterprises against the enemy; while those engaged in the irksome and harassing duties of a blockade have performed their dull and heavy task with out a murmur, and with no stronger desire than to exchange it for some active and useful enterprise, however hazardous or difficult of execution.

By the terms of the annexation of the Republic of Texas as one of the States of our Union, the public vessels which composed the Texan Navy were ceded to the United States. On the eleventh day of May last, Hiram G. Runnels, Esq, appointed agent for that purpose, received at Galveston, from the Texas authorities, the sloop-of-war Austin, brigs Wharton and Archer, and the schooner San Bernard. The sloop Austin has been brought to Pensacola, and will be rebuilt, and form an interesting accession to the Navy of the United States. The two brigs and schooner, after survey, were found too much decayed to justify their repair, and have been ordered to be sold. The proceeds of sale will be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Under orders from their government, certain officers of the Texan navy were in charge of the vessels in ordinary when the delivery was made, and continued in that employment at the request of our agent. They could not be paid as officers of the Navy of the United States; but, believing it to be just and proper, directions have been given to make them compensation for taking care of the property of the United States, at the rate of pay which was allowed them by Texas at the date of its incorporation into our Union.

Beyond this, I have not considered that the laws of the United States authorized me to make payment to any one because of his having been an officer of the Navy of Texas.

The estimates for the naval services for the next fiscal year have been prepared by my direction, and transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, according to law.

I have the honor to present here with the reports from the several bureaus, and estimates in detail for the several branches of the naval service. They are based on the employment, pending the war, of ten thousand men, as allowed by law, and a number of vessels in commission to give them employment. A statement of the classes of vessels, with their rate and number is marked E in the papers accompanying the report from the Bureau of Construction. No estimates are presented for the construction of vessels as permanent additions to the navy. I deem it, however, my duty to suggest, that authority of building at least four sea steamers, capable of bearing an armament sufficient for their own defence, would essentially promote the interests of the public service. The great utility of such vessels in the squadrons in the Pacific, and the China seas, on the cast of Africa, and on the Brazil station, is established by the experience of other nations who employ them.

The importance of Pensacola as a naval station, with the necessary facilities of repairing and refitting ships of war, has for many ears been pressed on the consideration of Congress. —But at no period has the public interest so imperiously required that improvements should be made at that place as at this time. A large naval force is employed in the Gulf of Mexico, exposed to injury from tempests, and engaged in hostile operations. If any of our vessels become materially disabled, they cannot be repaired with out leaving the station, and coming as far north as Norfolk; and in the voyage the most serious disasters may befall them.

A dock with sufficient capacity to receive vessels of the largest class, is an indispensable improvement at Pensacola, and I earnestly recommend that an appropriation may be made or that purpose.

A fever of most malignant form has prevailed in the hospital at Pensacola during the past season. I herewith transmit a copy of a report of a joint board of army and navy surgeons, who were directed to investigate the causes. Their opinion is, that the place will be restored to its former salubrity, by removal of local causes of disease. Estimates are submitted for this purpose.

By the act of Congress of August, 10, 1846, the appropriations for the navy yard at Memphis for the current year, are to be confined in the expenditure to the construction of a rope walk. Proper measures have been adopted to conform to this restriction. The estimates are prepared with this view. If it shall be deemed advisable to make this yard a place of construction, and in view of its great advantages in the building and outfit of steamers, I may hope that the original purpose of the establishment will not be abandoned; it will be advisable not to continue the restriction on the appropriation for the next year.

The piece of ground called "St. Helena," opposite to the navy yard at Gosport, has been bought by virtue of authority given in the act of 10th of August last. When the State of Virginia shall have consented to the said purchase, an estimate will be submitted to make the improvements which were contemplated when the authority to make the purchase was given.

The supply by which clothing is furnished to the navy has realized the expectations of those who devised it. The supply is abundant, of excellent quality, at a cheap cost; and no appropriation is asked for the next year; or, without some great disaster, will ever be required again.

In supplying our squadrons abroad, depots or stores in which provisions are collected in anticipation of the wants of the vessels, are indispensable. I concur in the recommendation of the chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, that the act of June 17, 1844, requiring the Secretary of the Navy to order commissioned or warrant officers of the navy to take charge of the naval stores for foreign squadrons, ought to be modified. The compensation allowed would command the services of competent and experienced persons in civil life. It is a duty which but few officers desire, or are qualified for, and it does not appear proper to require of an officer to enter into and to perform duties...
under orders. From the experience had of its operation, I have no doubt that money would be saved by allowing the appointment of civilians, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and thus enlarge the sphere of selection.

The act of March 3d, 1843, requiring supplies for the navy to be procured by contract, on advertisement, with the lowest bidder, has not been construed to affect contracts executed prior to its enactment.

Contracts for the supply of cheese and butter for five years were in a course of execution at the date of the passage of this law, and will expire, one in December, 1846, and one in May, 1847. The result of a careful examination made at the bureau is, that economy has been promoted, and the quality of the ration greatly improved by this mode of contracting. I respectfully invite attention to the recommendation on that subject.

The naval school, during the past year, has been continued under the judicious superintendence of Commander Franklin Buchanan, and gives renewed promise of usefulness to the service. At the last session of Congress, it was made the subject of no special appropriation; but permission was given to apply a limited sum ($28,500) from the existing appropriations to "instructions, improvements and repairs at Fort Severn" This moderate provision has enabled the department to make some necessary additions to the accommodations of the school, and has been found sufficient for its economical support. It is hoped that a similar provision will be adopted for the ensuing year. The propriety of affording to midshipmen the means of acquiring that knowledge which is essential to the skilful discharge of their professional duties has been long recognized by Congress in its annual appropriations for instruction on board our ships of war. In the prosecution of a like purpose, a naval school, it is believed, will be found to add little to the cost of the present defective system, while it cannot fail to be attended with the most important benefits to the navy.

Connected with the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography is the Observatory. Besides conducting an extensive series of astronomical observations, it is the duty of that office to construct charts, prove nautical instruments before purchase, rent chronometers, and supply our armed cruisers with the nautical books, instruments, maps and charts necessary to their safe conduct at sea. The arrangement is such as to promote economy and to give assurance that these indispensable aids to give assurance that these indispensable aids may be relied on. The observations made and published are exclusively the work of naval officers, and are highly creditable to their scientific attainments. There can be no doubt that, with the facilities of the Observatory, we might produce our own nautical ephemeris, for which we are now dependant on foreign nations, and without which our ships that are abroad could not find their way home, nor those at home venture out of sight of our own shores. A small appropriation would be sufficient to accomplish the object; and it may well be anticipated that the expenditure would be returned by supplying our merchant vessels with the American nautical almanac at cost.

I invite attention to the report from the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. The authority to appoint a small number of assistant surgeons is necessary to the public service. Under existing circumstances it has been found necessary to employ citizen physicians in some of our smaller vessels. The commandant of the marine corps has prepared estimates for the number of officers and marines as fixed by law. I am strongly impressed with the opinion that an increase of the rank and file of the corps would great promote the efficiency of our ships in their operations against Mexico. With light pieces prepared as field artillery on board each ship, the expedition which must include operations on shore would derive important aid from increased guards of marines.

The act of August 4th, 1842, provided that, until otherwise ordered by Congress, officers of the navy shall be increased beyond the number in the respective grades that were in the service on the 1st day of January, 1842. This restriction has been construed to apply to warrant officers, other than midshipmen. The number of officers, boatswains, gunners, carpenters and sail makers happened to be small for the wants of the service at the date fixed. Embarrassment is often felt for want of authority to add to the number. It is a power which has never been abused; and as such appointments are rewards of meritorious seamen or mechanics, it appears to me that the restriction might be removed without detriment to the public interest or danger of abuse.

I cannot conclude this report without inviting attention to the operation of the act of Congress of March 3d, 1845, in regard to the appointment of midshipmen. The justice of the principle established is unquestionable, and its application has given general satisfaction. Previously to its passage, appointments were made without regard to residence, and resulted in inequalities which it will take many years to remove. The law forbids any appointment from a State having more than its proportion. Some applications for midshipmen's warrants have recently been made in behalf of sons of officers who have fallen in battle, which could not be granted, on account of their residence in States not entitled. I recommend that the restriction of the law may be so far removed, that one out of five or six vacancies, as they occur in the grade of midshipmen, may be filled at large, irrespective of the place of residence, in the same manner as a portion of the cadets at West Point are now annually appointed. Cases of peculiar merit occasionally presenting themselves, might thus be provided for under the direction of the President.

I have the honor to be very respectfully your obedient servant.

J.Y. MASON.

Wreck of the Brig 'Somers' GREAT LOSS OF LIFE

By the arrival yesterday morning of bark Morgan Dix, Capt. Hamilton, we have received dates from the squadron at Anton Lizardo to the afternoon of Sunday, the 13th Dec. The full particulars of the melancholy loss of the U. S. brig Somers will be found below. Among the passengers on board the Morgan Dix were Purser L. Washington, Jr., of the Mississippi steam frigate, with his clerk, G. Hutchinson—both on their way to the North. The following account of the loss of the Somers, was furnished to the Picayune by one of their attentive correspondents:

U.S SQUADRON, ANTON LIZARDO
December 9th, 1846.

Gentlemen—I have been requested to make a statement of the circumstances attending the melancholy loss of the U. States Brig Somers, while maintaining the blockade off the harbor of Vera Cruz. The writer of this was a witness of most of the occurrences detailed, and the narration may be regarded as every way authentic.

On the evening of the 7th inst. The Somers had taken shelter under Green Island, there being the usual appearances indicating a norther.—Early in the morning of the 8th, a sail was reported from aloft. Capt. Semmes got under way to chase, and stood out some miles, until he made out the John Adams, being on her return from Tampico. We hailed her appearance with great satisfaction, as Com. Perry had already informed us that she should relieve us from the blockade as soon as she came in.

As the wind had already hauled to the north, and the weather was threatening, Capt. Semmes at once ran back to Green Island, intending to anchor as soon as he could regain his former berth, which we had proved in the previous gales to be safe and comfortable, besides enabling us to maintain our station upon the blockade.

On approaching the anchorage another sail was discovered, apparently standing down for Vera Cruz through the passage between Green Island and Blanquilla Shoal, with the intention, as was supposed, of running the blockade. Apprehending that the stranger vessel might succeed in her design, Capt. Semmes was induced to change his purpose and run by Green Island, standing across the passage to intercept her, making short tacks between the reefs. The winds was then freshening from the north west, but Capt. Semmes hoped to be able to maintain his position until the suspicious vessel approached, and to cut her off from Vera Cruz. To effect this object it was necessary to press the Somers with canvass, in order to avoid falling to leeward upon the reefs, and finally to fetch Green Island anchorage.

The Somers was exceedingly light, having on board only fourteen barrels of provisions, an about six hundred gallons of water. After standing across the passage, the vessel was tacked and ran back towards Green Island, and as we approached our berth, Captain Semmes said he would anchor; but as there was a lull at the moment, and the weather rather softened, he determined to hold on a little longer, and wore round and stood across the passage again. As we neared Pajanos reef, we tacked and stood for the Northern point of the Green Island reef. The strange vessel in the meantime came down rapidly, but showed no colors. While at this point, about half past nine o'clock, A. M., while Captain Semmes was standing in the ice arm chest, observing the reef with his glass, the officer of the deck, Lieutenant James L. Parker, reported the appearance of a squall. The brig was then on the larboard tack, under topsails, courses, jib and main trysail. Captain Semmes immediately crossed to windward, and ordered the main sail to be hauled up, followed upon the instant by the order to brail up the trysail. The main sail was hauled up, but the trysail took against the lee rigging, and was in par brailed up with great difficulty, at the same time the helm was put hard up. The squall now pressing her, the order was given by the officer of the deck to let go the lee main topsail sheet, and on the next instant to cut away all tacks and sheets. Finding she would not pay off, Captain Semmes ordered the helm to be put down, hoping to bring her to the wind. It was, however, all unavailing. From the moment she commenced careening, she continued to go over with great rapidity, and in thirty seconds was on her beam ends. In less than ten minutes she sunk. The puff of wind was much more violent than could have been expected from the appearances of the weather. The accident is, however, mainly due to the extreme lightness of the vessel. One or two minutes after she was over, most of the men and officers had gained the side of the vessel or the tops. Dr. Wright and Lieut. Parker, first to reach the main chains. They were followed by several men, and an attempt was made, with such means as were at hand, to cut away the main rigging, the men and officers using their pen knives and sheath knives for the purpose.—Capt. Semmes, who had been dashed on the ice side, was now drawn from the water, and as soon as he gained the side directed our exertions. The first lieutenant, the master, and passed midshipman Hynson, with a large number of men, had by this time reached the side of the vessel, and were making strenuous exertions to relieve her of her masts; but it was a fruitless effort, for upon the weather rigging. The small larboard quarter boat was in the meantime cleared away and dropped carefully round leeward, and manned by her usual complement of five oarsmen.—Midshipman Clarke, who had gained the main top by swimming from the steerage hatch, was ordered by Capt. Semmes to take charge of the boat. Finding that there was no chance of saving the brig, and that she was fast sinking, Captain Semmes ordered Mr. Clarke to shove off with Dr. Wright and seventeen men, besides Purser Steele, (who reached the boat by swimming as she as clearing the wreck, first inquiring if there was room in the boat for another,) to pull for Green Island, about half a mile distant, an immediately to return if possible and save more lives. This order was at once executed, but not until some of those in the boat had solicited, by name, each of the officers left on the wreck to come with them. These officers resolutely declared that they would wait and take their chance with the brig. Passed midshipman Hynson, who had been partially disabled by a bad burn received in the firing of the Creole, was particularly implored to go into the boat. A lad by the name of Nutter jumped out of the boat and offered his lace to Mr. Hynson, and a man by the name of Powers did the same thing. Mr. Hynson, refusing both offers, those men then declare that others might have their places, and that they would abide on the brig with Mr. Hynson. Capt. Semmes, who was in impaire health, was also entreated to go, but refused. Lieut. Parker answered a similar solicitation by saying he would drown with the brig.
Lieut. Claiborne and Acting Master Clemson held the same language. It is a remarkable circumstance that three of the officers and all the men who acted thus nobly are saved. When the boat shoved off, the gale was blowing with great violence and a heavy sea running, so that for some moments it as a matter of doubt whether the boat would live. Purser Steele at one time proposed to leave the boat for a fish-davit he saw floating by. The boat, however, reached the island in about twenty minutes.

As soon as the men were landed, Mr. Clare, disregarding the most strenuous entreaties, resolutely shoved off again with a volunteer crew at the imminent hazard of their lives. Less than three minutes after the boat left the brig, Capt. Semmes, finding the vessel settling under them, gave an order for every man to save himself. All simultaneously plunged into the water, and grasped the posts, gratings, scars, coops and other floating objects at hand. Many must have gone down from the want of any support whatever: others struggled on frail floats to be finally drifted on the reefs and dashed into pieces. Some were driven to sea to be heard no more, and others encountered the worst fate which could be apprehended in being devoured by sharks. Of near sixty who plunged from the wreck, only seventeen escaped.

Through all of this appalling scene the greatest composure was observed by men and officers. There was no appearance of panic, no exhibition of selfishness. Those who could not swim were particularly enjoined to go in the boat. A large man by the name of Seymour, the ship's cook, had got into the boat. Lieut. Parker commanded him to come out, in order to make room for two smaller men, and he obeyed the order, but was afterwards directed to go in the boat, when it was found he could not swim. Capt. Semmes and Lieut. Parker were picked up by Mr. Clarke from a grating, and Jacob Hazard, yeoman, was rescued swimming near them. Those who survived have told of many instances of heroic self devotion. The acting master, Henry A. Clemson, was struggling on a small steering sail boom with five others, two of whom could not swim. He found that all could not be supported and he left and struck out alone and unsupported. He was seen for the last time upon a sky-light, and probably perished in the surf. The five men he left were saved, the two who could not swim being supported by their comrades, Amos Colson and John Williamson. This completes the history of our own efforts; but with grateful hearts we have yet to mention the daring and devoted exertions of the foreign men of war. There were lying at Sacrificios, about two miles to leeward of the wreck, H.B. M. ships Endymion and Alarm and the brig Daring, commanded respectively by Capts. Lambert, Franklin and Matson; the French brigs Pylade and Mercure, Capt. Deubut and La Voyaire; and the Spanish corvette Louisa Fernanda, Capt. Puente. As soon as the accident was discovered, the boats of all these were simultaneously sent to our relief.

The crew of the Endymion to the number of two hundred came aft and volunteered. There was the most noble emulation as to which vessel should use the greatest expedition and persevere in the most strenuous exertions. The violence of the gale was such at that time that none of the boats could pull against it, and it was with the deepest regret that Capt. Lambert and others in authority felt it to be their duty to make signals recalling their boats. An hour or two afterwards, when there was a slight abatement of the gale, they again put forth at the peril of their lives, and succeeded in saving fourteen persons and bringing from Green Island those who had landed there. The first lieutenant of the Endymion, Mr. Tarleton, rescued the first lieutenant of the somers from Pajaros reef, which he succeeded by a miracle in reaching safely, but where his situation was most critical. The most gallant and well-directed efforts were made by the officers and crew in the boat of the Mercure. She rescued ten men at sea to leeward, on a spar. One hardly knows which to admire most, the fore-thought or the daring of this noble adventure. The risk was incalculable. Five boats, representing each of the foreign vessels, reached the island, and took off 23 persons to their respective vessels, where they were received with a degree of kindness and delicate consideration which I cannot adequately describe, but which none of us will ever forget. They gave us refreshments and supplied us with clothes. I regret that I do not know the names of all the generous and brave officers who were in charge of the boats of the different vessels. I cannot, however, forbear mentioning such as I have learned, viz: Lt. Wood and the gunner of the Endymion, and Midshipman Jaliz, of the Pylade.

The strange vessel proved to be the Abrasia, bound for the squadron at Anton Lizardo. She passed very near the Somers, but the catastrophe was so sudden that she failed to discover it. As soon as the boat landed at Green Island, Dr. Wright took the colors and had them hoisted in the most conspicuous place, in order to attract the attention of the Abrasia, so that the accident might be reported to the squadron. We were, however, to-day, the bearers of our own sad story.

The Mexicans saw the accident from the mole, and cheered and exulted for a long time. The brig had been for a long time engaged in the blockade, and had done more to interrupt the commerce of the port than almost all the other vessels. Within the last fortnight both town and castle had been kept in a state of constant alarm by the burning of the Creole and other demonstrations, which I presume you will hear of in due time. I have no doubt the Mexicans were relieved when they saw her sink into the ocean. I append a list of the lost and saved—37 men saved—37 lost. One officer, Mr. Rodgers, Passed Midshipman, and one man, John G. Fox, were captured by the Mexicans two days before, while reconnoitering an important point, in company with Dr. Wright, the latter escaping to witness the catastrophe of the brig.

COMMODORE STEWART.—We publish the following letter from Commodore Stewart with pleasure (says they Pennsylvanian.) The brave veteran talked with all the blunt frankness of his nature, and does justice equally to the president and himself. We do not know who the correspondent was that made the use of Commodore Stewart’s name, in the matter alluded to—but we recollect that his story was told with all that oracular assumption of authority which is so characteristic of many of the Washington letter writers, and especially those belonging to the Federal press. These writers are forever finding mare’s nests, and Christopher Columbus himself was a fool to man of them for grave discoveries. They smell a bit of news afar off, and scene the object of the cabinet meeting in the breeze—predicting things that never happen, and staking their reputation for the truth for the worst of scandal. The coolness and solemnity with which these things are uttered, are only excelled by the impudence with which they meet the contradiction. To this class of writers Com. Stewart administers a general rebuke:

To the Editors of the Pennsylvanian:

I am glad to find by your paper of the 22d instant, that the Union, of Washington City, has very properly rebuked the licentiousness of the Washington letter-writer, in relation to the chief magistrate of this nation and myself. I concur with the Union, that there is not a word of truth in the statement of the letter-writer alluded to, in regard to what passed at the interview, which the President did me the honor to give me, on the occasion of my being in Washington lately. I trust I have been an officer too long and to better purpose, than to address the Commander-in-chief in the style the letter-writer has assumed. The President well knows all his own responsibilities, and will always be found equal to their encounter, in preference to their imposition on others and they, the writers, will find the President as free from the dread of responsibility, as he is from the dictum of the Washington letter-writers.

COLONEL OF THE LOUISIANA REGIMENT.—Major Louis G. De Russy has been elected Colonel of the Louisiana Regiment of Volunteers, which has recently been mustered into the service of the United States. The election was conducted in strict accordance with law—thirty-nine commissioned officers voting. There were three competitors for the office, and the vote stood as follows: For Louis G. De Russy 21 votes; S. F. Marks 14; ------ Moone 4.

No choice was made for the stations of Lieut. Colonel and Major. Capt. Theodore Lewis received, on the first ballot, the highest vote for the first, and Capt. Francis Girault the highest vote for the second named office; failing to get a majority of the whole number of votes, there was no election. The law provides, in such cases, that the appointments shall be made by the Governor—but it is optional with him to order a new election.

ENTHUSIASM OF THE COUNTRY

Pennsylvania has with a promptness and patriotism which do her all credit, already filled up the requisition for a second regiment of volunteers for the Mexican war. The regiment is composed of the following companies, which will be mustered into the service of the United States at Pittsburg about the 5th January:

Reading Artiller, Capt. Loeser; Cameron Guards, (Harrisonburg,) Capt. Williams; Columbia Guards, (Danville,) Capt. Wilson; German Greys, (Pittsburgh,) Capt. Gutzweiler; Fayette County Volunteers, Capt. Roberts; American Highlanders, (Cambria County,) Capt. Geary; Cambria Guards, Capt. Murry; Westmoreland Guards, Capt. Johnston; Philadelphia Rangers, Capt. Naylor; Stockton Artillerists, (Carbon County,) Capt. Miller.

Mississippi, too, is again ready for the field with her second regiment. Her sons, many of whom we are proud to know personally, covered themselves with honor in the storming of Monterey. The new regiment, we are sure, will exhibit equal efficiency and gallantry on the plains of San Luis Potosi, or under the walls of Vera Cruz. The following companies, making up the second regiment, will rendezvous at Vicksburg, between the 1st and 5th of January. Mississippi is desirous to have the first regiment of “fighting boys” subject to the orders of Gen. Scott at New Orleans:

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

Monterey, (California,) Sept. 19th, 1846.

I now date from shore instead of the frigate Congress, because my duties are on land. The citizens of Monterey elected me on the 15th inst. Alcalde, that is chief magistrate of this jurisdiction. I had been performing the duties of the post under an appointment of the commander-in-chief of the American forces here. This commission expired on the 15th, when I was elected by the suffrages of the people. The vote polled was a very large one, though no officer or seaman, connected with our squadron, went to the polls. I mention these facts as an evidence of the good feelings which prevails here toward our Flag. Any hostility must have defeated my election. The office is a one which I do not covet; it is full of labor and responsibility. It covers every question of civil police in Monterey, and reaches to the lives and fortunes of the inhabitants, though and immense jurisdiction.

The Congress s here form her trip to the South. Her sailors and marines with Commodore Stockton at their head forced General Castro out of California. He might have infladted the march of the Commodore from San Pedro to his camp and made the forces of the congress wade through their own blood. But he remained in his camp, fulminating paper missiles, till they were near his lines, then suddenly broke up and fled with a small band to Mexico. His officers and men have returned to their homes, and signed a parole not to take up arms against the authority of the United States, or say or do anything to disturb the tranquility of the present Government.—This puts an end to all further war in California. In deed there is no disposition here among the people to offer resistance. The masses are thoroughly with us, and right glad to get rid of Mexican rule. Had it been otherwise, they would never have elected me to the chief magistracy of Monterey. We are all regarded more in the light of benefactors than victors. Their friendship and confidence must never be betrayed. California must never be surrendered to Mexico. If that country has still good claims to her, let those claims be liquidated by an equivalent in money. But it would be treason to the lives and fortunes of the best inhabitants to surrender the province itself. Let Congress at once annex her to the Union as a territory, and establish a civil government.

We require here a new judicial system; the present one throws all the responsibility on the Alcalde. I broke through the trammels of usage a few days since, and empanelled the first jury that ever sat in California. The first men in Monterey were on it. The case involved a large amount of property, and the allegation of a high crime. No one man should decided such a case. The verdict of the jury was submitted to, without a murmur from either of the parties, and the community seemed much gratified with this new form of trial. They think, and very rightly took that twelve men are less liable to partiality, prejudice and corruption, than one. It was the establishment of trials by jury here, that probably lead to my election as magistrate.

Mr. Semple, an emigrant printer, and myself, have established a small paper here, the first ever published in California. It is issued every Saturday. Its appearance made quite a little sensation. We found the type in the forsaken cell of a monk, and the paper is such as is used here for segar wrappers, and was imported for that purpose. It is printed in English and Spanish. We are going to send at once to the United States for larger paper and a fresh font of type. With this new engine of power we are going to sustain the genius of American institutions here.

Three thousand emigrants from the United States, it is understood, have just arrived at San Francisco, in two companies, one commanded by Capt. Hastings, and the other by Capt. Prussel, and ten thousand more are on their way.

The frigates Congress and Savannah are here, also the Eric. She takes the present bearer of dispatches with our letter bag to Panama, on her cruise down the coast. The Congress and Savannah leave to morrow for the Bay of San Francisco, which they are going to fortify. The U. S. ship Portsmouth is now there. The Cayane and Warren are off Acapulco or Mazatlan; both these places will be captured, and all other ports of any importance in Lower California. The Savannah will soon return home; she has now been out over her time, and will have been absent all of four years before she gets home. Stir up Congress to send us a steamer out here. We are waiting for the arrival of the Potomac. The fort here is nearly finished. It is defended mostly by large brass pieces captured here, and which are provided with copper balls—rather expensive ammunition.

Yours truly,

W.C.

Correspondence of the N.O. Picayune

Havana, December 13, 1846

Gentlemen—Capt. Aranjo is still here with his three hundred privateer licenses and letters of citizenship. He has not been able to dispose of a single one as yet. The price asked of each is $1000, with the corresponding letters of citizenship. It is probable he will take them all back with him to Mexico. It is supposed a man by the name of Juan Nepo Pereda has been dispatched to Colombia on business of a similar kind.

Information has been receive here form Mexico, that he Mexican Government had sold or delivered over to a Frenchman by the name of Ribaud, well known in New Orleans, the two Mexican men-of-war at Alvarado, called the Santa Anna and Mezicano, and that Ribaud had left at sea under the French flag, take them round Cape Horn and cruise against our commerce in the Pacific and east Indies. It is said that Ribaud holds a commission as captain in the Mexican Navy, yet it is not probable he will be able to accomplish his purpose.

The splendid new sloop of war Albany Com’r. Breese, is here, to sail to-morrow for Pensacola. While off this port the Albany fell in with a schooner, on passing the Moro, hauled down the English colors and hoisted the Mexican flag, much to the astonishment of every body, and turned out to be a schooner from Yucatan, with a very valuable cargo of cochineal and indigo.

Tuesday, RE47v43n72p1c2, January 5, 1847: LATER FROM THE ARMY.

From the N.O. Picayune

The annexed criticism upon the operations of the Army in Mexico is from the pen of a gentleman who is every inch a soldier. Its temper is unexceptionable, and its reasoning is deserving of the most serious consideration. Whatever opinions may be entertained respecting the conclusions to which the writer has arrived, it will be conceded that he scrutinizes the past with a military eye and predicts the future with the boldness of a mind convinced of the accuracy of its deductions.

In regard to the advance of Gen. Wool upon Chihuahua, the views of the writer are in accordance with opinions we have time and again expressed. The uselessness or impracticality of that expedition became apparent to Gen. Wool himself, as he abandoned it without accomplishing anything. The consequences of this military mistake are discussed by our correspondent. Whether all the results contended for would have been attained had the disposition suggested by him been made of Gen. Wool's army, is in some measure a matter of speculation; but he gives good reasons for his opinions, whilst the failure of Gen. Wool to achieve the objects contemplated in the formation of that army shows that its destination was a military error.

It is very probable that the opinions of our correspondent as to the future begin to prevail in high quarters. His views as to what should be done are given with that same distinctness as his observations upon what has already transpired. It is to be hoped that the Government will not be deterred, by fear of the cost, from putting the next campaign upon the most ample basis in regard to all the appointments necessary to its efficiency. Whatever is required in this behalf will be conceded by Congress and the country with alacrity. The carping of those, who "count the cost only" in considering military events, should not be heeded, as they would make the same ado if the war cost fifty cents or fifty millions. In nothing is it so true as in military operations, that parsimony is the worst kind of extravagance.

But enough of introductory. We again invite attention to the subjoined letter, which deserves the more consideration as it is firm and candid in tone without a particle of the complaining irritability which too often imparts to writings upon this subject the character of fault-finding strictures against the Government.
In writing of the operations of the campaign, I beg that I may not be classed among the “scribblers from the army,” who write only to trumpet forth their own fame and that of their corps—doing justice to none, injustice to many, and blinding the people as to the operations of the Army. Such letters are read with deep regret, for they are disparaging to the reputation and good name of the American soldiery. I suppose the people are, and indeed ought to be satisfied with the achievements of the Army. We have accomplished a great deal under many difficulties and trammels, and having done so much we must claim the privilege of pointing out those difficulties and trammels, of showing cause why they never should have existed, and proving that had they not existed we should be much further advanced in attaining our object—advantageous peace.

The fundamental principle in war it “to operate, with superior forces, a combined movement on a decisive point,” and no plan of campaign can be promptly successful unless framed on this principle, particularly where it is the intention to act entirely on the offensive. Unfortunately for our Government this principle did not enter as an element in the present plan of campaign, and all operations growing out of it are necessarily directly opposed to it. Had we met an enterprising enemy, this defect in the present plan of campaign would have been rendered much more apparent, and its failure much more signal by defeat in detail. Suppose Gen. Wool, with his force and enormous supply of transportation and subsistence, had been concentrated on Gen. Taylor, would the latter have marched on Monterey with on 6000 men, not having more than enough transportation to carry subsistence for that number, and having to leave behind him his battery train on that account? Gen. Taylor had not sufficient transportation, with a depot as near as Cerralvo in his rear, to transport with his Army of 6000 men a supply to subsist it longer than two days after the 24th, (the day of the capitulation,) and had during the engagement to dispatch his train back to Cerralvo. Had this concentration been effected, Gen. Taylor would have had with his army before Monterey one month's supplies, when he could have enforced an unconditional surrender of the town and forces, or followed on their rear in retreat and eventually have captured or massacred Ampudia's entire army.

Had not the Chihuahua expedition been planned, and had the force and supplies of that army been promptly concentrated on Gen. Taylor, we would have been before Monterey eight weeks sooner, when it might have been taken without firing a gun. And why was this Chihuahua expedition a portion of the plan of campaign? Was it not reasonable to suppose that after our victories before Matamoros, our enemy would occupy and hold, as strategic points, Monterey and Saltillo, covering the strongest passes in the Sierra Madre and having San Luis Potosi as a base of operations? San Luis should then have been in the plan of campaign, the objective point, and all of our energies should have been exerted on this line. As it turns out, Gen. Kearney takes New Mexico without firing a gun, and after the battle of Monterey Gen. Wool arrives at Monclova, and reports his advance on Chihuahua as useless, whilst our enemy, whipped at Monterey, abandons Saltillo and concentrates at San Luis, which he never could have done had Gen. Wool's army been promptly united with Gen. Taylor's. Owing to this error in the plan of campaign our enemy not only gained time to fortify and fight at Monterey, but as a natural consequence from it, he also gained time to concentrate at San Luis. With the combined material of the two armies the objective point, San Luis, might have been gained, and, by a decisive action with Ampudia's forces alone, at that point, the campaign might have ended, and probably the war. These are some of the difficulties under which we have labored, and but for which our Army could have done much more for the country. By these Gen. Taylor has been trammeled in his operations, and has not had an opportunity to display to the world what he could have done, had the plan of campaign been framed on military principles.

But let us look a little further into the difficulties growing out of and caused by the present plan of campaign. What is the relative position of our own and the enemy's forces at this time? Santa Anna has beyond doubt concentrated at San Luis 37,000 men; he holds a central position which, with his force, cannot be approached from this direction even by superior forces, owing to the scarcity of water, which, on a large portion of the route, is held in tanks, and entirely at the disposal of the enemy. He holds himself invincible at that point, relying on the strength of Vera Cruz to resist attack, which must be taken before we can approach him by gaining his rear.

The number of Gen. Taylor's army is very far overrated, even by the Union, which seems to estimate it at the actual volunteer force sent into the field and the regular force prescribed by law, without any allowance for the diminution of his force from casualties and sickness, which has far exceeded what might have been reasonably anticipated under the most unfavorable circumstances. Whatever may be thought of the strength of our force in Mexico at this date, I assert, and without fear of contradiction, that not more than fourteen thousand effective men could be brought into action to-morrow morning out of the whole army in the field. Now, what disposition of this inferior force necessarily results from the plan of the campaign? San Luis cannot be approached from this direction, and to go at our enemy we must approach him on another line. But the all important passes in the Sierra Madre must be held, to prevent our enemy from gaining our rear; and our forces, although inferior to the enemy in numbers, are necessarily scattered, whilst Santa Anna can operate en masse on any point. Thus we find ourselves compelled to operate on multiple lines, on an extended front, with an inferior force, whilst our enemy holds a single line of operations, and an interior one. This immense advantage to the enemy results entirely from the defective plans of campaign, and the only remedy is to form a new one, by which an increased force of 30,000 men must be concentrated on some decisive point. Vera Cruz and San Juan de Ulloa must be taken; then, and not till then, will Mexican generals and soldiers begin to think that their arms are not invincible, and not till then will the Mexican people mistrust the prowess of their army. The fall of Vera Cruz and San Juan de Ulloa may be a strong inducement to cause them to sue for peace, but I confidently believe that we will even then have to advance and fight the enemy at whatever point he may select. The Mexicans have no idea of making peace— even the private families in this town teach their children to hate Americans, and to lisp the name of Santa Anna as the saviour of their country, who is to whip the Americans whenever he meets them. It is absurd to think of peace unless our Government will take prompt and efficient measure to strike some decisive blow. Our force must be increased, the necessary substitution of military operations to the measure of supplies must be better considered, and the plans of campaign must be in strict accordance with military science. Then will our general in the field show to the world that he is not the man to win a battle and lose its advantages.

Yours truly, N.

THE WAR DUTY ON TEA AND COFFEE.

We are pleased that the Secretary of the Treasury has adopted the wise and manly policy of addressing the following frank and emphatic letter to the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 21, 1846.

Sir:--Permit me most respectfully to call your attention to the views submitted in my last annual report, in regard to imposing duties on tea and coffee.

These duties were suggested in view of the necessity of obtaining the loan therein proposed, and this Department feels bound to communicate the opinion entertained by it, that, in the absence of these duties, it will probably be wholly impracticable to negotiate the loan on such terms as would be permitted by Congress.

Most respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
R.J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. James J. McKay,
Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The country is engaged in war, which to bring to a speedy and satisfactory issue, it is necessary to raise a certain amount. This loan cannot be effected upon terms honorable to the credit of the Government, unless the trifling tax proposed for war purposes upon tea and coffee be laid, so as to place the finances of the country on a firm basis and to give a guarantee to the world that the Government is willing and able to meet all its responsibilities. Under these circumstances, it was to be hoped that no impediment would be thrown in the way of a temporary measure demanded by the highest motives of patriotism and national interest. But he Whig press has already raised its voice of clamor and complaint. They substantially declare that they will do nothing to relieve the pressure upon the Treasury; nothing to feed and clothe our gallant volunteers and army; nothing to push on the war to a vigorous and permanent settlement—unless the tariff of '46 be repealed, even before trial, and their own precious bantling of 1842 be restored in all its hideous proportions. The war with Mexico, they say, was produced by the Democratic party—that party has destroyed the tariff of '46, and unless the Whigs have the full protection contained in that act they will resist the adoption of a temporary measure to effect a loan, for the successful conduct of the war. But in this, we believe, they misrepresent the sentiments of the great body of the Whig party. A few days since, we heard on of the staunchest and most prominent Whigs declare, that Congress ought at once to lay the duty on tea and coffee, so as to elevate the credit of the Government, and enable it to raise the money necessary for the war; that the tax was so inconsiderable, and would fall so equally upon all classes, that the country would cheerfully support it, especially at a time so commercially prosperous as this.

LATER FROM THE SOUTH

The steamer Palmetto, from Galveston, to N. Orleans, in the midst of a heavy gale, took fire, producing the utmost possible alarm among the passengers—but it was soon subdued by the coolness of Capt. Smith.

There is a story in the Galveston News, told by a teamster recently from Mexico, to the effect that Col. Riley was recently surrounded at Mlos, by 5000 Mexicans under Gen. Urrea, and that there was no hope of Col. R.'s escape.

The Picayune does not believe a word of it.
The military and civic authorities of Tabasco have published a pronunciamento, renouncing their allegiance to the Federal Government of Mexico, as that Government had failed to send them aid and succor. Senor Traconis was appointed as the head of the revolution, in consideration of his heroic defence of the State from the invitation of the American squadron in the month of October.

In Campeachy, Senor Domingo Barret published an address on the 8th November, in which he presents himself as the chief of the glorious revolution which was that day commenced, and swears to discharge his duty with loyalty and purity. This may be a new outbreak of the spirit before manifested in Campeachy, to sunder entirely all political connection with the Government of Mexico. We have no accounts of how it has resulted.

The Picayune gives accounts of the loss of the Somers off Vera Cruz.

An extract of a letter to the British consul at Tampico, written by the captain of the British frigate Alarm, describes the accident, speaks of the 37 men saved by the joint exertions of the French and English; but explicitly gives to the Frenchmen the credit of the most efficient service.

A letter from Tampico says it is expected Herrera will be elected President of the republic and that overtures for peace will be immediately made to our Government; but it is thought probable that as soon as Santa Anna hears of such an occurrence, he will proceed to the capital and depose the President elect.

The Eco del Tampico of the 12th contains the correspondence between General Taylor and Santa Anna, which is of some importance or an expression for Santa Anna. General Taylor's letter is dated from Saltillo, November 20 in which he acknowledges Santa Anna's courtesy in releasing seven prisoners, and quotes from the armistice of Monterey a passage in justification of our government against a reflection of Santa Anna. He concludes with expressing a hope that the Mexican Congress will accept the offers of the United States for the termination of hostilities.

Santa Anna replies from San Luis Potosi, November 24. He supposes Gen. La Vega to be still in New Orleans, and concludes with the following passage which we find in the Picayune:

"I will conclude this note by assuring you that I entertain the hope that the sovereign National Congress, which is immediately to be installed, will act as shall be most conducive to the interests of the Republic; but I believe that I do not deceive myself in assuring you, that neither the Congress, nor any Mexican, will ever be able to listen to overtures of peace unless the national territory be first evacuated by the forces of the United States, and the hostile attitude of their vessels of war be withdrawn. This must be without a doubt the preliminary of whatever negotiation may be opened; and it may be permitted to me to declare to you, that the nation, moved by a sentiment of patriotism, and determined to defend at every hazard and inch by inch its territory, will never cease to qualify as it deserves, and as the world has already qualified it, the conduct of the United States; and it will do whatever it can and ought honorably to deserve the title which it bears of independent and free." [MPR]

This (says the N.O. Courier) is certainly hostile language, on the part of the Mexican chief, mixed with the usual quantum of characteristic bravado. An interview on the plains of San Luis Potosi will perhaps bring him to reason.

Col. Gates, at Tampico, has published an order prohibiting the landing of spirituous liquors at that place.

Col. Hays has arrived from New Orleans, at Galveston, and gone to San Antonio, to have his regiment in complete and speedy organization.—He reports that Gen. Scott was on his way to Tampico, "where he will take command of one division of the Army, and will of course be the Commander-in-chief hereafter, from whom all orders must proceed."

There are rumors of an expected attack upon Tampico (where there are 800 Americans) by 3,000 Mexicans.

A letter dated Monterey, Dec. 4, in the Delta says:

"Although I stated in my last that there would be no immediate movement of the army, there is to be one in less than ten days, but it will be something on the retrograde order. Gen. Taylor has either been informed of the concentration of a Mexican force at Victoria, or designs opening a communication with Tampico, for he moves on to the Capital of Tamaulipas, with two Regiments, if not a whole Division, in little more than one week’s time. Orders to this effect have been read to the 1st Regiment of Infantry, with whom the Baltimore Battalion acts, and the Georgia Volunteers. As yet, none others have been notified, though it is thought that the entire Division, with probably the 7th infantry, will move.

"Gen. Hamer’s remains were consigned to the grave to-day.

"Santa Anna still continues to impress the natives with the belief, that he will shortly show himself in front of Monterey. The last extraordinary express reached here this morning, by which he sends in word that he has made eight days of the journey from San Luis de Potosi to Saltillo, and that the people of Monterey need not fear but that they will be able to celebrate the December fiesta out of sigh of the ‘perfidious Americans.’ “
On Saturday morning, we learn, the Rev. Dr. Plumer delivered an eloquent and impressive address at the Union Hotel to the volunteers, who are about to embark for the seat of war.

Yesterday morning at ½ past 6 the Richmond companies, commanded by Captains Scott and Carrington, the Alexandria company, Capt. Corse, and the Caroline company, Capt. Bankhead, too passage on the steamer "Curtis Peck" for Fortress Monroe. The were [...] Morris Commanding. Dr. Wm. A. Patleson and Lieut. Morris made some touching remarks, which were feelingly responded to by Capt. Scott. We understand the scene was a most interesting one, thousands of anxious spectators crowding the wharf, &c. At City Point these companies would be joined by Captain H. Archer's Petersburg company, which will make up the first battalion. Three companies now remain in this city, viz: Captain Wm. B. Archer's 3d Richmond company; Capt. Alburtis' Berkely company; and Captain Herper's Staunton Volunteers.

On Saturday evening first Lieutenant Cooke reached this city, to tender the services of Captain J.P. Young’s company of Portsmouth volunteers just raised. We know not if they have been accepted.

From the following notice of the Petersburg Republican, it will be seen that the gallant “Little Cockade” will soon have another company in the field. Indeed, we heard on Saturday night, that the company had been accepted, with Wm M. Robinson, Esq., as their Captain:

“A portion of the second Company of Petersburg Volunteers, now numbering about fifty men, left town yesterday morning for the purpose of visiting one or two public places in the country to obtain recruits. They will be at Hicksford next Monday, court day, where they expect to fill up the list. It has been reported to them that a gentleman in Dinwiddie has obtained the names of 15, and one in Sussex has ten, thus making their whole number 75. If they are as successful in Prince George and Greensville as they anticipate, they expect to go to Richmond on Thursday next to be mustered into the service of the United Stats, and, judging from those that we have seen, the Regiment will not be able to boast of a finer looking set of men. Indeed, they will be worthy of being commanded by the best graduate that WestPoint can produce.”

From the Lynchburg papers we learn that Major Early succeeded, after great exertions, in enrolling 55names, 40 of whom were from the county of Franklin. He was to be in Lynchburg on Saturday, and hoped to make up the full number in that quarter—if not, he would conduct all now enrolled to his city, where they may join some company. (The great difficulty in organizing a company in that region of the State seems to be the want of a suitable place of rendezvous.)

For the information of the Richmond Whig and other Whig papers we extract from the Harrisonburg Register the following good news from the “Tenth Legion.”

ROCKINGHAM VOLUNTEERS.—Two companies of volunteers are now in process of formation in this county. We understand that one company in the 116th regiment is nearly full, and will proceed to the election of their officers on-to-day, (Saturday.) The roll in Harrisonburg is, we learn, filling up; and with a little extra exertion on the part of our young friends, both companies will soon be ready to take the field under the new requisition.

The Charlestown Spirit of Jefferson says

“The company from Jefferson, under command of captain John W. Rowan, are awaiting marching orders. The minimum number has been obtained, but the Captain has a [...] ority to increase his list ten or fifteen more. Those who purpose joining must decide immediately, or the company will be under way for Richmond.

An election was held on Thursday last, under direction of Colonel Francis Yates, of the 55th regiment of V.M., for the commissioned officers of this company, and resulted as follows:

"John W. Rowan, Captain.
John Avis, Jr., First Lieutenant.
Lawrence B. Washington, first second Lieutenant.
William McCormick, second second Lieutenant.”
MR. BAYLY’S SPEECH

We have read with great interest the Union’s sketch of this gentleman’s able and conclusive speech, on the 23d December, upon the Mexican war. The “hour rule” prevented him from elaborating the important points which he so clearly laid down and briefly but strongly argued. We presume that he will prepare his remarks for publication, when we shall lay them before our readers. In the mean time, as an act of justice to a Virginian, who always speaks with force and learning and clearness of argument, we extend the following compliments to his well-earned reputation.

The Washington Correspondent of the Ohio Statesman, under date of Dec. 23d, writes:

"Washington Hunt, of New York, an excellent fellow, and quite a handsome man to boot, (as I mentioned last night,) who wears elaborate shirt ruffles, and bores the House almost into fits with twaddle, spoke, not on , but at the question, for the first hour to-day. He was followed by Gen. Bayly, of Va, whose speech well maintained his reputation as one of the first constitutional lawyers of the country. He discussed at length the right conferred by conquest; maintaining that it was not only the right, but the duty of the conquering power to establish temporary civil government in territory thus acquired, while held by force of arms. While he was referring, in the course of his arguments, to precedents in our own history, occurring during Madison’s administration, when similar proceedings were had in reference to the establishment of temporary civil governments, he remarked that, in the old party strife of those days, when impeachment was threatened from the same quarter, and indeed form the same city, (Boston,) it never entered into the heads of any one that the proceedings referred to, (Harrison’s proclamation, &c,) were part of the grounds to sustain the impeachment. He had yet to learn that these proceedings were complained of. It was reserved for later, and, he feared, not better days—for the advocates and apologists of Mexico, in similar proceedings, to find ground for impeachment."

In the Weekly Union we find the following notice of Mr. B.’s remarks, in the Congressional synopsis:

"Mr. Bayly followed in an able and eloquent vindication of the administration and the war, replying with irresistible force to the following grounds of assault upon the administration, viz: First, that the President has unnecessarily brought on the war by refusing to treat with Mexico, as it is alleged she wanted us to d, in regard to the question of boundary alone; and by insisting upon not separating that question from our other causes of quarrel with Mexico. Second, that he precipitated a war by marching our army to the Rio Grande, within the disputed territory. Third—and it was a new ground taken by the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Davies)—that the President was guilty of treason, in permitting the return of Santa Anna to Mexico. Lastly, that he has been guilty of usurpation in the establishment of civil government in the territory which we have conquered: the argument made by the honorable gentleman in replying to the latter point, was peculiarly clear, and added new lustre to his already brilliant reputation as a lawyer and statesman.

"Mr. Stanton followed on the same side, adding lien upon line, and precept upon precept to the arguments of his predecessor, his own abilities losing naught by the comparison.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—In the steamer Alabama, which left New Orleans on the 23d ultimo for the Rio Grande, and on board of which Gen. Scott and his Staff were passengers, there were also embarked five companies of the United States Mounted Riflemen, as follows: Company A, Capt. Loring and Lieut. Morris and Palmer; Company B, Capt. Sanderson and Lieut. Gordon; Company D, Capt. Pope and Lieuts. Claiborne and Hawkins; Company E, Capt. Crittenden and Lieut. May; and Company G, Capt. Simonson and Lieuts. Russell and Gibbs, all destined for Tampico—the whole under the command of Major Sumner, Major Burbridge being compelled to remain at New Orleans in consequence of illness. Lieuts. Newton, Tipton, Taylor, Lindsay, and Ewell, with a detachment of men, were also left behind for some days, to superintend the shipment of the horses belonging to the companies, which are to be dispatched at the earliest possible moment.

LATER FROM THE ARMY

The steamer Fashion arrived last evening from Brazos Santiago, which place hse left on the 24th inst. To Capt. Yeatman, of the third regiment of Tennessee Volunteers, a Volunteer Aid de Camp of Gen. Wool, who left Parras, the head quarters of Gen. Wool, on the 10th inst., and passed through Saltillo, Monterey, and camargo, e are indebted
Gen. Wool has received orders from Gen. Taylor to take up his winter quarters at Parras, and had seized two thousand barrels of flour and several thousand bushels of wheat, and other government store. Parras is one hundred and fifteen miles directly west of Saltillo, and the position being farthest in advance, the first and second regiment of Indiana Volunteers had been ordered from Camargo to reinforce Gen. Wool. This would swell his command to about four thousand five hundred men. Gen Worth, at Saltillo, was also to be reinforced by four companies of Kentucky cavalry, ordered to Monterey which would bring his command up to about 1,700 men.

Gen. Patterson had received a private letter informing him of a rumor that Santa Anna was advancing upon Saltillo from San Luis Potosi, but Captain Yeatman attaches no credit to the rumor, as he traveled from Parras an Saltillo to Matamoras as rapidly as possible, and when he left those places he heard nothing whatever of it. The Generals in command at both points have cavalry parties scouting in the direction of San Luis Potosi, and the scouts of Gen. Wool are at least seventy-five miles from his camp, so that he would be likely to be apprised of any movement of Santa Anna as early as possible.

Gen. Taylor left Monterey on the 15th, with an escort of cavalry, for Victoria. Gen. Twiggs and Col. P. F. Smith, with their respective commands, were at Victoria, and previous to the departure of Gen. Taylor from Monterey, Gen. Quitman with his brigade had left for that point. Gen. Taylor, in a conversation with Captain Yeatman, expressed the opinion that it would be impossible to march upon San Luis Potosi form the northern extremity of his liens until the rainy season sets in in June next. The report that Santa Anna had cut off the water tanks between him and the American ports is not true, but the country is almost destitute of water unless during the rainy season, and in one part of the road there is even in that season a distance of ninety miles to be marched without the possibility of finding any.

Six American teamsters were killed recently at Ramos, a ranche of Canales, by a detachment of his rancheros.

Gen. Butler was in command at Monterey, with about two thousand men; Col. McKee, with six companies of the Kentucky regiment of cavalry, at Ceralvo; Capt. Willis, with two companies of the same regiment at Mier; and Gen. Marshall at Camargo, with about nine hundred men.

Col. McClung was fast recovering from his wounds.

A gentleman who arrived last night from Tampico, and left there on the 16th, states that a body of Mexican cavalry, estimated at about 7,000 had appeared in the vicinity of that place, and, coming within range of the artillery, were fired upon and driven off. The garrison there had been reinforced by the Alabama regiment of volunteers and the second regiment of artillery, and Gen. Patterson was to have marched from Matamoras, on the 23d, with Col. Thomas's regiment of Tennessee cavalry, for that point. Gen Shields was in command at Tampico, but would be superseded by Gen. Patterson, when he arrived.

Great exertions have been making by Mexican officers to raise men in the small towns along the Rio Grande, and with some success.

Capt. Stone, with a detachment of seventy men, lately captured a party of two hundred Mexicans in a Ranche about thirty-seven miles up the San Juan, together with Capt. Cantova, by whom they had been recruited, and he and the men were taken as prisoners to Camargo. Fifty stand of arms, ammunition, etc., were taken at the same time. On the evening of the 16th a Mexican was taken by the guards at Camargo attempting to enter the powdered magazine, with a design, it is supposed, of blowing it up.

The troops under Gen. Wool, Capt. Yeatman also informs us, are in the very highest state of discipline, and regard their commander with respect and affection. Patras, he says, is a most delightful place. It is situated about seven miles west of the great San Luis Potosi road, and he terms it the vineyard of Mexico. The climate is unexceptionable, and the soil fertile; the grape is cultivated there, and the wine extracted from it is delicious.

Captain Yeatman is absent from the army on furlough.

The Fashion stopped off Matagorda Bar and Galveston—left about fifty vessels in Brazos harbor. A schooner sailed next day for Tampico with seventy-five volunteers, and one for Vera Cruz with Mexican prisoners; schooner Sea to sail same day for New Orleans. The steamer Eudora, lightening to go in over the bar. The Palo Alto was wrecked on the South breaker [...] is full of water. The schooner Vanderbilt was wrecked fifteen miles north of the bar, on Padre Island. Steam schooner [...] Washington and Pharsalia, with several other vessels, were in the offing, waiting to be lightened.

The fashion brought up eighty discharged volunteers, with nineteen cabin passengers; also the remains of young Allison of Nashville, who was shot a Monterey. One of the Indiana volunteers died and was buried at sea thirteen miles north of Brazos Island.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.—A few days ago we gave a synopsis of this able document, and regret that its length—the limits of our columns and the pressing matter before us—preclude its full publication in the Argus. But, we must be permitted to speak of its qualities; and whilst we pronounce it a bold and an able production—clothed in language plain, chaste and forcible, showing the author, not only to be a scholar and an orator, but a Statesman, it is nothing more than we anticipated.

True, we have no personal acquaintance with Gov. Smith; we have never seen him; but as a politician, he has long been familiar to us. We have met with those who have known him for many years, and heard those speak of him, who served with him in the councils of our State, who represented him as a bold, fearless, energetic politician, and an amiable man. And we have met with those who have denounced him as a demagogue;—we have heard him assailed by his political enemies with bitter denunciation, and we have heard him defended by his friends in terms most laudable.

Let any man, of any party, read this message; let him divest himself of party, and he will say, that William Smith is no demagogue, or that if he ever practiced it he has discarded it on the present occasion.

Statesman-like, he has looked to Virginia as she is—taken hold of her great interests, and presented them with a boldness and a force, peculiar to the man, and the statesman.

The political fame of William Smith became familiar to every Virginian in the canvass of 1840. It not only spread through our own borders, but throughout the Union. When we heard of any great discussion, or pitched-battle, in the State, William Smith was there. We heard from him in the North, the West, the East and the South, doing battle against the champions of Whiggery, and the renegades from the ranks of Democracy. And where was he heard from, that we did not hear of his doing signal service.

Who amongst us has forgotten the exciting times of 1840—when the returns of the Presidential election were coming in—when State after State had gone over to the Whigs, and all eyes were anxiously turned to Virginia, to see how she had braved the storm. Finally the news came that Virginia was safe—that the old Dominion had proved impregnable, and that the banner of Democracy still waved triumphantly over her borders. Who then received the credit for saving the State? ’Twas William Smith. Many bold, fearless and eloquent champions had battled in the cause—the wreath was awarded to Wm. Smith. He had earned it, and no man doubted that he was entitled to it.

And now, that offices of distinction, honor and trust are to be disposed of, by the representatives of the democracy, is this faithful democrat—this distinguished orator and statesman—this man of the people, who has labored so long, so zealously and so effectually—to be thrown aside, and the mantle of honor bestowed upon some one who in the hour of danger, was not found in the front battle? Is the edict to go forth, that the ‘Laborer is no longer worthy of his hire?’ One thing we feel justified in saying: if the great mass of the democratic party, in the good old commonwealth, was consulted, seven-tenths would say that William Smith should be United States Senator. The voice or the wishes of the people should be obeyed. The district has on a former occasion, through their representatives, honored him with a unanimous vote, regardless of party; in doing so the wishes of the majority were carried out, and we trust this district will do so again. We further hope to see the democracy from a neighboring district coming up to his aid, as a small debt of gratitude for services rendered in the trying time of 1840, when Parkersburgh was made the great theatre of action in the West, and hundreds were halting between two opinions, until William Smith, met the great Ajax of whiggery, exposed their principles, and sustained the principles of the democratic party in language too plain and too convicting to be long doubted.

[MLD]

THE MEXICAN WAR

We have always maintained it to be the true course of patriotism and sound policy to sink every party feeling, when the nation is involved in war. In such a crisis, we ought to look first to united and harmonious action to vindicate the national honor and secure a satisfactory peace—and then to a searching scrutiny into the causes of the war and to its conduct by those constitutionally empowered to carry it on. At the very first blast of the war bugle, the voice of party should be hushed, and every American rally around the national standard, without muttering discontent with the course of its own government, the natural effect of which its to encourage the hopes of the enemy and prolong an evil, which all alike deplore.

Such was the policy which the Democratic party was anxious to see put into practice. They showed no mean spirit of jealousy at the laurels won by Whig officers or men. Though the contrary has falsely been asserted by some of the more violent Whig press, no portion o the American people rejoiced more cordially than the Democrats at the gallant and brilliant deeds of Taylor, Worth, Kearney and other members of the Whig party. They rejoiced, because of the heroism or our troops redounded to the honor and welfare of the whole country, and because in cowing with laurels the brows of these brave commanders, Whigs though they be, they but brightened the good name and glory of our common country. We contend, then, that the Democrats are blameless, if the least bitterness of party feelings

The Battalion of Volunteers, under the command of Capt. Ro. G. Scott, jr., reached Old Point on Sunday night, in the Curtis Peck. We learn that nearly every man was present at the roll-call on Sunday morning—a few only being unprepared for the trip.

We are pained to hear that—McNulty, one of Capt. Carrington's company, was accidentally drowned at City Point, when the boat stopped to fake in the Petersburg company of Capt. Archer. It seems that the unfortunate man... with a brother volunteer, John Bull English, were in the small boat of the steamer, which was suspended at her side, rocking themselves in sport, and in the violence of the vibration were both thrown into the river. One was saved, but the other lost, in spite of every exertion to rescue him.

MORE VOLUNTEERS.

We are glad to hear that the Executive have accepted the services of Captain John P. Young’s company from Portsmouth.

The second company from Petersburg, Captain William M. Robinson, will be completed in a few days, and will no doubt be accepted.

The Kanawha Republican fears a failure to raise a company of volunteers in that Senatorial district, from the want of some person “of the right qualifications to go ahead in the business.” It is too late now, it thinks, the requisite number from the State having offered their services. The Kanawha Republican speaks as follows of the laudable patriotism of two citizens of Kanawha:

“Two noble young men, Mr. B.D. Fry and J. L. Kempter, members of the Kanawha bar, burning for distinction on the battlefield, left this place week before last to join one of the companies in Richmond. We regret that they had not remained here a little longer; they might have raised a company and been placed in its command, to which their qualifications so eminently entitle them.”

We understand that these two young men, who have received a thorough military education, were about to enroll as privates in a company here; but, at the instance of some of our citizens who were struck with their manly conduct and fine qualities, they proceeded to Washington, with a view to procuring commissions in the new regiments of the army probably to be raised. We wish them success.

MORE “AID AND COMFORT,”

The Hagerstown News contains the following article:

Thompson Mason, Esq., late a citizen of this place, and a member of the Hagerstown Bar, has, as we learn from the papers, join the Virginia regiment of Volunteers. Alas! That talent such as his should be prostituted to the wickedness of war! Even should he come back crowned with laurels, a mind so sensitive, cultivated and discriminating as his, will not fail, in old age, to reproach him with the wrongs and miseries he now, by example, is helping to fasten upon the world, by giving his sanction to legalized murder. How much more glorious would it be, were those talents devoted to the cause of humanity: to the putting of the human family upon the railway of advancement—instead of helping to sink the world in the darkness of barbarous heathenism. We wish him a safe return and a peaceful mind in the future.”

It is because the Democratic press expose such enormities in our public journals, that they are assailed by the Whigs as truckling to Executive power, as aiming a blow at the freedom of speech and of the press, and as putting in practice the odious doctrine, “that the King can do no wrong.” Will the most rigid stickler for the liberty of the press fail to condemn such mischievous and factious views as the above? Every newspaper is supposed to exert a certain influence, though in a limited sphere. Is it now, then, plain to the dullest intellect, that such articles as the above are calculated to throw odium upon the war in which we are engaged, and which we are bound to fight out, if we desire to secure peace and an honorable reparation for the wrongs done us by Mexico? The Editor pays a just tribute to the talents and to the cultivated and discriminating mind of Mr. Mason, who has engaged in the glorious service of his country—and yet, in the same breath, in its party madness, presents’ him as “giving his sanction to legalized murder,” and as “prostituted to the wickedness of war.” Do not such articles tend to give “aid and comfort” to the enemy, in raising the impression on the Mexican Government, that a large party in this country is bitterly opposed to the war, and would rejoice to see our army withdrawn, to the dishonor and disgrace of the nation? And is note the Democratic press fully justified in holding up to public indignation such sentiments, whether they come from leading men or public journals? Can any patriot observe, with complacency, the extraordinary course of Mr. McGaughey, a Whig member from Indiana? After characterizing, as an intruder in this House, Col. Baker, the Whig member from Illinois, whose statements he did not regard much, Mr. McG. Denounced the war as a Presidential war altogether, and as one only of the fruits of Texas annexation, and he asked no share in the glory of such a war:

"Believing, then, that the war was wholly wrong, he would not vote for any additional appropriations, except to settle up the debts already incurred. Believing that the shortest way to attain peace was to retire, he would vote against the bill which proposed to increase the army. It was not at all necessary for the interests and honor of the country to prosecute the war. If it were a holy and just war, its history would redound to the national glory. But it was far otherwise in this case, and the retrospection would be anything but honorable or gratifying. It was said that here were Whigs who were in favor of the war. He did not belong to them; and, if that was true, there must be more classes of Whigs than he knew of, and Whiggery had come to be as chameleon-like as Democracy:

...What is all this but rendering aid and comfort to the enemy? And yet, according to Whig doctrine, it is a crying usurpation to expose such factious and treacherous views uttered in a time of war.

Mr. Own of Indiana followed in a masterly, eloquent and far-searching vindication of the justice of the war. We have no room for his conclusive argument, which goes to the very marrow of the question. We cannot, however, forbear from laying before our readers his thrilling peroration. It is full of patriotic sentiment, sound advice, and burning sarcasm upon those who, for miserable party capital, openly encourage our treacherous foes:

...And now, in conclusion, will gentlemen on the other side of the House suffer me to address to them a few not unfriendly words. That which is spoken in this hall remains not here. It is published to the world. It goes to our enemies as well as to our friends. When members of an American Congress assert that the war in which their country is engaged is unholy, unrighteous, damnable; the President’s war, who ought to be arraigned as a usurper for making it; every word they speak may be read—in all human probability is read, and with avidity—in the national palace of Mexico. When members of an American Congress declare that Mexicans, or their manly resistance in such a war, are to be honored and applauded, they speak, as it were, to the very men they praise and encourage; even in the ears of Santa Anna and his advisers. Words that are strengthen the hands and cheer the hearts for the public enemy should be well weighed, before they are uttered. I condemn no man, who speaks, from the depths of his heart, his honest thought. It is his right; and not the less his right, because of the consequence, be that what it will. If those who put Mexico in the right and her President in the wrong, speak as they are prompted by the love of truth and justice alone, their language, no matter whom it may aid and comfort, shall pass unproved by me. But if, with this indignant zeal for justice to Mexico there mingle one motive less pure than truth, one lurking thought of party profit in an approaching contest at home, how stands the matter then? Not national treasure and national honor only, human lives are at stake in their war. They who drag it, as an element of advantage, into the arena of party strife, play with human lives! If any man, with even a glancing thought in his mind towards the presidential succession, use words, put forth arguments, of which the tendency is to nerve the arm of the enemy, and thus protract the war, he sacrifices, on the prostituted alter of party, his country’s treasure, honor, well being—yes! And the blood of her bravest sons. And such a man, thus placing obstacles in the way of negotiation, thus retarding an honorable peace, is the enemy alike of his country and of civilization. The spirit of war is fast departing from the earth. One feels, in these modern days, when engaged even in the most justifiable war, as may some participant in a disreputable brawl, reluctantly dragged into it by chance and bad neighborhood. The necessity of the thing cannot blind one’s eyes to its barbarism. A man, or a nation, meriting to be called civilized, seeks the first pause in the combat, to hasten its termination. But what chance of terminating he war while the enemy is daily fed with hopes, that, divided in feeling and distracted in council, we cannot, for any length of time, conduct military operations with vigor, or prosecute them with success? To dispose Mexico to peace, she must see us united, harmonious, conscious of the justice of our cause, ready to put forth all our strength. Then, and thus, may she be brought to terms. Then, and thus, may this appeal to arms, the last, I trust, in which American shall ever be forced to engage, come to a close, and the period at last arrive, when we may turn our swords into ploughshares, and study war no more."

But to return to Mr. Mason, who is now in this city, a member of Capt. Alburtis’ fine company of Berkeley Volunteers. The Hagerstown News speaks in just and proper terms of Mr. M.’s excellent personal qualities—but, at the same time, does him great injustice, in referring to the causes which should affect his peace of mind. We can assure the News that Mr. M.’s conscience is entirely at ease, in regard to the war in which he is about to engage. Like a true patriot, he feels that his country has received wrongs at the hands of Mexico, which deserve to be avenged. Under such conviction he has given up his home and friends, and has enlisted in the ranks of the country’s defenders. In such a cause can any true American suffer the least shadow to cloud his conscience? On the contrary, what more ennobling thought can animate a patriot, than to risk his all for his native land? Mr. M.’s heart is in the right place, and we shall be much mistaken if he does not do his whole duty. At all events, his mind will be peaceful, because he feels that he is engaged in a glorious cause.

DEATH OF A GREAT MAN

The whole country mourns the untimely decease, in his brigade camp at Monterey, on the 2nd Dec., of Brigadier General Thomas L. Hamer, of Ohio—the profound lawyer; the eloquent and sound statesman; the civil, brave, and generous soldier, and the amiable and philanthropic citizen. He was, perhaps, the first man in Ohio, having been covered with honors by that State, from an early age. At the recent State election, Gen. Hamer was elected to the next Congress, almost without opposition; having been nominated for that office by the enthusiastic vote of a Democratic Convention. In the beautiful language of the Union, "As a man his career has been brief; but, limited as it has been, death kindly withheld his hand until the manly brow of the gallant Hamer wore a wreath of laurel, plucked by his won brave arm, in the midst of fire, carnage, groans, and death, in the bloody streets of Monterey!!"

As proof of the firm hold which he had upon the affections of his State, we quote the following tribute, unanimously adopted by the Legislature of Ohio, on the 31st. ult:

Whereas, the mournful intelligence has reached us that Gen. Thomas L. Hamer, the accomplished civilian and devoted patriot is no more: therefore,

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That in the death of Gen. Hamer, our State has lost a favorite son, the United States a useful citizen and officer, and mankind at large a benefactor. Therefore,

Resolved, That the members of this General Assembly deeply sympathize with the bereaved widow and children of the deceased, in their grievous affliction.

Resolved, That the Speakers of the two Houses procure a suitable person to pronounce a eulogy upon the life and character and public services of the deceased, before the members of this General Assembly and the citizens generally, at some convenient season to be fixed by themselves.

Resolved, That the body of the deceased be brought from Mexico and interred in the soil of Ohio, at the expense of the State.

Let us now turn to the camp in Mexico, and we see that there also the death of General Hamer produced intense feeling, and that the most touching honors were paid to his memory. From a letter in the New Orleans Delta, we extract the following interesting particulars:

Monterey, Mexico, Dec. 10, 1846

Dear Sir: Until to-day I had nothing to communicate of interest. On the 2d instant, the prisoners belonging to Colonel Hays' regiment, (Messrs. Lyons and Tufts,) captured at China, arrived from San Luis de Potosi. They informed me that Santa Anna had thirty three thousand men embodied at that place, undergoing the strictest discipline, and were throwing up a breastwork around the entire town, with a wide ditch on the outside, DIFFERING SOMEWHAT FROM THE CAMARGO FORTIFICATIONS—that the artillery of this army were few, but the cavalry amounted to eight thousand, all fully imbued with GREAT VALOR AND PATRIOTISM, and more than ready and willing to drive the BOLD AND DARING INVADERS BEYOND THE SABINE, and some even thought that they MIGHT MARCH TO WASHINGTON CITY. These gentlemen left San Luis on the 10th November.

On the day previous an express courier arrived from Mexico, giving the information of the revolt of that city and State, and that on the day they left, Santa Anna had detached seven Regiments of the line to quell it. Mr. Lyons also told me that he saw 47 of our deserters at San Luis, in a most deplorable condition. Santa Anna would have nothing to do with them, and had ordered them to his rear—to the province of Guadalaxara. Many of these men had been enticed away under the promise of commissions in the army, and bounties. When in San Luis they were raged, suffering for common wants, and destitute of every comfort; they bitterly repented their false, dishonorable step in deserting the American standard, and would readily return with any sacrifice.

Gen. Taylor is making preparations to break up his camp here; next week he moves with all the regulars and apart of the volunteers, leaving Gen. Butler in command; destination as yet unknown—but of his I'll tell you next week. I enclose you Gen. Taylor's order in relation to the death of Gen. Hamer:

Friday, January 8, 1847
Camp near Monterey, Dec. 3d, 1846.

With feelings of profound sorrow, the commanding General announces to the troops the decease of Brig. Gen. T. L. Hamer, of the Volunteer service, who expired last evening, after the short but violent illness.

The ability and judgement displayed by the deceased General in the exercise of his military command, and the sterling qualities which marked his private character, endeared him justly to the army and to his many personal friends.

By the army in the field, and by the citizens of his own State, his loss will be severely felt; to those connected with him by closer ties, it will be irreparable.

The deceased will be interred at 10 o'clock, A. M., to-morrow, with the honors due to his rank. Brig. Gen. Quitman, commanding the Volunteer Division, will conduct the funeral ceremonies, and command the escort, to be composed of one regiment of Volunteer Infantry, one company of Cavalry, and two pieces of Artillery. The Cavalry and Artillery of the escort will be designated by Brig. Gen. Twiggs from his Division, and will report to Gen. Quitman at 9 o'clock to-morrow.

All officers off duty are respectfully invited to attend the funeral, from the Head Quarters of the Kentucky and Ohio Brigade.

W. W. S. BLISS, Ass't Adj. Gen.

The funeral of Gen. Hamer was magnificent and imposing. The escort was composed of a Kentucky Regiment of Volunteers, under command of Maj. Shepherd; then a company of Dragoons, under Capt. Graham; then a section of Light Artillery, commanded by Lieut. Thomas, followed by the corpse and pall bearers; then the General's horse and Aid-de-Camp, Lieut. Hooker, followed by the General's Brigade, with side arms; then officers of the Volunteers and of the Army on foot; then the mounted officers of the Army. The whole procession must have reached, in length, near a mile.

The Richmond Whig has replied to our strictures upon its course towards the Tenth Legion. We will not dispute about the epithets we have applied to its conduct. We deem it unnecessary to resort to the lexicons of our mutual language in order to be able to define our several positions. The Whig appears to be willing to admit that it did not intend to defame or to slander the patriotism of the Tenth Legion; and, therefore, we say let it pass as to that. Let it be known to the State, and let the people of the Tenth Legion themselves understand, that the Richmond Whig does not intend to defame or slander them in any thing it has said!

But, excuse it for everything like defamation and slander, and libel, there remains yet a charge for which it must answer. When, in time of war, a journal undertakes to array sections and parties against each other, the reprehensions of a patriotic community must fall upon it. At present, men of all parties, and some from all sections, are rushing to the standard of their country; the general thought seems to be, who can first reach the battle field; still, the Whig casts about to examine faces, to see who is and who is not in the Virginia Regiment; and it endeavors, out of whatever it may glean, to make capital for the party in Virginia.

It is like the celebrated character portrayed by Patrick Henry, (John Hook,) who, in the midst of a revolutionary struggle for liberty, cried out, "Beef, beef, beef," whilst the whole country was desirous of avenging this wrongs upon a foreign enemy. When the desire of the community is to have the regiment immediately completed and installed in honorable service, the Whig, although it participates in this desire, endeavors to impress the public with belief that the strongholds of the Democratic party have been derelict to duty, and have not contributed what patriotism required.

The entire logic of the Whig is intended to show that this is a most unjust, a most absurd war, made by the President, without the co-operation of the nation; but, nevertheless, one which the Whigs (so far as Virginia is concerned) mainly have to fight out. The magnanimous Whigs have to do the fighting of the country, whilst the Locos—especially the Tenth Legion, which did so much to elect Mr. Polk, and therefore "ought to fight out this war"—stood back and refuse to volunteer! Most modest assumption!

