The Mexican-American War and the Media, 1845-1848

Index

January

MGv45i44p2c2, January 2, 1845: Message, To the Senate and House of Representatives
Mr. Shannon's argument against the annexation of Texas.

MGv45i44p2c1, January 2, 1845: The Annexation of Texas
Arguments that the annexation of Texas would violate the Constitution by displacing national faith and honor of the American people.

MGv45i45p1c3, January 9, 1845: House of Representatives
States the names of U.S. representatives that made motions that passed in the House. A joint resolution was given by Mr. Tibbaits for the annexation of Texas.

MGv45i45p1c3, January 9, 1845: Friday January 3, 1845, House of Representatives
Mr. Phoenix, a member of the Society of Friends, started a debate by presenting a speech to the House against the annexation of Texas.

MGv45i45p1c2, January 9, 1845: Twenty-Seventh Congress, Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot, Washington
Features the motions from the House of Representatives and Senate from December 30, 1844 through January 2, 1845 against the annexation of Texas and motions for a new resolution to annex Texas.

MGv45i47p2c3, January 30, 1845: Letter to the Editor - Alex. Gaz.
To New York Evening Post accuses General Jackson of trying to push the United States into the annexation of Texas.

MGv45i47p3c2, January 30, 1845: Late and Important from Mexico - Santa Anna Defeated and Taken Prisoner
Santa Anna's army was defeated by General Bravo and Paredes on the Affan plains, after which he was captured.

MGv45i47p3c1, January 30, 1845: Annexation of Texas
The joint resolutions to annex Texas were presented by Milton Brown, of Tenn, passed in the House of Representatives.

February

MG45v45n49p2c1 February 6, 1845: Canada and Texas

MG45v45n49p2c1 February 6, 1845: Oregon

MG45v45n49p2c2 February 6, 1845: Summary of Legislative Intelligence, House of Delegates

MG45v45n49p2c2 February 6, 1845: Summary of Legislative Intelligence, Thursday, January 23, 1845, House of Delegates, Texas Annexation

MG45v45n49p2c5 February 6, 1845: More Annexation

MG45v45n50p1c6 February 13, 1845: No title
MG45v45n50p2c1 February 13, 1845: Texas

MG45v45n50p2c2-3 February 13, 1845: Summary of Legislative Intelligence, Wednesday, January 29, 1845, House of Delegates. Texas Annexation

MG45v45n50p2c3 February 13, 1845: Summary of Legislative Intelligence, Friday, January 31, 1845, House of Delegates. Texas Annexation

MG45v45n51p2c1 February 20, 1845: Congressional Proceedings.

MG45v45n51p2c2 February 20, 1845 Summary of Legislative Intelligence, Saturday, February 1, 1845, House of Delegates, Texas Annexation

MG45v45n51p3c1 February 20, 1845 Mexico. Confirmation of the Capture of Santa Anna

MG45v45n52p2c2 February 27, 1845: Congressional Proceedings. Texas debate

MG45v45n52p2c5 February 27, 1845: Response of the People

March

MGv45i1p2c4, March 6, 1845, THE ANNEXATION OF TEXAS TO THE UNITED STATES Celebration commenced on Capitol Hill, Texas will not refuse annexation

MGv45i1p2c4, March 6, 1845: JOINT RESOLUTION FOR ANNEXING TEXAS TO THE U. STATES
Resolution by Senate and House of Representatives

MGv45i2p2c4, March 13, 1845: THE MEANING
Extract from editorial comments of Richmond Enquirer on Inaugural Address of Polk

MGv45i3p2c7, March 20, 1845: FROM MEXICO
Santa Anna to be tried on 24th

MGv45i4p1c4, March 27, 1845: A SKETCH OF SANTA ANA
Recent revolution in Mexico

MGv45i4p1c7, March 27, 1845: WHIG ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA
V.W. Southall describing events at the Whig legislative meeting

MGv45i4p1c7, March 27, 1845: THE TEXAS QUESTION
Past resolutions passed by congress concerning annexation

MGv45i4p2c7, March 27, 1845: NEW HAMPSHIRE ELECTION
Texas party defeated in their efforts to get J.P. Hale defeated in elections

MGv45i4p4c1, March 27, 1845: FROM TEXAS
New Orleans papers report some Texans not pleased with terms of annexation

April 1845

MGv46i5p2c4, April 3, 1845: Senator Archer
Comments by the Globe on the Senator-including a statement about his stance on Texas annexation

MGv46i6p1c4, April 10, 1845: Drilling Mexican Soldiers
Report on the drilling of new Mexican recruits in Mexico-details of their activities

MGv46i6p2c3, April 10, 1845: Will Texas Accept
Comments on the belief that Texas will not accept and why that is a good thing

MGv46i7p2c4, April 17, 1845: War and Rumors of War
Formal declaration of war against the US has been declared by Mexico; comments about the annexation of Texas

MGv46i7p2c6, April 17, 1845: Mexico and Texas
Statement from Mexico that taxes levied to pay for the war against Texas have been repealed MGv46i7p2c7, April 17, 1845: Santa Anna Run Away!
Report from Texas that Santa Anna has run away

MGv46i7p2c7, April 17, 1845: From Mexico
Gen. Canalizo, late ex-President will be shot because at the time of the revolution he was president and gave orders to Santa Anna

MGv46i8p2c2, April 24, 1845: Important from Texas
Debate in Texas about on the powers of the President-can he or can't he make decisions? Should there be a convention of the people?; President of Texas opposed to annexation

MGv46i8p2c7, April 24, 1845: The Progress of Annexation
Comments that the annexation of Texas is intended to be the starting point to annexation of Mexico; suggestions of revolution to those in California; comments that the land of Oregon is barren; settlers going into Mexican land and buying it up-better form of conquest

MGv46i8p2c4, April 24, 1845: Santa Anna
Reports of letters sent by Santa Anna to certain Mexican officials; Congress has presented formal articles of accusation against him; refuse to let him leave the Republic; information on other military officials and governors who have been found guilty or trials are planned

MGv46i8p2c3, April 24, 1845: War with Mexico
Report on the rumors that Mexico has declared war on the US-article from New Orleans that came from the British Minister at Mexico that if the resolution to annex Texas passes in the US, then Mexico would accept the act as casus belli; details on Mexican plans for if the US passes the resolution

MGv46i8p2c3, April 24, 1845: Our Relations with Mexico
Squadron ordered to the Gulf; hostile speeches made in the Mexican Congress; both parties of the recent revolution seem in favor of war

MGv46i8p2c3, April 24, 1845: The United States and Mexico
News of the action of the Senate on Texas has reached Vera Cruz; comments on the position that Mexico now finds herself; believed that the government must declare war; extract from a letter sent by a man in Baltimore

MGv46i8p2c3, April 24, 1845: From Mexico
Letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the US Minister in Mexico stating that information about the US decision to annex Texas as reached them and that diplomatic ties because of that decision will be cut; notes sent to the Ministers of Spain, France and England protesting US action

MGv46i8p2c5, April 24, 1845: Arrival of the Great Western - three weeks later from Europe
Report that the resolution decided by Congress has caused great sensation in England as did a paragraph of Polk's inaugural address dealing with England-extract of a part of Polk's address; Polk said Texas was once apart of the US; Polk said US entitlement to Oregon was clear; more comments on the Texas annexation and also on slavery; conversation in the House of Commons dealing with Oregon.

MAY 1845

MG46i9p1c3, May 1, 1845: PROSPECTUS OF THE RICHMOND TIMES
Editors state their position on the annexation of Texas.

MG46i9p2c2, May 1, 1845: THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.
Editors opinion on possible war.

MG46i9p2c6, May 1, 1845: ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA - SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.
Reports of England's view of both the Texas and Oregon situations. From Baltimore American, April 24.

MG46i10p2c2, May 8, 1845: WAR WITH GREAT BRITAIN.
Editors defend last week's position that war is inevitable.

MG46i10p2c4, May 8, 1845: LATEST FROM TEXAS. News from New Orleans proclaims popular support for Annexation among the people of Texas.

MG46i10p2c4, May 15, 1845: VERY IMPORTANT
Intelligence of Great Britain's desire for war from the New York Sun and Bennett's Herald!

JUNE 1845
Message, To the Senate and House of Representatives

I transmit herewith copies of dispatches received from our Minister at Mexico, since the commencement of your present session, which claim, from their importance, and I doubt not will receive, your calm and deliberate consideration. The extraordinary and highly offensive language which the Mexican Government has thought proper to employ in reply to the remonstrance of the executive, through Mr. Shannon, against the renewal of the war with Texas, while the question of annexation was pending before Congress and the People, and also, the purposed manner of conducting that war, will not fail to arrest your attention.

Such remonstrance, urged in no unfriendly spirit to Mexico, was called for by considerations of an imperative character, having relation as well to the peace of this country and honor of this Government as to the cause of humanity and civilization. Texas had entered into the treaty of Annexation upon the invitations of the Executive; and when for that act she was threatened with a renewal of the was on the part of Mexico, she naturally looked to this Government to interpose its efforts toward off the threatened blow. But one course was left the Executive, acting within the limits of its constitutional competency, and that was to protest in respectful, but at the same time strong and decided terms against it. The war thus threatened to be renewed, was promulgated by edicts and decrees, which ordered, on the part of the Mexican military, the desolation of whole tracts of country and the destruction, without discrimination, of all ages, sexes, and conditions of existence. Over the manner of conducting war, Mexico possesses no exclusive control. She has no right to violate at pleasure the principles which an enlightened civilization has laid down for the conduct of nations at war and thereby retrograde to a period of barbarism which, happily for the world, has long since passed away. All nations are interested in enforcing an observance of those principles, and the United States the oldest of the American Republics, and the nearest of the civilized powers to the theatre on which these enormities were proposed to be enacted, could not quietly content themselves to witness such a state of things. They had, though the Executive, on another occasion, and as was believed with the approbation of the whole country, remonstrated against outrages similar, but even less inhuman, than those which by her new edicts and decrees she has threatened to perpetrate, and of which the late inhuman massacre at Tobasco was but the precursor.

The bloody and inhuman murder of Fennin and his companions, equaled only in savage barbarity by the usages of the untutored Indian Tribes, proved how little confidence could be placed on the most solemn stipulations of her Generals, while the fate others who became her captives in war, many of whom, no longer able to sustain the fatigues and privations of long journeys, were shot down by the way side, while their companions who survived were subjected to sufferings even more painful than death--had left an indelible stain on the page of civilization. The Executive, with the evidence of an intention on the part of Mexico to renew scenes so revolting to humanity, could do no less than renew remonstrances formerly urged. For fulfilling duties so imperative, Mexico has thought proper, through her accredited organs, because she has had represented to her the inhumanity of such proceedings, to indulge in language unknown to the courtesy of diplomatic intercourse, and offensive in the highest degree to this Government and People. Nor has she offended in this only. She has not only violated existing conventions between the two countries, by arbitrary and unjust decrees against our trade and intercourse, but withholds instalments of debt, due to our citizens, which she solemnly pledged herself to pay, under circumstances which are fully explained by the accompanying letter from Mr. Green, our Secretary of Lexington. And when our Minister has invited the attention of her Government to wrong committed by her local authorities not only on the property but on the persons of our fellow-citizens, engaged in prosecuting fair and honest pursuits, she has added insult to injury, by not even designing, for months together, to return an answer to his representations. Still further to manifest her unfriendly feelings towards the United States, she has issued decrees expelling from some of her provinces American citizens engaged in the peaceful pursuits of life, and now denies to those of our citizens prosecuting the Whale fishery on the Northwest coast of the Pacific, the privilege...
The subject of Annexation addresses itself most fortunately to every portion of the Union. The Executive would have been unmindful of its highest obligations, if it could have adopted a course of policy dictated by sectional, but made its appeal to the interests of the whole Union, and of every State in the Union, that the negotiations and finally the Treaty of Annexation was entered into; and it has afforded me no ordinary pleasure to perceive that so far as demonstrations have been made upon it by the People, they have proceeded from all portions of the Union. Mexico may seek to excite division amongst us, by uttering unjust denunciations against particular States, but when she comes to know that the invitations addressed to our fellow citizens by Spain, and afterwards by herself, to settle Texas, were accepted by emigrants from all the States; and when in addition to this, she refreshed her recollection with the fact, that the first effort which was made to acquire Texas was during the administration of a distinguished citizen from an Eastern State, which was afterwards renewed under the suspires of a President from the Southwest, she will awake to a knowledge of the futility of her present purpose of sewing dissensions among, or producing distraction in our Councils by attacks either on particular States or on persons who are now in the retirement of private life. Considering the appeal which she now makes to eminent citizens by name, can she hope to escape censure for having ascribed to them as well as to others, in design, as she pretends now, for the first time revealed, of having originated negotiations to despoil her, by duplicity and falsehood, of a portion of her territory?--The opinion then, as now, prevailed with Executive, that the Annexation of Texas to the Union was a matter of vast importance.

In order to acquire that territory before it had assumed a position among the independent powers of the earth, propositions were made to Mexico for a cession of it to the United States. Mexico saw in these proceedings, at the time, no cause of complaint. She is now, when simply reminded of them, awakened to a knowledge of the fact, which she, through her Secretary of State, promulgates to the whole world as true, that those negotiations were founded in deception and falsehood, and superinduced [sic] by unjust and iniquitous motives. While Texas was a dependency of Mexico, the United States opened negotiations with the latter power for the cession of her then acknowledged territory: and now that Texas is independent of Mexico, and has maintained a separate existence for nine years, - during which time she has been received into the family of nations, and is represented by accredited embassadors [sic] at many of the principal Courts of Europe--when it has become obvious to the whole world that she is forever lost to Mexico, the United States is charged with deception and falsehood in all relating to the past, and condemnatory accusations are made against States which have had no special agency in the matter, because the Executive of the whole Union has negotiated with free and independent Texas upon a matter vitally important to the interests of both countries. And after nine years of unavailing war, Mexico now announces her intention, through her Secretary of Foreign Affairs, never to consent to the Independence of Texas, or to abandon the effort to re-conquer that Republic. --She thus announces a perpetual claim; which at the end of a century will furnish her as plausible a ground for discontent against any nation, which at the end of that time may enter into a treaty with Texas, as she possesses at this moment against the United States. The lapse of time can add nothing to her title to independence.

A course of conduct such as has been described on the part of Mexico, [...] violation of all friendly feeling; and of the courtesy, which should characterize the intercourse between the Nations of the Earth, might well justify the united States in a resort to any measure to vindicate their national honor; but, actuated by a sincere desire to preserve the general peace, and in view of the present condition of Mexico, the Executive, resting upon its integrity, and not fearing but that the judgment of the world will duly appreciate its motive, abstains from recommending to Congress a resort to measures of redress, and content itself with re-urging upon that body prompt and immediate action on the subject of Annexation. By adopting that measure, the United States will be in the exercise regarding that forbearance, shall aggravate the injustice of her conduct by a declaration of war against them, upon her head will rest all the responsibility.

JOHN TYLER.

[AMB]
the end of Annexation, and the possibility is from the signs of the times, that some measure or other may be adopted before the end of the present session of Congress for that purpose. This may be done, [. . . ] accompany the present Administration into retirement amidst the scoffs and jeers of the Whigs at their folly and dishonesty, and with the deep and bitter curses of the Bentonian wing of the Democracy on their heads. Amidst this din of curses, the new President, Mr. Polk, will rise to take the Oath of Allegiance to the Constitution - which sacred instrument will lie spread open before him with the ruthless and bloody foot-prints of the "Progressive Democracy" freshly imprinted upon it. He must take some stand or other upon this question for under his administration grave and important issues must arise in connection with the annexation of the Texan territory to ours, which must and will shake the discordant elements of the Democracy to its centre, and perhaps the happy union of these States to its dissolution. Party excitement has in measure cooled down - there is no inducement upon the part of the Whigs (even if they would resort to such means) to misrepresent any matter in relation to this Texas scheme. They are in a measure powerless for good or evil as far as the influence of Government goes, and therefore we think we are enabled to look upon the movements of the Annexationists as calm observers, and more readily see the dangers to which we are being hurried, than those whose minds are fevered and excited with the ambition of carrying forward a favorite scheme, and whose judgments are clouded by the prejudice of self-pride and self-interest.

We hesitate not to say, that if Texas be admitted into this Union by either or any of the schemes now before the House of Representatives, it will be done in direct, open, and palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States - in open disregard of National faith and honor, and in opposition to the will of a large majority of the States and People of the Union. The Democracy, in whose name, and under whose suspires this disreputable deed is to be done, have ever prided themselves upon being "strict constructionists of the Constitution" - it has been the chief feather in their cap - the polar star by which they have always professed to guide the ship of the State. But where is the loyal crew now? - have they lost their chart and compass - or have they matinied [sic] in the fog of noncommittalism, and determined to scuttle the good old vessel on the reefs of Progressiveness, or not? Certainly they cannot think it the same unpardonable sin now that they did in former times to depart from a strict construction of the Constitution, when they are clamoring for the "annexation of Texas" by a joint resolution of Congress. Our readers are all aware that at last session of Congress the present Administration attempted to have a Treaty formed between our Government and the Government of Texas for the annexation of the latter to this Government ratified by the other branch of the treaty-making power under our laws - the Senate of the United States - and that it was rejected. This rejection met the approbation of the People - sanctioned by every Whig State of this Union - and the Treaty was openly reprobated and disowned by several of the States which cast their votes for Mr. Polk; and b[. . . ] for such disavowal by such Polk leaders as Silas Wright, of New York, he would have been left in a very large minority of the States of the Union. The same Senate which guarded the purity of the Constitution and the honor of the Country at the last session of Congress, are still there to hold the arm of preservation over them, and consequently the disgraceful "Tyler Treaty" will not again be submitted to their dishonorable plot, they are now endeavoring to avoid and dodge them by a joint resolution. Now let us see how these strict constructionists are going to work, for the joint resolution seems to be the Democratic measure par excellence, and of their proceedings we choose to let the Hon. Albert Gallatin, one of the fathers of the Constitution and the honor of the Country. Here it is - read its sober truths, and ponder well the settings and doings of these open violators of the Constitution. Mr. Gallatin says:

That now at issue is simply this: In whom is the power of making treaties vested by the Constitution?

The United States have recognized the independence of Texas; and every compact between independent nations is a treaty.

The Constitution of the United States declares that "the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senate concur." This power is not given to Congress by any clause of the Constitution.

The intended joint resolution proposes that the treaty of annexation between the United States of America and the Republic of Texas, signed on the 12th day of April, 1844, (which treaty is recited verbatim in the resolution,) shall, by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, be declared the fundamental law of Union between the said United States and Texas, as soon as the supreme authority of the said Republic of Texas shall agree to the same.

The Senate had refused to give its consent to the said treaty, and the resolution declares, that it shall nevertheless be made by Congress a fundamental law binding the United States. It transfers to a majority of both House of Congress, with the approbation, the power of making treaties, which by the Constitution was expressly and exclusively vested in the President, with the consent of the two thirds of the Senate. It substitutes for a written Constitution, which distributes and defines powers, the supremacy, or, as it is called, the omnipotence of a British Parliament. The resolution is evidently a direct, and in its present shape an undisguised usurpation of power and violation of the Constitution.

It would not be difficult to show that it is not less at war with the spirit [sic] than with the letter of that sacred instrument; and that the provision which requires the consent of two thirds of the Senate was intended as a guaranty of the States' rights, and to protect the weaker against the abuse of the treaty-making power, if vested in a bare majority. But the case appears to me so clear, that I would fear to obscure that which is self evident, by adding any argument to the simple recital of the constitutional provision and of the proposed resolution.
Thursday, January 9, 1845 MG45i45p1c3 121 words

House of Representatives

Mr. Tibbatts, of Kentucky, wished to introduce by general consent, a proposition for the annexation of Texas.

Mr. Barnard objected, and Mr. Tibbatts gave notice that he would introduce his proposition on a subsequent day. --The Reporter could not, in the confusion, learn whether it is a bill or a resolution.

Mr. Belser gave notice that at some subsequent period he would introduce a series of resolutions for annexing Texas to the United States.

Mr. Huston offered a resolution to terminate all debate in Committee of the Whole on the bill 10 graduate and reduce the price of Public Lands--Ayes 49, nays 74.

Mr. Pratt reported a joint resolution in favor of a national monument to the memory of Washington.

Thursday, January 9, 1845 MG45i45p1c3 734 words

Friday January 3, 1845, House of Representatives

Mr. Phoenix, of New York, presented a memorial of the respectable society of Friends, in the State of New York, in opposition to the annexation of Texas, which, on his motion, the Clerk commenced reading. A part of the memorial was devoted to the subject of Slavery, and contained strong Abolition sentiments. --When the Clerk arrived at that part of it, Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, rose and objected to the further reading of the paper.

He said that by the courtesy of the House, Mr. Phoenix had been permitted to offer the memorial when the rules would have forbid it. This was done under the supposition that there was nothing offensive in them, which now turned out to be a most violent Abolition petition.

Mr. McClernard then moved to lay the memorial on the table, and on that motion the ayes and nays were ordered.

The vote on laying on the table stood years 87, nays 87--a tie.

The speaker then voted in the affirmative, and the memorial was therefore laid on the table.

Mr. Bailey, of Virginia, moved to suspend the rule for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole, on which motion ninety-seven gentlemen voted in the affirmative--the noes were not counted.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole and Mr. Hopkins of Virginia took the Chair.

The proposition to annex Texas was taken up, and Mr. Bailey being entitled to the floor, said he would yield it to any gentleman in the opposition who desire to address the Committee.

No one showing a disposition to speak, loud calls of “question, question, question,” were heard from the Whig side of the Hall.

The reading of the amendment to the main was then called for, and it was read.

Mr. Douglass then rose and stated that as no one appeared to be desirous of debating the question at the present time, he would move that the Committee rise.

Loud calls were again made for the question, when the reading of Mr. Douglass’ amendment to the amendment was called for, and it was read.
Mr. Rhett rose and requested Mr. Douglass to withdraw the preamble to his revolution and put his first resolution to the vote. That resolution embraced the simple preposition to annex Texas to the United States unconnected with any details. That course would bring the House to a test vote at once and would determine whether a majority were in favor of annexation in the abstract. He wished this point to be decided in the outset, and the details could easily be settled afterwards.

Mr. Douglass agreed to the suggestion of Mr. Rhett and withdrew the preamble to his resolution. The vote was then about to be put on the adoption of the first resolution, when;

Mr. J. R. Ingersoll, rose and stated that he was unwilling that the House should come to a decision on this question without a word being said in opposition.

This movement of Mr. J. R. Ingersoll disappointed the Whig members very much, who were anxious that the question should be put. It was, on the other hand a relief to the dominant party, who were evidently much embarrassed by the position in which they were placed and would have come up to a vote unprepared and with the greatest reluctance.

Mr. J. R. Ingersoll then proceeded to address the Committee in opposition to the measure. He was at so remote a point from the reporter as to prevent his remarks as to prevent his remarks from being distinctly heard. It is impossible therefore to give a synopsis of his remarks.

Mr. Payne succeeded Mr. Ingersoll, and contended for the general policy of annexing Texas to the Union. The leading argument advanced by him was that Texas was necessary to us for the purpose of preserving the integrity of the Union, and for its safety of defense in time of war. He advanced other positions and strenuously urged the expediency by the opponents of this measure, that it was a slave question and was to be resisted on that account. He became boisterous on this point, and before he got through his hour expired.

Mr. Winthrop, of Mass. , then got the floor and as here seemed to be a disposition to adjourn he moved that the Committee rise.

The motion was carried, and at 3 o’clock the House adjourned. [AMB]

Thursday, January 9, 1845 MG45i45p1c2 222 words

Twenty-Seventh Congress, Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot, Washington

Washington, Dec. 30, 1844

SENATE.

Among the memorials presented in the Senate this morning, were the following:

By Mr. Sturgeon, one from the western part of Pennsylvania, asking that the Pension laws may be extended so as to embrace the soldiers who fought under Harmer, St. Clair and Wayne.

By Mr. Buchanan, one from Pennsylvania, which embraces the subject of the Tariff, Texas, and the Naturalization Laws. The Tariff of ’42 is upheld, Texas to be annexed, and the Naturalization Laws to remain intact.

Thursday, Dec. 31, 1844

SENATE

Mr. Choate presented a memorial from the inhabitants of Northborough, Massachusetts, remonstrating against the Annexation of Texas.

Mr. Tappen presented a memorial from citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, asking a reduction of Postage and to abolish the Franking privilege.

Mr. Buchanan presented a memorial from the Society of Friends in Pensylvania [sic], protecting against the Annexation of Texas.

Mr. Haywood gave notice that on Monday next he would ask leave to move to take up the bill to provide for the annexation of Texas the United States.

House of Representatives

[See above: Thursday, January 9, 1845 MG45i45p1c3, House of Representatives]

Thursday, Jan’y. 2, 1845. SENATE.
Mr. Bates presented a remonstrance from Mendon, Massachusetts, against the Annexation of Texas.

Mr. Archer presented a petition from citizens of Vicksburg, Mississippi, asking a reform in the Naturalization Laws.

Letter to the Editor--Alex. Gaz.

The New York Evening Post, the organ of Van Burenism at the North, and the ablest Loco Foco paper in that quarter, is not at all disposed, to knuckle under, on the Texas question, or to suffer Gen. Jackson to force Annexation down the throats of the faithful. "Phely keep pestering Gen. Jackson," says the Post, "still on the Texas question, and, with the flame of life yet flickering in its socket, the brave and honest old man writes letters in favor of the annexation scheme. " And the Post goes on to say, "We yield to no man in admiration of the character of General Jackson, but we used to tell him in the palmist days of his popularity that he had his infirmities and committed his mistakes; and one of the saddest of his infirmities is the hurry he is in to add Texas to our Confederacy. We can easily imagine how Gen. Jackson is besieged--intrusion and importunity are too much the habit of our dear countrymen--besieged in the chamber to which ill health and the debility of old age have confined him; and we suggest to their sense of humanity that he has been worried enough about this affair, and should be allowed to pass his last moments in peace. " And in this strain this "Democratic" organ goes on to deplorently advise the Members of Congress to take time to pass the appropriation bills and go quickly home on the 4th of March, and allow the whole interval between March and December to pass over without the least apprehension that Texas will run away. If it be so important, as many pretend, for the welfare and prosperity of the two countries, that they should be under the same Federal Government, a little delay will not alter their interests or their inclinations. - Aix. Gaz.

Late and Important from Mexico--Santa Anna Defeated and Taken Prisoner

The Baltimore American of yesterday brings an extract from the New Orleans Tropic in relation to the intestine war in Mexico. The substance of the news is, that Santa Anna, after losing more than two thousand of his army by desertion, was met on the plains of Affan by Generals Bravo and Parades, with three thousand men under their command, and after a desperate battle the army of Santa Anna was totally routed, and himself captured while trying to make his escape. Five hundred men were reported to be killed in the battle.

Annexation of Texas

The joint resolutions for the annexation of Texas, according to a population submitted by Milton Brown, of Tenn, have passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 120 to 98. Their fate in the Senate is doubtful, and if they should succeed there, it is yet doubtful whether Texas would accede to the proposed terms.

We subjoin a copy of the resolutions, that our readers may see their provisions:

Joint Resolution

[Note: the full text of House Resolution No. 46 is available online via the Library of Congress, American Memory, Law Making Home, Bills and Resolutions at http://memory.loc.gov/ammem/ammlaw/lwhbsb.html. To view the resolution click on "Browse House Bills and Resolutions" then 29th Congress, Page Turner, and enter 46 in the search box. ]

Declaring the terms on which Congress will admit Texas into the Union as a State:

Resolved, &c. That Congress doth consent that the territory properly included within and rightfully belonging to the republic of Texas, may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, with a republican form of government to be adopted by the people of said republic by deputies in convention assembled, with the consent of the existing government, in order that the same may be admitted as one of the States of this Union.

Sec. 2. and be it further resolved, that the foregoing consent of Congress is given upon the following conditions, and with the following guarantees to wit:

First. Said State to be formed, subject to the adjustment by this government of all questions of boundary that may arise with other Governments; and the constitution thereof, with the proper evidence of its adoption by the people of the said Republic of Texas, shall be transmitted to the President of the United States, to be laid before Congress for its final action, on or before the first day of January, 1840.

Second. Said State, when admitted into the Union, after ceding to the United States all mines, salt lakes and springs, and also all public edifiers, fortifications, barracks, ports and harbours, navy and navy-yards, docks, magazines, arms, armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defense belonging to said republic of Texas, shall retain all the public funds, debts, taxes, and dues of every kind which may belong to, or be due and owing said republic; and shall also retain all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits, to be applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities, to be disposed of as said State may direct; but in no event are said debts and liabilities to become a charge upon the Government of the United States.

Third. New States, of convenient size, and having sufficient population, may hereafter, by the consent of said State, be formed out of the territory thereof, which shall be entitled to admission under the provisions of the federal constitution. --And such States as may be formed out of that portion of said territory lying south of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude, commonly known as the Missouri compromise line, shall be admitted into the union, with or without slavery, as the people of each state asking admission may desire.

And in such State or States, as shall be formed out of said territory, north of said Missouri Compromise Line, Slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crime, shall be prohibited.

[AMB]

Thursday, January 30, 1845 MG45i47p3c1 847 words

Legislative Correspondence, Richmond, January 27, 1845, To the Editor of the Gazette:

The proceedings, in relation to the Senatorial Election you will find annexed. The brief narrative is this: On the 16th, a Resolution was adopted in the House designating Wednesday the 22nd for the Election. At that time there were absent or sick several members of the Whig Party, some of whom, it was expected, would be in their seats at the appointed time. Hence it was supposed that, on that day, the House would be as full as could reasonably be anticipated during the remainder of the Session. Some of the other Party were also absent, who, it was presumed, would return by the 22nd.

The Senate declined to act upon the Joint Resolution until the morning of Wednesday the 22nd, when, having met at the unusual hour of 10, it was adopted.

It is well understood, here, and the fact of the delay, on the part of the Senate, justifie the conclusion, that the Resolution was agreed to because the Loco-Foco Party found itself, on the 22nd, in an accidental majority, on joint ballot.

Two Whig Members were sick--Mr. Campbell of the Senate, who has since died, and Mr. Rob bins of the House--and another, Mr. Helm, was absent, in consequence of severe illness in his family. On the other hand, but one Member of the opposite Party, Mr. Street, was absent.

In this condition of things, the House refused to proceed to an election, which would not have resulted in the selection of a man, who was the choice of the majority of the Legislature.

An attempt will, doubtless, be made to turn the action of the House to some account in favor of our opponents, if the Senate shall, hereafter, refuse to proceed to the Election. Indeed, already, capital has been sought to be made of it.

The position of the Whigs of the Legislature is this--They desire as full a vote, as possible, of both Parties. When the Election shall take place, provided it be at this Session and the object of a fair vote be accomplished, is a subordinate question. If either Party, however, shall not be ready during the Session, whether Whig or Loco-Foco, and whether a Whig or a Loco-Foco Senator shall be elected, the Whig Party of the Legislature of Virginia will insist upon the discharge of the high Constitutional obligation, that binds them and their opponents to elect a Senator before the Body shall
A Wilt of Election, I presume, will issue to supply the place of Senator Campbell, dec’d.

The terms of the arrangement for the purchase, by the B. & O.R.R. Company, of the Winchester Road, are as follows: the debts of the Company, assumed not to exceed $81,000, exclusive of that due to the State, to be provided for—an amount of 16,000 to be paid [. . . ]; Company secured ($11,140 of that amount) by mortgage upon the Road and the other property included in the mortgage at present held by the State—the amount of interest on the floating debt above of $81,000 (about $4,861) to be deducted from the said annuity leaving $11,140—a sum equal to an annual interest of 2½ per cent on the stock held by the State and individuals and on the principal and interest of the loan of the State to the Company—The Baltimore Company to have authority to change the location of the Road, as to leave the present line at a point about half a mile west of Halltown and intersect the Baltimore Road, at or near Cabin Run, or in some other manner at their option, so as not to increase the distance between Harper’s Ferry and Winchester by the present line. The arrangement not to be binding, until sanctioned by Virginia and Maryland, and upon the State of Virginia granting the Baltimore Company the Right of Way to a point on the Ohio River not lower than the mouth of the Little Kanawha, according to the original charter in 1827.

The Committee of Finance recommend a reduction of Taxes—20 per cent on the lands, lots, slaves and horses—50 per cent on clocks—five dollars on the lowest grade of merchants, &c. The subject is undergoing discussion, now, in the House. They estimate the probable balance in the Treasury, on the first of October, 1846, if no reduction should be made in the taxes now, at $203,447 84. It is insisted by many, that the taxes should not be reduced, but that the taxes should be thrown into the sinking fund, under provisions of the Act of March 1835, for the purpose of gradually extinguishing the public debt. The following is a summary of the public debt—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Aggregate</th>
<th>$7,360,932.24</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Of which there is stock under the Control of</td>
<td>$1,392,884.88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the Legislature, (a nominal debt)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Actual outstanding debt,</td>
<td>$5968,047.36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liabilities,</td>
<td>$1,400,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total debt and liabilities,</td>
<td>$7,368,047.36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funds and resources of every character,</td>
<td>$11,288,953.65</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of which the funds, productive, but not, at</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>once, available to an amount sufficient to</td>
<td>$6,301,415.03</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pay the actual outstanding debt, are not down at</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

February

MG45v45n49p2c1 February 6, 1845: Canada and Texas

A light breeze sprung up in the Senate yesterday upon the presentation, by one of the Senators from Michigan, of a petition for the annexation of the Canadas to the United States. The debate was of sufficient interest to be fully reported; and, not having room for it to-day, we shall aim at its publication in our next. – Nat. Int. February 4. [LA]

MG45v45n49p2c1 February 6, 1845: Oregon

The bill, which occupied several days of the sittings of the House of Representatives last week, for the establishment of a Territorial Government in Oregon, yesterday pass the House of Representatives by a large majority; after being amended, however, so as to require due notice to be given to Great Britain of the termination of the joint occupation, and the bill should not take effect until the expiration of the year after that notice, in any way to conflict with our treaty engagements in reference to this subject. –Nat. Int. Feb. 4. [LA]

MG45v45n49p2c2 February 6, 1845: Summary of Legislative Intelligence, House of Delegates
Texas Resolutions have been amended in the House. While they assert the expediency of immediate annexation, our Senators are expressly, left at liberty to vote against the joint Resolutions now before the Senate, if they shall think that mode of annexation unconstitutional. This was all we could accomplish – there being a decided leaning to Texas in the House. The Whigs voted for the amendment and the Loco Focos against it. [LA]

Mr. Bowden moved to take up the resolution from the Senate, for the speedy annexation of Texas. [LA]

A petition was yesterday presented in the House of Representatives by Mr. Severance, from a number of respectable citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the "re-annexation" of the province of New Brunswick to the United States. – Nat. Int. February 4. [LA]

It is stated that Dr. Anson Jones, the recently elected President of Texas, is a native of Berkshire, Mass. [LA]

A letter from a distinguished source in Washington says: “Texas, I think, is dead for this session.” – Balt Pat. [LA]

The resolution from the Senate for the speedy annexation of Texas came up as the order to the day. Mr. Broadus, of Caroline, proposed to amend the resolution as follows:

That the annexation of Texas to the U. States ought to be effected at the earliest period that may be practicable consistent with the obligations of the Constitution, the internal peace and tranquility of the country and the faith and honor of the nation.

Mr. Daniel, of R.C. moved the following substitute:

Resolved, By the General Assembly that it is expedient to re-acquire by treaty the country west of the Sabine ceded by the United States to Spain by the treaty of 22d Feb’y 1819, when it can be done upon just and reasonable terms, and consistently with the good faith and honor of the nation.

Mr. Toler offered the following amendment:

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the annexation of Texas to the U. States be effected at the earliest period that may be possible consistent with the permanent welfare Virginia, the obligations of the Constitution, the preservation of the internal peace of the union, and the faith and honor of the country; and that the General Assembly, reposing active confidence in the abilities and patriotism of the Senators of Virginia rely upon them faithfully to discharge all of their obligations to the State and to the Union upon this question.

Mr. Wallace would decline voting on these resolutions, not believing that this Assembly has any business whatever with the subject. We had Federal agents – whose duty is was to act upon this subject; and to them he would leave it.

Mr. Daniel, with the consent of the House, withdrew his proposition, and again offered it as an independent proposition.

Mr. Edmunds of H. spoke at large in favor of annexation and was replied to by Mr. Taylor if N.B.
The Texas debate is going on in the Senate with considerable spirit, and some of the first intellects in the Senate of both parties are engaged in it. – Gov. Morehead of Kentucky lead off in opposition to the "Joint Resolution," passed by the House of Representatives, in a speech of distinguished ability which elicited the encomiums of friends and foes. He opposed the annexation of Texas on constitutional grounds, but declared that he could not consent to annexation upon any terms unless the consent of Mexico was given. He also opposed the annexing of foreign territory to the Union by a bare majority. He thought this step was taken to perpetuate Slavery, which he denied the power in Congress to do. He also urged another objection to the Resolution of the House – that it robbed Texas of all her resources, and left her to hopeless repudiation. The Hon. James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, followed Mr. Morehead in favor of the "Joint Resolution" of the House. He was in favor of annexing Texas first, and then settling all the difficulties connected with annexation. Texas, he said, had asked in 1837, and in 1844, and now in 1845, to come into the Union. The Bill before the Senate for her admission was, in his view, the very best that could be adopted. He thought the Bill would meet the objection urged against the Tyler Treaty, that it did not have the concurrence of Congress. Mr. B. relied solely upon the power to admit new States, and regarded that as entirely sufficient. He was opposed to Slavery, but supported it because the Constitution tolerated it. – He denounced the Abolitionists in unmeasured terms as the enemies of the Slave and mankind. Annexation was, in his view, beneficial to the Country, to its trade, to its commerce, to a proper watchfulness of England, &c. He complimented Mr. Morehead very highly for his able speech delivered the day before. Our distinguished Senator, the Hon. Wm. C. Rives, followed Mr. Buchanan – he regarded the "Joint Resolution" of the House as in substance a treaty. He could not therefore support the immediate Bill before the Senate – he denied the power in Congress to do. He warmly protested against the power now assumed by the two Houses of Congress – as violative of the law and Constitution of the Union. We might get Texas (he said) but it would loosen some of the strongest cords of Union that now hold the States together. It was impious to ask Heaven to sanction and bless a country that had been enlarged by a violation of the laws and Constitution of the land. Heaven might be invoked to bless what was right and just, but never what was wrong. If Congress could annex Texas to the Union, it could strike Texas from the Union, and already there were cries of a repeal of the Union if the act should be attempted. He warned the Slave-holding States to be careful how they admitted the right of Congress to legislate upon one of their institutions which the bill before the Senate did. The Hon. Mr. Woodbury followed Mr. Rives in an excited and able speech in favour of the bill, going over the grounds pretty much which had been traveled by Mr. Buchanan. So far, the debate has been very able on both sides, and promises to continue in interest. – Mr. Choate of Massachusetts has the
Mr. Witcher, on the part of the Select Committee to whom the resolutions in relation to the annexation of Texas were referred, reported that the Committee had been unable to come to any agreement, and asked that they be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, which was agreed to.

Mr. Edmunds of H., moved to take up and consider the resolutions in relation to the annexation of Texas.

The Senate’s resolution reads:

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the annexation of Texas to the United States should be effected with no further delay than may be necessary for the accomplishment of that object, by the constituted authorities of the two countries.

Mr. Bowers understood that Mr. Witcher intended to move an amendment, and he wished to await it, before he offered his.

Mr. Witcher said that his offering an amendment would depend on circumstances. At present he should not.

Mr. Preston hoped the Whigs would make no amendments to the Senate's resolutions. They could consistently support that resolution. It referred them to the "constituted authorities of the two countries."

Mr. Goodson manifested some oppugnation to the Senate’s resolution, without declaring his opposition.

Mr. Witcher re-urged the recommendations of Mr. Preston: - that the Whigs should offer no amendments to the Senate’s resolution. Let the Whigs stand still – if the other side make any charge, we would be prepared to meet it.

Mr. Stovall thought it must be manifest that the Senate’s resolution ought to be modified. Since its passage, the joint resolution had passed the House of Representatives, and it was proper to express our opinions on that.

Mr. Edmunds of H., believed that he could acquiesce in the Senate’s resolution; and leave our Senators to put the proper construction upon it. (“Agreed,” by Mr. Witcher.)

Mr. Lanier gave his views against the constitutionality of annexation by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. Cootes called for the ayes and noes.

Mr. Jackson said as he could not vote (being tied off) he hoped the vote would now be taken, and he called the previous question. He would have voted with great pleasure in the negative. The 1st resolution was adopted as follows: - Ayes 89, Noes 32.

The 2d resolution of the Senate, requiring the 1st resolution to be communicated to our Senators, &c. then came up.

Mr. Gordon moved a substitute for the 2d resolution of the Senate, as follows:

That the admission of Texas on the conditions and guarantee set forth in the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 25th Jan’y ’45, and sent to the Senate for its concurrence, in the opinion of the General Assembly are [is] just and proper, and will be approved by the people.

Mr. Taylor of N. B. called for the reading of the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. Witcher knew that the gentlemen on the other side were not content with their own proposition, and this further amendment did not surprise him. M. W. said that the proposition, endorsing the resolution of the House of Representatives, raised a novel question in this State. Its object is to act upon our Senators – to require them to perjure themselves or surrender their seats. Mr. W. wished to know of his political friends, if they were prepared for this – if those who sent them here expected them to take any such ground. He believed that a majority of the people of Virginia were in favor of annexation; but they wished it to be effected without any violation of the Constitution – such as would be accomplished by this mode of action. Mr. Witcher declared that for himself he was opposed to the acquisition of Texas, on account of the mode by which it was proposed, and the motives through which it had been urged. Some of his objections have been modified recently in some degree by the compromise of the slavery question, in the joint resolution of the House of Representatives. But still he was not prepared for it; he apprehended great danger and disquiet to the confederacy form it. Mr. W. again adverted to the motive of this movement: It was a hit at our Senators, and he appealed to the Whigs to know, whether they would aid their adversaries in such an object. But even if this amendment were carried by a small majority here, would it receive and ought it to receive any respect at Washington? He thought it ought not. The proposition involved in the joint resolution was novel to the people – it had never been discussed before them, and they had made up no opinion on it – and a small vote here undertaking to give the popular voice would be entitled to no weight. Mr. W. concluded by offering a substitute for Mr. Gordon’s which left out of view the constitutional question – leaving that to our Senators.

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Virginia, That it is their deliberate opinion that a large majority of the people of Virginia desire the Immediate Annexation of Texas to the U. States by any lawful and constitutional mode. And that the conditions and guarantees set forth in the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives, and sent to the Senate of the U.S. for its concurrence, in the opinion of this General Assembly, are just and proper and will be approved by the people. This General Assembly however forbearing to express any opinion as to the constitutionality of Annexation by the mode of a joint resolution of the two houses of Congress.

Messrs. Gordon and Bowden opposed, and Messrs. Cocke, Broadus, of Car. , and Taylor, of N. B. , supported Mr. Witcher’s substitute.

Mr. Marshall, of F. , moved the indefinite postponement of the whole. He was impelled by a high sense of duty to make this motion. This was a great National question, the decision of which properly belonged to our National representatives. For this reason, he would dismiss the subject. For another reason he was in favor of it. The session was very far advanced, and it was high time that the business of the State was attended to. – Mr. Marshall called the ayes and noes.

Mr. Gordon spoke farther in support of his amendment.

Mr. Lanier replied – and when he concluded the vote was taken upon the adoption of Mr. Witcher’s substitute; wich resulted, ayes 59, noes 58. [LA]

---

MG45v45n51p3c1 February 20, 1845 Mexico. Confirmation of the Capture of Santa Anna

The schr. Water Witch, which sailed from Tampico on the 26th ult. , arrived last evening with papers up to the 22d ult. , from Vera Cruz. The Minister of Exterior Relations announced to Congress on the 17th January, the capture of Santa Anna.

(Official Note.)

Head Quarters of Constitutional Militia.
At Jico, half past 9 o’clock

His Excellency Don Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna has just been brought in by four of our men, and is now in our power. I am in too much haste to write the particulars before tomorrow.

Pedro Llera

To His Excellency the Minister of Exterior Relations.
Jalapa, 16th January

The Minister further informs the Government that Santa Anna would be conducted to the fortress of Perote to await the decision of the Government.

It appears that Santa Anna committed the most outrageous barbarities on the inhabitants of Puebla, killing, pillaging and burning until he was met by the Constitutional army, which had defeated him. His army, before he committed depredations amounting to 12,000 men, being disgusted at his conduct, abandoned their ranks and joined the Constitutional troops.

The conflict, however, was not without bloodshed, and several hundred were reported as killed on both sides.

When Santa Anna was taken he had scarcely a friend to accompany him.

Gen. Ampudia, governor of Tobasco, was superseded by Martinez and ordered to Vera Cruz. He exonerates himself of having done any thing illegal or of resisting the popular will, and throws all the blame on Santa Anna’s orders.

Government had ordered all the properties of Santa to be seized and confiscated.

The general belief was that Santa Anna would be condemned by the Government and executed.

Public tranquility was re-established throughout Mexico, and public festivals had been ordered throughout the Republic to celebrate the glorious event of the downfall of the tyrant Santa Anna.
Government has issued orders for the disbandment of the army, and invites the absent to return and resume their occupations.

A passenger who came in the Water Witch reports that Santa Anna left Perote, under a strong escort for the City of Mexico, on the 20th ult. – Balt. Amer. [LA]

The Texas debate at our last dates was still progressing with great spirit. The most able Senators on both sides have participated in the debate and the Senate Chamber has been daily crowded to overflowing by attentive and excited listeners. We understand the vote was to have been taken yesterday (Wednesday) on the “Joint Resolution” of the House of Representatives, and the result considered exceedingly doubtful. The friends of Annexation seem to be sanguine of success as they are now certain of the vote of three Whig Senators – Henderson of Mississippi, Merrick of Maryland, and Johnson of Louisiana. The Richmond Enquirer, and other leading Texas Journals, are bespattering Mr. Merrick with as much praise for his “able and eloquent speech”(!) as they are belaboring Mr. Rives for his “weak and wishawashy argument” against annexation. It is a great crime in the eyes of the friends of annexation, for Mr. Rives to speak and vote against the measure, because Virginia has declared in favor of it – but a virtue in Mr. Merrick to speak and vote in favor of it, when Maryland has declared against it in equally as emphatic a manner. We yet hope the law and Constitution of our blessed Union will find safety in that august body of wisdom and statesmanship, and that the “Joint Resolution” of the House will be defeated. [LA]

In the Texas debate in the Assembly a few days ago, Gen. Fonda, of Montgomery county, avowed himself in favor of “immediate annexation,” and expressed an entire confidence that his constituents agreed with him in this opinion. On Monday last the town elections in Montgomery county were held, and for the first time, in we know not how many years, the Whigs have obtained a majority in the Board of Supervisors, carrying seven towns out of ten! The People will speak out on this question, even thought the Legislature should continue to be dumb. –Albany Evening Journal. [LA]

THE ANNEXATION OF TEXAS TO THE UNITED STATES

This triumph was announced and, welcomed by the firing of one hundred guns from Capitol Hill. The spirit of Progressive Democracy now aims at universal empire, and the Anglo Saxon is proclaimed by them Emperor of the world. Where is this lust after territory now to cease?--the “area of freedom” will soon begin to ask for more elbow-room, and then Canada, Mexico, Cuba and California must be ours. The same power which annexed Texas has the right to take possession of all the others. That cursed spirit of idleness which is so prevalent now-a-days, and which refuses to sustain its lazy body by honest industry, is constantly in hot pursuit of office, and the legions are annually increasing, and hence the patriotic desire (!) to “extend the area of freedom,” that a wider range may be made for the establishment of new offices, and more incumbents.

That mighty and fearful arm which threatens to destroy the liberties of the people of this republic is daily becoming more strong--the Executive power of the Government now adays with almost unlimited power--the independence of the Legislature is surrendered into its hands, and the powers of our National Judiciary prostrated at its feet. Where is that spirit of State’s Rights Republicanism which resisted the attempted encroachments of Jackson? Ah! what a shaking there ought to be among the “marrowless shin bones” of the chivalry of the South,--those peculiar baters of consolidation and advocates of a strict construction of the Constitution. The principles of ’98--we wonder who is to preach the funeral sermon over them--the Virginia Democracy certainly ought to be the chief mourners, and the land jobbers and Texas scrip holders the grave diggers and pall bearers.

We think Texas will not refuse to accept the proffered Annexation, and after the arrangements are all concluded the President of the United States will order and command Congress to confirm the negotiations by a “Joint Resolution. “ Will the people submit quietly to this open violation of their Constitution?--we doubt it. Will the Texans accept annexation upon such terms, when the same power which annexed her to the Union by a bare majority of two votes, may strike her again from the Union at their pleasure?--she ought not. But that our readers may see the “joint Resolution” of Congress and the addition of Mr. Benton’s Bill as an amendment, we annex them below. We shall take occasion to refer again to this subject. The vote in the Senate stood Ayes 27 Noes 25: in the House of Representatives, Ayes 132, Noes 76. [MLD]
JOINT RESOLUTION FOR ANNEXING TEXAS TO THE U. STATES

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That Congress doth consent the territory properly included within, and rightfully belonging to the Republic of Texas, may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, with a republican form of government, to be adopted by the people of said republic, by deputies in convention assembled, with the consent of the existing government, in order that the same may be admitted as one of the States of this Union.

Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That the foregoing consent of Congress is given upon the following conditions, and with the following guarantees, to wit:

First, Said State to be formed, subject to the adjustment by this government of all questions of boundary that may arise with other governments; and the constitution thereof, with the proper evidence of its adoption by the people of said Republic of Texas, shall be transmitted to the President of the United States, to be laid before Congress for its final action, on or before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

Second, Said State, when admitted into the Union, after ceding to the United States, all public edifices, fortifications, barracks, ports and harbors, navy and navy-yards, docks, magazines, arms, armaments, and all other property and means pertaining to the public defense belonging to the said Republic of Texas, shall retain all the public funds, debts, taxes, and dues of every kind, which may belong to or be due and owning to said Republic of Texas; and shall also retain all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits, to be applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities of said Republic of Texas, and the residue of said lands, after discharging said debts and liabilities, to be disposed of as State may direct; but in no event are said debts and liabilities to become a charge upon the Government of the United States.

Third, New States, of convenient size, not exceeding four in number, in addition to said State of Texas, and having sufficient population, may hereafter, by the consent of the said State, be formed out of the territory thereof, which shall be entitled to admission under the provisions of the federal constitution. And as such States as may be formed out of that portion of said territory lying south of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude, commonly known as the Missouri compromise line, shall be admitted to the Union with or without slavery, as the people of each State asking permission may desire."

In the Senate, on Thursday night, Mr. Walker moved to amend the joint resolution by adding thereto the following:

And be it further resolved, That if the President of the United States shall in his judgment and discretion deem it most advisable, instead of proceeding to submit the foregoing resolution of the Republic of Texas, as an overture on the part of the United States for admission, to negotiate with the Republic; then,

"Be it Resolved, That a State, to be formed out of the present Republic of Texas, with suitable extent and boundaries, and with two representatives in Congress, until the next appointment of representation, shall be admitted into the Union, by virtue of this act, on an equal footing with the existing States as soon as the terms and conditions of such admission, and the cession of the remaining Texan territory to the United States be agreed upon by the Governments of Texas and the United States.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to defray the expenses of missions and negotiations, to agree upon the terms of said admission and cession, either by treaty to be submitted to the Senate, or by articles to be submitted to the two houses of Congress, as the President may direct. " [MLD]

THE MEANING

We clip the following extract from the editorial comments of the last Richmond Enquirer on the Inaugural Address of President Polk. The Richmond Junto,” that is the “Old Hunker” division of them, are surely graveled at the defeat of Mr. Ritchie's pet, Mr. Andrew Stephenson, for the Premiership, and if possible they will pick a quarrel with Mr. Polk about it, is some shape or other. --Mr. Ritchie says:--

"There is one other subject of peculiar importance, which the president touches in his excellent Address. He is right in supposing, that one great difficulty in the practical Administration of the Government would arise in the adjustment of the Tariff. It will indeed constitute the great battle ground between the two parties of the country.

The Address lays down very clearly the general principles which may be expected to regulate his course on this important question. But there is one part of it, upon which we are altogether prepared to express at this moment a decided opinion. It is that in which he speaks of the discrimination which he may desire to be made within the range of the Revenue principle.

If the president means that, to the whole amount of the revenue to be raised, a discrimination may be made with an eye to the protection of home industry, then we might be compelled to dissent from the proposition. If on the contrary, he only means that the interests of the country and its industry indiscriminately are to derive all the incidental protection, which the required amount of duties would afford upon the principles of the Compromise Act, discriminating with an eye to revenue, then we concur with the Inaugural Address, and think that it will be backed by the great body of the President’s warm Southern friends. Our opinions on this subject have been too often and too strongly disclosed, to render it necessary to repeat them here. ” [MLD]

---

Thursday, March 20, 1845 MG45i3p2c7 72 words

FROM MEXICO

Mexican papers to the 12th February state that SANTA ANNA was to be tried on the 24th of that month by the Congress, sitting as a jury; and if he did not prefer to be present before the jury, but sent a written defense, the trial was to take place sooner. He was still in prison at Perote, and appeared to have full liberty to communicate by letter with whomsoever he pleased. [MLD]

---

Thursday, March 27, 1845 MG45i4p1c4 1082 words

A SKETCH OF SANTA ANA

HIS FORTUNES WITHIN A FEW YEARS

The recent revolution in Mexico, together with the overwhelming changes in the fortunes of Santa Ana, have imparted fresh interest to the life of a man, whose career has been so extraordinary; and who but the other day--"the observed of all observers"--with the destinies of a nation in his hands, is now, it may be presumed, little better than a fugitive and an outlaw. The more immediate events in his history, have been full of stirring excitement. His capture by the Texians, his release, his return to Mexico in an American National vessel, his overthrow by Gen. Almonte, his re-election as President, his loss of a leg, in defense of Vera Cruz, his new movements for the re-conquest of Texas, the death of his wife, his speedy marriage to another, the late popular outbreak, his tyrannical conduct towards the Mexican Congress, the fidelity to him of a large body of followers, the pertinacity, of his resistance, his repeated attacks on Puebla, and finally, if the last accounts be true, his negotiation for surrender.

The conduct of his countrymen in relation to his amputated leg, must be pronounced brutal and disgraceful, and will long be remembered as a cowardly manifestation of popular fury. Brantz Mayer, in his interesting work on Mexico, gives an account of the burial of this leg. He arrived at the city gates just after sunrise, as they commenced firing in honor of the day, which was to be celebrated by an entombment of the remains of the shattered limb. The principal streets were covered with an awning; the military were out in their finery; the officers of government mingled in the procession; and the limb of the President, cut off in 1838, afterwards burned at Vera Cruz, was disinterred and bought to the capital in 1842, laid in a crystal vase, borne to the cemetery of Santa Paula, where it was deposited in the monument erected to receive it, by the command of the General of the Mexican Army. A solemn eulogium on the President was then pronounced by a distinguished Mexican, and the ceremonies in honor of the precious relic were concluded.

What a contrast have recent events presented! The leg has been torn from its place of repose, and kicked about the streets! A statue of Santa Ana, which had been placed on a beautiful column, has been thrown down and trampled upon.

A writer in the New Orleans Tropic, who was a witness to the Revolution in the city of Mexico, speaks of the Assembly of people in front of the Piazza.--"Shouts of vivas" (he says) from twice ten thousand voices rent the air, clenched and uplifted hands and gesticulations of the most determined character indicated the deep seated enthusiasm of the vast multitude. It was indeed a tremendous spectacle. I witnessed many men so impressed and affected at the sight that the tears were streaming down their faces. --It was a motley scene. The Mexican gentleman, the merchant, the lepero, in his many colored clothing, the officer in his gorgeous regimentals, soldiery, crowds of young men, women, and boys all combined to furnish a spectacle which those who witnessed it and the intense enthusiasm which appeared to burn in every one, I will never forget.

But a few months before, Santa Ana visited the theatre in his splendid state carriage, encompassed by other carriages, and followed by about seventy lancers. --Two rows of grenadiers were stationed the whole length of the entrance to the theatre, making a lane for the General-in-chief to pass. There were hardly any under six feet--fine looking men.

The theatre outside was brilliantly illuminated; splendid transparencies with the inscriptions "patron of this edifice," "Hero of Tampico," "Hero of Vera Cruz," "Siempre Vencedor"--always a Conqueror--these and similar brilliancies formed a dazzling spectacle. But the transparency that towered above the rest, was a full length portrait of Santa Ana... crowned by laurel by the genius of Victory, who was seen hovering over his head.

This was recently torn down by the mob, and converted into a kind of broom with which the streets are swept.

Mr. Mayer, in his work already quoted from, describes Santa Ana as about six feet high, well made and of graceful bearing, and stamping along on an old fashioned wooden peg, having rejected as uncomfortable, all the mock legs with patent springs, that had been presented to him. His dress on all public occasions was that of a high officer of the army, and his breast was covered with richly gemmed decorations. “His brow,” (we here quote form Mr. Mayer’s description, written in 1842) “shaded with black hair somewhat sprinkled with gray, is by no means lofty, but narrow and smooth. His head, although rather small, and too long for its breadth has a marked and boldly defined outline, indicating talent and resolution. His nose is straight and well shaped, and brows knit in a line over close and brilliant eyes, which are said to lash with life, when reused to passion. His complexion is dark and sallow and his temperament evidently bilious. His mouth is the most remarkable feature. Its prominent expression, when at rest, is that of mingled pain and anxiety. In perfect repose, you would think him looking on a dying friend, with whose sufferings he was deeply but helplessly sympathizing. There is no vindictiveness, ferocity or ill temper in his expression. ”

In another part of his work Mr. Mayer says:--“As we passed the front of the National Palace, from out of its main portal dashed fifty gaily caparisoned hussars, followed by a coach richly decked with crimsoned velvet and gold, drawn by four white horses, and driven by a Yankee coachman. Behind these dashed fifty more hussars; while at the side of the coach, six aids reined in their spirited charges. There is but one person in the vehicle. His dress is that of a General of Division, with red facings and gold embroideries. He wears a number of decorations around his neck, while a medal blazing with diamonds, voted to him by the nation, rests on his bosom. His sword handle is studded with diamonds, and his hand rests on a diamond headed cane. --He is uncovered, and as he passes bows gracefully to your salutation, you recognize the President of the Republic. “--Such was Santa Ana only a year or two ago. --Phil. Inq. [MLD]

Thursday, March 27, 1845 MG45i4p1c7

WHIG ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA

WHIG LEGISLATIVE MEETING

At a meeting of the Whig members of the General Assembly, held on Monday evening, Feb. 17th, 1845, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

“Resolved, That the resolution adopted by the Democratic Legislative convention, a few days since, in which it is asserted without qualification, that the conduct of the Whig party in the House of Delegates of Virginia, in reference to the annexation of Texas to the Union, was dictated by a COVERT DESTEN TO DEFEAT THE MEASURE,’ considering the relation of its authors to those whom they have thus assailed, is highly indelicate, and the imputation is indignantly repelled as a wanton Calumny. ”

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Robert C. Standard, Wm. Ballard Preston, Richard H. Toler, Allen T. Caperton, E. P. Bitts, and John S. Gallaher, was appointed to prepare a brief statement setting forth the position and action of the Whig party, during the session, on the Texas question, on the Senatorial election, on the election of Councillor, and in relation to the reception of the Land Money--to report to an adjourned meeting to be held on Wednesday evening the 19th instant.

V.W. SOUTHALL, Chm.

R.H.Toler, J.S. Gallaher, Sec.

At an adjourned meeting of the Whig members, held on Wednesday evening, the 19th instant, the Committee appointed to report statement in reference to the action of the Whig party, on the several matters referred to it, made a report, which, being adopted, was ordered to be published, in connection with the foregoing resolution.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Connected with the action of the General Assembly, during its late Session, on several Questions, addressed to the People of Virginia.

The Whig members of the Legislature of Virginia, on the eve of separating, and of returning to their constituents, deem it due alike to themselves and to those whom they have had the honor to represent to lay before them a brief but circumstantial statement of facts, connected with the action of that body, during its recent session, upon the several topics hereafter adverted to. [MLD]
THE TEXAS QUESTION

About the middle of January, the following resolution, adopted by a majority of the Senate, was communicated to the House of Delegates.

"Resolved by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the annexation of Texas to the United States should be affected with no further delay than may be necessary for the accomplishment of that object by the constituted authorities of the two countries.

This resolution was made the order of the day in the House of Delegates on the 29th of January, when Mr. Toler offered the following as a substituted therefore:

"Resolved by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the annexation of Texas to the United States ought to be affected at the earliest period that may be practicable consistently with the permanent welfare of Virginia, the obligations of the constitution, the preservation of the internal peace of the Union and the faith and honour of the country; and that this General Assembly, reposing entire confidence in the ability and patriotism of the Senators of Virginia, rely upon them faithfully to discharge all their obligations to the State and to the Union upon this question.

And M. Bowden submitted the following amendment:

"All of which in the opinion of this General Assembly can be properly accomplished by the Senate of the United States passing the joint resolution which has passed the House of Representatives.

The Senate’s resolutions with the pending amendments, were again taken up on the 31st of January, in the House of Delegates; whereupon, a motion was made by Mr. Witcher to refer them to a Select Committee, which was agreed to; and committee was accordingly constituted, consisting of an equal number of both political parties.

In asking for this committee, the avowed object of the moyer and of those who supported the proposition was a compromise, if possible, between the conflicting views of the two parties, and the suggestion, of a resolution which might receive a vote approaching as nearly as possible to unanimity, and which, it was argued, would for that reason carry with it greater moral weight, and exert a more powerful influence upon public sentiment, as well as upon our Senators, upon whom it was designed more directly to operate, than could possibly attach to a resolution adopted, if adopted at all, by a strictly party vote, and by a bare majority--Does a proposition of thin conciliatory character, proceeding from such a motive, wear the semblance of a design, either open or 'covert,' to defeat the annexation of Texas to the United States, by a mode deemed to be constitutional, and upon terms regarded as just and proper? But our purpose is to narrate facts rather than to comment upon them, satisfied as we are, that that narration will carry a lucid and irresistible commentary on its face.

The committee assembled forthwith, and discussed the proposition submitted to its consideration, in several successive committee proposed as the basis of action, a resolution, in substance the same as that which was ultimately adopted by the House. To that proposition the only objection urged was that, while approving of the terms and conditions of the joint resolution providing for the admission of Texas into the Union, which had received the sanction of the House of Representatives, pretermitted, us it was intended to do, the constitutionality of that resolution--it being obvious that unless the constitutional question should be thus pretermitted, this avowed purpose for which the committee had been appointed to wit: the procurement of something like unanimity in the action of the Legislature, would be frustrated. But out opponents would be content with nothing less than the adoption of a resolution which would cover this debatable ground, either in express terms or by inevitable inference. The committee, therefore, dissolved, without concurring in say proposition, and reported that act to the House.

The consideration of the Senate’s resolution with the amendments thereto proposed by Messrs. Toler and Bowden, was thereupon resumed; but, before any vote was taken, these gentlemen asked and obtained leave each to withdraw his amendment; and the question then recurred upon the Senate’s resolution as above quoted, which was adopted by the decisive vote of 89 to 31. Of the 89 affirmative votes 34 were Whigs who thus indicated their willingness to place the subject on the precise footing which their political opponents in the Senate had originally desired. In the interval however, between the adoption of the resolution by the Senate and action upon it by the House of Delegates, information had been received from Washington city, which induced the authors of the resolution to take a n advances step. The Joint resolution of Milton Brown, which had been some time pending in the House of Representatives, and which it is well known was NOT the favorite scheme of the "Democratic" party, had passed that House. Hence, Mr. Gordon offered the following resolution, to be appended to that which had received the sanction of both branches of the Legislature.

"Resolved, That the admission of Texas on the condition and guarantees set forth in the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 25th day of January 1845, and sent to the senate for its concurrence, in the opinion of General Assembly, is just and proper and will be approved by the people.

And Mr. Witcher proposed the following:

"Resolved by the General Assembly of Virginia. That it is their deliberate opinion that a large majority of the people of Virginia desire the immediate annexation of Texas to the United States by any lawful and constitutional mode. And that the conditions and guarantees set forth in the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives and sent to the Senate of the United States for its concurrence, in the opinion of this General Assembly are just and proper, and will be approved by the people. This General Assembly, however, forbearing to express any opinion as to the constitutionality of annexation by the mode of a joint resolution of the two houses of Congress.

The substitute was adopted by the House, by a vote of 66 to 61--the Whigs with two exceptions, voting for it--their opponents voting unanimously against it. Why was this resolution unpleasant to our opponents? It is manifest that their hostility to it grew exclusively out of the fact that the question of constitutional power was expressly waived by it. This was the point of difference, as will be seen, from the first to the last; and an unyielding adherence by our opponents to their own peculiar views on this point, closed effectually the door to compromise and unanimity of action.

At this stage of the proceeding, Mr. Edmunds, of Halifax, proposed the following additional resolution:

"Resolved, That our senators be instructed to vote for the joint resolution which passed the House of Representatives on the 25th day of January, 1845, and seat to the Senate for its concurrence, providing for the admission of Texas as a State into this Union."

The resolution involving the same principle with that just rejected, though more objectionable in its terms, was rejected by nearly a party vote--ayes 60, noes 66. --And the resolutions, as amended by the House, were then returned to the Senate for the section of that body.

On the 3rd of February, the Senate amended the second resolution of the House in two important features--first by striking there from the latter clause, in the following words, to wit. "The General Assembly, however, forbearing to express any opinion as to the constitutionality of annexation by the mode of a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress"--and secondly by striking out the words, "And that the 'conditions' and 'guarantees' set forth in the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives, and sent to the Senate of the United States for its concurrence, in the opinion of the General Assembly, are just and proper, and will be approved by the people,"--and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following:

"And that the joint Resolution passed by the House of Representatives, on the 25th day of January, 1845, and seat to the Senate of the United States for its concurrence, providing for the admission of Texas as one of the States of this Union, is a lawful and constitutional mode of annexation;--and that the conditions and guarantees set forth therein, in the opinion of this General Assembly are just and proper, and will be approved by the people."

Thus amended the resolutions were returned to the House of Delegates. --That body, however, refused to concur in the Senate's amendments. The Senate "insisted," and then the House "adhered." In this stage of proceedings, a Committee of free conference was asked by the Senate, and the request was promptly responded to by the House, with a sincere desire on the part of the majority of the latter body, but with only a faint hope, in view of what had already transpired, that it might resolve in the harmonies cooperation of the two bodies in a proposition, which might command nearly. If not quite an unanimous vote in both.--The Committee met in conference; but it was very soon apparent that no agreement could be effected. The Senate Committee met in conference; but it was very soon apparent that no agreement could be effected. The Senate Committee mad the following proposition as the ground of compromise:

"The committee of conference on the part of the Senate propose to the committee of conference on the part of the House of Delegates, that the Senate will recede from the amendment to the amendment of the House, which is the following words and figures, namely:--Strike out form the word 'mode' in the sixth lieu, to the word 'people' inclusive, in the 13th line of the amendment of the House of Delegates; and insert--and that the Joint Resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 25th day of January, 1845, and sent to the Senate of the United States for its concurrence, providing for the admission of Texas as one of the States of this Union, is a lawful and constitutional mode of annexation, and that the conditions and guarantees set forth therein, in the opinion of this General Assembly, are just and proper, and will be approved by the people. '--and that the House of Delegates shall recede from its adherence to its disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Delegates, the following words--"This General Assembly, however, forbearing to express any opinion as to the constitutionality of annexation by the mode of a Joint Resolution of the two Houses of Congress."--And that the amendment of the House of Delegates, by striking out the last member of said amendment as last above recited, shall then be adopted by the senate and House of Delegates.

Had this proposition been assented to, the second resolution would have been left in the shape in which it originally passed the House of Delegates, except that the latter clause of that resolution would have been omitted. And, as that clause was inserted in the resolution, only "out of abundant caution," and for the express purpose of "excluding the conclusion," which the Whig members of the Legislature would not even by remote inference that so expression of opinion as to the CONSTITUTIONALITY of the Joint Resolution was thereby intended, the House committee had no objection to his proposition of the Senate committee, provided that that essential fact should be expressly stated in the report of the proceedings of the committees to their respective Houses. They therefore responded to the Senate's committee as follows:

"The Committee of conference on the part of the House of Delegates, agree to the proposition of the committee on the part of the Senate, with this distinct understanding; that although the words 'This General Assembly, however, forbearing to express any opinion as to the constitutionality of annexation by the mode of a Joint Resolution of the two Houses of Congress,' be stricken out, the General Assembly do, nevertheless, forbear either to affirm or to disaffirm the constitutionality of the admission of Texas into the Union in the mode proposed in the Joint Resolution which passed the House of Representatives on the 25th of January last, and that the amendment of the House of Delegates to the Senate’s Resolution, which, by the proposition of the Senate’s committee of conference, is proposed to be adopted, does not in terms, and is not intended to affirm or disaffirm the constitutionality of annexation by the mode of Joint Resolution which assest the House of Representatives on the 25th day of January last. And that this paper shall be communicated to the Senate and House of Delegates as the basis of the report and recommendation which they propose for the adoption of the two Houses."

The committee of the senate declined acceding to the terms of this explanatory report; and each House adhering to its own resolutions, they fell by that disagreement.

Upon this plain and unvarnished statement of facts, showing the origin, progress, and termination of this subject before the two Houses, the Whig members of the Legislature are satisfied to go before the People of Virginia. It demonstrates, in the first place, their willingness to express the opinion that a majority of the People of Virginia are in favor of the annexation of Texas in a legal and constitutional manner, and their probation of the “conditions” and “guarantees” of the Joint Resolution which passed the House of Representatives; while, on the other hand, they insisted that the question of constitutionality, involved in that resolution, should, be pretermitted--because in that shape alone could any resolution command the vote of a large majority of both branches of the Legislature. This concession our opponents refused to make, even to secure that unanimity, which they professed so much to desire--preferring, rather, the defeat of all the resolutions, INCLUDING EVEN THAT WHICH THEY AHD THEMSELVE ADOPTED< AND WITH WHICH THEY OUGHT, OF COURSE, TO HAVE BEEN WELL SATISFIED, and which by the co-operation of more than half of the Whigs of the House of Delegate, had received the sanction of a large majority in both branches of the Legislature. It is for the People to decide, upon this statement of facts, whether the annexation of Texas, or the desire to make PARTY CAPITAL out of that measure was the leading motive by which our opponents were influenced.

The point of difference between the majorities in the two Houses, we repeat was this: SHALL THE QUESITON OF CONSTITUTIONALITY BE PRETERMITTED IN THE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED? IF the Senate’s committee, by proposing to receive form a portion of their proposed amendment to the resolution of the House, intended so to waive an expression of opinion upon the constitutional question,--neither affirming nor denying the power of Congress to annex a foreign territory to the Union by a joint resolution, which as understood by the Whigs, did preterm the constitutional question, while, according to their constitution, that resolution affirmed, by fair and legitimate construction, the constitutionality of the joint resolution of the House of Representatives, it would have been, in our estimation, a piece of solemn trifling--nay, worse, of deliberate deception--to accept, under THE PRETEXT OF A COMPROMISE, a proposition which according to their own showing, was of equivocal import, and which, upon their understanding of this meaning, CONCEDED NOTHING. The Whig members of the Legislature would have well merited the rebuke of their constituents, had they yielded their assent to a resolution which was confessedly of doubtful construction, and which would have subjected them to the reproach of consenting to do by indirect, what they refused to do openly and in the light of day. They insisted that the action of the Legislature, on this important question, whatever that action might be, should be clear and explicit, and not left open to different and opposite interpretations. The public judgment, they do not doubt, will sustain them in this course; for they cannot so far discredit the intelligence of the people of Virginia, or question their love of frank and fair dealing, as to suppose, that they would approve, or even tolerate, a deliberate attempt to "palter with them in a double sense," by assenting to a resolution, with entire unanimity as to its words, while all parties thus assenting to it knew that it was susceptible, and was really intended to admit, of conflicting constructions. [MLD]

Thursday, March 27, 1845 MG45i4p2c7 85 words

NEW HAMPSHIRE ELECTION

It turns out after all, that the Texas party is defeated in New Hampshire in their efforts to proscribe J.P. Hale for his vote in Congress against Texas. According to return in the Boston Post, of Monday, Woodbury, who the Locofocos set up for Congress in opposition to Hale, is defeated of an election. He falls some two thousand votes behind the other Locofoco candidates, and wants nearly a thousand votes of an election.

Steele (L.F.) is re-elected Governor by a meager majority. --Balt. Pal. [MLD]

Thursday, March 27, 1845 MG45i4p4c1 132 words

FROM TEXAS

The New Orleans papers have received papers from Galveston to the 8th inst. , and from Washington (the capital) to the 1st inst. by the steamship New York. It appears that some of the Texans are not at all pleased with the terms of annexation contained in the resolutions just passed. We notice, says the Picayune, that some of the leading journals hold language opposed to annexation, or at least unfriendly to the measure.

The Galveston Weekly News of the 1st inst. , says: "We have already furnished incontestable evidence that British policy has so far prevailed in Texas, that Her Britannic Majesty’s Charge has obtained a pledge form ex-President Houston to use his utmost endeavors against annexation. " The same paper hints at the opposition of the present administration in Texas to the measure. [MLD]

April
May

Thursday, May 1, 1845 MG45v46i9p1c3 933 words

PROSPECTUS OF THE RICHMOND TIMES.

The undersigned have united themselves for the purpose of erecting the TIMES AND COMPILER into a journal of a more active political character, with the hope of enlarging its circulation, and extending the influence, and thereby contributing to propagate more widely and settle more firmly the great principles of the Whig party. In the month of August, 1844, the Editors of the Times and Compiler abandoned the neutrality which they had preserved, and avowed themselves the open and zealous advocates of the measures of the WHIG PARTY, and the election of HENRY CLAY. Since that time, they have steadily adhered to the great WHIG CAUSE, which they believed to be the cause of the Country, and have opposed the measures and principles of the Democratic Party. They have been encouraged to go on in their undertaking: they have received the support and cordial good wishes of many influential friends; and now, with additional editorial strength, the appeal before the public under a different name, with more extended views, and with a more determined resolution to deserve the confidence of the Whig party.

The limits of a prospectus will allow only a short statement of the principles by which we shall be guided. We propose to conduct the RICHMOND TIMES in a firm and manly, yet courteous and conciliatory spirit. Whilst it will be a paper thoroughly Whig in its course, it will not use the liberty of the press to drive from the party those who many differ with in on individual or unimportant questions. Where such differences unhappily exist, it will seek to compose rather than to widen them.

We love the UNION OF THESE STATES, and feel that they are all our common country. Our object, therefore, will be, to discourage all sectional differences, which may be designed or may tend, to diminish the veneration in which that Union ought every where to be held. Still, we shall, as citizens of a Southern State, watch, with jealous solitude, the course of public events, in reference to the protection of our peculiar domestic institutions, and resist every attempt to subvert or weaken them.

With regard to the prominent questions of the day, we are thoroughly Whig.

We shall warmly advocated such a Tariff as Mr. Clay is in favor of, a Tariff for revenue, with incidental protection to domestic manufactures. Such a Tariff we believe the Tariff of 1842 to be. If it be found, after a fair trial, to produce more revenue than is needed, we shall wish to see it reduced but still retaining the principle for protection.

When the establishment of a NATIONAL BANK may be before the people for discussion, we shall be found its steady supporters.

We shall earnestly urge the policy of DISTRIBUTION.

With regard to the subject of TEXAS, since a majority of the people have decided, through Congress, upon the expediency of annexation, and the legality of annexing by joint resolution, we shall patiently wait to hear the decision of Texas. If it accede to the proposition of Congress, we shall consider the faith of the country pledged, the question settled: and shall deprecate all further agitation of the subject, and oppose any effort to repeal the joint resolution passed by the Congress. If the question be kept open by the refusal of Texas to accede to the terms of the joint resolution, and by a new proposal to treat with our Government, we shall approve of such a treaty as we may believe will be beneficial to the country, and just to the South.

It will be one of our chief objects to encourage the improvement and steady support of all the Institutions of Learning in the State, from the Common Schools to the Colleges and Universities.

We shall advocate such schemes of Improvement in the State, as may be safely and judiciously undertaken, and, particularly, the extension and completions of the James River and Kanawha Canal.

The interests of the City of Richmond will receive, from us, the attention which has always distinguished the paper.

In the Commercial and News departments of the Times, every effort will be made, not only to maintain the reputation of the Compiler, but to improve upon it. The most assiduous attention will be paid to all those occurrences in the commercial world, which will be of interest or importance to the commercial class of the community, which had extended such a liberal support to the paper heretofore.

We shall devote a portion of our paper to subjects of General Literature, and endeavor thus to make it acceptable to the reader of taste.
We shall take no part in religious discussions, but we shall not exclude the religious news of the day; and we wish our paper to preserve a character [crease]

In conclusion, we are utterly opposed to the doctrines, but still more the practices, of the Democratic party. We shall, constantly, endeavor to show that the chief danger to our Government is to be found in the tendency of the leaders of that party to prostrate every principle of order to the madness of popular excitements; whilst it has been the glory of the Whigs, that they have ever been the supporters of the laws, and have acknowledged the validity of the obligations of the States.

With these views, we present ourselves to the public. With what ability we shall sustain them, it is not our party to say; but we can affirm, that we shall do it with firmness and honesty.

WM. C. CARRINGTON,
J. A. COWARDIN,
WM. H. DAVIS.
Richmond, April 3, 1845.

Thursday, May 1, 1845 MG45v46i9p2c2 1,239 words.

THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

We present to our readers, in another column, the highly important news brought out from Great Britain by the steamer Caledonia. This intelligence is of a character well calculated to arouse an excited feeling throughout this Country – but prudence and wisdom out at once to suggest the propriety of calm and considerate reason, instead of impulse and feeling. There is something a little more authoritative and official in the proposition of John Bull this time, than we are accustomed to see in his bullying towards the United States – and hence the necessity of our people giving to that position its due weight and consideration. We feel apprehensive that a rupture must sooner of later take place between these two great Nations, and indeed we do not see how matters as they now stand are likely to keep the apart, as the issue is joined, and the only effectual means of trying it is by a resort in the end to arms, though the day may be prolonged by the forms of negotiation and diplomacy.

We perceive the Press of the United States has got fairly to work upon this subject, and as might have been expected, a great variety of opinion is expressed. But upon one point we think there is great unanimity of opinion – and that is, that "our right to Oregon is clear and indisputable" – and such seems to be equally the settled opinion of the British Ministry and people as to their right. The only contrariety of opinion among our people, is as to time – and the bungling manner of negotiation in which the matter has been conducted. This matter is yet a subject of negotiations, between the constituted authorities of the two Countries, and while in this condition it was perhaps improper and indelicate in Mr. Polk to announce in his Inaugural Address to the "clear and indisputable right" of the United States to this territory. It was out of place, and perhaps M. Polk might have thought so himself, but as "Polk, Dallas, Texas and Oregon" were the Democratic Principles par excellence in the late Presidential contest, e thought himself bound to say something about it, and if anything, what else could he have said that would have been satisfactory to his party? But be that as it may, the American Executive has so declared our title, and we would not if we could wish him to retract one word of syllable of what he has said.

Mr. Polk is not the Government in this Country yet, thank God, notwithstanding the efforts of the strict constructionists of our Constitution and the infallible Democracy to place the power of the Government in the hands and at the direction of the President of the United States. The intelligent statesmen of Great Britain out to have understood our position better, and to have saved some of their extra heat and bullyism until the action of the co-ordinate branches of our Government. Perhaps they have read something definite enough in the action of the late Congress, where the bill to occupy Oregon almost became a law – and was rejected more upon points of etiquette, than nay doubt about the "clear and indisputable right and title" of our Country to the Oregon. The sentiments of this Country are well known, and doubtless upon the meeting of the next Congress, the subject will be again introduced and a bill passed – provided no adjustment on the controversy takes place in the recess, which is not likely to be done. Negotiation and arbitration are talked of, but for the life of us we cannot see what good negotiation will do, or how it is possible to arrange the difficulty but arbitration. Both Countries declare their title clear and indisputable, and there seems to be such unequivocal and fixed determination in the declarations that we cannot see how the arbitration is to be arranged. How is the agreement to abide the decision or award of the arbitration to be settled on before hand, and who is to do it? Who would act as umpire, and what King, Prince or Potentate is capable of deciding a controversy of the description with satisfaction and fairness to the contending parties? It is in this view, then, that we consider the disputants after the late declarations in the British Parliament. Negotiations and arbitration, in our poor judgment, are out of the question, and a war in all probability must be sooner or later the inevitable result. We trust in God such may not be the case, as of all evils war is the greatest, save and except National disgrace and dishonor. We have our National honor preserved at any cost of treasure or blood.

It will be noted the concern about Texas Annexation has almost died away in England, and neither the Government of the people seem to care a pinch of snuff one way or the other about it – notwithstanding she has been held up in this Country by the Annexationists constantly as the great "raw-head and bloody bones," which was seeking to wrest Texas from our grasp. The Oregon is a different matter for Bull’s contemplation; and it is not so much the “broad acres” the he cares about, even there as it is the monopoly of the manufacturing trade which he is seeking to secure in India.
Great Britain fears the position which the occupation of Oregon would give to our trade, commerce and manufactures, opening up as it would a direct passage to us through the Pacific to that great and growing market. That is what the sagacious statesman, the Earl of Aberdeen, meant when he said that “war is a great evil, but the overthrow of our ["Great Britain’s"] monopoly of the manufacturing system would be infinitely more dreadful – and towards this consummation the growth of American industry is rapidly tending.” The well known and proverbial selfishness of England, and her far-reaching avarice which encompasses the globe, and mourns over its pent up boundaries, may well awaken our consideration, and afford to use a Key wherewith we may open the sealed recessed of Great Britain’s determinations and calculate with some certainty the chances of war. We have already spun out these remarks to a much greater length than we calculated upon doing when we commenced, but still we cannot conclude this article without inviting the especial attention of our readers to the annexed remarks of the Baltimore American, which are forcible and worthy of consideration.

We might speak of the matter in which the matter has been precipitated to its present position. There is cause for regret that it was not managed differently. But since the past cannot be helped it will be more to the purpose to look outwards possible results, and see how we are prepared for them.

Let us suppose that Congress meets and passes a bill for the occupation of the Oregon – such a bill as that which almost passed at the last session. The year’s notice specified in the bill would not postpone a collision with England for twelve months. Not at all. For, that notice was merely to signify that after a given time the Government of the United States would occupy the Oregon; it was a notice to quit – of which the British subjects in Oregon might have the benefit. Such a bill, if passed, would bring on hostilities at once – unless England should conclude. [MLD]

Thursday, May 1, 1845 MG45v46i9p2c6 2057 words

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA – SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

From the Baltimore American, April 24.

The British Mail Steamer Caledonia, Capt. Lott, arrived at Boston on Monday evening, bringing Liverpool papers to the 5th instant and London files to the evening of the previous day.

From the New York papers of yesterday morning, and Willmer & Smith’s European Times, furnished us by Mesars, Adams & Co. , we make up the following summary:

The Caledonia left Liverpool on the 5th having been detained one day beyond her stated time of departure for the purpose of bringing out the result of the debate in the House of Commons on the Oregon question. That subject had become the theme of exciting interest, and was promptly brought before the House by Lord John Russell, immediately upon the reassembling of Parliament after Easter recess.

This business seems to have assumed a decided, not to say a startling – earnestness on both sides of the British House of commons. The premier confirms the statement put forth by Mr. Tyler in his annual message as to the admirable mode in which the Oregon question had been discussed between our Secretary of State and the British Minister at Washington, Mr. Packenham, but almost directly contradicts the assertion of the American Executive, of a favorable prospect of the result of the negotiation. So far from anticipating so desirable a result, Sir Robert Peel seems to see but little chance for an amicable termination of the controversy, while the United States Government continue to maintain the ground assumed by Mr. Polk in his inaugural address – It is not to be concealed, therefore, that the remarks of Sir Robert Peel afford grounds for grave apprehensions of serious difficulty. He as sternly and uncompromisingly maintains the British right to the disputed territory, as our Government and we may add a great majority of our people assert out own undoubted claim to that territory.

The subject of the Annexation of Texas as had ceased to be the cause of much excitement, and appeared to be looked upon with indifference in England, the matter being absorbed in the more serious question of Oregon. Mr. O’Connell had uttered his malediction in the Repeal Association in Ireland, but on the whole “Annexation” occupied but little of the public attention.

In the House of Lords, Lord Ashburton had made an elaborate defence oh his late boundary treaty with this country, against an attack made upon it in the House of Commons by Lord Palmeraton, and Lord John Russell.

The Cotton market remained without much change from the pervious advices by the Great Western, though the news at Liverpool that the Caledonia was to be detained a day, to bring out the result of the Oregon debate, worse so startling a face that the market immediately became firmer, and 8000 bales were disposed of at the highest quotations. The price had exhibited a tendency to recede during the early part of the week.

There had been no arrival of American packet ships in England, after the sailing of the Great Western.

The Queen’s visit to Ireland was definitely fixed to take place in July, and it was said that Parliament would be prorogued at an early day, to enable Her Majesty’s Ministers to accompany her.

The domestic news of England exhibited no noticeable feature since our last advices.

In France, nothing very new or interesting had occurred. The Chambers were engaged in the wise project of endeavoring to regulate the concerns and management of the railroad companies, a project about as feasible as [...] that sometimes show themselves in this country. Legislation will hardly reach the gambling transactions in shares, to prevent which the attempt is made.

There was no additional intelligence of importance from Switzerland. The country still remained in a state of feverish agitation.

Gen Thomas Thumb was in Paris, and making a tremendous swell daily through the Champs Elyse(?)cs, in his manikin carriage, and on one occasion was escorted by a detachment of the Municipal Horse Quarls.

The Overland Mail from China had arrived, but brings no news of interest to the American reader.

THE OREGON QUESTION.

Correspondence of the New York Courier. London, April 5.

House of Commons, April 5.

On the order of the day being called, for going into Committee of Supply, Lord John Russell, being called upon, rose pursuant to notice, and stated his desire to call the attention of the house and of the Government, to certain observations in the inaugural address of the new President of the United States. Whatever might be his opinions on the general territorial question at issue, he had felt it his duty, and considered it to be the duty of every public man to abstain from publicly advancing those opinions, while their subject formed the basis of negotiations between the Governments of the two countries. But this Oregon question had been, in a manner, taken out of the sphere of the diplomatic negotiation, by a method at once new and objectionable and which threatened to overbear, by an appeal to popular feeling, the ordinary methods of preceding between nations.

The speech also alluded, he said, (though he introduced this matter parenthetically,) to an increase of the territory of the Union – a very large increase – an increase whose limits and extent were by no means defined for Texas was annexed without any specified boundaries, and the territory thus acquires might be found to extend even to the Pacific. Mr. Webster had expressed an opinion that the duty as well as the policy of the Union was against an increase of territory, and that her proper aim was the improvement and development of her vast existing resources. But this policy had been openly departed from, and the accession of territory almost declared to form part of the policy of the United States.

His Lordship then returned to the avowed subject of his remarks, and read a passage from Mr. Polk’s address, in which that gentleman asserts that “our title to the Oregon is clear and indisputable,” and recommends the American people to carry out that right by “populating it with their wives and children,” etc.

He felt himself compelled to call attention to that state of the question, and to inquire how far Mr. Polk was justified, under existing circumstances, and while negotiations were in progress, in asserting the right of the United States to be “clear and indisputable,” and in declaring his intentions respecting the assertion of that right without reference to treaties. He then enumerated the usual methods of acquiring a claim to territory: first, by ancient discovery and actual occupation; and inquired by which of these methods the United States had acquired a title to the territory now in dispute.

His Lordship then proceeded to review and compare the English and American claims, which he did in a very fait tone and spirit, though, of course, with an undisguised persuasion of the justice of the English claim and the comparative groundlessness of the American, and summed up thus: On the first ground of Right – Ancient Discovery – the English title was the best of the two: on the second basis of the title, Treaty the United States had no ground to rest upon, except for the right of Joint occupancy: and thirdly, as the Modern Discovery and Settlement, the English title, acquired by the discovery of Vancouver, and perfected by the extensive settlements of the Hudson’s Bay Company, was far superior to any similar title which the United States could allege.

He then referred to the negotiations between Mesars, Rusts and Huskisson, and to the fact that they never were brought to any satisfactory result. The two countries had never gone farther than to agree upon joint occupancy without any rights of exclusive sovereignty.

But now a new circumstance had occurred; a new and most important event had been brought to bear upon the question. President Polk had made a peremptory claim to the whole territory, and in an unusual and unwarrantable manner called upon the American people to establish their claim by occupying it with their families. After this event it was impossible that the British Government should fail to ask a speedy solution of the whole question; impossible that this unsettled state of things should be allowed to continue. the carrying out of Mr. Polk’s suggestions must produce hostile collision between English and Americans in the territory itself; and the consequences of such collision needed no prophetic comment.
He was not prepared to say how much the English Government should concede for the sake of peace. He was not prepared to say that they ought to yield anything. (He was here interrupted by vehement cheering.) He thinks no proposal more favorable than the one made by Mr. Canning can possibly be made. Some persons think it does not much matter which way a question is decided, affecting only a certain extent of barren territory - but it does matter - it was not to be thought of, that a territory to which England conscientiously asserted a claim should be yielded to what he must term a mere blustering assertion of the right (Loud cheers) - not to be permitted that the tone and character of English diplomacy should be lowered by unworthy concessions.

He repeated that he should have abstained from allusion to this question had it been allowed to remain one of diplomacy; but after the removal of it from that sphere in the manner described, he felt it to be his duty to bring it under consideration. He (Lord John Russell) could do in the matter, as an unofficial person, what ministers could not, unless they departed from the course prescribed by custom and courtesy, while the subject was still under negotiation. He could state exactly what the rights of England are, and upon what those rights are based. - But having done so, he should leave matters in the hands of Her Majesty's advisers, with the most entire confidence that they would protect fully the honor and interests of the country.

Lord J. Russell sat down amid much cheering from all parts of the house, and Sir Robert Peel rose to reply.

Sir Robert had experience neither surprise or regret at the speech of the noble lord. He concurred in the noble lord's views and statements. His lordship had justly defined the limits of introducing matters of negotiation into a popular assembly. While negotiations were pending, it was certainly a duty to abstain from such a course. Popular feeling was so easily excited, and the matter of negotiation so easily pre-judged that in all such cases the negotiations should be allowed to discharge their duties without interference. The position of the noble lord was widely different from his own. As an unofficial person, Lord John Russell was not responsible for the consequences of his speech, but Ministers of the Crown must be guarded in their speeches on such a subject. He agreed with his lordship as to the virtual removal of this subject, by Mr. President Polk, from the sphere of negotiation, and its reference to other authorities. He could not discuss the merits of the question, but he could state the condition of the negotiations.

Sir Robert accordingly gave a summary of the past negotiations in reference to the Oregon, and expressed the hope that they might be brought to a speedy and amicable termination. He referred to Mr. Tyler's message of Dec. 3, 1844, in which a similar hope was expressed and to his refusal, on the 19th of Feb. in the present year, to lay the correspondence on the subject before Congress, lest it should interfere with pending negotiations - in which "considerable progress" had been already made. All this was in the most friendly tone and spirit. Sir Robert gladly recognized this friendly spirit, but could not admit the fact of "progress" - He was sorry to say, very little progress had been made. He then proceeded to contrast Mr. Tyler's tone, with that adopted, only a fortnight afterward, by his successor; - since which he had received no communication from Mr. Packenham - Probably the negotiations previously in progress, were continued with the new administration. He expected daily to receive information on that point, and did not despair of a favorable issue; but in case of a contrary result, he would not object to lay the whole correspondence. [MLD]
We present below the latest intelligence received at New Orleans from Texas. It is brought up to the 24th ult., by the Steamer John S. McKim, which left Galveston on the 21st. We presume that intelligence may be considered convulsive from Galveston, whence she sailed on the 21st ult. by a British vessel. So says the Houston Star of 19th ult.

The Texan government has answered these communications, and the despatches for this purpose were sent back to Vera Cruz by the Eurydice. It is rumored also that the Christa and Bexar, conveying assurances that the new government of Mexico is disposed to treat with Texas upon the basis of Independence. Similar despatches were received from Vera Cruz by the Eurydice. It is rumored also that the Texan government has answered these communications, and the despatches for this purpose were sent back to Vera Cruz by a British vessel. So says the Houston Star of 19th ult.

The President had issued his proclamation convening Congress on Monday, the 16th day of June next. We learn from the proclamation that the Government of the United States has selected the first and second sections of the resolutions (Mr. Milton Brown's) as the basis for consummating the proposed union. The resolutions were unanimously adopted. Gen. M. Hunt, Dr. J. C. Chalmers, Judge Ewing, R. W. Williamson, J. B. Wilkins, and other prominent gentlemen participated in the proceedings. The President issued his proclamation on the following day.

Even at this hour, a vigorous application of our national energies, in the work of defence, by adding strength to our Navy, material to our army, garrisons and forts along our frontier, efficient armaments upon our Lakes, and powerful defences to our ports and harbors, may tend to alter the belligerent tone of England, and reduce it to the milder key of peace, reason, and justice. It is far better and wiser, therefore, to believe in the probability of a war, than to give indirect aid to the enemy, by chanting the song peace, either from party prejudice, or a supposed party interest. In relations that now subsist between Great Britain and this Country, not a particle of party poison ought to be infused, which will tend to encourage her in the hope, that our people were so distracted by factious hate, that she could gain more in a war, by our own feuds, than by her own arms and prowess. This suicidal deportment, in any portion of the American people, who may boast themselves as the Peace Party, is more likely to produce War, than all other causes combined. In our present relations aggression cannot proceed from us. It is for England to make demonstrations of hostility. Our position is one of quietude, peace, and self-defence. – Nor will those relations change, but by an aggressive act by our opponent. It is incumbent on us, as a people, then, to be united, to act in harmony, remain firm, and present an unbroken front of National feeling to all who threaten us with war, whether from the Briton clad in steel, to the Mexican, clothed in the tatters of a beggar. Even England will recede from her warlike attitude when she beholds us united – but if we are to have a Peace Party at this early state of the dispute, we shall undoubtedly have a War, and that War will be the offspring of the Peace Party. [MLD]

Thursday, May 8, 1845, MG45v46i10p2c4 533 words

LATEST FROM TEXAS

The President had issued his proclamation convening Congress on Monday, the 16th day of June next. We learn from the proclamation that the Government of the United States has selected the first and second sections of the resolutions (Mr. Milton Brown's) as the basis for consummating the proposed union.

At a meeting held in Washington county strong resolutions were passed in favor of immediate annexation, “without reference to the wishes or concurrence of any foreign or European power;” and calling on the President to convene Congress immediately. The meeting also recommended to the citizens of the Republic, in case the President did not convene Congress, to meet as soon as possible in Convention to ratify the Joint Resolutions and form a State Constitution. Mr. E. Allen, Attorney General, who was present, objected to the tone of the resolutions.

Mr. Scurry, in reply, intimated that the citizens of the Republic might yet become still more impatient of the delay of the President in convening Congress, and adopt measures much more violent than those recommended in the resolutions. – The resolutions were unanimously adopted. Gen. M. Hunt, Dr. J. C. Chalmers, Judge Ewing, R. W. Williamson, J. B. Wilkins, and other prominent gentlemen participated in the proceedings. The President issued his proclamation on the following day.

It was rumored at the seat of government that communications had been received from Gen. Arista, by way of Corpus Christa and Bexar, conveying assurances that the new government of Mexico is disposed to treat with Texas upon the basis of Independence. Similar despatches were received from Vera Cruz by the Eurydice. It is rumored also that the Texan government has answered these communications, and the despatches for this purpose were sent back to Vera Cruz by a British vessel. So says the Houston Star of 19th ult.

The Hon. ASHBEL SMITH, whose departure for England has been before mentioned, has been re-appointed Charge d’Affairs of the Republic of Texas in France and England, and has proceeded to assume the duties of his office. The office of Secretary of State, made vacant by this appointment, will be taken by the Hon. EBENEZER ALLEN, now Attorney General. [MLD]
The New York Sun and Bennett’s Herald contain the following very important intelligence, which is one day later than the published accounts brought by the Hibernia. The Baltimore Patriot at first doubted the authenticity of the intelligence, but now says there is no doubt of its correctness. Our readers will judge for themselves, and we therefore submit the annexed intelligence without further comment:

ONE DAY LATER FROM EUROPE – Very Important – Another War Speech from the British Premier – Passage of the Maynooth Grant Bill.

By the attention of our newspaper agents in Liverpool, Messrs, Wilmer & Smith, we have London papers on the 19th ult. , expressed through on our account in time for the steamer, and which came to hand last night from Boston.

The great debate in the Maynooth Grant terminated in the British Parliament on the morning of the 19th, with an exciting speech from Sir Robert Peel, the mere abstract of which, occupies three columns and a half in the Morning Chronicle.

It would seem that Ministers had some doubts as to the passage of the bill, when the Premier, summoning all his energies commenced a powerful appeal to the House in favor of the measure, in which he defended the policy of Ministers, showed the necessity of conciliating Ireland, and alluded to a probable war with the Unites States as one of the reasons why Great Britain should “concentrate all her energies to maintain unimpaired the power and dignity of the United Kingdom. ”

If war should come, he desired that “Ireland should stand ranked with England, and the energies of a united people would insure a glorious triumph in a just cause. ”

He denied that ministers had consulted with any of the political leaders or clergy of Ireland, nor had ministers ever entered into any negotiations with the Pope, relative to this grant, neither was the grant any part of a general system for the endowment of the Catholic Church, although he [Sir Robert] would not fetter ministers by a pledge not to propose the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy – he would make no such declaration, but he wished Hon. gentlemen to draw no unfair inference from his refusal to commit himself by such pledge. He considered the permanent endowment of Maynooth College, just to the Roman Catholics of Ireland. It would produce a kindly feeling in Ireland, among the people – it would produce great good. I know not what the consequences may be in respect to the kindly intentions between Ireland and this country. I do not rest the measure on any question of mere compact.

I say, without hesitation, you must break up that formidable confederacy which exists in that country against the British connection. And I believe it is essential you should break it up, in order that you may carry on the work of good government in Ireland [cheers] and that you may strengthen the connection between the two countries, and maintain unimpaired, the power and dignity of the United Kingdom, [renewed cheers. ] On the horizon of the west there is a cloud [here, hear] – a cloud small, but threatening future darkness, [hear, hear. ] While we were most anxious for an adjustment of the impending differences – while we would leave nothing undone to effect the amicable settlement [of the Oregon question] – yet I did feel it to be part of my duty – of the duty of the first minister of the crown- to state that, if our rights were invaded, we were determined and prepared to maintain them, [loud cheers. ] I aver that when I was called upon to make that declaration, I did recollect with satisfaction and consolation, that the day before I had sent a message of peace to Ireland. [Loud cheers. ] The Hon. gentleman, member from Canterbury, thought it not impossible that the time would come when this country would be compelled to summon all her energies for action. I heard that speech with great satisfaction. [Cheers] Now may God avert so great an evil as war. – [Loud cheers. ] May God forbid that this time of general peace should be so awfully disturbed. [Hear, hear!] But if it is to be so, if war is to come, I doubt much, considering what is now before me [alluding to the opposition to ministers on this question,] whether the vindication of our honor and our interests will not be confined to other hands. [Hear, hear. ] – But to whomsoever they may be committed, I shall take my place besides them, encouraging them by any support I can give an honorable cause, (loud cheers. ) And if that calamity should befal us, it is my earnest hope that when it shall occur, it shall find the people of this empire united in loyalty to the throne, and in determination to support the common interest (tremendous cheering)... That Ireland shall stand ranked with us... And the energies of an united people will ensure a glorious triumph in a just cause.

[The premier resume his seat about three o'clock in the morning, amid thunders of applause which lasted several minutes. ]

After this exciting speech, the House divided, and there appeared for the Maynooth Grant Bill, 323, against it 176 – majority for it 147. The ministers, were of course overjoyed at the result. It is probably the first time on record, that a religious grant had been carried by appealing to the belligerent propensities of the English Commons. The Premier has evidently accepted O’Connell’s offer at Ireland’s services to fight America for Oregon and Texas. It remains to be see how the bargain will be carried out. The New York Herald give the following as the closing remarks of Sir Robert Peel:

As a minister responsible for the public peace, he said that is was necessary to break up that formidable combination... which at present existed in Ireland against the British government. He did not think that that combination could be broken up by force, but he did think that it might be subdued by kindness, forbearance, and generosity; and it was essential that it should be subdued if we wished to cement the union between the two countries, and to increase the strength of this united empire. When he first thought of proposing this measure to Parliament, he had no anticipation of y any interruption of the relations of amity between this country and any other. But on a recent occasion, Lord John Russell had considered it to be a duty to raise the veil which concealed the distant future. It then become his duty to state publicly that though he was anxious for an amicable arrangement of our difference with the United States, we were resolved and prepared to defend our unquestionable rights if were invaded.

He owned that, when he was called upon to make that declaration, he recollected with pleasure that he had sent the every day before a message of peace to Ireland. Mr. Smythe had said in his very eloquent speech on a former evening, that the time might come, when all the energies of the country might be wanted in its defence. God forbid that peace should be broken; but if it were broke, through he might not be a member of the Government called upon to vindicated the honor of the country, he would be found by the side of the Minister, whoever he might be, supporting him in the prosecution of a just and honorable war. Whenever that war should occur, he trusted that it would find Parliament and the country united in loyalty to the throne, and in determination to support the common interest of the empire. Then, confiding in our good cause, and in the valor, perseverance, and fortitude of every component part of these united kingdoms, he should view the result with composure, being convinced that the energy of an united people must insure the safety of the empire.

The House then divided, when there appeared –

For the motion: 323

Against it: 176

Majority: 147

[MLD]

June
The Mexican-American War and the Media, 1845-1848

Index

July 1845

MGv46n18p3, 3 July 1845 Important news from Texas

MGv46n22p3, 31 July 1845 Latest from Texas, Annexation Ratified, Death of Vice President K.L. Anderson, Incursions and Depredations of the Indians.

AUGUST 1845

14 August 1845; MGv46n24p3 MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.

14 August 1845; MGv46n24p3 POSTSCRIPT RUMORS OF WAR.

21 August 1845; MGv46n25p2 WAR WITH MEXICO.

28 August 1845; MGv46n26p2 MEXICO AND THE U. STATES.

SEPTEMBER 1845

04 September 1845; MGv46n27p2 MEXICO AND TEXAS.

11 September 1845; MGv46n28p2 TEXAS AND MEXICO.

18 September 1845; MGv46n29p3 ENDED IN SMOKE.

October 1845

02 October 1845; MGv46n31p2 FROM TEXAS AND MEXICO.

30 October 1845; MGv46n35p2 CORRESPONDENCE OF THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

November 1845

MG45v46n38p1c7 November 20, 1845: Late from Texas. From the New Orleans Picayune, Oct. 25th

MG45v46n38p1c7 November 20, 1845 Three Days Later From Texas.

MG45v46n38p1-2,c7-1 November 20, 1845 Ho, For Texas!

MG45v46n38p2c1 November 20, 1845 Crops in Texas

December 1845

11 December 1845; MGv46n41, EXTRA MESSAGE OF THE President of the United States. [02] DECEMBER, 1845.

25 December 1845; MGv46n43p1 REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR
From the Baltimore American

Important news from Texas

The steamship New York arrived at New Orleans on the 17th instant from Galveston, which place she left on the 15th instant. President Jones has issued another Proclamation, announcing the result of the negotiations that have been commenced by Captain Elliott, the British Charge d'Affaires, with the Mexican Government.

We annex the following abstract of it from the New Orleans Bee:

"The Galveston News Extra, publishes a third Proclamation of President JONES, preceded by a prolix preamble, in which that worthy attempts to gloss over his conduct with the tinsel of a spurious patriotism. He begins thus:

"The executive is now enabled to declare to the people of Texas the actual state of their affairs with respect to Mexico, to the end that they may direct and dispose of them as they shall judge best for the honor and permanent interest of the Republic.

"He then goes on to say that last summer he learned from creditable sources that the Government of Mexico was disposed to acknowledge the Independence of Texas, upon the understanding that Texas would maintain her separate existence; that in March last the representatives of Great Britain and France jointly renewed the offer of their intermediation with Mexico for this purpose; that as they were unaccompanied by any entangling conditions, he could not consent to reject them, and therefore placed in the hands of their representatives a statement of conditions preliminary to a treaty of peace. These conditions having been accepted by the Government of Mexico, through the friendly interposition of England and France, he deems it his duty to issue the following proclamation:-

"WHEREAS, Authentic proof has recently been laid before me, to the effect that the Congress of Mexico has authorized the Government to open negotiations and conclude a treaty with Texas, subject to the examination and approbation of that body, and further that the Government of Mexico has accepted the conditions prescribed on the part of Texas as preliminary to a final and definite peace.

"Therefore, I, ANSON JONES, President of the Republic of Texas, and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and Militia thereof, do hereby make known these circumstances to the citizens of this Republic, till the same can be more fully communicated to the Honorable Congress and Convention of the People, for their lawful action, at the period of their assembling on the 12th June and 4th July next, and presenting the said action by virtue of the authority in me vested, I do hereby declare and proclaim a cessation of hostilities by land and by sea, against the Republic of Mexico, or against the citizens and trade thereof.

"In testimony whereof, I have caused the Great Seal of the Republic to be thereunto affixed.

"[L.S.]-Done at Washington, this fourth day of June, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, eight hundred and forty-five, and of the independence of the Republic the tenth.

"ANSON JONES."

By the President:

"EBEN'R ALLEN, Attorney General, and Acting Secretary of State."

Most of the papers are excessively indignant at these developments, and even the most moderate, such as the Houston Telegraph, express and emphatic belief that the proposals of Mexico will be promptly rejected by Congress. [DJR]

Latest from Texas.

Annexation Ratified – Death of Vice President K.L. Anderson – Incursions and Depredations of the Indians.

From the Baltimore American.

The brig Hope Howes, Capt. Howes, arrived at New Orleans on the 19th inst. In 40 hours from Galveston. The most important news by this arrival is that the question of Annexation has been finally settled by the Convention which
The people of Texas assembled in Convention at Austin on the 4th inst. At one o'clock of that great day, assent to the resolutions of Annexation, passed by the United States Congress, was declared by the delegates. There was but one dissenting voice – Major Bache of Galveston. He afterwards signed the ordinance.

A resolution was passed on the 7th, requesting, in the name of the people of Texas, the President of the United States to send troops forthwith upon the frontier of Texas.

The Convention is composed of men of of[sic] more than ordinary talent – but few of them believe in “coquetry” in national matters. Committees have had their work apportioned; perfect harmony prevails, and a sound constitution will be formed.

Gen. Rusk was unanimously chosen President – he presides with dignity.

Hon. K.L. Anderson, Vice President of Texas died at Fanthrops, in Montgomery co., on his way from Washington to his residence.

The British brig Persian had arrived at Galveston from Vera Cruz. She brought despatches for the Government, and was to return as soon as she heard from Washington. It was rumored in Galveston that she was there for the purpose of learning the fact of the Mexican propositions to President Jones, and, if they were rejected, that the fleet of Mexico would be down on Galveston without delay. [DJR]

14 August 1845; MGv46n24p3

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.

The second regiment of U.S. Dragoons, under the command of Col. TWIGGS, took up the line of march for Texas from Nachitoches on the 25th ult. The Chronicle says that they are to be stationed at San Antonio de Bexar.

The U.S. Light Artillery under the command of Major RINGGOLD, at Fort McHenry, have received orders from the Secretary of War to hold themselves in readiness to embark for Texas at a moment's warning. Similar orders, have been given to the troops at other military stations. The Washington “Union” remarks upon these facts:-

"Our troops will probably not take an aggressive attitude in regard to Mexico. If (as some suppose and some indeed say) her troops are on the advance to the frontier, the danger of collision approaches. In all probability, if they undertake the invasion of Texas, they will attempt to drive our troops from the ground they occupy. In such case, our right of defence will authorize us to cripple and destroy their army in any way we please. Then, the game is up. We drive every man of them across the Rio Grande; and all who shall set limits to the storm!” [DJR]

14 August 1845; MGv46n24p3

POSTSCRIPT

RUMORS OF WAR.

Just as we were going to press, the Baltimore mail brought us highly important news from Mexico. We can do no more, at this late hour, than merely announce the rumors afloat in relation to a Declaration of War by Mexico against the United States - Closing of the Mexican Ports – and the Expulsion of American Citizens from the Country.

The New Orleans papers of the 5th inst., say that the Mexican schr. Relampago had arrived from Vera Cruz with dates to the 23rd ult. Bringing as passengers Senor Arrangoiz, brother of the Mexican Consul at New Orleans, and Mr. Mackey, an American. The latter brought despatches for the Hon. Mr. Buchanan, from Me. Diamond, U.S. Consul at Vera Cruz, which were sent to Washington by mail. It is said that the Relampago came over to carry home the Mexican Consul at New Orleans, in proof of which the Bee of Tuesday says an importing house applied to him to clear a vessel for a Mexican port on Thursday, and that he replied that after Wednesday he would be unable to attend to any such business. The Jeffersonian quotes a letter from Vera Cruz, dated on the 22d ult. Received by a Mexican Gentleman in New Orleans, which says:

"I have to conclude this letter in a hurry, as the news is just in town that war has been declared against the Americans, and the vessels are going off immediately, to prevent being seized. “

The Courier, after noticing the rumors afloat and the above extract, says:
"We have seen letters from Mexico, of July 22d, which say war is inevitable. The Senate of Mexico had assembled in order to discuss the question of peace or war, and the issue depended on their deliberations. Until the result was known the Mexican ports would continue open as usual to American trade."

The Bee says in a postscript:

"We hear from a person who has it from an authentic source that the Mexican government has closed its ports to American commerce."

"From such information as we can obtain says the Bulletin, we think it probable that if any belligerent step has been taken, it is that which the Bee states it is creditably informed has been ordered – an embargo upon American commerce." [DJR]

21 August 1845; MGv46n25p2

WAR WITH MEXICO.

We are yet unable to determine, from the "lights before us," what course Mexico means to adopt towards the United States, though appearances of a Declaration of War seem more than probable. The Baltimore American of Monday, says:-

The intelligence from Mexico, though not decisive as to a declaration of War, seems to give greater probability to such a result than has attached to any previous rumors. It appears, however, that the warlike manifesto of the Minister of War and Marine bears date July 16th, while we have advices from Mexico as late as the 19th which say nothing of any declaration of war, although the minister announced that it would be submitted to the Congress on the next day, the seventeenth. Something may have occurred to prevent the literal fulfilment of this announcement, or possibly the whole thing may be a mere demonstration of Mexican bluster.

We think the above opinion probably correct, as we cannot imagine what inducement Mexico, in her helpless, distracted and impoverished condition, could expect or hope for in a war with the United States. The present Administration in Mexico stands in a precarious position, and is closely watched by the different factions which so unhappily divide and distract that country. We believe the "thoughts of the Mexican Minister are turned on peace," but he knows he must bluster a little to feed the peculiar appetite and taste of his people.

The aspect of affairs, however, is of sufficient moment to cause the President of the United States to open his eyes, and to think seriously of calling an Extra Session of Congress. We give below such intelligence as we have, together with the comments and speculations of several prominent journals, and leave our readers to draw their own conclusions. The New Orleans Tropic of the 9th inst., says:-

DEPARTURE OF THE MEXICAN CONSUL.

-The Mexican Consul will leave this city to day, on the Relampago, for Vera Cruz. Through the courtesy of our friends of the Bee, which paper contain this morning his address to the Mexicans in this country, we are enabled to state, that, although Senor Arrangoiz has closed his business here, and leaves in obedience to instructions from his government, the period of his departure was left wholly to his own discretion. The instructions to him were predicated, not upon a declaration of war; but upon the unsettled relations between the two countries. We understand that he leaves at this time in order to avoid the gales that usually occur in September. He takes his official papers with him.

The following is the Address referred to in the above:

MEXICAN CONSULATE,

New Orleans August 8th, 1845.

By order of His Excellency the President of the Republic, I inform the Mexican citizens residing in the U. States that His Excellency has determined that this Consulate be closed, and that I return to Mexico, taking with me its archives, in consequence of the state of our relations with the United States. In compliance with this order, I will this day close my office, and will sail to-morrow for Vera Cruz, on board the Mexican schr. Relampago.

F. DE ARRANGOIZ, Consul.

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 9th inst., says:-

The Mexican vessel Relampago, refused yesterday to take the mail we had prepared to send to Mexico and the Sandwich Islands. We learn that the other papers in the city have been treated in the same way. We are at a great loss to understand the proceeding. Can it be sulkiness – or is there really an embargo or declaration of war, made known by the Mexican Consul to the commander of the vessel, which prohibits him from the carriage of American mails? As straws show which way the wind blows, perhaps here may be found a true index to our international relations.

The Washington Union of Saturday evening says that there are no decisive indications of the course which Mexico intends to pursue, and then adds –

The proclamation of Senor Conde, minister of war, on the 16th, thunders war in our ears. He talks loudly of the supreme government intending to communicate to Congress on the next day, the declaration of war; and declares that the government is covering the different points on the frontiers, and collecting the necessary means, &c. &c. , to carry it on.

The Mexican consul has also left New Orleans. We have rumors, also of several corps of Mexican troops advancing to the frontiers! One would think that these are pretty conclusive signs of the design of the government of Mexico to change her relations from peace to war. It would be clearly so, with almost any other people than with her.

The Washington Union, of later date, speaking of the last advices from Mexico says:

As far as we are advised, the despatches to our government are not more decisive than our private accounts. War may come. The next arrival may bring the declaration; and yet no man counts upon it with any certainty. Still, it is beat to prepare for the worst; and, acting upon this safe and prudent maxim, we have no doubt that the Executive is taking early precautions to meet the blow, and making every preparation to repel it. Our troops are actually on the frontiers; arms are already at Galveston. The Texans may probably be invited, if necessary, to cooperate with our troops; and rations will be furnished, if they require it. Our squadrons in the gulf will be on the alert. The first blow that shall be struck by Mexico, will become the signal of efficient and vigorous hostilities on the part of the United States.

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 9th inst. says:

As war with Mexico is by many deemed a probable event, some information relative to the strength and resources of our adversary might not at the present crisis be uninteresting. The entire population of the Mexican States, twenty-two in number, is estimated at about seven millions. From this amount a deduction must be made for the Indians, half-breeds and negroes, who constitute about six-sevenths of the census. These are all mere slaves, and a class too ignorant and degraded to be enumerated among the military statistics of the country. In physical vigor and intellectual capability, they are said to be much inferior to the negroes of the South, and are certainly kept under a bondage much more galling and enervating both to mind and body.

Throwing this part of the population out of the account, there remains only about a million of Mexicans who can be said to be pure Spanish or European descent, upon whom any reliance can be placed for the defence of the country. Even this small fraction of the populace is greatly degenerated, and, compared with the Spaniards of the days of Cortez or the Anglo-Saxons of the present era, may be called an effeminate race.

AN EXTRA SESSION. - The Philadelphia Inquirer of Monday says:

We hear it rumored on pretty good authority, that should Mexico declare war against the United States, the President will immediately call an extra session of Congress.

It is said that a number of the officers of the Brigade commanded by Gen. A.L. Roumfort, of Philadelphia, have volunteered their services, and that Gen. R. has tendered his own and their services to the General Government, in case of war with Mexico.

Letters of Marque and Reprisal. -We heard it stated on Saturday last, by an intelligent officer of the United States Government, that Mr. Polk was determined, in case of a war with Mexico, to make a terrible example of any foreigner or foreigners, not belonging to Mexico, or parties to the war who may attempt aggressions upon American commerce under color of letters of marque from the Mexican Government. He will give orders to the Naval commanders to treat all such adventurers as pirates, as in reality they will be. -Phila. Ledger.

The ship Kalamazoo sailed for New York on Friday last for Texas, with United States Government troops on board. [DJR]

28 August 1845; MGv46n26p2

MEXICO AND THE U. STATES.

The schooner Walter Witch, at New Orleans, from Vera Cruz, brings the latest intelligence from Mexico. From the New Orleans Tropic of the 14th, we learn that there has been as yet no declaration of war – and there is not much probability that there will be. The election of a new President commenced on the 1st inst. There are four Candidates, but the most prominent are Gen. Herrera, the President ad interim, and Gen. Almonte, the late Mexican Minister near our Government. All the bluster and gasconading of the Mexican Ministers may be set down to electioneering tricks to aid the promotion of General Herrera to office. We expect it will be found in the end, that Mexico is in no hurry to declare war against the United States. If she can raise “the needful,” she may attempt to re-conquer Texas, without any declaration of war.

The Ministry has presented an Act to the two Chambers for their deliberation, 1st. To declare war against the United States; 2d. Authorising them to make a Foreign or National loan to the amount of $15,000,000, which they consider to be requisite to carry on a war and re-conquer Texas. These proposals are now under discussion in the Chambers.

It is reported that 10,000 MEXICAN TROOPS are on their march to Texas, but the New Orleans Picayune regards the story as purely a rumor.

In the mean time, our Government seems to be wide awake, and making every necessary preparation for an outbreak of hostilities. Our troops seem to be on the march from all sections of the Union, bound for Texas. A gentleman on board of the U.S. Ship St. Mary’s, at Galveston, writes under date of August 7th, that he has learned “that the Mexicans have an army of quite 20,000 men. No doubt our people think that fifteen hundred men are sufficient to eat up Mexico, castles and all, but it will be found that the drilled Mexican soldiers are anything but contemptible foes. - The greatest source of apprehension to our army, however, is from the Camanche Indians, a fierce and warlike tribe in the very heart of Texas; and excited against us, they would prove a most distressing enemy. We expect to be in Pensacola in a few weeks. All well on board this ship. “

We believe the above constitutes the most important portion of the intelligence brought from the South.

-Since the above was prepared, we3 have received later intelligence from New Orleans.

The Bee of the 16th, says:- Gen. Gaines, now in our city, having received authentic information to the effect that 10,000 Mexican troops were within eight days’ march of Gen. Taylor, stationed at St. Joseph’s Island, immediately despatched a message to the governor of Louisiana, claiming a requisition of two regiments of volunteers, (of ten companies each) to consist of Infantry, Riflemen and Artillerists [sic]. The requisition was immediately granted. The New Orleans Bulletin of the 18th, says:-

We look upon the requisition, and the other military movements as measures of precaution, and do not think that the Government or any of its officers are in possession of more definite information in relation to the affairs of Mexico, or the movements of the troops, than has been published in the newspapers. [DJR]

04 September 1845; MGv46n27p2

FROM THE BALTIMORE AMERICAN, SEPT. 1.

MEXICO AND TEXAS.

"The Washington Union of Saturday evening says:-

"We are not advised that the Executive has received any despatches by the Ann Louisa – arrived at New York with Vera Cruz dates of the 3d inst. , and from the capital of the 30th ult. – later than they had previously received. We announced in last Monday’s ‘Union,’ accounts from the capital as late as the 30th July. “

The N.O. papers of the 23d ult, state that a letter had been received in that city from an officer with the army under General Taylor, dated Corpus Christi, August 15. The troops had left St. Joseph’s Island and were encamped on the main land – all in good health and fine spirits – no enemy near – none expected. A courier had been despatched to Matamoras and returned, who reports only 400 men at or near that place. Should this prove true, the reports hitherto received have strangely exaggerated their number.

The camp of Gen. Taylor was very pleasant, with a delightful breeze constantly prevailing.

The subjoined extract of a letter from an officer of the U.S. Dragoons, dated at Nacogdoches, on the 31st July, we copy from the N.O. Courier of the 22d ult:

“'The seven companies of Dragoons arrived here to-day, after a very warm march of six days from Fort Jesup.

"We shall leave here on the 1st of August for the Trinity, and thence for the San Antonio, where you will again hear from me. The command stood the march very well, and hope to do a good service when we reach the disputed boundary. ”
MORE VOLUNTEERS. - We understand that Capt. H.S. Harper, of Gainsville, Miss., will arrive in this city by the steamer J. Dupre, on to-morrow, with a company of 156 volunteers, destined for the Mexican frontier. They style themselves the Mississippi Riflemen. They are well furnished with all the necessary appointments for the campaign, and will hold themselves in readiness to be mustered in the service of the United States at a moment’s warning. It is their intention, we understand, to join the Regiment of Louisiana Volunteers, under the command of Col. Dakin. [DJR]

11 September 1845; MGv46n28p2

TEXAS AND MEXICO.

We learn from the New Orleans Picayune, extra, of August 30, that the Steamship Alabama from Aransas Bay, brings intelligence from Corpus Christi up to the 27th ult. One of the Editors of the Picayune came passenger in the Alabama, and brings the latest news. There seems to be no foundation for the probability of an engagement between our troops under Genl. Taylor and the Mexicans. So far there is no prospect of a fight. Genl. Taylor, himself, does not anticipate such an event. - Genl. Arista is at Matamoras with about 2,000 men, entrenching himself, and knows of Genl. Taylor’s position. It is believed that if Arista had marched at once upon Genl. Taylor, when he first landed, he might easily have overcome him, but it is now too late. Our army at Corpus Christi now numbers about 2,000 strong, and is in condition to resist four or five times that many Mexicans. The country between Corpus Christi and the Rio Grande, it is said, cannot now support an army in an attack – one of the principal impediments being a scarcity of water, of which there is little or none at all. Our troops are arriving and joining the main army almost every day. The Americans stand the climate very well. We believe the above constitutes the principal items of news brought by the Alabama.

LATEST FROM MEXICO.

Just as our paper was going to press, letters were put into our hands from Pensacola, of the 1st September, and containing despatches from Vera Cruz of the 18th and 31st August. We have only time, this evening to state the substance of the information they convey. An opinion very generally prevailing at Vera Cruz, according to the last accounts, that Mexico would not formally declare war against the United States; and that the government would be able to realize but a very small portion of the loan, if any, which had been authorised – so low was the rate of interest.

It was said that, in lieu of a declaration, Mexico would carry on hostilities vigorously against Texas; and they talked of making a rush upon her with 25,000 men; but this was generally considered as a sheer fable.

The mail of the 18th had brought news from the city of Mexico of the election of Ge3neral Herrera to the Presidency, and the formation of a new cabinet, consisting of Manuel Pena y Pena, (Minister of Foreign Relations,) Pedro Areaya, (Minister of War,) and Fernandez del Castillo, (Minister of the Treasury.)

On the 16th August, Captain Shubrick, commander of the United States ship Saratoga, exchanged salutes with the batteries of Vera Cruz. - Wash. Union Sept. 8. [DJR]

18 September 1845; MGv46n29p3

ENDED IN SMOKE.

"Beat the sheep-skin – blow the fife,
And march in training order;
Our way is through the wilderness
And all along the border."

A friend has given us a peep at the "Washington Union," and though we are just ready to go to press, we must stop to let our readers hear a crow or two from General Ritchie over Mexico. The Union gives the substance of the despatches received by our Government from Mexico to which we have alluded in our article under the head of "News from the South." These despatches represent the new Mexican Cabinet opposed to the war; and even if otherwise disposed, they are without the means to carry on a war; it is with difficulty they can raise means to defray the daily expenses of Government. The war excitement has subsided among the people. General Paredes absolutely refuses to march against Texas, and has repaired to Mexico, and others have followed his example. The Mexicans are represented as powerless, without money, without credit, torn to pieces by internal feuds and on the eve of revolution, which will overthrow the present government. Paredes, it is said, is aiming to become dictator, and is backed in his plans by Tornel and Valencia. This is a true picture of the poor miserable, poverty-stricken, half-savage Mexican people, and if the reader will only imagine General Ritchie dressed up in a soldier’s coat – with a chapeau and plumes set kimbo on his head – a big wooden sword in his hand – his mouth and heart chock full of glory marching up and down his EditorSanctum, he can well appreciate the following grandiloquent burst of glory with which he concludes the important information. Listen, Oh! He progressives, and Whigs give ear, for this great Union – the States of Texas and Austin included – stands in an elevated position, by the side of Mexico!!! The General says:- “Thus pass off the gasconades and blusters of Mexico! In what an elevated position does our country stand in comparison with her; and our bold and prompt Administration with its wise precautionary measures, compared with the hesitating, discouraged, dispirited, disorganized, and revolutionary army and officers of Mexico.” Truly a fly has been bullied, and the “bold Administration,” with General Ritchie included, look out with pride and satisfaction upon the bloodless fields of their renown. This is “glory enough for one day.” [DJR]

02 October 1845; MGv46n31p2

FROM TEXAS AND MEXICO.

The U.S. troops assembled at Corpus Christi, Texas, on the 16th instant, were as follow:- 7 companies 2d dragoons; 7 companies 7th infantry; 5 companies 5th infantry; 1 company; [sic] 3d artillery; 10 companies 3d infantry; 10 companies 4th infantry; 2 companies of volunteer artillery – numbering about 2,200 effective men. There were expected daily 5 companies 5th infantry; 15 companies of artillery, and 3 companies of 7th infantry.

A letter from an officer of the U.S. Army, written on the 16th instant, says- “Our army is in fine condition for active service. We hear of no war, or advance of Mexicans, although they may be forming their army some distance in the interior, behind the Rio Grande, without our knowing it.

Despatches have been received by the War Department from Gen. TAYLOR up to the 14th instant, but they contain no important information. Arista, the Mexican General, had been at Mier, but not accompanied with a military force; nor was there any indication of the concentration of a Mexican force on the Rio Grande. [DJR]

30 October 1845; MGv46n35p2

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Sept. 20, 1845.

My Dear Sir: I write to you from the seat of War – or rather of Peace – for here there is neither war, nor the rumor of war. I have concerned myself with more than twenty Mexicans during the last thirty days that I have been on the frontier, from this point 150 miles inland – Mexicans direct from the other side of the Rio Grande – and all concur in saying that there is no movement, on that side, that there has been none, and will be none, rumors to the contrary notwithstanding. The Mexican provinces bordering on the Rio Grande desire peace, and would with extreme reluctance, join any military expedition. There will be no war, unless our troops are ordered to pass the Rio Grande! The Army, under Gen. Taylor, makes a noble appearance – quiet, orderly, well disciplined. I have now finished my travels in Texas, and only wait an opportunity to embark from this place to Galveston, and I shall embrace the first opportunity to return to the North. I have seen nearly every portion of this country: frontier settlements, Camanche Indians, and all else worth seeing.

[DJR]

November

MG45v46n38p1c7 November 20, 1845: Late from Texas. From the New Orleans Picayune, Oct. 25th

The steamship Cincinnati arrived at this port yesterday from Galveston. She brings us copious flies of Texas papers, those from Galveston coming down to Saturday the 18th inst.

Ira Munson, Esq., came passenger in the Cincinnati, with dispatches from the Government to the Texas Legation at Washington.

The U.S. steamer Col. Long arrived at Galveston o the 15th inst. from this port, and left on the 17th for Corpus Christi.

The German brig Herschel arrived at Galveston on the 10th inst. from Bremen, with 138 emigrants, and the following day the brig Aminius, from the same port, with 125 emigrants. They are all destined for the colony of Fisher & Miller. -- The News says that among the emigrants there was a number whose appearance gave evidence of superior standing and character.
The election took place in Texas on Monday, the 13th inst. So strong was the conviction that the opposition to Annexation would be fruitless, that there was not a heavy vote polled. We annex such returns as have reached us, reminding the reader that the vote was taken upon three distinct questions, Annexation, Adoption of the Constitution and the Ordinance. -- [The ordinance the reader will recollect, relates to Colonization Contracts:]

City of Galveston

For Annexation 270 Against Annexation 121
" Constitution 284 " Constitution 83
" Ordinance 269 " Ordinance 65

The highest vote here polled upon Annexation, was but 391, but little over half the legal vote of the city.

City of Houston

For Annexation 241 Against Annexation 44
" Constitution 223 " Constitution 58
" Ordinance 195 " Ordinance 60

Here again the total vote, 285, is very small, no interest being excited.

From one of our exchanges we learn that Mr. McGloin, the former Empresario of San Patricio, has moved with his family from San Antonio to the former place, in company with several other families. Confidence appears to be again restored to the long deserted West.

The Houston Telegraph gives 11,359 bales as the amount of cotton shipped form Houston for the twelve months preceding the 31st of August last. The Telegraph says it is the opinion of Mr. Davis, the proprietor of the cotton warehouse, that there will be nearly double the quantity shipped form Houston this year.

The Galveston Civilian ridicule the “speculative demand” which sprung up in this market a fortnight since for Texas money. The Civilian coolly remarks:

Texas has at present no mode of paying either principal or interest of this species of paper credit. It is not even receivable for public lands. If the U.S. Government hereafter chooses to redeem this paper at par, and take out lands, Texas will probably offer no objection, but if Texas is to make payment, she will possibly have some regard for the law of equivalents, and may refuse or be unable to pay ten or fifteen millions of dollars in specie, for that which neither realized to her nor cost the holders one-third of that sum!

The Civilian adds, that the prospect of redemption of Texas money at par is “neither immediate nor clear. ”

The papers mention an affray which not long since took place in Nacogdoches county, between a Mr. Selman and a Mr. Banks, in which the former was stabbed through the heart.

The old story has been revived, on what is deemed “the best authority,” that a plan had been matured in Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, Coahuila, Sonora and California, for the annexation of those provinces to the Republic of Texas, in case she had determined to remain separate and independent. According to this story, several leading men in the central part of Mexico expressed their determination, in this event, to remove to the above named provinces, in order to enjoy the blessings of a peaceful and stable Government.

The Houston Telegraph mentions that the Lipans and Tonkawas are preparing to abandon their late encampments on the tributaries of the Guadalupe and San Antonio, and intend removing high up on the Colorado, to occupy a portion of the country lately granted them by the Camanches. Many of the warriors of these tribes have intermarried with the Camanches.

The same paper indulges in some reflections upon the Camanches, and the late efforts of the Texas Government to conclude a treaty with them at Torry’s trading-house. This was the fifth attempt of the Government, and the Indians appeared as timid and suspicious as ever. They, however, pledged themselves to maintain a permanent peace for the settlers. It is presumed that they craved more liberal presents of the Texans, and will now apply for such to the Mexicans. It matters little, according to the Telegraph, which regards their military power as utterly broken. [LA]
The steamship New York, Philips master, sailed from Galveston on the 23d inst. and arrived here last evening. She bring us no news whatever. --N. O. Pic, 26th.

The barque Ann W. Stevens, J. M. Stevens, master, from Bremen and Bremenhaven, (a port some five miles below Bremen, on the river Weiser,) arrived here a few days ago, with one hundred and thirty-nine German emigrants, most of who were bound for Texas. One hundred and five of the above number started for Red River on the Rob Roy, on Friday last. These go to form a colony near the line bordering between our young sister State and Louisiana. The are well supplied and all the utensils necessary for a border life, and from their appearance seem to be persons qualified in every particular to the successful in their undertaking. Prosperity and happiness to them, say, we, with all our heart. --N. O. Delta, Oct. 26

The New Orleans Delta condenses the views of the state of the crops in Texas as follows:

Corn Crop.--The crop in the Red River and Northern counties has been greatly injured by the drouth. The editor of the Northern Standard mentions that the neighborhood of Clarksville is the only section of the Red River counties where there will be much corn for sale. He states also the corn in the Choctaw Nation is burned up. Fortunately for the people of that section the crop of potatoes will be very abundant.

Cotton Crop.--The severe drouth that prevailed during nearly the whole of the months of July and August, throughout the western and middle counties of Texas, has materially injured the cotton crop. --Along the whole line of the Colorado, from Columbia to Austin, it is estimated, says the Houston Telegraph, that the crop will fall short nearly one-half. On the Brazos above San Felipe, the planters will scarcely make more than two-thirds of an average crop; and on the Trinity the crop is as light as on the Colorado. In the eastern counties, the crop is said to be better than it is in any of the counties west of the Trinity. It is probable that the while crop of Texas will scarcely exceed ninety thousand bales. Last year it was estimated at over one hundred thousand bales.

There were shipped from Houston, from September 1st, 1844, to August 31st, 1845, eleven thousand, three hundred and fifty-nine bales of cotton. [LA]

---

December

11 December 1845; MGv46n41, EXTRA

MESSAGE

OF THE

President of the United States.

[02] DECEMBER, 1845.

Fellow Citizens of the Senate

And House of Representatives:

[The entirety of this address can be found at: http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/site/docset/sou/polk1.htm

Included here is a brief excerpt that treats U. S. -Mexican relations. ]

I regret to inform you that our relations with Mexico, since your last session, have not been of the amicable character which it is our desire to cultivate with all foreign nations. On the 6th day of March last, the Mexican envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States made a formal protest, in the name of his government, against the joint resolution passed by Congress, "for the annexation of Texas to the United States," which he chose to regard as a violation of the rights of Mexico, and, in consequence of it, he demanded his passports. He was informed that the government of the United States did not consider this joint resolution as a violation of any of the rights of...
REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The following is a brief sketch of the contents of this document, which we take from the Washington Union:

It exhibits, in the first instance, the organization, strength, and constitution of the regular army. The rank and file – embracing every arm of the service – does not exceed 6,500 men. At this time, there is stationed but a single regiment on the northern frontier, from Maine to Lake Superior – an extent of two thousand miles; and on the whole line from the Falls of St. Anthony to New Orleans, (fifteen hundred miles,) only one regiment of dragoons and two of infantry. The artillery regiments – reduced by detachments of four companies from each – now garrison the fortification of the seaboard, from Newport to New Orleans. The remaining and larger proportion of the army is now stationed in Texas. The report gives an interesting account of the political reasons which have induced the government to give them this destination. The Secretary does not think it prudent to remove the troops from this position until our relations with Mexico have assumed a more amicable character. In the event of there being any necessity to increase the army, he proposes to build upon the basis of the regiments, by adding to the rank and file of each company, instead of creating new regiments. This necessity may be found in the course of Mexico, or in the conduct of the Camanches, or of the Indians that are found in Oregon or that may interrupt the increasing current of emigration to the Rocky mountains. By the proposed arrangement of filling up the infantry companies to sixty-eight men, and the dragoons to sixty, the privates are increased, without a corresponding augmentation of the officers.

The report suggests that, besides this increase of the number of privates in the two existing regiments of dragoons, another regiment of dragoons, or mounted riflemen may be necessary, in the event of extending our posts to the Rocky mountains.

It states that, thought the concentration of so large a proportion of the army on the frontier of Texas may have, in some measure, enlarged the expenditures,) certainly in the article of transportation,) yet it has in some degree, been compensated by the improvement which has taken place in the discipline of troops. It renews the recommendation of establishing a corps of sappers, miners, and pontoniers, to assist among other things, in constructing bridges, in consequence of the military occupation of Texas. One hundred men will be sufficient for the purpose.

The report gives a rapid but interesting account of Colonel Kearney’s expedition during the last summer, to the South Pass of the Rocky mountains; the impression it produced among the Indians; the number of emigrants whom it met on their way to Oregon, to the number of 2,325 men, women, and children, with 7,000 head of cattle, 400 horses and mules, and 460 wagons. This report of Colonel Kearney accompanies the communication of the commanding general, and will furnish, no doubt, an interesting store of extracts, at a season of greater leisure. It also refers to the adventures of another detachment of the dragoons, under the command of Captain Sumner nearly to the northern line of the United States, between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods. Among the Indians whom they met with on their route, and upon whom they made a due impression with their military array, was a numerous band of the half-breeds of the Red river of the North, who had come from the region of the Hudson Bay Company into our lines, to hunt buffalo. They had even solicited permission to reside in the United States.

The Secretary refers to the considerations which had prompted General Gaines to despatch the volunteers of Louisiana to the camp of General Taylor. Ample justice is done to their gallantry, and Congress is invited to make appropriations for their compensation. General Taylor had also accepted the services of four Texan companies of mounted men for three months.

The estimates for the ensuing year do not greatly vary from those of former years. The item for arming the fortifications is increased $100,000. The attention of Congress is directed to the state of the fortifications – to the armories of Springfield and Harper’s Ferry – to the establishment of a national foundry for cannon – to the preservation of the gunpowder belonging to the government – to the condition of the mineral lands in the Northwest, which the Secretary proposes to transfer from the management of the ordnance department to some other, (the President’s message suggests to the land office.)

It calls the attention of Congress to the forty-eight forts in process of construction; and to the propriety of erecting new forts at other points. Among these, as suggested by the reports of the engineers, are fortifications of the narrows at Staten Island and at Sandy Hook, and the condition of the long-suspended fortress at the Pea Patch; an additional work at Sollers Point, for the protection of Baltimore; and projected fortifications on the Florida reefs.

25 December 1845; MGv46n43p1
The Secretary speaks with great consideration of the schools at West Point, and proposes some improvements. He calls special attention to the report of the chief of the corps of topographical engineers – to the improvement of the harbors on the lakes, which are so well calculated to furnish accommodations to steamers that, in a state of war, may be turned to the most effective purposes, and to furnish facilities to a commerce that is now estimated at one hundred millions of dollars annually.

The Secretary speaks with enthusiasm of the expeditions under Captain Fremont, and his valuable services. He refers to the reports of the pension office, which has now registered upon its books 28,921 pensioners – 2,371 added during the last year, and 1,436 known to have died. He devotes a considerable space to the Indian agency and the Indians – the Potawatomies, the Choctaws, and particularly the Cherokees. He lays before the President some highly interesting communications from our Indian sub-agent in the territory of Oregon.

He dedicates the conclusion of his comprehensive and very interesting report to a subject which is of so profound importance in a free government, [illegible] the organization of the militia. He suggests various alterations; and among the rest, submits the question whether it might not be advisable to reduce the period of service from 18 years of age to 21, upon the ground that although citizens of eighteen years of age are not too young to bear arms, they are not generally in a situation to equip themselves with arms as the law requires. [DJR]
The Mexican-American War and the Media, 1845-1848

Martinsburg Gazette
January-June 1846

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>January-June 1845</th>
<th>July-December 1845</th>
<th>January-June 1846</th>
<th>July-December 1846</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>January-June 1847</td>
<td>July-December 1847</td>
<td>January-June 1848</td>
<td>July-December 1848</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Index

08 January 1846; MGv46n45p1 CALIFORNIA

22 January 1846; MGv46n47p1 IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

29 January 1846; MGv46n48p2 MEXICO.

February 1846

March 1846

26 March 1846; vol 47, no4p3 FRANCE AND MEXICO.

April 1846

Thursday April 2, 1846   MG46v47n5p2c5   Mail Route to Oregon
Says the postal service is trying to establish one

Thursday April 2, 1846   MG46v47n5p2c6   Special Message of the President to Congress
About Mexico and U.S. relations

Thursday April 9, 1846 MG46v47n6    Issue to light to read

Thursday April 16, 1846   MG46v47n7p1c4   Benton and Hanegan
Debate on the Oregon Question

Thursday April 16, 1846   MG46v47n7p2c7   The Foreign News
Extracts from English papers on the Oregon Question

Thursday April 23, 1846   MG46v47n8p1c3   Oregon Question
Public debates and opinions

Thursday April 23, 1846   MG46v47n8p1c5   Santa Anna
Reprint of the proclamation made by Santa Anna

Thursday April 23, 1846   MG46v47n8p2c1   Oregon in the Senate
Senate debates the Oregon issue

Thursday April 23, 1846   MG46v47n8p2c2   Mexico and the U.S.
Says situation is leaning towards war

Thursday April 23, 1846   MG46v47n8p2c5   The Oregon Question
More transcripts from House of Lords debate

April 30, 1846, v47n9p2c4 Words: 80
LATE FROM GENERAL TAYLOR
General Taylor’s report of his army’s position opposite Matamoras.
The Oregon Resolution

Senate debates and votes on resolutions

May 14, 1846, v47n11p2c1 Words: 1725
WAR WITH MEXICO—PRESIDENT’S MESSAGE &C.
An account of the President’s reasons for declaring war against Mexico, and his hopes for a quick peace.

May 14, 1846, v47n11p2c1, Words: 218
No Title
The House of Representatives passing the war bill. The objections of some Whig congressmen recorded.

May 14, 1846, v47n11p2c5-6 Words: 903
FROM TEXAS AND MEXICO
COL. CROSS MURDERED!!!!—HIS BODY FOUND
Account of the discovery of Colonel Cross on the Rio Grande, near Matamoras, and General Taylor’s demand for the murderer.

May 14, 1846, v47n11p2c5-6 Words: 171
BLOCKADE OF THE RIO GRANDE.
Objection of the British consul over the restriction of trade into the Rio Grande.

May 14, 1846, v47n11p2c5-6 Words: 405
IMPORTANT FROM THE ARMY
The capture of Captain Thorton (also spelled Thornton) and forty-six cavalry troops by Mexican forces. General Taylor surrounded by Mexican forces.

May 14, 1846, v47n11p3c3 Words: 111
WAR! WAR!!
CRITICAL POSITION OF THE ARMY

May 14, 1846, v47n11p3c3 Words: 875
THE SURPRISE AND DEFEAT OF CAPTAIN THORNTON
A longer story about the defeat of an American cavalry unit.

May 14, 1846, v47n11p3c3 Words 107
DESERTERS
The attempts of Mexican forces to inspire desertion, as well as the congressional response.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p2c1 Words: 260
FROM WASHINGTON
By the President of the U. States of America
A PROCLAMATION
The declaration of war by James Polk. Declaration states that Mexico started the war by invading the United States and killing Americans.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p2c1 Words: 2525
THE WAR BILL OF CONGRESS
A much longer account of the House of Representatives approval of declaration of war, including a complete reproduction of the war bill. Several Whig objections to the war in Mexico.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p2c1 Words: 2127
UNITED STATES SENATE
The Senate’s passage of the war bill, including the objections of Whig senators.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p2c5 Words: 790
THE WAR WITH MEXICO, &C
An article encouraging Americans to support the war in Mexico. Says that the war is a patriotic, manly thing.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p2c1 Words: 111
GENERAL MUSTER
Answering questions (presumably from readers, although it does not say) why the Regimental Parade has not been published.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p2c7 Words: 588
FROM THE ARMY
Account of a skirmish between Texas Rangers and Mexican forces. Additionally, General Taylor’s encirclement by Mexican forces is dismissed as nothing the General can not handle.
May 21, 1846, v47n12p3c2 Words: 1345
LATEST!
FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.
AMERICAN TROOPS VICTORIOUS!!
A short report about a battle between the Mexicans and Americans. This article is filled with more rumors than facts.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p3c2 Words: 497
THE GEOGRAPHY OF MEXICO, &c., FROM THE BATTLE GROUND
A description of Mexico geographically, including the exact position of the American forces.

May 21, 1846, v47n12p3c2 Words: 275
WHY ARE WE AT WAR?
An editorial that blames the war on Mexico on a financial crises that the state of Texas. The United States needs the extra capitol generated by the northern Mexican territory in order to pay Texas’s debt.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 201
BERKLEY VOLUNTEERS.
Short notice that volunteers leaving for Mexico will be meeting soon to elect officers.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c2-3 Words: 1725
VOLUNTEERS FOR MEXICO—REGIMENTAL PARADE—CHAS. J. FAULKNER’S SPEECH—VISIT OF POTOMAC DRAGOONS.
A patriotic description of some volunteers leaving for Mexico, including a speech giving the President’s reasons for the current war with Mexico.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 532
THE WAR NEWS
A short article claiming victory for American forces in Mexico, no details of the battle given.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 242
IMPORTANT NEWS
From the Seat of War
The American Army Triumphant!
THE MEXICANS TWICE ROUTED AND 1000 KILLED!
Expands on previous article, limited account of the action, mentions the capture of General Vega by American forces.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words 1133
Confirmatory Accounts.
TWENTY THOUSAND MEXICANS MARCHING TO MATAMORAS!
Position of the Mexican and American armies, more claims of American victories over Mexican forces.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 1302
STILL LATER FROM THE ARMY.
Numerous rumors of Mexican reinforcements approaching Matamoras, as well as a report detailing the events of the fort opposite Matamoras. A limited account of the battles on the 8th and 9th of May is also included, although with little detail.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 205
FURTHER ITEMS OF WAR NEWS
Comparison of the American and Mexican forces, names of wounded officers from the battles of the 8th and 9th of May.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 272
CAMP VICTORY, NEAR MATAMORAS,
A letter from an officer giving a brief description of the state of the aftermath of the battles of the 8th and 9th.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 16
No title
A correction of rumor printed earlier, concerning General Taylor’s departure from his fort opposite Matamoras.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 1106
FURTHER ITEMS OF INTELLIGENCE
A letter comparing the numbers of the Mexican and American armies at the battles of the 8th and 9th. Also a description of the prisoner exchange.

May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 1419
A PROCLAMATION
A report from the “Diario Official” encouraging Mexicans to rise up and fight against American aggression.
May 28, 1846, v47n12 p2c1 Words: 685
GENERAL SCOTT
A short biography of the elderly general, highlighting his victories during the War of 1812, in preparation for the General’s preparation to lead forces into Mexico.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p2c1 Words: 2224
THE MEXICAN WAR—GEN. SCOTT—PRESIDENT MAKING
An editorial claiming that the Mexican war is unjust, but since it has begun the honor of the nation demands that the United States be victorious in this war.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p2c3 Words: 597
LATEST FROM THE ARMY
CROSSING THE RIO GRANDE BY THE AMERICAN ARMY AND PROBABLE SURRENDER OF MATAMORAS
Report of General Taylor’s arrival at camp with supplies from Point Isabel. Also a list of officers wounded and killed in the previous battles.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p2c5 Words: 399
MEXICAN STATEMENT OF THEIR OWN LOSS—PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.
An interview the aid of Mexican General Arista, claiming that the Mexican army lost 800 men, also an examination of General Arista’s personal papers, including his campaign plan.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p2c5, Words: 248
BY THE GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA
A PROCLAMATION
A statement from the governor of Virginia authorizing the creation of volunteer units for the Mexican war.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p2 Column 5, Words: 838
FORM OF ENROLLMENT.
A follow up article that describes how officers and privates should be uniformed prior to their enlistment with the American army.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p2 Column 5, Words: 2980
BATTLES ON THE RIO GRANDE
A letter from an officer that gives an in depth account of the battles on the 8th and 9th of May. Included are the deaths of many officers, and an overestimation of the number of troops in the Mexican army.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p3c1, Words: 2021
BOMBARDMENT OF FORT BROWN
A letter from a second officer describing the attack on Fort Brown (Taylor’s fort opposite Matamoras), including the death of Major Brown.

June 4, 1846, v47n14p3c3 Words: 954
THE FLYING ARTILLERY—RINGGOLD—RIDGELY, &c.
Another account of the battles of the 8th and 9th of May. This account focuses on the death (in the case of Major Ringgold) and the bravery (in the case of Major Ridgely) during the battle.

June 11, 1846, v47n15p1c4-6. Words: 2237
MORE ABOUT THE WAR.
MARCH FROM CORPUS CHRISTI.
A letter from an officer to his family describing the American army’s march from Corpus Christi, the staging area, to the area on the bank of the Rio Grande opposite Matamoras.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p1c6. Words: 618
CAPT. SAMUEL H. WALKER.
A biography of an officer in Taylor’s army. The biography highlights Walker’s character as a gentleman and soldier.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p1c6, Words: 593
THE LATE MAJOR RINGGOLD
Another biography of the famous Major, highlighting his career in the army and his death.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p1c6, Words: 690
CAPTAIN MAY
A biography of Major May. His recent capture of a Mexican cannon, and its commander General Vega is the highlight.
June 11, 1846. v47n15p1c6, Words: 212
"IF I GO TO WAR I WILL BE SHOT."
[General Observation]
An advertisement from an astrologer, offering to read people’s fortune, and then tell his clients whether they should go to war or stay home.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p2c1 Words: 242
MILITARY SPIRIT OF BERKELEY
Praises the military spirit of the Berkley volunteers leaving for the war in Mexico.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p2c2 Words: 231
GENERAL SCOTT
An editorial that accuses the President of using politics to rob General Scott of his glory as a military commander.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p2c4 Words: 1518
LATE FROM THE SEAT OF WAR
A report that the town of Matamoros had been taken, as well as rumors about the position and strength of the Mexican army.

June 11, 1846. v47n15, Page2c4, Words: 752
LATEST
The naval blockade of Vera Cruz.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p2c4, Words: 120
OPINIONS OF SANTA ANNA ON THE WAR
Santa Anna is portrayed as believing in the righteousness of the American cause.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p2c4, Words: 21
No title
General Almonte’s states that General Alvarez’s revolution will be hard to defeat.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p2c4, Words: 133
BOUNDARY OF TEXAS
The 1836 declaration of the Republic of Texas stating that the border of Texas is the Rio Grande.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p3c2 Words: 46
ATTENTION CAVALRY!
A notice that a volunteer unit of cavalry will be electing officers soon.

June 11, 1846. v47n15p3c2, Words: 54
MILITARY NOTICE
A unit of volunteer infantry will be electing officers soon.

June 25, 1846. v47n17p2c6 Words: 730
STATE OF THE FINANCES MESSAGE
President Polk’s estimates the cost to wage a war with Mexico, and how it would be possible to raise the money.

June 25, 1846. v47n17 Page 3c3 and 4 Words: 1508
LATE FROM MEXICO.
FROM GALVESTON AND RIO GRANDE—FIRST MOVEMENT OF INVASION OF MEXICO.
This article reports on the retreat of General Arista and General Taylor’s treaty with the local Indians.

June 25, 1846. v47n17p3c4. Words: 540
IMPORTANT RUMOR FROM THE ARMY.
An article stating that General Arista had moved to Monterrey, and General Taylor’s preparations to pursue. The article also reports that the Oregon Treaty has been ratified.

08 January 1846; MGv46n45p1

CALIFORNIA.- It is stated that there are ten females to one male in California, and many of them possess large landed properties all improved. These ladies are described as being beautiful, quite youthful, and exceeding virtuous, but anxious for good, kind and considerate husbands. We anticipate, after these facts are generally known, that California will be taken. [DJR]
22 January 1846; MGv46n47p1

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

By the United States ship St. Marys, which arrived at Pensacola on the d instant, in ten days from Vera Cruz, we learn (through the Pensacola Gazette) of the refusal of the Mexican Government to receive Mr. SLIDELL as Minister from the United States. Mr. S., however, has not returned in the St. Marys, nor does the Gazette vouch for the correctness of the news; but says that it is “disposed to credit it on account of our critical relations with Great Britain, a circumstance of which Mexico would not hesitate to take advantage.” On the other hand, the Pensacola Democrat, which says that Mr. SLIDELL “was not well received,” ascribes the conduct of the Mexican Government to the impending revolutions by which it is embarrassed.

A private letter, dated at Pensacola on the 3d instant, which we find in the Mobile Journal, throws but little additional light on the subject. It says:

"The St. Marys, which vessel you will remember carried our Minister to Vera Cruz, arrived here yesterday evening after a voyage of ten days, and anchored off the Navy Yard. Up to the time I write no one has boarded her, but several came ashore from her. She is understood to bring large despatches for our Government. Those who came from her report (and the report is credited) that our Minister was badly received by the Mexican Government, and was in fact insulted. Another version of the story is, that he was not received and recognized as such at all. Both reports, however, resolve themselves pretty much into the same thing. This statement has created no little excitement here, and, if true, as I have but little doubt one or the other is, it is presumed that the entire Gulf squadron will shortly appear before Vera Cruz."

In a day or two we shall, no doubt, receive further information on the subject.

-Nat. Int. [DJR]

29 January 1846; MGv46n48p2

MEXICO.

The few extracts which we give below will give the reader some idea of the present deplorable of the Mexican Republic. It seems to us that this unhappy and wretched Republic must soon be numbered among "the things that were." The people are incapable of self government.

The Vox del Puebla [sic], a leading Mexican Paper, gives a sad picture of the condition of that Republic. Of the administration of the departments, it says:-

"The pen of Jeremiah could not adequately describe the fearful ravages recently committed by the wild savages on our frontier settlements. We have received papers from Satillo [sic], Monterey, Durango, and Zacatacas. In those departments the knife and the firebrand turn entire villages into rivers of blood and heaps of ashes. There are constantly enacted those frightful tragedies so often noticed, so often lamented; there are felt the awful effects of that guilty neglect, that deadly apathy, that lethargic slumber of our government – a living shame to civilization, to religion, to humanity – there the wretched inhabitants pray with imposing looks, but alas! in vain, for a protecting arm to save their wives and daughters from pollution and murder.- Year follows year and brings no relief, no respite to the dreadful sacrifice of thousands of human victims. The press of the departments is filled with supplications to put a stop to such atrocities – but they fall on deaf ears; meanwhile, tributes, monopolies and custom houses are kept in full force."

The annexation of Texas is referred to as a thing beyond recall [sic]. "Texas is gone," says the Mexican paper, "gone forever and beyond redemption to our natural enemies, the Anglo-Americans, who know but too well how to estimate us at our true value." In view of the future destiny of Texas as a part of the great American Republic, a confession is extorted from the Mexican Journal, which it says is a bitter one indeed, and adds:-

"That Department, wrested from us by an act of usurpation and perfidy never before equalled, will at once start on a new career of improvement and prosperity – safe from savage inroads, arbitrary exactions, unjust prohibitions and monopolies, a fertile soil will plentifully reward the honest labor of the husbandman, the mechanic arts will flourish, each citizen will be free to arm himself for his own and his country's defence, and each will have the right to practice, unmolested, the religion which his conscience dictates. Texas, by renouncing her separate sovereignty, will cease to be, as heretofore, a country of outlaws, and become a part of a powerful nation, whose growing prosperity will shed its beneficial influence over the new territory. Such is the destiny of that Department, severed from us and now forming part of the American Union. The tendency of an example so pernicious is clear to all."

The last Washington Union contains the following important intelligence:-

LATEST FROM MEXICO.
By the arrival, on the 14th instant, of the United States brig Porpoise, at Pensacola, (twelve days from Vera Cruz,) the intelligence of a revolution in Mexico has been confirmed.

It appears that on the morning of the 30th, the troops relied upon by the government to defend it against Paredes pronounced in his favor; and the government entered into terms of capitulation with General Paredes. He entered and took possession of the city on that day without opposition.

The rumor was, that General Paredes manifested less opposition to the reception of Mr. Slidell than the late President, Herrera. [DJR]

26 March 1846; vol 47, no4p3

FRANCE AND MEXICO.

The idea broached by the London Times of the re-establishment of monarchy in Mexico has been received upon the whole, with favor by the Parisian press. Even the republican National does not denounce it, if it be the pleasure of the Mexicans, but insists upon the full liberty of action being allowed them.- It also advises that in any measures the French government may be induced to join in, care be taken that it not be made the dupe of England. [DJR]

Thursday April 30, 1846, Volume 47, Number 9, Page 2, Column 4 Words: 80

LATE FROM GENERAL TAYLOR

From the New Orleans Correspondence of the Baltimore American dated April 20th, we take the following extract—

He maintained his ground opposite the town, and was in possession of the two ferries. On the 28th ult. GEN Ampudia had reached Matamoras with a body of 3,000 troops under his command and the Mexican force then in the town was upwards of 4,000 men. The general impression was that the dispute between the Governments would be, or had been, amicably adjusted.

Thursday, May 14, 1846, Volume 47, Number 11, Page 2, Column 1 Words: 1725

WAR WITH MEXICO—PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE &C.

We refer the reader's attention to the important news from our "Army of Occupation." It will be found in another column. It will be seen that "the war" has commenced—there is no telling yet what will be the end of it. Great excitement prevails everywhere in the country where the news has reached.-- Large meetings have been held in NEW ORLEANS, MOBILE, &C., and our people are responding with great alacrity to the calls of their country. We have no comment this week, and content ourselves by detailing the facts as they exist.

The President on Monday sent in a message to the House of Congress upon the subject of "the existing war" between the Republic of Mexico and the United States, in which he refers to his statements made in his Annual Message respecting the relations existing between the two countries, and "the causes which led to the suspension of diplomatic intercourse between the two countries in March, 1845, and the long continued and unredressed wrongs and injuries committed by the Mexican Government on citizens of the U. States in their persons and property." He then refers to the strong desire upon the part of our government "to establish peace with Mexico on liberal and honorable terms, and our readiness to adjust and regulate our boundary and other differences with that power on such fair and equitable principles as would lead to permanent relations of the most friendly nature, which induced him in September last to seek the reopening of the diplomatic relations between the two countries. In futherance of this object the Hon. JOHN SLIDELL of La., was, on the 10th of November 1845, commissioned as envoy extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Mexico with full powers to adjust both the questions of the Texas boundary and the indemnification to our citizens. Mr. SLIDELL repaired to Mexico and presented himself as minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, and, notwithstanding he was there by agreement between the two governments, the Mexican government refused to receive him of listen to his propositions. His mission proving unavailing he returned home, and the Mexicans have at last invaded our territory and murdered our citizens on our own soil. The Message then enters into full detail on the origin, progress and failure of Mr. SLIDELL's mission, and concludes with this language.

Thus the government of Mexico, though solemnly pledged by official acts in October last to receive and accredit an American envoy, violated their pledged faith, and refused the offer of a peaceful adjustment of our difficulties. Not only was the offer rejected, but the indignity of its rejection was enhanced by the manifest breach of faith in refusing to admit the envoy, who came because they had bound themselves to receive him. Nor can it be said that the offer was fruitless for want of opportunity to discuss it: our envoy was present on their own soil. Nor can it be ascribed to a want of sufficient powers: our envoy had full powers to adjust every question of difference. Nor was there room for complaint that our propositions for settlement were unreasonable: permission was not given our envoy to make any proposition whatever. Nor can it be objected that we, on our part, would not listen to any reasonable terms of their suggestion: the Mexican government refused all negotiation, and have made no proposition of any kind.

The Message then explains at length the operations and movements of our "Army of Occupation" and the authority under they act &c. --and concludes thus—

The army moved from Corpus Christi on the 11th of March and on the 29th of the month on the left bank of the Del Norte, opposite to Matamoras where it encamped on a commanding position, which has since been strengthened by the erection of field works.—A depot has also been established at Point Isabel, near the Brazos Santiago, thirty miles rear of the encampment. The selection of his position was necessarily confined to the judgement of the general in command.

The Mexican forces at Matamoras assumed a belligerent attitude, and on the 12th of April, General AMPUDIA, then in command, notified General TAYLOR to break his camp within twenty—four hours, and to retire beyond the Nueces river, and in the event of failure to comply with these demands, announced that arms and arms alone must decide the question. But no open act of hostility until the twenty fourth of April. On that day, General ARISTA, who had succeeded to the command of the Mexican forces communicated to General TAYLOR that "he considered hostilities commenced and should prosecute them." A party of dragoons of sixty-three men and officers were on the same day dispatched from the American camp up Rio Del Norte, on its left bank, to ascertain whether the Mexican troops had crossed, or were preparing to cross the river, "became engaged with a large body of their troops, and after a short affair, in which some sixteen were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender."

The grievous wrongs perpetuated by Mexico upon our citizens throughout a long period of years remain undressed; and solemn treaties pledging her public faith for this redress have been disregarded. A government either unable or unwilling to enforce the execution of such treaties fails to perform one of its plainest duties.

Our commerce with Mexico has been almost annihilated. It was formerly highly beneficial to both nations; but our merchants have been deterred from prosecuting it by the system of – and – which the Mexican authorities have pursued against them, whilst their appeals through their own government for indemnity have been made in vain. Our forbearance has gone to such an extreme as to be mistaken in its character. Had we acted with vigor in repelling the insults and redressing the injuries inflicted by Mexico at the commencement, we should doubtless have escaped all the difficulties in which we are now involved.

Instead of this, however, we have been exerting our best efforts to propitiate her good will. Upon the pretext that Texas, a nation as independent as herself thought proper to unite its destinies with our own, she has effectually believed that we have severed our rightful territory and in official proclamations and manifestoes, has repeatedly threatened to make war on us for the purpose of reconquering Texas. In the mean time, we have tried every effort at reconciliation. The cup of forbearance has been exhausted, even before the recent information from the frontier of the Del Norte. But now, after reiterated menaces, Mexico has passed the boundary of the United States, has invaded our territory, and shed American blood upon the American soil.-- She has proclaimed that hostilities have commenced, and that the two nations are now at war.

As war exists, notwithstanding all our efforts to avoid it, exists by the act of Mexico herself, we are called upon by every consideration of duty and patriotism, to vindicate with decision the honor, the rights, and the interests of our country.

Anticipating the possibility of a crisis like that which has arrived, instructions were given in August last, "as a precautionary measure, "against invasion, or threatened invasion, authorizing General TAYLOR, if the emergency required, to accept volunteers, not from Texas only, but from the states of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and Kentucky; and corresponding letter were addressed to the respective governors of those states.

These instructions were repeated; and in January last, soon after the incorporation of "Texas into the Union of the States," Gen TAYLOR was further "authorized by the president to make a requisition upon the executive of the State for such of its militia force as may be needed to repel the invasion or to secure the country against apprehended invasion." On the 2d day of March he was again reminded, "in the event of the approach of any considerable Mexican force, promptly and efficiently to use the authority with which he was clothed to call to him such auxiliary force as he may need."

In further vindication of our rights and defence of our territory, I invoke the prompt action of congress to recognize the existence of the war, and to place at the disposition of the Executive the means of prosecuting the war with vigor, and thus hasten the restoration of peace. To this end I recommend that authority should be given to call into the public service a large body of volunteers to for not less than six or twelve months, unless sooner discharged. A volunteer force is, beyond question, more efficient than any other description of citizen soldiers; and it is not to be doubted that a number far beyond that required would readily rush to the field upon the call of their country. I further recommend that a liberal provision be made for sustaining our entire military force, and furnishing it with the supplies and munitions for war.

The most energetic and prompt measures, and the immediate appearance in arms of a large and over powering force, are recommended to congress as the most certain and efficient means of bringing the existing collision with Mexico to a speedy and successful conclusion.
In making these recommendations, I deem it proper to declare the it is my anxious desire not only to terminate hostilities speedily, but to bring all matters in dispute between this Government and Mexico to an early and amicable adjustment; and in this view I shall be prepared to renew negotiations, whenever Mexico shall be ready to receive propositions or to make propositions of her own.

I transmit herewith a copy of the correspondence between one Envoy to Mexico and the Mexican Minister for foreign affairs; and so much of the correspondence between that Envoy and the Secretary of State, and between the Secretary of War and the General in command on the Del Norte, as are necessary to a full understanding of the subject.

JAMES K. POLK

Thursday, May 14, 1846, Volume 47, Number 11, Page 2, Column 1, Words: 218

Washington, May 11, 1846.

It will be seen from the annexed proceedings which we clip from the Congressional report of the Baltimore Sun of the 12th inst. that the House of Representatives have responded with great promptness to the Message—and the Senate will doubtless concur in the action of the House.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

As the cars left the bill containing Mr. Boyd’s amendment was read a third time and passed by a vote of yeas 174, nays 14.

The bill recognizes the existence of war appropriates 10,000,000 and authorizes the President to accept the services of 50,000 volunteers.

In addition to the present military and naval force the President is authorized to complete all the public armed vessels, and to purchase such merchant vessels and steamboats as can be easily converted into armed vessels.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read as act to provide for the prosecution of the existence of war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico.

The amendments of the senate to the bill providing for the increase of the rank and file of the army, were taken up and concurred in. They increase the number of men in each company from 40 to 100, and extend the term of service from three to five years. The House then adjourned.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 14, 1846, Volume 47, Number 11, Page 2, Columns 5 and 6  Words: 903

FROM TEXAS AND MEXICO

COL. CROSS MURDERED!!!!—HIS BODY FOUND

From the New Orleans Picayune of May 1

The brig Apalachicola Capt. Smith, arrived at New Orleans yesterday, from whence she sailed on the 24th ult. And reports that on the 22nd she left point Isabel where Major Thomas, the acting quartermaster informed Capt. Smith that the body of Col. Cross had been found about four miles from Gen. Taylor’s camp on the Rio Grande. From the wounds upon the body it seems evident that he was killed by a lance.

It was further reported that a person in Matamoras had acknowledged that he was the murderer, and he had the watch and clothing of Col. Cross in his possession.

Gen. TAYLOR, it is reported, had made a formal demand for the murderer.

Capt Smith confirms the statement regarding the death of Lieut. PORTER.

All open communications were admitted to pass by the Commandant at Point Isabel between that post and Matamorats.
The Mexican schooner Juanita, from this port for Matamoras, was taken into Brazos Bay on the 22nd ultimo, by the pilots—no doubt by permission of the blockading force.

LATER—IMPORTANT MOVEMENTS

The schr. Cornelia, Capt. Stark, arrived last evening from Brazos Santiago, whence she sailed on the evening on the 24th inst. She reports that about three hours before she sailed an express had arrived from Gen. Taylor, stating that the commander of the Mexican forces had made a formal declaration to Gen. Taylor that if he did not move his army from the position he then occupied, within thirty-six hours, that the Mexican batteries would be opened upon them.

The same express also stated that at that time a body of 2,000 Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande, near Boretta—a small town about eight miles below Matamoras, on the west bank of the river—and taken up a position between Point Isabel and General Taylor’s camp. The design of this movement is evidently to cut off American troops from their supplies. A private letter was also received last evening from an officer in General Taylor’s camp, confirming in part, the above report of the Mexicans crossing the river, but stating the number at 1,000 only.

There had previously been so many rumors to the same effect in the camp, that little reliance was placed upon this one, which was first communicated by a Mexican who was prudently detained by order of Gen. Taylor.

The accounts by the Cornelia confirm the melancholy news news given above as to the fate of Col. Cross. He was found entirely stripped and wounded before as stated.

We have a letter from an officer in the camp, dated the 221st ult., the postscript to which states, shat we had no doubt of, that the Americans “had not retired one foot from the bank of the river nor does the General mean to do anything that can look like it.” “Our flag waves over the waters of the Rio Grande, and we have a fixed battery of 18 pounders that can ‘spot’ anything in Matamoras.”

The Picayune adds—

While upon the subject of the army, we may state that the steamer Col. Harney, which left here on Wednesday for Brazos Santiago, took with her a battery of ten long 12 pounders, and a quantity of munitions of was, and she was to in more at Galveston for the same destination. The New York, which sailed yesterday for the same point, had a detachment of 180 men on board for the army, under the command of Lieut McPhail. Four companies of infantry are expected here in two or three days, who will be dispatched immediately for the same destination.

The schooner Gen. Worth, twelve hours later from Brazos Santiago, and bringing, it is said one day later intelligence from Gen. Taylor’s camp, was in the river late last night, eight or ten miles below the city, waiting for a tow. It is said a bearer of dispatches from Gen. Taylor was on board. Colonel Hunt immediately dispatched a boat to bring her up.

LATER

The New Orleans Commercial Times of the 1st instant has the following intelligence, which is the latest that had reached New Orleans before the mail left for the North:

We are informed by Capt. Atwell, of the schooner Gen. Worth, who left Brazos St. Jago on the 25th, that the day before (the 24th) the Mexican schooner Juanita, was taken by the U.S. schooner Flirt, and sent into that port as a prize.

We learn also from the same gentlemen, that the two thousand Mexican troops above the Rio Grande, had captured several wagons, belonging to settlers, loaded with provisions for the American camp. The object of the enemy seems to be, to intercept supplies destined for the U.S. troop. It is more than probable that an engagement has taken place before this.

The American Consul and Merchants, resident in Matamoras had been ordered by Gen. Ampudia to leave for Victoria, Tampaulipas—twenty four hours after having been allowed them time to adjust their affairs. This is a violation of the terms and treaties existing between the U. States and Mexico, it having been agreed on, that in the event of war, the citizens of the two countries, respectively, should not be molested in their affairs, but six months be allowed to those living in seaports and twelve months to those in the interior, to arrange for their departure.

Our army is in good health and spirits, only 135 being on the sick list.

[HCH]
BLOCKADE OF THE RIO GRANDE.

We learn last evening that formal protests had been made before the British Consul by the English houses which had shipped cargoes on board the schooners Equity and Floridian which were turned back by the United States brig Lawrence, off the mouth of the Rio Grande.

The Picayune has also the following correction:

THE ARMY--Misapprehension Corrected—General Worth—Our readers cannot fail to have been struck by the number of officers reported by the city press to have arrived here in the New York on her last trip from Galveston. Enough were reported to have officered several regiments. This was entirely the result of misapprehension. We learn that but three gentlemen connected with the Army did in fact arrive: These were Gen. Worth, Maj. Van Nass and Lieut. Smith. Gen. Worth, it is known, has transmitted his resignation to Washington; the other gentlemen named came here on important business connected with the service.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 14, 1846, Volume 47, Number 11, Page 2, Columns 5 and 6 Words: 405

IMPORTANT FROM THE ARMY

A Battle—Fifteen Americans killed, forty-six taken prisoner, and Gen. Taylor's supplies cut off.

On Thursday the 23d of April, 2,000 Mexican troops crossed over. Capt. Hardin and Capt. Thorton were sent with two companies of Cavalry, 63 men in all to reconnoitre. On Friday morning they fell into an ambush of the enemy, when Lieut Kane and 15 men were killed—Capt. Thorton missing and Capt. Harding and 46 men are prisoners.

After the fight the Mexicans on the American side of the river were largely reinforced, and had surrounded Gen. Taylor's camp, cutting off all communications with Fort Isabel, at which is the train and all the stores belonging to the army. Gen. Taylor has only 10 days provisions on hand. There are at Port Isabel 90 artillery men, 20 dragoons, about 25 teamsters, and 150 citizens and laborers—the entrenchment not quite finished. The steamer Monmouth landed Mr. Catlett on the night of the 29th of April at Port Tobacco, with despatches from Gen. Taylor, calling on Gen. Henderson for 40 companies of Riflemen of 60 men each, twenty of them to be mounted men to rendezvous at Corpus Christi. Gen. Taylor has called on the Governor of Mississippi for 8000 troops for immediate relief.

Should the relief not be sent to Port Isabel it would most probably fall into the power of the enemy with all the army stores and the destruction of the whole army would follow.

The Louisiana Legislature have voted $100,000 to raise recruits to send immediately to the seat of action. Gen. Taylor's fortress in front of Matamoras, would be completed on the morning of the 28th of April, at which time it was expected fire would be opened up upon the city.

On the 22d April, Gen. Taylor received from Gen. Ampudia, by means of a flag of truce, a communication, in very offensive terms, complaining of having blockaded the Rio Grande, to which he replies that he (Gen. Ampudia) had been the cause of the blockade, he having expressly declared that unless Gen. T. had commenced his retreat beyond the Nueces in 24 hours after his display of his flags upon the Rio Grande, he would consider was as having been declared, and would act accordingly. Gen. Taylor furthermore stated that he would receive no further communication from Ampudia, unless they were couched in language respectful to the U. States.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 14, 1846, Volume 47, Number 11, Page 3, Column 3 Words: 111

WAR! WAR!!

CRITICAL POSITION OF THE ARMY

The Baltimore American of the 11th says: We refer to the Postscript head in another column for later and very important intelligence from our army in Texas. It will be seen that open hostilities have commenced between the American and Mexican forces—that a detachment of seventy Dragoons fell into an ambuscade—that Capt. Thorton, Lieuts. KANE and MASON, and twenty-six of the men, it was supposed, were killed—Capt. Hardee and the rest of the command were taken prisoners; and that the Mexicans had crossed over the River in such force as to invest Gen Taylor's Camp and all communication with Isabel, where were his train, army stores, &c.
In the New Orleans Picayune of the 3d, we find the following letter from the Camp:

CMP OPPOSITE MATAMORAS

April 26, 1846,

Gentlemen—Knowing that in the present excited state of the public, as regards our Mexican affairs, and the welfare of our little Army, as most exaggerated reports creep into the public prints; whereby carrying with them sorrow and anxiety into the bosoms of the friends and relatives of many officers, I feel it my duty to give you a hasty but correct account of the capture of Capt. Thornton a squadron of second Dragoons by a force of Mexicans under the command of Gen. Torrejon. Gen. Taylor, on the 24th had received a report that the enemy were crossing the River above the camp. Capt. Thornton, with his command, was sent out on the evening of the 24th to examine the country above and see whether there was any truth in the report. His command was composed of Capt. Hardee, Lieuts. Kane, Mason, Five sergeants, four corporals, one bugler, and 49 privates. His Mexican guide returned this morning stating that he had been attacked at eight o'clock on the morning of the 25th by a large number of the enemy, and that the whole command was captured or destroyed. The guide warned him that was in the vicinity of the enemy, and refused to proceed. He waited until night, and none of the party coming in, he returned. About eleven o'clock this morning a private was brought in a cart, wounded in two places. The man who brought him was the bearer of a note from Gen. Torrejon to Gen. Taylor, the amount of which was that on the score of humanity he claimed the privilege of sending him two dragoons who were wounded in an engagement brought by a charge from an American cavalry officer against his command of 200 men, as he had no flying hospital. He then spoke of the rest being prisoners, and said they would be treated with consideration due prisoners of war, agreeable to the custom of civilized nations.

From the wounded Dragoons we obtained the following facts: That the charge was made in open ground; that when the command "charge" was given but a few of the enemy were seen; but, as they dashed over the hill the whole command presented themselves. They were fired upon and immediately taken prisoners. He does not know what became of Capt. Thornton. Capt. Hardee and Lieut. Mason are prisoners, and are well. He reports Lieut. Kane as shot, and it is feared he is dead. Ten men were killed. Before the cart left one of the two men mentioned in the note died. From the note Gen. Torrejon it seems that he accuses Capt. Thornton charged upon him. One can hardly can conceive of such madness as charging 200 men with 63, and it is fair to presume that he was surrounded and charged to cut his way through. Time will clear it all up. The capture of Capt. Thornton party, and the sad death of Col. Cross are rather melancholy commencements of the war. I say, war; war; for there no doubt of its existence, and that unless an armistice is signed in ten days we must have some hard fighting. The enemy are collecting in some considerable numbers, and I think their force may be estimated with safety and five thousand. Gen. Taylor is rapidly pushing forward his field works, and I understand has sent for 4,000 volunteers—two thousand from Louisiana and two thousand from Texas. If they will give us a fair fight we do not doubt our ability to whip them; but if they are going to give us a second edition of the Florida War it will be a very annoying affair. Yours, very truly, W.S. HENRY Lieut. U.S.A.

The New Orleans Bulletin of May 4 says—

"No later information has been received from the army on the Rio Bravo the was published in our second edition of Saturday morning. We have seen, however, a number private letters, which give us a clearer insight into the state of affairs. From the best information we can get, we do not anticipate any serious disaster to the main body of the American army. The Camp of Gen. TAYLOR is so well situated and entrenched that letters from himself and other officers of the army evince no apprehension whatever."

A general Town Meeting was to be held at New Orleans on the evening of the 4th instant to adopt measures to the action of the Governor and Legislature of Louisiana.

A Company of more the one hundred volunteers left Mobile for New Orleans on the 4th instant. Gen. Gaines has made a requisition upon Commodore LATIMER, at Pensacola, for the steamship Mississippi and a battalion of men, to be despatched forthwith to Point Isabel.

According to the New Orleans Delta a highly respectable gentleman received a letter from Gen. TAYLOR on the 2nd instant, in which he (Gen. T.) expresses great confidence that he can hold his position against any force the Mexicans can bring against him, until he receives reinforcements. He expresses no uneasiness at the result.
DESERTERS—In reply to the resolution of Congress, in relation to deserters from the Army in Texas, a message was sent to Congress on Friday by the President. All the information on the subject is contained in this extract from Gen. TAYLOR’S despatch of the 6th ult. to the War department:

"Efforts are continually making to entice our men to desert, and, I regret to say have met considerable success. Four, however, have been drowned in swimming the river, and two have been killed by our pickets while attempting to desert, which has operated to check the practice. A majority of those who have deserted are old offenders."

[HCH]

FROM WASHINGTON

By the President of the U. States of America

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, the Congress of the United States, by virtue of the constitutional authority vested in them, have declared by their act, hearing date this day, that, "by act of the republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States.

Now, therefore, I, JAMES K. POLK, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the same to all whom it may concern; and do join specially enjoin all persons holding offices, civil or military, under the authority of the United States, that they be vigilant and zealous in discharging the duties respectfully and incident thereto: and I do moreover exhort all the good people of the U. States as they love their country, as they feel the wrongs that have been forced upon them the last resort of injured nations, and as they consult the best means, under the blessing of Divine Providence of abridging its calamities, that they exert themselves in preserving order, in promoting concord, in maintaining the authority and efficiency of the laws and in supporting and invigorating all the measures which may be adopted by the constituted authorities for obtaining a speedy, a just, and an honorable peace.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed to these presents. Done at the city of Washington the thirtieth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, and of the independence of the United States the seventieth.

JAMES K. POLK

By the President:

JAMES BUCHANAN Secretary of State

[HCH]

THE WAR BILL OF CONGRESS

The following is a correct copy of the important Bill which passed the House of Representatives on the 11th inst., by a vote of 174 to 14:

"An act providing for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico."

Whereas, by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States: Therefore—

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of enabling the Government of the U. States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination, the President be and is hereby authorized to employ the militia, naval and military forces of the United States and to call for and except the services of any number of volunteers, not exceeding fifty thousand, who may offer their services, as cavalry, artillery, infantry, or riflemen, to serve six months after they have arrived at the place of rendezvous, or at the end of the war unless sooner discharged. That the sum of ten millions dollars and is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury or to come into the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the militia, when called into service of the United States by virtue of this act, or any other act, may, if in the opinion of the President of the United States the public interest requires it, be compelled to serve for a term not exceeding six months after their arrival at the place of rendezvous, in any one year, unless sooner discharged.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said volunteers shall furnish their own clothes, and, if cavalry, their own horses; and, when mustered into service, shall be armed and equipped at the expense of the United States.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That said volunteers, when called into actual service, and while remaining therein, shall be subject to the rules and articles of war, and shall be, in all respects, except as to clothing and pay, placed on the same footing with similar corps of the United States army; and, in lieu of clothing, every noncommissioned officer and private in any company who may thus offer himself, shall be entitled when called into actual service, to receive in money a sum equal to the cost of clothing of a noncommissioned officer or private (as the case may be) in regular troops of the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the said volunteers so offering their services shall be accepted by the President in companies, battalions, squadrons, and regiments, whose officers shall be appointed in a manner prescribed by the law in the several States and Territories to which such companies, battalions, squadrons, and regiments shall respectively belong.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be and is hereby authorised to organize companies so tendering their services into battalions and brigades, brigades into divisions, as soon as the numbers of volunteers shall render such organization, in his judgement, expedient; and shall, by and with the advise of the Senate, appoint the generals of brigade and divisions; as well as the general staff, as now authorised by law: Provided however, That major generals and brigadier generals shall have the appointment of their aide-de-camp, and the President shall, if necessary, apportion the staff, field, and general officers among the respective states and Territories from which the volunteers shall tender their services, as he may deem proper.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the volunteers who may be received into the service of the United States by virtue of the provisions of this act, who may be wounded or otherwise disabled in service, shall be entitled to all benefits which may be conferred on persons wounded in the service of the United States.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be and is hereby authorised forthwith to complete all the public armed vessels now authorised by law, and to purchase or charter, arm, equip, and man such merchants and steamboats as upon examination may be found fit or easily converted into armed vessels, fit for the public service, and in such number as he may deem necessary for the protection of the sea board lake coast, and the general defense of the country.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever the militia or volunteers are called and received into the service of the U. States, under the provisions of this act, they shall have the organization of the army of the U. States, and shall have the same pay and allowances, except as follows, to wit: Privates of infantry, artillery, and riflemen, shall receive ten dollars per month and privates of volunteers mounted corps twenty dollars per month for their services and the use and risk of their horses.

The following incident, which occurred during the consideration of the Bill, are properly published as part of the history connected with its passage:

At that stage of the proceedings of the House when this Bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading—

Mr. GARRETT DAVIS rose and said: Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to Excuse me from voting on the passage of this bill, and I will assign very briefly my reasons.

This is a measure, directly and indirectly, of very great importance, and yet no opportunity, not a single moment, has been allowed any Whig of this House to say one word upon it. So far as I can operate upon the fate of the gallant General and his little army upon the Del Norte, there is no need for such unparalleled in urging a measure of its character through this body. He is on a frontier three thousand miles distant. In the exercise of discretionary power vest him by the Executive, he has made requisitions on the Governors of the neighboring state for ten thousand troops. At this moment, the destiny of General Taylor and his gallant band is sealed, and I doubt not that ere now the prompt succour which he has received from the states contiguous to the theatre of his operation has given him such force that he has beaten back the enemy, and that his victorious standard at this moment floats over Matamoras.
Whatever it is, his fate is now sealed, and any thing we now do will be too late to influence it. There could then be no valid objection to give a day to the consideration of this bill, and no persons would desire more. But the haughty and dominating majority will bit allow now this much.

But Mr. Speaker, I have an objection to the preamble of the bill. It recites that war exists between the United States and Mexico, and that this war was begun by Mexico. That informal war exists between the two countries is undeniable; but that Mexico commenced it is utterly untrue, and I object to the preamble because it sets forth so bold a falsehood.
I am decidedly strongly in favor of the appropriation of the money, and the raising of the forces for which the bill
Mexican commander treats all these as acts of war; and, and the 25th of April, Gen. Taylor is informed by messenger, the port of Matamoras, orders off English and American vessels, and directs the capture of a Spanish schooner. The yards of it. Bearing upon its public square, and from hence he could, in a few hours, batter it down. He then blockades Matamoras; strongly fortifies a position overlooking the city, and mounts a battery of cannon within three hundred yards of it. Bearing upon its public square, and from hence he could, in a few hours, batter it down. He then blockades the port of Matamoras, orders off English and American vessels, and directs the capture of a Spanish schooner. The Mexican commander treats all these as acts of war; and, and the 25th of April, Gen. Taylor is informed by messenger, from the Mexican camp, that hostilities exist, and that the Mexicans will prosecute them according to the usages of civilized nations. That night a detachment of the Mexican army crosses the Rio Grande, Gen. Taylor sends out a scouting party to reconnoitre, which attacks the Mexicans, and thus war is waging in bloody earnestness.

It is our President who began this war. He has been carrying it on for months in a series of acts. Congress, which is vested exclusively by the Constitution with the war-making power, has not deigned to consult, much less ask for its authority. Now forsooth, when it has unexpectedly broke forth in bloody reverses, a position must be taken by the friends of the President in Congress to protect him by charging Mexico with being the author of the war; and he, in cold blood, teaches others to sacrifice a brave and veteran officer, whenever it may become necessary to cover his mistakes and incompetency.

I have yet another objection to this bill. All that is proposed to be voted by this bill is to be trusted to him. He is to conduct this war. He is our commander-in-chief, our Generalissimo of army and navy. He knows, or ought to know, how much money and how many men the present exigency requires; and yet he has not named a sum or any number of troops, as has been invariably the usage in such cases by all former Presidents. He leaves us to act upon our information and judgement in the premises. Are we to understand that he abandons the responsibilities and duties as President and Commander-in-chief in the conduct of this war? Does he intend to be understood by Congress as saying to them, (what must be now apparent to the whole nation) "I am unequal to the high position I occupy. I know not how to advise you as to the amount of money and number of men you must raise to rescue the military renown of the country from the passing cloud which now covers it. In this important matter you must assume my duties and my responsibilities, and adopt the necessary measures to vindicate the suffering honor of the nation?" If this be the position of the President, he has exhibited more good sense in assuming it than all the acts of his administration besides; if it be not, he exhibits his usual reprehensive secretiveness.

But Mr. Speaker, the essence of this measure is the supplies. They will all be required before the nation gets out of this difficulty. I will vote for the supplies of the bill with hearty alacrity, at the same time protesting against its falsehoods. Since the play has begun, I am for fighting Mexico on our own soil, on hers, everywhere, until we drive her across the Rio Grande, and retrieve our ancient renown. I am then for withdrawing our army to east side of the Nueces, and then settling by treaty all our points of dispute with that weak and distracted country upon the liberal terms.

[Mr. Davis was frequently interrupted by calls to order, and finally declared, when taking his seat, that he withdrew his request for leave to be excused from voting, and he said he should vote for the bill.]

Those members who voted against the Bill were—

When the final vote was taken the following members severally assigned reasons, viz:

When Mr BAYLY's name was called he rose and said: Mr. Speaker, I ask to be excused from voting. I cannot vote in silence without placing my self in a false position. I consider this bill virtually a declaration of war, made without Executive recommendation; for I do not understand the Executive as recommending a declaration of war, And made too when we do not know that the invasion of our territory and aggressive acts are sanctioned by the Government of Mexico. They may yet be disavowed, and reparation made. I am, therefore, unwilling to vote this declaration of war. I do not consider such a declaration necessary to meet such an emergency. On the other hand I am anxious to vote such supplies of men and means as will afford succour to our army and repel the invasion. I must, as I am now placed, decline to do this or vote for the bill before the House. If I am not excused, I shall vote for the bill, as I amendment, and thereby to say that if war existed, it existed by our own fault, and not by the aggression of Mexico.

if the advance of Gen. ARISTA had been made by the order of the Mexican Government He could not consent to the bravery and want of caution. Could he say that war did not exist? Certainly it did; and it existed by the act of Mexico, supplies were cut off; and ere this it was possible that the whole command had fallen victims to their own reckless had been made; our army was in a state of danger; Gen. TAYLOR was surrounded by three times his own number; his

He confessed that, had the responsibility been his, he should have acted otherwise; but the act was done, the advance had been made; our army was in a state of danger; Gen. TAYLOR was surrounded by three times his own number; his supplies were cut off; and ere this it was possible that the whole command had fallen victims to their own reckless bravery and want of caution. Could he say that war did not exist? Certainly it did; and it existed by the act of Mexico, if the advance of Gen. ARISTA had been made by the order of the Mexican Government He could not consent to the amendment, and thereby to say that if war existed, it existed by our own fault, and not by the aggression of Mexico.
Mr. MOREHEAD said that the Senator from Maryland must be mistaken on the question of boundary. The subject of boundary was expressly referred to in the discussion on the annexation resolution itself. The second section of that resolution says:

Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That the foregoing consent of Congress is given upon the following conditions, and with the following guaranties, to wit: First. Said state to be formed, subject to the adjustment by this Government on all questions of boundary that may arise with other Governments.

The question which we are now called upon to determine, he understood to be, was whether the war declared to exist has been caused by Mexico. Whether it is waged by the authority of Mexico may depend on circumstances. We have not had an opportunity to investigate the subject. The question may hereafter present itself in a different light from that which we now see it; and yet under these circumstances, we are called to declare that this is a war authorized by Mexico.

Mr. HUNTINGON thought his friend from Maryland was laboring under a mistaken idea with respect to the purport of his amendment. If we erase the preamble, we do not thereby deny that war exists; nor do we assert that Mexico has not authored these hostile acts. We only declare, by striking out the preamble, that we wished to investigate; that we do not know; that we have not evidence whether war does exist authorized by Mexico.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Maryland, said that Mexico claims the whole of Texas. We cannot go to Mexico therefore, to ask about our boundaries. She denies the existence of such a state as Texas. We go to Texas to inquire about the boundary.

Mr. BERRIEN said that in the debates on the annexation of Texas the question of the true boundary was one of much doubt and difficulty. It was difficult to understand whether the Nueces or the Rio Grande was the boundary between Texas and Mexico, and the section referred to was added by the Senate for this very reason. It was to settle this disputed boundary that the amendment referred to was made.

In the U.S. Senate, on the 11th inst., when the motion to print 20,000 copies of the President’s Message and accompanying papers one the subject of our Mexican relations was under discussion, Mr. CRITTENDEN of Ky. Made the following remarks:

Mr. CRITTENDEN after making some inquiries as to the documents communicated with the President’s message, and after the order of General Taylor to advance to the Rio del Norte had been read, proceeded to remark, in substance, that he deeply regretted the intelligence communicated by the message of hostilities with Mexico. That it was our true policy to cultivate peace with her. That such had been our policy in relation to Mexico and all the South American Republics. That we had haid their first struggles for liberty and their establishment of Republican Governments, and looked upon them a forming a system of republics opposed to monarchial system of Europe. As the head of the Republican system, it has been our feeling, as it was our true policy, to cherish the kindliest relations and sympathies toward them all. And such had been our course till our late unfortunate difficulties with Mexico, which resulted, as we are now informed in actual hostilities. Mr. C. feared that all had not been done our Executive that might have been done to avoid that result. He hoped the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. SEVIER) might be able to justify, in every particular, the conduct of the President; nut at present he could see no good reason for advancing through disputed territory to the banks of the Rio del Norte, and pointing our cannon at the town of Matamoras. Such a course could hardly fail to be regarded as an insult, and to provoke hostility. As to Gen. Taylor, he knew him well; he was a brave and prudent officer, worthy of all confidence, and he felt assured that he was warranted by his orders in all that he had done.

He said the time would come hereafter for inquiring into the circumstances and causes of the present hostilities; and the scrutiny, he trusted, would be strict, and such as the importance of the event demands. Whoever should be found to have caused the hostility, if it has been caused upon our part, ought to be held to the highest responsibility. Congress alone can constitutionally declare war, and the people of the United States are not to be involved in war by any other authority than that of their own representatives.

There would come a time, however, for that scrutiny. For the present we must provide instantly for the defence of the country. That was our first duty, however hostilities may have been occasioned; and he was prepared to grant at once whatever of men or money was necessary for that purpose. Our country is not at fault, though her servants or agents may be, and it is our duty to stand by her.

But I trust that while we adopt all the warlike measures that the occasion may require we shall be equally unanimous in adopting all the most prompt and efficient means of restoring, if we can, friendly relations with Mexico. We can have no motive in pressing too far on a weak or fallen for. The feeling of Mexico, under all recent occurrences, must naturally be excited and wounded.

Policy and magnanimity require that we should be as forbearing towards her as we can. Our superiority is such as to relieve us from the responsibility of our forbearance or generosity being construed into fear, or ascribed to any improper or unworthy motives. No statesman could render a greater service to his country than by restoring our peace or friendship with Mexico. And so important do I regard it, the if it was in my power, I would, as soon as circumstances would possibly permit, send her a high and honorary embassy of peace—I would appoint Clay, Van Buren, Calhoun, and Benton—any one, two, three, or all of them. Mexico would feel honored by such a mission, and such embassadors would give peace, cordial peace, to the two countries.
THE WAR WITH MEXICO, &C

We devote the greater portion of our columns this week to the subject of the war with Mexico and the important proceedings of our government induced by it. We have endeavored, as far as our limited space would permit, to place before our readers an intelligent view of the whole subject, and hope every one will deliberate upon it with that candor and consideration so justly due to its importance. We have not the space this week to enter into any discussion of the point of whether war existed or hostilities existed—to all practical views they are the same in their consequences, especially as they are demonstrated in the actions of the parties now engaged in the "hottest of the work." We care not now who began the war, or what kind of Statesmanship brought it to the point, the important news which we present in our columns from "the seat or war" shows very plainly that severe engagement a portion of our gallant army, under Major RINGGOLD, has sustained itself manfully and covered our arms with a glorious victory.

The Proclamation of the President of the United States declares that war now exists between the U. States and Mexico—that is enough for us, as it has been done in obedience to the law passed by the Constitutional War-making power of our Government. That question ought now to be shut and every American Citizen feel it his duty to stand by his country "in heart and soul; in mind and strength." We feel assured that the sentiment of the whole people is now with their country, and whatever some may think of the folly of "precipitating the war," now that it exists, they are for carrying it on vigorously and efficiently. The President has ordered 43,000 men to be enrolled and made ready to be called into service at any moment. The response of the country to the call is prompt, and we have no doubt at all that men enough and more than enough will be found ready and anxious to lend themselves to their country.

The plain duty of the people of the United States now is, to be as one man, and from all that we can see among the "rank and file" but one sentiment prevails, and that is "our country right or wrong." We cannot pass from this subject without expressing our contempt at the long and windy attempts of "Father RITCHIE" daily blown out in the columns of the "Union" against the Whigs, charging them with want of patriotism, and factiously opposing the Administration in its efforts to vindicate the rights and honor of our country against the invasion of a foreign enemy. The "Union" knows these charges to be false in every particular—the Whigs in Congress voted freely men and money to meet the present condition of affairs—while Mr. CALHOUN and some others of the "Democracy" held back and hurled bitter and withering anathemas at the "Statesmanship" that brought on the war. Where are the thunders of the "Union" against its own party? Is the Editor of the "Union" afraid to attack Mr. CALHOUN openly, or is he whipping him over the shoulders of the Whigs? We despise a sneaking opponent—and particularly one of these sneaks who talks so boldly and valiantly when no foe is near. As for the Loco Focos making Capital out of this war and appropriating its glory (if victory crowns our arms, of which we have no doubt) to themselves is ridiculous in the extreme. It is not he who talks the most loudly of his patriotism, his courage, and his devotion to the country, that is the most ready to stand up to "the scratch" when "the tug of war" comes. As to the Whigs of the United States their American spirit is of "the right stripe"—all of their efforts and measures show that. In their domestic policy they are true friends of their own country—in the field of battle they will be found at their posts—we venture to say, that they will not be found "shot in the back"—and that the result will show that "the hottest of the fight" found them in it. We doubt not the courage and patriotism of our political opponents, and we make these remarks not to cast imputations upon them, but to repel unworthy aspersions on our own party and to express our contempt at the untimely lugging into such an emergency as now engages the attention of the country—party politics. We should like Mr. RITCHIE to answer one question—are the Democrats of the country willing single handed to undertake the war and fight it through? We think not.

GENERAL MUSTER.

We have been repeatedly asked during the past week why the "REGIMENTAL PARADE" was not published as usual—and when the General Muster was to take place? To the first we replied that we did not know;—to the second query we replied that an Orderly Serjeant told us, that a Second Lieutenant told him, that a First Lieutenant told him, that a Captain told him, that a Major told him, that the Colonel told him that the General Muster was to take place on Saturday the 23d inst. We wonder if the "bold 67th" is disposed to reinforce Gen. TAYLOR? Here is a chance for covering your "Cornstalks" with glory!
FROM THE ARMY.

Conflict between Texan Rangers and the Mexican Troops—General Taylor surrounded—Later from Mexico.

Correspondence [unreadable] Baltimore [unreadable] The mail boat is just in, and it brings an Extra from the N. O. Bulletin, May 9.

FROM THE SEAT OF WAR

By the arrival of the schr. Ellen & Clara, Captain Griffin, from the Brazos St. Jago, accounts from Point Isabel to the morning of the 29th ult., have be received.

The fact, however, that communication had not been had for three days between Point Isabel and the camp of Gen. TAYLOR is alone sufficient to keep anxiety on tip toe.

We learn from Capt. G. and Dr. Briggs, a passenger, who has been several months with the army, and Capt. Walker, formerly of the Texan revenue service, who has been stationed between Point Isabel and Gen. TAYLOR's camp with a company of twenty-four Texas Rangers, found several of the teams which had started from the Point for the camp were returning and reported that the Mexicans were on the road.

He started from his camp on the 28th with his whole force to reconnoitre; and if possible open a communication with Gen. TAYLOR—He had proceeded as far as about mid-day between Point Isabel and the camp, when an overwhelming Mexican force appeared very suddenly. A portion of his troops were raw recruits. He instructed them to keep on his right, and gave orders to the whole to retire under the cover of a chapperal in view. But his raw troops, panic stricken scattered in confusion.

The Mexicans advancing with overwhelming numbers, he was compelled to retire.—He was followed until a mile of Point Isabel, where he arrived with only two of his men.—Six others subsequently came on.

Capt. W. estimated the number of Mexicans he encountered at 1500, and he supposes that at least thirty fell during the 15 minutes he engaged them.

This force is supposed to be a portion of that which had at last accounts crossed the Rio Grande some 20 or 25 miles above the Matamoras, and which is estimated at 3000 men. It is believed that they had taken a circuitous route on the eastern side of Gen. TAYLOR's camp.

From the Picayune of the 9th inst.

The greatest apprehension now felt for the American position is that the Mexicans may erect fortifications which command Brassos Santiago. The natural formation of the ground is mostly favorable for such a purpose. The men would be effectually protected from any naval force by the natural embankments, and the position could only be carried by actual storming of the works.

The brig Josephine, Capt. Robinson arrived yesterday at Vera Cruz; had sailed thens on the 26th, three days later than pervious advices. The slood of war John Adams, the only vessel of the United States lying off Sacraficios when the Josephine left; the squadron not then having returned to its anchorage.

The Royal Mail steamer Tweed arrived at Vera Cruz from Tampico on the 24th ult., but the papers say not a word as to the state of things in the latter city.

The latest advices received at Vera Cruz from Matamoras, were to the 15th ult., immediately after the arrival of Gen. AMPUDIA.

His notice to Gen. TAYLOR to retire behind the Neuces was known, and the Vera Cruz people expected to hear of hostilities. We have heard it reported that the British Consul saw the letter from AMPUDIA to Gen. TAYLOR before it was sent, and approved of the same.

[HCH]
Important from the Rio Grande—General Taylor at Point Isabel—Attack on his Camp—Repulse of the Mexicans—Destruction of Matamoras—A general Blockade of the Mexican Ports Ordered!

The steamship New York, Capt. WINDLE, arrived in port on Sunday evening, having left Brazos Santiago the afternoon of Wednesday, the 6th inst. Her news is important, and of the most gratifying description.

Our last previous accounts came down to Wednesday the 29th ult. Capt. WALKER, of the Texas Rangers, having come into Point Isabel on the evening of the 28th ult. From his desperate encounter with the Mexicans, had volunteered to carry despatches to General TAYLOR. We now learn by the New York that in the desperate attempt—so desperate as to be thought fool hardy—he fully succeeded. Gen. TAYLOR learned from him the critical situation in which Point Isabel was placed, and the imminent danger of its being carried by an overpowering force of the Mexicans. He promptly determined upon a movement which should protect Point Isabel and re-establish his communication with his supplies. Accordingly the evening of Friday, the 1st instant, he left his camp opposite Matamoras, with the main body of his forces, determined to cut his way through, leaving behind him for the defence of the works opposite Matamoras between 700 and 800 troops.

This movement of Gen. TAYLOR upon Point Isabel was effected without encountering a single Mexican. In place of molesting him they concentrated their troops about the camp he had just left.