We have said before, that we did not desire to think of the regiment in any party aspect. We had hoped to look upon them all as Virginians, springing from a common mother, and animated by a common object. We wished, as we known many of our Whig friends did, that party feeling should be extinguished. We were glad to coincide in the propriety of the sentiment uttered by Col. Baker, of Illinois, that there should be no party feeling in the army. But it seems we are to be disappointed in this so far as our own regiment is concerned. The Whig is determined to signalize, if not to stigmatize, those who do not appear.
Whilst the Whig engages itself so busily in taunting Democratic communities with not furnishing their proper quotas for the war, it might as well recollect that the best position in the regiment are held by Whigs. Both the Colonel and the Major (who are indebted to the liberality of a Democratic Governor and Council for their appointments) are Whigs. So is the Adjutant. The ‘fat offices’ are nearly all held by men of that party. Not so, however, in the ranks. Go there, and Democrats will be found, plentiful as the Whig itself can desire. The Berkeley company, coming from a country where the Whigs have a preponderating influence, is composed almost entirely of Democrats. We have heard it said that there are but five Whigs in it. The Augusta company, for which so much admiration has been expressed, and about which the Whig has boasted so much, contains, we learn, a majority of Democrats.

Much as has been said about the Whig city of Richmond having furnished three companies, we venture to say (whilst we do not in any manner disparage her patriotism) that she has not furnished fifty men. The rendezvous is here, and the enrollments have been made here; but the bone and sinew came from the country. The same thing is true of all the other companies formed in towns, of which the Whig and its correspondents boast so much. And as to the Tenth Legion, the latest accounts inform us that it has raised two companies, without the important aid of large towns and thickly settled population, has raised two companies, without the important aid of large towns and thickly settled population, in which to recruit. The people of that section, and the Democracy generally, will understand the game the Whig is playing. It pursues now, as then, to fail in its object.

Friday, January 8, 1847

We are gratified to announce, that the Common Council last evening voted eight Swords, (to cost $30 each;) one to each of the officers of the two Richmond companies of Volunteers, under the command of Captts. Scott and Carrington.

Friday, January 8, 1847

In relation to the “General Officer” whose appointment the President recommends in his message on Monday, the Union makes the following remarks. Upon the propriety of such a proposition, we suspect there will be some difference of opinion. We observe that some of he Whigs are in favor of the plan. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot writes:

"Unless something of the kind is done, many sensible men here, and some of them officers of the army, think the war will last two years longer; and, if so, that it will be hard work to find the troops as well as the money to carry it on successfully; for the volunteers, they say, will never, can never be induced to stay there through another summer campaign, and it will be hard, when they return to their homes, to get others to take their places. The fact is, the war can only be ended by the annihilation of the Mexican army. This must be done, and the quicker the better."

Here are the Union’s comments:

"The President makes another suggestion which is calculated to command the most respectful attention. He refers to the miscellaneous composition of our forces now in the field, made up a they are of regulars and of numerous volunteers; and he recommends a more efficient organization of our army by placing at their head a general officer, who, or course, may be acquainted with the qualities of both species of forces, and calculated to give the combination the greatest degree of efficiency. We have no doubt the proposition will be duly and deliberately weighed, without regard to individuals, an with a dingle eye to the more efficient and successful organization for the whole army. The President regards this appointment as only provisional—to continue only during the war, and to be dispensed with upon the reduction of the army to a peace establishment.

The message presses early action upon Congress in carrying out these suggestions. Actuated by a desire to prosecute the war with the greatest vigor, and to obtain a prompt and honorable peace, he desires Congress to act as soon as possible, “before the present favorable season for military operations shall have passèd away.” Action is necessary here. Action is necessary in Mexico. Santa Anna has repeated, in his last letter to Gen. Taylor, his insolent demand for us to withdraw all our troops from Mexico, and all our squadrons from her waters. And if an experienced statesman, who has studied the Mexican character, be correct in telling us to-day, that the Congress of Mexico may repeat this demand, as preliminary to any negotiation for peace, we ought to put all our armor on, meet the crisis, and strike boldly for peace.”

The above should have appeared yesterday.—By yesterday’s mail we learned that in House, on Tuesday, a report from the Committee of Military Affairs was agreed to, asking to be discharged form that portion of the President’s message recommending the appointment of the “General Officer.” Many of the papers speak of this action as sealing the fate of the proposition in the House. It is further said that only one of the nine members of the Committee was in favor of the measure.

DESPATCH OF THE PUBLIC BUSINESS—NAVY DEPARTMENT,--In Nov. last (says the N.Y. Evening Post,) the government had occasion to dispatch two officers, express, to the Pacific. Col. Mason, of the first Regiment of U.S. Dragoons, and Lieut. Watson, of the Navy, were designated for this duty. The Navy Agent of this port was required to procure a fast sailing vessel and dispatch her with these officers to Chagres. On Saturday evening, November 7th, the brig Benjamin L. Swan was chartered. The same night, at midnight, Col. Mason arrived. Sunday intervening, nothing could be done till Monday A. M. Col. Mason had his three years’ outfit to procure—clothing, arms, and equipments of all kinds—all his private wardrobe and equipments at St. Luis.

The brig had her crew to ship, her stores and ballast to be taken in, and clearance to make. On Tuesday at 3 P.M General Vetmore, the Navy Agent, reported her ready for sea. At 5 o'clock the passengers were on board, and the steamer took the brig in tow; thus in one day and a half, during the whole of which time the weather was bad, the expedition was prepared for sea. The brig was anchored on Tuesday night under the bar; and left the next morning wind favorable. In thirteen days she entered the port of Chagres, and in fifteen from the day the officers left New York, they were on the shores of the Pacific. If fortunate in finding a conveyance up the coast from Panama, they are now at San Francisco. An instance of greater dispatch has rarely been known in any similar undertaking.

A MODERN JOAN D’ARC

Our readers, we know, will thank us for devoting so much space to the simple but beautiful and thrilling narrative of Mrs. Chase, the heroic wife of our consul at Tampico. Were not the facts substantiated by history, we might look up on the narrative as a stirring piece of romance. But this case corroborates the saying that "truth is stranger than fiction." It has been a matter of wonder why the Mexicans, without apparent reason, evacuated a town which was so strongly defended as Tampico. The mystery we now find solved by the fortitude, courage, perseverance and remarkable diplomacy of a woman. But for her devices and cool self-possession, the important post of Tampico could not have been taken without a loss of American life. Through the skill and courage of this brave, generous woman, the town fell into our possession without a blow.

In many respects there is a striking parallel between Mrs. Chase and the famous "Maid of Orleans." In fearless perseverance and high spirited intrepidity of soul, they much resemble one another. But, in many particulars, the parallel does not run. The latter filled the humble situation of maid in the inn of her native village; and her nerves had become strengthened and her frame hardened by the active duties of her life, and especially by the management of horses, which she rode with grace and ease. In her eyes, moreover, the peculiar character of Charles “the Victorious,” who was so strongly inclined to friendship and affection, naturally rendered him the hero of that sex whose generous minds place little bounds to their enthusiasm. Above all, she mistook the impulses of passion for heavenly inspiration, and, declared that she had seen visions and heard voices exhorting her to re-establish the throne of France.

Mrs. Chase, on the other hand, is a lady delicately brought up and educated in the accomplishments which soften he character. She was inspired by no supernatural visions, but was animated to her fearless deeds by her love of country and her contempt and disgust for the faithless Mexicans.

Joan d’Arc was surrounded by her friends in the fortified city of Orleans, who encouraged and cheered her on. Armed cap a pic and mounted on horseback, she was triumphantly presented to the people as the messenger of Heaven, and, carrying in her hand a consecrated banner, sallied forth against the English assailants. In their engagement he was wounded by an arrow in the neck.

Mrs. Chase was alone in the midst of her enemies, and yet she, too; raised the ‘consecrated’ start-spangled banner of her country, and hailed the American forces. Though closely watched by the subtle Mexicans and threatened by them in various ways, she eluded their designs and succeeded in placing an important town in the hands of the Americans.

The death of Joan d’Arc was the result of the cruel, treacherous conduct of those whom she had so heroically served. Mrs. Chase yet lives to receive the praise and honors from a grateful country. What more fitting tribute to the gallant deeds of this noble woman, man that Congress should place in one of the niches of the Capitol some representation of this lady standing by the American colors, in defiance of the hostile population of Tampico!

But we shall not detain our readers from the interesting narrative. Much as we all respect and idolize the "MY ESTEEMED FRIEND: A great change has come o’er the spirit of my dream – at least within the last month – so that I almost doubt the evidence of my own senses, we having at this moment some twenty sail of vessels in the river Panuco – steamers passing and repassing, the sight of which pays me, in part, for my six months’ solitude and suffering. I am not a believer in purgatory, but I think I have passed through that ordeal by residing in an enemy’s country alone; not only hostile in feeling, but subtle and unprincipled.

"My dear friend, I scarcely know how to reply to your friendly solicitude towards me and mine especially. In beginning my imperfect narrative, one great misfortune seems to accompany me – my pen can never keep pace with my feelings. You will have been aware of Mr. Chase’s expulsion, agreeably to the decree of the 12th of May last, and in compliance with the act he had only twenty four hours’ notice to embark, or eight days to retire twenty leagues into the interior. He prudently chose the former, and embarked forthwith on board of the St. Mary’s the blocking vessel off the bar of Tampico, leaving some eighty thousand dollars in his store with no other protection than such as I could afford, and two clerks, one of whom was a Mexican; and he, in accordance with the true spirit of Mexican chivalry, commenced robbing me. In fact my annoyances were so numerous that I cannot give you them in detail, but merely sketch an outline, knowing the sympathy you feel for my perilous position in this new drama. In the nest place, Inez de Primera Instancia, by order of the commanding general, passed me a notice that my privileges ceased as that of the American consul, and my store must be closed. I replied to him in the most decisive manner, that I was not only his wife, but also his constituted agent – in addition to this I was a British subject, and, as such, neither the judge nor the general could deprive me of my natural rights, as the English law admitted of no annexion – stating that any infraction on it prerogative would be hastily chastized by that government; and in confirmation of my assertion, referred the learned Inez to the law of nations.

Thus defeated and exasperated, I was not allowed to send an open note to my husband, then off the bar. But, thank God, who ‘tempers the wind to the shorn lamb,’ He directed me, and I concerted a plan which again defeated their hostile purpose, and sent by strategem nine letters in eight weeks, and through the same means received replies. But those things were daily making inroads upon my health and spirits, which I most carefully concealed from my good husband, knowing the intensity of his feelings for his government, and particularly for my welfare.

"I, in the meantime, drew a plan of the city and river, and had it sent to Com. Conner and Captain M’Cluney of the John Adams, with a correct description of all the forts, the number of guns, a list of the troops and how they were posted, and every political movement, so that through Mr. Chase and his agent, they knew every important movement in this section of the country.

"They abused and insulted the American name and nation to such an extent that it often caused me to retire and pray God for the day of retribution – With the exception of my faithful Amelia, I had but little human sympathy, as all the English influence was against our national cause.

"I am, perhaps, a little prosy, but I well know the sensitive heart to whom these lines are addressed, and so continue. I daily watched, not very christian-like, for the moment of retaliation, hoping to be able although alone in the combat, to "square accounts" with my fierce debtors, and, if possible, place myself and party on the credit side of the entangled account.

"Santa Anna recommended to the government of Mexico the confiscation of all American property in order to carry on the war, and that all Americans residing in this country should be make prisoners of war, as a fatal stroke of those usurping pirates – the gentle name generally applied to them – and that this garrison should be reinforced with some 3,000 more troops. When I read this article in one of the flaming periodicals, it was rather grating to me in my isolated condition. I determined, however, upon the old Roman motto –

"Who would be free, himself must strike the blow,’ or in other words, my case was at best helpless, and now even desperate, and required a desperate remedy.

"Two spies came daily to my house, always under the guise of friendship; and on one occasion, one of the wretches believe that I was possessed of items concerning American movements, I represented him that 30,000 troops were to join Gen. Taylor at Matamoros, 30,000 more had been despatched to capture San Juan, &c., and closed with remarking that I would be compelled to close my house within a day or two as a force of 25 to 30,000 troops was coming against this place – which bit of romance so frightened my poor Amelia, that she thought the general here would call me to account for it.

"Next day I had a call from the captain of the port who wished to know the truth, and inquired if Mr. Chase had written to me to that effect; and soon after some other of the high functionaries discovered me to be an important character, in their daily rounds. In a conversation with the father in law of the general, I recommended to him an early retreat, as the wisest course to be taken; and that same night a private post was despatched to San Luis Potosi upon the strength of the information so received, through me; the town of Tampico was ordered to be vacated on the appearance of this large force off the bar; scouts were sent in every direction, to procure muleteers, for the conveyance of property to the interior; and two schooner loads were shipped to the city of Panuco; six hundred stand of arms were sunk, the cannons were removed from the fort, and the troops evacuated the place. I then despatched to Com. Connor an account of the state of things, and in triplicate to Havana, under different covers to my husband, urging his return forthwith. These were sent by an agent, who supposed them mere letter conveying a wish to my husband to meet me at Vera Cruz, to accompany me to Havana. I spent a restless night and morning, but it has certainly brought its reward. My letter to the commodore was dated October 23d; he received it October 27th, and immediately called a meeting of his senior officers and laid my despatch before them. It had due weight.

Provisions were brought from Point Isabel and distributed among the squadron, and on the morning of the 13th have in sight, twelve sail off the bay of Tampico. I was so confident of the coming of the squadron, that in anticipation of their coming, I had a flag staff made one week previous, and had it erected upon the house-top, in order to raise the first American flag hoisted as a right over Tampico. On my first sight of the fleet, my pent up feelings gave way and I wept as a child for joy, seeing that God had brought deliverance to the captives, and in anticipation of soon seeing the object of my affection, and also in gratitude to Him who is mighty to save, and that my feeble efforts had wrought so strange in our national welfare.

Here I must pause, and say I cannot pretend to describe my feelings at that time. Fortitude seemed to give way, and in the midst of this emotion, I again saw the squadron nearing to the bar, the boats managed and the line passing, (they standing their own pilots over their intricate passage.) and broad pennant flying at two mast heads – the blue and red. My faithful Amelia and myself ran to Mr. Chase's office, and in solitude offered up a prayer, then pulled the flag down and alone rushed to the house-top. I carried it up and tied it on the line with my own hands, and we – Amelia, myself, and Mr. Uder – hoisted it, myself giving the first pull. Thus we defied the whole town of Tampico. I sent for some Americans, but not one possessed courage or national spirit enough to lend a hand.

In thirty minutes the Ayuntamiento called upon me and ordered me to haul it down. I replied it was raised as a right of protection. They said I had no such right as I rejoined that that it was a matter of opinion in which we could not agree. They said it was a burlesque upon their nation – a lady taking the city – and what would the supreme government of Mexico say? I replied very laconically, 'Quien sabe!' and offered them wine under the new banner. They threatened the house. I ran to its top, and asked Mr. Uder if he would stand by me. He replied, "Yes." "Then," said I, "the flag must remain, or all of us sent over the house-top, as I shall never pull it down or suffer any Mexican to sully it by his touch." I had been robbed, - my store entered and pillaged of more than two thousand dollars, in the dead of the night; and when the regiment from Puebla entered this city, they entered my store and carried off my goods, and I had no redress and still less sympathy; and although alone, the God of the just was my captain general, and I had nothing to fear from all Mexico. And now the house of redemption was at hand. I expected they would either fire upon or storm the house. I rested with my right arm round the flag staff, the banner waving in majestic beauty, and the squadron nearing the city, where they saw the flat. It was like lightning to pilgrims to know from whence it came, but soon the officers saw two female forms standing by it, and gave three cheers in front of the city, and then came to my house, which had been now nearly six months as if proscribed by some crime or plague, and my fault was that of being the wife of an American. Commodore Perry and the municipal authorities came to my house on arrival, also Commodore Conner. My despatches have been sent to the state department, and I have letters of thanks from the officers commanding, who have changed the name of Fort Libertad to Fort Ann, in compliment to me. They arrived on the 16th. Forty eight hours after came Mr. Chase, crowning all my happiness.

"You will no doubt have heard part of my story previous to this reaching you, knowing the interest you feel; and this unlimited friendship evinced by you, I thus have taken the liberty to give as far as practicable in detail, and have extended my account far beyond my intention, and at the same time trusting that you will give at least a reading to this imperfect scroll, and may never feel the pangs of mental affliction, as felt by me.

"You very kindly inquire if the existing war has injured us in a pecunary point? It has very materially, but that loss has not in the least allowed my spirits to flag. My trust is in Him, who can withhold and best. We have suffered in mind, in person and pocket, but with feelings of interest toward our beloved country and duty to the cause, and like the widow I was writing to contribute my might for the honor of the country he had so long represented, and as a dutiful wife to follow him in weal or woe, according to the pressure of misfortune, and in impending anger, the break blasts of adversity should not chill my ar Dor, in following his advice and his cause and trust to God.

"We will lose nearly one half of our stock goods. No doubt the U.S. government will indemnify Mr. Chase at a future day.

"Our house will be turned into a garrison, and three field pieces will be placed upon it. I am willing to stand by my husband at a gun until we both die or are victors.

"I have been trying to keep a journal of the beauties of the drama, in rather a rough form, and may place it in your hands at a future day.

Washington, Jan. 5, 1847.
The fate of the ten Regiments to be raised, according to the recommendation of the Secretary of War, is as yet doubtful. I think the bill will be amended so as to substituted volunteers for soldiers. In that case the President is probably ready to send in another message asking for something else. He desires prompt action, and he is right. Any one acquainted with the President, and with his sincere wishes to serve the country faithfully, and to the utmost of his ability; will readily acquit him of ambitious motives. President Polk is a patriot in the loftiest sense of the word, and whether Congress agree with him in this or that measure which he proposes, or not, is a matter of utter indifference to him, so Congress at last agrees to what will serve the wants to the country.

Mr. Walker is still awaiting the resolutions of the committee on finance, before recommending some other measure for raising revenue; I have no doubt but that the fertility of his rich mind will yet hit upon some expedient which will satisfy Congress and the country.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

In order to prosecute the war against Mexico with vigor and success, it is necessary that authority should be promptly given to Congress to increase the regular army, and to remedy existing defects in its organization. With this view, your favorable attention is invited to the annual report of the Secretary of War, which accompanied my message of the 8th inst, in which he recommends that ten additional regiments of regular troops shall be raised to serve during the war.

Of additional regiments of volunteers which have been called for from several of the States, some have been promptly raised; but this has not been the case in regards to all. This existing law requiring that they should be organized by the independent action of the State governments, has, in some instances, occasioned considerable delay; and it is yet uncertain when the troops required can be ready for service in the field.

It is our settled policy to maintain in time of peace as small a regular army as the exigencies of the public service will permit. In a state of war, notwithstanding the great advantage with which our volunteer citizen soldiers can be brought into the field, this small regular army must be increased in its numbers in order to render the whole force more efficient.

Additional officers as well as men, then, become indispensable. Under the circumstances of our service a peculiar propriety exists for increasing the officers, especially in the higher grades. The number of such officers who, from age and other causes, are rendered incapable of active service in the field, has seriously impaired the efficiency of the army.

From the report of the Secretary of War, it appears that about two-thirds of the while number of regimental field officers are either permanently disabled or are necessarily detached from their commands on other duties. The long enjoyment of peace has prevented us from experiencing much embarrassment from this cause; but now in a state of was conducted in a foreign country, it has produced a serious injury to the public service.

An efficient organization of the army composed of regulars and volunteers, whilst prosecuting the war in it is believed would require the appointment of a general officer to take command of all our military forces in the field.

Upon conclusion of the war, the services of such an officer would no longer be necessary, and should be dispensed with upon the reduction of the army to a peace establishment.

I recommend that provision be made by law for the appointment of such a general officer to serve during the war.

It is respectfully recommended that early action should be had by Congress upon suggestions submitted for their consideration, as necessary to insure active and efficient service in prosecuting the war before present favorable season for military operations in the enemy’s country shall have passed away.

TERRIBLE ARM OF OFFENCE AND DEFENCE

Capt. Walker left New York a few days since for Washington, having, while in New York, among other things, made a contract for 1000 revolving pistols for the new mounted Rifle Regiment, which is to serve in Mexico. From the New York Express we gather the following particulars:

"This regiment is to be armed with a pair of these weapons, besides rifles. It was found impossible to obtain any number of these pistols in this city, such as, of late, been the demand for them for soldiers and others going to Mexico.

"It is a fact worth noting, that the German who has been the principal mechanic or manufacturer of these revolvers, has recently left us, and suddenly for Mexico, with his chests of tools and machinery. It is pretty well ascertained that he has had most liberal and rich rewards from the government of Mexico, which have tempted him to leave New York, in order to begin the manufacture of that deadly weapon in a foreign country.

"Capt. Walker is very anxious that the War Department should order for the mounted Riflemen, Wesson’s improved Rifle, which will carry the all with unerring precision 400 yards and over. The rifle is light, and well adapted for such services as it will find necessary."

The New Orleans Delta, of the 2d of January, says that Capt. Brown, of the schr. Rob’t Mills, was informed by Capt. Todd, of the U.S. army, that Santa Anna, at the head of 15,000 troops, was on his way and within four days of Saltillo, and that Gen. Worth, unable to maintain his ground against such overwhelming numbers, was slowly falling back in the direction of Monterey; and that Gen. Taylor, in anticipation of an attack upon that city, was fortifying it at every assailable point. For further particulars, see the extracts from the Picayune.

We are gratified to announce that the Secretary of War has agree to accept two more companies (making in all twelve,) to be armed with rifles and bayonets, and to act as flankers to the regiment. Virginia will thus furnish a fine Legion.

To the Editors of the Enquirer

LYNCHBURG, 3d Jan., 1847

Messrs. Editors:--We had a glorious meeting of our citizens, of all parties, few evenings since, to raise funds, and otherwise prepare for the reception, entertainment, and paying the expenses of the Franklin volunteers to Richmond—expected last evening; but, owing to the appointment of their Captain, Jubal A. Early, as Major, most of them have disbanded, and only some dozen have as yet arrived; and, I suppose, will be about the number that will volunteer from this county, so that our funds remain unspent, for the benefit of Capt. Preston’s Company from Montgomery, daily expected.

Can you tell why it is, that the Editor of the Richmond Whig is so anxious for the Tenth Legion to raise a Company for Mexico? Is it because he would like to get as many Democratic voters out of the State for the Spring campaign as possible? Or, is it his great patriotism? If so, let him ask why it is that his long abiding place, and strong hold of Whiggery, Lynchburg, has not done anything. Perhaps his influence, if exerted, may do something to arouse the yet dormant patriotism of Lynchburg, and excite them to action. But the Tenth Legion will look to some other quarter for counsel and kind wishes than to the Richmond Whig. Here, in his strong-hold of Whiggery, there are to be found individuals who are so much opposed to the Administration, that they are not willing to contribute out of their pockets, and vote against the contribution, in Common Council, of funds to feed volunteers for Mexico. But I am proud to say, these are like the great constitutional expounder, Mr. Lanier of Pittsylvania, "Lone Stars" of Whiggery. The great majority of the party are for a vigorous prosecution of the war, although opposed to it. Can he find such in the Tenth Legion? Our faithful representative in Congress, E. W. Hubard, having declined being a candidate here points to Willis P. Bocock as his successor; but a Convention will be recommended at our January Campbell Court, to bring out our strongest man—and, if that is done, Whiggery will be defeated, as usual. Who is to be elected Senator on the 15th? Is the anxious inquiry of every Democrat. Give us Jones, Smith, Hunter, or any sound Democrat, elected by Democrats, but don't let Whiggery choose our man for us. Show me a Democrat that is unwilling to go into caucus to nominate a candidate, and I will show you a man who looks to Whiggery to support his favorite; and such a course out to be repudiated by every good Democrat. Let union, concession and harmony prevail, and all will be well.

A DEMOCRAT.

The meeting above alluded to was eloquently addressed by Wm. M. Blackford, Esq., Editor of the Virginian, and James Garland and John M. Speed, Esqrs.

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE

WASHINGTON CITY, JAN 2, 1847
Sir: I have requested my brother, M. Being unable to contribute effectively, to the service in which you are engaged, I can only testify my respect for yourself and the other volunteers of my native State, by presenting these volumes, relating in part to the countries in which you are destined to act; with the hope that they may afford some interest to yourself and your officers, during the voyage to Mexico, or in those periods of tedious inactivity, so often occurring in military expeditions.

With the sincere wish that your regiment may have many occasions to display those qualities in the field which Virginians have never yet been found to want, I have the honor to be,

While all eyes are anxiously watching the movements of our gallant army in the South, and while Virginia comes forward to participate with her sister States of the North, South, East and West, in the glory of sustaining the honor and rights of he nation, in a contest with a foreign and aggressive power, we had anxiously hoped that the demon of party spirit would cordially co-operate in bearing the American flag to honorable triumph, until full justice be done and a permanent peace secured from the infatuated and misguided Mexican Government. But in this it seems we are doomed to disappointment. The Whig press are constantly throwing out intimations that an overwhelming majority of the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers are Whigs. John S. Pendleton, Esq., (the "Lone Star," and the representative in Congress from the Fauquier District,) it seems could not let the occasion pass on Saturday, while the House of Representatives were engaged in the discussion of the Army bill, without lugging in the supposed political opinions of the officers and men composing the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers. Mr. P. is reported to have said "he reminded the member who had cast a slur upon the Whigs, that of the 18 companies volunteering in Virginia, all of them were from Whig counties and cities, and all mustered into service had been from Whig towns or counties." Mr. Shelton F. Leake, of the Albemarle district, humorously replied that "he happened to be traveling on board a steamboat, where he heard a man say of the Berkeley company that he would not join such a d—d set, because there were but seven Whigs in it."

We have not counted noses—we wash our hands of such dirty work; but since the question has been mooted by the Whigs, we have been credibly informed that a majority of the men composing the Regiment are Democrats; and that a majority of the men coming from two of the strongest Federal counties in the State, (Augusta and Berkely,) are also Democrats. Where is Mr. Pendleton’s own District? As he is so much disposed to boast of the chivalry of the Whig party, why is it that in his own district—with old Federal Loudoun and Fauquier—Loudoun, with her heavy majority of upwards of one thousand for Clay—has not come forward and responded to the call "To Arms!" and furnished a company for the Mexican war? Atkinson’s, Dromgoole’s, Hubard’s, Seddon’s, McDowell’s, Bedinger’s, and Chapman’s Districts, now represented on the floor of Congress by Democrats, have come forward and responded to the call made upon this State, while the District represented by Mr. Pendleton has not furnished a single company—no, not one. Very well; let it be so. We only refer to this subject because the gentleman in his zeal for the Whig cause has made assertions which he ought first to have ascertained to be correct before he stated... them, and which ew do not believe are justified by the facts of the case. While some delay has occurred in the formation of the Virginia Regiment, owing to the extent of our territory and the sparseness of our population—yet more companies tendered their services to the Governor than the quota required by the President from this State. Indeed, recent events prove that northern Regiment could be speedily obtained, if the Government would accept their services.—Men of all parties and of every locality have shown great zeal and alacrity to enter the service, regardless of their opinions as to the origin of the war. They do not stop to enquire, "Is our country in the right or in the wrong?" but they say "Our country, right or wrong."

Tuesday, January 12, 1847 345 words

The Lynchburg Virginian, of the 7th instant, contains a correspondence between John J. Griffin, chairman of a committee on behalf of the citizens of Salem, Roanoke country, and James F. Preston, Captain of the Montgomery company of volunteers, inviting the company to make that place one of their stopping places, and accept of accommodations which would be provided for them. Capt. Preston accepts the invitation and expected to reach Salem on his route on Thursday the 7th of January, with from 80 to 90 men, about five four horse wagons, and twenty of the above number of men mounted on horses. The company expected to reach Lynchburg on Sunday, and may be expected here in a few days.

A large number of the citizens of Franklin county assembled together at Rocky Mount on the 31st of December, to partake of a complimentary dinner to be given to Jubal A. Early, Esq., the newly appointed Major of the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers. Judge Norborne M. Taliaferro presided at the festive board, the Hon. N. H. Claiborne, Major M. G. Carper, and Colonel Robert T. Woods, of the Va. Senate, acted as Vice Presidents, and N. C. Caliborne, Esq., Secretary. After the cloth was removed, Judge Taliaferro, in a feeling address, called the attention of the company to the objects of the meeting, and concluded by offering the following sentiment:

“Our guest and friend, Major Early: At the call of the State, we give and commend him to her service, and trust her honor to his keeping in a distant country. His character and tried valor need not our assurance that neither will suffer in his hands.”

Which was drunk by the whole company, and responded to by Major Early in a manner long to be remembered by those present; many other sentiments were offered and drunk by the company, expressive of their high esteem for and warm attachment to their friend and fellow-citizen, Maj. Early, and of the regret with which we all part with him, and many others of a character usual on such occasions.

We sincerely regret that the fine company of volunteers raised in Norfolk by Captain O.E. Edwards, and ready at a moment’s call for Mexico, could not be accepted by the Executive: Virginia’s complement having been made up. We learn that the members of this company are the very men to stand the climate of Mexico, a large number of them being from the Bay Shore, well acclimated by the bilious and ague fever, and accustomed to stand up to their waists in the water on the coldest days, shooting ducks, &c.

To the Captain’s credit we would remark, that he had only been elected about ten days when he tendered the services of his company. At that time the company numbered about thirty. He now musters seventy-two as fine looking men as can be seen. The company was raised, mustered into barracks, and supported at his own expense. These men are still in barracks, and if they could be accepted, we doubt not that they would do every thing in support of their country’s cause.

We again express our regret that circumstances prevented their being enrolled in the service of their native State. On Wednesday evening last the following officers were elected: O.E. Edwards, Captain; J. F. Lewis, first Lieutenant; J. H. Sale, first second Lieutenant; and J. B. Minton, second second Lieutenant. After the election, Colonel J. S. Millson addressed them in an eloquent manner, which called forth shouts of applause. The company, then, unanimously resolved, that the Captain be empowered to offer their services to the Executive of North Carolina, should they be rejected by the Governor of Virginia. Should our neighbors of North Carolina be disposed to accept the aid of Virginia, we are sure that they will find in Captain Edwards’ company as gallant and efficient corps as the Union can boast.

All patriots will deeply regret to see the question of slavery introduced into the discussions in Congress. It is premature and mischievous. If, to secure an indemnity against Mexican outrages, it be necessary to acquire any new territory, what possible good can be attained by raising the question of slavery at the present time? It will be time enough when Congress shall be called upon to admit this territory as States into the Union. But since the North has sprung the issue, it behooves the South to stand firm upon the compromises of the Union. This is a question in which not only her property, but the safety of her people, may be concerned. Let her yield now, and no one can fix a limit to the evil. As the Union says, if "the attempt be made to put one portion of the confederacy under the ban, it will produce only excitement and mischief. The elaborate and able speech of Mr. Seddon of Richmond spoke the same language. So strong is this feeling, that we deem it highly probable no treaty of peace can pass two thirds of the Senate if it should depart from this principle."

Our duty now is to fight out the war with Mexico, by uniting all our energies and resources, and not waste our strength by idle quarrels among ourselves upon a domestic question, which never should have been forced into the political arena. The Missouri compromise has been sanctioned by the judgment and feelings of the whole country.
The South is willing to stand by it. Will the North abandon the principle, and force us to the brink of disunion? We are glad to see a cheering sign in Thursday night’s Union, which says “We are happy to discover that a more harmonious and liberal spirit prevails to-day throughout the Hall; and we cannot doubt that either the previso will be dropped, or a liberal compromise be substituted in its place.”

We cheerfully endorse the following views, based upon such sound reasons, in favor of Virginia’s having the honor of furnishing the Brigadier General, to command the three Regiments from North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia.

We call the attention of the Virginia delegation in Congress to this important matter, and feel satisfied that they will do all that is necessary to secure for Virginia what she so fully deserves:

For the Enquirer.

SOUTHERN BRIGADE

We notice that efforts are being made by the Legislature of South Carolina, aided by the Governor, to obtain for a citizen of that State, the command of the brigade to be formed by the Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina regiments. Now we may ask if Virginia is not entitled to this honor? She has now eighteen companies ready for the field, and although the General Government has declined the proffer of but one regiment; yet, the fact that double that number have enrolled themselves, and are ready at a moment’s notice, would seem to us to entitle the Old Dominion to a claim for that distinguished honor.

It cannot be said she is deficient in material for this command, for no State in the Union can claim better or more; then will not Virginia’s representatives in Congress press this matter? Or, is a soldier of the Palmetto State to have the undisputed honor of marshalling Virginians on the battle-field? This was not wont to be; then why now? We have as gallant a regiment on its way to do battle for its country, as ever took the field; should not a Virginian sound the charge?

The Raleigh Standard refers to an interesting incident in the North Carolina Legislature. In this case, no one can with truth say, “Lo, the poor Indian:”

“On Thursday, Yunaluskee, the Cherokee chief, appeared first before the Senate, and then before the House of Commons, to return his thanks to the Legislature for their kindness to him in voting him three hundred acres of land in Cherokee and one hundred dollars in money—Mr. Hayes, the Commoner from Cherokee, acting as his interpreter. He said it was the first time he had had the honor of appearing before the Grand Council of North Carolina; that, at the age of thirty-three, he had joined the white people, and that, in his youth, he had helped them to win their battles; that, as he had fought for the white man in his youth and manhood, so the white man had been good and kind to him in his old age, in relieving his present necessities, and in giving him a home in the land of his fathers; that he never expected to look upon the Grand Council of the State again, but the should remember them always, and he tendered to them, and to the white people, his everlasting thanks.”

Much to our disappointment, we have no later news from the South—the mail having failed twice. If it be true, as stated by some of the last accounts, that Santa Anna was marching upon Saltillo with 15,000, or even 20,000 men, and Gen. Taylor would concentrate 10,000 men at that point, we see no reason for the fears expressed by many. On the contrary, we predict another victory for old "Rough and Ready."

EXTRACT of a letter from a member of Capt. Scott’s Company of Volunteers to his Father in Chesterfield, written the 5th inst., at Fortress Monroe:

“We left Richmond last Sunday morning, and arrive here at 7, P.M. We have good quarters here, but rather rough provisions. I did not expect to live in camp as I did at home. This is in fact better than I expected to have. Captain Scott is taking good care of his men, and we all love him as a father.”

HONOR TO THE BRAVE—A number of the citizens of Charleston, being desirous of presenting a Sword, or other suitable testimonial to Lieut. Col. Fremont, as an evidence of the high estimation in which his distinguished services and gallant conduct in Oregon and California are held, by his fellow townsmen, a subscription list is now circulating among the citizens—Subscriptions to be limited to one dollar.

THE CAPITULATION OF MONTEREY.—The editor of the Portsmouth Tribune commands a company of the Ohio volunteers now in Mexico, and was present at the siege and capture of Monterey, of which he has written a narrative for his paper. We copy the following interesting account of the capitulation:

“The cannonading and bombardment continued until Thursday morning, when a flag of truce was sent to Gen. Worth, and another; borne by Col. Moreno, to Gen. Taylor, with proposals for a surrender. The negotiation was opened that day: on the next the articles were duly signed; and on Saturday they surrendered in fact, and retired from their powder-blackened dens of destruction, from which bolts of death were driven upon our brave troops who marched in and hoisted the stars and strips with hearty and prolonged cheers. The ceremony was a deeply interesting spectacle, as I am told by those who witnessed it. I rode through several of the streets that afternoon.—The whole place was marked by indications of universal mourning. The inhabitants were busily engaged in moving into their homes. A deep gloom had settled upon their swarthy countenances. The officers, many of whom are Castilians of high rank, education and fortune, were dressed in mourning, and moved about with a dispirited air, with their heads covered with crape, apparently overwhelmed with affliction. The ladies seemed all nuns, for black mantillas and sorrowful visages were all the fashion on that woful day. I was not surprised at this exhibition of feeling, knowing the confidence in absolute security that had been inspired by the extensive preparations for defence.

“Many a battle has been fought under the walls of Monterey, and et it was never taken. It withstood a regular siege of fourteen days, in the last revolution against Spain, and the republicans held the place unharmed. And then it is a beautiful city, surrounded by the lofty peaks of the Sierra Madre, with a spacious valley, fertile as any portion of the earth, and full of all that wealth and luxury command to make life pleasant. A canal of crystal water gurgles through the cool shade, supplying an abundance of pure cool water, fresh from the mountain side. The houses are all white, the streets well paved with limestone pebble, and stretch out for miles, filled with multitudes, hurrying to and fro in confusion. The soldiers of both armies meeting silence, and pass with mute but courteous salutes. Ill-repressed smiles of triumph light up the countenances of the Americans, and contrast with the somber saddening expression resting upon those of the Mexicans. There is much here I would like to write of, and some day may describe for too long deferred the details most interesting to every reader, concerning the fate of the members of our company and regiment, as ascertained after the battle.”

ARRIVAL OF THE VIRGINIA AND EMPRESARIO.

From the New Orleans Picayune, Jan. 2.

The steamer Virginia, Capt. Smith, arrived last evening from Tampico, via Brazos Santiago, having left the Brazos on the 27th inst. The brig Empressario, Capt. Collins, which sailed from Tampico on the 26th, also arrived last night. By these vessels we have received letters from Mr. Lumsden, at Tampico, some of which we give below. They contain all the intelligence brought from Tampico, and clear up some points in the accounts previously received which appeared obscure.

We have conversed with a gentleman who came passenger in the Virginia from Brazos, and who is direct from Monterey. He has kindly furnished us with the following information, which is highly important, if there be no error in the accounts. They were fully credited at eh Brazos, and are confirmed by Capt. Brower, of the schooner Robert Mills, who arrived last evening from that port.

An express from Gen. Worth at Saltillo, arrived at Monterey on Wednesday, the 16th of Dec. It brought the news that Gen. Worth had learned through his spies that Santa Anna was within three days march of Saltillo, at the head of an army of twenty or thirty thousand men. The express bore a call upon Gen. Taylor for reinforcements. General Taylor and his staff had left Monterey on the 15th ult.- the day before the express arrived- fro Victoria, to join his command, which was two days march in advance of him.

Gen. Butler, in command at Monterey, immediately sent of dispatches to Gen. Marshall, at Camargo, and to Gen. Patterson, at Matamoros, to send forward without delay all the troops they could spare from their commands.

Gen. Patterson had left Matamoros only the day before the news reached that place. It was at once forwarded to him, and upon learning its purport our informant states that he immediately started on his return with the view to proceed to Monterey.

It was reported at Tampico on the 25th, as will be seen from the postscript to Mr. Lumsden’s last letter, that a portion of Gen. Patterson’s command had entered Victoria, but it is not mentioned that the General himself had arrived, so that we cannot judge how far the news from the two sources may conflict.

The express reported at Matamoros that the road from Moterey to Camargo was lined with troops- regulars and volunteers- on their march to Monterey, having been previously ordered up. Our informant says there were four regiments upon the road. The route from Monterey is infested by predatory bands of rancheros, by which the traveling is rendered insecure. Our train had been attacked a few days before our informant passed over the road, as had also several small parties, and some few men had been killed and wounded.

We need not say that this news possesses the highest interest. As we write we have only verbal reports in regard to it, but hope to receive this morning our correspondence from the army. There is no intrinsic improbability in the news of Santa Anna’s movements, and if he possesses the energy and skill claimed for him, nothing appears more likely than that he should fall like a thunderbolt upon some point in our extended line and hope to crush us. But we have every confidence in the vigilance of General Worth, and his ability to hold the enemy in check until Gen. Wool and Gen. Taylor arrive to his support. We await further intelligence with the utmost interest.

Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune.

Tampico, December 19, 1847.

Gen. Shields takes formal command here to-day. He is energetic, thoughtful, and intelligent, and is in every respect fitted for his station. One of the last acts of Col. Gates, previously in command of this post, was to remove a fellow named Labruere from his office as auctioneer, for refusing to take up arms and turn out with the citizens the other day when they had the alarm of which I informed you yesterday “Served him right.”
Lieut. R.P. Hammond, 3d Artillery, aide-de-camp to Gen. Shields, is appointed Acting Assistant Adjutant General of the Command at Tampico.

In obedience to instructions from Maj. Gen. Patterson, Capt. Hunt, 4th Artillery, with his company now here, is ordered to Camargo to relieve the garrison there.

We have various rumors of the movements of the Mexicans in the interior, but nothing of apparent correctness enough to tell you of.

Tampico, December 23, 1846.

The British mail steamer Dee, Capt. Griffith, which has been some days off the entrance to this place, sailed yesterday morning for Vera Cruz. I learned she carried a considerable amount of specie. The officers of the Dee, with one or two of whom I became acquainted here, are very polite and pleasing, free, frank and gentlemanly in their bearing.

The brig Hallowell arrived here three nights ago from Brazos Santiago, with all the remaining Alabama troops but one company. These are the only volunteer troops here. They are, for the most part, a hardy set of men, orderly and quiet in their deportment, and will, no doubt, if an opportunity occurs, show that they are made of good metal.

Except the Ewing, the vessels belong to the U.S. Squadron, mentioned in my last as being here, have not yet sailed, but they will soon be off. What is to be their point of destination I do not certainly know; but I have gathered enough to assure me that Tuspan is to be looked in upon. The steamer Spitfire, [... Tattnall, is certainly to run in by way of a reconnaissance, if nothing more. The officers are all most anxious for something to turn up, giving them a fair chance to do something, and I sincerely wish they may have a chance.

Tampico is a fine little place. I am becoming more and more pleased with it. It is being Americanized very rapidly. At present there are but few of the better classes of the former citizens here; but those few are becoming, apparently, quite satisfied with the new regime. The police regulations are excellent, and every thing goes on quiet. But of this more anon.

I visited , a day or two since, the line of works building by our forces, under the superintendence of Capt. Barnard, of the U.S. Engineers, and I must say it is most beautiful, so far as it is progressed. More substantial defensive works I have seldom seen. They are superlatively grand, in comparison with those constructed by the Mexicans heretofore, and most indubitably must they command all the approaches to the city by land, however large the number of troops advancing. The greatest scientific skill appears to have been displayed in the strength and construction, as well as proper locations of these works. In a word, they will, when completed, be impregnable— at least to Santa Anna's whole army!

Hart has taken a very nice house here, which he is fixing up as a theatre. In the meantime he gives a series of concerts, Mrs. H., Miss Christian and others appearing in songs, and Wells executing dances, &c. The idea of an American theatre in Tampico is rather novel, but nevertheless we are to have one, and I almost venture to prophecy its success.

I could write you pages about Mrs. Chase, the excellent lady of our worthy consul here; but you have been furnished with the details of her unshrinking, noble and daring conduct, as well as in defending herself and home while her husband was in exile, as in furnishing the most important information to our squadron in the Gulf— information which saved Tampico and made it an American possession! I need, therefore, say no more than this— which I must say— that Ann Chase is a great woman! I have had the honor of being presented to the lady, and confess that I lack words to express my admiration of those attributes in her which make woman great, and render her the heroine of a glorious incident in the history of America!

I have nothing to add, but shall keep you informed by every opportunity of what may be interesting.

Yours, &c. F. A. L.

Tampico, Dec. 25, 1846.

I wish you all a merry Christmas. There is every appearance of there being a merry one here— such as Tampico never saw before. Eggs are very plenty and very cheap, and lots of egg nog to be drunk, The “boys” are bound to do it.

The vessels of the squadron mentioned in my last are still here. The prize schooner "Belle,” under command of Acting Master Perry, (of the Cumberland,) will sail tomorrow for Anton Lizardo. The steamer Spitfire, schrs. Reefer and Nonato (prize) will remain here until the forces are reinforced— then look out for something in the shape of a fight at Tuspan. I have a little information— authentic— about Tuspan, which I will give you. Gen. Cos, commander of the place, has refused to obey the order of Santa Anna to evacuate the town. He has a force under him of from four to five hundred troops of the line, and a large body of Indians whom he has called in from the mountains of Mazantla and Papantle— two or three thousand in number— but indifferently armed. At Tuspan there are three conical hills— the town lying in the valley. These heights are all fortified with six pieces of artillery each, besides having a strong picketing formed of heavy chijal posts. There is no defence at the Mouth of the river, but about half way from the bar to the town- six miles- there is a battery of 24-pounders. The water in the bar is now about five feet only. Some of the guns are the Truxton’s, captured by the unfortunate loss of that vessel under Captain Carpender.

It is thought here by the most intelligent persons, that the only way to successfully attack Tuspan would be by troops, as the town is so situated that a vessel in the river can only bring her guns to bear on two different points, while the guns on the heights not only command the town entirely, but the river also. The most feasible way to attack the place would be to send a force to be landed at the south of the bar [Tuspan being on the north,] abreast of the town, and distant about twelve miles, and proceed to bombard the place at once, when no doubt the third or fourth shell falling in their midst would cause the Mexicans to display a white flag in a very short time.

Now a little but about Tula, or Tamaulipas. The garrison of this place, [Tampico,] when it evacuated the city, went to Tula. This garrison consisted of the battalion of Tampico, 12th Regiment of Infantry, Permanentes de Tampico, Veteranos de Tampico, a small company of artillery, the remnant of the 6th Regiment, left from the memorable actions of Palo Alto and Resaca, and a small force of cavalry. At present there are in Tula, distant about 180 miles from this place, on the route to San Luis Potosi, some three or four thousand men of various arms, under Gens. Valencia, Carvajal and a half dozen others, who are fortifying the place against an apprehended attack from the American forces at this place.

Private letters from the city of Mexico are in this city, stating that it is expected there will soon be a revolution there against the ministers, who the people say have proved themselves incompetent to manage the affairs of the nation in a proper manner. In fact it is said that everything is in confusion- no money, no credit, and plenty of dissatisfaction.

The people here in Tampico- except those who formerly held office- look upon us as their deliverers, not as enemies. It is well known that the Governor of this State [Tamaulipas] is ready, on the first approach of the United States forces towards Victoria its capital, to surrender, in the name of its Congress, the whole territory to us.

The police regulations here are most excellent. By the following orders you will see that certain classes of people needn't come here:

Headquarters Tampico Troops,
Orders No. 3.,
Tampico, Mexico, Dec. 22.

I. All persons occupying houses in Tampico or in its vicinity are hereby strictly prohibited from allowing any species of public gambling within the same.

II. All houses or other places kept for the purpose of public gambling will be closed, the persons found gambling in them arrested, those attached to the Army punished, and those who are not, banished.

III. All personal property found in any house or place kept for gambling, and all money or property employed in gambling will be confiscated, and the proceeds thereof appropriated as a hospital fund for the relief of the poor and indigent in Tampico.

IV. Major N. Williams, 4th Artillery, is specially assigned to the superintendence of the police and good order of the town. He will charge himself particularly with carrying the provisions of this order into immediate execution, and with the prevention and suppression of any species of riot, disturbance and disorder whatsoever. And the better to effect this, he is authorized to call upon the commander of the troops in town for any assistance which may be necessary. By order of Brig. Gen. Shields:

R.P. Hammond, A.A. Adj’it Gen.

This is about all I have for you at the present writing.

Yours, &c. F.A.L.

P.S. I have just heard that a portion of the troops under Gen. Patterson have reached Victoria, and there was no fighting. F.A.L.

FROM TAMPICO.—The brigs Millundon, Capt. Welsh, and C.H. Rogers, Capt. Wilson arrived yesterday from Tampico, Every night was perfectly quiet at Tampico on the 25th ult. No Mexican troops had been seen in the vicinity for eight days, and all felt perfectly secure from an attack from the enemy.

The whole number of troops at Tampico on the 25th December was 1,800, and we hear of no sickness among them. The remainder of the Alabama regiment that arrived from Brazos Santiago with one company of U.S. Artillery and the guns belonging to it. If this be true, we do not understand the movement.

We have been favored by a commercials house of this city with the following interesting extract of a letter received by the Ewing. It contains the first intimation we have seen of the action of the Mexican Congress, which, justifies the anticipations of Santa Anna, expressed in his late letter to Gen. Taylor:

TAMPCIO, Dec. 17, 7 A.M

I was interrupted at 3 A.M. yesterday, from closing this letter, by a call to arms. I obeyed it immediately of course.
After having organized my company (No. 1 or A.) I was ordered to the arsenal, where I remained till late in the P. M.
The reports which occasioned this alarm proved exaggerations; and we were discharged, holding ourselves ready for any future emergency.—When more at leisure, I will tell you how gallantly our Yankee Captains and their men manifested the spirit of the Revolution.

Advises via Vera Cruz were received last evening of the action of the Mexican Congress. They declare that they will not think or treat of peace until every hostile foot has cleared Mexican soil, and every vessel that lines our coast is withdrawn. I consider the war now commenced in real earnest, and I prophecy that Tampico will become an American town.

For the Enquirer:

Messrs. Editors: In the Whig of the first of January, the Editor has edified us with a “Chapter on Salt,” He says that since he new Tariff has gone into operation, salt has risen in value. I believe that the Whig will agree that prices are chiefly regulated by demand and supply, rather than by the duty which may happen to be levied; for, whether the duty of ’42 or ’46 be regarded, both are too trivial to affect the price of the article materially; and so if there be an increase of the price, it must be attributed rather to almost any other cause than the one referred to by the learned yet obstinate Editor. Does he not know that the foreign article is always cheap, and that the price varies not so much with a slight change of duty as with the state of commerce? When commerce is languid, salt is high; but when any thing transpires to stimulate commerce, and render it prosperous, salt will be sure to rise in value; for it is one of the most unprofitable articles of merchandise that our merchants would think of dealing in as a return load; hence that has been given to trade, showing a profitable interchange of other commodities. Let commerce again be dull, so that salt would be brought as ballast from foreign countries, and down the price would go, whether the Tariff of ’42 or that of ’46 was in operation. We all know it is paradoxical to contend that a high rate of duty would diminish the price; if so, our manufacturers, who certainly know their own interests would not a ways be clamorous for increased duties. Why should they be so anxious for the adoption of a policy which they contend is so detrimental to them? If the argument of the Editor in his “Chapter on Salt” be universally or even generally true, that high duties make cheap goods, then in contending for that policy, if he could bring his convictions to bear, he would inflict a direful injury upon the friends he is so zealous to serve. But although they contend for the absurdity, the inconsistency of their conduct shows plainly that whenever the paradox occurs, other and probably various causes combine to produce a result at war with common sense and the plainest dictates of our understanding. Why did this sagacious Editor sound the tocsin of alarm in regard to the probability that Polk’s Administration would be driven to the necessity of imposing a tax on tea and coffee, it by so doing we could derive the double advantage of revenue and low prices? How easy it is to convict a sagacious Editor either of inconsistency or insincerity! Does he think that one hundred “Chapters on Salt” would establish a theory, the bare incompatibility of which carried its own refutation to the simplest minds? Will he tell us whether the high duty imposed by the English Government on American tobacco makes the price low to the consumer? The duty certainly enhances the price; and if to high duty there be added increased demand and inadequate supply and other co-operating causes, all tending to the same result, then the price will be exorbitant. If the duty alone operates with a fair demand and regular supply, we should see something like stability in prices. But supply sometimes being exorbitant and often times inadequate, the prices fluctuates accordingly—rate of duty and other causes at the same time having their comparative tendency either to aggravate or to control in some way the price of commodities. If a high rate of duty should cause over production, and there should be a superabundant supply, or what we call a glut in the market, then the Whig parodox will apply that high duties make low goods. But suppose in such a contingency there was no duty, is it not obvious that the goods would still be lower? Surely, surely; then why should the Editors of the Whig attempt an imposition on common sense? “I have lived, I have seen, I know,” and in my youth I read.

FURTHER NEWS FROM NEW MEXICO

We copy the following from the St. Louis Republican of Wednesday, 30th ult.:

A gentleman of this city, connected with the army, has furnished us with the following extract of a letter received from Ft. Leavenworth, by the last mail. It true, the news is painfully important. The letter says:

"We have dates from Santa Fe to November 15. Capt. Burgwin, with the dragoons, and also three companies of Col. Doniphan's regiment, have gone below to the assistance of the traders. There is a rumor that sixty dragoons have been defeated by the Navajo Indians. Lieut. Noble, of the dragoons, writes that 'he fears and believes the rumor is true.'"

THE GULF SQUADRON AND PENSACOLA DRY DOCK

We had hoped to see an early movement in Congress in regard to a Dry Dock in some harbor of the Gulf for the use of our ships. A large number of our vessels are there, and although peculiarly liable to injuries of various kinds to their hulls, no examination even can be made without sending them as far North as Norfolk, exposing them to still greater peril, than a voyage from any of our Atlantic ports to Europe. This ought not to be. All seem to agree in that; and also, that Pensacola is the most suitable place.—The papers of the North are filled with articles on the subject. They dispute about the different kinds of dry dock—most of them seem against the stone dock as too costly and tardy in construction, while some think it utterly impracticable at that place within any reasonable limits of expenditure. Some scientific opinions are advanced that a good foundation could not be had at a less cost than at Brooklyn, where half a million has been spent in vain, according to the Tribune, in the effort to obtain a foundation. We humbly think the effort to obtain a stone dock should not be preserved in at this time of pressing need, even if it shall be contemplated here after. While the subject is under discussion, either of the floating docks could almost be finished, whereas many years would probably be consumed in the erection of the stone dock.

If one of the floating docks be adopted, in a few months any of our vessels of war, under suspicion of damage, could be examined, and if necessary, repaired and returned to her blockading position.

As to which of the floating dry docks the preference should be given, we have but little to say—and would be satisfied with the decision of competent officers of the Navy, or scientific civilians appointed for the purpose, if Congress be unwilling to determine the question. We see some of the papers, that formerly preferred the sectional dock, have changed their opinions, and are now in favor of the balance dock. The great distinguishing feature between them appears to be this. The former is composed, mainly, o a series of large water-tight tanks or camels, which are sunk, or placed under the vessels intended to be raised, and, by pumping out the water, the lifting power is obtained. The other, or balance dock, is composed of one large structure, like the hull of a large ship, or floating lock, closed by gates at one or both ends. When the gate is open, the dock sinks to the required depth—the ship is introduced, the gates closed, the water pumped out, when it is suspended, as on the stocks originally.

The sectional dock has more light, but requires greater depth of water, (as the whole thickness of the tank or camel has to be accommodated below the keel of the ship,) and, when the ship is raised, it is more liable to be turned over, the weight being on the top. The friends of the balance dock say it has light enough, and certainly as much as a stone dock—that it requires very little more depth of water than is necessary to float the ship—that a vessel in it cannot be hurt—that gales and storms cannot affect it—that it is cheap, stronger, and ore durable, and has almost every conceivable advantage of the stone dock, without many of its disadvantages—that they have built a great number of them, which experience ahs fully tested, and that the result has been uniformly satisfactory.

From the statements in the Northern papers, it seems these balance docks have been built at nine or ten different ports in Europe and this country, for national and commercial purposes, and at each with triumphant success. This decision of the public would seem to have settled the question of relative value, and we certainly concur in it; but why hesitate about building both, if doubt be still entertained on that point? The cost is literally nothing, in comparison with the advantages to the nation under existing circumstances. The injury from one year's delay may greatly exceed the cost of both kinds—(one at Philadelphia and the other at Pensacola)—to say nothing of the loss of reputation to the nation, if one of her national ships should be lost, in consequence of the difficulty of getting to a dry dock. We hope the subject will attract the attention of Congress.
The following resolutions have been unanimously adopted by the City Council, on motion of John S. Caskie, Esq.

"The Council of the City of Richmond, in consequence of the movement for individual subscriptions and the State appropriations, not having as a body, yet had an opportunity of making the same exhibitions of interest and respect for the Volunteers of Richmond, that has been made by the corporate authorities of some other towns in the State, and esteeming it due to their own feelings and those of the city they represent, to offer a public manifestation of the affection and pride with which Richmond regards the gallant men enrolled from her people for the Mexican war, unanimously adopt the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That swords be presented in the name of the city, to the Captains and Lieutenants of the Richmond Grays and Richmond Rangers, companies belonging to the Virginia Regiment, raised under the late requisition from the President of the United States.

2. Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed to purchase suitable swords, request their acceptance by the above named officers, and make all arrangements for their presentation.

A committee was accordingly appointed of Messrs. Caskie, Wickham and Carrington. On motion of Mr. Wickham, the President of the Council was added to the committee.

We yesterday received no Union or Intelligencer, and are, therefore, without a full report of the interesting proceedings of Thursday. We, however, see in the Baltimore Sun that Messrs. Archer and Crittenden came out in favor of the war and its vigorous prosecution. "They probably did not wish to be outdone by Harry Clay at New Orleans," who spoke in manly terms of the patriotic duty of all to punish "the wrongs done to this country by Mexico." With the Sun we say, "would that other Senators and members were to follow the honorable example;"—and, we add, would that many of the Whig papers and politicians would, like Mr. Clay, take the side of their own country, and not, on all occasions, justify and defend the course of Mexico, and virtually declare that she is in the right, and their own country in the wrong.

In the Baltimore American we find the following notice of Mr. Crittenden's remark:

"He was very anxious to see an end to this war. The best mode would be to adopt such means as were now proposed.

"There was another way, and that was to fall back upon some portion of the territory which we have taken, and let the Mexicans make war upon us. But this would leave it in doubt when the war would be ended. He wished he could be convinced that this was the most effectual mode. But however deplorable was the continuation of the war, he must say that, in his opinion, the only way to obtain peace was to carry on a vigorous war—to adopt the fullest measures, and to vote for the most ample supplies of men and money."

The Petersburg Intelligencer reports the decision of Judge Gholson upon a Habeas Corpus sued out at the relation of the father, directed to the defendant, Captain Archer, of the Petersburg Volunteers, commanding him to bring up the body of George B. Lipscomb, an enlisted volunteer in his company. The infant, (between twenty and twenty-one years of age,) in answer to questions by counsel, expressed a wish to be discharged, in consequence of the distress of his mother.

The case was argued by J.S. Edwards, Esq., for the petitioner, and by Thomas Wallace and Wm. T. Joynes, Esqs., for the defendant, Capt. Archer. Judge Gholson delivered a learned and lucid opinion, in which he examined the rights and capacities of infants at common law, on whose principles, he contended, this case was to be decided. He said, that the mode of enlistment ought to be distinctly declared by statute before it shall be allowed to change or impair private rights under the common law. The act of 18th May, 1846, said Judge G., did not contemplate the binding enlistment of infants—and he could find no case or authority which holds that a voluntary enlistment in the service of the United States is a contract so clearly beneficial to the infant as to be absolutely binding upon him at common law. The Judge stated, in conclusion, that if the application had rested on the petition of the father alone, without the concurrence of the minor, he should probably have remanded the prisoner. But as, in this case, the minor concurs in the petition of the father, (a fact which distinguishes this from some of the cases in the books, which otherwise have some resemblance to it,) he must therefore discharge him—which was accordingly done.
The Union holds the following cheering language upon two questions which now engage the attention of Congress and the Country:

"We warn the 'National Intelligencer' and its allies not to deceive themselves. The country is in war. The people demand that it should be prosecuted with vigor and terminated with honor. Their representatives cannot refuse the necessary supplies of men, money, and means. The bill for organizing ten additional regiments will pass in some form or other, and, what is most desirable, in the form proposed by the secretary of War and recommended by the President.—Why change it? Why convert it into a bill for volunteers, when the 50,000 volunteer bill is not yet exhausted, and a member form New York admitted to-day that there were 17,000 volunteers who might yet be called out under that bill?—We want, also, a species of force more allied to the regular service, to act on a different principle, and to give the greatest possible efficiency to our combination of troops. This addition to the regular force besides, will, b the very terms of its enlistment, expire at the end of the war.

"Money and loans will also be provided for; whether by taxing tea and coffee, or all the free list, or in some other ode of taxation, we know not; but we doubt as little, in spite of the temporary exultation of the National Intelligencer, that, if the exigencies of the war require it, the representatives of a patriotic and enlightened people will waive their own prejudices, and lay an adequate duty upon tea and coffee, and other articles of the free list. The honor of the country will demand the supplies; and an administration which is faithful to its trusts, an nobly doing its duty, and carrying on a war which Congress recognized and sanctioned in May last, must receive; as it deserves, the support of its democratic friends, and, indeed, of every patriotic member."

Petersburg still continues her good work of contributing to the country's cause. On Wednesday afternoon, a large meeting of the citizens was held, to make arrangements for furnishing an equipping the second company of Petersburg Mexican Volunteers, Capt. Wm. M. Robinson.

The gallant veteran, Gen. D. C. Butts, was in the chair, and Wm. R. Drinkard, Secretary. After eloquent and patriotic addresses from Messrs. Wm. Robertson, S., T. S. Gholson and Tim Rives, a resolution was unanimously adopted, requisition the Common Hall to appropriate two thousand five hundred dollars to equip this second Company.

On the same evening a special meeting of the Hall was held, and this liberal and spirited appropriation was made.

We regret that we have not room for the Petersburg Republican's graphic sketch of the interesting scenes, which took place on Saturday evening and Sunday morning last, on the occasion of the departure of Capt. F. H. Archer's company of volunteers for Old Point. On Saturday evening, the ladies of Petersburg, through their organ, Judge James H. Gholson, presented to the Petersburg volunteers, commanded by Capt. Archer, a beautiful flag, with the Virginia coat of arms inscribed on one side, and on the other the motto "From the Ladies of Petersburg to the Petersburg Mexican Volunteers." This sacred deposit, this "talisman to cheer them in the hour of peril and inspire them in the moment of fierce and deadly conflict," was conveyed to the patriotic volunteers under the most touching circumstances. All the military companies of the town were present, with hundreds of ladies and gentlemen, who eagerly watched the imposing scene. The accomplished Judge performed his duty in the happiest style:

"Eloquent, touching, impassioned, burning words, tell from his lips, and went immediately to the hearts of his sympathizing and captivated audience; and the gushing fear o'er many a fair and many a manly cheek gave strong assurance that his sentiments and emotions were but common to all who heard him. The flag was received by Captain Archer, who returned thanks for the compliment to himself and company in a very few but very appropriate remarks."

Mr. William Robertson, Sr., then presented to Captain Archer a splendid sword, belt and sash in the name of the members of the Bar of Petersburg. John W. Syme, Esq., next arose, and in the name of the following gentlemen, viz R. B. Bolling, Benjamin Jones, Robert Leslie, Joseph Bragg, J. V. Willcox, John Rowlett, A.G. McLwaine, William E. Hinton, David Dunlop, D.W. Bragg, J. Branch, Goodman Davis, B. H. May, John L. Mertens & Co., James Orr, Moses Paul, and A.L. Smith, presented to Lieutenants F. Pegram, D.A. Weisiger and P.A. Peterson, each, a most beautiful sword, belt, sash and epaulettes, as tokens of their unwavering confidence and esteem. "Mr. Syme's Remarks were characterized by even more than his usually eloquent and impressive manner, and were admirably suited to the occasion, and the pleasing but melancholy circumstances by which that occasion was surrounded. Each of the gallant Lieutenants made a short and appropriate reply, which closed the ceremony. The volunteers were then escorted through the principal streets to the town to their Barracks, by the different military companies, under the command of Captain Garland of the artillery, and night fall found many returning form that rare but interesting scene bowed down under the influence of mingled emotions of pride and grief.”

The parting scene next morning was full of touching incidents. We are compelled to omit, the beautiful reflections of the Petersburg Republican upon the scene, and to content ourselves with the following. “About seven o’clock the volunteers, escorted by all the military companies of the town, arrived at the depot. Captain Archer arranged his men in double ranks, the front rank facing the rear, in open order, through which the military and citizens, commanded by Captain Garland, passed, shaking hands with every man of the volunteers, and, amid a torrent of scalding tears, asking God to bless them, in such terms as tumultuous hearts and almost palsied tongues would allow. The prayers offered to Heaven on that occasion are no doubt recorded on high, and will avail in behalf of those young men, for there was a multitude of hearts ‘that agreed touching one thing.’ They prayed for the blessings of God to rest upon the young volunteers.

“They are gone, for a foreign land—far, far from their homes and friends—they have departed. They have pledged their lives and their honor in defence of a holy and a just cause. May the God of battles bless, preserve and protect them—Amen and Amen!”

MORE “AID AND COMFORT”

In the Massachusetts Legislature, a few days since, Mr. Caleb Cushing asked leave to introduce a resolution appropriating the sum of 20,000 dollars for the equipment and support of the Massachusetts volunteers for the Mexican war. He stated that he wished to have the resolution received and referred to a select committee.

Mr. Keyes of Dedham said he should vote to refer the resolution, but sooner than vote any money which would go to maintain the “infamous war with Mexico,” he would cut off his right hand.

Mr. Bird of Foxboro’ also spoke of the “infernal slave holding Mexican war,” got up by our national administration.

The whole subject was then laid on the table by the Whig Legislature, 171 to 61. And it is because the Democratic press denounce such unreasonable language and infamous proceedings, that the Whigs clamor about “a violation of the freedom of speech.” The Boston Times reviews the subject with scathing severity as follows:

"It seemed as though a bomb shell were thrown into the House, and the Whig zealots were on the floor at once. Mr.
Cushing was only desirous of its reference to a special committee, so that a report might be had. Some of the Whigs were liberal enough to favor this course, but the majority showed themselves cowards and enemies of their country.
A motion was made to lay the whole subject on the table, and such was its disposition by the majority. The yeas and nays were however taken, and we have the pleasure of presenting to the State and Nation the names of these recreants to the country in time of war.

"They will become marked men, and their names will go down to posterity for the slow, unmoving finger of scorn to point at. They will be placed on the same record as their prototypes—the federalists of the last war—who favored the enemy’s cause, and voted that it was unbecoming a moral and religious people to rejoice at victories gained over a British foe. Our Whig Representatives seem to have a desire to be placed in the same category. They agree ready to aid and comfort the enemy by their voice and action, but are not ready to aid and comfort the brave and chivalrous volunteers who have come forward of their own free will and accord, to fight the enemies of their country.

"Gentlemen Whigs of the majority!—Your names are on the record for history, and we leave you to your unenviable immortality!"

The next day the Whigs, cowering under the castigation of public opinion, took "the back track," and the resolution was referred.

LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA.

Wednesday, Jan. 13

SENATE.
A communication was received from the House announcing their concurrence in the amendments made to several unimportant bills by the Senate.

Mr. WALLACE, from the committee on General Laws, reported the two following bills, each with several amendments: "An act to facilitate the transfer of stock in joint stock companies in this State"—(Passed)—and "An act authorizing a loan by the Winchester and Potomac Railroad, and for other purposes"—(On motion of Mr. McMULLEN, laid on the table.)

The CHAIR appointed the following joint committee to enquire into the "arrangements" of the Richmond and Fredericksburg Railroad Company, and others: Messrs. Ambler, Woolfolk, Stanard, Cox and McMullen.

Mr. GARRETT moved to reconsider the vote upon the bill authorizing the transfer of money or property to trustees appointed by the Courts of other States.

This motion was sustained, and then, upon the further motion of Mr. GARRETT, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on General Laws.

Mr. CRUMP offered a resolution, requesting the House to return to the Senate the bill changing the Rifle Greys of King William county to a company of light infantry. Agreed to.

A communication was received from the House, embracing a series of resolutions in regard to the death of Isaac S. Pennybacker. Resolutions agreed to.

Mr. DENEALE then rose and addressed the Senate, as follows:

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with a long established custom in this House, and under a full conviction of my incompetency to the task, I rise, not for the purpose of entering into a lengthened eulogium on the character of the late Isaac S. Pennybacker, whose death we are now called on to lament—but with the intentions of making a few remarks in regard to his exalted worth and integrity. Coming as he did from my Senatorial District, I should feel that I did injustice to his memory were I not to advert, however briefly, to some of his numerous virtues. As a man, his talents and integrity have always secured him the respect of all who have been honored with his acquaintance; as a father and a husband, he was most kind and affectionate; as a neighbor and a friend, his conduct was such as to dear him to every one whose privilege it was to reside in his section of the country. Not only have our State and the family and friends of the deceased suffered an irreparable lose, but the U.S. Senate has lost the assistance and counsel of one of its most able and intelligent members—a loss which will be long and seriously felt. Since it has pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from amongst us our meritorious friend, let us endeavor to emulate his virtues and cherish in our families an undying respect for his memory. And when we shall have been called from this world, may we spend with him a glorious immortality in Heaven.

On motion of Mr. DENEALE,

THE Senate adjourned.

CLOTHING FOR THE VOLUNTEERS

The following communication from the Governor was laid before the Senate of Virginia on Tuesday last. On motion of Mr. Wallace it was read, and referred to the Committee on the Militia:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Jan. 11, 1847

To the General Assembly.

I communicate here with a letter from the Field Officers of the Regiment of infantry Volunteers, now nearly ready to embark for Mexico, in regard to further supplies of clothing, which I beg leave earnestly to commend to the immediate attention of the General Assembly.

Should it be deemed expedient to supply the clothing for our volunteers in the manner suggested, the State may be reimbursed by receiving from the General Government the commutation allowed for clothing the Volunteers, or so much thereof as may be requisite—or may leave it to be paid for by each man as the clothing is received by him—for which purpose it may be necessary to appoint an agent on the part of the State unless the necessity thereof can be obviated through the agency of some of the departments of the U.S. Army.
The plan herewith suggested for keeping our Regiments well supplied, I deem important to the health, comfort, and military appearance of the men.

Very respectfully,

WM. SMITH.

City of Richmond, 8th Jan., 1847.

Sir; The undersigned, the field officers of the 1st Regiment of Volunteers infantry, beg leave respectfully to represent to your Excellency the propriety of some adequate provision for supplying the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Regiment with clothing, after the present supply shall be exhausted. It is unnecessary for us to inform your Excellency of the great suffering which the volunteers now serving in Mexico have undergone, for want of proper clothing. Their fate shows us what must be that of the men composing the Virginia regiment, unless steps are taken in time to avert the evils that attend service in a distinct and hostile country, where supplies of clothing cannot be procured.—It is true that the United States government has made such provision as, under the circumstances, it was practicable for it to make. It has allowed to the volunteers commutation for the clothing to which soldiers are entitled, the volunteers being required to provide their own clothing; but your Excellency will readily perceive that it will be impossible for them to supply themselves, in a foreign and hostile country; although they may receive pay enough for that purpose, if the supplies were at hand, and could be procured at reasonable prices, a thing that is not the case in Mexico.

The volunteers are dependent upon the sutlers for any article of clothing they may need, and from the information we have received, only the most inferior articles are furnished by them, and those at the most exorbitant prices; in fact, some little experiences on other occasions have given us an opportunity of knowing the utter impossibility of a volunteer soldier's being able to supply himself with anything like a sufficient amount of clothing, out of the commutation paid him, when he is left to the extortions of those who hover around a camp, for the purpose of pouncing upon the poor soldier's pittance to the moment he receives it.

The Virginia regiment has been supplied, or will be supplied, before its departure, with as comfortable clothing for six months as the circumstances of the case would permit; but unless the war is speedily closed, the men in a very few months will require summer clothing, which they have not now; and there are many casualties attending a campaign that might deprive some of the men of the clothing with which they go provide, and leave them in a state of utter destitution, that it would be impossible to remedy.—With a full knowledge of the difficulties and privations that are before us, we cannot depart without doing all in our power to have such provision made for the men entrusted to our command, as may be necessary for their comfort and health, so far as these may be secured in a camp.