On the morning of the 3d Gen. TAYLOR despatched Capt. WALKER, back to the Camp for intelligence. The gallant Ranger, executed his commission with success, returning to Point Isabel the afternoon of the 5th. He reported that the Mexicans, taking advantage of the supposed weakness of the camp, commenced an attack upon it in front the morning of Sunday, the 3d, with all their batteries from the opposite side of the river, and simultaneously with a detachment of their forces on this side of the Rio Grande, in the rear. The Americans hotly returned the fire. The attack in the rear was immediately repulsed, and in less than thirty minutes the Mexican batteries were silenced, and the city of Matamoras battered down. The loss of the Mexicans in the action is variously set down. While no account makes it less than 200, the latest report in regard to it, which we find in the Galveston news, carries it as high as 700. The Americans lost but a single man, it is said who was killed by a shell. None were wounded—so admirable was the state of works before Gen. TAYLOR left them. The town of Matamoras is a complete ruin; there are scarcely houses enough left standing to serve as hospitals for the wounded.

The New Orleans Tropic says:—

"We understand that Major RINGGOLD of the Artillery, commanded in the American camp opposite Matamoras during the engagement with the Mexicans."

The only written information we have had from the seat of war, comes from Capt. SYMPTON, late of the Revenue service of Texas—now in the employ of Gen. TAYLOR. It is dated May 4. Capt. S. says:

"The news was brought to Point Isabel by our friend WALKER, of Major HAY's command. The Mexicans made the attack on our [unreadable]. The United States batteries knocked down Matamoras, killing two or three hundred Mexicans—they killing only one of our men, by the explosion of a shell. The works were so completed the Mexican shot could not injure them."

This attack and repulse, however, is considered but the opening of the campaign.—Cannonading was distinctly heard at times, down to the hour of the departure of the New York. Gen. TAYLOR set forth on the 6th inst. to return to his camp with ample supplies—The Galveston News states that when he left Point Isabel, there was not the slightest doubt entertained that he would have to cut his way to the entrenchments through vastly superior numbers of the enemy, who were known to be posted in large forces among the almost impassable thickets of chaparral on the road, with a determination to cut him off, if possible, in his attempt to regain his other forces. The number of Mexicans is entirely vague and uncertain, though all the statements agree in estimating them at not less than ten thousand, while many accounts put their numbers at 15 or 20 thousand. All accounts agree also in stating that the Mexican forces were rapidly flocking in from all quarters.

How many crossed the river could not be told, though the News think it would be reasonable to presume that a large part of their forces would be brought into requisition to dispute the march of Gen. TAYLOR. They could not but see the importance of cutting him off, and would doubtless employ all their advantages of local knowledge, skill in horsemanship and all their acknowledged resources in stratagem to accomplish their object. Gen. TAYLOR anticipated a formidable and desperate opposition to his march, but determined to accomplish it or perish.

Thus reasons the Galveston News; and accordingly anticipates intelligence of a decisive general action. We are greatly inclined to doubt whether the Mexicans would venture to attack Gen. TAYLOR's whole force, although they so outnumbered him; but should they do so, we are confident that we shall have a glorious victory to recount. One account before us states, however, that Gen. TAYLOR had not left Point Isabel, and probably would not leave there before the arrival of further re-inforcements—he having full confidence in the ability of the troops left in camp to maintain their position against any odds.
In the skirmishes which Captain WALKER had with the Mexicans, previous to the departure of the Ellen Clara, it is now known that not even the remainder have returned into camp safe.

The bodies of five of them have been found, but owing to the shocking manner in which the Mexicans had mutilated them, Captain WALKER recognised but two, McCLISTER and RADCLIFF.

The U. S. schooner Flirt was to leave the Brazos in a day or two with despatches for New Orleans. The U. S. brig Lawrence was still at the mouth of the Rio Grande, enforcing the blockade. All well on both vessels. Steamer Monmouth left on the 5th, bound for Aranzas, for the purpose of bringing every man capable of doing military duty, to the camp at St. Ingo.

The arrival of the New York at Point Isabel was most opportune. It will be recollected that she had nearly 200 regular troops on board under Lieut. McPHAIL, as well as several field pieces. These were all safely landed.—Even without the arrival of further reinforcements, the post at Point Isabel must have been so strengthened as to place its safety beyond reasonable doubt. Martial law has been proclaimed there and at Santiago, and every man pressed into service. But ere this, further support has reached Point Isabel from this city and Pensacola.

The accounts from Texas in regard to volunteers are by no means satisfactory. The greatest apathy seems to prevail throughout the country.

Col. HAYS, of the Rangers, with his force of almost 100 men stationed in the San Antonio country, determined to march at once for Gen. TAYLOR’s camp, as soon as he learned that it was in a critical situation, not would it surprise us to hear that Col. HARNEY, with his dragoons, had done the same thing.

While Gen. TAYLOR was at Point Isabel he despatched a schooner, to Vera Cruz, with intelligence of the proceedings upon the Rio Grande. We will at once port on the Gulf.

With great pleasure we see it mentioned in the Bulletin that the commander of the U. S. schooner flirt having observed a small encampment of Mexicans on the island at the mouth of the Brazos Santiago, and knowing the great danger of the point at the entrance of the harbor being in possession of the Mexicans, landed with his men and dispersed the camp. The reader will recollect that the utmost fear was felt that the Mexicans might fortify a position here which would command the approach to Point Isabel.

The New York Sun contains the following description of Mexico, from Matamoras to the Halls of the Montezumas, which cannot but prove interesting at the present time:

"The U. S. army is posted on the left bank of the Rio Grande, opposite Matamoras, at a distance of 90 miles from the coast by the circuitous channel of the river, but only 30 or 40 miles by the route to Point Isabel, a harbor on the coast of Texas, about ten miles north of the Rio Grande. The latter river is the boundary between Texas and Mexico, as claimed by the United States. Mexico contends that the river Nueces is the boundary, and that river was the boundary of the former State of Texas before the Texas Revolution. But Texas claimed to the Rio Grande, as the people of that district joined her in defending the Mexican Constitution of 1842, and in the war of independence which they waged so successfully against the despotism of Mexico. From Matamoras to the city of Mexico there is a good road, with five or ten military posts along the route.

"An American army of fifty thousand men, crossing the Rio Grande at Matamoras, could readily march through the country to the city of Mexico. Yucatan, on the south, is already in arms against military despots governing at the Capitol; and the people of Vera Cruz and other States of Central Mexico, are clamorous for the re-call of Santa Anna, (who is now in Cuba,) and the restoration of the Republic. The facilities for intercourse with our army, and with the Mexican people, are favorable to the rapid execution of military operations. From Galveston to Point Isabel is 320 miles by water. New Orleans to Point Isabel is 802 miles. New Orleans to Vera Cruz 1500 miles. Yucatan to the city of Mexico 900 miles.—The population of the city of Mexico is about 180,000. High mountains rise in the distance on all sides of the city, but the location, although under the Tropic of Cancer is remarkable for its salubrity, and in summer the extreme heat is less severe than in New York or Philadelphia.

The city is approached by excellent roads which branch out in every direction, and on which are transported the silver ores and bullion from an hundred of the richest mines in the world. The magnificence of the principal edifices—some being furnished with gold and silver ornaments valued at many millions, and containing rich treasures hid away by the avaricious—has excited the admiration of all travellers. Yet, with all her riches, Mexico is poor. Her people are kept in ignorance by the tyranny of a few, and their wealth is carried off to other lands, to swell the gains of trade and commerce, which they are not to enjoy. The poor Mexican crawls listlessly over neglected silver mines, lost in the contemplation of his own abject condition. The iron hand of despotism is upon him!

[CHC]

Thursday, May 21, 1846, Volume 47, Number 12, Page 3, Column 2 Words: 275

WHY ARE WE AT WAR?

A Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Herald speaks, right out in meetin', as follows:

"Why, or [unreadable], were the troops of Gen. Taylor pushed forward to the Eastern branch of the Rio del Norte, is a question frequently asked, but rarely answered satisfactorily. I will now give you the true solution of the question. By the terms of Annexation with Texas, that State held in its own hands its public hands, in order to cover its floating debt. On investigation, it was found that in Texas proper, the whole public domain had been squandered away by the Government of the Republic, and consequently the holders of the amount of Texas scrip, lost all hope of being paid from that source.

It then became necessary to plunder Mexico of a large portion of the three States of New Mexico, Coahuilla and Chihuahua, and all of New Mexico which lies between the Bravo del Norte and the river Nueces, West of which stream the Republic of Texas never had either civil or military jurisdiction, nor even the shadow of a claim other than that arising from an act of its Legislature, which declared the Bravo to be the Western boundary of the republic; yet, if at the cost of so much blood, treasure and national honor, the United States will plunder Mexico of the vast territory lying between the Nueces and Bravo, the State of Texas will claim the whole territory, and then be able to pay her national debt. Who can tell what amount of Texas scrip is held by the members of the present party, who have projected this species of plunder and robbery?"

[CHC]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 201

BERKLEY VOLUNTEERS.

We understand that the "Berkley Volunteers for Mexico" at present under the temporary command of Capt. JOSEPH BURNS, will hold a meeting for the election of Officers on Saturday evening next, the 30th inst.

The proceedings of Congress do not present at this moment many details of general interest. Mr. BENTON has not yet concluded his speech upon the Oregon question; his speech is very highly spoken of. The correspondent of the Balt. American says "the research and information and hard study embodied in the speech is almost beyond belief.—The position is strongly demonstrated, that as a matter of right we are bound to compromise the Oregon question upon the line of 49. England having no reasonable claim to the Valley of the Columbia river, and the United States not the shadow of a claim to the country watered by Frazier's river."

Mr. BRINKERHOFF of Ohio has proposed a "Joint Resolution" thanking Gen. TAYLOR and his Army for their gallant defence of the Country in the recent engagement with the Mexican forces, and also allowing to each officer, non commissioned officers and private, one month's extra pay. The matter was laid over until official despatches were received from Gen. TAYLOR.

[CHC]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12, Page 2, Columns 2 and 3 Words: 1725

VOLUNTEERS FOR MEXICO—REGIMENTAL PARADE—CHAS. J. FAULKNER'S SPEECH—VISIT OF POTOMAC DRAGOONS.

The exciting intelligence from "the Seat of War" which we spread in detail before our readers this week, will prevent us from taking as extended a notice of the proceedings of Saturday the last in this place, as we had originally designed to have done. But we cannot pass them by without such a notice as their importance and interest deserve. "Old Berkeley" ever true to the calls of patriotism, has been aroused by the trump of war, and the exciting intelligence almost every day pouring in upon us from "the Seat of War," and being eager to bear her share in the honor of defending the soil of our country from the invasion of an insulting faithless and ungrateful foe, has set about organizing a "Volunteer Company" composed of gallant young men who intend offering themselves to the Government for service in the war now existing between this Country and the Republic of Mexico. We are delighted to see this demonstration of the patriotism of our young Countrymen, and should their services be required in the field of battle we venture to that we should compel her to resume her friendly relations with us, or to disarm her of the means of future aggression. Our National Safety and National Honor both require a blow upon our Southern frontier, whenever our difficulties with European powers should be such as to justify her in which she has exhibited for the last twelve months; husbanding her resources and concentrating her energies to strike never be tolerated that a neighboring nation like Mexico should occupy towards us the hostile and menacing attitude without delay, the terms of an honorable peace, and to require full indemnity for the expenses of the war. It could formidably and well appointed army placed under immediate orders to march to the city of Mexico and there to dictate, war with energy and vigor and to bring it to a triumphant close at the earliest day possible. He wished to see a had been invaded and the blood of our citizens shed upon our own soil. But he hoped we should not continue to conduct of the Mexican Government. Upon our part it had been so far wholly defensive, notwithstanding our territory that we should not continue to occupy a defensive attitude any longer. He held it to be the imperious duty of the Government now to prosecute the war with energy and vigor and to bring it to a triumphant close at the earliest day possible. He wished to see a formidable and well appointed army placed under immediate orders to march to the city of Mexico and there to dictate, without delay, the terms of an honorable peace, and to require full indemnity for the expenses of the war. It could never be tolerated that a neighboring nation like Mexico should occupy towards us the hostile and menacing attitude which she has exhibited for the last twelve months; husbanding her resources and concentrating her energies to strike a blow upon our Southern frontier, whenever our difficulties with European powers should be such as to justify her in the expectation that she could strike such a blow with impunity. Our National Safety and National Honor both require that we should compel her to resume her friendly relations with us, or to disarm her of the means of future aggression and annoyance.
He spoke with approval of the law passed by Congress on the 13th of the present month—explained its provisions and annoyances.

He spoke with approval of the law passed by Congress on the 13th of the present month—explained its provisions and hoped the call for Volunteers would be properly responded to by the country. He appealed to the young men of the County of Berkeley, who were free from embarrassment of family ties, and who were possessed of stout hearts and vigorous bodies to seize the occasion to carve out for themselves a glorious destiny in life. How many (he asked) of that description were there in our little community, now without profitable occupation or employment, who were at this moment ignorant of the elements of greatness in them, and who would continue to remain so until the stirring incidents of a soldier's life should develop them. He pointed them to the examples of Captains WALKER and THORNTON—young men a few years ago unknown—who were everywhere at this time the theme of honor's tongue—acquiring distinction and renown and in a rapid career of advancement to the first honors of their country.

He then spoke of the Country of Berkeley, and said she had always been prompt in every emergency to contribute her full quota to the defence of the Country. In almost every important engagement during the war of the Revolution, the valor of her sons was conspicuous. Their patriotism was exhibited on the plains of Boston; on the fields of Brandywine; on the banks of the Ohio, and at the decisive and crowning victory at Yorktown. It was equally displayed in the late war on the Canada frontier, and on the sands of Norfolk. He wished to hear her fame now re-echoed from the Savannahs of the Rio Grande and the Halls of the Montezumas.

He felt so lively an interest in the success of the movement now contemplated—the organization of a Volunteer Corps from this County for the Mexican War—that he would take the liberty of adding to the provision made by law for Volunteers under the late Act of Congress, a promise on his own part to give to each and every Volunteer from the County of BERKELEY, who would continue in service for a period of twelve months and receive an honorable discharge, or to their heirs, if killed, one hundred and fifty acres of land in the State of Texas; and it was his purpose, so soon as the Company was organised, to deposit such obligation with their commanding officer.
He concluded with an earnest and eloquent appeal to the patriotism of the gallant young men of Berkeley to come forward at once and enroll themselves for the war, which appeal was promptly responded to by the addition of several gallant and efficient men to the list, among whom was our contemporary, Mr. EPHRAIM G. ALBURTIS, Editor of the "Virginia Republican."

The interest of the day was much enhanced by a visit from the POTOMAC DRAGOONS, from Sharpsburg, Maryland, under command of the Major Commanding THOS. G. HARRIS. The Dragoons excited the universal attention and admiration of every beholder, and their visit will long be remembered with pride by the people of Berkeley. We have never witnessed a troop of Cavalry under better drill; they understand their profession, and should they be called into the service of their country they will honor themselves and add another unfading wreath of glory to the fame of "the Maryland Line." After the Regiment returned from the review, the Officers in company, with our distinguished visitors, at the invitation of Mr. FAULKNER, marched to his residence, where they were entertained by him in his usual agreeable and handsom style. Our Maryland friends were also handsomely entertained by the Officers of our Regiment at Mr. ODEN's Hotel. They went through a number of beautiful evolutions in the Square, and after a short and appropriate address of thanks from Col. E. P. HUNTER, on behalf of his Regiment, and a reply by Maj. HARRIS, they took up their line of march for their homes, and, as will be seen by the annexed Card, were highly pleased with their visit.

WE are much pleased to learn that Gov. PRATT, of Maryland, has offered the post of Colonel to Maj. HARRIS, under the late requisition of the President upon Maryland for her quota of Volunteers for the Mexican war, and that he has accepted the honor.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 532

THE WAR NEWS

The news which we publish this week from "the Seat of War," is well calculated to produce a most powerful sensation throughout the country. It is true, victory—glorious victory crowns our arms, yet some of the best blood has been shed by the foe. This blood must be atoned for—we hope to see 50,000 volunteers at once called into service—and our Navy sent to bombard every Mexican sea port within reach of our gins. The work has begun—let it not stop short of the "halls of the Montezumas." The faithless and ungrateful conduct of Mexico deserves the "rod of chastisement"—she has insulted our flag—robbed and murdered our people, and although in pity for her weakness we have forborne—"forbearance has now ceased to be a virtue." If she cannot understand forbearance and magnanimity upon the part of a Sister Republics she should be made to understand the force of just retribution at the point of the bayonet. We commend the annexed sensible extract from an article from an article in the "New Orleans Courier" to every reader. In our judgement it points out the true road to a short and victorious campaign. March at once to the City of Mexico.

"When the reinforcements which left this place last night and this morning, join Gen. TAYLOR, the troops under his command, including those at Point Isabel and opposite Matamorcas will amount to about 8000. This force will be sufficient to repel any attack upon his works at both places, and to keep open the communications between the two. But to occupy a position on the western side bank of the river, and penetrate into the interior of Mexico, a much larger force will be necessary. It would be an ill-advised and unfortunate measure to relax in the slightest degree the exertions to raise more troops. All the able bodied men that can be procured should be received, and valid inducements should be held out to volunteers. This war with Mexico will not be finished by one battle, the capture of two or three towns, the bombardment of the sea ports and the blockade of the coast. The Mexicans are a proud and ignorant, and therefore an obstinate race. They will hold out, passively, until their capital is occupied by an American army, and the greater part of their country overrun. To attain these objects, fifty thousand troops will be necessary—although they could be accomplished with less—but in military operations the safest plan is to have your means in full proportion to the end in view, and to leave as little as possible to chance.

"The government of the United States can raise fifty thousand troops with as much ease as they could raise five thousand for the Mexican War—and we doubt not they will begin with a force equally adequate to the purpose of chastising the enemy, and giving him to understand the power of this country.

It is useless to speculate at this time to speculate upon the plan of conducting the war, which our government will adopt. The Mexican ports on the Pacific are at the mercy of the squadron

[HCH]
From the Seat of War

The American Army Triumphant!

THE MEXICANS TWICE ROUTED AND 1000 KILLED!

THE ENEMY GUNS CARRIED AT THE POINT OF THE BAYONET!

THE BRAVE AND GALLANT MAJOR RINGGOLD KILLED IN DEFENCE OF HIS COUNTRY

GEN. VEJA TAKEN PRISONER

FROM THE BALTIMORE SUN, MAY 25.

We issued on Saturday night, in an extra, in full confidence of its being literally correct, a telegraphic account of the news from the Seat of War, entertaining the hope that the portion which related to the death of Major RINGGOLD might prove unfounded.

We have since received confirmatory accounts from our N. Orleans contemporaries, which we annex. Though glorious news accompanying it will prove very cheering to every American heart, the melancholy death of Major RINGGOLD, and the other distinguished officers, as well as of the brave hearts who fought under them, cannot but cause a pang of sorrow and regret.

The Washington Union introduces these details, with the annexed remarks:

"It may well be that the reports from camp are considerably exaggerated; but there can be little doubt, we think, that some conflict of importance has taken place between the two armies. That part of the account which represents a large portion of Commodore CONNER's squadron as being concentrated near the mouth of the Del Norte, strikes us as very improbable.

"We have, however, had no opportunity since the arrival of the mail to make particular inquiries upon the subject. The account given in the correspondence of the Tropic appears to be exaggerated in its tone, and we notice some confusion in the dates of the different accounts. The details may, however, turn out to be substantially correct; and if so, they reflect the highest honor upon our gallant army."

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words 1133

Confirmatory Accounts.

TWENTY THOUSAND MEXICANS MARCHING TO MATAMORAS!

From the Mobile Daily Advertiser, Extra.

Monday, May 18, 10 A,M.

FROM THE SEAT OF WAR—GLORIOUS INTELLIGENCE!—TRIUMPH OF THE AMERICAN ARMS!—GENL. TAYLOR AGAIN VICTORIOUS! ROUTE OF THE MEXICAN ARMY!!

[PER STEAMER COL. HARNEY AT N. ORLEANS]

Correspondence of the Tropic

Since my last (not received) we have had two arrivals, the New York and brig Millaudon. The last brought the news that six steamboats with four thousand volunteers were about starting when she left. This news made us most cheerful, as we could not have then expected the result that has since taken place with our troops.

Despatches had been sent to Vera Cruz by Gen. T., contents to us subs unknown; but rumor would have it that the
Gen. T. left Point Isabel with little over 400 men to defend it. Maj. MUNROE, commanding here, sent a requisition to Commodore CONNER for as many men as he could spare, as we heard firing about 2 P.M. of the 8th, which continued with but little intermission until dark. Com. C. sent ashore 250 men, and on the 9th 400 or 500 more, which makes this place strong enough to withstand an attack against 20,000 men.

Com. C., therefore thought very wisely that his presence here would do some good in the way of reinforcements. Gladly was he welcomed, Gen. TAYLOR had marched out evening previous to meet and conquer the enemy, taking with him, twenty-two hundred men, teamsters included, with two hundred and fifty teams loaded with ammunitions, provisions, &c., which the Mexicans were no doubt appraised of, as the teams had been loaded ever since Monday last, awaiting the orders for a march at a moments warning.

Believe me when I say there was the greatest excitement here the afternoon of the 8th, as we could plainly hear the cannonading from the field of battle.

On the evening of the 8th, Mr. MURRAY and Mr. BASON volunteered to go and find out the result.

On the morning of the 9th, a black boy came into camp, gave a history of the fight, which was about time, but as he had run away and left his team, he was not believed.

At 3 p.m. of the 9th, Messrs M. and B. returned and stated as follows:

They got to Gen. TAYLOR’s present camp, sixteen miles from here at 3 p.m. there learned that the army marched until about thirteen miles from here, when they saw the Mexicans drawn up in battle array across his road. He immediately gave his orders for the teams halt until the 2d brigade had passed. The Mexicans were on the prairie near the edge of the chapparel. When Gen. TAYLOR got within about three quarters of a mile, they opened upon him with their flying artillery. Gen. TAYLOR arrived with Capt. DUNCAN and Maj. RINGGOLD’s companies and at it they went until about sunset, when the Mexicans retreated to the edge of the chaparel, and ceased firing.

After which Gen. TAYLOR fired ten or fifteen guns at them, and set to work throwing up two breast-works. At daylight the Mexicans were in the edge of the chapparel. A council of war was held by Gen. TAYLOR, and it was agreed that one brigade should advance up to the chapparel, in hopes to draw the Mexicans into a renewal of the fight, but the more the troops advanced upon them, the more they weren’t there—the Mexicans having retreated leaving three pieces of artillery, any quantity of ammunition, from FOUR TO SIX HUNDRED DEAD upon the field, and God only knows how many wounded that they took away. One Mexican who was stationed at one of their batteries, says every body but himself at the batteries was killed—says the guns beat anything they ever dreamed of they were so quick. One of the Mexican officers, in trying to rally his men, found he could not, and commenced to cut them with his sword, when his troops shot him dead. We had eleven killed, and about ten mortally wounded.

Capt. PAGE, of the 3rd, had all the lower parts of his face shot off with a cannonball—it is thought he will recover, though horribly mutilated. Major RINGGOLD had the fleshy part of both legs shot through, and horse killed—one of his bones were broken, which is wonderful. Our informant says the field of battle was strewed with the dead, and they could hear the groans of the Mexican wounded all night at Gen. T.’s camp. The Mexicans were commanded by Gen. Mejia. There is no doubt they have retreated across the river. When the volunteers arrive you may depend you will hear of them “revelling in the halls of the Montezumas,” or peace and good will be whipped into those bombastic Mexicans. It is a matter of surprise that so few were lost on our side.

The monotony of this place has been relieved by the drilling of “Uncle Samuel’s” “web feet,” or “barnacle backs” that came here from the squadron. You would be surprised to see with what dexterity and precision they go through their evolutions with muskets, and no one could resist a laugh to hear some of their sayings. One old salt said this morning “Damn and blast my eyes! Here is a ship ashore, and poor Jack on his beam ends.” This speech was addressed to himself when looking on the tent that had been pitched, and was of sufficient dimensions to hold about fifty-two.

One third of the whole number of the men from the squadron are marines, the balance tars. I should picture to myself a soldier riding horse back, or a cow, as soon as that I should see four or five hundred sailors going into war with muskets on their shoulders; but you could not restrain than from going against the Mexicans with only a knife and a fork; if you would only show them a chance, for they are all “eager for the fray.”

Yours, &c.

In the decisive battle Gen. TAYLOR lost about sixty killed and wounded, among whom three were officers, viz: Lieut. INGES, of the dragoons, Lieut COCHRAN, of the 8th infantry. Among the wounded are Col. MACINTOSH, of the 5th infantry; Lieut Col. PAYNE, 4th artillery; and Capt. HOOK, 5th infantry—most of them slightly, and none supposed mortally.

Maj. RINGGOLD, well known as the commander of the flying artillery, also died on the 11th from wounds received in action on the 8th.

Capt. PAGE, who was wounded in the same engagement, we are happy to state, is rapidly recovering. Lieut. LUTHER, also slightly wounded is convalescent.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 1302

[From the N.O. Tropic—Third Edition, 1 p.m.]

STILL LATER FROM THE ARMY.

THE GALVESTON ARRIVED—The Galveston is just in, having left Brazos Santiago on the evening of the 13th inst. We hasten to lay the news by her before our readers.

[From the Galveston Civilian of the 15th]

On the morning of the 13th, Gen. TAYLOR and his staff, with the guard that had brought down the train, &c., started for his camp. He was met by an express a few miles from Point Isabel, informing him that 8,000 fresh troops had crossed the Matamoras, 2,000 of which had crossed over, 1,100 had crossed the Rio Grande at Barrita, near the Bocachica, not more than 8 miles from Point Isabel. Gen. Taylor returned to Point Isabel at once, and made preparations to leave the next day, with such forces as were arriving.

The steamship Galveston landed 450 infantry, (regulars and volunteers;) the Augusta landed about 250; Capt PRICE arrived via Padre island from Corpus Christi, with his 70 mounted rangers. They all reached the point on the 13th. The Telegraph and JAN L. DAY will doubtless land their troops, amounting to upwards of 800, at Point Isabel on the 14th. Great credit is due to Capt. JEREMIAH of the steamship Cincinnati, and Capt R. McBKKER of the Monmouth, for the skill, energy, and promptness shown in management of their boats in transporting troops and supplies across the bay at Brazos Santiago.

Gen. PARADES is at the head of 15,000 troops on his way to Matamoras. It may be possibly be that the fresh troops arrived at Matamaras is the advance division of his army. No doubt the enemy were fully advised that Gen. TAYLOR had left for Point Isabel, and their plan is to try and capture him on his return, whilst a strong force crossing the river is to come down upon his army. Gen TAYLOR appeared highly pleased with the intelligence; for since the war has opened, and no mistake, the excitement and activity attending the operation, opens a new era to his vigorous achievements, and all have marked how much better he looks than when confined to the “masterly inactivity” of the Corpus Christi campaign.

THE FORT

The Mexicans have continued their firing into the fort opposite Matamoras, nearly ever since Gen. TAYLOR left the works.

The brave and gallant Maj. BROWN died on--, from a wound received in his thigh by the explosion of one of the enemy’s shells. His wound was not considered dangerous, but he was placed in one of the bomb-proof burrows, mortification ensued, from the want of fresh air. His death is deeply deplored by the army, his intrepid conduct in foiling every attempt of the enemy to reduce the fort prepared them in a measure to anticipate the result of these conflicts with our brave army.

The strength of the fort and skill which it is defended is incomprehensible to the Mexicans, and indeed, well might be, for they have thrown upwards of 1,400 shot and shell into the works, and every morning the present the same appearance; our loss has only been two or three in the fort The constant practice the enemy have had in firing at it, has taught them the proper bearing to give their guns, and almost every shot falls within the works. The fort is never idle, and the ramparts and dwellings of Matamoras exhibit ruins as plainly as those of a hundred centuries when gaping forth their lamentation of lo! And behold what desolation is here?

The sloop-of-war St.Mary’s arrived from Pensacola on the 10th; the steamer Mississippi on the 12th, from Vera Cruz. The Bainbride is off the Rio Grande, enforcing the blockade. The schooner Flirt sailed for New Orleans on the 7th.

It is stated that an expedition is to be sent by boats of the squadron to take the town of Barita, 16 miles from the mouth of the river, where there is a military force.

Gen. VEGA is the Col. VEGA that was captured by the Texas forces at the slaughter of San Jacinto, and is a brave and accomplished officer.
Correspondence from the New Orleans Tropic

Brazos Santiago, May 13.

At the receipt of the news of the first battle, I wrote you a short account; the result of the second is now on hand, and is most decisive. It now appears that the Mexicans had only 5,000 men in the field at the first battle, and four thousand stowed away in the chapparel near the battle ground. It was their intention to have made but a slight attack the first day, but being so closely pressed they were obliged to fight or make good their retreat to where the four thousand were in the chapparel. In the first fight a general officer had his head shot off; it is not yet ascertained who he was, as his body was recognized by his dress as he lay upon the field.

Gen. Taylor advanced the morning of the first battle into the chapparel, then sent 800 picked men under the charge of Capt. McCALL to reconnoitre; he advanced unmolested until near 3 P.M., (the army following at a distance) when Capt. McCALL sent word to Gen. Taylor that he had received a charge of grape from the enemy, and lost two men.

The army was then deployed, and Capt. May, 2nd dragoons ordered to charge the battery that had thrown the grape, and to take it if he lost every man; he obeyed orders, took the battery of four guns, and lost but one man. The battery was commanded by Gen. De La Vega, who was taken prisoner.

Our little army then rent the air with their huzzas, and rushing shouting upon the enemy, committed the most dreadful havoc among them, taking eight pieces of artillery, 155,000 rounds of cartridge, and 500 packed mules. Gen. Arista's camp bedsteads contained all his private and public baggage paper, which the latter will be of great value, as we now not only have the key of the whole campaign, which will enable Gen. Taylor to form his plans so as to entirely defeat their designs.

We took all and every thing they had, four hundred prisoners and the army baggage. The enemy had between 8,000 and 9,000 troops in the two battles, but we with 1,800 troops completely routed them.

We exchanged prisoners, got Capt. Thornton, Hardee and his little band. Our officers while prisoner were well treated having lived with Ampudia ever since they were taken. Gen. Taylor would not exchange for Lieut. Deas as a prisoner of war, as it would be sanctioning his crossing the river, which he did not, having reprobated his crossing in the severest manner.

In this second and glorious battle, we lost about the same number of men as in the first, but had more officers wounded. Capt. Walker with his heroic band of rangers was the last that fired at the Mexicans. The army left him and his comrades on the bank of the river, shooting them as they attempted to cross.

To-morrow Gen. Taylor leaves here to make an attack on Matamoras, in connection with Con. Conner, who has sent a boat expedition up the river.

I forgot to mention that Gen. Taylor arrived here yesterday, with all our wounded, between 50 and 60, with Gen. Romules De La Vega, one Mexican captain and two Lieutenants who go with this letter to Col. Harney.

The Augusta, from New Orleans, arrived last evening. The mules from Matamoras, some 500, were sent in to day, as well as the Mexicans wounded.

I should not forget to mention that all the shell, ball, and grape shot of the Mexicans are made of brass and copper. This letter I must close, with details of glory enough for one day.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 205

FURTHER ITEMS OF WAR NEWS

The Mexicans outnumbered Gen. Taylor in the proportion of four to one; they had their choice of position, and selected one extremely advantageous; they were driven from it with great loss, and forced across the Rio Grande—and the victory has been stained by not act of cruelty on our part.

In the casualties which were reported in our postscript of the morning, we have some corrections to make. By the official report of the action, it appears that Col. McIntosh is not killed, but desperately wounded. Maj. Brown—not Col., as we stated—was killed in command of Fort Taylor by the explosion of a shell. The following is as complete a list of the officers killed and wounded on our side, in both actions as, we have been able to obtain:

Killed—Maj. Brown, 7th infantry—Wounded in Fort Taylor—died on the 10th; Major Riggold, 3rd artillery—wounded on the 8th and died on the 10th; Lieut. Inges, 2d Dragoons; Lieut. Cochrane, 4th Infantry; Lieut. Chadburne, 8th Infantry.

Wounded—Lieut. Col. McINTOSH, 5th Infantry; Lieut Col. PAYNE, 4th Artillery; Capts. PAGE (in the action of the 8th) Hook, MONTEGOMERY; Lieuts. LUTHER (in the action of the 8th) GATES, SELDON, McClURE, BURBANK, JORDAN, FOWLER.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 272

We make room for the following letter:

CAMP VICTORY, NEAR MATAMORAS,

May 11th, 1846.

Gents: I presume some gentlemen having more leisure than myself will transmit you a detailed account of one of the hardest fought battles which has occurred in any country since the war of the Revolution. I will only say then, that about two thousand men of our much abused little army met on the 8th instant, with six thousand chosen Mexican troops under Gen. ARISTA, the latter having chosen their position, the former being upon their march from Point Isabel to this place—encumbered moreover with a train of near three hundred wagons.

You observe the advantage which they had not only in numbers, but in every thing else. We have beaten them shamefully and driven them across the Rio Grande—have captured their whole park of artillery, and almost every thing they had with them. We have buried hundreds of their dead, and I understand will send over to them one hundred of their wounded. We have had three engagements with them. Their killed, and wounded and missing has not yet been ascertained. Gen. TAYLOR sent over yesterday permission to Gen. ARISTA to send over Doctors to assist in taking care of his wounded—they came over last night, and reported forty-eight of Mexican officers missing while we lost but three.

This morning those gallant dragoons captured from us some weeks since, are to be brought over and exchanged—we might give ten for one.

You will receive a full account soon of this glorious battle, the last (I think) that we shall have with the Mexicans. Our loss has been comparatively light. Our wounded all doing well.

Yours.

OLD FRIEND

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 16

Gen. TAYLOR left Point Isabel on the 13th, instead of the 11th, as we inadvertently stated.

[HCH]

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 1106

FURTHER ITEMS OF INTELLIGENCE

An extra from the New Orleans Bee, dated at 1 o’clock, P.M., contains the following items:

In this second engagement 45 Americans were reported to be killed. In the Mexican side the loss was very considerable, but we were unable to count their number. We conversed with several Mexican prisoners on board the Harney, who stated that the Mexican forces did not amount to more than 3000 or 4000, and were under the command of ARISTA.

We have the following verbal intelligence from one of the Dragoons of the U.S. Army: those men which were under his orders, so others having yet arrived.
He states that Gen. TAYLOR came in sight of the enemy, their number appeared so large he exclaimed: "Friends, we must vanquish or die;" saying which he ordered the Dragoons to charge on the Mexican Artillery. They immediately, obeyed their Commander’s order, and made such an onslaught on them that they were compelled to abandon nine field pieces and seek their safety in flight. The pieces captured were brought to the camp.

Our information further states that the Mexicans retreated in confusion to the other side of the Rio Grande, and that he was among those who pursued them up to the river. Several Mexicans were drowned in attempting to cross. He is not positive whether the whole or part only of the Mexican army attempted to recross the Rio Grande.

The Mexicans, he adds, stood their ground pretty well at the commencement of the action, and that throughout it was well contested. He estimates probable loss on the American side at about 100 or 130, and on the part of the Mexicans at about 700 or 1,000.

Here are names of the Mexican prisoners arrived per steamer Col. Harney—Gen. Don ROMILIO DIAS DE LA VEGA and Lieuts Don ALIEJANDRO PRADA and SILVERIO VELEZ.

An extra from the office of the N.O. Troppic also contains the following additional items of intelligence:

As soon as Gen. ARISTA arrived at Matamoras, he sent at once a flag to exchange such prisoners as he had at Matamoras. He showed great anxiety to get back Gen. VEJA, offering to exchange two or three officers for him; but Gen. TAYLOR had sufficient to make the exchange without giving up Gen. VEJA. It has been said that Gen. TAYLOR offered the latter his parole of honor, which he declined accepting, on the ground that if he returned he would be forced to bear arms again by his Government.

The redoubtable Gen. Ampudia, commanded the 2d division of the Mexican army. It is said he was the first man to make good his escape to Matamoras, where he reported that ARISTA had betrayed the army. Capt AMOS came up as an especial express with despatches from Com. CONNER.

Gen. ARISTA Commanded the Mexican army and was present at the battle.

Seventeen hundred Mexican troops, who had crossed the Rio Grande at Bareta, below Matamoras, upon hearing of the defeat of their main army by Gen. Taylor The Galveston brought up three of the field pieces captured by Gen. Taylor.

From the Austin Democrat of the 6th inst. we learn that Gov. HENDERSON, under instructions from Gen. TAYLOR, has made a requisition upon the militia of the State for several companies of mounted men into the field to operate against Mexico. These troops constituting a regiment, are to be stationed as follows:

Five companies in the vicinity of San Antonio; one at the city of Austin, one at or near New Bauntele.

The last Austin Democrat states that news has reached Austin, from good authority, the Camanches refuse to treat or meet the U.S. Commissioners, and the inference of the Indians has been tampered with by the Mexican emissaries. The Governor, under, at the request of the Legislature, was to appoint Commissioners to ascertain the situation and disposition of the Indians; while further steps were to be taken to protect the frontier settlements from their depredations, should they be disposed to acts of hostility.

The New Orleans Bee states that the knapsacks of those killed were examined and found to contain nothing but corn and alt.

While the battle was being fought, two companies of Mexican artillery came down to Cross Bocha Chica, and marched up the beach to take possession of our vessels with stores, which were obliged to anchor very near the Point. Our flag ship Cumberland got under way and ran down towards them—seeing which they wheeled and returned back.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Bulletin, writing from Point Isabel on the evening of the 12th inst., remarks—

"Many instances occurred of our men handing their canteens to the wounded Mexicans, and turning from them to fire upon others. There was not a single occurrence of cruelty toward the enemy. The morale of the army is at its highest—it can now accomplish anything, and they would die for a commander who does not ask them to go where he is not willing to lead, and in whose judgement they fully confide.

The following particulars of the capture of Gen. VEGA by Capt. MAY is copied from a letter in the Picayune:

"The battle commenced by heavy cannonading on both sides. Gen. TAYLOR, in passing his lines, accosted Capt. MAY of the 2d dragoons, and told him—'Your regiment has never done anything yet—you must take that battery.' He said nothing, but turned to his command and said—'We must take that battery—follow!' He made a charge with three companies—at least the remainder of three companies—supported by the 5th and 8th regiments of Infantry. They cleared the breastworks, rode over the battery, wheeled and came through the enemy’s lines, whilst the fire of the Infantry was so deadly in its effect as to carry all before it. Capt. MAY made a cut at an officer as he charged through. On his return he found him standing between cannon wheels—fighting like a hero. He ordered him to surrender. He was asked if he was an officer? Capt. MAY answered him in the affirmative, when he presented his sword remarking,
The nations interested in preventing the disturbance of the peace which has lasted so many years, and whose resources, and peculiar position have given her ever since she raised herself to be an independent nation, but she considers itself mistress of the American continent, not only would she lose the importance which her population, and property of all nations. If Mexico should indolently suffer these reiterated advances of a power, which already been consumed by the insult of sending us a minister, to be accredited near our government in the character of a residing minister, as if the relations between the two republics had not suffered any disturbance by the definite act of the annexation of Texas. At the very time when Mr. SIDELL appeared, the troops of the U. States were occupying our territory, their squadrons were threatening our ports, and preparations were made to occupy the peninsula of the Californias, to which the Oregon question with England is only is a only a preliminary; and I did not receive Mr. SIDELL because the dignity of the nation repelled this new insult.

In the meantime, the army of the United States fixed its encampment at Corpus Christi, and occupied the island of Padre Vaym; it then marched to Point Isabel, and the flag of stars floated on the right bank of the Rio Bravo del Norte, in front of the city of Matamoras, the American vessels of war having previously seized upon the navigation of the river. The town of Laredo was surprised by , and one of our pickets there stationed was disarmed. Hostilities therefore, have been begun by the United States under taking new conquests in the territories included in the departments of Tamapulipas and New Leon, whilst the troops of the same States threaten Monterey on Upper California. There can be no doubt to which of the two belongs the responsibility of a war, which might have been prevented by a feeling of equity and justice, and of that respect which civilization has been introduced, for the rights and property of all nations. If Mexico should indolently suffer these reiterated advances of a power, which already considers itself mistress of the American continent, not only would she lose the importance which her population, resources, and peculiar position have given her ever since she raised herself to be an independent nation, but she would fall into shame and contempt should she, when challenged to fight for them, allow herself to be stripped of the integrand parts of her territory one by one. Outrages so many and so heavy, can no longer be borne and I have sent orders to the general-in-chief of the division of our northern frontier, to act in hostility against the against the army which is in hostility against us to oppose was to the enemy, which wars upon us; invoking the God of battles to preserve, by the valor of our troops, the unquestionable right to our territory, and the honor of our arms, which are no longer to be deployed only in the defence of justice. Our general, acting according to established usages, and the decided instructions given by my government, summoned the general-in-chief of the American forces to retire beyond the river Nueces, the ancient boundary of Texas, and the summons has been disregarded.

The nations interested in preventing the disturbance of the peace which has lasted so many years, and whose
The time has therefore come which the government of the Mexican nation have endeavored fruitlessly to put off, by debating the clearest and most just titles; and these, having been contemned we enter into a necessary contest, which will secure us the sympathies of all nations and governments, which condemn the usurpations of the powerful. We shall ourselves become strong from the holiness of our cause; and when everything is endangered, our strength will correspond with the exigencies of our condition. Meanwhile the Mexican nation will resolve to hazard all in order to save all; and it will give a sublime example of sacred determination to exhibit that glorious devotion which has so often been displayed at all times by nations and their liberties.

I rejoice with pride that Providence should have destined me to be the organ for the announcing the energetic will of the Mexican republic. Let us prove in battle that the sons of the heroes and martyrs of independence are animated by the recollections of their pure glory; that valor has not degenerated in their breasts, and that they are disposed to sacrifice themselves on the altars of their country.

Mexicans! I raise on this memorable day the standard of independence, on which you see inscribed the illustrious names of Hidalgo and Iturbide. Rally under this sacred ensign, leaving all internal questions and differences for a period of less peril. I have assured you that the glory which I seek as the reward of my painful career, is not that of the ambitious man who regards power as the spoils of rapine, I have sworn to maintain the republic, in all its just rights during the short period of my government; and now, while I urge you to the struggle, and warn you that you must make great sacrifices, I also promise you that I shall not spare my own blood when it shall be necessary.

Mexicans! Your valiant soldiers are about to fight, and they will fight, with the valor of heroes; keep your blessings for them, and prepare yourselves to crown their noble foreheads, or their tombs, if they should fall, when destiny calls you to take their places in the ranks. Mexico will conquer or no longer exist!

National Palace of Mexico, April 23, 1846.

MARIANA PAREDES Y ARRILLAGA

Thursday, May 28, 1846, Page 2, Column 1, Volume 47, Number 12 Words: 685

GENERAL SCOTT

It is understood that this distinguished officer will take command of the forces to be raised under the late act of Congress for the Mexican war; it is further understood that an invasion of Mexico is contemplated. We gather these two facts from the intimations of the official paper.

The Life of Gen. SCOTT, recently published, brings freshly to mind the high qualities of bravery and generalship displayed by that officer during the last war. The brilliant action at Chippewa, in which the British regulars were charged and broken at the point of a bayonet, in the open field, stands on record as a token of gallantry and spirit not likely soon to be forgotten. The prestige of the British bayonet, in the hands of their well drilled regulars, was as commanding as that which gave the charm of invincibility to her battle ships at sea. Until both were destroyed by American valour.

It was not alone by courage in the field that General SCOTT achieved his triumphs in his various conflicts with the enemy during the war of 1812. After the close of the campaign of 1813, which ended in disaster and disgrace, the efforts of SCOTT were directed to preparations for the next springs business. As General of Brigade he formed a camp of instruction at buffalo, and there laboured unceasingly to give his troops that indispensable element of efficiency—discipline. The success of these efforts was signalized nobly on the subsequent achievements of his troops, it is important, at this particular juncture, to dwell upon the item of experience in the last war. If the hostilities now begun are to continue for any length of time, the lessons of the past might teach us to beware of short enlistments--might teach us the importance of organizing an army for the war, be it long or short, so that discipline might begin at once and be perfected before the hardest struggle of strife would come. With such materials for soldiers as we possess in our bold daring and intrpied people, nothing but discipline is wanting to make our armies a sufficient match to the best that ever trod the field.

The biographer of Gen. SCOTT gives a very graphic account of the battle of Chippewa, which was fought in an open plain with out advantage on either side. The following portion of the narrativeis spirited.
“The action soon became general. Major JESSUP now in the wood and out of view, engaged and held in check the enemy’s right wing. The plain widened on that flank, and the enemy’s main line continued to advance. JESSUP having the held incheck one battalion in the wood, the engagement then gave the enemy a new right flank upon the plains. Gen. SCOTT who had continued alternatively to advance halt and fire was now not more than eighty paces from the enemy. The enemy, having a new flank, SCOTT took advantage of the enlarged interval between LEAVENWORTH and McNEIL to throw the left flank of McNEIL’s battalion forward of its right, so that it stood obliquely to the enemy’s charge and flanking him little on his right. At this moment SCOTT called allowed to McNEIL’s battalion, which had not a recruit in it, “The enemy say that we good at long shot, but cannot stand the cold iron. I call upon the Eleventh instantly to give the lie to that slander!” This movement was executed with decisive effect. A corresponding charge was also made by LEAVENWORTH, who held an oblique position on our right. These charges were sustained by the flank fire of Towsan’s artillery on the right, and quickly put the enemy to route. The British army broke and fled in confusion.”

With the spirit of youth inspired in him, Gen. SCOTT now returns to the active duties of the field with the benefits of more than thirty years experience. The young soldier, the untaught volunteer, may look to him with confidence as to a wise and provident teacher, an accomplished man, mingling the courtesies of chivalry with the rough duties of war.—Balt. Amer.

HCH

Thursday, June 4, 1846, Volume 47, Number 14, Page 2, Column 1 Words: 2224

THE MEXICAN WAR—GEN. SCOTT—PRESIDENT MAKING

We devote a considerable portion of our columns this week, to interesting details and accounts of the two splendid battles of the 8th and 9th of May, on the Rio Grande, between our gallant little Army and the forces of Mexico. Some of these accounts thrill through every vein and fibre of the heart; and while every one rejoices over the glorious victory which has crowned our arms—yet they cannot but be awed into silence and amazement when they look upon the scene of battle and follow the gallant TAYLOR and his devoted band to the charge. One blunder—one mistake—a single minute of procrastination and all would have been lost—our men, many of them must have been killed—our wounded and prisoners have fallen into the hands of the enemy; and the past history of Mexican warfare, tells us what there fate would have been; no act of barbarity that could have been practiced upon them would have been left untried by the merciless foe. But the God of Battles decided the day in our favor; and while in the discharge of our duty, our own troops cut down the their enemies with terrible loss—they did not forget, even in the heat and hour of battle, they were a christian people: and gave the dying water to drink—generously treated all prisoners, and buried the dead.

All who know us, know that we were violently opposed to the annexation of Texas to this union, and most especially to the manner in which it was accomplished—by a most palpable and bare-faced violation of the Constitution of the United States. But it was done by the constituted authorities of our country, acquiesced and sanctioned by all the forms necessary to making her a member of this Union—and when this was done, the question was shut with us—she became a part and parcel of our common country, and from the moment of her annexation, entitled to all the protection, care and consideration of our Government and the People that Virginia or Maryland or New York or any other member of this Confederacy is entitled to. If the annexation of Texas to this Union were a question now before us, we should extend to the measure the same opposition as we did in 1844—but that question, as we have before said is done with, and it is not now with the foreign Republic of Texas that we are to deal, but the State of Texas, one of the members of the U. States. When we annexed her to this Union, we did not believe, nor do we believe now, that there was an honest man in the country that did not believe that we were taking her, and her debt, and her war with her. Yes we contracted with her for Texas—that Republic which she called and declared by her act of Independence—her subsequent act of Congress, and, we may add, by the prowess of her arms, to be Texas; and those acts, if we can judge at all from “the lights before us,” carried her to the Rio Grande—the battle fields where now sleep many of our gallant dead,—and whose plains are drenched with the blood of an invading enemy. In this light we look upon the question before us; and we consider every gun fired on the banks of the Rio Grande fired in defence of the rights of our country. The conduct of our troops must stand approved in the eyes of the enlightened world; and if Mexico has been rash enough to encounter us, she must now put up with the bitter fruits of her folly, and prepare herself to render justice—full and ample justice, to our country for the many wrongs committed against us; or to sue at last for peace in the very gates of her Capitol, with a large addition to the loss of her Army and population. The war has now commenced, and the voice of our country demands that it be prosecuted with vigor and energy, with a view, and we trust and believe with a view alone, to the establishment and creation of a lasting peace between the two Republics.

We believe this to be the desire and wish of our own government, and the anxious desire of the people of Mexico, who are goaded and forced into this war by the Military aspirants and tyrants who literally throng and infest that unhappy republic. We trust there is not a man—certainly not a high souled and chivalrous man—who does not mourn over the necessity which compels us to war against our feeble, distracted, and impoverished neighbors. We feel, deeply feel, for the people of Mexico, and only wish we could visit merited punishment upon the tyrants and demagogues, instead of the “rank and File.”

We know, now, that the blow is struck, the urgent and important necessity of following it up until a permanent peace can be established—a peace which will bring with it a settlement of all disputes, and an atonement—as far as such atonement can be made—for the precious blood of RINGGOLD, BROWN, and their brave compatriots who now sleep in their cold grave far from their “kindred and home.”
Since the Press of both parties have spoken out, in terms of general approbation of the selection of Gen. SCOTT to lead the army into Mexico, a considerable action has taken place, in the mind of the President and his constitutional advisers, who are nothing more or less than the slavish automata of his wishes, as to the policy of his selection. When the first embarrassments occurred on the frontier, Mr. POLK manifested the utmost eagerness to have Gen. SCOTT assume the command held by Gen. TAYLOR. The Hero of Niagara, like a true soldier, remonstrated against this disparagement of a gallant and faithful officer; and stated to the President that he was fully competent to discharge every duty that had been assigned to him. Some days afterwards, the President signified his purpose to appoint him to the general command of the Army, to be recruited by an act of Congress. Gen. SCOTT consented at once; observing that it was due to his rank, and would not be regarded as any reflection upon Gen. TAYLOR. Accordingly, he was taken into the Presidents council; and they together, laid out the distributions of the requisitions upon the States, and other details. Meantime the intelligence that SCOTT was to head the troops had gone abroad, and returned to the capitol, as I have stated. It was anything but the union which Mr. POLK desired. He, at once argued that the result of a victory might place him in the Presidential chair; and he as soon concluded, with the natural selfishness of his heart, to revoke his action, or to place it in a position to be most unacceptable to SCOTT. He again urged upon him the propriety of superseding TAYLOR. This was followed up by similar suggestions from the Secretary of War, and other members of the Cabinet, doubtless at the instigation of the Executive. To one and all he replied in the same strain. No man could do more than TAYLOR had accomplished; and no one so well deserved to conclude a campaign which he had so valiantly opened. Gen. SCOTT expressed the most unlimited confidence that he would route the enemy in any regular engagement, even with double forces opposed. How well founded was this prediction, we have now seen.

About this period, only eight days ago, it was necessary to prepare a Bill, organizing the details of the army, which Congress had ordered to be raised. Gen. SCOTT drew it with his own hand—and it was fully approved by the War Department. From which it was transmitted to the Military Committee. On Monday of Tuesday last, that Committee met, and Mr. MARCY appeared before them bearing a new section to be added to the proposed Bill, which was reported to the Senate of Tuesday. It provides for adding two Major Generals and four Brigadier Generals to the military establishment. It is well known that there is no manner of necessity for these officers. The States are allowed top choose there own, and there will be three Brigadier Generals of the United States in the field, exclusive of the Commanding General. What, then, was the purpose of this extraordinary movement? It was to confer upon Mr. POLK the power to appoint two Major Generals, and then to choose one of them to place over the head of Gen. SCOTT and GAINES altogether, for when this war is over, the army must be reduced, and but two major Generals returned to the service. Can any one doubt, who knows Mr. JAMES K. POLK that the successful leader of the Mexican War, as must be any General who undertakes it prove to be, will be preferred to as the hero of Chippewa and Niagara! This whole scheme, I repeat, is designed to oust Gen. SCOTT from the army, and to prevent him from reaping any of the honors, such as they may be, of this war upon unfortunate Mexico.

Seeing the game that was playing—that no orders were issued to him, and that an evident coolness had suddenly grown up in his intercourse with the Executive—Gen. SCOTT addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, a few days ago, setting forth his objections to superseding Gen. TAYLOR, and expressing some doubts as to the propriety of taking the general command, in asmuch as it appeared that he had lost the confidence of the President. He concluded, however, by saying that the first duty of a soldier was "to obey orders" and he was ready to receive any the department might make. Since then no reply has been received; and it is much to be doubted if he will be sent to the South.

[CHC]
LATEST FROM THE ARMY

CROSSING THE RIO GRANDE BY THE AMERICAN ARMY AND PROBABLE SURRENDER OF MATAMORAS

The steamer Alabama arrived at New Orleans on the 21st ult., bringing intelligence from Point Isabel to the 19th ult.

A courier had arrived from Barita a few hours previous to the departure of the Alabama, with intelligence that that place had been taken possession of on the 18th by the volunteers and regulars under Col. WILSON, without opposition, or without any Mexicans having made their appearance.

Gen. TAYLOR had arrived safe at the camp with the 250 wagon loads of supplies, with which he left Point Isabel of the 14th. He was to have crossed the Rio Grande on the 17th ult., at 1 o’clock at some point within three or four miles of the camp, and take possession of Matamoras, in doing which it was supposed the enemy did not oppose him, as no firing had been heard up to the time the Alabama left, and two thousand Mexicans had been seen to move out of the town and take up their march for the interior—literally, as other accounts say, in a state of starvation.

It has been ascertained, with certainty, that the number of killed and wounded of the enemy during the battles of the 8th and 9th, exceeded a thousand—while the killed and wounded of our army numbered but 156. The wounded officers were doing well. Two privates died of their wounds since the James L. Day left.

The steamer Sea having arrived on the morning of the 19th from New Orleans, two complete regiments of Louisiana Volunteers, those of Cols. MARKS and WALTON, were ashore. They were encamped on the Brazos Island, and were to march with Gen. SMITH at their head, on the evening of the day the Alabama left, or on the next morning, to join Col. WILSON’s detachment at Barita. They were in good health and spirits.

Capt. AULICK commands the 500 marines and sailors landing from the U.S. squadron, which had proceeded up the Rio Grande, and acted in conjunction with the army in the capture of Barita.

The frigate Raritan, and the steam frigate Mississippi had left the mouth of the Rio Grande, the former, it was supposed, for Vera Cruz.

A small vessel had arrived from Galveston with 60 Texan volunteers.

Passengers in the Alabama:--Capt. TAYLOR, U.S.A., Wm. II. DUNBAR, L.C. HORNSBY, MR. BARRY, F. FISCHER.

Governor HENDERSON will take the command of the forces raised in Texas, to reinforce the Army of Occupation, by a resolution of the Legislature of that State.

Correspondence of the N. O. Delta

Point Isabel, 19th May, 1846.

We have quite a hospital of wounded men, comprising 43 privates, three Mexican prisoners—one of whom has lost both legs—and the following officers of the U.S. army:

Col. McINTOSH, 5th Infantry; was pierced through the mouth with a bayonet, and shot in three places.

Col. PAYNE, Insp’r Gen.; shot in the hip.

Capt. PAGE, 4th infantry; lower jaw, part of the tongue and upper teeth entirely shot away. He is suffering dreadfully.

Capt. HOE, 8th infantry; right arm broken, and shot in left hand.

Lieut. JORDAN, 8th infantry; shot and bayonetted in several places.

Lieut LUTHER, 2d Artillery; lower hip shot off.

It is expected that all the above will recover, but most of them will require great care.

News has just arrived that a body of marines from the fleet anticipated the arrival of Col. WILSON at Barita, by marching upon the Mexicans, who immediately vacated the post. The inhabitants of the town then hailed the marines, and forthwith sent them fresh beef and other provisions.

[CHCH]
MEXICAN STATEMENT OF THEIR OWN LOSS—PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.—Among the papers found in the captured effects of ARISTA, was the morning return of the Mexican force on the day of the battle, which shows the strength of the enemy to have exceeded 8,000; though it is not absolutely certain that the whole of that force was on the United States bank of the Rio Grande.

Gen. ARISTA’s Aid, while making arrangements with a distinguished officer of our army for the exchange of prisoners and the care of the wounded, stated that the Mexican’s loss, in killed on the field of battle and drowned, was 800. Among the latter was one of the priests in the train of the Mexican army who perished in his flight in the waters of the Rio Grande. In this number, the wounded and the prisoners are not included. Fifteen hundred muskets (all King’s arms) had been collected by our troops.

The plan of the campaign as developed by ARISTA’s papers was for that General, after demolishing the small force under the command of Gen. TAYLOR, to overrun Texas; and, having effected “the conquest of that revolted province,” if it should be necessary to secure the fruits of victory, it was arranged that Gen. PAREDES himself should march an army of occupation into the conquered country. N.Y. Journal of Commerce.

BY THE GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA

A PROCLAMATION

The Congress of the U. States having, by an act approved on the 13th of May 1846, declared that a state of war exists between the Republic of Mexico and that of the United States; and the President of the United States being by said act authorized “to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not exceeding 50,000, for the purpose of enabling the Government of the United States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination,” and having called upon the Executive of the State, under the date of the 19th instant, “to cause to be enrolled and held in readiness for muster into the service of the United States three Regiments of Infantry,” to be composed of volunteer corps—Now, therefore, I, WILLIAM SMITH Governor of Virginia, by virtue of the authority with which I am invested, do announce to my fellow citizens my readiness to receive, for the purpose aforesaid, a tender of the services of thirty companies of volunteers, to be formed into regiments when mustered into the service of the U. States. These companies must have the organization of the Army of the United States, and in their rank and file consist of 64 men, not over 45, nor under 18 years of age, and full of “physical strength and vigor.” Existing volunteer companies tendering their services, will be permitted to retain their existing uniform; but all new companies must strictly conform, in their uniform, to that prescribed by the general order of March, 1834.

No other officer of militia, no matter what his grade, will forfeit his commission by entering into the proposed volunteer service.

For the information of the public, the uniform before referred to, as well as the company organization of the Army of the United States, will be found in the subjoined general order.

The call to arms has, upon the generous and brave, a magical effect. To the Virginian it has never been made in vain. Other States are rushing to fields of danger and glory; and the sons of the Cavaliers will not be outstripped in this noble race of patriotism and duty.

Given under my hand, as Governor, and under the lesser seal of the Commonwealth, at Richmond, this 23d day of May, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-six, and of the Commonwealth the seventieth.

W.M. SMITH.

GENERAL ORDERS
The following organization of Volunteer Corps for the service under the requisition of the President of the United States will be observed:

A company of Infantry will consist of

1 Captain,
1 First Lieutenant,
1 Second Lieutenant,
4 Sergeants,
4 Corporals,
64 Privates,

Thirty companies are required to constitute when called into service, three Regiments of Infantry—Each regiment to consist of

1 Captain,
1 Lieutenant Colonel,
1 Major,
1 Adjutant, (a Lieutenant of one of the Companies, but not in addition.)
1 Sergeant Major,
1 Quarter—Master Serjeant
2 Principal Musicians, and 10 Companies, according to the organization above.

Volunteer Corps now in commission tendering their services, and all new corps which may be raised for this service, will send to this department, with tender of service, a written engagement, signed by all the members to serve twelve months after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous, or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged—according to their discretion.

Old corps will retain the uniform now worn by them: new corps will uniform according to the pattern described.

Commandants of regiments within which volunteers corps for this service shall be raised, will superintend the enrollment, the election of officers, inspect the company, and certify the whole to this department. Commissions for this for this special service will then be issued to the officers of all corps. Existing corps will be inspected in like manner and sign the enrolment.

WM. II. RICHARDSON, Adj’t Gen.

FORM OF ENROLLMENT.

We, the undersigned, do hereby engage to serve in a volunteer company of infantry to constitute a portion of the three regiments required for the service of the United States, according to the terms of an act of Congress "providing for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico," approved the 13th May, 1846—and to hold ourselves in readiness for muster into the service of the United States, when called upon by the Governor of Virginia.
UNIFORM OF THE INFANTRY

Coat—Dark blue cloth, single breasted, three rows of buttons on the breast, ten in each row, at equal distances; the distance between the outer rows and the centre row to be four inches at top and two at bottom, measuring from the centre or eyes of the button; blind button holes of black twist or narrow black braid, from the centre buttons to the corresponding buttons in the outer row; stand-up collar, to meet in front with hooks and eyes, and rise no higher than to permit the free turning of the chin over it; to be edged all around with gold lace, three quarters of an inch in width, with two straps of the same lace, four and a half inches in length on each side, running back from the front, terminated by a button. Cuff, three inches deep, with four blind button holes, of black twist or narrow braid, extending from four buttons, placed across to each, and two small buttons at the fastening. Skirts to reach to the bend of the knee, with blue turn backs, or turn-backs marked with a cord; the bottom of the skirts not less than three and a half, or more than five inches broad, with a star of silver at the connecting point of the turn-backs on each skirt; two hip buttons range with the lower buttons on the breast, two buttons at the opening of the pocket of each skirt; collar and cuffs of blue cloth, plain or embroidered at pleasure.

Buttons—Silver or plated—convex—with the arms of Virginia on them.

Sword and Scabbard—Straight Sword, silver hilt and white gripe; scabbard, steel or plated; sword knot, silver cord and tassel; sword belt, black leather, to be worn over coat.

Sash—Scarlet silk net, with bullion fringe ends; sash to go twice around the waist, and to tie on the left hip; to be worn under the belt.

Epaulets—Silver.

Hat—Cocked, without binding; fan of back part eleven inches; the front or cock nine inches; black ribbons on the two sides. Loop and cockade—Navy blue silk cockade, six inches in diameter; loop, silver, eleven inches long, ornamented, with the arms of Virginia in silver.

Plume—white cock feathers, falling from an upright stem, eight inches long, in a silver socket.

Tassels—Silver with worked hangars. Cravat or Stock Black.

Trowsers—From the 1st of October to 30th April, dark blue cloth or cassimere; from 1st May to 30th September, white linen or cotton.

Boots worn under trowsers.

Spurs—Silver or plated.

Gloves—White.

FOR COMPANY OFFICERS AND PRIVATES.

Coat—Dark blue cloth, single breasted, three rows of buttons on the breast, ten in each row, at equal distances; the distance between the outer rows and the centre row to be four inches at top and two at bottom, measuring from the centre or eyes of the button; blind button holes of black twist or narrow black braid, from the centre buttons to the corresponding buttons in the outer row; stand-up collar, to meet in front with hooks and eyes, and rise no higher than to permit the free use of the turning of the chin over it. For officers, this to be edged all around with silver lace, three quarters of an inch wide, with two straps of the same lace, four and a half inches in length on each side, running back from the front, terminated by a button. Non commissioned officers and privates to wear to wear white worsted lace instead of silver. Cuff three inches deep with four blind button holes of black twist, or narrow thread extending from four buttons, placed across each, with two small buttons at the fastening. Skirts to reach no lower then the middle of the thigh, with four blind button holes of black twist, or narrow braid, on the pocket flaps, to correspond with the buttons.

Trowsers—From the 1st of October to the 30th April, dark blue cloth or cassimere; from 1st May to 30th September, white linen or cotton.

Cap—Black leather, round, with bell crown, plated or sliver scales and eagle.

Pompons—White, in sliver or plated socket.

Buttons—silver or plated, convex, seven-eighths of an inch in diameter, the arms of Virginia.

Wings—Silver scales and bullion for officers. For non commissioned officers the same as for officers, except the bullion. For privates, white metal scales. Non commissioned offices to wear white worsted lace instead of silver.

[HCH]
The following minute and graphic account of the two battles of the 8th and 9th of May, in which our gallant army won for themselves imperishable renown, will be read with deep and thrilling interest. It is from the pen of a noble officer who heroically bore his full share of the duties and dangers of the trying occasion:

CAMP OPPOSITE MATAMORAS, May 13th 1846.

On the 1st of May the Army under General TAYLOR took up its line of march at 3 o’clock P.M. for Point Isabel, thirty miles distant, in order to force up from that point provisions which were necessary to the maintenance of our Fort here. To defend in our absence Gen. TAYLOR left the 7th Regiment of Infantry. BRAGG’s artillery of four six-pounders, Capt. LOWD’s battery of four eighteen pounders and some convalescents as a garrison—the whole under the command of Maj. BROWN under the Army. We had heard of six or seven thousand of the enemy to oppose our march to our depot, and expected to fight them on the way down—but did not meet with them. On the 2nd instant, in the afternoon, we reached Point Isabel, and on the 3rd heard the bombardment of our Fort at this place. This bombardment continued at intervals for several days. In the meantime, Gen. TAYLOR, having learned from express from Maj. BROWN that he could hold the fort, put his whole command at work in the entrenchments at Point Isabel, the basis of our operations, and having made it sufficiently strong and loaded about three hundred wagons with provisions and ammunition, he determined to proceed at once to the relief of our gallant little band in this Fort, and give battle to the enemy if necessary. He commenced his march at 2 o’clock P.M. on the 7th instant in the following order:—A squadron of Dragoons, commanded by Capt. MAY, in front; the third Brigade, composed of the 3rd and 4th Regiments of Infantry and RINGOLD’s light artillery; the 5th infantry not Brigaded, and the 1st Brigade, composed of the Artillery Battalion serving as Infantry; DUNCAN’s light Artillery and the 8th Infantry—to which must be added two eighteen pounders drawn by oxen and Capt. KERR’s squadron of Dragoons protecting the rear—the wagons on the march being a great degree interspersed between the two Brigades for greater security.

On the night of the 7th we encamped about 12 miles from Point Isabel, without seeing the enemy. On the 12th we had advanced about 5 miles, when we descried the enemy about two miles distant, drawn up in great force in the open prairie, and occupying the gentle slope with their back to the thick bushes, called in this country “ch apparal.”

We immediately formed line to the front, and advanced calmly and quietly to the attack. Our brave and considerate old General, finding that the enemy waited to receive us, and that we were passing near a lake of water, the day being hot and the men thirsty, halted in full view of the adversary and directed the men to fill their canteens with water. We had now little leisure to examine the force of the enemy and its composition. The horizon in our front and to the right appeared lined with cavalry (Lancers and Dragoons). The woods in their rear were giving up column after column of Infantry, which were maneuvered with great regularity, and batteries of Artillery were observed taking their designated places in our front and on our flanks. The lowest estimate at the time of the enemy’s force was 5,000 of all arms—our own being under 2,000 fighting men. We have since learned that on this occasion, the enemy had over 6,000 fighting men. But the greatest difficulty under which we labored was the absolute necessity of protecting in an open prairie, from the enemy’s numerous cavalry, our enormous train of provisions and ammunition, without which, even if we gained a victory we could not relieve our garrison opposite Matamoros, or maintain our position there. Besides we were miserably deficient as to the number of our cavalry, having only 200 Dragoons while the enemy could not have had less than 1,000 or 2,000. The men being refreshed our General rode to each Brigade, and told the men to keep cool, when the enemy charged not to fire a shot until they were repulsed with the bayonet, and had turned their backs in flight.

Our advance then re-commenced, slowly, but firmly, wagons and all; and when we arrived in artillery range, their batteries opened upon us; some of their balls bouncing along the open plain and passing us in “ricochet” other flying over our heads, and falling in the rear, showing us in a few moments that their pieces were served with skill and precision. A movement was now observed among the enemy cavalry as if about to charge, and the Regiments nearest them were thrown into the square, or formation preparatory to the square and so disposed to protect our own artillery whenever it was ordered to fire. During this time, some fifteen minutes, the enemy’s fire was received in perfect silence by us, and at length, Capt. DUNCAN having been ordered to open upon them, advanced in the most gallant manner, and placing himself in a position to be protected by the infantry, assault the enemy’s cavalry, and one that would enable him at the same time to gall their cavalry and masses of infantry, sent a withering fire among them, which created some confusion, and which was answered by one of our squares of infantry by one long simultaneous shout, which showed how anxious they were to be led to the charge at once—but this could not be. They were destined to give the strongest evidence of courage that a soldier can exhibit—to stand in squares for hours under the fire of the enemy’s artillery, so as to protect from the enemy’s cavalry our own artillery, whilst the latter was mowing down the enemy’s ranks. As soon as DUNCAN opened, Maj. RINGGOLD’s thunder was heard on the right, Lieut. CHURCHILL’s from the eighteen pounders in the centre, and all the enemy batteries opening at the same time, a tremendous cannonading ensued, which on this plain of boundless extent, presented a spectacle of great magnificence. The battle commenced at ten minutes past 2 P.M. It had lasted about an hour, when a large body of the enemy’s Red Lancers charged the 5th Infantry, with a view of cutting of our wagon train. They were met with the most perfect tranquility, and a discharge of musquetry from the 5th (General BROOK’s) Regiment told us their fate. They fled precipitately, leaving men, horses, and guidons on the field. In the meantime the whole order of battle had been changed to conform to the maneuvers of the enemy, and our Brigade, the 1st, which was on the left, now found itself in advance on the right—the Artillery Battalion being on the extreme right and, most in advance. It must be
The battle had lasted from about 10 minutes past 2 P.M. until about 7 P.M. At this moment the enemy was discovered coming down with his left flank with great force with cavalry and infantry on the Artillery Battalion and the 18 pounders which that battalion supported. The 18 pounders were served by thirty men, and the artillery battalion was about 360 strong. Both the Battery and the Battalion were in such a position that they could not be supported by the other portion of the army, and at the same time the charge commenced the Battalion had deployed into line. However, it was thrown into square by a prompt manœuvre, and waited steadily the Mexican charge. On they came “horse, foot and Dragoons,” shouting and yelling, when a single horseman rode into the square and said, “Men, I place myself in your square.” The General was immediately recognized by his men, who gave him three cheers as evidence of his confidence. At this moment Lieut. CHURCHILL discharged one of his 13 pounders, loaded with grape into the advancing ranks, creating great havoc, but not checking entirely their onward movement. They marched forward to within good musket range, some 150 yards of us, halted and delivered their fire, which our men received quietly and at a shoulder. Finding that they would come no nearer, Col. CHILDS, commanding this Battalion, ordered the volley, which was given as if in parade, when the enemy immediately retired, and the action ended for the night. Our army slept on their arms precisely as night found them, and occupied the position in which the enemy commenced the battle. The two armies slept quietly almost in presence of each other. The night was serene and beautiful, the moon casting the softest light on everything around us, but for the groans of the wounded and the screams of those who were suffering under the knife of the surgeons, no one could have imagined the scenes which had occurred but a few hours previously.

On our side we had fifty-five killed and wounded. The gallant Major RINGGOLD was mortally wounded, and his noble steed killed by the same shot, as he was giving his last fire for the night, and after having distinguished himself by the coolness, precision, and effect which he managed his battery. Capt. JOHN PAGE of the 4th Infantry was horribly wounded supposed to be mortally. Many officers had horses shot under them—Captain BLISS, Lieut. DANIELLS, Capt. MONTUOMERT, and several others.

Many Dragoons horses were killed and the escapes were almost incredible. MAGRUDER’s company two men, whilst at an order, had the bayonets of their muskets cut off by cannon balls, passing over their shoulders and between their heads. He had also a man killed of his immediate right and left. Some of the balls fell into the centre of the squares and recoiled out again, without touching anyone. Others fell just on the outside and bounced over. To stand patiently and coolly, in square, under such fire, for five hours, without firing a shot, is the best evidence of discipline and invincible courage that troops can give. But more: the effect of this courage which none but regulars could have shown, must be considered. The next morning the enemy retreated, leaving the field strewn with their dead, and having lost, by their own confession, five hundred in killed and wounded; but we have found out since his loss is much greater. The enemy’s artillery was numerous and served with great rapidity and precision; while we had little cavalry and they had an immense proportion of that arm. Hence our shell and grape shot told briskly among them. In short, we gained on that day a great victory. When we consider the enemy’s numbers, his numerous and effective regular cavalry, his well-drilled infantry and artillery and above all that he had chosen his own ground, that upon which he is the most accustomed to fight—the plain—and compare all this with our inferiority in all arms, and that we were incumbered by a train we could not afford to lose we can only account for the result by the impression made on the enemy by our firm and unshaken advance; by the steadiness with which we repulsed their cavalry and by the unrivalled skill of our artillery officers and men—to which must be added a perfect knowledge on the part of both men and officers that if we lost the battle the Fort at Matamoras would fall, the Army, be destroyed, and our depot, Point Isabel, be taken to the eternal disgrace of the American Army and the ruin of the interest of our Government, for some time at least, in this part of the world. We could not afford to be driven back a single inch, and all were prepared for any thing but retreat.

On the morning of the 9th the Mexican enemy left the field at early dawn, and after arranging our train, we commenced the march toward our Fort at this place. At 2 o’clock P.M. we found the enemy drawn up in great force occupying a ravine which our road crossed, with thick “chappareel” or thorny bushes on either side, where it crossed the ravine, constituting a complete defile. They were 7,000 strong, we 54 weaker than the previous day. The General ordered an immediate attack, by all troops except the First Brigade which was kept in reserve, and soon the rattling fire of musketry, mingled with the heavy sound of artillery, announced the commencement of the action. The enemy had chosen his position, which he had considered impregnable—was vastly superior to us in numbers, and had ten pieces of artillery planted in the road in front of us, which swept the road with grape, and which it was absolutely necessary for us to take before he could be beaten. These pieces were flanked on either side by a Regiment of brave troops, from Tampico, and we were obliged to stand an awful shower of grape and bullet before a charge could reach them. The battle had lasted for some two hours with great fury on both sides, with many heroic deeds had been done, with no impression made, when Gen. TAYLOR sent for Capt. MAY of the 2d Dragoons and told him that he must take that battery with his Squadron of Dragoons, if he lost every man. MAY instantly placed himself at the head of his men, and setting off at full speed, with three cheers and shouts, dashed into the defile, where he was greeted with an overwhelming discharge of grape and bullets, which nearly annihilated his first and second platoons, but he was seen unhurt darting like lightning, through this murderous hail storm, and in a second he and his men drove away or cut to pieces the artillerists.

The speed of his horse was so great, however, that they passed through the battery, and were halted in its rear. There turning, he charged back, and was just in time to rescue a Mexican General officer who would not leave his guns, and who was warring the strokes of one of his men. He handed his sword to MAY and announced himself as Gen. VEGA, and gave his parole. MAY turned him over to an officer, and galloping back to Gen. TAYLOR, reported that he had captured the enemy’s battery, and the valiant Gen. VEGA, bravely defending it, whose sword he had the honor to present to his commanding officer. The General was extremely gratified, and felt no doubt that a blow had been given, from which it would be difficult for the enemy to recover—and so it proved, for a portion of the 5th Infantry, finding that the enemy had reoccupied and commenced serving their pieces, gallantly charged and brought off several, when the 8th, which had just come up, marched to the attack by its gallant commander, Col. BELKNAP, seconded nobly by Capt. MONTGOMERY, and took off the remaining pieces. Col. BELKNAP, leading his Regiment into the thickest of the fight, seized a Mexican standard, and waving it over his head, dashed in front of his men, until his horse stumbled over his dead bodies and threw him. Being a heavy man, he was helped on his horse by a soldier who in the act received a shot through his lungs, and at the same moment a shot carried away the Mexican flag, leaving but the handle with the Colonel. He dashed ahead with that, however, and his regiment carried everything before it. At this moment the Mexicans gave way entirely, and throwing down their arms, fled in every direction, leaving all their stores, munitions of war, arms, standards, &C. The killed, wounded, and prisoners, including among those killed those drowned in the Rio Grande, do not fall short of 1500—so that the enemy’s loss in two days amounts to not less than 2,000 men, something more than the number we had in our army.

When Lieut. MAGRUDER introduced Gen. VEGA to Gen. TAYLOR the latter expressed his deep regret that such a misfortune should happen to an officer whose character he so highly esteemed, and returned to him his sword which he had won so bravely. It is said also the General gave the captive officer an order on his private banker for his use when he arrived in the United States.

Immediately after the victory, a regiment marched into this fort, and was received with cheers and open arms. All had done their duty—those who were left behind to defend our fort—those who had marched ahead to its relief. I had nearly forgot to mention that no officer in the battle of the 9th was more distinguished than Lieut. RANDOLPH RIDGELY. His conduct drew praise from the lips of every officer. But I shall never finish if I record every act of personal valor which occurred in this battle, where officers and men fought hand to hand for hours with the Mexicans. I shall therefore conclude with the hope that in a few days we shall be in Matamoros.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 4, 1846, Volume 47, Number 14, Page 3, Column 1, Words: 2021

BOMBARDMENT OF FORT BROWN

We have nowhere else (says the N.O. Picayune) so circumstantial and interested an account of the bombardment of the camp opposite Matamoras as is contained in the following letter. It is due to state that it was written exclusively for the gratification of “a select few” of his friends—not for the public eye. The reader will on this account excuse the air of levity with which serious matters are discussed. Under all this exuberance of fun and humor, we do not assure the reader that the writer bears a heart that beats with every generous and manly impulse, and he is fully cognizant of all the sober realities of the service of which he is engaged:

CAMP OPPOSITE MATAMORAS,
MAY 13, 1846.

Since the evening of the 9th noting has transpired here. You may know, ere this, that we gave the Mexicans “jesse” on the 8th and 9th. Gen. TAYLOR, after establishing his little sand fort here, opposite the town, left the 7th infantry and two Artillery companies in it, with instructions to defend it to the death, he then left with the remainder of his forces for Brazos Santiago for supplies, and in the hope that the two mortars (which he had ordered two months ago) had arrived from Washington, and also to bring up ammunition enough for our 18 pounders to batter down Matamoras. Gen. T. and command left on the 1st of this month. On the morning of the 3d, at daylight, the Mexicans opened their batteries on our fort, or rather our grand entrenchments; from that moment it was right hot work until 12 o’clock, when both parties had to cease so their guns would cool. Were you ever shot at in front with a 12 pounder, in the flank with a 6 pounder, and a shell directed to burst over your head? If not try it, just to properly enjoy a brandy toddy after the gun cooling begins. Well, after the refreshments the ball continued, varied only by “vindictive looseness” and wild colt, comet like flying of shells. It was only 25 minutes after we commenced our fire before one of our 18 pound shot struck one of their 12 pound cannon directly in the muzzle, and knocked it, head, back, and muzzle twenty feet into the air and it was accompanied by about twenty legs, heads, arms. Seven Mexican officers were wounded and eight privates, who were around their piece, were killed. We have not heard from their 12 pounders since, so hot was their fort in which it had been placed, that they were compelled to abandon it. When the first fire came I rushed into my tent and jerked up my rifle, and as I stepped out a 9 pound shot struck my tent at the head of my bed, ranged the whole length of my bed, cut out the back upright pole, passed out the back part through two other tents, then buried itself in the parapet. I’m glad I was not “caught napping.”

In the first hour a sergeant of Captain Lee’s company was killed; he was carried over to the hospital tent, (full of sick,) and directly after he was laid on a bed, a bomb shell was thrown through the top of the tent, hit near the bed, and blew the dead man’s head off without injuring any one else. On Wednesday, the 6th, May, and the 3rd day of bombardment, Major BROWN was struck in the leg by a bomb shell, and the leg had to be amputated—he died on the 9th. These are the only two we have lost during the whole bombardment, which commenced on Sunday the 3d, and lasted, with little intermission, day and night until the following Saturday at dark. During this time the enemy had thrown about 3500 shots—solid and shells—amongst us. It is incredible that the damage is so slight. Finding we could not dismount their mortars—they being sunk in the ground, with thick embankments in front—and having only about 400 rounds of ammunition to our cannon, we went to work throwing up a temporary bomb-proof shelter, by taking our barrels of pork, laying sticks across them, and throwing six feet of earth upon that. These were built at points in the fort where they would be convenient for the men; and when we saw the smoke from their guns, we would fall into the parapet and “hole.” The Mexicans thought they had killed nearly all of us, as they were under the impression that all who fell were shot.

It was very disgusting to stand and be fired at all round and not be able to return it “in full force and virtue;” but, knowing our ammunition was scarce, we reserved it till the death struggle should come on. We were in hopes that, after a reasonable time of bombarding, the enemy would attempt to storm us. Two or three feints were made, but they could not be brought to scratch. Five mortars were playing on us at once, from every point of their works. Gen.
TAYLOR’s orders to us were to maintain this post, and not pretend to make any sally or risk in the least his position here; but in case we were surrounded after he left, signal guns were to be fired at certain intervals, which would notify him of the fact. This notice was given to the General, as they heard all our guns at Point Isabel. On the 8th, the General commenced his march with the train of provisions, and when about twelve miles from here, he saw the enemy in position. He immediately “walked into their affections.” We heard the firing of cannons on both sides, and distinctly the volley of musketry. We knew well that it was the General poking it into there short ribs. We had stopped to “licker,” but at the first gun we sprung to our parapets, and for one hour we had the prettiest little cannon fight that ever a man beheld. They gave us gun for gun, while we slung at them “the best the shop contained.”

But wait, I forgot one thing: On the first Wednesday, after the bombardment had lasted three days, the enemy “sounded a parley.” Maj. SEAWELL and Lieut. BRITTON were ordered to go out and see what they wanted. They did so, and the Mexicans demanded the surrender of the fort “for humanity’s sake.” They gave us one hour to surrender, or they would put us all to the sword. They brought us a letter from Gen. ARISTA to our commanding officer, Capt.
HAWKINS (BROWN had been shot just before,) had a council of war called, and said he presumed we were unanimous on such points, but that he would put the matter to vote as to their feelings. The vote of youngest member was taken first, and so on throughout. This was the unanimous vote:—“Defend the place to the death.” Gen. ARISTA was in thirty minutes replied to as follows: That we had received his humane communication, but not understanding perfectly the Spanish language, we were doubtful if we understood his meaning; but, from all we could understand, he proposed that we give him possession of the place, or we would all be put to the sword in one hour; if this was the proper understanding, we would respectfully decline the proposition, and “took this opportunity to assure his Excellency of our distinguished consideration.” After the reception of this by his “Excellency,” it just rained balls. The different mortars kept two pair of “saddle-bags” in the air at all time, varied only by their 4 and 6 pounders. But in the midst of all the storm the Spangled Banner still floated on our breast works, at the point where they directed their strongest efforts; and we took out our two regimental colors and planted them on different parts of the wall. This fire was kept up all night, while their musketry played us [illegible] the rear, at the distance of five hundred yards. We ordered our men not to fire a shot till they came within eighty yards—but they did not approach. Their object was to exhaust in ammunition. They knew from deserters that it was scarce. They are fond of fighting at long distances, but they can’t stand the cold steel.

Now for where I left off the night of the 8th. Gen. TAYLOR and the Mexican army were 12 miles from here—between this and Brazos. The batteries at Matamoras and around us, and in our fort, kept up a constant firing and dark, when all ceased. We had no communications from the General, but that he had to lick’em, or die! The sound of arms had not retrograded, but advanced; besides, there was no ringing of the bells in the city, or signs of rejoicing, therefore we judged they had not the first cause for jolification. That night was the first sound napping that had been done in the fort for six nights. The next morning at daylight the enemy’s batteries opened on us as usual, we laying low, as our cannon ammunition was nearly exhausted, giving them a “crowder” now and then to let them know “the degenerate sons of Washington: were not all dead yet. At 1 o’clock we heard Gen. TAYLOR open again, and from that till 4 o’clock the battle raged with fury, coming closer almost every shot. The General was them before him in the chapporal at the point of a bayonet. At half mile in our rear we saw their cavalry retreating for the ferry, to recross the river at Matamoras and they were in utter confusion; we turned one of our eighteen pounders on to bear on the mass, and driving them across the river. This fired the Mexicans to the quick. They fainted and they could not be brought to scratch. Five mortars were playing on us at once, from every point of their works. Gen. TAYLOR immediately “walked into their affections.” We heard the firing of cannons on both sides, and distinctly the volley of musketry. We knew well that it was the General poking it into there short ribs. We had stopped to “licker,” but at the first gun we sprung to our parapets, and for one hour we had the prettiest little cannon fight that ever a man beheld. They gave us gun for gun, while we slung at them “the best the shop contained.”

Then you should have heard the loud huzzas that went up from this little spot. I sprung upon the wall near our regimental flag and requested silence. Every thing was still as death. Says I, “three cheers for the star spangled banner.” It was given in full blast; Matamoras heard the shout; and then, and not till then, every gun from the enemy came to a cease.

The enemy say they had 6,000 in the fight, but from the returns of the regiments which we have found on the field there must have been 7,153 of them. We had 1,500 engaged in the battle, about 500 forming the reserve. All Gen.
ARISTA’s paper’s and baggage had been taken, silver in abundance. The loss [taken, wounded, missing] of the enemy amounts to about 2,000; among the prisoners were Gen. LA VEGA and 17 officers. Nine pieces of cannon were taken,— 7 out of the 9 were loaded; this shows you how tight it was. Gen. T captured more muskets from the enemy than we had in the fight against them—the biggest pile of ammunition you ever saw; 400 splendid mules, and baggage of all kinds enough to load the steamer “Harney.” We have lost about 150 killed and wounded—4 officers killed, 9 wounded.
Gen. T, left the day before yesterday for Brazos to bring up his mortars, which we understand have arrived. He will also organize the volunteers expected. We look for him to-night and as soon as he arrives we shall commence operations against Matamoras, and will have it or faint in our traces. It is my opinion that we have crippled them so by the loss of their cannon, muskets and ammunition that they will be forced to retreat to Carmego [60 miles from here,] or Monterey [108,] but from indications they are fortifying the city and preparing to give us a street fight; let it be so—we are prepared for any event. The Anglo-Saxon never can acknowledge the corn to the cross of Negro and Indian.
Some of us will get our pates cracked, but it is our profession. Nevertheless, mark what I say—unless everything we demand is granted our banner will in a few days wave from the walls of Matamoras.
Thursday, June 4, 1846, Volume 47, Number 14, Page 3, column 3 Words: 954

THE FLYING ARTILLERY—RINGGOLD—RIDGELY, &c.

We have before us a letter, dated "may11, Camp opposite Matamoras," from an officer that participated in the two engagements which terminated so gloriously to our arms. The Palo Alto and La Resaco de la Palma. While, as citizens of the united States, we fell proud of the courage, judgement, and military skill, displayed by th eCommander-in-chief of our gallant little army, the heroic conduct of those more immediately represented our own State, cannot fail deeply to interest us as citizens of Maryland. It is to our purpose, in the present article, particularly to allude to the fine corps of Flying Artillery, which lately left our city, under the command of Maj. RINGGOLD. This corps, from its long station here, and from the intimacy of its officers and men with our citizens, has become so identified with the city of Baltimore as to be to it an object of particular regard. Its chief officer, the gallant RINGGOLD, had during a long residence, enshrined him in our the hearts and confidence of our citizens; and the attention paid by him to the corps under his command had anticipated for it honor in the time of action. Maj. RINGGOLD was mortally wounded in the battle of Palo Alto, and to the last retained the same consciousness and coolness which had characterized him at the head of his company.

Lieut. RANDOPH RIDGELY, likewise a Marylander, succeeded to the command of the Flying Artillery. Lieut. Ridgely distinguished himself in the Florida Wars. We have seen Col. BANKHEAD's report of the battle of Locha Hatchee, in the 23th January, 1838,in which particular mentio is made of his gallantry.

During the engagement of the 8th, in which Major RINGGOLD was wounded, he had his horse shot under him. The following is an extract from the letter before us: "The fourth shot of the enemy struck the horse of Lieut. RIDGELY, in the head, killing the man to whom he was about to hand the bridle. Shortly after, Lieut. R. was detached with two pieces to another part of the field where he had hot work."

The loss suffered by the Flying Artillery on this day was that of its major and this one man. The letter goes on to say; "The next day we took up our march. After proceeding about five miles, an express came back, ordering Lieut. RIDGELY to the front of his battery. He advanced and reported to the General who told him that the enemy occupied the road about half a mile ahead, with six or eight pieces of artillery, and in great force, on each side covered by the thick chapparel. Lieut. RIDGELY moved forward cautiously about twenty yards ahead of his pieces, when he perceived a few on the road about 400 yards in front. Instantly they opened their batteries upon him; he ordered a trot and went up rapidly until within 300 yards, and then returned their fire. This continued with great rapidity for some time—they having likewise infantry firing with them. We discovered they were falling back—limbered up and slashed ahead 150 yards, when we again saw them. We drove them back half a mile, when Capt. MAY rode up and enquired of Lieut. RIDGELY as to their position, stating that he was about to charge. Lieut. R. told him to wait until we gave them one round from all our pieces. He did so, and then rushed forward at the head of his cavalry—we following with our battery at full gallop. MAY succeeded in taking prisoner Gen. LA VEGA—the 2d in command—and drove them from their pieces, but suffered terribly from their musketry. We reached the edge of the ravine as he turned and saw two regiments about 60 yards off—at once halted, and as we were unlimbering our guns, their musketry and three pieces with grape, opened upon us. They knocked over eight horses and five men. We returned their fire with double vigor, and with the infantry, after about twenty minutes of the most terrible slaughter, put them to the route. We followed but had not oursued over 200 yards, when we came on their entire camp, took everything they had: all their ammunition, 9 pieces of artillery, 300 pack mules, personal baggage and private communications of their Commander General, ARISTA; his silver plate, etc. etc. Our force was about 1800, their about 6,000. Gen. LA VEGA says he has been in battles since his boyhood but never saw men rush up to the cannons mouth as our troops did; and could not think it possible for artillery to move as our batteries did. Lieut. RIDGELY was introduced to him as the officer who commanded the leading battery of whose effectiveness he particularly spoke. We lost in our company, 1 killed, 5 wounded, with 13 horses."

We understand that in a letter to his family, Lieut. RIDGELY speaks in the highest terms of the gallantry and coolness with which he was supported by Lieuts SHOVER, FREMONT, and FRENCH—and of the promptness and intrepidity of the men. This was indeed a bravely fought battle and glorious victory, and while with sincere grief we lament the fate of those who fell, it is with pride that we contemplate the gallant behaviour of the survivors. This blended feeling recalls to our minds the famous reply of the English King when told of the death of PERCY in "Chevy Case."

Now, God be with him said our King.

'Sith twill no better be,

I trust I have within my realm,

Five hundred good as he.

We hope that the "five hundred" will be sought out by our government, and not suffered to go unrewarded—Balt. Pat.

[HCH]
U. States & Mexico.

MORE ABOUT THE WAR.

MARCH FROM CORPUS CHRISTI.

The following highly interesting letter from an officer in the American army, to his family in Germantown, Pa., giving the particulars of the march of the army from Corpus Christi to its present position opposite Matamoras, is copied from the Germantown Telegraph.

CAMP NEAR MATAMORAS, April 5, 1846.

I have the pleasure to inform you that my health is perfectly restored; for some time before leaving Corpus Christi I had been sick in the hospital with the diarrhea, and when we got the order to march to this place I was so weak and feeble, that I had to purchase a horse to carry me; but by the time we arrived at the Colorado, change of air, diet and water, produced a perfect cure, and I have been doing duty ever since. As our march to this place may be interesting to you, and having kept a journal on the route, I herewith send you a few extracts. We have lain encamped for eight months at Corpus Christi, exposed to all kinds of weather, from the burning rays of an almost vertical sun to the terrific "northers" which prevail in that part of Texas, bordering on the Gulf, during the fall and winter months; suffering sometimes in one day the extremes of burning heat and chilling cold.

On our arrival in Corpus Christi Bay, about fourteen low, shabby shanties contained the inhabitants of the so-called town. What a change! Three weeks had not elapsed before fifty grog shops had reared their hydra heads, and stood with open doors to invite the too easily-duped soldiers; gaming tables, ten-pin alleys, hot whiskey punch, tom and jerry—every thing that could afford the least attraction to the novelty-seeking soldier, were spread out before him, and many, alas! Too many, borne to their graves, the victims of intoxication and diseases of every kind arising from excess. But a ray of joy sprung up in every heart when the orders for marching were received. We marched in four divisions. First, the Dragoons and Flying Artillery on the 8th March, the first Brigade on the 9th, the 2d on the 10th, and the 3d on the 11th. Our camp was now all bustle. The women were, with one or two exceptions, to be left behind to take passage by water to Brassos Santiago. Packing up was the order of the day. Here and there might be seen groups of Mexicans bargaining with our men for wearing apparel, and giving cash for what they might have had for nothing in a few days, for we could not carry half our "plunder."

The head of the column was again put in motion; the morning of the 11th shone most brightly and gave token of a beautiful day; all hands were in fine spirits for the march, and our former busy camp looked gloomy, as we cast our eyes along the line and marked the now desolate space so lately occupied by the other three divisions of the army. We were about to leave a place where had been filled to the brim the cup of bitterness—still a sort of regretful feeling hung over us—many a spot on the shore of shells had become endeared to us. At eight o'clock, precisely, we commenced our march, our music playing, "Our colors floating in the breeze." Our last adieu were half muttered, half cursed, as we threw back a glance at Corpus Christi. We had raised the bill and were just out of sight of the town, when the drum struck up "the girl I left behind me." It certainly is a very pretty air, and very appropriate sometimes, when troops are marching; but my heart sent forth an amen as our commander rode up and hastily shouted, "Stop that, who told you to play that air?" After a march of twelve miles, through musquit timber and prairie grass, we halted on the banks of the Neuceces, a most delightful stream, in fact the best water I had tasted in Texas.

Next day we marched over a splendid prairie through millions of flowers, the blooming cactus among the number; and halted early. We had halted but a moment when a troop of horse came rushing towards us about a mile distant, and seemed at first as if intending to take us by storm, when they suddenly wheeled and started in another direction. Our brigade commander knew not what to make of this expedition, and naturally concluded it was a party of Mexicans observing our movements, especially as the state of the atmosphere at the time loomed up the distant objects so as to give them the appearance of a mounted party.

An express was instantly sent out and returned in a few minutes, having ascertained them to be a drove of wild horses or Mustangs; from this circumstance the camp was called "Camp Mustang."

Our short march of the previous day had revived all bands, and we started cheerfully on the morning of the 13th; we marched this day 11 miles over a rolling prairie covered with flowers of every hue. The odor was delightful; and the whole surface of the earth seemed covered with a beautiful carpet. The edge of the horizon in every direction was covered with wild animals, on one side thousands of wild horses were corveting about—on another herds of deer might be seen standing for a moment filled with wonder at sight of us, then bounding away as if a thousand devils chased them. Here rushed along the antelope with speed almost incredible, and in the distance might be seen countless numbers of them at play. Now and then we caught a sight of the Peccany or wild hog, looking much like a shingle navigating on four legs. The manoeuvring of the wild horses was decidedly wonderful, they would form into line of battle, and march accurately abreast toward us until a signal from one of them, they would break into platoons or sections, and be in a moment almost out of sight, but the charge was sublime! I cannot describe it, and will not attempt. But only imagine a thousand wild steeds, with eyes flashing and limbs as unrestrained and free as the wind—whose manes the hand of man never touched—suppose them rushing in one line across the plain, with head erect,
We this night encamped on the "Los Pintos." We left on the 11th at daybreak and marched 14 miles through precisely the same description of country as the day before. The entire march was spent in exclamations of surprise and delight as each new object would present itself. Heads of antelopes, deer and wild horses would rush close past us. We encamped at "Santa Gertrudes." On the 15th we started at day break, marched over the same description country as the preceding day, and encamped in the evening among the "Santa Clara Mottes," as the small groves of trees are called which are here and there seated over the prairie. Here the water was very bad, and scarce had fuel enough to cook with. On the 16th we reached early in the afternoon "Camp El Pista," and on the 17th started at quarter past 5 o'clock; this day we crossed a salt lake, and marched through deep loose sand, not a vestige of vegetation. The teams have great difficulty to get along. The men were much fatigued this day, having marched 20 miles.

On the 18th we were detained till about 9 o'clock by the issue of rations. Our march this day was a scene of the most acute suffering ever felt. We marched through a sandy prairie—at every step we sank ankle deep in the burning white sand, with a piercing sun beamimg down upon us, and not a breathe of air to relieve our misery. To add to our discomfort there was not a drop of fresh water for seventeen miles, while to aggravate our miseries we frequently came upon salt ponds; we at length arrived at a fresh water pond—the rush to it was tremendous; with what delight did I drink cup after cup of the dirty swamp water. Sick and sore with the privations of the preceding day we left "Camp Marcy," (so called after the Secretary of War,) and now advanced into a perfect heaven upon earth. I wish I could describe this part of the country. If the garden of Eden was equal to it, what a treasure our first parents must have lost; here are the notes of ten thousand birds to charm the ear—hear are silver lakes, upon whose margin the dwarf honey-bean stands and casts just shade enough to give a celestial appearance to the whole; while from beds of flowers, on which imagination pictures millions of tiny fairy queens to be dancing, arises a perfume so grateful to the senses, that we were lost in wonder that such scenes should possibly exist and we not know it before.

We encamped this night at "Catecita," 119 miles from Corpus Christi; and the next day (the 20th) passed through the same description of country. We saw in the afternoon and evening several large wild bulls, advancing at no great distance from us. On the 21st, we started very early, and at about 10 o'clock reached the Rio Colorado, a deep broad stream with high bluff banks. It was at the crossing of this river that Gen. TAYLOR expected to be attacked; the cavalry and 1st and 2d brigades reached the Colorado on the 20th; Col. CANALES with 5 or 6000 Mexicans were encamped on the opposite banks of the river; he told Gen. TAYLOR it was useless to attempt to cross—that the first man who put his foot into the water would be shot down—that he was only performing his duty, the neglect of which would certainly cost him his property, perhaps his life—that his feelings must give place for duty, &c. Gen. TAYLOR replied that the crossing was indespensable—was sorry for the Colonel's feelings, &c., but positively he would cross, while Gen. WORTH, riding forward, exclaimed, "Come on boys, if there's any shooting to be done I'll have a hand in it—1st brigade! Forward!" and dashed into the stream followed by his command, (covered by the artillery, who were posted on the bank ready to return the first fire of the Mexicans.) They no doubt though that discretion was the better part of valor, so retreatted without firing a shot.

On the 21st our Brigade came up with the main body of the army and encamped four miles from the Colorado. On the morning of the 23d the whole army moved for the Rio Grande. We marched 12 miles through a prairie of very high grass teeming with rattle snakes larger than I had ever seen before; a man of the 4th Infantry was bitten by one, but by the timely and skilful attention of the Surgeon, who scarified the wound until it bled freely, and then applied ammonia, he recovered. Not so with a mule bitten by a snake, he, poor devil, lay down in agonies and died in half an hour afterward. On the morning of the 24th, we debouched upon a prairie, and in a few minutes arrived at the forks of the road leading to Matamoras and Point Isabel. Gen. TAYLOR hearing that a number of houses at Point Isabel had been burnt down by order of Gen. MEJIA, started with the 2d Dragoons for that place, leaving the command of the army with Gen. WORTH. He moved us about 3 miles nearer Matamoras in consequence of our then position being a bad one, and a rumor that the force from Matamoras were on their march to give us battle. This night we slept, as the saying is, like a trooper's horse—fully accoutred, our arms loaded and ready at a moment's warning, but the morning came without even an alarm, to form a subject for a camp fire yarn. We remained at this camp until the morning of the 28th, Gen. TAYLOR having arrived from Point Isabel, finding the report untrue.

At half past six o'clock we marched toward Matamoras; the arms were closely inspected at reveille—the old priming thrown out and new substituted, as it was confidently expected we should be attacked in the course of our march. As we neared the city, we noticed Mexicans. To the brief question, "Matamoras," they replied in very good English "one miles." A moment after we saw the city; our bands struck up "Yankee Doodle." The colors of each Regiment flung to the breeze and we marched opposite the city. We soon planted a flag staff and the stars and stripes were seen proudly waving under the guns of the citadel.

C. M.

[HCH]
CAPT. SAMUEL H. WALKER.

This officer is one of those rare spirits which a state of war will bring out from our citizen soldiers. His late unequalled conflict with the Mexicans, in which he lost nearly every man under his command, and his daring heroism in cutting his way to Gen. TAYLOR's camp, have excited in the public mind a strong desire to know more of him. He is the same gentleman so frequently and honorably spoken of in Gen. GREEN's journal of the Mier expedition. He is a native of Washington city, from whence he went into the Florida war, where in several campaigns he distinguished himself by his intrepid bravery. In 1842 he went to Texas, and during the invasion of that republic by Gen. WOLL, he was marked for his bold and daring conduct. After the Mexican general had retreated from San Antonio, and when he lay upon the Rio Hondo, WALKER and Capt. MCCULLOUGH crawled through his camp one night and spied out his position, and the next day, with the gallant HAYS, led the attack upon his rear guard. He then joined the celebrated expedition against Mier, and on the morning of that sanguinary battle, he, with three others—being the advance scout of the Texans—was taken prisoner and carried with his hands tied behind him to the headquarters of Gen. AMPUDIA. The Mexican general questioned him as to the Texan forces, and when WALKER informed him that the Texans had only three hundred men, AMPUDIA pompously replied: "Does that audacious handful of men presume to follow me into this strong place and attack me?" "Yes," says WALKER, "make yourself content upon that subject, General, they will follow you into hell, and attack you there." He was, with his comrades, then marched a prisoner to the city of Mexico.

At Salado, with the lamented Capt. CAMERON and Dr. BRENKEN, he led the attack upon the guards, overpowered them, and marched for Texas, when, after eating up all their horses and mules, and living for days upon their own urine, surrendered to the Mexican Generals. He was again marched to Salado, where, with his comrades, he was made to draw in the celebrated black bean lottery, and every tenth man shot. Those that remained of the Texans were marched to the castle of Perote and the city of Mexico.—Here, while working on the streets in that city, he was struck by a Mexican corporal for not working faster, when with his spade he knocked down the corporal, which caused the guards to beat him nearly to death. His life was a long time despaired of, and upon his recovery, he, with two companions, scaled the walls of his prison after nightfall, and made his way to Texas, over a distance of more than a thousand miles. Before, however, they got out of the country, they were twice more imprisoned, and each time effected their escape. When he reached Texas again he joined Capt. HAYS, who, with fifteen others, armed with Colt's repeating pistols, fought 96 Cummanches, and defeated them, leaving 36 killed upon the ground. Here WALKER was run through the body with a Cumanche spear, and his life again despaired of. We now hear of him with 70 Texans, attacking 1,500 Mexicans, and all perishing in battle but himself and six others; and then, to crown, his wonderful life of daring, he cut his way, single handed, into Gen. TAYLOR's camp from Point Isabel.

To such men Texas is indebted for her emancipation from Mexico. Few as they are, they have won her liberty, and have miraculously maintained it for ten years against all the boasted power of Mexico.—N. Y. Globe.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 1, Column 6, Words: 593

THE LATE MAJOR RINGGOLD

The deceased was the son of the late Gen. SAM RINGGOLD, of Washington county, Maryland. His mother was a daughter of Gen. JOHN CADWALADER, of Philadelphia; a distinguished citizen, in the days of the Revolution.

He entered the army, as a Lieut. In artillery on July 1818, having graduated, at West Point with much honor, being one of the five whose names were recorded as the most distinguished of the class. He was at once selected by Gen. SCOTT as one of his aids; and served in that capacity for several years, and ever enjoyed, to a very eminent degree, the confidence and friendship of that distinguished soldier. Pending the disturbances in South Carolina, in the year 1832. The deceased was there on duty, and he has repeatedly expressed his heartfelt gratification at the peaceful termination of the unhappy difficulties between the gallant peoples of that State and the General Government. When the Indian War occurred in Florida, the deceased, then a Captain of the Flying Artillery, was there on duty, actively employed, in various services, until the wasting effects of the climate had so impaired his health that he was prostrated by disease. For "meritorious service" in that campaign; he was awarded the rank of Brevet Major. He was afterwards selected by the Major General Commander-in-Chief to organize a corps of Flying Artillery, and he paid every possible attention to instruction and discipline of this arm of the service. How faithfully he preformed his duty, in this respect, the wonderful performances of his admirable Corps at Fort McHenry, and other places and on the field of PALO ALTO—fully attest.

He never recovered from the effects of his exposure during the Florida campaign; and when ordered from Fort McHenry to join the Army in Texas, the experienced surgeons at this post strongly insisted upon his physical inability to go through with the campaign. But he strengthened himself for duty, and as far as was known here, he was never, for an hour, unfit for service since he left this fort. He fell in the fierce battle of the 8th ult. the same hall killing his horse under him, and wounded him mortally.

The deceased was an accomplished gentleman, beloved by his friends, and truly respected by all who knew him. He was devoted to his profession, and justly appreciated the high responsibilities of an officer in command. He rigidly enforced discipline, at all times, in all things, and yet, probably no officer had more entirely the respect, the confidence, and the affectionate regard of all his officers and men, the gallant soldier of whom this brief sketch is given.
The deceased, in a letter to his immediate friends, written just as the army was about to march for Camp Isabel, (but which letter was only received only since the sad intelligence of his fall) spoke of the extreme probability of a serious rencontre with the enemy, and expressed sure confidence in the triumph of our gallant little Army. But with characteristics coolness he also adverted the great probability of his own fall in battle; and, in anticipation of that event, he made a brief will, which was enclosed on that letter.

His patriotic words to a friendly officer who came to his assistance ought not to be forgotten: Don't stay with me; you have work to do: go ahead."

Such was the tale of the late Major RINGGOLD; and such brave and gallant men make our army, small as it is, an invincible host.—Balt. Paper

CAPTAIN MAY

This gallant officer has immortalized himself. A friend who has watched his equestrian movements at the camp describes him as a most singular being. With a beard extending to his breast, and hair to his hip bone, which, as he cuts through the wind on his charger, streams out in all directions, he presents a most imposing appearance. His gait on foot is awkward, and that of his horse (an immense one) is the rack of a Canadian pony. We are glad to quote the annexed paragraph from the last evenings Courier:--"We have seen a letter from this gallant officer to his brother, in this city, dated Point Isabel, May 13. It was received last Sunday by the Col. HARNEY: The Captain tells his brother that the squadron at the head of which he charged the enemy's battery, contained 82 men; and of these he lost one officer and 10 privates killed, and 13 wounded,—28 horses killed and 10 wounded—that is nearly one-third of his men and almost half his horses hors du combat. The Captain himself was not touched, which fortunate circumstances owing to his being about ten yards in advance of his squadron in the charge.

The Captain was born in the city of Washington, where his father, Dr. MAY, who died a few years ago, was highly respected by his fellow citizens of all classes; he left six or seven sons; all fine looking men, not one of them under six feet in height. The Captain, who has so highly distinguished himself in the late operations along the Rio Grande, some years ago, when he was a youth, attracted the attention of Gen. JACKSON by his fine horsemanship, and the old chief appointed him a cornet in one of the regiments of the Dragoons, then organising. The General was a good judge of men, and in the instance of young MAY, his presentment has been fully verified."—N.O. Tropic, May 10.

"MEN WE MUST TAKE THAT BATTERY!"

These were the words of Capt. MAY to his soldiers when he made his brilliant charge at the "Battle Resaca de le Palma," on the 9th of May. [That of the 8th is called the "Battle of Palo Alto," and it was in this Major RINGGOLD was killed]. The Washington Union says it has seen a letter from the Point (Isabel), written on the 13th of May, which furnishes a few interesting additional items of news connected with Gen. TAYLOR's action of the 10th. With the permission of the gentlemen to whom it was addressed, we here present our readers with a condensed synopsis of its contents:

"Capt. MAY's squadron, ordered by the General at all risk to silence the battery threatening to snatch the victory from us, consisted of some seventy dragoons. Of these, in this charge, one officer and nine men were killed, and ten were wounded. Eighty two of the horses were also killed, and eleven were wounded. The loss sustained in this gallant affair is alone proof of the daring intrepidity of the squadron engaged, whose leader (MAY,) by-the-by, cleared the enemy's breast-work ten yards in advance of his troop. He was mounted on his favorite old charger, Tom (wounded in this affair) known to many officer of this army as having borne him successfully through numerous fights and skirmishes in the Florida campaign. This I believe, was the horse on which he led the charge on the camp of Phillip, the head chief of the Seminoles, on which occasion it will be recollected that Capt. (then Lieut) MAY knocked down and then secured the chief in the act of raising his rifle to shoot him.

"Gen. VEGA, who in this affair became a prisoner to Capt. MAY, is said to be one of the bravest and most accomplished officers of the Mexican army."

Well did this young and ardent officer carry out the laconic officer order of Gen. TAYLOR to which he made the reply so characteristic of the soldier. "Sir," said the general, "you must take that battery." "Men," said the captain in reply, "we must take that battery! Follow!"
"IF I GO TO WAR I WILL BE SHOT."

[General Observation]

The astrologer’s answer to the above depends on the aspects of the heavenly bodies as the birth of an individual. For instance if born under the sun and that planet in conjunction with Mars, unassisted by fortunate stars, the native so born would die on the battle field, or on the seas, as the case may be. Persons born in the moon in conjunction with Mars, should avoid the frontier; but those born when the luminaries were in good aspect with Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, and Mars, may venture into the stormiest part of the battle with safety, like NAPOLEAN when he crossed the bridge Lodi. WINFIELD SCOTT will never die on the battle-field; nor would Commodore STUART on the rolling seas; neither would R.M. JOHNSON, should he venture once more. Gen. CADWALLADER may venture out freely; so Gen. PATTERTSON as well as Col. JAMES PAGE. Such persons have an anxious desire to avenge their country’s honor, may write the astrologer, at Washington, after Monday, May 18, and they will be correctly instructed as to the strength and dignity of Mars at their birth or nativity. In all cases one dollar enclosed, and postage paid, will receive immediate answer. THOS. HAGUE; Astrologer.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 2, Column 1 Words: 242

MILITARY SPIRIT OF BERKELEY

We are truly delighted to see that the Military spirit of “Old Berkeley” is reviving. We could at one time number several well drilled Volunteer Companies in the County, but of late years we have had none. Things, however, are about to take a change. We learn from the “Republican” that on Saturday last, pursuant to the orders of the Commandant of the Regiment, the new LIGHT INFANTRY Company met and elected the following gentlemen, Officers—

EPHRAIM G.A. ALEURTIS, Captain:
WILLIAM T.R. SAFFELL 1st Lieutenant;
PHILIP S. CUMMINGHAM, 2d Lieut.
EVERHART RAENAELL, 3d Lieut.
J.Q.A. NADENBOUSCH 4th Lieut.

This company expect to be in full uniform by the 4th of July next.

We also learn from the Republican that a Company is being formed at Gerardstown and that they will meet on Saturday next, the 13th inst., for the election of Officers.

A reference to our advertising columns will also show that "the Company of Cavalry" will meet at the "Martinsburg House" on Saturday next, the 13th, for the election of Officers—and that on the succeeding Saturday, the 29th inst., there will be another meeting held at the "United States Hotel" for the formation of another Infantry or Rifle Corps and the election of Officers. There is abundant material for the formation of all these Companies, and we hope to see a generous rivalry among them as to which shall be the most energetic and best drilled Corps in the County.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 2, Column 2 Words: 231

GENERAL SCOTT

The House of Representatives on Thursday last adopted a resolution limiting the number of Major Generals, at the close of the Mexican War, to one, and giving the President the privilege of selecting the one to be retained. We do not wish “to kick before we are spurred,” but it does not seem to us that this is a blow aimed at Gen. SCOTT. The Senate has not yet acted on the resolution of the House, and we think the majority of that body will not pass it. Yes, we look to the Senate with confidence, to kill in the bud all such disgraceful attempts to tarnish the fame of one of the most gallant generals belonging to the history of the United States. We can tell our opponents one thing, that, when they succeed in driving the glories of Chippewa, and the splendors of Lundy’s Lane from the minds and hearts of the American people, then they can strike down their gallant hero—but not until then. As well might they attempt to destroy the glories of Lexington, and Bunker Hill, and Trenton, and the fame of Washington. Away with such unworthy
Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 2, column 4 Words: 1518

LATE FROM THE SEAT OF WAR

FROM THE NEW ORLEANS DELTA OF MAY 28.

Matamoras taken without opposition—Mexican Soldiers deserting in great numbers—Additional particulars of the action of the 8th and 9th of May.

The steamship telegraph is just in. By the following synopsis of the latest news from the seat of war, it will be seen that the Rubieon, or the Rio Grande, is crossed by the advanced division of our gallant little Army, and that the enemy fled before them, leaving their towns and forts, and permitting them to fall in possession of our gallant army without a defensive shot. The glorious and well fought battles of the 8th and 9th have struck terror into the enemy, and decided, it would appear, the fate of the campaign.

From the Galveston News, Extra, May 21.

MATAMORAS TAKEN!

The steamship Telegraph had just arrived from Point Isabel. Through the politeness of her obliging clerk we have been furnished with the following information:

He reports that in the 17th inst., a detachment of 300 regulars and 250 volunteers proceeded to Barita and took possession of it and established a military depot.

On the night of the 19th an express arrived from Gen. TAYLOR, stating that he had crossed the Rio Grande and had taken the city of Matamoras without opposition—the Mexicans having fled from the city.

The Mexicans, from the last accounts were deserting their ranks in battalions. Two American regiments, with the exception of about 350 men, having marched a few days previous, were stationed at the Brazos Point, awaiting the orders of Gen. TAYLOR as it was thought they would leave on the 20th for Matamoras, via the old Barita road.

Col. McINTOSH, Capt. PAGE and all the others that were wounded in the actions of the 8th and 9th are at Point Isabel and are recovering. The Telegraph is 26 hours from Point Isabel. Capt. AULD of the Telegraph who has had opportunities for obtaining the correct information, has given us some interesting particulars in relation to our army operations. We have now scarcely time to allude to them.

The escape of Capt. THORNTON, at the time his company was so badly cut up, is most incredible. After carrying him safely over a high bridge enclosure into which he had been decoyed, his horse carried him safely over several very high fences and very deep ravines, swimming the Rio Grande above Matamoras, then passing down below the town on the opposite side. In attempting to leap a broad ditch, he missed footing when both horse and rider were thrown. By the fall Capt. T. was so stunned that he was soon after taken up by the Mexicans perfectly unconscious of what had happened.

After the battle of the 9th, he was exchanged and restored to our army. Capt. AULD thinks the whole number of our killed and wounded must amount to more than 300, besides the wounded taken to St. Joseph.

There are now 40 at Point Isabel, to badly wounded to be removed. All but three it is thought will recover. There are three Mexican prisoners having but one leg among them all.

After being shot in the arm, Col. McINTOSH received a bayonet wound in the mouth, which passed through one side of his head. There are hopes of his recovery.

The condition of the brave and esteemed Capt. PAGE is melancholy indeed. The whole of his lower jaw, with part of his tongue and his pallet are shot away by grape shot. He however, survives, although entirely deprived of speech.

He communicates his thoughts by writing on a slate and receives nourishment for the support of life with much difficulty. He does not desire to live, but converses with cheerfulness and exultation on the subject of the army.

All our accounts represent the Mexicans as having fought on the 9th with courage and desperation that would have reflected credit upon the troops of any nation.

They were nearly in a state of starvation and had been promised the ample supplies of the American camp in case they would secure the victory.

They met the charges of our troops manfully, and stood the destructive fire that was poring in upon them, without giving way until their works were encumbered with the dead and wounded.

From the Galveston News, May 22.

The sloop Orange, Branch Capt. UNDERHILL, arrived yesterday, 21 hours from Indian Point, near Port Lavaca.

Capt. U. says that a report reached Victoria last Friday, that one hundred Germans, escorting one hundred wagons from New Braunfels to the new settlement on the San Salsa, seventy miles above, were suddenly attacked by a large body of Comanches, supposed to number several thousand, whereupon the emigrants abandoned their wagons, seeking security, leaving their property in the hands of the savages. There appears to be some uncertainty as to the numbers, etc., but the main facts are substantially correct.

Capt. U. also informs us that a report came overland to Port Lavaca last Sunday, to the effect that a large body of Indians, consisting of warriors of several tribes comprising the warriors of the Comanche nation, were hovering about the entrenchments opposite Matamoras, with a view doubtless to join the victorious party, and share in the plunder of the defeated.

On the 19th it was reported that three thousand men had crossed the river, and none of the volunteers had yet gone over. Nothing further had been heard of the reinforcements that were reported to be on their way to the relief of AMPUDIA.

Col. SOMPTON found a Mexican three days hence in a thicket. As soon as he was discovered he threw away his arms, saying that he had been fighting a month with nothing but bread and water provisions, that he now wished to surrender to the American forces, as he would fight no longer under the Mexican Government, and that two thirds of the whole Mexican force wished to do the same.

LATER.

Arrival at New Orleans of the steamer Galveston and James L. Day—Confirmation of the capture of Matamoras. An armistice asked by ARISTA, American terms declined—U.S. squadron ordered to Pensacola, to prepare for attack on Vera Cruz.

FROM THE N.O. TROPIC

The Galveston, Capt. WRIGHT, has just arrived, having left Point Isabel on Wednesday, 27th inst.

The news brought by her is confirmatory of the capture of Matamoras. The Mexicans were encamped about twenty miles up the river. Both the Americans and the Mexicans were waiting for reinforcements, when another battle was expected. The Mexican army left a large amount of ammunition at Matamoras, which is a valuable acquisition to Gen. TAYLOR’s supplies.

The Mexicans having previously destroyed large quantities by filling up the wells in the city, and throwing some into the river, Gen. TAYLOR, like true hearted American officer, gave orders to his army not to take the slightest article without paying for its full value.

The citizens of Matamoras were permitted to transact business as usual, with the exception of selling liquors. Com. CONNER, with most of the squadron had gone to Pensacola to refit and reinforce before making an attack on Vera Cruz. Capts PLATT and ELLMORE’s companies of Alabama volunteers were safely landed at Point Isabel, on the 26th inst. The James L. Day, Capt. GRIFFIN, has arrived, but brings nothing later. A part of Col. TWIGGS Regiment of Dragoons under command of Capt. MAY, ARNOLD, and KERR arrived at Point Isabel on the 25th inst. to recruit their horses.

From the New Orleans Bulletin

The Mexican army had retreated to Camargo. A passenger aboard the Galveston has furnished us with some interesting details connected with intelligence received by previous accounts. On the 17th inst. a large portion of Gen. TAYLOR’s army moved up the river for the purpose of crossing.

Gen. TAYLOR remained at the fortifications with about 300 men, as the army were seen by the Mexicans on the opposite side of the river to leave the encampment and approach the Fort.

ARISTA sent a flag of truce to Gen. TAYLOR, requesting an armistice of six weeks, giving as a reason for his request, he desired to communicate with his government. Gen. TAYLOR said he would give him until 8 o’clock tomorrow morning to evacuate the city of Matamoras, and would permit him to take the public property under his charge.

The flag then returned. On the next day, 18th, the army crossed on blats of their own construction and bodies of wagon caulked. The passage was made about four miles above Fort Brown.

On arriving at the city, it was discovered that ARISTA had departed with his forces, leaving only the mounted battery, all the mortars, and all of the military apparatus as could not be removed in their haste to escape, were thrown into the wells.

The party from our army went out to reconnoitre immediately after the entrance into Matamoras, and overtook a portion of the Mexicans, who were retreating, 22 of whom were made prisoners. It is understood that Gen ARISTA’s headquarters are at San Fernadino, about 90 miles from Matamoras.

The wounded of the American Army are understood to be doing well.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page2, Column 4, Words: 752

LATEST

The port of Vera Cruz blockaded—The powers of American consuls unveiled—Americans ordered to the interior of the country—Efforts of the government to maintain the War, &c.

FROM THE BALT. AMERICAN

The barque Thaetus, Capt. MERRIL, from Vera Cruz arrived at new Orleans on the 30th ult. Brings dates from the city of Mexico on the 15th and from Vera Cruz to the 20th Ult. From the Picayune and the Delta of the 31st Ult. we make up the following interesting summary of news:

We learn that the U.S. steamship Mississippi arrived off Vera Cruz on the 18th, bringing the intelligence of the glorious battles of the 8th and 9th inst. but very wisely the news was only communicated to a few Americans in the city. The port was immediately blockaded by the Mississippi and the Falmouth.

The T. was boarded by the U.S. ship Falmouth and took a letter bag from her. The brig St. Petersburg sailed on the 19th for New York.

Orders had been received by the American citizens, from the city of Mexico, directing them to leave Vera Cruz by the 24th, inst. or move into the interior. It was expected that our consul would go on board one of our vessels. On the 18th inst. an American vessel approached the port and was immediately boarded by our officers and forbidden to enter the port. In the night, however, she succeeded in slipping into the port. There were two American vessels in port when T. left—the bark Louisiana, and the brig Helen McLeod—which partially discharged their cargoes but under order from the minister General of War and Marine, they would probably be seized. From all we can gather the Government is making the greatest exertions straining every nerve to carry on the war with the utmost vigor, and by the most arbitrary measures had replenished the treasury.

The call for volunteers from Missouri was so promptly met that seven companies from the interior of the State which had gone had gone to St. Louis were not received, and had returned home. The St. Louis Era says on this subject:

“"A call for more troops than is necessary or wanted has a bad effect on the alacrity for which Western Volunteers are celebrated in flying to arms, and in the future they are not likely to be so prompt, but will wait to see whether there is a certainty of their being employed before they put themselves to any trouble or inconvenience in starting. There are still four companies remaining, the greater portion of which will start for their houses today or tomorrow. Finer looking or braver men we never saw, and we regret that they will not be permitted to distinguish themselves and the state whence they came in the battle field."

It would appear from the following article that the War Department at Washington does not conduct its affairs with the precision should mark its movement at a time like the present:

Volunteers for Santa Fe—Considerable dissatisfaction was manifested yesterday at the orders, from Jefferson City, in relation to the raising of four hundred mounted volunteers, a part of the one thousand required by the U. States. To be placed under the command of Col. KEARNBY. There are hundreds here who are anxious to fo but the vague and indefinite character of the order make it uncertain how they are to go, in many important particulars; so much so that many are unwilling to enroll themselves.

"It is understood that the companies are to consist of one hundred and fourteen man—an unusual number, and not in accordance with the requirements of the recent act of congress or the instruction of the War Department. Again it is understood that although they and their horses will be inspected by col. CAMPBELL, here, yet they will not be mustered into the service until they reach Fort Leavenworth where they may be accepted or rejected as Col. KEARNEY may choose. There is no specification of how the regiment is to be constituted; whether the companies will compose one or two regiments; who is to have the command, or how the field officers are to be chosen.

"These and other objections, whether well or ill founded, have had a great effect upon the zeal of the volunteers for this service, so much so, that we are told, already raised could be made ready for service in a few days, will probably decline tendering their services."

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 2, Column 4, Words: 120

OPINIONS OF SANTA ANNA ON THE WAR

The New Orleans Picayune of the 9th ult., says "The latest news received in Havana from Vera Cruz was to the 1st instant; not so late as our own advises threat. A gentlemen who recently arrived here from Havana talked freely with General Santa Anna upon Mexican Affairs. He depreciated the war with the united States, as sure to be disastrous with Mexico. He spoke of the monarchical projects in Mexico as destined to certain failure, he believing that a majority of the people would prefer even annexation to the United States to the rule of a Spanish Prince. SANTA ANNA had, it is said, no intention of returning to Mexico at present, and has recently rented a new house.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 2, Column 4, Words: 21

General ALMONTE regards the insurrectionary attempt of Gen. ALVAREZ as one of great moment, and very difficult to be but down.

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 2, Column 4, Words: 133

BOUNDARY OF TEXAS—The first Congress that assembled in the Republic Texas after the adoption of the Constitution, adopted the following "Act to define the boundaries of Texas."

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, the civil and political jurisdiction of the Republic, be, ad is hereby declared, to extend to the following boundaries to wit: the beginning of the mouth of the Sabine river, running west along the Gulf of Mexico three leagues from the land to the mouth of the Rio Grande, then up the principle of said river to its source, then due north to the 42nd degree of north latitude, thence along the boundary line as defined in the treaty between the United States and Spain to the beginning.

SAM HOUSTON, Pres't.
Approved, Dec. 19, 1836.

[HCH]

Thursday, June 11, 1846. Volume 47, Number 15, Page 3, Column 2 Words: 46

ATTENTION CAVALRY!

THE Company of Cavalry now established within the bounds of the 67th Regiment will meet at the "Martinsburg House," in the town of Martinsburg, on Saturday the 13th of June, at 3 o'clock, P.M. for the election of officers.

EDMUND P. HUNTER,
Col. 67th reg. V.M.
MILITARY NOTICE

THERE will be a meeting of those dispossessed to form a new Infantry or Rifle Corpse within the bounds of the 67th Regiment, held at the U.S. Hotel, in the town of Martinsburg, on Saturday the 20th inst., at 3 o'clock, P.M. for the election of officers.

EDMUND P. HUNTER,
Col. 67th reg. V.M.

STATE OF THE FINANCES MESSAGE

Of the President of the United States, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of June 3, 1846, calling for information relative to the finances, &c.

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the senate of the 3rd inst., I communicate herewith esimates prepared by the War and the Navy Departments, of the probable expenses of conducting the existing war with Mexico during the remainder of the present and the whole of the next fiscal year. I communicate also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, based upon these estimates, containing recommendations of measures for raising the additional means required. It is probable that the actual expenses incurred during the period specified will fall considerably below the estimates submitted, which are for a larger number of troops than have been called to the field. As a precautionary measure, however, against any possible deficiency, the estimates have been made at the largest amount which any state of service will require.

It will be perceived from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that a considerable portion of the additional amount required may be raised by a modification of the rates of duty imposed by the existing tariff laws. The high duties at present levied on many articles totally exclude them from importation, whilst the quantity and amount of others which are imported are greatly diminished. By reducing these duties to a revenue standard, it is not doubted that a large amount of articles on which they are imposed would be imported, and a corresponding amount of revenue be received at the treasury from this source. By imposing revenues on many items now permitted to be imported free of duty, and by regulating the rates within the revenue standard upon others, a large amount of additional revenue will be collected. Independently of the high considerations, which induced me, in my annual message, to recommend a modification and reduction of the rates of duty, imposed by the acts of 1842, as being not only proper in a reference to a state of peace, but just to all the great interests of the country, the necessity of such modification and reduction as a war measure must now be manifest. The country requires additional revenue for the prosecution of the war. It may be obtained, to a great extent, by reducing the prohibitory and highly protective duties imposed by the existing laws to revenue rates; by imposing revenue duties on the free list; and by modifying the rates of duty on other articles.

The modification recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report of December last, were adapted to a state of peace, and the additional duties now suggested by him, are with a view strictly to raise revenue as a war measure. At the conclusion of the war these duties may and should be abolished, and reduced to lower rates.

It is not apprehended that the existing war with Mexico will materially affect our trade and commerce with the rest of the world. On the contrary, the reductions proposed would increase that trade, and augment the revenue derived from it.

When the country is in a state of war, no contingency should be permitted to occur in which their would be a deficiency in the treasury, for the vigorous prosecution of the war; and to guard against such an event it is recommended that contingent authority be given issue treasury notes, or to contract a loan for a limited amount, reimbursable at an early day. Should no occasion arise to exercise the power, still it may be important that the authority should exist there be a necessity for it.

It is not deemed necessary to resort to direct taxes or excises—the measures recommended being deemed preferable as a means of increasing the revenue. It is hoped that the war with Mexico, if vigorously prosecuted, as is contemplated, may be of short duration. I shall at all times be ready to conclude an honorable peace, whenever the Mexican government shall manifest a like disposition. The existing war has been rendered necessary by the acts of Mexico; and whenever that power shall be ready to do us justice, we shall be prepared to sheath the sword, and tender to her the olive branch of peace.
LATE FROM MEXICO.

FROM GALVESTON AND RIO GRANDE—FIRST MOVEMENT OF INVASION OF MEXICO.

From the New Orleans Picayune, June 14.

The steamship Galveston, Capt. WRIGHT, was towed up to town at an early hour yesterday morning by the towboat Star. By here we have received Galveston papers to the 10th inst., and our correspondence from the army. They bring up the news from the Rio Grande to the latest dates, and will be found interesting.

Among the passengers brought by the Galveston were Gov. P. M. BUTLER, of South Carolina, Maj. MCCREA, U. S. Quarter Master, Maj. BELL; Capt. HAWKINS; Capt. HOOE; Dr. MOORE, of the Army; Com. MOORE, of Texas; Lieut. HOOK, of the Navy, and a number of officers of the army on the recruiting service.

We regret to say that Gov. BUTLER reached here in a very low state of health, but we are in hopes that a few days of quiet and repose will bring him up speedily.

On Saturday the 7th inst., Lieut. Col. WILSON left Matamoras for Rienoso, making the first movement towards the invasion of Mexico by the American Army. Col. WILSON has comman of five hundred strong, composed as follows:

"The four companies of the first Regiment of Infantry, Brevet Maj. ABERCROMBIE, Company K; Capt. MILLER, Company C; Capt. BACKUS, Company G.; Capt. LA MOTTE, Company C, and Capt. PRICE's Company of Texas Rangers, with a section of Lieut. BRAGG's Battery, under Lieuts. THOMAS and JOHNSTONE."

This movement is highly interesting, because it opens the ball of carrying the war into the enemy's country. Reinoso is a small town on the Rio Grande, sixty miles from Matamoras, and containing about one thousand inhabitants. It is presumed that Col. WILSON and the brave soldiers under him, will take it without a blow,—at least the soldiers fear such will be the case.

The volunteers are in good health and spirits—very few cases of sickness.

Volunteers have at last begun to pour into Galveston freely. From the news of the 9th inst., we copy the following:

"A fully company, under Capt. ARNOLD, arrived by the steamer SAMUEL M. WILLIAMS on the 5th inst. They are from Nacogdoches, and carry a standard with the words "Old Nacagdoches" on it. They are fine looking men, and have had a most fatiguing march on foot, of several hundred miles. They have been mustered into service and received their arms, which can hardly fall into better hands to do good service.

"A company from Jasper and Jefferson counties arrived from Sabine, by water, last Saturday the 6th, commanded by Capt. CHESHIRE, who was in the battle of San Jacinto. These have also been received, and left for Point Isabel on the schooner Vesta, Capt. FISK, this morning.

"A company of mounted men, under Capt. L. S. BALLOO, left Brazoria for the seat of war on the 27th ult. About 20 persons had left that county previously with the same destination.

"By this arrival we have received the first two numbers of the "Republic of the Rio Grande and Friend of the people." The first number is dated June 1st , and the second June 8th. The motto of the paper is 'Fear not—the brave and generous soldier is only to be feared in the field of battle.' The paper is edited by H. MCCLEOD. The leading articles are printed both in English and Spanish.—The purpose is to convince the people of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, New Leon, and Chihuahua of the futility of resisting American arms, and to throw upon the Administration of Paredes the responsibility of the war. A separation of the Departments named above from the central government of Mexico is the distinct aim of this new paper.

"We find in the News the prospectus of the Rio Grande Herald, a paper which Messrs. Bangs & Lewis propose to publish at Matamoras, or some convenient point near the main army."

The "Republic of the Rio Grande and Friend of the People," of the 8th instant, has the following—
Movements of the Enemy.—A traveler from Tampico met a Government carrier between that place and Victoria, about ten days ago, hunting for the Mexican army, for whom he bore orders, he said, to retreat upon Tampico. This would seem to indicate that the Government considered the day as definitely lost in this quarter, or were unable to reinforce their army sufficiently to enable it to stand another battle, and were collecting its fragments for the defence of Vera Cruz.

The port of Tampico was not blockaded, he states, as vessels were entering and departing, though an American sloop of war—the St. Mary’s—was in sight. Mr. SCHATZELL and the other Americans, who were so rudely driven from Matamoras by AMPUDIA, had reached Tampico in safety, though shaken in health by their forced journey of three hundred miles.—They took shipping on the 23d ult. for this place, where they may be hourly expected.

ARISTA’s retreat will doubtless continue to the mountains. After losing the day with five to one at Palo Alto and Raseca de la Palma, it is not likely that he will make another stand on the plains. Gen. TAYLOR takes the field with so overwhelming a force, and so admirably equipped in that terrible arm, the light artillery, that it would be madness in the enemy to fight again, where defeat would be certain and retreat impossible. Monterey is the first position of any natural strength and it also commands the entrance of the mountain pass of Saltillo. It is there, in all probability, that ARISTA will make his great effort, which the importance of the object, his wounded pride, and the advantages of the ground, will all conspire to make a brilliant but a bloody day in the history of this war.

We understand that CANALES is at Olmitas Ranco, five leagues on this side of Reynosa, levying contribution upon the people, and plundering them of all their mules and other moveable property. He has closed the road and intercepts all communication from this direction, treating all those who are suspected of coming from this place with the greatest harshness.

From the New Orleans Delta, June 14.

The particulars of the recent Indian Treaty, is the most important news which we find in the papers received by the Galveston. Eleven tribes were fully represented, and all the chiefs signed the treaty, and declared their determination to assist in punishing all who might violate it. One of the objects of the delegation of Indians who have accompanied Gov. BUTLER to Washington City, is to fix upon a line of boundary, within which to restrict the occupation of the Indians. The points settled by the treaty are thus enumerated:

The Indians acknowledge themselves under the protection of the United States, and recognize no other authority, pledging themselves to perpetual amity and friendship with the people of the United States, and all friendly Indians.

They agree not to form alliances with the enemies of the country, and to give notice of any contemplated invasion or impending danger.

Each tribe is to give notice of any violation of the treaty on the part of the other.

They are to give up all prisoners; and aid the authorities of the U. S. in obtaining them.

They pledge themselves to desist from all murder and depredation, and to surrender all offenders to be tried by the laws of the U. S.

The U. S. have the right to establish agencies and trading houses among them, and to establish military post, &c.

They concede to the U. S. the right of control over all trade and intercourse, and will in no instance seek personal redress for injuries, either to person or property, but will in such cases apply to the U. S. agent.

They concede the right to introduce among them ministers of the gospel and school teachers.

They agree to prohibit the introduction of spirituous liquors among them, and to give notice of the violation of this provision.

The U. S., in consideration of these stipulations on the part of the several Indian tribes represented at the treaty, agree to make peace for them with all their enemies, to give them presents every fall, &c., as usual in similar treaties.

The E-se-qua-i-as and Mescaleros, numbering together about 5000 souls, who are branches of the Lipans and allies of the Camanches, and came recently from the Mexican prairies, are included among the tribes represented by the treaty. The Camanches are anxious to conciliate them.

One white child and four Mexican boys were ransomed from the Camanches. The two Parker children were seen, and arrangements have been made to procure them by frost.

A party of eleven of the Tonkaway Indians recently visited the new Dutch Colony of Castroville, and stole three horses. The owners of the horses immediately pursued, overtook, and killed three of the Indians, and recovered the horses.
Col. HARNEY, of the U. S. Dragoons, has recently made a requisition upon the Governor of Texas for seven companies of men, to assist in the defence of the frontier.

LATEST.

We have New Orleans papers of the 15th instant, from which we extract the following items:

From the Tropic.

IMPORTANT RUMOR FROM THE ARMY.

A letter was received in town yesterday, which stated that Gen. ARISTA had sent proposals to Gen. TAYLOR for an armistice, and that he had established his head quarters at Monterey with 15,000 men. Gen. TAYLOR is said to have sent back an answer that “he would meet Gen. ARISTA at Monterey.” We have no doubt of the truth of this rumor.

THE OREGON TREATY.

The ratification of the treaty of limits between the U. States and G. Britain, says the Balt. American, relative to the territory beyond the Rocky Mountains, took place in the Senate on Thursday by a vote of 41 yeas and 14 nays.—This decisive act removes a cause of difficulties which has greatly disturbed the relations of the two countries, and gives an assured prospect, we may hope, of long continued peace between the respective parties to this new bond of amity.

The achievement of this peaceful and honorable settlement of a complicated question, pregnant with the elements of war, is to be regarded as a signal triumph of the wisdom and conservative virtue of the country over the rash, reckless and impetuous spirit of the day—over the machinations of such political aspirants as sought to rise on the tide of the martial enthusiasm of the people, kindled into an artificial excitement by sophisticated appeals to that patriotism which is the instinct of every American. The sacredness of the latter feeling, its wide spread strength, its deep and enduring strength—when we consider these and the dangers of its perversion and the aptitude of demagogues to strive to pervert it for their own purposes, we shall find abundant cause for congratulation at the peaceful result now so happily reached.

“When I read the speeches of Mr. WEBSTER, Mr. CALHOUN and Mr. BENTON”—we quote from LORD ABERDEEN in the House of Lords—“I feel anxious to forget all the idle declamation which has been wafted from the other side of the Atlantic.” Thus it is that statesmanship vindicates itself; the calm voice is heard most distinctly even in the midst of tumultuous uproar. When the British went on to express the hope that an adjustment of limits would be had in Oregon and that the treaty for the settlement of that boundary might be a prelude to a more intimate connection between England and the United States, “that vast commonwealth of free people”—he expressed a hope which will find a reciprocity of feeling on this side of the Atlantic. Against British arrogance and British ambition, should either be exhibited in our international intercourse, there would be in the minds of our people a sentiment of strong repugnance and resistance; but for intimations of amity, of courtesy, of friendly association, given in a frank and cordial spirit, there can be no other return on our part but one of equal frankness and cordiality. Let us hope that the good understanding now established may long continue, that it may strengthen by its continuance and give rise to increased intercourse, to the benefit and welfare of both parties and of the world.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Issue</th>
<th>Words</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>July 2, 1846</td>
<td>OFFICIAL DESPATCHES FROM THE ARMY. General Taylor captured a communiqué from General Arista which encouraged American soldiers to desert. Newspapers were allowed to print the letter to show the dishonorable nature of Mexico.</td>
<td>637</td>
<td>July 2, 1846, MGv47n18p3c2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 2, 1846</td>
<td>LATEST NEWS. FROM MEXICO AND YUCATAN. A series of articles from various papers describing the capture of Reynosa, and the desire of the Yucatan to leave Mexico.</td>
<td>1090</td>
<td>July 2, 1846, MGv47n18p3c3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 2, 1846</td>
<td>4 DAYS LATER FROM YUCATAN. YUCATAN DECLARED INDEPENDENT. A letter that describes the Yucatan’s secession and possible absorption by the United States.</td>
<td>175</td>
<td>July 2, 1846, MGv47n18p3c3 and 4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 9, 1846</td>
<td>LATER FROM MEXICO. ARISTA RELIEVED FROM COMMAND—GEN. MEJIA APPOINTED TO SUCCEED HIM IN THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY OF THE NORTH. A change in the Mexican government led to General Arista being replaced.</td>
<td>1002</td>
<td>July 9, 1846, MGv47n19p1c6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 9, 1846</td>
<td>FRIENDS OF GEN. SCOTT. An account of a political rally to support General Scott against unnamed political assailants that tried to defame General Scott’s character.</td>
<td>674</td>
<td>July 9, 1846, MGv47n19p1c6 and 7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 9, 1846</td>
<td>ARISTA AND TAYLOR. An account attempting to compare and contrast the American and Mexican generals. Both officers are presented as great men, although Taylor is the better officer and gentleman.</td>
<td>914</td>
<td>July 9, 1846, MGv47n19p1c6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 16, 1846</td>
<td>LATE FROM THE ARMY. FROM TAMPCIO. A letter from a naval officer describing the destruction of a Mexican fort under construction on an unnamed river.</td>
<td>927</td>
<td>July 9, 1846, MGv47n19p3c2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 16, 1846</td>
<td>MEXICAN NEWS. Rumors concerning the position of the Mexican army at Monterrey.</td>
<td>83</td>
<td>July 16, 1846, MGv47n20p2c3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 23, 1846</td>
<td>THE ARMY OF OCCUPATION. This article recounts General Taylor’s many complaints about how the American government is prosecuting the war against Mexico.</td>
<td>896</td>
<td>July 23, 1846, MGv47n21p2c2 and 3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 30, 1846</td>
<td>FROM THE RIO GRANDE. A letter from a volunteer criticizing how the War Department wages the war against Mexico. According to the article,</td>
<td>1993</td>
<td>July 30, 1846, MGv47n22p1c5 and 6</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
the War Department was not providing the army with the supplies needed to fight the war.

July 30, 1846, MGv47n22p2c6 Words: 1303

FROM MEXICO.
Rumors learned from various sources concerning the movements of volunteer reinforcements for General Taylor’s army in Northern Mexico.

July 30, 1846, MGv47n22p2c6 and 7 Words: 371

ONE DAY LATER FROM THE ARMY.
A steamship arrived with several wounded and sick officers.

July 30, 1846, MGv47n22p2c7 Words: 951

A PROCLAMATION
BY THE GENERAL COMMANDING THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
A letter from General Taylor to the Mexican people encouraging Mexicans to rebel.

August 1846

August 6, 1846 MGv47i23p2c1 Two Days Later from Mexico
Information on events occurring on the front lines.

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p1c4 Dentists
Information on medical attention to U.S. soldiers in Mexico

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p1c7 Expenses of the Mexican War
Article pertaining to the costs incurred by the United States

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p2c4 From Mexico
Latest news from Mexico

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p2c6 Capt. Mays own description of his charge
Article paraphrasing Captain Mays and his charge of Mexican forces

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p4c1 Latest News
Information on the current political conversations on Oregon

August 20, 1846 MGv47i25p2c3 From Mexico
Article pertaining to new events being reported from the Mexican front

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p1c6 The Two Million Bill
Article explaining the cost of the Mexican war

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p2c4 From Mexico
News of military and political developments in Mexico

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p2c4 Important from Vera Cruz, via Havana
Latest news out of Vera Cruz and Taylor’s campaign

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p2c5 Later Still
More information from Mexico

September 1846

MGv47i27p1c5 September 3 1846: Gen. Gaines
The president has approved the decision of the Court of Inquiry to look into Gen. Gaines conduct

MGv47i27p1c5, September 3, 1846: Gen. Gaines' Defence
Gen. Gaines’ defence to the Military Court of Inquiry for his actions has been made known to the public; quote from his defence

MGv47i27p1c5, September 3, 1846: The California Soldiers
Soldiers have deserted after they have found out how things are going on Governor's Island; Isaac Primorse has been sentenced to be confined in irons; Moretons should also be confined to the irons

MGv47i27p1c7, September 3, 1846: The Wife of Paredes
Comments about the wife of Paredes, the Mexican president-she is good in danger, and is devoted to Paredes, she accompanies the army and dresses her husband's wounds.
Mr. Haywoods Manifesto
Haywood cites the Mexican war as a reason for the tariff of 1846

Peace
The peace society has addressed a circular to the president urging him to accept England's mediation in the conflict with Mexico.

From Mexico
Arrival of the British man of war; overthrow and imprisonment of Paredes; the country in favor of Santa Anna; Santa Anna arrives at Vera Cruz; annexation of California to the US

From the Army
Arrival of the McKim; capture of China by Capt. McCulloh; arrival of Gen. Taylor at Camargo; advance of Capt. Duncan

Capt. Windle reports that Gen. Worth has left Camargo and headed to Monterey; Mexicans intend to make a bold stand at Monterey; Capt. Duncan returned from reconnaissance of the country on the other side of the San Juan; comments on the number of troops at Monterey

Important if Authentic Rumored of an advance of 15,000 Mexicans upon Gen. Taylor

Highly Important from the Pacific
Com. Sloat taken possession of California; extension of the revenue law of the US over California

Very Late from Santa Fe
Mr. N Coleburn left Santa Fe; soldiers waiting in Santa Fe to hear from Kearney; met up with Capt. Worcester, T. Caldwell and Chris Bent and sent by them to Kearney all the news he had; Indians in Santa Fe offering their services to Gen. Armijo if he allowed them to take spoils of war

"Old Rough & Ready"
Song lyrics about Taylor sung to the tune of Old Dan Tucker

The Army
Comments about how Taylor demanded that there be no liquor and all the shops and coffee houses complied; Co. Hay's Regiment is said to have marched into San Fernando to the tune of Yankee Doodle

Old Rough and Ready
Anecdote about Gen. Taylor's character; comments about how he did not allow the establishment of drinking and gambling in Camargo

Letter from Gen. Taylor
Taylor thanking Geo. Folsom for a the passing of a resolution that add more men to the Army

Movements of Gen. Taylor
Comments on what Taylor has sent to Monterey; troops advancing but have not met the enemy; main army is at Camargo; Taylor still at Camargo but suppose to be leaving in a few days; Gen. Worth continues his march to Monterey

Reported Capture of Monterey
Letter from Monterey asserts that a body of American who came down from New Mexico, combined with some forces from Texas, have entered Monterey without any opposition; Col. Harney at the head of the movement

Riot among the Volunteers
Riot has occurred among the Georgia volunteers at Burita on the Rio Grande - a feud had existed between some of the companies that were there, which caused the riot

From Vera Cruz and the Gulf Squadron
Loss of he US brig of war Truxton; Truxton crew taken prisoners; arrival of Santa Anna in Vera Cruz; possession of California by US navy

Letter about the reporting of Gen. Taylor in Europe
More popular there than at home
Washington Union stated that if an offer of peace has been made by the US to Mexico then Mexico has rejected it

MGv47i30p2c1, September 24, 1846: U. States and Mexico-Mediation of England
Comments about the war between Mexico and the US and prospects for peace; Great Britain has offered her mediation skills to the conflict

MGv47i30p2c4, September 24, 1846: From Mexico, proclamation of Santa Anna
Full speech made by Santa Anna about the war; internal Mexican politics; no compromise

MGv47i30p2c6, September 24, 1846: Later from the Army
Prospects of another battle, movement of the army towards Monterey; latest from the central division of the army; great Mexican victory; conduct of the Mexicans; Col. Harney's whereabouts

MGv47i30p2c7, September 24, 1846: Important from the Gulf Squadron
Arrival of the steamer Princeton; Mexico declined proposals for peace; important despatches to government; tidings from the crew of the Truxton

October

1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p1 Matamoras, Fort Brown attack
1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p2 The Two Million Bill, Baltimore American
1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p2 Negotiations with Mexico
1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p2 Latest Army news, Advance of General Taylor, etc.
1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p3 Reported Capture of Santa Fe
1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p3 First Battalion, Second Infantry, Riley, en route for Point Isabel
1 Oct 1846 MGv47n31p3 A heroic act in battle, Third Infantry
8 Oct 1846 MGv47n32p1 The burning of the Truxton
8 Oct 1846 MGv47n32p1 Battle anecdote, New Orleans Picayune
8 Oct 1846 MGv47n32p2 Commodore Sloat taking California, New Orleans Times
8 Oct 1846 MGv47n32p2 General Kearney takes Santa Fe, proclamation
15 Oct 1846 MGv47n33p1 Critical of the war, Richmond Compiler
15 Oct 1846 MGv47n33p2 Battle of Monterey Despatches of General Taylor
15 Oct 1846 MGv47n33p2 Monterey Terms of Capitulation
15 Oct 1846 MGv47n33p2 Bravery of General Worth, Baltimore Sun
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p1 Poetical, Love and war poem
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p2 Wilmot reelected to Congress
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p2 Battle of Monterey, National Intelligencer
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p2 Prosecution of the War, National Intelligencer
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p2 Prosecution of the War, National Intelligencer
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p2 Prosecution of the War, Baltimore American 22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p2 Colonel Watson’s Death, New Orleans Delta
22 Oct 1846 MGv47n34p3 Monterey and Santa Fe, Baltimore Sun
29 Oct 1846 MGv47n35p1 Military technology advances, New York Sun
29 Oct 1846 MGv47n35p2 Santa Anna leaves Mexico City for seat of war

November

MG46v47n36p1c3 Thursday, November 5, 1846, News, Politics, &c., from the Baltimore American, The Monterey Capitulation

MG46v47n36p1c3 November 5, 1846, The United States Loan - the Treasury Notes Made a Currency

MG46v47n36p2c1 November 5, 1846, The Last Words of Colonel Watson

MG46v47n36p3c4 November 5, 1846, The Mexican War – Santa Anna

MG46v47n36p4c4 November 5, 1846, From Mexico, Latest from the Rio Grande, Arrival of the Streamer Galveston

MG46v47n36p3c5 November 5, 1846, Accounts from the Army of General Butler

MG46v47n36p5c1 November 5, 1846, Santa Anna’s Passport – Alex. Gax.

MGi46v47n36p5c1 November 5, 1846, To the Editor

MG46v47n37p1 12 Nov 1846 A novel plan to take Vera Cruz castle, an airship

MG46v47n37p1 12 Nov 1846 California Blockade, New York Journal of Commerce

MG46v47n37p1 12 Nov 1846 Distance from Monterey to Mexico City

MG46v47n37p2c6 12 Nov 1846 From Mexico, 5 Days Later from Monterey, From the Baltimore Sun, Nov. 9

MGv47n37p2-3 12 Nov 1846 Monterey, General Ampudia, Santa Anna leaving Mexico City, Baltimore Sun

MG46v47n37p3c41212 Nov 1846 Nov 1846 Letter to the Editor

MG46v47n37p4c1, 12 November 1846, Letter to the Editor, Vera Cruz, October 1, 1846

MG46v47n37p4c2, 12 November 1846, Letter to the Editor, Washington, Nov. 4, 1846

MG46v47n38p1c2, 19 November 1846, Description of Monterey, Correspondence of the Cincinnati Advertiser, Monterey, September 29, 1846.

MG46v47n38p1c3, 19 November 1846, Tennessee Volunteers – The Killed and Wounded

MG46v47n38p1c3, 19 November 1846, Santa Anna’s Leg

MG46v47n38p1c6, 19 November 1846, Jack Hays and His Men

MG46v47n38p1c7, 19 November 1846, Dress of Mexican Women

MG46v47n38p1c7, 19 November 1846, Mr. Polk’s Faux Pas

MG46v47n38p2c2, 19 November 1846, A Call for Troops

MG46v47n38p2c3, 19 November 1846, From Mexico, Very Late and Important from Mexico

MG46v47n38p2c6, 19 November 1846, From the Gulf Squadron, Second Abortive Attack on Alvarando---Vessels Grounded on the Bar—Expedition against Tobasco—Capture of Several Prizes

MG46v47n38p2c7, 19 November 1846, Further Particulars, Coolness of Con.-Conner- Effects of the Mississippi’s shells – Expedition against Tobasco

MG46v47n38p3c1, 19 November 1846, From the St. Louis Republican, Important and Very Late from Santa Fe
 MG46v47n38p3c1, 19 November 1846, Pronunciation of Mexican Names
 MG46v47n38p3c1, 19 November 1846, Report - Truxton crew to be exchanged
 MG46v47n39p1c3, 26 November 1846, Letter to the Editor, Camp near Monterey MG46v47n39p1c3, 26 November 1846, Sword for Gen. Taylor
 MG46v47n39p1c6, 26 November 1846, From the Camp at Monterey MG46v47n39p2c5, 26 November 1846, The Proclamation of the Governor
 MGv47n39p2, 26 November 1846, Critical of Polk, Louisville Journal
 MG46v47n39p3c2, 26 November 1846, Official Dispatches
 MG46v47n39p3c3, 26 November 1846, The Surprise Administration
 MG46v47n39p3c6, 26 November 1846, A Plum for the Official Organ
 MG46v47n39p4c6, 26 November 1846, From Mexico, Latest from Monterey MG46v47n39p4c7, 26 November 1846, Postscript! Latest from Mexico! Bombardment of Tobasco! Lieut. Morris Killed! Mexican Letters of Marque!
 MG46v47n39p4c2, 26 November 1846, Army in the West
 MG46v47n39p4c5, 26 November 1846, Volunteers for Mexico

December

3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p1-2 Capture of Tobasco, battle reports
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2 Correspondence between American and Mexican Governments, National Intelligencer
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2 Trophies from Monterey
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2 Editorial calling for support for the War
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2 Call for volunteers, Virginia regiment, Berkley company
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2 General Scott, appointment to Chief Command
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2 Praise for Commodore Perry, the Union
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p2-3 Capture of Tampico
3 Dec 1846 MGv47n40p3 Troop movements
10 Dec 1846 MGv47n41p1 Death of Captain Ridgley, New Orleans Bulletin, creation of a posthumous hero
10 Dec 1846 MGv47n41p1 Reception in Washington for Captain Walker, the Union
10 Dec 1846 MGv47n41p1 Death of Major Lear
10 Dec 1846 MGv47n41p2 The Virginia regiment, volunteers
10 Dec 1846 MGv47n41p2, Presidential message to Congress
17 Dec 1846 MGv47n42p2 Virginia Governor's Address
17 Dec 1846 MGv47n42p3 Army news update, not much new OFFICIAL DESPATCHES FROM THE ARMY.

We have been permitted to lay before our readers the following extracts from the last official despatches of General Taylor, which have been received at the War Department:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,

Matamoras, May 30, 1846.

[Extract.]

I enclose an original draught, found in Gen. Arista's papers, of an invitation to our solders to desert. A similar call was previously made by Ampudia, and has already found its way into the public prints. The department may seem from these documents what arms were used against us.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR.
Lt. Brig'r. Gen'l. U. S. A., Com'g.

The ADJ'T. GEN'L. of the army,
Washington, D. C.

The following is the extraordinary and insidious address of General Arista, referred to in the preceding extract: [What irresistible inducements does he offer for desertion—to exchange the honorable and proud character of American citizens for the miserable and degraded lot of "peaceful Mexican citizens!"]

General Arista's advice to the soldiers of the United States army.

HEADQUARTERS AT MATAMORAS,

April 20, 1846.
Soldiers! You have enlisted in time of peace to serve in that army for a specific term; but your obligation never implied that you were bound to violate the laws of God, and the most sacred rights of friends! The United States government, contrary to the wishes of a majority of all honest and honorable Americans, has ordered you to take forcible possession of the territory of a friendly neighbor, who has never given her consent to such occupation. In other words, while the treaty of peace and commerce between Mexico and the United States is in full force, the United States, presuming on her strength and prosperity, and on our supposed imbecility and cowardice, attempts to make you the blind instruments of her unholy and mad ambition, and forces you to appear as the hateful robbers of our dear homes, and the unprovoked violators of our dearest feelings as men and patriots. Such villainy and outrage, I know, is perfectly repugnant to the noble sentiments of any gentleman, and it is base and foul to rush you on to certain death, in order to aggrandize a few lawless individuals, in defiance of the laws of God and man! It is to no purpose if they tell you that the law for the annexation of Texas justifies your occupation of the Rio Bravo del Norte; for by this act they rob us of a great part of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Chihuahua, and New Mexico; and it is barbarous to send a handful of men on such an errand against a powerful and warlike nation. Besides, the most of you are Europeans, and we are the declared friends of a majority of the nations of Europe. The North Americans are ambitious, overbearing and insolent as a nation, and they will only make use of you as vile tools to carry out their abominable plans of pillage and rapine.

I warn you in the name of justice, honor, and your own interests and self-respect, to abandon their desperate and unholy cause, and become peaceful Mexican citizens. I guarantee you, in such case, a half section of land, or 320 acres, to settle upon, gratis. Be wise, then, and just, and honorable, and take no part in murdering us who have no unkind feelings for you. Lands shall be given to officers, sergeants, and corporals according to rank, privates receiving 320 acres, as stated.

If in time of action you wish to espouse our cause, throw away your arms and run to us, and we will embrace you as true friends and Christians. It is not decent nor prudent to say more. But should any of you render any important service to Mexico you shall be accordingly considered and preferred.

M. ARISTA,
Commander-in-chief of the Mexican army.

Thursday, July 2, 1846, Volume 47, Number 18, Page 3, Column 3 Words: 1090

LATEST NEWS.

FROM MEXICO AND YUCATAN.

For the following extracts of news, we are indebted to the Baltimore American of the 29th ult.

The annexed articles from the N. Orleans Picayune reached us through the Charleston News of Thursday and the Washington Union of Saturday evening:

From the New Orleans Picayune, June 20.

REYNOSA TAKEN!—RETURN OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE LEGISLATURE, &c. &c.

We had the pleasure of meeting one of the gentlemen forming the Committee of the Legislature who repaired to the Army of Occupation under instructions of the House of Representatives to convey to Gen. TAYLOR the resolutions passed by the Legislature expressive of the thanks of the people of Louisiana for the gallantry of himself, and the army under his command, in achieving the splendid victories of the 8th and 9th of May, and defending Fort Brown during a bombardment of a week's duration.

The committee were received by the brave old soldier with every mark of courtesy and kindness, and the officers in hospitals to a delegation of a Legislature which had met a crisis of peril with swift and efficient measures, and had borne prompt testimony to the chivalry that won two successive fields against great and alarming odds.

The army was in good spirits, and the committee heard nothing of the complaints of the officers which find their way to the press of the States. Gen. TAYLOR was encamped on the west side of the Rio Grande. The Washington Regiments and the Fifth Regulars, with others, occupied the American camp opposite Matamoras. The American flag was displayed in Fort Paredes, and the army appeared as well contented as could be expected, considering the pause of active hostilities.

Just before the committee left Matamoras, Major OGDEN arrived from above, with the information that the detachment of regulars and volunteers under Col. WILSON had taken the town of Reynosa without meeting any opposition. It was thought that the navigation of the Rio Grande was practicable to Camargo—if so, that town would be the next in the order of conquest. From this point, Camargo, preparations would be made for penetrating the interior.
Before the committee left the Rio Grande, intelligence of the death of Gen. TORREJON reached Matamoras. It is said he died of a fever. After the battles of the 8th and 9th of May, it was thought he was killed in one or the other of those actions. He was the commander of the Mexican division that captured Capt. THORNTON's command.

There was no certain knowledge in the American camp as to the position of the Mexican army, but it was generally supposed to be at Monterey. It was also confidently asserted that Generals ARISTA and AMPUDIA had both left the army for the capital, the latter charging ARISTA with having betrayed the army, and ARISTA charging AMPUDIA with cowardice.

The U. S. sloop of war John Adams, brig Lawrence and cutter Woodbury were blockading the mouth of the Rio Grande.

FURTHER.—Since writing the above, the bark WILLIAM IVY, Capt. HOFFMAN, has arrived from Brazos Santiago, having sailed thence upon the 12th inst.

Capt. KER, of the 5d Dragoons, and Lieut. SCOTT, of the 7th Infantry, came passengers in the barque.

Capt. HOFFMAN reports that the brig Archelaus arrived at Brazos Santiago on the 12th inst., from Tampico, with Mr. SCHATZELL, the former American Consul at Matamoras, and several other Americans on board. They had previously been ordered from Matamoras by Gen. AMPUDIA.

A passenger reports that an express arrived at Matamoras on the 6th instant, with intelligence that a re-inforcement of 5000 Mexicans had arrived at Monterey, as he says, under ARISTA. We give the rumor as we hear it.

Correspondence of the Picayune.

FORT POLK, POINT ISABEL,

2 o'clock, p. m., June 18, 1846.

EDITORS OF THE PICAYUNE: GENTLEMAN: News reached here a few moments since, or rather I should say a rumor, though it came through a channel that is deserving of confidence—viz: Matamoras, that ALVAREZ had declared in favor of HERRERA; that Gen. GARCIA died a short time since of wounds, received I know not when, and that Gen. TORREJON (who commanded the two thousand crack troops, who took Capt. THORNTON and HARDY, with sixty-three men) is in a condition which allows no hope of his recovery. He was wounded in some of the engagements with our troops in this vicinity.

ARISTA's army is in a sad condition, a severe fever prevailing among his men, which is rapidly reducing their numbers. Gov. HENDERSON, commander of the Texan volunteers, has this moment arrived at this post, and is now receiving a salute of cannon. The Governor, a tall, soldier-like gentleman, of middle age, appears to be in fine spirits. He is accompanied by a small body of fine-looking Texan rangers. A detachment of his troops are now encamped about six miles from this post, on the road to Matamoras. It is understood that they will immediately march some distance on the road to Monterey, and Mr. KENDALL, of your “family,” will accompany them. I go to Matamoras to night, from which place I shall be able to tell you more about the movements of the light corps of the army.

In hast,

H.

We learn that Gen. FEATHERSTON's regiment arrived at Brazos Santiago in good season. There are seventy men out of the regiment sick, although not dangerously. Col. BAILIE PEYTON, we regret to learn, is sick at Barita, but not seriously.

FROM YUCATAN.

The Prus. Brig Delfido arrived at New Orleans on the 19th inst. from Campeachy, whence she sailed on the 6th inst. A letter written at the latter place to a commercial house in New Orleans, dated on the day of the Delfino's sailing, states that the Yucatan Congress was still in session, but expected to adjourn on the 20th inst.

They were discussing the propriety of a separation from Mexico with the greatest earnestness, and the general impression was that before they adjourned, Yucatan would be declared independent.

The Delfino reported that the U. S. brig Somers arrived on the 4th inst. All well on board.

The Picayune remarks:--

The object of the visit of the Somers to that coast, it will be recollected, was to ascertain the feeling of Yucatan with reference to the war; and there can be no doubt that, if the Congress before hesitated about accepting the terms of Mexico, the knowledge that they may receive assistance will at once determine them to throw off the yoke, and seek 4 DAYS LATER FROM YUCATAN.

YUCATAN DECLARED INDEPENDENT.

The Yucatan schr. Jonquina, Capt. MARTINEZ, arrived at New Orleans on the 20th inst. The Delta of the 21st says—

We learn through letter received by a commercial house in this city, that the legislature at Merida had declared the independence of Yucatan and its disseverance from the Mexican Republic. It is intended now to appoint SENOR BARBACHANO, the acting governor of Yucatan, President of the "three stars."—Some of the most influential citizens of Yucatan have not hesitated to express the hope that in two or three years from the present time, if not before, they would see those three stars added to the fast increasing number that are now crowding the banner of the stars and striped.

The Jonquina left Campeachy on the 12th inst. The U. S. brig Somers was the only vessel of war off the port. Everything was quiet. There are several Yucatan vessels at Campeachy up for this port, and some two or three on their way hither. The Jonquina came into port under the Yucatan flag.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

ARISTA RELIEVED FROM COMMAND—GEN. MEJIA APPOINTED TO SUCCEED HIM IN THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY OF THE NORTH.

The French brig Princess Maria arrived at New Orleans on the 21st inst. from Tampico, bringing dates from that place to the 6th inst. From the New Orleans correspondent of the Charleston Evening News we take the following items:

We learn from one of the passengers, that the authorities at Tampico were divided into two parties. One of the parties with the military, has Gen. ANASTISIO at its head, was in the favor of Federation and SANTA ANNA. The other party was for arming the people in favor of Federation without SANTA ANNA. A third party was about rising up, when our informant left; but none of the parties had come to an understanding yet. There were at Tampico 11 vessels of different nations at the time of the blockade, three British, three French, two Spanish, two American, and one Bremen.

The authorities were about prohibiting the American vessels from taking in their cargoes; but at last Capt. SAUNDERS, of the sloop of war St. Mary, hearing of this, sent a dispatch to the authorities, that if there were any detention of American property no property at all should leave the place. This caused the withdrawal of the order.

The fort at Tampico (a mud affair) had been washed away by a freshet a few days previous to the 6th.

The three gun boats lately built at New York for the Mexican service were lying in the river above Tampico.

Official despatches had arrived at Tampico that Gen. ARISTA had been removed from the command of the Northern Division of the Army and Gen. MEJIA had superceded him.

There were 300 troops only at Tampico on the 6th. Seventy nine of these were runaway Negroes and mulattoes from New Orleans and Havana. These constitute the whole amount of the Mexican force from Tampico to the Rio Grande.

STILL LATER FROM MEXICO.

ARRIVAL AT HAVANA OF THE BRITISH MAIL STEAMER FROM VERA CRUZ.

We make up the annexed summary of Mexican news from the Picayune of the 21st inst.

The correspondence of Diario de la Marina, of Havana writes from the city of Mexico on the 29th that not a sufficient number of members of Congress assembled to form a quorum; nevertheless a preparatory session was held, and the writer adds that Sr. BESTAMANTE, the ex-President, may be considered as the President of Congress and that there is every probability that Sr. PAREDES will be elected President of the Republic, the Congress, appearing to be devoted to him. It is added that should PAREDES take the field in the present campaign, Gen. BRAVO, now in command of the troops at Vera Cruz, will be elected Vice President.

It is believed very generally that Congress, such as it is, will at once invest PAREDES with dictatorial powers for a limited period, and then suspend its sessions. Many deputies had openly declared in favor of this course, and the country appeared to have reached such a crisis, that the concentration of all power in a single hand appeared to be called for.

There had been another dissolution of the Ministry. The Secretaries of War and the Treasury—TORNEL and ITURBE—are known to have resigned. The former, it was though, would be succeeded by Gen. D. IGNACTO DE MORA Y VALLAMIL, and the latter by D. ANTONIA, GARAY, a merchant.

The great topic of conversation at the capital was the proposed departure of PAREDES to take command of the Army of the North. He himself was bent upon doing so, although dissuaded by many considerations of policy and by the advice of his friends. Should he take the field, it is said he would have under his command an army of sixteen thousand men, including in these the army of reserve and the troops of ARISTA.

Reports were in circulation in the city that Gen. ARISTA was to be called to the capital to answer charges preferred against him, but the correspondent of the Diario thinks this not at all probable.

The writer whose views we have been giving thinks, as do the Mexican papers we find quoted, that the danger to the country is not from a foreign foe, but their internal divisions. They indulge the hope, however, that the fact that their country has been invaded by the enemy, citizens will forget their dissentions, and thus the Government actually derive strength from the magnitude of the danger which threatens from abroad.

The Monitor Republican of the 21st ult., announces that 46 of the 100 Deputies to the Congress had then reached the capital, and that the Government was urging the attendance of others in order to form a quorum.

P. S.—Since the above was written; the brig Empressario, Capt. COLLINS, has arrived from Havana, bringing us dates one day later. We see little to add to what we have given above in regard to Mexican news. The Mexicans set down their loss in the two battles at 262 killed, 355 wounded and 135 prisoners.

The Spanish frigate Cristina arrived at Vera Cruz on the 22d ult. and supplied the Spanish vessel-of-war lying at Sacrificios with three months’ provisions, and left orders that she should remain there.

ARISTA assigns as his reason for withdrawing from Matamoras its destitution of provisions, and the want of means to defend it if vigorously attacked.

El Indicador of Vera Cruz of the 30th ult. Says positively, that PAREDES will march to the frontier with the army of Reserve, so that there are laurels yet to be won by our army and the brave volunteers.

Two Mexican Generals, names not given are reported to have died of the wounds received in the actions of the 8th and 9th.

The port of Acapulco had been declared closed to foreign commerce while it remains in possession of Gen. ALVAREZ.

The blockade of Tampico was commenced by the sloop-of-war St. Mary’s on the 20th ult., with the same notice to foreign Consuls, &c., as were given at Vera Cruz.

[FCH]
Resolved, That it is not at all surprising that the vile pandors to party should have as little relish for Gen. SCOTT’s "soup" as the British had for Gen. JACKSON’s hot "coffee."

Resolved, That, instead of cowering before the false and anti-American charges which a base jealously of his glory has prompted, it is the duty of the friends of Gen. SCOTT to guard his fame as that of their country, to rally around him, and to vindicate his claims to the highest meed of his country’s favor.

GEN. TAYLOR.—The question as to which County in Virginia has the honor of giving birth to Gen. TAYLOR, is settled in favor of Orange. He was born on the red lands, so fruitful in Presidents. His father was an officer in the Continental Army, removed at an early day to Kentucky, and died about 10 years ago. He was elector in that district for JEFFERSON, MADISON, MONROE, and CLAY, the first time he was a candidate. The General has a daughter now in Washington, the wife of Mr. DAVIS, member of Congress, from Mississippi. He has a brother, attached to the army in a civil capacity, now on his way to Matamoras. Gen. TAYLOR is in easy circumstances, and has a noble farm nearly opposite Cincinnati. He has been in the field, almost constantly for the last seven years. He will be 62 on the 24th of November next.

A letter from a Naval officer in the Gulf Squadron to a member of Congress thus describes “Old Rough and Ready:"

"Gen. TAYLOR is an extraordinary man, and has less of the military in his appearance than any man I have ever seen who wore a sword. He came into our camp on the 11th dressed and looking like a very plain good-natured, honest, well-to-do-in-the-world farmer, in search of a market for his crop, with not so much as a single uniform button to be seen about him. We received him with three hearty cheers. But our sailors, who like such fun, would not stop until they had given him nine. Notwithstanding his farmer like appearance, the field of battle is said to be his very element. There he is cool and perfectly self possessed; his only fault as a general is, that he is too apt to be found in that part of the field where the balls fly thickest."

A similar description of the Hero of the Rio Grande is given by a N. Orleans correspondent of a Philadelphia paper, who adds: "The South and West are on fire for TAYLOR as a candidate for the Presidency, though those who know him doubt whether he would accept it. The 50,000 volunteers, on their return from Mexico, will spread their own enthusiasm throughout the whole land. The Kentucky troops, (a splendid set of men, by the way,) have already raised the cry, and are singing Taylor Songs. ” We fear the Locos will be disgusted with the music. The have a great abhorrence of political song-books, particularly if they have "yaler kivers."

Arisi and Taylor.

One of the editors of New Orleans Tropic, who has just returned from a visit to the Rio Grande, presents the following graphic pictures of the Mexican and American Commanding Generals as they were successively seen in camp at Matamoras. The sketches are true to the life, and the contrast which they present both is strong and striking:

The contrast of the two commanding Generals, TAYLOR and ARISTA, in the pomp and circumstances of war was characteristic of the different institution under which they lived. There was a semi-barbaric splendor associated with ARISTA’s according with the despotism of the Mexican government. A simplicity about that of TAYLOR’s equally significant of pure Republican institutions.

The marquee of the commanding General of the Mexican forces was bell-shaped, and of no great size. The material of which it was composed, was ornamented by parti colored stripes giving it a holyday appearance.—Around it were stationed gaily dressed officers who glistened in the sun, and were ready to pay the most abject respect to their chief. Led horses richly caparisoned slowly paced in sight. Protecting its rear, like continued labyrinthian walls, were arranged the equipage of the camp. Pack saddles for five hundred mules were tastefully placed for display, and their loads hear by, heaped up on prodigal confusion. To the poor Mexican soldier bivouacked in the open air, this wealth seemed a vision of a fairy land, and its conventional possessor, rich beyond their imagination, and powerful beyond comparison.

Bands of rude music almost constantly rent the air with their noisy labor. The furniture of the marquee was rich; the costly figured chests of the camp were the ornamental furniture; upon their tops reposed in ostentation, the heavy silver service of the table, or the elegantly finished "maps of the campaign." In this array sat the commanding General, surrounded by his numerous staff—his clothes of gray colors and laced to vulgar profusion.—Visits of ceremony or business were conducted with pomp and needless delays; long times officials stared and leered, and were impudent or cringing, as suited their purposes best. Music rolled, sabres and muskets rattled, and the buzz of inflated greatness and hollow pretence, was triumphant.

About a mile above the city of Matamoras, a little distance from the banks of the Rio Grande, is to be seen (June 1st.) some stunted and ill-shaped trees, which bend their gnarled and almost leafless limbs over a group of three or four small tents, only different from those of the common soldier in the rear, in this, that they are heterogeneously disposed of for shade, instead of being in a line, regardless of all else than military precision. The plain about is dotted over... with thousand of tents, before many of which were artillery, and groups of men and soldiers; and over some waved in triumphant folds our national flag, giving promise of more importance and pomp, than the little knot to which we have particularly attended.—We wended our way on towards the dwarfish trees that were distinguished, from being a few feet higher than the surrounding brush, and for the little group of tents that rested beneath them, for they were pointed out as making the head-quarters, of the commanding General of a triumphant American army.

Not the slightest token was visible, to mark one tent in the group from another; there were no sentinels or any military parade present; a chubby sunburnt child, "belonging to the camp," was playing near by in the grass, temporarily arrested in its wandering by some insect of unusual size that was delving in the dust.

We presented ourself at the opening of one the tents, before which was standing a dragoon’s horse, much used by hard service. Upon a camp stool at our left, sat General ------, in busy conversation with a hearty looking old gentleman, sitting on a box, cushioned with an Arkansas blanket, dressed in Attakapas pantaloons and a linen roundabout, remarkable for a bright flashing eye, a high forehead, a farmer look, and "rough and ready" appearance. It is hardly necessary for us to say that this personage was Gen. TAYLOR, the commanding hero of two of the most remarkable battle on record, and the man who, by his firmness and decision of character, has shed lustre upon the American arms.

There was no pomp about his tent; a couple of rough blue chests served for his table, on which were strown in masterly confusion a variety of official-looking documents; a quiet-looking citizen-dressed personage made his appearance upon hearing the significant call of "Ben," bearing on a tin salver, a couple of black bottles and shining tumblers, arranged around an earthern pitcher of Rio Grande water. These refreshments were deposited upon a stool, and "we helped ourselves," by invitation. We bore to the General a complimentary gift from some of his fellow-citizens of New Orleans, which he declined receiving for the present, giving at the same time a short but "hard sense" lecture on the impropriety of naming children and places after men before they were dead, or of his receiving a present for his services "before the campaign, so far as he was concerned, was finished."

With the highest possible admiration of the republican simplicity of the manners and character of Gen. TAYLOR, we bade him good day with a high appreciation of our native land, for possessing such a man as a citizen, and of its institutions for moulding such a character.

Thursday, July 9, 1846, Volume 47, Number 19, Page 3, Column 2 Words: 927

LATE FROM THE ARMY.

FROM TAMPICO.

The following letter from the Norfolk Herald of Thursday, was received by a gentleman in that city via New Orleans, we presume, as a letter bag from St. Mary's was received there on the 23d ult:

U. S. SHIP ST. MARY'S, }

OFF TAMPICO, June 13, 1846.

The war grows apace. On the 8th inst., we discovered the enemy erecting another fort on the North side of the entrance to the river, and at one o'clock, P. M., we got the ship under weigh under topsails, stood in, and when within a mile of the forts and gunboats, the latter, three in number, and tonning about one hundred, opened a fire upon us. Being on a lee shore and in shoal water, we were not able to fire more than eight shots, before it became necessary to claw off, which we did; but at three o'clock returned and continued the firing until we had fired 70 shells, and 29 round solid shot. In the last recontre, the enemy returned our fire, with about ten shots from 18 pound guns, four of which passed near us, two fell directly under our "fore foot," one passed between the fore and main-top-mast, and one over the foot; the others fell at a distance.

The first shell which burst over the fort ejected every soldier from the neighbourhood, the whole of them taking immediately to the woods. One of our shells passed between one of the schooner's masts, and exploded beyond her, a fragment having struck the bowsbrit and bulwarks, tearing both considerably, as we have learned since the fight. One corner of the custom house was knocked down. A house on the north side of the river was fired by the explosion of a shell; and a soldier at the Fort on guard, by the bursting of another shell, exchanged his musket for vacancy, it having been shattered, without, I believe, injuring his valuable person. Having driven the party, from the embryo fort, we returned to our anchorage at half past three.

We were not satisfied, however, with this engagement, for yesterday we projected a plan for cutting out the gunboats, and accordingly at dusk hoisted out all boats, arrived there, the launch bearing a nine pounder in the bows, and at 10 o'clock P. M. got under weigh and brought the ship nearer the shore, about one and a half miles off—It takes a longer time to describe the minutia of this affair than I can devote to it now. We had desired to make the attack before the moon rose, but could not. At 11 o'clock she was lifting her head above the horizon when our five boats left the ship, every thing having been previously arranged by our gallant Captain. Mind you, we not only had the difficulty of
We pulled into the shore with muffled oars, actually feeling our way, for at one time we would be quite in the breakers, and then too far seaward, with a strong tide beneath and a bright moon above us, every thing seeming to conspire against our daring expedition. In seeking our way to the mouth of the river we were obliged to pass near the shore for a distance of 200 yards, and the noise consequent upon the difficulty of finding our way through a passage of which we knew nothing, betrayed us to the sentinels along the shore, who rapidly communicated with the encampment, and it conveyed intelligence to the gunboats, so that unknown to us, our foe was watching our every movement. However, at about 1 A. M. we had discovered the narrow entrance to the mouth of the river, and were pulling in, when, within two hundred yards of the Fort, near which we had to pass, much to our surprise, as you can imagine, bang! went dozen muskets, and the balls whizzed about our ears. We laid on our oars, and in five minutes after the firing of muskets commenced, the gun in the launch was trained and "let drive." A gun rather heavier from one of the gunboats succeeded to this; the shot passed clear of us, and the gun in the launch was loaded and fired again, when the firing ashore ceased.—There were also fired from the launch a few carbines.

At this time we had not passed the point, and after getting inside we should have been obliged to pull at least 300 yards before reaching the object of the expedition. The enemy being already on the alert and with superior force, it would have been almost madness to proceed, and the object would not have compensated for the sacrifice we should have made. Besides, the passage through which we had to pass was not wide enough to admit the boats except in single file, so that the gunboats would have raked us fore and aft before we could have come along side of them. If we had passed the Fort I believe we should have carried the boats to a certainty. We had with us 85 men and marines; the 1st and 2d Lieutenants, Master, and all the Mids, except two. We returned to the ship at 2 A. M., much fatigued and disappointed. I will write-------by this conveyance, and tell him of the next day's fight.

Yours &c.

[HCH]
should be, and that upon a summing up of accounts, we shall be called to witness the Government plundered, cheated, and robbed by contractors of thousands of dollar—as it was in the Florida war. The people will ask for, and demand a strict accountability for every thing. But we forbear further comments, until we can see "the facts and figures in detail."

After the above was in type, we receive d the "Union," which contains the following statement, which we annex without comment.—The public can judge of it for themselves:--

TRANSPORTATION OF TROOPS.—Some complaints have been made about the tardiness of our military arrangements. We undertake to say, that there is no just foundation for them. On the contrary, the utmost energy has been displayed in making the necessary preparations. No appropriations were made by Congress for carrying on the war until about the middle of May—and then it was impossible for the War Department to foresee the whole extent and character of the arrangements, which might be necessary for “carrying the war into Africa.” As soon, however, as the great events on the Rio Grande began to develop the plan of operations, the quartermaster’s department devoted all its energies to the procuring of transportation for the troops.

We have called the quartermaster's office to-day to obtain information, and Gen. JESUP was polite enough to lay open his arrangements before us. We are satisfied from his specifications that he has spared no pains in obtaining the necessary boats from all directions. We shall not enumerate all the various sources of supply to which he has addressed himself. We will confine ourselves to the following details:

Among the letters which he has received is one from Col. THOMAS E. HUNT, from New Orleans, July 4. He "reports that he had purchased Steamers Undine, for $13,000; Troy, $6,000; J. E. Roberts, $9,000, the 13th June; the Brownville, for $9,000, the 15th June; steam schooner James Cage, for $18,000, on the 19th; Hatchee Eagle, the 1st July, for $5,000. All have been despatched to the Rio Grande except that last—she detained for repairs deemed necessary. Undine and James Cage have been coppered, and otherwise repaired. The Cage is a good seaboat, and suited for lightering vessels at sea, &c. The Undine sent temporarily to La Buca. Has character steamers Big Hatchee, the Warren, the Exchange, and the W. A. Mercer, which have also departed for Brazos Santiago."

Extract of a letter from Capt. John Saunders, the officer appointed by General Taylor to purchase or charter boats, dated July 2, 1846, at Pittsburg:

"Advises he had purchased five light draught steamers for the Rio Grande, as follows: Whiteville, the Corvette, Rough-and-Ready, Colonel cross, and the Major Brown—total cost of $60,000. These are all splendid boats of their class."

[HCH]

Thursday, July 30, 1846, Volume 47, Number 22, Page 1, Columns 5 and 6. Words:1993

Miscellany.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

We give below, from the National Intelligencer, the principal portions of a letter received by a member of Congress from the Seat of War. It contains much that is interesting in the present state of affairs.

POINT ISABEL, June 29, 1846.

SIR: Being here among that (too many) unfortunate class called Volunteers, and having not much else to do but to protect myself from the effects of a hot sun and almost daily rains for the last two weeks, I have concluded to make a few notes for the information of those who keep an eye on the acts and management of the persons charged with the prosecution of the war with Mexico. My position enables me to see and hear much of what is going on; but I do not, like some others pretend to know every thing; therefore you must not discredit what I state because I do not tell all you may wish to know or all that occurs.

The President, in his message of the 11th of May, says "American blood has been shed on American soil," alluding to the affair that took place on the 24th April between the dragoons, under the command of Capts. THORNTON and HARDEE, in which some were killed at the others taken prisoners by the Mexicans.—There is much to be said upon the question whether it is rightfully American soil where this affair took place; but certain is it that as soon as Capt THORNTON was given up by the Mexicans, on the 10th or 11th of May, he was put under arrest by Gen. TAYLOR for disobeying his orders whilst on that expedition, and bringing on that fight contrary to his wishes. He is now here under arrest—a circumstance I have not seen mentioned in a public manner. I may at some future time send you a statement of some facts bearing on the assertions of the President and the circumstances relied on to prove that the bank of the Rio Grande was American soil. It may be so considered now.

As soon as the alarm of war was run thro’ the country, Volunteers hastened here from various quarters, until there is now on this frontier some eight or ten thousand, and many more on the way. Many of these men have left comfortable homes, and have come expecting to see active service. Instead of that, they are scattered over the country, in different encampments, exposed to the heat of the sun in latitude twenty-six, and the soaking rains of the Summer solstice, inactive, and many indulging in dissipation to kill time and chase away ennui. I will explain why this is so.—
The great object seems to have been to hasten men on here, without any particular object.—If it be for purposes of defence, Gen. TAYLOR has proved he did not want many to assist him—certainly no more than he called for.—If the object be invasion, the men come poorly provided. They come with arms in their hands, and there are provisions enough, easily obtained, but there is not a sufficiency of transportation for an army of five thousand men.—If some attention had been paid to the necessary means of transporting supplies for an army, it would have been much better than sending masses of men to suffer in this climate. An army cannot move without provisions, and if we penetrate far into the country it will require a great number of wagons. There are about three hundred wagons and teams here, but not drivers enough for them; when I say here, understand with the army. We are told the Government has three hundred wagons in or about Philadelphia; when they will be here no one can tell; mules have to be purchased, and no chance of getting them, except from the Mexicans; they are perfectly wild, and must be tamed and taught to work; this will take a long time after the wagons arrive. The Mexican officers are having the mules driven off as fast as they can into the interior, and forbid any sales to us; still a good many are brought to Matamoras and are purchased. A month ago an officer was sent to New Orleans to purchase several steamboats suitable to navigate the Rio Grande. None of them are here yet, and, from what we have been informed, when they do arrive, it is not probable they will answer the purpose. In the meantime the mouth of the river has been closed by a bar; the steamers Sea and Cincinnati, chartered at high rates, were caught inside, and are of little or no use to us, drawing too much water.—The Col. Harney steamer, belonging to the Government, was during last week, in open daylight, run on the bar, off this harbor, and has gone to pieces—a great piece of negligence. The utter neglect to supply the Army with sufficient transportation for ammunition and supplies now paralizes everything and prevents the army moving on. If we had had one month ago three hundred additional wagons and two or three small steamers in the Rio Grande, we should be now far on our way to Monterey, in a high, healthy country, the men contented and well, and no time given the enemy to recruit their forces or recover from the consequences of their defeat. Instead of this, I do not believe the Army will leave the banks of the Rio Grande before the middle of August or the commencement of September. Until then the men must be paid and supported—at what cost you will see when you can get hold of the accounts.

The staff department of the Army, particularly the Quartermaster’s branch, is most inefficient and extravagant. The only persons qualified for the station of quartermaster are real business men—men of system and order, well acquainted with accounts. These officers require no military skill or education, but thorough mercantile habits and capacity. The consequence of the quartermasters not being such men, will be developed when the accounts are exhibited and the expenses come to be added up. Their acquaintance with business, the state of the markets, &c. subjects them to the grossest impositions in making contracts and purchases; and there are those who say favoritism goes a long way; but of that I know nothing.

When the expenses of this war are paid and the accounts exhibited, the Florida expenditures will appear small. The most enormous rats are paid for many things, particularly the use of ships and other vessels engaged in transporting troops and stores; from twenty-five to fifty per cent. more than a commercial man would pay for similar vessels for his own use. Let me give you a few instances. The steamship Alabama is chartered at the rate of $16,500 per month. She was here about the end of May with volunteers, and returned to New Orleans on the 1st inst. She reached the bar at this port several days ago, and was soon after blown off without landing the men on her, and has not yet got back. The steamers Augusta and Cincinnati have long been in service under high charters. The former has been fast aground at this port several days ago, and was soon after blown off without landing the men on her, and has not yet got back. She was here about the end of May with volunteers, and returned to New Orleans on the 1st inst. She reached the bar about the end of May with volunteers, and returned to New Orleans on the 1st inst. She reached the bar at this port several days ago, and was soon after blown off without landing the men on her, and has not yet got back. The steamers Augusta and Cincinnati have long been in service under high charters. The former has been fast aground at this port several days ago, and was soon after blown off without landing the men on her, and has not yet got back.

Soon after her arrival she was dismantled, the rigging sold or otherwise disposed of, the hull alone hired by the quartermaster at $30 per day, $10,950 per annum: a good interest on $1,500. Other cases as remarkable could be mentioned. A new Quartermaster General is on his way here, it is said, and things may be better managed perhaps. At some proper time it might be well to have an exhibit of the amount paid to each steamer and sailing vessel engaged in transporting troops and supplies for this place for the army, their tonnage, value &c. and the obtaining from practical business men what such vessels could have been employed for by individuals for their own use. The most enormous rates were also paid last year for transporting to Corpus Christi and St. Joseph’s Island. Sometimes as much was paid for a vessel from New Orleans as she could have made on a voyage to Liverpool, and the rates have not abated. At an early period it will be well to look into these expenditures, and know who has made them or sanctioned them.

No one can tell when the army will make a forward movement. My belief is it will be a considerable time, and soley for the want of transportation. In the mean time the volunteers are much exposed. For two weeks or more it has rained almost every day, and the appearances are strongly in favor of a continuance of it. When it does not rain the sun is hot enough. The tents furnished are of an indifferent kind, and there are a number of companies, particularly among the Texans, that have none at all. Yet the men so far continue tolerably healthy. How long it will last no one can tell.

Whether the Mexicans will risk another battle of a general kind is a question that cannot be decided now. If they could have been pursued soon after the battles in May, their force must have been dispersed, killed, or captured. As it is, they have ample time to raise reinforcements and recruit their spirits, and may make another stand in the hilly country. If they do, I have no doubt they will be defeated, and the war may be terminated soon; but if they do not conclude to make another general fight, the war will be of a partisan character, and no one can tell when it will terminate. We may overrun the country, but will not subdue. As long as private property is restricted, and the lives and rights of those not found in arms secured, the Mexicans do not care about our traveling through their country and paying the highest price for what they have to sell. It is a species of warfare better for many of them than the state of peace they have heretofore enjoyed. The men are frequently employed here by the Quartermaster, and are much better paid that they ever were before. Yet these people, as a mass, have the bitterest feelings against us. Their priests and demagogues have, for their own purposes, fostered their prejudices and animosities, and the idea of “extending the area of freedom” so as to include them seems to me ridiculous and absurd.
The rumor is (and I think it worthy of credit) that the Mexicans are fortifying the town of Monterey. It is a place of considerable importance in a civil and military point of view, and it is possible the enemy may fight for it.—If they do not, they will make no general fight, that is certain, and the war will then be of the guerilla kind, and be waged in a most sanguinary spirit. Our people, particularly the Texans, feel very hostile and much exasperated against the Mexicans, and if ever the army is broken up into detachments and small parties they will not be spared by them. As long as we are embodied, under the control of high officers, a proper restraint will be exercised; but as soon as the small chiefs have sway then will bloodshed and rapine spread over the country.

FROM MEXICO.

From the Baltimore American, July 27.

LATE FROM THE ARMY.

The steamship James L. Day, Capt. GRIFFIN, arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 18th inst., from Brazos Santiago, having sailed thence on Wednesday the 15th instant. The news is four days later, and of some interest; especially so is the announcement that a deputation from the British Navy arrived at Fort Polk, upon business with Gen. TAYLOR, calculated to excite curiosity and speculation.

"The troops were being sent forward as fast as the means of transportation and the high waters would allow. The Louisiana Volunteers were being concentrated above Matamoras. The Washington and Col DAKIN’s Regiments were a short distance above that place. The Andrew Jackson Regiment left for Reynosa on the 9th, and Col. DAVIS moved up the river on the 10th instant. The Tenessee Regiment relieved DAVIS’ command at Burita.

"Majors DIMMICK and MORRIS, Captain BURKE, and Lieuts. FREMONT and MAGRUDER, of the U. S. Army, came passengers in the Day.

"An article in the American Flag, of the 10th instant, informs us that broils occasionally break out amongst the Volunteers and Mexicans, resulting in death. That paper states that Gen. TAYLOR uses every exertion to prevent persons attached to the army from disturbing the citizens of Matamoras. The Mexican authorities are urged more attention in keeping their citizens in order and dispersing them when engaged in riotous proceedings.—Some of CANALES’ men are supposed to be lurking about Matamoras for purposes of rapine and murder.

"Considering the leniency shown by Gen. TAYLOR towards the captive city, in permitting the people to pursue their wonted avocations, and the courts of law to administer justice, it behooves the civil police to be diligent in suppressing disorders and sending away dangerous persons. A young American soldier was found near the office of the American Flag, on the 6th inst., with his throat dreadfully cut and his heart pierced with several dagger wounds. The murderer has not been discovered.

"The Rio Grande was yet rising on the 10th. In several places about Matamoras it had overflowed its banks.

A correspondent of the Picayune writing from Fort Polk, under date of July 14, says:--

"No news or material changes since my last. The rain, if any thing, has risen, completely cutting off transportation by land between this and Matamoras—particularly at the several ravines the other side of Palo Alto, which appears to be the old bed of the river, and through which the water flows with quite a rapid current and of considerable depth.

"The high water has been of incredible injury to the crops on the Rio Grande, some asserting that even three-fourths of the cotton and corn in the bottoms have been destroyed. It will not only go hard with these ‘from hand to mouth’ people, whose only thought is of the day, but I am fearful that it may occasion difficulty in giving Gen. TAYLOR the means of subsisting his troops to the extent he anticipated from the appearance of the corps a short while since. Three weeks ago, when I went down on the Aid to Matamoras, there never was as good a promise of an abundant harvest, and all were cheerful; now the poor Mexicans are stalking about waist deep in the corn fields, the families have been driven off to the high ground, and every face shrouded in gloom. The war has been of service, real service to the inhabitants on the Rio Grande, but the freshet has ruined them.

"The last report is that the water is at a stand, perhaps falling, having caused the removal of all camps save one.

"Troops continue to arrive almost daily, and soon afterwards move up and take position upon the river near Burita. The 7th Regiment of Infantry has gone to Reynosa or Camargo.

"The weather, together with the inactivity of the troops, has caused considerable sickness among them. I learn there are several hundred in hospital at Matamoras, and the measles has broken out in one of the camps.
“Curiosity runs high to know the object of a visit of two British naval officers to Gen. Taylor, who arrived here in a vessel of war from Tampico. Communication being cut off, they sent their despatches by mail to their Consul at Matamoras, to be laid by him before the Consul General. Nous verrons.

“Appearances indicate a move of the army into the interior as soon as the waters subside.

“Report says Gen. Paredes has sent a proclamation to the people of Matamoras, calling upon the to treat our regulars with every kindness and consideration, because of the unparalleled kindness and attention to his wounded, as well as prisoners and citizens. He takes occasion to score the Texans, &c. If this be true, it argues more favorably than otherwise.”

The New Orleans papers of the 19th contain advices from Mexico, received via Havanna, of the same date as those already received by an arrival at New York. Some additional items of interest are given, which we subjoin. We take them from the Picayune:

"Shortly after the meeting of the Mexican Congress, that body proceeded to organize the Executive power, by a decree that it should be deposited provisionally in a magistrate elected by a plurality of the votes of Congress, and that a Vice President should be elected at the same time to act in the absence of the President. This decree was passed on the 10th of June, and on the 12th the election was held. Gen. Paredes was elected President, receiving 58 out of 83 votes. Gen. Bravo received 13 votes, and Gen. Herrera 7 votes. Gen. Bravo was then elected Vice President, receiving 48 out of 82 votes. The highest opposing candidate was D. Luis G. Cuevas, who received 17 votes.

"Gen. Paredes took the oaths of office on the 13th as Provisional President, and at the same time pronounced another discourse, in the most noble passage of which he expresses his confidence that Congress will grant all the supplies and make every effort necessary to defend the national cause. He reviews at length the wrongs which Mexico has endured at the hands of the United States, and concludes with desiring permission to assume the command of the army in the field. In the absence of Senor Bustamente, who was ill, Dr. D. Louis Gonzaga presided over Congress. He replied to the President in substance, that every question of domestic policy shrunk into insignificance compared with the invasion of the country on the Rio Bravo; that the Mexican who should think of aught else than the injustice and treachery with which their soil was trampled, and the necessity of avenging their outraged honor, had no right to claim a share in their patriotic devotion.

"On the 18th permission was granted to Paredes to place himself at the head of troops and proceed to join the army of the North.—Gonzalez Arevalo was to leave the capital on the 19th, in command of the advance of the forces of Paredes. Gen. Mejia was in the actual command of the army of the North, Arista having been ordered to Mexico, and Ampudia to remain at San Luis Potosi. [A paper of the 27th ult. says that Gen. Arevalo, instead of proceeding to the frontier, had marched for Guadalajara to put down the insurrection.]

"Gen. Bravo left Vera Cruz for the city of Mexico on the 24th, to discharge the functions of President in the absence of Paredes.

"The committees of Congress upon Foreign Relations and upon War made a joint report the 16th upon that part of the message of Paredes relating to the United States. The report recommends the passage of a bill declaring Mexico to be in a war with the U. States. We do not find that the bill had actually been passed.

[Note]

Thursday, July 30, 1846, Volume 47, Number 22, Page 2, Columns 6 and 7 Words: 371

ONE DAY LATER FROM THE ARMY.

From the New Orleans Times, July 20.

Steamship Alabama.—This vessel arrived here yesterday evening from Brazos Santiago, with advices one day later than those brought by the James L. Day. We learn that the court martial on Capt. Thornton terminated on the 15th ult.; and the general impression is, that he had been acquitted. The proceedings, however, will not be made public until they have been approved and confirmed by the President at Washington. One passage of his reported defence has been commented on with admiration by all in the camp at Matamoras. He said, that, in performance of the act for which he was tried—rashness or precipitancy, we believe—he "did not see the numbers of the enemy; all he saw was the Mexican flag waving over American soil, and he was willing to risk his own life in an attempt to cut it down!"

Dr. Daniel McPhail, Surgeon of the Tennessee Regiment, a native of Franklin, Tennessee, died on the evening of the 13th inst., and was buried with military honors the next day. He had been for some time in ill health.

It is said that there are some emissaries about Matamoras, endeavoring to induce such of the Mexican soldiers, who were wounded on the 8th and 9th May, and are recovered, to rejoin their regiments at Monterey.
The troops are in fine health, and eager for the campaign now opening. The river is falling rapidly from Reynosa downward. The 7th Infantry were supposed to be at Camargo on the 15th inst., and no doubt is expressed at the Col. HAY's command from San Antonio, had joined them there.

There have been no accounts from MCCULLOUGH's Rangers since they passed Reynosa (the 7th instant.) It is imagined, from the well known daring character of that officer, that he has penetrated as far as Monterey; either reconnoitering, or acting on the offensive, if he find the occasion tempting, or the disparity not too great in the force to which he may find himself opposed.

We are glad to hear of the rapid subsidence of the river; our army will now move with celerity.

The Alabama brought with her some soldiers in ill health, sent hither for a change of air, to accelerate their recovery. [HCH]

Thursday, July 30, 1846, Volume 47, Number 22, Page 2, Column 7 Words: 951

The following Proclamation has been issued by Gen. TAYLOR, and is published in both the English and Spanish languages, in the Matamoras papers:

APROCLAMATION

BY THE GENERAL COMMANDING THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To the People of Mexico—After many years of patient endurance, the United States are at length constrained to acknowledge that a war exists between our Government and the Government of Mexico. For many years our citizens have been subjected to repeated insults and injuries, our vessels and cargoes have been seized and confiscated, our merchants have been plundered, maimed, imprisoned, without cause, and without reparation.

At length your Government acknowledged the justice of our claims, and agreed by treaty to make satisfaction, by payment of several millions of dollars; but this treaty has been violated by your rulers, and the stipulated payments have been withheld. Our late effort to terminate all difficulties by peaceful negotiation, has been rejected by the Dictator PAREDES, and our Minister of peace, whom your rulers have agreed to receive, has been refused a hearing. He has been treated with indignity and insult, and PAREDES has announced that war exists between us. This war, thus first proclaimed by him, has been acknowledged, as an existing fact by our President and congress, with perfect unanimity, and will be prosecuted with vigor and energy against your army and rulers; but those of the Mexican people who remain neutral will not be molested.

Your government is in the hands of tyrants and usurpers. They have abolished your State Governments, they have overthrown your federal constitution, they have deprived you of the right of suffrage, destroyed the liberty of the press, despoiled you of your arms, and reduced you to a state of absolute dependence upon the power of a military Dictator. Your army and rulers extort from the people by grievous taxation, by forced loans, and military seizures, the very money which sustains the usurpers in power. Being disarmed, you were left defenceless an easy prey to the savage Camanches, who not only destroy your lives and property, but drive you into captivity, more horrible than death itself, your wives and children.

It is your military rulers who have reduced you to this deplorable condition. It is the tyrants, and their corrupt and cruel satellites, gorged with the peoples treasure, by which you are thus oppressed and impoverished, some of whom have boldly advocated a monarchical government, and would place a European Prince upon the throne of Mexico.—We come to overthrow the tyrants who have destroyed your liberties, but we come to make no war upon the people of Mexico, nor upon any form of free government they may choose to select for themselves. It is our wish to see you liberated from despots, to drive back the savage Camanches, to prevent the renewal of their assaults, and to compel them to restore you from captivity, your long lost wives and children.

Your religion, your altars and churches, the property of your churches and citizens, the emblems of your faith and its ministers shall be protected, and remain inviolate. Hundreds of our army, and hundreds of thousands of our people, are members of the Catholic Church. In every State, and in nearly every city and village of our Union, Catholic Churches exist, and the Priests perform their holy functions, in peace and security, under the sacred guarantee of our Constitution. We come among the people as friends and republican brethren, and all who receive us as such, shall be protected, whilst all who are seduced into the army of your Dictator, shall be treated as enemies. We shall want form you nothing but food for our army, and for this you shall always be paid in cash the full value.