We are aware of your Excellency's earnest desire to send into the field a regiment that shall be creditable to Virginia, and we cordially acknowledge your zealous efforts to make it such. It is, therefore, with pleasure that we appeal to you to call the attention of the Legislature to this subject, and ask that it take the matter I hand, and adopt such measures as its wisdom may prompt. We have made out an estimate of the clothing which will be required by the men during the next Summer and Winter. From that estimate we have discarded everything intended for display, and we ask nothing for ourselves or the commissioned officers of the regiment.

It will require an appropriation of thirty-thousand dollars to carry out the plan proposed by us, which is to have the clothing of the men made by contract, and sent through the Quartermaster's Department, to such point as may be necessary, and issued to the men in the quantities named in the estimate, which is herewith submitted; and that a donation of it be made to them; or, that it may be sold to them at costs and charges. There are many considerations which recommend this plan; it will enable the men to obtain a certain supply of comfortable clothing at reasonable prices; the regiment would present a uniform appearance; its distinctive character would be preserved; its efficiency increased; and the assurance that their comfort was cared for at home, would keep alive in the hearts of the men that love of their native State, which would stimulate them to deeds that might place her among the foremost of her sisters who have gathered laurels upon the fields of Mexico.

We mean to cast no imputations upon the Government of the United States; we acknowledge that it has done all that it was practicable to do in this matter. Having no control over the uniform of the volunteers, it could but pay them commutation for their clothing, which is sufficient for the purpose, provided it could be laid out to advantage.

But we think we will not ask in vain, when we call upon Virginia to extend her fostering care to her sons who go from her bosom to his field of battle, to die, if need be, for the honor of their glorious mother; and we feel assured that, to Virginia, her name, and the honor of her sons, are dearer than money.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servants,

Signed,
To his Excellency Wm. SMITH,
Governor of Virginia.

INTERESTING FROM CAMPEACHY

An arrival this morning puts us in possession of accounts to the 22d ult. A letter of that date states that Campeachy has positively dispatched a force of 2500 men, which was joined by 500 on the road with 12 pieces of artillery all well equipped, with a view to compel the government at Merida to succumb to the pronunciamento of Campeachy of 8 December. The object of the pronunciamento and of this movement, is declared to e to maintain the neutrality of the peninsula as between the United States and Mexico, and put down the government which they say ahs wed the country to Santa Anna. The people of Campeachy have elected Don Domingo Barret Provisional Governor.—N.O. Mercury

LATE AND IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

By the arrival here yesterday of the U.S. Transport Steamer Alabama, Capt. Windle, which left Brasos on the 3d instant, we have received intelligence from the several divisions of the army up to a late date.

It appears that the reports which have been in circulation regarding the advance of Santa Anna on Saltillo have been entirely premature, and the statement that was published of his being, at the date of our last advices from that place, within three days’ march of it, is entirely without foundation. There was, however, some cause for the rumor, of which the following are the particulars:

General Worth on the 16th ultimo received information from two scouts that the Mexican General-in-chief had left San Luis Potosi, at the head of a body of 15,000 cavalry, with the intention to fall on the American division at Saltillo, which he imagined he could easily crush. After this, he proposed attacking General Wool, and if similar success attended him, to repair to Monterey and capture or destroy the magazines and public stores which lay there. General Worth, without attaching more importance to the report than it seemed to merit, forthwith dispatched expresses to Generals Taylor, Wool and Butler, acquainting them with what he had heard, leaving it entirely to them to act in the premises. The express overtook Gen’l Taylor a short distance from Monterey, on the rout to Victoria. He immediately returned to his old encamping ground near Monterey, with the whole of his division, and then awaited further advices. After remaining three days, during which he received information of the improbability of the report of Santa Anna’s advance on Saltillo, he again took up the line of march, and proceeded onward to Victoria. Meanwhile, General Wool, who had been informed of the rumor current at Saltillo, called in all his detached commands, and at the head of his division, 3000 strong, quitted Parras on the 18th ultimo, and by arrangements previously made, was to enter Saltillo on the 23d at farthest, pushing forward with all practicable speed. General Butler had previously reached Saltillo from Monterey. During this time the intelligence of the reported advance of Santa Anna had reached other more distant points of the line of occupation; and troops, already under orders to march toward Monterey, hastened their progress onward.

It appears that Generals Taylor and Worth, on mature reflection, readily discovered the improbability of the report of Santa Anna’s advance on, and near proximity to, Saltillo, from the following facts: 1st. The distance between San Louis de Potosi and Saltillo was too great to admit of the possibility of the march of so large a body as 15,000 men, without timely notice being afforded to the American General to prepare for his reception. 2dly. The ground between the two cities is extremely bare of verdure or other means of sustenance for man and beast- 90 miles of which, as is well known, being an arid desert, divest of fountain, running stream, or any other source of water, besides affording not the least chance of getting food or fodder, being almost uninhabited, throughout its wide extent. The report of the Mexican scouts, however, is said to have been corroborated, by information received at Saltillo, in a letter from an English merchant at San Louis de Potosi, who stated that Santa Anna had positively left that city, at the head of a numerous body of cavalry. Even now, in those parts of Mexico, occupied by our troops, it is admitted that Santa Anna is out with a considerable mounted force, but with objects far different from those attributed to him, by scouts. It was stated in the letter above alluded to, that the Mexicans’ intention were to hurry forward, and occupy the only practicable pass in the mountains lying between the divisions of Generals Worth and Wool, thus intercepting their communications. After realizing his anticipated success against them, by cutting them up in detail, he was then to advance on Monterey, &c. These announcement are now proved to be premature, and things are proceeding in their former train, accelerated a little by the alarm which has just subsided.

For much of the above information we are indebted to Major Butler, [a passenger by the Alabama,] Paymaster U.S. Army, attached to the division of Gen. Wool, who visits this city on business, which will detain him here about a week, when he returns to head quarters. Major Butler left Parras on the 17th ultimo, where General Wool’s division then lay. He states that the troops were in excellent health and spirits, no casualty of moment having occurred for some time. The inhabitants of the country which the troops had traversed from San Antonio, had manifested the greatest good feeling towards the Americans; not a symptom of that hostility which the population of the valley of the Rio Grande had so frequently exhibited, had been observed.

Brasos.- We are under many obligations to Gen. Jessup for his politeness in communicating some interesting particulars regarding the feelings observable amongst the Mexican population, at different points on the Rio Grande. It seems that a species of moral barometer exists there, if we take the trouble to study their character. On the eve of any great event, (the battle of Monterey, for example,) a considerable falling off in the numbers of Mexicans seeking employment takes place. At each new success of the American arms, the applications for service redouble. With the denunciation of the Mexican government staring them in the face, they are afraid to work for the invaders; but as time rolls on, and our conquests seem to be consolidated, their confidence returns, and they are anxious to join us heart and hand.

Monterey.- Major Butler was in Monterey on the 23d ult, at the time Gen Taylor was encamped there. Col Harney was in that city, on his way to Saltillo. Everything seemed satisfactory, regarding the conduct of the inhabitants, as to peace and tranquility. One regiment, it is presumed, will be sufficient to form its garrison.

March of Troops, &c- On his way from Monterey to Camargo, Maj Butler met the Kentucky mounted riflemen, with Gen Marshall at their head, and on of the Ohio regiments- both corps on their way to the former place.

General Scott- On the 1st inst, on his way down the Rio Grande, a days’ distance from Camargo, Gen Scott was met proceeding upward, on the steamboat Corvette.

At Matamoros, Point Isabell and Brazos, things were in statu quo.

The remains of the following officers were brought over on the Alabama:

Col. Watson, Baltimore Regiment.
Capt. Isaac Holmes, Georgia Regiment.
Capt. Ridgely, Flying Artillery.
Capt. Gillespie, Texas Regiment.
Lieut. Graham, Infantry.
Mr. Thomas, Texas Rangers.
Mr. Pierson, Texas Rangers.

Passengers- General Jessup, Quarter Master General and suite; Majors Butler, Boyd and Comstock; Captains Long, Hoyle; Lieut Armstrong; Messrs H McQueen, Mills, Clark and Robinson, and 240 sick and discharged soldiers. Messrs Mills and Robinson are the committee from Baltimore to conduct thither the remains of Col Watson, Capt Ridgely, and Lieut Graham. Lieut Boyle, of the Baltimore battalion, died on the morning of the 6th inst, on board the Alabama, while coming up the river.

Tampico- Who are very much indebted to the gentleman who has so kindly placed at our disposal the following items of intelligence from Tampico. In a letter dated Tampico, the 26th ult., the writer states that a report was current that a body of 500 American troops had taken quiet possession of Victoria, the capital of the department. Indeed the whole of the inhabitants of Tamaulipas are prepared to throw off the yoke of the central Government, provided the United States will guarantee them permanent protection. A letter has been received there, dated San Luis de Potosi, the 23d November, which stated Santa Anna’s force at that time did not exceed 7,000 men- this was from a most reliable source, but the date of the letter is rather distant. Col. Riley, and Gens. Quitman and Pillow, were rapidly advancing on Victoria. The 500 men above alluded to, are no doubt part of the force of Col. Riley.

Saltillo- Major Butler passed through Saltillo on his way hither. Here he found Generale Butler, whose severe wound in the leg was slowly healing. It will be a satisfaction to his numerous friends to learn that he is again able to mount his horse, and in a very short time, will be, in all respects, “himself again.” The two Generals, Butler and Worth, were of opinion that Santa Anna was too astute to risk himself in a field fight; he would patiently await the unfolding chapter of accidents, behind the fortifications of San Luis de Potosi, confessedly, even by our own topographical engineer officers, the strongest place in Mexico, after San Juan de Ulloa.

[MPR]
Santiago, which she left on Sunday, the 3d instant. Among her passengers are General Jesup and staff, and thirty others in the cabin, and two hundred and forty sick and discharged soldiers. Lieutenant Mills of Baltimore has kindly furnished us with the following memoranda.

All idea of an immediate engagement has past over, and it would now seem that Santa Anna is only to be met in San Luis Potosi, where it appears he means to stand the hazard of the die.

General Taylor, as we had been previously advised, countermarched when on his route to Victoria, and was approaching Saltillo when he met Colonel May and his squadron, who had pressed on in advance of him, returning to Monterey. Colonel May being informed there of the actual state of things at Saltillo, he returned and recommenced his march to Victoria. It turns out that the alarm originated thus: General Worth intercepted a letter from the Governor of New Leon to a partisan Mexican General, whose name our informant could not recollect, telling him to advance and attack on Saltillo on a certain day, and that he had so arranged it that the Mexican inhabitants would rise, join them, and defeat the American forces. Add to this, a large cavalry force was reported on the advance from San Luis Potosi. With reference to the letter, General Worth enclosed it to the author, telling him that if again detected in any such proceeding he would be shot. The advanced cavalry turned out to be a foraging party, pretty numerous to be sure, but nothing more.

The forces at Saltillo have been considerably strengthened. The Kentucky and Ohio Regiments under Gen. Butler, have marched on there, and the Kentucky Cavalry were to march for that point on the 23d ult. Monterey too, under command of Col. Garland, is considerably reinforced. The two Indiana Regiments, the Kentucky Mounted Cavalry, and about 700 of the recently enlisted regulars were on their way to Monterey. Col. Morgan of the 2d Regiment of Ohio volunteers who has command of Camargo, is engaged in fortifying the place.

General Wool's column had reached a point within nine mile of General Worth's division at Saltillo.

Victoria is to be the point for the concentration of all the forces of our army.

General Scott, we learn from a source entitled to all credit was to proceed to Victoria or wherever General Taylor could be found, to confer with him as to the best plan of conducting the campaign.

We occupy much of our space this morning with the eloquent and patriotic remarks of Mr. Bedinger, in vindication of the Mexican War.—His rebuke of the factious and mischievous course of those politicians who decry their own country, and denounce a just and righteous war, which has been forced upon us, will be read with interest, and cannot but exerts a sound influence upon the moral tone of the community. Mr. B. speaks the sentiments of Virginia, and of the country.

Friday, January 15, 1847

To the surprise of nearly everyone, yesterday's Southern mail informed us that the recent reports of the advance of Santa Anna upon Saltillo with 20 or 30,000 men, were without foundation, and that Gen. Worth was deceived in his information. By the extracts from the New Orleans papers in another column, it will be seen what data he proceeded to call for reinforcements. The following article from the New Orleans Bulletin sets forth the inconveniences consequent upon this false alarm, in deranging and retarding the operations and movements of the army. This is to be regretted—but the occurrence shows how promptly and successfully, in case of an emergency, our troops can be put in motion and concentrated against the enemy. This fact is important, in proving the skill and energy of our officers and troops, and in urging the necessity of constant vigilance:

"Gen. Worth forwarded the information to Gen. Worth, who broke up his encampment and started forward, by forced marches, to his relief. Gen. Butler moved forward, in like manner, from Monterey, with his whole force; and so pressing was the danger considered, that the large depot of stores and provisions at Camargo were left with but a slight protection, and all the available force there was also sent forward. But the most unfortunate result was..."
with the army under Gen. Taylor. He had advanced seventy miles on the route to Victoria, and had retraced his steps, with all his troops back to Monterey, on his way to Saltillo. He would, however, again move forward twenty days, and destroyed the combination of his movements with other detachments that were ordered up to Victoria, particularly that under Gen. Patterson, from Matamoras.”

Some of the accounts state, that it was reported at Saltillo that Santa Anna was making every exertion to bring about tan adjustment of the difficulties between the two countries—and, moreover, that the Mexican Congress had accepted our overtune of peace, and had agreed to send us an agent to negotiate. We put no confidence in the latter—but we have always been of opinion that Santa Anna was at heart favorable to peace, and would, if possible, bring over the Mexican people to the same sentiments. His “brave words” may sound otherwise—but his acts certainly do not show him to be an uncompromising enemy of pacific negotiations.

The Union of Wednesday night, though not furnished with the news received by us yesterday morning, does not attach much consequence to the “alarming rumors” which had excited so much anxiety. It quotes a letter from an officer at Brazos Santiago, on the 28th December, which expresses the opinion that “a sufficient force was, doubtless, collected at Saltillo to meet the emergency; and if Santa Anna’s movement was anything more than a fiend, he has unquestionably been repulsed.”

The Union says:

“A letter from Major General Scott, now commanding all the land forces in Mexico, dated December 28, from Brazos Santiago, states that he should leave the next day via Matamoras and Camargo, in search of official news, by which he should be governed accordingly. Referring to the reports of the movement of the enemy, he states that, in the meantime, events may take him to Monterey; and that, “if Santa Anna be on the offensive, he must be repulsed,” &c.

“One of the letters we have seen from the Rio Grande of so recent date as December 28, (the latest,) expressly states: "We are here without accurate information, and the General-in-chief, now commanding all the forces in Mexico, has determined to move rapidly forward, with the view of ascertaining facts upon which he can rely. We should have been off to-day, but for the difficulty of landing our saddle horses form the steamer yesterday.”

The Union also publishes an interesting letter from Gen. Taylor at Monterey, Dec. 8, giving a sketch of the position of his forces. We shall publish it hereafter. He had no apprehension of the movements of Santa Anna.

We repeat that there is now no danger of a fight at Saltillo. Santa Anna is either anxious for peace, or he is too cunning and prudent to risk a battle with the American army. Some accounts state that his force at San Luis has been much exaggerated—it not exceeding 10,000, with daily desertions.

HONORS TO THE DEAD

The mortal remains of the following brave and lamented officers and soldiers were brought to the city of New Orleans, on the 6th inst., by the steamship Alabama, from the Brazos Santiago Lieut. Col. Watson, Lieut. Raham, Herman Thomas, George W. Pearson, Capt. G Gillespie of the Texas Rangers and Capt. Holmes of the Georgia Regiment. On the arrival of the steamship guns were fired from the Place d’Armes and Lafayette Square during the day and the flags in public places worn at half mast.—Meetings of the Common Council of the city and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, (of which some of the officers were prominent members) were held, and resolutions adopted appointing a committee of seven to take charge of the bodies of the dead, to convey them to the Municipal Hall, there to remain till the 8th, when a grand military and civic procession was to be formed for the purpose of conveying them on board the steamboat Declaration. The remains are to be conveyed to the city of Baltimore and may be expected to pass through this city in a day or so. Will not the citizens of Richmond unite in paying a proper tribute of respect to these gallant soldiers who fell in defence of their country?

By a recent order, Gen. Butlers command extends to all the posts from Monterey to Camargo, and from thence o the mouth of the Rio Grande. Lieutenant Colonel Garland, of the third infantry, is to be Governor of Monterey.

In less than two hours after the receipt at Camargo of the news of Santa Anna’s rumored attack upon Saltillo, Brigadier General Lane’s command (Indiana Regiment) was on the march; and in less than twelve hours he was followed by Brigadier General Marshall, with the Kentucky Cavalry and Captain Ker’s Company of United States Dragoons, intending to reach Monterey by forced marches. This is American energy and Spirit.
CAPT. W.B. ARCHER’S COMPANY.—Capt. Wm. B. Archer’s company of Volunteers were presented on Wednesday to the Governor. Mr. Tunstall, of Pittsylvania, made the presentation speech, and a very happy one it was. Gov. Smith responded in a style, the felicity and originality of which was to be admired when we consider how his store-house of patriotic figures has been drawn upon by the very numerous speeches of the kind it has been his task to make. Capt. Archer made a brief speech, pledging his men to the service, and promising that the flag which the State is to present to the Regiment, shall not be tarnished while there is a drop of blood in their veins.—Yesterday’s Times.

The Whig says this third company of volunteers organized in this city, (though many of its members came from other parts of the State,) has been organized, under the name of the “Marshall Guards,” by the appointment of Wm. B. Archer, of Richmond, as Captain; L. M. Shumaker, of Franklin, 1st Lieutenant; R.H. Keeling, of Richmond, 1st 2d Lieutenant; John M. Blakey, jr., of Richmond, 2d 2d Lieutenant. The non-commissioned officers are not yet appointed.

The New Orleans Picayune contains the Mexican account of the transaction at Los Angeles in California. Instead of 150 Americans seamen being massacred by the Indians and Mexicans under Gen. Flores, it appears that not one was killed—but that 27 were made prisoners under capitulation, and 3 were wounded; one Mexican was killed. The capitulation allowed the Americans to go on board their ships, with their arms and private property. The Mexican account stated that 300 men were afterwards landed from their ships, and took possession of the town, of what they intended to retain permanent possession—This is the Mexican version of the affair, as the Picayune observes.

STILL LATER

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. 3.

By the arrival at a late hour last night of the U.S. steamer Edith, Capt. Couillard, we have three days’ later dates from Brazos Santiago. She left Brazos on the 30th ult and brings confirmation of the reported advance of Santa Anna with a large force upon Saltillo. It was reported that the Mexican army was nearly 30,000 strong.

When Gen. Worth’s express reached Monterey, General Taylor had only gone six or eight miles on his march to Victoria, and the troops under Generals Twiggs and Quitman were but 12 miles in advance. Orders were immediately issued to this division to retrace its steps and proceed to Saltillo.

Gen. Butler, who was left in command of Monterey, had already marched with all the troops he could collect to join Gen. Worth at Saltillo.

Before the express reached Camargo Gen. Lane had started from Saltillo with his command- this was the 20th-Gen. Marshall set out next morning, taking with him the remainder of the forces, with the exception of Capts. Hunter and Swartwout’s commands which were left to protect that point. The troops from Camargo were on a forced march, to reach Saltillo in time for a battle, reports having prevailed for several days before positive advices were received of the movements of Santa Anna.

Gen. Wool was ninety miles from Saltillo at the last advices from him, and it was supposed he would join Gen. Worth at Saltillo.

There was a rumor that Santa Anna had thrown a body 17,000 men between Gen. Worth and Gen. Taylor, to prevent a junction of the American forces. This report was not credited, nor does it seem probable that it is true, as the main road to Monterey passes through Saltillo. There is a circuitous mountain road which avoids Saltillo, but it is not favorable to the march of an army, and is impracticable for ordnance.

It was the impression of gentlemen who came passengers in the Edith, and with whom we have conversed, that a battle was fought about the 25 ult. It was thought, however, that Gen. Taylor had reached Saltillo before that time, and also Gen. Twigg’s, Gen. Quitman’s, Gen. Butler’s and Gen. Wool’s commands. It was likewise hoped that the troops from Camargo would also arrive at Saltillo in good season. If these expectations were realized, Gen. Taylor had about 7000 men to oppose Santa Anna. Our informants think Santa Anna’s army was overrated; but no positive knowledge was had of his exact numbers.

The whole valley of the Rio Grande was in a state of great ferment. Apprehensions of an attack were entertained at Camargo, Matamoros and other points, from the rancheros under Canales. The withdrawal of so many troops from the river left the valley exposed to danger. At Matamoros, Col. Clark had called upon the citizens to enroll themselves for service, and at the Brazos Gen. Jessup had done the same thing. Both these points were sadly deficient in both men and arms. It was thought Canales had 2000 men under him, and that the large supply of goods at Matamoros, and the exposed condition of that city, might quicken his courage.

Gen. Scott arrived at the Brazos in the 28th ult. The following day he preceded to the mouth of the Rio Grande and was yet at the point when the Edith left, waiting the arrival of the horses belonging to the regiment of mounted riflemen, when it was understood he would proceed immediately up the river to Camargo.

Capt. Wayne has been transferred from the staff of Maj. Gen. Jessup to that of Gen. Scott, and was to accompany him on his tour of observation.

The news leaves a painful anxiety to learn the progress of events. The impression amongst the passengers that a battle had been fought was so strong that we have almost imbibed the belief.

Correspondence of the N.O. Picayune

Tampico, Dec. 23, 1846

Gentlemen—The unexpected detention of the packet till this late hour, enables me to give the following important information, just received by me from a reliable source. The information is contained in a letter to a commercial house here, and is dated Mexico the 16th inst.

The substance of it is, that the Mexican Congress have decided that the war shall not cease, nor will they receive commissioners to treat for peace until every hostile foot has left the soil of Mexico and every ship that lines the coast is withdrawn. They have further resolved that they will accept of no foreign intervention whatever to bring about a peace.

The letter further states that the $500,000 loan guarantied by the clergy is exhausted, and no new loan is yet authorized, nor does the writer know where it is to come from.

This action on the part of Mexico will at once determine the public action of our Government, and we may now look out for a protracted and perhaps bloody war. I predict it will end in the conquest of all Mexico north of the base of this city—the line extending west to the Pacific—and that this will become an American town. If so, this will be a great place for business, and a safe one for investments in property. The resources of the country north of this are inexhaustible.—When more at leisure I will refer to what these resources are.

Yours, very truly, &c.

We yesterday conversed with a gentleman from Tampico: he left there on the 27th ult. A letter dated the 8th ult., at San Juan de Arosa, had been received by a merchant in Tampico—The writer, who was his partner in business, informed him that Santa Anna’s force at San Luis de Potosi was then 37,000. On the 10th, two days subsequently, 7,000 of them—cavalry—under the command of Col. Gonzales, were to leave—for the direction of Victoria, it was supposed. If the contemplated attack on Saltillo, by Gen. Santa Anna, should be successful, then an attack would be made on Tampico by Col. Gonzales. The bitter hostility of the whole people of the country is now aroused against our army, and they pant for an opportunity to carry it into execution. It is one which we hope will soon be given them.—

Correspondence of N.O. Delta
U.S. Army of Invasion, MONTEREY,

December 11, 1846.

Gentlemen: It is now near the middle of December and still we have nothing in the shape of weather to indicate that the year is passing away; ad should some Rip Van Winkle of a fellow walkup here now, he would be looking for Mayday rather than Christmas, so April-like does everything seem around. For mild and pleasant weather this place of Monterey is hard to beat.

A gentleman came in from Saltillo last night, having left on the morning of the 8th. The Mexican cavalry, of whom mention was made in a previous letter, as advancing, had reached the Salado, within about fifty leagues of Saltillo. Their numbers were reckoned at full five thousand, under the command of Gen. Gonzales, and a fair proportion of them rancheros. There had arisen some doubts at Saltillo as to their intentions, and many speculations were advanced. Some were of opinion that in their orders to reconnoiter the country, in anticipation of our advance, they were instructed to proceed as far as the Salado, and no further. Others seem to think it is grass, and not he Americans, they are after, as the banks of the above named stream are said to afford excellent grazing. A third party, however, attach more importance to the movement, and express the opinion that their destination is Saltillo, and their object that the dislodgement of Gen. Worth. Some of the principal Mexican families in that place are of a like belief, and have hinted to the General the propriety of taking an advantageous position beyond the city. Gen. Wroth is perfectly easy in the meantime, and, whilst every precaution is taken against surprise, sleeps well.

Something later form San Luis Potosi—per Mexicans—8,00 men had left that place for Victoria, without artillery or wagons, and would be enabled to reach I in a short time, by going over a light chain of mountains.

In looking at the Mexican army as it was in San Luis a short time since—over 30,000 strong—the question arise, what is to be done with these men? How can a government, without money or credit, sustain them in the field for any length of time?—30,000 mouths are difficult to feed, at all times, by countries whose resources are boundless in comparison to those of Mexico; and for her to make any advantageous move, she must do it quickly, else even the magic name of Santa Nana will fail to keep discord from their ranks. It is out of the question to keep so large a body of men, and the number daily increasing, at or even near one point; and either a forward or retrograde movement must be made in a very few days. As I said before, if, with overpowering numbers, the General thinks he can successfully assail some weak post in our extended line, he will do it; but if no such opportunity presents itself, it is a difficult task even to conjure up a movement for him, unless a man would recklessly say, that he'd countermarch his troops to the capital of his own country, and then assume and maintain himself in dictatorial power. If it be true that troops have left San Luis for Victoria, I cannot believe they will fight Taylor there, nor do I for a moment suppose that gen. T. anticipates such a thing himself. There is one thing that I am well convinced of in these speculative times: unless the Mexicans open the ball, there will be no dancing to the music of cannon for several months to come, unless it be on the seaboard.

[MLD]
being within four days march of Saltillo, is probably incorrect—for his battering train of heavy artillery, without which he certainly would not attack Saltillo, would embarrass and retard his march.

The Picayune has no doubt that advices have been received from General Worth, announcing the march of a large Mexican force towards Saltillo. Its correspondent doubts the practicability of General Wool forming a junction with General Worth. The Picayune says:

"It would seem good strategy on the part of the enemy to throw a large force between Saltillo and Parras, make a diversion with a portion of the troops against Gen. Worth, while the main body of the army falls upon Gen. Wool. Apprehensions that such may have been the case are discernible in our correspondence. If Santa Anna had any of the spirit and capacity of the great military commander to whom he vaingloriously likens himself, he would have done some such thing long before this. Here is the letter:

CAMARGO, Mexico, Dec. 19-12 at night.

By an express last night from Gen. Worth, which arrived at half-past, 1 o'clock, we learn that Santa Anna is advancing upon Saltillo and Monterey, as is said, with 30,000 men; and all the available force from this place and vicinity is ordered up to those points with the least possible delay. At the same time a requisition has been received for a large supply of ammunition to be forwarded immediately. The express form Saltillo arrived at Monterey on the evening of the 21st. Gen. Worth, en route to Monte Morales, on his way to Victoria. He had probably made thirty miles from Monterey with his army, intended for the occupation of Victoria, but this intelligence will do but cause a counter movement to sustain Monterey and Saltillo.

I do not speak certain, but think Gen. Taylor can meet Santa Anna with 6,000, and not more, as a portion of his force, under Generals Patterson and Pillow has been withdrawn from here to hold Tampico. I know nothing of the defences at Saltillo, but Worth is there, and what any man can do, he can and will.

It strikes me that if Santa Anna has the force which is reported, that it would not be policy to bring on a decisive action now at Monterey, but by surrounding the place, cutting off supplies and communications, and detaching a portion of his force to attack the depots and connecting links with the Gulf—which must be left weak by the draining off supports for Monterey and Saltillo—that such would be his best chances for success.—This depot, for instance, which is the one from which the army draws its supplies, is without defences, and I am told is to be left with one company of artillery, one company of dragoons (not mounted,) and one regiment of Indiana volunteers; and there are "sinews of war" enough here to make "the game worth the candle."

From last reports Gen. Wool had not yet formed a junction with Gen. Worth; and it is thought by some problematical whether he would be able to form one, in consequence of the advance of the enemy placing themselves in a position between these two forces. I am not advised of the route these two forces. I am not advised of the route Gen. Wool's column will take from Parras, and therefore can give no opinion as to the accuracy of his reasoning; but one thing is certain—we are on the eve of important events, and I think by the next arrival I shall chronicle to you matters of stirring interest. We will see what we will see.

Yours truly, &c.

On the contrary the Union contains a letter from Gen. Jessup, dated Brazos San Jago, December 25th, which considers the story of Santa Anna's march upon Worth as "mere gossip;" thinking that Santa Anna would hardly follow Gen. Worth, with Gen. Wool on his flank.

Upon the whole review of the subject, we feel satisfied that the first mail from the South may bring us news of some stirring events in the neighborhood of Saltillo. Many think that the movement of Santa Anna will be a false one, and as great a failure as his disastrous assault upon Gen. Houston at San Jacinto in 1836. For ourselves, we feel no fears for the success of our arms, should Santa Anna be so bold as to come within the range of Gen. Worth's guns. If he (Santa Anna) be beaten now, he will be forced to retreat most ruinously across a desert and rough country. If so, we trust that Gen. Taylor will follow him up, and make the victory a decisive one.

A Captain of the U.S. Army, just from Camargo, passed through Richmond yesterday morning and informed a friend that he had no doubt of Santa Anna's approach; that Generals Taylor and Wool would certainly join Worth, and that the American force would amount to 10 or 12,000 men. He had no fear of defeat—his only apprehension was that the Mexican General would be too cautious to engage in a contest and thereby prevent a decisive blow from our arms. In the very worst aspect of affairs, this officer said, Gen. Worth could retreat safely and without loss.—While, then, we look for a victorious result, we await with anxiety the next intelligence.
the news received by way of Tampico, that the Mexican Congress had decreed not to listen to negotiation until all our forces and vessels were removed, was premature. According to these last accounts, it appears that up to the 11th December, the Mexican Congress had not acted upon our overtures of peace. Had they done so, it would in all probability have been known in the squadron or noted in the Mexican papers. Lieutenant Bowers states that he had heard nothing of it up to the 21st, when he had an interview with some English officers, who are usually well informed as to the course of events in the Mexico.

The Congress of Mexico was duly installed on the night of the 5th December. The prominent members of the important committees were Senores Rejon, (the lately dismissed Secretary of State, who has quarreled with Salas and Santa Anna,) Gomez Farias, (the leader of the pure Republicans, and the friend of Rejon,) Otero, (late proprietor of a liberal journal, conducted with ability, who was so grossly affronted by the French minister, Baron de Cyprey, in the theatre,) Ex-President Herrera, Godoy and Riva Palacio. Gomez Farias is the chairman of the committee on finance, and Herrera of that war and the navy. These names show that the liberal statesmen appear to be in the ascendant in the new Congress.

The Secretary of the Treasury has submitted a project for the conversion of the foreign debt.—Two important propositions have been introduced and referred to committees—the first declaring the constitution of 1824 in force, with suitable amendments—the second, for the appointments of a committee to embody the principles entertained by the Congress, and which will be the foundation of its action in the present war. This last is the only portion of the proceedings of Congress which touches upon the war.

On the 11th a committee of five, with power to increase it to seven, was appointed to act upon the Constitution—(Rejon was a member.) The following propositions were then offered for the consideration of Congress:

"That all the officers appointed by the General Government since the 4th of August, of whatever class, should be subjected to the approval of Congress, and those who should not receive the same should not be entitled to their pay hereafter.—That whatever person or community should, by act or deed, directly or indirectly, make an attempt against the existence or the freedom of the deliberations of the Congress, should be considered a traitor. That the Executive should contract a loan to provide the States with the arms necessary to repel foreign aggression; and finally, that collectors of the revenue should make no payments save upon orders sanctioned by certain prescribed forms."

There is an item of news, which we commend especially to those Whig journals and politicians that are in a habit of denouncing the war and their own Government. The Mexican papers copy freely from the journals in the United States opposed to the war, evidently with the view to create the belief that our country is rent by divisions on the subject of the war. Through the Havana papers the Mexicans are kept constantly well informed of what is done in the United States.

The Mexican papers seem to contain no denunciation of the "audacious north Americans" and the like stuff, which not long since filled their columns. This may indicate that they are more occupied with internal difficulties than with the war with us. The locomotor of the 14th appreheads an extraordinary attempt is intended by our navy, and puts the authorities of Vera Cruz and Alvarado on the qui vive.

From Chihuahua there is some later news: [MLD]

"A dispatch is published from Governor Angel Trias, dated the 20th of November, in which he announces that on the day previous, a body of 480 troops, part infantry and part cavalry, with four light pieces of artillery, left Chihuahua for El Paso del Norte under the command of Lieut. Col. Cuilty; with provision, &c. for one month. These forces were to join at El Paso 600 men, previously raised, and the whole were to proceed and make an attempt to surprise Gen. Kearney, who was then with a small force at Cobra, nearly two hundred miles north of that point. All classes of the citizens took part in celebrating the departure of these troops, and Governor Trias issued a proclamation on the occasion, for which we will endeavor to find room on another occasion." [MPR]

The late revolutionary attempt at Tobasco is highly ridiculed.

Commodore Perry had gone on an expedition to Laguna, and Com. Conner is said to contemplate another expedition against Alvarado, or at least a reconnaissance.

A letter of the 2nd December, form Anton Lizardo, from an officer of the Navy, gives intelligence which conflicts with other accounts, in regard to the position of Santa Anna:

"It is the prevalent opinion at Vera Cruz, as I learned from the English officers yesterday, that Santa Anna intended to march from his present quarters upon the Capital, and to strike for a dictatorship. In that case, it is supposed he will be sustained by the regulars and opposed by the militia, and that a battle will probably ensue between the two parties.

"If Santa Anna succeeds in becoming dominant, we have a guaranty of peace, as no administration in Mexico can support the burden of a war. He is much inclined to prefer diplomacy to fighting. I hope our Government will not relax its strong arm, nor permit itself to be cajoled by this wary diplomatist.
"We understand that the McLane and a gun boat are to Winter at Tobasco, and the Vixen and a gun boat at Laguna. This will keep all quiet in that quarter."

The gun-boat Union, taken at Tampico, was wrecked at Anton Lizardo, by running on the reef near Green Island. The officers and crew saved by the John Adams, which was near at hand.—The Mexicans sent off to the wreck and burnt her.

On the 13th, one of our frigates entered the harbor of Vera Cruz under a flag of truce, with a view to supply some of our shipwrecked sailors with money and clothing, and probably to attend to the ease of Passed Midshipman Rogers, captured in reconnaissance of a powder magazine at Vera Cruz, while he was in the undress uniform of his rank. He is now treated, as a prisoner of war instead of a spy. The officer in the boat with the flag of truce, found nobody to receive him, and had to find his way to the Palace in the best manner he could. This proves the negligence of the Mexican service on that situation.

A letter received by the Picayune from the army gives some interesting particulars. According to this account, Santa Anna had left for the Capital, and not for Saltillo:

"Taylor's light battery and Lieut. Kearney's company of the 1st Dragoons, had arrived at Saltillo. Kearney's company started out on a scout on the 13th December.

"The same letter, which is from a responsible source, says that a Mexican who arrived from San Luis on the 12th December, reported that Santa Anna had left that place for the capital.

"Our correspondent informs us that the sick list of Gen. Worth's division was very small.

"He adds that the early occupation for Saltillo has been a fortunate one for the army, so far as supplies were concerned. The quartermaster and commissary had laid in a sufficient supply of flour and corn to last Worth's division six months, and they were daily increasing the stock.

It will be seen that the House of Representatives have passed, 17 to 34, a bill to increase the army, for a limited time, by ten regiments of regular troops, to be disbanded at the end of the war. All the Virginia delegation voted for the bill. The opposition was made up of the Abolitionists that voted against the war bill last Spring, and other Northern Whigs.

Friday, January 15, 1847

The Union, referring to the threatening aspect of Mexican affairs, uses the following language, which all true Americans will approve:

Our own Congress must now support the stand which they took in May last. They can not hesitate to furnish the amplest supplies of men and money to prosecute the war with tremendous effect. The House of Representatives have this day passed the bill for raising ten regiments of regular troops. The Committee on Finance will, in the course of a day or tow, as we understand, report a bill for raising a loan of twenty-odd millions of dollars; and we will not for one moment permit ourselves to believe that they will not report an efficient bill for raising additional revenue to facilitate the loan. An American Congress will never refuse to lend the means of carrying on a war on which the rights and honor of their country so essentially depend. These means being provided, the Executive will be able to prosecute the war with the vigor which is necessary to "avenge the national wrongs" and to secure an honorable peace.

We have no idea that any member will seek to attach the proviso about slavery to any supply bill either for war, revenue or loans.

The following petitions were presented and referred to appropriate committees:

In regard to the election of Mr. Hunter to the U.S. Senate on Friday, yesterday's Times indulges in the following speculations:

"The Whigs have, in our judgment, acted not only with a proper regard to representative duty in falling upon the least objectionable of the candidates of the opposite party, but also with a politic wisdom which, in regard to their own interests, they will never have reason to regret. It is with us a sufficient proof of the propriety of their course, that we know the administration at Washington to be bitterly opposed to the election of Mr. Hunter. His success is no concession of the Whig party to his peculiar views on most of the questions of the day. They have elected him believing that in the high station of Senator, he will be a CONSERVATIVE; that he will not be the passive instrument of the Executive will and that, especially in all questions arising out of the Mexican war, which the administration seeks to make a party issue, he will oppose all such politico military measures as the appointment of a Lieutenant General, against which he has already voted."

We are not sufficiently acquainted with the secrets of the Democratic administration at Washington, as this Whig paper professes to be, to employ the strong words "we know," but we feel perfectly satisfied that the Times is grossly mistaken, when it declares that the administration is "bitterly opposed to the election of Mr. Hunter." The same slang was circulated by the Whig letter-writers, who gratuitously asserted that Secretary Mason had taken an active part against Mr. Hunter's election, and that the editor of the Union had paid a visit to Virginia, with an especial view to the election of another distinguished Virginian. At that time the whole affair was exposed as a silly fable—and we have no doubt that the present story is made up of the same flimsy material. Admit Mr. Hunter to be opposed to the appointment of a Lieutenant General; that question will be decided at this session, when Mr. H. will retain his seat in the lower house, and when Mr. Pennybacker's successor may be called upon to vote upon the question.

If Mr. H differs with the Administration upon that single point, does he not fully coincide with it upon the great questions of a Sub-Treasury and a Revenue Tariff, to which the Whigs are so "bitterly" hostile? Will he not stand by the Administration in taxing the office list to raise money for the prosecution of the war to a peaceful termination? In regard to the "politic wisdom" shown by the Whigs "in regard to their own interests, the times hugs an empty phantom to its bosom. The Whig party, as we said on Saturday, may expect no "aid and comfort" from Mr. Hunter. He is too thoroughly indoctrinated in the cherished principles of Virginia, to lend the least countenance to the Whigs, who on every occasion, "in season and out of season," ridicule and contemn those principles as miserable "astractions."

We regret that, from sinister circumstances, Mr. Hunter does not go to the senate, basked by the vote of the whole Democratic party of the Legislature—but we have no fear that he will not prove true to the great principles of that party.—What the Whigs hope to gain by his election, we are unable to divine. Their course, on Friday, may be a specimen of "political wisdom," which we will not inquire into. But it cannot be denied, that it was in direct contravention to the advice of the leading Whig presses in the State, the Richmond Whig and the Petersburg Intelligencer; and, if rumor does not err, of some of the most prominent Whig politicians. The Editor of the Intelligencer, the delegate from Petersburg, declared on the floor, on Friday, that he would vote for no Democrat, but would stand by Mr. Archer to the last, which he and some nine others did. He boldly portrayed (not the "politic wisdom," but) the folly of the Whigs rallying and electing any Democrat—and said, that the services rendered to the Democratic party by Mr. Hunter gave conclusive evidence that the Whigs could gain nothing by the election of him or any other Democrat. There is, then, much diversity of opinion among the Whig leaders themselves, as to the "politic wisdom" of the course of tier party on Friday. If they hope to gain any thing other cause, arrayed as they are against Virginia's cherished principles, they are at liberty to "make the most of it." In our opinion, by electing Mr. Hunter, they have "caught a Tartar."—they have put in the Senate a man who is an uncompromising opponent to their darling “Protection” and National Bank. Let them rejoice, then, if they can, over the extraordinary “politic wisdom” displayed by them.

LATER FROM MEXICO

The Union furnishes the following additional details by the steamer Mississippi. The chance of peace seems desperate, indeed. Is not this a sufficiently powerful argument for Congress to cease its squabbling over irrelevant and mischievous subjects, and set to work promptly and vigorously to adopt all efficient measures to bring the war to a speedy close? Will the people sustain their representatives, if they do not at once adopt means to strengthen the credit of the Government, and furnish men and money to make short work of this war? We hope to see the most vigorous steps taken at once. Delay is ruinous. Let Vera Cruz be attacked, and the road to the city of Mexico secured. The Capital must be stormed, and the misguided rulers and people of Mexico be made to feel the full force of American arms. By this course alone, we are satisfied, can we hope for peace:

“We learn (says the Union) from a gentleman who has recently arrived in this city from Havana in the steamer Mississippi, that the British mail steamer had reached that port a few days before the Mississippi left. Santa Anna has been elected President of the Mexican republic. His majority is said to have been small—only one or two votes.

“He reports that the first business transacted by the Mexican Congress was to lay on the table the American overture for peace. They then passed a resolution declaring their determination to prosecute the war to he last extremities—in the words of our informant, to make it a war to the hilt. An act was also passed to raise half a million of dollars a month, as required by the Executive estimates for the support of the army—though how the money was to be raised does not yet appear.

“There is little doubt, we think, that in the capital and its vicinity a very exasperated state of feeling prevails among the Mexican population. In the remoter provinces all accounts would indicate that there is greater apathy.

“In the address of gen. Salas at the opening of the Congress on the 6th of December, he refers to the proceedings of Santa Anna at San Luis Potosi, where, in a few weeks, he says he had assembled and organized an army of more than 22,000 men, a part of whom had already advanced to meet the enemy, so that the armies of the two nations would soon encounter each other; but whatever the result may be he says, “never shall there be a final or decisive action.” He states the reasons why he had refused to listen to any overtures of peace; he says that the war is not one of an ordinary character; that it is a war of races; that the causes of it exist in the nature of things; and that the invasion would have occurred as well under the auspices of peace as during war. The president of the congress, in his reply, does not allude directly to the war, but says “Mexico shall not be less than France, who was able to conquer principles and establish a constitution at he very time when she was invaded by the legions of all Europe.”

“The vice president Gomez Farias, took the oath of office before Congress, on the 24th of December, and delivered an address, in the course of which he says, “the war which the republic finds itself compelled to sustain against the north American republic, shall be prosecuted with courage and constancy, until the justice of our cause is acknowledged and our territory evacuated.”

“On the second day of the session of the Congress, the secretary of the Treasury (Almonte) presented an exhibit of the lamentable state of the treasury, to which the president replied, that the Congress would provide the means "to enable the executive to carry on a war in which the dignity and honor of the nation are concerned.”

We have received from messrs. Drinker & Morris a Map of Mexico, Texas, and part of the United States, including California: It is in a neat and compact form, and is published by S. C. Hayes, of Philadelphia, formerly of this city. We have derived much aid from this little map, in perusing Mr. Dix’s able speech on the appointment of a Lieutenant General. It is proper that we should state here, that, on Friday, the bill creating the office was laid on the table by a vote of 28 to 21. The ayes and noes will be seen under the Congressional head.

To the Editors of the Enquirer:

Messrs. Editors: It is generally understood, that for the field appointments in our volunteer regiment there were more than fifty applicants, most of them men of the highest character. A very natural and a very common desire is entertained and expressed to know who they are; and I write these hasty lines to suggest to you to obtain from the office of the Adjutant General (where I am sure it would be cheerfully furnished) a list of their names, in the order in which they were filed, for publication in your paper. It would gratify to some extent a very pardonable ferocity in the public mind, and could not be objected to by gentlemen whose applications, in themselves honorable to them, have been overlooked in the preferment of three others thoroughly trained in scientific instruction and fully tried in all the stern realities of the camp, the march and the 'foughten field.'

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

January 12, 1847, QUAESTOR.

We would cheerfully comply with the wishes of our correspondent—but, at present, are unable to do so. The records are not open to the public eye—and on Saturday the House of Delegates rejected Mr. McPherson’s resolution calling on the Governor for full information on the subject. A similar proposition may yet be adopted and the information be brought out.—Editors

The Governor responded in handsome and eloquent terms:
I receive this contribution to the regiment called for from Virginia with more than ordinary pleasure, for I perceive that it is not only equal in its ranks are full to overflowing. Nor is this all. No company has yet been presented as rich in associations.

The gentleman who has been selected to present the Company is one through whose veins, it is said, courses the blood of a former princess of the land and the savior of our infant settlements at Jamestown. As he has eloquently remarked, this company comes from a country that bears the glorious name of Montgomery—a name that cannot be repeated on such occasions as this without a thrill of pleasure. This county is also distinguished as the residence, if not the death bed, of a former Governor of Virginia, many of whose traits of character I have loved, respected and admired. The commander of this gallant company, too, is the chivalric son of another gallant Governor of Virginia, who, in the war of 1812, won for himself a soldier's name and country's gratitude. These various recollections do touch the proudest sensibilities of our nature and excite some of our finest and noblest feelings. It is known, too, that many of them are the sons of gallant fathers, who, in the war of 1812, testified their devotion to their country by sacrificing their lives, not upon the battle field but under the influence of the climate of lower Virginia, so fatal to the health of those raised in our mountain county. I advert to these various interesting subjects for the purpose of manifesting my high appreciating of the gallant company now before me, and because I am satisfied that these reminiscences can but have a happy effect in nerving their hearts and strengthening their arms in those glorious fields to which they are destined. In a few brief days, soldiers, you will be on the "trackless ocean's wave!" You will carry with you the hopes, the affections, and the pride of Virginia. As you approach the coast of Mexico, the first sight which strikes your eye will be the lofty peaks of her own blue hills and mountains. The sight will awaken a thousand recollections of home, for they will appear like those glorious summits you have left behind you. Home, sweet home, with all her thousand endearing associations, will cluster about the heart with an almost suffocating effect, and the tear, unbidden, but not unmanly, will course down many a hero's cheek.—Soldiers! Check not that tear, it a tribute to wife, children and friends; it marks a memory to our own our dear native land, that may melt, but will not unman you. Nor is it a weakness of which you need be ashamed. The bravest heart is the repository of he gentilest affection. In this soft and melting mood, however, hope will gild the future with triumph, and you will contemplate with pride, pleasure and termination, your return to your native hills, covered with a wreath that will entwine the gallant soldier's brow, and followed with the shouts and exultation of a grateful and admiring country. This is a reward that you must look forward to with eagerness, and which will reward you for a thousand toils—this is the hope that will cheer, animate and sustain you in many a weary toil and many a stricken field.

"Auspicious hope, in this sweet garden grow Wreathe for each toil, a charm for every woe."

And now, soldiers, I have for the present to bid you a cordial farewell. We may meet again before you leave our shores; but if not, you carry with you my best wishes—for my anxious hopes for your safe and glorious return after having established your own claim to the gratitude of your country, elevated the fame and name of our own beloved mother, and proudly vindicated the rights and honor of our common country. Friends, brothers, Virginians, may God prosper and bless you.

FROM THE U.S. CALIFORNIA EXPEDITION.

IMPORTANT FROM SOUTH AMERICA.—The brig engineer, Captain Elbridge G. Windsor, arrived here last evening from Rio Janeiro, whence she sailed on the 26th November. All the vessels of the California expedition under Col. Stevenson, had arrived safe at Rio, viz: U. S. transport ships Susan Drew, Loo Choo, and Thomas H. Perkins, with the U.S. ship of war Preble. The offices and men were all in good health. Every thing was quiet on board the vessels, and the troops in excellent discipline. The expedition would sail in a few days for its destination. By this arrival we have the particulars of an unfortunate misunderstanding between the U.S. minister at Rio and the Brazilian Government, which threatens to disturb our amicable relations with that power. The difficulty originated in the arrest of two men from the U.S. Columbia, who were on shore while the vessel was at anchor in the harbor of Rio. The men got intoxicated, and while proceeding through the streets to go on board, were placed under arrest and conveyed to prison. Lieut. Davis, of the Columbus, was on shore with the men; being at some distance at the time of their arrest, he followed, calling on them to accompany him.—before he got up, they were taken into the fort.—On arriving at the fort, he drew his sword in evidence of his authority as an officer of the United States, and demanded their release.

The guards then beckoned to him to come in, and supposing them desirous of having an interview with him in relation to the men, he did so, but immediately found himself and his men prisoners. Mr. Wise, the United States Minister, being apprised of the occurrence by Commodore Rosseau, of the Columbia, opened a correspondence with the Brazilian government, demanding their release. The reply being deemed unsatisfactory, was answered by another communication from the Minister, informing them that the Columbia would open her batteries upon the city in two hours, if Lieutenant Davis and the men were not released within that time. The Lieutenant was promptly released, but the men were detained under a plea that being found intoxicated in the street they were amenable to punishment by the civil authorities. Farther correspondence ensured, the men still remaining in custody. A day or two after this occurrence, the Emperor’s youngest child, the infanta Isabella, was christened, the ceremony being honored by salutes from vessels of war, and the illumination of the dwellings of the foreign ministers. The fete lasted a whole week. But Commodore Rosseau and Mr. Wise declined to join in any ceremonies of this character, until full reparation had been made for the insult offered to their country. The authorities requested the Commodore to fire a salute which he declined doing. Mr. Wise and other Americans did illuminate their dwellings, and have consequently been subjected to repeated insults. The subject was taken up in the National Parliament, then in session. The House of Commons passed a bill requesting the withdrawal of Mr. Wise, but the upper House rejected it, and the Commons tendered their resignation in a body. Thus the affair rested at last advices, the men being still in prison.

During the excitement at Rio, the California boys arrived and resolved to have an opposition, christening one of our Americans sovereigns, tow of whom were born on the passage. A splendid silver cup was provided as a present for the young volunteers, whome the Chaplin duly christened Alto California. Col. Stevenson stood Godfather on the occasion. All the officers of the ships and many of the American s were present. It was a splendid affair, and operated as a hint to he Brazilians, who were somewhat astonished at the American volunteers leaving their homes in such numbers to go half around the world. The volunteers were allowed full privileges on shore, but there had not been a single desertion. Col. Stevenson made a speech to them in relation to the difficulties, and every man expressed his readiness to joining in storming the city of Rio, if necessary to sustain the honor of their country's flag.

Captain James M. Turner, of the California volunteers, arrived last night in the Reindeer, as bearer of dispatches from the U.S. minister at Brazil, and will proceed this morning to Washington. The other passengers were Mrs. S.G. Steele, of Athens, N.Y., lady of Capt. G. Steele, of the Volunteers; Robert P. Noah, of N.Y., secretary to Col. Stephenson; and Lieut. George D. Brewster, of the Volunteers, from West Point.

War had not yet broken out between Brazil and the Argentine Republic, but was daily expected. Brazil had ordered a large force to the Argentine frontier.

THE NATIONAL FINANCES.

In Charleston Evening News we find the following excellent article. Its views are not only sound and unanswerable, but (and here we differ with the News) they, in our opinion, respond to the popular will. We cannot believe that he American people will refuse to bear a slight burthen upon their tea and coffee, and other free articles, when the country demands money to sustain its honor and secure peace. We yet hope to see Congress satisfied on this point, and cheerfully coming forward to support the recommendations of the Executive, so necessary to maintain the national credit, and bring about a successful termination of difficulties which all deplore:

"The Washington Union of Friday has an article in relation to the national finances marked by good sense and sound principle. It commences with the just discrimination between a war and a peace system of revenue. The Union then shows that the first objects of a just impost are untaxed articles for temporary war purposes, taxing luxuries highest. It commences with a duty on tea and coffee as one which the country can well sustain, and proceeds to state that in this category of taxation should be embraced all articles whatever, which pay no duty under the present tariff. It then contends for the propriety of imposing taxes on luxuries, first through an impost, and then if this form of taxation should not yield a sufficient revenue, an excise on all luxuries whatever.

"We believe that this order and succession of taxation contains the principles of a sound fiscal system. We think if immediately embodied in a scheme of Federal taxation, the public credit would be soon relieved, and a loan would be taken up with no difficulty. Between two and three millions of dollars, raised by an impost on tea and coffee, and an equal amount produced, by increased duties or an excise on luxuries, would be productive not only of the happiest consequences to the public credit, but we have reason to look on the adoption of such a system for the bet moral consequences on the character of the contest we are waging with Mexico. It is not considered, it appears to us, that a system of finance commensurate to the conjuncture of war, is an element of strength as important as the creation of armies, for nothing weakens, in a greater degree, a popular government whose deliberations, in a crisis of hostility, vacillate between sound principles of fiscal policy and a slavish obedience to the popular feeling."

VOLUNTEER MOVEMENTS IN WESTERN VIRGINIA.

A letter from Cabell C.H., of the 6th January, alludes to the formation of a volunteer company for Mexico. The Regiment was called together on the 4th inst., when fifty-three stepped forward and enrolled themselves as ready to march and fight in their country's cause. They were to start ton the 7th for Wayne C.H., where the Regiment was to meet on the 9th, hoping to make up the requisite number. Though this company will be formed too late to be accepted by the State, it shows that there are some gallant spirits in Cambell County. The citizens of the Court-house have subscribed $200 for their benefit, and Chas. Conner (So publically spirited a gentleman deserves to be

For the Enquirer.

The alacrity with which the Cadets of the Virginia Military Institute have responded to the call of the State for volunteers for the Mexican war, is worthy of all commendation, and presents a strong inducement to the Legislature to cherish an institution which has proved its ability to furnish military aid of the best description in time of need. As standing armies are opposed to the genius of our institutions, and frequent militia drills in time of peace would not be tolerated, there is no to her feasible method by which any available amount of military science can be imparted to the mass of our citizen soldiers, but through the medium of military schools. These offer at once the cheapest, and indeed the only practicable means by which so desirable an end can be even approximated, and the Virginia Military Institute affords a striking instance of what military schools may and will perform, it sustained by Legislative encouragement and patronage. But whilst I pay a well deserved tribute to the patriotic zeal and military acquirements of the Cadets, I cannot pass by the opportunity which the occasion offers, to render honor to whom honor is due, for the distinguished military reputation, which public opinion accords to the Lexington cadets. From the second year of the establishment of the Instituted up to this time, Capt. Thomas H. Williamson has been the professor of tactics, civil and military engineering, and drawing, and the sole instructor in the military department; and the public examinations, annually made at the Instituted, have afforded the most satisfactory evidence of the admirable manner in which the cadet have been drilled, and of the thorough manner in which they have been taught every thing properly appertaining to military service. For this they have been indebted to an instructor, who, I am confident, has no superior, if he has his equal, in the State of Virginia, as a military teacher. Capt. W. was educated at West Point, and has for many years since devoted himself assiduously to the duties of his profession and to the acquirement of military information, in which respect he will favorably compare with the most accomplished captains in our country. And, with the frank and open-hearted manners of the soldier, he possesses the suavity in mode of the perfect gentleman.—Hence, no teacher has ever obtained a larger share of the esteem and regard of their pupils, or has ever exercised a more commanding moral influence over those committed to their charge—and indispensable auxiliary to all good and effective discipline. As might have been anticipated, the military acquirements of the cadets, their gentlemanly bearing and chivalrous spirit, with a few unavoidable exceptions, have most conclusively illustrated the ability and the fidelity with which the military professor has discharged all his duties.

The Institute has done honor to the State, and no single individual has done more than Captain Williamson to exalt its military reputation and to infuse into the bosoms of its alumni the chivalry which they have so conspicuously displayed. In bestowing upon Capt. Williamson, however, this well merited eulogy, I desire no disparagement to the other distinguished professors who adorn the Institute, and whose several departments are ably and faithfully filled. It is only in reference to the military reputation of the Lexington school that I claim for Capt. Williamson the distinguished honor of being its chief architect; and I am persuaded, from what I know of the sentiments of the cadets upon this subject, that a large majority of them will most cordially assent to the justice of this claim, and rejoice to aid in establishing it.

A GALLANT VIRGINIAN

We have seen in the hands of a friend, and perused with interest, a description of the part enacted in the battle of Monterey by Lieut Col. Jno. Garland, brother of James Garland, Esq., of Lynchburg. Having under his command 641 bayonets, composed of the 3d Infantry, the Regiment of 1st Infantry and the Baltimore Battalion, he moved forward in line of battle, and soon encountered a direct fire from redoubt No. 1 and an enfilading fire from the citadel. Their pace having been quickened, they were soon brought with in the range of Mexican musketry. In a few moments they found themselves in narrow streets, where they received a most destructive fire from three directions. The infantry continued to press ahead, until the command was ordered to retire, which they did in good order, nor, however, without losing many men and some of the most valuable and accomplished officers of the army. —Here the gallant Major Lear was severely wounded; the high-toned Adjutant Lieutenant Irwin and the noble Barbour killed, and Capt. Williams, and Lieut. Terrett mortally wounded; Brevet Major Abercrombie was also wounded and thrown from his horse. Capt. Lamotte was badly wounded more than an hundred yards in advance of this point, and in the direction of the first redoubt, where Capt. Backus, with indomitable courage and perseverance, had succeeded with his company in gaining the roof of a stone building, and not hearing the order to retire, continued to pour a galling fire into the rear of the redoubt, until the volunteers of Gen. Quitman’s brigade rushed in, took it, and kept it.

In attempting to storm the second redoubt, Col. Garland with about one half of his command, encountered a tete depot, the strongest defence of the city, and from the opposite side of the bridge two pieces of artillery were brought to bear upon them, at a little more than a hundred yards distance. Here, took many brave officers and men fell victims to the killing fire of the Mexicans. The American troops, in their exposed situation, maintained their position against fearful odds, and, for their great personal courage, fully deserved the title of the Spartan Band.

Here, too, the brave Watson, the darling hero of Baltimore, fell covered with glory.

From all that we see and hear, we are satisfied that Lieut. Col. Garland, not only at the siege of Monterey, but in the two glorious battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palms, reaped rich honors for himself, but fully proved himself a worthy son of the Old Dominion. Does it not become the Legislature to take some steps to show their appreciation of the gallant deeds of our citizens? The brave Col. Payne, of Goochland, was severely wounded in the engagements on the Rio Grande, but has now returned to his duties on the field. Lieut. Col. Garland, another Virginian, fought bravely and successfully in the three great battles of the campaign, and, in our opinion, it would be eminently proper in our Legislature to pay a fitting compliment to their noble bearing. It is an act of simple justice to these gallant officers, and it would have a highly beneficial effect in cheering on the Virginia volunteers to acts of heroism and unflinching perseverance in their country's cause. Nothing is so well calculated to stimulate a soldier, as to feel that his meritorious acts will be appreciated and rewarded with praise by his native State.

The Kentucky Legislature have adopted resolutions for erecting a monument to the memory of the gallant Major Barbour, who was killed at Monterey. We extract the eloquent remarks of John W. Stevenson, Esq., formerly of this city, but now a member of the Kentucky legislature from the county of Kenton:

Mr. STEVENSON said, in rising to second the resolutions of his friend from Mason, he was not actuated by the expectation, or hope, that any thing he could say would obtain for the resolutions a more ready and cordial support, than the flattered himself they were destined to receive; but he had only risen to add his humble testimony to the truth of the beautiful and touching eulogium of his friend, on the distinguished subject of these resolutions. Mr. S. said, he had not been so fortunate as to have known Major Barbour, so long or so intimately as the gentleman from Mason; but his acquaintance had been long enough to impress him with a lasting admiration of his character, and a touching regard for his memory, which he should fondly cherish to the longest period of his life. Mr. S. said he turned with a melancholy pleasure to the lat time it had been his good fortune to have been with Major Barbour, and when he had parted with him for the last time upon earth. It had been under touching and peculiar circumstances.

Major Barbour had but a few weeks before, led to the bridal alter, one of Kentucky’s fairest daughters, and was then upon a visit to a gallant and devoted brother officer in the town of Newport. It was but a few days before his departure for Texas, and never can I forget the moment when as he shook my hand for the last time, surrounded as he was by bridal festivities and greetings of friends, with the true feelings of the soldier, he told me I should hear of him on the battlefields of Mexico!

Though but thirty three years of age, he had already attained unusual honors! Young as he was, he had been brilliantly successful. Three several brevets had been conferred upon him for this valor on the battlefield; and could he have but survived the bloody havoc of Monterey, a fourth no doubt would have been certainly awarded him. But there he was destined to fall—dying where he had lived, at the head of his regiment.

IT is peculiarly gratifying to me, (said Mr. S.) to witness this scene—to hear these resolutions read—to behold the interest here displayed—all serve as a practical refutation of that oft quoted saying, that “Republics are ungrateful.”

Sir, Kentucky never was or can be ungrateful to the memory of her sons! I wish to see this monument erected, that every citizen within her orders may point to it as he gazes upon it on yonder eminence, and say with priced, there sleeps the gallant and noble Barbour, who was a Kentuckian!

Sir, there is a moral lesion in all this, which we should not disregard! It is no idle and empty pageant! While it is a grateful memento to the gallant dead, it may serve as an impressive lesion to the living. It proves a powerful incentive to young men born in poverty, to be enabled to gaze upon his tomb, and be reminded that the munificence of our country still retains the same institution, where he was gratuitously educated, and where they can all go and follow his example.
But, Mr. Speaker, brave and dauntless as was the lamented Barbour on the field, that valor and gallantry was not excelled by his gentle, warm and affectionate devotion at the fire-side! To know him as my eloquent friend from Mason said, was indeed to love him.

If anything were wanting to prove all I have said—a y! Mr. Speaker, and much more than I choose to say, lest I may be deemed enthusiastic—I would point this House to his thinned and valiant regiment, (the gallant third infantry) and ask them to witness the sorrow and sadness which clouds every brown when they now hear the name of Philip Norbourne Barbour! He was emphatically their loved and cherished idol! Mr. Speaker—my heart is full—I will say no more—I have already said more than was necessary—I know too well Kentucky feeling—I know too well American feeling, to doubt that there is a member upon this floor, who does not feel proud at the opportunity of thus recording his vote for these resolutions! Well may Green River be proud of her son—and proudly may she point to his monument, and glory in the thought that he was born.

[MLD]
“We have seen a blind spirit of party rage urged on by Executive instigation, in a single session of Congress, leveling to the ground long established and well-tried systems of national policy, coeval with the Constitution, and identifies with the vital interests of the national prosperity. The Tariff of 1842, though proved by the best of all tests, its actual operation, to have been a highly salutary and benignant measure, was ruthlessly sacrificed to appease the spirit of party vengeance, because it was one of the measure of a whig Congress; and, on the other hand, the same fell spirit willfully restored to the statute book the odious Sub-Treasury, which had been most signally condemned and rejected by the deliberate sense of the nation, because a Whig Congress happened to be the instrument of executing the national judgment upon it.”

This is admirable! Mr. Rives, speaking the “public opinion” of Virginia, bewails the untimely late of the Tariff of 1842! The very Tariff against which he strenuously protested on its passage as more abominable in many respects than the “Bill of abominations,” the Tariff of 1828.—A connoisseur in antiquities would be glad to know the date—the era—of this same “public opinion.” Mr. Rives is now the Rip Van Winkle of politics. He stares round at the new world about him, calls out the old names, looks for the old signs, is quite bewildered by the new mottoes and the new voices, and, poor statesman! Thinks the Bank question is just where it was when he ratted from the party, and went to sleep his long political sleep among the mountains of Virginia!

One more extract form his letter, and we have done. See the naïve unconsciousness with which he rings forward, in relation to the Oregon controversy and to the Mexican war, the topics, which, having played their brief part of factious opposition, have now been fairly abandoned even by the remotest country portion of the Federal press. To Mr. Rives, however, these worn out vituperations seem to be quite fresh and new. He tells us about “the headlong and short-sighted counsels of the President, hurrying us into a war with England;” just as if such wretched slang had not now become obsolete. He deals with the advance of our army to the Rio Grande as if he were taking part with the federal opposition before it had become ashamed of that stale pretence, and then in ludicrous ignorance, or forgetfulness of the act of the 13th May, and of the events which have followed it, and of the overwhelming unanimity of popular opinion upon that subject, he prates about the war power being vested in Congress, and not in the executive! But we will spend no more words about this gentleman’s extraordinary political resuscitation.—Having no personal ill-will towards him, we hope hereafter that he will take for granted that the public are quire willing to let him enjoy his retirement, and not write absurd letters, to let the people know how unwilling he is that they should bring him forward into political life again. But if he must write, we hope that his retirement vilification of his country’s cause, and a factious abuse of an administration laboring to uphold that cause in a just and righteous war.

The following paragraph is a specimen of his whole letter:

“The same perverse spirit, in its heedlessness or its blindness, has been as ready to sport with the external peace, as with the domestic interests and prosperity of the nation. We were saved by the firmness and wisdom of the Senate form a destructive war with England, into which the headlong and short-sighted counsels of the President were fast burying us, only to be plunged by his unscrupulous assumption of power, against the plainest mandates of the constitution, into a bloody, expensive, unseemly and embarrassing war with the republic of Mexico. That the war with Mexico was brought on by the single act of the President in ordering the hostile advance of the army into a territory claimed by e Mexico, and of which she held and had continually held the actual jurisdiction, is a proposition too clearly established by incontrovertible facts to admit of discussion. He himself impliedly confesses it by the

For the Enquirer,

CAPTAINS IN THE VIRGINIA REGIMENT

The Editors of the Times and Compiler and of the Richmond Whig, seem greatly dissatisfied with the arrangement of rank made by the Governor and Council among the Captains of the Virginia Regiment of Volunteers; and a writer singing himself Justice is bold enough to insinuate, political preference may have influenced the determination. Before this unfounded insinuation was made, “Justice” had better have ascertained whether Governor Smith had not been aided much in the performance of the high duty by the counsel and advice of an estimable and distinguished Whigs as nay in the State. Both he and they, looking alone to the good of the service, and eschewing all party predilections, have acted under these influences.

The writer of this speaks now upon what he knows is the fact. When the rank was settled, the most of those placed high on the list, if indeed not all of them, were absent from Richmond, an it is believed none of them, either directly or indirectly, urged any priority from themselves. With the arrangement made, Captain Carrington’s friends seemed to be dissatisfied Will they be pleased to say, which of the Captains that rank above him are not as well qualified by education, military or civil, as he, to command? At present the objection is general, and it may be that those friends believe Capt. Carrington ought to rank above all the other Captains—a pretensions at which most men would laugh—and which I am sure the gallant Captain would not tolerate.

The article of the Times and Compiler of the 20th inst., and which is adopted by the Whig, is full of errors. Capt. Carrington did not raise and tender the first company for service under the call last Spring. He did not raise the first company under the call for volunteers in November, and it was some five or six days after two other companies had been mustered into the service of the United States before he had a sufficient number of men to enable him to be a so mustered into service. He may have been the first Captain elected, but the Captain did not have the requisite number to make up a company, and had not for some four or five days after Captains Archer and Scott’s companies had been mustered into service, one of these companies numbering then 91 and the other 88me. But, I pray, why is this matter to become one of angry discussion? The writer of this has heard some six or seven of the Captains declare, that they were content to take their rank, where the constituted authorities of the State placed them—that they would take no part in any strife but against the enemies of their country—that whether on the right or left of the regiment, they expected opportunities enough would be afford for all who cared to do so to gather honors and distinction in the service. Why, then, shall editors and newspaper essayists, unasked by any one, and no doubt against the wish of all, do what must have a tended, if not designed, to produce discord in the regiment, and to separate these gallant young men, who should be bound together, as a band of brothers, "by hooks of steel?"

AMICUS

RUMORS IN WASHINGTON

The Washington Fountain has the following paragraphs, which are all important if true:--

RECALL OF GENERAL TAYLOR.—It is confidently stated by those whose position gives times an opportunity of knowing what is going on in official quarters, that General Taylor has been recalled from the field of operations in Mexico, that he will retire on the arrival of General Scott at head quarters, and that he has been ordered to Washington, immediately on his return to the United States. They go so far as to predict his arrival here, by the middle of February, For our country’s sake, we hope that these givings out will prove untrue.

ULUA NOT TO BE ATTACKED.—It is rumored abroad, on the authority of Com. Perry, that the castle of Ulua is not to be attacked, for the reason that the Government has determined to "conquer a peace" without capturing that strong hold of the enemy. It is also stated that the gallant Commodore does not return to the Gulf. How true these rumors are, we do not to pretend to say.

ULTIMATUM OF MEXICO.—We learn that our Government is in possession of the ultimate conditions on which Mexico will consent to make a peace with the United States, and that it has determined to accede to them, if Congress will enable the Executive to meet the views of Mexico. It will be seen by reference to the epitome of the Congressional proceedings of yesterday, that he committees on Foreign Relations in both Houses, have already moved the appropriation of large sums of money to be placed at the disposition of the President in treating for peace with the enemy.

[MLD]
We notice that several of the letter-writers of the Army assert, that the base of the future operations of the army will be at Tampico, or at the highest navigable point on the Panuco. If they, like General Scott, had been "studying the Southern routes of Mexico," they would not have made an assertion so utterly absurd. The route from Tampico to the table lands of the interior is a mere bridle path, the wagons and artillery carriages cannot be transported by this route, unless they are taken to pieces and carried on the backs of pack mules. On the route to the Capitol before Monterey and Saltillo, there is an excellent wagon road, and all the baggage, artillery, and military stores of the army can be conveyed to the cit of Mexico by this route, as well as upon that of the great wagon roads of the Union. If Gen. Taylor could turn pack and commence a new plan of operations at Tampico, he would command a blunder that might require three months to repair. The main army can prosecute the campaign with ten fold effect by the great road on the table lands from Saltillo to Mexico, and then could be reinforced by detachments of the light troops by the tampico route, just at the point where the Mexicans can concentrate a large force from the populous district around San Luis Postosi, and consequently where reinforcements would be more needed.

General Orders, No. 2

WAR DEPARTMENT, Adjutant General’s Office, Washington, January 8, 1847.

1. The following act of Congress, changing the term of enlistment, and providing bounty for recruits, is published for the information and guidance of the offices of the Army:

"An Act to encourage enlistments in the Regular Army:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, during the continuance of the war with Mexico, the term of enlistment of the men to be recruited for the regiments of dragoons, artillery, infantry, and riflemen, of the present military establishment, shall be ‘during the war,’ or five years, at the option of the recruit, unless sooner discharged.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid to every able bodied man who shall be duly enlisted to serve in the artillery or infantry, for the term of five years or during the war, a bounty of twelve dollars; but the payment of six dollars of the said bounty shall be deferred until the recruit shall have joined for duty the regiment in which he is to serve."

II. The general superintendents of the recruiting service will give prompt and all necessary instructions to the recruiting officers, who will immediately publish this general order, with the table of established rates of pay agreeably to existing laws annexed, three times in two newspaper in the vicinity of their respective rendezvous.

III. The term of service will hereafter be, "during the war" with Mexico, or for five years, as the recruit may prefer. The blanks now in use will answer for five years men, by writing on the back of the enlistment, in due form, the required receipt for the advanced bounty; and they will also suffice for the new term until new blanks can be printed, by substituting the word "during war," in the hand writing of the recruiting officer, for the words "five years," as printed in the prescribe oath of allegiance.

IV. Company commanders will add two columns to the muster rolls, and muster and pay rolls now in use, to show the payments on account of "bounty." In the first column will be charged the advanced bounty paid to the soldier at the time of his enlistment; in the second thereafter joining for duty the regiment in which he is to serve. Recruiting officers will add similar columns to the blank muster rolls, muster and pay rolls, and muster and descriptive rolls, &c., respectively, furnished the recruiting service.