It is the settled policy of your tyrants to deceive you in regard to the policy and character of our Government and people. These tyrants fear the example of our free institutions, and constantly endeavor to misrepresent our purposes, and inspire you with hatred for your republican brethren of the American Union. Give us but the opportunity to undeceive you, and you will soon learn that all the representations of PAREDES were false, and were only made to induce you to consent at the establishment of a despotic Government.
In your struggle for liberty, with the Spanish Monarchy, thousands of our countrymen risked their lives and shed their blood in your defence. Our own Commodore, the gallant PORTER, maintained in triumph your flag upon the ocean, and our Government was the first to acknowledge your independence. With pride and pleasure we enrolled your name on the list of independent Republics, and sincerely desired that you might in peace and prosperity enjoy all the blessings of free government.

Success on the part of your tyrants against the army of the Union is impossible, but if they could succeed, it would only be to enable them to fill your towns with their soldiers, eating out your substance, and harassing you with still more grievous taxation. Already they have abolished the liberty of the Press, as the first step towards the introduction of that Monarchy, which it is their real purpose to proclaim and establish.

Mexicans, we must treat as enemies and overthrow the tyrants, who whilst they have wronged and insulted us, have deprived you of your liberty, but the Mexican people who remain neutral during the contest shall be protected against the military despots by the Republican Army of the Union.

Z. TAYLOR.

August 6, 1846 MGv47i23p2c1 Two Days Later from Mexico

Correspondence of the Mobile Tribune. Pensacola, July 25, 1846. The U.S. Frigate Raritan, Com. Gregory, arrived here yesterday from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the 17th inst, bringing two days later dates than received by the Princeton. The Vera Cruz papers of the 15th and 16th, publish the news of the Oregon Treaty under the head of “Very Important News.” The papers state that in consequence of the Treaty, the Mexican people are called on to make increased efforts to save the country from the rapacity of the robbers on the “del Norte.” They remind the Mexicans of the manner in which the French were driven out of Spain, after Madrid and the cities of the country were in possession of the enemy. This was done by a guerrilla warfare, in which small parties of the enemy were murdered wherever they were found. Paredes has not left the city of Mexico. It was found impossible to raise a body of even 5000 to follow him. It is the opinion of all well informed persons that there is nothing to prevent Gen. Taylor’s marching directly to the city of Mexico. There are no troops to oppose him. Gen. Scott’s ideas of the rainy season have caused much mirth among those reading in the neighborhood of the city of Mexico and Vera Cruz. There is no finer climate in the world than that of the highlands of Mexico which are reached near Monterey. Gen. Mora, the new commander of the Castle and city of Vera Cruz, who has succeeded the Vice President Bravo, has entered upon his duties. He has a body of several hundred men at work every morning. On the low sand beach, adjoining the castle, where he threw up additional breast works. About all the soldiers are expected at target firing. The guns are mostly of large caliber, and the shot to a great distance. The American squadron is anchored under Green Island. The pinion daily game that the Castle can only be taken by escalade or boarding as Jack calls it. This the sailors of the squadron are eager to undertake. The British steamer arrived Vera Cruz on the 11th, without Santa Ana, and the best informed now say there in no probability of his coming there at all. The yellow fever is making great havoc among the troops both in the Castle and in the city. The soldiers bring mostly from the interior are not accustomed to the climate of the city, and suffer in health. Vera Cruz could easily be taken with two or three thousand men, who could land either north or south of it. At present the city nearly deserted. Excellent health prevails throughout the squadron, the Raritan excepted, on board who is the scurvy prevails to a great extent. This is caused by the great length of time which this vessel has been at sea. She has been two years and six months on commission, and all that time has been passed between the tropic and under a vertical sun.

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p1c4 Dentists

A letter written from Matamoras suggest that Dentists visit the fields of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, for the very fine teeth of the Mexican dead. Who but a Yankee would have ever thought of such a speculation?

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p1c7 Expenses of the Mexican War

When the present war with Mexico commenced, we believe that there were in reality but comparatively few people, who “counted cost.” It was all “glory,” and very little attention paid to anything else. The result will prove a useful lesson. A letter from New Orleans published in the National Intelligencer says, that “the expense with which this war is carried on is truly enormous. Before the summer is over, there will probably have been from one or two millions of dollars paid for the purchase to employment of services. A customary charter for a steamboat to run down from N.
August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p2c4 From Mexico

Latest from the Army. The steamship New York, Captain Phillips, arrived at New Orleans on the 1st inst., from Brazos Santiago and Galveston, having left the former place on the on the 29th and the latter on the 30th ultimo. We learn that Mr. Lumedra and his party reached Point Isabel on the 24th ult. and the next day proceeded to Matamoras. The American Flag of the 24th, has the following paragraphs; A gentleman arrived in town yesterday, from Monclova, direct, and in a remarkably short time, passing through Candala, Tiascala, Wills Altama, Sabinas, Mier, Camargo and Reynosa, and states that ever thing was perfectly quiet on the route, and that the people are expecting the approach of the troops. Sever fine artillery companies had arrived from the seaboard before the departure of the troops will be committed to the charge of Major Clark; his command as Military Governor will be sustained by four companies of artillery, with a sufficiency of volunteers to maintain his position. We understand that the command of Featherston's Regiments are not recognized by the Department as being in the service at all. When the Empressario arrived at the New Orleans Barracks on the 1st inst., seven days from Brazos Santiago, with Capt. (Gen.) Dosha's company of Alabama volunteers, who have been ordered to New Orleans to be mustered out of the service according to instructions from the War Department. Six other companies from Alabama, all the Louisiana Volunteers and the St. Louis Legion, six months men, are to be mustered out of service by the same authority.Cols. Peyton's and Featherston's Regiments are not recognized by the Department as being in the service at all. When the Empressario left, most of the regular troops had gone to Camargo, where it is probably all are by this time. Unless General Taylor has been detained, on account of the withdrawal of so many volunteers from the army, to make new arrangements regarding the disposition of the remaining ones, he has joined the regular army ere this at Camargo. The Texan troops were about taking up their march for Mier. Sever fine artillery companies had arrived from the seaboard before the Empressario left. The following paragraphs are from the N.O. Courier of 2d inst. Governor Henderson was lying dangerously ill at Matamoras at the latest dates very little hope was, if any, entertained of his recover. We are indebted to a gentleman direct from Camargo for the following information. He informs us that the Rancheros are all back or getting to their homes as fast as possible and going to work on their ranches again, having abandoned the idea of conquering the U. States, and subjecting it to their own will. If such is the case Canales and Cerrabajal must have but few troops under their command--report says they have none, as their forces were made up entirely of rancheros. Rumor says there are not at this time at Monterey more than one thousand or fifteen hundred men, but that they are fortifying it as fast as possible. It is understood that it is the intention of the Commanding General to remove his quarter, together with 3d and 4th regiments to Camargo, by the first opportunity. We understand that the command of Matamoras, after the departure of the troops will be committed to the charge of Major Clark; his command as Military Governor will be sustained by four companies of artillery, with a sufficiency of volunteers to maintain his position.

[MSM]

August 13, 1846 MGv47i24p2c6 Capt. Mays own description of his charge

Having had the pleasure of a long conversation with Capt. May, we finally asked him to give us a description of his charge, that the might get at the exact particulars. The gallant Captain, twisted about his long beard, evidently somewhat confused, and after considerable hesitation said: “Why you see the fact is, any of the boys, would have given their lives to have had the chance to have charged the batteries, only I was the lucky one in getting the order. After the old man gave the order, I rode down the road, my men following of course, where we met Ridgely, he blazed away, and let me pass, and we just rode over the guns, and that is all about it.” N.O. Tropic.

[MSM]
Amicable Adjustment of the Oregon Question. The subscriber appears before the public, his friends and customer, not to dispute the "right of tile to the whole of Oregon," but show his entire willingness to arbitrate and amicably adjust the great question. Having perfect confidence in the good judgment of the Public, he, for one, is anxious that they come forward and make such disposition of this all absorbing matter as they think best, whether it be on the parallel of 49, or 54 degrees 49 minutes.

[MSM]

August 20, 1846 MGv47i25p2c3 From Mexico

The Southern mail has brought New Orleans papers to the 6th and 7th instant, (says the Baltimore Patriot of the 10th inst.) which contains later accounts from the army, by the steamer Alabama from the Brazos, whence she sailed on the 2d. The following extracts of letter are published in the Washington Union of last night:

"Camargo, (Mexico) July 23.

"We are furnishing transportation for army and securing supplies of forage on the route to Monterey. We have contracted for 1,000 to 2,000 miles," (another letter fixes it positively at 1,500) "with the parking equipments complete; and these, with the 500 wagons expected here, will be ample for the marching columns. A large portion of the 19,000 men of the corps d'arme will be left at the different depots and entrepots, from Brazos Santiago to Chias, about 60 miles from this place on the route to Monterey.

"The troops are now fast arriving here in our steamboats; and the General will, in all probability, move forward from here about the middle of next month, (August). Now comes the commencement of those operations which will require all the capacity, skill, and energy of our General to accomplish. The great difficulties of invading Mexico begin here. So far, every thing has favored Gen. Taylor, and he has not only a most enviable reputation, but his good fortune has become a proverb. I hope, of course, for his further success; but, in order to secure it, the most careful combinations of every kind, preparatory to the march, are absolutely necessary. Too much haste may prove as great an evil as a faulty tardiness. It takes time for the requisite arrangements for the transportation required for so many men, suddenly collected here. Meanwhile the General is impatient of the least delay, and the , and the officers of our department are incessantly occupied in preparations.

"Our news from the interior leave us in doubt whether Paredes, at the head of the army, will succeed or not in assembling a force sufficient to oppose us. He is said to have called out the male population en masse and has strong positions to defend; but it is doubtful whether we shall have another battle in Mexico."

[MSM]

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p1c6 The Two Million Bill

The application of the President to Congress for two millions of dollars to be used in negotiations with Mexico was made under circumstances too remarkable to escape expected comment. It is not stated that any proposal to negotiate has come from Mexico, it does not appear that Mexico is at all disposed to sue for peace; we are not told that any event has happened recently to change the aspect of our relations with Mexico. The president, however, introduces his Message by inviting the attention of Congress to the propriety of making an appropriation to provide for any expenditure which it may be necessary to make in advance for the purpose of settling all our differences with the Mexican Republic. "I has generally been supposed that the appropriations already made to thee amount of twenty millions of more for the prosecution of the war beyond the Ro Grand, the levying of twenty or thirty thousand men armaments and munitions of war sent to the South West, the marching of our troops towards Monterey, and the presence of our squadrions in the Gulf and Pacific were all intended for no other purpose than that of "settling all our difficulties with the Mexican Republic." But the two millions specially asked for were to be used in connection with another system of operations. The appropriation is not required as an addition item for carrying on the military movements of our forces. The President wants it for purposes of a negotiation which he himself is to open, since Mexico will not; he looks to a prospective treaty which is to secure to its certain portions of territory. "It might be inconvenient," says the Message, "for the Mexican Government to wait for the whole sum, the payment of which may be stipulated by this treaty, until it can be ratified by our Senate, or an application to carry it in to effect made by Congress. Indeed, the necessity for this delay may defeat the object altogether." The sum of the whole matter seems to be that if we cannot "conquer a peace" with Mexico we are to but one. In the event that this shall fail to accomplish a successful war, gold is to be tried. The Message indeed says that this money is not be used as secret service money, but to be accounted for like other expenditures; yet if that were really so, what need of cash? A stipulation on behalf of the Government to pay any sum agreed upon would surely be sufficiently to satisfy the Mexican Government, if that Government was disposed to treat at all in the manner indicated by the Message. The Union is not yet bankrupt; its credit is not wholly gone, nor in so critical a condition that Mexico need distrust it. Why would it be "inconvenient for the Mexican Government to wait for the whole sum" which might be agreed to be paid by any treaty likely to be negotiated between the parties? Congress, will be in session again in less than four months. A strange notion indeed! The President assumes that we are to pay money to Mexico on the conclusion of treaty with her, and that she cannot wait until the next meeting of Congress for the whole of it. He therefore wants some ready money in hand as earnest of the balance--a sort of pledge or security in advance that we are able to pay and may be trusted. This money is asked for while open war is raging between the two countries. Our fleets are blockading the ports of Mexico, our armies are marching towards her capital. The Mexicans are preparing for defence, and have not initiated the slightest disposition to yield to our demands or to solicit peace. All these facts and circumstances mark the Message as an extraordinary one. The appropriation was not granted. The modest assurance with which the President asked the confidence of the two Houses was not warranted by his previous course. We are inclined to the belief that he does not possess the confidence of a majority in either House.-Balt. Amer.

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p2c4 From Mexico

From the N. Orleans papers of the 24th, inst. The steamers New York, Of New Orleans, left Boston on the 31st inst.
Gen. Taylor, quietly left Matamoras for Camargo early on the morning of the 5th, in the steamer Whiteville, accompanied by about one half of the Texan Regiment of Infantry, and a few regulars. An order had been issued from Headquarters, prohibiting the further introduction of spirituous liquors into Matamoras, and specifying that the vending of the same should cease on the 15th inst. A skirmish had taken place near Camargo between a party of about 600 Indians and some 75 or 80 Rangers, on account of depredations committed by the former, in which the Indians lost some twenty men, and the Rangers two, the latter party re-capturing 150 horses. According to recent private advices from Mexican citizens living at Monterey, to their friends in Matamoras, there are in that vicinity about 4,000 soldiers, who can be concentrated on very short notice at Monterey. This comprises all the Mexican forces this side of the Sierra Madre. Gen. Taylor’s advices, which are not, however, of quite so recent a date, state that there are only about 200 workers working on the fortifications at the city in question. Editorial Correspondence of the Picayune. Matamoras, August 4th, 1846. Gen. Taylor and staff leave here to day for Camargo, and all the troops are to leave by about the 10th inst. Gen. Twiggs is left to superintend the movement of the troops now here, and those that are to arrive, for a while at least. He is in excellent health, and was never looking better. Col. Clarke, of the 8th Infantry will be left at this place in command, after all the troops have been forwarded, and will have two companies of artillery and one regiment of volunteers under him. Gen. Twiggs, with Capt. May’s four companies of dragoons, and Capt. Ridgely’s battery of artillery, will bring up the rear as the army moves forward. Col. Hay’s regiment of mounted volunteers and Col.
Johnson’s regiment of foot--Texans--are to march tomorrow. The “Gaines Rangers” have joined Col. Hay’s regiment, and will leave with it. All the regular troops now remaining here, except Capt. May’s and Ridgely’s commands, are also ordered to march tomorrow. It is expected that the army will not move from Camargo before the 25th inst. The brig Orleans, of and for New Orleans, struck on the bar in coming out, with a pilot on board, unshipped her rudder and went ashore on the north breaker. She had on board sixty Louisiana volunteers, who were all saved. The vessel went to pieces the next night. The bark Condor, hence, arrived on the 6th and sailed on the 7th from New York with 201 recruits, infantry and dragoons. Ship Sophia Walker arrived on the 7th; bark L. Welch, hence, arrived same day; both had Illinois volunteers. Brigs Tasso, Apalachicola, schrs. M.L. McCrendy and Heroine, sailed on the 5th, 6th, and 7th for this port, with volunteers on board.

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p2c4 Important from Vera Cruz, via Havana

A letter from Mier (Mexico) to the N.O. Picayune, dated July 31st, 1846, states that Capt. Vinton’s command entered that place without the least show of opposition from the Mexicans. The town contains a population of about 6,000-- Capt. V. had but 93 men. The Washington Union publishes dispatches from Com. Conner of as late a date as July 30.
The crews of the different ships of the Squadron continue well. He speaks of the internal revolution in Mexico, and mentions several Departments in the Country who have declared against Paredes and in favor of Santa Anna. He thinks a change of rulers will be favorable to a restoration of peace between Mexico and this Country, and that proposals of that character will be offered. Many of the most influential men in Mexico are in favor of it. Gen. Bravo on his arrival at Mexico declined acting as President, but Congress returned his resignation and he has accepted the appointment.

August 27, 1846 MGv47i26p2c5 Later Still

The ship Alclaide, Adams, sailed from Havana on the 9th August, and arrived at New York on Thursday. A special messenger from Vera Cruz cam passenger in the steam packet to Havana, with letters to Santa Ana, informing him that the citizens and military of Vera Cruz had declared for him. Santa Ana, Almonte and Rejon, immediately took passage in the British steamer Arab, and proceeded.

September

October
The extracts which we publish in this morning’s American from a letter of an Artillery Officer of our Army in Mexico to a gentleman in this city, state distinctly that when Gen. TAYLOR entered into the eight week’s armistice with AMPUDIA he had the positive assurance of the latter, not only that Santa Fe was captured and California possessed by the Americans, but also that Commissioners of the United States were then in Mexico to arrange the terms of a treaty. Mexican insincerity and craft will be better understood by and by. Reliance hereafter on SANTA ANNA’s protestations will hardly dupe even Mr. POLK again; nor will the representations of Mexican commanders be henceforth taken by our Generals without many gains of allowance.

Nevertheless the justification of the Monterey capitulation does not rest upon the belief which Gen. TAYLOR may have entertained of AMPUDIA’s declaration; it is complete without supposing such belief. With six thousand men at the commencement of the attack on Monterey, Gen. Taylor found himself at the end of the third day weakened by a loss of one tenth of his number – possibly more. If he had determined to continue the battle no doubt he would have taken the town, of which one half was already in his possession. But it would have been by a succession of street fights obstinate and bloody, the Mexicans defending house after house, street after street. – Gen. TAYLOR could not afford to lose any more men. With his force diminished by such loss as the renewal of the fight at Monterey would involve; with the necessity of leaving behind him a strong garrison in that place; it would have been impossible for him to advance upon Saltillo. He could not advance in any event without reinforcements. The capitulation gave him time to wait for reinforcements from the Rio Grande and by the junction of Gen. WOOL’s division. If negotiations were really going on for peace between our Government and that of Mexico, consequent upon the restoration of Santa Anna, - a thing which he might reasonably infer not only from [...] given by his own Government, - the armistice concluded with the Mexicans would be favorable to such negotiations.

Some of the details of the letter in our columns, already referred to, present another point worthy of attention. RIDGELY’s pieces of Flying Artillery were too light to make any impression upon the fortified works at Monterey. The way in which that officer is in the habit of serving his pieces gives a certain assurance that if they could have been made effective against the Mexican works he would have made them so. But every body knows that light artillery of that sort is not intended for attacks upon fortifications. The attempt was made at Monterey mainly to see whether the enemy’s works were really as strong as they appeared to be. The fact that the attempt was made at all, proves the more serious fact, that Gen. TAYLOR has not been furnished with artillery adapted to the attack of such fortified places as Monterey.

And the Union officially explains that the New York banks have declined to buy the treasury notes at less than six per cent., but that several propositions for loans on terms less than six and approaching nearer to five and two-fifths per cent., have been made by individuals, and declined by the Secretary, it is now, we presume, seeing he could do no better, determined upon retailing the notes, and to fix the interest on them at 52.5 per cent. As an inducement for purchasers, it is announced that the notes, both in the land office and custom-house, as well before as after maturity, and must be regarded in the light, for many uses, of specie bearing an interest; and at the rate now proposed, we cannot doubt, (adds the Union,) that there will be a large demand for these notes. “

Here we have it at last – a government paper currency, irredeemable in specie, but receivable in paying debts to the government. The notes are to pass from hand to hand – all the restrictions which the Secretary heretofore put upon their transfer, and their payment are abolished – the endorsement of the party buying them being all that is required to change their ownership.

We cannot say whether the sale of these notes will be as large as Mr. Walker expects; but we rather suspect that the peddling them out in the manner he proposes, will not give them a character in the market much above that of other irredeemable shinplasters, and that the sales will not be quite as active, as that of “wet goods” saved from some wreck, and announced to “be sold at ruinous prices. “

And this is the work of the Sub. Treasury, hard-money, paper hating administration! – When Mr. Polk came into office we were promised that we should have nothing but specie. We get nothing but rags – not banks rags – redeemable in coin – but shinplasters, intended for circulation, and of a character similar o those issued by individuals in the times of the Van Buren experiments on the currency, which where “receivable in the undersigned. ” – Balt. Pat
(Baltimore Patriot)

Thursday, November 5, 1846 MG46i47n36p2c1 238 words

The Last Words of Colonel Watson

A member of the Baltimore Battalion, writing from Monterey to his parents in Baltimore in speaking of the death of the gallant Watson, says: -

In a desperate charge against one of the Mexican Forts he fell mortally wounded. He handed his sword to Lieut. Bowie, and died with a smile on his face, that indicted more than a tongue can tell. He died a brave man and a gallant soldier. The last words which he uttered were: - “MEN YOUR GENERAL LEADS YOU – WHO WOULD NOT FOLLOW?” These were uttered, seeing an officer pass who, it is presumed, he, in the agonies of death, took for Gen’l Taylor.

I deeply regret that Col. Watson was not spared to enjoy the victory with us. Poor fellow, he is gone, and I hope his country will take care of his wife and children. It will be a great loss to them. So hot was the battle, that we were unable to take the body of our lamented Colonel from the street, until nearly 48 hours had elapsed. We buried him in a brick house within 400 yards of where he first made a charge with the Battalion. A very singular circumstance occurred while the man was in the act of preparing the grave: a ball came and took his head off; and instead of burying one, we had to have another dirge for the poor soldier. Such is war.

Thursday, November 5, 1846 MG46i47n36p3c4 1,038 words

The Mexican War – Santa Anna

The public anxiety at this time is intense throughout the country, respecting the future operations and fate of our gallant army in Mexico. The most implicit confidence is everywhere felt in the gallantry, prudence, and eminent generalship of Gen. TAYLOR, but at the same time all know that he cannot overcome impossibilities. The accounts which we have from Monterey, show the most unbounded confidence in Gen. TAYLOR, by the army under his command; indeed the feeling of attachment amounts almost to idolatry – But these accounts do not present the same confidence of our soldiers in their Government – they are on the contrary, bitterly denunciatory of it, and charge the Administration at Washington with an utter disregard of their comfort in every respect. It is by no means an agreeable task for us to record these statements, but an act of justice to the gallant and patriotic army periling so much in the cause of their Country, demands that the people of their own Country should know their condition. We do not know what orders the Government has sent on to Gen. TAYLOR respecting the Armistice, or whether he has orders to take up immediately his line of march against Saltillo, before he is strongly reinforced or not. We have reports that SANTA ANNA has arrived at Saltillo with a strong force, where he is joined with the force of , and that they are fortifying the town with great industry. If this statement be true, Gen. TAYLOR will have a most formidable foe to encounter, us the city and neighborhood is thickly inhabited, and which of course will take up arms with the regular forces. We most devoutly trust that if Gen. TAYLOR should meet the foe, that his arm will be so strengthened, that the blow which he gives shall tell, and be it possible, a termination to the war. It is useless now to be trifling with this war – our Government should act vigorously, instead of talking so much. The cost of this war will be tremendous, if continued much longer – at the rate it has been progressing, it will take in all probability two hundred and fifty or three hundred millions of dollars to conclude it. – But now is not the time to pause and count dollars and cents – the war must be ended, and the Government should bring into the Mexican field all of their disposable regular force, and the whole of the volunteer force authorized by the Act of Congress. This is the only way in which the war can now be concluded. It
It is well known that Gen. SANTA ANNA is shrewd, calculating, cunning man, and that the state of political parties in his Country, is the main reason why he is now at the head of the Army. His last [...] declining the proffered dictatorship, and declaring that he aspired to no higher honor, than to lead the Armies of the Republic against “the daring and perfidious foe,” and drive him from the soil of his Country, is all talk and a hollow show of affection and patriotism. His whole soul is bent upon a restoration to power, and a triumph over those who drove him from the head of Government, sent him into exile in a foreign Country, from which he was enabled to return through the machinations of our Government, under the guise of a friend to the restoration of peace. SANTA ANNA is now at the head of the Army, and his great rival and deadly foe, Gen. PAREDES, an escaped refugee in a foreign country. He calculates now that successful or defeated, it will be the means of once more placing him at the helm of the Government.

The question has been frequently asked, but those who ought and do know all about it have not seen proper to enlighten the country upon the subject: - By whose permission .icus Santa Anna allowed to pass into Mexico, spite of the blockading Squadron? The fact is known that the Steamer carrying him in was boarded by an officer of our Navy, who saw and conversed privately with him, and satisfactorily of course, as the Steamer was permitted to pass on her way, and now we find the Mexican Army furnished with a powerful and popular leader, who at the head of thirty thousand men, is marching against Gen. TAYLOR. Our Government most undoubtedly, from all the circumstances, have had some negotiations going on with SANTA ANNA, in which the Mexican Chief must have promised his influence to put an end to the war spirit in Mexico, provided our government would facilitate his safe return home. He was also to have had two millions of dollars, which it will be remembered Mr. Polk asked for near the close of Congress, which he in all probability would have got, had not "Honest John Davis" of Massachusetts spoken the Bill to death. The "Union" and the Democratic papers generally throughout the country at the time, most unmercifully belabored Mr. D., charging him with a want of patriotism, &c. &c. But now we hear not a word from them upon that point; in fact but for "Honest John's" speech. "SANTA ANNA" would have had our two millions of money, to have sustained in part the Army which he is now leading against us. It is said that this step was taken by Mr. Polk through the advice of Gen. HOUSTON of Texas, which seems odd enough (if true) after his experience in the treachery of SANTA ANNA in all his dealings with Texas. But Congress will meet in a few weeks and, doubtless, their first inquires will be, How came SANTA ANNA at the head of the Mexican forces, when the coast was blockaded by an American Squadron in which he was, was boarded by [...] Other from that Squadron? The Administration may have trouble with this matter. – New Verrons

[AMB]

Thursday, November 5, 1846 MG46i47n36p4c4 4,345 words

From Mexico, Latest from the Rio Grande, Arrival of the Streamer Galveston

We cut the following interesting particulars from the New Orleans Commerical [sic] Times, the Delta and the Bee of the 21st ult:

The steamship Galveston, Capt. Wright, arrived here yesterday, from Brasos Santiago the 14th, and Galveston on the 18th ult. By her we have received abundance of details in our own correspondence, the Matamoras Flag, and the Galveston papers, of the movements of our troops under Gen. Taylor, their condition, casualties, etc., etc., since the capitulation of Monterey, which we proceed to lay before our readers. The following is the order of the day issued by Gen. Taylor, after the capitulation of Monterey:

Head Quarters, army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, Sept. 27, 1846.

The commanding general has the satisfaction to congratulate the army under his command upon another signal triumph over the Mexican forces. Superior to us in numbers, strongly fortified, and with an immense preponderance of artillery, they have yet been driven from point to point until forced to sue for terms of capitulation. Such terms have been granted as were considered due to the gallant [sic] defence of the town and to the liberal policy of our government.

The General begs to return his thanks of his commanders, and to all his officers and men, both of the regular and volunteer forces, for the skill, the courage and perseverance with which they have overcome manifold difficulties, and finally achieved a victory shedding luster upon the American arms.

A great result has been obtained, but not without the loss of many gallant and accomplished officers and brave men. – The army and the country will deeply sympathise [sic] with the families and friends of those who have thus sealed their devotion with their lives. By order of Major Gen. TAYLOR.

[Signed] W. W. S. Bliss, As't. Adj. General,

The Capitulation, &c. – It is said it was the destructive effects of the mortar that first determined Ampudia to capitulate. – It was towards evening on the 23rd, when the mortar, with much labor, had been planted in the cemetery, near the cathedral, and within reach of the Plaza. The first shell, which was discharged about 7 P. M., fell close to the entrance of the cathedral, where the priest was performing mass, and its explosion spread such destruction around, that Ampudia, being entreated by the priest and others, immediately wrote a letter to Gen. Taylor, asking terms. This letter was dated 9 o’clock, P. M., on the 23rd, but Col. Moiano, the bearer, did not reach Gen. Taylor, till the next morning near 9 o’clock. He soon returned with Gen. Taylor’s demand for an unconditional surrender before 12 o’clock; to which, it seems, Ampudia would have assented; but being dissuaded by his officers, he requested a conference, which was granted. It is stated that Gen. Worth privately expressed his opinion to Gen. T., that the terms demanded were too severe and humiliating, and thought that Gen. T. could afford to be more liberal. At the conference, however, Gen. Taylor still insisted upon his terms with some pertinacity, but finally agreed to leave everything with three commissioners on either side.

The Relative Forces, Losses, &c. – We are assured that Ampudia had from 14000 to 16000 troops – the former is the lowest number given by any one. They had about 50 pieces of artillery worked with a degree of skill and precision unsurpassed by any nation. They were also in a strongly fortified town. The streets leading into the town, to the Plaza, were all either closed up with heavy and strong walls of solid masonry, requiring great labor, and executed in the most workman-like manner, or these streets were protected with batteries of heavy ordnance, planted so as to effectually cover their entrance.

The American army did not exceed 5000, and 700 of these were reserved as a camp guard, to protect the camp from forces of Mexican cavalry, so that we had but 4300 men in the engagement. Nearly all our most effective ordnance had been left behind. There was only the Flying Artillery, which in order to do much execution, had to be exposed to a most destructive fire from the enemy’s heavy batteries. Add two 24 pound howitzers and our whole force is given. This shows a disparity of more than three to one, and vast advantages against our army in position, fully equal to the inequality in numbers.

The loss of our army is 561 in killed and wounded, 41 of whom were officers. – Major Lear, 3d Infantry, who was reported severely wounded, is fast recovering.

Killed and Wounded. – The Picayune says:

"Capt. Owen (formerly Lieutenant) of the Baltimore Battalion, left Monterey on the 6th instant and we are indebted to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded. Our correspondent, writing on the 20th ult., makes the loss a little less, but it had not been ascertained to him for many interesting details. He informs us that the American loss in the three actions is set down at 561, killed and wounded.

The following is an extract from an interesting letter of Mr. Kendall, dated Monterey, Sept. 29.

Speaking of wounded comrades reminds me of poor Thomas. He was one of the most daring spirits in McCullock’s company, and had his horse wounded in the charge the enemy’s lancers made upon us on the morning of the 21st. On the following morning, while storming the battery on the height overlooking the Bishop’s Palace, he was mortally wounded, and after suffering incredibly died on the morning of the 24th. A musket ball shattered his hip joint, at the same time that the brave Capt. Gillispie was shot through, and the two are now quietly resting side by side on the height where they received their death wounds – Mount Gillispie as it has been appropriately named by Gen. Worth.

Of the thousands of Mexican soldiers that occupied this Gibraltar of a town a few days since, not as many hundreds now remain. At one time so confident were Ampudia and his generals of success, they sent Romana with fifteen hundred or two thousand cavalry in rear of General Taylor, to cut off his retreat. The ‘redeeming’ game of the Texans and regulars on the afternoon of the 23rd – digging through and under houses, taking inch by inch, but never giving one – and then the close proximity of the 24-pound mortar so successfully worked by Major Monroe and Lieut. Lovell – all combined to intimidate the Mexicans to a degree that induced them to sue for terms. Shells from the mortar fell and exploded all around the great Cathedral; bad one entered that establishment, filled as it was with ammunition, every house on the main Plaza would have been riven to fragments, and the loss of life would have been fearful. To spare the shedding of so much blood, and so terrible an injury of property, were some of the main causes that induced Gen. Taylor to offer the Mexican commander the terms he did.

I saw Ampudia as he left town for Saltillo on the morning of the 26th – rode along in his escort for a mile or two. The base and lying wretch – for every page in his black history proves him such – looked crest-fallen, nervous, and timid to a degree. He was fearful lest some of the Texan rangers, many of whom had deep wrongs still to avenge, might shoot him from the way side; and as he rode through the encampment, situated directly on his route, he could not conceal his fears. – They allowed him to pass, however, without even a cry or shout of exultation.

Opinions are various in camp as to whether the Mexicans will now offer peace, or make a stout resistance at Saltillo, a larger portion. I believe in clinging to the latter opinion. A Mexican who arrived from that place yesterday reports that they have already commenced fortifying it on an extensive scale; but this should be taken merely as a rumor or story of a Mexican – the most unreliable information conceivable. Again, a great many are discontented at the terms given the Mexicans, and think they will certainly fight again after being let off so easily. Had the battle continued on the 24th three hours longer the Mexicans would undoubtedly have been on their knees crying and begging for their lives. A terrible carnage would have ensued had not Ampudia sent in proposals for a surrender of the town, for his forces were huddled, if I can use such a term; and all this General Taylor well knew. To carry out the known conciliatory policy of our Government, however, appears to have been accordance with his instructions, his object – and this should relieve him from all censure in the matter. For myself, having some knowledge of Mexican character, I believe the whole policy of our Government is, and had been wrong for years. – Shower any quantity of magnanimity upon this people and it is entirely thrown away – they neither feel nor appreciate it. An inherent pride, which grows upon them every step in a downward and disgraceful career, causes them to look with a pretended scorn upon every offer of generous forbearance in their adversity, and as well might Van Amburg attempt to conciliate his tigers and hyenas by choice bits of meat and love pats on the head as these people by acts of kindness. The policy has been tried all summer, and the effects of its working has been shown by rascally extortions on the part of those of whom our Government has attempted to purchase provisions, and by every exertion on the part of the military to cut our Army in pieces when it beleaguered this place about. But enough of this for the present – a word to two of news, such a I have to offer.

The two Texas regiments, under Cols. Hays and Woods, will probably return home in the course of a week, and should hostilities recommence fresh regiments, mounted on the best horses that can be procured, will at once be raised.

An express has come in, stating, that, Gen. Wool, with 3500 men, was to leave San Antonio yesterday for Chihuahua. - What in the name of all that is reasonable so large a force is going that direction for, is more than I can make out. That whole section is now in the hands of the Camanches [sic], as it were, and the difficulty of moving so large a number of men, when one quarter of the force is more than is necessary to subjugate any army now there or that can be sent, looks to me as almost insurmountable [sic]. With not double the number, Gen. Taylor has marched upon one of the strong holes of the country and driven off an army complete in all it appointments – If Gen. Wool goes to Chihuahua with the number stated, it seems to me that he will have no other enemies to contend with than the worst of all – hunger and suffering. I hope that he will march this way, where his services may really be needed.

Gen. Taylor is still encamped at the old ground, three miles from here – Gens. Worth and Smith are in town. The main part of the wounded officers are doing well. Gen. Butler is recovering, while Cols. McClung and Mitchell are also in a fair way.

Monterey Sept. 29, 5 o’clock, P. M.

An express rider has this moment arrived from Salinas, which place he left this morning. It is only a days ride this side of Saltillo, and he states on the authority of a Mexican, that Santa Anna arrived at that city yesterday morning or the evening previous, and at once commenced fortifying the place with vigor. He had no less than 13,000 men with him, which, added to those which left here under Ampudia, will swell his army to over 20,000 men. Report further has it, that he is to erect works and batteries close by the Riconada – the limits of our lines by the sixty day’s truce. If all this should prove true, the army may have bloodier work to do than ever. One thing is certain – Santa Anna was hourly expected here when Gen. Taylor arrived, and many think that Ampudia’s reason for wishing to retire was the fact that he found himself to a degree surrounded after the success of the second division, and was anxious to form a junction with his master on the best terms he could make.

Monterey, Sept. 25, 1846.

My Dear Sir – After a most obstinate and sanguinary conflict, which was continued from day to day for five days, Gen. Ampudia capitulated this city on the 24th inst. Our loss in killed and wounded, has been extremely severe, not less than 500, amongst whom are some of the most valuable officers of the regular army, as well as volunteers.

The 1st Regiment of Tennessee volunteers, commanded by Col. Campbell, suffered more severely, perhaps, than any other which was engaged during the siege, having had twenty-seven killed on the field, and seventy-seven wounded, some of them mortally, and many of them seriously, and this out of a force of only 378 men. Notwithstanding this tremendous loss, the regiment charged under the lead of its gallant colonel and other officers, and was the first regiment which stormed the fort, around the breastworks, and unfurled the stars and stripes upon its walls, amidst a perfect hail storm of balls which was pouring upon it.

These Mexican towns and fortresses are incredibly strong, and few men fight better from house tops, and behind stone walls or are more adroit in the use of stationary artillery than the Mexicans. In these actions Gen. Taylor had, all told, about 5000 men, while Gen. Ampudia’s force consisted of 10,500 infantry and cavalry, besides militia, rancheros, &c. Gen. Taylor had eighteen pieces, while Gen. Ampudia had forty-four pieces, thirty eight of which, with two standards of colors, are now in our possession.

Our Army arrived before Monterey the morning Saturday, the 19th inst. And about half at 8 o’clock, while reconnoitering the out works of the city, a ball discharged from a 12-punder struck Gen. Taylor and staff, and bounded with terrible velocity over his head, at which the old hero did not change a muscle or even bat his eye. This day, the 19th, was spent in making reconnaissances of the place and its various outposts, amidst a good deal of firing on the part of the Mexicans, from cannon and a short gun called an escopette, which carries a large ball to the distance of 500 or
On Sunday, the 20th, Gen. Worth was detached by Gen. Taylor, in command of the 2d division of the regular army (about 1500 strong) and Col. Hay's regiment of Texas Rangers, (consisting of 400 men,) with a view of turning the city and occupying the Saltillo road, for the purpose of cutting off the enemy's supplies and reinforcements, which were daily expected under Gen. Santa Anna. The division performed the march – making a road, filing ditches, &c. – a distance of about six or seven miles, and reached the vicinity of the enemy in the evening, about 5 o'clock, when the General, with an escort from Col. Hay's rangers, was fired on by the batteries placed on the heights, and also by a corps of the enemy's light troops, who were sent through a corn field to cut off his party.

From this time until the appearance of the white flag, on the evening of the 24th, the division of the Army commanded by Gen. Worth was incessantly engaged, and was ever successful – never for the moment hesitating or faltering – putting to rout the enemy's cavalry on the plains, driving his infantry through the chaparral and from the house-tops, scaling immense heights, capturing guns, and storming fortresses, which were not only deemed impregnable but which seemed to be almost inaccessible. And, best of all, these brilliant exploits were performed with the loss of fourteen killed and fifty-six wounded; and during the four days' contest there occurred not the slightest error or mistake on the part of the commanding General, nor was there at any time the least faltering or hesitancy on the part of the officers and men – regulars and volunteers – in executing his orders. Indeed, it is difficult to determine which is most worthy of admiration, the wisdom and energy displayed by the able and accomplished commander or the gallantry and ardor with which he was sustained by those under his command.

When the difficulties and apparently insuperable obstacles are considered, I venture the assertion that the series of successes obtained by the division under Gen. Worth's command, in the recent operations against Monterey, will bear a favorable comparison with the proudest achievements of the American arms. He was opposed by a greatly superior force, which was well served with artillery and posted upon the highest peaks of the Sierra Madre. He stormed heights, took three pieces of artillery, turned them on the enemy, and with these and the aid of one of his own pieces – which he contrived to place upon the summit which commands the famous Bishop's Palace eight hundred feet above the base of the mountain – united with the inestimable services rendered by the dauntless and invincible spirits who stormed these heights, he reduced the strong hold of the enemy and drove him into the city, upon which he turned the guns he had captured. He bivouacked his force for the night on the bleak mountain, and the next day, after bombarding the town, he conducted his forces into the streets amidst a shower of balls discharged at his person. He was seen everywhere, directing everything, driving the enemy from his batteries, forcing him from the street to street and house to house, until night ended the conflict. He maintained his position in the city, placed a ten-inch mortar in one of the strongly fortified squares, to direct which he placed that gallant and skillful officer, Maj. Monroe, with instructions to fire a shell (weighing ninety pounds) every half hour during the night. This duty was performed with terrible effect, almost every shell falling in the plaza, where the enemies' forces were collected to the number of 7000 or 8000 men. He had made every necessary preparation for pursuing his advantages the next day, even to placing some of his artillery on the tops of high buildings, which would command and sweep the house tops from which the enemy fought.

Such was the state of preparation when Gen. Ampudia capitulated the city, reflecting equal honor upon the military skill of the head which conceived, and the indomitable energy of the gallant spirits who executed the plan of operations.

Our most serious loss occurred on the 21st, when Gen. Taylor only intended to make a diversion in favor of Gen. Worth, who was engaged in the attack on the other side of the town, but owing to the ardor and impetuosity of the troops, they very soon became involved in a general engagement, which Gen. Taylor felt bound to sustain. This excess of courage involved melancholy consequences, but it is surely a most excusable weakness, if it be a weakness, to display an excess of ardor in the field of battle.

The volunteers from the different States behaved in the most handsome manner. They have won for the citizen soldier the admiration and applause of the officers and soldiers of the regular Army, who speak of their conduct in the highest terms of approbation and eulogy. Amongst the volunteers none have shown more conspicuously than the 1st Regiment of Texas mounted riflemen, commanded by that Chevalier Bavard, Col. J. C. Hays, better known as Jack Hays. This corps, from the Colonel to the private has fully sustained its former reputation. In the first affairs in which Gen. Worth's division was engaged on the morning of the 21st, Col. Hays, with several companies of his mounted riflemen, were thrown forward to open the ball, which he did most beautifully, encountering and shooting in the presence of the General the Colonel of dragoons who commanded the enemy's forces. In sealing heights, storming batteries, and clambering over walls and house-tops, the voice of the gallant Colonel and the reports of the unerring rifle of the Ranger, were ever heard in the van. The courage and constancy, and subordination of this corps, is the theme of admiration in the Army.

But my object is narrative and not eulogy. It is not necessary for me to go into detail in relation to the terms accorded to the Mexican Army in the capitulation, as you will have seen the articles or the substance thereof, published in the newspapers ere this reaches you. If any one not acquainted with the facts of the case should object that our commanding General had granted terms too favorable to the retiring Army, let it be remembered that our invincible little Army had already suffered severely in bearing the bosoms of our best citizens, and bravest officers, and soldiers, to the batteries of an unseen foe; that the city was still immensely strong in its defenses; that the Mexican Army was double that of our own; this Army was in possession of the strongest part of the city, each house of which is a fortress within itself; that each remaining street was barricaded and most of them defended by cannon; and that when driven from the city the Mexican Army possessed a fortress called the Citadel, of immense capacity, and great strength, to which the whole Army could have retired.
We have been exceedingly pained to observe the papers generally of the country teeming with accounts from the Army, derogatory to the military character, skill and bravery of Maj. Genl. BUTLER. We have never for a single moment believed that there was one word of truth in any of them, and as to angry words, &c., passing between him and Gen. TAYLOR, we are almost positively certain that no such occurrence ever took place. It is true the division under Gen. Worth, who were near his person, saw what occurred, and know that which I have stated to be substantially correct. You are not infer that I mean to intimate that the main army, under the command of Gen. Taylor, did not perform feats superior to any, and equally worthy of the applause and admiration of the country. Others well informed as to facts, and much better qualified for the duty, will no doubt give a detailed account of the operations of this portion of the army. Take the army altogether, I doubt whether a superior body of men ever rallied under the flag of our country.

 accounts from the Army of General Butler

The papers from the South and Eastern cities are filled with letters from Monterey, giving more minute and detailed accounts of the splendid victory of our troops. It is impossible for us to think of spreading the one-tenth part of these letters before our readers, in our columns, circumscribed as they are. Indeed if our columns were large and ample enough for them all, we should not publish many of them, as they are in many instances disgusting, and bearing upon their face unblushing falsehoods, and enough of self laudation and glorification to nauseate the stomach of the most gullible of mankind. But as public journalists, we are compelled to read them all, as great an infliction of punishment as the task may be, in order to find out what should be laid before our readers. We take great pleasure, however, in directing the attention of the reader to the letter of Col. Bailie Peyton, dated Sept. 25th 1846 – this letter will be read with great interest.

Accounts from the Army of General Butler

 accounts from the Army of General Butler

To have taken this work without a siege train, as we were, by assault, would have cost us very dearly. Independently of these considerations, our provisions were growing short and our ammunitions were quite limited. We were far removed from our supplies and reinforcements, while the enemy might have been reinforced at any moment. And lastly, the policy avowed by our Government does not inculcate the idea that this is to be a vindictive or exterminating was against the people of Mexico, but on the contrary to conquer a peace, or in other words to whip Mexico to her own satisfaction, obtain our just rights, and conclude a pence upon terms such as would be becoming in a great and magnanimous nation towards a weak and distracted Government. All this has in my opinion been accomplished, in as full, complete and ample a manner by the course pursued in the capitulation, as if we had stormed the citadel and put the whole army to the sword. This is, in my judgment, the last battle which will be fought in the Mexican war. Gen. Ampudia, in urging as pacific course on Gen. Taylor, stated repeatedly that he knew that Gen. Taylor, stated repeatedly that he knew that Gen. Santa Anna was disposed to peace; that he was well assured that the course adopted would lead to peace between the two countries; that his object was to save the effusion of blood and the honor of his Government.

But if the war is to be prosecuted, we are in the possession of one of the strongest, most healthy and beautiful places in Mexico; from which, when our reinforcements and supplies arrive, our Army cannot be expelled by any force which Mexico will be able to send against it. We have taken arms and ammunition with which we can act offensively or defensively, according to the course of events and the policy of the Government. If it be the policy of our Government to extend our boundary beyond the Rio Grande, then the line of the Rinconada, agreed upon as that beyond which the Mexican troops are to retire, is the most eligible which can be indicated by the geographical features of the country.

Gen. Ampudia and his army left this morning for Saltillo. He was treated with courtesy and respect, by Gen. Worth, whose quarters are in the city, and who accompanied him to the limits of the town. In fact, all of our troops displayed that forbearance which always marks the conduct of brave and magnanimous men towards those whom the torture of war has placed in their power. You will observe that in my narration of the events of the battles. I have confined myself to the operations of that division of the army which was commanded by Gen. Worth. I have done so because I was with this command, near his person, saw what occurred, and know that which I have stated to be substantially correct. You are not infer that I mean to intimate that the main army, under the command of Gen. Taylor, did not perform feats equally worthy of the applause and admiration of the country. Others well informed as to facts, and much better qualified for the duty, will no doubt give a detailed account of the operations of this portion of the army. Take the army altogether, I doubt whether a superior body of men ever rallied under the flag of our country.

Very truly, yours, &c.,
BALIE PEYTON.

J. Ad. ROZIER, Esq.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 5, 1846 MG46v47n36p3c5 879 words

Accounts from the Army of General Butler
countrymen, that is enough for us. We know that Maj. Gen. BUTLER is a prominent Democrat, and very strenuous in his opinions and course – but what of that? – is he not our countryman? – and engaged now in the defense of our common Country? Surely, most surely, then is he entitled to the regard and affection of his countrymen, until he does something to forfeit that regard. Were Gen. B. now a candidate for political office or prefferment in this country, we should vote against him, because we know the doctrines of his political creed, and we do not believe in their truth or adaptation to the glory and prosperity of our Country. But as a man, we like him – as a soldier, we honor him; amid the page of history bears honorable testimony to his gallantry in the last War, and now at Monterey he has again sealed his bravery and his devotion to his Country with his blood. We are glad to learn that the gallant old soldier is recovering from his wounds, and hope he may live to do signal service to his Country, and brand the lie upon his revilers. We annex to the following slip from the Baltimore Patriot of Saturday last which doubtless is to be fully relied on:

Gen. TAYLOR and Gen. BUTLER – A writer in the Washington Union

Union in some remarks upon the report about Gen. BUTLER says: -

A gallant regular officer who has just returned from Monterey, in the capture of which he bore his part, in relation to the charges against Gen. BUTLER, says explicitly, "that if there was any complaint against Gen. BUTLER, on any account, in the army, he had never heard of no angry words or difficulty of any kind between Gen. TAYLOR and BUTLER; nor did he believe that there had been any. The officers of the regular army had the greatest respect for Gen. BUTLER as well as for Gen. TAYLOR, and had all been to visit the former after he had received his wound. " He also says that "the kindest feelings exist in the army between the regulars and volunteers, and that the former considered the latter as having shown extraordinary steadiness and efficiency for raw troops."

[AMB]

---

Thursday, November 5, 1846 MG46v47n36p5c1 53 words

Santa Anna’s Passport – Alex. Gaz.

The Havana correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, writing on the 1st of Oct., says that he has been informed that General Santa Anna did not have a passport from the Government of the United States, but a letter of recommendation from President POLK to the Commodore of the blockading squadron. Alex. Gaz.

[AMB]

---

Thursday, November 5, 1846 MGi46v47n36p5c1 102 words

To the Editor

On the importance of Monterey as an acquisition to us there is a great difference of opinion. That it must prove a very serious loss to the Mexicans, may be inferred from the fact that it was the place where the foundries for the casting of copper balls – cannon and musket – are erected. In its vicinity are the copper mines which excel any other in productiveness, and from these the foundries are supplied with metal for their castings. The City of Mexico contains the powder mills; not the loss of the manufactories of shot and ball must be severely felt. Balt. Pat.

[AMB]

---

Thursday, November 12, 1846 MG46v47n37p2c6 1,231 words

From Mexico, 5 Days Later from Monterey, From the Baltimore Sun, Nov. 9

The steamship Palmetto, Lewis, arrived at New Orleans on the 29th ultimo, in 36 hours from Galveston. Among the passengers, were Dr. Conrad and Lieut. Nichols, U.S.A. ; Lieut. Dorfendorf, Price, (reported dead,) Smith and Smleds, of the Mississippi volunteers, and Lieut. Read, of the Texas Rangers, with 41 volunteers. Among the vessels left at Galveston were the steamship McKim, and steam schooner Florida, both for N. Orleans. The McKim, was from Brazos Santiago, and was to leave Galveston from New Orleans on the 28th. The steamshooner [sic] Florida was eleven days from Brazos Santiago, with 300 discharged volunteers. She put into Galveston on the 25th, short for provisions and water, and was to leave again for this port on the 28th inst.

[Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun. ]
Monterey, Mexico, Oct. 10, 1846.

Gentlemen: - I find I have to correct my last letter to you. In it I stated that the killed of the Baltimore battalion was eight, I am happy now to say that there were but five slain; the other three missing, were made prisoners, but escaped, and day before yesterday returned safe and sound. They report that Wm. Alexander, private of Capt. Stewart's company, died in the Mexican camp after the amputation of his limb by a Mexican surgeon. He was buried with the honors of war by the Mexicans.

I forgot to say in the list I gave you of our killed, that Sergeant Truscott, of Washington, was in that number. The entire part of his head above his mouth was shot off. Of the rest of the wounded, privates Files and Caples (both of Stewart's company,) will die. They were both shot through the body. - Lee's case is very doubtful; I fear he will die.

Color bearer Hart lost his right arm while defending the Banner which was presented to us by the ladies of Baltimore. He fell, and Capt. Stewart rushed up his aid, saved him and the flag, redeeming the pledge he made when he received it, that he "would defend it or die."

If you added these to those I mentioned in my letter per Lieut. Worthington, you will find the total of the killed and wounded in our battalion.

We will have another "tall fight" at Saltillo, and our situation is now becoming perilous. - The Mexicans are said to number 23,000 men here, and their fortifications are said to be better than at Monterey. Gen. Taylor has only 6,950 men to oppose these. The Government ought to send us at least 10,000 more men.

Lee is still living, but very low - he will die.

Yours, &c.,

J.M.

From the New Orleans Tropic we make the following extracts: -

Lieut. Price, whose death has been announced in Mississippi papers and our own, is, thank God, alive, and now at the St. Charles Hotel, in this city. From some of the officers of the U.S. Army, who came passengers on the Palmetto, and who left Monterey on the 11th ult., we learn that the first Government Express, ordering Gen. Taylor to carry on the war with renewed energy, in consequence of the refusal of Mexico to negotiate, was within a few miles of Monterey, and would reach that point the next day.

The health of the troops at Monterey was much better than it had been on the Rio Grande.

The fortifications in the city were garrisoned by the regular troops.

Gen. Taylor's camp was about three miles this side of Monterey.

The last accounts from Gen. Ampudia and his army left them beyond Saltillo, on their march toward San Luis Potosi, at which point it was rumored that Santa Anna had arrived at the head of thirteen thousand, and daily expecting reinforcements.

The Georgia Regiments was the only reinforcement which had reached Monterey at the time our informants left. Orders had been received, it was understood, by the other Regiments stationed on the Rio Grande, to move towards Headquarters. The Kentucky and Tennessee mounted Regiments had not yet reached Matamoras.

The people of Monterey who had left about the time of the siege, were gradually returning. They had begun to exhibit friendly feelings towards the Americans, interchanges of visits not being rare among both parties.

There had been affrays between the citizens of Monterey and the Texan Rangers, which resulted, first, in the assassination of a Texan Volunteer, and then, by way of revenge, in the killing of eleven Mexicans by the comrades of the slain. General Taylor, to prevent similar recurrences, had ordered an efficient guard to be distributed through the city.

Lieut. Col. McClung was rapidly recovering from the effects of his wounds. One of the officers of his Regiment informs us that the gallant Colonel was the first man that showed himself on the first fort stormed by General Taylor's Division, and that he received his wounds whilst waving his sword aloft and cheering on his men, shouting "Victory!" - The musket ball struck him on his left hand whilst holding his scabbard to his ship, and cut off two of his fingers, glancing from the scabbard and entering his abdomen, fracturing in its course, the bone above the hip joint.

We feel bound to state further, from the evidence furnished us, that Gen. Taylor's coolness and sound judgment throughout the terrible three days was remarked by every one engaged, and that his intrepidity was such, he being in the thickness of the fight, and always where the balls fell fastest, that his escape was deemed miraculous. He still preserves the same noble feelings, and stands ready to go where his government may order him, or the services of his country may call him, whether at the head of five, or twenty thousand men.

We are gratified to be able to state that the duels, which were on the tapis at Camargo, between Col. Balie PEYTON and Gen. MARSHALL, and also between Capt. MUISON, of this city, and Capt. CHEIVES, of the Texas Volunteers, have all been amicably arranged.

Col. Balie PEYTON, Gen. A. S. JOHNSON, and Mr. KENDALL, of the Picayune, were at Galveston on the 28th; intending to leave in the McKim for this city.

Col. Wm. S. FISHER, Commander of the "ill-fated Mier expedition," and Capt. Frank S. EARLY, of the Washington
Texas Volunteers and a hero of Monterey, died in Galveston on the 26th instant.

Gen. has issued another proclamation since his retreat from Monterey, calling upon the Mexicans to flock to his standard to repel the invaders of their soil. His excuse, in the proclamation for defeat at Monterey, and the surrender of that city to our troops is a want of ammunition!! The utter falsity of this statement was well known, for a quantity of ammunition was found at Monterey after the capitulation.

The New Orleans Delta of the 29th ult. says:

There are various reports floating about the camp at Monterey respecting the movements of the Mexican army, but nothing authentic or definite.

The following is the disposition of the army at Monterey: Gen. WORTH’s division, with which is Blanchard’s company of Louisiana Volunteers, attached to the 7th Regiment, garrisons the city. The 1st, 3d and 4th Regiments, and the brigade of Artillery, with Gen. TAYLOR’s staff, are encamped about four miles north of the city. The Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia Volunteers are encamped a mile still further north of the city.

Letter to the Editor, Vera Cruz, October 1, 1846

Dear Sirs: There is very little news worth reporting. The present Government is trying to render itself popular by a series of rather liberal measures, and appears willing to recommence the campaign more rigorously. Gen. Santa Anna is about to leave Mexico in order to assume the generalship in chief of the troops concentrated in San Luis Potosi; but we confess to have the very worst opinion of the Mexican Army, and do not believe they will make any vigorous resistance to the American troops. The main difficulty will be, moreover, the entire want of money, as in the coffers of the treasury there is not even enough wherewith to pay the most necessary and urgent exigencies, and the credit of the Government is very much shaken indeed. It is true that the clergy will guarantie a loan of some millions of dollars, but we do not believe that this amount will be procured, and even if it were, undoubtedly the largest part will consist in Government paper, which is very difficult to realize in this moment.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 12, 1846 MG46v47n37p4c2 92 words

Letter to the Editor, Washington, Nov. 4, 1846

There is, from some cause or other, a prevalent opinion here that we shall have peace with Mexico by the 1st of February, and that there is no necessity for any more expenditure of blood and treasure.

There is an equally prevalent opinion that our Government will not demand California, nor even the boundary of the Sierra Madre, but be content to take the Rio Grande for a boundary and release Mexico from the obligations of her treaties, and assume to pay the indemnities due to our citizens. – Cor. Of Jour. Com.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p1c2 796 words

Description of Monterey, Correspondence of the Cincinnati Advertiser, Monterey, September 29, 1846.

The army is now quietly quartered in and about the grounds so recently strewn with the dead and dying. The blood strained pavements at this moment mark the spot of desperate conflict. While on the march from camp upon the first day's battle, I heard Gen. BUTLER remark to Col. JOHNSON, of Texas, then acting as his aid, "that the post of danger was the post of honor. " That is no doubt true, and, if so, then the wreath of honor should not be withheld from the graves of the dead and the brows of the living of those who participated in the storming of Monterey. After a careful examination of the ground occupied by the enemy at the point of attack, their means of defense, and the number of troops, one is astonished, not that so many were killed, but that any should be left to tell the story of the action.

Strange and lamentable that the homage of mankind should be profoundly bestowed on those only who conduct the carnage of the battlefield! A homage purchased by the living, at the expense of blood of those who die. These things, however, have been, are, and will be so.

The town is situated at the mountain pass which separate the plain extending to the Gulf of Mexico from the mountainous region, which continues until you have ascended the tableland upon which the capital is situated. – These mountains arise with great abruptness from the plain, unlike the Alleghanies, which are approached only through a country rough and broken, long before you are at the base. – Their aspect is bleak and dreary in the extreme. The ascent presents an angle apparently of sixty or seventy degrees, and their crest exhibits a sharp ridge – of nearly uniform height, except where broken through, as though pieces had broken through, as though pieces had broken out, leaving apertures of seven hundred feet with perpendicular sides, through which no other range is discernible. Detached hills seem to rise occasionally, like an excrescence from the plain, and many of them of great height. On one of these stands the Bishop’s Castle, commanding the town and plain for miles. It is accessible, it is true, from the east, with gentle ascent, but as you look west from the heights immediately beyond it, the head grows dizzy; and one accustomed to high places as I am shrinks involuntarily back from the precipice, and instinctively seeks a surer footing and a firmer grasp upon the thorny chaparral surrounding him. This castle, you know, was taken by Gen. WORTH. How it was done I cannot comprehend, although the modius perandi has been explained to me half a dozen times by those who participated in the battle. One would think it an effectual resistance, properly measured against one body as well as another, totally regardless of numbers or courage. In fact, no one doubts that the troops who have taken the town could defend it against a myriad of men. Gen. TAYLOR, in conversation with me, said he had no hesitation in pronouncing it the strongest position on the continent, except Quebec. By the by, a word about the capitulation. The bearer of the flag of truce proposed a surrender of the town, allowing them to remove all the public property: Gen: TAYLOR asked an unconditional surrender of every thing: quite a difference. They had from 8 to 12 o’clock to answer. At 12 they sent for Gen. TAYLOR. After exhausting his patience with diplomacy, and Gen. had declared he was no way straitened to submission, Gen. TAYLOR said [..] "Sir, I hold your town, yourself, and your army in the hollow of my hand, and you know it; the conference is closed. In thirty minutes you shall hear from my batteries. “ – He took his hat to leave the room; called him back and submitted. This was told me in person by Gen. Taylor, and is strictly true, of course.

Much has been deservedly said of Gen. TAYLOR’s personal bravery; it is the theme of admiration and adulation of those at home, but it is no peculiarity of his. He is surrounded by men equally so - by young men, who, in subordinate positions are capitals of any thing and every thing brave and great; and although obscured from the eye of the country, are in fact its pride and ornament. I will take occasion hereafter of napping some of those whom we regard as dandies of West Point, and show you how they live and what they undergo in the service; how, their spirit du corps prompts them to duty, their devotion, &c. Certainly the testimony of volunteers will hereafter disabuse the public mind to its appreciation of the young officers of the army.

[AMB]

Thursday, 19 November 1846 MG46i47n38p1c3 223 words

Tennessee Volunteers – The Killed and Wounded

The Nashville Whig of the 24th ultimo publishes a letter from Col. Wm. B. Campbell, giving an account of the battle of Monterey, and containing a list of the killed, wounded, and missing in his regiment. The list occupies near a column of the Nashville Whig. It is the most melancholy column we ever saw in a newspaper. Similar records must appear in the Journals of other States. What tears will fall, what hearts will break over the gloomy developments of the results of war – of these victims, who lie crushed beneath the chariot of victory, their eyes blind to the incense with which the world’s applause tempers the red glare of the battle-field; their pulseless hearts no longer sensible to the patriot’s pride, the heroes impulses, and the soldier’s duty!

The letter of Col. CAMPBELL, announcing the details of the battle, while it breathes a natural spirit of exultation, over the remarkable success of the American arms, seems to us pervaded by a tome of subdued sadness such as these deplorable results might well call forth. It is like the blended strains of a chant of triumph and a dirge of wo. There is no unseemly boasting, but it is the language of one who feels that the laurels of conquest are steeped in the blood of kinsmen and friends. – Richmond Republican.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p1c3 69 words

Santa Anna’s Leg

Santa Anna’s leg, the leg which he lost by the French, which was buried with honors, but subsequently was exhumed and kicked about in dension, it appears by a letter in the New York Commerical, has been recovered from a young man, who had obtained possession of it, in the hope that some day he might make good speculations of it, and was respectfully buried by the new authorities.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p1c6 1,577 words

"Jack Hays and His Men."

Since the opening of the campaign, the regiment of Texas Rangers, under the command of Col. J. C. HAYS, of San Antonio de Bexar, Texas, have been gradually earning a high place not only in the estimation of Gen. TAYLOR’s army, as appears from numerous letters from the camp, but in the hearts of the people of the United States, until their exploits at the battle of Monterey have created a perfect enthusiasm in the popular mind to know who and what this famous “Jack Hays and his men” really are. In reply to our inquires, a friend from Western Texas presents us with the following sketch. – Union.

John C. Hays, a native of Middle Tennessee, came to Texas early in the year 1839, I believe, and, settling at San Antonio, commenced business as a land locator and surveyor. – This calling was then exceedingly dangerous, for it was rare indeed that a surveying party went beyond the settlements without a rencontre [sic] with either Mexicans, Camanches [sic], Beodies, Wacoes, Towackanies, Keechies, or straggling bands of some other hostile tribe infesting the western frontier of Texas. In these encounters, HAYS, though hardly a man in age, soon obtained a reputation for coolness, judgment, courage, energy, and a knowledge of frontier life, and Indian and Mexican character, which induced the Government of Texas to tender to him the command of its first company of rangers, which was organized in the winter of 1840 and ’41. Some time afterwards, when it was found necessary to raise two more ranging companies, Capt. HAYS was invested with the command of the battalion, with the rank of Major, and he and “his men” continued to serve as rangers until the annexation. – He is not more that thirty years of age, (if so old,) and weighs from 130 to 140 pounds. I need say nothing to you concerning his remarkable soldierly qualities, for the pens and voices of such men as BAlIE PEEyTON and GEN. WORTH have already told the world that it holds few such warriors as JACK HAYS.

In western Texas, where from habit all men are good Indian and Mexican fighters modestly is his most remarkable trait; for it is no uncommon thing to hear an over-modest man characterized as being almost as bashful as JACK HAYS. Indeed, I question whether there is a man in TAYLOR’s army who has as poor an opinion of his merits and services of H. as he himself. He thinks much and speaks little, and that little always to the purpose. – There never lived a commander more idolized by his men, his word is their law. Now, as they are regular frontier men, and, of course, notoriously
His men, who, in the estimation of Gen. Worth, are the best light troops in the world, are just the men to be led by such an officer. Out of the four hundred and fifty are farmers and stock raisers in a small way on the Colorado, Navidad, Lavaca, Gaudaloupe, and San Antonio rivers in western Texas.

From the time of the battle of San Jacinto up to forty-one, when formed into regular ranging companies, they defended the frontier on their own hook, without pay, emolument, provision, or even ammunition at the expense of the Government. Whenever Indians of Mexicans approached the settlements, runners were dispatched up and down the rivers I have before named to sound the alarm, and on such notice those now composing Hays's “first regiment of Texas Rangers” rarely required more than six hours to prepare for a campaign of three months; for, after all, catching their horses, running fifty bullets, and parching a half bushel of corn for cold flour, or panoli, as the Mexicans term it, were the only preparations necessary. Hot or Cold, wet or dry, they carried no tents, and required no other provisions than fresh beef, which was usually driven with them. Once in a while a green horn, on his first campaign, would pack a little sugar, coffee, and salt; but he would soon learn that boys who had to fight for nothing and find their own horse flesh and ammunition, could do it about as “carní” solus. In fact, after a little experience with such a life, few at least of those men would be troubled with the care of any other provision than beef, or any other equipment than shooting irons, bowie knife, a pair of blankets, a Mexican saddle-tree, and a good horse; which, with leather breeches, indomitable perseverance, an extra shirt, a light heart, great capacity for endurance, and sworn hatred to Mexicans and Indians, make up the Texan ranger.

When the Government of Texas organized these men into regular companies, they first began to receive pay, and perhaps half of those now with Hays gave up their farms and took to soldiering for a livelihood.

Capt. Ben. McCulloch, who commands the first company of this regiment, (to which Kendall, of Picayune, is attached;) G. T. Howard, who was lately dispatched to Santa Fe by the President, and has since joined Wool's force, to which he will soon be what McCulloch is to the main army; poor Gillespie, who was killed in the late battle, and Hancock Chevallie, originally of Richmond, Virginia, were Hays's right hand men in the frontier campaigns of Texas. McCulloch is a native of Tennessee, near the Alabama line, and came to Texas from the latter State, settling in Gonzales County as a surveyor. He served one of the two field pieces in the battle of San Jacinto, "the twin sisters," as the Texans dubbed them, and there, for the first time, distinguished himself. He is the hero of what is known as the Plum creek fight with the Indians who burnt Linnville [sic]. Howard is a native of this city, and commanded in the famous court-house fight in the town of San Antonio, when he found it necessary to close the door, and, with nineteen men, to fight thirty-seven Camanches [sic], both parties being completely armed. In this melee, he himself received four wounds, and lost nine men killed, all the rest of the command being more or less wounded. But seven of the Indians got out of the room alive; and of these, six were subsequently killed in the street. Gillespie is either a native of Virginia or Tennessee; and being lieutenant of the first company of rangers, was chosen its captain when Hays was promoted to the command of the original battalion. Indeed, all these gentlemen are distinguished frontier officers, having long since won their way to fame in Texas, in, I may almost write, a hundred well-fought battles. S. H. Walker, the Captain Walker of the beginning of this campaign, who, by-the-by, is from this city also, is now the lieutenant colonel of the events of the month prior to the battles of the 8th and 9th of May last. Ever since the organization of the ranging corps he has been one of their number; though, heretofore, I do not know what he was distinguished beyond his comrades generally. Before the annexation of Texas an election for a lieutenant of the 1st company (Gillespie's) took place, and Edward Ratcliff, a brother of Daniel Ratcliff, Esq. of this city chosen, Walker being his competitor. Ratcliff, poor fellow, was killed in the little fight between nine men under Walker, and a party of Mexicans, which took place a few days prior to the battle of the 8th of May.

But when I think of these men facts crowd so fast on my memory that I might write you about them until day break. A personal knowledge of at least three-fourths of the men of the regiment teachers me that Col. Ballie Peyton has not praised them beyond their true deserts in saying that “amongst the volunteers none have shone more conspicuous than the 1st Regiment of Texas mounted riflemen, commanded that Chevalier Bayard, Col. J. C. Hays, better known as Jack Hays. This corps, from the Colonel to the private, has fully sustained its former reputation. In the first affair in which Gen. Worth’s division was engaged on the morning of the 21st, Col. Hays, with several companies of his mounted riflemen, were thrown forward to open the balt [sic], which he did most beautifully, encountering and shooting in the presence of the General the Colonel of dragoons who commanded the enemy’s forces. In sealing heights, storming batteries, and clambering over walls and house tops, the voice of the gallant Colonel and the reports of the unerring rifle of the Ranger were ever heard in the van. The courage and constancy and subordination of this corps is the theme of admiration in the army.”
Gowns are not known. A chemise with short sleeves and a short petticoat, with the Ribose for the head and sometimes folded over the bosom, is the entire outfit. It startles one frequently to the hear the noble Castillian rolling from lips whence appearance would teach you to expect nothing but the harsh gutturals of the aboriginates [sic]. Many of them are darker than our Indians, and the African blood is plainly marked.

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p1c7 495 words

Mr. Polk’s Faux Pas

The extraordinary blunder of President Polk, says the Richmond Times, in permitting SANTA ANNA and ALMONTE to return from Havana to Mexico, is becoming the subject of general and very severe animadversion. A more unfortunate and ridiculous mistake was never committed by any government. In consequence of it, we are at this moment farther from a termination of the war than we were on the ninth of May. For, had not unanimity of purpose been attained in Mexico, by the arrival and accession of SANTA ANNA, AMPUDIA would never have been able to rally a force of 10,000 men at Monterey, or, at least the capitulation of that town would have been the end of the war.

The Alexandria Gazette, in the following article, sows what is thought in Europe of the unexampled policy of our Cabinet:

OPINION ABROAD – We learned, a day or two since, in conversation with a gentlemen recently returned from Europe, that the greatest surprise was manifested in private circles in England, by the most intelligent and well informed people, at the very extraordinary movement of our government in countenancing and permitting the return of SANTA ANNA and his officers to Mexico, "You Americans" was the common remark, "are certainly the strongest people on the face of the earth. You certainly display the most indomitable heroism and perseverance – you overcome obstacles that would seem almost insurmountable – and yet you display the utmost lack of wisdom, may, even of common sense, in the conduct of your war with Mexico. You permit SANTA ANNA, a skilful general, a man of notoriously bad faith, without one single honorable trait in his character, crafty, cunning, deceitful, and your bitter enemy, to regain his country; unite a divided people, and lead an army, devoted to his interests, against you. This movement which no other nation upon earth would have thought of, for a single moment. You permit ALMONTE, too, who from his long residence in your country, is probably the best informed of all his countrymen, of your condition and resources, as well as the disposition of your people, to return with SANTA ANNA, and, in all probability, assume the direction of the war department. Besides all this, you offer encouragement to your enemies to prolong the war, by paying them, and paying them liberally too, for all the supplies you take from them for the sustenance of your troops. This may and doubtless does spring from honorable motives, but it is against the universal practice of nations engaged in war, and is certainly the worst policy that you could have adopted. Respect private property as far as is consistent, repress indiscriminate pillage, but above all, make your enemies feed your army!"

These opinions of our atlantic [sic] friends, are such as we have frequently expressed, and just such as we should suppose every man of common sense would entertain. The course pursued by the Administration is as inexplicable to us as it is to them.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p2c2 158 words

A Call for Troops

We observe in the last "Union," that requisitions have been sent out from the War Department, calling into the service of United States, nine additional Regiments of Volunteers, to serve during the War with Mexico, unless, to serve during the War with Mexico, unless sooner discharged. They are asked for from the following States: -

One regiment of infantry from Massachusetts;
One regiment of infantry from the State of New York;
One regiment of infantry from Pennsylvania;
One regiment of infantry from Virginia;
One regiment of infantry from North Carolina;
One regiment of infantry from South Carolina;
One regiment of infantry from Louisiana;
One regiment of infantry from Mississippi; and
One regiment of mounted men from Texas.

The Berkeley boys, whose souls beat so high with military ardor last Spring, after the battles of Palo Alto and Resaen de la Palma, will now have a chance to do service in the cause of their country. What say they?

[AMB]
From Mexico, Very Late and Important from Mexico

The New Orleans Picayune of the 8th inst. Contains advices from Vera Cruz as late as 22nd October, received through the same channel by which they received the accounts of the unsuccessful attack by our Squadron on Alvarado. The intelligence is interesting and important. From an extended account in the Picayune we make up the following summary of news:

In the first place we may say in general terms that in no paper which we have opened do we find any token of submission on the part of the Mexicans in their conflict with this country. Every paragraph breathes threats of vengeance. Their losses are enumerated in detail, to found thereupon more urgent appeals to the patriotism of their citizens to give up every thing for the support of the war. It is not too much to say that there is the warmest enthusiasm apparent in all that we read – whether in editorial remarks or the military addresses with which the papers are crowded. The spirit of all is, "War to the knife."

But this shows the surface of affairs only. We shall have occasion to note incidents, says the Baltimore American, which lead us to suspect the country is by no means so united as the crisis in her affairs would seem to demand.

The news of SANTA ANNA’s arrival at San Luis Potosi, which we gave the other day, was at least premature. He did not reach there till the 8th of October. As every thing in regard to his movement is sought after, we annex his letter announcing his arrival:

LIBERATING ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Headquarters, San Luis, Oct. 10, 1846.

Most Excellent Sirs: - On the evening of the 8th inst. I arrived at this capital, accompanied by my staff, and established therein the Headquarters of the Army of Operations [sic], destined to repel the unjust invasion made upon the Republic by the Army of the United States of the North.

I have the pleasure of saying to your Excellency that the congratulations of a magnanimous people who have not ceased to bestow upon me profused [sic] marks of consideration, and the same mark will apply to the authorities and public functionaries of all classes.

Oblige me by communicating these facts to his Excellency, the General charged with the supreme executive power, and accept assurances of my consideration and esteem. God and Liberty.

[AMB]

From the Gulf Squadron, Second Abortive Attack on Alvarando---Vessels Grounded on the Bar—Expedition against Tobasco—Capture of Several Prizes

The New Orleans Picayune (extra) of the 7th inst. Contains the following important letters from their correspondent in the Gulf Squadron:

Off Anton Lizardo, Oct. 13, 1846.

Gentlemen: We are one the eve of another attack on Alvarado. At 5 o’clock this afternoon, Com. CONNER issued orders for the sailing of the squadron, frigates Cumberland and Raritan excepted, for the mouth of the Alvarado river.

The Com. Takes command of the expedition in person, making use of the steamer Vixen as his flag ship for the occasion. One o’clock tomorrow morning is the hour fixed, and already the streamers Mississippi, Vixen and McLaine, are firing up. Besides these vessels the force consists of the Revenue Cutter Forward, schooners Monata. This latter vessel was recently captured from the Mexicans, and was formerly the American schooner Belle, out of your port. She now mounts four forty-two pound cannonades.

For the last month we have been drilling our men as Infantry, upon a small island, and Jack is so anxious for a
At the month of the river the Mexicans have a ten gun battery, we know of a brig of war and two gun boats being merchantmen have taken refuge in the harbour, and there must be a small sprinkling of prize money in store for us.

Oct. 16th. – Our sailing orders for the morning of the 14th were countermanded in consequence of its blowing too fresh for operation occasioning a delay of the expedition for 24 hours. We sailed, however, at 1 A. M., yesterday, but I regret to state that we are all at anchor again to-day, and Alvarado yet in possession of the Mexicans.

You were pleased to call the former attack on Alvarado an abortion, and I suppose you will not be sparing of hard names for the present failure, but I trust when you examine the facts of the case you will understand that it is owing to the inefficiency of the means at the disposal of Com. CONNER, and to the natural defences [sic] of the place itself, that we have not been successful, rather than to any want of skill or courage on his part, or lack of spirit and support by the officers and men under his command. We were within ten miles of the mouth of the river at daylight, and stoo slowly into shore, it being dead calm, the Vixen and McLane towing the schooners.

The Mississippi anchored at long shot distance and commenced her fire. Up to this time every thing appeared highly favorable for the success of the expedition. There being a heavy swell on the bar, the pilots declined taking the vessels over. The Commodore leading in the Vixen with the rest of the force following, passed by the front, each vessel firing her broadside as she ranged ahead, with but little effect, however, owing to the distance. A long 18 inch the Forward sent a shot directly into the Fort.

This movement was repeated with better success; the distance being lessened. The Forward made a most beautiful shot. In the meanwhile, the Mississippi had closed and exploded her Paixhan about the heads of the Mexicans, in the way that must have made some of them see more stars than the Lord ever made. One shot from her dismounted a heavy gun of theirs from a stockade. This they soon remedied, but thus far their shot had fallen short.

During the morning several of our boats sounded with half a mile of the Fort, receiving the fire of the enemy with as much impunity as indifference. The swell over the bar having somewhat subsided at 1 P. M., the line was formed as follows: - Steamer Vixen, flag ship towing gun-boats Reever and Bonita; steamer MacLane towing the Bonita, cutter Forward, and gun-boat Petrel; then 2 launches, 3 cutters, and a barge containing a force destined for boarding. The vessels of war brought up the rear.

Further Particulars, Coolness of Con. - Conner- Effects of the Mississippi’s shells – Expedition against Tobasco

The Picayune has also the following additional information from the Gulf, from private letters: -

Don THOS. MARIN, one of the most accomplished officers in the Mexican Navy, commanded the fortifications of Alvarado. The papers containing his report of the attack has been accidentally mislaid or we would give the whole of it; but it is in the usual style of Mexican reports. He declares that he is ready for us again at any moment, and this probably is true. The Commodore, from his position is advance on the Vixen, discovered another Mexican work half a mile further up the river, or lagoon, as it may more properly be called, where three guns were mounted in battery, and supported by a gun-brio and two gunboats, serving as water-batteries. Perhaps it was the discovery of these additional means of defence [sic] which influenced the Commodore not to persist in his attack without the support of more of his forces. In the report of Senor MARIN the loss of the Mexicans is not mentioned, but he speaks of the loss of one Mexican officer who was not on duty, but in the streets of the town, half a mile back of the fort. He was captain in the army, and was struck by a shell from the Mississippi, and, we need not say, was almost annihilated. Another shell from the Mississippi set the Mexican colors on fire in the fort, but they were speedily replaced.

In this attack the same pilot who was on board the Truxton when she got ashore piloted the McLane. His name is JOHN McNIEL and he is a Scotchmen. He discharged his duty under the impressive belief that upon the first accident he would be shot. We believe it is not pretended that he played us false. The pilot gave warning of the danger in person, and he vessel went ashore in going about.
The attack was subject of remark among the officers of the foreign vessels on that station. So far as is known, they look upon the issue as unfortunate, but as in no way disgraceful to our arms. They fully appreciated the difficulties which we had to encounter and were not surprised at the result.

We have reason to presume that Com. Conner would at once have proceeded to organize the plan of another attack upon Alverado had not he deemed it proper to despatch [sic] the expedition against Tobasco on the day after his repulse, by which movement he has given another opportunity to his officers, chaffed and mortified, to wipe out the remembrance of their recent misfortune, at the same time being generous enough to allow his second in command (Com. Perry) to achieve something upon a field where it was not a point of honor with himself to take command in person. Upon the Tobasco expedition, Com. Perry has taken with him about 400 officers and men from the Cumberland and Raritan as auxiliaries. With this expedition have gone, too, almost all the marines in his squadron. The commodore has done every thing to insure its success.

We are sorry for our friend Howard, of the McLane. His vessel is quite too slow for him, and is not worth the powder it would take to blow her to pieces. In going down to Tobasco, the Mississippi, with three schooners in tow, had to lay to enable the McLane to come up, and finally the Mississippi took the McLane herself in tow. But despite his slow boat Capt. Howard had opportunity to show his stomach for a fight, and retired with unspeakable reluctance agreeable to orders. [AMB]

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p3c1 798 words

From the St. Louis Republican, Nov. 7, Important and Very Late from Santa Fe

By the arrival at Fort Leavenworth, on the 30th October, of Lieut. Col. Ruff, of the Missouri Volunteers, we learn that Gen. Kearney left for California on the 25th of September, taking with him companies B, C, G, K and I, 1st United States Dragoons — in all about 400 men, mounted on mules. The route of this small command was considered by many of the ablest and most experienced mountaineers [...] as one of the greatest hardships and suffering, if not absolutely impracticable — being down the Rio Grande to Socorro, (an old Spanish town, formerly of much importance from the large garrison stationed there;) about 200 miles South of Santa Fe; thence West to the "Gila," (pronounced Heela;) thence down the Gila to within 150 or 200 miles of the head of the Gulf of California, into which the Gila empties itself; thence down the Gila to within 150 or 200 miles of the head of the Gulf of California, into which the Gila empties itself; thence Northwest to Monterey, on the Pacific. This route is called and known as the Copper Mine route.

This command is accompanied by the following officers: Gen. Kearney, commanding; Capt. Turner, 1st Dragoons, aid-de-camp; Capt. Johnson, 1st Dragoons, Adjutant General of the "Army of the West;" Major Thomas Swords, Quarter Master U.S.A.; Assistant Surgeons John S. Griffin and R. Simpson, of the medical staff of the army; Maj. Summer, commanding Dragoons; Capts. Cook, Moore, Burgwin and Grier, 1st U.S. Dragoons, and Lieuts. Love, Hammond, Noble, Davidson and M’Ilvaine, of the same regiment.

The scientific part of the expedition if under the command of that meritorious officer. 1st Lieut. W. H. Emory, of the corps of Topographical Engineers, so well and favorably known for his laborious an accurate surveys on the North-Eastern Boundary; and consists of 1st Lieut. Warner, of the Engineer Corps; Mr. Bester, of the District of Columbia, and Mr. Stanley, employed at Santa Fe as the artist of the expedition. The command is also accompanied by Mr. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Robidoux, and a guide from Taos, who takes with him for his own riding five mules, so difficult is the route in his estimation and experience.

The General started with wagons, and with one wagon load of pack saddles for mules, intended to pack when the wagons break down. Permission had been granted (on his application) to Capt. Thos. R. Hudson, of St. Louis Volunteers, to organize a company of volunteers then present, to go with the Mormon battalion, as a mounted company, to California. Capt. Hudson had beat up for volunteers and succeeded in raising his company in one day, more than double the requisite or proper number having presented themselves as volunteers.

The Colonel reports that every thing was tranquil at Santa Fe when he left (September 27th.) though a very current rumor existed that the Armijo family would endeavor to incite the population to open resistance as soon as Gen. Kearney and the regular troops of the United States had left that part of the country. This report was not believed, however, or, if true, would have caused no uneasiness.

Gen. Kearney, by printed proclamation dated September 22, 1846, announces that, being duly authorized by the President of the United States, he appoints the following named persons the executive and administrative officers of the law and government of the territory of New Mexico:

Governor — Charles Bent.

Secretary of the territory — Don Aduciano Vigh.

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p3c1 52 words

Pronunciation of Mexican Names

Chihuahua is pronounced Che-waw-waw, equal accent on the last two syllables. Monterey, Mont-te-ray, accent on the last syllable. Saltillo, Saul-teel-yo, accent on the second syllable. San Luis Potosi, Saun Luis Po-to-see, accent on the second syllable of Potosi. Guanaxuato, Gwan-a-wat-o, half accent on the first, and full accent on the third syllable.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 19, 1846 MG46i47n38p3c1 53 words

Report

The report that the Mexican Government had agreed to exchange Capt. CARPENTER and the crew of the Truxton for Gen. LAVEGA and his fellow prisoners, is confined by information received at the War Department – Orders have been issued by Major Gen. SCOTT for the release of Gen. LA VEGA and his officers.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 26, 1846 MG46i47n39p1c3 330 words

Letter to the Editor, Camp near Monterey, (Mexico) October 1, 1846

The excitement occasioned by the three days’ bloody struggle has, in some measure, passed off, but the mind of the soldier recurs now to the contemplation of bygone days, and inquiries for the friend with whom so much pleasure was enjoyed but a few days before. The inquiry brings to it the sad and melancholy fact that they are gone to their long homes. This at first acts like a dream to the mind, and we are at a loss how to believe it. Has any one seen the interment? No response is made, but one rises in the midst of the ruinous fort where we were, assembled, in full view of the enemies ramparts, buckles on his sword, and with an eye like an eagle and the boldness of a lion, asks who will go in pursuit of the body of our gallant Col. Wm. H. WATSON? Three men offer their services, THOS. SIMPSON and WILLIAM S. HIDE and the other a stranger. The young Lieut. Proceeds with a firm step secures the remains of the brave and beloved WATSON under the heavy fire of the enemy, conveys it back to the fort, and whilst in the solemn act of burying the dead the head of one of the brave men was taken off by a cannon ball. The young Lieutenant stands unshaken, and commands the interment of the soldier at the foot of Col. WATSON, whose remains lie deposited in the lower Fort on the bank of the St. John’s River, about half a mile below the city of Monterey, Mexico. Lieut. MARCELLUS.
K. Taylor, of company B, commanded by Captain Piper, of Baltimore, is the young man, referred to, and he has now in his possession a lock of hair taken from the lamented Watson and will if spared, convey it to his bereaved and sorrowful wife and children. May Heaven bless them and him.

Rob’t Bronaugh.
Captain Com’g Company C. Baltimore, Md. and Washington, D.C., Volunteers.

Thursday, November 26, 1846

Sword for Gen. Taylor

The State of Louisiana after the great battles of the 8th and 9th of May, voted to present a sword to General Taylor. It has been made in New York, and the description of it is given in the New York Tribune:

The scabbard is made of the finest metal, with richly engraved and wrought ornaments. On two divisions of the front side are scenes of the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. The shield presents the following inscription:

"Presented by the State of Louisiana to Gen. Z. Taylor, in testimony of the high opinion held by the people of this State of the skill, conduct and judgment shown by him during his military life, but particularly during the battles of Palo Alto on the 8th and Ravina de la Palma on the 9th of May, 1846."

Surmounting the battle scenes appears the coat of arms of Louisiana, and in the centre of the scabbard the American eagle richly regraved [sic]. The grasp is compassed of alternate mother of pearl and gold facets, richly engraved and studded, and protected by a massive gold chain. The head represents a revolutionary cap and plume, surmounted by a precious miringhorm stone.

Thursday, November 26, 1846

From the Camp at Monterey

Last evening the War Department received dispatches from General Taylor. They were written on the 6th, 11th, 12th, and 13th October. But the detailed official letters on the operations before Monterey did not accompany them – much delay having occurred in making out complete returns from the various subordinate commanders of the army. The despatches [sic] which were received last evening are brief and combatively unimportant in their character.

In his letter of the 6th of October, Gen. Taylor states that had mustered out of service the entire force of mounted Texas volunteers, which has rendered excellent service in the campaign, was then, on its march to Camargo, there to be mustered out of service.

The General states, that a small force is to be stationed at Laredo on the east bank of the Rio Grande, for the purpose of protecting that frontier of country from Indian depredations, and enabling the government of Texas to extend its jurisdiction with more facility to the river. – With the advice of Gov. Henderson, he has authorized General Lamar, ex-President of Texas, to raise a mounted company of eighty men for this service, for twelve months. – As a very small force is now in service from the state of Texas, he trusts that this step will be approved of by the department.

The 2d infantry with some of the artillery companies left in the rear, and an additional volunteer force, had been ordered forward to Monterey, together with a heavy battery train.

No credible intelligence had been received from the interior at the date of his letter. Gen. Ampudia, at the last advice, was at Saltillo, probably with the whole or greater part of his army. [But subsequent accounts, in private letters, report that Ampudia had retreated from Saltillo, and would make San Luis de Potosi his rallying point. He was expected to make a stand there, and perhaps to be joined by Santa Anna, in case Gen. Taylor should extend his advance in that direction.]

The General states, that he had been unable as yet to prepare his detailed official report of the operations before Monterey – the last report from his subordinate commanders having been at that moment received. Our loss in killed, wounded and missing, will vary very little from 500 – 400 of which was sustained in the attack on the lower part of the city on the 21st.
In his letter of the 13th October, Gen. T. encloses a statement of a recent atrocious murder, which had been perpetrated on the 5th, in the streets of Monterey, upon a Mexican lancer, by one EITZSIMONS. Captain HAYS of the Texan rangers was present, soon after at the scene, and had doubt of the guilt of the man. He is now in confinement. Some difficulty had occurred as to the proper disposition of the accused, as there seems to be no American tribunal competent to meet the case. – The Mexican governor had complained of the act and desired that the man might be brought to merited punishment. The General replied that the case should be submitted to his government before any action would be taken there.

In his last letter, General TAYLOR deeply regrets the necessity of reporting the death of the brave ROBERT H. GRAHAM, 1st lieut. of 4th infantry, who died on the previous night of the wound which he had received in the engagement of the 21st September.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 26, 1846 MG46i47n39p2c5 556 words

The Proclamation of the Governor, &c.

We call the attention of the people of Berkeley County to the Proclamation of Governor Smith, for the organization of a Regiment of Infantry for immediate service, and to be continued therein during the war with Mexico, unless sooner discharged. " The details of the organization of companies and the Regiment will be found under the Adjutant General's Orders. The place of rendezvous for the Virginia Regiment, is GUYANDOTTE on the Ohio River.

We have no doubt that this call upon the gallantry and patriotism of Virginia will be promptly answered, and already we see offers going up to the Governor from the different sections of the State. We rejoice that Berkeley is making an effort to join the gallant band, and we will not suffer ourselves to doubt for a single moment, that enough of her brave and hardy sons will be found at once to fill up a company and report themselves ready. As soon as the requisition upon Virginia was known, our cotemporary, the Editor of the Republican, Capt. EPHRAIM G. ALBURTIS, made application to the Governor for the acceptance of the services of his Company, the "Independent Blues. " We have seen the reply of the Governor to Capt. A. and he has ordered the Blues to fill up their ranks and report themselves to the Government. Several gallant young men have already volunteered, and we hear of several more who intend doing so. But in case a sufficient number cannot be obtained in Berkley to form a Company, other Counties no doubt will join her. What says gallant little Morgan – are there not many there who will join with their neighbors of Berkley, and go heart and soul to the field of battle in the prosecution of the existing war between their own Country and a foreign foe? There will be no delay in this movement; as soon as the Regiment is formed it will be concentrated at the rendezvous at Guyandotte – and as soon as possible, thereafter, moved on to join the standard of the gallant TAYLOR, whose honored name and heroic deeds are now the themes of every tongue throughout the length and breadth of the land. We know that there is no section of Virginia more famed for the valor and patriotism of her sons, than the Valley – history of the Revolution and of the last was bear ample testimony to their patriotic devotion – let it not be said now, that she is found wanting when our Eastern and Trans-Allegany friends are rushing to the standard of their Country. Let it not be said that the Tenth Congressional District is without a company. We shall not attempt to set forth the many advantages which the Volunteer may gain by going to Mexico; it is enough that the emergency of our common Country demands the services of her sons, and hose who can conveniently leave home, will not, we are sure, need a more powerful and potent reason, than patriotic devotion to their Country.

We direct attention to the call for a Meeting of the People of Berkeley, at the Court-House, on Friday evening next, the 27th inst. Let the Meeting be fully attended, and especially let all who feel disposed to respond to the call come forward at once, and without delay, as there is no time to be lost.

[AMB]

Thursday, November 26, 1846 MG46i47n39p3c2 385 words

Official Despatches

The "Union" of Saturday evening last contains the Official Despatches [sic] of Gen. TAYLOR and his Officers, giving detailed accounts of the battle of Monterey. We cannot find room for them in our columns this week, but will endeavor to publish them at another time, more as a matter of of [sic] historical record than anything else, as they in reality do not contain any material facts which are not already in the hands of the public. These dispatches, however, contain a full and noble vindication of the conduct of the gallant BUTLER, and ought at once to silence the tongue of slander, and put to shame the vile fabricators of falsehood who have attempted to rob the character and fame of as gallant, true and patriotic a soldier as ever went to battle under the glorious "stars and stripes" of our Country. We have only room for one extract – it is enough for our present purposes. Gen TAYLOR says:

Our loss is twelve officers and one hundred and eight men killed; thirty- one officers and three hundred and thirty-
The nomination of James K. Polk to the Presidency was a perfect surprise to the Country. This unexpected event seems to have put the Democratic Administration (11) wonderfully in love with the surprise idea, as every thing they do seems to take the Country a little "unnear." The Organ is always grinding away; but before the tune is through, it is sure to strike up "Jump Jim Crow." And away goes the whole Democratic family in a new dance. For instance, the River and Harbor Bill was passed, and the whole Democratic delegation in Congress from the West wrote home in ecstasy – but the Tariff of ’42 was not yet knocked in the head – the Western vote was wanted and obtained – and then to their great surprise came a veto upon their bill. Fifty four forty or fight was also flames forth and then to the surprise of Achilles & Co., a back-out soon followed. Then came the Mexican War – and the Country was resounding with the glories of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, and to the surprise of the whole Nation and the enlightened world, the President is found furnishing the enemy with the most skillful and experienced leader belonging to his nation – then another battle takes place and an armistice is agreed upon – the County is informed that the General in command is ordered to terminate it at once and push on; and then we are surprised to find him standing still with leave to do as he pleases – the difficulties of the campaign thicken and the Secretary of War informs the country that no more Volunteers are wanted, and that the General has enough and more than enough men for his purposes; and then in a few days afterwards the whole Country is surprised by a call for Nine Regiments of Volunteers for immediate service in the War against Mexico. Well we suppose there may be some truth in the charge that this surprisingly incompetent Administration for the conduct of a War, were hard up had kept dark until they got the loan of the five millions, and then [...] out for more troops. The 16th of November was the very day upon which the loan was secured, and that is the very date of the call for the Volunteers. Another account is that the call was induced from information received through a letter from Col. Ballie Peyton, lately arrived at New Orleans from Monterey, and addresses to the Hon. John Y. Mason, Secretary of the Navy. Col. P., it will be remembered, was with General Worth’s Division at Monterey, and was upon most intimate terms with him and General Taylor. It is said he deems a very strong reinforcement of Gen. Taylor absolutely necessary to meet the enemy under Santa Anna. What will be the next surprise, no one can – tell – we hope it will be an agreeable surprise. The way to do the work is to get men and money enough if they are to be had, and prosecute the War to a speedy termination. We are in for it now – and let us come out of it, as soon as possible. The people we are sure do not want this War hanging like an incubus upon, the prosperity of the Country for five years yet to come.

The Surprise Administration

Thursday, November 26, 1846 MG46i47n39p3c3 555 words

A Plum for the Official Organ

There is a paper in Indiana, calling itself the Indiana Democrat, which aspires, and we admit with success, to place itself at the very head of the purely Polk Press. In a recent number the following paragraph [sic] appears:

"The President planned the brilliant battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma and Monterey, and is entitled to as much or more credit for the successful result of them then General Taylor is. The wisdom, efficiency, and promptness of the present Administration are seen and appreciated by all sensible men, who are not willfully blinded, and time will only make it more apparent."

We must have this in the official organ. – It will not do to let the court journal be outdone as a courtier. How gratified Mr. Polk will be hear that he did so much, nay more than Gen. Taylor, at the brilliant battles of the 8th and 9th of May on the Rio Grande! It is true that Mr. Polk did not know the battles were to be fought till they were over, and he heard of them and the success of the American arms at the same time. But what of that? – Baltimore Patriot.

[AMB]
From Mexico, Latest from Monterey

Confirmation of the Death of Capt. Ridgely -- Santa Anna with 12,000 Men and 37 Generals

From the Baltimore Sun, Nov. 23.

The steamship Virginia, Capt. Tucker, arrived at New Orleans on the 13th inst. from Brazos Santiago, bringing later dates from the Army. We regret to say that the report touching an accident to Capt. Randolph Ridgely was well founded. That gallant officer is no more. A whole nation will lament his loss. - Mr. Haile, the special correspondent of the Picayune writes as follows: -

"Maj. Deshields, U. S. Paymaster, who left Monterey two days after us, and overtook us at Camargo, brought intelligence that has cast a gloom over every heart. He states that on the 25th ult., the day after we left, as Capt. Ridgely was riding into town to dine with Lt. Mackall, his horse slipped on the smooth pavement, and he was thrown with such violence against a rock as to cause severe fracture of the skull! He lay senseless when Maj. Deshields left, on the following day, and no hope of his recovery was entertained by the surgeons. In parting with this splendid young officer, I little thought that before I reached home it would become my duty to chronicle so painful an event concerning him.

"The world never produced a braver man or better soldier then Randolph Ridgely. A nobler spirit was never encased in the human form -- a kinder heart never beat. I cannot bring myself to feel that the gallant Ridgely has died thus; the thought is too cruel to be entertained. I can well imagine the heart-rending emotions of the comrades who surrounded him. They have seen him emerge unscathed from several battles, where he behaved with almost unparalleled heroism. They all loved him, for he was kind, frank and generous to every one.

'Hold on Charley, and let me draw theft fire!'

"Poor Ridgely! - how many a brave comrade would have drawn upon himself the shaft of death to have averted it from thee."

With regard to the death of Capt. Ridgely, a letter to the Picayune, dated Monterey, Oct. 30, announces his death and burial on the 29th, lamented by the whole army. A gentlemen who arrived in the Virginia, states that Gen. Taylor was greatly afflicted by this sad casualty, and expressed himself in relation to it in the most feeling matter. He declared in the presence of several, that Capt. R. was an invaluable officer, and that his place could not be filled.

A letter to the Picayune, dated Oct. 29, says: Poor Ridgely is dead! He was buried yesterday, and is mourned by the entire army. Major Lear will not live twenty-four hours longer. We have late news from San Luis de Potosi, to the effect that Santa Anna was there with 12,000 men and no less than thirty-seven Generals. He was recruiting daily, but his intentions were not known. It is rumored that Bustamente has gone north, in the direction of Chihuahua, to meet Gen. Wool; and farther, it is positively asserted that the Indians are killing and laying waste all before them in the latter state.

The New Orleans Delta, of the 14th instant, has intelligence from Monterey, through one of the officers of the army, of which it gives the following summary:

Major Eaton, the bearer of despatches [sic] to Gen. Taylor, who had left Washington before the government has been informed of the battle of Monterey and its results, had reached camp some days previously to the departure of Mr. Salomon. The purport of these despatches [sic] were believed, or known to be, instructions or advice from the War Department to march on to Tampico, if, after a full survey of his position, he felt himself justified in doing so. The battle of Monterey, of course, in a great measure, rendered these orders null and the General's movements will, necessarily, be guided by the despatches [sic] of which Major Graham was the bearer, for they were written with a full knowledge of what has transpired.

Postscript! Latest from Mexico! Bombardment of Tobasco! Lieut. Morris Killed! Mexican Letters of Marque!

We stop our press to give a short synopsis of the news by the Mail of yesterday evening from Mexico. Com. Perry, with a detachment of vessels under his command, undertook an expedition against the City of Tobasco, which was successfully bombarded and made to surrender. The people were in favor of yielding at once, but the Governor and Army opposed it. Thereupon the women and children were ordered to get out of harm's way, but the Governor would not permit them, so that it is feared that most of those killed during the bombardment were not soldiers.

Lieut. C. M. MORRIS was wounded in the neck by a musket ball while attempting to carry orders to Lieut. PARKER, who was engaged on shore in a spirited fight with the Mexican soldiers. Lieut. M. stood up in his boat and cheered the men most gallantly until he fell in the arms of Midshipman CHEEVER, who was with him. The inhabitants sought refuge in the cellars during the cannonading, and thus escaped destruction. Com. PERRY has abandoned Tobasco – his force not being sufficient to keep possession of it. There is a Mexican force of six to eight thousand at Alvarado. They have placed across the mouth of the river three strong chain cables, and sunk vessels on the bar. It will be useless almost to undertake the place again by a Naval force. -- Letters of Marque and Naturalization papers have been issued by the Mexican Government, conferring the rights and privileges of Mexican citizens upon all who would sail under them.

We have also some more news from SANTA ANNA; he is at San Luis Potosi with 20,000 men, and is daily being reinforced. He writes to the Government that as soon as his plans were finished, he intended to march at the head of his army to meet Gen. TAYLOR, whom he expects to crush. He wants to concentrate his whole force at one point, so that he can direct a large force in any direction that they may be needed.

All of the Volunteers and Malitia [sic] are ordered to rendezvous at Potosi. Gen. VALENCIA has been appointed by SANTA ANNA second in command. A ditch to surround the whole city has been commenced. At Vera Cruz an attack was expected on the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa. The garrison of the city consisted of about 1500 men, and about 2000 more were expected from the surrounding country.

The Republicano of the 22nd ult., states that the English have offered to mediate between us and Mexico, and the British fleet at Lisbon had been ordered to proceed to Vera Cruz. Gen. WOOL finding the route to Chihuahua impracticable, had abandoned it, and was on his road to join Gen. TAYLOR. The gallant Maj. LEAR who was wounded at the battle of Monterey, has since died.

[AMB]

---

Thursday, November 26, 1846 MG46i47n39p4c2 24 words

Army in the West

The latest intelligence from the West show that Lient. Col. FREMONT was acting governor of California. There is nothing very interesting from Santa Fe.

[AMB]

---

Thursday, November 26, 1846 MG46i47n39p4c5 124 words

Volunteers for Mexico

A meeting of all persons disposed to respond to the Proclamation of the Governor of Virginia, is requested at the Court House on Friday evening next, 27th inst. at 7 o’clock.

Men of Virginia! Citizens of Berkeley County! Let it not be said that you have exhibited backwardness when the voice of your Country is ringing in your ears, demanding your aid in the prosecution of a just and righteous war. The Federal Government has called upon Virginia for one Regiment. The Chief Magistrate of the State has issued his Proclamation calling upon the noble spirits of the Commonwealth to enroll themselves in that Regiment. Can it be that Berkeley will prove recreant to such a call?

Several Speeches may be expected.

Nov. 25.

[AMB]

---

December

The information on this site is intended for personal, non-profit, and/or educational purposes only.
Index

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p1c3 Words: 992
LATE FROM THE RIO GRANDE.
Troop movements of General Taylor's army as he prepared to attack northern Mexico.

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p1c3-4 Words: 1305
Later and important from Mexico.
Santa Anna began to tax the church in order to increase the strength of his army, and the Yucatan government battled rebels.

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p2c2 Words: 693
Interesting News from the South
A rumor that Tabasco will secede from Mexico if the central government does not provide more men for its defense. In addition, Mexicans attacked Tampico and were repulsed by General Taylor.

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p2c6 Words: 255
The War
An editorial demanding Polk justify American aggression in Mexico.

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p3c2 Words: 274
No title
Mr. Preston, a congressman, introduces a bill to end the war with Mexico.

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p1c4 Words: 168
Americans sometimes wear Mexican Blankets!
A short story about American troops wearing Mexican blankets.

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p2c1 Words: 339
News from Mexico
Mexican troops under Santa Anna advance toward GeneralJessup, and the arrival of Virginia volunteers for General Taylor's army.

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p2c6 Words: 1040
FROM MEXICO
LATE FROM THE ARMY
Taylor concentrates troops at Monterrey in order to attack Santa Anna. Santa Anna responds by moving to attack Saltillo.

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p3c2 Words: 236
UNITED STATES ARMY
An advertisement for regular troops to join the United States for the Mexican War.

January 21, 1847 MG47v47n47c5p1 Words: 340
No Title
An article reprinted from the New York Courier listing the amount of troops under GeneralTaylor's command, and an estimate of the cost of fighting the war.

January 21, 1847, MG47v47n47p1c4 Words: 1806
Proceedings in Congress
A congressional debate about President James Polk's handling of the Mexican war. The debate is very critical of Polk.
and considers the cost of continuing the war.

January 21, 1847, MG47v47n47p2c6 Words: 508
FROM MEXICO
VERY LATE FROM THE GULF OF MEXICO
Commodore Perry arrives at Laguna and destroys Mexican munitions.

January 21, 1847, MG47v47n47p2c6 Words: 1020
Latest from Monterey, &c
A report that Santa Anna attacked Saltillo proved unfounded, and a battle between the Mexican and American armies looks unlikely.

January 21, 1847, MG47v47n47p3c1 Words: 118
No Title
An account of General Taylor's victory over Indians tribes in northern Mexico.

January 28,1847, MG47v47n48p1c6 Words: 135
The War Balloon
An article about a proposed "war balloon," a hot air balloon loaded with cannon and used to attack Mexican cities.

January 28,1847, MG47v47n48p1c6 Words: 100
No Whiskers Under General Worth
General Worth does not allow his men to grow beards because of an upcoming parade through Saltillo.

January 28,1847, MG47v47n48p1c7 Words: 62
Victory or Death
A short, humorous story about a young soldier that does not believe in "victory or death.

January 28,1847, MG47v47n48p2c3 Words: 1463
Will there be a peace?
This article is about the growing peace movement in the United States.

January 28,1847, MG47v47n48p2c3 Words: 301
Latest from Mexico
The movements of General Taylor's army throughout northern Mexico is the focus of this article.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p1c5 Words: 136
FOUND OUT AT LAST.
A report from BRUTUS that Robert Walker will take over the Mexican War finances, and that the war will end soon.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p1c6 Words: 111
Jersey Girls in Mexico.
Gen. Wool's troops came across four young women from New Jersey who superintended female operatives in a cotton and woolen factory.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c2 Words: 629
No title
The House of Representatives delays the discussion of the three million-dollar war bill.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c2 Words: 156
GEN. TAYLOR'S LETTER.
An editorial musing about to whom General Taylor's letter (printed later in paper) was addressed.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 375
THE EXECUTIVE AND THE ARMY
This article was an editorial about the friction between General Taylor and President Polk.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 268
ARMY GENERAL ORDER.
The President's censure of General Taylor, a response to a letter Taylor sent to an unnamed recipient.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 226
THE "POOR MAN'S SHIRT."
This article criticized the "Locofocos" for their anti-tariff position.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 114
SENIOR CORWIN
Senator Corwin supported General Taylor against the Democrats. The Democrats were attacking Taylor because of his letter.

"ROUGH AND READY."
This article was a letter from General Taylor that was very critical of President Polk's handling of the war.

THE WAR—Extract of a letter from an officer, dated
This article was a compilation of rumors about the position and strength of Santa Anna's army.

LATEST NEWS!
LATE FROM MEXICO.
Colonel May engaged a Mexican force outside Tampico

REPORTED MILITARY MOVEMENT
This account was rumors of General Taylor's movements throughout northern Mexico.

ARMY INTELLIGENCE
An officer's letter that reported upon the movements of General Wool in northern Mexico.

Miscellany.
An unsigned editorial that supported General Taylor's letter and its criticisms about the president.

No Title
This article presented the president's condemnation of Taylor's letter.

A CROOKED SUBJECT
This article was a geographic description of the Rio Grande.

CENSURE OF GEN. TAYLOR
This article was a description of General Taylor's censure from the Administration, and a criticism of that censure.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS
The three million-dollar bill was being debated by congress in this article.

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE MANNIKINS.
A comparison between General Taylor and Gulliver (of Gulliver Travels fame) and how they were "betrayed" by little people.

JUSTICE TO GEN. TAYLOR.
This article was critical of the House of Representatives censure of General Taylor. The House of Representatives censured Taylor because of a letter sent to a friend.

ATTENTION, BLUES!
An advertisement for the formation of a new volunteer unit for the war in Mexico.
GENERAL TAYLOR'S LETTER
This was another article supporting General Taylor's criticisms of President Polk.

No Title
This article accused the President of trying to give take General Taylor out of the war.

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE VOLUNTEERS
An account of a visit General Taylor paid to an Illinois volunteer regiment.

LETTERS FROM OFFICERS
This was an editorial defending the rights of newspapers to print letters of officers, even if the letter is not intended for publication.

MEXICAN PLAN OF THE WAR
An article originally printed in a Mexican newspaper that supposedly described the Mexican strategy for the war.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, &c.
The House of Representatives passed the three million dollar bill in order to hasten the end of the war.

FROM THE LEGISLATURE,
The Virginia House of delegates and the Senate passed a law that thanked the American Army for its bravery.

CAPITULATION OF MONTEREY.
This account followed the American Army's occupation of Monterrey and the surrender of the city to General Taylor.

Memoranda of the transactions in connexion with the capitulation of Monterrey, capital of Nueva Leon, Mexico. This article was another description of the fall of Monterrey to American forces.

No Title
Transcription of the terms of surrender imposed on Monterrey.

NEW MODE TO CLOSE THE WAR
This article reported on an idea from a New York man that war bonds could help the United States win the war.

THE "UNION" AND THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.
This was a lengthy editorial defending the rights of newspapers to print letters from officers in the army.

DEPARTURE OF THE VOLUNTEERS.
A company of volunteers from Martinsburg march to help General Taylor in the Mexican War.

BIRTH-DAY CELEBRATION.
A unit of volunteers in General Taylor's army celebrated the birthday of George Washington.

NEXT PRESIDENCY AND VICE-PRESIDENCY,
An article that nominated two Whig congressmen for president in 1848.
TWEEDLEDUM AND TWEEDLEDEE.
An article, reprinted from another paper, criticizes that Wilmot Proviso.

SWORDS FOR THE VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.
A gift of several swords was made to a unit of volunteers leaving for the front.

LATEST NEWS FROM THE ARMY.
A short skirmish between American and Mexican forces in northern Mexico resulted in an American victory.

LIST OF ACTS
A series of bills passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate, which dealt with the war and the families of fallen soldiers, mainly officers.

INTERESTING FROM OREGON & CALIFORNIA.
A Mexican attack on an American Garrison was repulsed. In addition, the American Navy attacked Guymas, a Mexican town.

SLAVERY IN MEXICO.
This article accused Mexico of having slavery in all but name because of the harsh treatment of the peons.

No Title
A transcription of a toast given supporting American troops; the event calling for the toast is not mentioned.

THE VIRGINIA VOLUNTEERS.
This was a letter from an officer describing the journey to Point Isabel and the surrounding territory.

IMPORTANT CORRESPONDENCE.
This article was an account of the resignation of General Butler.

LATEST NEWS!
LATE FROM MEXICO.
IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.
The Mexican Catholic Church succeeded in keeping Santa Anna from taking their land in order to fund the war with the United States.

THE THREE MILLION BILL
An editorial that questioned how the Mexican people would view the leader that accepted the three million dollars from the Americans at the end of the war.

THE ISLAND OF LOBOS
A letter from an officer was printed describing the Island of Lobos, which was the likely staging point for an American attack on Vera Cruz.

List of deaths among the Volunteers at Old Point.
This report listed the death of several volunteer officers in service to General Taylor's army.

MR. RIVES' LETTER.
A letter from an officer that described the movements of General Twigg as he prepared to march to Vera Cruz.

No Title
An editorial that criticized President Polk's motives and handling of the war against Mexico.

List of deaths among the Volunteers at Old Point.
WHICH CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS.
This was an article that focused on what candidates were nominated to run for congress by the Whig party. An important consideration for these candidates was their view of the war in Mexico.

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p2c3 Words: 697
ANTHONY KENNEDY, ESQ.
A correction about concerned with Anthony Kennedy's views on the war in Mexico. Kennedy was portrayed as being in favor of the war when he was not.

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c1-2 Words: 1661
LATEST NEWS! LATE FROM MEXICO. Most important from Mexico.
LATE FROM THE ARMY. BATTLE BETWEEN GENLS. TAYLOR AND SANTA ANNA.
A large battle near Saltillo was the focus of this article. General Taylor with 5,000 American defeated 20,000 Mexicans under the command of Santa Anna.

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c2 Words: 777
IMPORTANT FROM TAMPICO.
American troops departed for an assault on Vera Cruz, which the newspaper stated would be soon.

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c3 Words: 103
HIGHLY IMPORTANT!
A letter from a volunteer officer to the governor of Louisiana requesting 10,000 men.

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c3 Words: 153
From an Officer of the Virginia Volunteers.
A letter from an officer stated that several rumors had been circulated that General Taylor had fought at Saltillo.

MGv48i5p1c5, April 1, 1847: Headquarters Army of Occupation
From Taylor-announcing the arrival of Gen. Wool; everything is quiet around Saltillo; urging the movement of supplies forward; no very recent intelligence from the interior; report that he including a list of killed, wounded and missing

MGv48i5p1c5, April 1, 1847: Gen. Taylor's Latest Letters
Change of headquarters to Agua Nueva; information on troops coming and joining; even though he was advised by Scott to leave Agua Nueva he won't for various reasons-water supply, moral, occupying the pass is important; Santa Anna could establish himself strongly here; no intelligence from the interior

MGv48i5p2c2, April 1, 1847: In Congress
A bill in the Congress to allow the President to accept the services of volunteers-information on the bill and the ratification of it

MGv48i5p2c2, April 1, 1847: Who Speaks by the Card
Quote from Mr. Bendiger about the war-not in favor of it, sees it a conquest

MGv48i5p2c3, April 1, 1847: Gen. Scott and Gen. Taylor
Letter from Gen. Scott which show his friendly feelings towards Taylor; report on Scott taking troops from Taylor-letter informing Taylor of this

MGv48i5p2c6, April 1, 1847
Report of Indians and half-breeds killing US troops in Mexico

MGv48i5p2c6, April 1, 1847
Quote from the New York Courier about the movements of Santa Anna

MGv48i5p2c6, April 1, 1847
Report that Santa Anna cannot enter Saltillo

MGv48i5p2c7, April 1, 1847: Victory! Victory!
Repulse of Santa Anna; information on the attack of Gen. Taylor by Santa Anna at Agua Nueva; -details on the attack

MGv48i5p2c7, April 1, 1847: Later from Havana
Information of the arrival of ships; mentioning of the Indian massacre of Americans in California

MGv48i5p2c7, April 1, 1847: Important Rumor
Rumor of the surrender of the castle of San Juan

MGv48i6p1c5, April 8, 1847: Treasury Tariff for Mexico
Secretary of the Treasury has prepared a tariff of duties to be raised on all imports into Mexican ports which the US no have under their control
MGv48i6p2c2, April 8, 1847: Mr. Kennedy-his address
Information on comments given by Mr. Kennedy with regards to his position on the war

MGv48i6p2c, April 8, 1847: Rough and Ready
Taylor’s officers proposed to fall back at Buena Vista but he said no

MGv48i6p1c4, April 8, 1847: Col. Cushing
Arrival of Col. Cushing on his way to Mexico-quote about his ability and talents

MGv48i6p1c2, April 8, 1847: Adventure of three midshipmen in Mexico
Extract from a private log-book; narrative about the events that happen to three midshipmen-includes details about run in with the enemy

MGv48i6p1c3, April 8, 1847: Battle of Buena Vista
Comments on the coming details about the Battle of Buena Vista; speaks of the heroism of Gen. Taylor and his men; Santa Anna after this loss once he receives his reinforcements will have to attack again

MGv48i6p2c3, April 8, 1847: Latest from Mexico
Rumors that Santa Anna was on his way to attack Taylor; Santa Anna sent Taylor a message to surrender but Taylor said no; details about the battle

MGv48i6p2c4, April 8, 1847: Official Despatches From General Taylor’s Camp
Information on troop activities; copy of the surrender letter sent by Santa Anna; copy of Taylor’s reply to Santa Anna; information on troop positions after the battle-US holding, Mexicans not yet at Agua Nueva; information on condition of the Mexican troops after the battle MGv48i6p2c5, April 8, 1847: Important from Vera Cruz!

Description of the successful landing of US forces; water and supplies cut off from the city; Alburtis killed

MGv48i6p2c6, April 8, 1847: Scott’s Official Despatches
Report from after the fall of Vera Cruz; information of the successful taking of the city-more details of the taking of the city; information on troop movement; report of the consuls inside the city-US agrees to safeguard them

MGv48i6p2c7, April 8, 1847: Reported Capture of Vera Cruz Report of where the information of the report of capture came from MGv48i5p3c1, April 8, 1847: Gen. Taylor Victorious!

News of the victory at Buena Vista received-number of killed and wounded, Santa Anna’s army destroyed, and loss of Col. Yell, M’Kee, Hardin and Henry Clay Jr.

MGv48i7p1c2, April 15, 1847: On the Events of War
Column on what the purpose of the war is-so many deaths and for what? What is gained?-comments on a few of those who died MGv48i7p2c4, April 15, 1847: Capitulation of the Caste of San Juan!

Surrender of the city of Vera Cruz to the Americans under the command of Gen. Scott; garrisons have surrendered to the Americans including officers; total American losses-list of officers killed and wounded

MGv48i7p2c4, April 15, 1847: Further from Vera Cruz
 Arrival of Com. Perry; violent norther and vessels lost; rumor of Santa Anna moving closer to the capital

MGv48i7p2c4, April 15, 1847: Another Great Battle in New Mexico
Details of the battle won by the Americans in New Mexico

MGv48i7p2c5, April 15, 1847: Later from the Brazos
Arrival of a transport schooner; Gen. Taylor arrived with the Mississippi Regiment and Kentucky riflemen; Taylor hunting for Urrera; Kentucky cavalry are here; information on other regiments that are present; correspondence of the Picayune-news of Taylor looking for Urrera and Canales; Train of wagons left Matamoras for Camargo; train of teams leaving for the Rio Grande; account of an officer who visited Vera Cruz and the castle after its surrender

MGv48i7p2c5, April 15, 1847: General Taylor-Colonel Clay Letter to Colonel Clay about the death of his son by Taylor

MGv48i7p2c6, April 15, 1847: The Administration and General Taylor
Comments on Gen. Taylor’s decision to remain and not fall back to Monterey

MGv48i7p2c1, April 15, 1847: Vera Cruz and the Castle of San Juan
News of the surrender of Vera Cruz and the castle haven given rise to praises of Gen. Scott MGv48i7p2c1, April 15, 1847: More Aid and Comfort!
Quote from the Rockingham Reg. and comments about it—quote speaking of anti-American and against the war

MGv48i7p2c2, April 15, 1847: Polk and Santa Anna
Santa Anna paid first part of debt owed to the U.S.

MGv48i7p2c2, April 15, 1847: Prospect of Peace
Santa Anna put down the revolution in the capital; Santa Anna might be able to make peace or continue the war, which ever best suits him

MGv48i8p1c1, April 22, 1847: Official Despatches
Official despatches of Scott dealing with the battle last week—details on the fighting and troop movement

MGv48i8p1c2, April 22, 1847: Headquarters of the Army
Information on the movement of troops around the city of Vera Cruz; weather report and how the norther effected the siege; praises of the conduct of the army; terms of capitulation of the city of Vera Cruz and the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa

MGv48i8p1c3, April 22, 1847
Death of the son of ex-Gov. Lincoln of Massachusetts, Clay has left New Orleans after the news of his son's death

MGv48i8p1c4, April 22, 1847: The War of 1812 and 1846
Comments on the recent comparisons of the Whigs of 1846 with the Federalists of 1812; states the differences between the two

MGv48i8p1c4, April 22, 1847: Printers in the Army
Scott ordered the printers in his army to step forward—he had wanted some orders printed but had been told by the Tampico Sentinel that there wasn't enough workers on hand to do it

MGv48i8p2c1, April 22, 1847: Gen. Taylor and the Union
Comments on the response by many to the nomination of Taylor for President; praises of Taylor for his success

MGv48i8p2c2, April 22, 1847: Gen'l Taylor for the Presidency
Report of Taylor being nominated for President by the Richmond Republican;

MGv48i8p2c2, April 22, 1847: The Presidency
Report that the Administration has not entirely destroyed the credit of the country—comments on the debt gained by the administration

MGv48i8p2c3, April 22, 1847: From Vera Cruz to Mexico
Article on the distance from Vera Cruz to Mexico

MGv48i8p2c3, April 22, 1847: President Polk—Gen. Taylor
Popularity of Taylor has caused Polk to adopt policies that are unfair towards the General—trying to undermined his popularity

MGv48i8p2c5, April 22, 1847: Lieutenant Gen. Benton's Plan
Benton's plans are still in the work; Benton disapproves of the actions taken by Taylor and Scott for their victories

MGv48i8p2c5, April 22, 1847: The Presidency
Report on how General Taylor has been brought forward as the candidate for President by a large number of Whig papers; his wins have shown a good omen in his presidential nomination

MGv48i8p2c6, April 22, 1847: Late from Mexico
General Taylor has returned to Saltillo; impression is that he will push to San Luis

MGv48i8p2c6, April 22, 1847: Late from Vera Cruz
Announcement of arrival and departure of ships; an expedition has left Vera Cruz headed by Gen. Quitman; Gen. Worth engaged in establishing a government at Vera Cruz; list of passengers that came by the Alabama; list of vessels of war left at Vera Cruz

MGv48i8p2c6, April 22, 1847: Later from Vera Cruz
Capt. Hillard arrived at N. Orleans from Vera Cruz; report from the capital state that the revolution has not ended; paper published the terms offered by the U.S for peace

MGv48i8p2c6, April 22, 1847: Later from Mexico
Santa Anna's address to his army, his arrival in the City of Mexico, his inauguration and inaugural address and policy of the new administration
MGv48i8p2c6, April 22, 1847: Capture of Chihuahua
US forces have taken Chihuahua-did not fall until after a battle-details of the battle and events leading up to it

MGv48i8p2c7, April 22, 1847: From New Mexico
Report on the massacre of Taos; US troops proceeded towards the valley of Puebla; Capt. Burguin received a fatal wound; took houses in the valley and a church causing the Mexicans to flee; list of numbers dead on both sides

MGv48i8p2c7, April 22, 1847: Reported Battle Between Gen. Taylor and Urrea
Information on an encounter between Taylor and Urrea; Taylor followed him and made great havoc with the Mexicans; rumors circulating around the Rio Grande

MGv48i8p3c1, April 22, 1847: Latest from the Brazos
Rumors that Taylor met up with Urrea are not true; train was to leave Camargo under the escort of the Virginia Regiment; 8 companies of Massachusetts regiments were stationed at Camargo; Gen. Lamar going on to Sabinas and from there to Monclova

MGv48i8p3c1, April 22, 1847: Latest from Vera Cruz
Group of Americans while on excursion were killed by Rancheros outside the city

MGv48i8p3c1, April 22, 1847: More Volunteers
President has called for 6,000 more volunteer to go to Mexico

MGv48i8p3c1, April 22, 1847
Aide to Taylor passing through Cincinnati horrified to find that several reports on the battle have not told the story right-wrong with regards to the actions of Taylor during the fighting

MGv48i9p1c2, April 29, 1847: Later from Vera Cruz
Report that Alvarado was taken without a fight; army to move to Jalapa; two other cities have fallen without fights; post office been established at Vera Cruz; Correspondence of the Picayune-Cols. Kinney and Banks with Capt. Merrill's company returned from a scout, country full of cattle, Santa Anna as far as Puebla and he was coming to Jalapa; the former Mexican consul has arrived and has received passage to the capital

MGv48i9p1c2, April 29, 1847: The Capture of Alvarado
Capture of Alvarado by Lieut. Hunter; details of the taking of the city; Gen. Quitman arrived with troops and Com. Perry with small vessels; Lt. Hunter has been placed under arrest for disobedience of orders in entering the port of Alvarado

MGv48i9p1c3, April 29, 1847: Our Navy
Comments on the comments of others about the delay by the government in furnishing vessels to the navy; gives praises to the navy for their accomplishments in the war with Mexico-especially the siege of Vera Cruz

MGv48i9p1c4, April 29, 1847: Illinois Troops-Affecting Incident
Information on the Illinois troops-some volunteers-gives information on those killed

MGv48i9p2c5, April 29, 1847
War Department has called on the Governor of Missouri for another regiment of volunteers for the war

MGv48i9p3c1, April 29, 1847: American Arms Victorious
Report on battles in California by Com. Stockton-details

MGv48i9p3c1, April 29, 1847: Later from Mexico
Address issued by Santa Anna to his countrymen-information on assembling troops; encouraging men to fight

MGv48i9p2c4, April 29, 1847: Private Letter from General Taylor
Letter from Gen. Taylor to Gen. Butler-paragraph relating to Taylor's nomination for President, information on the battle of Buena Vista

MGv48i9p2c5, April 29, 1847: Lieutenant Colonel Clay
Report that Clay's last words before he died were about his father

MGv48i9p2c6, April 29, 1847: General Taylor and the Administration
Until the battle of Buena Vista, Taylor was not treated nicely by the War Department-information was sent to Scott not to him, comments on the appointment of Scott in relation to Taylor MGv48i9p2c6, April 29, 1847: What is Gen. Taylor?

Report that Taylor has not voted in several years; does not want to be called a Whig; would have voted for Henry Clay-extracts from several papers that say these things

MG47v48n10p1c1, Thursday, May 6, 1847. POETICAL Rough and Ready The soldier's story
At locofoco meeting recently held in Columbus, Mississippi

The Trophies of War are thus described in a letter from Vera Cruz, to the Auburn Advertiser. The writer presents truly, and without exaggeration, one of those scenes in the progress of War which Gen Taylor says is "enough to fill the whole land with mourning:"

Henry Clay and Zac Taylor

The Volunteers in Mexico.

LATE FROM MEXICO. IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE ANOTHER GLORIOUS VICTORY!!! Battle of Cerro Gordo.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

ANOTHER VICTORY!! CAPTURE OF TUSPAN! A TRIUMPH FOR THE NAVY!

From the N.O. Delta, Extra, May 3, 10 a.m.

THE GAZETTE. CERRO GORDO.

Battle of Cerro Gordo.

INCIDENTS OF THE BATTLE OF CERRO GORDO.

A [ . . . ] LETTER

HORRORS OF WAR.

LATE FROM MEXICO. CAPTURE OF JALAPA AND PEROTE.

Advance of the Army toward the City of Mexico. From the Baltimore American, Day 14

Interesting News.

Later from General Scott’s Army. POSITION OF SANTA ANNA. Proposed surrender of the city of Mexico, Probable Cessation of Hostilities.

Important from the two Armies.

FROM GEN. TAYLOR’S ARMY BUENA VISTA, MEXICO, APRIL 12.

GEN. LA VEGA. The Courrier des Etats Units contains a paragraph in relation to this distinguished Mexican General, which seems to verify the opinion

MG47v48n13p1c3, Thursday, May 27, 1847. From the New Jersey Fredonian.

MG47v48n13p1c4, Thursday, May 27, 1847. From the Baltimore American, May 19. CASE OF LIEUT. HUNTER.

MG47v48n13p2c2, Thursday, May 27, 1847. SEQUESTRATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

MG47v48n13p2c2, Thursday, May 27, 1847. SANTA ANNA’S PASSPORT

MG47v48n13 p2c3, Thursday May 27, 1847. Mejia and Vega

MG47v48n13p2c4, May 27, 1847. THE SANTA ANNA TREASON, ITS CHARACTER AND DESIGNS.

MG47v48n13p2c5, May 27, 1847. GUERRILLA WAR ON THE RIO GRANDE.
From the New Orleans Picayune, May 14.

MG47v48n13p2c5, May 27, 1847. FRONTIER BRIGADE OF CAVALRY, CAMP IN SAN AUGUSTIN, April 4, 1847.

MG47v48n13p2c6, May 27, 1847. An offer of a Swiss Regiment.

MG47v48n13p2c3, May 27, 1847. LATE FROM MEXICO
From the St. Louis Republican, May 17.
LATEST FROM SANTA FE AND CALIFORNIA.

MG47v48n13p2c7, May 27, 1847. From the city of Mexico. PROSPECT OF MORE FIGHTING.
Guerrilla Warfare Commenced. From the Baltimore Sun.

MG47v48n13p4c1 May 271847. THE PRESS IN MEXICO

MG47v48n14p1c1, June 3, 1847. From Prescott’s a "Conquest of Mexico”. THE ANCIENT MEXICANS, OR AZTECS Humans Sacrifices and Cannibals.

V48n14p2c1, June 3, 1847. THE GAZETTE

MG47v48n14p2c2, June 3, 1847. AMERICAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO.

MG47v48n14p2c3, June 3, 1847. THE PRESIDENT RESPONSIBLE FOR THE WAR

MG47v48n14p2c4, June 3, 1847. From the Richmond Republican.

MG47v48n14p2c5, June 3, 1847. LATE FROM MEXICO.

MG47v48n14p2c4, June 3, 1847. LATE FROM THE BRAZOS.

MG47v48n14p2c6, June 3, 1847. LATEST FROM THE BRAZOS
From the New Orleans Picayune, May 23.

MG47v48n14p3c1, June 3, 1847. RETURN OF VOLUNTEERS.

MG47v48n14p3c2, June 3, 1847. Latest from Gen. Scott.

MG47v48n15p2c6, June 10, 1847. TAYLORING.

MG47v48n15p2c6, June 10, 1847. LATE FROM MEXICO. IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

MG47v48n15p2c7, June 10, 1847. FROM GEN. TAYLOR’S ARMY.
January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p1c3 Words: 992

LATE FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

Correspondence of the N. O. Picayune.

BRAZOS SANTIAGO, Dec. 6, 1846

Here I am once more in Texas. Now for what little army new I have been able to gather. It was my good fortune to meet this morning an old friend in a gentleman direct from Monterey, who gave me the data for what follows. My informant left Monterey on the 27th of November. Gen. TAYLOR had returned from Saltillo, and expressed himself pleased with the appearance of the city, which was in quiet possession of the troops under Gen. WORTH. Saltillo is about sixty-five miles from Monterey, and has an elevation of some 2,000 feet above the latter place. The cold, in consequence, is frequently quite intense.—Gen. TAYLOR saw ice while he was there. The most delicious fruits are said to abound in Saltillo. No demonstration against Gen. WORTH had been made by the enemy, although only at the distance of twenty miles from him. His scouts had discovered about 3,000 Mexican cavalry, said to have been sent from San Luis Potosi for the purpose of grazing their horses.

Gen. WOOL had been ordered by Gen. TAYLOR to occupy forthwith the town of Parrus, a small but beautiful place seventy miles northeast of Saltillo. Gen. WOOL would have no opposition at Parras, as the inhabitants were prepared to receive him peaceable. His troops are represented to be in the finest health and discipline.

The ultimate plans of Gen. TAYLOR had not, of course, been fully developed, but sufficient was known to render it quite certain that something like the following outline was to be adhered to. He had received intelligence from the government of the call for additional troops. He would therefore occupy all the posts, towns, &c., either immediately or remotely, on the line of operations to Tampico. Lt. Col. RILEY now occupies Mount Morales with the 2d regiment of U. S. infantry. Gen. TAYLOR would himself take up his line of march for Victoria, where, rumor has it, SANTA ANNA has 10,000 choice troops. This city is indispensably necessary to Gen. TAYLOR, in order that he may secure his lines of communication in an attack upon San Luis Potosi. SANTA ANNA knows its importance, and will no doubt resist its possession by our troops. But I shall not speculate. Gen. TAYLOR intended to march as soon as provisions could be hastened up—which would probably be by the 10th of December—with the 3d, 4th, and 7th infantry, the dragoons under Col. HARNEY, who had arrived at Monterey, BRAGG’s battery, and two regiments of volunteers, which latter had not been designated.—It would seem that Gen. TAYLOR himself attached some importance to the rumor of SANTA ANNA’s 10,000 troops, as he heads in person the expedition against Victoria. After taking this point which he most assuredly will do, it is thought he will make no further demonstration until desired reinforcements reach him from Tampico.

Should Gen. BUTUER’s health admit of it, he will be left at Monterey in command; otherwise Col SMITH, of the Riflers will be detained for that purpose. Gen. BUTLER’s wound was not improving; indeed it is said to be getting worse. The air of Monterey is considered unfavorable to wounded invalids, and the surgeons have advised that all such leave the country if practicable.

It is said, and on good authority, that SANTA ANNA, fearing the Congress about to assemble at Mexico would not carry out his measures, or fully sustain him, under the pretence of putting down another outbreak of the populace, being well aware that Gen. TAYLOR cannot attack him in his strongholds at San Luis for two months or more. SANTA ANNA, it is no news to say, is a most wily foe, and in respect to knowing the position of affairs, has the advantage, from natural causes, of Gen. TAYLOR, and is determined to resist. It is now conceded by the officers of our army generally that the Mexicans will fight. San Luis Potosi is in strong state of defense, and is daily being strengthened still more; and it may be that the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca, and those of Monterey, were but specimens of what may occur before San Luis. Officers believe that a harder fight than any one yet is before San Luis Potosi is one of the richest cities in all Mexico, being directly in the mining districts; and you may depend upon it the Mexicans will make the big stand there. One thing, however is certain: old “Rough and Ready” is not going to be caught again deficient in anything—either in men, munitions or besieging cannon. Nor will he be again caught by “white flags” or treacherous parleys. You may deceive him once, but twice, never! But more of this hereafter. My letter is already too long, and I fear has but little to interest you.

In closing I will add that Maj. Gen. PATTERSON had left Camargo with the Alabama and Illinois regiments, and was conveying these troops down to the mouth of the Rio Grande, intending to go to Tampico by water. Having duly reported his intensions to the commanding general, an express was dispatched, and arrived in time, ordering Gen. PATTERSON to go to Tampico by land. Gen. P. and staff have arrived at Matamoras.

Dec. 10.—Gen. SHIELDS, who is ordered to take command at Tampico, is here, waiting an opportunity to embark. Some four hundred of the Alabama troops will leave here for Tampico by water; the remainder of the regiment will go by land.

Gen. PILLOW goes back from this place to take command in Gen. PATTERSON’s column, which marches for Victoria. Gen. PILLOW was on his way home, as I informed you in a previous letter; but owing to letters received from above, developing something of the future operations of the Army, as well as letters from home rendering it unnecessary for his return, he goes back to his command. His health, too, is greatly improved.

Yours, &c.,
F. A. L.

[HCH]

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p1c3-4 Words: 1305

Later and important from Mexico.

By Steamer to Havana.

The packet-ship Norma, Capt. ELLIS, arrived at New York on Wednesday, with Mexican dates several days later than heretofore received, via: Vera Cruz Dec 2; Mexico Nov. 27; Tampico Nov. 25; and Chihuahua Oct. 20.

The following is furnished by the New York Sun:

The war engrosses public attention, and in recording the efforts making to strengthen SANTA ANNA’s army, the editors and newspaper correspondents generally agree that the last struggle is to be made at San Luis Potosi. No effort is apparent to prepare the public mind for negotiations, except such as casual allusions to the approaching session of Congress and the deliberations of that body upon the melancholy condition of the Republic. The new government works satisfactorily. Arrangements for restoring the State Governments to their former positions under the Constitution of 1824, have been completed in all the late Departments, with great satisfaction to the people.

The Legislature of Yucatan, hitherto the last to hold out against revolutions, met and promptly ratified the reannexation, and the restoration of the Constitution of 1824. next in importance to the meeting of Congress was the election of President. SANTA ANNA positively declines the office, although some of the States have petitioned Government in favor of giving him dictatorial powers. All he asks, or professes to ask, is the title “benefactor of his country.”

Another change has occurred in the Cabinet, owing to the conflicting views of the men in power: Don ANTONIO HARO Y TAMARIZ, Secretary of State, has been superseded by Don JUAN N. ALMONTE. The popular candidate for President is ALMONTE. He unites the masses in his favor. Gen. CANALLIZO is reported to have arrived at Vera Cruz in the steamer from England. Great enthusiasm is said to exist among the people in favor of the army and the war.

The Church has been pressed into the service of the country, government having exacted contributions upon the property of “the secular and regular clergy of both sexes,” to the amount of two millions of dollars, for which drafts have been issued as follows: on the Archbishop $1,000,000; on the Bishop of Puebla $100,000; on the Bishop of Guadalaxara $200,000; on the Bishop of Michoacan $170,000; on the Bishop of Oaxaca $100,000; on the Bishop of Durango $80,000. Popular opinion was in favor of this exaction, as the Church had recently shown itself too officious in the cause of the monarchists.

While these contributions are being levied throughout the county, large amounts of specie are being exported. The steamer Clyde alone took $1,000,000 in specie to England, on the 2d inst. from Vera Cruz. Dispatches from SANTA ANNA were received at the Capital on the 23d ult., dated at San Luis Potosi. He presses the government for more resources.

Accounts from San Luis praise the discipline and valor of the army. There were twenty-five thousand men, with fifty-two pieces of artillery. Five thousand additional troops were expected daily. The magazines of powder and the stores of balls and other missiles are said to exceed belief. Every piece of iron that can be found is converted into pikes or other deadly weapons. In one storehouse alone are two hundred mechanics working day and night, mounting guns and manufacturing munitions of war. There are five hundred in the fortifications, which are being strengthened in every possible manner. One thousand women, filled with enthusiasm in the national cause, had come down to the camp from San Diego and Tlascala, to aid in making articles for the soldiers.

Santa Anna had a grand review of the whole army on the 13th of November. It is described as a magnificent pageant. So overwhelmed was he by the boundless enthusiasm which greeted him as he passed along the lines that his feelings overcame him, and the tears rolled down swarthy cheeks amid the prolonged huzzas of the various regiments, and cries of "Victory or Death!" "God and Liberty" "Long live Santa Anna!" "We will beat the Yankees this time!" &e., &e.

Provisions were pouring into camp in immense quantities. Language is said to fail in attempting a description of the formidable preparations making at San Luis. There, was to be the last great struggle. There, say the newspapers, will the fate of Mexico be decided, and further resistance, it is said, will be useless. Fears were entertained, however, that even there the fortunes of war would be against them, and accordingly we find preparations going on to defend the road to the capital. Forts were being erected at various points and the passes were being strengthened; but these works do not seem to progress very rapidly.

Santa Anna’s evacuation of Tampico is defended on the ground of his inability to resist the vessels of war; and that port being one in which the yellow fever rages fiercely eight months in the year, the editors predict that it will become a grave for thousands of Americans, as it is every year for the invading Spaniards. The burning of the American steamer at Tampico, the wreck of so many United States vessels on the coast, and the loss of prizes taken at Tabasco, are matters which the Mexican editors record with joyous exclamations. The United States frigate Potomac was in a sinking condition at Anton Lizardo.

Four sailors were taken prisoners from an American vessel wrecked at Sotto Vento. Various accounts are given of the burning of the Mexican vessels of war Creole, under the walls of San Juan d’Ulloa. The battlement of the San Miguel saw the United States boat approach the fort, but mistook it for a boat from the British steamer, and made no alarm. Others allege that an alarm was given, but the officers of the fort would not fire for fear of killing their own people. Other versions are given of the affair. The fort begins to be an object of suspicion among the Vera Cruzanos, who seem to think it less formidable to the Americans than they did formerly.

Accounts from Chihuahua to the 20th of October, confirm the arrest of the American traders, six in all, whose property was confiscated. James McGoffin, Henry Connelly and Mr. Francisco were the principal victims and loose large fortunes. Mr. Conolly had been an old resident. Several caravans of Mexicans traders came down about the same time from New Mexico, who reported Gen. Kearney’s departure for California, and Col. Doniphan’s movement upon Chihuahua. Five hundred men were equipped to resist the latter at El Passo del Norte where there is a fort, which they were to occupy.

Indian depredations continue in the central and northwestern department. The "Yankees" were charged with being in league with the savages. Gen. Armijo had been defeated by the Indians, loosing thirty men before he retreated. Porto Paz, in Lower California, was blockaded in October by an U.S. corvette, which made prizes of two Mexican schooners, the Romano and Julia. She then proceeded to Guayamas[Guayaymas?], and ordered the commander to deliver two gun boats which was refused, and on the 7th October the U.S.commander bombed the city.

We find no farther accounts of the rumored insurrection at the City of Angels, in which 150 Americans were said to have been massacred. We have various rumors of Santa Anna’s movements, apparently intended to conceal his real designs. One announces his retreat to Querataro, another puts him on the road to Mexico, a third sends him to Saltillo, &e &e. Two large forts are going up to defend the road to the capital, one at Tlascala and the other at Santiago.

Our advisers by this arrival lead to only one conclusion—a desperate battle is to fought at or near San Luis Potosi. Mexico will have thirty thousand of her best troops in that conflict, and the United States will probably have at least half that number.

[HCH]

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p2c2 Words: 693
Interesting News from the South

We compile from the Southern mail the following interesting items of news from Mexico, the Army, &c, not being able, to give, for want of room, the full details. The N.O. Picayune has dates to the 9th ult. from Campeachy, from which they infer that the outbreaks there indicate determination to sunder all ties with the Government of Mexico. A pronunciamento has also been put forth by the garrison at Tabasco, complaining bitterly against the Government for its neglect of that city while it was contributing liberally to the Treasury. It farther determines that Tabasco will, thus neglected, provide for her own defense, and regulate her internal administration upon a basis more liberal and adequate to the existing War. A union between Yucatan and Tabasco, to throw off allegiance to Mexico, is talked of. Tabasco has placed Senor Tracosis at the head of their movement, “in consideration of his gallant defense of the place against the American squadron.”

Another correspondence has taken place between Santa Anna and Gen. Taylor, but the only item of importance which we find in it, is the following sentence from Santa Anna’s letter—the italics in which are in the Mexican copy:

I believe that I do not deceive myself in assuring you, that neither the Congress, nor any Mexican, will ever be able to listen to overtures of peace unless the national territory be first evacuated by the forces of the United States, and the hostile attitude of their vessels of war be withdrawn. This must be without doubt the preliminary of whatever negotiation may be opened; and it may be permitted to me to declare to you, that the nation, moved by a sentiment of patriotism, and determined to defend at every hazard and inch by inch its territory, will never cease to qualify as it deserves, and as the world has already qualified it, the conduct of the United States; and it will do whatever it can and ought honorably to deserve the title which it bears, of independent and free.

Tampico Attacked—Repulse of the Mexicans—The N.O. Mercury has news from Tampico to the 16th ult. A body of Mexican Cavalry, amounting to about 1,000, had appeared in the vicinity of that place, and coming within range of the artillery, were fired upon and driven off. The garrison at Tampico had been reinforced by the Alabama Volunteers. Gen. Patterson was marshing that way with a considerable force and would supersede Gen Shields in command on his arrival. Gen. Woer, with his forces were at Parras, 115 miles West of Saltillo, where he would take up his winter quarters. His column is in fine health, and in a good state of discipline. The Indiana Volunteers are ordered from Camargo to his lines—when they arrive, he will have about 2,500 men. Gen. Worth is at Saltillo with 1,700 men. Scouting parties are out watching the movement of Santa Anna in the direction of San Luis Potosi. Gen. Butler is in command at Monterey with 2,000 men. Gen. McLung is fast recovering from his wound.

Gen. Taylor left Monterey on the 15th, with an escort of cavalry, for Victoria. Gen. Twides and Col. P.F. Smith with their respective commands, were at Victoria, and previous to the departure of Gen. Taylor from Monterey, Gen. Quitman with his brigade had left for that point. Gen. Taylor, in a conversation with Capt. Yeatman, expressed the opinion that it would be impossible to march upon San Luis Potosi from the northern extremity of his lines until the rainy season sets in to June next.

Capt. Stone with a detachment of seventy men, lately captured a party of two hundred Mexicans in a ranch about thirty-seven miles up the San Juan, together with Capt. Cantova, by whom they had been recruited, and he and the men were taken as prisoners to Camargo. Fifty stand of arms, ammunitions, etc., were taken at the same time.

On the evening of the 16th a Mexican was taken by a guard at Camargo attempting to enter the powder magazine, with a design, it is supposed, to blow it up.

[HCH]

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p2c6 Words: 255

The War—We cannot find room to pursue farther the poor excuses with which the President plaits the war of his own making; nor can it be necessary. There is very little of it with which the public is not already familiar. That Mexico had wronged our citizens and been tardy in making reparations, is most true; true also that we had grievously wronged her, by fitting out military expeditions in open day in our South Western cities to foment rebellion in her provinces and rob her of her territory. Our very Army was moved into Texas in 1836, notoriously to awe her troops and encourage her adversaries. She has her tale of grievances, as least as real and as formidable as ours. Have we not shed blood enough? How many more women and children must we rend and mangle. before the fell spirit of Carnage can be satisfied? Why does not Mr. Polk state plainly on what terms he is ready to make Peace? Why does he not offer to arbitrate, to accept impartial Mediation? Why does he talk of compelling Mexico to pay the enormous expenses of his War when he knows she cannot do it, except by tearing reluctant Departments from her sides/ and making herself a second Poland? Why, O why is he Polk and not a man? ______ Years of National misery and probable bankruptcy, a People debauched by slaughtered and demoniac "glory", a Republic corrupt by conquest and gold won by the red hand, shall sadly answer these questions!

[HCH]

January 7, 1847, MG47v47n45p3c2 Words: 274
Mr. Preston King of N.Y., has revived the Bill of last session for procuring a peace with Mexico—it asks for an appropriation of $30,000 to be in readiness for any proposed resumption of negotiations between the two Governments—prohibits Slavery or involuntary servitude in any territory secured to the United States from Mexico—and asks an appropriation of $2,000,000 towards the settlement of boundaries, &c., and securing any territory which may result from the negotiation between the two Governments. You may rest assured that if this Bill gets fairly before the House, the Northern and Southern allies of Democracy will have a regular pitched battle on the second provision of it, touching the slavery question.

The President sent in a Message to Congress today, recommending the passage of a law for increasing the regular force of the Army by raising an additional ten Regiments, and to correct all defects in the present organization of the army. He also recommends an increase of Officers of the highest grades—and especially the appointment of a General Officer of the highest grades—and especially the appointment of a General Officer to take command of all our Military force in the field. The office to be dispensed with at the close of war.

The House were in Committee of the Whole upon the bill for an increase of the army, and some warm debating took place, but as it is now past the witching hour of night, I must close. I will notice it further when I announce the fate of the Bill to you. The Senate has been doing nothing of much general importance.

Yours, &e., Summers

[HCH]

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p1c4 Words: 168

Americans sometimes wear Mexican Blankets!

We state this for the information of the worthies who forcibly take blankets from the shoulders of the Mexicans of a night, and to prevent them from shooting or robbing Americans by mistake. We don a horongo ourself, and it came near costing us our life on Thursday evening, the 19th ult. About 9 o'clock we were walking up Commercial street to our office, and were met just above the Public store house by a rufiaely looking countryman of ours, who presented a pistol to our head and asked ”how are you?” Surprised at the question and the manner in which it was put, we answered —”pretty well, I thank you , if it concerns you particularly.” ”It is well you spoke English or I should have shot you,” said our interrogator, turning off. He wanted our blanket. We speak English and ”nothin’ else;” so don’t shoot us or steal our blanket, for it is our bed and all our bedding.—Matamoras Flag.

[HCH]

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p2c1 Words: 339

News from Mexico

We direct the attention of the reader to the news which We publish in another column from Mexico. This intelligence has created a good deal of anxiety in the public mind of the country, but we are happy to learn from the Washington Union of the 12th inst. that the War Department has a letter from Gen. Jessup, dated Brazos San Jago, Dec. 25, 1816 in which he says—”We have a report that Santa Anna is advancing on Gen. Worth, and that he is falling back; but I do not credit it. Santa Anna would hardly follow Gen. Wool on his flank. I consider the story as mere gossip.

Extract from a letter to the Editor of the Gazette, dated

Richmond, Va., Jan, 1847

The last Battalion of Virginia Volunteers, consisting of companies commanded by Capts. Carrington, Corse, Scorr, H. H. Archer, and Bankhead, left Richmond on yesterday morning for Old Point Comfort.

They will embark, as soon as transports can be procured, for Point Isabel.

There are three companies now in the city, and those requisite to fill the Regiment will soon be at the rendezvous.

Since the arrival of Col. Hamtranck, his time has been monopolized in making arrangements to hasten the march of the Volunteers to Mexico.

All agree on the opinion, that no one better qualified in every respect, than he, could have been called to the important post which he occupies, and no one doubts but that when he is upon the field of battle, he will show that there is still in the old Dominion “the spirit that breathed in her dead.”
The rumor that Col. Gadsden of South Carolina, has been appointed to take command of the Brigade to which the Virginia Volunteers will be attached, is incorrect. The appointment of Brigadier General will probably be conferred upon Major Gwin of Richmond.

Virginia is entitled to this selection, and the appointment of Maj. Gwin would give universal to North and South Carolina ???????, as in this state.

[From Mexico]

Arrival of the Virginia and Empresario—Later from Tampico—Important from Gen. Worth—Concentration of Troops at Monterey—Saltillo threatened by Santa Anna

The N. Orleans Picayune of Jan. 2 says:--The steamer Virginia, and Cap. Smith, arrived last evening from Tampico, via Brazos Santiago, having left the Brazos on the 27th ult.—The brig Empresario, Capt. Collins, which sailed from Tampico on the 26th, also arrived last night. By these vessels we have received letters from Mr. Lunsden, at Tampico.

We have conversed with a gentleman who came passenger in the Virginia from Brazos, and who is direct from Monterey. He has kindly furnished us with the following information, which is highly important, if there be no error in the accounts. They were fully credited at the Brazos, and are confirmed by Capt. Brower, of the schooner Robert Mills, who arrived last evening from that port.

An express from Gen. Worth, at Saltillo, arrived at Monterey on the 16th of December. It brought the news that Gen. Worth had learned through his spies that Santa Anna was within three days march of Saltillo, at the head of twenty or thirty thousand men.—The express bore they called upon Gen. Taylor for reinforcements. Gen. Taylor and his staff had left Monterey on the 15th ult—the day before the express arrived—for Victoria, to join his command, which was two days march in advance of him.

Gen. Butler, in command at Monterey, immediately sent off dispatches to Gen. Marshall, at Camargo, and to Gen. Patterson, at Matamores, to send forward without delay all the troops they could spare from their commands.

Gen. Patterson had left Matamoras only the day before the news reached that place.—It was at once forwarded to him, and upon learning its prutport, our informant states that he immediately started on his return with the view to proceed to Monterey.

It was reported at Tampico on the 25th, that a portion of Gen. Patterson’s command had entered Victoria, but it is not mentioned that the General himself had arrived, so that we cannot judge how far the news from the two sources may conflict.

The express reported at Matamoras that the road from Monterey to Camargo was lined with troops.—regulars and volunteers—on their march to Monterey, having been previously ordered up. Our informant says there were four regiments upon the road.

The route from Monterey is infested with predatory bands of rancheros, by which the traveling is rendered insecure. One train had been attached a few days before our informant passed over the road, as had also several small parties, and some few men had been killed and wounded.

We need not say that this news possesses the highest interest. As we write we have verbal reports in regard to it, but hope to receive this morning our correspondence from the army. There is no intrinsic improbability in the news of Santa Anna’s movements, and if he possesses the energy and skill claimed for him, nothing appears more likely that that he should fall like a thunder bolt upon some point in our extended line and hope to crush us. But we have every confidence in the vigilance of Gen. Worth, and his ability to hold the enemy in check until Gen. Wool and Gen. Taylor arrive to his support. We await further intelligence with the utmost interest.

Important Report from Mexico

The New Orleans Mercury of the 31st ult., says: We have received, through the politeness of a commercial house the subjoined extract a letter, written by an intelligent

Gentleman at Tampico:
TAMPICO, Dec. 17th.

"Advises via Vera Cruz were received last evening of the action of the Mexican Congress. They decreed that they will not think on treaty of peace until every hostile foot has cleared Mexican soil, and every vessel that lines her coast is withdrawn. I consider the war now commenced in real earnest, and I prophesy that Tampico will become an American town".

From Santa Fe--The Saint Louis Republican of the 31st ult. says--

At a late hour last night we received a budget of letters from several correspondents in New Mexico. Those from Santa Fe bear date as late as the 15th of November, and give us in detail all of the events of interest which had transpired in that quarter for several weeks previous.

In no part of our correspondence have we been able to find in allusion to the reported defeat of the sixty dragoons, mentioned of which was made in our paper of yesterday.

A letter from Moro, dated on the 21st of November, announces the arrival there of Mr. N. Colburn, in advance of the wagons belonging to the last company of the traders which left Independence. On the 17th they experienced a severe storm of snow, which killed many of the oxen, but they were able to supply themselves at Moro and would get safely into Santa Fe. The United States trains could not, it is said, move a wagon on account of snow and the loss of animals, and they were then buying oxen to get the wagons along.

A wealthy Mexican citizen, seeing the embarrassments of the government’s agent for the want of money, had generously proffered to loan Major Walker, paymaster, one hundred thousand dollars at an interest of only three percent, a month.

General Scott----It having been ungenerously rumored that the late appointment of Gen. Scott to the command of the army in Mexico was objectionable to Gen. Taylor, the New York Tribune makes the following statement;

"We learned from unquestionable sources that as early as August last, letters were received at Washington from confidential friends of Gen. Taylor, some of them indeed in his staff, stating the presence of Gen. Scott would be highly acceptable to him; and this fact we believe was known to the war department before Gen. Scott was assigned to the command.

"We hope, therefore, that no attempt will be made to create unpleasant feelings among the friends the friends of two brave soldiers, who have long been, and still are, on terms of intimate friendship, and are ready to cooperate with each other in the faithful discharge of their respective duties."

January 14, 1847, MG47v47n46p3c2 Words: 236

UNITED STATES ARMY

Recruiting Service-----Wanted, for the United States Army, able bodied men between the ages of 18 and 35 years, being above 5feet 3 inches high, of good character, and of respectable standing among their fellow citizens-----None need apply to enter the service but those who are determined to serve the period of their enlistment honestly and faithfully “during the war” with Mexico.

Beside the monthly pay, one ration per day is allowed every soldier, which is amply sufficient for his subsistence: also, a large supply of comfortable and genteel clothing. Good quarters and fuel are at all times furnished; and every attention will be paid to making those men who may enlist, and are determined to serve their country in good faith, comfortable and contented with their situation. The best medical attendants is always provided for the sick soldier; and no deduction of pay is made during the period he is unable to perform his duty. Should the soldier be disabled in the line of his duty, the laws provide a pension for him.

The sum of two dollars will be paid to any citizen who shall bring to the rendezvous and able bodied recruit, and who shall be regularly enlisted. The citizen should present his recruit to the Lieutenant or Capital, and not to the Recruiting Sargent.

P. H. Galt
Capt. U. S. Artillery
Recruiting Officer

Martinsburg, Va.
Recruiting Rendezvous
Jan. 14, 1847—
The New York Courier, in the course of an article on the war, says that the whole disposable effective force under Gen. Taylor is reduced to 7,000; and that the volunteers now assembling can increase it to only 15,000; a number with which the Administration hope to march into the heart of Mexico, in presence of Santa Anna’s army of 30 or 35,000 men, and the natural obstacles of the country! Surely such an attempt must be madness. The Courier then goes on to remark: "The season for active operations is rapidly passing away; and yet if the Executive and Congress would act with energy, sufficient time remains to assemble an army of from 40 to 50,000 men at Vera Cruz by the first of April, who could pass into the interior and away from the sea coast, before the sickly season commences. To accomplish this, let the volunteer system be abandoned, as exceedingly expensive and very ineffective; and in lieu thereof, let Congress at once authorize the raising of 30,000 regular troops.------Let them offer a bounty of $100 each, and pay each soldier $12 per month and 160 acres of land at the termination of the war.------and the whole number could and would be raised in less than 30 days; certainly in less time than the same number of Volunteers could be raised under existing inducements.”

The Courier states further that the war has already cost double the sum which it would have cost, had we resorted at once to regular troops; that the loss of life in this war has probably exceeded the loss of life in the War of 1812; and that there can be no doubt but we have lost twice the number by disease and private broils! To demonstrate our relative loss in action, now and in the War of 1812, the Courier gives a table of the number of men killed and wounded in the different actions during the last war. In summary more men have already died in this war.

Proceedings in Congress

The aspect of public affairs says the Baltimore American, just now, is calculated to fix the public attention with peculiar interest upon the doings of Congress. A point has apparently been reached at which all parties seem disposed to pause and to seek the shelter of inaction for a while, lest any further step might lead to unknown consequences.

In the absence of a controlling mind at the head of government, the elements of the political sphere are tending toward confusion. There is uncertainty everywhere. The definite purposes of the war policy are not known; the prosecution of the war itself is marked by irresolution and inefficiency; the President, by his reserve, by his want of frank and open dealing with Congress, has lost the confidence of that body; and along with all these causes of embarrassment there are certain grave issues of a domestic nature beginning to assume an imposing prominence in the political affairs of the country. We quote two passages from the proceeding of Congress on Thursday------------------the first extract being the remarks of a Wig Senator; the other from a speech of a friend of administration in the house. The two quotations relate to two of the main subjects of perplexity which now involve the deliberations of Congress. We copy from the National Intelligence’s report of the debate in the Senate on Mr. Benton’s proposition:

"Mr. Crittenden continued. If it were purposed, he said, to carry on this war for any length of time, he though it would be far better to increase the army by enlistments than to make sudden and frequent calls for volunteers. He thought that the necessity of the case required that they should carry on the war vigorously. His sentiments in relation to the war itself were well known and need not be repeated. He regretted the war, he deplored it, and wanted to see it ended, and he should vote for such manners as seemed best calculated to effect this object than to prosecute the war with vigor.------And so long as he remains of this opinion he should be ready to vote for the supply of adequate means for its vigorous prosecution. He has heard other modes suggested, one of which was that our army should fall back and take a position on such a boundary as his government intended to adhere to, and leave the Mexicans to act on the offensive and to prosecute the war against us or not, at their option. He wished he could believe that this mode was the one which was the most likely to bring the war to a speedy and honorable conclusion. And, in his opinion, according to the best view that he could take of the subject, there were no means better calculated to effect this object than to prosecute the war with vigor.------And so long as he remains of this opinion he should be ready to vote for the supply of adequate means for its vigorous prosecution. He has heard other modes suggested, one of which was that our army should fall back and take a position on such a boundary as his government intended to adhere to, and leave the Mexicans to act on the offensive and to prosecute the war against us or not, at their option. He wished he could believe that this mode was the one which was the most likely to bring the war to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion. But if they adopt this course he feared that they would be totally at a loss to know when the war was ended. It was the sword only that could put an end to it; if they were to cease from active operations they would be obliged to stand with arms in their hands, ready at all times to meet any attack which the enemy chose to make; and it seemed to him that a war carried on in this lingering sort of way would lead to the worst results, as regards considerations of humanity, or any other. He would be obliged to any gentleman who would convince him that there was any other mode more humane, more economical of expenditures, of bringing it to a close, but until convinced that there was such a mode, and believing that their only alternative was to bring it to an end by a vigorous prosecution of the war, however deplorable the consequences, he was ready to vote for such measures as tended to promote a vigorous prosecution of the war."

The next extract is from a speech of Mr. Grover, of New York, who belongs to the party of the Administration in the House of Representatives. In reference to the proviso that Slavery should not be admitted in any territory that might be obtained from Mexico, he said:
"There was another reason why the proviso should have been introduced at that time. It had been published through all the North that the result of this Mexican War would be the extension of the area of slavery. The charge had been iterated and reiterated through all that region, that this was a war of the Administration, got up by the South for the very purpose of extending slavery: that conquests in Mexico would be pushed with a view to plant that institution where it did not then exist. Mr. G did not believe this; he could not, he would not believe it. He could not bring himself to believe that there was a single representative on the floor who could for one moment cherish the purpose of using the power of this Confederacy to convert territory, til then free, into slave territory. But he wanted some public legislative declaration in order to satisfy the Northern mind.

"The people of the North felt in doubt whether they should support the war; for though they thought it just in itself, yet they were not willing to engage even in a just war, if it was to be made the instrument for extending the institution of slavery. The Northern mind required, he thought, to be disabused. He therefore said to his friends, give us a declaratory resolution that you have no such design or object in view and that it shall not be done.--------And what had been the result? The Capital South to make such a declaration was giving aid to the enemy, and embarrassing the war. But he appealed to the great Northern heart--------that heart that throbbed in the breast of all the people of that portion of the Union, to say whether such a charge was just. They were willing to bear their arm in the cause of their country; they were ready to furnish both men and means to fight her battles; but they could not engage cordially, if they could not go into the contest with all their soul, if consequences were to attach to victory which they most deplored. Mr. G. sought the proviso in order that he might get a more thorough support for the war. His colleague had been willing to give the two millions asked for to get a peace, but he wanted to satisfy the North that there was no design in its application to extend the limits of slavery.

"Mr. Boyd, of Kentucky, here rose, and asked permission to put to the gentleman from New York an interrogatory.

"Mr. Grover assenting----

"Mr. Boyd wished to know whether that gentleman meant to say, and to act out the declaration, that he would not give men and means for this war unless the restriction should be adopted prohibiting slavery in the new territory?

"Mr. Grover replied that he had never said so, nor did he design to say so. He would give his views very frankly on that question. It was to him immaterial what the South might do, the North were prepared to support, and they would support this war, even without the adoption of that restriction. He thought it inappropriate to make it the condition of a bill to raise troops; but in a bill of the character of that which had been introduced defer of the South, and "her peculiar institutions"--------Mr. Perry of In. followed and made a much more able speech upon this subject than I thought he was capable of--------Mr. Hemline, of Me., supported him, and laid down emphatically to the South what the North meant to do, and stand by, and declared that the North had no disposition to interfere with the existing institutions of the South, but they were unalterably determined that not another inch of territory should be added to the Union in which slavery should exist. Mr. Leake, of Va., and Mr. Bowden of Ala. made warm Southern speeches. Several other speakers participated, mainly however, of the Loco Foco party --------showing most conclusively the love and harmony existing between the wings of the party. Mr. Preston King is daily trying to get his Two Million Bill with the Wihnot proviso before the house, and if he succeeds, you may expect the most excited debate that has occurred for years in Congress. The fact is, I look forward with most fearful forbodings to the agitation of this slave question in Congress, I fear if the union of these states is ever dashed to pieces, it will be against this rock. Such is the evil effect of extension of territory. Here now is the opening of the drama of annexing Texas to this union. It shows the thirst for more, when we have more than enough.

If the object of the Administration be conquest, the curses of the country will be upon them. For my part, I think Mexico has done my country wrong, and I am for making her suffer for it. The war exists, and I am forgiving the government men and money in any necessary amount to prosecute it vigorously and bring it to a close-------but I am opposed to annexing Mexican Territory to this Union or, taking it in permanent satisfaction of our claims against Mexican or the expenses of the war. The moment she is willing to do us justice, and give us security for her faithful discharge of duty, I would recall our troops from her borders and restore her possessions.

Our boundaries are wide enough, let us return to the paths of peace and be content with what we have, and not lascattering our already sparse population – concentrate then upon our own soil – fill up our own States and Territories and spread the various branches of enlightened and improved industry throughout the land – in that way, the United States will become prosperous and great, and take a higher stand among the nations of the Earth, than if she were enabled to clutch the whole territory of Mexico within her grasp.

Let the Union stand as it is – and all parties will be willing to stand upon the compromises upon which it rests – otherwise, and a dark, deep and bloody day perhaps will come upon us. Mr. Thurman started to rue a new point in his speech – it is worthy of discussion, and I will look into it. It is that a State which has been admitted into the Union by Congress with a provision in her Constitution prohibiting Slavery or involuntary servitude, can, after her admission, if she chooses, alter her Constitution and turn herself into a Slave State.
VERY LATE FROM THE GULF OF MEXICO

From the National Intelligencer

The U.S. ?? frigate Mississippi, H. A. Adams, commander, arrived at Norfolk Wednesday morning, having on board Com. M. C. Perry. She left Anton Lizzrdo on the 25th December, and touched at Havana for coal and water.

Comd. Perry arrived in the city yesterday, accompanied by Lieut. Contre, also of the Mississippi, for whom we are indebted for the following information, and for Havana papers:

"On the 20th December, Com. Perry, with the Mississippi, Vixen, Bonita, and Petrel, took possession of Laguna and destroyed the guns and munitions of war found in the forts and town. Commander Sands, with the Vixen and Petrel, was left in charge of the place, and the Bonita was left to assist in holding Frontera and the mouth of the Tobasco river, - Off Alvarado, the Mississippi captured a Mexican schooner, the Amalio, and sent her to New Orleans for adjudication.

"The Mississippi came home for some necessary repairs to her machinery. As soon as she can be completed, she will return to the Gulf of Mexico, ready to assist in any operation contemplated against the enemy.

"Purser A. D. Crossly, of the Mississippi, was killed by falling from aloft on board the Vixen, which vessel he was assisting to pilot over the bar at Laguna, on the occasion of the attack on that place."

From Havana papers of the 7th of this month we learned that on the 3rd of December was published at Mexico a decree of the constituent Congress declaring the election of Capgen. Antino Lopez ded Santa Anna to be provisional President of the Republic, and of Valentin Gomaz Farias to be provisional Vice President of the Republic. In consequence of the absence of the President, and in accordance with the decree of the Congress, the Vice President had assumed the duties of acting President, and taken the oath of office.

The government had recognized as capital agent of Great Britain at San Luis de Potosi during the war with the United States, Senior Juan Davies. Don Valentin Camalieo had been appointed Minister of War and Marine of Mexico.

The subjoined paragraph the only one of any consequence besides those which state the above facts, would seem to authorize an apprehension that the reported advance of Santa Anna upon Saltillo was in reality a movement towards Tampico, were it not that we have ourselves received letters from Tampico of as late date as the 23rd of December, when everything was quiet; which could have hardly been the case had the movement of the body of 5,000 men been in the direction stated in the following paragraph:

From the Vera Cruz Locomotor of the 14th

"We learned by the express of last night tht a division consisting of 5,000 men of all arms moved from San Luis in the direction of Tula with a view to intercept a passage of the enemy who will march their forces by this route in order to place themselves in communication with Tampico."

[HCH]

January 21, 1847, MG47v47n47p2c6 Words: 1020

Latest from Monterey, &c

Report of Santa Anna’s Advance Contradicted

Return of General Taylor toward Victoria

Junction of Forces under Generals Worth and Wool, &c. &c.

The U.S. Steamer Alabama arrived at New Orleans, on the 6th instant, from Brasos Santiago, which place she left on the 3rd. Among her passengers are General Jesup and Staff and thirty others in the cabin, and two hundred and forty sick and discharged soldiers.

The most important item of intelligence by this arrival is, that all idea of an immediate engagement has passed over--------the report of the advance of Santa Anna upon Saltillo being unfounded. The New Orleans Times has the following explanation of the origin of the report, and the movements consequent upon it: General Worth on the 16th ultimo received information from two scouts that the Mexican General and Chief had left San Luis de Potosi, at the head of a body of 15,000 cavalry, with the intention to fall on the American Division at Saltillo, which he imagined he could easily crush. After this, he proposed attacking Gen. Wool, and, if similar success attended him to repair to Monterey and capture or destroy the magazines in public stores which lay there. General Worth, without attaching more importance to the report than it seemed to merit, for with dispatched expresses to General Taylor, Wool, and Butler, acquainting them with what he had heard, leaving it entirely to them to act in the premises. The express over took General Taylor a short distance from Monterey on the route to Victoria. He immediately returned to his old encamping ground near Monterey, with the whole of this division, and then waited further advices. After remaining three days, during which he received information of the improbability of the report of Santa Anna’s advance, he again took up the line of march and proceeded (on the 23rd) onward to Victoria. Meanwhile, Gen. Wool, who had been informed of the rumor current at Saltillo, called in all of his detached commands, and at the head of his division, 3,000 strong, quitted Parras on the 18th ultimo, and, by arrangements previously made, was to enter Saltillo on the 23rd of Furthest, pushing forward with all practical speed. General Butler had previously reached Saltillo from Monterey. During this time the intelligence of the reported advance of Santa Anna had reached other more distant points of the line of occupation, and troops, already under orders to march toward Monterey, hastened their progress onward. It appears that Generals Taylor and Worth, on mature reflection, readily discovered the improbability of the report of Santa Anna’s advance on and near proximity to Saltillo, from the following facts: 1st. The distance between San Luis de Potosi and Saltillo was too great to admit of the possibility of the march of so large a body as 15,000 men, without timely notice to the American General to preoare for his reception. 2dly. The ground between the two cities is exceedingly bare of vetrude, or other means of sustenance for man or beast---------ninety miles of which as is well known, being an arid desert, divert of fountain, running stream, or any other source of water, besides affording not the least chance of getting food or fodder being almost uninhabited throughout its wide extent. The report of the Mexican scouts, however is said to have been corroborated by information received at Saltillo, in a letter from an English merchant at San Luis de Potosi, who stated that Santa Anna had positively at the head of a numerous body of cavalry. Even now in those parts of Mexico occupied by our troops it is admitted that Santa Anna is out with a considerable mounted force, but with objects far different from those attributed to him by the scouts.

For much of the above information we are indebted to Major Butler, Paymaster U.S. Army, attached to the division of General Wool, who visits the city on business. Major B. left Parras on the 17th ultimo, where General Wool’s division lay. He states that he troops were in excellent health and spirits, no casualty of moment having occurred for sometime. The inhabitants of the country which the troops has traversed from San Antonio, had manifested the greatest good feeling towards the Americans not a symptom of that hostility which the population of the valley of the Rio Grande had so frequently exhibited, had been observed.

We have been favored with the following extract of a letter, from an officer in the Army dated Brazos Island, January 3, 1847: "The news from Saltillo has dispelled the anxiety created by the reports from that vicinity in reference to the approach of Santa Anna in force.

"General Taylor received General Worth’s express on his route South, retracted his steps, and had advanced with a portion of his troops toward Saltillo, when he was notified by General Worth that General Santa Anna who was still at San Luis de Potosi, and that he (Worth) had been deceived by small parties of the enemy. General Taylor there upon promptly resumed his march for Victoria.

"General Scott and staff are at Camargo. It is not probable will go beyond that depot, but will return to this place and proceed to Tampico. There is no mystery in the General’s bearing and movements, but much discretion."

The subjoined paragraph we copy from the New Orleans Tropic: Remains of the valiant dead.---------Lieut. Mills brought over in the Alabama the remains of the lamented officers whose names are given below:

Col. Watson, Capt. Ridgely, Lieut. R.H. Graham, late of the 4th Regiment of Infantry; Herman Thomas, of the Texan Rangers; and George W. Pearson of the Washington and Baltimore Lattison. The remains of Capt. Holmes, of Georgia, and Capt. Gillespie, of the Texan Rangers, were also brought up in the Alabama. Sudden death.---------Lieut. Botle, of the Washington Volunteers, were found dead in his berth on board the Alabama yesterday morning. His berth was in the same stateroom in which Lieut. Mills slept, but the later knew nothing of the sickness of his roommate. He was found dead in the morning, and is supposed to have died of apoplexy. From Tampico the dates are of the 30th ultimo, at which time all remained quiet there.

[CHC]

January 21, 1847, MG47v47n47p3c1 Words: 118

Gen. Taylor enjoys the glory of having conquered the Northern Indians at Fort Harrison. He enjoys the glory of having conquered the Southern Indians on the Withlucooche. He enjoys the glory of having conquered the Mexicans on the immortal fields of Palo Alto Resaca de la Palma and Monterey. He enjoys the glory of exhibiting a moderation, a majesty, and a magnanimity in the hour of victory equal to his transcendant coolness and skill and courage in the hour of conflict. But alas for the unfortunate old hero, he does not enjoy the honor of an approving mention in James K. Polk’s message to Congress!!!------Wanting this glory, what are all his other blended glories worth.------Louisville Journal

[CHC]

January 28, 1847, MG47v47n48p1c6 Words: 135
The War Balloon

Mr. Wise, the aeronaut, has published another communication relative to the balloon which is to be the means of battering down the walls of San Juan de' Bloa, and of utterly demolishing the city of Mexico. He proposes to construct a balloon one hundred feet in diameter capable of containing 32,715 pounds which he thinks will leave a net power of 20,842 pounds for the missels, bombs, &c. The car is to be in the shape of a cone, and a maneuvering rope is to be supported by Bury Balloons which Mr. Wise says would answer the purpose for sentry stations. The shape of the car would cause the shot that might hit it to glance off, but how the balloon is to be made shot proof, it is not clearly explained.

No Whiskers Under General Worth

A correspondent from the Delta writes from Monterey: Gen. Worth has issued an order in Saltillo, that all soldiers under his command must appear at the next dress parade without whiskers. Many a face that has not come in contact with a razor for months, must now come to the scratch. ------The barbers of Saltillo, no doubt think it a very judicious order. Captain Blanchard, being a volunteer, and cher aini of Worth's, was at first excused from the general shearing but was like to raise a mutiny, and, with tears in his eyes sat down to the operation.

Victory or Death------- A story is told of a worthy lad from "old Edgefield, " Mass., who was recently doubting whether or not he should volunteer for Mexico. One of the flags waving in his eyes somewhat discouraged him. "Victory is a good thing," said he, "but why put Victory or Death. Put it Victory or Cripple," said he, "and I'll go that!"

Will there be a peace?

There seems to be a general desire pervading our country to bring about a speedy peace with Mexico, but how to get about the matter seems to be a more difficult point. It will be seen that Mr. Cilly of New Hampshire has introduced a resolution into the Senate of the United States requesting the President of the United States "to order the Army of the United States now in Mexico to someplace in the United States near he frontiers of the two countries." We do not know at this moment what will be the fate of this resolution, but we cannot imagine for one instant that it will be adopted. It is thought were this course adopted, a Mexican Government would at once consent to treat for a peace, but they will no consider honorable any offer of peace which is not accompanied by the withdrawal of our troops from their territory. The "Journal of Commerce" of New York has been furnished with copious extracts of letters from "a distinguished source" in Mexico to a gentleman of that city, which clearly make the withdrawal of our troops the "sine qua non" of any negotiation upon the subject. Gen. Almonty, well known as the Minister near this government during the Texas Annexation schemes, and who demanded his passports and went home upon its consummation, is supposed to be the author of these letters, and their spirit are not all favorable to peace.------He is beyond all comparison the first Statesman in Mexico, and is very bitter against the United States-------not more so however than are the great majority of his countryman. He regards his country as the injured and aggrieved party, and if his letters are truly indicative of the determination, than indeed is a long and bloody war in Prosect before us-----

For we can hardly think our government or people now would ever consent to the withdrawal of our Army upon the mere promise of Mexico to treat for peace after that event. Such a step that would be giving the enemy more "aid and comfort" than has already been afforded her by the supply of Leaders and Generals given to er by the free passport of Mr. Polk. It has been rumored for some weeks past that Mr. Calhoun intended to introduce a proposition similar to the one brought forward by the Senator from New Hampshire. The "New York Courier" commenting upon this rumor holds the following language, which will be found quite interesting and, we therefore commend its views to the attention of our readers:------

It is stated in various quarters, and apparently with confidence, that Mr. Calhoun intends to purpose that the American Army be withdrawn to the Rio Grande, and the American Squadron removed from the Mexican port; and that in that attitude we await the action of the Mexican Government. We can conceive no good result which can possibly follow such a course. We have no evidence that Mexico would be any more willing to make peace then, than she is now. And we should certainly throw the means of enforcing her, and any degree, to come to a pacific decision. At present the war threatens o destroy her existence as an independent nation, or at any rate to break up the union by which her separate States are held together. The American Army holds possession of several of these departments, and is almost certain to seize more. With every new step in the progress of the war, our Army gains a new hold upon Mexico and renders it still more necessary for her to bring about a peace. But if all those advantages were to be surrendered, peace would cease to be desirable, or at least essential, to her. If we were to withdraw all of our forces from her soil, and simply await her attack, she would lose all inducements to restore peace.

We cannot believe that such a policy could be for a moment entertained. It would be to put ourselves completely in her power, and to commit the whole matter of war and peace entirely to her discretion. The only ground, as far as we know, on which this course is urged in any quarter is that it would make the war on our part a defensive war, and thus relieve us from the imputation of aggression.-----But this, it seems to us, betrays a gross misconception of the nature of a defensive war. The character of war, in that respect, depends entirely upon its origin. If it was at the outset waged for aggressive purposes, then it is an aggressive war, no matter on whose soil it may be fought.

But if it was begun by Mexico, for the reconquest of Texas, or to drive our troops from territory claimed by the United States, then it is on our part a defensive war, and would be so, even were it carried to the gates of the Mexican capital. Most assuredly our war with England was not an aggressive war, on our part;-----yet we carried it into Canada: we sought to wage it on English soil. Napoleon carried his armies into every part of Europe and the allies dictated a peace in Paris, but were both these contending parties waging a war of aggression? That point is never to be determined by the method of carrying on the war, but solely by its origin-----or by the spirit which, during its progress, may become predominant.

The fact, therefore that we waged the war in Mexico, does not make it an aggressive war, unless we prosecute it for the purpose of conquering her territory, and not of redressing our wrongs, repelling her attacks, and rendering her unable to renew them. Our purpose is now to end the war. We have offered to do it by negotiation, but Mexico refuses. We must end it then by force. We must acquire a still stronger control over her than we now possess. We must again defeat her armies; seize upon more of her possessions; cripple still more of her ability to maintain the controversy. It may be that even in this way, we shall not succeed at once; but certainly, we cannot succeed at all in any other. It is the only way left open to us.

It is stated that Mr. Calhoun’s intended proposition will be supported by the Southern section of the Locofocos. This, we think, quite possible. We have no doubt they deprecate any further accession of territory, like that which is likely to accrue, as almost certain to weaken slavery, not as a domestic Southern institution, but as a political power, seeking supremacy in the National Council. Whatever may be the action of Congress up on the question, no one supposes that California can ever become a slave state. Its climate, soil, and general physical character will forever render this impossible. And the same fact hold true of other large portions of territory which may, at some future day, seek annexation to the American Union. And besides this, a strong disposition has been manifested in Congress, to prohibit by positive enactment, the extension of slavery to any future acquisition. It may be that Mr. Calhoun and his friends forsee the adoption of this measure; that way seek to avert the possible consequences, the accession of new free states, by preventing the accession of any. We hope the desir will not succeed; for we certainly regard the acquisition of California as a measure of the highest importance and necessary to the United States. Our commercial interest, our position and influence as the sovereign nation upon this continent and our prospective relation to the other nations of the earth, seem to us to clearly indicate the expediency of acquiring, by some equitable arrangement, possession of California.

The Wigs in Congress, we are confident, will not aid any such schemes as that suggested. Its promise of restoring peace is hollow and delusive; it would effectively deprive us of the power to enforce a peace; and its sole effort would be to protract endlessly a feeble relations and dishonorable war. The only way to end this war, is to fight it out. The message of the Mexican President in the doings of Congress which we published this morning, show conclusively that they will not make peace until forced to do so. The only thing then, that remains, is to force them there to as soon as possible. Let the War be vigorously and effectively waged. Let men enough, and money enough, be raised to destroy the very heart of the Mexican force;-----to cripple her strength and prostrate her hostility. It seems clear to us that in no other way can peace be restored.

[HCH]

January 28,1847, MG47v47n48p2c5 Words: 301

Latest from Mexico

The latest dates from New Orleans are from the 18th inst., from which we learn that Genl. Scott was at Brazos Santiago, and had sent an express to Genl. Taylor, that he would meet him in a few days at Tampico or Victoria. A report was in circulation that Gen. Quitman, with 2,000 volunteers had a battle with 13,000 Mexicans, under Gen. Urrea, two leagues North of Victoria. The report however does not gain credit. Our troops are said to be yet suffering with chills and fevers at every post. The Matamoros Flag says that Mr. Gillespie, one of the Texan Rangers who was taken prisoner at China is September last, and has been kept at San Luis Posi, has been released and returned to the American lines. He reports the Mexican force of that place at 27,000, with an additional force in the vicinity at 10,000. This large force was under constant drill, and many foreign officers engaged in the service. The troops were enthusiastic, healthy, and in a fine state of subordination. The above items we have culled from the Southern Mail; and by the Eastern Mail we have the annexed, which shows that the Mexicans are pretty hard up "for the sinews of war"-----Money--------.
Later dates from Mexico via Havana, have been received by the New York Sun and Express. They contain a communication from Santa Anna to the Mexican Congress demanding 8 millions of dollars for the purpose of carrying on the War, and he tells Congress unless the money is raised the country is lost.

Congress was in secret session, and it is said that a confiscation of church property was in contemplation. To this measure the clergy were, of course, violently opposed, threatening to excommunicate Congress, Santa Anna, Government, the Army, &c.

February

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p1c5 Words: 136

FOUND OUT AT LAST.

"BRUTUS, " the Washington Correspondent of the Richmond Whig, suggests the following effectual plan of terminating the Mexican War and who doubts it?—for surely "BRUTUS" is an honorable man." He says:—

It is to send Mr. ROBERT J. WALKER to manage the Mexican Finances. If he manages their financial affairs and badly as he managed ours; if he enacts the Sub Treasury, and gets an Ad Valorem Tariff Bill passed, similar to that of 1846, it is supposed he would bring the Mexicans to terms in less than thirty days. I believe one of the Locofoco Senators has recommended this to Mr. POLK, as the best of way of crippling the Mexicans. Since Mr. POLK has furnished the Mexicans with a Commanding General, he might as well furnish them with a Secretary of the Sub Treasury.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p1c6 Words: 111

JERSEY GIRLS IN MEXICO. —When Gen. WOOL's command was approaching Saltillo, and were about three miles distant from the city, four young women habited in American dress, were seen standing by the road side.—Curiosity ran high to know who they were, and they received many a gallant salute as the troops passed them. At last an officer rode up to see who they were. They informed him that they were from New Jersey, and engaged in superintending the female operatives in a cotton and woolen factory hard by, and expressed, in the course of their conversation, a desire to hear again the old National Air of Yankee Doodle.—Newark Advertiser.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c2 Words: 629

Having failed to receive our Washington Correspondence this week, we avail ourselves of a letter to the Baltimore Sun, which gives the results of the long discussions which have been going on in the Houses of Congress upon the Army Bill, &c. &c., during the past week.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1st, 1847.

The military bill has at last passed the Senate with CORWIN'S and SIMMONS' amendments in regard to h[illegible]nty land scrips or United States 6 per cent stock for $100.

The consideration of the three million appropriation bill has been postponed in the House for the purpose of giving the Senate the initiative, and Mr. CALHOUN an opportunity of defining his position. He will undoubtedly seize that opportunity on making his great speech of the session, and proposing his plan for conquering a speedy peace.

Simultaneously with this movement a new paper is about to make its appearance on Monday next. It will advocate conservative principles—and form a sort of [illegible] milieu, of Doctrinaire party, between the extreme left and right side of the House. The moderate whigs ad conservative democrats will be its principle supporters. Gen. [illegible] GREEN, the editor in chief. Prospectus will be out in a day or two. The paper will, of course, hold a middleground between the Intelligencer and the Union; or rather be in opposition to both of them. From the know ability of [illegible] GREEN, little doubt can exist but that it will prove an efficient in the advocacy of moderate principles. He will be anti-abolition, anti-war, moderate tariff and moderation and measure in everything.

The rumors that the Mexican Congress has sent a message to Gen TAYLOR, that they will receive a minister from the United States, and that a distinct proposition for peace has been made seems to be correct, but I doubt whether in the present state of affairs it will lead to anything. At all events the friends of the administration treat the rumored proposal with great disdain, and the partizans of the Lieut. General have a perfect contempt for it. They believe that nothing but action can secure peace, and that the Mexican government only seeks to gain time, now they perceive that earnest preparations are making for investing Vera Cruz.

The resolutions of praise and censure on Gen. TAYLOR, introduced in the House on Saturday last, passed the House today, but were, in the Senate, laid on the table. They will never pass that body in the shape in which they came from the House. The way to carry out the views of the House would be to [illegible] a Gold medal for Gen. TAYLOR, bearing on one side the inscription, “This is for Monterey,” and on the back of it, “This is not for Monterey.” The General would then have the option of looking on whichever side he pleased, and so would the country. I see no other way of settling the difficulty.

[The Lieutenant General [unreadable] certainly not given up by the President, and still less by the Lieutenant General himself. The [unreadable] in the House on the resolution to regard to Gen. TAYLOR is a clear index to the same; and it is pretty generally believed that a bill for the creation of the office will now pass the House by a respectable majority. It depends now solely on Mr. CALHOUN and his friends in the Senate whether we shall yet see Col. BENTON in the field. All concede to him freely great [unreadable] of character [unreadable] and will—three [unreadable] for a great General. It remains to be seen whether twenty-seven years’ hard work in the Senate of the United States have at all impaired his military qualities.

In the House [unreadable] was talking on Nativism with no one listening. X.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c2 Words: 156

GEN. TAYLOR’S LETTER.

We refer our reader’s attention to Gen. TAYLOR’s letter which will be found in our columns this week. It will speak for itself. There is much speculation afloat, as to the [illegible] to whom this letter was addressed, and by which publication was caused. Gen GAINES is supposed to be the person who has brought this letter to light, but we can see nothing in any of the articles which have come under our eyes which makes it “a fixed fact” that he is the responsible individual. It matters not, however, as far as the public is concerned, who had it published, --it is now done, and must be judged of according to its merits. Respectfully vindicates Gen. TAYLOR very triumphantly from any of the blunders of the Mexican War. He certainly has the confidence of the country, and any attacks made up on him in Congress will only recoil with redoubled force upon their authors.

[HCH]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 375

THE EXECUTIVE AND THE ARMY.—The National Intelligencer, of the 30th ult., says: We are among those who have been slow to believe, though it has been frequently charged, that animosity was cherished by the administration towards General TAYLOR, because we could not conceive any motives even of party policy, for such hostility against a citizen who has unquestionably rendered distinguished service to his country, and entrenched himself thereby safely in the public esteem. But it cannot be doubted, considering the recency of the publication of the Letter of Gen. TAYLOR, that the “General Order” publishe in our columns to day [see it below] has direct reference to that officer.

How many hundreds of unofficial letters from officers of the Army, of every grade, up to that of Gen. TAYLOR, have been published all over the country within the last year, without calling forth any rebuke from the Executive! So far from it, have not many of such letters been published, without a lisp of disapproval, in the newspaper in this city which is the recognised organ of the Government; published not only without any expression of dissatisfaction, but, on the contrary, with high commendations? As late as in that paper of yesterday morning we find precisely such a letter from “an officer of Gen. WOOL’s command.” We do not say that the Regulation which has been thus waked up from a sleep of more than twenty years—which has been in fact disused so long as to become obsolete—may not be in itself as a general rule a proper one. But we do say that as it has not been heretofore considered as an order to be strictly observed; in proof of which many instances can be remembered in which it has not been regarded, nor has the departure from from it been visited with any reproof, much less with such a public rebuke as that conveyed in the revival and republication, obviously with that intent, of the Regulation of 1825.

The effect, besides, of the promulgation of the order at the present particular moment, is that of ex post facto legislation; a proceeding directly against the spirit of liberty, and so recognised by the organic law of the Republic.

[HCH]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 268

ARMY GENERAL ORDER.
The following regulations have been received from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, January 27, 1847.

The President of the United States directs that paragraph 650 of the General Regulations for the Army, established on the 1st of March, 1825, and not included among those published January 25, 1841, be now republished, and that its observance as a part of the General Regulations be strictly enjoined upon the Army. By order of the President,

W. L. MARCY, Sect. Of War.

The following is the paragraph of the General Regulations for the Army established on the 1st of March, 1825, referred to above:

"650. Private letters or reports relative to military marches and operations are frequently mischievous in design, and always disgraceful to the army. They are therefore strictly forbidden; and any officer found guilty of making such report for publication, without special permission, or of placing the writing beyond his control, so that it finds its way to the press within one month after the termination of the campaign to which it relates, shall be dismissed from the service."

By order

W. G. FREEMAN,

Assistant Adjutant General.

The following announcement is made in the Washington Fountain of Jan. 29th:

To the Editor of the Washington Fountain:

SIR—We respectfully submit to the consideration of the Whig National Nominating Convention, and of the American People, without respect to party, the illustrious name of

MAJOR GENERAL

ZACHARY TAYLOR,

OF LOUISIANA

THE HERO OF THE RIO GRANDE,

AS A CANDIDATE FOR THE NEXT

PRESIDENCY OF THE UNITED STATES.

MANY MEMBERS of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Washington, Jan. 28, 1847.

[CH]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 226

THE "POOR MAN'S SHIRT."—Many crocodile tears were shed by the Locofocos over the exorbitant sum which the poor man was compelled to pay for his shirt, under the 400 per cent tariff of 1842. Well, the tariff of 1846 reduces the duty on coarse cottons—and what do we hear? The Boston Post, a Locofoco paper, says:

"It is stated that cotton goods have risen very much in price recently. Amoskeag sheetings, which a few weeks since were sold by the agents at 8 cents, are now up to 8 ½; last year at this time the same quality stood at 7 cents. Within a short time tickings and denims have advanced ½ to 1 cent per yard.—Prints, such as have lately been bought from 4 to 4 ½ cents, are selling by the case for 5 ½.—Colored cambries have advanced ½ to 1 cent. Wollen, linen and rubber goods are advancing."
What will sympathizers with the "poor man" and his "shirt" say to this? What becomes of the axiom that low duties make low prices? How will Secretary WALKER maintain his assertion, that the duty is as much a part of the price as the cost of production?—In one word, how can the Free Trade theory be vindicated, in the teeth of an unvarying current of facts like these?—Rich. Whig.

[HCH]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c4 Words: 114

SENATOR CORWIN.—The Louisville Journal, referring to the slanderers of "Old Rough and Ready" in the House of Representatives, speaks as follows of Senator CORWIN:

We almost wish that CORWIN occupied a seat in the House instead of the Senate at the present time, that he might overwhelm such detractors of Gen. TAYLOR's [illegible] FICKLIN of Ill., and THOMPSON of Miss., as he did the Michigan [illegible]. One speech from him would most effectually dam up the current of Loco Foco slander now directed at Gen. TAYLOR, and would cause the slanderers to wash themselves in the hands of Mexicans or savages rather than in those of the gallant and gifted member from Ohio.

[HCH]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c5-6 Words: 2302

"ROUGH AND READY."

LETTER FROM GENERAL TAYLOR.

We lay before our readers the following letter, which tells its own story too well to need any comment. It is not just, however, to its heroic writer, whose courage and judgment are equaled only by his honesty and modesty, to state that it was written to a near friend and relative, now resident in this city, endeared to him by very many years of personal intimacy, to whom he [illegible] all his purposes, opinions and feelings, without the least reserve.—This friend would not have taken the liberty of making public a communication of this nature, did not the recent manifestations of the envious malignity of the Administration and its servants and friends towards the man who alone has saved them and the country from the consequences of their rashness, ignorance and incapacity, make it necessary and just that the object of their base detraction should, at this critical moment, be heard in his own defence, by the whole people, in his own simple and honest language.

We have more of this sort to communicate, and shall soon be able to show that, in his defence against his own secret personal enemies and selfish detractors, as well as against the armed enemies of his country, the old hero of the Rio Grande is ever "ROUGH AND READY."

--N. Y. Express.

Hd. Qrs. Army of Occupation, or Invasion
Monterey, Mexico, Nov. 9, 1846

My dear * * * * * *

Your very kind and acceptable letter of the 31st of August, * * * * * * reached me only a short time since, for which I beg leave to tender to you my sincere thanks. [A few confidential remarks on certain public transactions are here omitted.]

After considerable apparent delay on the part of the Qr. Master's Department, in getting steamboats into the Rio Grande adapted to its navigation, I succeeded, towards the latter part of August, in throwing forward to Camargo, (a town situated on the San Juan river, three miles from its junction with the Rio Grande, on the west side, nearly 500 from Brazos Island by water and 200 by land, and 140 from this place,) a considerable depot of provisions, ordinance, ammunition and forage, and then, having brought together an important portion of my command, I determined on moving on this place. Accordingly, after collecting 1700 pack-mules, with their attendants and conductors in the enemy's country, (the principal means of transportation for our provisions, baggage, &c.,) I left on the 5th of September, to join my advance, which had preceded me a few days to Serralvo, a small village 75 miles on the route, which I did on the 9th, and, after waiting there a few days for some of the corps to get up, moved on and reached here on the 19th, with 6250 men, --2700 regulars and the balance volunteers. For what took place afterwards, I must refer you to my several reports, --particularly to my detailed one of the 9th ult. I do not believe the authorities at Washington are at all satisfied with my conduct in regard to the terms of capitulation entered into with the Mexican commander, which you no doubt have seen, as they have been made public through the official organ, and copied into various other newspapers. I have this moment received an answer (to my despatch announcing the surrender of Monterey, and the circumstances attending the same,) from the Secretary of War, stating that "it was regretted by the President that it was not deemed advisable to insist on the terms I had proposed in my first communication to the
The proposition on the part of Gen. AMPUDIA, which had much to do in determining my course in the matter, was based on the ground that our Government had proposed to his to settle the existing difficulties by negotiation, (which I knew was the case, without knowing the result,) which was then under consideration by the proper authorities, and which he (Gen. AMPUDIA,) had no doubt would result favorably, as the whole of his people were in favor of peace. If so, I considered the further effusion of blood not only unnecessary, but improper. Their force was also considerably larger than ours; and from the size and position of the place, we could not completely invest it; so that the greater portion of their troops, if not the whole, had they been disposed to do so, any night, have abandoned the city, at once entered the mountain passes, and effected their retreat, --do what we could! Had we been put to the alternative of taking the place by storm, (which there is no doubt we would have succeeded in doing,) we should, in all probability, have lost fifty or one hundred men in killed, besides the wounded, --which I wished to avoid, as there appeared to be a prospect of peace, even if a distant one. I also wished to avoid the destruction of women and children, which must have been very great, had the storming process been resorted to. Besides, they had a very large and strong fortification, a short distance from the city, which, if carried with the bayonet, must have been taken at great sacrifice of life; and, with our limited train of heavy or battering artillery, it would have required twenty or twenty-five days to take it by regular approaches.

That they should have surrendered a place nearly as strong as Quebec, well fortified under the direction of skilful engineers, --their works garnished with forty-two pieces of artillery, abundantly supplied with ammunition, garrisoned by 7000 regular and 2000 irregular troops, in addition to some thousand citizens capable of, (an no doubt actually) bearing arms, and aiding in its defence, --to an opposing force of half their number, scantily supplied with provisions, and with a light train of artillery, --is among the uncountable occurrences of the times.

I am decidedly opposed to carrying the war beyond Saltillo in this direction, which place has been entirely abandoned by the Mexican forces, all of whom have been concentrated at San Luis Potosi; and I shall lose no time in taking possession of the former, as soon as the cessation of hostilities referred to expires, --which I have notified the Mexican authorities will be the case on the 18 inst., by direction of the President of the United States.

If we are (in the language of Mr. POLK and Gen. SCOTT) under the necessity of "conquering a peace, " and that by taking the capital of the country, --we must go to Vera Cruz, take that place, and then march on the city of Mexico. To do so in any other direction, I consider out of the question. But admitting that we conquer a peace by doing so, --say, at the end of the next twelve months—will the amount of blood and treasure, which must be expended in doing so, be compensated by the same?  I think not, --especially, if the country we subdue is to be given up; and I imagine there are but few individuals in our country who think of annexing Mexico to the United States.

I do not intend to carry on my operations (as previously stated) beyond Saltillo, --deeming it next to impracticable to do so. It then becomes a question as to what is best to be done. It seems to me, the most judicious course to be pursued on our part, would be to take possession at once, of the line we would accept by negotiation, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, and occupy the same, or keep what we already have possession of; and that with Tampico, (which I hope to take in the course of the next month, or as soon as I can get the means of transportation) will give us all on this side of the Sierra Madre, and as soon as I occupy Saltillo, will include six or seven States or Provinces, thus holding Tampico, Victoria, Monterey, Saltillo, Monclova, Chihuahua, (which I presume Gen. WOOL has possession of by this time) Santa Fe and the California, and say to Mexico, "Drive us from the country!"—throwing on her the responsibility and expense of carrying on offensive war—at the same time closely blockading all her ports on the Pacific and the Gulf. A course of this kind, if persevered in for a short time, would soon bring her to her proper senses, and compel her to sue for peace—provided there is a Government in the country sufficiently stable for us to treat with, which I fear will hardly be the case for many years to come. Without large reinforcements of volunteers from the United States—say ten or fifteen thousand, (those previously sent out having already been greatly reduced by sickness and other casualties) I do not believe it would be advisable to march beyond Saltillo, which is more than 200 miles beyond our depots on the Rio Grande—a very long line on which to keep up supplies (over a land route in a country like this) for a large force, and certain to be attended with an expense which it will be frightful to contemplate, when closely looked into.

From Saltillo to San Louis Potosi, the next place of importance on the road to the city of Mexico, is three hundred miles—one hundred and forty badly watered, where no supplies of any kind could be produced for men or horses. I have informed the War Department that 20,000 efficient men would be necessary to insure success if we move on that place—(a city containing a population of 60,000, where the enemy could bring together and sustain besides the citizens, an army of 50,000) a force which I apprehend will hardly be collected by us with the train necessary to lead it as well as to transport various other supplies, particularly ordnance and munitions of war.

In regard to the armistice, which would have expired by limitation in a few days, we lost nothing by it, as we could not move even now, had the enemy continued to occupy Saltillo; for, strange to say, the first wagon which has reached me since the declaration of war was on the 2d inst., the same day on which I received from Washington an acknowledgement of my despatch announcing the taking of Monterey; and then I received only 125, so that I have been, since May last, completely crippled, and am still so, for want of transportation. After raking and scraping the country for miles around Camargo, collecting every pack-mule and other means of transportation, I could bring here but 80,000 rations, (fifteen day’s supply,) with a moderate supply of ordnance, ammunition, &c., to do which, all he corps had to leave behind a portion of their camp equipage necessary for their comfort, and, in some instances, among the volunteers, their personal baggage. I moved in such a way, and with such limited means, that, had I not succeeded, I should no doubt have been severely reprimanded, if nothing worse. I did so to sustain the Administration.

Of the two regiments of mounted men from Tennessee and Kentucky, who left their respective States to join me in June, the latter has just reached Camargo; the former had not got to Matamoras at the latest dates from there. Admitting that they will be as long in returning as in getting here, (to say nothing of the time necessary to recruit their horses) and were to be discharged in time to reach their homes, they could serve in Mexico but a very short time. The foregoing remarks are not made with the view of finding fault with any one, but to point out the difficulties with which I have had to contend.

Monterey, the capital of New Leon, is situated on the San Juan River, where it comes out of the mountains, --the city (which contains a population of about twelve thousand) being in part surrounded by them, at the head of a large and beautiful valley. The houses are of stone, in the Moorish style, with flat roofs, which, with their strongly inclosed yards and gardens, in high stone walls all looped for musketry, make them each a fortress within itself. It is the most important place in Northern Mexico (or on the east side of the Sierra Madre,) commanding the only pass or road for carriages from this side, between it and the Gulf of Mexico, to the table lands of the Sierra, by or through which, the city of Mexico can be reached.

I much fear I shall have exhausted your patience before you get half through this long and uninteresting letter. If so, you can only commit it to the flames and think no more about it, as I write in great haste, besides being interrupted every five minutes; so that you must bake great allowances for blots, interlineations and blunders, as well as want of connection in many parts of the same.

Be so good as to present me most kindly to your excellent lady, and accept my sincere wishes for your continued health, prosperity and fame.

I remain, truly and sincerely,
Your friend,
Z. TAYLOR

[Manuscript]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c6 Words: 384

THE WAR—Extract of a letter from an officer, dated—

SALTILLO, (Mexico,) 28th Dec., 1846.

You have seen what is the present situation of things with us here now. SANTA ANNA is said to be at the head of so large a force somewhere between San Luis Potosi and this place, that we are kept on the qui vive, expecting that at any time he might dash over upon us and give us battle. Small as our force is, however, we feel confident of success should a battle be fought—and knowing how decisive would be a victory now, of the pending question of peace or war, we are anxious that the contest should come off at once and the matter be settled. We are in daily communication now with Gen. WOOL's column, which is encamped some 18 miles from us, so that a full cooperation is practicable on any point. Gen. TAYLOR has gone to Victoria, and perhaps to Tula, where he hopes to meet Gen. URREA, who is said to have 8 or 9000 troops with him.