V. The term of service having been changed from five years to during the war with Mexico, and a bounty of twelve dollars allowed, it is expedient that the rank and file of the army will be filled in a short time, with due exertion and activity on the part of the recruiting officers who will explain fully to the recruit before he enlists the condition upon which he enters the service.

VI. Whenever recruiting stations prove unsuccessful, they must be abandoned and new one established; and if any officer fail to get recruited at more than one station, he shall be relied and ordered by the superintendent to join his regiment.
THE POLICY OF THE SOUTH

All patriots and lovers of the Union, based as it is upon compromises of sectional interests and feelings must deprecate the mischievous and reckless introduction, by leading Northern politicians, of the delicate question of slavery into the discussions upon the future disposition of Mexican territory acquired as an indemnity for the debts due by Mexico, and for the many gross outrages inflicted upon us. We had hoped that Congress would have promptly furnished men and money to prosecute the war to a satisfactory and pacific termination, leaving to a future period the terms upon which territory so acquired shall be admitted into the Union. Let us first fight the battled out; defeat, by a few decisive blows, the unaccountable insolence and infatuated obstinacy of Mexico, and, when we shall have acquired the territory, and effected a peace, we may deliberate among ourselves what course to pursue in disposing of said territory.

But the politicians of the North have willed it otherwise. At a moment when harmony and union in our national councils were so vital to the vigorous prosecution of the war and the elevation of the nation's credit; when money was called for to sustain our brave soldiers in the field, and more men needed, to reinforce our troops in Mexico, and sweep down the Mexican army; we see the firebrand of slavery thrust into the arena, and the torch of disunion flanted in the face of the South. We are glad to see the South united firmly on this question. It soars far above all other subjects—and, unless, the South be true to herself now, we may expect to see all her rights trampled in the dust. Let the South stand firm, and we cannot doubt that there will be found in Pennsylvania and in the West patriotic spirits sufficient to ward off the blow aimed at our rights and at the blessed Union. But let her falter in the least, and the most direful consequences may ensue.

These reflections are suggested by the course we see pursued by some few of the southern press. The free States threaten to dissolve the Union, if any more slave territory be added to the confederacy. In other words, if all future acquisitions of territory, whether by conquest or by purchase, be not surrendered up to the free laborers of the North and West will break up the Union. The South has ever shown a steady devotion to their Union. In peace she has borne heavy taxation to sustain the common Government, but more than that, to foster the peculiar interests of the North. In war, she has shed her best blood and poured out her rich treasures, to defend the honor and safety of the whole confederacy. For the sake of the Union, she made heavy concessions to the North, in consenting that all territory North of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes of latitude should be free from slavery. She is now asked to go further, to give up all her just and equitable rights in the partnership, and to yield to the grasping aims of the North, which demand that the South shall have no interest in the territory hereafter acquired—which is the common property both of the free and of the slave States—and that the North shall have all said territory, to be converted into a cordon of free States on our borders. Devoted as the south is to the Union, she cannot surrender all her power and will not yield to such dictation. It would be a weak and fatal policy in her to allow such usurpation and appropriation of a joint domain to the sole use of the free States. She is willing to accede to the line of the Missouri Compromise, which has been sanctioned by time and usage, and by the spirit of the whole country.—She cannot recede an inch farther, whatever be the consequences. In any event, her skirts will be free from blame.

But some of the southern papers say, why push on the war, if the Mexican territory acquired as an indemnity be admitted, through the action of the free States, as free territory, to the exclusion of Southern rights? Why not stop the war and withdraw our forces, and not add another inch of territory, to the exclusion of Southern rights? Why not stop the war and withdraw our forces, and not add another inch of territory? These very arguments are calculated to encourage the north in their grasping designs. It looks like an entire surrender at discretion of Southern rights to the anti-slavery prejudices of the North. It would, moreover, make our Government the laughing stock of the world, to be insulted and assailed by every nation who fear the progress of our free institutions and would combine to put us down.—It would be a dishonorable retreat from a position which we have boldly taken, and which we cannot abandon without injury and disgrace.—Our true policy is to finish the war, to secure sufficient territory as an indemnity for the wrongs done us by Mexico; and if then the North shall insist upon making the whole territory free, and force us to a separation, the South may yet receive for her won use an equitable share in the territory thus acquired by her own blood and treasure. May that day be far distant; but if we now ingloriously surrender the advantages obtained in Mexico, we apprehend that it will give new encouragement to the Northern fanatics and hasten the fatal moment.
The Legislature of this State convened on the 11th inst. The Senate was organized by Lieut. Gov. Trasimund Landry taking the Chair—and the House by the election of P.W. Farrar (Whig) Speaker; he having received 40 votes, and some of them Democratic, Mr. Phillips 30, and Mr. Molse 2. The last named gentlemen are Democrats.

Gov. Isaac Johnson sent in his annual message. It is a beautiful composition, full of patriotic views and wise suggestions. A large portion of it is devoted to the consideration of the Mexican war, the causes which produced it, and the noble part which Louisiana bore in furnishing troops for the field. We make an extract, to show how Louisiana regard this war which was forced upon us, but which the Whig press, in their blind party opposition, so falsely attribute to the President’s own creation:

"I regret that I cannot announce peace with Mexico: the war still continues: the causes which led to it, the long unbroken series of outrage, spoliation and indignity, to which our citizens and the national honor had been subjected by a government and people not sufficiently enlightened to place a just estimate on the obligations which a position among civilized and independent nations imposes, and too powerless to enforce an observance of them, even if the disposition to do so existed, the constant forbearance of our government which seemed only to invite a constant infliction of wrongs, the rejection of our peaceful overtures repeatedly offered, the refusal, on a flimsy pretext, to receive an Ambassador from us, who was sent out as a messenger of peace, with plenary powers to adjust all difficulties, and the actual invasion of our territory and attack upon the army of occupation, have been so clearly and fully set forth in the official communication of the President to Congress, that it would be in vain for me to attempt to add anything to so masterly and triumphant a vindication of the necessity of the war and the justice of our cause."

Governor J. sees in the brilliant successes of the United States army and the alacrity with which our people submit to sacrifices in vindicating the honor of their country, a guarantee of "those future triumphs which will secure us all that is desired—indemnity for past injuries and security against a repetition of them."

"The amount expended by the State in equipping and sending forward the six regiments which were dispatched to the Rio Grande last Spring, was, including interest, 263,950 dollars and 5 cents. This sum has been refunded by the General Government, wish the exception of a very small amount, which is yet suspended.

The sword voted to General Taylor by Louisiana, is ready to be delivered to him whenever he shall announce his pleasure to receive this valuable and richly earned present. Its blade bears the motto, "Bis vincil qui se vincit in Victoria"—an appropriate compliment to one who has displayed as much modesty in wearing honors as gallantry in achieving victories.

The Governor warmly appeals to the Legislature to comply with the injunction of the Constitution to establish a system of free schools throughout the State. The condition of the Treasury is exhibited in the following passage:

"The Treasurer’s Report will exhibit a general statement of the receipts and disbursements of the State Government during the last fiscal year, ending on the 31st of December, and shows a balance in the Treasury on that day of 391,785 dollars and 61 cents, which is an excess over the amount in the Treasury, at the end of the preceding fiscal year, of 166,785 dollars and 61. The State debt proper is 1,293,000 dollars a small portion of which falls due in June 1848, and may be provided for by this or the next Legislature. The report will expose the defects

"If the free States threaten to dissolve the Union, because not allowed to dictate terms, let them do so. Let them go out of the co-partnership, and welcome. But, in going, they will even then have to submit to an equitable division of the public domain. In either event, whether they stay in or go out, the South will not give up her fair share of the spoils of the vanquished. New Mexico and California are now, by the fortunes of war, American domain. They are, or are to be, permanent acquisitions. No body can seriously believe that he Anglo-Saxon race which has now planted its foot there will abandon them. The Southern States have contributed their proportion at least, to obtain them. There population will insist on the right of settling them, in common with their fellow citizens of other States, and will carry their institutions along with them. The Mexicans can never drive them out, even if inclined to do so. They will not allow their own country men to do it, who go there with no greater rights than themselves. It may in time become a matter of compromise, as to a fair division of the territory between the slave-holding and non-slaveholding States. But the South will not be bullied into an abandonment of the country by the threats of the free States. The South yielded more than she should have done in the Missouri compromise. She then went to the very extremity of concession. It was grave concession, that slavery should not under any circumstances extend North of a prescribed line; instead of that being left, as it should have been, to be governed by the option of the citizens of the soil."
and practical inconvenience of an act to provide for the appointment of the assessors for the State approved 1st June, 1846 which, together with the remedies suggested, I commend to your attention.”

The message concludes with a glowing and beautiful eulogy upon Alexander Barrow, the late United States Senator.

The Secretary Of War has informed the adjutant General of Massachusetts that it is highly important that the regiment from that State should be ready for embarkation by the 15th of this month, and instructions have been given to the proper officers to provide the necessary transports. The Secretary says the embarkation will not be delayed, should the regiment consist of not less than 8 companies. Instructions have also been given to muster into service the full complement of field and staff officers for the whole regiment.

In the N.O. Commercial Times we find the following items of news in regard to Yucatan, which seems to be in an anomalous position—afraid to break with either Mexico or the United States, and alternately holding out promises of adhesion to he one or the other, as its motives of interest suggest:

A Mexican schooner, bearing a flag of truce, arrived from Campeachy on the 24th. She brought the news of a declaration of the independence of that province from the central government, and claiming for her ports the privileges of neutrals, which it is believed Com. Conner refused, unless they hoisted the American flag. Merida and the country adjacent had refused to unite in the movement, and proposed to put it down by force of arms. The Campeachanos had marched upon Merida with a force of 2500 men, the Meridians having 4000. It was supposed by the captain of the flag of truce that a decisive battle was fought on the 21st ult., that being the latest date from the army, at which time they were within a few miles of each other. The flag of truce left Anton with the answer of Comm. Conner on the 27th.

The officers of the British fleet at Sacrificios, stated that they had heard from the city of Mexico that the Finance Committee in the Mexican Congress had reported that in order to carry on the war the Government would require $250,000 per month, and stated that the sum of $90,000 was all that could possibly be raised, which sum they depended upon the church for.

The health of the officers and crews of the squadron was very good.

MEXICO

A vessel has arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, but brought no later news than we have received by the Mississippi. The Picayune furnishes the following interesting intelligence in relation to the new Vice President, and to the Janus faced Administration of Mexico.

It is a remarkable feature of the news, and one which exhibits the vicissitudes of public life in Mexico in a striking phases, that Gomez Farias is Vice President under Santa Anna. Farias was once before Vice President during Santa Anna’s Presidency. His wily superior, knowing the hostility of Farias to the hierarchy, and desirous of improving the finances by a confiscation of the church property, set him to work to digest a plan and prepare the public mind for seizing upon the ecclesiastical estates. The effort failed utterly, and the Government, was about being made to feel the power of an interest it had alarmed, when Santa Anna deserted Gomez Farias, threw upon him the odium of the scheme, and escape himself from the storm he had helped to raise. Gomez Farias was banished the State and for a number of years resided in this city with his family, pinched by necessity and oppressed with care. Santa Anna in time was overthrown and banished by Paredes.—Farias, immediately upon the fall of he dictator, returned to Mexico, where he has ever since taken a conspicuous part in the political affairs of the country. Santa Anna, by a sudden revolution in public opinion, was recalled from banishment, and now these two politicians, as opposite as the poles in principles, and hating each other with a rancor that has been nurtured in disgrace, occupy the first and second offices in the Republic Farias is a reformer of the progressive party; his opinions are of the term, and as bitter against religious as political trammels. Santa Anna is just what his interest for the time being requires him to be. The close proximity of two such men does not augur well of the durability of the Government which they administer, nor of the suavity that may qualify their councils.
In so far as the election to office of two men occupying the extremes of political faction may interpret the public opinion of Mexico, I may indicate a fusion of all parties, a union of all cliques, sects, divisions and classes of the people in one great war party. Gomez Farias was, if anything, the most violent of all Mexican politicians against the dismemberment of Texas and he may have united with Santa Anna to set an example of the suppression of personal and political hatred in forming an alliance for the object of consolidating the strength of the state against a common enemy.

VISIT OF COL. HAMTRAMCK

We learn from the Petersburg Republican that Col. Hamtramck paid a visit to that town on Wednesday last. He was received at the railroad depot by a large procession of the civil and military, headed by a deputation from the Common Council. Col. Hamtramck was accompanied by Major. Gwynn, President of the James River and Kanawha Company, Messrs. Thompson (of Jefferson) and Syme of the House of Delegates.

The Colonel was presented by Mr. Syme, who in a few appropriate remarks introduced him to Thomas S. Gholson, and tendered him a cordial welcome to the civilities and hospitalities of the town. The Colonel made an eloquent and happy reply, and referred in terms of high eulogy to the former history and present position of the "Cockade Town." All who heard his address felt that he had the mind and the nerve to command the Virginia Regiment.

After assigning the Colonel and his aids their positions, they were escorted to the Bollingbrook, where they (with a few citizens) partook of an excellent dinner. A number of pleasant sentiments were drunk at dinner, which called forth eloquent addresses from Col. Hamtramck, Messrs. Thompson of Jefferson, Syme and others. Late in the afternoon the company adjourned to Capt. W.M. Robinson’s quarters, where his company was received by the Colonel, who expressed himself pleased with their appearance and condition. They were then conducted to the residence of Col. Geo. W. Bolling, who received them in a soldier-like style. At 9 o’clock, the guests, with a large company of both civil and military, sat down to a fine supper prepared at the Bollingbrook. During the evening addresses were called forth from Col. Hamtramck, Gen. Butts, Co. Swan, Col. Bolling, Maj. Rosser, Messrs. Thomson of Jefferson, Syme and others—and the evening passed off most agreeably; and when the hour of 12 arrived, all seemed to regret that the moment for sundering the ties so lately formed was so near.

On Thursday morning the guests were escorted to the depot by the military companies, and at half-past 8 o’clock took their departure for Richmond.

Friday, January 22, 1847 RE47v43n77p4c7 IMPORTANT IF TRUE

From the Washington Fountain.

We read in the La Patria of the 31st ult. a Spanish paper published in New Orleans, by Aleman & Gomez, the following extraordinary revelation of the new plan of operations in the war with Mexico:

"The government appears to confide much in Gen. Scott, who has just gone to the field of operations, and from whose diplomatic and military tactics, it hopes to gain great advantages. The plan of operations, we learn, is as follows:

General Taylor, instead of moving upon San Luis Potosi, will repair to Saltillo, where he will remain for a short period. Gen. Scott, after having made some arrangements on the Rio Grande, will hasten to Tampico, where he will assume the command of the 7000 volunteers recently called out and ordered to assemble at that point. From Tampico Gen. Scott will march towards Vera Cruz, and Gen. Taylor will make a simultaneous movement towards Tampico with all the troops he can muster, after leaving sufficient force to garrison Saltillo, Monterey, Victoria, &c. and in union with Gen. Worth’s division, will join Gen. Scott, who will have at his command the new military are of rocketeers and howitzers."
At the proper moment, fifteen or sixteen vessels of the American squadron, with a force of from 230 to 300 guns of all sizes and calibres, will appear off San Juan de Ulloa, and begin the attack upon the castle. According to the new plan of operations the land forces will rendezvous at the mouth of the river at Antigua, which empties into the Gulf a short distance to the North of Vera Cruz, and ascend the same to where the main road to Jalapa crosses it. If this plan be speedily put into execution, there can be no doubt but that Vera Cruz and the Castle will as speedily fall into the power of the American forces; but if any faith be put in Santa Anna’s declaration, it is plain he will be able to cut off the advance of Gen. Taylor from Saltillo.”

Mr. Gomez, the editor of La Patria, and the author of the above, is the same person who was appointed by Gen. Scott, while tarrying in New Orleans, to be one of his staff, and whose commission was afterwards revoked by the General on the grounds that he was not a friend of the American cause. Did Gomez obtain the above information while he was General Scott’s aid?

Every arrival from Mexico goes to prove the truth of the predicament, that the course pursued by the Whig presses and politicians of this country, (Daniel Webster beyond all,) in denouncing the war as “the President’s war,” and as “unjust, atrocious and damnable,” has had the effect of cheering on the infatuated obstinacy of Mexican rulers, and in uniting their people in determined hostility against us. They see in these anti-American demonstrations what they regard as positive evidence of the justice of their cause, and endless and incurable dissensions among our own people. The Diario, the official organ of Mexico, of the 20th December, comments upon extracts from American papers, exaggerating the expenditures occasioned by the war, and the difficulty of procuring loans. It says:

“This proves that the position of the United States, with respect to pecuniary resources, is not so advantageous as some suppose. The war is much more costly to them than to us; and they are compelled, therefore, to make great sacrifices. We infer from this, that if Mexico makes an effort—if the sovereign Congress should grant resources to the Government, and if all classes of society are prepared to contribute, in proportion to the exigency of affairs, our situation is not hopeless, and we may yet prevail over our enemies.”

In the same article it refers to the threat of an impeachment of Mr. Polk, and says:

“"In our opinion this is highly important, as it shows what is the opinion entertained even in the United States with regard to the injustice of the war carried on against Mexico."”

The Legislature of North Carolina adjourned last Monday, after passing 78 public laws, 134 private acts and 71 resolutions. Among their acts was one appropriating $10,000 to the equipment and support of their regiment of volunteers for the Mexican war. The whigs did not, however, adopt his necessary measure, without taking sides with the public enemy against their own Government—for the Preamble to the Resolution falsified history in stating that the war was brought about by our own Government.—The Democrats voted for the resolution, with a protest against the false and mischievous sentiments of the preamble. They sustained themselves manfully in the debate and their withering denunciations of the unpatriotic course of the Federal party, must tend to open the eyes even of North Carolina Whiggery.

It was not enough of the Federal members to violate all rules of justice in re-apportioning the Congressional districts and gerrymandering the State for their own political advantage. They must fill up the measure of faction by adopting a preamble, which was denounced on the floor of the Commons as Mexican, and which, in its effect, virtually takes the side of Mexico. The Raleigh Standard refers to one independent Whig who had the manliness to defy party thralldom and act the part of an American patriot. It was “Mr. McKesson of Burke who stood forth for the truth—who told his party to their faces that their preamble, charging the war on the President, was unpatriotic in its nature and dangerous in its tendency.”
The Democratic members did their whole duty, and defended their country's cause. "Mr. Courts hoped that this 'infamous preamble' would be destroyed—that this 'foul stigma' upon the State would be wiped out. Mr. Bullock said 'he did not intend to be personal towards the gentleman from Hertford, but he must say, that if he had come into that Hall a stranger, when Mr. Rayner was speaking, he should have taken him for a Mexican."

He Federalists refused even to vote for a resolution "declaring, in substance, that North Carolina would sustain and support the U. States in the Mexican war; and this, after a warm discussion, in which Messrs. Mebane, Bayne, Rayner, Courts and Baxter took part, was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 59."

In voting for the preamble and resolution which the Federalists refused to separate, Mr. Austin answered in the negative, and gave notice that he should avail himself of his constitutional privilege to protest against the preamble. Mr. Bullock voted "aye for the American resolution, and no to the Mexican preamble." Messrs. Flemming and Griggs delivered their votes in the same language. Mr. Jackson said, "No! his conscience would not let him vote for the preamble." Mr. McKesson voted for the resolution, protesting against the preamble. Messrs. McMullen, Neal, Courts, Stone, and others, voted in the same language. Mr. Webster voted for the resolution, but against "the truth of the preamble;" and Mr. J. H. White voted for the resolution; protesting against the "abominable preamble."

"A BUDGET OF BLUNDERS.—Several misstatements, which appear to have originated in this city, are now in circulation in the newspapers.—Such as that General Taylor has been recalled from the army of Mexico, and that he has been ordered to Washington. Such, too, is the rumor, said to be founded on the authority of Commodore Perry, that 'the Castle of San Juan de Ullos is not to be attacked, and also that Commodore Perry will not return to the Gulf of Mexico.' We know not upon what authority these things have been reported; but certain it is we do not believe there is any adequate authority or foundation for either of these statements."

"You will see in the proceedings of the New York Legislature, that the Locofoco members voted against making appropriations for the soldiers who are volunteering for the service in Mexico. This is not surprising. A party who support the President in appointing Santa Anna to lead the Mexican forces against us, cannot be expected to vote for supplies to Gen. Taylor, whose duty it is to meet and conquer Santa Anna. These things will be remembered."

The above is taken from a letter of "Brutus," the correspondent of the Whig. He charged us, not long, since, with a want of fairness. Let us see how his own course comports with candor and propriety. It is true, as he says, that the Democratic members of the New York Legislature did vote against such a resolution—but he cautiously suppresses the fact that they did so because of the Mexican preamble, which declared that the President of the United States has involved this Republic in a war with Mexico. This statement, so abhorrent to the truth and to the plain duty of American patriots in a period of war, influenced their vote, though we think the democrats erred in not voting the appropriation.—They might well have acted as the Democrats of the North Carolina Legislature towards a similar proposition—voted the money, and denounced and protested against the "Mexican" preamble. So much for the "fair" representations of "BRUTUS."

Let us look a little further into the motives of this Anti-American preamble. It was moved by a Mr. Bloss of Rochester, an out and out Whig Abolitionist, of the Giddings "stripe." His avowed object was that they should adopt such a preamble as would be a justification to the members in the eyes of their several constituencies, "for voting money not asked for, for purposes of the General Governments. Cannot the most casual observer see the plain drift of the preamble passed by the Whigs, which is to exculpate Mexico from all blame, and to fix upon the Administration the stigma of having provoked the unjust acts the war with that nation?

The New York Globe unfolds the history of this Mr. Bloss, and exposes the inconsistency of his conduct. On the 27th of May last, at a meeting of the citizens of Rochester "to sustain the Administration in its prosecution of the existing war," (this is the language of the Whig organ of Rochester,) Mr. Bloss made a flaming war speech, in which he said nothing of the President having "involved us in the war," as his preamble now falsely states. A series of resolutions was unanimously and by acclamation adopted. After dwelling upon the blessings of peace, which cannot be too highly prized or too strongly cherished, the resolutions proceed as follows. We quote this expression of opinion by a Whig city at length, because it shows how the question was regarded, before the mist of party had clouded the political horizon and perverted the vision of politicians.—Then it was Mexico, who had covered us with insult and injury, and trampled upon American soil and rights. Now, in the opinion of these same Whigs, it is the American Government that has been guilty of every species of "aggression" and "involved us in war:"

“There is a point with nations, as well as with individuals, beyond which "forbearance not only ceases to be a virtue," but becomes positively its opposite; and we believe the American people have now reached that "point" in their "forbearance" with the wrongs and outrages committed upon them by the faithless government of Mexico: She has plundered our commerce, robbed and imprisoned our citizens, and committed aggressions and cruelties that would no for a moment have been tolerated or left unavenged, had they been perpetrated by a power claiming equality with our own; but in a spirit of forbearance and toleration that would have been dishonorable and pusillanimous in any but a powerful and mighty nation towards a weak and puerile one, the American government has sought redress by peaceful and conciliatory negotiations, while Mexico has met our claims for restitution, and our overtures ofconciliation, with false promises and still more faithless performances—she has treated our ministers sent thither with messages of peace and compromise, with contempt and insult—and, finally, after agreeing but recently to receive our envoy to negotiate a settlement of our difficulties, she against falsified her pledges, refused him an audience, and compelled him o demand his passports and depart; and at last, to cap the climax, she has sent her banditti and soldiers upon American soil and drenched it with the blood of American citizens.”

“Resolved, then, That the war which Mexico has thus wantonly commenced, ought to be prosecuted with vigor and ceaseless energy, by this Government, affensively as well as defensively, until the Mexican hordes are not only driven from our soil, but, if need be, until the Mexican government shall be compelled to sue for peace beneath the star spangled banner as it waves in triumph over the vaunted “Halls of the Montezumas."

One of the present editors of the Whig Albany Evening Journal offered a resolution approving “the action already taken by Congress, THE EXECUTIVE AND HIS COUNSELLORS, to prosecute the war and maintain the assailed dignity of the nation.” This, too, was unanimously adopted.—Need we a stronger comment than this brief history upon the inconsistent and party character of the “Mexican” movements of the Whigs in the New York Legislature? Such is a fair specimen of the Whig leaders everywhere. When Gen. Taylor marched his army to he Rio Grande, not a murmur of disapprobation was heard. Nothing was then said of our “aggression” upon Mexican soil—no voice was raised to deprecate the movement, as inevitably leading to the war, in spite of the remarkable forbearance shown by us, the Whigs raised the slogan of party, charged the President with having produced the war by sending Gen. Taylor to the Rio Grande, which, if he had not done, these same censors would have taken the other side and held him up as justly amenable to impeachment! Such is the consistency, the justice of the Whig leaders!

For the Enquirer,

An article which appeared in the Enquirer of this morning, in regard to the appointments of captains in the regiment of Virginia Volunteers is couched in such fair and moderate terms, and displays so much of proper spirit and tempest, and is so becoming on the part of the friend of Capt. Carrington, that I cannot consent to continue a dissension with “Justice” on this delicate matter—a discussion which ought never to have been forced into the public journals, and in reference to which the errors of fact and of argument into which “Justice” had in his last article [...]. One word more—I know Capt. Carrington—[...] esteem and respect him, and never designed to say an “unkind” thing of him. That he will make an excellent and gentlemanly officer, no one is more sure than

For the Enquirer,

BRIGADIER GENERAL.

The writer of this knows Major Walter Gwynn, and hopes he may be appointed to the command of the Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina Regiments. There is no one possessing in a more eminent degree the great requisites of a military commander. He is an educated soldier, being a distinguished graduate of West Point—a man of indomitable energy, chastened and regulated by a cool well-balanced judgment; has a faculty to command and a tact to inspire confidence; and, in truth, is peculiarly suited to the office above alluded to. It is true he would be a serious loss to the great work over which he presides, (James [...] and Kanawha Canal)—Yet he can do more service to the country at large, just now, in the field, and there we hope he may be called.
We shall publish very soon a confidential letter from Gen. Taylor of the 9th November, addressed to a friend in New York, which has been published in the N.Y. Express, and which has produced much sensation in Washington and elsewhere. In it he rather complains of the want of transports and other available means, which he had expected from the Government, and proceeds to justify the armistice at Monterey, with which he says the Government is not satisfied. He is opposed to carrying the war beyond Saltillo, and thinks, if the object is to “conquer a peace,” the only plan is to take Vera Cruz and march on the city of Mexico.—He thinks the most judicious course to be pursued is to take possession, at once, of the line we would accept by negotiation, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, and occupying the same, or keep what we already have possession of, throwing on Mexico the responsibility and expense of carrying on an offensive war—at the same time closely blockading all her ports on the Pacific and the Gulf.

We cannot conceal our regrets that this private letter should have been so indiscreetly published. We fear that it will do no good to Gen. Taylor, nor to the country now engaged in war. We have always entertained the highest opinion of Gen. T., and should be sorry to see an issue made between himself and the Government, at this particular crisis. We are inclined to think, that, under the present aspect of affair, Congress will “call for the official papers.” In the mean time, we shall express no opinion, until we see the whole facts spread before the country.

The following is an extract of a letter from a member of Captain Scott’s Company, who was a highly esteemed apprentice in the Enquirer office. We wish him success, satisfied that he will do his whole duty in the new life upon which he has embarked. We hope to hear often from him of the movements of the Virginia Regiment, whose valor and efficiency we doubt not will "tell" in battled. We understand that the “May Flower” probably sailed on Sunday. She will take four companies, viz: Captain Scott’s and Captain Bankhead’s, which were on board on Friday, and Captain Harper’s and Captain F. H. Archer’s, which embarked on Saturday. She is represented to be one of the finest and most commodious transport ship in the service. A prosperous voyage and plenty of laurels to her valiant passengers!

To the Editors of the Enquirer:

FORTRESS MONROE, Jan. 20, 1847.

Three companies (Captains Scott, Archer and Harper) of the battalion of Virginia Volunteers, now stationed at this Fort, expect to leave for Mexico to-morrow or the next day in the barque "May Flower." The volunteers here are in good health and high spirits. The soldier’s life is one of privation and hardship; but they all bear it like men and patriots, who are willing to make any sacrifice, and undergo any hardship for the glory and honor of their country; and you may rest assured that the high character of Virginia will never lose any thing in the hands of the Virginia Regiment.

We have had a dreadful snow storm for the last twenty-four hours, and it is now (half past four o’clock) falling very fast. Just imagine the situation of the poor sentinels on the ramparts, and the picket guard in the bleak beach around the Fort, where they have no protection whatever from the storm, such weather as this. How would you like to stand it eight hours during the twenty-four?

Demand for Eight Millions of Dollars by Santa Anna—Confiscation of Church Property Contemplated—Threatened Excommunication, &c.,

New York, Jan. 24, 8 P.M.

The New York Sun has received Mexican late via Havana, considerable later than any before received. An express had arrived at the city of Mexico, from Santa Anna, demanding of the Congress eight millions of dollars, and asserting that if he did not receive it the country would be inevitably lost.

The Mexican Congress was in secret session at the latest dates, and a general confiscation of the Church property was contemplated for the purpose of raising the necessary funds. The Clergy are represented to be violently opposed to the confiscation, and that they are threatening to excommunicate not only the Congress, but the Government and the Army.

Further evidence of the mischievous effects of the course of Whig politicians and presses assailing their own government and impunity the justice of the war, is to be found in the following extract of a letter to a gentleman of Warrington, published in the Union:

Cuba, Jan. 7, 1847.

Dear Sir—I wish half a dozen of the members of your House were here to hear what is said of the war. This is the rendezvous of Mexican and all those coming from their coast bound Europe, and more can be learned in a week the state of sentiment in Mexico, than we won't forget at in a month in the United States. The [...]sis of their obstinacy is perceptible here, and several of those best able to judge have repeated the same thing. The Mexican leaders think a Federalists will sooner or later compel you slacken hostilities. They rely on the avowed opposition to further acquisition of Southern in territory for the final evacuation of the country West of the Rio Grande. This is a truth what you must be here, in the very focus of Mexico [...] opinion, to know. They put great stress up [...] the power of the Congress elect to return the [...] the territory which we have conquered.

Williamsburg, Va., Jan. 7, 1847.

Gentlemen—Can you not prevail on some of your friends in the Legislature to suggest the propriety of changing the name of the Colonel [...] the 1st Regiment of Virginia Volunteers? I [...] been very near ruining my month several times in attempting to pronounce that name, and I still fear unless something is done, and that speech [...] that it will yet be the death o me. I hail with proud satisfaction the appointment of Col. Who, when reading of the brilliant charges a glorious exploits of Col. Hamtramck’s Regiment will ever for one moment suppose that it [...] from the Old Dominion and is composed of Virginians? LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA

Wednesday January 29, 1847.

SENATE
The Senate having been called to order, Mr. BONDURANT [...] the vacation of the chair until both houses were ready to proceed to the joint order of the day.

The following act was communicated from the House:

An act providing for the punishment of certain offences within the cities and boroughs of this Commonwealth. (Referred to the committee for Courts of Justice.)

ELECTIONS OF U.S. SENATOR.

A message was received from the House of Delegates by Mr. Carson, announcing the readiness of that body to proceed to the joint order of the day; and also informing the Senate that the following gentlemen had been put in nomination: John W. Jones, J.M. Mason, James McDowell, G.W. Summers and G.W. Hopkins.

Mr. WOOLFOLK offered the following joint resolution:

Resolved, That in joint elections, after the vote has been taken, neither branch of the Legislature will proceed to a new ballot until its communicated with the other.

The CHAIR decided the resolution to be out of order, and it was altogether withdraw at the suggestion of Mr. WITCHER, who stated that there was upon the statute book a law to that effect.

Mr. BRAXTON remarked, that he would vote for Mr. Jones, unless some Senator would assure him that Mr. Hunter did not intend to move to Jefferson; if so, he intimated that he would support a Western man—not because he considered the West entitled to the Senator, (for he wished to see all sectional feeling dropped,) but as a matter of country.

Mr. MOORE. I do not rise to make a nomination speech, because I think such speeches are generally more indicative of an imaginative mind in the speaker, than of an merit in the candidate. I intend to vote for Mr. Summers, not alone because he is a Whig, but because I consider him the ...apple of the nominees. If however, as will probably be the case, I should find it impossible to elect Mr. Summers, I shall be compelled to choose between the others, and my vote shall be case for James McDowell.

Mr. STIGER, signified his intention of voting for Mr. McDowell for Senator, believing him to be preeminently qualified for discharging the duties of that or any other office that the people could place him in.

Mr. McWULLES went into quite an elaborate speech, supporting the claims o George W. Hopkins for the Senatorship. He alluded to the lat war and at the present time—he stated that Western Virginia had sent company after company—that she had poured out her heart's blood in defence of Virginia—all she asked, was to have her interests represented in the United States Senate. After eulogizing Mr. Hopkins very highly as a statesmen and jurist, Mr. McMullen brought up several convincing arguments to prove that Mr. Hopkins was not at all tinned with Whiggery. He felt concerned on the subject because it was the first time that a trans-Alleghany candidate had ever been presented to eh Assembly, and he did think that Western Virginia was entitled to the Senator. He would vote for him, knowing that a large majority of his constituents, as well as himself, were anxious for his election.

Mr. COX remarked that he would support Mr. Jones, and from any sectional feeling, for he would hate himself if he could entertain such feelings for a moment. No; he looked upon every foot of Virginia land with as much interest as he did upon the land of his own country—and he considered it his duty to protect the interest of the people of Virginia, not of Chesterfield county alone.

Mr. STANARD expressed the pleasure he felt in knowing that old King Caucus was dead—he was happy to see that a minority would not rise up to control a majority of the Legislature, as they had attempted a few days previous. He should vote form Mr. Summers and hoped the Whig party would stick to him as long as it should be practicable; if he found it impossible to effect an election by so doing, he would then choose from the other nominees the man who in his judgment, was most capable. He wished to assure the member from Scott, that if the West had poured out her blood in defence of the East, that the East had, in return, poured out her treasure in improving the West.

LATER FROM THE ARMY!

From the N.O. Picayune, Jan. [...].

By the U.S. steamer Eudora, Capt. Wilcox, which arrived in Sunday night, we have dates from Brazos Santiago to the 12th inst., her day of sailing. Gen. Scott was at Brazos Santiago, and it was said had dispatched an express to Gen. Taylor announcing his intention of departing in a few days to join him either at Tampico or Victoria.

A report had been brought to Mier, by a Mexican, as we learn from the Matamoros Flag, in a correspondence from Camargo to that paper, dated the 3d inst., that Gen. Quitman, with 2000 volunteers, had given battle the preceding day to 1300 Mexicans under Gen. Urrea, two leagues north of Victoria. The report was not credited by the officers of the army at Camargo. The letter also states that Gen. Taylor is about six days march in the rear of Gen. Q., with 3000 regulars. Gen. Worth was still at Saltillo, and had been reinforced by three regiments of Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana volunteers. Gen. Wool was in camp fifteen miles from Saltillo on the San Luis road, with 1500 Mexican lancers hovering around in his immediate vicinity.

Our own correspondence, which will be found below, furnishes the latest intelligence from Saltillo.

Gen. Patterson and his division had arrived at San Fernando on his way to Victoria. The Flag’s correspondent writes that the ayuntamiento came out from the town to meet and welcome him. The 1st Indiana Regiment, Col. Drake, had arrived at Matamoros from Camargo to relieve the 3d Ohio Regiment, Col. Curtis, who were awaiting orders from Gen. Scott.

The U.S. steamer Giraffe was wrecked about forty miles south of the mouth of the Rio Grande, on the 7th inst., and four lives lost.

Correspondence of the Picayune.)
Saltillo, Mexico, Dec. 20, 1846.

Since I wrote to you last the aspect of things has taken a different course, and now there is but little doubt in the mind of every one connected with the army, that before another month has passed, another terrible battle will be fought in the neighborhood of this place.

An express was sent last Tuesday to Monterey, and another to Gen. Wool, for reinforcements. Three companies of Col. Marshall’s Kentucky Mounted riflemen arrived here by a forced march from Monterey on Thursday night last, and yesterday evening the Kentucky and Ohio regiments came in and encamped below town. An express which came in from Parris yesterday evening reports that Gen. Wool, with his command, may be expected in the neighborhood to-morrow evening.

Of the orders which have been issued since the excitement commenced one is, that three days’ cooked provisions shall be kept on hand. A drummer is to be attached to the different guards, ready to beat the long roll and give the alarm; that the accoutrements and arms of the sick shall all be taken to the hospital, and that every man shall hold himself in readiness to be called out at a moment’s warning. Gen. Butler came up with the Ohio and Kentucky troops.

A mail from this place, containing important documents of the future movements of the Mexican army and plans for the recapture of this place, was captured on its way to San Luis by a scouting party of dragoons a few days since. A large body of lancers are known to be scouting the country between here and San Luis, and not far from us at that, and they are almost known to be the advance guard of the main army of the enemy. Of the various accounts of the troops at her disposal of Santa Anna at San Luis, none fall short of 32000 men.

Our officers and men are in fine spirits, and eager to meet the self-styled Napoleon, to administer to him the same kind of dose they have given his predecessors. A portion of our forces, probably Gen. Wool’s command, is to take immediate possession of the Linares pass, which is about 35 miles from here. The three companies of Kentucky mounted men here are to leave early to-morrow morning on a scouting expedition. I pity any Mexican force that crosses their path, for they appear to be a second edition of the Texas Rangers, and any one of them is good for three Mexicans. They have not smelt gunpowder yet, but this only renders them more anxious for a chance to show what the Kentucky boys are made of.

Gen. Worth, who has been sick for the last two weeks, is out again today. The weather is a little too cold here to be pleasant, and the night before last we had ice half and inch thick. I forgot to mention that Webster’s battery [two 24-pound howitzers] is here.

Yours, &c., ALTO.

LATER FROM THE ARMY.

In another column we give copious extracts from the New Orleans Picayune. The letter from Saltillo expresses the opinion that a battle may soon be expected in that vicinity—but the new Orleans Commercial Times publishes a letter from Matamoras, January 9, which says:

"My information from Saltillo is to the 29th inst., and from Monterey two days later. A correspondent, speaking of the message for the President of Mexico, says 'it breathes war, but with a coming diffidence.' The best informed inhabitants at Saltillo and Monterey are of opinion the Congress will accept the proposition of our President to appoint ministers to negotiate, and say they are for a peace. Here the message excites to sensation, so far as can be yet seen.

"Gen. Butler commands at Saltillo, and has the brigades of Wool, Worth and Lane, besides the artillery and dragoons corps, in that neighborhood. There is no apprehension of any attack.—The main body of the Mexican army was still about San Luis. Gen. Marshall has the chief military command about Monterey, whilst Col Garland continues to govern the city.

"General Taylor, it is said, arrived at Linares on the 30th ult. IF so, he has reached Victoria before this time."

The writer speaks of the great losses to Government and individuals, from the storms at Brazos Santiago—some 10 or 15 vessels being ashore. He refers also to the frequent assassinations, riots and robberies at Matamoras, and hopes that Congress will speedily make some provision for the government of territory, pending our occupation of it—as was done in California and Santa Fe, against which the Whigs made so foolish a clamor. A story was current [...] the strong probability of a battle at Victoria on the 2d, but it was discredited.

"General Scott returned here on the 6th inst. From Camargo. He told me that every thing was quiet above, and no probability of any hostile collision at present. He said, for the next ten or fifteen days, he should be at the Brazos Santiago, and in this place. He was asked in my hearing, to what point he would go when he should leave here; he replied—to the point circumstances should make it necessary at the time. No one is authorized to so on what point he will move, or when he will go. You are as well qualified to conjecture his destination as any of those in this quarter, who effect to speak ex cathedra. One thing you may confidently rely on. He will go to the place where the best chance for a fight offers, and he will go as soon as it is possible to get a force sufficient to fight with success. He reveals the importance, if not necessity, of making prompt and efficient movement. Those who march under his banner, may be certain of a fight, if the Mexican force can be found to oppose him. The various regiments in depot along the river for months past, are under orders to march, as soon as the new troops coming out all arrive, to relieve them. Generals Taylor and Patterson are marching on Victoria and must soon be there, if not already arrived.—The engineers, with the pioneers and their escort, and at the last accounts, nearly reached Victoria, to the route General Taylor is marching, not having met the least opposition. There is no positive information from the column of Gen. Patterson since he left San Fernando. There is no doubt of his advancing in safety.

"It will be gratifying to the friends of General Scott to learn he is very well received by the troops. His commanding and military appearance combined with the suavity of his manners, this dispelled the prejudices and opinions of many who had never seen him. Gen. Taylor, that sturdy hard soldier, is much gratified to learn of the arrival of the General-in-Chief of our armies. He has time enough to prevent any fears of a rival, and is gallant and generous enough to be willing to [...]are opportunities for distinction with a brother officer, as brave and generous as himself. There will be no rivalry between Generals Scott and Taylor, but upon one point, and that will be who can best serve the country."

WHIG PARTIZANSHIP

As we hinted yesterday, Gen. Taylor will, we fear, have ample cause to regret the indiscreet, nay, rash and rabid course of those who call themselves his "friends," but who really put on this garb in order to assail the Administration and further their political ends. As a strong proof of what we say, we quote the following from yesterday's Whig:

[Correspondence of the Richmond Whig .]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24. 1847.

As I mentioned in my last, it is supposed that Mr. Benton will open his batteries to morrow in the Senate, upon every thing that stands in his way to power. Gen. Taylor, it is supposed, will come in for large share of this abuse. We shall see which will conquer. I believe old General Taylor as thoroughly despises the Locofocos as he does his Mexican enemies, and will show them a fight to which Monterey was but a circumstance.

Looking at the whole conduct of this war, I cannot really see that he Administration desires to have it ended. I believe sincerely that they now wish for General Taylor to meet a reverse of fortune! I do believe that the Administration would not regret to see Santa Anna, Polk's appointed leader to four enemy's army, vanquish General Taylor, for the sake of breaking down his popularity I believe they would not grudge the blood of a thousand American soldiers to effect this object, if they could only have some political partisan to step in afterwards and roll back this reverse of fortune. This is a serious charge to make, but I believe it, and may as well speak it. Some of the Locofocos make no sort of hesitation in expressing their alarm that the Whigs are gaining the laurels in this war. Therefore these new offices are being created to fill the army with the political partisans, that he war may ensure toothier benefit. They make no secret of either of their deadly hostility to Gen. Taylor. I think a majority of the Locofocos members of Congress would join tomorrow in a vote of censure on old Gen. Taylor, not because they have any ground of complain against him, but because they feel bound, as partisan, to crush him, and rob him of the laurels he has been gaining.

Can the Federal press, even of Massachusetts, whom Mr. Cushing represents as having very rarely been found on the side of its country, exhibit a more stupid series of calumnies upon a Democratic President, as well as upon Gen. Taylor himself? It is here asserted that MR. Benton was about to cover the name of General Taylor with "abuse." Well, Mr. Benton did speak, and with ability and eloquence—but he indulged in no "abuse" of Gen. Taylor. It is next charged that Gen. Taylor "thoroughly despises the Locofocos," who have taken pleasure in crowing his brow with laurels. Can the bitterest Whigs so far hate the Democratic party, as to believe in this violent and wanton feeling attributed to Gen. T.? Upon such evidence, we shall not believe it.

Again—The Administration is libeled as anxious to see Gen. Taylor and our own American army defeated by Mexico, and as not grudging "the blood of a thousand American soldiers," in order to push the fortunes of some political partisan! Such gross assaults need no notice at our hands. They are contrary to every principle of human action, even if it could be substantiated, that the President is swayed by so infamous a motive. But these bitter workings of political hatred will react upon the authors, and arouse in the popular mind an indignant feeling against such monstrous and absurd and suicidal fabrications, gotten up for party effect, and with a view to the triumph of some Whig leader, with his train of monopolies and ruinous invasions of the Constitution.

It is the interference of such "friends" as the Whig's correspondent, that Gen. Taylor should warmly deprecate. Their embrace is deadly—their praise is fatal. For ourselves, we deeply regret the publication of this private letter, by this weak-minded, rash "friend and relative." We honor Gen. T. for his courage on the field and the modesty and good sense which characterize his public dispatches. We shall wait till we see the whole facts of the case, before we express an opinion as to the merits of this letter, which should never have been published. At all events, we shall not be influenced in our judgment by the foolish and bitter ravings of political bigots, who virtually stab the reputation of General Taylor, under the professions of reverence for his name, and seek to pull down a Democratic Administration, by really casting a cloud over the character of the Hero of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma and Monterey.

From Mexico

The New Orleans papers announce arrivals from Havana, with Vera Cruz dates of the 31st December, but the news is not of special moment. A letter in the Picayune says:

"The present Administration have been elected by so equivocal a vote, and are so decidedly popular in the more important States, that they can hardly be expected to contend successfully with the embarrassments of tier situation. If Santa Anna remains at the head of the army, Farias will of course be entrusted with the civil administration, the burden of which he cannot support. Of course, he will have to sustain the medium of all the embarrassments and all the recourses of the country. If Santa Anna is forced to retreat or loses a battle, he will ship all the same upon those who conduct the administration. And when Farias and his cabinet succumb, and in all human probability they will fall before many months are past, what will come next? If Santa Anna keeps his army together, he will probably march on the capital, and this will be the prelude of a civil war. I do not think the country, under any circumstances, will tolerate Santa Anna's dictatorship. The regiments from Puerta and other Departments now garrisoning Vera Cruz will be quite likely to be withdrawn to lengthen one side or the other, for I apprehend at the shock of civil war will be felt in Central Mexico. Within a short time Vera Cruz may be, as it has before, without a garrison adequate [...] its defence, and then will be the time to strike an effective blow with our forces for its occupation."

Had the election of President been made by votes of the deputies collectively, and not by States, there would have been 96 votes—48 for Santa Anna, and 39 for Eloriaga; and in this [...]e the election would have been contested between the two Governments. [Santa Anna relived the vote of eleven out of the twenty States.] Vice President Gomez Farias, in the absence the President, took charge of the Government, [...]d on being sworn into office, on the 26th December, made a short speech, assuring the nation at the war would be prosecuted with valor and [...]nstanly, "until the justice of our cause would be recognized, and our territory abandoned by the enemy." A decree has been published to promote the colonization by foreign emigrants of the large territories now occupied. {The funds [...]ed to be applied to this object are five percent of the sales of public lands, and the proceeds of any prohibited goods, when seized by the revenue, or twenty per cent. of duties thereon if, hereafter, such goods shall be permitted to be en[...]ed.}

Messrs. D. Ignacia Loderaud and D. Manuel Lizardi, residing in London, have been named, [...] former, agent to negotiate a loan of twenty millions, and the latter, agent for the Mexican [...]holders in England.
By a decree, a National Public Library is to be established in Mexico.

The Mexican journals contain not a word of every action of Congress in regard to our propositions of peace, nor in relation to the adoption of every measures to place funds in the treasury, or [...]ant supplies to continue the war.

Gen. Canalizo was at once appointed Minister of War and took the necessary oaths; Senor [...]abieta has accepted the Ministry of Finance [...]d Senor Ramirez that of Foreign Affairs.

A Vera Cruz paper of the 31st ult. Announces that in response to the urgent call from that city. The Governor of Puebla had engaged to remit [...]rm $25,000 very shortly. The troops at Vera Cruz are sadly straitened for supplies.

The monthly expenses of the army at San Luis Potosi exceed $377,000.

A vessel slipped into Alvarado during the month of December, and disposed of her cargo of $40,000.

On the 24th alt, Congress approved a law of the self-denying order, by which it is provided but no member shall except office under the Government during his term of office and one year hereafter.

A division of 5,000 troops, of all arms, had been detached from the main body of the enemy occupy the pass of Tula.

A letter from Havana of 9th January in the Picayune says:

I am told that the garrison at San Jan de Ulua had been several times on the point of “pronouncing” for want of provisions. There are about 1,500 mouths in the castle, and of these about 1,000 are soldiers. In Vera Cruz the garrison, about 1,200, are often on short commons. Midshipman Rogers and his companions were in prison at Vera Cruz awaiting his trial as a spy. He will not be sent to Perote.

THE SAILING OF THE VOLUNTEERS

By the politeness of Mr. Beale, of the steamer Augusta, we are enabled to state that the beautiful barque "Mayflower" weighed anchor yesterday morning at 8 o'clock for Mexico, with four companies of Virginia Volunteers, viz.: Capt. Scott’s, Harper’s, F. H. Archer’s and Bankhead’s. The Augusta, having on board the wives of some of the volunteers, moved around the "Mayflower" and gave the gallant fellows three hearty cheers. The pilot was on board the Mayflower, the national flag flying, and a favorable breeze sprung up, to wait the vessel and her noble crew, full of enthusiasm, to the Capes. The Mayflower, of classic memory, landed the early pilgrims on Plymouth Rock. May her modern namesake meet with the same luck in transporting these native sons of Virginia, the "Pilgrims" in the sacred cause of national honor justice and civilization! Three cheers for the Mayflower! Lieut. Col. Randolph, whose name is connected with the military fame of the Union sailed in command of the four companies.

Correspondence from the Picayune

Saltillo, Mexico, Dec. 26, 1846.

I am told that all sorts of rumors have been circulated at Monterey about the command at this place—that it had been cut to pieces by 20,000 Mexicans—and other stories equally absurd have been picked up y the news mongers below, and sent on in the shape of news to New Orleans. A private letter of mine, writen by the last mail, if received in due time, informed you of he situation of things as they were at that time, and even if our friends below and at home have fears for our safety at this remote place, let them feel assured that we feel ourselves adequate to any emergency, and that there is little danger of our getting cut up if they do come down upon us.

I will now give you a little sketch of Christmas in Saltillo, the most interesting and exciting one I ever enjoyed. If you could have peeped into the kitchens of any of the barracks before daylight, you would have beheld the busiest set of soldiers in Christendom. While some were engaged beating up egg-nogg, others were picking chickens and turkies, scalding pigs, and making all sorts of preparations for a real old Yankee Christmas dinner; while out of doors the streets were thronged with thousand of the natives, as well as soldiers, going to mass. The cathedral was beautifully lighted, and the silver alters in each apartment were splendidly decorated with flowers; but I will pass over egg-nog and other nice fixings, by saying that all enjoyed themselves during the morning to tier hearts content. About 12 o’clock an express arrived from General Wool, informing General Butler that he was in momentary expectation of being attacked by the enemy. Orders were immediately issued for every man to “pack up his duds,” put on his accoutrements, and fall in, which was performed in double quick time. All was excitement and joy. In the mean time, old Madame Rumor was hard at work, and I never saw the old lady more industrious. One story was to the effect that Wool was within twelve miles of us, retreating on the place, and fighting twenty thousand Mexicans as he came along. Another was that a portion of his column had been cut to pieces, and a hundred other stories of the same kind were circulated. Although many did not believe these reports, they thought there was something like a fight ahead particularly as the orders from head quarters had been so explicit. The streets before the quarters presented an interesting spectacle. The guns were all stacked before the doors, and ever man wore his accoutrements, ready and anxious to be off; but the most amusing part of the scene was the Christmas doings. There was scarcely a man but what had the limb of an old gobbler, the rib of a pig, or something else of the kind, enjoying it probably, from the novelty of the scene, better than they ever did a Christmas dinner before—and then all candidly believed that we should wind up the day with another battle. About 2 o’clock, P.M., Webster’s battery, and the Ohio and Kentucky volunteers, who were encamped six miles below town, came in, and such cheers as the regulars gave them, and such as they returned, put me in mind of the shouts which accompanied the different victories in Monterey. Webster’s battery took up a position on the top of the hill, while the pioneers were busily engaged making loop holes through every house near the road. The horses belonging to the light batteries were all kept harnessed, and the caissons filled with ammunition. I never saw men so enthusiastic as they were now. There was one thing only that I prayed for, and that was, that a portion of town, for the Mexicans who did not blames to the ranche when the new first came, or a large portion of them, promenaded the streets, and appeared to be delighted at the prospect, and those that did not tell you mucho fandango poco tiempo, would give you a look as much as to say, “now you will catch it.”

The inhabitants all agree that there are between seven and eight hundred ladrones and lepers’ in town whom they fear, in case of an attack, more than the soldiers, for as soon as they have an opportunity they are sure to commence their work of murder and plundering; but there is little prospect of our commander’s giving them that chance. The Kentucky and Ohio volunteers left this morning again for their encampment. Maj. Write, of the 8th infantry arrived here yesterday with recruits for that region.

We have now been three weeks without a mail from the United States, but hope for one to-morrow. I have just sent several officers and privates of Gen. Wool’s column who came in to-day, and they state that a Mexican came into camp early in the morning and informed Gen. W., that there was a large Mexican force within a few miles of them, on their way to attack his command and Saltillo. A party was immediately sent out to reconnoiter, but on arriving at the designated place they found that there were no Mexicans there, nor had there been any. I need hardly tell you that we were all very much disappointed in not meeting the enemy again, and those who appeared to be the happiest during the excitement of yesterday are the most dejected to-day, particularly Capt. Blanchard and his Louisiana boys.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO

The New Orleans Commercial Times has information on which it reposes perfect faith, that nothing can now be expected from the Mexican Congress, in the way of an adjustment of our difficulties with that nation, except by positive be force. Every sign goes to prove that, I few desire peace, it must be “conquered.” The question has been brought before the Mexican Congress, of the acceptance of rejection of the late offer of our Government to treat, and has been decided by a large majority in favor of rejection. There were only nineteen votes cast in favor of acceptance:

“A few days before the question was brought to a vote (says the N.O. Times,) a caucus meeting was held by a number of members of Congress, comprising a majority of that body, at which Gomez Farias presided, when a resolution was unanimously adopted, that all present should take an oath to vote against nay proposition of peace, which might be made by the United States, and to reject nay mediation on the part of foreign power, so long as a single United States soldier stood upon the territory of Mexico, or an armed vessel blockaded her ports. ‘Will, then,’ asks our correspondent, ‘our Government and our people still continue to look to this Congress for peace?’”

History does not record so striking an instance of mad and infatuated obstinacy and suicidal ruin. Our Government has done all that could have been asked of a generous and magnanimous nation. It ha, over and over again, tendered the olive branch which has been insultingly rejected. The proposition that Mexico will not listen to peace until our troops are withdrawn from her soil, is monstrous, ridiculous and absurd, without a parallel in the history of nations; and yet we are mortified to see that it has its advocates on the floor of Congress. We cannot believe that the proposition to withdraw our troops to the Rio Grande, introduced simultaneously by a Whig Abolitionist in the Senate and a Southern Whig in the House, can meet with the slightest countenance. Its adoption would be a most disgraceful, as well as fatal policy—and would render our government a by word among nations.

We rejoice to see the resolution brought forward by Mr. Brown of Virginia, in favor of a rigid prosecution of the war, as the surest means of peace. Even the Whig Albany Evening Journal reprobrates the movement as at war with the sense and spirit of the country:
"We cannot afford to make such a concession of national imbecility. To show the white weather so soon after our boast of conquering a peace in the Halls of Montezumas, would be subjecting us hereafter to insult and aggression from every quarter. It would be buying half a dozen wars. Peace with Mexico, upon such terms, would cost too much. But it (the war) should not, and must not dishonor the Republic. There can be no backing out."

But (say the apologists of Mexico,) she would exhibit a want of proper self-respect to listen to terms of peace, while the iron heel of an American soldier treads her soil. In the war of the Revolution, our ancestors treated with Great Britain while she was in possession of many of the most important positions in the country, including Charleston, New York, Savannah, and all of the Western country. The negotiation terminated with the treaty of 1783, and a large portion of the West was retained in possession by Great Britain for many years after the treaty. During the last war, the British Army were in possession of a part of the State of Massachusetts, while the negotiations for peace were in progress. Italy did not demand the withdrawal of Napoleon’s victorious army before any proposition of peace would be entertained.

Are not these cases in point, to condemn the unheard of absurdity and insolence of Mexico, in rejecting every overture of peace? And will not her conduct have the effect of arousing the enthusiasm of our own people, reflected through their representatives in Washington, in favor of a vigorous, and, as General Cass says, "an old fashioned war?" To obtain peace, we must fight with all our energies and spirit, and we regret to see Congress wasting its precious time in discussion, when the people demand action, in support of the constitutional authorities. As matters now stand, there ought not, there cannot be, tow opinions as to our proper course. The war must be prosecuted with all vigor, and Mexico be forced, the mouth of the cannon, to do us full and complete justice. We must assail the very heart of the enemy's country, and push our victorious columns even to the gates of its capital. Our humanity and benevolence have been thrown away upon so infatuated a people. As the New Orleans times justly remarks, "our repeated offers for a cessation of hostilities have been interpreted as manifestations of week news, our forbearance in the hour of victory has even been taken as a proof of a pusillanimous fear of the ultimate result of the war. Santa Anna’s military prestige must be broken by an effectual defeat, before the Mexican nation can be made sensible of the nature of the contest in which they are now engaged; for to his pernicious counsels alone can be attributed the insensibleness they exhibit to their reverses, from the commencement of hostilities."

To a certain extent, the following comments of the N. Orleans Times speak our own sentiments, which we avowed at the opening of the war. By one united, powerful blow we should strike at the heart of Mexico, and force her to terms:

VERA CRUZ, ALVARADO,  &c.—It seems from the letters of our correspondents, that the Mexicans at Vera Cruz are little, if at all, incommoded by the blockade established there.—They say, that the blockade must have cost us a pretty round sum already. The French, they remark, were blockading the Gulf coast for a period of eight months, in 1838, during the whole season of Northers, without losing even a launch whilst our navy has been employed on the same service for seven months, of which four of them were Summer months, and the losses are steamer McLane, at Tobasco; brig-Truxton, at Tuspan; brig Somers, in view of Vera Cruz, and a man-of-war schooner, on Green Island, a very short time ago,  &c., &c. Our correspondent writes, our squadron has been nearly stationary at Vera Cruz, and a man-of-war schooner, on Green Island, a very short time ago, &c., &c. Our correspondent writes, our squadron has been nearly stationary at Vera Cruz, ever since the war broke out, blockading the port; while, during all this time, the little cursed hole of Alvarado, only forty miles further down the coast, has been left open to any and every vessel which chose to go in and discharge her cargo. Of this there has been an instance every week since the blockade commenced, and in some instances two or three vessels a week. Expeditions are now daily coming in from Havana. Within the last en days (from date of letter 24h ult.) the duties paid by vessels entered at that port have not been less than 200,000 dollars. The abortive attempts on Alvarado have quite intoxicated the Mexicans with vain glory.

IMPORTANCE OF A DEMONSTRATION BEFORE VERA CRUZ

In one of our communications, it is stated that the policy of our Government is incomprehensible in leaving Vera Cruz so long in the possession of this people. The capture of that city and the castle of San Juan de Ultos would have had a greater moral effect in opening the eyes of the Mexican people to the necessity of making peace, than the occupation of all that vast extent of almost wilderness country, which is now held by Gen. Taylor's army. While Vera Cruz keeps our naval force at bay, (such is the language of the Mexicans,) we may depend on the fact, that there is no hope of their listening to the voice of reason, or turning their ways toward peace.
St. Louis Hotel, New Orleans,

January 15, 1847.

To the Editors of the Charleston Courier:

Gentlemen:—Col. Totten, Chief Engineer of the United States, arrived here to-day from Washington. The Rocket and double Howitzer Brigade is expected daily. The regiments of Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Mississippi are about being embarked, and will take 90 days’ rations with them. These troops are supposed to be destined to Tusman, where their will be joined by the Massachusetts, North and South Carolina, Virginia, Illinois and 2d Pennsylvania regiments. Their future destination is unknown, as every avenue to information is carefully guarded; but it is now guessed at that a march will be made direct on Mexico from Tusman by Guanchinago, Papanda Apan and Tezano, along the route over which the Indian runners passed in 24 hours from the Gulf of Mexico in the time of Montezuma.—The distance is only 250 miles, and the road is said to present no serious obstacles to the march of troops. Gen. Scott will advance at once on San Luis Potosi, simultaneously with the Tusman movement.

It is supposed that Santa Anna will not fight at Potosi when he finds 9000 men advancing from Tusman, but will fall back on Queretaro, and from thence to Tularzingo, in order to oppose our advance from Tusman, At this point he can make a strong stand. But here this double Howitzer Brigade will act with great efficiency. In order to understand how, it is necessary to describe the pass of Tulaezigno. It is formed by a chasm in the mountain, the rocks rise almost perpendicularly to a height of 150 feet. The road between will admit of no more than four mules abreast. The pass is only quarter of a mile in length. Over this chasm there is a natural bridge of rock, which is accessible by a seep and devieous ascent, by which mules can ascend. The double mountain howitzer will be placed on mules and carried to the natural bridge, when the road to the west of the pass will be completely commanded to the distance of twelve hundred yards, so that the enemy’s forces must retire on the approach of our columns to that distance. Our troops will thus be enabled to move through the pass and debouch into as open tableau of land, of some miles in extent; without hindrance of the Mexican artillery. Our army will then make a flank movement on Apan, which will compel the Mexicans to move on to Tezano, 50 miles form Mexico. In the meantime Gen. Scott will move rapidly on Maconi Chico and the Real del Monte, and thence to Pachua and otmba. The road from Otumba to Tezano is exceedingly difficult, and perhaps it may not be necessary to follow it in order to form a junction with our columns at Texano; if so, Gen. Scott will, by a right flank movement, reach Isthalmaca, 15 miles from Mexico.

I have briefly stated what is whispered amongst military men here. Though Vera Cruz is believed to be the point of attack, I think myself it is designed only as a fient.” The arrival of Col. Totten, who is considered one of the most skillful Engineers in the world, has created no small sensation in military circles. His mouth is closed.

I will write you again soon. Yours, ANON.

P.S.—Surgeon General Lawson, and Col. Blake of the Illinois Regiment arrived today. [MLD]

GEN. TAYLOR’S LETTER

We shall to-morrow publish this letter, which should have never seen the light, as we have already said. The poor excuse avowed for its publication was the “malignity” of the Government and the Democratic party. This view is entirely gratuitous and full of injustice and mischief. The Democratic party have been most cordial in awarding due honor to Gen. T. from his services, and will not do him injustice, though his rash and indiscreet “friends” may attempt to array a large party against him. When the facts shall be made public it will be seen whether his “friends” of the N.Y. Express have really done him a service, in laying his letter before the world. In the mean time, we extract the following notice from the Union:

“We deeply regret the publication in the ‘New York Express,’ of the following letter from Major General Taylor to a friend, the authenticity of which, on its first appearance, we were disposed to doubt. We cannot now, however, but consider it as genuine; and uncontradicted rumors points to Major General Gaines as the friend to whom it was addressed, and by whose permission it was published. In justice to General Taylor, we will not suppose that this letter was ever intended for publication, because its effect will be to place Santa Anna in possession of information which cannot fail to prove most injurious to us and advantageous to the enemy. Santa Anna will thus be encouraged, by the high and authoritative source from which it proceeds, to direct portions of the large force collected at San Luis Potosi to other points where it is clearly indicated by the letter that a blow may be expected, and in this manner it may seriously endanger the success of our arms. We make these remarks on the supposition that the letter truly represents the plan of the campaign, of which, however, we are entirely ignorant. It is only in view of the public mischief resulting, we regret that this letter has ever been written or published. We have no fears but that the administration, whose course towards General Taylor is known to the world, will be able to show that there is no just foundation for the complaints made against them in this publication.

“It has already been transferred to the columns of so many respectable journals, that we no longer feel at liberty to withhold it from the readers of the Union.”

The Whig Courier of New York says that the publication of the private letter of Gen. Taylor is "alike unjust to that gallant officer and injurious to the service." It argues, however, (though we doubt not most incorrectly,) that Gen. T. has been unjustly dealt with by the Administration.

LETTER FROM GEN. TAYLOR

We copy from the N.Y. Express the following letter written by Gen. Taylor to a friend in that city:

My Dear *****

Your very kind and acceptable letter of the 31st of August, reached me only a short time for which I beg leave to tender to you my sincere thoughts. (A few confidential remarks on certain transactions are here emitted.)

After considerable apparent delay on the part of the Quarter Master's department, in getting steamboats late the Rio Grande adapted to its navigation, I succeeded, towards the latter part of August, in throwing forward to Camargo, (a town situated on the San Juan River, three miles from its junction with the Rio Grande, on the west side, nearly 500 miles from Bragos Island by water and 200 by land, and 140 from this place) a considerable depot of provisions, ordnance, ammunition, and forage, and them, having brought together an important portion of my command, I determined on moving this place. Accordingly, after collecting 1,700 peek mules, with their attendants and conductors, in the enemy's country, (the principal means of transportation for our provisions, baggage, &c.,) I left, on the 5th of September, to join my advance, which had preceded me a few days to Serraivo, a small village 75 miles on the route, which I did on the 9th, and, after waiting there a few days for some of the corps to get up, moved on and reached here on the 19th, with 6,250 men—2,700 regulars, the balance volunteers. For what took place afterwards, I must refer you to several reports,—particularly to my detailed one of the 9th unit. I do not believe the authorities at Washington are at all satisfied with my conduct in regard to the terms of capitulation entered into with the Mexican commander, which you no doubt have seen as they have been made public through the official organ, and copied into various other newspapers. I have this moment received an answer (to my dispatch announcing the surrender of Monterey, and the circumstances attending the same,) from the secretary of war, stating that "it was regretted by the president that it was not advisable to insist on the terms I had proposed in my communication to the Mexican commander, in regard to giving up the city,"—adding that, "the circumstances which dictated, no doubt, justified the changes." Although the terms of capitulation may be considered too liberal on our part by the president and his advisers, as well as by many others at a distance, particularly by those who do not understand the position which we occupied (otherwise they might come to a different conclusion in regard to the matters,) yet, on due reflection, I see nothing to induce me to regret the course I pursued.

The proposition on the part of General Ampudia, which had much to do in determining my course in the matter, was based on the ground that our government had proposed to his to settle existing difficulties by negotiation, (which I knew was the case, without knowing the result,) which was then under consideration by the proper authorities, and which he (Gen. Ampudia,) had no doubt would result favorably, as the whole of his people were in favor of peace. If so, I considered the further effusion of blood not only unnecessary, but improper. Their force was also considerably larger than ours; and from the size and position of the place, we could not completely invest it; so that the greater portion of their troops, if not the whole, had they been disposed to do so, could, any night, have abandoned the city, at once, entered the mountain passes, and effected their retreat,—do what we could! Had we been put to the alternative of taking the place by storm, (which there is no doubt we should have succeeded in doing,) we should have, in all probability, have lost fifty or one hundred men in killed, besides the wounded,—which I wished to avoid, reached me since the declaration of war was on the 2nd instant, the same day on which I received from Washington.

In regard to the amenities, which would have expired by limitations in a few days, we lost nothing by it as we could have informed the war department that 20,000 efficient men would be necessary to insure success if we move on that place—(a city containing a population of 60,000 where the enemy could bring together and sustain, besides the one hundred and forty badly watered, where the supplies of any kind could be procured for men and horses. I have been, since May last completely crippled and am still so, for the lack of transportation. After reaching and scouting the country for miles around Camargo, selecting every pack mule and other means of transportation, I have been, since May last completely crippled and am still so, for the lack of transportation. After reaching and scouting the country for miles around Camargo, selecting every pack mule and other means of transportation, I

From Saltillo to San Luis Potesi, the next place of importance on the road to the city of Mexico, is three hundred miles—(which contains a population of about 12,000) being in part surrounded by them, at the head of a large and beautiful

That they should have been surrendered a place nearly as strong as Quebec well fortified under the direction of skillful engineers,--their works garnished with forty two pieces of artillery, abundantly supplied with ammunition, garrisoned by 7,000 regulars and 2,000 irregular troops, in addition to some thousand citizens capable of, (and no doubt actually,) bearing arms, and aiding in its defense,--to an opposing force of half of their number, scantily supplied with provisions, and with a light train of artillery,--in among the unaccountable occurrence of the times.

I am decidedly opposed to carrying on the war beyond Baitillo in this direction, which place has been entirely abandoned by the Mexican forces, all of whom have been concentrated at San Luis Potesi; and I shall lose no time in taking possession of the former as soon as the cessation of hostilities referred to expires,--which I have notified the Mexican authorities will be the close on the 13th instant, by direction of the President of the United States.

If we are (in the languages of Mr. Polk and General Scott) under the necessity of "conquering a peace," and that by taking the capital of the country,--we must go to Vera Cruz, take that place, and then march on the city of Mexico. To do so in any other direction, I consider out of the question. But, admitting that we conquer a peace by doing so—say, at the end of the next twelve months—will the amount of blood and treasure, which must be expanded in doing so, be compensated by the same? I think not—especially, if the country we subdue in to be given up; and I imagine there are but few individuals in our country who think of annexing Mexico to the United States.

I do not intend to carry on my operations (as previously stated) beyond Saltillo,--deeming it next to impractical to do so. It then becomes a question as to what is best to be done. It seems to me, the most judicious course to be pursued on our part, would be to take permission at once, of the time we would accept by negotiations, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, and occupy the same or keep what we already have possession of, and that, with Tampico, (which I hope to take in the course of next month, or as soon as I can get the means of transportation,) will give us all on this side of the Sierra Madre, and as soon as I occupy Saltillo, will include six or seven states or provinces, thus holding Tampico, Victoria, Monterey, Saltillo, Monclova, Chulluahua, (which I presume General Wool has possession of at this time) Santa Fe, and the California, and sat to Mexico, "drive us from the country!"—throwing on her the responsibility and expense of carrying on an offensive war—at the same time closely blockading all of her ports on the Pacific and the Gulf. A course of this kind, if persevered on for a short time, would soon bring her to her proper senses, and compel her to sue for peace—provided there is a government in the country sufficiently stable for us to treat with, which I fear will hardly be the case for years to come. Without large reinforcements of volunteers from the U. States—say ten or fifteen thousand, (those previously sent out having already been greatly reduced by sickness and other causalties) I do not believe it would be advisable to search beyond Saltillo, which is more than 200 miles beyond our depots in the Rio Grande--a very long time on which to keep up the supplies (over a land route in a country like this) for a large force, and certain to be attended with as expense which it will be frightful to contemplate, when closely looked into.

From Saltillo to San Luis Potesi, the next place of importance on the road to the city of Mexico, is three hundred miles—one hundred and forty badly watered, where the supplies of any kind could be procured for men and horses. I have informed the war department that 20,000 efficient men would be necessary to insure success if we move on that place—a city containing a population of 60,000 where the enemy could bring together and sustain, besides the citizens, an army of 50,000) a force which I apprehend will hardly be collected by us with the train necessary to feed it as well as to transport various other supplies, particularly ordnance and munitions of war.

In regard to the amenities, which would have expired by limitations in a few days, we lost nothing by it as we could not more even now, had the enemy continued to occupy Saltillo for, strange to say, the first wages which has reached me since the declaration of war was on the 2nd instant, the same day on which I received from Washington an acknowledgement of my dispatch announcing the taking of Monterey; and then I only received 125, as that I have been, since May last completely crippled and am still so, for the lack of transportation. After reaching and scouting the country for miles around Camargo, selecting every pack mule and other means of transportation, I could bring here only 80,000 rations (15 days supply,) with a moderate supply of ordnance, munitions, &c., to do which, all the corps had to leave behind a portion of their camp equipment necessary for their comfort, and, in some instances, among the volunteers, their personal baggage. I moved in such a way, and with such limited means, that, had I not succeeded, I should no doubt have been extremely reprimanded, if [2-3 illegible words] I did so to sustain the administration.

Of the two regiments of mounted men from Tennessee and Kentucky, who left the respective states to join me in June, the letter has just reached Camargo; the former had not gotten to Matamoros at the latest dates from there. Admitting that they will be as long in returning as in getting here, (to say nothing of the time necessary to recruit their horses) and were to be discharged in that time to reach their homes, they could serve in Mexico, but a very short time. The foregoing remarks are not made with the view of finding fault with any one, but to point out the difficulties with which I have had to contend.

Monterey, the capital of New Leon, is situated on the San Juan River, where it comes out of the mountains,--the city (which contains a population of about 12,000) being in part surrounded by them, at the head of a large and beautiful... valley. The houses are of stone in the Moorish style, with flat roofs, which, with their strongly enclosed yards and gardens, in high stone walls all looped for musketry, make them such a fortress within themselves. It is the most important place in Northern Mexico, (or on the east side of the Sierra Madre, commanding the only pass or road for carriages from this side, between it and the Gulf of Mexico is the table lands of the Sierra, by or through which, the city of Mexico can be reached.

I much fear I shall have exhausted your patience, before you get half through this long and uninterrupted letter. If so, you can only commit it to the flames, and think no more about it, as I write in great haste, besides being interrupted every five minutes; so that you must make great allowances for blots, interlineations, and blunders, as well as want of connection in many parts of the same.

Be so good as to present me most kindly to your excellent lady, and accept my sincere wished for your continued health, prosperity and fame.

I remain, truly and sincerely, your friend,

Z. TAYLOR

THE TRUE SPIRIT

We rejoice at the marked reprobation with which the House of Representatives on Wednesday refused to suspend the rules, in order to allow Mr. Schenck of Ohio to introduce resolutions, disgraceful to the country, involved as it is in war. These resolutions, “in order to terminate the war,” request the President to withdraw all our troops to the East side of the Rio Grande, and disband all the volunteers now in the service of the United States. They at the same time request and advise the President to keep the regular army, along or near the Western frontier of the United States, to repel or prevent any encroachment or depredation, by Mexican citizens, on our territory, property or people: Provided, that this shall not be construed to advise against retaining possession of “the disputed country between the Western limit of the State of Texas and the Rio Grande,” until a definitive boundary line shall be agree upon. They also provide for the prosecution of the existing war against Mexico, by blockading her ports and harbors on the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific coast, until a treaty of peace is made, settling all difficulties between the two countries; duties to be levied upon all imports into said ports of entry, and the proceeds of said duties to be held as security against Mexico, until she shall agree to a treaty. The present regular army not to be increased by enlistment or otherwise, but to be reduced to the number in service on the 1st Jan., 1847. The resolutions further declare it to be against the policy and interest of this Government to wage a war for the conquest of territory and that no additional territory beyond the present limits of the Union should be acquired by any negotiation with Mexico.

After a stormy scene upon points of order which begs description, and in which Mr. Schenck grossly insulted the good sense and patience of the House, the motion to suspend the rules was refused, by the overwhelming vote of 28 to 156.

It is cheering to see so final a rebuke upon one of the most mischievous and factious proceedings yet introduced into Congress, in direct opposition to the popular sense of the nation, and in virtual encouragement of our insolent and infatuated ofe. To disband our volunteers and withdraw our army from Mexico, at this moment, when Mexico has refused our overtures of peace, would be regarded by herself as proof of weakness and fear, and by the civilized world as cowardly and dishonorable. We have sufficient to appealed to her sense of justice and hood feelings—the only alternative left is to use the right arm of force, and compel her to listen to reason. To back out from our position now—to retreat from the ground we have won by the valor of our arms, and in the face of her insulting rejection of our peace offer, would but prolong the war, and might tempt other nations to interfere and complicate it.

Thanks, then, to Congress, for having crushed in the bud so mischievous a proposition.

But the course suggested of blockading the ports of Mexico, “in prosecution of the war,” is most strangely inconsistent with Mr. ‘s object of terminate the war. If we withdraw our army for the sake of peace, why not make clean work of the disgraceful retreat, and also withdraw our ships of war? Why, too, maintain the policy of seizing the "disputed territory" between the Nueces and the Rio Grande?” As the Union says, "By holding the disputed territory, we affirm that the advance of our army into it was rightful. We thus say, that we were rightfully there when Mexico attacked us, and, having said this, we—retreat! Proclaiming our quarrel to be just, we throw down our arms!"

The whole scheme is factious, mischievous and absurd, and has, we rejoice, been stamped with the reprobation of the House, and, we are satisfied, the American people. This Ohio Whig, Mr. Schenck, is one of the bitterest, most conceited and most troublesome partisans in Congress. He resorts to the smallest political tricks to make party capital. He is the same Whig who, in Congress, sneered at the patriotic sentiment of Mr. Clay at New Orleans, that he (Mr. C.) would like to have a place in the army to “avenge the wrongs done us by Mexico.” Mr. Schenck, in his ardent advocacy of he Mexican side, asked tauntingly, whether this sentiment of Mr. Clay was uttered in the early or later portion of the dinner! For this, Mr. Schenck has been christened by the neutral N.O. Picayune as “the small potato politician.” After his recent overthrow, we doubt not, h felt “small” indeed.
But who can reasonably expect peace even should we withdraw our forces East of the Rio Grande? A journal published in the city of Mexico, La Opinion Necional, is in favor of "war to the death," a protracted, annoying guerilla war, and declares that it will result in our again making proposals for peace, which "must not be received except on the other side of the Sabine, and there, our armies face to face with each other, the national standard raised along side of the cannon, a lasting treaty of peace shall be written on the tops of the drums in clear and precise terms, and a column raised, on which shall be sculptured this, or a similar inscription: 'The Sabine shall be a perpetual boundary to divide forever the United Mexican States form the United States of the North.' These are not exaggerated pretensions—this is not fugitive declamation, springing from a heated imagination," &c.

Here then it is the Sabine and not the Rio Grande which will alone satisfy Mexican insolence. Why, then, should we show the "white feather," and, by retreating, encourage and give life to the absurd and arrogant demands of our enemy?

The bill to increase the the pay of the army and volunteers, and to allow them a bounty in land, which passed the House of Representatives on Wednesday, grants an increase of pay of $3 per month, and gives to each soldier who serves out the war 160 acres, and to those serving less than 12 months from May, 1846, and who may be honorably discharged, 80 acres of land. These land-warrants, however, are not to be issued for five years.

The country will be pleased to learn that the Loan Bill has passed both Houses of Congress, and is now a law of the land. The Union understands that there is every prospect of the success of the Secretary of the Treasury in obtaining the necessary loans. The Whigs have indulged in severe assaults upon the Democratic policy, as having involved the nation in financial difficulty and produced the necessity for making this loan. They especially denounce the repeal of the Tariff of 1842 as the cause of all the mischief. Had that Tariff continued in force, say they, we should have raised revenue enough for all purposes, the war, &c.—This assumption is easily refuted by the fact that in consequence of the protective and prohibitory character of that law, the amount of revenue under it in the fiscal year 1845 was $800,000 less hand the amount collected the year before. Under its operation, the revenue was being gradually diminished, and it became necessary to adopt the new Tariff of 1846, to prevent the growing diminution of revenue. The operation of the new law, though brief, is yet sufficient to promise that it will produce more revenue than its much boasted predecessor.

To how the operation of the "ruinous" Tariff of 1846, we quote the remarks of Mr. D. H. Lewis, Chairman of the Committee of Finance, in the Senate, on Tuesday, in the debate on the Loan Bill:

Mr. Lewis said he should not decline replying to the questions which had been put to him by the gentleman from Delaware. The committee had met, and as the result of their deliberations, reported this bill to the Senate. He had no information which did not come before that committee. This call for information was a mere beating about the bush in order to attack the tariff. The real object of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Huntington] was to pour out his tears over the tariff of 1842. The gentleman from Delaware had a similar project.—His (Mr.L's) reliance for increasing the revenue was upon the new Tariff of 1846, together with a tax upon tea and coffee; and he had no doubt that they could raise a larger revenue by these means than would be acquired form any other source. Though he could not gratify the gentleman with precisely the information which he had called for, he had a little information with regard to the working of the tariffs of 1842 and 1846.—He had learned form an official source that there had been an increase of about twenty per cent in the revenue under the tariff of 1846 over the receipts by that of 1842. This had been the increase up to the 10th January inst., and he understood that the increase was still going on. He had anticipated the increasing revenues by proposing to issue treasury notes and negotiate for a loan. Let them contrast the two tariffs, then, and he would submit it to the gentlemen, whether the tariff of 1846 was not as good as that of 1842. In regard to the remark of the honorable senator from Maine, alluding to a want of foresight in the secretary of the Treasury, he would say it as not always the case in time of peace that a financial officer could anticipate their necessities. How much less could he do it when the country was engaged in war. The true theory was, that the means of the Government must be proportioned to the prospective demands upon the Treasury—and if the Secretary of the Treasury failed to predict with certainty in regard to the wants of the Government, there was no reason for censoring him.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMER HIBERNIA, IMPORTANT FROM EUROPE.

The President’s message was regarded in England as giving full assurance that low duties on the manufactures of that country will be maintained, which has given English manufactures a cheerful prospect for their trade the ensuing spring.

The Paris papers assert that the French government intends proposing a reduction of the duty on foreign corn.

There has been a terrible inundation in the Roman States, causing great distress. The loss of property is extensive. The new Pope is mitigating hardships by the use of his purse, as well as by personal exertions. The Pope has reduced duties on foreign grain.

The President’s Message is assailed by the whole English press, and all kinds of abuse and ugly names heaped on that portion of it sustaining the Mexican war. The proposed annexation of California is more unpopular in England than that of Texas was when first proposed. They make sever comments upon the President’s declaration, that the war was not undertaken with a view of conquest.

The President’s message—The Liverpool Times, in reference to the President’s message, says:

"The President’s message gives a hopeful assurance that the American Tariff, so far as regards British goods, will be maintained, and has given the English manufacturers a cheerful prospect for their trade for the coming Spring.

"The last message of President Polk, which was received in this country a few days ago, has been assailed by the whole of the press, and ugly names have been given to the process of reasoning in which the President accounts for the Mexican war. One passage has been strongly commented upon,—that in which he states that the war was not undertaken with the view to conquest.

"We can call to mind no similar document during our time which has been less favorably received in England; from this it may be inferred that the annexation of California, of which Commodore Stockton had taken possession as a territory of the United States, is even less popular in England than was the annexation of Texas."

FROM GENERAL SCOTT’S CAMP

We lay before our readers (says the Union) all the accounts which have reached us through the “Baltimore Sun,” from Vera Cruz, to the 14th April — they came to N. Orleans by the Massachusetts steamship. These accounts are later than the late letters addressed to the War Department from Gen. Scott’s army. The last despatches received from him up to this time, 4 o’clock this evening, are dated on the 8th April, from Vera Cruz. The following is the last letter which had been received, from Gen. Scott:
HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,

Vera Cruz, April 8, 1847.

SIR: A vessel, unexpectedly, being about to sail, this morning, for New Orleans, I write in haste, principally to forward, by Col. Bankhead, a passenger, a package of papers from the acting Inspector General, containing lists of prisoners of war paroled, &c., &c.

The movement upon Jalapa, announced in general orders No. 94, herewith, commences to-day. Major Gen. Patterson will follow tomorrow.

This movement is forced in reference to our very inadequate means of transportation – but made in the hope of doubling those means.

Jalapa is the first point, from the coast, which combines healthiness with the reasonable prospect of obtaining some of the heavier articles of consumption for the army – as breadstuffs, fresh beef and forage.

Another expedition sails this morning for Alvarado, to ascent that river some forty miles, with some prospect of obtaining a thousand or more horse for cavalry, draught and packs.

I have the honor to remain, Sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Hon. W. L. MARCY, Secretary of War.

A large bundle of documents accompanied this letter from General Scott, covering a report from Colonel Hitchcock, relative to the prisoners of war who were captured in Vera Cruz San Juan de Ulloa, and Antigua.

A LETTER WITHOUT AN ANSWER

Such is the title given by a Northern paper to a singular letter addressed to Gen. Taylor by twenty-two gentlemen of Philadelphia, soliciting his acceptance of a nomination at their hands for the Presidency had “neither desiring for expecting an answer” to the communication. This curious epistle we deem it our duty to re-publish as one of the singular phenomena of these strange times. It is alleged, without contradiction, that the twenty-two gentlemen belong to the “Native” party; but scrupulously forbore to give the least hint of their peculiar political opinions. The letter is in the following terms:

PHILADELPHIA, April 17th, 1847.

Sir: The undersigned, a committee of correspondence for the State of Pennsylvania, appointed by a meeting of the citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, without distinction of party, held on the 6th inst., have the honor to submit to you the proceedings of their constituents, unanimously nominating you for the office of President of the United States, a station which the situation of our country now requires should be filled by no ordinary man.

In Florida, on the Rio Grande, at Monterey and Buena Vista – in your youthful exploits in the former war, your character has been distinguished by the most heroic qualities, and your whole career has proved you to possess the integrity and wisdom of a sagacious statesman.

Although they believe that the presidency should be neither sought nor declined by an individual in your peculiar position, the undersigned cannot avoid expressing the hope that you will not think it expedient to defeat the determination that, from all the sings of the times, the people have formed of placing you in the chair of Washington, which the constituents of the undersigned desire you to occupy, like him, with no pledges but those contained in the official oath at your inauguration, and with the declaration of independence and the constitution as your guides.

The undersigned, under these circumstances, take the liberty of assuring you that they neither desire nor expect an answer to this communication.

With sentiments of the highest esteem, we are, sir, most respectfully, your friends,

George W. McClellan, Joshua Tevis,
Charles S. Coxe, John W. Ashmead, Massachusetts.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY

Under this head yesterday's Times characterizes as “without precedent in this country” “the course pursued by the present administration in appointing to high military offices, political favorites – the merest partisans, who have no single claim to such offices.” The Times refers to the appointment of General Pillow to be Major General and Colonel Caleb Cushing to be Brigadier General. (By its silence in regard to the appointment of Gen Quitman the Times fully admits the admirable promotion of that fine officer by the administration.) The Times, in justification of its views, quotes the opinion of the N. O. Picayune. As an offset, we cite the sound and able remarks of the N. O. Commercial Times, also a neutral journal, and also “as remarkable for its fairness as it is for its general intelligence.”

THE PRESIDENT'S RECENT MILITARY APPOINTMENTS. – One of the greatest curses attendant on monarchical and aristocratic forms of government, is undoubtedly the abuse of patronage. – Merit, personal merit, is about the last attribute taken into consideration, in the dispensing of offices of trust and emolument; the heads of administration have their friends, their relatives to be provided for, and nothing must stand in the way of the advancement of the latter, when occasion offers, however the public weal my suffer from their mediocrity or incompetency. The annals of nations in Europe are full of instances where well-conceived plans for the triumph of fleets and armies have been rendered totally abortive – where genius has been frustrated, and subordinate skill rendered powerless – by the inefficiency of the controlling agent, whom the detestable spirit of nepotism has lifted over the head of unfriended talent. In the civil departments of government, similar evils have flowed from similar sources; and the revenue has suffered, the judicial seat has been stained, while public profligacy has rode triumphant, confident in the impurity which the strength of its protection secured. In this country, thank heaven, it is impossible that a system of favoritism can long abuse the public service. The press, ever watchful for the welfare of the general interest, would soon denounced the man, or men, who would seek to render official station entirely subservient to their private profit of ambition; and the people would quickly have the remedy in their own hands, and drive the offender, or offenders, into obscurity, with the indelible stigma of their reprobation affixed to their names. There may be a Democratic party, a Whig party, a Nativist party, among whom the utmost virulence of political feeling may exist; but there is a National party overwhelmingly more numerous than the whole of them taken together, that guides, controls, and disposes all things, with whom the public weal is the first great principle of all action.

In another part of our paper will be found the appointment (by the President) of Brigadier Generals Pillow and Quitman, of the volunteers now serving in Mexico, to the rank of Major Generals. These appointments are not only well made, but well timed. Under the act of Congress, authorizing the creating of two more Major Generalships, Colonels Benton and Cumming were nominated to that rank by the President, and confirmed by the Senate; they both, at once, declined it, and Mr. Polk had to select other as recipients of honor. To his great credit, he had dispensed his patronage where it was well merited; merited by actual service rendered in the field, and bestowed upon men over whole heads it would have been painful to see other preferred, who were undistinguished in the present war. – General Pillow was one of the most prominent officers under General Scott, during the bombardment and surrender of Vera Cruz; and General Quitman was among the foremost in the storming of the outworks of Monterey. Both of these are brave and accomplished military men, whose promotion will prove to our gallant army, that the Government is not insensible to its just claims for reward; and that the volunteers, equally with the regulars, may confidently look forward to a just distribution of those professional distinctions which are the very breath of the soldier's nostrils.

Col Caleb Cushing, of the Massachusetts regiment, has been appointed a Brigadier General, in the place of Gen. Quitman. This is also an excellent appointment. Col Crushing, in overcoming the obstacles thrown in the way of the organization of his corps, has shown a devoted love for his country scattering to the winds every consideration of a sectional nature, which might have thwarted the ends of the General Government, in the prosecution of the present war. He is formed to shine in any path of public life, military or civil; and his promotion gives additional insire to the gallant army with which he serves.

The President and his Administration are certainly now acting with commendable energy. – Well seconded, which we may be assured of, by the late exploits of our army and navy, the lapse of a short time will suffice to enable us to conquer a peace with our stubborn neighbor, and thus allay that spirit of war and conquest, which is alien to our peaceful commercial institutions, a foe to enlightened freedom, and an unmitigated scourge to humanity at large.

My dear and excellent Friend:

* * * * * Well, after being circumscribed on board steamboats for a month, you may well imagine my enjoyment in again treading terra firma, or mounted on my horse Waxey, galloping over these level plains.

* * * * * Lt. Col. Randolph has been ordered by Col. Curtis is accompany him to Monterey, and, two days since, not a Virginian was here. Six companies came, Col. Randolph returned, and now the whole command of 12 companies is here. I shall move in a few days, to open a new line of communication between this post and Monterey, on the right bank of the San Juan river, through China. Lt. Col. Randolph will be left with 6 companies in command there, and I shall then proceed on to Monterey, with the other 6 companies, and, after resting there a few days, expect to advance to and occupy Montemorales. These two places have never yet been occupied by our troops. I shall fortify them, and hope to have a brush in getting possession. Gen. Taylor has conferred a high honor in causing the new line of communication to be opened by the Virginia Regiment, and the posts he has assigned to the command are the most important in the country. They are the key to the territory about Monterey – China covering his rear, and Montemorales his advance. He has given me two pieces of artillery, on of Bragg's batteries commanded by Lieut. Kilburn, who so distinguished himself at Buena Vista – and the other commanded by Lt. Williamson, of Captain Carrington's company – manned by good artillerymen from the regiment. Gen. Taylor wishes a topographical survey made Capt. Harper's company [fold]. He is a most excellent engineer, and has been on active duty in the Commissary department ever since he landed. You see, therefore, that we have good engineers and artillery officers of our own.” * * * Gen. Taylor is going to keep us near him, and, therefore, on active and important duty. He has paid us the honor to say to a friend who dined with him at Monterey, that if he had had the Virginia Regiment with him at Buena Vista, he would have taken Santa Anna and his army.

Whilst writing, a party of Capt. Scott's company is disinterring the remains of Lt. Botts, under the direction of Capt. Hunt, his former Captain.”

[MSH]
As our informants approached near Camargo they met a train bound for Monterey. One of the volunteers in guard of it had been lassoed and murdered by two Mexicans. The assassins were arrested, identified and summarily shot. In coming down from Monterey to the Brazos, the party with Major Colquitt and Dr. Herrick encountered neither difficulty nor obstruction. They say, by the way, that Col. Davis is recovering from the effects of his wound.

We make up from the Flag the following items:

ROBBERY. – The sum of fifteen hundred dollars was abstracted by some scoundrel from the money box of the subsistence department in this place, on Friday night last.

The body of William C. gladman, a free mulatto who owns a barber’s shop in Galveston, but who had been in Matamoras for some time, was discovered floating in the lake back of our office. It bore the marks of violence, and as he was known to have a considerable sum of money in his possession, it is supposed avarice prompted the deed.

MORE VIOLENCE. – A Mexican was horribly mangled by cuts with a knife in a fight near the Plaza on Monday night last. The unfortunate man is not expected to live. On Tuesday night, as we have been informed another man was shot at a fandango, and it is thought, will not survive the wound.

Gen. Cushing orders that all houses or other places of gambling, of whatever name or nature, or for public dancing be closed, and that all sale or traffic is distilled spirits is prohibited, under a sever penalty for the violation of either order.

When a part of Kentucky Legion arrived at Matamoras, on their return march the Massachusetts Regiment paraded and received them with due military etiquette. Gen. Cushing addressed them, in his usual eloquent style, with a few very appropriate and complimentary remarks. – The fine dress and generally neat and clean appearance of the Massachusetts men contrasted strongly with the scarred and sunburnt faces, the black, blue, red and tri-colored shirts, and as many colored pants of the boys then returning from the bloody field of Buena Vista, but when the column moved, and they came to handle their arms, then “Old Kentucky” shone out as conspicuously as did their new acquaintances a few minutes before.

[Fold] from a very intelligent officer at Vera Cruz, dated the 10th April, in which he says that several of the States of the Mexican Confederacy have denounced the war with the United States, and threatened to secede until peace should be made. Many Mexicans predict a peace within sixty days, but our correspondent puts little faith in auguries so favorable. He thinks the great difficulty in the way of a peace is the fact that Santa Anan is so nearly crushed that he dare not make a treaty. Nor does there appear to be any one else in Mexico strong enough to incur the great responsibility. None of the old politicians will venture upon the step. Our correspondent adds: “Some man now unknown to fame, with nothing to lose and everything to gain, may arise and advocate a peace policy successfully. His want of ambition or the little chance of his obtaining power may prevent him from becoming obnoxious to the jealousies of parties, and gain for him adherents generally. He may succeed in making a peace which every body will be glad of; but how long before it will be used as an element of political warfare?”

The Legislature of the State of Vera Cruz, sitting at Jalapa, was said to be deliberating at last accounts upon the propriety of making peace, independent of the General Government.

The State of Zacatecas has declared itself independent – so writes us an intelligent correspondent! – Picayune.

NEW REGIMENT. – We understand (says the N. O. Delta) that several military gentlemen in this city are making movements for the purpose of raising regiment, to be composed of persons who are inured to the yellow fever, to serve as soldiers to garrison those places in Mexico subject to the vomito. This movement is highly creditable to its originators, and if carried out, will prove of almost incalculable benefit. An open enemy may be met by all, but an insidious foe like the yellow fever, must be opposed by men of experience in Southern climates and in the diseases incidental thereto.

UNTITLED

“So far as the nominee of the Whig Party is concerned, there need be no apprehension among our opponents. We have a usage established by wisdom, and sanctioned by experience, which no condition of circumstances can obviate. It is to collect together the most sagacious, and the ablest men of the party in council, and to nominate the best qualified, in capacity and in virtue, for the Presidency. We have ALWAYS required the candidate, so nominated, to lay down his political principles, clearly and honestly, before the country, and in no instance has there ever been a refusal to meet this requisition.”

Thus speaks the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, who, ex cathedra, “lays down the law” for the whole Whig party. If he really be a true exponent of that party, (we wish they had one less unscrupulous in assertion, and less indecent in personalities and vituperation!) we are glad to see that the Whigs mean to go into the action with their visors raised and their principles unfurled. But we protest against the declaration, that the Whigs have always pursued this open and fair course. They very reverse, we contend, is confirmed by the page of history. In 1840 the Whigs succeeded by the game of humbuggery and deception. They dared not make a declaration of principles. Need we look further than our own State, where they fought under the flag of opposition to a Bank and Protective Tariff, and were severely lashed by one of their leaders, “Honest Willoughby Newton,” for thus spreading nets to catch birds of every feather? In 1844 the party lines were strictly drawn, the principles of the two parties were made the test, and the Whig party floored. Thus has it been, and thus will it ever be, when the country is called upon to decide between the Democratic and the Federal policy; and we shall, therefore, be pleased to see the Whig party unfold and adhere to the programme thus laid down from them by the North American’s correspondent:

"Whoever is presented by a Whig Convention for the support of the country must stand pledged to carry out Whig principles to the fullest extend. He must be committed distinctly and unquestionably. We would not take a candidate on any other terms.

He must be in favor of protecting American industry, in preference to the pauper labor of Europe.

He must be opposed to the Sub-Treasury.

He must be in favor of the distribution of the proceeds of the Public Lands.

He must be in favor of the doctrine of Internal Improvements.

He must be opposed to the acquisition of Mexican territory west of the Rio Grande."

This is all plain enough, as also is the further admission that “the policy of a Bank of the U. States has been merged by common consent,” and while they “maintain now, as we (they) always have done, the constitutional power to charter such an institution,” they “waive its expediency until the condition of the country demands it.” The Bank then, is acknowledged to be an “obsolete idea.” Though the Whigs formerly contended, and with the utmost pertinacity, that a great “regulator” was necessary to the salvation of the country, experience has forced from them the concession that the country can move forward in the highest prosperity without such a miscalled “regulator.” In the same manner, we doubt not, the successful operation of the present revenue Tariff will confound its opponents, and forever banish all idea of foisting upon the people an odious monopoly in the form of a Protective Tariff. Already we have seen that Mr. Webster failed to carry into effect his threatened motion of “repeal,” and the cry of “ruin” so clamorously shouted by Whig prophets is drowned in the joyful hum of industry. He who would now gravely repeat the stale prediction of “ruin” from the new Tariff, would every where meet with a smile of incredulity, not only from the farmers and ship owners who are receiving fine prices, but the manufacturers themselves, who are being enriched under this “destructive” ”British Tariff.” The humbug of “protection” is fully exploded; and the people will be satisfied with the universal prosperity they now enjoy, without desiring a renewal of the mischiefs of an unjust monopoly.

The Sub-Treasury thus far has acted admirably, and the credit of the country and the soundness of financial operations were never on a better basis; and as a U.S. Bank is admitted by all to be out of the question, there is no reason why the present system should be abolished.

The doctrine of Internal Improvements is repudiated by a large majority of the South – and no one, who will aow his sentiments in favor of so wild, and dangerous, and corrupting a system, can hope for the support of any large portion of the American people. We pass over the “distribution of the proceeds of the public lands,” because they are pledged for the repayment of the debts incurred in the prosecution of a just war – and no one dare to touch them, until the solemn trust for which they are reserved shall be sacredly discharged.

But finally, the Whig candidate “must be opposed to the acquisition of Mexican territory west of the Rio Grande.” In other words, our nation must be guilty of the disgraceful and absurd policy of retreating from territory won by the blood and treasure of our people, without acquiring the least security of compensation for the wrongs we have endured at the hands of Mexico or for the just claims which she has wantonly with held from us. This leading Whig test of policy, we cannot believe, will be sustained, by even a “respectable portion of the confederacy.” If Mexico has not the money to pay us our just dues, and nobody contends she has, why have crossed the Rio Grande with our army, and why push on our troops, gaining victory, if we are determined to ask no indemnity? Why not at once withdraw every American from her territory, and content ourselves with the blood and treasure we will have so foolishly, so uselessly, and so wickedly thrown away? The American people, we feel satisfied, will not listen to such a monstrous proposition, and no party advocating it can, for one moment, hope to gain the voice of that people. The nation will insist upon the acquisition of an equitable portion of Mexican territory, to indemnify our expenses, and public and private wrongs. – There is, also, another scheme for the extension of the commerce of the world and the blessings of free institutions, which may well be effected in the settlement of a peace. We refer to the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, uniting the Pacific and the Atlantic, and making it the great highway of commerce. But even this wise and magnificent and important measure, beneficial alike to the North, South, East and West, must be abandoned, if the Whig game be played out with success. Upon this issue alone, the American people must repropate the policy of the Whigs – much more, when they are called upon to pass in review the whole batch of Whig measures which have been so often and so strongly condemned by them.

UNTITLED

There was nothing later from Gen. Scott's army by yesterday's Southern mail. The last letter of Gen. S. received at Washington bears date on the 11th April. He was then making arrangements for the advance to the capital. The General states that General Twiggs had passed the National Bridge, and was on the road to Jalapa. The first report was the Santa Anna had only 4,000 troops – then the accounts increased them to 6,000 – and, finally, General Trigg's despatch augmented them to about 15,000, entrenched at the pass of Cerro Gordo. Another letter, written on the 14th, has been received at the War Office, stating the General Scott had left Vera Cruz on the 12th, and General Worth on the 13th. They refer to the same rumors that were published in Friday's Enquirer with this variation, that only two members of the Mexican Congress were reported to be with Santa Anna, for the purpose of making overtures for peace. But nothing has been positively ascertained about it.

INTERESTING LETTER

As all eyes are now turned to the seat of war, and the probable chances of peace or continued hostilities, we have thought proper to republish, from the New Orleans Delta, the following highly interesting letter from one of the correspondents of La Patria, now residing in the city of Mexico, to whose Editors the Delta is indebted for a copy. It is published as coming from a presenting the most intelligent view of affairs in Mexico yet laid before the public:

MEXICO, April 1, 1847.

My Friends -- * * * Affairs are every day growing so complex and confused in this Capital, that I am now utterly unable to understand what the present infernal state of things in Mexico will lead to. Never did you see a country in a more distressing situation than this unfortunate Mexican Republic, nor one more miserably managed. You have heard of the results of the late revolution, from the periodicals which I have regularly forwarded you, and you may perhaps be able to form some idea of the atrocities and scandals of which this city is at present the theatre. I should not be able to find paper sufficient to describe all that has occurred here. It would be necessary to go back to the news of the battle of Buena Vista, and extraordinary battle -- one which we impartial can well understand -- as to its stupendous results, its incomprehensible organization, and especially the pretended victory of Santa Anna, which obliged him to retire from the field with a loss of 1500 men, and his whole army disorganized. This is truly a new-fashioned victory. But, in order to understand the present condition of parties here, it is necessary to take a calm review of affairs.

The parties which are at present, like moths, incessantly feeding on the prosperity of Mexico, may be divided into five or six factions. There is the war party, who are not only in favor of a war, but of one conducted with decision, energy and real earnest. There is the peace party, which id desirous of effecting an accommodation with the United States, even at the sacrifice of a large portion of there territory. Another party (that of the clergy) hate the Americans as heretics and Jews -- but they are unwilling to open the purses of the church to contribute to prosecute the war against the "enemies of their religion." Gomez Farias has a party, which is in favor of hypothecating the property of the church, to raise funds to carry on the war. This party is weak, for Santa Anna publicly repudiates it though it is said he secretly encourages their design. Lastly, there is a party, which has always existed to a considerable extent in Mexico, intent upon selfish purposes, disregarding the circumstances of the State -- in peace of in war, regarding nothing but the promotion of their own self interest and ambition. This party has seized the present occasion as affording an opportunity of promoting their interests, entirely oblivious to the calls of patriotism.

Santa Anna laves to-day (April 1) for Jalapa, where he will unite his force with that of Gen. La Vega, who is now at the defences of the National Bridge. Santa Anna says that he goes to conquer or die; but this he has said so often, that we cannot put much reliance on the threat. He takes with him about 20,000 men of all arms, the greater part of them being taken from (Jarochado) the lowest class of the people, who are very good for fighting. They will, however, have no other advantage over the army which marched from San Luis, except that they will not be compelled to the same dreary march through vast wildernesses, and exposed to continual cold and rain. But they are equally destitute of resources and means, having no provisions, and no money with which to buy any. We have, therefore, no reasons for expecting any other results than have characterized the former enterprises. It is said that if the Americans pass the National Bridge, and march towards the Capital, the whole people of Mexico will rise en masse against the invaders. But we do no doubt that a force of 10,000 of 12,000 Americans will not encounter, on the march, a Mexican army sufficiently large or determined to resist their onward progress.

What do the Mexicans hope for, when, during a whole year, they have permitted so many favorable opportunities of repelling the invaders to pass by unimproved? Witness the battles of Monterey and Buena Vista -- the debarkation of the American troops in the very face of Vera Cruz and when the expedition had become so Santa Anna says there shall never be peace as long as there is one American in Mexico. But Santa Anna is, in truth, most desirous of all other persons for peace, and will be the first to recommend it, when it is safe to do so. There are many persons in Mexico, who have learned to understand and appreciate the Americans, their laws, government and institutions – but there are many Mexicans who thoroughly despise the Yankees, their manners and customs. Thus are these people divided and confused, and yet they call themselves freemen, and mockingly style their nation a Republic!

LATeR FROM VERA CRUZ

[From the New Orleans Picayune, April 23.]

Important Intelligence – Advance of the American Army – Santa Anna’s Preparations for Defence – Battle supposed to have been fought on the 15th April, &c.

The U.S. steamship Massachusetts arrived here last evening from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the evening of the 14th. Our correspondence is down to the latest hour. The news is of the most stirring interest. The best advices lead to the impression that a battle was fought at Cerro Gordo, nearly midway between the Puente Nacional and Jalapa, on Thursday or Friday last. We have heretofore announced the advance of Gen. Twiggs’s division into the interior. When last heard from, he was beyond the Puente Nacional and in close proximity to the Mexican army. Gen. Scott was expected to arrive at General Twiggs’s headquarters on the night of the 14th inst. Gen. Worth left Vera Cruz with the last division of the army on the 13th, and bivouacked that night at San Juan, about twelve miles in the interior. He probably joined the advance on the 15th. Santa Anna was said to be at Cerro Gordo, where La Vega and Canalizo were posted with a considerable command. The Mexican force at that point, when joined by Santa Anna, was estimated at fifteen thousand strong, consisting of two thousand regular infantry, three thousand cavalry, and the remainder irregulars. The pass of Cerro Gordo is forty-four miles from Vera Cruz, and is naturally a very strong one. – Some difficulty is anticipated in forcing it. Rumors state that Santa Anna can obtain any amount of irregular force he may desire. Reconnoitering parties from the American army had been fired upon and several wounded – amongst whom was Capt. (now Lieut. Colonel) Johnson, of the Topographical Engineers, who was shot in the arm and hip whilst examining the Mexican works at Cerro Gordo. Intelligent officers, who arrived in the Massachusetts, entertain very little doubt that a general engagement has taken place.

A number of soldiers have been shot in passing the road to and from. All accounts represent the Americans as confident of victory, and the Mexicans as burning for vengeance. Our next advices from Vera Cruz will, we doubt not, bring us the details of an important engagement.

We subjoin the news from Vera Cruz papers and our correspondence. The letter from Mr. Kendall of the 14th, written at camp San Juan, is the very latest from the army. The soldiers were suffering at Vera Cruz from sickness, but the vomito had not appeared.

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune]

VERA CRUZ, April 14, 1847.

The Massachusetts sails in half an hour, and I hasten to send you the latest intelligence received from the advance of our army on its march towards Jalapa. Despatches were received here yesterday evening from Gen. Twiggs, stating that the enemy had been discovered, and that in a reconnaissance some eighteen miles beyond the National Bridge, at a point called the Black Forrest Pass, Capt. J.E. Johnson, of the Topographical Engineers – now Lieut. Col. of voltigeurs – was severely wounded with a shot through the arm and another in the thigh. It is more than probable that ere this Gen’s Twiggs and Pillow have had something of a “brush” with the enemy. Santa Anna is known to have arrived at this pass with a force said to be 15,000 strong, consisting of 2,000 regulars and the balance of irregular troops – of whom 3,000 are cavalry. – The point above named is a very strong one, and naturally affords great advantages to the enemy; but, my word for it, they will not hold it long after our troops assail it.

It is becoming quite sickly here, but as yet I hear nothing of the vomito amongst the soldiers. It is very healthy in the interior, and our army, excepting those who stay to garrison this city, will soon be beyond the influence of the impure and sickly air of the coast.

I learn that the steamship New Orleans, now here, is to make one more trip to Tampico for mules, which are much wanted here, and after the she goes to your city. Yours, &c., F.A.L.

P.S. – When Capt. Johnson was wounded in his reconnaissance, he was with an escort of the 2nd Dragoons, under Capt. Hardie. F.A.L.
I arrived in this camp at 11 o'clock last night, the road from Vera Cruz running for the most part through heavy sand. The division of Gen. Worth, from the excessive heat and wearisome road, suffered incredibly.

The news in camp is stirring. An express has come down from Gen. Twiggs to the effect that Santa Anna was before him, at Cerro Gordo, with 15,000 men, as near as could be judged from reconnoissances made by Capt. Hardie and other officers of dragoons. Lieut. Col. J.E. Johnson has been severely but not mortally wounded while examining Santa Anna's words, which appear to be a succession of breastworks on the eminence in the vicinity of Cerro Gordo. Everything would now go to show that Santa Anna is determined to make a bold stand.

A dragoon, who had been sent down express by Gen. Twiggs, was yesterday found shot by the roadside just beyond this. His papers had not been touched. The Mexicans playing a bloody and at the same time bolder game than is usual for them, as it is thought they have killed no less than fifty of our men within the last three days on the road.

Gen. Scott stopped last night nine miles from this – to-night he will reach Gen. Twigg's position. If Santa Anna is as strong as he is represented, he will probably not be attacked for two or there days.

I write in great haste.

G.W.K.

On the 11th inst. Gen. Scott, issued the following proclamation, which no one will doubt was written by him:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, VERA CRUZ,

April 11, 1847

Maj. Gen. Scott, General-in-Chief of the Armies of the United States of America

To the Good People of Mexico.

PROCLAMATION.

Mexicans! At the head of a powerful army, soon to be doubled – a part of which is now advancing on your capital – and with another army under Maj. Gen. Taylor in march from Saltillo towards San Luis Potosi – I think myself called upon to address you.

Mexicans! Americans are not your enemies; but the enemies for a time, of the men, who, a year ago, misgoverned you and brought about this unnatural war between two great Republics. We are the friends of the peaceful inhabitants of the country we occupy, and the friends of your holy religion, its hierarchy and its priesthood. The same with devout Catholics, and respected by our Government, laws and people.

For the church of Mexico, the unoffending inhabitants of the country and their property, I have from the first done every thing in my power to place them under the safeguard of martial law against the few bad men in this army.

My orders, to that effect, known to all, are precise and rigorous. Under them several Americans have already been punished, by fine, for the benefit of Mexicans, besides imprisonment; and one, for a rape, has been hung by the neck.

Is this not a proof of good faith and energetic discipline? Other proofs shall be given as often as injuries to Mexicans may be detected.

On the other hand, injuries committed by individuals, or parties of Mexico, not belonging to the public forces, upon individuals, small parties, trains of wagons and teams, or of pack mules, or on any other person or property belonging to this army, contrary to the laws of war, shall be punished with rigor – or if the particular offender be not delivered up by Mexican authorities, the punishment shall fall upon entire cities, towns or neighborhoods.

Let then, all good Mexicans remain at home, or at their peaceful occupations; but they are invited to bring in, for sale, horses, mules, beef, cattle, corn, barley, wheat, flour for bread, and vegetables. Cash will be paid for everything this army may take or purchase, and protection will be given to sellers. The Americans are strong enough to offer these assurances which, should Mexicans wisely accept, this war may soon be happily ended, to the honor and advantage of both belligerents. Then the Americans, having converted enemies into friends, will be happy to take leave of Mexico, and return to their own country.

WINFIELD SCOTT.
VERA CRUZ, April 13, 1847.

Editors Delta: As I stated in my letter of this morning, the Brigade of General Worth took up the line of march for Jalapa, but, from rather sudden indisposition, the General did not leave with them. About one o’clock an express reached him, with the important information, that the column of General Twiggs had fallen in with a large force of the enemy at Cerro Gordo, a strong position beyond Puente Nacional, and that a skirmish had taken place between Twiggs’ advance guard and the enemy, in which Captain Johnson, Topographical Engineer, was severely wounded, and several others. In half an hour after the reception of this news, General Worth had mounted his horse and was off – so sudden, indeed, that I missed him, notwithstanding I repaired to his quarters to gather the particulars as soon as I heard of it.

There is no doubt at all but that Santa Anna, with from 12,000 to 15,000 men, is between us and Jalapa. It is conceded on all sides. But if Gen. Twiggs does not whip him, he will at least keep him in check until Gen. Scott, who left yesterday reaches him, which will be to-morrow night. Maj. Gen. Patterson left here with two brigades of volunteers on Friday, and he has, no doubt, reached the advance before this hour.

Gen. Twiggs had between 2,500 and 2,700 men – choice ones, too – under his command, and I entertain little fear for his safety. Gen. Patterson marched with Shields’ and Pillow’s brigades, and all the force except the garrison of the town and Quitman’s brigade, are either at the scene of action or on the road to it.

Gen. Scott, I think, was pretty well satisfied, before his departure, that Santa Anna was in the neighborhood of Jalapa, and was making good time towards that point before the express reached him.

A terrible battle will be fought at Cerro Gordo, or there will be little or no fighting. An intelligent Mexican told me to-night, that there would be no fight, and that Santa Anna had with him four prominent members of the National Congress, with the aid of whom he hopes to negotiate a peace. I believe truly, that it is the wish of his Excellency to end the strife, but whether he will embrace this occasion, (which by the way, is an excellent once,) I cannot say.

Moses Y. Beach, of the New York Sun, is now here. He came from the city of Mexico by way of Tampico, and that in so short a time that the news of the capitulation of this place had been received three days before his departure.

CHAPARRAL.

VERA CRUZ ANCHORAGE, April 12, 1847

Eds. Delta: – A large detachment of the squadron leaves to-day for Tuspan, commanded by the Commodore in person.

The officers anticipate something of a fight at that place. It is believed that there are upwards of 2000 troops at that place, under the command of Gen. Cos, with some sixty pieces of cannon.

The squadron capture at Alvarado sixty pieces of heavy cannon, all serviceable and in fine order with the exception of three.

SUMMARY JUSTICE

Gen. Scott, (says the Vera Cruz Eagle of the 14th inst.,) is determined that, to the extent of his ability, there shall be no abuse by our citizens of the power which the torture of war has placed in our hands. He has commenced vigorously in repressing crime. A free colored man names Isaac Kirk, accused of violence on a Mexican woman, and theft, and two volunteers of the First Pennsylvania Regiment for theft, were brought before a military commission, on the 9th inst, at Vera Cruz, and tried; they were all found guilty and sentenced, Kirk to be hanged, and the others a fine of one month’s pay, each, and imprisonment for a month. Kirk was executed on the next day, (the 10th.) – A large concourse of people were present, to witness the first execution under American authority which has ever taken place since our occupation of this country. It will, no doubt, says the editor of the Eagle, prove a salutary lesson to many who would destroy the safeties guaranteed to good citizens, were not such punishments sometimes inflicted.

OFFICIAL

Letters (says the Union) have just been received at the War Department from Gen. Taylor. The last bears date on the 28th of March. A previous letter runs as follows; and it pays the proper tribute to the gallant conduct of Col. Morgan, of the Ohio volunteers:

See http://www.majbill.vt.edu/history/MxAmWar/Newspapers/Niles/Nilesg1847MayJun.htm#DATE_72.151_Taylor_CAMARGO

The last letter that our communications with the rear are now measurably secure, no interruption having taken place since that reported on the 20th ult. A train arrived on the 24th, under escort of the 1st Indiana regiment, and another was daily expected. It is understood that the regular cavalry of Urrea had retired from that quarter across the mountains; a natural result of the retreat of the main army towards San Luis and of our precautions to secure the trains. All was quiet at Saltillo – the troops in good health, and the wounded rapidly recovering. The inhabitants, both at Saltillo and Monterey, were generally returning to their homes, and, in the country, are engaged in planting their crops.

THE WAR – VOICE OF MASSACHUSETTS

Under the head of N.Y. Tribune parades the infamous resolutions of Mr. Keyes, which we yesterday published as having passed the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, and which have since passed the Senate of the State, 27 to 1. They denounce the war with Mexico as "a war of conquest, hateful in its objects, wanton, unconstitutional in its origin and character, against freedom, against humanity, against justice, against the Union, against justice, against the Union, against the Constitution, and against the Free States; waged – by a powerful nation against a weak neighbor – unnecessarily and without just cause, at immense coast of treasure and life, for the dismemberment of Mexico, and for the conquest of a portion of her territory, from which slavery has already been excluded, with the triple object of extending slavery, of strengthening the Slave Power and of obtaining the control of the Free States, under the Constitution of the United States."

They denounce the wrong and enormity of slavery, and the tyranny and usurpation of the 'slave power'' and recommend the country "to retire from the position of aggression which it now occupies towards a weak, distracted neighbor and sister Republic."

We yesterday stated that resolutions of thanks to Gen. Taylor and his army, following closely the disgraceful anti-war resolutions, had been passed by the House – but the same article in the Tribune informs us that these resolutions of thanks to Gen. Taylor were rejected by the Federal Senate, in which there is not a single Democrat.

Will any one deny that these disgraceful proceedings of a Federal Legislature, partaking so largely of the spirit of the Hartford Convention, do give "aid and comfort" to the public enemy? Their assaults upon the South, should arouse the indignation of men of all parties in the South. They show how little reason Southern Whigs have to rejoice in such allies. The Democrats of the House, to their honor be it said, voted for the resolutions of thanks to Gen. Taylor and his army, but spurned the infamous assaults upon their own Government and their sister States.

UNTITLED

We have had the pleasure of reading a very long and interesting letter from a young Virginian, and now an officer in the Missouri Mounted Volunteers. It is dated Santa Fe, 18th February, and gives a graphic sketch of the noble achievements of our army under Col. Price. – After the gallant storming of the strongly fortified Pueblo, the Mexican chiefs declared that, in the contest with the Americans, they supposed they were contending with men, but they found that they were fighting with devils, who feared nothing.

BRILLIANT EXPLOIT OF COL. JEFFERSON DAVIS

We take the following from the Matamoros Flag of the 31st of March:

The 1st Mississippi regiment, under command of Col. Jefferson Davis, coated itself over with immoral glory. Originally, it numbered 980 some odd, but suddenly transferred from the comforts and genial atmosphere of home, to the almost vertical sun of Brazos Island, last August, disease made frightful ravages amongst its men. What it lost in this way, in conjunction with the killed at Monterey, and those discharged in consequence of wounds, reduced it to considerably less than four hundred strong. With this diminished force (weakened still more by the extraction of the Tombigbee and Carroll county companies, which guarded Gen. Taylor's tent,) this skeleton regiment sustained, and repelled, with immense slaughter, a charge of three times their own number of Santa Anna's best lancers. – The lancers first bore down upon one of the Indiana regiments – (we forget whether the first of second) – and dispersed it. The Mississippians endeavored to rally them, but before they could do so, were in turn themselves charged. – Col. Davis, contrary to all custom, instead of forming the hollow square, stretched out his men in form of a crocket. The lancers came up at a rapid gallop, but so perfectly astonished was not only the chief officer, but his men at so strange a manner of receiving a charge of cavalry, that they involuntarily halted. For a few seconds they gazed upon the unruffled countenances of the riflemen opposed to them, but feeling there was no time to lose, the order “Adilante!” (forward) was given. The crocket was filled in an instant; and just as they wheeled their horses, with lances set, on both prongs, the intrepid Mississippi Colonel, standing inside the fork, called out: “Boys, fire, and at them with your knives!” Simultaneously with the sharp crack of the rifle, a deafening shout went up, and Bowie knife and revolvers flashed in the direction of the lancers. Strange as it may seem, many of the lancers were dragged from their horses and stabbed to death. In this unusual manner this splendid body of horsemen were beaten back. Captain Eustis, of first dragoons, says the achievement is unparalleled. Whether it is owing to the natural daring of the men, or the infusion into their bosoms of their Colonel's spirit, we leave every body to draw their own conclusion.

With whatever regret, truth forces from us the acknowledgement that the Arkansas cavalry fled the field. Many say that the lack of discipline – the suddenness and overpowering force of the attack, would have rendered resistance madness. We hope it may turn out so. Nevertheless, they vamoosed, and were stopped, in their headlong flight to Saltillo, by the two Mississippi companies guarding Gen. Taylor's tent. They presented their rifles and ordered them to return to the field instantly. One of the fugitives, wearing the dress of an officer, replied: “It's no use – Gen. Taylor and his whole army are cut to pieces.” Lieut. Russell, of the Carroll county company – a brother editor, by-the-bye – sprang and caught him by the collar: “Lead your men back to the field, you liar and coward,”
THE ISTHMUS OF TEHUANTEPEC

As far as we are concerned, the elaborate column in yesterday’s Whig is totally thrown away. It entirely and monstrously exaggerates our position on the subject of a ship canal to unite the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans across that narrow isthmus. We have not in any sense contended for the construction of said work by Congress – but we have zealously urged the importance of acquiring a slip of land, or the “right of way” through the isthmus. The Whig may, in it horror of the extension of our limits and the expansion of the commerce of the world, resist the expediency of such a measure; but it will scarcely be so bold as to deny, that in arranging the terms of peace with Mexico, our government can lawfully and constitutionally acquire a slip of land in that or any other portion of Mexico. Under the laws of war, we can capture any province of Mexico and indeed the whole of the country, to be held until peace is concluded, and in the negotiation we may make the acquisition of certain territory a binding condition. If we can thus obtain even whole provinces, in accordance with the laws of nations, most certainly we are not precluded from the acquisition of a narrow piece of land, sufficient to form a communication between the two oceans. And the Whig may rely upon it, it will be done. That paper may denounce, in rounded periods, the curse of extending our limits, as did the Federalists of New England in the case of Louisiana and Texas – of whose accession no one now presumes to complain, for the resources which these new commercial avenues have placed in their possession have effectually silenced all grumblings; it may, following the lead of Mr. John S. Pendleton, impeach as “fraudulent” the claims of our own fellow citizens upon Mexico for grievous spoliations of their property and injury to their persons; it may regard Mexico as the aggrieved party and our own Government as completely in the wrong, and may urge the withdrawal of our troops, without the smallest compensation in money or territory for the wrongs which we have suffered, and the blood and treasure we have expended, in this “unjust and atrocious” war; it may do all this, yet it will never induce the American people to yield to such suicidal and degrading conditions as to retreat from Mexico without acquiring indemnity, in some for or other. Money, Mexico cannot command. Territory she has in abundance, will never induce the American people to yield to such suicidal and degrading conditions as to retreat from Mexico without acquiring indemnity, in some for or other. Money, Mexico cannot command. Territory she has in abundance, which is useless to her, but will prove valuable to us. A reasonable portion of such territory, we cannot doubt, will be insisted on by our Government; and among the terms of settlement, a narrow and at present valueless slip of land across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, will be included. Can any one doubt the immense importance of the communication between the two oceans which we have referred to? Besides its commercial blessings, it may be, in the language of Mr. Dallas, “converted into the means of bringing closely together, of improving and of enriching the whole human family.”

So much for the acquisition of territory, which we hold to be fully justified by right and the law of nations. We now come to the use to be made of said strip of land at Tehuantepec. We have advocated the construction of a ship canal or railroad between the navigable rivers on either side, so as to bring the teeming riches of the Indies within the control of our own enterprising citizens, and here again we quote another graphic passage from Mr. Dallas’ letter:

“The chief objects to be attained are, a speedy communication between this country and the western coasts of North and South America, especially with our territories of Oregon and California; an easy and quick access to China, the groups of the South Sea Archipelago, the Sandwich Islands, Russian settlements, and even, before long I hope, the tempting and untouched treasures of magnificent Japan; and, finally, the facilitating and enlarging of the great source of wealth, as well as nursery of able seamen, the whale fishery.”

This much we have freely asserted and still cordially maintain; but the Whig makes us go a great deal farther. It gratuitously assumes, that we are in favor of the construction by Congress of a ship canal across their isthmus, “when the territory shall have been conquered of purchased from Mexico” – and, filled with this erroneous idea, goes on to ask, with a magisterial air, “what clause of that instrument can be tortured by sophistry, or forced by the most violent abuse of language, into the service of the advocates of this gigantic scheme, who, denying the right of Congress to improve our own harbors and rivers, under that clause of the Constitution which imposes upon that body the duty of regulating commerce “among the several States,” nevertheless have the effrontery to deduce from that very clause authority first to buy from a foreign Government “the right of way through its territory, or to compel it by force to yield it to our demand, and then to cut a great canal through the soil thus purchased or conquered?”
Now, we have never advanced, nor do we now sustain, the opinion that Congress does possess or should exercise the power of constructing this magnificent work. Whatever may be Mr. Dallas' views on the subject, we unequivocally deny such a power to Congress. We have consistently opposed the construction of Internal Improvements by the Federal Government "within the States" and as strongly object to the exercise of such a power in territory acquired of Mexico. But we contend, that, even without the aid of Congress, this grand commercial highway of nations will yet be constructed. Let us first obtain the territory, as we can by just and constitutional means, and then, in the language of Union, there can be "no doubt that the commercial interest and the commercial capital, both of our own and of other countries, uniting in so great an object, will speedily turn it to practical account. Private enterprise will doubtless relieve our Government from the necessity even of contemplating any doubtful exercise of its own powers in the construction of a ship canal beyond our own territorial borders." The Whig will now see that it has entirely distorted our position. The "monstrous absurdity" to which it refers, is all a picture of its own fancy – and our own zealous opposition to the construction of gigantic improvements by the national government, is perfectly consistent with our support of the proposition to secure the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, to be afterwards converted by private enterprise into a highway of nations. Unlike the Whig, we would turn the present war with Mexico, into which we have been forced, to a practical benefit to ourselves and the whole world. We would seize the occasion presented to us, of uniting all nations in the bonds of peace and fellowship and mutual interest. We would do so, at the same time, without exercising of claiming the least power in violation of the constitution or of justice. – All this, we conceive, can be accomplished, and the constitution, which we would cherish above all other considerations, maintained inviolate.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

From the New Orleans Delta, April 27.

We received yesterday, by the steamship Telegraph, the Matamoras Flag of the 18th inst., and the Monterey Pioneer of the 12th. We give from them such extracts as we deem of interest to our readers. General Taylor is still at the Walnut Springs. He does not contemplate leaving there for some time – not until he is fully reinforced to cross the country, attack, and, with the certainty of success, take San Luis Potosi. We should not be surprised to hear of the forces under Gen. Scott reveling in the "Halls of the Montezumas" without the co-operation of Gen. Taylor.

The rank and file of the 1st Ohio Regiment have taken measure to present Maj. L. Gindings with a sword to cost $500, as a token of their respect and thanks.

The 2d Regiment of Mississippi Volunteers have arrived a Monterey. They are all armed with rifles.

The Editor of the Matamoras Flag has recently paid a flying, or rather a steamboat visit to Camargo. Speaking of it he says:

"A happier looking people than the Mexicans on the Rio Grande we never saw, and many of them are becoming enriched by supplying the steamboats with wood, which is easily obtained, and for which they receive $250 per cord.

Camargo we found all life and bustle – apparently more business doing there than here – and merchants looking with confidence to a brighter prospect ahead. Considerable stocks of merchants' goods were being sent forward to Monterey, Saltillo, and towns along the line protected by our troops, and the trade between our merchants and the Mexicans bids fair to open again with new life and activity."

FIENDISH MURDER. – Father Ray, says the Flag, so long and favorably known as a chaplain in the army, was recently killed by a party of lancers on the road between Camargo and Monterey. What ignorance, combined with fanaticism, will do, may be judged by the butchering of this faithful old minister of peace. True to his divine calling, he forsook friends and home to make easy the couch of the dying soldier – he came with design of harm to neither Mexican or American, and was arrested in his divine vocation by those who choose the same mode of worshipping the Almighty. Strange infatuation!

The following items are copied from the Matamoras Flag:

The 1st Mississippi Regiment ("Gen. Taylor's Own," as it is styled) from what may may be considered his body guard, and are with him at the Walnut Springs, near Monterey. In and around Monterey are the Kentucky Cavalry, 2d and 3d Ohio Regiments, 3d Indiana, six companies of Virginians, and a few companies of Texan Rangers. Six companies of Virginians are occupying China and Cadarevta, which places are being fortified. The 2d Ohio Regiment is probably, by this time, on its way to Camargo; its term of service is nearly up, and the boys are homeward bound. Five companies of Kentucky Cavalry were in Camargo a few days ago, but were to return to Monterey as an escort to a train. This regiment has, also, but a brief time to remain in service, and will soon be returning.
SHAMEFUL – Persons recently arrived from Monterey, informs us that, in coming down, they beheld strewn along the road-side, where had been massacred, the teamsters who fell into the hands of Urrea's assassins in the attack on the wagon train, the decayed and mutilated remains of upwards of fifty of these unfortunate men. Where they fell, there still they are suffered to remain – their flesh made the food of vultures and wolves, and their bones scattered about by these beasts and birds of prey. Train after train has passed them by, with no more notice than a passing commentary upon their sad fate – none have stepped forth to give them burial. Humanity sickens at man's indifference to man.

CHIHUAHUA TAKEN. – The American arms have again triumphed, and the flag of the United States flutters over Chihuahua. Col. Doniphan, at the head of 950 men, accomplished this much by fighting two battles, within twelve miles of the city, in which he suffered a loss of only five killed and wounded. This information comes to us through the quartermaster at this place – he having been so informed by the quartermaster at Monterey. The loss of the Mexicans is about two hundred killed and wounded, and ten pieces of cannon captured. Despatches have been forwarded to Gen. Taylor by Colonel Doniphan. Onward rolls the republican cause. What shall arrest its progress?

DOWN UPON THEM. – We stated not long ago that Gen. Taylor had resolved on a requisition upon the states of New Leon, Coahuila, and Tamaulipas, for indemnification for the destruction of the public property of the U. States by Mexican robbers in those departments of Mexico. – Since then Col. Cushing has received an order directing him to call upon the Alcades of this place, and will accordingly pay his respects to their honors this morning. The proportion of this department is $17,500, and can be liquidated in mules at 20 dollars a head, beef cattle at 10, or corn at 3 per faega, (3 bushels.) The Alcades here will confer with the authorities of other towns, as to the amount of taxable property in their several districts, to serve as data in fixing the proportion of each. The quartermaster here will receipt for all that may be "forked over."

HONOR THE BRAVE

The citizens of Richmond county, Georgia have presented a sword to Brigadier General D. E. Twiggs, United States Army, for his distinguished services in the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. General Twiggs is a native of that county and State.

The citizens of Warren county, North Carolina, have resolved to present a sword to Major Braxton Bragg, United States Army, for his gallant conduct and efficient services at Fort Brown, Monterey and Buena Vista. It was he that commanded a battery of the splendid Flying Artillery at Buena Vista, and so promptly and fearlessly dealt our "more grape," under the order of General Taylor.

BATTLE OF CERRO GORDO.

From the New Orleans Picayune, May 1

FURTHER DETAILS. – The letter below, which we give to day from Mr. Kendall, did not appear in our extra of yesterday – we had not time to print it. It will show the dispositions made for the attack by our troops, for every thing done by General Scott evinced his skill and science as well as gallantry.

Many inquiries are made of us by friends and acquaintances as the wounded. Mr. Kendall’s letters give all the information which we possess, and it must be recollected that they were written under circumstances of excitement, and in great haste. It is a delicate matter for gentlemen who have reached the city, from the field of the conflict, to speak of the state of the wounded with any positiveness. In individual cases, their hopes may be blasted by the result, and again their fears amounting almost to certainty, may, in other cases, be happily disappointed. We must wait for further arrivals, to dispel the uncertainty which hangs over the fate of many brave men.

In this connection, all will read with pleasure that Captain Johnston is doing so well. This gentleman, Captain of the Topographical Engineers, and appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the Voltigeurs, was so desperately wounded, that little hope was felt for him. He has a strong constitution, and is in fine spirits, and Captain Hughes thinks he will recover.

The health of the troops at Vera Cruz is absolutely improving. Great ameliorations are making in the city, but, above all things, it has been undergoing a thorough purification. There is no yellow fever there, nor other malignant epidemic. This is good news.
Ampudia was in the battle of Cerro Gordo, but neither he nor Santa Anna ventured within the lines which their countrymen so strenuously defended. They were prepared to run the moment the day should seem to go against them, and run they did. Ampudia came near being taken close to Jalapa, and to save himself had to take to the fields. But we will not longer detain the reader from our correspondence.

PLAN DEL RIO, MEXICO,

April 16, 1847 – Evening.

Meeting Lieut. McLane of the navy this afternoon, at Puente Nacional and on his way here, I joined his party and rode over. Major. Beall, with a small squad of dragoons, was also along with us. On the road, some six miles back, we came up with a forage party of the 2d Dragoons, under Lieut. Anderson, and also Capt. Caswell’s company of Tennessee volunteers which had been out after beef the latter had had a brisk skirmish with a party of rancheros, in which Capt. ? two men wounded, one of them, a young man of great promise, named J.L. Roberson, badly. His thigh bone was completely shattered and the poor fellow’s sufferings were most acute as they bore him along in a wagon over the rough road. The Mexicans stood their ground in the chaparral with some little bravery at first but were finally routed in every direction.

I find all excitement and bustle here. The Mexicans, under Santa Anna, are occupying a think of works along the road, the nearest of which is about a mile and a quarter from Gen. Scott’s headquarters in a direct line. The road this side is cut up and barricaded, and every positive means of defence and annoyance has been resented to. Beyond the first work there are three or four others, completely commanding the gorge through which the road to Jalapa runs – these fortifications on hills, and rising so as to defend one another. It is thought that Santa Anna has 20,000 men with him – the lowest estimate give him 15,000 – and with these he has 24 pieces of field artillery, besides some 14 heavy cannon in position. Some of the prisoners and desertors from the enemy’s camp even place higher estimates, both as to the number of men and guns.

To turn these different works, a road has been partially cut through the rough ground and chaparral to the right; and although the reconnaissance is as yet imperfect, it is still thought that a point near the enemy’s farthest work can be reached. Gen. Twiggs, with his division, is to march at 8 o’clock to-morrow morning by the new road, and in the following morning it is thought the attack will commence on the works on this side. If Gen. Twiggs succeeds in reaching the rear of Santa Anna, and he will use every exertion, I do not see what is to save him. He is generally fox enough to have plenty of holes out of which to escape, however, and from the great difficulty of reconnoitering his position fully, he may have some means of escape here. The general impression now in camp is that this is to be the great battle of the war; and the immense natural strength of Santa Anna’s works would justify the belief.

The Mexicans are more on the alter than they have ever been before, and more bold in throwing out their pockets. Not a party can go near their works without being fired upon, and yesterday a soldier of the 7th Infantry tell with no less than seven bullets in his body. It is said that Almonte is with Santa Anna, as also all the principal generals of the country.

Gen. Worth left Puente Nacional this afternoon with is division, and will be up during tongith. He started a little after 1 o’clock this morning, with near 2,000 picked men, determined to make a forced march through; but learning on the road that the attack upon the Mexican works was not to commence as soon as anticipated, he returned to Puente Nacional after marching a mile and a half. Capt. Pemberton, one of his aids, rode over here last evening after dark, and returned with the information that the attack had been postponed.

The wounds of Capt. Johnston are doing well. I regret to sate that Gen. P.F. Smith is confined to his bed, utterly unable either to ride or walk. – He has a violent inflammation of the right ankle and knee, resembling crysipelas, which from neglecting several days when he should have remained in his cot, has finally compelled him to lay up. I will write again to-morrow.

Yours,
G.W.K.

PLAN DEL RIO, Mexico,

April 17, 1847 – 8 o’clock, A.M.

General Worth’s division came up during last night and this morning, ready for any thing that turns up. A section of the siege train, comprising two twenty four pounders and an eight inch howitzer will be along this forenoon. A subsistence train is also close by, and is very much needed, as the army is nearly out of provisions.

Gen. Twigg’s division will march by 9 o’clock.-The 1st brigade, composed of the 1st artillery, 2nd dragoons and Captain Kearney’s company of the 1st and 7thinfantry, is under command of Col. Harney during the illness of Gen. Smith; the 2d brigade consists of the 4th artillery and 2d and 3d infantry, under Col. Riley; and to these must be added Taylor’s battery and Talcott’s mountain howitzer and rocket men, acting under the immediate orders of General Twiggs. The latter company will probably have plenty of work on their hands, as this is just the country for their operations.

I have written this off so as to be able to send you an account of the operations thus far in case anyone is going to Vera Cruz. The road is now so much infested by small parties of the enemy that it is deemed imprudent for a single man to start, let him be ever so well mounted. If I have another chance to write to-day I shall improve it. G. W. K.

Further Details of the Battle.

The "American Eagle," published at Vera Cruz issued an extra on the 200th ult., from which we extract copiously, though there are many repetitions in it:

The positions occupied by the enemy were as strong as nature, combined with art, could make them, and could you but see them whilst reading these times you would wonder at their surrender. The Cerro Gordo, the most prominent of the defences, commands the Jalapa road for two or three miles a heavy battery here, in the hands of skilful men, would keep an army in there for many a day, if not entirely prevent its passage. The importance of this point was soon made apparent to all, and last night, about 12 o'clock, a piece of cannon was hauled up a neighboring eminence, which, after sending sundry shot upon the enemy, was found of little avail; and in the morning the Cerro Gordo was stormed and carried – not, however, before the commander-in-chief of the Mexicans had secured himself a safe retreat, by falling back, with his body-guard, several miles upon the Jalapa road.

In the mean time, the other defences were being stormed by our troops. There forts, situated near to our camp, and upon three heights adjacent to each other – each commanding the others – were the objects of attack; and the carrying of them was the task of the volunteers. The tenure one of these forts runs further in than the others, and this being the object of storm, the advance of the stormers had to undergo the fire of the right and left and centre – the latter of which prudently withheld its fire until our men had advanced within forty yards of the guns, and, then the dogs of war were let loose with such fury that our men were driven from their position, with great slaughter – the 2d Tennesseenees, who were in advance, having a large number of killed and wounded. Before the volunteers had time to renew the attack, the enemy had surrendered – driven, as they had been, from their favorite position of Cerro Gordo.

Taking all things into consideration, this has been a great fight, and a great victory; one calculated to shine brilliantly in the chapter of those achieved in Mexico by our arms.

The Mexican forces on the height of Cerro Gordo were the 3d and 4th Light Infantry, the 3d and 5th Regiments of the line, and 6 pieces of artillery, with the requisite number of Cavalry. – Col. Obando, chief of artillery, was killed, and Gen. Vasquez, general of division. Many of our officers were of opinion that this general was no other than Gov. Morales.

Our force consisted of the 2d, 3d, and 7th Infantry and Mounted Riflemen, and Steptoe's battery. Capt. Mason, of the Rifles, was severely wounded, having lost his left leg. Lieut. Ewell of the 7th Infantry, was severely wounded. Capt. Patten, of the 2d, left hand shot off.

On the 18th, Lieut. Jarvis, of the 2d Infantry, was wounded in ascending the first hill.

On the top of the Cerro Gordo, the scene was truly horrible. From the Jalapa road, dead bodies of the enemy could be seen on every spot where the eye was directed, until they literally covered the ascent to the height. There is about half an acre of level ground on the top of the mountain, and here was collected together the wounded of both armies, and the dead of our own. Side by side were lying the disabled American and the Mexican, and our surgeons were busy amputating and dressing the wounds of each – lotting them in turns, unless the acute pain of some suffer further along cause him to cry out, when he would be immediately attended to.

The pioneer parties of our men were picking up the wounded and bringing them in from every part of the ascent to the height. From the side towards the river, where the storming party of Gen. Twiggs's division made the charge, most of our men suffered, and many of the enemy, also, for they made a desperate stand; but when they gave way, and started in confusion down the hill, was the time they most suffered, many of them receiving the balls of our men in their backs.

The charge on Cerro Gordo was one of those cool yet determined ones so characteristic of the American soldier. From the time that our troops left the hill nearest that prominent height the fire was incessant, and they had to fight their way foot by foot, till they gained the summit, from which place the enemy gave way after a very short resistance.

Our victory is complete. Those of the enemy who escaped were driven in all directions by their pursuers, and many of them out down on the road.

Gen. Twiggs, who followed them after taking Cerro Gordo, approached within three miles of Jalapa, and finding no force of the enemy, encamped for the night. He is in the town before this time.
Capt. Merrill, of the 2d Dragoons, returned from Twiggs's camp last night, and is of opinion that nothing but a small body guard is with Santa Anna.

Santa Anna's private carriage was captured, and amongst his effects was found the sum of $18,000, which is now in the hands of the quartermaster, and an additional leg of cork for his Excellency's use in case of emergency.

I noticed one officer of the enemy shot through the head on Cerro Gordo, who was a conspicuous man at Vera Cruz.

Gen. La Vega, who is again in our clutches, looked as dashing and fine as ever. He did not seem the least disconcerted, but rode in from the battle field, by the side of Gen. Scott, laughing and talking as though he was once more on his way to New Orleans.

Gen. Shields was mortally wounded, and I hear this morning that he is dead. He behaved most gallantly and his mishap is deeply deplored.

Gen. Pillow was wounded in the arm, but slightly.

Major Sumner, of the 2d Dragoons, was shot in the head, but is considered out of danger.

The force of the Mexicans, at the lowest, is set down at 12,000. The officers of the Mexican army are being paroled whilst I write this, and with their soldiers are being sent about these business – our commander being opinion that he can whip them easier than feed them. The generals will be sent to New Orleans; among them you will have the second appearance of La Vega, he having refused again to be paroled.

The second in command to Santa Anna is a man as black as the ace of spades, with a name something like Stinton.

All Santa Anna's plate was taken, and his dinner, cooked yesterday, eaten by our own officers.

I am sorry to say that Gen. Patterson and Smith were both confined to their beds by sickness, and were unable to go into the fight with their commands.
his shot and shells, and the city and its formidable castle surrender to the American arms. Here, then, the victories of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Matamoras, Revnosa, Camargo, Monterey, Tampico, Buena Vista, Vera Cruz, and San Juan de Uloa; when General Santa Anna and the government exclaim, 'not yet – no peace yet. You must withdraw your troops.'

While much is due to humanity in terminating the war, something is due to national honor; something do we say? everything id due to the honor of the country: as often as we tendered the hand of conciliation in the hour of victory, it has been spurned with indignity, as if we had been the conquered and prostrate foe sueing for mercy. We can sue no longer. We must now advance until Mexico sues. It is her turn to beg, - we have done more than our share. - We are pleased, therefore, to perceive that the government is directing fresh columns to march to Mexico. Six thousand troops will soon be on their way to reinforce Gen. Taylor, and when he captures San Luis de Potosi, he will form a junction with General Scott, and with 25,000 men will march to the city of Mexico, and if resistance is made, storm the place, and capture Santa Anna and the whole government; and if they exhibit their old and determined spirit of further resistance, send the General, his staff and all the Generals in the service to New Orleans, and quietly take possession of the capital; restore, law and order, and govern it justly.

All Mexico will then fall, and what will be most desirable and beneficial, we shall disband their army – call upon the people to establish a Democratic form of government, give them a free Constitution, organize for them a national guard, set industry and enterprize at work, develop their great resources, and place them on the road to prosperity, and then make such a peace as shall be honorable to Mexico, and glorious to the United States. Let us hear no more therefore at this time of our again proposing peace. On to the Capital."

ISTHMUS OF TEHUANTEPEC

We heard it stated yesterday, (says the N. O. Delta,) that there were officers now in our city, who were to proceed shortly with their commands to this point in Mexico, the possession of which had been considered of so much advantage, as securing the most feasible route for the contemplated canal to connect the Gulf of Mexico and Pacific Ocean. A topographical survey of the country is to be made under the protection of a large naval and military force.

June 1847

June 1, 1847, REv64i9p2c1, From the Brazos

U.S. Steamer Trumbal arrived on Saturday from the Brazos. We have received by this arrival the Matamoras Flag of 15th, and the Saltillo Picket Guard of 3d.