Rumors reached us to-day that Gen. SCOTT is ordered out, to command the Tampico forces. I hope so—and that by a grand demonstration in that direction, we may take Vera Cruz at once, and then Jalapa, which is the key to that part of Mexico, as Monterey is to this. Holding these two points, the Capital is fairly cut off from the Coast and from Northern Mexico. With such positions, well established, we may dictate a peace as well I think as if we were in possession of the metropolis itself. I hope the expedition will be amply provided in all respects, and success the most brilliant may then attend it.

We understand (says the Richmond Enquirer) that the Governor and Council have dated the commissions of the Officers of the different Volunteer Companies as follows.—Of course they rank according to the date of their commissions

ROBT. G. SCOTT, Jr. December 20th, 1846.
JAS. F. PRESTON, " 21st, "
KENTON HARPER, " 22d, "
JNO. W. ROWAN, " 23d, "
FELTCHER H. ARCHER, " 24th, "
JNO. P. YOUNG, " 25th, "

[Manuscript]
Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p2c7 and p3c1 Words: 1700

LATEST NEWS!

LATE FROM MEXICO.

Important from the Army.

ENGAGEMENT OF COL. MAY WITH THE MEXICANS.

Important Rumors from Tampico—Arrival of Col. Kinney at that place—Later news from Gen. Taylor—Disposition of the American Forces along the Line of Operations, &c. &c.

The brig Georgiana, Capt. CRISPIN, arrived at N. Orleans on the 22d. ult, having left Tampico on the 14th. The verbal news she brought was alarming, it being to the effect that SANTA ANNA had placed himself between Gen. TAYLOR and Gen. WORTH, with 35,000 men, and that a general action was immediately expected. All this is no exaggeration. We believe, says the Picayune, the authentic facts to be as follows:

Col. KINNEY arrived at Tampico on the 12th of January direct from Victoria. He entered that town with Gen. QUITMAN on the evening of the 9th. Gen QUITMAN drove the enemy before him for the last thirty or forty miles before getting to Victoria. The Mexicans were reluctant to give up the place. As Gen. QUITMAN entered the town the Mexicans were going out on the other side. Gen. Q. had no cavalry and could not pursue them. Col. K. speaks in the warmest [illegible] of the prompt and soldiery conduct of this officer.

Col. KINNEY parted from Gen. TAYLOR at Monte Morales and pushed on with Gen. QUITMAN to Victoria. From these he made his way, almost alone, to Tampico, taking Soto la marina in his route, accomplishing a distance of nearly 250 miles in three days, and narrowly escaping from the advanced parties of the Mexicans on several occasions He spent a part of a night at the old rancho of Croix, where SANCHEZ was stationed with twenty dragoons; yet in the morning he contrived to give him the slip. He also succeeded in evading ROMANO FALCON, the man who is reported to have killed Col. CROSS.

At Soto la Marina he found a company of sixty rancheros. He rode at once to the alcade, boldly told him that Gen. TAYLOR had sent him on a few hours in advance to prepare supplies, and by this ruse made out to come off safely—the rancheros at once dispersing. The services this officer has rendered since the Mexican war broke out have been invaluable. He has ridden thousands and thousands of miles through the country almost alone; his favorite servant CATALINO has been killed he has himself been beset and attacked time and again; yet by his superior riding, by his knowledge of the Spanish language, by his promptness and courage, he has so far succeeded in escaping. Such services as he has rendered the country surely will not be allowed to go unrewarded—but to the news brought by this arrival.

We have no reason to believe that Generals BUTLER and WORTH have moved from Saltillo, as was reported. We believe them, together with Gen. WOOL, to have been still there or in the vicinity as late as the 1st inst., with at least 6000 troops, and we farther believe that a division of the Mexican army was not far off, watching our movements and ready to take any advantage of any favorable opportunity which circumstances may afford. It may be, and this opinion is entertained by others of the army, high in rank, that the Mexican soldiers seen in the neighborhood of Saltillo are advanced parties of a force of some 1500 or 2000 men, kept in a position on this side of the desert, between Saltillo and San Luis, to destroy the water tanks in case the American army should move in force in the direction of the latter city. The view of the case precludes the idea of a serious attack upon Gen. WORTH or Gen. WOOL, the object of the Mexicans only being to keep a watch upon the American forces, to retreat before any advance and cut off the supplies of water as far south as the operations of our army may make it advisable to do so.—That the troops spoken of as threatening Saltillo are scouting parties of this corps of observation is confidently believed by officers of experience and discretion—though others, whose opinions are perhaps equally entitled to respected, regard the movement of the enemy in a more serious light.

The report brought by Col. KINNEY to Tampico, to the effect that 15,000 Mexicans were to attack Saltillo on the 27th.
ult., is but the same rumor which has already reached here by way of Matamoras. Col. K. heard the rumor at Monte Morales, probably, and had no opportunity to learn the sequel of the anticipated attack.

There is little doubt, as we learn from private letters, that there was a large Mexican force—probably mostly cavalry—at Tula at last dates, all under command of Gen. VALENCIA. Gens. URREA, ROMERO, FERNANDEZ, and others are also reported to be in the vicinity. It may be recollected that our last accounts from the city of Mexico represented VALENCIA as on his march to Tula.

From a correspondent at Tampico we learn that on the 1st of January, Gen. TAYLOR sent forward to Col. MAY, of the dragoons, to examine the mountain pass between Monte Morales and Labradores. On his return from Labradores he took another pass leading to [unreadable] and was attacked by a larger body of the enemy and his rear guard cut off. This was effected by rolling stones into the pass, which was scarcely wide enough for a single horseman. MAY managed to get through with the main body and reached a spot where he was enabled to dismount and return to the succor of the rear guard, but it was too late, as the enemy had retreated with their prize.

At one time during the passage of the gorge the dragoons would have been almost at the mercy of the enemy, had the latter discharged their pieces with any accuracy; for the position they occupied was directly over the heads of our troops. We cannot ascertain Col MAY's loss, or whether he had any men killed or not.

At the present time, there can be no doubt, Gens. TAYLOR, TWIGGS, PATTERSON and PILLOS, are at Victoria and with a large force.—Had Gen. TAYLOR but a party of five hundred Texan rangers with him, their services, with the enemy's cavalry hanging around him in almost every direction, would be invaluable.

The N. Orleans Picayune, contains a number of letters from Tampico, from which we make the following extraxts:--

TAMPICO, Jan. 11, 1847

I wrote you yesterday that an expedition would leave that day for Tuspan, but I was very confidentially misled. The rumor for the last few weeks was allowed to spread, that the force was destined for that place, and the Mexicans despatched couriers carrying the intelligence. Reinforcements were called in from the surrounding country, and we hear now there are 2000 men there on the qui vive for an attack.

The Government steamers commenced fitting up yesterday at noon, and every preparation appeared to be making to cross over to Puebla Viejo, en route to Tuspan, when the commanding officer at the lines received orders to march his men to Altamira. It was a perfect surprise to every one, and whether any good results from it or not, Gen. SHIELDS deserves credit for the ruse.

I am assured from head quarters that the object is to open a communication with Gen. TAYLOR at Victoria, and it is deemed expedient to send the present force to meet this advance.—From 2000 to 3000 Mexican troops are known to be between here and there, and very possibly Gen. SHIELDS will have an opportunity to cope with them.

The number of men is about 650, which reduced the force remaining here to about 930, but no attack is to be expected on this place, except via the very route Gen. SHIELDS has no taken; so that, although reduced in numbers we are not weakened in strength.

TAMPICO, Jan. 12, 1847.—Afternoon

"Gentlemen—Orders and counterorders—Col. KINNEY, of the Corpus Christi, arrived this morning with despatches from Gen. TAYLOR—he left Victoria on the evening of the 9th inst., having ridden over 200 miles in three days.

It was attended a portion of the way by four dragoons, and came through with only two attendants. Gen. SHIELDS received orders from Gen. TAYLOR to suspend operations for the present.

The news from both armies, brought by Col. K., is of great interest. He says that the Mexican force at San Luis Potosi amounts to 30,000 men—he estimates their entire force in the field at 50,000.

The capture of Tampico, according to Col. K. has created the greatest excitement throughout the country. Gen. BUTLER, with Genls. WORTH and WOOL and 8000 men—considered the flower of the army—were at Saltillo.—A Mexican force of 15,000 was reported on its position outside in anticipation, as the town was incapable of fortification. The engagement should have taken place on the 27th ult., and Col. KINNEY speaks confidently of our success. The war seems to be commencing in earnest. You may rely upon the accuracy of Col. K.'s opinion of the strength of the enemy.

Gens. TAYLOR and PATTERSON are at Victoria with 6000 men awaiting orders from Gen. SCOTT. It is not supposed that any movement will be made against San Luis Potosi. It is pronounced the strongest fortified post in all Mexico, and SANTA ANNA has said that the man that takes it is welcome to the capital. I believe that a change of warfare will take place on Gen. SCOTT's assuming the command. The mountains will be retained and Vera Cruz subjected by a land attack—then no! for Mexico!

The N. O. Delta gives a much more detailed account of Capt. MAY's perilous undertaking than the above from the Picayune, which we regret we have not room for this week. His command consisted of some 70 or 80 men, and he reports a loss of 11 men and their horses, and 7 pack mules. A Lieutenant and 12 men acted as the rear guard, and 11 of the 13 are missing—whether they have been killed, or only taken prisoners, is not known. The Regular soldiers of the Mexican Army, it is supposed, had no hand in this capture—they were Rancheros and robbers, and hence the strong probability that our men have been murdered.

[HCH]

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p3c1 Words: 554

REPORTED MILITARY MOVEMENT.—The Charleston Courier has the following letter from its correspondent in New Orleans:

Gentlemen—Colonel TOTTEN, Chief Engineer of the United States, arrived here to-day from Washington. The Rocket and double Howitzer Brigade is expected daily. The regiments of Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Mississippi, are about being embarked, and will take 90 days rations with them. These troops are supposed to be destined for Tusman, where they will be joined by the Massachusetts, North and South Carolina, Virginia, Illinois, and 2d Pennsylvania regiments.—Their future destination is unknown, as every avenue to information is carefully guarded; but it is now guessed at that a march will be made direct on Mexico from Tusman, by Guanelinago, Papanda Apan, and Tezino, along the route over which the Indian runners passed in 24 hours, from the Gulf to Mexico, in the times of MONTEZUMA.

The distance is only 250 miles, and the road is said to present no serious obstacles to the march of troops. General SCOTT will advance at once on San Luis Potosi, simultaneously with the Tusman movement. It is supposed that SANTA ANNA will not fight at Potosi when he finds 9,000 men advancing from Tusman, but will fall back on Queretaro, and from there to Tulaezingo, in order to oppose our advance from Tusman. At this point he can make a strong stand. But here this double Howitzer Brigade will not with great efficiency. In order to understand how, it is necessary to describe the pass of Tulaezingo. It is formed by a chasm in the mountain; the rocks rise almost perpendicularly to a height of 150 feet. The road between, will admit of no more than 4 mules abreast. The pass is only one quarter of a mile in length. Over this chasm, there is a natural bridge of rock, which is accessible by a steep and deviulous ascent, by which mules can ascend.

The double mountain Howitzer will be placed on mules and carried to the natural bridge, when the road to the west of the pass will be completely commanded to the distance of 1200 yards, so that the enemy's forces must retire on the approach of our columns to that distance. Our troops will thus be enabled to move through the pass and debouch into an open tableau of land, of some mules in extent, without hindrance of the Mexican artillery.—Our army will then make a flank movement on Apan, which will compel the Mexicans to move on to Tezano, 50 miles from Mexico, in the mean time Gen. SCOTT will move rapidly on Maconi, and Chico and the Real del Monte, and thence to Pachuela and Otumba. The road from Otumba to Tezano is exceedingly difficult, and perhaps it may not be necessary to follow it in order to form a junction with our columns at Tezano; if so Gen. SCOTT will by a right flank movement reach Istalmaca, 15 miles from Mexico.

I have thus briefly stated what is whispered amongst military men here. Through Vera Cruz is believed to be the point of attack, I think myself it is designed only as a feint.—The arrival of Col. TOTTEN, who is considered one of the most skilful engineers in the world, has created no small sensation in military circles. His mouth is closed.

Thursday, February 4, 1847, MG47v47n49p3c1 Words: 312

ARMY INTELLIGENCE— Gen'l Wool's Division.

--Extract from an officer of General Wool’s command.

"CAMP AT AGUA NUEVA, (Mexico.)

Dec. 27th, 1846.

SIR: Since my hasty note to you from Parras, we have all been in the midst of tumult and excitement, caused by intelligence from Gen. WORTH that SANTA ANNA was on the march to attack him with an over-whelming force. This caused our division to move by forced marches—our infantry marching in one day nearly forty miles to this place—when the rumor was found to be premature. It is believed, however, that the enemy meditated an attack upon our forces in detail, but was deterred from striking the blow by the rapid concentration of our troops—Gen. BUTLER having, in the mean time, moved up for Monterey, making our army full four thousand strong at this point and its vicinity.

"When our column left Parras I was absent on a reconnaissance towards San Luis, Zacatecas, and Durango, with an escort of thirty-eight men, and came very near being cut off by six hundred Mexican cavalry. The enemy is making immense preparations on our whole front, from San Luis and Durango to St. Rosolo. By the next mail I will write you more in detail. * * * * *
"My whole party has been so constantly and laboriously occupied since we left Monclava, that while we have collected a good deal of data, we cannot, as yet, give you any additional results. This, however, we shall proceed to do as fast as possible, when we are settled for a short time. I see that our column is to remain in camp, which will enable us to work to great disadvantage.

"Gen. WOOL is an able officer. His command is in excellent order, and well provided; which last was a great convenience to our friends when we joined them.

[CH]

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p1c5 Words: 626

Miscellany.

GENERAL TAYLOR’S LETTER.—The value which the brave and humane General TAYLOR sets upon the lives of his soldiers, as manifested in his unwillingness to throw away fifty or a hundred of them, unnecessarily, in storming Monterey, has suggested to a friend a characteristic anecdote of General JACKSON, strongly evincing the same trait in that stern, valiant and unquestionably sagacious commander, to whose memory the circumstance does such honor that we are happy to be able to present it to the public, on the high authority of the person to whom JACKSON made the statement.—N. Y. Jour. Com.

Our informant arrived at New Orleans on the fourth of February, 1815, (about four weeks after the crowning victory over the British,) and being an intimate personal friend of JACKSON, proceeded to the General’s head quarters, and passed nearly the whole night in conversation with him, upon the incidents of the recent great battle. After narrating many of the circumstances of the conflict, Gen. JACKSON said—"I suppose you have wondered why I permitted the British army to retire from the field and make good their retreat, without attempting to hinder or molest them, after they had been so thoroughly crippled in their attack on our lines." His friend replied—"No, General, I did not; because I knew you would not have taken the course you did without good reasons." "Yes," said JACKSON, "I had good reasons for my conduct. I knew that my brave volunteers were invincible, in their patriotism, and that, behind those breast works they could defend themselves against the best troops in the world. But I knew that in an open field their want of military experience and discipline would expose them to terrible loss from the fire of the well drilled veterans of the British army, still capable of opposing several complete battalions to me. It is true, I could have routed them and cut off their retreat, and destroyed or captured their whole force; but it would have been at the sacrifice of hundreds of my best volunteers—an unnecessary sacrifice, because my success was complete without it. I had done all that was to be desired. And then—to think of throwing away the lives of my brave volunteers”—said the old General, indignant at the idea of such a wanton sacrifice—"My brave Tennessee volunteers! Many of whom, mere boys of 18 and 20, were brought to me, at Nashville, from the country by their parents, in some instances by their widowed mothers, who said to me, ‘Here General, is our only son’—or, as sometimes, when one parent brought three or four boys to me, ‘Here are our sons! Take them, and make them fight for their country! Make good soldiers of them! But don’t expose them unnecessarily! Take good care of them General!’ Why" continued JACKSON, "by the---------I wouldn’t give the lives of twenty of my brave Tennessee volunteers for the whole British Army."

A powerful expression of that generous humanity which so well becomes true courage, and a just appreciation of the value of the life of an American citizen. And, much as we regret to repeat, the characteristic profanity which accompanied it, we are reminded, by its associations, of that oath of which STERNE says, "The ascending spirit who flew up to Heaven’s chancery with it, blushed as he gave it in; and the recording angel as he wrote it down, dropped a tear on the word, and blotted it out FOREVER!"

We rejoice to know that TAYLOR, with all of JACKSON’s successful courage, has in no particular less than JACKSON’s humane horror of the waste of his gallant soldiers’ lives, for the empty glory of the extermination of a conquered and retreating foe.

[CH]

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p1c5 Words: 15

The Washington Union says “the Aministration cannot approve of the late letter of Gen. TAYLOR.”

[CH]

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p1c7 Words: 178

A CROOKED SUBJECT.—A Matamoras correspondent of an Indiana paper gives the following description of the Rio Grande river:

Imagine four of the crookedest things in the world, then imagine four more twice as crooked, and then fancy to yourself a large river three times as crooked as all these put together, and you have a faint idea of the crooked disposition of this almighty crooked river. There is no drift in it, from the fact that it is so crooked that timber can't find its way far enough down to lodge two sticks together—but few snakes, because it is not straight enough to swim in, and the fish are all in the whirlpools in the bends, because they can't find their way out. Birds frequently attempt to fly across the river, and light on the same side they start from, being deceived by the different crooks! Indeed, you may be deceived when you think you see across it, and some of the b'hoys say it is so darned twisted there isn't but one side to it.

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p2c1-2, Words: 331

CENSURE OF GEN. TAYLOR

We present two articles to our readers this week, from the Richmond Times—"Gen. Taylor and the Mannikins," and "Justice to Gen. Taylor"—which put the ungenerous conduct of the House of Representatives towards the good and gallant Old General, in a clear and forcible light before the country. The Senate, it will be seen, administered a severe and just rebuke to the majority of the House. The Country will receive their action with enthusiasm, and respond with a hearty Amen to their course. Gen. TAYLOR has (we were about to say) wrought miracles in his conduct of the Mexican war, and has secured not only the admiration and love of the people of his own Country for his courage and humanity, but has attracted the eyes of the enlightened world to him. It seems as though the majority of the present House of Representatives alone can find a hook to hang censure upon. The People will demand from them "the evidence of the faith that is in them." We regret to see the name of the Representative, the Hon. HENRY BEDINGER, the second on the list of Ayes censuring Gen. TAYLOR. He will find, on his return home, that the nineteen-twentieths of his constituents, without regard to party, entertain the highest esteem for the General, and that they believe the war annals of the world will not present a Soldier who has fought more courageously in the hour of battle, or demeaned himself more meekly and humanely in the hour of victory and triumph than he has done. Of him it may be said, as Mr. MADISON said in his Message to Congress during the last war with Great Britain, when referring to Gen. HARRISON's Official Despatches of his battles, "he does justice to every one except himself." It matters not what the politicians may say or do—his countrymen will take care to vindicate his name and fame while he is absent in a foreign land fighting their battles.

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p2c2 Words: 900

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS

We are again unfortunate with our Washington correspondence, not having received any letter or papers from Washington by the mail of Tuesday, our usual time of receiving them. We observe, however, that a most interesting debate is going on in the Senate upon the Three Million Bill, in which several of the leading Senators upon both sides have participated. Mr. SEVIER of Arkansas, explained that the object of the three Million Bill was to enable the President to conclude a peace with Mexico. The President was of opinion, from information that he had received from Mexico, that peace would be made, and he was willing to assent to it, provided Mexico would cede to us New Mexico and Upper California. Mr. MILLER of N. J., spoke in opposition to the Bill in a powerful speech, and declared that conquest and spoliation were now the objects of this war.

Mr. BERRIEN, of Ga., next obtained the floor and gave his views at great length. He said he could only find an excuse for the extraordinary proposition submitted, in the fact that this money might really be asked for SANTA ANNA, and that distinguished military chieftain could and would make peace with this country on the receipt of three millions of dollars. This, too, might be a clue given to the Executive order for the embarkation of SANTA ANNA from Havana for Mexico. SANTA ANNA was now at the head of a large army, and it might be that he would consent to make peace by being furnished with the means for paying his army and others. But Mr. B. suggested that it would be well to secure the treaty of peace, if there was to be a treaty, before there was any payment of the money.

To such a treaty there could be no more objection than there was at the last session of Congress. But it was said as a basis of this treaty that the minimum of this peace must be the acquisition of California and New Mexico. From that weak and distracted country was to be taken the best part of her territory. Nothing less than California and New Mexico.

Mr. BERRIEN nodded assent to this.

Mr. BERRIEN.—And was it necessary for us to do this in vindication of our national honor? He objected to any such idea. We were the first among the nations of the earth; made so by the gallantry of our fathers and our own fidelity to the Constitution of the country. What was Mexico, from whom we exacted all this?—a weak and powerless nation, with distracted counsels and impoverished. We had a population of twenty millions, and she not one half this number of people.
And what were we to do with this country when it comes among us? How were we to govern this people, this country, if we had both incorporated into the Union? And supposing we had this territory annexed to our dominion, what then? Did it not more than any other question endanger the peace of the Union? Was it not connected with the institution of slavery? Would any proposition tolerating slavery in this new territory be assented to by this body? Would the South consent that its own people should be excluded from the new territory, and with it the property guaranteed to them by the constitution of the U. States?

He put the question to the Southern men, for to them it was a momentous one. He put it to the American Senators also, for it was a question affecting the whole Union.

Mr. B. did not believe in demanding the payment of Mexican Bonds in Mexican blood. He would continue the war until Mexico yielded justice to us.

Mr. BERRIEN closed with an eloquent appeal that this Government should be more merciful than revengeful—more kind than stern towards a sister Republic.

The speech occupied two hours and a half, and was listened to with profound attention through the whole of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Md., and Mr. MOREHEAD of Ky., have followed on the same side with powerful speeches. Mr. CALHOUN at last dates had the floor, and doubtless made a strong speech, and perhaps "defined his position."

The House of Representatives are also in Committee of the whole on the Three Million Bill and the Wilmot proviso, prohibiting the introduction of slavery into the newly acquired territory, has been moved, and an animated debated has sprung up, and there is no telling where or in what it will end. Long JOHN WENTWORTH of Ill., has been hitting his party some hard licks in the House, for which independence, he has brought down upon his head the maledictions of the strenuous party men in the House, and also those of the Official Organ. He replied to the strictures of the Union a few days since in the House, and was very severe upon its Editor—Father RITCHIE replies Editorially in his paper of Saturday evening, and is now on his dignity to JOHN!! The Union's reporters has given a caricature report of JOHN's speech, interspersed with a variety of indignities to him, for which Mr. DOUGLASS of Ill., moved their expulsion from the House. The matter is referred to a Committee with power to send "for persons and papers." We hope we shall get a graphic account of all these things from Summers.

[HCH]

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p2c3-4 Words: 1063

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE MANNIKINS.

We have seldom seen a parallel so tersely and yet so faithfully drawn, as in the following extract from the National Intelligencer.—The difference in moral stature between Gen. TAYLOR and his Executive accusers; the miserable jealousy which his renown has stimulated in their bosoms; and the pretext upon which they have at last resolved to malign his reputation, his declining to exterminate the Mexican army at Monterey, are all so aptly represented by the history of Quinbusflestrin, that the comparison goes far to refute the famous maxim of Lord [unreadable]:

"In all history, one is at a loss to find a parallel for such a return of services as this. It is in Fable only—now fabulous no longer—that one meets any thing equal. The Emperor of Lilliput and his diminutive courtiers and council are, in their exhibition of gratitude for the military services of Capt. GULLIVER, the only case ever seen at all approaching this present effort to dishonor, after having lately attempted to supersede, Gen. TAYLOR.

"Our readers, who have not been so accustomed as we are to refer to the annals of Lilliput as constantly elucidating the manners, habits, and morals of politics and politicians, will allow us to suppose that they have not read, or have forgotten how, when Capt. LEMUEL had lived some time among the manikins, the Emperor of diminutives wanted help in a very foolish and wicked war that he had got into with another pigmian State. So he gave LEMUEL the commission of Generalissimo and sent him to lead an 'Army of Occupation' into Blefuscu, the country of his enemy.—We need hardly say what was the event:--Quinbusflestrin, (the man-mountain,) by a single masterly stroke, utterly discomfited Blefuscu, and reduced that republic to sue for a peace on any terms. Great was the joy through Lilliput; mightily did the puny monarch and his small grandees swell at the success of their invincible arms. Quite civil were they, for a full week, to Quinbusflestrin; they actually brevetted him and gave him an additional ration. Presently, however, they bethought them of the natural enmity of low against high, of an inch against a foot; they reflected that the people might be struck with the advantages of possibly having a man six feet high to reign over them; and so they got up articles of attaintment against him, alleging that he had not sufficient respect for the Emperor; that he ought, in the late battle, to have exterminated Blefuscu; that the services he had rendered made it clear he was dangerous to the Court; all which considered, these wise, brave, and grateful little statesmen voted, unanimously, that he, Quinbusflestrin, was a public enemy; should be shot all over with poisoned arrows; should have his eyes put out, in order to revive his patriotism; and should finally be starved to death as a warning to all future men of stature who might be foolishly disposed to render signal services to the country."

The course of the administration and its party towards Gen. TAYLOR is none the less ungenerous and unjustifiable, because it is double-dealing. The majority of the House of Representatives have spoken to him, as Indian eloquence admirably expresses it, "with a forked tongue." They have chosen, in an insincere resolution of thanks for his conduct, at Monterey, solemnly to declare that they disapprove of that conduct; thus not only destroying the whole force of the compliment, but proving that it was only assented to through fear of the consequences of withholding it.

The following are the resolutions, as they passed the House of Representatives, the parts between brackets having been inserted by the vote of the Democratic members:

"Resolved unanimously, by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the thanks of congress are due, and are hereby presented to Major General ZACHARY TAYLOR, and through him to the brave officers and soldiers, both of the regular army and of the volunteers under his command, for their courage, skill, fortitude and good conduct in storming the city of Monterey, defended as it was by a force more than double their number, and protected by the strongest fortifications, which resulted in a most brilliant victory to our army, and reflected imperishable honor upon our arms—[engaged as it was and still is in a war commenced upon us by Mexico, and continued by us in defence of the honor and vindication of the just rights of the United States, assailed as both had been by repeated and flagrant acts on the part of Mexico, of insult, outrages, and finally of invasion of one of the States of this Union. Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed into an approbation of the terms of capitulation of Monterey.]

"Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be struck a gold medal, with devices emblematical of this splendid achievement, and presented to General TAYLOR, as a testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress for his judicious and distinguishable conduct on that memorable occasion.

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause the foregoing resolutions to be communicated to General TAYLOR, and through him to the army under his command.”

The proviso to the first resolution is a direct disapproval of the terms of the capitulation of Monterey. It was so understood by the House, because when Mr. LEAKE of Virginia, proposed, by inserting the words "or disapprobation,” to make the House avoid the expression of an opinion on either side, the majority refused to receive his amendment—So determined were they to make the rebuke as impressive as possible, that they even persisted against the suggestion of one who does not often waver in assuming the most extreme position with his party—Mr. DROMGOOLE—in retaining the word "unanimously,” thus declaring what their own journal demonstrated to be untrue, as 62 members voted against the resolutions. And this is scarcely less ridiculous than the inconsistency with disapproving of the terms of the capitulation, and, in the same breath, proclaiming the General’s "conduct, on that memorable occasion,” which of course embraces as well his mode of ending the battle as his mode of fighting it, to be "judicious and distinguished."

It is generally supposed that the Senate will refuse to pass the resolutions.—Rich. Times.

[HCH]
"Yea—Messrs. Archer, Badger, Berrien, Butler, Calhoun, Cilley, Thomas Clayton, John M. Clayton, Corwin, Crittenden, Davis, Dayton, Evans, Green, Huntington, Jarnagin, Johnson of Maryland, Johnson of Louisiana, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Pearce, Simmons, Upham, Webster, and Woodbridge—26.

"No further amendment being offered, the joint resolution was reported to the Senate, and the amendments having been [unreadable] in, it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time by unanimous consent.

"The question being on the passage of the bill, the yeas and nays were ordered, and it was unanimously passed—yeas 43, nays none.

"The title of the resolution was then amended, so as to read as follows:

"Resolution giving the thanks of Congress to Major General TAYLOR, and the officers and men under his command in the late military operations at Monterey."

It will be observed that the Senators who voted against Mr. WEBSTER’s resolution, as an amendment to that of the House, after the proviso was excluded, are those who may be suspected of the greatest readiness to sustain the administration. This may be explained by the fact that although the proviso disapproving of the capitulation of Monterey was struck out, there remained the clause, which was inserted in the resolution by the majority in the "imperishable honor" ascribed to the army, by adding:

"Engaged as it was and still is, in a war commenced and forced upon us by Mexico, and continued by us in defence of the honor and vindication of the just rights of the United States, assailed as both had been by repeated and flagrant acts on the part of Mexico, of insult, outrages, and finally of invasion of one of the States of this Union."

It was a masterly stroke of legislation in Mr. WEBSTER, to obtain from a Democratic Senate an unrestricted vote of thanks to Gen. TAYLOR, after the dominant party in the House had insisted on making it offensive to the Whigs by attaching to it assertions to which they could not honestly subscribe.

It is worthy of remark, too, that although the final vote for Mr. WEBSTER’s resolution appears to be unanimous, six Democratic Senators, who voted against it as an amendment, either declined to vote at all, or absented themselves to avoid voting upon its passage. They were Messrs. ASHLEY, ATCHISON, BAGBY, BREESE, BRIGHTY, and TURNLEY.

---

Thursday, February 11, 1847, MG47v47n50p2c7 Words: 163

LATEST NEWS!

LATE FROM MEXICO.

Highly Important!

RUMOR OF THE

DEATH OF SANTA ANNA!

An extra from the New Orleans Picayune, dated Tuesday, Feb 2, 1 o’clock, P. M., received last night, brings news from Anton Lizardo up to the 20th ult.

One letter states that Congress, on the 9th ult., after a stormy session, approved the first section of a bill authorising the Government of Mexico to raise fifteen millions of dollars by the hypothecation or sale of certain properties of the Church.

SANTA ANNA opposed the bill, and it is rumored that his opposition so exasperated the soldiers, that they had shot him. This report needs confirmation, but many circumstances render it not improbable. Such has been the fate of many. SANTA ANNA’s army was in great distress.

The passage of the law above referred to has caused the greatest excitement in Mexico. The churches are closed, and every indication of mourning and resistance has been evinced by those who support religious establishments. The Mexican Congress and the Mexican press is every where thoroughly roused.

[HCH]
ATTENTION, BLUES!

YOU are requested to meet at the Drill-Room

This (Thursday) Evening, at half-past 6 o'clock, as business of importance will be brought before the meeting.

By order of the Captain,

JAS. H. CHAMBERS,

O. S.

Feb. 11, 1847—It

[HC]

Deferred Articles.

DEBATES IN CONGRESS.—The elements composing the political majority in Congress are falling into great confusion. The President can hardly know who are the supporters of his Administration; and this uncertainty has followed, in part, from his not seeming to know himself the definite purposes of his own policy.

In the debate on the Civil Appropriation Bill some days ago, in the House of Representatives, a motion was made by Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, to strike out the clause appropriating the annual compensation of the President of the United States. A motion so unusual was calculated to excite some sensation; and coming from a member of the President's party it was the more remarkable. Mr. WENTWORTH's speech on the proposed amendment was not of a conciliatory kind—as may be supposed. We quote from the Intelligencer's report:

"Mr. W. denied that his course was actuated by resentment for the Executive veto of the River and Harbour bill. He had been accused by some Democrats of going over to the Whigs because he could not go for the tea and coffee tax. But when he lost one of the points of the Democratic creed, he did but cling the more closely to those which were left. Those who made the charge knew it to be false.—Let him that was without spot in opposing Democratic measures cast the first stone.—How many had gone for 54° 40' supposing it to be democratic; yet they found that the true Democracy was 49°. [Roars from the Whigs.] Let them hold their peace. Let the whole delegation from Pennsylvania be quiet, for they had all gone against the Tariff of 1846. Let those who had voted for the French spoliation bill hold their peace in like manner—so must all who voted against the lieutenant general—all who voted for volunteers in preference to regulars. Let those men show they were without spot before they assumed to read him out of the Democratic party.—That house and the people whom it represented had as good a right and better to dictate what should be the Democratic creed than the President or the Senate, for the people made the President."

Another topic was started in the course of the debate—a topic which cannot be discussed in Congress without excitement. The Wilmot proviso is the topic referred to. From the report of a speech by Mr. DELANO, of New York, we believe, the following is taken as a specimen of the excited language which this subject calls forth:

"He next proceeded to discuss the object of the war, which he argued to be the acquisition of Mexican territory, under which the head of his speech he examined the orders of Com. STOOKTON, &c.; and thence he passed to the consequences of the war, its evil example to succeeding Presidents, its effect in cultivating a national thirst for territory; and lastly, its dividing the Union on the character and condition of the conquered territory, when admitted into the Union. Here Mr. D. became much excited on the topic of the proviso; threatened graves, already dug at home, and out of which there would be no resurrection, to the Northern men who should vote against it. He greatly feared there was no honest purpose to carry it.

"He lauded the consistency and resolution of Southern representatives, and called on those from the North to imitate the example. Yet, however the present representatives of the North might be induced to act, their constituents at home were fixed as the immovable mountains. He dared Southern men to add this territory; if they did, the North would surround them by a cordon of free States, and light the fires of liberty all around them till the chains which bound their slaves should melt and fall asunder. [Great sensation on the Democratic side of the House.]"

"Mr. ATKINSON called on Mr. DELANO to repeat his words."
"Mr. DELANO did so more strongly, but expressed his sorrow that such a firebrand should be introduced to threaten all we both held dear. He loved this Union, but he would see it shattered into ten thousand pieces before slavery should be extended one foot by his instrumentality, &c. He concluded by maintaining that, although this was continued professedly for glory, there was no glory in it. Be it his glory to do all he could to arrest its progress, and prevent the plains of Mexico from being strewed with the bones of our best citizens.—If for this his patriotism must be doubted he could not help it."

The Wilmot proviso was attached as an amendment to the bill of the last session appropriating two millions of dollars to the President's use for the purpose of negotiation with Mexico. The bill of the present session, appropriating three millions for the same purpose, will afford an occasion for the renewal of the amendment, of which there have been frequent intimations. There are expectations in some quarters that a majority will be found in the House sufficient to determine all questions relative to the Mexican war and the territory to be acquired without the embarrassment of any conditions relative to free or slave States. The brief period which remains to this Congress, which is rapidly approaching the end of its session, renders it important that dispatch, at any rate, should be used towards questions of such magnitude—either to decline them or to ascertain that they cannot be yet decided.—Balt. Amer.

GENERAL TAYLOR'S LETTER.—From the New York Express, in which the letter of Gen. TAYLOR, so much commented on, first appeared, we make the following extract:

"The few Whig presses which have spoken of the publication of the only letter of Gen. TAYLOR now likely to see the light, as indiscreet, little know of the machinations and intrigues which have been going on in Washington. The letter drew their fire, and was, therefore, a necessary publication—just as RIDGELY found it necessary to draw the fire of Gen. LA VEGA's artillery, before the gallant MAY dashed in upon it with his troop of cavalry. These intrigues were crippling, not only Gen. TAYLOR, but all the army operations upon the Rio Grande. The war, got up especially and solely to give glory to Mr. POLK & Co., was all resounding to the glory of Gen. TAYLOR—'a Whig General,' as Mr. FICKLIN called him—and to his brave army. To get rid of him, and of this, as we have before stated, Gen. SCOTT was sent to supersede Gen. TAYLOR, by Lieutenant General BENTON, while a fire in the rear of Gen. TAYLOR was to be kept up by all partizans of the administration. The carpet knights in Washington were lavish of their abuse, in all the social circles, of Gen. TAYLOR, the main charges being, that (without magazines, without artillery, without authority from his Government,) he did not, on the instant, cross the Rio Grande, and that subsequently he let the force of Gen. AMPUDIA escape at Monterey. The reasons why he did not cross the Rio Grande, he unfolds in letters which the gag law suppresses."

The President afforded "aid and comfort to the enemy" by giving them a General; and now his friends are increasing that "comfort," by denouncing the General of the American forces! As the President gave SANTA ANNA his freedom, we should not be surprised to find him trying to balance the account by imprisoning Gen. TAYLOR.—Albany Journal.

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE VOLUNTEERS.—The correspondent of the New Orleans Delta, writing from Victoria, describes the following scene as having occurred shortly after Gen. TAYLOR's arrival at that place:

"Gen. TAYLOR visited the Illinois Volunteers yesterday, and the way the boys crowded around him threatened immediate suffocation. By way of salutation, I verily believe the old General pulled at his cap five thousand times, and I was looking every minutes to see him pull the front piece off. The General was mounted on a large and gentle mule, whilst his Orderly rode a splendid dragoon horse, and was himself dressed in a clean and handsome uniform whilst the General had on that same old black frock coat, and a big Mexican straw hat. Mr. FANNIN, the orderly, got about six salutes to TAYLOR's one, the "Suckers" taking him for the General, they inferred, from his plain appearance, that it would be nothing amiss to offer him a hand to shake and they went at it with such good will that, by the time the two regiments finished squeezing it, there could have been little feeling left in it. As he rode off, there were many who wondered whether that was the animal on which he charged the Mexicans."

THE ON-MAN POWER—In further evidence of the rapid strides which the one-man power is making over the barriers and fences set up against it in the Constitution, we quote the following from the organ of the Progressive Democracy in the city of Baltimore:
"THE EXECUTIVE AND CONGRESS.—It belongs to the Executive to manage the war with Mexico. The supreme legislative power declared war to exist, and henceforward it was the duty of the Executive to wage the war with all such means as the Constitution and Congress placed at his disposal. When, then, he found these measures inadequate, and applied to Congress for other measures, HIS WILL should have been immediately complied with, unless it was plainly in contravention of the Constitution."

Most truly did Mr. MADISON say, in one of his ablest works, "War is in fact the true nurse of Executive aggrandizement."—Nat. Int.

THE "LONE STAR."—Mr. WINTHROP of Boston, in a recent speech upon Texas annexation and its results, said the "lone star" reminded him of the star described in the vision of the Apostle on the Isle of Patmos:

"And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the foundations of waters;

"And the name of the star is called Wormwood; and the third part of the waters became wormwood, and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.”

LETTERS FROM OFFICERS.—The question is asked, says the Norfolk Herald, (we need not say from what quarter) in a tone of censure of Gen. TAYLOR’s letter, just published, "whether Gen. WASHINGTON ever sent such letters to his friends, from the army?” We are almost authorised to use the popular phrase of the day and reply, "He did nothing else!” His letters (which may be seen by any one in Spark’s collection) sent not only to his friends but to Congress, are full of complaints of the short-comings of Congress in their provision for the exigencies of the war. Yet those letters were not considered offensive by that august body; on the contrary they were treated with deference and respect. Is the majesty of JAMES K. POLK more sensitive than the plan dignity of JOHN HANCOCK? Is the democracy of this day more dignified than the patriotism of seventy-six?

MEXICAN PLAN OF THE WAR.—The Spanish journal La Patria, at New Orleans, publishes a letter from Mexico, written apparently by a Mexican, and giving what the writer says he has learned to be SANTA ANNA’s plan of the campaign. It amounts to little more or less that what has often been suggested by papers in this country as feasible and probable. SANTA ANNA to keep his force well in hand, avoiding any general engagement, and distracting the enemy by various movements, until the sickly season; then to bear down with crushing force upon the main body of the enemy, destroy that, and afterward cut up the others in detail. Attempts of the enemy to retreat to be worried by small parties of guerillas, &c. &c. We make the following extract from the letter:--Com. Adv.

"Every necessary precaution has been taken, and all means are daily used, to collect at San Luis Potosi all possible provisions and munitions of war. It is believed that the North Americans are determined to leave Saltillo and Tampico; they will come towards San Luis, and there fight the great decisive battle as SANTA ANNA will not leave that city, and will keep there constantly about 25,000 men.

"There are at present, in a distance of about 150 miles or less, nearly 45,000, of all arms, and it is expected to raise, during the month of January, about 8000 more of infantry and cavalry. A considerable number of troops are stationed at proper points to cut off the North Americans on their retreat, in case they should come as far as San Luis, where they will not be able to sustain the resistance of the Mexicans."

EXCUSABLE.—Whilst a regiment of volunteers were marching through Camargo a Captain (a strict disciplinarian) observing that one of the drums did not beat, ordered a lieutenant to enquire the reason. The fellow, on being interrogated, whispered to the lieutenant. "I have two ducks and a turkey in my drum, and the turkey is for the captain.” This being whispered to the captain he exclaimed, “Why didn't the drummer say he was lame? I do not want men to do their duty when they are not able.”

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, &C.
We have full reports of the proceedings of Congress and the Legislature from our correspondents, but such is the demand upon our columns by advertisements and the Communications of our friends at home, upon local matters of exciting interest, that we reluctantly are obliged to lay them aside, and confine ourselves to a brief notice of them. The Editors of the Union, the Administration Organ at Washington, have been expelled from the Floor of the Senate, by a vote of Yeas 27, Nays 21, for having issued and published in that paper of the 9th inst., a libel upon that body. There were six Senators absent, four Democrats and two Whigs—those who voted were—

It will be seen that four Democrats, marked above in italics, voted in the affirmative. The offence of “Father RITCHIE, ” was endorsing a communication signed “Vindicator, ,” in his paper of the 9th, in which the writer characterized the temporary loss of the Army Bill in the Senate as “a Mexican Victory, “ and calling certain Senators “the friends and Brothers of SANTA ANNA and AMPUDIA.” It is supposed that “Vindicator” is an inhabitant of the “White House,” and that the vote to expel the Union’s Editors, is more a rebuke of the Administration than Mr. RITCHIE. A fierce debate sprung up among some of the Senators of the opposition. Mr. TURNEY of Tenn. was very abusive of Mr. CALHOUN, and doubtless spoke ex cathedra . Mr. CALHOUN made a noble reply—worthy of the better days of the Republic. TURNERY is a little-souled creature whom the Whigs helped into power over a better man, the regular nominee of the Democratic party in the Legislature, and now he is an out and outer —doubtless, when he was elected, he was “a Conservative!!!”

The Three Million Bill has passed the House with “the Wilmot or Anti-Slavery proviso, “ Ayes 115, Nays 106. Thus have the Northerners triumphed. The same bill is yet under discussion in the Senate. The debate has been very able. "SUMMERS" thus speaks of the speech of Mr. CORWIN of Ohio:—

"Mr. CORWIN’s speech, of which you have doubtless read a sketch, was a great speech and is so acknowledged by men of all parties. It has stamped him as an orator of the first class—it does honor to his head, but what is of far more importance in my view, it does honor to his heart. No full report of it has yet appeared, but I understand it will be published in a few days in pamphlet form, and many thousands of copies have already been subscribed for.”

"He took the bold ground that the war was unjust—that the soil upon which the first battle was fought was Mexican soil—that we were the invaders—that it was the duty of every one, who believed as he did, to oppose the war, as so help him God, as long as he had a vote, he would with God’s assistance, never consent to vote a man or dollar to carry it on, until it could be shown to him that he was mistaken in his opinions. The Washington Union acknowledges that the speech was replete with eloquence.”

The venerable JOHN QUINCY ADAMS is again in his seat, though yet very feeble.—His return to the House was very affecting, indeed—the members flocked around him and congratulated him upon the restoration of his health, &c. It was a spontaneous offering of the American heart, to one who has served his country through a long series of year with distinguished ability.

The President has sent a message to Congress in relation to the prosecution of the war—the proper organization of the military forces recently authorised—measures for re-enlisting volunteers whose terms shall expire, before the closing of the war—again recommending a tax on tea and coffee as a means of revenue during the existence of the war, &c. &c. &c.

[HCH]
GEN. TAYLOR A TEETOTALLER.— The Norfolk Courier says—"It will be gratifying to the friends of 'Old Rough and Ready,' to know that he is a 'staunch teetotaler,' and has not drank a glass of 'the ardent' for twenty years past. This we state upon authority that we believe to be unquestionable, and comes from an old friend of Gen. TAYLOR, one who has recently seen and conversed with him.

Capitulation of Monterey.

FROM THE WASHINGTON UNION OF FEB 10

Victoria, Tamapilas, Mexico,

January 6, 1847.

Dear Sir: After much speculation and no little misrepresentation about the capitulation of Monterey, I perceive by our recent newspapers, that a discussion has arisen as to who is responsible for that transaction. As one of the commissioners who were entrusted by Gen. TAYLOR with the arrangements of the terms upon which the city of Monterey and its fortifications should be delivered to our forces, I have had frequent occasion to recur to the course then adopted, and the considerations which led to it. My judgment after the fact has fully sustained my decisions at the date of the occurrence; and feeling myself responsible for the instrument as we prepared and presented it to our commanding General. I have the satisfaction, after all subsequent events, to believe that the terms we offered were expedient and honorable, and wise. A distinguished gentleman with whom I acted on that commission, Gov. HENDERSON, says, in a recently published letter, "I did not at the time, nor do I still like the terms, but acted as one of the commissioners, together with Gen. WORTH and Col DAVIS, to carry out Gen. TAYLOR's instructions. We ought and could have made them surrender at discretion," &c. &c.

From each position taken in the above paragraph I dissent. The instructions given by Gen. TAYLOR only presented his object, and fixed a limit to the powers of his commissioners; hence, when points were raised which exceeded our discretion, they were referred to the commander; but minor points were acted on, and finally submitted as part of our negotiation. We fixed the time within which the Mexican forces should retire from Monterey. We agreed upon the time we would wait for the decision of the respective governments, which I recollect was less by thirty-four days than the Mexican commissioners asked—the period adopted being that which, according to our estimate, was required to bring up the rear of our army with the ordinance and supplies necessary for further operations.

I did not then, nor do I now, believe we could have made the enemy surrender at discretion. Had I entertained the opinion it would have been given to the commission, and to the commanding General, and would have precluded me from signing an agreement which permitted the garrison to retire with the honors of war. It is demonstrable from the position and known prowess of the two armies, that we could have driven the enemy from the town; but the town was untenable whilst the main fort (called the new citadel) remained in the hands of the enemy. Being without siege artillery or entrenching tools, we could only hope to carry this fort by storm, after a heavy loss from our army; which, isolated in a hostile country, now numbered less than half the forces of the enemy. When all this had been achieved, what more would we have gained than by the capitulation?

Gen. TAYLOR's force was too small to invest the town. It was, therefore, always in the power of the enemy to retreat, bearing his light arms. Our army—poorly provided, and with very insufficient transportation—could not have overtaken, if they had pursued the flying enemy. Hence the conclusion that, as it was not in our power to capture the main body of the Mexican army, it is unreasonable to suppose their General would have surrendered at discretion. The moral effect of retiring under the capitulation was certainly greater than if the enemy had retreated without our consent. By this course we secured the large supply of ammunition he had collected in Monterey—which, had the assault been continued, must have been exploded by our shells, as it was principally stored in the "Cathedral," which being supposed to be filled with troops, was the especial aim of our pieces. The destruction which this explosion would have provided must have involved the advance of both divisions of our troops; and I commend this to the contemplation of those whose arguments the commissioners closed their negotiations. With these introductory remarks, I send a copy of a manuscript in my possession, which was prepared to meet such necessity as now exists for an explanation of the views which governed the commissioners in arranging the terms of capitulation to justify the commanding General, should misrepresentation and calumny attempt to tarnish his well-earned reputation, and, for all time to come, to fix the truth of the transaction. Please publish this in your paper, and believe me your friend, &c.
Memoranda of the transactions in connexion with the capitulation of Monterey, capital of Nueva Leon, Mexico.

By invitation of Gen. AMPUDIA, commanding the Mexican army, Gen. TAYLOR, accompanied by a number of his officers, proceeded on the 24th September, 1846, to a house designated as the place at which General AMPUDIA requested an interview. The parties being convened, General AMPUDIA announced, as official information, that Commissioners from the United States had been received by the Government of Mexico; and that the orders under which he had prepared to defend the city of Monterey, had lost their force by the subsequent change of his own Government, therefore he asked the conference. A brief conversation between the commanding Generals, showed their views to be so opposite, as to leave little reason to expect an amicable arrangement between them.

Gen. TAYLOR said he would not delay to receive such propositions as Gen. AMPUDIA indicated. One of Gen. AMPUDIA’s party, I think, the Governor of the city, suggested the appointment of a mixed commission; this was acceded to, and Gen. W. G. WORTH, of the United States army, Gen. J. PINCKNEY HENDERSON, of the Texan volunteers, and Col. JEFFERSON DAVIS, of the Mississippi riflemen, on the part of Gen. TAYLOR; and Gen. J. MA. ORTEGA, Gen. P. REQUENA, and Senor the Governor M. MA. LLANO on the part of Gen AMPUDIA, were appointed.

Gen. TAYLOR gave instructions to his commissioners which, as understood, for they were brief and verbal, will be best shown by the copy of the demand which the United States commissioners prepared in the conference room here incorporated:

Copy of the demand by U. States Commissioners.

"I. As the legitimate result of the operations before this place, and the present position of the contending armies, we demand the surrender of the town, the arms and munitions of war, and all other public property within the place.

"II. That the Mexican armed force retire beyond the Rinconada, Linares, and San Fernando, on the coast.

"III. The commanding General of the army of the United States agrees that the Mexican officers reserve their side arms and private baggage; and the troops be allowed to retire under their officers without parole, a reasonable time being allowed to withdraw the forces.

"IV. The immediate delivery of the main work, now occupied, to the army of the United States.

"V. To avoid collisions, and for mutual convenience, that the troops of the United States shall not occupy the town until the Mexican forces have been withdrawn, except for hospital purposes, storehouses, &c.

"VI. The commanding General of the United States agrees not to advance beyond the line specified in the second section before the expiration of eight weeks, or until the respective Governments can be heard from."

The terms of the demand were refused by the Mexican commissioners, who drew up a counter proposition, of which I only recollect that it contained a permission to the Mexican forces to retire with their arms. This was urged as a matter of soldierly pride, and as an ordinary courtesy. We had reached the limit of our instructions, and the commission rose to report the disagreement.

Upon returning to the reception room, after the fact had been announced that the commissioners could not agree upon terms, Gen. AMPUDIA entered at length upon the question, treating the point of disagreement as one which involved the honor of his country, spoke of his desire for a settlement without further bloodshed, and said he did not care about the pieces of artillery which he had at the place. Gen. TAYLOR responded to the wish to avoid unnecessary bloodshed. It was agreed the commission should reassemble, and we were instructed to concede the small arms; and I supposed there would be no question about the artillery. The Mexican commissioners now urged that, as all other arms had been recognised, it would be discreditable to the artillery if required to march out without anything to represent their arm, and stated, in answer to an inquiry, that they had a battery of light artillery, manoeuvred and equipped as such. The commission again rose, and reported the disagreement on the point of artillery.

Gen. TAYLOR hearing that more was demanded than the middle ground, upon which, in a spirit of generosity, he had agreed to place the capitulation, announced the conference at an end; and rose in a manner which showed his determination to talk no more. As he crossed the room to leave it, one of the Mexican commissioners addressed him, and some conversation, which I did not hear, ensued.—Gen. WORTH asked permission of Gen. TAYLOR, and addressed some remarks to Gen. AMPUDIA, the spirit of which was that which he manifested throughout the negotiation, viz: generosity and leniency, and a desire to spare the further elusion of blood. The commission re-assembled, and the points of capitulation were agreed upon. After a short recess we again repaired to the room in which we had parted from the Mexican commissioners; they were tardy in joining us, and slow in executing the instrument of capitulation. The 7th, 8th, and 9th articles were added during this session. At a late hour, the English original was handed to Gen. TAYLOR for his examination; the Spanish original having been sent to Gen. AMPUDIA. Gen. TAYLOR signed and delivered to me the instrument as it was submitted to him, and I returned to receive the Spanish copy with the signature of Gen. AMPUDIA, and send that having Gen. TAYLOR’s signature, that each General might countersign the original to be retained by the other. Gen. AMPUDIA did not sign the instrument as was expected, but came himself to meet the commissioners. He raised many points which had been settled, and evinced a disposition to make the Spanish differ in essential points from the English instrument. Gen. WORTH was absent. Finally he was required to sign the instrument prepared for his own commissioners, and the English original was left with him that he might have it translated, (which he promised to do that night,) and be ready the next morning with a Spanish duplicate of the English instrument left with him. By this means the two instruments would be made to correspond, and he be compelled to admit his knowledge of the contents of the English original before he signed it.

The next morning the commission again met, again the attempt was made, as had been often done before by solicitation, to gain some grant in addition to the compact. Thus we had at their request, adopted the word capitulation in lieu of surrender; they now wished to substitute stipulation for capitulation. It finally became necessary to make a peremptory demand for the immediate signing of the English instrument by Gen. AMPUDIA, and the literal translation (now perfected) by the commissioners and their General. The Spanish instrument first signed by Gen. AMPUDIA was destroyed in the presence of his commissioners; the translation of our own instrument was countersigned by Gen. TAYLOR, and delivered. The agreement was complete, and it only remained to execute the terms.

Much has been said about the construction of article 2 of the capitulation, a copy of which is hereto appended. Whatever ambiguity there may be in the language used, there was a perfect understanding by the commissioners upon both sides, as to the intent of both of the parties. The distinction we made between light artillery equipped and maneuvered as such, designed for and used in the field, and pieces being the armament of a fort, was clearly stated on our side; and that it was comprehended on their’s appeared in the fact, that repeatedly they asserted their possession of light artillery, and said they had one battery of light pieces. Such conformity of opinion existed among our commissioners upon every measure which was finally adopted, that I consider them, in this sphere, jointly and severally responsible for each and every article of the capitulation. If, as originally viewed by Gen. WORTH, our conduct has been in accordance with the peaceful policy of our Government, and shall in any degree lead to consummate that policy, we may congratulate ourselves upon the part we have taken. If otherwise, it will remain to me as a deliberate opinion, that the terms of the capitulation gave all which could have followed, of desirable result, from a further assault. It was in the power of the enemy, to retreat, and to bear with him his small arms, and such a battery as was contemplated in the capitulation.—The toher grants were such as it was honorable in a conquering army to bestow, and which cost magnanimity nothing to give.

The above recollections are submitted to Genls. HENDERSON and WORTH for correction and addition that the misrepresentation of this transaction may be presented by a statement made whilst the events are recent and the memory fresh.

JEFFERSON DAVIS,
Colonel Mississippi Riflemen.

CAMP NEAR MONTEREY,
October 8th, 1846.

The above is a correct statement of the leading facts connected with the transactions referred to, according to my recollection. It is, however, proper, that I should further state, that my first impression was, that no better terms than those first proposed, on the part of Gen. TAYLOR, ought to have been given, and I so said to Gen. TAYLOR when I found him disposed to yield to the request of Gen. AMPUDIA; and, at the same time gave it as my opinion that they would be accepted by him before we left the town. Gen. TAYLOR replied, that he would run no risk where it could be avoided—that he wished to avoid the further shedding of blood, and that he was satisfied that our Government would be pleased with the terms given by the capitulation; and being myself persuaded of that fact, I yielded my individual views and wishes; and, under that conviction, I shall ever be ready to defend the terms of the capitulation.

J. PINCKNEY HENDERSON

I not only counseled and advised, the opportunity being offered the general-in-chief, the first proposition; but cordially assented and approved the decision taken by Gen. TAYLOR in respect to the latter, as did every member of the commission, and for good and sufficient military and national reasons—and stand ready, at all times and proper places, to defend and sustain the action of the commanding General, and participation of the commissioners. Knowing that malignants, the tremor being off, are at work to discredit and misrepresent the case, (as I had anticipated,) I feel obliged to Col. DAVIS for having thrown together the material and facts.

W. J. WORTH,
Brig. Gen. commanding 2d division.
MONTEREY, OCT. 12th, 1846.

Terms of the capitulation of the city of Monterey, the capital of Nueva Leon, agreed to upon by the undersigned commissioners—to wit.—General WORTH, of the United States army; General HENDERSON, of the Texan volunteers; and Col. DAVIS, of the Mississippi riflemen, on the part of Major General TAYLOR, commanding-in-chief the United States forces; and General REQUENA and General ORTEGO, of the army of Mexico, and Senor MANUEL, M. LLANO, Governor of Nueva Leon, on the part of Senor General Don PEDRO AMPUDIA, commanding-in-chief the army of the north of Mexico.

ARTICLE 1. As the legitimate result of the operations before this place, and the present position of the contending armies, it is agreed that the city, the fortifications, cannon, the munitions of war, and all other public property, with the undermentioned exceptions, be surrendered to the commanding General of the United States forces, now at Monterey.

ARTICLE 2. That the Mexican forces be allowed to retain the following arms—to wit: The commissioned officers, their side-arms; the infantry, their arms and accoutrements; the cavalry, their arms and accoutrements; the artillery, one field battery, not to exceed six pieces, with twenty-one rounds of ammunition.

ARTICLE 3. That the Mexican armed forces retire within seven days from this date beyond the line formed by the pass of the Riconda, the city of Linares, and San Fernando de Pusos.

ARTICLE 4. That the citadel of Monterey be evacuated by the Mexican, and occupied by the American forces, tomorrow morning, at 10 o’clock.

ARTICLE 5. To avoid collisions, and for mutual convenience, that the troops of the United States will not occupy the city until the Mexican forces have withdrawn, except for hospital and storage purposes.

ARTICLE 6. That the forces of the United States will not advance beyond the liens specified in the 3d article, before the expiration of eight weeks, or until the orders of the respective Governments can be received.

ARTICLE 7. That the public property to be delivered, shall be turned over and received by officers appointed by the commanding Generals of the two armies.

ARTICLE 8. That all doubts, as to the meaning of any of the preceding articles, shall be solved by an equitable construction, and on principles of liberality to the retiring army.

ARTICLE 9. That the Mexican flag, when struck at the citadel, may be saluted by its own battery.

W. J. WORTH, Brig. Gen. U. S. A.
JEFFERSON DAVIS, Col. Mississippi Riflemen.
J. M. ORTEGA,
T. REQUENA,
MANUEL M. LLANO,

Approved: PEDRO AMPUDIA

Done at Monterey, Sep. 24, 1846.

NEW MODE TO CLOSE THE WAR.—A petition has been presented to the New York Assembly, from Col. A. JONES, of Rochester, to let out the Mexican war on contract, the petitioner agreeing to give bonds to close it for two millions of dollars.

NEW MODE TO CLOSE THE WAR.—A petition has been presented to the New York Assembly, from Col. A. JONES, of Rochester, to let out the Mexican war on contract, the petitioner agreeing to give bonds to close it for two millions of dollars.

NEW MODE TO CLOSE THE WAR.—A petition has been presented to the New York Assembly, from Col. A. JONES, of Rochester, to let out the Mexican war on contract, the petitioner agreeing to give bonds to close it for two millions of dollars.
THE "UNION" AND THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

The "Union" is thundering forth in anathemas by wholesale against the Senate for its late action in relation to its Editor, Mr. RITCHIE, ever ready with the pen, is writing columns of editorial upon the subject of his expulsion, and correspondents from "Dan to Betsheba" in the Democratic Kingdom are sending in their contributions to swell the tide which is to sweep the authors of the outrage (!!!) into the fathomless depths of an indignant public displeasure. The Democracy of Richmond are in mourning because the elections for U. S. Senators are over, and they cannot make Father RITCHIE Senator, of course in Mr. HUNTER's place, as the Chivalry party in the Senate moved the proceedings against him. Others talk of making him Vice President in 1848, but Mr. RITCHIE blushes at the very thought, and declines the proffered distinction with as many "Oh! don'ts—behave now—oh! quit yourself!" as a little school-girl would use to a rough-beared man who wanted to kiss her. Now all this fanfaronade, and hubbub about martyrdom, violation and restriction of the freedom of the Press, will not do—it won't go down anyhow you can fix it—it don't come from the right quarter—for everybody knows how furiously this very proscribed and persecuted "Union"! has been denouncing the Whig press of the country for daring to oppose the will and edicts of "the throne" upon the subject of the Mexican war. Orders were issued and counsel given from "Head Quarters," to denounce them as the Mexican Whig-press—Blue Light Federalists, &c. &c.—they were to be visited with the opprobrium of rendering "aid and comfort" to the enemy, unless they endorsed the infallibility of Mr. POLK—they were to be muzzled and not allowed to express an opinion. Congress, too, was to be gagged upon the same principle, and now, too, the Army is to be placed under the same ban, for we can regard the revival and re-publication of the Army Order of 1825 immediately upon the appearance of Gen. TAYLOR's letter in the public and free press of the country, in no other light.

And if we remember rightly, when the Reporters of the New York Tribune were expelled from the House last Spring, because one of its Washington correspondents, "Persimmon," told the story about Mr. SAWYER of Ohio, eating "sassingers" behind the Speaker's chair, the "Union" approved and justified the act—certainly it thundered no denunciations against the restriction of the freedom of the Press then.

Where is the difference in these cases, and especially and pointedly in the last one we have mentioned. If there be any difference, "Persimmon" has it, for his letter was a piece of good-natured fun, and the "Union"s a piece of strong, embittered, insulting denunciation, which can find no shelter under the freedom of the Press.

The truth is, the President's Message libels his countrymen by charging a portion of them with "rendering aid and comfort to the enemy"—which expression, by the way, was a quotation from one of the "Union"s editorials—and the "Union" has been following up the effort, during the whole Winter, to restrict the freedom of Speech and the Press, and should not now utter one syllable of complaint when it finds "the poisoned chalice returned to its own lips." It is a trite saying, but a true one, "that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones." The venerable Editor will have to try again—his martyrdom is not yet tragic enough for the new edition of Fox.

[CH]

Thursday, February 25, 1847 MG47v47n52p2c5 Words: 171

DEPARTURE OF THE VOLUNTEERS.

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter from one of the most worthy young men belonging to the Volunteers from this County. It is decidedly one of the best written and most satisfactory letters that we have seen from Capt. ALBURSTIS' Company since they left Martinsburg. There is a good deal of sickness among the Volunteers—seven deaths have occurred among them. The Jefferson Company have lost three of their men, the Portsmouth Company two, and the Montgomery two. Six of Capt. ALBURSTIS' Company have been discharged on account of sickness, and inability to travel on account of it—JACOB SHANKS, of Morgan County, SOCRADES PRATHER, of Hampshire, BENJAMIN BLONDEL, of Berkeley, OTHO KISINGER, of Berkeley, and two young men from Philadelphia. The Jefferson, Berkeley, and Petersburg Companies were all on board the Bark Exact, and were to sail on Friday morning last, the 19th inst. There were still three Companies at Fortress Monroe, but as Transports had arrived for them, they are probably off before this time.

[CH]

Thursday, February 25, 1847 MG47v47n52p2c5 Words: 161

BIRTH-DAY CELEBRATION.

The "Independent Blues" under command of Capt. THOMAS B. HOOPER celebrated the Birth Day Anniversary of the immortal WASHINGTON—Monday last, the 22d inst., in a very appropriate manner. The day was very stormy and inclement, yet notwithstanding the turn out of the Company was quite full.—They marched to the Presbyterian Church, where the "Farewell Address" of WASHINGTON to his Countrymen was read by NORMAL MILLER, Esq., prefaced by a few appropriate remarks; at the conclusion of which, Dr. F. D. DELLINGER rose and pronounced a short but eloquent eulogy upon the life and character of the illustrious Father of our Country.—We congratulate the young and eloquent Orator upon his highly creditable effort. His audience testified their approbation and delight by the most rapturous applause at different stages of the delivery, but especially at the conclusion of his Address. The Company dined at Capt. BOAK’s Hotel, where, as we learn every thing was prepared for them in first-rate style.

Thursday, February 25, 1847, MG47v47n52p2c6 Words: 98

NEXT PRESIDENCY AND VICE-PRESIDENCY,

“MONTEREY,” a correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot, nominates THOMAS RITCHIE, Esq., the Expelled of the Senate, for President in 1848, and R. RICHILIEU, Esq., the Author of the Sassage story in the N. Y. Tribune and the Expelled of the House of Representatives, as Vice President. "Monterey" is not posted up—it was not RICHILIEU, the regular correspondent of the Tribune, who describe "the Ohio animal" feeding behind the Speaker’s chair on "sassages,” but "Persimmon,” an occasional correspondent. Will "Monterey” make the correction?—if so, we go his ticket and then "the longest pole knocks down the Persimmon.”

Thursday, February 25, 1847, MG47v47n52p2c6 Words: 74

TWEEDLEDUM AND TWEEDLEDEE.

The Union denounces most bitterly the action of the House of Representatives upon the Wimot proviso, but takes care not to touch the names of any of its own party. Messrs. DAVIS, YOUNG, MCHENRY, GRIDER, and TRUMBO of Ky., all Whigs, who voted for the proviso, are denounced in unmeasured terms.—What is the difference “’twixt tweedledum and tweedledee?” A few experiments upon the liberty of the press!!! has given the organ some experience.

Thursday, February 25, 1847, MG47v47n52p3c1-2, Words: 187

SWORDS FOR THE VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

The handsome substantial swords ordered by the City Council, for the officers of the Volunteer Companies of Richmond, for Mexico, have been received and are now at the store of Messrs. MITCHELL and TYLER.

These swords were made by AMES, of Mass., and bear the following inscriptions on their blades.

"Presented by the city of Richmond, Va., to Captain ROBERT G. SCOTT, Jr., of the Richmond Grays.—January, 1847.”

1st Lieutenant,             THOMAS P. AUGUST.
2nd “                  JOHN J. FRY.
2nd “                  ROBERT C. DONNAN.

"Presented by the city of Richmond, Va., to Captain EDWARD C. CARRINGTON of the Richmond Rangers.—January, 1847.”

1st Lieutenant,             G. A. PORTERFIELD.
2nd “                  CARLTON R. MUNFORD.
2nd “                  H. A. WILLIAMSON.

The patriotic spirit by which these gallant young officers have been actuated in offering their services in time of need, prove them to be worthy recipients of so distinguished a compliment from the Metropolis of their native State. We feel too, that if an occasion presents itself, they will show by their valor on the battle-field that these swords have not been placed in improper hands.— Richmond Rep. Feb. 16.
Thursday, March 4, 1847, MG47v48n1, Pages 1 and 2 missing—nothing on pages 3 or 4

Thursday, March 11, 1847, MG47v48n2p2c6, Words: 558

LATEST NEWS FROM THE ARMY.

From the West we learn that Col. DONNIPHAN with 600 men, encountered a body of Mexicans, about 1200 in number, about 50 miles of Paso del Norte and a battle ensued.—The Mexicans stood but one fire, broke ranks and fled, leaving 30 men dead on the field.—None of the Americans were killed—only seven wounded. Col. DONNIPHAN's destination is Chihuahua where he expects to find Gen. WOOL and join his column. He will be disappointed, and may run perhaps into the arms of an over-powering force.

An insurrection had been planned at Santa Fe, headed by the Priests, but it was discover in time to prevent it. Twenty of the ringleaders—nearly all Priests—had been arrested. It was thought they would be executed.

The dates from Tampico are to the 20th of February—Gen. SCOTT had arrived the day before. The General immediately issued his General Orders—announcing his Staff, Officers, &c., and also a general order for the purpose of restraining licentiousness in and about the camps and posts of the invading army; by which all such camps, &c., are declared to be under martial law, and assassination, murder, malicious stabbing, maiming, theft, the wanton destruction of Churches or other property, are declared to be offences which will be punished by military commissions duly appointed for the purpose, and that the sentence shall be carried into execution, in conformity with the punishments inflicted for like crimes in the United States.

It is reported that SANTA ANNA has ordered his troops to evacuate Vera Cruz and retire into the interior. (Doubtful, we should think.) A letter from Tampico, Feb. 18, states that SANTA ANNA was to march on Saltillo preparatory to attacking Monterey; and that Gen. URREA, with 5,000 troops, was to march upon and attack Matamoras. The Mexicans count strongly upon the success of both expeditions. It is thought, however, by the N. Orleans Bulletin that these intimations are given out by SANTA ANNA to mask his real movements toward Vera Cruz, and that he has actually marched to that point. He had 30,000 men, 7,000 cavalry, at San Luis, and may reach Vera Cruz as soon as Gen. SCOTT. A severe fight will perhaps take place.

Gen. TAYLOR is now at Saltillo, with about 8000 men and a full supply of provisions, &c., for his army for ten months. It is reported in in a letter from the Brazos Santiago, of date Feb. 22, that the whole Mexican force in and about Saltillo have gone South to Vera Cruz. Gen. BUTLER has been obliged to return to the U. States—he is still suffering so much from his wounds received at Monterey as to be disabled for service.

The portion of the Virginia Troops under Lt. Col. RANDOLPH, had arrived at Brazos Santiago. They are to land at the mouth of the Rio Grande, and proceed immediately to Saltillo. The Virginians will be under “Old Rough and Ready.”

THE NEW MAJOR GENERAL.

Col. [unreadable] BENTON, of Mo., and Col. CUMMINGS of Augusta, Ga., are the two new Maj. Generals under the late law of Congress authorising the appointment of additional officers of that grade.—Every person knows Gen. BENTON, but of CUMMINGS we know nothing, only that he fought the famous duel a number of years since with Gen. MCDUFFIE of S. C.

[HCH]

Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p1c3-5, Words: 2155

LIST OF ACTS

Which have passed at the last Session of Congress that has just closed.

BILL WHICH ORIGINATED IN THE SENATE.

An act to establish a land office in the Northern part of Michigan, and to provide for the sale of mineral lands in the State of Michigan.

An act granting a pension to Joseph Morrison.

An act declaring the assent of Congress to certain States to impose a tax upon the lands hereafter sold by the United States therein from and after the day of such sales.
An act for the relief of Thomas Boronell.

An act for the relief of John Stockton, late a lieutenant in the army of the United States.

An act for the relief of Win. B. Keene.

An act to extend the time for selling the land granted to they Kentucky asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb.

An act for the relief of George Gordon.

An act for the relief of Peter Frost.

An act for the relief of Elijah White and others.

An act to encourage enlistments in the regular army.

An act for the relief of Thomas Blanchard.

An act for the relief of Hobson Johns.

An act for the relief of George Roush.

An act giving the assent of Congress to an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, authorizing the levy of tolls on the James river.

An act to authorize the issuing of a new register for the American barque "Pons, “ of Philadelphia, by the name of the “Cordelia.”

An act to regulate the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes.

An act for the relief of Andrew Moore.

An act for the relief of the heirs of Louis de la Houssaye, deceased.

An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the brigantine "Ocean Queen.”

An act confirming the claim of the heirs and legal representatives of Pierre Dufresne to a tract of land.

An act to establish a court at Key West, in the State of Florida, and for other purposes.

An act for the relief of James S. Conway.

An act to change the time of holding one of the terms of the circuit court of the U. States for the district of North Carolina.

An act to grant a right of pre-emption to Philip F. Dering and Rob’t H. Champoin to a tract of mineral land.

An act in addition to an act to establish a court at Key West, in the State of Florida.

An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels, “ and to determine the time when said act shall take effect.

An act to provide for the punishment of piracy in certain cases.

An act for the relief of Francis Sommerauer.

An act making further appropriation to bring the existing war with Mexico to a speedy and honorable conclusion.

An act relinquishing to the city of Madison, in the State of Indiana, all the right and title of the U. States to a certain strip of unsurveyed land lying within the limits of said city, and bordering on the Ohio river.

An act providing for the building and equipment of four naval steamships.

An act making provision for an additional number of general officers, and for other purposes.
An act to amend an act entitled “an act to raise for a limited time an additional military force, and for other purposes.”

A joint resolution for lighting with gas the Capitol and Capitol grounds.

A joint resolution authorizing the employment of the U. States ships Macedonian and Jamestown in transporting provisions for the famishing poor in Ireland and Scotland.

Resolution concerning the purchase of additional lands for the use of the U. States armories at Harper’s Ferry and Springfield.

Resolution to refund money to the States which have supplied volunteers and furnished transportation during the present war, before being mustered and received into the service of the United States.

A joint resolution to correct an error in the act of June 17, 1844, for the relief of Mary Ann Linton.

A joint resolution representing the maps and charts of the surveys of the boundary lines of the United States of America and foreign states.

BILLS WHICH ORIGINATED IN THE HOUSE.

An act for the admission of the State of Wisconsin into the Union.

An act authorizing the issue of Treasury notes, a loan, and for other purposes.

An act to establish certain post routes, and for other purposes.

An act to amend "An act entitled an act to amend an act to carry into effect, to the States of Alabama and Mississippi, the existing compacts with those States with regard to the five per cent. fund and the school reservations.

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce the rates of postage, to limit the use and correct the abuse of the franking privilege, and for the prevention of frauds on the revenues of the Post Office Department, ” passed March 3, 1845.

An act further to extend the charter of the Union Bank of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia.

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost and destroyed in the military service of the U. States, ” approved the 18th day of January, 1837.

An act providing for the payment of any interest falling due on the public debt.

An act for the relief of the Bank of the Metropolis.

An act making appropriations for the support of the army and of volunteers for the year ending the 30th June, 1848, and for other purposes.

An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending on the 30th June, 1848.

An act for the increase of the marine corps of the United States.

An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the year ending on the 30th June, 1848.

An act making appropriations for the payment of Revolutionary and other pensions of the United States for the year ending on the 30th June, 1848.

An act authorizing the erection of certain lighthouses, and for other purposes.

An act for the admission of the State of Iowa into the Union.

An to raise for a limited time an additional military force, and for other purposes.

An act to provide for the establishment of additional post routes in the State of Texas.

An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels.

An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1848.
An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30th, 1848.

An act to authorize the constituted authorities of the city of Du Buque, in the State of Iowa, to enter certain islands between the landings of said city and the main channel of the Mississippi river.

An act to create an additional land district in the Territory of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

An act creating a collection district in Maine, and constituting Bangor, in said district, a port of entry and delivery.

An act making appropriations for the payment of navy pensions for the year ending 30th June, 1848.

An act for the relief of Ray Tompkins and others, the children and heirs at law of the late Dan'l D. Tompkins.

An act granting a pension to Patrick Kelly.

An act for the relief of Joshua Shaw.

An act for the relief of Julius Eldred, Elisha Eldred, and Francis El. Eldred, for expenses and services in removing the copper rock from Lake Superior.

An act for the relief of Joseph Warren Newcomb.

An act for the relief of the citizens of Beetown, in the territory of Wisconsin.

An act for the relief of W. P. S. Sanger and George de la Roche.

An act for the relief of Dr. Clarke Lillybridge.

An act for the relief of Frederick Hopkins, and of the county of Chenango, in the State of New York.

An act for the relief of the heirs of Sergeant Major John Champe.

An act for the relief of James Jones, of the city of Brooklyn.

An act for the relief of the late legal representatives of Thos. Shields, deceased.

An act for the relief of Susan Brum.

An act for the relief of Elizabeth Adams.

An act for the relief of Henry La Reintree.

An act for the relief of Jas. H. Conley.

An act for the relief of Wm. N. Walthall.

An act for the relief of the widow and heirs of John B. Chaudonia.

An act for the relief of Jacob L. Vance.

An act for the relief of Josiah Haskell.

An act for the relief of Jas. Williams.

An act granting a pension to Silas Chatfield.

An act for the relief of the assignees of the late Bank of Alexandria.

An act for the relief of Harvey Reynolds.

An act for the relief of Catharine Stephenson.

An act for the relief of Ann Clayton.
An act for the relief of Elizabeth Fitch.

An act for the relief of Thankful Reynolds.

An act for the relief of Elizabeth Calkins, the widow of Silas Winans.

An act for the relief of Jonathan Hoyt.

An act to increase the pension of Roswell Hale.

An act for the relief of Edith Ramey.

An act to provide for the final settlement of the accounts of John Spencer, late receiver of the public moneys at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

An act for the relief of John C. Stewart and others.

An act for the relief of the estates of Benjamin Metoyer and Francois Gaiennie, deceased.

An act for the relief of Isaac Guess.

An act for the relief of the heirs of Hyacinth Lasselle.

An act for the relief of James Green, of the county of Fauquier, State of Virginia.

An act for the relief of Wilfred Knott.

An act for the relief of Bernard O’Neill.

An act for the relief of John Pickett and others.

An act for the relief of Harrison Whitson.

An act for the relief of Job Hawkins.

An act for the relief of John Speakmen.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of John Lanson, deceased.

An act to grant a pre-emption right the heirs and legal representatives of John T. Smith.

An act for the relief of Capt. Jas. Pennoyer.

An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Bunce.

An act for the relief of William Causey.

An act for the relief of John Van Slyck.

An act for the relief of the administrators of Joseph [unreadable]dson, deceased, late marshal of the district of Vermont.

An act for the relief of Joseph Gideon.

An act for the relief of Lewis C. Sartori.

An act for the relief of Geo. B. Russell and others.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Simon Spalding, deceased.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Jas. H. Clark.

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of the Department of Indian Affairs, and an act entitled 'An act to regulate the trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the
An act for the relief of Mary Segar, and for the relief of Elisha Dennison, administrator of Phenix Carpenter Ellis.

An act for the reduction of the costs and expenses of proceedings in admiralty against ships and vessels.

An act for the relief of Zachariah Simmons, of the State of Tennessee.

An act for the relief of the heirs of John Paul Jones.

An act to give consent of Congress to the sale of certain salt spring lands heretofore granted to the States of Michigan, Illinois, and Arkansas.

An act to establish a port of entry at Salura, in the State of Texas.

Join resolution to prohibit the sale at private entry of certain lands in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Joint resolution for the relief of William B. Stokes, surviving partner of John N. C. Stockton & Co.

Joint resolution for the relief of Stephen Johnson, deceased.

Joint resolution relative to the preparation and presentation of medals to certain French, British, and Spanish officers.

Join resolution for the relief of M. A. Price and E. A. White.

Joint resolution authorising and directing the examination and settlement of the claims of Alexander M. Cumming.

Joint resolution for the settlement of the accounts of Purser G. R. Barry.

Joint resolution for the relief of John and Charles Bruce.

Joint resolution of thanks to Major General Zachary Taylor, the officers and soldiers under his command, for their conduct in the storming of the city of Monterey.

INTERESTING FROM OREGON & CALIFORNIA.

The New York Tribune has received a letter from Panama, communicating the following interesting intelligence from Oregon and California.

The British surveying vessels, the Herald and Pandora, arrived in the bay of Panama—the former on the 13th, and the latter on the 16th of Jan., 1847. Their business here is to complete the survey of the bay and the neighboring coast.—The Officers gave different accounts of the value of this Island—some saying it is very valuable; others that it is worthless.—The naturalist is of the former opinion.

They left the Straights on the 9th of September last, and arrived at San Francisco bay, in Upper California, on the 26th of the same month, where they found the American flag flying from th effort, and from some twenty-five whalers, which had run in there through fear of Mexican privateers. The Portsmouth was also there. At Yerba Buena, were many Mormons living in tents, while they were building their houses. An advance guard of these people, about 5000 in number, had already arrived in the country.—There was much quarreling among them.

On the 26th of the same month, they hove to in the bay of Monterey, and communicated with Com. Stockton, who was then under sail in the Cyane, for the Southern ports. The Commodore was in good health, and represented the country in a pretty quiet state.

On the 4th of October last, they lay off the bay of San Diego and communicated with an armed whaler, which ahd, as was reported, been sent down by the Commodore for the protection of the coast.—They learned that the Californians had risen on the American garrison at Pueblos de los Angeles, killed the commander Capt. Galespy, and most of his command, and raised again the Mexican flag. They afterward heard a vague report that Gallespy had escaped. The Americans and other foreigners who had escaped the massacre had taken refuge on board the whaler. The natives were leaving California. On the 20th of October, these vessels arrived at Mazatlan, where they learned that the American squadron had literally leveled the town of Guaymas, in Senora, to the earth. It was not known that the land forces under General Kearney had arrived in that country.

Two American ships of war were cruising on Mazatlan, the names of which were forgotten. It would appear that the difference between American and British sailors is not clearly defined; for the commander of the surveying vessels (running his vessels into the ahrbor without hoisting his flag) was seized together with several other officers and men and thrown into prison as Americans in disguise.—It required about one week to convince Don Juan Carraho to the contrary.

They touched at San Blan and Acapulco, and took a running survey of the whole coast. It was an utterly defenceless state.

Since writing the above, one of these British officers informs me that the American sloop-of-war Shark was ashore on the bar of the Columbia river in September last. It was not known at San Francisco whether she was got off, or not. Some said she was got off, but went ashore again and was lost.

There is still a great turmoil on this coast about the Expedition of Flores. In this place it is hardly possible to sleep for drumming, fifing, and the blowing of those villainous Spanish American trumpets.—The government of New Grenada has concentrated here a force of some 2000 men, i.e. little Negro and Indian soldiers and the militia, under the command of Gen. Lopez, in order to dispute Flores’ passage across the Isthmus, should he attempt to come this way. But is it supposed that they will join that very able and popular general with a hearty zeal, should he choose to present himself among them.

The Government of New Grenada, Equador, &c. have entered into a league for mutual defence, so that the general should enter Equador by any other route than this, the troops stationed here will proceed thither and form a junction with their allies. Perhaps Flores would do better to fight his enemies in detail—and to do that he should come cross the Isthmus, landing at Porto Bello, and marching to Panama, whence he can proceed to the port of Guayaquil, in Equador—fight the Equadorans before Peruanos, &c. arrive, and so along. However, I suppose that these opinions of mine on military matters will be of little use to your readers or Flores.

VIATOR.

Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p1c6-7, Words: 665

SLAVERY IN MEXICO.

It has been asserted that slavery did not exist in Mexico. It is true under the name it does not, but under the names of peonage it does and it its worse form confined to no color, but as perpetual bondage and punishment for debt. Many large proprietors control in this way hundreds of peons, both men and women. The debt is perpetual—it generally increases instead of diminishing—and is rarely ever paid. The peon being charged with interest as well as with clothing, subsistence, medicine &c. In this way it is believed that more than a million of peons are held as slaves, and may be seized as fugitives if they dare to leave the employ of their master; and the fruits of their labor to go to their master not to the peon. In the speech of the Hon. Mr. Roberts of Mississippi, by whom public attention has been called to this subject, these laws are given as follows:

PEON LAWS OF MEXICO.

ART. 1. The masters are responsible for the conduct of their servants, and for the same reason, the law gives them, over those servants, the authority of fathers over their sons, that they may particularly correct and chastise them. The same authority is given over the family of the servant that lives with the master.

ART. 2. In consequence of the foregoing provision, the master should provide for the education of the children of the servants dependant upon them.

ART. 3. Should the faults of the servant be many or aggravated, whether because he frequently fails in his service, or whether for want of respect to the master, he shall be chastised by the justice (alcade) with six months in irons, if a man, or with the (la cevena) clog, if a woman, in the house of the master, the latter having the power to diminish this penalty at his pleasure. If the servant should be guilty of overt acts against the master, he shall be punished in conformity to the existing laws.

ART. 4. He who being once convicted, according to the foregoing articles shall repeat the same offence, shall be criminally prosecuted and condemned to serve one year on the public works in irons; and if a woman shall be so convicted, she shall be condemned to one year of seclusion with the clog.
ART. 5. In no case shall the master lose the debt of the servant; and the term of punishment being concluded, the servant shall return to the service of his master if he can do it; but if he enters the service of another, this shall pay the debt.

ART. 6. The law which prohibits trading with servants, and the penalties which those laws establish as to those who contracted them, are declared to be in force.

ART. 7. The master who abuses the power given him by the law shall be tried and punished in conformity to the law, according to the abuse he may commit; but in no case not even in that of application of a fine in favor of the aggrieved, shall the master lose the debt.

ART. 8. Payments shall be made in money or goods, if the servants ask them, at the current prices. For settlements, and on plantations, where there are no stores, and the good are brought from other parts, they shall be charged with the extra costs. The master who may give his goods with the higher charges then the foregoing regulation requires, shall be fined equivalent to triple the excess which he charges upon the servant.

ART. 9. As the master cannot turn away the servant without just cause, so neither can the servant leave the service of his master without the same just cause. The servant who shall do so, shall be positively returned to the service of his master, chastised by the justice in the house of the master, with two months in irons, or with the clog, if a woman.

---

Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p1c7, Words: 109

A Capital Toast.—At late festival of the citizens of St. Louis, given on the 15th of February, for the purpose of celebrating the landing of Laclede and the founding of that city, we find the following among the regular toasts drunk on the occasion:

Our Army—The Volunteers and Regulars: With Shields for defence; a Butler for supplies, a Pillow for repose; and a Marshall for parade, may they not lack Wool for comfort, Worth in battle, or a Garland for victory; never crying Quitman to the foe, but laying their Twiggs on the enemy's back, pay promptly their Scott, or charge as the Taylor always knows how.

---

Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p2c5, Words: 402

THE VIRGINIA VOLUNTEERS.

By private letters we have news of the arrival of the Victory, at Point Isabel, with the companies under the command of Captains CARRINGTON and CORSE, of the Virginia Regiment, on board. They arrived two days after the Mayflower. No mention is made of the Victory in the news given in the New Orleans papers. We erroneously stated a day or two since that Capt. CORSE's company was on board the Mayflower. The companies on board that vessel were those under the command of Captains SCOTT, HARPER, F. H. ARCHER, and BANKHEAD. The whole six companies were ordered to join Gen. TAYLOR with all possible dispatch. We have been favored with the following letter from Capt. CARRINGTON:—

Richmond Times.

POINT ISABEL, Feb. 21st, 1847.

Dear Mother: I have only about five minutes to write. It happened that Col RANDOLPH's detachment and ours reached land within two days of each other. Capt. CORSE and myself came ashore from our vessel to wait upon the commanding officer of the post (Gen. WORTH as it happened to be) and receive orders. When we reached the Hotel, the first man we met was Col. RANDOLPH, with one of his officers on the same duty.

Our orders are, to take the first boat for Matamoras, and thence, to march immediately to Monterey, about three hundred miles, where we are to join old Zack, who expects a brush very soon, and is anxious for reinforcements. Gen. WORTH seemed delighted to see us; and said that Gen. TAYLOR would be greatly relieved by our arrival. The arrangement seems to be to concentrate the regular forces at Vera Cruz and the volunteers at Monterey. One would easily infer from this that warmer work was expected at the former. To be frank, I must confess that we are somewhat disappointed; for we hoped to share in the struggle at Vera Cruz.

I have met with a good many Mexicans of the lower class here. They appear from their action to be very sluggish and indolent; yet they are fully as large and muscular, it seems to me, as our men.

We all arrived safely—no sickness, expect mumps and sea sickness. FAYETTE FITZHUGH was dreadfully sea-sick; from the time he went aboard until he landed. Strange to say, I suffered less than any of them, except Lieut. C. MUNFORD, who was not sick at all.
Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p2c6, Words: 1005

IMPORTANT CORRESPONDENCE.

Senator Benton’s resignation of his Major Generalship.—We find in the Washington Union and Intelligencer the following correspondence, published at the request of Senator Benton, which fully explains itself:--

Washington City, March 10, 1847.

Sir:—Please to receive as a mark of my respect, a copy of the following letters, which explain the circumstances under which I decline to accept the appointment of major general in the army. Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant.

THOMAS H. BENTON.

To the Hon. Mr. -----, of the United States Senate.

Washington City, March 6, 1847.

SIR: Without waiting for the formality of being presented with the commission of major general to the Army of the United States, I think it right to inform you at once that my acceptance, or refusal, of that high appointment, will depend entirely upon public and national considerations, of which you, yourself, will be the judge. Personally, I can have no wish for this office, but if you believe that I can be of service to the country, I am willing to forgo all private considerations—separate myself from my family, under painful circumstances; resign my place in the Senate, which is so dear to me—and proceed immediately to the theatre of war. My only stipulation would be for the powers which I deem necessary to success; and these would be both military and diplomatic—the command of the army, and an authority to sign preliminaries of peace, based upon terms previously approved by you.

I beg you to believe, sir, that nothing selfish, or personal dictates this proposed stipulation. There is no such thing in it. It proceeds from a thorough conviction that, with a subordinate command, I could do no good in the army; on the contrary that my presence there would be improper and mischievous: for I am known from my public speeches, to disapprove the plans both of the late, and of the present commander—(the defensive policy of one, and the San Juan of Ulua attack of the other)—and this being known, my presence would operate as an implied censure on the two generals, and might make me, in spite of myself, the nucleus of discontent and insubordination. The command of the army, therefore, is the only position which I could hold in it.

Authority to conclude a peace or at least to sign the preliminaries of peace, I deem highly essential to success, as it would enable the commander-in-chief to take instant advantage of all passing events, military or political, to close the war.

Furnished with these powers, I am willing to make the sacrifices, and to incur the responsibilities of this high command; but I leave it to you, sir, for your free and final decision; considering it as a national question, and a new one on which there is no commitment, on either side, in any thing that has passed.

Whatever may be the decision, my thanks and gratitude will not be less to you for your unsolicited nomination of me to this high appointment, nor to the Senate for its instant and unanimous confirmation of it, nor the House of Representatives for its three times virtual election of me to the commander-in-chief of the army in Mexico.

Respectfully, sir, your friend and fellow citizen,

THOS. H. BENTON.

To the President.

Washington City, March 9, 1847.

SIR: I have given to your letter of the 6th instant, the consideration its importance demands. In tendering to you the appointment of major general in the army, I earnestly desired that the country should have the advantage of your conceded ability and military knowledge, your intimate acquaintance with the Mexican character, and your familiarity with their language and political condition.
Immediately after your nomination as major general had been unanimously confirmed by the Senate, I carefully examined the question, whether I possessed the power to designate you—a junior major general to the chief command of the army in the field. The result of this examination is, I am constrained to say, a settled conviction on my mind, that such power has not been conferred upon me by the existing laws.

I am fully aware of the exalted patriotism which could alone have induced you to make the personal sacrifices to which you would be subjected, in assuming even the chief command of the Army in Mexico; and I duly appreciate the reasons you have assigned, and which may, I fear, prevent you from accepting your appointment as major general. If, on further reflection, such should be your decision, I shall learn it with deep regret.

I am, sir, with high consideration, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington City, Tuesday Evening, March 9, 1847

SIR:—Your letter of this day’s date is just received; and seeing no reason for further reflection, and wishing to avoid all delay in officering the army, I have written a note to the adjutant general, to be delivered at his office in the morning, declining to accept the appointment of major general in the army, so kindly offered to me by you, and so honorably confirmed by the Senate. I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your friend and fellow-citizen,

THOS. H. BENTON.

To the President.

Washington City, Tuesday Evening, March 9, 1847.

SIR:—I had the honor to receive your note of the 6th instant, with the commission of major general in the army, and delayed the answer of acceptance or non-acceptance, until I should receive an answer from the President to a note which I addressed to him the morning of that day. The answer is now received, and enables me to answer your note, and to say that the commission is not accepted.

Please accept, sir, my thanks for the kind terms of your note, and for the thousand courtesies which you have extended to me in the course of our long and friendly acquaintance.

THOS H. BENTON.

To Adjutant General Jones.

Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p2c7, Words: 1244

LATEST NEWS!

LATE FROM MEXICO.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

A week later from the Capital—Triumph of the Church—Repeal of the Confiscation Law—Santa Anna desponding—The Army levying supplies for itself—Prospects of a Speedy Peace—Doings at Vera Cruz—Inefficiency of the Blockade—Rumored Protectorate.

The New York Sun has received Spanish papers with advices from Havana to the 26th ult., Vera Cruz to the 8th; and from the city of Mexico to the 5th, being a week later from the capital. The church had effectually resisted the seizure of its property, SANTA ANNA had yielded to the demands of the hierarchy, and the clergy propose a loan of $150,000 per month to the government. Such is a brief summary of the news.
We now give the details in the order of their occurrence since the latest date of our previous advices. The church continued its zealous resistance to the law of confiscation; the protest of the Archbishop's chapter was followed by protests from the various States, concluding with an energetic and denunciatory remonstrance from the Bishop of Michoacan. Many of these were forwarded to SANTA ANNA, who returned them to Congress with a letter of considerable length. He says that these protests have convinced him that the confiscation law had produced universal discontent; he regrets that the people should give him the repute of being the author of that law on the authority of a private and confidential letter to a friend, which had been printed, but which did not warrant the construction put upon it; no one can say that his suggestions were adopted in the law; and if there are other plans of obtaining resources—if, upon seeing the objects or policy of those who have endeavored to make themselves his inexcusable enemies and who wish to overthrow the measure because they believe it to be one which had not his approbation, --he entreats Congress, if not wholly convinced of the unity of the law, to modify it or substitute for it some other revenue law more to the purpose.

Upon the reading of this letter a bill was submitted to repeal the law and to authorize the Government to receive a loan of $450,000 per month from the clergy, which it was understood they were prepared to advance until peace has been secured. This bill was expected to receive the approbation of Congress and SANTA ANNA.

The distresses of the army were still prominent topics of discussion. SANTA ANNA had to seize 98 bars of silver belonging to Spanish merchants at San Luis, for which he gave his "personal guarantee." Unfortunately for the citizens, he was also compelled to seize provisions and money wherever he could find them, and which he had begun to collect throughout the country, without giving his "personal guarantee." In other words, the army is levying supplies for itself.

The minister of war sent $35,000 to SANTA ANNA at the close of January. The latter has forwarded a desponding letter to the government. He replies to the charge of [unreadable] made against him, paints the horrible destruction of his forces, his and their protestations of valor and patriotism, and declares his readiness to retire to private life, or to go again into foreign exile, if Congress think best. If they wish him to remain at the head of the army, they know his firm resolution, which is, to meet the enemy and to win imperishable glory for his country by death or victory. He adds that his is about to meet the enemy. The capture of the American detachments had [unreadable] some enthusiasm. The letter was dated 26th January. His proclamation announces his departure from San Luis for Saltillo, dated 27th, has already been published, and it is worthy of note that it was forwarded to Tampico without that of the 26th.

Active preparations for defence were [unreadable] at Vera Cruz as late as he 7th. The national bridge at Point Chiquihuite are receiving formidable additions to their strength. An act had passed the State legislature conferring all necessary power upon the governor in fortifying the city. We remark, however, that the rumored evacuation of Vera Cruz, announced at Tampico, may have been founded upon orders issued since the 7th ult. JUSTO SANTA ANNA has entered upon his duties as temporary Governor of Tabasco. Gen REJON, the new Secretary of foreign affairs, is favorably spoken of. He is to be the principal manager of negotiations with the United States.

There were at Anton Lizardo, one U. S. frigate, 3 brigs, 2 small steamers, 5 pilot boats, 1 steam frigate, and one French frigates, 2 French brigs, and one English brig.

The Spanish brig Seraphine, at Havana, and the blockade at Vera Cruz both in and out, being accompanied out by two other vessels which also escaped from the U. S. squadron. The blockade is violated daily. The English schooner Lee, arrived at Havana 27th Feb, [unreadable] days from Balize, Honduras, with $21,000 in specie.

News of the loss of the British mail steamer Tweed, had reached Havana.

We have a rumor from Havana that SANTA ANNA, during hostilities, was to be declared "Protector of Mexican Liberty," with full power to bring the war to a speedy termination—but it is only a rumor.

PEACE MOVEMENTS IN MEXICO.

The "Courier des Etats Unis" says it has received, by way of Havana, private advices relative to the affairs of Mexico, which contains several important revelations with regard to the reaction now going on secretly in the capital. It seems, says the Courier, that the clergy, whose property has been menaced by the war party, is disposed to make its own cause that of the Republic, and permit the projects of peace to triumph. Its plan is to replace the Federal Congress, from whose action it has nothing to hope for, by an absolute power strong enough to force Mexico to agree to a peace. Such, continues the Courier, is the double road leading to this end, and it is SANTA ANNA upon whom they are also reported to have cast their eyes. That General would then be sure of arriving once more to the dictatorship, supported by the clergy, and on the express condition of respecting its property and promptly concluding a treaty of peace. There is nothing in this combination, the Courier adds, which is at all improbable, due regard being had to the actual condition of Mexico, and besides, the person who communicates this intelligence is in a position which gives to it weight.

END OF THE EXCITING LIBEL CASE AT WASHINGTON.—By telegraph we received yesterday afternoon the following despatch, says the Baltimore American, March 9, announcing the termination of the exciting case of Ex-Gov. THOMAS, who was prosecuted for a libel upon his former wife:
WASHINGTON, March 8, 5, P. M.

Gen. JONES has just announced to the Circuit Court, as Senior counsel for Gov. THOMAS, the end of this deplorable controversy, and has read a paper which the Court has [unreadable], signed by the counsel for the defence, Messrs. JONES, MAULSHY, and SCOTT, defeating their belief of the unfounded character of the offences imputed by Gov. T. to his late wife, and also stating the conviction of the learned counsel that their client, however sound his mind on other subjects, in relation to the subject matter of this deplorable controversy, labored under an unhappy and morbid delusion.

PAY MASTER AT HARPER’S FERRY.—Col. EDWARD LUCAS has received the appointment of Pay Master at the U. S. Armory at Harper’s Ferry, vice RICHARD PARKES, Esq. resigned.

[CH] Thursday, March 18, 1847, MG47v48n2p3c1, Words: 680

THE THREE MILLION BILL, without the qualifications of the Wilmot proviso, passed the ordeal of the two Houses and is now a law. The ball itself has a thin cover of plausibility on the face of it; but to understand it aright it must be considered in connection with the remarks of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who, in open Senate, declared its real nature and purposes.

Our readers have not forgotten Mr. SEVIER’s avowal—that the object of this extraordinary appropriation was to furnish the leader of the Mexican army with the means of paying his troops, in order that they might be made tractable in his hands as he promised to be in ours.

Let us suppose that this declaration goes to Mexico, as it must, in advance of the appropriation. What then? The people of Mexico will behold in their leader a pensionary of the United States—an unmasked traitor, who receives money from the enemy to subserve the enemy’s purposes. Is it not so? And if it be so, how can SANTA ANNA retain the confidence of his counymen? Let us reverse the case, and suppose that in a war between the United States and England for example, the commander-in-chief of our armies in the field held at the same time the Presidency, and was a man of controlling influence with a powerful party; that he was willing to conclude a disgraceful peace, but feared to avow himself so lest his popularity and influence might be endangered; and that, finally, to strengthen his hands and to give him the means of procuring subservient instruments to accomplish his design, the British Government, in open Parliament, appropriated a large sum for his use. If such a man should not fall at once from his high position, overwhelmed by the indignation of his counymen, it would be because all sentiments of honor and patriotism have become extinct amongst us, and the faculty had become lost of recognizing the worst characteristics of treason.

There is one point of view in which we can understand how the Mexicans might permit this juggle to go on. They may know very well that the whole project is only a scheme on the part of SANTA ANNA to get money, and they may wink at the stratagem by which this Government allows itself to be coerced. It may remain that in the recollection of the Mexicans that SANTA ANNA has duped Mr. POLK once already, and that the manner in which the exiled chief was brought home and restored to the head of the army, did not in the slightest degree affect his devotion to Mexico, or impair his efficiency as a commander.—Why not suffer this accomplished master of duplicity to carry on his game? Money is very desirable to the Mexicans—very; they could fight us to much better advantage with a few millions in their coffers; and lo, here comes a simple pigeon ready to be plucked. The chance is too good to be lost; the game is irresistibly attractive to the prince of Mexican sharpers. It is a much better way of raising money than to lay taxes which can rarely be collected, or to seize upon church property from which nothing can be realized except unpopularity.
—Balt. Amer.

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE PRESIDENCY.—Politicians are not likely to make much by speculating on Gen. TAYLOR for the Presidency. In conversing with a gentleman recently, who told him he had been named for that office, he replied. “I am sorry to see it. I have always thought and still think a civilian and none other should hold that office. I have no other ambition than to bring this wary to an honorable close. I then go to my farm and there in the bosom of my family live and die. I am no politician. I have had no chance to vote for a number of years.”—Could he have voted at the last election, he says, he would have supported HENRY CLAY. He was opposed to the annexation of Texas.

[CH] Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p1c3 Words: 416

THE ISLAND OF LOBOS.—The Island of Lobos having become a place of some interest to many of our citizens as the place of rendezvous of that portion of our army which is destined for the attack on Vera Cruz, we extract the following brief account of it from the correspondence of the Philadelphia North American:

"ISLAND OF LOBOS, GULF OF MEXICO,

"February 7, 1847.
"This letter is written upon the most delightful tropical island ever trodden by adventurers from any clime.

"The Island of Lobos is a lovely little spot, formed entirely of coral, about two miles in circumference, twelve miles from the Mexican shore, about sixty miles from Tampico, and about 130 miles from Vera Cruz. It is covered (or was before we landed) with a variety of trees and shrubs, the highest of the former perhaps twenty five feet high, and these are so thickly covered with vines that one can hardly get through them. There is hardly a tree, or shrub, or growing plant here I have ever before seen. Banyan trees spreading over large spaces of ground, their limbs forming props as they pierce into the earth and take root, while the tops, thickly thatched with evergreen vines, form the most beautiful arbors. Lemon, lime, fig, palm, cane, and a hundred other species of wood are growing with all the freshness and beauty of the Indies. There is plenty of water to be had by digging four to six feet. It is brackish and sweet, but we are getting used to it, and like it nearly as well as ship water. Fish and sea fowl we have in profusion. With these we have a delightful sea air, that fourteen hours out of twenty-four makes the place delightfully pleasant.

"It will be difficult, I imagine, to convince you, who will read this scrawl beside great coal fires, that we are literally roasting during a portion of the day. The sun is so hot that our faces and arms are blistered if exposed but a few minutes. To-day, by Fareheit, in the shade, I scored 92 deg. The universal remark among the volunteers is, 'If this is winter, what will summer be?'

"Gen. SCOTT is daily expected here, and we shall soon be joined by seven thousand troops from Tampico, &c. There are six companies of Louisiana and four companies of South Carolina troops already here. They arrived on the 3d. instant. They are all in fine health, and are encamped beside us.'

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p1c7 Words: 1026

MR. RIVES’ LETTER.

We take pleasure in laying before our readers the subjoined eloquent letter from ex Senator RIVES:

CASTLE HILL, 24th Feb. 1847.

GENTLEMEN:--I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 17th instant, inviting me to attend a meeting of the citizens of our county proposed to be held at Charlottesville on the 27th inst., for the purpose of aiding in the great national charity of sending relief to the starving population of Ireland. Every feeling of my heart responds to the noble and generous object of the proposed meeting; and if the state of my health and the weather should permit me to overcome the distance, I will endeavor to be with you, to claim the privilege of a personal participation in this good work.

Nothing in my day has occurred to make me feel a juster pride in the character of my countrymen than the universal, and spontaneous movement with which, upon the first intelligence of the frightful distresses of our fellow beings in Ireland, though separated by a wide ocean and a difference of nationality, they have rushed forward, from one end of our continent to the other, to pour out the means with which a kind of Providence has blessed them, (in many instances the hard earning of daily toil,) all that could be spared from their own necessities for the support of kindred and suffering humanity in a distant quarter of the Globe. The problem has been thus gloriously solved that neither ocean nor "mountains interposed" present an impediment to the telegraphic sympathies and communications of the human heart. In the awful calamity of our Irish brethren, all have felt that mankind is but one family. No longer can it be said, in the language of the great moral poet of England—

This is no flesh in man’s obdurate heart;

It does not feel for man!“———

How much more congenial to the wants and infirmities of our common nature and the instincts of a noble philanthropy, is the great work of a national charity in which the people of America are now engaged, than scenes of war, violence and bloodshed, which fill so large a space in the annals of mankind; and it should be esteemed a glorious privilege for all of us, that, while called upon as citizens to sustain the government of our country in a conflict of arms with a foreign power, we can vindicate our humanity as men, by "deeds of peace," in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and visiting the forsaken on another and distant land.

That the good people of Albemarle will claim their full share in this errand of mercy; I know them too well to doubt; and lest the state of my health, which has been somewhat deranged for a few days past, or some other cause should prevent my being personally present, I herewith enclose you my "mites."

I remain, gentlemen, with the highest respect, very truly your friend.

W. C. RIVES.

To Messrs. G. W. CARR, R. K. MEADE, and A. B. MAGRUDER, Committee, &c.

INTERESTING FROM TAMPIOCO.

Tampico, Feb. 20 1847.

The vessel by which I wrote on the 18th and 19th is still here and sails this day, so I give you another hasty scrawl, informing you as far as I farther know, of movements in this quarter.

Gen. Twigg’s division is first under marching orders, and leaves to-day.—Who is to go next I do not know, nor do I know what force is to be left to garrison this post. It should not be less, however, than 1500 men. All is bustle, and very soon we shall not have more troops here than are barely sufficient to take care of the town. I think my mind is pretty well made up to go along and see the Vera Cruz fandango. I was unlucky to miss the sport at Monterey, and do not feel willing to be absent when the "ball" opens at Vera Cruz.

To give you some idea of what is expected to be done, I will show you a portion of what is going down in the shape of munitions: First there are some 100,000 rounds of heavy ammunition; rockets, shells and an enormous supply of all sorts of combustibles, with 40 mortars and columbaria—some of them ten inches calibre; from ten to twenty 24-pounders; three field batteries, consisting of 6 and 12-pounders, and 12 and 24 pound howitzers.—With all these go the sappers and miners in the pontoon train. If we don’t knock ‘em into fits with these and get up a nice “tea party” I am very much mistaken.

P. S.—Feb. 23d.—The vessel by which I intended to send the above sailed before I could place it on board. I have not much to add-in fact it is almost impossible to gather anything here in the way of what is called army news—so secret is every thing kept. There is not a Mexican in our whole country that does not know that our troops are going to Vera Cruz, while in the United States and even here our own people are in the dark.—Santa Anna manages to keep himself well advised of our movements. I almost venture to say that he now knows as much of our plans and intentions, and of our strength and numbers in the field, as any of those who are at headquarters, in Washington city. Despatches of the greatest moment are sent through the enemy’s country, almost totally unguarded, and like week and struggling foraging parties, and mules and wagons, without good and strong escorts, they fall into the hands of our foes.

General Scott sailed with his staff from this place day before yesterday. The troops are preparing to follow him, and officers are momentarily expecting marching orders. All the forces now here, except the Louisiana Volunteers, the Baltimore battalion and one company of artillery, will be on the way to Vera Cruz in a short time. Those that I have named will be left here under the command of Col. Gates, to garrison the city.
To the Patrons of the Gazette.

You have already been made acquainted with the fact of my having undertaken the editorial conduct of this paper, and I assure you I am far from insensitive to the responsibilities incident to my position; for while I have not the vanity to suppose for a moment, that even within the sphere of its ordinary circulation, the direct influence of the Gazette could be potently exerted for good or evil—yet it is manifest that the village newspaper enjoys means of usefulness, and possesses capacities for mischief sufficient to render it an object of interest in the vicinity of its location. To many it is the only channel through which they become acquainted with the events of the great world around them; it is welcomed in their homes as a familiar friend and fireside companion—affording the means of amusement and recreation, and furnishing food for reflection amid the ordinary labors and cares of life; thus whilst it is invaluable as a dispenser of useful knowledge, its assertions are but too often received without caution—its conclusions adopted without examination, and prejudices are instilled and principles inculcated into the minds of its readers, whose benefit effects are felt in every portion of the community.

To guard against these evils, should be the anxious desire of every conductor of a press, and I pledge myself at the outset to exercise the most watchful care that nothing shall appear in the columns of the Gazette calculated to prejudice the cause of virtue and sound morality, no matter how brilliant and attractive may be the style, how popular the subject or how great the genius or fame of its author. With a fixed and steady purpose to express no opinion which is not the deliberate and candid conviction of my own mind, and to give currency to no statement upon any subject which I do not honestly and sincerely believe to be true, I hope whatever may be my shortcomings in other regards, to retain your confidence and respect.

A Virginian by birth and education, and devotedly attached to my native soil, I shall zealously endeavor to aid in promoting all those measures which promise to amuse the slumbering energies of her people, and to place her in the proud position she is entitled to occupy with her sister States—among which I recognise a liberal yet judicious system of Internal Improvements and a plan of Common School Education, which will place the means of acquiring useful knowledge within the reach of all.

With regard to Federal politics, I can only say, that "according to the most straitest sect" of our political profession—I am a Whig. I am a Whig, not only because I consider the great measures of the 27th Congress eminently calculated to promote the prosperity of the whole country, but because I regard the great body of the Whig party as being diametrically opposed to those radical and destructive principles, so alarmingly prevalent in some of the States of our confederacy, and which threaten, at no distant day, to destroy the fabric of our Union. There can be no doubt, that the time has come, when many of those, who, in 1844, were found in the ranks of our opponents, look upon the defeat of HENRY CLAY, as a great national calamity. They have seen the offices of the country distributed as spoils to the most abandoned and unprincipled of the votaries of the Administration.—They have seen the oft-rejected Sub-Treasury bill again forced upon the country, in defiance of the will of the people. They have seen the President of their choice, after recklessly declaring our right to the whole of Oregon to be "clear and unquestionable," and insisting that the national honor was pledged to maintain that right, compelled by friends and partizans to retract the ridiculous bravado which degraded the national character in the eyes of the world. They have seen the country plunged into a war of conquest, under the shallow pretense of "conquering a peace," with a nation notoriously destitute of the means of aggressive warfare. They have seen this war declared without the authority of Congress, and therefore in direct violation of the Constitution.—They have witnessed the blundering incapacity which has more than once placed our brave army in situations of extreme peril, from which nothing but the almost unexampled skill of our gallant Whig Generals and the intrepidity of their forces could have extricated them. They have witnessed the workings of that jealousy which prompted the President and his advisers to endeavor to pluck the laurels from the brow of the gallant TAYLOR, and lastly they see that in the event of the successful termination of the war, the annexation of this conquered territory threatens to raise a question which will sever in twain our glorious confederacy.

For these reasons we cannot permit our selves to doubt, that at the first opportunity offered by the Constitution, the reckless and incompetent party which now holds possession of the Government, will be hurled from power by an indignant and injured people, and our national affairs committed to faithful hands. For this communication so "devoutly to be wished," it becomes every Whig to devote all the energies of his mind and strength, and for this purpose I invoke the "aid and comfort" of my political friends and brethren—at the same time pledging all the energies in the compass of my humble ability to the good work.

C. H. LEWIS.

[HCH]
WHICH CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS.

We have the pleasure this morning of laying before our readers the proceedings of the Whig Congressional Convention which met at Winchester on the 19th inst. It will be seen that their deliberations resulted in the nomination of ANTHONY KENNEDY, Esq., of Jefferson County, and who it will be seen by reference to the correspondence published in another column, has accepted the nomination. It is well known that Mr. FAULKNER was a decided favorite with the Whigs of "Old Berkeley," and we should have been much pleased ourselves to have seen him the nominee of the Convention. But it would seem, from the remarks of Col. HUNTER, addressed to the Convention, that Mr. F. took a high and magnanimous stand in relations to the nomination—such a one precisely as might have been expected from him, by any one knowing him well. The remarks of Col. HUNTER will attract the attention, and be read with admiration by all of Mr. FAULKNER's friends, throughout this Congressional District, and indeed throughout the State. The writer of this article (the late Editor of the Gazette) has been intimately associated with Mr. F. in all of the political contests of the past few years, and has known well his views in relation to the Congressional nomination just made, and can therefore bear witness to the faithful representation of his views and feelings by Col. HUNTER. In this last act he has done, as he has ever done before, since his first entrance upon public life—acted upon high and honorable considerations.

We cannot pass by this opportunity of saying a word upon the course of that sterling and meritorious Whig, JOHN. S. GALLAHER, Esq., whose name was intimately connected with the nomination for Congress from this District. He had many warm and sincere friends in all parts of the District, who were urging his claims with great earnestness. But he preferred "not to be the means of heart-burnings or strife among friends of the same political faith," and therefore, in a spirit of magnanimity, cheerfully stepped forward and withdrew his name from the list of nominees. Mr. GALLAHER is a native of this County, and we can assure him the people of his "native land" have a warm heart for him, and have witnessed his onward career in life with pride and pleasure. Whenever an opportunity is offered to them, they will give him a strong manifestation of their regard.

But we must not occupy too much space this week, and therefore must come up to the point at once. The Convention in their wisdom have selected ANTHONY KENNEDY, Esq., as the standard bearer of the Whig cause in this Congressional District. Berkeley County responds cheerfully, cordially and enthusiastically to the nomination, and from all sections of it, as far as we have yet heard, the Whigs will use every exertion to give him a triumphant majority. That is all right. He is a gentleman in every respect worthy of the warmest support. His character, talents, business qualifications, and practical experience in life, render him peculiarly fit for a good Representative. The Whigs of the District could not have entrusted their cause into better and safer hands. He has been for a large portion of his life occupied in business—and in branches of business which has made him intimately acquainted with the working of that great system upon which the prosperity and greatness of this rapidly growing country so much depends—the Protective System. He is a master of the subject—and that portion of our people in the Southern end of the County will not soon forget his noble defence of it made at Gerardstown during the Presidential Canvas of 1844. However, it is useless for us to dilate upon the subject, as no doubt Mr. K. will take an opportunity before the close of the canvass to give his views to the people of Berkeley upon his, the Mexican War, and all other great issues now occupying the public mind. He met Mr. BEDINGER at Charlestown on the 15th inst., and sustained himself and his cause in a most triumphant manner, as we learn from many of those who were present.

Our candidate is well known to the people of the District, having served for several sessions in the House of Delegates of Virginia, as one of the Representatives of Jefferson County. He was regarded very highly by the members generally, as a most useful representative—the highest compliment we think that can be paid to any gentleman. It is the character that has made the name of ELISHA WHITTLESEY, of Ohio, illustrious throughout the country. It is the character of a man who is ready in debate, and speaks only when he has something to say, and knows how to work and be useful to his constituents and his country. Such, Whigs of Berkeley, is the character of the candidate before you—he is the kind of Representative you want, and we think we may safely assure the District "that you will give a good account of yourselves on election day." Let us take "a long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether," and victory may crown our efforts. We are assured from all parts of the District that "the skies are bright," then let every man discharge his duty and his whole duty. Our candidate has an arduous field before him, and our opponents are marching a large force against him. They seem to place their confidence of success in their "Old numbers"—perhaps they will find many on "the sick list" when they come to feel the pulse. They laugh now and summons us as confidently as SANTA ANNA did Gen. TAYLOR at Agua Nueva to surrender; but let us tell them as "Old Zack" did "TO COME AND TAKE US." [HCH]

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p2c3 Words: 697

ANTHONY KENNEDY, ESQ.

In the last week's "Spirit of Jefferson," great injustice was done Mr. KENNEDY in quoting his remarks about the War. Mr. BEDINGER asked in his speech if any one would dare to denounce the War in that assembly; in reply, Mr. K., when noticing Mr. POLK's course on the War, referred to his inconsistency, and then stated that if the War was commenced for mere conquest, as asserted by Mr. Bedinger in his Speech in Congress, (the declaration of the President to the contrary notwithstanding,) he then pronounced it unjust and unholy for a strong people to dismember and overcome a weak and distracted Nation.

THE FAIR.
We have been requested to call the attention of our readers to the annexed notice of the Ladies of Shepherdstown. We do so with great pleasure, and hope the laudable object in which they are engaged may be crowned with abundant success. We know that a Church is much needed, and as the Ladies offer more than a "quid pro quo" for every dollar expended at "the Fair," we hope they will find plenty of customers. They offer a good cause, plenty of nice eatables and drinkables, and we doubt not, for the benefit of the young gentlemen, plenty of bright eyes and smiling faces. The Democrats all being in favor of a tax upon tea and coffee for the purpose of raising revenue, will of course be there, and we hope the Whigs will lay aside "party" in this instance and vote with them:--

THE FAIR.

The Ladies of the Old School Presbyterian Church of Shepherdstown, will hold a Fair in the "Odd Fellows" hall, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 7th and 8th of April next. On each day a dinner and supper will be set, and refreshments may be had at any hour, for the purpose of raising money to aid in building a Church. All person interested or disposed to contribute in this way are respectfully invited to attend.

Shepherdstown, March 18, 1847.

Our thanks are due to our friends, Capt. PEYTON and Mr. VENABLE, for the handsome list of subscribers sent us from "old Augusta." We shall refer to this subject again.

The Legislature of Virginia is still in session. It has been engaged for the past few days, in arranging the items of the Tax Bill, and the passage of sundry local Internal Improvement Bills. We cannot say how soon it will adjourn.

Genl. JAMES IRVIN who some day since received the Whig nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania, is represented to be the most able and influential man in the State, and will doubtless be elected. Success to him.

THE CONVENTION.

It will be observed that Col. E. P. HUNTER, of Berkeley withdrew the name of CHAS. JAS. FAULKNER from before the Whig Congressional Convention, soon after he had been placed in nomination by Mr. SHERRARD. The friends of this gentleman have exhibited a degree of magnanimity worthy of the highest commendation, and their prompt action has secured for Mr. FAULKNER many additional friends.

The name of JOHN S. GALLAHER, Esq. was not presented to the Convention, because of his positive declination through the medium of public prints, and by private letters to his friends.

The Convention was a perfect unit in the way of harmony—every delegate seemed to be impressed with the necessity of a united front—and not a remark was made, or a vote taken, but which aimed at the general good and prosperity of the noble Whig cause, which every man had espoused, and came prepared to support.

With the nominee, ANTHONY KENNEDY, Esq., of Jefferson, we are willing to trust the issue. He met Mr. BEDINGER on Monday last in Charlestown, and on that occasion acquitted himself handsomely—promising, that if allowed, he, Mr. K., would again meet Mr. B., "at Philippi."

And now, "booted and spurred, " Mr. KENNEDY appears in the field, as the chosen champion of Whig principles, and will "loom" away as fast as the "weaver's shuttle," and will "weave" up the speeches of Mr. B. so perfectly, that the people may see for themselves, that is indeed true that they lack the "fillin."—Winchester Rep.

[HCH]

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c1-2 Words: 1661

LATEST NEWS!

LATE FROM MEXICO.

Most important from Mexico.

LATE FROM THE ARMY.

BATTLE BETWEEN GENLS. TAYLOR AND SANTA ANNA.

5,000 Americans Opposed to 20,000 Mexicans!!

2,000 Americans and 4,000 Mexicans Slain!

FROM THE BALTIMORE SUN, EXTRA, MARCH 20.
A Great Battle at Saltillo—Santa Anna commanding in person—Four thousand five hundred of the Enemy, and two thousand Americans reported to have fallen—Gen. Taylor falling back on Monterey—Advance of Gen. Marshall to his Relief—Impression at Camargo of Santa Anna’s defeat—Capture by the Mexicans of large Escorts of Provisions, Munitions of War, &c.—Approach of Gen. Urea with four thousand men, to Matamoras, &c.

The schooner James & Samuel, Capt. SOMERS, arrived at New Orleans on the 12th inst. from Brazos Santiago, having brought but a single letter, says the Picayune, and the gentleman who received that assures us that it contained no news whatsoever—was a mere letter of business. The schooners Napoleon, Exit and Cinderella were to sail the same day, and the Napoleon has the mail on board.

Capt. SOMERS reports that an express arrived at Brazos on the evening of the 4th inst., with news that a Mexican force had passed Matamoras on the opposite side of the river on the 4th. Although he conversed with the express rider he was unable to learn the number of Mexicans, or who commanded them.

The Picayune says that since the above was received the schooner Cinderella (or Cinderella G. Scull, as she is called) has arrived, and by her we have a multiplicity of most alarming rumors, and in a shape more definite than any before received. If we were to believe half that is said, the Mexicans have fought Gen. TAYLOR at Agua Nueva, and drove him back through Saltillo and to the pass of the Rinconada. But there is no authority given for such statements; they are founded confessedly upon contradictory flying reports. But even these reports are favorable to the prowess of Gen. TAYLOR and his troops. Rumor says he lost 2,000 men, but that the Mexicans lost more than 4,000 men, and the action is claimed as a victory for the American arms. But in this there must be gross exaggeration.

Communications between Monterey and Camargo has been completely cut off—so all the rumors say—and can only be opened again by a considerable force. Both Americans and Mexicans on the Rio Grande are in a state of great excitement and even alarm. The interruption of communications and the consequent uncertainty of intelligence, left all in a state of uncertainty the most painful. All hands were at work at Camargo and Brazos strengthening the works and throwing up new defences.

Just as the Cinderella was leaving the Brazos our informant learned that two Mexican spies had been taken there, but what disposition had been made he does not know.

To this gentleman we are indebted for a copy of the Matamoras Flag on the 3d. inst., that paper having been revived after a brief suspension. The Flag says the report of an action is fully credited in Matamoras, but our informant assures us that many officers of the army are yet totally incredulous in regard to it. Even the Flag is at a loss how far to believe in the generally accredited accounts. We deem it best to lay the Flag’s whole article before our readers that they may form their own judgment, but we cannot do so without expressing the hope and belief that the rumors in circulation are greatly exaggerated.

[From the Matamoras Flag, March 3d.]

Our town has been thrown into the most intense excitement by the reports constantly reaching here relative to the perilous situation of Gen. TAYLOR’s division of the army. They are so vague and confused that we hardly know how to commence an abstract even.—That a battle has been fought, no one here can doubt for a moment, but how it has resulted, or what dangers impend on the line of the Rio Grande, is enveloped in the most perplexing uncertainty. We give, however, what seems to be the best authenticated statement received here from the seat of hostilities.

Gen. TAYLOR, while at Agua Nueva, 22 miles from Saltillo, with 5000 men, was attacked, on the 22d ult., by a Mexican force of 15,000. Finding that he could not maintain his position, he made good his retreat to Saltillo, covering his wagon train. Here a severe engagement took place in the streets, in which the Mexicans suffered a heavy loss. After destroying what of the public stores he could not transport, he continued his retrograde movement on Monterey until he reached the Rinconada pass, where he was again attacked, but successfully defended himself. Here all the rumors, reports and letters leave him. Once in Monterey, and he would be safe, but his ability to accomplish this much was altogether problematical, as the Mexicans were swarming in every direction.

A merchant in Camargo, under the date of 25th ult., writes to his friend in this place: “Three expresses to-day from Monterey; fighting in Saltillo; Marin in Mexican possession; large train of wagons, 126, and 180 private mules taken; MCCULLOCH’s company taken; 8000 cavalry this side the mountains, and things in general turned upside down.” From another source we learn that Col. MORGAN had abandoned Cerralvo, destroyed all property he could not take with him, that a courier from Monterey reported at Camargo, 1500 Mexicans between the two places, and 8000 more were in the neighborhood of Victoria.

This much we culled from the mass of reports before us, without vouching for its correctness. The destination of several boats have been changed within the last few days on reaching this place, and one (the Troy) held in reserve at Camargo to convey despatches. All the wagon trains for other places have been stopped here and every one is on the qui vive.

We have strong confidence in Old Zach, and believe it almost impossible to whip him; but should harm befall his division of the army, the consequences to those who have left him with such slender resources will be terrible. We will suffer all the tortures of doubtful suspense until we hear something from our little army that can be relied upon.

The steamship New Orleans sailed from the Brazos on the 4ths inst. for her destination. —We presume that Mr. KENDALL must have written us ere his departure on the New Orleans, but if so his letters have not yet come to hand. There was a mail brought over on the Cinderella, but it was not sent to the Post Office for distribution last night. The Postmaster, Mr. PENN, was on the alert and used all his efforts to obtain a delivery of the mail, but without success.

We hear no more by this arrival of the Mexicans crossing the Rio Grande near Matamoras. It occurred, if at all, the day after the Flag was published.

Capt. HENRIE, who recently effected his escape in so gallant a manner from the Mexicans, has arrive at Matamoras, on his way to his home in Texas.

The 22d day of February was celebrated with great éclat at Matamoras. Salutes were fired from both sides of the river, balls were given, speeches made, and other national demonstrations of rejoicing took place.

Six companies of the Virginia Regiment have passed through Matamoras and gone up to Camargo. They will see service sooner than they desire. Col. HAMTRAMCK leaves this city to-day on the Telegraph, to join this battalion of his command. The other six companies of his regiment are now at [unreadable] on their way to the seat of war.

Many outrages and murders continue to be perpetrated in the vicinity of Matamoras. The body of a man, name unknown, apparently an American, was found a short distance below Fort Brown. The fragment of a lasso was around his neck, and he had nine knife wounds in his body.

On the 22d ult.—we derive the particulars from the Flag—Mr. GEO. CURRY, a discharged soldier, formerly belonging to the 8th Infantry, was shot at a rancho a mile and a half above Fort Brown, by a man named KNOWLTON, who immediately fled. A reward of $50 has been offered by Col. DRAKE for apprehension of KNOWLTON, who is a carpenter by trade, and was, or had been, in the employ of the quartermaster. CURRY was a worthy man; he was wounded in the Florida campaign, fought at the battles of the 8th and 9th of May, and at Monterey, where he was again wounded. A large concourse followed him to the grave.

The last of the cases alluded to occurred on the 28th ult.; in the public market place. The name of the man stabbed is CHAS. PICKENS, teamster in the quartermaster’s service. His murderer was promptly arrested and thrown into prison.

A young Mexican was arrested on the 2d inst. supposed to have been a spy. He endeavored to make his escape from his captors, was fired upon and killed. As he had previously borne a good character, the Flag fears he was unjustly suspected.

The New Orleans Delta says that they are informed that the Mexicans had no artillery.—TAYLOR had eighteen pieces of light artillery. Gen. TAYLOR lost, it is said, about 2,000 men, and the Mexicans about 4,000. TAYLOR had taken position at a mill pond, about three miles from Saltillo. Gen. MARSHALL had left Monterey with provisions and two 18-pounders, guarded by a strong escort, to join Gen. TAYLOR. The Mexicans about Camargo think SANTA ANNA has been badly whipped. Col. MORGAN, of the Ohio Volunteers, stationed at Cerralvo with a strong force, has been attacked and his force cut up all along the line of observation as far as Mier. Another report is, that MORGAN was slightly wounded and has retreated. Several of our trains and many mules with sutler’s goods, have been captured by the Mexicans URREA is on his way to Matamoras, with 4,000 cavalry.

[CH]

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c2 Words: 777

IMPORTANT FROM TAMPICO.

Embarkation of Troops against Vera Cruz—Sixty sail of Vessels with Troops—The grand attack to take place on the 10th inst.

By the Pioneer, Capt. S. BROWN, which arrived at New Orleans on the 12th inst., in seven days from Lobos Island, via Tampico, have interesting and important news as to the embarkation of our troops for the demonstration that is to be made on the city and castle of Vera Cruz. On the 29th ult., between 50 and 60 sail of vessels left Tampico and Lobos Island with troops and munitions of war of every description for the bombardment of Vera Cruz. Every vessel in the harbor—ships, barges, schooners and steamboats—in fact every vessel that could possibly carry men or arms, was enlisted into the service, and departed as soon as they could possibly be loaded. It was with great difficulty that the Pioneer got away, so anxious were the military authorities to impress her into the same service. Gen. SCOTT himself is reported to have said that the demonstration would be commenced on the 10th inst., and this report was so generally believed at Tampico, when the Pioneer left, that it was not regarded as a mere rumor, but as a “fixed fact.” We may therefore expect every day to hear news of the bombardment of that far-famed Mexican tower of strength, the Castle of San Juan de Ulua.

An extract of the Picayune furnishes the following additional intelligence from Tampico and the Island of Lobos:

All the troops which were at Lobos had gone on board ship, with the exception mentioned below. There were nearly eighty sail of vessels of all descriptions lying there, but they were to sail for Anton Lizardo on the 2d. inst.

The only troops left at Lobos were the companies on board the ship on which the small pox had appeared.

Gen. WORTH arrived at Lobos, on the Edith, on the 1st inst., from Brazos. Gen. TWIGGS, arrived there two or three days previous.

Gen. PATTERSON was still at Tampico on the 3d inst. The steamship New Orleans arrived there on the morning of that day with Gen. JESSUP on board,

The Mississippi volunteers who were at Lobos (part of 2d Regiment) had sailed for Brazos. They are ordered to Monterey. Our informant thinks they sailed on the ship Ocean. They have suffered terribly from sickness, and are said to look miserable. The Louisiana Regiment, too, is said to have suffered much from sickness. On the other hand, the Pennsylvania and New York Regiments are said to be as fine looking a body of men as ever were seen.

The general depot established at Lobos is broken up. Nothing is to be left there but the few companies before alluded to.

Correspondence of the National Intelligencer.

NEW ORLEANS, March 15, 1847.

Messrs. Gales & Seaton:

I have but a few minutes for the way-mail. The city is full of rumors, said to be brought by vessels below, and one, which is generally credited, that Matamoras has been actually taken. I have ascertained, to my entire satisfaction, that such is not the case; at least, that no such advice now in the city, as I have seen a gentleman who left there on the 7th, and there is nothing, and can be nothing later. He tells me it will be rather a difficult task to take it. He, however, further informs me that a letter was received there on the 4th from Camargo, which states that pretty certain advices had been received of the capture of Col. MORGAN’s command, and that Gen. URREA was between Monterey and the pass of Rinconada with 6,000 cavalry, who had cut off gen. TAYLOR from retreating on Monterey. That there was no doubt there had been a severe battle, and the belief was that Gen. T. had abandoned Saltillo and fallen back on the pass. Nothing, as you will see, positive; but the prospects are by no means brighter for the gallant TAYLOR.

The public property and stores on the Rio Grande, at the Brasos, Matamoros, and Camargo, it is said, amount to six or seven millions of dollars, besides immense quantities of private merchandise; and for the protection of this line there probably from fifteen to eighteen hundred men, scattered in detachments, the strongest of which does not exceed 700! I have no time for comments.

The Senate of this State have just unanimously passed a resolution authorising the Governor to raise any number of volunteers that may be called for. The House will no doubt concur.

I have just seen Capt. HENRIE, who left Saltillo (he thinks) on the 23d, and he expresses the opinion that Gen. TAYLOR is almost beyond a doubt cut off. We hope for better things.

[HCH]

Thursday, March 25, 1847, MG47v48n4p3c2-3 Words: 103

From the New Orleans Bulletin of the 15th.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT!

His excellency ISAAC JOHNSON, Governor of Louisiana, received yesterday a letter from Col. SAMUEL R. CURTIS, of the Ohio Volunteers, commanding at Camargo, making a requisition upon this State for ten thousand men. The object of securing these troops is to garrison the posts at Brazos, point Isabel, Matamoros, and Camargo, and reinforce Gen. TAYLOR, who at the last dates was in an extremely critical condition. The Governor expresses his readiness, with his accustomed patriotic fervor, “to pull off his coat and go to work to raise volunteers, and he hopes all good citizens will aid him.” This hope he will assuredly realize.
From an Officer of the Virginia Volunteers.

A friend has furnished us with the following extract from a letter (says the Richmond Times, from an officer in Capt. CARRINGTON’s company—dated "steamer Hatchie Eagle, " on the Rio Grande, Feb. 27, 1847:

"We have met several steamers from Camargo, with important news. Gen. TAYLOR has been fighting at Saltillo for several days, and was still in action when the last express came in. Camargo is expected daily to be attacked. It may be before we get there. The whole force of the enemy about Saltillo and Camargo is 25,000. Gen. TAYLOR had twice driven them back, but he was in imminent danger. We are within one day’s sail of Camargo, lying for the night on the Texan side of the Rio Grande. It is thought they will give us a brush before we get up the river.—We are not well prepared for them; but will do the best we can."

MG47v48n10p1c1, Thursday, May 6, 1847.

POETICAL

Rough and Ready

The soldier’s story in the trench at Vera Cruz,
A group of soldiers lay,
Weary and worn with working
At the guns the live long day,
Their faces were begrimed with sand
And soot from shot and shell
Exploding in the crumbling earth
For last the missiles fell.

Yet cheerily they chatted,
For their hearts with hope beat high,
And they knew the hour of victory
Was surely drawing nigh.-
There came a war worn soldier,
To mingle with the rest-
They bade him welcome to their cheer
And gave him of the best.

He’d served with Gen. Taylor
And they asked him of the man
Who first and last had led the way
To victory in the van;
On the winding Rio Grande
On the 8th and 9th of May Through Buena Vista earnage
And the storm of Monterey.

"I knew him first, “ the soldier said,
"Among the Everglades,
when we gave the savage red skins
our bayonets and our blades.
I think I hear his cheerful voice:
"On! Column! Steady! Steady!“
So hardy and so prompt was he
We called him Rough and Ready.

"He rode upon an old white horse,
And wore a brown surtout-
But oftener, when the ground was deep,
He trudged with us, on foot
The man from whose canteen he drank,
We envied and thought lucky;
He had the brave and kind good heart
That honored old Kentucky

"By wounds outworn, I felt the field;
But when a new campaign
Against another foe commenced,
I joined the ranks again.
fan alive, boys once again
To hear the sabre’s clank.
To see old Rough and Ready ride
His white horse on our flank.

"At Palo Alto, comrades, there
Have gave us work to do,
And o’er La Palma’s sulphury smoke
His flag triumphant flew.
When from the fire his aid-de-camp
Would have the chief retire,
Old Rough and Ready merely said,
‘We’ll ride a little nigher.’

"You should have seen the brave old by
In the streets of Monterey-
When the cannon swept the plaza,
How he sternly stood at bay.
When shell, and grape, and cannon hall
On their deadly errand went:-
The General seemed a man of steel,
And tire his element.

"And if a wounded soldier
In the streets of Monterey,
Or friend or foe looked up to him
Imploring, whence he lay,
He stooped to wipe the drops of pain,
That dimmed from his own canteen
A drink – I see him now.

At red Buena Vista
My part I could not bear –
But they tell me that the brown surt out
And old white horse were there.
And well do I believe it,
For the foe stood four to one,
And without old Rough and Ready
How had the fight been won!

"I’ve worn the sargent’s chevron
And I may wear it yet-
But old Rough and Ready tells me
I shall wear the epaulette-
But in the ranks or out of them,
To him I’ll prove a steady
And as long as I’ve a tongue to talk Speak out for Rough and Ready!”

So spake the war worn soldier
To his comrades as they lay
Beneath the breastwork, where they’d served
The guns the livelong day.
And their sleepiness and weariness
It fairly chased away
When the Rio Grande’s hero
Spoke the man from Monterey.

[MUL]
LETTER FROM WADDY THOMPSON, ESQ.

Greenville, April 8, 1847.

GENTLEMEN: In the articles which were published in your paper I only designed to point out some of the difficulties which would be presented in a further prosecution of a war of invasion, and in the conclusion very briefly suggested what I regarded as the only plan of conducting the war with any hope of favorable results—the occupation by a line of military posts of such portions of the Mexican territory as it is our purpose to retain. I then thought and still think, that every consideration of policy, of honor, and of honesty would restrict this line to the Rio Grande. I do not believe that out of our country an impartial tribunal could be organized in the world which would not instantly reject our claim of title to the country between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, and therefore, I would not even take that, but certainly no road of land beyond it. There are other considerations which would induce me to reject any further acquisition of territory, even if it was tendered to us; and that is, that slavery will never exist in any States beyond it. There are other considerations which would induce me to reject any further acquisition of territory, even if it was tendered to us; and that is, that slavery will never exist in any States beyond the Rio Grande, whether restricted or not by Congressional enactments. Slavery is forever prohibited there by laws more fixed and unchangeable than legislative enactments, for they may be repealed; slavery there will be worse than unprofitable.

I have never suggested, and do not approve of, the expedition to Vera Cruz, with the view of collection duties there after it is our possession. The cost of the expedition and of keeping up a sufficient garrison will be twenty times as much as the amount received from duties; to say nothing of the enormous waste of human life. When I learned that the collection of duties at Vera Cruz was a favorite plan of the Administration, I suggested to you, and more than one member of the Cabinet, other modes of accomplishing the same object, which I thought were preferable.

First, that by which Gen. Jackson checkmate South Carolina nullifications by the establishment of a floating custom house. Two men of war in front of Vera Cruz would be all sufficient for this purpose. If we have the right to blockade, we have the right to relax the blockade, provided the conditions enforced operate equally on all nations. Such a measure would not be objected to by any nation, for would be favorable to the commerce of all.

Secondly, by the establishment of custom houses at Tampico and Matamoras, and the blockade of the other ports on the Gulf. The distance of the other ports on the Gulf. The distance from Tampico to Mexico is the same as from Vera Cruz by blockade will throw its commerce into Tampico, as damming up one branch of a creek throws all the water into the channel. We had possession of Tampico, and it is a much more healthy and eligible position.

I do not think that any considerable amount will be realized by this measure. One thing is altogether certain, that merchandise landed at Vera Cruz will not pass into the interior to any considerable extent, without the connivance of the Government of Mexico. There is but one road from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, and, for much the larger part of the route, no other practicable pasaway. There is but one road from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, and, for much the larger part of the route, no other practicable pasaway. The road is cut through and over lofty and rugged mountains. The rough and often precipitous ground on both sides, covered with the countless varieties of the prickly pear, is literally impassable. There are military stations all along the route, and two large cities and many small towns to pass through. One of these, Faeba, where it may almost be said that all the manufactories of Mexico are concentrated. Is it to be expected that merchandise can be transported on this route without being seized and forfeited? If this be true, how ridiculously absurd is the idea which has been suggested, of imposing duties on the sixty articles the importation of which has always been prohibited by the Mexican tariff, to suppose that they will relax their prohibitory system for us, when no exiguity of their own has ever induced them to do it? If the Government of Mexico sanctions the reception of goods upon which we have received duties, it should admonish us to hesitate to adopt a measure so agreeable to them. Mexico would only do this from pressing and absolute necessity. If such necessity should exist, we should certainly derive more benefit from it in coercing a peace than the small amount received for duties would be worth to us. The comparatively low rate of duties which it is proposed to charge would leave foreign merchants subject to another Mexican tariff of an equal or even greater amount, and the aggregate of the two would be still a lower tariff than the Mexicans are accustomed to. They would derive as much money from the measure as we should, and one dollar is worth more to them than ten is to us. I have little doubt that this will turn out another one of those blunders of which the Administration has made so many—resulting as I believe, from want of accurate information as to the character of the Mexican people, the situation and circumstances of the country, and a reliance for this information upon persons in every way unworthy of confidence. My object in writing to you was principally to correct the misapprehension that I had advised this expedition to Vera Cruz. Allow me to say a word on another branch of the subject.

Every Body is tired of this war and anxious for peace; not so much for treaty of peace as for actual peace: not a treaty of peace as for actual war, but actual peace, with or without a treaty. The plan which I have therefore suggested (and I only claim the credit of being the first to indicate it) will, beyond a doubt, give us this peace. What are the evils of war? Carnage, expenditure of money, and the deprivation of Mexican commerce. With a line of post garrisoned with fifteen or twenty thousand men (and our regular army numbers twenty five thousand,) does any one man alive suppose that Mexico will ever assail that line? The last rally has been a spasmodic effort, produced by the invasion of their country—the character of the Mexican people, the situation and circumstances of the country, and a reliance for this information upon persons in every way unworthy of confidence. My object in writing to you was principally to correct the misapprehension that I had advised this expedition to Vera Cruz. Allow me to say a word on another branch of the subject.
It is thus in our power at one to put an end to this most unnecessary and deplorable war, and every consideration which should have influence upon honorable men demands that we should do so. The national honor never required the war. The honor of this country require a war with Mexico! No view of national interest justifies its further prosecution upon a feeble, vanquished, but gallant enemy. Glorious as has been and always will be the achievements of our arms, the shout of victory is unaccompanied with the sobbings of grief and the agony of many a stricken and broken heart. Who that has a heart that does not feel it beat in deep sympathy with the illustrious patriotic of Ashland for the loss of his gallant and heroic son!

Terrible is the responsibility of those who have it in their power to stop the effusion of blood and who do it not. I will not say that solemnly declare that, in like circumstances myself, I should feel that I did.

Very truly, your friend, &c.

WADDY THOMPSON.

MR. CLAY'S BEREAVEMENT.

Mr. Clay left the city of New Orleans about the time it was understood here that a collision would certainly take place between SANTA ANNA and Gen. TAYLOR. He was convinced in his own mind that the meeting would be a sanguinary one, and the exulting anticipations of a triumph which as a patriot he predicted for the American arms were qualified by the solicitude of a father who realized the probability that a victory had cost him a son. His spirits were evidently depressed by foreboding which the sequel but too mournfully justified and when speaking of the confidence he had in the skill and courage of Gen. Taylor, and deducing there form results of pregnant glory, the shadow of "coming events" would flit across his brow in token of a presage of evil to himself, which has sunk deep into his heart and wretched there with the hope which promises such great things for his country.

It was but natural that, approaching home and mingling with the associates of his early years, he should shake off for a time the weight that pressed heavily upon him; that amid the greetings of the friends and the welcome of a whole city, he should not betray the prophetic dread which haunted his breast. Had those who speak of his "fine spirits" but scanned the noble aspect of the time worn statesman with closer scrutiny, they would have seen that a fixed sorrow lurked like a rebel in his secret soul. It was so here, and whithersoever he might go there went along with him a presentiment of calamity.

He remained in Louisville but a few hours; this was not his wont. He felt too surely that the angel of death had been dealing with his household; he felt the winnowing of his sable wings upon his head and hastened straightway to get his house in order. Fast upon his heels sped the mournful tidings; scarcely would have leave a city before the people would shout over the crowning victory of the war. Rejoicing multitudes were no companions for him; he went his way where an aged matron, cheered by the prattle of little children, busied herself with the great toil of household affairs.

This was the partner of his bosom, and these the children of his children. They were orphans (some of them) in happy ignorance of what had befallen them. It was fit that amid this circle he should realize his fears. –Nor should the fatal news smile that venerable matron and he not there. Together they met the herald of woe; and whilst every object that met their eyes reminded them of their loss –though a vacant chair recalled the memory of one gone forever, and trifles of little worth teemed with traditions that filled high the cup of bitterness –yet the confidence of years of mutual reliance of love confronted the messenger at the door-way, who entered the house of prayer and resignation as he crossed the portal of the house of mourning.

The people of Lexington in their rejoicings over the victory of Buena Vista did not forget that hardly there was a hearth made desolate in achieving it. The courts adjourned in silence; and grief mingle in the applause of the populace, as gilded drops of rain are shed from skies all radiant with the summer's sun.

The son was worthy of his sire. He was a man of lofty impulses, of a noble nature, a pure generosity and manly accomplishments. His last words were of him. When he was shot down a second time he drew a brack of pistols from his belt, handed them to Capt. Cutter and requested him to deliver them to his father, with his message "Say to him that he gave them to me and that I have done all that I can with them and now return them to him.” Here the enemy came thick around him, and these were the last words he was heard to utter. Ha has gone to swell the list of immortality. The purchase of glory is the blood of the brave. –N. Orleans Picayune.

[END]
A writer in the Enquirer warns the young men to be careful how they unite the Whig party in condemning the war with Mexico, and points to the fate of the men who in 1812 opposed the war in order to alarm them. He must suppose those whom he addressed to be very verdant as well as very young, if he expects to succeed, by such a ruse, in detaching them from the Whig ranks. We have many illustrious examples now before our eyes, that even opposition to the JUST and NECESSARY WAR of 1812, constitute no impediment to the attainment of the highest political honors and distinction. James Buchanan was an opponent of the war of 1812, and a bitter reviler of the Republican Administration of the virtuous Chief Magistrate in pursuance of whose recommendation it was constitutionally declared by Congress – and he is Mr. Polk’s Secretary of State! Roger B. Taney opposed that war; and he is now Chief Justice of the United States, by the appointment of the founder of the Modern Democratic school! Louis Mc Lane opposed the war and he has just returned from an embassy to Great Britain, to which Geo. Bancroft, another of its opponents, has been sent as his successor; while Richard Rush, also an opponent of the war, has been appointed Minister to France! Henry Hubbard, of New Hampshire, was not only an opponent of the war, but one of the chief instigators of the HARTFORD CONVENTION – and he his now Mr. Polk’s Sub Treasurer in the city of Boston – an office bestowed upon him doubtless in consideration of the fact that he was the “fortunate man, “ who, in the Baltimore Convention of 1844, nominated the aforesaid Mr. Polk for he Presidency! This list might be extended; but let these examples suffice; to show that even so flagrant a sin as opposition to a just and righteous and constitutionally declared war, may be forgiven, and even rewarded, for after services!

MG47v48n10p1c4, Thursday May 6, 1847.

Negotiations for peace.

Intimations, in letters from Washington, are very frequent and apparently not without authenticity, that the new proposal of peace has been forwarded, by our Government to Mexico. The chief clerk of the State Department, Mr. Trist, is supposed to be the bearer of the overture.

The terms of this proposal, as indicated by report, are so exacting as to render their acceptance by Mexico rather doubtful. For example, it is given out that our line of boundary is to run as far south as Parras, including all of New York and upper California, all of Chihuahua, all of Sonora, and parts of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Durango and lower California. Why not go to the Sierra Madre at once?

The line of the Rio Grande as gar as the Passo del Norte, and thence to some point on the Pacific which would give us the harbor of San Francisco, would be a line which Mexico might be disposed to conclude an adjustment a protraction of the war is likely enough.

The idea of annexing an inhabited territory, occupied and cultivated by a foreign people – foreign language and race, in habits, usages and associations – is as repugnant to the wishes of our people, we believe, as it certainly adverse to the spirit of our institutions. A hostile population incorporated into our political system against their will – the thing upon the very face of it is at war with all the principles upon which our Union and its institutions of republican self-government are founded.

To extend annexation, then, across the Rio Grande, at this time, would, evidently, be premature. The country beyond would have to be governed by military occupation, by force; we should have send to Chihuahua, and other places, Governors with pro-consular authority – a beautiful illustration of freedom!

In speaking on this subject of annexation one should look at the tendencies of things, and without insisting on the preferences must regard the inevitable. To many the whole business of annexation is displeasing. But if we cannot have things as we would wish, we must take them as they are, and be prepare for what is to come.

In expressing the belief, then, that annexation beyond the Rio Grande would be premature at this time, the intimation is undoubtedly implied that it would not be unseasonable at some period hereafter. Will that be our meaning. And the reason is that the northern States of Mexico, lying between the Rio Grande and the Sierra Madre, must in due course of time become so Americanized that annexation will come of their own motion; they will seek it – insist on it – and will it not be affected?

The conclusion of the present war will leave many elements of Anglo Saxonism in that part of Mexico. Matamoros and Camargo, Monterey, Saltillo and Chihuahua, occupied by our troops, will retain not only the effects of the occupancy in an increased activity and enterprise, infused by our contact and example, but they will have also many American residents who will settle permanently there. – When peace is established there will be immigration to those salubrious regions, where a delightful climate prevails throughout the year. Thus will the ties of affiliation grow up and strengthen between that portion of Mexico and our Union; and thus annexation may naturally follow.

The unity of the valley of the Rio Grande, in a geographical point of view, would require in the end, the conjunction of that part which extends to the Sierra Madre. Beyond that bold and rugged chain of mountains new geological configurations extend, having their own affinities. The compact portion of Mexico, with its special individuality as a nation, is found beyond the Sierra Madre. The Northern departments have every hung loosely as appendages of the body politic rather than as part and parcel of it. The central government has always found itself unable to defend them from the hostile savages.
Viewing annexation as a progress, which, having once started, must go on until some terminus is reached where its progressive impulse may be exhausted, or where it will meet with reactive barriers that must stop its further advance, we confess a solicitude to avoid all occasion for additional war and violence in the course of the inevitable tendency.

Let us allow Time to work for us, instead of the sword. The war spirit is now satiated, sick. The nation applauds the achievements of its brave soldiers, and is filled with admiration at their heroism, while a shudder of repugnance is felt at the necessity which causes the slaughter of miserable Mexicans, defending their soil from invasion and their homes from the intrusion of a foe. –Baltimore American. April 26.

THANKS TO GEN. TAYLOR BY MASSACHUSETTS.

The Legislature of the state of Massachusetts brought its annual session to a close on Monday last.

On the Saturday preceding a series of resolutions were passed deprecating the existing war with Mexico, and condemning the manner in which the country became involved in it.

MR. HAYDEN, of Boston, then asked and obtained leave to introduce the following resolutions:

Rosolves tendering the thanks of the Legislature of Massachusetts to Gen Taylor, his Officers and Mex.

A SEVERE HIT. –At locofoco meeting recently held in Columbus, Mississippi, the following was among the resolutions adopted:

"Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress have faithfully done their duty, and we hereby tender them our cordial approbation and congratulation: Provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed as an approval of the course pursued by Hon. Jacob Thompson on the resolutions of thanks by Congress to Gen. Zachary Taylor."

This is a sever but just retort upon the "distinguished" member for Mississippi, who undertook to pronounce judgment, ex cathedra, during the last session of Congress, upon the military skill of Gen. Taylor, and who, when resolutions of thanks to that distinguished officer was pending, threw in that famous proviso, declaring that the said resolution of thanks was not to be construed as an expression of approval of the capitulation and armistice at Monterey! Mr. Thompson and his co-laborer in the work of defamation, Mr. Ficklin of Illinois, have been silenced by subsequent events. Indeed, all the defamers of the old Hero have been converted into his eulogists –and we imagine that even the correspondent of the Washington Union, who so boldly pronounced the capitulation and armistice "THE GREAT BLUNDER OD THE CAMPAIGN," "wishes that he had never seen so imprudent as to "draw pen from standish." –Everybody huzzas for Old Zach now! –Whig.

Trophies of War

The Trophies of War are thus described in a letter from Vera Cruz, to the Auburn Advertiser. The writer presents truly, and without exaggeration, one of those scenes in the progress of War which Gen Taylor says is "enough to fill the whole land with mourning:"

Never had beheld such a destruction of property. Scarcely a house did I pass that did not show some great rent made by the bursting of our bomb shells. At most every house did I pass that did not show some great rent made by the bursting of our bomb shells. At almost every house at which I passed to examine the destruction occasioned by these dreadful messengers of death, some one of the family (if the house did not happened to be deserted) would come to the door and, inviting me to enter, point out her property destroyed, and, with pitiful sigh exclaim "La bomba! La bomba!" My heart ached for the poor creatures.

During my peregrinations, I came to a lofty and noble mansion in which a terrible bomb had exploded, and laid the whole front of the house in ruins. While I was examining the awful havoc created, a beautiful girl of some seventeen Methuselah. But he himself, uninfluenced by any selfish ambition, desires the triumph of the cause above that of any to see Henry Clay the Whig standard bearer from now till the day of his death, even should he live to the age of
In truth, if personal attachment could dictate our courage in regard to a candidate for the Presidency, we would be glad to see Henry Clay the Whig standard bearer from now till the day of his death, even should he live to the age of Methuselah. But he himself, uninfluenced by any selfish ambition, desires the triumph of the cause above that of any individual. If, therefore, the people indicate their wish to establish his principles in the person of one whose illustrious claims upon public gratitude have been requisite with indifference and insult by the government, none will yield more readily to their decision than Henry Clay, even supposing we do not believe that he would consent upon any terms to uncork the vials of their wrath upon the head of the Hero of the Rio Grande. They may find him a more dangerous customer than Gen. Harrison. –The old charges of cowardice and granyism cannot be even pretended against him. The petticoat banner must be suffered to sleep in its inglorious grave. As a candidate, he will be invulnerable. As a President, his sagacity and firmness will laugh to scorn the frowns or the seductions of political intriguers. And deeply as we may regret the loss of Henry Clay from the councils of his country, we may, in the election of General Taylor, adopt the language of a great Irish orator, and declare that the loss of Clay "would have been irreparable, but that, like the alternate luster of the twin constellations, when he sank beneath the horizon, he left a brother luminary to irradiate the hemisphere. –Richmond Republican.

MG47v48n11p2c3, Thursday May 13, 1847. The Volunteers in Mexico.

–From all that we can learn the Washington "Union" will be grievously disappointed in respect to the renewal of their engagements by many of the volunteers. Whose term of service is about to expire. It is not supposed here that a single regiment can be formed out of all the twelve months’ men now in Mexico. The volunteers who won the glorious battle of Buena Vista are their way home. One of the Kentucky regiments is already at the Brazos. Col. Jefferson Davis’s regiment will soon be there and the Illinois and Indiana troops will soon follow. We learn from officers and men that there is no disposition to re enlist. The accounts from Gen. Scott’s column are no more satisfactory. The determination to return home, as soon as their enlistments expire is universal. The officers are as little desirous as the men of remaining the service; so that Gen. Taylor’s Buena Vista army, with the exception of a few regulars, and a large portion of Gen. Scott’s will shortly leave the field.

The reason for this universal desire to quit the service has been explained to us. The men of Monterey and Buena Vista assert, and with good reason, that the laurels that have been won by them garnered by the Government to decorate other brows. They say, and with truth, that no valor, no sacrifice, no victories of theirs, can ensure their promotion or protect them against being over sloughed by inexperienced officers, and subjected to the command of political appointees. They point to the miserable remnants of regiments which they led to the army with well-filled ranks and swelling aspirations, in token of the hardships they have suffered and the perils they have encountered, and then refer to the army register to see how such services are rewarded. –They feel that the qualities which they have exhibited in front of blazing batteries are not the ones which ensure rank, and they retire to possess them.

The second Kentucky regiment will return without its Colonel or Lieutenant-Colonel; the first Mississippi will bring home its Colonel and Lieutenant Colonel upon litters; the Illinois troop leave the gallant Hardin where he fell; and col. Yell comes back no more at the head of the men from Arkansas. These noble regiments have melted away under the severities of a campaign in which, if they have not won the lasting gratitude of their country men, they have won nothing. –N. O. Pic. April 27.

MG47v48n11p2c4, Thursday May 13, 1847.

LATE FROM MEXICO.
IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE
ANOHER GLORIOUS VICTORY!!!
Battle of Cerro Gordo.

Santa Anna again Defeated in a Pitched Battle by Gen. Scott –Six Thousand Mexicans taken Prisoners. –Five Hundred Americans Killed and Wounded –Gen. La Vega again a Prisoner.

PLAN DEL RIO, April 17 –11 A. M.

The division of Gen. Twiggs started two hours since, and a heavy cannonade has already commenced upon his line from the farthest of the Mexican works. At intervals, too, the rattling of small arms can be heard distinctly from the Drago camp where I am writing this. I am going out, with Cols. Duncan and Bohlan and Capt Pemberton, to the seat of action, and will return here tonight, to report progress of the fight. It was not intended, I believe that Gen. Twiggs should open the fight today, at least to bring on a general action, and it is therefore presumable the Mexicans have commenced upon him. I write in great haste. G.W.L.

5 P.M. –I have just returned from the scene of conflict, and a bloody one it has been considering the number engaged.
A hill this side of the farthest Mexican work, and on which there was no one seen last evening, was found occupied by the enemy’s light troops this morning, and to force it was at once deemed indispensable. For this purpose the Rifles under Major Summer, besides detachments of artillery and infantry, were ordered to charge up the rugged ascent. This they did in gallant style, driving the Mexicans, after a resistance which may be put down almost obstinate. Great numbers of the enemy were killed, while on our side the loss was also very severe. Major Sumner was shot in the head by a musket ball –severely but not mortally: Lieut. Moury and Gibbs, of the Rifles, were also wounded, but not as severely as was also Lieut. Jarvis of the 2d Infantry. I could not learn that any of our side, in killed and wounded, is estimated at about one hundred; but from the nature of the ground –broken, covered with brush and thick chaparal, and extremely uneven – it is impossible to tell with accuracy. Nor can I, at this time give even the names of the officers who were immediately engaged.

About 3 o’clock the enemy made a demonstration from the fork on the neighboring height to the one our men had captured, as if with the intention of retaking it; but it all ended in marching down the hill, blowing a most terrific charge on their trumpets, firing a few shots, and then retiring. Their appearance, as they came down the slope, was certainly most imposing. The cannon on the height meanwhile kept up a continuous fire upon Gen. Twigg’s lines, yet doing but little execution other than cutting down the trees and brush. As we returned to camp, the fierce still continued – the enemy had evidently ascertained the position of the road, which had just been cut, with accuracy, but their balls principally went over.

Gen. Shields, at 3 o’clock, was ordered out to support Gen. Twiggs, with three regiments of volunteers –two from Illinois under Cols. Baker and Barnett. They will have warm work tomorrow, if Mexicans stand up as they did today.

There has been not a little skirmishing today between the forage and beef parties sent out in the rear, and the rancheros. One Illinois man was killed, and one of the same regiments and a Tennessean wounded. I could not learn their names.

Tomorrow the grand attack, both upon the front and rear of the enemy, is to be made. – Gen. Worth is to move at sunrise, and little peace will the Mexicans have for the twenty-fours at least.

If possible I shall report and send off the progress of the conflict, although one has little time or convenience in the chapparel for writing. G. W. K.

CAMP AT PLAN DEL RIO.

April 19, 1847 – forenoon

G. W. K.

Plan del Rio, April 17, 1847.

The enemy’s whole line of entrenchments and batteries will be attacked in front, and at the same time turned, early in the day tomorrow – probably before 10 o’clock, A. M.

The second (Twigg’s) division of regulars is already advanced within easy turning distance towards the enemy’s left. That division has instructions to move forward before daylight tomorrow and take up position across the National Road in the enemy’s rear so as to cut off a retreat towards Xalapa.

It may be reinforced today, if unexpectedly attacked in force, by regiments – one or two taken from Shield’s brigade of volunteers. If not, the two volunteer regiments will march for that purpose at daylight tomorrow morning, under Brig. Gen. Shields, who will report or the general in chief, if be in advance.

The remaining regiment of that volunteer brigade will receive instructions in the course of this day.

The first division of regulars (Worth’s) will follow the movement against the enemy’s left at sunrise tomorrow morning.

As already arranged, Brig. Gen. Pillow’s brigade will march at 6 o’clock tomorrow morning along the route he has carefully reconnoitered, and stand ready as soon as he hears the report of arms on our right, or sooner if circumstances should favor him – to pierce the enemy’s line of braveries at such point – the nearer the river the better – so he may select. Once in the rear of that line, he will turn to the right of left, of both, and attack the batteries in reverse, of if abandoned, he will pursue the enemy with vigor until further orders.

H. L. SCOTT, A. A. A. GENERAL.

José Ma. Jarero, brigadier general.
Romulo de la Vega, brigadier general.
P Ruiz y Baranda, captain of Mexican Navy, commanding artillery.
Vicente Arguelles, captain artillery.
José Ma Mata, captain.
Jose Ma. Gallegos, commanding Granadiers
Mariano Camacho, 1st.lieut. artillery.
FURTHER PARTICULARS.

The New Orleans papers of the 2d inst. were regularly received last night. They are filled with details of the recent victory of Gen. Scott, intelligence from Mexico, and matters connected with the war. When the mail reached Washington yesterday afternoon, our correspondent in that city forwarded to us the following dispatches, which contains all the news of any importance:

WASHINGTON, May 9, 5 o'clock, P. M.

The Southern mail is in and brings further items of the battle. The enemy's loss killed and wounded is equal to our own. Some of the Mexican officers attribute the defeat to the cowardice of Santa Anna - he had 8,000 men in line, and 6,000 outside that entrenchments. Some of the brave Mexicans that fought at Buena Vista were also in the fight at Cerro Gordo, and several officers released by Gen. Scott at Vera Cruz, without parole, were found among the killed and wounded after the fight.

Advices from the city of Mexico state that Gomez Farias has been removed from power, a bill having passed Congress suppressing the vice presidency of the Republic previous to Santa Anna's leaving the Capitol. On the day of his departure Pedro Anaya was chosen substitute on the 2d of April, and on the 3d he held a consultation with various military officers and distinguished men on the propriety of fortifying the Capitol. The opinion was generally expressed that the works should be commenced immediately and the principal engineer was ordered to prepare, in two days, a plan for the fortifications. The Inaugural of Amayo and addresses of Santa Anna to constituents and Congress are given, disclosing his views relative to the war which exclude all idea of peace. A guerilla war on the posts is advised by leading members of Congress.

The Squadron under Perry has not yet returned to Vera Cruz. Brazos dates to the 24th ult. No news from Taylor's Army. - Balt. Amer. May 10.

ANOTHER VICTORY!!

CAPTURE OF TUSPAN!

A TRIUMPH FOR THE NAVY!

From the N. O. Delta, Extra, May 3, 10 a.m.

"The U. S. transport schooner Gen. Patterson, Capt. Jackson, arrived this morning from Vera Cruz, whence she left on the 24th ult. - By this conveyance we have the gratifying intelligence of the capture of Tuspan, by the gallant Com. Perry and the equally gallant squadron under his command - thus showing that our Navy wants but the opportunities which have been presented to the Army, to be like them every triumphant.

"The Gen. Patterson fell in with Com. Perry and his squadron, on their return from the Tuspan Expedition, on the 24th ult., 25 miles north of Vera Cruz. She was boarded by an officer from the U. S. steamer Scorpion, who put letters on board, and who reported to Capt. Jackson, that on the 19th Tuspan had been taken after a fierce and determined resistance by the Mexican troops.

"We lost four men killed and some fourteen wounded, among whom were four officers - Capt. Tatnall, (slightly) Lieut. Parker (severely) Lieut. Hartstein and Passed Midshipman Lowns, (slightly)."
"The Mexicans, finding further resistance unavailing, spiked their guns; raged the defenses of the place, and then abandoned [... ] Further particulars tomorrow."

All the others accounts give a different version of the last paragraph. That say –"The guns of the Mexicans at Tuspan were all spiked and the place rendered defenseless. It was then abandoned."

A letter in the New Orleans Picayune, dated Vera Cruz, April 23d, says-

"We are now four days without a word concerning the movements above, and are beginning to think it possible that an express might have been cut off —particularly as the last express which came through received a volley of about 60 muskets. It only wounded one of the five dragoons (the sergeant) a musket ball having passed through his hand. An express left here with a mail on the 21st, and after proceeding 25 miles overtook our provision train under a strong escort, the commander of which deemed it prudent to take charge of the mail himself —feeling confident that nothing but a strong body of well armed men would be at all safe in trying to make their way through to Jalapa."

CERRO GORDO.

The news of another conflict has been borne to our ears. Gen. Scott, true to his past history, has fulfilled the high expectations of the Republic, and has gathered fresh laurels upon the heights of the Cerro. Strong in the confidence of his men and relying upon their well proved courage, the idea of disaster and defeat seem never to have entered his mind. "The enemy's whole line of entrenchments and batteries will be attacked in front, and at the same time turned." The word "fail" seems unknown to him, and the heroic spirit which dictated the order just quoted, was most nobly seconded by his men, who executed their high purpose with unshrinking hearts and unfaltering steps, exposed to the fury of a storm of "Leaden rain and iron hail"

Green be the laurel upon the victor's brow, and brighter be the glory of his name, that he has sought to smooth the "wrinkled front" of "grim visag'd war" with the angel touch of mercy.

Yet while our hearts swell with proud emotion as the notes of victory swell upon the southern breeze, a sad and harrowing reflection chills the warmth of our feelings. Cerro Gordo to many a cheerful fireside has brought but sorrow and desolation. Many an aged pair, now in the twilight of their days, have bowed their hoary heads for, mayhap, an only son, whose form now lies moldering upon its craggy heights. The heart of many a widowed mother is wrung with bitter anguish, as the hope of her declining years has been nipped in the bud, chilled by the damps of an untimely and bloody grave. Heavy has the blow fallen upon all classes. —To widows, and orphans, to mourning parents and sorrowing friends, the trumpet tones of triumph seem but hideous mockery —the banner waving in the breeze but the pall of the death —the roar of the victory-speaking gun, but the knell of ruined hopes and desolate hearts.

Such is war! Joy and misery —triumph and despair are ever grouped in horrid contrast.

Battle of Cerro Gordo.

In the New Orleans Delta of the 2nd ints. We find the following general description of the battle, founded on information furnished by Capt. HUGHES, of the Topographical Corps:

On the arrival of the other division of the army at the encampment of Gen. Twiggs, on the 16th of April, Gen. Scott, after taking a reconnaissance of the enemy's works, determined to storm them. The position occupied by the enemy seemed impregnable, and truly to any other than American soldiers it must have appeared an insurmountable and impracticable undertaking to carry it by storm or take it by strategy.

The road from Vera Cruz, as it passes the Plan del Río, which is a wide rocky bed of a once large stream, is commanded by a series of high cliffs, rising one above the other, and extending several miles, and all well fortified. The road then debouches to the right, and, curving round the ridge, passes over a high cliff, which is completely enfiladed by forts and batteries. This ridge is the commencement of the Tierra Templada —the uppet or mountainous country. The high and rocky ravine of the river protected the right flank of the position, and a series of most abrupt and apparently impassable mountains and ridges covered their left. Between these points, running a distance of two or three miles, a succession of strongly fortified forts bristled at every turn, and seemed to defy all bravery and skill. The Cerro Gordo commanded the road on a gentle declination, like a glacis, for nearly a mile. An approach in that direction was impossible. A front attack must have terminated in the almost entire annihilation of our army. But the enemy expected such an attack, confiding in the desperate valor of our men, and believing that it was impossible to turn their
On the next day, the 18th, Gen. Twiggs was ordered from the position he had already captured against the fort which commanded the Cerro. Simultaneously an attack on the enemy’s left was to be made by Gen. Shields’s and Worth’s divisions, who moved in separate columns, whilst Gen. Pillow advanced against the strong forts and difficult ascents on the right of the enemy’s position.

The enemy, fully acquainted with Gen. Scott’s intended movement, had thrown large bodies of men into the various positions to be attacked. The most serious enterprise was that of Twiggs, who advanced against the main for that commanded the Cerro. Nothing can be conceived more difficult than this undertaking. The steep and rough character of the ground, the constant fire of the enemy in front, and the cross fire of the forts and batteries which enfiladed our lines, made the duty assigned to Gen. Twiggs one of surpassing difficulty. Nothing prevented our men from being utterly destroyed but the steepness of the ascent under which they could shelter. But they sought no shelter. But they sought no shelter, and onward rushed against a hailstorm of balls and musket shot, led by the gallant Harney, whose noble bearing elicited the applause of the whole army. His conspicuous and stalwart frame at the head of his brigade, his long arm waving his men on to the charge, his sturdy voice ringing above the clash of arms and the din of conflict, attracted the attention and admiration alike of the enemy and of our own army. On, on, he led the columns, whose front lines melted before the enemy’s fire like snow flakes in a torrent, and staid not their course until, leaping over the rocky barriers and bayoneting their gunners, they drove the enemy pell mell from the fort, delivering a deadly fire into their ranks, from their own guns, as they hastily retired. This was truly a gallant deed, worthy the Chevalier Bayard of our army, as the intrepid Harney is well styled. Gen. Scott, between whom and Col Harney there had exited some coolness, rode up to the Colonel after this achievement, and remarked to him, “Col. Harney, I cannot now adequately express my admiration of your gallant achievement, but at the proper time I shall take great pleasure in thanking you in proper terms.” Harney, with the modesty of true valor, claimed the praise as due to his officers and men. Thus did the division of the gallant veteran Twiggs carry the main position of the enemy, and occupy the fort which commanded the road. It was here the enemy received their heaviest loss, and their Gen. Vasquez was killed.

A little after, Gen. Worth having, by great exertions, passed the steep and craggy heights on the enemy’s left, summoned a strong fort in the rear of the Cerro to surrender. This fort was manned by a large force under Gen. Pinzon, a mulatto officer of considerable ability and courage, who, seeing the Cerro carried, thought prudent to surrender, which he did, with all his force. Gen Shields was not so fortunate in the battery which he attacked, and which was commanded by Gen. La Vega – A heavy fire was opened on him, under which the fort was carried with some loss by the gallant Illinoisians, under Baker and Bennett. Among those who fell under his fire was the gallant General. Who received a grape shot through his lungs, by which he was completely paralysed and, at the last accounts, was in a lingering state. On the enemy’s right, Gen. Pillow commenced the attack against the strong forts near the river. The Tennesseans, under Haskell, led the column and the other volunteer regiments followed. This column unexpectedly encountered a heavy fire from a masked battery, by which Haskell’s regiment was nearly cut to pieces, and the other volunteer regiments were severely handled. Gen. Pillow withdrew his men, and was preparing for another points having proved successful, the enemy concluded to surrender. Thus the victory was complete, and four generals, and about 5,000 men were taken prisoner by our army. One of their principals generals, and a large number of other officers, killed.

The Mexican force on this occasion certainly exceeded our own. The Mexican officers admitted that Santa Anna had 8,000 men in the lines, and 6,000, including 2,000 lancers, outside the entrenchments. Gen. Scott’s force was about 8,000, Gen. Quitman’s brigade not having arrived in time to take part in the engagement. Gen. Ampudia was second in command of the Mexicans, and superintended the operations of the enemy. When the Cerro was carried he was seen retreating on a fine white charger, his hat falling off as he galloped away. Many of the Mexicans escaped by a by path which runs off from the Cerro and the fort carried by Gen. Worth. As to Santa Anna and Canalizo, they retreated in time to escape by the main road. Their conduct was regarded as most cowardly. Some of the Mexican officers who were taken prisoners do not hesitate to attribute their defeat to the cowardice or corruption of Santa Anna. The Infantry that fought so well at Buena Vista, all the regular artillerist of the Republic, including several able naval officers were present. Some of the officers whom Gen. Scott released at the capitulation of Vera Cruz, without exploring the parole on account of their gallantry, were found among the killed men Halzinger, a German, who exhorted the admiration, of our army in the bombardment of Vera Cruz, by seizing a flag which was cut down by our balls and holding it up in his hands until a staff could be prepared, had been released by Gen. Scott without a parole. He was found among the desperately wounded at Cerro Gordo.

The enemy’s loss in killed and wounded, was about as large as our own, but in addition to this 6,000 prisoners and some of their best officers. Our army captured about thirty pieces of beautiful brass cannon, of a large calibre, and mostly manufactured at the Royal Foundry at Seville.

A large quantity of fixed ammunitions of very superior quantity, was also taken. The private baggage and money of Santa Anna, containing $20,000, was also captured. The latter was delivered over to the Pay Department. The volunteers who were employed in carrying the specie into camp cracked many a joke over the prospect of being soon paid of in Mexican command free of expense to Uncle Sam.
When our forces had carried the various positions of the enemy, and the road was cleared, Gen. Twiggs started in hot pursuit of the fugitive Santa Anna, and pressed close upon his heels. A strong position, five miles west of Cerro Gordo, fortified and defended by a fine battery of long base guns, was abandoned by the enemy and occupied by our troops. Gen. Twiggs bivouacked within three miles of the lovely town of Jalapa.

In concluding our imperfect sketch of this brilliant achievement, we cannot sufficiently express our admiration of the extraordinary deeds of our gallant army and able General —Scarcely a month has elapsed since our troops under Scott, landed on the enemy’s shores. —In that time a strong walled city has been captured, together with an impregnable fortress; a pitched battle has been fought under the most unfavorable circumstances, and against the most formidable natural defenses; twelve thousand prisoners have been taken, including some half a dozen general officers; five hundred splendid cannon, and an immense amount of munitions of war, have been added to the national trophies. Truly, such results are glorious testimonials of the valor of our soldiers, and of the skill, gallantry, and perseverance of the accomplished General who led them.

The New Orleans Delta has gathered various incidents connected with the Battle of Cerro Gordo. Speaking of the wounded, it says.

There was a great contrast, which illustrates the superior fortitude of the American character and constitution, between the bearing and conduct of the Mexican wounded and our own. The Mexican seemed to be utterly prostrated by the slightest wounds, and evinced their despair and weakness by loud lamentations, by crossing their breasts and weeping like children. The Americans, on the other hand, bore their suffering with manly fortitude, and with scarcely any demonstration of pain or sorrow; they submitted to the most painful surgical operations without complaining; and, indeed, appeared to feel pride in the consciousness of having given proof of their devotion to the honor and flag of the Republic. Capt. Hughes relates that as he was approaching our Hospital, he met three privates the Mounted Riflemen, who laid just had their right arms amputated, and were quietly walking along whistling and chattering as if nothing has happened. Capt. Mason, a gallant Virginian, the son of the lamented Gen. Mason who fell in duel some years ago, has his leg carried of by a cannon ball. Shortly after undergoing amputation this brave officer received his friends with great cheerfulness, and indulged in many a lively jest over his mishap.

MAJOR SUMNER. —Major Sumner, who led the Rifles in the attack of the 17th on the enemy’s advanced position, made a very narrow escape. In the charge, he was struck on the head by a musket ball. The bullet was flattened to the thinness of a dime, and retained on its surface a part of the Major’s hair, and yet, strange to say, except to the severance of an artery, sustained no serious injury. The artery was taken up, and the last accounts the Major was doing well. This excellent officer —accounted one of the best tacticians and disciplinarians in the army —may certainly felicitate himself on the strength of his craniological defenses. He will never find any difficulty in getting a liberal policy in our life insurance offices.

CAPTAIN JOHNSON. —This valuable officer, lately appointed Lieut. Colonel of one of the new ten regiments, was badly wounded in a reconnaissance made by order of Gen. Twiggs, two or three days before the battle. He received two musket balls, one through the thigh, cutting the femoral artery, and another through the shoulder. His robust constitution and great endurance will, it is believed, triumph over his severe wounds, and he is now pronounced by his surgeons to out of danger.

MEXICAN PRISONERS. —Seventeen Mexican officers were brought to Vera Cruz under a strong escort. The Mexicans on the road had not heard of the battle or of its results, and when they saw the escort approaching, they ran out of their houses to see what it meant. As soon as the well know faces of their own officers, under an American guard, came within view, they seemed to be stuck dumb with astonishment and alarm. Gradually these feelings gave way to sorrow, and their lamentations over the misfortunes and disgrace of their country were loud and affecting.

AN INCIDENT AT INCARNACION. —A volunteer in the Illinois regiment, under General Taylor, describes his visit to Incarnacion after the retreat of Santa Anna. He says:

"On the 1st and 2nd instant, I accompanied an expedition under the command of Cols. Belknap and Bissel, to Incarnacion, where we found a wretched spectacle —several hundred of Mexicans wounded, attended by gaunt, lean, hunger stricken soldiers and women. —On the road we say many dead and many at the point of death from hunger, thirst, and cold. There is no water between Agua Nueva and Incarnacion, and the horrors of Santa Anna’s retreat over his arid desert of forty miles must have been indescribably terrific. We picked up a man, and a woman with a child at her breast, of whom first had no tasted food of water in seven days. He died a few miles this side of Incarnacion.

"We took another into the town or rancho. There we found many suffering for want to food. We relieved their wants like good Samaritans. The Mexicans wounded officers, of whom many are superior men, seemed to be deeply affected by our kindness. I was much interested in Lieut. Francisco Contreras, fifteen years old, from the city of Mexico. He was severely wounded, and bore his pains with a stoic’s fortitude and a smile of most touching sweetness. His features were classically beautiful, and his head such as Spurzheim would have contemplated with rapture. Many of us left him to his destiny with a pang of regret that such a vision of beauty and heroism should be so transitory to our senses. The
The conduct of our men and officers to the enemy’s wounded and to prisoners, both on the field of battle and after the conflict, was such as to make me proud of my countrymen.”

A LETTER

The New York journal contains a letter from the Gen. Bernard O’Reilly, one of the Roman Catholic Chaplains in the Army, and who is now in Matamoros, a portion of which we give below. We invite the attention of our to it, as presenting a plain, common sense view of the inducements for peace, which we think the advocates of a protracted war will find it hard to answer.

Destructive to our army as has been the sickness on the Rio Grande, “which has cut down more of our men, than the Mexicans have lost on the battle field,” it is as nothing compared with the appalling havoc which we must witness in Vera Cruz: Alex Guz.

The war how being waged in far, more disastrous to us, than is generally supposed in the United States. We are always victorious, and lose much less men in action than the Mexicans, but then the climate comes to their aid, and cuts down more of our men, than their loss on the battle field. Were the number of our men forever disabled by the service, with the details in very form, which have thinned our, ranks, since the commencement of the campaign accurately presented, our loss, considering the smallness of our army, would appear great without a parallel.

“There in now, it appears to me, no end to be gained by the further prolongation of the war. A victorious and powerful nation will not escape imputation of folly and great error in action, if to punish a weak, and harassed enemy, it inflicts, infinitely greater injury on itself. I we entered it for the purpose of compelling the payment of indebtedness long withheld, we are, if we still continue it, in a fair way of compelling Mexico, long since bankrupt, to the benefit of the insolvent act. –If for the recognition of the Rio Grande as our boundary, we have but to recross that noble river, my word for it, Mexico, will never dispute our title to that contemptible strip of territory. If the war is to be continued until Mexico indemnifies for actual expenses, which is not, I would hope, the national resolve, we would be acting somewhat the part, but with greater inhumanity of the creditor who insists on the incarceration of an insolvent debtor until he liquidates the debt, and also the expense of the incarceration. If the appropriation of the Mexican territory be intended the result will justify the policy or the wisdom of the act. –This climate and country is suited to the Mexicans, but so little to us, that the part taken will ultimate be a burthen rather than a benefit.

“We are victorious over this poor, harassed and badly governed people, honor and glory, and a succession of triumphs are emblazoned on our national escutcheon; we can well afford to be generous towards them. –Mexican gasconade has been kicked and walked on from Palo Alto to Buena Vista, and will continue to be so, to the occupation of their Capitol, if we will it. Supposing that Mexico in her infatuation and weakness, still persists in her refusal to make peace on our terms, would it be sound policy in us to continue the war? If still waged, it must be carried on for the reasons given above, at an immense sacrifice of human life and treasure, and without reaching an end not already attained. –All our citizens here, none surpass them for patriotism are to a man for peace. There option is worth something.

The soldiers and officers of the volunteer and regular army, victorious against fearful odds in so many hard fought battles, are with out an exception, advocates of peace. They are still willing, if their country so directs, to march again and again to the charge, till Mexico he brought to terms, but they see no object to be reached that is not now attained, whilst they can scarcely consider honor or glory to accrue to them in future from a victory over the Mexican army. Peace with Mexico is the ardent wish of the great and good men who in this war have done honor to their country –of the majority of our own free land, of the good of the world. Let there then be peace. If those in our national or State legislatures, who advocate the further prosecution of the war, could by some mysterious process be transported to ‘Brazos,’ or ‘Labos’ island, there to fare as our brave men fare, this war fever would soon evaporate, and they would become the strenuous advocates of peace.”
some instance, after the vital spark had fled, in the overflowing of demoniac vengeance, the carbine ball dashed out the brains of its clayey victim.

"Death in all this horrors, I have seen and been familiar with from my boyhood, and I could not feel the dread reality before me until Co. B. and myself rode down the ‘arroyo’, to, where, from the curling smoke, we supposed the women and children of these poor creatures were secreted. We rode up. Fear and anxiety were depicted upon every countenance –the women a crowded around us for protection –and, not with standing they were not more than half a mile from the scene of this murderous butchery, they were wholly ignorant of what had been going on. An old female, who looked as though she might be the grandmother of the whole, advanced to us, and, in the most imploring manner, asked us to send back her husband and sons from the camp, where they supposed they feared their men had been killed. They soon comprehended my fears, and the old woman asked us to lead to the dead bodies; and accompanied by two little boys of about 10 years of age each, we set out for the scene of murder.

"The first body we approached, the old woman exclaimed a ‘caratero’ –a donde estan los otros, madre de Dios, adonde iremos? –Where are the others? –Mother of God! Where shall we go? We then led them to another body –that of a man about 30 years of age, who lay as tranquil as though he was in the sweetest sleep. The little boy, impelled by that instinct which seems to lead us into trouble and difficulty eye it is ready for us, outstripped his companions and was the first to reach the body. He advanced steadily to its side; gazed upon the countenance which was half concreted beneath the broad-brimmed sombrero; folded his hands upon his breast, and looked with dreaming earnestness upon the bloody victim of ill-timed vengeance. The heaving of his manly little chest, and the silent tears stealing from his dark eyes and rolling their scorching way down his cheeks, told too eloquently that the little fellow had lost a friend. I said to him, in the most soothing tone I could command: ‘Do you know that man?’ To which he replied: ‘Es mi padre caballero. (He is my father, sir) –walked round the body, examined the bullet hole in the side, turned away from us, drew his sleeve across his eyes, and, without an audible sob or murmur returned to the glen where his mother, brothers and sisters were to hear the tale of their desolation.”

This act was most severely censured by Gen. Taylor in his general orders.

If is said in this section of country, so far, there has been frost every month this year. –Alex. Gaz. [MUL]

MG47v48n12p2c6, May 20, 1847.

LATE FROM MEXICO.

CAPTURE OF JALAPA AND PEROTE.

Advance of the Army toward the City of Mexico.

From the Baltimore American, Day 14

The news briefly referred to in yesterday’s American, of the capture of the cities of Jalapa and Perote by our army, without firing a gun, and also of the continued advance of the American Army toward the City of Mexico –is fully confirmed. Our neighbors of the Sun received the New Orleans Detroit of 6th instant by Wednesday night’s Southern mail, being one day in participation, containing the particulars; in the mail regularly due last night we have the same accounts.

The dates from Vera Cruz are 29th ult. The capture of the town of Jalapa took place on the 19th April, when Gen. Twiggs with the division of the Army under his command entered and took possession, without any resistance. It appears that in his flight from Cerro Gordo, Santa Anna did not pass through Jalapa, but in company with Ampudia and Torrejon, turned [ . . . ] to the left at his hacienda, and halted for the night of 18th at the nine mile pass, “ which was being fortified, but which, on second consideration, it was deemed prudent to evacuate. This evacuation took place on the 20th, and in the evening Col. Harvey’s dragoons took possession of the Pass –Gen. Worth followed in their footsteps.

Gen. Worth with his division entered the town of Perote at noon on the 22d April. He found it completely evacuated by the soldiers of the enemy, and a Col. Vasquez left behind to surrendered it with decency. An immense number of small arms, and ammunition were taken possession off.

Gen. Ampudia, with about 3,000 cavalry, in a wretched condition, was near the town when our troops entered it, but soon retreated.

Santa Anna had not been in Perote since his defeat of Cerro Gordo, and was supposed to be somewhere in the mountains.

Perote is thirty six miles beyond Jalapa, one hundred and eight from Vera Cruz, and one hundred and seventy-one from the city of Mexico.
From the Vera Cruz Eagle of the 28th April.

We understood yesterday that information had been received at Jalapa, that Gen. Worth had thrown his outposts towards Puebla, and would march immediately in that direction himself. We are somewhat doubtful as to its truth, however, not being able to trace it to any positive source. The latest information received from Perote, which might be relied on, is that issued by us in an extra on Monday last, and republished in this day's paper. Genls. Scott, Patterson, Twiggs, Pillow and Quitman were in Jalapa. Gen'l Shields is still in a very doubtful state in an hospital on the battle-field of Cerro Gordo. Rumor says that Puebla will yield without discharging a gun; if so, they will show more wisdom than has been evidenced by several other Mexican cities, with hardly a hope of success against us.

It is now certain that Santa Anna is at Orizaba, a little town at the lost of the mountain of that name, with about 1,000 troops around his standard. He was seen at that place on Sunday morning last, and was heard to express his desire of remaining there until he could insure a sufficient force to make another stand. In regard to the sincerity of his assertion much doubt is entertained, as it is supposed that he is exceedingly desirous to leave the country, but fears to attempt a movement of this kind openly, lest he should be assassinated immediately, which will no doubt be his fate ultimately, however long he may prolong it. –He will not dare return to the city of Mexico, is the universal opinion, until some success should crown his efforts to redeem his thousand promises to the deluded people and the clergy, the latter being now his only backers.

COMMAND OF THE MEXICAN ARMY –It is generally reported that the Mexican government have removed Gen. Santa Anna from the chief command of the army, and appointed Gen. Valentine Canalizo as his successor. –Vera Cruz Chronicle of the 28th ult.

By a person just arrived from Orizaba, we know that Gen Santa Anna arrived there with about 200 dragoons, and immediately commenced recruiting, having under his command about 6,000 men of the fugitives from Cerro Gordo. He also assures us that a correspondence had been seized by the authorities at Mexico, addressed by a great personage to Senor Rejon, offering a certain sum of he would bring about an early peace, and to place all the requisite means at his disposal.

In Puebla Gen. Inclan is commanding –They are fortifying the town for resistance. –Ibid.

Interesting News.

The steamer New Orleans from Vera Cruz, April 29, brought four Mexican officers (one Lieutenants-Colonel, one Captain and two Lieutenants) as prisoners.

The following interesting letters are from the New Orleans Picayune:

JALAPA, MEXICO, April 25, 1847.

The mexicans here, one and all, denounce Santa Anna as a coward, a traitor, and every thing else that is bad; and I verily believe that a majority of them would rejoice exceedingly had Gen. Scott captured him the other day and hung him upon the first limb strong enough to bear his weight. That he is playing them false you cannot beat out of their heads –that he has sold the battles of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo for a consideration they are equally confident, and in proof they are eternally talking about the $3,000,000.

They do not understand why it was that President Polk allowed him to pass freely into Vera Cruz from Havana, unless there was bribery and corruption at the bottom.

Gen Worth still remains at Perote, where he has near 2500 men. Col. Martin Scott, with the 5th Infantry arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, and will proceed to join General Worth.

It is still uncertain when the main movement of the army is to be made. The want of transportation is severely felt, for with his present means Gen. Scott finds the greatest difficulty in extending his line of operations. In the meantime, small parties of ladrones and rancheros are committing depredations in the rear, and such is the nature of the country that they can only be punished with the greatest difficulty.

P. S. Important! 10 o’clock, A. M. –The diligencia or stage coach is just in from the city of Mexico, from whence they have received papers up to the 22d. inst. The news of the terrible defeat at Cerro Gordo had reached the capital, and which astonished and over whelmed all classes; the tone of the papers, of the public men, and of the Congress itself, would also shoe that it had served to inflame the people still more against the United States.

Anaya has been appointed provisional President. I believe, and has been gifted with full powers on every point except that in relation to making peace with the United States—this no one thinks of Congress in extraordinary session, has even declared any one a traitor who talks of peace. The editor of El Republicano says that we may take Puebla, that we may even capture the city of Mexico, but there must be no peace.

An intelligent man with whom I have conversed, says that the Mexicans neither will of can make any opposition at Puebla. The population is one the worst in Mexico, and the most inimical to strangers; yet the dreadful defeat at Cerro Gordo has completely paralized them.

At the city of Mexico, a few light breast-works have been thrown up not only as you enter the place by the Vera Cruz road, but on the road leading to the Convent of our Lady of Guadalupe, but nothing like a regular system of defense has been as yet undertake. Not only the Government but the citizens appear, with all their vaunting, to have come stupid at the succession of defeats which have be taken their country, and know not which way to turn nor what to do.

JALAPA, MEXICO, April 26, 1847.

We have intelligence this morning in the affect that Gen. Worth has advanced one of his brigades, with a battery and a troop of dragoons to a place called Tepe Aguinal, twelve leagues beyond Perote, to enlarge his circuit of supplies. You may hear that a party of dragoons, has been cut off by the enemy at the other side of Perote, but there is no truth in the rumor.

Col. Martin Scott went on this morning with the 5th Infantry, to join the division of Gen. Scott, unable to keep up his communications through the tierra caliente, for want of horses and transportation, will cut himself loose from Vera Cruz, push on towards the city of Mexico, and to a certain extent depend upon the natural resources of the country.

Jalapa, Mexico, April 28, 1847.

The diligencia came this morning from Perote but from no pint on the other side, as the Governor of Puebla has ordered it to cease running this way. Passengers came through however, bringing papers and verbal news and in as concise a form as possible I will give you the amount of the intelligence.

Among other rumors brought by passengers is one to the effect that Mr. Bankhead, the British Minister, has renewed his offers of meditation between Mexico and the United States, and that when the last diligencia left the city of Mexico the Congress was acting upon his propositions, whatever they may have been. Not withstanding the fixed and denunciatory tones of the public press, there is certainly a peace party in Mexico, and there may be something in this report of English intervention in the distracted affairs of Mexico.

Col Garland’s brigade left the Castle of Perote yesterday morning at daylight for Tepe Aguaca, and will reach that place tonight. Major Smith’s light battalion, a troop of dragoons, and Colonel Duncan’s battery accompanied Col. G. We learn here that General Worth has been very successful in collecting supplies.

An intelligent man with whom I have conversed, says that the Mexicans neither will of can make any opposition at Puebla. The population is one the worst in Mexico, and the most inimical to strangers; yet the dreadful defeat at Cerro Gordo has completely paralized them.

At the city of Mexico, a few light breast-works have been thrown up not only as you enter the place by the Vera Cruz road, but on the road leading to the Convent of our Lady of Guadalupe, but nothing like a regular system of defense has been as yet undertake. Not only the Government but the citizens appear, with all their vaunting, to have come stupid at the succession of defeats which have be taken their country, and know not which way to turn nor what to do.

VERA CRUZ, April 29, 1847.

Gentlemen—An express arrived last evening from Lieut. Dixon in command of 102 convalescent soldiers from the hospitals in this city on their road to join their respective regiments at and near Jalapa, stating that the party has been attacked by about 300 Mexican.

The express rider met, two miles this side of where he left Lieut. D., a train of about forty wagons, in charge of Capt. Greghawker. Some fears are entertained for a train that was some five or six hours ahead of them.
In fact, the Mexicans had great rejoicing amongst themselves last evening in consequence of the capture of one of our wagon trains by the enemy. Their accounts had it that our men (the guard) has been literally cut in peaces; but we have little faith in any thing that comes from such sources.

The Mexicans have a fine chance now to work upon our trains if they could only raise courage enough to do it. Col. Wilson’s force at this place it too week to spore many from it, and if the enemy should, go to work with determination they might trap a handsome reward almost without opposition.

The scarcity of cavalry is severely felt. –The New Orleans on her last trip from Tampico found it necessary to throw overboard about thirty of the best horses belonging to the Tennessee cavalry during a sever northern. A few cases of vomito are said to have occurred, but is a very mild form.

Later from General Scott’s Army.

POSITION OF SANTA ANNA.

Proposed surrender of the city of Mexico,

Probable Cessation of Hostilities.

GUERRILLA WARFARE.

Gen. Scott plan of the Campaing.

Our “ponies” have again performed their task of distancing stages, railroads, steamboats, and magnetic telegraphs, bringing us our “overland express” package in six days from New Orleans.

The position of Mexico is every day becoming more intricate and unfathomable, and the probability is that on arriving at the capital, Gen. Scott will find himself rather in the position of a protector than an enemy of its inhabitants – standing between them and the rapacious hordes of their own countrymen, who are robbing and collecting forced loans from the peaceable and industrious citizens.

Gen. Scott’s rapid and onward movements are, however, threatened to be checked by the general desire prevailing among the volunteers, whose period of enlistment are expiring, to return to their homes, but we rather think that when they come to the point of going forward or turning their backs on the "Halls of the Montezumas," the entering of which will be crowing glory of the war, that a goodly number will be found ready to rally for the onward march.

The rumors are, however, of a conflicting character, so far as regards the prospect of peace. The government appears to be for war to the hill, whilst me people –those who do the fighting –are beginning to yearn for peace, with its accompanying blessings.

The probability of the recovery of the gallant Gen. Shields will be received with great pleasure by his country man, or His wound was of the mortal character, the bill [ . . . ] through his longs [ . . . ] but a good constitutions [ . . . ] rear to triumph over what was considered certain death.

But without further remark, we annex the contents of the Picayune extra, which contains matters of general interest from Gen. Scott section of the army.

The steams ship James L. Day arrived at the Levee at New Orleans early inon the morning of the 10th inst., from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the 5th inst. By this vessel we have received, says the Picayune, our regular correspondence and files of Vera Cruz and Jalapa papers. Apart from the intelligence contained in our letters, we learn verbally that an express reached Vera Cruz a moment before the sailing of the James L. Day, with information that a deputation had come down from the city of Mexico to request Gen. Scott to take the capital under his protection. This news is almost incredible; but when it is remembered that the system of guerrilla warfare has been adopted by Mexico, and that the banditti who engage in this service are as danger ours to their own country men as to the enemy, the report gains some probability.

The impression was gaining ground in the army that there would be no more fighting. –It was not expected that there would be any opposition this side of or at Puebla; and it was even doubted if the Mexicans would defend their capital.
Expectations of this nature have proved deceitful so often that we indulge them with much misgiving.

The Mexican papers continue their declamatory structures upon the mission of Atocha. –It would appear that the sending of this miserable fellow on any important mission to Mexicans given greater umbrage that all else that has been done by the United States. They regard him in the light of an official pimp, a treasonable [ . . . ] perfidious miscreant, and indeed the concentration of baseness. They think that he was sent there by the American cabinet in mockery and scorn.

We have already copied the article of “El Republicano” upon Atocha. That paper –the very best in all Mexico –the highest in tone and the sturdiest defender of republican institutions when the monarchical party was ii the ascendant – after noticing the arrival of Atocha on a mission from this country, and recounting his past history in Mexico, exclaims:

“O, God! This is the greatest sign that thou has forgotten us. Send upon us bombs, rifles, grape shot, and every class of projectile, and misfortune; burn us, reduced us to ashes, destroy us—annihilate, but do not dishonor us. –Send the entire North to subjugate and rule over us, but led not Atocha be the broker of a contract of peace, because that, devolving upon us the greatest scorn and the greatest humiliation, would be (Oh God) thy greatest punishment.”

This are assured, is a true reflex of the feelings of the better order of Mexicans in regard to the unfortunate appointment.

The whereabouts of Santa Anna is some what problematical. The last authentic intelligence located him at Orizaba with a miscellaneous command of 3,000. Subsequent rumors report him as having gone South to recruit his ranks in Oaxaca. It is certain that he has not shown himself at the capital since his defeat. There is a report that he desires to leave the country; but Mr. Kendall thinks that he may make a dash upon detached parties in the rear of the army, or upon wagon trains, with a view to reinstating himself in the good opinion of the nation.

It was the intention of Gen. Scott, upon the arrival of the wagon train that was to start from Vera Cruz, about the 6th inst., to cut off a connection with the sea cost, rely upon the country for sustenance and push forward for the city. This general order dated at Jalapa, 30th April, [ . . . ] as much. But Mr. Kendall’s letter of the 4th –the very lattes news – throws some doubt upon the speedy assumption of this plan, in consequence of the determination of the twelve months volunteers, in a body, not to re-enlists’. This may retard the advance of the army, unless indeed the reported readiness of the city to surrender unconfirmed. If the rumor prove true, the guerrilla troops are mire marauders—a band of pirates, and should be treated accordingly.

Gen Worth was gathering up all the grain he could, and has all the bakeries at work, as [ . . . ] anticipation of breaking off communication with Vera Cruz.

It will be gratifying to all to learn that Gen Shields was thought be in [ . . . ] fair way to [ . . . ]. We have always regarded him as [ . . . ] the best appointment from civil the yet made by the President.

Lieut. Col. Anderson, of the first Tennessee regiment, come over in the Day also. He has seen much service, both under Gen. Taylor and Gen. Scott, at Monterrey and Cerro Gordo, and now returns on accounts of ill heath. –Balt. Sun, May 17.

MG47v48n12p3c1, May 20, 1847.

Important from the two Armies.

We have before up the New Orleans Delta [ . . . ], both of watch [ . . . ] interesting and important news of an unusually interesting character. We [ . . . ] our extracts with the following information of the news received by our express yesterday, brought by the streamer James L. Day, which we find in the Delta:

Immediately before the James L. Day started from Vera Cruz, Major Leonard who is stationed there, sent an officer on board to inform Gen. Pillow and an express has just arrived from Gen. Scott, with a dispatch in which it was started that deputation of Mexican citizens from the Capital, had arrived at the General’s headquarters, inviting him to advance, assuring him that it would surrender to him without opposition, and asking his protection of their person and property. To such favorable terms Gen. Scott assented. –He is, therefore, on his way to, if not already on the walls of the Montexumas.”

Whatever be the fears of the Mexicans, their feeling are any thing but admirable towards the Americans. The road along from Jalapa to Vera Cruz is doued with the mangled and the wondered bodies of our countrymen, who were caught straggling away from the parties with which they happened to be marching.

Gen la Vega and his associate prisoners, are now in Vera Cruz.
Col. Childs is military governor of Jalapa as such he has called on the inhabitant to deliver all concealed arms in the city.

Gen. Scott has issued orders from Jalapa congratulating the troops on the late victories, gaded by Gen. Kearney, in California.

VERACRUZ, May 2d.

Thursday Morning, 20 May, 1847.

Eds. Delta, I send you the first number of the American Star” published in Jalapa.

In the ‘Eagle’, of the 1st whiell I send you, you will learn that Don Pedro Anaya has been declared Dictator. The Sweedish Consul, who arrived yesterday from Mexico, tells me that it is true that Anaya has been elected Dictator; Canalizo spoke of as Commander in Chief of the army, and that preparations are being made for the removal of the Government to Celaya, in case our arms marches to the city. The Sweedish Consul tells me that he visited Santa Anna at Orizaba and obtained from him a passport to come town. He had but a thousand men with him, bally equipped, and he looking haggard and very much dejected. His day was passed –Both soldiers and officers and officers have lost all confidence in him –and I have no doubt, that were he come to Vera Cruz during the present state of feeling of the Mexican population he would be murdered.

When the Sweedish consul left, they were busily fortifying Mexico. No stand will be made at Puebla, unless we delay marching on it for some time. –Gen Worth is still at Perote –Scott at Jalapa. A report has reached here that Old Zach had taken possession of San Luis Potosi, but I doubt this very much –he could not have reached there in this time.

The diligencia runs regularly now to Mexico.

In Vera Cruz every thin is going on smoothy. The business of the city is increasing in a wonderful degree. The waters are covered with Merchant vessels. Yankee hotels, Yankee auction houses, Yankee circus companies and Yankee ice houses are starting up here at the turn of the corner.

Gen. Shields has been pronounced out of danger.

Latest News from the city of Mexico. –Santa Anna within 40 miles of Vera Cruz, threading the City –War approaching to a close.

VERA CRUZ, May 5th, 1847.

Eds. Delta –As the steamer has been detained until today by bad weather, I give you the latest news that has reached us since I closed my letter of the 3d, there is not much of it, but what there is, of some interest and importance. The British Consul at this place has just received a communication from the British minister, Mr. Bankhead saying that the Mexican government has solicited the friendly mediation of his government to settle the difficulties between Mexico and the United States. I learned this morning that such a letter had been received from Mr. Bankhead, and at once called on the English Consul, who tells me that such is a lact. You may therefore rely on the accuracy of this statement.

Santa Anna is about forty miles from here with 2,000 men, threatening to march in and sack Vera Cruz. This information comes from a Spanish merchant of this place, who came in yesterday from Mexico –he states that he say Santa Anna, who advised him to take his things out of the City, as he should destroy every thing in it. This, of course, we consider as mere Mexican bravo, as it si not likely he would make his plans public, did he intend executing our men (infantry) at the artillery, so as not be taken by surprise.

We learn by a letter from the city of Mexico, that they have stopped throwing un entrenchments around the city, and do not intend standing a siege or bombardment. For the first time since I have been in Mexico, I begin to think that the war is about drawing to a close. Yours respectfully. J. D. J.

The celebrated courier for the English merchants, Rafael Beraza, has arrived from Mexico with letters for the British packet at Vera Cruz. He says but little, yet it has leaked out that they were organizing guerrillas rapidly both in Mexico and Puebla. All the robbers in the latter city, and their names is legion, have received regular licenses to rob and murder on the road. The beauty of the city has already manifested itself, for it is said they have already commenced plundering their own people on the roads. In haste G. W. K.

FROM GEN. TAYLOR’S ARMY

BUENA VISTA, MEXICO, APRIL 12.
Eds, Delta –We are doubtful as to whether the rainy season has commenced or not, but for a week or two back it has rained every night.

Yesterday one of our foraging parties reported that they came in sight of a small body of lancers. The Mexicans in the city assure us that we will have another fight here with their troops, but little expectation is entertained of again seeing their lines of swarthy faces darken this fateful field. Our line of pickets only extends to Agua Nueva, some fifteen miles from here. Nothing has been reported by the pickets stationed there, and it may be fairly presumed that no hostile body is near us.

Washington’s battery and two companies of U. S. dragoons are far up in the direction of Agua Nueva; the two Indiana regiments and the Kentucky infantry lower down; the two Illinois and the two Ohio regiments –these are two miles from the battle ground; while two companies of Mississippianians occupy the pass, the six companies of Arkansas cavalry being stationed above them, on the San Luis road. Three companies are in the city, two immediately in the town, and one in the fort at the edge.

A subtler, who was taken prisoner by Gen. Orrea, escaped from the guard by bribing the alcade. He reports that he was one of sixty six prisoners taken by the Mexicans, at different times, on the road between Monterey and Camargo. The prisoners are kindly treated, sent forward to San Luis Potosi, escorted by a detachment of lancers.

The Picayune gives the following additional from Gen. Taylor’s army, showing the disadvantages of his position:

We have conversed with an intelligent officer –one who has been with Gen. Taylor from Palo Alto to Buena Vista –who left Monterey on the 20th April, who informs us that Gen. Taylor’s army was melting away by reason of the expiration of the terms of service of the volunteers under his command. He has neither men nor transportations with which to advance into the enemy’s country. Indeed the whole line of communications from the Brazos to Saltillo, will presently be in a very exposed situation. For very lack of the material of war the general must keep his encampment per force.

To replace the regiments about returning to the United States, a portion of the 3d Mississippi regiment had arrived at Monterey; but the small pox had broken out amongst them and disabled many of them. The Virginia regiment was in that neighborhood and part of the North Carolina troops. These were employed in escorting trains from Camargo to the mountains. From all appearance this column of the army will be stationary for a time. Every thing was quiet for once. – Balt. Sun.

MG47v48n12p3c2, May 20, 1847.

GEN. LA VEGA. –The Courier des Etats Units contains a paragraph in relation to this distinguished Mexican General, which seem to verify the opinion of the "Ancient philosopher,

Who had read Alexander Ross over
And swore the worlds as he could move,

Was [. . . ] of fighting and of love."

For according to this authority, it would appear that the gallant Mexican, at the very time he was fighting out countrymen in Mexico, was himself subdued by one of our equal irresistible country women.

Says the Courrier, speaking of the captured Mexican Generals, "Among them was Gen. La Vega, who, doubtless calling to mind his previous captivity, appeared delighted to return to the United States, and chatted quited gaily with Gen. Scott the very evening of the battle."

"If a certain chronicle is to be believed, which we have reason to think is predicted on good information, Gen. La Vega; goes to New Orleans to recommence a pleasant, sweet romance, which his release and return to Mexico had interrupted, and the denouncement of which seemed postponed to the conclusion of the war. This is the explanation of the resignation with which be meets his new captivity."

Gen. La Vega perhaps, may settle down in New Orleans, and after having served a sufficiently los apprenticeship as a citizen of the U. States, represent Louisiana in Congress. Why not, as well as Gen. Houston in Texas? –N. Y. Tribune.

The HARPERS, we understand, have in press the "Diplomatic and Official Papers of MR. WEBSTER while Secretary of State, –which they will publish in two handsome octavo columns during the present season. –This will form, we need not say, a work of the highest value and interest, especially to public and professional union. I will include the correspondence upon the North Eastern Boundary, the Inviolability of Territory, our relations with Mexico, &c. Mr. Webster’s labors while Secretary of State were scarcely less remarkable for their great extent, that for the extraordinary ability for which they were preeminent. –N. Y. Courier.

From the new Jersey "Fredonian."

CONSEQUENCES OF WAR. –One of the most oppressive reflections connected with the present war is this, that even when peace is once more restored, as we hope may soon be the case, the evil influences of war cannot be arrested for a long time, but must flow on a deep, full, overflowing stream, corrupting the future, generation of young men and poisoning the future literature of our country.

The soldier and the soldier’s bloody trade must long be the themes of conversation and glorification. The prowess and sufferings on the field of battle of military chieftains will continue to be held up for the admiration of the country. History and poetry, painting and sculpture, oratory and the drama, will all lend their witchery and their charms to the exaltation of military men and military achievements. The gratitude of the country will be expected to distribute the offices of honor and trust among the heroes of the war. Claims for losses incurred and for services rendered will flow in for half century, and pensions must be paid to the families of those who perished in battle and to individuals who were wounded in the public service. The victories of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, Buena Vista and Vera Cruz, will be celebrated in a song and in fourth of July stations, ; and in various ways these sanguinary events will be commemorated and magnified through several generations.

Thus war, instead of being held as the most awful of barbarities, as a colossal curse, and enormity too dreadful to he thought of except with shuddering; instead of this, we said, it will be regarded as a prime source of national glory; as a grand means of exciting a people and placing them foremost in the march to a resplendent destiny. The whole course and current of popular thought and feeling will thus be turned from the pursuit and glories of public peace to the devouring and gory specter of desolation and war.

For all these future and lasting consequences of the present war, the authors of it must be held responsible now and hereafter, at the bar of conscience and the bar of God.

CASE OF LIEUT. HUNTER.

This young officer has been dismissed from the Squadron in the Gulf of Mexico for doing his duty too well. From the proceedings of the Court Martial in this case, it appears that he was tried for treating with contempt his superior, and for disobedience the orders. The specifications charge that he arrogated to himself the authority of Commander in Chief by entering into stipulations for the surrender of Alvarado; that he proceeded without orders from Alvarado to Flacota-lpan, and received the capitulation of that place also, without waiting for the presence of the Commander in Chief, although aware of his approach; that having captured four schooners he set one on fire and abandoned another –”Thus substituting his own will for the discretion of his Commander in chief, who was within a few hours reach of communication.” The specifications for disobedience of orders allege that Lieut. HUNTER, in command of the steamer Scourge, being ordered to blockade the port of Alvarado, did, in disregard of orders, enter the harbor, and take possession of that place, and further, that being ordered to report himself to the commander in chief on a certain day, he failed to do so.

For these offences the gallant officer was sentenced to be dismissed from the Home squadron and to he reprimanded by the commander in chief –the reprimand to be read on the quarter deck of every vessel in the Squadron in the presence of the officers and crew.

We believe that the facts of the case show this to be an undeserved sentence. The duty of obeying orders is of course an essential principle in military and naval affairs; but then it is to be remembered that orders are to be obeyed according to their spirit and in view of the objects contemplated by them. Upon the very face or it the matter vindicates itself. Lieut. HUNTER is sent to blockade a town; he fins on arriving there that he can take it, and he does so. Now the purpose of blockading the town was that it might be taken eventually, and is it not strange that an officer should be punished for accomplishing fully the objects he was sent to further? ”my orders were, ” says the Lieutenant in his defense, ”to report to Captain BRESEE, and to assist in the blockading Alvarado. I did not consider them (can they be fairly considered?) as forbidding me to annoy the enemy in every way in my power, as modifying in the slightest degree the general duty of every office having a military command in time of war, the molest and cripple the enemy in every possible way.”
A fair and generous interpretation would certainly sanction his view. We quote some passages from Lieut. Hunter’s defense:

"On the evening of the 30th March, being sufficiently near, I opened upon the fort at Alvarado with shot and shells. Apprehensive of a northern, I stood off and on during the night, with a strong breeze and a rough sea. Towards affording, it having moderated, I stood close in the bar, and again opened on the forts. Shortly afterwards I discovered two horsemen upon the beach holding a white flag, and a boat crossing the bar at the same time. This boat brought me an offer on the part of the authorities to surrender the city. —Permit me here, to observe, Mr. President, that as there are two sides to every question, so there may be two results to every affair of this kind. Alvarado is now in our possession but let us suppose that it was not that we had been foiled a third time in our efforts to take it. What would have been my position, I say, if I having refused the offer of the town when the authorities "were ready to yield it —the American forces had been a third time baffled in their efforts to capture it. Mr. President, the worst that can befall me, is a trifle to the infamy and disgrace which would have remained attached to my name, perhaps long after I was in the grave.

"If you, Mr. President (or any member of this honorable Court,) will tansy yourself in my place when the offer of capitulation reached me, I think you must perceive that it placed me in a difficult, a most embarrassing position —one that might have got a much more experienced officer than myself into trouble I had to decide upon the disobeying of my orders on one hand, and the possible consequences which my refusal to take such a responsibility might lead on the other. I had to decide between two courses —the one leading to present personal safety, and the possibility of a future infamy; the other to same personal risk, perhaps, but by which the honor of the navy, and my honor, at least were safe. I have stated thus the view which I took of my position, and the motives on which my actions were founded. I will not say, Mr. President, that under similar circumstances you would have a similar view of your position; but I think I may say without the danger of dissent here or elsewhere, that taking the same view I did —that you or any other member of this honorable court, would have done just, what I did."

The capture of Flaco-Talpan and of the enemy’s vessels followed because Lieut. Hunter learned, on taking Alvarado, that the vessels followed because Lieut. Hunter. Hunter learned, on taking Alvarado, that the vessels containing government property and munitions of war had proceeded up the river to the former place, and he thought it his duty to pursue immediately. One of the captured vessels he burnt, because it got aground and might have fallen into the enemy’s hands; another being worthless, was abandoned; two laden with stores, were brought to Alvarado.

The Lieutenant defense, throughout; is manly and simple, and we must say that in point of good taste it appears to advantage by the side of Com. Penny’s somewhat petulant reprimand. Of the two we should prefer to be the officer reprimanded rather than that the officer reprimanding. Discipline and subordination must he preserved in the daring spirit of doubledly, and so must the daring spirit of enterprise and gallantry. After reading the passage we have quoted and the following one from the Lieutenant’s defense, who will not think that the chivalrous young officer has been harshly dealt with?

I regret my error, apart from the trouble it has brought upon me. I regret it, because it has given offence to the commander-in-chief —(I speak from rumor only —I have no certain knowledge of the fact) as I have heard there was an understanding between the commander in chief and the commanding general ashore, that there was to be a combined command-in-chief —(I speak from rumor only —I have no certain knowledge of the fact) as I have heard there was an understanding between the commander in chief and the commanding general ashore, that there was to be a combined command-in-chief —(I speak from rumor only —I have no certain knowledge of the fact) as I have heard there was an understanding between the commander in chief and the commanding general ashore, that there was to be a combined command-in-chief. In regard to the first my error was one of simple ignorance. I knew that it had obtained possession of these places and the meant of course to hand them over to the first senior officer that might approach; but I had no the remotest intention of exercising any of the powers of commander in chief. I knew, or perhaps I should rather way had reason to believe, that the commander in Chief would arrive in a short time; but I did not know precisely when, still less did I know that he was nearer than Vera Cruz."

We subjoin the official reprimand of Commodore Perry. It is a production that will not, we are confident, find approval in the public sentiment;

Reprimand of Commodore Perry.

UNITED STATES FLAG SHIP MISSISSIPPI.
Anton Lizardo, April 9, 1847.

Sir —I enclose herewith the findings and sentence of the Court Martial, convened on the 7th inst., for your trial, which opposes upon me the task of expressing, in the form of reprimand, my opinion of your conduct as proven before the Court Martial.

However lenient the sentence in you case may seem to be, I have approved it, as I conceived of no punishment more severe than a dismissal in time of war form a squadron, with men whose patent endurance of the most trying duties, and whose character for courage obedience and subordination, have won my highest approbation.
How different has been your course. –Scarcely a day on the station, and you disobey orders, arrogate to yourself the duties belonging to a commander in chief, talk of opening upon the town, and ordering the troops to advance when you had but one gun, and not a solitary soldier, and "all for the purpose, “ as you say of securing an unmolested entrance of the squadron into the river.

It would be difficult, of no impossible, to point to another instances of similar folly; and the most charitable construction that can be given to it is –that in the elevation of a first command, you had truly imagined yourself actually in command of the naval and military detachments then approaching and within a short distance of the scene of your exploits.

With due respect,

(SIGNED) M.C. PERRY
Commander in Chief of Home Squadron.

To Lieut. CHARLES G. HUNTER.
United States Navy.

MG47v48n13p2c2, May 27, 1847.

SEQUESTRATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

The Union denies that its suggestions in regard to the spoliation of the Mexican Church, were made with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Polk, any one of his Cabinet. It is sincerely to be wished that Mr. Richie would find some of enabling the public to distinguish between the official tones of the organ and the voluntaries of the editor; in other words, whether the Administration has determined on a particular measure, or is only "feeling the public pulse.” The following, which we clip from the Richmond Times, throws some light upon the subject:

THE MATTER OF THE CHURCH PROPERTY

-The correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot hints that the proposition of the Union to sequester the church property in Mexico, was favored by at least one member of the Cabinet, and the article was written by an associate editor, a clerk in the State Department, to meet the views of the President and Mr. Buchanan, as he understood them.

"A Catholic of Washington, “ writing in the Intelligencer, has also discovered a curious evidence that the proposition was not without sanction in high quarters. The article appeared in the Union of the night of May 11th, and on that day, the Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce wrote as follows:

"You will see that it is now contemplated, or rather suggested, to sequester the property of the Mexican church during the war. I have no doubt it is to be done, as the church influence is now the main support of the war.”

The "Catholic” asks, with much force, where did the writer get his information? It was not from the Union because the paper was not printed; nor was it probably from the editor, who would not talk about unpublished editorials.

"Is not evident, (proceeds the writer,) that the Editorial and the Letter had a common origin? If the suggestion was not made "by authority” and thrown out to feel the popular pulse, why was it suffered to run eight full days without retraction or denial? This is a question I should like to see satisfactorily answer. Unit it is so answered I shall continue to believe, and the public will continue to believe, that the "suggestion” was the result of a Cabinet Conference, and that but for the prompt manifestation of the public indignation, the design of plundering and spoliation would have been put in execution. I would here say something of the Union’s "soft sawder" about the "intelligence, patriotism and social virtues, “ and all that of their “Catholic brethren, “ whilst thrusting a dagger "under their fifth rib, “ but no doubt you are tired of the subject.”

MG47v48n13p2c2, May 27, 1847.

SANTA ANNA’S PASSPORT

The article from the Philadelphia North American in relation to this subject, we commend to the attentive perusal of the reader.

[MUL]
MG47v48n13p2c3, May 27, 1847.

Lt. Mejia, the aid-the-cam of Gen. La Vega, now prisoner on parole in New Orleans, has written a letter to the Editors of the Picayune, in which he plainly asserts that Gen. La Vega did try, but unsuccessfully, to secure the release of Midshipman Rodgers. He was not commandant, but only third in command at Vera Cruz, when Mr. Rogers was removed to Perote. The explanation bears the stamp of sincerity and truth, and we are glad that the charges against the brave Mexican are not true.

MG47v48n13p2c4, May 27, 1847.

THE SANTA ANNA TREASON, ITS CHARACTER AND DESIGNS.

We find the following in the Ledger of Saturday, and are constrained to invite our citizens to a thoughtful consideration of its developments. We extract it from the regular Washington correspondence of that journal:

"Victory round us every side and not a drop of comfort. Peace is apparently as far off as ever. We shall, for want of power to treat with, be obliged to keep possession of a goodly portions of the conquered territory, and to fortify and, hold all the strong places in our hands.

"With the defeat of Santa Anna, any hope of peace is considerably diminished, for however strongly the opposition press may have railed against what it was pleased to call "the passport granted to that chief," certain it is that our best hopes of peace rested on him, and that nothing but the impossibility of sustaining himself in Mexico, has thus far baffled his efforts to make the Congress agree to the proposition of our government to send commissioners.

"The tone of his warlike despatches was from the commencement forced upon by the circumstances in which he was placed, and perfectly understood here by the President and his Cabinet. Santa Anna only hope of success consisted in first satisfying the national vanity of his countrymen, or availing himself of some lucky accident, so turn, for a moment, the fortunes of war, and improve that moment for concluding a peace. He came very near such a chance at Buena Vista, but the battle of Cerro Gordo has put an end to his prospects, and with them, to our calculation of peace from that quarter."

It is our first duty to inquire the source of these terrible developments of a most fearful and disgraceful treason; for unless this be the mere hallucinations of lunacy, or the idle slanders of a print wholly out of the pale of credit, there is that in it which demands attention. –We assert that it is of a source worthy of grave consideration, one immediately connected with this administration. The correspondent of the Ledger is known to be a property of this administration –an ultra Locofoco. It is known that he is in the confidence of the Government, especially of the State Department, and that he has repeatedly been made, in advance of the press, the organ of its divulgements to the public. We cannot, therefore, and we do not doubt, that in the above communication he has given faithfully the views of the administration.

And this belief is rendered the more confident by knowledge, that the President, in his annual message admitted the existence of an intrigue with Santa Anna. He did this–enough of itself to cover the government and the county with shame and to rouse every honest heart in our confines to mutiny and rage; but he did more –he recognized a still continued connexion, and promise, even then, that Santa Anna would yet procure us a peace. Let this be remember in conjunction with the other facts.

To effect this purpose, it was necessary that Santa Anna should be upheld in Mexico. –The alliance demanded that the two Presidents should sustain each other. To give eclat to the Mexican miscreant, and to enable him to carry out Polk’s designs, a victory was necessary. Read the above letter, and say what were Polk’s purposes:

"The tone of his” –Santa Anna’s –“war like despatches was, from the first, forced him by the circumstances in which he was placed, AND PERFECTLY UNDERSTOOD HERE BY THE PRESIDENT AND HIS CABINET.” “AND CERTAIN IT IS THAT OUR BEST HOPES OF PEACE RESTED UPON HIM.” “He came very near such a chance at Buena Vista, but the battle of Cerro Gordo has put an end to his prospects, and, WITH THEM, TO OUR CALCULATION of peace from that quarter.”

Such is the language of the administration. We will not pause to characterize a policy so dark, so treasonable; but will proceed to prove, by facts, that the plan of the administration was, as he indicated, to give a victory to Santa Anna, in order that he might, to use the words of the writer and improve that moment for concluding a peace.”

At time when it was known, when it was communicated by Gen. Taylor to the administration, that Santa Anna was gathering a large force, at San Luis Potosi, of from 30 to 40,000 men, the government withdrew from him, without notice or explanation, the main part of his force, including nearly all his regulars and his best officers. He was left in a state of apparent helplessness; and that, too, in the face of an army four times his number. What was the objects of this? An attack up on Vera Cruz. But why was not Santa Anna at Vera Cruz? Why did he leave the door of Mexico open, and prefer to attack a detached force in an extreme section of the republic? And when so unexpectedly repelled –("he came very near such a chance at Buena Vista, “ says the administration writer quoted above) –why did he make what his countrymen believe to have been but a feint at Cerro Gordo?

Whether of not, authority, this letter singularly chords with the facts. It explains the withdrawal of Gen. Taylor’s force, the orders given to him to retire and afford Santa Anna a triumph over every post this side of Monterey; bathing the country in the blood of the gallant American volunteers who occupied it. It acknowledges, in the most distinct manner, that the intrigue with Santa Anna has been continued to the present time. It expresses with a horrible frankness, a regret that Taylor and his little host were not sacrificed at Buena Vista.

The charge of a treasonable conspiracy between the Presidents of the two countries, is recognized in both. The Mexicans believe that Santa Anna is a traitor in the parto of both the contracting parties. It is a crime which the country can never, by a false clemency, pardon. He who stamps a brand upon the brow or the Republic, by such a crime, is a worse felon that any In her dungeons.

“Our best hopes of peace rested on him, “ Santa Anna. There was then no trust in the patriotism of the country, in the valor of our army, or in the firmness of our government. –“Nothing but the impossibility of sustaining himself in Mexico has thus far baffled the efforts to make the Congress agree to the proposition of our government.” The whole war has then been a game played between two dark political gamblers, who, understanding their mutual policy, have played into each other’s hands. And what of the thousands who have perished in this terrible game? –What of them, indeed!

The lamentations of this writer over the victory of Buena Vista, his expressed desire that Santa Anna should have prevailed, and our patriots have been massacred (for such must have been the result,) presents in picture of political depravity too horrible for contemplation. This is not treason merely –though it is treason of the blackest kind –but it is the most in sane form of sanguinary malice. Over the graves of McKee and Hardin and Clay and their compatriots, the writer laments that Taylor and Wool and all who battled by their side, were not laid in the same tomb. And these, be it remembered, are the views and sentiments of the Administration. All should have been offered as a sacrifice to Santa Anna “to satisfy the national vanity of his county men, “ and enable him “to turn the fortunes of war and to improve that moment for concluding peace.” –Phila. North American.

Col. DAVID TOD, the newly appointed Minister to Brazil, in place of Mr. Wise, who has permission to come home, took leave of his friends and left with his Secretary of Legation, Mr. Morgan, (who has been for sometime past the Law Clerk in the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury) yesterday morning, for New York.

Col. Tod, family and Secretary, will sail in the U. S. ship Ohio, now do her passage home from Vera Cruz, about the middle of June. The new minister as a dark skinned, swarthy, thick-set, middle-aged, good-looking man, with some pretension to talents as an Ohio lawyer and politician, but none to refinement of toasty or manners. He is a good stump-campaigner, and had the honor of being beaten at the last Gubernatorial election in Ohio by Governor Bess, the present Whig Chief Magistrate of that State. Being a martyr in the cause of modern “democracy,” he has been deemed by the Administration a fit subject to be pensioned on the nation at a salary of nine thousand dollars per annum, and a bonus of nine thousand more in the shape of an outfit!

In statesmanship, Col. Tod may be a little ahead of poor JEWETT, who is said to have declared that Mr. Polk had not appointed him Charge des Affaires to Peru, but to Lima (and who has been recalled) though many there are who seriously believe he is not.

Mr. Morgan, the secretary of Legation, will be the Minister at the Brazilian Court –and will prove to be a very good one, no doubt. He is a good lawyer, a gentleman of fine sense and popular manners, and will be very apt to get soon familiarized with the duties of the Legation, and with the Portuguese language, spoken by the Brazilians, Mr. Morgan is an elder brother of Col. Morgan, at the head of one of the Ohio Regiments in Mexico, attached to Gen. Taylor’s command. The Mongans are nephews or the Hon. Wm. J. Duane, late Secretary of the Treasury, and are men of energy and character.

Following in the footsteps of Mr. Wise it is understood that another tyler man, Dr. CRUMP, Charge des Affairs to Chili, has permission to come home, in order to make room for the Hon. Seth Baron, now Solicitor of the Treasury, who, tired of the muddy law books in the Treasury Department, aspires to the appointment of the Chilian Charge des Affairship, with its outfit of four thousand five hundred dollars, and its salary of the like amount, and has absolutely made several attempts to take lessons in the Spanish language, preparatory to his entrance upon the duties of the mission!

The transfer and promotion of Mr. BARTON, will leave the office of Solicitor of the Treasure free for Mr. Gillet, the present Register, to enter, it being just now found out by himself and the Administration that he is better at unraveling the quicks in the laws than at ciphering up the vulgar fractions in the loans receipts and disbursements of the Treasury Department!

Mr. Gillet is a peculiar man –shrewd, sharp useful in under-current political moves, and wonderfully close fisted, and knows how to take care of the pence.

Mr. Gillet's present place being thus conveniently vacated, an excellent opportunity will be presented for Mr. Polk to reward that old and useful friend of his, Daniel Graham, of Nashville, Tennessee, who was on here last autumn in company with Gov. Aaron V. Brown. Mr. Graham for a number of years was the Comptroller of the State of Tennessee – an able and correct officer. He is a man after Mr. Polk’s own heart: smooth as oil, very plausible, and in the work of proscription will so adroitly manage the matter as to please himself and Mr. Polk while the proscribed will never know who hurt them! The chief wonder is that Mr. Polk has delayed rewarding Mr. Graham for so long time!

The Richmond Enquirer, received this evening, says that the official returns in the two Congressional Districts in Virginia, about which there had been some doubt, give the election to Bocock and Droomgoole, the former by four votes over Irving –the majority of the other not named. It is presumable that the double given to Bocock was not cast out by the Sheriffs. If they were not, Irving will doubtless contest the seat and obtain it. –I understand the law does not allow to Sheriffs to cast out votes that have been received and regularly recorded, although the proof may be clear that sundry persons have voted more that once, each, at different voting places, for the same candidate. But the House of Representatives may correct the error. POTOMAC.

MG47v48n13p2c5, May 27, 1847.

GUERRILLA WAR ON THE RIO GRANDE.

From the New Orleans Picayune, May 14.

An attentive correspondent at Camargo has enclosed to us the following order, issued by Canales. It was found upon the Alcade of Guerra, who was at the time in company with one of Canale’s captains, and in conjunction with him, as was supposed taking measures to carry it into effect. Lieut. Bee, of Capt. Lamar’s company of Rangers, happened to come upon them, arrested them both and brought them into Camago.

From this order it is manifest that the guerrilla mode of warfare is to be enforced all along the valley of the Rio Grande. It is mortifying to reflect that a few disorderly men, such as have fled from the field of battle at Buena Vista and hid themselves in the quarries before Monterey, have by their murderous conduct, given color to the charges with which Canales commences and lauds his order; nevertheless, it is almost certain that the system would have been put in practice upon the Rio Grande, as it has been in the Central States, had not these outrages happened.

We have had full measure of the glories of war, but should the guerrilla plan continues any length of time its butcheries will be appalling. The perpetrators of acts of violence have herefore sought to palliate their guilt by pleading the assassination of their comrades as an excuse for retaliation. There has been too much of this already. But what will be the scenes of havoc and blood when a “war without pity” is the recognized gauge of battle on both sides!

The order of Canales is peremptory. It commands his followers to spare neither age nor condition. Every American found within the territory of Mexico, whether armed or unarmed, must be put to the word. This is more savage even then the guerilla proclamation of Salas.

The defence of the Rio Grande should be, under the circumstances, an object of primary consideration. That more troops are needed there is apparent, without taking into consideration the necessities of other divisions of the invasion.

MG47v48n13p2c5, May 27, 1847.

FRONTIER BRIGADE OF CAVALRY,

CAMP IN SAN AUGUSTIN, April 4, 1847.

I this day send to the Adjutant Inspector of the National Guards the following instructions:

I learn, with the greatest indignation, that the Americans have committed a most horrible massacre at the rancho of the Guadalupe. They made prisoners, in their own houses, and by the side of their families, of twenty five peaceable men, and immediately shot them. To repel this class of warefare, which is not war, but atrocity in all its fury, there is no another course left us that retaliation; and, in order to pursue this method, rendered imperative by the fatal circumstances above mentioned, you will immediately declare martial law, with the understanding that eight days after the Swiss school. –Balt. Pat.

would be a fitness in his leading a regiment of Swiss soldiers –he has so long acted with the politicians who belong to Mr. Polk, if he cannot get Mr. Benton or Mr. Marcy so lead them to the fight, should take the command himself. There indifferent on which side they fight, so they are paid. If they are accepted, as we see no reason shy they should not be, nor the homicide of this country or of another country. Let the eight hundred Swiss be engaged, -the business of killing the trigger which sent the ball, of held the sword, that let his life's blood out. Death will not be stripped of its terrors, almost every account from that disordered country? It makes no manner of difference to the poor Mexican who pulled But it is said Mr. Polk will not accept the offer. Why not? Does it make any difference to us what manner of men they are who kill the Mexicans –who storm their towns –who commit the murders of the unoffending, of which we hear by almost every account from that disordered country? It makes no manner of difference to the poor Mexican who pulled the trigger which sent the ball, of held the sword, that let his life's blood out. Death will not be stripped of its terrors, nor the homicide of this country or of another country. Let the eight hundred Swiss be engaged, -the business of killing is a work of their liking –for there is a proverb which says they are indifferent on which side they fight, so they are indifferent on which side they fight, so they are paid. If they are accepted, as we see no reason shy they should not be, Mr. Polk, if he cannot get Mr. Benton or Mr. Marcy so lead them to the fight, should take the command himself. There would be a fitness in his leading a regiment of Swiss soldiers –he has so long acted with the politicians who belong to the Swiss school. –Balt. Pat.
LATE FROM MEXICO

FROM THE St. Louis Republican, May 17.

LATEST FORM SANTA FE AND CALIFORNIA.

Yesterday evening several gentlemen arrived on board the Johns J. Harding, direct from Santa Fe and California, from whom we have gathered the following information:

"Lieut. Wm. G. Peck, of the Topographical corps left Santa Fe in company with Messrs. Wood and Sandford, and their party. At the time he left Santa Fe, Col. Price was still there, and all was quiet, but it was believed to be that sullen and stubborn quiet which superior force alone compels. Although the insurrection, which we have heretofore noticed, had been put down, it was the general opinion that they only need the aid of a competent leader to rise again. The civil government was going on trying the insurgents Judge Beaubien presiding.

After Lieut. Peck was out some days from Santa Fe, he was joined by Mr. McKnight, from Chihuahua; Lieut. Theodore Talbot, who went out with Col. Fremont; Lieut. E. Beal, of the United States Nacy Toplin, United states Army; Cristopher Carson, Robert E. Russell and others, from California. From these gentlemen we learn, that the Court at Taos had condemned a number of the insurgents to he hung, and that eleven had been executed, and a large number whipped. Six were hung on the day that last Lieut. Talbot passed through Taos.

"These executions excited the Mexicans very much, and when Mr. McKnight passed through Vagas they were endeavoring to raise volunteers for another insurrection. The Alcalde and other influential men were opposing the effort, but with what success remain to be seen.

When Lieut. Peck and his party were about nine miles this side of the Cache on the Arkansas they were attacked by about ninety Camanche Indians, who succeeded in stealing ten of their horses and mules. The party with Lieut. Peck fell back and waited two days, hoping to be joined by other parties coming in. On the second day, the Camanches again attacked them, and succeeded in carrying off all their horses and mules –thirty nine in number. In the second attack, they had a fight of some duration, in which one man, harmed Williams was severely, but not mortally wounded, by a spear of lance, in the body. Several others had their clothing cut by the balls fired by the Indians. A musket ball struck the pistol of Lieut. Peck, on the lock, and took the impression of the manufacturer's name, as plain as it could have been made upon it. They believe they had killed one of the Indians, and probably wounded more, but they were all carried off: They killed some of the Indian's horses. That night they were joined by the gentleman above mentioned and supplied with fresh animals.

"At the bend of the Arkansas, a party of Pawnee Indians made an attack upon their camp, and attempted to excite a stampede among the horses, but did not succeed. They, however, stole two horses. They short a good many arrows into the camp, but without effect. They appeared to have but one gun among them. These gentlemen report that it is the intention of the Indians to attack every party which they think they are strong enough to contend with. And are very hostile to us. –This being the case, it behooves the general government immediately to send out a force and whip them into better behavior.

"Lieut. Talbot, Beal, and the other gentlemen from California, left San Diego on the 25th of February last. At the time of their departure, Lieut. Col. Fremont was at Ciudad de Angeles, acting as Governor of the Territory under an appointment from Commodore Stockton. The Commodore had returned on board his ship, and had left that part of the coast. Col. Wm. H. Russell, of Calloway country, in this State, was acting as Secretary of the Territory.

"Gen. Kearney was joined about the 9th of January, at San Diego, by Lieut. Col. Cooke, with the battalion of Mormons under his command. Great praise is bestowed on Col. Cooke, for the condition in which he brought his command in. It is said that all his men were in fine health, with their arms as bright as when they set out on the march –in excellent discipline, and without any serious loss.

"Soon after being joined by Col. Cooke, Gen Kearney, with the Mormons and dragoons, proceeded to Monterey, where he was when our informant left. There he had been joined by the two artillery companies from Baltimore. We cannot learn from our informants that any portion of Col. Stevenson’s command, from New York, had arrived. –Com. Shubrick had joined Gen. Kearney at Monterey: but we are unable to learn what their operations would be. The question of the right to act as Governor of the territory, was still in dispute between Gen. Kearney and Com. Stockton. It was understood, that Gen. Kearny intended setting out on his return about the 1st of July, but the state of affairs, it was supposed, might delay his departure.

Some of the gentlemen named, we understand, are bearers of despatches to Washington."
A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writing from Santa Fe under date of the 7th of April, says-

"All is apparently quiet here, but every observing man knows that we are walking daily over a volcano which is ready to burst upon us if an opportunity offers. As I said in a former letter, in peace or war, this country cannot be retained but by military force. We hear that Col. Doniphan intends to return to Missouri, through Texas. If he does so before other troops arrive to relieve him, Chihuahua will fall again into the hands of the Mexicans. For my part, I cannot think he will do so unwise a thing."

A letter in the Republican, dated City of Angels, Mexico, January 29, speaking of the arrival of Col. FREMONT'S force at that place says-

"I cannot, in a short letter, give you the details of our march from Monterey to this city of Angels, but I was replete with incidents, and throughout furnishes me continued evidence of the gallantry, skilful maneuvering and noble bearing of our youthful commander, COL. FREMONT. He is a scholar, and officer and a gentleman.

"We found Gen. Kearny here with instructions from the Secretary of War to conquer the country, and institute a civil government; but Com. Stockton, who was also here, amintained that the conquest, had been made by him and Col. Fremont, and as an incident belonged to him; and that Gen. Kearny's orders were now obsolete, because the business for which he had come, had been anticipated by others."

PROSPECT OF MORE FIGHTING.

Guerilla Warfare Commenced.

From the Baltimore Sun.

Our ponies also bring us a printed slip from the office of the Mobile Herald, dated on the 18th inst., which was kindly furnished our agents, containing the following summary of news from the city of Mexico.-

The Picayune has papers (brought by the way of Tampico,) from the city of Mexico to the 28th of April, five days later than the previously received. We copy below from it:

We look first for the news from Santa Anna and we find him engaged, with the number diligence, at Orizaba, raising troops. He shows, as the letter will say, incredible [ . . . ] in repairing the losses he has unstained, and there is no doubt at the head of an army very considerably in number, however inferior in discipline. He is moreover, according to the papers, granting persist to guerrilla bands. Being straitened for funds, he is said to have imposed upon Orizaba a loan or a 16,000. we give a translation of the first letter we have seen of Santa Anna since his defeat at Cerro Gordo. It was written on the 22d of April from Orizaba.

Below we copy a portion of this letter:

It appears that the enemy, improving his triumph, and the astonishment in which he finds the people, design to march upon the capital; but I am taking measures to organize here a respectable force, in addition to that at present under the command of Gen. D. Antonio Leon, and I can assure the President Substitute, that with some aid from the neighboring States or the Supreme Government itself, I shall be able to harass the rear guard of the enemy with effect until his destruction is achieved. I have already dispatched orders to Ben. Canalizo that the protect with his cavalry the fortress of Perote, and to Gen. Gaona that he place it in the best state of defense until I can relieve him.

I cannot omit to express to your Excellency my astonishment at the apathy and selfishness of our citizens in the present critical circumstances, and I now deem it necessary, to save the country, that the Supreme Powers of the nation should dictate severe and effective measures to enforce compliance on the part of every one with those duties which society and the laws impose upon hi. If this is not done –if the nation does not rise en masse to defend its most sacred rights, unjustly and barbarously trampled upon, infamy and scorn with the loss of our nationality, will be the result. For my part I shall spare no sacrifice in behalf of the country; my life, my blood, my repose and my fortune are entirely consecrated to it.

For the present I have established my head quarters here, where I shall received the orders which the Supreme Government may have occasion to transmit. Accept assurance &c.

God and Liberty!

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.
A short Letter which Santa Anna wrote the same day to President Anaya, is hardly worth publishing. He begs him not to despair, not to make a treaty with the enemy, and to defend the Capital. He begs most piteously for some money.

The same number of El Republicano which contains the first letter, defends the National Guard from the reproach in cast upon it of the loss of Cerro Gordo. Santa Anna’s ipse dixit has already lost much of its power. But notwithstanding the evident dissatisfaction felt with him by his countrymen, the Supreme Government has confirmed him in the command of the army by express orders. –The necessity of such an order indicates that his authority had been severely shaken.

Some of the papers were calling for a court martial on Canalizo for his dastardly conduct at Cerro Gordo.

Each step in the march of General Scott was chronicled in the papers of the Capital; and the excesses of his troops were greatly magnified and denounced.

The press is loud in its denunciation of the proprietors of the haciendas who are selling grain to Gen. Scott, from which we infer that he does not lack supplies.

Congress having conferred very ample powers upon the President Substitute to provide for the existing emergency in the affairs of the country, was occupying itself with the discussion of constitutional questions. The President shows a great deal more apathy that is acceptable to the editors of El Republicano. They appeal to him to arouse himself and call forth the energies of the nation to meet the crisis. They denounce as cowardly and infamous any course other than war and a long war. Those are suspected of more peaceable views are denounced in no measured terms.

A “Yankee” was arrested on the 26th, having presented himself to the President to confer with him upon the property of peace, but in no authorized capacity. No clue is given as to who the man is. he is negotiating on his own hook.”

A general and absolute decree of amnesty for all political offences is announced in the papers of the 27th.

In Toluca the casting of cannon was immediately to he commenced, the prelates of San Francisco and La Mercede having offered the bell necessary for the construction of cannon.

The Mexicans speak of the conspiracy which was entered into among their countrymen in Tampico to obtain possession of that town, as having failed principally for want of funds; but they indulge the hope that another attempt will be more successful.

D. Miguel Orbe, the curate of Huachinango, is raising a company of guerrillas; and upon the following terms:

HUACHINANGO, April 23, 1847.

He who subscribes this, pledges himself the five following articles:

1st. To die defending an avenging Our Lady of Guadalupe, and the Catholic, Apostolic, Roman religion which he professes.

2d. To defend the integrity and independence of the nation.

3d. To pursue with death the Anglo-Americans, their followers, defenders or allies, whoever it may be.

4th. To abjure and detest the personal party of whoever have destroyed their country.

5th. To respect all legitimate authority, whatever it may be, in everything not repugnant to the preceding articles.

These five articles shall be the fundamental rule or their guerrilla, and shall be denominated: La Insurgente Gudalupana.

(Signed) MIGUEL ORBE.

The owners of the mine La Luz have presented or loaned the government of Mexico 55,000 for the expenses of the war.

Letters had been received in the capital from San Luis Potosi, announcing that the Government of the State had promulgated a decree that every citizen should take up arms, and that the enthusiasm to defend themselves was very great. There were about four thousand troops of the army of the North then in the city. Gen. Taylor they supposed, was to move upon them form Saltillo about the 1st of May.

[MUL]
THE PRESS IN MEXICO. –The press keeps pace with our army. We shall soon hear of some American or Flag or Eagle at Perote of Puebla. This last arrival from Vera Cruz brings a copy of the Mexican Chronicle—printed in English and Spanish—and the "American Star," issued in Jalapa! Mr. Kendall in his letter from Jalapa, dated the 25th, says: "The first number of the American Star is out today, and is completely running over with news and information. The proprietors deserve all success for their public spirit and I am glad to see that their edition of this morning is going off rapidly." Rich. Times.

Santa Anna’s dispatch to the Minister at War.
Your Excellence, we've won the day,
My "heroes" fought staid the fray,
And whipped the Yankee without pay.
And then—we ran away.

The Petersburg Intelligencer hazards a pun upon the capture of Santa Anna's leg. It says that the prediction about "conquering a peace," is verified, in as much as Gen. Scott has conquered a piece of Santa Anna—his leg.

THE ANCIENT MEXICANS, OR AZTECS
Humans Sacrifices and Cannibals.

Human sacrifices were adopted by the Aztecs early in the 14th century, about 200 years before the Conquest. Rare at first, they became more frequent with the wider extent of their empire; till at length almost every festival was closed with this cruel abomination. These religious ceremonies were generally arranged in such a manner as to afford a type of the most prominent circumstances in the character or history of the deity who was the object of them. A slight example will suffice.

One of the Most important festivals was that in honor of the god Tozcatlipoca, whose rank was inferior to that of the Supreme Being. He was called the "soul of the world" and supposed to have been its creator. He was depicted as a handsome man, endowed with perpetual youth. A year before the intended sacrifice, a captive, a distinguished for his personal beauty, and without a blemish on his body, was selected to represent this deity. Certain tutors took charge of him and instructed him how to perform his new part with becoming grace and dignity. He was arrayed in splendid dress, regaled with incense and with a profusion of sweet-scented flowers, of which the ancient mexicans were as fond as their descendents of the present day. When he went abroad, he was attended by a train of royal pages, and as he halted in the street to play some favorite melody, the crowd prostrated themselves before him, and did him homage as the representative of their good deity. In this way, he led an easy, luxuriant life, till within a month of his sacrifice.

Four beautiful girls, bearing the names of the four principal goddesses, were then selected to share the honors of his bed: and with them he continued to have [. . .], feasted at the banquets of the principal nobles, who paid all the honors of deity.

At length the fatal day of sacrifice arrived. The term of his short live glories was at an end. He was stripped of his gandy apparel and bid adieu to the fair patterns of his revelries. One of the royal barges transported him across the lake to a temple which rose on its margin, about a league from the city. Hither the inhabitants of the capital flocked to witness the consummation of the ceremony. As the sad procession wound up the sides of the pyramid, the unhappy victim threw away his gay chaplets of flowers, and broke in pieces the musical instruments with which he had solaced the hours of captivity. On the summit he was received by six priests, whose long and matted locks flowed disorderly over their sable robes, covered with hieroglyphics scrolls of mystic import. They led him to the sacrificial stone, a huge block of jasper, with its upper surface somewhat convex. On this the prisoner was stretched. Five priests secured his head and limbs, while the sixth clad in a scarlet mantle, emblematical of his bloody office, dexterously opened the breast of the wretched victim with a sharp razor of ixtli, a volcanic substance as hard as flint, and inserting his hand in the wound, tore out the palpitating heart! The minister of death, first holding this toward the sun, an object of worship throughout Anahuac, cast it at the feet of the deity to whom the temple was devoted, while the multitudes below prostrated themselves in adoration. The tragic story of this prisoner was expounded by the priests as the type of human destiny, brilliant in its commencement, too often closed in sorrow and disaster.

Such was the form of human sacrifice unusually practiced by the Aztecs. It was the same that often wet the indignant eyes of the Europeans in their progress through the country, and from the dreadful doom from which they themselves are not exempted. There were, indeed some occasions when preliminary tortures, of the most exquisite kind—with which it is unnecessary to shock the reader—were inflicted, but they always terminated with the bloody ceremony before described. It should be remarked, however, that such tortures were not spontaneous suggestions of cruelty, as with the North American Indians; but were all rigorously prescribed in the Aztec ritual, and doubtless were often inflicted with the same compunctious visiting which a devout familiar of the Holy Office might at times experience in... executing its stern decrees. - Women, as well as the other sex, were sometimes reserved for sacrifice. On some occasions, particularly in seasons of drought, at the festival of the insatiable Tlaloc, the god of rain, children, for the most part infants, were offered up. As they were borne along in open litters dressed in the festal robes, and decked with the fresh blossoms of spring, they moved the hardest heart to pity, though their cries were drowned in the wild chant of the priests, who read in their tears a favorable augury for their petition. These innocent victims were generally bought by the priests, of parents who were poor, but who stifled the voice of nature, probably less at the suggestions of poverty than of a wretched superstition.

The most loathsome part of the story –the manner in which the body of the sacrificed captive was disposed of– remains yet to be told. It was delivered to the warrior who had taken him in battle, and by him, after being dressed, was served up in an entertainment to his friends! This was not the coarse repast of famished cannibals, but a banquet teeming with the delicious beverages and delicate viands prepared with art and attended by both sexes, who, as we shall see hereafter, conducted themselves with all decorum of civilized life. Surely, never were refinement and the extreme of barbarism brought so closely in contact with each other.

Human sacrifices have been practiced by many nations, not excepting the most polished nations of antiquity; but never by any on a scale to be compared with those of Anahuac. The amount of victims immolated on its accursed altars would stagger the faith of the least scrupulous believer. Scarcely any author pretends to estimate the yearly sacrifices throughout the empire at less than twenty thousand, and some carry the numbers as high as fifty thousand.

On great occasions, as the coronation of a king or the consecration of a temple, the number becomes still more appalling. At the dedication of the great temple of Huitzilopochtli, in 1486, the prisoners, who for some years had been reserved for the purpose were drawn from all quarters to the capital. They were ranged in files forming a procession nearly two miles long. The ceremony consumed several days, and seventy thousand captives are said to have perished at the shrine of this terrible deity. But who can believe that so numerous a body would have suffered themselves to be leg unresisting like sheep to the slaughter? Or how could their remain, too great for consumption in the ordinary way, be disposed of, without breeding a pestilence in the capital? Yet the event is of recent date, and are unequivocally attested by the best informed historians. One fact may be considered certain it was customary to preserve the sculls of the sacrificed in buildings appropriated to the purpose. The companions of Cortez counted one hundred and sixty six thousand in one of the edifices! –Without attempting a precise calculation, therefore, it is safe to conclude that thousand were yearly offered up, in the different cities of Anahuac, on the bloody altars of Mexican divinities.

[The Gazette]

MG47v48n14p2c1, June 3, 1847.

We do not belong to that class of croaking philosophers, who, whenever a cloud gathers upon the political horizon, are wont to "despair of the Republic." We are not of those, who seek to cast the horoscope of the future, only that ruin and desolation and the destruction of our fairest hopes, may pass before the eye, in gloomy array. Yet we are too well aware, that it is no part of wisdom to shut out the shadows cast by coming events. It becomes the patriot to seek to prepare for every danger that menaces his country –that meeting it boldly, and girding himself for the struggle, he may act as one in whose heart, the noble principles of patriotism and devotion to his fellow men, rise far superior to mere individual and selfish impulses.

It is, we hope, in this spirit that we have asked ourselves, what will be the ultimate effect of the Mexican war upon us, as a nation? Will it place our boasted institutions upon a firmer and more stable foundation? Will it foster that peaceful policy which has elevated us to the height we now occupy in the scale of nations? Will it strengthen that holy spirit of compromise upon which the Union rests, [ . . . ] firmest base? In a word, will we be benefited or injured? Will we emerge from the trial, as gold from the fire, purer and better, or will we gather that alloy, which in the end will prove, like a plague spot, all corrupting, all destroying?

Whatever answer, whether of truth or sophistry, may be given to these inquiries, two inevitable results of the war –not because it is against Mexico, but because it is war –may well awaken the most anxious consideration.

The spirit of peace has proved to be the principal element of our natural progress. It has spread the wings of our commerce upon the bosom of every sea –it has poured a resistless tide of energy and enterprise throughout the land, until the wilderness has blossomed like the rose. Through the magic of its power. Nature has bowed its head to Art, and the seal of improvement has been stamped upon every work of man. It has ever shone, the star of that destiny, which has urged us upward and onward.

When our legions return from the bloody dyed plains of Mexico, will they bring back that love of peace, that fondness for the quiet pursuits of civil life, that energy of character, which is the distinguishing mark of the people, from whose midst they wont forth? Or will they not, imbued with the horrible romance of war, and intoxicated with the glory of military life, bear into the quiet of their homes, the fierce feelings which are too often characteristic of the soldier?

But this danger sinks into nothing compared with another which menaces the safety of the Union itself. We have no desire to dwell upon this –but when it is admitted in al quarters, that upon whatever terms peace is negotiated with Mexico, new territory will come into our hands, we cannot but fear that it will prove an apple of discord, and mayhap, the grave of the Republic. How shall it be appropriated? How divided? Such are the stern questions which will be presented. The subject of Slavery, which has so often sent a pang of anxious fear to the stoutest heart, will prove itself a fearful element of the danger. The storm which has been gathering for years will burst upon our heads. The hour and the day for compromise will have passed forever. The voice of peace will be hushed, and party strife, and envy and sectional jealousy, will raise their demoniac revels in the very temple of Patriotism and Reason.

With no trumpet tongue to rise in eloquent appeal above the fierce howlings of the storm –no saving hand to pur oil upon the troubled waters –the cloud of despair will gather over the vision of the patriot’s hope –never, perhaps, to be rolled back.

We ask must particular attention to the following extract from an article in the Intelligencer of Saturday last. Will any one –can any one credit it, that Senator Bento, the Atlas of Mr. Polk’s Administration, his fondly dreamed of Lieutenant General –ever gave utterance to sentiments like these? Is there no “aid and comfort” in this? No treading up on friendly toes? Truly, men know not, and especially of men, Mr. Benton, what the future will bring forth, or he would never have thus fixed upon himself the chance of gross inconsistency:

It was in debate upon the treaty of Annexation that Senator Benton offered the following resolution and assumed the positions which follow it:

"Resolved, That the incorporation of the left bank of the Rio del Norte into the American Union, of virtue of a treaty with Texas, comprehending, as the said corporation would do, a put of the Mexican Departments of New Mexico, Chihuahua, Coahuila, and Tamaulipas, would be AN ACT OF DIRECT AGRESSION UPON MEXICO, for all the consequences of which the United States would stand responsible.”

Having shown the effect of the treaty on the Rio Grande frontier, Mr. B took up the treaty itself, under all its aspects and [ . . . ] whole extent, and assumed four positions in relation it, namely:

1. That the ratification of the treaty would be itself war between the United States and Mexico.

2. That it would be unjust war.

3. That it would be war unconstitutionally made.

4. That it would be war upon a weak and groundless pretext.

The left bank of the Rio del Norte was, therefore, not "within the American Union” when our army encamped upon it in battle array by the order of the present Administration.

THE TROOP OF HORSE. --The day for meeting of the Troops of Horse, was erroneously fixed for last Saturday in our paper of last week. It will be seen that it is now fixed for Saturday, the 12th of June. It is hope that all who have joined as well as others interested will be present.

[ MUL ]

AMERICAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO.

The following remonstrance was addressed to Santa Anna, on his return to the City of Mexico immediately after the battle of Buena Vista. No regard has been paid to it up to the 2nd of April. This is an outrageous return for the treatment received by La Vega and others taken prisoners by us.

CASTLE ST. JAGO, (City of Mexico, March 24, 1847)

To his Excellency, Gen. Santa Anna:

SIR –The undersigned officers of the Army of the United States of America, respectfully state to your Excellency, that they, together with their respective commands, consisting of seventy-one persons in all, became prisoners of war to the Mexican Republic, at the Hacienda Encarnation, on the 22d of January last. On that morning before day light, we found ourselves entirely surrounded by a large force –say three thousand men –and about sunrise a white flag approached us on one side and a considerable force on another; we required that the troops should retire, precedent to our receiving the flag, which being complied with, the flag approached, and a surrender demanded. We took one hour to determine whether we would entertain a proposition of the kind or not; at the expiration of the hour, the flag returned, and was answered that we would hear a proposition, and ere told that general Minon would send a major to our camp, while one of our number of equal rank, should repair to his headquarters, and hear his offer. This being done, Major Borland entertained the officer sent in; whilst Maj. Gaines rode out to the General, had a conference of about one hour with him, returned to the hacienda, and in the presence of an interpreter, on each side, stated the terms eleven and twelve o'clock we surrendered as prisoners of war.
The terms were, that the General himself should receive the swore of our commander; that the public property should he surrendered and private property should be respected; and that the best treatment, in every particular, known amongst civilized nations to prisoners of war, should be ours.

The General, when asked to reduce these terms to writing, gave us the most positive assurance that his word of honor was worth more that three of four signatures, and that unless his agreement was fully carried out he would abandon the service of his country. On our journey to this city, we had the gratification to meet your Excellency, and, after stating to you the terms of capitulation received the pleasing assurance that they should be complied with.

The object of this note, is to complain to the Head of the Mexican Republic, that, so far from the terms of our capitulation being complied with, we have been frequently subjected to the most grievous deprivations, and that we have refrained from making our protest hitherto, in consequence of the unhappy dissensions said to exist in the capital—which being now fortunately adjusted, as we are informed, we most respectfully call your attention to our condition.

We forbear at this time, from entering into the particulars of our complaints, and beg leave to refer your excellency to Gen. Vega, who has lately been prisoner of war in the United States, (but who has not honored us with any notice whatever,) for the manner in which prisoners or war are treated in our country.

This is, however, one complaint, which we owe to ourselves to call you immediate attention to. We are informed that Gen. Minon in reporting our capture to his government, alleges that we surrendered at discretion, and that we owe our lives to the magnanimity of the Mexican Republic. Against such a statement we enter our solemn protest; and declare that, the terms of our surrender being accurately stated in the foregoing part of this note, anything inconsistent there with is unfolded in fact.

Hoping that a peace between the two Republics shall speedily be made, upon terms equally honorable to both, we subscribe ourselves your obedient servants,

J. P. GAINES, Maj. Ky. Reg’t of Cavalry U. S. A.
S. BORLAND, " Ark. " "
C. M. CLAY, Capt. Ky. " "
C.C. DANLEY " " "
G. R. DAVIDSON, 2d. Lt. Ky. " "

GEN TAYLOR –The New York Tribune has a letter from a New Orleans correspondent under date of the 18th instant, which runs thus:

The Volunteers who were with Taylor are returning, full of the warmest admiration of his character as a soldier, and a humane and good man, but overflowing with wrath against the Administration that they believe did its best sacrifice them. They cannot be convinced of the contrary. I am informed of this by and officer who is among them in the Rio Grande. The people of this country will be astonished and indignant when they know fully the manner in which the concern at Washington has treated Gen. Taylor. I knows, from unquestionable authority, that for five months not a single dispatch of his has been answered, (unless within the last few weeks) and nothing sent him except an insulting letter enclosing the letter written by him to Gen. Gaines, and demanding to know whether he wrote it. I am glad to say that Gen. Taylor's reply was in every way worthy the spirit of a high-toned, free American citizen, who has never learned to fawn that thrift may follow. He replied that he did write it, and as he did not intend it for publication, had not before examined it very carefully; but now, on a re-examination, he found not a word or expression that he wished to alter. –He asked no favors –they might make the most of it. They took away all his regulars save a handful, and left him none but raw volunteers. Had he retreated on Monterey, as directed by the War Department, the whole country from Saltillo to Matamoros, in the opinion of all military men there, would have been lost. There is much more yet to be told on this subject at another time. Thank God, he has survived and broken down the base conspiracy it is considered here by all good judges, military men and others.

Of Gen. Taylor himself, I wish space would allow me to say all that we know. He unites so many excellencies of character, that, opposed as I am to Military Presidents, and detesting war and every thing pertaining to it, to a look upon Taylor as one providentially raised up to generate and re-establish the respectability of its Government. I go for him not because he is a successful General, but in spite of it. A good Whig on every point –able and honest –opposed to the Annexation of Texas, and unsparing –what more can any honest man, North or South, require? I think even the State of Ohio, notwithstanding the assertion of your Abolition friend in Ashtabula, will be satisfied with this.

Col. Pierce M Butler, commanding the regiment of South Carolina Volunteers in Mexico, writes to the Governor of that State as follows:

"The contest is unequal, and the service an inglorious one. The universal voice of the Army, Navy, and Volunteers is for terminating this contest, and peace would be to them most welcome news."

The Milledgeville Recorder says that these views of the gallant South Recorder says that these views of the gallant South Carolinian, as to the feeling of the army, correspond with those expressed by the heroic Col. Hardin, in a letter received at Washington just previous to his lamented fall.

[MUL]
THE PRESIDENT RESPONSIBLE FOR THE WAR

That Mr. Polk is responsible for bringing on the war with Mexico, is the belief not merely of the men opposed his election to the Presidency, but is insisted upon by many of those who supported him for that high office. We do not see, indeed, how it can be doubted. The opinion of Mr. Calhoun was declared upon the point at the last session of Congress, and the reasons given for that opinion left no doubt on the mind of any one that it was correct. It was in the power of Mr. Polk to have prevented the war. We need not say that, as the head of a great nation, whose mission is peace and whose policy is opposed to hostile strifes, it was his duty to have prevented it. –He failed in his duty –he invited attack by the show of bravado –he precipitated a contest by ordering our army to the Rio Grande, where the Mexican troops were reduced to the alternative of retreating or fighting –and thus having brought on hostilities, which he must have foreseen would follow from his orders, and having placed our gallant little army under overwhelmed by a superior force, and having obtained from Congress a declaration that “war existed by the act of Mexico,” it become necessary that we should fight it out. This show of bravado in the array of troops, this movement of the army from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande, this involving of Gen. Taylor and his little army in imminent danger, this of being overwhelmed by a superior force, and having obtained from Congress a declaration that “war existed by the act of Mexico” –all these were the work of Mr. Polk and his cabinet; and all these things he could have controlled and prevented; all these it was his duty, he allowed them to go on, to bring on the war, and to make it necessary to continue it when it was brought on. The responsibility of it, therefore, is on Mr. Polk, and the people will hold him to it. All the evils of which it may be the consequences rest upon him. The wrong of his own; the evidences of valor, of patriotism and of skilful generalship, of which have so much excited the admiration of the world, all these belong to the American soldiers who achieved or performed them.

And it is gratifying to see that the people make the clear distinction between the war itself and the “deeds of noble daring” of which it has been the occasion. Hence the promptness with which with which supplies were voted by Congress to succor and sustain our armies –hence the alacrity with which the citizens volunteered to take part in upholding the flag of the Union on the field of battle –hence the rejoicing which is everywhere seen at the success of our arms –and hence the almost universal condemnation with which Mr. Polk is visited whenever the causes of war are brought into notice. The efforts which have been made to exalt Mr. Polk and his administration, for the victories that our armies have achieved in Mexico, have therefore failed. The great deeds which Gen. Taylor and Gen. Scott and their soldiers have accomplished, have made every man of us rejoice in his country and in his countrymen who have not done these things; but they have not made any one forget that Mr. Polk unnecessarily produced this war; or made any one indifferent to the evils which it has brought or our own country, as well as that of unhappy, distracted Mexico; or less anxious for the restoration of peace.

We have expressed these views before. –We have thought that it was not unbecoming a great nation, like this, to lament over the war; and that it was not unmanly in us to grieve that so many of our gallant citizens had been killed in its prosecution. We have not hesitated to say that we desired peace, and we have insisted that a word from Mr. Polk counseling peace, would have prevented the war –that a word from him, asking peace, would end it. We hold to that belief. If Henry Clay were now President, instead of James K. Polk, who is there that doubts that the war would at once stop? If he had been President at the time the was commenced, who believes it would not have been avoided, honorably avoided? What Mr. Clay would do were he now our Chief Magistrate –would that he were! –Mr. Polk may do. We have shipped Mexico, if that is what he desires, to our fullest satisfaction. We have driven her soldiers from the sea shore and from the mountains. We have taken her forts, her cities, and her castles. We have driven them form every field where they have opposed our march, no matter how superior her numbers were to ours, and she is prostrate at our feet. We may overrun the whole country –there is nothing now wanting but men and money, and we can take and hold all her cities. The was, so far as a successful defense can be made by Mexico, may be said to be at an end. It is for us –for Mr. Polk as the Chief Magistrate –but to say there shall be no more fighting, and there will be no more fighting. –what he wants form Mexico, he may take. –If he wants to rob her churches, he may do it. If he wants to take her capital, he may do it. If he wants a strip of her land as an indemnification for the expenses of the war and the claims of our citizens, he may take it. He has but to do what Gen. Taylor advised so long ago as last November, and of which Mr. Calhoun so warmly approved in the Senate last winter, and the war is at end. He may declare in what terms peace shall exist, what lines shall be the boundary, what privileges we may exercise, for Mexico, is in no situation to dispute, much less to interfere with our claim. This done, Mr. Polk stops the war and gives us virtual peace –and this is what we mean when we say that he has but to ask for peace and the war is at and end. And he will have to come to this yet, if all the signs be not misunderstood, though for saying so we have incurred the censure of the official organ, and given to the Philadelphia Pennsylvanian an opportunity of showing that it has so much confidence in its own views, that it cannot regard with patient respect those entertained by others who differ from it. –Baltimore Pat. [MUL]
It gives us much pleasure to publish the subjoined very high testimonial from the chief engineer of the U. S. Revenue Marine, in behalf of the Virginia coal for the use of steam vessels. We trust that this imposing evidence of its superiority will attract the attention of our government, and have its proper influence in inducing its general ultimate adoption in the naval service. The peculiar qualities of our coal, that make it superior to other kinds, are briefly and clearly mentioned in the letter of Mr. Dougherty, which was addressed to this shipping clerk of the Black Heath Coal Mining Company. –Times and Compiler.

The Enquirer, in publishing the same letter remarks:

"We have recently heard some facts, which we deem it just to our colliers to lay before the public. We learn that on the last trip the steamer Mississippi, to the Gulf of Mexico, she used some to the Richmond coal, which was thought to be superior to the Cumberland and Pittsburgh.

"We hope soon to see the Virginia coal properly estimated by the Government. In many of the Northern cities, it is now consumed in large quantities, in preference to Northern and British coal."

U.S. REVENUE STEAMER "LEGARE."

Washington, April 23, 1847.

SIR. –You having requested of me when in Richmond, Va., to furnish you with a report of the quality of the Black-Heath Coal, received from your yard on board of this vessel, I cheerfully comply –and have no hesitation in saying that it is the best quality Bituminous Coal that I have ever used. It burns freely –makes steam very fast –easy to fire with –leaves no clinker –but few ashes, and its consumption, compared with other bituminous coals that I have used, is much smaller; -and I have no hesitation in recommending it in the highest terms as an article for use in steam vessels.

You are at liberty to use this in any way that you may deem best to advance the reputation of the Black-Heath coal of Virginia.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN DOUGHERTY.

Chief Engineers U. S. Rev. Marine.

[MGv48n14p2c5, June 3, 1847. LATE FROM MEXICO.]

From the New Orleans Bulletin, May 42.

A LETTER FROM GENERAL TAYLOR.

A valued friend, an who is a distinguished citizen of this State, has forwarded to us the following communication, which is the present moment, will, no doubt, by [ . . . ] with general interest.

The letter from General Taylor, is written with the name modesty and delicacy, of feeling, which have so eminently characterized every thing we have seen form his pen.

It is sufficient, our hope, to set us rest all the doubts as to his acceptance of the nomination for the Presidency, which have been expressed by those in whom "the which was farther to the thought."

West Baton Rover, La,

15th May, 1847.

Wm. L. Hodge, Esq.

Dear Sir: I send you, annexed, an extract of a letter, which I have recently received from Gen. Taylor, and as it shadows forth the feelings and views of the General, on the subject of the next Presidency, in a manner which can do no violence to the feelings of any one, I have determined to have published that portion of it, which relates to a subject in which his name has been very generally associated throughout the country for some time past. I do so with the more readiness, because it is eminently calculated to give a proper insight into the real character of this eminent man. Please let it have a place in your columns. Your very sincerely and respectfully.

"In regard to the Presidency, I will not say that I would not serve, it the good people of the country were to require me to do so, however much it is supposed to my wishes, for I am free to say, that I have no aspiration for the situation. My greatest, perhaps, only wish, has been to bring, or aid in bringing this war to a speedy and honorable close.

It has ever been, and still is, my anxious wish, that some one of the most experience, talented, and virtuous statesmen of the country, should be chosen so that high place at the next election. I am satisfied that, if our friends will do their duty, such a citizen may be elected.

I must however, be allowed to say, that I have not the vanity to consider myself qualified for so high and responsible a station, and whilst we have far more eminent and deserving names before de the country, I should prefer to stand aside, if one of them could be raised to the first office, in the gift of a free people.

I go for the country, the whole country —and it is my ardent and sincere wish, to see the individual place at the head of the nation who, by a strict observance of the constitution (be he whom he may) can make us most prosperous at home, as well as most respected abroad.”

MG47v48n14p2c4, June 3, 1847.

LATE FROM THE BRAZOS.

There was an arrival at New Orleans on the 19th instant from Brazos Santiago, with advices from that place up to the 11th inst., and from Matamoros up to the 9th inst.

An express passed through Matamoros on the 6th instant from General Scott to General Taylor.

Col. Belknap, Adjutant and Inspector General, has been making a tour of inspection of all the posts from Monterey to the Brazos.

Fourteen hundred troops and upwards are encamped near the field of Palo Alto. It is called a camp of instructions.

The Matamoros Flag has late papers from Zacatecas. So far from meditating a withdrawal from the Mexican confederacy, the Flag represents “the people of that State as more embittered against this country that ever. Even the clergy seem disposed to aid the Government effectually with their means.”

From the New Orleans Picayune, May 20.

LATER FROM GEN. SCOTT’S ARMY.

It was not until yesterday mourning that we were placed in the possession of the following letter received here on Tuesday by the Mary Kingsland. It will be seen that Mr. Kendall’s letter is later that any thing hitherto received from Jalapa.

The most interesting passage in Mr. Kendall’s letter is that announcing that Majors Borland and Gaines, Capt. Clay and the other officers taken in the North, together with Passed Midshipman Rogers, are at liberty in the city of Mexico.

Mr. Kendall’s remarks upon a peace party in Mexico will attract attention. He has facilities for forming an opinion on the subject which the newspapers do not afford us. Were we to rely upon the later alone we should form a judgment very different from our associate, but we do not doubt at all that he has access to sources of information far better that our own.

Jalapa, Mexico, May 11, 1847.

6 o’clockpM.

Since the diligencia went out at noon today for Vera Cruz, another diligencia has come in from the city of Mexico full of passengers, and bringing news of not a little importance.

All the passengers confirm what I wrote you this mourning. They say that at the capital there was no Government, no order, no responsibility —all was anarchy, Anaya was still President pro term, but had neither influence nor authority.

It is stated that the propositions made by England some months since, to offer her intervention in selling the difficulties between Mexico and the United States, have recently been taken up by the Mexican Congress, and, after a warm discussion, in which one of the members said that the whole affair was but an another attempt of the monarchists upon the sacred liberties of the Mexican Republic, the motion even to consider them was lost by a vote of 44 to 33. from this it would seem that the present Congress is determined to shut every door against all proposals of an honorable peace.
The States North of Mexico –Guadalajara, Guanajuata, Queretora, Zacatecas, Durango, San Luis, and others –talk openly of separating from Mexico, and letting her take care of herself. Not a dollar in the way of supplies are they sending on for the relief of the General Government in its emergency.

They were still doing a little in the way of fortifying the city of Mexico, but a Spaniard informs me that all the obstructions they have erected so far could be kicked over with the foot. The city had been placed under martial law, and the direst excesses were anticipated.

The citizens had all been called upon to take up arms in the common defense, but unfortunately nine-tenth of them had no arms to take up. No were there any cannon at the capital other than a few small and indifferent pieces.

There is certainly a party, and an influential one, in Mexico, which begins t talk of peace, and where four weeks since they did not dare breathe their sentiments, they now come out openly and avow themselves. Still the measure is far from popular. The peace party is composed of the more honest and intelligent property holders, the merchant, and perhaps the clergy –to these are added the military who have all disgraced themselves, and all the demagogues among the lawyers. Is the priests could be made certain that they would continue to hold their rich benefices secure, they would probably be all in favor of peace.

Majors Borland and Gaines, Capt. C. M. Clay, and all the officers taken in the North, were at liberty in the city of Mexico, as was also Midshipman Rodgers. They are all said to be well and respectfully treated now, although the latter was infamously abused on the way up to Mexico from Perote.

Gen. Canalizo was at San Andres, a place north of Orizaba, at las accounts. The force with him is not stated, but it is undoubtedly small. He is an old friend of Santa Anna, and is probably working at present for his master.

The New Orleans Picayune says.

The destination of one half of the 34. Regiment of Dragons, who was ordered to join Gen. Taylor, ha been changed. Five companies have been ordered to join Gen. Scott –Three of this companies to wit: -Capt. Daperuis, of Louisiana, Capt. Gather's of Kentucky, and Capt. Ford's of Indiana, leave this evening in the Fashion for Vera Cruz, under Lieut. Col. T. P. Moore. Capt. Mc-Reynold's company, from Michigan, will probably leave tomorrow on the steamship Mary Kingsland for the same destination.

LATER FROM THE BRAZOS--An arrival at New Orleans on the 20th instant from, Brazos Santiago, brings advices from that place to the 14th inst. and from Matamoras to the 12th. The Picayune says.

Gen. Cushing was doing very well. It was his right leg which was broken, not his left. This Matamoros Flag thinks he will shortly be able to attend to his various duties.

Reports were in circulation at Matamoras that some influential Mexicans at Victoria are engaged in a project to proclaim the State of Tamaulipas independent to the Mexican confederacy.

The Flag says that considerable parties of Indians have been seen at different times without the last few days, only a few males from Matamoras.

The Rio Grande is so low that boats of the lightest draught cannot get to Camargo. No vessels have lately been above the new dept, and but two or three so high up. Reynosa is about as far as boats can ascend with any success.

FROM TABASCO.

The U. S. revenue cutter, Ewing Capt. Moore, arrived at St. West Pass of the Mississippi on the 18th instant from Vera Cruz, via Tabasco, leaving the latter port out the 12th inst. The E. left at anchor outside the bar at Tabasco the frigate Raritan, the sloop of war Albany and Spanish brig-of-war. The U. S. revenue cutter Mc Lane was in the river, and a brig, name unknown. Com. Perry was daily expected with the steamers at Tabasco. There were no news when the Ewing sailed.
Advices has been received at New Orleans from Havana to the 8th inst.

The Spanish was steamers Congreso and Bazan entered the port of Santiago de Cuba on the 23d April. The French steamer Tonnerre arrived at the same port on the 22d, from St. Thomas. On the 24th the royal steamer Clyde arrived there a week after her time. She went to see again within an hour.

The English corvette Nova Scotia, which sailed from Cienfuegos on the 18th April for Newfoundan, was wrecked on the 20th on Los Jardines, southwest of the Isle of Pines. The captain and crew saved nothing from the ship but took to the boats. They arrived on the 26th at Cape San Antoni, an there taking a pilot they reached Havana on the 4th inst.

CALIFORNIA. –The New Orleans Picayune says-

Last evening we had the pleasure of conversation with Mr. Stoizel, a German Gentleman. Who left Mazatlan on the morning of the 6th of April, much the latest dates we have had from the quarter. When he left the Americas were in quiet possession of all the conquered territory, and the coast was closely blockaded.

MG47v48n14p2c6, June 3, 1847.

From the New Orleans Picayune, May 23.

LASTEST FORM THE BRAZOS.

The U. S. steamship Trumbull, Capt. Stonesbury, arrived last evening from the Brazos, whence she sailed on the 19th inst. The following passengers came over on the Trumbull: Capt. A. B. Lansing, Assistant Quartermaster, U. S. A.; Capt. E. Webster and servant, and Capt. Claiborne, of the U.S. steamer Colonel Cross; Lieut. Frost of the Voltigeurs: Father McElry, Chaplain U. S. Army; Mr. Coolidge, Mass Volunteers; Mr. Field, Mrs. Reed, and 39 deck passengers mostly discharged volunteers. Capts. Lansing, Webster and Crowninshield return to the United states for a short time for the benefit of their health.

Quite the most important intelligence by this arrival concerns the safety of Col. Doniphan’s command. According to the letter of our correspondent, dated the 3d instant, from Monterey, the most grate apprehensions were entertained in regard to that command. The rumor was, as will be seen by that letter, to which we refer, that Col. D. had been defeated by the Mexicans and lost all his artillery. We are greatly in hopes that this will prove to be a mere Mexican rumor, and we are encouraged in this hope by the fact that the Picket Guard, published at Saltillo on the 3d, makes no mention of the rumor, and anticipates the speedy arrival of Col. Doniphan and his command at that place.

By this arrival we learn that Brig. Gen. Cowalader is forthwith to proceed with his command (excepting the dragoons) now encamped in Palo Alto, to Vera Cruz to reinforce Gen. Scott. The transports were being prepared at the Brazos when the Trumbull left.

Major Cross, 3d Dragoons, had arrived at the Brazos and proceeded to take command of the three companies of his regiment stationed for the present near Palo Alto.

At the Brazos, Capt. Lansing had been relieve in his duties as assistant quartermaster by Capt. Churchill. A. Q. M. Capt. Hill was expected to leave daily for Washington.

Under the able administration of Major Eastland, public business was despatched in great order and with perfect system at the extensive depot at Brazos Island.

Col. Humphrey Marshall’s regiment of Kentucky cavalry, in which one of the parties fell. The rumor was false. There has been a serious misunderstanding between the two gentlemen, but a reconciliation was brought about without a hostile meeting.

We have copies of the Matamoros Flag of the 15th inst. of the American Pioneer (published at Monterey) of the 2d, and of the Picket Guard (published at Saltillo) of the 3d inst., from which we extract copiously.

The 3d. Ohio Regiment, under Col. Cutis was expected at Monterey during the second week in May, on its way home, and the 1st Ohio Regiment long mentioned at Monterey, would leave about the same time.

The Mexican authority the endeavoring to rebuild the market and prison at Monterey, which were destroyed by are not many weeks since.
The Picayune reports as damage perpetrated upon Mexican [ . . . ] or that place, by the Mexican ruffians. They escaped with their lives, although scarcely wounded.

At last accounts the most intense curiosity was felt at Monterey and Saltillo to learn news of Gen. Scott’s movements. They had not then heard of the victory of Cerro Gordo, but had innumerable false rumors of operations on the Vera Cruz road to Mexico.

The Picket Guard contains the result of a Court Martial in the cases of Gen. Lane and Col Bowles. Is the case of Gen. Lane the opinion of the Court was as follows: -The court are of the opinions that during the whole period of the 22d. and 23d of February, 1847, Brig. Gen. Lane conducted himself as a brave and gallant officer, and that no censure can be attached to him for the retreat of the 2d Regiment of Indians Volunteers.

The following is the opinion of the court in the case of Col. Bowles:

With reference to the first charge, the court is of the opinion that Col. Bowles is ignorant of the duties of colonel; but the court would remark that ill health, and absence on account of ill health, have in some degree, prevented him from fitting himself for the duties of that office.

The court is the opinion that at the time Co. Bowles have the order “retreat”, he was retreated, when in fact the battery had gone to an advanced position under the orders of Gen. Lane, which orders had not been communicated to Col. Bowles.

And conclusion the court find that throughout the engagement, and through the whole day, Col. Bowles evinced no want of personal courage or bravery, but that he did manifest a want of capacity and judgment as a commander.

The Guard says that several English gentleman who arrived at Saltillo on the 3d inst., from Durango, report Col Doniphan to have started from Chihuahua on the 1st of April for Saltillo, by way of San Jose del Parral. This agrees with the report we had in the papers of the city of Mexico, but the latter allege that the force returned to Chihuahua after having proceeded twenty odd leagues south. We had great hopes this is true, and that the report already alluded to of Col. Doniphan’s defeat may have grown out of this retrograde movement. The Guard thinks the whole command must he within a few day’s march of Saltillo; but it had not probably heard of the return to Chihuahua, or hearing of it did not credit it.

The same English gentlemen from Durango makes the following report which we copy from the Guard:

On the route they saw Gen. Garcia Conde on his way to Durango, with 150 men, having as a prisoner, Gen. Herredia, who commanded at the battle of Sacramento. He is accused of treason and of being too fond of American gold. All the rest of the troops had dispersed for their homes. Durango was in a great state of alarm, dreading the arrival of Gen. Wool, who was expected by them daily. Mr. James Megoffin was a prisoner, with the city for his prison limits, but well treated by the Mexicans.

Every thing was quiet in California, the whole country in possession of the Americans and a very great influx of families and settlers from Oregon.

The Monterey Pioneer thinks that an advanced upon San Luis is designated by General Taylor, as unusual activity prevails in all the departments, and four trains loaded with subsistence stores, have recently arrived at that place.

Lieut. Waters, of the Alexandria company, Virginia Regiment, died a short time since, at the town of China.

A man named John Doss, confined in Jail at Matamoros. Flag says that General Urrera has issued a proclamation to the citizens of Cadareyte, very similar upon the town for a contributions towards supporting the war, and also orders under arms all able-bodied males between the ages of 15 and 45. Immediately after having issued this proclamation he set off for the city of Mexico.

The following interesting items are all from the Flag:

Gen. Cadwalader and staff, are at the camp of instruction, Palo Alto, fourteen miles below this place. Also Col. Ramsay, Pennsylvania Regiment; Lieut. Col. Fay, 10th Regiment; Maj. Morgan, 11th Regiment.- Two companies of dragoons, Capts. Butler and Merrick. Five companies of volunteers, Capts. Bernard, Bibble, Howard, Edwards and Churchill. Two companies of the 16th Regiment, Capts. Hendricks and Brenan –three companies of the 10th and Capt. Pitnam’s company of the 9th. These troops will remain at Palo Alto under strict discipline, and from thence, it is rumored, be transferred to Vera Cruz.

Romano Paz, a notorious Mexican robber and murdered, was captured in the vicinity of Old Reynosa, by Capt. Reid of the steamer Corvette, and brought down to this city on Wednesday last, where he is now imprisoned. It appears that he holds the rank of captain under Canales, and visited of inducing the rancheros to join his standard. The people were not disposed to join him and sought and opportunity to place him in the hands of the Americans. This was effected by informing Capt. Reid of his whereabouts and designs, who collected a force from the boat and made him prisoner at rancho where he had been captured for several days.
It is stated in the Monterey Pioneer, upon good authority of a gentleman from San Luis Potosi; that but a few hundred effective troops were in that city, and that the hospitals were filled with the sick and wounded, who are dying for want of attention. A report reached there that Gen. Taylor was within three days march of the city, which caused hundreds of the inhabitants to vamos with their property.

[Special Correspondence of the Picayune.]

CAMP WALNUT SPRINGS (near Monterey,)

May 3, 1847;

Two companies of the 2d Mississippi Regiment, a company of regular recruits (sent on here by mistake, and who have been serving in the Flying Artillery) and a small detachment of U. S. Dragoons will compose the escort of the train to Camargo. The regulars will be sent to Gen. Scott.

The health of the army at this port is very good, and the sick list is quite small. The weather has been very warm, except today, for the last ten days; but to day we had a cold drizzly rain pretty much all the time, and there is a prospect of continuing on a day or two. I am told that in this region May is one of the driest months in the year; but it today is to be taken as a sample of what is to follow, it will not be so very as it might be.

There is a report here, derived from pretty good authority, from Co. Doniphan’s force, and of a very unwelcome character. It is derived from an attache of the army of Silenas, a small town within about forty miles of this place, and he obtained the information from Mexicans who had just arrived. It is to the effect that Co. Doniphan’s force had been attacked at a pass called Sierra Gordon, about half away between Saltillo and Chihuahua, by a Mexican force from Durango under General Reiz –of whom I never recollect hearing before –and that Col. D. had been defeated with severe loss and all his artillery captured. There may be some truth in this report, as the Col. Was en routé to join. Gen. Wool’s command at Saltillo. All that we can do is to hope that the report is unfounded and a wait authentic information. The train will be off in a few moments, and I have not time to write more.

Latest from Vera Cruz.

The schr. Whig Capt. Rayner, arrived yesterday form Vera Cruz, having left there on the evening of Saturday, the 15th instant. Lieut. A. J. Brock and thirty three private being company of the Tennessee cavalry, came passengers on the Whig. She brought no mail, that having been put aboard the schooner Allen Stevens, which has not yet arrived.

Verbally we learn that there had been no later arrival from the army of Gen. Scott. –We have a copy of the American Eagle of the 15th inst. which has not a word of later news from above.

From the Eagle we learn that the sloop-of war German Town, Capt. F. Buchanan, arrived off the castle on the 13th instant but sailed immediately for Anton Lizardo, to wait the orders of the commodore. The U. S. steamer Spitfire, Lieut. Com’g. Lee, was lying at Vera Cruz a waiting despatches daily expected from the interior.

The Eagle is of opinion that Gen. Scott will remain at Puebla until the beginning of autumn, without marching upon the capital.

The Eagle complains in good set terms of the dullness of Vera Cruz and the excessive heat, which threatens to become yet more intense. Nothing is said of the health of the city. From the report of the proceedings of the city council we perceive that our country men have brought a good deal of American energy to the task of cleansing the city, providing a police, supporting schools and the like. Before we are done with Vera Cruz we hope it may become quite and attractive an healthy city.

[CUR]

MG47v48n14p3c1, June 3, 1847.

RETURN OF VOLUNTEERS.

Company G. 1st. Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, commanded by Capt. Snead, has arrived at New Orleans, from Vera Cruz on the Pilot boat Selim. The Selint was chartered by expense to bring them to that city.

The ship Charlotte Reed also arrived at New Orleans on the 22d from Vera Cruz, Commanders J. Tatnall and V. M. Randolph, two of the officers who were in command of the Mosquito Fleet which distinguished itself in bombarding Vera Cruz AND San Juan; Col Bohlen, bearer of despatches from Gen. Scott for the Government, and Capt. N. Adams, U. S. A. came passengers on the Charlotte Reed.

The ship Pharsalia, with 300 men of the 1st Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, who arrived on the 22d from Vera Cruz, with the following officers of the regiment: Col. J. E. Thomas; Maj. R. Waterhouse; Capts. Caswell, Halness, Cooper and
The brig R. Russett, from Vera Cruz has arrived, bringing 130 rank and file of the 3d Regiment Illinois Volunteers, under command of Lieut. Col. Wiley.

MG47v48n15p2c6, June 10, 1847

TAYLORING.

Confirmed at Last! –The Washington Union denies that the copy of the Paso of Santa Anna, published by a few weeks since in a correct copy. It says that Mr. Polk furnished no [ . . . ] at all, but admits that on order to let Santa Anna into Mexico was issued by Mr. Marcy to the Squadron in the Gulf! So it seems after a year's wriggling and twisting, and every endeavor to creep out of the matter, that Mr. Polk is endeavoring to place that disgraceful and disreputable transaction upon the shoulders of Mr. Marcy! But did not Mr. Marcy act by the authority of the President? However, it makes no difference who issued the Order or Pass, it is now admitted by the Official Organ of the President, that Santa Anna was permitted by our government to pass the Squadron in the Gulf of Mexico, return to his own country, place himself at the head of a powerful army, and march against our own citizens and butcher them! A similar diabolical act was never before committed by any country in any age. –It has remained for the President of the United States to furnish an enemy, then at war with his country, with a powerful General to lead its forces against his own fellow citizens! What has he not to answer for!

We heard a gentleman, fresh from the theater of war, relate an anecdote of Gen. Taylor. One of the Illinois regiments was thrown into rather close proximity with a Mexican battery, and the balls were flying tolerably thick, and rather close –so close at least as to induce the b'hoys to dodge occasionally: Old Rough was sitting astride of his old grey, and being in a position to see the dodging cried out. "Gentlemen, no dodging –it ill becomes a soldier a dodge." Old Rough’s grey horse presented a fair mark, and as the enemy had learned his whereabouts because of his old charger, a very brisk fire was opened upon the grey horse. It is said the balls passed around Old Rough promiscuously, and the thing was becoming quite too hot even for him. At last a bal passed so near the old man’s cheek as to cause him to throw his head in an opposite direction with a celerity not at all characteristic of Old Rough’s plodding habits; it was thought the old fellow was dodging –the movement of his head was noticed by some of the Illinoians, and a hearty laugh broke out from the b'hoys. Old Rough straitened himself up in his stirrups, and said -“Dodge the balls, gentlemen, but no running.” -Miss Adv.

SPLENDID WARDOBE. –If the papers continue to give such evidences of Gen. Taylor’s plainness as the following, we shall soon expect to see the mushroom aristocrats, who sneered at Harrison’s “Log Cabin and Hard Cider” venting their agonizing wit upon Old Zach’s rough attire: -Rich. Rep.

"Old Rough and Ready, “ says a contemporary, “is remarkable for the extreme plainness of his attire. When leaving New Orleans for Corpus Christi, some of his brother officers playfully instituted an appraisement of the suit of clothes worn by him at that time. The result was, that the whole suit including round jacket, vest, throwers, hat, and unmentionables, was worth about Seven dollars and a half."

A LOUD CALL FOR THE LETTER –The Louisville Journal has the following:

THAT LETTER.- We doubt whether the Administration will be able to withhold much longer the letter addressed by Gen. Taylor to the War Department on the day before the battle of Buena Vista. The public is clamoring for the publication of the letter and the we guess it will have to come.

Yesterday we received a letter from an officer of high rank in the army, from which we make this extract: -“Call upon Mr. Marcy to give up the letter of Gen. Taylor to him in answer to a communication from Marcy talking him to task for writing the Gaines letter. In a conversation I had with Gen. Taylor, on the 23d of last month, he gave me the contents of this letter, and the Secretary of War and the Administration are thoroughly used up in it."

OPINION OF GENERAL TAYLOR ABROAD. –A letter from Paris, written by the Editor of the N. Y. Herald, who is now in that city says:

"Among military men Gen. Taylor is considered one of the greatest Generals of the age. It is asserted without hesitation, that he has performed as much with the means at his command, as ever Napoleon or Wellington did. –It was informed this morning by a gentleman formerly a distinguished diplomatist in Europe, that Marshall Soult on reading the news, and particularly Gen. Taylor’s despatches, declared in emphatic language, ‘voila un saldat’ as much as to say a great General –a very great General.”

The veteran Taylor has passed some of the best years of his life in the battle field, in which, however, the immortality of fame he has won, will compensate for his hardships and sufferings. I the late letter to the Department of War, soon after his splendid victory over the Indians in Florida, he used the following language:

"I write without a candle –a blazing pine knot serving instead, in the middle of a vast prairie, in what they call a cabbage tree copse, upon a dirty sheet of paper, the only one in the camp."

In a late letter to a friend in Louisiana occurs the following parallel passage:

"Since I left New Orleans for Corpus Christi, I have not slept under the protection of a roof, and not always under the thin covering of a soldier’s tent."

A volunteer who has returned from the Mexican war, says –“I have seen the elephant, trunk, tusk, and all, and am more than satisfied. I went out a Polk soldier, and return a Taylor Whig.”

The Louisville Journal says: "We have before us a map of the battle grounds upon which Gen. Taylor won his four great victories in Mexico. We have also before us a map of the battle ground upon which he will win his great battle of 1848 – that is to say, a map of the U. States."

It is said that a young lady, who is a great admirer of Gen. Taylor’s epistolary style, received a letter the other day from a sweetheart, enquiring if she would have him. She immediately sent in reply, Gen. Taylor’s answer to Santa Anna, -“Come and take me.” Boston Atlas.

Father said a little boy to his Loco Parent, is Gen. Taylor a Whig? Yes, my son. –Were Clay and Hardin and Lincoln Whigs? They were. Is Gen. Scott a Whig? Yes –why do you ask? Because you call the Whigs Mexicans. Pshaw! You are too young to understand politics. But did Polk give Santa Anna a pass to return to Mexico? Don’t talk to me my son, I’m in a hurry. –Buffalo Com.

PROSPECT VERIFIED. –"War.” Said Mr. CLAY, in his Raleigh letter, "will be the consequences of the annexation of Texas at this time in the manner proposed.”

“This way,” says Mr. Benton, “is the annexation of Texas, at the time and in the manner I which it was done.”

A NEW NOMINATION. –The Vicksburg Whig, observing that the Democrats have suddenly discovered the most extraordinary virtues in Mr. Clay. When they were lately so fond of abusing, and that they express the highest admiration for Gen. Taylor, whilst they object to the selection of a military man as president, proposes to satisfy, at once, all their wishes and scruples, by offering them the following ticket: "Hon. HENRY CLAY, for President and General ZACHARY TAYLOR for Vice President.”

MG47v48n15p2c6, June 10, 1847

LATE FROM MEXICO.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Gen. Worth at Puebla – [ . . . ]

At the nearly hour on the morning of the 27th, the steamship Pametto arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, bringing dates from that city to the 22d, and from Jalapa to the 21st.

We have received slips (says the Baltimore Patriot) from the New Orleans Picayune and Times, and also accounts of the news in the Delta.

The correspondent of the Delta writes from Jalapa, under date of the 21st ult. –"We have positive information of the arrival of General Worth’s command at Puebla. On the approach of our army to the city Gen. Santa Anna, who was there at the time supplying his troops with some necessaries, sent a detachment to engage Gen. Worth until he could procure his supplies, but the encounter was soon over, and Santa Anna and his army compelled to fly. In the skirmish there were four Mexicans killed –our loss none. He has retreated towards the city of Mexico. One report says he is at Santa Martin, a town about 28 miles from Puebla, but it is generally conceded, that his main force, upwards of 12,000 men, have gone to Rio Frio, where he is preparing for another engagement. The latter place is said to be a naturally strong point, and can be made to offer strong resistance, but if Cerro Gordo could not resist the brigade of Gen. Twiggs, what can position avail the Mexican chieftain.

"The train looked for the past few days has arrived, together with Capts. Walker and Ruff, with their commands. The army here will move four miles on the Perote road tomorrow evening, and on Sunday take up its line of march. No stop will be made at Perote. If we should not halt at Puebla, so hear the result of some more propositions of peace from the American government, you may soon expect to receive my letters dated at the capital of the Republic.”

Jalapa, 11 o’clock, A. M.,

May 21, 1847.

Eds. Delta: -The "diligence” is about departure. The Mexicans have a report here which is credited by the Americans generally that Herrera is elected President of Mexico, and that he is disposed to treat for peace. -The "diligence” from Puebla is looked for momentarily, which will give us the correct position of the affairs at the Capital. If it should arrive in time to overtake the line towards Vera Cruz. I will send an express to overhaul it. The reason assigned by the Mexicans for Herrera being willing to make a peace with us, is that he desires to prevent our taking possession of the Capital of the Republic, which he says will be the inevitable result if the Mexicans do not come to terms.

The army is under marching orders for tomorrow evening at 3 o’clock. Gen Twiggs’s column will move at that hour, if no unforeseen circumstances intervene. Nothing farther from Gens. Worth and Quitman, except that they were resting, from the fatigues of the march in Puebla.

Gen. Shields had an attack of the pleurisy two nights ago, but is recovering from the effects of it, and also his wound. He expects to be able to leave for the United States about the 10th of next month.

Capt. Walker is encamped with his recruits close to the town. It was generally supposed he would be arrested for the course he pursued in reference to a guerrilla party he came in contact with. But I understand his course is approved of. The Alcalde of Santa Fe who had been harboring the banditti, and in whose possession the property of the murdered Dragoons were found, he had to share the same fate as those who committed the murder. Served him right. MUSTANG.
JALAPA, May 21, 12 o'clock.

Eds. Delta: -The Diligence has arrived form Puebla, but nothing official had arrived from the capital previous to its departure. –The passengers state that it was current in that place that Herrera has been elected President. I received at letter from Puebla, of which the following is an extract:

"We entered this place on the 15ths inst. –The natives, although quite yet, have stabbed several of the men, and have killed two. We were attacked in Amasoca by Santa Anna, with about 1500 cavalry –he lost 3 killed and 7 wounded. The old codger took a fit of leaving for Mexico, where he is fortifying the Penol and Ayotla."

I have seen another letter from an intelligent source, to a gentleman to this place, which says that Santa Anna retreated from Puebla to San Martin, and subsequently left for the city of Mexico; also that we are to be met on the road, somewhere, with 10,000 men, under one General, whose name I do not recollect, and 4000 under Minon. So more it be –the more the better. No doubt by the time we meet them, their force will be augmented to double the number. We also learn that murders and robberies are being committed on the road daily, both by horsemen and footmen. The source of information can be relied on. MUSTANG.

"One hundred and twenty Quartermaster's mules, loaded with flour and pork, on their road to rendezvous a: Santa Fe, were attacked late last evening, three miles from here. The muleteers were fired upon, but cannot learn whether any were killed. Most of the muleteers have just returned, and report that the entire train was captured. This is no rumor. I have the facts from the Quartermaster here."

FROM GEN. TAYLOR'S ARMY.

The schooner Sea arrived at New Orleans on the 27th ult. from Brazos Santiago, which place she left on the 20th instant. The Picayune of the 28th ult. Says-

Though no later from that port, she brought a mail through from Gen. Taylor's headquarters at Monterey. Among her passengers were Capt. J. M. Hill, of the Quartermaster's Department, and Dr. J. W. Russell, U.S.A.

There is almost no news from that quarter. There has been no confirmation received of the rumored defeat of Col. Doniphan; we are therefore more than every persuaded that there was no good foundations for the original report. When he learns at Chihuahua that the insurrection in New Mexico has been effectually put down, and the guilt concerned in it expiated on the gallows, he will probably resume his original purpose of joining Gen. Wool, near Saltillo. This is but a conjecture.

A letter in the New Orleans Picayune of the 28th ult, dated Monterey, May 7, says –The health of the army here continues good with the exception of the 2d Mississippi Regiment, which is still suffering from the ravages of the small pox, and losing a good many men. I neglected to mention in my last that Gen. Taylor had been ill for a day or two but had recovered. Col. Hamtramck, who has been dangerously ill ever since the Virginia Regiment arrived at Monterey, has now recovered and came out to camp for the first time yesterday. I have not an item of news to furnish you.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot.

WASHINGTON, May 30, 1847.

The Administration has made a new move in justification of its conduct in getting the country into a war with Mexico! Through Gen. Scott's pronunciamento to the Mexicans, issued at Jalapa, on the 11th ult., and in the columns of the official organ, it is now contended that the PARADES, the late President of Mexico, was a Monarchist, and was aiming or intriguing to destroy the Republican form of Government of the Mexicans, and bring his country into colonial bondage to the Monarchies of England and France!

To prevent this movement, so disastrous to the cause of North and south American Republicanism, it is contended that the United States were compelled to enter into this war with Mexico, which bids fair to annihilate that sister Republic of ours altogether, and to damage us not a little.

Te pronunciamento of Gen. Scott, breathing this doctrine, is followed up in last evening's "Union" with a long and labored editorial, showing the wisdom and forecast of the Administration in frustrating the plans of the Monarchical Cabinets of England and France has designs of this diabolical and anti-republican nature, extracts from an English and can nature, extracts from an English and French court journal are given—which extracts simply show the speculations of the editors of those journals!

But, admitting that she extracts aforesaid reflect the true feelings of the English and French Cabinets in regard to this matter, and that it appears clear that those Cabinets are intriguing to convert Mexico into a Monarchy, which should cause the United States to interfere and act up to the sentiment of President MONRON in 1823, adopted by Mr. Polk and quoted by the "Union," "THAT THE AMERICAN CONTINENTS ARE NOT TO BE CONSIDERED AS SUBJECTS FOR COLONIZATION BY ANY EUROPEAN POWER," what, pray, in that case, ought to be our course of action? Who ought we got to war with? Mexico? Or England and France?

If England and France are talking of the weakness of our sister Republic, or if the division which rend and distract her, internally, and are attempting to convert her into a Monarchy, which would be an insult and injury to the United States, in the name of common sense, what sort of logic is that would teach us to go to war and destroy as fast as practicable, not the Monarchies of England and France that are striving to put down and bring into disgrace all republican forms of government, but our sister Republic and nearest neighbor in the great family of American Republics, weak and distracted Mexico! --And yet the Administration now flaunts this logic to the breeze and essays to boast of what it has done!

The peculiar tone and style of Gen. SCOTT’S pronunciamiento to the Mexicants, call forth much speculation. Some say the General wrote from Jalapa, is the Government in Mexico; others, that no single mind could have put together such curious paper! All, however, agree, I believe, that the Administration either sent the document, cut and dried, to General SCOTT, or full instruction in the premises! In giving the production to its readers the "Union" asks the indulgence of the republic on account of the two translations which the document has undergone, from the English to the Spanish, and then back into the English again! It is the opinion of some persons that two or three more translations will be necessary before the pompous, turgid, labored, stilted epistle (which reads nearly as well, so far as the English is concerned, backwards as forwards) can be rendered into such a straight-forward, modest and brief proclamation as the occasion may have called for!

POTOMAC.

MG47v48n16p2c 1, June 17, 1847.

GENERAL TAYLOR

The Lately published letter from Gen. Taylor to a distinguished gentleman in Louisiana, in which, although intimating his willingness to obey the call of his countrymen, with characteristic distrust of his own qualifications for the Chief Magistracy, he expressed a desire that some one of our distinguished Statesmen should be elevated to that high office, has elicited from the Washington Union the following paragraph, in almost every line of which, even when the writer effects to the most complimentary, hostility to the old Hero, who has thus far Providentially survived as he defies the efforts of the Administration and its friends to destroy him, is (perhaps unconsciously) betrayed, The Union thus prefaced the letter:

"The following letter bears marks of the modesty' which the New Orleans Bulletin attributes to Gen. Taylor. But we hazard the remark that might have been equally, if not more modest, if casting away all ambition, " he had stood aside for the present, and firmly passed over the honors of an election to one of the "eminent and deserving" citizens, whom he considers better "qualified for so high and responsible a station." Whilst the gallant and distinguished General, however, removes all the doubts (as the Bulletin supposes) as to his acceptance of the nomination for the Presidency, " we are free to state, with all respect, that this is not going far enough. The people ought to know --and a free people will never be satisfied without knowing --how far his principles suit them. Is he a Democrat, or is he a Whig? He goes for a strict observance of the constitution." What does the General mean by a strict observance? Is he of the school of Jefferson, or of Webster and Clay? Does he go for a national bank --for a national system of internal improvements --a protective or a revenue tariff --the law of 1842, or of 1846? We have no idea that the old soldier affects any mystery upon these questions. --He will scarcely pursue the advice of his "committee of secrecy" at Philadelphia. But let some friend call upon him for another letter, and let the old General come out. This is what the country has a right to ask, ; and nothing short of this requisition ought to satisfy an enlightened people, who value "principles more than men."

"We have no doubt the Union would have been highly gratified, had Gen. Taylor peremptorily refused to permit the use of his name as a candidate for the Presidency. But not so understand his duty --and that, we venture to say, he will perform, fearless alike of open and secret, official and unofficial assailants, should be called upon, from a quarter entitled to such a response, to exchange the military for the civil service of his country. --Acting upon the maxim of the patriotic Lowndes, while he does not seek the high position to which so large a portion of his countrymen have evinced a determination to elevate him, he will not decline it should it be conferred upon him.

Nor need the slightest apprehension be entertained, should he become hereafter a candidate for the Presidency, that he will fail to five a clear and candid exposition of his views upon all questions of public interest, upon which, in the event of his election, he may be required to act. Reared in the camp, he has all the frankness of the soldier, and none of the arts of those who have been trained in courts, and learned in that corrupted atmosphere, to act, like Mr. Polk for example, upon the famous maxim of Talleyrand, that language is intended to conceal ideas- of which maxim there is not to be found, even in Talleyrand’s serpentine career, a more striking illustration than that furnished by Mr. Polk’s letter to James K. Kane on the Protective policy. But “there is time for all things”; and neither Gen. Taylor’s friends nor his enemies have a right, before he shall be a candidate, as be certainly is not now, to call upon him for a declaration of his opinions, which we take it for granted he will not make, if he should be so called upon, until, having become avowedly a candidate, the people will have a right to know, and he will feel bound to make them acquainted with his sentiments in regard to the past and future policy of the Government he may be called upon to administer. He will not (to use one of the favorite phrases of the editor of the Union) “wrap up his opinions in a doublet.” When it shall become the people’s right to know them, and his duty to make them know. He leaves that course for such men as Mr. Polk, who, after having written the equivocal Kane letter, stubbornly refused, when apprized more that once of the diametrically opposite constructions given to it in a different latitudes, to say whether his cabalistic terms meant, or were intended to mean, this or that –whether they pledged him to Free Trade, as was boldly asserted in the South, or to the perpetuation of the Protective policy, as was affirmed with equal confidence in Pennsylvania and other Tariff States. If he cannot be elected without resorting to such a fraudulent device, he will never reach the Presidency. Even that high honor he will never purchase by such disreputable means.

In its devotion to a literal interpretation of the constitution, which has been certainly signalized in a remarkable manner since it became the organ of the Executive author of the Mexican war, the Union seem not to be satisfied with the declaration of Gen. Taylor that he is in favor of “a strict observance” of the provisions of that instrument. The suspiciousness of the Union is not at all strange –since it has seen how little Gen. Jackson, Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Polk, all of whom went into office pledge to a “strict construction” of the constitution, according to the strait laced definition of the powers of the General Government, set forth in the Resolutions and Report of “98-99”, have been restrained by their pledge, whenever they had an object, to accomplish by its violation. The Union, therefore, asks, “what does the General mean by a strict observance?” we cannot, of course, tell that paper, in detail, what he does mean.; but we may venture to say what he does not mean. He does not mean, we are very sure, that the Executive has the power, either to make war, or to render it inevitable, by invading, in time of peace a foreign territory, for the purpose of setting by force a question of boundary, which Congress had expressly declare was left open for future negotiation! He does not mean that the Executive has a right to annex conquest territory to the Union, by the proclamation of military and naval commanders, to form territorial governments there in, to appoint officers to administer them, and to punish Mexican citizens, from whom an oath of allegiance to the United States has been exacted at the point of the bayonet, as traitors, for acts of fidelity to their own Government, and defending their own soil! He does not mean that the Executive has a right to usurp the essentially Legislative function of enacting laws for the collection of duties upon imports in Mexican any mean, that, while the constitution prohibits the General Government from improving our own rivers and harbors, (according to the doctrine had down in Polks veto message, or to build ship canals in any portion of the Union as it exists, it has a right way” and to construct afterwards, either by a direct appropriations, or through the agency of incorporated capital, such a canal through the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, in order to connect the Atlantic with the Pacific! He may, for aught we know, believe with Madison, the father of the Constitution and the author of the Resolutions and Reports of ‘98-‘99, in the constitutionality of a National Bank, and with the Republican party of 1816, he may be in favor of the incorporation of such an institution, as he does certainly, we imagine, believe, with every President, from Washington to Harison in the constitutionality and expediency of a Protective Tariff. But he does not belong we are confident, to that school of pretenders and purists, who, shrinking with well feigned horror from these measures, have no scruple in tendering the constitution a dead letter in its most essential and vital parts. He does not strain at a gnat, after having swallowed a camel. When he speaks of a “strict observance of constitutions, ” he means, doubtless, to give it that interpretation, in regard to questions of domestic policy, which has the sanction of the founders of the Republican church –not that infinitely more latitudinous mode of construction by which the acts of the MODERN DEMOCRATIC Administrations, beginning with Jackson, and to end, we hope, with Polk, has been uniformly characterized –a mode of construction the uniform tendency of which has been to consolidate all the powers of the Federal Government, wrongfully or rightfully claimed and exercised, in the hands of THE EXECUTIVE –converting Congress into a mere registrar of the edicts of ONE MAN, who, by the unity of his will and the judicious use of his patronage, has, to all intents and purposes, become “THE GOVERNMENT” –Rich. Whig.

[ML]

MG47v48n16p2c 2, June 17, 1847.

LETTER FROM SANTA ANNA.

The subjoined official letter from Santa Anna to the Minister of War and Marine, is translated for the Mobile Tribune from the El Republican of the 16th May:

"HEAD QUARTERS, PUEBLA, May 13.

"ARMY OF OPERATIONS –Excellent Sir –The commandant of the flying revenue guard of tobacco of Orizaba, the Col. D. Juan N. Caraveo, whom I let with his command near the National road, between Perote and Nopalucan, to observe the movements of the enemy and to harass him when the opportunity might offer, has remitted to me the accompanying documents which left Jalapa for Colonel Worth’s camp.

"Among them you will find Gen. Scott’s proclamation to the Mexican nation, which from its style appears to have been written originally in Spanish and not translated from the English."
"This proclamation of Scott’s is written with the most refined hypocrisy and with the most infamous perfidy. It is the greatest insult yet offered to the Mexican people, whom it has attempted to lull, (a quien pretende adormecer,) to make the victim of the ambition of that nation which is the enemy of our race, when in another place it feels no embarrassment in proclaiming, by the press and in official documents, that it carries on against us a war of conquest, and that this war must be made at the cost of the blood and treasure of this unfortunate country.

"Your Excellency will note in one of the accompany intercepted letters, that Scott, the Inspector General of the United States Army, considers the above proclamation well adapted to aid the views of the invaders.

"You will not observe, that this letter harmonizes with others which with have been lately published in this capitol, and which with reason have been regarded by all well disposed Mexicans as more prejudicial for the venom (ponzona) which they conceal than the loss of a battle.

"But in the midst of the malevolence (encona) which Gen. Scott show he against me, he does me too much honor when he says that they had been deceived as to my real intention, and that on account of this mistake his Government permitted me to pass to my country. Indeed, most Excellent Sir, the United States did deceive when they dreamed that I was capable of betraying my country. Before this should happen, I would prefer to be consumed by fire, and that my ashes should be scattered that not a single atom be left.

"Would to God the Mexicans would open their eyes to discover the poison in the golden chalice that the perfidious Scott proffers to the, and that the reply to his proclamation may be one shout of universal indignation against the invaders of our soil. Let a war be made against them without period, that when we may no longer be able, because Providence may have decreed the subjugation of this unfortunate country, there may remain to our children or grandchildren, when the wrath of the Omnipotent shall have passed, the noble work of revenging the outrages committed by the Republic of the United States on Mexico.

"God and Liberty!
"Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna."

"To his Excellency the Minister of War and Marine."

The perusal of his letter will not, we should suppose, be very gratifying to Mr. Polk. It will be seen that Santa Anna resents, with great indignation, the presumption, under the influence of which Mr. Polk permitted him to return to Mexico, (where he has been ever since “giving aid and comfort to the enemy” in the most efficient manner,) that he was capable of betraying his country! To act upon such an improbable belief, was, indeed, a most remarkable blunder, to say the least of it—though it is evident that Mr. Polk continued to labor under this “strong delusion,” even so late as the close of last session of Congress, up to which period he continued to urge the passage or the “three million bill,” which, inconsequence, we presume, of the treachery of Santa Anna, not to his country, but to Mr. Polk, whom he so successfully wheedled, remains to this day, so far as we are informed, a dead letter! The immediate object of the writer, however, seems to be less to exculpate himself than to neutralize as far as practicable Gen. Scott’s proclamation upon the minds of the Mexicans, which he seems to apprehend may not be altogether harmless in its effects. To what extent the Mexicans may be [ ... ] to listen to terms of peace by the language of that proclamation, we have no means of knowing; but it is very clear, from the manner in which it is met by Santa Anna, that so long as he lives and can exert a controlling influence upon public sentiment in that country, the restoration of peace is impossible. –Rich. Whig.

[ MUL ]

MG47v48n16p2c 3, June 17, 1847.

THE GAZETTE

RETURN HOME

Mr. JACOB HELFERSTAY, who was one of the Volunteers who went from this town in charged trough the advice of the Surgeon of the Regiment, on account of his health and returned home. He was with the first battalion of the Regiment stationed at the Wainut Springs near Monterey, and formed a part of Old Rough and Ready’s” family. He speaks of “old Taylor” in very warm terms, and says there is not a soldier in the army who is not devoted to him. He describes him as “A plain Virginia farmer” which doubtless is a very expressive likeness of him, judging from all that we have heard and read of him. We regret that our young townsman was obliged to leave the Regiment without seeing the Elephant—he says” he lay his track” very plainly in the city of Monterey, at Palo Alto, &c. Had his health permitted him to remain no soldier in the Virginia Regiment would have rendered a better account of himself, had they met the enemy. He reports the men of the Virginia Regiment in fine health. Col. Hamtramck had been quite unwell, but when he left was rapidly recovering.

The workings of the Sub-treasury, let Mr. Polk thank his stars and the want and misery of the old world, have not exhibited themselves to the people generally, but the miserable policy of such a financial scheme, will appear most sensibly, if we but look at its operations in the transfer of funds for the purposes of the War. If specie is wanted in New Orleans, and the Government has it locked up in its, Sub-treasury chests at New York, it must be transported as mere freight at great cost and with no inconsiderable risk. If however, they resort to drafts, the burden is but shifted from the broad shoulders of Uncle Sam to those of his dutiful children. We refer the following article as exhibiting the whole operation of the thing in its true light:

"The New York Journal of Commerce illustrates in a brief but striking manner the convenience and costliness of the Subtreasury scheme. The Government, it says, has large sums to pay in New York. The disbursing officers, therefore, give drafts are sold in large sums at one percent discount. "This;" says the Journal, "is so much injustice on the part of the Government, and all from the operation of that miserable abortion of political financiering, the Subtreasury. If the old safe and cheap system had been continued, the money would have been paid any where and every where, just as the convenience of Government might have required. Now we have got an expensive and dangerous machine just to do mischief." –Richmond Whig.

We call attention to the National Whig, a paper lately established in the City of Washington, the advertisement of which will be found in another column. In these days of Executive usurpation, we welcome every additional sentinel at the gates of Power, that its encroachments may be watched with the most sleepless scrutiny, and promptly proclaimed to the people.

The Whig supports Gen. Taylor for the Presidency subject to the decision of a national Convention.

MG47v48n16p2c4, June 17, 1847.

THE ORGAN AND ITS TUNE.

It strikes us, that as we have reached a point in the progress of things, where the government needs an official organ, to speak as to its acts and views by authority, that the characteristics of the paper occupying that position, should be calmness, dignity and high toned courtesy. Nothing like childish pettishness, nor the morose pettishness of age, should mark its editorials, for who knows that they are not all by authority?

The exact position of such a paper however, is very well understood among our own people, but when we remember that in London and Paris, its characteristics are regarded as those of the government and the nation, we easily perceive the importance of their being worthy of the spirit of our institutions.

We have been lately struck by a singular peculiarity of the "Union" not generally observed by our readers. If a suggestion is offered in reference to the prosecution of the war, not tallying with Executive policy, it is frowned down by the Union –as "Federalism." If a doubt is expressed whether the admission of new territory will not prove the source of internal trouble, the question is gravely met by the cry of "Federal croaking." If it is hinted that Mr. Polk exhibited no very magnificent diplomacy in passing Santa Anna into Mexico, it is styled by the logical organ grinded as "Federal aspersion!" Strange crotchet, of the official brain, that all of logic, all of fair argument, and of editorial courtesy has been swallowed up by this dragon of Federalism!

But the crowning point of the Union’s imprudence and folly is noticed in the following article, which we clip from the Intelligencer of Tuesday.

"The Union call General Santa Anna the ally of the Whigs; but the Union must not expect to pass of its damage goods on its adversaries. The Executive of the United States sent Santa Anna to Mexico to head her armies, and with the intention that he should do so. If that stroke of policy has turned out a bad speculation, the Government must not hope to evade its responsibility by so transparent a trick as the organ attempts to play off. What the Executive could promise itself in aiding Santa Anna to get back to fighting her battles, we have never been able to conceive: it is a riddle which we suspect it cannot solve. Whatever the motive, the friends of the Administration admit that it was a blunder –a well meant one, they say, yet still a blunder. But they go no further; they do not say what was hoped or expected from it.
Now, we do not choose to bear the responsibility of the blunders of the Administration and its worthy organ must fain keep General Santa Anna to themselves.

We have always considered “Progressive Democracy, ” as it is called, such a mere absurdity in theory, so harmless from its very radicalism, and so evidently containing within itself, its own antidote, from the very extravagance of the positions to which it is driven, that is has appeared to us but an amusing eccentricity of Locofocoism. Any doubt, however, in regard to its true nature, and the meaning of the mystic word "Progressive, ” has been fully dispelled by the proceedings of our Army in New Mexico acting under the instructions of the Government.

Our readers will remember that Gen. Kearney with both sword and pen, and the ceremony of a proclamation, has annexed the territory of New Mexico, and established a territorial government there. His first proceeding was to issue what he styles the organic law of the territory, from which we extract the following:

"Article 1 –Sec. 1. The country bare to fore known as New Mexico shall be know and here after designated at the Territory of New Mexico, in the United States of America; and the temporary Government of Said Territory shall be organized and administered in the manner hereinafter prescribed."
Thereupon Courts are established, Judges and District Attorneys appointed, oaths of allegiance forced down Mexican throats, indictments for high crimes and misdemeanors, trials, and as a crowning evidence of the establishment of this territorial government, Twelve Mexicans are executed.

This, however, may be justified on the score of necessity—but let us quote another part of the "organic law."

"All free male citizens of the Territory of New Mexico, who then are on for three months next preceding the election shall have been, residents of the country or district in which they shall appear to vote shall be entitle to vote for a Delegate to the Congress of the United States, "&c.

This election is fixed for August next, and if it take place as the "organic law" requires, will the Delegate elect take his seat in Congress? Will he, elected from a territory never in our possession, and governed by laws which Congress never dreamed of, be recognized as a Delegate from a territory of the United States, chosen as he must be, by a mongrel crowd of Mexicans, Indians and Half breeds! Well for the Country is it, that the next House of Representatives will be Whig.

To us the whole proceeding in New Mexico seems to like some stupendous farce, but it is in truth a matter of grave import to the nation. If the Constitution be already a dead letter, if the President contain within himself the Legislative as well as the Executive power, if thousands of semi-barbarians are brought into the bosom of the confederacy by a ceremony, no more protracted, that the dash of a pen and the hoisting of a flag, where are we stop? What is illegal? What unconstitutional?—Are the iron days of the one man power to be received in matters as grave and important as these? "I will take the responsibility" seemed bad enough principle, in the removal of the deposits, but when the annexation of an immense territory (of but little value, by the way) and the wholesale naturalization of thousands of people of every hue and color, ignorant of our laws, our institutions and our characteristics, are all explained and reconciled by the same King-like principle, we must drop the scales from our eyes. For, where will it end? Who is to say to fast encroaching and all assuming Executive Power, "thus far shall thou go and no farther? Is the Senate to be a mere passive tool? Are the Representatives of the People, to be stigmatized as 'aiders and comforters an enemy because they dare to question the constitutional right of a President thus to act? Is a venal press to re-echo the cry, and proclaim to the world that they are traitors, and yet pass unrebuked?

In the brilliant successes of our arms in Mexico, we seem to have lost sight of these grave questions, but the day will come, when they must be answered. The next Congress will have much to do, if it but act worthy of the Republic, and obey the high behests of duty, and we are free to say, that the nation will sustain it.

[MUL]

---

LATER FROM MEXICO.

The steamship New Orleans arrived at New Orleans on the 7th instant from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the 1st instant. She touched at Brazos Santiago on the 4th instant. We are indebted to the New Orleans Times and Picayune for slips containing the news by this arrival. The Picayune says:

Gen. Shields is doing well, we are most happy to hear, and was shortly expected at Vera Cruz.

Gen. Scott left Jalapa on the 23d ult., for Puebla, at the head of nearly 6000 troops. —Mr. Kendall’s letters have not yet come to hand. We have however, the following brief note from him:

PUEBLA, MEXICO, May 29, 1847.

The division of Gen. Twiggs entered this city today—all well. There were rumors in the morning that Gen’s. Bustamante and Leon were advancing to attack Gen. Scott with an immense force, but so far we have heard nothing confirming the reports. Almost everyone thinks that the Americans are to have another grand battle, but where no one can divine.

The diligencia does not run between this and the city of Mexico, and so far I found it impossible to lay hands upon any papers.

No one as yet knows what Gen. Scott’s intentions are as regards his future movements, yet small as his force is many think he will advance upon the capital. We shall know in a day or two.

The news from the city of Mexico by this arrival is most important. Our intelligent correspondent from Vera Cruz has furnished us with the annexed extracts from the letters us with the annexed extracts from letters written at Mexico, and from the best sources of information. The resignation of Santa Anna is an important event in the history of the war.

Extract from a letter dated—

CITY OF MEXICO, May 29, 1847.
From here I have nothing worthy of notice to communicate except that Santa Anna yesterday resigned the presidency, but it is not known yet whether Congress will admit of it. He was induced to take that course from the opposition he meets in his views of carrying on the defense of the city, and from same defamatory writings which appeared in the public papers against his past conduct.

It is generally expected that the Americans will be here about the 15th of next month; and considering the state of things in the capital, I may say that they will meet with but slight resistance on the part of this Government.

Though the same channel we have received the following brief extract from another letter of the same date:

Late week Santa Anna commenced fortifying Gaodaloupe, Perion and Mijicatzingo, near the suburbs of the city; but unusual disapprobation was the result, and hence his reason for offering his resignation. It is supposed it will be accepted, and that Herrera will receive the nomination. There are only about 3000 troops in the city.

We have an exciting rumor from Puebla, mentioned in letters from Vera Cruz, that the citizens of Puebla, had risen upon Gen. Worth, and cut off six or seven hundred of his men. The rumor was in every man's mouth at Vera Cruz and much credence giving to it. We are happy to say that our correspondent in Vera Cruz puts little faith in the rumors.

A Vera Cruz letter in the Picayune, dated May 23, says-

A gentleman from the city of Mexico, who was one of the American prisoners, captured by Urrea between Camargo and Monterey, came down with the train, having been liberated by the English Minister, he having claimed British protection. He reports all the American officers that were prisoners on parole.

Maj. R. Hammond Paymaster U. S. Army, died on board the New Orleans at sea on the 2d. ins., on his passage from Vera Cruz.

A Vera Cruz letter in the New Orleans Times, written on the 31st of May, says—

A report by way of Orizaba, tells us that Santa Anna is still in the Presidential chair; that Valencia is Commander-in-Chief of the army, and old Nicolas Bravo Governor of the State of Mexico. Juan Alvarez, whom you may remember as the Sonora robber, and friend of Santa Anna, is said to be rapidly approaching with ten thousand of his Indian retainers, in arms, and is expected to extricate the Yankees, utterly.

The yellow fever, el vomito, as it should be called, is now getting really serious amongst us. Thirteen cases terminated fatally yesterday, and today already I have heard of the death of three individuals whom I personally knew. Two of these are from New Orleans, Mr. Cohen; of the firm of Simousfield & Cohen; and a Mr. Michael, more recently from Tampico. Col. Kearney, the government contractor is now lying in a very dangerous state.

8 P. M.—The British courier is in from Mexico, but seems to know very little of matters is not President, but contradicts none of the other rumors of the past few days, except as far as regards Santa Anna, who, he seems to think, is still the Chief Magistrate.

A postscript to this letter dated June 1st says

Well our reports of Herrera's election prove to have been premature, to say the least of it. Santa Anna is at the capital, in much less discredit than we have been led to believe, and in the full exercise of the functions of his office. Upon his arrival he proposed to resign his seat, but contrive matters so as to have his proposition rejected.

An election will take place on the 13th instant, when it is hoped that Herrera will be chosen; but Santa Anna creatures are too numerous, and his position now too favorable for the control of the required interest, to permit me to indulge in such hope, in any degree confidently.

He expresses an intention to fortify the town, at least with a large ditch and embankment, and to place a force in the city capable of keeping off the Americans. For these purposes he demands four hundred thousand dollars, and has impressed all the horses and mules that can be reached.

A letter from a well informed German merchant of the capital, to his brother in this city says, that Santa Anna has within his control a force of near ten thousand men, besides those on their way under Alvarez, and that he will soon have an army around him capable of annoying, if not of seriously opposing Gen. Scott. Valencia and Bravo are said to have resigned their respective commands. —The Government I to be established at Morelia.

No disturbance whatever has taken place at Puebla; on the contrary the people both of the city and the country seem to be much please with their conquerors, and trade is quite brisk. Communication with the sea coast seems only to require to bring all right again. Generals Scotts and Worth were both in Puebla when the courier passed through that city.

[MUL]
POLITICAL CASUISTRY.

If it be giving aid and comfort to the public enemy, and therefore moral treason, for the people of this country, who are the real masters of its government, to scrutinize and condemn the acts of their own. Executive agents, what is it for the President himself to give to Mexico the moral and physical aid and comfort of a head to her Government and a leader to her armies? As citizens, the Whigs of this country have examined and pronounced opinions against the acts of Executive. In fallibility and Passive Obedience themselves. The Whigs have condemned the Administration of President Polk, and for this they are denounced as traitors; but President Polk has given back Santa to the Mexicans, to conduct their government and to butcher (as he did at Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo) more that a thousand of our people, and for this, according to the dogmas of Executive infallibility, Polk committed neither a stupendous blunder nor an act of rank treason. So then it comes to this, upon the premises of our new teachers in moral and political science. That the nature and quality of an act depends on who commits it whether he be a dispenser of patronage or an independent citizen in private station. "The King can do wrong" –the President is infallible. Passive obedience on the part of the people is an erremissable duty; and all limitation or even scrutiny of Executive powers and acts is treacherous and impious. Examination is allowed to those who may approve the acts of the Executive approval of those acts in patriotism; condemnation is treason! So that the freedom of opinion in this boasted Republic is narrowed down to the privilege of prassing the President, while the correlative right of condemning him is destroyed.

Such is a fair and logical construction of the grounds assumed by the President and his organs in denouncing those who disapproved his acts as “giving aid and comfort to the enemy.” Cinn. Gazzett.

MG47v48n17p2c4, June 24, 1847.

From the National Intelligence.

From the Matamoras Flag of the 7th inst we learn that Col. Doniphan, with a portion of his command, passed down the Rio Grande on the 5th instant. The Flag thus speaks of them:

"The unshorn beards and goat and deer skin clothes of many of them reminded us of descriptions we have read of the inhabitants of some of the countries of the Russian empire. They stopped in town a couple of hours. –Col Doniphan is a stout, rough-featured, good-natured looking sort of a man. He brought along with him Clark’s battery, and ten pieces of cannon captured at Sacramento. The sick, &c., forty of fifty wagons with several hundred mules, were turned over to the quartermaster."

The volunteers are returning from Gen. Taylor with great rapidity. He is left without any of the volunteers who fought under him at Buena Vista. The letter we give below from our special correspondent contains the latest information as the probable movements of Gen. Taylor.

Brig. Gen Hopping has arrived in Matamoros, and occupies Gen. Cushing’s former quarters.

SALTILO, MEXICO, May 21, 1847.

There is no doubt that we shall march upon San Luis at a very early period –as soon as a sufficient number of troops arrive from below –and from San Luis to the city of Mexico. A communication received from Gen. Scott by Gen. Taylor a few days ago, giving a brief account of the battle near Jalapa, directs Gen. T. to move once, or as early as possible from San Luis, where he expected the letter would reach him, to the city of Mexico. So that Gen. Taylor will not probably remain any time at San Luis, unless he receives orders there, but, leaving a garrison for the place, will proceed with the residue of his command to the city of Mexico. The command will probably never retrace its steps this way, as there will be no occasion for it. I have, therefore, a fair prospect of “reveling in the halls of the Montezumas” as well as some other people, and if I live through the campaign and return via Vera Cruz, I shall have seen quite as much of the country as I care about.

Col. DONIPHAN with the residue of his command arrived at camp this morning, and reported to Gen. WOOL. It is thought that the artillery companies under Capt. WEIGHTMAN, attached to this command, will consent to remain during the war, but I hardly think such will be the case. The regiment is under orders to march on Sunday, the 23d, for the Brazos, there to be discharged. The two illinois regiments will march from here on the 30th or 31st instant, and the Arkansas cavalry on the 1st June. The two Indiana regiments, 2d and 3d, will proceed on Monday. The troops then, of the old stock will all be gone, except Ben McCulloch’s company of Texan Rangers.

[MUL]
From the City of Mexico

From the N. O. Picayune of June 14

We have received by Tampico, our files from the capital as late as the 29th of May. This is a week later than the papers received last week by the Oregon.

Santa Anna’s letter of resignation is published in the papers of the 29th ultimo, but we know nothing of the action taken by Congress on the subject.

In the city of Mexico every thing is manifestly in a state of confusion and almost unlicensed anarchy. Gen. Bravo has resigned not only his command of General in chief, but also his commission of General of Division. –Gen. Rincon is said to have done the same thing. More of the causes in our next.

It is true that Gen. Almonte is under arrest, though the causes of his imprisonment are not avowed.

Gen. Ampudia has been directed to await further orders at Cuernavaca. What suspicious thing he has done or contemplated we are not informed.

Gen. Valencia and Gen. Salas were ordered to leave the city of Mexico on the 24th ultimo, for the city of San Luis Potosi, to make command of the army of the North.

The accounts we find in the Mexican papers of the disaffection in Zacatecas confirm those we published a few days since. The representations against Santa Anna and in favor of the Americans –Gen- Scott’s manifesto among the latter. The late document is also given in all the papers of the capital.

Gen. Arista has refused to re-assume his military functions until his conduct should be investigated by a military tribunal. He demands that his trial may take place at once in order that he may take part in the defense of the country.

THE DUEL.

In order to obviate incorrect reports, (says the Richmond Republican) we have taken the liberty to publish the subjoined letter, the afflicted relatives having already had the painful news broken to them:

HEADQUARTERS,
2D. Bat. Va.
Reg’t, China, Mexico, May 21, 1847.
O. P. Baldwin, Esq.

DEAR SIR: At the request of the officers concerned, and in accordance with the dictates of prudence, but having myself no personal knowledge of the affair, I consider it important that you should be informed in advance of a most unfortunate and greatly to be deplored event, which occurred at this post on yesterday.

Same difficulty having taken place between Lieut. Munford, Company G, (Carrington’s) and Lieut. Mahan, of Company C, (Bankhead’s) a hostile meeting took place between them about 5 o’clockp M. with muskets and both firing at the same moment, both, I am fearful are mortally wounded –Munford receiving seven buck shot, and Mahan three. Both yet survive, yet it is "hoping against hopes” that either will live.

The cause, manner and issued of the melancholy meeting (deeply regretted by all the officers here) will be forwarded, under the signatures of the officer who were present and know all about the matter.

This goes by an express, which sets out for Camargo to-night , and there is no time to prepare the statement, which will be sent forward the first opportunity.

Your Friend, R. H. KINNEY.

(Directed on the envelope to O. P. BALDWIN Esq., or Gen. CARRINGTON) [MUL]
Gen. Taylor's Acknowledgment.

Our readers will peruse with interest (says the Richmond Enquirer) Gen. Taylor’s simple and graceful reply to Gov. Smith’s letter, enclosing to him the resolutions of thanks to himself and his brave army in Mexico, adopted by the Last Legislature of Virginia:

HEADQUARTES ARMY OF OCCUPATION,

Camp near Monterey, Mexico, May 10th, 1847.

SIR: Your communication of February 22d, transmitting a copy of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of Virginia on the ninth of that month, was delivered to me by Col. Hamtramck.

It is with deep sensibility that I received this evidence of an approbation from a State to which I am attached by many ties, and I beg leave to return to the General Assembly, for myself and in behalf of the troops of my command, our heartfelt thanks.

Allow me, Sir, to express to you, personally, my acknowledgements for the flattering terms in which you have communicated the resolutions of the General Assembly.

I have the honor to be,

Sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR.

Hon. WILLIAM SMITH, Governor of Virginia, Richmond, Va.

From General Taylor's Army.

We learn from Capt. Wilson, of the 1st regiment Indiana volunteers, who comes direct from Gen. Taylor’s camp, that all the troops are in good health. Gen. Taylor’s force consists of five regiment of volunteers, viz: the 2d Mississippi, 1st Massachusetts, the Carolina and Virginia regiments of infantry Texas cavalry, the 10th and 16th regiments of infantry, a detachment of the 2d and 3d regiments of dragoons, with Bragg’s, Washington’s and O’bien’s batteries. The health of the 2d regiment Mississippi volunteers had greatly improved. There had been no recent cases of smallpox reported. –N. O. National.

The Washington correspondent of New York Herald understands that if the business of the people will allow, the President proposes taking up the line of march to the Northward early this week. The same correspondent adds:

As Mr. Webster’s journey to the Southward appears to have softened his Northern political notions very perceptibly, - we admonish Co. Polk in this proposed Northern expedition no to be beguiled into any high tariff notions by the enterprise, and go-ahead activeness of the universal Yankee notion, because, with or without a sub treasury, or a bank, or land distribution, or Texas, or Oregon, or Mexico, and war or no war, these people of Yankee Doodledom are bent on going ahead, and “nothing on earth” can begin to stop’em. Do as we please they can take care of themselves.

Indiana Volunteers!

The new regiment of volunteers from this State is now being mustered into service at old Fort Clark, opposite Louisville, Kentucky, and will be as route for the army in Mexico in a few days. The state Sentinel says “several other companies are partially made-up each enough, probably, to constitute another regiment, should they be wanted.” – Union.

[MUL]
FROM SANTA FE.

Dates from Santa Fe have been received as late as May 13th. Every thing was quiet there. In the Indian country there was an unusual demonstration of hostility, and it was apprehended that expeditions would be more than ever in danger. At Poinil the Mexicans and Indians combined, has succeeded in driving off two-thirds of the cattle and horses belonging to the U. States. Brent, St. Vrains & Co's and Thrapp's wagons were attacked at Walnut Creek, on the 28th May, by the Arappahoes Indians, it is believe, who killed Mr. Tharp, and took off 60 mules and horses, and the same number of cattle. Five Mexicans came into Taos about the 15th May, and reported that an express was on the way from Gen. Kearney, and that they left it at Green River.
Index

MG47v48n19p2c2, July 8, 1847. Rupture Between Gen. Scott and the State Department.

MG47v48n19p2c2, July 8, 1847. A National Sham Battle.

MG47v48n19p2c3, July 8, 1847. FOR THE GAZZETTE - WHO IS JAMES K. POLK?

MG47v48n19p2c6, July 8, 1847. TRIBUTES OF RESPECT

MG47v48n19p2c7, July 8, 1847. Bathing in Mexico.

MG47v48n20p1c6, July 15, 1847. FROM THE STAUNTON SPECTATOR. A LETTER FROM CAPT. K. HARPER.

MG47v48n20p2c2, July 15, 1847. Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot

MG47v48n20p2c3, July 15, 1847. GENERAL SCOTT.

MG47v48n20p2c5, July 15, 1847. LATER FROM MEXICO

MG47v48n21p2c1, July 22, 1847. LATER NEWS FROM SANTA FE. An extra from the office of the St. Louis Republican of the 6th inst. Contains the following intelligence from Santa Fe

MG47v48n21p2c1, July 22, 1847. FROM VERA CRUZ AND MEXICO. Attack on Tabasco – The Guerrillas –Santa Anna raising Forced Loans—Preparations for Defending the City of Mexico, &c, &c

MG47v48n21p2c2, July 22, 1847. Correspondence of the North Amer. and Gaz. HUNTINGTON, July 5, 1847.

MG47v48n21p2c3, July 22, 1847. MARYLAND BATTALION

MG47v48n21p2c1, July 22, 1847. Anecdote of Gen. Taylor.

MG47v48n21p2c1, July 22, 1847. The American Marines at Havana.

MG47v48n22p2c3, July 29, 1847. The Gazette GEN’L. TAYLOR AND THE WHIGS.

MG47v48n22p2c4, July 29, 1847. FOR THE GAZETTE.

MG47v48n22p2c6, July 29, 1847. From the N.O. Picayune of July 15. LATE FROM VERACRUZ

MG47v48n22p2c7, July 29, 1847. MOST IMPORTANT. Again a Rejection of the Olive Branch. MEXICO DECLINES TREATING MG47v48n22p2c7, July 29, 1847. STILL LATER NEWS FROM MEXICO.

MG47v48n22p2c3, July 29, 1847. FROM THE N. Orleans Delta, July 16. LATE FROM BUENA VISTA, SALITILLO,
A SKIRMISH WITH THE INDIANS. Correspondence of the Cour. and Enquirer.

Gen. Taylor and the Whigs.

VOLUNTEER FARE.

AUGUST 1847

Important From Mexico: Rumor of Peace Commissioners appointed by Mexico.

Important from Vera Cruz: Capt. Pierce's March resisted.

Printers in Mexico: Letter from a Volunteer in Capt. Carrington's Company.

The Fourth in the Army: The Correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, American Independence celebrated in Mexico.

Saltillo, Mexico: A letter from a soldier.

Poem: Poem of Virginia Troops in Mexico.

Saltillo, Mexico: A letter from a soldier.

The Tariff and The Prices: As the venerable editor of the official organ displayed so much ingenuity in the effort to cast upon the Whigs the whole blame of the prolongation of the Mexican War.

Important Rumor: General Scott's entrance into Mexico City.

Good Pun: Pun told at a dinner in Vera Cruz, Mexico.

From the Army: General Urrea in the field with four thousand men.

Still Later: Account from General Scott.

Manifest Destiny: Editorial on Manifest Destiny.

Col. McPherson of Page: Accounts of the Oregon situation and the Mexican War.

Letter from Mexico: A soldier's account from Mexico.

Later from Vera Cruz and Tampico: The steamship New Orleans arrived yesterday afternoon having sailed from Vera Cruz.

The Mississippi at this port from Vera Cruz, Mexico.
SEPTEMBER 1847

MG47v48n27p2c1, September 2, 1847, IMPORTANT NEWS
Information about Vera Cruz

MG47v48n27p2c1, September 2, 1847, IMPORTANT FROM THE YUCATAN
Insurrection of the Indians on the Yucatan peninsula

MG47v48n27p2c2, September 2, 1847, MORE NEWS FROM VERA CRUZ
Information about Vera Cruz from Patria

MG47v48n27p2c2, September 2, 1847, FROM THE RIO GRANDE
Information from the Rio Grande also including a poem

MG47v48n27p2c3, September 2, 1847, GEN SAM HOUSTON
About the annexation of Texas

MG47v48n27p2c3, September 2, 1847, ANOTHER CALL FOR TROOPS
Information that the War Department has called for the addition of five new regiments

MG47v48n27p2c3, September 2, 1847, MR. BENTON IN A NEW POSITION
Col Benton calling to get his son-in-law court-martialed in California

MG47v48n28p1c7, September 9, 1847, A LETTER FROM MEXICO
A letter from Saltillo, Mexico with knowledge of troop movements

MG47v48n28p2c4, September 9, 1847, COL. BENTON
More information about Col. Benton and the court-martial

MG47v48n28p2c5, September 9, 1847, LANDING OF PAREDES
The passage of Paredes through Vera Cruz

MG47v48n28p2c5, September 9, 1847, DIVERSION OF TROOPS
Some troops will move from Gen. Taylor to Vera Cruz

MG47v48n28p2c6, September 9, 1847, GEN. TAYLOR AND THE PRESIDENCY
About Gen. Taylor and his push for presidency of the United States

MG47v48n28p2c7, September 9, 1847, WHO IS SANTA ANNA
A brief biography of Santa Anna

MG47v48n29p2c1, September 16, 1847, GLORIOUS VICTORY: TWO MORE BATTLES
About the battles of Churubusco and Contreras from the New Orleans Picayune

MG47v48n29p2c2, September 16, 1847, LATER FROM BRAZOS
From the New Orleans Times, information that Gen Taylor's forces are moving

MG47v48n29p2c2, September 16, 1847, Untitled
About a letter from Mr. James Evans, a VA Volunteer

MG47v48n29p2c3, September 16, 1847, PROSPECT OF PEACE
About peace in Mexico after capture of Mexico City

MG47v48n29p2c5, September 16, 1847, TWO MORE LETTERS FROM CAPT. HARPER
Two letters from Capt. Harper stationed in Saltillo, Mexico
MG47v48n29p2c5, September 16, 1847, BRILLIANT VICTORIES- FROM GENERAL SCOTT'S ARMY
Information regarding Churubusco and Contreras as well as General Scott being wounded

MG47v48n30p2c1, September 23, 1847, THE ARMISTICE
Terms of the Armistice between the United States and Mexico

MG47v48n31p2c3, September 30, 1847, GENERAL PILLOW
About General Pillow and events in Mexico

MG47v48n31p2c4, September 30, 1847, FROM THE BRAZOS
Information about Gen. Taylor's troops movements

MG47v48n31p2c4, September 30, 1847, Untitled
About Whigs and gaining Mexican territory

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p1c7, Old Zach a "Double F" words: 44
Refers to Taylor is from a "fighting family"

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c2, War News, words: 303
References the broken armistice, war deaths, and the blood and tears shed in war

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c2, Untitled, words 303
Plan of Union between Great Britain and the U.S. by Alliance of Perpetual Friendship in England, supporting a confederaton for peace, freedom, commerce and Christianity

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c2, Gen. Scott's speech to the Army, words: 247
Scott's reception in Mexico City

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c3, Important from Mexico, words: 3,306
Armistice terminated, battle of Molino del Rey, correspondence between Scott and Santa Anna, initial probes at Chapultepec, fighting at La Piedad and San Antonio Abad, Americans in possession of Mexico City, rumors of dead and wounded

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c7, Latest News, words: 437
Scott in full possession of Mexico City

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c7, Call for Volunteers, words: 261
Fifteen companies responded to call for five companies

October 7, 1847 MG47v48n32p2c7, Untitled, words: 96
Santa Anna blames others for defeats

October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p3c1, Letter From Gen. Taylor, words: 471
Taylor responding to Raleigh's call to nominate him for president

October 7, 1847 MG47v48n32p3c2, Gen. Pillow, Again, words: 426
Questions about the "Leonidis" letter hoax, debate between the New Orleans newspapers, Picayune and Delta, over legitimacy of letter

October 7, 1847 MG47v48n32p3c2, Gen. Taylor's Position, words: 179
Need for a speedy peace

October 7, 1847 MG47v48n32p3c2, General Paredes, words: 202
Rumors about Paredes actions

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p1c6, Letters of John P. Kennedy, words: 4,971
Letters, written several years earlier, from Maryland politician nos. 2, 3, and 4 addressing issues about the war, the boundary, and the annexation of Texas

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c3, Our Armies in Mexico

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p3p2c3, Gen. Taylor's Opinion, words: 88
Maryland press stated that Taylor recommended hostile demonstrations on Rio Grande to start the war

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c5, Interesting from the Army, words: 693
October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c6, Letter from Gen. Taylor, words: 669
Taylor letter to Dr. F. S. Bronson about political policies and candidacy.

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c6, From Gen. Taylor’s Army, words: 190
Troop movements and withdrawals

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c6, Capital Hit, words: 131
Comment on Richmond Republican criticism of Polk’s party’s political stance on the boundary issue

October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c7, The Virginia Regiment, words: 328
Letter from an officer under Taylor, comments that the Virginia Regiment is considered the best in Mexico

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c1, Letter from John P. Kennedy, words: 3,228
Letter no. 5, on the joint resolutions for annexation, occupation of disputed territory, Slidell’s mission, unjustness of war, politics of Polk declaring a state of war existed, etc.

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c3, Untitled, words: 518
Extract from private letter on slavery in the new territories and the Wilmot Proviso

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c4, Mr. Faulkner and the War, words: 634
Request to republish 1846 speech on the war refused

October 21, 1847 MG47v48n34p2c5, The Annexation of Mexico, words: 593
Editorial opinions about the notion of annexing the whole of Mexico, reaction to Baltimore Sun article, concludes “Manifest Destiny is the God that rules the hour, and we have no means of divining what new schemes of folly and madness are yet to be revealed.”

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c6, Untitled, Poem, words: 191
Poem by Mrs. Lydia Jane Preston, who lost sons in the war, and editorial comment

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c6, Mutilation of Document, words: 330
Publication of a previously suppressed paragraph from an official letter from Lally to Col. Wilson about repeated drunkenness, robberies, and vandalism by American troops

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c6, Arrest of Colonel Gilpin, words: 177
Dispute over Gilpin's mission, stationary protection of wagon trains or pursuing Indians

October 21, 1847 MG47v48n34p2c2, Mexican Whigism, words: 218
Locofoco name calling, Whigs in Virginia regiments

October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p3c2, Untitled, words: 194
Comments on Tibbatt’s law and order proclamation for Monterey, from Frankfort (KY) Commonwealth

October 21, 1847 MG47v48n34p3c3, Fighting Parson, words: 134
Pre-battle prayer by Methodist minister who commanded Missouri company at Buena Vista

October 28, 1847, MG47v48n35p2c1, From the Seat of the War, words: 611
Reports on weather, Kendall's correspondence, battles, Scott's General Order 286 urging vigilance and discipline

October 28, 1847, MG47v48n35p2c4, Affairs in Vera Cruz and on the Road, words: 692
Rea and Santa Anna in Puebla, Lane and Lally coming to aid of Childs, guerrillas no longer at National Bridge, trains getting through, Alvarez organizing against U. S. forces

October 28, 1847, MG47v48n35p2c5, Untitled, Patterson Moving, words: 90
Patterson headed for interior with 2000 men, Scott courier killed

October 28, 1847, MG47v48n35p2c5, What we asked and what Mexico was willing to give words: 236
Comment on Mexican offer of territory and U.S. insistence on more

October 28, 1847 MG47v48n35p2c5, Let Justice be Done, words: 141
Concludes that 64 American, 34 Irish, and 16 Germans among those executed for desertion; critical of anti-immigrant rhetoric
Extract of comments in NY newspaper against dragooning the member of the President's to support annexation of all of Mexico

Critical of Polk's permitting Santa Anna to return to Mexico; extract of Santa Anna's encouragement to Mexicans to fight the invaders; pessimistic about prospects for peace

Praise for Gen. Taylor

Old account of Gen. Taylor, written in 1820 about War of 1812, then Major Taylor

Army news from Vera Cruz, New Orleans Picayune

The Tenth Legion...or lack thereof

Critical of Polk and war prosecution, Baltimore Patriot and Journal of Commerce

Correspondence from Buena Vista, Staunton Spectator

Critical of Polk, vignettes,

Supportive of Mr. Olaquibel, Governor of Mexico, National Intelligencer

Correspondence from Puebla and Mexico: disease, guerrillas, etc., New Orleans Picayune

Clay's speech at Lexington, KY

Army news, death of Capt. Walker, peace negotiations, New Orleans Delta and Picayune

Mexican army mutiny at Tehuacan, Santa Anna's movements, New Orleans Times

A speech, political opinion on conclusion of the War, Baltimore Patriot

Commodore Stockton demands inquiries in California, St. Louis Republican

General Scott's dispatches from Mexico City, Free Press, Patriot

Colonel Fremont's trial, Richmond Whig

War Expenses

The cost of the War, human cost, not money, Win. Rep.

Critical of the proposed conquest of Mexico, Missouri Republican

Correspondence from Vera Cruz, New Orleans Sun

General Taylor leaving Monterey, fever at Matamoras

Colonel. Gaines coming home?, Wilmot Proviso, Great Britain will not interfere in Mexico

Vera Cruz updates, location of Santa Anna, Baltimore American

Supportive of Clay's speech at Lexington, Louisville Journal

Cost of the War, Money, Alexandria Gazette

Latest from Mexico, miscellaneous, Baltimore American, from New Orleans papers, Governor William Smith's annual address

Critical of Polk's annual “manifesto,” editorial,
July

MG19p1c6, July 8, 1847

THE GUERRILLA CHIEF JARAUTA

[...]

MG47v48n19p2c2, July 8, 1847

Rupture Between Gen. Scott and the State Department.

The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, prepares us, in the following letter, for a rupture between Gen Scott and the State Department:

WASHINGTON, July 1st, 1847

I have learned today, from a high and entirely authentic source, which I am not at liberty to mention, that Gen Scott, as the commanding officer of the army, and charged of peace, has determined not to allow any interference with his authority, from Mr. Trist or any other person, whatever may be their instructions from the State Department. Acting as commander-in-chief, he has responsibilities which he could not sustain under any divided authority. In time of actual war and invasion, and in the presence of a foe, a commander must necessarily use his own discretion in all intercourse with the enemy, for all regular diplomatic intercourse is necessarily at an end. The commander becomes, ex necessitate, the only diplomatist and negotiator. It is for him to hold such intercourse with the enemy’s government as the usages of war, in civilized countries allow. To control his action by any civil agent, would be to deprive him of the authority belonging exclusively to his station, and to retard and embarrass all his operations.

It may be considered as certain that Gen. Scott will sustain all the right belonging to his station and peculiar situation.

From another source, particularly partial to Mr. Trist, I have information also direct and authentic, corroborative of the above statement.

While I state these as undeniable and authentic facts, I must add that I do not see in them any thing detrimental to much talked of negotiations for peace with Mexico. On the contrary, it is evident that Gen. Scott, if left alone, can exert in Mexico an influence potent for peace, while his prudence, capacity, and fortune render him irresistible in war.

[MUL]

MG47v48n19p2c2, July 8, 1847

A National Sham Battle.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, writing from Vera Cruz, communicates the following amusing and warlike intelligence:

“A singular piece of amusement was started out side one of the city gates yesterday morning by a party of about one hundred and twenty Mexican boys, from twelve to eighteen years old. They divided themselves into two equal parties – one to represent the American and other the Mexican army, and at it they went, with their captains in advance, one with the American and the other with the Mexican flag. Stones, bricks, dirt and sticks flew for about fifteen minutes in every direction, when both parties drew off, sent in commissioners, and arranged the matter, all making friends with the exception of the American captain, who had received a severe wound with a brickbat, and begged to be permitted to try adversary single-handed, saying be could lick the d-----d Mexicans in two minutes!”
WHO IS JAMES K. POLK:

This was the question propounded by the Whigs to the Loco Focos in 1844, after the nomination as a Candidate for the Presidency of the individual, whose name stands at the head of this article, and which was as exultingly answered by the latter after the election as being the “President of the United States!”

Now this reply of the Loco Focos had some truth in it, and was very well made at the time; but the writer of this still entertained doubts whether or not they really had found out who James K. Polk was. He was still impressed with the belief that James K. Polk was something else than merely “President of the United states”, but hoped that he might be disappointed in his anticipations. –But, alas! The day has arrived when he really (not to his surprise, but as he feared,) witnesses even more that he expected from the elevation to the Presidency of James K. Polk. And he does not suppose, but feels confident in the assertion, that the majority of the Loco Foco party have now found out what they thought they had along since!

They thought that they had found out who James K. Polk was, when he was elected “President of the United States;” but they now see he is even more than that. They have found out that he is the weakest-minded and most incompetent man who was ever attained the Presidency or this enlightened nation. And they have furthermore found out, among a thousand other things, that he has involved his Country in a most disgraceful, unholy and unjust war, which will not only result in burdening it with an immense debt, but will cost us the loss of many valuable lives.

The aged father and mother have found out who James K. Polk is, by being bowed down with grief through his instrumentality, for the loss of a dear son, whose life has been sacrificed on the battles-fields of Mexico. The son and daughter, and brother and sister, have found out who James K. Polk is, by being bathed in tears and caused to mourn, through his official acts, for the loss of a kind and affectionate father, or loving brother, whose life has been uselessly sacrificed fighting for his Country on the battle-fields of Mexico.

Yea, the WHOLE PEOPLE have found out who James K. Polk is, by being made to witness through his mal administration, an immense sacrifice of blood and treasure in an uncalled-for war, in a foreign land, waged against a weak and distracted people!

And who knows what is yet to be the end of the elevation to the Presidency of the United States of a man who was almost wholly unknown to the People? Who can divine the best or the worst? Before James K. Polk was elected President, it would have been considered madness and folly, by many of those very persons who have suffers the loss of many near and dear friends and relations, for any one to have predicted this result.

I said it would have been considered madness and folly, for any one to have predicted this result before the election of James K. Polk to the Presidency. –I should have said it was considered madness and folly, &c., as this result was predicted in the event of James K. Polk’s election, if he carried out the principles and rules laid down for him in the Baltimore Nominating Convention.

What did HENRY CLAY tell us before the election of James K. Polk? In reference to the Texas question –the rallying cry of the immaculate Democracy he said “war will be the consequence of the annexation of Texas at this time in the manner proposed.” And how does this prophecy agree with what Thomas H. Benton said “this war is the consequence of the annexation of Texas, at the time and in the manner in which it was done.”

It is melancholy, indeed, to contemplate the eventual finding out of such a man as James K. Polk, if thus far is only to be considered an introduction; but it is greatly to be feared, that before his “race is run”, he will be found out to the sorrow of many of those who have “ears to hear and would not hear”, and “eyes to see and would not see”.

BERKELEY.

[ MUL ]

TRIBUTES OF RESPECT

We have been polite favored with copies of the proceeding of the officers of the 2nd Battalion of Virginia Volunteers, and of the men of Capt. Carrington's Company, in reference to the untimely death of their gallant fellow soldier, Lieut. Murford. The sympathy so generally felt by his companions in arms, has been most feelingly and appropriately expressed – and the communication of it in such kind terms, must touch deeply the hearts of relatives and friends. – Rich. Rep.

At a meeting of the officers of the 2nd Battalion of the Virginia Regiment, stationed at China, in the Province of New Leon, Mexico, convened on the 23d May, 1847, for the purpose of expressing their deep regret for the death of their brother officer and companion in arms, Lieut. CARLTON R. MUNFORD, -

Va. Reg't, Sect'y.

At a meeting of the members of Company G, second Battalion and first Regiment of Virginia Volunteers, held at their quarters in China, Mexico, on the 23d May, 1847:

Sergeant Lewellen having, in a few feeling and pertinent remarks, explained the object of the meeting, on his motion, private Samuel S. Pleasants was called to the Chari, and Andrew J. Didlake appointed Secretary. The Chairmen then, on motion, appointed a Comitee of three, composed of Sergeant Lewellen, and privates Ward and Hudnall, to prepare suitable resolutions, expressive of the sense of the Company, who having retired in a short time returned and submitted the following preamble and resolutions on which, motion, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, in an unfortunate affair of honor, which took place at China, on the 20th inst., and which resulted in the death of Lieut CARLTON R. MUNFORD, we, the members of Company G, have assembled this morning to give some expression to our deep and heartfelt sorrow: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Lieutenant MUNFORD we have each lost a sincere friend, and whose bravely, chivalry and firmness, we had the most implicit confidence, and to have followed whom to the field of battle and glory, would have been our greatest pride.

Resolved, That to have known Lieutenant was to love him, for in him is personified all that was generous, liberal, honorable and high-toned, which ennobles human character.

Resolved, That his memory will ever live fresh in our hearts, and while we believe that the grief, distress, anguish and loss to his family and numerous friends at home, will be inexpressibly and inconceivably great, we beg to mingle our feelings with theirs, and to offer our most sincere sympathies and condolence.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to the family to the deceased.

Resolved, also, That the proceedings of this meeting be forwarded to the Editors ot the Richmond Whig, Republican and Enquirer, with the request that they publish the same, and that they be copied by the papers trough out the State.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

SAM'L PLEASEANTS, Ch'n.
AND J. DIDLAKE, Sec'y.

Bathing in Mexico.

The following is an extract from a letter from the camp of the Massachusetts volunteers, published in the Boston Transcript:

"You would be charmed with our encampment on account of the bathing, if nothing else. All the Matamoras females, high and low, bathe at least one each day - generally in the evening, soon after sunset, and as the current is too strong for their delicate limbs to contend against in the river, they resort to the lakes in the vicinity of the city -our lake being specially favored by them. Some of them are splendid swimmers, and I have seen one of them out swim at least eight of our officers.

"The Mexican men and women bathe promiscuously and it is laughable to see women take a lovesick swain and duck him till he is nearly to dead. I should consider that a perfect cure for the most obstinate case imaginable."

One scarcely wonders that the writer of the letter was "charmed with their encampment." It must have been a rare thing to see eight officers of the Massachusetts volunteers swimming after one Mexican woman. We wonder if it was in one of these swimming matches that Col. Cushing broke his leg? –N. O. Picayune.

FROM THE STAUNTON SPECTATOR.

A LETTER FROM CAPT. K. HARPER.

BUENA VISTA, (Mexico,) June 2, 1847

Dear: I have already apprised you that the Augusta Volunteers left China on the 23d, in advance of the Battalion stationed at that place, to carry through dispatches to Gen. Taylor, and that we arrived at Monterey the 20th. On the same day, I received orders to proceed to this place with three other companies –Capt. Fairfax's (Va.,) and two North Carolina companies, Capt. Henry's and Capt. Blalock's. We took up the line of march about an hour before sun-set, and arrived here at 1 o'clock yesterday. As you may well suppose, we are all pretty well jaded, particularly the Augusta boys, who have a continuous march of ten days. The distance from China to this place is but about 145 miles, though the marches each day are of necessity very regular, on account of water. One day we had to go twenty-four miles, twenty of which were very great, but I do not see that any of them have sustained material injury. Most of the miserable catch-penny tin canteens which were issued to us have given out –may of them indeed leaked from the first, and I tried at Monterey to get others, but none were to be had, nor could I even get kegs to haul water.

The five other companies of the 2nd Battalion which we left at China, I presume are by this time on their way to join us. The 1st Battalion, now garrisoning Monterey, will also be up in a few days, being about to be relieved by the Massachusetts regiment. There are not many troops here at present, and there is considered to be a necessity for them.

The scenery about this place is quite picturesque, though I do not exactly recognize its claims on the name it bears, unless it be on account of the more extended view which it affords of the mountains. More sublime and elevated peaks are met with at many points along the road. The mountains in this part of Mexico are of a singular character. They seem to be of solid rock, rising hundreds of feet in sharp cones, without a particle of vegetation, unless it may be a scraggy bush, or patch of moss. There is nothing like timber on any of them that I have seen, and at this place, although there is a considerable stretch of plain intersected with a deep ravines, between the mountains, we have to send some fifteen miles for fuel for cooking purposes. The water though is excellent, the best I have met in Mexico, and the temperature moderate. There is generally a fine breeze in the day, and at night, it is cool enough sometimes for overcoats and blankets. The probability is that we shall remain here for some time, and the Mexicans have opened quite a market at our camp. We had green peas, salad, onions, apricots, and other things mornings. I ate green corn the day I was in Monterey.

I have not yet gone over the battle field. It lies just before our camp, and looking over it, it seems pretty much like a plain, though it is cut up with deep hollows, and somewhat undulated by spurs of the mountain running into it. Whether the Mexicans will try the fortune of war on the same theatre again, remains to be seen. It is said that communications have been made from Saltillo to them of the great reduction which has taken place in our force, but I hope by the time they are ready we shall be so also.

The country which we traversed on the march from China to this place is pretty much of the same character that I have heretofore described –dry, sterile, and uninviting, with here and there a bottom of a few thousand acres that are rendered fertile by irrigation. –Sereno's hacienda, 15 miles east of Cadareita, is a splendid place. I dined with that gentleman, and he had in store the best of wines and liquors. The most inviting sport, however, that I have met in Mexico, is the town of Cadareita. It is truly a beautiful place, and every thing about it is indicative of place, and every thing about it is indicative of cleanliness and taste. The houses are neat and comfortable, and the gardens filled with the fruits of the country –oranges, lemons, limes, figs, pomgranates, &c. I could but wonder, however, at the spirit of a people who could suffer a single company to march through their great plazas as enemies, in all the pomp and circumstance of war. We encamped just outside the town, on the bank of the river, and made a requisition on the Alcado for wood, which he promptly complied with. I afterwards called upon him, and found him to be very affable and gentlemanly in his manners. I enquired of him the population of the town, and he told me, that with in the district over which he presided, there were ten thousand inhabitants.

In the march from Monterey to this place there were few objects worthy of special note. Our first encampment was at the Mills, six miles this side. I was not in them, having arrived in the night, and leaving at day-light. I saw enough externally, however, to impress me very favorably with the works. The race or aqueduct is a splendid piece of masonry faced inside with a clear hard cement, as hard seemingly as the rock itself. There is also a beautiful basin or reservoir just beside the mill, about 120 feet square and three or four feet deep, constructed of stone, and plastered with the same cement at the sides and bottom. –what special use it was intended to serve, I did not learn. There was no water it at the time.

The Rinconada Pass was our nest encampment. Here, or rather just below the pass, there are several houses, mostly unoccupied, and the remains of a splendid garden filled with fruits, and flowers. There I saw apples, peaches, some of the largest fit trees I had met with loaded with fruit, and pomegranates, &c. Unfortunately none of the fruits were ripe, however, the flowers were the bunch and velvet roses, white lilies, and several other kinds that I was not acquainted with, though, none of them very handsome. The garden was irrigated throughout. As I walked along its broad avenues, I could not but think of the gay and happy scenes no doubt often enjoyed by the youthful within its pleasant, bowers, and perhaps even now anxiously longed for, but to which war had put at least a temporary stop. It is probably the summer retreat of some wealthy family, I grieved to see here and there, the smooth trunk of some beautiful fig tree made the mark of some heedless riflemen.

The Rinconada Pass is one of the strongest and most easily defended against approach from the East that could well be conceived, and Gen. Taylor showed his wisdom in securing it to himself in the capitulation of Monterey. Against approach from this side, it would be of little value. Buena Vista is much better in that respect. This, I presume, is the reason why Gen. Taylor made his stand here, instead of falling back upon the pass, as many, who did not know the nature of the ground, thought he ought to have done.

The health of the company has suffered very little since I last wrote. We lost one in a bad way at China, (Preston Brown) though he was somewhat on the mend. We had to leave four at Monterey, two, (Merritt and Taylor,) with some legs, and two others with injuries (Clarke and Noon). We have three or four sick with us, but in this healthy location they must soon get well.

We are now at the very out post (we may say) of operations in this quarter, and the chance of communicating with us, I fear, will become more rare than they have been. –Whether we are to push farther or not, we are wholly unadvised. I shall try, however, always to have a letter ready, so that I may avail myself of any opportunity to forward it.

MG47v48n 20p 2c 2, July 15, 1847

Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot

WASHINGTON, July 8, 1847.

After the mail from the South had arrived here this evening, a rumor spread through the city that Gen. Scott had entered the capital of Mexico, after a dreadful battle, in which he lost eleven hundred men.

I took some pains to trace the rumor out but could find nothing connected with it bearing the impress of authenticity. In a few hours it was generally believed to be without foundation.

A member of the Administration informed me that the Government Express, which is run now at the same time and over the same ground that the Pony Express is, (so he informed me,) came through, but of course he did not give me the purport of the dispatches received.

That Gen. Scott has had or will have a severe battle, almost everyone now believes. This battle would have been avoided, no doubt, if the imbecile Administration had properly and suitable reinforces Generals Taylor and Scott.

Among other things they have aided in exasperation SANTA ANNA, no doubt the merited abuse of him by Gen. Scott, in his Proclamation, has contributed not a little. He has Scott now in the densest of the Mexican population. He knows, from the intercepted dispatches, that there will be no immediate junction of Taylor’s forces with those of Scott. He knows that Scott has less than 10,000 troops, and that he can raise 50,000 to oppose them. And he further knows that now or never is the time to strike, if he would redeem himself in the estimation of his countrymen, who seen just on the eve of comprehending the critical condition they and their nation are in.

Knowing these things, Santa Anna no doubt has struck or will strike a heavy blow at Gen. Scott. It is his last chance, and desperation is upon him! He may kill a long list of our brave men –but ultimately the treacherous tyrant must go down!

With greater anxiety than ever, everybody will now look for the nest news from the seat of war.

Mr. Polk and Mr. Buchanan, who started on their popularity hunting tour, in the belief, as I learn, that in a few days the treaty of peace they sent by Mr. Trist to Mexico would come back here properly signed and sealed, have got back to their stations and find no peace!

Tired, to surfeiting, of the war and its horrors and tremendous expenses, they would now, for a peace, most willingly take the back track, to a greater extent than they did on the Oregon question –but their pet and friend, Santa Anna, whom Mr. Polk, who might have honorably avoided the war, no doubt, but obstinately would not, can foresee!

The vacancy created in the Indian Agency by the death of Major William Armstrong, will likely enough be filled by the appointment of their a son of the late Major Armstrong, who is a young lawyer at St. Louis, of fine talents and character and of estimable worth, thought he is but twenty-three years of age, and therefore may be deemed to be too young –or of Major Arnold Harris, the son-in-law of General Robert Armstrong, who has been in the Indian country a great deal with the late Major Armstrong, and who, perhaps, is better acquainted and more familiar with his system of Indian management than any man living.

Major Harris is now in his city, but I understand is willing and anxious to waive any claims he may posses, in favor of young Mr. Armstrong, to whom he thinks the station ought to be given, out of respect to his father, William, and his uncle Francis W. Armstrong, both of whom died Indian Agents, devoting their best energies to the welfare of our brethren, the aborigines!

If the appointment should no: be given to young Armstrong, on account of his youth, then Major Harris will probably receive it. He is eminently worthy of the high station, and would fill it with honor to the Government, satisfaction to the Indians who know him and like him, and credit to himself.

POTOMAC.

MG47v48n20p2c3, July 15, 1847.

GENERAL SCOTT.

A change, sudden as it is amusing, has come over the spirit of the dreams of our locofoco contemporaries, in regard to this illustrious individual. He, who but a few short months ago, was the devoted subject of the unmitigated censure and ridicule of these consistent gentlemen, (many of whom even went so far to laud the military sagacity evinced by the President in withholding from him the command of the army,) is now in their estimation "the great captain of the age;" his proclamation, though manifestly put forth in pursuance of the instructions of the administration is quoted as good democratic authority; and to one wholly ignorant of the practices of "the party", the chances in favor of "Soup Scott" for a nomination for the Presidency at the hands of a Baltimore Convention would seem to be any thing but inconsiderable. Could we, for a single moment, be induced to believe that there was an iota of sincerity in their loud professions of repentance, or that the recent displays of admiration and gratitude we have witnessed were prompted by aught else than a desire to use the "hero of Cerro Gordo" as a foil to the increasing popularity of the hero of Buena Vista, we could forgive the past, and have more faith in promises of good behavior for the future. Fortunately for the country however, the real friends of Gen. Scott are not such gudgeons as to be caught by these professions, even were it within the bounds of probability, that he could for a moment so far forget the principles to which he has ever exhibited the most devoted attachment, as to allow himself to be made the catspaw of Locofocoisin. "Surely the net is spread in vain in the sight of any bird," and it would be hard to convince Gen. Scott or his immediate friends, that his victories in Mexico have wrongly any decided change in the sentiments and feelings towards him, of the men who were so very oblivious of the gallantry and the patriotism which bared his breast to the murderous fire of the British columns at Niagara, as to make him the subject of their disgusting ribaldry and vituperation.

MG47v48n 20p 2c 5, July 15, 1847

LATER FROM MEXICO

FROM VERA CRUZ.

The National of the 5th says:

The barque Patheon, Capt. Williston, arrived here yesterday from Vera Cruz, whence she sailed on the morning of the 26th ult.

Capt. W. reports the steamship Galveston, Capt. Windle, as going into port as the Patheon was coming out. On the 27th ult. 150 miles to the N.E. of Vera Cruz, say the steamship Galveston, hence for that port.

The same paper has the following paragraph:

IMPORTANT, IF TRUE. –Just as our paper was going to press, we were informed by a gentleman in whom we have every confidence that a report from the city of Mexico, last night, that a dysentery of a malignant character had broken out among our troops at Puebla, and that it is believed the Mexican vendors of milk, pulque, liquors, etc., poisoned those articles with a certain poisonous vegetable, which grows in the neighborhood.

We believed the rumor entitle to credit, and hope Gen. Scott will hear of it in time to prevent an extension of the diabolical plot.

[MUL]
LATER NEWS FROM SANTA FE.

An extra from the office of the St. Louis Republican of the 6th inst. Contains the following intelligence from Santa Fe:

Another Battle with Mexicans and Indians – Two American’s killed and three wounded. – Loss of Government Cattle Arrival of Col. Russell from California.

We conversed this morning with Mr. Murphy, as intelligent gentleman, just from Santa Fe. He left on the 29th of May, and furnishes us with details of very interesting occurrences in New Mexico.

On the 27th of May an engagement took place at the Red River canon, 150 miles south east of Santa Fe, between a detachment of about 175 men, under Major Edmondson, and a band of Mexicans and Apache Indians, supposed to number 400 men. These men were combined together for the purpose of committing depredations on American property, and a few days previous bad succeeded in stealing 150 horses from traders and others.

Major Edmondson had been ordered out for the purpose of routing them. At the place indicated he came upon the enemy rather suddenly, and not very advantageously. He has crossing a slough at the mouth of the canon, was very miry, and many of his horses being in a weak condition, he was forced to abandon them. The engagement commenced on foot and lasted some two hours.

It is not known how many of the enemy were killed; two Americans were killed, and a third was wounded and reluctantly left on the ground when the retreat was ordered. – Lt. Elliott, in command of 27 men, principally Laclede Rangers, rendered very efficient service at this juncture. He occupied a point of rocks, and kept the enemy from advancing upon the retreating forces, until they had got out of a difficult position. He had two men wounded, M. Wash and J. Eldridge but not dangerously. All the horses were shot down or captured.

On the 2d of June, Lt. Col. Willock, with 115 men, was met on his march from Taos, in pursuit of the Mexican and Indian forces. He had got upon their trail, and was resolved upon an engagement with them.

We are sorry to heat that a garrison of only fifteen soldiers were left at Taos, all of whom were on the sick list. Col. Price was at Santa Fe, with portions of several companies of volunteers. Of this movements and plan we know nothing.

Mr. Murphy met Mr. Wethered, some other traders and two Government trains of wagons at the crossing of the Pawnee Fork. They had been detained there fort three or four days by a freshet in the river, which prevented them from fording it. At this point the Indians annoyed them very much, and succeeded in killing a hundred and fifty head of cattle belonging to the Government train (under charge of Capt. Belt, wagon master) and Mr. Goodrich, of this city, also lost 27 animals in the same way.

The cattle were all speared and their tails cut off close, to be used as trophies of victory. A Mr. Smith of Platte County, who was on guard at the time received seven spear wounds, one of which struck him in the throat, but it was the opinion of the physician who was along, that he would recover.

About this time, or shortly after, this party, who were traveling the River road, heard the discharge of cannon on the Ridge road, and as a train of Government wagons, having a piece of artillery with them, were on that route, it is supposed that an attack had been made upon them by the Indians.

Lieut. Love’s command of dragoons, with the money for the pay of the troops at Santa Fe, was met a few hours travel from the Pawnee Fork, going on well.

Col. Wm. H. Russell, Secretary of the Territory of California, came in with Mr. Murphy, and is the bearer of dispatches from Col. Fremont for the Government at Washington.

Col. R., we learn, stopped at his residence in Calloway county, to see his family. He may be looked for in this city in a day or two, and we then expect a full account of the operations in California.

Mr. Murphy heard nothing of the news brought to Westport by the "Delaware Indian," some days ago, of the attack upon a train of Government wagons, and the killing of some fifty teamsters and others, near Walnut Creek. It is, therefore, presumed to be totally unfounded.

INDEPENDENCE, July 2, 1847

This morning Col. Russell, Secretary of the Territory of California, arrived at this place with a party of eighteen men. He states that the Indians are growing worse upon the plains, and he had three lights with them during his march.

It is expected that the companies and wagon trains, now going out will be attacked, as the Indians are said to be collecting together for the purpose of committing depredations on the trains.
[MUL]

MG47v48n21p2c1, July 22, 1847.

FROM VERA CRUZ AND MEXICO.

Attack on Tabasco – The Guerrillas –Santa Anna raising Forced Loans—Preparations for Defending the City of Mexico, &c., &c.

The U. S. steamship Alabama, Capt. Windle, arrived at New Orleans on the morning of the 7th inst. From Vera Cruz, having sail on the 4th. The New Orleans Times (extra) of the 7th inst, has received full files of Vera Cruz papers to the 1st inst., together with several letters from their correspondant, Indicator, which are subjoined.

Our latest dates from the city of Mexico, by this arrival, are the 19th ult. Which reached Vera Cruz on the 30th, by a Merchant’s express. The news, however, is very meager, Santa Anna, it is said, has demanded a forced loan of one million of dollars, and is raising the money at the point of the bayonet. A letter states that the work of fortifying the approaches to the capital is proceeding vigorously, but the writer adds that a great lack of judgment is displayed in the selection of positions for defense.

We learn verbally that the British Courier reached Vera Cruz on the night of the 1st inst. but as the Alabama sailed at daylight, on the following morning; no news; if any, was received through that medium, had inspired. The Courier probably left the city of Mexico, on the 26th or 27th ultimo.

Singular as it may seem, it appears that no later intelligence has been received at Vera Cruz from the army. At all events, our correspondent makes no allusion to the advance of Gen. Scott, who, it is presumed, is still at Puebla, waiting for the reinforcements.

We make the following extracts from the correspondence of the Times:

VERA CRUZ, June 28, 1847. –I hear nothing of the project of changing the government depot from this city to Tuspan, and hope the notion, if it were entertained has fallen through.

Jalapa I believe, has been entirely abandoned by our troops; and, indeed we this evening have intelligence that the guerrillas have taken possession of that city. Whether this is true or not, the virtual abandonment which has taken place, evinces a strange indifference in General Scott as to the safety of his communications. I thought a general always secured his rear when advancing into a country even at great sacrifices of force in his main division –but I here find a very different policy to govern. Vera Cruz has less than three hundred men in her garrison. The National Badge, Encerro and Cerro Gordo certainly, and Jalapa probably, are not at all guarded, and the country is flooded with the native enemy.

Lieut. ---- Merrifield, of Capt. Ford’s company of Indiana Dragoons, this morning blow his brains out with a pistol, at the camp near the [. . . ]. No one can tell what impelled him to the foolish dead.

The health of the city has suffered little change for the past week or two, and all circumstances considered, may be pronounced good. The mortality has averaged lee than ten daily within the time mentioned.

The work of fortifying the approaches to the city is proceeding vigorously, but one of the letters state, thus great want of judgments is shown in the selections of propositions for defense. The writer says, that the strongest fortifications are placed exactly where the Yankees are sure not to pass, whilst the most important points are left nearly open. The letters are very cautiously written, except the one which gives us this intelligence; and these are about all the remarks which it contains on the subject of general interest. The dates are up to the 18th only. The British Courier will bring news as late as the 26th, and I hope will be in this evening. His letters will probably be unsealed, and I am afraid destitute of political interest, and it is possible to learn anything from him personally.

Commodore Perry and his squadron arrived at Anton Lizardo last evening, from his expedition against Tabasco. Upon his arrival at the entrance of the river, he found that a short distance up, chevaux de frise had been sunk so as to render the passage of his vessels impracticable. He consequently landed his men and his lighter guns, and commenced his march to the town. This was a most tedious business, but the managed to get ahead at the rate of one knot per hour until he reached the neighborhood of the town, where he found the enemy of tars into a very respectable column ready to receive him. Drawing up his army of tars into a very respectable column, he advanced within musket range, when he received the enemy’s fire, and instantly opened upon them his artillery, charged with grape and canister. The Mexicans did not fire again –Perry’s single volley scattered them to the winds. Horses with the stampede could not get over the ground as they did. –Some three or four of our men were wounded, but I believe none were killed. Lieut. May lost an arm, and I believe one other officer only was badly wounded.

None of the officers of the squadron have yet been in town, and I have these particulars at second-band, although
We learn that Padre Jarauta an the authorities of the State are at war, they having quarreled about a division of the spoils taken in the attack upon Col. McIntosh’s train. –Jarauta sent the money seized (some $6000) to Soto, the Governor of Huatusco, who declined to return more than some $600 for distribution among the guerrillas. This lead to a grand row in which I believe Santa Anna has interfered, and will perhaps settle the matter by taking the whole amount for himself.

July 1st. –I am favored by a gentleman here with the perusal of a letter which he had received from a very intelligent American resident of Puebla, and from which I take the liberty to make some extracts, which I conceive to possess much interest.

The writer says: “I do not know whose plan or direction our Generals are following, and as it is not my business, and beyond my means of remedy, I do not enquire, but limit myself to the remark that those who direct the war know nothing of the state of the country or of the people upon whom they are making war, nor do I believe they wish to know, or they could look upon the subject from the only true point of view.

It is well known all over the world that this country has been growing more insignificant ever since its independence, and that when the war commenced, it could not properly be called a nation, nor could not properly be called a nation, nor could that shadow in the city of Mexico be called a government. Yer foreing nations, and the United States in particular, talk of the Mexican nation, an the Mexican government, as if such a thing existed.

They then talk of destroying the commerce and industry of the country, as if these people ever possessed the one of the other. The Spaniards are the only people who ever rendered the wealth of the country at all available, and when they were driven out of it with their money, the original natives and Creoles never thought for supporting themselves by labor and industry of any kind, except the industry or robbing, &c.

There! My letter is gone. The Alabama is getting up steam and, the owner send it to headquarters. Well, perhaps the Union will have a proper effect. The writer says he has no hopes of peace, and refers to the war of the Mexican independence for an example of the bull-dog tenacity with which the people hold on to the war while they have it. He thinks the only course left for the Americans is, to occupy the country with a large army, and use it; that the people generally are not against the Americans, but it will no answer to express their feeling on the subject.

An express is just in from the interior, with the most interesting and rather unexpected intelligence, that Gen. Scott with the army under his command, is in the city of Mexico. I am sorry to say, however, that the courier who brings the news left Puebla on the 12th inst… while we have letters from the city of Mexico up to the 19th. There is, of curse, no truth in the report, that is, no news has arrived from the army or capitol later than we had before.

Yours, very respectfully
INDICATOR.

THAT SAME OLD COON

A paper, favorable to the election of General Taylor, is to make its appearance in New York.

Yours &c.
THAT SAME OLD COON
Persons favoring us with their advertisement, will please hand them in, on or before Tuesday morning at 10 o’clock.

"Why don’t they take him down? Rockingham Register.

This is the passionate exclamation of more than one despairing votary of the spoils party, in relation to the editors who persist in retaining the name of General Taylor at the head of their columns, as the Whig candidate for the Presidency. The frantic earnestness with which this question is reiterated on all sides by the Locofoco press, affords the most cheering evidence of the popularity of the hero of Buena Vista with the people. The zeal with which the Enquirer and other Democratic Journals set about the task of convincing the Whigs that Gen. Taylor is not the man to suit us, -that “the election of Old Zach will prove another Tyler victory,” and that the Signal letter was intended by its author to repel the advances of the Whig party.

MARYLAND BATTALION

The Washington Union says – We learn that the battalion of volunteers under the command of Lieut. Co. Hughes, raised mainly from the District of Columbia and State of Maryland, are under orders for immediate transportation so the active seat of war. It is intended that Col. H. Skall open the road from Vera Cruz to Jalapa, and to occupy that important town for the purpose of securing Gen. Scott’s line of operation. With this view, the battalion will be greatly increased. At least one company will be taken from Carlisle, Pennsylvania; and other (if its organization should be speedily completed) from Wilmington, Delaware; besides a battery of field artillery from Baltimore. Other independent companies may, perhaps, be added to it as fast as they are ready. The addition of a squadron of mounted men would be very desirable –thus forming, in fact, a copse of what is called in European armies, “eclaireurs” admirably adapted to a guerrilla warfare; but we understand that there is some practical difficulty apprehended in the transportation of horses at this season of the year, for so long a voyage, which may prevent such an organization. At it is, it will form a beautiful and we doubt not, a most efficient command, well calculated to do good service. In the organization of this force, the President has, from the beginning, taken a deep and almost paternal interest, and has evinced a disposition to render it as useful as possible; and now shows his continued interest and confidence in the battalion, by assigning to it a most distinguished and honored duty.

We understand that, of the six companies now at Fort McHenry, four will be shipped for Vera Cruz on the 22d instant, and the others as soon thereafter as possible.

MG47v48n 21p2c1, July 22, 1847.

Anecdote of Gen. Taylor

The remains of Col. Hardin and Lieut. B. R. Houghton reached St. Louis on the 7th instant; in charge of the returning Illinois volunteers. These brave men were feelingly addressed by John M. Eager, Esq., who was replied to in an appropriate manner by Major Richardson, of the volunteers. The coffins containing the ashes of the gallant dead were borne in procession to the Court House, and placed in the Rotunda on a catafalque, covered with black, relieved at the borders and edges by white black relieved at the borders and edges by white lace, and surmounted at the summit with a row of cannon. The Rotunda was darkened and lamps lighted, producing a very solemn effect and giving a highly impressive character to the ceremonies. The assembly were addressed here by the Rev. Mr. Van Court and Mr. Benton, in a brief but very appropriate manner. The procession was then re-formed, and moved to the river bank, where the remains were committed to the steamboat Defiance, to be carried to Meredosia, and thence to their last resting place, in Jacksonville, Illinois.

We state this fact upon the authority of a gentleman who had it from the Mississippi volunteers. Such conduct adds a new luster to the old hero’s radiant fame, brighter than any which the most brilliant deeds of arms could impart.

The remains of Col. Hardin and Lieut. B. R. Houghton reached St. Louis on the 7th instant; in charge of the returning Illinois volunteers. These brave men were feelingly addressed by John M. Eager, Esq., who was replied to in an appropriate manner by Major Richardson, of the volunteers. The coffins containing the ashes of the gallant dead were borne in procession to the Court House, and placed in the Rotunda on a catafalque, covered with black, relieved at the borders and edges by white black relieved at the borders and edges by white lace, and surmounted at the summit with a row of cannon. The Rotunda was darkened and lamps lighted, producing a very solemn effect and giving a highly impressive character to the ceremonies. The assembly were addressed here by the Rev. Mr. Van Court and Mr. Benton, in a brief but very appropriate manner. The procession was then re-formed, and moved to the river bank, where the remains were committed to the steamboat Defiance, to be carried to Meredosia, and thence to their last resting place, in Jacksonville, Illinois.

The American Marines at Havana.

"A most sad and painful spectacle," says the Memphis Eagle of 27th ult.) was the public funeral in this city, on Saturday evening, of Lieut. Gill and his father, at one and the same time. Young Gill was a lieutenant in the first company of volunteers from Memphis, and fell with many others while gallantly advancing to the charge at Cerro Gordo. His father, Mr. Lyman Gall, grieved at his son's death, repaired to Mexico to bring hither his remains, and bury them among his kindred, in his own country. In returning home he sickened and died.

The following toast was drank at Sumterville, S.C. on the 4th of July:

General Taylor, "Old Rough and Ready." "Well done thou good and faithful servant! We one put thee over few things – we will now make thee Ruler over many."

MG47v48n22p2c3, July 29, 1847.

The Gazette

GEN'L. TAYLOR AND THE WHIGS.

An absurd story has been going the rounds of the locofoco press, - in fact some of the have derived so much consolation from it that they have published it more that once, -the substance or which is, that Gen. Taylor on being shown a Whig paper containing his nomination for the Presidency, flew into a violent passion, and swore that such persons were no friends of his, and that the editor who expressed the opinion that the war might have been avoided with honor to the country, "was worse than a Mexican," &c. No responsible name was ever connected with the statements, and the only answer vouchsafed to the earnest demand for the author, was, that the story first appeared in the columns of "a highly respectable Democratic paper in Pennsylvania." The miserable shifts to which locofocoism is driven was exemplified by the fact that this bald humbug was actually twice paraded in the columns of the Richmond Enquirer; to be sure, the editors would not say in express terms that they believe it if he could. We won have it in our power to present our readers with a refutation of the calumny upon no less authority that that of Gen. Taylor himself. We commend to the serious attention of the reader the italics in the first resolution, and the reply of the General.

At a Whig meeting held at Trenton, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That the character of Gen. Taylor for plain spoken honesty, assures us that he will never disappoint the expectations nor betray the confidence of his countrymen; that soundness of his principles; and that it authorizes us to confide in his fidelity to the protective system, and his opposition to the acquisition of new territories, wherewith to destroy the balance of the Union."

And the nest and last resolution declared that therefore, the meeting nominated him for President:

In reply to these resolutions Gen. Taylor thus writes:

"I have the honor to acknowledge, with sentiments of high gratification, the receipt of a copy of the resolutions recently adopted at a meeting of the Democratic Whigs of the county of Mercer nJ.

"My thanks are specially due to my friens of the State of New Jersey for their flattering expression of approval and esteem, and which I can assure them is as truly reciprocated.

"I embrace this occasion to remark that if the people of the country desire to place me in the high office of the Chief Magistry, I do not fell myself at liberty to refuse; but on the contrary, in that position, as wall as one more humble, it will ever be my pride as constant endeavor to serve the country with a ll the ability I posses."

Upon a previous occasion General Taylor gave a favorable response to resolutions at a meeting held in the same city.

The acceptance (says the Richmond Times) of a nomination, avowedly based upon assurances derived from Gen. Taylor's past political course, which consisted only in belonging to the Whig party, and (more specially still) upon confidence "in his fidelity to the protective system, and his opposition to the acquisition of the new territories," seem to be a step too unequivocal to have been inconsiderately or unintelligibly taken. Until some respectable contradiction of the inference is made, the public must believe from a comparison of this letter with the New Jersey resolution, that Gen. Taylor is willing to be a Whig candidate, committed to the protective policy, and against the appropriation of Mexican territory.

[FOR THE GAZETTE.]
$ 2,000,000 vs. $3,000,000.

As there has been considerable enquiry as to what purpose James K. Polk intended applying the $2,000,000, asked for and obtained at the last session of Congress, I think that if particular attention be paid to the following facts, perhaps a little of the "why and where fore" may be "found out."

It was thought somewhat singular that Mr. Polk should ask Congress for $2,000,000. for the immediate use of Mexico, specially when contrasted with the loud denunciatory language which had so lately declares our purpose of war, invasion and conquest against that same Republic. He informed Congress that he has proposed negotiations to Mexico, and as it would be nothing but right to pay any connections of territory which the Mexican Government might make, he desired to have $2,000,000 in hand –suggesting that "it might not be convenient for the Government to wait for the whole sum until the treaty could be ratified by the Senate and the appropriations made by Congress."

Now it has been very strongly hinted that these $2,000,000 have been safely transmitted to SANTA ANNA for his own use –and if SANTA ANNA'S past life is to be taken as a criterion and Mr. Polks weakness as evidence, I do not think it at all improbable but that SANTA ANNA has the $2,000,000 snug enough.

As Mr. Polk perhaps would be considered the only person in the United States who could ever have originated such an idea as that of attempting to bridge such a man as SANTA ANNA –a man who has always been hostile towards the United States –the following incident may probably bring to light something that many persons were not aware of: In speaking of the Texas war, in 1836, in which Genls. HOUSTON AND SANTA ANNA were opposing commanders, the Louisville City Gazette (of that year-'36) says that "these opposing commanders are OLD FRIENDS" and that when SANTA ANNA was in exile, they were engaged in attempting to negotiate a loan of three millions, for the purpose of conquering Texas and Mexico.

So we see that Genls. HOUSTON and SANTA ANNA are friends –but we do not know exactly where to place SANTA ANNA. Would it be "folly" to suppose that perhaps HOUSTON and SANTA ANNA are friends again? If so, why should not POLK and SANTA ANNA be good friends, when HOUSTON and POLK are friends? Probably HOUSTON has been the mediator, and that at his suggestion POLK has been induced to attempt to bride SANTA ANNA with the $2,000,000. When we look at the principal actors in the premises, things wear a suspicious aspect.

We first see Houston and SANTA ANNA endeavoring to obtain a loan from this Government for the purpose of conquering Texas and Mexico. We than see SANTA ANNA recalled at the head of the Mexican Government. We then see Texas declare herself independent of Mexico. We then see the "old friends", HOUSTON and SANTA ANNA the opposing commanders in the war originating from this declaration of independence by Texas. We see HOUSTON triumphant and SANTA ANNA a prisoner of war. We afterwards find SANTA ANNA back in Mexico in private life –then in power and finally see Mr. POLK give SANTA ANNA a free pass to Mexico, where he now is at the hearth of the Mexican army fighting our Country.

[Mel]
The Republicano remarks upon this information: "We believe that Americans have compromised their situate on beyond measure; and even in the event, certainly very difficult, that they win triumphs upon triumphs, their very victories will cause their ruin.

The council above spoken of was held on the 24th. It is not alluded to in the Star of Puebla of the 26th, nor in Mr. Kendall’s letters which come down to the 80th. Yet the facts are said to be derived from a responsible source and they look plausible –General Worth’s opinions particularly so. The Republicano of the 29th says nothing about the subject, but in that paper of the 30th is another postscript to which is prefixed in large letters “Very Important”. This postscript mentions the receipt of letters announcing the debarkation of 1800 men at Vera Cruz from Tampico, who had marched immediately for Puebla. (This is probably Gen. Cadwallader’s detachment.) The letters further said that Gen. Scott had already ordered the march of the first brigade, consisting of fifteen hundred troops with ten guns and a mortar, towards the city of Mexico, when he learned that the train was detained at Nopalucan (forty-two miles this side of Puebla, and fifty-one beyond Perote;) that he therefore countermanded the march upon Mexico, and dispatched a force to the assistance of the train up. The letters then speak of the review of the troops which took place on the 26th. The number of troops is again set down at 9500 men without including those who occupy the fortifications of San Juan, Loreto, &c. But the most important paragraph is that Gen. Scott would probably postpone his march on the city until the 10th July, to allow these reinforcements to come up. We will these various pieces of news as we find them, but the reader will constantly bear in mind that our advices from Puebla are later than these by the city of Mexico.

The Republicano, in this same postscript, thinks it very probable that Gen. Taylor will abandon Saltillo, Matamoros and other towns in the North of Mexico, and shortly proceed to Vera Cruz to assist in the taking on the capital, which is now, it adds, the object of the aspirations of the Americans. It is very anxious that the Government should direct Gena. Valencia and Salas, now at San Luis, that they harass the retreat of Gen. Taylor.

Our readers may recollect that some time since our correspondent at Saltillo informed us of a great excitement occasioned there by the arrival of two Mexican officers from San Luis with dispatches from Gen. Taylor –They were supposed to be propositions of peace, but turned out to be solemn inquiries whether it was the General’s intention “to conduct the war according to the manner adopted by the Comanches.” The wrath of Gen. Taylor at this preposterous insolence of the Mexicans was descried as ludicrous, but we have never seen his reply till now. In the Mexican papers lately received the whole correspondence is given in Spanish. The letter to Gen. Taylor was from Gen. Mora y Villamil, and dated the 10th May. The letter is long and we have no idea of translating it, and the impudence of it was not a whit exaggerated by our correspondent.

The New Orleans Times of the 15th inst., has the following intelligence. We do not see it mentioned in any other paper.

---

MG47v48n22p2c7, July 29, 1847.

MOST IMPORTANT.

Again a Rejection of the Olive Branch.

MEXICO DECLINES TREATING

At the moment when the Galveston was leaving Vera Cruz, a courier, with the mail from the capital, entered the city, bringing dates to the 5th instant. The principal item of intelligence brought from the city of Mexico, is of a momentous character, viz: The Mexican Congress, with some difficulty, had been brought together, and Mr. Buchanan’s communication, containing the President’s overtures for peace, was laid before them.

Their decision was immediate, and to the effect that Mexico would listen to no terms to peace. Gen Scott left Puebla, at the head of his army, for the capital, on the 30th ult. –We received this news to believe that it is authentic.

---

MG47v48n22p2c7, July 29, 1847.

STILL LATER NEWS FROM MEXICO.

The New Orleans Times of the 19th instant, received last night, has the following paragraph:

As some of our contemporaries affect to doubt the correctness of the news from Mexico, in reference to the rejection of propositions for peace, which we laid before our readers exclusively on Thursday last, we have merely to reiterate that the account is reliably authentic and that we have in our possession later dates from the capital than those of the 30th.
June, alluded to on the arrival of the Galveston. A morning paper will discover by and by that the news is not “all in my eye.”

The editors of the New Orleans Times have been favored with the following extract of a letter dated.

TABASCO, June 30, 1847

We have been far from tranquil ever since the departure of Commodore Perry; small parties of men having entered to town at night and fired upon the sentries.

This has led to the burning, the day before yesterday, of about two hundred houses, at the back and south end of the city, by order of our government and military commander. Yesterday reinforcements of about 110 marines and sailors were sent up by Com. Perry from the bar, and this morning about 250 men have gone out to try and meet some of the Mexican forces that are in this neighborhood, and drive them away.

The city remains deserted, and no business at all doing, and all our single shop in the place being opened, and all our usual supplies from the neighborhood suspended. We understand Com. Perry has declared his intention to retain possession of this city, unless we received orders to the contrary from the Government in Washington.

July 1. –The results of the expedition yesterday appears to have been in favor of the Americans, but with a loss of two men killed in ambush, and four wounded. The Mexican force waited for them in ambush at Tamulite, but after about twenty minutes’ firing retired it is not yet known with what loss.

MG47v48n22p3c3, July 29, 1847. FROM THE N. Orleans Delta, July 16.

LATE FROM BUENA VISTA, SALTILLO, MONTEREY, &c.

We had the pleasure of a conversation with Dr. Johnson, of Gen. Wool’s staff, who arrived in the Palmetto evening before last, direct from Gens. Wool and Taylor’s camp, having left Saltillo on the 27th June. Dr. Johnson acted as an Aid of Gen. Lane at Buena Vista, and was severely wounded –having been lanced and sacred, and otherwise so injured as to make his recovery almost a miracle.

Dr. Johnson reports that Gen. Wool was encamped on the classic field of Buena Vista, with a force of 2700 men, consisting of the Virginia, Mississippi and North Carolina volunteers, and Sherman’s Washington’s and Prentiss’s batteries.

Gen Taylor is still at his favorite old camping ground, the Walnut Springs, quietly waiting until the Government furnishes him with men and means to advance on San Luis. Gen. Taylor has with him the 19th regiment, Bragg’s battery, and two squadrons of dragoons.

At Camargo, Gen Hopkins has about 2000 troops of the new levies. About the 13th June, Gen. Wool received notice that a force of about 1000 cavalry, under Gens. Alvarez and Minon, had left Matehuala, and advanced within sixty miles of Buena Vista. This party constituted the advance of a strong division which, it is reported by the Mexicans, was about to advance from San Luis Potosi under Gens. Valencia and Salas. By the last accounts from San Luis, there were but four or five thousand troops there, but Valencia expected to be joined by a strong force from Zacatecas.

The citizens are generally returning to the towns occupied by our troops. In Saltillo and Monterey nearly all the respectable families have returned, and everything goes on very smoothly and quietly. The people generally are warmly desirous of a peace, and begin to prefer the American Government to their own. Especially in the town of Zacatecas does the anti-war feeling prevail to a great extent. At a public dinner in that town some time ago, Gen. Taylor and the American army were toasted with great applause.

[MUL]

MG47v48n22p3c7, July 29, 1847, A SKIRMISH WITH THE INDIANS.

Correspondence of the Cour. and Enquirer.

Camp on the Banks of the Arkansas River.

320 miles from Fort Leavenworth, June 27, 1847.

I have only time to inform you now, by express, that our party was attacked by the Comanche Indians at daylight yesterday morning, and that in a charge made by twenty-five of the company of Dragoons ten were killed and wounded, viz, five killed, three severely and two slightly wounded, the Indians numbering about three hundred: and it required a greater part of the company to protect the camp, else the whole would have made the charge. One hundred and thirty five yoke of cattle belonging to a Government train, which joined our party a few days since, were driven off and killed by the Indians. What loss was sustained but the Indians it was impossible to ascertain, as they carried off the killed and wounded. It is said that there are some Northern Mexicans with these Comanches. –Be this as it may, it is evident that their whole object is to cut off trains and destroy United States property. This is no doubt a part of the guerrillas warfare. The amount of public property which we have heard of destroyed on this road, in the last eight days, will amount to very nearly $10,000.

J.K.D.

[MG47v48n22p2c7, July 29, 1847]

Gen. Taylor and the Whigs.

The "Democratic Advocate," a Locofoco paper published at Baton Rouge, the residence of Gen. Taylor, states unequivocally that Gen. Taylor was “opposed to the annexation of Texas on constitutional grounds”, and that “he thinks the war with Mexico could and ought to have been avoided.” In this opinion he concurs with the Whig party. –Raleigh Register.

[MG47v48n22p3c1, July 29, 1847, VOLUNTEER FARE]

Every patriotic young man, who has been to Mexico in search of glory, and "to see the elephant," complains of the miserable fare which the commissaries gave them. These inhospitable caterers are so anxious to make the profits as large as possible, that their treatment of the volunteers reminds me of the old anecdote: "John, don't give Cousin Simmon's horses too many oats you know they have hay," "Yeth thur," said John moving towards the barn. "And, hark ye, John, don't give them too much hay –you know they have oats."

[MG47v48n23c1, Thursday, August 5, 1847]

Important from Mexico

General Scott still at Fuestal. Rumored appointment of Peace Commissioners by the Mexican government.

[JM]

Thursday, August 5, 1847 MG47v48n23c1 14 words

Important from Vera Cruz

{From the N.O. Picayune}

Arrival of the Steamship New Orleans.

The steamship New Orleans, Capt. Auld, arrived at an early hour on the 22d ult., from Vera Cruz via Tampico and the Brazos. Her latest dates from Vera Cruz are on the 17th inst. Her news is very important. First of all we give Capt.
Auld's report, by which it will be seen that he left Vera Cruz for this port as early as the 14th and the returned thither, going no further than Tampico:

Report of the U.S. Steamship New Orleans, Edward Auld, commander, from Vera Cruz, via Tampico and the Brazos:

On her departure from Vera Cruz on the morning of the 14th inst, General Pierce, with his command of detachments from the 3d Dragoons, 4th Artillery, 3d Infantry and the 7th, 8th, 9th, and 14th infantry, a detachment of voltiguers and a large detachment of marines, amounting to 2500 men and 150 wagons, had taken up their lines of march towards Puebla.
We arrived in Tampico on the morning of the 15th inst. At 8 o'clock. Col. Gates informed us the two hundred American prisoners who had been released from the city of Mexico had been ordered down to Tampico and recaptured by Gen. Garay at or near Huejile, about ninety or one hundred miles up the river, and Col. DeRussy with detachments of Louisianna volunteers, parts of Capt. Wyne's company . . . [rest of article illegible].

Thursday, August 5, 1847 MG47v48n23c4 397 words

Printers in Mexico

The Lynchburg Virginian gives the following extracts of a letter who was lately an apprentice in the Virginian Office, and who is now a Volunteer in Capt. Carrington's Company:

Buena Vista, June 17th, '47

We are now in Saltillo, at least beyond there, encamped on the ground of Buena Vista, and I can assure you it is one of the greatest fields on which was ever battle fought.-It is a beautiful plain, bounded on the east by Cordilleras, on the west by the same, on the north by Saltillo, and the south, about six miles from the ground, by the Dead Man's Pass, which could be defended with 500 men against 50,000. In the center of the encampment is a large live oak tree, from the foot of which flows a limpid brook large enough to turn a mill which the Americans have erected upon its waters, and which is the only one I have seen in Mexico. In fact, the Mexicans have no use for a mill; they mash, or pound, all of their corn, which labor devolves upon the Senorittas, the men being of very lazy disposition. We have a fine market here now, at which you may purchase nearly all the delicacies and necessaries of life. We have here all the tropical fruits, and some of the largest water melons in the world. I have no hardships to undergo now as I had a month or two ago, as I have been appointed Company Commissary Sergeant, and am excused from drill and standing . . . [illegible] . . . and all I have to do now is to make off requisitions, draw and issue provisions, which occupies only about half my time. There was quite a remarkable circumstance connected with a permit I had a few days ago, which I enclose to you, and which shows the strength of the craft in our battalion. The permit was written for myself, a printer, by D.A. Stofer, Sergeant Major, who is a printer; signed by Lt. J. Richard Lewellwn, who is a printer; countersigned by Capt. Harper, who is a printer; and the two men who accompanied me for the meat were printers; the whole being undersigned, and not noticed till the day after. I am very tired of playing soldier, for it seems that the Virginia regiment is doomed to go home without a brush, and I am heartily tired of it.

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24ip1c4 1,116 words

The Fourth in the army

The correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, writing from Monterey, says the natal day of American Independence was celebrated at that place, without accident, and every thing went off pleasantly and agreeably to all concerned. The morning of the 5th was cloudy and portended rain, but the bright sun soon dispelled the heavy mist that clung to the mountain's side, and ere noon the heavens were as clear and bright as a lovely women's smile. Early in the forenoon the American ensign was displayed from the Governor's quarters and the Spanish flag from the residence of the Spanish consul nearly opposite. The five companies of Massachusetts volunteers were assembled all but the guard, with the colors of the regiment presented them by the Governor of their State, and a little after 9 o'clock they formed and marched out towards Camp Taylor. An American flag borne by a citizen was carried near the regimental colors. Col. Wright and the members of the regimental staff, and others preceded the regiment, and on the road received the marching salute.- At Camp Taylor all was ready; under the wide-spread awning in front of Gen. Taylor's tent were the brave old hero and the members of his staff and the officers attached to the forces stationed at camp. On the right of the awning the soldiers of Major Bragg's Light Artillery were drawn up in line, on the left the 2d Dragoons, and in front the Massachusetts regiment. As soon as the latter had formed into line, Gen. Cushing made his appearance and Gen. Taylor and his officers all rose.

We omit the bulk of the speech of Gen. Cushing which is not remarkable for anything but its fulsome laudation of the present administration, copying only his closing remarks which called forth Gen. Taylor's reply:

Once more, General, in the name and as the humble instrument of your fellow soldiers and fellow citizens, whom you see before you, I tender to you their felicitations on the occasion of this auspicious anniversary, with sentiments of admiration for the high achievements which have marked your life, of deep respect, for you personally, and of the sincerest aspirations for your future happiness and honor in whatever else of danger or duty you may hereafter be called to by the providence of an all-wise God.

Gen. Tayor, who had listened with great attention to the remarks of Gen. C., and evidently powerfully affected by the mention of his name, briefly, but feelingly, responded as follows:
General- In reply to your eloquent and complimentary allusions to the services of the army under my command, I can only briefly express my thanks and those of the brave men of my command, to whose exertions and gallantry alone our successes are due. For myself I can claim no merit beyond that of sharing and encountering danger with them. You have traced up and depicted in most faithful colors the rapid progress of our country from the commencement to its present condition of greatness and prosperity—occupying the front rank in the nations of the world. The existing war may show the world that in great national enterprises and interests we are firm and united—and that the flower of our country, without distinction of party, is ready to . . . [illegible].

. . . ... to the exertions of Capt. Glover, a merchant residing here for some years, one of the committee of arrangements, whose peculiar province was to see that nothing should be wanting. He performed his duty to perfections.

When the substantials had been discussed and removed, Gen. Cushing, who presided at the hear of the table, with Gen. Taylor on his right, arose, and after some remarks complimentary to the committee of arrangements, proceeded to announce the following regular toast:

The Memory of Washington—Brightening with time, all nations will at least behold and admire its lustre.

The Army and the Volunteers of the United States—They have conquered all but peace.

The Navy of the United States—With amphibious facility, finding no enemy on the waters, it has constantly sought and successfully encountered him on the land.