The following passengers came in the Trumball: Capts. Webster, and Crowenshields, Mass, Volunteers; Captain Claiborne of U.S. steamer, Col. Cross; Capt. Lansing, U.S.A.; Rev Mr. McElroy, Chaplain, U.S.A; Lieut. Frost, U.S. Voltiguers; M. Field, Mr. Coolridge, Mrs. Field, and 40 deck passengers, principally discharged volunteers.

The Picket Guard contains the following result of the court martial in case of Gen Lane and Col. Bowles:

INQUIRY IN THE CASE OF GEN. LANE.

Facts. –That at the battle of Buena Vista, on the 22d February, Gen. Lane commanded the 2d and 3d Regiments of Indiana Volunteers; that on the 23d he was in immediate command of the 2d Regiment of the Indiana Volunteers, and three pieces of artillery under the command of Lieut. O'Brien, and that the 2d Indiana Volunteers retreated from the field without any orders from Gen. Lane, on the 22d of February; but through the exertions of Gen. Lane and other officers from one hundred and fifty to two hundred men of the 2d Regiment Indiana Volunteers were rallied and attached to the Mississippi Regiment and the 3d Indiana Regiment, and remained with them on the field of battle during the remainder of the day.

Opinion. –The court are of opinion that during the whole period of the 22d and 23d of February, 1847, Brig. Gen. Lane conducted himself as a brave and gallant officer; and that no censure is attached to him for the retreat of the 2d Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

INQUIRY IN THE CASE OF COL. BOWLES.
Facts. – In reference to the first charge, it appears from the evidence, that Bowles is ignorant of the company, battalion or brigade drills, and that the maneuver of the evening of the 22d February, indicated in the third specification of that charge, was indicative of an ignorance of battalion drill.

In relation to the second charge, in appears from evidence before the court, that Colonel Bowles gave the order, “cease firing and retreat;” that Gen. Lane was present, and that he had no authority from Gen. Lane to give such orders.

It also appears that Col. Bowles retreated after having given the aforesaid command; but that he did not shamefully runaway from the enemy, nor did he hide himself in any ravine from the enemy or from his regiment.

It appears, too, that Col. Bowles dismounted from his horse in rear of his regiment; but there is no evidence to show that he did so to protect himself from the enemy.

The court find that the fact of Col. Bowles having given the order above mentioned, did induce the regiment to retreat in disorder.

Col. Bowles gave this order with the intention of making the regiment leave its position; but the court does not find that he had been particularly ordered to maintain and defend it.

Opinion. – With reference to the first charge, the court is of the opinion that Col. Bowles is ignorant of the duties of the Colonel; but the court would remark that ill health, and absence on account of ill health, have, in some degree, prevented him from fitting himself for the duties of that office.

The court is of opinion that, at a time Col. Bowles gave the order “retreat,” he was under the impression that the artillery had retreated, when, in fact, that battery had gone to an advanced position, under the orders of Gen. Lane, which orders had not been communicated to Col. Bowles.

And, in conclusion, the court find that throughout the engagement, and through the whole day, Col. Bowles evinced no want of personal courage or bravery; but that he did manifest a want of capacity and judgement as a commander.

[From the Matamoras Flag, May 15th.]

General Cadwallader, and staff, are at the camp of instruction, (Palo Alto,) fourteen miles below this place. Also, Col. A. C. Ramsay; Pennsylvania regiment; Lt. Col. Fay, 10th regiment; Major Morgan, 11th do; Major Talbott, 16th do.; Captains Carr, Lyberg Moore, Irwin, Waddell and Cummings, 11th regiment. Tow companies of dragoons, Captains Butler and Merrick. Five companies of voltiguers, Captains Bernard, Biddle, Howard, Edwards and Churchill. Tow companies of the 16th regiment, Captains Hendricks and Brennan –three companies of the 10th, and Captain Pitman's company of the 9th. These troops will remain at Palo Alto under strong discipline, and from thence, it is rumored, transferred to Vera Cruz.

Col. Humphrey Marshall's Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry were in Camargo at last accounts on their way home. They will probably reach here in a day or two, and not be disbanded until they arrive at New Orleans.

It is stated in the Monterey Pioneer, upon the authority of a gentleman from San Luis Potosi, that but a few hundred effective troops were in that city and that the hospitals were filled with the sick an wounded, who were (illegible) of attention. A report (illegible) there that Gen. Taylor was within three days march of the city, which caused hundreds of the inhabitants to ramos with their property.

The Monterey Pioneer thinks that an advance upon San Luis is designed by Gen. Taylor, as unusual activity prevails in all the departments, and four trains, loaded with subsistence stores, have recently arrived at that place.

Lieutenant Waters, of the Alexandria company, Virginia regiment, died, a short time since at the town of China.

ESCAPED. – A young man named John Davis (an American we believe) was confined in prison Tuesday, charged with selling arms and ammunition, to Mexicans. Through the insecurity of the prison, or the carelessness of the sentry, he effected his escape during Thursday night last.

Romano Paz, a notorious Mexican robber and murderer was captured in the vicinity of Old Reynosa, by Captain Reid of the steamer Corvette, and brought down to this city on Wednesday last, where he is now imprisoned. It appears that he holds the rank of captain under Canales, and visited the settlements near Reynosa, for the purpose of inducing or forcing the Rancheros to join his standard. The people were not disposed to join him, and sought an opportunity to place him in the hands of the Americans. This was effected by informing Captain Reid of his whereabouts and designs, who collected a force from the boat, and made him prisoner, at a ranchero where he had been quartered for several days.

Gen. Urrea has issued a proclamation to the citizens of Cadareyta, very similar in tone to that of Santa Anna. He calls upon the town for a contribution towards supporting the war; and also orders under arms all the able bodied bales between ages of 16 and 45. Immediately after having issued this proclamation, he set off for the city of Mexico.
We understand that Mr. Simonds, beef contractor, well known to the army here, was attacked a few days ago, while on his way to Monterey, by some Mexican robbers. He was shot through the knee, so that the limb had to be amputated. One of the robbers was killed in the encounter. They made nothing that haul.

We regret to see, by the following letter, that there is a report of the defeat of Col. DONIPHAN. It comes, however, through Mexican sources, and we sincerely hope, will prove to be unfounded:

[Special Correspondence of the Picayune.]

CAMP WALNUT SPRINGS, (Near Monterey,) May 2, 1847.

There is a report here, derived from pretty good authority, from Col. Doniphan’s force, and of a very unwelcome character. It is derived from an attaché of the army as Silenas, a small town within about forty miles of this place, and he obtained the information from Mexicans who had just arrived. It is to the effect, that Col. Doniphan’s force had been attacked at a pas called Sierra Gordon, about half way between Saltillo and Chihuahua, by a Mexican force from Durango under Gen. Reiz –of whom I never recollect of hearing before –and that a Col. D. had been defeated with severe loss, and all his artillery captured. There may be some truth in this report, as the Col. was once en route to join Gen. Wool’s command at Saltillo. All we can do, is hope that the reported is unfounded, and await authentic information. The train will be off in a few moments, and I have not the time to write more.

J. E. D.

The Picket Guard of the 3d, however, makes no allusion to any report of this kind, and the only notice we see in it relative to Col. D., is the following:

‘Col. Doniphan must be within a few day’s march of this place. This may truly be called the marching command. But they have not hurt themselves much by it, if Mexican stories are believed, according to which they were not very scrupulous as to whose mules they took on the way, and infantry as well as cavalry were all mounted. They have not received a cent of pay since they loft home, nor clothing from the Government, so that, as far as outward appearances are concerned, they must be a shabby looking set. It appears they are generally clothed in buckskin. There is no doubt, however, they are some in a fight. Some English gentlemen, who arrived yesterday from Durango, report Col. Doniphan to have started from Chihuahua on the 1st of April for this part of the country, by way of San Jose del Parral. On the route they saw Gen. Garcia Conde on his way to Durango with about 150 men, having as prisoner General Heredia, who commanded at the battle of the Sacamentos. He is accused to treason, and of being fond of American gold. All the rest of the troops had dispersed for their homes. Durango was in a great state of alarm, dreading the arrival of Gen. Wool, which was expected by them daily. Mr. James Magoffin was a prisoner, with the city for his prison limits, but well treated by the Mexicans. Everything was quiet in California, the whole country in possession of the Americans, and a very great influx of families and settlers from Oregon.”

June 1, 1847, REv64i9p2c2, From Vera Cruz, Mexican Treachery

The schooner Whig, Captain Rayner, arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, May 22d, with dates to the 15th. The N. Orleans Bulletin publishes some extracts from the Eagle of that date. There appears to have been no later news from Gen. Scott.

The Eagle expresses the belief that the army will remain at Puebla until the fall.

Lieut Brock, and 33 privates, Tennessee Cavalry, company F, came passengers in the Whig.

U.S. sloop Germantown, Commander Buchanan, had arrived off Vera Cruz, but sailed immediately for Anton Lizardo.

[From Vera Cruz Eagle.]

FROM PEROTE. –We saw a letter on Thursday, from Perote, written by one of the principal officers of the army, in which he states that the command would move in a day or two for Puebla, where, it is reported, active preparations are making for a proper reception of our troops, and he intimates that they will soon move upon the Capital. Doubts are entertained by many, however, as to this movement. Our opinion is not founded upon the most positive information, but we believe that Gen. Scott will remain at Puebla, after his arrival there, for a season, at least, and probably until the beginning of autumn. In the meantime, should no decidedly favorable step not have been taken by the government of this country, the most energetic measures will be pursued, with a view to end the strife. The United States possesses the most ample means, if a course of this kind is demanded, but nothing else that the most unpardonable provocation will compel us to resort to them. –Peace has been sued for so often by us, that it has at length amounted to humiliation, and it cannot be expected that much longer procrastination can be borne with. “There is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue,” says the proverb, and we believe that the point cannot be far distant. When reached, it is probably that it will be a dark and dreadful day for the land of the Aztecs.
We take from the Eagle the following account of the recent surprise at Santa Fe:

MEXICAN TREACHERY. —One of those bloody and brutal acts which seem to be characteristic of the lower order of the Mexican people, was committed at Santa Fe, about 8 or 9 miles from this city, on Wednesday night last. It appears that a detachment of seventy-odd dragoons, belonging to the command of Col. Harney, left Jalapa some days since in command of Lieut. Hill, with the intention of visiting this city to procure a further supply of horses. On arriving at Santa Fe, nine of the men were left behind in consequence of illness on their part, and the fatigue of their horses.

Lieut. Hill and his command continued on, feeling that those who were left behind were perfectly safe, and soon afterwards reached this city, where he has been detained, although it was his expectation that he would have returned the next morning. Nothing further was heard from the men until Thursday morning, when news reached here informing us that a large party of Mexicans had attacked and literally cut them to pieces in a most shocking manner. One of them was killed on the spot, and five others were mutilated in such a manner as to strike any one with horror at the sight. Means of transportation were furnished, and the survivors brought to the city as soon as possible. One of the number, however, died on Thursday night, and two others were reported last evening, by the surgeons, as unable to survive their wounds during the night. The hand of one was cut off above the wrist. The abdomen of another was cut in such a manner as to allow his bowels to protrude. Another has several sabre cuts on his head, penetrating the skull, and the arms and bodes of others are hacked and mangled to as to render the description almost incredible. Captain Walker left this city on Thursday morning, accompanied by his Mounted Riflemen, in search of the murderers, and encountered a large body of Mexicans, whom he attacked and succeeded in killing four. A yet, we believe there has not been anything received of a positive nature in regard to the number killed. However much this kind of warfare is to be deprecated by us, we can see no other alternative than to fight them in their own way, if they will no fight us fairly. We still trust that some measure will be discovered by which this cowardly system of butchery may be obviated, and that when American blood must flow, it may be in open and honorable combat; the enemy in front, instead of sneaking behind the back.

The editor of the "Picket Guard" very vigorously defends the two Indiana regiments. He says:

"It is due to Indiana to say, that they four rifle companies from the two regiments of that brigade opened the fight on the mountain on the 22d, that the 2d regiment opened the fight on the morning of the 23d; that the 3d Indiana lost the last man that was killed on the field, Capt. Taggart, of company E., and occupied, in conjunction with the 1st Illinois, the advanced position on the night of the 23d, when the enemy drew off."

MAJOR GENERAL PATTERSON. —In the General Orders of Gen. Scott, directing the manner of march of the first body of the volunteers, returning home to be discharged, he says:

"Maj. Gen. Patterson, rendered for the moment, supernumerary with this army, will accompany the returning volunteers of his late gallant division, and render them such assistance, on the way as he well knows how to give. He will report, in person, as Washington, or by letter from New Orleans, for further orders from the War Department.

"This distinguished general officer will please accept the thanks of the General-in-Chief for the gallant, able and efficient support uniformly received from the second in rank of this army."

RETURNED VOLUNTEERS. —Brig. R. Russell, from Vera Cruz, with three companies Tennessee Volunteers, and Regiment, and 1 company of Kentucky Volunteers.

Brig Billow, with 140 of the 2d Illinois Regiment.

Ship Pharsalia arrived yesterday, with about 280 of the 1st Tennessee Cavalry, with Colonel Thomas, Maj. Waterhouse, Capts. Cooper, Newman, Haines and (illegible); Lieuts Richardson, Brownlow, McCabe, Leftwich, Chambless, Kirk, Donnelly, Allen, McKnight, Johnston, Woodson, Gossett, Bell, Allen and Anderson; Surgeon Alsop, and Assistant Surgeons Walker and Donoho. —*[N.O. REv64i9p2c4, Prospects of Peace

June 1, 1847
Of the charges most bitterly urged against the Administration by the Whig press, is that of boundless "lust of dominion," and the most immoderate conditions required of Mexico in the negotiation of a peace. It has over and over again been asserted, that the President would be satisfied with nothing less that the acquisition of the whole of Mexico. This wholesale denunciation has been fully met, but the Whig papers still keep up the cry. We are, however, glad to see that one of them has the firmness to represent the Administration as not an uncompromising "land robber," or as a monstrous Ogre, voracious enough to swallow the whole of Mexico one meal. A letter from Washington in the N.Y. Courier refers to the statement in the New Orleans papers, that Mr. Trist has arrived at Vera Cruz, armed with authority to negotiate a peace with Mexico, in co-operation with Gen. Scott; that he (Mr. Trist) had held long and confidential conversations of such importance as to justify the belief that "Mr. Trist is the government in Mexico." So much only of this "important mission," says the Washington writer, had publicly transpired at N. Orleans; and he proceeds to supply, upon the authority of a "well informed correspondent" of that city, the following additional particulars, which, if true, are important enough. --We have been so often deceived buy the "signs of the times" in regard to the operation of cause and effect in Mexican policy, that we shall not now express an opinion as to the result. The statements, however, reveal the fact that, in the view of one Whig at least, the Administration is anxious to close the war upon terms which ought to be entirely satisfactory to Mexico. If, therefore, Mexico shall madly refuse to negotiate after the maganimous and liberal conduct on our part, the whole world will hold our Government free from blame for the continuance of the war:

"That Mr. Trist had communicated from Vera Cruz with Gen. Scott at Jalapa; that, in all probability, Mr. Trist would proceed with the next train to Jalapa; and that the negotiation might, perhaps, be brought very suddenly to a favorable conclusion. This is not absolutely certain; but from the diplomatic survey of Gen. Scott, and a reconnoitering officer in Mexico, the exceedingly strong probability now is that we shall soon have peace. Buena Vista was a more brilliant affair that Cerro Gordo; but the results of the latter are likely to be of incalculably more importance. --If Scott, after conquering the army of Mexico in the field, should now, in conjunction with Mr. Trist sign a treaty of peace in "the Halls of the Montezuamas," he will have achieved glory enough, even although he should never be President.

"Rest assured, there was a perfect understanding with Scott and the Administration, and that the terms on which both coincide in the opinion are" Upper California and New Mexico, and no other or greater portion of territory; and the right o the way across the Isthmus if it can be obtained --These terms are so much more moderate that were anticipated by Mexico, that whenever they are promulgated it is believed that the popular voice of Mexico will be clamorous for peace. --Unless, then, the Mexicans are more besotted than Hottentots or Esquimaux, we mush have peace."

June 4, 1847, REV64101p1c5, Late From the City of Mexico

We received on Monday evening papers from the city of Mexico to the 8th inst., forwarded by Mr. Kendall. They are a week later than any papers before received. We were too crowded yesterday to make much use of them, and now recur to them, as they contain some news of the importance, yet more rumors, and relate many facts which serve to illustrate the state of affairs in the interior of Mexico.

The Mexicans seize upon the slightest pretext of rumor for believing they have inflicted injury upon our forces. It was reported and believed at Puebla on the 9th inst., that the guerrillas of New Leon and Coahuila had attacked and gained possession of a supply train, at the same time wounding Gen. Taylor.

Another rumor, credited both in Puebla and the city of Mexico, is that Gen. Scott was ill at Jalapa with dysentery, and that for this reason and the want of troops he would defer his advance upon Puebla. There is no foundation for the rumor of his illness, we are happy to say.

Another Mexican story was that Gen. Urrea was threatening Tampico, if he had not already taken it; and yet another story was to the effect that a party of guerrillas had seized $60,000 in gold belonging to the Americans. By such miserable rumors the people of the capital are continually deluded. It serves to feed their false hopes, to keep in circulation idle reports of this kind.

A Puebla paper of the 9th instant says, that the President Substitute has at last ordered General Santa Anna to be supplied with men, muskets, heavy ordnance, and, more than all, with money. There would appear to have been some difficulty between General Bravo, "the commander of the Army of the Centre," and Anaya, before the demands of Santa Anna were complied with. From the intimations thrown out, we infer that Bravo was reluctant to spare any means from the capital.

In our last, we alluded to a letter from Durango, dated the 26th of April. If is so important and significant, that we give it entire:

"Blessed be God, we are now relieved from the fear which the coming of the 4 Yankees had spread amongst us, as they have returned to Chihuahua, in as much as a general massacre has been attempted by the conquered New Mexicans and Pasenos, joined with a tribe of Navajoe Indians --all led on, as is said, by the few padres who serve in New Mexico. The insurrection, as it has been described to us, was so decisive, and made with such effect, that even the women flew at the throats of our Texas neighbors, the number killed by them being very considerable. They say also that the New Mexicans encouraged by their triumph, are coming to avenge the outrage upon Chihuahua. God grant it may be true!"

The insurrection here alluded to is doubtless that which has already been effectually quelled. Our advises from Santa Fe, via St. Louis, are to the 19th of April, when all was quiet there, and the officers of justice were meeting out punishment to those engaged in the murderous insurrection. If anything were required to justify the measures of severity which have been taken at Taos by American authorities, we think the spirit of the letter we have just given is of itself sufficient.

The Legislature of the powerful State of Jalisco has appropriated the revenue derived from tobacco in the State, diverting it altogether from the use of the Central Government. It is well known that the government derives a large portion of its income from this source. The Republicano reproaches the authorities of Jalisco with this diversion of funds, and adds: "If the Union is to be deprived of these general revenues, and if obstacles are to be opposed whenever an attempt is made to create new sources of income, let us ask the authorities of the States in what manner can the war be carried on?"

The prohibition of the freedom of the press is to continue in force so long as the capital remains in a state of siege. Whereby the foreign enemy is indirectly protected and the defense of the country rendered every day more difficult.

The decree suppressing the liberty of the press within the Federal District of Mexico, mentioned in Mr. Kendall’s letter which we published yesterday, is dated the 5th inst., and was promulgated the following day. By it the press is forbidden to engage in political and military discussions, or to express censure upon the supreme authorities, or in any way to throw discredit upon the army or its commanders. The preamble alleges that the abuse of the liberty of the press has been scandalous; that the papers have promoted dissensions, reciprocal distrust and disunion, whereby the foreign enemy is indirectly protected and the defense of the country rendered every day more difficult.

The prohibition of the freedom of the press is to continue in force so long as the capital remains in a state of siege. The same paper mentions that the office for the administration of the tobacco revenues, with all the attaches thereto, is to be removed from the capital, with an escort of military for its protection. This, says the Republicano, strikes us as very strange, for if the office is to seek a place where it cannot be attacked by the enemy, for this very reason the military and the battalions of the Guard ought not to go there.

There is a great destitution of arms, as is already known, throughout the country. It having been reported that there were six thousand muskets for sale at Guadalajara, the authorities of the State of Guanajuato dispatched Gen. Alcayaga thither at once to buy them all up for the State. It turned out that there were none to be had, but the incident gibs color to the idea that the individual States are now looking to their own defense rather than relying upon the General Government for safely on contributing their means to the Central Government.

El Republicano of the 7th inst. comes out in a noble article rebuking the Government for this measure. It makes an earnest appeal to the conscience and understanding of President Anaya to retrace the false step. In the course of the article the army comes in for a large share of the indignation of the Editors, and some wholesome truths are told to Mexicans on the subject. –“Would to God,” says the (illegible) army had been brought into disrepute by the press, instead of by a series of inglorious defeats, which in the course of a single year have covered with shame the name of Mexico, and increased (illegible) of the well-organized armies of Europe.” And again the Republicano reproaches the army with having cost the country the enormous sum of three hundred millions of dollars since its independence was achieved; and yet, from want of discipline, it has never been able to maintain any established order of things; it has been torn by incessant civil wars; it now supports officers enough for an army eight times more numerous that the Mexican army numbers, and promotions in it have been gained by distinctions in civil war along. Moreover, to support (illegible) country (illegible) been crushed with an immense foreign debt and involved in a frightful bankruptcy. Under such circumstances the country had a right to expect that when the opportunity occurred for meeting a foreign foe, the army should respond with something more than a series of disgraceful routs. We only indicate the tone of the article in the Republicano towards the army. That paper has no further faith in it, and relies solely upon guerrilla warfare for the salvation of the country. It seems strange that a paper which reasons so powerfully upon the freedom of the press –we would reproduce the article were it not several columns long –and which appreciates so perfectly the desperate state of the country and the enormous burden of a licentious soldiery, should still be the steadfast advocate of the continuance of the war. But looking to the future of Mexico, it is gratifying to see such a paper as El Republicano pointing out to its countrymen the insupportable grievance of such a military establishment as that Mexico now supports.

Our readers will be interested to know what measure have been taken in the capital to defend it upon the approach of our troops. We cannot do this more effectually than by giving the whole of a proclamation promulgated by Gov. Trigueros on the 7th inst:

PROCLAMATION

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Centre yesterday addressed me the following decree:

Gen. Worth at Puebla –Advance of the Army – Herrera Elected President of Mexico – Capture of (illegible)

At an early hour this morning (says the N.O. Delta, May 27) the steamship Palmetto arrived from Vera Cruz bringing dates from that city to the 22d and from Jalapa to the 21st. We are in receipt of our full correspondence, but have only time to give the following brief extracts, at this late hour.

Our correspondent “Mustang,” writes from Jalapa, under the date of the 21st inst. – “We have positive information of the arrival of Gen. Worth’s command at Puebla. On the approach of our army to the city Gen. Santa Anna, who was there at the time supplying his troops with some necessities, sent out a detachment to engage Gen. Worth until he could procure his supplies but the encounter was soon over, and Santa Anna and his army compelled to fly. In the skirmish there were four Mexicans killed – our loss none. He has retreated towards the city of Mexico. One report says he is at Santa Martin, a town about 28 miles from Puebla, but it is generally conceded that his main force, upwards of 12,000 men, have gone to Rio Frio, where he is preparing for another engagement. – The latter place is said to be a naturally strong point, and can be made to offer strong resistance, but if Cerro Gerdo could not resist the brigade of Gen. Twiggs, what position can avail the Mexican chieftain?

“The train looked for the past few days has arrived, together with Capts. Walker and Ruft with their commands. The army here will move four miles on the Perote road to-morrow evening, and on Sunday take up its line of the march. No stop will be made at Perote. If we should not halt at Puebla, to hear the result of some more propositions of peace from the American government, you may soon expect to receive my letters dated at capital of the Republic.”

JALAPA, 11 o’clock, A.M., May 21, 1847

Eds. Delta: -The “diligence” is about leaving – I write to give you the latest up to departure. The Mexicans have a report here, which is credited by the Americans generally, that Herrera is elected President of Mexico, and that he is disposed to treat for peace. The “diligence” from Puebla is looked for momentarily, which will give us the correct position of affairs at the Capital. – If it should arrive in time to overtake the line towards Vera Cruz, I will send an express to overhaul it. The reason assigned by the Mexicans for Herrera being willing to make peace with us is that he desires to prevent our taking possession of the Capital of the Republic, which he says will be the inevitable result if the Mexicans do not come to terms. Shall we be delayed by soothing promises and friendly professions, or shall we march on, conquering and to conquer? I hope the word will be “Onward!” and not wait until they have placed the Capital in a proper state of defense, and then bid us defiance. “Delays are dangerous,” and may cause us to lose many gallant officers and soldiers. Herrera, no doubt, is favorably disposed; but can he control the factions? Once in possession of the City of Mexico we can treat on what terms we please.

The Army is under marching orders for tomorrow evening at 3 o’clock. Gen. Twiggs’ column will move at that hour, if no unforeseen circumstances intervene. Nothing further from Gen. Worth and Quitman, except that they were resting from the fatigues of the march in Puebla.

Gen. Shields had an attack of pleurisy two nights ago, but is recovering from the effect of it, and also his wound, He expects to be able to leave for the United States about the 10th of next month.

Capt. Walker is encamped with his recruits close to the town. It was generally supposed he would be arrested for the course he pursued in reference to a guerilla party he came in contact with. But I understand his course is approved of. The Alcalde of Santa Fe, who had been harboring the bandit, and in whose possession the property and clothing of the murdered dragoons were found, had to share the same fate as those who committed the murder. Served him right.

JALAPA, May 21, 12o’clock.

Eds. Delta – The Diligence has arrived from Puebla, but nothing official had arrived from the capital previous to its departure. The passengers state that it was current at that place Herrera had been elected President. I received a letter from Puebla, of which the following is an extract:

“We entered this place on the 15th inst. The of the men, and have killed two. We were attacked in Amasoc by Santa Anna, with about 1500 cavalry – he lost 3 killed and 7 wounded. – The old codger took a fir of leaving for Mexico, (illegible).

I have seen another letter, from an intelligent source, to a gentleman in this place, which says that Santa Anna retreated from Puebla to San Martin, and subsequently left for the city of Mexico, also that we are to be met on the road, somewhere, with 10,000 men, under one General, whose name I don’t recollect, and 4000 under Minon. So mote if be – the more the better. No doubt buy the time we meet them, their force will be augmented to double the number. We also learn that murders and robberies are being committed on the road daily, both by horsemen and footmen. (illegible).

Our correspondent at Vera Cruz, under date of the 22d inst., writes us as follows – just as the Palmetto was leaving:

“One hundred and twenty Quartermaster’s mules, loaded with four and pork, on their road to rendezvous at Santa Fe, were attacked late last evening, three miles from here. The muleteers were fired upon, but I cannot learn whether any were killed. Most of the muleteers have just returned and report that the entire train was captured. This is no rumor. I have facts from the Quartermaster here."

THE PENNSYLVANIA REGIMENTS. –We learn from the American Star, published at Jalapa, that a part of the 1st and the whole of the 2d Regiments of Pennsylvania Volunteers will remain at Jalapa, and with the 3d Artillery form the garrison of that town under Lieut. Col. Childs.

June 4, 1847, REv64i10p2c2, Later from the Brazos

The brig Henry, Capt. Cole arrived last night from the Brazos, having left there on the 20th May, (says the New Orleans Delta.) By this arrival we have dates from Matamoros to the 19th, and from Monterey to the 9th May. There is no news of any importance of Gen. Taylor’s column. The Monterey and Matamoros papers are principally filled with extracts taken from the New Orleans papers. We clean from the Matamoros Flag, of the 19th inst., the following items:

Carabajal still keeps himself in the vicinity of (illegible) is about sixty miles from there, on the San Fernando road. The force under his command is small –not exceeding fifty men –but sufficient to plunder all treading parties coming in or going out from Matamoras.

Capt. (illegible) has already been made in our columns, died from the effects of his wounds on the 17th inst. Capt M. was a partner and not the Clerk of Mr. Sinclair, as previously stated. The assassin has been placed in close confinement.

CAUGHT A TARTAR. –Between Camargo and Mier, a short time ago, three Mexicans were waylaying the road to rob a Mexican merchant of Matamoras, who they knew was coming down from Mier with a large amount of money in his possession. The merchant had three men with (illegible) the spot where the robbers had posed themselves that three Texan Rangers, who had been out on a scout, struck into the road a short distance ahead of him, pursuing their way down to Camargo. –It was after dark, and the robbers mistook the Rangers for the merchant’s party. They ordered them to halt and deliver, and the Rangers did halt and deliver, but they delivered bullets instead of money, and left not a robber to carry off his load –all were killed, and the merchant passed down in safety.

The mule train which left Matamoras about the 12th inst. For Camargo, under an escort of Massachusetts Volunteers, commanded my Capt. Walsh, reached there in safety. The report about their being attacked, and the mules stampeding turned out to be incorrect.

The 9th, 11th, 12th, 14th and 15th Regiments of Infantry, and the Regiment of Voltiguers, had been ordered to Gen. Scott. The 10th, 13th, and 16th Regiments of Infantry and the 3d Dragoons, had been ordered to join General Taylor.

It was reported in Matamoras that Lieutenant Colonel Randolph, of the Virginia Regiment, had, with a portion of his command, captured, on the 5th instant, 40 of Canales’ men, at China.

The 1st Mississippi Regiment under Colonel Davis, was to have left Cerralvo on the 20th May, for the month of the Rio Grande. Colonel Davis was fast recovering from his wounds.

The health of General Taylor’s army was generally good. The smallpox, which at one time created considerable alarm among the troops and the Mexican inhabitants in Saltillo, had nearly disappeared.

The remains of Lieutenant R. L. Moore, of the 1st Mississippi Regiment, who was killed at the battle of Buena Vista, were brought over from the Brazos on bard the brig Henry, under the charge of Colonel C. E. Smeads and J. E. Tappen.

We make the following extracts from Kendall’s letters at Jalapa, in an Extra Picayune:

JALAPA, Mexico, May 20, 1847

There is no mistake that General Scott’s proclamation which went directly home to every reflecting Mexican, is doing a great deal of good.

We are still without farther positive news of General Worth, and it is now almost certain that his dispatches are cut off. He would hardly enter so rich and populous a city as is Puebla without sending an official account of it to General Scott –at least such is the impression.

The Mexicans here have news from the city of Mexico, which we cannot get hold of, their own couriers doubtless running regularly. One of the men told me last night that fifteen battalions of the National Guard have been thoroughly organized at the capital, that fortifications are already in process of construction at or near Rio Frio, the hells have been run up into cannon, and that the owners of an iron foundry at the city of Mexico, Englishmen, have been compelled to cast balls on the promise of remuneration hereafter. Understand, distinctly, that I get all this from a Mexican, and that it must be taken with allowances; but that there is now a prospect of another fight, and a hard one, is considered certain my many. To my thinking, it will depend much upon the result of he election of President, news of which has not as yet reached the Americans here. If Herrera had been chosen, and there certainly was a party in his favor, it may be put down as a guaranty that peace measures will prevail. On the other hand, if Santa Anna had been elected, or a friend of his, the struggle may be protracted, and another stand made this side of the capital. It is now certain that Santa Anna was not at the city of Mexico to control the late election in person, although his approach with an armed force may have had some effect upon the States of Puebla and Mexico.

The four individuals I spike of yesterday as having been guilty of robbery, received a portion of their sentence last evening and the rest this morning. A most disgraceful figure did they cut, marching through the street with their heads shaved, the word 'robber' pinned upon their backs, and a band of music playing the "Rogue’s March" immediately in their rear. Their names were Henry Reed, Hugh Duane, and Benj. Potter, of the 4th Artillery, and the D. F. Revalon, of the 2d Pennsylvania Volunteers. The latter was found guilty of horse stealing; the three former of breaking twice into a house of the same Mexican, and the threats and violence robbing him of everything he possessed. Hard and degrading as was their punishment, everyone says it was deserved.

June 4, 1847, REv64i10p2c4, News from the Army

In another column we give some very interesting intelligence from the Delta. We extract a few additional particulars from the Picayune. –We deeply lament the death of Capt. Stevens T. Mason. He was brave and generous and beloved by all.

We take great pleasure in recording the capture of a party of guerillas to the number of 40, but L. Col. Randolph of the Virginia Regiment. We are glad that our "boys" have had a little "chance."

Gen. Worth entered Puebla on the afternoon of the 15th, after a short skirmish with a party of lancers sent out to delay his advance.

Santa Anna was in the city at the moment, but at once left, and pushed on towards the Capital.

It was reported that Gen. Valencia was between Puebla and the capital at the head of fourteen thousand men to resist our further advance but this is doubtful.

The result of the presidential election was not known. Santa Anna, Elloriaga and Herrera were candidates among others.

Santa Anna is said to have had a considerable force with him when he passed through Puebla –variously estimated form 1,500 to 10,000. It is shrewdly suspected that he intends to use his force to maintain his personal position and secure the Presidency.

Capt. Mayo, of the navy, Governor of Alvarado, started on the 13th May from Talascoya. –The town surrendered to him without resistance. On his return he was fired upon and Passed Midshipman Prigle and five seamen were badly wounded.

D. Barton, Surgeon U.S.A. has been appointed President of the Board of Health at Vera Cruz.

A party of guerillas has been surprised and taken close to Vera Cruz –fifteen in number. We have not room for particulars, but it is not yet mentioned that they have been hung.

Gen. Shields continues to improve slowly –Capt. Mason, of the Rifles, we are pained to learn, died on the 15th.

The U.S. sloop-of-war St. Mary’s, John L. Saunders, esq., commander, anchored in Hamton Roads on Monday night, 21 days from the Gulf of Mexico. She has done good service in the campaign. She brings as trophies of war, thirty pieces of cannon captured at Vera Cruz –ranging from 6 to 32-pounders. The most of them are brass, and from their inscriptions must be very similar to the beautiful guns in our Armory Yard. They were made in France, Spain and a few in England. The Norfolk Beacon hopes that they will be deposited at Fort Monroe.
June 4, 1847, ReEv64i10p4c1, Late from General Scott’s Army

By the arrival of the schr. Eleanor Stevens, Captain Hall, from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 15th May, we have letters from Jalapa to the 14th May, -three days later than our previous advices, (says the N. O. Picayune.)

The movement of Santa Anna upon Puebla is mentioned in Mr. Kendall’s letter below. —Hopes are entertained that Gen. Worth may be so fortunate as to encounter him. The probable motives of Santa Anna are conjectured by Mr. K. Gen. Worth left Perote for Puebla on the 10th with his own and Gen. Quitman’s divisions. He was expected to enter Puebla on Sunday, the 16th. IT is supposed the authorities of the town will come out to meet him and escort him in.

All will be glad to learn that Gen. Shields is mending, though slowly, and that Gen. P. F. Smith has reported for duty.

Gen. Scott is still detained at Jalapa. The reasons for his detention are mentioned by Mr. Kendall. It will also be seen by his letter that Mr. Trist has arrived at the general’s head-quarters.

The last number of the Star informs us that rumors were right on the 12th May, that the troops at Orizaba had pronounced against Santa Anna, and made him prisoner. The Star is incredulous, and Mr. K.’s letter of the 14th does not confirm the news.

Col. Childs is governor of Jalapa, and will remain there with 2,000 picked troops when Gen. Scott moves on to Puebla. The city of Jalapa is entirely quiet and orderly. No rows or disturbances have occurred there.

We have a paper printed at Puebla on the 9th May. It announces positively that Gen. Taylor had left Saltillo and marched wither upon Zacatecas or San Luis Potosi. One report says with 4,000 men upon the former State, and 6,000 on the latter. Would that he had the force to do so.

The Yankee, or “foreign legion,” organized by Santa Anna from deserters from our armies, has been disbanded and ordered out of the city. Their immorality and insubordination are assigned for this proceeding. Their manners, the Mexicans say, are not at all adapted to their society.

A letter from Durango, dated the 26th of April, states positively that Col. Doniphan’s forces had fallen back upon Chihuahua, instead of advancing upon Durango. We think that there can be no doubt of this fact, and consequently that Col. Doniphan has not been defeated. The insurrection in New Mexico is assigned as the cause of his return.

JALAPA, MEXICO, May 14, 1847

For two or three days there has hardly been an item of news worth recording —not even a rumor of the least movement; but last evening and this morning reports have come in which are entitled to some little show of importance.

It is now confidently asserted that Santa Anna has moved from Orizaba, and in the direction of Puebla and the city of Mexico. The administrador de las diligencias—general stage agent I suppose he might be called in the vernacular —left yesterday for the capital on business for the line, but this morning he returned with more speed that he went. He reports having met at Cerro de Leon, near Perote, with a force of seventy armed Mexicans, whose appearance he did not at all like. From stragglers he learned that Santa Anna, with a large force, and passed on toward Puebla; that he roads were filled with robbers and brigands, and that it would not be prudent for him to go on —so the administrador de las diligencias returned without effecting the object of his mission.

Last night an intelligent Spaniard informed me that he had seen two letters from Orizaba, one dated the 6th and the other the 7th inst. ON the first day the letter stated that the first brigade or division of the Santa Anna’s army started en route for Puebla, and on the 7th the other division marched in the same direction. His entire force was put down at 2,500, the most of them indifferently armed and under little or no discipline.
It Santa Anna has moved towards the capital, and there certainly is good reason to believe that he has, his intentions are doubtless to control the election for President, which takes place tomorrow. He cannot certainly have the temerity to even think of attacking Gen. Worth, whose division could put to light 10,000 of the best Mexican troops that ever bore arms; so that the conviction is irresistible that he intends having a hand in the coming election. One would naturally think that, after his many disgraceful reverses, he would either attempt to leave the country, or else hide himself in an obscure part of it; but the cowardly tyrant loves lower and place too well, and will cling to them as long as there is a dollar, a musket, and an open road, on which to run, left in the Republic.

Mr. Downie, sutler of the 2d Pennsylvania Regiment, arrived here yesterday. It may be recollected that he had a large sum of money stolen from him at Vera Cruz by a Mexican, a short time since, that he pursued the rascal to Cordova, and that he succeeded in recovering the most of his money. So far, so good; but the worst of it has yet to be told. Mr. D. came out with the permission of the Alcalde and authorities of Vera Cruz in search of the robber of his money, found him, and succeeded, as is said above, in recovering the most of his treasure; but just at this moment a worse robber got hold of him in the shape of Santa Anna; poor D. was cast into prison as a spy, all his money again taken from him, and the only way by which he could obtain his liberty was to acknowledge himself as a spy in writing! This Santa Anna insisted upon as an excuse for robbing him of his money; but, on the other hand, Downie insisted as well in putting a protest at the bottom of his confession, stating that all he had said above was false! The way in which Downie now speaks of Santa Anna is anything but complimentary.

The long wagon train is now coming into the city from Vera Cruz, and has met with no opposition on the way. There are between three and four hundred wagons, and between eleven and twelve hundred pack mules in the train – quite a long string, you would think, were you to see them all together. Capt. Grayson, the stirring and most popular commissary, is along with the train, and I am pleased to learn is going on towards certain halls named after the elder Montezuma.

The foreigners in the city of Mexico area all extremely anxious for the arrival of Gen. Scott. It is said that a heavy sum has already been subscribed for a grand Fourth of July dinner – one individual, an Irishman, having put down his name for no less than $800. The war has been most disastrous to all the foreigners, breaking up the business of many entirely. The only advantage it has been to any has been the depreciation if has caused in the value of real estate. Houses in the city of Mexico, belonging to the church, and which have been sold under the hammer, have been bought in by the English and other merchants at prices far below their real value.

You will doubtless learn with pleasure, as will doubtless his numerous friends in New Orleans, that Gen. P. F. Smith has again reported for duty. For no less than a month he was unable to put his foot to the ground, to such a degree was his ankle inflamed. I am also happy in being able to state that Gen. Shields is still mending, although slowly. The saving of his life may be put down almost as a miracle. I saw him but a sort time after he received his dreadful wound, and no one then thought that he could live even twenty-four hours.

Gen. Scott’s proclamations, which I sent off to you two or three nights since buy an express rider, has been read here by all the Mexicans, and in a large majority of cases with excellent effect. It is a most able document, and goes home to the feelings of the people. By this time it has been circulated at Puebla and the city of Mexico, and will doubtless turn the minds, at least of the honest and reflecting, towards peace.

I have been much amused at reading accounts in some of our papers at home of the road between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico. One writer, who “talks like a book,” says that there is a stream ten miles from the frontier city which is crossed in scows! We did not come that road. Again, the same writer says that the Puente National is a wooden bridge! Wooden! Whew! It is the best imitation of stone I have ever seen, and as durable as the rock of ages at that.

Mr. Trist arrived here this morning from Vera Cruz. His business I do not know, but I suppose he goes on with the army. Gen. Scott, owing to the non-arrival of all the train, will not be able to move for two of three days to come. – Capt. Walker, with his Rifles, is on the way up, guarding another smaller train. I trust there may be wagons enough to carry on the little baggage our officers now possess. For want of sufficient transportation heretofore they have been compelled to leave carpet bags here, trunks there an boxes elsewhere, until nearly everything has been lost. The Government most certainly should make allowances for sacrifices which have been unavoidable on the part of its officers. Yours, &c.,

G. W. K.

P.S. With not a little trouble and expense I have been enabled to procure the very latest dates from the city of Mexico, and also from Puebla. You will see that the freedom of the press has been suspended, but not until the editors had lied most lustily about us miserable Yankees. The letter about Gen. Scott’s destroying Encerro, and offering a reward for Santa Anna, it would puzzle the father of lies to beat. On the contrary, a safeguard was placed upon the house of Santa Anna, and not a stone of it has been moved.

The report that Santa Anna has gone towards the capital receives additional confirmation. – We hear nothing of Gen. Worth, but every one hopes he has fallen in with Santa Anna.

A Mexican officer, Capt. Velasquez, died yesterday from a wound received at Cerro Gordo, and was buried with military honors. Lieut. Shelby Johnson, of the 4th Illinois volunteers, also died yesterday, and was buried with appropriate ceremonies. Gen. Scott and staff, with many other officers of our army, attended both funerals.
A work has been thrown up near this place which completely commands the city. It was constructed under the superintendent of Capt. Beauregard, a native of Louisiana, who enjoys a high reputation in the army.

June 4, 1847, REv64i10p4c3, Captain Tuttwall

We find in the N. Orleans Delta, the following interesting letter from the fallarit commander of the famous "Mosquito Fleet," which has done so much execution in the Gulf of Mexico. It is but just to Com. Conner, that the public should be made acquainted with the sentiments of his brave and experienced brother officers in regard to his character and conduct. The Delta most properly remarks:

"Certainly the dissatisfaction expressed by a propel, justly fold of the renown of our noble Navy, at the difficulties and disasters encountered by our squadron in the early part of the war, ought to give way to admiration of the magnificent debarkation of our troops at Vera Cruz, so skillfully effected under the direction of Com. Conner. Many of the arrangements in regard to the investment and bombardment of the city and castle were also made by Com. Conner, who, from the same morbid sensitiveness and pride to which we have referred, readily gave up to Com. Perry the command of the squadron, at a time when he might have been justified by the rules of the service in retaining it until the capitulation of Vera Cruz had been effected."

Who Capt. Tattnall is, the country is well informed by his brilliant and untiring services in the Gulf. We subjoin a very neat outline of his late achievements from the Delta. On reading his letter, we were reminded of an anecdote related to us by a gallant naval officer, who was himself the present at the bombardment of Vera Cruz. The fierce little Spitfire was in the lead of the "mosquito fleet" in attacking San Juan, and, amidst the showers of bullets from the Castle which fell around the vessel without wounding any one, Tattnall strode the deck with marked impatience, and, with a vehemence of manner, cried out, "Will no one get killed or wounded? There is no honor to be won otherwise. Will no body be killed?" He himself afterwards was wounded in the wrist at Tuxpan; his wished were gratified and the "honor," already secured by his previous conduct, heightened by the peculiar means which he himself had so emphatically indicated. Not satisfied, however, with the distinction he had won, but anxious to enlarge his contracted field of operations, he obtained leave to be detached form the Spitfire and to join General Quitman's force on land. We regret that his wound will prevent him from expanding the "honor" won upon the sea:

"Of Capt. Tattnall's incessant and successful exertions to sustain the high reputation of the service, of which he is a bright ornament, we cannot adequately express the admiration and gratitude we feel. From the commencement of the blockade he has planned and executed the various difficult and perilous enterprises on the dangerous reef, and against the well-defended towns of the Mexican coast, which have excited so much admiration, and contributed so much to the success of our occupation of the towns in the Terra Caliente. On the gallant he has led every attack, constituting on all the occasions the advanced-guard of the squadron. At the bombardment of Vera Cruz, he commanded the fleet of small vessels, which approached within a few hundred yards of the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, and opened up on the is famous fortification, sustaining a constant fire from its two hundred guns. At the last achievement of our Navy in the attack of Tuxpan, the Spitfire again led the attack, and was exposed to a heavy fire from a concealed fort, by which several of our brave officers were wounded –among them the gallant Captain himself received a wound in the arm, from which he is now suffering. The necessity of returning to this country to improve his health and heal his wound, withdraws Capt. Tatnall from the scene of warlike operations just as he was preparing to join Gen. Scott in his marc to Mexico."

June 8, 1847, REv64i11p2c1, General Taylor and the battle of Buena Vista

–We are the authorized to say, (says the New Orleans Bulletin,) that General Taylor never used the expression, which has obtained such general currency through the public press, that "if there had been only regulars in the battle of Buena Vista he would probably have lost the day, as the Mississippi volunteers were whipped three times without knowing it." This he considers is doing great injustice to the regular army.

This letter, under which we make the above statement, continues, and says "so far from entertaining such a sentiment, the General lamented nothing more strongly than his entire want of regular infantry, as a brigade, or even a strong battalion would have enabled him to carry the enemy's artillery, and to have entirely destroyed his army."

We are further authorized to deny the report, that the officers next in rank, were opposed to giving battle, which is entirely untrue, and it calculated to injure those officers if allowed to circulate uncontradicted.

U.S. FRIGATE RARITAN, off Tabasco, May 16.

Gentlemen –We expect the Raritan will leave Anton Lizardo, bound for Boston, about the 1st of June. She will take home some of the older officers of the squadron, who have been jaded by long service, and also the sick from the different vessels. I am happy to say that these are not numerous.

An American flag is now planted at Frontera, at the mouth of the Tobasco river, and it is supposed that a custom house will soon be established there. The city of Tobasco, seventy miles up the river, is still in possession of the Mexicans, who have occupied a point about seven miles below, called the “Devil’s Turn,” with a force of at least one, and some say two thousand men, indifferently provided with small arms and muskets, but having a commanding battery of three 24-pounders.” I don know that Com. Perry will deem it advisable to attack Tobasco, inasmuch as we now hold the mouth of the river and sixty miles of navigation. For my own part, I can see no reason for such a proceeding, although I should be very glad of a fight. The navy had had too little to do in that line for its own interest.

Capt. Van Brunt is at present discharging the functions of Governor, by order of Com. Perry.

Com. Perry arrived here in the Mississippi yesterday, accompanied by the Vixen and Scorpion steamers. He soon afterwards got under way with the Scorpion, and proceeded to Laguna and Sisal. It is said that Capt. Mackenzie is to be charged with some negotiations with the Government of Yucatan.

Goatzacoalcos has been taken, or rather occupied in consequence of surrender.

In case we have a fight here, I will give you the particulars.

P.S. May 19. –The commodore returned to this anchorage last evening, and will leave for Vera Cruz this evening.

The steamers Vixen, Scorpion, Mississippi, McLane and the sloops Decatur, John Adams, Albany and Germantown and frigate Raritan are now assembled here.”

THE MEXICAN PIRATES. –The Princeton to be sent to the Mediterranean. –The President has issued orders directing the steamship of war “Princeton” to be go ready for sea, to proceed to the Mediterranean, in quest of the Mexican privateer “Unico,” and any other vessels that may be insulting our flag there. The matter was formally laid before the President on Monday morning my Mr. Buchanan, and his action thereon was prompt and decisive. The Princeton is to be made ready to sail on or about the 15th of the present month. –[Baltimore Sun]

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p2c1, Important from Mexico

We received yesterday a copy of El Republicano from the city of Mexico, wit a requenst fo ran exchange, (says the Mobile Herald.) It is dated the 16th of May.

In this number of El Republicano we find an important document which a friend translates for us as follows. None of the New Orleans papers contain any allusion to it:

Official letter of his Excellency, the General in Chief, (Santa Anna) accompanying some intercepted documents of the enemy

HEADQUARTERS,
Puebla, May 13, 1847.

ARMY OF OPERATIONS. –Excellent Sir: -The commandant of the flying revenue guard of tobacco of Orizaba, the Colonel D. Juan N. Caraveo, whom I left with his command near the National Road, between Perote and Nopalucan, to observe the movements of the enemy, and to harass him when the opportunity might offer, has remitted to me the accompanying documents which were taken from the enemy’s mail which left Jalapa for Col. Worth’s camp.

Among them you will find the General Scott’s proclamation of the Mexican nation, which from its style appears to have been written originally in Spanish, and not translated from English.
This proclamation of Scott’s is written with the most refined hypocrisy and with the most infamous perfidy. It is the greatest insult yet offered to the Mexican people, whom it has attempted to lull (a quien sepretende adormecer) to make it the victim of the ambition of that nation which is the enemy of our race, when, in another place, it feels no embarrassment in proclaiming by the press and in official documents, that it carries on against us a war of conquest and that this war must be made at the cost of the blood and treasure of the unfortunate country.

Your Excellency will note in one of the accompanying intercepted letters, that Scott, the Inspector General of the United States Army, considers the above proclamation well adapted to aid the views of the invaders.

You will observe, that this letter harmonizes with others which have been lately published in this capital, and which with reason have been regarded by all well disposed Mexicans as more prejudicial for the venom (ponzona) which they conceal than the loss of a battle.

But in the midst of the malevolence (encona) which General Scott shows he has against me, he does me too much honor when he says that they had been deceived as to my real intentions, and that on account of this mistake his Government permitted me to pass to my country. Indeed, most Excellent Sir, the United States did deceive when they dreamed that I was capable of betraying my country. Before this should happen I would prefer to be consumed by fire and my ashes should be scattered that not a single atom be left.

Would to God the Mexicans would open their eyes to discover the poison in the golden chalice that the perfidious
Scott proffers them, and that (illegible) of universal indignation against the invaders of our soil. Let a war be made against these without period, that when we may no longer be able, because Providence may have decreed the subjugations of this unfortunate country, there may remain to our children or grand children, when the wrath of the Omnipotent shall have passed, the noble work of revenging the outrages committed by the republic of the United States on (illegible)

God and Liberty!

To his Excellency the Minister of War and Marine.

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p2c6, The Mexican tariff

The manufacturing class seem determined to regulate the tariff for Mexico, as well as for our own country, to suit their particular interests. –These people and their paid advocates seem to act as though the country belonged to them, and all the other interests were but to support a home government and conquer foreign ones for their advantage. Not satisfied with upwards of 30 years protection at home, ranging from 30 to 200 percent., they now claim the exclusive right to supply all Mexico. What do these manufacturers contribute to support this government?
Not one cent. They receive millions in tribute, and pay nothing. The higher the revenue, the greater their profits – and they unanimously refused to pay anything on tea and coffee to support the war, because to that extent they would have been compelled to contribute with others to that object.

When with the money of others, we have got possession of Mexico, and mean to make them pay part of the expense, these men reproach the Secretary of the Treasury, because foreign goods are admitted also. Modesty unparalleled! If then millions of dollars are to be paid by Mexicans in the price of their goods, these gentlemen claim it, though they have never paid one cent towards the war! Nor is that all: for, were they to have the exclusive right, the demand for Mexico and the United States together would be so great that these American goods would be enhanced 25 to 50 percent in value, and our own citizens, after paying for the war, would be made to pay the manufacturers extra price for all their domestic articles. These modest gentlemen own the whole country, excepting only their stipendiary, and are to incur no other expense.

Did Great Britain make discriminating duties when she conquered China? Is such conduct compatible with the independence of any country? Did we make war with Mexico in order to exclude others and to sell our goods to them? But the hue and cry is up from Vera Cruz to the Aroostock –and Mr. Walker is denounced because his Mexican Tariff is intended to obtain money from Mexico, and not to benefit a few thousand people in the United States who have refused to pay in any shape towards the war.

FREE TRADE.

June 8, 1847, REv64i11p4c7, June 8, 1847, From General Taylor’s Army

OFFICIAL.
The following “orders,” issued by Gen. Taylor, have been transmitted by him to the War Department. In laying them before our readers, [says then Union] we hardly deem it necessary to allude to the pitiful falsehoods circulated by the Federal press, to the effect that the administration had neglected to notice in suitable terms the glorious achievement of American arms at Buena Vista. A calumny so foolish and so mean, must needs recoil upon the heads of its authors.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, May 6, 1847.

[ORDERS No. 46]

Under the instructions of the Secretary of War, the commanding general had the gratification to publish to the troops of his command the following communication, received by him from the War Department:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, April 3, 1847.

"Sir: Your communications of the 24th and 25th of February, and the 1st of March, announcing the brilliant success of the troops under your command at Buena Vista, against the forces of the enemy vastly superior in numbers, have been laid before the President; and I am instructed to convey to you his high appreciation of the distinguished services rendered to the country by yourself, and the officers and soldiers of your command on that occasion.

"The victory achieved at Buena Vista, while it adds new glory to our arms, and furnishes new proofs of the valor and brave daring of our officers and soldiers, will excite the admiration and call forth the gratitude of the nation.

"The single fact that five thousand of our troops, nearly all volunteers, who, yielding to the impulse of patriotism, had rallied to their country’s standard for a temporary service, were brought into conflict with an army of twenty thousand, mostly veteran soldiers, and only withstood and repulsed the assaults of this numerous host, led by their most experienced General, but, in a protracted battle of two days, won a glorious victory, is the most indubitable evidence of the consummate skill and gallant conduct of our officers, and the devoted heroism of the troops under their command, It will ever be a proud distinction to have been in the memorable battle of Buena Vista.

"The general joy which the intelligence of this success of our arms has spread through the land, is mingled with regret that it has been obtained at so great a price –that so many heroic men have fallen in that sanguinary conflict. They died in the intrepid discharge of a patriotic duty, and will be honored and lamented by a grateful nation.

"You will cause this communication to be published to the troops under your command.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed)
"W.L. MARCY,
"Secretary of War.”

By order of Major General Taylor:
W. W. S. Bliss,
Assistant Adjutant General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, May 8, 1847

[ORDERS No 47]

The commanding general has the satisfaction of announcing to the troops of his command at other decisive victory achieved by the American forces under Major General Scott, on the 18th of April, and Cerro Gordo, in the State of Vera Cruz. The Mexican army, under the immediate orders of Gen. Santa Anna, President of the Republic, is known to have been entirely routed with the loss of all its artillery and munitions of war.

The army of occupation will hail with joy this brilliant success of the Americans arms.

By order of Maj. Gen. Taylor
W.W.S. BLISS
Assistant Adjutant General.
June 11, 1847, REV64i12p4c1, Very Late from the City of Mexico

By the way of Tampico, we are placed in possession of a file of El Republicano from the city of Mexico down to and including the 19th of May—eleven days later than our previous advises.

The election of President for Mexico was to have taken place of the 15th of May. As the election was made by the Legislatures of the different States, it is even yet quite too soon to know the result, which is likely to disappoint all expectations. In the State of Mexico, Angel Trias, the Governor of Chihuahua, received the vote. Upon the first ballot Trias received 9 votes, Gen. Alvarez 7, Gen. Almonte 2, and Senor D. Melchor Ocampo 1. Upon proceeding to elect between Trias and Alvarez, the former received 10 votes and the latter 9.

In the State of Queretaro there was a tie between Senor Almonte, and Senor D. J. Joaquin Herrera. Lots were cast between the two, and the chances favored Senor Herrera, who thus secured the cote of that State. If we recollect aright, this is not the ex-President.

The State of Puebla gave its vote of Senor D. Melchor Ocampo. The particulars of the coting are not given. Some time will elapse before we shall have the result of the election.

The Republicano of the 19th announces that Gen. Santa Anna had left the command of the army of the East to assume the duties of President of the Republic. He was to make his entry into the capital the evening of the 19th. He had issued a manifesto to the nation, but we regret that we have no copy of it. It was to be published in El Republicano on the 20th, which is a day later than we have received.

We have two letters from the valorous General, giving an account of his military operations. The first is dated May 9th, and in it he tells the Secretary of War that since his arrival at Orizava he had been organizing guerrilla parties, both infantry and cavalry, in the vicinity of Orizava, of Cordova and Vera Cruz; that he had collected the scattered remains of his Cerro Gordo forces; improved the brigade from Oajaca under General Leon; reinforced and remounted a cavalry force, which he had stationed at San Andreas; and lastly, fitted for service seven pieces of artillery, which are at Orizava and Cordova. The result of all these labors is, according to him, that guerrilla parties are already at work between Jalapa and Vera Cruz; three battalions, organized with 1,470 men of those dispersed at Cerro Gordo; more than 200 horses collected; a quantity of infantry equipment prepared; and, finally, 4,500 men, with seven pieces of artillery, put in movement, who would enter Puebla on the 12th May.

He tells the Secretary that he had left in command in the tierra caliente Colonel Cenobio; in the district of Cordova, D. Tomas Marin, who commanded at Alvarado when Com. Conner attacked it; in Huatuxco, General Hernandez; and in Orizava General Teran. He announces that he himself was on his march to Puebla, compelled to that course by his extreme destitution. He has only had 25,000 dollars to do all he has done, and thinks he could easily have ten or twelve thousand men under arms if the Government would give him means.

If this letter shows some energy and spirit, the second letter is replete with evidence of a contemptible, braggart soul. He would then prepare the way for his entry into the city of Mexico like a hero and conqueror. To enable the reader to verify this, we annex a translation of the letter, written on the 15th May, from San Martin Tesmelucan, seven Mexican leagues beyond Puebla, towards Mexico. The town of Amozoc, so often mentioned in it, is four leagues this side of Puebla:

ARMY OF OPERATIONS OF THE EAST,
Headquarters of the General-in-Chief,
At San Martin, Tesmelucan, May 15, 1847.

His Excellency, the Minister of War: I communicated to your Excellency, in my dispatch of the day before yesterday, at 9 o'clock, P.M., that the enemy would pass the night at Amozoc, and that I was preparing to establish myself yesterday in this place, with the troops under my command. The infantry and artillery marched in reality for this place, but I retained the cavalry, with the intention of surprising a convoy of about 200 wagons, which was proceeding under a very feeble guard to join the first (illegible) of the enemy's army, and also of challenging the enemy, to induce him to march forth from Amozoe to a convenient ground for giving battle. The convoy to which I refer passed the night at Nopalncan, and I calculated that, although it might start early, I would meet it on this side of Acajete, at a point where the ground would be favorable for the maneuvering of cavalry; but no doubt the smallness of his force induced the commander, from motives of precaution, to start at midnight, so that, at half-past 8 o'clock in the morning, (the hour at which I was flanking Amozoc in order to gain the public road,) the convoy was already very near to the village, and in a narrow lane, covered on both sides by trees, which protected it against the attack of my troops. The enemy, fearing, notwithstanding, that the convoy might be captured, sent immediately a force of 1,000 infantry, with six pieces of cannon, to its assistance. The troops immediately opened a fire on my column, which fearlessly continued its march within one league of Amozoc, at which point I determined to countermarch to Puebla, where I arrived at half-past 4 o'clock in the afternoon, in the best order.

The whole population of this beautiful city was in motion at the entrance of my division, and gave signs of the most ardent enthusiasm. I could hardly walk from being surrounded by thousands of citizens, who were hurrahing for independence and for the Republic, and giving utterance to their hatred of our invaders. In these moments my heart was agitated my different feelings as I looked upon an enthusiastic people calling upon me for arms to defend themselves, giving the most signal proof of their love for liberty of their country, and as I reflected upon the responsibility of those who having the means had neglected to take advantage of the good dispositions of these people. The only want in this city, your Excellency, was proper men to move in the defense of the national cause.

Resuming the thread of my military report, I will inform your Excellency that, although our guide having missed the road, brought us within grape shot distance of the village of Amozoc, we completely flanked this village, showing the enemy by this bold movement the contempt in which we held him. He appeared, however, determined not to leave his stronghold after having saved his convoy, and both myself and my officers rode off with the conviction that the enemy dared not accept our challenge in the open field.

The loss we have deplore in this feat of arms is three soldiers killed and wounded, and four horses killed.

Although I was aware that the enemy was to move very early on Puebla, I ordered the division of cavalry to pass the night in the city, and at daybreak this morning it commenced its march for this place, where I also arrived this morning.

May it please your Excellency to submit this report to his Excellency the President Substitute, and to receive the assurances of my consideration and esteem. God and Liberty!

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA

His Excellency the MINISTER OF WAR.

El Republicano of the 19th announces that Gen. Bravo has proposed to the Supreme Government that the American prisoners should be sent off "successively and with due security" to Tampico to be released, inasmuch as Mexican prisoners taken at the Angostura and Cerro Gordo had been released without condition. This is the first mention of those unfortunate prisoners which we recollect to have seen in the Mexican papers.

The Republicano is again endeavoring to arouse the fears of the Mexicans against the machinations of a monarchical party. It copies, with this view, a long letter from Paris published in a Madrid journal, indicating that monarchy is the sole salvation for Mexico. The Republicano intimates that the agents of such a party are still secretly at work in Mexico, and that some traces of their operations have lately been discovered in Puebla.

The same number of this paper announces that Congress had completed its work of forming a constitution, and congratulates the country upon the termination of the great work. The constitution is described as not so much a novelty and an innovation as a modification and improvement of the old constitution of 1824.

In the same paper of the 18th, it is announced that a new opprobrium was about to fall on their unhappy country, in consequence of a dissolution of Congress which some extreme partisans of the Pures section were determined to force on. Congress was compelled to adjourn on the 17th for want of a quorum, four members having purposely withdrawn to bring about this result. –There were twelve deputies pledged, according to the Republicano, to pursue a like course, to percent there being a sufficient number of members present to promulgate the new constitution, which had been adopted by a large majority. Rather than submit to the indignity of being thus rendered powerless, it was said that the majority of Congress had resolved to dissolve and publish a manifesto to the nation. How this affair was settled the papers do not tell us, but the disgraceful dissension in the chief legislative assembly of the nation shows the country in no state to resist a foreign foe.

The Mexicans says Gen. Worth entered Puebla with 5000 infantry, 200 cavalry and a train of 400 wagons; and that Gen. Scott left Jalapa for the same destination with 2000 men and a considerable train of artillery.

Before entering Puebla, General Worth addressed a note dated the 12th to the municipal authorities of the city, announcing to them his intention of entering on the 15th and taking military possession. Should no opposition be intended, he desired an immediate conference with the authorities, to take measures in concert for the security of persons and property. At the same time he promised that their religion should be respected in all its forms and observances, and that he would support the civil authorities in administration of the laws.

The authorities replied by offering to refer the letter to Santa Anna. This General Worth refused. Santa Anna punished the prefect of the city for the course he took in the business, one little worthy of a Mexican, it is said. We presume he thought it better that General Worth should enter quietly, and that the citizens should be protected, rather than make a futile sham resistance.

Senores Gutierrez and Iriarte have resigned the portfolios of War and Justice. The former is succeeded by General Alcorta; the latter by D. Luis de la Rosa. Senor Baranda remains Minister of Foreign Affairs.
Prospects of a Speedy Peace

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p4c2, Prospects of a Speedy Peace

PROSPECTS OF A SPEEDY PEACE. –The most important item of news by James L. Day, (says the New Orleans Times,) is the prospect of a speedy peace, which really seems from what is announced as having lately transpired in the interior of Mexico, to be not divest of something like probability. On the 24th April, intelligence reached Vera Cruz from the Capital, that General Herrera had been elected President on the 15th May and that the cause of his success over his competitors was the desire, generally felt by the thinking portion of the Mexican population, to open negotiations with the United States, for a renewal of friendly relations. It was stated, also, that the new President would not be hampered with any restrictions in his efforts to make peace. The only drawback on this agreeable intelligence is, that it does not come in an official form, although almost universal credence is given to it in Vera Cruz; and men's minds are becoming more and more soothed, as the real character of the Americans becomes known to the people in the Interior, and particularly in the populous cities. General Worth's visit to the Bishop at Puebla, has wrought immensely in favor of the invaders; while the scrupulous honesty, and high feeling of honor displayed by all ranks of the army, with a few inconsiderable exceptions, in their intercourse with the inhabitants of the large towns, have quite undeceived their expectations, which counted on cruelty and rapacity, as our distinguishing characteristics. We shall impatiently wait for the next arrival, which must realize or dissipate this pleasant vision of peace. One fact, however, we gather from these advises, which is, that the tumult of passion into which the Mexican population were thrown, by the dispersion of Santa Anna's army at Cerro Gordo, has considerably subsided. There is nothing yet said of the progress, or the issue of Mr. Trist's mission.

[Correspondence of the N. O. Commercial Times.]

VERA CRUZ, Friday Evening, May 21, '47

May 22. –I have a few minutes, before the Palmetto leaves, to say that the diligence is in from Jalapa with further news from Puebla, none of especial interest, except so far as connected with affairs at the Capital. For this part of it, I am indebted to the gentlemanly and able Prussian Counsel, who has a letter from a high source in Puebla, teeming with hopes of an early peace. Santa Anna and Anaya being equally unavailable as President, in point of success, a new appointment is to be made at an early date. The general voice calls upon Herrera, the President deposed by Parades, and it is supposed he will accept the nomination this accorded. In that event, there is but little doubt of his election. I am told that Santa Anna has rushed to Mexico to defeat this movement, but it is believed that he has no longer the power to prevent it. It is also believed that Herrera has the power, and the moral courage to carry the object through. God grant that these suppositions are correct!

May 24. –We this morning have agreeable intelligence from the Capital, which, though not quite so authentic as I could wish, is so strongly supported by probabilities, and so well conforms to the public expectations, that it obtains general credence. The election for President is said to have taken place on the 15th instant, and Herrera, the former incumbent of the chair, was again chosen, it is also said that he is not hampered with restrictions in regard to the
The steamer New Orleans arrived this morning, followed within a few hours by the ship Sophia Walker, both filled with troops. This looks more like doing business, and proves the Adjutant General and the editor of the Union to have been more nearly correct than I gave them credit for being. But in order to meet their promises, we have yet to receive within the coming month, nearly ten thousand troops. Who believes that half that number will reach Vera Cruz before the 1st of August? I do not.

The troops not arrived, will proceed at once with a train, for the field of operations, and I suppose will continue their march directly to Puebla, which is now the headquarters of General Scott.

Since I commenced writing a most disagreeable report has reached me, which I have now confirmed, beyond question. The Jalapa stage has been beset, the passengers ill-treated, if not murdered, the driver beaten nearly to death, and the carriage, luggage, mails, etc., burned. The driver has just arrived in town, and reports the details of the affair as far as his fright, and the treatment would allow him to observe them, but is strangely ignorant, or confused upon the points of the greatest interest. The attack was made near la Riconada, a few miles beyond the National bridge. The ruffians engaged in the affair were rancheros, in all probability acting without authority, and perhaps indeed, they are only common robbers. It is thought that none of the passengers have been killed, but of this there is not certainty. If they were released, some of them will probably be in town tomorrow.

June 11, 1847, REv64i12p4c5, News from Mexico

We lay before our readers copious extracts from the New Orleans papers. On one point, the election of President, the reports in the New Orleans Times and Picayune conflict—the former being confident of the election of Herrera, the peace candidate—and the latter, upon data which look to us more authentic, leading us to believe that the result will not be known for some time, and that the Herrera spoken of is not the President who was willing to receive our Minister of Peace, and who superceded buy Parades. As to the prospects of peace, our readers may judge as well as ourselves, from the elements before them. They are not as bright, however, as we had been led to expect.

We are deeply pained at the report in the Picayune, of bloody and fatal duel between the two lieutenants of the Virginia Regiment. Mahan, the only one named, was third Lieutenant of Capt. Bankhead’s Caroline Company, and was from the city of Philadelphia, which furnished a large proportion of said company. –Captain Bankhead, we learn, was promoted to the post of one of Gen. Scott’s aides; and 1st Lieutenant Garnett, (of Westmoreland,) and 2d Lieutenant Coleman, (of Caroline,) being on the sick list, 3d Lieutenant Mahan was in command of the company. These facts have been narrated to us, and may furnish a clue to the desperate and lamentable combat. On the streets yesterday, we heard the name of several officers of the Virginia Regiment mentioned as the other Lieutenant killed whose name is not given—but being vague rumors, we think it improper to Chronicle them.

The New Orleans Courier reviews the address of the Tennessee officers, impugning the conduct of General Pillow and his utter want of military skill at the battle of Cerro Gordo, and imputing to him an untrue statement made to General Scott. We have room but for the following extract:

"We are told that General Pillow informed General Scott that he had reconnoitered the enemy’s position, and was sure it was defended by only one or two guns. Well, every work of this disclosure to General Scott was true. General Pillow did reconnoiter the enemy’s work, and he found it weak, as he reported it to be. But by some means or other, (perhaps by a deserter,) the enemy was apprised of General Pillow’s reconnaissance, of his report to the commanding general, and of the intention to assault the batteries. This information was conveyed in the night of the 17th—the enemy immediately set to work, added five or six guns to the batteries, marched upwards of two thousand men to sustain them, and placed strong detachments of infantry, with some light pieces of cannon concealed on the flank of the route by which our troops were expected to advance. We are told this fact is well understood in the army; if it came to the knowledge of the officers who signed this address to the public against the Brigadier General, they ought to have mentioned it.

These officers say that General Pillow was not at the head of the regiment when it advanced—that he neither led nor followed it. Who has asserted that he did lead or follow the regiment in its advance? Surely the General himself asserts so much thing—nor, to out knowledge, have any of his friends made such an assertion. But we know it to be true—that when the General was wounded he was very near the right of the regiment: This information has come to us from a gallant officer who was on the ground, and an eyewitness of what took place. Why was not this fact stated in the Address of the officers to the Public? This address to the public, from the officers of the 2d Tennessee regiment of volunteers has bot been provoked by anything said or done by General Pillow. ON the contrary, in his official letter, he bestows high applause upon the regiment and its officers for the steady and gallant manner in which they bore themselves in the attack. If any part of the General’s conduct deserves censure—and if the intimations of this address are well grounded, he is unfit for his station—if he deserves censure, it would be more proper in a military point of view, and more consonant to usage, to have preferred charges against him to the Commander-in-Chief, in order that his conduct might have been investigated and the real truth brought to light. It is a serious matter to throw before the world such intimations as these against a General officer, whose "personal courage and gallant bearing in action" are acknowledged by his accusers. We await the reply of Gen. Pillow, in full confidence that he will rebut every item of accusation, that has been alleged against him.

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p1c3, Spanish Opinions on Mexican War

In the total absence of news from any quarter, we lay before our readers a striking extract from El Heraldo of Madrid, of the 26th April. We find it in the N. O. Delta, which describes its speculations as the "ideas of an intelligent Spaniard, upon the probable fate of an offshoot of his once powerful and still proud race. The editor for gospel of English and Mexican accounts of the battle of Buena Vista."