The Constitution—May it ever be administered in the spirit which controlled its first formation.

The surviving Heroes of the Revolution—Length of days has been vouchsafed to them that they might behold the marvelous results of their youthful toil—all honor to their venerable names.

Our Brethren in Arms at the South—They have lighted their paths with a blaze of victories.

Mexico—Blessed with a genial clime and the physical elements of greatness and power, she is a prey to civil strife and bad government, may the influence of wise rulers and free institutions restore her to her proper rank among the nations of the earth.

The Spirit of ’76—It burns as brightly among the mountains of Mexico as of old at Trenton: “Skies, not souls, they change who cross the sea.”

The Mexican War—Waged to secure an honorable and a lasting peace, may such be its early consummation.

The Illustrious Dead—From Palo Alto to Cerro Gordo every field is consecrated by the sacrifice of gallant spirits; a sympathizing country yields spontaneous and grateful homage to their memory.

The American Fair—Worthy descendants of the women of the Revolution, their hearts and prayers are with those who uphold their country’s cause in a foreign land.

Volunteer toasts being called for, Lieut. Crowningshield of the Massachusetts Regiment gave:

Andrew Jackson—Sacred be his memory.—(Drank standing in silence.)

Lieut. Fuller, of the Massachusetts Volunteers, gave:

Gen. Taylor—We hail him as the next President; may his civil be as brilliant as his military career. (This sentiment was drunk with three times three.)

Mr. President and Gentleman: I have never had the vanity to aspire to or look for that elevated situation, which has just been alluded to, but if my fellow countrymen think proper to elevate me to so distinguished and honorable a position, I certainly shall do my best to discharge the duties to that responsible position faithfully. But if any other candidate is preferred and offered who may be more competent than myself, I need not say that I shall acquiesce most cheerfully in their decision, and shall rejoice that there is one more worthy to represent them in the highest office in their gift.

He then gave as a toast:

The State of Massachusetts and the City of Boston—The place where our liberties were cradled: whose sons have borne so conspicuous a part in the establishment and maintenance of the principles of our independence and the constitution, and have gallantly maintained the same by sea and land.
Col. Wright responded to the compliment, and concluded by offering the following:

The past and Present - Palo Alto, Resaca, Monterey and Buena Vista, the Bunker Hill, Princeton and Yorktown of the present century.

By Capt. Montgomery, U.S.A.- The orator of the day, scholar, statesman and soldier . . . [illegible] . . .

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24 words456

Capt. Kenton Harper

We have the pleasure of laying before our readers three more letters from this gallant officer, to the Staunton Spectator. A part from the intrinsic merit of the admirable letters of Capt. Harper, there is much in the history of his connexion with the war in Mexico, calculated to render everything from his pen a subject of deep interest to his numerous friends in Virginia. The editor of one of the most popular and influential journals in the State- enjoying in no ordinary degree the confidence and esteem of his acquaintances of all parties- surrounded by the comforts and endearments of a happy home- exhibiting in his daily walk and conversation, those peculiar traits of character which fitted him to adorn the social circle, and rendered him an especial favorite with the society in which he lived, - He has exchanged the blessings of such a position for the hardships and dangers of a camp in a foreign land; to add, it may be, another to the number of the noble victims of a policy, of which he was ever the uncompromising and consistent opponent.

Capt. Harper had been for many years the popular commandant of the Staunton Light Infantry, a command he resigned some three or four years ago. A number of those who served under him while acting in this capacity, having volunteered for the war in Mexico, the command of the New Company, was, by the unanimous voice of its members tendered to him, with the assurance that the company would not be filled if he declined it. Conceiving that the Honor of "Old Augusta: was concerned in the effort to raise the company- a firm believer in the sentiment of Decatur "Our Country right or wrong," and convinced that his presence amongst them was important to the welfare of the brave fellows who had so often honored him with evidence of their preference and attachment, he hesitated not a moment, but surrendered himself at once to their appeal. Nothing but a sense of duty to his old companions induced him to accept the commission he now holds, and fortunate it is for them that he consented to share their dangers and their privations. "Old Augusta" is the mother of many a gallant son, but of the many who have contributed to render illustrious her venerable name, she numbers no more gallant spirit than Kenton Harper; and in all the chivalric host that has gone forth to sustain the flag of our country upon the plains of Mexico, there is not one from whom a more honorable and conscientious discharge of all and every duty committed to his trust, whether in battle or in bivouac, may be more confidently expected.

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24 words1, 411

Saltillo, Mexico, June 30, 1847.

Dear ______ : I have written so frequently of late that I have but little news to communicate. Since the deaths of the lamented Grove, Brown and Simes, the health of the company has been rather improving. The sick are for the most part getting better; and we have had two new cases, both of which yielded readily to treatment. I was ths Physician, as indeed I have sometimes been compelled to be for the whole company, for days together, in the sickness or absence of our regular Surgeon. You may judge then, of the value of the box of medicines you sent me.- In fact the public supply at China was very meager, and the slender stock of Lieut. Harman and myself was subject to frequent drafts for the use of the Hospital. But to return to the company, I am now in hopes that with proper care and attention to diet the health of the men may be preserved. The climate here is certainly a delightful one- atmosphere pure and dry and moderately warm- and I do not see why it should not be healthy.

I have no news at present. Every thing remains quiet in the city.- The Mexican inhabitants, I think, are becoming more reconciled to our domination. The most perfect order prevails. Not the slightest disturbance of the public peace, by drunkenness or otherwise, is allowed in the streets by our guard; and the city, in this respect, is as orderly as the best regulated in our own country. The police duty has been devolved for some days past upon the two volunteer companies, alone- Capt. Hennings and my own- but another company has now been sent in from camp to our relief- the 3d Richmond, under the command of Lieut. Shoemaker.

I suppose you have heard that a number of our Virginia Officers have gone home on sick furloughs, namely- Capt. Archer of the 3d Richmond, Lieut. Allen, do.- Lieut. Pegram of 1st Petersburg, and Lieut. Washington of the Jefferson company.- I regret to hear that the probability is that scarcely one of them will return.

Since we arrived here I have had my company uniformed anew. - I have got the sky blue of the U.S. Infantry, and it looks very well. The other companies of the Regiment will no doubt follow the example. Several of them, indeed, have
In looking over the face of the country around Saltillo, one who does not know something of Mexican habits would be at a loss to conceive whence it is the population derive their subsistence. Although the valley stretches out beautifully for miles, there are scarcely any signs of cultivation, and all looks waste and desolate. Here and there over the extensive plain the eye may be relieved by the sight of a small homestead, and a scanty clump of trees, but nothing more. Even the mountain sides are almost naked, yielding nothing but a short moss or grass, interspersed with scattering patches of dwarfish brushwood, and the fuel which is necessary for cooking purposes is brought from a great distance- somewhere beyond the mountains- packed on mules.- It is strange that a city as large as Saltillo should have grown up under such circumstances; but the Mexicans do not generally live in towns so much for the conveniences and advantages of trade as for safety, and the farms which they cultivate, and upon which they rely for subsistence are often located at great distances, and are worked by peones. Our troops here are subsisted chiefly on Mexican Flour and Mexican Beef. The former is but little better than our Rye Flour, being dark and heavy, and the Beef is only tolerable, though it is improving with the pasture.

There has been considerable mortality among the natives of Saltillo since we have been here, particularly among the children and funerals have taken place daily. The explosion of rockets may be heard at almost any hour, which as I stated in a former letter, is part of the funeral rites. I saw the funeral of two adults. The corpses were carried on flat boards, dressed up in the most fantastic manner imaginable. The decorations about the head were particularly singular and gaudy, rising to the height of about two feet in the form of a fan or sun-shade, and set off with tinsel and gold. The Mexicans use no coffins.

We know nothing certainly in regard to the time of our proposed onward movement.- We learn, however, that there are three or four Regiments below, and a heavy Siege Train coming up. If we do start, the hope is that we shall not be stopped short of the city of Mexico. The distance to San Luis is 300 miles- not quite half way. Col. Harutratnck, I am glad to learn, is about getting up a brass band for our Regiment.

I have heretofore mentioned; I trust with a just pride, the humane conduct of our Regiment towards the non-combatant Mexicans.- Not an outrage, and hardly an offence of any kind, has been committed against them, so far as I have heard, by the humblest private in the ranks. – As a proof of this, I need only state that at China, where our battalion was stationed for nearly two months, many of the inhabitants expressed their regret when they heard of our intended departure from amongst them. They felt themselves to be safer with us than they would be with their own troops; under Canales and Urrea- this, too, while the population has the credit of being among the most rascally in Mexico! The fact is that Mexico, with all its boast of Republicanism and free Government, is yet a stranger to their most essential principles. In the first place, an established Religion is incompatible with them- so also the undue authority which is given to or exercised by the Military over the Civil Power, and her system of converting freemen into slaves for debt. I have heard of numerous instances, in our marches, of Mexican troops most cruelly plundering their own people. Some of the sufferers indeed, told us, by way of apology for the little they had to sell us, that hey had been robbed but recently by their own soldiers. And it has not been many months ago that an Alcade (who is the civil magistrate or governor of a town) was taken out, yoked with an ox, and driven through the streets, by command of a Mexican General, because he could not or did not fill a requisition which the General had made upon him for beef, on a notice of two or three hours! Where such contempt can be shown with impunity for the civil law and its officers, and for private rights, surely there can be no liberty that is worthy of the name.

Yet more, while on this subject,- I see that Santa Anna and all the leading Mexicans in their leading proclamations and addresses, speak of the war which we are waging as against their Nationality and their Holy Religion. And this too, while they have been trying to wrest from the Churches their property by all means in their power- by forced loans, by taxes, and even by actual violence. The magnificent Church in this place, which I have heretofore spoken of, bears the marks of two cannon balls, fired against it by order of Gen. Ampedia on his retreat to Monterey, to enforce a demand upon it for money! Nevertheless, in the face of facts like these, the unprincipled men who ... [illegible] The truth is that no country on the face of the earth scarcely, is worse governed than Mexico.-Large districts through which we have passed have been allowed by the Government to be preyed upon by the Capanche Indians at their mercy, and robber bands have prowled through the country almost unheeded by that civil poser. There is not a public road that I have been upon that is not lined, some of them every few steps, with wooden crosses, to mark the graves of murdered travelers! No wonder, then, if the clouds should withold their rain, and every shrub and every tree be clothed with thorns, and the land become desolate- for the curse of God is surely upon it. Yours, truly.

[JM]

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24 words275

Satillo, Mexico, July 2, 1847.

Dear _______ : Nothing of interest has transpired since I last wrote you.- There is still some doubt as to our future movements. It seems that General Taylor is not to get as many of the new troops as was expected; and I ... [illegible]

... American, brings to recollection a song I heard sung at China by men of our Regiment, upon our own loved Virginia. Who the author is, I know not; but I thought it so very beautiful, that I procured a copy of it to sen you, which strangely enough, I have omitted to do. But here it is. No doubt some of our sweet voiced maidens can find a suitable tune for it.
Virginia! Virginia! My home o'er the sea,
My heart, as I wander, turns fondly to thee:
For bright rests the sun o'er thy clear winding streams,
And soft o'er thy meadows the moon pours her beams,
Virginia! Virginia! My home o'er the sea,
The wander's heart turns in fondness to thee!
Thy breezes are healthful, and pure are thy rills,
Thy harvest waves proudly, and rich are thy hills,
Thy maidens are fair, and thy yeomen are strong,
And blithe run thy rivers the valleys among.

Virginia! Virginia! My home o'er the sea,
My heart, as I wander, turns fondly to thee.
There's a house in Virginia where loved ones of mine
'Are thinking of me, and the days of lang syne!
And blest be the hour when, our pilgrimage o'er,
I shall sit by its hearth stone and leave it no more,
Virginia! Virginia! I love none like thee.

Yours, truly.

[JM]

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24 words541

Saltillo, Mexico, July 5, 1845.

Dear ____ : I write to inform you that another report has reached us that the Mexicans are certainly advancing upon us, and I learn from a gentleman who has just come in from camp that the report is believed by Gen. Wool.- We have now a pretty respectable force, however- some 2,700 and about 30 pieces of artillery- and it is hardly probably that the enemy can muster sufficient strength to drive us from our position, unless they should concentrate their whole energies in this quarter. But I must confess I have little faith in these reports.- We have been so often stampeded, (as we call it,) that such reports do not much affect us. Still there may be some truth in this one.

The health of the company has not been so good for the last two days. I am now the only commissioned officer reported for duty, with two Sergeants, three Corporals, and thirty-seven privates. None of the new cases, however, I hope are serious. There are several of those who have been ailing for some time in the company that I would like to have discharged, because they are really a burden to me, but such have been the flagrant impositions practiced by some of the volunteers already discharged, that the Surgeons have become chary about granting certificates, and there is a growing repugnance to discharging by the commanding officer, whose approval is necessary.- This is to be regretted, because I know that in may cases it operates, hardly, if not unjustly, upon the really afflicted and disabled soldier.

A report has reached us within a few days, whether true or not I suppose you are better informed, that the Administration at ... [illegible]

The war, I understand, is operating with peculiar benefit, in favor of the peones. Most of the marketing in our camps and garrisons is carried on through them, and they are reaping quite a harvest from it. Many of them, by their sly gains, have been enabled to pay off the debts held by their masters against them, and thus release themselves from servitude.- I have already, in a former letter, described this system of Mexican slavery. It has some features, however, I find, which I was not then apprised of.- A debtor may not merely be compelled to render personal service to his creditor, but he may be set up and sold for the debt at the creditor's whim or convenience. I learn also that it is not unfrequently the case that very young persons (minors) are thus auctioned off, whether for their own debts or the debts of their parents, I am not informed. It was but a few weeks since that a girl of about fourteen or fifteen years of age, and a boy of about the same age, were publicly sold in the streets of Monterey. The girl brought forty-five dollars, and the boy seventy dollars.- They were bought by American officers, and set at liberty- the girl unconditionally, and the boy upon a promise to refund the purchase money, which I am told he has since done, by the profits of some small traffic which they assisted him to engage in. ... [illegible]

[JM]

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24 words217

The Tariff and the Prices

The ecstacies into which the administration prints were thrown by the sudden advance of breadstuffs, consequent upon the late scarcity in Europe, has been effectually checked by the as sudden depression in the markets, which followed the announcement of the prospect of a plentiful harvest in that quarter.

Those of our cotemporaries, who were most active in the endeavor to gull the faithful into the belief that the sole credit of the advance was due to the Tariff of ‘46, are now sorely puzzled to account satisfactorily and consistently for the decline. As the venerable editor of the official organ displayed so much ingenuity in the effort to cast upon the Whigs the whole blame of the tedious prolongation of the Mexican war, could he not do something to relieve himself and friends from the horns of this new dilemma, by attributing the fall in the markets to the contumacy and disloyalty of that party, in opposing the financial policy of Sir Robert Walker?

We trust that the American people are now more than ever convinced of the folly of trusting the chances of a failure of the crops in the old world, and of the imperious necessity of providing for a home market, by the encouragement and protection of home manufactures.

[JM]

Thursday, August 12, 1847, MG47v48n24 words871

Important Rumor

A good deal of excitement was created in the city yesternoon, between 2 and 3 o'clock, by the issue from the office of that National, of an extra announcing Gen. Scott’s entrance into the city of Mexico. We will not forestall the opinions of our readers, but give the National’s extra in full.

There is news in the city from the city of Mexico as late as July 17th. It came through by a Mexican courier, who came by the way of Orizaba and Alvarado to Vera Cruz. Gen. Scott entered Mexico on the 17th of July.- He met with no opposition on his way from Puebla until he arrived at Penon, about eight miles from the city. Here a slight skirmish ensued between his advance and the Mexicans, when the latter fell back. The civil... [illegible] Stipulations were entered into by which the persons and property of the citizens of Mexico were to be respected; this accomplished, our army marched quietly into the city of the Montezumas.

This important news reached here in the Massachusetts, but has been withheld for purposes that we do not understand. The authority upon which we publish it seems to us undoubted. The courier that brought this news could come from the city of Mexico via Orizaba to Vera Cruz in five days, if the... [illegible] It will be perceived that this allows seven days for the news to reach Vera Cruz by the route we have stated.

We know, upon the highest authority, that there is a letter in this city of the 17 July, from the city of Mexico. The gentleman who gave... [illegible] about leaving form the approach of the Yankees.

Santa Anna and Canalizo had quarreled about the defence of this city. Canalizo did... [illegible] of successful resistance. He preferred to meet our troops on the plain and there decide the contest. Santa Anna would not agree to this, so no opposition was made.

The entrance of Gen. Scott into Mexico is a rumor. From the letter of the 15th, we know positively of the preparations of families in the city to move on the approach of Gen. Scott, and of the quarrel between Santa Anna and Canalizo as to the defence of the city, and we know that there is a letter in the city of the 17th from Mexico.

The courier that brought through the letter of the 17th brought news of Gen. Scott’s entering the city. We have no doubt of the truth of the report.

The New Orleans Delta of the 1st instant says-

It seems strange that this news should come by the steamer Massachusetts, which arrived here on Thursday last, and that up to this time those in official correspondence with Gen. Scott should not be apprised of it. Extraordinary, however, as it may appear, we have every reason to believe, from information confidentially communicated to ourselves, that it is substantially true- that the main fact of Gen. Scott’s entrance into the city of Mexico is a fixed fact. A few days, and the statement will be either confirmed or authoritatively contradicted, till which time our readers must bide with what patience they best may.

Later, the New Orleans National of the second instant has the following:

Arrival of the Washington, Confirmation of Gen. Scott’s entrance into the City of Mexico! Express from San Fernando is Matamoros.

The steamship Washington, Capt. Pratt, arrived yesterday, (since the above was in type) from Vera Cruz, via Tampico and Brazos. By her we have received the Sun of Anahuac of the 22d ult, the Tampico Sentinel of the 25th, and the Matamoros Flag of the 24th. These papers contain nothing of particular interest. But the following letter, received by a gentleman of this city, furnished as for publication, is of exciting interest, and fully confirms the news we gave in our extra on Saturday, that Gen Scott had entered the city of Mexico.
Sir: I hasten to inform you that Mr. Fischer has just arrived here from matamoros and was informed that the Colonel Commanding had read on parade last evening, that Gen. Scott had entered the city of Mexico, with a loss of 300 men. The news was brought by express to Matamoros, from San Fernando, by a Mexican to the Alcade, and was generally believed to be true.

There is no doubt as to the information having been imparted to the troops at Matamoros. I would have given you more particulars, but Mr. Fischer has gone back two miles, in hopes to get his baggage here in time for the Washington. I cannot give you more, as the boat goes, and eh has not returned in time to go to New Orleans in her.

The New Orleans Bee, speaking of the rumor and the subsequent receipt of the same report by the Washington, says—

The news was publicly read to the troops at Matamoros, and although it savors somewhat of improbability, may, nevertheless, be wholly true; for our readers will bear in mind that of all the battles fought and victories won on the fields of Mexico, our first news of them was received from the Mexican authority, and afterwards confirmed through American . . . [illegible].

[JM]

Thursday, August 19, 1847, MG47v48n25p2c2 52 words

Good Pun

At the Fourth of July dinner in Vera Cruz, the following witty toast was given;

"The war debt, How will the American people be enabled to pay their Scott and their Taylor’s bill?"

Another toast at the same dinner was-

"General Taylor: It don’t take nine such tailors to make a man."

[JM]

Thursday, August 19, 1847  MG47v48n25p3c1 15 words

From the Army

Important from Mexico, General Urrea in the field with Four thousand men, calls for re-inforcements.

[JM]

Thursday, August 19, 1847, MG47v48n25p3c1 415 words

Still Later.

Accounts from General Scott-report of the occupation of the City unfounded-meeting of the Mexican Congress-No Commissioners appointed to Negotiate for Peace-Another Great Battle likely to be fought.

Richmond, August 14, 1847.

The Southern mail brings papers from New Orleans of the 7th.

The Steamer Fashion, whose arrival was expected at our previous accounts, reached New Orleans on the 6th, having left Vera Cruz on the 2d, and bringing accounts from that city to that date, and from General Scott to the 30th of July.

The report that Gen. Scott had left Puebla on the 15th ult., and the he had entered the city of Mexico, turns out to be entirely erroneous. He was still at Puebla on the 30th ult., but it was said he intended immediately to take up his line of march for the city of Mexico.

Gen. Pierce, whose departure from Vera Cruz with reinforcements, has been noted, had arrived at Perote. He had had an encounter with a band of guerrillas, whom he succeeded in driving off. The action is said to have been quite a severe one, and to have been sustained with great gallantry by the American troops. The encounter took place at National Bridge, where the guerrillas had taken up a wonderfully strong natural position. Gen. Pierce and his force made their way through charging them with calvary as they retreated, and killing, it is believed, about one hundred.

A brigade under Gen. Smith, had been dispatched from Puebla to meet Gen. Pierce at Perote.

Lieut. Whipple, of whose capture by a band of guerrillas we have had an account, is not dead, as we feared. He was retained as a prisoner, was well, and will be exchanged. Lieut. Sturgeon, of the Pennsylania, and Lieut. Upton, of the Indiana regiment are dead. The intelligence from the city of Mexico is up to a late day in July.

A letter in the Picayune, from Mr. Kendall, dated at Puebla, July 30, holds out unfavorable hopes of peace. Gen. Scott considered the attempts to open negotiations as having failed, and would move immediately towards the capital.

Gen. Valencia, with a force of 4000 troops, had arrived at the city of Mexico, and these, with the force already collected, would give, as was estimated, Santa Anna 29,000 troops.

The Army under Gen. Scott was in numbers larger than any we have had yet concentrated under one command in Mexico and must be invisible against any power that Mexico may oppose to it.

[JM]

Thursday, August 19, 1847, MG47v48n25p3c2 590 words

Manifest Destiny

To the Editors of the National Intelligence

Gentlemen: Every one has heard of the thief who, on trail for crimes begged the judge to remit his punishment because it was his "manifest destiny" to be a thief. "It may be so," said the Judge, "but doest thou not see that it is also the manifest destiny to be hanged for stealing?"

In my opinion, gentlemen, honor, justice, humanity, morality, and the prudence are much safer guidelines than "manifest destiny". And if we neglect the former to pursue the latter, we may find ourselves involved in the most serious difficulties.

It was the "manifest destiny" of Bonaparte to conquer half of Europe; but it was also his "manifest destiny" to die in miserable exile on the rock of St.Helens.

It was the "manifest destiny" of the Romans to conquer and plunder half the world; but it was also their "manifest destiny" to be harassed by the incessant civil wars, oppressed by ferocious despots and finally, conquered and plundered by innumerable bordes of pitiless savages.

...unreadable... most assuredly not. In a country so prodigiously extensive as this would then be impossible to frame laws equally acceptable to all parts of our population; sad, unless they were acceptable, they could not be enforced.

Let us remember that the most ancient Republic in the world is the smallest. The Republic of San Marino, in the mountains of Italy, with a territory of only thirty square miles, has existed for nearly fourteen cneteries. A deputation of her citizens waited upon Bonaparte, when he commanded the French armies in Italy, and were received with marked respect. He offered them some cannon and an increase in territory. The cannon they accepted, the territory they wisely declined, not wishing probably to be engaged in the miserable folly of attempting to govern people without their consent.

But we are told that this war is doing much good to both countries. Those who give us this information are bound to... what this good consists. Is it doing good to Mexico to murder her people, destroy their property, batter down their cities, break up their civil institutions, sad and expose the peaceable portion of her population to the insults of unprincipled men, from this country, and murderous guerrillas at home? Or is it doing good to the United States to entice a way our valuable citizens to die or be killed in a foreign land, to create an enormous national debt, to exasperate the feelings of all Mexico against us, and to neglect all improvement at home in order that we may have money to spend in murdering our neighbors abroad?

If wars do good, then Tamerlane, who laid waste half Asia with his horde of barbarians, murdered five millions of people, and raised a pyramid of seventy thousand human skulls on the plains of Samarcand, was a philanthropist, a benefactor of his race; and William Penn, the friend of peace and humanity, who founded the noble state of Pennsylvania on the strictest principles of justice and benevolence, was a fool and a visionary.

But peace is emphatically the mission of those United States, and if we elect men to office who, instead of encouraging the pursuits of peace, shall, in their insane folly, make it their business to excite wars between us and foreign nations, we shall show but little more wisdom than the fabled trees of Jotham, which, in choosing their king, neglected all the useful trees of the forest, and "put their trust in the shadow of the bramble."
Col. M'Pherson of Page

Whatever may be said of the vacillation displayed by his Excellency, the President, upon the Oregon question, or however just may be the charges of insincerity and double dealing in regard to the distribution of the spoils, which are occasionally preferred against him by such distinguished members of the party as Capt. Ryndes and Parson McCalla,—there is one class of his followers who are never called upon to mourn over a diminution of his right royal favor.

Although one distinguished Senator may be forced to confess that he has been “deceived” and his constituents “betrayed” whilst another is thwarted in his cherished ambition to be a Lieut. General, and huffed by Secretary Marcy to boot, no boon is too great, no exhibition of favor too striking, to express in adequate terms the gratitude of the President to those who have had the wit to discover, and the boldness to uphold the military genius displayed by James K. Polk in the manage of the war with Mexico.

We take for granted, that no one of our readers has forgotten the famous resolution introduced by Col. McPherson in the House of Delegates of Virginia last winter, by which the military reputation of the President was violated by the endorsement of that body and the attempts of the Whigs to transfer the...so dearly won by Mr. Polk, to the browns of Gen. Taylor,” successfully... (unreadable) ...

Letter From Mexico

We were on yesterday, shewn a letter from an old friend who is now in Mexico, with the Augusta Volunteers. We take the liberty of making the subjoined extracts:

"Saltillo, July 15, 1847.

Well, we are now in for it, and I suppose we will have to ‘grim and bear it.' Clarke is now at home, and nine others-five are dead of corps, Alex Grove, James Brown, John Bowles, Jacob Long, and Miles Sims, and in all probability more will soon follow them. More than a third of what are left of us are unfit for duty. I am now as I always have been, in fine health, weighing about 155 pounds.

Give my respects to Maj. Lewis and tell him if he has any idea of contending for the territory of Mexico, that he had better come and look at it before he enters the meanest he ever saw. I would not live upon it, if I could get another place for the whole of it.”

Thank you friend, we have no desire to speculate upon anything just now even the probability of a speedy termination of the war.”

Landing of Paredes

The Washington Union’s explanation of the landing of Paredes at Vera Cruz, remarks—

If any one, after reading this article from the Union, doubts that the administration at Washington connived at the passage of Paredes through Vera Cruz, as it did Santa Anna, by Commodore Conner’s squadron, he must be stupid in the extreme.

The Alexandria Gazette puts the following questions:

The enquiry is made—and with great show of reason—if it was so heinous an offence to permit Paredes to come back to Mexico, why was it not equally as wrong to connive at and even authorize the return of Santa Anna, come read us this
Thursday, August 26, 1847 MG47v4n26p4c3 68 words

Patriotic Devotion

Some of the Polk papers are making a great hurrah about a brother of Polk going to Mexico. One of his friends heads it "Patriotic Devotion." Polk’s brother is doing no more than the sons and brothers of many of the Whigs have done. Instead of honoring them with the compliment of “Patriotic Devotion” the only thanks they receive is the charge of "Moral Treason." - Rich Rep.

Thursday, August 26, 1847 MG47v4n26p4c3 107 words

From Indian Country

A correspondent of the St. Louis Reveille, writing from the Osage nation, says that the Camanche Indians now in council with Osages told the latter that the Spaniards, (meaning Mexicans, we presume) had advanced them large sum of money, and made many presents of mules, as payment for murdering the Americans who traveled along the road, and destroying their property. In order to stimulate them to this work, large rewards were literally paid for every scalp and oxtail which the Camanches brought in. It was therefore their intention to take their old stands on both sides of the Arkansas river early in the spring.

Thursday, August 26, 1847, MG47v4n26 words784

Later from Vera Cruz and Tampico

The steamship New Orleans, Capt. Auld, arrived yesterday afternoon, having sailed from Vera Cruz the evening of the 7th inst., and from Tampico the evening of the 10th.

Dr. Hawkins, of Baltimore, died of yellow fever at Tampico on the 7th inst. [His corpse was brought to New Orleans on board the New Orleans.]

The New Orleans brings mails from Vera Cruz and Tampico. We regret to learn that the Tampico mail was stolen at an early hour yesterday morning and rifled of a portion of its contents. Some of the letters were subsequently recovered, though the rogue supposed he had disposed of them by casting them into a water closet. In the mail was a letter addressed to William Swift, Esq., from the contents of which it would appear that three U.S. treasury notes, numbered 321, 322 and 323 for $500 each, have been abstracted. - They were dated Oct. 31, 1846. It is supposed that the other valuable letters have been stolen.

Capt. White’s company of the 3d Louisiana battalion received orders at Vera Cruz to embark on board the New Orleans and proceed to Tampico. They did so at once, and reached their destination on the 4th isn’t. The Tampico Sentinel says they mustered one hundred men rank and file.

A train left the evening of the 6th inst., for the army above under the command of Col. Wilson, of the 12th Infantry. The train was escorted by about 1000 men. Some accounts set down the number of troops in this train at from 1500 to 2000; our own correspondent says one thousand. Verbal reports say that Col. Wilson was taken suddenly ill and could not proceed, and that the command devolved upon another officer whose name is not recollected. Our letters say nothing of this.

Nothing later has been received by this arrival from the army at Puebla. Various rumors had reached Vera Cruz, purporting to be from Mexico. One of these is to the effect that Commissioners had actually been appointed by Santa Anna to meet Mr. Trist. - Our correspondent at Vera Cruz, writing on the 7th inst., attaches importance to this rumor. We may recur to it.

A courier from Jalapa arrived at Vera Cruz on the 7th instant, and by this we have received the Bullet in (a Mexican paper published at Jalapa) of the 1st and 3d of August. The letters received by this mail give no later news from Mexico or Puebla, but some further details.

We have received by this arrival a copy of the Tampico Sentinel of the 8th inst. That paper sums up the state of affairs in that city thus:

We have not been attacked, we are not all ... [illegible] nor is the yellow fever carrying death and destruction into the dwelling place of our inhabitants; but on the contrary, we are in the enjoyment of a reasonable share of . . . [illegible]

We have received no letters from Tampico by this arrival.

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 14th inst., says:

A postscript to a letter received from an officer of the army at Vera Cruz, says: "We have indirect news from Gen. Scorr- the aspect is pacific." No further details or explanation as to the channel by which it was received, or the exact tenor of the news.

Various reports were in circulation in Vera Cruz, but little credence attached to any of them.

One of the reports, to which some faith was given, was that the enemy had blown up the West end of the National Bridge.

A Vera Cruz letter in the New Orleans Times, written on the evening of the 7th instant, says-

The steamer Mississippi will sail for Pensacola in a few days, and probably from that place for the North. There is much sickness on board, and many cases of Yellow Fever.

The vomito in this city seems to have taken a lull, very few cases having occurred for the past seven days. During the fifteen days previous to the 1st instant 81 Americans died, about half with the vomito. I think the first half of this month will give a smaller number, but the first rain will probably make up the amount to an average.

An officer has just come in from the train Maj. Leley, and reports the greater part of the wagons broke down, the end of the train only one mile from camp.

The receipts at the Custom House at Tampico, for the months of May and June, were $70,000, the cost of collection being only a few hundred dollars.

We find the following letter in the New Orleans Delta, dated- Tampico, Aug. 9, 1847.

[JM]

September 1847

MG47v48n27p2c1, September 2, 1847, IMPORTANT NEWS

Gen. Scott’s Advance on the Capital of Mexico -- Skirmish with the Guerillas-Severe loss of Life -- Escape of Major Gaines and Midshipman Rogers ------- Sickness in the Squadron, and at Tampico and Vera Cruz.

ARRIVAL OF THE GALVESTON.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM PUEBLA!

By the arrival of the steamship Galveston, Capt. Haviland, from Vera Cruz, via Tampico, Brazos and Galveston, the New Orleans Picayune has dates from Vera Cruz to the 12th inst., And from Puebla to the 6th inst.—just one week later than we had before received.

Gen. Scott was still at Puebla on the 6th inst., but the array was to take up the line of march the next day for the city of Mexico-- Gen. Twigg's division leaving on the 7th, Gen. Quitman's on the 8th, Gen. Worth's on the 9th, and gen. Pillow's on the 10th. Col Childs remains in command at Puebla, with an efficient garrison. Gen. Scott himself would probably accompany Gen. Quitman's division
Gen. Pierce arrived at Puebla on the 6th inst. He lost not a single man on his march, not withstanding “another severe battle with guerillas.”

The train which left Vera Cruz on the evening of the 6th inst., was attacked on the 10th inst., at Paso Oneja, about 33 miles from Vera Cruz. Attacks were made simultaneously in front, in rear, and upon the centre of the train; but the guerillas were repulsed at all points, and the train advanced and encamped about a mile beyond. In this encampment Capt. Jas. H. Caldwell, of the Voltiguer, and Capt. Authurc Cummings, of the 11th Infantry, were severely wounded, but hopes were entertained of their recovery. The commanding officer had sent to Vera Cruz for a detachment of horse, to escort ambulances to take back the wounded, the numbers of which it was thought might be augmented by the time the train reached the National Bridge. Ten non-commissioned officers and privates were wounded in the engagement just referred to; one of them has since died. The escort of the train was 1060 strong, and was under the command of Maj. Lally, of the 9th infantry, Col. Wilson being down with the yellow fever. Governor Wilson had ordered up reinforcements. The National Bridge is the point where a decisive action was expected. There was a report in Vera Cruz that the guerillas had destroyed a part of the bridge and erected defenses works there. They were said to be 4000 strong.

Mr. Kendall recognizes the death of Lieut. Hill, of the Second Dragoons, and Dr. Hammer of the South Carolina Regiment. Lieut. Guiot, Adjutant of the Louisiana battalion, died in Vera Cruz on the 9th inst., after three days illness.

The reports as to the health of Vera Cruz are more favorable. Col. Wilson was convalescent and considered out of danger.

The Spanish Minister resident in Mexico, was expected in Vera Cruz about the 25th inst., on his way to Spain. He would be escorted by a body of Mexican lancers.

Midshipman Rogers escaped from the city of Mexico, and reached Puebla on the 3d inst., in safety. He was not on parole at the time, but at large in the capital under a bond with a money penalty, not to break his bounds, and he came off with the knowledge and by permission of his surety. He reports that Santa Anna, has not more than 15,000 men, who are well armed and organized. Perhaps he was not aware that Valencia had arrived with reinforcements from San Luis.

Major Gaines also made his escape, and arrived safely at Puebla on the 4th, late at night. It seems that all the American officers who were prisoners in the city had been ordered to the headquarters of Gen. Lombardini, and were there told that they must prepare, in twelve hours, to go to Toluca. All of them, save Major Gaines and Borland and Capt. Danley, gave their paroles that they would proceed to that place, and started in the stage the next day. Major Gaines made his escape the same night, and after being once in the hands of the guerillas, and running many other narrow risks, succeeded in getting through. Major Gaines thinks Santa Anna has about 15,000 tolerably well uniformed and drilled men, to which must be added rabble of undisciplined recruits, caught and picked up every way, and giving little strength to the army.

The main defense of the Mexicans—that upon which they most rely—is at the Penon and at this point they have planted some of their best cannon. Santa Anna himself is described as being in a greater dilemma than ever. The jealousy and obstinacy of his enemies prevent his openly avowing himself in favor of peace, and he is shrewd enough to know that the next battle will result against him. Thus his own downfall is staring him in the face, turn which way he will, and he is now awaiting some revolution of Fortune’s wheel to extricate himself. He is so fruitful in expedients that he may yet rise triumphantly from the whirlpool of difficulties by which he is surrounded.

Mr. Kendall complains bitterly of the conduct of the government in not providing funds for the army, and the Quartermasters and Commissaries had been obliged to pay as high as fifteen per cent. For money to defray the expenses of the march from Pueble to Mexico. Gen. Pierce's train, contrary to expectation, did not take army money. Neither did it take any clothing, nor any of the necessaries for the well being of the army, to say nothing of the comfort, and hence all have to purchase at rates which amount to ruinous extortion.

Lieut. C. W. Chauncey. Commanding the U.S. Steamer Spitfire, died on the 9th inst., at Anton Lizardo The Decatur left on the 7th. on a cruise, the fever having broken out aboard. A few cases of fever have made their appearance at Tampico, but the Sentinel says there is no epidemic.

---

MG47v48n27p2c1, September 2, 1847, IMPORTANT FROM THE YUCATAN

From the New Orleans Bee, Aug. 22, 1847.

IMPORTANT FROM THE YUCATAN

Insurrection of Indians in the Yucatan—Horrible slaughter of the White Inhabitants.—Appeal to the Inhabitants of Guatemala to arrest the Mexicans.
Through the politeness of the editors of La Patria. [Spanish paper published in New Orleans,] we have been favored with a proof sheet of the interesting items which they have received by the schooner Primera Campechana, arrived yesterday afternoon from Campeachy.

It appear that an insurrection had broken out among the Indians at Yucatan, the object of which was to slaughter all the white inhabitants of that country. But the plot was fortunately discovered in time, although a number of inhabitants have been massacred in several villages.

All the white and mulatto men, together with the women and children of Tepich, were murdered by the Indians. On of their Chiefs, Antonio Ay, was taken prisoner and executed. They declared that the plot had been organized for about 17 years.

The part question which had existed between the Yucatecos was set aside, and they all united in order to resist insurgents.

El Siglio XIX, a paper published in Yucatan, publishes two proclamations—-one from the President of the State of Honduras—the other two generals, in which they call the attention of the centro Americans to the fate of the Mexican republic, and solicit their assistance in favor of their unfortunate neighbors. The editors of La Patria intend to publish in their next paper those documents.

From the New Orleans Times, Aug 29

MORE NEWS FROM VERA CRUZ

Particulars of the attack on Maj. Lally’s Train

--Reported Defeat of our Troops by Guerillas.

We are also indebted to the Patria for some particulars regarding Maj. Lally’s train, published in the extra of that paper yesterday. A correspondent from Vera Cruz, who signs himself El Jarecho, under date 15th inst., says Padre Jarauta had returned to that vicinity at the head of 400 guerrillas, and, having effected a junction with two other bands, commanded by Munoz and Alberto, attacked Maj. Lally’s train a Tolome.

After killing and wounding a few of our troops, and capturing some wagons, they had taken post at a spot called Puente Chica, near the Puente Nacional. Maj. Lally, having divided his command in six columns, attacked the position occupied by the guerrillas, with his whole force, but after a sanguinary fight, he was driven back, leaving the ground covered with his killed and wounded.

The guerrillas, through want of ammunition, were obliged to abandon their position, which was then occupied by the Americans on the morning of the 13th. This is the key to the truth in this strange story, which is, we believe, nothing but Mexican gasconade; for if our troops still advanced, the account of their defeat cannot be true.

The Patria’s correspondent adds that, on the same day, negotiations were opened with the chiefs of the guerrillas for a capitulation of the whole conoyo. The number of wagons lost is said to be very great, and the killed and wounded of our men exceeds 250 men, reducing the whole command to 400 and off effective troops. The guerrillas were in great force on this occasion; and it is said that, as they are persuaded that there is a large amount of specie with the train, it will be attacked throughout the whole of its long route, as long as the enemy can bring an effective man into the field.

El Jarocho, at the close of his letter, says information has just arrived that “the Yankees have capitulated.” The whole tale is grossly exaggerated, we have no doubt, though we believe that Maj. Lally’s train has had to fight its way onward, against disadvantages with which other preceding trains have not had to contend—-such as vastly increased numbers on the party of the assailants, &c. The necessity of forwarding reinforcements from Vera Cruz, sufficiently proves the fact of the commands having been vigorously attacked.

From THE RIO GRANDE

An arrival at New Orleans brings advices from Brazos to the 17th instant.
It appears that the roads between Monterey and Camargo are becoming more and more infested with irregular cavalry and guerrilla bands, and several trails have been attacked.

La Patria published at New Orleans, contains a letter from Havana, which states that four British officers accompanied Paredes, but it does not appear whether they had landed at Vera Cruz.

MG47v48n27p2c3, September 2, 1847, GEN SAM HOUSTON

This personage is out in one of the Nashville papers in reply to Mr. Tyler's late letter upon the subject of the annexation of Texas. The object of this communication, seems to be, to prove that in the annexation intrigues, the general was, as the Yankee's say, a "little too cute," for his accidency, who proved himself upon this as on most other occasions of his public career, to be "very small potatoes."

MG47v48n27p2c3, September 2, 1847, ANOTHER CALL FOR TROOPS

We learn from the union that the War Department has just called for five new regiments, exclusive of the regiment from Ohio, which is already reported to be raised, and is now in progress of being mustered into the public service, and will in a few days be en route for Vera Cruz.

The five regiment now called for are to be drawn as follows: Two regiment from Kentucky, two from Tennessee, and one from Indiana.

These five regiments, says the Union, are expected to be rapidly raised, and promptly placed in the public service. Offers have already been made which induced the Executive to designate these States, and to make the necessary arrangements from embodying these troops without delay.—Free Press

MG47v48n27p2c3, September 2, 1847, MR. BENTON IN A NEW POSITION

The Louisville Journal of the 17th, alluding to a report that Col. Benton had written to Washington demanding a Court Martial for the vindication of his son-in-law, Col. Fremont, and the punishment of his adversaries in the late troubles in California, adds:

"It is certain that Col. Benton is preparing himself for a terrific attack upon the Administration next winter in the Senate chamber.----At town in the interior of Kentucky, a few days ago, he got into a conversation upon the subject of the Mexican war and became immensely excited, perfectly infuriated. He said that an opportunity had been passed by of making an advantageous and honorable peace, and that he could show the fact and would show it. As for the whole management of the war, he averred that it had been utterly disgraceful. He stated that he should go to Washington and make one speech upon subject, only one, and that it would be the greatest speech of his life, and he was willing that it should be the last. In speaking of the Administration, his language barely, if at all, fell short of downright cursing. His wrathful declaration lasted a full hour."

MG47v48n28p1c7, September 9, 1847, A LETTER FROM MEXICO

We copy from the Lewisburg Chronicle the following excellent letter, from one of the Augusta Volunteers to that paper. It is one of the most interesting letters we have seen among many which have been written from the Seat of War.

SALITLLIO, Mexico, July 20th, 1847.

Messrs Editors—As a favorable opportunity presents itself, to forward a letter, I embrace it with a view of saying something to you of my present whereabouts, the city itself, the inhabitants, and some of their many peculiarities, as a people, and nation.

Saltillo, as I have before stated, is a town numbering (as I am informed) 40,000 inhabitants—situated about midway, on a hill side between two mountains (the names of which I do not know, nor can I find them upon the map.) the city is nearly square, running North and South; the houses are all white, mostly one story, though these are as high as two story buildings in the States. The squares are one soled building and the tops being flat, form a good fort in time of an
The mode of burial here, is novel indeed.——Though there have been a great many deaths here among the children and others, I have witnessed but three of their burials, to-wit: one umbra and two muchachas——(one man and two children.) The coffin after being decorated with flowers, and crossed in about one hundred places, was preceded by about twenty-five of men, each with a lighted candle, to the church, where his body remained for a short time during which time all the bells of the different churches, (about fifty in number) were claimed; and then taken to the graveyard and intered.—No mourners follow the corpse.

The other two- the muchacha’s, were buried as follows: these were carried upon a bier, which was splendidly decorated with flowers, and silk, with a wreath extending about two feet and a half above the head, the body lying uncoffined upon the bier; as soon as the corpse, was ready for removal from the house of its parents, some of the subaltern of the churches, whose duty it was, commenced sending up, sky rockets, and preceded the corpse, about 30 feet to the church, all the time sending up rockets. Immediately behind these two, were two lads, about 15 years of age, dressed in red flannel, and white aprons, bare-headed, one with a shield upon his arm, the other with a bludgeon in his hand. Behind these were six musicians, two with clarionets, and four with violins, playing — the followed the corpse, the priest, and now a man with the coffin upon his shoulder. A few paces in the rear followed a crowd of men and children, without any respect to order——all went to the church, and here the body, I resume, was put into the coffin, for I could not enter to see, such a crowd of volunteers had assembled around the door; the priest upon his knees, made some kind of noise, which lie called singing, no doubt, and was responded to by one of the musicians, after which about twenty rockets were put off at one time, and the corpse shouldered and removed towards the burial ground; what took place then, I do no know, for I went no farther.

The cause of all this ceremony, I understand is, that they believe that all infants are saints, and that it would be sacrilege, if this parade was not made of them. The same ceremony takes place, whenever, an idiot or insane person dies, from the same belief.

The people here, are the most indolent creatures I ever saw, all the labor being preformed by the females.

Though there are here, many, very many, excellent houses, none have furniture. The natives in the main cook on the ground, eat, and sit on the ground and sleep on the ground. The females, while sitting, assume the position of a tailor, on the board.

In this city, there are a number of wealth and intelligent citizens. These are all friendly to our form of government and institutions, whole on the other hand, the other class are most disaffected people towards us in the whole of Mexico. Scarcely a night passes here that some injury is not inflicted by the Mexicans, upon the American citizens. In the last week two have been badly wounded and two killed. We never think of leaving our rendezvous, alone, and when we do go out, we are generally armed from head to foot.

How long we are to remain here with nothing to do, time will determine. One day we hear news that peace is near at hand, the next that a large army is advancing, and close upon us. To remain here, suffering under the monotony of the times, is misery. The opportunity to go home, or get in an engagement, would either be cheerfully embraced.

For the last three days, we have been anticipating an attack, and there is no doubt I presume, but there is a body of armed Mexicans, between 7 and 8,000 within sixty miles of us; but really I don’t know whether to say, that I believe that they will advance upon the city, or that they will not. I have not seen Capt. Erskine for several days; when I seen him last, however he was well, though he has been quite unfortunate since he has been in Mexico——having lost his servant, fine horse and golf watch. Crist. Cole and myself are enjoying unusual good health. Respectfully yours,

D. A. STOFER

[BRM]

MG47v48n28p2c4, September 9, 1847, COL. BENTON

The St. Louis Republican says:
"Col. Benton wished to obtain from us the name of the author of a communication which appeared in our paper, written by an eye-witness of the transaction in California. After trying several means to induce a disclosure of the writer's name, he resolved on preferring charges, demanding a court-martial, and thus bring the writer out as a witness. Col. Benton bases his charges against Col. Fremont on the communication in the Republican, and also on articles which appeared in the Louisville Journal and the New Orleans Picayune—and for the authorship of the two latter, refers to Lieut. Emory of the U. States Army. We cannot believe that "the chief of the War Department will refuse this imperious request."

Whether this Court martial has been demanded by the direction of Col. Fremont, and in his name, or whether Old Bullion, "solitary and alone has set this ball in motion," the Republican does not say. He seems, however, to have taken his son-in-law under his especial guardianship, and is especially loth to allow him to slip his leading strings. The position in which he places Fremont by the system of dry nursing, appears to us a little ludicrous, and we should doubt whether it is likely to prove altogether grateful to the vanity of that gentleman.

By the way, we see it announce that Col. B. has ready for the press certain notes observations upon public men and public affairs for the last thirty years! We feel much curiosity to see them, and cannot conjecture what manner of book they will make. We are disposed to think, however, that the author will likewise be the principal hero, and that it will be made abundantly evident that, but for him, the world would have censed to roll upon its axis many a long year ago. The monomania of the Colonel seems to consist in desire to monopolize all the glory of the day, and he will be more generous than we suspect him of being, if he leaves a ray for the use of any contemporary. This trait will only render the book the more amusing, as it throws an infinitely ludicrous air over all he says or does, even in the most serious manner, and upon the most solemn occasions.——Rich. Whig

[BRM]

MG47v48n28p2c5, September 9, 1847, LANDING OF PAREDES

The Boston Courier publishing the Washington Union's explanation of the lading of Paredes at Vera Cruz, remarks--

If any one, after reading this article from the Union, doubts that the administration at Washington connived at the passage of Paredes through Vera Cruz, as it did Santa Anna, by Commodore Conner's squadron, he must be stupid in the extreme.

The Alexandria Gazette puts the following questions:

The enquiry is made---- and with great show of reason----If it was so heinous an offence to permit Paredes to come back to Mexico, why was it not equally as wrong to connive at and even authorize the return of Santa Anna?—"Come, read us the riddle.
[BRM]

MG47v48n28p2c5, September 9, 1847, DIVERSION OF TROOPS

The Union copies from the Picayune without contradiction, a paragraph which states that Gen. Hopping's command is to be taken from Gen. Taylor; as well as several general officers, and sent to Vera Cruz. The same paper states that the advance upon San Luis Potosi is definitely abandoned. Such being the fact, and their being no long any work for the General Tailor to do, he ought to be permitted to come home. The people will probably find some employment before long.---Rich. Rep.
[BRM]

MG47v48n28p2c6, September 9, 1847, GEN. TAYLOR AND THE PRESIDENCY

The "Democrats" have been again boring Gen. Taylor; but as great as in their skill in the boring art, they can't make nothing out of the Old Hero. The anxious inquirer after the General's opinions in the present case; are certain patent Democrats who met in the little town of Clarksville, Tennesse: They held a meeting, passed sundry resolutions, and ordered them to be sent to ken. Taylor, accompanied by a letter for a committee of the said Democrats, in convention assembled, requesting him to be so kind, so very obliging, as to say what were his opinions on those resolutions, which so frankly expressed their own, and which with so much consideration had sent to him. But the General, though acknowledging the compliment, declines returning it. He sends off these Democratic gentlemen, who have so much solicitude for him and his opinions, just as he did Deloney----Dr. Deloney---with precious little satisfaction.

The interesting resolutions communicated by these kind Democrats, were against a National Bank---in favor of the Independent Treasury---approved of Annexation---approved of the present Administration---declared that the Democratic party cannot support any man whose principles are not well defined.
This last letter of Gen. Taylor settles a question between the Enquirer and ourselves.---The Enquirer inferred from the letter to Deloney that the General had no opinions on the Bank and Tariff questions, because he said he could not answer the interrogatories relating to them without more time than he could spare to consider those subjects. We contended that the fair interpretation was the General Taylor meant that he had not time to give that consideration to those subjects necessary to a clear and proper expressions of his opinions.---The letter from Gen. Taylor, we not publish, takes this very ground. If he were disposed to answer, he says, "I cannot spare the time from my official duties to devote to the investigation of those subjects, which their importance seems to require, to enable me to reply to them in a way, that would be satisfactory to myself."---Richmond Compiler.

---

MG47v48n28p2c7, September 9, 1847, WHO IS SANTA ANNA

History tells us that he first distinguished himself in public life, in 1821, as the supporter of Iturbide; then in arms against him, and chiefly instrumental in his fall and in procuring the adoption of the Federal Constitution; about a year afterwards, attempting and failing to obtain the title and power of Protector of the Republic; then four or five years living in retirement, out of public employ; re-appearing, in 1828, on the news of Pedraza's election to the Presidency, raising the standard in favor of his opponent, Guerrero; then defeated, driven to the mountains, and outlawed; re-called almost immediately, and placed at the head of the Army sent out to oppose him then in 1829, made Secretary of War and Commander-in-Chief of the Army, in that capacity repelling and conquering the ill-digested Spanish invasion under Barradas; soon after, driven from office with the President, Guerrero; again in arms, driving Bustamente from power; then succeeding to the Presidency of the Republic and, whilst President, in the midst of a successful military career, beaten, captured, and held prisoner by the Texans; released by them, repaired to Washington, and sent home in a public vessel of the United States; there coldly and repulsively received; retiring to his farm for two years; called from it to head an army to resist the invasion of the Mexican Territory by the forces of France; in a gallant sally, losing his leg and almost his life by another sudden revolution of things, again President, and in effect Dictator of the Mexican Republic; in 1842, retires from the Presidency to regain his health, having become very much enfeebled; in 1844-45, by another revolution, he was defeated, taken prisoner, and banished; and is now, in 1847, again the President of the Republic of Mexico.

Such is the nut shell history of the man whom James K. Polk, in his wisdom attempted to bribe! Would Henry Clay have far forgotten his station, were he President of the United States, as to let himself down to traffick with such a man as this? Oh my country--my country! DAN.

---

MG47v48n29p2c1, September 16, 1847, GLORIOUS VICTORY: TWO MORE BATTLES

From the New Orleans Picayune, September 3.

The steamship Fashion, Capt. O'Brady, arrived yesterday Evening from Vera Cruz, by way of Tampico. She left Vera Cruz on the 27th of August, and Tampico on the 29th.
The news arrival is the most important we have received in many months from Mexico. Our army has not only advanced to the city of Mexico, but has had two engagements with the enemy, close under the walls of the city, and defeated them. The Mexicans have been brought to supplicate a suspension of arms, and Gen. Scott has granted it. The Mexican Congress has been convoked to take into consideration Mr. Trist’s propositions.

The news was received in Vera Cruz on the evening of the 26th ult., by an express courier from Orizaba, who brought down the following letter to Mr. Dimond, the collector at Vera Cruz, to whose courtesy we are indebted for the use of the letter, which we proceed to give:

---

ORIZABA, Aug. 25th, 1847

My dear Friend—— The Mexican mail, which has just come in, brings the following intelligence, which I copy from the Diario Oficial Gobierno. Being of so great importance, I send you this express courier, who will be with you to-morrow about 12 o’clock.

On the 20th two brigades commanded by Gen. Valencia and Santa Anna, went out to attack the Americans near San Angel*. Valencia’s division has been completely defeated and Santa Anna, after the first rencontre, fell back also in disorder of the city.

The immediately after this asked for a suspension of hostilities, and offered to hear the propositions of peace from Mr. Trist.

The next day the Minister of Foreign Relations invited the Congress, through the news papers, to meet for that purpose.

These are the great facts, which no doubt will bring after them peace.

Yours Truly,
F.M. Dimond, Esq.
---

*Another letter says Los Llanos de San Angel.

Another express arrived in Vera Cruz on the 20th, with letters containing the same news in substance, and the following translation of the announcement of it in the Diario Official del Gobierno:

Translated from the Diario Official del Gobierno.

On the 20th of August, Scott’s troops, who intended on marching on Penon, turned it and arrived near Tacubaya. As soon as the news was known at Mexico, Valencia’s division went out to attack the Amricans and Lost Llanos de San Angel, and was completely routed. Next came Santa Anna, with another division, which shared the same fate after some fighting. The Mexicans retreated to the capital in great disorder, and such was the panic created by their defeat that the Minister of Foreign Relations immediately convoked the Congress to take into consideration Mr. Trist’s proposition. A suspension of amrs was demanded by the Mexicans and granted. The Americans are around Mexico, but had not entered the city on the 21st.

Such are the meager details which we have of the important events. No couriers from Gen. Scott’s army direct have been able to get through, so far as we can learn. But from the foregoing statements it is manifest that Gen. Scott holds the city of Mexico at his command. That Gen. Scoot did not choose to enter the city is manifest. He was doubtless deterred from entering it by a desire to save the pride of the Mexicans when upon the eve of important negotiations. It is now supposed that the extraordinary courier which left Vera Cruz from Mexico on the 12th ult., a day in advance of the regular English courier was the bearer of instructions to the British Minister to offer again his mediation and we think it safely to suppose that Gen. Scott was influenced by a knowledge of this mediation to trust once again to the efforts of Mr. Trist to negotiate a peace, and so spared the Mexicans the humiliation of the armed occupation of their capital. His characteristic humanity may also be presumed to have strongly influenced him to save Mexico from the violence of a hostile occupation. We may recur to this point and to the prospects of peace which some may not entertain.

We have given none of the rumors current in Vera Cruz as to the fall of Mexico. They are evidently founded on imperfect rumors of the real state of facts. The rumors circulated here that Santa Anna and Valencia were taken prisoners we believe are totally unfounded.

In regard to the train under Major Lally the intelligence is favorable. We are informed from a ver responsible source that he is known to have passed Perote and bees on his was safely to Puébla. He made some delay in Jalapa. Our readers may be interested in what is said of the movements of the train prior to its leaving Jalapa in the Sun of Anabuac:

The Boletin of Jalapa says that the train, after having been attacked at Cerro Gordo, retired to the Plan, at the same time the guerrillas also retired. On the following day the train commence marching for Jalapa, and on Thursday evening had not yet entered that place. On the 19th it was reported at Jalapa that the guerrillas would attack our troops, and the citizens succeeded in reaching their homes without receiving any injury.

The guerrillas are said to have numbered 350. The fire commenced at half past 5 O'clock and lasted but a short time. At night tranquility prevailed in the city, and a party of mounted men from the train, entered the city and passed through the principal street; at the same time the guerrillas were seen near by. The Boletin says that the loss on the side of the guerrillas was small.

At 11 o'clock on the 19th, Major Lally enquired of the alcalde whether the citizens of Jalapa would commit hostilities against the Americans or not. To which the alcalde answered that the population was unarmed; but that a number of guerrillas being in the neighborhood he could not take the responsibility of their actions. On the morning of the 20th, the train of wagons and the troops entered the city. The Boletin says that the wagons are filled with sick and wounded.

Yesterday [the 24th ult.] it was rumored in Vera Cruz that Father Jarauta had attacked the train a short distance the other side of Jalapa, but that he had been driven back by our troops, with loss on both sides.

In addition to the foregoing, we have been favored with two notes following, the first of which is a translation from the Spanish:

JALAPA, Aug. 20th, 1847:

The American army, after much suffering on the road, have been again attacked at Don Rios by 700 guerrillas, and badly enough treated. Even before entrance into Jalapa there was some firing. Last night at 9 o'clock the Americans entered the city firing, and retreated on minus. He was lassoed by one of the guerrillas. This morning was sent a flag of truce to the Ayunta Miento, (city council) to ascertain whether they should enter as foes or friends, but without awaiting an answer they began to enter, and continued to 1pM., when all got in. There were 76 wagons and 895 men, among 317 were wounded and sick———Major Lally is sick——the horses are worn out——for which reason it is supposed they will remain here for some time. It is said that Father Jarauta will attack them nightley but nothing positive.

JARUTA, Aug 23, 1847.

Major Lally with his command is still here, and will probably remain her some time.—The guerrillas have all disappeared from this neighborhood, but where they have gone I am unable to say. Abourto, the guerrillas chief, died at Jalapa a few days since, some say of the wound in received in one of his attacks on Maj. Lally’s command, and other by fever.

We do not entertain any doubt that the train, as mentioned, above had passed Perote and gone in safety to Puebla.

Intelligence reached Col. Wilson on the morning of the 27th ult. That Lieut. David Henderson, of Capt. Fairchild’s company of Dragoons, and his party who were sent by Capt. Wells on the 15th of August to apprize Major Lally of the approach of reinforcements, were all shot by the guerrillas. There is little or no doubt of the correctness of this sad intelligence. Lieut. Henderson was a resident of New Orleans, and but recently embarked as a volunteer in his country’s service. He was a printer by profession, a man of courage and enterprise, and his fate will be sincerely lamented by his numerous friends.

[CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PICAYUNE]

VERA CRUZ, Aug 27, 1847.

An express arrived here on Tuesday from Alvardo to Commodore Perry, with information that the guerrillas had attacked that place the night before and killed a surgeon and two marines in the town. The steamers Petrita and Scorpion were immediately dispatched to reinforce those in possession of the place. [BRM]
From the New Orleans Times

LATER FROM BRAZOS

New Destination of Gen Taylor’s Force—Advance on San Luis Potosi Countermanded—Gen. Lane and Gen Cushing’s Brigades with Colonel Hays’ Rangers, ordered to proceed forthwith to Vera Cruz, &c., &c.

By the arrival here yesterday of the steamship Telegraph, Capt. Wilson, from Brazos, the 1st inst., we have received important news from Gen. Taylor’s headquarters, and the several military posts on the line of the Rio Grande.

Change of the Plan of the Campaign.----It appears that the plan of the campaign has been entirely changed from what was understood to be the arrangement here, some weeks ago, viz: the simultaneous advance of Generals Scott and Taylor’s divisions on the cities of Mexico and San Luis, respectively. No advance is to be made by Gen. Taylor, and not greater force will be kept in the valley of the Rio Grande, and thence to Saltillo, that is necessary to keep open communication.

We take the following summary of military news from the Flag of the 28th ult

Since our surmise in Wednesday’s paper in regard to the movements of troops, we have obtained additional information, and have full confidence that we can now state correctly what troops from this line are to proceed to Gen. Scott, and what distribution is to be made of those remaining with Gen. Taylor.

The In Diana regiment, Col. Gorman, and the Ohio, Col. Brough, under Brig. Gen. Lane—the Massachusetts regiment, Col. Wright and the 13th infantry, Col. Echols, together with Capt. Deas’s battery, under Brig. Gen. Cushing—will proceed immediately to Vera Cruz.

Col. Hay’s Texas regiment is also ordered to Vera Cruz. It has not yet made its appearance on the Rio Grande, but it is looked for daily, and will probably arrive at the Brazos before the other troops have embarked.

Gen. Wool’s command, to remain at Saltillo, will consist of the Virginia, North Carolina, and 2d Mississippi regiments of Volunteers, and Major Chevallie’s three companies of Texas rangers.

To remain at Gen. Taylor’s camp (Walnut Springs) only Lieut. Col. Fontleroy’s squadron of Maj. Bragg’s battery.

The 10th regiment, Col. Temple will garrison Matamoras, Reynosa and Camargo—Col. Temple at this place, Capt. Waldrodt at Reynosa, and Lieut. Col. Fay at Camargo.

Capt. Hunt’s artillery and Capt. Reed’s Texas cavalry are to be stationed at Camargo.

There yet remain, destination unassigned in this list, Col Butler’s squadron of 3d Dragoons, and two companies of Volunteer Cavalry, on from Alabama and the other from Illinois. Rumor says that the Dragoons are to proceed to Vera Cruz also, but we are informed that Col. Bulter has received no orders to that effect.

General Lane and Staff came down from Mier yesterday, and proceeded to the Brazos. His troops are on the way down and a portion will probably be her to-day.—Flag 28th ult.

Capt. Baylor and his party, who were supposed to have been cut off by the enemy, had safely arrived at Cerralvo.

Gen. Taylor will probable leave Monterey on a visit to his family in Louisiana, before the 1st October next, unless the War Department should send despatches, in the meantime, rendering it impossible for him to absent himself from the army.

[BRM]
The cheering news from the Seat of War, warrants the hope, that Mexico has at length abandoned all idea of prolonging a hopeless controversy with this country, and that for the present, no more of the brave and chivalric spirits of our land are to be offered up as bleeding sacrifices to the lust of democracy for “extending the area of freedom.”

At first, the charge that this war was undertaken for conquest, was indignantly denied by a large majority of the supporters of the administration; now that question how much of conquered Mexico is to be embraced in the extended limits of our Union, and with it comes the agitation of that fearful subject which erst came “like the sound of a fire bell at night” to appal the hearts of the then surviving patriots of the revolution, and which had like to have kindled a conflagration which would have laid in ashes the “beautiful Temple which our fathers builded.” The Principles of the “Missouri Compromise” would have kept this fearful subject at rest forever, had our rulers been content to keep that which was our own, without coveting the domain of our neighbors, and thus calling down upon our heads the wrath of the Almighty had denounced upon those “who covet and desire other men’s goods.” That the North will insist upon restrictions in the admission of this new Territory into the Union, to which the South cannot agree without great and manifest danger to her existing institutions, is but too plainly evidenced by the tone of the public press of both parties in the non-slaveholding States. It is, therefore useless to attempt to close our eyes to the fact, that we are converging upon a contest which would prove the severest trial our institutions have ever experienced. May God in his mercy turn aside the dark cloud that hangs upon our political horizon, is the fervent prayer that rises from the depths of every patriot heart, whilst we are not without strong hopes that there is wisdom and patriotism enough in our legislative councils to avert the impending danger.

Of on thing we are well assured, that whilst the conservatives of the Slaveholding States are willing to unite with their Northern brethren in opposing the enlargement of the boundaries of the Union, they are united as one man in opposition to any interference with the principle of the Missouri Compromise, whether in reference to States formed from old or new territory.

SALLTILLO, Mexico, July 27, 1847

Dear———; As I cannot entertain you with any moving incidents of military enterprise and adventure, I shall try to gather something from the still life and customs o the strange people I am among, that may serve to amuse you.

In my last, I mentioned 'the singular spectacle exhibited in the streets on Sunday evening, of a Chicken Cock, decorated like one of our own military heroes, carried in procession, and followed by a band of music. That bird, I have since learned from a gentleman who attended the sports of the evening, belonged to one of the Priests of the city, and was fought by him in person upon a wager of fifty dollars, which he lost—the chicken being killed. He had others, however, with which he proved more fortunate, and came off winner, in the end, some two hundred and fifty dollars. I am told he heals all his chickens himself, and has the reputation of being the most skilful cock fighter in Saltillo. The gentleman who gives me this information attended Church in the morning, and saw the same Priest administer the Sacrament of the Lord's Super to his deluded and misguided people.

About the same time that these sports of pit were going on, I witnessed one of the most pompous funerals I have yet seen. It was the funeral, I am informed, of an infant. The corpse was carried on a bier, and was completely hid under the mass of artificial flowers with which it was decorated. At the head of the corpse something like and arch was formed, rising to the height of about three feet, weathed with flowers, and enclosing in the centre a small image, I suppose of the Virgin Mary.—Immediately in advance of the corpse where the Priest and two attendants, the latter accoutred in red flannel frocks and pointed brimless caps, and near by at their side two miserably ragged and filthy looking beings, the one with a burning brand and the other a bundle of rockets, which were set off by the former almost as fast as the latter could hand them to him. The crowd that followed was very motly, consisting of mean looking men and women and ragged boys, and had more the appearance of a mod than a procession. Here and there, however, I could see some of the genteel exterior, and among them several women carrying vases of flowers. The funerals, I presume, are quite expensive, and I have no doubt are made a source of handsome profit to the priesthood. I did not follow the procession into the Church, and consequently can give no account of the ceremonies there. A marriage in high life was to have taken place in the principal Church of the city a few mornings since two o’clock, and I had determined to attend it, but for some reason it did not come off as expected. The Priests here, I understand, as a fee of a hundred dollars to marry a couple properly, so as to “secure a prosperous and happy marriage.” The price is certainly moderate enough, if the security to be obtained by it is worth anything. But there, I should say, is the rub. Still there is a little question that many put full confidence in it; so that where faith may not operate, fashion, or a desire, as we say in Virginia, to be married “like white folks,” will be sure in the general to make such items of service fat jobs to the priesthood.

There are a number of schools, I find, in Saltillo, and considerable attention is paid to education by the wealthier portion of the population. I have seen a few Mexican young men who were well educated, and some of the ladies of the same class are said to be highly accomplished. The harp, the guitar and the piano may sometimes be heard in passing along the streets. Still the masses are miserably degraded and ignorant—-but little, if any better, I should say, in appearance, color, conduct, morals, or intelligence, than our free negroes. It is a mistake, however to call them effeminate. They are generally of good size, and have the best developed chests I ever saw. They partake, too, rather more of the character of the Indian than the negro.

The municipal affairs are manage by the Alcade, who seems to have complete and absolute jurisdiction in all cases, whether civil or criminal. The only check upon him, indeed, seems to be that the office is elective, and the length of term, which, I believe, is but one or two years. The police are certainly very vigilant and quite efficient in their own way, so far as they undertake the correct public disorders. I witnessed a scene the other day in market which amused me very much. Tow stout boys were engaged in a furious fight, but unluckily for them a police-man happened to be near, who, instead of proceeding in the quiet, methodical way of one of our officers, immediately fell upon them, with his long rod, caring not which of them, or where he struck, and the infuriated combatants at once broke their holds and ran off. Thus the whole matter was settled in a second, which might have take up a day in our Corporation Court, his long rod, caring not which of them, or where he struck, and the infuriated combatants at once broke their holds and ran off. Thus the whole matter was settled in a second, which might have take up a day in our Corporation Court, consuming the valuable time of three or four Justices, and twelve honest jurors, to say nothing of the half dozen and ran off. Thus the whole matter was settled in a second, which might have take up a day in our Corporation Court, consuming the valuable time of three or four Justices, and twelve honest jurors, to say nothing of the half dozen gentlemen of the green-bag that are usually involved in such petty annoyances.

In their houses they have but little furniture, even among the better classes. A table, a few chairs, and probably a mirror, for the most part, make up the whole stock. Many, indeed, have neither tables, chairs, nor beds.—The family eat their meals seated round the dishes on the floor, and take their repose upon dried hides.

The chief amusements of the population here are cock-fighting and dancing, in both which the women participate. The costume of the women is pretty much like that of our own, the bustle not excepted, though they wear shawls over their heads drawn close under their chin, instead of bonnets.—- they have a slovenly mode too of wearing their dresses stripped down upon their haunches or waist, leaving their bosoms bare, when the shawl is thrown aside or only slightly protected by their under garment.

There is a light increase on our sick list to-day. We report 16 sick.

Your, &c.

-----

SALITLLO, Mexico, Aug. 2, 1847.

Dear—-: We are still without any definite news here as to the prospects of peace or war. The reports which reach us are of the most contradictory character, and it is impossibly to make any thing out of them. One day we hear that the terms of a treaty have been nearly arranged, and the next, that the Mexicans are in active preparation for a more vigorous prosecution of the way, and are actually investing Gen. Scott, cutting off his communication with Vera Cruz. In this state of things, I must ask you, therefore, to look elsewhere for information as regards the true condition of affairs. Here, all is in activity and deep repose, and likely to remain so, from every thing I can learn or the amount of force which is to be thrown upon the line; although a general order, I understand, was read on parade Camp, a few evenings ago, announcing the probability of an early forward movement. It may be, however, and I think it more than probable that it was only intended by the Commanding Officer to stimulate the troops, and keep them up more strictly to their duty, which the very listlessness of our lives is rather unfitting for. No one, who has not experienced it, can form any just idea of the irksomeness of mere camp or garrison duty. It is to the soldier what the dead calm at sea is to the sailor—-and any change, even the storm of battle, as in the case of the latter convulsion of the elements, is considered preferable.

I believe I have not mentioned heretofore that we have our revenue system of internal duties in full operation here; and it is producing a handsome income. Often two hundred and sometimes as much as five hundred dollars, are taken in, I am told, in a day. In a former letter, I think I intimated my difficulty in accounting for the rise of such a city as Saltillo in locality which presents to the observation apparently so few advantages. It seemed to me, indeed, like a city in a desert—-for, comparatively speaking, it is such, when we contrast the size and population of the place with the poverty or neglected condition of the lands for many miles in all directions around it. That mystery, however, is now solved. I understand that Saltillo has been from its earliest foundation, the seat of an extensive contraband or smuggling trade, and that to this it is indebted for all its importance.
The Mexicans are now celebrating High Mass in their Churches, and it is said that the services are to continue for nine days. In the principal Church here, they have a number of banners displayed, and a fine band of Martial Music. What all this means, if any thing, I d no pretend even to conjecture. It may be that these warlike exhibitions are merely in accordance with their common custom, for there is co-operation and mutual dependence, no doubt, between the Priesthood and the Military, in the management of the poor oppressed people of the country, for their own advantage.

There has been no material change in the health of the Company within the last few days. We now report twelve on the sick list. On more has been discharged, (Preston Brown,) and another would be, (Lewis Terrill,) if he were able to travel. A Board of Surgeons has been appointed to examine all cases for discharge, so that the probability is that prompt relief will be afforded in the future to those who deserve it, while the service will be more effectually guarded against impositions.

Our Regiment at Camp, I am glad to hear has become much more healthy. Some sanitary regulations have been adopted to keep out the trashy fruits from the Camp, and no doubt the improvement is principally owing to this measure. The North Carolina troops, however, still suffer greatly. They have had as many as four funerals in a day. It must be owing to the way the cook their food.

It may be gratifying to our friends at home to know that our Colonel (Hamtramck) still maintains his former reputation as a drill officer. He is regarded as among the very best (regular or volunteer,) in the service. His health has greatly improved.

Yours truly,

[BRM]

MG47v48n29p2c5, September 16, 1847, BRILLIANT VICTORIES- FROM GENERAL SCOTTS ARMY

POSTSCRIPT

-----

BRILLIANT VICTORIES!

--------

FROM GENERAL SCOTT'S ARMY.

-----

BATTLES OF COUTRERAS AND CHURUBUSCO

-----

Two American Victories.

-----

Thirteen Mexican Generals and three Ex-Presidents Killed.

-----

Eleven Hundred Americans Killed and Wounded

-----

Three thousand Mexicans captured

-----

GEN. SCOTT WOUNDED

-----

Mexican Loss nearly Three Thousand
We stop the Press to lay before our readers the following interesting news, which we find in the Baltimore Sun of yesterday:

Our unprecedented stud of ponies, comprising sixty blooded horses so admirably arranged between Baltimore and New Orleans, came through last night, in advance of everything on the route, bringing us the highly important news from Gen. Scott’s Army, which we haste to lay before our readers without comment, being most interesting yet received from Mexico. Our courier brought us the Picayune of the 8th instant, from which we copy.

The U. States steamship Mary Kingland, Capt. John Davis, arrived at an early hour this morning. By her we have received our letters from Mr. Kendall from the 22nd to the 28th of August, all dated from Tacubaya. A courier dispatched by him on the 29th with the first account of the battle fought on that day, was cut off.

From a map and plan of the battle fields before us, we note that they are called the battles of Contreras and Churubusco—so called from field works of the enemy of those names. The victories were decisive, but as far as we can judge from a hasty perusal of a portion of our letters, the proposition for an armistice was made by Gen. Scott—probably at the suggestion of the British Embassy. The report we have hitherto given that the city of Mexico was at our mercy, appears to have been unfounded.

"Should peace not follow form the negotiations now pending, another battle must ensue, the enemy having a force of from fifteen to twenty thousand men yet left. But the road appears to be completely open to us, and the city is only two and a miles form our encampment."

"Our victories have been purchased at a vast loss of valuable life, as will be seen by the following list. We see names of men at the loss of whom we weep; but all have their friends, and we make no distinctions."

"South Carolina Regiment—Lt. Col. Dickenson, severely; Capt. James D. Blandig, slightly; Adj. Cantev, severely; Lt.

Our entire loss in killed and wounded is short of eleven hundred; that of the enemy is not well known. His loss in killed alone is believed to be fully equal to our entire loss, and it is estimated that at least 3,000 prisoners were taken. The number of his wounded was not ascertained, but is supposed to be very large. Gen. Scott himself received a wound in the leg below the knee, but from the manner in which Mr. Kendall speaks of it, we are led to hope the injury a slight one.

From the National Intelligencer from yesterday.

The government received last night letters from Mr. Trist and from officers of the army at Mexico to the 28th ult. These letters were brought by the English courier to Vera Cruz, and from New Orleans were forwarded by express to Montgomery, Alabama, and thence came by the regular mail. They confirm the previous advices of events up to Gen. Scott’s arrival before the walls of Mexico, the suspension of hostilities, &c.; but are full of interest from the accounts which they give of the battles which we have fought.

We learn, generally, that the last battle (indeed the only one of consequence after Gen. Scott left Puebla) was the hardest fought and the bloodiest which has taken place in all this sanguinary war. It commenced on the 19th; continued till night; and was resumed in the morning. Valencia’s division was finally vanquished in the morning, with the loss of all his artillery, seven hundred killed and wounded, and three thousand prisoners. The division under Santa Anna, consisting of between twenty and thirty thousand men, of his own troops and levy on masse of the City of Mexico, was engaged by five thousand men under the brave Gen. Worth, who, after an obstinate battle of long duration, a large part of it bayonet to bayonet, finally achieved a complete victory over the immense Mexican host, which broke and fled, some into the city, and large bodies elsewhere. The Mexican loss in this desperate afternoon battle was five thousand killed and wounded; and our loss was, we grieve to say, nearly a thousand men.

There is no dispatch from Gen. Scott, and, strange to say, neither the letters of Mr. Trist nor of the officers who wrote mention a single name of those who fell on our side.

The Mexican army was well supplied with artillery and strongly posted, but it was all captured. Neither their artillery, their numbers, nor their desperate resistance could withstand the valor of our troops, directed by the able and skillful dispositions of the brave and veteran Scott, whose name is associated with so many well-fought fields in the annals of our country.

After the Mexican commanders had taken refuge in the city, the aued for a suspension of hostilities, as heretofore stated, and proposed negotiation. Gen. Scott acceded to the proposition, and appointed Genls. Quitman, Persifer Smith and Pierce Commissioners to conduct the negotiations on our part. The Mexican Generals also appointed a Commission, with Ex-President Herrera at its head, and the Commissioners were to meet on the 30th to open the important business confided to them.

Gen. Scott remained encamped outside of the city.

[BRM]

MG47v48n30p2c1, September 23, 1847 THE ARMISTICE

“THE ARMISTICE. The undersigned appointed respectively-the three first by Maj. General Winfield Scott, commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States; and the two last by his excellency D. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, president of the Mexican republic and commander-in-chief of its armies, met with full powers, which were duly verified in the village of Tacubaya, on the 22nd day of August, 1847, to enter into an armistice, for the purpose of giving the Mexican government an opportunity to receiving propositions for peace from the commissioners appointed by the president of the United States, and now with the American army; when the following articles were agreed upon:

ART. 1. Hostilities shall instantly and absolutely cease between the armies of the United States of America and the United Mexican States, within 30 leagues of the capital of the latter states, to allow time to the commissioners appointed by the Mexican republic, to negotiate.

2. This armistice shall continue as long as the commissioners of the two governments may be engaged on negotiations, or until the commander of either of the said armies shall give formal notice to the other of the cessation of the armistice, and for 48 hours after such notice.

3. In the mean time, neither army shall, within thirty leagues of the city of Mexico, commence any new fortification, or military work of offence or defence, or do anything to enlarge or strengthen any existing work or fortification of that character, within the said limits.
4. Neither army shall be reinforced within the same. Any reinforcements in troops or munitions of war, other than subsistence now approaching either army, shall be stopped at the distance of twenty-eight leagues from the city of Mexico.

5. Neither army, nor any detachment from it, shall advance beyond the line it at present occupies.

6. Neither army, nor any detachment or individual of either, shall pass the neutral limits established by the last article, except under flags of truce bearing the correspondence between the two armies, or on the business authorized by the next article; and individuals of either army who may chance to straggle within the neutral limits, shall by the opposite party be kindly warned off or sent back to their own armies under flags of truce.

7. The American army shall not by violence obstruct the passage form the open country into the city of Mexico, of the ordinary supplies of food necessary to the consumption of its inhabitants, or the Mexican army within the city; nor shall the Mexican authorities, civil or military, do any act to obstruct the passage of supplies from the city, or the country needed by the American army.

8. All American prisoners of war remaining in the hands of the Mexican army, and not to heretofore exchanged, shall immediately, or as soon as practicable, be restored to the American army against a like number, having regard to rank, of Mexican prisoners captured by the American army.

9. All American citizens who were established in the city of Mexico prior to the existing war, and who have since been expelled from that city, shall be allowed to return to their respective business or families therein, without delay or molestation.

10. The better to enable the belligerent armies to execute these articles, and to favor the great object of peace, it is further agreed between the parties that any courier with dispatches that either army shall desire to send along the line from the city of Mexico or its vicinity, to and from Vera Cruz, shall receive a safe conduct from the commander of the opposing army.

11. The administration of justice between Mexicans, according to the general and state constitutions and laws, by the local authorities of the towns and places occupied by the American forces, shall not be obstructed in any manner.

12. Persons and property shall be respected in the towns and places occupied by the American forces. No person shall be molested in the exercise of his profession; nor the services of any one be required without his consent. In all cases where services are voluntarily rendered, a just price shall be paid, and trade remain unmolested.

13. Those wounded prisoners who may desire to remove to some more convenient place for the purpose of being cured of their wounds shall be allowed to do so without molestation, they still remaining prisoners.

14. Those Mexican medical officers who may wish to attend the wounded shall have the privilege of doing so, if their services be required.

15. For the more perfect execution of this agreement two commissioners shall be appointed, one by each party; who in case of disagreement shall appoint a third.

16. This is convention shall have no force or effect unless approved by their excellencies the commanders respectively of the two armies within 24 hours, reckoning from the sixth hour of the 23rd day of August, 1847.

A. Quitman,
Major Gen. U.S.A.

Persifer E. Smith,

Franklin Pearce,
Brigadier Gen. U.S.A.

IGNACIO DE MORA Y VILLAMIL,
BENITO QUJANO

A true copy of the original.

G.W. Lay, U.S.A.
Mil. Sec. to the General in chief
[BRM]
The New Orleans Bulletin, by some means, has become possessed of the suppressed position of the communication of Leonidas. We give a specimen:

“He evinced on this, as he has done on other occasions, that masterly military genius and profound knowledge of the science of war, which has astonished so much the mere martinets of the profession. His plan was very similar to that by which Napoleon effected the reduction of the Fortress of Ulm, and Gen. Scott was so perfectly well pleased with it that he could not interfere with any part of it, but left it to the gallant projector to carry it into glorious and successful execution.”

Napoleon, whose most splendid achievement, consisting in shutting an Austrian army of 80,000 men, and forcing it to surrender, by a succession of petty actions, without having fought a single pitched battle, was, before he performed it, the most experienced general in Europe. He had already commanded in five campaigns, and gained thirty pitched battles, among them Mentenotte, Lodri Castiglione, Arcola, La Favorita, Rivoli, and Merango. He had destroyed seven armies, and made two hundred thousand prisoners. He had twice conquered Italy, overrun Egypt, shook the Sultan on his throne, and made England tremble for her East India possessions. How incomparably superior must be the genius of Pillow, which can set at naught all that experience alone can gain for inferior minds, and at once rival the most profound combinations of might Coriscan! But this is an age of progress Pillow has gotten out of Blackstone, what Bonaparte found in Vauhan. Illustrious name! With what ease does he heap over such “mere martinets,” as Scott and Worth!

But it seems that he is not merely the rival of Napoleon. He puts in also a claim to share the laurel with Achilles. Only listen!

“I must relate an interesting and exciting incident that occurred during the rage of battle.---A Mexican officer being seen by one of the General Pillow’s aids to leave the enemy’s lines, and to advance several yards nearer our position, the general, as soon as he head of the impudent rashness of the Mexican, put spurs to his charger and galloped at full speed towards him. As soon as he got near to the Mexican, the general called out in Spanish, Saque su sable pura defenderes—let to the honor and process of our respective countries be determined by the issue of combat. Straightway the Mexican drew his sword with on hand and balanced his lance in the other, and rushed towards our General, who, with a revolver in one hand and his sabre in the other, waited the onset of the Mexican.---The Mexican was a large, muscular man, and handled his arms with great vigor and skill; but our general with his lance, which the latter evaded with great promptitude and avidity, using his sword, tossed the weapon of the Mexican high into the air, and then quietly blew his brains out with his revolver. Both the American and the Mexican armies witnessed this splendid effort.”

Oh, rare Gideon! On unrivalled Pillow!---- worthy to be recorded by the sublime bard, who sang “Oh rumpsey dumpsey,

Col. Johnson killed Tecumseh!”

When shall the world ever behold thy like again, The immortal Pop Emmons, being no longer among the living, where shall we find a bard who genius is equal to the lustre of thy most illustrious achievement?---Achilles was most fortunate in finding a Homer; but who shall be the Homer of this greater than Achilles? The old Greek (so runs the fable) prayed at the tomb of his hero, that he would arise clad in all his panoply, and thus give him an opportunity to describe him as he deserved! The hero appeared, but the effulgence of his glory was greater than mortal eyesight could sustain, and the bard was from that moment blind. Warned by this great example, what mortal having least consideration for his peepers, will venture to contemplate Pillow in all his glory?---Who could tune his harp to so lofty a strain? Who hope to give posterity even a faint idea of his own overwhelming subject? There has been nothing like him since the days of the immortal Tom Thumb; unless, perhaps, history and song could press into their service the exploits of that renowned hero, known to every nursery maid in Christendom as “Jack the Giant Killer.” Well might the Delta suppress such a prosaic description of such a sublime scene! Well might it refuse its columns to every attempt to describe it, not made in the legitimate language of Heroes, the genuine Hexameter verse! The English language, it has been said “sunk beneath Milton” when he composed his immortal Epic! So must it sink beneath any man who attempts to sing of Pillow. Yet we should see the attempt. Oh! That Pop had lived to see this day!----Richmond Whig.

BRM

The New Orleans National publishes a letter dated Brazos Santiago, Sept. 3, in which it is stated that there is not a vessel at that place adopted to the transportation of the troops ordered from Gen. Taylor’s army to Vera Cruz. The writer adds----

Of course nobody is to blame for sending troops into camp on a barren desert of burning sand, where there is neither wood nor water; the stormy season at hand, and no even adhesiveness enough in the drifting and parching sands to hold a tent pin or give permanency to a tent pole. The consequence will be alternate parchings and drenchings whilst awaiting transports, which will admirably prepare the troops for the graveyards of Vera Cruz.
We commend to the particular attention of those friends of the Administration whose longing for Mexican territory is most ravenous the following evidence of public sentiment in the West on the subject:

From the Louisville Journal Sept. 17.

The Government Editor may as well permit the Western Whigs, and indeed the Whigs of all sections, to speak for themselves, as he will hardly receive many thanks form them for putting sentiments into their mouths which they spit out with scorn. His insinuation in the “Union” of last Saturday night, that the Western Whigs are in favor of stealing and annexing Mexican territory, is a calumny on their honesty, their love of country, and their reverence for the Constitution. The Western Whigs were firm and united in opposing the annexation of Texas, and now present a solid front against further appropriations of Mexican territory. They devotedly love our national Union, and sincerely believe that the disposition that now prevails to an alarming extent to wrest territory from weak neighbors is hostile to its perpetuity. They therefore oppose with all their might the further carrying of our national boundary stones into Mexican territory. They are satisfied with the Union as it is, and do not wish to see it placed in peril to gratify an unhallowed lust for what does not and ought not belong to us.

October 1847

Thursday, October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p1c7, Old Zach a “Double F” words: 44

As Gen. Taylor is from Virginia I suppose he belongs to the double F’s, remarked a gentleman the other day half sneeringly. “Yes sir ee,” replied a volunteer standing by, “he belongs to the ‘double F’s’ sure, for he is of a fighting family.”

Thursday, October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c1, The War News words:

We lay before our readers today such news from the Seat of War, as we have received during the past week, consisting as it does of vague, and in some instances contradictory accounts, which must be as unsatisfactory to the reader as they have been perplexing to us.

All that is clearly ascertained is, that the armistice has been broken- that a bloody conflict has taken place in the streets of Mexico- that another awful sacrifice of human life has been made- and that the prospect of Peace is no brighter that it was on the day when hostile cannon “placed so as to command the principle streets” of Mexico City, first provoked that wretched people to war. We are free to say, that we do not share the fears, expressed by many, that the veteran Scott and his gallant little army, are in danger of either annihilation or capture. Their ranks may be fearfully thinned by the murderous fire of the infuriated Mexicans, but we have an abiding confidence in the military skill of their leader, who has never yet been placed in a situation from which he was not able to extricate himself with honor.

But, whilst the patriot’s heart swells proudly at the recital of the brilliant triumphs of our country’s arms, the oppressive though will obtrude itself upon the mind- where is all this to end? What real and substantial benefits are to be secured to our country by this war, to compensate us for the vast expenditure of blood and treasure? Surely this new Territory which Mr. Polk and his adherents seem determined to annex to our Union, no matter at what cost of human anguish, should be called Aceldama- the field of blood! There is a legend of one of the mighty conquerors of old, which runs somewhat in this wise. The King proposed to erect a monument which should transmit to succeeding generations, a faithful record of his greatness and his glory. With this view he committed a sage who had been one of the cherished counselors of his father, as to the form and material of his proposed structure. “Shall it be,” said the majesty, “a stately pyramid or a magnificent Temple?” “Let it be a pyramid sire,” replied the philosopher. “But not of brass or marble. Make it of the skulls of your victims, and let the triumphs of your reign be inscribed upon it in characters of blood!”

Could a monstrous pyramid be made of the blackened corpses of the victims of this war, are surrounded by a moat which would be a vast receptacle of the blood and tears which it has shed, Surely the wildest votary of “manifest destiny would turn from the appalling spectacle and exclaim, “We have paid too dearly for our glory!” We are confident that if the voice of the nation could be heard, it would say to the President, “what thou doest do quickly!” If nothing less than the subjugation of Mexico is necessary to conquer a Peace,” in mercy’s name send an army into that country which will be sufficient to conclude the drama at once. We are at war, no matter who is to blame, and the desire of every patriot should be, to see it brought to a successful and speedy termination.
Plan of Union between Great Britain and the United States - We observe in a recent number of one of the London Monthly Journals, a lengthy letter from Robert Sears, Esq., of New York, headed - "Alliance of Perpetual Friendship between England and America." We take the following extracts from the letter. The sentiments will meet with the approval and concurrence of the good men of both countries.

"Never, in my humble opinion, were there two nations so prepared for a perfect truce, and combined action; never was the opportunity for arranging it so bright and promising: and never was the call, both within and without, at home and abroad, so urgent and so plain."

"It has often occurred to me, as one of the noble enterprises that could be effected in this world, if your country and ours could be indeed to enter into a solemn agreement: First, that all disputes which may arise between us shall be settled by arbitration, and never by an appeal to arms; Secondly, that we shall combine in every way which shall commend itself to the united judgments of both nations to engage in a mission of benevolence towards the entire human race."

"It is said, ‘England and America AGAINST the World!’ Let us say, ‘England and America for the World!’ How mighty would such a confederation be for the interests of peace, of freedom, of commerce, and Christianity!"

The subject is truly of great importance, and one in which Mr. Sears has been, and is now deeply engaged in bringing before the people of England and America, through the influence of that mighty instrument- the Press. A leading article on the subject, from the pen of the same gentleman, appeared but a few weeks since in one of the leading and most influential papers in the Union.

The military correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, from whose letter we made some extracts yesterday, after describing the battle of Churubusco, thus alludes to the thrilling scene of the reception of Gen. Scott by the troops, which has been before described in our paper: Richmond Times.

When it was over, the General in Chief (Scott) rode in among the troops. It would have done your heart good to hear the shout with which they made the welkin ring. Several old soldiers seized the General's hand with expressions of enthusiastic delight. Suddenly at a motion of his hand, silence ensued, when in the fullness of his heart he poured forth a few most eloquent and patriotic words, in commendation of their gallant conduct. When he ceased, there arose another sound that might have been heard in the grand plaza of Mexico.

During the thrilling scene, I looked up to a balcony of the church that had been so bravely defended. It was filled with Mexican prisoners. Among them Gen. Rincon, a venerable old soldier, was leaning forward, his countenance glowing, and his eyes sparkling with every manifestation of delight. I verily believe that the old veteran, with the spirit of a true soldier, upon beholding a victorious General so greeted by the brave men he had just led to victory, forgot, for the moment, his own position, - that he was defeated and a prisoner, - and saw and thought only of the enthusiasm by which he was surrounded.

Another Great Victory

The New Orleans Picayune of the 26th of September, received last night, contains the following very important intelligence from General Scott's army:

The steamship James L. Day, Capt. O'Grady, arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the evening of the 21rst inst., bringing intelligence of the greatest importance.
As we anticipated in our paper of yesterday the negotiations resulted in nothing. The last letter from Mr. Kendall is dated the 5th inst. and our file of the Diario del Gobierno does not come down later than the 4th, but the Arco Iris of Vera Cruz has a letter from the city of Mexico dated the 10th inst., together with extracts from the Diario del Gobierno and Boletin of Allisco, to the 12th, which, together with the letter we publish. The manner in which the armistice was terminated will be learned from the extract we copy. Mr. Kendall’s letters show that a feeling of hostility was growing with the people of the capital as early as the 30th of last month, and the Congress of the State of Mexico in session at Toluca had declared against peace. Notwithstanding repeated belligerent demonstrations by the enemy, and a positive violation of the armistice in our wagons not being permitted by the mob to enter the city for provisions, negotiations were still pending to as late a date as the 6th. The Arco Iris received letters from Mexico under date of the 9th, stating that on the 7th of Mexican commissioners declared that the propositions made by Mr. Triste was inadmissible, in consequence of which Gen. Santa Anna convoked a council of Generals, who decided that notice should be given immediately to Gen. Scott that the armistice was at an end, and appointed the 9th for the recommencement of hostilities.

On the 6th Gen. Scott addressed from Tacubaya the following note to Santa Anna:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY U. STATES,
September 6, 1817

To his Excellency the President of General in Chief of the Republic of Mexico:

The 7th and 12th articles of the armistice or military convention which I had the honor of ratifying exchanging with your Excellency on the 24th ultimo, stipulate that the army under my command shall have the privilege of obtaining supplies from the city of Mexico. There were repeated violations of these articles soon after the armistice was signed, and I have now good reasons for believing that within the last twenty-four hours, if not before, the 3rd article of the same convention was also violated by the same parties. These direct breaches of good faith give to this army the full right to commence hostilities against Mexico without giving any notice. However, I will give the necessary time for any explanation, satisfaction, or reparation. If these are not given, I hereby formally notify you that if I do not receive the most complete satisfaction on all these points before 12 o’clock tomorrow, I shall consider the armistice as terminated from that hour.

I have the honor to be your Excellency’s obedient servant,
WINFIELD SCOTT

To this Santa Anna made the following reply:

HEADQ’S ARMY OF MEXICAN REPUBLIC
September 6, 1847

To his Excellency Gen. Winfield Scott, Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States.

Sir,- By the note of your Excellency under this date I learn, with surprise, that you consider that the civil and military authorities of Mexico have violated articles 7, 12, and 13, of the armistice which I concluded with your Excellency on the 24th of last month.

The civil and military authorities of Mexico have not obstructed the passage of provisions for the American Army; and if at times their transmission has been retarded, it has been owing to the impudence of the American agents, who, without having a previous understanding with the proper authorities, gave occasion for popular outbreaks, which it has cost the Mexican Government much trouble to repress. Last night and the night before the escorts for the provision train were ready to start, and were only detained because Mr. Hargous, the agent, desired it.

The orders given to suspend the intercourse between the two armies were addressed to private individuals, and not to the agents of the army of the United States, and were intended purposely to expedite the transmission of provisions to the army, and to confine the intercourse to that object exclusively. In return for this conduct your Excellency has prevented the owners or managers the grain mills in the vicinity of the city from furnishing flour to the city, which is a true breach of the good faith your Excellency had pledged me.

It is false that any new work or fortification has been undertaken, because one or two repairs have only served to place them in the same condition they were in on the day the armistice was entered into, accident or the convenience of the moment having caused the destruction of the then existing works. You have had early notice of the establishment of the battens covered with mud walls of the house of Garry in the city, and did not remonstrate, because the peace of the two great Republics could not be made to depend upon things grave in themselves, but of little value compared to the result in which all the friends of humanity and of the prosperity of the American continent take so great an interest.

[There is some obscurity in this sentence, which, it is probably, is owning to typographical errors.- Eds. Pic.]

It is not without grief and even indignation that I have received communications from the cities and villages occupied by the army of your Excellency, in relation to the violation of the temples consecrated to the worship of God: to the plunder of the sacred vases, and to the profanation of the images venerated by the Mexican people. Profoundly have I been afflicted by the complaints of fathers and husbands, of the violence offered to their daughters and wives; and these same cities and villages have been sacked not only in violation of the armistice, but of the sacred principles...
At half past 5 in the morning, (the 8th) the first commenced on the two flanks of Chapultepec. The left was resting on officers refused on account of the ground being too uneven and broken for cavalry, as if it were not the same for the

being obliged to state officially or through his adjutant that he did not make the charge, because his subordinate

they did not take the position to which they were ordered, much less make the charge, as commanded, Gen. Alvarez above all, they had made the charge which was ordered at the moment that the enemy attacked the mill del Rey, death, that they must never forget they were Pueblanos, and to fight valiantly to the death.

We have to lament the loss of Gen. Leon, since dead; that of Col. Balderas, of the valiant Cols. Huerta and Gelati, and retiring to Chapultepec. The enemy, according to the confession of an Irishman who came over to us in the evening, side. Ours does not amount to 100 killed and 250 wounded. There are few missing—nearly all not killed or wounded

It is believed that Generals Twiggs and Pierce directed the attack, and they put in motion about 8,000 men.

occupied, and blowing up the house of Malta, although some say it was set on fire by a bomb fired from Chapultepec.

movement, and by 2 in the afternoon he withdrew all his forces to Tacabaya, abandoning the two points he had loss they had suffered. The result was, that at 9 o’clock in the morning the fire of small arms had nearly ceased, and

Gen. Perez sustained the fire very well for about half an hour, when for causes at present unknown, he retired with his forces, although he had not lost ten men. The retreat must have been fatal to Mexico, if fortunately, Gen. Leon and his command was the battalion of Mina, whose colonel was the patriotic Balderas, and the battalions Union and La Patria, of Oaxaca, in one of which were included the companies of Puebla, also a body from Queretaro and some others— all composing the National Guard. The right flank rested on the house of Mata, at a distance of a quarter of a league from Chapultepec, and occupied by 1500 of the regular army, commanded by Gen. Perez. The enemy, in two columns, with his usual daring, attacked these points— first with artillery, and at a quarter to 6 with a rapid fire of musketry.

In spite of these two advantages which they had gained in their endeavors to attack Chapultepec, they could not affect a farther advance, which may be owing to the resistance of our forces and the considerable loss they had suffered. The result was, that at 9 o’clock in the morning the fire of small arms had nearly ceased, and they were seen employed collecting their killed and wounded. At 11 o’clock, the enemy announced a retrograde move, and by 2 in the afternoon he withdrew all his forces to Tacabaya, abandoning the two points he had occupied, and blowing up the house of Malta, although some say it was set on fire by a bomb fired from Chapultepec.

It is believed that Generals Twiggs and Pierce directed the attack, and they put in motion about 8,000 men.

It is certain that the fire was more intense and brisk than at Churubusco. It is impossible to ascertain the loss on either side. Ours does not amount to 100 killed and 250 wounded. There are few missing—nearly all not killed or wounded retiring to Chapultepec. The enemy, according to the confession of an Irishman who came over to us in the evening, carried off 400 dead and 600 to 700 wounded.

We have to lament the loss of Gen. Leon, since dead; that of Col. Balderas, of the valiant Cols. Huerta and Gelati, and of the determined Capt. Mateos, of Puebla, who conducted himself like a hero, telling his soldiers, on the point of defath, that they must never forget they were Pueblanos, and to fight valiantly to the death.

If the cavalry had taken the position assigned to them at 4 o’clock in the morning, by order of Gen. Santa Anna, and if,

above all, they had made the charge which was ordered at the moment that the enemy attacked the mill del Rey, instead of flying precipitately, the action would have terminated early and the triumph would have been complete. But they did not take the position to which they were ordered, much less make the charge, as commanded, Gen. Alvarez being obliged to state officially or through his adjutant that he did not make the charge, because his subordinate officers refused on account of the ground being too uneven and broken for cavalry, as if it were not the same for the cavalry of the enemy.

It is believed that the enemy will renew the attack tomorrow by another route—either by that of La Pieded, or by that of San Antonio. May God protect our cause on this occasion.

One of the enemy’s guerillas who came with Scott, was made a prisoner and shot on the spot.

The next accounts we have from the capital come in a letter to the Arco Iris, dated the 10th instant. We subjoin a translation of it:

Mexico, Sept. 10, 1846

My Esteemed Fried: The whole day has passed without an attack. At 2 in the afternoon an alarm was created by the appearance of two columns and two guerilla parties which were seen on the causeway of Pleded. A few shots were exchanged and the enemy withdrew. According to all appearance we shall be attacked tomorrow at three points, as the enemy, during the night has been reconnoitering the country, by means of Camp lanterns (farot de Campana.) The government has taken $300,000 which were being sent by a commercial house to the camp of the enemy.

Gen. Smith has expired, and by the enclosed slip you will see that the Americans mutilated, and cruelly assassinated the unfortunate Irish, who were taken at the battle of Churubusco.

Sept 11- It is 7 o’clock in the morning and thus far nothing has transpired.

In addition, we find the subjoined extract from the Boletin de Atlisco, containing intelligence from the capital, under the date of the 11th and 12th instant, which give a continued narrative of the operations of the two armies:

Mexico, Sept. 12, 1847

My Esteemed Friend, under cover of what I sent you last night I stated nothing new, at which we were surprised, as it did not rain, and we expected to be attacked. Thus we passed the morning until 3 o’clock in the evening, when the alarm bell was rung, and it was ascertained that there was firing of artillery at Chapultepec and San Antonio Abad. In the first point it was caused by the approach of a force of the enemy’s cavalry, which took position on the hills of Tacubaya; moving from that village towards Morales, and there a skirmish with a party of our cavalry took place, in which a captain and several of our soldiers were killed and some twenty of the enemy wounded with the lance.

In San Antonio Abad the fire upon the battery, of the enemy, which is in a little hermitage half in ruins and situated at the end of the Causeway del Nino Perdido or La Piedad, which leads to San Angel, the enemy fired from six to eight bombs, of which but one fell without exploding. The others we saw burst in the air. We then gave them several shots, well directed, one of which fell within the very hermitage, raising a great dust; in consequence of which the enemy did not fire more that three of four shots up to 6 o’clock. A strong norther, which was blowing, prevented us from hearing them, and we only saw the smoke.

It is said that tomorrow they will open with forty pieces on the batteries of “garitas.” [At the moment we cannot hit upon an English word which will convey the meaning of this. Garitas are the places in the immediate vicinity of cities, at which the revenue is collected- Eds Pic.] Or, perhaps, bombard the city from these points situated in the neighborhood of the village of Piedad, which I have no doubt they will do after taking any one of the garitas, particularly the one of San Antonio Abad, which is the most advanced, being in a straight line with Palacio, which is nearly on a parallel with the batteries of the enemy and takes them in flank.

It appears that the enemy is convinced of the impossibility of reducing the capital by any other means because there is no doubt that he has lost 900 to 1000 men who were placed hors de combat by the action of the 8th, and among them 37 officers and 3 colonels killed and 1 colonel wounded. It appears that the death of Gen. Pillow is uncertain.

In compensation for his loss, or whatever you like, they hung yesterday at San Angel all the prisoners of the Legion of St. Patrick they took at Churubusco, when all the world thought they would have been spared capital punishment. They have expelled from their houses all the inhabitants of the village of Mizcoac, in order to establish there their hospitals and head quarters.

Last night a parcel of men started to work at the fortification at the call of the justices of the peace, animated by the most lively feeling. Besides the Penon and Chapultepec, where the natural advantages, there were strong defenses, and where they are first, second, and third lines of defense, all the “garitas” are strongly fortified, having besides between La Piedad and San Antonio Abad three batteries and one trench which transverses diagonally the grazing grounds and united the two “garitas.”

Sept. 12- At 5 o’clock in the morning the bells awoke us by the announcement of an alarm. The batteries of San Antonio Abad and the corresponding battery of the enemy opened a fire upon each other. We have seen discharged by the enemy a multitude of bombs the greater number of which burst in the air, and long before they reach our trenches. At the same hour a firing commenced at Chapultepec, on the right side of which and in the mountains, whence came the attack, at a short distance from the enemy are stationed our forces of cavalry and infantry, who are watching the enemy.
We opened, at half after 6, from the battery of the "garita" of Behen, or it may be from that starting from the end of Pasco Noeva, which is situated in the angle formed by the gateway leading to the villages of La Piedad and Tacubaya. But where the enemy directed all his efforts appears to be the "garita" of San Antonio Abad. The servant is at the door; I must close- the alarm bell still continues to ring.

This brings us to the 12th, but at what hour of the day the letter was closed we are not informed. Of the denouement we have only a brief account, but sufficient: to assure us that our arms have achieved a brilliant triumph, and that our army is "reveling in the Halls of Montezumas." The only reliable account we have of the last struggle before the Capital is in a letter addressed to Mr. Dimond, our collector at Vera Cruz, from Orizaba, which will be found below. Our correspondent of Vera Cruz vouches for its accuracy, and we have reason to believe it is from the same source as was the letter giving the first and a correct account of the battles of Contreras and Churubusco.

Thursday, October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c7, Latest News  words: 437

Gen. Scott in Full Possession of the City of Mexico

Since the above was in type, we have received the Baltimore Sun, which copies from the N.Y. Sun, a letter from a Spanish Mexican to a mercantile firm in New York, which gives intelligence up to the 19th-- three days later than the accounts by the James L. Day.

The letter states that on the 13th the Americans made a demonstration on the Mill of El Rey and Chapultepec, a hill between Tacubaya and the city, "overlooking a vast range of country, and commanding the road between Tacubaya and the city." The letter goes on to state, that the American troops were twice repulsed, but on the third onset succeeded in taking the fortress on the hill, "he (General Scott) then turned his batteries on the Mill, which the Mexicans were forced to abandon." "The enemy," says the Mexican, "fought like devils, whom it was impossible to defeat without annihilating." The Mexican loss was, as the writer states, not over 300, whilst that of the assailants was over 400, (Mexican authority, remember.) Santa Anna caused a number of ditches to be cut, which retarded the progress of Gen. Scott so, that he did not reach the gates till late in the evening, "here he halted and attempted to bombard the city, which he did during the balance of the evening, and the next day, doing immense damage. In some instances, whole blocks were destroyed and a great number of men, women and children killed. The picture was awful."

Gen. Scott then changed his plan and determined to take the city by storm. "Before he passed the gates, a storm of balls and stones rained from the houses of his troops," he nevertheless made his way towards the plaza, and took the convent San Isador, and at once set his Sappers to work to cut a way through the houses. "In some instances, whole houses were blown up, and this he made his way to the plaza, which he entered with great loss. Here he opened a heavy fire on the Cathedral and Palace. Seeing further resistance useless our troops retired, and on the 15th of September, the enemy was in possession of the Mexican capital." The writer confesses a loss on their side of over 4000, and sets down our loss at 1000. Santa Anna has retired, severely wounded, to Guadalupe. "Thousands," says the writer, "are gathered on the hills, determined to cut off all supplies from the enemy! We shall yet have vengeance. Many of the killed and wounded of the Mexicans were women and children.

Thursday, October 7, 1847, MG47v48n32p2c7, Tennessee Volunteers  words: 261

Upon the call of the War Department for five companies of Volunteers, fifteen have responded, and lost cast for a selection. The five successful companies are about to be mustered into service. They are by this time in Memphis.

The ten unsuccessful companies in the ballot have offered their services to the President, if another requisition should be needed.

Here is an example for Virginia! Will it be lost upon the valiant supporters of the war, who are so prompt to resent Whig opposition? By why need we ask this? Have we not ready sufficient proof, that no matter how loud the professions from the mouth, the hearts of the Democracy of Virginia are not in the contest. They feel, that while something of the soldier’s fame may be won in it, there is nothing in a War of Invasion upon which the soldier’s conscience can repose in the hours of calm reflection.

Who can doubt that some such influence is operating in Virginia, when it is found that even two companies cannot be raised in five months? We will not believe that the courage and chivalry of the Old Dominion have departed- and therefore we are bound to give the most reasonable construction to the lethargy which now prevails. But we may venture to ask, has the “pride of other days” faded, or has “glory’s thrill” lost its heart-warming potency in the bosoms of our young men? We think it not improbable that some of the greyheads will yet have to rally to the standard of the State – Rich. Republican.

[JKM]
Gen. Santa Anna attributes his ill success in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco to the disobedience of one of his Generals- \textit{Valencia}- whom his had ordered on the morning of the 18th to quit San Angel and fall back on the village Coyocan. Valencia disregarding this order, thereby destroyed the whole plan of his operations, and made himself responsible for the defeat of the Mexican arms. This is the best excuse Santa Anna has yet given the Mexican people for the loss of a battle, and he has been obliged to give a good many.

\[\text{JKM}\]

From the \textit{Raleigh Register}

We have the pleasure of laying before our readers today a letter from Gen. Taylor, responding to the meeting held in his favor, in this city, on the 3rd of July last. Like everything proceeding from his pen, it is characterized by a modesty and simplicity, always indicative of true greatness. It is very evident, however, on its face, that the General while he does no seek will not decline the nominations of the people all over the Union:

\begin{flushright}
Correspondence
Raleigh, July 5, 1847
\end{flushright}

To Maj. Gen. Z. Taylor

Sir- In obedience to a Resolution passed at a very large and respectable meeting held in this City on the 3rd. inst., respecting the next occupancy of the Executive Chair of our Republic, I have the pleasure of enclosing a copy of the proceedings of that assemblage of the people, and sincerely hope their perusal will afford you as much pleasure, as their passage, without a dissenting voice, did your numerous friends on that occasion. We will cordially esteem your many virtues, and great abilities, and well-tried patriotism, and desire, with your approbation, to manifest our sincerity, by voting for you to fill the highest office in the gift of a FREE PEOPLE. We hold in grateful remembrance your services to our common country, and are enthusiastic in your cause; because we believe the true interest of our country will be promoted by your election to the Presidency.

With sentiments of high esteem and respect, I am your obedient servant.

GEO. W. HAYWOOD

Headquarters Army of Occupation
Camp near Monterey, Aug. 2, 1847

Sir- The copy of the Resolutions recently passed in the City of Raleigh, N.C., on the 3rd of July, and which you were charged with communicating to me, has been with your letter duly received.

Be pleased to convey to the voters of that District of North Carolina, my deep appreciation of the high honor they have conferred upon me in their nomination. While I am willing to yield to the popular will, and serve the country in any capacity to which I may be freely and unanimously called, I may be permitted to say, that I have not the assurance to believe that my abilities are suited to the discharge of such responsible duties as rest upon the office of Chief Magistracy. My best efforts, however, will always be exercised in the cause of the country, in whatever position it may be my fortune to be placed.

Accept for yourself, sir, my best acknowledgements for the very courteous and flattering manner in which you were pleased to communicate these resolutions, and my wishes for your continued prosperity and health.

\begin{flushright}
I am sir, with high respect
Your most obedient servant
Z. TAYLOR
Maj. Gen. U.S.A.
\end{flushright}

Geo. W. Haywood, Esp., Chairman late public meeting, Raleigh, N.C.

\[\text{JKM}\]
The New Orleans Delta has at length states unequivocally that the paragraphs inserted in the famous letter of "Leondias" (the camp Bosweil in Gen. Pillow,) are not genuine, and that they have no sort of similarity to those portions of the letter of "Leondias," which, for very good reasons doubtless, the Delta thought it advisable to suppress. Let it be admitted, then, that the Bulletin and the Picayune were hoaxed, and that we were caught in the same trap. What must be the public estimate of an individual in regard to whom such a hoax could be successful attempted? The extracts were believed to be genuine, because they were characteristic. If such stories had been told of Gen. Taylor or Gen. P.F. Smith, or indeed of any one but Gen. Pillow, there is not a man so dull as not to have pronounced them silly fables at once. And again: The Delta has not told us why it suppressed those portions of the letter of "Leondias," which, by the admission of its editors, are so "exceedingly rich," nor can it be prevailed upon to let its readers see them. Why so chary? After claiming for Gen. Pillow all the credit of planning the battles and achieving the victories of the 19th and 20th of August, what must have been the character of that part of the narrative which even the "organ of Gen. Pillow" would not print? It may be, we repeat that the paragraphs published by the Bulletin and the Picayune are not the "suppressed" portions of Leonidas's letter- but it yet remains to be seen that the latter are not quite as "rich" that is to say, as ridiculous- as the former.

P.S. Since the foregoing was in type, we have received the Picayune of the 21rst, in which it is admitted, on the authority of a gentleman what has seen the original letter of Leonidas, that the passages heretofore published are spurious- but it adds, on the same authority, that those actually in the letter, are suppressed by the Delta, were scarcely inferior to the imaginative ones in "richness." – in their fulsome laudation of Gen. Pillow's military prowess "So far as we are at present informed (adds the Picayune,) the infamy of the transaction rests either with Mr. Joseph Grant of Camp street, or Judge Alexander Walker of the Delta, or with both of them." Mr. Grant furnished the passages to the Bulletin and Picayune, and told the Editors that he had those passages in the handwriting of Judge Walker himself!

[JKM]

Thursday, October 7, 1847 MG47v48n32p3c2, Gen. Taylor’s Position words: 179

It must be confessed that, if peace do not follow Mr. Trist's negotiations at the capital, the position of Gen. Taylor will be one of imminent peril. Santa Anna may succeed in removing a part of his force from the capital, or whether he do or not, there are Paredes, Valencia, who is said to have escaped from the city, and a dozen more Generals who can raise a large force at any time, and make a decent upon Saltillo, where there are not more than three thousand troops at this time. Gen. Taylor is himself three miles from Monterey, with three hundred dragoons at the outside and Bragg's Battery. In Monterey itself there are but about five hundred men. The guerillas are increasing in numbers, and if our enemy were any other than Mexicans, we should expect daily to hear of their pouncing down upon the Old Chief at his present encampment. We see no provision made for reinforcing Gen. Taylor, should the war be protracted, and we have no proof that hostilities will soon close.- Rich. Rep.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 7, 1847 MG47v48n32p3c2, General Paredes words: 202

A New Orleans paper of the 21rst mentions that one of the Mexican prisoners in that place had received a letter from Mexico, dated in the afternoon of the 28th of August, in which it is stated that Gen. Paredes had entrusted the city of Mexico with a large force, arrested Santa Anna, and imprisoned him. The Picayune of the next day says:

"We do not believe a word in the Mexican letter report. After the experience of the past few months, it is enough for that the intelligence comes through a Mexican prisoner. We have not been badly bitten by these gentry, but we have "heard tell "of those who have. But furthermore, we have published letter from Mexico and Tacubaya of the 28th of August, and we have seen many more of the same date. They are from all sources- American, Mexican, Spanish, and English- and none of them have made any mention of this movement of Paredes. We all expect much from him, but that he had so far succeeded as to have his great rival in prison on the 28th ult., we do no credit at all. There is quite too much of the Mexican about this story."

[JKM]

Thursday, October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p1c6, Letters of John P. Kennedy words: 4,971

No.2

To the citizens of the 4th Congressional District, and particularly to the Mechanics and Workingmen of the District of both Political Parties.

My subject is now the Mexican war. I mean to devote this and one or two other letters to that subject, for two reasons: First, that, intrinsically, it is a very important topic to the people of the United States just now; and Second, because there has been a great deal of studied and perverse misrepresentation spread abroad in regard to it, with a view to bring the Whigs into disesteem, and to cover up and conceal a very awkward political blunder made by Mr. Polk. The outcry, however, has not yet hurt the Whigs in the opinion of any judicious men, nor has it been very successful in hiding Mr. Polk's delinquencies from the public. Some men seem to think that to slander the Whigs is the best way to screen the President. Mr. Polk himself has set the example in his last annual message, in which he intimates that any man who will not adopt his opinion about the origin of the war, is a traitor. A traitor for not believing what he, the President, announces to be a fact! Some of "the organs" repeat this miserable slang. One of them says, for instance, "the treason of Benedict Arnold is nothing" compared to this refusal of the Whigs to believe Mr. Polk- for this is the amount of it. When men write and publish such driveling nonsense as this, it only shows what a contemptuous opinion they have for those whom they expect to believe them.

I intend to give a history of the origin of the present war, which I shall take, as much as possible, from the official records of the country, and from the recorded opinions and proceedings of the most distinguished leaders of the Democratic Party. These I shall endeavor to lay before you in the simplest and clearest narrative I can give. You will then be able to judge for yourselves, whether the Whigs are right or wrong in what they have said and done about this war.

It is proper, therefore, before I begin the narrative, that I should explain to you what have been and are the opinions the resolves of the Whigs in regard to the war. I will do this in a few words:

1. First: The Whig party believe that whatever wrongs or injuries Mexico may have done to this country- and we do not deny they were many- still the President had no right to make war upon Mexico, without the consent of Congress, to whom the war making power exclusively belongs.

2. Second: That the present war did not begin by the act of Mexico, as Mr. Polk declared, but by the act of Mr. Polk himself, in ordering an army to march into territory under the jurisdiction of Mexico, for the acquisition of which our government had proposed to open negotiations with Mexico, in the hope of being able to purchase it from the nation.

3. Third: The Whigs have held, and still hold, the opinion- notwithstanding the manner this war was commenced,- that, being commenced, their duty was to give the administration all the supplies of men and money which it might ask for, to prosecute the war to a successful termination; and accordance with this opinion they have voted for everything asked for that purpose by the government- and will continue so to vote, if the war is to be continued.

The Whigs, in common with the whole country, feel a grateful pride in the gallantry of our soldiers, and in the glorious success of their arms. In proof of their willingness to encounter the perils and sacrifices of the war, they have furnished their share,- and more than their share- of the bravest officers and men, to the army. Without, therefore, boasting to be more patriotic that their opponents, they treat with a becoming scorn all attempts to represent them as wanting in love of country, or in any just appreciation of its true glory.

These are the views and sentiments of the Whigs, everywhere announced and acted upon.

I now proceed to show upon what foundation their opinions have been formed in regard to Mr. Polk's conduct in the origin of the war.

This will require that I should recall a few facts connected with the annexation of Texas. The treaty for the annexation was made at Washington on the 12th of April, 1844. This treaty was rejected by the Senate on the 8th of June following, by the vote of 35 to 16- Messrs. Benton and Wright both voting against it.

I have given these two names because they may be considered undisputed leaders of the Democratic Party.

What were their objections to this treaty? I shall presently quote their own words to show what their objections were; but before I do so it was necessary to say a word as to the geographical division of Mexico.

It has never been denied by any one that the river Nueces was the boundary which divided the province of Texas from the province of Tamaulipas, through which latter province the Rio Grande runs, into the Gulf- Matamoras being its capital. This was the old boundary. And when Mexico, in 1824, formed her confederation of nineteen States, Tamaulipas became one State and Texas another, with the same boundary, to wit, the Nueces, separating one from the other, as the Potomac separates Virginia from Maryland. In 1835 the confederation was broken up by Santa Anna. Tamaulipas and the other States joined the new Government, but Texas refused; revolted against the Government, and declared her independence as a separate State. That independence she secured by the battle of San Jacinto, in 1836.

A few months after the battle of San Jacinto, the Congress of Texas determined the enlarge the boundaries, and accordingly passed a law by which they declared their boundary, on the west, to be the Rio Grande from the mouth to its source; thence due north to the 42nd degree of latitude; and from that point along the boundary of the United States to the Gulf of Mexico. This boundary, as you will see by looking at the map, - which I hope you will do.- extends far beyond the limits of the State of Texas as it was known to the Mexican Confederation, and takes in a large part of four Mexican provinces which have never revolted against the Government, nor ever been conquered by Texas. These four provinces are Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Chihuahua and New Mexico.

What right Texas had to extend her boundary over her neighbors has never been explained. I find that she even had it in contemplation to take the whole of California into her empire: - She only did not do this because it was not convenient. My authority for this fact is a matter of public record. In August, 1836, Gen. Jackson sent Mr. Henry M. Morfit to Texas, as an agent on the part of this Government, to inquire what was doing, and particularly to look after the subject of annexation. This gentleman wrote several dispatches to the Government, which have been published by Congress. In one of these he writes- "The political limits of Texas proper, previous to the last revolution, were the Nueces river on the West; along the Red river on the North; the Sabine on the East, and the Gulf of Mexico on the South."

Then on the 27th of August, in the same year, he writes further - "It was the intention of this Government, immediately after the battle of San Jacinto, to have claimed from the Rio Grande along the river to the 30th degree of latitude, and thence due West to the Pacific. It was found, however, that this would not strike a convenient point in California; that it would be difficult to control a wondering population so distant, and that the territory now determined upon would be sufficient for a young Republic."

These letters may be found in the documents of the House of Representatives No. 35, 2nd session of the 24th Congress.

So, it appears, from the gentleman's researches, that the only reason why Texas was not made to embrace California was a mere matter of convenience, and that she had determined what she was about to take from the four provinces I have mentioned above, was quite sufficient for a young Republic!

I shall continue this narrative in the next letter.

J.P. Kennedy

No.3

In my last number, I showed you what Mr. Morfit, the agent of our Government in Texas, reported to the department at Washington, in regard to the question of the boundary of the new Republic. Texas was at the moment, in the flush of extravagant exultation for the victory of San Jacinto, which was won only a short time before Mr. Morfit arrived, and she manifestly thought she could assume what boundary she pleased. In point of right, her dominion could only extend over the territory belonging to the old State of Texas. Tamaulipas had not revolted, neither had Cahuila, nor Chihuahua nor New Mexico- nor had any portion of these states been conquered by Texas in the war. The extension of her boundary, therefore, over any part of the territory belonging to these States, was a mere nullity,- just as much so, as if Maryland were to pass an act in her Legislature extending the limits of this State to the James River. And if Texas had chosen to include California, as Mr. Morfit tells us she thought of doing, her right to that region would have not been a whit less substantial than it was to the Rio Grande.

We may now come back to the treaty of annexation, and we shall be able to understand why Mr. Benton and Mr. Wright voted against it. The language of the 1st article of that treaty, so far as relates to the session, is as follows: The Republic of Texas, action in conformity with the wishes of the people and every department of its government, cedes to the United States all its territories to be held by them in full property and sovereignty.

Now, when this treaty came into discussion in the Senate, Mr. Benton took a leasing part and made a speech, which was very carefully studied, and which may be justly said to be distinguished for its ability. In that speech he uses the following language:

"In a poor letter which I lately published on the subject of Texas, and in answer to a letter from the members of the Texas Congress, a copy of which was published without my knowledge, while the original has not yet come to hand: in this poor letter, I took occasion to discriminate between the old province of Texas, and the new Republic of Texas, and to show that the latter includes what was never any part of Texas, but a part of the present and former province of New Mexico, and parts of other departments of the Mexican Republic. To discriminate between these Texasas, and to show to my fellow citizens that I took the trouble to look at the Texas question before I decided it, and subjected my mind to the process of considering what I was about before I spoke. I wrote as follows:

"With respect to Texas, her destiny is fixed. Of course, I, who consider what I am about, always speak of Texas as constituted at the time of the treaty of 1819, and not as constituted by the Republic of Texas comprehending the capital and forty towns and villages of New Mexico! Now and always as fully under the dominion of the Republic of Mexico, as Quebec and all the towns and villages of Canada are under the dominion of Great Britain! It is of the Texas- the old Spanish Texas- of which I always speak; and of her, I say, her destiny is fixed! Whatever may be the fate of the present movement, her destination is to return to her natural position- that of a part of the American Union."

"I adhere to this discrimination between the two Texases, and not propose to see which of the two we are asked by the President of the United States to incorporate into the American Union."

He then read the first article of the treaty, which I have quoted above; and after some further remarks, to show that the Texas proposed to be annexed was the described in the act of the Texan Congress, he proceeded to say;

"From all this it results that the treaty before us, besides the incorporation of Texas proper, also incorporates into our Union the left bank of the Rio Grande, in its whole extent from its head spring, near the South Pass in the Rocky Mountains, to its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico, four degrees south of New Orleans, in latitude 26. It is a 'grand and
Mr. Benton then went on to show what provinces this line includes, their population, their towns, cities, etc.

"These- he says- "in addition to the old Texas- these parts of four States- these towns and villages- these people and territory- these flocks and herds- this slice of the Republic of Mexico, two thousand miles long and some hundred broad- all this our President has cut off from its mother empire, and presents to us and declares it is our’s until the Senate rejects it! He calls it Texas! And the cutting off he calls re-annexation! Humbolt call it New Mexico, Chihuahua, Coahuila and Nuevo Santander, (now Tamaulipas,) and the civilized world may quality this re-annexation by the application of some odious and terrible epithet.”

In the course of his speech, he goes further and says:

"The treaty in all that relates to the boundary of the Rio Grande, is an act of unparallel outrage on Mexico.”

These extracts are made from a copy of Mr. Benton’s speech delivered in the Senate of the United States on the 16th, 18th and 20th of May, 1844, as revised by himself and published in the Congressional Globe.

Mr. Calhoun, the Secretary of State attempted to repel these charges brought against his treaty, by referring to his dispatches both to Mr. Shannon and to Mr. Green, who were the agents of our government, at that time, in Mexico- to show that we never meant to claim the territory embraced in the act of the Congress of Texas, but that, on the contrary, we were very desirous to open a friendly negotiation with Mexico for the purchase of such a boundary as would be most convenient. To express this purpose to the Mexican Government, Mr. Calhoun wrote to Mr. Green on the 10th of April, 1844-

"You are enjoined by the President, to assure the Mexican Government, that it is his desire to settle all questions between the two countries which may grow out of this treaty, or any other cause, on the most liberal and satisfactory terms, INCLUDING THAT OF BOUNDARY.”

This declaration, however, did not satisfy the Senate. They were not willing to give any sanction to such a claim as the words of the treaty covered. Mr. Walker endeavored to persuade them, and so did Mr. Woodbury, that the treaty could only convey what actually belonged to Texas, and, therefore, that it would be void as regarded the territory to which Texas had no right. But both of these gentlemen made arguments in favor of the claim to the Rio Grande, this foreshadowing what Mexico might expect if the treaty should be ratified: and so the Senate rejected the treaty by the decisive vote I have mentioned.

In the course of these proceedings upon the question of annexation, Mr. Benton still more explicitly expressed his views of the character of the act by offering the following resolution:-

"That the incorporation of the left bank of the Rio del Norte into the American Union, virtue of a treaty with Texas, comprehending as the said incorporation would do, a part of the Mexican department of New Mexico, Chihuahua, Coahuila and Tamaulipas, would be an act of direct aggression upon Mexico, for all the consequences of which the United States would stand responsible.”

Mr. Wright took no part in the debate upon this question in the Senate. He voted with Mr. Benton against the treaty, and upon his return to New York after the close of the session, he made a speech at Watertown, in which he states his reasons for his vote:

"I felt it my duty”- he remarked in that speech- "to vote against the ratification of the treaty for the annexation. I believe that the treaty, from the boundaries that must be implied from it, - embraced a country to which Texas had no claim, over which she had never asserted jurisdiction, and which she had no right to cede.” "It appeared to me then” – he continued- "if Mexico should tell us, ‘We don’t know you, we have no treaty to make with you,’ – and we were left to take possession by force, we must take the country as Texas had ceded it to us, and in doing that, we must do injustice to Mexico, and take a large portion of New Mexico, the people of which have never been under the jurisdiction of Texas. This to me was an insurmountable barrier- I could not place the country in that position.”

This is the language of eminent democrats upon the question of the Texan boundary. I purposefully abstain from collating the opinions of eminent Whigs to the same point, because I desire to confront Mr. Polk, not with his adversaries, but with his political friends.
I think you will no be satisfied, from the speeches and documents I have quoted, that Messrs. Benton, Wright and Calhoun, all three, have distinctly avowed their conviction that Texas had no right to cede to us the territory which borders upon the Rio Grande, and that consequently by no cession from Texas could we obtain any just claim to that territory.

In the next letter I will show you upon what grounds Texas was finally admitted into the Union.

J.P. Kennedy

No.4

In the last two letters I have shown you the objections taken by certain prominent leaders of the Democratic Party, against the treaty of annexation, and that these objections referred exclusively to the extent of territory claimed by Texas.

You will see, from what I am now about to lay before you, that before Texas could be annexed, the administration and its friends were compelled virtually to disavow any purpose of taking more territory than was included in the old boundaries of Texas- unless by the consent of Mexico herself- in other words that Congress would not agree to annex Texas with her boundary on the Rio Grande.

The treaty was rejected, as I have said, on the 8th of June, 1844. On the 11th of June the President sent a message to the House of Representatives, informing them of the fact of the rejection by the Senate, and, in effect, asking them to take up the subject in the way of ordinary legislation. This message was referred to the Committee of Foreign Affairs, and nothing was done during the remainder of that session. In this message the President refers to the boundary question, and says of it, that it was- "purposely left open for negotiation with Mexico, as affording the best opportunity for the most friendly and pacific arrangements."

At the next session of Congress in December 1844, the question of annexation was immediately resumed . . .

[Note: Microfilm too light to read several later- JKM]

In accordance with these views of the respective rights of Mexico and the United States in this matter of boundary, Mr. Benton's bill proposed, as you have seen, that we should negotiate for a boundary in the desert which lies immediately west of the Nueces. Of course he was satisfied, before he made this proposition, that Texas had no actual rights beyond the Nueces. A vast desert lies between that river and the Rio del Norte, which Mr. Benton thought a good national boundary, and worth negotiating for with Mexico.

At the same time, or the next day after Mr. Benton offered this proposition in the Senate, the Committee of Foreign Relations in the House, by Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll, their Chairman, reported Joint Resolutions for the annexation. These were followed by the number of propositions for the same purpose, which were offered almost daily for several days, by different members. A long debate took place, in the course of which Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll, speaking on this subject of the boundary, - which I have shown your produced so much objection to this treaty, - took occasion to explain the views of the Committee of Foreign Relations of the Executive on that point. He said "the territorial limits are marked in the configuration of this continent by an Almighty hand. The Platte, the Arkansas, the Red, and the Mississippi rivers- are naturally our waters with their estuaries in the Bay of Mexico. The stupendous deserts between the Nueces and the Rio Bravo, (the Rio Grande) are the natural boundaries between the Anglo Saxon and the Mauritanian races. There ends the valley of the West. There Mexico begins." In the same speech, he apprises the House that he has authority for saying that there will be no difficulty with Mexico- that we should be able to buy her consent to the cession we desired.

"I am happy"- is his language- "to be authorized to assure this House that those beat acquainted with the true state of things apprehend little of no danger of war. The main sinew of war, Money, will head the break and end the controversy amicably."

This quotation from the speech of the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, will enable you to understand precisely what Mr. Calhoun meant when on the 10th of September previous, he wrote this language to Mr. Shannon, our Minister in Mexico- "You are instructed to renew the declaration made to the Mexican Secretary by our Charge d'Affaires, in announcing the conclusion of the treaty, that the measure was adopted in no spirit of hostility to Mexico, and that, if annexation should be consummated, the united States will be prepared to adjust all questions growing out of it, including that of boundary, on the most liberal terms."

Can anyone doubt, after reviewing these facts that our Government had pledged itself to abstain from claiming any boundary that would be offensive to Mexico- and particular to make no claim bounded on the limits set forth in the Texan act of Congress? Can anyone doubt that Congress was unwilling to insist upon the Rio Grande (or Del Norte) as the rightful boundary?

We shall see the determination of Congress in reference to this question, more fully developed in what eventually took place.

Of the several propositions for annexation which were offered in the House of Representatives, that of Mr. Brown of...
Tennessee, was finally adopted on the 13th of January, 1845. Mr. Brown offered his resolutions as a substitute for those of the Committee. They began this way-

Resolved. “That Congress doth consent that the territory properly included within and rightfully belonging to the Republic of Texas may be created into a new State,” etc; and “that the foregoing consent is given on the following condition” to wit:

“Said State shall be formed subject to the adjustment by this Government of all questions of boundary that may arise with other Governments,”

On the 25th of January these resolutions were passed in the House of Representatives, by a vote of 119 to 96, and on the next day passed the Senate without alteration in any material point.

Now I pause here in my narrative to ask you to remark the very guarded phraseology of these joint resolutions by which it was agreed to annex Texas. They say, “the territory included within, and rightfully belonging to, the Republic of Texas.” Why was this language inserted? Several of the resolutions proposed by others in the House do not contain it. Congress would not agree to those other resolutions, but adopted those only which contained this language. Why did Congress insist upon a condition that the State of Texas should be formed “subject to the adjustment by this Government of all questions of boundary that might arise with other Governments”? What other Government was there? None but Mexico with whom we could have any difficulty. What was that difficulty?- The pretension set up by Texas to extend her boundary to the Rio Grande. If Texas had a right to that boundary, what had we to adjust with Mexico? Nothing. If Texas had this right, what do those resolutions mean by laying such stress upon the words “territory properly included within and rightfully belonged to, the Republic of Texas. Manifestly they mean that the Republic of Texas had made pretensions to territory not “properly included within,” nor “rightfully belonging to” it.

But, as if the Congress of the United States was determined to express the most unequivocal dissent from the pretensions of Texas- as made known in her act of Congress of 1836- and to repudiate the notion that Texas, by that act, had any claim to the boundary of the Rio Grande, they passed a law, at the very same session, in which they agreed to annex Texas, of which the title was, “An act allowing a drawback upon foreign merchandize exported in the original packages to Chihuahua and Santa Fe in Mexico.” This bill was passed in the House of Representatives on the 21st of February nearly a month after the passage of the resolutions for annexation; and was amended with a view to include another foreign country by adding the words, “and the British North American provinces, adjoining to the United States.”

Now, the object of this bill was to entitle any merchant who should import goods into the United States, to have refunded to him if he exported them in the original packages to Santa Fe in Mexico- thereby recognizing Santa Fe to be a foreign country, as it undoubtedly was. Yet Congress had, just a month before they passed this bill, agreed to annex Texas to this Union, and Texas had, by her act of Congress of 1836, extended her limits to the Rio Grande, by which she included Santa Fe. It is clear, therefore, from this fact alone- if it were not still more clear from the whole history of the case which I have given you- that Congress had no idea of recognizing the claim of Texas to the Rio Grande, but, on the contrary, directly and unequivocally repelled that claim and refused in any way to allow it.

This is all that I have to bring before you touching the history of the annexation. What I have submitted to you shows clearly, and beyond all dispute-

1st. That Texas proper- and by that I mean the Texas which revolted against Mexico and secured her independence-did not extend to the Rio Grande.

2nd. That the treaty for annexation was rejected because it was supposed to give color to a claim to extend Texas to the Rio Grande.

3rd. That the Government disavowed any purpose to assent to a claim to the Rio Grande, but, on the contrary, desired to open a negotiation with Mexico for the purchase of that boundary.

4th. That the Joint Resolution upon which finally Texas was annexed, carefully provided against taking any territory that did not rightfully belong to Texas.

5th and lastly. That Congress, by the most explicit act of legislation, in relation to the drawback, announced that the country included within the new limits of Texas, and beyond the old limits, was a foreign country belonging to Mexico, and that consequently the territory on the Rio Grande did not “rightfully belong” to the Republic of Texas.

I am now prepared to speak of the manner in which this Mexican war began, and to examine the question how far Mr. Polk acted in accordance with his powers and duties under the Constitution in reference to that manner.

This will be the subject of my next.

J.P. Kennedy
The New Orleans Picayune make the following judicious and seasonable suggestion:

"The positions of our two commanding generals- Taylor reduced to the feeblest defensive strength, and Scott sat down we know not to what extent, in an enemy’s city of two hundred thousand population- are such as to demand the immediate attention of the Government. Santa Anna is doubtless still strong enough to menace the valley of the Rio Grande, and there should be no delay in reinforcing Gen. Taylor. With Gen. Scott the demand for more troops must be equally pressing. He is not only in a city containing a hostile population of two hundred thousand, but has Santa Anna in his immediate vicinity, and we have had too many proofs of the celerity with which he can raise armies to trust to his inactivity. Prompt and energetic action is required of our Government, or much of the work that has been done may have to be done over again. The Mexicans are learning to fight from us, as did the Russians under Peter the Great from Charles the Twelfth, and we cannot be too well or too soon prepared for some new demonstration on their part.”

In order to weaken as much as possible the effect of Mr. Kennedy’s letters to the people of Baltimore, some of the Democratic presses of Maryland furnished their readers with the gratuitous information, that the hostile demonstrations on the banks of the Rio Grande were advised by Gen. Taylor. The fact is, that Gen. Taylor never advised any such thing. What he did advise will be found in the extract from his communication to the War Department, quoted by Mr. Kennedy. The intelligent reader will judge for himself.

The Southern mail did not reach this city last night. The following interesting information; transmitted by Magnetic Telegraph from Washington, furnishes the substance of the news brought by it:

The steamship Alabama arrived at New Orleans on the 4th inst., having left Vera Cruz on the 26th and Tampico on the 30th ult. The Picayune published an extra on the arrival of the Alabama, from which it appears that the following information was received by the editors of that paper from a source entitled to great respect.

The battles of the 8th and 13th September, the Americans lost twenty-seven officers killed and forty-five wounded. No confirmation has been received from any quarter of the death of the American general officers. There was no later news direct from Gen. Scott’s army. Letters received by commercial houses in Tampico from their correspondents in the city of Mexico confirm entirely the Picayune’s former reports of the battles of Mill del Rey and Chapultepec heights of the 8th and 13th, which places were carried by Gen. Scott at the point of the bayonet.

A circular was published on the 14th dated from Guadaloupe and addressed to the Commandants of the general departments. In it is set forth that “Santa Anna evacuated the capital, that other means might be pursued for the purpose of harassing the enemy. That a heroic resistance had been made for the space of six days, but that the enemy at length established himself in positions and places from which his missiles could reach the peaceful thousands of the city. The Supreme government perceiving that State affairs warranted the departure of the officers of government, determined to change their abode, the location of which would be announced as soon as the site should be agreed upon. It further states that the American army charged at daybreak on the 13th, with all its force on Chapultepec, which yielded after a spirited defense of six hours. The Americans immediately marched upon another strong fortification, but the first advance was checked by troops led by Santa Anna, who disputed the ground inch by inch, till finally the Mexicans were routed from the citadel, after nine hours hard fighting.”

The capital being in this situation, Santa Anna, anxious to avoid bombardment, determined to evacuate it. Verbal reports are that he reties to Guadaloupe with ten thousand troops and twenty-five pieces of Artillery. No mention is made of the reported bombardment of the 14th and 15th.

A letter from Vera Cruz states that after the Americans had carried the citadel, they tuned the guns of that fortification upon the city, whereupon the Mexican army retreated to Guadaloupe. The minister of Foreign Affairs addressed the Governor direction him to arrange matters as well as he could until he received official information where the government was established. There is no confirmation of the report that Santa Anna had been wounded.

It was reported that Gen. Quitman was on his way down with dispatches and 4000 men. Col. Wilson, Governor of Vera Cruz, was seriously ill. Gen. Patterson was to take command of the forces in the City and State of Vera Cruz, or
Gen. Lane had been compelled to send back to Vera Cruz for a further supply of ammunition. He had arrived at the National Bridge without serious opposition—though the guerillas made their appearance on several occasions. A requisition for ten thousand rounds was complied with.

Letters from Vera Cruz, dated on the 25th states that a proclamation had been issued by Santa Anna announcing his resignation as President of the Republic, and that Senor Pena y Pena had been initiated in his place. The Picayune doubts the truth of the rumor, however.

It was reported that the yellow fever had made its appearance in Gen. Lane’s command; that there was some scarcity of provisions, and that the Guerillas had fortified Cerro Gordo.

A letter from Maj. Lally, dated Jalapa, 23rd, Sept. says that all was quiet there. The wound that he received in the neck came near killing him, but he was then doing well.

Thursday, October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c6, Letter from Gen. Taylor  words: 669

The National Intelligencer of Tuesday last publishes the following very interesting letter recently received by Dr. Bronson from Gen. Taylor. It is more explicit in reference to the political predictions of the General, that anything which has yet appeared from his pen, and will be read with pleasure by the Whigs throughout the Union—by those who, like ourselves, have deemed it "premature" to commit themselves to his support for the next presidency, as well as by those, more ardent and more sagacious, who have long since hoisted his flag:

Headquarters Army of Occupation
Camp near Monterey, Aug. 10, 1847

Sir: Your letter of the 17th ult., requesting of me an exposition of my views on the question of national policy now at issue between the political parties of the United States, has duly reached me.

I must take occasion to say that many of my letters, addressed to gentlemen in the United States in answer to similar inquiries, have already been made public, and I had greatly hoped that all persons interested had, by this time, obtained from them a sufficiently accurate knowledge of my views and desires in relation to this subject. As it appears, however, that such is not the case, I deem it proper, in reply to your letter, distinctly to repeat that I am not before the People of the United States as a candidate for the next Presidency. It is my great desire to return at the close of this war to the discharge of those professional duties and to the enjoyment of those domestic pursuits from which I was called at its commencement, and for which my tastes and education best fit me.

I have thus given you the circumstances under which only I can be induced to accept the high and responsible office of President of the United States. I need hardly add that I cannot in any case permit myself to be brought before the people exclusively by any of the political parties that now so unfortunately divide our country, as the candidate for this office.

It affords my great pleasure, in conclusion, fully to concur with you in your high and just estimate of the virtues, both of head and heart of the distinguished citizens [Messrs. Clay, Webster, Adams, McDuffie and Calhoun] mentioned in your letter. I have never yet exercised the privilege of voting; but had I been called upon as the last Presidential election to do so, I should most certainly have cast my vote for Mr. Clay.

I am, sir, very respectfully

Your obedient servant

Z. Taylor
Maj. General U.S. Army

F.S. Bronson, M.D., Charleston, S.C.

The emphatic approbation expressed by General Taylor of "the administrative policy of our early Presidents," in which the Whigs find ample authority for all their leading principles and measures, taken in connection with his frank declaration that he should have certainly voted for Mr. Clay in 1844, had he voted at all, can leave no doubt of his entire concurrence with the Whig party in sentiment. While on this point we have never been ourselves in doubt, we are nevertheless gratified that the General has been sufficiently explicit to satisfy others, who, not content with the positive declarations of third parties, have insisted upon waiting for the “best evidence”- that of General Taylor himself.- Rich. Whig

[JKM]

---

Thursday, October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c6, From Gen. Taylor’s Army  words: 190

The following extract from a letter to the editor contains the latest intelligence from Gen. Taylor’s division. We are also informed by the same letter, that Col. Hamtramck has been appointed to command the Brigade of which the Virginia Regiment form a part, in the place of Gen. Cushing. Capt. Harper acts as Assistant Inspector General, to Col. Hamtramck, and Lieut. Porterfield, late of this place, Adjutant of the Virginia Regiment, and is Asst. Adjt. General.

“You will have heard before this reaches you, that the advance of this portion of the army has been checked by the withdrawal of troops from Gen. Taylor’s column. General Lane’s and Gen. Cushing’s Brigades have been ordered to Vera Cruz.

Col. Hamtramck now fills the place vacated by Gen. Cushing, as commandant of the Brigade to which the Virginia Regiment is attached. The idea of remaining here inactive during the approaching fall and winter is disheartening; but those more competent than I to express an opinion, predict that the battle of Buena Vista will be fought again.

But this I think doubtful. We are daily expecting to hear Scott’s entrance into the city.”

[JKM]

---

Thursday, October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c6, Capital Hit  words: 131

The following from the Richmond Republican is a “telling shot.”

Mexico would never have offered terms so preposterous, if she had not been encouraged by the “no territory party,” by the Nueces party and the Mexican party at home, by the party which has denounced this war as aggressive, unholy, and unjust on our part.- Union.

This is a very unkind his at Mr. Polk. He was of the “no territory party,” at the commencement of the war- else his message of December, 1846, did not speak truly. In that document, he expressly declared that “the war had not bee waged with a view to conquest.” It was only for “indemnity” and the payment of “pecuniary demands.” But hit him again, good organ. Mr. Polk has been too modest by half.

[JKM]

---

Thursday October 14, 1847, MG47v48n33p2c7, The Virginia Regiment  words: 328

We have a letter from an officer of this Regiment, dated at Buena Vista on the 6th of September, from which we gather some items of information which it may be agreeable to our readers to be acquainted with.

The writer says: “Again has the cup been dashed from our lips- again has joy been banished from our camp. Four of Taylor’s regiments have been taken from him to join Gen. Scott, just as we were on the eve of our march upon San Luis Potosi. The Massachusetts, Ohio, Indiana, and the 10th Regiments, have been taken from us, and now again we are compelled to be idle, while upon each monthly report we find that deaths and discharges reduce our numbers.

“We were to have advanced in the early part of this month, and the Virginia Regiment was to have been the advance guard of the Army. Ours is considered the best Regiment in Mexico, and it is the last Gen. Taylor would part with. This Regiment and the Mississippi have been formed into a Brigade, and Col. Hamtramck has been assigned to its command. Col. H. accordingly appointed Lieut. Porterfield of the Virginia Regiment his Asst. Adjt. General, Lieut. Henry of the Mississippi Regiment his Aid, and Capt. Kenton Harper his Assistant Inspector General. Col. Randolph is therefore in command of the Virginia Regiment.

“Gen. Cushing was in command of the Brigade, but having been ordered to report to Gen. Scott, Col. Hamtramck has succeeded him in the command.” [And we may be permitted to add, by way of parenthesis, that Mr. Polk would do good service by making the appointment a permanent one.]

We understand from the same source, that diarrhea and dysentery have been the prevailing complaints among our men. Col. Hamtramck is in robust health since his recovery from his sever attack, and we are happy to hear he is in fine plight for service honorable to Virginia and the Country.- Rich. Rep.

[JKM]
I have laid before you the evidence, derived entirely from the public records and from the declarations of leaders of the Democratic party, which demonstrates the fact that in the annexation of Texas, our Government restricted the annexation to the old Texas of the Mexican Confederation, with the Nueces for its boundary, and pledged itself to Mexico and the world, not to assert the claim to the Rio Grande or to occupy to that limit without the consent of Mexico. I think all this is clearly inferred in the history which I have laid before you.

I come now to consider what followed the passage of the joint resolutions for annexation.

The Government changed hands immediately upon the adjournment of Congress. Mr. Polk was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1845. You will now perceive that the moment this affair of the annexation came into his hands, he gave it an essentially new direction. He determined to pay no regard to the consideration upon which Texas was admitted to the Union, and to recognize no pledge which the proceedings of the last administration and of Congress had given to Mexico upon the subject of the boundary.

Before the annexation was agreed upon, it is true, Mexico has said she would consider it as an act of war upon her; and Mr. Polk I freely admit, was bound to be prepared for such an event. I think it was, in the highest sense, his duty to be well prepared for a war, if Mexico should act upon her threat.

A Convention was to meet in Texas on the 4th of July, 1845, to consider our propositions for annexation. The Convention did meet and ratified the proceeding. Previous, however, to the meeting of this Convention, that is to say, on the 28th of May, the President ordered Gen. Taylor to move with his little army towards Texas.

There seems now to have been some private understanding between Mr. Polk and the Government of Texas, that, without regarding what may be considered as the plighted faith of the nation on the question of the boundary.

On the 15th of June, Mr. Bancroft, acting as Secretary of War, informs Gen. Taylor: “the point of your ultimate destination is the western frontier of Texas, here you will select and occupy in or near the Rio Grande del Norte, such a site as will be best adapted to repel invasion, and to protect what, in the event of annexation, will be our Western border!”

Here is the first bold and open avowal of a purpose on the part of the new administration, to disregard what may be considered as the plighted faith of the nation on the question of the boundary.

The private understanding to which I have alluded, I think will be seen in the correspondence between Mr. Allen, the Secretary of the State of Texas, and Mr. Donelson, our agent there. Mr. Allen, in a letter of the 26th of June, eleven days later than Mr. Bancroft’s order, suggests to Mr. Donelson “the propriety and necessity of an immediate march of the troops, and that they proceed at once to occupy positions on the Rio Grande.”

Mr. Donelson gives no countenance to this proposition, and apprises Mr. Allen what instructions he had been hitherto directed to communicate to Gen. Taylor. Amongst these instructions are the following.

“"The occupation of the country between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, you are aware, is a disputed question. Texas holds Corpus Christi, Mexico hold the Brazos de St. Jago, near the mouth of the Rio Grande.” "You can safely hold possession of Corpus Christi, and all other points up the Nueces, and if Mexico attempts to dislodge you, drive her beyond the Rio Grande.”

Notwithstanding this, that Mr. Donelson was directed to say to Gen. Taylor in an early stage of this movement, that the boundary to the Rio Grande was “a disputed question” - Mr. Bancroft’s instructions to the General, you perceive, are to take possession to the Rio Grande, as that, “in the event of annexation will be our Western border.”

This is clearly a very summary prejudgment of the “disputed question!” At this point the violation of the terms of the annexation seems to have become the settled purpose of the Cabinet. We were henceforth to effect our claim to the border of the Rio Grande, and maintain it by force.

The subsequent orders which Gen. Taylor received, establish that determination. Let us look to a few of them, and the events with which they were connected.

“"The Government was conscious that the only ground upon which there could be made the slightest justification of this attempt to seize the disputed territory- as they chose to call it, although it had not the benefit even of a plausible dispute- was that the territory beyond the Nueces was in the actual occupation of the people of Texas. So far as regarded as few settlements on the west bank of the Nueces this was true, and those settlers might be said to be under the protection of Texas. This was the case of Corpus Christi, immediately at the mouth of the Nueces and on the Western margin. But beyond the actual border of the river, there were no settlers. Whilst over towards the Rio Grande and on its banks, there dwelt a considerable number of Mexican citizens, who had long resided in this section of Tamaulipas. The country between the two rivers, embracing a width of about one hundred and thirty miles, was chiefly as desert. Brazos Santiago and Point Isabel were Mexican settlements, and no Americans dwelt in that region.

With these facts before him Mr. Marcy written to General Taylor, on the 30th of July. “You are expected to occupy, protect, and defend the territory of Texas to the extent it has been occupied by the people of Texas”—which, in point of fact, as Mr. Donelson had written to the Department, was no where further west that Corpus Christi, and the west bank of the Nueces. But Mr. Marcy’s letter goes on to say: “The Rio Grande is claimed to be the boundary between the two countries, and up to this boundary you are to extend your protection, only excepting any posts on the eastern side thereof which are in the actual occupancy of Mexican forces, or Mexican settlement over which the Republic of Texas did not exercise jurisdiction at the period of annexation, or shortly before that event.”

[Note: Microfilm copy too light to read - JKM]

The letter of Mr. Marcy- 30th July, 1845- above referred to, in important in this narrative as establishing one fact—namely, that the Government knew, at the time they were issuing these orders, that the country on the Rio Grande, and between that and the Nueces was—as far as it was capable of occupation—in the actual occupancy of Mexican forces, and Mexican inhabitants or settlers, and that it was not pretended that these settlers were under the jurisdiction of Texas, or ever had been under it. They were inhabitants who belonged to the State of Tamaulipas, and exclusively under the jurisdiction of Mexico. This was known to our government.

Gen. Taylor remained at Corpus Christi all through the autumn of 1845, and the winter of 1846. There was no invasion attempted by Mexico, and a general prevailed that we should soon have a settlement of all difficulties between the two countries. Our government had made application to Mexico to know if she would open negotiations for the settlement of the disputed questions. She answered favorably to the proposition.

Mr. Slidell was appointed minister plenipotentiary to go to Mexico. Mexico objected to receiving a minister, on the ground that the question of Texas and the boundary must be settled before she could acknowledge the existence of full relations of amity with us; she offered therefore to receive a commissioner, to treat specially on those questions and no others. Our government would not consent to indulge her in this demand, although it has since that time, sent a commissioner for pretty much that same purpose, in the person of Mr. Trist. I do not excuse Mexico for this refusal to receive our Minister. It was very frivolous piece of false pride, but very much in character with all her other follies connected with this quarrel. But certainly this refusal to receive a minister was not war.

On the 13th of January, 1846, whilst this question of the reception of the minister was yet pending, and before it was known whether Mexico would receive him or not, and at a time where there was no expectation of an invasion from Mexico— and, more to be noted that anything else— at a time when the Congress of the United States was in session, the President, privately, without communicating one syllable to Congress, or giving any hint of the event to either branch of the national legislature, to whom alone the Constitution has confined the great and momentous power of making war— in these circumstances, and on this day, Mr. Polk authorized Mr. Marcy to write to Gen. Taylor— “I am directed by the President to instruct you to advance and occupy, with the troops under your command, positions on or near the east bank of the Rio del Norte, as soon as it can conveniently be done, with reference to the season and routes by which your movements must be made. From the views heretofore presented to this department, it is presumed Point Isabel will be considered by you an eligible position; this point, or some one near it, and points opposite Matamoras, and Mier, and in the vicinity of Loredo, are suggested to your consideration.”

Can any friend of Mr. Polk’s answer the question, why Congress was not consulted when the decisive step was taken? Here was a clear, unequivocal repudiation of all our previous pledges in regard to the question of the boundary to the Rio del Norte. Here was an order to occupy a country which it was admitted was under the jurisdiction of Mexico, and in which a Mexican town, on the left or eastern bank of the Rio del Norte—the town of Loredo, containing fifteen hundred inhabitants— was specially designated as one of the positions for the army; here was, in short, an invasion of Mexico—just such an invasion as every civilized nation would regard as an act of war. Suppose the case reversed, and Mexico had directed her troops to advance to the Nueces, and to occupy a position which should command one of the villages of Texas— what would this country have thought of it? Need I ask? The declaration would have been universal, that Mexico had began the war, by an act of flagrant aggression. And yet certainly Mexico had quite as much right to seize upon the disputed territory as we had— if Mr. Benton’s opinion is worth anything— a much better right.

On the 10th of March, 1846, Gen. Taylor in obedience to these orders, commenced his march from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande. He arrived at that river on the 28th, and encamped opposite Matamoras. What he did when he arrived there, you will read in his official dispatches. On the 6th of April the General writes— “On our side a battery for four eighteen pounders will be completed; and the guns places in the battery today. These guns bear directly upon the public square of Matamoras, and within good range for demolishing the town. Their object cannot be mistaken by the enemy!” Remember that when that letter was written there had been no collision— not a shot had been fired, not a man made prisoner.

And yet we are told that this act was not an act of war! – that this marching of an army into what we are pleased to call “disputed territory,” but which confessedly was, and always had been, in the actual occupation of the people of Mexico and under the jurisdiction of that country; - this marching of an army there; - this pointing of cannon into the very homesteads of the inhabitants of Matamoras, the capital of Tamaulipas; - was not an act of war!! Collisions
Here I drop the subject of the origin of the war. I shall have a few words to say upon the resolutions of the House of

That it is to be hoped another Congress like it will not meet a gain very soon."

It took the President at his word. The late Congress had some able members, and it adopted some judicious measures;

President, as free from blame. It ought to have seen and corrected the Executive mistake. Yet it is not surprising that

This writer goes on further to say: - "We are far from regarding Congress in echoing the false statement of the

"It is with no pleasure that we speak thus of the chief magistrate of the Union, for whose elevation to his high and

Course the President should have pursued is plain and obvious. On learning the state of things on the frontier, the

"No sophistry can make her act war – certainly not without conceding that our act in taking military possession of that

"Unhappily, this course did not occur to the President, or was too plain and simple to meet his approbation. As if

"By declaring that the war already existed, and by the act of Mexico herself, the President relieved Congress of the

"It is with no pleasure that we speak thus of the chief magistrate of the Union, for whose elevation to his high and

This writer goes on further to say: - "We are far from regarding Congress in echoing the false statement of the

Here I drop the subject of the origin of the war. I shall have a few words to say upon the resolutions of the House of Delegates in me next.

J.P. Kennedy

Thursday, October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c3, Untitled words: 518

The New York Tribune publishes an extract from a private letter, "written," it says, "by an eminent Southerner statesman to friend at the North on the subject of the slavery extension." We quote the following passages:

"If California or any other Mexican Department were ceded to us, the people (having already municipal laws) would there by change their allegiance; their relation to their ancient sovereign would be dissolved; but their relations to each other and their Rights of Property would remain undisturbed; and, as their laws do not now recognize slaves as property, but forbid the relation of Master and Slave, how could it be introduced without a law of Congress creating it? Would not mere silence exclude it as effectually as any other mode? If so, "the South" will have to demand of Congress a law to propagate Slavery by creating it de novo? If they do this, what becomes of our old doctrine of non-interference? If Congress has not power to abolish, how do we find a power to create it?

Congress never yet created Slavery in any State or Territory. No State of the Union ever created Slavery. In all former acquisitions, the Territory was ceded with Slavery- the relation of Master and Slave already existed therein; and all that has been done at any time was to abstain from abolishing those rights of property as the existed at the period of our purchase.

The Wilmot Proviso principle, therefore, is not an old question. So far as it is identical with former contests in this respect, the argument is against Slave Extension; for if Congress adhere to the old rule, of taking Territory as we find it, the new purchase must be accepted as it is, with Slavery forbidden by the existing law,

The Wilmot Proviso is nothing more than a friendly notice that this policy will be adhered to. So it strikes me. And it here occurs to me that Mr. Calhoun's abstract resolutions are exactly what will leave the newly acquired territory free of Slavery if they are fairly carried into practice.

If the argument here presented is sound the enactment of the Wilmot Proviso would be merely declaratory of a principle already existing, as embodied in the laws of Mexico, in the territories to which the Proviso, had reference. The rejection of such a declaratory enactment might be put upon the ground that it is unnecessary; for, if it should not be adopted, the municipal laws of Mexico in the territories in question, unless changed by act of Congress, would constitute in themselves a proviso substantially the same as that proposed by Mr. Wilmot, of Pennsylvania, in the House of Representatives.

The subject is full of difficulties. The attempts which have been made, and which the Administration party in New York and Pennsylvania are now making, to evade the issue which the question presents, will scarcely succeed. In one shape or another it seems inevitable that the responsibility of the issue, grave and momentous as it is, must be met, whenever the annexation of any portion of new territory shall take place.

JKM

Thursday, October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c4, Mr. Faulkner and the War words: 634

We, yesterday morning, received a communication from a "Democratic Subscriber," asking us to publish a speech of Mr. Faulkner on the subject of the Mexican War, made at the Regimental parade of 1846 in this place. The communication was received too late to enable us to comply with the request this week. Mr. Faulkner is from home too, and we deem it advisable to afford him an opportunity, should he deem the matter worthy of his attention, to report his own views upon that subject. The remarks as reported, were made under the excitement of the moment, and as the speaker did not present to go into any argument of the question, the republication of his speech could have no other effect that to convey the impression made upon the mind of the reported, of the views of Mr. Faulkner at that time. It will be remembered too, that the ground assumed by Mr. Polk was then a very different one from that occupied by the party now. Besides, Mr. Faulkner, like every other man in the country, has had time to review his first impressions upon the subject, while it must be confessed, that light has been shed upon this question since that time which was not then within his reach. We know that Mr. Faulkner felt and expressed a most anxious desire to see the Hon. John P. Kennedy returned as a member of the next Congress- a desire he would hardly have manifested had he considered the views of Mr. Kennedy traitorous or dangerous to the country. We hazard nothing in the absence of Mr. F., in denying that he entertains the views now avowed by the Administration party in relation to the acquisition of Mexican Territory, and that there will be no necessity for us, even did we assume the right to do so, to "read Mr. Faulkner out of the Whig Church." But we can assure our worthy friend and correspondent that we do not arrogate to ourselves the prerogative of ostracizing the members of the Whig party. Every member of that party has a right to his views upon any subject, and the columns of the Gazette are open to him for the discussion of all questions affecting the interests of the country. We cordially extend this invitation to our correspondent, and all members of his party, and shall cheerfully lay before our readers any arguments he or they may think pertinent not only to this, but any other question which divides political opinion, provided they are respectfully urged. Our earnest desire is that the people may have a fair opportunity of deciding upon these subjects, and if we shall be proved to have been in the wrong, we pledge ourselves to retract opinions with all the candor in which we have avowed them. We therefore not only express our willingness to publish Mr. Faulkner's remarks, but here pledge ourselves to renounce our political connection with that gentleman, so soon as the same office is performed by the leading Locofocos for Messrs. Benton, Bronson, Calhoun, and Van Buren, all of whom dissent from the opinions of the body of their party in relation to annexation and the war, far more strongly than did ever Mr. Faulkner from any views of his Whig brethren.

We repeat our conviction that the opinions of Mr. Faulkner on this subject do not materially differ from those entertained by the mass of the Whig party. In conclusion we assure our correspondent that we are not quite soft enough to be caught in the trap of his allies. We cannot be brought to denounce a political and personal friend for an honest difference of opinion, should that difference exist, which in this instance, as he will in due time discover, is not the case.

Thursday, October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c5, The Annexation of Mexico words: 593

The Baltimore Sun, a paper which, although professedly independent, has been so successful of late in foreshadowing the measures of the administration, that it has come to be generally regarded as a sort of semi-official organ, expresses that opinion that the Government will, in order to effect an honorable termination of the war, be forced to subjugate the whole Mexican Republic, and annex it to this country. Under ordinary circumstances, and coming from a different source, a suggestion of this sort might be regarded as the mere idle speculation of a reckless paragraphist; but the Sun has established a reputation as an exponent of the views of the administration and its adherents, which it would be loath to hazard lightly. We may, therefore, safely assume that whether openly avowed by the Cabinet or not, the opinion of the Sun has not inconsiderable number of “backers” in the ranks of the Progressives.

At the commencement of this bloody drama, the annunciation of the most remote probability of such a termination of the war as the annexation of a whole Republic, double the size of Great Britain, and containing many millions of people ignorant of our language, and imbued with the most implacable hatred against our country, would only have been suggested in ridicule of our annexing propensities; or if seriously proposed would have been regarded as an emanation from the brain of a madman. But alas! Like the king of Pontus who partook of poison, increasing the potion at every succeeding dose until it became his daily food, so the votaries of modern democracy have been gradually drugged with the corrupt and disorganizing doctrines of the times, until today, they drain with eagerness, the cup from which a few months ago, they would have turned with loathing and horror. We are confident that this state of things proceeds from now want of patriotism on the part of the great majority of those who lend their support to the Administration; it is sheerly the result of an indisposition to undergo the labor of examining minutely the subjects of complaint against their rulers, especially when the candid prosecution of such an investigation might have the effect of sundering party ties to which they have been long wedded, and withdrawing their confidence from leader it has become a sort of second nature to trust.

We only hope that they may be brought seriously to reflect upon the subject before it be too late to repair the effects of past errors and follies, and to avoid those which are looming upon our future prospects. For now, nothing seems too daring for the Administration to propose, or too monstrous to be applauded and recommended by the bloated recipients of the spoils.

With regard to the proposal to subjugate and annex to our Republic the whole of Mexico, it may or may not be a cherished design of the Administration. The idea of erecting subjugated territory into free and independent States, would have been strange to the ears of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Jefferson would have certainly regarded a prophecy of such an event, as Mr. Ritchie did the first nomination of Gen. Jackson for the Presidency- a rich joke. But modern democrats have read that Rome annexed foreign territory and they are unwilling that the progressive democracy of Republican America should be behind that of Republican Rome. Manifest Destiny is the God that rules the hour, and we have no means of divining what new schemes of folly and madness are yet to be revealed.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c6, Untitled words: 191

[Poetry of Mrs. Lydia Jane Preston]

"It may not be! Forbid it God!
    Forbid it, all that patriots prize:
That land has tasted freeman's blood;
    Their dust within its bosom lies.
"Twere madness to resign the soil
    On which our conquering feet have trod;
Battling our way with glorious toil;
It may not be- forbid it, God!
No, never! This is holy ground,
Bought and baptized with patriot blood;
See? With her fetters half unbound,
She lifts her hands to Freedom's God!
By Freedom's God, she shall be free!
Huzza! Brave hearts press boldly on Strike home, nor pause till victory Shall put her olive garland on 'Till o'er that land to utmost parts
Our Eagle's sheltering wings are spread;
And Taylor throned on Freedmen's hearts
Enjoys his laurels in their shade.

We are constrained to omit a great deal of hard swearing, utterly unworthy of a lady of distinguished Christian piety, and to dismiss the subject with the remark, that if the fact of having lost brave and patriotic sons upon its soil, confers an unquestionable right to any country, then England is entitled to at least two-thirds of the habitable globe, including these United States.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 21, 1847, MG47v48n34p2c6, Mutilation of Document  words: 330

We copied from the Union, several days since, an "official" letter addressed by Major Lally, then in command at Jalapa, to his superior, Col. Wilson, at Vera Cruz, giving an account of his march from the latter to the former place. A correspondent of the Alexandria Gazette states, on the authority of a gentleman, who had seen the original, that the following paragraph of Major Lally's letter was suppressed in the publication. We are not surprised at the solicitude of the Government to conceal from the eyes of the world facts so discreditable to the national character, but we doubt the sobriety of so doing. There is a certain sort of fascination in the "pomp and circumstance of glorious war," not only for the vulgar, but even for minds of a higher stamp. It is well occasionally to throw aside the tinsel drapery of Mars, that we may catch a glimpse of his mutilated limbs and his ensanguined visage. There is always a reverse side to the brightest pictures- and the suppressed extract furnishes it in this instance. Robbery and sacrilege, and oft times blacker crimes, are unfortunately too often the immediate fruits of victory: - Whig.

Jalapa, Sept. 11, 1847

"You speak of rumors in relation to ----, I have no doubt that are true. It appears Col. Wynkoop heard I was in great danger, and three days after my arrival at this place he came down with three hundred men, ___'s company included. The men were drunk when they came to town, and remained so until they went out. Several robberies were committed here, but the most reprehensible act was in going to Cauthepec, where they met with no resistance, but robbed almost every house, and, to cap the climax, robbed the Church, and destroyed, what to them was useless, but to the church valuable. The same thing was done at San Miguel. I have promised to pay the Church for its losses, under General Scott's proclamation."

[JKM]

Thursday, October 21, 1847 MG47v48n34p2c6, Arrest of Colonel Gilpin  words: 177

The Weston (Missouri) Herald, of the 2nd instant says: " A difficulty has arisen between Cols. Wharton and Gilpin which resulted in placing the latter under arrest. Col. G., on his arrival at the Fort, waited on Col. W. for the purpose of ascertaining his orders, and of making arrangements preliminary to assuming the command of his battalion. A difference of opinion occurred regarding the objects of the expedition. Both became excited.

Col. W. states that the battalion was to be stationed on the Santa Fe route for the purpose of protection the trains, and was not to depart therefrom. Col. G. replied: "By God, sir, I will pursue the Indians even to the mountains but that I will overtake them." Col. W., after informing him that he was the commanding officer of that post, and could not allow such language to be used, told him that he must retract or he would put him under arrest. This Gilpin refused to do, and, accordingly, he is now under arrest. Col. W. has forwarded his charges to Washington.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 21, 1847 MG47v48n34p2c2, Mexican Whigism  words: 218

The Locofoco organs seem of late not to know any name for the Whigs but "Mexican Whigs." Let us mention a few facts for the benefit of these callers of hard names. Two Kentucky regiments destined for Mexico are now encamped near this city, and we are assured by a gentleman of the highest respectability, who professes to know the fact, that a large majority of the rank and file of both regiments are Whigs. Leander Coxe, Esq., who was the late Whig candidate for Congress against Judge French, and who was lampooned as a Mexican Whig by all the Locofoco papers of the State, is Captain of one of the very finest companies at the encampment, and by far the larger portion of his company are Whigs. There is a company upon the ground from the strong Locofoco counties of Henry, Oldham, and Trimble, and seventy men of this company, or more that seven-tenths of it, are Whigs. The regiments are made up of men from nine of the ten Congressional districts of Kentucky, but Lynn Boyd’s district, the only Locofoco district in the State, is not represented by a solitary volunteer in either regiment! Let the Locofoco scamps, whose tongues are so familiar with the phrase "Mexican Whigs," digest these facts as they may.- Louisville Journal.

[JKM]

---

We are indebted to our friend, John W. Tibbatts, Col. 16th Infantry, who is now Civil and Military Governor of Monterey, for a copy of the proclamation issued by him upon his assuming the duties of that office, on the 1rst September, 1847. The proclamation declares that the Governor found the city “virtually without law or order, and infested with robbers, murderers, gamblers, vagrants, and other evil disposed persons- the worst of criminals going free, unscathed of justice; even rapine and murder stalking abroad in open day without fear of punishment, insomuch that the peaceable inhabitants thereof have no protection, either of person or property.” The Colonel gives a very dark picture of the morals of his “province,” but if there is any virtue in stringent laws and avowals of a determination to enforce them, he will soon have a respectable city of it. He makes a clean sweep of the gamblers, hells, drinking shops, and rowdies, and invites the Mexican citizens who have been compelled to flee from their homes through fear or other cause to return, with the assurance that they will be protected in all their honest avocations._Frankfort (Ky.) Commonwealth [JKM]

---

We have seen it stated that one of the companies from Mississippi, at Buena Vista, was commanded by a Methodist minister. Just before the battle commences, and whilst the troops were forming, it is said he delivered the following pithy prayer, at the head of his company:

"Be with us this day in the conflict, O Lord! We are few, and the enemy are many. Be with us as thou wast with Joshua when he went down from Gilgal to Bethhoron and Ajalo, to smite the Amorites. We do not ask thee for the sun and moon to stand still, but grant us plenty of powder, plenty of daylight, and no cowards. Take old Rough and Ready under thy special charge. Amen! - M-A-R-C-H."

His company performed prodigies on the field that day.- N.O. Nat.

[JKM]

---

The steamer Fashion, Capt. Ivy, arrived last evening from Vera Cruz via Tampico, having left the former city on the 7th and the latter and the 9th. From the 3rd to the 7th outward bound vessels were detained at Vera Cruz by a heavy norther, and little communication was had with the shore. The Fashion has experienced very rough weather.

By this arrival we have our correspondence from Mr. Kendall and others up to the 28th of September from the city of Mexico. The news in glorious, ever glorious from the American arms; at the same time our losses are severe, and the details of the killed and wounded heart sickening. Thank God! None of our generals have been killed, but Maj. Gen. Pillow and Brig. Gen. Sheilbs were both wounded severely, but were doing well at last accounts. We are not about to repeat the list of killed here; it will be found in Mr. Kendall’s letters. We may mention, however, that Col. McIntosh and Col. Ranson, Lieut. Col. Martin Scott, Lieut. Col. Graham, of the 11th Infantry, Lieut. Col. Baxter, of the New York regiment, and Lieut. Col. Dickinson of the South Carolina regiment, are dead. For the rest of the deplorable list we refer to Mr. Kendall’s letters.

In the battle of the King’s Mill on the 8th, Gen. Worth’s division lost about 600 men in killed and wounded. In the battles of the 13th- the storming of Chapultepec, and the attack on the citadel- Quitman’s division lost 300, Twigg’s 268, Pillow’s 142, and Worth’s 188- 848 in all. Worth had scarcely a thousand men in this action. Our entire loss since leaving Puebla in killed, wounded and missing Mr. Kendall sets down at 3000; another authority given below makes it 4000. And yet Gen. Scott entered the valley of Mexico with an army only a little exceeding 10,000 men. What wonders have not the “ten thousand” achieved! The Mexican loss is not definitely ascertained, but was enormous.

Gen. Bravo was not killed, but was taken a prisoner. We do not see that Santa Anna was wounded. It is true that he has resigned the Presidency. We have the act before us, but have not room for it today. Since his resignation he has made and address to his countrymen, which we will give tomorrow.
We annex her Gen. Scott’s order after his victorious occupation of the city.

General Orders – No. 286

National Palace of Mexico, Sept. 16, 1847

The general in chief calls upon his brethren in arms to return both in public and private worship, thanks and gratitude to God for the signal triumphs which they have recently achieved for their country.

Beginning with the 19th of August and ending the 14th instants, this army has gallantly fought its way through the fields and forts of Contreras, San Antonio, Churubusco, Molino del Rey, Chapultepec and the gates of San Cosmo and Tacubaya, into the capital of Mexico.

When the very limited numbers who have performed these brilliant deeds shall have become known, the world will be astonished and our own countrymen filled with joy and admiration.

But all is not yet done. The enemy, through scattered and dismayed, has still many fragments of his late army hovering about us, and, aided by an exasperated population, he may again reunite in treble our numbers and fall upon us to advantage if we rest inactive on the security of past victories.

Compactness, vigilance and discipline are, therefore, our only securities. Let every good officer and man look to those cautions and enjoin them upon all others.

By command of Maj. Gen. Scott
H.L. Scott, A A A G.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 28, 1847 MG47v48n35p2c4 Affairs in Vera Cruz and on the Road words: 692

Our papers and letters by the Fashion contain much interesting and important information in relation to the state of the road from Vera Cruz to the capital. We proceed to give such items as are of immediate interest.

The report that Gen. Rea was at Puebla is fully confirmed, and that Genius of Liberty, of the 27th ult., says our troops under Col. Childs were bombarding the city from the surrounding heights. The same paper, of the 2nd inst., has the following.

"Gen. Santa Anna never so badly discomfited, was by the very latest accounts at Publa. His force, after its junction with that of Gen. Rea, amounted in infantry and cavalry to 3000 men, and it was quartered in the convent of St. Carmen. The Americans under the command of Col. Childs, were strongly fortified in a massive built and very capacious convent of the same city, conscious of the strength of their position, and its impregnability, were awaiting the arrival of reinforcements, in the utmost security and tranquility. At intervals bombs were thrown into the city, which, however, we are happy to say did not receive much injury from their explosion previous to the date of our accounts."

From the tenor of our Vera Cruz correspondent’s letters, we have no doubt that Col. Childs would soon be reinforced by the arrival of Gen. Lane with his brigade at Puebla. He reached Jalapa on the 30th ult., and was to leave the next day for Puebla. Maj. Lally’s command accompanied him. Our correspondent says, writing on the 29th ult:

"Capt. Biscoe’s command returned yesterday from the National Bridge, whence it had been to escort ammunition for Gen. Lane’s command, which had already started, the General having left orders for the ammunition train to move on and join him. From pretty good information received at the Bridge Capt. Biscoe was confident there was not a guerrilla at Cerro Gordo, and that the whole command would arrive safe at Jalapa, where it would obtain a supply of provisions.

"Another small train of provisions left the city last night, a part of which was for Col. Collin’s and a part for Col. Hugee’s command. The fact that Capt. Biscoe’s company was not attacked either in going to or returning from the National Bridge, is evidence that the guerrillas have abandoned that road for the present, but I have no doubt they will return when least expected."

Our correspondent, writing from Vera Cruz on the 4th inst., says that a gentleman who arrived from Mexico a few days previous, and who went to from Puebla to Mexico on the 15th September, says that he met fully 2000 Mexican soldiers (deserters) on their way to Puebla and other southern places south of Mexico.

Capt. Fairchild’s command returned to Vera Cruz on the 8th inst. from the Bridge, having escorted provisions to Col. Hughes’s and Col. Collins’s command. On the way back they were fired into, and Lieut. Morales, of Capt. F’s company, was severely wounded in the left hand, which will no doubt have to be amputated.
Gen. Alvarez has been appointed commandant of the State of Puebla, and is represented to be unceasing in his efforts to organize and equip another force for the purpose of cutting off Gen. Scott's communication with Vera Cruz, and of preventing any new accession of men and supplies.

The following is from the Genius of Liberty of the 30th ult:

"Our city looks quite brisk and lively this morning, owing to the arrival of the steamers New Orleans, Telegraph, and Ohio; our harbor, notwithstanding the violence of the wind, is literally covered with boats running backwards and forwards, landing horses, mules, and government stores; and the loud peal of the cannon is occasionally heard from Fort Conception, giving a healthy welcome to our gallant officers and brave soldiers.

"Gen. Patterson and staff, Major Polk, brother of the President; Capt. Stapp, Lieuts. Lampire, Palmer and Mitchell, Vols.; Capt. Livingston, Lieuts. Stewart, Scott and Holmes, Florida Vols.; Lieut. Jenkins, regular army, arrived by the steamer New Orleans, from N. Orleans, and Gen. Cushing and staff, by the steamer Ohio, from Brazos."

[JKM]

Thursday, October 28, 1847   MG47v48n35p2c5   Untitled   words: 90

Our correspondent, writing on the 4th inst. says Gen. Patterson expected to be able to start for the interior in about a week with 2000 or more men.

The U.S. Schooner Flirt had been out eleven days on a cruise in search of a suspicious vessel, supposed to be a privateer, but returned without getting a glimpse of her.

The Genius of the 29th ult. says a report was circulating in Vera Cruz that a bearer of dispatches from Gen. Scott was killed at the city of Cordova- M.O. Picayune [JKM]

Thursday, October 28, 1847   MG47v48n35p2c5   What we asked and what Mexico was willing to give words: 236

The demands of Mr. Polk, made through Mr. Trist, would have given to the United States, had they been acceded to by the Mexican Government, an additional territory of 696,000 square miles, or nearly one half of all the territory which Mexico possesses or claims, short of Texas proper – a territory larger in extent than all France, Great Britain, Austria and Prussia taken together. It is true that Mr. Trist afterwards withdrew the claim for the Peninsula of California. This would reduce the President's demand to about 636,000 square miles, leaving an expanse of territory sufficient to make nine States as large as Virginia, and eighty as large as Massachusetts.

Such being the moderate demands of President Polk, let us state what the Mexicans were willing to yield.

The Mexicans proposed to surrender to us a strip of continent extending, in its greatest length, over 25 degrees of longitude, and, in it greatest breadth, 5 degrees of latitude. It would have given us east of the Rio Grande in round numbers, 32,000 square miles, sliced from New Mexico, and west of the Rio Grande, 291,000 square miles of California, containing the bays of Monterey and San Francisco- in all, 323,000 square miles, embracing upwards of one-fifth the entire Mexican territory.

But this was not sufficient. The first declaration in relation to Oregon seems to be the order of the day: "The whole or none!"- Cumberland Civilian

[JKM]

Thursday, October 28, 1847   MG47v48n35p2c5   Let Justice be Done words: 141

The desertion of a number of men from the American Army, and their capture and execution near the city of Mexico, have given rise to many remarks calculated to reflect on the patriotism of certain adopted civilians of this country. It has been thought, and we confess that this was the impression left on our mind, that the Battalion alluded to were mostly from the Emerald Isle. The N.Y. Police register contains the names and places of nativity of that infamous set of scamps, from which we are sorry to learn that a large portion were Americans. They are classed as follows- Americans 64; Irishmen 34; Germans 16; Nova Scotia, France and Poland. We publish this account that unjust reproach may be taken from the shoulders of those who do not merit the censure. Let all bear their part. – Rich. Whig.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 28, 1847   MG47v48n35p2c7   The Administration and the "Democracy" Words: 171
We find in so leading a paper as the New York Evening Post an article from a central paper of the same politics (the Albany Atlas) denouncing, with calmness but with a fixed determination, the attempts of the Administration in this city to dragoon the party into its projects for overrunning and subjugating all Mexico, if its demands for the surrender of Mexican territory be not complied with. As a sample of this article, we copy a few lines from the concluding paragraph, as follows.

Mark its grave import!

"We say to Mr. Ritchie, and those who concur with him, Go your Ways! You were warned in time against the agitation and the distracting issues that your course in relation to the annexation of Texas would produce. You were implored to take Texas without war; you chose to take it with war; and if now, at this day, you expect the Democracy of the North to bear the responsibility of your measure, they must at least by permitted to protest," &c.

[JKM]

Thursday, October 28, 1847 MG47v48n35p3c1   Mr. Polk’s friend Santa Anna  words: 343

The American Public have cause to admire the foresight and sagacity which induced Mr. Polk to permit Santa Anna to return to Mexico. To be sure, it would have occurred to ordinary minds, that a man who would bargain for a return to his own country, in order that he might be able to betray it was not much to be trusted. But Mr. Polk’s is not an “ordinary mind,” and the result of his negotiation with Santa Anna, proves beyond a peradventure that it was the most extraordinary piece of diplomatic tact, that the world has ever been called on to admire. Look at Santa Anna’s last proclamation. Defeated in a series of bloody engagements, and driven from the capital, observe what mild and peaceful sentiments he breathes- admire how exactly all Mr. Polk’s anticipations have been realized, and see the policy of permitting Santa Anna’s return amply vindicated.

Take the following sentence as evidence of Santa Anna’s friendship for this country and desire for peace:

"Mexicans! You will find me, as ever, leading in your defense, striving to free you from a heavy yoke, and to preserve your altars, from infamous violation, and your daughters and your wives from the extremity of insult. The enemy raises the sword to would your noble fronts; do you draw it likewise to chastise the rancorous pride of the invader."

How Mr. Polk’s eyes must be riveted on these, peaceful sentiments thus gently expressed, and how he must chuckle in his inmost soul when he reflects that Santa owes his power, to hold this language, to his prudence, to his sagacity and his foresight.

Our readers will observe in reading the extract published in our last paper, from the Diario del Gobierno, that there is considerable change in the tone of the Mexicans. But does that change bode us any better prospect for peace than we had eighteen months since? We think not. Dropping their arrogance and gasconade, they talk like me who have sternly and solemnly resolved to perish rather than yield .- Pet. Int.

[JKM]
The Mexican-American War and the Media, 1845-1848

Martinsburg Gazette
January-June 1848

Missing: January 13, 20, 27 (from microfilm); March (from microfilm), April, May,

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>January-June 1845</th>
<th>July-December 1845</th>
<th>January-June 1846</th>
<th>July-December 1846</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>January-June 1847</td>
<td>July-December 1847</td>
<td>January-June 1848</td>
<td>July-December 1848</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Index

MGv45i48p2c3 6 January 1848 "The Mexican War"

MGv45i48p2c4 6 January 1848 "Late from Mexico" recent news

MGv45i48p2c4 6 January 1848 "From the Rio Grande"

February 1848

MGv48n49p1c6-7p2c1-4 February 3, 1848 Mr. Thompson Speech in the House of Representatives, 27 January 1848
Online in the Congressional Globe: http://memory.loc.gov/cgi-bin/ampage?collId=llcg&fileName=020/llcg020.db&recNum=272

MG48v48n49p2c4 February 3, 1848 THE WHIGS AND THE WAR

MG48v48n50p2c6 February 10, 1848 Army Intelligence

MG48v48n50p2c6 February 10, 1848 From the Rio Grande

MG48v48i51p1c6-7 February 17, 1848 MR. STEPHENS' SPEECH
Mr. Stephens discusses the boundary of Texas to the House.
Online in the Congressional Globe: http://memory.loc.gov/cgi-bin/ampage?collId=llcg&fileName=020/llcg020.db&recNum=168

MG48v48n51p1c7 February 17, 1848 New Mexico

MG48v48n51p2c4-5 February 17, 1848 Congressional Summary

MG48v48n51p2c5 February 17, 1848 The True Boundary of Texas

MG48v48n51p2c6 February 17, 1848 Letter from General Taylor

MG48v48n51p2c7 February 17, 1848 Mr. Goggin’s Speech

MG1848v51p3c1 February 17, 1848 Judge McLean and the War.

MG48v48i50p1c6-7p2c1-4 February 17, 1848 MR. THOMPSON'S SPEECH
Representative Thompson speaks to the House about the war. Online in the Congressional Globe: http://memory.loc.gov/cgi-bin/ampage?collId=llcg&fileName=020/llcg020.db&recNum=272

March 1848 [missing from the microfilm]

April 1848

May 1848

MG48v49i13p1c2, May 25, 1848: Novel Shipment
June 1848

MGv49i18p1c4, June 29, 1848: Extract from the Speech of Hon. Richard W. Thompson
Comments on both General Taylor, Polk, the annexation of Texas; comments on the war and how that has effected and should effect politics

MGv49i18p2c3, June 29, 1848: Taylor Clubs
Report on clubs forming in favor of election of Taylor and Fillmore

MGv49i18p2c3, June 29, 1848
Report on a Taylor flag being raised at a Convention in Maine

MGv49i18p2c4, June 29, 1848: Address of the Whig Central Committee To the People of Virginia
Comments on Taylor's performance in the war, his character and attitude

MGv49i18p2c5, June 29, 1848: Major J.P. Gaines
Comments made about Taylor by Gaines who is now a member of Congress

MGv49i18p2c5, June 29, 1848: Epistolary Brevity
Comments on how brief notes between the military leaders are; gives examples and Taylor's is one of them

MGv49i18p2c4, June 29, 1848: Gen. Taylor—His Nomination
Comments made by Taylor on his nomination for President

MGv49i18p3c2, June 29, 1848: To Volunteers and their Friends
Information about those who have died in the war and how will be given out to those who have an interest

January

February

MG48v48n49p2c4, 3 February 1848 THE WHIGS AND THE WAR

"Keep it before the People," says the Augusta Democrat, "That the Whigs in the last Congress voted, that war exists by the act of Mexico."

Yes, and keep it before the People, that the declaration that "War exists by the act of Mexico," was by a most disingenuous trick of the Locofoco majority, appended to the Bill for raising the means of supporting our army in the enemies country—that the Whigs in a body voted against the amendment—and that most of them voted for the bill after the obnoxious amendment had been carried rather than refuse supplies to our brave soldiers in the field, and under protest, declaring at the time that they were forced by the act of opposite party to vote a lie! Our humble opinion was, and is, that they voted wrong, but it requires a very small degree of charity to make due allowances for men placed in such a position.
[SDW]
MG48v48n50p2c6 10 February 1848 Army Intelligence

The steamer Edith arrived at New Orleans on the 28th, from Vera Cruz, which port she left on the 20th ult. bringing six days later intelligence.

The most important of the intelligence by the Edith, in a rumor which was generally credited at the city of Mexico, that the commissioners of Mexico had agreed with Mr. Trist on a proposition to the American Government for peace, based upon the terms originally offered by Mr. Trist at Tacubaya, on the 26th of August, which propositions were at that time rejected by the Mexican Government, and the reduction and capture of the city followed.

There had been an attempt at insurrection among the Mexican inhabitants at Vera Cruz, which had been discovered, however, by the authorities, and promptly checked.

Col. Withers’ command, which was reported by the last arrival to have been cut to pieces, had arrived safely at Real del Monte, without molestation.

Col. Wynkoop, with a detachment, whilst in pursuit of Father Jarauta and Col. Rea, came upon and captured Gen. Valencia, with his Aid, and Gen. Arista, on the 1st ult. Genls. Valencia and Arista had been paroled.

Cols. Torrejon and Minon, and guard, were captured at Amastica, by Col. Domiguez’s spy company.

General Cadwallader’s command left the city of Mexico for the city of Toluca, the troops were in fine spirits, and had reached Serma uninterrupted.

Major Taliferro, from Real del Monte, has arrived at Mexico in charge of $150,000 worth of silver bars, being part of the assessment levied by General Scott on the State and Federal District of Mexico.

General Butler’s regiment ws suffering much from sickness.

The “World” of Guadalaxara, of the 17th ultimo, says that news had reached there from Mazathan, announcing that 500 California rangers had attacked the American possessions at Lapane and San Jose, and defeated the Americans, burning both places. Three American vessels had left Mazatlan to render assistance.

There had been designs of insurrection, among the Mexicans, both at the City of Mexico and Puebla, but they were detected and suppressed.

[SDW]

MG48v48n50p2c6 10 February 1848 From the Rio Grande

The Picayune of the 30th ult., learns of Lieut. Hamilton, who left Gen. Wool’s quarters on the 13th, that just before he left an express was received from Saltillo from Col. Hamtramck, in command of the forces there, stating that a report had reached him from a source entitled to credit, that a force of Mexicans, 10,000 strong, under command of Gen. Bustamente, were marching down upon Saltillo. The report even particularize the points from whence the troops had been raised, but so frequent are the stampedes upon that line, very little credit was attached to the report. Our forces there were in good condition, and perfectly willing to be attacked whenever the enemy thought best to make the experiment.

Upon the receipt of this news General Wool had apprised the merchants at Monterey, Camargo, Matamoras, and other posts, that he could afford them no protection in the way of escorts. From another source we learn that Col. Carasco, a Mexican officer who has rendered himself rather conspicuous, is at Monterey, proposing to enter into negotiations with Gen. Wool for a pronunciamento against the existing Government of Mexico and in favor of the United States, on the part of the States of Tamaulipas, Nueva Leon, and Coahuila. He also proposes to bring in Gen. Canales, that cowardly chief of guerillas, who has given us so much trouble upon the Rio Grande. Col. Carasco has been for a long time residing in Matamoras with his family, and appears friendly to the Americans. We know not what degree of credit to attach to this report.

[SDW]
A body of men have met at Santa Fe who style themselves the Legislature of New Mexico. They propose to annex the province of New Mexico to the United States. It is not known under what authority they propose to act. A territorial government has been organized by Congress for the government of the province, although the President has recommended it. What is most singular about the matter is, that Texas claims New Mexico as belonging to her, and at this very time, proposes to cede it to the United States for a portion of the Mexican territory south of the Rio Grande! [SDW]

U.S. SENATE

WASHINGTON, February 9, 1848.

Mr. Vice President Dallas, who had been absent from the Senate for several days, returned today, and took his seat as presiding officer.

A number of petitions were presented, among them one by Mr. Benton, from M. Vattemare, for a notional interchange of books.

Mr. Dix presented the resolutions, which passed the Legislature of New York, in favor of the Wilmot Proviso. Ordered to be printed.

The bill from the House, fixing the boundary between Missouri and Arkansas, was passed.

The Ten Regiment bill was then take up, and Mr. Niles took the floor, and commenced a speech on the war.

He is opposed to the bill, and depicted, in strong terms, the evils arising from the war. He has declared himself opposed to the policy of the Administration, as calculated to entangle us with Mexico, beyond our power of being able to extricate ourselves.

Mr. N., in conclusion, declared himself in favor of withdrawing our forces from the heart of the Mexican territory, retaining possession of New Mexico and California. For this object, and for this object alone, would he vote for an increase of the army, and then only to such an extent as would be necessary to accomplish that end.

Mr. Underwood, of Kentucky, announced his intention of speaking next upon the question, when the Senate, on motion, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Several reports were made from Standing Committees.

Mr. Botts, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for filling up vacancies in the present regiments; proposing to give additional bounties and providing for the transportation home of the sick soldiers in Mexico. Read twice and referred to the committee of the Whole.

Many other unimportant bills were reported and appropriately referred.

The House then went into Committee, (Mr. Botts in the chair) and took up the loan bill.

Mr. Fisher, of Ohio, addressed the committee upon the question, stating his opposition to the war and manner of its prosecution by the Administration.

Mr. Thomas, of Tennessee, obtained the floor, and read from copious notes previously prepared, a set speech in defense of the Executive and his measures.
Mr. Marsh of Vt., having obtained the floor, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

---------

IN SENATE.
February 10, 1848.

Mr. Hannegan offered a joint resolution, returning the thanks of Congress to Col. Doniphan for his services in the Army in New Mexico, &c.

Mr. Cass offered a joint resolution, authorizing medals and certificates to be presented to the officers and soldiers who have distinguished themselves in the army in Mexico.

The bill to increase the medical staff of the army passed.

The bill for the relief of Jones & Boker was passed.

The Senate then took up the Ten Regiment bill.

Mr. Underwood, of Kentucky, took the floor and commenced a speech on the bill.

He stated his doubts as to the propriety or necessity of the line of policy indicated by the course of the administration, and declared himself opposed to any further acquisition of territory, than would suffice for indemnity due our citizens on account of the war.

Mr. Turney next obtained the floor, when the Senate adjourned.

---------

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A message was received from the Senate communicating several bills, which had passed that body, which were appropriately referred.

Mr. King, of Mass. Presented a petition signed by nine thousand members of the Society of Friends, in favor of peace. He moved to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that it be printed.

Mr. Cobb moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. King called for the yeas and nays.

Upon the motion to refer and print, a debate took place, in which Messrs. King, Cobb, Henley, and Palfrey took part.

Mr. Haskell called for the previous question.

His call was sustained.

The yeas and nays were then taken upon Mr. Cobb's motion, which was rejected by a vote of 81 to 95.

Mr. King's motion was then taken up and passed by 98 yeas to 83 nays.

The House, on motion, then went into Committee (Mr. Botts in the chair,) and Mr. Marsh addressed it upon the Loan bill.

He opposed the war and denounced the part the administration had acted in its commencement, and during its continuance. He spoke with fervor and ability, displaying much acumen in taking grounds which had not been before gone over.

Mr. Brown, of Mississippi, followed upon the opposite side of the question supporting the Executive and the policy advocated in his message.

After he had finished the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

------
A message was received from the President in answer to resolutions calling for information relative to duties imposed on goods exported to Mexico, which, on motion of Mr. Miller, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Clayton presented a petition from Midshipman Rogers, praying compensations for the services and sufferings he underwent whilst confined as a prisoner in Mexico.

Mr. Clayton spoke in favor of the petition, and it was then appropriately referred.

The joint resolution returning thanks to General Scott, was read a third time.

Mr. Hale, of N.H., spoke in opposition to it for “consistency’s sake.”

After Mr. H. had closed, the Ten Regiment Bill was taken up.

Mr. Turney spoke in favor of the bill and in defense of the Administration.

Mr. Breese, of Illinois, having next secured the floor on the question, the Senate, on motion, adjourned until Monday.

-----

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A message was received from the President in answer to the resolution asking whether he had any information relating to a treaty having been concluded or agreed upon, between Mr. Trist and the Mexican Congress. He says there has none been made, of which he has information.

The House then, on motion of Mr. Rockwell, went into committee of the whole (Mr. Pollock in the chair,) and took up the loan bill.

Mr. Duer then commenced a speech on the bill.

The House, after rising from Committee of the whole, without transacting further business, adjourned over to Monday.

-----

February 12, 1848.

Neither House of Congress was in session today.

-----

IN SENATE.

February 14, 1848.

A number of memorials were presented and appropriately referred.

M. Berrien presented the credentials of Mr. H.B. Johnson, who was appointed a Senator in the place of Mr. Colquitt, resigned, and Mr. J. was sworn in and took his seat.

Mr. Yulee moved to take up the resolution offered by Mr. Dickenson some time ago, relative to the annexation of conquered territory.

Mr. Y. had offered an amendment to these resolutions, which he now advocated in a speech.

Mr. Upham, of Vermont, having secured the floor upon the question, the Senate went into Executive session, after which it adjourned.

-----

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The States were called, in order, for resolutions, and a number were offered.

Mr. James Thompson offered a resolution for expunging the amendment of Mr. Ashmun, heretofore adopted, declaring the war with Mexico to have been “unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by Mr. Polk.”
Much confusion took place upon the offering of this expunging resolution, and the Speaker had difficulty in procuring order.

Mr. Ashmun moved to lay the resolution of Mr. Thomson, on the table. Lost-ayes 95, nays 105.

The regular business of the day being concluded, the House went into Committee on the Loan bill.

Mr. Duer, of New York, then rose and spoke in opposition to the administration.-His manner is easy and fluent, which give addition weight to what he says, and causes him to be listened to with attention.

Mr. Sims, of South Carolina, replied, and entered into the subject with an ability which showed that he had devoted his whole energies to a thorough preparation for this effort.

He stated it to be his conviction that his political opponents labored under a mistake, and therein exposed himself to the retort that the mistake, if any, lay on the other side.

Mr. Cocke, of Tennessee, having obtained the floor, the House adjourned.

--------

IN SENATE
February 15, 1848.

There were several petitions and memorials presented, and appropriately referred.

Mr. Badger moved to reconsider the vote passing the bill to increase the Medical Staff of the Army, which was carried.

Mr. Badger then moved to postpone the bill indefinitely—which motion prevailed—and the bill was thus defeated.

Mr. Felch reported a bill relative to the Judicial districts of the Courts of Michigan, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Yulee moved to take up Mr. Dickinson’s resolution. Agreed to.

Mr. Dickenson then addressed the Senate briefly upon the subject, when

Mr. Yulee resumed his remarks commenced yesterday. He contended that in any territory acquired, the people had a right to take their slaves there, and that Congress could not rightfully or constitutionally prevent it.

When he concluded, the Ten Regiment bill was taken up.

Mr. Upham addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill and the conduct of the administration in regard to the War.

Mr. Rusk, of Texas, having secured the floor the Senate on motion adjourned.

--------

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Kaufman, of Texas, offered a resolution to close the debate on the Loan bill tomorrow, at two o’clock.

Mr. Root moved to lay the resolution on the table, which motion was rejected.

The resolution was then passed by a vote of 109 to 90.

The House having resolved itself into committee on the Loan Bill, Mr. Crozier, of Tennessee, made an eloquent speech against the course of the administration on the War.

After he had concluded, the House adjourned.

[SDW] be amiss here to state, is substantially corroborated by direct information which we have ourselves received upon the subject:

"I held a Texan commission under Capt. R. Ross, in a troop of Horse Rangers, for the protection of the frontier counties. Out beats were defined by the Adjutant General, with instructions not to cross the Nueces. On my return from the frontier, I applied to Judge Lipscombe, of Galveston, for my certificate of head-right, at the same time inquiring if it were possible for me to locate my land west of the Nueces, as nearly all on the east band had been located by others.
His answer to me was, that the territory of Texas did not extend beyond the Nueces. This was in the Fall of 1839."

[SDW]

MG48v48n51p2c6 17 February 1848 Letter from General Taylor, Agua Nueva, 3 March 1847

The following is the letter of General Taylor to the Secretary of War, communicated to the House of Representatives, in compliance with a resolution of that body. It will be recollected that Mr. Marcy, Secretary of War, had written to Gen.
Taylor in strong deprecatory language, soon after the appearance of the letter from Gen. T. to Gen. Gaines, the reply to which has never before been published, and would not now, we suppose, had not Congress made the demand. It is a bold and manly letter, and bears "Buena Vista characteristics" on its face:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Agua Nueva, March 3, 1847.

Sir:-I have had the honor to receive your communication of January 28th, enclosing a newspaper slip, and expressing the regret of the Department that the letter copied in that slip, and which was addressed by myself to the Major Gen.
Gaines, should have been published.

Although your letter does not convert the direct censure of the Department or of the President, yet, when it is taken in connection with the revival of a paragraph in the regulations of 1825, touching the publication of private letters concerning operations in the field, I am not permitted to doubt that I have become the subject of Executive disappropriation. To any expression of it, coming with the authority of the President, I am bound by my duty and by my respect for his high office, patiently to submit; but, lest my silence should be construed into a tacit admission of the grounds and conclusions set forth in your communication, I deem it a duty which I owe to myself to submit a few remarks in reply. I shall be pardoned for speaking plainly.

In the first place, the published letter bears upon its face the most conclusive evidence that it was intended only for private perusal, and not at all for publication. It was published without my knowledge, and contrary to my wishes.
Surely, I need not say that I am not in the habit of writing for the newspapers? The letter was a familiar one, written to an old military friend, with whom I have for many years interchange opinions on professional subjects. That he should think proper, under any circumstances, to publish it, could not have been foreseen by me.

In the absence of proof that the publication was made with my authority or knowledge, I may be permitted to say, that the quotation in your letter of the six hundred and fiftieth paragraph of the superceded regulations of 1825, in which the terms "mischievous" and "disgraceful" are employed to characterize certain letters or reports, conveys, though not openly, a measure of rebuke, which, to say the least, is rather harsh, and which many may think not warranted by the premises. – Again: I have carefully examined the letter in question, and I do not admit that it is obnoxious to the objections urged in your communication. I see nothing in it which, under the same circumstances I would not write again. To suppose that it will give the enemy valuable information, is to know very little of the Mexican sources of information, or of their extraordinary sagacity and facilities in keeping constantly apprized of our movements.

As to my particular views in regard to the general policy to be pursued towards Mexico, I perceive by the public journals that they are shared by many distinguished statesmen, and also in part by a conspicuous officer of the navy, the publication of whose opinions is not perhaps obstructed by any regulations of his Department. – It is difficult, then, to imagine that the diffusion of mine can render any peculiar aid to the enemy, or specially disincline him "to enter into negotiations for peace."

In conclusion, I would say, that it has given me great pain to be brought into the position in which I now find myself with regard . . .

March

April

May
The Cincinnati Enquirer tells of a shipment of forty nests of coffins—five in a nest—just made, from that city, on the steamer Belle of the West, bound for New Orleans. The owner was with them, and thinks the demand will be so good that he will make a fine "spec".

The Oregon Spectator announces the official returns of the election for Governor as follows:--George Abernethy, 536: A. L. Lovejoy, 520, scattering 18. Abernethy's plurality 16. Rather a close run, that.

Change of Time of Training. An act changing the time of training of the officers and of the regimental and battalion musters. Prescribes that the training of the officers and the said musters of the regiments west of the Alleghany mountains, shall be in the months of September or October. Makes it the duty of the commander of companies in said regiments within twenty days after their April musters, to deliver to the adjutants of their regiments, returns of the strength and condition of their companies, and the adjutants are required to transmit in the month of May the returns now required of them, to the brigadier general. Authorizes the regimental courts of enquiry of any regiment in the State to change the time of the training of the officers and of the regimental or battalion musters of their regiments in conformity with the provisions of the law relative to the counties west of the Alleghany.

It gives us some satisfaction to state, as a fixed fact, that Santa Anna has embarked for Jamaica.—Washington Union. Nearly two years ago it gave you great satisfaction to state "a fixed fact" that Santa Anna had gone into Mexico, and now it gives you "some satisfaction to state, as "a fixed fact" that he has gone out of it. Mr. Polk "fixed" the former fact, and Gen. Scott "fixed the latter.—Louisville Jour.

Our readers will recollect (says the Lynchburg Patriot) that the leaders of the Democratic party deny most positively, that the object of the present war was or is the acquisition of territory. The truth of these repeated denials may be ascertained by reference to the last number of the Democratic Review, in which the policy of the absorption of the whole of Mexico, is unblushingly advocated in the contingency by no means improbable, of the non-ratification of the Trist Treaty. Connect this development with the late message of the President, recommending the military occupation of Yucatan, and they afford a startling commentary upon the designs of the present wild and reckless administration. The object of Mr. Polk in springing these exciting issues upon the country, at the incipiency of the Presidential canvass is not very difficult to divine. He seeks by this means, to divert scrutiny from the minor corruptions and meaner profligacies which have marked his Executive career.—He is destined, however, to a sore disappointment.—The people will, by their votes next fall, rebuke his wicked and perilous ambition, and at the same time affix a lasting seal of condemnation upon the ruthless prescription and unmanly passions which constitute the only distinguishing or marked attributes of the POLK regime.

Massacre of the Male Inhabitants of Valladolid by the Indians—Great Panic!—Vessel despatched to Jamaica for assistance. The N.Y. Journal of Commerce has received the "Central American Times" of April 27, published at Belize, and also the following letter from a correspondent: BELIZE, HONDURAS, April 28, 1848. "From all that can be learned here it is supposed that nearly the whole of Yucatan is now in possession of the Indians. The taking of Bacalar by them has filled Belize with refugees, and indeed fears are entertained that they will attack this place in fulfilment of their threats. In the attack upon Bacalar only five of the inhabitants were killed but at Valladolid every male inhabitant was massacred.
"The public meeting of this place assembled yesterday, by call of the honorable Superintendent, and voted $15,000 for the defence of the place. The militia will be called out, the old fort at the harbor is repaired, and a cordon of posts established for the security of the town. If the Indians should venture an attack they may certainly expect a warm reception. They are represented as being in force to the number of eight to twelve thousand.

"The Government despatched a schooner to Jamaica, this morning, with despatches—supposed to be for troops. From personal information received at Yzabel, the transmission of mails through to Central America was exceedingly difficult in consequence of the unsettled state of the country."

The Times is mainly filled with accounts of late events in Europe, but supplies also the following from Yucatan—not so late as we have via New Orleans, but giving fuller accounts of matters previously reported: No little alarm has been excited at Belize by the continued arrivals of large numbers of refugees from Bacalar, to which place the Maya Indians have extended their incursions, and reduced it with the exception of a fort and a few houses. The affrighted inhabitants, reduced to the greatest straits, and deserting the miserable remains of what was a few months back a thriving town, and flocking, some to Havana (to which vessels sent by the Governor General of Cuba,) and many to this place.

No fewer than eight hundred, principally females, are reported to have landed within the last two days, and fresh arrivals are hourly expected. The Indians have, it is reported, been guilty of horrible atrocities, but we do not yield implicit credit to all these reports, though there is no doubt their minds are dreadfully excited, and it is quite certain they have determined to retain possession of the country, which they claim as their own. The following is reported by an eye-witness:—"At day light on the morning of the 18th of April, the town of Bacalar was closely invested and set on fire in different directions by the Indians, who occupied an extent of about five thousand yards, and kept up an incessant fire, which was returned by the inhabitants.

This exchange of fire continued for the space of three days. On the afternoon of the third day, on a signal given by two bugles and a drum, the Indians in a body left the bush in which they had been concealed, and assaulted the intrenchments, which they carried, the Spaniards having only time to give one volley, and they being overpowered by numbers were disarmed. Those who were unable to escape took refuge in the fort, and the Indians, intoxicated with their success, inundated this beautiful town. Their number, by the confession of a deserter, amounted to twelve thousand men."

Since writing the above, the fort has been surrendered to the Indians, who have dismissed the men in it after shaving their heads. Fresh refugees are still arriving, and we understand that His Excellency H. M. Superintendent, in consideration of the alarm manifested by the inhabitants, has chartered a vessel to send to Jamaica for reinforcements.

[MBP]

MG48v49i13p2c5, May 25, 1848: MAJOR GENERAL SCOTT.

FROM THE LETTERS OF "MUSTANG." MEXICA, April 21. * * * * * He is gone, and he left the army as no man ever left it before; not with the formal parade and military display, with the thunder-toned artillery announcing his departure, and the long array of bright muskets saluting him as he passed; but with the unrestrained sympathy and warm regards of brave and honest men, wishing him long life and happiness, praying most fervently that the remainder of his life may be as calm and cloudless as the past has been bright, chequered, and glorious. Let us look back to the time he first entered this country, and follow him through the trying and exciting scenes. The strong Castle of Jan Juan de Ulua, supported by the well fortified city of Vera Cruz, fell at his command, after a desperate resistance; the heights of Cerro Gordo yielded to his science, supported by the bravery and confidence of his troops; then follow him to this valley, and view him descending the mountain from Rio Frio, at the head of his invincible legions, with all eyes and ears turned towards him with the most implicit confidence and firm reliance, each and all believing that as long as Winfield Scott lived there was "no such word as fail;" and then look back and recall to your recollection the sanguine reliance with which his gallant army followed him through the perilous times and bloody battles, until he entered the Grand Plaza of the ancient Aztecs, amidst the victorious shouts of the most noble army the world has ever known. But all this time, while he has been overthrowing the enemies of his country in front, exalting our national character, redressing our national injuries and adorning our national history, his "enemies in the rear" have been working to tarnish his fair fame and destroy his just claims to the gratitude and admiration of his countrymen. In the very face of the enemy he had routed and defeated, and in the capital he has conquered, he has been placed in the humiliating attitude of one scrambling for justice with his inferiors—inferiors in rank, in talent, and in the high traits of character and education which make the great and successful warrior, the statesman, and the logician.—And now, this day he leaves the capital of the enemies of his country, not with his victorious divisions following him to his native land, exulting in his unparalleled triumphs, but escorted by a single company of dragoons, disarmed, but not dishonored!

[MBP]

MG48v49i13p2c5, May 25, 1848: SWORD FOR GEN. SCOTT.

The sword ordered to be prepared for presentation to Gen. Scott, by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, has been completed by Messrs Hyde & Goodrich, of New Orleans. It is surmounted by a spread eagle in gold, grasping an open scroll on which is inscribed the words "Mexica Capta." The grip is octagon shaped, the alternate sides of which are gold and pearl, elegantly engraved and gold studded. The guard is formed by a heavy gold chain. The shield and cross-piece, made of gold, are in a style altogether new and unique. In the centre appears the eagle of Mexico, biting a serpent, surmounted by a brilliant cairngorm stone. The scabbard is made of gilt or silver metal, ornamented with solid gold mountings and richly chased designs. In the centre is engraved those words: "Presented by the people of the State of Louisiana to Winfield Scott for his gallantry and generalship, exhibited at the seige of Vera Cruz, in the battles of Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, Molino del Ray, Chapultepec, and to his final entry into the city of Mexico."

[BWP]
Index

MGv49i21p1c6, July 20, 1848: The First Conquest of Mexico
Gives a brief history lesson in the first conquest of Mexico by Cortes

MGv49i21p2c2, July 20, 1848: Gen. Scott
A Court of Enquiry has been ordered to convene in Washington to look into charges brought by Pillow and Worth against Scott.

MGv49i21p2c3, July 20, 1848: The Virginia Regiment
Lieut. Porterfield, Col. Hamtramck both arrived home

MGv49i21p2c5, July 20, 1848: Mexico
Report on the revolution developing; Mexican troops sent by the Mexican government to put down revolution are deserting; nation again in anarchy

MGv49i21p2c5, July 20, 1848: Latest from Mexico
More information on the revolution which began on the 25th; arrest of leaders; comments on actions taken by Paredes

MGv49i21p2c5, July 20, 1848: Celebration of the 4th of July with four companies of the Tampico Regiment of Louisiana Volunteers turning out; information on the event

MGv49i22p1c3, July 27, 1848
Information on total number of troops at Vera Cruz as reported by the Quartermaster

MGv49i22p2c1, July 27, 1848: The Democratic Platform
Comments made on the war debt gathered by Polk

MGv49i22p2c3, July 27, 1848: Congress
Comments made in Congress about the war and Taylor

MGv49i22p2c4, July 27, 1848: Berkeley Volunteers Public Meeting
Report on a public meeting which congratulated the Berkeley Volunteers

MGv49i22p2c4, July 27, 1848: Reduction of the Army
Report on a bill passed by Congress to reduce the army

MGv49i22p3c4, July 27, 1848: To Volunteers and their Friends
Report that a list of soldiers killed in Mexico is had; gives how they died; information will be given to those interested

MGv49i23p1c6, August 3, 1848: The Bloodhound Story
Report of Taylor wanting bloodhounds to help track down Indians in Florida

MGv49i23p2c2, August 3, 1848: Major General Pillow
Comments about an incident that occurred on a train between Pillow, who refused to put out his cigar and the conductor

MGv49i23p2c3, August 3, 1848: General Taylor's Acceptance
Taylor accepts his nomination for President
MGv49i23p2c4, August 3, 1848: Extracts From Potomac's Letters
Comments on a Mexican claim bill, Naval Appropriation bill and the Oregon bill MGv49i24p1c5, August 10, 1848: New Schemes of Conquest and Annexation of Territory!

Comments on how the government is making plans to take more land

MGv49i24p2c1, August 10, 1848: More Annexation
More comments on how the government is planning to take land; taking the land of the Sierra Madre which is in a state of revolution

MGv49i24p2c2, August 10, 1848: Berkeley Volunteers
Volunteers arrived home on Thursday evening

MGv49i24p2c2, August 10, 1848
Body of Captain Henry Fairfax who died in Mexico was received at Alexandria on Monday

MGv49i24p2c1, August 10, 1848
Scott returned to his home

MGv49i24p2c3, August 10, 1848: Lewis Cass and the Volunteers
Bill introduced in the Senate calls for the volunteers to have the same uniforms as regulars

MGv49i24p2c4, August 10, 1848: Washington and Taylor
Comments on similarities and differences between Washington and Taylor

MGv49i24p2c4, August 10, 1848
Comments on the future if Taylor is made President

MGv49i26p1c2, August 24, 1848: The Soldier Boy
Story about a boy whose father is in Mexico; boy's father ends up dead

MGv49i26p1c3, August 24, 1848
Gen. Kearney's nomination as Brevet Major General has been confirmed

MGv49i26p2c1, August 24, 1848: The Volunteers and Gen. Taylor
Comments on General Taylor and his actions during the war-seems to be defending Taylor from comments made by others

MGv49i26p1c5, August 24, 1848: Snug the Joiner
Comments made about Mexicans by Mr. Webster

MGv49i26p1c4, August 24, 1848: The Dinner to the Volunteers
Comments made about the dead from the Berkeley Volunteers; comments made on the actions of the volunteers in the war

MGv49i26p1c5, August 24, 1848
Report that Gen. Cushing, Major Henry and others are planning on writing about their experiences in the Mexican war

MGv49i27p1c5, August 31, 1848: Who wrote Gen. Taylor's Despatches
Comments that Taylor did not write his own despatches or letters

MGv49i27p1c5, August 31, 1848: The Governor of Oregon
Gen. Shields has been appointed Governor of Oregon and confirmed to that position

MGv49i28p1c4, September 7, 1848
Report on the number of men supplied by the northern and southern states for the Mexican War

MGv49i28p1c4, September 7, 1848
Maj. J. D. Graham of the Topographical Corps has asked for a court material; accused of "malice and envy"

MGv49i28p2c1, September 7, 1848: A Discovery
One of the volunteers of the North Carolina Regiment said Gen. Taylor was incompetent to be President

MGv49i28p1c5, September 7, 1848: Fort Harrison Celebration
Copy of a letter sent by Taylor in reply to being invited to Fort Harrison

MGv49i28p1c6, September 7, 1848: Taylor in Massachusetts
Comments about a meeting to support Taylor and Fillmore
Report that the US published erroneous accounts saying that the Hudson Bay Company bought territory in Oregon

Report on comments made by a lady about Gen. Taylor at a dance

Report that a resolution was adopted recommending the nomination of Taylor and Fillmore

Report of the final evacuation of the city of Chihuahua by American troops

Comments made by a friend of Taylor about Taylor

Report that Gov. Woods of Texas has laid claim to the best lands of New Mexico; how New Mexicans reacted Report of the acts of Mr. Leake as a soldier in Mexico and that he was not commissioned by Polk

WM. Thompson is prepared to procure the settlement of the claims of soldiers who enlisted during the Mexican war

Gen. Lane, Governor of the new territory of Oregon arrived in the city today

Full speech made by Col. Colston—mentions Texas and Oregon; comments on the Baltimore Convention of '44 and how that affected the Texas and Oregon debates

Comments made about the Secretary of War and speculation of land; comments about Congress fighting and coming to an agreement to censor Taylor

Comments made about Captain Bragg and his performance during the Mexican war

According to estimates for the Mexican Treaty America will have to pay two hundred and fifty million dollars

Comments on how southern citizens are reacting to the two running mates

Report on Taylor's feelings about politics and his nomination for President

Comments about Taylor's actions on the night before the battle; comments on the position of the army and what they might or might not

Nothing can prevent the election of Taylor

Finds fault with Taylor

Taylor can't win in Indiana is a lie

Report on Cass's military actions; comments about Mexican War

Report of gold found in California

Hammond supports Taylor
MGv49i30p3c6, September 21, 1848: To Volunteers and their Friends
List of soldiers who have died of disease or by wounds have been received and information will be given to those interested

MGv49i31p1c3, September 28, 1848: Affecting Story
History of Gen. Taylor's life; letter written by Mrs. Gott about Taylor-requested Taylor to discharge her son and Taylor did so

MGv49i31p1c6, September 28, 1848: Maiden Vote for Zachary Taylor

MGv49i31p1c5, September 28, 1848: Address of Gov. Poindexter to the people of Mississippi
Advocates the election of Taylor

MGv49i31p1c5, September 28, 1848: True Modesty
General Taylor's words about the battle of Buena Vista

MGv49i31p1c5, September 28, 1848: The Prospect of Louisana
Taylor will can a majority in the voting

MGv49i31p1c6, September 28, 1848: The Taylor Platform
Hon. Charles Hudson addressed Whig Convention in Massachusetts illustrating the platform that Taylor should take

MGv49i31p2c2, September 28, 1848: Army Promotions
List of those promoted for their actions in the Mexican war

MGv49i31p2c3, September 28, 1848: Mexico and California
Major Emory in his account of his tour from Missouri to Santa Fe says that with the exception of the Narrow valley of the Rio Grande the land can be cultivated by irrigation; comments on the land, latitude, mines, fertile areas etc.

MGv49i31p2c3, September 28, 1848: The Great Taylor Meeting at Old For Harrison
On the anniversary of the defense of Fort Harrison by Taylor a crowd of Taylor's men gathered; comments about the Governor's speech

MGv49i31p2c2, September 28, 1848: Mr. Clay
Henry Clay for Taylor

MGv49i31p2c2, September 28, 1848: Bright for Taylor!
Comments about how many electoral votes will go to Taylor from New York; Taylor has strong stance in Tennessee and Ohio

MGv49i31p2c3, September 28, 1848: Berkley Whig Club
Mr. Faulnef addressed the crowd with reasons to nominate and vote for Taylor

MGv49i31p2c4, September 28, 1848: Later from Mexico
Little interest in the newspapers from Vera Cruz; no comments about Paredas or revolutions; anniversary of Churubusco was the 20th of August and celebrated with propiate ceremonies; plans for a public funeral for Colonel Balderas; robberies committed in the city; insurrection in the south of Mexico has ended; Gen. Urrea has protested the Government;

MGv49i31p2c4, September 28, 1848: Gold Medal to Gen. Taylor
Gold medal voted by Congress was given to Taylor

MGv49i31p2c5, September 28, 1848: General Santa Anna
General and his family planning to stay longer on the island than expected

MGv49i31p2c6, September 28, 1848: Prospects of an Indian War on the Texas Frontier Report that Camanches and other prairie tribes have intended to begin hostilities at the end of the summer; details on where the report came from

MGv49i31p2c5, September 28, 1848: Effect of Gen. Taylor's Last Letter
Exalts the Old Hero; gives reasons for his silence while in Mexico

MGv49i31p4c4, September 28, 1848: Soldier's Claims
WM. Thompson is prepared to begin making settlements of claims for soldiers who were enlisted during the Mexican War

MGv49i32p1c2, October 5, 1848: An Incident of Buena Vista Narrative about events during the battle of Buena Vista (story, might be fictional)

MGv49i32p1c5, October 5, 1848: "The Whole of Oregon"
Resolution passed by the Richmond Democratic Association that stated that all of Oregon will belong to the US not to England

MGv49i32p1c4, October 5, 1848: Important Correspondence
Correspondence between Louis Phillippe Cass who asks Taylor to surrender from annihilation; Taylor declines

MGv49i32p1c3, October 5, 1848: The Waggon Master's Story
Story about the on-goings in Mexico during the war

MGv49i32p1c5, October 5, 1848: Rufus Choate Opinion
Opinion on Taylor

MGv49i32p1c6, October 5, 1848
Quotes from two men about the Mexican War; opposition opinions; quotes from Martin Van Buren and Charles F. Adams

MGv49i32p1c6, October 5, 1848: How the Volunteers Stand
Volunteers say they were in favor of Cass not Taylor

MGv49i32p2c4, October 5, 1848
Taylor offered money for old "Whitey" but refused to sell him

MGv49i32p2c4, October 5, 1848: Mexico as it is Order and law are present

MGv49i32p2c4, October 5, 1848: From Texas
Comment about the dry weather and effect on crops; a few men from Lieut. Brown, of Capt. Crump's company of Texas Rangers got into a fight with some Lipan Indians; sickness in Houston

MGv49i33p1c2, October12, 1848: Battle of Buena Vista
A copy of a report from the Harpers written by Capt. Carleton who helped Gen. Wool; gives details about the battle

MGv49i33p1c3, October 12, 1848
Mr. James Blair Gilmer who had voted for Polk is going to vote for Taylor because of his stance at Buena Vista and his character

MGv49i33p1c3, October 12, 1848: General Taylor and the Dying Soldier
Report of a dying volunteer who fought under Taylor; says his dying wish is to have Taylor be President

MGv49i33p1c3, October 12, 1848: Mexican Treachery
Report of an act of treachery being committed upon American officers by a Mexican force on the 27th of August at Laguna; the Americans had accepted an invitation to a ball and after the ball men were beaten in the streets by some Mexicans

MGv49i33p1c5, October 12,1848: General Taylor
Anecdote about Taylor; comments about seeing both the face of a Whig and a Democrat in Taylor

MGv49i33p2c1, October 12, 1848: The Discussion
Comments about Taylor's character and principles-discussion about those who criticizes Taylor

MGv49i33p2c4, October 12, 1848: From California
Mr. B. Chouteau arrived in Santa Fe; he reports that American troops are stationed at Fort Paz have been attacked before he left by a group Sonorians

MGv49i33p2c4, October 12, 1848: The Whigs of Virginia
Prediction that Taylor will win the elections

MGv49i33p2c4, October 12, 1848: War Upon Gen. Taylor
Democratic Review trying to ruin Taylor's military reputation

MGv49i33p2c5, October 12, 1848: Facts About General Taylor
Facts about Taylor such as when he was born, and military information

MGv49i33p2c6, October 12, 1848
Gen. Kearney is still dangerously ill

MGv49i33p2c5, October 12, 1848: Democratic Bolting in Mississippi
E.E. Brazile and old democrat says that he prefers Taylor to Cass; comments about Taylor and voting in the election
MGv49i33p2c5, October 12, 1848: Labor Lost
Report that Taylor and Fillmore support the Wilmot Proviso

MGv49i33p4c4, October 12, 1848: Soldier's Claims
Ad saying that WM. Thompson is prepared to go ahead with claims made by volunteers who fought in the war

MGv49i34p1c4, October 19
Comments about Taylor's motto; not a democratic in any state that won't vote for Taylor

MGv49i34p1c3, October 19, 1848
Negative comments made about Taylor in other newspapers

MGv49i34p1c4, October 19, 1848: Tit for Tat
Comments about how much Taylor makes and why not only is it justified but he deserves more

MGv49i34p1c5, October 19, 1848: Printer's Taylor Song
Song written for Taylor

MGv49i34p1c6, October 19, 1848: Something Ominous
Riot on the night of elections in Baltimore; attack on a Taylor book store

MGv49i34p1c6, October 19, 1848: South Carolina Election
Seems Taylor has won South Carolina

MGv49u34p1c6, October 19, 1848
Report that since the war American soldiers seem to have gained a remarkable repute in Mexico; they are looked upon to defend the government

MGv49i34p2c1, October 19, 1848: The Crisis
More comments about Taylor winning the election

MGv49i34p2c3, October 19, 1848: Election Returns
More comments about Taylor winning; who is voting for him and who is not

MGv49i34p2c5, October 19,1848: Gen. Taylor's Pay
More comments made about how much Taylor is paid; his pay is within the regulations of the War Department

MGv49i34p4c4, October 19, 1848: Soldier's Claims
Ad that WM Thompson is ready to begin making claims for the soldiers who fought in the Mexican War

MGv49i35p1c2, October 26, 1848: The Crisis
More comments about Taylor; how would he perform in certain situations?; comments about the Mexican War-the Texas line and annexation and how Polk handled it; comments about Oregon and how Polk handled that situation

MGv49i35p1c5, October 26, 1848: friends of Taylor!
Call to vote

MGv49i35p1c6, October 26, 1848: General Taylor
Comments by Gen. Davis about Taylor; comments about how he stood strong in the war, his character etc.

MGv9i35p2c1, October 26, 1848: Infamous Attempt at Imposition
Report that a pamphlet was printed stating that Taylor received extra pay/allowance

MG9i35p2c2, October 26, 1848
Report that the sketch of the Battle of Buena Vista from the New York Courier and Enquirer are worth a look at MG9i35p2c2, October 26, 1848: A Word in Season!

Comments on how the President of the US should be and if one agrees then one should vote for Taylor

MG9i35p2c2, October 26, 1848: Gross Frauds
Tickets in circulation that list Butler and Taylor; votes for Butler will go to Taylor

MG9i35p2c4, October 26, 1848: The Battle of Buena Vista
Details about the battle

MG9i36p1c3, November 2, 1848: "Old Zach's Coming"
Comments about the Battle of Buena Vista
November 2, 1848: A Word of Caution
Lies will be circulated about Taylor before the election; be ready for them

November 2, 1848: A Good Whig Motto
Comments about words Taylor has said and when he said them (during battle)

November 2, 1848: A Democrat’s Testimony
More comments about Taylor; his character and military exploits

November 2, 1848: General Taylor
More comments about Taylor; his character and military exploits

November 2, 1848: “Old Zack” in Michigan
Report on the number of votes Taylor has won in Michigan

November 9, 1848: Berkeley County
Report on number of votes won by Taylor and Cass

November 9, 1848: Death of Gen. Kearney
Kearny died in on November 1st

November 9, 1848: Pennsylvania
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: New Jersey
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Connecticut
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Massachusetts
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: New York
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Delaware
Report of the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Virginia
Report of the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Maryland
Report of the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Maine
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: New Hampshire
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Vermont
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Ohio
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Michigan
Report that Taylor won Detroit

November 9, 1848: Indiana
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Kentucky
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

November 9, 1848: Illinois
Report on the number of vote Taylor won
MGv49i37p2c3, November 9, 1848: North Carolina
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

MGv49i37p3c4, November 9, 1848: Soldier's Claims
Ad stating that WM. Thompson is ready to make claims on behalf of soldiers who fought in the war

MGv49i38p1c1, November 16, 1848: To the Volunteers and their Friends
Ad stating that a list of dead soldiers and how they died has been gained; information will be given to those who want it

MGv49i38p2c2, November 16, 1848: Morgan County
Report on the number of votes Taylor has received

MGv49i38p2c2, November 16, 1848: The Vote for Virginia
Report on the number of votes Taylor has won

MGv49i38p2c2, November 16, 1848: Presidential Election
Report on the number of votes Taylor won

MGv49i38p2c3, November 16, 1848: General Orders
Report that Taylor has been promoted from Major General to President

MGv49i38p4c2, November 16, 1848: Soldier's Claims
Ad stating that WM Thompson is ready to proceed with claims on behalf of soldiers who fought in the Mexican war

MGv49i41p2c3, December 7, 1848: Mr. Fauikenr's Letter
Comments about how happy he is that Taylor won

MGv49i41GAZETTE EXTRA December 7, 1848: President's Address
President Polk's annual address to Congress (full address)

MGv49i41p4c5, December 7, 1848: Soldier's Claims
WM. Thompson is prepared to proceed with claims on behalf of soldiers who fought in the Mexican war

MGv49i41p5c1, December 7, 1848: Soldier's Claims
WM. Thompson is prepared to proceed with claims on behalf of soldiers who fought in the Mexican war

MGv49i42p1c1, December 14, 1848: To Volunteers and their Friends
A list of soldiers killed in Mexico and how they died has been received; those who want information may request it

MGv49i42p1c3, December 14, 1848: The Yankee
Comments about the Yankee and how he is different from those in the south including Mexicans

MGv49i42p2c2, December 14, 1848: Resignation of Gen. Taylor
Taylor sent his resignation of Major General

MGv49i42p2c1, December 14, 1848: Taylor Republican Associates
Comments about how Taylor was elected as a Whig

MGv49i42p2c1, December 14, 1848: The President's Message
Comments about Polk's address

MGv49i42p2c2, December 14, 1848: Mr. Polk's Valedictory
Comments about comments made by Polk

MGv49i42p2c4, December 14, 1848: California's Gold Region
Report of gold being found in Calif.; many coming now to find gold

MGv49i42p3c4, December 14, 1848: Soldier's Claims
WM. Thompson is prepared to proceed with claims on behalf of soldiers who fought in the Mexican War (advertisement)

MGv49i42p4c2, December 14, 1848: Soldier's Claims
WM. Thompson is prepared to proceed with claims on behalf of soldiers who fought in the Mexican War (advertisement)

MGv49i43p1c2, December 21, 1848: To Volunteers and their Friends
A list of dead soldiers and how they died has been received; information will be handed out upon request Taylor was elected on a Whig ticket.
NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER
Vols. 66-70, July 1844-April 1846

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>July 1844-April 1846</th>
<th>May-July 1846</th>
<th>August-October 1846</th>
<th>November-December 1846</th>
<th>January-February 1847</th>
<th>March-April 1847</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>May-June 1847</td>
<td>July-August 1847</td>
<td>September-October 1847</td>
<td>November-December 1847</td>
<td>January-March &amp; July December 1848</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Index
- NR 66.305 Jul 1844 two war steamers in the US
- NR 66.307 Jul 1844 steam frigates refitting at New York
- NR 66.353 Aug 1844 list of ships
- NR 67.002 Sept 1844 Army units and loan for invasion of Texas
- NR 67.018 Sept 1844 Mexican steam frigates repairing at New York, difficulties encountered by officers
- NR 67.208 Nov 1844: steamers sail from New York
- NR 67.210 Dec 1844 steamer Montezuma arrives at Norfolk
- NR 67.225 Dec 1844 steamers sail from Norfolk
- NR 67.337 Feb 1845 veto of a bill to return the capital to Austin on grounds of a possible Mexican invasion
- NR 68.032-68.034 March 1845: Mexican indemnity
- 68.032-4 March 1845: Mexican government embarrassed by mutiny in Army, new cabinet selected
- NR 68.035 Mar 1845 comments of the Richmond "Compiler" on British efforts to frustrate Mexican recognition of Texian independence unless Texas had agreed not to be annexed to the US
- NR 68.082 April 1845 Mexican proposal to unite with Texas against the Comanches
- NR 68.112 April 1845 rumor that Mexico has agreed to acknowledge independence of Texas if Texas rejects annexation by the US
- NR 68.112 April 1845 proposals before Mexican Congress to abrogate treaty, close Mexican ports to US vessels, denounce annexation of Texas
- NR 68.116 April 1845 Luis G. Cuevas, minister of foreign affairs, addresses a note to Wilson Shannon closing diplomatic relations, and to other foreign ministers protesting against the annexation of Texas, war spirit, consideration of measures to be taken
- NR 68.117 Apr 1845 reaction in Mexico to news of annexation of Texas by the US
- NR 68.128 Apr 1845 denunciation of the annexation of Texas by the US, threat of war
- NR 68.129 May 1845 earthquakes
NR 68.129 May 1845 people of Chihuahua refuse paying taxes because of Apache depredations

NR 68.129 May 1845 Gen. Manuel Micheltoreno and troops return to Mexico

NR 68.133-68.135 May 1845 official announcement of annexation of Texas by the US, note of Luis G. Cuevas to Ambassador Wilson Shannon, Shannon's reply

NR 68.135 May 1845 Luis G. Cuevas' circular to the English, French, and Spanish ministers protesting the American annexation

NR 68.135 May 1845 remarks of the Mexican press on the annexation of Texas by the US

NR 68.144 May 1845 receipt of Mexican proposals to treat with Texas on the basis of independence

NR 68.146 May 1845 benefits to be derived by Mexico from the American annexation of Texas

NR 68.151 May 1845 projects recommended by the Mexican Congress on the annexation of Texas by the US

NR 68.151 May 1845 remarks of the Mexican press on the annexation of Texas by the US

NR 68.160 May 1845 earthquakes

NR 68.178 May 1845 Texas boundary defined and independence guaranteed by convention among Mexico, Great Britain, and France

NR 68.176 May 1845 further accounts of controversy over annexation of Texas by the US

NR 68.176 May 1845 excitement over arrival of American squadron at Veracruz

NR 68.193 May 1845 little excitement in New Mexico over the American annexation of Texas

NR 68.193 May 1845 Mexican maneuvering, under European tutelage, to prevent annexation of Texas by the US

NR 68.195 May 1845 the Stockton squadron arrives at Vera Cruz

NR 68.204-68.205 May 1845 notice of negotiations for Mexican recognition of the independence of Texas on the condition that Texas reject proposals from the US regarding the annexation of Texas

NR 68.208 May 1845 insurrection in California against Gen. Manuel Micheltoreno

NR 68.210-68.212 June 1845 history of negotiations for acquisition of California

NR 68.211-68.212 June 1845 history of negotiations for acquisition of California

NR 68.212 June 1845 Wilson Shannon leaves Mexico

NR 68.212 June 1845 bill to raise three million for war, but war unlikely

NR 68.212 June 1845 salutary influence of the US squadron at Veracruz

NR 68.212 June 1845 Mexican Army, number of officers and men

NR 68.226 June 1845 letter about the capabilities of Mexican forces on the Texas frontier

NR 68.226 June 1845 contradictory accounts from Mexico about the government's attitude toward the American annexation of Texas

NR 68.226 June 1845 explanation of the mystery about the Mexican indemnity

NR 68.225 June 1845 posture of relations between the two countries
NR 68.226 June 1845 Mexican press on annexation of Texas

NR 68.235 June 1845 revolution in California

NR 68.256 Mexico, Indians, notice of an ethnological article by Albert Gallatin

NR 68.257 hostile feeling toward the US

NR 68.274 July 1845 Texas, annexation to the United States, meeting of Congress, submission of the Mexican treaty, its rejection, resolutions approving annexation by the United States adopted, notice of various resolutions related to annexation

NR 68.275 July 1845 expectation that Mexico will declare war, denial that an American minister would be favorably received

NR 68.305 July 1845 people quiet, not alarmed by war cries
68.305 July 1845 proclamation upon receiving intelligence of Texas deciding to annex to the US

NR 68.306 July 1845 will Mexico declare war?

NR 68.313-68.314 July 1845 Mexico, aboriginal population

NR 68.315-68.316 July 1845 British involvement in the negotiation for Mexican recognition of Texian independence

NR 68.315-68.316 July 1845 Texas, annexation to the United States, notice of negotiations for Mexican recognition of the independence of Texas on the condition that Texas reject proposals from the United States regarding the annexation of Texas

NR 68.323 July 1845 rumors of war between Mexico and the US

NR 68.324 July 1845 state of the ships

NR 68.336 July 1845 fear of an embargo of American ships, calls for declaration of war

NR 68.352 Aug 1845 Mexican determination to declare war when US troops possess Texas, Congress to assemble, preparations for war

NR 68.372 Aug 1845 expectation of war with the US over the annexation of Texas

NR 68.384 Aug 1845 warlike statement of Cuevas to Congress, quotas for Army requisitioned

NR 68.388 Aug 1845 Mexico - Congress - Mexican preparations for war with the US

NR 68.401 Aug 1845 propositions for war, &c.

NR 68.402 Aug45: disposition of the government forces

NR 69.003 Sep 1845 interest in Santa Fe in the annexation of Texas to the US

NR 69.003 Sep 1845 war loan, orders to troops to position themselves in advance of the Rio Bravo

NR 69.003 Jun 1845 news of the declaration of war reaches the Army in Texas, Gen. Zachary Taylor established on the Nueces

NR 69.004 Sep 1845 notice of Gen. Zachary Taylor and dragoons on the Nueces

NR 69.005 Sep 1845 party of Mexican soldiers approach Castroville, but flee

NR 69.005 Sep 1845 news of the Mexican forces at Matamoros

NR 69.005 Sep 1845 comments of the New York "Morning News" on the possibility of avoiding a war
NR 69.006 Sep 1845 operations at Pensacola to transport troops to Texas

NR 69.006 Sep 1845 payment for three of the six vessels built for Mexico at New York

NR 69.018 Sep 1845 rumor of movements of Mexican troops toward Texas

NR 69.018 Sep 1845 Gen. Mariano Arista's address and call for forces

NR 69.019 Sep 1845 comments on the inability of Mexico to wage war over Texas without the backing of England

NR 69.020 Sep 1845 news of Mexican forces at Matamoros and of reinforcements, their intentions

NR 69.020 Sep 1845 expectation that Mexico would assault Texas rather than declare war on the US

NR 69.020 Sep 1845 question of whether the troops in Texas constitute an Army of Observation or the Army of Occupation, notice of their position, forces arriving

NR 69.020 Sep 1845 departure of infantry from Pensacola for Texas
69.020 Sep 1845 complaints about lack of artillery with Gen. Zachary Taylor

NR 69.020 Sep 1845 rumors of the movements of Gen. Mariano Arista

NR 69.021 Sep 1845 attempts to raise troops in Missouri to march against New Mexico

NR 69.020-69.021 Sep 1845 complaints about Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines' efforts to enlist volunteers

NR 69.021 Sep 1845 Gen. Zachary Taylor's plan to post troops on the Rio Grande

NR 69.034 Sep 1845 question in Mexico whether to declare or to make war

NR 69.034-69.035 Sep 1845 Gen. Anastasio Bustamente appointed commander of the Army of Texas, history of the revolution which banished him

NR 69.035 Sep 1846 news from the Army of Observation at Corpus Christi

NR 69.036 Sep 1845 position of the Army of Observation at Corpus Christi

NR 69.048 Sep 1845 Army of Observation in good health and spirits

NR 69.051 Sep 1845 regiment of volunteers for service in Mexico being raised at Saint Louis

NR 69.065-69.066 Oct 1845 more troops for Texas, speculations on the destination of the Army of Observation

NR 69.066-69.067 Oct 1845 Texian volunteers and Rangers to enter US service or cooperate with US forces

NR 69.073-69.074 Oct 1845 intercourse with Mexico, news of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga and his forces
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 Gen. Anastasio Bustamente not appointed Mexican commander, preparations of bodies of troops under Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga and Gen. Mariano Arista
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 troops at the castle of San Juan de Ulloa
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 position of ships of the Mexican Navy
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 difficult financial position of the Mexican government despite the bill for the fifteen million loan
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 effort of the British minister to prevent Mexico from going to war
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 no Mexican preparations for defense at Tampico, Mexican letters of marque issued
NNR 69.074 Oct 1845 American troops rumored moving on Matamoros

NR 69.083 Oct 1845 proclamation of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga on the call to defend Mexican territory

NR 69.086 Oct 1845 dragoons from Fort Jesup to join the Army of Observation

NR 69.091 Oct 1845 Mexico - population
NR 69.100 Oct 1845 more troops for the Army of Observation

NR 69.130-69.131 Nov 1845 examination of the state of the Army, account of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga's supposed rebellion

NR 69.132-69.133 Nov 1845 dragoons from Fort Jesup to join the Army of Observation

NR 69.133 Nov 1845 artillery reaches Aransas for the Army of Observation

NR 69.147-69.148 Nov 1845 hypothecation of California to Great Britain in payment for the debt of Mexico

NR 69.147 Nov 1845 high price of provisions in Texas because of presence of Army troops

NR 69.160 Nov 1845 dispatches to the US via Navy steamers

NR 69.161 Nov 1845 expedition of Rangers to the Rio Grande

NR 69.161 Nov 1845 discussion of relations with Mexico, news of a messenger from Mexico City indicating difficulties with Mexico are at an end

NR 69.176 Nov 1845 suggestions from Mexico on terms for resuming diplomatic relations and negotiating differences

NR 68.178 Nov 1845 items pertaining to the Army of Observation at Corpus Christi

NR 69.203-69.204 Nov 1845 letter describing the situation with regard to cession of California to Great Britain or the US and the governance of the province by Mexico

NR 69.209 Nov 1845 announcement of dispatch of a minister to Mexico, news received of Mexican agreement to open negotiations

NR 69.240 Dec 1845 debate on negotiations with the US

69.244 Dec 1845 Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna's statement on payment of the Mexican indemnity

NR 69.244 Dec 1845 expectation of a successful result to the negotiation with Mexico

NR 69.256 Dec 1845 Gen. Mariano Arista's appointment to treat with the US on Texas boundary and other matters

NR 69.258 Dec 1845 relations with Mexico take an unfavorable turn, remarks

NR 68.273 Jan 1846 letter from an officer at Corpus Christi

NR 69.291 Jan 1846 relations with Mexico take an unfavorable turn, remarks

NR 69.304 Jan 1846 John Slidell not recognized, quits the city

NR 69.304 Jan 1846 relations with Mexico take an unfavorable turn, remarks

NR 69.304 Jan 1846 Mexico, departments assaulted by Indians

NR 69.305 Jan 1846 gloomy reports from Mexico about the reception of John Slidell and the possibility of a movement by Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga against the government of Jose Joaquin Herrera on the basis of declaring war against the US over the annexation of Texas

NR 69.320 Jan 1846 Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga approaches Mexico

NR 69.320 Jan 1846 unpleasant rumors of sickness, &c., among US troops

NR 69.322 Jan 1846 Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga approaches Mexico

NR 69.323 Jan 1846 cabinet declines to recognize John Slidell, who retires to Jalapa

NR 69.323 Jan 1846 Jose Joaquin Herrera's circular to the provinces
NR 69.350 Jan 1846 reference to relations with Mexico by Gov. Silas Wright of New York
NR 69.352 Feb 1846 uncertainty about attitude of the new Mexican government toward the US
NR 69.353 Feb 1846 affairs with the US more gloomy, various reports about the reception or rejection of the American minister
NR 69.371 Feb 1846 strength of the Army of Occupation
NR 69.384 Feb 1846 notice of American ships of war off the coast of California
NR 69.384 Feb 1846 difficulties in the advance of the Army of Occupation to the Rio del Norte
NR 69.416 Feb 1846 Army of Occupation ordered to the Rio del Norte
NR 70.018 Mar 1846 number of ships, men, guns, etc.
NR 70.050 Mar 1846 Army of Occupation quits Corpus Christi and advances to the Rio Grande
NR 70.050-70.051 Mar 1846 Gen. Zachary Taylor's general order on respecting the rights of Mexicans
NR 70.051 Mar 1846 Gen. Jose Antonio Mejia returns to Matamoros
NR 70.096 Apr 1846 Mexican efforts to protect Point Isabel
NR 70.096 Apr 1846 suggestion that Mexico cede Texas, New Mexico, and California to the US
NR 70.098 Apr 1846 comments on the failure of John Slidell's mission
NR 70.112 Apr 1846 Army of Occupation takes post on the Rio Grande
NRR 70.112 Apr 1846 numbers and position of Mexican forces

July 1844
66.305 13Jul1844: two war steamers in the US

While President Tyler was concentrating a squadron in the Gulf of Mexico, with orders to cruise off Vera Cruz, and intercept any naval movement from thence towards Texas, -- the Mexican war steamers, the Montezuma, and Guadaloupe, arrived at Charleston, S.C. on their way to N. York, having touched there for fuel. They are now at New York refitting. [BAH]

NR 66.307 13Jul1844: steam frigates refitting at New York

The Mexican war steamers, now at New York, are to undergo a thorough repair at the Sectional Dry Sock company's yard. One of them, the Guadaloupe, is built of iron. [BAH]

August 1844
66.353 03Aug1844: list of ships

The Mexican Navy at present consists of, the steamer Guadaloupe, 4 guns - cost 225,069; the steamer Montezuma, 8 guns, [costs] 414,602.

Those two steamers were built and fitted in England for the Mexicans, and are now refitting for them at New York.

The remaining part of the navy consists of the following vessels:
Steamer Regenerador  7 guns
Brig Gen. Santa Anna  9 "
Brig Mexico  15 "
Brig Tempoalteca  7 "
Schooner Aguila  7 " Schooner Libertad  4 " Pilot boat Morales  2 "

In all 63 guns.

The government has contracted for some floating batteries, in the United States, which are to be used for the defense of the castle of Ulloa.  [BAH]

---

September 1844

NR 67.002  07Sept1844:  Army units and loan for invasion of Texas

The contingent of thirty thousand men for the invasion of Texas is appointed among the different departments of Mexico as follows:-- Mexico 8,200; Jalisco 4,000; Puebla 3,800; Guanajuato 3,000; St. Luis Potosi 1,800; Zacatecas 1,600; Queretaro 600; Oajaca 2,000; Mechoacan 1,580; Sinaloa 580; Aguascalientes 280. Total,-- 30,000 men.

Two gentlemen who arrived at New Orleans on the 26th ult. From Mexico, informed the editors of the Bee, that from 16,000 to 18,000 Mexican troops had assembled at San Louis de Potosi, and were on their way to begin the contemplated invasion of Texas. They were well provided with artilllery and cavalry.

Mexican dates to the 3d ult. Have been received. The vote of four millions of dollars for the invasion of Texas had been granted, but up to that date the plan for levying the money was still under discussion in the chambers. The Galveston Civilian, of the 17th August, says; "by last accounts over land, from Rio Grande, there was no indication of preparations t invade our territory. If Mexico really intends to make war, upon which point we are skeptical, she can have make but little progress as yet in getting ready."  [BAH]

---

NR 67.018  14Sept1844:  Mexican steam frigates repairing at New York, difficulties encountered by officers

Outrageous. It appears by a card from the Mexican consul general in New York, (Mr. Granja) that the officers of the two Mexican frigates have been harassed by lawsuits, and subject to much vexation in prosecuting their duties, from the prejudices excited among the people with whom they have to deal, by the Texas question. The sailors have been tempted to desert, and then to institute suits against officers on frivolous pretences, and condition of the crews. The courtesy of the U.S. officers, however, is gratefully acknowledged.  [BAH]

---

NR 67.208  30 November, 1944:  steamers sail from New York

Naval. The U.S. sloop of war Saratoga, commander Tutnall, reached Hampton Roads on the 23d, in 21 days from Prot Praya, coast of Africa - All well. - The S. left at Prot Praya the U.S. frigate Macedonian, com. Perry.

The U.S. ship Decatur was daily expected at Port Prava. She had been absent four months.

The U.S. war steamer Princeton left New York for Norfolk where she will remain ten days. She will proceed thence to Liverpool, and be absent about four months.
The Mexican war steamers Montezuma and Guadeloupe and brig-of-war Santa Anna left New York on the 24th - destination unknown, but supposed to be Vera Cruz.

Commodore Kearney, U.S. navy, and Capt. Talcott, of the U.S. engineer corps reached Norfolk on the 24th en route to Pensacola, to join the commissioners associated with them to select a site for a dry dock at the naval station. [BAH]

December 1844

NR 67.210   07Dec1844: steamer Montezuma arrives at Norfolk

The U.S. frigate Raritan: A letter dated on board, Oct. 12th says: "We leave in a few days with Mr. Brent, our charge on board, for Buenos Ayres, and expect to be gone about two months. We shall then return to this port.

The congress, Boston and Brainbridge are now at the river. Since my arrival on the coast I have made but one short cruise to St. Salvador and back. It is quite tedious lying so long in port, and injurious to the discipline of a new ship.

When we went to sea in August last, the congress was in company, for the purpose of comparing speed, and so was the United States. This ship was out of trim, being just filled up with her stores and provisions. The United States was light, and she left us before we got in trim.

The first day we beat the Congress by the wind, and Captain Voorhees acknowledged it, attributing the circumstance to his trim. Having put his ship in trim, he beat us two days, the winds being light; although this vessel having been put in trim also, we beat the Congress handsomely in a good breeze. All our sailing was by the wind.

Com. Turner has written home requesting to return which he desires to do in the Congress."

The U.S. ship Falmouth, Com'r. Sands, sailed from Pensacola on the 18th ult.

The U.S. ship Lexington, commodore F.B. Ellison, leaves N. York in a few days for Fort Mahon.

It is stated that commodore Kearney is to succeed commodore Jones, as commander of the New York station.

The Mexican war steamer Montezuma arrived at Norfolk on Saturday from New York. [BAH]

NR 67.225   14Dec1844: steamers sail from Norfolk

The U.S. steamer Princeton, Captain Stockton, was docked at Gosport Navy Yard Last week on the 8th instant, she left Norfolk for Philadelphia, where she now is.

The U.S. frigate Potomac, Com. Conner, went to sea from Norfolk last Sunday on a cruise.

The Mexican steamer Guadaloupe, Com. Espins, left Norfolk on Saturday for Vera Cruz via Havana.

The U.S. frigate Cumberland arrived at Port Mahon, on the 25th October, rom Malta.

The Plymouth, Com. Henry, was daily expected at Mahon from Marseilles.

The U.S. brig Oregon, Lieut A. Sinclair, commander, put into Kingston, Jam on the 17th ult. for provisions. All well. She was to have sailed on the 19th ult. For Carthagena, to await the arrival of Mr. Blackford, our minister at Bogotá, who is to return in the Oregon to the United States.

A letter from an officer on board the United States ship Decantur, dated Benguila, Africa, September 25th,1844. Our Ship arrived here to day from a cruise. Off. Loango spoke H.B.M. Star, on a cruise, having within a few days captured two Spanish brigs full of slaves and a large amount of specie, and sent them to Ascension, which is the English admiral's rendezvous. We are all well and now bound to Windward.

The U.S. Erie sailed from Brooklyn on the 9th for the coast of Africa.

The U.S. schooner Shark, from Guayaquil, was at Callao on the 21st of August.

The U.S. frigate Savannah sailed from Callao on the 13th of August for the Sandwich Islands.

The U.S. store ship Relief sailed on the 16th, from the same port for Valparaiso.

The U.S. ship Saratoga towed into Norfolk navy yard on the 6th instant, to be fitted for sea.  [BAH]

---

February 1845

NR 67.337  01Feb1845: veto of a bill to return the capital to Austin on grounds of a possible Mexican invasion

Texas. Galveston dates to the 18th January are received. Their congress expected to adjourn the last of January. Their tariff was under discussion in both houses. The financial committees of each house had reported against the "free trade" measures, and in favor of some very slight alterations in the tariff. The bill to prevent further issues of exchequer bills had not become a law. A bill to extend further time to A. Fisher to introduce emigrants had passed the house, and a bill was reported for changing the constitution in regard to naturalization. President Jones had vetoed the bill for the return of the seat of government to Austin, and assigns amongst his reasons, that it would be in danger there from Mexican invasions, the government of Mexico having just undergone a revolution, Santa Anna having been displaced mainly for the same reason he had assumed for displacing Bustamente, -- that is, "for not having pursued with sufficient vigor the war against Texas."

By proclamation dated 31December, President Jones revokes the exequatur previously granted to Duff Green as consul of the United States for Galveston. Three dars afterwards Mr. Green published a card in the Houston Telegraph, insinuating against "the combined [sic]"  [BAH]

---

March 1845

NR 68.032-68.034  22March,1845: Mexican indemnity

Mexican Indemnity. Among the appropriations make by the late congress, was that of $275,000 to pay claimants under the treaty of indemnity, which it would appear that the Mexican government had paid to our agent for receiving it at the city of Mexico, and held his receipt therefore. What has become of the money?  Some enquirers were made in congress, but among the explanations we have seen is the following, when we extract from the Richmond Enquirer -

"Here are the circumstances of the case, as they were told me today, by a gentleman upon whom I can rely. The firm of Hanzous & Co., in Vera Cruz and New York, and Voss & Co., in Mexico are agents of our government for receiving the money already stipulated to be paid by Mexico to the United States. Trigueros, Santa Anna's late secretary of the treasury, is a principal partner of these firms with one hand, as Santa Anna's fiscal agent, he paid the last installment ($275,00) into the other, with which he wrote the receipt as agent of the United States government. The money found its way into his own pocket, and he has absquatulated along with the rest of his master's ministers, whose heads are not safe on their own shoulders if caught within the republic of Mexico. Santa Anna's robberies of the treasure of his own government, furnished him with an illustrious precedent for this robbery of ours. - Our treasury suffers by this financial "operation;" for you will remember he was sufficiently patriotic to give his own government a receipt of the money as United States agent. Thus congress will be forced to appropriate the sum stolen, the United States being responsible for it to the claimants."

The Buffalo Advertiser, after quoting the above, says:

"The explanation has a very suspicious look. If the facts are as stated, why have they not been communicated to the country through the proper channels, instead of finding their way to the public through the medium of an anonymous letter in a newspaper? The suspicious of falsity, which this statement is calculated to excite, are confirmed by the following from the Journal of Commerce, a paper very likely to be correctly informed. It says:

"Trigueros, we are assured, has no connection with the house of Hargous & Co., and never did have. No part of the money ever came into the hands of that firm."

Now, is it not true that the money was paid as is alleged by the Mexican minister, and then embezzled - we Relations with Texas. The Richmond Enquirer publishes the following letter, written nearly a year ago by the British envoy to Mr. Jones, then secretary of state, now president of Texas, and lately communicated by him along with other documents to the congress of that republic, with his annual message. The Enquirer introduces the article with a column of editorial, which we omit, because it appears to us that nothing is developed in this letter of Mr. Elliott, but what the whole country was aware of long since. That the English government would prefer that Texas should remain independent of the United States, no one we presume ever doubted. That President Houston, and Mr., now President Jones, when Mr. Tyler make the application to the Texian government to relinquish sovereignty and seek a subordinate station, were at first averse to the proposition, we also all knew. That there would be a corresponding understanding between those parties, who could doubt? The relative weight of influence which England and the United States have with the Texians is too manifest to give us any uneasiness.

Mr. Elliott, British Envoy, to Mr. Jones, Secretary of states. Galveston, March 22d,1844.

The undersigned, her Britannic majesty’s charge d’affaires to the republic of Texas, has lately had the honor to acquaint Mr. Jones, that her Majesty’s government was engaged in continued efforts to induce the government of Mexico to acknowledge the independence of Texas; and he has now the gratification to add that renewed communications have taken place between the government of her majesty and that of the king of the French, and that his majesty has expressed his concurrence in the purposes of the French minister in Mexico, to join his continued friendly assistance to that of her majesty’s representative.

But adverting to the proposals of the government of the United States, respecting annexation, to the recent mission of distinguished citizens to Texas to Washington on the Potomac, and to the impression as general in Texas, that negotiations having that object in view, are either in progress or in contemplation, the undersigned finds it his duty to express the hope, that the government of Texas will furnish him with explanations on the subject, for transmission to her majesty’s government. He is sure that they will be made in that spirit of frank and friendly unreserved which has always characterized the intercourse of the two governments.

It must be unnecessary to say, that the undersigned is perfectly aware of the president’s personal opinions on the subject, and he has not failed, agreeably to the president’s wish, to communicate to her majesty’s government his excellency’s determination to sustain the independence of the republic, and his excellency’s confident hope that the people will uphold him in that course. Indeed, referring to the conference, which the undersigned had the honor to have with the president and Mr. Jones at Galveston, during last autumn, he can suppose that the mission to Washington of the gentlemen in question, has been dictated by a wise desire to avoid any cause of offence or irritation to the government of the United States, and to explain with frankness, that the government of Texas could not entertain the subject at all, even if all other obstacles were removed, after the former rejection of such an arrangement by the government of the United States, and wholly with our reason, to know that the senate of the United States will ratify if now, or in future.

The congress of Texas, however, has met and separated since the date of the communication to her majesty’s government, to which the undersigned has referred, and the president will feel with force, that it is just and necessary, in the present appearance of circumstances, that there should be no room for the least uncertainty on the part of the governments engaged on the behalf of Texas at Mexico; for, it is not to be supposed that they could continue to press the government of Mexico to settle upon one basis, whilst there was nay reason to surmise that negotiations were either in actual existence, or in contemplation, proposing a cohabitation or a totally different and prosperity of Texas.

The undersigned takes this occasion to renew to Mr. Jones, the expression to the sentiments of regard and distinguished consideration with which he has the honor to remains, His faithful and most obedient servant,

Charles Elliott. [BAH]

We learn from the Houston Star that when the news of the Annexation resolutions reached that city, it was hailed with a burst of enthusiasm by the citizen that has never been exceeded. The news of the victorious battle of San Jacinto scarcely excited such general hand enthusiastic rejoicing. The sound of the drum and other musical instruments, the roar of cannon, the loud shouts of the multitude, resounding long after midnight, indicated the ardent longing of the people to retune once more under the glorious Egis of the American Union.

Amid the sounds of joy, there are heard the mutterings of discounted - not so loud, but sufficiently distinct to lead us to infer that there will be considerable opposition to he measure. We do not, however, apprehend the defeat of annexation from the other side of the Sabine.

In respect to the disposition of President Jones upon the question, it is thought a favorable indication that he should have appointed the Hon. David S. Kaufman, an ardent friend of annexation as Charged'Affaires to the United States. The Houston Telegraph, in speaking to this point, says:

"we find that an impression is gaining ground that President Jones is opposed to annexation, and the Washington Register is regarded as uttering his sentiments upon this subject. We, however, have reason to believe that the articles in the Register are published entirely independent of him and without his assent or dissent, as he troubles himself very little about the affairs of either of the editors at Washington. We have "information on which we can rely" that he is a warm friend of annexation, disposed to make any honorable sacrifices to obtain it.

The news of the abolition of duties upon cotton imported in England, will take away the main prop of the anti-annexationists, as it was the hope of obtaining an advantage over the united States in this particular that furnished the staple argument of the opposition.

Aside from this matter of annexation, we find little that is interesting to our readers in our Texas files. The citizens of Milam and Montgomery counties have evinced a spirit of insubordination in the way of resisting the tax collector.

President Jones has vetoed the act of congress reducing eh duties on imported goods.

The Galveston News says that Gen. Arista has sent dispatches to the Texas government by way of Corpus Christi. The purport of these dispatches is said to be an invitation to the Texan government to join the Mexican General in an expedition against the Comanche Indians that have become the pest of the Rio Grande settlements.

The Galveston Civilian says;

The revenue cutter Alert, Capt. Sympton, arrive on Monday from Corpus Christi. We learn that they party of Indians, of whose passage down the country e have before had intelligence, are encamped within fifteen or twenty miles of Corpus Christi, and are pronounced to be a body of Comanches, men, women, and children, and numbering in all perhaps 2000 or 2500. Capt. Hays, with his company was at the ranch when the cutter sailed, the whole force numbering about one hundred and seventy men. Monday last was the day set to go out to give the Indians battle. Should our people receive no material reinforcement, a hard fight may be expected, as there are probably some four hundred warriors among the Indians, while he squaws and young ones are not backward in lending a nod in an emergency.

The Texans were armed with Colt's repeaters, and were expected to give a good account of themselves.

Three Wacoes were recently killed near Bastrop. They are supposed to have belonged to a large party that recently make a foray upon that section of the country.

Corn was selling in Houston on the 12th inst., at $1 per bushel.

The whooping cough was prevalent in many part of the country.

Just before the New York left Galveston, a British man of war entered that port, bearing dispatches of Capt. Elliott, British Envoy, from this government. - It was said that this vessel had a vast amount of money on board, and that the dispatches contained instructions to Capt. Elliott to offer to guaranty they national independence of Texas, provided the annexation resolutions are rejected. It was further reported that the French government had also offered the same guarantee on the same conditions. Private advices assure us that when these propositions were made know in Galveston, the people snapped their fingers, saying "the foreigners were too late."

Capt. Elliott set out for the capital immediately after receiving his dispatches - M. Saligny, the French Charge, was already there.  [BAH] that they need succor from the government, instead of being compelled to contribute to its support.

The celebrated criminal Uruera, condemned to the galleys or 10 years, escaped from the prison at Mazatlan on the 16th ult. His evasion is ascribed to the neglect of the authorities.

Gen. Woll of the army of the North arrived at Mexico on the 23d ult. having resigned the command of his troops to Gen. Arista.  [BAH]

April 1845

NR 68.112 26Apr1845: rumor that Mexico has agreed to acknowledge independence of Texas if Texas rejects annexation by the US

Mexico. El Siglo, (of the city of Mexico), of the 29th ultimo contains a letter from the minister of foreign affairs, (Cuevas) to Mr. Shannon, United States minister at Mexico, informing him that the government was in possession of the knowledge of the passage of the annexation resolutions, and that diplomatic relations between the two countries were suspended on that account. The same day a note was addressed by the Mexican cabinet to the ministers of Spain, France, and England, protesting against the proceedings of the United States in relation to Texas. National Intelligencer April 22.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Jeffersonian, writing from Vera Cruz, says:

"The news of the final action of the senate on the Texas resolution was received here three days since, and caused much surprise among foreigners and excitement among natives. An express was immediately sent by the commandant general of this place to Mexico, communication this intelligence to government, and consequently considerable anxiety is felt here to know what course will be adopted by congress in the matter. The more I reflect upon the subject, the less able do I find myself to give an opinion as to what will be the course pursued by Mexico in this case. One thing is most certain, that she finds herself I the most awkward position that can be imagined. She is not in a situation to keep her head above water in time of peace, and where she to get funds from to support a war? The actual government, by not declaring war against the United States, would be placing a terrible engine in the hands of the recently fallen party, to be used against itself in such a manner as to jeopardize greatly its existence. It is impossible to say what will be done; but I think government must declare war to save itself. In a very few days we shall know something certain, and perhaps even before the sailing of this vessel."  [BAH]

NR 68.112 26April 1845: proposals before Mexican Congress to abrogate treaty, close Mexican ports to US vessels, denounce annexation of Texas

"Vera Cruz March 29,1845

Congress has been in session on the subject of the Texan resolutions ever since the news of their passage by the U. States congress was received. A great many propositions have been discussed, such as war, non-intercourse, expulsion of Americans, confiscation of American property and vessels. But nothing of the kind has even decreed yet; and, when the first impression is over, they will no doubt go mildly to work, as what can they expect with high-handed measures against their powerful neighbors?"  [BAH]

NR 68.116 26April 1845: Luis G. Cuevas, minister of foreign affairs, addresses a note to Wilson Shannon closing diplomatic relations, and to other foreign ministers protesting against the annexation of Texas, war spirit, consideration of measures to be taken

Mexico. El Siglo, (of the city of Mexico), of the 29th ultimo contains a letter from the minister of foreign affairs, (Cuevas) to Mr. Shannon, United States minister at Mexico, informing him that the government was in possession of the knowledge of the passage of the annexation resolutions, and that diplomatic relations between the two countries were suspended on that account. The same day a note was addressed by the Mexican cabinet to the ministers of Spain, France, and England, protesting against the proceedings of the United States in relation to Texas.  [National Intelligencer April 22.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Jeffersonian, writing from Vera Cruz, says:

"The news of the final action of the senate on the Texas resolution was received here three days since, and caused much surprise among foreigners and excitement among natives. An express was immediately sent by the commandant general of this place to Mexico, communication this intelligence to government, and consequently considerable anxiety is felt here to know what course will be adopted by congress in this matter. The more I reflect upon the subject, the less able to I find myself to give an opinion as to what will be the course pursued by Mexico in this case. One thing is most certain, that she finds herself in the most awkward position that can be imagined. She is not in a situation to keep her head above water in time of peace, and where is she to get funds from to support a war? The actual government, by not declaring war against the United States, would be placing a terrible engine in the hands of the recently fallen party, to be used against itself in such a manner as to jeopardize greatly its existence. It is impossible to say what will beyond; but I think government just declare war to save itself. In a very few days we shall know something certain, and perhaps even before the sailing of this vessel."

The following is an extract of a letter received by a gentleman in the city of Baltimore, dated Vera Cruz, March 29, 1845.

Congress has been in session on the subject of the Texan resolutions ever since the news of heir passage by the United States congress was received. A great many propositions have been discussed, such as war non-intercourse, expulsion of Americans, confiscation of American property and vessels. But nothing of the kind has been decreed yet; and when the first impression is over, they will no doubt go mildly to work, as what can they expect with high-handed measures against their powerful neighbors?"  [BAH]

NR 68.117 26 Apr 1845: reaction in Mexico to news of annexation of Texas by the US

Galveston papers have been received at New Orleans to the 9th instant. They contain little news and are mainly occupied with the subject of annexation. The Galveston Daily News discusses at some length the mode in which the people of Texas can constitutionally act upon the joint resolutions. On the one hand, it has been said that president Jones has no constitutional power to entertain propositions which go to the overthrow of the present government; and on the other that there is no provision in the laws or constitution empowering the executive or congress to call a convention of the people. Under these circumstances, the editor suggests that the people themselves form a convention and proceed to draught a state constitution, in conformity with the article I the present fundamental law of Texas, conferring upon them "an inalienable right at all times to alter the government as they may think proper."

The New Orleans Bee says:-- "We have received verbal information that major A.J. Donnellson, charge to Texas, had been two days at Washington, but had not laid his dispatches before the executive. Mr. Jones had not expressed an opinion either way, but was generally supposed to be opposed to annexation."

Mr. De Saligny, the French charge to Texas came passenger in the New York to New Orleans. Mr. Elliot, the British charge, had sailed from Galveston on the 3d for Charleston, in the English sloop of war Electra, where also he expects to meet his family.

The hon. Ashbel Smith, secretary of state of the republic of Texas, had arrived at New Orleans, and was to leave that city on the 14th instant for Washington. On an important mission to this gevernment.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 14th says - Mr. Saligny and the hon. Ashbel Smith, secretary of state, came passengers in the New York. Our private information leads us to infer that these gentlemen have come to the United State upon business connected with annexation. We have been informed that such was the eagerness of the French charge to read the city, that when the New York stopped a few miles below to take wood, he procured a horse, set out immediately, and arrived in town on Saturday night. We have been told that Mr. Salingy asserted, in terms rather more preemptory than are usually employed by diplomatic agents, that annexation will not (shall not) take place.

The plan of operations at present adopted seems to be, to create an impression throughout Texas that the United States congress will not sanction the admission of Texas upon the resolution adopted.

The president and cabinet left the capital shortly after captain Elliot and Mr. Saligny got through with their business. This step was taken, it is shrewdly suspected, to escape an interview with Mr. Donelson, United States charge. Mr. Smith's mission hither, too, is thought to be a mere ruse, to give the government excuse for delay.

We have two private letters before us, a day later that those published above, and which were written at the latest hour to be in readiness foe the steamer, from which we learn that president Jones had returned to Washington, and that the United States minister, major Donelson, Had been treated so cavalierly by him and his cabinet, that he spoke of withdrawing from the seat of government to Galveston. This intelligence is from sources so direct as to leave no room to doubt its accuracy. From all that we learn we are constrained to believe, that if a rupture with Major Donelson would assist in procrastination action with the acquiescence of the people, president Jones would edify the nations with another exequatur proclamation.

It seems to be agreed that proclamations have been issued to fill vacancies I congress, so as to house the citizens with a few elections. None has been issued convening congress-nor will there be, we apprehend, until there is a general rising of the country.

It is further stated that the custom house officers on either bank of the Sabine, have discontinued the collection of the custom duties, the question of annexation, in their opinion, being already settled.

Meetings in favor of annexation continue to be held. One at St. Augustine was a very large gathering, and was attended by the vice president of Texas, gen. Henderson, major Kaufman and other leading men of the country. IN Nacogdoches, out of 100 voters, it is stated, there are not twenty opposed to the measure.

The Picayune gives the following intelligence from Mexico, received by the Alabama, from Havana-

We subjoin such particulars of Mexican affairs as we find our Havana exchanges. They are of great importance, and are nearly a week later than we have received direct. Gen. Almonte's communication of the passage of the measure of annexation, though not unexpected, produced very considerable excitement in the capital. ON the 22d of March, Senor Cuevas, the present minister of foreign relations, addressed a circular to the governors of the different departments, in which he announces this intelligence. He goes on to say that the executive government and the chambers are occupied with the discussion the grave interests involved in the question. He appeals to the patriotism of the authorities of the departments and all their citizens, to forget all divisions, and to stand by the president, and co-operate with him in defense of the rights and the honor of the nation. He promises to communicate promptly to the different departments the measures, which may be resolved upon at the capital.

Upon the reception of official notification of the passage of the annexation resolutions, a very stormy session was held in the house of deputies, during which propositions of a hostile character were submitted and canvasses, without, however, and decisive vote being taken thereon. The policy of issuing letters of marquee was brought up in this debate. [BAH]

NR 68.128  26Apr1845:  denunciation of the annexation of Texas by the US, threat of war

Mexico. Latest dates are to the 4th by the Guadabete, at N. Orleans; official letters have been addressed to our minister, and published, closing all diplomatic relations. Also letters to the ministers of England, France and Spain. They announce, that in opposition to the contemplated measure of annexation: "the Mexican Republic will employ her power and her resources, and, trusting in the justice of her cause, does not fear to give assurance, that whatever may be the result, she will preserve the honor which at any cost she ought to defend in the grave matter under consideration."

A letter addressed to the New Orleans Jeffersonian says: "I have just received my letters from Mexico, and copy the following from one: In congress today a proposition has passed to a second reading, by a large majority, making it high treason if any person who should make proposal for the recognition of the independence of Texas to the cession of that country to the United States. I believe a large majority of congress will not agree to declare war against the United States, but will send a large force to Texas with the object of conquering it, by this means forcing the United States to declare war, if she wishes to protect Texas." [BAH]

May 1845

NR 68.129  3May1845:  earthquakes

An awful earthquake, visited the city of Mexico on the 7th April.

At the moment we write, says the Siglo, (of the city of Mexico) of the 8th, the inhabitants of the capitol of the republic are still under the influence of the horrors excited by the earthquake of yesterday, the disastrous effects of which we are still imperfectly acquainted with.

Yesterday at 52 minutes past 3 o'clock P.M., the oscillations began, slight at first and then stronger - The direction of the motion appeared to be north and south. It lasted about two minutes. The shocks were terrible; nothing like them was ever experienced before, and the condition of the buildings too surely proves the absence of all exaggeration.

We were by chance upon the great square at the time, and we witnessed a spectacle not easily forgotten. In an instant the multitude, but a moment previous tranquil and listless, were upon their knew, praying to the Almighty and counting with anxiety the shocks which threatened to convert the most beautiful city in the New World into a vast theatre of ruins  [BAH]

NR 68.129  3May, 1845:  people of Chihuahua refuse paying taxes because of Apache depredations
The people of the department of Chihuahua refuse positively to pay all direct taxes levied by the government, upon the ground that the irruptions of the Apache Indians have reduced them to extreme want, and that they need succor from the government, instead of being compelled to contribute to its support.

The celebrated criminal Uruera, condemned to the galleys or 10 years, escaped from the prison at Mazatlan an the 16th ult. His evasion is ascribed to the neglect of the authorities.

Gen. Woll of the army of the North arrived at Mexico on the 23d ult. having resigned the command of his troops to Gen. Arista.  [BAH]

NR 68.129  3May, 1845: Gen. Manuel Micheltoreno and troops return to Mexico

A letter from Mazatlan, dated the 19th march, says, "By a vessel which arrived here yesterday from Upper California, we learn that Gen. Micheltorena with 200 troops, is on this way to these port, having been compelled to leave that country, by the terms of the capitulation."

The Vera Cruz papers speak of a horrible murder committed at Puebla by a priest, in consequences of a criminal passion. The particulars are not mentioned.

Senor Echeverria has resigned the office of minister of finance, on account of ill health, and Senor Luis de la Rosa has been appointed in his stead.  [BAH]

NR 68.133-68.135  03May1845:  official announcement of annexation of Texas by the US, note of Luis G. Cuevas to Ambassador Wilson Shannon, Shannon's reply

Diplomatic Relations Discontinued - Official Correspondence. The following important notes are translations, for the New Orleans Picayune, from the official, published at the city of Mexico.

Mexico, 22d March, 1845

The Supreme Government has received official notice of the approval of the congress of the United States of American of the annexation of Texas to their union, on the terms which are expressed in the communication of Don Juan M. Almonte, a copy of which you will find in one of the Journals accompanying this.

The houses of legislation and the Supreme government are at present occupied in the consideration of this serous affair, and take this method of informing you of the means they are adopting in relation to it. And in order to ensure perfect co-operation, we have tot inform you that His Excellency, the president, depends upon the well-known and tired patriotism of yourself and the assistance of all the inhabitants of your department, and that the good feeling heretofore existing between them and the government may be more particularly sustained at this moment when it is so necessary to maintain the rights and fair name of the nation.

(Signed)
CUEVAS

The following are given as translations of a note from the Mexican Foreign Minister to Mr. Shannon, dated March 28, and of a circular addressed by the same functionary to the European Ministers which are as follows:

To His Excellency Wilson Shannon,
Envoy Extraordinary, &c.

National Palace, Mexico, March 28, 1845

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations in addressing himself, for the last time, to his excellency, Mr./ Wilson Shannon, minister plenipotentiary from the United States, desires to inform him, that as both houses of the United States Congress have sanctioned the law in relation to the annexation of Texas to the territory of the United States, and as the minister from Mexico has withdrawn from his mission at Washington, and protested against the act of congress and the government of the United Sates, diplomatic relations between the two countries cannot be continued.

What can the undersigned add to what has already been said by his government upon the grave offence offered Mexico by the United States, usurping a portion of Mexican territory and violation the terms of treaties of friendship, which the republic of Mexico has observed on her part as long as her honor and the desire to avoid a rupture with the United States have permitted? Nothing more than to lament that two nations, free and republican, congruous (vicinos) and worthy of fraternal union, founded upon mutual interests and a common and honorable loyalty, should have cut short their friendly relations, and by an act as offensive to Mexico as it is derogatory to the honor of the American Union.

The undersigned renews to his Excellency Mr. Shannon, the protest already directed against annexation; and, moreover, would add, that the Mexican republic will oppose the measure with all the decision due to her own honor and sovereignty, and that the government ardently desires that considerations of loyalty and justice should yet outweigh with the citizens of the United States designs for extending their territory at the expense of a friendly republic, which, in the midst of its misfortunes, (disgracias), seeks to preserve an unspotted name, and thereby the rank to which its destinies call it.

The undersigned has the honor to offer to his Excellency, Mr. Shannon, his personal respect, and to assure him of his very distinguished consideration.

Luis G. Cuevas.

United Sates Legation, March 31, 1845.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary, &c. of the United States, has the honor of acknowledging he receipt of his excellency's, Senor Cuevas, minister of foreign relations, &c., note of the 28th of March, announcing that the congress of the United States has sanctioned the annexation of Texas to its territory; that the Mexican minister at Washington had terminated his official relations and protested against the said act of the congress and government of the United States; and that diplomatic relations between the two counties could not be continued.

The liberal and honorable sentiments entertained by the actual government of Mexico had induced the undersigned to hope that the differences which exist between the governments could be arranged amicably, upon terms just and honorable to both. It would appear, however, from the note of his Excellency Senor Cuevas that Mexico declines to adjust these differences in this manner, and thus preserve the peace of the two counties.

The undersigned can assure his excellency Senor Cuevas that his (MR. Shannon's) government entertains the liveliest desire to cultivate amicable relations with that of Mexico; and here he will improve this opportunity to repeat that which he had before communicated to the government of Mexico, to wit, that the United States has not adopted the measure of annexation in any spirit of hostility towards Mexico, and that the United States are anxious to settle all questions which may grow out of this measure, including that of boundaries, in terms the most just and liberal.

Having offered the olive branch of peace, and manifested a sincere desire to arrange these questions amicably, and upon principles just and honorable to both governments, the United States have done whatever is in their power to preserve the friendly relations between them, and it now remains for Mexico to decide whether they shall be continued, or whether the peace of the two countries shall be broken by a conflict equally injurious to both, and which can give satisfaction only to the enemies of civil liberty and republican institutions.

The undersigned will pass over in silence the charge makes against his government of having violated the treaty of friendship with Mexico. The right of Texas to cede the whole or a part of her territory to the United States, and the right of the United States to accept such cession, have already been amply vindicated repeatedly.

The undersigned has received no official communication as to the action of his government in regards to the annexation of Texas to the Union; nevertheless he cannot doubt, from the tenor of his personal correspondence, that the measure has been passed by congress and approved by the president. He expected daily dispatches from his government, with special instruction upon this subject, and, before any further steps has resolved to await their arrival.

The undersigned has the honor, &c.

Wilson Shannon

National Palace, Mexico, April 2, 1845.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations, had the honor to communicate to his Excellency, Mr. Shannon, minister, &c., in reply to the note of his Excellency of the 31st March, that the government of Mexico cannot continue diplomatic relations with the United States upon the presumption that such relations are reconcilable with the law which the president of the United States has approved in regard to the annexation of the department of Texas, to the American Union; that this determination is founded upon the necessity which Mexico is under of maintaining no friendship with a republic which has violated her obligations usurped a portion of territory which belongs to Mexico by a right which she will maintain at whatever cost; that the relations between the two counties cannot be re-established before a complete reparation of that injury, (agravio) such as is demanded by good faith, justice to Mexico, and the honor of the United States, is made.

Moreover, the undersigned will take the liberty to say to his Excellency Mr. Shannon, that if the United States government thinks that it entertained friendly sentiments towards Mexico that he time of giving such offence, and when attacking the integrity of the republic of Mexico, this government (Mexico) is very far from entertaining the same views, or of acquiescing in the assurances which his excellency Mr. Shannon has given, whatever may be its sentiments towards his excellency personally.

The undersigned, in making this announcement to his Excellency Mr. Shannon, doing so by he order of he president of mexco - cutting short a new discussion which the interrupting of the relations of the two countries will not permit, and because nothing can be added to what this department has already said - has the honor to renew the assurances of his very distinguished consideration.

Luis G. Cuevas

Senor Cuevas has also addressed a general circular to the ministers plenipotentiary of England, France, and Spain, which is translated as follows:

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations, has the honor to transmit to his excellency the minister of --- the following circular, being impelled to employ this means of transmitting to his [your] government, in this note, the solemn and formal protest of the Mexican republic, suggested by an act which, wounding to the last degree the rights and honor of Mexico, is equally destructive to the universal principles of justice, to the respect due free and intelligent nations, and the good faith which civilization has fixed as the basis of international intercourse, (international politica.) His excellency Senor - will understand that the undersigned has reference to the law passed by the congress of the United States, and sanctioned by the executive, for the annexation of the department of Texas to the American Union.

To present, in all its deformity, this act of the congress and government of the United States, the alarming consequences of its conduct towards the Mexican republic, would be a useless labor, inasmuch as this note is addressed to the representative of a nation as illustrious as it is powerful, which sustaining nobly the rank which it occupies in the world, respects the laws of comity (buena amistad) between foreign nations, and founds its glory upon the immutable titles of morality and justice. The government of the undersigned has no occasion to exhibit all the grounds upon which it relies for its resistance to this measure of annexation, as they are obvious and known to all, and as the feeling excited among friendly nations, and even those which have no official relations with Mexico, will be profound upon learning of a measure so injurious and offensive to Mexico, and so utterly unworthy the honor (buen nombre) of the United States.

But the undersigned will take occasion to observe to his excellency Senor - that the American government having been the first to acknowledge the independence of the republic of Mexico, showing itself a zealous partisan of liberty, has been the only one which has endeavored to usurp a portion of her territory. He would also add that, as it appears from recent declarations, the designs of the United States have been as old as the friendship which it was sought to confirm, first, by a treaty of amity, and by another for the adjustment of boundaries, which has now been completely violated. In aiding Texas to sever herself from the republic, the United States were wanting in good faith; but in aiding to incorporate Texas with the American confederation, and declaring that this has been her policy for twenty years, she has pursued a course which has no paralleled in the history of civilized nations.

Mexico, to avoid differences which, for the most part had no foundation in justice, [as against her,] has submitted to serious compromises; she has over looked provocations and injuries, and has preserved her loyalty with such fidelity as to give her more right - if the right she possesses can be increased - to speak out and protest, as the undersigned now does, against the annexation of Texas to the United States, and against all its consequences. The Mexican republic will employ in opposition to this measure her whatever may be the result, she will preserve the honor which at any cost she ought to defend in the very grave matter under consideration. With this view the undersigned requests his excellency Senor --- to give this protest its proper direction, and at the same time to accept the assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

With this view the undersigned requests his Excellency Senor - to give this protest its proper direction, and at the same time to accept the assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

Luis G. Cuevas

Mr. Shannon, the American minister, was at Tacubaya. Letters have been received from him at Vera Cruz, stating that he would leave for the U. States in a few days.

Santa Anna's trial was slowly progressing. His health is represented as being very indifferent.

The British frigate Eurydices arrived at Vera Cruz on the morning of the 12th inst. from Galveston with dispatches, which were immediately forwarded to the capital.

The papers of the city of Mexico and of Vera Cruz continued to be occupied almost exclusively with the subject of annexation. The official paper, El Diario del Gobierno, of the 3d inst. announces that it is in possession of certain movements on the part of the government of a warlike character, which it is constrained to withhold from the public, as secrecy is the soul of military operations; but expresses a hope that the speedy and successful issue of these operations will soon relieve the public curiosity in regard to them.

The Mexican papers comment freely upon the correspondence and state of affairs with the U. States.

The Diario recommends peace and internal tranquility as the sole means of "recovering the territory usurped by the North Americans." The Monitor is astonished at the backwardness of the government, in not making an immediate declaration of war upon the United States. It adds that it has been informed that troops have already gone towards Texas, and advises the government to furnish them with resources for the campaign. The Minerva censures the ministry for explanations with respect to the departure of an English frigate from Galveston with overtures to the government of Texas. The Voz del Pueblo assails the ministry, accusing them of incapacity, and declaring that before undertaking a war upon Texas, they should employ proper measures for saving the Californias from the anarchy, which threatens to destroy and ruin that rich and vast portion of the republic.

The papers literally teem with articles upon Texas, showing that the public mind in that quarter is deeply excited upon the subject, and probably ripe for extreme measures. The Diario de Vera Cruz is one of the few moderate prints in the republic, and that journal observes that though sincerely and ardently desiring peace, it can scarcely see how it is to be preserved. [BAH]

---

NR 68.144  03May1845:  receipt of Mexican proposals to treat with Texas on the basis of independence

TEXAS-Latest. The steamer John S. McKim, a New Orleans, left Galveston the 21st ult. President Jones had issued his proclamation for congress to meet on the 16th of June. The proclamation announces that the government of the United States had selected the 1st and 2d sections of the resolutions, (Milton Brown's) as the basis for consummating the proposed union.

A meeting had been held in Washington, (Texas) at which resolutions were passed unanimously, in favor of immediate annexation, "without reference to the wishes or concurrence of any foreign or European power," calling on the president to convene congress immediately, and recommending to the citizens of the republic, in case he did not, to meet in convention and ratify the resolutions and form a state constitution. The next day the proclamation was issued. Some objection was urged by the attorney general, Mr. Allen at the meeting against the tone of the resolutions. Mr. Scurry, in reply, intimated that the citizens might become much more impatient, and adopt measures much more violent than those recommended.

The National Register, says: "The object of the president, (Jones) is, to take such steps as shall not only ascertain the will of the people, but if they shall so require place us in a position for admission into the for admission in the Union, at the next session of the American congress."

A meeting held at Brenham, on the 11th, adopted resolutions similar to those adopted at Washington.

It was believed that government had received communications from Gen. Arista, overland, conveying assurances that Mexico was disposed to treat with Texas, upon the basis of independence and that dispatches to the same effect had arrived from Vera Cruz, to which the Huston Star, of the 19th says, government had sent a reply by a British vessel.

It would appear that Mr. Smith, late secretary of state, has gone as charge de affairs of the Texian republic to England and France, and that EBENZER ALLEN, late attorney general, is to succeed him as secretary. [BAH]

---

NR 68.146  10May1845:  benefits to be derived by Mexico from the American annexation of Texas

Mexico. We recently made some remarks on the probable influence that annexation will exercise upon the trade between the United States and Texas. When we consider the condition of Mexico itself, the inefficiency of its government, the prohibitive and oppressive nature of the laws it attempts to enforce, the demoralized condition of the people and of public integrity, in connection with the wants of the people, we become struck with the important results which must necessarily grow out of the advance of the United States' citizens with ample supplies of goods to the Mexican frontier. The so-called handful of men who control about 7,000,000 of people. According to the best recent authorities, the inhabitants are classed as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Indians</th>
<th>Europeans</th>
<th>White Creoles</th>
<th>Mestizos and other classes</th>
<th>Total</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1793</td>
<td>2,319,741</td>
<td>7,994</td>
<td>677,458</td>
<td>1,478,426</td>
<td>4,483,529</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1842</td>
<td>4,500,000</td>
<td></td>
<td>1,000,000</td>
<td>1,515,500</td>
<td>7,015,500</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The last estimate was that made by the government. Now, of these 7,015,500 persons who occupy Mexico, it is known that 80,000 only of all the classes, except whites, can read and write; of the 1,000,000 whites one half are males, and of these the highest estimates make one-fifth who can read and write. - Here, then, out of a population of 7,000,000 there are only 1000,000 who are in any respect fitted to take part in the public affairs. This small class is directed by a few military men, and they call the whole a "republic." The exports from Mexico for 1841 were as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Specie,</td>
<td>$18,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other articles,</td>
<td>1,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>$20,000,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This indicates the extent to which smuggling is carried on under the absurdly oppressive laws "to protect her home industry. The duties collected on the imports were $5,287,097. or about 45 per cent. Average. The corruption of the government officers is proverbial, and, consequently, large quantities of goods are entered, even now, without paying duties, even when carried across the Prairies from the United States to Santa Fe. Some details of this trade for the last year will be found under the commercial head. The consumption of cotton goods is very extensive in Mexico, and the import of cotton twists is prohibited by the provident government, ostensibly to encourage "home manufactures," but really to raise money by selling permits for its introduction to English merchants. There are in Mexico fifty-three factories, having 131,280 spindles, which consume about 3,000,000 pounds of cotton per annum, while the growth of Mexico, is about five thousand hand looms in Mexico, which work up all the spun yarn into cotton cloth, the rice of which will average twenty-five cents, for an article wroth ten cents in the United States. The benefits which the Mexicans derive form paying the makers of this cloth the extra fifteen cents, are "untold." Now, the Mexican frontier adjoining the state of Texas is about three thousand miles in length, with no means, if the officers had the will, to prevent the smuggling of sufficient goods to supply all Mexico. This process has hitherto been dept in check only by barren waste of eight hundred miles to be traveled before reaching her cities from the United States, and its demoralizing influence is the legitimate result of the absurd notions of "protection," which in Mexico is more openly adopted than in the United States, as a direct means of extorting money from the people.

The "national debt" of this oppressed race is as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Internal debt</td>
<td>$18,550,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>English debt</td>
<td>60,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States claims</td>
<td>2,4000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other claims</td>
<td>3,2000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>$84,150,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The customs were solemnly pledged for the payment of the first time, but the highly respectable late dictator seized them for his own use. The whole revenue of Mexico for 1840 was $12,744,157, derived from most ruthless extortions. The natural effect of the misgovernment in Mexico will now have the same effect in Texas, as does that of Spain in the frontier towns of France, viz: the formation of extensive depots for goods to run into Mexico in all directions. This in France is a regular organized trade, having extensive insurance arrangements to cover goods almost to any point in the interior of Spain. Chihuahua alone consumes some $3,000,000 of goods, at prices ranging 100 percent about those in the United States, for "the protection" of the consumers, of course. With the advancement of the United States population, this premium and smuggling will daily become more tempting, and the result may probably work out a more civilized system of commercial policy, although our own laws present similar barbarisms. [BAH]

The joint committee of the Mexican congress, to which had been referred the subject of Texas, reported at length on the 7th ult., they recommend two projects as follows:

The First is preceded by a preamble, declaring that, whereas, the United States have resolved to annex the territory of Texas; and, whereas, such a mode of appropriating foreign territory to which other nations lay claim, is a monstrous innovation upon the peace of the world and the sovereignty of other powers; and, whereas, this act had long been in preparation, even while the United States were professing peace and friendship for Mexico, an insult to her dignity as a sovereign nation, and menaces her independence and political existence; therefore,

The congress of the Mexican republic solemnly declare, that the law of the United States for the annexation of Texas to the American Union, in no respect impairs the rights which Mexico possess, and will maintain, to that department.

Furthermore, that the United States having disregarded the principles upon which are based treaties of amity, commerce and navigation, and more especially of boundary, congress considers them violated by the United States.

And finally, that the unjust usurpation of which it is sought to make Mexico the victim, makes it her duty to take up arms in her defense, to oppose such usurpation and with the full and rightful determination to use all her resources and power to prevent the annexation decree by the United States.

The second project consists of four articles, as follows:

First --- The Mexican nation calls upon her sons to defend their national independence, threatened by the usurpation of the territory of Texas, which is sought to be consummated by a decree passed by the congress and sanctioned by the president of the United States.

Second --- Therefore the government will consider itself at liberty (prodra poner) to call forth its entire, permanent, and active military force, agreeably to the authority given to it by existing laws.

Third --- For the preservation of public order, and the maintenance of her institutions, and if necessary, as a reserve for the army, the government in virtue of the power granted to it on the 8th of December, 1844, may levy the troops to which said decree refers under the name of Defenders of Independence and the Laws.

Fourth --- With a view to the efficient maintenance of the rights of the republic, the government is authorized to procure all extraordinary resources, which may be deemed necessary, making known to congress the necessary steps to be taken, conformably to the constitution.

No action was had by the Mexican congress on these projects. The N. Orleans Bee remarks:

"The public journals are still excessively bellicose, and, from what we can perceive, there is a very strong indisposition on the part of the government to surrender Texas. Still, though Mexico may bluster, and even declare war, it will be mere child's play. --- She is utterly destitute of resources --- without a dollar in her treasury --- with a disaffected and discontented population ripe for another revolution --- and a disorderly soldiery ill paid, ill fed, and ill clad, who have already, we are credibly informed, at Monterey and elsewhere, exhibited strong symptoms of mutiny. We published, therefore, the above pugnacious manifesto, rather as a part of the history of the times, than because we apprehended anything very serious from its high sounding phraseology. The only way in which Mexico can annoy us is by crippling our commerce in the Gulf, and for this it behooves our government to be prepared." [BAH]
Earthquakes, at Mexico. A brief account of dreadful effects of an earthquake experienced on the April, at the city of Mexico, was given in our last report. Another occurred there at 10 A.M. on the 10th of April which lasted 40 seconds, prostrating many buildings which had escaped the previous visitation, and coming the ruin of many that were then injured. The freighted inhabitants fled to the open fields as the safest sort. The "Hesperia" of the 12th states that the earthquake of the 10th completed the destruction of the pola of Santa Teresa, and increased the damage to the churches of Santo Domingo and San Francisco. But for the shortness of its duration, the entire city has been laid in ruins. Mexico did not suffer all. The shock was felt in a number of towns and well within a radius of several hundred miles. At Puerto Rico the earthquake was experienced on the 7th, about 4 o'clock, P.M. but its effects were comparatively slighted. Several churches were injured, and many private were greatly damaged; though none were absolutely destroyed. At Acuarthio and Toluco the effects of shock were more considerable. At Guadalajara, Milia, and Vera Cruz, the earthquake was experienced on the 7th and 10th, but on neither occasion was damage very serious. [BAH]

The N.Y. Journal of Commerce of Tuesday, has the following intelligence from Mexico:

"We learn from Captain Baker, of the bark Falmouth which left Matanzas, May 9th, that the English mail steamer from Vera Cruz arrived at Havana 7th inst., with dispatches for Mr. Crawford, the British consul, advising him that the boundary line of Texas had been defined and settled, and her independence guarantied by a convention between England, France, and Mexico. Accounts by the same arrival state that Santa Anna has been reduced to the alternative of ten years' banishment, or a trial for maladministration.

The above intelligence must have left Vera Cruz on the 2d or 3d inst., which is ten days later than our previous advices.

This joint guarantee of Texas Independence, with a specification of boundaries, is a more definite form of the proposition sent to Texas from Mexico some weeks since, per British frigate Eurydice. The Texan government objections were obviated, and a liberal boundary specified, the proposition would be presented to the people for adoption or rejection, simultaneously with the annexation project. We presume the line has been placed pretty far West, in the hope of inducing the Texans to acquiesce; but it will be in vain, --- they are almost unanimous for annexation, and annexation will be the result." [BAH]

Senor Boves, on the 15th ult. Offered a protest, in the chambers, against the report of the minister of foreign affairs, in relation to Texas, and in his speech attacked Senor Cuevas, and his policy, and insisted that Texas was irretrievably lost. On the question being taken Boves stood "solitary and alone." A motion to expel him was spoken of. [BAH]

Commodore Conner with the four United States ships constituting his squadron, reached Vera Cruz at the same time that General Almonte landed there from New York. Though the appearance of the squadron is said to have created much excitement, yet the usual cavities and salutes were exchanged, and offers of services were tendered by the Mexican commanders. [BAH]

Santa Fe. The St. Louis Republican has news from Santa Fe to the 14th April, at which time everything was quiet, but a bad feeling existed between the governor and a number of the Mexicans, on account of coercive measure having been resorted to by the former in order to collect he forced loan, which many refused to pay. News of the passage of the Texas resolutions by the congress of the United States, reached Santa Fe on the 13th of April, but it created no excitement of popular feeling. The governor issued a proclamation, desiring such of the foreigners as were so disposed, to meet at a place designated, and receive their protection papers. Very little attention, however, was paid to the proclamation, as no apprehensions were entertained of any immediate difficulties.

The Indians were becoming bolder daily, and the Eutaws had commenced their war against them, having killed many Indians in the neighborhood of Taos. The Apache Indians were also very daring. Stealing mules and killing them daily. The traders who had gone to Chihuahua will reach Independence in about a month, the roads being good and the prairie beautiful. Mr. Speyer, who sustained such a loss by the Apache Indians, had got back from them about one-half of mules, and they had promised to deliver most of the others - he paying them a trilling sum per head. Goods were scarce in Chihuahua and the lower counties, and no doubt, as Mr. Speyer had just arrived here, he would reap a very handsome profit - he having all the goods that were for sale, by wholesale, in that place.

The Mexican traders had given up all idea of becoming to the states this spring, and it is very doubtful if they will venture in the fall. [BAH]

NR 68.193  31May1845:  Mexican maneuvering, under European tutelage, to prevent annexation of Texas by the US

Foreign Relations. Our government have received dispatches from Commodore Conner, off Vera Cruz, as late as the 10th, by brig. Somers, dispatched to Pensacola. After a warm debate which lasted three days, the resolution sent by the secretary of foreign affairs, authorizing a treaty, acknowledging the independence of Texas, passed the chambers of deputies at Mexico on the 3d inst. by the vote of 41 to 13. The senate was to take the question up on the 8th inst. It was supposed they would pass it by a numerous vote. Mr. Elliot, the British charge, and a confidential commissioner from Texas, stantly with the proposition to Galveston, in the British frigate which they come from there in.

The posture of affairs between the United States and Mexico, has become serious. The fact is ascertained that the administration of Texas had made overtures to Mexico, under the countenance of European diplomats, with the view of obtaining an acknowledgement of their independence and a peace with Mexico. Whether this movement was designed as a means of using its influence to ensure the passage of annexation measures by the United States congress; whether with a view of obtaining better terms of the United States, than the resolutions adopted by congress offered them; whether with a view of making the most of their market, and inducing Europe, the United States, and Mexico, to bid for the "Lone Star;" or whether the movement was induced by a determination to hold on to a separate national existence, and to the powers and perquisites of office, which few persons are found willing to resign; whichever of these motives may have influenced the movement, it is one of somewhat serious import. It appears to us to imply, that the European backers of Mexico will be called upon to take up the broad question, whether the United States shall be arrested in their territorial projects, provided their interference can prevent it?

That England has many and powerful inducements to avoid a war with the United States, is obvious. --- That she would go to war about a remote section of the sterile northwest, may be questioned, notwithstanding the parliamentary array lately exhibited upon the subject. But apprehensions may be entertained by her in relation to nearer and more interesting territory and trade, which she may consider compromised by what she doubtless regards as a spirit of grasping and aggrandizement on our part, and may make the question of peace or war, one of much broader aspect than otherwise it would be. --- When such a state of affairs exists, a small matter may give the die a fatal cast. Mexico in all probability will have the sympathies of the European governments on her side. European governments may adventure a step too far in attempting to sustain Mexico in resisting annexation, and there by make a general war inevitable.

The people of Texas are nearly unanimous for instant annexation with the Union at all hazards. So overwhelming is public opinion there upon the subject, that the Texan executive has had to yield to it, and now any negotiation for independence is too late.

The United States stands comp omitted to Texas, and annexation, to all appearance, is inevitable.

That Mexico will declare war, so soon as this country takes possession of Texas, is certainly to be appearance of things.

We shall await the result of the hasty mission of Mr. Smith, the Texan minister to England, with some anxiety, and should have preferred that de had tarried long enough to carry with him the decided expression in relation to annexation which the people of Texas have uttered since he left home. [BAH]

NR 68.195  31May1845:  the Stockton squadron arrives at Vera Cruz

The Stockton Squadron. The United States squadron, consisting of the steamer Princeton and other vessels, under the command of Commodore Stockton, had arrived at Vera Cruz a few days before the sailing of the Eugenia. The usual friendly salutes were exchanged between the squadron and the Mexican fortifications.  [BAH]
The schooner Titi reached New Orleans on the 19th from Havanna, which place she left on the 6th with Mexican papers to the 26th, and Vera Cruz papers to the 30th April.

The fact that the Mexican and Texan governments are in consultation with a view to an adjustment of the difficulties existing between them, and that the administration of the former now disposed to acknowledge the independence of the latter upon condition that Texas shall refuse the proposition of the United States congress to annex the Republic to the Union, is officially announced in the following-

IMPORTANT COMMUNICATION

Sent to the Chamber of Deputies on the 21st April, by the Mexican minister of foreign affairs-

Gentlemen- The affairs of Texas being of such deep importance as to claim the first consideration of the congress and executive, the government cannot, without assuming a special responsibility, defer the resolution that must be taken to bring them to an issue compatible with the honor and interest of the Republic. The government having assembled a considerable body of troops upon that frontier, and employed all its resources to accomplish the proposed end, and having considered of those asked of the legislative bodies, sees no other course to pursue than to carry our the plan proposed to sustain the Republic in all the dignity due to its honor and good name.

Circumstances have transpired which render it both necessary and roper to enter upon negotiations that will prevent the annexation of Texas to the United States; such an event would inevitably deal to a war with the American Republic—for Mexico would not agree to annexation—however deplorable such a conflict might be. Texas had taken the initiative in proposing a settlement, and his excellency, the president ad interim, well understanding its importance and the necessity of taking a resolution in relation to it, is also persuaded that the executive cannot proceed in the matter without being first authorized to do so by the chambers; that in the case before him he should not exercise that powers conferred by the constitution for conduction negotiations with foreign powers.

The Government—always faithful to its duty, and desirous of submitting its acts to free discussion, and considering that national questions should be disposed of with patriotic spirit, and a conscientiousness superior to assaults and above prejudices of every character—cannot decline the proffered negotiation without, in his opinion, violating his duty by deciding so delicate a question before submitting it to congress. If he could make and arrangement, honorable in itself and such as would satisfy the national honor, he would submit it with great pleasure to congress; and f such could not be achieved, The same government which is so desirous of a peace conformable to the dignity of Republic, would be the first to decide in favor of war, which would be more just after all efforts to avert it had failed.

The preliminary propositions of Texas are to a character honorable and fair towards the Republic, and the government, with out deciding upon them, had not double about accepting them as the initiative to the arrangement sought by Texas. Not to have accepted it, would have been to establish the annexation of Texas to the Unites States, and congress will perceive that a step so ill-advised would have been a terrible charge to the present administration. To refuse to hear proposals of peace that may lead to a satisfactory result would have been and extreme measure the least profitable to the Republic, however it might at first flatter a justly irritated patriotism; but this ins not what the nation expects from its supreme government, which is obligated to foresee and with the evils of a long costly war, and to avoid them as long as its honor can be maintained, as in the present case.

If the government had acted solely upon its impulses as soon as the law of annexation passed the congress of the United States, the chambers well know what its conduct would have been, and what its firmness in resisting all other propositions than war, which the patriotism of all Mexicans would have sustained with glory. His excellency the president ad interim as well as his ministers, make a great sacrifice in asking the authorization of the end of this message; but it is make upon mature deliberation, and from an ardent desire for the prosperity of the Republic, and with the conviction that if war should ensue after making every effort to preserve peace, it will end in the glory of the national arms, and in accordance with the public justice as regards those who provoke it.

Therefore his excellency, the president ad interim, in ministerial council, and with the unanimous advice of his cabinet, has directed me to present for your deliberation the following resolution—

"The government is authorized to receive the propositions made by Texas, and to proceed to the formation of a treaty that if it deems honorable to the Republic; to be laid before congress for its examination and approbation."

With the highest consideration, &c.

Luis G. Cuevas.

GOD AND LIBERTY
Mexico, April 21st, 1845.

The above document establishes the fact, that president Jones and the Texian administration had made overtures to Mexico, with the view to the admission by the latter, of Texian independence.

It seems to be understood, that in case of the failure of the proposed recognition with Texas, from any cause, Mexico will, even by war, resist annexation. The administration have asked congress to authorize a loan of three million of dollars, to provide for such a contingency. Authority is likewise asked for the settlement of the foreign debt.

Two projects are before congress, growing out of the executive message signed by Cuevas.

The first, considers that it has violated the treaties between the two countries especially that in relation to boundaries; and the Mexico ought to arm herself and repel the threatened invasion by force.

The other project calls all Mexicans to arms, and authorizes the government to arm the permanent and active militia, an gives the administrative powers to the necessary means from all sources.

The Mexican journals are said to be very hostile to any negotiation to based upon the re-union of Texas with Mexico. A formidable military force is concentrating on the borders of Texas.

Gen. Almonte had arrived in the city of Mexico.

The papers till speak of the disastrous effects of the earthquakes of the 7th and 10th April. A letter from Guanajuato states that the village called "Valle de Rio Blanco" has almost ceased to exist, as considerable part of its small population was engulfed during the earthquake, in a yawning abyss 38 yards long and 13 wide. More than sixty persons were swallowed up.

Various projects have been submitted to congress or a general amnesty of the military chiefs, against whom prosecution has been commenced, and some have proposed that the amnesty should be extended to all the political criminals, with the restriction that Santa Anna and Canalizo, and the four ministers who signed the decree of the 29th November, should quite the country for ten years, or submit to the continuation of their trial. The latter proposition, slightly modified, was adopted by the chamber of deputies on the 16th. Santa Anna, Canalizo, and the four ministers are allowed eight-day s to determine whether they will choose and expatriation of ten years, or the continuation of their trials. Breaches of trust in pecuniary matters from an exception to this general pardon, and Santa Anna's abdication of the presidency is accepted. [BAH]

NR 68.208  31May1845: insurrection in California against Gen. Manuel Micheltoreno

California. A letter from Mazatlan, published in a late Vera Cruz paper, says --- "The insurrection in California against General Michel Toreno has succeeded --- the holy cause of liberty is triumphant, we are independent." [BAH]

June 1845

NR 68.210-68.212  7June, 1845: history of negotiations for acquisition of California

The London Times, in reference to the design of the United States, to make themselves masters of the Californians, states hat in "1835, Mr. Forsyth offered to the Mexican government five millions of dollars for the port of San Francisco - one of the finest naval positions n the world." The Times is probably mistaken as to the date, and the extont of the proposition.

The credit of this proposition is due to John Quincy Adams. Mr. Adams make an offer to the Mexican government, during his administration, through Mr. Poinsett, of, perhaps, five millions of dollars for Texas. Subsequently, Mr. Adams repeated the offer for the purchases of Texas, and of that part of California lying north of latitude 37, so as to give us the Bay of San Francisco. This offer was again repeated and urged, through Mr. Anthony Butler. - The Mexican government always refused to consider it, and it never came to be a matter of negotiation.

At that time, Mexico was reveling in an unlimited credit with English capitalists and bankers, and for the sake of a few millions, would not entertain a project for dismembering her empire. The Times is quite right in the statement that the "United States have already make several attempts to obtain possession of the great harbors on the coast of California." The attempt has not been confined to the party, nor one administration. It is the natural and necessary policy of the United States. If the only check to its accomplishment is to be sound as the Times
The hold hat Mexico has on the Californians is merely nominal. Since the governor of Monterey abandoned his post and "sloped," there has been no regular government there. They have no communications with Mexico, and are in fact, independent of her. There will soon be more Yankees than Mexicans there, and they will, most likely, establish a government of their own, entirely independent of Mexico. What great harm is to befall the world from the settlement of this fine country by enterprising, intelligent and free citizens of the United States, who will rapidly develop its resources in commerce and agriculture, does not appear. It may prevent Great Britain from possessing it, and hence, perhaps, the apprehensions of the "Times."

A company of British subjects, who had claims on the Mexican government, were at one time, very nearly successful in obtaining a cession of the island in the bay of San Francisco. Had the enterprise succeeded, it would have afforded a pretext of a claim on the part of Great Britain to the territory, and the settlement of it by British subjects would have afforded the means necessary to enable her to maintain her possession. Mr. Pakenham was minister in Mexico at the time when this negotiation was pending, and he aided in it, but did not bring the authority of his government to bear upon it, for the reason that the claims thus proposed to be provided for, were for advances made to Mexico before her government was established, and in the face of the proclamation of the British government, warning its subjects not to look to it for protection in cases where they made contracts with insurgent colonies. The enterprise, therefore, failed. [BAH]
The credit of this proposition is due to John Quincy Adams. Mr. Adams made an offer to the Mexican government, during his administration, through Mr. Poinsett, of, perhaps, five millions of dollars for Texans.
Subsequently, Mr. Adams repeated the offer for the purchase of Texas, and of that part of California lying north of latitude 37, so as to give us the Bay of San Francisco. This offer was again repeated and urged, through Mr.
Anthony Butler. The Mexican government always refused to consider it, and it never came to be a matter of negotiation.

At that time, Mexico was reveling in an unlimited credit with English capitalists and bankers, and for the sake of a few millions, would not entertain a project for dismembering her empire. The Times is quite right in the statement that the "United States have already make several attempts to obtain possession of the great harbors on the coast of California." The attempt has not been confined to one party, nor one administration. It is the natural and necessary policy of the United States. If the only check to its accomplishment is to be found the Times suggests, in the establishment of another energetic and independent power to share the dominion of North America with us, then it is perfectly safe to predict that it will be accomplished.

The hold that Mexico has on the Californians is merely nominal. Since the governor of Monterey abandoned his post and "sloped," there has been no regular government there. They have no communication with Mexico, and are, in fact, independent of her. There will soon be more Yankees than Mexicans there, and they will, most likely, establish a government of their own, entirely independent of Mexico. What great harm is to befall the world from the settlement of this fine country by enterprising, intelligent and free citizens of the United States, who will rapidly develop its resources in commerce and agriculture, does, not appear. It may prevent Great Britain from possessing it, and hence, perhaps, the apprehensions of the "Times."

A company of British subjects, who had claims on the Mexican government, were, at one time, very nearly successful in obtaining a cession of the island in the bay of San Francisco. Had the enterprise succeeded, it would have afforded a pretext of a claim on the part of Great Britain to the territory, and the settlement of it by British subjects would have afforded the means necessary to enable her to maintain her possession. Mr. Pakenham was minister in Mexico at the times when this negotiation was pending, and he aided in it, but did not bring the authority of this government to bear upon it, for the reason that the claims thus proposed to be provided for, were for advances made to Mexico before her government was established, and in the face of the proclamation f the British government, warning its subjects not to look to it for protection in cases where they made contacts with insurgent colonies. The enterprise, therefore, failed.  [BAH]

Of Mr. Shannon we hear this much:

"Mr. Shannon, late American vessel, and would sail about the 15th instant, for New York. It does not appear that he possessed any knowledge of the political affairs of the capital of Mexico, and he is not considered in any other light than an obscure American citizen, whose name is never alluded to as one at all connected with the important transactions of the day."

NR 68.212  07Jun1845:  Wilson Shannon leaves Mexico

It is thought by a great many that the present government cannot sustain itself much longer, and the idea of its declaring war against the United States has been abandoned by all sensible men. Congress, to be sure, has passed a bill to raise $3,000,000 to prepare for a war about to take place; but we are informed that the opinion is pretty general that the money cannot be obtained, and that it was not designed for that purpose, as they would not venture, under existing circumstances to collect together any considerable number of troops.  [BAH]

NR 68.212  07Jun1845:  salutary influence of the US squadron at Veracruz

In regard to the American squadron at Vera Cruz, we have the following information.

"The arrival of our squadron at Vera Cruz created a great excitement, and also in the city of Mexico, where it was represented to consist of twenty-one wail of men-of-war? The unexpected presence of this squadron had, no doubt, a salutary influence, and possibly might have caused the mission, so privately determined upon, the United States."  [BAH]

NR 68.212  07Jun1845:  Mexican Army,  number of officers and men
The present army of Mexico is said to consist of 21,000 officers, and less than 20,000 men! [BAH]

NR 68.226  14Jun1845: letter about the capabilities of Mexican forces on the Texas frontier

Foreign Relations- Annexation. The position of affairs at the present moment may be regarded as exceedingly interesting. A very few weeks will probably determine definitely whether this country is to be involved in a foreign war, in consequence of the proposed extension of the limits of our confederation so as to include Texas as a part and parcel of the republic, or not. The Texian congress agreeably to the proclamation issued by President Jones, will assemble on Monday, next, the 16th instant to consider the question of annexation or independence.- And the 4th of July, less than three weeks thereafter, assembles a convention which we presume is intended to represent the essential sovereignty of the people, as above all existing law or constitution, and with powers to dispense with all authority, and to direct the operations, or to terminate the existence of the existing government of Texas, as they may think proper.

Of the disposition with which both those bodies will assemble, we presume there is no longer a reasonable doubt. Of the determination of the people upon the question of annexation whenever it might be fairly proposed to them, upon equitable and honorable terms, we have never had a doubt; and that they would in any event, be disposed to from alliances with European powers, adverse to the tree American interests or feelings, we have never for one moment indulged an apprehension. The Texian people and the Texian interests in all their leading characteristics are too obviously similar to, if not identified with our own, to allow us to imagine that their people would in any form, come subservient to so suicidal a policy as that of adopting a European, Anti-American dependence, or seeking for British protection or British alliance, as against the interests or policy of the United States.

Free from every such apprehension, we have deplored that feverish impetuosity which we fear had buried on a result, that might have been, and we believe would have been attained, by a more deliberate course, with far less risk to the country, and without compromising either its peace or its character or its constitution.

We speak of precipitance in this respect, because it must be obvious to all that besides its hurrying on the Texians to a course which violates all existing authorities of that government, without leaving them time to teach the same result by a legal and legitimate course, it has, as it respects our country, induced a selection by the executive, of an alternative which, if more time and deliberation were supposed to be allowable, would not it is believed have been the one selected by that authority as their choice of the two alternatives which the act of congress left to their selection without a full persuasion that the other alternative would have been selected, it is probable that the measure would not and could not have obtained, at the last session, a majority of votes in the United States senate. The alternative alluded to, we believe would have been greatly preferable to that adopted by the executive; would have been as certain of ultimately accomplishing annexation, and of accomplishing it upon a basis for a better for the Union, for Texas, and for the harmony of the world. When the information that President Tyler had negotiated a treaty with Texas for annexations, first reached us, we indulged an expression of opinion upon the subject, which elaborate discussion and subsequent events have but tended to confirm. The question of annexing Texas was a great national question, involving so many considerations, the new one of amalgamating a foreign state into the confederacy, one of them, that cool deliberation, and the utmost precaution seemed to us to be required in the premises, not only as to the ultimate shall we or not, but as to the wisest and best make by which we shall, if so decided. Instead of that cool deliberation, it has been throughout a series of measures hurried on by feverish impetuosity, avowedly alarmed for fear delay to look and think and choose alarmed for fear delay to look and think and choose wisely would render all hopeless. "Now or never" - was the incessant cry. European intrigue, was the great bugbear that was to hurry both Texas and the United States into, perhaps, nay probably, an ill adjusted union, which one or both for centuries to come may have cause to regret that they had not taken more time to adjust, as it might have been and ought to have been adjusted - carefully and wisely. To adduce proof of this is not necessary. The whole subject is so full and pregnant with what is now to be left to the future, that we much fear the present will be - much ensured for a want of due precaution.

So much as to the parties to annexation.

But the foreign aspect, whether we shall or shall not have a foreign war, in consequence of assuming this new dominion and of taking possession of this additional territory, a few weeks will now determine. All eyes are earnestly directed towards the movements of Mexico. The British, the French, (and the Texian) agents near that government, are all represented as "endeavoring to move heaven and earth" to prevent annexation, and induce Texas to maintain her INDEPENDENCE. We regard the operations of the English and French agents in that direction as a matter of course. The interests of their government would be most promoted by Texas keeping our of our Union, and perhaps they have just as much right to urge the interests and views of their governments in the premises, as our agents have to urge the claims of our government. - Which will be successful, is no longer a matter of doubt.

But how comes the question; - annexation will be consummated, unless a war con prevent - will England and France, or England alone, urge Mexico to a war?

Our notion is, that she will not, unless the English ministry upon a review of the whole that will be staked upon the issue, shall decide that it is to the interest of Great Britain to incur a war with the United States rather than allow her thus to commence enlarging the "area of freedom" by a process which may lead on to the loss of her own
Is it not probable that this very question is now being deliberated upon in the cabinet of St. James, and that it forms a topic for negotiation between that and the French Court? We have evidently arrived at the crisis. Those powers must now immediately decide to allow the United States to steer her own course in relation to annexation, or they must promptly interpose.

The course which Mexico herself, will decide to take upon ascertaining hat Texas is annexed to the United States in spite of all her remonstrance and her maneuvers to prevent it, will also soon be decided. That her government would willingly avert and would procrastinate to the very last hour, if she could not avert, a war with the United States, we have no doubt. But it seems to us hat the crisis is at band with her authorities also. She must now soon abandon the grounds she has to this time maintained throughout, or carry out her repeated threats of declaring war in case the United States assumes jurisdiction over Texas. There is no alternative,

It would undoubtedly have been better the United States to have had a minister at the city of Mexico during these eventful times, sufficiently a diplomatist to have represented and maintained our interests better than they have been represented by the minister who is now leaving here without having acquitted himself to the satisfaction of his country meant, or to the credit of the country he went there to serve. Even at this last extremity, when diplomatic intercourse is closing between them and us, how useful might an able statesman and a good man be, to represent the interests of the United States at the city of Mexico? Mexico had taken one decided step since her minister closed his official duties and left this country. She has admitted the independence of Texas, upon a single condition. She has done so under the united influence of representations from the English, French, and Texan authorities. The latter, beyond doubt, have already deserted the position, which they assumed in this negotiation, - and now abandon independence and go for annexation. The British and the French agents are thereby completely non plussed, unless their respective governments decide to aid Mexico in a war not a war for the independence of Texas, - that Mexico herself would be far from waging, unless she could depend upon Texas as an ally in the contest. - but a war for Mexican dominion over Texas. This would come awkwardly from England and France, both having acknowledged the independence of Texas.

We repeat, unless those European powers determine that it is time to attempt to strangle the young republican Hercules in his cradle, even at the expense of a war, their agents will hardly be authorized to urge Mexico into an actual contest with the United States. To the very verge, they would push the interests of their own governments to prevent Texans from being incorporated into the union, - but the repose of the world hangs upon stepping beyond the Rubicon

The question remains however, whether, though England and France may not urge Mexico on, - in fact, though they now exert their utmost to restrain a popular impulse which they have no doubt aided in fomenting in Mexico against the measure of annexation, whether they may not find that they are too late, and that an impulse once fired to such a pitch, is not to be restrained in such a government as that of Mexico. They may have made war inevitable.

War once began, all the features of the present questions at issue, would change attitude in an instant. The superiority of the one party and the helpless condition of the other would be obvious to all Europe. They sympathies of the world would be with Mexico; and that to an extent, which it is doubtful if any ministry in England could withstand. Mixing up as the question inevitably would, with the Oregon dispute, the ultimate possession of California, with border squabbles, and contentions of various kinds, Mexico and the United States would have the contest to themselves but for a very brief period.

The new position assumed by Mexico, since her minister left this country, above alluded to, admitting the independence of Texas upon a certain condition, and the attitude which she will find herself occupying should the European powers decide to endeavor to restrain her from declaring war, would make the presence of an able American minister at the city of Mexico, of great importance to the interests of both countries, and perhaps to the peace of the world. A negotiation for the Californians, already stated to be passing from under the dominion of Mexico in the same manner Texas has passed, and settlement of the boundaries of both, might perhaps he effected at a price which would be a fair consideration to Mexico, and which the United States would not hesitate to make liberal rather than Mexico should longer complain of our treatment towards her.

Contrasting the relative forces of the powers arrayed in dispute, there can be no questions whether the United States could with self-repect, name and extraordinary minister to Mexico in the present posture of affairs. The new position, which Mexico has herself assumed, fully authorizes, nay, seems to us to call upon our government for such a measure.

The first of the steamers that arrived last week from Liverpool, brought accounts that a feverish excitement prevailed their respecting the dispute with the United States, and that intelligence as it reached Liverpool from this country, was hurried on at the top of steam speed by express, to the impatient authorities at London. The next steamer that arrived, which left Liverpool only three days after the first, brought a paragraph stating that the war fever had entirely subsided. Nothing had transpired in the meantime to effect a change. The difference in the statements we presume resulted from the different views entertained, or the different objects to be accomplished by the writers of the accounts alluded to.

Quite as contradictory are the late accounts, which we have from Mexico.
Private letters received from Mexico by the editors of the New Orleans Republican state it as a matter almost of certainty that before long the Mexican government will declare war against the United States. The tone of public sentiment in Mexico is said to be so hostile to this country and Texas that a new revolution in the government or a war with the United States seems inevitable. One of the letters referred to, written at Vera Cruz on the 22nd May, says:

"Captain Elliott and commissioner of Texas are at this place, waiting for the arrival of letters from Mexico, which, it is said, will arrive to-day. They will sail, direct for Galveston in the French bring 'La Perouse.' The 'Eurdice' will sail for your port with dispatches for the British government. In addition to the propositions make by England to both Texas and Mexico, to settle the relations of these countries to each other and o the United States in a manner agreeable to her policy, I am assured there are inducements offered of rather a tempting nature. They are as follows: England compromises herself with Mexico to pay ten millions of her national debt, and with Texas she agrees to pay the whole of hers, which is computed a t eight millions. This, if true - proves that England has some very deep laid project with regard to Texas: one much more important to her than the advantages she might derive from the simple determination of Texas to remain independent, confirmed by the consent of Mexico."

NR 68.226  14Jun1845:  contradictory accounts from Mexico about the government's attitude toward the American annexation of Texas

On the other hand a late letter from the city of Mexico, received by the same arrival, takes quite a pacific view of circumstances, thus:

Mexico, May 20, 1845.

"This government having been empowered by congress to enter into a treaty with the Texian commissioners, all fear of a rupture between this country and the United States on that score, is now at an end."

Our readers are quite as able to judge between those contradictory statements as we are. An American who professes to know something of the Mexicans and a southern campaign, in a letter addressed through the National Intelligencer, gives the following admonition:

From the National Intelligencer. Washington, May 24, 1845.

Messrs. Editors: As it seems to be a settled point that Texas is to be a component part of our republic, it is suggested, I observe, in one of the N. Orleans papers, that regular troops should be stationed by the United States on the Rio Grande. If that be a settled point, I coincide with him; but I must disagree with him when he says that those troops will require no commissary department. On the contrary, they will require a large and well-organized one. The provisions for this army nave all to be conveyed from New Orleans; for nowhere else can they be procured. The Mexican troops now stationed at Metamoras are, and have always been supplied from New Orleans - the only article to be procured in the neighborhood being fresh meat, stock in some abundance being procurable, but not in sufficiency for the daily supply of an army of six or ten thousand men. I have lived some years in that country, and pretend to know something of its products. I passed through Metamoras in March where there were two regiments supplied entirely from New Orleans all those articles, how much more necessary will it not be for us to supply an army in the same manner?

I think that we have calculated too lightly on the resistance, which Mexico will offer, to our occupation of Texas. Mexico has a very considerable army on the frontier, and the officer in command (Gen'l Arista) is active and brave, and can cross the intervening desert with his light cavalry and commit immense damage, and retire again, without our presenting any obstacle to his advance or his retreat. We have been induced to believe the Mexicans cowardly, &c. I am afraid that we have trusted too much to this belief. Arista had with him in Monterey in March last two thousand three hundred cavalry and a battalion of six hundred runaway Negroes from Texas, well drilled in flying artillery tactics, ready for marching.

The Mexican troops are much better calculated for campaigns I those dry hot plains than any troops we can raise. The Anglo Saxon race will do well enough so long as they have plenty of provisions and water, but no longer. I think Gen. Jackson's campaign and the Seminole war will prove this. The Mexicans will rush in upon us on their light hardy horses, and when we get ready to strike them we shall find that they are beyond our reach. Our heavy well-fed horses will starve to death on those dry plains with our corn or oats, and nothing to east but dry grass.

I should not be surprised if Mexico should now have an army of fifteen thousand cavalry and flying artillery on the river between Emargo and Monclova, as we know well that all the troops who took part with Santa Anna have been sent north by the new government while new troops (or Civicos) have taken their places in Jalapa, Orizaba, Guadalaxara, &c.

I do hope that our government will turn its attention seriously to this subject, and in time; for it would be grievous to be worsted at the commencement by so weak a government as that of Mexico. Arista is enterprising and
The Mexican indemnity. The mystery of the Mexican indemnity is thus noticed in the New York Courier des Etats Unis of the 7th instant. The facts are said to be derived from persons recently arrived from Mexico, and one intimate with Santa Anna, even to a knowledge of his tampering in stocks. - The courier, however, declines to assume any responsibility, as to the person named.

"It is known that a sum of $275,000 is in question, making the quarterly payments of April and July, 1844. This sum has never reached the government at Washington, although the Mexican government insists that it is paid, and exhibits the receipts of the representatives of the United States. Here is the explanation, as furnished to us of this enigma. Mr. Shannon, the United States minister, Mr. Voss, the agent of the United States, to receive the money, are said to have been interested in more than one speculation. The partnership was indeed official between Mr. Voss and M. Trigueros, who belonged to the same commercial firm. M. Trigueros not having as minister, money enough - ready money to pay the amounts as they fell due, induced Mr. Shannon and Mr. Voss to accept drafts on the treasury in favor of and endorsed by an English house in Mexico, for $325,00, being $50,000 more than the amount due. In return it was agreed that M. Trigueros should accept from Mr. Shannon Mexican treasury notes in payment of the excess of the sum of $50,000, and as these were to be brought at any where at from 8 to 10 per cent. - so greatly were they depreciated; this little operation would have a profit of some forty odd thousand dollars to the American agents. In return they were to give a full and entire acquaintance to the Mexican government in terms for the payment of the two installments. Whereas they had only been liquidated. Such is said to be the secret history of this little diplomatic jobbing.

The question now is, were the drafts paid at maturity either by the Mexican treasurer or the English endorser? This is precisely what is not known, and concerning which the official accounts at Washington are silent. However that may be, the Mexican government considers itself discharged from all ulterior responsibility by reason of the very explicit tenor of the American receipt. On the other hand the American claimants insist upon being paid by their own government.

Such is the position of the matter, and it is certainly not a little remarkable and not at all creditable that there should be any room for such a solution of the delay as is here given we must soon know the truth now.

On the other hand, Mr. B. Green, late charge to Mexico, has published a letter in the Washington Union, in which he alleges that the Mexican installments of April and July of 1844 have not been paid. He says that the United States agent, (Mr. Voss), obtained from the minister of the Mexican Treasury drafts upon the departmental treasuries of Guadalajara, Guanaxuato, and Zacatecas. He took these drafts to the house of Tayleur, Jamison & Co. one of the best English commercial houses in Mexico, and requested them to be sent on for collection. They were sent on; and they reply was, that the drafts were good, and would be paid as soon as any revenue could be collected for that purpose. In consequence of the revolution, and the distracted state of things in Mexico since, they have not yet been paid. At the time the drafts were taken Mr. Voss was certain they would be paid, and so assured Mr. Shannon, our minister, who wrote to the secretary of the treasury that the installments had been paid.

FOREIGN RELATIONS. Annexation. The position of affairs at the present moment may be regarded as exceedingly interesting. A very few weeks will probably determine definitely whether this country is to be involved in a foreign war, in consequence of the propelled extensions of the limits of our confederation as to include Texas as a part and parcel of the republic, or not. The Texan congress agreeably to the proclamation issued by President Jones, will assemble on Monday next, the 16th instant to consider the question of annexation or independence.-and the 4th of July, less than three weeks thereafter, assembles a convention which we pursue is intended to represent the essential sovereignty of the people, as above all existing law or constitution, and with powers to dispense with all authority, and to direct the operations, or to terminate the existence of the existing government of Texas, as they may think proper.

Of the disposition with which both those bodies will assemble, we presume there is no longer a reasonable doubt. Of the determination of the people upon the question of annexation whenever it might be fairly proposed to them, upon equitable and honorable terms, we have never had a doubt; and that they would in any event, be deposed to form alliances with European powers, adverse to the true American interests or feelings, we have never for one moment indulged an apprehension. The Texian people and the Texian interests in all their leading characteristics are too obviously similar to, if not identified with our own, to allow us to imagine that their people would in any form, become subservient to so suicidal a policy as that of adopting a European, Anti-American dependence, or seeking for British protection or British alliance, as against the interests or policy of the United States.
Free from every such apprehension, we have deplored that feverish impetuosity which we fear has hurried a result, that might have been, and we believe would have been attained, by a more deliberate course, with far less risk to the country, and with our compromising either its peace of its character or its constitution.

We speak of precipitance in this respect, because it must be obvious to all that besides its hurry on the Texans to a course which violates all existing authorities of that government, without leaving them time to reach the same result by a legal and legitimate course, it has as it respects our country, included a selection by the executive, of an alternative which, if more time and deliberation were supposed to be allowable, would not it believed have been the one selected by that authority as their choice of the two alternatives which the act of congress left to their selection. Without a full persuasion that the other alternative would have been selected, it is probable that the measure would not and could not have obtained, at the last session, a majority of votes in the United States senate. The alternative alluded to, we believe would have been greatly preferable to that adopted by the executive; would have been as certain of ultimately accomplishing annexation, and of accomplishing it upon a basis far better for the Union, for Texas, and for the Harmony of the World. When the information that President Tyler had negotiated a treaty with Texas for annexation, first reached us, we indulged an expression of opinion upon the subject, which elaborate discussion and subsequent events have but tended to confirm. The question, involving so many considerations, the new one of amalgamating a foreign state into the confederacy, on of them, that call deliberation, and the utmost precaution seemed to us to be required in the premised, not only as to the ultimate shall we or not, but as to the wisest and best mode by which we shall, if so decided. Instead of that cool deliberation, it has been throughout a series of measures hurried on by feverish impetuosity, avowedly alarmed for fear delay to look and thing and choose wisely would render all hopeless. "Now or never" - was the incessant cry. European intrigue, was the great bugbear that was to hurry both Texas and the United States is not, perhaps, nay probably, an illy adjusted union, which one or both for centuries to come may have cause to regret that they had not taken more time to adjust, as it might have been and ought to have been adjusted - carefully and wisely. To adduce proof of this is not necessary. The whole subject is so full and pregnant with what is now to be left to the future, that we much fear the present will be much censured for a want of due precaution.

So much as to the parties to annexation.

But the foreign aspect, whether we shall or shall not have a foreign war, in consequence of assuming this new dominion and of taking possession of this additional territory, a few weeks will now determine. All eyes are earnestly directed toward the movements of Mexico. The British, the French, (and the Texan) agents near that government, are all represented as "endeavoring to move heaven and earth" to prevent annexation, and induce Texas to maintain her Independence. We regard the operations of the English and French agents in that direction as a matter of course. The interests of their government would be most promoted by Texas keeping out of our Union, and perhaps they have just as much fight to urge the interests and views of their governments in the premises, as out agents have urge the claims of our government. - Which will be successful, is no longer a matter of doubt.

But now comes the question; -- annexation will be consummated, unless a war can prevent it - will England and France or England alone, urge Mexico to a war?

Our notion is, that she will not, unless the English ministry upon a review of the whole that will be staked upon the issue, shall decide that is to the interest of Great Britain to incur a war with the United States rather than allow her thus to commence enlarging the "area of freedom" by a process which may lead on to the loss of her own colonies on this continent, and to the loss of her own colonies on this continent, and to the building up of a rival for the trade of the world, which has already become so formidable to her schemes of monopoly.

Is it not probable that this very question is now being deliberated upon in the cabinet of St. James, and that it forms a topic for negotiation between that and the French Court? We have evidently arrived at the crisis. These powers must now immediately decide to allow the United States to steer her own course in relation to annexation, or they must promptly interpose.

The course which Mexico herself, will decide to take upon ascertaining that Texas is annexed to the United States in spite of all her remonstrance and her maneuvers to prevent it, will also soon be decided. That her government would willingly avert and would procrastinate to the very last hour, if she could not avert, a war with the United States, we have no doubt. But it seems to us that the crisis is at hand with her authorities also. She must now soon abandon the grounds she has to this time maintained throughout, or carry out her repeated threats of declaring war in case the United States assumes jurisdiction over Texas. There is no alternative.

It would undoubtedly have been better for the U. States to have had a minister at the city of Mexico during these eventful times, sufficiently a diplomatist to have represented and maintained our interests better than they have been represented by the minister who is now leaving there without having acquired himself to the satisfaction of his countrymen, or to the credit of the country he went there to serve. Even at this last extremity, when diplomatic intercourse is closing between them and us, how useful might an able statesman and a good am be, to represent the interests of the U. States at the city of Mexico? Mexico has taken one decided step since her minister closed his official duties and left this country. She has admitted the independence of Texas, upon a single condition. She has done do under the united influence of representations from the English, French and Texan authorities. The latter, beyond doubt, have already deviation, --and now abandon independence and go for annexation. The British and the French agents are thereby completely non plusses, unless their respective governments decide to aid Mexico in a war, not a war for the independence of Texas, -- that Mexico herself would be far from waging, unless she could depend upon Texas as an ally in the contest, -- but a war for Mexican dominion over Texas. This would
We repeat, unless those European powers determine that it is time to attempt to strangle the young republican Hercules in his cradle, even at the expense of a war, their agents will hardly be authorized to urge Mexico into an actual contest with the United States. To the very verge, they would push the interests of their own governments to prevent Texas from being incorporated into the union, -- but, the repose of the world hangs upon stepping beyond the Rubicon.

The question remains however, whether, though England and France may not urge Mexico on, -- in fact, though they may now exert their utmost to restrain a popular impulse which they have no doubt aided in fomenting in Mexico against the measure of annexation, whether they may not find that they are too late, and that an impulse once fired to such a pitch, is not to be retrained in such a government as that of Mexico. They may have made way inevitable.

War once began, all the features of the present question at issue, would change attitude in an instant. The superiority of the one party and the helpless condition of the other, would be obvious to all Europe. The sympathies of the world would be with Mexico; and that to an extent, which it is doubtful if any ministry in England could withstand. Mixing up, as the question inevitably would, with the Oregon border squabbles, and contentions of various kinds, Mexico and the United States would have the contest to themselves but for a very brief period.

The new position assumed by Mexico, since her minister left this country, above alluded to admitting the independence of Texas upon a certain condition, and the attitude which she will find herself occupying should the European powers decide to endeavor to restrain her from declaring war, would make the presence of an able American minister at the city of Mexico, of great importance to the interests of both countries, and perhaps to the peace of the world. A negotiation for the Californias, already stated to be passing from under the dominion of Mexico in the same manner Texas has passed, and a settlement of the boundaries of both, might perhaps be affected at a price which would be a fair consideration to Mexico, and which the U. States would not hesitate to make liberal rather than Mexico, and which the U. States would not hesitate to make liberal rather than Mexico should longer complain of our treatment towards her.

Contrasting the relative forces of the powers arrayed in dispute, there can be no question whether the United States could with self respect, name an extraordinary minister to Mexico in the present posture of affairs. The new position, which Mexico has herself assumed, fully authorizes, nay, seems to us to call upon our government for such a measure.

The first of the steamers that arrived last week from Liverpool, brought accounts that a feverish excitement prevailed their respecting the dispute with the United States, and that intelligence as it reached Liverpool from this country, was hurried on at the top of steam speed by express, to the impatient authorities at London. The next steamer that arrived, which left Liverpool only three days after the first, brought a paragraph stating that the war fever had entirely subsided. Nothing had transpired in the meantime to effect a change. The difference in the statements we presume resulted from the different views entertained, or the different objects to be accomplished by the writers of the accounts alluded to.

Quite as contradictory are the late accounts, which we have from Mexico.

Private letter received from Mexico by the editors of the New Orleans Republican state it as a matter almost of certainty that before long the Mexican government will declare war against the United States. The tone of public sentiment in Mexico is said to be so hostile to this country and Texas that a new revolution in the government or a war with the United States seems inevitable. One of the letters referred to written at Vera Cruz on the 22d May, says:

"Captain Elliott and a commissioner of Texas are at this place, waiting for the arrival of letters from Mexico, which, it is said, will arrive to-day. They will sail, direct for Galveston in the French brig 'La Perouse.' The 'Eurydice' will sail for your port with dispatches for the British government. In addition to the propositions made by England to both Texas and Mexico, to settle the relations of these countries to each other and to the United States in a manner agreeable to her policy, I am assured there are inducements offered of rather a tempting nature. They are as follows: England compromises herself with Mexico to pay ten millions of her national debt, and with Texas she agrees to pay the whole of hers, which is computed at eight millions. This, if true - and I have got it from very good authority - proves that England has some very deep-laid project with regard to Texas: one much more important to her than the advantages she might derive from the simple determination of Texas to remain independent, confirmed by the consent of Mexico."

On the other hand a late letter from the city of Mexico, received by the same arrival, takes quite a pacific view of circumstances, thus:

Mexico, May 20, 1845

"This government having been empowered by congress to enter into a treaty with the Texian commissioners, all fear of a rupture between this country and the United States on that score, is now at an end."

Our readers are quite as able to judge between those contradictory statements as we are.
This country is again disturbed by dissension and disturbances. About eight years ago Don Juan B. Alvarado, Son Jose Castro, and others, Californians by birth, aided by several foreigners, took possession of this town, the archives and government property, chartered an English vessel, and sent the Mexican general his officers and their families, to Lower California, and left them there to find their way to Mexico as they could. The Californians then proceeded to take possession of every part of California, with the different missions, and the different offices of honor and profit within this department. The Mexicans remaining in the country, made an effort to put them down, but failed.

The Californians marched two or three times up and down the coast, continuing a part of the foreigners under high pay. President Bustamente, the second year after this revolution, confirmed the Californians in their different employments. During the time they held command, they ordered almost every Englishman and American to be arrested - Over one hundred were imprisoned in Monterey at one time - over fifty of these in a low, damp room, less than 20 feet square, without floor or windows. In May, the same year, many of the men were chained, six and eight to a bar, put into the hold of a vessel, and sent to San Blas. Fifteen months afterwards the government of Mexico sent part of them back to this port - several dying from fatigue and provisions. Had E. Barron, Esq H.B.M. consul, not been in Tepic and San Blas, I have no doubt but that every one of these men would have died in prison or on the road, as they were driven and gored like cattle.

In the year 1843, General Manuel Micheltorena arrived in California with some three or four hundred officers and soldiers, and by order of president Santa Anna took command - putting out of office some of the Californians. Last November, Senors Castro, Alvarado, and many of their countrymen, again rose with the determinations of sending out of their country the Mexican troops. The two parties met and made a treaty. Within a month they each denied the treaty and again took up arms.

These two parties are now traversing the country in hostile order, carrying away the merchants' and farmers' horses by hundreds, and destroying their cattle. General Micheltorena has over one hundred foreigners, English, German, and Americans, as riflemen with him, who have taken up the government cause to put down the rebellion. Several of the foreigners are the same who helped to put the Californians into office eight years back, and four years afterwards were imprisoned and shipped in irons without any trail. They are now in pursuit of the Californians who shipped them, with a strong desire to fight them. There are about one hundred more foreigners standing guard in Monterey, and other places, to support General Micheltorena. A large portion of the riflemen now with the general, arrived in California a few months since, (some with their families,) over the Rocky Mountains from our western states. Others of the party hold large tracts of land - some as much as twenty miles by three - on the waters of the San Francisco, having become citizens of Mexico; which can be done be simply asking for it. They marched with the Mexican troops but chose their own officers from among themselves; Captain John A. Sutter, a Swiss officer, (formerly of Charles X's guard in Paris,) being their commander and leader, and a Capt. Gant, or Grant, (it is said,) formerly of the United States army, their captain.

There is no doubt out these foreigners, and those who join them as they come in by land yearly, are going to exercise a great influence in this department. The present revolution will, in all probability, be decided by them, and perhaps all others in future, as they may choose sides.

Port of Monterey, (California) March 22, 1845.

In addition to what I wrote you in my last, I am now enabled to inform you that the Californians have succeeded in their efforts against the government of the regular governor and commandant general Don Manuel Micheltorena. The Californians to the number of one hundred and fifty, after remaining in this vicinity for a few days, went to the town of Angles, one hundred miles north of this point, and stormed it in the night with the loss of but two men. They were soon joined by the Californians of that place. on the 10th or 12th of January, governor general Micheltorena left this town with his officers, one hundred and fifty Mexican soldiers, some citizens of old Mexico, sixty or eighty wild Indians, trained to arms by Capt. Sutter, (a Swiss settler on the Sacrament,) and one hundred foreigners; a part of whom are settled on the same river. He had also ox-carts, cannon, and baggage; had to make a road as he proceeded, over a difficult mountainous route. Sometimes he went a league a day, and then again would halt four or five days at a place without any apparent object. During all this time, the Californians, (insurgents) traveled throughout the country from ten to twenty leagues (30 to 60 miles) a day. They returned at times to the vicinity of the governor general's forces, from a long distance off and would then disappear.
After the governor general had been on the road a month, the foreigners and his soldiers began to leave him by fives and tens at a time; the former being disgusted with the slowness of his progress, and the latter left him with the hope of getting free from the service; while many of those remaining were in hopes that the Californians would be victorious and would ship them back to San Blas, where they had families or relations; they having been forced into the ranks and brought into California against their will. General Micheltorena, after having been forty days in reaching the vicinity of the town of Angels, for the third time came near the insurgents, who then offered him battle. They (the insurgents) were three or four hundred strong, under Don Jose Castro, who had persuaded many foreigners to join his party.

On the 20th of February, the two parties (consisting of about six hundred men all together, Mexicans, Californians, foreigners, and Indians) got into action. Castro commenced the fight with cannon, firing large shot; and the governor general, on his side, returning his fire with grape. Both parties remained so far apart all that day as not to lose a man. On the next day, (the 21st) the battle again commenced, and was continued in what is here considered a warm and desperate contest. The governor general, however, soon surrendered; for forty or fifty foreigners having left him some time before, the remainder refused to fight against their countrymen I the insurgents' ranks. Some reports make the total loss (on both sides) amount to three or four men, while others make it as many horses. In all probability, there were not six men killed or wounded in the whole two days' fighting, although 250 cannon balls were fired. After the battle, a treaty was made, by which it was agreed that every person on either side might go where he wished - the soldiers to go to San Blas or remain citizens of California. The Mexican officers who wished to remain will continue to hold their present commissions and pay. But few of them however, will remain here. The governor general is to go by water to San Blas with all who choose to accompany him, and from thence he is to proceed to Mexico. Don Pico has become governor, as he is the leading member of the house of deputies or state legislature; and Don Jose Castro has become commandant general of California. He will, I suppose, make many changes of officers. - The revenue of the country is from eighty to one hundred thousand dollars, and is all from the customhouse.

The ground over which they (the Mexicans) forces took thirty or forty days to travel, was passed by the Californians in ten days on their return to this capital to possession of it. This mode of travel caused his ruin; but had he succeeded, the Californians would have risen again.

California, from Bodega to San Diego, is now once more under its own command - the Russians having left Bodega, which now belongs to Capt. S. Smith, of Baltimore, United States of America, who is a naturalized citizen of California. Whether the natives of this country will keep peace among themselves, or be again conquered for a year or two by Mexico, remains to be seen. If allowed to govern themselves, they acknowledge the Mexican flag, and their laws, when they please them. They pay little attention to the Mexican tariff, except to raise the amount of salaries and a few old matters. In fact, the state of California, and its wants and commerce are such that the tariff and laws of Mexico are but little applicable to the country.   [BAH]

---

NR 68.256  Mexico, Indians, notice of an ethnological article by Albert Gallatin

CENTRAL AMERICA. An interesting volume has recently been published by the Ethnological society of New York.
Among the articles contained in it is one of great research and value, by the venerable Albert Gallatin, on the semi-Civilized nations of Mexico, Yucatan, and Centeral America. This essay is declared to be a monument of learning and philosophical saga city.   [BAH]

---

NR 68.257  hostile feeling toward the US

MEXICO. A degree is published, banishing Santa Anna from Mexico, forever. Canalizo and Bassadre are banished for ten years. Rejon, Baranda, Haro, and Tamariz, who fled, the government will provide for hereafter. Each of the above will receive a pension equal to one-half the pay they received from Santa Anna. This pension is lost if they change their residence to any other place than that which the government points out,-by the decree the pecuniary responsibilities of these persons is not withdrawn. Consequently, Santa Anna, Canalizo, and the four ex-ministers were obliged to satisfy all their creditors before leaving the country.

The republic is said to be in a very unsettled condition and in danger of another revolution. A hostile feeling against the United States prevailed, with a general belief that Texas would not annex.   [BAH]

---

July 1845

NR 68.274 05Jul1845: Texas, annexation to the United States, meeting of Congress, submission of the Mexican treaty, its rejection, resolutions approving annexation by the United States adopted, notice of various resolutions related to annexation
Texas Annexation. The United States steamer Princeton reached Annapolis on the 3d instant, in nine days from Galveston, bringing Washington, (Texas) dates to the 21st of June. Dr. Wright, bearer of dispatches, preceded immediately to Washington.

The Texian congress assembled on the 16th of June in compliance with the president's proclamation.

President Jones, in his message to that body, communicated the resolutions passed by the United States congress, proposing the annexation of Texas to the Union. He also submitted to the senate the treaty proposed by Mexico, for acknowledging the Independence of Texas upon three conditions, viz:

1. Mexico consents to acknowledge the independence of Texas.
2. Texas engages that she will stipulate in the treaty not to annex herself or become subject to any country whatever.
3. Limits and other arrangements to be matters of agreement in the final treaty.
4. Texas to be willing to refer the disputed points with regard to territory, and other matters, to the arbitration of umpires.

This treaty was considered in secret session of the senate on the 21st of June, and rejected by a unanimous vote.

Joint resolutions were introduced simultaneously in each house of congress, in nearly the same words, accepting the terms proposed by the United States congress for annexation. The senate by a unanimous vote passed theirs and sent them to the house on the 18th. The house laid the senate resolutions upon the table, and unanimously passed their own resolutions, and sent them to the senate next day. - There was then a scramble for the honor of paternity to the resolutions, which should finally pass. - The house at length adopted the expedient of slightly amending the resolutions from the senate, and passing them in their present form, returned them to the senate as amended, where the amendments were unanimously adopted.

The following is a copy of the resolutions as they passed both houses of the Texas congress:

Joint Resolutions,

Giving the consent of the existing government to the annexation of Texas to the United States hath proposed the following terms. Guarantees, and conditions, on which the people and territory of the republic of Texas may be erected into a new State, to be called the State of Texas, and admitted as one of the states of the American Union, to wit:

[Here follow the resolutions of the United States congress]

And whereas, by said terms, the consent of the existing government of Texas is required: Therefore,

Sec. 1. Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the republic of Texas in congress assembled, That the government of Texas doth consent that the people and territory of the republic of Texas may be erected into a new state, to be called the State of Texas, with a republican form of government, to be adopted by the people of said republic, by deputies in convention assembled, in order that the same may be admitted as one of the states of the American Union; and said consent is given on the terms, guarantees, and conditions, set forth in the preamble to this joint resolution.

Sec. 2. Be it further resolved, That the proclamation of the president of the republic of Texas, bearing date, May 5th, 1845, and the election of deputies to sit in convention at Austin on the 4th day of July next, for the adoption of a constitution for the State of Texas, had in accordance therewith, hereby receive the consent of the existing government of Texas.

Sec. 3. Be it further resolved, That the president of Texas is hereby requested immediately to furnish the government of the United States, through their accredited minister near this government, with a copy of this joint resolution; also to furnish the convention, to assemble at Austin on the 4th of July next, with a copy of the same; and the same shall take effect from and after its passage.

Dr. Wright informs the Washington "Union" that Captain Waggaman, had arrived at Washington, Texas, to select posts to be occupied by the United States troops, and to provide for their subsistence.

A resolution was introduced into both houses of congress, requiring the executive to surrender all posts, navy yards, barracks, &c. to the proper authorities of the United States.

The convention of delegates which were to assemble on the 4th of July to form a convention for the State of Texas, to be submitted to the people of Texas and to the United States congress, are no doubt now in session.
On the 18th inst. In the Senate, Mr. Greer introduced a joint resolution offering "a nation's gratitude to General Andrew Jackson; which resolution was unanimously adopted.

On the same day Major Kaufman introduced a bill setting apart a portion of the public land - lying between the Arkansas and Red Rivers - for payment of the national debt; read the first and second time, and referred to the committee on the state of the Republic.

On the 19th, in the Senate, Mr. Greer introduced a joint resolution, relative to the introduction of United States troops into Texas; read the first time.

On Tuesday, Mr. Kaufman as chairman of the committee on Foreign Relations, reported the Joint Resolution giving the consent of the existing government to the annexation of Texas to the United States;" which joint resolution was passed through its third reading on the next day, the 19th - the rule being suspended, on motion of Colonel H.L. Kianey, by a unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. Kauffman's bill "setting apart land for the payment of the public debt." &c. was taken up, read a second and third time and passed.

Mr. Lawrence introduced a resolution for the relief of post captain E.W. Moore; read the first time.

We are happy to state that Commodore Moore has already been restored to his command.

The Union of the 3d inst. says: We are favored by Dr. Wright with the following memoranda, in MS, taken by himself at Washington, Texas, just before he left it for Galveston:

Memoranda of the conditions preliminary to a treaty of peace, as agreed upon by Ashbel Smith, on the part of Texas, and Mr, Cuevas, on the part of Mexico, and the accompanying papers, as submitted to the senate by President Jones.

I. Message of President Jones, transmitting the treaty and papers to the senate.

II. Letter from Baron Alleye de Cyprey, transmitting to the executive of Texas the condition signed by Ashbel Smith, and the agreement on the part of Mexico to accede to them as the bases of a formal treaty.

III. Conditions preliminary to a treaty of peace:

1. Mexico consents to acknowledge the independence of Texas.

2. Texas engages that she will stipulate in the treaty not to annex herself, or become subject of any country whatever.

3. Limits and other arrangements to be matter of agreement in the final treaty.

4. Texas will be willing to refer the disputed points with regard to territory, and other matters, in the arbitration of umpires.

Done at Washington (on the Brazos,) on the 27th of March, 1845 (Signed) Ashbel Smith, Secretary of State.

Certified copy of the original, presented by Captain Elliott.

(Signed) Alleye De Cyprey, Bankhead.
[BAH]
The report mentioned in our last, copied from the New York News, of Mr. Pakenham, the British minister, having intimated to our government that a minister from the United States would now be favorably received by the Mexican government, is contradicted by the Washington Union. The dispatching a minister to that government, however, is still thought to be a matter well worthy of the immediate and serious consideration of our government.

'Neill'

NR 68.305 19Jul1845: people quiet, not alarmed by war cries
68.305 19Jul1845: proclamation upon receiving intelligence of Texas deciding to annex to the US

We copy from the New Orleans Tropic of the 7th instant, the subjoined Mexican intelligence, brought by the schooner Creole, which left Vera Cruz on the 24th ultimo:

Gen. Bustamente arrived at Vera Cruz on the 17th ultimo, and offered his services to sustain the integrity of the Mexican territory and the dignity of the Republic. He was rather coolly received by the government, and it is reported that he refused the government, and it is reported that he refused the military honors tendered him on his arrival. It was believed that his return was not invited by any party, and that he had no desire to meddle in public affairs.

The people generally were quiet, and not at all alarmed, not withstanding the war cries made by the federalists and the partisans of Santa Anna, who are loud in denouncing the government for want of energy. The state of the public treasury was presumed to be pretty low, as the officers in the employ of the government found great difficulty in obtaining one-fourth of their salaries.

The acting president, general Canaliso, and ex-minister of war, gen. Basadre, not accepting the propositions made by government, to be expatriated for ten years, have been imprisoned for the same term, the former in the castle of Perote, and the latter in that of San Juan de Ulloa.

Don Manuel Rincon, general of division and constitutional governor of the department of Mexico, has published the following

PRO LAMATION:

The minister of foreign affairs has communicated to me the following decree:

Jose Joaquin de Herrera, general of division and president ad interim of the Mexican Republic, to the citizens thereof.

Be it known: That the general congress has decreed, and the executive sanctioned, the following:

The national congress of the Mexican Republic, considering:

That the congress of the United States of the North has, by a decree, which its executive has sanctioned revolted to incorporate the territory of Texas with the American union;

That his manner of appropriating to itself territories upon which other nations have rights, introduces a monstrous novelty, endangering the peace of the world, and violation the sovereignty of nations;

That this usurpation, now consummated to the prejudice of Mexico, has been an insidious preparation for a long time; at the same time that the most cordial friendship was proclaimed, and that on the part of this republic, the existing treaties between it and those states were respected scrupulously and legally;

That the said annexation of Texas to the United States tramples on the conservative principles of society, attacks all the rights that Mexico has to the at territory, is an insult to her dignity as a sovereign nation, and threatens her independence and political existence;

That the laws of the United States, in reference to the annexation of Texas to the United States, does is nowise destroy the rights that Mexico has, and will enforce, upon that department;

That the Unites States, having trampled on the principles which served as a basis to the treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation, and more especially to those of boundaries fixed with precision, even previous to 1832, they are considered as violated by that nation.

And; finally, that he unjust spoliation of which they wish to make the Mexican nation the victim, gives her the clear right to use all her resources and power to resist, to the last moment, said annexation;
IT IS DECREED:

1st. The Mexican nation calls upon all her children to the defense of their national independence, threatened by the usurpation of Texas, which is intended to be realized by the decree of annexation passed by the congress. And sanctioned by the president, of the United States of the north.

2. In consequence, the government will call to arms all the forces of the army, according to the authority granted it by the existing laws; and for the preservation of public order, for the support of there institutions, and in case of necessity, to serve as a reserve to the army, the government, according to the powers given to it on the 9th December, 1844 will raise the corps specified by said decree, under the name of "Defenders of the Independence and of the Laws."

Miguel Artistaín.
President of the Deputies.

Francisco Calderón,
President of the senate.

Approved, and ordered to be printed and published.

Jose Joaquin de Herrera.

A.D. Luis G. Cuevas.
Palace of the National Government,
City of Mexico, June 4. 1845

WILL MEXICO DECLARE WAR?- is now the leading enquiry of nearly every paper that reaches us. The period is so rapidly approaching when speculation will end, that it is useless to add to what has so often been uttered from our columns on the subject; except to say, that none of the apprehensions expressed on that point, have been dissipated. On the contrary, the idea is now certainly entertained by very many, if not by the Cabinet itself at Washington, that war will be declared by Mexico.

A letter from an American gentleman, dated Vera Cruz, June 24, 1845, published in the Baltimore American says,

"War between this country and the United States appears inevitable. My opinion is now completely changed, and from the continued and most recent news from Texas, it appears to be reduced to a certainty that, that country will be united to the States, which will be considered here tantamount to a declaration of war. This is beyond a doubt."

All the letters received at New Orleans by the latest arrivals are said to agree in tenor with the above.

A war, even with Mexico, will be a matter of deep regret to all considerate men, of all parties, in this union. A large proportion of the people entertain the opinion, that a more guarded, deliberate, and circumspect course, in relation to the acquisition of Texas, would have accomplished that object, without incurring a war with Mexico; and there are not a few who believe that Mexico has been greatly outraged by the course that our government has adopted towards her in relation to Texas. The sympathies of most, if to of all other countries will be more or less enlisted on her idea, if for no other cause than that she will be the weaker party in the war. We still hope, though it be almost against hope, that something may yet intervene to prevent and issue which we have reason to fear will be anything but really, or substantially glorious to our republic, let the events which such war might lead to be ever so victorious. Mexico is not such a champion, as the chivalry of the United States would expect to reap laurels in conquering.

The still graver apprehension we have expressed is, that war once declared, the whole structure of our foreign relations would be on the instant materially changed. - and that in all human probability, Mexico and the United States would not long be left to battle alone. There are other governments that are controlled by popular impulse, as well as that of Mexico.

Once more may we be allowed to deplore, that an able AMBASSADOR has not been dispatched by our government, as to the true interests of both countries, and a lost effort to prevent the disgrace of another conflict between the republics of this continent. The offer of Mexico, conditional though it was to acknowledge the independence of Texas gave our government sufficient plea to propose a renewal of negotiations. From the United States, as the stronger party, such proposition would be manly- and the new attitude in which the representatives of both France and England at Mexico, will have to assume, nay, no doubt have by this time assumed, cannot otherwise than dispose all considerate Mexicans to look at prospects before them, with intense anxiety, and might induce, with the aid of suitable overtures from the United States, a pause, and an ultimate reversion of popular feeling in that distracted country. Let the question be fairly and forcibly states, that the United States is anxious to adjust all difficulties, - anxious to define the boundaries which shall divide the two countries- and disposed to be liberal to the utmost price Mexico might ask for some of the possessions which Mexico now holds a very imperfect control over, and that the United States would cheerfully pay a price for them sufficient to relieve Mexico from her pressing pecuniary embarrassments, present these inducements, as they might be presented, on the one hand, and the alternative of a war with us- and which would they choose?

The following article, taken from a late number of the Siglo diez y nueve, printed at Vera Cruz, shows that there are Mexicans who entertain correct ideas of their position, and hesitate not to assert their opinions under the caption of "How much will Texas cost us?" The writer continues:

"Have we sufficient men to combat, advantageously, the enemy and his allies?"

Let us suppose that fortune smiles upon us, and that we shall give the envy a blow, and the filed remain ours; shall we be able to maintain it without the necessity of fresh troops and money? Let it be understood that the theatre of the war is at a distance; that the expedition will be extremely difficult, dilatory, and expensive, and that by sea it will be almost impossible for us to oppose the enemy; in a work, let it be understood that we are going to carry on the war in the enemy's country, and all he territory we may possess, will be not more than what may be covered by the sole of the foot. We cannot suppose that we shall be long in peaceful possession of the country. Have we such an exuberance of population as to fill up the ranks which war and desertions will occasion? Have our people that adventurous spirited which urges men to seek a grave at hundreds of leagues from their homes?

The half of the republic, and precisely the most exposed to the incursions of the enemy, had for some time past carried on a war, which is becoming every day more disadvantageous, with the numerous tribes which separate us from that enemy. The latter more skilled and more foreseeing than ourselves, excites the tribes to pillage, and exchanges for armed and ammunition the fruits of their depredations. Can we carry on these two wars? Will our soldiers march to conquer in the east, while the enemy lays wasted in our fields, and destroys our families in the north?

One revolution has just ended; its hatred still exists; democracy and dictation now go hand in hand they have sworn hatred to the government in signum faderis? We have nothing to fear from a large body of troops? Will not a liberator spring up amongst us? The fourth of December 1829 the 28th of September 1841, and the 29th of November 1844, will be days never to be forgotten in our annals Pre omnibusnafandae dies.

In order to determine us to make war, it has been asked, how much is Texas worth? The question is not a bad one; but in order to solve the question appropriately, it should be asked how much more will it cost? Four millions were lost to commence it; that sum was given, and it was expended, and we shall want four million more to recommence it.

We are now on the march; let us suppose that we have already met the enemy, and a general action has been fought; we ask how many men and how much money will the first defeat cost us? If it were the custom in our country to make up and render accounts, we might come at the amount approximately by what the last war cost us; but as this is no longer practicable, we will follow the calculations made on the subject a year ago. Fifteen thousand troops were required in order that twelve thousand might arrived at the theatre of war, and according to the account summed up on paper, it was found that their maintenance would cost four millions of dollars annually at least. As these accounts are never practically known, we may add that just double that amount will be necessary. We, therefore, shall require, at least, five millions, in order to give the first general action. How many years will the war last? How many men will be required to be in garrison? How much will be the whole cost of the war? What annual number of men shall we have to send to fill up the ranks?

The nation owes immense sums; she has an innumerable quantity of employees, whom she cannot pay, and the product of its revenue is not sufficient to pay off its ordinary expenses. Where will she obtain the extraordinary revenue, which she is about apportion? Will she lay hands on the rents of the departments? Will she impose new contribution? Will she demand forced loans? Will she augment our foreign debt?

She will necessarily have to do none of these things but in obtaining either one of them, will she gain the ends? Ten years ago the government declared war against Texas, in order to make war upon us; under that pretext the public treasury has been emptied; army of leaders and officers has been raised the liberties of the people have been trodden under foot and by throwing off the makes, the government warned to impose the yoke of a tyrant upon us. During these then years, wrangling and disorders have been produced; corruption has stalked abroad, the priner pal fountains of our wealth have been dried up, and at length they have reduced us to this state of bankruptcy. Can we return to order, and introduce that strict economy, which our present state calls for if we involve ourselves in a foreign war? Shall we obtain from Texas the necessary succor to carry on? Will the war be a popular one? It is said that our god-mother England, or step mother France and our fratricidal brothers the United States. With response the Texan cause. Can we advantageous resist this alliance?

Such are the principal doubts which defer us from giving our opinion on the grave question of peaceful war with Texas, supposing that our doings should prove pos porous; these doubts should be cleared before giving a final resolve; the question should calmly argued by asking not what Texas is worth but what will it cost us. Offended self love and over bearing national pride are not the best counselor such cases; the public convenience, and the good the majority, is what every government should keep in view in order to arrange its operations, stopping its ears to the declamations of enthusiasm, and the censures of private interest. The assault Ptolemais is given as one of the most horrible eve in history; let our leaders and our citizen's read wise words I which M. Michaud describes the INDIANS OF AMERICA. The semi-annual report of the American Indian Mission Association, held at Forsyth, Ga., on May 17, 18, and 19th ult. In its survey of the field which is opened for their labors, and after remarking upon the claims of the aboriginal race of this continent as being as fully entitled to the philanthropic and benevolent efforts of American Christendom, as the inhabitants of the eastern continents of Asia and Africa, proceeds to give an estimate of the numbers of American Indians. We extract from this report:

"The field we have entered is extensive, comprising a full quarter of the Globe. The population, it is true, is not so dense as in many other countries, but it is supposed to embrace ten or eleven millions of the original inhabitants and about the same number of others, whose condition morally is as deplorable as that of the natives, or of any heathen nation in the world; and with these races of men one, we necessarily come in contact with the other. The portion covered by the population of the United States, and the civilized parts of Canada, is an exception of but a specch compared with the whole. We have, therefore, before us a forth part of the world to work upon: and material consisting of about twenty-two millions, or upwards; and with very partial exceptions among the Indians on our borders, this field is unoccupied by others. Other societies have sailed across the seas to Asia, Africa, and Europe, and have left America for us.

It is estimated that there are yet four millions and a half of the Aboriginals in North America, including Mexico and its dependencies. Further southeast in Central America, in Guatemala, there are supposed to be one million of Indians. One of their towns contains about 20,000 inhabitants. In the more eastern parts of the country, are large districts thinly inhabited by uncivilized Indians.

Still further southeast in New Granada, in a population of about 1,800,000, one million may be estimated as being of Indian blood. In the adjoining region of Venezuela (or Caracas) it is supposed that there are eighty three thousand Indians. Some of these, but not all, have submitted to a state of dependence and vassalage, under the Spanish and Catholic yoke. Other tribes are unsubdued, as the Goahiros, about 30,000 in number, Guaraunos, about 8,000 in number.

In Guiana, the tribes of Caribs, and Warrows adjoin the coast. The Arrowsauks and the Accawaws, reside farther in the interior. Here the European settlements do not extend far back from the sea; and in the interior are numerous tribes but little known.

Peru is said to have a known population of Indian blood, of 853,350. East of the mountains are extensive regions, chiefly Prairie, inhabited by tribes unsubdued by the Spaniards, whom we may estimate at least, at 40,000. The extensive region of Brazil is supposed to contain 800,000 or 1,000,000 unsubdued Indians.

In Buenos Ayres, what are termed civilized Indians, because subject to the Spaniards, number about 700,000 besides those who are unsubdued in the interior.

In Chili there are, perhaps, 500,000 Indians, most of whom are submissive to the Spaniards. The interior of Patagonia is inhabited by unsubdued Indians; the number not known, but probably amounting to one or two millions. In the islands of Trinidad, Margarita, and St. Vincent, it is said that a few of the original inhabitants remain; in all about 3,700. The large island of Terra del Fuego is inhabited by the Aborigines.

We must not, however, disguise a fact, which though it may be felt by some of the missionaries has, perhaps, not been well understood generally namely: that missionary labors among the Indians are usually attended with more toil, difficulties, and obstacles, and consequently may be said to be harder to perform, than those among the heathen of other countries; but it is presumed that none are better qualified to perform difficult and hard work, than the missionaries whom this association will employ.

The prevalence of peace in the greater part of North America, and many other considerations, make the present time peculiarly favorable for carrying forward our work successfully; and even the present time peculiarly favorable for carrying forward our work successfully; and even the present political agitations in Mexico, we have good reason to believe, will result favorably for the designs of the association, and notwithstanding, in the countries further southeast, obstacles not altogether in formidable may be apprehended, we may hope that they will appear less appalling as we approach them. The South Americans have long been in a restless condition: the gospel would insure tranquility and blessings beyond those of which they have hitherto been capable of conceiving.

Since our Divine Master has done so much for fallen man, and we have been so much favored as a nation, as Christians, as members of a benevolent association; and in view of the condition of the Aborigines, and our obligations to them, and of the inviting opportunities which now present themselves for doing them good, and the confidence of success which humble reliance upon God, must inspire us, surely there will not be one in our favored fraternity who will be unwilling to participate most zealously in this good work of “building the old wastes, of repairing the waste sites, and the desolations of many generations.” And, in behalf of all, we adopt the language of Nehemiah, "The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build."

The total number of the Indian race is therefore estimated by the report at near or about 12,000,000, excluding those of mingled Spanish &c., and Indian Blood. [BAH]

NR 68.315-68.316  19Jul1845: British involvement in the negotiation for Mexican recognition of Texian independence

Executive Department, Washington, (Texas,) June 6, 1845.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of you excellency's letter of the 20th ultimo; which, together with the official documents referred to in it, and by which Mexico has given her assent to the preliminaries of peace with Texas, upon the basis of an acknowledgement of the independence of the latter, were handed me by Mr. Elliott, charge d'affairs of her Britannic majesty near this government on the 2d instant.

For your kindness and courtesy in transmitting these interesting and important papers, as well as for your valuable services in producing the result, which they announce to me, and the offer of a continuance of the same good offices whenever they can be useful, I beg you to accept by best thanks. Should the result be the establishment of a good understanding & a lasting peace between the governments of Texas and Mexico, with the concurrence of their people, the cause of humanity will assuredly be greatly indebted to your efforts in its behalf.

I have the honor to transmit you, herewith, for such disposition as you may think proper to make of them, certified copies of the proclamation issued by me on the 4th inst, announcing to the people the agreement of Mexico to the preliminaries of peace, and the consequent cessation of hostilities between the two countries.

The congress of Texas will assemble on the 16th of the present month, and a convention of the 4th of July proximo. These bodies have been convoked to consider the propositions made by the government of the United States on the subject of annexation. The subject of our relations with Mexico will also be presented to them, and their decisions will necessarily govern my future action in reference to the same.

Accept, sir, the assurances of high consideration and respect with which I remain, your excellency's most obedient humble servant, ANSON JONES.

To his excellence,

The Baron Alleye de Cyprey, &c.&c. [BAH]

NR 68.315-68.316  19Jul1845: Texas, annexation to the United States, notice of negotiations for Mexican recognition of the independence of Texas on the condition that Texas reject proposals from the United States regarding the annexation of Texas

From the Texas National Register, June 19.

[Correspondence accompanying President Jones's message of June 16.]

MR. DONELSON TO MR. ALLEN.

The undersigned, charged d'affairs of the Unites States has the honor to transmit herewith, to the hon. Ebenezer Allen, attorney general of the republic of Texas, and charged ad interim with the direction of the department of foreign affairs, the joint resolution which has been recently adopted by the congress of the United States, fro the annexation of Texas into the Union.

This important measure has thus been brought to the consummation so confidently anticipated by the undersigned, his communication of the 10th December last, t this government; and he trusts that it may e received as a just response to the wished of the people of Texas, alike honorable to both countries, and worthy of the reciprocally national interests which have so long demanded it.

It now remains for the government and people of Texas, by their acceptance and ratification of the provisions contained in this joint resolution, to finish the great work of annexation; and to assume their station as an independent, equal, and sovereign member of the American confederacy, as soon as the constitutions requirements, usual in the admission of new states, can be emplied with.

Anxious to execute the trust devolved upon him by the resolution referred to, in the manner best calculated to secure its objects, and with the least inconvenience and delay to Texas, the President of the United States has instructed the undersigned to inform this government that he has selected as the basis of the action yet necessary on the subject, the first and second sections of their resolution - leaving out of view the remaining or third section. This last section, as the hon. Mr. Allen aware was added as an amendment, and leaves it optional with the president to resort to the means it creates for an adjustment of the terms of annexation on a basis different from that offered in the first and second sections, which constituted the bill as it originally came to the senate from the house of representatives. It was doubtless intended to place in the hands of the president the means of obviating such objections as Texas might possibly make to the details of the positions contained in the two preceding sections, but, in doing so, it complicates the process, and is there wise productive of disadvantages so considerable as to induce the president not to rely upon it as the most appropriate or practicable mode of securing to Texas a speedy admission into the union.

It is obvious that, if the discretionary power contemplated by the third section were resorted to, the action on their part of this government, which can now settle the question of annexation, would be deferred until the new negotiation, to be make by commissioners or ministers on the part of the respective governments, could be known. But this is not all. The negotiation thus make, even when ratified by Texas, would not be conclusive. It would still have to undergo a similar reference to the government of the United States, where it would again be liable to alterations or amendments; and this in its turn, necessarily referable back again to this government, might involve the subject in inextricable confusion, and could not fail to be productive of danger to the measure, and of irritation to those friendly relations in other respects which so happily prevail between the two counties.

Such difficulties will be avoided by adhering to the proposals contained in the first and second sections. By those proposals the door is at once opened for the admission of Texas into the Union, in the manner that has been customary with the other territories of the United States, varied only by the peculiar relations which the two republics have maintained as separate nations. If Texans now accepts those proposals, from that moment she becomes virtually a state of the union, because the faith of the United States will be pledged for her admission and the act of congress necessary to redeem the pledge is obliged to follow, as soon as she presents a republican form of government. All, then, that is necessary upon this basis is for this government, after expressing its assent to the proposals submitted to it, to call a convention of the people, to clothe their deputies with the power necessary to amend their constitution, and adapt the government created by it to the new circumstances under which it will placed by annexation to the Union.

On the grounds, therefore, of more directness and simplicity in the process, whereby time and much expenditure of many will be saved, and of the entire avoidance of all further risk resulting from possible differences attending efforts to obtain terms more suitable to the separate views of the respective governments, it has been thought best by the president of the United States, as before states, to the rest the question of the joint resolution as it came from the house of representatives, which contains propositions complete and ample, as an overture to Texas, and which, if adopted by her, places the reunion of the tow countries beyond the possibility of defeat.

This great question then is in the hands of Texas. It depends upon herself whether she will be restored to the bosom of the republican family, and taking her station with the other sisters states of the confederacy, will co-operate with them in advancing the cause of free government; or whether, standing aloof from them, she is to run the hazards of a separate career at a period in the affairs of the world when the friends of a different system of government are urged by the most powerful motives, to resist the extension of the republican principle.

The undersigned doubts not that there are objections to the terms proposed, which under ordinary circumstances, ought to be obviated before a basis which admits them is adopted. But the circumstances are not ordinary; and the objections when weighed in the scale of importance, with the magnitude of the interest involved in the success of the measure become secondary in their character, and may well be postponed until the natural course of events removes them. If annexation should now be lost it may never be recovered. A patriotic and intelligent people, in the pursuit of a measure of general utility, if they commit a partial mistake or inflict temporary injury, were never known to fail in making the proper reparation. If they have, in this instance, made proposals of union to Texas on terms which deprive her of means that should be exclusively hers, to enable her to pay the debt contracted in the war for her independence, it has been accidental, and no assurance from the undersigned can be needed to give value to the anticipation that such an error will be corrected whenever it is communicated to the government of the United States.

It is objected that Texas, in surrendering her revenue from customs, parts with the ability to put into efficient organization her state government. - This objection must result from an undue examination of the expenditures, which the United States, on the other hand, will make in the many improvements necessary on the seacoast of Texas to protect and facilitate her commerce; in the removal of obstructions in her numerous bays and rivers; and in the military organization necessary to guard her extensive frontier against the inroads of a foreign enemy. When expenditures for these and may other internal objects are drawn from the treasury of the Union, and not from the treasury of the Union, and not from that of Texas, it will be seen that the remaining means for the support of the state government will not only be as great as they now are, but rapidly increased by the influx of population, and the growing capacity resulting from the superabundance of their rich productions.

So, also, on the part of the United States, it was objected that the cession of the unappropriated lands ought to have been made by Texas, for a fair consideration, to enable the federal government to extend her Indian policy over the various tribes within her limits. The right to extinguish the Indian title to these lands seems almost a necessary consequence of the obligation to regulate the trade and intercourse with them, and to keep them at peace with teach other and with us; and the absence of any provision to this effect, to the terms proposed, constituted a serious obstacle in the minds of many sincerely friendly to the measure. Yet, so strong was the desire to out the question beyond the possibility of defeat, and to leave with Texas the means of discharging her national debt, that they nevertheless recorded their votes in its favor.

But reference is make to such objections, not to ascertain their justness or unjustness on this occasion, but to remark on the part of the United States that much was conceded to obtain the passage of the resolution. And it was also believed that a like spirit would induce Texas to overlook minor considerations, relying on that high sense of honor and magnanimity which governs both the people and the representatives of the United States, to secure to her hereafter all that she can reasonably desire, to place her on the most favorable footing with the other members of the Union. It was this belief that mainly induced the President of the United States to give the instructions which have controlled this communication fro the undersigned, adopting, as the basis of action for finishing the work of annexation, the joint resolution as it originally passed the house of representatives.

With these observations, the question is now submitted to the hon. Mr. Allen, under the confident hope that this government will see the necessity of prompt and decisive action, whereby the measure may obtain the constitutional sanction of Texas. And the undersigned takes this occasion t renew to Mr. Allen an expression of the distinguished consideration with which he has the honor to be his very obedient servant,

A.J. DONELSON.

NR 68.323   26Jul1845:  rumors of war between Mexico and the US

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO. The New York Sun says that rumors of war with Mexico have reached that city, and that the Mexican congress have authorized hostile measures against the Unites States. - The rumor is at least premature, though our last advices from Mexico indicate such an event as being highly probable.

The latest hints we have from the city of Washington, as well as from New York, rather favor the hope that peace may yet be reserved. This it is likely may be aided by the arrival of the Texan secretary of stat, Alhbel Smith, who it will be remembered was, by the late articles from Texas, made the scape-goat of the Texan overtures to Mexico, for which President Jones is so much censured, and who hurried off so rapidly to Europe at the same moment that Captain Elliott, "the man with the white hat" started from Galveston for the city of Mexico. Mr.
Secretary Smith, no doubt found, that neither England nor France were at all disposed to risk a war with the United States in behalf of Mexico, though they both spirited that government on to the very verge, if not beyond the verge of hostilities in resistance of the annexation of Texas to the Unites States.

Finding that tack was unavailing, Capt. Elliott quits Mexico, Texas, and the United States, by the shortest cut, and is off for England at the same moment Mr. Secretary Smith is on his way from his hasty embassy to Europe, "HOMEWARD BOUND" - and they probably intersected each other at New York, where Mr. Smith arrived on Monday in the Great Western.

The New York Journal of Commerce, in relation to his mission, says:

"We learn that he as accomplished the objects of his mission, which consisted neither in obtaining a loan nor in selling his country to the French, English, or Dutch, nor in procuring its independence instead of annexation to the Unites States. Texas has now no diplomatic representative in Europe, except Mr. Dangerfield, who we believe has some time since received an order of recall. A principal object of Mr. Smith's mission, as we understand it, was to prepare the way for closing the relations of Texas with European powers in a respectful and becoming manner. Those relations had been of the most friendly character, and the government of England and France especially had manifested a cordial interest in the welfare of the young republic. That they wished her to remain independent rather than be annexed to the United States, is beyond a doubt; but this is to be said to their credit, that, in any negotiations they may have had with Texas for this object, they have never, either of them, proposed to reserve any peculiar advantages themselves beyond what should be enjoyed by other nations. This further should be said to their credit, that now, when they see that annexation is the will of the Texan people, fairly expressed, they abandon all further attempts at interference. And this, still further, may be relied on, that they have and will exert themselves to restrain Mexico from the infatuation of making war upon the United States, which would only serve to complicate affairs, without the possibility of preventing annexation. Mr. Smith expresses his opinion decidedly that there will be nor war, not even with Mexico."   [BAH]
Unnecessary delay in obeying an order to proceed with the Congress frigate from Annapolis to Norfolk; illegal punishment, by establishing on order from the internal government of the shop, authorizing lieutenants to flog the men six lashes, in their discretion - in violation of law, which gives the power to punish only to commanders; and this, "scandalous conduct, tending to the destruction of good morals," in this that captain Voorhees having been ordered by his department to state his reason for not obeying an order of commodore Turner to bring the Congress into Norfolk; and, instead of doing so, proceeded to Annapolis, gave his reasons for so doing in a letter to the department of March 22d; which letter, the specification alleges, was false, in affirming that he (captain Voorhees) had no intention of violating the order of commodore Turner, whereas he did intentionally disobey the said order, and did design to disobey it, and make preparations for disobeying it, and intimated that such was his intention before he had any knowledge of the alleged hindrances and difficulties from adverse winds and other causes, which he set forth in his letter as the reasons why he proceeded to Annapolis instead of Norfolk; and which letter was also "so written and framed as to convey to the secretary of the navy the meaning and explanation the he (captain Voorhees), was hindered by unforeseen difficulties from obeying the said order," which he did intentionally disobey.

The last accounts from Havana state that H.B.M. sloop-of-war Eurydice was ashore near the Moro, and was discharging her guns.

The John Adams commodore McCluney, sailed from New York on the 18th with supplies for the Gulf squadron.

The brig Washington - on surveying duty, left Brooklyn navy yard on the 17th and sailed from New York on the 21st for the Gulf of Mexico. [BAH]

NR 68.336 26Jul1845: fear of an embargo of American ships, calls for declaration of war

MEXICO. - Latest. The schooner Sarah Ann, Capt. Davidson, arrived at Philadelphia, was hurried from Tampico on the 1st of July, for fear of an immediate embargo upon American shipping. Tampico papers brought by Capt. D. strongly urge an immediate declaration of war. [BAH]

August 1845

NR 68.352 16Aug1845: Mexican determination to declare war when US troops possess Texas, Congress to assemble, preparations for war

Mexico. Vera Cruz dates to the 3d July, and City of Mexico dates to the 28th June, have been received at New Orleans. Nearly all the papers and letters indicate a determination on the part of Mexico to declare war on ascertaining that the United States troops have taken possession of Texas.

President Herrera has by decree, summoned congress to assemble on the 17th of July. The public journals are filled with electioneering for the presidency.- The issue will be decided on the 1st of August. Gen. Bustamente reached Mexico on the 21st of June, and immediately offered his sword and services to maintain the nationals claim on Texas. Vera Cruz is being fortified; the present standing army is given at some 30,000. The two Mexican steamships at Vera Cruz were totally unprepared for service. [BAH]

NR 68.372 16Aug1845: expectation of war with the US over the annexation of Texas

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO. Government appears to be in possession of intelligence, which renders a concentration of all the disposable portion of the United States army on the frontier of the newly acquired possession of Texas, indispensable. In addition to the forces which proceeded from the vicinity of New Orleans as mentioned in our last, the company of Light Dragoons which has been for some time stationed at Fort McHenry, (Baltimore,) and the company which has been stationed at Fort Hamilton, have received orders to be in readiness at a moment's warning, and dispositions are making for their embarkation for the mouth of the Aransas. Arms, fixed ammunition, gun-carriages, &c., are shipping for the same direction in considerable quantities from our arsenals. General Scott, the commander-in-chief, is en route for the southwest. The Washington "Union," alluding to some erroneous statements that have been published relative to the orders issued, says: "As far as we are advised, our government are taking the necessary means to guard against the dangers which are reported to threaten the Texian frontier. The star-spangled banner is flying over that territory; and it will not abandon it. But our troops will not, unless there be the strongest reasons for the act, attack a Mexican fort, or drive off its garrison. They will stand upon the defensive as long as they honestly and properly can do so, and not provoke any hostilities even with the Mexicans. This, we presume, is the position they will take - these the instructions which we suspect have been issued."

The Mexican consul at New Orleans, Mr. Arangoiz, by the Mexican Schooner Relampago, from Vera Cruz, arrived at N. Orleans, received instructions from his government, in consequence of which his duties as consul were closed on the 6th inst., and he was to sail on the 9th inst.

Intelligence brought by the Relampago, so far as published, indicates very strongly, either a declaration of war, or an embargo upon American vessels. It was generally expected a Vera Cruz the day the Relampago sailed, that the nest mail from Mexico would bring decisive intelligence. That war would be declared, was the general opinion, and we learn verbally that the government of Mexico is making strenuous exertions to borrow $12,000,000 to carry it on. They were landing shot and shells from the Castle of San Juan de Ullao on the wharves of the former, as was said from fear that the castle might fall into the hands of the U. States. The only American merchant vessel at Vera Cruz were the Ann Louisa, to sail for New York on the 30th ult., and the Water Witch, to sail for this port on the 26th.

There were two French, one English, and one Spanish men-of-war at Vera Cruz, no American. The Mexican steamers of war, Montezuma and Gaudaloupe, were lying in the harbor, but they were talking of moving them to some safe place.

The El Veracruzano Libre, of the 16th ult. contains a very warm article on the subject of the Americans taking possession of Texas, one of the fairest of the Mexican provinces, -- the tenor of which may be judged of, by its concluding paragraph, which is in the following words:

"Mexicans! To arms! The common enemy, taking advantage of our disunion, menaces us, and is even now at the gates of the Republic. In the name of Independence, in the name of Mexican liberty, fly to inflict upon them the most exemplary chastisement, and God save the nation!" [BAH]

NR 68.384 16Aug1845: warlike statement of Cuevas to Congress, quotas for Army requisitioned

Postscript. This morning's mail brings further intelligence, brought by the Mexican schooner Relampago, to New Orleans, confirmatory of what is stated under the head of "Relations with Mexico," - and leaving very little doubt of a declaration of war being soon received. The schooner was reported at New Orleans on Sunday, and the news which she brought was not developed in full extent until the following Thursday, (7th inst.) on which day, the files of the Diario del Gobierno, of Mexico to the 19th ult., were furnished. Is it not odd that we should have to depend upon the Mexicans to furnish us with accounts from thence at such a moment?

The Mexican official journal of the 17th, contains a very long communication from the minister, Cuevas, to the two chambers, dated the 16th, reviewing the controversy with the United States, and indicating distinctly that a war must result. Official circulars, from the authorities, calling upon the departments, to furnish forthwith their quotas for the army, are paraded. In one of them dated 16th, Garcia Conde, says: "Mexico will not consent to give up one-half of her territory, from the base fear of losing the other." He calls upon the citizens "to sustain her rights, violated by a nation which refuses to acknowledge them, and obliges Mexico to maintain them by force, which it most undoubtedly will, or fall in the struggle."

Rumor in N. Orleans, was busy of course. Amongst other things, it was whispered that the declaration of war was actually brought by the Mexican schooner, but that the consul took care not to divulge it before himself and schooner should be beyond our jurisdiction.

The American naval force in the gulf at present is about ten sail, mounting an aggregate of two hundred guns. The commodore's ship, the Potomac frigate, we mentioned on undoubted authority some months since, mentioned on undoubted authority some months since, was in an unseaworthy condition. - The department, we presume, must have been in possession of similar information. She was ordered to sea not withstanding, and left Pensacola accordingly, on the 29th ult., for Vera Cruz, but she leaked so badly, that she had to "bout shop" and reached Pensacola again on the 5th inst., the commodore ordering the Saratoga towards Vera Cruz, and the Lawrence towards Galveston. [BAH]

NR 68.388 16Aug1845: Mexico - Congress - Mexican preparations for war with the US

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO. It is certainly remarkable, that during the delicate posture of our relations with Mexico, our government would seem to have depended upon chance to furnish intelligence of the progress of events there. We have been indebted to either British or French vessels of war for more than half of what news reaches us. The most important recent intelligence we derived from a Mexican vessel of war, the Relampago, and our editors quarrel with her because all she brought was not forthwith communicated. Our latest intelligence, prior to this morning, was by a French vessel of war at Pensacola. It is nearly a month since an American arrival has afforded any news for Mexico, until the arrival at last of the Water Witch, long looked for. She left Vera Cruz on the 5th inst., and reached Mobile on the 15th. The British brig of war Persian, reached Vera Cruz on the 27th ult. From Galveston, with intelligence of the annexation of Texas, and that a body of 4,000 Americans were expected at Galveston in a few days.

The propositions of the ministry, asking congress to declare war against the Unites States, and to raise the ways and means it would require, were still under discussion in the chambers. The difficulty no doubt, is in the latter clause.

Meantime troops are said to be on the road to the Texan frontier, to the number of 10,000 men.

The Vera Cruz correspondent of the Mobile Herald, thinks that the Mexican government is in no hurry to declare war, and that they will probably attempt to re-conquer Texas without declaring war. That would certainly be a very strange proceeding.

The presidential election commenced on the 1st inst. Four candidates were in the field. Herrera, who now exercises the duties of president, will probably be elected. Almonte, late minister here, has offered his services in the proposed war, and is the most formidable competitor of Herrera for the presidency.

The impression expressed from the first announcement of President Tyler’s project for annexing Texas, and frequently repeated since, in the columns of the National Register, that if that project was carried out, Mexico would declare war, has never wavered. The result now is not far off, one way or the other.

By the French ship of war Mercure, arrived at Pensacola from Vera Cruz, Mexican dates to the 21st July are received.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE PROPOSING A DECLARATION OF WAR.

The "Diario del Gobierno." Of the 21st July contains the following:

Report addressed by the minister of foreign affairs of Mexico, to the Chamber of Deputies. 20th July 1845.

The supreme government, after attentively examining the affairs of Texas, and the annexation of that department to the American union - after weighing carefully all the evils which the republic may suffer therefrom, if its offended honor and the integrity of its territory, thus seriously endangered, should not be vindicated by the means and in the form established by the law of nations - has decided, with the unanimous consent of the council, upon the painful extremity of a war with the United States. Although this resolution resting upon clear and acknowledged justice, and provoked by a series of grievances not to be borne without disgrace, has long since been indicated, and is conformable with the repeated demands of the nation; yet the government could not but reflect upon the responsibility involved by such a measure, and on the evident circumstances that, as the election of a constitutional president. And the establishment of a new administration, are near at hand, the chamber might consider it more natural to leave to that body the decision of a point of such transcendent importance. But the supreme government has not wished to appear, for a moment, less decided in favor of a just and national war, than it was disposed for a worth and honorable peace.

The government continues to prepare the most efficient measures for recovering Texas, and for placing the nation in the attitude most proper for it. If it does not effect all that it desires, it certainly does all that it can; and the chamber should not doubt either its efforts or its patriotism. One this very day are prepared the financial measures which must, from their nature, precede the execution of the present initiatory resolution.

The chamber will bear in mind the third part of the 34th article of the treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation with the United States. In the opinion of the government, it has already practiced over and above all that is therein required.

In virtue of what is here said, and of the circumstances and documents communicated to the chamber relative to this important affair, and under the conviction that the facts to which the first article of the following resolution refers will be confirmed; his excellency the president, at a council of the ministers, and with their full assent, has been pleased to order me to address the chamber, in the following terms, as approved by the council:

ARTICLE 1. From the moment when the supreme government shall know that the department of Texas has annexed to the American Union, or that troops from the Union have invaded it, is shall declare the nation at war with the United States of North America.

ARTICLE 2. The object of this war shall be to secure the integrity of the Mexican territory, according to its ancient limits, acknowledged by the United States in treaties from the year 1828 to 1836, and to insure the independence of the nation.

God and Liberty! - Mexico, July 21, 1845

Luis G. Cuevas
The papers received from Mexico and Monterey by this day's mail bring the following important times of news:

On the 22d of July, the government submitted to Congress a declaration of war against the United States - the said declaration to be made when there is news of the arrival of American troops in Texas. But the government recommends to Congress to act on a bill authorizing a loan of fifteen millions of dollars previous to acting on the war bill. It appears that the loan is almost completely negotiated - at least so the official papers gives us to understand.

By a dispatch from the Mexican consul at New Orleans, the general commanding this point has been informed of the shipment of troops and artillery at New Orleans, destined for Corpus Christi and Bexar. These troops amount to 2,000 men.

With regard to the movements of the troops here, we know positively that all the points along the line of the river will soon be covered - Arista has about 3,000 men; General Paredes is coming to Monterey with about four or five thousand; General Gaona is coming also with 3,000, and General Bustamente goes to New Mexico. Thus far, however, notwithstanding these preparations, I believe that hostilities are not so imminent as might at first be thought. - There is no general-in-chief appointed yet - no contracts for the necessary supplies of a campaign, or a serious incursion into Texas.

Some persons, generally well-informed, think that the government needs money greatly and is disposed to hold up the prospect of a war, in order to get the loan approved. The hope that foreign intervention will soon put an end to the difficulties between the two countries seems to be at the bottom of the ideas of this government, which on the other hand, if we may credit letters recently received from the capital, appears to be threatened with a new revolution.

By the next mail we shall probably have the debates of Congress on the loan bill and the war, and will then be better able to see into the future. [BAH]

THE GOVERNMENT FORCES. It will be seen by the contents of this number, that government is very properly concentrating the naval and military forces at their disposal, upon the frontier that is threatened.

General Taylor, with his "army of observation," numbered towards 2,000 men, by the last accounts from them, and he will soon have at least 5,000 regular troops. If these are concentrated, the Mexicans will probably take care to leave a fair space of neutral ground between them and many forces they are likely very soon to have in one body.

Nearly the whole of the United States army being thus moved beyond what was recently the bounds of the Union, the government of course relies, - and very properly may do so on such an occasion, upon the armed people of the Union to attend to any defense that may be required within the old limits.

The naval force ordered to the Gulf of Mexico, is likely to be formidable. We should regret to see distant points too much drained of a desirable force, leaving our commerce unprotected elsewhere, in order to make an unnecessary display at this one point. The Mexican naval force is known to be already hors de combat, and seeking safety from the American force now in the gulf. An exposed point abroad would soon be ascertained by privateersmen. [BAH]

TEXAS. The ship Suviah arrived at New Orleans on the 24th ult. From the Bay Aransas. She left the anchorage at the place on the 16th. Nothing has transpired of any interest since our last accounts from that point. Previous to the vessel's sailing, the steamer Monmouth came off, and reported that war had been declared. How the news reached our force on the main land we are not informed. It may be that general Taylor had received recent intelligence to that effect from the frontier; and then, again it army have been a repletion of the menacing news received here a short time since. General Taylor, with his command, had left the neighborhood of St. Joseph's and established himself at San Patricio, on the north bank of the Nueces.

A letter from Santa Fe, written on the 18th of July, and published in the St. Louis Era, states that much interest is felt in the at section of country in relation to the annexation of Texas. A large portion of the inhabitants are said to be anxious for annexation, and in favor of the Rio del Norte as the boundary, which would include them in the union.

"Mr. Armstrong, on the 26th June, asked leave to introduce a bill baring certain claims, debts, judgments, &c. which he said he would read, and explain how it was connected with the subject of annexation.

The object of the bill was to prevent the collection of claims against the inhabitants of Texas by citizens of the United States.

Mr. Armstrong said there were many citizens in many of the counties who would be relieved by a bill of this nature. There were a great many person in this republic, he had no doubt in the world, who would oppose the measure of annexation unless they thought their rights and interest would be guarded and protected by the action of congress."

"Mr. Smith, of Fanning, was opposed to the bill. He said: - "It proposes to do away with all just demands against those who have emigrated to this country from any of the states." The measure of annexation, had been carried by a parcel of people who have come into the country very lately; and now they wanted to get rid of paying their honest debts.

'Why sir, said Mrs. S. 'as I came from home on my way here, I passed through a people who were about to hand me; not three out of five or whom had been in the country long enough to take the oath of allegiance; and these people wanted to control my vote.' Vote to exonerate us from our just debt or we will hang you.

"Mr. Armstrong replied: ' many have come to this country under adverse and very embarrassing circumstances.' The very idea of being again harassed is enough to terrify them, and five them into opposition to the great measure of annexation."

"There was a good deal further debate on the bill, and it was somewhat amended, but finally carried by a vote of 22 to 17. So the Texians are pretty effectually protected against their creditors in the states."

Mr. Ashbel Smith's letter. Mr. Ashbel Smith, late minister of the government of Texas to England and France, has addressed the following letter to he editor of a paper in Texas, and in anticipation of its appearance through that channel, has authorized its publication in the New York Journal of Commerce. As the late journey of Mr. Smith has been the subject of a good deal of curiosity, we republish his letter, although we do not perceive that it makes any important disclosures, or gives us much new light upon the history of the annexation or the negotiations relating to it.

[Boston Advertiser. Ohio River, Steamboat Pike, August - , 1845 To H. Stuart, esq.] [BAH]

NR 69.003 06Sep1845 war loan, orders to troops to position themselves in advance of the Rio Bravo

MEXICO.

The following is an extract from a letter of the 2d August, which was received in Washington. Union.

"I have the honor to inform you, that by the British express; which left Mexico the day after the amil of this morning, congress had agreed to the call of the minister for a loan of 15,000,000. The next thing is to get it.

I deem it my duty also to state, that I have just seen a letter from the British consul, sent to his house here, wherein he observes that orders had been issued, and approved by the war committee, for the troops on the frontier to take up their position ten leagues in advance of the Rio Bravo; and if attacked, to defend themselves.
&c., &c." [BAH]

NR 69.003 21Jun1845: news of the declaration of war reaches the Army in Texas, Gen. Zachary Taylor established on the Nueces

TEXAS. The ship Suviah arrived at New Orleans on the 24th ult. From the Bay of Aransas. She left the anchorage at that place on the 16th. Nothing has transpired of any interest since our last accounts from that point. Previous to the vessel's sailing, the steamer Monmouth came off, and reported that war had been declared. How the news reached our force on the main land we are not informed. It may be that general Taylor had received recent intelligence to that effect from the frontier; and then, again, it may have been a repetition of the menacing news received here a short time since. General Taylor, with his command, had left the neighborhood of St. Joseph's, and established himself at San Patricio, on the north bank of the Nueces.

A letter from Santa Fe, written on the 18th of July, and published in the St. Louis Era, states that much interest is felt in that section of country in relation to the annexation of Texas. A large portion of the inhabitants are said to be anxious for annexation, and in favor of the Rio del Norte and the boundary, which would include them in the union.

"Mr. Armstrong, on the 26th June, asked leave to introduce a bill baring certain claims, debts, judgments, &c. which he said he would read, and explain how it was connected with the subject of annexation.

"The object of the bill was to prevent the collection of claims against the inhabitants of Texas by citizens of the United States.

"Mr. Armstrong said there were 'many worthy citizens in many of the counties who would be relieved by a bill of this nature. There were a great many persons in this republic, he had no doubt in the would, who would oppose the measure of annexation unless they thought their rights and interests would be guarded and protected by the action of congress." [BAH]

NR 69.004  06Sep1845: notice of Gen. Zachary Taylor and dragoons on the Nueces

The steamer Undine left Corpus Christi on the 18th ult. Gen Taylor had succeeded in removing the 3d and 4th regiments of infantry, and a large part of his military stores to that place, and had fixed his headquarters there. A breastwork of earth had been thrown up, and nearly completed. A few pieces of ordinance, procured in that town, were brought into requisition. No certain information concerning the advance of the Mexicans had been received; but it was rumored that Arista was assembling a large force at Matamoras and along the Rio Grande.

The United States Dragoons under command of Col. Twiggs, had crossed the Colorado, and were on their march to Corpus Christi - all well. A company of Mexican traders were expected in the next day. The location of the encampment is salubrious and pleasant, being immediately upon the beach of the bay, and open to the sea breeze. The health of the camp was good.

At Aransas Bay on the 21st the schooner Florinda, with coal, &c., from N. Orleans, had just arrived. - the wreck of the schooner Swallow, on the Aransas bar, had been stripped of her masts, sails, rigging, &c., and some of her cargo waved. A sale was to take place on the 23d inst.

The Undine arrived at Galveston on the 23d inst., replenished wood and water, and left at noon on the 24th, and was ascending the Mississippi on the 26th the steam ship John S. McKi was in port and advertised to leave at 3 o'clock that afternoon.

The convention was still in session at Austin on the 13th, but it was anticipated that their labors would close on the 23d.

The Houston Telegraph of the 20th contains the letter of E. Allen, acting secretary of state, to the Hon. Ashbel Smith, informing him of the basis of the separate independence of the republic, and telling him, that under such circumstances it is unnecessary for him any longer to continue to discharge the duties of minister to the European governments.

News of the arrival of the dragoons, under the command of Colonel Twiggs, at San Antonio had reached Galveston. They performed their march at the rate of twenty miles per day, and with very little sickness among their numbers - 450. They expected to join the army at Corpus Christi under Gen. Taylor. [BAH]

NR 69.005  06Sep1845: party of Mexican soldiers approach Castroville, but flee

The Houston Telegraph of the 21st instant., says that a party of about seventy Mexican soldiers approached within 16 miles of Castroville, about a fortnight ago. Captain Hays received information of their movements, and went out to attack them; but they were apprised of his approach by one of their spies, and hastily decamped. It is supposed that they intended to attack Castroville for the purpose of capturing a quantity of goods that had been deposited there by some Mexican traders. The traders reported that they were under the command of a man by the name of Platina; that they belonged to a detachment of Cartadores, that has recently been stationed at Presidio. [BAH]
Dear sir - The steamer Creole, captain Hein arrived here yesterday morning from your city and about noon ran down to the forts, where she received on board the troops destined for Texas. Late in the evening she took her departure, accompanied with the wishes of all our citizens for her speedy and safe arrival at her port of destination.

We have but little news here just now, but are looking quite anxiously for the arrival of the sloop of war Saratoga, daily expected from Mexico with important news. I say daily expected - and so she is by many of our citizens - but why she is expected, I cannot tell you. The last accounts we had from that portion of the gulf lead us to suppose that Mexico was about declaring war. Should such a supposition be correct, the proper station for the Saratoga, as well as Com. Conner and the squadron now lying here under his command, would be at Vera Cruz. And for my part, I cannot see the reason why the Saratoga should run from Mexico as soon as war is declared.

My own notion is, that the whole squadron should be lying off Vera Cruz; and when information of the declaration of war is received, it should be dispatched to this country, opt by a sloop of war or frigate, but by one of the fast sailing brigs - either the Somers or Lawrence. But the idea is supremely ridiculous, to me, of a large squadron lying at anchor in one of our own parts, where they are not wanted while only one of our sloops of war is stationed where the whole fleet is required. When war is declared of course that one ship will have to bring the news - and by the time the whole fleet can repair to the scene of action, perhaps millions of property will be destroyed by the privateering pirates of Mexico!

It is said that the fleet will sail from here in the course of two or three days; - but as the same rumor has been current for the last week or two, I will not vouch for its correctness. One thing I will vouch for, however, and that is, hat Com. Conner has not yet transferred his flag from the Potomac, but is still on board that vessel, tinkering away at her leak. He seems to have a mortal dread of going to sea in any other vessel than the "frigate." [Mobile Herald.] [BAH]

Nine-tenths of our people, caeteris paribus, would rather have a little fighting than not. The old Adam is about as rampant in our American republicanism as in any other branch of the Anglo Saxondom. - They rather prefer to do the fighting in question themselves: as the next best thing, they like to look on and see it done by others. And, whether done by self or deputy, they like to see it done well, according to the old established laws and principles of the fighting theory. All this, we repeat, we knew perfectly well, and are therefore very far from surprised at finding our doctrine and advice in regard to this Mexican War (if Mexican war there is to be) civilly but decidedly remonstrated against at once by three of our most respectable contemporaries - the Evening Post, Albany Argus, and the Union; the last carrying multiplied weight of its representative action, which means nothing more nor less than vehement attack, with a view to put an early end to the threatened hostilities by some prompt and crushing blow; or what may be called the offensive defensive system. Be it so if so it must. Be the sin and the shame, be the crime and the disgrace - whatever of either there may be - on the heads where they may belong. We wash our hands of the blood, our shirts of the stain. If such a war is to come, we shall sing no paeans to its heroes, no Te-Deums for its victories; we shall covet none of its laurels. - Mexico has been hardly dealt with in the sole business; dealt with a weak and impotent one. She has been too much disregarded and despised. While no substantive rights, have been injured - and we have the whole law as well as the whole "profits" on our side - we have been too indifferent to her feeling, to contemptuous of those imaginary rights which have been not the less sincere for being absurd. It has been all forliter in re on our side, with none of the suaviter in modo, and the relation between the two in point of power would at least have made a little of the latter a graceful adornment of the former.

Different influences unhappily ruled the hour: perhaps after the 4th of March it was too late for change.

And now the result is, that Mexico, mean and miserable as she is - malicious, too, if you please - is about to march up to certain demolition, in a military collision with us on the simple point of honor; reluctantly as we all know - hopelessly as he herself cannot but feel; not to recover Texas - not to gain anything imaginable; but simply because she feels "concerned" in a position where an attempt at least at war seems vitally due to the defense of her national honor, the preservation of that popular pride of patriotism which it is not for our people to deny as a virtue.

It is not in human nature - not in ours, at least - to look with satisfaction upon any fight between big and little - between a lion and a rat; even though all the right may be on the former side, our own side; and all the wrong on the other, the enemy's side. If it were only a royal Bengal tiger, now or an elephant, or a hippopotamus, or any thing at least looking tolerable even in bulk, it might pass. But the lion to roar against a rat - the eagle to strain his great war-scream against a buzzard! We have no stomach for the business, and never shall have.

Conciliation! Conciliation! Conciliation! Between powerful and weak it is never too late for conciliation. We would have our government send a special mission of conciliation, with unusual form and solemnities, to explain and justify our right, to soothe sincere irritations, to satisfy offended scruples of pride, to deprecate endless, foolish, and criminal effusions of blood. Let there be at the same time overwhelming force concentrated at the necessary points, both for defense and for bloodlessly stringent blockade, if necessary. How gracefully would such an attitude become our country towards Mexico? How beyond all compare superior the moral glory of a peace thus secured, to that of a submission extorted from crushed, despairing, and still hating impotence, by a thousand San Jacintos!
But such counsels will avail but little, either with our people, or, as a necessary consequence, with our people, or, as a necessary consequence, with our Government. Alas that is should be so! So much the worse for them and for us all - for Mexico - for the poor wretches of Mexican soldiers, dragged in coffles to battles not their own; for ourselves, for our own true honor; for the cause of Christianity; for the progress of the Human race. [N.Y. Morn. News.]