This article is particularly interesting, in that while it grossly misrepresents our government as aiming at "nothing less than the destruction of Mexican nationality" and our people as inclined to appropriate the church property of Mexico without ceremony, it renders a forced and a proud tribute to the resistless energies of our free people. Our progress, which the Spanish organ seems to regard with so much horror as to invoke the arm of European monarchies, is not the fruit of blood or violence, but of the genial influence of liberal institutions, gradually melting away the prejudices and ignorance of the nations of the earth, both in the new and old world. What may be the fate of Mexico, we shall not pretend to investigate—but all we ask of her at present is a just respect for our rights. Our desire is to see her establish an enlightened, liberal Republican form of Government, to assist us in keeping off the encroachments of the Old-World monarchists—And, whatever partisans may say of the origin of the war, it cannot reasonably be denied that it will essentially benefit Mexico, in liberalizing and civilizing her people by the influence of American example. The acquisitions of territory we have already made have been based upon the highest principles of law and morality—and to the powers of Europe, should they dare to interfere with the exercise of our lawful privileges! The article of El Heraldo shows the mighty place our young nation holds in the eyes of the world:

"The latest news from Mexico announces a triumph of the arms of the republic, which would be gratifying to us as Spaniards, as united to the people of that country by so many ties and so many traditions in common, if we thought it could decide, in favor of Mexico, the present desperate struggle between the Spanish and Anglo-Saxon races. But unfortunately it is not so. We see that after prolonged disasters, after infinite defeats, operating in a country the thinness of whose population makes war most difficult, the Mexicans found it necessary to unite the flower of their army, in number fourfold superior to that of the Anglo-Americans, to achieve a triumph exceedingly doubtful, attended with losses which rendered any new operations impossible.

"This victory, it is true, has somewhat re-animated the spirit of the country so far as least as a nation whose people are not homogeneous, are susceptible of being re-animated; but in exchange for this advantage, it has deeply wounded the pride of the Anglo-Americans, and if they determine to employ all their resources, the conquest of Mexico is inevitable.

"Let it be considered that the Mexican troops have been obligated to make a Herculean effort to gather a few trophies from one of the divisions of the enemy—that this effort is almost a defeat, as it has left them exhausted—and that the rest remain in the country than one division of the enemy, against which nothing can be opposed—and it must be confessed that this victory of Santa Anna will only serve to precipitate the feeble nationality of Mexico, down the declivity which leads to the precipice.

"For ourselves, we believe that Mexico is already virtually blotted out of the list of independent nations. What can be expected of a nation, distracted by revolutions and contests for ephemeral power, when the enemy is at its fates, and that no common enemy, but one which aims at nothing less that the destruction of its nationality?—What can we expect of a nation, where the clergy—the richest Catholic clergy in the world—refuse the smallest sacrifice in favor of the country, and prefer the precarious possession of the worldly goods to the salvation of the land?

"The army without resources, even without food—the rickety politicians of the capital conspiring to overthrow the established order of things—the clergy occupied in secreting their valuables, and in exciting the fanatical opposition of the people against the sale of their property, without considering whether the Anglo-American will not appropriate it with less difficulty than the only fortification of the coast threatened by a formidable squadron—a great part of the country occupied by an army highly-disciplined, composed of men whose energy is proverbial, and abundantly supplied with every kind of munitions: what can result from all this? We look upon the consequences as inevitable. Enthusiasm will be re-awakened in the United States. An irresistible torrent of volunteers will inundate Mexico. And it will not be long before the Eagle of the Union will light in triumph upon the ancient capital of Montezuma.

"We, as Spaniards, cannot be but lament this result. The last remnants of the magnificent work of Hernan Cortes are about to disappear, and one of the most brilliant pages in our history will be bound, so to speak, in the volume of the stranger. Sorrowful effects of revolutions! Of demagogical tendencies prematurely ingrated on a nation without stamina to support the effects of an unholy ambition! Thirty years of independence have not sufficed to make the Mexicans a nation, notwithstanding they have held in their hands the richest elements that Providence ever placed within reach of the human family. And why?—Because they have strayed from the proper path; because they desired to form a republic with the materials fit only for a monarchy; because they concerted, by a simple decree, the ignorant and oppressed Indians, the dregs of the population, ignorant until then even of the language of their lords, into free citizens, possessing all the rights which a free nation could give. We now behold, though too late, the unavoidable evils which this error drew after it.

"And now, is it not permitted to ask what the nations of Europe think of the indefinite extension which the American Union is acquiring, and which it carries forward with as much safety as rapidity, sometimes by arms, sometimes by money, sometimes by emigration, without ever appearing to consider the morality of the means which it employs? Will they permit it to absorb, successively, the whole continent of America, and so form a nation by the side of which the most powerful states of Europe would appear as ridiculous pigmies? Will they consent that it shall consolidate its rich conquests, and make them the base of operations from which to invade in succession the states of Central America, where are to be found some of the most magnificent harbors in the world? Will they permit it, without obstruction, to reach the Isthmus of Panama –its golden dream –and thus yield to it one of the principal keys to the commerce of the globe?

"Time alone can answer these questions; but the history of the past affords us but little comfort for the future. Within this century the Union has acquired, successively, the Floridas, Louisiana, and Texas, and it is now about to acquire the Californias and some of the richest provinces of Mexico. Who shall fix limits to the power of the active race which peoples it? Let it once extend to Panama, and its might will be irresistible. It will hold the dominion of the seas; it will monopolize the commerce of the whole earth. And when the English language is spoken on all the shores of the Mexican Gulf, what human power will be sufficient to prevent the Island of Cuba and the English Antilles from falling by their own movement, and impulses of irresistible attraction, into the arms open to receive them?"

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p2c1, Later from Mexico

The steamship New Orleans, Captain Wright, has arrived from Vera Cruz, having left there on the 1st June. She touched on the 4th at the Brazos.

Gen. Shields is doing well, we are most happy to hear, and was shortly expected at Vera Cruz.

General Scott left Jalapa on the 23d May for Puebla, at the head of nearly 6,000 troops. We have the following brief note:

PUEBLA, MEXICO, May 29, 1847:

The division of General Twiggs entered this city today, all well. There were rumors in the morning that Generals Bustamente and Leon were advancing to attack General Scott with an immense force, but so far we have heard nothing confirming the reports. Almost everyone thinks that the Americans are to have another grand battle, but where no one can divine.

The diligencia does not run between this and the city of Mexico, and so far I have found it impossible to lay hands upon any papers.

No one as yet knows what General Scott’s intentions are as regards his future movements, yet small as his force is, many think he will advance upon the capital. We shall know in a day of two.

G. W. K.

The news from the city of Mexico by this arrival is most important. Our intelligent correspondent from Vera Cruz has furnished us with the annexed extracts from letters written at Mexico, and from the best sources of information. The resignation of Santa Anna is an important event in the history of the war:

Extract of a letter dated:

"CITY OF MEXICO, May 29, 1847.

"From here I have nothing worthy of notice to communicate except that Santa Anna yesterday resigned the presidency, but it is not known yet whether Congress will admit of it. –He was induced to take that course from the opposition he meets in his views of carrying on the defense of the city, and from some defamatory writings which appeared in the public papers against his past conduct. It is generally expected that the Americans will be here about the 15th of next month, and, considering the state of things in the capital, I may say that they will meet with but slight resistance on the part of this government.”

Through the same channel we have received the following brief extract from another letter of the same date:

"Last week Santa Anna commenced fortifying Guadalupe, Penon and Mexicalzingo, near the suburbs of the city; but unusual disapprobation was the result, and hence his reason for offering his resignation. It is supposed it will be accepted, and that Herrera will receive the nomination. There are only about 3,000 troops in the city.”
We have an exciting rumor from Puebla, mentioned in letters from Vera Cruz, that the citizens of Puebla had risen upon Gen. Worth, and cut off six or seven hundred of his men. The rumor was in every man’s mouth at Vera Cruz and much credence given to it. We are happy to say that our correspondent in Vera Cruz puts little faith in the rumors.

[Correspondence of the New Orleans Picayune]
VERA CRUZ, May 23, 1847.

Gentlemen: After several days of anxiety and suspense, occasioned by the capture of the diligence by a band of guerrillas, and the well-knows dangerous state of the road, another train has arrived at last from Jalapa bringing us news from the army and the events that have occurred on the road during the last six days, the most important of which is the murder of Col. Sowers, and seven of his escort of eight dragoons, and Lieut. McDonald, of the Rifle Regiment.

Col. S arrived here about a week ago with dispatches from Washington to Gen. Scott. He left this city last Saturday for Jalapa, and was murdered three miles beyond the National bridge. From all appearances, the party must have been an ambush very near the road, and by a well directed volley brought them all to the ground at once, without giving them the slightest opportunity for resistance. Thus it is again that dispatches, probably of no little importance, have fallen into the hands of the enemy, and perhaps may be used to good purpose against us. The bodies of three of the party were found neat the road, partially covered with sand, and the others had been dragged into the chaparral. One American house was found shot near the place where the party was assassinated.

A gentleman from the city of Mexico, who was one of the American prisoners captured by Urrea between Camargo and Monterey, came down with the train, having been liberated by the English Minister, he having claimed British protection. He reports all the American officers that were prisoners of parole.

A wagon master by the name of Parker and a quartermaster's clerk by the name of Lathrop, both captured on the road from Camargo to Monterey, and who were supposed to have been killed, were in prison in Mexico.

The diligence, the capture of which has cause so much excitement, it appears, was robbed on its (illegible) was injured not that the vehicle was partially destroyed and plundered of every thing if contained.

Gen. Shields was doing well and may be expected here on his way home in the course of ten days.

Strong suspiscious were entertained at Jalapa of an attempt to retake the place, but Col. Childs is always wide awake for anything of that kind, and will do then up brown if the attempt is made.

Some Mexicans also came down yesterday from Jalapa, having been robbed on the toad of everything they had of value; but the highwaymen showed their generosity and kindness to the unfortunate afterwards, by returning them twenty-five cents each to pay their expenses to his place.

The force of the (illegible) etc., on the road, is estimated at 500 men, disposed of as follows 300 men near the road, and 100 on each side of it, ranging at a sufficient distance to prevent small parties from taking the by paths.

Gen. Scott left Jalapa from Puebla on the 23d inst., at the head of about 6,000 men.

I cannot hear of any later news than what has been forwarded to you, from Gen. Worth's column at Puebla.

The train which came down was escorted by about sixty men, mostly discharged soldiers and some of the wounded at Cerro Gordo, in charge of Capt. Whiting. They saw frequently on the route men on the heights, and in the distance men on the lookout.

As for local news I have none to give you. –The rainy season has, it is thought, fully commenced, as we have had a sample of it during the last three days.

I have seen a private letter from Jalapa, which states that Col. Lawrence, bearer of dispatches, and one of his escort, were killed on the road, but no doubt the writer was mistaken in the name, and that the rumor emanated from the murder of Col. Sowers.

We regret to say that Maj. R. Hammond, Paymaster U. S. Army, died on board the New Orleans, at sea, on the 2d inst., on his passage from Vera Cruz.

[BJM]
army of Gen. Taylor. The letter of our correspondent below announces the arrival of a portion of Col. Doniphan's command at Saltillo, after a short encounter with a body of hostile Indians.

We have a copy of the Matamoras Flag of the 2d inst. The individual found murdered below Reynosa, as before mentioned by us, turns out to have been a private in Capt. Paul's company of Massachusetts volunteers. A company of Massachusetts men, under Capt. Walsh, escorting a train to Carmargo, passed the spot a few days since, and identified and buried the body. -Capt. W. demanded of some Mexicans residing near the scene of murder to produce the murderers or he would burn down their ranches. The threat had the desired effect, and three incorrigible scoundrels were handed over to him—one of whom was killed in endeavoring to make his escape, and the other two are imprisoned at Reynosa. The clothes of the murdered man were upon the Mexican who was killed.

From the Flag we learn that Lieut. Col. Abbott, with four companies of Massachusetts volunteers, escorting a wagon train and a number of artillery horses, took up the line of march for Cerralvo on Saturday, the 29th ult. Col. Wright, with the remaining six companies, was to proceed by boat to Carmargo, thence to Monterey, as soon as transportation could be had.

The troops remaining at Matamoras after the departure of the Massachusetts Regiment will be three companies of the 3d Dragoons—Hagan's, Butler's and Merrick's. These dragoons companies are not yet furnished with horses, and it is uncertain when they will be mounted—probably (says the Flag) not until they are called into active service, without affording an opportunity to drill. We copy the following from the Flag:

Murder. –A Mexican, Joseph Maria Lara, a carpenter by trade, who has a shop near the lower end of Commercial street, was found about ten o'clock on Saturday last lying dead on the floor of his house, having been stabbed in the breast. It has not yet been ascertained by whose (illegible) he was killed. His wife represents that she left him in the house in conversation with a (illegible), and when she returned he was found as described. Circumstances tend to a belief that she committed or instigated the murder herself, and we understand that she has been imprisoned until the matter can undergo investigation.

Col. Curtis, of the 3d Ohio Regiment, has received the appointment of Assistant Adjutant General to Gen. Wool.

The Matamoras Flag of the 20th May records the following:

STEAMBOAT DISASTER –The steamer Lama, Captain Ferguson, on the upward trip to Camargo, collapsed a (illegible) on Saturday last, in consequence of which she is detained a few miles below Reynosa. No one was injured, and a new boiler having been procured, Captain Ferguson expects to have her in trim again in a few days. The Lama was under Government charter, and freighted with army stores.

The steamer Gazelle, also under Government charter, bound up the river with stores, sank on Monday last about sixty miles above here. Boat a total loss, the current having broken her up, and swept off cabin and hull.

The Sabine, Captain Sterrit, freighted with private merchandise—her first trip up the river—struck a snag on Tuesday last, about thirty miles below Reynosa, and was run into shallow water, where she sand. The principal part of her cargo was saved without injury, and the boast, it is said, will soon again be afloat.

The steamer Big Hatchee lies high and dry between here and the mouth of the river, having grounded during the late rise, and the river receded from her. A rise of four feet will put her again in her element.

At the election of officers in the Massachusetts regiment, Lieut. Col. Wright was chosen colonel; Maj. Abbott, lieutenant colonel; and Capt. Webster chosen major.

June 15, 1847, REv64i13p2c3, General Scott’s Proclamation

The Union publishes an authentic copy of Gen. Scott’s proclamation to the Mexican people. –Having already laid before our readers the same remarkable document, translated from the Spanish, we deem it unnecessary to copy the official paper, which, though more polished in form and perfect in context, gives no better idea of the views and arguments of the author than the translated copy. In relation to this paper the Union says:

"There are not many parts of it which do not meet with our cordial approval, and on these we do not now propose to make any comments. –With some few qualifications, we unhesitatingly pronounce it an able and patriotic paper, credible to its author—General Scott—and well calculated to produce favorable impressions upon the Mexican people. That such is its true character, is evinced by the fact that it has drawn forth the bitter invectives of Santa Anna and then editors of the National Intelligencer. Gen. Scott has many friends among the Whig party and we do not doubt they will at once step forth and vindicate him from his allied assailants—General Santa Anna and the National Intelligencer.

"We publish, along with the proclamation, Santa Anna’s letter in reply to it, and we refer our readers to the
June 15, 1847, REv64i13p4c2, Later from Vera Cruz

The steamship Fashion, Capt. Ivy, (says the N. Orleans Delta, June 4,) arrived at this port yesterday from Vera Cruz, having left there on Sunday forenoon, the 30th ult.

Verbally we learn that the Mexicans were busy fortifying the pass at Rio Frio, between Puebla and the City of Mexico.

Gen. Scott, with the rear of the army, was to have left Jalapa on the 29th ult., and would arrive at Puebla on the 4th inst., where it is presumed he will await the arrival of the reinforcements being forwarded to him, before he advances farther.

We have heard a rumor that Herrera has been elected President, but cannot trace t to a reliable source, and we think the result of the election could scarcely be known at the capital so soon.

From the American Eagle we learn that the diligence which left Vera Cruz for Jalapa on the 22d ult., without passengers, but with three trunks filled with very fine dry goods, was stopped two miles beyond the National Bridge and robbed, and then burnt and destroyed. The driver and postillion who accompanied it were released and made their way to Jalapa. The diligence which should have come into Vera Cruz on the 24th ult., only came down to where the other had been destroyed, and at once returned. This, it is feared, will put an end to the use of diligences on the road. The robbery was no doubt the work of Mexican banditti. We come now to a more atrocious act by the same

H. M. Brackenridge, Esq., a distinguished Whig of Pittsburgh, has written several eloquent letters in vindication of the present way, and the rights and honor of the nation. Unlike his party, he takes the side of his own country, and speaks out boldly like a patriot. We regret that we have not room for his last beautiful letter. We are constrained to confine ourselves to a short extract:

"The address of General Scott, to the Mexicans, dates at Jalapa, is a document which does him honor, and at the same time does no more than justice to the American character. It breathes the most noble and chivalrous sentiments, and is distinguished by an elevated and magnanimous tone of morals. We behold an American army invading a foreign country in the course of a war, defeating the armies of the enemy, taking their towns, not only without committing a single act of violence on the defenseless, but scrupulously regardful, in the minutest particular, of individual immunity, excepting in cases purely accidental, or unavoidably consequent on military operations. The moment the battle is fought, and the victory won, our soldiers are seen rendering the most touching offices of humanity to the wounded enemy, as if they had been comrades. How different from the Mexican practice of killing the wounded and stripping the dead! Such is the mildness and humanity of the American victors, that their thousands of prisoners feel themselves at once in as perfect security as if they were in the midst of their own people. Their wants are liberally supplied, the little boy and his pet lamb, and the little girl and her pet dove, are spoken to with kind and soothing words, by those who just before were fighting with armed men, and with the fierceness of lions. It is not any wonder that such traits should excite admiration, or that the multitude of captives, who have been set free, have been forbidden by their own despotic rulers to enter the cities, on account of what they are in the habit of relating, not only of the courage and prowess of the Yankees, but still more of their strange and unaccountable humanity and generosity.

"In the cities occupied by the American troops order is immediately restored, and measures taken to command the most perfect security to the inhabitants, man, woman and child. Scarcely a day has passed by, when all classes, excepting the assassin and plunderer, feels a degree to security hitherto unknown. No one is molested in his house, no one fears to go forth into the streets, while their places of worship are held sacred, -Everything is as safe as in one of our own peaceful towns. This certainly is to divest grim-vi-saged war of its worst terrors. Gen. Morales, who had seen the conduct of our army after the taking of Vera Cruz, advised the people of Jalapa to remain quiet at their homes, and look upon the Americans as their best protectors, and for this he has been denounced by the military anarchists of the country as a traitor. Notwithstanding the slanders of the war party in Mexico, a party interested in making the war interminable, there is little doubt that the inhabitants of Puebla and the capital will hail the arrival of the Yankees, as that of deliverers, from the cut-throats and robbers, brought to the surface by the fermentation and disorganization of their own society. One mighty effort will shorten the war, and, even, save expense. If there be no central government in Mexico capable of forming treaties, we must raise up and treat with separate States and confederacies, taking care to secure sufficient guaranties for their fulfillment. We often see the expression, 'Stop the war—stop the war.' It is for Mexico to stop the war; she can do it at any moment, but it is not in our power. We may submit, we may renounce all our demands, we may leave all matters unsettled and consent to remain, no in a state of doubtful peace, but unavoidable and unending warfare, consequent on having no definite settlement of differences, or regulation of intercourse. Two nations in this situation are always at war, because always in collision. Suppose we withdraw our armies, is there any rational man who can suppose that, in thus implicitly confiding in Mexico, we can obtain a treaty of peace, or that she will renounce her pretension to the Sabine as her boundary? One of her very last pretensions, is a claim for indemnity for the loss of Texas, and all expenses of the war in that country since the year 1836! If we should lose the grasp we now have, she would laugh us to scorn, and treat us with contempt.”

"HORRID. –It is with pain mingled with a desire for vengeance that we undertake to relate another massacre of our countrymen in the most cruel and brutal manner. In our paper of last Saturday (only one week) we announced the fact that Col. Sowers was in this city as a bearer of dispatches to Gen. Scott, and today we are called upon to inform the public of his horrid death—not with his enemy in front to oppose him, but cowardly shot by those who dared to show themselves.

"It appears that he left this city on Saturday last with an escort of five men and Lieut. McDonnell of Capt. Wheat’s company, expecting to find the captain at Santa Fe, or at the most a very short distance the other side. They arrived at Santa Fe and lodged there during the night, finding that Capt. Wheat had left: in the morning, anxious to push forward although it was ascertained that Capt. W. was some thirty miles ahead) with an addition of two more to the escort Col. Sowers set out for Jalapa. The next that we know of this little party is the arrivial of one of the men, who returned and reported its surprise and destruction. In consequence of the falsity of the greater number of similar stories, Col. Wilson, our Governor, had the man arrested as a deserter. Thus matters stood until yesterday, when developments were made by an arrival from Jalapa—the first that has reached us for a week—tending to confirm our worst fears.

"We conversed yesterday with a gentleman who arrived in the morning, and he informs us that at a point about two miles on the other side of Puente National, he saw the ruins of the diligence, underneath which was a human body stripped, with the exception of a part of drawers, and mutilated in the most beastly manner. This is supposed to be the body of Col. Sowers. Near him lay another perfectly naked and likewise dreadfully mangled. Our informant was assured that five other bodies lay in some thick chaparral a short distance from the road. Now, the number of killed, with the man who escaped, exactly corresponds with that of the party which accompanied the unfortunate Col. Sowers, and leaves no doubt in out mind of its destruction."

Our readers will recollect a party of Mexican robbers recently captured near Vera Cruz by a party of amateurs, under Col. Banks. Ten of them have been tried for robbing, secreting arms and ammunition, &c. Five have been acquitted and five convicted. The latter were sentenced to four and a half months’ work upon the public streets and thoroughfares in chains. Tow more yet it remained to be tried. We hope this example may be salutary.

The Eagle informs us, that on the 28th a party of six Mexicans, coming into Vera Cruz from Santa Fe, were attacked by some of their own countrymen, and robbed of all they had about them.

The ship Zenobia arrived at Vera Cruz from New York on the 28th May, having on board 193 troops, principally of the 4th and 5th Infantry, under command of Captain J. H. Whippie, of the 5th, 1st Lieutenant H. Price of the 4th Infantry, and 2d Lieutenant J. W. Lendrum of the 3d Infantry. Fourteen of the men were recruits for several regiments.

We note the (illegible) to Vera Cruz. They have published instructions to the unacclaimated, full of good sense.

June 15, 1847, ReV64i13p4c3, Conditions of Peace

The Whigs will find fault with the Administration, whatever it may do. At one time they hurled the most bitter anthems on the President, because, as they wantonly alleged, his design was to push this "war of conquest" and ruthlessly to annex the whole of Mexico to our Union. Beaten from this position, and compelled by facts too stubborn to be overcome, to admit that the Administration is willing to close a peace with Mexico upon terms which a large majority of the American people regard as most liberal and magnanimous on our part, they change their tone, and argue that, had the same spirit of moderation been evinced by the Administration, this bloody and unnecessary war would have been avoided, and the heavy loss of American blood and treasure been averted. Yesterday’s Whig quotes the following passages from the leading article in the Democratic (illegible) upon “the State of the Country,” and remarked, that if the writer "correctly delineates the policy and purposes of the Administration, we must confess that the terms upon which it is willing to make peace with Mexico, though not at all to out liking, are less harsh and exacting than, from intimations proceeding from other high sources, we had previously supposed.” We, of course, do not attach very great importance to the correctness of the writer’s expositions, but are willing, for the present, to assume them to be authentic:

"We believe, in the first place, that the administration is willing to make to Mexico every possible concession in point of form, and to allow the defeated party in the war to prescribe its own rule of diplomatic etiquette in settling the preliminaries of peace. It has, for this purpose, clothed Gen. Scott, the commander-in-chief of the American army, with power to treat with the authorities he may find in Mexico, and send Mr. Trist, the second officer in the State Department, down to aid and instruct him in carrying out the views of the President. Nay, should the Mexicans desire, or consider it a special mark of attention, Mr. Buchanan, the distinguished Secretary of State, will himself go down and negotiate in the city of the Aztecs.

"As to the cession of territory demanded of the Mexicans, the administration will not claim it as a forfeit, but offer to pay for it, so as to acquire it by purchase. We want a clear title to it; and the administration considers purchase the very best of all titles.
"The expense of the war we will not claim from the Mexicans, and the indemnity which she owes our citizens will be assumed by the government of the United States. We shall then claim no money of Mexico in any shape, and are willing to accept land in payment of our just demands.

"As to the territory to be ceded or sold to us by Mexico, we are of opinion that it will no comprise more than Upper California and New Mexico, and that our government will not insist, as a condition of peace, on the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; but rather make this a subject for subsequent friendly negociations between the two sister republics."

As to the first proposition, the Whig asks "if Mr. Polk is now willing to permit Mexico to 'prescribe her own rule of diplomatic etiquette,' for example, at this time, why was he so indignant at her refusal to permit him to prescribe that rule, when he sent her, in the person of Mr. Slidell, an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, to negotiate upon all the subjects in dispute between the two countries, instead of the Commissioner, to adjust the question of boundary, whom alone she had agreed to receive?"

The official documents expressly contradict the position here taken by the Whig. As soon as the resolutions annexing Texas were passed by Congress, Almonte, the Mexican Minister at Washington, demanded his passports, declaring that the action of our Government would justify war. The Administration, however, resolved upon doing every thing to conciliate Mexico and terminate the difficulty amicably, instructed Mr. Black, the American Consul at the City of Mexico, "to ascertain from the Mexican Government whether they would receive an Envoy from the United States, entrusted with full power to adjust all the questions between the two Government, though Mr. Pena y Pena, agreed to "receive a Minister from the United States in the Capital of Mexico, with full power from his Government to settle the dispute in a peaceable manner." Mr. Slidell was sent as such Envoy; but, on arriving at the City of Mexico, was objected to by the Secretary of State. Two weeks afterwards, his mission was annulled by an official vote from the Mexican Secretary, requiring him to produce special powers, from the settlement of the Texas question alone. This gross violation of an express agreement was, no doubt, attributable to the public excitement raised against President Herrera for wishing, as it was alleged, to bargain away the Mexican territory, embraced in Texas. The fact is, a few days after, the Government of Herrera was overthrown, and General Paredes, a military usurper, succeeded to power, pledging himself to recover Texas by force. Mr. Slidell, who had retired to Jalapa, repeated the proffer of peace to the new Mexican Secretary of State, Mr. Castillo y Lanzas, stating that the President was sincerely desirous of preserving peace between the two countries. A few days after Mr. Slidell (illegible) rejected, his passports were sent to him, and he returned to the United States.

Is it not evident that the objection to Mr. Slidell, as a full Minister, was a mere quibble to disguise a gross violation of an express agreement, and that, in the excited state of the public mind on account of the Annexation of Texas which led to the overthrow of Herrera, no change of policy in our diplomatic intercourse would have induced the Mexican rulers to enter upon a negotiation, even of the boundary question alone? Paredes was hoisted into power, pledged to wrest the whole of Texas from the "Northern invaders," and he would not therefore listen to any proposition, however "conciliatory or complying." This is demonstrated by his orders to the commanding General on the Rio Grande, before he could have possibly heard of the march of General Taylor from Corpus Christi, to cross the river and take "the initiative" in making hostilities. His cry was for war, and not for peace –and any argument that the war was brought on by our Government stickling for diplomatic etiquette, is refuted by history.

In reply to the Whig's assertion, we contend that the President has, from the first clash of arms, been ready and willing to make peace with Mexico. We shall not now go into the question of the march of our army to the Rio Grande. It is enough to know, that the war was recognized by Congress as the act of Mexico, and the President was fully provided with men and money to prosecute it vigorously. Not a work was then raised against the pursuit of the insolent foe into his own territory, to punish the murders of our citizens, and other wrongs inflicted upon us. The cry of "lawless invasion," "was of conquest," was not then heard. With the full acquiescence of the nation, the army crossed the Rio Grande. It is enough to know, that the war was recognized by Congress as the act of Mexico, and the President was fully provided with men and money to prosecute it vigorously. Not a word was then raised against the pursuit of the insolent foe into his own territory, to punish the murders of our citizens, and other wrongs inflicted upon us. The cry of "lawless invasion," "war of conquest," was not then heard. With the full acquiescence of the nation, the army crossed the Rio Grande and victory after victory received the applause of our whole people. Still the President was not neglectful of the great object we had in view, the establishment of a permanent and honorable peace. Proffers of negotiation were again made, in the midst of our triumphs, but they were again rejected with scorn. Could the President have done more to effect a pacific settlement of the difficulty or, rather, was he not imperfectly required, by the action of Congress and the people, to push on the war, so as to weaken and humble Mexico, and compel her to listen to a negotiation of peace? That this desirable end has not been attained, is not the fault of the President nor our gallant officers and men –but is mainly attributable to the factious partisan course of Whig presses and politicians, whose assaults upon their own Government are eagerly caught up by the war party in Mexico, as conveying sympathy for their blind and infatuated perseverance in hostilities. The Administration, we have no doubt, is now, and ever has been, willing to make peace on fair, equitable and liberal terms. What more can the country, or even the Whig party, demand?

The Whig attempts to show up the inconsistency of the proposition attributed to the President, viz: to obtain Mexican territory, not by conquest but my purchase and asks, "why conquer it first, in order to buy it afterwards?" How does the Whig know that the purchase of territory was not embraced in Mr. Slidell's mission, which was so insolently rejected, under the influence of the war spirit? And is it not a matter of record, that in the summer of 1846 the President by special message called upon Congress for a certain amount to assist in arranging the terms of peace with Mexico; and that at the last session of Congress, after we had "conquered" a large portion of Mexico, a sum of money for the same purpose was placed at the President's disposal by Congress? The attempt, then, of the Whig to present this matter of "purchase" as a new question, is not sustained by facts.
We shall not undertake to discuss the propriety of the Whig’s parallel between our course towards Mexico and “the partition of Poland and the extinction of its nation existence, by then usurping triumvirate of Russia, Austria and Prussia.” It is sufficient to chronicle such assertions as indicative of how far party spirit will blind the judgement. To use the language of the Whig, we believe that the Administration did “exhaust every effort to effect its object by peaceable means, before it unsheathed the sword,” and that since the sword has been drawn, it has left untried no plan, consistent with the honor and interests of the nation, to bring the war to a close.

We do not profess, however, to be acquainted with the designs of the Administration in regard to the conditions of peace. All that we ask is indemnification for the past and security for the future. We would put away every notion of annexing Mexico to the United States, as has been most wantonly charged upon the Administration by the Whigs; nor would we do anything to denationalize that Republic, which we yet hope to see, under the influence of our free institutions, acquiring stability and strength, and acting as a barrier against the progress of monarchical principles. To secure the object we have in view, however, it may be necessary for us to hold the country to levy duties sufficient to pay the expenses of our armies of occupation, and to protect the peace party, who may be willing to organize their Government on sound principles and consummate a solid and honorable peace with us. Money she has none, and we must therefore take a reasonable portion of her territory, of no real value to Mexico, as a moderate equivalent for the sacrifice of life and the heavy expense which has been forced upon us. –It is our policy, as it should be the aim of our Government, to see established in Mexico a literal, permanent civil government, with whom we may cultivate a friendly and generous intercourse in trade and commerce, -exchanging with one another the blessings with which Nature has endowed each country. In a word, we fully sanction the following views of the N. Y. Globe:

"The original declaration of war against us by Mexico, without any justifiable cause, has been punished by a series of victories, which has placed that country at our disposal; another movement directed by a proper force, will give us possession of her capital, she is in every point of view a beaten, conquered and humiliated nation; and what adds to her humiliation, she has brought into the field to one against us, and yet she has been vanquished in every flight; she has not gained a single victory, or achieved a single exploit, but with characteristic obstinacy, she insists upon a farther prosecution of the war. We have gained all that we hoped for in defending ourselves against these aggressions, and now we have an example to set to Mexico and to the world, an example of reason, of moderation, of forbearance. We conquer not for occupation, but for defense. We conquer for peace not for territory, and beyond our just claims to a safe boundary reaching to the Pacific, it is not our interest or our desire to occupy any more territory owned by Mexico.”

June 18, 1847, REv64i14p1c7, Important to Discharged Soldiers

IMPORTANT TO DISCHARGED SOLDIERS. –By an act of the last Congress, approved 2d March, 1847, (says the New Orleans Delta,) $500,000 was appropriated to provide for the comfort of discharged soldiers, who may be landed at New Orleans, or other places within the United States, so disabled by disease or by wounds received in the service, as to be unable to proceed to their homes. This sum is to be applied under the direction of the Secretary of War. On the 20th of May Gov. Johnson addressed a communication to Gen. Brooke, calling his attention to the wise and humane provisions of this act of Congress, and inquiring whether, under the direction of the Secretary of War, he had been empowered to apply any portion of the sum appropriated at this point, and what arrangements, if any, had been made for carrying into effect the provisions of that act. Gen. Brooke, with his usual promptness, immediately wrote to the authorities at Washington on the subject, which was as promptly responded to in the following letter from Adjutant General Jones:

ADJUTANT GENERAL’S OFFICE,
Washington, May 28, 1847.

General: Your letter of the 20th, on the subject of discharge volunteers who are sick and in want, has been received, and I have the pleasure to inform you that the fund appropriated by Congress for their relief (500,000 dollars) is now available. Your requisition on the (illegible) at New Orleans for any funds that you may think necessary to be placed in the hand of Assistant Surgeon McCormick, in fulfillment of the object of the law at New Orleans, will be promptly met. I am, General,

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
{Signed,}R. JONES, Adjutant General.

To Brig. General GEORGE M. BROOKE,
Commanding Western Division,
New Orleans, Louisiana.
{BJM}
The following is the dispatch from Gen. Santa Anna to which allusion was made in our last paper:

ARMY OF OPERATIONS OF THE EAST,
Ayolti, May 18, 1847.

From the moment that I arrived at this place, I learned with deep regret, through channels worthy of all confidence, that my approach to the capital with the Army of the East had spread the greatest alarm among its inhabitants, caused by the idea that it was intended to defend the city within its own walls, as also by the agitation of party interest, which putting party passions in motion, appear in this instance to have made common cause with the enemies of honor and of the independence of the nation. Alarmed by this intelligence, which, if left to its natural course, would not only rob me of the only property remaining to me in this world—my honor—but would also decidedly endanger the sacred cause which we defend, I have thought it to be my duty to suspend my march, in order to render an account to the Supreme Government of my conduct and intentions, trusting that the loyalty and candor with which I shall explain them will prevent the last and most fatal calamity which could in our present position befall our country, “distrust and discord among those who are called upon to save it.”

When I commenced the march to this city it was in obedience to a resolution adopted by the Committee of War, of which I informed your Excellency in my dispatch of the day before yesterday, in which it was determined that the salvation of the capital was not only necessary and advantageous for the ultrair operations of the war, but might be sufficient to bring it to a happy and honorable conclusion. Although fully convinced of the utility of this measure, I had notwithstanding, resolved to submit the same question, on my arrival at the capital, to another and more numerous meeting, presided over by the older general in the army, determined to respect its decision and even to resign my military power, which I also manifested to your Excellency in my above named dispatch. Such were my designs, in which I protest most solemnly not a thought of personal aggrandizement or ambition had a part. The nation has seen that since my return to the Republic I have passed my time in the field without thinking of the supreme power, until a majority of the Representatives of the nation urged me to put an end to the civil war which was destroying the heart of the nation.

Not even this complete self-denial, nor the numerous and severe sacrifices to which I have submitted, have been sufficient to destroy old prejudices. Calumny and suspicion have added fresh wormwood to the already bitter cup of my life, and under what circumstances? At a moment when I was leading to the defense of the capital an army drawn from its ruins, and when I asked of my country no other favor than to be allowed to die in its defense. Although this unexpected and undeserved return ought to absolve me from all engagements, furnishing me an opportunity to escape with honor from the extremely difficult position in which I find myself placed, yet I will not voluntarily take such a step, nor shall it ever be said that the man to whom the nation entrusted her salvation did not have the recourse to every sacrifice, including his self-love and even outward appearances, before he retreated from before the enemy, and that if ever this should happen it will be due to invincible obstacles; and finally because he had been repudiated by his countrymen.

As in my person are at this moment united two kinds of representations, both supreme—one military and the other political—which especially claim the fulfillment of peculiar duties, it is necessary that I should satisfy both. I will do so as clearly and succinctly as the straitened position in which I am placed will admit. The first requires that I should state freely and explicitly my opinion respecting the military operations under my charge and these re, that the war must be continued until we shall have obtained ample justice from our unjust aggressors; and that, to arrive at this result, it is necessary to save the capital should be occupied without resistance, the spirit of the people will be broken, and the complete submission of the country will be inevitable.

My duty as the first magistrate of the nation, at present shamefully censured and suspected by unjust and artful detractors, requires that I should remove a pretext invented by perfidy and pusillanimity in order to neutralize the generous efforts which the good citizens are disposed to make for the salvation of its independence and honor. In order to (illegible) it is (illegible) to which I have previously alluded, and of which I now repeat the following two points: First, to carry on the war on the basis before indicated, and, secondly, to (illegible) the salvation of the capital as indispensable. Being determined to admit any compromise on either of these points, I communicate the same to your Excellency, that you may impart the same to his Excellency, the President, and, should he decide against me, you will at once tender my resignation as commander-in-chief and first magistrate of the Republic, and forward my passports to retire to wherever may be most convenient for me.

It might happen, that although there may be an obsolete conformity with my ideas, it may be thought that I would be an obstacle to carrying them into due effect. I have already stated that these circumstances would be very propitious for me to escape from the critical position in which I am faced in an easy and honorable manner by a prompt dismissal from service, but I have too high an opinion of my duty. I know the obligation I contracted with the nation when I was placed at its head, and when it confided to me its precious defense. I shall never betray this trust, and a voluntary separation from the affair would make me believe myself guilty of a dishonorable desertion. My country finds me at her side, and I am determined to fulfil the mission that has been confided to me to the very last extremity, and my dearest interests and my very existence are staked on the altar of liberty and independence of my country. But as I wish to hear and to respect the sound opinion of the nation, I should with that the Supreme Government, speaking to me loyally and with candor, should make known whether I should separate myself from the trusts that have been confided to me, and I will not hesitate a moment in relinquishing them. In that case I shall have given way to respectable voices, and not to the calculations of individual interests or factions. I shall retire, tranquilly making this last sacrifice, which is that of my own opinion, and renouncing the satisfaction of spilling my blood for my country, and standing by her in the moments of her affliction. Senores Don Manuel Barande, Don Ignacio Trigueros and Don Jose Fernando Ramirez, who are here on a friendly visit, are commissioned to be my interpreters near the Supreme Government, and I have requested them to enlarge upon these ideas, as they have listened to them from my lips.

May it please your Excellency to communicate this note to his Excellency, the President, requesting him to favor me with an answer in the shortest delay possible, to enable me to form any ulterior determination. God and Liberty!

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

To his Excellency the MINISTER OF WAR.

To this letter the following reply was immediately made by the Government through the Minster of War:

DEPARTMENT OF WAR AND MARINE,
Mexico, May 19, 1847.

June 18, 1847, REv64i14p4c1, Prospects of Peace

The intelligence in the N. O. papers is of a contradictory character, in relation to the election of President. The Bulletin says that Herrera had been elected President, and the clergy were in favor of peace; and that Herrera would immediately make a public declaration to that effect. –The same paper says that a late letter from an officer in Gen. Scott's army and whose situation was highly favorable for obtaining correct information, states that peace would shortly be made:

"The news, on the whole, we think, in favorable as regards peace, or at least of a disposition on the part of the enemy to make it, if the terms should be admissible."

On the other hand, it is stated positively, that the enemy were actively engaged in fortifying the Rio Frio Pass.

The N. O. National has the following article on the same subject. We trust that its expectations may be as well founded as its reasoning is sound:

"We have had the pleasure of conversing with one of our gallant officers, just returned from the seat of war, and we have reason to believe that the prospect of peace with Mexico is not altogether chimerical. –The British residents of Mexico begin to speak of such a thing as necessary, and they no doubt represent the feelings of their government; and the British nation, having great interests to look after in Mexico, can exert influence that will greatly facilitate a peace, if it choose to do so. Before the taking of Vera Cruz, the British residents of that city were very incredulous about our conquering Mexico. The battles of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo have forced them to acknowledge the thing as done, and they now speak of the Mexican nation as no longer competent to carry on a civilized warfare.

"Again, the most intelligent native citizens of Vera Cruz and Jalapa, and the intervening country, agree that the war should no longer be carried on. They acknowledge that the Mexican arms cannot prevail; that the resources of the people are exhausted. The people are hourly becoming reconciled to the Americans. The destruction of the enormous tariffs, and annoying tolls upon the roads, has facilitated internal commerce, and destroyed the monopolies that every where weighed down the laboring classes.

"Lastly, the clergy of Jalapa, among whom are many of the most intelligent in Mexico, openly avow their desire for peace. They have learned that we are not making war upon religion, but upon the military despots that have reduced Mexico to its present degradation; of course their sentiments will have an extended influence.

"Although our reasons for expecting peace may appear at first-sight somewhat superficial, still we find more substance on which to ground a hope that the war is nearer at an end that has heretofore been presented to us."

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p1c2, The President and Santa Anna

Not long since we took occasion to review some of the prominent scenes in the military life of Santa Anna, and to show that, as a General, his career has been marked by nothing but cowardice, unmilitary conduct and defeat. We further contend that if Mexico had empowered the President to select a General to lead her to battle, he could not have chosen one who, with the resources at his disposal, would have met such inglorious defeats from our gallant and skilful officers and troops. The Whig thinks we have underrated the ability as well as bravery of the Mexican Exor Cerrro Gordo. Nothing but revolution, dissension and defeat, has followed the advent of General Santa Anna.

These opinions, certainly, ought not to outweigh the stubborn facts with which the country is familiar, Santa Anna, we admit, is a man of talents and ready pen; his beautiful and glowing pronunciamientos are worthy of the days of Roman virtue and self-devotion; though he has, on every occasion, with marked hypocrisy and cowardice, falsified his heroic words. But that he has not the qualities to excite a popular enthusiasm, or the skill or courage to lead armies on the field, his ceaseless defeats and pusillanimous flights have thoroughly convinced us.

We, too, can quote the weighty opinions of others in defense of our position. We find the following article in the New Orleans Commercial Times:

"GEN. MINON. –This officer, whom Santa Anna denounced for a want of skill and courage an Buena Vista, has published in the Republicano a regulation of the charge brought against him –He declares that he assertion by Santa, of the want of provisions and water in the army, is a falsehood. He states that he himself had cattle to the number of 600 head, besides maize and flour, of which he apprised Santa Anna. He further asserts that the latter’s retreat was unjustifiable; that the manner of it was still more so –moving off in the darkness of the night, and leaving hundreds of his poor wounded soldiers to their fate on the field –more like a fugitive hiding from his enemy, than a general retiring to recruit his forces. It was to prevent these facts from being made public, that he, Gen. Minon, was persecuted, imprisoned and denied communication with his friends. Truth will but, it appears, and Santa Anna will shrink into a pigmy, by and by, from the inflated dimensions he gave himself, as the Napoleon of the West."

A writer in the Union, who has been in Mexico, presents the following strong and interesting facts and sound views in regards to the return of Santa Anna to Mexico. The extract is long, but it is marked with a calm and patriotic spirit, which gives it much weight. History and observation satisfy us of the correctness of the views we have formed of the character and ability of Santa Anna; and until we see reason to change our opinion, we shall continue to believe that the return of Santa Anna has been (illegible) country’s cause, instead of a fatal and reasonable movement, as the Whigs allege:

Hoping and believing that my countrymen, whatever their alliance of party, can as patriots look upon national measures independent of the one-sided views presented by partisan presses, I venture to lay before them a few facts and observations in relation to a prominent incident in the Mexican war. I allude to the consent of the government to the admission of Gen. Santa Anna into Mexico. There is no act for which the President has been more censured and ridiculed; yet there is none in the conduct of the war which could have shown a more correct estimate of Mexican character, or of the military character of Gen. Santa Anna himself. The results have in many respects, if not in all, justified that estimate.

To those whose lot has been cast in Mexico, it is often amusing, and sometimes painful, to witness among our own people the false reasoning, based upon false impressions, applied to the Mexican population, institutions, and officers. –It is natural. We reason from those of our own country to theirs; and it is difficult for a citizen of this Union to imagine, or to understand when laid before him, the degradation of Mexico; and in making up a Mexican hero, he would never take into account the vices which are essential to the character. None have professed so much by these difficulties of judgement as Gen. Santa Anna, who has, with us, been gratuitously endowed with the character of a gallant, if not that of a chivalric, chief; whereas, at home, he is known as a chief from his pre-eminence in the national vices, and for years the inconstancy of his courage has been the subject of popular talk. From the battle of Talome, at which he was defeated, (I think in 1832,) down to the present time, he has never, even among his own people, gained a battle, excepting when he has been enabled to purchase a part of the opposing army. Going before more recent events, we know the result of San Jacinto, and we know his conduct when captured there; we also now the fate of the last battle of his contest with Paredes, after which he fled his country. Then why is he a military chief? Because, as such he is a leader of a horde of banditti, which, receiving no pay from a government having no revenue, is necessarily thrown upon robbery for the means of support. –By such of the Mexican people as are not in some way connected with the military, he is detested; and is, perhaps, the only politician who, in the event of a decided overthrow at home, runs the risk of losing his life. Nothing could exceed the enthusiasm of hate by which he was forced to fly his country at the time of his late exile. Happening at the time to be in one of the remote provinces, I saw people running to each other’s houses with congratulations at his overthrow, and exulting in the hope that he would yet be caught and shot. They repeated doggerel rhymes, in which the "one-legged scoundrel" was his most flattering epithet. Now whom did the admission of Santa Anna expel from the country? General Paredes. H fled, not from the Mexican people, but from Santa Anna, whom he knew better than did the unfortunate officer over whose name I write. A more gallant spirit than that of Paredes never existed. He is too brave a man to be long a Mexican leader. Plunging into the hottest of the fight himself, he gives his followers no excuse for retreating. His small person is now covered with scars of desperate wounds, and of one of his arms but a fragment remains. Single-handed, he has had then energy and courage to quell the mutiny of a Mexican garrison. His wife, equally brave with himself, has been by his side in some of his most desperate fights. Although it is not probable that the general result would have been changed, fighting Mexicans with Paredes, of even his wife at their head, would have been a very different thing to fighting them under that “very best General” whom the President had the INDISCRETION to give them. It is pretty certain Paredes never would have set the example of flight at Buena Vista or Cerrro Gordo. Nothing but revolution, dissension and defeat, has followed the advent of General Santa Anna.
Although the acts of the administration, as those of all human beings, may be assailed for erroneous judgement, doubts of the integrity of motive of the clearness of judgement which prompts the censure must arise in the minds of all independent citizens, when they see suggested, as a motive of policy, a want of patriotism among the chief officers of the republic. To this allegation every honest man’s heart involuntarily gives the lie. No citizen, appealing to his own bosom, can believe that the President of the United States and the members of his cabinet desire the defeat and disgrace of their country. On the contrary, he must feel that, as citizens and men, they are, equally with any alive to its interests and to its successes in our present contest with an ever vicious and faithless neighbor; while, as the agents of its policy, they have an additional interest in all that concerns its glory and renown. Yet do we daily see hostility to the success of the war charged upon the administration. Such charges are too much for the credulity of the most violent, though honest opponent of the administration, and are evidences of the spirit and judgement with which the administration is measured.

FROM THE ARMY OF GEN. SCOTT.

The steamship Telegraph, Capt. Auld, arrived Sunday evening having left Vera Cruz on the 4th inst., Tampico on the 7th and Brazos Santiago on the 9th inst.

The Telegraph brought over the following passengers from the Brazos:

[Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune.]

JALAPA, Mexico, May 22, 1847.

It seems that the affair with Santa Anna’s lancers took place at Amosoque, a small place about three leagues this side of Puebla. The number of the enemy was variously estimated at from 1500 to 2000. They charged up within cannon range with great apparent resolution, so much so that a regular movement was made to receive them; them all scampering off as fast as their animals would carry them, leaving ten men and seven horses dead on the field.

The better classes at Puebla appear well enough disposed towards the Americans, although they perhaps do not altogether like the idea that a force of 3000 men should enter a city of near 100,000 souls, and without resistance. The lower orders –the ladrones and leperos, with which Puebla abounds –are evidently but ill disposed towards us. One of Gen. Worth’s men has already been assassinated, but fortunately the murders were immediately arrested. On the alcades telling Gen. W. that according to their laws, a year and a half would elapse before the case of the assassins could be settled in the courts of Puebla, he was informed that an American tribunal would render them full of justice in a day and a half! The miscreants are now where they never will commit another murder.

It is said that supplies of all kinds can be readily obtained at Puebla. The wheat crop has just ripened and is now most abundant.

The news now is that the Mexicans have abandoned the idea of fortifying at the Rio Frio, but intend constructing a line of works at El Penol, a position about nine miles this side of the city of Mexico. Perhaps they only intend this as a show of resistance, for the sake of saving their credit; again, they may hope to raise men enough to give a regular battle to the Americans. They can collect nothing, however, but an undisciplined rabble, and these our regulars can disperse like a chaff. The more they have to contend with of (illegible) the quicker a (illegible) be created among them.

Santa Anna, after the dispersion of his cavalry, did not stop even at San Martin or Rio Frio, but kept on with all speed to the city of Mexico. Our knowledge of the state of affairs at the capital, since Santa Anna’s arrival, is limited, but it was currently reported at Puebla on Wednesday last, that on the previous day the two parties –the Polkas and the Puros –were fighting like cats and dogs. Some new revolution has without doubt broken out, but the leaders are
Gen. Scott’s last proclamation has been generally circulated at Puebla, and it is said with most excellent effect. No less than three editions of it had been printed, and still the inhabitants were calling for more. The demand for it alone would show that its effects have been salutary. The numberless horde of military drones and all the employees and hangers-on of the Government, are doubtless doing all they can to put down its circulation and deaden its influence upon the masses; but they cannot keep it out of the hands of the middle and better class of citizens, the laborious and thinking artisans, nor prevent them from perusing and pondering upon its contents.

In a letter I sent you yesterday by the diligencia I believe that I states that Gen. Valencia was coming out with 14,000 men to meet the Americans. The report is that of this number 4000 are Pintos, or Indians of the South under Gen. Alvares. They are called Pintos from the fact that after they come to manhood their faces, from some cause or other which I have not heard explained, become spotted –yellow and red. They are of little account as soldiers, and it is probable that Valencia’s men, if he has the number given him by rumor, are nothing but raw recruits. If they stop to be fired at once they will not do it a second time.

There is much speculation in the army as to what is to be the result –as to what is to be the winding up of this war with Mexico. I can see no other result than the subjugation of the country entirely, -or at least in bringing it under the protection of the United States. As a nation, Mexico is blotted out of the list; the candle of her independence is burnt down to the socket. If left to herself she would in a few months, from her utter inability to govern herself, be torn and divided by intestine commotion. No protection whatever could be given either to life or property; there are no men in the country who could make headway against the torrent of abuses that would at once creep into every department; there is no money or means with which to establish a new and stable government. What then is she to do? This is a question for wise heads to answer. Too utterly helpless to be left to herself, I repeat that the better plan would be to take her at once under our protection. Let some honest and well-meaning man –there may be a few of them left –let someone of them be chosen or selected as President, and give him the assistance of a few thousand men to keep down revolutions, and awe the hungry horde of leeches, who have so long preyed upon the country. If they raised a grito or pronunciamento, put them down by the bayonet; pronunciamientos would soon become unfashionable if the precious blood for those who started them was brought in jeopardy. Give but one of their revolutions a tragic turn –they have been costly farces heretofore –and the people would soon become sick of them.

These remarks have been hastily thrown together, but they may possibly be as good as any speculations that can be offered. He who thinks that a lasting and beneficial peace can be made with Mexico, or believes that the American troops are soon to be withdrawn, is someone who has not bee over the country; he starts in his belief from false premises, and judges a race of people by the ordinary rules which govern human nature, while it is notoriously a fact that they have long since thrown all ordinary rules at defiance. The Chinese, when they painted hideous faces upon their walls to frighten off the English invaders, were not a whit behind these people when they get up their tremendous proclamations, and flatter themselves into the belief that what they say in them is all true –that they really area a great people, and able to contend with those whom they profess to despise. Yours,

G. W. K.

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p2c1, From the Army of General Taylor

From the Brazos, by the arrival of the Telegraph, our news is later.

From the Flag of the 7th inst., we learn that Col. Doniphan, with a portion of his command, passed down the Rio Grande on the 5th inst. The Flag thus speaks of them:

The unshorn beards and goat and deer skin clothes of many of them reminded us of descriptions we have read of the inhabitants of some of the countries of the Russian Empire. They stopped in town a couple of hours. Col. Doniphan is a stout, rough-featured, good-natured-looking sort of a man. He brought along with him Clark’s battery, and ten pieces of cannon captured at Sacramento. The sick, &c, forty or fifty wagons, with several hundred mules, were turned over to the quartermaster.

A private belonging to this command fell off the steamboat on the 5th inst., and was drowned.

Capt. Rice Garland’s company of Rangers has been dismissed at Matamoras, some difficulty about mustering them into the service having occurred.

The Massachusetts volunteer put in prison for killing a man who refused him whisky, has made his escape. One of his companions has killed a woman in Matamoras for the same offence. The Flag loudly denounces these outrages.

A private in the 1st Indiana Regiment is also denounced for a brutal assault upon a Mr. Stip, an aged French silversmith, with whom he had a slight difficulty.
A short time after my last letter closed the town was thrown into a fever of excitement by the arrival of Gen. Wool’s camp of two Mexican officers from San Luis Potosi, charged with dispatches for Gen. Taylor. They professed to be ignorant of their contents, but to believe that they had come from the city of Mexico and contained the intelligence that an armistice had been granted, and that negotiations for peace were under discussion between Gen. Scott and Santa Anna. Eстатio was the joy of many who are “in for the war” and pine for the day when they shall rejoin their friends and families. The dispatches were immediately forwarded to Gen. Taylor by Lieut. Franklin, and the Mexican officers treated with the most marked courtesy by our officers at this post. They professed ignorance of the character of the dispatches, but believed that they above was their purport. Singular to say, this idea was generally believed; for myself, I have so little confidence in anything Mexican that I believed it to be a paper from the Department of San Luis—a remonstrance against the advance of Gen. Taylor, or something of that character. Private letters received from San Luis by citizens here, brought by the Mexican officers, announce that the inhabitants were in a state of excitement from the expected approach of our army from this quarter, which was looked for by the 28th inst. The dispatches arrived here on Tuesday and were immediately forwarded, and the protracted absence of the bearer, Lieut. Franklin tended to excite the curiosity felt to be apprised of their contents.

About 1 o’clock today he returned. And lo! The bubble burst! The important dispatch was a communication from the Governor of San Luis Potosi, announcing that he had heard of the intended approach of the American army, and begging to inquire whether it was the intention of the commanding general to conduct the war according to the usages of civilized nations, of according to the manner adopted by the Camanches. What reply Gen. Taylor will make to a question and communication of so insulting a character I cannot say, but I am told his usually even temper was considerably ruffled upon reading it, and he is said to have remarked that he should think the Mexicans had become pretty well acquainted with (illegible) conducting war before this. If they have not it is certainly no his fault, for he has tried hard enough to beat it into them. There is no doubt that we shall march upon San Luis at a very early period, as soon as a sufficient number of troops arrive from below, and from San Luis to the city of Mexico. A communication received from Gen. Scott by Gen. Taylor a few days ago, giving a brief account of the battle near Jalapa, directs Gen. T. to move at once, or as early as possible, from San Luis, where he expected the letter would reach him, to the city of Mexico. So that Gen. Taylor will not probably remain any time at San Luis, unless he receives orders there, but leaving garrison for the lace, will proceed with the residue of his command to the city of Mexico. The command will probably never retrace its steps this way, as there will be no occasion for it. I have, therefore, a fair prospect of “reveling in the halls of the Montezumas,” as well as some other people, as if I live through the campaign and return via Vera Cruz, I shall have seen quite as much of the country as I care about.

Speaking of health, Saltillo appears to be a very healthy place, and the temperature is really delightful. The mornings, evenings and nights are cool, and a good breeze prevails through the day, rendering the atmosphere pleasant and agreeable in the shade—in the sun I confess it is hot. And yet there is now a great deal of sickness among the Mexicans mostly children, and the number of funerals of the latter are really quite alarming.

Col. Doniphan with the residue of his command arrived at camp this morning and reported to Gen. Wool. It is thought that this artillery companies under Capt. Weightman, attached to this command, will consent to remain with Gen. Taylor. Well, let us hope that the new regiments will stand up to their work quit as well as the old, and if an opportunity occurs, distinguish themselves as their predecessors have done. We cannot doubt them. It is scarcely probable that there will be any resistance, at San Luis, yet the Mexicans may make a stout one. An order has just been received from Gen. Wool, by the two Mexican officers who brought the despatchers from San Luis, to report to him tomorrow morning, at 8 o’clock, for an answer to their despatches.

June 22, 1847, REV64I15P2C2, Important from Mexico City

We have received by the way of Tampico, (illegible) the Capital as late as the 29th of May. This is a week later than the papers received last week by the Oregon, and full as late as the private advices from the Capital.

Santa Anna’s letter of resignation, which we gave on Friday last, is published in the papers of the 29th May, but we know nothing of the action taken by Congress on the subject. We find also a long manifesto addressed to the nation...
In the city of Mexico everything is manifestly in a state of confusion, and almost unlicensed anarchy. General Bravo has resigned not only his command of General-in-Chief, but also his commission of general of division. General Rincon is said to have done the same thing. More of the causes in our next.

It is true that General Almonte is under arrest though the causes of his imprisonment are not avowed. He is confined in Santiago Tlaltelolco.

The death of General Scott was for several days reported in the city of Mexico, and generally credited. The error was discovered, however, prior to the latest dates.

Gen. Ampudia has been directed to wait further orders at Cuernavaca. What suspicious thing he has done or contemplated, we are not informed.

Gen. Valencia and Gen. Salas were ordered to leave the city of Mexico on the 24th ult., for the city of San Luis Potosi, to take command of the army of the North.

The accounts we find in the Mexican papers of the disaffection in Zacatecas confirm those we published a few days since. The official paper of the State publishes wrong representations made against Santa Anna and in favor the Americans-Gen. Scott’s manifesto among the latter. The latter document is also given in all the papers of the capital.

Gen. Arista has refused to resume his military functions until his conduct should be investigated by a military tribunal. He demands that his trial may take place at once, in order that he may take part in the defense of the country.

The Legislature of Durango voted for Seno D. Francisco Elloriaga for President. Upon the first ballot, Elloriaga received eight votes, and Santa Anna six. Elloriaga was the former Governor of the State, and it will be recollected ran Santa Anna hard for the Provisional Presidency, in the last election by Congress.

The Sate of Tamaulipas has voted for General Almonte for the Presidency and Zacatecas for Senor Jose Maria Lafragua.

The Legislature of Oajaca, (which has been denounced by the revolutionary party in that State, voted for General Herrera. The new Legislature voted for General Santa Anna for President.

If this last vote be allowed to General Herrera, the result of the election so far will stand thus: General Herrera 4 votes, Angel Trias 3 votes, Senor Ocampo 1 vote, Senor Elloriaga 1 vote, General Almonte 1 vote, and Senor Lafragua 1 vote. Give the vote of Oajaca to General Santa Anna, and you have the seventh candidate for the unenviable station of the President of Mexico.

SANTA ANNA - - The Clergy, and the Capital- We find in the Patria of yesterday,(says the N.O. Times) a very interesting letter from the city of Mexico, dated the 22nd ult. The writer says that everything was in the greatest state of confusion at the Metropolis. The men at the head of the Government knew not what was to be done, nor in whom to confide. Santa Anna, in an evil hour for his own popularity, persecuted an evil hour for his own popularity, persecuted a Minon; the latter who does not seem to be a man who will be trodden upon with impunity, wrote a defense of himself, which was published in the Republicano of the 16th and 17th. Ult. We gave a summary of Minon's countercharges against Santa Anna, in the Commercial Times of the 11th inst. Their evident truth forcibly struck the minds of all, and on the Dictator's arrival on the 19th, the leperos, or mob of the metropolis, assailed him with the foulest epithets. “Death to the traitor, who has sold us to the Yankis!” was shouted on all sides; and he was most ignominiously pelted with stories, by the very population that had formerly almost idolized him. The writer says he (Santa Anna) had taken his precautions, which enabled him to avoid a misfortune, which would have proved a blessing the hapless Mexican Republic. By the (illeg.) being killed by the infuriated leperos. Santa Anna escaped their vengeance, and shut himself up in his palace, the guard at which had to be considerably reinforced to prevent a successful attack. There he remained up the date of the letter secluded from all.-It was this unpopularity, no doubt, which led to his tendering his resignation of the Presidency- the place had suddenly become too hot to hold him.

THE PRESIDENCY.- The writer of this letter says that it is confidently believed in the metropolis that Gen. Herrera will be elected President, and that he will forthwith open negotiations with the Yankís.

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p2c3, Letter from Mexico, The duel

The following letter appears in the Philadelphia Ledger.

CHINA, MEXICO, MAY 21st, 1847

My Dear Sir- An express is just starting for Camargo, and I avail myself of it to communicate to you, as a friend of Lieutenant Mahan, the information which will probably reach you before this, of the fatal meeting between him and Lieut. Munford, of the same regiment. I was present on the ground as the friend of Lieut. Mahan, and a more honorable meeting never took place.- They fought with muskets-advancing as they chose, they fired when within thirty yards of each other, both falling seriously wounded. Lt. Munford cannot survive, whilst Lieut. Mahan, although he received three several balls, is not considered mortally wounded, and is doing very well. A statement of the whole affair will appear in a short time, prepared by myself, and signed by all the parties on the field. I have only time to add that Lieut. Mahan has acted with a firmness and resolution which do him great credit, and his friends have nothing to fear, either for his character or for his life, as he is doing very well. They met on the 20th inst. At 6 p.m. Break this sad news to his family, and assure them that he shall receive every attention in my power to bestow; that he wants for nothing, and so long as he is with us shall not. He is now in my quarters, and my 1st lieutenant being a physician, every advantage is taken of any favorable symptom. Tender to his family and friends my assurances of sincere sympathy, and also of my determination to allow him to want for nothing which can add to his comfort or conduce to his speedy recovery. Do not allow any misstatement of this affair to become public, but, if necessary, show my letter to contradict them. By the first opportunity, I will write to his father, and forward to him and to you a statement of the whole affair, from which you will discern that Lieut. Mahan ha only acted as a gentleman, and as a man of honor is compelled to act when placed in such trying circumstances. He does no suffer any great deal of pain, and the Lieut. apprehends nothing very serious.

In great haste, your obliged friend.

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p4c1, Important from Mexico

Santa Anna’s letter of resignation.

The schooner Zenobia, Captain Brown, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 3rd June. The steamer Telegraph was to sail from Vera Cruz I two of three days.
By this arrival a copy of the American Eagle of the 2nd June was received in town, and through the kindness of a friend we have obtained the use of it. It contains Santa Anna’s letter of resignation, which we give below, as translated by the editors of that paper. Congress had not acted upon it at last accounts.

The Eagle says that this resignation was followed up by that of General Bravo, as Vice President. There is probably some confusion in this. As we understand it, the Vice Presidency was abolished to get rid of Gomez Farias, and has not been re-established. General Bravo, was recently in command at Puebla, and yet more recently was at the head of what is called the "Army of the Centre." He may have resigned this post.

The Eagle says that the election for President will take place on the 15th June, By this we presume is meant that the votes will then be officially counted, and the result declared. We have no further returns by this arrival, but the Eagle thinks Generals Herrera will be President.

General Scott reached Puebla on the 28th May, the day before General Twiggs arrived there. Everything was quiet in the city, our soldiers and the inhabitants being apparently on the best terms.

A small reconnoitering party of our troops had been met some twenty miles beyong Puebla, -They had encountered no enemy so far. The Mexicans are erecting works a short distance this side of the capital, but the Eagle treats them as unimportant and no likely to be completed.

The Eagle gives it as a report that Gen. Almonte is a prisoner, on an accusation of holding correspondence with General Scott.

Benj. Thomas, sergeant major of the 1st Infantry, died on Sunday, the 30th ult., in Vera Cruz, and was buried on Monday morning with military honors. The sergeant was a valuable officer, say the Eagle, and his demise was regretted by all who knew him.

It has been ascertained that only one man was killed with Col. Sowers. The imprudence of the colonel in venturing ahead of his party cost these two lives.

The Eagle gives it as a report that Gen. Almonte is a prisoner, on an accusation of holding correspondence with General Scott.

The report we have of the health of Tampico is very unfavorable. Many cases of yellow fever had occurred and they were on the increase. It is said, though we hope this is an exaggeration, that on the morning of the 2nd inst. Only one sergeant and two men out of Company E, Louisiana Volunteers, reported themselves for duty, the rest being sick.

A naval expedition against Tabasco, under then commodore in person, was talked of at Vera Cruz as about to start at once. The following vessels were mentioned as likely to compose it: The frigate Raritan, sloop of war John Adams, ship Germantown, the (illegible) the Spitfire (do,) the Scorpion, and the gunboats Bonita and Mahoncse. Should the sloop of war Albany arrive in time she would probably join in the expedition.

We will not detain the reader longer from the letter of Santa Anna:

MEXICO, May 29, 1847.

Your Excellency: Since my return to the Republic I have had but one grand and sacred object in view, which has solely occupied my mind –for which object the nation recalled me: it was the defense, the integrity, the independence of my country. My efforts were unlimited, and I worked incessantly for this object. On my arrival I found nothing –neither army nor resources. I succeeded in my exertions, finally, and procured both.

I gave the nation to understand that I was taking charge of its government, in a manifesto published on the 22d inst., in which I related the successes which have attended our arms up to my arrival in this capital, and also the motives which moved my return, and the benefits that might result from it. Arrived at the head of only part of an army, in the greatest destitution and disgrace, in order to reinforce this garrison, and entered with the full power to obtain everything that was necessary for its defense. So successful have I been that I can now with pride say, that the city of Mexico is provided with means of defense to resist all the efforts to subdue it which the enemy can now command.

I have always refused supreme power, except in cases of emergency, whereby the interests of the nation might be endangered. At pr4esent, circumstances require from me a sacrifice of all I possess, which sacrifices is even attended with danger and a gloomy prospect, besides disgrace attached to it: this is no less that the consecration of myself, by marching forward and setting at defiance the calumny and perfidy of my enemies, and with deeds of valor revenging myself against them for their venomous imputations. –This I am ready and willing to perform, if in any way the result thereof can benefit my beloved country. I am fearful, however, that such will not be the result, and I have come to the conclusion, that by holding the seat of the chief magistracy I will be fomenting impediments against the attachment of my most ardent wishes.

The enemies of my country have emissaries in every part of the Republic, whose artifices mislead and create distrust and calumny to such an extent that it is impossible to convince the Mexicans other than that I am an insuperable
It is easy to perceive the reason why they spread such reports to my detriment—men who are afraid to defend the country with such force, and are fearful that they will not enjoy it as long as I am at the head of the Government. They are well aware that my determination has been to put down the different parties which have endeavored to destroy one another, which, even now, have entirely forgotten the common danger, in order to be benefited by such division, hoping that a change may place them in power, and free them from their responsibility to the nation. The foreign enemy’s policy is to foment such a division; in order to obtain it, they have selected me as the most probably person by the ruin of whom it may be obtained. I am consequently a target for the shafts of all parties. Therefore, my position is full of danger; but I do not fear it. The difficulty lies in preventing me from doing what I could to save the Republic. The intrigues of a revolution are well known. On that account, the enemy are now advancing towards Puebla and Mexico, as they have been given to understand that a revolution would take place in the capital. With on act alone I can stop such a revolution, which I consider is the most important service I can render the Republic—that act is my present resignation as President pro tem. Of the Republic, with which my nation has honored me. I am fully persuaded that this resignation will save the country. I respectfully request the Sovereign Congress to accept immediately my resignation, and to declare its session, in order to appoint a person well qualified to discharge the above responsible office. I have discharged my duty towards my country as far as in my power. I have dedicated y life to it—my fortune and that of my family, as well as my own reputation—my blood has been split and my limbs lost in its defense; and now with pride I forever resign my public career, without fear of disgrace, and conscious that my services have been faithful and patriotic. I any part of the world where lot may place me, I can raise my head with pride, and with satisfaction carry a name that has never been stained with shame—but, on the contrary, they will see me a faithful and patriotic Mexican, who, in all his actions, has striven for the honor of being instrumental in elevating his nation to prosperity and honor.

Your Excellency will report the same to the Sovereign Congress, in order that it may accept of my resignation, for which I will remain yours respectfully, with the highest consideration. God and liberty.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

To their Excellencies the Secretaries of the Sovereign Congress.

June 22, 1847, REv64i15p4c3, The Army in Mexico

The Whig press have been filled with assaults upon the Administration, because, as they say no arrangement was made to supply the vacuum left in the armies of Mexico, by the withdrawal of the discharge volunteers. These bitter partisans have indeed gone so far as to charge that the design of the President was to leave General Taylor with a miserably small number of men, so as to confine him to a mere guard duty and deprive him of all opportunity of winning more laurels. It is to be regretted that the construction of the law in regard to the discharge of the volunteers should have given rise to much embarrassment. It has been construed by the commanding generals in Mexico to require a discharge so long before the expiration of the twelve months enlistment as to insure to the volunteers abundant time to reach the United States within the period. The other, and to us more reasonable construction is, that the volunteers should be discharged at the end of the twelve months. This, we learn, was the construction put upon the law of enlistment by Washington and Jackson, and by the Administration which based upon it their plans and estimates. Had the law been carried out under this view, the volunteers could have been retained in Mexico until their numbers could have been more that supplied by the new recruits.

But even as things are, the Whig press have attached so much importance to this point, and have dwelt so zealously upon the curious misrepresentations of the truth, that we deem it proper to re-publish the striking facts set forth in the Union:

Our attention has been called to an article published in the New York Courier and Enquirer of the 14th instant, in which it is charged upon the "Union" that it has misstated the amount of force of the armies under Major Generals Scott and Taylor, and that the actual strength of their columns will be much less than represented, &c.

It was stated in the "union," that when the reinforcements which have been ordered my the War Department for Major Generals Scott and Taylor should all have reached their destination, those generals would have under their command—the former nearly 20,000, and the latter nearly 10,000 troops. On inquiry at the Adjutant General’s office today, we are confirmed in the correctness of the statements heretofore made in reference to the troops which have been provided for the armies in the field. The force under the orders of Major General Scott—exclusive of the twelve-months’ men, say 3,500—amounted, on the last of March, to upwards of 11,000 aggregate. Since that date, reinforcements of regulars (old and new legiments) to the number of 5,000 must, it is believed, have reached the seat of war in that quarter; which number, by the last of June, will be still further augmented by some 3,500-making the aggregate to: under the orders of Gen. Scott at that date, say 19,500; which includes the garrisons of captured towns, and is subject to a deduction on account of the casualties of the service during the last two months. On the other hand, however, Gen. Scott will be further reinforced by the quota of volunteers under the April calls, assigned by his command—some 2,000; and by further accessions of regular troops—say 2,500. The force provided for the main army in Mexico will not, we have reason to believe, be less than 20,000.
The measures taken by the War Department to reinforce the army under Gen. Taylor, we have said, will provide a force of at least 10,000, which, we have every reason to believe, will be realized.

Regular Troops

Fourteen companies, old regiments, (nine of artillery and five of cavalry) 1,200
10th regiment of infantry (10 companies) 866
13th regiment of infantry (6 companies) 469
16th regiment of infantry (10 companies) 1,097
3rd regiment of dragoon (5 companies) 400

When these regiments are completed to the establishment, the regular infantry will be increased to more than 3,000, which will make the regular force assigned to the “army of occupation” at least 4,500 men, old and new regiments.

Volunteer forces

The four regiments of volunteers from Massachusetts, Virginia, North Carolina, and Mississippi, when mustered into the service during the past winter and spring, amounted to 3,469; which no doubt, from what we can learn, has been considerably reduced by sickness and other causes. Deduct, say 15 per cent.-which would make that force now, probably, not to exceed 2,949, this, added to the regulars above, would make the present force under General Taylor 6,981.

The volunteers called out in April, assigned to the division of the army under Gen. Taylor, equal four regiments and two companies, which ought to give a force of at least 3,700 men. The regiments from Indiana and Ohio will soon be en route for the seat of war, as the call was promptly met in the quarter. The strength of the volunteers being raised, added to the present force, makes an aggregate of 10,508.

The above is exclusive of the Texas volunteers now in service, which it is known amount to more than 1,600 men. It will, therefore, be seen that the aggregate force under the command of Major General Taylor will be considerably beyond 10,000.

We know not, nor is it for us to say, what portions of the forces in the field will be fit for duty as the phrase is; and it is far from our purpose to magnify the strength of the army. We may say—what it is supposed everybody must know—that great allowance ought always be made, on account of sickness and other casualties, always incident to an army in the field, especially in a southern country like Mexico, during the unhealthy season of the year.

We lay the preceding statements, which we have derived from the highest official source, before our readers. Let us add, in justice to that source, that it states the truth, without regard to politics. Upon many points we are unfortunate enough to differ with the head of that bureau; but we have every confidence in his honor, his integrity, and his truth. In fact, there are the records in his possession; here are the muster rolls. He neither would nor can change their character. We lay these statements this evening before our readers, in the boldest and most unimpassioned form. We may take up tomorrow the charges which have been made against us, for our past expositions of the strength of the army by the correspondents of the "New York Courier" and of the "Picayune," and the remarks made by their editors. Meantime, what must we think of the recklessness which charges us with misrepresentation, when this writer from the camp (in the "New York Courier and Enquirer") says thus?

“The twelve-months men being now about to be discharged, there will remain with Gen. Taylor, and under his command, the following troops:- 2,300 volunteers, 300 mounted Texans, and ten companies of regulars-making the whole number about 3,200 men. There have been allotted to him four of the new regiments, and a few of these troops are daily expected to arrive at Matamoras. Admitting that these regiments are full and here, it would then only make the force on this line about 6,100 men, and you can safely say, that 30 per cent of the new arrivals will be sick and unavailable.”

Look at this statement about the Texas volunteers alone. We understand, from the best authority, that the force of Texas volunteers, now serving under Maj. Gen. Taylor, is composed as follows:

Six companies of twelve-month men, whose term of service does not expire until September and October next. Strength of the six companies, say 400.
Death of Major Bosworth, Paymaster, U.S. Army.

The U.S. ship Massachusetts, Capt. Wood, arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the evening of the 11 inst. The Massachusetts brings over 155 sick and wounded soldiers, under charge of Dr. Tudor, besides the following passengers: Mr. Joseph Harrod, Dr. Tudor, U.S.A., Purser Bryan, of the navy, and Mr Bosworth and two servants.

The following deaths occurred on the Massachusetts:

C. Gaines, of the Mounted Rifles, and John Drew of company 1, 7th Infantry, died on board before the Massachusetts left Vera Cruz, and were sent on shore for interment on the 11th June. One the 11th June, John Pope, of the Mounted Rifles, and John Smith, of company C, 7th Infantry, died at sea. On the 13th, J. F. Carson, South Carolina Volunteers, died. On the 14th, D. Scurry, South Carolina Volunteers, and H. Heck, 2nd Dragoons. On the 15th, L Grover, company E. Mounted Rifles

The vomito is represented as on the increase at Vera Cruz. We regret extremely to say that Paymaster Bosworth, who sailed from here only on the 18th ult. sickened and died in Vera Cruz of the vomita. His remains were brought back on the Massachusetts in charge of his brother.

Quite the most important intelligence brought by this arrival relates to an attack upon a large train by the Mexican guerrillas, which has been partially successfully. By the Fanny we learned that a train was to leave Vera Cruz on the morning of the 5th inst. for Puebla, under command of Lieut. Col. McIntosh. The train had in charge $225,000 in specie, of which sum one hundred thousand belonged to the Paymaster's Department, the remainder to the Quartermaster's. One hundred and twenty-five wagons and six hundred pack males were in the train, which was escorted by 800 troops.

The train left Vera Cruz on the night of the 4th inst. and Sunday the 6th, when it had advanced about twenty-five miles, it was attacked by a large party of guerrillas. The place was well selected for the purpose by the Mexicans, being represented as a defile broad enough for a single wagon only. It is said, too, that slight works had been thrown up by the Mexicans to obstruct our advance. The attack was made upon each extremity of the train and upon the centre at the same time, the principal point, however, being the wagons, which were supposed to contain the specie.

Private accounts represent that the attack was so far successful that forty of our wagons were destroyed, though not those containing the specie-two hundred mules loaded with subsistence were taken, and thirty of our men killed. The American Eagle of the 9th says our loss is variously estimated at from four to twenty, but private accounts, from responsible sources, give the loss as we have done, at thirty men.

The check was so severe that Col. McIntosh determined no to hazard an advance without reinforcements.- Our troops accordingly entrenched themselves behind their wagons, and despatches were sent off to Gen. Cadwalader at Vera Cruz. The general left on Monday evening, the 7th inst. With a force of about five hundred men and four howitzers.-Private accounts say further that on the 10th a part of the voltigeurs also left, with four howitzers, to join the train.

The Eagle represents that our troops received the attack with the utmost coolness, and that the enemy, being repulsed, fell back towards the Puente Nacional, which some suppose they may attempts to defend. No later news from the train had been received the morning of the 11th, the day the Massachusetts left. On the 10th a large mail was despatched to this port on the propeller Washington, which may be hourly expected.-Her letters may bring us further details.

No later news had been received from the army of Gen. Scott. The reason is obvious, for the present, at least, the communication has been entirely cut off. We do not regard this as at all alarming, for General Cadwalader will no doubt open a passage to Jalapa at once, but it indicates a necessity for some cavalry force upon the line to clear away the brigands which infest it, and who must have mustered in a greater force than had been anticipated to attack a train guarded by 810 troops.

But the audacity of these guerrillas does not stop here. They are entering Vera Cruz and stealing our horses. For several nights alarms had been created in the city by these predatory attempts. Private letters say that 60 horses were stolen from one pen in the immediate vicinity of the town. A regiment of Texas Rangers, it seems to us, would find ample scope for employment in the vicinity of Vera Cruz.

The steamers Palmetto and . . . (illigible) . . . arrived at Vera Cruz on the . . . (illigible) . . . inst. The schooner General Worth had also arrived with one company of . . . (illigible) . . . have arrived from New Orleans in search of a runaway slave. Her pursuit is represented as successful.

We await anxiously our letters by the Washington. [BJM]
General Almonte was arrested on the 23rd May, having been appointed on the 21st General in command of the state of Vera Cruz. No reasons are assigned in any of the papers up to the 26th. Some of the papers strongly disapprove of it.

A new paper, called La Guerra, (The War) has been started in opposition to El Razonador, and it advocates Santa Anna’s principles strongly.

In El Republicano on the 28th May there is an article upon the defence of the Capital, and the propriety of removing the seat of Government into the interior. The editor urges upon the authorities to defend the capital to extremities, and says, that the work of erecting fortifications is going on actively. But this part of the article is not in his usual bold strain. From the tone of it, and from private letters from the Capital, which we have seen, we feel persuaded that little opposition to General Scott’s entrance into the city will be made. El Republicano urges strenuously that the seat of Government should at once be transferred. Then, should the Capital fall, it urges the Government will still exist, and form a centre of union and a rallying point. The Editor urges the point with such force, that we are persuaded he anticipated formidable opposition to General Scott’s advance.

In an earlier article upon the subject of the defence of the Capital, El Republicano sets down the troops available for the purpose as follows:

The garrison then in the Capital, (the 26th of May,) was not far from 10,000 men, while they were to arrive, says the Editor, from the State of Guanajuato 3,000, from Michoacan, 2,000 and from Queretaro 1,000. We infer from allusions made to an article in El Razonador, that the latter paper ridicules the idea of making any defence of the city.

About 4,000 men, volunteers or national guards, quartered at the barrack of San Domingo, belonging to Gen. Urage’s command, were ordered to return to their occupations until they would be instructed otherwise, as the Government had not the means to support them.

The Liberal Verdadero, of Guanajuato, says that great preparations are going on there to supply the army with several pieces of artillery, from 4 to 12 pounders. All other arms were undergoing repairs and tailors and women were active in the arrangement of uniforms.

An American prisoner in Mexico writes on the 28th, that Gen. Scott was expected to enter the Capital within eight days, and he did not anticipate any formidable opposition. Gen. Worth found in Puebla a large quantity of tobacco belonging to the Government.

Whilst exercising supreme power, Santa Anna, on the 22nd ult. directed that every prosecution against military persons should be at once set at large. The services of such men are thought to be of sufficient importance to the Government to justify this clemency. It looks like an attempt of Santa Anna to strengthen himself with the soldiery.

It is thought that the resistance anticipated at Rio Frio has been much exaggerated, as the Mexican papers say nothing of it. And speak only of the fortifications in the immediate vicinity of the capital. They also state that an advance party of Gen. Worth had reconnoitered the road as far as Rio Frio.

Five hundred infantry, perfectly armed and equipped, arrives in the city of Mexico on the 24th ult. from Queretaro. They belonged to the National Guard of that state and were sent to aid in the defence of the capital.

The “valiant” Ampudia has published an address to the nation, vindicating is conduct at Monterey.

We are at a loss to understand (says the Picayune) the various movements among the military chieftains of Mexico. We have the resignations of Santa Anna, Bravo and Rincon and the arrest of Almonte, all within the space of eight or ten days, and the departure of other generals to remote points and Santa Anna during the time was exercising full sway, and extending every indulgence to the soldiery. It looks as though parties were marshalling their forces for a struggle for power among themselves, rather than to defend their country against a foreign foe.

The great battle of Cerro Gordo has furnished new food for the London press. Of course, borrowing their arguments from the Whig journals here, they continue to denounce our country for "the slight cause for which this war was entered upon by the authorities at Washington"- the "trivial pretext" upon which an "immense amount of misery has been inflicted upon an unoffending people," for the "severance of the province of Texas" by U.S. agents, which engendered hostilities in the hearts of Mexicans- and for "the brigandage of unauthorized attack" which no excuse "can convert into a legitimate war." But we do not intend to refute these comments upon the causes of the war. AS long as our own Whig press takes sides against their own Government, it is not to be wondered at that British journals, in their jealousy and dread of Republican progress, should seize the occasion to vituperate and deprecate our conduct in the eyes of the world. But we do mean to refer to the tribute which the London press if forced, by the brilliant events of the war, to pay to American military skill and valor. It is not long since we quoted the remarks of the London papers, sneering at the puny efforts of our “rabble militia” to assail and conquer the myrmidons of Mexico. The rapid succession of victories, however, capped with the triumph of Cerro Gordo, have forced the London critics to swallow their words of disparagement, and extorted from them a compliment to American power and military energy.

... (illegible) ... can campaign as one in which “conquests bring no particle of credit, and fighting no prospect of peace, and in which it is equally impossible to applaud the victors or commiserate the vanquished,” it is compelled to confess that “there is not much doubt, but that the Americans can march to Mexico, and could have done so long ago.”

“The Americans have already got all the sea coast, the customs the chief forts, and the chief towns, and while we write, they have probably got the metropolis of their victims. They have dispersed their armies, captured their generals and destroyed their materials, but it is confessed that “the war seems about as far from its close as when it started and it is now to be seen what force will be brought to bear against a people whose self-sufficiency suffers by no discomfiture, whose delusions are dispelled by no defeats, and who can dispense with a government, a capital, or a coast, as easily as with character or credit.”

The London Chronicle speaks still more emphatically of the triumphs of American prowess and military skill:

“As far as the success of their military operations is concerned, nothing more conclusive can be conceived than the late movements of the United States generals against the forces that the Mexicans have been able to oppose them in the field. It is impossible to read the accounts of these successive actions without something like a feeling of contempt for the beaten party, so strong an effect do the triumphs of military prowess exercise on the mind. Almost despite of the claims of justice, and of compassion for the countless and unoffending thousands whose fates are inextricably bound up with those of the beaten troops, one is tempted to exclaim, that they who know so on how to defend a country are not worthy to possess one ... The prize of empire—so all history tells us—bears inscribed upon it the legend ... (illegible) ... .

They (the Mexicans) forget “in their imaginative gallantry” that a thousand Bayards could never break a modern square of infantry, nor resist a modern charge, if they had not themselves passed through the hands of the drill-sergeant. They will not trust to their best allies, their deserts and their yellow fever, but must needs fight great battles, which invariably terminate in one result—disgrace and defeat. The courage displayed by the Anglo-Americans throughout the action is unquestionable, and yet it does not appear to have been a bloody one on either side.”

In the following passages, the Chronicle pays the highest compliment to the energy and foresight of General Scott, and the enduring valor of his army:

“The opinion entertained by the United States officers of the powers of resistance of their opponents may be inferred from General Scott's orders issued to the various Generals of division on the day preceding the action. Never, in the directions issued by any of the greatest European commanders, do we remember to have seen a greater confidence manifested in what must be the result of his operations. Success is assumed on every point, and the direction to be taken by each division, after forcing each point of the Mexican entrenchment’s, is as clearly marked out as though the result had already taken place. We are bound to say, that the unlimited confidence placed by General Scott in the troops under his command, has been justified by the event. His victory at Cerro Gordo appears to have been by far the most brilliant affair of the war. He describes himself as being absolutely embarrassed with the results of his own success—prisoners of war, heavy ordinance, small arms and accoutrements. Undoubtedly, if military resistance be the only obstacle to be apprehended by the Anglo American Generals in their advance upon Mexico, we shall expect shortly to hear of the fall of that city, as we have just heard of that of Vera Cruz.”

The London press profess to feel an anxious hope for the termination of this “disastrous war,” which, if the conquest of the country be aims at, “this generation will not see accomplished.”

However, we may reprobate the charges brought against us, of extravagant designs of dominion, we cannot deny that there is some force in the following remarks of the Chronicle. If the Whig press had taken the same reasonable view, and not given hopes to the public enemy, peace would long since have been established:

“Perhaps the best thing to be wished for in the interest of the Mexicans themselves, is that the success of the United States Generals should be still more rapid, and decisive than it has hitherto been, in order that they may be driven to make terms at once, and by a definite sacrifice purchase the retreat of their invaders.”

June 29 1847, REv64i17p2c, Highly Important from Mexico

Arrival of the Steamship Galveston.

... (illegible) ... Fights with the Guerrillas-One hundred Mexicans killed and wounded, and forty or fifty Americans-General Cadwallader attacked by a large party—Battle at the National Bridge.
The following highly important intelligence was communicated to us by Lieutenants Floyd and McWilliams, of the 2nd Pennsylvania Volunteers, who came over on the steamship Galveston, this morning at 6 o'clock. On the 8th a small recruiting party, together with some citizens and disbanded soldiers, in number about 150, with 75 armed men, and thirty mounted, left Puebla for Vera Cruz. This party was under command of Captain Bainbridge of 3rd Artillery. On leaving Jalapa, and getting near Cerro Gordo, this party was informed that it would not be prudent to go through the pass as there were about 4,000 Mexicans in the chaparral along the pass. Previous to this, two officers who had gone to the rear of the train were fired at from the chaparral. At the mouth of the pass, the party was organized and marched through without meeting an enemy. Arrived at the Bridge that evening. Whilst they were bivouacked on the other side of the bridge, being so fatigued that they were unable to furnish a guard, they were informed that some persons were barricading the bridge. A guard was then stationed between the bridge and the encampment, to prevent the party being surprised. At this time signal lights on the ridges and cliffs were distinctly seen.

Before daylight, the sick and wounded of this little party were removed to Santa Anna's hacienda, a quarter of a mile from the bridge. A scouting party was then sent out, and also a party to clear the bridge, which was done without any opposition. The main body of the army then passed over the bridge. Every thing appearing then to be safe and all danger being passed, Lieut. McWilliams and Mr Frazer . . . (illegible) . . . side of the bridge. Just as they were entering the bridge, a party of about twenty-five Mexicans appeared on the ridge, and fired several volleys on them. The wagon master and four others who were passing the bridge, were fired on and the whole five were killed and a wagon was captured of no great value.

After the fire had ceased a party of lancers appeared on the bridge and seemed to be preparing to charge, but seeing that Captain Bainbridge's party were preparing to receive them, they wheeled their horses and galloped off.

Captain Bainbridge resumed his march in good order, followed by 400 or 500 of the lancers, who hung upon his rear and flanks for four or five miles, but at a respectable distance. Thus hemmed in, this little party pursued its way until it arrived at the Pass of La Volta, where Col. McIntosh had encamped with his large train.-The Mexicans who had attacked Bainbridge's party were the same who had compelled Col McIntosh to halt and wait for reinforcements.-The party remained that night in McIntosh's camp, and during the whole time the Mexicans kept a continual fire on the camp, approaching with great boldness very near . . . (illegible) . . .

On the next day Capt. Bainbridge's party resumed its march to Vera Cruz, being joined by Capt. Duperu's dragoon, who were sent back to get their horses. This company with its gallant captain, had behaved very handsomely in the attack on McIntosh's camp. Its gallantry was the theme of universal praise and admiration in the army. Indeed, it was generally admitted that Col. McIntosh's command was saved by the gallantry of Duperu's party. Bainbridge's party continued their march to Vera Cruz, where they arrived in safety. In the meantime, Duperu's party, having a long return train to guard, and being threatened by a large body of lancers, halted at Santa Fe, where they were charged by a greatly superior force, which they gallantly repulsed, killing many of the enemy, and suffering no loss themselves. It was said, however, that some of our wagons were cut off and the drivers taken prisoners. Capt. Duperu arrived safely in Vera Cruz, having lost three killed and three wounded.

On the day Capt. Bainbridge's party left McIntosh's camp, Gen. Cadwallader had arrived, with a force of 800 men and two howitzers. The two commands were then joined, making, in all, about 1600 men, with two howitzers, under command of Gen. Cadwallader, and pushed on towards the National Bridge.

On approaching the bridge Gen. Cadwallader occupied the heights commanding the bridge from which the enemy had fired on Capt. Bainbridge's party, where he was attacked by a large force of the Mexicans, posted in the ridges and chaparral, and some hard fighting was carried on for several hours, the Mexicans losing more than 100 men, and Gen. Cadwallader losing some 15 killed and some thirty or forty wounded. The Mexicans were repulsed the bridge was successfully passed by Gen. Cadwallader, who was on . . .(illegible) . . .

There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the army, respecting the conduct of the command which had charge of this train. There will be a court of inquiry into the subject.

The garrison at Jalapa ha been broken up, by order of Gen. Scott, and all the sick and Government stores have been sent to Perote castle, so that this line of communication is entirely closed. Gen. Scott has had a road opened from Perote to Taxpan, the distance being less than one half that from Vera Cruz to Perote, and Taxpan being a healthier place.

The success of the attack on McIntosh's command has given great confidence to the guerrillas, who are swarming in great numbers through the country, and attacking all our parties, large and small.

It was chiefly owing to the gallantry of Major Bennett, the Paymaster, that the specie wagons in McIntosh's party were saved. He was I one of them himself when the wagon was attacked, and fought like a tiger.

We are pained to hear that the fine charger sent out by the citizens of New Orleans to Col. Harney was captured by the Mexicans. Their daring was so great that they even lariated a woman who was in the wagon, but she was rescued by our men after some hard fighting.

There are about 1000 men in camp at Vera Cruz.
Gen. Shields was at Jalapa and was about to leave for the U. States, when he received an order from Gen. Scott to join him at Puebla.

There are no preparations to defend any point between Puebla and the Capital. All the odds and ends of the army are collected in the city, about 20,000 in number, but poorly armed, and of miserable material. There was a small . . . (illegible) . . . at the City of Mexico, which was easily put down by Gen. Bastamento. It was got up by factions of the peace party and of Gomez Farias party. Their cry was "down with Santa Anna!" but the President still maintains his power and influence. Congress has refused to accept his resignation.

We have about 6000 men at Puebla, under command of Worth and Quitman.

Gen. Scott will remain at Puebla until he is reinforced. Gen. Bravo is in command of the army at the Capital.

Santa Anna has published quite a flaming account of the affair between him and Gen. Worth, at Amozoque. The truth is that he had a large force of cavalry, which was attacked by Col. Duncan's battery and Maj. Bonneville of 6th Infantry. He did not wait to receive more than one volley, from which, however, he sustained a heavy loss, and then fled in the wildest disorder towards the Capital.

Since the above was written, we have learned that, in the affair between Ge. Cadwallader and the Mexicans, at the national bridge, the company of Lieut. Blaky, (of Richmond Virginia) of the newly raised volitiguers, with two howitzers, charged the barricades and swept them with a few discharges from the howitzers. In passing through, however, Lieut. Blaky received a heavy fire from the enemy on the ridge which commands the bridge, by which he sustained a loss of one killed and four wounded, the Lieutenant himself being wounded in the leg. They also lost several horses. The heights were then charged on the right and left of the road and gallantly carried, the enemy flying from before them in great confusion. When Gen. Cadwallader had passed the bridge, he was attacked by a large party of guerrillas, who kept up a continued fire on his men for a long distance. At Cerro Gordo it was thought, from the reports of heavy firing, that the enemy had made a stand in great numbers, though no apprehension was entertained for the safety of Gen. Cadwallader's command, who was moving in a bold and steady manner, the only way to deal with the Mexicans. Capt. Gates company of 3rd dragoons being sent by Gen. Cadwallader to the rear, to reinforce the guards of the train, were attacked by a large force of Lancers, whom they repulsed with considerable loss.

There is much sickness at Vera Cruz, but very little in the Castle. Col. Wilson publishes a card in the Eagle pronouncing the statement of Col. Mata, that La Vega had been confined in the guard-house of the Castle, to be false.

The little party, who cut their way from Jalapa to Vera Cruz, and so narrowly escaped the many perils that surrounded them express themselves under the greatest obligations to Capt. Bainbridge, Mr. Karns and Adj. Dutton for their coolness, prudence and judgement in conducting them in safety through their many dangers.

Gen. Cadwallader is much praised for the energy and promptness of his movements to the rescue of McIntosh and for the bravery and skill with which he scattered the swarms of guerrillas, grown confident by the success of their previous enterprise.

Gen. Scott was at Puebla at the last accounts. The editors of El Arco Iris had received dates from the Capital up to the 23 of June, Santa Anna had a second time sent in his resignation of the Presidency. Congress had not, however, up to that time, accepted it. He had also made a formal renunciation of his office as Commander-in-Chief of the army; which, like his resignation of the Presidency, remained in abeyance-Congress not having acted upon either.

Rejon, and five other generals, whose names are not given, had been arrested and sent to the different States for confinement.

The gallant Capt. Walker has commenced his work of retaliation on the guerrillas. On the morning of the 8th inst. He started with his command from Perote on an expedition some distance into the interior. During the expedition, he succeeded in capturing nineteen guerrillas and an alcalde. He has employed them in cleaning the streets and sinks.

A letter had been received in Vera Cruz on the 15th inst. previous to the sailing of the Galveston, direct from the headquarters of Gen. Scott, stating that Gen. Scott had issued orders for the removal of the Government from Vera Cruz to Tuxpan. This change was said to be, in part, owing to the sickness I Vera Cruz, and because communication could be more easily kept up between Tuxpan and Puebla than between the latter place and Vera Cruz. All the public stores in Vera Cruz would, in that case, be removed to Tuxpan, and troops, only sufficient to garrison the place, left at Vera Cruz. The activity displayed among the different vessels in the harbor of Vera Cruz, in shifting the cargoes from vessels having but small portions of Government property on board, into other nearly full, with the evident intention of a move, would go far to confirm the rumor of a change in the base of operations.

June 29 1847, REv64i17p2c2, Later from Vera Cruz
Threatened attack on Tampico—Arrival of General Scott at Rio Fria—Proposals for Peace.

We issued an extra on Sunday, giving the exciting news of which we were put in possession... (illigible)...

The steamer James L. Day, Captain Wood, arrived this morning. She left Vera Cruz on the afternoon of the 16th June, touching at Tampico on the morning of the 17th, and Brazos St. Jago on the afternoon of the 18th.

Her news is one day later from Vera Cruz... (illigible) this arrival, centres in the report communicated by the James L. Day, by Mr. Clitton, the pilot of Tampico, who boarded her on the 17th off the city. He stated that they were in daily expectation of an attack from the Mexicans, who were reported to be 1,500 strong in the vicinity of the city. On the night of the 12th June, a demonstration was made by the Mexicans in Tampico to rise. The American authorities, however, had timely information of the contemplated movement, and to suppress it, if attempted, called out the troops, who lay on their arms all night. There was then no demonstration of revolt made.

On the 15th inst. a party of Mexicans lancers attacked the outposts at Tampico and drove the sentinels into the city. On the 16th a party of rancheros attacked the pilot station and were greeted by a discharge from half a dozen muskets, when they retreated.

The barque, Mary of Baltimore, put into Tampico on the 16th inst. for supplies and repairs.—She was bound for Vera Cruz with 200 volunteers, which she landed at Tampico.

The most important part of the intelligence brought by this arrival is the flattering prospect of peace. Capt. Wood, of the Jas. L. Day, informs us that information had been received at Vera Cruz before the Day left, that Gen. Scott and Worth, with the main body of the army, had advanced as far as Rio Frio, without opposition, and were met at that place by a deputation from the capital, with propositions for peace. The exact tenor of the propositions were unknown; they were, however, of such a nature, that Gen. Scott refused to accept them, and was determined to push on his forces to the capital. From the deep anxiety felt by the new government, if the term government can be applied to any party or power in Mexico, to stay the march of our forces on the capital, it was thought that further concessions would be made to Gen. Scott before he took up his line of march from Rio Frio.

BY THE SOUTHERN MAIL

(From the New Orleans Picayune, June 18)

The towboat Mary Kingsland, which arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, touched at the Brazos and left there on the 13th inst. She brought over Capt. Conner, of the Texas Volunteers, Capt. Wm. B. Archer and Lieut. Pegram, of the Virginia Volunteers; Lieut. Phaw, of the Nort Carolina Volunteers; Mr. Atwood, the artist; and the following officers of the 2nd Indiana Regiment, with six companies of the same, making 360 men:

Col. Bowles; Lieut. Col. Hadden; Majors Cravens and Mooney; Capts. Sanderson, Dennis, Davis, Briggs, Rousseau, Kimball, Graham and Young; Surgeon Walker; Lieuts. Rice, Loud, Tele, Rose, Cagle, Shanks, Haggatt, Burwell, Stropes, Davis, Schoonover, Kemple, Hostet, Beerfield, Erwin, Pennybacker, Pennington, Payntle, Epperdon and Hagan.

Mr. H. W. Pierce also came passenger on the Mary Kingsland, having in charge the remains of three of the first Mississippi Regiment.

By this arrival we learn something more of the deplorable duel in the Virginia Regiment which we published in our paper of the 1st inst. Since which time we had not till now been able to learn a word more of the affair. The parties engaged in it were Lieut. Mahan of Capt. Bankhead’s company, and Lieut. Munford, of Capt. Carrington’s company. The latter died immediately, being shot through in several places. Lieut. Mahan was alive at last accounts from him, but it was thought could not survive, having been shot directly through the body. Further particulars are given in our correspondent’s letter.

The Flag of the 9th inst. gives, upon the authority of Capt. Benedia, of the schooner Madonna, which had just arrived at the Brazos, the following account of the wreck of the brig Mobile, bound from New York for Brazos Santiago, with 180 troops of the 10th Regiment U.S. Infantry, under Capt. Andrews, of Buffalo, N.Y.

During a strong breeze from the Southward, on the night of the 23rd ultimo, the above-named brig was driven ashore on Orange Keys, Florida coast—her masts were cut away, and every exertion made to ease her, but she soon bilged and settled down, the sea making a complete breach over her. About forty of the troops took to the boats and reached the Keys—the boats were dashed to pieces, which cut off all further communication between the vessel and Keys, rendering the condition of both parties extremely dangerous. Such was the situation of the wreck on the morning of the 21st, when the schooner Madonna, Captain Benedict, bound from Philadelphia to the Brazos with Government stores, discovered it, and at the risk of losing his own vessel Capt. B. bore up to the rescue. At imminent peril and with great exertion, he succeeded in reaching and rescuing the men who were on the Keys, and was proceeding to render what assistance he could to those on the wreck, when the bark Alabama, from Liverpool to Havana, hove into sight, and by hoisting signals and firing guns, she was induced to come to anchor about five miles off. The troops, with their arms, ammunition and supplies, were then taken from the wreck by Captain Benedict, and placed in safety on the Alabama, which vessel proceeded with them to Havana, whence they will doubtless be reshipped to their destination.—The Madonna was got under way, and reached the Brazos on Friday last, (the 4th inst.,) 15 days from New York.

This detachment of troops has since reached the Brazos from Havana and encamped near the mouth of the river.

Col. E. G. W. Butler, of the 3rd Dragoons, arrived at Matamoras on the 10th inst.

The Flag corrects its statement that Capt. Rice Garland’s company of Rangers ha been disbanded.

We have several acts of brutality recorded in the Flag. In one case a party of miscreants-Americans, we are pained to say- insulted a Mexican woman in her own house, and killed her husband, who interposed to save her. One of the party is in custody.

The proprietor of the Resaca House in Matamoras was robbed of 1,500 dollars on the 10th May.

A man by the name of Simmons, in the employ of the Quartermaster, was shot on the 7th May by the guard, who interposed to save Simmons’s wife from a beating by her husband.

*List of deaths in the General Hospital at Matamoras, Mexico during the month of May, 1847—May 1, Jackson Rodgers, 1st North Carolina Volunteers, 6th, Miles Boyce and Thomas Wehrines, do; 7th, Samuel J. Spooner, 1st Virginia Volunteers, 8th, James L Barnes, 1st North Carolina Volunteers, and Gurgen H. (Special Correspondence of the Picayune.)

Monterey, Mexico, May 30, 1847

When I wrote you last, we were all full of the expedition to San Luis, and active preparations were making for a march at an early period, but now everything is knocked in the head. General Scott has thrown a bombshell into this division of the forces, which will utterly preclude the possibility of General Taylor’s advancing for many weeks, and probably will put an end to the expedition. Seven of the ten regiments have received orders to repair to Vera Cruz and join General Scott.

The 2nd Mississippi Regiment and Capt. Fairfax’s company of Virginia volunteers probably entered Saltillo this morning. I passed them in camp about ten miles this side of that place yesterday afternoon, the men all pretty well beat out by the march, the road, being a terribly hard and rough one. Two companies of North Carolina volunteers and one of Virginia volunteers, Capt. Harper’s left last night for Saltillo, and the 2nd Battalion of Virginians, who are expected up from China in a few days, will immediately proceed to the same place, I regret to be compelled to state that a most unfortunate and bloody affair has occurred in that battalion between Lieuts. Munford and Mahan. A quarrel occurred which resulted in a challenge from Lieut. Mahan, which was accepted and each party left to the selection of his own weapons; the meeting to take place in one hour after the challenge was received. The parties met, accompanied by friends, and were armed with muskets, loaded with buckshot, and pistols. The distance agreed upon was one hundred yards, each party to advance and fire at will. Each man advanced about ten yards and took aim, but recovered and advanced about fifteen paces further, when both parties fired at the same moment and both fell, mortally wounded. Lieut. Munford died very soon after, and no hopes were entertained for the recovery of Lieut. Mahan. There was also a disturbance occasioned by some of the men refusing to obey orders and be placed under arrest, in which some of the officers were roughly handled, but they succeeded in reducing the ruffianly fellows to subordination. Mescal was the cause.

There is a good deal of sickness here, but not of a serious character, and but few deaths have taken place.

Adios, J. E. D.

MONTEREY, JUNE 1, 1847.

Although we cannot advance upon San Luis, it is thought there may be some skirmishing on the road from here to Camargo, Urrea having again plucked up courage, become tired of masterly inactivity, and being now at the head of a large force of lancers. It has been reported that he was at Tula, but the report was not credited; but I was yesterday informed at headquarters, that positive information had been received that Urrea was at the head of 4000 cavalry this side of Victoria. It is probable that the force is over estimated. If the gentleman should show himself, I suspect the old general will make another push to take him. A few days ago he might have made a very pretty little speculation, as a large amount of specie was brought up.
Talking of specie, and American, who has been doing business in Zacatecas for some years, arrived here a few days ago with $160,000 in Mexican dollars of this year's coinage. He converted his property into hard cash, and succeeded in smuggling it out of the country. Here he obtained drafts on New Orleans from Paymaster Hunter.

I wrote you on the 30th ult. and my letter stated that Col. Hays was on his way hither with a full regiment of Texas Rangers, but upon inquiry, it turns out that he only has five companies of the same regiment that Henry McCulloch came out with, and as they were enlisted for six months only and came out under Col. Curtis's 50,000 call, of course he cannot be received. The Missouri volunteers did not succeed in forming the company of cavalry they expected, the sound of home being too sweet. They had the positive assurance of G. H. Taylor that he would gladly receive as many as were disposed to re-enlist but they backed out. There may be two companies raised out of the Arkansas cavalry, but I very much doubt whether it can be done.

Four companies of the first battalion Virginia volunteers marched into town from China this morning, Capt. Mahan, who was shot in the duel which I mentioned in my last, was still alive but no hopes entertained of his recovery. A short time since a party of about thirty armed Mexicans were brought by a company of Virginians, and after undergoing an examination were disarmed and released, the alcalde giving security that they should no again be found under arms. There are about one hundred and thirty of the regiment on the sick list, but there are few of them dangerously ill. About twenty of them are to be discharged and will go home under charge of Lieuts. Allen and Pegram, who go home on recruiting service. A volunteer named Daniel Harmon, of Capt. Preston's company, Virginia volunteers, died day before yesterday.

The abandonment of the San Luis expedition on account of the withdrawal of the troops, is still the topic of conversation and a cause of universal regret. I believe Gen. Taylor freely admits the necessity of Gen. Scott's having more troops and speedily, and can only regret that a sufficient number of troops have not been forewarned. Now the very commencement of the campaign the troops have been sent out I dribblets and operations of a vigorous character prevented from this cause. Well, we shall see what we shall see. The impression seems to prevail here, to some extent that Mexico is disposed for peace. It all grows out of the statement in N. O. Delta, that the British Minister had received an application for mediation on the part of his Government from the Mexican Government. There is no news at all here.

(From the New Orleans Delta)

VERA CRUZ, MAY 9TH, 1847

Eds. Delta: The train which left here the day before yesterday for the army, with an escort of 800 men, was attacked five miles from the walls of Vera Cruz by 1,500 lancers and rancheros—several men killed and 90 mules captured, in face of the whole detachment. The train was stretched out so long that it was impossible for so small a body of men to protect the whole line, assailed as it was on the extreme rear by a compact body of 1,500 lancers. An express came I the same night to Gov. Wilson for reinforcement. One hundred and fifty dragoons started out to their relief, they had hardly got out of sight of Vera Cruz before they in their turn were assailed by a large troop of lancers. They succeeded, however, in cutting their way through to the train, after suffering some little loss. These fellows had undoubtedly been apprized of the starting of this train and the $300,000 which goes with it. They have become so daring now that they actually come within sight of the city. Murders are committed within sight of the very walls, and no means whatever are adopted to bring the criminals to punishment. No example has been made to strike terror into them. Affairs are managed badly here, I am afraid. Energy-energy—we want, but energy we have not.

Some of the officers from Anton Lizardo have just arrived in the steamer Vixen. From them I gather this information: They left Alvarado yesterday morning; the old priest of that place had, a few moments before their leaving received a letter from his brother in the city of Mexico, which he read to them, to the effect, that Herrera's election would take place on the 20th of this month; the issue is peace or war; he is supported by the united Church party in Mexico. The letter states, that a continuance of the war will be 'the downfall of the Church'; that the enemy have cut off all sources of revenue to the Government; that it cannot be carried on without a sacrifice of the Church property, and it behooves them to unite with the peace party and put an end to the war; that immediately on Herrera's accession to power, propositions of peace will be made to our Government, and the writer doubts not but that peace will be concluded in a short time afterwards.

The writer of this letter is a priest of great distinction, and I place more reliance on this news than any that has yet reached us, as the officers inform me that the information they have received from him, from time to time relating to the affairs of the capital, have, in all cases, proved correct. Since the first occupation of Alvarado, to the present time, they have kept up a constant communication with the City of Mexico, and have ever found information through this source to be most reliable. Again I assure you that I pace great confidence in this news.

The squadron had all . . . (illigible) . . . Tabasco. A French merchant had arrived at Tlacotalpan, from Tabasco, just before the Vixen fell, who reports that they had determined to station forces all along the banks of the river, and fire at the Americans as they go up. They have about 2000 good troops (i.e. for Mexicans.) Com Perry will land about 1000 sailors and marines to oppose this force. The old Commodore will lead the storming party in person. He leaves behind the two old captains this time; he thinks, I suspect, that he can get along better with the young commanders as leaders of detachments. The young officers have every confidence in the old Commodore as their leader. He cares no more for bullets than does Old Rough and Ready.

The officers speak in high terms of the gallantry of some of the Commanders of the squadron.

There are some dashing fellows among them. Buchana, Breese, McKenzie, McCluny, Adams, and Bigclow—where can you find a nobler set of fellows? And the younger ones are the boys to follow, and go ahead, too, if they find their leaders are all laggard. Success to them all.

Yours truly
J.D.J.

REv44i18p1c4 July 2, 1847 Mexican Affairs

The New Orleans Times of the 23d Junes says, that "letters were received in town yesterday from the city of Mexico, under date of the 2d instant, mentioning that Santa Anna had withdrawn his late letter of resignation, under the apprehension that it would be accepted. This only goes to show the extent to which sincerity forms a portion of the character of this redoubted hero, who is continually boasting of his amor de la patria, and of his readiness to lay down his life and immolate himself as a victim for his country's welfare. The capital is represented as being in a state of complete confusion and anarchy; and as the letters do not mention that any steps have been taken to fortify the city against the approach of our troops, we presume that Gen. Scott will find the Halls of the Montezumas an easy conquest."

The same paper contains a letter from Vera Cruz, dated the 11th inst., not so late by five days as we have received. It gives a few incidents of the late attack upon the train, and refers to the mismanagement of the escort, &c., which may form the subject for the investigation of a court martial. The letter concludes as follow. We ask attention to the interesting portion of it in relation to the opening of a new road through Orizaba and Cordova: It is said, that the road is now to be fortified, and occupied in all its more difficult passes, by the Mexican troops. Don Thomas Marin, an intrepid officer of the old Mexican stamp, well known for his gallant defence of Alvarado, is reported to have eight hundred men under him, with whom he intends to occupy Cerro Gordo again, assisted, as he expects to be, by guerrillas, who can be gathered around him at a few hours notice, in cases of emergency. But even if these reports prove true, that road cannot be closed by Mexican troops. Gen. Scott can detach a division at any hour, which would again sweep such obstacles away for the moment. I am inclined to believe that the General intends to open the road to Puebla, leading through Orizaba and Cordova, as it seems to offer some advantages over that via Jalapa. By taking possession of these two cities, he would strike at the root of the Guerilla evil by controlling, to a great extent, the mountain hordes from which this class of soldiers is principally taken. It is believed that the best results would follow the opening and occupation of this road, and the General has received assurances that the feeling of the farmers and wealthy citizens is strongly favorable to the Americans, having been rendered so by the depredations of
The country along this road is extremely rich, and its products most varied and cheap. The climate is healthy and delightful, after leaving San Juan and Palmillas; and the roads are good at all seasons of the year. It is also a shorter route to Puebla than that through Jalapa. A great quantity of Tobacco is produced in the neighborhood of Cordova and Orizaba, the manufacture of which, fato cigars, is a Government monopoly, the leaf being purchased of the growers at a fixed price. This season, the quantity taken by the Government officers at Cordova, amounted to eight thousand bales but, as Government property, it is liable to seizure by the Americans, while private property is held sacred. The Tobacco has been returned to the producers to hold until its manufacture can be safely commenced. These eight thousand bales are worth nearly half a million of dollars, and would find a ready sale. They are bona fide Government property, and as such would be a legal prize to our arms. In Orizaba, too, is an immense quantity of paper very valuable, and like the Tobacco, the property of the Government. Thus you will observe that General Scott might pick up a million of dollars, or so, incidentally, by changing slightly his line of communications, while such a change would secure permanent advantages over that at present open.

Letter from Gen. Taylor

Headquarters Army of Occupation.
Camp near Monterey, May 18, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, with the enclosure of your editorial, extracted from the "Signal of the 13th April. At this time, my public duties command so fully my attention, that it is impossible to answer your letter in the terms demanded by its courtesy, and the importance of the sentiments to which it alludes; neither, indeed, have I the time, should I feel myself at liberty, to enter into the few and most general subjects of public policy suggested by the article in question. My own personal views, were better withheld till the end of the war, when my usefulness as a military chief, serving in the field against the common enemy, shall no longer be compromised by their expression or discussion in any manner. From many sources I have been addressed on the subject of the Presidency, and I do violence neither to myself nor to my position as an officer of the army, by acknowledging to you, as I have done to all who have alluded to the use of my name in this exalted connexion, that my services are ever at the will and call of the country, and that I am not prepared to say that I shall refuse if the country calls me to the Presidential office, but that I can and shall yield to no call that does not come from the spontaneous action and free will of the nation at large, and void of the slightest agency of my own. For the high honor and responsibilities of such an office, I take this occasion to say, that I have not the slightest aspiration; a much more tranquil and satisfactory life, after the termination of my present duties, awaits me. I trust, in the society of my family and particular friends and in the occupation most congenial to my wishes. In no case can I permit myself to be the candidate of any party, or yield myself to party schemes. With these remarks, I trust you will pardon me for thus briefly replying to you, which I do with a high opinion and approval of the sentiments and views embraced in your editorial. With many wishes for your prosperity in life, and great usefulness in the sphere in which your intents and exertions are embarked, I beg to acknowledge myself most truly and respectfully your obedient servant.

Z. Taylor.

Fire in the Rear

The National Intelligencer "would almost swear" that the author of Gen. Taylor's proclamation (prepared at Washington) borrowed its very language in relation to the war from the proclamation in which the British government attempted to palliate its enormous outrage on the nationality of Denmark, in the atrocious bombardment of Copenhagen by the English fleet in 1807.

On the other hand, the N.Y. Tribune "convicts of plagiarism" the author of Gen. Scott's proclamation, who is universally admitted to be none other than Gen. Scott himself. It says that the facsimile of the document "will be found in the address of a certain Propagandist of a preceding generation to the inhabitants of a nation he came to subdue and fraternize. " We give a copious extract to show with what gross injustice a leading Whig paper sneers at and insults a distinguished officer engaged in the honorable and arduous service of his country, in a distant land.

If Generals Scott and Taylor, who deserve the thanks of every patriot, for their distinguished achievements, have been unjustly assailed, the evidence is to be found exclusively in Whig papers and meetings: (From the New York Tribune.) Napoleon Bonaparte, compelled by "a manifest destiny" to waste Egypt with fire and sword, in order to extend "the area of freedom," thus addresses the victims of his benevolence. "Cadis, Shieks, Imanes, Chorbadys, you will be told that I come to destroy your religion I do not believe it. Let your answer be that I come to re-
The California regiment had arrived cut, and in very bad condition. The men are represented as "not what they ought to be. " The Coast of California is quiet, and the inhabitants of Monterey have been saluted by the rounds of Yankee axes and hammers ringing through the woods, and astonished to see house springing up in their streets almost as if by magic. They have had the pleasant sight, too, of Yankee girls in Yankee bonnets tripping along, amide the shawl-covered senoritas. Immigrants have come and are coming over the mountains in great numbers. Some of the parties have suffered to a horrible extent. One caravan was overtaken by winter in the mountains, and were reduced to such an awful state, that they were obliged to eat the bodies of those of the party who died of cold and hunger. It is a singular fact, that most of the women survived the horrors of the situation they were in, while the men died rapidly. A company went out from Monterey to bring them in, and after their arrival in comfortable quarters, it was found difficult to make them eat proper food. Suffering had subverted their reason and their nature, and they seemed desirous of continuing their ghoul-like propensities.

REv44i18p2c5 July 2, 1847 From the Army of Gen. Taylor

(From the N.O. Picayune, June 24. )

The Fashion touched at Brazos Santiago on the 20th inst., on her voyage from Vera Cruz, and brought over thence the following gentlemen: Col. J.P. Taylor, of the Subsistence Department; Capt. Chase, Adjutant Caldwell, 2d Kentucky Regiment; and Lieuts. Wooster, Montgomery, Allen and Mizner, of the army. The Fashion also brought over about forty discharged soldiers.
Capt. W.R. Andrews, of the 10th infantry, has been ordered North on account of sickness, resulting from injuries received in the wreck of the Mobile on Orange Keys. Two robberies are mentioned in the Flag as occurring within the limits of the city. The same paper also mentions the death of John Comegys, a man well known here as a printer and reporter. He was accidentally shot on board the steamer Whitsville, just below Reynosa, on the 16th inst., under the following circumstances: "Mr. Comgys, while resting upon a cot on the boat, amused himself by playing with a Mexican boy about ten years of age. The boy, in a sportive mood, picked up an old horseman's pistol that had been throwing about the boat, and which no one even dreamed was loaded, pointed it at Mr. C. and pulled the trigger. A ball issued from the muzzle and penetrated one of his temples, killing him instantly. He was buried at Reynosa. Mr. Comegys of Pennsylvania, a printer by profession, and had worked in this office. He was for some a clerk in the Quartermaster's Department, and at the time of his decease officiated in that capacity on the Whitsville. His fate will be lamented by all who knew him, and furnishes another impressive lesson to show with what exceeding care fire arms should be handled."

(Special Correspondence of the Picayune.) Monterey, Mexico, June 6, 1847.

The Illinois volunteers and Capt. Pike's squadron of Arkansas cavalry have been here several days, but leave tomorrow for Camargo and home. Since I left Saltillo new has reached us of quite a successful scout of Lieut. Tobin, with a party of McCulloch's Rangers, which I presume Col. Belknap will have no objection to his mentioning. When a long distance from Buena Vista (near what place I have been unable to learn) he discovered a party of ten or a dozen armed person, and gave chase. It proved to be a Mexican express rider from Gen. Sanchez at Palos to the Governor of San Luis, with an escort, mostly deserters from our army. The bearer of dispatches and his horse and papers were captured, but the men escaped. The contents of the dispatches conveyed the information that there were very few American troops in the neighborhood of Saltillo, at that city, or along the line; people awaiting under injuries and wrongs, and anxious to fight to the last for their country, but prevented from want of means from resenting their injuries, and recommending that troops be dispatched with all possible speed to retake Saltillo, an easy task! This information I derive from, I am induced to believe, an authentic source, and the above is the purport of the dispatch. They would hardly come with any very large force, except perhaps cavalry, and they are of no account. They can scarcely have any artillery no to spare, and I am a little afraid that Gen. Sanchez, if he it was who sent the dispatch, would not realize his expectation of its being such "an easy task." There is "a pretty smart chance" of artillery in that neighborhood. The horse which the Mexican dispatch bearer rode, singular to say, was one stolen from Lieut. Sturgis some months since. Gen. Wool, I am told, dispatched some of the rangers and a company of dragoons after residue of the party as soon as Capt. Tobin reported. If they are taken and are deserters they will have a hard time of it.

I have alluded in my previous letters to the murders committed at Saltillo by Mexicans upon Americans. They killed one too many. On the 31st ult. a member of the Arkansas cavalry, while leading his horse in a grove near the Alameda, used as a race track, was accosted by two Mexican, who extended their hands to him in a friendly manner; but, instead of the grasp of friendship, the assassin's knife was plunged into his heart, and he was cast into a ditch, while his horse was made way with. Some of the companions of the deceased, who came to join him on the track soon after, discovered traces of blood, and on pursuing them found the wounded man breathing his last, with just life enough to tell the cause of his situation. Not far from the place two Mexicans were shortly afterwards discovered, whose conduct was suspicious, and they were captured. It was afterwards deemed inadvisable to permit them to be regularly tried; a party of men demanded them; and they were taken out and shot. In the sleeve of one was found a bloody knife, corresponding with the size of the wound. This was not enough! I regret to state that many Mexican were killed that day—some say 17, and some more. Comment is unnecessary.

Col. Curtis, formerly of the Ohio Regiment, has volunteered for the war and been appointed Governor of Saltillo. We have had no more news of Urrea, and heard nothing of any guerrilla parties as yet. The 2d battalion of Virginia volunteers garrison this place, but will move on as soon as they can be relieved. There is still a good deal of sickness here, but of a mild character, and but few deaths. For the last few days we have had several showers during the day, and I imagine it is brewing up for the rainy season. You will probably have an opportunity of seeing the portraits of General Taylor by Mr. Atwood in New Orleans. Mr. R.G. Brown, a portrait painter from Virginia, has also come out to take portraits of the general and the members of his staff. It seems there is still a bare possibility of our going to San Luis at a more advanced period than was contemplated by Gen. Taylor at first, but all depends upon whether troops can be had.

On the 30th July, Mr. Marcy again wrote as follows: "He (the President) has not the requisite information in regard to the country, to enable him to give any positive directions as to the position you ought to take, or the movement which it may be expedient to make. These must be governed by circumstances. While avoiding, as you have been instructed to do, all aggressive measure towards Mexico, as long as the relations of peace exist between that Republic and the United States, you are expected to occupy, protect, and defend the territory of Texas to the extent of which it may be expedient to make. These must be governed by circumstances. While avoiding, as you have been instructed to do, all aggressive measure towards Mexico, as long as the relations of peace exist between that Republic and the United States, you are expected to occupy, protect, and defend the territory of Texas to the extent that it has been occupied to the people of Texas. The Rio Grande is claimed as the boundary between the two countries, and to this boundary you are to extend your protection. " The letters of the 23d and 30th August are to the same purport, viz: to defend Texas from invasion, and reject the invaders, and drive the Mexican troops beyond the Rio Grande—leaving the choice of position very much to Gen. T. ’s own discretion.

The following letter from Gen. Taylor will show the manner in which he construed and carried out his orders:

The Whig press, not caring so much for the peaceful conclusion of the war as for the party capital which they hope to create by misrepresenting its origin and management, have piled up charges upon charges against the Administration, of the most extravagant and wanton character. They have successively accused the President with the design of sacrificing Gen. Taylor and his army to Santa Anna’s overpowering force at Buena Vista—with intending, in his "lust of dominion," to subjugate and annex the whole of Mexico, to rob and plunder the Mexican churches, and, at all events, to force a government upon that unfortunate people. These charges are of too absurd and extravagant a character to impose upon the credulity of any portion of our own citizens, but they have been greedily caught up by the Mexican leaders and reproduced as unequivocal evidence that an "entire party" in this country sympathizes with the infatuated obstinacy of Mexico, and, upon a change of administration, will allow Mexico to dictate such terms of peace as she may desire. Gen. Scott has been forced to remove these false impressions produced on the public mind of Mexico by the course of our own Whig politicians, which have hitherto encouraged the public enemy to hold out madly against peaceful negotiations.

We are happy to believe that his explanations and appeals have not been without good results and that the probable accession of Herrera to the Presidency, supported as he seems to be by the powerful clergy, may soon lead to the establishment of peace. But our purpose to present is not to go into the examination of charges, which have been so fully refuted. There is, however, another charge, still pertinaciously pressed by the Whigs, which has given "aid and comfort to Mexican infatuation." It is that the men of army to the Rio Grande was the cause and just cause of the war, and that Mexico was fully justified in making war upon us.

The Democratic party has maintained the wisdom and necessity of that movement in defence of the territory of Texas, a sovereign State of our Union, and has been always willing to assume the responsibility of an act, which the pledged honor of the nation imperatively required at the hands of the Executive. But at the same time, they contend that if the march to the Rio Grande be so monstrous an act, Gen. Taylor himself is equally responsible, because he recommended it, long before the step was taken. He is the professed candidate for the Presidency of many of the Whigs—and his opinions as to what the Whigs charge as the moving cause of this "atrocious" war, can be fairly quoted in defence of the movement. The Union gives a detailed and conclusive answer to the seven columns of the National Intelligencer on this point. We have no room for the long extracts from the official documents, but must content ourselves with a brief summary of facts developed by official papers. We contend, the, that on the 4th October, 1845, three months before the order was given to march to the Rio Grand, General Taylor wrote a letter advising that march. It is a matter of history that, soon after the passage by our Congress of the joint resolution for the annexation of Texas, Almonte, the Mexican Minister, demanded his passports, regarding it as a violation of the rights of Mexico, though he was positively informed that he could not justly so regard the voluntary action of the independent power of Texas, owing no allegiance to Mexico, and that it was the sincere desire of our Government to maintain peace and good will with Mexico. Our Minister at Mexico was also refused all official intercourse with that Government, and returned to the United States. By the acts of Mexico herself, the diplomatic intercourse between the two countries was thus suspended. It was, moreover, notorious that Mexico was making great military preparation to invade Texas, as the following extract of a letter from our Charge to Texas, Mr. Donelson, among other evidences, goes to prove: "From recent information just received from General Sherman, of the Texas militia, it appears that Mexico has already about seven thousand troops on the Rio Grand, and that Captain Hays, who has only about fifty rangers under his command was about to attack a party of about one hundred Mexicans, whom he had discovered near him on the Nueces. This exhibition of force, for the purpose of driving the Texas from the Rio Grand, shows that Captain Elliot is not speaking at random when he declares (as he has done to many of the citizens of this country) that a rejection of the proposals now offered by him for the independence of Texas, will be followed immediately by an invasion from Mexico. " Under these circumstances, Gen. Taylor was ordered to defend Texas up to the Rio Grande against Mexican invasion, and to repel promptly all Mexican hostilities on the Eastern bank of that river—but to be "careful to avoid any acts of aggression, unless an actual state of war should exist. " On the 18th June, 1845, Mr. Marcy wrote to Gen. T: "The point of your ultimate destination is the Western frontier of Texas, where you will select and occupy, on or near the Rio Grande del Norte, such a site as will be our Western border. You will limit yourself to the defence of the territory of Texas, unless Mexico should declare war against the United States, " On the 30th July, Mr. Marcy again wrote as follows: "He (the President) has not the requisite information in regard to the country, to enable him to give any positive directions as the position you ought to take, or the movement which it may be expedient to make. These must be governed by circumstances. While avoiding, as you have been instructed to do, all aggressive measure towards Mexico, as long as the relations of peace exist between that Republic and the United States, you are expected to occupy, protect, and defend the territory of Texas to the extent that it has been occupied to the people of Texas. The Rio Grande is claimed as the boundary between the two countries, and to this boundary you are to extend your protection. " The letters of the 23d and 30th August are to the same purport, viz: to defend Texas from invasion, and reject the invaders, and drive the Mexican troops beyond the Rio Grande—leaving the choice of position very much to Gen. T. ’s own discretion.
"Sir; I beg leave to suggest some considerations in relation to the present position of our force, and the dispositions which may become necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the objects for which it has been concentrated. It will be recollected that the instruction of June 15, issued by me. Bancroft, then acting Secretary of War, directed such a site as will consist with the health of the troops and will be best adapted to repel invasion, &c. Brazos Santiago is the nearest entrance to the mouth of the Rio Grande; and Point Isabel, within that entrance and twenty one miles from Matamoros, would have fulfilled more completely than any other position of the conditions imposed by the Secretary. But we had no artillery, no engineer force or appliances, and but a moderate amount of infantry; and the occupation of Point Isabel, under these circumstances, and with at least the possibility of resistance from the Mexicans, might have compromised the safety of the command. I therefore determined to take up the next accessible position in the rear, which is the mouth of the Nueces river. All the information which I could obtain before leaving New Orleans, seemed to point to Corpus Christi as the most suitable point for concentration; and although before the President's instructions of July 30 reached me, I would have preferred a position on the left bank of the river, yet a careful examination of the country had already convince me that none could be found combining so many advantages as this.

Every day's experience has confirmed these impressions. Corpus Christi is healthy, easily supplied and well situated to hold in observation the course of the Rio Grand from Matamoros to Laredo—being about 150 miles from several points on the river. I have reason to believe, moreover, that a salutary moral effect has been exercised upon the Mexicans. Their traders are continually carrying home the news of our position and increasing numbers, and are confessedly struck by the spectacle of a large camp of well appointed and disciplined troops, accompanied by perfect security to their persons and property, instead of the impressments and pillage to which they are subject in their own country. For these reasons, our position thus far has, I think, been the best possible, but, now that the entire force will soon be concentrated, it may well be a question whether the views of government will be best carried out by our remaining at this point. It is with great deference that I make any suggestions on topics which may become matter of delicate negotiation; but if our Government, in settling the question of boundary, makes the line of the Rio Grand an ultimatum, I cannot doubt that the settlement will be greatly facilitated and hastened by our taking possession at once of one or two suitable points on or quite near that river. Our strength and state of preparations would be displayed in a manner not be mistaken.

However salutary may be the effect produced upon the border people by our presence here, we are too far from the frontier to impress the Government of Mexico with our readiness to vindicate, by force of arms, if necessary, our title to the country as far as the Rio Grand. The 'army of occupation' will, in a few days, be concentrated at this point, in condition for vigorous and efficient service. Mexico having as yet made no positive declaration of war, or committed any overt act of hostilities, I do not feel at liberty under my instructions, particularly those of July 8, to make a forward movement to the Rio Grande without authority from the War Department.

"I have deemed it my duty to make the above suggestions. Should they be favorable considered, and instructions based upon them, I will thank you to send the latter in duplicate Lieut. Col. Hunt—one copy to be dispatched direct, without delay; the other to be sent via Galveston, should a steamer be running that port from New Orleans. I am, &c.

Z. Taylor

As the Union says, "We invoke the careful attention of our readers to the terms of this letter of Gen. Taylor. In the first lines of it, he proposes to make some suggestions concerning that disposition of his force which he deems proper and necessary to effect the 'object' for which his army had been concentrated. What those objects were, he knew perfectly. He had been told in the whole series of letters from the War Department, from May to August, as we have above quoted them, that he was ordered to Texas to protect that State from Mexican invasion up to its limit of the Rio Grande, and to repel from that quarter all Mexican hostilities. He knew, too—and the subsequent part of his letter shows that he knew—that our Government, claiming the Rio Grande as the boundary, was most desirous to settle that boundary by negotiation.

These were the two 'objects' to be effected, and, with a view to their accomplishment, Gen. Taylor, rendering his reasons as he goes along, informs his government, in this letter, that, in his judgment, his army should take post upon the Rio Grande, in order 'to display our strength and state of preparation in a manner not to be mistake, and so to produce a salutary effect upon the Government of Mexico.' A more complete and authoritative endorsement of the whole policy of our Government in sending an army of observation to the Western frontier of Texas, cannot be stated in any form of language."

But, says the Whig, admit that General Taylor did advise the march to the Rio Grande on the 4th October, he recanted that opinion in his letter of the 7th of November, and, therefore, he ought not be regarded as justifying the movement. They forget, however, to state the new circumstances which had induced him to modify his opinion. After his letter of the 4th October, he received a letter of the 16 October from Mr. Marcy, which says: "The information which we have here, render it probable that no serious attempts will at present be made by Mexico to invade Texas, although she continues to threaten incursions. Precious instructions will have put you in possession of the views of the Government of the United States, not only as to the extent of its territorial claims, but of its determination to assert them. In carrying out these instructions, you will be left superior knowledge of localities, and the earlier notice you may receive of the probable views of Mexico and the movements of her troops."

He is also notified by Commodore Conner, on the 24th October, that the Mexican Government had accepted the proposal to arrange the difficulties by negotiation. Acting under this new information, of a change in the state of relations between the two countries, General T. wrote his letter of the 7th November, as follows:

"Headquarters Army of Occupation.
Corpus Christi, Texas,
Nov. 7. 1845.

"Sir: I respectfully enclose a copy of a letter from Com. Conner, commanding the home squadron, which I received by the 'Saratoga,' sloop-of-war, on the 5th inst. The intelligence communicated by the Commodore will, doubtless, reach the seat of government long before the receipt of this letter.

"The communication from the Secretary of War, dated October 16, was received and acknowledged on the 1st and 2d inst. I purposely deferred a detailed reply to the various points embraced in that communication until I could receive an answer to mine of October 4, which covered (at least in part) the same ground.

The intelligence from Mexico, however, tends to modify, in some degree, the views expressed in that communication: The position now occupied by the troops, may, perhaps, be the best while negotiations are pending, or at any rate until a disposition shall be manifested by Mexico to protract them unreasonably. Under the supposition that such may be the view of the department, I shall make no movement from this point, except, for the purpose of examining the country, until further instructions are received.

Signed, Z. Taylor.

"The Adjt Gen of Army, Washington, D.C."

Can any one read this letter candidly and no infer that so far from contradicting, it goes fully to substantiate the suggestions in his letter of 4th October? The reason expressly assigned for this modification of his advice is that "negotiation is pending" and that he thought it best to remain at Corpus Christi, "until a disposition shall be manifested by Mexico to protract them unreasonably." This turned out to be true—after Mexico had consented to receive a minister from us to adjust all difficulties between the two countries, and after, at her instance, our fleet had been withdrawn from Vera Cruz, Mr. Slidell was sent to Mexico to settle all the matters in controversy. The frivolous grounds upon which he was rejected are familiar to the country.

The President presents a strong view in his message of May 11: "Thus the government of Mexico, though solemnly pledged by official acts in October last to receive and accredit an American envoy, violated their plighted faith, and refused the offer of a peaceful adjustment of our difficulties. Not only was the offer rejected, but the indignity of its rejection was enhanced by the manifest breach of faith in refusing to admit the envoy, who came because they had bound themselves to receive him. Nor can it be said that the offer was fruitless from the want of opportunity of discussing it—our envoy was present on their own soil. Nor can it be ascribed to a want of sufficient powers—our envoy had full powers to adjust every question of difference. Nor was there room for complaint that our propositions for settlement were unreasonable—permission was not even given our envoy to make any proposition of any kind."

On the 17th December, 1845, Mr. Slidell wrote to our Government that the council had finally decided to recommend that he should not be received. And the President being thus satisfied that Mexico would refuse to receive our envoy, on the 13th January ordered General Taylor to march to the Rio Grande—a movement which General Taylor had himself suggested, as calculate to impress Mexico, and hasten and facilitate the settlement of the boundary question.

A candid and careful examination of all the facts of the case proves conclusively, as the Union says:

"First. That there is no real contradiction in General Taylor's two letters, and that they were both written on the same principle, and in the same policy, with reference to the course our Government in its attempt to adjust our relations with Mexico.

"And, secondly. That General Taylor's two letters, taken together, fully demonstrate his entire approval of the course taken by our Government in ordering the advance of the troops to the Rio Grande, when that advance was ordered by the War Department on the 13th of January, 1846."

The Union presents the prominent points of the case in the following summary, which will at once strike the mind of the reader with conviction, that the march to the Rio Grande, wise in itself and demanded by the imperative obligations to Texas, had the full sanction of Gen. Taylor. It is, therefore, detracting from his character, and violating the spirit of his own official letters, to contend, as the Whigs, go, that the present is a wanton, unjust, unnecessary and aggressive war on our part.

The Union says:
"In conclusion, then how stands the case in respect to Gen. Taylor's suggestion and approval of the march of the army to the Rio Grande? On the 4th of October, 1845, General Taylor knowing that the administration were determined to protect Texas up to the Rio Grande—knowing, too, that the was to avoid all acts which could justify hostilities—knowing, also, that diplomatic relations between the two countries had been broken off—and knowing, lastly, that Mexico was threatening and preparing an invasion of Texas. Gen. Taylor, under these circumstances, advised a forward movement of his troops to the Rio Grande. This advice the administration, by reason of information then in its possession, did not deem expedient to be then at once acted on.

"On the 7th of November following, General Taylor learned that Mexico had consented to a negotiation, and, at the same time, received information which led him to believe that she had suspended or abandoned her purpose of invasion. He thereupon informed the Government that he should not advance to the Rio Grande, as he had proposed to do, until he should receive further instructions. In this conclusion, formed in view of the pending negotiation, the Administration concurred with Gen. Taylor.

"But on the 17th of December Mr. Slidell informed the government that, in all probability, his mission of peace must fail by the refusal of the Mexican government to receive him or to entertain his propositions. This information reached Washington before the 13th of January. When received, it removed all the ground upon which General Taylor had founded the change of his opinions as to the expediency of the forward movement of his troops. The failure of Mr. Slidell’s mission, and the Mexican revolution out of which it grew, brought about a state of things which demanded the forward movement of our troops far more imperatively than when it was first recommended by General Taylor. He had advised it, both with a view on protecting Texas, and of producing a salutary effect upon the Mexican government. After the rejection Mr. Slidell, it became manifest that neither of these great objects could be accomplished without such a movement. The movement was therefore made in pursuance of orders issued by the War Department on the 13th of January. These orders were plainly conceived in the same spirit, and upon the same policy, in which General Taylor gave his original recommendation. " [MSM]

REv44i18p4c4 July 2, 1847 Correction

The N.O.Delta corrects an error in its extra which stated that three men were killed and three wounded in Capt. Duperu’s company in the fight near the National Bridge. That gallant corps did not lose a man. Capt. D. makes most honorable mention of two very young men, Victor Kerr, of New Orleans, and Berrard, of Attakapas, who enthusiastically "rushed upon the nearest band of guerrillas in advance of their companies, and for some time fought upon their ‘own hook’ with the most reckless and determined bravery. REv44i18p4c5-6 July 2, 1847 Affairs in Mexico

We regret that the Southern mail of yesterday did not confirm the news contained in the Delta Extra, of the advance of General Scott to Rio Frio, the election of Herrera President, and the tender of terms of peace.

The New Orleans Picayune refers to the flattering prospect of peace contained in the intelligence by Captain Wood, of the James L. Day, and adds: "But our letters from Vera Cruz do not confirm this news, and the represent, on the contrary, as mentioned above, that nothing had been received from General Scott subsequent to the departure of the Galveston.

And, furthermore, we have letters from Puebla to the 3d June, when General Scott was there, and scarcely time had elapsed for him to march to Rio Frio and enter into negotiations, and for the news to come back to Vera Cruz. We are, therefore, at present incredulous about the intelligence.

"The day before the Day left, two Mexicans, supposed to be spies, were arrested in Vera Cruz. "A large sum of money has been found in some secluded vault in the Castle of San Juan de Ulua. It is uncertain whether it belonged to the Mexican Government or to some individual.

"The Eagle publishes a letter giving an account of a fire which occurred at Laguna on the 28th of May. Half a dozen houses were destroyed. The officers and men of the United States brig Vesuvius, with Lieutenant Magruder at their head, rendered efficient service in extinguishing the fire."

By the whole affair of the attack on the train, the Picayune supposes we have lost about thirty men, killed and wounded. The Vera Cruz Eagle thinks the Mexicans have gained no property by their enterprise, and have sustained a much heavier loss than we. The New Orleans papers refer to the numerous complaints made of the want of vigor and efficiency in the system of regulations enforced at Vera Cruz. One great error, it is thought, is the permitting the natives of Mexico to hold and discharge important offices in captured cities, thereby enabling them to act as spies, and communicate dangerous information to the Mexicans scattered through the country. A more rigid system is warmly recommended, to prevent the loss of life and property daily occurring.

From the New Orleans Commercial Times we extract the following summary of news by the James L. Day: Nothing
The late attack. —The feeling Vera Cruz is very strong in reprobation of the manner in which the train was conducted; had it been properly commanded, it is asserted, it would have effectuated its passage to Jalap in safety, without requiring a reinforcement from Vera Cruz. A communication has reached us, that in the first attack a company of our dragoons broke, as did some other detachments of the escort, owing, as it is alleged, for want of officers. To Captain Duperu and his men, who fought most bravely, are we considerably indebted for the safety of the train.

Capture of spies, &c. — Capt. Wood, of the James L. Day, informs us that a report reached Vera Cruz, on the 16th, in the morning, of an attack having been made by an overwhelming force of guerrillas and rancheros, a hundred of them, on twenty Americans, some distance from the city. The latter, it was said, were cut to pieces. The authorities were searching the city for the Priest Jarauta and two others, officers of Guerrilla bands. Just as the James L. Day weighed anchor, 2 P.M., news was brought on board that two Mexicans had been arrested by the police, supposed to be spies.

The following extracts are from the Eagle of the 16th inst. The first gives an account of Gen. Cadwallader’s operations at and near Puente Nacional:

Another victory. — We had the perusal of a letter, yesterday, dated at Puente Nacional, the 13th inst., by which we perceive that our arms have again triumphed over all the obstacles which could be brought to bear against the advance of our train. On the evening of the 11th inst., Gen. Cadwallader had pushed on the train as far as the Bridge, and finding it as well as the surrounding heights, pretty strongly fortified, preparations were made for the storming of both simultaneously, which resulted in the complete rout of the cowards who had attempted opposition, although there is scarcely a doubt but that they outnumbered our forces nearly two to one, besides having immense advantage of position. Our loss is set down at about thirty in killed and wounded, besides a large number of horses. The attempt to stampede was a perfect failure on the part of the enemy, and he cannot boast of gaining a dollar by the enterprise, unless it be in the capture of some frightened mules and mustangs, which broke their harness and escaped into the chaparral, these of course, were made prizes of. The number of men lost by the enemy must have been very great, as they were seen carrying the dead bodies away to every direction, as our unerring marksmen would knock them over into the arms of death. The train which followed the reinforcements sent to the first rain, joined Gen. Cadwallader without having met with any resistance on its march. Both are, by this time, no doubt safely encamped near Jalapa. The leader of this band of desperadoes is, (we are assured,) a Catholic priest, who a few weeks since, left this city and the duties of his holy office, first stating to his friends that he intended to try if he could not make more money by his new profession, than by the exercises of the priesthood—a worthy scoundrel.

Gen. Pillow— Maj. Gen. Gideon Pillow arrived in this city on Monday last, and proceeds immediately to proper organization of his command, a large portion of which has already arrived. By the wary we perceive Gen. P. has answered some charges made against him by some of the officers of the 2d Tennessee regiment, in a manner which, we believe, should satisfy any but a prejudiced, unreflecting, and malignant mind. His energy of character and dignified demeanor, as a military leader, are the cause of such envy and consequent abuse on the part of those who were not "born to command." We have no doubt, however, that he will be as fortunate in outliving the venomous scratches of their puny shafts, as he was in recovering from the effects of the enemy’s grape.

Reinforcements. — Since our last, the 12th inst., the following companies have reached this place, on their way to join Gen. Scott: Co. ’s B, C and F, under the command Lieut. Col. Hoard. Co.’s A, E and I, under the command of Maj. Mills. Those companies all belong to the 16th regiment of infantry. Also, Co. F, of the 3d and B and K, of the 6th infantry, under command of Maj. Gwinn.

The following interesting letter, addressed to our neighbors of the Bee, by a member of Captain Duperu’s company, had been kindly communicated to us by the proprietors of that journal.

Paso de Orejas,
Mexico, June 11, 1847.

Gentlemen: The train of wagons and pack mules, under the direction of Colonel McIntosh, left Vera Cruz on the 4th June, escorted by Captains Duperu, Ford and McReynolds’ companies of dragoons—the two latter mounted—and three hundred infantry commanded by Major Lee, arrived in this village on the 7th June, after a march of three days. The train, consisting of 150 wagons, laden with specie and ammunition, and 500 pack mules with provisions, &c., proceeded without molestation until about noon on Sunday last, 6th June, when our advance guard of Captain Ford’s Indiana dragoons was suddenly attacked by a large body of Mexicans, killing two men, and wounding five or six.