NR 69.006  06Sep1845: operations at Pensacola to transport troops to Texas

The Gulf Squadron. A letter from the correspondent of the Mobile Herald, dated Pensacola 20th August, says - The John Adams came in one the 18th instant - and the steamers yesterday - officers and drew all in first rate fighting order. Our bay, just now, presents a magnificent view and a warlike appearance, not withstanding several shops of the squadron are absent in the Gulf. The frigate John Adams, steamers Princeton and Mississippi, and brig Porpoise, are riding at anchor in our bay. [BAH]

NR 69.006  06Sep1845: payment for three of the six vessels built for Mexico at New York

Mexican vessels of war. - About eighteen months since Messrs. Brown & Bell, extensive ship builders of this city, received an order from the Mexican government for six schooners of war, of about 80 tons burthen each. They were completed about six months since, and lay at the yard of Mess's. Brown & Bell, awaiting an order from the Mexican government accompanied with the money, which was to be paid for them. The order came, with plea of inability to pay. About two months since, however, three of them were paid for and dispatched, and the others now lie at Messrs. Brown & Bell's yard, awaiting a like demand. [New York Herald.] [BAH]

NR 69.018  13Sep1845: rumor of movements of Mexican troops toward Texas

Captain Gomez, of the schooner Joaquim, who brought the foregoing news, states that there was a rumor when he sailed from Tampico that General Herrera was elected president, and that fifteen hundred troops were marching from the interior to join Gen. Paredes, who had already tow thousand; that when the junction was effected the forces would march upon Galveston by the northern route, while Gen. Arista attacked Gen. Taylor. Captain G. also says the Mexicans had dispatched emissaries to stir up the slaves in Texas. [BAH]

NR 69.018  13Sep1845: Gen. Mariano Arista's address and call for forces

The Cabinet. The dissolution of the cabinet was announced to Congress by the President, on the 4th August. Tose Maria Ortez Manasterio, secretary of foreign affairs of government and police was the only one that consented to remain. That officer, the 11th, officially informs congress, that "His excellency the President ad interim requests me to communicate to you, that notwithstanding the talents, the patriotism and integrity of those who, in the present difficulties have the honor to administer the departments, Viz: Luis G. Cuevas, Mariano Riva Palacio, Luis de la Rosa, and Pedro Garcia Conde, he has, with regret, found himself compelled to accept their resignation. Until a new ministry can be formed in order that the public affairs may not suffer. His Excellency therefore confers the offices of Minister of Justice and of War upon Jose Maria Duran and Juan Luis de Leon, and upon me, besides that I now administer, the office of Minister of Finance.

In the Diario del Gobierno, of the 12th, there is a communication from the same Minister thanking those who had resigned, for the ability with which those who had resigned for the ability with which they had discharged their duties. The new Ministry was not formed at the last dates, nor will it be done before the inauguration of the new President, and who that would be was not yet certain.

The Diario of the 12th contained two proclamations of General Arista; on e addressed to the people of the departments of Coahuila, Nuevo Leon, and Tamaulipas, calling them to arms; the other to the troops under his command to excite their marital ardor. The last is in the following language:

"Comrades: The Supreme Executive has sent to me by express the news that the United States, in pursuance of their ambitious view, having taken possession of the department of Texas, he had demanded a declaration of war from the congress against that unjust nation.

The time to fight is come. We must prepare with the ardor inspired by duty and patriotism when an attack is make upon the silk, the honor, and the pride of the nation."
I am sure, comrades, that those presumptuous Americans will be greatly disappointed, when they find that our soldiers are not so contemptible as they thought and that cannot conquer them.

I address you under the influence of a lively enthusiasm. All fanciful doubt is vanished; the question is decided; and we are about to commence the most righteous war that we ever waged. Laurels await us! To arms! It is the only means of avenging our honor, insulted by a nation that boasts of its liberality and civilization.

Arms are the only arguments to use against banditti and men without good faith. Let us hope for hat justice which is invoked by all society and the decision of the civilized world.

Our lot will be envied by the rest of the army. - We are nearest the theatre of war; we are the first to avenge the outrages on our country, and to ravish from the usurpers the object of their rapine.

Large bodies of troops are on their march; they will soon be here to share our dangers and repulse the enemy.

The veterans of the north have given proofs their valor and constancy; they are accustomed to conquer this presumptuous race I know your worth. And how dearly you love to serve your country. It is for this that I am pleased to command you and to lead you the combat, in which your comrade and best friend will be prod to follow our example." "Mariano Arista." [BAH]

The official journal at Washington, considers the latest news from Mexico, as "full of Fury, but signify nothing." The Union says: "Congress had voted a loan of fifteen millions, but where is the money to come from? They talk of sending 25,000 troops to the frontier, but the number advancing falls far short of that. They threaten to make a rush upon Texas; but the tardiness of their troops, and the alacrity of our own, will prevent any coup de main. Gen. Taylor conceives himself to be strong enough to withstand any attack which the Mexicans at Matamoras may affect to make upon him; and as soon as he receives further reinforcements of regular troops, he is determined to send back to New Orleans the two gallant companies of volunteers who have flushed to his standard. The Mexicans talk of striking us with our own formal declaration of war; but the threat has reached us before the blow, and, "forewarned," we are now "forearmed." We can scarcely suspect, therefore, that any blow will be armed at us. We defy all the threats, whilst we despise all their power."

"England probably holds peace or war in the palm of her hand; but she does not appear willing to assist Mexico, or to disturb the peace of the world. - The most violent journals in London, which have bitterly denounced our conduct in Texas, and grossly misrepresented our character, seem unwilling to kindle a war out of the passions of Mexico. There is nothing warlike either in the effusions of her press, or in the speeches of ministers on the eve of the adjournment of parliament. The government has literally dispersed with out any preparation to meet the events of war on this side of the Atlantic. The queen and her cortège have repaired to the continent. Lord Aberdeen has joined the pageant. Sir Robert Peel has retired to the country, to kill grouse. We see no signs, indeed, of any expected movement on the great theater of political events. But if England does not stand at the back of Mexico, and supply her with the means of war, it is not easy to imagine that she will rush into hostilities with the United States.

"The re-election of Herrera will usher in some change of counsels. It will give confidence to the measure, which he may think proper to adopt. The force of this government may silence the clamors of the mob. The country is partially recovering from the first impression and the strong excitement arising from the annexation of Texas. Things cannot long remain in the statu quo. The scene must shift. A new act will be introduced. If his troops at Matamoras cannot cross the Rio Grande with impunity, he will probably begin to feel the danger of doing anything, and the ridicule of doing nothing. - We are sorry to hear of the civilities, which were exchanged at Vera Cruz, between the Saratoga and the town. We are not very much surprised to hear the first whisper of a disposition, on her part, to resume the negotiation. Sir Robert Peel has retired to the country, to kill grouse. We see no signs, indeed, of any expected movement on the great theater of political events. But if England does not stand at the back of Mexico, and supply her with the means of war, it is not easy to imagine that she will rush into hostilities with the United States.

"From the Army of Observation. Dispatches from Gen. Taylor, as late as the 26th of August, have reached the war department by express. The troops ordered to Texas, to compose the "army of occupation," are rapidly arriving, together with an ample supply of the munitions of war. Colonel Twiggs' regiment of dragoons were at San Patricio on the 24th, in excellent condition, having well sustained their long march, and finding, though the whole route, a plentiful supply of water, provisions, and forage. The horses are in a fine condition, and fit for immediate active service, should there be occasion to put them to it. This regiment was expected to be at Corpus Christi on the 27th.
Gen. Taylor, at no time since his arrival at Aransas Bay, felt any solicitude for the safety of his command, or the necessity of calling for auxiliary force, even from Texas. The two gallant companies of artillery, which, with such promptness and patriotic spirit volunteered to go to Texas from New Orleans, under the belief that their country stood in need of their services, have arrived at general Taylor's camp.-As there has not been, and probably will not be, any emergency requiring them, they will not, probably, be long detained from their homes. It is the general's intention to discharge them as soon as a few more of the regular artillery, now on the way to Texas, shall have arrived - unless things on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande shall assume a more threatening aspect.

The most reliable accounts represent that there were near the middle of August, only about five hundred regular Mexican troops at Matamoras; and that general Arista was to leave Monterey on the 4th of that month for the former place - a distance of three hundred miles - with fifteen hundred more troops, five hundred of them cavalry; but there was no news of his arrival at Matamoras. It is not known of believed that there are regular Mexican troops at any other point on the Rio Grande. It was probably the original intention to employ these troops in carrying out the threat of Mexico to take possession of Texas; but the presence of the United States army, and the preparations in Texas to meet and repel their advance, have caused this design to be abandoned, for the present at least. The regular troops of the United States now in Texas, and those on the way there, are deemed sufficient to keep in check the Mexican forces assembled, or likely to be assembled, on the Rio Grande. Gen. Taylor's attention has not been exclusively continued to the Mexicans. He has had an eye to the Camanches, and taken measures to guard the country from they're incursions.

The accounts of the climate at Corpus Christi are very favorable. Generally speaking, the troops are in fine health - better, it is supposed, than they would have been at the posts from which most of them were removed.  [BAH]
Latest from Mexico. - Letters from Pensacola of the 1st September contain dispatches from Vera Cruz of the 18th and 31st August. We have only time, this evening, to state the substance of the information they convey. An opinion very generally prevailed at Vera Cruz, according to the last accounts, that Mexico would not formally declare war against the United States, and that the government would be able to realize but a very small portion of the loan, if any, which had been authorized - so low was the rate of interest. It was said that, in lieu of a declaration, Mexico would carry on hostilities vigorously against Texas; and they talked of making a rush upon her with 25,000 men; but this was generally considered as a sheer fable.

The mail of the 18th had brought news from the city of Mexico of the election of general Herrera to the presidency, and the formation of a new cabinet, consisting of Manvel Pena y Pena, (Minister of Foreign Relations), Pedro Areeaya, (Minister of War), and Fernandez del Castillo, minister of the treasury.

On the 16th August, Capt. Shubrick, commander of the United States ship Saratoga, exchanged salutes with the batteries of Vera Cruz.

A detachment of the 7th Regiment of Infantry, under Major Brown, comprising companies A, E, and K, left Pensacola in the steamer Creole on he 24th August, for Aransas Bay, Texas.

The officers belonging to the command are Brevet Major G. J. Bains; Captains H.S. Miles, D.P. Whiting, 1st Lieuts. A. Montgomery, J.R. Scott; 2d Lieuts. Hayman, Earl Vandorn; Brevet 2d Lieutenants F. Gardinder, J.M. Henry. Company D Captain R. H. Ross, will join the regiment in Texas, as soon as it is relieved by company F, 1st artillery, now on its way to Pensacola.

Loud complaints were uttered against those in charge of affairs, on its being asserted that General Taylor's artillery in Texas were without guns. The U.S. artillery regiments except one company in each regiment, always have been armed and drilled as Infantry, and have not had field pieceed. They are called artillery in the law, and are meant for garrisons to the sea-coast fortifications. We have four regiments of this artillery, or forty companies. Of these four companies are, by law, equipped as field artillery, with guns and horses. Four such companies have been ordered to Texas. The other twelve artillery companies sent thither are armed and instructed as infantry; and, of course, are with out "guns" - that is, "field cannon."

NR 69.020 13Sep1845: complaints about lack of artillery with Gen. Zachary Taylor

Several Mexican traders had arrived at Kinney's Ranche, near Corpus Christi, bringing rumors that Arista had entirely recovered from his late illness, and had taken up his line of march, with a considerable force, to attack Gen, Taylor. Other reports, again, represent Arista as still being at Matamoras, collecting his men together.  [BAH]

NR 69.021 13Sep1845: attempts to raise troops in Missouri to march against New Mexico

Volunteering. The St. Louis Era; of August 23, says: "Major General Lee, of this division, has made a publication, expressing his willingness to raise a force of 5,000 volunteers, to march against New Mexico as soon as he may be authorized so to do. He declares his willingness to command in person any force that may be thus raised, and is ready to enroll the names of such as are willing to engage in actual rough service, and to meet danger in any form that it may present itself. There are many brave men in our city and state who would make good officers and reliable soldiers in such an expedition. There will be no difficulty in raising an ample volunteer force, if the government will grant the authority and furnish the means and facilities, and will entrust the command of the expedition to men who will command the public confidence.  [BAH]

NR 69.020-69.021 13Sep1845: complaints about Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines' efforts to enlist volunteers

General Gaines. The N. York Courier says: We have private letters from New Orleans which give much more detailed accounts of the proceedings of Gen. Gaines, with regard to anticipated hostilities with Mexico, than have yet been spread before the public. He is unquestionably creating a great deal of trouble, involving the treasury in vast expense, disturbing the minds and destroying the business of many young men in the southern states, and in great variety of ways, doing a great amount of evil, and all without the slightest cause.

In his conversation upon the subject we are told he talks wildly. He is known to have said that unless fighting grows out of our present troubles with Mexico, he fears he shall never again see an active campaign: and wishes, and intends, to lead 40,000 men to the city of Mexico! This personal ardor, however admirable and praiseworthy in a veteran soldier, must not be allowed to plunge us into unnecessary war; and under the circumstances the executive could do no otherwise than to disavow his proceedings. We trust he has before this taken measures to check them and to remedy the evil they may have caused.

Another letter from New Orleans says that to hear the general talk, one would suppose he was planning another Campaign of Austerlitz. "I am daily hearing," says the writer, "of young men who have abandoned their regular situations of business, to enroll in the volunteers he has called for; and today, one who has actually given up a clerkship of $1000 per annum for the station and rank of corporal! Yesterday he reviewed he reviewed one of these recruited or rather recruiting regiments, with a brilliant staff, and made a ridiculous speech to them. There were a number of fine and respectable young men in the ranks, whom I looked upon as regular victims to the unnecessary excitement - but the largest portion were the greatest looking loafers and rowdies, who have joined for the sake of obtaining bread and clothing. They were of all sizes and nations, and had all kinds of clothes, many without hats, shoes, stockings, coats or vests - regular Fallstaff's men - "food for powder, food for Powder, and well calculated fo full a ditch." "I heard to day that he had written Texan government calling on them to embody 3000 volunteers for the service of the U. States! It is so much in character and accordance with his mode of talking, and the authority I derived it from so good, that I have little doubt of the fact."

Another letter states that Gen. Gaines has ordered one of the colonels of the new regiments to go on and uniform his recruits, and that the U. States would pay for it! The governor of Louisiana is also issuing commissions to captains and subalterns, all of who are exerting themselves to fill up their respective commands. Gen. Gaines has said positively that he had made requisitions on all the states lying on the: Mississippi, between New Orleans and the Ohio River!

The Washington union of the 11th says: "Everyday is increasing the regular force of Gen. Taylor, on the Texan frontier. He is preparing to throw his advance lines, with the dragons in front, first towards, and then upon the Rio Grande: and though he will not interrupt any Mexican post which is now to the east of the river, yet he will prevent any reinforcements which the Mexicans may attempt to thoro on this side of the river. [BAH]

The official journal at Washington, considers the latest news from Mexico, as "full of fury, but signifying nothing." The Union says: "Congress had voted a loan of fifteen millions, but where is the money to come from? They talk of sending 25,000 troops to the frontier, but the number advancing falls far short of that. They threaten to make a rush upon Texas; but the tardiness of their troops, and the alacrity of our own, will prevent any coup de main. Gen. Taylor conceives himself to be strong enough to withstand any attack which the Mexicans at Matamoras may affect to make upon him; and as soon as he receives further reinforcements of regular troops, he is determined to send back to New Orleans the two gallant companies of volunteers who have rushed to his standard. The Mexicans talk of striking us without any formal declaration of war; but the threat has reached us before the blow, and, "forewarned," we are now "forearmed." We can scarcely suspect, therefore, that any blow will be aimed at us. We defy all the threats, whilst we despise all their power."

"England probably holds peace or war in the palm of her hand; but she does not appear willing to assist Mexico, or to disturb the peace of the world. - The most violent journals in London, which have bitterly denounced our conduct in Texas, and grossly misrepresented our character, seem unwilling to kindle a war out of the passions of Mexico. There is nothing warlike either in the effusions of her press, or in the speeches of ministers on the eve of the adjournment of parliament. The government has literally dispersed without any preparation to meet the events of war on this side of the Atlantic. The queen and her cortege have repaired to the continent. Lord Aberdeen has joined the pageant. Sir Robert Peel has retired to the country, to kill grouse. We see no signs, indeed, of any expected movement on the great theatre of political events. But if England does not stand at the back of Mexico, and supply her with the means of war, it is not easy to imagine that she will rush into hostilities with the United States.

"The re-election of Herrera will usher in some change of counsels. It will give confidence to the measures which he may think proper to adopt. The force of this government may silence the clamors of the mob. The country is partially recovering from the first impression and the strong excitement arising from the annexation of Texas. Things cannot long remain in the slatu in quo. The scene must shift. A new act will be introduced. If his troops at Matamoras cannot cross the Rio Grande with impunity, he will probably begin to feel the danger of doing anything, and the ridicule of doing nothing. - we are not sorry to hear of the civilities which were exchanged at Vera Cruz, between the Saratoga and the town. We are not very much surprised to hear the first whisper of a disposition, on her part, to resume the negotiation. But we shall scarcely encourage any such proposition, until we are satisfied that Mexico cannot possibly mistake our motives - until she be sufficiently impressed with a sense of her own inferiority - until she distinctly sees that we have no desire to make any but a permanent and honorable peace; and that no peace can be permanent and honorable which does not settle all the caused of difference between the two countries. We can scarcely enter into any negotiations until all these insulting threats, all this gasconade from Arista and others, which comes to us, had ceased." [BAH]
There appears to have been a question made with the Mexican press certainly, and probably in the cabinet and in congress, whether to declare war, or to attempt the reconquest of Texas without formally declaring war. The latter expedient is probably resorted to quiet away the popular impulse. If a war comes from Mexico at all, it will no doubt be before the fever, which is, now up, has time to subside. It is possible, and we sincerely hope that it may turn out to be so, that overtures for an adjustment of the dispute and a settlement of boundaries may have struck the president of Mexico as a safer course, all things considered, that to trust to the fortunes of a war, such as was impending. - However that may be, certain it is, that congress has adjourned without declaring war.

NR 69.034-69.035  20Sep1845: Gen. Anastasio Bustamente appointed commander of the Army of Texas, history of the revolution which banished him

The El Monitor, of the 22d August, announces the appointment of Gen. Bustamente, as commander in chief of the army of Texas.

It will be recollected that this officer was president of Mexico at the period of the war between that country and France in 1838. That war was managed with considerable ability on the part of the Mexicans. Afterwards when Santa Anna then president Mexico, was defeated and taken prisoner at the battle of San Jacinto, Bustamente was again called to the presidency, and retained that situation until Santa Anna availing of the spirit of disaffection gained to his cause two of the most prominent generals, Paredes and Cortazar. The former being then military chief or "commandante" of the department of Guadalaxara published a manifesto against Bustamente, and in favor of Santa Anna, and marched with all the forces he could muster for the city Mexico. At Guanajuato he was joined by Cortazar. Santa Anna, who was in command at Vera Cruz, and was there very popular, marched with the forces of that department, and being joined by the levies of Puebla, formed a junction with Paredes in the vicinity of Mexico. Bustamente had a considerable force in the city, but was exceedingly embarrassed for want of funds and probably doubtful of his officers. To avoid a sanguinary conflict probably in the streets of the city, he entered into the famous convention of Tacubaya, by which a convention to frame a new constitution was to be summoned, Santa Anna, in the mean time, having supreme authority; and Bustamente was banished to republic. From that period he was absent from the republic, until very recently. He reached Cuba from Europe and the same time that Santa Anna, now himself a banished man, arrived there. From Cuba, Bustamente proceeded to Mexico, and offered his services to his country in their contemplated war for the recovery of Texas. The offer has been accepter, and he is now at the head of the army. The military commanders generally depose and set up governments, just as the Mamelukes used to do in Turkey.

NR 69.035    20Sep1846: news from the Army of Observation at Corpus Christi

THE ARMY OF OBSERVATION. The New Orleans Bee says that a gentleman who left Corpus Christi on the 29th and Aransas Bay on the 31st ult. States that Gen. Taylor and his army were still at Corpus Christi awaiting further orders. Col. Twiggs, in command of the regiment of dragoons, arrived on the 26th ult. In fine health and spirits. Three companies of Mexican traders arrived at Corpus Christi about the 26th ult. And had purchased largely of goods. They report that a regiment of Mexican troops had started from Tampico about six weeks ago, for Metamora, about 700 in number, 400 of whom had deserted or died for want of food and water. They were also deserting from every post throughout Mexico. Gen. Paredes was at Monterey with from 800 to 1,400 men, and found it impossible to keep his men from deserting."

NR 69.036   20Sep1845: position of the Army of Observation at Corpus Christi

The position taken by Gen. Taylor is one of extreme beauty; and when the eye first rests upon his camp, clustered with a thousand spotless white tents, along the shelly margin of the shore of Corpus Christi Bay, irresistible bursts of admiration follow! It is a position of security as well as beauty.

His tents are pitched on a piece of table land that reaches about a quarter of a mile to a range of hills; at the distance of half a mile from the crest of these he has stationed, as an out-guard, a force of one hundred and twenty hardy and well trained Texans, to whose fidelity is entrusted this otherwise assailable point. Major Gally, commanding the volunteers from New Orleans, is entrusted with guarding the extreme left, whilst the extreme right is guarded by col. Twiggs, commanding the 2d dragoons. The center is composed of the 3d, 4th, and 7th regiments of infantry.

The commanding general has thrown up a field work, a wall of shells and sand, six feet thick and three hundred yards in length on his right. In case of an overpowering attack from this quarter, the troops stationed outside of this wall are to retreat behind it. The whole length of the line along the shore occupied, appears to be about one mile and a half.

It is probably one of the healthiest and pleasantest spots in the world. From the earliest dawn refreshing breeze invigorate the body, dissipate the intensity of the heat, and nerve the system to a healthful action. The cool nights invite weariness to repose disturbed neither by the promenading flea, nor the buzzing mosquito.

The only drawback to continuing this encampment is the scarcity of wood and water - the former, the troops haul about three miles, and the latter is quite brackish - though I believe there are one or two small wells in camp which supply a very fair beverage.

The officers appear to enjoy themselves amazingly - considering they were supposed to be all cut up! They purchase Mexican ponies at from $10 to $30, and excellent nags they are to ride too. The waters abound with fish and oysters, both of a superior kind, and the prairies adjacent with rich flavored venison.

Large and fat beeves are slaughtered daily for the use of the troops; all which, with the liberal supplies, of Uncle Sam, these occupiers of an independent nation's soil can get along mighty well with.

There is a rumor in camp, to which the utmost credit is given, that fifteen hundred Mexicans have recently marched to Matamoras for its additional security. This is all the news about the movements of the enemy known here.

It is supposed gen. Taylor will act in this way, viz: Wait for two months in his present position, to know what the Mexicans will do. If they do nothing, our government will send a commissioner to Mexico effused to receive the commissioner and blindly turns away from a peaceable settlement, then our forces will immediately occupy the mouth and borders of the Rio Grande, and establish that as the boundary, whether or no. [BAH]

NR 69.048 20Sep1845: Army of Observation in good health and spirits

"THE ARMY OF OBSERVATION." Accounts to the 6th instant from Corpus Christi, left the army in health and spirits.

NR 69.051 27Sep1845: regiment of volunteers for service in Mexico being raised at Saint Louis

At St. Louis a regiment of volunteers, for active military service in the event of hostilities between Mexico and the United States, was being raised in hat city. Several of the regular organized corps, in that city and the adjoining counties, were moving in the matter, and notice had been given that volunteers could enroll themselves in them or form a new companies until the regiment embraced six or eight hundred men. Major gen. Lee, of the second division of Missouri militia, has published an address calling upon the division to hold themselves in readiness for a summons. [BAH]

October 1845

NR 69.065-69.066 04Oct1845: more troops for Texas, speculations on the destination of the Army of Observation

More troops for Texas. A company of United States troops, from Fish River, under the command of lieut. H. D. Grafton arrived in Boston, in the steamer Penobscot, and were to embark in the brig Cocheco, from that port, for Galveston direct.

The Baton Rouge Advocate of the 17th says: The company of U.S. troops, which was, remanded to this place by gen. Gaines for the protection of the arsenal, has received renewed orders from head quarters, for Texas. It is expected that a company of the 5th regiment will arrive soon, and be stationed here in place of the former.

"Army of Observation."

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 22d September says - "The next advices from Corpus Christi may be awaited with interest, under the expectation of hearing something further and more definite as to the ultimate destination of our little army. We are disposed to look upon the encampment at Corpus Christies a temporary rendezvous, judiciously selected for the collection and concentration of our forces. But it certainly cannot be the intonation that the army shall stop there. The position is far in the rear of the legitimate boundary of Texas, and to make that a point of military occupation would be tantamount to a surrender of the vast territory lying between the Rio Grande and the Nueces. It was prudent to make a halt there at first. As a depot and a point for reconnaissance and preparation, none more convenient could have been selected on the coast. Its distance from the Rio Grande was a security against surprise by any hostile movement of the Mexicans, while its location on the seal shore furnished the best facilitates for the disembarking of troops and landing munitions of war. Now, however, since the place has answered all the purposes of a rendezvous, and our scattered battalions are collected into a well appointed and formidable army, it is time to move the camp. We confidently anticipate that general Taylor's division will march to the Rio Grande, with the view of occupying that rifer as the line of our western boundary. It is not at all unlikely that the movement is already being made."

A detachment of U.S. troops - consisting of company A, 3d artillery, from fort Johnson, N.C., and company 1, 3d, artillery, from fort Moultrie, S.C., arrived at Pensacola on the 19th ult., under orders for the Bay of Aransas, Texas. The following officers are attached to these companies:

1st lieut. M. Gillham, A company, commanding.

2d lieut. George W. Ayres, A company, commanding.

2d lieut. J. Kilburn, I company, commanding.

Surgeon H. Hawkins accompanies he the detachment and D. Perkins as Sutler.

Capt. Montgomery, of the 8th infantry, and lieut. Gibson, of the 2d artillery, arrived at Pensacola 19th ult. From Tampa Bay, en route for the north.

The St. Louis Era, of the 24th ult. says - The steamer, Cecilia, from St. Peters, bound for Jefferson barracks, with four companies of U.S. infantry on board, stopped here a short time yesterday. - These troops are from Forts Crawford, Snelling, and Atchison, and are under the command of col. H. Wilson, who has been ordered to proceed to Jefferson barracks - and the order further says, to hold himself and them in readiness for active service. - Fort Winnebago and Fort Winnebago have been abandoned. At Fort Snelling there are tow companies of Infantry, and at Fort Atchison, but one company of dragoons. [BAH]

NR 69.066-69.067 04Oct1845: Texian volunteers and Rangers to enter US service or cooperate with US forces

TEXAS. We have accounts from Galveston to the 16th ultimo, but no news of importance.

The National Register, published at Washington, states hat president Jones has authorized col. Clark L. Owen to raise one thousand men by voluntary enrolment, to be ministered into the United States service under gen. Taylor. Maj. Hays, with his command, is also to co-operate with gen. Taylor. Active measures have been taken to recruit the number of men required.

The same paper states that president Jones has this year introduced the culture of tobacco upon his farm in the neighborhood of Washington. He has six acres in cultivation, tow of which are from the Cuba seed. The experiment has succeeded well. One heavy cutting was some time since taken from the field. He expects to get three cuttings during the season. The quality of the leaf is said to be good.

It is ascertained that the following persons have been elected to the tenth Texan congress: Archibald McNeill, for the county of Montgomery; Dr. C. McAnally, for Harris; gen. W.S. Fisher, for Galveston; J.P. Hudson, for Fayette; R. M. Williamson, for Washington; and S.W. Perkins and W.B.P. Gaines for Brazoria.

Mr. David Taylor, a respectable citizen of La Grange, was killed a few days ago while attempting to break a wild horse, by becoming entangled in the rope attached to the horse's neck. [BAH]

NR 69.073-69.074   04Oct1845: intercourse with Mexico, news of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga and his forces
69.074   04Oct1845: Gen. Anastasio Bustamente not appointed Mexican commander, preparations of bodies of troops under Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga and Gen. Mariano Arista
69.074   04Oct1845: troops at the castle of San Juan de Ulloa
69.074   04Oct1845: position of ships of the Mexican Navy
69.074   04Oct1845: difficult financial position of the Mexican government despite the bill for the fifteen million loan
69.074   04Oct1845: effort of the British minister to prevent Mexico from going to war
69.074   04Oct1845: no Mexican preparations for defense at Tampico, Mexican letters of marque issued
69.074   04Oct1845: American troops rumored moving on Matamoros

We have it at length announced that arrangements have been make by our naval officers in the gulf, whereby regular and early intelligence of the movements in Mexico will be received, a precaution heretofore very strangely neglected.
The first result of this arrangement is the reception by the steamer Princeton, from Vera Cruz, of dates to the 15th September.

The following (probably from one of our naval officers) is extracted from the Washington union: - "There appears not the least reason to apprehend a declaration of war at present. A proposition to that effect was sent to congress by the executive about the same time with the loan bill, but it has not been acted upon, nor is it expected to be taken up. This is probably what government desired, as all thinking men were convinced of the folly of declaring war in the miserably unprepared state of the country. There is no doubt the government did hope to collect a force rapidly, march suddenly upon Texas, and forestall or surprise our troops. Of course they have failed in this; but their intention still is to begin hostilities in that quarter without any further declaration. In this desire the nation is certainly unanimous, nor is there shown by government, press, or people, the least disposition to negotiate with the United States.

"General Paredes was at San Luis Potosi, two hundred and sixty miles from Mexico, and more than four hundred from Matamoros, at the last accounts, which are up to the 1st September. He has six or seven thousand men, miserably clad and armed. A serious mutiny took place on the 9th August in one of the divisions of the army at Paresco, three leagues from San Luis. The soldiers joined by most of the officers, refused to march further until their wants were supplied. The commanding general Gaono, with twenty officers, was ordered to five up the command and return to the capital, where he now demands a thorough investigation. The revolted officers have published a statement, which gives a lamentable picture of the state of the army, and the grievances, which led to the disturbance. They represent their men as without shoes, some without a single shirt, and only the clothes they have on their backs; others so destitute of clothing as not to be decent; many without even a blanket or a cloak to lie down upon, with no knapsacks or canteen, nor any means of transportation for the sick and lame. - There is no reason to suppose that the other divisions are better supplied.

"Paredes himself is the object of the greatest interest just now. Many rumors have been and are in circulation as to his movements and intentions - It has been said that he and his troops have refused to march upon Texas until they are paid by government; that he intended marching to Mexico, and establishing a military triumvirate, to consist of himself, Torrel, and Valencia; and that he had or would refuse to serve under Bustamente as commander-in-chief. The city of Mexico was for some time in daily expectation of a revolution; but Paredes wrote to the minister of war from San Luis, on the 26th August, that he and his troops had most implicit confidence in the government, and were ever ready to obey its orders. His good faith is very much doubted, but the fears of the people had somewhat subsided at the last accounts. Some apprehensions were yet felt that a disturbance might take place before the 16th, the day fixed for the inauguration of the president elect. There is much agitation in the army, also, from a suspicion that the present government is sending them to the frontiers to get rid of them; and that the levy of militia is for the purpose of dispensing with the standing army. To such an extent did this feeling spread that government came out with a circular denying the imputations. On the whole, it may confidently be asserted that the troops of Paredes will never move towards Texas until their wants are appeased if even then. In fact, it seems physically impossible they should do so. There are no magazines prepared for them between San Luis and the frontiers, and no stores of any kind have gone to Matamoros by sea. - It was intended to send a steamer, with camp equipage and provisions, to Arista, but want of money prevented. This general is said to be at Matamoros with two thousand men in miserable plight. He barely raises money to pay himself and officers, and his men support themselves as they can by working at trades.

"Bustamente is talked of as commander-in-chief of all the army destined from Texas; but the report of his being actually appointed wants confirmation. He is now a member of the senate.

The two bodies of troops under Paredes and Arista are the only armies preparing for Texas - or indeed, in existence - except the three or four thousand which always compose the garrison of the capital, and small parties scattered over all the republic. The levy of ‘defensores,’ or militia, has entirely failed; and the governors of many of the provinces have represented the laws as faulty in several particulars, such as the enlistment being voluntary, and the exclusion of day-laborers. It is thought that congress will alter the law in these points, and thus facilitate the levy; but not much is expected from it.

The Castle of San Juan de Ulloa has now about one hundred and twenty guns mounted, and the garrison numbers six hundred men. These, with sixty workmen, are employed still in mounting artillery. - It is said there are one thousand or twelve hundred men in Vera Cruz, and two regiments are ordered into its vicinity - one to Santa Fe, three leagues distant; the other to Pas de Ovejas, nine leagues distant. General Landel is ordered to take command of the castle, which is well supplied with military stores, but no provisos for a siege.

Their naval force is precisely in the same place under the walls of the castle, where they were; nor have they started an anchor in many months. It consists of two steamers, three brigs, three schooners, and five gunboats. The steamers have coal on board, and all the vessels are considered in commission, though not half officered or manned. Government has been intending for some time to send a steamer and some gun-boats to Tabasco, but want of money prevented. It was understood there was a there was a positive order to send all the squadron up the Alvarado river, but money would be required to dispatch them even thus far; so it is most likely they will remain where they are.

The bill for the fifteen million loans passed both houses, with several provisos, which have since been removed. The government were originally limited to six per cent interest, and not allowed to borrow in less sums that a million of dollars. They are now authorized to make the best bargain they can, first submitting the terms to a
Soldiers! My chief glory is to command you. I will show you the path in which you may achieve the renown of immortality. We will share dangers and laurels; and my highest reward will be, that you will inscribe in the annals

Comrades! When the supreme government commands, we will march to avenge so many injuries, to sustain the nation which has sanctioned, by its laws, the most degrading slavery.

My friends! Your mission has also another abject that of maintaining order and peace, supporting society in its safeguards, and the citizen in all his rights. We are no more than sons of the nation, its defenders and support. I flatter myself that honor will never abandon your ranks; that you will show invariable examples of moderation; and that your ardor will be reserved for the day of battle, when you have before you the enemies of the country.

Soldiers! The supreme government has order that the first and third divisions of the army shall constitute the army of reserve, and has been pleased to appoint me its general-in-chief. This proof of the highest confidence requires me to consecrate myself, by a new title, to a country so generous towards me.

Companions! That same country now raises its august front for the purpose of resisting the usurpations of a neighboring power, which has believed your valor asleep, and the you are not the sons of those heroes who, in a hundred combats, manifested their courage and constancy. A rapacious and grasping race have thrown themselves that we will not defend the patrimony, which our fathers conquered with their blood. They deceive themselves! We will fly to snatch from them the spoils, the possession of which they are impudently enjoying; and they shall learn, by dearly-bought experience, that they are not contending with the undisciplined tribes of Indians whom they robbed of their land, their heaven, and their country; and that Mexicans will ardently combat the soldiers of a nation which has sanctioned, by its laws, the most degrading slavery.

Soldiers! My chief glory is to command you. I will show you the path in which you may achieve the renown of immortality. We will share dangers and laurels; and my highest reward will be, that you will inscribe in the annals

It is said that Mr. Bankhead [the British minister] is attempting, to prevent Mexico from going to war.

The French minister has, for the last few months, been too busy with his own affairs to meddle with those of the United States. The 'auxiliar' (a civil officer,) and the officer of the army who offended him, have been tried by the proper judicial process and acquitted; but this does not satisfy the minister, who roundly accuses the government of bad faith. - Before the sailing of the September mail steamer, they had given them reason to suppose he should receive ample reparation; so he remained in the country, and wrote to that effect to France. Since then he pretends their tune is changed. He has now demanded and received his passports, given up his house in Mexico and will leave in the steamer of 1st October for Havana. Judging from the press of Mexico all has been done in the matter, which could have been reasonably expected under a constitutional government.

The provinces appear to be generally quiet, and disposed to submit peaceably to the administration of Gen. Herrera. California is some that agitated, but by local questions only. Tabasco is still in revolt, and the insurgents are now in the ascendant. - They have acted under the pleas of federalism, but the organ of that party in Mexico disavows them and joins the rest of the press in calling on government to restore order there. He governors of provinces bordering on Texas call for aid in resisting the incursions of Indians; and the press in that quarter is urging he reinforcement of Gen. Arista.

No defenses are in preparation at Tampico, where there are only about twenty men in a small work mounting one of two guns.

No preparations are making at Vera Cruz to fit our privateers; but a letter from New Orleans, from a respectable source, states that offers of letters of marque have been make to the friends of the writer, both in that city and the Havana, to be used in case of war.

On the morning of the 15th, a report arrived at Vera Cruz, by way of Mexico, that our troops were advancing on Matamoros, to the number of 3,000 regulars and 1,800 Texans. They were said to be accompanied by 18 pieces of artillery, and preceded by 700 Indians, who were not, however, considered as in league with the advancing on Matamoras, to the number of 3,000 regulars and 1,800 Texans. They were said to be accompanied by 18 pieces of artillery, and preceded by 700 Indians, who were not, however, considered as in league with the

Since then he pretends their tune is changed. He has now demanded and received his passports, given up his house in Mexico and will leave in the steamer of 1st October for Havana. Judging from the press of Mexico all has been done in the matter, which could have been reasonably expected under a constitutional government.

The provinces appear to be generally quiet, and disposed to submit peaceably to the administration of Gen. Herrera. California is some that agitated, but by local questions only. Tabasco is still in revolt, and the insurgents are now in the ascendant. - They have acted under the pleas of federalism, but the organ of that party in Mexico disavows them and joins the rest of the press in calling on government to restore order there. He governors of provinces bordering on Texas call for aid in resisting the incursions of Indians; and the press in that quarter is urging his reinforcement of Gen. Arista.

No defenses are in preparation at Tampico, where there are only about twenty men in a small work mounting one of two guns.

No preparations are making at Vera Cruz to fit our privateers; but a letter from New Orleans, from a respectable source, states that offers of letters of marque have been make to the friends of the writer, both in that city and the Havana, to be used in case of war.

On the morning of the 15th, a report arrived at Vera Cruz, by way of Mexico, that our troops were advancing on Matamoros, to the number of 3,000 regulars and 1,800 Texans. They were said to be accompanied by 18 pieces of artillery, and preceded by 700 Indians, who were not, however, considered as in league with the United States. This story caused considerable excitement, both in Mexico and Vera Cruz. The artillery arm is, I am told, particularly dreaded by the Mexican soldiery?

[BAH]
of the republic an epoch which grateful posterity will bless. Long live the nation! Long live the supreme government!!  [BAH]

NR 69.086  11Oct1845:  dragoons from Fort Jesup to join the Army of Observation

ARMY OF OBSERVATION. A letter from an officer of the U.S. second dragoons, describing the march of that regiment from Fort Jessup, Louisiana, to Corpus Christi, Texas, says that to Liet. George Stevens, of the second dragoons, acting topographical engineer, is due the credit of surveying and measuring the entire route from Fort Jessup to Corpus Christi - having with his own hands constructed a perimeter for that purpose. The distance between the two points has been thus ascertained to be 501 ½ miles. The regiment left Fort Jessup on the 25th of July, and arrived at Corpus Christi on the 27th of August, having rested eight days on the march.

We learn from the same letter that the regiment when near Corpus Christi, heard continued reports in the direction of that post; which, together with the absence of gen. Taylor, who had informed col. Twiggs, of the dragoons, by express, that he would meet him that day, induced the belief that Corpus Christi had been attacked. The command to advance was instantly given, and, to the surprise of all, fifty of the men, who were sick and convalescent, and expected to remain as a guard to the train, mounted their horses and were ready for active duty. The regiment had scarcely proceeded three miles, however, before general Taylor appeared in sight.  [BAH]

NR 69.091  11Oct1845:  Mexico - population

POPULATION OF MEXICO. As Mexico threatens to declare war against the United States, and probably will do so, it is a matter of some interest to know whom we are to fight, their numbers, character, complexion, and their experience in arms. The following is the census in each province or district:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Province</th>
<th>Population</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Aguascalientes</td>
<td>69,598</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puebla</td>
<td>661,002</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chaipas</td>
<td>141,600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Queretaro</td>
<td>120,560</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chihuahua</td>
<td>147,600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>San Louis Potosi</td>
<td>321,840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coohuila</td>
<td>73,340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinaloa</td>
<td>140,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Durango</td>
<td>162,618</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonora</td>
<td>124,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guanajuato</td>
<td>512,618</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tobasco</td>
<td>53,800</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jalisco</td>
<td>679,311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tamaulipas</td>
<td>100,068</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mexico</td>
<td>1,389,529</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vera Cruz</td>
<td>251,380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michoacan</td>
<td>497,906</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yucatan</td>
<td>580,938</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nuevo Leon</td>
<td>101,109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zacatecas</td>
<td>273,575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nuevo Mexico</td>
<td>57,026</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oajaca</td>
<td>500,278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>6,982,070</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Of this population of Mexico, say seven millions of people, one-seventh are whites, the rest are Indians, half breeds, and Negroes. - Petersburg Intell.  [BAH]

NR 69.100   18Oct1845:  more troops for the Army of Observation

ARMY OF OBSERVATION. The Key West Gazette of the 13th inst., says:  "On Tuesday last, the schooners Gen.
Worth and Walter M., with four companies of the 8th infantry, arrived here from St. Augustine, as well as the steamer Cincinnati, from Charleston, with three companies of 3d artillery, all bound to "Texas." The steamer left the same afternoon, and on Wednesday morning the General Worth sailed for Aransas Bay via Tampa. Officers on board the Worth. Capt. Worth; Lieuts. Lee, Gates, Wood, &c.

Explorations have been already commenced in that part Texas. Known as the disputed territory. - Captain Kerr, of the dragoons, has penetrated the country fifty miles west of Corpus Christi, and he describes it as beautiful beyond description. Deer, turkeys, and wild horses range over it in great numbers. Captain McLean had ascended the Nueces thirty-five miles in a steamboat. He found no obstructions in the river for light draught boats, the least depth throughout the entire distance being four feet two inches. [BAH]

November 1845

NR 69.130-69.131  01Nov1845: examination of the state of the Army, account of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga's supposed rebellion

[PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE OF THE N.O. COURIER.]

Mexico, September 9, 1845

Two circumstances have occupied the people of Mexico during the last few days - the demand of the French minister of his passporte and the mutiny of a division of the army of the north under the command Paredes.

I will not dwell on the fist of these events - not because it is unimportant, but because it is not completely over, and because we are not permitted to form a surmise on the conduct of the French cabinet. This important business was long ago known in the United States. It commenced at the baths Las Delicias, and its course is yet continued in the diplomatic circles. After the first representation of the French minister, Mr. Cuevas, the secretary of foreign affairs promised satisfaction in the most exact terms. A short time afterwards, the officer Oller, who arrested the Baron de Cyprey, and lodged him in the citadel, was brought before a court martial, who acquitted him.

Mons. De Cyprey then addressed new demands to the Mexican government; but a change had taken place in the ministry, and Mr. Cuevas deposited in the hands of Mr. Pena y Pena the correspondence, which had passed between him and the French minister. Mr. Pena y Pena replied to the French minister that he could receive no further satisfaction than the judgments of the court might afford him. Mr. De Cyprey again demanded his passports; and in this state the matter remained until the 29th of August, the day on which the letters destined for the English steamer left the city of Mexico. A few hours before the departure of the express, Mr. Pena y Pena called upon the British minister, Mr. Bankhead, and requested him to transmit to Mr. Cyprey the following proposition:

"Mr. Pena y Pena, accompanied by the officer Oller and the alcalde, will repair to the house of the French minister, and will there make an apology in the presence of Messrs. Bankhead and Bermudes de Castro, (the latter is the Spanish minister,) for the unfortunate occurrence at the baths of Las Delicias."

To terminate this unhappy affair, Mr. de Cyprey accepted the proposed arrangement. The express was about to start - the apology could not be made till nest day, and Mr. de Cyprey announced to his government the new turn of the affair; the English minister did the same thing, in all probability, and Mr. Pena y Pena wrote to the Mexican minister at Paris that the dispute was finally settled.

But judge of Mr. de Cyprey's disappointment, when, after the departure of the express, new propositions were addressed to him, essentially different from those which had been offered him through the English minister. The French minister refused to hear them read by Mr. Pena y Pena; he declared the diplomatic relations broken between France and Mexico, and placed his countrymen under the protection of Mr. Bermudes de Castro.

The foregoing is a brief account of the second part of the affair of the baths of Las Delicias. I pretend not to go to the depths of the matter. I will only say, either Mr. de Cyprey was right, and then satisfaction is due to him; or he is wrong, ant in that case his demand for satisfaction ought to have been refused. But nothing can be more pitiful or ridiculous that to try to evade a promise by a subterfuge like that employed by Mr. Pena y Pena, which is a real diplomatic trick.

Nevertheless, the final settlement of this difference is not entirely despaired of. The men at the head of affairs in this country are, it is true, blind in their pretensions and rash in their actions. At all events, we may suppose that, in the present awkward state of their affairs, they will yield before a threatened rupture.

I now come to the mutiny of the division of Paredes. But first we must throw a glance upon the Mexican army, and from an estimate of its strength. In our country, you profess the utmost contempt for our braves of all arms; but here, the opinion of them is not quite so low. There are some sensible men here, who put a high value on the Mexican army, and count upon the triumphs, which it will achieve. The Mexican ex-consul at New Orleans (M. de Arrangoiz) expressed opinions of this kind on his arrival at Vera Cruz.
Since so much has been said about this army; -- since the newspapers and public opinion have covered it with ridiculous praises, let us endeavor to form a correct opinion of it. I shall not seek to raise the ghost of the victims immolated by this army at the Alamo in contravention of a capitulation, I will say nothing of the shameless defeat it suffered at San Jacinto, I will more freely forgive the capitulation of San Juan de Ullca; I do not advert to the ignorance of art it displayed in the campaigne of Yucatan.

But what has it done in the interior? Has it maintained the influence of the government in the departments? Has it even repulsed the attacks of the Indians? I answer these questions, by copying literally the conclusion of the memorial of Mr. Garcia Conde, minister of war, to congress, dated the 11th and 12th of March, 1845. "In a word," says that minister, "it appears that the nation no longer possesses the territory of Texas; that the Californians have revolted, that department, and those of New Mexico, Sonora, Chihuahua, Durango, Zacatecas, New Leon, Coahuila, and Tamaulipas, are, some, ravaged, some invaded by the Indians, that they offer scenes of atrocity without an example in our annals, and that the condition of these regions was certainly better a century after the conquest; that, to put an end to these calamities, there is an army, which, notwithstanding the services and the bad treatment inflicted upon the people, amounts to more than 30,000 men, that no attempt has been made to fill the ranks of this army - whence it results that there is great disorder, and all the grades of officers are filled by incapable individuals; that the depots of clothing are in a most deplorable state; and, in spite of the immense sacrifice made by the nation to purchase arms, they too, are in a state equally bad, that, paying no respect to the laws, or to any kind of principle, they have so completely disorganized the war department, that the lapse of several years will be required to rescue it from its present condition - a condition really disastrous for the nation."

Surely Mr. Garcia Conde must have had a good deal of courage to trace so severe a picture of the Mexicans, in a capital so full of political fanaticism and national vanity. I should like to analyze, at some length, the passage of this memorial, in which the minister spoke truths at once rough and useful to his country, if I were not afraid of wandering too far from the actual state of things. It will be interesting for you to know, that, from October 13, 1841, to December 5,1844, the government of Santa Anna granted 9,983 brevets; that the number of officers in the army is countless, and much exceeds that of the private soldiers; and what will interest you still more is, that there are not in all Mexico more that 12,000 men carrying muskets - all, or nearly all, of whom are Indians. The military dispositions of the Indians have been much boasted of, without examining of what use their qualities may be in action. The Indian, it is true is endowed with a sort of stoicism, which enables him to look at danger without much emotion; and (thanks to the sobriety given him by nature!) he supports with fortitude the privations imposed upon him by the necessities of war. But this is not all. - The vivacity, the energy, which so often decides the fortunes of battle, are entirely wanting in the Indians; and, on this account, with superior force on his side and strategic considerations being equal, he will always be beaten.

There are also political and moral motives of which no estimate has been made in the different opinions, which have been formed of the Indian soldier. What interest has he in spilling his blood for the defense of his country? The day, on which an enemy invades the territory of the republic, the Indian will retire to his forests and resume his primitive habits. The sentiment of patriotism is unknown, and the indifference he exhibits on the field of battle, shows the little value he sets upon it. On the other hand, let me ask, how does Mexico recruit her armies? Is it in his primitive habits. The sentiment of patriotism is unknown, and the indifference he exhibits on the field of battle, shows the little value he sets upon it. On the other hand, let me ask, how does Mexico recruit her armies? Is it in this young republic, where the journals are so fond of attacking the immorality and despotism of Europe, that each citizen is called upon to defend his country? - to pay the tax of blood? For an answer to these questions, let us again refer to the memorial of Mr. Garcia Conde.

"The system of substitution," says the minister, "practiced until now, since voluntary enlistments became insufficient, has been most immoral and most puerile to the rights of the citizens. No, gentlemen; the Mexican is not a Russian, who take to the ranks at the mere whim of his lord; he is under the protection of liberal laws enacted by the nation; and nothing can force him but those laws and his own sense of duty." Thus, there is a striking resemblance in recruiting for the armies of Russia and for those of Mexico. The Indians are arrested, and conducted from brigade to brigade, to their ulterior destination. It one of them deserts on the match, the responsible officer seizes upon the first Indian he meets with, and in this manner keeps up his number of men. If this mode proves insufficient to fill the ranks, they break the chains of the convicts and other prisoners, and clothe them with a military uniform.

But after the difficulty of recruiting soldiers, comes that of keeping them to true colors. For this purpose, military posts have been established in all the chief cities of Mexico, and still there is a great difficulty in preventing desertion.

I have now said enough in respect to the private soldiers who form the active and fighting part of the army. Let us now examine the composition of the officers. We read in the memorial: "It is melancholy to look at the history of our army since 1828! At different periods it was the first thing to increase the number of officers, as number was conceived to be the best means of making adherents to an administration, to increase the number of employments."

Again, treating of detached officers, the minister says: "This scheme had for its object to step over all the bounds of justice, and to open a door to all sorts of tricks, with a view of rewarding the most degrading acts of domestic life, and others which my pen refuses to record, and which the decency of any memorial rejects the mention of."

Speaking, in conclusion, of this worthless body of men, he says: "Some officers have shown much talent and information; but they are so few, that they suffice not for the common duties in time of peace."

This is the sort of army of which the Mexican newspapers have spoken with such ridiculous exaggeration. The army, for the whole republic consists of 12,000 men at farthest, ill-clothed, half-fed, without discipline, unexercised, and poorly commanded. Such are the veteran heroes that menace the existence of your union!

Some days ago, there was a sudden change in the language of the Mexican press in relation to the soldiery. It was on the occasion of the mutiny of the division under the command of Paredes. A dubious rumor was circulated in Mexico, ascribing to Paredes, Valencia, and Tornel, a design to hurl General Herrera from the presidential chair, to form a triumvirate who were to govern the nation for their own profit. There were already inquietudes in the congress, when the deputy Boves made known to the house the intrigues of Paredes. The latter replied, from San Luis Potosi, to the accusations of Boves, in a violent letter, which excited great in the deputy. The news of the mutiny at San Luis arrived at Mexico immediately afterwards. The troops had declared themselves in the usual style, and formally refused to march until the government should furnish them with provisions, clothing, and money. The next day the newspapers cried shame! Accused the army of treason, and thundered forth denunciations against it. On the 28th of August, Mr. Boves brought forward in the house a charge as follows:

There are indications in the interior departments of a design to proclaim a plan similar to that of Tacubaya. There is a man who pretends to all the powerful functions of the fatal plan of the basis. - those who ought to maintain subordination and discipline in the army, are precisely those who have drawn the troops from their duty. The third division of the army, now at San Luis Potosi, which should be marching against Texas, instead of fighting for the existence and honor of the republic, is about to destroy the government, and proclaim an anti-national administration."

After tracing the duties of military chiefs, Mr. Boves continues: "let us go back to Gen. Paredes - who is that exalted officer who aspires to give laws to the republic, to its representatives, and its executive; whom he has treated in a manner inconsistent with the rules of common politeness? He has affected several bloody revolutions. What does liberty owe him? The death of Gen. Montezuma, the dictatorship of Gen. Santa Anna, and the dissolution of the last congress, established that he and the other generals on the side of the fatal scheme of Tacubaya gave a guarantee of their word and honor - and forfeited it! What is owing to him for the administrations, which have followed? He betrayed that of Gen, Bustamente, who covered him with favors and marks of kindness; betrayed Santa Anna, whom he proclaimed dictator, and who was the idol of his worship; and now he attacks the administration of the 6th December, who spared his life.

The acts of the senate form his political sentence, and in them are deposited the votes he gave in compliance with the orders of the dictator, before whom he shamefully humiliated himself. The memorable 6th December drew him from deserts, from the society of wild beasts; and now he wants to arrogate to himself the glory of the day. But no! that glory belongs not to Gen. Paredes, nor to any individual - but to the nation!"

Mr. Boves finished a resolution to inquire into the mutiny at San Luis; which resolution was rejected.

A few days afterwards the government received from Gen. Paredes the following proclamation, addressed by him to his troops on his appointment to command the army of reserve:

"Soldiers, the supreme government has ordered the 1st and 3d divisions to be formed into an army of reserve, and has condescended to name me general-in-chief. This proof of confidence imposes upon me a duty to devote myself to so generous a country.

"Companions in arms, our country raises her august front to resist the usurpation of a neighboring country, which thinks that our valor sleeps. And that you are not the sons of those heroes whose courage and constancy have shone in a hundred fights. A greedy and avaricious race has invaded our territory, and supposes that we will not defend the patrimony acquired by the blood of our fathers. Strange mistake! We will snatch the spoils from their rash hands! And dear bought experience will teach them that they fight not with savage tribes, and that the Mexicans fight with enthusiasm against a people whose laws sanction the most degrading slavery.

"When the supreme government gives the word, we will march to avenge those insults - to defend the integrity of our native soil, the religion of our fathers, the laws which they bequeathed us and the territory which is our right.

"My friends, there is yet another duty to be performed, to preserve peace and good order, the safety of the community, and the rights of individuals. We are merely the creatures of the people - their props and defenders. I rely on your sense of honor, your moderation, and trust you will reserve your ardor for the day of battle.

"Soldiers! It is my proudest boast to command you. I will show you the road to immortality; my reward will be to have my name inscribed on the annals of the republic at an epoch, which will be blessed by a grateful posterity. Long live the supreme government.

"Mariano Paredes y Aragilla. Headquarters, San Luis Potosi, Aug. 27, 1845." [BAH]
March of the Second Regiment of Dragoons. A Letter dated Corpus Christi, Sept. 2d. published in the N. Orleans Picayune says, "For the purpose of correcting the various rumors and reports in circulation relative to the march of the second regiment of dragoons through Texas to this place, it is the request of the officers of the regiment that you publish the following:

"Anticipations and predictions of a disastrous march for the dragoons, on account of the drought and warm season, were rife among certain wiseacres; and verifications of the same, in the shape of vague rumors of sickness and distress, were accordingly sent abroad were we had fairly started; indeed, a report reached us before we left fort Jessup that Col. Twiggs, who had proceeded the command an hour or two, was lying dangerously ill five miles on the road. This we discovered to be utterly false; on the contrary, our "gallant" colonel never flagged or wavered, notwithstanding a slight affliction at the commencement of the march, but conducted the command to this point with a rapidity, energy, and masterly ability in the highest degree creditable.

"Passing through a comparatively unsettled country, a southern clime, a six weeks' drought, the month of August, the various and contradictory reports in reference to forage, &c., with seven companies of dragons and a train of sixty wagons, might well have staggered a firmer and more practical mind. But the task, voluntarily undertaken, has been accomplished, and the regiment and train of wagons presented to the commanding general in such fine condition as to have elicited the admiration of our friends of the infantry regiments, and a complementary order from Gen. Taylor himself.

"True we encountered difficulties on the route, and obstacles that seemed insurmountable; but nothing impeded out progress. Starting at 3 o'clock in the morning, and frequently at 12, our marches of twenty-five, and sometimes thirty miles, were terminated before the heat of the day. Upon our arrival at the town and villages we were greeted by the acclamations of the multitude assembled to welcome us. Balls and parties were immediately gotten up, and committees, composed of the magi of the people, sent to solicit our attendance. The ladies, God bless them, we found always first and most enthusiastic in the expressions of their joy and gratitude.

"Our losses upon the route were principally from desertion - only three deaths having occurred on the march; on, the first day, was occasioned from overheating himself and drinking cold water; and two others from a stroke of the sun, having been obliged, on account of the soreness of their horses' backs, to walk across a prairie fifteen miles wide, on the borders of the Guadalupe. Indeed, mush of the distress and the consequent desertsions, may be attributed mainly to the circumstance that during the first six days over sixty horses' backs were injured by the miserable saddle lately adopted by the government, and the riders consequently dismounted and made to walk the remainder of the way. More upon this subject anon.

"An amusing circumstance, and one that is more flattering to the regiment than any other occurrence on the route, took place at San Patricio. The regiment had made an early start, (12M.) in order to accomplish a distance of twenty-seven miles to San Patricio, and cross the Nueces by means of a raft, which had been previously constructed by a party thrown forward the night and day before. We arrived about 8 A.M. By nine every dragoon had swam the river, with his equipments. During the whole morning, and especially at this hour, had been heard what was at first supposed to be the firing of a salute at Corpus Christi. The continuation of the distant reports, however, together with the absence of Gen. Taylor, who had informed Col. Twiggs by express that he should meet him at San Patricio that day, confirmed even the most skeptical that Corpus Christi had been attacked. 'To horse' was immediately sounded; then 'the advance;' and the sick and convalescent wee ordered to remain as a guard to the train. When we had got fairly under way, and the stragglers were all up, the officer left in charge reported that there were no sick, the number having been suddenly reduced from 50 to 0! We had scarcely proceeded three miles however, before we met the General himself, and soon discovered that, instead of the enemy, we were about to meet a violent thunder-storm. We were not much vexed, as the occurrence displayed to us the alacrity with which our men would prepare to meet the enemy, and the stuff the regiment is made of. Nous Verons

"Ere I conclude, it is but just that I should inform the public that Lieut. George Stevens, of the 2d dragoons, acting topographical engineer, is due the credit of surveying and measuring the entire route from fort Jessup, Louisiana, to Corpus Christi, having with his own hands constructed a viometer for that purpose. The distance to this point has been thus ascertained to be 501 ½ miles. The regiment left fort Jessup on the 25th of July, and arrived at Corpus Christi on the 27th of August, having rested eight days on the march.

Seven companies of U.S. artillery, under command of Major Ewing, reached Aransas pass on the evening of the 4th Oct., from New York, per the U.S. store ship Lexington - all well. The Lexington left there on the 11th for Pensacola.

[BAH]

NR 69.133 01Nov1845: artillery reaches Aransas for the Army of Observation

Seven companies of U.S. artillery, under command of Major Ewing, reached Aransas pass on the evening of the 4th Oct., from New York, per the U.S. store ship Lexington - all well. The Lexington left there on the 11th for Pensacola.

[BAH]
That portion of the Pacific ocean known as California, is at present attracting an unusual share of the attention of the governments and people of this country, Great Britain, and France. It is regarded by them all as in itself one of the richest and most beautiful regions of the earth; and is destined, by its situation, its harbors, and its proximity to Asia, to influence at no distant day, the commercial and political affairs of the world. We have published from time to time, from the English and French papers, able and important speculations upon this subject: - and special attention has been excited by the passages we have given from the Mexican correspondence of the London Times, in which the possession of California by the British is held to be indispensable to check the progress in wealth and power of the United States, which is beginning to excite the jealousy and alarm of the leading nations of Europe. - The writer has repeatedly, intelligently and most zealously urged upon the British government the necessity of at once acquiring California by purchase from Mexico, insisting that thus and thus only, can the American republic be cut off from the West pacific Coast, and shut out from a most advantageous access to the trade of Asia. Substantially the same view is urged in the leading and official papers of Paris.

In this state of things the character, condition and general relations of California become to us objects of the deepest interest. It has been generally understood that certain portions of the territory have been mortgaged to parties in England, by whom money has at various times been loaned to Mexico; and that there is a disposition on the part of the British government, by means of this mortgage, to acquire possession and dominion of the while country. Of course no just argument in favor of such possession can be drawn from the existence of such mortgage, as the mortgage will be equally binding and acquire additional value and validity, should California become part and parcel of the United States. In that case the debt will be guaranteed by the American government; and if the solicitude of the British government extends solely to the security of these debts, it will abandon its designs, if such have been entertained, of acquiring dominion there, and allow California to assume the position which events may assign it. It seems clear, however that jealousy of the United States, a disposition to check their progress and to retard their growth in power and sway is at the root of this proposition to make California a province or dependent section of the British possessions. Such a consummation would be to the United States a most serious and important event; one which would greatly influence our relations with all the world, and cut us off forever from easy and independent access to the boundless wealth of the Asiatic commerce - a consequence to which the United States can never submit. We lay it down as an axiom - to be enforced by war if necessary - that when Mexico ceases to own California it must constitute an integral part of the American Union.

TEXAS. Provisions. - The Houston Telegraph states that the presence of the United States army on their frontier had advanced provisions to unprecedented prices. At Corpus Christi and Aransas, corn was 1.50 per bushel - potatoes and other vegetables in proportion. The army had to depend on supplies from New Orleans, except from beef which Texas afforded in abundance and as low as 1 to 11/2 cts. Per pound.

MEXICO. The United States steamer Mississippi, anchored off the navy yard, Pensacola at 10 A.M. 29th October, in five days from Vera Cruz, from which port the United States steamer Princeton sailed at the same time, with duplicate dispatches, with which both steamers were instructed to reach Pensacola with all possible dispatch. The Mississippi sent her dispatch from the navy yard to Pensacola by the United States steamer Gen. Taylor, in time to be started by the mail of the 29th to Washington. She left the Princeton out of sight, the second day from Vera Cruz.

TEXAS. We have Galveston dates to the 1st. inst. The popular vote taken on the question of annexation, is not large, but very decidedly in favor of the measure, which they seem to consider as now settled, and are discussing who are to be their United States senators. Ex-governor Houston and Gen’ls Lamar and Rusk, each have advocated for the station.

Business continued animated, Mexican traders arriving and departing freely. The Galveston News says that Major Hays and Capt. McCullough, with their companies well mounted, are now on an expedition to the Rio Grande.

The Lagrange (Fayette county) Telegraph mentions that during the night of the 12th ult. the town of Gonzales was visited by a party of horse thieves, and twenty of the finest horses in the place were stolen. It is not
ARMY - three concluded to remain in Texas, and some others it is said design returning thither.

men, of which the detachments consisted, three died during the tour of service - four joined the United States deemed essential at Corpus Christi. They were received at New Orleans with every mark of respect. Of the 200 detachments of Louisiana artillery and infantry have returned to New Orleans, their services being no longer
"The army of observation," continues as heretofore reported, except that the gallant volunteer detachments of Louisiana artillery and infantry have returned to New Orleans, their services being no longer deeded essential at Corpus Christi. They were received at New Orleans with every mark of respect. Of the 200 men, of which the detachments consisted, three died during the tour of service - four joined the United States army - three concluded to remain in Texas, and some others it is said design returning thither.
It is stated in the New Orleans Picayne that lieut. Reives, of the eighth regiment of U.S. infantry, was severely but not dangerously injured at Corpus Christi by the Rick of a horse, immediately over the region of his heart. He was still confined to bed on the 3d instant.

The Galveston papers state that the 300 dragoons, under Major Fauntleroy had recrossed the Brasos, at Nashville, and are now probably at Austin, where they are to be stationed.

Considerable sickness prevails among the troops at Corpus Christi, though of a light nature attributed to the bad water and the exposure of a camp life.

Lieut. Cooke, of the United States Dragoons, who was a passenger in the steamer New York from Galveston for New Orleans, disappeared from the vessel. He was seen about 4 o'clock, A.M., of 2d instant to make to the guard of the boat, complaining of being sick, and returned again to the cabin. In the morning he was nowhere to be found, and must have gone overboard. - Lieut. C. came up recently from the camp at Corpus Christi in consequence of ill health.

Capt. Suarez of the schr. Josephine reports on the 27th ult, an officer of the U.S. Army was killed on board of the steam schooner Augusta, while lying alongside of a brig in Aransas Bay by the falling of a yardarm. The offer's name was not recollected.

GENERAL ORDERS, - NO. 50.

War department, Adjutant General's Office. Washington November 5, 1845. [BAH]
Almost the whole foreign trade of California is in the hands of Americans. There are now seven Boston ships and barks here. The American consul has a jurisdiction of one thousand miles of sea coast, while the nature of the trade is such that he has barely any fees. Government allows no salary. The fees of the consulate are under to hundred dollars the year. The stationery bill bout the same; which is now allowed by the department of state.

There are many owners of large tracts of land in California, who hold them under the idea of the country changing owners; having no present use for them, as the Indians, tame and wild, steal several thousand head of horses yearly from the ranchos. - Most of these horses are stolen for food. The Indians cut up the meat in stripes and dry it n the sun. While this continues, grazing of cattle cannot be profitably conducted. There is no expectation that the government will find a remedy. Nothing but the fear the Indians have of the American settlers will prevent it. They steal but a few horses from foreigners, as there is too much danger of being followed. Mexico may fret and threaten as much as she pleases, but all here in California, governors and generals, give Californian land to all who apply for it; and from the nature of things they will continue to do so.

Foreigners arriving here expect to live and in the country; - Mexican officers to remain two or three years, and then to be shopped off by force, unless they choose to marry natives, and become Californians body and soul. The parts of California, with the exception of Mazallan, are the only Mexican Pacific ports that flourish. All others are falling and falling fast. Here there is much advance in every thing and the country presents each year bolder front to the world. It must change owners. It is of no use to Mexico, but an eye-sore, a shame, a bone of contention. Here are many fine ports; the land produces wheat even to an hundred fold; cotton and hemp will grow here, and every kind of fruit there is in New England; grapes in abundance of the first quality; wine of many kinds is make, yet there is no facility of making. Much of it will pass for Port. The rivers are full of fish; the woods of game. Bears, seal, and whales can be seen from one view. The latter are often in the way of boats near the beach. Finally, there is the bay of San Francisco, with its branched. This bay will hold all the ships in the United States. The entrance is very narrow, between town mountains, easily defended; and perhaps he most magnificent harbor in the world; and apparently of as much us to the civilized world as if it did not exist. Some day or other, this will belong to some naval power. This every native is prepared for. When Captain Armstrong called on the governor (a native) to give back the country in the name of Commodore Jones, Senor Micheltorena and officers were expected here in a mouth, to take command. The governor said he preferred Com. Ones should retain the command, rather than Gen. Micheltorena.

Words cannot express the advantage and importance of San Francisco to a naval power. There are five hundred to one thousand American whalers, with twenty thousand American seamen, in the Pacific; half of them will be within twenty days sail of San Francisco. While the port belongs to Mexico it is a safe place for whale shops. In a war with England, France, or Russia, should one of these nations own the port, and at some future day declare war against the United States, what will be the result? San Francisco must be obtained, or the Oregon and California must become a nation within themselves. - Time is continually bringing this into notice; and one of the two must soon be consummated. If the Oregon dispute continues, let England take eight degrees north of the Columbia, and purchases eight degrees south of forty-two, from Mexico, and exchange.

The Oregon will never be a benefit to the United States, if England owns San Francisco. Vessels sometimes lie within the bar of the Columbia thirty or forty days waiting an opportunity to go out. - When once out, they can reach San Francisco in four days; a steamboat in less than k two days. The time will soon arrive when, by steam, a person will go from Columbia to Monterey and back in less than four days. For navigation, the Columbia is on little use. A few English ships could prevent any vessel going in, even if the wind allowed them. - Whalers from the northwest now pass the place for California.

This letter contains many facts well known to the writer and which should be know to his countrymen. Each paragraph contains matter from much thought and reflections; and it is sent to you, because from your paper the writer has read many paragraphs respecting California. And give you this information in return.

The settlers of the Organ anticipated the supplying of California. Under present circumstances, they may. A Californian will not work, if he can avoid it. The time will come, must come, when this country must be peopled by another race. This is fully expected here. Many children have been sent to the Oahu (Sandwich Islands) English school, to learn the English language, in order to prepare them for coming events, be the visit from John Bull or Uncle Sam. One of the two will have the country. When once this is accomplished, the place will team with a busty race. As 1 before observed, all frits will go here hemp, cotton, every variety of grain. Fishsmen, from the tender willow to trees seventeen feet in diameter. The natives are now expecting troops from Acapulco to reconquer the country, and are drilling many young men in preparation intending to surround the first port the Mexicans arrive at, drive away the cattle, prevent all intercourse with the ranchos, and by this means expel the invaders from California.

If they cannot exceed in this, they will take to the mountains and worry the invaders out. Many think these soldiers are sent by Mexico at the instigation of the English, under the pretext that the Americans are settling in California too fast, and will one day obtain possession. In the mean time the Californians do not believe the story, but give land to all that come, be they from what nation they may; and the less from Mexico the more it meets their views. [BAH]
December 1845

NR 69.240 13Dec1845: debate on negotiations with the US

Mexico. Vera Cruz dates to the 7th ult. are received. The Mexican government was occupied in deliberating on the negotiation with the U. States. Some of their journals denounce the president and cabinet in the severest terms for entertaining the proposition to part with Texas to the Del Norte, and call upon the army to interfere and punish the "traitors." [BAH]

69.244 13Dec1845: Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna's statement on payment of the Mexican indemnity

NR 69.244 20Dec1845: expectation of a successful result to the negotiation with Mexico

There can hardly be a doubt of a successful result to the negotiations which it is presumed are by this time in progress for a termination of all difficulties between the United States and the republic of Mexico. With earnestness from time to time we have urged the adoption of the course now pursued by the administration in relation to these difficulties and as often expressed the confidence, that if it were adopted, the obvious interests of both countries would at once lead to an amicable adjustment. We predicated upon mutual interests, too obvious to require serve peace with the United States if she can do so with honor and safety. Her government is heavily in debt to citizens of other countries as well as to the United States, and without the means to meet those obligations. The United States would be exceedingly glad to obtain suitable ports upon the Pacific for the accommodation of her shipping in that sea, and would not hesitate to give a liberal consideration for territory there, which Mexico finds it now authority over. No man can shut his eyes to the results of the current emigration for the last century, from east to west, and which no human power could have arrested, and which it would be but folly now to attempt to arrest. The Mexican government cannot fail to appreciate the progress, and would be unwise not to avail of a price now, for what in a very short time, would inevitably pass from her control, whether she would or no. That our new envoy to Mexico carried with him instructions of ample scope to embrace the transfer of the territory alluded to, and to allow a generous consideration for it, we considered beyond doubt, from the moment it was known that he had been appointed; and it is not without surprise that we find many subject, announcing that a special messenger and special instructions on the subject have been dispatched by our government to Mr. Slidell, since he left this country. We judge that Mr. S., and the administration too, must have been awake before. We find many articles like the following;

"It seems to be understood that Mr. Slidell, our new minister to Mexico, is fully authorized to arrange our boundary with that republic upon the most liberal footing. His powers in this respect are believed to be so extensive that under them he may negotiate a transfer to the United States of the right of Mexico to Upper California. This would probably be effected by making our line follow that course of the Rio Grande del Norte from the Gulf of Mexico until it reaches the thirty-second degree of north latitude, and then run westward on that parallel to the Pacific ocean." "of course such a result will not be brought about without a handsome compensation to Mexico for her relinquishment of territory. Our claim against her for indemnification to our citizens is now very large, and no way is so likely as this to secure its full and immediate satisfaction. Indeed, so far as the consideration which we may give her is balanced by this account, it may be said to amount to nothing; for, if we give Mexico the fullest credit for good will in the premises, her detracted and poverished condition warrants but a slight hope that she will very speedily pay us in money."

If we have any doubt as to the conclusion of a treaty with Mexico, it arises from an apprehension of the interference of European powers. If either or several of those powers conclude to attempt to arrest the progress of the "republic" - or if one of them considers it an object to play for the possession of California for themselves, they would be apt to find Mexico very willing to listen to their assurances of support-and not disposed, as Texas was, to reject overtures. Let Mexico be assured that she would be backed by England, or by France - and especially if the capitalists of those countries make a point either for the sake of the Mexican mines or of the commerce of the Pacific - to furnish "ready rhino" to their negotiators our ministers would find them to be ugly customers.

Would it not have been well to have allowed this negotiation with Mexico to progress beyond the danger of its failure, before our president undertook officially to lecture the governments of Europe on their broaching the subject of "a balance of power" - or the concerns of this continent? The introduction at such a moment, of anything that, without intimidating, might provoke the monarchies of Europe to attempt an interference, was we fear, impolitic. We shall rejoice to learn that Mr. Slidell has succeeded in his mission before he dose administered shall have time to operate to our disadvantage. [BAH]

NR 69.256  20Dec1845:  Gen. Mariano Arista's appointment to treat with the US on Texas boundary and other matters

MEXICO. General Arista has been appointed by the Mexican government to treat respecting the boundary of Texas and other matters in dispute, between the United States and Mexico.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Delta, writing from Pensacola, under date of the 3d inst. announces the arrival there of Mr. Parrot, bearer of dispatches to the United States minister in Mexico, and he was to sail that day from Vera Cruz in the U.S. brig Porpoise.  [BAH]

NR 69.258  20Dec1845: relations with Mexico take an unfavorable turn, remarks

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO. There is reason to apprehend that affairs are to assume a more unfriendly aspect between Mexico and this country. Mr. Slidell, our new envoy to that republic, landed at Vera Cruz on the 29th ult. from Pensacola, and proceeded immediately we presume for the city of Mexico, but whether he would find that capital in the possession of the President of eh republic lately installed, and the authorities who had consented to treat with the United States for a settlement of all existing difficulties, and an adjustment of new boundaries between Mexico and the United Sates, was very doubtful. It appears that General Paredes, the commandant of the district of San Louis Potosi, which has between the city of Mexico and the Texas frontier near the coast of the gulf, had issued a manifesto denouncing the existing government for entertaining a design of parting with valuable portions of he republic by cession to the United States, and that at the head of 8000 men he was marching to the capital to arrest and defeat the project, maintain the integrity of their territory and no doubt with design to dire the incumbents form per and take authority in his own hands - possibly with a view of recalling Santa Anna. We are indebted to a British steamer for this intelligence - brought from Vera Cruz to Cuba, from whence it reaches us - Our government have, it is stated in the Washington papers, received important dispatches from Mr. Slidell, dated immediately after his arrival at Vera Cruz, but nothing of their import has transpired. It is quite possible that this movement of Paredes upon the capital of Mexico with the avowed design of frustrating the proposed negotiation with this country may have been if not prompted, at least encouraged by rivals for the possession of the mines of Santa Fe and for the possession of the California. We await the result with anxiety. If this negotiation failed, according to the tenor of president Polk's message to congress, war in that direction would seem to be inevitable. [BAH]

January 1846

NR 68.273  03Jan1846:  letter from an officer at Corpus Christi

Army of Occupation. A New Orleans correspondent of the Charleston Courier says in one of his late letters - "I have just seen a letter from an officer of the United States army at Corpus Christi, which gives a dreadful picture of the state of affairs there he says the place is crowded with outlaws, thieves, and murderers, who daily commit robbery and murder with impunity; that over thirty grogshops have been opened by the vultures who follow the army to prey on the poor soldiers; that two men, one belonging to the 4th and the other to ht 2d artillery, were recently murdered and other have been drugged and robbed; that the country being in dispute, there are no civil officers, and that much chagrin is felt that gen. Taylor has taken no steps to discover the murderers and to put an end to the deplorable condition of affairs.
"The writer says it has excited some surprise that General Taylor has not proclaimed martial law, but according to his belief, it is not for want of firmness or lack of feeling for his command that the general has so acted, but because he is faltered by the department at Washington, which has already given sufficient proof of its utter incapability. The writer goes on to represent the situation of the army as truly deplorable. He says that while by day the men suffer from the sultry heat, at night they are nearly perished with cold; that the tents provided them are worthless and no protection against the drenching rains; that dysentery and catarrhal fever have made sad havoc among the troops; that one third of them dare now on the sick list, and not one fifth have escaped sickness altogether.

Much murmuring, he says, is now heard in the camp at the unnecessary hardships endured. Only wood enough for cooking purposes is supplied by the quartermaster, none being allowed for camp fires, and the men have to sit shivering with cold in their wet tents, when not on duty or drill, while ever and anon a comrade is hurried to his final resting place. Truly, this is a state of things of which we had no idea, especially as the newspapers have been constantly stating that the army was in fine health. - Some measures should be at once adopted to remedy the evils complained of. It is to be hoped the situation of the troops at Corpus Christi will be brought to the notice of congress, and if the facts are as stated, which I fully believe, that a severe reprimand will be administered to those who are answerable."

NR 69.291  10Jan1846:  relations with Mexico take an unfavorable turn, remarks

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO. The last intelligence we have had from our southern neighbors, left affairs in a very delicate position as regards the reception of our minister who had just landed and was on his way to the capital by one route, whilst the most formidable part of the Mexican army was on their march for the made destination by another route, for the avowed purpose of preventing the conclusion of the treaty he was on his way with powers to conclude. The latest dates, were those of Vera Cruz to the 4th De. - exactly the same day of our latest dates from Europe. If it were to for the absorbing interest of our relations with England, every eye would new be diverted to the south; that point seems almost forgotten, for the moment. It is full time we had further accounts from thence. We await them with deep anxiety.

NR 69.304  10 Jan 1846 John Slidell not recognized, quits the city

LATER. The barque Ann Louisa, arrived at New York, brings Vera Cruz dates to the 14th; files of papers from thence to the 10th, and from the city of Mexico to the 4th December. Our readers will be equally surprised and gratified, to ascertain formal these sources that the report of a counter revolution having been attempted by Gen. Paredes, and his pronouncing against a treaty with the United States, and this marching upon Mexico, are unfounded aspersions of that officer's character, for which he has ordered legal proceedings to be commenced at Mexico. The American Minister, Mr. Slidell, had left Vera Cruz for Mexico. Verbal accounts say he had reached that city. Mr. Parrot, secretary of legation, had reached Vera Cruz in the U.S. brig Porpoise. The U.S. ship St. Mary's was to sail from Vera Cruz for Pensacola on the 15th ult.

NR 69.304  10Jan1846:  relations with Mexico take an unfavorable turn, remarks

MEXICO. The New York Sun says it has received letters a few days later from the city of Mexico, but they contain no certain information of the actual result of General Paredes' revolt. There were rumors in Washington last week that he had overthrown Herrera's government, and these rumors appear only to be repeated the intelligence received by the Sun. It says, "He had pronounced against the administration of President Herrera, and was marching rapidly towards the capital, having thrown he government off their guard by writing to them, on the Texan frontiers to 'chastise the Americans.' H was carrying all before him n the road, being joined by the forces in he departments. 'Herrera has fallen,' says one of our correspondents, "and a fierce tyrant of the order of Santa Anna has ascended the throne of the Montezumas.' We infer from this that the capital has submitted to Paredes. The rumored movements of France and England in Mexico indicate an alliance between them and Paredes. An officer of the Society for the Union from the North American Republics writes encouragingly of the society's prospects, and says, 'the revolution of Paredes is only the first of a long series of revolutions, planned in Europe for a purpose which the people of mexico will yet discover, in time to defeat the whole scheme and save the country."

NR 69.304  10Jan1846:  Mexico, departments assaulted by Indians

The department of Durango had suffered dreadfully by an attack from the Indians. The city of San Juan del Rey, had been taken by them after a severe fight in which 58 of the citizens were left dead upon the field. The Indians were threatening the department of Coahuilla, and also others. On the 9t December the steamship Guadeloupe left the above port for Tabasco, having on board General M. Cela, governor and commandant of the department, with officers and suite, and battalion of infantry. [BAH]

NR 69.305  10Jan1846: gloomy reports from Mexico about the reception of John Slidell and the possibility of a movement by Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga against the government of Jose Joaquin Herrera on the basis of declaring war against the US over the annexation of Texas

This very serious question is now asked on every hand, and alike in relation to both Mexico and Great Britain.

Relations with Mexico. The week commenced with a gloomy aspect. Various reports circulated indicating that unpleasant information had reached Washington from Mexico. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun wrote expressly that a messenger had arrived here with voluminous dispatches from Mr. Slidell, our minister and bringing Mexico, dates to the 4th, which sated that a revolution would be effected either the next day or the day after, in favor of gen. Paredes, upon the avowed basis of his declaring war against the United States in less than thirty days.

These rumors were in a measure confirmed by New York papers of Saturday last, stating that though the papers brought by the Ann Louisa, from Vera Cruz, (as noticed in lour last) went to discredit the report of any attempt at revolution by gen. Paredes, yet the statements of persons who had arrived in that vessel were to the contrary. They now represent that affairs looked unfavorable.

Tuesday morning's southern mail brought confirmation of the reports. It was said that a messenger from
Mr. Slidell had arrived at Pensacola, on the 2d inst. in the U.S. ship St. Marys and had reached Washington.
Pensacola and Mobile journals all agree that the intelligence brought by this arrival from Mexico is unfavorable.
Some state that Mr. Slidell "had not been well received" - others, "that he had not been received at all" - others again hat "he had been badly received." The fact appears to be, hat a revolution was impending, unfavorable to the purposes of his mission.

The union of Monday Evening, contradicts the rumor of a messenger having arrived from Mr. Slidell, and is silent as to the import of the dispatches received from him.

The New Orleans Courier of January 3, with some information not possessed by other papers of that city, discusses at large the probability of the success of Mr. Slidell's mission to Mexico. According to its views, (as translated and condensed for the Picayune) this success must depend upon the ability of the government of president Herrera to withstand the attack of Paredes. The Courier enters a t length into the circumstances and position of both the chieftains, as well as of generals Arista and Bustamente, and thence it deduces the almost certain triumph of Paredes. But the principle upon which Paredes will go into power is that of unqualified resistance to the annexation of Texas to the United States, and to the dismemberment of the Mexican republic. Hence, the Courier argues, his supremacy will be fatal to the hopes entertained of success for the American minister. The latest account received at New Orleans brought a report that Paredes had declared against Herrera, and was marching upon the capital: but in the mean time at the government organ at Mexico has officially announced that Paredes had assured the president that he would stand by and support the government in negotiating with the United States, in case the popular clamor against making peace should endanger the safety of he government.

The New Orleans Courier, said to be well informed as to Mr. Slidell's movements, states that the minister reached Mexico on the 8th, and was still there on the 17th unaccredited as minister.

The New Orleans Times published an extract of a letter from Mexico dated the 18th , which says - "Mr.
Slidell has been refused by the ministry to enter upon the negotiations respecting Texas, as he came here with credentials as a resident minister, instead of as a commissioner for the arrangement of a particular question."

The Times adds - "Private letters mention that Mr. Slidell has written on to Washington for full powers; we know not on what authority this statement is made, but it would seem a singular one, in his capacity of minister plenipotentiary." [BAH]

NR 69.320  24Jan1846: Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga approaches Mexico

Mexico. - Latest. There remains no doubt of "the army of reserve" under Paredes being on their march for Mexio. The project of the usurpation was approved by the army at San Louis Potosi, on the 14th, and at Tampico on the 20th. The propose avowed is, to prevent the dismemberment of the republic by treating with the United States. [BAH]

NR 69.320  24Jan1846: unpleasant rumors of sickness, &c., among US troops
"The Army of Occupation" What few paragraphs we have this week from Corpus Christi, to confirm unpleasant accounts and rumors as to the want of health and comforts amongst the men and officers, but are too indefinite for insertion. We hope they may prove to be exaggerations. [BAH]

NR 69.350  31Jan1846:  reference to relations with Mexico by Gov. Silas Wright of New York

"We learn from the last message of the president of the United States, that the relations of the federal government, with all the powers of the earth are also peaceful. Considerable sensation has been experienced, at various periods during the past year, from the prospect of an interruption of those relations with the republic of Mexico; but as that government has concluded to re-establish the diplomatic intercourse between the two countries, which had been suspended by its action, and as the measure which induced that suspension has progressed so far as to leave no doubt of its final consummation, the reasonable presumption is that all difference will be amicably adjusted, and the peace of the two nations continue unbroken." [BAH]

NR 69.323  24Jan1846:  Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga approaches Mexico
69.323  24Jan1846:  cabinet declines to recognize John Slidell, who retires to Jalapa
69.323  24Jan1846:  Jose Joaquin Herrera's circular to the provinces

Relations with Mexico. That Presidnt Polk's reliances for preseving peace with Mexcio, shold be suddenly interruped by a reoluiion in the Mexican administration, at the same moment that a revolution in the British administration at least suspends his demonstrations towards England, is somewhat of a peculiar fate. It would be the more remarkable if it should turn out that both of those revolutions were produced by measures emanating from Washington. It is much easier for those entrused with executive power to raise a tempest, than it is to rule the storm when at its maddest.

The clouds lowering in the southern horizon, have gathered gloom by every arrival from thence since our last, and now really look portentous. Our government have advices from Mr. Slidell, hte import of which we can judge of by one fact, - Orders have issued from our navy department which indicate that an immediate concentraiton of a much larger force than is at present in teh Gulf, is to be made in the direction.

For the latest intelligence from Mexico, we are indebted to the Mexican schooner Julia, which reached New Orleans on the 13th, bringing Vera Cruz dates to the 30th. And Mexican dated to the 23d, ult. Previous arrivals had furnished us with the declaratons of several southern provinces and chiefs in favorur of Paredes, and of the march of his army upon Mexico, for the avowed prupose of preventing president Herrera from concluding an arrangement by which a part of the empire was to government was hesitating to recognize Mr. Slidell as residnet Minister, on finding that he was without adequate specail poers to treat upon the questions which they had signified a disposition to open negotiations on. Herrera was not doubt compelled to respect to a considerable extent the popular impulse of the moment.

He seems determined however to make an effort against Paredes. The Moniteur of the 21st ult. says that the supreme government has appointed Gen. Bustamente Commander in Chief, and Gen. Rorregon his second in command, of the Army to oppose Gen. Paredes, and adds, that the government is indefatigable working to quell the revolt, and that it has already taken the necessary measures to put the Capital in a state of defense, and had given out 3,000 guns to be distributed among the citizens.

On the 21st ult., the senate concurred with the government in giving dictatorial powers to President Herrera.

El Siglo says, that Paredes had seized upon the public treasury of the Fair at St. Juan, which had been committed to his charge.

El Verocruzana on the 24th says, that on the 23d, a salute from the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, under the command of Cassanova, announced the first movement of the Army and Navy in favor of the proclamation of San Louis Potosi, by Gen. Paredes, and that it was immediately seconded by the garrison of the place at whose head is the brave Laudero, with the exception of a part of the battalion Sigero, numbering about 100 men, who left their barracks with their officers, refusing to join their companions. This body, as they were marching out fired a volley on those wo remained, killing a captain and ten veterans, and wounding three others. It then marched to the government palace, and was ordered to quarter in the Convent of San Francisco, where they remained at the latest dates. The same paper says that at a later hour it learned that the city and garrison of Jalapa had pronounced in favor of Paredes, and that it was momentarily waiting for a similar movement in Orisana and the fortress of Perote.

On the 23d, the forces of Paredes were said to be only three days march from the city of Mexico.

On the 24th, the troops at Puebla under Gen. Inclan, who had received orders to march to the Capital, refused to depart, and it was certain that, notwithstanding the efforts of the General to the contrary, they would soon declare in favor of Paredes.

Mexico, it was said, would in a few days open its gates to Paredes.

The Vera Cruzano of the 29th, says that it learns by letters, of responsible persons, from Mexico, that the imbecile and short sighted Cabinet had mortgaged to England the department of Yucatan, on condition that she would pay its immense debt. There, says that paper, are facts that will soon be divulged.

A Circular of the 24th, transmitted by President Herrera to the governors of the different Departments, delegates to said governors the tremendous extraordinary powers with which Congress had invested him, and already had the Capital of the Republic begun to feel the weight of such despotism, as imprisonments, irrespective of persons or characters, had become common, and even the archbishop Garduna, had been obliged to fly from the persecutions that awaited him. Gen. Ampudia had gone over to the revolutionists, and the Government troops had publicly espoused their cause.

Gen. Almonte was concealed, fearing persecutions.

The latest intelligence is to the effect that the numerous cavalry of that General were in the near vicinity of the Capital. His artillery and infantry were between the city and Arroya-Sareo. The cities of Orisava and Guanajuato had also declared for Paredes at the approach of his forces.

Gen. Urrea, says El Eiglo of the 19th, has been defeated by the forces of General Campuxaua and Cuesta, each party having lost about 60 persons.

The paper says that the Government Council, after long deliberation, had determined not to receive Mr., Slidell in his ordinary official capacity, notwithstanding its previous engagement to receive a Plenipotentiary from the United States with special powers to treat on the subject of Texas. This conclusion of the Government took place after Mr. Parrott had reached Mexico on his return from the United States.

In the Moniteur of the 23d is published Herrera's proclamation calling upon his compatriots to rally in defense of the laws. It is a long document, and concludes as follow? - "it is my duty to defend our liberties and yours to sustain me!"

Mr. J. Tilghman Hoffman, bearer of dispatches from our minister, Mr. Slidell, for the government at Washington, came passenger in the Julia. The impression seems to be, that Parades, who is said to have 9000 men on the march, will succeed in revolutionizing the government. Puebla and some interior towns side with the government, while Vera Cruz, Tampico, and Jalapa favor Paredes. The movement was commenced at Vera Cruz on the 23d ultimo.

The nomination of Mr. Slidell, as minister, when made to the U.S. senate, gave rise to a very warm debate. The nomination was confirmed on Tuesday last, by, it is said, a strict party vote. He will have an opportunity for the display of diplomatic tact. - if he succeeds in the object of his mission, through difficulties which now appear to surround the case, he will deserve credit. We like his decision in remaining at his post in Mexico, notwithstanding the coldness of his reception by Herrera, or the approach of Paredes, and have some doubts whether a little consideration, “a second sober thought,” may not influence Paredes himself, in case of his succeeding to power, to accept the terms and considerations which he is endeavoring to drive Hererra from power for considering. Mr. Peel played that some game upon the Whig administration of England, without apparently, half so good an apology as Paredes would have, on carefully reviewing the responsibilities of a war with the United States, on the one hand, and the convenient settlement of many embarrassments which we offer them the means of affection, on the other hand.

So much for this week, on the question of peace or war.  [BAH]
Washington from Mexico. We infer from some hints, that the idea was entertained by some that it had been suggested that the United States should make an immediate disposition to sustain Herrera and prevent Paredes from effecting the revolution.

The additional forces which our government have directed towards the Gulf, it is more likely are designed to meet the contingency which has occurred. From the direction of those forces as well as from the tone of the administration journals on the subject, there can be little doubt of Paredes having very speedily the alternative presented, of treating with Mr. Slidell, or defending himself.

The intelligence that Paredes had entered Mexico, and been received with open arms, reached Washington on the 22d. On the 24th the union announced the fact, but intimated at the same time that Paredes was understood to be more favorable to the reception of a minister from the United States, than his predecessor.

From Havanna, we have by way of New Orleans, fresh rumors relative to the intrigues of Santa Anna, who according to the notion of the correspondent of the New Orleans paper, must think that he can play upon the English, French, and Spanish authorities on one hand, and upon Herrera, Paredes, Almonte and the Mexican people on the other, with inimitable slight of hand. No doubt he is an arch intriguer, capable of playing a bold game, but - he has occasionally failed.

The indications of the week, in relation to our, affairs with Mexico, continue to be portentous, but by no means as decidedly so, as reports, rumors, and various publications have represented. At one time indeed, it was assisted that Mr. Slidell, our minister at Mexico, had been assassinated, - other accounts, published at New Orleans as from Mexico, represented him as having demanded his passports, and being told in reply, that as he had never been recognized, there were no passports to return. Then we had him asking for an escort to protect him on his return to Vera Cruz, and being told that he was no more entitled to such a favor than any other foreigner. Next we are told that a detachment from the United States sloop-of-war St. Mary's, on learning Mr. Slidell's embarrassment, had immediately started for Jalapa, to escort him from thence to Vera Cruz. These are but mere instances from the general assortment of rumors, which have been afloat during the week, from this direction.

The Washington Union plays havock with all these tales, by assuring the public that the dispatches received by government, indicate nothing of the kind. Mr. Slidell has not been recognized, but hopes are expressed that when President Paredes comes to a careful review of all the responsibilities which now surround him in his new sphere, he will distinguish, as his predecessor did, that the true interest of Mexico will be best consulted by preserving peace in the United States, instead of allowing herself to become the victim of European diplomacy on one hand, or of ill-judging antipathies on the other.

We see it stated in New York paper; that letters have been received there from the late Mexican minister Almonte, now the right hand man of Paredes' administration, which state that Mr. Slidell will not be recognized, and that a formidable movement will immediately be make upon Texas. We do not believe Almonte would have so committed himself. A few days no doubt will acquaint us with the determination of the new government. Meantime, all our disposable naval force are under orders for the Gulf of Mexico, to be ready for contingencies.

Army of occupation. The documents of the war department accompanying the message, state the strength of this army as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Officers</th>
<th>Privates</th>
<th>Total</th>
<th>Sick</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>General Staff</td>
<td>24</td>
<td>.</td>
<td>24</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2d dra'gs 10 companies,</td>
<td>41</td>
<td>555</td>
<td>596</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Artillery, 12 &quot;</td>
<td>81</td>
<td>842</td>
<td>923</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Infantry, 50 &quot;</td>
<td>200</td>
<td>2336</td>
<td>2536</td>
<td>324</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>246</td>
<td>3732</td>
<td>4079</td>
<td>501</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Absent</td>
<td>58</td>
<td>140</td>
<td>198</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With the colors</td>
<td>288</td>
<td>3592</td>
<td>3881</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This force is under command of brevet brigadier general Zachary Taylor.

[BAH]
NR 69.384  14 Feb 1846: notice of American ships of war off the coast of California

California, October 8, 1845. "The news of the day here in California is, that we must soon have a bout with Mexico; but you may think differently, from the better information you must have of the political relations now pending between that and other powers. - Should there be a war we are bound here till it is over. I trust it may not be so.

Our (American) vessels of war are hovering about the coast, altogether too thickly for the quiet feelings of the natives. Their guns have bristled at Monterey during the last month, and in case of a declaration of war, there would be half a dozen of them here in no time, and then California is ours. This year is a most unfortunate one for business, it having rained only on one half the coast, the windward part." [BAH]

NR 69.384  14Feb1846: difficulties in the advance of the Army of Occupation to the Rio del Norte

"Army of Occupation." Nothing new that can be relied upon from Corpus Christi this week. A paragraph in the New York Journal of Commerce states, that the army has orders to take a position on the Rio del Norte, but the richness of the soil renders the mud so 'exquisite.' As to prevent a movement. [BAH]

NR 69.416  28Feb1846: Army of Occupation ordered to the Rio del Norte

"The Army of Occupation." Accounts from Corpus Christi state, have received orders to proceed to take up a position at the mouth of the Rio del Norte - and are making dispositions accordingly - though apparently without some reluctance. It is a sad season we should judge for movements of troops, munitions, and stores, in that alluvial soil. [BAH]

March 1846

NR 70.018  14Mar1846: number of ships, men, guns, etc.

Gulf squadron - The sloops of war Falmouth, John Adams, and St. Mary's, and the brig Porpoise, were all at Vera Cruz on the 16th ult. The steamer Mississippi and the brig Somers were at Pensacola, the latter to sail for Vera Cruz on the afternoon of the 2d instant.

The schooner Flirt, at Norfolk, is to be fitted for a dispatch vessel for the gulf. [BAH]

NR 70.050  28Mar1846: Army of Occupation quits Corpus Christi and advances to the Rio Grande

The second brigade commanded by lieut. Col. J.S. McIntosh, of the 5th regiment of infantry, under major T. Brown, struck their tents on the morning of the 10th, and took up their line of march for the Rio Grande.

The third brigade commanded by col. W. Whistler, composed of the 3d regiment of infantry, commanded by lieut. Col. E.A. Hitchcock, and the 4th infantry, commanded by lieut. Col. J. Garland, were to take final leave of their old Corpus Christi encampment, on Wednesday, the 11th instant, to join the main army.

The squadron of transports was to leave on the 20th inst. under convoy of the U.S. cutter Woodbury, captain Foster, and the steamer Monmouth. [BAH]

NR 70.050-70.051  28Mar1846: Gen. Zachary Taylor's general order on respecting the rights of Mexicans

Head quarters army of occupation, Corpus Christi, Texas March 8, 1846.
Orders. No 30. the army of occupation being about to take position on the left bank of the Rio Grande, under the orders of the executive of the U. States, the commanding general deems it proper to express his hope that the movement will prove beneficial to all concerned; and that nothing may be wanting on his part to insure so desirable a result, he strictly enjoins upon his command the most scrupulous regard for the rights of all persons who may be found in the peaceful pursuits of their respective avocations, residing on the both banks of the Rio Grande. No persons, under any pretense whatever, will interfere in any manner with the civil rights and religious privileges of the people, but will pay the utmost respect to both. Whatever may be required for the use of the army will be purchased by the paper departments at the highest market price. The general commanding is happy to say that he has entire confidence in the patriotism and discipline of the army under his command, and feels assured that his orders, as above expressed, will be strictly observed.

NR 70.051  28Mar1846:  Gen. Jose Antonio Mejia returns to Matamoros

the Mexican gen. Mejia is said to have returned to Matamoros on the 2d instant. The Mexican troops this side the Rio Grande - if any - are said to be under the command of Garcia, Canales and Severiego. It was reported in Galveston that gen. Taylor had made a requisition for more troops, but the report was doubted.

Four companies of volunteers called out at New Orleans, by gen. Gaines, for Texas, without any orders from the war department, and without any occasion for their services, were paid $51,600 for three months' service.  [BAH]

April 1846

NR 70.096   11Apr1846:  Mexican efforts to protect Point Isabel

70.096   11Apr1846suggestion that Mexico cede Texas, New Mexico, and California to the US

MEXICO. Vera Cruz dates to the 19th March, have been receive. Mr. Slidell was still at Jalapa. The New Orleans Times says, that on the 4th March, Senor Castillo Lanzas received a note from Mr. Slidell, requiring peremptorily a definitive answer to the demand to be received as minister plenipotentiary, not only to arrange the question of Texas, but to settle every other matter in dispute between the two countries, such as payment of the installments due on the debt, and a satisfactory remuneration for the losses sustained by our citizens, by the delay in those payments. The supreme government immediately convoked the council, and submitted Mr. Slidell's note for their opinion. They advised the government not to receive Mr., Slidell, except as envoy extraordinary to settle the difficulty about Texas, leaning all other affairs unattended to, until that shall have been adjusted. It is not known whether the government will conform to the wishes of the council, but it is supposed it will, since the president and his cabinet find in its favor, not only the recorded opinions of the preceding administration and the late chambers, but the whole of the Mexican press.

On the other side, it is asserted in the Mexican prints that Mr. Slidell will not abate one jot of his pretensions, and will quit the republic immediately after the receipt of Senor Lanzas' reply, if it be not perfectly satisfactory.

The La  Hesperia of the 7th, confirms the above.

Mexican dates are to the 7th, at which time rumors of the advance of General Taylor to the Rio Grande had reached there. It was even said that the advanced troops had seized the pilots at Matamoros, to force them into the service of the vessels of war collecting about the Bazos, Santiago, and Boca Chica. From every quarter - the Pacific, the Gulf and by the Rio Grande - the prospect to Mexico from the United States, according to the paper, was deemed most hostile.

Gen. Mejia, had pushed 400 infantry to protect Point Sta. Isabel and Gen, Parrodi was very busy in drumming up pupils to repel invasion. All these movements have reference only to our reconnoitering parties, which having made their observations, immediately retired. - The Mexicans think they will be able to concentrate 8,00 men on the Rio Bravo by the 1st of April.

A private letter, dated on the 7th ult., informs us that some twenty United States soldiers, who had deserted from Corpus Christi, had arrived at the city Mexico and been set at liberty by the government. They are represented by our correspondent as in a most wretched condition, many of them going about begging, and despised by both Mexicans and foreigners. They say they have been much deceived about Mexico, and heartily wish themselves back in Gen. Taylor's camp again. Good enough for them.

Gen. Ampudia is said to have reached as far as St. Louis Potosi, on his way to the command of the "Army of the North."

The correspondent of the Locomotor of the 11th ult., writing from the city of Mexico, states: "Ij this event there is no doubt that the maritime forces of the Anglo-Americans situated in the gulf, and in the Pacific, will attack our ports, and Gen. Taylor will commence operations on the Rio Bravo." [BAH]

MR. SLIDELL'S MISSION, has been unfortunate as well as unsuccessful. No one regrets this result more than ourselves. It is unfortunate that the appointment of a minister was delayed beyond the moment, which would have been most favorable for success. The instant the Mexicans ascertained that neither England nor France were disposed to incur a war with the U. States in order to prevent the annexation of Texas, an American minister should have been upon the spot to take advantage of the reaction produced by that discovery. Both of those governments had prompted Mexico. - alone in her glory. Incensed at the desertion, a reaction took place, which should have been restored. It was a stickling about etiquette, we fear, which lost us the tide, which would have led to fortune.

There was a resort to secrecy, too, in the premises, which was probably unfortunate. The motive for this no doubt was to steal a march upon European governments. No one was aware, until the president in his annual message announced the fact to congress, that Mr. Slidell had received such an appointment or left home on such an errand. The advantage gained by this mystery, in any whatever was gained, was overbalanced far by a want of that countenance and respectability which would have especially marked the mission. The manner of Mr. Slidell’s approach aroused patriotic as well as popular prejudice. The character of his embassy was questioned. Unfortunately, according to President Herrera's construction, Mr. Slidell's credentials were not in accordance with the preliminary understanding, and etiquette interposed another delay. Further instructions ere now forwarded to Mr. Slidell, but in the meantime a revolution in the Mexican government predicated expressly with the view of defeating the object of Mr. Slidell's embassy had been accomplished, his errand failed, and he has returned home.

Our naval and military forcers were concentrated upon the Mexican frontier and coast, in anticipation of Mr. Slidell's mission. On its being suggested by President Herrera's government, that this would interpose an obstacle to his reception or to a pacification, the squadron was recalled, and the army was continued to "observation." On the indications or to a pacification at Mexico, these counter-maneuvers were retracted. The squadron was augmented and again ordered to the Mexican coast and the army was ordered to advance to "occupation." If these orders were designed to sustain Herrera, they were to late. If designed to intimidate Paredes to recognize Mr. Slidell, they have failed.

The commanders of both army and squadrons have now arrived at the very borders of the Rubicon. [BAH]

"ARMY OF OCCUPATION."

TAKES POST ON THE RIO GRANDE. - The revenue cutter Woodbury, left the Brazos St. Jago on the 30th ultimo, and reached Galveston, on the 4th instant, with intelligence from the army, the steamship New York reached N. Orleans on the 8th from Galveston bringing intelligence of the arrival of the pilot boat Hitchcock which left Brazos St. Jago on the 1st inst. Those sources furnish us with details from which we abbreviate the following. It will be recollected that our previous accounts left the army en route from Corpus Christi for the Rio Grande; distance 119 miles.

Two reconnoitering detachments, one commanded by Capt. Hardee, the other by Lieut. Hamilton, preceded the movement. The one approached opposite Brazos Santiago via Isla del Padre, the other by the old Matamoras road, near Sal Colorado. Gen'l Mejia, in command at Matamoras, on hearing of their approach, mustered every soldier there, and crossed the Rio Grande in person, under the impression that he should meet the advance of the army. He Marched as far as the Colorado creek, with all possible dispatch, and discovered that both these detachments had returned to the camp at Corpus Christi.

The account from Matamoras of the 13th March goes on the say: --"his anger at this unexpected 'no find you there' knew no bounds - as he had boasted upon his departure from Matamoras, of the laurels that he his troops would win before their return to their old quarters. His excellency was, however, compelled to put back without a single trophy to grace his unwelcome return."

It will best to show, here as far as we are able the DISPOSITON OF THE MEXICAN FORCES ON THE FRONTIER.

We extract from the above letter from Matamoras:

"All the forces late under the command of General Arista, at Monterey, and now under the orders of Gen. La Vega, about 1,800 strong, have arrived at Matamoras, and it is said, will march forthwith for the Salt Lakes and the Sal Colorado, to arrest the march of Gen. Taylor upon the Rio Grande. Gen. Canales, of Comargo, with his regiment, nearly 1,000 strong, has received orders from the advance of our forces, to march the movements of you r army, and is now occupying a position in a direct line between Comargo and Corpus Christi, about 22 leagues from the former place, at the north western extremity of the great Salt Lake. General Ampudia (the gentlemen who boiled Sentmanat's head) is within two days march of us, with 3,500 men, mostly cavalry. We know very little of what is going on in the country or interior as General Paredes has stopped the transmission of all newspapers as dangerous. You, who know pretty well all the movements upon the political draft board, will be able to judge of the times by the signs. What is here stated id true, and you may assure your friends of that fact. I might state many other matters, but they are too delicate for discussion. - in my next you will have further particulars, and before you get this, the questions of fight or not fight between us and Gen. Taylor will have been decided upon, and the independence of the northern provinces declared, or their future connection with the parent state, quietly, tamely, basely, acquiesced in. Our present armed force and station are as follows: --

Gen. Canales with 900 to 1,000 troops at head of Salt Lakes, sixty miles from Comargo.

Gen. Mejia on Al Colorado, where the old Matamoras road crosses that river, about 60 or 70 miles from Matamoras, about 750 men.

Gen. Garcia, at Point Isabel, with 280 men, mostly infantry and artillery.

Gen. Savereigo, with some 200 men, is upon the Colorado, between Gen. Mejia is the lower ford, which is from 10 to 15 miles from the gulf.

Gen. La Vega, at Matamoras, with 1,800 troops, late commanded by Gen. Arista, detained to reinforce Mejia. Total force, say 4,000 men, about half of whom are on the east side of the Rio Grande.

Arista, is still keeping himself in reserve at his hacienda. Don La Gaixa y Flores, governor of the Tamaulipas, arrived here last night, with an intention, as it is said, of organizing the rancheros, veterans, &c., for defensive operations, should they unfortunately be required."

To resume of account of Gen. Taylor's movement.

Gen Taylor, with a company of dragoons under the command of Col. Twiggs, in advance of the main army, reached Point Isabel on the 24th of March. Isabel is a bluff or promontory of sixty feet elevation, on the north side of the Rio Grande, a few miles below the Mexican city of Matamoras, which is situated upon the southern side of that river.

The fleet of transports from Aransas reached the point by within half an hour after the arrival of the commanding general.

When near Point Isabel with the dragoons, General Taylor was met by a deputation of 30 or 40 men, bearing a proclamation and message from Gen. Meia, protesting against the invasion, and gasconading of defense. At the same moment, the conflagration to the custom house and several other buildings at Point Isabel, which Rodriguez, the commandant had set fire to on the approach of the fleet of transports, was discovered. Gen. Taylor dismissed the deputation, informing them that he would reply to Gen. Mejia on the 28th opposite to Matamoras. Rodriguez was pursued some distance, but made good his retreat to the river.

The only opposition experienced by the army on their march, was first, at the little Colorado, where a Mexican officer, with about 150 mounted men, threatened to fire upon Gen. Taylor if he attempted to cross that stream, stating that such were his positive orders, and that Mexicans knew no fear. The artillery was immediately ordered up, where the troops formed and commenced fording in perfect order, the water being nearly to the arm-pits, whereupon the gallant Mexicans retreated without executing his "positive orders." The only other show of opposition had been previously made by a party of 50 or 60, who met the army in the prairie, informed Gen. Taylor that he must proceed no farther in that direction. By order of Gen. Taylor the army opened and this party were permitted to march through to the rear, and then depart.

The country was in a highly favorable condition for the march of the army - more rain would have made the traveling bad, less would have occasioned a scarcity of water.

Col. McCrea was disappointed in his attempt to take the barges across the Laguna la Madre, for the want of sufficient water. They will, in consequence, have to be taken by land. The average depth of water on the bar at Brasos St. Iago is eight and a half feet; from thence to Point Isabel, a distance of about three miles due west, the uniform depth is about five feet. Extraordinary successes attended getting the vessels over a difficult bar, without pilots. The schooner Belle del mar was however driven on the South side. After beating heavily on the bar, and lies into feet water. She cannot be saved. The Louisiana, Capt. Eddy, had her rudder unshipped, but she received no other damage. The U.S. brig Lawrence, Com't Mercer, remained at anchor off the bar. The brig Porpoise, Com't Hunt, sailed for Pensacola on the 26th ult.

Forty wagons with supplies for the arm, left point Isabel on the morning of the 26th in fine condition, and having an excellent road twenty-eight miles to the army opposite Matamoras, and on the morning after Gen. Taylor followed, leaving a company of artillery at Pont Isabel in command of Maj. Munroe.

On the 28th of March, the army of occupation, numbering in all about 3,500 arrived and encamped opposite Matamoras. On the appearance of the American army, the Mexican forces were drawn out on the opposite bank of the river, making a great display of martial music, with trumpets, bugles, &c., which mode of salutation was duly reciprocated in kind by a similar sounding of trumpets and drums in the American lines. Thus ended the first day's reencounter between the two armies on the opposite banks of the Rio Grande, and within two or three hundred yards of each other.

On the next morning, 29th, the American troops discovered the Mexican artillery of eighteen pounders, lining the opposite bank, and pointing directly into their camp, whereupon the American army moved their encampment four miles below. This step, says the account, was doubtless taken by Gen. Taylor in order to avoid every appearance of any disposition to commit aggressions upon the west bank of the river, and to maintain strictly the defensive character of his operations.

The most reliable statements represent the regular army in Matamoras to consist of 2000 soldiers and 500 rancheros.

We are bound to presume that in some way or other, the above hasty accounts have done injustice to our commanding general. Whatever of approbation we might bestow upon his forbearance in the premises, must be at the expense of his claims to generalship, which make this instance of forbearance necessary. Gen. Taylor has been entrusted with the command of the "army of occupation" and will be too circumspect to lose the appellation, by occupying a post which prudence requires him to evacuate so soon as an opposing army show a battery in his front. [BAH]
NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER

Vol. 70, May-July 1846

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>July 1844- April 1846</th>
<th>May-July 1846</th>
<th>August-October 1846</th>
<th>November-December 1846</th>
<th>January-February 1847</th>
<th>March-April 1847</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>May-June 1847</td>
<td>July-August 1847</td>
<td>September-October 1847</td>
<td>November-December 1847</td>
<td>January-March &amp; July December 1848</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Index

- NNR 70.132 Mexican protest against Gen. Zachary Taylor's taking position on the Rio Grande
- NNR 70.132 Gen. Pedro Ampudia enters Matamoros, correspondence with Gen. Zachary Taylor
- NNR 70.132 deserters from the two armies
- NNR 70.132 Gen. William Jenkins Worth resigns
- NNR 70.132-70.133 Col. Trueman Cross disappears, believed captured by Mexicans
- NNR 70.133 Naval Journal
- NNR 70.133 Gen. William Jenkins Worth arrives at New Orleans
- NNR 70.133 rumors of Mexicans crossing the Rio Grande
- NNR 70.160 Gen. Nicolas Bravo departs Mexico City with 6,000 men to defend Veracruz
- NNR 70.160, 70.161 the Mexican war steamers Montezuma and Guadaloupe sold at Havana
- NNR 70.160 the business of Veracruz annihilated
- NNR 70.160 letter about control by Great Britain of Mexican policy
- NNR 70.160 improvements in the armaments of the fortress of San Juan de Ulloa
- NNR 70.160 movements of Mexican troops at Mazatlan, the cessation of business there
- NNR 70.160 Lt. Theodoric H. Porter and three men killed; deserters from the American Army
- NNR70.160 Gen. Mariano Arista supersedes Gen. Pedro Ampudia in command, pacific professions from Gen. Mariano Arista
- NNR70.160 Col. Trueman Cross' body found
- NNR70.160 Gen. Zachary Taylor notified to quit his position by the Mexicans
- NNR70.160 Mexicans cross the Rio Grande
- NNR70.160 Mexican schooner Juniata captured by the Flirt, Mexicans capture wagons of settlers bearing provisions, American consul and merchants at Matamoros ordered to the interior
NNR 70.160 Rio Grande blockaded
NNR 70.160 Gen. William Jenkins Worth and John Slidell arrive at Washington

NNR 70.161-70.163 editorial notice of war preparations, prompt movements in Texas, Alabama, and Louisiana

NNR 70.163 position of the Army at Matamoros, description of Point Isabel, Brazos Santiago, &c.

NNR 70.164 Army journal; Capt. W. G. Catlett's letter on the requisition of troops from Texas

NNR 70.165 accounts by steamer Augusta

NNR 70.165 letter from Col. R. Fitzpatrick, letter to a member of Congress

NNR 70.165 letter to Senator Simon Cameron, Army in danger

NNR 70.176 meetings of volunteers

NNR 70.176 war clause on marine insurance

NNR 70.176 orders and movement of troops for the frontier

NNR 70.176 list of killed and wounded in Capt. Seth Barton Thornton's detachment

NNR 70.176 Louisiana orders for enrollment of all persons subject to military duty

NNR 70.176 USS Mississippi, steamer, ordered to start for Veracruz
NNR 70.176 Saint Mary's, sloop of war, sails to the aid of Point Isabel
NNR 70.176 resolution of the New York legislature authorizing the governor to call 50,000 volunteers for Mexico

NNR 70.177 proclamation of war against Mexico is copied from declaration of war with Great Britain in 1812

NNR 70.177 manifesto of Mexican President ad interim Mariano Paredes y Arillaga against the United States

NNR 70.177 Creek Indians volunteer for service in Mexico

NNR 70.177 US revenue cutters ordered to the Gulf

NNR 70.178 apprehensions about privateering on behalf of Mexico by Spanish subjects

NNR 70.178 requisition for 30,000 volunteers, exclusive of those called for by Gen. Zachary Taylor and Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines, difficulties suggested

NNR 70.178 discussion of command of the Army

NNR 70.178 comments on the abilities of the Mexican general Mariano Arista

NNR 70.178 description of Matamoros and its vicinity

NNR 70.178-70.179 incidents of the campaign
NNR 70.178-70.179 Capt. Samuel Hamilton Walker's mission between Point Isabel and the camp opposite Matamoros
NNR 70.179 Gen. Zachary Taylor's camp, danger in passing to or from his depot at Isabel, movement to bring up supplies, Mexican batteries at Matamoros bombard his battery Gen. Zachary Taylor reaches Point Isabel, prepares to return with train of munitions and supplies, Capt. Samuel Hamilton Walker reaches him with accounts from fort, allowing him time for better preparation.

no reinforcements yet arrived at Point Isabel, calculation of the expected arrival of forces comment on rumors and exaggerations from the scene of the fighting as represented in newspapers, official intelligence reaches Washington extract of a letter from Gen. Zachary Taylor extract of a letter from an officer at the fort opposite Matamoros extract from a letter about the defenses at Point Isabel surprise and surrender of Capt. Seth Barton Thornton’s command

Capt. Samuel Hamilton Walker's detachment and its engagement with the Mexicans Surprise and surrender of Captain Thornton's command tribute to Col. Trueman Cross, first victim of the war

Gilbert Dudley's capture of two Mexicans official orders as to organizing the volunteers in US service

Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines' requisition on Louisiana for troops, the prompt response

Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines' requisitions for volunteers list of officers of the Army in Texas remarks and statements on US finances in light of the war with Mexico, possibility of a loan, of issuance of treasury notes, of postponement of revision of the tariff accounts from New Orleans of extravagant expenditures for military supplies map of the seat of war geography of the seat of the war course of the Rio Grande (Rio del Norte or Rio Bravo) distances on the route from San Antonio to Mexico City account of the city of Mexico health of the Rio Grande

"true policy of the republic" capture of Gen. Romulo Diaz de la Vega executive power granted to the president for conducting the war, funds authorized, troops to be raised, officers to be appointed requisition on the states for volunteers

NNR 70.196 report of the squadron under Com. John Drake Sloat at Mazatlan

NNR 70.196 government said to intend purchasing small vessels to run close in shore in the Gulf

NNR 70.196 Gen. Zachary Taylor’s official letters from Point Isabel, his brief notes on the Battle of Palo Alto and the Battle of Resaca de la Palma

NNR 70.197 Gen. Romulo Diaz de la Vega and other captured officers forwarded to New Orleans

NNR 70.197,70.198 Com. David Conner’s dispatches to Secretary of the Navy George Bancroft from Brazos of 8th, 9th, and 12th May

NNR 70.197 Gen. Zachary Taylor’s letter from camp opposite Matamoros, enclosing Gen. Pedro Ampudia’s letter of 12th April summoning Taylor to quit his position

NNR 70.198 account of events at Point Isabel during the battle of 9th May NNR 70.198 Gen. Pedro Ampudia’s proclamation to the people of the east, his address to the inhabitants of the frontier, “Eagle of the North’s” notice of the manifesto

NNR 70.199 President Mariano Paredes y Arrillaga’s manifesto to the Mexican nation

NNR 70.199 Texas general orders for volunteers for Mexico

NNR 70.199-70.200 prompt measures to sustain Gen. Zachary Taylor, proclamations and correspondence of Gov. William Owsley of Kentucky about raising volunteers

NNR 70.201 Death of Major Ringgold

NNR 70.200-70.202 Gov. Thomas G. Pratt’s (Maryland) proclamation and general orders (similar official proceedings in other states), successors of the “old Maryland line” in the field

NNR 70.202 volunteer spirit in the states

NNR 70.202 Gen. Zachary Taylor’s official account of the campaign to Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines

NNR 70.202 bombardment of the fort opposite Matamoros

NNR 70.202 rejoicing in New Orleans about the action of the president and cabinet on receipt of news of the war

NNR 70.202 comments on the plan of the campaign revealed in the correspondence of Gen. Mariano Arista

NNR 70.202 the firing on American troops bearing captured Mexican colors

NNR 70.202 total number of volunteers furnished by Louisiana

NNR 70.202 departure of Capt. D.J. Ricardo’s Rangers for the war

NNR 70.202-70.203 expedition against Barita

NNR 70.203 Gen. Zachary Taylor returns to Fort Brownl
NNR 70.203 exchange of prisoners
NNR 70.203 Gen. Zachary Taylor’s plans to cross the Rio Grande
NNR 70.203 volunteers reach Brazos
NNR 70.203 maneuvers of the US fleet on the scene, list of vessels at Brazos

Santiago

NNR 70.203 departure of the steam schooner Augusta with wounded

NNR 70.203 letter from a correspondent at Point Isabel

NNR 70.203 Maj. Lloyd James Beall's letter about the death of Lt. Theodoric Henry Porter

NNR 70.203-204 account of a search through the chaparral for the remains of Lt. Theodoric Henry Porter

NNR 70.209 British steamer Terrible to Oregon

NNR 70.209 production of uniforms for the Army

NNR 70.210,70.304 French notions about the war, the intention of France to interfere to prevent annexation of Mexican territory by the United States

NNR 70.210 the Nashville "Union" announces the design of government to take and to hold California

NNR 70.211 express riding to carry news of the war

NNR 70.212 difficulties in organizing volunteers

NNR 70.212 various detachments to proceed to Texas

NNR 70.212 remarks as to plan of conducting campaign, &c.

NNR 70.212 Gen. John Ellis Wool on his way to muster troops in the northwest

NNR 70.213 letter about traders to Santa Fe departing Independence despite news of the war

NNR 70.214 incidents of the campaign

70.214 Barita taken without opposition

70.214 Matamoros taken by Gen. Zachary Taylor without opposition

70.214 arrival of regiments of regulars and volunteers

70.214 compliment to Mexican bravery

70.214 estimate of American killed and wounded

70.214 Col. James Simmons McIntosh's wounds

70.214 Capt. John Page's melancholy condition

70.214 Capt. Seth Barton Thornton's near escape, capture, and exchange

NNR 70.214 expedition against Santa Fe planned

NNR 70.214-70.215 speculation as to Gen. Winfield Scott taking command of the Army in Mexico

NNR 70.215 arrest of Capt. Seth Barton Thornton

NRR 70.214 incidents of the campaign

NNR 70.214 Barita taken without opposition

NNR 70.214 Matamoros taken by Gen. Zachary Taylor without opposition

NNR 70.214 arrival of regiments of regulars and volunteers

NNR 70.214 compliment to Mexican bravery

NNR 70.214 estimate of American killed and wounded

NNR 70.214 Col. James Simmons McIntosh's wounds

NNR 70.214 Capt. John Page's melancholy condition

NNR 70.215-70.217 further details of the battles on the Rio Grande
NNR 70.217 Mexican account of incidents on the Rio Grande

NNR 70.217-70.218 bombardment of Fort Brown

NNR 70.224 public journals on finances in light of war

NNR 70.224 movements of volunteers toward Point Isabel; Mexican schooners bought by US government

NNR 70.225 indignation of disbanded volunteers

NNR 70.225 Gen. Zachary Taylor's official report on the battles of May 8 and 9 received

NNR 70.226,70.256 escape of two Mexican steamers from Veracruz for Havana

NNR 70.226 steamers Guadaloupe and Montezuma, built at New York, purchased by the US government

NNR 70.227 difficulties developing over requisitions for volunteers

NNR 70.227 confusion about mustering of the Saint Louis Legion into US service, troops raised for service against Santa Fe

NNR 70.227 departure of the Louisville Legion for New Orleans before receipt of counter-orders from the War Department

NNR 70.227 over 5,000 Tennessee volunteers for the Rio Grande

NNR 70.227,70.259 Gov. James Pinckney Henderson takes command of the Texas volunteers and proceeds to frontier

NNR 70.227 departure of Texas companies of volunteers for the Rio Grande

NNR 70.227 general orders specifying routes of western volunteers to the frontier

NNR 70.227 discouragement of Indiana volunteers

NNR 70.227 difficulty in supplying Ohio troops mustered into US service

NNR 70.228 American consul at Veracruz and all Americans ordered to leave

NNR 70.228 energetic volunteering of Maryland troops for service in Mexico

NNR 70.228 Veracruz blockaded

NNR 70.228 proclamation in favor of Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna

NNR 70.228 Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arrillaga intends to move north with troops

NNR 70.228 animosity against the United States

NNR 70.228 Mexican clergy refuse to loan funds for the war

NNR 70.228 Mexican account of casualties in the late battles

NNR 70.228 patriotic effusions of Mexican journals

NNR 70.228 further discussions with the clergy about the proposed loan to the Mexican government
NNR 70.228 preparations for an expedition against Santa Fe

NNR 70.228 number of troops under Gen. Zachary Taylor, expectation of an advance

NNR 70.228 operation of the Army on the Rio Grande, talk between Gen. Pedro Ampudia and Gen. Zachary Taylor

NNR 70.228-229 a party of Americans taken and barbarously treated between Point Isabel and Corpus Christi

NNR 70.229 items of information from Brazos

NNR 70.229 arrival of Texas Rangers and infantry at Point Isabel

NNR 70.229 Mexican account of incidents from 1st to 3rd May

NNR 70.229 Mexican statement of their own losses

NNR 70.230-231 capture of La Barita, description of its situation

NNR 70.235-239 Albert Gallatin's address to the people of the United States on the subject of war with Mexico

NNR 70.240 expenses of the war, need for action to raise funds, lack of funds for purchasing supplies at New Orleans

NNR 70.240 naval operations on the Mexican coast

NNR 70.240 attack on Capt. John Charles Fremont threatened by Don Jose Castro

NNR 70.240 demand on ships for freights at New Orleans

NNR 70.240 Catholic chaplains appointed for the Army

NNR 70.241 comment on national finances in light of the war with Mexico

NNR 70.241 offer of British ministers to mediate differences between the United States and Mexico

NNR 70.242 consuls of neutral powers protest American blockade of Veracruz, arrangements to withstand the blockade

NNR 70.243 Dr. William Maxwell Wood, bearer of dispatches from the Pacific squadron, passing through Mexico, meets and forwards to Com. John Drake Sloat intelligence of the war

NNR 70.255 report of taking of Matamoros

NNR 70.255 Com. David Conner's instructions to the squadron on principles of a blockade

NNR 70.256 exhibit of force of the Gulf Squadron, unlikelihood of successful attack on Veracruz

NNR 70.256 rumors of a British offer of mediation between the United States and Mexico

NNR 70.257 comments on the possibility of a British offer of mediation between the United States and Mexico

NNR 70.258-70.259 South American and Mexican Association's memorial to the British ministers asking mediation
NNR 70.261-70.262 article in the "Southern Quarterly Review" reviewing the campaign, noticed

NNR 70.262 formidable force organizing against Santa Fe

NNR 70.262 Lt. Col. Henry Wilson marches against Reynosa

NNR 70.262 Gen. Zachary Taylor's letter complaining of want of transport and the large body of volunteers beyond what he had asked for

NNR 70.262-70.263 letters from "The Corporal" at Matamoros

NNR 70.263-70.264 Gen. Zachary Taylor's letter of 22d April to Gen. Mariano Arista, relative to blockade of the Rio Grande

NNR 70.264 council of war after Palo Alto, incidents of the Battle of Resaca de la Palma

NNR 70.264-70.265 incidents of the battlefield

NNR 70.265 general orders directing rendezvous of the several corps of volunteers

NNR 70.265 Gen. Mariano Arista's official report of the battles of 8th and 9th May

NNR 70.265 topography of the route from Matamoros to Monterey and Saltillo

NNR 70.265-70.266 movement of the Mexicans

NNR 70.266-70.268 review of the campaign from the "Southern Quarterly Review"

NNR 70.272 Reynosa and Camargo taken

NNR 70.272 Gen. Zachary Taylor awaiting transport to join the advance corps

NNR 70.272 positions of regulars and volunteers

NNR 70.272 Gov. James Pinckney Henderson reaches Rio Grande accompanied by Tonkawa Indians

NNR 70.273 march on Barita

NNR 70.273 Capt. Ben McCulloch's expedition on a spying mission

NNR 70.273 deaths of Mexican wounded, deserters from Mexican forces

NNR 70.273 reported dispute between Gen. Mariano Arista and Gen. Pedro Ampudia over defeats

NNR 70.273 court of inquiry ordered on Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines for his requisition of troops and supplies

NNR 70.273 Yucatan declares independence

NNR 70.273 revolution in favor of Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna and federalism at Jalisco

NNR 70.274 a plea for peace

NNR 70.274 toast to the Heroine of Fort Brown

NNR 70.276 discussion of general officers chosen to conduct the war with Mexico various incidents of the late battles, the field after battle, &c.

Mexican plan of campaign compliment to the Marylanders in Mexico accounts of wounded officers, suspicion that Mexicans use shot containing arsenic

Lt. Theodoric H. Porter's body found account of the wounded in the hospitals compliment by Gen. Romulo Diaz de la Vega to Gen. Zachary Taylor on the quality of Taylor's troops hunting for "Rio Grande deer"

Gen. Zachary Taylor's letter accompanying Gen. Mariano Arista's invitation to American soldiers to desert reception of deputation that delivered the thanks of Louisiana to Gen. Zachary Taylor comments on the expedition against Santa Fe notice of strong discontent expressed by volunteers whose services were declined by the government

seven companies of volunteers depart from Nashville twenty-three Alabama companies ready for the Rio Grande volunteers raised in Missouri for Santa Fe refused by US government recruits engaged for a mounted regiment against Santa Fe blundering in the calling out of volunteers volunteers at Fort Leavenworth

a volunteer heroine among the Indiana troops full complement of Ohio volunteers enrolled requisition on Illinois for volunteers is filled apathy among volunteers on the Rio Grande described by "The Corporal" appointment of officers of volunteers soldiers arrive at Baltimore and Saint Louis from the seat of war

Army depot established at Robinson's Ferry on the Trinity

Maj. Thomas Turner Fauntleroy ordered to proceed to San Antonio with dragoons

Bibles forwarded to Army in Texas
NNR 70.289 officers from the Rio Grande arrive in Philadelphia

NNR 70.289-70.290 specifications relating to Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines' call for volunteers to be examined by the court of inquiry

NNR 70.290 three ships of the line ordered ready for service

NNR 70.290 accounts of the attacks of the Saint Mary's on the fort and gunboats at Tampico

NNR 70.291 account of the Princeton in the blockade of Veracruz

NNR 70.291 California expedition fitting at New York

NNR 70.291 three schooners being constructed at New York for the Mexican government purchased by the American government

NNR 70.293 recruitment of regulars commended for a foreign invasion

70.293 notice of various troop movements

NNR 70.293 copy of act authorizing organization of volunteer forces

NNR 70.293 response of citizens of New Hampshire to the call for volunteers

NNR 70.293 formation of companies of volunteers in Connecticut

NNR 70.293-70.294 requisition on Massachusetts for troops, extract from the general orders of Gov. George Nixon Briggs

NNR 70.294 tendering of New York troops for service in Mexico

NNR 70.294 nineteen companies of North Carolina volunteers report for duty in Mexico

NNR 70.294 Alabama volunteers leave for the Rio Grande

NNR 70.294 recruiting of Mississippi volunteers for service in Mexico

NNR 70.294 mustering of Ohio volunteers for service in Mexico

NNR 70.294 complaints about Gov. Thomas Ford of Illinois in mustering volunteers for Mexico

NNR 70.294 comments on arrangements for payment for clothing for volunteers

NNR 70.294 departure of Kentucky units for Mexico

NNR 70.294 dissatisfaction of Missouri volunteers at Fort Leavenworth

NNR 70.294 financial support for volunteers in Tennessee

NNR 70.294 movement of companies of Texas volunteers toward the seat of the war

NNR 70.294 statement of Cassius Marcellus Clay on the war

NNR 70.295 Gen. Robert Desha's prompt response to news of the outbreak of hostilities with Mexico

NNR 70.295-70.296 ceremony of surrender of Matamoros

NNR 70.296 account of enterprise on the Rio Grande under American influence
Mexican ladies at Matamoros reconciled to the Americans

Mexican compliment to American behavior after their victories dead of Capt. Jose A. Baragan reconnoiter after Gen. Mariano Arista interview between Col. Matthew Mountjoy Payne and Gen. Romulo Diaz de la Vega examination of the trophies of the war, including the flag of the Tampico guards

Mexican treatment of American prisoners

Gen. Mariano Arista's official account of killed and wounded in the battles of the 8th and 9th of May, &c., his account of evacuation of Matamoros proposed expedition against Yucatan, denial that the American government intends to support it

British view of the Mexican war, sympathy with Mexico, British mediation suggested

Charles Bent, Saint Vrain, and Folger arrive at Saint Louis and report, Gen. Jose Urrea said to be advancing to relief of Santa Fe

Santa Fe traders pushing forward rapidly in advance of US troops federal government accepts services of Missouri mounted regiment and artillery for operations against New Mexico

Santa Fe expedition withdrawal of troops from our Indian frontiers, leaving them exposed to outbreaks volunteers reach the Rio Grande lack of authentic intelligence from the interior of Mexico present of exploded shot by Capt. D.S. Miles to the Baltimore high school account of the rank and file in the late battles

Gen. Zachary Taylor, for want of transports and supplies, unable to improve his victories, inundated by volunteers of whose services he cannot avail; items from the Rio Grande; letter from the seat of war; Gen. Urrea advancing on Santa Fe

California expedition preparing at New York departure of the expedition against Santa Fe from Fort Leavenworth

Louisiana habeas corpus case

Gen. Zachary Taylor's interview with a gentleman's son among the volunteers organizing of the regiments of Illinois volunteers

call on Iowa for an additional company of volunteers indignation over appointment of Sterling Price as commander of a company of Missouri volunteers

Alabama election of officers, departure for Point Isabel arrival of volunteers from Maryland and the District of Columbia at Brazos use of a draft in North Carolina to determine troops chosen for service in Mexico departure of Ohio volunteers for the Rio Grande destination of Kentucky volunteers in Mexico correspondence of Gen. William Jenkins Worth and Gen. Zachary Taylor on Worth’s desire to retire from his command intrigues to restore Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna to power in Mexico war for a "piece" of Mexico gathering of a board of naval officers, denial that it dealt with an attack on San Juan de Ulloa energetic measures by the administration to carry on the war, posture of affairs Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna about to embark for Mexico uncertainty about whereabouts of Gen. Mariano Paredes y Arillaga, prospect of a rebellion to supersede him

European powers indisposed to take part in the war Mexican movements rumors of the departure of Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna from Cuba for Mexico items from the Rio Grande report on supplying materials for transportation to the Army gales off Brazos, numerous shipwrecks letter from Henry Whiting on the delivery of supplies to the Army in Texas route to the interior of Mexico want of discipline among the volunteers report on the tendering of Pennsylvania volunteers for service in Mexico third regiment of Ohio volunteers reach New Orleans deaths in the Baltimore battalion complaint about the appointment of political partisans to militia positions complaints about the rejection by Gov. Thomas Ford of Illinois of some volunteers relief to families of volunteers

Mormons enlist in the expedition against California arrival of the Georgia regiment of volunteers at Mobile expedition to Santa Fe

May 9, 1846 Mexican protest against Gen. Zachary Taylor’s taking position on the Rio Grande

The army of occupation. Accounts already furnished, left gen. Taylor on the 29th alt. Taking post on the eastern bank of the Rio Grande, immediately opposite and commanding the town of Matamoros. – By the arrival of the steam Col. Harvey at New Orleans, we learned that general Taylor was met by a deputation of civilians from the town of Matamoros who protested against his “invasion of the Mexican department of Tamaulipas” [JEB]

May 9, 1846 Gen. Pedro Ampudia enters Matamoros, correspondence with Gen. Zachary Taylor

On the 11th April, general Ampudia marched into Matamoros with 1,000 cavalry and 1,500 infantry. Thus augmented the Mexican force there to 5,500 men.

On the next day gen. Ampudia, notified gen. Taylor to retire to the eastern bank of the Nueces. This notification was of a threatening character, and was regarded by Gen. T. As of a belligerent nature, and accordingly he instructed the military commander at Brazos to consider the Mexican army as in a hostile attitude. [JEB]

May 9, 1846 deserters from the two armies

We are informed says the New Orleans Bulletin that about thirty of the American troops had deserted, ten or twelve of whom were shot in endeavoring to make their escape. This had the effect of checking further desertions. It is said that about 1,000 of Ampudia’s men deserted him on his march. [JEB]

May 9, 1846 Gen. William Jenkins Worth resigns

Gen. Worth is on his way to this city in the U.S. steam propeller Hunter, which vessel left on the same day as the Colonel Harney. [JEB]

May 9, 1846 Col. Trueman Cross disappears, believed captured by Mexicans

Col. Truman Cross, quarter master general of the army, disappeared so singularly, that for several days the greatest anxiety was felt. A letter from an officer of the army, dated Point Isabel, April 14, says- "Col. Cross left the camp about noon on Friday, 10th inst. He was alone, and when last heard from, was at the house of a Mexican, about one mile from the camp. Since that time no certain information has been received as to his fate. [JEB]

NNR 70.133 May 2, 1846 NAVAL JOURNAL

The Potomac frigate arrived at Vera Cruz on the first April from Norfolk.

The American squadron at Sacrificios on the 5th April consisted of the Cumberland and Potomac frigates, the Falmouth, St. Marys' and John Adams, sloops of war.

The frigate Brandywine, now in ordinary as Gosport navy yard, is to be fitted out forthwith.

Lieut. G. S. Blake, takes command of the U.S. brig Perry, now at Norfolk preparing for the Pacific. Lieut. B. has for some time been occupied in surveying the Delaware bay and river, in the course of which he discovered a safe ship channel in the bay, not heretofore laid down on the chart.

The Constitution - Old Ironsides. A letter from an officer on board the U.S. frigate Constitution, now in the Pacific, relates the following pleasing incident, which occurred when the Constitution was out about ten days from Macao, on her way to Manilla, and found herself near a fleet of six British vessels, becalmed:

"A few light cats-paws fanned us along until we were within two miles of them, and then the wind left us. We were all thus becalmed in sight of each other. We made them out to be a large line of battleship, two frigates, one brig and two steamers; their nation as yet unknown, as there was no wind to throw out their ensigns. Presently one of the steamers began firing up, and shortly afterwards bore down for us. We were just exercising our crew at general quarters, (always keeping up our discipline, you perceive), when she came within hail. From her we learnt that the vessels composed the East India squadron of H.B.M. under command of rear admiral sir Thomas Cochrane, K.C.B., that they had been seven months down among the islands, and the whole squadron were short of bread, 'grog', water, and other necessaries, and they desired to know if we could furnish them with the stores required, to last them one week. No sooner asked than done. No sailor ever stops to count the biscuit in his locker when he sees a hungry customer. Then a lively scene occurred, gratifying, I assure you, to both sides. Our guns had to be secured, and, indeed, we must have presented rather a hostile appearance to Mr. Bull; in fact, one of the officers good humoredly observed, he 'thought we were going to blow him out of water.' We turned to with light hearts, and broke out the provisions and sent them on board, while we entertained the officers in very gallant style, in fact doing the clean and genteel thing by them. I don't recollect ever spending a more pleasing time that I did the two short hours they were with us; and when they left, it was like parting with friends of long standing. One good fellow gave, as he was about leaving, ' The good Old Ironsides - always the first to prepare for her friends, or foes; and her gentleman officers the first to treat them accordingly.' A light breeze shortly afterwards sprung up - night closed in - the wind freshened - we cracked on studdensails, both sides, alow and aloft, and the next day the high mountains of Luzon were plainly in view."

The Marion, U.S. ship, sailed from Lagos, Jan. 20 - all well. The purser died on board January 10, and was buried at Quitar.

The razee "Independence," is to be taken to the dock at the navy yard, at Charlestown, for repairs. We give this information for the benefit of our southern contemporaries, who for the past four months, have every two weeks announced that the "Independence" was fitting out, as the flag ship of com. Perry, for the Gulf squadron. That may be her destination for ought we can say. [GLP]

NNR 70.132 May 9, 1846 Mexican protest against Gen. Zachary Taylor's taking position on the Rio Grande

The army of occupation. Accounts already furnished, left gen. Taylor on the 29th alt. taking post on the eastern bank of the Rio Grande, immediately opposite and commanding the town of Matamoros. – By the arrival of the steam Col. Harvey at New Orleans, we learned that general Taylor was met by a deputation of civilians from the town of Matamoros who protested against his "invasion of the Mexican department of Tamaulipas" [JEB]

NNR 70.132 May 9, 1846 Gen. Pedro Ampudia enters Matamoros, correspondence with Gen. Zachary Taylor

On the 11th April, general Ampudia marched into Matamoros with 1,000 cavalry and 1,500 infantry. This augmented the Mexican force there to 5,500 men.

On the next day gen. Ampudia, notified gen. Taylor to retire to the eastern bank of the Nueces. This notification was of a threatening character, and was regarded by Gen. T. as of a belligerent nature, and accordingly he instructed the military commander at Brazos to consider the Mexican army as in a hostile attitude. [JEB]

NNR 70.132 May 9, 1846 deserters from the two armies

We are informed says the New Orleans Bulletin that about thirty of the American troops had deserted, ten or twelve of whom were shot in endeavoring to make their escape. This had the effect of checking further desertions. It is said that about 1,000 of Ampudia’s Men deserted him on his march. [JEB]

NNR 70.132 May 9, 1846 Gen. William Jenkins Worth resigns

Gen. Worth is on his way to this city in the U.S. steam propeller Hunter, which vessel left on the same day as the Colonel Harney. [JEB]

NNR 70.132 May 9, 1846 Col. Trueman Cross disappears, believed captured by Mexicans

Col. Truman Cross, quarter master general of the army, disappeared so singularly, that for several days the greatest anxiety was felt. A letter from an officer of the army, dated Point Isabel, April 14, says- "Col. Cross left the camp about noon on Friday, 10th inst. He was alone, and when last heard from, was at the house of a Mexican, about one mile from the camp. Since that time no certain information has been received as to his fate. [JEB]

NNR 70.160 May 9, 1846

The iron steamer Hunter was off Galveston bar on the 27th inst., having lost her smoke pipe and being short of provisions. She was then eleven days out from Brazos Santiago. Some of her passengers were transferred to New York.

Nothing further is known of Col. Cross. Lieut. Deas, who crossed the Rio Grande in search of his friend, has fallen into the hands of the Mexicans.

The N. Orleans Picayune says : There are various rumors in town in regard to skirmishes between the Mexican and American forces, but we have not been able to trace them to any authentic source.

The schooner L.M. Hitchcock, Capt. Wright, arrived at Galveston on the 23rd from Brazos Santiago, having sailed on Sunday, the 19th - three days after the Col. Harney, but she brings no news of much interest.

Later - Lieut. Porter and three men killed. The steamer Telegraph, Capt. Auld, left Brazos St. Iago on the 27th and reached N. Orleans on the 29th. - By her we have the unpleasant intelligence that on the 19th instant, Lieut. Porter, of the 4th regiment, (son of the late Commodore Porter,) being out with a fatigue party of ten men, (some of them wearing uniform,) was fired upon when within a few miles of the camp. Lieut. P. and three of his men were killed in the attack, the rest of the party escaping, returning to the camp next day. It is stated that the guns of the Americans were wet and would not fire.*

The N. Orleans Tropic says - Lieut. Van Ness informs us that nothing further had been heard of Col. Cross up to the 19th, but that the general opinion is that he is still a prisoner, though not at Matamoros.

About fifty of the American army have deserted and swam the river for the Mexican camp, but a number of them were shot as deserters while in the water. The whole number of American troops is estimated at between two and three thousand, and they are said to be in excellent discipline, and eager for an engagement with the enemy. Ampudia's forces are reported at between three and four thousand. It is rumored that Arista is about to supersede Ampudia in the command.

Still later. - From the Galveston News, Extra. - We may here remark that it is understood as a fact that Ampudia is already superseded by Arista - from whom we may expect the next proclamation. This general is admitted to be an officer of character, good sense and prudence, and whatever proceeds from him will be entitled to some consideration.

In our summary of news by the steamship Telegraph we omitted to state what may be of some importance, viz: - that General Ampudia, in his answer to the inquiries of General Taylor concerning Colonel Cross, expressly disavowed any acts of hostility that might have been or might hereafter be committed by Mexicans on this side of the river, stating that all such acts were unauthorized by him or his government.

The Washington Union gives an extract of a letter from an officer of the army dated the 16th which, says: "The news from the camp is very pacific at present. The report is that the Mexicans intend to postpone their operations until the 1st of June, in order to allow the governments to arbitrate the matter, but no reliance is to be placed upon what they say."

A letter from the army, dated April 18th published at New Orleans, says: "The two opposing armies are within 500 yards of each other - both busily engaged in entrenching themselves and throwing up field works. The most perfect non-intercourse is established."

The same letter says that Lieut. Deas crossed the river to Matamoros without permission of General Taylor.

Still later. - By the brig Appalachicola, which left Point Isabel on the 24th, - we learn from New Orleans the melancholy fate of Col. CROSS, U.S. quarter master general. His body has been found about four miles from Gen. Taylor's camp. From the wounds thereon it seemed evident that he had been killed by a lance. The body was entirely stripped. It was reported that a person in Matamoros had acknowledged that he had murdered him, that he had the watch and clothing of the colonel in his possession, and that Gen. Taylor had made a formal demand for the murderer.

The Mexican schooner Juanita, from N. Orleans, for Matamoros, was taken into Brazos Bay on the 22d ult. by the pilots - no doubt by permission of the blockading force.

Later. - The schooner Cornelio arrived at New Orleans, left Brazos Santiago on the 24th. An express from General Taylor reached there just before she left, in which Gen. T. stated that the commander of the Mexican forces had made a formal declaration that if Gen. T. did not move his army from the position he then occupied, in thirty six hours, the Mexican batteries would be opened upon him. - There had previously been so many rumors to the same effect in the camp, that little reliance was placed upon this one, which was first communicated by a Mexican, who was prudently detained by order of Gen. Taylor.
The same express stated that a body of 2,000 Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande near Boretta, a small town eight miles below Matamoros, on the west bank, between Point Isabel and Gen. Taylor's camp, cutting off communication and supplies to the latter. A private letter was also received last evening from an officer in General Taylor's camp, confirming in part the above reporting of the Mexicans having crossed the river, but stating the number at 1,000 only.

LATER STILL. - The steamer General Worth, with intelligence twelve hours later from Brazos and one day's later from General Taylor's camp, was in the river, says the Picayune of the 1st instant, eight or ten miles below the city. A bearer of dispatches from General Taylor was on board. Mr. Marks, attached to the American Consulate at Matamoros, is on board. apprehending imprisonment from the Mexicans, he had left his post and repaired to Gen. Taylor's camp.

On the 24th the Mexican schooner Juanita, was taken by the United States schooner Flirt, and sent into Brazos as a prize.

The Mexican troops above spoken of as having crossed the Rio Grande, had captured several wagons belonging to settlers, loaded with provisions for the American camp.

The American consul and merchants, resident in Matamoros, had been ordered by General Ampudia to leave for Victoria, Tamaulipas, twenty-four hours having been allowed them to adjust their affairs.

Our army is in good health and spirits, only 135 being on the sick list.

Blockade of the Rio Grande. New Orleans papers of the 29th ult., announce the arrival of the schooners Equity and Floridian, both of which had left that port a day or two before, bound to Matamoros, with assorted cargoes. They were ordered off by the U.S. brig Lawrence and schooner Flirt, of the blockading squadron.

It is stated that protests were immediately filed at New Orleans against the United States, for illegal interruption.

LATER. - Last night's Union announces the arrival of Mr. SLIDELL and Gen. WORTH at the seat of government.

*Lieut. Porter, whose death is announced above, had been but a short time married. His wife is a daughter of Major Benjamin Lloyd Beall, who is now in command of the 1st regiment of dragoons in Texas. Mrs. Beall and daughter are at Fort Washita, the late station of Major B., where they had been left by their husbands but a short time ago. [GLP]

NNR 70.164 May 16, 1846 ARMY JOURNAL

Army of Occupation - Lieut. Porter. - A letter from an Officer in Gen. Taylor's camp, dated 22nd, April says: -

"Lieut. Dobbins, 3d Infantry, and Lieut. Porter, of the 4th Infantry, son of the late Commodore Porter, left this camp on the 17th inst., each with a detachment of 2 non-commissioned officers and 10 privates to reconnoiter the surrounding country, from ten to twenty miles, in search of a band of robbers known to have been in the vicinity, and who were supposed to have murdered Col. Cross, and also to learn, if possible, something of his fate. The two parties took different directions, it raining hard during the night. The second day after, Lt. Porter met a party of Mexicans, one of whom snapped his piece at him. In return he discharged both barrels of his gun at the Mexican, who disappeared in the thorny thicket. - Lieut. Porter took the marauders' camp, ten horses, saddles, &c.

"This was about noon of the 19th, about eighteen miles above Gen. Taylor's camp, and about six miles from the Rio Del Norte. He continued his search, and about 4 p.m., of the same day, he fell in with another party of Mexicans which had been probably joined by those whom he had met before. The rain continued. Lt. Porter's party was fired on by these men, and one private of the party was killed. They made an attempt to return it; the heavy rains caused the guns to miss fire. The Mexicans continued their fire. Lieut. Porter, as is reported by his sergeant, made a sign with his hand for the men to extend to the right. The party was thus separated in the thickets. The sergeant and four privates returned to this camp on the 20th, and "A detachment of 30 dragoons was dispatched early the next morning to reconnoiter the position and search for Lieut. Porter and those of his party who were missing. They returned the same night without having learned anything of them, the thickets being so dense that it was impossible for horses to move through them. They however fell in with Lt. Dobbins, who said he would continue to look for Lt. Porter a day or two longer. Yesterday, about noon, the corporal and three men of Lieut. Porter's party returned, saying they feared Lieut. Porter had been killed. One of the men stated that he saw Lieut. P. fall from his horse. Another said he dismounted and staggered afterwards; and that volleys were poured into the place where he was. Lieut. Porter and one man of his party are still missing, besides the man known to be killed.

"Two other companies of twenty-five men each, were despatched early this morning to make still further search."

COL. CROSS. - The body, as found, stripped of all clothing, was brought into Gen. Taylor's camp about noon, April 21 st. and was interred with military honors on the following day.

Gentlemen: I am the bearer of a communication from Gen. Taylor to Gov. Henderson, requesting to be immediately reinforced by twenty companies of foot Riflemen. My destination is Victoria, and thence to Austin. I was instructed by the General to send an express from the former place by land to your city with communications to Lieut. Kingsbury, and at the same time to spread the information through the country. But it having been left discretionary with me, and the Monmouth being available, I have determined to send the communications by her, and also to write to you, in order to facilitate as much as possible the sending on of troops. Gen. Taylor is in a very precarious situation at his camp near Matamoros, and an attack is feared on the post at Point Isabel. I believe a reinforcement of two hundred men would save that place. This is vastly important, as a larger amount of commissariat and ordnance stores are deposited there, and if that place should fall, General Taylor will be left without resources of any kind.

I was instructed by Gen. Taylor to send out from Victoria expresses in such directions as I might deem most advisable, so as to have all the men possible on their march to his relief without awaiting orders of the Governor. You will have it in your power to send to the Lower Brazos, Houston and Montgomery sooner than an express can go from Victoria. I therefore leave that to you, knowing that it will be promptly attended to. I shall send to Matagorda, Texana, Richmond and San Felipe. If you have an opportunity, please send to Washington. I shall send there from La Grange.

The place of rendezvous for the foot companies is suggested by the General at Galveston; that of the mounted men at Corpus Christi; at which place there will be provisions and forage. No party less than 400 should think of going through on the direct road to Matamoros, as there is a large force of Mexicans on the Aroyo Colorado, for the purpose of cutting off reinforcements in that direction. Small parties can cross from Corpus Christi on to Padre's Island. Arrangements are made for crossing from the lower point of the Island to Point Isabel.

If two hundred men could be raised even temporarily at Galveston, I am decidedly of the opinion it would be better to send them forthwith by the Monmouth - the security of Point Isabel is of the last importance.

From the best information we could obtain, the force of the Mexicans is set down at seven thousand certain and reports go as high as twelve thousand.

All communication is now cut off between the camp and Point Isabel, except by running the gauntlet. I came out in the night of the 26 th with a guide, and was prowling all night through chaparral, swamps and lakes.

Capt. Baker will be able to give all the particulars of what has happened, the situation of Point Isabel, &c. &c.

In haste, your obedient servant.

W.G. CATLETT.
Messrs. Williams and others.

N. B. - A propeller has left for New Orleans with a requisition upon the Governor of Louisiana for troops also. I have thought a steamer might be leaving Galveston immediately for New Orleans, and for fear the propeller should be detained, would it not be well to state the facts to the Governor, that the troops might be in readiness by the arrival of the propeller; there is no mistake as to the order; the captain will explain.

W.G.C.

[GLP]

NNR 70.161-163 May 16, 1846 editorial notice of war preparations, prompt movements in Texas, Alabama, and Louisiana

For several months past a standing enquiry in the National Register has been "Is war brewing; are we ready?" The subject was pressed in no capacious spirit or manner. Careful regard was had to avoid as far as possible party political bearing, and full latitude was at all times claimed for the Executive, forbearing to embarrass by any improper suggestions, the full influence which that department of the government is always entitled to and ought always to have the exercise of, in its management of our foreign relations. Our anxiety however has been expressed over and over, in the enquiries which have been made in almost every number of the register, whether war was not very likely to result from the course which was in progress, and if so were we prepared, as a nation ought to be prepared, for the approach of a war? Were we preparing, were any adequate measures recommended even, towards a preparation.

We repeated these enquiries for months, pointing as far as it was prudent to do so to, "the nakedness of the land" as to military preparations, incurring as we did from time to time, the imputation of "croakers" "panic makers" and similar respectful epithets from the party press, for having ventured to admonish as we endeavoured respectfully to do, and for urging that war was evidently so far possible, if not probable, that prudence required such steps to be immediately taken as prudence required such steps to be immediately taken as would avert those mortifications, humiliations and losses. To which we must inevitably be subjected if it found the nation, in its then unprepared condition.

The fact is, that we were really perplexed beyond measure to conceive what the real views of the President and his Cabinet could be, in relation to the question of peace of war. So far as we were allowed to discern, for several months after Congress met, no recommendation, looking towards a preparation for war with a formidable power, had emanated from the Executive. On the contrary, the particular department to which we cast our eyes for the very first ingredient towards a preparation for war, instead of having such an object in view; or making any demonstrations whatever towards raising ways and means to sustain the public credit and wherewith to meet war expenses, were devotedly occupied in preparing and endeavoured to secure the passage of a bill for reducing the existing duties upon imports to one third less than those of the existing tariff. The unvarying tone of the official journal in the mean time was that we might trust to the President for a peacable as well as honorable termination of our foreign difficulties.

At length inquiry was directly made from the senate at the suggestion of J. M. Clayton, whether in the opinion of the President, our foreign relations were in such attitude as to make it advisable for Congress to direct preparations for war.

The President's reply to this inquiry was such as to induce us to qualify previous expressions. We now understood the President to say that he had, through the departments, some time back, recommended to Committees of Congress certain measures looking to a preparation for war. Without deeming this to have been the straight forward, responsible and influential course which it seemed to us the occasion called for, we were yet for receiving it for its full value, and gave President Polk credit accordingly. No sooner had we done so than we found ourselves brought up on the other hand by the unexpected disavowal on the part of heads of departments and others of the responsibilities and recommendations to which it was supposed the President in his message had allusion. A strange, not to say discreditable squabble ensued as to what had and what had not been officially recommended, as well as who it was that recommended the measure in question, looking towards adequate defence of the country, in case the war, now thought to be at least possible, should ensue.

Bewildered by all this, we deemed it due to the character of the country to let the subject drop for the time being, and it was dropped also in Congress.

The progress of circumstances quickly awakened both Congress and the country from this quiet. The question that we have so often repeated, is solved. It is now no longer "Is war brewing?"- War is here- Without authority of either the Congress of Mexico or the Congress of the U. States, on both of which the constitutions of the two countries confers the sole authority to "declare war" war as commenced, and whether it be in the Constitutional sense, a war or only hostilities provoked by executive mismanagement of either or both of the parties, all the incidents of war are brought upon the two countries, and actually exist. The people of both republics have learned, that the restrictions of the constitution to the contrary not withstanding, the Executives have it in their power to make war inevitable at pleasure. This is truly a startling development in the operation of republican system.

The act which passed both houses of Congress within a few hours after receiving the President’s message recommending them to ‘recognize’ the existing war between Mexico and the United States,” is in conformity with that recommendation. But instead of being a plain, direct unequivocal "Declaration of war," such as the Constitution seems to have contemplated in any such exigency, and which would as we think have been the most appropriate form for the consideration of congress, it is equivocal, and leaves the question as to whether we are now technically and "constitutionally" at war with Mexico, or not. This half way hobbling, this complication and involution of great national affairs, should be avoided. Distinct definite-and indisputable ground is generally the best foothold. We can distinguish no necessity for leaving our own citizens nor foreign governments are able to pronounce whether war, in its higher and legal signification, now exists between Mexico and the United States. We know that fighting, killing, taking prisoners, blockading ports, invading territory, and all the usual accompaniments of a war are now not only enacting, but on our port at least, are now legalized, and yet war is not "declared." Nay, some of the incidents to war yet want legal formalities. Whether for instance, the commander of the American squadron in the Gulf would be authorized to take Vera Cruz, if he could? Whether the Pacific squadron might take possession of Monterey.

Letters of marque are as yet certainly not authorized on our part, although there is reason to apprehend that, they have been or speedily will be authorized by the Mexicans.

Accounts from Cuba intimate that one of the objects which the Mexican Minister to England had inview in stopping at that Island, was to make disposition of letters of marque for the annoyance of our commerce. That thousands of the buccaneers and slavers that infest those seas would spring to such a harvest as our wide spread commerce would afford them, is too probable.

But dropping discussion as to the NATURE of the possession now occupied, or as to whether technically we are at war or not, we certainly, de facto are sufficiently at war to induce as to recur once more to the oft and anxiously repeated enquiry "ARE WE READY?"

The question "Is war brewing" is solved, the second enquiry "are we ready," is now at test, so far as Mexico is concerned. How long it may be before the test may be applied to a case of war with Great Britain, who will undertake to say? Their "Union" of Thursday of last week, certainly apprehend the time to be not very remote. The National Intelligencer treated the article in the Union to which we have allusion, very lightly and intimated that the editor of the Official Journal must have allowed himself to be hoaxed on that occasion; yet as we see that the Foreign Quarterly, just republished in this country, says in a postscript to an article on the Oregon question, "Every public man that we have seen or heard of, seems to think, and the whole public press concur in announcing, that the dissolution of Sir Robert Peel's ministry is inevitable. No definite reason seems to be assigned for this expected event. It is intimated that Sir Robert will remain in office until his tariff measures are carried. Why he should then resign, with a majority in his favor, no explanation is given. Upon the occasion of the retirement of the Peel cabinet not long since- a retirement which lasted but two days- there were some who held the belief that the real cause of that step was not the one publicly announced; but that PEEL withdrew in order to leave Lord John Russell and a Whig Cabinet to meet the responsibility of the Oregon question, which seemed then approaching crisis. Inasmuch as that the question is now certainly approaching a crisis, the same design, if it existed before, may be the moving cause of the predicted resignation."

A firm persuasion that the government was not preparing with due promptitude for a contingency which to our vision seemed to be too probable, has induced us to continue unceasingly so urge the questions so important to the country. If mistaken, it were at least to mistake upon the safe side. Neglect preparation, let war overtake us, and disgrace, as well as disaster inevitably awaited us, to retrieve which how many lives and what a struggle would it not cost the country?

The measure of those disasters is not duly appreciated. That in case of a war, disasters at first were to be expected, seemed to be admitted on all hands, as a matter of course; we mean in a war with England. People had as if by common consent made up their minds to that. Alas, how few, expect those who have tasted of the bitter draft, know how to appreciate a series of national disasters, or what it costs to recover from them.

But as to being "ready" for war with Mexico, who would have dared to express a doubt.

That a very mistaken estimate prevailed of what a war with Mexico might become, and of what was required to make such a war brief, and terminate it advantageously, we have unpreservedly and repeatedly urged.

The first announcement of hostilities, comes to us with the postscript, that "the Mexicans have been sadly underrated." Ten days ago the prediction was confidently pronounced from the American camp, that "Of this you may be certain, we shall have no fighting, unless we ourselves lead off the dance."

The very next arrival brings us not only disastrous affairs of out-posts, but the startling intelligence that our army is invested by the enemy and its supplies and munitions cut off, and with only fifteen days provisions in store. It is true, assurances are given of their being able to maintain their position, provided they receive timely supplies and succor, but great apprehensions are felt for the safety of the detachment at Point Isabel, which have in charge the stores and munitions designed for the army.

"The Army of occupation" will do, we have no doubt, whatever the same number of men, with the means they have at command, could do, and whilst we regard it as quite possible that the "fortune of war" may have further reverses for them to experience, yet we have far more of faith that of despondency on the occasion. We believe that if the precaution has been taken there, as we presume it must have been to apprise. Commodore Conner of the posture of affairs, the Squadron, or a part of it, will have repaired with timely succour to the vicinity to insure the safety of the post and the stores. Although the depth of water will not allow them to approach the port, their men and arms will be efficient. It will take some time, even with the characteristic alacrity of our South western volunteers, for forces sufficient to re-open safe communication with Gen. Taylor's camp from Point Isabel, which have in charge the stores and munitions designed for the army.

The dispatches asking for additional forces left Gen. Taylors camp on the 26th. ult. He then had fifteen days provision. Half allowance might of course make them last longer, but would have an unfavorable effect upon the physical powers of the men.

We have Galveston dates to the 3d inst. The steamer Monmouth left Galveston on the 1st inst. with volunteers to join the army. They were no doubt the first to reach Point Isabel, under the requisition of General Taylor. From the old states the credit of making the first actual movement of volunteers for the rescue, we believe, is due to the spirited company which left mobile on the 4th inst. Under command of Gen DESHA, for New Orleans. Without waiting to receive a requisition from any direction they heard the bugle call and the response was instant, "We are here-READY." On the 5th inst., they reached New Orleans, one hundred strong and on the 6th inst., embarked from thence for Texas.

Louisianians were, some of them, equally prompt but the requisition upon that state was for a considerable force, and necessarily required more time to muster. The legislature instantly placed $100,000 at the disposal of the governor for the exigency.

Benjamin Story, Esq., placed $500,000 at the disposition of the state of Louisiana, immediately on learning the situation of the army on the Rio Grande.
The papers teem with evidences of public spirit on every hand. Without waiting to determine whether fault as been committed or to question, if so where the fault is chargeable, all agree that the army now exposed, must be sustained, and war, continued, must be waged with decisive-energy.

A general meeting of the citizens of New Orleans was called, and the following resolutions were adopted with the greatest unanimity. Whereas hostilities have actually commenced between the United States and Mexico; and where our army of occupation upon the frontier of Texas, pressed by embarrassments and surrounded by a superior force, calls for immediate assistance; and whereas Louisiana has ever been prompt in her action on emergencies like the present:

Resolved, That as Louisianians we will immediately respond to the call of Brigadier General Taylor, and without a moment’s delay place at his command for regiments of infantry, as required.

Resolved, That as Americans it behooves us to forget all differences of opinion, and only to remember that our country’s honor is in danger.

Resolved, That we point with pride to the action of our legislature in the present crisis, and that we will do everything in our power to sustain its appropriations and carry out its patriotic views. [JEB]

NNR 70.163 May 16, 1846 position of the Army at Matamoros, description of Point Isabel, Brazos Santiago, &c.

The camp of Gen. Taylor extends about four miles along the river bank, two miles above and two below Matamoros. It occupied his twenty-three hundred men for thirty days to construct the defences. It is made of sand, covered over with twigs, woven together like basket work, surrounded by a wide and very deep ditch.

The walls of the magazine in the interior of the fortification are formed of pork barrels, filled with sand, seven tier thick, four tier high, covered over with timber, on which sand is piled ten or twelve feet.

Twelve heavy pieces of ordnance are so placed as to command the town of Matamoros.

This camp is about 30 miles above the mouth of the Rio Del Norte. In its rear stretches the wide desert region between that river and the Nueces, 150 miles in breadth, affording no sustenance. Along nearly the whole coast between the mouths of those rivers stretches Padre island, (a barren sand ridge,) and Madre Laguna, which latter is penetrated near the southern end by a high bluff called, Point Isabel, which is Gen. Taylor’s depot of provisions, and the point from which his supplies are to be derived. It is 27 miles from his camp, through a country difficult to penetrate. A narrow channel, the outlet of Madre Laguna, opens into the Gulf opposite Point Isabel, and forms its means of communicating with the sea. But it is only of depth to admit small vessels. Some few miles outside of the Laguna, the Brassos Santiago, a small port, off of which, and between it and the mouth of the Rio Grande, our ships occasionally anchor. The U.S. schr. Flirt was endeavoring at the last accounts to get over the bar into the Brassos Santiago, in order to co-operate more effectually in the defence of the depot and position at the mouth of the river. [JEB]

NNR 70.165 May 16, 1846 report of the steamer Augusta

REPORT of the steam schooner Augusta, Gillett, ordered to proceed to New Orleans by the U.S. Quarter Master at Point Isabel, with importar despatches.

Crossed the bar at Brazos Santiago on Tuesday the 28th ult., at 6 o’clock, A.M. On Friday, 1st instant, when 60 miles west of the S.W. Pass, at 12 o’clock, M., was hailed by steamer Galveston, laid to and put Col. C. Doane, bearer of despatches, on board the Galveston. Left in port steamer Cincinnati, Smith, just arrived with baggage and arms for the U.S. Army, from Arkansas; U.S. steamers, Col. Long and Nevan, lightening vessels in the harbor; schr. Ellen & Clara, Griffin, for N.O.; steam schr. Florida, Clift do; steam schnr. Jas. Cage, Sherman, do.; Mexican schr. Juanita lately arrived from New Orleans with stores for the Mexican army, was taken possession of by order of Gen. Taylor, and ordered to return to New Orleans without discharging her cargo; U.S. brig of war Lawrence, Commander Mercer, and U.S. schr. Flirt, Lieut. Sinclair, commanding, were blockading the mouth of the Rio Grande; schr. Bella del Mar, stranded on the bar of Brazos Santiago, was condemned and sold on the 25th ult.; U.S. steamer Monmouth was despatched, on the evening of the 27th ult., for Port Lavacca and Galveston, with a requisition from Gen. Taylor on the Governor of Texas for two regiments of cavalry and two regiments of foot-militia. [GLP] [JEB]

NNR 70.165 May 16, 1846 letter from Col. Fitzpatrick

Extract from a letter from Col. FITZPATRICK, of Florida serving as a volunteer under Col. TWIGGS, to a member of congress.

[Col. F. is a gentleman of high character, well known as an officer who served in the Florida war.]

Camp before Matamoros, April 27, 1846.

DEAR SIR: The war has commenced on the part of Mexico. On the night of the 25th instant, Capt. Thornton, of the dragoons, with a squadron consisting of his own and Capt. Hardee's company, were ordered to reconnoiter the Mexican army, which Gen. Taylor had been informed were crossing the Rio Grande twenty-seven miles above here. The squad was ambuscaded and fired on, and a number (unknown) killed, and all besides taken by the Mexicans. They sent in two wounded, with a note to Gen. Taylor. Capt. Hardee is prisoner, but no news of Capt. Thornton and Lieuts. Mason and Kane. You will believe me when I tell you the war is commenced in Mexico, and that Gen. Taylor is about to be surrounded and cut off from his supplies at Pont Isabel, which is twenty-seven miles distant. - The Mexicans have a force of from two to three thousand on this side of the river, and their destination is doubtless Point Isabel, where there is not more than four hundred men of all descriptions. You will believe me when I tell you that this army will have the d-dest hardest fighting that ever any army had in this world, and, unless reinforcements are largely and speedily sent to its assistance, it must be cut off, as the enemy are in great force, and I fear have been very much underrated. I tell you, sir, the enemy have been entirely underrated, and this army has put itself in a trap, and is cut off (or about to be so) from its supplies.

I am here with Col. Twiggs as an amateur, and I shall stick to it till I am killed or made prisoner.

Yours, truly,
R. FITZPATRICK
[GLP]

May 16, 1846 NNR 70.165 LETTER TO A MEMBER OF CONGRESS

New Orleans, May 2, 1846

DEAR SIR: The intelligence that has reached us this morning from Gen. Taylor's army has fully realized the fears of every intelligent person here of the imminent danger of our whole army in Texas. At last accounts he had but about twenty-one hundred and fifty efficient men with him opposite Matamoros, with only ten days' provisions; cut off from all communication with Point Isabel, where he has his supplies and a large portion of his artillery, munitions, &c. At Point Isabel there are not over three hundred men. Gen. T. is literally surrounded, and from all accounts there cannot be less than sixty-five hundred Mexicans in his vicinity, under arms.

There is little or no enthusiasm in Texas, and there will be difficulty and delay in getting the twenty-four hundred men in the field called for from Texas. Here there will be also yet greater difficulty, I fear. The extreme dilatoriness of government in paying off the Texas volunteers has produced a most unfortunate effect.
There seems to be little or no confidence in the administration. There is no money here. Both the quartermasters and commissary are without a cent, and large sums are now due to citizens; and yet it appears we have eleven or twelve millions in the treasury.

You need not be surprised to learn that Gen. Taylor's army is destroyed or made prisoners within ten days from this time.

Arista is in command, and he is an excellent officer, and looks forward no doubt to the presidency as his reward.

The stupidity of our government in sending General Taylor to the Rio Grande, and opposite to Matamoros, where he assumed a threatening attitude, is quite without parallel. With only twenty-one hundred and fifty men, too! What the object was I cannot imagine. An army of ten thousand men will now be necessary to maintain our position on the Rio Grande, and a probable expense of twenty millions of dollars will be incurred before this awful blunder can be remedied.

Gen. Smith (Persifer L.) has agreed to take command of the four regiments of Louisiana militia required by Gen. Taylor. Our governor could not have made a better selection.

Extract of a letter received by senator Cameron, and communicated to the Union.

Brasos Santiago, (Texas), April 27.

I embrace the opportunity of the departure of a vessel for New Orleans to announce to you that hostilities have commenced between the Mexican forces and the American army of occupation under the command of Gen. Taylor. The Mexican army is believed to be ten or twelve thousand strong. A considerable force is now crossing, or has crossed, to the left bank of the Rio Grande, with the view, it is thought, of either attacking Gen. Taylor's camp, or his depot. If they could take this place, and thereby cut off Gen. Taylor's supplies, he would be compelled to make a retrograde movement. There are only two companies of troops at this post for its defence; but there are some two hundred and fifty persons here besides the soldiers - sutlers, clerks, and persons in the employment of the quartermaster's department - all of whom are willing to defend the place; so that we can probably muster three hundred and fifty men under arms. If they do not bring too large a force against us, we will be able to hold out until succor arrives from New Orleans or elsewhere. We have entrenched ourselves. Gen. Taylor's situation meantime is rather a critical one. All his supplies are received from this post which is twenty-seven miles distant from his position, and requires a considerable force to guard each wagon train, and by that means weakening his forces, which are in the immediate vicinity of a hostile force about four times as numerous. He has to-day made requisitions upon the authorities of Texas and Louisiana, and perhaps other states, for troops; until the arrival of which he must defend himself, as well as he can. He is strongly entrenched and has several pieces of artillery, of which he expects an additional supply from Baton Rouge in two or three days. [GLP]

NRR 70.176 May 16, 1846 Volunteers and regulars arrive at Brazos Santiago on steamers, troops march for Barita.

Gents., The volunteer companies under command of Col. J.B. Walton of the Washington Regiment, on board the steamer Jas. L. Day, arrived here on Thursday morning the 14th inst., after a very pleasant passage of three days, and those by the Telegraph arrived on the 15th and went immediately into camp. Gen. Taylor left here on the morning of the 14th for his camp, with a large train of wagons, and quite a formidable train of artillery, dragoons, and infantry, amounting to some six or eight hundred. There was an arrival from the upper camp this morning, which passed him yesterday on his march; he has in all probability ere this reached his camp.

On the morning of the 15th, regulars enough to swell the amount to about one thousand embarked on board the steamers Neva, Leo, and Cincinnati, and at 1 o'clock were landed at the Brazos Santiago, and took up their line of march for the Rio Grande, all under the command of Col. Wilson; their march is for Barita, situated some fifteen miles up the river, where it is stated the Mexicans are collecting considerable forces.
The United States fleet consisting of the Mississippi, Cumberland, Raritan, Lawrence, &c which have been here for some days, have run down to the mouth of the river and come to, and with their boats will cross the troops under the command of Col. Wilson to the south bank of the river. The steamers will be on readiness at Barita to assist in the transportation of arms and ammunition.

Colonel Wilson's command have with them two days' rations, and scarce a blanket, with no tents nor my baggage train. At dark they had crossed Pococachita, and were on their march for the river, -- This morning, the 16th, the sea is very high, and the weather squally, so that the steamer Neva cannot get to the sea, and if it continues so, must create some distress in Colonel Wilson's camp for provisions and blankets.

List of Vessels at Brazos Santiago, May 16-- schr. Enterprize, Trainer, arrived 15 instant, brig [million], arrived 14th inst., beat hard on the bar, but without much damage: schr. Gertrude, Flander, arrived 16th: brig Apalachicola, arrived 16th; schr. Mary Emer, of Mobile, arrived 16th; brig Virginia, J.M. Hood master, arr. 14th inst., 7 days from Pensacola, with two companies of artillery under the command of Capts. Webster and Taylor, and sailed for New Orleans on Saturday the 16th inst.

On the 15th, the steam schooner Augusta, sailed for St. Joseph will all the wounded that were able to be transported, taken from the battle of the 8th and 9th instant. [AEK]

NRR 70.176 May 23, 1846 war clause on marine insurance

INSURANCE.- The war clause, is now a serious item with the marine insurance offices. The New York Courier states that the officers there generally, insert the following:

"War clause.- Warranted by the assured free of all loss, damage or charge arising from, during or in consequence of capture, seizure, restraint, blockade or detention resulting from war or hostilities between the United States and Mexico or pretext there of." [JEB]

NRR 70.176 May 23, 1846 orders and movement of troops for the frontier

ARMY.- Two companies of U.S. artillery stationed at Pensacola, another company at Fort Pike, and one company at Fort Wood, near New Orleans, have been ordered forthwith to the Rio Del Norte, by Gen. Gaines. They embarked from New Orleans, on the 5th inst. the New Orleans Tropic of the 6th inst. Says- "A detachment of regular troops numbering about 80 arrived yesterday from Fort Pike, and marched to their quarters at the barracks. [JEB]

NRR 70.176 May 16, 1846 Killed and wounded

Dear Sir: - I send you below a copy of the official list of the killed and wounded, of the detachment under the command of Captains Thornton and Hardee, who were cut off by a party of 2,000 of the enemy (2,000 against 75!). Some of the killed resided in Philadelphia.

Wounded.- Privates - St. Clair Shipley, slightly; John Perkins, do.; William S. Muff;

I will write again the first opportunity. You may make any use of this you think proper.

I remain, yours, &c.

[NOR 70.176 May 23, 1846 Louisiana orders for enrollment of all persons subject to military duty]

The latest intelligence we have from New Orleans states, that the governor of Louisiana, in consequence of the want of a sufficient number of volunteers, had issued orders for the enrollment forthwith, of all persons liable to military duty, as preliminary to a draft. Altogether twelve companies, including one from Attakapas, and another from East Feliciana, had been mustered into service, comprising a force of about one thousand men. [JEB]

[May 16, 1846 NOR 70.176 Steamer Mississippi ordered to Vera Cruz, St. Mary’s ordered to Brazos, New York legislature authorized governor to call 50,000 volunteers]

NAVY. The U.S. steamer Princeton, having been repaired at the Charlestown navy yard, Capt. FRENCH FORREST reached Boston on Monday, with others for her to proceed immediately for Pensacola. By 10 o’clock on Tuesday morning she was under way and went to sea in fine style, all sails filled with a fair breeze. Capt. Forrest went as passenger, under orders to relieve capt. DULANEY, in command of the frigate Cumberland, now in the gulf. The Princeton is commanded by F. ENGLE, Esq.

The Mississippi, U.S. steam frigate, Capt. Fitzhugh, was ordered to start for Vera Cruz, at 4 P.M. on the 4th inst from Pensacola.

The St. Mary’s, U.S. sloop of war, Commander Saunders, on the reception of intelligence at Pensacola, via N. Orleans, of the news from Rio Grande, was ordered to get under way immediately for Brazos St. Iago to the aid of Point Isabel.

African squadron. - The Dolphin, U.S. brig, Com. Pope, and the Marion, sloop of war, Com. Simonds, were at Monrovia April 1, the latter just from a cruise down the coast, about to sail to windward in a few days. J.C. Spencer, Jr., purser of the Marion, is deceased. On the 30th March, the Marion’s boat was capsized, while crossing the bar of the Messurado river, and Mr. Joseph T. Bartlett, of Maine, midshipman, and Mr. John Johnson, seaman, were drowned.

Lieut. W.D. Hurst, of Philadelphia, who was some months ago struck off the list of the navy, for fighting a duel with an inferior officer, has been reappointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate.

THE NEW YORK LEGISLATURE closed their session on the 13th instant. They enacted 337 laws during the 128 days it continued. The anti-rent bills were all passed except the one regulating the statutes in relation to devise and decent.

On the last day of the session a resolution passed the lower house, authorising the governor to call out 50,000 volunteers for the use of the nation in the war with Mexico. The senate however adjourned without taking any notice of the resolution. [GLP]

NNR 70.177 May 23, 1846 proclamation of war against Mexico is copied from declaration of war with Great Britain in 1812

The president’s proclamation announcing war with Mexico, is copied nearly word for word from Mr. Madison’s proclamation of June 19, 1812, announcing the declaration of war with Great Britain, according to act of congress the day previously. The document may be found in Niles’ Register for 1812 – N.Y Jour. Of Com. [JEB]

NNR 70.177 May 23, 1846 manifesto of Mexican President ad interim Mariano Paredes y Arillaga against the United States

THE MEXICAN MANIFESTO. A manifesto of “the president ad interim” Paredes, issued on the 23d April, 1846, in relation to hostilities with the United States, has been received, and with the official documents communicated to congress by president Polk, accompanying his message of the 11th instant, comprising the correspondence of Mr Slidell with the Mexican ministers, &c. will occupy a portion of our next number.

The Washington “Union” considers the manifesto of Paredes as an official declaration of war on the part of Mexico, not withstanding one of its sentences italicized reads thus "I solemnly announce that I do NOT declare war against the United States of America because it pertains to the august congress of that nation and not to the executive to settle definitely the reparations which so many aggressions demand." [JEB]

NNR 70.177 May 23, 1846 Creek Indians volunteer for service in Mexico

Amongst the thousand and one rumors that now fill the journals, we find the Pennsylvanian saying, as from good authority, “that one of the chiefs of the Creek nation, now in Washington, has offered to the President the services of two thousand picked warriors, should they be required in the conflict with Mexico:” and the editor (that paper is published in the city of brotherly love) coolly adds:=“This is a most praiseworthy movement, and we have no doubt will be made use of effectively, if occasion requires.” [JEB]

May 23, 1846 NNR 70.177 NAVAL JOURNAL, revenue cutters ordered to Gulf

Navy post office. Under the instructions given by the house of representatives to one of its committees, a bill has been reported providing for the transfer of the revenue and post office branches of the navy to the navy department. We have now three descriptions of navies: one, the navy proper, under the orders of the navy department; one, the revenue marine navy, under the treasury department; the other, the post office navy, under the orders of the post office department. The house has wisely determined to place the whole under the direction of the navy department.

The Congress frigate captain Stockton, spoken 30th January in latitude 48 34’, lon. 166 52’ W. all well; from Rio Janeiro for the Pacific.

The Dale, U.S. sloop of war, was taken into dry dock last week, and will be immediately repaired and equipped for service.

The Revenue cutters, that can be spared from their respective stations have been ordered to the Gulf of Mexico.

The Spanish squadron now in the Gulf of Mexico, is said to consist of one ship of the line, one frigate, one sloop of war, three steam ships, five brigs of war, and several schooners and transports.

The Gulf squadron. The frigate Raritan reached the squadron of Vera Cruz on the 18th ult. And commodore Conner transferred his flag to her. He sailed from Vera Cruz on the 23d, on a cruise off the coast, accompanied by the Cumberland, Potomac, and Falmouth. The fleet had previously gone out to sea for a day or two, to give the men the benefit of fresh air, &c. The sloop of war John Adams was the only vessel of war lying at Sacrificios.

The Portsmouth and Shark, left Mazathan, for sea on the 1st April.

It is stated that not a case of yellow fever has yet occurred in the squadron - general health good.

The U.S. brig Perry, commander Blake sailed from Norfolk on the 16th for Chagres.

Midshipman McRae, goes out in the Perry, has bearer of despatches, to the Pacific squadron. He is to await the return mail at Chagres, and there report to commodore Conner.

The Independence, at Charleston navy yard, has as many men as can conveniently work upon her, now busily employed in repairing her.

The Decatur, sloop of war is now fitting for service at Norfolk.

The Brandywine frigate has also a few additional hands employed in fitting her for service at the navy yard.

The Truxton, U.S. brig, is also ordered to be fitted forthwith. Commander Carpenter takes charge of her.

Recruits for the service are sought for at the rendezvous. [GLP]

---

PRIVATEERING. The Washington Union says – Apprehensions have been expressed that Mexico may issue letters of Marque to Spanish subjects in Cuba, to cruise against the commerce of the United States, and that privateers may be fitted out in the ports of that island for this nefarious purpose. Indeed, it has been suggested that the two Mexican steamers which have been recently transferred to the Havanna have been sent there with this object. We know that the government of Spain would not sanction such a proceeding; but it is not generally known that a Spanish subject could not accept a commission for this purpose from the Mexican government without being guilty of piracy. For public information we copy the 14th article of our treaty with Spain of the 20th October, 1795, which article is now in force: "ARTICLE 14. No subject of his Catholic majesty shall apply for, or take, any commission or letters of marque, for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers against the said United States, or against the citizens, people, or inhabitants of the said United States, or against the property of any of the inhabitants of any of them, from any prince or state with which the said United States shall be at war. Nor shall any citizen, subject, or inhabitant of the said U. States apply for or take, any commission or letters of marque for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers against the subjects of his Catholic majesty, or the property of any of them, from any prince or state with which the shall be at war. And if any person of either nation shall take such commissions or letters of marque he shall be punished as a pirate" That is he shall be “hung by the neck until he is dead.” [JEB]

---

THE CAMPAIGN.- The President and his Cabinet without doubt, have determined immediately to concentrate such a force upon the Mexican frontier, as they deem adequate for an effectual invasion of the enemies territory, provided the war is not terminated before the forces shall reach their destination. In addition to the regular forces comprising the “Army of Occupation,” under General Taylor, at least thirty thousand of the volunteers authorized by the recent act of congress will be forthwith ordered to the Rio Grande. It is understood that these will be detailed from the States nearest to the scene of action.

The President has called upon the Governor of Maryland to furnish two thousand men, as the contribution of this State. Governor Pratt received the requisition on the 20th Inst.

The thirty thousand volunteers alluded to, we presume, will be exclusive of the troops now concentrating from Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, &c. under requisitions from Generals TAYLOR and GAINES, and which were authorized by laws in existence prior to the volunteer act, alluded to.

It is to be feared that government will find difficulty in adjusting the several descriptions of forces thus organizing or contemplated. The volunteers that are now embarking under the call from Gen. Taylor, certainly calculate on a tour not extended beyond the emergency. It was for the immediate safety of Point Isabel and to secure the supplies and succor to General Taylor, opposite to Matamoros- and not with a view of being detained to invade Mexico, that the Louisiana Legion for instance have so suddenly left their families and occupations.

Next we shall have nearly ten thousand men under the requisition made upon the southwestern states by General Gaines. The term for which these can be held in service under the law which authorized his call, is limited if we mistake not, to three months- a term too short to accomplish much beyond the limits of the Union.

And next comes the requisition for “volunteers,” under the provisions of the act passed by congress last week. These will be required to serve for not less than six months, and may therefore be available for a foreign campaign, if it be brief.

One difficulty in these ramifications will be, that in consequence of these requisitions from Gens. Taylor and Gaines upon the southwestern states, the VOLUNTEERS required for the last mentioned corps may not so easily be found there.

To muster, officer, organize, arm, and discipline twenty-five thousand volunteers and move them, accompanied with sufficient supplies and munitions to the borders ready to commence an effective invasion of Mexico, will occupy at least three months. Precipitance would be disastrous. Let whatever is done, be well done. [JEB]

NRR 70.178 May 23, 1846 discussion of command of the Army

THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY.- Thus concentrating is to be entrusted to Major General Scott, who next to the President, is Commander in Chief of the United States army, and whose services are now required in the field. His experience as a Commander will be of value. His cool judgment may be equally important. It is probable that he will not assume the immediate command until the “Army of Invasion” shall have concentrated on the frontier. A paragraph is circulating in the papers of the day which asserts that General Scott denies having been consulted or advising the movement of the army beyond the Nueses.

A war having commenced, the country will of course look with scrutinizing interest into the manner in which it is conducted. The general project of the campaign, will no doubt be a matter of consultation with the Cabinet, the Commander in Chief, and the superior officers that are at the Seat of Government. Amongst the latter it happens fortunately for the occasion, that government may avail the practical advice of,

Brigadier General Wool, who, on his way from the North, for Texas, is now at the city of Washington; and likewise of

Gen. Worth, who had forwarded on his resignation in consequence of the orders of the department disparaging, as he thought, his brevet rank. He reached the seat of government from Rio Grande before the arrival of his resignation, and immediately tendered his services to government in whatever capacity they might be deemed most useful. The President decided not to accept his resignation, and he left Washington on the 9th instant to join the army again. Not only the Army,-his countrymen will approve of both his patriotism and spirit. Of General Worth, an officer under General Taylor writes—"The high reputation of this officer, and his unquestionable military genius, had secured the confidence of every officer; while his personal gallantry, equally well known, won for him the love and admiration of every soldier in the command. At the passage of the Colorado he was second in command, and at the word "forward" he and his staff, Leedes, Magruder, Deas, and Blake, plunged into the flood and led the advance, (then considered "a forlorn hope") amidst the cheers of the troops drawn up on the banks of the river, and landed within twenty yards of the Mexicans who skirted the opposite side. The enemy become panic struck and fled precipitately."

General Taylor, in command of the "Army of occupation," "was born in Virginia and raised in the neighborhood of Louisville, Ky. He entered the army as a lieutenant, in 1808; was a captain, and greatly distinguished himself in the defence of Fort Harrison in the war of 1812, which post he commanded when it was attacked by a greatly superior force of British and Indians. For his gallant conduct on the occasion he was made a brevet major, being the first brevet that was conferred in that war. General Taylor was in Florida during a part of the late Seminole war, and commanded in person at the battle of Occochubbe, on the 25th December 1837. His gallantry and skill on that occasion won for him the rank of brevet brigadier general. [JEB]

NNR 70.178 May 23, 1846 comments on the abilities of the Mexican general Mariano Arista

THE MEXICAN COMMANDER ARISTA, beyond a doubt, is an able officer. He has exhibited both gallantry and tact. His not making a dash upon Point Isabel, before Gen. Taylor arrived there, convinces us that he is not in as much force on this side of the Rio Grande as was apprehended, else he would have attempted to make so important a prize. If he had an adequate force, his failure to do so showed want of generalship.

General Taylor's movement to that point, confirmed the estimate in which he is held as an able officer. [JEB]

NNR 70.178 May 23, 1846 description of Matamoros and its vicinity

Matamoros, is an old Spanish city, beautifully situated on the southern bank of the Rio Grande, within its folds, so that its front and rear are both on the river.—Seen from the American side, it has every appearance of being an American town. The streets intersect each other at right angles, and appear to be lined with many varieties of shade trees, which give the town an air of coolness and render its appearance very inviting. Many of the buildings are built of brick, and in the modern style of architecture. The cathedral, market and buildings occupied by the military, are among the finest.—The dwellings of the poorer classes are constructed with canes, brush, mud, and the like materials, and are essentially Mexican. The town has about 7,000 inhabitants, but formerly contained double its present number, and was a place of some importance. The rapid decline is owing to their internal commotions and the growing indolence of the people. The citizens are all under the rule of the military, and are obliged to provide for them. The military is supreme, and the orders of their general are law.

The vicinity of Matamoros is peopled on both sides of the Rio del Norte by Mexicans, who, so far from ever having admitted themselves to be Texans, have been actively contributing to carry on the war between Mexico and the Texans ever since its commencement. They are strewed over the region about as thickly as in many of the interior countries of our states, and a levy en masse, would produce several thousand men in arms, fully equivalent to our militia. Even if a love of Mexico, or apprehensions for their own families or property, failed to inspire them, there is no doubt that a prospect of plunder and of éclat, if once inspired with the idea of taking an American army or their munitions and provisions, would rally some thousands of them in an instant. [JEB]
April 28th. Capt. WALKER, commander of a partizan corps of Texan Rangers, this evening reached Point Isabel, having suffered severely, and as he supposed having lost nearly all of his detachment in an affair with a large body of Mexicans, which he encountered whilst reconnoitering between Point Isabel and Gen. Taylor's camp, opposite to Matamoros. The captain, however, whom we are proud to learn, is, as well as the lamented Col. CROSS, a native of Prince George's county, Maryland, - true sons of "The old Maryland Line," distinguished in the annals of the revolution, by a fame that never faltered from the first encounter in the memorable battle of Long Island, to the close of the eventful struggle for independence; - Capt. Walker, we were about to say, so far from being deterred by the disaster he had met with, instantly volunteered, if any four men would join him, to proceed to Gen. Taylor's camp at the risk of his life, acquaint him with the situation of affairs at Point Isabel, and bring back any orders he might entrust him with.

As the impression was, that some thousand Mexican troops lay in the route, the proposition was considered almost fool-hardy. Six brave fellows however accepted his challenge, and the party started accordingly.

The papers received furnish no reliable account of his excursion. One statement says that two of the party were killed by the Mexicans. The captain's horse was killed, without doubt, as we see by the New Orleans papers of the 12th, that the spirited citizens of that city had determined to send the captain a splendid charger to replace his own. He, however, reached the camp, and was the first to acquaint Gen. Taylor with the situation of affairs at Point Isabel.

Gen. Taylor had now nearly completed the defences constructed opposite Matamoros. The citadel of the position, an irregular hexagon, with bastioned fronts, and a capacity to receive 1,200 men, though it may be defended by 500, he considered sufficient to sustain a regular assault for at least ten days, from disciplined troops and scientific approach from trenches. The present Mexican forces would scarcely attempt to carry it by storm.

The general's next object, of course, was to secure a supply of provisions and ammunition, then growing very short in his camp, in consequence of the interruption of communication with Point Isabel, where they had been landed and remained in store. On learning from Capt. Walker the state of affairs upon the route, he promptly decided to secure the depot, and re-open communications.

Entrusting the works opposite to Matamoros to the command of Major BROWN, and leaving with him the 7th regiment of infantry and two companies of artillery, under command of Capt. LOWD and Lieut. BRAGGS, with about 500 men, Gen. Taylor with the rest of the army under his command, on May 1st, took up his line of march for Point Isabel, expecting in all probability to meet with about an equal number of the Mexicans in some of the innumerable defiles upon the route. Not a Mexican was to be seen however.

May 2d. Gen. Taylor encamped at Point Isabel.

May 3d. The Mexican commander having ascertained the absence of most of the American forces from before Matamoros, at 5 o'clock this morning opened a cannonade from their fort with seven guns. The fire was promptly responded to from the American battery. In thirty minutes the Mexican fort was silenced, two of their guns supposed to have been dismounted.

A fire then commenced from the Mexican lower fort, and a mortar battery, which was kept up without intermission until half past seven o'clock.

The fire from these was deliberately returned by the Americans, and as a part of Matamoros was within the range, some of the houses necessarily suffered. The inhabitants had no doubt withdrawn from that direction before they commenced the fire from their forts.

This cannonade from these positions was continued occasionally until 10 o'clock, when it was suspended for a time but was resumed occasionally until midnight. The Mexicans exhausted some twelve or fifteen hundred shot, but with very little effect. One sergeant, - we think he was of company B, 3d regiment, and not of company A, 7th regiment, as in the following extract, from the statements before us, was the only American killed, no one wounded, - and though the enemy’s fire was for a long time concentrated upon our 18 pounder battery, and the shot frequently struck the embrasures, no gun was injured.

No information as to the extent of casualties sustained by the enemy, had been received.

A letter from an officer says: "The Mexicans fired the first shot at reveille, and the way 4, 6, 9, and 12 (I think) pound shot flew about these parts was a sin, and their mortars throwing shells kept the atmosphere in continued confusion with their "whiz! whiz! bang!" all the to."

It would have warmed the wax in your ears to have heard our 18-pounders "giving out the cry." One shot struck in the embrasure of the enemy’s works, and knocked cannon, carriage, embrasure, and men "into fits." We have no mortars. * * *

"Up to the present speaking, the enemy have thrown between 1,200 and 1,300 shot, solid and hollow, while we have fired 357. On our side, one sergeant - of company A, 7th regiment - has been killed, and one man slightly wounded in the arm. This is all the damage to us; the extent of the damage to the enemy is not known, but must be considerable. It is almost incredible to suppose we should receive so little injury from so many shot."

General Taylor was, of course, anxious to learn the results of all this cannonading, which was distinctly heard at Point Isabel.

May 4th, 4 o'clock, P.M. - Capt. May, with a squadron of dragoons returned to Point Isabel, from a scout. He reports a heavy force encamped on the road 12 miles below Matamoros, whose camp he passed around. Capt. Walker left May with seven of his Texas Rangers, and entered to communicate with the fort last night. May waited till day break for him, but Walker, not returning, he came back to camp. May and his command were taken for Mexicans, and an alarm given. In twenty minutes the general with his whole force was in full march to the battle.

May 5th. - Walker not returned. Two Mexican scouts came in and said they found the chaparel lined with sentinels everywhere. Firing still heard at the fort this morning.

Dispositions were made by General Taylor to commence his return march on the 6th inst., with an ample train of baggage wagons, loaded with wares for the army. Whether the Mexican commander had concentrated his forces so as to assail the camp opposite Matamoros in rear as well as in front, during the absence of the army - whether the works were found capable of sustaining the assault that had been made - or whether the great body of the Mexicans would take advantage of the defiles and chaparels upon the route he was about himself to enter with so cumbrous a train of baggage, was matter of total uncertainty.

May 6th. - Walker arrives with despatches from Maj. Brown’s camp, and reports the particulars we have detailed above. The Major was reserving his ammunition. All safe there. Walker thought that an assault was about to be made about an hour after daylight.

The assurances so received, determined Gen. Taylor to postpone his departure in hopes that additional forces would arrive within a short time at Point Isabel, for the better security of that important station, as well as to augment the effective force with which he would soon be ready to encounter the enemy. He had, it is true, as yet no intelligence of the result of the requisitions which he called for on the 26th ult., but reasonable time had nearly elapsed for him now to expect to hear from his countrymen.

According to a statement which we find published in the N. Orleans Bulletin of the 13th, over the signature of "Wm. H. Chase, major of engineers," that officer calculates that the two companies of regulars and the company of volunteers from Mobile, (which left N. Orleans on the 6th,) will reach Point Isabel, per Augusta, on the 10th. The detachment of regulars from Pensacola on the 11th - the 1st battalion of Louisiana volunteers, per the Galveston, and some Texan riflemen from San Antonio, Austin, Houston, &c., per the Telegraph, on the 13th. The Major goes on to calculate that by the 20th inst., Gen. Taylor will have 10,000 men under his command, and that by one or two redoubts thrown up on the line between Matamoros and Point Isabel, communication may be maintained. [GLP]
The assurances so received, determined Gen. Taylor to postpone his departure in hopes that additional forces would arrive within a short time at Point Isabel, for the better security of that important station, as well as to augment the effective force with which he would soon be ready to encounter the enemy. He had, if it is true, as yet no intelligence of the result of the requisitions, which he called for on the 26th ult., but reasonable time had nearly elapsed for him now to expect to hear from his countrymen.

According to a statement which we find published in the N. Orleans Bulletin of the 13th, over the signature of "Wm. H. Chase, major of engineers," that officer calculates that the two companies of regulars and the company of volunteers from Mobile, (which left N. Orleans on the 6th,) will reach Point Isabel, per Augusta, on the 10th. The detachment of regulars from Pensacola on the 11th, the 1st battalion of Louisiana volunteers, per the Galveston, and some Texan riflemen from San Antonio, Austin, Houston, &c., per the Telegraph, on the 13th. The Major goes on to calculate that by the 20th inst., Gen. Taylor will have 10,000 men under his command, and that by one or two redoubts thrown up on the line between Matamoros and Point Isabel, communications may be maintained. [JEB]

EXAGGERATIONS, & c.

We have found it no trifle of a task to sift the above facts from such a heterogenous mass of exaggerations and preposterous stories as filled the daily papers and "EXTRAS," issued in all directions, many of them made up for speculation and utterly regardless of anything but to make a market of public credulity. As for instance, we have had Matamoros reduced to ashes, and 700 Mexicans killed. Major Ringgold gloriously distinguished himself in command of the American camp opposite to Matamoros when in fact he was with Gen. Taylor at Point Isabel- and hundreds of similar tales. Such wholesale and indeed often unfeeling impositions should be visited upon their authors by public indignation. Every hour is now replete with incidents that require truths to be steadily assorted. Let no sudden impulses from false premises influence our communities.

An article in the Washington Union, of the 19th compiled they say from official intelligence received at the department, dated 3d and 5th instant, received after we had placed the above in type, confirms their accuracy in every particular. The Union says: "The affair with Capt. Walker’s Texan Rangers, as was presented by rumor, was much exaggerated. In the temporary absence of that gallant and enterprising officer his company lost, by surprise, but a handful of men-8 or 10.”

"In the cannonade Major Brown, Captain Mansfield of the engineers, Captain Lowd, and the garrison were all much distinguished. Gen. Taylor always writes coolly. His march, when he expected to meet 3,000 Mexican horse, was a gallant enterprise. The Mexicans have not probably had a good and bad, 4,000 troops on the Rio Grande.” [JEB]

LETTER FROM GEN. TAYLOR.- The New Orleans Tropic of the 4th gives the following extract of a letter from Gen. Taylor: "Strong guards of foot and mounted men are established on the margin of the river, and thus efficient means have been adopted on our part to prevent all intercourse. While the opposite to us their pickets extend above and below for several miles, we are equally active in keeping up a strong and vigilant guard to prevent surprise, or attacks under disadvantageous circumstances. This is the more necessary, whilst we have to act on the defensive, and they are at liberty to take the opposite course whenever they think proper to do so. Nor have we been idle in other respects; we have a field work underway, besides having erected a strong battery and a number of buildings for the security of our supplies, in addition to some respectable works for their protection. We have mounted a respectable battery, four pieces of which are long eighteen pounders, with which we could batter or burn down the city of Matamoros, should it become necessary to do so. When our field work is completed (which will soon be the case) and mounted with its proper armament, five hundred men could hold it against as many thousand Mexicans. During the twenty-seven days since our arrival here, a most singular state of things has prevailed all through the outlines of the two armies, which to a certain extent, have all the feelings as if there were actual War. "Fronting each other for an extent of more that two miles and within musket range, are batteries shotted, and the officers and men in many instances waiting impatiently for orders to apply the matches; yet nothing has been done to provoke the firing of a gun or any act of violence."

"Matamoros, at the distance we are now from it, appears to cover a large extent of ground, with some handsome buildings, but I would imagine the greater portion of them to be indifferent one story houses, with roofs of straw and walls of mud, or unburnt brick. During peace the population is said to be five of six thousand, but it is now filled to overflowing with troops. Report says from give to ten thousand of all sorts, regular and militia. The number I presume is very much overrated.

"P.S.-Since writing the above, an engagement has taken place between a detachment of our cavalry and the Mexicans, in which we were worsted. So the war has actually commenced and the hardest must fend off." [JEB]

---

NNR 70.179 May 16, 1846 EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM AN OFFICER OPPOSITE MATAMOROS TO A FRIEND, DEFENSES AT POINT ISABEL

Fort opposite Matamoros, May 4th, 1846.

